"A very little would suffice to make us happy," says Bulwer, "were it not for our own desires to be happier still." We often neglect a present joy that we might have because we are so anxiously grasping at a future joy which we shall never get, and which would not be good for us if we did reach it. There is never a life without some materials of happiness in it; but many persons, instead of building with these materials, throw them away, and fret because a ready-built palace is not provided instead.

The mark of a saint is not perfection, but consecration. A saint is not a man without faults, but a man who given himself without reserve to God.—B. F. Westcott.

Another Appreciation of the Aetna

LUMBERTON, N. C., November 26, 1902.

J. D. BOUSHALL, Esq., Manager Aetna Life Insurance Co., Raleigh, N. C.

Dear Sir :—After a careful comparison of policies submitted to me by the Aetna Life, Bankers' Life of New York, Equitable of New York, Northwestern, New York Life and Prudential, I have accepted $10,000 in the Aetna on the 20-payment life plan, with option of 25 year 3 per cent. Gold Bond Contract.

I have been a policy-holder in the Aetna for nearly eight years, and therefore feel somewhat prepared to judge of its merits from actual results. With all due deference to other companies, it affords me great pleasure to say that in my opinion the Aetna cannot be surpassed for plain and liberal contracts, and for just, conservative and economical management. I now have $12,000 in the Aetna. My partner, Mr. W. W. Carlyle, has $16,000 and one of our clerks, Mr. John T. Biggs, has $2,000, nearly all of which was written and delivered by your special agent, Mr. H. T. Spears.

Wishing you and the grand old Aetna continued success, I am,
Yours very truly,
ROBERT D. CALDWELL.

Legal Plea for Her Hand.

The Judge's daughter was perturbed. "Papa," she said, knitting her pretty brow, "I am in doubt as to whether I have kept of the proper form of procedure. In law one can err in so many little technicalities that I am ever fearful. Now, last evening George—"

The Judge looked at her so sharply over his glasses that she involuntarily paused.

"I thought you had sent him about his business," he said.

"I did hand down an adverse decision," she answered, "and he declared that he would appeal. However, I convinced him that I was the Court of last resort in a case like that, and that no appeal would lie from my decision."

"Possibly the Court was assuming a little more power than rightfully belongs to it," said the Judge, thoughtfully; "but let that pass. What did he do then?"

"He filed a petition for a rehearing."

"The usual course," said the Judge, "but it is usually nothing but a mere formality."

"So I thought," returned the girl, "and I was prepared to deny it without argument, but the facts set forth in his petition were sufficient to make me hesitate, and wonder whether his case had really been properly presented at the first trial."

"Upon what grounds did he make the application?" asked the Judge, scowling.

"Well," she replied, blushing a little, "you see he proposed by letter, and his contention was that the case was of that peculiar character that cannot be properly presented by briefs, but demands oral arguments. The fact that the latter had been omitted, he held, should be held an error, and the point was such a novel one that I consented to let him argue it. Then his argument was so forceful that I granted his petition, and consented to hear the whole case again. Do you think—"

"I think," said the Judge, "that the Court favors the plaintiff."—From the Chicago Post.

Grace: "She was struck dumb when she saw me in my latest Parisian creation."

Maud: "How do you know that?"

Grace: Because she couldn't stop talking about it."—Yonkers Herald.

Walter was the important witness, and one of the lawyers, after cross-questioning him severely, said:

"Your father has been talking to you and telling you how to testify, hasn't he?"

"Yes," said the boy.

"Now," said the lawyer, "just tell us how your father told you to testify."

"Well," said the boy, modestly, "father told me that the lawyers would try and tangle me, but if I would just be careful and tell the truth I could tell the same thing every time."—Mass. Ploughman.

Wilson: "I lost that fine silk umbrella that I carried in town to-day."

Mrs. Wilson: "Oh, what a pity."

Wilson: "Still, there is one consolation. It wasn't mine."—Somerville (Mass.) Journal.

Homer—"When were you in Paris did you find it difficult to speak French."

Travers—"Oh, no, I had no trouble speaking it. The difficult part was in getting the jabbering idiots to understand it."

"Well, well, old man! This is quite a change. Last time I saw you you were among the Four Hundred. And now—" "Now I'm clean back in fractions."—Baltimore American.

Mamma was very much surprised to see her little boy come home from his first day at school with his clothing torn and dirty, and asked him if he had been fighting.

He replied, "No, mamma, I didn't fight, 'cauth I told the boyth I wuthu't ready to fight, an' when I got ready they wath a-thettin' on me."—April Woman's Home Companion.

Family friend: "Your son's quite an artist. I saw that caricature he made of your wife on the barn door this morning."

Proud pa: "Yes, indeed. He's in taking an impression of her hand now. From what I've heard it's really striking."—New York Sun.

Biggs: "Winding is a nice fellow, but he is given to exaggerating."

Diggs: "Yes, but that fault is counterbalanced by one thing."

Biggs: "What is that?"

Diggs: "The general indisposition of people to believe him."—Chicago News.

"But, when the hour of trouble comes to the mind or to the body, and when the hour of death comes, that comes to high and low, then it is not what we have done for ourselves, but what we have done for others that we think on most pleasantly."—Sir Walter Scott.

Certain thoughts are prayers. There are moments when, whatever the attitude of the body may be, the soul is on its knees.—Victor Hugo.

Event and Comment.

Among other advantages of Presbyterianism it is better to be a Presbyterian editor than any other kind. The average circulation of Presbyterian papers is larger than that of any other denomination.

The British Weekly is waging heroic warfare against the iniquitous education bill and it claims, with some show of justice, that recent defeats of the Government in the by-elections have been due to the enactment of the odious measure.

California takes its place among pagan commonwealths through that recent decision of its Supreme Court that it is unconstitutional to read the Bible in the Public Schools. One would think that the Chinese population had gained control.

Among the speakers to address the Denver Young People's Convention are Rev. R. J. Campbell of the City Temple, London, and Joseph W. Folk, the young attorney of St. Louis, who has been doing such splendid service against the "boodlers" of that city.

We suppose that most of us would be willing to countenance the stage to the extent of endorsing the play "Les Huguenots" which has had a run of a thousand performances at the Grand Opera, Paris. The play treats of the corruption of the Catholic leaders and the heroism of the Huguenots, and it has made a wonderful impression upon the Parisians.

Ex-President Cleveland's recent utterance in regard to the American "vice of national vanity," has excited considerable discussion. He thinks our success in overcoming difficulties has engrafted over-confidence in our character. The question naturally arises, which is the most serviceable citizen, the optimist or the pessimist?

The Synod of Tennessee, Northern, has rescinded its action setting off the colored churches into a separate Presbytery which occupies the same territory with the white Presbytery. It overtures the Assembly, however, to make provision for just that thing. If the Assembly will study the Chinese problem in California it may gain a little insight into the negro problem in the South.

Rev. A. C. Dixon deserves to be commended for his recent brave refusal to marry a couple when one of the parties had been legally but unlawfully divorced. Legalized adultery has always been a hard thing to rebuke, from the days of John the Baptist until now. But no church or minister of Christ can afford to condone the sin by any shadow of compromise with its abettors.

What sort of a scare-crow is that the Central Mississippi presbyters are setting up? They deprecate any agitation for amending the Confession "in view of the injury that is to come to the cause of truth as well as to the Home Mission and Foreign Mission work and other work of our Church, from this agitation." We had somehow entertained the idea that no injury could be done to the cause of truth, and as for the Home and Foreign Mission work, we really doubt whether a clarifying of our confessional statement on infant salvation is going to make our Church unpopular, either at home or abroad. Presbyterians are mighty hard to scare.

Christian Work and the Evangelist prophesies thus: "By 1925, Holy Week, with Good Friday, will be as generally observed as Christmas and Easter are; and a liturgy, before many years, will be generally used in all our Christian Churches." As prediction is so cheap we venture to prophesy that in 1925, through the evident reaction towards Calvinism, Easter will be as little observed as Good Friday is now, except in the ritualistic churches, and that the liturgy in the Christian Churches generally will be confined to the single word, Amen. We are all liturgical to that extent.

The first-name habit is a bad one for grown men and women to fall into. The Burdick-Pennell scandal and tragedy had the testimony punctuated with the familiar use of the first names of the men and women involved as they were bandied about in the delectable conversation of those worthies. Later still a woman with name, position, family, wealth, beauty and two divorces to her credit, took her own life after having written a letter to her legal adviser, beginning, "Dear Charlie." With the Quakers the use of the first name is formal address. In rural communities, where vice is unknown, the boys and girls who have grown up together continue to call each other by their names. Elsewhere let the first-name habit be dropped. As the Brooklyn Eagle puts it: "One cannot be formal and filthy. One must be familiar to be foul."

The movement to secure regular, systematic Evangelistic services during the continuance of the World's Fair at St. Louis next year has been successful. The funds needed have been subscribed; an efficient Committee, representing all the evangelical churches of the city, has been appointed, who will have general supervision and direction of the work; and Rev. G. Campbell Morgan has been chosen to be the real head and director of the movement. As we understand, Mr. Morgan has accepted and will come to St. Louis the first of January next to remain during the year. Probably no better man could anywhere be found for this position and work: he is a very "prince of preachers," holding fast and even contending for the faith once delivered to the saints; earnest, aggressive, and diligent in advancing the kingdom and winning souls to Christ; attractive, instructive and Scriptural, he proclaims the glorious gospel with great power, and is withal a "master of assemblies." If his executive at all compare with his preaching and expository powers he will be the right man.—G. L. L.

In a recent comment upon the Beecher Memorial exercises, The Standard used the testimony of Ex-President Cleveland concerning the influence upon his own career of one of Beecher's sermons as an encouragement to every faithful minister of the Gospel. A friend sent the paper to Mr. Cleveland, and we publish a part of the letter received from him, which will bring its own message of cheer.

Princeton, March 25, 1903.

Rev. A. J. McKelway, D. D:

My dear Sir:

I desire to thank you for the kind and pleasant personal allusions contained in this editorial. I hope, however that you will not suspect that I am either insincere or unappreciative, when I say that what impresses me most is its suggestion of the labors and usefulness of the every-day, hardworking, humble minister of the gospel.

It sometimes seems to me that there should be an additional reward in the hereafter for those who, on earth, toil in the hardest fields of God's vineyard.

Yours very truly,

Grover Cleveland.

The Issue in Charlotte.

The Standard has been hoping, for several reasons, that it would not be necessary for it to make any comment on the issues of the present municipal campaign in Charlotte. The candidacy of two men, of acknowledged Christian character, for the mayoralty, led to the hope that it would make little difference, so far as the moral interests of the city are concerned, which should be elected. But the mayor has no veto power in the government of the city, and the putting forward of good men for base ends is a political trick that is hoary with age. And so the campaign has proceeded, it has grown more and more clear that the real issue, stripped of all pretence is, whether the city should return to the old conditions that have obtained here.

The Standard happens to have drawn a faithful picture of those conditions at the time. In the issue of January 4, 1900, occurs the following, and the reader will please observe the date and fix the responsibility:

The rowdiness and drunkenness in this city on Christmas day have been widely noted. Fifty cases before the Mayor's Court on the following day tell the tale. The saloons were in full blast and many of the victims of drunkenness were boys. The very air reeked with filth and profanity. And on Christmas Day!

Charlotte is making a name for itself, far and wide, for its mercantile and manufacturing interests. It is also favorably known for the number and beauty of its churches, its large church-going population, and the general Christian atmosphere of the place. But no stranger can fail to be impressed with the number of drunken men to be seen on the streets.

The explanation is a reflection upon our citizenship. We have a spineless city government, so far as the saloons are concerned. Promises to pass a better law have resulted in the non-enforcement of such laws as the saloons permit us to have. The votes on saloon matters by the city council show that the saloons control a majority of the votes.

To say that this state of things is doing harm to the reputation of the city is to put it very mildly. It is hurting every honorable business here. But things will probably grow worse before they grow better.

And the Presbyterian Standard of January 11, 1900, published the following:

On Saturday of last week a poor woman appealed to the protection of the law in a magistrate's court. She claimed that four men, after making her husband drunk, had robbed and cheated him of $500 in a game of cards, and that the act was committed in a 'well-known gambling-room of this city.' The trial was postponed on account of the absence of a witness until the next Wednesday morning. It is reported that desperate efforts are being made to hush up the affair and that on account of the prominence of the accused parties no publicity will be given to their names.

Gambling is a violation of the statutes of this Christian commonwealth as well as an outrage to the decency of this city. Yet we are told that there is a 'well-known gambling room in Charlotte.' Do the police know anything of its existence? Do the city authorities? Are there professional gamblers in Charlotte who have no other means of support than their criminal trade? Is there no way to get legal evidence of what is a matter of common knowledge?

It is time public sentiment was being aroused. It is time it was putting under the ban of righteous condemnation every gambler that this city holds. The gambling hell is rightly named. Its two companions in infamy are the saloon and the house of her whose steps take hold on hell. And it may be ventured that the co-partnership between the three institutions is always real and often evident. They should all be banished from this city with its proud and honorable past and its hopeful outlook upon the future. And we call upon every man who loves the sanctity of home and the purity of the person and the principles of common honesty; every man with boys to raise and girls to give in marriage; every man who believes in unsoiled hands and a sober brain and untainted blood; who treasures woman's peace and youth's unsullied innocence; to see now that the offenders are brought to justice and the city cleansed of the vice that is rearing its triple head in open defiance of decency and law."

We challenge any Charlotte citizen with a reputation for truthfulness to say that conditions, in all three of the particulars mentioned, are not vastly better now. And there is just as little doubt that while the decent element is more or less divided the men who would like to see a return to the old conditions are supporting one side with vociferous unanimity—the barroom bummer, the rowdy, the hoodlum, the gambler and every roue of the Bishop stripe, who is not yet wearing the Bishop stripes. The men who control that vote will be controlled by that vote if elected, promises and protests to the contrary, notwithstanding. Surely, its knowledge of this clear-cut issue now before the people of Charlotte should rouse them like a fire-bell in the night, like a trumpet call to battle. No man who loves the peace and purity of this community can afford to be indifferent. The city should be ruled by the men who have made their homes here and not by the men who regard any city as an opportunity for lust and crime, for the violation of all law, human and Divine.

And it seems to us that after gazing on that picture in 1900 and then considering the conditions now, every minister of the gospel, every Sunday-school teacher, every member of a Christian Church, every decent citizen could decide very easily how his vote should be cast and should be using every ounce of his influence, in public and in private, against any change to the old conditions of unpunished and unrebuked immorality and crime.

The Defence
An Offence.

The Rev. W. S. Rainsford, D. D., Rector of St. George's Church, New York City, recently paid a visit to Philadelphia and the echoes of his sermon at one of the Lenten services is yet reverberating through the religious press. On the strength of the newspaper report of the sermon, a number of Episcopal ministers signed the following statement, the propositions of which were presumed to be the affirmation of what Dr. Rainsford distinctly denied:

We, the undersigned, members of both the great historical schools of the Church, do solemnly declare, as in duty bound, that the great doctrines of the Gospel and of the Creed—namely, the Conception of our Lord Jesus Christ by the Holy Ghost and his birth of the Virgin Mary; the fall of man into sin and under the dominion of death; the redemption by our Lord Jesus Christ who made upon the cross a full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world, without which we should be helpless; and who became thereby and by his intercession for us in heaven a Priest forever, our only Advocate with the Father, and the propitiation for our sins, the One Mediator between God and man—are the very truths of God. And further, so far from considering that the Bible is misleading and full of errors, we believe the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be the Word of God.

It is only fair to Dr. Rainsford to say that he has written a letter to his ecclesiastical superior denying the inferences of this protest, and saying: "I accept, ex animo, all the articles of the Christian faith as contained in the Apostles' creed, and I hold to the Mediatorship of our Lord Jesus Christ with my whole heart."

But the Outlook rushes to the defence of Dr. Rainsford which is as bad as his alleged offence. It declares that this statement is defective concerning the essentials, such as the Resurrection. It was not claimed that Dr. Rainsford had denied the Resurrection. The Outlook continues:

On the other hand it treats as among the essentials his miraculous birth, to which he never referred and which is never referred to in the Book of Acts or in the Epistles; the fall of man, which is never referred to by Christ and is referred to by Paul only incidentally and parenthetically; certain theological phrases such as "oblation" and "satisfaction," which do not appear in the New Testament at all; and, finally, it avers the Scriptures to be, what the Scriptures never declare themselves to be, "the Word of God," a phrase which the Bible reserves to designate the Christ himself.

We need hardly call attention to the unique logic of this paragraph. The words "oblation" and "satisfaction" are ruled out because they are not found in the New Testament. The miraculous birth of Christ is excluded on the ground that it is not mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles or the Epistles to the Churches, and the fall of man, for the reason that it is mentioned in the Epistles and not in the Gospels, and that the Bible reserves, to designate Christ himself, the phrase, "The Word of God." The Outlook is bearing unwitting testimony to the practical truth of the doctrine of the fall. Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch spoke of a kind neighbor in these terms, "If there ever was a fallen angel she is one." If there ever was a fallen intellect it was manifesting its imperfections in the paragraph we have quoted.

Beginning at the last statement, that the phrase, "The Word of God," always refers to Christ, a glance at a Concordance will show that out of the two score times the phrase occurs in the Bible there are only two or three passages where it can refer to Christ. Furthermore, when Christ put in contrast "the Word of God" with the "traditions," which made it of none effect, to what could he have referred except to the Scriptures? When Paul speaks of "not handling the word of God deceitfully" to what did he refer unless to the revelation, whether written or orally imparted to others? The phrase is used sometimes of some particular word or promise of God. But it is often perfectly general and is a sound Scriptural synonym for the Bible.

"Satisfaction" is one translation that might be made of the word rendered "propitiation." Surely it is the merest quibble to quarrel with a word that does not happen to be found in the English Bible when its equivalent may be found.

And unless we have forgotten all our Latin, "oblation" is from the supine stem of the same verb from which "offering" comes. It means an offering in a religious sense. The Jewish offerings were oblations. We might translate from that wonderful chapter of Isaiah, "When thou shalt make his soul an oblation for sin," without altering the sense. The Epistle to the Hebrews speaks of "the offering of the body of Jesus Christ, once for all. For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." The Outlook's quarrel is with the translators of the Bible and not with these Episcopal ministers for asserting that "our Lord Jesus Christ made a full, perfect and sufficient oblation."

Finally we point to the absurdity of the logic that rejects or at least excludes as a "great doctrine of the Gospel," the miraculous birth of Christ, because it is mentioned only in the Gospels and not in the Epistles; and by the same reasoning the doctrine of the fall of man because it is not mentioned in the Gospels and is only referred to in the Epistles. To say that Christ never referred to the fall is the purest assumption. He taught many things that are not recorded. And why it was necessary to refer to the birth of Christ in the Acts of the Apostles it is hard to determine. The sentence, "is never referred to by Christ" sounds more reverent than it is. How can we who have not heard him speak know what he referred to, save on the testimony of the writers of the Gospel? And if we accept their testimony as to what Christ said, why not accept the same testimony when it tells us of the birth in Bethlehem of the Son of God, the Son of Mary?

It seems to us that the discrediting of the miraculous birth of our Lord is a peculiarly shameless kind of infidelity. It shocks the devout mind with the suggestion of blasphemy. Nor do we see that it makes much difference whether the doubt thus cast be clothed in the ribaldry of an Ingersoll or veiled in the sophistry of a periodical like the Outlook. We are glad to note in the same article that the Outlook refers to the Resurrection as the historical foundation of Christianity. But the denial of the miraculous birth cuts away the very ground from beneath the feet of those who would adore Jesus as their Lord. The danger is scarcely less, because of the shallowness of the contention.

Hon. D. C. Gilman, former President of Johns Hopkins University, has been elected President of the American Bible Society. This is significant as the tribute of highest scholarship to the Bible and as the endeavor of the Bible Society to obtain the finest executive ability in its great work.

Regeneration and Conversion.

It is a good sign that these phenomena of the spiritual world are being discussed as much as they are, even though some wrong views are being exploited with regard to them. One of the Divine methods, apparently, of calling needed attention to a truth, is to allow the abuse of that truth. The article on the "New Doctrine," in a recent issue of the Standard was a very clear though brief description of views that are coming into prominence. We have referred also to the theory of Mr. Theodore D. Bacon, that "regeneration is a normal event in human development." On the other hand the Sunday-school Times stirred up the theologians the other day in its exposition of conversion, making the point that "to be converted" was a mistranslation since the word is not used in the passive voice in the original.

It not infrequently happens in the history of doctrine that men will go to an extreme view as a reaction from another extreme, or from some abuse that springs from a wrong view. The Church has suffered a good deal from the "Child Evangelist." Christian parents have instinctively revolted from the exciting appeal to the emotional nature of their children, as that appeal has too often been made in evangelistic meetings, sometimes under Presbyterian auspices. "Decision Day", as it is called, has already proved itself a nuisance, through the extraordinary pressure that is brought to bear on the children of the Sunday-school, on that one day, to decide for Christ. It is doubtless a reaction from these extremes of doctrine, and especially of practice, that has led to the denial of the need of "conversion" for children and the assertion that regeneration is a normal act of human development.

As should be expected, Calvinism has its answer to all these vagaries. As that great Calvinist, Dr. Kuyper, has somewhere put it, "God would have us believe our children elect and saved, and treat them accordingly." But the covenant makes a distinction between the children of the household of faith, trained from earliest infancy in the truths of religion and consecrated to God in prayer, and the children who grow up without such inheritance or privileges.

In the covenant of baptism we give our children to the Lord and pray for his regenerating grace. But for all we know they may have been regenerated in earliest infancy, as John the Baptist was. And we have certainly the right to claim the answer to our prayers for that regeneration.

Kuyper quotes the old Calvinistic divines as to another useful distinction between the seed and the flower of faith. God imparts the germ of faith in regeneration. It may already be imparted for our children, however young they may be, however wayward they may have become. That seed springs up into flower and thus becomes manifest in conversion, or it may gradually unfold, with no such conscious experience as that of conversion, because there is no special evil in the already regenerate life, no darkness in the already enlightened soul, from which to turn unto light and God.

But regeneration is always the Divine work and conversion the act of the human will. And the confusing of these two is one cause of the strife of tongues that is so audible just now.

We regard it as exceedingly important that this Scriptural distinction should be observed. It is a needed corrective to extreme theology, whether going beyond or falling short of Calvinism, that regeneration is the act of the Divine Will and conversion the act of the human will. The Sunday-school Times is right in its contention that there is no such thing as "being converted" in the popular sense. A man can "turn" or he can "convert himself." But "being converted" can only be the result of self-conversion.

Here is the Calvinist's warrant for an appeal to the human will. The wind bloweth where it listeth, the Spirit's work is mysterious and uncontrolled. Therefore, since all that we can do is to pray for the gift of the New Birth, since its manifestations are so often hidden for a time, we can strive with all our might to awake the will to action. In this view of the matter one man can convert another, by the appeal to the will.

"Regeneration is normal" only in the sense that God's beneficent work is that in which he most delights, in the sense that with proper training and proper influences it should be the expected thing.

In the same aspect the conversion of the regenerated soul is the normal thing, when the child assumes the character of a self-determining being. But no amount of statistics as to the average age of conversion can make light of the Divine agency, in creating the new nature, without which conversion is impossible for the strongest human will.

Perhaps not a few of our Calvinistic preachers need to tone up their preaching in the direction of the direct appeal to the human will, the ringing call to men, to turn them from darkness to light and from the power of Satan unto God.

This is the title of a notable article published in both The Independent (Feb. 26.) and The Fortnightly Review (London, March), by Alfred Russell Wallace "the veteran English biologist" and "the joint discoverer with Darwin of the theory of natural selection." A full synopsis of this remarkable article cannot here be reproduced, but the conclusion as well as some idea of the arguments will be given.

He begins by recalling the well known fact that the early astronomers regarded the earth as the centre of the visible universe around which sun, moon and stars revolved; then adds that the acceptance of the Copernican system, the discoveries of modern astronomers, and the perfection of the telescope and other astronomical instruments had changed all this, so that many had gone to the other extreme, boldly asserting that all this vast, stupendous universe could have no special relation to our little earth—a mere speck amid these worlds innumerable and these systems vaster far than ours in extent, and probably inhabited by more highly organized beings than ourselves. While he does not state that the old theologians fully agreed with the old astronomers to the relative importance of our world, he does mention that infidels and enemies of Christianity had not been slow to use these more recent conclusions of science, not only to discount the extreme views of the older astronomers and theologians, but also to discredit the plain teachings of the Scriptures that our world and our race have been pre-eminently distinguished above all others, declaring that "this has been made use of by the more aggressive among modern skeptics to hold up religious creeds and dogmas to scorn and contempt."

And to these "rude attacks" he thinks theologians ad no adequate reply.

"But," he continues, "during the last quarter of the past century the rapidly increasing body of fact and observations leading to a more detailed and accurate knowledge of stars and stellar systems have thrown a new and somewhat unexpected light on this very interesting problem of our relation to the universe of which we form a part; and although these discoveries have, of course, no bearing upon the special theological dogmas of the Christian, or of any other religion, they do tend to show that our position in the material universe is special and probably unique, and that it is such as to lend support to the view, held by many great thinkers and writers today, that the supreme end and purpose of this vast universe was the production and development of the living soul in the perishable body of man." And he adds:

"It is the object of the present paper to set forth the nature of the evidence bearing upon man's position in the universe and to summarize the various lines of research that converge to render it at least a thinkable and rational hypothesis." And these "lines" are chiefly three: that the universe is limited in extent and not practically infinite as heretofore assumed and granted; that our solar system is really at or near the very center of the universe, where alone intelligent beings—such as we are—can exist; and that our earth is the only suitable home or possible dwelling place for such intelligent creatures. These he maintains at length, with great learning, and with all earnestness. And the conclusion reached is that the universe was made for man.

The extracts that follow will give some idea of his method and arguments. As to our position in space Dr. Wallace says:

"The result so far reached by astronomers as the direct, logical conclusion from the whole mass of facts accumulated by means of powerful instruments of research, which have given us the new astronomy, is that our sun is one of the central orbs of a globular star cluster, and that this star cluster occupies nearly the central position in the exact plane of the Milky Way; but I am not aware that any writer has taken the next step and, combining these two conclusions, has stated definitely that our sun is thus shown to occupy a position very near if not actually at the center of the whole visible universe, and therefore in all probability, in the center of the whole material universe.

"This conclusion no doubt is a startling one, and all kinds of objections will be made against it, yet I am not acquainted with any great inductive result of modern science that has been arrived at so gradually, so legitimately, by means of so vast a mass of precise measurements and observations and by such wholly unprejudiced workers. It may not be proved with minute accuracy as regards the actual mathematical center. That is not of the least importance; but that it is substantially correct there seems to be no good reason to doubt, and I therefore hold it right and proper to have it so stated and provisionally accepted until further accumulations of evidence may show to what extent it requires modification.

"This completes the first part of our inquiry, but an equally important part remains to be considered: our position in the solar system itself as regards adaptability for organic life. Here, too, I am not aware that the whole facts have been sufficiently considered, yet there are facts that indicate our position in this respect to be as central and unique as that of the sun in the stellar universe."

Then as to the materialistic objection, that to make man the purpose, and his home the center, of this vast universe "is a ridiculous anticlimax," he says. "The Agnostics and Materialists will no doubt object that the want of all proportion between the means and the end condemns this theory from its very foundation. But is there any such want of proportion? Given infinite space and infinite time, and there can be no such thing as want of proportion if the end to be reached were a great and worthy one, and if the particular mode of attaining that end were the best, or perhaps even the only possible one; and we may fairly presume that it was so by the fact that it has been used and has succeeded." And his conclusion is as follows:

"The three startling facts that we are in the center of a cluster of suns, and that cluster is situated not only precisely in the plane of the Milky Way, but also centrally in that plane, can hardly now be looked upon as chance coincidences without any significance in relation to the culminating facts that the planet so situated has developed humanity. Of course, the relation here pointed out may be a true relation of cause and effect, and yet have arisen as the result of one in a thousand million chances occurring during almost infinite time; but, on the other hand, those thinkers may be right who, holding that the universe is a manifestation of mind and that the orderly development of living souls supplies an adequate reason why such a universe should have been called into existence, believe that we ourselves are its sole and sufficient result, and that nowhere else than near the central position in the universe which we occupy, could that result have been attained."

Intelligent and thoughtful Christians will at once recognize in all this a remarkable agreement with what the Scriptures say as to man's place in creation and the relative importance of our earth in the universe. Though Dr. Wallace goes even further than the Bible in this claim to pre-eminence. And they will both wonder and rejoice at such strong confirmation to these teachings of Holy Writ, coming as it does so unexpectedly, from such a source, and from a purely scientific investigation of the subject. Nor will the value of this confirmation and agreement be wholly lost or much diminished, even though the scientific world be not ready to admit that all these statements are absolutely correct, or all these arguments wholly valid, or this conclusion "necessary" and true beyond all question. For unless utterly discredited, which is not likely, this article will show even to "modern skeptics" perhaps that the teaching of God's word and the belief of God's people as to the place and importance of our earth and our race are not irrational and absurd, as they have so confidently affirmed, but on the contrary may be eminently reasonable and scientifically correct. So after all and looking at it from a merely scientific standpoint, the Bible and the Christian claim may be true, probably is. And for this we do rejoice, yea, and we will rejoice. "Thy word is truth." G. L. L.

How to Learn to Love Christ.

By Robert E. Speer, A. M.

Some Christians love Christ instinctively. They cannot help it any more than they can help loving their mothers. Perhaps they grew up to love him from infancy. In their homes he was often mentioned, but never without tenderness. They have learned to go to him in all hours of need for help, and in all other hours for companionship.

But there are other Christians who cannot describe themselves in this way, much as they would like to do so. They want to love Christ, but they cannot feel his reality. They want to love him, but all they can say is, "We will do whatever we find out to be his will, but we cannot see him or feel him, and, while we want to love him, we have no such sense of love for him as we have for earthly friends."

How may those who want to love Christ learn to love him? First of all, we do not love what we do not know or think we know. We love what we have met. If we would love Christ, we must know him. And we know him in two ways: by surrendering our lives to his present control, and by studying the facts of his earthly life.

If we will resolve to please Christ, and to make his will the law of our life, we shall find ourselves growing more and more attached to him. We cannot choose a captain and serve him perfectly without coming to love him. In the case of Christ, we do more than choose a captain—we admit a life. It is as when a State not only acknowledges the sovereignty of the ruler of another State, but receives that ruler to dwell in its own territory. There is something even beyond this. Christ himself comes into our lives, not as a ruler who is yet not a part of us, but he fills our life as the life of the vine flows through the branches. And in us he creates a great love for himself.

The study of Christ's earthly life must win the deepest love of the heart of anyone who will honestly strive to understand it, and to repeat it. We cannot think of his loving ways with little children and the poor, of his tenderness, patience, and sympathy, of his strength and truthfulness, and of his salvation of the world, without loving him, for what he was and did and suffered.

It is good to make our thought of Jesus very personal. Think of what he did for you, and ask whether you would have done as he did, or if you are doing now what he would have you do. Remember that, in spite of the fact that you would not have done what he did, and are not doing now what he would have you do, he loves you and will love you always. Can you keep from loving such a Saviour?

Daily Quiet Virtues.

It is the bubbling stream that flows gently; the little rivulet which runs along day and night by the farmhouse, that is useful, rather than the swollen flood or warring cataract. Niagara excites our wonder; and we stand amazed at the powerful greatness of God there, as He pours in from the hollow of His hand. But one Niagara is enough for the continents of the world, while the same world requires thousands and tens of thousands of silver fountains and gently flowing rivulets that water every farm and meadow, and every garden, and shall flow on every day and night with their gentle, quiet beauty. So with the acts of our lives. It is not by great deeds, like those of the martyrs, good is to be done, but by the daily and quiet virtues of life.

We all need to be reminded that what God wants of us is fidelity, and that He has placed most of us in positions where we can be faithful only in a few things. He seeks character, a training that will prepare us to be rulers over many things hereafter. Hence, the man or woman who lives in the lowliest sphere on earth may be polishing a jewel that will shine the brightest in the Saviour's crown.—Selected.

Unseen Brethren.

"Isn't it a strange thought that those poor unenlightened souls out in China, Africa and Japan are our brethren?"

"Well, rather, Lillian, but so it is. Yet I never thought of looking upon them as any near kin of mine until I heard Dr. Cox talk. Think of those poor little African boys worshipping those miserable idols, and not knowing anything about Christ and His love for humanity.

"Yet He just as truly died for them as for us, dear. I wonder if we ever fully realize the privilege of having been born in a Christian land and of Christian parents. Christ's pardoning blood was shed as truly for them as for us.

"It makes life so responsible, dear, this knowledge that Christ has entrusted to us the salvation of souls, and while we may not all be adapted to carry to them the message, yet there is none so weak and small but they can help with their sympathy, prayers and means.

"Yes, our means become a blessing to us when we are able to use it to Christ's honor and glory. Consecrated money the missionary called it, and if we give it in the proper spirit we are sure to reap a blessing.

"When a certain good man I once knew died," mother said, "we were all surprised to learn how poor he really was in this world's goods. We had thought him a man of moderate circumstances, he had always supported so freely every cause of the church at home and abroad.

"Ah, yes," said the pastor, when questioned on the subject, "he laid up his treasures in heaven, where moth and rust cannot corrupt."

"And he died poor," some one said. "Not so," was the answer, "he died rich in the promises of God's word."

"I smiled yesterday when I heard grandfather speak of his bank account in heaven, but now I know what he meant. The dividends there are sure and the banks never fail, he said."

"The money that gives me the most satisfaction," said a religious lawyer, "is the money I spend in promoting Christ's kingdom. I am interested in home missions, but it is the foreign missions that appeal most to my heart and sympathy. Here the Gospel is open to most people, but there how shall they know unless they are taught. And I have trained the baby hands of my children to give even at the cost of self denial."

Our unseen brethren, by God's grace we may rescue their souls from darkness and sin.—Sarah V. DuBois in Christian Intelligencer.

A good deal of agitation seems to have been created among scholarly Hindus by a proposal to introduce the Bible in the schools of India, and indirectly a striking tribute to the power of the Christian Scriptures has been paid. The universities of England and America study the sacred books of India, and are not afraid of their influence. But the people of India believe that the study of the Bible would prove to be dangerous to Hinduism. They have no protest to make against the study of Shakespeare, but the press of the country bristles with objections to the suggested introduction of the Bible. There are some among the people, however, who desire to see the study of our Scriptures undertaken. One paper has the courage to say, "The Bible if made the centre of India's religious thought, would work out the moral regeneration of the land." And that is the end to be desired above all else.—Selected.

The story of the Christian missions is one of thrilling interest and marvelous results. The services and the sacrifices of the missionaries for their fellow-men constitute one of the most glorious pages of the world's history.—The late President McKinley.

We can often do more for other men by correcting our own faults than by trying to correct theirs.—Francis Fenelo.

Sunday School Lesson.

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. G. HILL, D. D.

Paul Arrested.

Acts 21-30-40. May 3, 1903.

When Paul reached Jerusalem he received from James and the elders of the Church some counsels as to taking steps to conciliate the Jews. They advise him to comply with certain requirements of the Mosaic law, respecting a Nazarite's vow, in order to convince the Jews that he was not an enemy of the institutions given them by Moses. They admit that the Gentiles were not required to observe the ceremonial law but deem it wise for Paul to silence reports, regarding his hospitality to Mosaic demands by pursuing the course indicated. The apostle as was his custom when no principle was involved, follows their advice and appears in the temple to indicate the fulfillment of his vow and the completion of his purification. His appearance there leads to the events recorded in this lesson.

1. The Assault on Paul.—This was made by a mob of angry Jews. It was caused by false charges. Certain Jews from the province of Asia "stirred up the people and laid hands on him." They declared that he was an enemy of the Jewish people of the Mosaic law and of Jerusalem and the temple. They affirm that he had taught people every where against them and that he had polluted the temple by bringing Gentiles, within its sacred precincts. Thus aroused to madness the mob drew Paul out of the temple, closed the doors and proceeded to beat him for the purpose of taking his life. Mob violence is often thus produced by baseless prejudice, false views and rampant passions, that are not controlled by reason or conscience. The innocent too oftentimes suffer as did Paul from an infuriated mob. Mob law which sets aside the authority of the civil magistrate is always dangerous and frequently defeats the ends of justice and inflicts cruel injuries. But the Lord did not choose to allow his servant to be slain by his incensed countrymen.

2. Paul Rescued.—The Chief Captain of the temple guard from the Castle of Antonia, hearing that Jerusalem was in an uproar, arrested Paul and delivered him from his enemies. The turbulent Jews had a wholesome dread of Roman authority and ceased their assault upon Paul so soon as they saw the soldiers. The Chief Captain deeming him a malefactor, commanded him to be bound with two chains for safe-keeping. Unable to learn with what offence the prisoner was charged on account of the confusion, he commanded him to be carried unto the castle. The maddened Jews fearing Paul's escape, followed him crying, "Away with him," and pressed with violence upon the soldiers. These protected him from assault and bore him upon the stairway above the people. The Lord can readily provide protection for his servants, prolong their lives, until their earthly work is done and accomplish His purposes even by means of the mistakes and evil passions of sinful men. It was His purpose that Paul should bear witness for him at Rome and He allowed the Jews to assail him and the Romans to arrest him, that this design might be realized.

3. Paul's Defense.—From the stairway Paul requests the Chief Captain that he may speak unto the people and receives permission. He addresses the Roman commander in Greek and surprises him with this evidence of culture. The officer intimates that He suspects him to be a notorious Egyptian rebel and leader of a band of murderers. Paul declares himself to be a Jew, and a citizen of Tarsus in Cilicia, a city noted for its culture, refinement and many advantages. Being allowed to speak to the people, Paul shows his tact and knowledge of human nature by addressing them in the Hebrew tongue. This was their sacred language, in which the Mosaic law was written and by using it Paul manifested his identity with them and reverence for their institutions. He desires to show his fellow-countrymen that he was not their enemy nor hostile to the law of Moses, to Jerusalem or the temple worship.

What the Story of Zacchaeus Teaches.

Luke 19:1-10. Topic for May 10.

Christ had almost finished His ministry of the Gospel by word and deed and was going up to Jerusalem for the final act of His work of redeeming the world. The time for the paschal offering was drawing near when He should be the Paschal Lamb. On His way up he was to pass through Jericho. The rumor that He, who had raised Lazarus, a citizen of neighboring Bethany, from the dead, was to pass that way seems to have preceded Him, for the inhabitants of Jericho had thronged out into the street in the way by which He must pass to greet Him.

Among others who had come was a man, "little of stature." He tried to get through the crowd, but was prevented. It was not only his height which was an obstacle to his getting into the presence of Jesus, but his occupation likewise. He was a chief publican: But he had a true desire to see the Master. He knew that Jesus must pass through a certain street and that overhanging that street were the great sycamore trees. Into the branches of one of these he climbed and presently he has the joy of seeing the throng turn into that street. But a greater joy was in store for him. When the Chief Traveller, the One around whom the people were crowded came under the place where Zacchaeus was, He looked up and addressed the publican. "Make haste, Zacchaeus, and come down, for to-day I must lodge in your house."

Hastily and joyfully the publican comes down and with the greatest pleasure receives Christ into his home. A feast is spread and while the company is eating of the food which Zacchaeus has laid before them, the Holy Spirit has spread a feast for the soul of Zacchaeus. Full of this new principle which has come into his life with the advent of Jesus into his home, Zacchaeus stands before the Lord and speaks from the depths of his heart: "The half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have wrongfully exacted ought of any man, I restore four-fold" (R. V.) Jesus replies confirming the new hope which has arisen in the publican's heart: "To-day is salvation come to this house."

The story of Zacchaeus affords us many important truths about coming to Christ and what Christ accepts.

In the first place we learn that whenever one has a real desire to get into the presence of Jesus, all obstacles to his coming become as nothing. It is not enough for one to say he wants to come to Jesus and would do so were it not for certain reasons which he keeps to himself. If a man or woman wants Christ, he will get Him and no reason will keep him away. A young man who grew up in a congregation where in addition to making a profession of Christ to the session, it was the custom for new members to present themselves before the pulpit and there in the presence of the assembled congregation repeat the vows, said he would accept Christ and connect himself with the Church but he hadn't the courage to face the congregation. His mother said to him, "My son you don't really want to come to Christ or you wouldn't let a little thing like that stand in the way." A few weeks later the young man experienced a change of heart and not for an instant did he hold back because of the public profession which he had to make.

Another lesson is that coming to Christ has to do not only with the present and the future but also with the past. Zacchaeus could not rest as long as any ill-gotten gain was in his possession. Restitution is hard sometimes but the willingness to make restitution is one of the evidences of a changed heart.

There were plenty of priests in Jericho; half as many as in Jerusalem yet Jesus lodged with the publican who was an outcast from the best circles. So it is always. Jesus still, "lies in wait for sinners and eateth with them," as a literal translation reads.

A Knowledge of Missions Conducive to Interest.

By Rev. R. L. Benn.

The flippant remark is often made that missions is a "dry subject." And with this impression, very many, probably, when it is previously known that this phase of Christian work will constitute the theme of the minister's discourse, either remain at home or worship with a neighboring congregation. The disposition, to say the least, implies a want of interest in the greatest work next to redemption itself on the part of the Godhead, and betrays extreme selfishness in withholding support. For, it is hardly probable that more than a paltry amount is contributed, if anything at all, to foster and maintain the most comprehensive and enduring enterprise that ever yet elicited the attention and engaged the energies and gifts of mankind.

The question arises, therefore, as to how one may overcome this lack of interest and shameful infecundity respecting missions, and the work thrill with renewed and increasing motion. There is one way which seems feasible. A correct understanding of what missions involves and purports, and what it is gradually and surely realizing will invariably awaken interest, engender sympathy and draw forth personal effort.

This is true from the fact that no one is ever very materially interested or very substantially moved in anything so long as there is ignorance and insensibility to the benefits or pleasures, predicted. Without adequate notions of a given subject, so far as that particular subject is related to the attention and interest of the individual, it is as a nonentity. The cause which determines and actuates rational beings in the prosecution of anything,—a course of study, a business, a given work, is interest in it. What is interest? It is the reason made practical; and the means by which this is effected is knowledge. Some knowledge of missions is requisite to interest in it. He who studies the subject and acquires correct notions of its origin and authority, its absolute necessity on the part of men, its marvelous achievements in a world of sin and wretchedness, will be filled with interest or moved in its support. The missionary spirit was kindled in Carey by studying God's word, by reading the life of Brainerd among the Indians of the new world, by pouring over "Cook's voyages," which, in imagination, conducted him around the world and enabled him to learn man's state and need, and he grew so interested that he yearned to bring God's Word and the needy world together. The same means aroused the lethargic spirit of Duff, who became the pioneer of education in India and an authority on Indian affairs and Christian missions. These men studied the meagre missionary literature of their time, until the needs of the heathen appeared as real and momentous, as their own needs of divine grace; and they were earnestly moved as is instance by Captain Wilson and the thirty who set sail with him for the South seas, and by Williams who subsequently followed, and by the Countess of Huntingdon whose gifts of consecrated generosity made missionary effort possible.

A correct understanding of missions has wrought advantageously in multitudes of cases where rigid indifference or stern unbelief closed the heart against every appeal. It is simply impossible to trace the path of Jno. G. Patton from his small beginnings in the Glasgow missions to the New Hebrides, where he stands the hero of holy adventure and the spiritual father of hundreds of savages won to Christ; or to follow the footsteps of Titus Coan along the shore-belt of Hawaii, and witness the wonderful outpouring of the spirit upon the natives and the effectual work of godly repentance in reconciling hatred, in reclaiming drunkards, in regenerating thieves and murderers, in cleansing adulterers, and in the abandonment of superstitions and false gods for Jesus; or to view the privations and unshaken courage of Hunt amid the cannibals of Fiji and Moffat amid the Hottentots of Africa—impossible to read these marvelous records of the triumph of divine grace over heathen brutality and savage ferocity and millenniums of superstitions tradition, and not be interested, aye, not be moved to cheerfully and literally support the work. By studying the subject one sees revolutions as great and momentous as that by which Adam fell: for regeneration is as great a change as apostasy. That fact, that actual exertion of divine power, which causes joy among the angels, as it enters upon record in the archives of the church here upon earth, and as it is read and pondered, must even have the effect of creating interest.

A correct understanding of missions puts the matter in its true light and imperative bearing upon the Christian believers. It shows that each member of the church in proportion to his means and opportunity is under obligation to preach the gospel to every creature. It is a work which Christ has assigned. It does not devolve upon a few disciples, but upon all. Each and every one has laid upon him a certain portion of this Christian service which he is solemnly bound to render. Hence, the work of evangelizing the world is distributed among the countless individuals composing the Church; and were each one as faithful in his own sphere and time as were Diaz in the West Indies, and McCall in France, and Mackay and Judson among the Mongolian and Malayan population of the Orient, this sinful world would present a far different aspect from what it now does.

Inasmuch as every disciple of Christ is duty-bound to contribute his share towards evangelizing the world, it is certainly important that he learns what portion of this service he is expected to perform during this short life and give himself to meeting the responsibility. Nothing aids in this function so much as a clear and definite conception of the origin and relation of the work. A candid study of the subject reveals most perceptibly that each believer, from the nature of the case, is essentially a missionary. And with enlightenment, that heaven-born love of the heart for the Redeemer's honor and for the perishing souls of mankind, sweeps away all geographical lines and obliterates all distinction, and either in person or by proxy, yearns and seeks to give the gospel to every child of Adam. In the biography of Mrs. Wakefield, whose labors and life were expended in eastern Africa, there occurs a pathetic anecdote which beautifully exhibits the feeling of every true Christian. Upon the sad event of her death, one of the boys, Kamuazo, wrote a letter of condolence to her brother, and after touchingly referring to her kindness to him, goes on to describe how she came with a torch to the dark land of Ribe, that all the people might take it and each be enlightened in his own soul; then pass it on that others might take it and each be enlightened in his own soul; and thus be prepared for the coming of the Son of Man. The simple notion of this poor African boy is the essential notion of every devout Christian, and very clearly defines and enforces the obligation resting upon each, to send the torch of the gospel to enlighten those people who are yet in darkness.

That which engages one's energies and gifts is always interesting. But no one ever puts his talents and money into anything of which he is in profound ignorance; and this principle probably explains why the support of large numbers is so meagre. It is not human nature to invest in a scheme about which nothing is definitely known. A knowledge of missions overcomes this reluctance and encourages investment. He who has studied the history of missionary activity knows something about its accomplishments, and can readily answer all questions of doubt about its intrinsically possible merit with intelligent certainty. He knows what the effort to preach the gospel over the entire globe is doing for the degraded inhabitants of it, how it is continuously enriching every department of science, literature and language and to what enormous proportions it is increasing the pecuniary wealth of those countries which occupy a liberal attitude towards it. But apart from all strictly economic consideraions, the fact, alone, that human souls are saved and human lives redeemed, is a sufficient guarantee to merit any amount of money and enlist any number of men and women in the maintenance and perpetuation of this heavenly ordained work.

The introduction of knowledge is revolutionary. The various objections urged against missions betray ignorance and the need of proper information. One or two instances will suffice to show how puerile they really are and how readily they vanish when true understanding of the work is reached. The objection based on the parity between the moral teachings of Confucius and the Vedas and Zend-avesta and those of Christ, assumes that because the millions of these countries possess good moral maxims, they obey them; that because they have them, they are prepared for a pure and holy heaven; that salvation is by the amount of moral truth and law, and over-looks the inevitable truth that salvation is by the gospel whose essential provision is the atonement and whose essential condition is faith in the Divine mercy revealed in Christ, which is found in no teaching outside the pale of the Gospel. The degraded populations of China and India no more obey their excellent moral traditions and are no more qualified for heaven than the millions of Christendom who have the moral law, obey it and are prepared for heaven. In both cases, alike, the internal effect of the atonement is incident to living up to excellent moral laws and to an entrance into heaven. Then that objection which so daringly presumes on the Divine goodness; that God is too good to punish the heathen, for it would be unjust in Him to punish them for not having heard of Christ. But the heathen is not punished for not having heard of Christ, but for their sin and the awful, incorrigible, deep, dark cast of guilt which Paul and Livingstone and others graphically depict. And the assertion that one nation has no right to thrust its religion upon another nation, very erroneously apprehends the origin and method of missions. It regards man as the author, whereas, a knowledge of the subject from the New Testament shows that Christ authorized this work and ordered that it be done in His name. His name is the authority and reason which men and women have for sailing the seas and enduring hardships and preaching the gospel in savage lands. They are in the service and are carrying out the plans of Almighty God. When that eminent and successful missionary, Dr. Morrison, was about to sail for China nearly a century ago, the kind-hearted and unbelieving owner of the ship who had offered him passage in one of his vessels addressed him in these words: "And so you really expect to make an impression upon the Chinese empire." "No, sir, but I expect that God will," was the confident and calm reply of the man of God. The only reason for missions is that God authorizes it and no higher reason is possible. He authorizes the work, he takes care of all events and results, and will ultimately bless the vision of the Church with the sight of his consummated plans.

A correct knowledge of what missions mean is a possible antagonist of indifference and unbelief. It is true that there are phenomena, such as calamities to lives and property, famine and disease, wars and persecution, which tend to discourage and disparage further effort. But when it is remembered that the promise of God is pledged and the blood of Christ incarnate has been shed for the conversion of nations and races, and that all events, however strange and startling and paralyzing, belong to God and contribute to the fulfillment of his unflinching purpose, faith triumphs over doubt, courage over dismay, activity over lethargy; for across the field of discouraging hindrances, as was the case with Francis Xavier at Rome, the Christian disciple sees souls converted and kingdoms become the kingdoms of his Lord and without haste and without rest, he pushes on, confident of the goal. This is the lofty Biblical theory of missions. To know it from a study of the Bible, from implicit faith in His word, from the achievement already apparent on the field of action, makes believers confident and courageous workers.

Outline Bible Study—Galatians, Chapter V.

Vers. 1. "The liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free." Here is a most interesting and profitable subject for our study, Christian liberty. What is a Christian freed from? 1, Ro. 7:1-4, Gal. 2:19; 2, Ro. 6:18, Jno. 8:32-36; 3, Gal. 1:4; 4, Isaiah 51:12, 1 Cor. 7:23; 5, Heb. 2:15. What is a Christian not freed from? 1, vs. 13, last clause, vs. 14, Ro. 13:8; 2, 1 Pet. 1:6, Heb. 12:14, last clause; 3, Ro. 8:2, Gal. 5:25. What false liberty does the world offer? Vs. 13, second clause, 2 Pet. 2:19.

Vers. 2-4. Paul's last argument against ritualism, legalism, self-righteousness and similar errors which had crept into the Galatian Church. Notice how he repeats and sums up former arguments.

Vers. 3. "A debtor to do the whole law." What is the argument in this verse? Compare ch. 3:10.

Vers. 4. "Christ is become of no effect unto you." If a man should say, "I trust partly in keeping the law, and where that fails, in Christ," how does Paul answer this? Compare also ch. 2:21. "Ye are fallen from grace." Taken in its connection, does this expression bear the meaning which some have put upon it? Compare Phil. 1:6, Jno. 10:27-29. What two expressions in the two preceding clauses of this same verse, is this expression, "fallen from grace," equivalent to?

Vers. 6. "In Jesus Christ." Putting this with ch. 6:15, what do you learn, 1, as to what is essential to salvation; 2, as to the connection of regeneration and faith, 1 Jno. 5:1; 3, as to the nature of saving faith, Jas. 2:22?

Vers. 11. "The offence of the Cross." What is this? See 1 Cor. 1:23, compare also Mat. 16:21-24. "Ceased." In our own time, 1, what doctrine which centers in the cross do many men oppose? See refs. on ch. 1:4, first clause; 2, What practical requirement of the gospel do many shrink from? Mark 8:34.

Vers. 16, 25. "Walk in the spirit." A great fundamental command, which cannot be studied too deeply, or obeyed too faithfully. What does it mean? See vs. 18, first clause, Ro. 8:14, Ro. 6:13, 16. What does it comprehend? Eph. 4:1, Eph. 5:2, first clause, Eph. 5:8, last clause, Eph. 5:15, Eph. 4:17.

What is the opposite treatment of the Holy Spirit? Acts 7:51, 1 Thess. 5:19, Eph. 4:30; which of these are addressed to Christians? "The flesh." How often does this expression "the flesh" occur in this chapter? What other terms are used elsewhere for the same thing and what one thing do they all mean? 1, Eph. 4:22; 2, Ro. 8:7; 3, Ro. 7:17, 20; 4, Jer. 17:9.

Vers. 17. "The flesh against the spirit . . . The spirit against the flesh." What chapter in the Epistle to the Romans describes this same conflict? Is this conflict felt by every Christian? When does it end? Heb. 4:9, 1 Jno. 3:2.

Vers. 19-21. How many "works of the flesh" are here enumerated? Is this list complete? See vs. 21, the words, "and such like;" compare Ro. 1:29-31, 2 Ti. 3:2-5. What is the certain destiny of all who practise these things? Gal. 5:21, last clause, Ro. 1:32, first clause.

Vers. 22-23. How many Christian graces here mentioned? How many in 2 Pet. 1:5-7? Make a similar list from the commands in Ro. 12:8-21. In this chapter Gal. 5:22-23, these Christian graces are termed, "the fruit of the Spirit," in 2 Pet. 1, and Ro. 12, they are enjoined upon us as what we ourselves must do or be—what do you learn from this?

Vers. 24. "Crucified the flesh." What similar expressions do you find, 1, in Ro. 8:13, last clause; 2, Col. 3:5, first clause; 3, Eph. 4:22; 4, 1 Cor. 9:27; 5, 2 Cor. 10:5 last clause; 6, Mk. 8:34? How are we to obey these commands? 1, Heb. 12:4; 2, Phil. 4:13, Eph. 3:16, last clause, Ro. 8:13. Is this an immediate attainment or a gradual process? Prov. 4:18.

Vers. 25. "If we live . . . let us walk." What test of the genuineness of our religious life is here given?

Looking over this chapter especially vs. 13-26, what abuse or perversion of the doctrine of justification by faith is here answered? Compare Ro. 6:1.

What additional argument is there to confirm this doctrine? Compare Ro. 8:3, 4.

A Bible Study—Part III.

By Rev. S. S. Laws, D. D., LL. D.

In all the instances adduced or adducible from the cosmic process of the innocent suffering for or on account of the guilty, there are at least three fatal points of disparity between them and the Messianic procedure.

1. In these cosmic instances the sufferers have no freedom of choice. The wife, children, kindred, and friends of the criminal, the executed criminal, or the abandoned drunkard are the helpless, as well as the innocent, victims of the misdeeds of the guilty ones. Yet how common the sad cases?

2. In the second place, the suffering of the innocent in these cases has no legal and little, if any, moral influence or effect on the guilty.

3. A third disparity is the total absence of motive on the part of the sufferers. It is merely passive endurance of what has overtaken them as an unavoidable calamity.

This appeal to the course of nature for illustration and support of the vicarious sufferings of Christ is, therefore, a radical mistake. He who makes it fails to perceive the palpable inversion of the relations of the parties. And as analogy is the resemblance of relations, the very basis of analogy is subverted and swept away. The supposed semblance is a ghostly delusion.

Now turn to the simple but profound language of the Redeemer himself, covering the very issue involved. In the Gospel of John x:7-18: "I am the good shepherd. . . I lay down my life for the sheep. No one taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself."

Here is perfect freedom and choice, and the benefit to accrue to others—to the guilty ones—is the motive of the action. The atmosphere is at once almost wholly cleared of its malarial murkiness and sunshine illumines the scene.

But look again and listen to these words: "I have power—eksousia—rightful power, to lay it down, and I have rightful power to take it again." Here is the amazing assertion of rightful power over his own life which no mere creature could affirm. This is a declaration of his competence and perfect right to engage in this transaction involving life and death. But wait, the crowning circumstance is still to be mentioned, and it should silence every cavil. The whole procedure was not only freely and of perfect right undertaken by him and approved by the Father, but was actually authorized and commanded of the Father: "This commandment received I from my Father."

Behold all is now in a glow of light shed down from the very throne of God. Thus viewed strictly from the standpoint of a Bible study, without pursuing the matter more in detail, it may be safely submitted that it is not possible to find, nor to conjecture, a valid objection to or criticism of this vicarious transaction in which the innocent Redeemer suffered for the guilty sinner. He had the perfect right and the full sanction of Heaven to do what he did. Hence there was no one in the universe competent to question it and object. And he had an adequate and an infinitely important and sufficient reason or motive for what he did. The whole transaction, therefore, was pre-eminently reasonable, wise, and just, and infinitely merciful, and is entitled, on its own inherent merits, to be esteemed the source of judgment to be passed on the cosmic process rather than the reverse.

7. The truth which the endeavor has now been made to state with simplicity and clearness is commonly termed the doctrine of the atonement. On its Godward side and on its manward side it is primarily realized in justification. And no better definition of justification has ever been given, or is likely to be given, than that in the Shorter Westminster Catechism: "Justification is an act of God's free grace, wherein he pardoneth all our sins and accepteth us as righteous in his sight, only for the righteousness of Christ imputed to us and received by faith alone."

Attention will be given later to what should be esteemed the proper understanding of the clause, "accepteth us as righteous in his sight."

What is meant by the righteousness of Christ has been brought forth from its equivocal and obscure hiding place, and in simple terms intelligible to the wayfarer; and the Bible solution of the problem how can man be just with God, or, conversely, how can God be just and yet justify the sinner, has been concisely enunciated. This is the Bible's answer to the question; and all this has a direct bearing on the removal of the legal obstacle in the way of man's salvation.

Nature knows nothing of justification and forgiveness. She makes no promises, no covenants, but ever and anon proclaims in fulminating tones from the skies, Do this and live—do this and live: "Cursed is every one who continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law (not merely in parchment or stone, but in the fleshly tablets of the soul) to do them" (Gal. 3:10; Rom. 2:13-15). Nature knows no mediator or Saviour. No; it leaves man as does Buddhism or Confucianism, absolutely alone, to battle with the problems of life. But Christianity concedes to man all that can be justly and rationally claimed for him, and then by a wholly supernatural mediatorial system of interposition supplies what is lacking. It is in this light that the fundamental doctrine of the atonement must be viewed to be understood and appreciated, as the divinely appointed and provided remedy for the legal obstacle that bars man's way to heaven.

Those who profess to preach this gospel and eliminate from it its supernatural and legal elements, set at defiance the injunction of the Apostle and incur his condemnation: "Take heed unto yourselves and to all the flock over which the Holy Spirit hath made you overseers, bishops, to feed the Church of the Lord which he purchased with his own blood. I know that after my departing grievous wolves shall enter in among you, not sparing the flock; and from among your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away the disciples after them." The Church was purchased not by example, but by blood, without the shedding of which there is no remission. To those who obey not this truth, but seek the favor of men by vainly attempting to popularize or modernize the Gospel as a rationalistic system, the language of Paul to the disturbers of the soundness of doctrine and of the peace of the Church of the Galatians may be justly applied as the warning of a fearful responsibility:—

"I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto a different gospel: which is not another gospel [it does not deserve the name]: only there are some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, should preach unto you any gospel other than that which we preached unto you, let him be anathema. As we have said before, so say I now again, If any man preacheth unto you any gospel other than that which ye received, let him be anathema. For am I now seeking the favor of men, or of God's or am I striving to please men? If I were still pleasing men, I should not be a servant of Christ." Gal. 1:6-10.

Presbytery of Atlanta.

We have all heard recently a great deal about the "Atlanta Spirit." The phrase seems to stand for that unity, harmony and enthusiasm which blend a body of people into a solid mass, and inspire them with a determination to win in the conflict. If such be the meaning of the "Atlanta Spirit," it has evidently spread beyond the city of Atlanta, and taken possession of the Atlanta Presbytery.

This court of the Lord's house met on the 15th inst. in the beautiful and prosperous little town of Hogansville. It organized by electing Brother W. Lee Harrell, moderator, and Brothers Herndon and Bell, temporary clerks. These are all young men, but they filled their positions with the proficiency of tried and experienced veterans.

The railroads which contracted to carry your correspondent from his distant home to the place of meeting failed to fulfill their contract within the specified time, and for this reason he did not reach the scene of action until the morning session of the second day. When he arrived the last guns were being fired in the great battle over the "Latin Thesis." The mighty issues were hotly contested, and every inch of ground was disputed with strenuous energy and dauntless valor. The form of the motion before the house was, "recommended that we answer the Assembly's overture in the negative." When the vote was taken a very decided majority declined to answer in the negative. Then a motion was made to answer the Assembly's overture in the affirmative. It seemed to be a foregone conclusion that this motion would carry the same majority by which the preceding one was lost. But the redoubtable champions of the Latin tongue asked for time. Recess was taken till after dinner. They rallied their scattered and demoralized forces, and when the Presbytery reassembled, they renewed the conflict with fresh and impassioned ardour. The valiant leader fairly outdid himself, and decided the affair of the day by declaring that Latin was not only a near and dear relative to English and French, but was the actual, bona fide mother of German; that whereas he had never studied German, he found, on meeting this fair daughter, that she was by no means a stranger because of his intimate acquaintance with her venerable mother. Such knowledge was too wonderful for us, and the hearts of many fainted within them. The majority melted away, and when the second vote was taken, the result was a tie. It was thus that the "Latin Thesis" was saved, to serve in the future, as it has in the past, as the badge of our high and accurate scholarship.

Obviously this battle royal exhausted the martial spirit of the body. From that time to the hours of adjournment the most delightful spirit of harmony remained undisturbed. A truly blessed fellowship of truly brotherly love grew stronger and stronger, and when the time for final separation arrived, the expression was universal among the members that in sweetness of social and Christian intercourse, this was the best meeting that Atlanta Presbytery had ever held. Better than all, it was felt and gratefully acknowledged that the meeting had been an occasion of very unusual spiritual enjoyment and profit. The brethren who preached, preached as if the Holy Spirit were moving their hearts, and those who listened, listened as those whom God had made willing. There was a conviction in many hearts, to which expression was freely given, that the first droppings of a great shower of blessings were already falling on us. I believe there will be sad disappointment throughout Atlanta Presbytery, if the coming months are not marked by revivals of remarkable power. May God anticipate and prevent such sad disappointment by fulfilling abundantly the expectations of his anxious and prayerful servants!

The reports from the churches showed that the past year has been one of unusual fruitfulness. Many congregations have been warmed into more vigorous life by special manifestations of God's favour. The number of additions on confession of faith has been gratifying, and an increase in contributions to the causes of Christian benevolence showed growth in the grace of liberality. While the reports mentioned something that were not as we would have them, the review of the year inspired a most hopeful and grateful feeling; and preachers and elders were moved to gird themselves with fresh courage for the work to which God is calling them. One of the very hopeful things in the present condition of Atlanta Presbytery is the spirit of earnestness manifested by the ruling elders. They not only show a disposition to hold up the hands of their preachers, and take upon themselves a part of the labour; but they voice an earnest desire that the preachers shall call the Church to a higher spiritual life. They seem much impressed with the defects which mar the Church, and demand that those who speak for Christ shall be faithful in warning his people, and admonishing them of their sins. When the eldership of the Presbyterian Church becomes fully aroused to the responsibility which rests upon them along with the ministers of the word to separate the children of God to a more unworldly and Christ-like manner of living, the beginning of better things will already have come.

One of the most pleasing incidents in the proceedings of the Presbytery was the reception of an attractive young man under care of the Presbytery as a candidate for the gospel ministry. He belongs to the Westminster Church of Atlanta, and is the first fruits of that young Church's offering to the Lord. It is a blessed omen. The Westminster Church is only about two years old, a daughter of the Central, and is thus early proving that she is going to walk in the footsteps of her worthy mother. More than one of the Atlanta Churches is demonstrating that it is not necessary that the pulpits should so largely depend on the country churches to furnish them with occupants. The grace of God can reach the hearts of young men in the city, and make them feel and know how great the honor, how blessed the privilege to give themselves to the Master in the work of the ministry.

The chairman of the committee on church and Christian education testified to a growing zeal in behalf of this great cause. The whole Synod of Georgia seems to be thrilling with a great awakening on this subject and is looking longingly and hopefully to a brighter future. Agnes Scott Institute is already her glory and pride. This noble nursery of learning conjoined with piety is taxed to her utmost with pupils from fifteen states and is seeking enlargement to accommodate an ever enlarging patronage. With Donald Frazer added to its faculty, it is fast forging to the front as a preparatory school for boys. Blackshear Institute is pressing in its footsteps and shedding an ever brightening light on South Georgia. Other institutions, both higher and lower, are taking shape in plans for the not distant future.

Drs. Rice and Bull were selected to represent the Presbytery in the approaching General Assembly. Associated with them are Ruling Elders, S. M. Inman of Atlanta, and B. W. Boyd of Hogansville.

So delightful was the impression of this meeting of Presbytery, that when the time came to select a place for the Fall meeting, invitations poured in from every direction. After much friendly, but earnest competition, Carrollton, one of the churches under charge of Brother Dosier, was finally selected. Clark.

Y. W. C. A. Work in North Carolina.

A Young Woman's Christian Association has just been organized in Greensboro, N. C., and one in Charleston, S. C., a few weeks ago. These are the first two city Associations in the Carolinas organized under the supervision of the State Executive Committee, and there are twenty-five college Associations.

There are two different organizations in the United States working under the name, "Young Women's Christian Associations." One of these is supervised by the International Board with its headquarters in Baltimore. It does philanthropic work of all kinds and its local associations are controlled by women who are not necessarily members of Churches. The other has its national headquarters in Chicago where the American Committee supervises the work of the entire United States. This organization is a part of a movement which has associations all over the world and through its affiliation with the Young Men's Christian Association is the only woman's organization in America that is in the World's Student Christian Federation. It carries on its work on the same principles as the Young Men's Christian Association. It strives for the full development of young women along physical, mental and spiritual lines, and the constitution requires that its officers and the voting members shall be members of evangelical churches.

This association has two lines of work, college and city. In the college associations, because of their interdenominational character, all the young women in the college can be members, if church members as active members, and if not, as associate. The purpose of this Association is to encourage Bible study, to deepen the spiritual life, and to develop young women in Christian work.

In the city Association, rooms conveniently located are secured, and a young woman secretary is put in charge whose business it is to study the needs of the young women of the city and in every way possible to plan to meet these needs. The secretary works under the supervision of a board of directors who are members of evangelical churches. In North and South Carolina the work of the two States has been fostered for six years by a State Executive Committee with the headquarters at Asheville, N. C. The work of supervision by the Committee is carried on by correspondence, and by the visits of a traveling secretary. Miss Mabel K. Stafford is the secretary this year and will visit cities or colleges wishing her assistance if application is made to the Southern Summer Conference which is conducted by the secretaries of the American Committee.

At the Conference there is a daily Bible study under efficient leaders, methods of Association work are discussed, and addresses are given by prominent men and women which are of great inspiration to the delegates. There has been an increasing interest in this Conference during the eight years of its existence, and the speakers already secured for this year make its success assured. Among them are Robert E. Speer, Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, Prof. W. W. White of New York City; Rev. Carter H. Jones, D. D., Louisville; Rev. Ira Landrith, D. D., Nashville; and Dr. R. G. Pearson, Asheville, N. C.

Full information will be given in regard to the Conference by Miss Elizabeth Wilson, 1312 Champlain Building, Chicago, Ill. The Conference will be held June 12-23.

A Call from China.

Some of your readers may have noticed in the notes of the executive committee the statement that the North Kiangsu mission of China had asked that a re-enforcement of seven new men, including at least one Doctor, be sent to us during 1903.

I hope that some, among the numerous readers of the Standard, may have felt enough interest in the matter to think whether or not that many men are needed or whether it is feasible to send them out to us. If the money is not in hand it cannot be done; if men do not offer to come, it cannot be done, for the time has not yet come, apparently when a Presbytery or church may lay hands on a man and set him aside for a certain work. Nowadays we seem to wait entirely for the initiative to come from the individual who does the work, not from the body for whom the work is to be done. Though ordinarily the latter is the course taken in ecclesiastical moves and changes.

If any one is interested enough in this question to give it a second thought or to wish to know more, I will take the liberty of rehearsing a few facts about this district. This district in which the North Kiangsu mission work is located, as its name indicates, in the northern part of the Kiangsu Province—one of the most important and populous provinces in China. Both Shanghai and Soochow are in this province, in its southern part. The grand canal, of which every school boy has heard, runs the whole length of the province between 400 and 500 miles.

Our mission's main work lies north of the great Yang-tse River—one of the largest rivers in the world. Chinkiang, our oldest station, lies on the south bank of the river, and several out stations are also on that side of the river; but practically the Yang-tse River is our southern boundary. This district is, roughly speaking, about 80 to 100 miles wide and 350 to 400 miles long. It touches, on the north and west, the work of the Northern Presbyterians. There are long distances between the Northern Presbyterian stations and our own, and one of our aims is to fill up these gaps.

This country, except in the northern part of it, is quite level, and forms part of the great plain. There is nothing that could be dignified with the name of hill within 80 miles of this place.

The land is very fertile, produces every year enormous quantities of wheat, barley, corn, sorghum, potatoes, peanuts, beans, rice, buckwheat—fruits of various kinds, peaches, apricots, apples, plums, grapes, pears, persimmons (you people at home do not know how luscious a persimmon can be), also a great many vegetables, with which you are familiar—cabbage, turnips, carrots, lettuce, radishes, beets, onions and various kinds of melons. Their agricultural instruments and methods are crude, but effective. The animal life is just what you see every day. The horses not so numerous, are used entirely for riding, the donkey and cow and mule are the principle beasts of burden. The razor-back pig and the fat tail sheep are of interest because of their somewhat different appearance. The principal trees are the locust, the elm, mulberry, willow, aspen, as well as a few I have never seen in U. S., i. e., the Wu Tong, the Pohko, etc. I have never seen a hickory, oak, maple, gum or ash in this section, though they may be here. But of course the chief object of interest here is the people, people, people everywhere. They simply swarm. I never saw anything like it anywhere else in the world. You cannot get out of sight of people. In towns and cities the houses are so thick and close together that they hardly leave room enough for the streets. The city streets in this section average above 15 feet in width this must accommodate foot passengers, riders, carts, barrows, chairs, carrier coolies, and at the same time give room for children to roll around and play their games. A walk along one of these city streets is interesting but not easy.

In this district of say 90 miles by 400 miles there are 30 odd walled cities ranging from 40,000 to 400,000 people. Besides dozens of large market towns, almost any of which are as large as your largest cities in North Carolina; also hundreds of smaller market towns which on market days are a surging mass of people. In addition to this there are the thousands of villages scattered every mile or so over the whole country. It is a rare thing to find a single farm house off by itself, owing to the patriarchal form of the family life, the children and laborers of a land-owner all build near the chief man's home.

Now my chief object in writing all this is to bring out the further fact that for this population of possibly 12,000,000 (it may be 1,000,000 more or less, it is impossible to be accurate as to numbers in China), that is to say, that for practically a population as large as the whole of our Southern States, there are now at work 12 families from the Southern Presbyterian Church—4 families of the China Inland mission, one family each of the Methodist and Baptist Churches, working in 7 of the 30 walled cities as centres! Probably no more preachers, all told, than are working in the two cities of Charlotte and Raleigh. As you see from the above, this district, has been practically given over to our mission, we should do more for it than we are. We have been working now for years, laying foundations by preaching, spreading tracts and gospels, doing medical work, trying to live upright lives, removing prejudices, getting the people used to our presence, etc. Now we feel that the time has come when we must do more aggressive work, occupy more cities as centres, work in the soil which we have been all these years in preparing, or else be unfaithful to a trust God has committed to us. You must remember that this preparation has been made by much patience, tact, sickness, hardship, danger. The Church sent us here to do this much of the work; it has been done; we ask now for 7 men to help us carry it on. We want good men, mentally, physially, spiritually. Is the man who reads this able to come himself? I ask you by the love you owe to God to be ready to give Him your reason for not doing this work. If you can't come yourself are you doing as much as you can by prayer and effort to make it possible for others to do this work which you cannot do? Read Proverbs, 24:11, 12. James R. Graham, Jr. Tsinghiangpu, China, Feb. 27, '03.

A Mistaken Idea.

Alexander Smith, the Scottish poet of one poem, gave rise to the phrase "that in life a man throws the hammer as far as he can, by forty-five years of age."

It is not true with regard to the army and navy, nor statesmanship, nor the law and medicine, nor to merchants nor to railroad managers, nor to farmers and artisans.

Nor is it true with the highest calling of all; viz, God's ministry.

And yet a committee of a vacant church in Texas sits down and adopts a resolution and allows it to be published that they will not consider, in their search for a pastor, any man over forty-five years of age.

Young men themselves ought to put the seal of condemnation on such a mistaken view of the capacities of God's ambassadors.

Elders and Church officers cannot too soon put a stop to this craze for turning down God's servants just at the time when they are prepared to take hold with a firm grip for twenty-five years longer.

The writer, who would hide his name from the editor if he could, not because he is ashamed of what he writes, is nearly seventy-three years of age, and his four churches have unanimously requested Presbytery to grant permission to him to continue the relation of stated supply. He has no grievance of his own, but he feels deeply for the Southern Presbyterian Church.

To take two extremes—what more beautiful and honorable than the long pastorates of Drs. Palmer and Hoge in large cities, and that of Rev. Mr. James in small churches—fifty-two years in South Carolina. A pilgrimage to Bro. James' field of labor would be an eye-opener to every student in our Theological Seminaries. He will doubtless not be far behind those eminent divines when he presses around the throne. Let every elder, and all the older members of the churches adopt the standard of usefulness at whatever age.

Heart to Heart Bands.

The following card from Mrs. Hawkins will be read with regret by many of her friends. Her excellent service in connection with the Heart to Heart Bands has been very much appreciated. It is hoped the Bands will continue their interest, especially in our Africa mission. The money contributed for that purpose will be expended in the maintenance of the mission. All the friends in the bands will be glad to know that the work in Africa has been marvelously blessed this year. Remittances for this special object should be made to the Forward Movement Committee, Nashville, Tenn. The editor of The Missionary is the chairman of the Sub-Committee on the Forward Movement and has charge of special funds of this character.—Editor.

Our missionary, Mr. DeYampert, after a long delay is at last in the field. We thank God for this with full hearts. Owing to long continued pressure on heart and strength and a state of suffering and invalidism as well as other things, I feel it best to resign my position as secretary of the Bands. Hereafter all offerings in support of the special work in Africa should be sent to Rev. H. F. Williams, Chairman Forward Movement Committee, Chamber of Commerce Building, Nashville, Tenn. Checks and drafts should be made payable to Mr. Erskine Reed as usual. The account will be kept in the home office in Nashville.

My heart is joined as before with yours in prayer for Africa and for the missionary God has enabled us to send out. No other fields lie quite so close to my heart as do Luebo and Ibang with their handful of brave and devoted workers. I am often asked how it is that the Bands contribute to the support of Mr. DeYampert and at the same time his support is provided by the Church of Selma, Ala. The answer of the office of the Executive Committee is that the amount provided by the Selma Church is only a part of the expense connected with the work of Mr. DeYampert and therefore the contributions of the Bands are needed to pay the full cost. The bands now in existence will continue in their work as before.

M. Anderson Hawkins.

A Wholesome Fear.

If one may judge the question by the reported condition of the general morals of the country, and also the state of religion as represented by the Churches in the land, there is a great lack of the fear of God among people of all classes. It seems to be a fact that in the most of the preaching of the day there is but very little concerning the fear of God presented to the hearers. This appears to be due very largely to the fashions of making very much of the love of God, representing God as a being of the utmost loveliness, as one whose mercy and compassion for sinners overshadow all of his other attributes and exercises. Great emphasis is now placed upon God's kindness of heart, upon the sweet gentleness of his nature, and upon his fatherly forbearance. Now, it seems to me that the great tendency of such preaching, and the general diffusion of such sentiments is that it leads to general moral laxity. All history shows that where there is a prevalent lack of the fear of God among the people of a country, there is also a prevalent lawlessness, and hence a low state of morals.

It was as in the history of the Israelites. The lost fear of God, long continued and wide-spread, was accompanied by a forsaking of God and by a wanton disregard of his laws, commands and ordinances. Thus, in the days of the prophet Malachi there was a general backsliding and a ruinous disrespect for the word and ways of God. Notice these reproving words of God, spoken to the wayward Israelites through that prophet: "A son honoreth his father, and a servant his master; if, then, I be a father, where is mine honor? And if I be a master, where is my fear?" The words, "Where is my fear?" are deeply significant. They imply that the priests were destitute of the fear of God; and it is evident that the common people were also without such fear. It is no wonder that they had become lawless and morally weak. Now, it is well for preachers and others to declare the love of God to people, but this needs to be balanced by the equally important truth that God holds every sinner accountable to Him for their conduct. A wholesome fear of God greatly conduces to such a reverential regard for Him as to deter people from abusing His love and trampling on His mercy. From pulpit and press the people should be taught the need and the necessity of fearing the great God of heaven and earth.

Marah.

Through the bright, sunny meadows I journeyed,

And gathered the flowers blooming there.

With a shudder I thought of the river,

I must come to—I knew not where.

My heart it was happy and lightsome

As the flower-sprinkled meadows I trod,

But 'twas in the deep waters of Marah

I found mirrored the face of my God.

Elizabeth Dinwiddie.

We often do more good by our sympathy than by our labors and render to the world a more lasting service by absence of jealousy and recognition of merit than we could ever render by the straining efforts of personal ambition.—Dean Farrar.

Even in ordinary life the unselfish people are the happiest—those who work to make others happy and who forget themselves. The dissatisfied people are those who are seeking happiness for themselves.—Mrs. Besant.

The Southern Educational Conference.

(EDITORIAL.)

The trip to the Athens Conference last year was undertaken with pleasurable anticipation, on account of the reputation of the distinguished speakers who were to address the Conference. But the Athens Conference taught the reading public that this educational movement is in the hands of men who are not only able to contribute a worthy quota to our knowledge of educational matters, but who, by reason of an intelligent sympathy would speak no word that could offend. So it was with the pleasures of hope and experience mingled, that we boarded the train for Richmond. The Seaboard Air Line is a Southern road that is constantly improving its service, as the road itself prospers, and we should like to express our appreciation of the polite and efficient young ticket agent at Hamlet, who succeeded in getting an absent-minded traveler in connection with his ticket and baggage, when the case seemed well-nigh hopeless. At Raleigh, Editor Josephus Daniels came aboard with a broad smile and a long manuscript. He had been invited to take the place of Ex-Governor Jarvis on the programme. We discussed the speech, and it was a good one, and then talked of the Watts Liquor Bill and its School-House Loan Fund, of the last Legislature and the next President, of Calvinism and Arminianism, of some wild editors we have known, and we agreed in deprecating the belated raising of the "nigger issue" in recent attacks upon the Educational Boards in Western North Carolina.

The Capitol and the Washington and Jackson monuments are about the only things that are unchanged in Richmond according to childhood's recollections. The city has built upwards and outwards until a country house on "Grove Road" where we used to visit is now on Grove Avenue, and solid blocks of buildings extend beyond the place. They are talking of adding two wings to the Capitol for the use of the House and Senate. It would be a pity to make any change in the appearance of the historic building that would make it unfamiliar to eyes that have looked upon it with love for its priceless associations.

The Conference was called to order in a brief business session before the first public session on Wednesday night. Mr. Ogden makes one of the best presiding officers we have ever seen. Governor Montague made the address of welcome and it was more than the proffer of hospitality. It showed an intelligent appreciation of the ends of the Conference, whose members "do not come as strangers to impose hostile theoretical views upon our people. You do not come to dogmatize, but to co-operate. . . . Patriotism is not so much love of country as of the people of the country, and the success of our scheme of government rests largely upon the confidence of the people of one State in the people of another State. The fellowship of such a people is immensely quickened and strengthened by the noble purpose of education which is the supreme task of statesmanship and the supreme need of the people."

President Ogden responded in suitable terms, mentioning the fact that he had once tried very hard to get into Richmond, but had failed. He then read the annual address, which we wish we could reproduce entire. Dr. Ogden is a Presbyterian elder, the President of the Presbyterian Union of New York City. He said this true word among many others, that "two common grounds of meeting for all humanity are found in the fellowship of sin and the fellowship of service. Fellow sinners, we all are by our common human nature: fellow-servants of human need, we may all be and ought to be through human sympathy.

"This great audience is here because of sympathy with the object of this conference. There is no indifference here. It indicates that the cry of the child is falling upon sympathetic ears; that the fundamental right of every American-born boy and girl to a good English education appeals to the sympathetic heart; that illiteracy, the great undone margin of national education, claims the sympathetic thought of the patriot; that the public conscience is being reached by the demand that an heredity of intelligence and civic righteousness should be created as the birthright, the patent of nobility, of every American.

"We are a proud people. The vast resources, growth of wealth, increase of population, achievements of enterprise, tremendous material strides forward witnessed by recent years, appeal to the imagination with overwhelming force, and we are dazzled by the brilliance of the pageant as we are confused by its incomprehensible magnitude. I freely admit the blessings of commercialism and recognize, with a good healthful spirit, that trade is the vanguard of civilization and the ally of education.

"We are, indeed, a proud people. We boast of our civilization. We are vain of our national achievements in science, literature, the fine arts, education, philanthropy and social progress. There is an aristocracy of intellect and culture, as of money, and in it all self is the object of highest worship.

"We should be an humble people. Are the wily arts of the demagogue, North and South, who finds in prejudice, produced by ignorance, the opportunity to serve himself through the triumph of that which is false, a subject of pride? Is the prevalence of provincialism, urban or metropolitan (the latter the greater), which narrows the view to things local and selfish, a subject of pride? Is the heredity of ignorance, that transmits its baleful and growing blight from generation to generation, a subject of pride? Is the failure of law, North or South, to punish crime and the freedom of the criminal to prey upon society a subject of pride? Is the arrogance and indifference of wealth to human need a subject of pride?

"When we look fairly at the under side of things, with a good, honest purpose to know the truth, does not all our pride melt away, and does it not seem that, instead of boasting of our exalted civilization, we should confess with humiliation that we are just emerging from barbarism?

"I am no pessimist. This is not a pessimistic assembly, but it does appear as the duty of the moment that we should squarely look at our worst conditions. Only thus can we comprehend the personal call to service."

REPORTS AND ADDRESSES

The Conference Thursday morning opened with the reading of the reports of the officials of the Southern Education Board. Mr. J. B. Graham told of his work in Alabama. He has been making an evangelistic educational campaign, speaking sometimes at camp-meetings themselves.

By comparison with its past history, he said, Alabama enters the new century well equipped educationally. More than half of the income from the State is set aside for the instruction of the youth of the State. Its organic law gives suffrage only to those who can exert their intelligence to some good. The doctrine of local taxation for education in Alabama, he said, would win. "Although her people are poor, Alabama's organic law permits no discrimination in its educational work as to race or conditions."

Dr. Charles W. Dabney gave the report on Southern Educational statistics, though admitting that as yet there was no efficient system of getting reports on the working of the public schools in the various States. Among the great needs of the South he mentioned:

Men and money to do more missionary work among poorer and more isolated populations. The people in one half of the counties of the South are probably not able to support any kind of a decent school, even if they knew how to do so. They must first be taught the farm and household arts, how to cultivate the soil properly, how to utilize their forest and other resources and so to make money with which to maintain their schools. On that great territory covering the Appalachian region, reaching from Virginia to Alabama, there is a population of healthy, vigorous and noble people, our brothers in blood, or 'our contemporary ancestors,' as President Frost has so aptly called them, which this board has scarcely touched. The people of the better counties east and west of the mountains have all they can do for a generation or more to develop their own schools. The burning question is, Shall we permit another generation of these mountain boys and girls to grow up in ignorance? In the mountain counties of Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama there are already, out of 1,000,000 white males 21 years of age, nearly 200,000 who cannot read and write. These are our brethren, fellow citizens of these States and of the great republic. The appeal is, therefore, to the whole nation. How dare we permit so large a portion of our fellow citizens to live any longer under these conditions?

Dr. H. B. Frissell, principal of Hampton Institute, gave his report as field agent for Virginia. Harry H. George Tucker is one of the men who have been working in the educational campaign in Virginia under Dr. Frissell's direction and his eloquent and taking addresses have had a fine effect.

Dr. Alderman, in his charming style, that can make even statistics interesting told of the successful campaign in Louisiana and Mississippi and Arkansas.

Dr. McIver told of the work in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida. Dr. McIver always makes the finest impression of sincerity and earnestness upon his audience. He is recognized as one of the most unselfish leaders in this great movement. North Carolina is still carrying the banner of educational enthusiasm.

Following Dr. McIver came the address of Dr. St. Clair McKelway of the Brooklyn Eagle on the the North and the South. In lieu of any commendation of the address it is our purpose to give it in full to our readers at a later date.

By the way, this was a Presbyterian morning. If Graham is not a Presbyterian, he or some ancestor fell from the grace of sturdy Scotch Calvinism. Ogden, Frissell, Alderman, McIver, McKelway—Presbyterians all, men and brethren. And the best thing about Presbyterianism, perhaps, is the fact, that Presbyterians are able to work with such single-heartedness in a common cause, that nobody would ever know what faith they held, except for the fact that a paper of unblinking partisanship, like the Presbyterian Standard, will tell on them sometimes.

The Personnel of the Conference is a remarkable one. "The most distinguished gathering of men and women that ever met in Virginia," said one of the Richmond papers. Dr. Lyman Abbott's countenance is already familiar to the American people. His dome-like head and white beard give him a striking likeness to the best known picture of the Apostle Paul, of whom, by the way, the Doctor is very fond, barring Paul's Calvinism. Mrs. Abbot is evidently gratified at the marked attention her distinguished husband received on every hand. Professor Bailey, of Country Life in America, is the editor of the most beautiful illustrated magazine in the world, as might be judged by its name. He made a most interesting talk on Thursday night, on the science of land cultivation. Professor Claxton is as energetic and as animated as ever and his address on "A Model School," made Dr. Abbott envious, so he said, of its advantages, unequalled, so far as Dr. Abbott knew. George Foster Peabody is one of the Southern men now living in the North who has been deeply in the educational movement from the beginning.

William H. Baldwin is a doer of big things and does not appear often as a platform speaker though he is a quite effective one. He is almost an extremist on the negro question, so far as the insistence that the negro must work out his own salvation, that he has been bolstered up too much, and must henceforth stand on his own feet. Over yonder a daughter of Henry W. Longfellow, Mrs. J. G. Thorpe of Cambridge, Massachusetts. Richard Watson Gilder, of the Century, made a brief address in expressing the thanks of the Conference for the abounding hospitality of the Richmond people. Walter H. Page, of the World's Work, presided at one of the meetings, being vice-president of the Conference. Hamilton W. Mabie, of the Outlook, made one of the closing addresses, in his inimitable style. Albert Shaw, of the Review of Reviews is one of the most genial and modest of men. He spoke at the last Conference and seems to be thoroughly enjoying this one. He is one of the men to whom the South is under obligations for the fair treatment of Southern problems.

These, with Clarence Poe of the Progressive Farmer, J. W. Jenkins of the Baltimore Sun, Gonzales of the Columbia State, Daniels of the News and Observer and Villard of the New York Evening Post, make up the editorial force of the Convention. Mr. Villard's full name is Oswald Garrison Villard and he is a grandson of William Lloyd Garrison. Last year, at the Conference, he met a maid of Athens, from whom he was as unwilling to part as she was to give him back his heart, as the poet has said, in words to that effect. So the grandson of Garrison married the beautiful and accomplished daughter of Brigadier-General Sandford, and their new-found happiness lent the needed element of romance to the gathering this year. We are sure that her influence will prevent a certain paper from being the New York Evening Whipping Post, as the South used to think it was. Not that the whippings were not sometimes deserved.

There are college presidents and professors galore. Alderman and Barringer and Venable and Brauson and McIver and Pell and Dabney, to begin with the North Carolina constituency, for we claim Dabney by right of discovery; and Denny of Washington and Lee and McIlwaine of Hampden-Sidney, and Frissell of Hampton and Hill of the University of Georgia, and Fulton of the University of Mississippi, who has declined, by the way, the proffered presidency of the Presbyterian University at Clarksville, and Johnson of Rock Hill, and Vardell of Red Springs. We may have missed some in the crowd. But the fact that while there was no money to be distributed, yet so many institutions of the South are interested in this great movement is significant. Professor Brooks of Harvard is in attendance this year, the one that made that delightful address at Athens. Yonder is Mr. John Crosby Brown, one of the large benefactors of Union Seminary, New York. We wish he could be interested in the older and better seminary of that name, in Richmond. The Richmond Seminary professors, Dr. Strickler and Dr. English and Dr. Johnson, all attended the Conference. Dr. Burrell of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York, was the guest of Rev. J. Calvin Stewart, and is as strong a Calvinist by nature as his host is in name. He preached in two of the Presbyterian Churches in Richmond, on Sunday, and we should like to say to him here, that the Central Presbyterian's editorial of last week, on the danger of the union of our two communions, is not entirely representative of the feelings of the Southern Church. Drs. Buttrick and Dickerman of the Southern Board are here and so is Edgar Gardner Murphy, who has dropped the Reverend from his name and given up his office in the Episcopal ministry, in order to serve more effectively, as he thinks, in the cause of education. Rev. Teunis S. Hamlin of Washington, may be recalled by some of our readers by an excellent sermon of his we published not long ago. Dr. Francis G. Peabody, Professor of Ethics in Harvard University is the only Unitarian minister present, and his two addresses, of perfect taste and admirable culture, were not of such nature as permitted any allusion to his creed, which the South believes in not at all and does not wish to believe in.

Rev. D. P. McGeachy was granted permission to labor out side of the bounds of our Presbytery for the next six months.

Presbytery will hold an adjourned meeting in the Lecture Room of the First Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, at 3 p. m. the 19th of next June.

Only two of our ministers were absent and eighteen Ruling Elders were present. Our progress was never more encouraging and the outlook more hopeful. The people of Kenansville abounded in their hospitality.

Presbytery will meet at Wallace the 30th of next September.

A. McFadyen, S. C.

Orange Presbytery met at Mt. Airy, N. C., April 7, 1903, and continued in session until the evening of the 10th. Twenty ministers and twelve elders were present.

The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. John H. Grey, retiring moderator, on the text, Psalm 139:23-24.

The Rev. W. A. Murray was elected moderator and the Rev. J. W. Goodman and Mr. J. A. Rankin were chosen temporary clerks.

A call from the Second Presbyterian Church at Durham, N. C., for the services of Rev. R. G. Matherson was placed in his hands and accepted, and order was taken for his installation in the near future by Rev. E. R. Leyburn, Rev. J. W. Goodman and Ruling Elder T. B. Fuller.

The pastoral relation between Rev. A. S. Caldwell and the High Point Church was dissolved, and Mr. Caldwell was dismissed to unite with Mecklenburg Presbytery.

The Rev. R. W. Boyd, Supt. of the Orphan's Home, was heard with great interest, and the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That we are impressed with the fact that our people need information concerning this Institution, and especially what is recommended by the Synod. Therefore we would earnestly enjoin our ministers to take steps looking to the enlargement of the knowledge and interest of the people, calling their attention especially to the periodical published by the Home, and making a point of more frequent and systematic collections in behalf of our Master's Fatherless Ones.

A very important paper on apportionments and assessments was adopted. The old schedule was thoroughly revised, and the new one is constructed on systematic principles. It will appear in fall in the printed minutes.

The proposed change in the form of government in reference to the Latin Thesis, after a spirited discussion, was answered in the affirmative by a vote of 12 to 9.

The following resolution offered by Dr. Smith was adopted:

Resolved, That we, as ministers and elders of Orange Presbytery, engage ourselves to see to it that the spiritual needs of the Prisoners and Convicts in our respective counties are attended to.

The Second Presbyterian Church at Durham and the Snow Memorial Church at High Point were reported as duly organized and they were enrolled.

Rev. R. G. Matherson was appointed to find out the true condition of Rangemont and Holloway Churches, and the Rev. C. E. Hodgkin the same in reference to Worthville Church, and report at the fall meeting.

The Rev. W. A. Murray tendered his resignation as Evangelist in Alleghany county, which was accepted and he was dismissed to unite with the King's Mountain Presbytery.

The Rev. C. E. Hodgkin and the Rev. John H. Grey were elected commissioners to the Assembly, with alternates, Rev. J. W. Goodman and Rev. R. W. Culbertson; and Ruling Elders W. C. Rankin and Dr. G. W. Long, with alternates, W. C. Herndon and E. C. Murray.

In the case of Rev. Allen Jones, Jr., after a careful and prayerful investigation, and a formal trial, he was deposed from the office and functions of the gospel ministry.

The Executive committees on Home and Foreign Missions, Colored Evangelization, Ministerial Relief and Education, all made encouraging reports.

A Foreign Missionary sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. E. C. Murray, and through the committee, the work of the Woman's Missionary Union was reported and heartily commended. The report shows 523 adult members, 480 juniors, and 58 in the Cradle bands, making a total membership of 1,061 and $1,179, contributed to Foreign Missions, with 216 copies of the Missionary, 75 copies of the Prayer Calendar and 100 copies of the Children's Missionary taken.

In the Home Mission work, very few changes are made in stated supplies, but new groupings are contemplated.

It is probable that Dr. Mebane will remove to Mt. Airy, and candidates J. B. Massey will succeed Rev. W. A. Murray in Alleghany, and W. M. Sikes will temporarily succeed Rev. C. Miller in Stokes county. There were received in the Home Mission fields last year 74 new members on profession of faith, almost one-third the number in the whole Presbytery. The work is well in hand and encouraging.

The hospitality of the people of Mt. Airy, with whom the Presbytery met, was abundant, and a hearty and well deserved vote of thanks was adopted.

The next stated session will be held at the Alamance Church, Sept. 1, 1903.

A Deserving Request.

I was very much pained to find upon my return from the recent meeting of Albemarle Presbytery that on last Tuesday a whirlwind struck our church building, crushing all the pillars and otherwise damaging the building.

If the windows and floor had been in, it is quite likely that no damage would have been done, though the wind must have been terrible. Our work here is suffering for the want of our Church, and I appeal to every Presbyterian in our beloved Synod, to come to our rescue and help us to repair the damage done by the storm, that we may soon have our church ready for service. Our people here have made great sacrifices, and have indeed done all they can. They deserve encouragement. The blessing of God upon our labors here during the past year is good evidence that Presbyterianism is adapted to these people. The fact that God has given us forty-two souls as our heir for the first year's work, is evidence that every dollar we have invested in Hyde county has paid good interest, if we are to look at it from a business standpoint.

Therefore, we appeal to every member of our beloved Church who desires to honor the Lord with his substance to come to our rescue in this time of urgent need.

Sincerely thanking, and praying the blessing of our dear Saviour upon all who may help us, I am your fellow-servant in Christ Jesus,

J. H. Jarvis.

Swan Quarter, N. C.

SPENCER.—On April 122 we observed Holy Communion in this congregation. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. Wakefield, former pastor. In connection with service seven persons were admitted into membership with the congregation making a total of eighteen accessions during six months.

The prospects of this congregation are very good for a steady increase in numbers. We contemplate a new church during this year in a better location, which will be very helpful to us.

WASHINGTON.—The work here since the present pastorate began has proven true the Scripture which says: "One soweth and another reapeth." The pastor has entered into the labors of his predecessors. The pastoral relationship began nine months since. During this time thirty-one have united with the church. Four had united previously during the year, making thirty-five additions in twelve months. Of this number twenty-one came on profession of faith. These results are due to the steady week to week preaching of the Gospel. No special services have been thought of, but officers and Sabbath-school teachers have done faithful work. Witness that fifteen came through Sabbath-school work.

This church is blessed with good officers and faithful members. The tongue evil and worldliness are little found. Christian love abounds if the pastor can judge truly. Hence the church advances.

This year the church guarantees part of a Foreign Missionary's expenses and will soon undertake part of the support of a Home Missionary. In addition, through its large assistance and constant oversight, a church building is being erected in a suburb of the city.

This suburban mission is a blessed work. It will soon be organized into a church—a result of nine months of steady preaching and Sabbath-school work. It is hoped that a pastor will soon be obtained for this important part of a new mission work in Albemarle Presbytery.

"The Lord hath done great things for us: whereof we are glad."

FLORIDA.

The Presbytery of St. Johns met at Clearwater, Fla., April 10th. Rev. Caleb E. Jones was elected moderator and Rev. A. W. Pierce, temporary clerk. There were 10 ministers and 7 elders present. Rev. DeWitt C. Snyder, M. D., our former missionary to Africa, was at his own request dismissed to the Presbytery of Brooklyn, U. S. A.

Rev. J. B. Morton, of Holston Presbytery, and Rev. Dr. O. C. Morse of the Congregational Church, were present as visitors. The former is supplying the Plant City field with a view to the pastorate and the latter as vice president of Rollins College, presented the claims of that institution.

Rev. C. O. Groves who has been called to the church at Braidentown was prevented from attending by serious illness.

Rev. W. B. Y. Wilkie, of Dunedin, and his elder, John M. McClung, were elected principal commissioners to the General Assembly, and Rev. J. I. Norrie, of Orlando, and Col. J. L. Young, of Plant City, were elected alternates.

A call from the church at Clearwater for three-fourths of his time was placed in the hands of Rev. D. L. Lander. He was given permission to retain the call till the fall meeting of Presbytery.

The commission appointed for that purpose reported that they had installed Rev. C. E. Jones pastor of the Sanford church, Nov. 19, 1902.

Rev. J. I. Norris was appointed to preach the doctrinal sermon next fall. Subject, "Effectual calling the work of the Holy Spirit in regeneration."

The narrative to the General Assembly revealed a lamentable lack in the matter of family worship and the catechetical instruction and training of the children in the home. Promptness in the payment of Pastor's salaries. No special religious interest, but too much worldliness on the part of church members.

After making an able report and address on Home Missions Rev. J. G. Anderson, D. D., tendered his resignation as chairman of that committee. The resignation was promptly laid on the table till the next meeting of Presbytery. The Doctor has filled that position for four years to the entire satisfaction of the Presbytery and his place would be hard to fill.

Wildwood was chosen as the place for holding the fall meeting.

The Woman's Missionary Union was held at the same place preceding the meeting of Presbytery. Their reports were the best of any year "since the freeze."

D. L. Lander, S. C.

The session was quite an interesting one and many vital topics discussed.

Two churches were added to the roll since last meeting and petitions to organize another at MrGregor, Ga.

At the request of the principal, Mr. Lucas, of the Presbyterian Institute, Presbytery and the Ladies' Union visited the Institute and were highly pleased with the conduct of the same. The report of the trustees of this Institute was very gratifying to the Presbytery, and the school certainly deserves the liberal support of the Presbytery. Stated Clerk reported that the part of the indebtedness of the Assembly's Home and school allotted to this Presbytery had been apportioned to the various churches, and most of the churches reported the assessments paid.

An interesting discussion on the report of committee on Sabbath-school, was aroused, and the chairman, Mr. Hollingsworth of Brunswick, was instructed to secure Dr. Phillips to hold several Institutes, throughout the Presbytery if possible. The report of the Home Missions Committee was very encouraging.

Commissioners to the Assembly: Ministers W. P. McCorkle, Savannah, Ga., Alternate, J. L. Yandle, Marlow, Ga., Elder Y. J. Wright, Brunswick, Ga., Alternates, J. Y. Brantley, Waycross, Ga.

VIRGINIA.

The Presbyterian Orphan's Home.

This Home is to be opened the first of July at Lynchburg. The board of directors have purchased a fine tract of land in the best suburb of the city and will use a farm house for temporary quarters for twenty-five orphans.

The farm contains three hundred and seventeen acres lying a mile beyond the Woman's College on the main Rivermont road. The first need of the Home is five thousand dollars to build the first cottage. Who will give this in part or the whole? Send the money to Richard Hancock, Lynchburg, Va. The Superintendent would like to hear from the pastors and any Presbyterian who knows of orphan or destitute children within the bounds of the Synod who need the help of the Home. We have already more applications than we can accept at first, but we want to help the most deserving cases.

We will take boys from three to ten years of age and girls from three to twelve. Presbyterian Orphans have the preference but all will be taken for whom we have room.

Lynchburg, Va.

NASH.—After many weeks and months of painful illness, Mr. Shepard Nash passed away at his home on Broad street at 7 o'clock Wednesday morning in the 42d year of his age.

Mr. Nash was a native of North Carolina and his early life was spent in that State. He was a member of a notable family there, his grandfather having been Chief Justice of the State for a long while, and other ancestors of his having achieved prominence in various walks and avocations of life. The deceased was educated in the common schools and entered Davidson College afterwards, passing through the Junior class. He was exceedingly popular while in College and took a fine stand there. His associates thought so highly of him that he was elected Chief Marshal while a Junior, this being the most coveted College honor, in spite of the precedent established that the position should go only to members of the senior class.

Mr. Nash was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1895.

When Mr. Nash came to Sumter county it was as a teacher. He had charge of the Bishopville High School for a number of years, after which he went to farming near St. Charles, in which occupation he was engaged when he was appointed to fill the office which is made vacant by his death, and when Col. James D. Graham died in 1895 he was appointed to fill out his unexpired term by Governor John Gary Evans. Twice was he re-elected by very large majorities, as he was generally conceded to be as efficient and competent an official as could be found in the State.

Mr. Nash was married several years ago to Miss Annie Law, daughter of the late J. McD. Law, who with six children survives him. The stricken widow and fatherless children have the heartfelt sympathy of all in their sad affliction and sore bereavement.

The deceased was a man true in all the relations of life. He was a sincere friend; a worthy and patriotic citizen; a man who loved men and was in his turn loved by them; a tender and indulgent husband and father, and one who exemplified in his life and conduct those Christian graces and virtues which adorn humanity and link it to that which is grand and noble and enduring. He was exceedingly popular, and his popularity was based upon a recognition of his sterling worth and unbending integrity. Many are mourning to-day because of his death, and it can truly be said that he was a type of man that we can ill afford to lose. His influence and example will be missed, and the county and State are poorer because of his death. Such characters are a tower of strength to any community and commonwealth.

The funeral services were held at the Presbyterian church, of which Mr. Nash was an honored official member, at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, and were conducted by Rev. N. W. Edmunds, D. D. Sumter, S. C., Herald, April 10th, 1903.

The Household.

Cheerfulness in the Home.

Margaret E. Sangster, in Success.

It is so very easy not to be cheerful at home that people whom nobody suspects elsewhere of giving way to moods are as depressing in their melancholy, behind their own front doors, as a London fog in January. The man in the counting-room, in the shop, or in the street, has pleasant word and an alert, bright look, if he meets a neighbor, he raises his hat, with a courteous bow, and his greeting matches the little act of everyday politeness; but, when he has turned his own latchkey, too often he is suddenly metamorphosed. The change is extraordinary and swift. Somehow the man collapses,—or slumps, for I cannot think of a better word,—is dispirited, cross, fault-finding, and melancholy. It is a black fiend, that demon of the low mood, that perches on one's shoulder, veils his countenance with gloom, and acts as a wet blanket on the mirth of children, and the joy of the children's mother. Talk of a sunshiny wife,—a sunshiny husband is as much a necessity in the average household, as much a factor in the average successful home living, as she can ever be. A man, having been out of doors and away from the "trivial round, the common task," of sweeping, dusting, baking, brewing, cooking, and contriving, should come home like a fresh breeze, bringing a waft of gladness with him, waking the shouts of boys and the laughter of girls, and adding to the wholesome store of family joy. This, thank heaven, is what most men do. The chronic fault-finder and the inveterate and ever-chilling hypochondriac are exceptional among men.

If a man should be cheerful at home, it goes without saying that a woman should be. Whatever her cares or anxieties, the wife and mother must make it part of her religion to live above them. What is most prized in household economy is not a temperament which is gay by fits and starts, up to-day and down to-morrow, full of hilarity on occasions, and heavy as lead at other times, but an even serenity of soul which makes people at ease and happy under the roof. A home in which one treads always on thin ice cannot be tolerable. A cheerful disposition will influence its possessor to make the best of existing circumstances, forget the discomforts of yesterday, and anticipate delightful things to-morrow. To live largely in the present, doing one's best and trusting God, is to maintain an almost unbroken cheeriness of demeanor and of experience.

A distinction may always be made between high spirits, the sanguine optimism which makes people gay to effervescence, and the equanimity which is a good outfit for the common road. In choosing a life-partner, either a man or a woman does wisely who seeks one whose habitual cheerfulness will fit him or her for good comradeship.

Much of the lack of cheer which undermines home comfort may be laid to the score of insufficient health. A dyspeptic sees the world as through a haze of indigo. Inability to assimilate food makes poor blood, poor blood means low vitality, and low vitality brings, in its wake, an absence of joy and a presence of pain, which result in fretfulness and morbidness. A resort to the dentist or the doctor, a change of diet, an increased amount of exercise, more sleep, less worry, will often restore, to a jaded mind and wearied body, the lost sense of happy cheer, and make a whole family glad where they have been sorrowful.

Put an emphasis on that little word, worry. I hear some one say, "Ah! preaching is easy, practice is difficult." There are things that worry us, doubtless, but it is possible to eliminate them from most lives. We are living, perhaps, in too complex style, and should cut down expenses, retrench, and aim at greater simplicity. We have uncongenial relatives around us, or somebody in the circle of the kindred is a trial, or we are afraid of the future that is unknown, and we give way to worry and are not cheerful. Then we seem to lose all interest in life and living.

I once met an elderly lady in a fur cloak, on a melting Fourth of July.

"Pray, why don't you wear something thinner?" I asked. "I have no summer clothes," was the answer, "and I can't buy any. General — and I must live with the greatest frugality or we'll go to the poorhouse!" This was a rich woman, by the by, but she was a pauper in spirit, never cheerful,—because always looking out for disaster. Worry harassed her into her grave, and, as soon as he decently could, the general married a frivolous girl, who promptly spent all her predecessor had saved. She died, in her turn, and the old gentleman married a third mate, who survived him. The first incumbent might as well have taken more cheerful views, forborne worry, and enjoyed herself as she went along.

As an important part of children's development, they should grow up in the open air of cheerfulness and the sunshine of love. No child can be symmetrical or strong, however carefully trained, who has a famished spiritual nature; and, if a horse be gloomy, cold, and wretched, the nature will starve, even amid material plenty.

Curiously, people who give the reins to moroseness and allow the disagreeable and the perverse tendencies of life to run away with them, are not those who have most cause for real griefs. Real sorrows may make the heart sad, but from such a state it presently rebounds. The curse of melancholy is that it springs, in numerous instances, from mere fancied intangibilities, from causes that never could be defined though one should try for years to discover their reasons for existing.

Better than a fortune,—than gold, silver, and jewels,—better than anything that can be weighed in earthly balances, is a sunny hopefulness of habitual thought, which makes the common day and the rough road cheery and smooth, for "a merry heart doeth good like a medicine."

Just one word more! At home we are apt to be off our guard. This is why "company manners" are careful, and home ones sometimes brusque. This is why people are too candid to home folks, too quick with caustic comment to those they love best. When a man is so far gone in moodiness that he eclipses the gaiety of society, we send him to a sanitarium. Then he is mentally distraught in earnest. But the person who can control himself among strangers may do so at home, if he will, and persistent lack of cheerfulness there is simply a sin and shame.

The chief aim of every family should be contentment. Without this quality, no home can be maintained on the lines of peace, happiness and progress. Contentment will bring more comfort than scores of costly paintings or thousands of dollar's worth of furniture. It is a great study; it means all that home life stands for.

Those who imagine that home is only a place in which to sleep and eat, have a mistaken idea of the most constructive measures of life, and little of no regard for their country. The men and women who have located and established homes are the ones who maintain good government, and not those whose lives are given to idle roaming and whose homes are "under their hats."

The seriousness of this matter is apparent to all. We have only to look around us, and note the conditions of our townspeople. The most solid, the most respected, and those who carry the greatest weight in a municipality, are those whose homes have been established the longest. Several years ago, a man was considered as a candidate for the mayoralty of an eastern town. When the critical moment for selection came, his party refused to nominate him, because he had been in that town only five years! I only mention this to show the advantages of having a well established, well guarded, well conducted home.

Facts About Turkeys.

From Country Life in America.

There is a great diversity of opinion as to whether the rearing of turkeys is profitable in America. Not infrequently the mortality of turkey chicks is tremendous, and quite sufficient to eat up any possible profits. But there are persons who for years have raised almost every chick, and under these circumstances rearing turkeys yields a very fair return.

It is a mistaken idea to suppose that turkeys do not thrive in confinement. Some of the best fanciers of these birds in the country practice yarding successfully. Of course, the space in which the turkeys are enclosed should not be too small, not less than from one to three acres for a moderate sized flock. One advantage of yarding is that it enables the breeder to get all the eggs laid by the hens. Another is that it facilitates the protection of the chicks against the attacks of hawks and predatory animals. It is commonly supposed that because a turkey will fly up a tree to roost, it would fly over the moon if it saw a grasshopper on the other side. A turkey will fly over anything on which it can alight, but it will not attempt to fly over a wire-netting fence, as it cannot see anything to rest its feet upon. As an Illinois lady pointed out in a leading poultry journal not long ago, turkeys will travel along a woven-picket fence half a day at a time to find a place to get out. Turkeys may be prevented from flying over a fence by attaching a light board or shiner, ten inches long by five inches wide, to their backs by means of soft, flat strings run through holes in the boards and tied under the wings. By this method the birds can be as easily confined as sheep or other small stock without injury. When not allowed to run at large, turkeys need something in the nature of gravel as grinding material.

Turkeys can be fattened in a week or ten days. In this country they are usually fed all the corn they can eat three times a week to bring this about. But in England the birds are principally fed upon mixtures of equal parts of barley-meal and wheatmeal, made into a crumbly mass, either with skim milk or water. The use of skim milk for this purpose has been largely on the increase of late years, as it has been found that its employment leads to the production of a beautifully white and fine quality of flesh.

Considering the little labor required in raising turkeys, they pay very well, despite the large mortality among the young birds, and it is surprising they are not more extensively bred. With the continual increase in our population and decrease in the acreage available for grazing, it is a foregone conclusion that there will be a corresponding increase in the demands for turkeys and other fowls. The breeder of these birds will therefore never lack a market.

The selection of a breed depends largely upon the demands of the market. Of course, when one is not compelled to regard turkey rearing from a commercial standpoint fancy may be given a free rein. Some turkeys are as ornamental on a lawn as peafowls. I have in mind a Maryland greensward loping down to a tidal creek that served as a background for a flock of pure white turkeys. Nothing could have been more beautiful than the effect produced.

Virginia—

The Presbytery of Winchester met in Berryville, Va., on April 7, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. A. C. Hopkins, D. D. moderator, from John 3:3. Twenty ministers and 23 ruling elders were present.

Officers—Rev. P. D. Stephenson, D. D., moderator; J. W. Harlan and Rev. R. A. White, temporary clerks.

Minister received—Rev. J. A. Trostle from the Presbytery of Maryland.

Minister dismissed—Rev. J. H. Cooper to the Presbytery of Clarion, Presbyterian church in the U. S. A.

Calls received—For the pastoral services of Licentiate J. A. McClure, now in Princeton Seminary, from Front Royal and Nineveh churches; from the Elk Garden, Bayard, Gormaniana and Dobbin churches for the pastoral services of Rev. J. A. Trostle.

Fourth Sunday in May at Gormaniana 11 a. m. Bayard 3 p. m., and Dobbin 7:30 p. m. Commission Revs. J. H. Moore, S. M. Engle, J. G. Leps and Ruling Elder W. Clayton with privilege to arrange parts at will.

Report of Commission—Rev. S. S. Oliver installed pastor of the Petersburg church November 30, 1902.

Resignation of Stated Clerk.—Whereas, Rev. J. R. Graham, D. D., who has been Stated Clerk of Winchester Presbytery for 50 years this month, now offers his resignation of this office; therefore your committee recommends that the Presbytery take the following action:

Resolved 1, That the Presbytery hereby grants Dr. Graham's request, that he may be relieved of the burden and responsibility of this office at the close of this meeting of Presbytery.

2, That it is due to Dr. Graham and expressive of our sincere feelings that we testify to his fidelity, accuracy and proficiency as a Stated Clerk during his unusually long term of service. During these 50 years he has been but once absent from any Stated meeting of the Presbytery and three times from Synod. So impartial and courteous has been the spirit in which he performed the duties of this office and so wise his counsel that he has deserved and received the love, confidence and admiration of his brethren: It is therefore with much pain that Presbytery now feels obliged to permit him to lay down this office at its feet. Presbytery commends him to God and to the word of His grace.

Rev. A. Gibson Link was elected Stated Clerk to succeed Dr. Graham.

Commissioners to the General Assembly—Rev. J. R. Graham, D. D., and Rev. A. C. Hopkins, D. D., principals, and Rev. G. W. White, D. D., and Rev. Charles Ghiselin, D. D., alternates, respectively. Ruling Elders H. C. Magruder and W. C. Clayton, principals, and A. J. Thompson and G. C. Crawford, alternates, respectively.

Committee Reports—The Executive Committee on Foreign Missions made its annual report, which was considered in a popular meeting that was addressed by Revs. J. Sibley, J. A. Trostle, and W. J. Webster of the Presbytery of Deer, Scotland.

The Executive Committee on Ministerial Relief reported that because of the pressure of other financial schemes they had been able to do practically nothing. They had raised all but $28.15 of amount asked of the churches for the liquidation of the debt on the General Assembly's Home and School at Fredericksburg, Va. The committee recommended that the sessions take up the matter of an Endowment fund, determine what can be done, adopt measures for the execution of their plans and report to Chairman of Presbytery's Committee R. A. White, Gerrardstown, W. Va. The other committee made verbal reports.

Observance of the Sabbath—A report was adopted and forwarded to Rev. James Stacy, D. D., chairman of the General Assembly's Sabbath Committee, and certain recommendations ordered printed by the Stated Clerk and a copy sent to each minister of our Presbytery to be read from our pulpits.

Professor Shepherd placed at the disposal of the Presbytery three free scholarships in Fairfax College, which were accepted with thanks and referred to Presbytery's Committee.

Rev. R. W. Carter—Presbytery having heard of the illness of Brother Carter and wife and several children, special prayer was offered for them.

Presbytery adjourned to meet in Front Royal, Va., Wednesday, June 3, at 10 a. m.

Next Stated Meeting—Petersburg, W. Va., Tuesday, September 1, 1903, 7:30 p. m. A. Gibson Link, S. C.

Missouri.

Presbytery of St. Louis met at Clayton, Mo., April 7th, and was opened with a sermon by the Moderator Rev. J. Layton Mauze. There were present twelve Ministers and seventeen Ruling Elders. Rev. G. L. Washburn was elected Moderator and Rev. J. L. Mauze Temporary Clerk, Rev. B. A. Pendleton of the Presbytery of North Alabama and Rev. L. J. Washington of the Presbytery of Central Alabama, both now laboring within the bounds of this Presbytery, were invited to sit as corresponding members.

A call from the Troy church for the pastoral services of Rev. B. D. Kennedy was presented, placed in his hands, and being accepted by him, arrangements were made for his installation by Rev. Dr. Farris, Rev. W. M. Langtry, and Elder Hill, at such date as Pastor and church may designate.

People's Church.—The Committee appointed to examine into the affairs of this church reported recommending that in view of the fact that we could not sustain the work, Presbytery order the dissolution of the organization.

The Home Mission Committee reports that all of the churches had been supplied with regular preaching since the last meeting. All the appropriations made by Presbytery at the last Spring meeting have been paid in full, the Committee has made diligent efforts to secure subscriptions and contributions to this cause and valuable assistance has been rendered by the Synod's Secretary, Dr. G. L. Leyburn; all Ministers and sessions are urged to see that the claims of this important cause are fully and faithfully presented to their congregations, and that all churches receiving aid be urged if possible to decrease the amount asked for from year to year. After a brief statement by the Secretary of the work in the Synod the following paper was adopted. "The Presbytery has heard with pleasure Dr. Leyburn's account of his work in the bounds of our Synod and desires to express its hearty appreciation of his services as Secretary of Home Missions and its full sympathy with the plan of work which is now being followed by the Synod's Committee."

Commissioners to the General Assembly—Rev. S. M. Watson and Ruling Elder Dr. W. M. McPheeters, with Rev. J. Addison Smith, D. D., and Elder A. G. Moore alternates.

In reply to the Synod's overture regarding the payment of the traveling expenses of delegates to Synod, the Presbytery expressed itself willing to co-operate in the said plan.

The following overture to the Assembly was adopted. "The Presbytery of St. Louis being assured of the superior importance of the Ministerial Relief Fund and that the month of July is not most favorable for the realization of the best results for the above cause, does hereby overture the General Assembly to change the date of the offering for the Bible cause from October to July and that the offering for Ministerial Relief be taken in the month of April."

The Committee of Foreign Missions reported as something to be thankful for the manifestly growing interest in this great cause and the increased contributions thereto: also as a cause of special gratitude God's signal blessing on our African mission; and in view of the open door and loud calls urges yet deeper interest and enlarged contributions. In reference to the death of Dr. Rankin the following was adopted.

1. With the whole church we mourn the loss of the Rev. Dr. Rankin, editor of our missionary publications, who died in Korea, while visiting our missions in those parts. Rarely gifted for the important work committed to his charge, and rarely imbued with the missionary spirit, his praise is in all the churches for the most helpful service he was privileged to render in this department. We may say of him as was written of Barnabas "he was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith."

2. The same sovereign, unerring Providence which caused us to grieve over the death of Dr. Rankin, has shown marked favor to us in providing a successor in the person of the Rev. H. F. Williams, a man of like spirit and qualifications.

After hearty thanks to the church and people of Clayton for their cordial hospitality the Presbytery adjourned to meet at the Newport church next fall.

S. Clerk.

Lafayette Presbytery met at Lamar, Mo., April 14, and in the absence of the Moderator, Rev. W. E. Beattie, by reason of sickness, was opened with a sermon by Rev. S. F. Shiffler. And Rev. B. C. Bell was elected Moderator and Rev. C. E. Thomas, Temporary Clerk.

Commissioners to the Assembly are Principals, Rev. W. L. Hickman and Ruling Elder C. R. Vandiver; alternates, Rev. E. C. Gordon, D. D., and Elder C. W. Hedger.

The Home Mission Committee's report showed a healthy financial condition, all dues being paid up to April 1, and a larger balance on hand than last year, with a good outlook for the present. Several churches and fields have been supplied, but more than one is still vacant.

As to the outlook, the report says, it is in some respects cheering. At the meeting of Synod's Home Mission Committee it was resolved to co-operate with this Presbytery vigorously in prosecuting our work in the Ozarks and liberal appropriations were made, accordingly: the Rev. Dr. O. W. Gauss was assigned to work in that field and has already entered thereupon: his support being provided for by a special contribution.

A summer school has been begun at Forsyth in Taney county, being taught by Rev. S. F. Forsyth, and the hope is that in the near future this may lead to the establishing of a permanent school at this or some other suitable place.

The work is in a hopeful condition and the prospect is full of encouragement. Calls were made for the pastoral services of Rev. W. T. Howison for half his time from the Calhoun church: by Blackburn to Licentiate E. D. Allen; and by Springfield to Mr. A. Y. Beatie a student of Louisville Seminary, and the first being accepted, order was taken for Mr. Howison's installation the 4th Sabbath of May by Messrs. Gordon, Abbott and Leyburn. The call to Mr. Beatie was left in the hands of the Stated Clerk, to be acted upon at the adjourned meeting of Presbytery to be held at Boonville, June 2; and the call from Blackburn church was placed in Mr. Allen's hands, and being accepted by him, Presbytery proceeded to his examination with a view to ordination, and this proving satisfactory, order was taken for his ordination at Blackburn, and his installation if the way be clear. Calls were also made by the churches of Saline and Miami for the pastoral services of Rev. W. L. Barber, and arrangements made for his installation in both churches.

The Committee on Church and Christian Education reported: That for the Dormitory Building and Science Hall about $60,000 has been secured in the last three years for the equipment of Westminster College, that considerable and valuable improvements have also been made in the Synodical College, Fulton, Mo., and after mentioning the prospect of a school in Taney county, mentioned above, the committee says: These movements show an intelligent interest on the part of some of our people in this great department of the Church's work. And in reply to the offer of a scholarship, on certain conditions, from Fairfax College,

Winchester, Va., the following was adopted:

Resolved, that the thanks of this Presbytery be given to the authorities of Fairfax College, for the offer of a scholarship in that institution and that the offer be accepted, and that the Committee of Church and Christian Education be instructed to notify the churches of the Presbytery of this action, and be also authorized to appoint to the scholarship from among the applicants a suitable person for the position.

The following overture to the Assembly was adopted:

The Presbytery of Lafayette respectfully requests you to appoint a committee ad interim, consisting of one teaching or one elder from each Synod of our Church, to take the following action:

1. To revise the proof-texts now in the editions of our doctrinal standards published under the authority of the General Assembly, and to report the same to the next General Assembly with a view to their approval and subsequent publication.

2. To prepare and report to the next General Assembly with a view to its submission to the Presbyteries for consideration and adoption, the following:

One or more paragraphs to be added to the Confession of Faith, and corresponding questions and answers to the Catechisms, which shall more explicitly and fully set forth the office and work of the Holy Spirit in the application of Redemption to the elect people of God.

Without undertaking in this overture to give fully the reasons which impel us to make the above request, we beg leave to call your attention to the following:

1. It is well known that the proof-texts now in use were hastily compiled more than a hundred years ago; that some do not correspond with the revised text of Holy Scripture nor with the best results of exegetical study.

2. It is well known that our standards are incomplete in regard to the work of the Holy Spirit and the important branch of the Biblical truth therein involved.

After hearty thanks for the hospitality and kindness shown by the Church and other friends in Lamar, Presbytery adjourned to meet at Boonville, June 2, and in stated session at Hughesville, Mo., in September. G. L. L.

Do not think of your faults; still less of others' faults: in every person who comes near you, look for what is good and strong: honor that; rejoice in it; and, as you can, try to imitate it: and your faults will drop off like dead leaves, when their time comes.— John Ruskin.

Do whatever you can to help every struggling soul, to add new strength to any staggering cause—the poor sick man that is by you, the poor wronged man whom your influence might vindicate, the poor boy in your shop that you may set with new hope upon the road of life that is beginning already to look dark to him. I cannot tell you what it is. You know your duty. No man ever looked for it and did not find it.— Phillips Brooks.

Our Young People.

Papa, the Chaplain, or Enduring Hardness.

By Leigh.

It was on a raw, gloomy Saturday morning about the middle of February, eighteen sixty-five, that Jack and Polly Dysart stood with their father on the slope just outside of the small town of Osage. At its foot flows the Edisto, narrow, but deep, black and treacherous, and flanked by impassable swamps. Just here where the road enters the town, a long causeway furnishes a passage and across the river is a strong bridge. At present the place is strangely occupied. A busy group of men in gray or brown clothes are adjusting a cannon so that its fire would sweep the bridge and causeway and all seem to be hastening their preparations. Ordies come and go, and a shabby man in epaulets, with tarnished gold braid on his slouch hat gives orders rapidly.

All these things the Dysart children watch with devouring eagerness. They have quite forgotten the raw damp air, their thin clothing and poor shoes, in observing the soldiers. In fact they have so long been accustomed to these things that they are accepted as a matter of-course, without repining, as you, dear child, wear your well-fitting, comfortable clothes without gratitude. Polly's faded and shrunken gray homespun and Jack's out-grown and often mended suit call forth no remark—they are only sharing the general poverty and scarcity. Yet in spite of their dress you could have been struck by their appearance. Their pale, fair complexion whose clearness was heightened by jetty hair and eyes, and their lively looks and gestures as they questioned their father about the doings of the soldiers.

For it is General Sherman's army of invasion which is lying yonder behind the swamp. Osage lies right in his path, and it is to detain him as long as possible that the men in gray are working. But that cannot be long, and so Mr. Dysart has brought Jack and Polly out to prepare them in his own way for their first sight of that war of which they have heard and felt so much.

He himself had but recently returned from Virginia, a broken down chaplain, and was now barely risen from a sick-bed. His suit of brown homespun hung loosely on his small, delicate figure; and his shoulder straps and slouched hat accorded strangely with his broad white forehead, and scholarly face. But for all that it was the strong bright spirit of the hero that shone out of his blue eyes, the spirit that had carried comfort and cheer to the suffering and dying; and had lightened anxious hearts in the dark bomb-proofs of Gregg and Wagner. Now and again as he talked with the children his words were interrupted by the roar of distant guns: and now and then a sharp shooter on the river's edge far up among the tree-tops discharged his piece at some rash intruder who had ventured to show himself. Presently a scout rode up and the pickets were seen approaching. "We must retreat, young folks," cried Mr. Dysart, "the main body of the enemy is advancing, and the cannonading will soon begin."

"Will they fight there at the bridge?" asked Jack lingering boy-like, longing to see the fun.

"Hardly, I think," answered his father, "it will not be necessary"—

"But, Papa," said the trembling Polly, "they can't pass, can they while Colonel Auld has his cannon there? And they will drown if they try to get through the river and the swamp!"

"Ah, little Polly, you don't know what a handful our boys in gray are: they will do their very best, but all they can do is to halt the blue-coats for a short time: by to-night at farthest some negro will show them a ford above or below us, and then our brave fellows must run for it. No, little daughter, we must make up our minds to that: the Yankees will be in Osage by to-morrow."

"And our soldiers," faltered the little girl.

"Why sis," broke in Jack, "have you forgotten the train that's waiting at the depot, right in front of our house, to take them to Columbia. I bet she's getting her steam up now."

"Yes," said Mr. Dysart, "that's all arranged. When they have done what they can for us they will retreat as the enemy enters the town,—and then children we are all going to be soldiers ourselves." He spoke cheerily, looking down smiling at the four bright eyes intent on his. What could papa mean? Jack drew himself up; he was nearly fourteen, and if he had been but a few years older would have been a soldier in truth, but Polly shivered, and her face grew whiter. "We are too little papa," she whispered, holding tight to his hand. "Let us see," he answered gently, "is fighting all a soldier has to do?" "Run away," answered Polly, with renewed spirits, and mindful of what she had just heard about the plans of their defenders. "Hem! well, sometimes, but—what else?"

"Sleep on the ground, go barefoot, eat hard-tack," said Jack. "Just so," said papa, "in a word learning to bear things patiently with a strong, cheerful heart.

I've got a verse to give you, that exactly fits. I want you to think of it and see if it doesn't, 'Enduring hardness as good soldiers.' You see that takes in everything—pain, privations, captivity, losses, everything. For we don't know exactly what is going to happen next, and Papa wants you to resolve to be good soldiers. Now a soldier must be brave, not allow himself to be frightened." Here he looked tenderly at Polly's quivering lips; "nor allow himself to say foolish things, if provoked and taunted: for that is being weak, not strong," here he smiled at Jack's scowl and clinched fists: "he must be patient and true and unselfish if he wants to do a soldier's full duty."

"But Papa," questioned Jack after an instant's pause, "do you mean mamma too?" He saw her pale worn face as he spoke, Mamma, who never knew what it was to be well, yet who had had to bear so much trouble and anxiety. He could not mean her too. But Papa really laughed.

"You dear foolish boy," he said, "why Mamma is a Confederate Veteran! She's buckled on the armor and worn it ever since April, eighteen sixty-one. Ah! who else has endured hardness if not she? But now, children we are almost at home, and there's just one word more. He paused for there was a crash and roar and the earth shook. Polly shrieked and hid her face in his bosom, and even Jack looked frightened for they had never heard cannon before, but Papa only stroked his little girl's hair, and then led her towards home. "But as I was saying, we have a captain; every soldier has, and ours is the wisest and strongest of all. 'The Saviour,' said Polly. "Yes, we must ask him for faith and courage." "But papa," said Jack as they opened the gate; "we have been praying so long; we have asked for the victory, and it seems we are to be beat after all. I thought God had promised to hear us"—Again and yet again the cannon broke in upon the voice which the boy tried so hard to keep steady.

"So he does, so he will, son. I'm glad you asked me about that, because it's this way. Some things are good for everybody all the time. When we ask for courage, and patience and trust, we ask for things that are always good for every soul, and so we may be sure we shall have them. But there are other things such as the good things of this life, even liberty itself that it may be best for us to have at this time, or it may not. So we have to leave it with God, and say always, "Thy will be done." If we can do that with a strong undisturbed spirit we are richer than mortal man could make us."

Yet his own tones trembled and he looked from his helpless children to his fair home all he had in the world, in its bowers of great oaks, and wondered what should be on the morrow.

Chapter 2.

All that day the cannon boomed at short intervals, but with nights lence fell upon Osage, the silence of suspense, as of strained ears listening for the movement of that mighty host beyond the swamp. Perhaps, perhaps even yet, thought some of those who waited in the town, they might turn aside and take an easier, an open path. But the men in the grey coats knew better; they pointed to the puffing engine, to the cars standing ready, and answered briefly, "You'll see in the morning." And so dawned the strangest Sabbath that little town had ever seen. The doors of the four white churches remained closed, the bells silent; the streets empty, the houses filled to overflowing with women and children, many of them refugees.

The home of the Dysarts was a great rambling many-roomed house with large halls and porches, and now packed to its utmost capacity with people gathered there for greater safety—women whose protectors were dead or in the army—families from the country who had fled from the invaders, some from the seaboard, where their homes have been laid waste, all gathered under that hospitable roof, and now in this hour of panic huddled together in the rear of the mansion. For the crisis had now come; word had arrived that as had been expected the Federals had found a ford, and by a detour of five or six miles, and wading the swamp and then the river, had made a crossing and were now entering the place.

A few of the bravest inmates of the house among whom were Jack and Polly lingered at the front door, to see what would befall. "Ah, here came the gray-coats at double quick down the road: now they have turned to the left to reach the waiting train: again and again they stop to fire at the foes who are close behind. The shots rattle through the yard, out now they board the cars and have steamed away, before the others reach the track. These latter the children watch with the fascination of terror: for here are in the flesh those blue-coated soldiers of whom they have heard, as of those terrible genies in their Arabian Nights. They seem plentiful as grasshoppers; the fields across the way, behind the town are swarming with them, as if the streets and road were not sufficient to hold them. Polly wonders dully how they found the way through there; then suddenly she and Jack realize with a start that their companions have all vanished, and their own grounds are filling with the strange soldiers. One look, and they beat a noiseless retreat.

In the sitting-room they join a group at one of the large windows. A youth of seventeen, a helpless cripple lies upon a couch near,—and his mother whose weeds tell how much she has given to the South is beside him. They are of Huguenot descent, and like their ancestors have fled for their lives, leaving all behind them. The mother sits in the listlessness of despair, but the young man strains eye and ear to know what is passing outside, and which is drawing forth exclamations from those who are gazing out. A band of raiders coming up knocked down the panels of the fence with the ease of much practice and without a pause began to ransack the place. "O law" moaned an old lady from North Carolina who was journeying to seek a son supposed to be in some Wayside Hospital, "Oh, law, jest look out there: we're all goners! Don't I wish I'd stayed in North Carolina? There goes every piece of fence kicked down by them roarin' lions. Laws-a-mercy, what you want with them air fences?" addressing the bidders outside.

"Ef they aint' a-building fires with them," wheeling round and speaking to the youth, Charles Carriere, as she caught his inquiring glance. "What for, do you think?" he asked. "What fer? Bless your soul, Honey, ain't they got the big caldron on the fire with a whole panel of fence under it, and skinning turkeys and chickens, yes, an' there goes a suckin' pig, to put in it. If that there ain't rich! I never see no sich mess sence I was born. Now they're bustin' open the store-room an' that there strappin' felow with mud up to his neck is drivin' off the cow. My sakes a—" She stopped dumb-founded, her mouth wide open. 'What is it, Mrs. Bloom, queried the invalid, when our Rebecca in this new version of the famous scene in Ivanhoe, suddenly broke into a shrill, irrepressible laugh. "Well," she cried presently, "Carrie Bloom ef that ain't a plum sight you never seen none. Them there busters has broke into somebody's premises and brung away the spoils. One's got fifty yards of lace streaming to his hat, another fellow's got a lot of peacock feathers and a guitar and he, he, there's one in a pink satin' train and another in a blue ridin' skirt all a-dancin' roun' that pot o' vittles."

By this time thanks to the good woman's monologue, those about her were becoming somewhat calm and reassured. They realized that no worse slaughter was intended than that of pigs and chickens and laid aside their fears to watch the grotesque scenes enacted under their eyes.

It was at this moment that Mrs. Dy-sart entered the room and beckoning Jack and Polly to her said, "I shall have to be absent a short time, as I am going to General Howard at the Court House. I shall ask for a guard and bring home your papa." "Papa! what has happened to him, mamma?"

"He has been taken prisoner!"

The Sword of Damocles.

There was once a king whose name was Dionysius. He was so unjust and cruel that he won for himself the name of Tyrant. He knew that almost everybody hated him, and so he was always in dread lest somebody should take his life.

But he was very rich, and he lived in a fine palace, where there were many costly and beautiful things; and he was waited on by a host of servants who were always ready to do his bidding. One day a friend of his, whose name was Damocles, said to him:

"How happy you must be! You have everything that a man could wish."

"Perhaps you would like to change places with me," said the tyrant.

"No, not that, O King!" said Damocles; "but I think that if I could only have your riches and your pleasures for one day I should not want any greater happiness."

"Very well," said the tyrant; "you shall have them."

And so on the next day Damocles was led into the palace, and all the servants were bidden to treat him as their master. He sat down at a table in the banquet hall, and rich foods were placed before him. Nothing was wanting that could give him pleasure. There were costly wines, and beautiful flowers, and rare perfumes, and delightful music. He rested himself among soft cushions, and felt that he was the happiest man in all the world.

Then he chanced to raise his eyes toward the ceiling. What was it that was dangling above him, with its point almost touching his head?

It was a sharp sword, and it hung only by a single horse hair. What if the hair should break? There was danger every moment that it would be so.

Then the smile faded from the lips of Damocles. His face became ashy pale. His hand trembled. He wanted no more food; he could drink no more wine; he took no more delight in the music. He longed to be out of the place and away, he cared not where.

"What is the matter?" said the tyrant.

"That sword! that sword!" cried Damocles. He was so badly frightened that he dared not move.

"Yes," said Dionysius, "I know there is a sword above your head, and that it may fall at any moment. But why should that trouble you? I have a sword over my head all the time. I am every moment in dread lest something may cause me to lose my life."

"Let me go," said Damocles. "I see now that I was mistaken, and that the rich and the powerful are not so happy as they seem. Let me go back to my old home in the poor little cottage among the mountains."

And so long as he lived he never again wanted to be rich, or to change places, even for a moment, with the king.—Selected.

Others Before Self.

The Northeast Relief Co. was selling coal at ten cents a pailful. A long line of customers reached to the sidewalk and far down the street, waiting and shivering in the bitter air. Sarah Conley was almost at the office door. She was glad her turn was so near. She was chilled, and her breakfast had been scanty that morning. Moreover, she was old and not strong.

"It's hard standing," she remarked to the woman behind her.

"It is that," returned the woman. "I'd rather freeze at home if it wa'n't for the babies. They're crying with the cold."

"Look here," said Sarah, "You take my place; it'll get you there one quicker," and she stepped out of the ranks and in behind the woman.

"Lor, that's nothing!" she continued, smiling away the mother's thauks. Her change of position brought Sarah in front of a young girl who coughed and shivered pitifully in the searching wind.

Just then a rumor was passed that the coal supply was giving out. The waiters pressed close. Sarah glanced unasily around.

"You can have my chance," she said, suddenly, as she slipped back of the sick girl.

Sarah did not look behind her again. She was so cold and she trembled from weariness. The slow progression of the line had brought her within the office door, when she noticed a little girl standing at one side carrying an empty pail and crying softly. Sarah beckoned to her.

"You won't get your coal if you stay there," she said. "You'll have to run round to the end of the line."

"I've lost my money," whispered the little girl.

"I'll hold your pail while you go home and get more," suggested Sarah.

"There isn't any more," sobbed the child.

Sarah stood still a moment. Then she slipped her dime into the girl's purple little palm. It was the last money she had, but she did not say so. Then she went home to a cold room. The bowl of soup she had saved for dinner stood frozen on the table. She took the clothes from the bed and wrapped them around her.

"My rent's paid and I've got a job of scrubbing for to-morrow," she said to herself. "There's lots worse off than I am."

Her teeth chattered and her joints ached. But away down in her heart there glowed a warm spot as she thought of the babies, mother, the sick girl and the child, all with their heaping pails of coal. — Youth's Companion.

Does Education Pay?

Some years ago my father, a natural genius in some respects but uneducated, was a day laborer in a factory located in a Northern State. Four sons were born and reared in the humble home of that uneducated, untrained day laborer. They all learned their father's trade.

I was the oldest son and I used every opportunity to get a little education, attending the winter school, as did all my other brothers. All of us grew to manhood and all learned our father's trade, as I said above. I still continued my education largely by home reading. But for several years I worked at my trade only a few months of the year and with the money I earned attended school. My two brothers next of age seemed not to care for an education, neglected the common school, and took the first opportunity to leave it forever.

I succeeded in encouraging my youngest brother to remain in the common school until he completed its course of study. In addition to this common school training this brother secured a term or two of normal school training.

My education soon enabled me to secure a foreman's position in the factory, but my two brothers, naturally as gifted as myself, had to remain laborers because they had not enough education to take higher positions. From a foreman's place I rose to be manager of the factory. I now manage a number of factories and am a director in several large corporations. My youngest brother whom I kept in school is one of my foremen and is earning a good salary. My other two brothers now work for me. They are still day laborers. They can not get higher because they have no education. During the past ten years I could have put both of them in positions paying from $1,500 to $2,500 per year, if they had had even a thorough elementary school education.

(The editor by request withholds the name of the author of the above interesting biography. All the statements, however, are literally true and speak their impressive lesson. It may add something to this story to know that its author and all concerned now live in the South. — Editor.) — Southern Education.

LUMBERTON, N. C., November 26, 1902.

J. D. BOUSHALL, Esq., Manager Aetna Life Insurance Co., Raleigh, N. C.

Dear Sir :—After a careful comparison of policies submitted to me by the Aetna Life, Bankers' Life of New York, Equitable of New York, Northwestern, New York Life and Prudential, I have accepted $10,000 in the Aetna on the 20-payment life plan, with option of 25 year 3 per cent. Gold Bond Contract.

I have been a policy-holder in the Aetna for nearly eight years, and therefore feel somewhat prepared to judge of its merits from actual results. With all due deference to other companies, it affords me great pleasure to say that in my opinion the Aetna cannot be surpassed for plain and liberal contracts, and for just, conservative and economical management. I now have $12,000 in the Aetna. My partner, Mr. W. W. Carlyle, has $16,000 and one of our clerks, Mr. John T. Biggs, has $2,000, nearly all of which was written and delivered by your special agent, Mr. H. T. Spears.

Wishing you and the grand old Aetna continued success, I am,
Yours very truly,

Children's Letters.

Rocky Mount, N. C., April 15, 1903.

Dear Standard:

As I have never written before, I thought I would write. I have five sisters and three brothers. I have one pet hen; her name is Dit. We live in the country. I go to [Sunday-school nearly every Sunday at Bethlehem church. My teacher is Aunt Georgia. I like her very much. I am learning the child catechism. Our pastor is Dr. Morton. I like him fine. He preaches every third Sunday. I will close by asking the little folks a question. What one of the Apostles that preached unto them ready to depart on the morrow and continued his speech until mid-night.

Your little unknown friend,
Age 10. Annie Belle Joyner.

Clarkton, N. C., April 17, 1903.

Dear Standard:

As I have never written to you before I thought I would write. Papa takes the Standard and I enjoy reading the little boy's and girls' letters so much. I enjoy my self these days picking strawberries. My little friends come to help us and we sure race to see who can pick the most. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. I am studying the shorter catechism. Aunt Carrie McEneen is my teacher. It is right remarkable for a country Sunday-school to live so long as ours. It has been progressing nicely for the last 13 years without a break. And is attended well. I have six sisters, three younger than I. The baby is as sweet as she can be and we all pet her a great deal. I will answer Samuel Smith's question, Washpot is found in Psalms C V. III, chap, and 9th verse. Dear Mrs. McKelway:

As I have a short time after learning my lessons I will write you a short letter.

This afternoon Douglas Southerland, Katherine Robinson, and I went to the cemetery and put some flowers on Kate's grave as it was her birthday. I always think of her as one of my sweetest friends. We then went to the Presbyterian Church to see how it is being fixed. I think it is very pretty. Last Saturday I went to Gentry's Dog and Pony show and I certainly did enjoy it. It is wonderful how well the animals are trained. A monkey "looped the loop," in a tiny automobile in seven and one half seconds.

We are all looking forward to the carnival with much pleasure.

My Sunday-school class went on a picnic seven miles in the country and what a fine time we had. I must close as it is so late.

1200 Bible Questions

In consecutive order without answers. The only work of its kind before the public. A new and simple plan, by which the masses are reached and induced to familiarize themselves with the Bible. Not a theory, but a practical outgrowth from years of experimental work by the author, the Rev. J. J. Hill. The questions are highly commended by those who have used them.

From Dr. S. M. Neel, pastor Central Presbyterian Church, Kansas City:

The questions have greatly stimulated and aided the ladies of my church in Bible study. It was an admirable thought of Dr. Hill's and I am sure all lovers of Bible truth who will use the questions will be grateful to him for thus helping them to gain a consecutive knowledge of God's Word. I wish every family of my congregation had these questions.

Pastors will find that women quickly take up the work, and all persons in a congregation should be urged to use the questions and take part in class work. A dozen questions each week make a good feature for the Sunday school or Prayer-meeting, and adds new interest.

A copy of the questions may be had for 10 cents—three copies 25 cents—by writing the Tribune, Liberty, Mo.

A Letter from Rev. L. C. Vass.

Dear Little Folks:

How I wish I could show you around in our yard. But it is such a long journey to come to see us that you would be very tired before arriving at Luebo, Africa. Now then just imagine that you are sitting on the broad veranda of our house. When I say, "Our house," I mean the old home of Dr. Snyder, now occupied by Mr. Morrison with whom I live when not away on a trip with the Lapsley.

This yard is quite full of all kinds of tropical plants and fruits.

Along the fence are very pretty palms. They are about ten feet tall, making a graceful background for our yard. In the middle of one half is a very large century plant. It does not have to be put in the house in the winter, for it is summer here all the time.

That bushy green tree loaded with large round fruit is a grape-fruit. Dr. Snyder brought it when a small plant all the way from Florida. Last year was the first time it had borne. Near the grape fruit is an orange tree. It also had fruit for the first time last year. We were so glad and thought, "Now we will have some good oranges." One day when they began to turn yellow we picked a fine looking one, and cut it all ready to eat. How good it looked! But, oh, how it tasted! Mr. Morrison screwed up his mouth, shut his eyes and whistled, "O-o-o!" That fine looking orange was as sour as vinegar. The guavas are much better. We cut them and eat them with goats' milk.

The mango is a large tree, growing much larger than an apple tree. The fruit is shaped something like a pear. It is not perfectly round but a little flattened on two sides. The stem is at the large end, and the fruit has a big seed in the middle. I can't tell you just how it tastes as I never tasted anything like it before I ate a mango.

The papaw we like very much. It is not a large tree, but grows straight and tall. It has no branches, and at the top of its straight trunk is a cluster of large leaves on very long stems. At the base of these stems the fruit grows out from the main body of the tree. There are the male and the female trees. The male tree has no fruit, only flowers; the female has a very small flower and bears the fruit. This fruit resembles a small cantaloupe. There are also plenty of lime trees all about the yard. They make such a refreshing drink on a hot day.

Look at this vine, you know what it is, for you recognize our own red raspberry. It is bearing nicely just now, and we have had several saucers full. But they are not so sweet and juicy as at home.

The walks in our yard are bordered with pineapples. They grow very easily and make a pretty bordering as well as a useful one. Some tribes in Congo use the soft fibre gotten from the long leaves of the pineapple to make a very fine quality of native cloth which they wear.

That luxurious vine running along the back fence is the cashew. Hanging under the leaves you see a large oblong fruit. Cutting it open you find it filled with seed in a pulpy mass. The thick white rind looks very nice, but it is not good to eat. You eat the pulpy mass with a little sugar. It has a pleasant acid taste.

The Cour de Boeuf trees are yet young, so we have had no fruit from them. The plantains and bananas grow around a large hole just behind the store. This hole was dug to get dirt to build our house. It is now a fine place to throw trash, so the ground being rich, the bananas grow well.

Of these fruits that I have mentioned, all but the pine-apple and the banana have recently been introduced. Even the banana was brought here many years ago. They are never found except where they have been planted by man.

Many people think that in a tropical country you can just go to the forest and get almost any kind of fruit. This is not so in Africa. There are only a very few native fruits, so we are trying to make our yard a small tropical plantation.

It is very difficult to get a good garden here. At present we have only a few tomatoes growing. We are therefore glad that fruits are more easily cultivated than garden vegetables.—Kassai Herald.

A Runaway Automobile.

By James Buckham, in The Christian Work and Evangelist.

"Oh! here comes a steam-carriage!" cried Ralph. He could not say "automobile," it was such a long, queer word to pronounce. Bessie could say it, but it was hard work even for her. She liked Ralph's word better, and used it except when talking with older people, when she wanted to appear "grown up."

"Why! it's coming here!" announced Bessie, as the man who was riding in the automobile steered it out of the roadway and brought it slowly up to the edge of the sidewalk.

"Is your papa at home, children?" he asked.

"Yes, sir," replied Bessie, who was two years older than Ralph. "He is writing in the study."

"On his sermon, I suppose!" laughed the man. "Well, I'm sorry to disturb him, but business is business, and we all have to do business in the day time." So saying, he jumped out of his automobile, ran up the steps and rang the door-bell. The servant let him in, and the children were left alone with the wonderful "steam-carriage."

Then that old enemy and deceiver, the Tempter, began his battle with Conscience.

"Just climb in, and see how it would seem to be sitting in a real steam-carriage!" whispered the Tempter.

"No!" said Conscience, strongly and promptly on six-year-old Bessie's part, more slowly and weakly on four-year-old Ralph's part.

"Why, what harm would it do just to sit in the carriage?" argued the Tempter. "There could be nothing wrong about that, and the man wouldn't care."

"Papa and mamma would care," answered Conscience in Bessie's soul.

"It wouldn't be very naughty, but just a little naughty, I suppose," said a weaker voice in Ralph's soul.

"Come now!" urged the Tempter. "The man won't be gone much longer, and unless you get right in you won't have a chance to see how it seems to be sitting in a real steam-carriage—perhaps you'll never have another chance. Neither papa nor mamma will see you. Papa is busy with the man, and mamma is away shopping. Now is your chance! Only try it for a minute, and then you can jump out again, and no one will be the wiser."

"Let's!" said the other voice in Ralph's soul—the evil voice which is the echo of the Tempter's. "Let's!" said the little boy's own eager lips; and Conscience, fighting alone and more feebly in Bessie's soul, went down at that, and the two children and the Tempter climbed into the automobile! That was what the Tempter had been planning all along. One can never satisfy him by yielding to him. He asks for the inch only that may gain the ell.

"Just touch that shiny lever!" whispered the Tempter to Ralph; for he knew that Ralph was now well in his power.

The boy touched the piece of glistening steel. It felt so smooth and nice!

"Press it—just a little," suggested the Tempter.

Ralph gave the lever ever so slight a push. There was a sudden sputter of steam, a quick jerk of the machinery; then—chu-chu-chu-chug-a-chug-a-spizz-bnrr-r-r-r-r-r-, and the automobile started off down the road like a living creature.

Both children screamed, and then Ralph began to cry—to bawl, as his father would say, a regular boy's bawl, loud and lusty. Bessie did not cry. She felt the sudden weight of her responsibility. In that moment of danger she seemed to have grown twenty years older than Ralph. Two year's difference in age made the fault and sin seem all the little girl's—and the blame too, if anything serious should happen.

So far, luckily, the automobile had held its course beside the road, though not quite in it. Bessie caught hold of the long bar as a drowning man catches at the largest straw, and found that with it she could steer the machine. It steered very easily, turning just as one would think it should at the slightest moving of the bar. Bessie soon saw that she could keep the machine from running into things, if she did not lose her head. More than that she could not dare to try. How Ralph had started the automobile she did not know, and the little boy himself was so nearly frightened out of his wits that he could not remember. He knew that he had touched something shiny, but whether he had pulled it or pushed it, pressed it or lifted it, he could not even think.

All he could do was to cry louder and louder; and all Bessie dared try to do was to keep the machine going on the right side of the road. It was enough if she could fix her mind and attention on that.

So they kept going—smoothly and not very fast, but farther and farther from home all the time. Bessie kept hoping the machine would run down, but it didn't. It chng'd and chug'd busily and cheerfully; the air-cushioned wheels rolled softly through the dust, and the houses and trees fell steadily behind. Pretty soon Ralph stopped crying. He found that he wasn't getting hurt, and the ride was growing rather pleasant, after all. Before long a smile began to dawn on his freckled face; but Bessie's face was still sober and anxious.

People stopped to gaze in surprise at the two tots gliding by in the automobile. But the children seemed to be managing it all right, and were gone before one could really make up his mind whether to do anything about it or not. Bessie never took her eyes from the road in front of her. She did not seem to be conscious of anything else—men, women, children, electric cars, teams, dogs or cats. The one thing that she felt she could do, to atone for her sin, she did with all her might—she steered the automobile clear of every obstacle.

By-and-by, keeping straight on, they got out into the country, and for long distances had the road all to themselves. By this time Ralph was laughing and cheering with boyish delight. It was the greatest lark he had had since he graduated from skirts. "Why don't you holler?" he kept demanding of Bessie. "It's such fun!" But Bessie's face was still stern, and her heart was filled with dread and shame. "Don't bother me, Ralph," was her only reply. "Let me steer straight." And all the time she was praying in her heart, "O God! make this steam-carriage run down!"

And at last, when they were fifteen miles from home, it did run down. The gasoline in the tank gave out; the machine's chuga-chng began to choke; there was a final sighing p-hiz-z of steam—and then the wheels ceased to turn, and the automobile stopped in plain sight of the little railroad station at Mytsic.

A moment later a man came rushing out of the station, bare-headed. He was the telegraph operator and he had just been taking an odd message from the ticker—"Look out for runaway automobile with two children. Wire if seen."

"The very kids!" he cried, as he hastened up the steet toward the run-down automobile. "I'll send them in by the next train and wire their father to meet them. Poor, guilty-looking little things! I guess they have learned one lesson that they will remember."

The Charm of Self-Control.

When Bessie went from her city home to her Aunt Margaret's place in the country she carried the pleasing conviction that she was a model young woman. Such conceit seems odious in the telling, and Bessie would not have owned that she held it—but she did. Perhaps it may be counted in her favor that she expected and hoped to make her "lady-like accomplishments" useful, and was willing to impart any of her gifts and graces to any one who seemed qualified to receive them.

But on the first evening of her visit self-satisfaction was threatened. She had flung herself over, rather than into, a chair, and Aunt Margaret glanced at her and drew herself up.

"Don't sprawl, dear," she said, with gentle decision.

This to a girl who had been complimented more than once on the "unstudied charm" of her attitudes! Bessie flushed, but she only said:

"I'm afraid its natural, aunty.

There the matter dropped. Probably Bessie forgot the reproof; but it was recalled to her twenty-four hours later, when Aunt Margaret brought to an unexpected conclusion a story of her own girlhood.

"Bessie," she said, abruptly, almost in the instant when she finished the tale, "has any one ever called you ill-bred?"

"Certainly not!" the girl blazed out.

"But dosen't it show ill breeding to be inconsiderate, as you are, of other people's nerves? You have dandled your feet and twisted that trinket and even drummed with you fingers while I have been talking. If I had been a nervous person, which happily I am not, your fidgeting would have driven me frantic. Setting aside any question of discourtesy to me, why don't you cultivate repose? It's more attractive—and more restful—than this perpetual motion."

"Cultivate repose? I never thought about it."

"I suspected as much," rejoined Aunt Margaret, grimly.

Then she went on to say that very few persons know how to sit, much less how to sit still; that this deficiency argues ill breeding or 'slackness' or want of self-control; that if one permits oneself to shuffle to lounge or fidget, one is in danger of losing the mastery over one's body and of falling into "a slovenly habit of mind."

It seemed to Bessie that Aunt Margaret's conclusions carried her a little too far; but the girl perceived, too, that in days when "liberty" is the general watch-word restraint may be all the more an individual duty. Therefore she dropped a few of the habits and mannerisms she had taken into the country, and began to practise certain other modes of behavior. It is not recorded that society or her own family finds her less charming because of the change.—Youth's Companion.

The world is full of life; each life is a tune; so the world is a great orchestra; and of them all how few tunes are played though! How many ended as they were not begun!—B. F. Taylor.

Preacher: Do you think my sermons too long?

Listener: Oh no. They are not really long, for I have timed them. They only seem long.

Mrs. Hatterson—You don't mean to say that you have no theories about the education of children. Mrs. Catterson—No, I have too many children.

A man desirous of political perferment went to the leader of his party and made known his wish. "Are your personal opinions in harmony with those of the party?" the leader inquired. "I think there will be no trouble in securing a virtual conformity," the aspirant explained; "for five years I have been working as an echo at a mountain watering-place."—The New York American.

A woman who had been abroad was describing some of the sights of her trip to her friends. "But what pleased me as much as anything," she continued, "was the wonderful clock at Strasburg." "Oh! how I should love to see it!" gushed a pretty young woman in pink. "I am interested in such things. And did you see the celebrated watch on the Rhine, too?"

The venerable Bishop Williams, of Connecticut, for many years presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church in America, a bachelor, was talking with a young man from the West about a possible tax a Western State was trying to impose on bachelors, the tax to be increased a certain per cent for every 10 years of bachelorhood.

"Why, Bishop," said the young man, "at your age you would have to pay about $100 a year."

"Well," said the Bishop quietly and in his old-time vernacular, "it's wuth it."

Doctor Porter had responded to a note left at his door by a farmer, asking him to go as soon as possible to see his little boy, who had "a very bad cold."

The doctor took one look at the child and turned to the mother.

"Don't you know your boy is coming down with measles?" he asked, severely.

"Yes, doctor, I knew he was," said the woman.

"Then what in the world did you mean by writing me he had a very bad cold?" asked the doctor.

The woman hesitated for a moment; then, looking at her husband, she said, with a sullen frankness, "Neither him nor me knew how to spell measles."

Are we doing God's will? We do not mean, Are we doing God's work?—preaching, or teaching, or collecting money—but God's will. A man may think he is doing God's work when he is not even doing God's will. And a man may be doing God's work and God's will quite as much by hewing stones, or sweeping streets, as by preaching or praying. So the question means just this: Are we working out our common everyday life on the great lines of God's will?—Henry Drummond.

Real growth in character comes as so many of the best gifts of God come—by the way. In doing what we believe to be God's will for us, many things lie in the straight line of that fidelity. Every unselfish act makes unselfishness more possible.—H. W. Foote.

Let us be content to do little, if God sets us at little tasks. It is but pride and self-will which says, "Give me something huge to fight."—Charles Kingsley.

ROYAL QUALITIES.

HERE IS A BRIEF TABULATION OF THE PRINCIPAL POINTS OF ROYAL MATTRESS VIRTUE.

- 1. The Royal Elastic Felt Mattress possesses sufficient "give" or softness so that it will readily conform itself to the shape of the body and thus conduce the best kind of sleep—it is softer than the softest hair, besides possessing more elasticity and durability.
- 2. It possesses a healthful resistance, an elasticity.
- 4. It is composed of a material which is hostile to moths, vermin and germs of every kind, whereas hair, wool, and feathers invite these evils.
- 5. This material is so evenly distributed, and of such a nature as to retain its shape and elasticity for a very long period unimpaired.
- 6. Its price is sufficiently reasonable so as to make the comfort and purity it represents, far more worth having than the money it costs.

- city which, while giving away to the weight of the body, ever continues to exert this springiness upward.
- 3. It is non-absorbent of moisture or mineral gases and its purity is uninfluenced either by the oils and moisture of the body, or by the surrounding atmosphere—it floats in water.

A Prayer

IF any word of mine has caused one tear
From other eyes to flow;
If I have caused one shadow to appear On any face I know;
If but one thoughtless word of mine has stung
Some loving heart today;
Or if the word I've left unsaid has wrung
A single sigh, I pray
Thou tender Heart of Love, forgive the sin.
Help me to keep in mind
That if at last I would thy "well done" win,
In word as well as deed I must be kind!

Vol. XLV.---No. 18

Event and Comment.

The Presbyterian Standard has for some time entertained the suspicion that there was something rotten in the Post-Office Department at Washington.

The gift of Andrew Carnegie to Tuskegee of $600,000 was a great benefaction. It will render Tuskegee less dependent, however, on the good-will of Alabama Legislators and of Southern people generally. We trust that this useful institution will not do like Jeshurun of old who waxed fat and kicked.

One of the sentences in Lyman Abbott's address at the Educational Conference, which provoked a whirlwind of applause, was "Manhood suffrage means manhood first and suffrage afterwards." The Presbyterian Standard of November 17, 1898, commenting on the Wilmington Revolution, said, "Manhood suffrage needs to have a new meaning put into it, with the emphasis on manhood."

President Tucker and Dr. George A. Gordon will represent Trinitarian Congregationalism at the American Unitarian Association on May 20, while Professor Francis Y. Peabody and Edward Everett Hale will represent the Unitarian wing of Congregationalism. The reason Congregationalism has been able to soar no higher is on account of that crippled Unitarian wing.

The South has had a peculiar sympathy for the Boers in their heroic struggle against Britain. The Boers are themselves tasting one of the blessings of defeat. Some of the Dutch preachers went into exile in order to serve their captive brethren on the prison islands, and now 170 of these former prisoners have enlisted as missionaries of the cross. The Confederacy was not the only defeated cause that found "Christ in the Camp."

There were 400,000 pilgrims in attendance at Lowndes during Passion Week and 464 marble tablets were erected as memorials of miraculous cures. That is not so wonderful after all. At least one in ten of chronic invalids have nothing the matter with them and the only miracle necessary is the persuasion that they are well. The comparative insignificance, numerically, of the Christian Scientists shows that the percentage of European weak-mindedness is still much greater than the American.

We gather from the esteemed Interior that the memorial of the Tennessee brethren to the Northern Assembly, asking for a separate Presbytery for the Colored ministers and churches, would stand more chances of being granted, except for the dreaded comments of the interested "gallery folk," namely, the Southern Presbyterians. If things have come to that pass, the Standard will instruct all the gallery folk to stuff their handkerchiefs in their mouths and restrain any smiting together of the hands or shuffling as to their feet. To keep from saying: "I told you so," is to be almost great. The Southern Church will try to be almost great. Never mind the galleries.

Archbishop Gregoris Aglipay continues to exercise the Romanist authorities in the Philippines. Those authorities dallied so long over the Friar question, in the vain endeavor to save the Catholic reputation that these Catholic Mormons had badly damaged, that Father Aglipay and others, who had no doubts about the iniquity and the impossibility of the Friars, proceeded to set up for themselves. Of course he was ex-communicated, but he had been ordained a priest by Catholic authority and it is difficult for the ignorant and untaught Filipino to understand how the priestly power, once conferred in regular form, can be taken away. At any rate Aglipay is now an Archbishop and claims three million followers and really seems to be running a sort of Anglican Reformation in the Philippine Islands, holding on to the forms but denying the authority of the Catholic Church. American occupation is healthier for the Aglipays and for Protestants of all kinds than the Spanish rule ever was.

Extremes meet in wondrous ways. The Catholic opposition to the Bible in Public Schools is well known. But we were greatly surprised to read that in the meeting of the Executive Commission of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, the other day, Rev. W. S. Plumer Bryan, D. D., was opposed to the use of the Bible in the schools, as a relic of Popery. The Commission decided against Dr. Bryan's contention and also suggested that there should be some special training given as to the principles of the new psychology.

The Y. M. C. A. in South Africa is flourishing. It has an Association building at Cape Town, costing $75,000, one at Durban, costing $85,000, while the Johannesburg Association admitted one hundred and fifty seven members recently in one month and is contemplating the expenditure of a quarter of a million dollars in the Transvaal. It is good to know that the Y. M. C. A. stands open to receive the thousands of adventurous young men who have gone to South Africa for their fortunes and are too apt to leave their religion behind them.

Christendom is the name of a new weekly religious magazine modeled after the Outlook and the Independent and published in Chicago. It has only published two numbers and its editorials show a little crudeness as though the editors were not yet well in the current of thought and events. It always takes a little while for a new staff to work off accumulated material for which there has hitherto been no outlet. But the scope of the magazine is admirable, and if it is true to the ideals and can steer clear of the liberal faction in trying to be Catholic, it will serve a great end in the Kingdom of God. We have often thought that such a magazine might be established representing the fundamental faith of all Christians and wielding the force of the combined Christian conscience of the nation. We note that Dr. Edwin A. Alderman is a corresponding editor. We welcome Christendom to our exchange table and "wish it mighty well."

Says the Living Church: "One of the sectarian papers remarked recently that while the religious press generally gave sympathetic references to the memory of Phillips Brooks on the tenth anniversary of his death, the press of the Episcopal Church was a notable exception." It then attempts to defend this silence. It admits that "Phillips Brooks was the power that turned intellectual Boston away from Unitarianism back to the orthodox doctrine of the Triune God," but declares that he could not see that the love of God had extended the Incarnation, through time, to all men, by means of the Sacraments. He seems never to have appreciated that the incarnate life was born anew in Baptism, and given as food through the Holy Eucharist. And there was his narrowness. . . . He was not broad enough to be a Catholic Churchman." The only parallel to this accusation from The Living Church against Phillips Brooks for narrowness because he refused to believe in Transubstantiation, is the case of the drunkard who thinks the sober man is intoxicated. But if the Episcopal Church wants to emphasize how much bigger Phillips Brooks was than his church, the "sectarian papers" can urge no plausible objection.

The Unity of Brethren.

One of the shortest psalms has one of the sweetest lessons: Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. Such unity blesses the whole body—as the precious ointment upon Aaron's head ran down to the skirt of his garment. Such blessing reaches high and low with its gracious distillation—as the dew of High Hermon descendeth upon the lowlier mountains of Zion. And that unity commands the Divine blessing—even life.

To pass by other and familiar applications of the truth, in the family, the community, the church, it is evident to any man with an eye that the new and fragrant and gracious life of our nation must spring, is springing, from national unity.

The gathering of Northern and Southern men in Richmond last week was a manifestation of that new life. Northern men spoke fitting words of Southern statesmen and heroes. Southern men spoke frankly of Southern problems. But it was also evident that the sympathetic reception of every true word that was spoken pointed to the fact that the nation is beginning to claim the past glories of both sections as her heritage and the present problems of both as a national concern. We are more than Northerners or Southerners. We are Americans.

This result would never have been reached if either section had been untrue to its best ideals.

At times in the past it has seemed that those ideals were irreconcilable. They rose like two massive pillars, parallel, at first, as far as the eye could reach. The cowards and the fools would have had those pillars lean like Pisa from the line of the perpendicular, in the vain hope that the laws of moral gravitation could be defied and the two ideals be forced toward each other. That would have meant the loss of all noble traditions. Not so does truth deal with those who love it. There was a better way.

The ideals did seem hopelessly contradictory. The patriot of the South was the Rebel and the Traitor in the Northern view. The patriot of the North was the Invader and the Tyrant in the Southern view. The Southern slave-holder was a monster of cruelty. The Northern abolitionist was a fanatical infidel. And yet individuals of both species proved to be decent folk. Moreover the war had left the problem of the negro as an ever present reminder of its issues and consequences.

So North and South cherished their own ideals and each was true to its past. Gradually both sections began to recognize, as the two pillars grew upward into the sunlight, that each seemed straight and true. Then both began to understand.

The South made, at length, the great and sweeping admissions, first, that slavery was a curse from which it was well rid, and second, that a union of States was better than two rival nations. But the admissions have not been all on one side. The South held to other truths which have been yielded. It was seen first that Reconstruction was what General Armstrong said it was, a bridge of wood over a river of fire. It was learned next that the grant of unlimited suffrage to the negro was an error with infinite possibilities of evil for both races. It was seen that the negro was an inferior race and could not be lifted, by outside aid, into the equality that had been claimed for him; that he must work out his own salvation. It was recalled that slavery itself had its roots in man-stealing and man-selling and that New England man-stealers and man-sellers were at least equally guilty with Southern slave-buyers; and that it was eminently fitting that both sections should walk backward and throw the mantle of charity over the shame of a common sin. It was seen that Southern slavery had been an education for the negro from cannibalism and bestiality into comparative civilization, while Reconstruction, for which no one now has a good word, indicated the evils of the sudden and universal abolition of slavery against which the South protested. It is beginning to be seen, last of all, that the great argument as to the powers of the Nation and the State grew out of the silence of the constitutional founders of the Republic; that some time or other it had to be settled by the arbitrament of the sword; that the legal and constitutional right of secession was opposed by the natural right of a nation to protest against self-destruction by division; that the man who fought for the liberties of his State was as true a patriot as the man who fought for the preservation of the Union, and that only by the cementing power of heroic blood, freely spilled, could there be Liberty and Union, now and forever, one and inseparable.

So men builded better than they knew. And now the great plan is becoming visible. The two grand pillars of historic truth, of noble ideals, have risen side by side, from rugged base to polished capstone, and by mutual sympathy and respect support the triumphal arch beneath which pass in procession the heroes and statesmen and seers of the North and of the South, the immortals of the Nation!

This, it seems to us, was the real lesson of the recent Conference in Richmond. The last session of that Conference was held within a stone's throw of the old Confederate Capitol in memory of a member of the Confederate Congress afterwards a Representative of the Federal Government at a Foreign Court. The lesson is well worth the learning by any who may have imperfectly grasped it. So we make no apology for yielding editorial space this week to the address which, perhaps, has best set forth the unity of the Nation and the new life that comes from that unity of brotherhood and peace.

NORTH AND SOUTH.

ST. CLAIR MCKELWAY.

An address delivered at the Southern Educational Conference, Richmond, Virginia, April 23, 1903.

"My friends: Those for whom and with whom I have the honor to speak would bring to those to whom I have the honor to speak the greeting of the North to the South. New York, from which I come, and Virginia, in whose capital city I speak, belong to the aristocracy of America. They are numbered among the original Thirteen. Both are battle-scarred, with revolutionary suffering and crowned with revolutionary triumphs. Both have been united to defend the Union against every foreign foe. Both are a unit in the spirit of right between men and of justice between states which makes and which alone can keep the Republic peace. Our public life and our public forces have undergone without structural shock a continuous development of a century and of a quarter of a century of years. Yours underwent prostration and re-creation into and under absolutely new conditions within a time less than half a century past. Of memories you have as rich an heritage as we. But from some responsibility and from some retarding causes you are free—and we are not. You had the not always injurious opportunity either for a man or for a state to begin all over again. We inherit and we carry all our years with all their infirmities and with all their errors, as well as with all their advances and successes. You should be better than we are, for "purified as if by fire" is the figure of inspiration which signifies disincumberment from alloy and deliverance from dross, release from rust and from many corrupting and corroding influences. The resultant is the contemporary South, which attests not only the originality, the resiliency and the indestructibility of your section, but also the homogeneous character of our now happily common country.

"The contemporary North is in sympathy with the contemporary South. We recognize that with you, as with us, the folk who face toward the future outnumber those who face toward the past by many to one. The young captains and the young soldiers of industry refuse no reverence to the veterans of the Civil War on either side, but the men of this generation are determined to run it. The sons will preserve and will magnify the fame of their fathers, but they will not foster or fight over again their feuds, since the fathers themselves, an illustrious and a pathetically thinning band, long ago renounced rancor and dissolved differences. Let what people that may elect to do otherwise, the Effectives, both of the North and of the South, to-day believe in factories quite as much as in pantheons, in energy more than in inquests and in school houses more than in graves. A spent quarrel not of our making and not of yours, shall not be revived or reworked to the unmaking of either of us. We will filially honor the shades of our ancestors, but we will not cut ourselves among their tombs. We will honor, as children their parents, the survivors of the struggle between the states. May their days and ours be still long in the land which the Lord our God gave to them—and to us. The fullness and the fervency and the faith of that prayer shall not, however, affect the fact that to the men of each generation belong the moiety of the duties and the whole of the destiny of that generation. Our fathers fought out the questions which their forefathers left unsettled. We recognize and rejoice in the settlement of those questions. But we are resolved that neither the charm of historical study nor the passions nor the pathos of poetry, nor the pious exaltation which shrines incite and monuments inspire shall to-day hold back North and South from the new and noble obligations and from the benign and brotherly competitions of this teeming time. Better a decade of love and of peace than a cycle of the mutilations and of the memories of a civil war!

TWO SECTIONS ONE IN FEELING.

"Let what I have said explain and justify my omission to dwell on sentimental lines of allusion. Frankly, I think those lines have been overworked. There was reason for accenting them until a few years ago. The reason ceased when the object was attained. It was attained when it became neither singular nor unpopular to have and to hold in either section views which were different from those which predominate its thought. We of the North have opened to the men of the South among us the gates of all possible preferment. Those to whom such gates have been opened keep as holy traditions that estimate of the civil struggle which they maintained in the forum or defended in the field or learned from the songs their mothers sung over their cradles. Their cherished hold upon lapsed questions no more interferes with usefulness, acceptability and popularity with us than does any other heirloom in the furniture of their minds. Among them I could name congressmen, judges, legislators and many master helpers in great commercial and fiduciary trusts. Moreover, with us they belong indifferently to either political party or, better yet, some of their views are in every party and all of them in none. With you, I hope, is the same spirit of liberality. You can feel it as much as we do, though you cannot show it so readily as we do. We appreciate the reason why. With us there is no race question that comes as near to us as our doors. With you there is. Beside, there are not so many of you as there are of us, nor among you is there so large a proportion of those who differed from you in the past, as the case is with us. The number of people determines the quantity of government. The quantity of government determines the number of preferments. In the same way the amount of population determines the volume of business, and that in turn determines the appeal of ability to opportunity and the yield of opportunity to ambition. There is a fact, however, which has not escaped our Northern notice. Those of our people who come among you stay among you. They would not do that if they did not like you.

INDEPENDENCE INCREASING

"Nor has another fact eluded observation. They not only like you, but they grow into voting with you on questions which affect their business, their home interests and their racial instinct in the South. If with us they were adherents to one party, with you, by force of circumstances, they become adherents to another. This does not necessarily involve any change of fundamental views. It only involves a question of relationship. A blanket could cover both parties in nearly every state on any questions which they sincerely advance. But a blanket would not cover and it cannot be stretched to cover which of the two parties in all the circumstances is the better instrumentality for the results which must be fostered and preserved in the interests of civilization and the home. Still with you and with us in intellectual contemplation party is becoming a factor, not a fetish; a servant, not a master; a means, not an end. Any other view of it than this tends to make a man not a citizen, but a slave; not a suffragan, but a serf; not a voter, but a victim. However it may be with you here in the South, with us in the North only the politicians grieve over the disintegration between parties or within either party. Only those who have long lived and who would longer live upon the public treasury are sorry that the people are inclined with increasing frequency to change their servants at the capital either of the nation or of the state. That tendency corrects the vicious habit inherent in too many officeholders of fawning upon and of fearing their constituents instead of instructing them and leading them. They would substitute isms for principles, devices for doctrines, bids for facts, promises for performance, diatribes for discussion and defamation for definitions. They would appeal to the prejudices and to the demands of an organized few instead of to the interests, to the honor and to the duty of all. With us the tide of truth and of manhood has risen higher among the people than among the managing politicians. There has been a manifest and an overwhelming revolt against the lowering conception of public intelligence by beaten bosses, by misleading leaders, by discomfited demagogues and by stranded cranks.

SOME ADMISSIONS.

"While at the confessional, let me admit that with us the question of how government shall be conducted on its business side outclasses the consideration of how it shall be conducted on the lines of its theories. The issue of clean and honest, frugal and simple, responsible, indictable and punishable administration with us overlays issues of purely fantastic import. We have got through with the currency question, and we hope you have also. As to you this supposition may be wrong or premature, but we have learned in a hard school of experience and of suffering that cheap money degrades not only our fiscal standing at home, but our commercial and moral standing among the nations of the world. To their opinion we cannot be indifferent. With their general welfare our own is bound up. We have also learned, and we hope you have, that periodical business uncertainty means periodical, if not intermediate, business prostration. And we have also learned that he should be regarded as selfish and not as statesmanlike who would gamble with the interests or fears of business for political purposes or for political effect. While bearing the ills we have rather than flying to others which we know not of, the sanity of the North and, we hope, the sanity of the South, would retire from the field of experiment the attempt to harmonize in a single enactment of mammoth proportions and of infinite intricacy the theories of any political party or the avarice of any two in combination. We would like to substitute a bi-partisan or non-partisan commission of business men as a permanent corps of experts on economic subjects for a system of competition responding to the greed of contributing and recouping monopolies, or to the intellectual indigestion of anemic visionaries. Our business laws should be a hodge-podge neither of hysterics nor of hypocrisy. The dictionary is too small for the mind of a child. The ramified needs, the multitudinous interests and the diversified resources and activities of our people are too large for settlement on party lines. The effort to satisfy the wants and the notions, the views and the dreams, the hunger and the appetite of combinations and sections by political legislation have freighted with scandal and clogged with confusion more than one endeavor to make the streams of revenue run up hill, to stimulate trade by destroying markets, to reduce the cost of living by taxing necessities and to promote the content of the poor by letting in luxuries free. Our people are aroused and, we hope, yours are aroused with us, to the nonsense, and worse, of all this sort of thing. We may have to postpone any new method of business adjustment till after the national convulsion of 1904. But after that task, from the very friction of two schools of opinion independent men should deduce a plan to secure just such legislation as will bring revenue to a needed figure and as will for the rest of the matter let well enough alone. We have been beset by theories and we have been confronted by contentions. We prefer the conditions we know to the theories we do not know, the devils which we have to the devils that may desire to have us.

AGREEMENTS OUT-CLASS DIFFERENCES.

"If I have touched upon public subjects, I have tried to do so without offense. No body of Americans can meet without thinking of them. No gathering called in the name and cause of education can well keep its mind from them. No company from an extremely practical portion of the land can greet the representatives of the great state of Virginia without a consciousness of the common needs of a common nationality. From what I have said I have purposely left out the party nouns and the party adjectives which have to men, otherwise sane, the incensing effect of red rags on the horned and bellowing terrors of field and of plain. My countrymen, if we leave the quarrel words out of our contests or out of our contentions, out of our speeches and out of our journalism, we will go far toward finding out that the things wherein we agree vastly outnumber and immensely outclass the things whereon we differ. Take, for instance, the lapsed question of bimetallism. That was a great and mouth-filling word with us as well as with you. I never knew of a human being who was against it, if international agreement made it possible, or who could tell how such agreement could be brought about. We learned that if we went at it alone the nobler metal rose to a premium and its parity with the baser would become a barren ideality. We learned that if we undertook it in conjunction with other nations they must be nations of our own class and that such nations refused their co-operation. We could not undertake it of ourselves. We could not propose it to our peers among governments without drawing their respectful declination. Our politics had been better, our lives had been sweeter, our friendships had been finer, had we left such quarrel words as Silver Craze, Gold Bugs, Coin Clippers, Plutocrats, Bloated Bondholders and Roaring Repudiators out of the contention. Take any other of the subjects, for instance, by which with wind and tongue demagogues have divided our people. Recur for a moment to the tariff. The concern of it must be revenue for the government. An auxiliary consideration of it must be the wage of the people. The first must be enough, and the second must not be reduced. It logically follows that duties must conserve and preserve rates. That rule followed out would produce a business tariff which it would be a satire to baptize with any party name; as much of a satire as it would be politically to christen a civil or a criminal code.

"In the same way, take up Civil Service Reform. It is based on the proposition that public business is business, and that it is not more or less with the word public put in front of it than with that word left out. From this, it follows that as for all business competency, fidelity and intelligence should be a condition of appointment and a security of tenure, so in all business should merit, experience, capacity and character deserve and obtain promotion. Should our state governments and our national governments apply to their business the sanity, the justice and the enterprise which flowered into such Southern results as the Atlanta, the Nashville, the Charleston, and the New Orleans Expositions, making them splendid successes of art, skill, labor and co-operation, mixed with brains, we should almost reach the threshold of the golden age which is the desire of nations. What stands in the way of this is something of which we have no right to be proud and yet which we have no power to deny. We realize it in the silence of our consciences. We admit it in the candor of personal intercourse. It is the barbarous theory that politics is war, that offices are spoils and that elections are a motley alternation of eviction and of loot. But for the superiority of our national character to our national contentions, this theory would be carried from controversy into conduct. That done, we could almost dispense with all officers except sheriffs and receivers. I plead, for the debates of politics and for the arguments of journalism, the sanity of spirit which maintains the credit of our Republic and which gives to its service the stability, solidity and morality which should be questioned only in the caves of Sicilian bandits or on the decks of pirate ships in Chinese seas.

NEED OF CANDOR AND LIBERALITY.

"I might run the gamut of all questions by which, since the war, South and North have been at times divided, and by which they have been divided within parties as well as between them. My object, however, will have been accomplished if I have suggested to the friends with whom I came and to the friends that we have made here, the fact that we all really agree rather than actually differ on matters of vivid and vital concern to our commonwealths and to our republic. Too little of our argument argues. Too little of our debate debates. Too much of our contention is about names rather than about things. Too much of our controversy is around terms rather than around truth. Too much of our talk is for victory rather than for veracity. Reform in these respects must be inductive rather than direct. It must begin with the chief sinners, our statesmen and our journalists. We must impart into our writings and into our speeches more of candor and less of passion. We must make our words purposely plain rather than deliberately ambiguous. The best place for us to look for the best public is in our own hearts. What there we find to be true will be everywhere and everlastingly true. The things other men are thinking about are the things we think about when we think within ourselves. The statesman or the journalist who does that becomes, by the laws of universal nature, on confidential terms with humanity. "To thine own self be true," was the injunction of Polonius to Laertes. "Know thyself," was the injunction of a still greater philosopher. Thereby comes courage. Thereby comes strength. Thereby comes the assurance, which made the heart of Paul indomitable and the words of Paul immortal: "If God be for us who can be against us!" The intense earnestness and the equal simplicity which will follow from the conjunction of our own heart with the heart of the race will make oratory unstilted, journalism unsophistical, statesmen fearless and free. It would deliver us from the miserable spectacle of Northern and Southern Senators and Congressmen voting for what they condemn in their own minds, yet voting for it, lest the rapacity or the ignorance of their sections may defeat them for re-election. The wretched manifestations of men of historic names and fames talking driveling slush to rabble throngs would not then challenge the scorn of man or the judgment of heaven. The people of both sections are far better than those who give to them a low moral rating. Their intelligence is far greater than is that of those who serve out to them the food on which fools are fed. Readers better edit editors than editors their papers when the latter put into them anything which they know to be wholly false or only partially true.

LEADERS EARNESTLY WANTED.

"My state, your state, our nation, await the men of thought and the men of action to clear the way. At no time was the need of them greater or the prospect of them more auspicious. None of the periods of the politics of mediocrity or of intellectual immorality in America has been long. When one party has seemed nearly destitute of statesmen and when the other has seemed to be overstocked with partisans of the second rank, some thinker or some moralist has risen or recurred to view, to speak the longed-for and the desired word to the attentive ear and to the hoping heart of a noble people. I know that such a man will somewhere be found—or rediscovered. I know not whence he will come, but I know that at our end of the country political philosophy was not all buried in the grave of Hamilton, or judicial greatness with the bones of Kent, and that practical statesmanship was not committed to the dust when DeWitt Clinton was laid to rest or Silas Wright tenderly entombed. And so I know that not in Virginia is the roll of great men the roll of the dead alone. The spirit of Patrick Henry is as alive as are his words. The sublimity of Washington can be conceded to no single mortal, but portions of his transcendent qualities can be ascribed to the heirs of his fame and to the guardians of his dust. The versatility, the philosophy and the genius of Jefferson may be united in no one being, but his virtues and his principles cannot be confined or restrained—or parodied—in the state which he virtually made and which in large sense made him. The example as well as the decisions, the character as well as the logic," the life as well as the learning of John Marshall are neither an extinct nor an outlawed inheritance among his people. The genius and the faith of Stonewall Jackson will ever be a factor among these whom he led and for whom he died. The greatness and the grandeur, the magnanimity and the modesty, the consecration and the courage, the example and the incentive, which were personified on the field of war and in the still air of delightful studies in collegiate shades, will be not only forever a benediction, but forever a transforming influence, not only within Virginia, not only within the South, not only throughout the Republic, but across the seas and around the world, wherever is said or read the name of Robert E. Lee.

"Nor can any New Yorker, nor can any Virginian any more than any Georgian, nor can any American, especially can no American of my profession, despair of commonwealth or of country when he recalls the familiar figure and the shining face of Henry Grady. His presence was an incarnate welcome. His voice was an inspiring appeal. His thought and the memory of it are an uplifting power. From the South he gathered, so to speak, his heart and mind. His experience of it made the very blood and brawn and brain of his life. He gathered the best of what he was and knew and felt and had wrought into deathless words which he came up among us to deliver, and, delivering, to die. More immortal he than the immortals he joined. He entered their ranks younger than they were at their translation. The initial date of his eternity was earlier than theirs. Better, perhaps, that he died on the threshold of a great career. He died at the zenith of the possibilities of youth. He was saved from the misinterpretation of the years and from the disappointments and the misconceptions of the evil to come. Neither mental nor physical decrepitude was to be his. Of him and of all the great souls of the South in whom the North rejoices as in a precious national possession it can be said:

While 'round the sun old Mother Earth
Pursues the ever fleeting years,
A nation shall recount their worth
With mingled pride and joy and tears.

"Fellow citizens, let us remember the oneness of our American derivation and destiny. Let us be thankful that in the baptism of blood all serious causes of division and reproach were purified away. Let us be grateful for the years of peace through progress and of progress through peace. Let us hail them as but the prelude of still better days to come. From this tableland of time, looking backward on the past, and forward on the future, let us strike hands for the betterment of politics: for the cleansing of rule; for the moral trusteeship of private wealth and of public office; for the lifting of poverty, through self help, into comfort; for the considerate leadership of ignorance into knowledge; for the transmutation of provincialism into patriotism and of patriotism into philanthropy. In this work while our country is our solicitude let our field be the world. While our countrymen are our preference, let humanity be our client. By recasting ourselves on the lines of God's laws in our hearts, our state shall prosper, our cities shall come to honor, our communities shall conquer the pinnacles of material and of moral achievement, and our nation shall attain to the benign purposes of Deity in its discovery and in its development. And from the vantage ground of this republic will sweep streams of blessings to all the race of man. If to this we here dedicate and here consecrate ourselves, the North of our homes and the South of your hearts, the North and the South of our country, will eventually be constrained to admit that we sought well and thought well and wrought well for their behoof and for our own."

The requisite two-thirds of the Presbyteries in the Northern Church have voted to accept the revision of the Confession as recommended by the last General Assembly. Only two Presbyteries have voted against the overtures.

Five Essentials.

If you will stop a while to think into it you will find that a rightly rounded Christian life has five essential characteristics

The second of these is a heart-love for the old Book of God: Not reading it as a duty. Taking a chapter at night because you feel you must. I do not mean that just now. But reading it because you love to; as you would a love letter or a letter from home. Thinking about it as the writer of the one hundred and nineteenth psalm did. Listen to him for a moment in that one psalm, talking about this book: "I delight," "I will delight," "My delight"—in all nine times. "I love," "O! how I love," "I do love," "Consider how I love," "I love exceedingly," again nine times in all. "I have longed," "My soul breaketh," speaking of the intensity of his desire to get alone with the book. "Sweeter than honey," "As great spoil," "As much as all riches," "Better than thousands of gold," "Above gold, yea, above fine gold." And all packed into less than two leaves. Do you love this Book like that? Would you like to? Wait a moment.

The third essential is right habits of prayer. Living a veritable life of prayer. Making prayer the chief part not alone of your life, but of your service. Having answers to prayer as a constant experience. Being like the young man in India who said, "I used to pray three times a day: Now I pray only once a day, and that is all day." Feet busy all the day, hands ceaselessly active, head full of matters of business, but the heart never out of communication with Him. Has prayer become to you like that? Wait a moment.

The fourth essential is a pure, earnest, unselfish life. Our lives are the strongest part of us—or else the weakest. A man knows the least of the influence of his own life. Life is not mere length of time, but the daily web of character we unconsciously weave. Our thoughts, imaginations, purposes, motives, love, will, are the under threads: our words, tone of voice, looks, acts, habits are the upper threads: and the passing moment is the shuttle, swiftly, ceaselessly, relentlessly, weaving those threads into a web and that web is the life. It is woven, not by our wishing, or willing, but irresistibly, unavoidably, woven by what we are, moment by moment, hour after hour. What is your life weaving out? Is it attractive because of the power in it of His presence? Would you have it so? Wait just a moment.

The fifth essential is a passion for winning others one by one to the Lord Jesus. A passion, I say. I can use no weaker word than that. A passion burning with the steady flame of anthracite. A passion for winning: not driving, nor dragging, but drawing men. I am not talking about preachers just now, as preachers, but about every one of us. Do you know the peculiar delight there is in winning the fellow by your side, the girl in your social circle, to Jesus Christ? No? Ah, you have missed half your life! Would you have such an intense passion as that, thrilling your heart, and inspiring your life, and know how to do it skillfully, and tactfully?

Let me tell you with my heart that the secret not only of this, but of all four of these essentials I have named lies in the first one which I have not yet named, and grows out of it. Given the first the others will follow as day follows the rising sun.

What is the first great essential? It is this—the unrestrained, unhindered, controlling presence in the heart of the Holy Spirit. It is allowing Jesus' other Self, the Holy Spirit, to take full possession and maintain a loving but absolute monopoly of all your powers.

S. D. Gordon, in Daily Bible.

The colored sunset and the starry heavens, the beautiful mountains and the shining seas, the fragrant woods and the painted flowers, are not half so beautiful as a soul that is serving Jesus out of love, in the wear and tear of common, unpoetical life.—F. W. Faber.

Missionary.

Two of the Seven.

You have heard of the call for seven men to reinforce the North Kiangsu Mission.

I would like to press the call for two of the seven, in this portion of the mission.

Why? Because the present force is inadequate for the needs.

Look at our immediate field. Making a very moderate estimate, it includes 4,800 square miles. Allowing a village or town for every four square miles, we have 1,200, varying in population from one hundred to one hundred thousand. Of these not one in ten has ever been visited by a missionary, while those that we are able to visit regularly could be counted on your fingers.

Indeed, to adequately carry on the work in and around the one city of Hsuchoufu, would require all the time of our whole force.

But look beyond. I am now visiting a field in the province adjoining us on the South. This field, full of towns and villages, is not worked by any denomination, and looks to us for light.

On returning, I hope to visit Honan, the province on our west. The eastern part of that province, larger than our own field, has never been evangelized.

One lone Baptist has been living there a few months, but I understand that he expects to go elsewhere. Destitution on every hand. All is darkness!

For this great work we have only a few sharpshooters. Of this force, Dr. Moore is occupied with the patients that come from far and wide. The station work in this city, as large as Richmond, Virginia, including Sabbath meetings, hospital work, street chapel school, and other lines, take all of Mr. Grier's time and part of mine. The ladies have their hands full in the city and suburbs. Thus the hundreds of cities and towns and villages with the two outlying fields, get only part of one man's time, and are not adequately evangelized. Quod erat demonstrandum.

But the field is open for work. Wherever I go the people crowd around, and buy books as fast as I can sell them. Rarely, if ever, do I visit a city without finding a few people of good standing who come to call on me, and wish to be friends.

The officials are usually friendly, at least on the exterior. There is a strong desire for all knowledge about Western things.

Now is the time to press the work. The night of 1900 is past; other nights will doubtless intervene before the light finally dispels this awful darkness; let us work while it is day.

Yours in Christ,

Hugh W. White.

Hsuchoufu, China, March 18, 1903.

Writing in mid-ocean, on his way from San Francisco to China, Dr. W. S. Ament alluded to his glad anticipations of participating in the work of building up the Christian civilization in the old empire. "I shall rejoice," he says, "when the walls of the old city of Peking have in sight. I long for them as for hid treasures. The old city belongs to God, bought by the blood of the martyrs and tears of the saints, consecrated by years of Christian labor. We want our heritage."—Dominion Presbyterian.

An undenominational work among the Arabic speaking Jews in Bombay has been carried on by Mrs. Cutler since 1895. A day school and a Sabbath-school, in connection with the work, were broken up in 1898, after the baptism of one of the teachers (a Jewess), and even to-day the anger of the Jews is so great that they still refuse to send their children to the schools. A large work among the 14,000 Beni Israel (black Jews) in Bombay and neighborhood is carried on by Miss Trott and Miss Campbell, in connection with the Zenana Bible Mission, who have 3 large schools of many year's standing.—Dominion Presbyterian.

The Plot Against Paul.

Acts 23:12-22. May 10, 1903.

The day after his arrest Paul was brought before the Jewish Council for further investigation of the charges against him. In this assembly were both Pharisees and Sadducees, who differed much in their religious views, and their violent dissensions respecting Paul caused the chief captain to have him removed to the castle. That night the Lord appeared to Paul to comfort and encourage him. So multiplied had been his troubles since reaching Jerusalem that he might have feared that he made a mistake in going there, and the events of the next day showed that dangers were thickening around him. But the Lord says, "Be of good cheer, Paul," and assures him that as he had "testified of him at Jerusalem so he must bear witness at Rome." Our lesson then describes the plot against Paul and we may consider it under several heads.

1. The Conspirators Against Paul.—These were fanatical Jews, assuming that Paul was an enemy of the Jewish faith and worship, and that it was lawful and praiseworthy to destroy him by any means.

They were bold, desperate men, willing to employ deception and bloodshed to accomplish their purpose and to resort to violence, even in the presence of the soldiers, representing Roman authority. They were numerous, for more than forty engaged in this conspiracy. They bound themselves to slay Paul, not only by covenant, but by oath and endeavoring to confirm their purpose by the sanctions of religion. They determined to postpone the most vital matters for achieving the end proposed and to "neither eat nor drink until they had slain Paul. No doubt they supposed that they were doing God's service and that they should deem their design approved of God, argues great blindness of mind and deadness of conscience. But fanatics often have perpetrated most wicked deeds in the name of religion, and have given thanks to God that they were enabled to commit murder. The massacre of St. Bartholemew's day is a memorable historic example.

2. The Co-operation of the Priests and Council.—It is not so surprising that some misguided men moved by religious passion and prejudice should have originated this plot against Paul. But it seems singular that they should have sought the sanction and co-operation of the priests or ministers of religion and of the council or highest court among the Jews. The conspirators tell these plainly their purpose and seek their aid in securing access to Paul and accomplishing their nefarious design. They propose to the council to share in the deception, to pretend that they desire to inquire something more particularly concerning Paul and to give them an opportunity for slaying him. What a fearful state of morals existed among the Jews at this time, when the priesthood and the highest tribunal for maintaining law and order could be appealed to, to approve and further a scheme like this. But since Paul's day priests and Ecclesiastical courts have often lent themselves to the perpetration of wickedness.

3. The Plot Defeated.—Human plots that interfere with the designs of God always fail. It was the Divine purpose that Paul should go to Rome as a witness-bearer, and this attempt upon his life only served to start him on the way to his destination.

The design of the conspirators was foiled, not by miraculous means, but by the operation of natural causes, guided by Divine Providence. The plot became known as a wicked design, shared by many, is liable to be divulged. Paul's nephew, prompted by natural affection, warns the apostle of the impending danger. By Paul's request the young man is brought to the chief captain and tells his story. His account shows the Roman officer that an attempt may be made to set aside his authority and to impair his efficiency in maintaining law and order.

The Lad with the Loaves and Fishes.

John 6:9-13. Topic for May 17.

The religion of Jesus Christ is different from all other religions in many respects. It is the only religion which offers an atonement for the sin of a world. It is the only religion in which the Supreme Being worshipped, is just and yet the justifier of those who come to Him. It is the only religion where justification rests upon faith and not upon the actions of the justified. Not only is it different in its basal principles but it is different in its details. It is the only religion whose saving principles are so simple that they may be grasped by the lowliest and most ignorant and which at the same time offers rich treasure to the profound student who delves deep into the deposits of truth which it contains. It is the only religion which makes a large place for childhood and for those of small capacities to perform important work.

In the story of the lad with the five barley loaves and the two small fishes we have an illustration of how Christ used the small capital of a boy to accomplish what a few minutes before had seemed an impossible undertaking to grown men. It is ever so. The five barley loaves were insignificant, but back of them lay the power of God and they became just as sufficient for the needs of the people as is God himself, for the storehouse of God was in them so far as the physical needs of the people were concerned that day. So God still "hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty; and the base things of the world and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are."

And men are constantly discounting these small things and continue to figure as did the disciples: "There is here a lad with five barley loaves and two small fishes, but what are they among so many?" Whenever any great task is to be performed, men say, "what are we with such a task before us?" Like the disciples they do not know their Lord. He is as strong as the world's need, but people can't believe it.

Christ told the disciples to bring the lad to him, and to make the people sit down. They must do just as far as they had the power. We must bring our capacity for work, even if it is small, and we must do all we can if we expect Jesus to do the rest. But are we doing this? How many are refusing to offer their small abilities to Jesus because they are not big!

The children have something to do for Jesus and He would have them do it. They ought to be encouraged to do their own little part. They ought to be made to feel that in the eyes of Jesus their little, well performed, is just as pleasing as the larger tasks of those more capable.

It was Andrew who brought the lad to Jesus. If we study the character of Andrew we find that it seemed to be a fundamental principle of his life to be bringing someone to the Saviour. Once it was his own brother, Peter; again it was some Greek stranger, and now it is a small boy. To one who is in earnest to be useful in bringing folks to Jesus, it will make no difference whether it is a man or a boy who is to be brought, he will receive the same attention. Some people have tried to apply the arithmetical rule of ratio and proportion where a man is made equal to two or more boys, as to the value of bringing boys to Christ. If there should be a difference made at all, it ought to be made in favor of the boy. The man has the wasted life behind him. The boy has life with all of its promise and influences before him. If possible stop him before he starts on the journey to the "far country."

The child as a unit may seem a small thing but childhood taken collectively, is the reserve force of the Nation and the Church.

THE SOUTHERN EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE.

(Editorial.)

Dr. Peabody's address on Thursday night on "knowledge and service" was one of the features of the Conference. Dr. Lyman Hall of the Georgia Institute of Technology rode the hobby of industrial education a little too fast and too far. But he rode well. He did not see why the training necessary to take the legs off of a man should be any more honorable than that required to put good legs on a mahogany table, or why the men who were to get something out of the ground should not be taught as carefully as the doctors are in order to put people into the ground.

He was followed by Josephus Daniels, who made an excellent address, concealing nothing of the attitude of Southern people toward negro education, detailing eloquently the conditions of poverty that the South has had to face, describing the further obstacles of isolation by mountain and swamps and the sparseness of our population and yet with a note of resolute hopefulness, declaring that the South was advancing rapidly in education as in wealth, and that her people were afraid to close the door of hope and opportunity upon any people, however disappointing educational experiments had hitherto been. We noticed that Mr. W. H. Baldwin applauded Mr. Daniel's propositions.

Chancellor Kirkland of the Vanderbilt University made a ringing address, with the note of true Americanism vibrating throughout.

On Friday afternoon Dr. Venable, of the University of North Carolina, spoke of the work of the University in the Southern States, an admirable address. Professor Mims, of Trinity University, talked of the necessity of consolidating the small colleges, some of which were perpetrating frauds upon the public. He wished that the remark about Mark Hopkins and the log had never been made. He had heard of one man who said he had just built two colleges and had the logs cut for a third. We think Professor Mims made a rather unfair impression as to the prevalence of freedom of speech in Southern colleges. Trinity has been standing for that, but too much insistence on it may lead to a lack of disciplined thought, which is also a desideratum. We suspect that a Calvinistic teacher of the Bible would not be tolerated at Trinity. And certainly there are a plenty of colleges, where the teachers can lecture and the students orate all they please and what they please about child-labor and Whittier and Lowell and Webster and Lincoln, to use Professor Mims' illustrations.

Friday night the Conference adjourned to meet at the University of Virginia. The speakers that evening were Mr. R. Fulton Cutting of New York City, who referred to the unlimited suffrage of the Southern States as having constituted an "impossible situation," that the remedy had been an arbitrary one but could be justified in the eyes of the world by fair treatment of the weaker race. Richard Watson Gilder also undertook to get into Richmond some years ago, but was taken prisoner before he had gotten any Southern blood on his hands. He spoke of the hospitality of this city of great memories and heroic traditions.

Hamilton Mabie declared that his affection for the South gave him the right to speak for the South. He recalled the Virginian who wanted to die on Virginia soil before going to Heaven that the transition might be less abrupt. And with reference to Southern woman he quoted the droll misquotation,

O, Woman, in thine hours of ease,
Uncertain, coy, and hard to please,
Yet seen too oft, familiar with thy face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

Mr. Mabie believed that the genius of the South will subordinate education to the setting loose of the power of the individual. It will introduce the element of sentiment and poetry into our national education. Greece learned its traditions and its art from a poet. We need the poet in the school-room.

He then declared that he owed his education out of sectionalism into Americanism to the Conference and that every visit South made him less a Northerner and more an American.

He closed with an earnest plea for the necessity of education and an earnest protest against the tragedy of the untrained man and the untrained woman in this age of the world.

Chancellor Hill of the University of Georgia made one of the best addresses on the negro problem that we have ever heard. It was in perfect good taste, true in every line to the best traditions of the South and yet not in the slightest degree offensive to the best traditions of the North. We hope to publish this in full at a later date, and an abstract can do scant justice to its delicious humor, its noble spirit, and the moral earnestness underlying all.

His three periods of negro history are well worth remembering for their originality and wit: First, Uncle Tom in another man's cabin. Second, Uncle Tom without a cabin. Third, Uncle Tom in his own cabin, perhaps in his own home.

Dr. Lyman Abbott summed up the salient features of the Conference with his "impressions." First, the extraordinary hospitality of the people of Richmond. He had supposed that he was coming to a city of strangers. He left with the possibly pleasing illusion that he had more friends in Richmond than in any city in the United States.

Second, Americans are an eloquent people. In proof he made special mention of President Ogden, St. Clair McKelway, Dabney, Claxton, Kirkland and Peabody. He had been much impressed with the simple, sincere, genuine, oratory of the occasion. It would be only fair to add that Dr. Abbott contributed his fair share of it.

Third, Our faces are turned toward the future. Questions that were discussed two years ago have been answered.

Fourth, The character of the educators. The leaders of education in the South are the peers of any in the North, in Canada, or in Great Britain. The North and the South are one. We are never to forget the past but we must make the past the foundation for the future. We have learned to honor and respect one another.

Dr. Abbott then gave his impressions of the movement itself, paying a well deserved compliment to Presidents McIver and Alderman for having begun, fourteen years ago, their educational evangelistic campaign in North Carolina. Among other good things that he said were: "That is the best education for any man to have that educates him for the best service he can perform for the world. Better to pound an anvil and make good horseshoes than to pound a pulpit and make poor sermons."

This revival of educational life is also a revival of liberty. We have learned that the suffrage is a prerogative and a duty rather than a right. In manhood suffrage, manhood comes first and suffrage afterwards.

It means also a revival of domestic life. It is connected with the laws for the prevention of child-labor, North and South. That is a one-sided system that protects manufactures and does not protect children.

It means a revival of religion. The end of education is the development of perfect manhood. That is also the end of the church. "He gave some to be prophets, and some apostles, for the building up of the saints unto a work of ministering, till we all come unto the perfect man!"

It means at last a common faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as our Redeemer and Saviour. I should be sorry to see the school-room take the place of the Church. But there is a great power in the gathering together of the children under one roof. A perfect man is worth more than a perfect creed or a perfect ritual. We need a religion that is less hysterically emotional and less intellectually dogmatic, whose inspiration is God and whose end is service.

The keynote of the Nineteenth Century was Liberty. Napoleon helped in bringing liberty to Europe. Every tate in Europe is now a free state, and yet the oldest buildings used for parliamentary purposes in the world, are the Washington Capitol and the Boston State House. The Keynote of this century is Education. This movement seems to have come from the breath of God. There are currents greater than man has created, and which man cannot control.

Bishop McVickar of Rhode Island, with his giant frame and deep, mellow voice, (a benediction in itself) pronounced the benediction and the Conference adjourned.

The party went on an excursion on Saturday to the University of Virginia. President Ogden declared that the hospitality of the hosts had been so delicate that he did not know whom to thank for the excursion, the Railroad, the Richmond people or the University and its friends. It was a most enjoyable trip. Dr. Baringer made an address of welcome and took occasion to explain the architectural peculiarities of the scheme of buildings devised by Mr. Jefferson. Dr. Ogden delivered a fine address in reply, made in the best spirit. Dr. Kent of the University recited some of its ideals just coming into fruition, as the articulation of the public school system with the University. Dr. Peabody again charmed his auditors with the humor and eloquence of his address. He gave an interesting account of an old lady in Massachusetts, who willed her money to a board of trustees, to do what good with it they could, the trustees finding themselves in the position of the man who donated the ten commandments, in marble, to a church, with the remark, "I can't keep them, maybe they can." This money had been given to the University of Virginia as a token of good will. Dr. Peabody declared that Harvard had come to the University of Virginia for two great ideas in the life of that university, the elective system and volition in the administration of religion. He referred to the fact that John Adams' last words, as he lay dying, on July 4th, the fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, were, "Thomas Jefferson still survives." And by one of the most marvellous co-incidences in history Jefferson died on the self-same day. But there was a sense in which this university is the lengthened shadow of one man. In that sense, Thomas Jefferson still survives.

Professor Heath Dabney, of the University, made a delightful address emphasizing especially the Jeffersonian traditions as to freedom of learning and freedom of teaching, the voluntary principle in religion and the honor system. He made this fine quotation from the sage of Monticello, "I have sworn on the altar of God eternal hostility to every form of tyranny over the mind of man."

The exercises were brought to an end with the speech of Dr. Charles Dabney, an alumnus of the University. By the way, there were lively rumors floating around that either Dabney or Alderman or Venable would be elected to the new office of President of the University.

On Sunday morning we went to the First Baptist Church to hear Dr. Lyman Abbott preach. Dr. Burrell, of the Reformed Church, New York City was also preaching in Richmond that day and he has been one of Dr. Abbott's keenest and most unsparing critics. Perhaps he put Dr. Abbott on his mettle to declare himself fully on some subjects. His text was, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, who is Christ, the Lord."

The theme was "Christ, our Helper," and an eloquent, evangelical sermon it was, with abundant references to the divinity of Christ and the enthronement of the Christian religion as the only one that could give help and salvation to the man in the ditch. It was really a great sermon.

How Dr. Abbott can preach that way and yet allow the Outlook to cast such reflection upon the account of the Birth of Christ, as we attempted to criticise in last week's Standard, we are unable to say. We have no working hypothesis, even.

The hour on Sunday night was given to the memorial exercises in honor of Jabez Lamar Monroe Curry, scholar, soldier, author, orator, statesman, diplomat, educator, man of God.

The service was held in the Academy of Music, which was packed to the doors. Seated on the platform were Drs. Ogden, McIver, Kent, Alderman, Albert Shaw, General Fitz-Hugh Lee, and the Rev. Drs. J. William Jones, Peabody, Abbot, and Cooper, the latter being the pastor of the First Baptist Church with which Dr. Curry was so long connected. Dr. Ogden stated briefly that these services were held under the direction of the Conference, by the wish of those who were nearest and dearest to Dr. Curry. He spoke tenderly of the widow, on her sickbed in her home by the sea. Dr. Cooper led in prayer, and after singing by the choir, President Boatright, of the Richmond College, delivered a worthy eulogy of the man whom the nation found teaching at Richmond College and called to the national work of superintending the distribution of the Peabody Fund. He declared that in Dr. Curry's own summing up of his life-work, he had made his educational labors the main part, and with the noble end of national unity and political association.

Dr. Alderman's oration was the despair of the reporter. If we had not promised so much to our readers we should hope to add this to what may subsequently appear in full. From introduction to peroration he was graceful, eloquent, brilliant. We believe that this is the best creation of his artistic genius that we have yet seen or heard.

The exercises were closed with the singing of Richard Watson Gilder's hymn, written for the occasion and distributed in printed slips through the audience; and so the Conference ended with a note of triumph, in praise of the great man and good man who has gone to his reward.

God of the strong, God of the weak,
Lord of all lands, and our own land;
Light of all souls, from thee we seek Light from thy light, strength from thy hand.

II.

In suffering thou hast made us one,
In mighty burdens one are we;
Teach us that lowliest duty done
Is highest service unto thee.

III.

Teach us, Great Teacher of mankind,
The sacrifice that brings thy balm;
The love, the work that bless and bind;
Teach us thy majesty, thy calm.

IV.

Teach thou, and we shall know, indeed.
The truth divine that maketh free,
And knowing, we may sow the seed
That blossoms through Eternity.

May sow in every living heart
That to the waiting day doth hope.
Not ours, O God! the craven part,
To shut one human soul from hope.

Now, in the memory of thy Saint,
To whom thy little ones were dear,
Help us to toil and not to faint,
Till earth grows dark and heaven comes near.

The Congregationalist is fighting a man of straw when it asserts that the Southern position respecting the negro, "condemns the entire race to a permanent state of political exile, educational kindergarten and economic vassalage." No representative Southern man has any such purpose toward the "entire race." The South makes all proper exceptions. The trouble has been the unwise effort of the long-range philanthropists to treat the mass of negroes on the theory that the exception was the rule.

The New Doctrine Concerning Infant Salvation.

The old doctrine concerning the salvation of all who die in infancy, as held by Presbyterians from Calvin down to Charles Hodge, is well stated by Hodge in his systematic Theology, Vol. I, pages 26-27. Says Hodge: "What the Scriptures teach on this subject, according to the common doctrine of evangelical Protestants is first: All who die in infancy are saved."

This, says Dr. Charles Hodge, was the common doctrine of evangelical Protestants up to his time. It is doubtless the common doctrine still, notwithstanding the new doctrine that in these days is being advocated by some who claim to be evangelical Protestants. There are very few errors in the Church that are not also old. But so far as I know, the first to state the new doctrine concerning the salvation of infants was Dr. Stewart Robinson.—Discourses on Redemption, pages 89-99. Says Dr. Robinson: "The Scriptures being intended for those only who can understand them, and to declare to such the terms of their salvation, and the grounds of their hope and comfort, without gratifying curiosity, no where expressly declare, in direct terms, that all infants shall be saved: while they do declare that the elect of God, adults and infants alike, shall be saved through the effectual working of the Holy Spirit. When the Bible stops speaking the Confession always stops."

Three years later, there appeared a commentary on the Confession of Faith by A. A. Hodge. On page 210 of his commentary A. A. Hodge says: "It is not positively revealed that all infants are elect, but we are left, for many reasons, to indulge a highly probable hope that such is the fact. The Confession affirms what is certainly revealed, and leaves that which revelation has not decided to remain without suggestion of a positive opinion upon one side or the other."

These two statements of the new doctrine are wonderfully alike, and wonderfully like the statement of the same new doctrine by the present advocates of it in the Church papers of to-day.

It is one of the curiosities of psychology that such men as Stewart Robinson and A. A. Hodge, as well as their more modern disciples, should not see the inconsistency of their new statements with their own old settled faith, which old settled faith they still cling to after they have as they think cut away the foundation of it.

If you would see a clear and strong statement of the good and necessary inferences from the Scriptures for the faith, or shall we say hope, that all infants dying in infancy are saved, read Stewart Robinson's discourses on redemption, pages 93-96. If, however, you don't want your faith and hope wrecked, don't read page 92. On pages 93-96, he gives eleven steps in the good and necessary inferences from Scripture for the faith or hope that all infants dying in infancy are saved. He says these eleven good and necessary inferences are "from statements of Scripture directly in reference to this point," and he says further that we find "the argument culminating at every successive step of the view of the analogy of faith, and the direct statements of Scripture concerning the nature of the future state." His eleventh good and necessary inference he calls "the cap stone upon this argument thus culminating at every step." His cap stone argument is from what he says is an "express declaration," from the book of Revelations 20:12, which says "and another Book was opened, the books of life." This other book he says, "can be understood in no other way so clearly as in the supposition of three classes at the judgment—believers and unbelievers, out of the two books, and the little ones, who had done no works, were recorded in a third book specially appropriated to such a book of life."

I wish the Standard had room to print the whole of Robinson's eleven good and necessary inferences from the Scriptures for our faith in the salvation of all infants that die in infancy. For advocates of the new doctrine, having cut away, as they suppose, the foundation of faith, and having only hope to stand upon, have gathered up a good deal of good and necessary inferences for their comforting hope. Robinson, however, seems to lose sight of this distinction between faith and hope, for at the conclusion of his argument he says: "Such are the general grounds of our faith concerning the children who die."

It is hard for a false witness to construct a consistent story. The whole argument for the new doctrine is based upon assumed distinction between faith and hope. It is assumed that there may be ground of hope where there is no ground for faith sufficient to justify a credal statement in the Confession. This assumes that faith and hope are two distinct exercises of the soul, resting upon two separate and distinct kinds of testimony. A true psychology points out that faith and hope both rest upon the same testimony. Hope has reference to things not seen. "What a man seeth why doth he yet hope for." Faith has reference to things not seen. "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Faith is the substance of the things that hope hopes for. That is, faith gives us a present realization in foretaste of the substance of what hope hopes for. Hope does the same thing. Hope gives us a present realization in foretaste of the substance of what faith believes in. If there is no testimony from God for faith to rest upon, there can be none for hope to rest upon. Faith and hope are only different phases or aspects of the same exercise. Hope is the culmination of faith, the highest form of faith. Hope therefore is the anchor of the soul, sure and steadfast, entering into that within the veil. If hope is sure and steadfast, it must have a sure and steadfast foundation. Is the foundation of the anchor of the soul less sure and steadfast than the foundation of faith which investigates and therefore makes sure of the holding power of hope. If the assurance of hope is a higher form of faith than assured faith, then how can faith require a clearer testimony than hope. Hope is nothing except as anchored in the assured foundation of faith. Thus anchored hope can rise and fly to things within the veil. The new doctrine therefore reverses the psychological fact, as it makes the testimony required for a credal faith stronger than the testimony required for a flying hope. Hope therefore can never fly so high any more, if it has not as strong testimony as the faith from which it rises. Faith is the root that bears hope as its stem and flower. Does the root bear the stem and flower, or the stem and flower the root? The new doctrine says the latter. The new doctrine, therefore, being based upon a false psychology, is false, and the old as stated by the old Dr. Charles Hodge remains.

Dr. Charles Hodge's good and necessary inference from the Scriptures, which he says is regarded by all evangelical Protestants as sufficient ground for a credal statement, that all who die in infancy are of the elect and therefore saved, is from Rom. 5:18,19. His argument is that the all, upon whom the free gift came by the righteousness of one, includes all who are not expressly excluded from the kingdom of God.

Infants are not so excluded; therefore infants are saved. That is that the fact of their death in infancy is proof to us of their election. Hodge says "this appears to be the clear meaning of the Apostle, and therefore he does not hesitate to say that where sin abounded, grace has much more abounded: that the benefits of redemption far exceed the evils of the fall; that the number of the saved far exceeds the number of the lost." Robinson adds here, "if we count the abounding of grace only in the numbers of adult sinners saved, this statement seems not to be realized. But it puts another face on the statement when we conceive of the dead children as all called by Jesus Christ to himself." Robinson adds much more to the same effect, and stronger even than Dr. Charles Hodge puts it.

From all this it appears that while the new doctrine professedly proceeds upon the assumption that the ground of hope is separate and distinct from the ground of faith, in the process of the argument, apparently without knowing it, the professed assumption is given p, and the argument really proceeds upon the true assumption that the ground of hope is the same as the ground of faith, and therefore the proof of the hope is the proof of the faith denied.

The new doctrine therefore condemns itself and proves what it seeks to deny.

One brother had the boldness to preach a sermon recently on the basis of the new doctrine, and his sermon was published in one of the church papers.

His good and necessary inferences from the Scriptures of his ground of comforting hope is one of the best specimens I have seen in the papers of the good and necessary inferences for the faith which he professedly denies.

Let it cease therefore to be said by Presbyterians that the Confession is silent as to the salvation of all infants that die in infancy. The Confession is not silent on this point, but it is capable of being so interpreted as to make it silent. The Confession's statement therefore on this point needs revision, provided it could be so revised as to state clearly and unambiguously what the whole Church really believes, viz., the death of an infant is proof to us of its election and salvation without the ordinary means of grace; and this whether the parents are Christian or brethren, believers or infidels, wicked or moral.

A Bible Study.

Rev. S. S. Laws, D. D., LL. D.

The Redemption provided by the incarnate Mediator as prophet, priest, and king would not, apart from the work of the Holy Spirit, save a single soul. It would be a richly spread banquet in the midst of the starving multitudes and yet without a guest.

Hence we learn, and it is especially noteworthy, that one of the primary effects of the service and satisfaction rendered by Christ was the removal, in some way not explained, of an otherwise insuperable obstacle in the way of the procession of the Holy Spirit from the Father and of his being sent by the Son. The classic Scripture relative to this matter is John xiv: 14-21, xv:26, with John xvi:7-15 and vii:39. To select a single verse: "Nevertheless I tell you the truth: it is expedient for you that I go away; for if I go not away, the Comforter (paracletos) will not come unto you; but if I go away I will send him unto you" (xvi:7). Pentecost was the initiative of this enduring promise. This topic gave rise to the Filioque controversy in the early church, and the blighted spiritual condition of the Greek Church, which denied the mission of the Spirit from the Son, as well as His procession from the Father, is a matter of history.

The view that regards Pentecost as the completion of the passover festival, the two thus constituting one feast, is not only favored by certain ceremonial details, blending in retrospect the exodus from Egypt and the giving of the law, but it is entitled to consideration as significantly pointing to the oneness and co-operation of the services of the second and third persons of the Trinity in practically initiating and completing the work of deliverance from the bondage of sin—"the power of sin is the law"—contemplated by them and the Father in their joint covenant of redemption and grace. The plain import of this suggestive view of the unification of these feasts is that the forensic, legal righteousness wrought out for us by the Son of God and the personal righteousness wrought in us by God—i. e., justifying righteousness, together with sanctifying righteousness—constitute the one complete righteousness required of us in completely satisfying the divine claims of the pure and holy God on every sinner. This is the consummation attained on the removal of these two obstacles. Our administration is pre-eminently the administration of the Holy Spirit. The righteousness of justification for penal deliverance from the law, wrought out for us by the Son of God should not be confounded, as is so often done, with the righteousness of sanctification wrought in us by the Spirit of God as delivering us from the worse than Egyptian internal bondage of sin. One is objective and the other is subjective; one is internal and personal and the other is external and putative. To provide a forensic or legal righteousness was the special work of the Christ; but to put man in the actual possession of it by faith and to transform his personal character into conformity therewith, this is the work undertaken by the Holy Spirit. This inner righteousness, which constitutes character, is not an infusion, nor a transfusion from without, but an internal transformation, a change in the moral state of the soul, which is "transformed from glory to glory even as from the Lord the Spirit" (2 Cor. iii:18).

2. As to man's moral condition, nothing is more plainly taught in the Bible and confirmed by history than man's demoralization and urgent need of the very work which the Holy Spirit has undertaken in his behalf.

In the language of the Psalmist (Ps. xiv), "They (all men) are corrupt; they have done abominable works; there is none that doeth good. Jehovah looked down from heaven upon the children of men to see if there were any that did understand, that did seek after God. They are all gone aside; they are together become filthy; there is none that doeth good; no, not one." The figure in this passage is that of a bird craning its neck and looking down and around in search of some object; but no pure and sinless individual of the race is found. As previously indicated, the Apostle Paul, in his letter to the Romans, quotes and applies this language of the Psalmist in placing Jews and Gentiles on the same footing under the broken law as naturally corrupt and condemned. He emphasizes it by adding the declaration, "There is none righteous; no, not one." Man's experience fully sustains the indictment (Rom. iii:9-20).

In meditating on the love of God for this sinful world that impelled him to send forth the Son and the Holy Spirit for its salvation, the mind experiences no little perplexity, for the reason that we cannot think otherwise than that some ground of perceived excellence and congeniality in the object is necessary to the exercise of love, even on the part of the sovereign God. What is it in man that meets this demand and shows the genuine reasonableness of this movement of saving love? There must be something in man besides his sin or such love would have been absolutely impossible. Perhaps some relief may be found by pointing out that, so far from sin being the whole of man, it is not even a property or essential constituent of his make-up as man. It is an accident and even a separable accident. Perhaps I may be allowed to appropriate from class-room an illustration of this perfectly valid but somewhat technical distinction. It was a university class of about eighty mature young men and some young women, in logic. The distinction just intimated having been made between property and accident, the next question related to the different kinds of accident. It came to a young woman, who correctly answered that there are two kinds of accidents—the separable and the inseparable. For illustration of the inseparable accident, she mentioned that she was born in the State where the university was located and could not be other than a native of that State. Being then asked for an illustration of the separable accident, her eyes rolled around, seemingly in search of it, the class being all attention, when suddenly she emphatically answered, moustache. The class exploded. The answer, though colloquial, was correct and apt. Sin is no more a necessary constituent in the constitutional make-up of man than moustache, and although it may not be so easily separated or removed, still it is in fact as really separable. To-day Adam is sinless; tomorrow he is sinful; but he does not cease to be a man. Some days or years thereafter, it may be, he is pardoned, sanctified, glorified, but he does not cease to be a man when thus divested of sin and transformed; indeed, he is then more of a man than before. In all of the essential characteristics of manhood, he is the same individual personality in all these conditions and changes. The leprosy of sin mars manhood, but does not extinguish it. Luther, it is said, was asked where the church was before the Reformation, and he answered, "Where was your face this morning before it was washed?" Paul exhorts the Ephesians to put off the old man and to put on the new man. Leprosy still baffles human skill, but the Saviour healed ten on a single occasion. This revealed his deity.

After the Fall man was a ruin, but it was a ruin so noble as to command divine regard. It was like the ruins of a temple or a palace whose grandeur and magnificence are not wholly extinguished, but are half revealed by the broken columns, the fragments of the frieze and cornice and architrave of the entablature, the shattered and moss-grown walls and towers. The genius who originally constructed the edifice would detect in the sad ruins before him sufficient traces of his own handiwork, amidst the desolation, to mingle admiration with his sadness.

I find the following pertinent language of Augustine quoted by Calvin, with approval, in his Institutes (B. 2, 16, 4): "Therefore our reconciliation by the death of Christ must not be understood as if he reconciled us to God, that God might begin to love those whom he had before hated; but we are reconciled to him who already loved us, but with whom we were at enmity on account of sin. And whether my assertion be true let the Apostle attest: 'God,' says he, 'commendeth his love towards us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us' (Rom. v:8). He loved us, therefore, even when we were in the exercise of enmity against him and engaged in the practice of iniquity. Wherefore, in a wonderful and divine manner, he both hated and loved us at the same time. He hated us as being different from what he had made us; but as our iniquity had not entirely destroyed his work in us, he could at the same time in every one of us hate what we had done and love what had proceeded from himself."

There is here a suggestion of vital importance in the adjustment of the relation of justice and love. Both of these attributes are equally essential and eternally distinct forms of perfection in the character of God. Sin had invoked the inevitable punitive destructive agency of justice before love projected, in view of it, the mission of rescue in harmony with the claims of justice, from the present and final ruin. This necessary presupposition of justice so wilfully ignored by man is never forgotten by God. It is sharply disclosed in that notable passage in the Saviour's interview with Nicodemus (John iii:16-17): "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God sent not the Son into the world to judge the world; but that the world should be saved through him." Love, then, sent the Son to save the lost, by propitiating offended justice and giving man a new heart.

What was in man besides his sin made him a most noble ruin, but nevertheless the sadder ruin. God saw what was there and also its glorious possibilities, and his Son rushed down from the shining heights.

Northern Correspondence.

Pittsburg continues to grow in wealth and population with marvelous rapidity. Its immense iron and steel mills, the coal, oil and natural gas traffic of which Pittsburg is the center, accounts in part, for this rapid growth.

The Westinghouse Electric Works, already an immense concern, employing many thousands of men, is doubling their capacity this spring.

The churches have corresponding growth and command a vast amount of wealth. Few cities in the land have as many churches paying large salaries to their pastors. The Fourth Avenue Baptist Church recently called Dr. Warren G. Partridge, of Cincinnati, O, to become pastor at a salary of $3,600 per annum. It is expected this call will be accepted as Dr. Partridge preached for this church on last Sabbath. Among other wealthy churches in the city are the Sixth United Presbyterian, with a membership of over thirteen hundred; the Highland Avenue and the old First Presbyterian and the Second Church on Pennsylvania Avenue. The old First Presbyterian, on Wood Street, occupying one of the most prominent points in the city, has at last given way to the pressure of business. For 119 years this congregation has occupied this place of worship. On Sabbath the 12th of April they worshipped in that building for the last time. It was in deep sorrow that the older members retired from that sanctuary for the last time, made sacred by a century of devotion and by hallowed memories. In a few days the rude hands of workmen were busy pulling it down, that it may give place to a fine business block. Rev. Maitland Alexander, D. D., the pastor, preached this farewell sermon. It must have been the occasion of many tears, as church memories are the most sacred in life. The congregation worshipped in the Alvin Theatre the following Sabbath and it is estimated 1,800 persons attended the evening service. The Pittsburg Presbytery held their regular meetings of Presbytery in the chapel of the First church, so that it was also a sacred center for the Presbytery. But a fine new church edifice will be erected soon on a part of the church lot fronting on Sixth Avenue. They have been removing the dead buried there, among these were some distinguished soldiers of the American Revolution. There is no rest to the ashes even of a Revolutionary soldier, before the push and pressure of modern enterprise. This pressure is felt by all the down-town churches in all our older cities. Even old Trinity Church looks lonely standing on Broadway, N. Y. City, amid a forest of sky scrapers. Is the church forced to retire before the advance of growing wealth is a question yet to be settled.

With three Theological Seminaries in Alleghany City, and perhaps, a hundred and twenty-five flourishing churches in the twin cities, the moral condition grows worse rather than better. Sabbath desecration gains ground each year. More saloons are licensed this year than ever before and the city government is still involved in a chronic ferment growing out of factional strife, not between different political parties but within the party in power. Wealth does not bring peace nor tranquility to the city having most of it.

Pennsylvania is at present in a state of intense agitation over a new Libel law passed by the Legislature which adjourned only last week. The purpose of this law is to punish the press using the cartoon. The effect of this law is to muzzle the press and put an end to free speech. The bill has not yet been signed and the action of the Governor is awaited with much anxiety by press and people. The measure is the creation of Boss politicians, who do not wish to have the light thrown upon their dark doings.

The Liquor traffic seems to gain power in view of the fact that the business is legalized. The laws in most of the Northern States favor the traffic, as a result the business flourishes.

The office of Judge, once a non-partisan office, is now made a political office and in most cases favors the liquor traffic. The license system adopted as a restrictive measure, makes the business lawful and magnifies the amount of drunkenness. The Anti-Saloon League has not yet accomplished much in the way of restraint. When will God arise to place his own curse against the mighty? Not until his own people show more concern than they do now.

On Sabbath, April 19, Rev. Dr. Francis Horton, pastor of the Temple Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, was stricken with apoplexy while preaching a special sermon to young men and died soon after being removed from the pulpit to his own home. On the same date Prof. David McDill, D. D., LL. D., of Xenia, Ohio, died from heart trouble. Dr. McDill was for many years a professor in Montmouth College, Ill, afterwards professor in Xenia Theological Seminary for over a dozen years. As an author he was well and widely known by his valuable publications.

The General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church meets this year on the 27th of May at Tarkio, Mo. There will be more than ordinary interest this year on account of the questions and measures to occupy the attention of this Assembly.

Rev. Chalmers Martin, D. D., president of Pennsylvania College for Women, East End, Pittsburgh, Pa., has offered his resignation which has been accepted. This is one of the growing Institutions of Western Pennsylvania which commands brilliant talent in the Faculty. It need not be surprising if this Institution casts covetous eyes through the ranks of the Southern Presbyterian Church, as did Princeton Seminary, in search of a brainy, warm-hearted President. No better exchange can be made in the best interests of our common country, than this work of transplanting the brilliant, warm blood of the South to the North, and in return as a compensation sending the cold blooded fossils of the North, Southward to get warmed up.

Rev. Dr. T. H. Robinson and Oliver McClintock were appointed a committee in search of a new President. If you meet these gentlemen South you may surmise their mission. My next from Northern Presbyterian General Assembly. W. H. McMaster. Blairsville, Pa.

The Responsibility of the Librarian of Sunday Schools.

Elizabeth L. Foote, Librarian of the New York Public Library, at the close of an admirable article in the Sunday-school Times for January 11, 1902, speaks so much to the point upon this topic that we can do no better than to quote the passage and ask the prayerful attention of every Sunday-school Librarian.

After speaking of the subtle influence of literature and the effect it has upon the child mind, she says: "The true Librarian knows this, and in the Sunday-school, far more than in the public library can he watch the personnel of his readers, and place in their hands the best books for each one. The personal element possible in the Sunday-school library is one of its peculiar opportunities, and the most valuable part of its work.

"The librarian must consider his part of the school routine to be quite as religious as that of any teacher, and must come to it with as great a degree of solemn devotion and careful preparation. The detailed methods are only the tools which in his hands may make careful readers of those with whom he deals. He must know his books, every one of them; he must also know the readers, and then fit the books to the readers."

The idea of going to the library with a sense of religious obligation, and of careful preparation, may not be a very popular one, but if the work of distributing Sunday-school books is the Master's work, if the librarian feels called to this work, then how dare he or she go to it carelessly? Go to it without a prayer for patience, wisdom, tact?

Some day that librarian may hear from the lips of a boy or girl, a young man or young woman the testimony:

"The book which you told me would just snit me led me to take Christ as my Saviour."

Oh the possibilities! Oh the responsibility! Oh, the prayers and the care it needs to make a good Sunday-school librarian. W. S.

Report of Committee on Colored Evangelization.

Of all branches of church work that of Colored Evangelization seems to be at once the most pressing and the most discouraging. The colored man and the white man living side by side in the South are further apart to-day than ever; and the gulf widens.

The patriarchal condition of master and servant is of the past. That attitude of friendly tolerance on the one hand and respectful regard on the other which characterized the decades between 1870 and 1890 has gone. In its place the one race exercises steadfast watchfulness, and holds to a grim determination that the social gulf shall be impassable. Left to itself, the other race sinks in self-respect, loses in moral character and nourishes a hidden resentment against those who disfranchised them.

There is a feeling to-day that to educate the negro is a mistake, and that the best thing to do with him is to let him alone—socially, politically, educationally, religiously. Even leading secular papers quote with approval the hostile criticisms of a German army officer on the work of Christian missionaries in Africa. According to this authority the bad negro is the converted negro. Brethren, can these things be true? Is it best to let the negro alone both in Africa and at home? Has the negro a soul? If he has, then Christ died for him as well as for us, and whether he be in Africa or America we cannot afford to let him alone.

To refuse him help is to deny the power of the gospel and its obligation upon ourselves. The white man of the South is peculiarly the negro's keeper. Providence has placed the colored man on his hands, and God will hold him accountable for His trust.

The situation is a delicate one. On the one hand there is what we believe to be the God-given race instinct, which demands the preservation of the white race in its purity. On the other there is the obligation to defend and help and teach, to morally strengthen and save the black man.

If these two positions are irrevocably antagonistic, one or the other must be abandoned. But we cannot believe them hopelessly irreconcilable: one white race will remain white, and one of the forces that will keep it so will be the Christian Church in its midst; Christianizing and civilizing, giving moral tone, industry and character to a race naturally shiftless and emotional, morally degraded and coarse in its instincts. For a little the white Christian Church seems to be partially stultified in its effort to reach the colored man by the estrangement and bitterness of the political upheavals of recent years. But she will recover and do greater things in the future than she has in the past. If the race problem is to be fairly and justly solved without cruelty or harm to either race it must be solved by the Church, animated by the Spirit of the Master.

In the face of the discouragements and difficulties already referred to your committee has found but little opportunity to advance the cause committed to its keeping. The only thing that seemed feasible was the placing of a colored evangelist as a pioneer among the colored people in our Presbytery. We thought we saw how to solve the financial problem of his support and we wrote to the Rev. D. Clay Lilly, the Assembly's secretary for colored evangelization asking for a man to put in the field; but the reply was that there was no man available, and that the greatest need of the work everywhere was more men. So far as we can see this is all that we may hope to do at present, and this opening is closed for lack of workers.

We would call the Presbytery's attention to the encouraging features of our work, viz., schools for colored students of which there are three, one at Abbeville, S. C., one at Vicksburg, Miss., and the Stillman Institute. At the latter nineteen students are preparing for the ministry. The second encouraging feature is the Mission Sunday-school of which there are several throughout the South, taught by white teachers—ladies and gentlemen of the bluest blood of the South working for the Lord in this direction. The third encouraging feature is an increase of 50 per cent in five years in the membership and Sunday-school attendance in the Colored Presbyterian Church.

In conclusion your Presbyterial committee would recommend the requests of the General Assembly's committee in the matter of Colored Evangelization. These requests are:

1. That the ministers of our churches who are accessible to schools for colored youth—which have no Theological departments be requested to visit such schools and lay before the students the claims of the Gospel ministry, and invite them to take up their preparation for the ministry under our care at the Stillman Institute.

2. The committee earnestly requests each Presbytery of our assembly to send at least one student to the Stillman Institute each year. P. M. McIntyre, ALABAMA.

The Presbytery of Tuscaloosa met at Centreville, Ala., April 14-17. There were present 20 ministers and 19 ruling elders.

Ruling Elder E. S. Gatchell was elected moderator, and Ruling Elder E. B. Nuzum and Rev. N. B. Keahey, clerks.

Rev. J. A. Berry was received from the Presbytery of West Lexington, and will labor in the Pickens county group. Forty-nine of the fifty-five churches of the Presbytery are now supplied; and of the six that are vacant two are in correspondence with brethren who will probably engage with them.

Rev. T. Peyton Walton, of Holston Presbytery recently elected President of the Alabama Synodical College for Women was present and addressed the Presbytery in the interest of his school.

The reports from the churches were in larger numbers than usual, and their tone was generally encouraging. With fewer vacant churches on the roll than has been the case in many years, and with the prospect that these vacancies will all soon be filled, there is much reason for congratulation. Two of the churches reported accessions of from fifty to sixty each, and many others tell of gains in their membership both by profession of faith and by letter.

Rev. John Van Lear, Tuscaloosa, and Ruling Elder J. Foote Hooper, Selma, were elected principal commissioners to the General Assembly, with Rev. A. A. Little, Selma, and Dr. S. G. Todd, Plantersville, alternates.

The Presbytery voted to retain the Latin Thesis

The General Assembly was overtured by a narrow vote to send down to the Presbyteries an overture amending Chap. X, Sec. 3, of the Confession of Faith by striking out the word "elect" from the sentence "elect infants, dying in infancy, etc."

An adjourned meeting will be held in the First Church, Selma, 2 p. m., Thursday, May 28th.

The next stated meeting will be held at Newbern 7:30 p. m., Tuesday, Oct. 6th, 1903. J. G. Praigg, S. C.

North Alabama Presbytery met in Birmingham, April 14. Officers—Rev. J. D. Wallace, moderator and Revs. F. Marsten and J. W. Orr, Clerks.

The Editor's Chat With the Reader.

O. H.'s poem on our first page this week is one of the finest things we have yet seen from her gifted pen. It is a prayer we should all commit to memory and repeat it sometimes while we are thinking twice.

This is rather an educational number this week. We hope it will be also educative. We do not attempt to conceal the fact that we are rather proud of the address on North and South. Most of our Southern exchanges have already printed it, however. Other contributed articles are excellent. Dr. Laws continues his discussion of a great theological theme that has needed fuller statement. Rev. K. M. McIntyre says the final word about the "hopeful" brethren and he is a philosopher whose propositions it is hard to gainsay.

Rev. W. H. McMaster sends us an interesting letter on Northern Presbyterian matters. Rev. P. McIntyre speaks an earnest word on the subject of colored evangelization. While W. S. has a suggestive article on the Responsibility of Sunday-school Librarians. Send this copy of the Standard to your neighbor and ask him if he does not think it worth the price. Thirty-six pages every week.

Note.—We note that a Texas Presbytery has endorsed Rev. George Summey, D. D., for the office of Assembly's Secretary of Publication. Dr. Summey has recently joined the editorial fraternity of newspaper men, by accepting the position as editor and manager of the Southwestern Presbyterian. And in view of Dr Phillips' eminently satisfactory service in the Publication Office and the reported endorsement of him by the Committee, we doubt very much that Dr. Summey would allow his name to be used in such a candidacy.

Meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery.

When Presbytery adjourned, on my motion, to meet in Charlotte on May 12th for the licensure of candidates, I was under a misapprehension as to the date of the closing of Union Seminary. I find now that the Seminary closes on Wednesday, May 13th, and the candidates have written me that they cannot come before Presbytery until May 20th. I would suggest, then, that brethren at a distance do not put themselves to the trouble of coming on the 12th, and that the brethren who will be at the Home Mission Committee meeting on that day, organize and adjourn Presbytery to meet on the 20th, without transacting any other business. J. R. Howerton.

Receptions—Rev. E. W. Bedinger, D. D., of Louisville Presbytery, Rev. S. J. Foster of Memphis Presbytery, Rev. J. M. Batte of Chickasaw Presbytery, Rev. Frances Tappey of Tuscaloosa Presbytery.

Dismissals—Rev. C. A. Hyland to New Orleans Presbytery, Rev. D. McQueen to Ebenezer Presbytery and Rev. B. A. Pendleton to St. Louis Presbytery.

Mr. W. F. Trump was licensed to preach.

Commissioners to the General Assembly: Rev. K. A. Campbell, Rev. R. M. DuBose, Col. W. H. Denson and Mr. W. G. Montgomery. Alternates: Rev. F. B. Webb, D. D., Rev. J. S. Park, Mr. G. H. Smith and Mr. C. L. Odell.

Overture to Synod—The Presbytery of North Alabama hereby respectfully overtures the Synod of Alabama, (as it is the only Synod that owns an interest in both the Southwestern Presbyterian University and the Columbia Theological Seminary) to use its influence for the consolidation of these institutions and their removal to a location more central to the Synods which control them.

Overture to the General Assembly: The Presbytery of North Alabama hereby respectfully overtures the General Assembly (for the guidance of church sessions in preparing their statistical reports for Presbytery) to define at what age baptized non-communicating members are to be dropped from the roll, if ever they are to be dropped while within the jurisdiction of the local church where they are enrolled.

Also the General Assembly is requested to use its episcopal authority in requiring Presbyteries to secure full and accurate reports from their churches touching the number of baptized non-communicants under their jurisdiction.

W. I. Sinnott, S. C.

The Presbytery of East Alabama met at Troy, April 15, 1903, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. R. J. McIlwain, after which it was constituted with prayer.

Organization—Rev. G. W. Patterson, D. D., was elected moderator and Messrs. W. M. Stakely and A. J. Stewart, Clerks. On account of the indisposition of Mr. Stewart, Mr. J. L. Dean was elected in his place.

Reports—Permanent committees on Home and Foreign missions, education for the ministry, Sabbath-schools, Sabbath observance, church and Christian education, History, Ministerial Relief and General Assembly Home Missions made favorable reports of the work committed to their hands.

Commissioners—The Rev. G. W. Patterson, D. D., was elected principal ministerial commissioner to the General Assembly and the Rev. E. L. Hill, alternate. Ruling Elder A. J. Stewart of Alexander City was chosen principal and D. C. Carmichael, of Dalton, alternate commissioners from the eldership.

Presbyterial Sermon—Rev. R. B. Morrow was appointed to preach the presbyterial sermon at the next regular meeting on the subject of "Family Religion."

Evangelistic—Rev. T. J. Ponder was clothed with evangelistic powers to organize a church at Ross Chapel; Rev. R. B. Morrow to receive members in destitute places in Randolph county and Rev. J. A. Hall to receive members at Tallassee; and on their election of officers to ordain and install them.

Commissioners—A commission reported the organization of a church at Downs of eleven members. Commissions were also appointed to receive Rev. R. L. Bell and install him pastor of Dothan, Ozark and Elba churches; ordain licentiate E. M. Stewart and install him pastor of Hayneville and Lowndesboro churches and organize a church at Highland Park, a suburb of Montgomery.

Stated Supply—Permission was given Phalnix City Church to employ Rev. G. A. Hongh, of Macon Presbytery as stated supply for all his time until the next meeting of Presbytery.

Education—The claim of the colleges for men and women in Alabama were presented in the report on Church and Christian Education. The new president of the Alabama Synodical College for Women at Talladega, Rev. T. P. Walton, was present and addressed the Presbytery in behalf of that institution.

Time and Place of Next Meeting—Lebanon Church was chosen as the place and October 27th., 1903, at 7 p. m., as the time of the fall meeting.

Calls—Calls from Verbena and Pine Flat Churches for the pastoral service of Rev. T. J. Ponder were received and placed in his hands; and he was allowed to hold them until the next meeting of Presbytery. Tnskegee, Lanett, Roanoke and West Point were permitted to employ the Rev. R. B. Morrow as stated supply for the next six months.

After tendering a vote of thanks to the people of Troy for their liberal hospitality, the Presbytery adjourned with singing and prayer.

Stated Clerk.

VIRGINIA.

The Presbytery of Norfolk met at Belle Haven, Va., April 14th, at 8 p. m.

In the absence of the retiring moderator, Rev. W. J. King, the opening sermon was preached by Rev. J. N. H. Summerell, D. D.

There were present 17 ministers and 9 ruling elders.

Rev. Arnold Hall was elected moderator and Rev. A. C. Hopkins, Jr., and Rev. J. B. Waller, temporary clerks.

Public worship was held at 11 a. m., and 8 p. m. each day with strong sermons by members of Presbytery.

Stirring meetings were held in the interest of Foreign and Home Missions.

Reports on the various causes of the Assembly were made and each enlisted the interest of Presbytery.

Definite amounts for all the Assembly's causes were ordered to be apportioned among the churches.

The executive and permanent committees were revised.

Chaplain R. E. Steele, a member of Presbytery, gave a deeply interesting account of his work among seamen in the navy and on merchant ships.

Rev. W. M. Thompson, of Brazil, gave a vivid presentation of mission work in the great field in which he labors.

It was made a permanent order that the committee on minutes of the General Assembly shall consist of the commissioners to the last Assembly.

It was ordered that a correspondent of the Home Missions committee be appointed in each church.

An overture asking if sessions may use funds for other causes of the church than those for which the funds were contributed, was answered in the negative.

The presbyterial sermon was preached by Rev. E. T. Wellford, subject: "Sabbath Observance."

The report on the narrative was made by the chairman, Rev. Arnold Hall, and reveals devotion and activity throughout the churches.

The first annual report of the Woman's Foreign Mission union was received and presents a flattering outlook for that department of the church's work.

Presbytery requested that Dr. Bishop, Professor in William and Mary College, continue his efficient services as supply of the Port Norfolk Church.

Rev. A. S. Venable presented a report on the twentieth century fund and Presbytery appointed Dr. S. K. Winn as agent for raising this fund.

A scholarship in Fairfax College was accepted by Presbytery with expression of thanks.

The Suffolk and Onancock Churches were given authority to solicit funds from our congregations for church buildings.

Presbytery voted "yes" on the Assembly's overture relative to the Latin Thesis.

Rev. Dr. Summerell was appointed to preach the presbyterial sermon at the fall meeting. Subject: "Christian Giving."

Reports on Sunday-schools and Young People's Societies indicate great activity in behalf of the children and youth of the church.

Rev. C. E. Bishop, D. D., was chosen as moderator of the fall meeting.

The following were elected commissioners to the General Assembly.

Principals—Rev. J. Earnest Thacker, Ph. D., Norfolk, Va., Rev. W. J. King, Williamsburg, Va. E. R. Barksdale, Portsmouth, Va., F. D. Pinkerton, Norfolk, Va.

Alternates—Rev. E. R. Steele, Hampton, Va., Rev. A. R. Shaw, Portsmouth, Va., F. E. Nottingham, Norfolk, Va., W. E. Thomas, Newport News, Va.

In the department of Home Missions twelve hundred dollars was apportioned for presbyterial work. All the 25 churches of Presbytery were reported as supplied with regular preaching and pastoral ministrations.

After a delightful welcome to the homes of Belle Haven on the hospitable Eastern Shore, Presbytery adjourned to meet at the Gloucester church, Oct. 6th, at 8 p. m.

E. B. McCluer, S. C.

NORTH CAROLINA.

SPARTA.—Mr. J. H. Carson of Charlotte, formerly of Alleghany county, offered to give the money for a church at Sparta, in that county, costing not less than $800 if the Presbytery would agree to build a manse costing an equal sum. Rev. W. A. Murray has just finished the canvass of the Orange Presbytery for that amount. The canvass was successful, and the building of both church and manse will proceed at once. This is an example of liberality which we wish others could follow, and it is the kind of liberality that duplicates itself.

GREENVILLE.—By order of Albemarle Presbytery, Rev. F. G. Hartman was installed pastor of the congregation at Greenville, N. C., on Monday, April 27, at 8 p. m. A good and deeply attentive congregation assembled. Dr. W. D. Morton presided and propounded the constitutional questions and delivered charges to pastor and people. Rev. James Thomas, of Wilson, preached the sermon. The Greenville congregation is much encouraged to have a pastor, and gave to him a cordial greeting.

The most important action of Albemarle Presbytery at its last meeting in Kinston was the Forward movement for Home Missions. While there is much to encourage us in the Home Mission work, and while we have invaded and organized churches in four new counties since our district organization as a Presbytery, our progress is in reality very slow. We must have a large increase of men and of money or our thirteen counties now destitute of Presbyterian Churches and preachers will not be supplied in this generation.

One of our most valuable and consecrated elders suggested and led in warm advocacy of a "Forward Movement" and it was unanimously resolved to enter upon it. The object is to explore our neglected territory; to place travelling and local evangelists in the field; and to assist feeble congregations in erecting churches. The first step is to raise several thousand dollars beyond and additional to the Home Mission contributions already provided for.

All of the pastors, evangelists, church sessions and communicants of the Presbytery are urged to contribute, canvass and co-operate. A canvass of the congregations by various ministers was decided on, and it is sincerely hoped and expected that a new era in Home Mission progress is to dawn upon our Presbytery now.

The prayers and sympathies of the Standard and of its readers are earnestly invoked in this our effort to reach hundreds of thousands within our bounds who have never heard the Gospel from the lips of a Presbyterian minister.

W. D. Morton,

Treas. Home Miss. Albemarle Presbytery.

HIGH POINT.—Rev. A. S. Caldwell, who has resigned this pastorate, preached his closing sermon April 17th, to a large and appreciative congregation, the other churches in the little city joining in the services.

During Mr. Caldwell's pastorate of two years, ninety new members were received into the church, and the handsome new church building was erected. Also the Snow Memorial Church has been organized, with a membership of forty-five, and a manse valued at $2,000 has been built. Mr. Caldwell will live at Barium Springs.

GILWOOD CHURCH.—On the 5th Sabbath in March we had a quarterly communion with preaching on Saturday before. There were five young people united with the church on profession of this faith; and there would have been several others by letter and profession, but for the exceedingly disagreeable weather.

They will unite with us at an early day. This makes a total of seven additions to this church since the present pastorate began last August; and the outlook is very bright.

RED SPRINGS.—The program for commencement exercises of Red Springs Seminary is this:

Baccalaureate sermon, Sunday, May 17th, Rev. J. M. Wells, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Wilmington, N. C., Monday, 8:30 p. m. Senior Class Day exercises; Tuesday 11 a. m., meeting of the Board of Trustees, 1 p. m. Alumnae dinner, 4 p. m. Art Exhibit and Reception, 8:30 p. m. Annual Concert.

We are most happy to announce that on Wednesday at 11 a. m. Governor Aycock will deliver the Commencement address and many of his admirers will have an opportunity of hearing the Governor at his best. Special rates will be arranged on all railroads.

It is expected that the fine pipe organ being built for the Seminary by John Brown of Wilmington, Del., will be installed in time for Commencement and our friends will have the pleasure of listening to the splendid instrument.

We had our spring communion at Poplar Tent on last Sabbath. We had eight persons to unite with the church. Rev. J. M. Grier and Rev. J. C. Kennedy did the preaching.

Our spring communion was at Sherers on the 3rd Sabbath of April. Preaching on Friday and Saturday before. We had one to unite with the church and eight infants baptized.

BETHPAGE CHURCH.—On April 26th we had our regular communion with preaching Saturday and Sunday by Rev. W. W. Pharr, D. D., of Mooresville. There were four children of the covenant admitted to the communion on profession of faith; making a total of eleven since the present pastorate began last August.

Dr. Pharr was pastor of this church for twenty-seven years, and the old people whom he baptized, received into the church and married, heard him gladly. "His bow still abides in strength," he enjoys a vigorous old manhood, and preaches with great force.

A. J. Crane, Pastor.

TOPSAIL SOUND.—We closed Sunday a splendid meeting at Topsail Sound, Pender county. More than seventy professions. Thirty-six were added to the Presbyterian church. A Sunday-school with 60 pupils, and 12 teachers was organized.

About $30 were raised for the Sunday-school, and Synodical Missions. The whole church was revived, and is now moving forward heartily in the work of the Lord.

Rev. William Black lead the meeting, and preached with great power.

T. H. Isler.

Peace Institute Commencement.

RALEIGH.—On Sunday, May 17, Rev. E. W. Smith, D. D., Greensboro, will preach the baccalaureate sermon.

On Monday evening the 18th, a lecture will be delivered by Rev. Frank Stringfellow, D. D., chief of Scouts of General Lee's army, on Scout Life in the Confederacy.

Tuesday night—Grand concert; Wednesday morning, at 10 a. m., commencement exercises, delivering diplomas and reading distinctions. At 11 a. m. annual oration by Rev. Frank Stringfellow, D. D.

GEORGIA.

BARNESVILLE.—At a regularly called meeting of the church held here last Sunday, Dr. John A. Corry was elected to the office of deacon for this church. Dr. Corry, who is one of our most prominent young Georgia physicians, and whose reputation is by no means bounded by the limits of his town and county, will make us a most efficient officer. He will be installed, the way being clear, Sunday night, May 3rd, prox.

Rev. R. H. Morris, the minister, has been asked to preach the Commencement sermon for the North Georgia Agricultural and Military College, at Dahlonga, on the first Sunday in June.

Mr. Morris delivered the Memorial address at Forsyth this year, and in so doing took occasion to preach a little sermon from the text "Love your enemies," endeavoring to show that it is at variance with the spirit of the Master to be harboring enmity against men, even though they have "despitefully used" us. A very large audience was present, and the oration was well received, as was evinced by the bursts of applause which several times interrupted the speaker.

The people of Barnesville, who are proud of Gordon Institute, our Military School, are expecting to have Dr. Lindsay, of the First Presbyterian Church, Ocala, Fla., to preach the commencement sermon this year, on Sunday, June 14. As people from all over the state are present at our commencements, the Presbyterians at Barnesville feel honored that a young Presbyterian minister should be chosen to preach the sermon for them. The congregation which assembles in the vast auditorium at such times is made up of 1500 or 2,000 of the most cultured people in the South.

FORSYTH.—At our last regular Sabbath service, five new members asked to be received into the church on a profession of faith, and one by letter. As soon as the Presbyterian University is established in Atlanta, Presbyterianism will take on a growth in this part of Georgia which it has never dreamed of before. The fields are white unto the harvest, in a sense, and the university will be a vast reaper to help do the work of gathering in the sheaves for the Lord.

CLIMAX GROUP.—After my arrival here, three months ago, it was found necessary to build a manse—the churches took hold of the matter with a great deal of the interest—and we have now in sight about $800, the work on the manse is progressing, and we hope soon to have it completed, and be settled in our new home.

There have been four additions to the churches on profession of faith and four on certificate.

We have been most kindly received by the people, and there is a good outlook for our church, in this field.

FLORIDA.

ST. PETERSBURG.—Sabbath, April 19th was the second anniversary of my pastorate here. It has been a most successful year in every way and our prospects are very flattering for a strong church here in the near future. The church is well organized, thoroughly alive, united and deeply pious. We had special anniversary sermons morning and evening (all members can't come to one service), and on Wednesday morning our annual reports. Our membership is 62, Sabbath-school 67. Contributions for all causes this year, $1,904—an average of $30.70 per member. Two years ago we had 23 members, no Sabbath-school and gave, to church causes, $10; salary, $200; in all $210—an average of $9.10 a member. This year we gave $134 to causes. On the last day of March we cancelled the mortgage on our church, of about $1,200. This leaves us free from debt.

Our church building is a handsome two-room frame building, costing about $3,500 and is handsomely furnished with modern pews of Florida cypress.

The Presbytery of Florida met in Florida, Ala., April 7, 1903, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. J. W. Lafferty, the retiring moderator, on Matthew 6-10.

There were present ten ministers and nine ruling elders.

Ruling Elder Wm. Fisher of Pensacola was elected moderator, and Ruling Elder D. K. Gillis of De Funiak Springs, temporary clerk.

Received—Rev. J. F. Ford was received from the Mobile Presbytery.

The pastoral relation between Rev. S. L. McCarty and the Tallahassee Church was dissolved, and Brother McCarty was dismissed to the Macon Presbytery to take charge of the Thomasville Church to which he had been called.

Rev. Lynn R. Walker and Ruling Elder Wm. Fisher of Pensacola, Fla., were chosen principal, and Rev. R. Q. Baker of Argyle, Fla., and Ruling Elder W. C. McLauchlin of Florida, Fla., alternate commissioners to the General Assembly.

Sunday-school Institute was held during the sessions of Presbytery, when several addresses were made and prayers offered for God's blessing on this cause.

The reports from the churches indicate some encouraging and some discouraging features.

The interest manifested in the benevolent causes of the church and especially in that of Foreign Missions is cheering; the very general neglect of family religion and lax views of the observance of the Sabbath are discouraging.

Most of our churches have enjoyed the regular ministrations of the Word.

This Presbytery has given its consent to striking out the Latin Thesis from the parts of trial for licensure.

The cause of Ministerial Relief was considered and the sessions of our churches were urged to appoint a committee in each church to gather subscriptions according to the plan of the Assembly.

The next regular meeting will be held in Madison, Fla., on Saturday, Nov. 14, 1903, 7:30 o'clock, p. m.

Thornwell Orphanage.

All visitors to the Thornwell Orphanage at this season of the year are much pleased with the general appearance of the "campus" of about twenty-five acres on which are located the twenty or more buildings of the institution. The native forest growth has been preserved and towns folk on visiting us, often remark "How pleasant it is to get into the country." The trees are grown, flowers are blooming, birds are singing and the children are just as happy as birds and as lovable as flowers. Yes, even more so; because of the 200 here with us, 116 are children of the King (members of His church) and trying to be faithful, while the rest, mostly too young yet to make the great choice, are following in the foot steps of the older. Why should they not be happy,—they have loving matrons and teachers, are taught, watched over, prayed with and prayed for, and are most strangely provided for by the hand of the loving God. Each day they find their daily bread provided for and all other things that are needed. To-day letters came, one from Ocala, Fla., the other from St. Joseph, Mo., each offering to care for a little child and to send for that purpose $5 monthly, while two other letters, one from Yorkville, S. C., and the others from Nashville, Tenn., each enclosed the $60 needed for a year's support. So God brings together the love of friends scattered afar off to the care of His little ones here.

Never in anything, was the hand of God more clearly shown, than in the wonderful way in which he makes provision for these, His fatherless ones. It has been so from the beginning; it is still so. If He withheld his hand, very quickly all this world would come to naught. They rejoice that in some wonderful way they are under the care of the Great King; hence the happy hearts and the bright smiles and the busy work and the ready hands.

Still give us your prayers, dear friend, and send your help usual to Rev. W. P. Jacobs, Clinton, S. C.

Charleston Presbytery met at Beech Island on April 14th, and was opened with a sermon by the moderator, Rev. F. D. Jones.

Rev. Alexander Martin, Summerville, and Mr. J. Sam'l Perry, Charleston, were made alternates.

Rev. W. H. Mills was received from Harmony Presbytery.

Presbytery declined to make the change in the Book of Church Order, touching the Latin Thesis.

Summerville was chosen as the place for next meeting and October 6th, as the time.

A new manual was adopted.

Presbytery adjourned to meet in the Lecture Room of the First Church, Columbia, S. C., on the second Wednesday in May at 12 m.

Stated Clerk.

Harmony Presbytery met at Summerton Church, April 8th, and continued its session about two days. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. James McDowell.

Twelve ministers and 21 ruling elders were present.

Rev. J. E. Stevenson was elected moderator and Elder J. E. McCutchen, reading clerk.

Reports were received from nearly all of our 4 churches, and they were generally encouraging.

A committee was appointed to revise the Manual of Presbytery.

Elder D. E. Gordon was elected trustee of Davidson College to fill out the unexpired term of Mr. A. White, deceased.

Rev. F. W. Gregg, A. M. McNaull and Elder James Reaves were elected trustees of the Presbyterian College of South Carolina to serve for one year.

Rev. J. C. Bailey and Elder J. E. McCutchen were elected principal commissioners to the General Assembly. Alternates, Rev. A. M. McNaull and Elder I. W. Bradley.

Dr. H. C. DuBose was present and delivered a very instructive address to a large congregation on Foreign Mission Work in China.

The weather was all that could be desired, the meeting was quite harmonious, the preaching was of a high order, and the hospitality of the good people of Summerton was abundant and cordial.

VIRGINIA.

The Presbytery of Abingdon had its regular spring meeting in Central Church, Bristol, Va., April 21-25, 1903.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. G. B. Harahan, the retiring moderator.

Rev. D. W. Hollingsworth was elected moderator, and Rev. S. W. Moore, and Rev. G. B. Harahan, were chosen temporary clerks.

The pastoral relation existing between Rev. R. B. Hudson and the Bearer Creek Church, and between Rev. O. M. Gordon, and the Walnut Grove Church were dissolved.

Rev. R. B. Hudson was allowed to accept calls of Sharon, Leyburn, and Bland Churches, and Rev. S. O. Hall was allowed to accept the call of Burke's Garden Church for one-fourth of his time, and arrangements were made for their installation.

Rev. C. M. Gordon was dismissed to Holston Presbytery.

The Presbytery declined to transfer candidate Jos. R. Sevier to Montgomery Presbytery, because it wanted him to labor in our own territory.

The reports of the Presbytery to the Assembly showed that progress had been made during the year.

The Home Mission committee reported a successful year, and the committee was instructed to secure and put into the field a suitable man who shall be the superintendent of Home Missions to give his whole time to this growing work of the Presbytery.

The report of the committee on Twentieth Century Fund showed that about $9,500 has been raised during the year for the purchase of Stonewall Jackson Institute, and that there is a lack of about $1,500 in order to purchase that property. A determined effort will be made at once to secure this amount.

River View was chosen the place of the next stated meeting and September 30, 1903, at 7 p. m., the time.

And adjourned meeting will be held in Bristol, Va., May 19, 1903, at 3 p. m.

Foreign Mission Receipts for April.

Our receipts for April were $13,494.77 a gain of $4,735.44 over those of last April. As in the case of our annual receipts, the principal part of this gain comes from the churches who have entered the Forward Movement. We take it as a good omen for the new ecclesiastical year.

S. H. Chester, Secretary.

Children's Foreign Missionary Day.

A Children's Foreign Missionary Day Exercise has been prepared for the use of Sabbath-schools on the Children's Day recommended by the General Assembly. Sunday, May 31st, is suggested as the day to be observed.

The Missionary Exercise is ready and all Sabbath-schools are asked to send requests at once for such numbers as may be desired. They are furnished free by the Executive committee. It is believed that the contents and arrangement of the Exercise are such that its use will greatly assist in arousing interest in the observance of Children's Day and in the cause of Foreign Missions among the young people in our Churches.

Requests for the Missionary Exercise should be addressed to Publication Department, Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, Chamber of Commerce Building, Nashville, Tenn.

General Assembly.

To Commissioners and others who will attend the General Assembly at Lexington, Va., May 21, 1903:

The Railroads of the Southeastern Passenger Association, together with the Seaboard Air Line and the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway, have agreed that all persons in the territory South of the Ohio and Potomac and West of the Mississippi Rivers attending the General Assembly shall be granted a reduction in their return fare by the route traveled in going. The return rate will be one-third the first-class limited fare, plus 25 cents. Tickets for the return journey will be sold at this rate only to persons holding certificates of the standard form, procured when you purchase your ticket going signed with ink by the Stated Clerk of the Assembly and visited by Mr. S. O. Campbell, at the City Ticket Office of the C. and O. Railway, Lexington, Va. No certificate will be honored for reduced fare returning which was procured before May 18th, or after May 23rd, or which shall be presented after June 5th. No refund of fare can be expected because of failure to secure proper certificate, nor will a mere receipt for fare be accepted in lieu of these certificates. Certificates will not be honored by conductors. They must be presented to the ticket agent at Lexington. You would do well to see your local agents in ample time for them to procure for you through tickets and certificates when you require them, if they do not have them on hand. If tickets and certificates cannot be procured at minor offices, apply in time at the nearest important station. Certificates and return tickets are non-transferable, and the latter are limited to continuous passage by first train leaving Lexington after purchase. Certificates will be of no value where less than 75 cents is paid for the going passage.

If a through ticket cannot be procured at starting point, purchase to the most convenient point at which such ticket can be obtained, and there re-purchase through to Lexington, procuring a standard certificate from each agent from whom a ticket is purchased, and presenting all of the certificates to the clerk and Mr. Campbell at Lexington. Fuller information will be sent by the stated clerk to all parties requesting it.

Dedication Ceremonies Louisiana Purchase Exposition.

The one hundredth anniversary of the acquisition of the Louisiana Territory was commemorated by the formal Dedication of the "Louisiana Purchase Exposition" at St. Louis April 30th—the anniversary of the purchase—and May 1 and 2, 1903. For this event special and elaborate preparations had been made not only by the Exposition Company, but by the city and by many citizens as well, for the reception and entertainment of the many visitors—distinguished and others—who expected to be present. These expectations were fully met, and the city was filled as never before with vast throngs of people from all parts of our own land and from many lands beyond the seas.

Besides the Dedication proper there have been other things to interest and attract during the week: First: The arrival of the United States Monitor, Arkansas, as representative of the Navy: she is by far the most formidable vessel of war ever seen in these inland waters, and has been the centre of attraction for thousands as she lies at anchor in mid-stream just below the Eads Bridge.

The Military Parade was arranged for the first day, Thursday, and was carried out according to program. There were some 15,000 soldiers in line and they were near two hours passing a given point. The pageant was one of the largest, most attractive and brilliant ever witnessed in this country, and seldom in our history has so large a body of soldiers been assembled in one place and marched in one procession, never before I believe in time of peace.

The Dedication was carried out according to the following program, in the Liberal Arts Building, one of the largest on the Exposition grounds and with a seating capacity of 25,000 or 30,000 people.

Promptly at two o'clock the assembly was called to order by Hon. David R. Francis, President of the Exposition Company. The ceremonies were as follows:

First—Invocation by his eminence, James Cardinal Gibbons.

Second—Introduction of Hon. Thomas H. Carter, of the National Commission, President of the Day.

Third—Chorus, Creation Hymn—Beethoven.

Fourth Presentation of the Buildings, by Hon. David R. Francis, President of the Exposition Company.

Fifth—Dedication address by the President of the United States.

Sixth—Chorus, "Unfold, Ye Portals"—Gounod.

Seventh—Address by Hon. Grover Cleveland.

Eighth—Hymn, "America," by chorus, band and audience, standing.

Ninth—Prayer by Bishop E. R. Hendrix.

Tenth—Benediction by Rt. Rev. Henry C. Potter.

Eleventh—Centennial salute of one hundred guns.

Of these exercises, besides giving a synopsis of the two addresses, little can be said: The choruses were a notable feature, being rendered by 2,000 voices accompanied by a fine band: these could be heard by everyone present and were greatly enjoyed.

Ex-President Cleveland, "the foremost private citizen of the United States" as he was described when being introduced by President Carter, was received with almost or quite as much enthusiasm and prolonged applause as was the President himself; and which of the two was better pleased at the ovation tendered him it would be hard to tell—both seemed immensely pleased.

The President's Speech—An evening paper summarized it thus and not inaptly, "President praises policy of Expansion, Louisiana Purchase, he declares, made a great expanding Nation out of a small and stationary one, and furnished the world a new precedent." He began by reminding his hearers that "the soil upon which he stood, before it was ours, was successively the possession of two mighty empires, Spain and France," and that we owe much to the courage and patience of those early pioneers, soldiers, missionaries, and traders. Then he said, and in this really announced his subject:

"We have met here to-day to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the event which more than any other, after the foundation of the government and always expecting its preservation, determined the character of our national life—determined that we should be a great expanding nation instead of relatively a small and stationary one."

And by this act, this acquisition of "Louisiana" from France, he declared "we had taken our place among those daring and hardy nations who risk much with the hope and desire of winning high position among the great powers of the earth." This was the greatest work of our people during the first 75 years of our history as a nation; and though there were other things of moment and importance "the greatest feat of our forefathers of those generations was the deed of the men who with pack train or wagon train, on horseback, on foot, or by boat upon the waters, pushed the frontier ever westward across the continent."

Then at some length he showed how our fathers had been called, "with little encouraging precedent," to solve two very difficult problems, one to secure both freedom and strength in the government, the other to expand without either breaking up—as did Greece—or becoming a centralized tyranny—as Rome did: and how they did in fact solve both satisfactorily for the first time in the world's history. And this example has been followed since by all the great peoples capable both of expansion and self-government. And he concluded with:

"The old days were great because the men who lived in them had mighty qualities; and we must make the new days great by showing these same qualities. We must insist upon courage and resolution, upon hardihood, tenacity, and fertility in resource; we must insist upon the strong virile virtues; and we must insist no less upon the virtues of self-restraint, self-mastery, regard for the rights of others; we must show our abhorrence of cruelty, brutality, and corruption, in public and in private life alike. If we come short in any of these qualities we shall measurably fail; and if, as I believe we surely shall, we develop these qualities in the future to an even greater degree than in the past, then in the century now beginning we shall make of this Republic the freest and most orderly, the most just and most mighty nation which has ever come forth from the womb of time."

The speech of Ex-President Cleveland was in some respects on a higher plane than that of the President, at least in this that he acknowledged and emphasized God's Providence in our growth as a nation as well as in all our greatness. The same evening paper summed up this address in these words: "Cleveland sees the hand of God in the purchase of Louisiana. Former President points out Jefferson's scruples as to treaty, and Bonaparte's unexpected necessities, which made the splendid territory ours." The following paragraphs are perhaps the most significant and interesting and will show the general tenor of his speech. He began:

"The impressiveness of this occasion is greatly enhanced by reason of an atmosphere of prophecy's fulfillment which surrounds it. The thought is in our minds that we are amid awe-inspiring surroundings, where we may see and feel things foretold a century ago. We are here in recognition of the one hundredth anniversary of an event which doubled the area of the young American nation, and dedicated a new and wide domain to American progress and achievement. The treaty whose completion we today commemorate was itself a prophecy of our youthful nation's mighty growth and development. At its birth prophets in waiting joyously foretold the happiness which its future promised."

Towards the close he said:

"In conclusion I hope I may be permitted to suggest that our thoughts and surroundings on this occasion should lead us to humble recognition of the providence of God in all that has made us a great nation. From our beginning as a people our course has been marked by occurrences and incidents so striking, so significant, and so constant, that only superstitious dullness or intellectual blindness will place them to the credit of luck or chance.

And his last word was:

"We are all proud of our American citizenship. Let us leave this place with this feeling stimulated by the sentiments born of the occasion. Let us appreciate more keenly than ever how vitally necessary it is to our country's well that every one within its citizenship should be clean-minded in political aim and aspiration, sincere and honest in his conception of our country's mission, and aroused to higher and more responsive patriotism by the reflection that it is a solemn thing to belong to a people favored of God.

The Household.

Grateful for Common Mercies.

By Emma C. Dowd.

I had been shopping one cold winter afternoon, and stopped to call on an old lady, whose humble little home was on my road. She met me at the door, her face eager and smiling.

"I'm so glad to see you," she said, as she led me into her cozy sitting room. "This is the finishing touch to my happy day."

"What has happened?" I asked. "I knew there was something, the moment I saw you."

"Oh, I have had such a beautiful day!" said she, making me comfortable in a low rocker beside the stove, and seating herself with a sigh of contentment, "such a beautiful day!"

"What is it?" I urged. "Has a fortune been left you?"

"I feel as if I had two or three fortunes—or half a dozen," she answered, with a happy, little laugh. "I will tell you all about it; I had been wishing I had somebody to tell—there, put your feet right up on that fender, and get them warm. To begin with, things seemed different when I first woke up. You see, I had a good night; and didn't feel tired to start with, as I do sometimes. Then the sun shone so clear that my rooms were lighter than usual. I don't get much sunshine in here this time of year, but when it streams in early in the morning, it always makes a difference with my spirits. I do not suppose it ought to, but I know it does.

"The postman comes while I am doing up my breakfast dishes, unless I am unusually early. I do not have many letters, but Wednesday is the day for my paper, so I knew he would stop this morning. He leaves it on the stairs, and I go down after it. I heard the door shut, and looked to see if it had come, and if there were not two letters on top of it! I guess it did not take me long to go down and back. I had been expecting a letter from a man that owed me a couple of dollars, but it had gone on and on, till I had about given it up and here they were, two spick and span new dollar bills. If I wasn't glad to see those, for it just made my last month's rent, and I had been afraid I would have to let it go over, and I cannot bear to do that.

"The other letter almost took my breath away! It was from a lady I used to know in Montvert, and she stops here once in a while on her way up or down from New York; so she knew I crocheted silk mittens, and—what do you think? she sent me an order for a dozen pairs. They are for a fair at her church, and she has told me long enough beforehand so that I will have plenty of time to do them. Isn't it lovely of her? I thought I had enough for one day, but the nice things have kept coming right along ever since. I never saw anything like it.

"It has been a beautiful day. My grocery man comes in every Wednesday to take an order. I don't always want anything; but he is real good to stop and see if I do, for I cannot get out much this weather. Well, I was saying something about a certain kind of candles that I used to get at another store; but he does not keep them. I like them better than any other kind, because they last longer and don't drip. I didn't suppose that he would want to get them for me, so I did not ask him to. But if that man didn't go and bring them up with the other things this afternoon! He is so kind! Then he brought me some home-made rye bread. I said this morning that if I felt able to bake, I should buy some rye flour and bake some bread, and he said he could get me some that was real home-made. I told him I would like to try it, and oh, it is delicious! I had to go and cut off a piece, it looked so good. You wait a minute, and I will bring you a slice. I know you will like it."

In a twinkling my hostess returned, and I soon found myself eating rye bread and butter from a china plate that would have enraptured a curio-lover, while a century old embroidered napkin was spread in my lap. Meantime the story of the day was resumed:

"Then, another thing, I ordered some washing powder. It wasn't the kind I usually buy; they were out of that. But the man said that this was just as good, and the same price. So I let him bring it. When I went to put it away, I looked to see if it was used any differently, and it said that in every package was a cake of toilet soap. I could hardly believe it, but, sure enough; there it was. I had been wanting some soap to wash my hands with, but I did not feel as if I could spare the money for it just now; so, I tell you, I was glad to get that nice little cake.

"And, as if all those things were not enough, I had another letter this afternoon from a friend out West, that I had not heard from in ever so long. I was afraid she was sick, or a letter was lost, or something; but she had been to California to see her son, and that was the reason I hadn't heard. It was a nice long letter, and I was so glad to hear Oh, it has been such a beautiful day! If I never have another so good, I shall always have this one to think of, and that will be something. I like to have pleasant things to remember, don't you?

"Yes, this has been a beautiful, beautiful day!" and she closed her eyes for a moment, while a smile of contentment played over her face.

As I walked home, I wondered how many of us would have summed up these few, common occurrences into a "beautiful day." Only the refreshment that follows a night of rest, the sunshine, the tardy payment of a small debt, an order for work, a loaf of bread, some candles, a cake of soap, friendly letter! But they were enough to make for one lonely woman a day always to be remembered as "beautiful"—New York Observer.

The House-keeper's Estimate or Time.

By Ellen Conway.

"We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths," wrote the friends of our sentimental youth in our autograph albums and if their memories served them a little further they added, "We should count time by heart throbs." An odd way of counting time that, to the practical housekeeper in the midst of active life! She counts time in the spring by cleaned closets and moth balls; in the summer by piles of new guimpes and trunks packed for outings; in the fall by jars and glasses stored in the preserve closet; in the winter by bargains at all manner of Monday sales. "Heart throbs" do not figure on her schedule except as unavoidable interruptions.

And yet, in spite of all this concentration of energy and interest, perhaps no set of workers are so dissatisfied with their success. The professional housekeeper, of course, is able to take the average amount of comfort in her accomplishment. But the woman who combines the offices of housekeeper, mother and wife rarely attains even a reasonable and modest degree of content with herself and her achievements. She complains that her days are spent in tithing mint and anise and cumin; she struggles against the neglect of the weightier matters and yet feels that she neglects them still; she visits with her intensest scorn the man—it must have been a man—who said that duties never conflict. They conflict all the time.

Part of these perplexities will yield to simple, practical remedies. One housewife's conscience tells her that procrastination is the thief of her time; another is at fault in the management of money, and so cannot relieve herself by as much outside help as the family income really warrants; a third needs more "system" and a fourth needs less; the fifth should give more attention to her health, with a view to returns in energy and good cheer.

But it is in discriminating between the important and the unimportant that the real solution of the problem lies for the housekeeper, as for all the other busy people who are bewildered by glimpses of the ideal in the midst of the bustle of the actual. It is true, the quaint, old line. We should count time by "heart throbs," estimate it by the experiences which are really of abiding significance. It is too precious a possession to be reckoned in terms of material things. Time is money, but it is more than money, and neither time nor money is of lasting worth except as it is transmuted into beauty and joy and holiness and love.

Counting time thus, the housekeeper would make room for things that are crowded out now, or done with a guilty sense as of stolen pleasure. The five minutes snatched from the sewing machine to watch the child at play with his new sled would not seem wasted then. Tested by the new standard, those might be the best spent moments of the whole day. Lingering out of doors to enjoy a sunset or a cloud effect may be the thriftiest use to make of time, if one will estimate it in terms of spiritual refreshment and invigoration. The woman who lets her washing lie in the tubs, and calmly takes the street cars for the beach to see the great waves roll in, sets her conscience by a truer timepiece than her neighbors who stay behind and lament that the big storm did not hold off till the middle of the week.

The crises of life correct our common estimates of value. The little child is sick. We do not mourn because his nursery went untidy and his clothes were not of the latest mode. It is the little, unheeded requests for sympathy and companionship that memory brings back in a flood to overwhelm us. Our friend is in bitter grief. We do not regret that she found an undusted parlor when last she called, but we are cut to the quick to remember that we gave her only absent-minded attention for thinking of the peaches waiting to be put up. Instinctively we are counting time by "heart-throbs" now. The habit ought to go down with us into the level routine of ordinary days.

MRS. McDONALD, No. 477 Beaubien Street, Detroit, Mich., is a prominent woman who was greatly benefited by the great woman's medicine, Wine of Cardui. Mrs. McDonald is the supreme deputy of the Maccabees of the World, and one of the most widely known women in the United States. Thousands of women gather to hear her lecture everywhere she goes. The great work she has done for the Maccabees is appreciated by every member of the order. She was so absorbed in her work that she neglected to give her health proper care—failed to take warning that the symptoms of approaching kidney trouble gave her, the sallow complexion and torpid liver. But Wine of Cardui cured her the same as it has cured thousands of others and Mrs. McDonald has written this letter in order that other suffering women may secure from Wine of Cardui the same relief she got from it.

"For four years I suffered with torpid liver until my skin looked yellow and dull. I then found my kidneys were affected and had severe pains across my back, and I felt that I must do something to regain my health. A friend advocated your Wine of Cardui treatment so strongly that I decided to try it, although I had little faith in patent medicines. I am now very thankful that I did so, for within ten days blessed relief came to me, and in less than three months I was cured, and have enjoyed fine health ever since. I know there is nothing better for a sick woman who wishes to enjoy perfect health and am very pleased to give my hearty endorsement."

No suffering woman can afford to ignore such a letter as Mrs. McDonald writes. Her plans and advice have proved valuable in building up one of the greatest women's organizations in the United States and she takes time to give advice which she knows will help you.

Do not delay in securing this medicine. There is nothing to gain and everything to lose by delay. The choice is before you. Will or will you not secure relief now by taking Wine of Cardui? All druggists sell $1.00 bottles of Wine of Cardui as well as 25c packages of Theford's Black-Draught.

Commission—Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D., Rev. P. R. Law, Rev. L. Smith and Elders F. Smith and R. N. Prior were appointed a commission to go to Benson and organize a church there if the way be clear.

Latin Thesis—The overture of the General Assembly in the matter of the Latin Thesis was approved.

Commissioners—Rev. K. M. McIntyre and Rev. C. F. Rankin and Elders John Bluo and Hon. D. E. McIver were elected Commissioners to the General Assembly. Rev. W. R. Coppedge, Rev. H. Tucker

Graham and Elders alternates in the order named.

Next Meeting—Lumber Bridge was chosen as to place and October 6, 1903 the time for the next stated meeting. Ministerial Relief—The Executive committee on ministerial relief submitted its report in popular meeting. Addresses were made by Rev. P. R. Law. Ruling Elder J. M. McIver and Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D. The following important recommendation was adopted. That the sessions of churches be directed to appoint a committee of one or more to have oversight of this cause in their bounds and report the same at the earliest day practicable, with their post offices, to the chairman, Rev. P. R. Law.

Church Finance—The subject of Church Finances was considered in popular meeting and the following resolutions were adopted:

1. That it be enjoined upon the churches to use the pledge and envelope system.

2. That the stated clerk be directed to write to the churches and notify them of this action.

Foreign Missions—Rev. H. Tucker Graham read the report on Foreign Missions in popular meeting. Rev. D. Monroe and Rev. W. T. Walker made addresses on the subject to a large and attentive audience.

Church and Christian Education—Rev. P. R. Law read the report on Church and Christian Education. It showed that the enrollment at Davidson this year was 221 students being forty more than the enrollment last year and by far the largest in the history of the college. The new dormitory is up to the third story and the work of remodeling the commencement hall is going on with the expectation of having it ready for the next commencement. Over 40 candidates for the ministry are in the student body and eight of them made up their minds to preach since they entered college.

Red Springs Seminary was reported to be having the most prosperous year in its history. The enrollment showed 342 pupils. There has been no real need for a single girl to go to the infirmary this year. Twenty-seven teachers are employed. There are 114 students in the Collegiate department, 30 electives, 46 in the primary, 31 in the preparatory and 24 in the kindergarten. The States represented are New York, District of Columbia, Virginia, Tennessee, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and North Carolina. One hundred and twenty are from the bounds of Fayetteville Presbytery. The second wing of the new brick building has been erected. A central heating and an electric light plant has been put in. A fine pipe organ has been provided for the auditorium.

Donaldson-Davidson Academy was reported to be in a flourishing condition. It has now between 70 and 80 students. The future of the school promises to be prosperous.

The report was heard with keen interest and Rev. C. G. Vardell made an address on the condition, needs, and prospects of Red Springs Seminary that was heard with much pleasure and profit.

Ministerial Education—Rev. C. F.

Rankin, Chairman, read the report on ministerial education. The report showed that there are eleven candidates under the care of the Presbytery, 3 in theological schools, 6 at Davidson college, one in a preparatory school, and one teaching. Careful inquiry was made about the standing of the several candidates. The resolve to keep a proper oversight of their work and progress was apparent from the time given to the consideration of the subject. Action looking thereto was taken.

The Narrative—Rev. W. R. Coppedge read the narrative. It showed that reports from about three-fourths of the churches tell of a steady but slow advance in almost all departments. But family worship is sadly neglected in all the churches. Barring this sad note there are grounds upon the whole for encouragement.

Systematic Beneficence—Rev. L. Smith read the report on systematic beneficence. It showed contributions for Foreign Missions to have been $3,052.79. Assembly's Home Missions, $298.24, Local Home Missions, $2,908.57; Colored Evangelization, $147.34; Relief Fund, $207.11; Education, $1,434.95; Publication, $193.70; Bible Society, $107.48, making an aggregate of $8,350.18.

Home Missions—Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D., read the report on Presbyterial Home Missions in popular meeting. Rev. E. E. Gillespie made an address on Synodical Home Missions and Rev. P. R. Law read an address on General Assembly's Home Missions. Changes were made in the supplies of churches as follows: The Johnston county group is to be supplied by the chairman of the committee voting the modification that $300 be appropriated to the field provided a pending call is answered in the affirmative. Dunn is to be supplied by Rev. L. Smith and Philippi by Rev. J. A. Caligan. Haywood is to be supplied with services of Elder J. Alton McIver, Cypress by Rev. L. Smith, and Sharon, Wadeville, Pee Dee, Ellerbe Springs and Mt. Carmel is to be supplied under the direction of the chairman of the Home Mission committee.

Sabbath-schools—Rev. J. K. Roberts read the report on Sabbath-schools. It showed that there were 84 schools, an enrollment of 4,890 pupils and teachers, $1,950 was contributed for current expenses and $2,678 to all objects. A popular meeting was held in the interest of Sabbath-school work. Rev. J. K. Roberts, Rev. J. M. Rose, D. D., and Rev. C. G. Vardell made the addresses. The following resolutions were adopted:

1. That our sessions be urged to adopt as far as possible the plans by the Assembly's committee for the improvement of our Sunday-schools.

2. That special attention be given to teachers meetings and the Home Study department.

Presbyterian Standard—Mr. H. M. McAllister, Business Manager of the Presbyterian Standard, was present and made a brief and telling talk in behalf of the paper.

Installation—Calls from Big Rockfish and Hope Mills churches for Rev. D.

Monroe as pastor were placed in his hands and accepted by him. It was ordered that he be installed fifth Sabbath in May by Rev. D. Fairley, Rev. H. Tnecker Graham, and Elder J. H. Currie, with Rev. P. R. Law, Rev. V. G. Smith and Elder Neill McNeill, as alternates in the order named.

The meeting was a delightful one and the body never had more elegant entertainment at the hands of any folks than at the hands of the hospitable people of Sanford. A warm resolution of thanks was adopted and Presbytery adjourned to meet at Lumber Bridge in October.

P. R. Law, S. C.

Tennessee—

Presbytery of Memphis met at Alabama St. Church, Memphis, April 14.

Opening sermon by Rev. W. W. Akers. Present, fifteen ministers and nineteen ruling elders. Only one minister was absent, his absence being due to infirmities of age.

Rev. H. R. Taylor, moderator. Ruling Elder, R. J. Rawlings, Temporary Clerk.

Reports showed increased contributions to nearly all the causes.

Narrative, while showing evidences of growth in some churches, was not, on the whole, encouraging. An hour was devoted to consideration of the state of religion in our bounds.

There does not appear decided evidence of better observance of Sabbath.

Six candidates for the ministry, five of whom are pursuing their studies, with commendable progress. A careful, comprehensive, encouraging report on this cause.

Increased interest in missions at home and abroad. Popular meeting in behalf of Foreign Missions addressed by A. B. Curry, D. D.

An unusually good year in behalf of Assembly's Home Missions.

Ministerial Relief received greatly increased contributions. Each session is urged to appoint a committee to secure endowment fund.

Most churches active in Sunday-school work, very few not having one, some more than one school.

A colored evangelist is maintained in the city of Memphis. Good house of worship, but no organization. One colored church in the country.

Nothing doing in the interest of Church and Christian Education.

Presbytery continues relation with North Mississippi Presbyterian College, electing one member of Board Directors.

J. H. Lumpkin, D. D., was made chairman of Local Home Missions. Only three churches dependent on this fund not now supplied.

Rev. B. M. Cowan permitted to accept call of Collierville Church for half this time, remainder given to White Haven as formerly.

Missouri—

The Presbytery of Potosi met in 109th stated session in Cape Girardeau, Mo., April 14, 1903, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. A. J. Cheatham from Matthew V:14-15.

Ten ministers and twelve ruling elders were present.

Officers—Rev. A. J. Cheatham, moderator and Rev. C. E. Hickok, Temporary Clerk.

St. Genevieve Church consisting of 12 members, 2 ruling elders and 1 deacon, organized Oct. 19, 1902, was received and enrolled, and its representative ruling elder, A. H. Chadwell, took his seat in Presbytery. Licentiate A. F. Cunningham was received from the Presbytery of Upper Missouri. Having signified his willingness to accept the call to become pastor of Caruthersville Church, the examination, including the trial sermon, took place and was sustained; whereupon a commission, consisting of Revs. J. L. Alsworth, C. W. Latham, R. E. Porterfield and Elder T. E. Baldwin with Rev. A. J. Cheatham as alternate, was appointed to ordain and install him as pastor of Caruthersville Church.

Kannett Church—A committee consisting of Revs. C. H. Little, A. F. Cunningham and Elder Z. B. Penney was appointed to install Rev. R. E. Porterfield as pastor of this church.

Rev. J. L. Alsworth was appointed chairman of the Executive Committee of Colored evangelization.

Systematic Beneficence—An Executive Committee was appointed consisting of Revs. C. E. Hickok., C. H. Little and Elder A. V. Cashion.

Commissioners to the General Assembly were elected as follows: Rev. J. L. Alsworth and Ruling Elder L. W. Morton; Principals Rev. C. E. Hickok and Ruling Elder A. V. Cashion; Alternates.

Latin Thesis—The overture was answered in the negative.

Reports of Executive Committees on Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Colored Evangelization, Ministerial Relief, Education, Sabbath-schools and Publication, were all duly considered and adopted. The narrative presents on the whole, an encouraging view of the state of religion within our bounds.

A popular meeting on Sabbath observance was held Thursday night when after the reading of the report of the Executive Committee by Rev. Geo. W. Harlan, short addresses were delivered by Revs. R. E. Porterfield, A. J. Cheatham, W. W. Killough, also Elder A. V. Cashion and Hon. R. B. Oliver of Cape Girardeau.

The exercises were of unusual interest and we trust will result in a higher appreciation of the privileges of the Lord's Day and a more faithful obedience to the law of the Sabbath.

Presbytery by a rising vote returned its heartfelt thanks to the minister, officers and members of the Cape Girardeau Church for the courteous and generous hospitality extended. They are now occupying a new and beautiful House of Worship most eligibly situated and altogether this church seems to be in a more prosperous condition than it has been for many years.

After a meeting memorable for its large attendance, and the unusual importance and interest of its proceedings, Presbytery adjourned to meet in Caruthersville Church, September 25, 1903 at 7:30 p. m. Stated Clerk.

Mississippi—

Louisiana Presbytery met in Gloster, Miss., April 9, 1903.

Present—nine ministers and 12 elders. Rev. D. O. Byers was elected Moderator and W. J. Stockett, Temporary Clerk. The name of "Comite Church" was changed to "Norwood Church." The pastoral relation between Rev. D. F. Wilkinson and the Crowley Church was dissolved. The Commissioners to the General Assembly are, viz: Principals—Rev. D. O. Byers, Norwood, La., and Hon. D. W. Pipes, Clinton, La. Alternates—Rev. E. L. Siler, Baton Rouge, La., and W. J. Jenkins, Centreville, Miss.

Education—Contributions to this cause amounted to $1,093. Only $187 of which went to the Assembly's Committee. The churches were urged to contribute more liberally to this cause. Presbytery undertakes to raise $100 for Candidate Rudolph Miller, and instructs him to remain at Clarksville.

Foreign Missions—Churches, Societies and individuals are reported as giving $1,546 to this cause. The churches at Centreville, Miss., and Jackson, La., report that they will undertake to support a Missionary between the two. The churches west of the river are urged to organize Missionary Societies, and to form a "Union" for that side of the river, to meet with the fall meetings.

The "Young Peoples Societies" report contributions for all purposes of $445.

The Colored Work has been much hindered by disturbances in Amite county, but will be continued in Louisiana. The work in Baton Rouge, under the care of the session, was reported in a favorable condition. The Narrative presents both lights and shadows—encouragements and discouragements, but the former exceeds the latter.

Home Missions—All of our churches have supplies. Churches are urged to co-operate with Synod's Church Building Fund. Presbytery declines to put an Evangelist in the field, unless in cooperation with some other Presbytery.

The following are chairmen of standing committees for the ensuing year.

Chapter 3.

To understand how it befell that Mr. Dysart, though a minister of the Gospel, should be a prisoner in the hands of Sherman's men we must go back a little.

When early on Sunday morning it was learned that the invaders were really upon them, all the rumors and reports which had been reaching their ears from the districts already passed by the raiders, now rushed into their minds with fearful force. We who live in times of peace have no idea of the misery that one word of rumor can contain. What to believe? What to disbelieve? Who could say?

Mrs. Dysart usually so calm and self-contained, now alone with her husband, gave way to an agony of fear. She was for catching up their children, and flying. "Where, Dearest, where?" he asked, "where is the place of safety? I tell you Clara it is here. The business of these men is to lay waste and destroy, not to slay, nor even to injure non-combatants. Their orders are not to burn occupied houses; the sure way to destroy your home is to leave it, the surest way to be insulted and frightened is to forsake its shelter where even their Code protects you."

"But you then, dear Arnold, you at least must go. Your uniform, the only suit you have, will mark you for injury, and you know how at least one minister has been insulted and abused by them in the last few days. Besides, there is the little bag of valuables to be hidden in the woods, as well as Mrs. Roper's box of jewels, which she left in my care. Do go at least for to-day: they will hardly halt longer than that."

So it was that yielding to his wife's entreaties Mr. Dysart, with the package of which she had spoken, betook himself to the woods at the rear of his house, though with a shake of his head and a grim smile as he muttered, "After all I seem to have the same idea of soldiering as Polly."

So little did he relish his position that after secreting his property and marking the place, he remained as near the road as possible.

Thence he soon observed how the firing had changed its course and to his horror was near his own home, which giving him ample excuse for leaving cover he hurriedly set forth on his return. But in a very short time as he neared a great pine at the road-side, a sentry stepping from behind it, presented a glittering rifle, and cried, "Halt you are my prisoner." Silently the minister submitted and in a few minutes more found himself marched under guard to the court house square where others also under arrest were waiting for their cases to be investigated. On the withered grass they sat or stood viewing with mingled emotions the scene around them. Already the public buildings had been set on fire so that the heat and smoke were oppressive and the stores being broken open the blue coats were busy with the spoil. Many regiments remained in ranks, drawn up in the streets as yet, and the commanding general with his staff was at their head. Mr. Dysart, staring absently at them saw two of the officers who were obstructing the side walk suddenly rein back their horses, in order to permit to pass—his wife and the Lady Principal of the Orphan Asylum. As if they had been accustomed from youth upwards to walk amid bodies of hostile troops they made their way to the table at which sat an officer to whom they were directed; stated their desire for the protection of a guard, and pointing out Mr. Dysart explained that he was a minister, an ex-chaplain, and not a captain, as his shoulder straps might indicate, and asked for his release. This being obtained and a guard of two Union soldiers for each of the two homes detailed, our friends turned thither with lightened hearts. But meanwhile how had it fared with those whom they had left behind?

But a few moments had elapsed after Mrs. Dysart's departure were those who had become comparatively calm and reassured received a fresh alarm. Old Mrs. Bloom had taken upon herself the task of 'chirking up' Polly. "Don't you be no ways oneasy about your Mar," she said soothingly. "I b'leve most of them furriners is a-gettin' scattered rummagin. I don't see none of 'em no more only the two fellows what's stirrin' that air stew-kettle. O, good sakes alive what's that?" as a terrific explosion shook the air, making the glass rattle in the windows, and causing a general shriek from the panic-stricken women and children. Jack and Polly, though frightened themselves, endeavored to quiet some of the smaller children and Jack soon had a cluster around him, as he did wonderful things with a piece of twine. It was then that Polly stole unperceived into the front hall, longing for her mother's safe return and crying out to her Captain in the depths of her childish heart to help her to be quiet and brave. Just then there dashed up the steps three men to give an account of whom we shall need a new chapter.

Chapter 4.

I have said the three men now entering were strangers, but not so to our little heroine, who knew at once her Brother Tom, a tall active young man, whose mechanical genius had caused him to be placed in charge of a government foundry near by, as the first comer. Following him closely was a fat jolly looking individual, Capt. Bronson, a noted blockade runner, and a friend of the family, while in the last a very small and timid Israelite she recognized a merchant of the town, Mr. Meshech, better known as "Meek." His large pale blue eyes were dilated with fear, and he leaned panting against the wall as he wiped the cold sweat from his forehead. But Tom seizing him by the elbow dragged him in and not daring to shut the door lest he should attract attention, led the way into a small room. No sooner had they entered than her brother addressed the child in a low hurried voice. "You are surprised to see me here little sis?" She nodded, yes. "I was turned back in my flight by conflicting reports as to the direction of the Yankee columns and concluded to hide here in town. So I joined Capt. Bronson in his retreat, but it got too hot to hold us, and now quick, Polly, you were always a clever little soul at such things, show us a place to stow ourselves in that no one knows but yourself. The child wrinkled her forehead a minute, her eyes on her Brother's face, then ran to open the door to a big black closet. "Up there," she whispered, "the boards of the ceiling are loose, and there is a great loft that nobody knows but Jack and me."

"The very thing! Come Cap'n, Meek! up with you. We are victualled for the siege Polly, but if anything turns up try to warn us, if you can."

He swung himself up by the openings in the plank, and the Jew hastily essayed to follow. Laying hold of the abutment of the chimney with one nerveless hand, and clinging with his feet by the crevice of the ill-fitting ceiling he tried to grasp the boards above, but limp with fright and the unwonted exertion, fell helpless to the floor. Tom Dysart gave a smothered ejaculation of impatient dismay, but Capt. Bronson, with a sailor's coolness lifted the little man as if he had been a child, then in a voice smothered with laughter, bade Tom "Hoist away." So said, so done Mr. Meshech felt a pair of strong hands grasp his shoulders and himself safely landed in the dust of the loft. The worthy Captain was preparing to follow, with all speed when the gentle voice of a Daughter of Eve stopped him, "What is it, little Polly. I must get up there quick, Lass, so that I can laugh, I feel it coming on."

"Yes, but please, I can understand about you and Tom, but what has poor Mr. Meek done?"

"Ha! Ha! I knew you'd set me off: why, those blue-coated scamps who are scouring the town right now for me, set fire to his store right in the middle of the business block,—so that of course everything will go with it. That was what drove us from cover for we were hidden in Meek's house: but the funny part of the thing is that they vowed the poor little booger had set fire to his own property, and that if they could only catch him he should hang for it."

"And he believes it?"

"He actually believes, so between his present losses, and his fear of another"—the Capt. breaks off, touches his neck significantly, that neck which as he knows perfectly well, is in real and immediate jeopardy, and with a knowing wink, as if it were all the greatest joke of his life, swings himself up into the attic where with his face to the floor he lay down to laugh at leisure.

Hardly had he done so, and Polly having closed the door regained the hall when the sound of foot-steps once more made her start, and she turned to throw herself into the arms of Father and Mother. But there was no time for even the faintest hint about her Brother, since the guard was so near, and besides, there was much for the elders to do.

The raiders were pouring back into the yard seeking fresh mischief. The cook, who was bringing in the dinner for the family was compelled, amid shouts of laughter, at the negro's protests, to hand over the best portion of the meal to them. The hungry family too thankful at being united around their table, to care much about the food hastily consumed such dishes as the soldiers had rejected, and as they rose from their repast the heads of the family were summoned by the guard. These men warned them to remove to the house any stores, which they wished protected. They would promise to safe-guard anything within those walls, but nothing further. This they proceeded to do, and one of their protectors lending his aid, they succeeded in getting their contents of smoke-house into the dwelling. Scarcely was this task completed when the minister was appealed to once more; but returned presently with a face full of relief and gratitude. God had been good, he said presently: he himself had such weak faith, and was trembling for fear of the coming night for this housefull of helpless creatures, and now God had sent protection in such a strange way. The surgeons in charge of the Hospital corps had asked to spend the night in the empty front rooms of the house, and the hospital tents would be pitched in a semi-circle clear around it. Better guaranty of safety they could not have: the little ones might be put to bed, with comparatively little fear of rude awakening. But Polly heard the news with very different sensations. Only she knew about Tom—there had been no opportunity to breathe so important a secret, and now if those doctors in the rooms beneath their hiding-place should discover them, nothing could save their lives, so she had heard. And yet would she be able to warn Tom, unseen? Patiently and silently she hung about, while the guard, true to his trust paced back and forth. But just at dusk as he was called to supper, her white kitten much disturbed by the strange noises and the presence of so many strangers seeking a quiet corner fled past her into the very room she was longing to enter. So following, as if in pursuit of it, she sought the closet and in cautious tones she told her Brother what had happened, and ended with "O, do be careful." Then snatching up Pussy she ran out fairly against one of the surgeons, who was just coming in. Seeing only a little girl holding a cat, who shrank startled from him he said with gruff kindness, "Don't be uneasy. I don't eat little girls, nor kittens either." Yet after a moment's reflection he walked in saying, "Odd, I was sure I heard voices," he even peeped into the dark closet, felt its walls, and then shut the door again. "She must have been entertaining that playing cat." Then stalking away, he was quite unconscious of a pair of bright dark eyes glancing just above his head, a strong hand holding a clubbed pistol ready to strike if need were. Lucky doctor, who saved himself a broken head, when he shut that door!

with shining bricks of many colors. The houses are rose-colored, black, gray, purple, light blue or pale green. The doors are painted and gilded. For hours you may not see a soul in the streets or at the windows. The streets and houses, bridges, windows and barns show a neatness and a brilliancy that are absolutely painful. At every step a new effect is disclosed, a new scene is beheld, as if painted upon the drop-curtain of a stage. Everything is minute, compact, painted, spotless and clean. In the houses of Broeck, for cleaning purposes, you will find big brooms, little brooms, tooth-brushes, aqua fortis, whitening for the window panes, rouge for the forks and spoons, coal dust for the copper, emery for the iron utensils, brick powder for the floors and even small splinters of wood with which to pick out the tiny bits of straw in the cracks between the bricks. Here are some of the rules of this wonderful town:

"Citizens must leave their shoes at the door when entering a house.

"Before or after sunset no one is allowed to smoke, excepting with a pipe having a cover, so that the ashes will not be scattered upon the street.

"Any one crossing the village on horseback must get out of the saddle and lead the horse.

"A cuspidor shall be kept by the front door of each house.

"It is forbidden to cross the village in a carriage, or to drive animals through the streets."

Davy the Conquerer.

No boy in the Chuck Ridge school had a better time than Davy. He thought of so many things to do to amuse himself and the other pupils that Mr. Watson was glad when something occurred to keep him at home for a day.

"And yet he isn't a bad boy," the teacher said when talking with Davy's father about him; "but he is so full of mischief I am obliged to be continually calling him to order."

Davy's father looked troubled. "I don't like to whip him," continued Mr. Watson, "but I can not have him disturbing the school."

After the talk his father had with him, Davy promised to do better. He really meant to keep his promise, but he "forgot." One day the boys suddenly saw him sitting bolt upright, his comical "Indian lock" twisted into more than usual prominence, knees crossed, brow knitted, while he intently regarded his book conspicuously held wrong side up. It takes very little to make boys laugh in school, and to them Davy's appearance was very funny. It meant, too, that other pranks were to follow; so Davy went back to his old ways again.

Finally Mr. Watson lost all patience and gave Davy a whipping. But this did not end the trouble. No; the sad thing was that the more Davy was whipped, the more he needed it. In spite of Mr. Watson's efforts, Davy was growing worse rather than better.

After a while Mr. Watson went away and a new teacher came in his place. By this time Davy had come to think whipping a necessary part of his education.

When the boys would say, "Most time you were getting another whipping, Dave," he would answer carelessly: "Well, let it come."

The boys liked "Stouty," as they called him among themselves, and Davy did too; but they wouldn't say so. He tried to feel that the teacher, whoever he might be, was his natural enemy. Poor Davy, he ought to have known better. Several weeks passed. Mr. Stout saw plainly that Davy was a disturbing element in the school, he noted, too, that he was quick to learn.

"Stouty" thought and thought about Davy when he was going to and from school, even after he was in bed at night he thought about him. He was trying to find out how to make a good boy out of him.

There was one other source of annoyance to Mr. Stout in the school. This was a mouse. It was allured there by the lunch which the children brought to eat at the recess. They were not always careful to brush away the crumbs, and sometimes the mouse would even find a stray crust. Often at night he crept in there, and not satisfied with crumbs, gnawed the children's books; so he was very troublesome.

"Davy, said Mr. Stout suddenly, one day, when he was stirring up a spirit of mischief in one way and another.

"Yes sir," answered Davy promptly. He supposed a whipping was to come, though Mr. Stout had never yet punished him.

"Davy, will you please come here?" The tone was kind, but Davy looked a little sullen as he went forward to the desk.

He was saying to himself, "I don't care, I don't care for whipping," and he thought it was true; but down under that feeling there was another a great deal truer. It was that he did care, that he ought to be ashamed of himself, and that he was sorry he forgot to be good.

When Davy reached the desk, Mr. Stout did not speak at once, but waited for him to look up. When he did lift his eyes, Mr. Stout was looking at him very pleasantly; there was actually a merry twinkle in his eyes. Davy wondered what was coming. Mr. Stout pointed to the knot-hole.

"Every little while, Davy. I see the mouse that gives us so much trouble stick his head up through that hole. I want to know if you will watch for him and try to catch him. Would you be willing to try?"

Davy was willing. Mr. Stout went on with his work. The boys having nothing now to distract their attention, studied their lessons, and Davy diligently watched the knot-hole. Mr. Stout congratulated himself on having him so quietly employed.

After some little time of watching and manuevering on Davy's part, there was a sudden scramble, a cry of triumph, and there he stood with flushed face actually grasping in his hand the struggling mouse. He ran out with the mouse; but when he came in and was about to take his seat, Mr. Stout detained him.

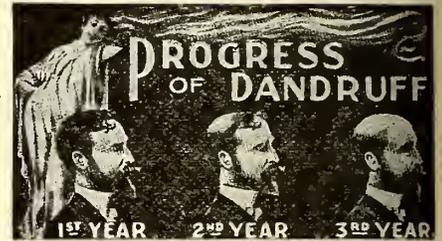

"Please stop a moment, Davy. I wish to thank you for delivering us from that offender. And boys," he continued, addressing the school, "I think we all feel under obligations to Davy for what he has done. It took patience on his part, and prompt action, and a sort of courage, too, I do not know that I should like to grab a live mouse in my fingers. It isn't a pleasant thing to do. I think the boy who has done this service for us is deserving of our respects. If he could do this he can do greater things. I hope to see him go on to gain other victories besides this one of the knot-hole—victories over himself. That is all, Davy. I hope I haven't taken so much of your time that you can not have your geography lesson.

Davy took his seat, his heart swelling with all sorts of feeling that he did not even know the names of; but he wished to be a good boy, and he felt sure he could be. That knot-hole experience was the turning-point in his life. Of course, it can not be said that he never did a wrong thing again; but from that time Mr. Stout considered him one of the most studious and faithful boys in the school.

Davy is no longer a boy, but you can easily guess what kind of a man he makes. He began by conquering a mouse, and ended by conquering himself.—Journal.

A Thorn in the Foot.

Fidele was a little Indian boy, tending his father's goats in the Alban Hills near Rome. While at his post of duty he was thinking of the King of Etruria, who had threatened to make war upon the Roman republic. Suddenly there burst forth in the distance the glitter of arms. It is the foe advancing to Rome's capture. Without a moment's hesitation this brave boy set out to warn the city of its danger. Fleet of foot, the little brown mountaineer went skipping over hills, across rocky plains, and through reed-grown morasses in which re-deyed buffaloes looked at him in apparent wonder. On and on he sped as fast as his sinewy legs could carry him. But the distance was long, the sun fiercely hot, and no fresh water at hand. Wearied, worn, thirsty, warm and almost exhausted, yet he could not think of surrendering his purpose. At length with fainting body but increasing heroism he passed the city gates and ascended the Capitol hill. The Senate was in session. Only by whisper could he speak and give the startling news. This done, he sank to the floor. Being asked where his pain was, he whispered that it was in his foot. Upon examination it was found that a thorn had penetrated far into the flesh. In the operation of extracting it, the noble lad died. To honor this boy's heroism and patriotism the Senate decreed that thereafter all the gate-keepers of the city should come from Vitrochiano, his native village, and they should be called Fidele, the faithful. When in Florence the writer saw the beautiful marble statue carved by a great artist in his honor. It represents him sitting and trying to pull out the thorn. This posture is not strictly accurate, as the little hero was too much exhausted for even such an effort. Boys can be heroes to-day right here in America as really as in any other land or age. My boy, resolve to be one in the truest sense.—Exchange.

LUMBERTON, N. C., November 26, 1902

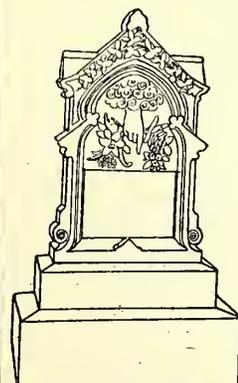

J. D. BOUSHALL, ESQ., Manager Aetna Life Insurance Co., Raleigh, N. C.

Dear Sir:—After a careful comparison of policies submitted to me by the Aetna Life, Bankers' Life of New York, Equitable of New York, Northwestern, New York Life and Prudential, I have accepted $10,000 in the Aetna on the 20-payment life plan, with option of 25 year 3 per cent. Gold Bond Contract.

I have been a policy-holder in the Aetna for nearly eight years, and therefore feel somewhat prepared to judge of its merits from actual results. With all due deference to other companies, it affords me great pleasure to say that in my opinion the Aetna cannot be surpassed for plain and liberal contracts, and for just, conservative and economical management. I now have $12,000 in the Aetna. My partner, Mr. W. W. Carlyle, has $16,000 and one of our clerks, Mr. John T. Biggs, has $2,000 nearly all of which was written and delivered by your special agent, Mr. H. T. Spears.

Wishing you and the grand old Aetna continued success, I am,

Yours very truly,
ROBERT D. CALDWELL.

CONDUCTED BY MRS. A. J. MCKELWAY

Children's Letters.

Elmwood, N. C., April 23rd, 1903.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl thirteen years old. I have written to you once before and thought I would write again. I will tell you of the sad death of papa's brother on the 11th of April. This was the first death in a family of eleven boys all grown. I feel so sorry for Grandpa and Grandma in the great loss they have sustained. As Mr. Brown said in his funeral discourse, one whom we all loved has passed away. I will close by asking a question. Who went forth weeping in the morning of life, yet saw in the evening many bringing sheaves with them?

Your friend,

Ethel Summers.

Red Springs, N. C., April 22nd, 1903.

Dear Standard:

As you were so kind as to print my last letter I am going to write you again. I love to read the Standard so much. I always turn to the children's letters first. I am not going to school now, but go to Sunday-school every Sunday and love to go. We have a fine Sunday-school; Mr. Rankin is such a good Superintendent; he is our Pastor too. My teacher, Miss Isabell Robeson, has organized a band of 'Covenanters.' We have eleven members, all little boys. We are proud of our society and want to do all the good we can. We were going to have a picnic last Saturday, but were disappointed as Miss Isabell was not well and could not go, but we hope to have it again. I gave my dog Carlo away, to a man in the country. I miss him too. I have no pets now, but my cat, sister plays with her dolls. I am reading a nice book now. I went with Mama on a nice visit Saturday to see her Auntie, who lives at Wakulla about four miles from here. I enjoyed it very much. I will answer Huie Hill Wooten's question, it was Jonah the whale swallowed. I will close, as I am tired and sleepy. Many good wishes for the Standard.

Your little friend,

Jim Edens.

Dear Standard:

I thought I would write to you as I have never written before. I go to school at Patterson's Mills. My teacher's name is Miss McCartney. I like her very much. I go to Sunday-school and preaching. I have two sisters and one brother. I do hope some little girl will be glad to read mine.

Dear Standard:

As I have not written to you for several weeks thought I would write to-day. Our school will soon be out and so sorry I will be, because I dearly love to go. Am expecting to have a big time at the close. I extend to you and all the little cousins that have been writing these dear little letters in the Standard a cordial welcome to our close the 15th of May. We have been having quite an abundance of rain. Hope we will have some pretty weather after this. Oh! I forgot I had a big time Easter up at my Aunt's at Gibsonville, hunting eggs which Auntie dyed and hid for us children's to hunt. My brother's Grady and Jamie lost their pet cats, Goal and Buff. They cried like their hearts would break. I was sorry for them, but they now have a nice lot of pigeons and Bantons chickens. My pet is my large Dolly. Guess if it should go like brother's pets I would cry too. I will answer Kate McPhail's question, Old Testament contains 39 Books and New Testament contains 27 Books, making in all 66. I will ask one where is the word candle stick found in the Bible. I will close hoping to see this in print.

R. M. COFFEY, C. T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C.

teacher is Mrs. Ella Sloan. We have preaching twice a month by Mr. Gwinn of Steel Creek. I have four sisters and two brothers at home. Our school was but about a month ago. Our teacher was Miss Nannie Rhyne. We had a nice pic-nic. Mr. Sample, of Mulberry, was there and made a good talk. I will close by asking a question. Where in the Bible is the word Coffin found?

Your unknown friend,
Emma Fisher.

Lowell, N. C., April 25, 1903.

Dear Standard:

As I have never wrote to you before, I will try to write. Well I have three pets, a dog, and two cats. The dog's name is Trix and John, and Tom are the cat's names. Our school has closed and I am sorry of it too, for I love to go to school. We go to Sunday-school every Sunday. My teacher is Miss Mary Craig. I just love her dearly. We haven't any pastor now. Well I have four sisters living and one dead. Mamie, Lena, Loe, Bertie and Lula, are their names. We have two cows, Doll and Pet. I will answer Huie Hill Wooten's question. Jonah was swallowed by a whale, and I will also ask a question, What three men was thrown into a furnace of fire. I will close hoping to see my letter in print.

Your unknown friend,

Age 12. Minnie Torrence Stowe.

Hopewell, N. C., April 22, 1903.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl 6 years old. I go to Sunday school at Hopewell. I study catechism. I love to go very much. Our Uncle Wash and Aunt Patsie spent Easter with us. We love our Uncle Wash. He is papa's only brother. He brings us nice presents. I have one sister and two brothers. I will close for fear of the waste basket. I will answer Iola Fesperman's question, Fig trees bear without blooming.

Calyer Battie.

What the Parrot Said.

By Bessie C. Belk. 11 years of age.

It was the day before Christmas, and Harold Burton pranced proudly on the front steps, because "Uncle Billy" was coming all the way from New York to spend Christmas; and best of all, he had written a letter to Harold, himself, saying that he had a grand play-mate for him and would give it to him as a Christmas present.

Harold was the only child, and often wished for a play-mate, and he was "nearly dead" to see what "Uncle Billy" would bring him.

At last he saw the carriage driving up the beautiful avenue that led to their home. "Uncle Billy" jumped out, and before Harold knew it, he was in "Uncle Billy's" arms. Mama and papa ran out to greet "Uncle Billy." After he had seen and spoken to every one on the place, he called Tom, the butler, to bring him the large box that was in the back of the carriage. Harold was wild with joy, as "Uncle Billy" took out a large gilt cage with a chattering parrot in it.

The Christmas was spent merrily, and after Christmas was over and "Uncle

Billy had gone home, Harold would spend an hour every day in teaching his parrot to talk. When Harold would grumble over anything, his mother would say gently "Have faith, Harold dear."

One afternoon Harold took the parrot out of the cage and let her hop about in the trees.

He did this every day now as Polly (the parrot) enjoyed it until one day, seeing her chance, she flew off to the large oak grove about half a mile away.

When Harold came out to give his parrot her dinner of seed, she was not there. Harold looked all over the yard, in all the trees, but she was not there.

Harold ran into the house crying.

After petting Harold gently, his mother said, "Have faith, Harold, dear."

Harold bounded off to look again for his parrot, but all in vain.

He could not sleep any that night.

Early next morning he jumped on his bicycle and rode hurriedly up the large oak grove.

He had roamed all over the woods, and was about to come home again, when he heard a voice, like his mother's, saying: "Have faith, Harold dear." He thought it was his mother, and then, knowing she was not there, thought it was imagination, but he heard the same little voice, right over his head, saying: "Polly wants a cracker," "Polly's hungry," and "Have faith, Harold dear." So looking up, he saw his beloved parrot. He took her home again and would not give her any breakfast for behaving so naughty. Polly never ran off again.

The Queen Story.

"O Auntie, just one more! Won't you?" Auntie had been telling stories to a trio of little folks till she was tired; but still they wanted more. Whether you are an auntie, or whether you are a child, you know how it is yourself.

"Well," said auntie, with a merry twinkle in her eye, "I'll tell you my queen story."

Then Auntie began: "There was once a queen who had three beautiful daughters. I will give you their names and you must remember them to tell me when I ask you. The eldest had lovely silken hair that fell in golden curls below her waist. This little princess was named Gloriana on account of her dazzling hair. The second little princess had the most charming eyes that were ever seen; they were like violets, and her name was Violetta. The youngest, who was really the most beautiful of them all, was a cripple, and had never walked. Her great blue eyes, so bright to look at, were of no use to her, for she was stone blind. And because she was thus shut away from pleasure they named her Shnt-mp. The queen was going on a journey, and she called the three princesses and asked what they would like to have for presents when she returned. Now, being princesses, they had almost everything they could think of, so it was very hard to name anything they wanted. But finally the eldest little princess—what was her name?"

"Gloriana!" replied the children, all together, after a little thought.

"Right. Gloriana said: 'Please bring me a milk-white Arabian pony and a saddle with scarlet silk fringe, also golden stirrups.'

"I will, dear," said the queen, writing it all down on her ivory tablets.

"Then the second daughter spoke—do you remember what her name was?"

"Violetta," answered the children.

"Yes. Violetta said: 'I want a bird of paradise, in a great golden cage, and I want it so very tame that it will eat from my hand.'

"You shall have it, my darling," said the queen. And then drawing her youngest child tenderly to her side—what was her name?"

"Shut-up," shouted the children.

There was a dead silence. The children waited and stared at auntie.

"Why don't you go on?" they asked.

"I'm not in the habit of talking to children who tell me to shut up!" said auntie.

"O we didn't!" they cried; "that was her name! do please go on!"

"That is all there is to the story," laughed auntie; and the children laughed too.—Mattie M. Baker, in Little Folks.

Prairie Dog Town.

To the casual observer, prairie dogs seem the jolliest and most docile of animals. But a visitor in a dog colony soon finds that there are few more belligerent creatures on four feet than these amusing prairie dogs. If a visitor will place himself on any fine day where he may see all, and at the same time not be seen, in a dog village, when the inhabitants are trotting about the community thoroughfares and each resident seems at peace with all his race, he will see sudden tiny dust storms arise now and then among the sand heaps. There will be a momentary tossing and heaving of fur while the dust rises high and higher. These are but personal encounters between the residents of the town. The adjacent dogs pay no attention to them. The writer has seen seven or eight tooth-to-tooth conflicts at once in a little colony of prairie dogs. These street brawls are brief but hot, and are ended by the vanquished taking unto himself legs when he can find them and transporting himself to his hole. For the prairie dog is a wise animal and will not allow his anatomy to be chewed a moment after he knows his adversary is the better dog.—Correspondent of New York Post.

The Pebble's Lesson.

How smooth the sea-beach pebbles are!
But, do you know,
The ocean worked a hundred years
To make them so.
And once I saw a little girl
Sit down and cry,
Because she could not cure a fault,
With one small "try!"

Hetty Green of New York had a way of taking care of her own, even in her youth. A Vermont neighbor tells that while she was living on her New England farm she had for a neighbor a particularly unneighborly old bachelor. One day, while the threshers were at work on her wheat crop, the winnowing-fan broke and she sent over in great haste to borrow her neighbor's machine.

"Certainly," was the reply, "Mrs. Green may use the fan, but I make it a rule never to allow my implements to be taken from my farm. The machine is in the barn, and she may bring her grain there to be winnowed," an offer it was manifestly impossible to accept.

Mrs. Green had not forgotten the implied refusal when the old bachelor sent his hired man over one morning to borrow her side-saddle for the use of a visiting relative.

"I shall be only too glad to favor him," was the word sent back by the astute Mrs. Green, "but I never allow anything I own to be carried off the farm. My saddle is hanging across a beam in the barn loft. Tell Mr. Browne to send his aunt over. She may ride there as long as she likes."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Our sympathy to Seymour Palmer of the town of Dresser who locked himself in his bed-room and fired two shots. When the neighbors broke down the door they found him unwounded and in perfect health. He was trying to scare his wife, and the exasperating woman was out calling and never heard about it until it was all over. It is remarkable how some women are never around when they are wanted.—Exchange.

Oliver Wendell Holmes had occasion to write to a man who had become rich suddenly. He received an exceedingly pompous letter beginning: "Mr. ——— instructs me to say that he has received your letter of March 10 and would say in reply, etc. John Jones, secretary." The rich man was doubtless surprised to receive this in return: "Mr. Holmes has directed his valet to instruct his secretary to tell his typewriter to say that he is in receipt of your secretary's letter of some days since and would say in reply, etc. Sarah L. Hodgkiss, typewriter."

Three Philadelphians visited Richmond, Va., and, asking as to the use and purpose of this or that building, were told in every case that it was a tobacco factory. An aged negro gave them the information; and they, tiring of the monotony of the reply, pointed to a white frame building on a hill and asked whose tobacco factory it was. The old fellow replied: "Dat, sah, am no fact-ry. Dat am S'n' John's 'Piscopal Church, where Marse Patrick Henry done get up an ax de Lawd to gib him liberty or gib him deaf." "Well, uncle," asked one of the trio, "which did the Lord give him?" "'Pears to me yo' must indeed be strangers hereabouts," he answered; "else, it strikes me, yo'd know dat, in due time, de Lawd gabe Marse Henry bofe."—Exchange.

Judging by Sargent's portrait of President Roosevelt, he doesn't like Sargent, or his excellency was thinking of his negro policy.—The Houston Chronicle.

The most conspicuous feature of Mr. J. Pierpont Morgna's countenance since the anti-merger decision is the smite that won't come on.—The Atlanta Journal.

The one who acknowledges no obligation to God does not as a rule deserve the confidence of others. The senator mentioned in the following incident showed sound sense, which doubtless was the result of long experience:

It is related of the French senator, Renaud, that when he came from his home in the Pyrenees he engaged a room at a leading hotel and paid a month's rent, 150 francs, in advance. The proprietor asked him if he would have a receipt.

"It is not necessary," replied Renaud. "God has witnessed the payment."

"Do you believe in God?" sneered the host.

"Most assuredly," said the senator. "Don't you?"

"Not I, monsieur," declared the host. "Ah!" said Renaud: "in that case please write me a receipt."—Christian Commonwealth.

Compensation

The truest words we ever speak
Are words of cheer.
Life has its shade, its valleys deep ;
But round our feet the shadows creep,
To prove the sunlight near.
Between the hills those valleys sleep—
The sun-crowned hills,
And down their sides will those who seek
With hopeful spirit, brave though meek,
Find gently flowing rills.

***

For every cloud a silvery light ;
God wills it so.
For every vale a shining height ;
A glorious morn for every night ;
And birth for labor's throe.
For snow's white wing, a verdant field ;
A gain for loss.
For buried seed, the harvest yield ;
For pain, a strength, a joy revealed,
A crown for every cross.

Event and Comment.

The Congregationalist notes in a Methodist paper that there is a "downward progress toward Congregationalism," and that Congregational journals are demanding a modified Episcopacy. That is perfectly natural. An these extremes should meet on the middle ground of Presbyterianism.

The editor of the New York Christian Advocate wrote, "Total abstinence for all rests on an impregnable foundation," and the printer, with facts before his eyes and no theories to sustain, changed it to read, "Total abstinence for all rests upon an impregnable foundation." And the joke is on the editor.

William A. Sunday, formerly the best ball player in the country, was recently ordained by Chicago Presbytery to the evangelistic work, in which he has proved himself eminently successful. Mr. Sunday did not write a Latin thesis, but he will probably have more souls for his hire than some of the readiest quotationers from Turretin and the Vulgate.

President Roosevelt is needed in Washington to take a firm grip on the postoffice situation. And the American people had better be taken into full confidence as to the extent of the frauds that have been perpetrated on the Government. The present programme is to cleanse the system "quietly." It might be better to shorten the present presidential vacation than to secure a much longer vacation in 1905.

Commenting on the issue in Hillsboro, a community with an honorable history and a refined people, though dominated in late years by the saloon element, Rev. J. W. Goodman, who has been indefatigable in his efforts to organize victory, asks that Hillsboro be put on the "honor roll." Really, when a town is dominated by the saloon, is it not rather a reflection upon the ministers of the gospel, and does it not prove that they lack either consecration or common sense if they are not able finally to drive the saloon out?

An organization like the Y. M. C. A., supported by all denominations, should be very careful about teaching any distinctive doctrines of Presbyterianism or Methodism, for instance. But it is worse for it to become a propagator of an ism that is not held by any of the churches and is disbelieved by the majority of their membership. It is very much like a breach of trust to use a common fund for indoctrination on private lines. A Y. M. C. A. should be what its name denotes, and not a Young Men's Second Adventist Association, for instance.

The Living Church says that it is the conviction that the Episcopal Church is actually a part of the organism founded by Christ, "that brings to us nine out of ten of our converts—except, of course, from among those unhappy ones who come from unworthy causes, such as that Episcopal Church is fashionable, or that it does not interfere with their dancing or card-playing." If The Living Church means that these converts are convinced that the Episcopal Church is a part of the Church founded by Christ in any other sense than that in which the Presbyterian Church is also a part, then they have been convinced of a falsehood. And it would be doubly strange that the only Church that is a part of the one founded by Christ should be the one to attract men for unworthy motives.

In the municipal elections in North Carolina last week the temperance cause won some notable victories. In Charlotte the Reform Administration was endorsed by re-election, and by a decided majority. In Durham the ticket that was backed by the anti-saloon league, was elected by a large majority. In Hillsboro, a board of commissioners was elected pledged to refuse license to the saloons after July 1. In Asheville the temperance forces in some way antagonized the dominant party and were defeated. But this will not prevent the effort for a dispensary later on. Many other communities are waiting for the more favorable chance that is given under the Watts bill for voting the saloons out.

New York Presbyterians are becoming aroused to their loss of prestige in New York City. According to Dr. Van Dyke, they have neglected work at home, have put forth no intelligent effort for the welfare of Presbyterianism which is accordingly not so great a factor in the life of the city as it was fifty years ago. Dr. Stevenson added that the present generation had contributed practically nothing to the wealth of the denomination in church buildings. We wonder if the present generation had not better return to the old-fashioned Calvinism of a former generation. Presbyterianism without Calvinism is a tasteless thing. It is outclassed on the ritualistic side by the Episcopal and on the liberal side by the Congregationalist Church. It can win on the old platform and on that alone.

The Church Standard, which is about as Low as The Living Church is High, tells with much humor of an opera buffe performance by the Rev. Lewis T. Wattson, an Episcopal minister. He belongs to the Diocese of Delaware, but is now living at Garrison's, New York. To New York went the Bishop of Delaware, and at "St. Paul's Friary," received from Rev. Lewis Wattson the vows of Poverty, Obedience and Chastity. This constituted Mr. Wattson the General of the Society of the Atonement, and changed his name to Father Paul James Francis. At present the General is in command of "two battalions, consisting of one monk a piece." He applied to the Pope to be admitted as a branch of the Franciscan Order. The Pope declined, but Father Paul, etc., does not think the refusal was given ex cathedra. So he ventures to disregard the Pope while laboring for the consummation, when "all the Christian Churches will be united under the Bishop of Rome." Of course there are cranks in all the churches, but it is rather an anomaly for a Bishop to lend his aid to such a roaring farce.

Another Revision Suggested. Mr. Charles Francis Adams, of Massachusetts, recently delivered an address in Charleston, South Carolina, on the "Constitutional Ethics of Secession." The address has been printed and a most significant foot-note added, amounting to the proof that General Lee was taught the right of secession by the United States Government. When he was a student at West Point the textbook, "Rawles View of the Constitution," was the recognized authority on constitutional law. Rawles was a prominent member of the Philadelphia bar. The quotations from this book, which Mr. Adams makes, are as follows:

"If a faction should attempt to subvert the government of a state for the purpose of destroying its republican form, the paternal power of the Union could thus be called forth to subdue it. Yet it is not to be understood that its interposition would be justifiable if the people of a state should determine to retire from the Union, whether they adopt another or retained the same form of government. (Page 289.)

"The states, then, may wholly withdraw from the Union; but while they continue they must retain the character of representative republics. (Page 290.)

"The secession of a state from the Union depends on the will of the people of such state. (Page 295.)

"The people of a state may have some reasons to complain in respect to acts of the general government; they may in such cases invest some of their own officers with the power of negotiation, and may declare an absolute secession in case of their failure. Still, however, the secession must in such case be distinctly and peremptorily declared to take place on that event; and in such case, as in the case of an unconditional secession, the previous ligament with the Union would be legitimately and fairly destroyed. But in either case (conditional or unconditional secession) the people is the only moving power. (Page 296.)"

It would seem, therefore, that obedience to the instruction which he had received at the hands of the Federal Government made it the duty of General Lee, a Virginian, to acknowledge the authority of his state, when that state decided to exercise the right which the Federal Government thus acknowledged as a right.

Mr. James Callaway, a correspondent of the Macon Telegraph, calls attention to these citations from Rawles' book, and makes the point that there were six threats of secession before the threat was carried into execution. One of these was made by South Carolina following the nullification proceedings. This threat was withdrawn on account of the desired modification of the tariff laws of 1832. The other five attempts to secede were made in New England, the first just a hundred years ago. It was feared that the Louisiana Purchase, which the nation is just celebrating, was likely to "diminish the influence of our part of the Union." So Senator Pickering, of Massachusetts, openly advocated the formation of a Northern Confederacy. In 1807, Jefferson caused the repeal of the embargo act, as he had been informed that "there was even some danger that some of the New England States would withdraw from the Union unless the act was repealed."

In 1811, Joshua Quincy, of Massachusetts, protesting against the admission of Louisiana as a state, declared that the passage of the bill would be "a dissolution of the Union," and that "as it would be the right of all, so it would be the duty of some, definitely to prepare for a separation, amicably if they can, violently if they must."

In 1814 came the Hartford Convention, representing the New England dissatisfaction with the management and results of the war of 1812. And in 1844 the Legislature of Massachusetts passed a tentative ordinance of secession, declaring that "the annexation of Texas, unless arrested on the threshold, may tend to drive these States into a dissolution of the Union," and that the State of Massachusetts itself "is determined to submit its undelegated powers to no body of men on earth."

Such being the testimony of historical documents, it would seem that it were time that such quarrel words as "traitor" and "rebel" were dropped. There was some excuse for them before the passions excited by the war had died down. Passion expresses itself naturally in objurgation. But now the use of such words to designate the people of the South whose patriotism regarded the State as their Fatherland, is due to ignorance or unmannerliness, or both.

These quarrel words are being dropped from the newspaper vocabulary—even of partisan sheets. We read now of the Civil War instead of the Rebellion, while the attempt of the Grand Army of Pensioners to raise a discussion as to whether or not Lee was a traitor, was frowned down by the Northern leaders of thought and opinion. It is with some misgivings as to the propriety of the suggestion from this quarter that we ask if the time has not come to expunge these words from the records of the Northern Presbyterian Church.

It is questionable propriety for the reason that the Southern Church, in talking over matters once with the Northern Church, very promptly and cordially agreed to count as unsaid, any offensive terms that had become embodied in our records during the plastic period of civil strife. And the Northern Church agreed to take back such pleasant little accusations as those of heresy, schism and blasphemy, that had been hurled pretty freely at the Southern Presbyterians, along with other language which it would do no good for us to quote, and which no Northern Presbyterian paper could be induced to publish for any consideration. But unfortunately, the very tender of apology was accompanied by the re-affirmation of the charges of disloyalty and rebellion. In the case of two gentlemen who had been engaged in a controversy, when one had made a full and frank apology and the other had made only three-fifths of one, there remains nothing more for the first gentleman to say. It is impossible for him to reopen any of the questions formerly discussed between them; but the instincts of brotherhood are and should be stronger even than the usages that obtain among gentlemen. In the name of that brotherhood, therefore, we simply ask if it be not time to drop the quarrel words. Considering the interests involved, is it not really more important to revise those records, even by the insertion of an explanatory foot-note, than ever it was to smoothe things over for the Quakers who object to taking an oath in a court of justice, or to flatter the moralists with the amended paragraph regarding the works done by unregenerated men?

The times call for a revision of the records along these lines.

Truth Versus Chop-Logic. Says the Christian Observer, of last week: "Let it be kept in mind that not any Presbyterians either hold or teach that any who die in infancy are among the lost. We do not know of a single Presbyterian now on earth who so believes."

Whereby the Christian Observer either unchurches or takes off the earth several Southern Presbyterians whom we might mention, including editors, some on its own staff, theological professors, and two or three pastors, names and quotations furnished on application.

There is another alternative, namely: that these good brethren have seen the error of their way and have repented.

And now, that statement of the Christian Observer seems clear and explicit enough, does it not? By the rules of language, logic and law, the proposition, "Not any Presbyterians either hold or teach that any who die in infancy are among the lost," means that all Presbyterians hold that none who die in infancy are lost. If we should say, "We do not believe that the Christian Observer could be guilty of sophistry," we should mean "We believe that the Christian Observer could not be guilty of sophistry." The sense is the same, or the non-sense, no matter at which end the negative is placed.

But our esteemed contemporary goes on to say: "The question that is at issue is simply whether it is important—at the cost of much agitation—to amend our standards, to which all our ministers and elders must subscribe, so as to assert as to these infants what many Presbyterians believe that God has chosen to keep secret unto himself, namely: what individuals are included among the elect."

So! Not any Presbyterians believe that any infants are lost; but many Presbyterians believe that God has chosen to keep secret unto himself whether any or all are lost or saved.

To recur to our illustration. "We do not believe that the Christian Observer could be guilty of sophistry." But that does not necessarily mean, "We believe that the Christian Observer could not be guilty of sophistry." Thus remains the "agnostic position." We may hope that it could not be. But we have no grounds for a "credal statement."

There remains the sophisticated alternative, "We do not believe, either, that it could not be guilty of sophistry."

In such pitiable plight does that "handicap to reason and conscience," the elect infant clause, leave its thick and thin advocates. One could prove from the files of the Christian Observer itself, that it means several things. And now the Observer claims that it means nothing. It actually closes the paragraph which we have quoted by saying: "The position of our Standard is not a denial of anything touching the infants, but simply a position of reticence where the Bible is reticent."

"Not a denial of anything touching the infants." Is not a denial therefore of infant damnation? Dr. Woods discusses that subject this week with gloves off. The Observer tries to get away from that awful alternative, but there is no escape. It makes absolutely no difference so far as the blasphemy of the dogma is concerned, whether one believes that God does send millions of babies to an eternal hell, or that he may be sending them for all we know. Either position is dishonoring to God—belief in infant damnation or in its possibility. More than half of the human race are involved in the truth of this matter, and that truth can only be learned from Revelation. It is the belief of this paper that God has revealed in his Nature and in his Word the universal salvation of infants dying in infancy. We shall attempt to give a reason for the faith that is in us, in the next issue of the Standard, answering this indirect challenge from the Observer, and a direct one from the Central Presbyterian. And we hope that a patient constituency will justify such an article in considering the fact that it apparently requires a great deal of proof to convince some Southern Presbyterian papers that the God of the Bible, who sent His Son to redeem the world and His Spirit to regenerate even His bitterest enemies, included in His great plan of redemption "His own most innocent images."

In this connection we point out also the unanswerable logic of that learned theologian Dr. S. S. Laws. The course of his valuable Bible Study Lessons has led directly to this point, that all the dead infants are saved. Incidentally he gives some excellent quotations from John Calvin. The logic of the article of Dr. Laws furnishes the needed contrast to the chop-logic of the Christian Observer. It gives the proper defence of the Confession and at the same time declares "It seems hardly needful to say that such equivocation should be removed from any credal statement by revision, exposition or annotation." What would be an iniquity in a political platform, an ambiguity of statement, can hardly be righteously defended in a church's creed.

Devotional.*A Vision of Glory.

A young Scotch girl, who was taken ill in this country, knowing that she must die, begged to be taken back to her native land. On the homeward voyage she kept repeating over and over the sentence, "Oh, for a glimpse o' the hills o' Scotland!" Before the voyage was half over it was evident to those who were caring for her that she could not live to see her native land. One evening, just at the sunsetting, they brought her on deck. The west was all aglow with glory, and for a few minutes she seemed to enjoy the scene. Some one said to her, "Is it not beautiful?" She answered, "Yes, but I'd rather see the hills o' Scotland." For a little while she closed her eyes, and then opening them again, and with a look of unspeakable gladness on her face, she exclaimed, "I see them noo, and aye they're bonnie." Then, with a surprised look, she added, "I never kened before that it was the hills o' Scotland where the Prophet saw the horsemen and the chariots, but I see them all, and we are almost there." Then, closing her eyes, she was soon within the veil. Those beside her knew that it was not the hills of Scotland, but the hills of glory that she saw. Perhaps there are some fair hills toward which you are now looking, and for which you are now longing, and you may be thinking that life will be incomplete unless you reach them. What will it matter if, while you are eagerly looking, there shall burst upon your vision the King's country, and the King himself comes forth to meet you, and take you into that life where forever you shall walk with Him in white because you are found worthy.—Watchman.

Restless Heart, Don't Worry.

Dear restless heart, be still! Don't fret and worry so;
God hath a thousand ways His love and help to show;
Just trust, and trust, and trust, until His will you know.

Dear restless heart, be still; for peace is God's own smile,
His love can every wrong and sorrow reconcile.
Just love, and love, and love, and calmly wait awhile.

Dear restless heart, be brave! Don't moan and sorrow so.
He hath a meaning kind in the chilly winds that blow.
Just hope, and hope, and hope, until you braver grow.

Dear restless heart, repose upon His heart an hour.
His heart is strength and life, His heart is bloom and flower;
Just rest, and rest, and rest within His tender power.

Dear restless heart be still! Don't toil and hurry so;
God is the Silent One, forever calm and slow.
Just wait, and wait, and wait, and work with Him below.

Dear restless heart, be still! Don't struggle to be free.
God's life is in your life, from Him you may not flee.
Just pray, and pray, and pray, till you have faith to see.
—Edith Willis Linn.

Missionary.*Arctic Missions.

The first Christian missionaries in the extreme north went to Norway from England in the tenth century. But long before this, Scotch missionaries, known as "Papar," "crept northward to Iceland." It was from Iceland, says Dr. George Smith, "that Greenland was first Christianized. It had seventeen bishops in succession up to 1408, after which the "black death" decimated the settlers, and the Eskimos exterminated the rest. Tradition tells of a Scots missionary who from Greenland found his way to North America, and there died a martyr for the faith."

The best known of all the early missionaries to the far north was Hans Egede, a Norwegian pastor, who was sent forth by the Copenhagen College to Greenland in 1721. With his wife and four children, and about forty other persons, he sailed from Bergen in the Hope. "They found no Greenland, but endless hummocks of ice, which they coasted for weary days, and in imminent danger of shipwreck, until they landed at a small bay, and began to build on what they called 'Hope's Island.'" "For two years Hans Egede had to labor all alone, but he devoted himself to his work with heroic patience. He visited the filthy huts of the Greenlanders in order to win their confidence and their language. He took native youths into his own house, and induced them to learn, offering them the tempting reward of a fish-hook for every letter that was acquired." But slowly he made the gospel known. The King of Denmark, Christian VII, withdrew his aid, but Egede and his wife remained at their work. Smallpox came, and he and his wife received the people into their home, and loved them in spite of their filthy lives, and toiled for them, until, at the age of 73, the old missionary died on the island of Falster. The Moravians had already joined him, and took up his work.

The first missionary to reach Labrador was Christian Erhardt, a Moravian brother, who landed in July, 1752. He and the sailors of his boat were all murdered. Erhardt was followed by Jans Haven, who was moved to go when he heard that Erhardt had fallen. "Not until 1804 did the gospel meet acceptance. Then patience was gladdened by a widespread awakening among the people. Today, from six centers, thirty-five missionaries minister to all but about 200 of the scattered Eskimos, and in summer care for the spiritual needs of the fishermen who visit the coast."

Mrs. Isabella Bird Bishop, the well-known traveler and writer, said recently, in reply to a question whether Chinese made good Christians: "The very best. They stand before you as men, and when they have accepted the Christian faith they will endure any torture rather than renounce it. If a man is converted, he will not rest content until he has converted others."

The residents of the Chicago Old People's Home recently contributed $7.25 to missionary work in Africa. Bishop Hartzell was much touched by the humble offering.

Acts 24:10-16, 24-26. May 17, 1903.

Five days after Paul was sent to Caesarea, Ananias and the elders of the Jews came down for the purpose of accusing Paul before Felix. They employ a certain orator named Tertullus to present their cause. With flattering address to placate the governor, the speaker represents Paul as a "pestilent fellow, a mover of sedition, a ring-leader of the Nazarenes, and a profaner of the temple," who should have been judged according to their law. He also affirms that the prisoner had been taken from them with great violence by the chief captain, and that by him the accusers had been commanded to appear before Felix. The Jews assented to these charges, and Paul permitted to answer for himself, makes the defense recorded in this lesson. We will consider three phases of his appearance before Felix.

1. Paul's Denials.—The charges preferred against him he emphatically denies. He affirms his willingness because Felix was a competent judge, having filled his office for many years. He denies that he had been in Jerusalem long enough to stir up sedition, and that he had gone there for any such purpose. He denies that he was found in the temple disputing with any man, or exciting the people either in the synagogues or in the city. He avers that he came up to Jerusalem to worship, and that his adversaries could not prove the charges made against him. He challenges proof of the accusations preferred.

2. Paul's Confessions.—While Paul boldly denies false charges, he freely admits certain truths which some of his opponents did not sanction. He acknowledges that after the way that some of them called heresy, he worshipped God. He declares that he believed "all things which were written in the law and the prophets." This was more than his opposers could say, and is a creed that will not be accepted by many religious teachers of modern times. He confesses that with many of his adversaries, he cherishes "a hope of the resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust." He affirms that he exercises himself to have an approving conscience, "a conscience void of offense toward God and toward man." Paul's confession that he worshipped God, that he believed the entire Scriptures, that he expected the resurrection and a future life, and that he endeavored to obey his conscience, deserves to be pondered and imitated by all men.

3. Paul's Preaching Before Felix.—The trial of the apostle evidently excited in Felix a desire to know more of the Christian faith. Hence a few days after he sends for Paul, and in the presence of his wife, Drusilla, hears him expound the doctrines and duties of Christianity. Paul on this occasion, as on others, while tactful and courteous, is faithful to his Master and his creed as well as to the souls of his hearers. He does not deal in dry abstraction, nor in orthodox doctrines without any practical applications. He selected the truths presented in their adaptation to the moral needs of his hearers.

Acts 1:13, 14; 21-4, 41. Topic for May 24.

"More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of."

With this sentiment of Lord Tennyson, everyone will agree who has given much time or much thought to the question. Prayer is communion with God, but it is more. It is a force and one that is above all other forces. True prayer sets aside all other forces that are in the way of the accomplishment of that which is prayed for. Of course to exert this power, the prayer must in itself fulfil the conditions which are laid down.

Christ told the disciples to tarry at Jerusalem until they should receive power from on high. This tarrying which extended through ten days, was not an idle waiting, but it was a waiting on the Lord in prayer. The Lord simply fulfilled His promise: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up on wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint." This waiting on the Lord brought down the Pentecostal shower and that meant power. Prayer and power are so closely linked that when one quits praying, he no longer has power. The most powerful life that this world has known anything about was the praying life of the Lord when He was here in the flesh. It was when He prayed that the Spirit descended upon Him; it was when He prayed that He became transfigured and the voice of God told of the favor of the Son in heaven; it was when He prayed that angels came to Him in the garden and strengthened Him; and it was after He had spent the night in prayer that He went among the people doing His heaviest day's work, healing the sick and relieving the distressed.

Other lives which have been strong have been so just in proportion as they have been lives of prayer. Paul was a praying man and we do him the homage of declaring that he was the very greatest of the apostles; John, the beloved, was a man of prayer. It was when he was in the Spirit on the Lord's day that Jesus made His final revelation of Himself and told of the glories of the New Jerusalem.

We will have power as we pray, for prayer "is the faucet whereby the reservoir of heavenly grace is opened into human life; it is the point of contact whereby the circuit of power is completed between the infinite and the finite. By the exercise of its mysterious might Moses and Joshua and Elijah and Daniel and David were enabled to prevail. And the same power today makes it possible for the sainthood of earth, like St. Paul, to do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

But there are certain prerequisites for the prayer that is powerful. "If I regard iniquity in my heart the Lord will not hear me." James tells why so often our prayers are not answered: "Ye ask and receive not because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it on your lusts." Prayer that is selfish will always lack power.

We must ask for those things which are according to the Father's will.

The Damnation of Infants.

BY REV. NEANDER M. WOODS.

A dogma which requires us to believe that since the creation of Adam God has consigned to the torments of hell several billions of little children, who had never committed known sin, or received any warning of their danger, or had any opportunity to know of a Saviour, is so revolting to mind and heart, and so utterly unlike anything else God has ever been known to do, that it would seem one might dismiss it as being unworthy of a formal refutation. But we cannot ignore the fact that in the published creeds of all those churches which are tainted with baptismal regeneration and the more extreme forms of ritualism we find more or less elaborate endorsement of the dogma of infant damnation. As to our own Church, its creed does not state whether all who die in infancy are saved or not: the question is not attempted to be decided. Language is used, however, in regard to elect infants who die in infancy which, to most persons who read it, seems to imply that there are some dying infants who are not elect. I have no idea there is a minister in our Church who really believes and teaches that there are any babes in hell. I also believe that there is not a congregation in our Church that would long retain a pastor who did thus teach. But we have ministers and elders who have such an uncertain feeling as to the teaching of the Bible on this point, that they seem to think it would be almost a crime for us to say in our Confession—what nearly all believe in their hearts—that all who die in infancy are saved. This attitude on their part causes thousands, both within and without our communion, to believe that our Church does at least squint at the damnation of some infants.

One argument for the salvation of all who die in infancy is, that such has been the belief of an overwhelming majority of the most evangelical elements in the Christian Church from its organization to this day. Let it be carefully noted that the dogma of infant damnation was unknown in the Church from the days of the apostles to the close of the fourth century. Not till the great Augustine began to poison the Church with heresy of baptismal regeneration, did parents begin to feel uneasy about delaying the baptism of their children till the annual festival of the resurrection, which before that had been customary. The simple truth is, the dogma of infant damnation was not only hatched in a nest of doctrinal corruption, but it had its most vigorous development during the very darkest ages of the Christian Church. When the Reformation began to dawn upon the darkness of Europe, this dogma began to encounter opposition. Zwingli (who died in 1531) boldly taught that it was a false doctrine. So did Calvin, as now is believed by many. In the Second Scotch Confession, published in 1580, we find this clear testimony, to-wit: "We abhor and detest the cruel judgment against infants dying without baptism."

When the Westminster divines framed their Confession (about 1647), they took a position far in advance of nearly all the Reformed Churches by omitting to endorse the doctrine of infant damnation, and emphatically condemning the heresy of baptismal regeneration, which was the foul nest in which that doctrine had been hatched ages before. At this day it is not likely there is one evangelical minister in a thousand who would preach the doctrine. The late Dr. Charles Hodge, in his Systematic Theology, Volume I, Pages 26-28, uses these words, to-wit: "What the Scriptures teach on this subject, according to the common doctrine of evangelical Protestants is first: All who die in infancy are saved." He then proceeds to prove the doctrine from the Word of God. In his third volume of the same grand work (foot of page 605) he answers the unjust charges of those who say Presbyterians teach the damnation of infants, and declares that he had never, in his life, seen a Calvinistic divine who held that doctrine.

A second consideration which ought to have great weight is that the Bible does not contain one passage which, when fairly interpreted, teaches that God damns any human beings who have done no personal sin. Every threat of damnation has reference to persons capable of knowing what the threat means. The Bible passes sentence on impenitent idolaters, murderers, open rejecters of Christ, etc., but nowhere does it consign little babies to perdition. It does indeed teach that all infants have original sin and a corrupt nature, and that therefore they are by nature under the curse, but those very passages which tell us this sad truth grow jubilant with the glad news that Jesus Christ has more than undone all the harm Adam did for them, using language so sweeping that it keeps us busy explaining how it is the Universalists are mistaken in thinking everybody is saved. It certainly is but fair to demand that those who advance a theory which consigns myriads of little ones to perdition who have never committed actual sin shall furnish the amplest proof of its truth. But this is something which the advocates of infant damnation can never do.

The Bible is not silent as to the salvation of those who die in infancy. In truth, it contains multitudes of passages which can have no real meaning except on the assumption that "it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish." That God can and does renew and save at least some babes our Confession affirms, and the Bible teaches that John the Baptist was regenerate from his mother's womb. Whilst there is no text which expressly states, in so many words, that all those dying in infancy are saved, there are many texts which teach it by fair and necessary inference. We have heard a good deal said of late, by way of disparagement, about "mere inferences," as though inferences were not cogent arguments to employ; and it is time to inquire what this sort of talk means. Are we to understand by it that a doctrine which rests only on inference from Scripture teachings has not a valid foundation, and hence is unfit to have a place in a creed? The genius who made this discovery deserves a regular patent in addition to the pewter button usually awarded in such cases. The pity is he could not have given the Westminster divines of 1643 the benefit of his wisdom, for those misguided men (?) actually based more than two-thirds of their creedal statements upon "mere inferences" from Bible texts. And the funniest part of it was that the very section of the tenth chapter of the Confession, which some of our brethren so profoundly venerate, and which explains how elect infants are saved, is nothing but one of these same "mere inferences." But it is in the first chapter of their Confession that the high water mark of the inference inundation is reached, wherein it is said: "The whole counsel of God, concerning all things necessary for his own glory, man's salvation, faith, and life, is either expressly set down in Scripture, or by good and necessary consequence may be deduced from Scripture." The plain meaning of this is that every utterance of the Bible is liable to have imbedded in it one or more inferences, and that these inferences are just as much a part of the counsel of God as the express statements of the same can be. All that we need insist on is that our inferences be just and necessary. There are, as I sincerely believe, many large groups of texts which clearly and necessarily involve the salvation of the dead babes. From some of them, perhaps, escape might be found in the total annihilation of the infants, but that is, to Presbyterians, unthinkable.

The first group of texts I rely upon has as its main foundation in Romans 5:12-21. And just at this point I wish all of my readers could turn to this passage before going on with this discussion. Here we have the analogy between Adam and Christ, the main point of which is that what was done by Adam for all whom he represented was most gloriously undone by Christ for those whom he represented. By the disobedience of Adam all were made sinners, but by the obedience of Christ all were made righteous, but so overwhelming and far reaching were the triumphs of the Redeemer that where sin had abounded grace did much more abound. Now, that the "all" whom Christ makes righteous and saves cannot mean literally every human being is certain; for the Bible shows a vast company of adults to be lost. Hence we are compelled to exclude some persons from the "all." The crucial question now is: Whom shall we exclude from the "all?" There is no trouble about deciding to exclude all who have knowingly sinned and stubbornly refused to repent, for the Bible requires us to exclude them, and we can see the justice of so doing. But before any man dares to point to the countless millions of little babes, who have never committed a known sin, and demands their exclusion from the number of the saved, and consigns them to a hopeless perdition, I confront him with this challenge: "Show your Scripture for this. And if you have no clear teaching of the Bible compelling you to cut off these babes, I declare you to be guilty of the most diabolical cruelty possible to man." When God says hardened sinners must be excluded from the "all" who are saved, but does not say one word about the babes we are profane meddlers if we undertake to cut off, even in theory, one-half of the human race merely to preserve intact certain theological assumptions which God's Word does not require. 1 John 2:2, Luke 3:6 and 1 Corinthians 15:22, all have a similar bearing on this point. Another group of texts consists of those which reveal to us Christ's tender feeling towards little children. It is not the children of the godly in particular of whom he speaks so lovingly, but of children in general. We have not an intimation that any of the children he spoke of in the texts to be referred to had believing parents; for all we know their parents might have been heathen or unbelieving Jews who came near him out of mere idle curiosity. The parallel passages of Matthew 19:13-15; Mark 10:13-16; Luke 18:15-17 are familiar to all. So is Matthew 18:1-14. I am certain that if a thousand intelligent and good men, who had never heard of the disputes about "elect infants," and had read the whole Bible through devoutly, were asked to state the natural and unavoidable inferences to be drawn from these passages they would, with scarcely a dissenting voice, declare that Jesus had a peculiarly tender love and compassion for helpless little children, as such, regardless of the character of their parents; that he regarded childhood as the emblem of most of the gentler and sweeter virtues of humanity; that what he said was meant to teach that infants who died before being capable of actual sin were the special care of himself and angels; that heaven was literally full of them; and finally, that nothing could possibly be farther from his heart than to allow a single one of these little ones to perish in hell, unless they lived to mature years and wilfully resisted the offers of his grace. This is the Christ of our faith and hope; but the Christ of the infant damnation theory alters his visage till we know him not, and he becomes the stern executioner who hands over countless millions of babes to the devil to be by him tormented forever.

Another group is one which reveals to us God's attitude towards human suffering, and shows that even those trials and calamities which are purely disciplinary chastisements, and temporary in character, are so to speak, extremely painful and distasteful to him. They are, as Isaiah 28:21 puts it, "His strange work,"—uncongenial to him, and sent upon mortals only because the outbreaking sins of men render them necessary. In Ezekiel 18:32; 1 Timothy 2:4; and 2 Peter 3:9 God is set before us as tender-hearted and compassionate, as one who could not inflict one moment's suffering except as a fatherly correction to reclaim and save the offender, or as a just and unavoidable retribution for wilful and persistent wickedness. He has no pleasure in the death of any human being, but finds his delight in seeing sinners turn and live. If this be his feeling towards murderers and high-handed rejecters of his Son, how immeasurably more true must it be towards helpless babes who know no actual sin, and are incapable of knowing how to be saved. But this theory of infant damnation turns all this lovely looking fruit to dead sea ashes on our lips, for it reveals judgment as his main work, which has already consigned one-half of the human race to perdition for no offence of their own, and without ever having given them the slightest chance to escape eternal death. That this awful theory completely robs these texts of all their beauty, and runs counter to all their sweet intimations of the divine compassion no man can successfully deny. And what one of us could ever again preach from that glorious text, John 3:16—"God so loved the world, etc." made to believe myriads of babies were brought into this world just long enough to be eternally damned? We had thought it surely meant God really, deeply loved the whole race of man, Jew and Gentile, adults and infants, so loved them all, and so desired the salvation of all, that he deprived heaven of its brightest jewel, his Son, and sent him down here to die for the whole world; and that nothing could prevent his saving any sinner, even the worst, except a wilful, contemptuous rejection of his grace. But, alas! this dogma opens our eyes to the appalling discovery that God never did have, in all the past eternity, the slightest notion of saving a single unbaptized infant, and that one-half of the race, consisting of babes, had been decreed to be damned while babes, so that they not only couldn't live long enough to commit sin, but could never have one offer of salvation. To ask me to believe that the loving Father depicted in John 3:16 has done this is to ask me to believe that black is white. One gaze into the hell which this horrible dogma paints for us would be enough to dethrone the reason—the memory of the spectacle would be a hell for any man. To watch the writhings, to listen to the unavailing cries, and witness the look of pain and despair on myriads of sweet child faces among the damned would be too much for any of us to bear.

The simple question is: Can our beloved Church afford to maintain an attitude which makes us seem to believe that this doctrine may be true? Does not God's Word show us that it cannot possibly be true? If it does, we ought to say as much in our creed, and forever set this question at rest.

GALATIANS, CHAPTER 6.

Verse 1. "Restore . . . in . . . meekness." In addition to doctrinal error (or perhaps growing out of it) what personal evils must have existed in the Galatian Church? See chapter 5:15, 20, 26. What very different spirit is inculcated in this verse? See also five words in chapter 5:22-23. Does this spirit forbid the exercise of church discipline for heresy or gross sin? See (1) as to heresy, Titus 3:9-10; 1 Tim. 1:20; (2) as to gross sin, 1 Cor. 5:1-5, see what Paul expected to do at Corinth, 2 Cor. 13:2. What two degrees of discipline are prescribed? (1) 1 Tim. 5:20, Tit., 1:13; (2) Titus 3:10 1 Tim. 1:20, Mat. 18:17 last clause. What course does our Lord lay down in a case of personal difficulty? Mat. 18:15-17. What however is to be the end aimed at in all discipline? 1 Cor., 5:5 last clause.

Verse 2. "The law of Christ." Is this the law which Christ commanded or which he himself exemplified? John 13:34, Matt. 20:28. Is this law of Christ to be obeyed in order to our justification or our sanctification?

Verse 3. "When He is nothing." What is the connection between verse 3 and verse 1? See especially the last part of verse 1.

Verse 4. "Prove his own work." What is the effect of self-examination on self-conceit? Show then the connection between verses 4-5 and verses 1-3.

Verse 6. From this verse and the condition of the Galatian Church shown in this epistle would you suppose them to have been "up on the pastor's salary?" What is the requirement of Scripture in this matter? 1 Cor. 9:14. How then do you explain Paul's example: Acts 20:34, 2 Cor. 11:7 last clause, 1 Cor. 9:18?

Verse 7-9. What fundamental natural law holds in the spiritual world? Show that this is both (1) a promise, Ps. 126:5, 6, John 4:36, 1 Cor. 15:58 last clause, Heb. 6:10; (2) a warning, Hos. 8:7 first clause, Prov. 1:30-32.

Verse 8. "He that soweth to his flesh . . . he that soweth to the Spirit." How would you connect this with chapter 5:19-23?

Verse 9. "In due season." What is the great need of the Christian worker? Ps. 62:5, Luke 21:19, Heb. 10:36.

Verse 10. "Do good unto all men." Putting this with verse 6, what practical application of the spiritual law laid down in verses 7-9 is evidently in the Apostle's mind?

Verse 11. "With mine own hand." Were Paul's epistles usually in his own handwriting? See Ro. 16:22, compare 1 Cor. 16:21, Col. 4:18, 2 Thes. 3:17 especially.

Verse 14. "Glory . . . in the cross." What is included in the expression "The cross of our Lord Jesus Christ;" (1) what facts? Acts 10:39 last clause, Acts 13:27-29; (2) what doctrines? Gal. 3:10, Ro. 3:25 first clause, Acts 13:38-39; (3) what influence over our lives? 1 Cor. 1:23, 24, 2 Cor. 5:14 note the word "because," compare Mark 8:34 with the last part of this verse (Gal. 6:14). Give the first lines of four hymns founded on this verse. See New Psalms and Hymns, Nos. 143, 142, 192, 252.

Verse 15. "A new creature." What expressions are used in the Scriptures to describe regeneration? (1) John 3:3, 7, 1 Pet. 1:23; (2) Ezek. 36:26; (3) Titus 3:5; (4) 2 Cor. 5:17 and here; (5) Eph. 2:1, 5; (6) Acts 26:18. What central thought do you find in all these expressions? See Eph. 1:19.

Verse 16. "The Israel of God." Viewed in the light of this whole epistle, what did Paul mean to teach the Galatians by the use of this expression? Compare Ro. 9:6 last clause, Ro 2:28, 29.

Verse 17. "The marks of the Lord Jesus." The word in the Greek is stigmata, the marks of a branding iron on a slave. What does Paul call himself Phil. 1:1, Titus 1:1, Philemon 1? What experiences in his life does he refer to here? 2 Cor. 11:23-27.

"Unto the Galatians, written from Rome." (These words were not a part of the inspired text of this epistle, but were added at some later time). What is there to show that this epistle was not written from Rome, but was written earlier, probably from Ephesus or Corinth? (1) See what earlier epistles of Paul Galatians closely resembles. Compare Gal. 2:16 with Ro. 5:1, Ro. 3:20; Gal. 3:6-29 with Ro. 4:1-25; Gal. 4:6-7 with Ro 8:14, 17. Compare Gal. 1:8-9, Gal. 3:1 with 2 Cor. 11:3, 4; Gal. 4:11:20 with 2 Cor. 11:1-2, 6-20.

(2) See what is shown by the words "so soon removed." Gal. 1:6 compared with Acts 16:6, Acts 18:23.

[The writer has in preparation a supplementary lesson in the form of examination questions on the whole epistle. It is hoped that answers to this may be sent by those who have studied the course, even though they have not sent in answers to the studies on each chapter.]

The esteemed Manufacturers' Record must have been hit hard by the Standard's recent exposure of motives and methods in the attacks upon the Southern Education Board. It accuses the Standard of "far-fetched imputation of motives," but is careful to keep from its readers what motives were imputed. After the campaign which the Record has waged, in which all sorts of mean motives were attributed to the Northern and Southern members of the Education Boards, its outcry against the Standard is excruciatingly funny. The facts remain that the Record, its correspondent, Mr. Edward Ingle, and the papers in sympathy with its commercialism, did place themselves on the side of barbarism in their advocacy of the continuance of child-slavery in the cotton mills.

A Bible Study of the Two Obstacles between Man and Heaven. Part II. The Moral Obstacle.

Rev. S. S. Laws, D. D., LL. D.

3. The Holy Spirit humbles himself on entering the vile abodes of sin to dwell and minister there, as truly as the Son humbled himself by the incarnation.

As the Holy Spirit performs his part of the covenant by engaging in the work of applying Christ's redemption by imparting new life to the souls of men and nourishing it to maturity, He finds all alike in their need of the spiritual birth. But in effecting the consequent transformation and conformation to the image of the Son, he finds two classes of sinners so unlike in the practical treatment required that there is good reason for sharply distinguishing them: These are infants and adults.

a. But who are infants? Legally, they are minors or those who cannot speak in court for themselves. Morally and religiously infants must include all children prior to the age of personal responsibility for wrong doing. An authority observes: "Natural infancy is that period of non-responsibility which, by presumption of law, ends with the seventh year of the person's age." Competence to take an oath, which implies the responsibility for the crime of perjury, and is therefore of the nature of a test of responsibility, was formerly fixed at a given age, but courts now examine a young person offered as witness. The initial age of responsible discretion doubtless varies, but it is a reasonable opinion that it may range generally from five to seven. It seems to be well ascertained that lasting memory does not as a rule go back of about the close of the third year. Mr. Darwin claimed that his memory did not go back of four. If six then be taken as a reasonable average upward limit of the age of moral infancy, the number of children that die before that age is attained may be approximately computed. It is surprisingly large. The total population of the earth is estimated to be about at least (1,500,000,000) fifteen hundred millions. The average age of man is reckoned at thirty years; then fifty million, on the average, must die annually. Births and deaths are about equal, and six years being one-fifth of thirty years, the result is that one-fifth of fifty millions of this age die annually, or over twenty-seven thousand die daily under six. This estimate is probably too low. The question of infant salvation, therefore, is a question of tremendous import.

Infants cannot respond to the outward and ordinary call of the Gospel and are incapable of faith and of works. There is no Scripture warrant to say that they are innocent or sinless, and if so they would not need a Savior nor be fit subjects for Heaven, which is the abode of pardoned and sanctified sinners. "The covenant being made with Adam, not only for himself, but for his posterity, all mankind, descending from him by ordinary generation, sinned in him and fell with him in his first transgression." Hence these infants are participants of the estate whereinto man fell, which consists of the guilt of Adam's first sin, the want of original righteousness, and of that sinfulness which is commonly called original sin. But infants are not chargeable with actual transgressions which proceed from this corruption, as is the case with adults. In the language of Dr. Chalmers, "Adam has transmitted a guilt the same with his own, as well as a depravity the same with his own" (Chal. on Rom., 127, col. b, and 129, col. a). And Jonathan Edwards vindicates the justice of God "concerning the derivation of depravity and guilt from Adam to his posterity," as "plainly and fully taught in his holy Word."

The notion that sin and virtue attach only to acts, and that character is only the product of personal action, is erroneous. Adam as created had character; infants as born have character. Actions presuppose character as the fruit reveals the character of the tree.

If the legal element in our relation to Adam be ignored, the whole subject falls into hopeless vagueness and inexplicable confusion—a mere matter of conjectural moralizing; and just the same results follow as on ignoring, or disregarding as fundamental, the legal element in our relation to the second Adam. In my own language, used by another: "In other words, our legal and not our natural oneness with Adam made his disobedience our disobedience as truly and justly as though the act had been our own personal act; just as our legal and covenant oneness with Christ makes his satisfaction of the law our satisfaction as real and actual as though personal by us." The physical death of infants is the providential and divinely appointed sensible proof positive of their suffering for Adam's sin, and that implies a just and a fair probation in him without, as with Adam himself, a literal and active personal participation in the disobedience (Rom. 5:14).

To speak of sinful character as inherited from fallen Adam is no explanation, but a mere statement of the fact to be explained.

The soul that sinneth, it shall die is not to be understood as excluding the representative sinning in Adam, and those guilty of actual transgression voluntarily become thereby accessories to Adam's sin after the fact. The thing asserted is individual responsibility, and it is denied that there is any such federal relation betwixt children and their ancestors other than Adam as to make them responsible for their misdoing as for his.

But the notion that men are responsible for or receive benefits and evil only from their personal acts is at fault. If true, the business and social and moral world would at once be in a deadlock. Daily observation and experience disprove it. And what holds true of the fall of infants as to personal participation is in like manner realized in their salvation.

Without any individual or actual participation in the procedure, the Holy Spirit sets down the meritorious righteousness of Christ to the account and benefit of the infant as satisfying the legal penalty or curse, and thereupon proceeds to remove the moral obstacle or internal turpitude and power of sin by regenerating and establishing the child in holiness, an internal condition corresponding and in harmony with the imputed righteousness. The guilt of sin is thus blotted out and its dominating defilement is washed away. It is, therefore, because infants are sinful that they can be and are saved by grace. Christ's righteousness calls for and demands all the blessings of salvation as his right by purchase under the stipulation of the covenant of redemption that he should have a seed to serve him. But what is his by covenant right comes to his followers as a gift of grace or benefaction. Internal sanctification or personal holiness of character as matching the accredited righteousness of Christ is inseparably conjoined therewith. They are the obverse and reverse of the current coin of the Kingdom.

There seems to be no reasonable question but that we have in such a case as that of infants a direct or immediate imputation of Christ's righteousness, accompanied or meritoriously followed by a direct new creation by the Holy Spirit in holiness, as certainly as the imputation of Adam's guilt (reatus) was followed by sinfulness (sulpa). How can this new creation be expressed better than in the Westminster Confession of Faith where it says, "Elect infants, dying in infancy, are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, who worketh when and where and how he pleaseth." The antithetic clause is, "So also are all other elect persons * * * incapable of the outward call"—i. e., adult idiots and insane. (Ch. 10:3.)

There is agreement as to inheriting Adam's sinfulness, but some make it merely a matter of natural descent, and then make it the medium or ground of visiting the legal consequences of Adam's sin; others more wisely regard original sin as penal. The only assignable ground of mediate imputation is the false philosophy of realism.

The question whether all infants that die before they attain the age of discretion and moral accountability—that is, before they attain the minimum age and estate of adults—are saved is one that has perplexed the most serious inquirers. Touching that point, the language of the book just quoted is equivocal. Sacramentarians, who have embodied in their doctrine of the sacraments baptismal regeneration, exclude from heaven all but a mere handful of the hosts of dying and deceased infants. It was doubtless against this narrow and arbitrary, this unscriptural and shocking view that the liberal and more scriptural deliverance in the Confession of Faith (ch. 10:3) in regard to elect infants was drawn. The salvation of infants and incompetents is not limited by church ordinances, but is due to the free executive work of the Holy Spirit. It is perfectly certain that all infants are not elect in any true and saving sense, as is sadly manifest in the lives of multitudes that survive infancy and grow up to adult years.

The extent of infant salvation is not directly asserted, nor necessarily implied, in the language "elect infants dying in infancy are saved." The grammatical subject of this sentence is the noun "infants." This noun has two modifying adjuncts, elect and dying in infancy. It is agreed that all the elect are saved, and, of course, this includes all elect infants, whether they die in infancy or not. But it is manifest that all infants are not elect, as is sadly shown by the ungodly lives of multitudes who survive infancy. All poets are men; not all men are poets; all elect infants are saved; not all infants are elect. The other qualifying adjunct, "dying in infancy," is the sole reliance, therefore, for giving universality to this subject, as "elect" does not do so. When a term is taken in its widest sense it is said to be distributed, and the signs of distribution are simple and familiar, such as all, each, every, any, none, not one, no one, etc. This rule is easily applied. Thus: All infants dying in infancy are saved; every, each, infant dying in infancy is saved, etc. In the absence of any sign of the extent in which the subject "infants" is taken, it is not surprising that discord should be the consequence. We see that when the sign of distribution or maximum extension is used there is no opening for a difference of opinion as to whether the subject includes some or all infants dying in infancy. The language of the Confession of Faith, x, 3, does not determine the inference, for it is indefinite.

It seems hardly needful to say that such equivocation should be removed from any credal statement by revision, exposition, or annotation; but it cannot be truthfully denied that the overwhelming faith of Presbyterians who accept the Confession accepts the universal salvation of infants dying in infancy as the teaching of God's Word, however they may differ as to this language of the creed. The explanation of this seems to be, that they have learned this doctrine more from the Bible, by a semi-conscious inference, than from the Confession of Faith.

Unless this doctrine has a reasonable warrant from the sacred Scriptures, however, it has no claim on our religious faith, although it were set forth in an explicit and unequivocal credal statement. As a matter of fact, there is not in the Bible a verbal declaration of the universal salvation of infants, and yet it is believed that the materials of a valid inference in its support, as in other cases, are found therein. I now propose to submit what I shall term a Bible argument in support of this doctrine of the salvation of all "infants dying in infancy."

Let it be understood that to argue simply means to marshal evidence, and that the case before us, like all the practical questions of life, admits of only probable or contingent proof, which has all degrees, from bare presumption to moral certainty. It is only in the narrow sphere of the pure mathematics that we have demonstration which admits of no degrees. In probable reasoning, both reason and faith side with bare preponderance of evidence or presumption. On principle, therefore, it appears fallacious to hold that credal faith accepts only doctrines sustained by moral certainty. Courts and juries demand moral certainty, or the removal of all doubt, in cases of life and death, but it is not exacted in the ordinary affairs of life. It was a wise saying of Bishop Butler that probability is the guide of life, and valid presumption is valid probability. Although it is the lowest, yet it is a sure and safe rung in the ascending ladder of proof and cannot be ignored. If, therefore, in the absence of explicit declaration we, nevertheless, find a valid scriptural inference in support of the salvation of all infants dying in infancy, the conclusion transcends mere conjecture or opinion and becomes a doctrine of faith. Of course, fundamental doctrines require a higher degree of proof than others.

The passages in the Gospels which offer a special study in this connection are the following: Matt. 18:1-35, and 19:13-15; Mark 9:33-50, and 10:13-16; Luke 9:46-50, and 18:15-17.

A large part of our credal doctrines rest on inferences of various degrees. The same is true of all the sciences.

1. These passages in the gospels where the Savior laid his hands on children and took them in his arms and blessed them are made to do heavy duty in this connection, touching the fact and extent of infant salvation, and properly.

There are two distinct instances in which the Saviour gave his disciples an object-lesson from babes and little children. Each of these instances is narrated by Matthew, Mark and Luke. The occasion of one of these child-lessons was the ambitious disputation among the disciples as to their relative pre-eminence in the prospective kingdom; and the occasion, in the other case, was the spontaneous presentation of babes (— and little children (——) by mothers and friends for his blessing; and when the disciples officiously undertook to restrain this movement, and Jesus saw it, he was much displeased, rebuked them and said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the Kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the Kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein. And he took them up in his arms and blessed them, laying his hands upon them" (Mark 10:14-6). The Saviour's object-lesson in the two cases is substantially the same, but in the former case he grouped or classed the humbled disciples with the little children as partakers of a like character and destiny. Nor does there seem to be any sufficient reason for dissociating them when afterwards spoken of as among the believing. "Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted and become as little children ye shall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven." "And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me" (Matt. xviii:3,5). The lesson was cogently enforced in the correction of bigotry and worldly selfishness in warning against the peril of offending these little ones and also their angels who beheld the Father's face and are sent forth to minister to the heirs of salvation, and likewise in impressively illustrating the mission to save the cost by the search for the one sheep that had strayed from the ninety and nine in the fold. This shows the shepherd's zeal for every one in the flock, to save it from peril.

As I understand it, the general conclusion from these lessons and reflections is concisely stated by the Savior in these words: "Even so it is not the will of my (your) Father who is in Heaven that one of these little ones should perish." (Matt. xviii: 14). The exhaustive alternatives in contemplation here are to perish or to be saved. There is no middle ground. All that are excluded from one of these alternatives are necessarily included in the other. The conclusion as stated is a universal negative proposition and excludes, therefore, all the little ones, whoever they may be, from the alternative to perish and includes them in the alternative to be saved. An expedition starts for Egypt and Palestine and a life insurance company, to inspire confidence, guarantees under penalty that not one of the passengers or crew of the vessel should die on the trip or excursion. That would be a guarantee, for whatever it was worth, that all would finish the voyage and return alive.

This verse gives the key-note of these object-lessons.

The only open question is this: Who are "these little ones?" The answer must be found, in part at least, in the contexts out of which this conclusion is drawn. If this concise and comprehensive utterance be accepted as a summation or conclusion, then the reason or argument in support of it must or should be found in the context. There is an exegetical comment on this scripture in Calvin's Institutes, so forcible and conclusive that it is proposed to use some extracts from it as helpful in this inquiry. This will unquestionably give us a Calvinistic send-off. And yet our inference from the accepted comment will probably be different from what Calvin himself would have made. He says: "Wherefore the Lord Jesus, to exhibit a specimen from which the world might understand that he was come to extend rather than to limit the mercy of the Father, kindly received the infants that were presented to him, and embraced them in his arms, chiding the disciples who endeavored to forbid their approach to him, because they would keep those, of whom was the Kingdom of Heaven, at a distance from him who is the only way of entrance into it. * * * But it is necessary to consider the conduct of Christ with more attention than it receives from persons of this class. For it is not to be passed over as a thing of little importance that Christ commanded infants to be brought to him, and added as a reason for this command, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven, and afterwards gave a practical testimony of his will when, embracing them in his arms, he commended them to his Father by his prayers and benedictions. * * * How unjust shall we be if we drive away from Christ those whom he invites to him; if we deprive them of the gifts with which he adorns them; if we exclude those whom he freely admits." Again: "The other cavils by which our opponents endeavor to elude the force of this passage only betray their ignorance, for they argue that, as Christ said 'Suffer little children to come,' they must have grown to such an age and stature as to be capable of walking. But they are called by the Evangelist . . . . and . . . ., two words used by the Greeks to signify little infants hanging on the breast.* 'The word 'come,' therefore, is merely used to denote 'access.' To such evasions are persons obliged to have recourse who resist the truth. Nor is there any more solidity in the objection that the Kingdom of Heaven is not said to belong to infants, but to those who resemble them, because the expression is not of them, but of such is the Kingdom of Heaven. * * * Nothing can be plainer than that he (Christ) intends those who are in a state of real infancy. And, to prevent this from being thought unreasonable, he adds, 'of such is the Kingdom of Heaven;' and if infants be necessarily comprehended, it is beyond all doubt that the word 'such' designates both infants themselves and those who resemble them" (B. IV, 16, 7).

In the confident and unequivocal language of this eminent expositor, "Beyond all doubt," these Scriptures designate infants "in a state of real infancy" and adult believers as alike belonging to the Kingdom of Heaven. "The word such designates both infants themselves and those who resemble them." Together, then, they constitute the group of little ones of whom the Saviour says, Not one of them shall perish. It has already been indicated that "real infancy" in moral and scriptural sense embraces all children up to five or six years of age. The natural and insuperable barrier between this "real infancy" and the minimum adult age is death. Death is the seal of this "real infancy." All infants dying thus in infancy (i. e. within this limitation of age) are, therefore, by the explicit language of the Saviour excluded from the number of those who perish; and, as there is no middle ground, they are included among the saved.

Any special virtue in this presentation arises from a recognition and due appreciation of the relation of this 14th verse of Matthew 18 to the previous discourses about infants. I conceive that this exposition is entirely valid and places the supreme lesson from these colloquies in a true light. (Appendix a, p. 73.)

Here, then, in a most emphatic way in these Scriptures, according to the faithful and plainly valid exposition of John Calvin, on record for 350 years, infant nurslings and little children (. . . . . and . . . . .) are classed with and put on the same footing in the Kingdom of Heaven with adult believers, and together they are by synecdoche alike spoken of without discrimination as "little ones" and "little ones that believe on me." If no little one is lost, then all dying in infancy are saved. The logic is like that of Paul in connection with his shipwreck: "For there shall not a hair perish from the head of any of you." They all escaped safe to land." (Acts xxvii:34,44.)

Thinking the Truth about One's Self.

BY REV. THORNTON WHALING, D. D.

Gal. 6:3. "If a man think himself to be something when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself."

It is God's prerogative alone to give to nothing the currency and the power of something; because He alone can make something out of nothing. He can take empty space and fill it with worlds throbbing with energy and bristling with life. He can take stones and clods and raise up out of them children of Abraham and heirs of the everlasting promises. It is God's delight to take nothing or the "next door to nothing," and breathe into it the breath of life and power, and use it as if it were a host. When God wanted to capture one world, he sent his Son through the gateway of the discredited virgin birth into a stable and to a carpenter's bench, and when he wished to confederate with his Son the forces which were to carry on his work, he passed by the palaces of the Caesar and the schools of philosophy and chose a dozen weather-beaten fishermen, strangers to Grecian culture and Roman power.

The divine method of procedure is embraced in Paul's ringing words, "God hath chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise, and God hath chosen the weak things of this world to confound the things which are mighty. And base things of the world and things which are despised hath God chosen, yea and things which are not to bring to naught the things that are." If God can get hold of a man who really thinks he is nothing, God can fill him with His grace and power and use him with mighty effect to the overturning of the strongholds of Satan. Here is one who offers to fill with pure gold every vessel brought to receive the gift; some being empty vessels and get a golden load; others bring vessels filled with mud and sediment and get a little surface film of the true metal on the top. Some souls come to God consciously empty, and are filled with grace; others come filled with self-satisfaction and there is little room for grace or for the infilling of the divine power.

1. We ought to think of ourselves just as God thinks of us, i. e., we ought to think the truth about ourselves. We are to think ourselves nothing in those points in which we are nothing, and we are to refrain from thinking ourselves something in those points in which we still remain nothing. This duty is a section of a wider duty which obliges us to think the truth upon every subject on which we think at all. We have no right to think as we please, but we are to make our thinking conform to the facts in the case. (a) The question is raised, for example, whether there is a God; a man announces that he does not believe there is, and adds that every man has a right to believe as he pleases. No, sir; not unless he pleases to believe what is right and true. A man may be tickled half to death by some flattering falsehood hugged to his deluded bosom, but his being pleased to believe it does not alter the duty to believe only what is true. (b) A man is asked whether he believes that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. He replies that he does not; and that he has a right to believe as he chooses. No, sir; the only right he has is to believe the truth upon this subject. Of course, men are not to visit him with physical pains or penalties for his unbelief, but God will inflict upon him everlasting death as the penalty of his refusing to believe the truth. (c) The question is asked as to what is the natural character of men. God's testimony is quoted; "there is none righteous, no, not one; there is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God, they are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable." Well, says a man, I do not believe that; it is hard and harsh and overdrawn, and I have a right to believe as I please about myself. No, sir; you have no such right. The only right you have in your opinion as to yourself is to believe the truth about yourself; and if you resolve to believe what is true rather than what pleases, you may find that every word of God's statement about you is true.

2. We are in grave danger of thinking ourselves to be something when we are nothing. There are two of the most powerful allied principles of our sinful nature which lead us in this direction, one self-love, and one pride. We love to think we are something; and our pride, like a hungry vulture, delights to gorge itself with the notion of our worth and value.

(a) We are inclined to over-value our gifts; even when we acknowledge them as coming from God, we are apt to imagine they are greater than they really are. It takes a sane mind, balanced by religious principle, to take its own measure. (b) We are inclined to over-estimate our own attainments in knowledge and skill. One of the great advantages of a great university, with all of its co-ordinate departments, is to show the learner the paltry dimensions of his own knowledge and the boundlessness of his ignorance, and thus to clothe him with the modesty and humility of the true scholar. I once knew a student who announced that he could answer any question asked him; of course, he was a fool raised to the tenth degree. There are only a few who could equal this excess of folly, but there are degrees of it, against which we had better guard. (c) We are all inclined to over-estimate our worth and value from the standpoint of character. In fact, it takes an almighty exercise of divine power upon the mind and heart and will of a sinful man before he will believe the truth in reference to himself. By nature, we are all spiritually dead, destitute of the life of God in the soul; and sin as a corrupting force pervades our entire being, blinding the intellect, perverting the conscience, defiling the imagination, hardening the heart, destroying all spiritual power in the will; and yet the sinner is deceived into ignoring these awful facts, and thinking soft, sweet things about himself. And even after we are converted, God's best efforts have to be directed to the point of keeping us humbly conscious of our spiritual nothingness. This is the well nigh invincible obstacle which fetters God the spirit in building us into redeemed manhood, after the pattern of Jesus Christ.

3. The disastrous result which follows from thinking ourselves to be something when we are nothing.

"He deceiveth himself." The man who thinks himself to be something, when he is nothing, remains nothing despite his thinking and his belief. Here is a man who sees the mirage floating over a sandy desert which he owns, and he thinks he is the proprietor of magnificent plantations graced by palatial residences, but all that he really owns is a sandy, squalid desert abandoned by the very birds and insects. He is a guilty, diseased sinner covered with "wounds and bruises and putrefying sores" from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot; he imagines he is a favored child of heaven, admired by the ministering angels, but he is a wretched, vile sinner despite his belief. Here is an immature, undeveloped Christian, fancying he has made eminent attainments in grace which rank him high in the kingdom, but he is a dwarf or a babe all the same.

This deception is practiced by the man on himself—"himself." It is an awful thing to be deceived by others, but it is more awful still to deceive ourselves. Such deception must be injurious. The clumsy, fumbling, uncertain musician who fancies himself a consummate artist on organ, piano or violin, will spend no weary hours or sleepy night in the effort to reach a musical skill he fancies already his. The man who thinks himself patient, courageous, unselfish, liberal, loving and lovely, although every one else knows him to be impatient, cowardly, selfish, stingy, hating and hateful, will never strive to get these blessed fruits of grace. From this standpoint our Lord said, "Blessed are the poor in spirit for their's is the kingdom of heaven."

It is this self-deception which keeps the soul from Jesus Christ. Sinner, the reason why you do not come to Jesus Christ is that you think yourself to be something, when you are nothing. You think yourself white and fair, when you are black and foul and covered with polluting, abhorrent sins. You fancy yourself a prince, when you are a poor, blind beggar covered with "filthy rags." I can describe you to yourself, and I can tell you of the grace of Jesus Christ, but neither of these do you see. Your only hope is to apply to Jesus Christ. Tell him the story of your case. Tell him you do not see your need of him. Tell him you are not attracted by his claims. Tell him all and ask him to show you the truth about yourself and himself.

"I can but perish if I go,
I am resolved to try;
For if I stay away I know
I must forever die."

Try, O try Him and make the discovery that he will show you your need and then give you Himself to meet them.—Amen.

Watchfulness Needed over College Students.

BY HAMPDEN C. DUBOSE, D. D.

The two thousand young men in our State colleges and universities attract the attention of our Church courts. Diligent students, cultivated gentlemen and many of them earnest Christians, they are to be the leaders in Church and State, and in business circles. The most assiduous attention has been bestowed upon them during the period of boyhood, are they comparatively forgotten by the Church as they approach manhood?

We are not to forget the splendid endowments the State gives to her institutions of learning. The individual right of the parent to select the school to which he sends his son—though the choice may not be the wisest—has never been questioned by Presbyterians. Advice may be given, but in this matter review and control does not pertain to the pastor and session.

It is said that few from these institutions enter the ministry. Has the field been cultivated? During my middle year at the Seminary, the "Oxford Seven"—with four others during my junior and senior years—came from the University of Mississippi, where Dr. Waddell was chancellor, to the School of the Prophets. The "Presbyterian Presidents" in several, and the Presbyterian professors in all these institutions offer a basis for religious work.

Could not the Executive Committee of education take the moral and religious oversight of all our college students, the secretary visiting the universities, and with the assistance of theological professors and special agents kindle the flame of zeal and piety?

A catalogue printed in newspaper form, with the names of all our Presbyterian students, should be published annually. Most of the universities have a denominational list of those who enter their halls. The name of the church should be placed beside the name of the student as a sacred reminder to the pastor of his solemn relation. The catalogue will be the basis for individual prayer to the Lord of the Harvest of the people of God.

Near the college grounds there might be a Presbyterian hall, a home for our boys, where the ladies can give receptions and the pastor meet with the students, and if the dormitories are not suited for religious growth, rooms could be added.

The churches in the college towns should be manned, as many of them are, by preachers who can be "all things to all boys," and attract our students. Whenever the local church is not able to employ an able minister of the New Testament, let the Synod assist in paying the salary. Why should evangelists be sent to ignorant mountaineers and the Church neglect the scholarly youth in college halls? Neither should be left undone. These give the "hearing ear." They are specially pleased with pastoral attention.

The whole question is presented to the Lexington assembly by an overture from the Presbytery of Pee Dee. The object of this plea is that while great religious attention is given to our Presbyterian colleges, the students in our State universities be not neglected.

THE EDITOR'S CHAT WITH THE READER.

Misfortunes never come singly. It never rains but it pours. These proverbs and others to the same effect have been quoted in The Standard office this week. Three of the important people in the printing office were taken sick and the Standard shows its dependence upon the help of the neighbors this week. And, worst of all, the indispensable associate editor had to take a "much-needed rest" as the preachers say in vacation time, and left the editor and the business manager to get along as best they could by main strength and masculine awkwardness. Nevertheless there is good stuff in the Standard this week, despite appearances. Dr. Laws reaches the climax of his argument and sweeps away the moral obstacles between the little ones and heaven, while Dr. Woods draws aside the curtain from a wholly imaginary and unscriptural place, the infants' hell. Considering all the circumstances we do not think that the paper has confined itself too much to over half the population of the present and the eternal worlds.

We are glad to introduce to our readers again Rev. Thornton Whaling, D. D., whose sermon on Thinking the Truth about One's Self, is an admirable one. They can well understand why Dr. Whaling's people think so much of him. Moreover, he is the Gaius of the Assembly this year. Dr. DuBose sends us a needed admonition about the young men in our colleges. The regular departments are up to the standard, while Mr. Lapsley's Bible Outline Study is stimulating and profitable. The Missionary column should be credited to Robert E. Spier, in S. S. Times. We call special attention to the serial story, Papa, the Chaplain, written expressly for the Standard. The Church News Department crowds out The World this week. Next week is the First Assembly Number.

THE THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY OF KENTUCKY

Commencement Exercises.

The Baccalaureate sermon was preached in the First Church, Louisville, Ky., Sabbath evening, May 3, 1903, by Rev. Henry E. Dosker, D. D., Professor-elect of Church History in the Seminary. And a most favorable impression was made upon the large audience that filled the church. The sermon was able and appropriate, and the minister showed himself to be a preacher as well as a man of learning and ability.

A delightful reception was tendered the officers, students, and friends of the Seminary on Monday evening by the Ladies of the first church. This was greatly enjoyed by all who were able to be present.

The regular annual meeting of the Board of Directors was held at the Seminary on Tuesday, May 5th. Reports were received first from the faculty, stating that there had been 56 students in attendance during the year, 45 taking the regular course and 11 the elective, these coming from eighteen states, and representing 30 colleges, and of these 9 are regular graduates and two others complete their elective course; and making a number of recommendations and suggestions; also from the Treasurer, showing the financial condition of the Seminary to be sound and satisfactory. The librarian submitted his report with facts and suggestions as to present and future plans; the Intendant also reported as to conditions in his department, recommending certain changes and improvements. Altogether the reports were very encouraging and satisfactory.

The final exercises were held Tuesday evening in the First Church in the presence of a large audience. Nine young men, having completed the whole course, received the degree of Bachelor of Divinity, and two others certificates. The diplomas were presented in a few well-chosen words by the President of the Board, Rev. Dr. Blaney.

The address to the graduating class was by the Chairman of the faculty, Rev. Dr. F. R. Beattie. His subject was "The Unchanging Gospel for a Changing World." He first referred to the fact that this was the fifth anniversary of Danville Seminary, the tenth of Louisville Seminary, and the second of the Kentucky (consolidated) Theological Seminary; then mentioned several things for which all friends of the Seminary were very grateful, and others that were still needed; and then discussed the subject under two heads: The Message, and The Sphere of its Declaration. He concluded with several practical hints and suggestions. It was an admirable address, thoughtful, appropriate, stimulating, and was well received. Thus closed another successful year.

MISSOURI.

NAPTON. The people of this place and vicinity, most of them belonging to the Mount Olive church, propose the erection of a Presbyterian church here. Subscriptions amounting to $3500.00 have been made, a lot secured, work will be begun at once, and the building will be completed within a few months. This is part of the field of Rev. D. M. Claggett, who is pastor of Longwood and Mount Olive churches; and the rection of this house will be another step forward.

LEE'S SUMMIT.—Several things have recently happened in this church, which have greatly cheered the hart of the pastor, Rev. S. Shiffler, and encouraged all his people. At a recent communion there were thirteen additions by letter, including four entire families, and others are expected.

Work on the new manse they are building has been commenced, all the rock needed is on the ground, and the masons have begun the foundation. When completed, as it will be at once, it will be a handsome, commodious and comfortable seven-room cottage.

A new work was opened the first Sabbath of May at the Cyclone (Union) church, five miles north-east of Lee's Summit. Here Mr. Shiffler has been invited to preach every first Sunday afternoon, and this he will do, possibly giving them preaching twice a month; there was a large and attentive audience present at the first service, who seemed to appreciate what was being done, and arrangements have been made for these services for six months, and the hope is that they will continue a year, perhaps indefinitely. And our correspondent says, "the future prospect for Lee's Summit church was never any brighter than it is at present." And much of this is due to the wisdom, fidelity and energy and hard work of the young pastor.

ARKANSAS.

WASHBOURNE PRESBYTERY.—The Presbytery of Washbourne met at Russellville, Ark., April 8th. There were present ten ministers and seven ruling elders.

Officers.—Rev. J. F. Lawson, moderator, and Rev. J. W. Cobb, temporary clerk.

Dismissed.—Rev. J. Leighton Green to Ouachita Presbytery.

Received.—Rev. R. Q. Riley, from Memphis Presbytery.

Candidates.—Presbytery has two candidates for the ministry under its care. One, Mr. W. A. Ross, completes his course in Union Theological Seminary, Virginia, at the end of the present session. Presbytery recommends that he labor under the direction of its Executive Committee of Home Missions until the fall meeting of Presbytery, without licensure.

Home Missions.—Rev. J. B. Wylie resigned the position of Presbyterial Evangelist, and accepted calls to labor in Springdale and Hazel Glen churches. He was continued as Chairman of the Executive Committee of Home Missions. Rev. J. F. Lawson was added to the Committee in place of Ruling Elder L. S. Lewers. So that the Presbytery's Executive Committee of Home Missions, as now composed, is as follows: Rev. J. B. Wylie, Chairman, Rev. S. W. Davies, D. D., Rev. M. McN. McKay, Rev. J. F. Lawson and Messrs. J. D. Van Winkle, H. C. Reed.

The committee was directed to secure an evangelist, if the way be clear.

Presbytery makes the following announcement to its churches:

That its purpose and policy to be put in operation at the end of this year are, first, that it will not make appropriations to churches which refuse to accept the natural grouping which circumstances, in its judgment demand; and second, that it will reduce appropriations to churches receiving aid every year, and they will be expected to increase their contributions toward their own support.

Systematic Benevolence.—Reports from the churches show a gain both in the number of churches contributing and in the aggregate amount contributed to the causes. The increase over last year is $452.

Ministerial Relief.—Presbytery adopted the recommendations of the Assembly's committee to secure the appointment by the sessions of all our churches, of permanent committees on Ministerial Relief, and to aid in every proper way the formation of a permanent fund to supplement the annual collections for this cause.

Next Meeting.—Bentonville, Wednesday, September 30, 7:30 p. m.

Latin Thesis.—At its fall meeting, Presbytery refused to concur in the proposed change in the Book of Church Order abolishing the Latin Thesis.

NORTH CAROLINA.

CHARLOTTE.—Rev. James I. Vance, of Newark, N. J., preached at the Second Church, Charlotte, Sunday morning and night. Dr. Vance had been attending the meeting of Associated Charities in Atlanta. It is needless to say that the congregations were edified and delighted, and at night the First Church and Tenth Avenue being closed, they filled every seat in both auditoriums and the galleries. The people were glad to have with them also their former pastor, Dr. J. W. Stagg, who was on his way to Virginia. We should be mighty glad to have Dr. Vance back in the Southern Church again.

Commencement Speakers at Elizabeth College.

The most successful school year in the history of Elizabeth College for Women, at Charlotte, N. C., is drawing to a close. The commencement takes place May 31st and June 1st and 2nd.

There are twelve young ladies in the Senior Class this year.

The Rev. W. H. Greever, of Columbia, S. C., will preach the Baccalaureate Sermon on Sunday, May 31st; on the evening of the same day Rev. J. A. B. Scherer, of Charleston, S. C., will deliver an address to the Y. W. C. A.

Rev. T. F. Marr, Charlotte, N. C., will make the Commencement address on the evening of June 2nd in the College auditorium. Alumnae Meeting on the morning of the 1st; Art reception on the afternoon of the 1st; Annual concert evening of the 1st; Senior Class Day Exercises, Tuesday morning the 2nd; and Commencement exercises, awarding of diplomas, etc., and address by Dr. Marr Tuesday evening.

Lenoir, N. C., May 11.—We have had Rev. Walter Edge, of Morgantown, with us. He preached very acceptably to our people Friday and Saturday. To the great regret of our people he was called back to Morgantown Saturday evening by a telegram announcing the death of one of his members. He made a fine impression upon our people both as a preacher and as a man. On Sabbath the ordinance of the Lord's supper and Baptism were administered by the pastor. Three accessions, one by letter and two by examination to our Communion. Three children were baptized. Our new church building is growing slowly but surely and begins to look like "a city set on a hill." C. A. M.

WINSTON-SALEM.

Rev. Dr. R. E. Caldwell has been pastor of the First Presbyterian church ten years. At Sunday morning's services he read to his congregation the following interesting report regarding the membership, receipts and disbursements, etc., for the last church year.

In connection with the reading of the annual report, the pastor called the attention of the congregation to the fact that this was the tenth occasion, on which such a report has been presented during his ministry, thus marking the completion of ten years of service with this beloved people.

He came to Winston March 18, 1893, and was regularly installed pastor the following month, April 23d, by the representatives of Orange Presbytery.

From a special entry made on the records by the Clerk of the Session, under date of March 19, 1893, it appears that there were at that time 247 communicants. During the ten years 560 persons have been received into full membership of the church—262 by letter, and 298 by profession of faith, and a total of $57,777.81 have been contributed for all causes; the first year showing a total of $4,515.46, and the last year a total of $36,755.39.

The most significant fact which has been brought to light from a review of the annual reports for the ten years past is the fluctuation of the membership. To the original number, 247, there have been added 560 communicants, making a total of 807, but the last report shows a membership of only 457 at the present time.

The congregation today is almost a different one from the congregation ten years ago. Of the 247 persons who welcomed the pastor, at the time of his coming here, only 132 remain on the roll, and ten of these are non residents. Of the 560 new members welcomed by the pastor 325 are on the present roll.

DAVIDSON.—The commencement exercises of the North Carolina Medical College began on the 10 inst. with a baccalaureate sermon by Rev. R. E. Caldwell of Winston-Salem. In the afternoon Mr. R. O. Alexander, of Charlotte made the address before the Y. M. C. A.

Dr. Caldwell preached both services here on the Sabbath, his own pulpit being supplied on this occasion by Rev. Dr. A. T. Graham. President Munroe has been disappointed in his expectations about an orator from a distance to deliver the annual address. Dr. H. L. Smith has, however, kindly consented to step in and fill the vacancy, and Dr. Munroe has no fear that the place will not be well filled. The year just closing has been an eminently prosperous one in numbers and in other particulars for the medical college. Dr. Munroe's connection, as President, with the large Presbyterian Hospital in Charlotte has made it possible by special arrangement with a number of the first physicians of that city for his Senior class to have the benefit of the best clinical advantages the city affords. This class is resident now in Charlotte for a large part of, if not for the whole of their Senior year. Davidson continues to give unmistakable evidences of healthy and vigorous growth. The new bank building is going up rapidly. Both Dr. Wooten and Mr. Robt. Shelton are having commodious dwellings erected, the first on Academy street and the second, on Concord. The changes and additions on the campus have been frequently noted, and it is believed that in another week definite announcement can be made of another improvement in the village that concerns both college and town alike.

BARNARDSVILLE.—The bigamist, John Riddle, against whom Jumbo and the deacon got in their work was sentenced in Superior Court at Asheville on 29th inst. to two years in the penitentiary. The sentence was made light in consideration of the criminal's age—an old man man, beyond sixty—a federal pensioner.

The fight on the moonshiners takes on a sensational feature. A moonshiner subpoenaed to appear at court on the 30th ult. intimidated a witness and drove him out of the city (Asheville). Now the moonshiner is in jail charged with perjury and intimidation of witness. We hope and expect to send this man to United States prison.

A preacher in these parts must not only be a consecrated Christian, but also a concentrated one—many offices center in him. It is not pleasant to perform the functions of some of these legislature lobbyist and whiskey raider for instance, and some brethren think for a preacher to appear in such roles is not proper. Maybe not; but then—Two deacons have assumed civic responsibility; one has done valiant service against the bigamist, the other against the moonshiner. The preacher's departure from the beaten paths laid down by the professor of pastoral theology is justified by the developments of these two young men.

Miss Annie McDonald who has already taught two terms at a mission point in Madison County has returned from her home in Michigan and has again undertaken school work. F. O., Paint Fork.

HENDERSONVILLE.—The installation service of Rev. R. B. Grinnan was held on last Sunday Rev. R. F. Campbell D.D., preached the sermon and propounded the questions. Rev. S. U. Newell delivered the charge to the pastor and elder J. D. Murphy charged the people. Altogether an impressive service. There have been seven additions since the first of March. Preparations are being made for a new church building.

WAYNESVILLE.—At our adjourned meeting of Asheville Presbytery on April 28th, the pastoral relation between Bethel church and Rev. Frank D. Hunt was dissolved, to take effect June 1st, and the request of the Waynesville church for services of Mr. Hunt for whole time was granted. This made a forward step in that church and is an advance of over one hundred per cent in pastoral support as compared with what this church has ever done before the present pastorate.

Mr. H. C. Lindsley and Mr. J. P. Swift, as elders and Mr. Geo. W. Maslin and Mr. Charles E. Quinland, as deacons, have just been elected, ordained and installed. "D."

DAVIDSON.

Rev. E. E. Gillespie, representing the interests of Synodical Home Missions, spoke in the church Wednesday evening. The personal canvass made by him and Dr. Graham on yesterday resulted in a gratifying increase of subscriptions over last year's list. The annual prize debate between the two literary societies took place on Tuesday night, and the faculty, acting by invitation as committee of award, decided that the medal should go to Mr. J. W. McNeill, of the Phi. Society, and to Mr. R. K. Timmons, of the Eu. Both of these young gentlemen are members of the Junior class. On Saturday night the same committee pronounced in favor of Mr. W. F. O'Kelly, of Georgia, as the best declaimer among the contestants in the Eu. Society.

The work in the main auditorium of the college has progressed so rapidly that there is no fear that it will not be in readiness for commencement. Its acoustic properties are wonderfully improved. The brick work in the new dormitory, three stories high, is practically complete.

Dr. Smith lectured on Thursday evening before the Scientific Society at Clemson College. Rev. William Black begins a meeting with Dr. Rumble in Salisbury on the coming Sabbath. Dr. Martin addresses the Y. M. C. A. of Charlotte on last Sunday afternoon.

The base ball team ended up their series of games for this season by a trial of skill with the University of Virginia, in Charlotte, this afternoon. The score was 8 to 1 against the Davidson men. They lost two games this week to their Methodist brothers, one on the college grounds at Durham, and the other at Concord, but won against the A. and M. at Raleigh. All these were close and rather exciting contests.

It is a great pleasure to be able to say that Dr. Shearer continues to gather strength, though somewhat slowly. We hope to see him outside of his home before many days, now that the spring season advances toward warm weather.

WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY UNION, ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

The sixth annual meeting of the Woman's Foreign Mission Union, of Orange Presbytery, convened at Lexington, N. C., on March 25th to 27th. The little town was in gala dress, and its people welcomed our little band of women, devoted to our Master's great cause, with their warmest smiles of welcome. On Wednesday night Rev. J. H. Grey, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Lexington, gave the delegates glad welcome to the town, and the Church then followed an hour in exchange of kindly greetings.

On Thursday morning the first regular session of the Union was held. The exercises were most interesting and helpful as, indeed, were those of all the sessions of the meeting. It would be impossible to describe them in their order, but should you ask me the real object of the Union, and of what good these meetings are, I should answer: Its object is to bring missionary workers together, thus bringing them into closer touch with one another, and by interchange of thoughts and opinions, inspire them with a greater interest in this great work for our Lord. It hopes too, to arouse a greater interest in and love for those who leave home and loved ones to carry the story of the Cross to those who still sit in heathen darkness.

Through its delegates the Union hopes to infuse new life, new zeal, new love into their respective societies, and thus inspire and encourage them to greater efforts to aid in sending more of Christ's messengers to preach His Gospel and teach his love to those who know them not.

I wish that not only one or two, but a half dozen members from each society might attend the Union meeting and share in the great soul uplift. I think it would be the best spur to their missionary zeal that could be applied.

Among the best features of the day sessions were the papers on different subjects connected with missionary society work, read by both our own delegates and our friends of other denominations. It would be hard to say which of these papers was most helpful, for each had its own particular merit. I wish to mention a few which particularly impressed me. Mrs. Wiley, of Winston, who, with her husband, the late Calvin H. Wiley, have been among our greatest missionary workers, read a paper on "The Rise of Missionary Societies in Orange Presbytery," showing how the tiny seed sown in good ground may become the great tree. The Pioneer society since the war was, I believe, founded at Winston in 1875, by Mr. and Mrs. Wiley.

This was followed by Mrs. Wheeler, of Chapel Hill, on "The Tithe." In her paper she ably defended the claims of the tithe and showed in a happy and convincing manner that "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof."

"God's Open Door in Missions," by Mrs. Menafee, of Graham, showed us the great headway the legions of our Lord are making in the dark places of the earth, and told of the mountains of difficulty climbed, the lions slain, the dragons routed, the hitherto impenetrable barriers broken, and the entrance of Christ's messengers into the strongholds of heathendom and idolatry.

Miss Frances Burkhead, of the Lexington Methodist Society, gave us new interest in missionary literature, and her paper on missionary literatures was, in my opinion, one of the most helpful features of the Union. A companion to this paper was "A Plea for More Missionary Knowledge" from the Lexington Reformed Society.

"Personal Responsibility," from the Baptist Missionary Society of Lexington, brought us face to face with the fact that every member of our respective societies is personally responsible for its success or failure; that it must be "a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together" in our work.

The concensus of opinion in conferences as to the best means of arousing interest and zeal in societies, and as to what has been most helpful in this matter was, more study and more knowledge, well-laid plans, and strict adherence to those plans. In this, as in all other conferences concerning the advancement of our work, all present showed great enthusiasm and interest. In these conferences, as in all the work outside the actual business details, we were greatly encouraged by the presence and hearty co-operation of our sisters of all the other denominations of Lexington, and we offer them our warmest thanks for their assistance.

Thursday afternoon was devoted entirely to the Children's Society of the Presbyterian Church of Lexington, and their entertainment was one of the pleasantest features of the Union.

I was very glad to notice among those present at all sessions, not only those whom time has touched with its silver wand, but young women, and young girls eager to learn, eager to do more each day in our missionary work.

The election of officers on Friday resulted in the unanimous re-election of Mrs. R. D. Blacknall for president, and Mrs. Murray as secretary and treasurer. Mrs. Sterling Jones, of Greensboro, was made vice president of the Union.

The Union could have made no happier choice than that of Mrs. Blacknall for their leader for another year. None is better fitted to wear the honor. She rules with ease, grace, and dignity, and by her own deep interest in and devotion to her work, infuses life into each member of the Union, and Mrs. Murray is none the less a happy choice in her position of secretary and treasurer. It would be difficult to fill her place.

The evening sessions consisted of a missionary address by Rev. Mr. Moore, of the Japan mission, on Thursday night, and an address by Rev. Egbert Smith, of Greensboro, on Friday night. Both addresses were much enjoyed.

Dr. Smith's address closed this year's session of the Union, and on Saturday all of us who had enjoyed the two days' feast of the good things of the Union, the music so generously bestowed by Lexington's sweet singers, the addresses, and last, but not least, the delightful hospitality of Lexington's fair people, went to our several homes feeling that our two days' visit to Lexington had been especially blessed, and that it had been good for us to be there.

Mrs. Frank H. Curtiss.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL INTEREST IN FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

During the sessions of Fayetteville Presbytery, Sanford, N. C., the Presbyterial Committee of Sabbath Schools held a popular meeting Wednesday morning, April 15th. The following subjects were discussed:

1. "Three Reasons for Greater Interest in Sabbath School Work," Rev. John K. Roberts.

2. "A Model Presbyterian Sunday School," Rev. John M. Rose, D. D.

3. "Our Assembly's Graded System," Rev. C. G. Vardell. A large congregation gave close and earnest attention to the speakers. The committee was highly gratified with the sympathetic interest in the work shown by the Presbytery.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That our sessions be urged to adopt as far as possible the plans devised by the Assembly's committee for the improvement of our Sunday School.

2. That our Sunday School be urged to organize the "Teachers' Meetings" and "Home Study Department."

The committee has decided to hold three Sunday School institutes in Fayetteville Presbytery during the summer. Popular and enthusiastic Sabbath School speakers will give addresses. Six Sunday Schools, at least, must be represented in each institute. One of the institutes has been already promised. The committee would suggest early applications for the institutes, so that the best speakers may be secured.

John K. Roberts, Ch'm S. S.,

Fayetteville Presbytery, Carthage, N. C.

UNION CHURCH, MOORE COUNTY.—The regular spring communion will be held the fourth Sabbath in May. Mrs. T. D. McLean was received by letter from the Carthage M. E. Church. We are grieved to hear of the sad death of one of our former members, Mrs. Flora McLochlin, nee Flora Ferguson, wife of Rev. Murdock McLochlin, pastor Presbyterian Church Childress, Texas.

Our pastor, Rev. John K. Roberts, announced some weeks ago that he would teach a singing school if each family in the congregation would buy the new hymn book, note edition. In less than ten days over fifty copies had been distributed and now on Fridays and Saturdays the congregation meets at the church to practice the new hymns.

Carthage, N. C.—On the first of April the weekly envelop system, which had been adopted by our session, went in to operation in our church. Our church building is now undergoing extensive repairs.

THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY UNION OF ALBEMARLE PRESBYTERY, convened in the Baptist Church, Kinston, N. C., April 15, 1903.

On account of a meeting of Albemarle Presbytery at the same time in the Atkinson Memorial Church, we met in the Baptist Church, which was so kindly tendered by this sister denomination.

Mrs. Hatcher gave us a most cordial welcome in behalf of those friends, which was appreciated by the Union. The first session was opened with singing of the Doxology, followed by the reading of God's Word and prayer by Dr. Morton. Mrs. E. D. Brown, of the Atkinson Memorial Church, welcomed us with many happy words. We then heard the response by our president, Mrs. W. W. Faison, who voiced the sentiment of each member of the Union in her hearty appreciation of this welcome. The president, Mrs. Faison, then took the chair.

The minutes of the Rocky Mount meeting, read by Miss Annie Isler, Recording Secretary, were approved. We then heard the president's address. There were in this address many suggestions which, if carried out, would add greatly to the work of the Union.

Reading of the Constitution and By-Laws by Mrs. N. O'Berry.

After singing the hymn, "To the Work," the morning session closed with repeating the Lord's Prayer in concert.

The afternoon session was opened with devotional exercises by Rev. Mr. Jarvis, who does missionary work in Hyde county. He gave us a very encouraging account of his work and asked the united prayers of the Union next year.

The minutes of the morning session were read and approved.

Report of Secretary and Treasurer read and approved. The Executive Committee was commended by the Union for the economical way in which they had carried on the work of the Union. Report of the Corresponding Secretary was read by Mrs. Monroe and approved. The Corresponding Secretary (pro tem.), Mrs. W. J. Jones, was commended by the Union for her faithful work.

We gather the following items from reports: Number of Societies represented, 20; number of members, 534; number of magazines taken, 90; number of children's magazines, 72; amount received from all sources, $871.10.

Miss Fov, of the Newbern Church, reported that their Church had undertaken the support of a Seminary student to work in Pamlico county during the summer months.

We then heard a most instructive paper, "The Study of Missionary Literature to Promote Interest in Mission Work," by Mrs. Telfair, of Washington, read by Mrs. Hargrave.

A motion was made by Mrs. Brown that a special agent be appointed in societies in which no such exists, to solicit subscriptions for missionary magazines. This motion was approved.

We then heard a paper, "The Necessity of Training Young People in Missionary Work," by Mrs. Candace R. Emmett. The Union so thoroughly appreciated this paper that the Secretary was instructed to send to the Standard for publication. The afternoon session was closed with singing of the 284th hymn.

Thursday morning's session was opened with devotional exercises by the President. Minutes of the afternoon session read and approved after correction. We then heard a most excellent paper, "Missionary Work in Our New Possessions," by Mrs. Samuel Watkins. A motion was made and approved that this paper be sent from Society to Society so that every member may have the benefit of the information in the paper.

We then had a solo by Miss Wooten, which was greatly enjoyed by the Union.

The Union next heard a most beautiful Memorial of Dr. Rankin, by Mrs. Orren Williams, read by Mrs. Bauman. The Union returned thanks to Mrs. Williams for the paper and to Mrs. Bauman for reading it.

A motion was made and approved that the corresponding secretary be requested to write to each society who has not a specific object asking them to take a share in Rev. Mr. Jarvis' salary and report to the secretary. Reports from committees were then heard.

The resolution thanking the Baptists for their church, drawn up by Mrs. Hartman and Mrs. Rowland, were read and adopted.

Resolutions thanking the citizens of Kinston for their kind hospitality, were read and adopted.

We then heard the report from the committee consisting of Mrs. Bauman, Mrs. Hargrave and Mrs. Watkins, recommending the officer for the coming year, as follows:

Mrs. Ball, President; Mrs. Shaw, Corresponding Secretary; Mrs. Brown, Recording Secretary and Treasurer.

These officers were elected by a rising vote of the Union. The Union was closed with a Missionary Rally at Atkinson Memorial Church, lead by Rev. Dr. Morton, on Home Missions, and Rev. James Henderlite, of Henderson, on Foreign Missions.

VIRGINIA.

UNION SEMINARY NOTES.

During his recent stay in Richmond, conducting a series of meetings at the various shop districts and at Centenary Methodist Church, Rev. Geo. L. McNutt, known as "the dinner-pail man," gave one hour of his time to the student body, addressing them on "The Relation of the Church to the Masses." This gentleman has had a unique experience, graduating from Princeton Seminary, occupying several pastorates and then retiring from the ministry to learn the problems of the laboring man by entering the ranks. Mr. McNutt is an interesting, earnest speaker, and had the closest attention of his hearers, stating the problem at length, but proffering no solution. He is a strong advocate of the abolition of all class distinction in religion and the so-called working man's church. While all are not ready to accept his ideas without careful weighing of the same, there was abundant food for thought in his remarks.

During a business meeting of the Missionary Society of Inquiry (Y. M. C. A.) April 20th, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, W. M. Walsh; Vice President, Warren H. Stuart; Secretary, H. L. Ross; Treasurer, M. F. Pilson. Mr. H. L. Ross was also elected as superintendent of the Jackson Ward Mission, among the colored people, with two assistants, Messrs. Clark and Currie. The Society has secured the use of a room on the ground floor of Watts Hall for a Missionary Museum, and is to be congratulated on the gift of a curio case from the covenanters of the Second Presbyterian Church, of Richmond. It is expected that this will be an attractive feature of the Society's work next year.

The editorial staff of "Union Seminary Magazine" for session of 1903, 1904, is as follows: Editor-in-Chief, John I. Armstrong; Associate Editors, C. S. Matthews and James P. Smith, Jr.; Missionary Editors, W. M. Walsh and W. H. Stuart; Book Editor, E. C. Caldwell; Review Editors, Prof. W. W. Moore, D. D., LL. D., and Prof. T. C. Johnson, D. D., LL. D.; Business Manager, H. H. Munroe.

On last Monday morning at 9 o'clock, Dr. A. L. Philipps gave some valuable suggestions as to the practice of missionary principles during vacation months. His spirit is always overflowing to the benefit and inspiration of others. At this meeting a letter was read and adopted, expressing to Dr. R. P. Kerr the high esteem and affection of the student body for him, and the earnest wish that he might see his way clear to remain in Richmond.

The programme for commencement as already announced is: Sunday evening, May 10th, mass meeting of all the Presbyterian churches in the city at the First Church, and a missionary address by Rev. Eghert Smith, D. D., of Greensboro, N. C.; Tuesday evening, 8 to 11, reception to the Senior class and members of the Board of Trustees in Spence Library; Wednesday morning, May 13th, graduating exercises, addresses by Dr. Whaling, of Lexington, Va., and Dr. Howerton, of Charlotte, N. C. Sunday night, May 3d, is the time appointed for the annual communion service, arranged especially for the Senior class. Dr. Russell Cecil, of Richmond, will conduct the service. This is always a significant and most impressive occasion.

Dr. and Mrs. G. B. Strickler gave a delightful reception to the student body on the evening of May 1st, a fitting introduction to the series of examinations beginning next Tuesday.

Absent: Six ministers, 1 licentiate, and 32 churches not represented.

Officers: Rev. Jesse W. Siler, Moderator, and Rev. Josephus Johnson, temporary Clerk.

Corresponding Members: Rev. T. R. Sampson, of the Presbytery of Dallas; and Rev. J. D. Wilson, of the Presbytery of Tombeckbee.

Dismissed: Rev. Edgar L. Storey, to the Presbytery of Dallas; and Rev. Jas. G. Cunningham, to the Presbytery of Brazos.

Ordained: By a Commission December 14, 1900, F. A. Barnes, at Cotulla; and by the Presbytery April 13, 1903, Elias Trevino, Reinaldo Avila, and Abram Fernandez.

Installations: Rev. F. A. Barnes was installed December 14, 1902, at Cotulla, and the three Mexican ministers will be installed at such time as shall be arranged by the Commissions appointed for the work: Rev. Elias Trevino at Corpus Christi, pastor of the Mexican Church; Rev. Abram Fernandez, pastor of the San Antonio Mexican Church; and Rev. Reinaldo Avila, pastor of the Gongales Mexican Church.

Calls: Besides the above four calls for pastoral services, a call for the pastoral services of Rev. J. D. Wilson, of the Presbytery of Tombeckee, was presented from the Kerrville Church. This call was by the Presbytery found in order, and permission was given the Kerrville Church to prosecute the call before the Presbytery of Tombeckee.

Organized: The San Antonio Mexican Church was organized January 4, 1903, with 43 members, 3 ruling elders, and 1 deacon.

Next Meeting: At Lockhart, Texas, September 30, 1903.

Commissioners to General Assembly: Principals—Revs. A. G. Jones and R. D. Campbell, and Ruling Elders Thos. I. Ramsey, of the Utica Church, San Antonio, and V. H. Henderson, of the Yoakum Church. Alternates—Revs. R. E. Vinson and Jesse W. Siler, and Ruling Elders A. R. Harwood, of the Gonzales Church, and A. C. Millican, of the Luling Church.

Presbyterial Sermons: The doctrinal sermon was by Rev. C. G. Christian, and in the absence of Rev. E. L. Storey, appointed, Rev. S. J. McMurry was selected to preach the sermon on Missions. The appointments for the next meeting are: Rev. A. G. Jones, to preach the doctrinal sermon on "The Abrahamic Covenant," and Rev. W. T. Ahrenbeck, to preach the sermon on Missions.

Chairmen of Permanent Committees: Home Missions, A. H. P. McCurdy; Foreign Missions, R. M. Hall; Education, S. J. McMurry; Publication, L. E. Selfridge; Colored Evangelization, B. I. Dickey; Sunday Schools, J. R. Jacobs; Young People's Societies, F. A. Barnes; Church and Christian Education, S. M. Luckett; Bible Cause, C. G. Christian; Relief Fund, J. W. Siler; Sabbath and Sabbath Observance, A. G. Jones.

Contributions: For Church causes, $3,657.00, as against $5,192.00 in 1902, and $8,402.00 in 1901. In 1901-10 Churches contributed to all the causes of our Church in; in 1902, 8 Churches contributed to all; this year only 8 Churches contributed to all the causes.

Sessional Records: Very few Sessional Records were approved without exceptions. Sessions and Clerks of Sessions should exercise growing care not only that right actions be taken, but also that they be rightly recorded. A little care to profit by the criticisms or exceptions by Presbytery would help much in keeping the Sessional Records.

Sabbath: By the appointment of the Permanent Committee on Sabbath, Rev. A. G. Jones preached an excellent sermon on the subject of Sabbath Observance. This was much more profitable than a "scatter-gun" programme of more than twice the length.

Missionary Union: The Woman's Missionary Union of this Presbytery made its first report to the Presbytery and presented a copy of its Constitution and By-Laws for the approval of the Presbytery. Article IV. of the Constitution makes the Union subject to the control of the Presbytery. The report was received, the Constitution and By-Laws were approved, and all the churches of the Presbytery were urged to encourage the women to organize themselves into Missionary Societies, and connect themselves with the Presbyterian Union.

Sunday Schools: Reports were received from 38 Sunday Schools with 348 officers and teachers and 2,784 scholars, with only 72 scholars admitted to the communion, as against 40 scholars last year with 342 officers and teachers, 2,803 scholars, and 157 admitted to the communion.

Overture: On overture to the General Assembly was unanimsly adopted, asking the Assembly to instruct the Assembly's Committee of Publication to use the Authorized Version of the Scriptures in preparing the "optional" forms for use in opening and closing our Sunday Schools.

Assembly's Home and School: Presbytery asks each pastor and supply to take a collection for the debt on the Home and School, very soon.

The meeting was a delightful one, being in a delightful place and among delightful people.

Many encouraging reports came up from the churches, but there are discouragements enough to keep us very humble, and keep us looking unto the Lord for His blessing upon His work.

We feel that quite a forward movement has been made in the Mission work among the Mexicans. If the Assembly could see this work as it is, we feel sure that it would be more important in the judgment of the Assembly, and more adequate, proportionally adequate, appropriations would be made for it.

I urge every minister and ruling elder to cut out these minutes and put them where he can refer to them. The smaller amounts contributed and the smaller number received into the Church on profession of faith, call for serious consideration on our part.

Stonewall J. McMurry, Stated Clerk.

TYLER.—Our reports to Presbytery show 39 additions to roll. Sabbath School has enrolled in school in H. Department 186, against 102 the year previous. An interesting Westminster League of 33 members has been organized. Contributions to benevolent causes of the General Assembly $500, against $202 last year. To the Lord be all the praise.

THE PRESBYTERY OF BROWNWOOD.—This Presbytery met at Sterling City, Texas, April 8, 1903, at 8 p. m., and was opened with a sermon by the Moderator, Rev. R. E. Hardin, from Acts 1:14.

There were present, in all, eight ministers and six Ruling Elders.

Officers: Ruling Elder A. J. Baker, Moderator; Rev. E. D. Brown, temporary Clerk, and Elder Jno. I. Guion, Reading Clerk.

According to previous appointment, Presbytery devoted Thursday morning to the consideration of the Office and Duties of the Ruling Elder. The brethren appointed to take part had all made careful preparation, and each one contributed to the success of the programme.

Rev. R. M. Hall, of the Presbytery of Western Texas, was invited to sit as a corresponding member. Permission was given to the Ballinger church to employ him as stated supply for the next six months.

Rev. R. E. Hardin reported that he had organized a Church at Miles Station with fourteen members and two Elders.

The claims of Daniel Baker College were presented before Presbytery, and a committee was appointed to formulate the mind of Presbytery in regard to the college.

This committee reported as follows: The Presbytery of Brownwood has heard with pleasure of the increasing success of Daniel Baker College, and express their entire confidence in the management of the institution.

We congratulate the Board of trustees on having secured such an efficient president and faculty.

We would commend the college to the sympathy and financial support of all our people, and recommend that they patronize the institution by sending their sons and daughters there to be educated.

Jno. I. Guion.

Evangelistic powers were given to the following ministers for one year: Rev. R. E. Hardin, A. O. Browne, Malcom Black.

The following resolution of thanks was adopted by a rising vote:

Deaths.

McINTYRE.

Daniel McIntyre died at his home with his son, Alex McIntyre, Corona Ala. April 1st 1903 in the 75th year of his age.

He was born in the bounds of old Buffalo church, Moore county, N. C. September 1st 1828.

Reared by pious parents, he became a member of this church in which he was brought up, in early life.

He was educated at the famous Bingham School and spent his whole life in teaching. His school at Buffalo church was for a long period of its history of considerable note. Here he accomplished his greatest and most enduring work. Subsequently, he taught at Lillington, Harnet county, and at Cameron this county. His work was not confined to North Carolina for he taught outside of his native state, notably in Florida.

Mr. McIntyre was happily married in the summer of 1855 to Miss Annie Jane McLean, a cultivated and lovable woman of Harnet county. A sister of Hon. D. H. McLean, Burlington, N. C.

She with all of a large family of children except two, Mr. Alex McIntyre of Corona, Ala. and Mrs. Warren of Appleton, S. C. have gone from the scenes of death to the life beyond.

The body of Mr. McIntyre was laid to rest among his dead in Buffalo cemetery. He leaves at least one brother Rev. Kenneth McIntyre of Fayetteville Presbytery and one sister Mrs. Mary Furgurson, Cameron, N. C.

Mr. McIntyre loved truth and righteousness for their own sake with a constancy and steadfastness beautiful to behold. He served his God and generation until in a sunny hale mature age he suddenly fell on sleep and was gathered unto his people. He was a faithful, humble, active, conscientious follower of Christ. His sunny affable nature and cultivated mind gave him a power to do good nor did he neglect the opportunities thus presented.

A Ruling elder in the church practically all his life, he took an active part in all the interest of the church. While he conducted his flourishing school at Buffalo he was a telling factor for good in the church of his youth and early manhood. Afterwards he was an elder in the Cameron church and later in the Presbyterian church of Ocala Fla. And was the elder commissioner from his Presbytery to the New Orleans Assembly. His life was a useful well spent one. He has simply passed on to his eternal reward.

UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA SUMMER SCHOOL.

June 15 to July 10, 1903.

The tenth annual session of the University Summer school for teachers, at Chapel Hill, N. C., will begin on the morning of June 15 and close on the afternoon of July 10. All the resources of the University will be open to those who attend, and neither labour nor expense has been spared to make the Summer School a greater educational force in the upbuilding of the state than ever before.

The new movement for better teaching and better schools in North Carolina is not now merely a city movement or a county movement. It has made itself felt more or less in every town and in every county, and has thus become in the broadest sense a state movement. For this reason it is especially desirable at this time that the teachers of the state, who are the leaders in the new movement, should be given the opportunity to know one another, to compare methods, to hear reports, and to familiarize themselves with the peculiar needs and conditions of their own state. The University Summer School will be the meeting place for teachers from every section of the state. More than thirty-five hundred teachers have attended the Summer School in the past, and the attendance this year bids fair to be much larger than for any other single year.

A glance through the courses here offered will, it is believed, convince the teachers of North Carolina that it is the part neither of wisdom nor of economy for them to leave the state in order to secure the best results in text-books, in methods, and in the practical direction of their work. Certificates will be issued to those members of the school who regularly attend and satisfactorily complete course of not less than twenty-four periods.

In arranging the course of study, a special effort has been made to provide for the following:

1. Those who are preparing to teach in either public or private schools.

2. Those who wish to study under experts the best methods employed by up-to-date teachers.

3. The teachers in both public and private schools who desire to broaden their scholarship or to improve their methods of instruction and discipline by a careful study of the theories and results of practical and successful teachers.

The subjects taught range from the practical every-day topics of the kindergarten and primary school to the more advanced studies of the college and university. Forty-three courses are offered.

In pedagogy and allied subjects, instruction will be given by Professor M. C. S. Noble, of the University Faculty; Professor Arthur B. Morrill, Principal of the State Normal School of Connecticut; and Professor H. H. Horne, of Dartmouth College, New Hampshire. In the English language and literature, composition and rhetoric, courses will be given by Mr. M. G. Fulton, of the University of Michigan; Mr. George M. McKie, of the University Faculty; and Dr. C. Alphonso Smith, of the University Faculty. In history, ancient and modern, courses will be offered by Dr. Franklin L. Riley, of the University of Mississippi; Dr. C. L. Raper, of the University Faculty; and Professor Noble, of the University Faculty. In mathematics, elementary and advanced, instruction will be given by Professor Julius I. Foust, of the State Normal and Industrial College, Greensboro, N. C.; and Mr. M. H. Stacy, of the University Faculty. In geography, courses will be given by Professor R. M. Brown, of the New Bedford Schools, Massachusetts. In geology and mineralogy, elementary courses will be given by Professor Collier Cobb, of the University Faculty. In physics and manual training, four courses are offered by Dr. J. E. Mills, of the University Faculty, and Professor W. C. A. Hammel, of the Maryland State Normal School. In botany, courses will be given for the teachers in common and graded schools by Dr. N. D. Shoemaker, of the Welch Neck High School, Hartsville,

In drawing, elementary and advanced courses will be taught by Miss Melville Fort, of the State Normal and Industrial College, Greensboro. In chemistry, elementary and advanced work is offered by Dr. A. S. Wheeler, of the University Faculty. In the construction of programs in kindergarten work and in manual training for kindergarten grades, two courses will be given by Miss Margaret A. Johnston, of the Beaufort Training School, N. C.

In Greek grammar and in Greek literature in English, Dr. Eden Alexander, of the University Faculty, offers three courses: in elementary and advanced Latin, Professor William L. Poushee, of Richmond College, Va., offers two courses: in French, Dr. J. D. Bruner, of the University Faculty, will conduct two courses for teachers; and in German, Professor W. D. Toy, of the University Faculty, will give two courses in grammar, translation, and literature.

In addition to the regular courses offered, a series of general lectures will be delivered dealing directly or indirectly with school work or with the larger aspects of literary or scientific culture. The following speakers have consented to deliver one or more of these lectures: Governor Aycock; Dr. Charles D. McIver, President of the Normal and Industrial College, Greensboro; Professor James Y. Joyner, Superintendent of Public Instruction; Dr. Henry Louis Smith, President of Davidson College; Professor John B. Carlie, of Wake Forest College; Dr. Edwin Mims, of Trinity College; Dr. Anomas Hume, of the University Faculty; Dr. Kemp P. Battle, of the University Faculty; Judge J. C. McRae, Dean of the University Law School; Dr. J. W. Bailey, Editor of the Biblical Recorder; Dr. Wallace Butterick, Secretary of General Education Board; Rev. Edgar Gardner Murphy, Executive Secretary of the Southern Education Board; and Dr. Richard H. Lewis, Secretary of the North Carolina Board of Health.

Many subjects of vital importance to the teachers of the State—such as the proper maintenance of the grounds and buildings, the erection of better schoolhouses, methods of lighting, heating, and ventilating, what trees and flowers to plant—find no place in the regular school curriculum. These subjects will be discussed by Dr. B. N. Shoemaker, Dr. R. H. Lewis, and other well-known specialists. All the lectures free.

The University Library, which contains more than 40,000 volumes, will be open daily to members of the Summer School. There will be furnished, free of cost, a most excellent opportunity for collateral reading on any of the courses of the study and for general reading in a wide range of subjects.

The Physical, Chemical, Botanical and Zoological Laboratories of the University are modern in their equipment and are at the services of the Summer School. Laboratory methods and experience are necessary only to the most successful teachers of today, and can be readily acquired only by actually doing laboratory work under the guidance of skilled instructors.

The University buildings are located in a well shaded campus of fifty acres, and Chapel Hill, with an elevation of five hundred feet, shady streets and pure, cool drinking water, offers a delightful summer home.

There will be no charge for tuition in the Summer School. An incidental fee of five dollars will, however, be charged. The new University dormitories, furnished with electric lights, baths, and other modern conveniences, will be thrown open for the accommodation of teachers. Board and rooms in the dormitories will be furnished at $10 a month. It will be necessary to bring sheets, pillow cases, and towels.

Board and rooms may be obtained in the village at from $9.00 to $10.00 for the four weeks.

The railroads will sell round-trip tickets to Chapel Hill for one first class fare and twenty-five cents additional. These tickets will be on sale June, 12, 13, 15, 16, 22, 29.

This is but an outline of what will be the best equipped and the most largely attended summer school ever held in North Carolina.

He was little and old and gray and black and bent. With an axe in hand he came to cut a load of wood.

"What's your name?" I asked.
"Archie Brown, boss," was his reply.

"How old are you?"
"Gwine on eighty-fo', sah."
"Are you a Christian, Uncle Archie?"

"Yesser, an' Ise a Baptis' too."

"Well, Uncle Archie, if the Lord were to call you to go home this afternoon, would you be willing to go?"

A reminiscent look swept over his face, and, pushing his hat back, he leaned on his axe, chuckled to himself, and said: "Boss, I'm dest a-waitin' wid my footsies ontangled."

A few months later I heard that Uncle Archie was dead, and I thought it must have been easy for him to leave.

The Home Circle.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.
(Concluded.)

The most striking monument in the Abbey, though Walpole calls it "more theatrical than sepulchral," is that of Lady Elizabeth Nightingale. In the Dr. W. W. Moore in Children's Friend, lower part of the sculpture a skeleton figure, Death, has broken through the iron doors of the grave, and, grasping the ledge above him with one bony hand, is in the act of hurling his dart with the other at the lady, who with her husband occupies the upper part of the sculpture and who is represented as falling back into the arms of her horror-stricken husband, while he makes frantic but futile efforts to shield her from the stroke. Wesley said Mrs. Nightingale's tomb was the finest in the Abbey, as showing "common sense among heaps of unmeaning stone and marble"; but Washington Irving, while granting that the whole group is executed with terrible truth and spirit, says it appears to him horrible rather than sublime, and asks, "Why should we thus seek to clothe death with unnecessary terrors, and to spread horrors round the tomb of those we love? The grave should be surrounded by everything that might inspire tenderness and veneration for the dead; or that might win the living to virtue. It is the place, not of disgust and dismay, but of sorrow and meditation."

We have seen that Lord Macaulay speaks of Westminster Abbey as "the great temple of silence and reconciliation, where the enmities of twenty generations lie buried." In the same strain Sir Walter Scott writes:

"Here, where the end of earthly things
Lays heroes, patriots, bards, and kings;
Where stiff the hand and still the tongue

Of those who fought, and spoke, and sung;

Here, where the fretted aisles prolong
The distant notes of holy song,
As if some angel spoke again,
'All peace on earth, good will to men';
If ever from an English heart,
Oh, here let prejudice depart!"

These are fine sentiments, and certainly the policy of the authorities of the Abbey has been broad enough in some respects, far too broad indeed, as many think, in the matter of admitting the bodies of men of skeptical views and evil lives to lie here alongside of the great and good in God's house.

But in some other respects the policy has been a narrow one. The erection of a monument here to Louis Napoleon, the late Prince Imperial of France, who fell in Zululand while fighting in the cause of England, was prevented by what has been called "the illiberal clamor of an ignorant faction." By the way, within the precincts of the Roman Catholic Oratory of Brompton, in west London, stands a statue of Cardinal Newman, the most distinguished of modern apostates, who forsook the English Church for the Romish; it was intended for Oxford, but was refused by the University, and not allowed a place in the streets of London. These two are not very good examples of the kind of narrowness to which I refer,—I for one am in full sympathy with the treatment accorded to Newman's statue,—they are simply instances which naturally came to mind in connection with the general subject. I will give an example presently of the complete triumph of prejudice in the exclusion from the Abbey of the greatest man of action that England ever produced.

Meantime, as leading up to that, let us note the remark of Dr. Gregory to Dr. Johnson when, in 1737, the monument of Milton was placed in the Abbey: "I have seen erected in the church a bust of that man whose name I once knew constituted a pollution of its walls." He was referring to the action of Dean Spratt in cutting away a part of the fulsome epitaph on the tomb of John Phillips, which compared him to Milton, of whom he was a feeble imitator. "The line, 'Uni Milto secundus, primo que paene par,' was effaced under Dean Spratt, not because of its almost profane arrogance, but because the royalist dean would not allow even the name of the renegade to appear within the Abbey—it was too detestable to be read on the wall of the building dedicated to devotion." The line was restored under Dean Atterbury," and, as already noted, a bust of the great Puritan genius was installed in the Abbey a few decades later, so that the triumph of prejudice in this case was short-lived.

The story reminds one of the action of General Meigs in removing the name of President Davis from the record-stone of the Cabin John Bridge near Washington. This magnificent aqueduct bridge, one of the largest and most beautiful single stone arches in the world, was erected by Jefferson Davis while Secretary of War for the United States, and of course his name, with those of the then President and other high officials of the government, was placed on the completed structure. When the Civil War came on and Mr. Davis was elected President of Confederate States, General Meigs had the misfortune to lose a son in battle in Virginia. One can feel profound sympathy with him in such bereavement, but does it does not seem a small contemptible thing that he should then have had Mr. Davis name chiselled off of the bridge in revenge? And has not his action, like Dean Spratt's defeated itself? The blank made in the inscription excited curiosity and gave rise to questions, which brought out the whole story, and thus reminded many people who might otherwise have forgotten it, what eminent services Jefferson Davis had rendered to the united country before the unhappy division which made him the President of that portion of it with which his greater fame is now associated.

To but few men in her long history is England so deeply indebted as Oliver Cromwell, Clarendon's History of the Rebellion, written by a bitterly hostile and prejudiced contemporary, effectually blackened Cromwell's character for some two hundred years, the misrepresentation being continued by other royalist writers, such as Sir Walter Scott in Woodstock. Carlyle's publication of Cromwell's own letters proved that he had been grossly slandered, and put it beyond question that the Protector a sincere and Godly man and a true patriot, as well as the greatest man of action that had ever lived in England. This is the view taken of Cromwell by the more recent biographies of him, which have been coming from the press in significantly rapid succession, such as Hood's Gardner's, John Morley's and President Roosevelt's. So that in several senses Cromwell is coming to his own again, though his work seemed at one time to have failed utterly and to have been swept away by the restoration of Charles II to the throne.

It is of the indignities visited upon Cromwell's remains at the time of his restoration that I wish to tell you. The great men of the Commonwealth and several members of Cromwell's family were buried in the extreme eastern end of the Abbey. After the Restoration they were disinterred from this honorable place of sepulcher, and the only member of the Protector's family who was allowed to remain in the Abbey was his second daughter, Elizabeth Claypole, "as being both a royalist and a member of the church of England."

The bodies of Cromwell, his son-in-law, General Ireton, and Bradshaw the judge who had condemned Charles I., were dragged through London on sledges and hanged at Tyburn, and their heads were set up on the high roof-gable of Westminster Hall, the very building in which Cromwell had been made Lord Protector of the Commonwealth. It is safer to kick a dead lion than a living one. Fancy these valiant royalists treating Cromwell that way in his lifetime! Cromwell's head, having been embalmed before his burial, "remained exposed to the atmosphere for twenty-five years, and then one stormy night it was blown down, and picked up by the sentry, who hiding it under his cloak, took it home and secreted it in the chimney corner; and, as inquiries were constantly being made about it by the Government, it was only on his death-bed that he revealed where he had hidden it. His family sold the head to one of the Cambridgeshire Russell's and in the same box in which it still is, it descended to a certain Samuel Russell," who, being in need, sold it to James Cox, the keeper of a famous museum. Cox in turn sold it, about the time of the French Revolution, for $1,150, to three men who made a business of exhibiting it at half a crown per head in Bond Street, London. At the death of the last of these three men, it came into the possession of his three nieces. These young ladies, being nervous at keeping it in the house, asked Mr. Horace Wilkinson, their physician, to take charge of it for them, and finally sold it to him; and in his house at Sevenoaks, Kent., the head of Oliver Cromwell remains to this day.

It is a ghastly story, though I have been careful to leave out the most gruesome details.

Today, immediately in front of Westminster Hall, where his head was first exposed in dishonor, stands a bronze statue of the Great Protector, with a Bible in one hand and a sword in the other,—erected within the last five years,—and doubtless the day will come when a monument of "the greatest prince that ever ruled England" will be given its rightful place in Westminster Abbey.

The Song-Sparrow.

There is a little bird I know so well
It seems as if he must have sung
Beside my crib when I was young;
Before I knew the way to spell
The name of even the smallest bird,
His gentle-joyful song I heard.
Now see if you can tell, my dear,
What bird it is that every year Sings "sweet-sweet-sweet—very merry cheer."

He comes in March, when the winds are strong.

And snow returns to hide the earth;
But still he warms his heart with mirth

And waits for May, he lingers long While flowers fade and every day
Repeats his small, contented lay;
As if to say, we need not fear
The season's change if love is here
With "sweet-sweet-sweet—very merry cheer."

He does not wear a Joseph's coat
Of many colors smart and gay;
His suit is Quaker brown and gray,
With darker patches at his throat.
And yet of all the well-dressed throng
Not one can sing so brave a song.
"It makes the pride of looks appear
A vain and foolish thing to hear "Sweet-sweet-sweet—very merry cheer."

HAMBURG CHILDREN.

A curious and pretty custom is observed every year in the city of Hamburg to celebrate a famous victory which was won by little children more than four hundred years ago. In one of the numerous sieges, Hamburg was reduced to the last extremity, when it was suggested that all the children should be sent out unprotected into the camp of the besiegers as the mute appeal for mercy of the helpless and the innocent. This was done. The rough soldiery of the investing army saw with amazement, and then with pity, a long procession of little ones, clad in white, come out of the city and march boldly into their camp.

The sight melted their hearts. They threw down their arms, and, plucking branches of fruit from the neighboring cherry orchards, they gave them to the children to take back to the city as a token of peace. This was a great victory, which has ever since been commemorated at Hamburg by a procession of boys and girls dressed in white, and carrying branches of the cherry-tree in their hands.—Selected.

LITTLE FAILINGS.

Do you know people who are as good as gold, who have odd little ways of their own, little feelings that annoy and inconvenience their friends? Some have trying little habits that rasp others, and put them in a fidget much as they love those who are unconsciously forgetful, others that have trifling tricks of manner that make their friends exclaim inwardly: "Oh, I wish you wouldn't!"

There are foibles as well as faults; there are weaknesses as well as wilfulnesses, and all these must be borne with. In some cases they may be corrected, but oftener these small idiosyncrasies are fixed in the character, are flaws even in the fine gold. We must make the best of them; we must make the most of the gold and not magnify what mars it.

When we are tempted to be impatient with these little failings, it is good to remember that others have to bear with ours. How do we wish them to do it? Let us mind the Golden Rule then. If others were perfect, how would they get on with our imperfections? If others were perfect, would we feel at ease with them? If we had nothing to bear with, could we be truest friends?—Young People.

SCOTTISH LEGENDS.

Many and varied are the legends and traditions connected with the Scottish villages. But perhaps there is none more interesting than the legend of the "Maiden Stane" of Tullibody, which lies in the "kirkyaird" of that place. The stone coffin (stands near, what is now, the back of the church, and was erected in 1450 to the memory of a lady called Martha Wishart, daughter of Laird of Myerton. Tradition has it that this young lady fell in love with the priest, who reciprocated her feelings. As the laws of the Church would not allow marriage the priest broke the unpleasant news to her, with the result of her breaking her heart and hurrying her prematurely to death. Love in those days was pretty much like the article we know today—Earth knows no rage like love to hatred turned, Nor hell no fury like a woman scorned.

On her death bed the lady instructed her friends to bury her remains in a stone coffin and to place the coffin near the door of the church, so that the false lover going out and in to Mass could not fail to see it and remember. But the priest was equal to the occasion, and at once had the doorway closed up, and a new one made at the south end. He thereby evaded the resting-place. The stone and doorway stand today in evidence of the truthfulness of the legend.—Robert Reid, Glasgow.

Those who regret now that so little is now said of Mr. Gladstone in the whirl and bustle of this fast age will be glad to be assured that, after all, the "Grand Old Man" is not forgotten, for the people are still making pilgrimages from all parts of the world to Hawarden. Pleasant stories of this splendid man are continually coming to light. One Sunday, in the depth of winter, a friend going for a preaching appointment met the great statesman just emerging from a very dirty by-lane, and was asked by him where he was going. "To Dublin, sir." (not the Irish capital, but a mining village near.) "And how is it that you are out on such a day, sir?" "Oh, I came home from London last night, and they told me old Mrs. W., the carrier, was very ill, and after church I couldn't rest till I had seen her."—Episcopal Recorder.

So long as Faith and Freedom reigns,
And loyal Hope survives
And gracious Charity remains
To heaven lowly lies;
While there is one untrodden tract
For Intellect or Will,
And men are free to think and act,
Life is worth living.

The bartenders of Chicago have organized a total abstinence society. From figures presented at the last meeting it was shown that fully one-third of the bartenders and saloon owners of the city are abstainers. In many of the large saloons the proprietors will not employ a man who drinks. There are so many things one might say about this that one is discouraged from saying anything. —Exchange.

The name November comes from the Latin novem—nine—as it was the ninth month in the Roman year.

November was one of the most important months in connection with the religious rituals of the Romans.

It was known among the Saxons as Blot month, or hlod month, on account of the general slaughter of cattle at this time for winter provisions and sacrifice. This custom was not confined to the Saxons, but prevailed in northern Germany, and even as far South as Spain.

PAPA, THE CHAPLAIN, OR ENDURING HARDNESS.

BY LEIGH.

CHAPTER V.

Night had fallen now on Osage: a night illumined on all sides by lurid flames on which hung clouds of smoke which shut out the sky and yet were spangled with innumerable stars, which as they soared higher and yet higher might have been the multitudes of cherished hopes escaping at that moment from wrung and tortured hearts.

So thought the Chaplain as he saw the torch applied successively to the railway buildings, Wayside Hospital, with the adjacent warehouses, from which private dwellings becoming ignited the conflagration threatened to sweep the portion of the town which had thus far escaped. The howls of the reckless and tipsy soldiery could be distinctly heard applauding the rush of the flames. Within Mr. Dysart's sitting-room where all beneath his roof were gathered to share his watch, no words were spoken—only the weary, haggard faces betrayed the anxiety within. For who knew at what instant the great buildings of the Orphanage next door might be a sheet of fire: Heaven help us all then! At last, however, the flames seemed weary of their work of destruction, and sank smouldering into gray ashes. Then, at length, the minister spoke. "Dear Friends, the immediate danger is over; let us give thanks and commit ourselves to Him who keepeth Israel." What a relief to those over-burdened hearts of these watchers as they fell upon their knees, as in fervent words their leader prayed for those who but this hour had been rendered homeless, and invoked a blessing upon them from Him whose glory it was to be a Helper of the Helpless. He prayed for that peace of God to keep themselves beneath this roof, so that they might be able to lie down and sleep even this night, so that they might rise prepared for the morning's duties. And so calmed and uplifted, they separated to seek the repose so much needed.

It seemed but a moment when at earliest dawn the notes of the reveille floating in roused the sleepers to consciousness. It's strange sounds at once recalled the situation, and after hurried toilets, our two young friends, Jack and Polly found themselves at an upstairs window, looking down at the movements in the yard. I said the fences had been burned; but one, a partition of clapboards, had been spared, and along this, on beds of straw or leaves dozens of men rolled in blankets had been spending the night. They were springing up now, and in a few minutes breakfast was prepared over the replenished fires, and hastily eaten. The white tents of the Hospital collapsed, and bedding was rolled up for transportation. Time was snatched for last bits of destruction till now overlooked.

"Look Jack," said his sister, "they are rolling that buggy right over the fire! What can they be doing? O, they've broken the caldron with an axe, and now they're setting fire to the buggy. Ain't they mean?" "Mean?" returned Jack, looking unutterable things, "That is nothing; just wait till they're gone and I can go out and show you."

But the music was striking up again, another call this time, and now the Yankees began a quick-step for the road when as the drum beat continued they fell into ranks, and before the childre fearily knew what was happening, were off; gone as swiftly as they had come, leaving but a wreck behind. And what words were those shouted back time after time—"On to Columbia!" Days after when the news of the terrible disaster was brought back from what had been a fair and beautiful city they knew why mamma had hid her face, and papa had murmured a prayer.

It was some hours later that Jack called from the piazza, "Come, papa, Polly, everybody! You can't guess what I have to show you!"

"I think I can," called back Mr. Dysart. "I expect it's Sherman's black army."

"How did you know, papa?" asked Jack, as several of the household appeared.

"It always travels just in the rear of the other army. Here, Polly, let me set you up where you can see," lifting her on the railing, "for it is a curious spectacle." And so it was, yet one to which I have never seen an allusion.

The whole air was filled with crows and blackbirds which were descending to the ground. They alighted in battalions and their officers flying down separately at once began running up and down as if addressing the ranks, and to judge from their caws and scolding tones, threatening a dressing down if they did not drill better. The others responded by a series of marchings and evolutions absurd enough, and yet so imitating the movements of soldiers as to have an uncanny look. There seemed to be millions of them, and after a short time spent in parade drill they were soon busily employed in picking up the remnants with which the earth was strewn.

"Papa," said Jack once more, "look what has been wasted, and now we must all starve"

His father pointed to the birds. "Consider the fowls of the air; your Heavenly Father feedeth them; fear not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows."

"Papa," came a whisper close to his ear, "I want to tell you a secret so nobody will hear."

"Well, my little lady, I think you may venture now," was the jesting spirits rising; had not the invading answer. For Mr. Dysart found his force passed by, and left them all safe, within the walls of their home? So he bent his head, smiling, to hear Polly's small secret, but his face showed his surprise when she had made known Tom's whereabouts; and how she had first hidden them, and then prevented their being discovered. He held her close and kissed her, then stood thinking. The army was gone, it was true, but aside from the danger of straggling parties, always possible, and more to be dreaded than the regular corps, there was the rear guard which would follow in a day or two, and which might pick up the traces of the fugitives. It would be better that before then, there should be a flitting.

On seeking an interview with our friends of the loft he found them entirely of his mind. Captain Bronson especially was eager to depart being fearful that should they be run to earth here, the favorite punishment of the torch would follow. It was finally agreed that they should resort to a certain spot in the swamp, known to Tom and sometimes used in his hunts as a camp. Jack having, by this time, informed himself of the whole affair, begged so hard to go too that he finally obtained permission, his father realizing that if any messages had to be carried Jack would be the person least likely to attract attention. And all objections from the weaker sex being over-ruled a proud and happy boy set forth, with the three men just at nightfall, on the long tramp to their new hiding-place.

CHAPTER VI.

Walking two and two and leaving some distance between so as to attract the less attention, they passed through the streets deserted and obstructed with rubbish.

The whole centre of the town was a scene of desolation; dwellings, stores and public buildings were a mass of smoking ruins. Poor Meek paused with a groan at the charred wreck of his former place of business, but was allowed scant time for lamentation, Captain Bronson linking his arm in his own, and hinting that he saw a very suspicious looking lubber around the corner, dragged him forward at such a gait that they were soon clear of the town, and crossing the river, gained the causeway.

The night was dark, though clear, and the weather mild for the season. All was silence except the rushing of the river, and the sound of their own footsteps on the rough logs.

Jack was familiar enough with the place by day, but he had never before been in the swamp at night. The darkness of itself gives a kind of spell to such a spot; the sense of danger, too, is ever present: an incautious step, a dizzy head, a slight stumble and you are in those slimy depths which may never surrender their prey alive. Nor were these their only perils, as the boy knew well enough;—so it was with the tense nerves and keen delight which such natures as his experience when there are risks to be run, that he kept pace with Tom.

Suddenly in the very middle of the way appeared a large black form, a little darker than the surrounding gloom, ambling rapidly towards them. He gripped his brother's arm. "Look Tom," panted he, motioning in the direction of the object.

"In the name of wonder, a bear? Is it possible? And my pistols unloaded! Perhaps, as they are not apt to attack man, I can scare it back into the swamp. You get behind a tree, youngster!" Tom, ignorant of the look of scorn bestowed upon him by the "youngster," sprang forward, swinging his hat, and yelling in his most ferocious style, landed directly in front of his bearship.

Whereupon Bruin immediately rose on his hind legs and said, "Ki, Marse Tom, ain' yo' shame o' yo'self to try an' scare po' nigger dat way?" The young man recoiled with a joyous exclamation. "Eph! I might have known it was you; but what do you mean by trying to pass yourself off for a bear; you'll maybe get yourself accidentally shot, old fellow!"

The negro was a queer looking creature enough to the group now surrounding him. His gigantic body was set upon stumps of legs so that he seemed a bronze image resting on the ground. His eyes rolled and his teeth shone in intense enjoyment of the fright he had given Marse Tom. He seemed, however, embarrassed in replying to Tom's question, and scratched his head as he stammered, "Wh, you see, Massa, eber sence Ole Eph hab his feet frosted an' dey sawed his laigs off its kinder slow tabelin', 'specially in de dark, an' so, when its lonesome dis way, sometime I jes nabigates like I was den, but I low I'll be kinder kearful arter dis. But," turning the subject by a return question, "Mars Tom, whar you gem-mens gwine dis time o' night?" "Bear hunting, Eph," laughed Captain Bronson, as they prepared to move on.

"But now please jes' hol' on a minit, Massa—if you gemmens is—" he hesitated—"wantin' to camp out to-night, you take Ole Eph along! It'll save me a long scramble into town, an' short rations when I gits dar, I spec; Ole Eph he know de swamp; keep you a good fire with little smoke; an' cook, an' all, and Mars Tom here, he know Eph, he know he kin trust him." Tom reflected. He thought the negro was trustworthy, and if risk there were it would be safest for the day or two they would be out to take him along with them. So he answered briskly, "All right, Eph, if you're willing to cook, you may go along."

"Ki," chuckled the negro as he stumped along after the party, which now entered the recesses of the swamp. "Eph ready 'nuff to cook if he kin only fin' de vittles. Dat's de ting! Nuttin' to do to git a bite; no cow to milk; no pigs to feed; all dead. 'Don't you wan' me to spade de gyarden. Missy? mos' spring.' 'No, Eph, fence all down, seeds all 'stroyed.' No switch to min' at de railroad, track all gone; spec Eph hab to start now all along o' dem blame Yankees." With this running monologue he beguiled the way, as under Tom's skilful leading they threaded the solid path which twisting about led through the morass. Presently Meek, hitherto silent, rebounded with a yell, "A snake!" he cried, shaking all over with terror. I stepped on it, a monster!" The sea-captain gave him a friendly shake and then leaned against a tree in a convulsion of merriment. "Great snakes!" he gasped at length. "You'll be the death of me yet Meek—snakes at nine o'clock at night, the middle of February!"

"Suppose we go on," exclaimed Tom impatiently; "we are by no means safe, and have made a lot of noise tonight; all things considered." "Dat's so," muttered the negro, "Marse Bronson usen to de freedom eb de sea dunno how to modiform him remarks," and with few more words spoken, they pushed on in the midst of what would appear to the uninitiated an impenetrable morass.

Here Tom produced a lantern and lighting it, swung it to the one large tree which their asylum afforded. It was a tulip-tree, hollow in the centre, and the negro, diving into its trunk drew forth a rusty utensil or two, an axe, and various odds and ends. After scrutinizing them in turn, he grinned significantly at the whites and explained briefly, "Some-time come here to fish." Then taking the axe he collected stuff for a fire and speedily had one burning.

Meanwhile the others divested themselves of the budgets they carried—a blanket apiece and a small store of provisions. Having given the negro some supper, they gathered about the fire, as notwithstanding the lateness of the hour no one for a time seemed disposed to sleep and amused themselves alternately by telling stories and chaffing Eph. This worthy had, ever since his crippled condition been practically free: his master allowing him to employ himself as he pleased, and even the night patrols usually allowing him to pass unhindered. It was rumored that Eph often, in consequence, was able to assist runaways who were harboring in the swamps, though nothing definite was known, and his various excursions were accounted for by his never failing strings of fish, which he would hold up, recounting with great gusto his good luck.

He parried with equal ease the jokes of Tom and Captain Bronson tonight, until drowsiness overtaking the party, one by one they rolled themselves in their blankets and lay down with their feet to the fire. Then chuckling to himself the black sought his own corner, and was soon fast asleep.

It seemed but a moment to Jack, though in reality day was dawning, when he was awakened by a vigorous shaking of his shoulder, and raised himself to find his brother bending over him. "Jack," he said, "Captain Bronson has been taken suddenly and violently ill. Could you go for a doctor, or for some medicine? But no, it is wrong to ask you. You come and sit by him while I go." "No sir," cried the boy, leaping to his feet. "I'm awake now, just tell me what is wanted, and I'm off." Tom looked at him admiringly. Jack, in fact, was eager to be gone and to be of use. "Well then, youngster, I thought instead of going to Osage you had better strike for Dr. Moss's house. It is not very far, and you have been there, and can't miss the road. The Doctor, while he doesn't practice regularly, is fully competent to do so, and will gladly help us. I have written a line here as to the trouble. Shall I go with you to the road?" He would have held the childish hand he grasped, but the boy snatched it away and laughed out "No" and scampered down the path. He knew the path by daylight, having been here once before and had quickly gained the road. Before, however, he had traversed twenty steps of it, a rough hand held him fast, and a rough voice cried, "Hold up there!"

A GENEROUS GIFT.

"One doesn't have to be worth a great deal of money to make costly gifts," said a man who goes about the streets with wide-open eyes. "I've been interested in a little street urchin that I've met going to and from the hospital on the street cars. There was something wrong with one leg—he had met with an accident, I believe—and he was receiving treatment through the free clinic. He had a ticket entitling him to treatments, or something of that sort, and he was never tired of praising 'his doctor.'

"One day I saw him on the car with a very shabby man whose arm was in a sling. Tim nodded to me brightly enough, but avoided conversation. When I met him two hours later he was alone.

"How is the leg?" I asked.

"Gettin' along first-rate. See that fellow with me on the car? He got an awful arm, but I know my doctor can make it all right, and I asks him if he'd give that fellow half my treatment. He didn't want to at first, but bime-by 'greed; so that's where I was takin' him. Me? O, I'll get along somehow. Why, mister, that man's got a wife and three little girls to take care of!"

"No, I don't suppose the little fellow will be allowed to lose any part of his cure, but he doesn't know that; and think of the gift he is making!"—Wellspring.

THE FIRST DIAMOND AT KIMBERLY.

It was not until the autumn of 1870, that the first diamond was found on the present site of Kimberly. There was a shallow, circular depression, known as Dutoitspan, on the edge of which a farmer named Van Wyk lived in a cabin plastered with mud. This hut had no architectural pretensions, but, in its way, it went beyond the luxury of Fifth Avenue, for the mud with which it was daubed was sprinkled with diamonds. One day Van Wyk's children prospected the plastering of their home and extracted several gems. The farmer and his friends began digging at the spot from which the mud had been taken, and found more diamonds.

Miners swarmed in, and a new camp, called Dorstfontein, sprang up. In June, next year, the Kimberly mine proper—one of the four great deposits that form the present Kimberly group—yielded its first diamond.—From "Romances of the World's Great Mines," in the May Cosmopolitan.

brooks awake and chatter over their pebbly beds, the leaves peep from their nests, and the birds return with their songs.

The Anglo-Saxons called April Ooster, or Easter-month; the Dutch called it Grass-month.

'April hath come on,
And the cool winds feel softer.'
N. P. Willis: April.

The custom of sending one upon a bootless errand on the first day of this month is perhaps a travesty of the sending hither and thither of the Saviour from Ananias to Caiaphas, and from Pilate to Herod, because, during the middle ages this scene in Christ's life was made the subject of a miracle play, at Easter, which occurs in the month of April.

It is possible, however, that it may be a relic of some old heathen festival. The custom, whatever its origin of playing off little tricks on that day, whereby ridicule may be fixed upon unguarded individuals, appears to be universal throughout Europe.

In France one thus imposed upon is called un poisson d' Avril (an April fish). In England, such a person is called an April fool; in Scotland a gowk. Gowk is the Scotch for cuckoo and also signifies a foolish person. It is curious that the Hindoos practice precisely similar tricks on the 31st of March, when they hold what is called the Huli festival.

'Sweet April showers,
Do bring May flowers.'

Tusser: Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry.

The lovely month of May is next.
'May is here!

The air is fresh and sunny.'
T. B. Aldrich: May.

Some say the name May is taken from Maia, the mother of Mercury, the winged messenger of the gods. Others say, and I think this is more correct, that it comes from a Latin word Magius, meaning to grow, so that May is the month of growth. As far as I can learn the name was in use among the Romans long before they knew anything either of Mercury or his mother.

'Sweet May hath come to love us,
Flowers, trees, their blossoms don.'

Heine: Book of Songs.

The first of May, May-day, was the chief festival both in ancient and modern times.

In England it was customary during the middle ages, for all, both high and low—even the court itself—to go out on the first May morning to pick flowers. In the reign of Henry VIII the heads of the corporation of London went into the high grounds of Kent to gather the May—the king and his queen, Catherine of Aragon, coming from Greenwich, and meeting these respected dignitaries on Shooter's Hill.

In every town was erected a fixed pole called the May pole, as high as the mast of a vessel of one hundred tons, on which, each May morning they suspended wreaths of flowers, and round which the people danced in rings all day long.

'No doubt they rose up early to observe

The rite of May.'

Shaks.: Midsummer Night's Dream.
'For I am to be Queen o' the May, mother,

I'm to be Queen o' the May.'

Tennyson: The May Queen.

A severe blow was given to these merry customs by the Puritans, who caused May poles to be uprooted, and a stop put to all such jollities.

'Among the sweetest months, May stands confest,
The sweetest, and in fairest colors dressed.'

Thompson: On May.

'The voice of one who goes before to make,

The paths of June more beautiful, is thine,

Sweet May.'

Helen Hunt Jackson: May.

June is the sixth month in our year, but it was the fourth among the Romans. It is often called the month of roses. It was named in honor of the stately Juno, queen of the gods; Juno is the goddess of happy marriages, and June is a favorite month for weddings.

'What is so rare as a day in June?

Then, if ever, come perfect days.'

James R. Lowell: June.

June consisted originally of twenty-six days, to which four were added by Romulus, one taken away by Numa, and the month again lengthened by Julius Caesar.

The Anglo-Saxons called this month Sear-monath, or dry month and mid-summer monath.

'It is the month of June,

The month of leaves and roses.'

N. P. Willis: The Month of June.

July was named in honor of Julius Caesar, because he was born in that month. July in Latin is Julius. Julius Caesar was a great statesman and writer. He was also the greatest of the Romans in the art of war. The Romans called July Quintilis. The Anglo-Saxons called July the after mid month.

In July we find the greatest day of the year—the Fourth of July, or Independence Day. Every one knows that on this day our nation was born. The flags, drums and cannon awake in the breast of every American a thrill of love and pride that will never pass away.

'My native country, thee—
Land of the noble, free,
Thy name I love.'

Octavius Caesar was the nephew of and heir of Julius Caesar, the great commander. He became emperor of Rome and ruled wisely and well; he received the title of Augustus, which means "worthy of reverence." From him the eighth month receives its name—August.

'The August cloud suddenly Melts into streams of rain.'

Bryant: Stella.

September comes from a Latin word septem, which means seven. It was the seventh month of the Roman year, but it is the ninth according to our reckoning, though we preserve the original name.

The Saxons called it gerst-monath, or barley-month, because barley, their chief cereal crop, was generally harvested during this month. It has always contained thirty days.

On the first Monday in September comes Labor Day. This has been celebrated for only a few years, but the meaning of the holiday lies deep in the minds and hearts of men who realize that labor is man's greatest blessing and hope.

'Oh, sweet September, thy first breezes bring
The dry leaf's rustle and the squirrel's laughter.'

G. Arnold: September.

The name October comes from a Latin word which means eight, as this month was the eighth month in the Roman year.

'October turned my maple leaves to gold.'

T. B. Aldrich: Maple Leaves.

He that cannot forgive others breaks the bridge over which he must pass himself; for every man has need to be forgiven.

THE BEAR AND THE BOY.

About two hundred years ago a rich and powerful nobleman named Leopold was duke of the province of Lorraine. The duke was very fond of animals.

Among his savage pets was a great bear, whose name was Marco.

Marco was housed in a rough hut in a corner of his royal master's park. He was supplied with the best of food by the keeper of the animals; and on state occasions he was led out by a big iron chain and made to dance for the amusement of Leopold's friends.

Marco was fierce, and when he swung his shaggy head out of his hut and showed his white teeth in an ugly snarl, no one dared to go near him. One blow from his paw would have knocked a man senseless, and those white teeth of his were very sharp.

One cold winter night Marco, having swallowed his supper at a few gulps, shambled back into the farthest corner of his hut, and curled himself up to sleep. He was just at the "falling off" point when he heard a sound at the house door. He started up; and what should he see but a small boy, hopping first on one foot and then on the other, and shivering with the cold.

The boy was a homeless child, who had lost his way in the duke's forest and had run into the bear's hut for shelter.

Marco did not know who his newcomer might be, but he was so surprised that he quite forgot to growl.

Then a strange thing happened—so strange that, if this were not a true story, I should not ask you to believe it. The boy ran over to Marco, peering into the shaggy face, cried joyfully: "Why, you're the duke's funny bear that I saw dancing the other day! Won't you be my friend? I need one so much!"

The bear Marco did not understand what the boy said, but he understood the kind hand that stroked his head. That hand meant "I love you." Marco had never been loved in all his rough, bearish life—at least, not since the days before he had been caught in the forest, a frightened baby screaming for his mother.

Now a great answering love filled his wild heart. He allowed the little lad to lie down beside him, warmed by his furry coat, and together they slept through the night.

In the morning the boy went away, but came back to his friend in the evening. This happened for several days. Marco shared his dinner with his visitor and they became fast cronies.

One day the keeper was surprised to see that Marco had left his supper untouched; and, instead of hurrying away to feed the other animals, he stayed to watch the bear.

Marco sat in the door of his hut, patiently waiting for his boy. The keeper offered to take the food, but he received such a fierce look that he set it down again and hid behind a tree to see what would happen next. In a moment, to his amazement, a child ran up to the bear. The keeper sprang forward to snatch him out of harm's way, but the boy had already thrown his arms about his faithful friend, and in a twinkling they had finished the waiting supper together.

Duke Leopold was brought to the hut to see this wonderful pair, and soon the story of the boy and the bear had spread throughout the land.

Duke Leopold gave orders that the poor child should be brought to his palace, to be educated and cared for. The little lad made many friends in his beautiful new home, but I think that he never found a dearer one than the bear, Marco.—Little Men and Women.

BEING POPULAR.

BY MARIANNA WOOD ROBINSON.

"Who was elected, Rob?"

"Tom Leighton, of course. No other fellow had any show at all. He's the most popular boy there is. They say it is because he is so good-natured."

"Well, Tom is the kindest boy—the kindest big-boy I know," said Sadie, Rob's little sister.

"Huh! That's all right, but what does he have to keep him from being kind? He has every single thing he wants. He never has to work till the very last minute before school time. And he always has lots of money to treat the fellows with. I could be kind, too—maybe popular, if I had time. You have to have something to make you popular."

"Right you are, my son. I have felt that way a great many times. It's the men who have money so they can do things for people, or leisure to make themselves agreeable, that are popular. It takes time even to be kind. When a man has to work all day in the shop as hard as I do, he's got no time to make himself popular."

DICK, THE ENGINEER'S CAT.

A father and little son were traveling from St. Louis to a town in the western part of the State, and among the things they carried was a small yellow kitten in a basket.

They had a sixty-mile ride before they changed cars. The gentleman pulled out a newspaper and began reading. The little boy amused himself by looking out of the window. At last, tired of that, he thought of his pet kitten, and, taking him out of the basket, played with him until he went off to sleep. The kitten, being left alone, climbed into the next seat and went to sleep.

The train arrived at the station where the man and little boy were to change cars. And the man, folding up his newspaper, took the little boy and his bundles and the empty basket and rushed into the other train. The boy had been awakened so quickly that he had not thought of his kitten.

The first train passed on. At night, when it drew up to its final station, the conductor went through the train and found the little kitten asleep on one of the seats. He carried it to the fireman, who was fond of cats. The fireman fed the kitten and put him in the baggage car for the night.

When the train went out the next day the kitten, which the fireman called Dick, went with it. Dick rode in the baggage car for a week or so, when his master took him on the engine with him one day. Dick was quite frightened at first, but soon got over it, and always rode on the engine after that.

One thing very much frightened Dick—that was, when he heard another train coming. He would crouch on the floor of the cab at his master's feet and would remain so until the other train passed. His master tried in vain to break him of this.

A year passed, and Dick was on the engine with his master, who had been promoted to be an engineer. Dick still appeared frightened at hearing another train.

One day in winter Dick's master was running in the western part of Missouri, when a severe snow-storm came up. They reached one station at 4:30 in the afternoon, and a freight was due about the same time. They waited fifteen minutes for the freight, and then the conductor decided to go on to the next station, ten miles beyond. So he telegraphed to the next station to keep the freight until he reached there; and receiving no message back that the freight had left that station, he thought it all right, and Dick's train started. They had gone about five miles when Dick suddenly raised his head, listened for a moment, and then jumped to the floor and crouched at his master's feet. The engineer knew that Dick had heard a train. Then it flashed into his mind that perhaps it was the freight. He reached his head out of the cab window and listened, but he could hear nothing but the wind. He had so great confidence, nevertheless, in Dick, that he signalled for the conductor. The conductor came and inquired into the matter, and when the engineer told him how Dick had acted, he advised the engineer to back the train to the last station. The engineer lost no time in taking the conductor's advice, and backed the train at full speed. They had been in the station about five minutes when in came the tardy freight. They were all agreed that it had been a narrow escape from a serious accident. When Dick's train arrived at the next station they asked why they had not telegraphed back that the freight had already started. The station agent said that he had received no message from the conductor at all. The next day the wires were found broken, so that the station agent had not received the dispatch.

Dick received due praise. His master is very proud of him, and he is a general favorite on that railroad.—Our Dumb Animals.

BOBBIE'S QUESTION.

The scholars were standing in two little rows:

The sun through the window shone bright,

While soft little airs on the tips of their toes

Came tripping with April delight. And Bobbie looked up as they gently went by;

They told him a tale of the spring. And talked of the clouds in the happy blue sky,

And all that the summer would bring.

He heard not the voice of the teacher at all;

His thoughts had gone out with the sun,

He stood with the others, his back to the wall,

Absorbed till the lesson was done.

"Now ask me some questions," the teacher had cried,

"Just any that chance to occur."

Bobby's fingers went up, and he solemnly sighed:

How long till the holidays, sir?"

—John Lee, in Cassell's Little Folks.

I sobbed bitterly one Baby Day because my aunt wanted me to do "heaps of things."

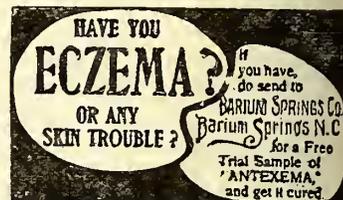

"I can't do evysing," I protested.

Wept one Grown Up Day because I couldn't "do evysing." Wanted to "do evysing." Ah, the Selfishness even in our best moments. Smiled one Old Lady Day because I didn't want to "do evy sing. There the light shown across the way. Had lived nine thousand and four hundred and ninety days—and grown old during those long days had found out after all the search for knowledge and peace—what I knew long ago on a Cloudy Baby Day. It is with life. There is one thing we all may do. Find it! After many fruitless efforts to do things, after crying many long nights for the things we must not have, we tuck our tired heads under our tired arms; those arms that have reached out for many, many objects, and fall asleep to awake and find out we are just a child in the knowledge of life and its meaning. Ah, but what is it to be Just a Child? Isn't it to love and to trust, and work, and play? To say: "I'm sorry" when we have hurt a play mate. To tell our play fellows as a little fat baby tells her own: "Youse so good and purty, love you." Let us try not to be wise, but just a child.

ELIZZABETH RAY.

BRIGHTEN UP.

A widow went into a photographer's studio to have her picture made. She was seated before the camera wearing the same stern, hard, forbidding look that had made her an object of fear to the children living in the neighborhood, when the photographer, his head out from behind the black cloth, said, suddenly, "Just brighten the eyes a little."

She tried, but the dull, heavy look still lingered. "See here," the woman retorted sharply, "if you think that an old lady that is dull can look bright, that one who feels cross can become pleasant every time she is told, you don't know anything about human nature. It takes something from the outside to brighten the eye and illuminate the face."

"Oh, no, it doesn't! It is something to be worked from the outside. Try it again," said the photographer, good-naturedly.

Something in his manner inspired faith and she tried again, this time with better success.

"That's good! That's fine! You look twenty years younger!" exclaimed the artist, as he caught the transient glow that illuminated the faded face.

She went home with a queer feeling in her heart. It was the first compliment she had received since her husband had passed away, and it left a pleasant memory behind. When she reached her little cottage, she looked long in the glass, and said: "There may be something in it, but I'll wait and see the picture."

When the picture came, it was like a resurrection. The face seemed alive with the fires of youth. She gazed long and earnestly, then in a firm, clear voice, "If I could do it once, I can do it again."

Approaching the little mirror above her bureau, she said, "brighten up, Catherine," and the old light flashed up once more.

"Look a little pleasanter!" she commenced, and a calm and radiant smile diffused itself over her face.

Her neighbors soon remarked the change that had come over her face.

"Why Mrs. A., you are getting younger! How do you manage it?"

"It is almost all done with the inside. You just brighten up inside and feel pleasant.—From Book Notices, Missionary Review.

"I am fixing up a surprise for John but I'm afraid that if he stays around the house he will discover it."

"That's all right. You just tie a towel around your head and ask him if he can't stay at home today and help you take up the carpets."

Another Appreciation of the Aetna

LUMBERTON, N. C., November 26, 1902.

J. D. BOUSHALL, Esq., Manager Aetna Life Insurance Co.; Raleigh, N. C.

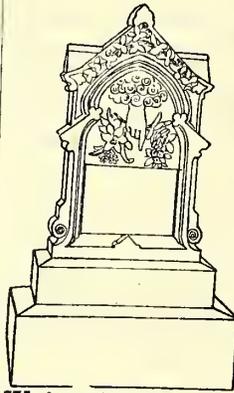

Dear Sir:—After a careful comparison of policies submitted to me by the Aetna Life, Bankers' Life of New York, Equitable of New York, Northwestern, New York Life and Prudential, I have accepted $10,000 in the Aetna on the 20-payment life plan, with option of 25 year 3 per cent. Gold Bond Contract.

I have been a policy-holder in the Aetna for nearly eight years, and therefore feel somewhat prepared to judge of its merits from actual results. With all due deference to other companies, it affords me great pleasure to say that in my opinion the Aetna cannot be surpassed for plain and liberal contracts, and for just, conservative and economical management. I now have $12,000 in the Aetna. My partner, Mr. W. W. Carlyle, has $16,000 and one of our clerks, Mr. John T. Biggs, has $2,000, nearly all of which was written and delivered by your special agent, Mr. H. T. Spears.

Wishing you and the grand old Aetna continued success, I am,

Yours very truly,

Event and Comment.

Charlotte whose pride it is that it is the home of the gracious woman who was Jackson's beloved wife, and the home of his grand-children, sends greetings to Lexington that guards his heroic dust and has built the monuments to his memory.

It is said that the Southern Cotton Spinner's Association which met in Charlotte last week represented 1,000,000,000, of capital. That is a pretty good showing for the South. And the centre of this wonderful industry is this Scotch-Irish Presbyterian city of Charlotte.

A writer in 'The Cumberland Presbyterian is opposed to union with the Northern Presbyterian Church, because "the Confession of Faith still contains the doctrine of fatality." Evidently there is still adherence among Cumberland Presbyterians to the distinctive doctrine of an uneducated ministry.

We take off the hat of compliment to Bishop Burgess of Long Island who has put his episcopal foot down on raising money for churches by card playing functions and the church-fair fraud. He says, "the time has come when the church should be particular about the money it receives." That time never went away.

From a cursory glance at the personnel of the Southern Assembly, this year, we venture the prediction, that whether or not it goes any farther than the Jackson Assembly, in the matter of infant salvation, it will certainly not frame a "fifth resolution" in answer to the overtures requesting that the church's belief be put into the church's creed.

Dr. S. S. Laws, in the appendix to the pamphlet which has been appearing in serial form in the Standard, puts the doctrine of universal infant salvation as found in Matthew 18:14, into the form of a syllogism: No little ones are lost. All infants dying in infancy are little ones. Therefore, no infants dying in infancy are lost. By conversion, all infants dying in infancy are saved.

The Southwestern Presbyterian mentions the interesting fact that the great explorer, Du Chaillu, whose recent death the scientific world is mourning, was a protégé of our own Dr. J. Leighton Wilson, who found him, a homeless waif, and befriended him, and that Du Chaillu's discoveries of dwarfs and gorillas in Central Africa were the re-discovery of what the veteran missionary already knew.

Dr. Sparhawk Jones, of Philadelphia, formerly of Baltimore, who is to preach the Baccalaureate sermon at Davidson, this year, is one of the great preachers of America. Professor Gildersleeve used to go to hear his pastor in the morning "for the benefit of his heart," and to hear Dr. Jones at night "for the benefit of his head." It is one of the cheering signs of the present day that intellectual preaching is no longer discounted on the sole ground of its appeal to the intellect.

It was proposed recently to have in St. Paul's Cathedral, "a celebration of the Holy Communion for the repose of the soldiers who died in the South African War." It was to be a re-introduction of the Requiem mass into the Cathedral, after the lapse of 350 years. There has been tremendous and it is hoped effective protest and the younger Kensit, son of the John Kensit who protested against these Romanizing tendencies so bravely, has threatened to interrupt the service if it is allowed to begin.

We have been much interested in the controversy in The Cumberland Presbyterian over the question of union with the Northern Presbyterian Church. In the issue of May 7, one writer is quoted as favoring the use of the present opportunity "to let the world know that we are not Methodists or Arminians." Another writer rejoins: "Why not use it to let the world know that we are not Calvinists? It would be more to our credit." Perhaps so. It would also be greatly to the credit of Cumberland Presbyterianism, with educated people, if it could only find out whether it is Arminian or Calvinist.

This is the day, one hundred and twenty-eight years ago, when a company of Mecklenburg men met together, heard how there had been shed "the blood of American patriots at Lexington," and made mention of the "inherent and inalienable rights of man." Thomas Jefferson a year later wrote in his original draft of the Declaration of Independence, "the inherent and inalienable rights of man," while the Committee who decided the final form struck out the first adjective and changed the second to "unalienable," as it stands in the Declaration to-day. And yet some people claim that the Mecklenburg Declaration was based upon the National Declaration of 1776.

The Rev. Robert S. Brown has an article in last week's Southwestern Presbyterian (which is singularly hospitable to such views) which goes a little farther in the direction of the infant damnation dogma than anything we have yet seen: "The Bible nowhere teaches that 'all infants dying in infancy are elect' either by positive statement or the least inferential implication." He declares that we have no more authority for saying that all infants are saved than for saying that all adults are lost. We are bound to say that this is just what we should have expected from the Rev. R. S. Brown. But certainly the Southern Presbyterian Church needs protection from such an ambiguity in its creed as permits that sort of misrepresentation of the faith of the church and that sort of reflection upon the nature of God, by its authoritative teachers.

The Standard ventures to depart from the traditions of the Southern Presbyterian Press for once and to suggest the name of Dr. James P. Smith, the editor of the Central Presbyterian, for the Moderatorship of the Assembly. His election would be so eminently fitting for the Assembly meeting in Lexington that we feel sure the suggestion will be taken in the spirit in which it is made. Forty years ago this month he was one of the faithful lieutenants on Stonewall Jackson's staff, who helped his wounded commander off the field of battle and protected his fainting body with his own in the terrible storm of shells and bullets that swept their road. It was he who brought Jackson the news of the victory at Chancellorsville, who rode the long and dangerous way to Richmond for help to nurse him, who ministered to him in his last hours and who accompanied the body of his chief to its resting place in Lexington. This Assembly will necessarily have many of its associations connected with the name and fame of General Jackson. To say nothing of the service Dr. Smith has given the Southern Church as pastor and editor, to say nothing of the fact that the veterans of the Civil War, in the course of nature, can not be with us very long, the Lexington Assembly will honor, as perhaps it could do in no more fitting way, the memory of Stonewall Jackson, by honoring the man in whose piety Jackson trusted as firmly as in his courage and fidelity.

The Magna Charta of Childhood. The Child is the Saviour of the Race. The fact of childhood is the essential difference between the two orders of immortal, created beings, of which the Scriptures tell us, angels and men. There is no relation of blood or descent, no marriage or giving in marriage, among the angels. Each was an immediately created being, standing for himself, responsible for himself. Therefore, for the angels that kept not their first estate there was no redemption, but everlasting chains and darkness.

But with the fall of man there was a different problem, if we may so speak. For all we know there were already the stirrings of infant life in the womb of the "Mother of all living," ere Eden was lost. And the human race is to be propagated through the birth of children into the world, and their growth from the innocence of childhood into the responsibilities of manhood, with its knowledge of good and evil. Moreover, since death has entered into the world with sin, and the children are the heirs of that curse also, it follows that they must suffer the pain of dissolution, while the soul, with its endowment of immortality and its inheritance of sin, must suffer eternal death. So the Child was the appeal of the human race to a merciful God.

Moreover, this race of ours, despite its tainted life, begins anew with each generation in outward innocence. The divine law has ordained that there is no added increment of evil. Though the child, through inherited traits, by evil example and actual tutelage in sin, may surpass his parents in wickedness, yet as a child he is as innocent as any other child. Childhood, therefore, with its renewal of childish purity, has saved the race from challenging the judgment of heaven to the complete extinction of the race. And it is the improbability of the race through the new start given in childhood with each generation that is the hope of humanity today.

There were intimations of the high honor put upon the Child in the Old Testament. "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength," says the Psalmist. In that glorious picture drawn of the golden age of the world, the crowning touch is that which shows the subjection even of brutish natures to innocence—"And a little child shall lead them." The same prophet caught the vision of the salvation that should come and shouted, "Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given." For it was seen that through the spotless gate of childhood, God himself might enter the race of men. And then, when the fulness of time was come, an angel was sent to a peasant woman, pure in heart, to say to her, "The power of the Highest shall overshadow thee. Therefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." And within the year the angel said to the shepherds of the Bethlehem plain, "Ye shall find the babe, wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger." The Child was the Saviour of the Race, for the Saviour had become a child. Blessed be all the children for his dear sake!

Henceforth childhood itself is sanctified through the Holy Child, Jesus. As childhood was the door of his entrance into humanity, he made it the door and the only door of entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven. To enter that Kingdom one must be born again. And when men would keep from freest access to him the very babes at the breast, he who had been a babe and was trying to teach men that they must become as little children, took those little ones up in his arms and said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." The very kingdom which he came to establish is made up of these and only these who actually or spiritually are "little children." Nor should we forget that as he said this he had the little ones in his arms of love, that there was no difference essentially between those little ones and a million other babes in the world that day, and that whomsoever he meant by "of such," he must have meant the little ones themselves, who gave the occasion for his great declaration concerning the nature of the inhabitants of his kingdom, "both infants themselves and those who resemble them."

But it is the eighteenth chapter of the Gospel according to Matthew that contains the "Magna Charta of Childhood," to adopt the apt phrase of another. Jesus called to him a little child and set him in the midst of the twelve grown men who were contending as to who should be greatest in the kingdom of heaven. Please observe and remember that little child in the midst. Do not lose sight of him. The child is the center of the situation. He is the object-lesson for the disciples. He is the type of heavenly citizenship. And Jesus, with that authority which made him the prince of all teachers, shifts the question, first from that of preferment in the kingdom to that of entrance into it. Entrance is of more importance than preferment. And the door of entrance, the only door, is the door of childhood. So it may be that the discussion as to whether the children are the heirs of the heavenly kingdom when they pass from childhood into the eternal world might profitably be shifted to this one: Are we who are discussing their claims like enough to them to have any hope of entrance ourselves? For the word is plain, "Except ye be converted and become as little children ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." So far then from the possibility of Christ's excluding any little child from his kingdom, he teaches us that only those who are children can enter it. These children may be of three classes, those who have passed from childhood into adult age and then have been converted and have become as little children. Those who have passed from childhood into maturity, but who were regenerated in childhood itself, so that such conversion was never known by themselves. They have retained the child-spirit and the child-nature. The other class is a far larger one, as yet in the history of the world, than the other two combined. It consists of those who are never anything but children in this world. They pass from the estate of childhood into eternity.

Christ speaks first of the general and essential characteristics of childhood, when he says, "Except ye become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." He then makes child-like humility the path of preferment in the kingdom. He next pronounces a blessing upon any who, in his name, receive one such little child, as he doubtless was just then receiving that little one into his loving arms. He passes freely from the consideration of one class to the other, for both classes are children. Then he pronounces the woe against those who cause to stumble, "These little ones that believe in me," evidently the child-like ones, since faith in Christ is one mark of that child-likeness which is essential to entrance into the kingdom of heaven. Christ follows this with a general exposition of stumbling-blocks and offences. And then, with the child still the center of the situation, the center of interest, he says, "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones." There is no limitation here as in the former case. Whether it means more than the children themselves, is unimportant for our present purpose. With that child in Jesus' arms, it is impossible that he did not include all children when he said, "Despise not one of these little ones." The reason for that admonition is that their angels (by which Christ meant, according to high authority, the glorified spirits of the dead children), "do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven."

Next follows the parable of the lost sheep and the tender shepherd seeking that which is lost. And the passage closes with a positive statement as wide as the whole world of little children, "Even so it is not the will of your father in heaven that one of these little ones should perish," while many authorities, some of them ancient, add here the verse, "For the Son of Man is come to save that which was lost."

Now we know that the first two classes of children, those who have been converted and become as little children and those who have never passed from the estate of childhood, being regenerated as children, can claim this text as proving the doctrine of the perseverance of the saints. But surely also the language will embrace every little child of earth, caused to pass from earth as a little child. Nor could language be more sweeping: "It is not the will of your father in heaven that one of these little ones should perish." Not . . . one. Not . . . one. Then whose will shall cause them to perish? When God's Son has said that it is not the Father's will that one of these little ones should perish, who shall resist his will? Here the preceptive and the decretive will are one. Children shall not perish though they pass from our sight. "Not one of these little ones shall perish" and one of those little ones was safely enfolded in the Saviour's arms as he spoke.

All these little ones need regeneration. But only one class of the three need conversion. Since true conversion is conversion into the nature of little children, those who are already little children need no conversion into their own nature. They cannot turn into that which they already are. John the Baptist, full of the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb, needed no conversion. Nor do those fortunate ones, who, from earliest infancy, have loved and served their Lord. Nor do those whom death seals forever as little children need conversion. Conversion into what?

But they do need regeneration, the removal of the unconscious taint of sin. Hence, as regeneration is essential, and it is not the will of the Father that one of them shall perish, the Spirit that proceedeth from the Father, in his own mysterious way, breathes upon their spirits the breath of heavenly purity.

But some man will say, "Then are all regenerated? If so, all men will be saved, since all were once children, and we are Universalists. Or, those who are lost will fall from their saved condition, and we are Arminians." Not so fast. It is Calvinism that saves the day for the little ones just here.

Dr. Dabney used to tell his students when they were needing some relief from Immediate Imputation: "God saw every man as he was."

In all the millions of little children born into the world God sees, because God has ordained, that some are children forever, passing out of this world, children; that some are children always, having kept their hearts pure, and that some by his grace become little children through conversion. These are all "little children" in Christ's use of the phrase. God sees, moreover, from the beginning, those who pass from childhood into adult age, and from adulthood into eternity, unrepentant and unforgiven, dying in their sins.

These are not children, but men and women, guilty of actual sin. These and these only—for the description fits none else,—are those who are judged, every man according to his works, at the last day. Hence God could say, "Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated," before either had done good or evil, because he saw the end from the beginning; saw Jacob, in spite of his meanness and shiftiness, a man with an eye for the value of spiritual things, and that Esau, in spite of some noble traits of character, was irreverent, violent, murderous. Jacob had faith in God and Esau had not. So God saw Jacob becoming a little child and Esau become an ungodly man, the one dying with a testimony to the power of the Almighty, the other dying in his sins. Nor does it diminish aught from the argument, but rather enhances it, that the essential difference between them was the bestowal of divine grace upon Jacob and the withholding it from Esau.

It is this Calvinistic conception that enables us to extend infinitely the mercy of God and that reveals the Infinite Love of God as the very throbbing heart of Calvinism.

Every great catastrophe in which the judgment of heaven has been visited upon men for their wickedness was also a mercy in delivering the children from the fate of their parents, the flood, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and their modern imitators, Pompeii and St. Pierre. It makes literal "The great multitude whom no man can number of all nations and kindreds and peoples and tongues," redeemed by the blood of Christ. Whole nations have passed away without one believer in the true God. But God in his infinite mercy took unto himself, more than half, even of heathen nations, as little ones, not one of whom should perish. This is the answer of Calvinism to Universalism. That he who is the arbiter of life and of death has brought into the world and then taken from its temptations unto himself, the large majority of our race. How far the period of childhood extends he has not revealed. But he has revealed his will, in the words of Christ, that no little child shall perish.

Those who are children indeed, are all regenerated, in infancy or in manhood, this side the hour of death. It is only those who have reached or will reach manhood and womanhood, having lost forever the child-nature, whom in his sovereign will he chooses to pass by, "Ordaining them to dishonor and wrath for their sin."

Across the street, as we write these lines, there is a home from whose door yesterday there fluttered the little ribbon of white crepe, the sign of the death of a little child. What shall the minister of Christ say to the desolate hearts of the parents? Shall he tell them that the little one had been baptized and is therefore safe? Is not that an affront to the intellect, that a few drops of water sprinkled by human hands is what makes the difference between heaven and hell, for that little child? Shall the minister talk about the covenant? But just the day before there died a drunkard's death, after a life of sin, a child of the covenant, dedicated to God in infancy, sealed with the baptismal sign. Shall the minister say that his parents must have been unfaithful? That they were like Eli of old whose sons made themselves vile and he restrained them not? But who can claim faithfulness? What is the measure of faithfulness that we must fulfil ere we can know that our children are safe? And if the covenant did not save the grown man why should it save the dead child of the same parents? Does not this theory, that the covenant alone insures the salvation of the dead children, throw a darker shadow into that bereaved home, into every home in which there is one dead lamb? It is only in the belief that all are saved that we find the grounds of our faith that our own are saved, O Christian parent! What can the minister say better than to tell how Jesus gathered the little ones in his arms, in old Judea, and said, "Of such is the Kingdom of heaven"? And that he, the same yesterday, to-day and forever, who would not let his disciples come between him and the little ones on earth, will not let all the devils in hell keep them from his arms when they have passed the dark river.

What better to say than that Jesus made the Child the type of heavenly citizenship, and said of all children, the world over and the ages through, "It is not the will of your father in heaven that one of these little ones should perish."

"There is no difference between the Jew and the Greek. The same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him," whether with the cry of faith, or the cry of helpless, appealing childhood to the great Father of all.

Our Presbyterian Hero.

It has been forty years this month since "Stonewall" Jackson died. The student of the philosophy of history will count May 10, 1865, as the real ending of the Civil War, rather than 1865. But for the fatal volley that wounded Jackson, Chancellorsville would have spelled annihilation rather than defeat for Hooker's army. The third day at Gettysburg would not have been, nor Appomattox. It is worse than idle to make comparison between the military greatness of Lee and Jackson. Both men acknowledged the genius of the other with a generosity that might well be imitated by some of our present-day captains, on sea and land. Jackson persistently refused to share the responsibility that rested upon his commander-in-chief, but carried out Lee's plans with consummate skill and unflinching success. And Lee, to his everlasting renown, was so free from anything like jealousy of the brilliant achievements of Jackson, that he wrote him this note just after hearing the news of Jackson's wounding:

"General: I have just received your note, informing me that you were wounded. I cannot express my regret at the occurrence. Could I have directed events, I should have chosen, for the good of the country, to have been disabled in your stead.

"I congratulate you upon the victory which is due to your skill and energy. Most truly yours,

R. E. Lee, General.

It is idle to compare Lee and Jackson, perhaps idle to speculate on what was not to be, but Lee's right arm was broken when Jackson died.

It is not our purpose in this brief space to detail the story of his life or to describe his military greatness. But there were certain traits of his character which are comprised under the general name of Calvinistic which made him affiliate naturally with the Presbyterian Church and makes the Presbyterian Church in these Southern States regard him as the fittest type of the Presbyterian hero that the Civil War produced. We may be permitted to point out some of these traits.

Thomas Jonathan Jackson came of Scotch-Irish stock, and his ancestor John Jackson could trace his ancestry to the same parish, near Londonderry, from which the family of President Andrew Jackson came. So that there was a probable kinship between these two great captains. Thomas Jonathan Jackson was left an orphan at the age of seven years and his mother's dying admonitions and prayers left an indelible impression upon his mind. He made his home with his father's sister, a Mrs. Brake and at the age of eight years he showed that invincible determination, that self-respecting tenacity of his rights and that high sense of justice that have been notably exemplified in the great Calvinists of the world's history. It seems that his uncle-in-law had in the boy's view been unjust to him so he left his roof, and telling his relatives "Uncle Brake and I don't agree; I have quit him and shall not go back any more," he walked alone to the home of another uncle, eighteen miles distant, and could not be persuaded to return. He manifested the same traits as a boy at school and was known as one who could be overcome but never subdued.

Jackson was led into the faith of the Christian life through the ministry of an Episcopal clergyman, Rev. Mr. Parks. But his conscientiousness was exemplified by his request that he be admitted not into the Episcopal Church, as such, but into the Church Catholic. He had already dismissed the claims of popery, and he had not yet found a church with which he was in thorough harmony. After his election as professor in the Virginia Military Academy he sought out Dr. White, the pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Lexington, and laid his troubles as to church membership before him, with the result that he joined the Presbyterian Church, November 22, 1851.

He was unwilling to take this step, even, being at first inclined to the principles of Arminianism rather than of Calvinism until he was told that only the official members of the Presbyterian Church are required to subscribe to its distinctive doctrines. After a matured study of the Calvinistic system he became one of its firmest advocates.

And the two principles of that system, the Sovereignty of God and the sense of moral responsibility to God alone, became the regulative principles of his life. His faith in God was absolute. His conscientious performance of every duty was unique.

The stories of how he refused to get his mail on Sunday, or even to post a letter on Friday or Saturday, that would travel on Sunday, except in cases of necessity; of his discharge of his duties as a deacon; of his rising from lamentable failure in public prayer to the genuine eloquence that accompanies sincere and heartfelt talking with God; of his labors in his Sunday-school for the negroes; of his adherence to the tithe system in giving, until he adopted a larger ratio—these stories are all familiar.

But the great secret of Jackson's career was his absolute faith in the Providence of God. Says Dr. Dabney, commenting on this trait of his character, "No man ever lived who seemed to have a more practical and living sense of this truth of Christianity." It was this that made him a man of prayer as his regard for duty made him the man of action. "God blessed our arms with victory at McDowell yesterday" was a laconic dispatch that appealed to the religious fervor of the Southern people. But Jackson believed in a Providence that was over small things as well as over great. Commenting on the text "Pray always," he explained to a friend once, while deprecating the charge of egotism, that he never took a drink of water without thanking God, nor mailed a letter nor received one, without a prayer to God. In battle, more than once he was observed sitting motionless, save for moving lips, with right hand uplifted and eyes closed, as his soldiers swept by into the charge. In the famous Valley Campaign, and in the contest with Shields, a bridge was in the possession of the Federal forces which it was necessary to capture. "With a tone and mien of inexpressible authority" he ordered the bayonet charge and as soon as he had uttered the command he dropped the reins upon his horse's neck "and raised both hands toward the heavens while the fire of battle in his face changed into a look of reverential awe." Over and over again he insisted that all the glory of his victories should be ascribed to God.

On receiving the note from General Lee which we have quoted he said, "General Lee is very kind but he should give the glory to God."

And when at last he was stricken down, his acquiescence in the will of God was sublime. He even desired to depart and to be with Christ. Such was our Presbyterian hero. Such the heritage that belongs to us. He was a Bonaparte without ambition, a Cromwell without cruelty. His fame is secure. The time has come when his name is revered by the people of the North almost as much as by the people of the South. But the Church that meets this week in historic Lexington, where lies his sacred dust, has a peculiar claim upon him. Let these traits of his character be remembered by her when others speak of his military genius, and let them be told to children and to children's children.

Tuscaloosa Presbytery, with two votes opposing, overtures the Assembly to strike out the first "elect" from Chapter X, Section 3, making the sentence read: "Infants, dying in infancy, are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit. . . . So also are all other elect persons who are incapable of being outwardly called by the ministry of the word." Evidently the second "elect" refers to infants dying in infancy as also elect, while the ambiguity is removed. For our own part we prefer a form, which is a possible interpretation of the language as it now stands. "Elect" means "being included in the election of grace." Transposing the phrases we have: "Infants dying in infancy, being included in the election of grace, are regenerated and saved by Christ, through the Spirit." The amendment of Chapter X, Section 3, by the Northern Assembly is in the form of a foot-note, which has now been adopted by a constitutional majority of the Presbyteries. It reads:

"With reference to Chapter X, Section 3, of the Confession of Faith, that it is not to be regarded as teaching that any who die in infancy are lost. We believe that all dying in infancy are included in the election of grace and are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, who worketh when and where and how he pleaseth."

Dr. C. R. Hemphill has a proposal in this week's paper for the Assembly to send down a similar footnote to the Presbyteries for their adoption in the same way that an amendment is adopted.

We throw out the suggestion to any who may be opposed both to amendment and organic union that one way to secure amendment would be the way of organic union and that one way to aid organic union sentiment would be to deny the relief of amendment on this point.

Review of Contemporaries.

Schools for the training of young men for the Christian ministry are usually known as "theological seminaries," or as "divinity schools." A fair inference is that they teach theology, or divinity, and that they do well what they really undertake. There seems no good reason for doubting this.

But men who enter the Christian ministry have, or ought to have, a fitness to win individual souls. Do they get any help for that mission, or any special zest for it, while under training for their work? The fullest knowledge of theology or of divinity certainly does not either fit men or stimulate men to realize the importance of that work. What assurance, therefore, is given to God or to men that a young student leaves the theological seminary or the divinity school reasonably well fitted for his chief mission, or zealously desiring to perform it well?

Among the helpful suggestions that a pastor can bring home to a new convert is to subscribe for and read carefully a religious newspaper. No pastor can hope to do the best work with people who have no religious reading during the week. He may urge the faithful reading of the Bible, and he cannot do it too strongly. But as a supplement, never as a substitute, the religious newspaper fills a place that nothing else can fill. There should be good books too. But they never take the place of literature that comes to us every week, bringing news of the churches and helps to Christian living.—Dominion Presbyterian.

Prayer and Promises.

Extracts selected by Mrs. H. N. Reading.

"The Spirit of God alone acquaints us with the grace and mercy prepared for our relief in the promises. What God has promised we are to pray for, and nothing else. There is nothing we want, but God has promised it, and there is nothing He has promised that we do not want. It is, therefore, very necessary that we should know what God has promised. He knows our wants infinitely better than we do ourselves, for we know nothing but what He is pleased to teach us . . . By the Spirit alone we know the things that are freely given to us of God, namely, the grace, mercy, love and kindness of the promises."

Dr. Arnold's daily prayer was a model: "O Lord, I have a busy world around me. Eye, ear and thought will be needed for all my work. Now, ere I enter into it, I would commit eye, ear and thought to Thee. Do Thou bless them and keep their work true, that, as through Thy natural laws my heart beats, my blood flows without any thought of mine, so my spiritual life may hold on its course at these times when my mind can not consciously turn to Thee to commit each particular thought to Thy service."

Miss Anna Shipton, whose life was a prayer, says in one of her helpful little books: "If I wanted a pin and could not get it, I would ask God for it."

There is the oft-repeated prayer of Fenelon, the famous theologian: "Lord, take my heart, for I cannot give it, and when Thou hast it, keep it, for I cannot keep it for Thee, and save me in spite of myself."

Adam Clarke, the aged commentator, after working to exhaustion, far into the night, was watched by an attendant to see what he would do about his prayer. The old man leaned his tired head upon the table and reverently said: "Lord, Thou knowest; we are on the same old terms."

In Dr. Bethune's Bible was found written: "O God, pardon what I have been. Sanctify what I am. Order what I shall be, and Thine shall be the glory and mine the eternal salvation through Jesus Christ, my Lord."

The prayer of faith rests upon God's wisdom. He knows precisely what I need, and for that reason I am emboldened to ask. I would not dare to ask if God were no wiser than myself. I would not dare to kneel down and ask Him for a temporal gift which might be to my moral and eternal ruin, for all I know. But I can trust Him. My Father knows—knows what is best for me. There is supply under God's bounty forever, if we will. What limits the supply? Faith. God's resources are infinite. The oil flows on forever, but the vessels give out. O for faith—a faith which rests upon His unbounded power, goodness and wisdom—a faith which believes His word: "If ye abide in Me and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."—D. J. Burrell, D. D.

Prayer.

Most gracious God and Father, in whom dwelleth all fullness of light and wisdom, enlighten our minds, we beseech thee, by the Holy Spirit, in the true understanding of thy Word. Give us grace to receive it with all reverence and humility. May it teach us to put our whole trust in thee only, and so to serve and honor thee that in all our life we may glorify thy holy name and be profitable to our fellow-men. And inasmuch as it hath pleased thee to remember us with thy servants and children, grant that we may render unto thee the love and obedience which we owe thee, as children to their father and servants to their lord. We ask all for the sake of Jesus Christ our only Saviour. Amen.—John Calvin.

Every kind word you say to a dumb animal or bird will make you happier.—Exchange.

Missionary.

African Missions.

Letters dated March 26th have been received from Rev. L. C. Vass of the African Mission written from Leopoldville, where he had arrived with the steamer Lapsley, bringing Rev. W. H. Morrison, who is returning to America for a much needed rest and recuperation. Mr. Vass writes that the trip from Luebo to Leopoldville was made in seven days, but that it would require nearly a month to make the return trip against the strong current, the distance being more than seven hundred miles and with very dangerous navigation.

The same mail brought the April number of the Kassai Herald, a quarterly that was started by Dr. Snyder and is managed and edited by Messrs. Morrison and Vass, aided by a number of natives who have been taught to set type and to operate the press.

This publishing house, named for the first African missionary, Rev. J. Leighton Wilson, is destined if properly managed and supported, to exert a wide influence on the Dark Continent. A number of small books for the use of the mission have been printed and used with success. A much larger outfit is needed, and it will no doubt be furnished in the near future.

This mission has been greatly blessed in the large number of conversions, being greater in proportion than in any other mission of our church.

The Southern Church will be pleased to know that Mr. Morrison has sailed from England for the United States, and that he will be at the meeting of the General Assembly, which meets at his home in Lexington, Va., and the Church at large will unite in hoping and expecting that he will be restored to full health by his sojourn in this country.

Although the African missionaries never handle any money, yet they no doubt cost the mission committee more than the missionaries to other countries. The country produces very little food at present that is suitable for use of the missionaries. The agent in London purchases canned food, also cloth, beads, cutlery and other articles that can be used for barter for native food. These supplies are sent from London to Antwerp, thence to Matadi at the mouth of the Congo River, where they are subject to duty to the Belgian Government. From there they are carried by railroad about two hundred and fifty miles to Leopoldville, to be transported on the steamer Lapsley, seven hundred miles up the Congo and Kassai Rivers to Luebo. One can easily imagine the interest that is felt at the mission when the steamer is reported to have arrived with supplies and with mail from home.

Mr. Vass seems to be much interested in his work. The brick machine has been in use and the first brick house, which is to be used for a work shop and storage room is nearing completion. He is now manager and editor of the Herald, and hopes to be able to send out the paper as usual. We hoped that it might have been possible for him to have had a vacation of a few months this summer, but he says that it is impossible for him to leave the post before next spring. At present he is the only white person at the mission and he has retained his health remarkably well. He has had fever several times, but recovered without serious damage.

George Allen.

The love for the Bible is one of the most marked traits of the people of Uganda. A missionary writes: "A chief who has gone to build a church in a distant part of the land, where one is much needed, will receive no earthly reward for his labor, but I promised him that when he had finished I would give him a Bible, the better to teach his people, and he was overcome with joy. Friends at home would be surprised to know how much they deny themselves clothes and other things that they may get books. Two of the porters with us on a recent intneration, returned their pay that they might buy a testament."

Paul Before Agrippa.

Acts 26:19-29. May 24th, 1903.

As Paul has appealed to Cæsar to avoid being sent again to Jerusalem and exposed to the assaults of the Jews, Festus the governor, desired some further information concerning him. Hence he avails himself of King Agrippa's visit to give Paul a public hearing before an audience largely composed of those in exalted social station. Permitted to speak for himself the Apostle addresses King Agrippa and the Assembly, with his usual tact and courtesy. He declares himself to have been reared a strict Pharisee, and to have been well known as such among the Jewish rulers. He avows his purpose in going to Damascus with letters from the Chief priests to have been the persecution of Christians. He describes the revelation made him of Jesus Christ by the way. In that portion of his address that constitutes our lessons he presents several topics.

1. Paul's Obedience to Jesus Christ.—Paul had a vision of Christ and received from him certain commands which he pledged himself to obey. At the very time when the Lord was revealed he said, "Lord what wilt Thou have me to do." The reply given was "Go to Damascus and it shall there be told thee what thou must do." Hence he says to Agrippa, "Whereupon, O King, I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." Complying with the directions given, he affirms that "he shewed first unto them at Damascus and at Jerusalem and throughout all the coasts of Judea and then to the Gentiles that they should repent and turn to God and do works meet for repentance." He faithfully taught Jews and Gentiles that they should repent of sin, turn to God in Christ and bring forth the fruits of penitence in a holy life. For doing these things in obedience to Divine commands, he had incurred the hatred of the Jews who had arrested and endeavored to kill him.

2. Paul's Witness-Bearing.—Paul was not only a servant obeying his Divine Lord, but a witness-bearer of important truths for Christ and humanity. The ability to be a faithful witness he derives from God, and thus it is with all believers. Paul says: "Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day witnessing to small and great." He affirms too that the truths published were only those sanctioned by Moses and the prophets. They were that, "Christ should suffer," that He should rise from the dead and should shew light unto the people and to the Gentiles. He bore witness to Christ as a suffering Messiah, a risen Saviour and the "Light of the world," and he claimed that the Old Testament Scriptures inculcated these views. The diligent student of the prophets must admit that Paul's claim was well founded. He bore testimony to these truths to all classes, Jews and Gentiles, great and small, because all human beings need their saving power.

3. The Effects of Paul's Preaching.—The results produced by preaching may be influenced by many things. They may be in part due to the truths presented, to the manner in which they are illustrated and enforced and to the state of mind and attention of the hearer. Above all, saving effects are wrought by the application of the truth to the rational soul by God's Holy Spirit. Perhaps all these causes co-operated on this occasion in rendering Paul's discourse profoundly impressive. The truths proclaimed are among the grandest known to the human mind. They were elucidated and enforced by all the power pertaining to one of the noblest and most cultivated intellects of the Apostolic age. The attention given them was intense and absorbing. Doubtless too the Holy Spirit applied the truth to the minds, consciences and hearts of those present. It was not surprising therefore that Paul's address stirred his audience, convinced them of his innocence, and left its impress upon their characters.

Missions in the Island World.

Isaiah 42:10-17; 60:8,9. Topic for May 31.

The Island World has been more or less known for 300 years, but it was not until Captain Cook made his voyages of discovery in the last half of the 18th century that much was known as to the character of the people living in these islands. Captain Cook did what he could in his short stays among the people to introduce the civilization of the English among them but he had little success. He did not believe very strongly in the ultimate transformation of the people and even went so far as to say that he thought they would never be anything else than savages. There were men however who did not agree with him and the missionaries were sent out, and just as always, the religion of Jesus has exerted its transforming power and thousands today of those whose ancestors were cannibals but a generation or two back, are now the followers of this Saviour who can save all classes and conditions of men.

It has been the observation of those who have been in positions to note the conditions among these islanders that all attempts to introduce civilization apart from the religion of Jesus have been futile.

Many have gone among these people for other objects than the betterment of the natives. They have gone among them in the way of trade, but in almost every instance where they have not carried the gospel of Christ they have made the people worse rather than better.

The degraded state of these islanders has been heart-rending to behold. Their religious ceremonies were always connected with sorcery, human sacrifices, and bestial orgies such as might be expected in the infernal regions. Bad as these conditions were, when traders and adventurers in sailing from the Atlantic to the Pacific, "hung up their consciences off Cape Horn," they always carried to these degraded people vices and forms of immorality which the natives had never dreamed of.

Physically the natives of many of these islands are powerful and symmetrical, and in disposition, "are affable, light hearted and generous, but fickle, and under provocation, irritable and brutal." To bring this people to a high standard of living has been, and is the task of Christianity.

One writing of what the attempts to civilize these races have taught, says: "We have noticed in the islanders of the Pacific certain developments of good that promise future conquest of their barbarism by Christian civilization. We cannot take much account of the influences of mere civilization apart from Christianity. The influences of civilization have never had power to cause the moral renovation that is essential for the beginning of true civilization, as well as for its continuance and development. It has been true of the people of the Pacific, as of all heathen races elsewhere, that they have needed provision for their spiritual wants before they would accept civilization. But the influences of civilization have not only been useless, they have been actually harmful when not accompanied by Christianity. They have only awakened cupidity, instigated robberies, murders and piracies, and have been accompanied by an immorality that has been more degraded and deadly than heathenism itself. The only way to evangelize these benighted races is to employ consecrated Christian men and women to bear to them the light and blessings of the Gospel."

One who had made many voyages among these islands in the Pacific said that one of the strangest sights to him was to hear the children of those who were cannibals at the time of his earlier voyages, singing hymns as they came out of their village to meet him and his party. He could scarcely believe that he heard aright, or if he did that he must certainly have mistaken the island, and landed at another than the one he had intended to visit.

Sketch of History of Lexington Church.

By Thornton Whaling, D. D.

Dr. Wm. Henry Foote (Sketches of Virginia, 1st. Series, p. 102) makes the statement that "Soon after (1738) the congregations of Timber Ridge and Forks of James in Rockbridge were commenced," and (Same Vol. p 119) that "Mr. John Blair visited the Valley in 1745 and again in 1746 and during the last visit organized the Congregations of North Mountain, New Providence, Timber Ridge and Forks of James." The last three Churches are all in Rockbridge County and are known to-day by the same names, except that Forks of James was called in succession Hall's Meeting House and afterwards New Monmouth, (of which Lexington Church was a part till 1819) under which name it still exists as one of the most prosperous of our County Congregations, under the present pastorate of Rev. D. A. Penick.

The founder of the Presbyterian Churches of Rockbridge was one of the most useful and considerable men in the early history of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. Educated at Tennent's Log College, a brother of the still more famous Samuel Blair (out of whose school at Fagg Manor came the great Samuel Davies) John Blair continued this school after his brother's death "with reputation" until in 1767 he became Professor of Divinity and Moral Philosophy in the College of New Jersey, and officiated as President.

The Churches founded by him were in connection with the Synod of New York which sympathized with the earnest evangelism of Whitfield and the Tennets, while the churches of Tinkling Spring and Augusta, in Augusta County, under the pastorate of the Rev. John Craig, (the first settled pastor in the colony of Virginia) were connected with the Synod of Philadelphia, which disapproved of the measures of these early evangelists.

This division, however, was healed in 1758, since which time the Churches in this portion of the Valley have never been separated by different ecclesiastical lines.

The first minister called to this Church was the Rev. Wm. Dean, a member of the Presbytery of New Castle, in connection with the Synod of New York, who in 1747 received a call from the congregations of Timber Ridge and Forks of James: he died in 1748 at the early age of 29 and is declared by Samuel Davies to have been "one of their most useful ministers."

The first minister settled in the bounds of what is now Rockbridge County, was the Rev. John Brown, who in 1753 was called to Timber Ridge and Providence, the Commissioners of the congregation presenting the call being Archibald Alexander and Andrew Steel.

This call is worthy of preservation. "We being, for these many years past in very destitute circumstances for want of the ordinances of the Gospel stately among us, many of us under distressing spiritual languishments, and multitudes perishing in our sins for want of the bread of life broken among us; our Sabbaths wasted in melancholy silence at home, or sadly broken and profaned by the more thoughtless among us; our hearts and our hands discouraged, and our spirits broken with our mournful condition and repeated disappointments of relief in this particular. In these afflicting circumstances which human language cannot paint, we have had the happiness by the good Providence of God, of enjoying a share of your labors to our abundant satisfaction; and being universally well satisfied with your ministerial abilities in general, and the particular agreeableness of your qualifications to us in particular, as a gospel minister, we entreat you to have compassion on us, and accept this our call and invitation to the pastoral care of our immortal souls."

For nearly a quarter of a century Mr. Brown was the only pastor in Rockbridge County, and was "abundant in labors" not only in his own particular charge, but in the vacant churches and in the destitute places. Occasional missionary supplies for vacant churches were for many years sent to this region by both the Synod of New York and Philadelphia, but no pastor came except the honored and useful John Brown, whose name will be had in "everlasting remembrance" in all this region.

Mr. Brown resigned the charge of Timber Ridge in 1767, but remained pastor at Providence until 1796 when he removed to Kentucky, following his children there.

The inscription over his grave in Frankfort is, "The tomb of Rev. John Brown, who after graduating at Nassau Hall, devoted himself to the ministry and settled at New Providence, Rockbridge County, Virginia. At this place he was stated pastor forty-four years. In the decline of life he removed to this Country to spend the feeble remainder of his days with his children. He died in the 75th year of his age A. D. 1803."

Mr. Brown kept up for years a flourishing school, near his residence and in 1774 Mr. William Graham became teacher of this school under the care of Mr. Brown, having graduated in the first rank the year before at Princeton College in a class of 24 members, 14 of whom became ministers of the Gospel and four Presidents of Colleges and three governors of States. Having been licensed by the Presbytery of Hanover, in 1776 Mr. Graham was ordained pastor of Timber Ridge and Hall's Meeting House, as Forks of James was now called, continuing however in charge of the school as Rector, which in 1782 was incorporated as Liberty Hall Academy, having been removed several times in the meanwhile and at last to the site near Lexington where the picturesque ruins of the old Academy still arrest every eye.

In 1785 Mr. Graham's connection with Timber Ridge and Hall's Meeting House was dissolved, but in 1789 he became pastor of Hall's Meeting House alone, which, for convenience, was divided into two parts in the same year; one part worshipping in Lexington, took the name of the place of its worship, the other worshipping at the old place of assembling, after building a new store house (whose ruins still remain) was called New Monmouth. These two churches remained united until 1819. "The original limits of the village of Lexington were very small, and in 1780 it contained but four houses. Its name was taken from the battle ground in Massachusetts in 1776." In 1788 it was agreed that Mr. Graham should give one fourth of his time to Lexington, and for this the subscription the first year was £22, 18s. 6d. Mr. Graham was eminently useful both as rector of the Academy and as pastor of Lexington and New Monmouth. A large proportion of the young people of his charge became hopefully pious; and under his ministry a great and blessed revival of religion visited his churches.

In consequence of this revival and in connection with his academy, a new duty devolved on the Pastor Rector, viz.: "The instruction of a class of theological students, the first ever formed in Virginia.

Among these students was the first Dr. Moses Hoge and Dr. Archibald Alexander, the most distinguished and useful son of the Lexington Church. Dr. Alexander says in his famous Alumni address: "After the great revival which commenced in the year 1789, Mr. Graham held a theological class of seven or eight members under his tuition, which was kept up for several years. It was his custom to devote one day in the week to hearing the written discussions of these candidates and to free discussion of theological points.

In these exercises he appeared to take a great delight, and the students were always gratified and commonly convinced by his lucid statements and cogent reasonings. As most of those who enjoyed the benefit of his instructions, in this incipient theological seminary, are not now in the world, it may not be improper to say, that some of them rose to eminence in the church, and as Professors or Presidents of literary institutions.

The influence which he gained over the minds of his pupils while under his care, was unbounded. Seldom did any of them venture to maintain an opinion, differ at from those which he inculcated. Yet he encouraged the utmost freedom of discussion and seemed to aim, not so much to bring his pupils to think as he did, as to teach them to think on all subjects for themselves."

In 1796 Mr. Graham resigned the Rectorship of Liberty Hall Academy, ten days before George Washington's gift of one hundred shares in James River Company (which still yields $3,000 annual income) doubtless not knowing of this gift; and soon after emigrated to West Virginia, but died in Richmond, Va., in 1799 while on a visit on legal business.

George Addison Baxter, an old student of William Graham succeeded him as Rector of Liberty Hall Academy, now become Washington Academy in honor of Washington's gift, and as pastor of New Monmouth and Lexington.

For thirty years Dr. Baxter served as President of Washington College (changed from Academy to College in 1813) and for thirty-two years as Pastor of Lexington Church, being pastor of said Church alone after 1819, when it was organized as a separate Church with 94 members. For the three years prior to the formation of Lexington Church as distinct from Monmouth the Rev. Andrew B. Davidson, an eminently useful and diligent minister of the gospel, alternated with Dr. Baxter in preaching in Lexington on Sabbath morning.

In 1831 Dr. Baxter succeeded Dr. John H. Rice as professor of Systematic Theology in Union Theological Seminary filling this position with great distinction until his death in 1841. The thirty-two years which Dr. Baxter spent in Lexington were filled to the brim with the highest form of useful service. Under his direction 450 students completed their academic studies, and by "his successive classes of students was held in peculiar estimation as a kind, fatherly, resolute President. They gave him the significant title "old rex." The cry of "old rex is coming" and they could always know when he was coming, without much watching for he always gave the alarm by his half suppressed cough "old rex is coming,"—the mischief was all done, the boys in their places and at work. The students loved him, they loved him through life; they loved to talk about him, and his absolute dominion and his inherent greatness, and the winding up of their various little pranks, always getting off easier than they deserved."

As an Ecclesiastic and scholar Dr. Baxter ranked amongst the very first men of his day and time, and his power as a preacher is attested not simply by tradition but by some who still remain to tell us of the unction and tears and holy fervor with which he declared the "whole counsel of God." Under his ministry there were added to the Lexington Church 405 members—355 on examination, 50 by certificate.

In 1832 the Rev. J. W. Douglass succeeded Dr. Baxter as pastor of the church remaining for one year and ten months, when he removed to Fayetteville, N. C., where he had a very useful and successful pastorate, as also during his ministry in Lexington, 99 having been added to this church, 69 on examination and 30 on certificate. Mr. Douglass is remembered as an organizer, arranging his members into classes for the study of the Scripture and providing also for the instruction of the colored people; he was also an earnest advocate of total abstinence, some of the older people amongst us still reciting some of the lines of a hymn which he composed and taught the children of his church to sing,

"Do not put that sugar in,
For me to drink would be a sin."

The Rev. Wm. M. Cunningham, D. D., then a young student fresh from Princeton Seminary, and recommended by Lexington's distinguished son Dr. Archibald Alexander, at that time Professor of Systematic Theology in Princeton, became pastor of the Church in 1834, remaining until 1840.

During his ministry special efforts were made to reach the colored people, with the ministrations of the Gospel, the Records of the session showing that "certain members of the church and session were appointed to superintend and be present at the meetings of colored people in this place and that each alternate Sabbath was appropriated to religious services for the colored people in the Lecture Room."

Earnest efforts were also made for the circulation of religious literature amongst the people, the session purchasing for example 100 copies of Dr. Samuel Miller's book on Presbyterianism for gratuitous distribution and all the benevolent causes of the General Assembly were maintained with unusual care and the most thorough system.

The following resolution of the session may be of interest: "On motion, Resolved that it be considered the duty of the pastor on the first Sabbath of the first month appropriated to each benevolent object to preach a sermon or make an address in behalf of the object about to be presented to the Church and at the same time a public collection be taken up in the church for said object.

Resolved, that it be recommended to the Several Committees who have charge of the several benevolent objects, to hold special meetings and have addresses made, on behalf of the object that is before the Congregation."

During this pastorate there was added to the church 88 members, 47 on examination and 41 on certificate. After leaving Lexington Dr. Cunningham became, and for many years remained pastor at La Grange, Ga., and died early in the seventies just after his election to the Presidency of Oglethorpe college.

Rev. Dr. John Skinner, a minister of one of the Scotch secession churches, became pastor in 1840 remaining till 1847. During this pastorate 175 members were added to the church, 130 on examination and 45 on certificate. Dr. Skinner was an industrious pastor, a capable ecclesiastic, master of all the graces of rhetoric in preaching, and closed his life as pastor of a church in Canada.

In 1848 the beloved and saintly Dr. Wm. S. White, began his happy and successful pastorate of nearly a quarter of a century. In the prime of life, with the experience of both an educator and a pastor, tactful, consecrated, wise, sound in the faith, he was well fitted for the work he now assumed, and faithfully fulfilled for many fruitful years.

Under his ministry "Stonewall" Jackson was received into the Presbyterian Church and when the Board of Deacons was organized, was elected as the first of the deacons, to himself a "good degree" by the faithfulness of his diaconal service, and subsequently becoming Superintendent of the Colored Sabbath-schools in our Lecture Room, which the Records of the Session show was established years before under the pastorate of Dr. Cunningham.

The distinguished military career of our first deacon as Lee's great Confederate Lieutenant has attracted the eye of the world towards this now famous Colored School.

The story of Dr. White's life and services has been told in a volume published by our Committee of Publication written by his son, now one of the venerable ministers of the Synod of Virginia, and the perusal of that volume would doubtless be an excellent preparation for attendance upon the Assembly which meets in the section and church where Dr. White was for a long time the well known and influential pastor and ecclesiastical leader. During his pastorate there were added to the church 459 members, 228 on examination and 171 by certificate.

In 1868 that brilliant and "golden-tongued" preacher Dr. John W. Pratt succeeded to the pastorate and for more than five years preached to crowded houses, made up largely of students of the University, which under the Presidency of Gen. Robert E. Lee had a largely increased attendance from all over our Southland. A volume of posthumous sermons show Dr. Pratt to have been an accomplished theologian, an able thinker, an accurate scholar, and a master of a well-nigh faultless English style, and the universal testimony is that in all the graces of elocution and delivery he had no superior.

He left Lexington in 1874 to become President of Central University, and afterwards pastor of Dr. Stuart Robinson's church in Louisville, Kentucky. During his pastorate there were added to the church 190 members, 98 on examination and 95 on certificate.

The Rev. Francis P. Mulally, D. D., a favorite pupil of Dr. Thornwell and formerly pastor of First Presbyterian Church, Columbia, S. C., became pastor in 1877 serving until 1882. During this pastorate there were added to the church 140 members, 85 on examination and 55 on certificate. Dr. Mulally resigned his pastorate to become President of Adger College, Walhalla, S. C., and is now a member of the Presbytery of New York.

In 1883 the Rev. Thos. L. Preston, one of the beloved sons of the church, entered upon the pastorate of this church of his fathers, the relation being terminated by his death in 1895. Wise, prudent, tactful, sympathetic, sound in the faith, strong with saving common sense; for nearly twelve years his ministry here was crowned with the approval of God, and the edification of his people. During this pastorate there were added to the church 363 members, 162 on examination and 201 on certificate.

In 1896 the Rev. Thornton Whaling, D. D., then Professor of Philosophy in the Southwestern Presbyterian University became pastor; a relation which has now lasted for more than six years. During this pastorate there have been added to the church 198 members 118 on examination and 80 on certificate.

Besides the services of these nine pastors, the church has had as stated supplies in the interval between pastors the Rev. Dr. Henry Ruffner, the Rev. Dr. J. L. Kirkpatrick, the Rev. Dr. J. A. Waddell, the Rev. Dr. D. C. Irwin, and for the years 1895-6 the Rev. Dr. J. A. Quarles, now professor of Philosophy in Washington and Lee University, whose "bow still abides in strength," and who lives among us crowned with the love and honor of all who know him.

Forty-three elders and thirty-one deacons have served the church, and many of them made most valuable contributions to its history and work.

There have been 2,420 members, 1,093 men and 1,327 women. But this does not fully represent the work and service of the church, hundreds of its young people before reaching church membership have gone to other sections of our country, and many of them become ministers of the Gospel, officers of the church or members therein, representatives of the mother church in which they were trained.

More than ten thousand young men in all these years as students at the University or Institute have come under the influence of this church, a large proportion of whom acknowledged themselves to be its spiritual debtors.

Fifty-three men have gone from its membership into the Gospel ministry, most of them in the Presbyterian Church and doubtless many others whom the church records do not reach have gone through its influence into this work. Three of its people are now in the foreign mission field. In addition to its home pastor the church maintains as its Missionary representative the Rev. P. P. Price of Kashung, China and Mrs. W. M. Junkin of Kunsan, Korea. It furnishes teachers for three Sabbath-schools in addition to its own, has twelve elders, and twelve deacons and reports 504 members. Perhaps there is no other town of 3,000 inhabitants in the whole country, which has so large a Presbyterian Church. It is planted in a Presbyterian region, settled by the Scotch-Irish and still dominated by them,—May it ever be so!

There are nineteen Presbyterian Churches in Rockbridge county, 15 connected with us, 4 with the Seceders. The Presbytery of Lexington has met in Lexington 25 times, beginning with its first meeting here in 1789, and the Synod of Virginia 12 times, beginning in the same year 1789.

But the General Assembly for the first time meets in the center of Presbyterian life and history as well as of Southern tradition and sentiment in May, 1903. Many of those who come up to this august Assembly will be returning to their own home, or to the home of their fathers or grand-fathers, but all will receive a genuine and hearty Presbyterian welcome.

The Confession of Faith, Chap. X.

The subject of chapter X of the Confession of faith is effectual calling. The chapter is occupied mainly with two questions:

1. Who are effectually called?
2. How they are effectually called?

To the question who, the Confession answers all those whom God has predestinated unto life, or the elect.

The chapter divides the elect into two classes: Elect adults and elect infants.

The chapter does not define elect adults because we do not know, and have no way of knowing, who among adults are elect, except as they give evidence of their effectual calling by a credible profession of faith.

The chapter does define elect infants, as those infants who die in infancy. This assumes that the fact of one's death in infancy is proof to us of his election.

Who are effectually called? One class who are effectually called are elect adults.

And who are elect adults? The children of wrath even as others, so far as we know, until they manifest the fact of their effectual calling by their Christian walk and conversation.

And who else are effectually called? Another class who are effectually called are elect infants. And who are elect infants? The children of wrath even as others, so far as we know, until they manifest the fact of their effectual calling by their death in infancy. Hence the elect class of infants are defined as the class of elect persons who die in infancy. This is the exact sense of the Confession's phrase: "elect infants, dying in infancy."

This interpretation makes the statements of the chapter consistent. Two classes spoken of: elect adults—not defined, and elect infants—defined as those dying in infancy.

Then the chapter explains how elect adults are effectually called viz., by the word and spirit, and elect infants, dying in infancy, by the spirit without the word.

But the Confession's phrase "elect infants dying in infancy," has been interpreted as implying that the Confession is silent as to whether all infants dying in infancy are elect, and therefore saved, or not. According to this interpretation the Confession does not deny that there may be infants in hell, notwithstanding Christ said that "of such is the Kingdom of heaven." This leaves the Confession silent when Christ speaks in express words that "of such is the Kingdom of heaven. It leaves the Confession silent, where the whole Protestant faith is outspoken. It leaves the Presbyterian Church under the slander of her enemies that so far as we are authorized from the Scriptures to make a credal statement to the contrary there may be infants in hell.

The enemies of Presbyterianism have always tried to palm off this interpretation upon the Confession's infant clause, but it was strenuously denied to be the Confession's meaning and hurled back as a slander upon the Confession and upon Presbyterianism, until about the middle of the last century, Stuart Robinson and A. A. Hodge had the boldness to admit the slanderous interpretation, with the effort to escape the slander through the door of a "well-grounded hope."

And still we have our well-grounded hope brethren trying to comfort themselves and their friends in regard to the dead infants by a well grounded hope, whose ground gives faith no room to stand upon.

How can there be a well-grounded hope of a thing concerning which there is no well-grounded faith? The hope brethren are just as strong in their hope that all the dead infants are saved, as the faith brethren are strong in their faith that all are saved. The whole church either believes or hopes that all the dead children are saved; and since the distinction between faith and hope does not hold, therefore the simple fact is that the whole church believes that all the dead chilchildren are saved. Why then should we hesitate so to amend the Confession of faith as to make it, unambiguously, say so, and not be a reed shaken with the wind, bending to the slander of the enemy, silent where it is expected to speak out, and when forced to speak out, give forth not a credal faith but a doubtful hope? What can be the value of a silent Confession, putting doubtful hope for credal faith where doubtful hope means nothing? For either all infants that die in infancy are saved, or if only all may be saved and some be lost, it is merely mocking us to tell us that some may be saved, when we have no means of finding out which infants that die in infancy are saved and which are, or may be, lost. Thus the new doctrine on infant salvation turns the serious question in regard to it unto mere frivolous mockery.

The very existence of the hope brethren thus seals the proof of the needed amendment. How? Why before the hope brethren appeared with their new doctrine, all Presbyterians were agreed that the infant clause had but one meaning, and that that one meaning was that all the dead children are safe in heaven. None but our enemies gave it a meaning different from this, until our hope brethren appeared and joined our enemies in giving the clause but one meaning, and that one meaning is that the clause is silent as to whether all the dead infants are saved.

Our hope brethren say we have no authority from the Scriptures to make a credal statement to the contrary, because say they, the Scriptures are silent on this point and where the Scriptures are silent the Confession is silent. The whole body of our hope brethren thus join the whole body of the enemies of Presbyterians in giving the clause an interpretation which Presbyterians never understood it to have before. The clause therefore must be ambiguous—capable of more than one interpretation, else Presbyterians of our own body would never have joined our enemies in saying it means something different from what Dr. Charles Hodge says that, up to his time, all Protestants believed it to mean.

The clause therefore needs amendment and our hope brethren have emphasized this need in a way that makes the church dissatisfied with it as ambiguous. And the church is going to be more and more dissatisfied with it until it is amended. The clause as it stands is a thorn in the flesh, and its a thorn in the flesh that is going to irritate and disturb the Church more and more until it is removed.

But it is believed by some that if we open the door of amendment, we shall have more guests than we can entertain. Well, if we open the door with the understanding that it is to admit this one clause, viz., the infant clause, and no more, we might hope that this, for the present at least, would stop all the rest from knocking at the door. This one is clamoring for admission and there is ground for clamoring. It can be pleaded as a precedent therefore no farther than there may be equally good ground for clamoring in another case. The Church is agreed on this that the Confession does not state the faith of the Church in unambiguous terms.

How about our hope brethren? Will they not oppose a credal statement, seek to avail themselves of the opportunity to seal upon the church a silent doubting Thomas for the infant clause?

My answer is that there seems to be evidence that our hope brethren have become ashamed of their position and will at least make no resistance. If the whole church is of one faith, that all the dead children are saved, and the Confession does not state that faith in unambiguous terms, surely it is safe to propose amendment as to this one clause. And when ever the same may be said of any other clause of the Confession amendment of that clause will be in order. All that is proposed is so to amend a particular section of the Confession as to make it state what evidently is and always has been the faith of the Church. If the hope position be referred to as a temporary exception, the answer is that a well-grounded hope is the same thing as a well-grounded faith, and the agitation which has brought out this fact, has, at the same time, brought out the ambiguity on account of which amendment is needed.

The Proposed Union With the Reformed Church.

The time is at hand when our representatives at Lexington must decide upon the possibility of union, or rather closer relations with the Dutch Reformed Church. This question goes to the General Assembly with considerable pressure for favorable action, three Synods having overtured for the beginning of negotiations, the Reformed brethren also manifesting much desire for the union. A coy courtship has been intermittently carried on for years; now the question is out. No important issue is without its two sides, else there could be no virtue in right choice. No doubt there are difficulties in the way of this proposed change. But are there not duties and advantages, which far exceed in importance the differences and difficulties? In the discussion of this question much light may come from the practical side of our church life: its missionary enterprises and possibilities.

The world offers to no church larger prospect for evangelistic work than our Southern Church has within her own wide borders. Our duties and privileges as a church are worldwide; but our most manifest destiny is to bring to Christ in the homeland, communities which are spiritually desolate, and to lift others to higher ideals of truth. The urgent need of an aggressive and united evangelistic effort will impress us, if we consider, even in outline and hurriedly, the two great departments of our home mission work: among the negroes, and among the white immigrants rapidly filling large sections of the South.

The most serious problem of the South, demanding immediate solution, is the religious condition of the negro. Other sections have assumed to solve it, but ultimately it must become the business of the white people of the South. In the black man the strength and endurance of racial character are not such that he can long survive a policy of uncertainty. Every year of immoral conditions, of intemperate habits, of misdirected education, of distorted religious ideals, is not merely a year lost; far worse, it is a year of irremediable retrogression. All the rhetorical and sentimental effusions of alien theorists to the contrary, we may well pause before asserting that the negro race, as a race, has made substantial progress.

In some sections the property holdings of the negro have increased, but not in proportion to the rapid material advance of the South. An insignificant number of the race have entered professional life. As an illustration, in one of our Southern cities with a negro population of twelve thousand, the majority of criminal cases being from that race, there is not one negro lawyer. Although more than half the sickness in this particular town is among them, they have only one or two physicians, and they are without professional standing. In our growing manufacturing industries the negro has little part, except as unskilled helper. He is either servant or petty farmer. Even the part which he had in the trades in days of slavery, as blacksmith, barber, carpenter, coachman, is being taken from him by skilled white labor. Although the second generation has arisen since emancipation, the negro is still literally unknown in mercantile life. Those who give any evidence of ability customarily become preachers or teachers, not always with benefit to their race, these being the very positions for which they are unfit. It would be a great boon to the race in the far Southern States, if no negro were permitted to teach or preach, except after the severest tests of fitness; for certain fall must come both to blind leader and to blindly led.

The most deplorable feature of the negro question is religious. While there are conspicuous and happy exceptions, the majority of their churches, in teaching, worship and conduct, are a menace to the peace and progress of the race. The typical negro church contains several local preachers who are ignorant and often morally unfit for spiritual leadership. The pastor rules as a dictator among these, himself after having several other churches with their respective bodies of local preachers. I have known one negro minister with six churches, more than one of these being alone sufficient for his energies, if properly directed. I have also heard of sixteen local preachers in a town church of four or five hundred members. And then there is that countless company of travelling preachers, for whom collections are always taken. I have seen two such collections taken in one service, and have heard of three. This undisciplined ecclesiastical army lives and fattens on the hard earnings of servants and croppers, and rules them with despotic hand. Woe betided the black man when he lost the care and instruction of his white friend.

The reader knows this, if he has ever attended the services of the real typical negro church. Emotionalism of the lowest order! Prayers beginning simple enough, but ending in unintelligible and ecstatic ravings! Sermons which are half-chants, bringing the hearers into a frenzy! Rhythmical cadencies sweeping through the audience all the while! Time-beating with clapping of hands and patting of feet! Untimely but vociferous responses! And worst of all are those emotional outbreaks, called "getting religion," but much resembling epileptic attacks, which are enough to unfit an ordinary nervous system for duty through many following days. I have seen one person have two such spells in one night. And these protracted meetings may continue for months, lasting each night until after midnight. Is it strange that the servant question grows grievous, that the moral strength of the race is giving way, that our asylums for the colored insane must be enlarged, that there is not room in our jails for the criminals?

The Northern Presbyterian Church has faithfully endeavored to enter this difficult field and to overcome these evils by an educated ministry, orderly worship and equipped schools.

But it is becoming apparent that the interest of our Northern brethren does not grow with the growing needs. There is before me a letter from a prominent official of that Church, answering the suggestion that a promising field of negro evangelization might be entered, which letter states that instead of taking new work they may have to abandon work already organized. So the responsibility for evangelizing and teaching the negro is returning to the Southern white man. This is our work. And in the day when we face the issue and grapple with this problem, the known sympathy and the praiseworthy liberality of the Dutch Church may insure a blessed result. For this reason the proposed union is not idle talk.

The mission work of our Church among the rapidly increasing white population of the South is the most hopeful feature of her life. The vigorous and broad-minded advance of the able secretary of our Assembly's committee and the achievements of the various Synodical agencies have brought new hope to the hearts of our people. It is being found that Presbyterianism is indeed for the people. We are well able to overcome and possess the lands into which we go up bravely and quickly. To our wide and inviting mission field in the Southwest other denominations look with longing; and some are aggressing, among these the latest aspirant being the Reformed Church in America, now planting its mission stations readily and substantially in Oklahoma. It is possible that this has given the recent and decisive impetus toward union between the two churches. This is the situation: Indian Territory is the proper field of the Southern Church, while the Dutch Church now supplements our weak position in Oklahoma. It is thought that an united body, with its mutually cheering and sustaining forces, might become the greatest factor in evangelizing these future states. If present conditions continue, we may expect to give over our interests in Oklahoma to Northern and Cumberland Presbyterians, Congregationalists,

Those who are familiar with the geography and development of the Southwest, see that the greatest opportunity of our Church is in Texas and the two territories above mentioned. Texas alone is an empire, into which our Assembly might pour all of its mission funds and men, and yet this would be just a beginning. If the Louisiana line were a hinge on which the State of Texas might be turned, it would lap over all the gulf states, and its western extremity would reach out into the Atlantic Ocean. New railroads are building all the time, towns spring up in a year, the soil is inexhaustible, new lands are being opened. The Pan Handle alone is as large as an ordinary state. But the most striking feature of the great Southwest is its people. They are not ignorant, nor reprobate, nor the refuse of other sections; but brave, ambitious, intelligent, moral people, who have entered a land of promise to build better homes and to win a larger place for them and theirs. They are like to the true and brainy men, who made the old American colonies, and established our Republic. The future greatness of the South lies in this wonderful section. When irrigation becomes feasible, as it certainly will, West and Northwest Texas will be crowded until prosperous farms, the arid lands of New Mexico and Arizona will be redeemed, and the great highway of continental traffic will lie through this part of our land, making it a center of industry and population. What are Presbyterians going to do for this great future?

What has union with the Reformed Church to do with our duty to this great field? Possibly very much. Two will be better able to stand than one alone. The momentum, which we would naturally expect to be given to this work by the larger united body, is just what is needed in a growing country among earnest and practical people, who put energy and enthusiasm into all that their hands find to do. The minor matters that divide Christians become meaningless in a new country under the pressure of boundless opportunity and imperative duty for evangelistic work.

Our missions do not cover the same ground, but from a claim through Indian Territory and Southern Oklahoma, attracting the same class and kind of people. The union of these forces would inaugurate a more aggressive movement than the two separately could ever hope to press. We should then have an army organized and ready to invade and possess the Pan Handle and Western Texas. Alone the Southern Church has neither the men nor the money for this grand campaign. Union will not merely enlarge the sources of mission revenue, but possibly through the accompanying enthusiasm increase the gifts of money and consecrated men from our own borders.

Are the differences too great for harmonious union? The answer to this question is the province of another writer. But we are constrained to say that where the hearts and sympathies of two churches are one, the laying aside of external divergencies and the overcoming of local or racial prejudices must be well-pleasing to God, as also an edifying spectacle to men. "See how these Christians love and trust each other!" may become the happy turning of hearts and communities to Christ. Certain it is that alone we have not the strength and readiness for this our great mission. United we may avail. Let us then give due consideration to what may be our opportunity.

The Foreign Mission work of the two churches would easily coalesce. In Japan it is already one. To them would be given an interest in Mexico, Cuba and the Congo; while the field of our interests and sympathies would be enlarged to include Southern China and India.

We should expect that those who represent us at Lexington in May will not allow local and personal prejudices or regard for minor divergencies to deny careful consideration to a providential suggestion, which may bring blessing to our Church, and glorious extension of her influence and principles.

"Elect Infants Dying in Infancy."—A Suggestion.

Rev. C. R. Hemphill, D. D., LL. D.

It seems that the Assembly at Lexington, like several of its immediate predecessors, must needs deal with the question of changing the language of our Confession in regard to elect infants. At least one Presbytery has forwarded an overture on the subject. On the supposition that the Assembly will give the matter consideration I overture to renew a suggestion I made at the Jackson Assembly but withdrew before it was discussed. The suggestion is to leave the Confession unchanged and by a foot-note adopted according to the method provided in our Constitution remove all possible misconstruction of our Church's doctrine concerning the destiny of infants dying in infancy. When in the Jackson Assembly the choice lay between the present ambiguous statement of the Confession and a proposed amendment that would remove the ambiguity. My vote was cast for the amendment. But it was then and still is my conviction that there is a more excellent way.

To me it appears a distinct misfortune that our Confession and Catechisms should have suffered their several revisions by a process of excision and modification of their original phraseology. These documents were framed by a body of men never surpassed, as I believe, by any like assembly in learning and piety. For this and other reasons our Doctrinal standards should have been preserved in their integrity, while necessary changes and additions should have been made by notes or by supplementary articles.

It is in the interest of this idea that I submit an explanatory note concerning Chapter X, Section III of the Confession of Faith, which should take the orderly course prescribed in Chapter VII, Section III of the Form of Government, and which, if adopted, should be hereafter inserted at the foot of the page containing the section of the Confession above cited. This note would read as follows:

"This language is not properly construed as teaching that any persons who die in infancy are not saved.

It is the teaching of the Scriptures that all persons who die in infancy are included in the election of grace, and are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit."

Perhaps I ought to add that I have assumed that this note expresses the real faith of the Church. My present concern is solely with the best method of incorporating the Church's belief in the standards of her faith. The method suggested has of course no novelty, and has commended itself to other Presbyterian communions which have like precious faith with us.

The Lack of Educational Ideals.

There appears an article in the April number of the South Atlantic Quarterly, from the pen of Dr. Kilgo, President of Trinity College, Durham, N. C., which seems hardly fair to the South and to those Northern friends who are working with such untiring zeal for the cause of education in the Southern States, and while I doubt not the real meaning which Dr. Kilgo intended to convey, we at the same time differ with Dr. Kilgo on one point. "There are two prominent difficulties," he says, "that obstruct the growth of education in the South. First is lack of Educational conscience and the second is the lack of sound educational doctrines and correct educational ideals."

Are we as a Southern People not judged rather harshly, and with some injustice in Dr. Kilgo's statement, standing as we now do and reviewing the past. From whence came we, and what have we attained?

Is there any section that has ever suffered greater poverty and privation than the South during the Civil war, and the days of re-construction. We have but to go to one of the great financiers of this country and a North Carolinian to find out what privation confronted progress at that time and the strenuous effort which was necessary on the part of many Southerners for their maintenance and meager support, it was not a matter of solving educational problems, but a problem of establishing a means of support for himself and family. True it is that Education did not receive the attention at that time which it would have received had the conditions and surroundings been different, and while elevated educational ideals are naturally more fully acquired and more easily developed in children whose parents have been able to avail themselves of every educational advantage and the intellectual influences which surround them, the Southern people have labored for a modest livelihood, they have ever retained those conscientious scruples of justice characteristic of their ancestors and that indomitable spirit and determination to achieve, that high Educational and commercial position to which they were entitled. They labored first for a meager subsistence, secondly an humble cottage which they could call home, and as gradually their efforts were crowned with success we find them sharing their limited means with those around them for the cause of education, and for the betterment of the surroundings of the communities in which they lived, and when from 1871 till 1902 we see the enormous sum of $650,000,000 expended by the South for educational purposes for which $121,000,000 was for the colored race, it seems to us that the South had educational ideals, and problems to solve which time could alone enable her to work out.

The South may not have attained that position in the intellectual world which will enable her to hold up as an ideal to other sections those methods which are only applicable to the South, and while we may lack to some extent that educational conscience to which Dr. Kilgo refers, we have ever possessed a conscientious desire backed by our hard earned means for a practical education, which through our untiring effort to achieve has enlisted the support of our Northern friends in behalf of the promotion of those ideals which have long been erected in the hearts and minds of many of our foremost Southern educators.

I believe that I voice the sentiments of the Southern people when I say that we appreciate the warm feeling, and untiring effort now being put forth by our Northern friends in this great work and the good results which have already been accomplished along educational lines. We appreciate the great need of a higher standard of morality, and the creation of higher ideals in the hearts and minds of our fellowmen, and that only through a practical education can we hope to attain the goal for which we are striving. To do this and reap the full benefit of our efforts, we cannot hope to at once take a man from the slums of illiteracy and place him upon the pinnacle of intelligence, we must take the vocation from which his subsistence is derived, that on which his time, energy and brain is exerted as a means of interesting and improving his condition, thereby bringing him in touch with better things and creating a desire which will inspire an effort on his part to give to his sons and daughters better advantages than were afforded him, and as our surroundings are improved we are unconsciously made better. Thus our extreme poverty has been a menace to our intellectual achievements and as this yoke of poverty is gradually lifted, in this era of prosperity, we see the New South. The New Man and the New Woman in their freedom and liberty, on which is laid the corner stone of success, bow in homage to that Great God of the Universe whose providential hand is leading us forth from illiteracy to intelligence and from degradation and strife to that sacred shrine of peace, love and unity, so essential to the future welfare and progress of our nation, and the issues for which we have stood and proclaimed a higher education for all people regardless of their creed or color, thereby instilling that thrift, fidelity and constant courage and indomitable spirit of independence which comes by the elevation of mankind by educating and creating within him a tenacious desire for better living and a fuller realization of the lofty heights to which man is capable of aspiring and how fully those aspirations may be realized, when his whole being becomes imbued with that determination to succeed which knows no rebuff, and his moral life lived up to the full standard of his God given privileges.

The Editor's Chat With the Reader.

This is rather a Stonewall Jackson number, with its illustration of the Jackson Statue in the Lexington Cemetery, its Stonewall Jackson Memorial, which the Cadet Barracks of the V. M. I., are, and the other references to our Presbyterian Hero. The Virginia Military Institute will always be associated with his name, and it will be well worth the while of the Assembly just to see those boys drill once. Some of the Jackson traditions for promptness and exactness seem to have remained.

Dr. Thornton Whaling contributes a timely sketch of the historic church in which the Assembly meets. Dr. Whaling himself is one of the most successful in the long list of its honored pastors.

Dr. Edward Mack has another timely article on the subject of our union with the Reformed Church, from the viewpoint of missions. Rev. K. M. McIntyre and Rev. C. R. Hemphill, D. D., have valuable suggestions as to the proposed amendment to the Confession. Our friend, J. S. K. has an interesting defence of the Southern people and their educational ideals as against the President of Trinity College. A good deal depends upon the point of view and each side furnishes a part of the truth. The reader will find some excellent matter this week in the Devotional, Missionary, Sunday-school and Westminster Departments.

Home Mission Notes.

The outlook for our Home Mission work in the Ozarks is in many respects more hopeful and promising than ever before. Several recent occurrences give good reason for this opinion and hopefulness. One and perhaps the most important is that the committee has recently secured the services of Rev. O. W. Gauss for the work in the lower Ozark region, in Christian and Taney Counties, notice of which has been already published. Our brother was hindered in his work for several weeks by the serious illness of his son with typhoid fever: nevertheless the whole field had been visited before the sickness began, and he was able to fill his Sabbath appointments once or twice. At last accounts the son was recovering, and Dr. Gauss doubtless has returned to his field and work: as soon as possible his family will remove to Sparta in Christian County, where one of his churches is. He will preach there three times a month and once at Forsyth in Taney County, meanwhile looking after the regions beyond and around as he is able and preaching in the schoolhouses as opportunity offers. Another interesting thing is that we have started a summer school at Forsyth: this school is in charge of Rev. Mr. Forsyth who has been occupying the field for two years, and there were more than thirty pupils the first three weeks. There is also a prospect of establishing a permanent school, a Christian academy and the first of the kind in all that region, either at Forsyth or some other point in Taney County. Of this Dr. Gauss says, "The people are very much interested in the permanent school proposition and are anxious to see the matter set on foot." Mr. F. will also preach at various points in the County.

For the upper Ozark field, Crocker and Montrose, we have gotten for the summer a student of Louisville Seminary, Mr. O. L. Byrns; he will begin work at once, and besides preaching regularly at the two churches named he will act as Sabbath-school Missionary in the regions round about, and will preach in different neighborhoods as the way may be opened, especially on Sabbath afternoon and night. Much good work in the way of spying out the land and organizing Sunday-schools has already been done by Mrs. E. L. Rinehart during the last ten months: and it is the earnest hope of all who know the facts that this good woman will be continued in her work, which has been already so greatly blessed.

Dr. J. Addison Smith, who is the "bishop" of two Counties and supplies regularly four churches, has been greatly encouraged of late: in both Counties new fields are opening up with most encouraging prospects. There is however far more work than any one man can do,—full enough for two, one in each County—but if those near by will all lend a helping hand and do what they can, and if he can get some needed assistance, pecuniary and other, from abroad, much may be accomplished in spite of many difficulties.

Sunday School Institute of Upper Missouri Presbytery.

The Second Annual Sunday-school Institute was held in connection with the regular spring meeting of Presbytery, April 14, in the Second Church, St. Joseph, Mo. We believe it was a success in every particular. Every church except four was represented, making in all thirty regularly appointed representatives from fourteen churches:

Besides the above there were twenty-one other Sunday-school workers from different schools, but not sent as representatives. The discussions on every subject were enthusiastic and practical. We believe much good will be the result. Presbytery ordered the third Institute to be held next spring. The address in the evening, taking the place of the opening sermon before Presbytery, was delivered by Dr. J. E. McAfee, of Parkville, Mo. His subject was "The Great Fact, the Challenge and the Sabbath-school." This alone was worth more than the whole cost of the Institute. Dr. McAfee is one of the most original thinkers and speakers I ever listened to. After the address this remark was made by one of the members. "That man thinks in chunks." We are glad to see the interest that is being taken in this work by our churches. The importance of the work is shown by the fact that 50 per cent of the whole number received on profession last year in our Presbytery came from our Sabbath-schools.

Let us begin now to plan for the Institute next spring.

ARKANSAS

Presbytery of Arkansas held its spring session at Conway, April 21. Rev. C. P. Browning delivered the opening sermon, Gen. 7:1. R. W. Porter was elected Moderator, and W. H. Morrow, Clerk. Present, nine ministers and eleven elders. Rev. J. A. Creighton and J. W. Cobb of Washburne Presbytery were present as corresponding members.

The Pastoral relationship between Rev. C. P. Browning and Wynne and Augusta churches was dissolved, and calls from Black Rock and Walnut Ridge churches placed in his hands, accepted, and a committee—Latham and Johnson—appointed to install him.

An adjourned meeting was ordered for June 2, at Little Rock, Second Church. The church at Baring Cross was dissolved. The Rev. R. B. Willis, with Rev. Jasper K. Smith, alternate, was chosen Commissioner to the Assembly—E. R. Long, with R. W. Porter alternate, also chosen.

The church building at Powhatan was sold and the proceeds under certain conditions donated to Brinkley church. Permission was granted Rev. J. A. Creighton to labor within our bounds.

Reports from the churches (unusually full) showed our Presbytery in a fairly prosperous condition, the decay of the "Family Altar" and Sabbath observance being the dark spots.

The Assembly was overtured to appoint a committee to take up the question of the Sabbath with our National Government and the great railway corporations.

Searcy was chosen as the next place of meeting. J. E. Latham and S. G. Miller were appointed to preach on "The Sabbath" and J. A. Creighton on the "Family Altar" at next meeting of Presbytery.

GEORGIA.

KIRKWOOD.—On Sunday morning, April 26, Mr. Norwood Robson, and Mr. Fred K. Aram, having been previously elected, were ordained and installed ruling elder and deacon, respectively, in this church of which Dr. W. G. Woodbridge is pastor.

MOULTRIE.—On May 6th, there was a deplorable accident in which Col. Matt. J. Pearsall and Dr. Frank Daniel were killed. They were riding on a motor car, which, in the darkness and rain, collided with a log train. Col. Pearsall is a brother of Secretary Pearsall in Gov. Aycock's office at Raleigh, N. C., and had many relatives in North Carolina. Funeral services were held at the Presbyterian Church here, and the remains were carried to Morganton, N. C., for burial. In commenting on the sad affair, the Moultrie News writes thus of him:

Since his death Thursday morning, the city has seemed stunned. Few realized how intimately his personality was interwoven into all the activities of our people. His soul was many-sided; and his nature, infinite in its variety, affiliated with every mood and class. There was no class of our population that did not claim him as its own; and when the astute counsellor and the fastidious critic lay dying there were scores who wept because they were powerless to help him. The historian of William the Silent in describing his virtues completes his climax by saying that "when he died the little children wept in the streets;" and the most touching thing seen at Matt Pearsall's funeral was the tears of the children whose companion this childless man loved to be in life. We doubt not that while like shadows we enter again into our pursuit of shadows, his soul, 'neath some summer sunlit sky, finds perfect peace.

FOREIGN.

Committee Notes.

The executive committee of Foreign Missions met in regular session in the Mission Rooms on Tuesday, May 12th.

Rev. W. H. Hudson of Mid-China Mission, was present and gave a most interesting account of the work at Kashing station, of which he is a member. In 1895 Mr. Hudson and Dr. Venable opened the work at Kashing spending their first winter in a three room mud hovel with a dirt floor and no fire place except under the oven where they cooked.

There are now at Kashing three comfortable dwellings for the three missionary families residing there, a hospital plant with four buildings, and accommodations for about forty in-patients, the female department of which is under the care of Miss Venie J. Lee, M. D., formerly of the Peabody Hall, the funds for which were provided by the Independent Presbyterian Church of Savannah. This Church has given Mr. Hudson during his visit home additional funds for an addition to this building of a second story. In 1896 the first convert was baptized. There is now an organized church of forty members. One native minister is at work who has been trained by the members of the station, and two others now in process of training will soon be ready to work. Dr. Venable has two medical students who are now assisting in the hospital work. Kashing is now an ideally equipped station with all of the different branches of work represented, evangelistic, educational and medical. Some of the members of the church are of the well to do middle class of people, and the outlook for the future is most promising.

A letter was read from Rev. H. S. Allyn of the Southern Brazil Mission announcing the death of Rev. Chas. R. Morton of Yellow Fever and detailing the very sad circumstances under which the death occurred. It seems that it was caused by his being removed by the health authorities to the pest house after he had seemed to be on the road to recovery, but before he had the strength to endure the exertion necessary for the transfer.

A letter of sympathy was ordered to be written to Rev. J. G. Hall, of the Cuban Mission, who is now at his home in Chester, S. C., in feeble health.

It was announced that Dr. J. R. Wilkinson, of the China Mission, was expected at his home in Greenville, S. C., on the 10th, and that Rev. W. M. Morrison of the African Mission was expected to arrive at his home in Lexington, Va., during the latter part of this month. Both of these brethren were requested to meet with the Executive Committee at its next regular meeting.

At his own request Rev. H. F. Williams was relieved of the Chairmanship of the Forward Movement Committee in order that his whole time might be given to the publication department and the development of our leaflet literature, as is made necessary by the constantly increasing work in these departments. Hereafter all correspondence connected with the Forward Movement should be sent to the Secretary.

Rev. Angus McDonald, D. D., who has been the Chairman of the Executive Committee for the past five years, in view of his removal from Nashville, offered his resignation as Chairman and member of the committee.

The Secretary was instructed to write Dr. McDonald a letter expressing the appreciation which the Committee felt of his faithful and efficient services as Chairman.

Very interesting letters were read from Messrs. Hawkins, Phipps, Sheppard and DeYampert, and Misses Thomas and Brown giving most encouraging accounts of the continued prosperity of the work of that mission.

A letter from Rev. W. C. Porter of the Northern Brazil Mission states that all the seats in the church at Natal had been taken, and that it had been found necessary to supply additional seats to accommodate the congregation.

Mr. J. G. See, of Union Theological Seminary, was appointed as a missionary to Southern Brazil and expects to go out during the summer to supply the place made vacant by the death of Rev. C. R. Morton.

Dr. H. S. Hedges, of Charlottesville, Va., was appointed as a medical missionary to Korea.

Letters were read from Rev. A. Sydenstricker of the Chinkiang, China, station, setting forth the urgent need of developing the school work at that point.

After the transaction of the usual routine business the committee adjourned. S. H. Chester, Secretary.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Two Graduates Recitals at Red Springs Seminary.

During the month of April, graduating recitals were given by Misses. Rosalie Williams and Clara Devane, of Red Springs, these young ladies having spent six years each under Mrs. Vardell's teaching, and having finished the prescribed course in piano, harmony, music, history and theory.

The two programs were quite heavy, and unusually well rendered for young girls of sixteen and eighteen years.

The following program of Miss Williams was given on April 3, 1903, in which she was assisted by Mrs. Edwin Holt Williamson, of Fayetteville:

PROGRAM.

- Schumann... Novelette.
- Beethoven... Sousata op. 27, 1st Movement.
- Kullak... Octavo Etude
- Miss Williams.
- Stebbins... When Love is gone.
- Shepherd... Only a Pair of Blue Eyes.
- Dudley Buck... Where the Lindens Bloom
- Mrs. Williamson.
- Chopin... 1st Concerto, op. 11.
- Allegro—Romance—Rondo.
- Miss Williams.
- (2nd Piano, Miss Lytch.)
- Woodman... The Seed's Song.
- Franz... Born of a Pain Undying.
- Alice Adelaide Needleam... Hoz Making.
- Mrs. Williamson.
- Chopin... Prelude in D Flat
- Bach... Gigue from 3rd Parteta.
- Leszh... Rhapsodie Houghroise No. 6.
- Mrs. Williams.

The rendition of this brilliant progra mby a young girl of sixteen proved the presence of decided musical gift. Miss Williams is possessed of the true musical temperament, and that added to the careful training in technique and interpretation received by Mrs. Vardell, has made her already an exceptionally good young pianist. All her numbers were greatly enjoyed, but those which left a decided impression of her ability were the Sonata movement, her playing of which showed artistic feeling and delicacy, the Chopin Prelude, played with breadth and finish, and the really brilliant action work in the Kullak Concert Etude and the 6th Rhapsodie.

The Concerto was most enjoyable and there was an excellent display throughout, of good pleasing, singing tone and well finished arpeggie work.

She was assisted in this number by Miss Ellen Lytch, who is a sympathetic, safe accompanist.

Mrs. Williamson's songs were highly enjoyed. Her voice, always loved by the Seminary girls, was never heard to better advantage, the acoustic properties of the auditorium having been rendered perfect by the recent changes in the structure of the stage.

An abundance of beautiful roses and carnations, generous applause and recalls testified to the popularity of the singer and player.

On April 24th, came Miss DeVane's recital, in which she was assisted by Misses. Sara Mullins and Alice Boyden, two among the best of the voice pupils of the Seminary.

Miss DeVane has rather a powerful touch, and played the in command of herself in the outset. The Nocturne was smoothly done, and the Beethoven Variations one of her best numbers. They are of the distinct type of variation, the theme being closely followed in each form, and present grave difficulties to the student in points of technique and momerization.

Miss DeVane did her best work in the last group, playing the Polonaise quite artistically and leaving an impression of strength and breadth with the MacDowell number and the 8th Rhapsodie at the close. Both Miss Williams and herself, in turn, bore off such masses of flowers that it required half a dozen ushers to handle them.

These two young ladies, beside carrying off musical diplomas this year, are full graduates of the Literary Department, receiving simultaneously their diplomas from both departments. This grade of scholarship entitles them to the degree of Bachelor of Music.

Their work has reflected great credit upon the school, and upon their able teacher, Mrs. Vadell.

Miss Alice Boyden supplied both voice numbers, Miss Sara Mullins having become ill at the last moment. She won hearty applause by her contralto songs.

Special Rates to Davidson Commencement.

For the Davidson Commencement, which begins May 24th, and closes with commencement day, May 27th, special excursion rates have been granted from all points in North Carolina and South Carolina, including Norfolk, Suffolk and Danville, Va. These rates are granted over the Atlantic Coast Line, the Seaboard Air Line, the Southern Railway, and all their branches. Such tickets will be on sale each day from May 22 to May 27th instant, and will be good returning on any date from May 22nd to May 29th. The rates are very low, as will be seen from the following taken as examples: Raleigh, $6.05; Greensboro, $3.75; Maxton, $5.40; Columbia, $4.85; Spartanburg, $3.75. With these commencement rates and a most attractive program, it is hoped that there will be an unprecedented attendance on the commencement exercises.

ASHEVILLE—The Normal and Collegiate Institute will close the most prosperous year of its history, June 9th. Three hundred and twenty-three have been enrolled in all departments; the graduating class from the Normal Department numbering twenty-four, and as many more will graduate from the Commercial, Dress-making and Millinery Departments. A beautiful school chapel, erected through the beneficence of the Rev. D. Stuart Dodge, D. D., of New York, as a memorial to his late wife, will be dedicated in connection with the closing exercises.

The campus, which constitutes the most beautiful suburb in the city of Asheville, has been very greatly improved and rendered still more attractive.

The Institute never had a more efficient and enthusiastic corps of teachers, and the outlook for the year 1903-04 is in the highest degree encouraging.

CHARLOTTE—Mecklenburg Presbytery met in the First Presbyterian Church on May 12, 1903. There were present six ministers and three elders. The Rev. J. A. McMurray acted as moderator.

A call from Sharon Church was read and placed in the hands of Rev. W. H. Davis. In order to the acceptance of this call he requested that the pastoral relation between himself and Providence Church be dissolved. The request was granted and he will take charge of Sharon on June 1st.

The Presbytery decided to hold an adjourned meeting in Charlotte First Church on May 21st at 10 a. m.

The following appointments were made for summer supplies:

- Morven—G. H. Atkinson, one Sabbath.
  - Lilesville—J. R. Howerton, D. D., one Sabbath and Communion.

SALISBURY—Last evening, May 10th, we closed a very precious meeting in the Salisbury Presbyterian Church, that resulted in the hopeful conversion of more than fifty persons, most of them the young people of the church for whom we have been laboring and praying for a long time. Most of them will become members of our church, and a number also will connect themselves with the other evangelical churches of the city. Rev. Tom Black, our Synodical Evangelist preached with great power and acceptance for eight consecutive days, and we realize more than ever what a blessing our Synod has in the services of such a laborer in the field. Our people made a suitable contribution to Synodical Home Mission as a recognition of that great work. Mr. Black went to hold a meeting in Madison this week.

Yours fraternally,
J. RUMPLE.

ENOREE PRESBYTERY.—Enoree Presbytery held its spring sessions at Fairview church, Greenville county, S. C., April 16-19.

Officers.—Hon. T. J. Moore, elder of Centre Point church, moderator, and Prof. J. W. Reid, elder of Nazareth church, temporary clerk.

Licentiate J. Fairman Preston was ordained an evangelist for the foreign service, and goes soon to the Korea mission.

Received.—Rev. J. F. Pharr, from Concord Presbytery, and calls to the pastorate of Rocky Springs and Todd Memorial churches were placed in his hands.

Call.—Rev. B. P. Reid accepted a call from Mt. Calvary church, and a commission was appointed to install him.

Rev. T. B. Craig resigned the pastoral care of Dorrah and New Harmony churches that he might accept an invitation to give his whole time to Fountain Inn church.

Latin Thesis.—Presbytery declined to adopt the proposed amendment touching a thesis in Latin.

Overtures.—Presbytery overtured the Assembly to take steps to amend the Constitution, Paragraph 87, by changing "shall" to "may," so as to leave it optional with the large Presbyteries whether they shall send a double delegation o the Assembly. Presbytery also adopted the following:

The Presbytery of Enoree respectfully overture the General Assembly in session at Lexington, Va., 1903, to add to the permanent committees of the body on the Bible cause.

The object of this proposition is, through the annual reports of the committee, to secure for the Assembly more complete, accurate, and up-to-date information concerning the condition and progress of this great department of our evangelistic work, which the Assembly endorses and urges all our churches systematically and liberally to support.

The reasons upon which this overture is based, are:

1. The Assembly often lacks sufficient information about their work for intelligent and practical action in regard to it. Even if one of the corresponding secretaries of the American Bible Society addresses the body and furnishes the report of that Society, there is still wanting information concerning our own special relations to the work.

2. As nearly all the Synods, and many of the Presbyteries, already have such permanent committees, this will be but to complete the system throughout our Church organization and render it more efficient.

3. The cause is worthy of it. The great work of circulating God's Word among the people, underlies our whole enterprise of Christian avengalization, is of vast and rapidly increasing importance in both our home and foreign fields, and therefore should be adequately brought before the supreme Court of the Church at its annual sessions.

Since the provision asked for will not involve the appointment of another secretary, or additional expense, we earnestly pray that the Assembly will duly consider and comply with this overture.

Chairmen of Committees.—Rev. Robert Adams, Home Missions; Rev. Thornwell Jacobs, of Sabbath Schools; and Rev. W. L. Boggs, of Colored Evangelization, the committees otherwise remaining the same as before.

Ferguson-Williams College.—Presbytery assumed its share of the $1,000 debt on the Ferguson-Williams College due by the Synod of South Carolina, and directed its committee to apportion the amount among its churches.

Cowpens.—Steps were taken looking to the organization of a new church at Cowpens, if the way be clear.

The Ninety-Fourth Anniversary of the Organization of the Second Presbyterian Church Fittingly Observed Yesterday—The Rev. Mr. Fraser's Tribute to Dr. Brackett.

The service in the Second Presbyterian Church yesterday morning was unusually impressive in character, being the occasion of the ninety-fourth anniversary of the organization of the church. A beautiful tablet was unveiled to the memory of the late pastor, the Rev. G. R. Brackett, D. D. The Rev. J. Keir G. Fraser, pastor of the church, preached the sermon, choosing as his text the article from the cred: "I believe in the communion of the saints," and also the 1st verse of the 11th chapter of Hebrews: "We are encompassed about by a great cloud of witnesses." The sermon, which was listened to by a large congregation, was meant to answer the questions: (1) The extent of the relation sustained between the spirits in Heaven and their friends on earth, and (2) the effect which this sublime truth should have on the living.

The tablet reads:

In loving remembrance of

Gilbert Robbins Brackett

For more than thirty years the faithful and beloved Pastor of this Church.

Born in Newton, Mass., July 9, 1833.

Installed Pastor of this Church
June 16, 1872.

Died in this City November 30, 1902.

He fought a good fight,

He finished his course,

He kept the faith.

Made perfect through suffering.

News and Courier.

EASLEY—We have very greatly enjoyed a full meeting of South Carolina Presbytery at Easley, and they abundantly assured us that they enjoyed their stay among us. The call for the services of Rev. J. T. Wade was received by him and an order was made for his installation April 19th.

Of those appointed on the commission, Rev. S. J. Cartledge and Rev. John G. Law were present. Brother Cartledge preached an excellent sermon and Dr. Law followed with a brief account and effective charge to the pastor and people. These exercises were followed by communion. In the afternoon a number of friends joined the brethren at the home of the pastor and baptized his little infant girl, which was to us a very sweet service.

A. H. McARN, S. C.

ANDERSON—Rev. T. W. Sloan, of the First Church, Greenville, has just closed a series of sermons in the Central Presbyterian Church, of Anderson, S. C. Brother Sloan is a preacher of rare ability and the sermons all produced a profound effect upon the hearts and lives of the multitudes who heard him. I have never witnessed such a steady unabating attendance. Notwithstanding many attractions in other parts of the city the church was packed every night with eager listeners. On the Lord's Day Brother Sloan had to return to his flock, but by the enterprise of one of our deacons he was brought through the country from Greenville to Anderson by carriages, a distance of thirty miles, to meet a congregation of some 800 people who had gathered in the First Baptist Church to hear him preach that night. While much that he said appealed to the unconverted, yet this was a revival of God's people, those already converted. He did not upraid but he rather made one feel his imperfections by throwing the light of Gods Word into our hearts. He comforted the mourners and gave aspirations to the disconsolate and made all who heard him desire to be better and do better.

My brother pastors were very cordial with their help and presence. Rev. S. J. Cartledge assisted in the music. We wish to especially record our thanks to the brethren of the First Baptist Church who turned over their large and comfortable church to us when the crowds outgrew ours on the Sabbath.

Report on Foreign Mission Adopted by Harmony Presbytery, April 9th, 1903.

Your committee reports that since our last meeting the cause of Foreign Missions has sustained a great loss by the death of that faithful man of God, the Rev. D. C. Rankin, D. D. This beloved brother was licensed by Harmony Presbytery in 1874, and for some years was the faithful pastor of several important churches, but the last thirteen years of his life were devoted to our Foreign Mission work, in which he served as treasurer, assistant secretary, and editor of the Missionary. From his boyhood he longed to be a missionary to the heathen, but feeble health prevented this. Last summer he left home to visit our foreign fields, and wherever he went he encouraged our missionaries and preached through interpreters, accomplishing great good. In China he was attacked with cholera. Barely escaping with his life he went to Korea, where in his weakened condition, he was stricken with pneumonia, and on the 27th of December he was called to his heavenly home; and two days after his body was laid to rest in that far off heathen land. This was a mysterious providence, but we believe that God will overrule it for the advancement of his cause. The Lord has been prospering his work in our various fields. In our churches in Africa 133 have recently been received on profession of faith, and been baptized.

Encouraging reports come from Cuba, from Japan and indeed from our missions generally. But the universal cry from them is: "Send us more laborers." The following appeal comes to us from a committee of Mid China. "We need help. We are praying that God will lead many of you to read this appeal. May the distance between us, not cause our cry to be faint upon your ears. We are in the midst of men and women, who are on their way to eternal death. We are unable by reason of their multitude to meet the demands made upon us, to teach them the gospel. Every one who knows anything about China, understands that today is her opportunity. The people are asking for knowledge, scarcely knowing what they wish. Thousands are ready and willing to receive the truth. We call upon you for immediate assistance because our need is pressing."

The following additional appeal comes to us from the North Kiangsu Mission:

"After carefully considering the present pressing needs of the whole field, and what we might reasonably expect from the church, we unanimously determined to appeal for seven new men; six of them evangelists and one a doctor. As a mission we unanimously agreed to unite in prayer every day at noon, that the seven men called for will be sent out by the home church during the coming mission year. Now these seven men are far from being all we need, but they are what we feel we must have, and must have now and what we believe the church can send us, for we agreed to ask for what we would expect, as an answer to our prayers. The North Kiangsu field is peculiarly our own. We beg you to consider this. The whole province has been almost exclusively left to our Southern Presbyterian Church. We are virtually the only ones to carry the gospel story; and we believe that Christ alone can save these multitudes from eternal woe.

We wish our whole church could realize what vast multitudes of people are on these broad plans. They are teeming with life. There are millions and millions in this district left to us. The thought of their numbers is oppressive. Since the trouble of 1900, the prospects for the future are brighter than ever. Brethren, we are not discouraged, but we must say that our forces are wholly inadequate. Here is a call, brethren. We appeal for help. Who will answer? Who will come? And who will send these, who at the command of our Master, present themselves to preach Him, and His unsearchable riches among the Gentiles?"

The Household.

TO HANG IN THE LAUNDRY.

By Isabel Gordon Curtis.

It is hard for the housewife of large experience to remember exactly the simple agent for removing various stains. Knowledge of the average maid or laundress is still more limited, hence a device which serves in our house is a constant jog to the memory. It is a set of rules printed upon a yard of the blackboard cloth used on schoolroom walls. Instead of writing with chalk I printed the rules neatly in the form of a table in white oil paint, thinned with turpentine. The medium, if properly dried, is permanent; it cannot be disturbed either by steam or by rubbing. After allowing it to dry for four or five days it was tacked on the kitchen wall, inclosed in a frame of plain pine picture moulding, I measured the blackboard before hanging and hought the moulding properly cut to the corners, so that it fitted together with no lahor except putting in the tacks. Below is given a copy of the table for any one who may care to make one.

Ink Stains.—Soak in sour milk. If a dark stain remains rinse in a weak solution of chloride of lime.

Blood Stains.—Soak in cold salt water; then wash in warm water with plenty of soap; afterward boil.

Grass Stains.—Saturate the spot thoroughly with kerosene, then put in the washtub.

Iodine Stains.—Wash with alcohol, then rinse in soapy water.

Hot Tea and Coffee Stains.—Soak the stained fabric in cold water; spread out and pour a few drops of glycerine on each spot. Let it stand several hours; then wash with cold water and soap.

Iron Rust.—Soak the stain thoroughly with lemon juice; sprinkle with salt and bleach for several hours in the sun.

Grease Spots.—Hot water and soap generally remove these. If fixed by long standing, use either, chloroform or naphtha. All three of these must be used away from either fire or artificial light.

Pitch, Wheel Grease, Tar Stains.—Soften the stains with lard, then soak in turpentine. Scrape off carefully with a knife all the loose surface dirt; sponge clean with turpentine and rub gently till dry.

Mildew.—Soak in a weak solution of chloride of lime for several hours. Rinse in cold water.

Sewing-Machine Oil Stains.—Rub with lard. Let stand for several hours, then wash with cold water and soap.

Scorch Stains.—Wet the scorched place, rub with soap and bleach in the sun.

Fruit Stains.—Stretch the fabric containing the stain over the mouth of a basin and pour boiling water on the stain. In cold weather fruit spots can frequently be removed by hanging the stained garments out-of-doors over night. If the stain has been fixed by time soak the article in a weak solution of oxalic acid or hold it over the fumes of sulphur.

Soot Stains.—Rub the spots with dry cornmeal before sending the clothes to the wash.

Vaseline Stains.—Saturate the spots with ether and lay a cup over it to prevent evaporation until the stain is removed. Use the ether with very great care.

Chocolate and Coco Stains.—Wash with soap in tepid water.

Varnish and Paint.—If the stain is on a coarse fabric dissolve by saturating with turpentine; use alcohol if on a fine fabric. Sponge with chloroform if a dark ring is left by the turpentine. Be very cautious not to use the chloroform or turpentine where there is either fire or artificial light.

BEAUTIFUL WINDOW GARDENS.

Most persons who attempt window gardens in boxes fail with them, therefore the impression prevails that it is not an easy phase of gardening. But the reason of failure, nine times out of ten, is that not enough water is given to supply the needs of the plants. A little is applied in the day, and because the surface of the soil looks moist the owner takes it for granted that it must be damp enough. An examination would convince her that a few inches below the surface the soil is almost, if not quite, dust dry. The fact is, evaporation takes place so rapidly from a box exposed to the action of air and wind and sunshine, as most window boxes are, that small amount of water do but little toward supplying the plants with the moisture needed at the roots. To keep it in proper condition at least a pailful of water should be applied every day, and in very hot weather even that may not be enough. Make it a rule to use so much water that some will run away through the cracks and crevices of the box. When this takes place you may be quite sure that all the soil in the box is saturated with it. And if you keep it saturated throughout the season you can grow good plants in any window box. This is the secret of success, provided of course, you have the chosen plants adapted to window box culture. Do not make use of delicate varieties, but use geraniums, both flowering and fragrant-leaved sorts, coleus, heliotrope, fuchsia, lantanas, phlox, nasturtiums, wignonette, sweet alyssum, and such vines as money wort, tradescantia, vinca, verhena, lohelia, and saxifraga. Plant these at the sides of the box, to droop over and hide it.

A morning-glory at each end can be trained up and over the window, and will provide you with a floral awning if you give it something to clamher over in the shape of a framework projecting from the top of the window.—Lippincott's Magazine.

THE SECRET OF HEALTH.

Don't worry. Don't hurry. "Too swift arrived as tardy as too slow." Simplify! simplify! simplify! your diet! Don't overeat. Don't starve. "Let your moderation be known unto all men." Court the fresh air day and night, "Oh, if you knew what was in the air!" Sleep and rest abundantly. Spend less nervous energy each day than you make. Be cheerful. "A light heart lives long." Think only healthful thoughts. "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." Seek peace and pursue it." "Work like a man, but don't be worked to death. Avoid passion and excitement. A moment's anger may be fatal." Associate with healthful people. Health is contagious as well as disease. "Don't carry the whole world on your shoulders, far less the universe. Trust the Eternal." Never despair. "Lost hope is a fatal disease." "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them."—Exchange.

A TRAP TO CATCH MOTHS:

Has any housekeeper found the so called moth exterminators efficacious? I never have. There are certain remedies, that will kill the older pests, but the eggs remain to emerge from their hiding places with new vigor in the next spring.

Why not set a trap for them, and give them the things they like best to eat? That is what I do, and this is my way:

I take strips of soft, old woolen dress waists, skirts, or anything old and soiled, (for that is what they like best) Of these strips I make soft very loose balls, and scatter them about my room in the spring months.

They much prefer this to my carpets and furniture, both to eat and lay their eggs in. Try it, if you doubt it, and look at the halls in a few weeks, they will tell their own story, and it is no loss in pocket to drop these in the fire.

THE QUIET TONE.

In the morning, when your little girl was trying to dress herself, you said: "I wish you would hurry." Try putting the accent and the upward inflection on the word "hurry," and see if it does not sound better. Then, at the breakfast table, when you happened to look at that small son of yours and found him making "hash" of his milk and the rest of his breakfast, and stirring it with his finger, you might have said: "What are you doing?" (rising inflection); but instead you said: "What are you doing?" I do not pretend to say that this plan will work like a charm at first; but if it does not, perhaps the chief reason is that you have not always spoken to your children in that way, and if it may take time for them to grow accustomed to the new and better way. Then, when your little daughter wanted to wear her "birthday dress," and asked if she might do so, you said, "You know perfectly well that you can't." You might have said, "No dear, we are going to keep that dress for best, and if you wear it now, it will not look 'best' any longer."

If you want your little girl to learn to be a help to you, do not say to her, "I want you to take that duster and dust everything in the room; you are plenty big enough." Instead of that, tell her that you want her to learn to be your little housekeeper, and to see how nicely she can dust the room, and if you can, call to mind some of the things that you used to do when you were a little girl, and tell her about them. She will be interested.

And as for your little son, do not say to him abruptly, "You must do this," "You must do this right away." Help him to find some pleasure in doing the things which are to make a man of him, for they will never seem to him like pleasure if your voice is not sweet when you speak to him about them.

Remember that tone of voice! Do not find fault any more than is necessary, and when it is, do it in a quiet voice.—Southern Corinthian.

THE STEADFAST ONE.

The world may laugh to see me fall,
But mother won't!
The world may deem me weak and small,

But mother won't!

The crowd may say, if I, some day,
Succeed in winning, that I won
Through luck or in some shameful way
That all but fools or knaves would shun,

But mother won't!

The world may cavil at my song,
But mother won't!

My friends may sneer if I go wrong,
But mother won't!

The child that claims my love and she
That gave me all her heart one day,
May, some time, lose their faith in me
And mercilessly turn away—

But mother won't!

—Exchange.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

How to Care for Old Portraits.

I have often been asked to give a receipt or good method for cleaning old family oil portraits, but until I was sure of a safe method I have never attempted it, but the following method can be used by any careful person without fear of injury to the picture. Take the picture from its frame, and lay it on a large table, face upwards. Have a bowl of tepid water, and add a little pearlone to it, and use a good-sized sponge. Peel a large potato, and cut it in half; then with a sponge and water go over the entire surface of the picture; then take the potato and go over it while wet. The dirt will soften and make the water quite black. Keep rubbing until all the spots disappear, and then wash carefully with tepid water, and place it where it will dry slowly. Never use soap on oil portraits. It is wonderful how new and clean an old picture will look.

NEW USE FOR DENIM.

A new idea in decorating fabrics for sofa pillows, portieres, bookcases, curtains and other draperies is the employment of fresco colors on denim. The discovery was made by a bright woman of this borough, who used the fresco colors left by decorators on finishing their work in her house. A piece of green denim was utilized by this amateur decorator as a background for a pomegranate design, which was found, on drying, to hold its own in spite of rubbing.

Other pieces of this work have been a pair of curtains for a bookcase, the design being peach blossoms on old rose denim; a sofa pillow, showing a group of crimson tipped mushrooms, and a dragon fly on deep cream colored denim, and an orange colored sofa pillow top, having a group of beautifully toned brown ferns for design.

Tall sprays of California larkspur showed out from a background of granite stoned denim, used as another sofa pillow top, while a delft blue set of hangings had snowballs for design. A denim table cover of peachblow denim was decorated with rhododendrons of a deeper tone.—Brooklyn Eagle.

TEMPERATURE IN HEALTH AND SICKNESS.

The ordinary temperature of an adult when a thermometer is placed in the armpit is 94.4 degrees, in the mouth 99.5 degrees; the blood is about 100 degrees. Blood heat is marked on the thermometer at 99 degrees Fahrenheit. In fevers this is much exceeded, and the heat of the patient may rise to 105 degrees to 106 degrees; a higher temperature than this will generally prove fatal, unless it decend very quickly. The highest temperatures recorded have been in some cases of rheumatic fever, when that of the body rose to 109 degrees, and even to 111 degrees.

VIOLETS ALL THE YEAR.

Break a half ounce of orris root into small pieces and put them into a bottle with two ounces of alcohol. A few drops of this on the handkerchief give the odor of fresh violets. The mixture should always be tightly corked and allowed to stand a week before using.

NEAT AND ATTRACTIVE.

We say a man lacks taste who fails to keep in good order the patch of ground about his house, who sets out no shrubbery, no plants, no flowers, and does not keep his lawn neat and beautiful. But it is something worse than lack of taste—it is lack of grace. All slovenliness is sin, all want of cleanliness. Though one has to live in poverty, it is one's duty to make even the barest room as neat and attractive as possible.—J. R. Miller.

In broiling a chicken it should be opened down its back. It is best to remove the breastbone or at least to divide it, if the chicken is small, and to quarter it if the chicken is of fair size, always taking care not to cut or tear the flesh. The joints of the wings, thighs and legs should be broken and their tendons clipped, except the bird be very young, when the joints can be severed at the table. It is customary, if a broiled chicken be of fair size, to quarter it by cutting across it each way with a knife that is so sharp that the crisp skin is not torn. The removal of the bones before broiling a chicken does not impare its appearance, nor is their absence noticeable, because they are taken from the inside and only the outside is visible on the platter. If carving scissors are used, a removal of the bones and a severing of the ligaments before cooking will not be required.

INFLUENCE OF THE BEAUTIFUL.

Women cannot be too careful in the matter of dress. If they wear ugly or unbecoming clothes they are positively hindering the cause they wish to help. The beautiful is a part of life and should enter into our homes, our persons, and our surroundings. By giving due care to these outward things, we provide a real pleasure for others.—Lady Henry Somerest.

THOREAU WAS A LOVER OF CHILDREN.

The common notion that Thoreau was a mere stoic, without much feeling for others, is a great mistake, as anyone who studies his writings will discover. He was reserved, and as shy as an Indian of expressing emotion. But he was fond of children, and children were fond of him; and there are passages in his letters, still more in the diaries, which show that he had a deep vein of pity. The episode of little Johnny Riordan, who is spoken of now and then in the diary, sometimes by name and sometimes as a nameless urchin, is sufficient proof of this fact. "They showed me Johnny Riordan today, with one thickness of ragged cloth over his little shirt, for all this cold weather, with shoes having large holes in the toes, into which the snow got, as he said. . . . This little specimen of humanity, this tender gibbet of the fates, cast into a cold world with a torn lichenleaf wrapped about him. Is man so cheap that he cannot be clothed but with a mat or rug? That we should bestow on him our cold victuals?" In another place we find this description of Johnny's going to school: "I saw a little Irish boy come from a distant shanty in the woors over the bleak railroad to school this morning, take his last step from the last snow-drift on to the school-house door-step, floundering still—saw not his face, nor his profile, only his mien! I imagined, saw clearly in imagination, his old, worthy face behind the sober visor of his cap. . . . Here he condescends to his a, b, c without a smile, who has the lore of worlds uncouneted in his brain. He speaks not of the adventures of the Causeway. What was the bravery of Leonidas and his three hundred boys at the Pass of Thermopylea to this infant's?"—From "Books About Nature," by Henry Childs Merwin, in the April Scribner's.

GAINING A REAL TREASURE.

A precious treasure may be ours for the asking if in early life we begin to memorize from the Bible, from Shakespeare, Tennyson and Wordsworth, and from the hymn writers whom we love.

Not only are our vocabularies very much enlarged and enriched by the familiarity which is gained by frequent repetition of a beautiful sentiment or a stirring speech or a comforting chapter, but our ideals are elevated and our critical faculties are developed. And much time is saved for us in the busy years when time passes if our minds are our convenient reference books, so that when we hear an allusion in a sermon or meet a quotation in a newspaper we can instantly verify or place it, or recall its context, because it is one of the treasures committed to memory.

You know of nothing about it now, my bright-eyed friend, in the blithe strength and gladness of the twenties; but there may dawn a day in the long march of the days when you will not sleep as you sleep in youth. If one must lie awake when others sleep there is great joy and consolation in having some pleasant food for thought. The hours drift slowly, it is true, but are neither desolate nor unprofitable when stanzas of poetry, thrilling lyrics, fine ballads, and beautiful scenes from favorite books come at a call and give one "song in the night."

Commit to memory's keeping many texts of Scripture, and a few beloved chapters of Isaiah and St. John and St. Paul; learn by heart the Beatitudes, and, indeed, the whole Sermon on the Mount. You will find your intellectual equipment vastly greater and your power of assimilation in every direction much increased by the simple process.—Margaret Sangster.

LIFE A REHEARSAL FOR HEAVEN.

I learned a lesson this morning that will always be helpful to me. A friend was telling me of an incident in her life as a musician. Her husband had arranged a musical entertainment for the benefit of some charity and my friend was playing the organ and leading the band of music as well as the choir boys, but in the midst of it all she became so fascinated with the fine execution of the band and so delighted with the singing of the choir boys that she ceased playing and listened. All at once her husband rushed up to her exclaiming: "Don't you know that you are leading? They are waiting for you!" In an instant her hands were on the organ and she resumed the leadership. How quickly I saw how careful we must be. Others are following us and we must not stop. When Christ said to Peter: "I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not," he had his mind on others. My friend said afterwards, when she realized what she had done, she was almost overcome at thinking how serious a matter it might have been. I am sure we do not know what our keeping the music of faith and hope and love going is doing for others: "No man liveth unto himself." I suppose all of life is a rehearsal for the perfect concert of heaven, but we have our part to play and others are following us, whether we know it or not.—Mrs. Margaret Bottome.

WHY FINLAND USED MOURNING STAMP.

By William Rittenhouse.

One of the curiosities of philately is the Finnish mourning stamp suppressed by the despotic power of the Czar almost as soon as it was issued, but very eloquent in its silent witness against oppression. It is completely black, except for the arms of Finland in red, and the name of Finland in Finnish and Swedish characters. At the time this stamp was issued, every woman in Helsingfors, the capitol of Finland, went into mourning also. A traveler, who visited the city, recorded that "twice within a few months I have seen a capital where every woman was in black. One was London, where the people were mourning their dead queen; the other was Helsingfors, where people mourned their lost liberty." The Russian Government confiscated every stamp possible, forbidding their sale, and even destroying any letter that bore one; but even the Czar could not interfere with the dress of the women, and on the last anniversary of the publication of the Russian edict curtailing the liberties of Finland, the houses of Helsingfors were hung with black curtains, and a deputation of ladies openly placed a mourning band on the monument of Alexander the Second, in the public square.

At the same time, here in America, Finnish emigrants began to pour into our ports. Four times as many Finns as usual left their northern home in 1899 to take refuge with freer nations, some going to the north of Sweden, but the majority to Canada and the United States. These emigrants were young men, the very finest and hardest of the race, and our western settlements will be the betetr for their coming. But Finland mourns them. In some districts

R. M. COFFEY, C. T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C.

ardly a young man is left they all ave sailed for the land of liberty, ross the Atlantic, where no conscript icer can drive them into the armies the Czar. There is no more interest-g bit of history in modern times than e struggle, going on before our eyes day, of this small, free, patriotic, ghly-educated, Protestant land gainst the tyrannous encroachment of ussia, uneducated, despotic, huge, su-erstitious, and without mercy wherer she holds the power to crush and dominate.

When the Grand Ducy of Finland, which had formerly been a province of Sweden, was annexed to the domination of the Czar, in 1809, Alexander the First willingly agreed to leave it the power of autonomy, or self-government, and each Czar since, in his coronation proclamation, has confirmed the agreement. In return, Finland has kept her part of the contract by giving the Czar so many Finnish regiments, and so much money, year by year. She had her governing Diet, elected by the people, her post office, her schools, her taxes, her tariff, and has flourished under them, poor and cold as her soil is, while Russia has groaned under higher taxes and oppressive customs duties, and no public education to speak of. Finland is centuries ahead of Russia, and knows it. Her libraries, her universities, her beautiful cities, astonish the traveler. Helsingfors has "no slum, no tumbledown poor district, no criminal quarter, no dirt." The telephone and the trolley are familiar in Finland. Best of all (and largely the reason of it all), the Finnish peasant, unlike his Russian brother, is absolutely sober, and means to keep so. Not a drop of liquor can be bought except in the larger towns, and under great restrictions even there. Finland replaces the saloon by the savings bank, the average being six savings banks to a town, and the savings of the people amounting at present to nearly two-thirds the amount of the whole national debt.

Yet no land has greater natural disadvantages than this outpost toward the Arctic. Wood and water form its only riches. In times past, the Finnish farmer has often mixed his black bread with ground pine bark and chopped straw, and even now he seldom tastes fresh meat, eating salt fish instead.
But he is an idefatigable worker; and Finland has often been compared with New England in the character of its inhabitants and their conspicuous success in life. The Finnish sailor is known all over the world, and Finland, also, is the land of many poets, and has a collection of thousands of native songs, from the old tunes of the bards to the splendid national hymn of their greatest singer, Runeberg, whose statue stands in Helsingfors:—

Sons of a race whose blood was shed
On Narva's field, on Poland's sand,
At Leipzig; Lutzen's dark hills under,
Not yet is Finladn's manhood dead;
With foemen's blood a field may still be tinted red.

The tempest loosens; lightnings flash,
And o'er the field the cannon thunder, Hearm high! thou banner victory-sealed!

In the gray bygone days, long since,
all battle-worn,
Be still our splendid colors, though tattered, onward borne!

Of Finland's ancient standard there's still a shred untorn.

No wonder the men of Finland emigrate, and the women go into black, when, at one stroke, Russia has abroken over the postoffice by the accounted a Russian as Secretary of State, taken over the post office be the accepted official language, suppressed or censored the Finnish newspapers, and instituted a new law of military service. It is not surprising that the Finnish young men prefer to emigrate at once; and that the United States, which a few years ago had but eighty thousand Finns within its borders, will probably have hundreds of thousands of the best and bravest of these New Englanders of Europe as its citizens before the luckless conscript of today serves out his term with the Russian colors.—Forward.

CHAPTER VIII.

The long, low, rambling house with its porch in front, was a picture of desolation, broken glass, torn garments, papers, broken furniture, scattered everywhere; bedding and beds were torn to pieces and flung about the yards; the Doctor's books and office belongings were trampled in the dirt. In the first apartment entered, empty and comfortless, sat Dr. Moss, an immensely tall man, before a fire; his bandaged leg lay upon a chair, his moody eyes staring into the flames. His whole appearance was eloquent of the fury and despair he was in, over his own helpless condition and misery of those he loved.

However, he roused himself to hear Jack's errand, and read the note he brought. "I will see if there is anything left I dare use," he said. "Do you know, Jack, they actually poured the bottles of poison and such drugs with the others? But perhaps I can find something." He rose, groaning from his seat with the aid of a walking stick and rummaged among his few medical stores for a short time and then returned with a small vial. He added the directions verbally. "It is the best I can do, unless I write with a coal on a chip," he remarked, grimly. Then he dropped his composure and ground his teeth. "Do you know, Jack Dysart," he cried, "that out yonder in my kitchen lies a straggler, pretending to be sick, cooking and eating the food he has stolen from me, and wont give my perishing wife and babies a bite? His gun is kept loaded, standing beside him. Now I have done what I can for you and I want you to tell your brother Tom to come and help me kill that man, or even lend me his gun—the brute's carried off mine."

"Oh, I know what to do, Dr. Moss," cried the boy, "the Scouts; they passed me just now; said they were going to Felder's plantation. If they hear of him—" "You're right," interrupted the Doctor, his eyes flashing. "Get them word; that is a good fellow. I shall sleep better if I can see them lead him off," he added savagely.

Jack said he would see what they could do, thanked the Doctor for the medicine and left the room hastily. Not only was he anxious to return to his party with the prescription, but but such hate as that of Doctor Moss' was a painful sight. Once outside, he paused a moment to reflect. This straggler—he was a poor, mean creature, a thief who plundered and half starved women and little children—yet would it be right to hand him over to the Scouts? They had no jail, no stronghold; if they came there could be but one end: he thought of another way.

The kitchen was an outbuilding but a few steps from the dwelling. He called out as if in reply to the Doctor, "All right, sir, the Scouts are right here at the next plantation, and I'll take your message to them at once."

There was the noise of a hasty movement in the kitchen, and a tall lanky Yankee with an agitated face appeared in the door-way, only to perceive the boy, who met his gaze for a moment take to his heels and tear down the road as if life depended on his swiftness. Indeed Jack would not have been much surprised to hear a bullet whistle after him, but the man in blue merely followed him with a string of oaths, and then rapidly gathering up gun, knap-sack and blanket, he made all speed to depart in an opposite direction,—so that the Moss family saw him no more. The children running in with the glad tidings were astonished to have their father repulse them. They could not, happily, understand the bitter disappointment it was to his anger at having the last of his foes depart in safety.

Meanwhile, well aware of the effect his parthian arrow would have, Jack hurried on his way, distressed at having been so long detained, and very fearful as to what might be the results, but when at length he reached camp, the Captain was better and sleeping quietly. Meek, too, was dozing, his back against the tulip-tree, while Tom and Eph kept guard. "I tole Mars Tom," remarked the latter, complacently "dat I knowed how to 'minister root tea; an' 'ginst I gib 'im dat an' a good drink ob apple-jack I brung him roun'. I did, Mars Jack. But what keep you so long?"

"I tell you what, Eph," burst out the sententious Jack, "I am going to have my breakfast before I tell you anything." And it was not until the corn-bread, rye-coffee and bacon had disappeared that they got another word out of him. Then bit by bit they extracted his story, turning away with affected indifference but very real bashfulness from the praises bestowed upon him.

"Say, Eph," he suggested finally, "couldn't we fish a little? Cat-fish bite any time, don't they?"

"Sam's poor sinner at Satan's hook" eagerly replied the negro, "ef you know how to work 'em, an' Eph's de feller fer dat game. Knows ebery hole in dis yer swamp. Ketch no end of shiners widout goin' out ob hollerin' distance."

So it was agreed that while Tom ventured to Dr. Moss' house with such of their provisions as they could spare, and return immediately, Jack and Eph might fish close by. Having rigged up therefore the hooks and lines which the boy produced from his pockets they set out, and soon reached the spots selected by the negro, a deep and turbid stream flowing sluggishly through the swamp. Here they found excellent sport, and in the course of an hour or so, having secured an ample supply of fish, Eph began to prepare for their return to headquarters.

Jack meanwhile wandered about exploring the place, when suddenly Eph heard him say "For goodness sake, come here—there's somebody in the water!" The negro reluctantly enough laid down his work and hobbled up, grumbling as he came, "Somebody—ob cose—dead Yank, I reckon—sharpshooters done hit him and draped him in de water—dat's all. Mebbe, do he might hab some new cose, or," with a wink, "a little change." So saying, he stooped to the water's edge and exerting all the strength of his powerful arms, wrested from the mud the body of a young man clad in the blue of an officer's uniform. The head and shoulders had remained above the water, and were resting against the bank.

"A Major," said Jack, looking at the shoulder-straps, and then turning away from the dreadful sight.

"Eph, how comes he to be here?" The negro laid his burden down and straightened his back before he answered, "Why, you see Mars Jack, I jes' tole you de troof. Ole Eph was out not fur from here. I was ketched, and feared ob 'em, an' I crawled in a big holler tree an' hid, so I knows, Dey miss him' hunt him, got no time to tarry, an' he stick here an' bleed to death. Boss," he concluded, addressing the unconscious form, "if it hadn't been cold weather, the 'gators would a got you sho.' Now, Mars Jack, what we gwine do wid him?"

"We'd better get Tom first," and putting his fingers to his lips the boy gave an ear-piercing signal agreed on between his brother and himself. In a few minutes Tom stood beside them. The negro was perhaps disconcerted at having no moment alone with the dead man, but if so he was too cunning to show it. He looked on in silence while Tom took from the pockets of the corpse his watch and purse, and then a variety of trinkets, rings, earrings, brooches, etc. Last of all were five or six smooth silver objects resembling coins, but engraved with a Lamb and a Latin motto, which the young man scrutinized in silence.

"What are those?" Jack demanded at last. His brother slowly rose and extended the objects in a hand that trembled. "They are," he said, "the silver communion tokens used by the Scotch churches, and stolen from one of them by this—" He left his sentence unfinished, and after a pause turned to the negro.

"Ephraim, I'll tell you what we'll do. You shall get a spade and some one to help, and bury this man in some place near where there is solid ground, and you shall be paid for it out of this purse. The rest of his money and his watch we shall keep, sealed up—his name is on his watch—James Barrington—but the rest of these things, if as is they remain unclaimed, must be sold for the poor." "Lawd knows, we'se dat," Mars Tom," sighed the black. "Not poor enough to steal, Eph," answered the other, as he tied into hard knots the handkerchief into which he had been placing the articles. "I can depend on you, Eph?" for the water was near, the labor of digging would be considerable.

"You kin," answered the negro firmly. "Eph aint want no hants follerin' him roun' case of sheatin' dead folks outen dey rights. No, Mars Tom, Eph'll plant dis yere Yank good an' deep an' mark his grave in case he's called for. Yo' say you-all's gwine leave here dis ebnin' an' I'll des slide 'long soon as dinner's ober an' git dis job ober fore night. Yes, Lawd, Eph wants to git away fum here an' be in town fo dark, sho'." As he spoke he carefully covered the dead man with the uniform coat, and further protected it with come branches of trees. This done they gladly turned away to hasten their preparations.

Our Little Folks.

CONDUCTED BY MRS. A. J. MCKELWAY

Children's Letters.

Richmond, Va.,

Dear Standard:

I enjoy reading the little letters so much, have decided to write you myself, or rather get some one to do it for me. Dr. Cecil is our pastor, and Mrs Cane is my Sunday School teacher. I go to the Westminster Kindergarten School. Am so sorry we will move away before school closes. My brother James had a pair of pretty rabbits. And do you know one of these Virginia rats ate all the flesh off one of his legs and the poor thing died.

Loveingly,
Annie Frost Cobb.

Charlotte, N. C.
May, 8 1903.

Dear Standard:

I will write you a letter. I am a little boy nine years old. My papa takes your paper and I enjoy reading the little folks letters. My school closed a week ago. My teacher was Miss Shannon Ranson. I love to go to school to her. We had an entertainment the night it closed. I go to Sunday School at Sugar Creek. My teacher is Miss Cora Gibbon. I will close for fear of the waste basket.

Your little unknown friend,
Joe Berryhill.

Pineville, N. C.,
May, 8 1903.

Dear Standard:

I enjoy reading the little childrens letters. I think it is profitable to be studying the Bible. I am studying the Shorter Catechism and want to answer it perfectly. We have children's day at our house once a year. Mrs. Agness Knox has one often too. No other children knows how we enjoy them but children that have experienced them. Sometimes 15 or 20 in number. We live near the Catawba River and often go to see it when it is swollen to its highest water mark. My Grand-father Garrison lives in Mallard Creek township. He is a ruling elder in the Presbyterian church. He is 90 years old. My Grand mother Stewart lives near us. She recited the catechism when she was 70 years old. She is 80 now. I will answer Hattie Bell Smith's question. Candle stick is found 10 times in the Bible. First, in Lev. 24:4 second, in Num. 8:2 third, in second Kings 4:10 fourth, Dan. 5:5 fifth, Zech. 4:2 sixth, Mathew. 5:15 seventh Mark 4:21 eighth and ninth in Rev. 1:20 tenth in Rev. 2:5. I will answer Guthrie Sledges question. Ruth was Davids Great-grand-mother. Ruth was an ancestor of Christ. I will answer Maggie Downs question. Pipe is found Zech. 4:2 and 4:12.

I will close, with love,
Annie Mable Garrison..

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER Spring No. 1

A Boon to Suffering Women—Nature's Great Specific for Diseases Peculiar to Women.

The late J. Marion Sims, M.D., LL.D., the Father of Modern Gynecology, a short while before his death, wrote: "I have used in my practice the water of Spring No. 2 of the Buffalo Lithia Springs, of Mecklenburg County, Va., for several years past, and have, in many cases, found it highly beneficial."

G. Halsted Boyland, A.M., M.D., Paris, Member of the Faculty of Medicine, Paris, "Spring No. 1 is perhaps more than any other water in the world a specific for diseases of the Female Pelvic organs. Both Springs 1 and 2 regulate the monthly function in much the same manner that digitalis regulates Cardiac Action."

Dr. William T. Howard, Professor of Diseases of Women and Children in the University of Maryland, referring to Spring No. 1, gives to this water high commendation "in all the affections Peculiar to Women that are remediable at all by mineral waters," and adds the following: "If I were called upon to state from what mineral waters I have seen the greatest and most unmistakable amount of good accrue, in the largest number of cases in a general way, I would unhesitatingly say, the Buffalo Lithia Springs."

Dr. John H. Tucker, Henderson, N. C., President of the Medical Society of North Carolina, referring to Spring No. 1, says: "In many diseases Peculiar to Women—Irregularities, Suppression, and the many functional derangements resulting from Chloro-anæmic conditions, I prescribe this Water with almost the same confidence that I do quinine in Chills and Fever."

Dr. John Herbert Claiborne, Ex-President of the Medical Society of Virginia, Petersburg, Va., referring to Spring No. 1, says: "This water was used during my earliest recollection of it for diseases Peculiar to Women, and its restorative power justly, in my opinion, was considered marvelous."

Dr. William B. Towles, Formerly Professor of Materia Medica and Therapeutics, University of Virginia, referring to Spring No. 1: "In Monthly Irregularities, notably in Suppression in young women, Spring No. 1, in my experience, has shown special and happy adaptation. I have witnessed some very remarkable results from its use in this class of cases where the most approved treatment of the profession had proved unavailing."

Dr. Goodrich A. Wilson, Somerset, N. C., Member Medical Society of North Carolina, referring to Spring No. 1: "But I feel that I should be doing but meager justice to the merits of the Buffalo Waters, if I failed to refer to their great Prophylactic virtues. Hundreds of young Females attain to the age of puberty without realizing the healthful performance of their great function. They become Nervous, Hysterical, Chlorotic. In all such cases the best results may be anticipated from the use of these waters."

The late Dr. O. F. Manson, of Richmond, Va., formerly Professor of General Pathology and Physiology in the Medical College of Virginia, referring to Spring No. 1: "I have observed marked sanative effects from BUFFALO LITHIA WATER No. 1, in some affections of women—Hysteria, Anæmia, Hypochondriasis, Cardiac Palpitations, etc."

Thomas Arnold.

What calling is nobler and more fruitful of good than that of a teacher, especially that of the head of a great public school, such as those of Rugby, Winchester and Harrow, in England, and the academies at Andover and Exeter, in this country? By a teacher we do not mean a mere pedagogue who has no lofty ideals of his calling, or keen sense of its responsibilities—whose mind moves in a rut, and never grows or broadens—and who is content if his pupils parrot the lessons which they have learned by rote without love or comprehension. Neither do we mean a schoolmaster who has no genius or love for his work, but has adopted it a temporary makeshift, to be abandoned the minute he has earned money enough to enter upon the study of the law or medicine, or to fit himself for some other lucrative pursuit. We mean a man who has an inborn genius and passionate love for teaching; who, while instructing others, is incessantly engaged in self-construction; whose teaching, if not deep, yet rests on depths; and who is forever studying the best ways of quickening, strengthening and training the intellects placed under his care.

Such a teacher was Dr. Arnold, of Rugby; a man known, while living, to but limited circle, but whose biography by a loving and brilliant pupil was no sooner given to the world than it found thousands of sympathetic and delighted readers, and men of all creeds and parties came forward to express in newspapers, magazines, and reviews their admiration of its subject. They had discovered that he was an intensely earnest man; one who felt keenly life's responsibilities as well as to enjoyments; who had the deepest sympathy for all that was good and true, modern social life, and an utter abhorrence for all that he deemed false; who battled bravely for every cause that he deemed a righteous one, and waged ceaseless war, regardless of ill consequences to himself, against all shams, especially in religion.

The interest of Dr. Arnold's life is in character, not in incidents, although a more active, wide-awake, and effective life is hard to conceive. He was a scholar and a thinker, who roused and moved the world through his school and with his pen, rather than by engaging directly in its stress and struggles. He was born on the Isle of Wight in 1795, and was educated at Warminster and Winchester schools, and Corpus Christi College, Oxford. As a boy he was shy and retiring, giving few indications of the frankness and intrepidity which he manifested in manhood; yet he won the Chancellor's prize for the University essays, in Latin and English, and was elected a Fellow of Oriel College in 1815. Here he availed himself of the opportunity for research and study afforded by the great Bodleian and other libraries of Oxford, where he gathered and hived much of that historic lore which he afterwards used in his histories and lectures. The beauty of the city and its neighborhood, its intellectual advantages, and the friendships he formed there aroused in his soul an enthusiastic passion for Oxford, which no subsequent changes of place, no new friendships, could extinguish.

While in college, his active and inquiring mind was beset with doubts on religious subjects; but he struggled through the jungles and quagmires of skepticism till he found at last what he believed to be solid ground. In 1819 he settled at Laleham, near Stines, where for nine years he was engaged in preparing youths for the universities. In 1820 he was happily married to Mary Penrose, the daughter of a rector in Lincolnshire. In the intervals of his attention to the mental and moral culture of his pupils, he was studying Greek and Roman history, and exploring the hidden meanings of the Scriptures. He was passionately fond of his calling, and threw his whole self into it, body, mind and soul. He loved his pupils, and they loved him. Identifying himself with them, instead of dwelling in an upper atmosphere, or surrounding himself, as too many masters do, with chevaux-de-frise of false dignity and etiquette, he mingled in their field sports; bathed with them; leaped, sailed and rowed with them; giving and claiming confidence, talking, laughing, and sorrowing with them; and thus binding them to him with hooks of steel.

For mere cleverness, or intellectual acuteness, without moral goodness and mental strength, he had little esteem. Not such was his feeling toward a boy of slender capacity, who was honestly and zealously striving to cultivate his mind. "To that man," he once said, "I would stand hat in hand." Once, when a dull boy to whom he had spoken rather sharply looked up in his face and said, "Why do you speak angrily, sir? Indeed I am doing the best that I can," the tender-hearted teacher felt keenly the boy's protest—as, years afterwards, he used to say to his children, more than anything else in his life—"that look and that speech I have never forgotten."

The high reputation Arnold won at Laleham pointed to him a fit successor to Dr. Wool, on his resignation as master of Rugby School. Elected in 1823, he began with his wonted zeal and energy the great work the successful prosecution of which he made his name almost a synonym for an ideal teacher, whose memory the world will not willingly let die. A born reformer, he had long lamented the condition of England's public schools, too often seminaries of idleness and vice, and he determined to ascertain whether a high and true Christian education in them was really practicable, or a Utopian dream. The central aim of his system was to promote the self-development of his pupils—to stimulate and encourage them to cultivate their own minds; and, next to this, the investment of school exercises with the seriousness of actual life-work.

The fruit of education which he above all else longed for was "moral thoughtfulness, the engrossing love truth, with the devoted love of goodness." He earnestly desired to train men to independence of thought, so that they should form their own opinions, and hold them firmly, instead of taking their judgements and notions at second hand. Though not a party man, he was bold and decided on all great questions, political and religious. Neutrality and conservatism he alike abhorred; his sympathies were all with the cause of progress. The neglect of the poor by the rich—the lack of sympathy for the masses of the people—"haunted him," he said, "almost night and day." In his scheme of education, the era of responsibility was anticipated, and boys were dealt with as men and gentle men. Love, no fear—obedience to God and profound reverence for truth and holiness, not servility to a master—were the feelings he sought to instill into the minds and hearts of his pupils. Feeling his way at first, but finally manifesting more and more boldness and decision as he was encouraged by success, he finally, to his great joy, enlisted the boys themselves in his work, as fellow-laborers cooperating in the improvements he sought to introduce. The result of all this was that Dr. Arnold's pupils went up to the universities with characters remarkably distinguished from those of other youths; even men who disliked his views were struck with the contrast, and in a few years Rugby School became one of the most famous in England.

A higher honor than he had yet achieved now awaited him. In 1841 he was appointed Regius Professor of History at Oxford—an office whose duties would not clash with those of the mastership of Rugby; and his introductory course of eight lectures created the next year an extraordinary sensation in the old university. In the midst of his indefatigable labors, and the very heyday of his strength and of his steadily growing usefulness, when yet more brilliant results were expected from his toils, he was suddenly cut down—dying, just at the beginning of the summer vacation of his school, on June 11, 1842, at the age of forty-seven, of angina pectoris.

Dr. Moses Hodge and Mr. Thomas & Edward Irvin's nephew mentions the following incident in his reminiscences of Thomas Carlyle:

"In the winter of 1863-'64, when the American war was raging, Dr. Hoge visited this country. I took him to see Carlyle, with whom he was anxious to have an interview. He described the scenes of the war through which he had just passed, and told with great simplicity and graphic power the influence of passages of scripture quoted to the dying as they were passing away from the earthly scene. Carlyle listened with intense interest. He became the hearer, and not the speaker as he generally was. His eyes filled with tears, and at the conclusion of the narrative he said that sending Bibles to these soldiers was the noblest work he had heard of."

Note—A few days afterwards, I find that the great philosopher speaks of the narrative in the following terms: "Brevity, perspicuity and perfect veracity, gentleness, the justness of all sides.—N. M. D. in Central Presbyterian.

Celebrating our joys.

But they's one thing I've often thought about, doc, that I have to see, an' that's the way human creatures is everlastin'ly buildin' memorrials o' their sorrers. I don't see why we should celebrate only when we're scourged, I've often thought that God might enjoy the novelty of havin' a steeple rise up into the sky in joy an' thanksgivin', instid o' which most of 'em is sent up with a wail. Ef houses for orphans is needed,—an' it's a livin' disgrace that they are,—but if they are, why not build one when God sends a little child into a home instid o' when he sees fit to take it away? The lady that give the "author's readin'" here, she was tellin' us about a little mountain settlement where the young engaged couples paid for the stained-glass winders, ez love come along, to celebrate their happiness—little bright-colored panes to stand for joy an' to fetch the color of it into the worship. Now, that struck me ez purty. I wish't they was more thankfulness brought into our religion, an' less mournin'. Nct that I'd take out one sweet memorial of the dead. Of co'se ez we git along further in spiritual growth, an' come to realize the unimportance of death an' the importance of life a number of these things 'll pass away of theisselves.

Monuments commeoratin' personal errors is ap' to be selfish things, to my mind. When they stand for principle, why, that's different. Sometimes I think the world shows mo' selfishness in sorrer than it does in anything else, anyhow — Ruth McEnery Stuart in April Century.

WINE OF CARDUI is a thoroughly scientific and modern remedy, meeting the needs of the modern woman in the modern way—without the torture of an operation. Wine of Cardui has cured them in the privacy of their homes and it has found a place in the hearts of American women that no other medicine has found. In their gratitude over 10,000 American women have written letters commending Wine of Cardui. Wine of Cardui meets their wants as no other medicine does. It sustains the young girl at the shock of her entrance to womanhood. Women who take Wine of Cardui have little discomfort during pregnancy and little pain at childbirth. When the change of life appears they enter a happy, healthy old age. Every month it comes to the rescue to assist Nature in throwing the impurities from the body.

Miss Sarah Finley, of Memphis, Tenn., vice-president of the Palmetto Club of that city, speaks for herself and many friends when she bestows the following praise on Wine of Cardui:

"Among the numerous medicines placed before suffering women for their relief none can touch McElree's Wine of Cardui. It towers above them all as a reliable female remedy. It simply drives pain and disease away and restores health in an incredibly short period. I have taken great interest in this medicine for the past two years, since it brought health and strength to me. I have also recommended it to a number of my friends and they who have used it speak of it in the highest terms and I feel that it is praise well bestowed."

If you are suffering from female weakness Wine of Cardui is the medicine you need.

You can have health the same as Miss Finley if you will take the Wine of Cardui treatment. If you need advice further than the complete directions given on the bottle, address The Ladies Advisory Department, Chattanooga Med. Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.

Event and Comment.

We are glad to welcome to our exchange table the Irish Presbyterian. Its cover is green but its contents are by no means unripe. A sketch of Presbyterianism in Antrim, another of Scotch-Irish Presbyterianism, and the ordination charge to the two congregations of Drumhanagher and Jerrettspass, are among the features of the number we have seen.

Rev. Abner C. Hopkins, D. D., the Moderator of the Lexington Assembly, was born in Powhatan county, Virginia, educated at Hampden-Sidney College and at Union Seminary, was a noted Chaplain in the Confederate service, and has been pastor of the church at Charleston, W. Va., since 1866. He is eminently worthy of the honor conferred.

In the opinion of our esteemed contemporary, the Southwestern Presbyterian, a Southern Assembly declaration stating our belief in universal infant salvation is of no authority, but a Northern Assembly's Brief Statement "will and ought to be accepted as the construction of the Constitution by the supreme court of the Church." The Southwestern is apt to get cross-eyed when it looks northeastwardly.

The Stated Clerk of the Northern Assembly reports $12,000,000 as contributed to the Twenty Million Dollar Twentieth Century Fund. Yet the gross increase in the actual contributions of the churches is a little over $7,000,000. The Atlanta contribution to the cause of Christian Education, if accepted, will bring up the full quota of a million dollars which the Southern Church has undertaken to raise for that one cause.

Men and brethren, would it not be just as well for the sake of the honor of Calvinism and of Presbyterianism, to drop the theory that the largest body of Presbyterians in the world, with more than a million members, is an apostate church, because it has let all the dead children into heaven, so far as its creed is concerned, has yielded to the Quakers on the sin of refusing an oath, has suggested that the Pope is not the only Anti-Christ, and has made a slight mess of it concerning the good works done by unregenerate men? Now, really, would it not?

The organ of the Thornwell Orphanage, "Our Monthly," has received an infusion of youthfulness and seems to grow younger and fresher every month. Commenting on the stand the Standard has taken regarding the Presbyterian University, it wants to know why we do not favor the removal of Davidson College to Atlanta. That is easy. Davidson is prospering as never before in its long and honorable history, is pulling down its barns and building dormitories for the accommodation of its thronging students and is daily making the conviction firmer that one good college is essential to the Presbyterianism of the Carolinas. Next!

At the recent banquet of Princeton Seminary Commencement President Patton said that the fundamental aim of the Seminary would be to send out men who could preach, while the Seminary would maintain the highest standard of excellence in theological learning; that the seminary had been somewhat mixed up with Calvinism in the past "and it is pretty likely it will be"; but that the fundamental issue of our time is whether the Living God "has revealed himself under the forms of time and space in the Gospel of his Son, Jesus Christ, whether Christianity is from heaven or from men." Dr. Patton never talks without saying something.

The Presbyterian Banner rises to remark, concerning the St. Louis, Missouri, Exposition: "It is humiliating to the American people to have all the world know that both State and city governments in recent months have been proved to be almost shamelessly corrupt." No citizen of the Banner's own State of Pennsylvania and especially of its largest city, Philadelphia, need have any conscientious scruples on that account about going to the World's Fair in St. Louis.

The Presbytery of New Castle, Delaware, according to the statement of The Christian Work and Evangelist, defeated resolutions denouncing corruption in politics, urging that Christians support only good men for office and condemning the Governor for vetoing the repeal of the Voter's Assistant law. The denouncing part was all right and Delaware needs a deal of denouncing in press and pulpit and church court, just now, for corruption in politics. As to supporting only good men for office, it sometimes happens in politics that the better of two unworthy men is the only choice that is left, and a Southern Presbyterian would draw the line distinctly against the meddling with a technical detail of administrative politics, such as the Voter's Assistant Law. No doubt the Governor has sold himself, body and soul, to Addicks the Unspeakable. But there are some things beyond the province of the Supreme Court of the United States according to the Constitution and there are also some things beyond the scope of any Church court, according to the Word of God. So we cannot agree with our contemporary, that the result of the Presbytery's vote was encouraging to Satan. There were certain resolutions passed by the Presbyterian Assembly of Philadelphia in 1861, which disrupted the Presbyterian Church and which we think were highly encouraging to Satan.

Says the Southwestern Presbyterian, commenting on the success of the movement to amend the Confession in the Northern Church: "Let it be remembered that all this agitation began with tampering with the one clause on elect infants." The Southwestern has put the cart before the horse. The "tampering" was not accomplished until this Assembly of 1903. The agitation over the one indefensible position concerning infant salvation began the agitation for confessional revision which was finally averted by the confessional amendments which "with the exception of the elect infant clause our objection has not been so much against," as the Southwestern puts it.

It is the part of wisdom to strengthen a weak position. The Southwestern admits that "The slander that Presbyterians held, there 'were in hell infants a span long,' rests upon the much discussed clause. Yes, in defending that clause the Southwestern, only last summer, contended that, "When the Psalmist says: 'The wicked are estranged from the womb, they go astray as soon as they be born, speaking lies', it does seem to imply the possibility that the children of the wicked perish with their parents."

That looks as if it gave ground for the above mentioned slander unless the Southwestern has a private tape line which puts only those over a span long into the possibility of perishing with their parents.

No, the way to stop agitation is to mend the weak place. That mended, not a corporal's guard could be found in the Southern Church to ask for any other amendment. Unmended it provokes a reaction from the untenable positions that have been successively taken by the "doubtful" and "hopeful" brethren. And the Southern Church is facing the new condition of contending with two Presbyterian Churches which have strengthened that weak place in their walls, while the Southern Church has been made ten-fold more vulnerable through the admission of every Southern religious paper, except the Standard, that there may be infants in hell. The creed was made for the Church and not the Church for the creed.

PR SBYTERIAN STANDARD, Charlotte, N. C.

We do not know anything better for our Assembly commissioners to talk about this year, in the informal meetings that are held in the ante-rooms of the church, than the Presbyterian University that is to be. Dr. Rice and Mr. Inman from Atlanta will be there with a plenty of information concerning its prospects, while the friends of Clarksville and Columbia will doubtless divide on the question before the house. Clinton will also take a hand in the discussion, as Clinton imagines itself to be profoundly interested, since one reason for its existence is that it contains two feeders for Columbia Seminary, while it manifests its loyalty to that excellent institution by sending their graduates to Princeton and Louisville and Union.

The Standard trusts that the discussion of this great enterprise may be able to take the high ground of a consideration of the best interests of Southern Presbyterianism, for that means a discussion of the best interests of Christ's Kingdom so far as the Southern Presbyterian Church is responsible for those interests. It is not a question as to what Atlanta wants or Columbia or Clarksville. It is not a question how strenuously a distinguished citizen of Clarksville is opposing the measure or how zealously he has been able to enlist the members of his family on his side. And here is one point where all phases of opinion are united. All of us are advocates of Christian Education to the extent of believing that the Church should concert measures to secure a well-equipped ministry, in numbers adequate to do the pastoral and pulpit work of the Church. Let us consider the question from the standpoint of the Seminaries and the present visible supply of candidates for the ministry. In this the whole church is interested, and if the Presbyterian University affects this question the whole Church is interested in the University, as perhaps it has been in no educational enterprise of Southern Presbyterianism since the separate existence of the Southern Presbyterian Church. Union Seminary will hardly be affected except as the increase of educational advantages may indirectly inure to its advantage. It has a splendid constituency in the Presbyterianism of Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland and West Virginia, with such educators of Presbyterian youth as Davidson, Hampden-Sidney, Washington and Lee, King College, Elkin and Fredericksburg. It is true that Davidson divides its students the effort being conscientiously made to send the North Carolina boys to Union and the South Carolina boys to Columbia. But this constituency will amply support Union and the territory is pretty adequately covered from the point of view of Christian education under Presbyterian influences. Union reports 67 students this year, but two of these are members of the Virginia Conference and we presume are Methodist Ministers taking advantage of the proximity of the Seminary to pursue their theological studies. So there are 65 students at the Seminary from which the Church may hope to deplete its failing ranks. It should be said, however, and this remark applies to all the Seminaries, that the number of candidates for the ministry has reached its lowest ebb and the tide is now turning in the direction of the flood. But it will be some time before the increase becomes very much apparent in the Seminaries. It is plainly evident in the number of those who have been taken under the care of the Presbyteries.

Louisville Seminary is conducted under the joint control of Northern and Southern Synods. The Southern Church is especially interested in the number of students from the Southern Presbyteries, as these are the ones upon whom it can count for its future ministry. Louisville Seminary reports 56 students registered. Leaving out those from Northern Presbyteries and ministers of the Gospel in attendance upon the Seminary classes, there remain 24 students from Southern Presbyteries. For these the Southern Church should be very thankful. It is better that they are in a Seminary upon which our Church has a valid claim than in one altogether Northern. Nevertheless it must be apparent that the Synods of Kentucky and Missouri will not for years to come furnish any large quota of Southern ministers.

The Texas Seminary has started out well with the very laudable object of putting the fact of a Presbyterian Seminary in that great empire before the minds of the Presbyterian young men of the State and at the same time controlling through the same fact the location of the graduates. There has always been a not unreasonable complaint that too many men sent by Texas to Eastern Seminaries had their attention turned toward the churches in the East and forgot the destitutions and the opportunities of their mother Synod.

Remain the Columbia and Clarksville Seminaries, to call them by their popular rather than by their long official names. Time was when the territory covered by both institutions belonged to Columbia, so far as the theological field was concerned. With Thornwell in the Seminary and Palmer in New Orleans, the whole of the South and Southwest, from Georgetown on the Atlantic to Georgetown, Texas, was considered the territory of Columbia. And it was on account of the Woodrow Controversy that Dr. Palmer transferred his interest to the Divinity School at Clarksville.

When we say "Woodrow Controversy" we do not mean to lay the responsibility for that unfortunate episode in Southern Presbyterian history upon any particular shoulders or to shift it from any. It does not belong to our generation save as the memory of it still embitters and the echoes of it still annoy the life of the church. But the fact remains that this division of the territory was largely due to an ecclesiastical controversy.

Columbia Seminary still suffers from the controversy and will for another generation if it remains in its present location. Columbia, the city, is divided on the question and it will be a long time before the cordial relations between the Seminary and the Presbyterianism of Columbia will be restored, something that the innocent students of the seminary find it hard to understand. And it is difficult for the Synod of South Carolina, even yet, to combine its splendid strength of heart and brain for the common good. The Seminary itself is a witness. It ought not to be a difficult thing in South Carolina to-day, with all the proud associations of the past that cluster around the old Seminary and with all the wealth that is coming into Presbyterian hands, to provide the needed additional endowment of $100,000. And yet when the Synod discouraged the removal of the Seminary, a few years ago, on the ground that the alternative proposition of raising that sum of money was the better one, it only succeeded in securing some $5,000 of the amount in pledges, about $1,000 as we understand having been paid in.

Nevertheless Columbia is regaining its lost hold upon its constituency. It has twenty-seven students and the number is increasing. But it needs the endowment that it seems to be unlikely to obtain under present conditions, its buildings are hardly able at this date to preserve the worthy traditions of Presbyterian education, and it would seem to us that every true South Carolina friend of the Seminary would swallow his very natural local pride and state pride and agree to the projected reunion of the divided territory at the central location of Atlanta.

Clarksville has an endowment of $286,000 and a student body now numbering 91. So far as the student body as a whole is concerned Clarksville has now to compete with growing and successful Presbyterian Colleges in Missouri, Arkansas, and Texas, while the newly equipped Central University of Kentucky has so effectually satisfied its constituency that there is not a single Kentucky student at Clarksville, though it is not far from the Kentucky line. The projected Alabama College, which might give way to the successful University, will cut off the Alabama students which now form no inconsiderable part of the whole. So Clarksville on its academic side has been progressively isolated, and it always was a charming oasis in the midst of a Presbyterian desert.

From the point of view of the Presbyterian ministry the situation is worse. There were twelve students in the Divinity School last year and we understand that from the knowledge of what may be expected from the present student body, next year there will be only three. It should be remembered that both the Louisville and the Texas Seminaries are covering the field once covered by the Divinity School at Clarksville.

Now it strikes us that it is pretty nearly a waste of valuable material to have R. A. Webb, that prince of theologians, to say nothing of Price and Alexander and Fogartie, teaching three Seminary students.

The proposition is to unite Clarksville and Columbia with their endowments at Atlanta, which has generously offered a quarter of a million dollars for the privilege of having this combination there. It is claimed that $50,000 of the Clarksville endowment may have to be given up, as it was conditionally bestowed by the town of Clarksville itself. But the best legal advice has been obtained affirming the legality of transferring the rest of the endowment with the institution itself, and we throw out the suggestion that in making no binding legal restrictions the donors of the endowment funds were actuated by the sincere desire of benefiting the Southern Presbyterian Church and through that the Kingdom of Christ; and that if these funds are failing now to bear the richest harvest it would really be a breaking of faith with those benefactors, living and dead, who were giving to the cause of Presbyterian education and not to that education in a particular community, and who trusted that their funds would be wisely used by those to whom they were entrusted.

We present these considerations to our readers this week at the Assembly and to our constituency in all the Synods that are vitally interested, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Tennessee. The Standard has no axe to grind and no educational institution in the vicinity to defend. Some of the other papers do not seem to be so fortunately situated. But the Standard would hate to see a ten thousand dollar endowment defeat the prospect of a million dollar Presbyterian University, or a Seminary that only half belongs to us use its organ successfully to defeat a competitor in Atlanta, or our New Orleans contemporary consider Dr. Palmer's influence in later years only and forget the institution of his first love, of which he was the most distinguished alumnus, the promised prosperity of which would be hailed to-day by none more gladly, were he alive, than by the eloquent voice that is still. Let us discuss the matter on a high plane, not with the idle threats of insuperable obstacles, but with the advance of such propositions as are concerned with the interests of Southern Presbyterianism and the Kingdom of Christ.

Perhaps the Los Angeles Assembly will be such a Pacific Assembly that it would be even willing to rescind the post-bellum deliverances as to the disloyalty and rebellion of Southern Presbyterians, especially as the host of the Assembly, Rev. Hugh K. Walker, is himself a Southern Presbyterian.

The editor of this paper desires to say a personal word to his constituency. Some months ago he found himself able to give the time and the labor necessary for the principalship of a Graded School in one of the factory suburbs of Charlotte. It was then surmised and published that the editor's connection with The Standard had terminated. It was feared by others that The Standard would deteriorate. The Standard is its own witness as to the groundlessness of that fear. Last week, for reasons that appeared convincing, the editor of The Standard accepted editorial control of the Charlotte Evening News. It is desired to contradict in advance any assertions that there has been any change in the relations between The Standard and its editor and to assure the friends of this paper that it will continue to improve its service of them and of the Southern Church. We can say of the Standard, as Dr. Stagg said recently of the Second Church, Charlotte: We have put our blood into it.

The Melody of Spring Time.

The world's all love and beauty
With its harp attuned to praise,
And everything beneath the sun
Joys in his genial rays.
On the purple plains of morning
There's delight we can't define;
In the shimmer of the star light
Comes a thought that's half divine.

All nature is enchanted
And cries out Rejoice! Rejoice!
And a thousand feathered songsters
Blend in with happy voice;
While the rippling rills are running
Through their fringed and daisied way,
Adding melody to music
Which makes the whole world gay.

A wandering zephyr sighing
And reluctant to depart,
Makes love to all the flowers
And touches every heart.
While waving boughs; and insects,
And birds upon the wing,
Join in to make the music
Of the soulful song of spring.

And caressing breezes linger
To kiss the blushing rose,
While above a feathered singer
To his mate makes dainty pose;
And Cupid, wicked Cupid,
Persues his primrose way,
With his little bow and arrow
To seek whom he may slay.

Oh, this life is sweet in springtime
When the old world's young again,
And the heart beats rhythmic cadence
To its ravishing refrain.
'Tis the great Creator speaking,
In a voice now soft, now strong,
That sets the soul to music
And the bursting heart to song.

Outline Bible Study—Galatians—Whole Epistle.

Give references in Acts, showing to what churches this Epistle was written. During what period in Paul's life was this Epistle written? On this point give reasons from Scripture in support of your view. Give the general outline of the Epistle, introductory portion, argumentative, practical. Give outline of Paul's argument in 3rd Chap; state his two main objects in writing this Epistle. What allusions are there in this Epistle to events in the life of Paul, found elsewhere in Scripture; what allusions to other events found in this Epistle alone? (Answer by giving chap and vs. in Gal. and elsewhere.)

What special experiences of Paul do you find here alluded to? Name all the Bible characters found in this Epistle.

The Epistle to the Galatians touches upon a large number of the great doctrines of the Christian faith. Give chap. and verse where you find the following doctrines:

1, The Chief End of Man; 2, Inspiration of Scripture; 3, The Trinity; 4, The Decrees of God; 5, The Fall of Man; 6, The Plan of Salvation; 7, The Incarnation of Christ; 8, The Atonement of Christ; 9, Regeneration; 10, Saving Faith; 11, Repentance; 12, Justification; 13, Adoption; 14, Sanctification; 15, Apostolic Office; 16, Call to the ministry; 17, Education for the ministry; 18, Ministerial Support; 19, Church Discipline; 20, New Testament Worship.

A number of interesting and helpful practical lessons are taught either in this Epistle or other Scriptures referred to. Show where these are, giving chap and verse: 1, Our Life in Christ; 2, The fruit of the Spirit; 3, Benefits following Adoption; 4, What a Christian is and is not freed from; 5, Conflict between the flesh and the spirit; 6; Growth in grace, evidenced by increasing sense of sin; 7, Difference of motive under Law; and Gospel; 8, Love the Supreme motive (two places in this Epistle); 9, True Consistency; 10, Faithfulness in administering, meekness in receiving reproof; 11, Graces brought out under temptation and trial; 12, How to settle personal difficulties; 13, The Law of Christ; 14, Christian grace most needed by the Christian worker; 15, Power of the Cross of Christ.

In your study of these outlines what have you found most instructive? What have you found personally helpful?

An Admirable Idea.

The following letter sets forth one of the best plans ever devised for the systematic support of the Orphan's Home.

“Rev. R. W. Boyd,

Barium Springs, N. C.

Dear Sir: Enclosed you will find a check for $10. This amount will be sent you each month by the Orphans' Aid Association of the Presbyterian Church, Salisbury, N. C.

This Association has recently been formed among the men of our church and each member of the Association has agreed to pay 25cts. a month to the Support Fund of the Orphanage at Barium Springs.

In approaching men and asking them to join this Association, we have been very much impressed with the fact that the great cause of Orphan support and education is near the heart of every man, and that any movement for the assistance of our own Orphanage at Barium Springs does, and will always meet with the hearty approval of every Presbyterian.

Every man approached joined our Aid Association and more than one voluntarily placed his name on the roll.

The formation of like associations in other towns and churches would not only increase the Support Fund of the Orphanage very materially, but would be a most systematic way of collecting for that fund.

Very respectfully,

The Treasurer Orphans' Aid Association.”

We commend this plan to the careful and prayerful consideration of the men of the Presbyterian Church. With such an Association in every congregation a heavy load would be lifted from the shoulders of the Board of Regents.

The monthly collections in our Sunday-schools are an undoubted success though the plan has slowly gained favor and grown slowly. The funds received from this source are contributed principally by the youth and children. The Ladies' societies clothe their orphan sending two entire outfits yearly.

Now lastly the men of our church are given an opportunity to contribute monthly to the support and education of the orphans of their church.

May this plan be richly blessed and rapidly gain in favor until these Associations can be counted by the scores.

The Treasurer of the Orphan Aid Association of the Presbyterian Church of Salisbury, will, we are sure, give any information in regard to organization to any who may wish to form like Associations.

We do not feel that it is necessary to urge our people to take this step, all will feel its importance and as our Salisbury friend says, all that is necessary is an opportunity offered to join.

Systematic giving is worth almost twice as much to the Orphans' Home as is spasmodic contributions.

R. W. Boyd,
Supt. Orphans' Home.

o Proof that God Saves only Some Dying Infants.

Will the editor permit a very few words on the infant question?

It seems to this writer that when the Westminster assembly framed the clause concerning elect infants, that the words, "dying in infancy" were meant to define them as elect: to say that all such were elect.

There is no explicit statement in Scripture supporting the proposition that only some infants of this class are elect and regenerated by the Spirit. Nor can this proposition be deduced from the Scripture.

The proof-texts in the foot-notes are irrelevant. One states the fact that Jesus took little children in His arms and blessed them. We do not know that any of them died in infancy. The other quotes from Peter's speech that the promise is to us and to our children, and does not touch the matter in question, for the promise is to us adults as well as to our children and not to those only of our children who die in infancy.

If the clause as it stands teaches no more than that some children dying in infancy are elect—then it cannot be substantiated by Scripture. Let us see. It is clearly a revealed truth that all the elect are regenerated, and therefore we have in our Confession—not a proof-text, but an inference—that elect infants dying in infancy are regenerated. But it remains to be proved that any elect infants do so die. What proof have we? We are promptly pointed to Jeremiah and John. But neither of these died in infancy. These instances undoubtedly show that some devoted worshippers of God were regenerated in infancy. The only reason we can have for believing that some infants dying in infancy are elect is that all such are elect, and this is easy of proof.

One of our Church weeklies challenges us to show and to furnish the proof-texts that, "The Holy Scriptures positively, definitely and clearly teach that all members of the human family dying in infancy are saved by the blood of Christ and the regenerating power of the Holy Spirit." We ask the challenger to furnish a single proof-text that the Holy Scriptures positively, definitely and clearly teach that some of the human family dying in infancy are saved.

The Bible does not say a word explicitly as to the election of some infants of this class. Nor in any single instance does it assert the election of a dead infant.

But to this writer it seems clearly taught by good and necessary consequence that all of this class are elect. A gratuitous proffer of salvation available for all who will accept it, is made to every child of Adam. The salvation is conditioned on faith; the proffer itself is without conditions. God himself cannot, without provocation, withdraw this proffer of grace. The child dying in infancy does not refuse to comply with the condition. The act of God makes compliance impossible. Does God take away its life in order to damn it? Has He elected it to perdition? In taking a child out of this world He either revokes the proffer—or saves the infant. Which?

A recent article by Dr. Woods shows many other necessary inferences with the same result, but the above is, we think sufficient.

Greenville, Miss.

John W. Primrose.

A Card From Dr. Bryan.

Dear Dr. McKelway:

I find in your issue of this week a notice of the recent meeting of the Executive commission, western section, of the Presbyterian Alliance and a mention of my name in that connection, which is evidently based upon a report of the proceedings published in a secular journal of New York City.

The question was not, as your note seems to imply, whether the reading of the Bible in our schools was desirable. On this there was no division of opinion among us, nor is there any need for me to enlarge upon my views on this subject. The question was rather, whether we, as Protestant Christian, could insist upon the reading of the Bible in the public schools against the protests of Romanists and Secularists, who are as much patrons of the schools and taxpayers as we are, and who claim that their religious freedom is invaded when their children are forced to listen to "the Protestant Bible" or their money is used to support teachers who read it. The question involves the law of the State in its relation to the law of God and even among those who receive God's word as we have it there is today no little difference of opinion as to the proper solution of it.

Because of these and other facts, the report which occasioned the discussion was recommitted and will be represented at our next meeting in Toronto. There is reason to hope that, despite the perplexity of the questions involved, a clear course will be indicated which, while recognizing the limitations of our public school system, will protect it from destruction and also from being made the hot-bed of secularism. The alliance could in my judgment do no greater service than to lead a movement which with a view of counteracting the prevailing tendencies will restore the family altar in the Christian home, exalt the Word of God in the Christian school and college and develop in our Sabbath-schools a new zeal for the study of the Scriptures.

This service has already been undertaken, so far as the Sabbath-schools are concerned, for the commission took steps to bring to the notice of all the churches the need of improvements in this direction.

Yours faithfully,

W. S. Plumer Bryan.

Faulty Versions.

The writer has been inclined, for a long time, to question the phraseology of our Bibles in English, which represents baptism as "into" a name. I would prefer, in all such cases, the proposition "unto." The "into" is replied upon by many as favorable to immersion.

Classical Greek would probably sustain this view, but in the New Testament, the usage is very much against it. The phraseology referred to, contradicts it; for immersion, or dipping into a name, is a transaction that defies even the imagination. But the proposition, e. i. s., which is so rendered in these expressions, by no means proves the introduction of one object within another. In multitudes of cases it is questionable and in some, impossible. When Peter and John went to the sepulchre of Jesus, they merely approached it at first, but the proposition is e. c. s. Then it is said (John XX. v. 4.) "the other disciple out-ran Peter, and came first to the tomb." The proposition again is the same. But in the next verse he "went not in." In vs. 6, we are told that Peter came and "went into the tomb," when the proposition is repeated. In vs. 8, the other disciple "went in," and the e i s is again repeated. In almost every case, the New Testament expresses the idea of entrance, by two propositions, one in composition, and the other before a noun. If "baptism into a name" meant immersion, it would imply a virtual use of e i s in composition, as well as before the noun. But this concedes the ground to the Baptists.

In fact, baptize does not involve the idea of a personal entrance. Philip and the eunuch, both approached the water, before the baptism took place. The latter was a subsequent act. If both stood in water, a total immersion, by Philip did not take place. The eunuch had partially baptized himself, and Philip only completed the act.

"Into a name" is hard to conceive. But "into a baptism," is harder, as in the Revised version, Acts xix, 3. "Dipped into a dipping," defies exegesis. All circumlocution seems absolutely necessary. Translation, word for word, is impossible in many cases, and this one of into before certain nouns, illustrates it. Immersion into a name, or into an immersion, is absurd, but baptism, by a given authority, is intelligible.

The Beauty of Death.

If there is one thing especially of which many people cannot possibly believe that, under any circumstances, it would seem beautiful, I suppose it must mean death. That must always be dreadful. Men seldom see any misery in life so great as to outweigh the misery of leaving it. But yet it comes to all of us, that he who made death made it, like all things else, to be beautiful in his time. When a life has lived its days but in happiness, grown old with constantly accumulating joys, and then, at last, before decay has touched it, or the grounds soften under its feet, the door opens, and it enters into the new youth of eternity; when a young man has tried his powers here and dedicated them to God, and then is called to the full use of their perfected strength in the very presence of the God whom he has loved; when a man has lived for his brethren, and the time comes that his life cannot help them any longer but his death can put life into dead truths, and send enthusiasm into fainting hearts; when death comes as a rest to a man who is tired with a long fight, or as victory to a man who leaves his enemies baffled behind him on the shore of time—in all these times, is not death beautiful? "Nothing in all his life became this man like leaving it," they said of one who died.—Phillips Brooks.

What fairy palaces we may build of beautiful thoughts, proof against all adversity, bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings; treasure-houses of precious and restful thoughts, which care cannot disturb nor pain make gloomy, nor poverty take away from us—houses built without hands for our souls to live in!—Ruskin.

Goethe in his tale of tales tells of a fisherman's rough log hut, which by virtue of a lamp within was gradually transformed into solid silver, and the uncouth hut became an exquisite temple of finest workmanship. This fairy tale beautifully illustrates how rough, uncouth, sinful humanity is gradually transformed into His likeness and image by the light of His grace in His hearts.—Baptist Banner.

We shall never be the "light of the world" except on condition of being the "salt of the earth." You have to do the humble, inconspicuous, silent work of checking corruption by a pure example before you can aspire to do the other work of raying out light into the darkness, and so drawing men to Christ himself.—Alexander Maclaren.

When we settle down to enjoy the blessings of God's grace, when we make the culture of our immortal souls a chief end of life, we find in the practice of religion not merely refreshment, but immunity from the harassing cares of worldliness, quiet of soul, a full sequestered life of inward communion. Encanopied by God, overshadowed by His protecting love, we recover calm and equipoise, and a sweet reasonableness, and an all spanning trust, and an overmastering hope and joy, which make us strangely indifferent to the hard rubs of life, and alive only to the realities of the soul and of Heaven.—Dr. John Smith.

The crosses of the present moment always bring their own special grace and consequent comfort to them; we see the hand of God in them when it is laid upon us. But the crosses of anxious forebodings are seen out of the dispensation of God: we see them without grace to bear them; we see them indeed through a faithless spirit, which banishes grace. So everything in them is bitter and unendurable; all seems dark and helpless. Let us throw self aside; no more self-interest, and then God's will, unfolding every moment in everything, will console us also every moment for all that He shall do around us, or within us, for our discipline.—Fenelon.

The one thing worth living for—yes, worth dying for—is the chance to make somebody useful and happy.—Exchange.

Missionary.

Needs of the Work.

In all our fields our opportunities are incalculable and our obligation is immeasurable. The need of the work everywhere is enlargement. Besides the two men who are about to be sent to reinforce the African Mission, at least two others should be sent at once in order to reoccupy the places that have been occupied heretofore and have been abandoned because there were none of the present force that could be spared to take charge of them.

We need to assist the Church in Northern Brazil to develop its educational work, so that the native force necessary to evangelize the field can be trained on the ground. The cost of sending a candidate for the ministry from any of the points in Northern Brazil to Sao Paulo is prohibitory, and when they are sent they find the fields that are open to them in Southern Brazil more attractive than their own home fields and are tempted not to return to Northern Brazil.

There is a great need for a boarding school for the sons of our Protestant believers in Southern Brazil. At Campinas we have a building and grounds for such a school and a competent teacher should be sent at the earliest possible day to reopen that work.

The appeal of the North Kiangsu Mission for seven men to occupy the places that are assigned to us in the division of territory among the different Missions in China is pathetically urgent. The Mid-China Mission needs an additional physician and not less than three preaching missionaries, besides some enlargement of the women's work in that Mission.

Korea needs two physicians and at least two ordained male missionaries. The time has also come when they need to begin a Girls' Boarding School in that Mission.

Additional workers could be most profitably employed in both Cuba and Mexico.

But a more urgent need than all these is that we take better care of our present force of workers than we have been doing for several years past; that we supply them more promptly with the funds appropriated for their support, and that we give them better equipment and better facilities for the work they are expected to do.

We believe that larger results will be attained in all our fields when we make a much larger outlay than we have done heretofore in the training and use of a competent native ministry. Therefore, the most urgent need at present is the enlargement of our income to a point where there will be something left after our own missionaries have been properly provided for, to be applied in this direction.

From Report of F. M. Committee to the 1903 Assembly.

A Strange Missionary School.

Out of the Boer prison camps in St. Helena, Ceylon, and the Bermudas has come a movement of religious life which is destined to be one of the fashioning forces in the reconstruction of South Africa. The exiled soldiers, when the time hung heavily on their hands, found their chief diversion and solace in religious exercises. Several of their ministers of the Dutch Reformed Church joined themselves to them, and labored assiduously for the quickening of their spiritual life, with the result that one hundred and seventy-five young Boers have returned to South Africa pledged to missionary service. The Dutch churches have undertaken to provide for their support while they are being trained for the work. One church has given an annual subscription of $2,500, which sum is sufficient to educate twenty-one missionaries.—Exchange.

I would like to urge upon all young people the study of the Word of God. Study it, make up your minds that you are going into active service, and therefore you must be armed and equipped. O, feed and sustain yourselves by going straight to the Word of God.—D. L. Moody.

The Life Giving Spirit.

Romans 8:1-14. May 31st, 1903.

In this 8th chapter of Romans the Apostle describes the blessings, privileges and eternal security of believers in Christ. He not only presents Christ as the Divine source of these blessings, but indicates the functions of the Holy Ghost in their bestowment. In the passage now studied Paul directs attention to two classes of persons "the carnally minded," and "the spiritually minded." "The carnally minded" are the unregenerate who live according to the depraved appetites and passions of man's fallen nature. "The spiritually minded" are those who renewed by the Divine Spirit are controlled in heart and life by His indwelling power. The moral condition of both these classes and the results of having Christ's spirit will claim our attention.

1. The Blessings of the Spiritually Minded.—These are stated in the first five verses. One is freedom from condemnation. The whole world stands guilty before God as the Apostle has proved in the previous part of his Epistle. But for the believer in Christ there is no condemnation and the Divine law does not sentence him to death. "The law of the spirit of life," or the Gospel has made him free from the condemnation of the broken rule of duty or the law that reveals sin and denounces death. This law could not free him from condemnation or justify him, not because of any defect in it, but because of the weakness of his own depraved nature. What this law could not do Christ sinless, in our nature has done. Those free from condemnation through Christ and His Gospel "walk after the spirit." Set free from the domination of "the flesh," or depraved nature they yield habitually to the promptings of God's indwelling spirit. "They mind the things of the spirit" or give attention to what He suggests rather than to those urged by the carnal nature. Again the spiritually minded "fulfill the righteousness of the law." Rescued from condemnation and guided by the Spirit, they work righteousness by obeying from love the law of God.

2. The Ills of the Carnally Minded.—Those controlled by "the flesh," the "carnal mind," or the depraved nature the apostle affirms to be subjected to manifold evils. They are dead and exposed to death in a more appalling sense. They are dead in trespasses and sins and liable to eternal death. "To be carnally minded is death." They are not only at enmity with God but are "enmity" incarnate. They are innately hostile to their Maker, and are at hopeless strife with Him. They are in rebellion against God's law. "The carnal mind is not subject to God's law neither indeed can be." "They that are in the flesh can not please God." Dead, hostile to God, the source of life, and rebels against His authority, they can not enjoy His favor but are exposed to His displeasure. The carnal and the spiritual are separated from Christ. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his." The spirit of Christ here means "The Divine Spirit, the Holy Ghost." Dead in sin, hostile to God, condemned rebels and without the Divine Saviour, the pressing needs of the carnally minded are regeneration and faith in Jesus.

3. The Results of Having Christ's Spirit.—If the carnal have been rendered spiritual, they pass into a new sphere and secure important benefits. The bodies of renewed believers are in process of dying because they belong to a sinful race. But the indwelling Spirit of God is to them a source of spiritual life because of His righteousness. On account of Christ's imputed righteousness they are entitled to life and because of growing personal righteousness or holiness wrought by the Spirit they enjoy increasing spiritual life.

Modern Lessons from the Rechabites.

Jer. 35:1-6, 18, 19. Topic for June 7.

When the children of Israel were wandering in the wilderness they met a tribe of people who became their fast friends. They were the Kenites. Some of the principal men of the line were Hemath, Rechab and Jonadab. Jonadab lived during the days of Elijah. He was a confederate of Jehu in overcoming the house of Ahab and in putting down Baal worship. Jonadab was a righteous man. As he looked about him he saw the terrible degradation of the people of Israel. He was a thinking man and at once began to cast about for the cause of the terrible condition which had befallen Israel and was not long in reaching a conclusion. The Israelites were given to much wine and the attendant evils of tarrying long over the cups. He didn't want his own posterity to reach a like depth of immorality and degradation and so calling his sons and their families to him, he commanded them to drink no wine, neither to plant vineyards nor to ever build houses, but to be content to remain a pastoral people, dwelling in tents.

Two hundred and fifty years pass. Israel has continued in the downward way and God is about to meet out punishment upon His chosen people. Nebuchadnezzar is making a conquest of the kingdom and the people of the country are driven to Jerusalem to seek protection and shelter. It is a motley multitude that is gathered in the city, filling every tenement and inn within the city's limits. With the others who have sought refuge from the king of Babylon, are the descendants of Rechab. Following their tribal law, they bring their tents with them and pitch them in some unoccupied portion of the city.

The old prophet Jeremiah, travelling about among the crowds that throng the city, comes upon this particular people. He inquires about their customs and finds out the story of their father Jonadab's command. Then the Lord speaks to the prophet and tells him to make an object lesson of those people to Israel.

He invites them to come to the temple. When they are gathered within its sacred precincts, he sets wine before them and bids them drink. They very stoutly refuse and give as their reason that their father of two hundred and fifty years before had given a command that they should never indulge in wine and they cannot violate his command.

Then the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah again: "Go tell the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, Will ye not receive instruction to hearken to my words? saith the Lord. The words of Jonadab, the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons to drink wine, are performed: for unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment: notwithstanding I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking: but ye hearkened not unto me." The Lord then tells His people that they shall be cut off for their disobedience, while the Rechabites shall live on and on, because of their obedience.

The popular thing in Israel was for men to drink wine, but the Rechabites chose to be unpopular rather than to disobey the command of their father or violate a principle. How different their policy from that of those who would enforce upon us the necessity of being a Roman when in Rome, even to the extent of doing many things which we would never think of doing otherwise. To follow with the throng and do the will of the majority, is always wrong when the principles of morality must be violated to do so.

The Spirit of the age should never make us to forsake the righteous teachings of our fathers. To keep from thus wandering away because of our surroundings it is necessary for us to keep close to God and may we all pray, "Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet, Lest we forget—lest we forget!"

The Lexington Assembly

The forty-third General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States convened in Lexington Presbyterian Church, on Thursday, May 21st. The opening sermon was preached by the retiring Moderator, Dr. W. T. Hall, Professor of Theology in Columbia Seminary. His theme was Inspiration. Dr. Hall is a native of North Carolina, and one of the sons of whom the Synod is justly proud. He was born in Reidsville, N. C., educated at Davidson College and Columbia Seminary, licensed by Concord Presbytery and ordained by the Presbytery of Bethel, to his first charge in Lancaster, S. C. From '61 to '72, he was the beloved and successful pastor of the first Church, Lynchburg, from which position he was called to the professorship of Theology in the Theological Seminary at Columbia. Dr. Hall was also a chaplain in the Confederate army, and is succeeded in the moderatorship by another Confederate chaplain.

After the sermon, the enrollment of commissioners was completed, showing that 155 were present. Three new Presbyteries were also reported organized, namely, King's Mountain, Mobile and Durant. With the completion of the roll nominations for the moderator were made as follows: Dr. J. P. Smith, editor of the Central Presbyterian, Richmond, Va., Dr. A. C. Hopkins, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Charlestown, West Virginia, Dr. R. A. Webb, Professor of Theology in the Southwestern Presbyterian University, Dr. W. H. Marquess, Professor in Louisville Seminary, Dr. W. D. Morton, of Rocky Mount, N. C., and Dr. J. S. Moore, of Dallas, Texas.

The first ballot showed such a wide diversity of opinion that the Assembly adjourned without making an election. At the afternoon meeting Dr. A. C. Hopkins was elected on the final ballot, his election then being heartily made unanimous.

Dr. I. S. McElroy read the following report on Ministerial Relief:

Abstract from the Second Annual Report of the Executive Committee.

Mr. S. H. Hawes continued his services as Secretary until August the first when the Rev. I. S. McElroy, D. D., entered upon the duties of this important office to which he had been called by the unanimous vote of the last General Assembly.

Roll.—The number of beneficiaries enrolled was 161, an increase of 16 over preceding year. If the dependent children in the families of these beneficiaries are counted, there were not less than 400 persons who received last year through this Committee a greatly needed assistance and they or their fathers or husbands were until recently among the most active and useful and honored of our pastors and of our home and foreign missionaries.

That we pay only an average of $100 per annum for each family is not to the credit of our Church, but our people are waking up to the duty and privilege of making a more comfortable provision for these beloved members of our household of faith.

Receipts.—The total credits on the Treasurer's book were $24,635.63 of which $17,015.42 was for the Annual Fund and $7,346.82 for the Endowment Fund. There was an increase in the Annual Fund of $2,145.56 over the contributions of last year and additions of $2,871.62 to the Endowment Fund which will shortly be increased to $11,094.82 by the acquisition of $3,618 from the legacy of Dr. John Sutton and of $130 from the balance of the legacy of 1,000 from Mrs. Mary A. Moore whose husband was for many years a member with Dr. Sutton of the Session of the Midway, Ky., Church.

Organization.—Cheering progress has been made in each department of the Assembly's threefold plan which includes organization Annual Fund and Endowment Fund. Permanent Committees have been appointed by our Synods and Presbyteries and by many of our Sessions and it is exceedingly important that these Sessional Committees shall be appointed in all our Churches to have special charge of this work and sustain to this cause some such relations as is sustained to Home and Foreign Missions by our Missionary Committees and Societies.

Annual Fund.—We are dependent upon our Annual Fund to pay the appropriations requested by the Presbyteries and it is supplied almost entirely by the collections ordered to be taken in July, the most unfavorable month in the year for large collections from our stronger Churches. As a consequence last midwinter our treasury was exhausted and the outlook was gloomy in the extreme but in response to our earnest appeal many delinquent churches sent their contributions, and some liberal friends sent generous gifts, so that all appropriations were paid in full. It would be unfortunate for our last midwinter experience to become a frequent occurrence and therefore earnest attention should be given to the collections for the Annual Fund. These were larger last year than ever before yet if they should reach $40,000 this year the language of the Assembly of 1900 would still be in order: "That we are far behind other Churches and come sadly short of what we ought to do in this respect."

Endowment Fund.—The Assembly's plan for accumulating an Endowment Fund has been approved by our Synods and Presbyteries and adopted by a number of our churches by whom it is cordially commended after trial as simple and efficient and every way satisfactory.

It is doubtless the intention of all our churches to adopt this plan at an early date and their prompt action is essential to a large and speedy success in this important movement not only because of the amounts that would be contributed through these pledge cards but also because of the interest that would be aroused and the atmosphere that would be created and out of which would come large gifts from liberal friends.

Applications.—Great care has been exercised to equalize our appropriations and to administer the limited funds at our disposal in strict compliance with the spirit and limitations of our constitution.

Home and School.—It was not deemed wise at the present at least to undertake any consolidation with the Fredericksburg Home and School.

Requests should be made to "The Executive Committee on Ministerial Relief of the Presbyterian Church in the United States."

Dr. S. H. Chester, Secretary of Foreign Missions read the report of the Executive Committee, from which we publish the following abstract:

Report—Executive Committee of Foreign Missions.—The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions herewith submits to the General Assembly the report of this work, together with the volume of its Minutes, for the year ending March 31st, 1903.

The total number of additions to our Mission churches on profession of faith is fifteen hundred and seventy-four. This is seven hundred and ten more than the number reported last year.

The largest ingathering is that of our African Mission, which reports an addition of 737 on profession of faith. There has been a large number of inquirers in our Mid-China Mission, and a much larger accession of members could have been reported but for the wise action of our missionaries in admitting new members under the conditions that have prevailed for the past two years in China.

There has been an especially marked change in the attitude of the higher classes in China toward our missionaries and their work. Some of them have sought instruction from the missionaries, for which they have offered liberal remuneration. One of the problems now connected with the work in China is the wisdom or the unwisdom of encouraging this movement among the literati and of accepting all the various gifts which they are ready to make to our work in return for such benefits as they have sought from our missionaries.

together the situation in China is more hopeful than ever before.

The report of our Korean Mission indicates that the great opportunity which we have had in that field for years past still exists, and that it is only because of the eagerness of our force that the progress of the work has not been more encouraging than it has been.

The spirit of revival which prevailed in Japan last year and which, at times, was accompanied by some questionable features, has settled down to a condition in which steady old-fashioned gospel work is being done on a larger scale and with more encouraging results than in years past.

The Presbyterian Church in Brazil, which has grown out of the co-operative work of the Presbyterian churches, North and South, is making steady progress, both in the increase of its membership and in the organization of its agencies for aggressive work.

The statistical tables show that our work in Mexico has made all the progress that we could reasonably expect when we consider that we have in the field only one regularly ordained missionary who has been in the field long enough to do regular work.

The development of the church in Cuba is limited only by the smallness of the force which has been carrying it on. The educational work of that Mission has been self-supporting. At Cardenas the school has not only paid incidental expenses, but has paid about half the salary of one of the lady missionaries in charge.

Finance.—The receipts for the year from all sources were $180,458.29. This is $15,575.29 more than the receipts of last year. Notwithstanding this gratifying increase in our total receipts the cost of the work for the year was so much enlarged on account of the increase in the number of missionaries, and of the expense of the work in the field incident to its natural development, that we find ourselves at the close of the fiscal year indebted to the Bank for $4,500. This amount is a little more than covered by the advance payment of $4,568 which had been made to the Missions before the 31st of March, on the new fiscal year.

The gain made in this year's receipts is largely due to the work done in connection with what we have called our Forward Movement.

The work has been in progress for ten months of the fiscal year. During the time 192 churches have assumed the salaries of missionaries or taken shares in the general expenses of mission stations, promising an aggregate of $71,990 per year. These pledges are a gain of $45,259. over the amount contributed by the same churches last year. This represents an average contribution of $1.71 per member as compared to 62 cents last year. These results are conservative estimates of what may be safely counted on from each church. The year based upon personal subscriptions, and in every case have been passed upon by the pastor and officers of the Church.

Reinforcements.—Eleven new missionaries were sent out during the year. Rev. L. A. DeYampert and Miss M. A. Brown were sent to Africa, Rev. and Mrs. P. H. Hensley, Jr., Miss M. E. Craig, and Mrs. R. L. Wharton were sent to Cuba, Rev. and Mrs. C. A. Logan were sent to Japan. Rev. L. O. McCutchen and Dr. A. J. A. Alexander were sent to Korea. Rev. J. O. Shelby was sent to Mexico. Miss Kate Hall of Villa Americana, Brazil, was added to our Southern Brazil Mission by marriage to Rev. Alva Hardie. The total number of missionaries now on our roll is 174. Besides these Rev. and Mrs. Cameron Johnson have become associate members of our Japan Mission and are regularly engaged in our work, although the Executive Committee has not assumed the obligation of their support.

We are most thankful to report that there has been no death among our missionary force during the year. Miss L. E. Wimbish who has served us long and usefully in Japan has been compelled, on account of ill health, to return home, as we fear, permanently. Dr. Alexander, having been only a few months in Korea, was also providentially compelled to come home without any immediate prospects of being able to return to his work.

Five male missionaries and one lady missionary are now under appointment expecting to be sent out this summer, if the way is clear. Eight candidates are now at present before the Committee seeking appointment.

Dr. S. L. Morris, Secretary of Home Missions read the following report:

Home Missions.—The thirty-seventh annual report closes the second year of the present administration, and shows the work in fine condition. The increase in contributions was $1,153.70, and the year has perhaps been more prosperous than any before, with more new territory occupied and more new churches organized. The total in the hands of the treasurer during the year, Mch. 31, 1902, to Mch. 31, 1903, was $47,217.33 including balance at beginning of year, receipts from the churches, and the Moore Church Erection Fund.

The disbursements were as follows:

Home Missions, Church erection, $33,545.01; Church loans, $1,500; Expense account, $4,105.49; Balance in treasury, $8,066.83: Total, $47,217.33.

I. Home Missions.—The receipts for this department of work, including contributions, from Loan Fund, legacies, and interest on railroad bond, $36,447.57. The disbursements have been for support of five missionaries among the Mexicans; 104 ministers and 234 churches in Texas; 22 ministers and forty-four churches in Arkansas; 14 ministers and thirty churches in Indian Territory; 20 ministers and 57 churches in Florida; 1 minister and 3 churches in Georgia; and the support of 11 schools in Indian Territory. The entire number of ministers and teachers supported in whole or in part was 111 and 23 teachers; and the whole number of churches aided, 362.

Tables are given showing receipts and expenditures for the past nine years under present plan of work. These figures show an increase of churches contributing from 1,250 to 1,513, making 263. Legacies vary from year to year. The churches have increased contributions by more than $5,000. The total receipts from all sources have increased by about $11,000. This year the total receipts are somewhat larger than in any previous year.

II. Church Erection.—Appropriations have been made to the building of ten churches, making in all $1,435.77. And Durant College received $1,000 ordered by the Assembly, and $910.11 through Dr. Sampson.

III. Moore Loan Fund.—From $5,000 left by Mr. Moore to aid churches in building, money at 3 per cent. interest has been loaned to five churches. There is now out on mortgage 3,169, and in cash 1,990.66.

Sphere of Operation.—Arkansas, Florida, Texas, and the Indian Territory are the fields in which this Committee has its largest work.

The Indian Territory especially is a hopeful and fruitful field for our church. There is a rapid development in progress, increase of population, new railroads, new towns and cities. In twelve months a dozen new churches have been organized. The new Presbytery of Durant will consist of about eight ministers and twenty churches. Five men have been secured and are doing most fruitful work. There has been a large advance in mission schools—to 11 schools, with 23 teachers and 1,200 scholars. The majority are self-supporting, and cost the Committee nothing. A friend has offered to contribute $500.00 to the erection of an academy in a growing town.

Durant College has been completed, costing nearly $15,000. It has 7 teachers and nearly 300 scholars. It needs dormitory rooms and furniture. One thousand dollars would relieve embarrassment and multiply its usefulness.

New Mexico, Oklahoma, and the Mexican work in Texas, are opening fields of great promise. Two evangelists and three Mexican licentiates are at work among the Mexicans, and valuable progress has been made. There are 13 organized Mexican churches, 675 members, and 6 church buildings.

This report recommends the support of individuals by churches and societies; and quite a number are now so supported.

The Executive Committee is much encouraged. It suggests:

1. That the Assembly ask for $50,000 for Home Missions.
2. That churches having loans for building be asked to take measures to meet their obligations.
3. That churches, societies, and individuals that support individual missions and ministers be warmly commended.
4. That the monthly concert of prayer for missions be observed, remembering the cause at home in prayer and offerings.

S. L. Morris, Secretary.

Dr. A. L. Phillips, Secretary of the Committee of Publication, read the report of that Committee, which is as follows:

Abstract of the Forty-second Annual Report of Publication:

This report contains an interesting illustrated sketch of the life of the late Rev. J. K. Hazen, D. D., for twenty-five years the efficient and beloved Secretary of Publication, together with an account of the growth of the cause under his administration. This historical matter makes the report of unusual value and interest. The work of the year went on without serious interruption. The Committee promptly met the demands of a fast increasing business by the temporary appointment of a Business Superintendent, Editor, Treasurer and Secretary. The Department of Sabbath-schools and Young People's Societies was thoroughly organized and worked with great satisfaction. The Business Department was in urgent need of thorough organization, and the election of a Superintendent became necessary. Mr. R. E. Magill was made Business Superintendent and Treasurer, and has done a most valuable piece of construction work. The old building was sold for $62,815 net, yielding a profit of $19,000.

This step seemed wise because it was in the center of the office and banking district, and it would have required extensive repairs to make it especially suitable, for which there was no available money. A most desirable lot was bought for $25,000, quite near the heart of the retail district, on which a specially designed building of moderate cost will be erected this summer. Meantime the business will be conducted at 12 Governor Street, at a small cost for rent.

During the year 305,250 copies of old books and tracts have been issued and 640,800 copies of new ones, containing together thirty-eight million pages. The following valuable manuscripts are now in hand for publication,—“Sermons,” by Dr. M. D. Hoge; “Apologetics,” and “Modern Evolution and Christianity,” by Dr. F. R. Beattie; “Discussions on Theological Subjects,” by Dr. J. L. Girardeau; “Pioneering in Africa,” by Rev. S. P. Verner; and “Life and Letters of R. L. Dabney,” by Dr. T. C. Johnson. Besides these there are several valuable tracts and Sunday-school books in hand.

Bibles, Testaments, tracts, Sunday-school library books, hymn books, catechisms, Sunday-school and miscellaneous papers were donated to the amount of $5,947.

During the year the receipts from Churches and Sunday-schools amounted to $10,234; for 1902, $9,963. This latter sum included $1,235 as legacy. So the receipts for 1902 were more than $2,000 increase. There was paid back into the work of the Church, through salaries and traveling expenses of Sunday-school missionaries, and donations, the sum of $14,439, which was $1,205 more than was received.

The growth of the Sunday-school work is most encouraging and full of promise. Conferences or Institutes or Conventions have been held in more than half of the Presbyteries. Many new Teachers' Meetings have been started. Home Departments and Cradle Rolls are being established far and wide. The "Manual of the Graded Course of Instruction in School and Family" has been issued, and is highly praised by experts. There has been an increase in the circulation of our Sunday-school periodicals all combined of more than a million copies. A new contract has been made for issuing all of these periodicals, which requires all orders to come directly to the Committee.

Plans are carefully being made for extension and needed improvement in the editing, printing and circulation of the Sunday-school helps of all kinds.

New interest is awakening in Young People's Work, especially in the Covenanter Companies for boys and young men, which is resulting in added denominational loyalty, missionary intelligence, and zeal and skill in Christian work.

It is recommended in connection with the Sunday-school work that parents be more careful in home instruction; all concerned be diligent to bring the children to Jesus; normal classes be formed for teacher-training; Home Departments be everywhere formed; Sunday-school Institutes be conducted in every Presbytery; Sunday-school day be celebrated on the first Sabbath in October; and that a diligent effort be made to plant a school in every destitute neighborhood.

As to the work in general for the coming year, amongst other things the Committee recommends that Dr. A. L. Phillips be elected Secretary of Publication and be continued as General Superintendent of Sunday-schools and Young People's Societies; that it be authorized to elect an Editor when the way opens; that it be directed to apportion $20,000 for Publication among the Presbyteries.

The Committee makes grateful acknowledgement of God's blessing on its plans and work, and for the large co-operation of the Church.

Secretary.

Thursday night.

The session of the Assembly this evening was given to a meeting in behalf of the Bible Cause. Rev. T. H. Law, D. D., of Spartanburg, S. C., for so long a time the successful agent of the American Bible Society, presided, addresses being made by Dr. E. P. Ingersoll of New York, a representative of the Bible Society, and Dr. H. C. DuBose, who spoke specially of the great aid which the Bible Society has given to Foreign Mission work in the translation of the Scriptures into all the tongues of earth.

Friday morning.

The members of the Assembly attended chapel exercises in the Lee Memorial chapel of the University, this morning, addresses being made by President Denny, of the University, and Dr. T. H. Rice, of Atlanta.

In the course of Dr. Denny's address he mentioned the fact that while there was universal complaint of the dearth of candidates for the ministry, Washington and Lee had a greater number among her under-graduates than at any time in her history. Your correspondent was told afterwards that there are here now eighteen candidates, twelve Presbyterians, five Episcopalians and one Methodist; besides at least ten more young men who have the ministry in view, but are not yet formally under the care of the Church.

Dr. Rice's response to President Denny's address was most admirable. Besides the eloquent terms of expression, the well-chosen illustrations, and apt allusions to the historic scenes and hallowed associations of Lexington, all of which were to be expected from the Atlanta pastor, he turned aside from the ordinary course of remark on such occasions, to preach a most impressive gospel sermon to the college boys, the main burden of which was, "what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul."

The Assembly then met in the Presbyterian Church at ten o'clock, and was opened with prayer by Dr. C.

L. Hyde, of Fort Worth, Texas. Dr. Whaling, the genial host of the Assembly, presented Moderator Hopkins with a gavel, sent by Frank Price, the beloved, missionary to China. After a felicitous reply, the Moderator announced the names of the Standing Committees, the chairmen of which are given here, for convenience: Bills and Overtures, according to the long list of precedents, the retiring Moderator, Dr. W. T. Hall. Judicial, Rev. J. P. Smith, D. D. Education, Dr. T. C. Converse. Publication, Dr. Henry C. Moore. Foreign Correspondence, Dr. R. A. Webb. Foreign Missions, Dr. W. H. Marquess. Assembly's Home and School, Dr. W. D. Morton. Sabbath-schools and Young People's Societies, Dr. J. H. Patton. Systematic Beneficence, Dr. W. E. Perkins. Narrative, Dr. J. L. Caldwell. Bible Cause, Dr. A. D. McClure. Church and Christian Education, Dr. James R. Bridges, The Sabbath, Rev. W. V. Frierson. Devotional Exercises, Dr. Thornton Whaling. Leave of Absence, Dr. L. R. Walker. Home Missions, Dr. J. S. Moore. Colored Evangelization, Dr. T. H. Rice. Theological Seminaries, Dr. D. A. Planck.

The Ad Interim Committee of Home Missions made its report through Dr. S. L. Morris, secretary. The Standard has already given its hearty commendation to the resolutions published below, and hopes that the plan will be adopted by the Assembly.

In response to an overture from the Presbytery of Arkansas, as to the best method of conducting the work of Home Missions, the General Assembly in session at Little Rock, Ark., May 1901, took the following action, namely:

"That the General Assembly appoint an Ad Interim Committee of which the Secretary to be elected shall be Chairman, and which shall be composed of the Chairmen of the Synodical Committees of Home Missions, who shall take into consideration the whole matter of our Home Mission work, in order to devise, if they find it practicable, a more efficient plan of Home Mission work, and report the result to the next Assembly for their action."

In accordance with the above action of the General Assembly, the Ad Interim Committee met in the First Presbyterian Church of Chattanooga, Tenn., February 4, 1902, and submitted a plan for the consideration of the Assembly at Jackson, Miss. After some discussion, it was evident that the Assembly could not be unified along the line of the plan suggested, and it was referred back to the same Committee for further consideration to be reported to the next Assembly.

This Committee met again in Nashville, Tenn., February 3, 1903.

Each session was opened and closed with prayer; and after a most careful consideration of the whole matter, the following is suggested as a plan of Home Mission operation for the consideration of the Assembly at Lexington, Va.:

1. The Home Missionary work of the Church is a unit, but for its better administration, it is divided into two departments, Local and General.

2. The Assembly urges upon all its Synods and Presbyteries to prosecute the work of Local Home Missions within their own bounds to the extent of their ability, and reserves for the use of these Courts the months of February, June and August for collections to defray the expenses of their Local Work.

3. The Assembly's Home Mission work embraces the whole church for the purpose of aiding the weaker Presbyteries and frontier districts, in the various Synods, but more especially in the new territory and unorganized sections of the West.

4. The Executive Committee shall aid, within its ability, the work in any Presbytery, where it is shown to the satisfaction of the Committee that said Presbytery is unable to compass the work; and in all cases, the Presbyteries shall secure offerings for this cause from their churches during the months designated for this purpose.

5. The General Assembly appoints two annual collections for Assembly's Home Missions, including the causes formerly known as Sustentation, Evangelistic and Church Erection; and appoints the months of January and September for the presentation of this work, and urges upon all its Synods and Presbyteries to endeavor to have this department of the work presented to the Churches distinctly upon its own merits, and to secure liberal collections from the Churches in their bounds.

1. The General Assembly's Executive Committee of Home Missions shall be composed of the Assembly's Secretary and one representative from each Synod, ordinarily the Chairmen of Synodical Home Missions, together with two business men residents of the city where the Committee has its main office, a majority of the whole Committee constituting a quorum.

2. The Executive Committee shall hold one regular meeting at the office of the Assembly's Secretary on the third Wednesday of February of each year, at which all appropriations for the ordinary Home Missions work of the year beginning April the first next thereafter, shall be made.

3. The Assembly, at the time of the election of said Committee, shall designate seven of the members as a sub-committee, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum, who shall meet monthly at the Secretary's office to issue all such business as may be committed to it by the Executive Committee. Said sub-committee shall also hold such special meetings as may be called by the Secretary.

1. No appropriation shall be made to aid in repairing or erecting a church edifice except where the Presbyterial Committee of Missions shall certify: 1. That the congregation themselves have not the means to do it. 2. That no application has already been made to the churches which are expected to contribute to the general fund. 3. That the amount appropriated by this Committee will be payable only when the building shall have reached a stage free from debt from which this money will be sufficient to put the house in condition to be used for public worship and leave it free from debt.

2. Ordinarily no grant or loan for church erection shall be made to any congregation, unless such congregation own in fee simple, and free from all encumbrances, the lot on which their house of worship is situated, or on which they propose to build; provided however, that in case a church is building upon leasehold property the Committee, at its discretion in extraordinary cases, may make such grant or loan, taking such precautions by the way of security or otherwise, as will protect the Church therein.

3. The sum granted to any congregation shall never be more than one half of the amount contributed, i. e., one-third of the entire cost.

4. In all ordinary cases, the grant to any church shall not exceed $500; and in making grants the Committee shall give special consideration and preference to the weaker churches and less costly buildings, when other things are equal.

5. The Committee is directed, whenever practicable and in accordance with the best interests of the church aided, to engage with said church that the amount shall be regarded as a loan, without interest, and to be repaid to the Committee in specified annual payments.

6. The appropriation, whether grant or loan, is subject to the following conditions, to wit: That in case the church or congregation shall cease to be connected with the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, or their house of worship be alienated, except for the building or purchase of a better house of worship, they shall refund to the Committee the amount they have so received.

7. When the appropriation is a loan (then unless other satisfactory security be accepted) a mortgage upon the church property, duly executed and acknowledged by the Church, through their legally appointed representatives, and recorded in the county clerk's or recorder's office, shall be returned to the Committee with a certificate endorsed thereon by an attorney at law, designated by the Presbytery or its Home Mission Committee, to the effect that the church has a valid title to the property, and full power to mortgage the same, and that said mortgage is a first line upon said property, and has been executed, acknowledged, and recorded according to law. Said mortgage shall be accompanied by a policy of insurance on said property in some reliable Insurance Company, in the sum of at least the amount of said loan, and for the period of said loan (if obtainable), the policy to contain a provision that loss, if any, shall be payable to the Executive Committee of Home Missions, as its interest may appear.

8. When the appropriation is a donation in all ordinary cases, the title of said property shall be vested in the Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, to be held in trust for the benefit of said congregation.

IV.

We further recommend that the Assembly's Manual be so amended as to make it conform to the plan herein presented; and that this proposed plan shall go into active operation on the first of April 1904; provided however, that the Assembly of 1903 shall, in addition to the Committee appointed under the proposed plan, reappoint a Committee under the proposed plan which shall conduct the work until April 1904, with the exception that the Committee of the proposed plan shall hold their first meeting in February, 1904, and arrange for the work of the ensuing ecclesiastical year, taking full charge April 1st, 1904.

Respectfully Submitted,

Dr. J. H. Lumpkin, Secretary of Committee on Ministerial Education read the committee's report, from which we give the following extract:

The executive committee of education for the ministry reported that they had endeavored to raise $30,000, but only $20,297 was received—the largest sum, however, contributed for several years. They enrolled 178 beneficiaries, as compared with 162 last year. The sum paid them was $15,459. The balance on hand is $5,668. The increased enrollment encouraged the committee to hope that in the near future more men would offer themselves for the ministry. The lack of a sufficient number of ministers adequately equipped is perhaps the most serious impediment in the way of the progress of the Church. Important as are other causes, they necessarily depend very largely upon this one. In order to do the work that ought to be done at home and abroad, there must be a larger supply of ministers.

Overtures of Presbyteries and Records of Synods were read and given to the Assembly for disposition and consideration.

The Committee on the Twentieth Century Fund offered its report.

The Synods of Tennessee, Alabama, and Missouri, and the Presbyteries of Fort Worth, Red River, Brazos and Maryland, submitted overtures, asking for union with the Dutch Reformed Church. These overtures were referred to the committee on Foreign Correspondence.

Rev. D. Clay Lilly, D. D., read the report on Colored Evangelization, showing an increase in receipts from the churches, pointing out the need for a more thoroughly trained ministry, giving a general invitation to the church to send more students to Stillman Institute, which has been made largely self-supporting, and stating that 2,000 colored children are being taught in Sunday-schools officered by white teachers. This latter is a most interesting development of our work of Colored Evangelization.

The Assembly adjourned in the afternoon, in order for the Committees to take charge of their allotted tasks, and at night a popular meeting was held in the interests of the Sabbath-schools. Dr. J. D. Wallace of Bristol, Tenn., presiding, Dr. A. L. Phillips making one of his stirring addresses and Dr. R. A. Webb, of Clarksville making a thoughtful and able appeal in the interests of Sabbath-school work.

Assembly Paragraphs—In the abundance of material for the moderatorship which was placed before the Assembly by the six nominations, the process of selection was much shortened by a motion to drop after each roll-call, the two names receiving the lowest number of votes.

Dr. Hopkins, who alone survived the three roll-calls will abundantly justify the Assembly's choice. He is one of those veterans of the Synod of Virginia who embody in themselves a distinct type of the Southern Presbyterian ministry—and that, one of its best and highest.

You can hardly think of a meeting of the Synod of Virginia without Dr. Hopkins, and the venerable colleague whose nominating speech placed him in the chair, and the two brothers of Winchester and Moonfields.

According to custom, Dr. Webb occupied the chair in the afternoon and night sessions and showed that so far as the duties of office are concerned, it would have mattered little if the seven votes between him and Dr. Hopkins had gone the other way.

Lexington—"whither the tribes go up"—and they are coming up, and many are already here. Lynchburg sends Dr. Fleming, Clifton Forge, Dr. E. W. McCorkle as visitors, and Lexington Presbytery, a solid phalanx, who will stand by the Assembly and see it safely through its deliberations.

There was quite a stiff little breeze blowing in the Assembly over the motion made by Rev. J. P. Robertson of Brownwood, Texas, to lay on the table the overture from the Presbytery of Western District recommending Dr. Summey for secretary of Publication. Mr. Robertson took the ground (he made his speech first and his motion afterwards) that such an overture was an invasion of the interests and rights of the Assembly to select its own officers and appointees without outside suggestion. He also took occasion in this connection, to haul the Standard over the coals for that paragraph at the bottom of the right hand column, p. 3, First Assembly Number.

As he coupled this, however, with a most complimentary reference to the paper and its editor, the feelings of the Standard were not deeply hurt.

There is some comfort also in the fact that the Assembly buried Mr. Robertson's motion under an overwhelmingly adverse vote.

Those who have heard Dr. Phillips' stirring Sunday-school address in part of which he warns against the ritualistic propagander carried on through the Sunday-schools, would have enjoyed watching his face under the overture five against the Committee of Publication for this very thing (alleged). It is Dr. Phillip's turn to-night, however, at the popular meeting in the interests of Sunday-schools and Young People's societies.

(Later report on page 16.)

Prayer.—Thy Word, O God, is a lamp to my feet, and a light to my path. Increase its power in my life, and help me to help others to find therein its sufficient satisfaction for themselves.

Prayer is a breath of fresh air—much else of course, but certainly this. It is inspiration on a hill top for new toiling on the plain.—Selected.

If God made no response except to perfect faith, who could hope for help? He is the God of sprouting seeds, and little vital beginnings.—Maltbie Davenport Babcock.

North Carolina Home Mission Echoes.

Rev. P. C. Irwin has been secured for the Yadkin County field and has entered upon his labors, making headquarters at Yadkinville, the county seat. A Presbyterian Church has recently been erected at Yadkinville. This is the only church of our denomination in the county. Brother Irwin has a broad and encouraging field and will no doubt do a great work in his new charge.

Rev. W. A. Murray has accepted a call to Lincoln, but the good work he did in Alleghany county will continue to go forward. Mr. Clyde Johnson of Senatobia, Miss., has accepted the work and will enter upon his labors about the first of June. A church and manse will be built in Sparta at once. Bro. Murray secured all the funds for these two buildings before leaving for his new charge.

Rev. I. N. Clegg, of the senior class of Union Seminary, has been called by the Synodical Committee to the Second Church of High Point and has signified his intention to accept, provided his Presbytery does not object. This church is a new organization and has never had a pastor. There is a membership of over forty. Bro. Clegg will devote three Sundays a month to this church and one Sunday to the neighboring town of Thomasville.

A new field has been opened in Albemarle Presbytery to which Rev. C. W. McDonald from the Synod of Virginia has been called. He commenced his work the first of May. In addition to his evangelistic work in connection with the new church, Payne Memorial, he will serve Nahalad and Aurora and Blount's Creek. Bro. McDonald is an earnest worker and is a valuable acquisition to our Synodical force.

Rev. F. G. Hartman has been placed in the Greenville field in Albemarle Presbytery. All the fields in Albemarle are now supplied except the Weldon group. We trust a suitable man may be secured soon.

The Superintendent recently visited the first church of Statesville in the interest of Synodical Home Missions. The church responded in a most liberal manner pledging the sum of $604 for the cause of Home Missions within the bounds of North Carolina. This is more than this church has ever done before and speaks well for its growth in the grace of liberality. It will have its representative in the home field as well as in the foreign. The congregation has chosen as its evangelist the Rev. J. P. Hall who labors in Mitchell county with headquarters at Plum Tree. The cause of Synodical Missions was presented recently to Davidson church and Bro. Graham's congregation responded in a most generous manner. The sum of $365 was subscribed and Rev. Edgar Tufts chosen as the Davidson representative in the Home Field. Rev. William Black has just closed a very fruitful meeting in the first church of Salisbury. There were over sixty professions of faith and the majority of them have joined the Presbyterian Church. Other churches will receive additions as the result of the gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the services.

The month of June is the time when the collection for the support of this good work is to be taken. The cause is a most worthy one and we trust a large offering will be made by each member of the Presbyterian Church in North Carolina.

June Collection.—We would remind all ministers and Sunday-school Superintendents of the action of last Synod in reference to the collection for the cause of Synodical Missions. It is as follows:

"That all the churches of the Synod devote the collections during the month of June to the cause of Synodical Home Missions in order that the month of September may be devoted to the Assembly's Missions, and the Synod thereby conform to the scheme of collections recommended by the Assembly."

"That the Sunday-schools devote one collection to the cause of Synodical Home Missions and said collection be taken the second Sabbath of June."

For two reasons, a special effort should be put forth to secure a liberal offering during the month of June.

First, this is the only month devoted to this cause, September having been given to the Assembly's Missions. Second, our work has been greatly enlarged and our expenses have been proportionately increased. We trust earnest notice will be given the congregation and Sunday-school setting forth these facts at least one week previous to the time when the offering is to be made. The work is prospering and new territory is being occupied by our beloved church.

We expect a liberal response from God's people in support of this work so dear to the heart of the Master. Pray for the cause.

E. E. Gillespie, Supt.

Northfield Conferences and Summer Bible School.

The schedule of religious gatherings to be held at Northfield, Mass., this summer is fuller than ever before. In addition to the resumption of the Northfield Young Women's Conference, which was omitted last year, the Summer Bible School will continue its second year and be in session the whole of July.

Never before in the 21 years of "religious gatherings" at Northfield has there been a more representative body of Biblical teachers and speakers, considered from a cosmopolitan or denominational standpoint, than the group of men engaged to occupy the platform this coming season. As is well known, it is not the attitude of Northfield to work for the propagation of any one denomination, not her motive to be critical, but pre-eminently her effort to teach the clear and simple truths of the Gospel. With this end in view, the services of some of the foremost men in Christian activity, both foreign and American, have been secured. With such men as Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, now abreast of the best Bible students in America; Rev. R. J. Campbell (Dr. Joseph Parker's successor) of London; Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, B. A., rector of St. Paul's, Portman Square, London; Rev. George Jackson, M. A. of Edinburgh (Methodist); Prof. Frank K. Sanders of Yale Divinity School; Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, Yale University; Rev. Samuel Chadwick of Leeds, England; Rev. R. A. Torrey, fresh from his remarkable work in Australia; Rev. John Hopkins Denison of Boston; Mr. Robert E. Speer of New York; Mr. John R. Mott of New York; Hon. Samuel B. Capan of Boston; Rev. Cleland B. McAfee of Chicago; Rev. H. C. Mabie of Boston; Rev. Wm. Lawrence, D. D., of Chicago and Rev. A. T. Pierson of Brooklyn, to address the sessions this coming summer, the object of the Conference—to deepen the spiritual life, to train leaders in Christian service, to inspire interest in Bible study and to promote Christian activity among the churches—will be more largely met than ever before. Following are the announcements for the Conferences:

Commencement Exercises of Northfield Seminary, June 13-17.

The Young Men's Student Conference, from June 26 to July 5, inclusive, represents the colleges and preparatory schools of the East, and is the official inter-collegiate student assembly.

The Young Women's Conference, from July 7 to 15, corresponding to the Young Men's Conference.

Northfield Summer Bible School, July 1 to 29, inclusive, offers continuous and consecutive courses in Bible study. Rev. James Orr, D. D., of Glasgow will be present during the last week of the session.

The General Conference of Christian Workers, from July 31 to August 16, inclusive, the largest gathering held at Northfield.

Post Conference Addresses, from August 18 to September 21. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan and Rev. Samuel Chadwick will remain over to speak at these meetings and be followed by Rev. James Orr, D. D., of Glasgow.

For the convenience of people visiting Northfield during the summer, Hotel Northfield will be open from June 12 to September 25 and Camp Northfield, an outing place for young men, from June 25 to September 1.

The Editor's Chat with the Reader.

We send our greetings to the brethren of the Assembly with this and wish we could have been with them. We understand that a friend of the Standard criticised it on the floor for "nominating" Dr. J. P. Smith for the Moderatorship. We are very well satisfied with our motives as to that. And also charitable to our critic.

The Assembly reports take up a good deal of our space. Next week's paper will probably have the entire account and written in Rev. R. A. Lapsley's charming style.

But we have some good things for the folks that do not care as much as they ought to about the Assembly.

That poem, The Melody of Spring, is artistic in the extreme. Mr. Lapsley contributes his outline Bible Study as well as the Assembly reports.

Mr. Boyd has a word about the support of the Orphanage and Dr. Primrose makes a point on the elect infant's question.

Dr. Bryan makes a correction of our statement and Senex discusses "Faulty Versions." The Devotional, Missionary, Sunday-school and Young People's Departments are all good. Rev. Eugene Gillespie has a readable report about the Home Mission work and the note about the Northfield Conference may be of interest to some of our readers.

The Lexington Assembly

Friday night.—The addresses made by Rev. Drs. R. A. Webb and A. L. Phillips on Friday night were each a masterpiece of its kind.

Dr. Webb's address was didactic and scholarly to a fault, yet admirably suited to its subject, "The Bible in Current Thought." He said in substance that there were four distinctions being made in current religious literature. 1, Between dogmatic and historical method; 2, between systematic and Biblical theology; 3, between matter and form; 4, between doctrine and life.

These distinctions were valid and true in themselves, yet were being constantly misapplied, and thus misapplied they made the Bible more important as ancient literature than as an authoritative source of doctrine, more important as the record of human consciousness than as a revelation of the mind of God, more important for substance of thought than for its divinity inspired expression, and more important as a handbook of conduct than as a sort of faith.

Dr. Phillip's address started out along the same lines and began with an allusion to the Religious Education Association the outcome of that noted gathering in Chicago last February. This association proposes to influence methods of religious instruction in the direction of prayers, and particularly in Sabbath-school work. We would welcome all improvement in methods which they might suggest, if it were not that along with their methods there is also insinuated this matter. The substance of their teaching is nothing else than the conclusions of the radical criticism and we are to fight this to the death. The only question before us is along what lines are we to fight?

He was glad that the bugle note had been sounded in Dr. Webb's address. We are to carry out these sound consecrative views in several practical directions.

First, there must be a revival of old fashioned family religion. Again we must conduct a vigorous evangelistic campaign in our Sabbath-schools for the salvation of the souls of our children. Third, we must put into practice the lines of policy in Sabbath-school work already enjoined by the repeated action of our highest church court.

Dr. Phillips in vigorous style touched on such matters as sessional control of the Sabbath-school, teacher's meetings, the home department, Sabbath-school institutes, Rally day, Sabbath-school institutes, Sabbath-school missionaries in destitute places. Under this last head to use his own phrase, Dr.

Phillips, "put on de rousements." One moment he had the assembly convulsed with his skillful adaptation of the old soap's Fable, concerning Mrs. Lion with her one cub (Presbyterian) and Mrs. Fox with her large retinue of frisky little cubs (Methodist and Baptist). The next moment all were thrilled and hushed as he closed with a tender picture of Him who touched childhood with gracious hands saying: "Snuff the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for such is the kingdom of God."

It has been very dry in Lexington, and Friday night, there came up a fine shower, in the middle of Dr. Webb's address. Some of the brethren were wicked enough to suggest that the heavens had come to his aid—he had introduced his remarks with the expressed hope that the discussion might not prove too dry!

Prof. Gage, who addressed the Assembly on the overture from the Synod of Missouri looking to a legalizing of the relation of stated supply, is not a commissioner and was only given the floor after a spirited debate. It was contended that if the precedent were followed it might flood the assembly with speeches from outsiders (with the implication I suppose, that his might suppress the flow of eloquence from the Assembly itself).

Prof. Gage won, however, on a vote of 99 to 57 and was given the floor for 20 minutes. What determined the vote was the fact that Prof. Gage was a member of the last Assembly and had begun the discussion in that body and was cut off by its adjournment.

A number of communications were received and referred.

The committee of Bills and Overtures made a report which had been set for 10:30 this morning as an overture from the Synod of Missouri touching the stated supply system. The overture proposes either a limited pastorate or the legalizing of the relation of stated supply.

Prof. D. T. Gage, President of Westminster College, the author of this overture and its advocate in the Synod of Missouri was given the floor as noted below and made a strong speech in advocacy of his measure.

He made the striking statement that one half of our churches and one-third of our ministers occupy this anomalous relation to each other. He showed that the evil is growing worse if anything, and he took the wind out of the sails of some of the brethren when he said that the growth of the evil is most marked in such Synods as Virginia, Kentucky and South Carolina.

After Prof. Gage's speech the Assembly took recess until 8:30 to-night, and this matter will come up again as unfinished business.

(An excellent sermon was preached before the Assembly by Rev. Dr. J. L. Caldwell of Pine Bluff, Ark.)

Report of the Permanent Committee on Sabbath Observance

The Permanent Committee on Sabbath Observance, would report that they have received reports from fifty-seven of the seventy-nine Presbyteries in connection with the Assembly. From these reports, it appears that the general condition upon the whole remains very much the same, with the exception of some hopeful signs of improvement in some directions. We note a decided advance in the matter of Presbyterian activity, looking to a better observance of the day, as many as sixteen of the Presbyteries reporting "special effort" in that direction, and in many instances with a good degree of success. In accordance with the instructions of the last Assembly, quite a number of the Presbyteries have held conferences and popular meetings on the subject at their regular meetings. One Presbytery reports that it had a special sermon on Sabbath Observance, preached before it, and by its own appointment. Another reports "careful consideration" given the subject, another, "unusual interest and activity," another, that it had appointed a committee to prepare a circular letter on the subject, and still another, that "many were zealously defending the Sabbath." The Presbytery of Washbourne reported that Dr. E. E. Thompson of the Sunday-school League engaged to go through the Presbytery lecturing on the Sabbath. The Presbytery of Western Texas reports that they have made it a standing order to devote one evening at each meeting to the consideration of the subject. The Presbyteries holding conferences and popular meetings were: Atlanta, East Alabama, Kanawha, Potosi, Transylvania, Winchester and South Carolina, in some of these meetings the subjects and speakers being arranged and appointed beforehand.

As the result of this activity three of the Presbyteries report what seems to be a hopeful reaction towards greater reverence for the day; whilst others give some instances of improvement in certain localities, as for instance, in one congregation, under the preaching of the Word, certain parties were influenced to cease the practice of hunting and fishing on the Lord's day. Another, as the result of one of these popular meetings, the Mayor of the city, where the meeting was held, gave orders to close all of the business houses on the Sabbath.

The Presbytery of Atlanta reports the existence of a Ministers Association in the city of Atlanta which has been very active and successful in resisting encroachments upon the day, and in creating a healthy public sentiment against certain forms of Sabbath desecration as, baseball playing, bicycle riding, and the so-called sacred concerts.

The Presbytery of Abingdon reports, that the order of Railroad Conductors has taken up the question of Sunday labor, with a view of lessening it as far as they were able.

These, and other instances of the kind which might be mentioned, go to show the deep interest felt by some of our people, and what might yet be accomplished by united, constant and persistent effort.

Whilst we thankfully record these little encouraging tokens, we can not close our eyes to the fact that the evil, like the increasing waters of the swelling flood, is still a great and growing one.

The reports all unite in declaring that whilst there may be here and there a temporary arrest, and also a "wide difference between the manner of our peoples' keeping the day and others," as experienced in one of the reports—that upon the whole, the tendency is downward.

Sunday travel and traffic are none the less but rather more, with the exception of locals, Sunday freights continue to run with the same number and frequency as ever. So with the publishing, selling and reading of the Sunday papers. Instead of diminution there is a constant increase. With outsiders, and especially in the cities, the day is becoming more and more a day of recreation and pleasure. The formula that expresses the situation is rightly put in one of the reports when it says, "The church is holding to the Sabbath, the world is drifting from, and secularizing the day."

From the summary here given, we not only are led to hope that something may be done to arrest the evil, but to see one of the most promising methods of procedure. From our experience in the matter, we feel assured that there is no better way of awakening public interest on the subject than by popular meetings and conferences, held by our Ecclesiastical Assemblies. We would therefore ask the Assembly to renew its request to the Presbyteries to continue to hold such meetings in the future.

And to this same end we would respectfully ask your venerable body, if it seems meet to them to do so, to set the example, by appointing some evening during its present session, for the special consideration of this subject. We ask this for the reasons, first, that we regard this to be a matter of sufficient importance to receive such prominence, and second, because in no other way could the attention of the Church and the country at large be more successfully directed to the matter.

(By Telegram Monday.)

The morning session was devoted to hearing communications, receiving reports from the Committee on Bills and Overtures.

Annual report of the Trustees of the General Assembly was made, showing a total from all sources, of $19,958 Disbursements, $15,881, balance on hand, $4,027. Miss Mary Stuart of Alexandria has bequeathed to the Assembly the sum of $3,955.

The Committee on Bills and Overtures reported adversely on the overture to amend the Book of Church Order by substituting "may" for "shall."

The overture from Columbia Presbytery to make the Synod of Tennessee a representative body was rejected.

Dr. Crafts, of Washington, addressed the Assembly on Sabbath Observance.

The Assembly then adjourned till the night service

The General Assembly met in session to-night but did not transact any business, the session being converted into a popular meeting. The topic of the evening was ministerial relief. Many commissioners availed themselves of the long recess between sessions to-day to visit the Natural Bridge. A large audience assembled at the popular meeting and was addressed by Drs J. T. Plunkett of Augusta, Ga., W. M. Micheters, of St. Louis; I. S. McElroy, of Richmond and Henry A. Moore, of Texarkana, Texas.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg met on 21st in First Church of Charlotte at 10 a. m. There were present nine ministers and one elder. Candidates J. Eldred Flow and W. M. Walsh were licensed as probationers for the gospel ministry.

Mr. Flow was dismissed to Upper Missouri Presbytery.

Revs. P. H. Gwinn, J. A. McMurray and J. A. Dorritee were appointed a commission to install Rev. W. H. Davis at Sharon on Saturday before 5th Sabbath of this month.

CHARLOTTE; Second Church.—This church had the pleasure of having its former pastor, Rev. R. C. Reed, D. D., with it Sunday on the interesting occasion of the Baccalaureate sermon to the Presbyterian College for girls. Many students of the Elizabeth College also attended and the sermon was one well worth hearing and remembering, on "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

DAVIDSON.—There is every promise of a fine Commencement this week. Sermons by Dr. Sparhawk Jones and Dr. Campbell will make baccalaureate Sunday a notable day, and Dr. Remson, President of the Johns Hopkins, is sure to make an unusually attractive address. Speaking of Dr. Jones' presence here as an event in Commencement, one is reminded of the statement that was published a number of years ago when Dean Stauly was on a visit to America, in which he is quoted as saying that Dr. Jones was about the ablest preacher in the United States.

It is matter of regret that so few of the trustees, a larger number of whom will be at Commencement than usual, will be present on Sunday.

Dr. Martin delivered the closing address at the Crescent High School near Salisbury on yesterday.

Notice is given that Professor Dickinson, who has had charge of the Rock Hill High School the past year, has resigned and a new principal will be needed. A similar report comes from the Donaldson-Davidson School at Fayetteville to the effect that Professor Simson has sent in his resignation, and a new appointment will have to be made.

Rev. Dr. Harding, recently of Farmville, is visiting relatives in the village.

CLEVELAND.—The Twentieth Century Canvass of Rev. R. S. Arrowood's field was completed here after an address by the Rev. D. P. McGeachy last Sunday night. Our little church responded with cash and subscriptions amounting to about $300. The sum raised for this important course in this field reaches nearly $800.

SWANNANOVA.—After due notice to the congregation two additional deacons were elected, Mr. Robt. W. Patton and Arnold Shepe—two promising young men. Last Sabbath, May 10th, they were duly installed into the office and work of the Deacon. This election fills a long-felt need in our church and we are quite certain that we shall now make new progress.

LITTLE RIVER.—This church is yet without a pastor. We have not had any service in our church, more than Sunday-school and prayer-meeting till this month when our beloved brother, Rev. L. M. Kerschner of Spencer, N. C., came and preached three excellent sermons to us. On Saturday, May 9, at two p. m., he preached from the text, Psalm 47:4; Sunday, May 10, at eleven a. m., from Philipians 3:12-14, after which the Lord's Supper was administered. In the afternoon his text was, "Prepare to meet thy God." We trust that the lessons so well taught may prove a great blessing to us.

The congregation on Sunday was supposed to be between five and six hundred people.

Bro. Kerschner preached for us twice a month for a year beginning in September of 1901. Much good was accomplished by his work among us. We are glad to be remembered by him and appreciated his visit to us.

May the Lord bless him and his work. A Member.

MISSISSIPPI.

Wanted.—Three more preachers in the Presbytery of Chickasaw at once. One married man with small family; salary $600 and a manse. Two young single men; salary $600. These salaries are guaranteed. These men are needed at once. Write, with references, to Rev. H. M. Sydenstricker, Chairman of Home Missions, Corinth, Miss.

Rev. J. B. Hutton of Jackson preached several days at the church here, having begun on Thursday night, the twenty-second; Presbyterian received seven additions, the Methodist one. Dr. J. B. Hutton, of Jackson, has been doing the preaching during the protracted meeting here this week, and his sermons have all been the finest ever heard in this town. As a thinker, scholar, reasoner, and a pulpit orator of force and power, he has no equal in the state. We are glad that he has come among us and feel sure that his labors here will result in great and lasting good.

Ackman, Miss., May 4.

Presbytery of Mississippi met in Hazlehurst April 28, 1903, at 11 a. m., and was opened with a sermon by Rev. C. M. Grafton, D. D., from text Gen. 17:1, 7.

Moderator—Ruling Elder, S. D. McCallum of Union Church.

Clerk.—Ruling Elder, John I. W. Ross, of Red Lion Church.

Received—Rev. W. T. Wadley was received from Meridian Presbytery.

Dismissed—Candidate E. S. Brainard to Presbytery of Meridian.

Ordained—Licentiate John W. Henderson who has been for years a Ruling Elder in the Natchez church, Supt. of the Sunday-school and superintendent of the Public schools, was ordained as an evangelist and assigned to a field.

New Grouping—Fayette and Pine Ridge churches were granted permission to employ the whole time of Rev. E. M. Stewart, if the way be clear. Hermanville, along with Carmel and Greenwood, was placed under the care of evangelist Henderson.

Committee Reorganized.—Rev. J. L. Still and Rev. C. M. Huber were made chairmen, respectively, of Foreign and Home Mission Committees.

Education.—The committee reported that we have had but two candidates during the past year. Mr. Brainard of Clarks ville will complete his studies in June and go into regular work in S. E. Mississippi. Mr. Thos. Grafton has been at Louisville and will apply for license at next fall meeting.

Chamberlain Hunt Academy is no longer under the care of Presbytery, but of the Synod of Mississippi. Rev. S. C. Caldwell, appointed at the last meeting of Presbytery to make the formal transfer to the Synod, reported the duty discharged.

Commissioners to Assembly: Rev. W. H. Perkins of Magnolia, Elder Jonathan McCaleb of Pine Ridge, Principals Rev. H. H. Brumlee, of Port Gibson, and Elder Jno. Harper, of Natchez, Alternates.

Latin Thesis: The overture touching this matter was answered last fall in the negative.

Installation: Committee consisting of Rev. W. H. Perkins, Rev. S. C. Caldwell and Rev. C. M. Huber reported that they installed Rev. E. W. Ford pastor of McCount church on the last Sabbath of March.

Supplies: Rev. C. M. Huber was appointed to preach one Sabbath each month (or oftener) at Osyka.

Special sermons of ability and edification, according to appointment were preached on Family Religion by Dr. C. W. Grafton; the Bible cause by Rev. W. H. Perkins; Foreign Missions by Dr. J. J. Chisolm.

Place of next meeting: Ben Salem church, Sept. 29, 1903.
S. C. Caldwell, S. C.

GEORGIA.

NEWMAN.—From the night of April 27, through May 5th the pastor of this church, Rev. C. O'N. Martindale, was ably assisted in a series of meetings by the Rev. Griffin W. Bull, Ph. D., of the West End Church of Atlanta. Thus far there have been ten accessions on profession of faith, and a great revival of the Church, such as has not been experienced in many years. The whole city flocked to listen to the delightfully searching and spiritual discourses of Dr. Bull. The church is planning to spend some $5,000 on improvements in the building as early as practicable. Saints and sinners have been greatly blessed through the meetings just concluded, whereof we all are glad, and encouraged to press forward as never before. C. O'N. M.

Missionary Union

The third annual meeting of the Woman's Presbyteria

Foreign Missionary Union was held in the Presbyterian Church at Cordele, Ga., April 16th.

Not full in numbers, but full in deep, earnest enthusiasm, these Christian Women met together to sing His praise, seek His guidance, and to unite their efforts in sending a message of Salvation to those who are still in darkness.

Our reports for the last year show a wonderful Missionary interest in all the churches represented, but there are still a large number of weak churches in our Presbytery who have not been awakened to their Missionary obligation, or privilege. It was decided that our main effort for the next year should be to arouse interest in all these by making each church responsible for two or three of the weaker ones. In dividing the work we do earnestly hope and pray they may be all brought within the Union.

In the past year the Union has suffered a great loss in its loved and efficient President, Mrs. H. T. Darnall, who has served since its organization. She sent her resignation, her home is no longer in the Presbytery. A letter from her, full of prayerful, sympathetic interest in our work, was read to the Union.

The secretary was requested to express our regret, that circumstances beyond their control have deprived us of our President, and our Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. L. G. Henderson, now of Griffin, Ga.

May the Master's promise be fulfilled in them, "He shall guide you into all truth," and may He enable them gladly to enter every door of opportunity He may open to them in their future lives.

The President God has given us for the coming year is surely one who is willing to spend and be spent in His service, Mrs. E. P. Morgan of Americus.

The Union now consists of fourteen Societies, only one having come in since our last meeting, but with the united prayers and efforts of fourteen, we feel that our possibilities for service are almost unlimited.

After making many plans for future work, it was with a feeling of real sadness the meeting adjourned, for it was a great blessing and benefit to those who were present, and we all feel inspired to go forward with renewed zeal and earnestness in this work for Christ's Kingdom.

The Union earnestly recommend all the Churches (the ladies of the Churches), and all the Societies, to subscribe for at least one copy of "The Missionary Review of the World," and let it be read as a great help to Missionary information.

The address is: Dr. A. T. Pierson, 1,127 Dean Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

TEXAS

The Texas Presbyterian College for Girls

The Executive Committee has recently held a meeting, which we regard as one of the most important ever held in the interest of the college. Its friends will be glad to know that we have secured what we regard as the very man as Financial Secretary, Rev. J. J. Grier of Birmingham, Ala. He comes to us highly endorsed by some of the ministers of our Synod, who personally know him. By correspondence with the several members of the Executive Committee a unanimous expression of approval having been secured, Mr. Grier was asked to meet the committee in Milford, April 18th, which he did, bringing his excellent wife with him. After a full and candid conference between Mr. Grier and the committee, he was unanimously elected to the position, and accepted it. He will enter immediately upon the work of carrying out the following resolution, which was adopted: Resolved:

That the Financial Secretary be instructed to begin work at once to raise $100,000 for the thorough equipment and partial endowment of the college: $40,000 of which is needed at once for the erection and equipment of two buildings: one to be erected by the first of September, 1903, and the other by Feb. 1, 1904.

The scholastic year is closing under the most favorable auspices. There has not been a case of serious sickness during the year.

President Evans told me he is receiving applications for rooms next year; and if the buildings indicated materialize, we firmly believe they will be filled by the close of next year, as the present one has been during the present year. Let every minister in the Synod see that our Financial Secretary is provided with a home while visiting the churches; which will lighten the expenses of the Synod. Let all the Presbyterians in the Synod give this brother the benefit of their prayers, their sympathies, and a liberal portion of their money, and we shall soon have one of the best Female Colleges in all our Southland.

It may be well to add, for the benefit of any who may not know it, that the health of our excellent Financial Secretary, Dr. S. M. Lockett, failed last fall; and after waiting to see if he could resume his duties, and being disappointed, Dr. Lockett sent in his resignation, which, owing to ill health, was accepted, and hence the foregoing action.

Cordially,

M. C. Hinton,

President Board of Trustees of T. P. C. G.

LAVONIA.—On Sunday, May 3 the Rector Chapel Church at Lavonia, Tex., called Rev. Jno. B. Hudson, a Licentiate of this Presbytery as pastor. The call was hearty and unanimous. Mr. Hudson is doing a fine work in this field where he has been preaching since January 1st.

The Board of Trustees of the Seminary met on Wednesday, May 13, at 7 o'clock p. m., and at 8 o'clock p. m. the Rev. S. A. King, D. D., made the Inaugural address as Professor of Systematic Theology. On Thursday, May 14, at 7:45 o'clock p. m. the Board of Trustees heard the Inaugural Address of the Rev. R. E. Vinson, D. D., as Professor of the Old Testament Languages and Exegesis. ## SOUTH CAROLINA.

FLORENCE.—Last night, Sunday, May 10th, we concluded the series of meetings that have been held daily for the past eight days. Rev. R. G. McLees preached twice a day and we have enjoyed the most gracious outpouring of blessings that our community has experienced in many a year. The Holy Spirit was with us in great power. A most profound solemnity pervaded the meetings. There were many obstacles to begin with and it seemed that there were many things against us.

We were, however, convinced that the time had fully come.

At our last communion service, held April 5th, seven were received, and there was every indication to lead us to believe that a revival had already begun. Last Sabbath, as a result of the meetings, the session received fifteen persons into the full communion of the church; of whom nine were children of the Sabbath-school and six were men and women who had grown to maturity and still knew Him not. Besides these, two were received by certificate, making a total of seventeen.

Without a doubt yesterday was the greatest day of my ministry here.

It was a sight to cause angels to rejoice, to see young boys and maidens consecrating their lives, full of promise, to God, and strong men bowing humbly before the Almighty and giving their lives to the service of Christ. Nor is the chapter closed. There are others who will come, having heard the Spirit's call. The Lord has been very gracious to us whereof we are glad.

We expect to begin the erection of our New Church in the course of a month or so. And also the Presbyterian High School which Presbytery established at its last meeting. The High School is located here and is to be a Classical School. This means great things for Presbyterianism in this section.

Bro. McLees left this morning for Charleston, and expects to spend next week in Yorkville assisting Bro. Neville. Our prayers in his behalf will continue and may God bless his labors in Yorkville as he blessed them here.

Church News.

MISSOURI.

LEXINGTON.—On Sabbath, May 17, 1903, Dr. E. C. Gordon closed the 5th year of his second pastorate of the church in Lexington, Mo. It will be remembered that after nearly five years of service he was called from this church by the board of trustees to the office of President of Westminster College at Fulton, Mo.; and then after another five years of faithful service at the college, a unanimous call was again extended to him to become pastor at Lexington: Dr. Moffett having returned to Kentucky. So in the providence of God Dr. Gordon was restored to his former charge, people who loved him and whom he loved in return.

The writer was not at all astonished to hear him say from the pulpit that the last five years had been the happiest of his life. Herewith is given a brief summary of the statistics of the church during that period.

On April 1st, 1898 the enrolled membership numbered 259. There were added on examination 89, and by letter 45; making a total of 393. There were removed by death 17, dismissed 81; total decrease 98; membership, April 1st, 1903, 295, net gain of 36; contributions to foreign missions, $3,844; Local Home Missions, $2,573; Assembly Home Missions, $184; Total, $6,601. To other causes of beneficence, $978. Congregational, Presbyterian and miscellaneous, $4,813; Pastor's Salary, $6,027; Total contributions, $18,419.

In pastor's work at home 601 public services; abroad in church work, 215; total, 816.

This congregation has also given two of its members to the ministry, two to the Foreign Mission field and one in course of training. In connection with its regular Sabbath-school the church has two mission Sabbath-schools among the miners in the coal fields of Lexington. Dr. Gordon's ministry has been chiefly directed to one purpose; to hold his congregation in closest touch with God's Word. His sermons have been largely expository work in the Scriptures; he has "emphatically preached the word" and declared the whole counsel of God; and has taught the people to depend upon the Holy Spirit alone for guidance, efficiency and power in all successful Christian work.

The Lexington church is not wealthy. Its membership not large. It has no reason to be ashamed of this record. Blessed as it is with an instructor in Bible truth not excelled in ability and faithfulness anywhere in the church it must continue to be useful in the Master's service. It is always a pleasure to listen to the exposition of God's Word by Dr. Gordon. He has been a great help to the writer. May the Lord spare him for many years to this people is their expressed wish and my ardent prayer! Xenophon Ryland.

Addendum.—As our Brother Gordon has been a good deal in the public eye of late, and as some brethren may perhaps imagine that he is chiefly a student and a scholar—and he is both—greatly interested in the understanding and interpretation of Scripture truth, doctrine and duty and in its proper "credal statement," but not a man of affairs and knowing little of the business side of church work, I wish first to endorse every word of the above. And then to add, that for 4 or 5 years Dr. Gordon has been Chairman of Home Missions in the largest Home Mission Presbytery of the Synod, covering fully a fourth of the State, and that, besides his writings and his manifold pastoral and pulpit duties, he has done an immense amount of work most thoroughly, efficiently and successfully in this department also. I know of no man who has a more level business head or who can do more or better work. He is a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed." G. L. L.

WASHINGTON.—Rev. G. L. Washburn has recently taken charge of two churches in St. Louis Presbytery, Newport and Bocuff, and also of the church at Washington, U. S. A. His address is Washington, Mo.

CARUTHERSVILLE.—Rev. A. F. Cunningham was ordained and installed pastor of this church on Sabbath, May 17, by a commission of Potosi Presbytery.

FARMINGTON.—Rev. C. E. Hickey, who has been serving this church as stated supply for a year, has been unanimously elected pastor with an increase of salary.

The pastor and session of the Farmington Church has undertaken to carry on, for the time at least, a very interesting work among the miners in the Flat River district, distant some 10 or 12 miles.

Conferences for Leaders.

Place—Conferences for Leaders in Sunday-schools and Young People's Societies will be held under the auspices of the Young People's Missionary Movement on Lookout Mountain, Tennessee, July 1-8, 1903, and at Silver Bay, La. George, July 22-31, 1903.

Purpose—The purpose of these Conferences is to enable denominational Missionary Secretaries and leaders in Sunday-school and Young People's work to spend a week or more in unhurried conference and prayer, outlining, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, a comprehensive plan of campaign for the ensuing year. The Conferences are also intended to be training schools for the better equipment of leaders in the work of local churches and Sunday-schools.

Program—The first hour of each day will be spent in devotional Bible study. This will be followed by an hour of conference concerning approved methods of work in Churches, Sunday-schools and Young People's societies. The third hour of the day will be given to mission study classes. The afternoons will be devoted largely to recreation with exceptional favorable environment. The evening hour will be occupied by an out of door vesper service followed by denominational group meetings, where denominational leaders and representatives may formulate plans for the work of the coming year in local churches and societies of their respective denominations.

Personnel—It is expected that the missionary secretaries and their official representatives of the leading Missionary Boards will be present. In addition to these, an invitation is extended to leaders and workers in National, State, District and local Sunday-school and Young People's organizations.

The Children's Mission Schools.

Dear Children and Sabbath-school Workers:

The most successful year of our Mission School work is just closing. On May 31, 1903, will occur the last fifth Sabbath that you will have opportunity to assist the Schools during this school term.

The following list shows what a splendid service has been rendered this year by these schools:

1. Durant Pres. College, Prof. E. Hotchkiss, Principal, with 7 teachers and 303 scholars.
2. Antlers—Rev. E. Brantley, Principal, 3 teachers and 242 scholars.
3. Cameron—Rev. W. S. Lacy, Principal, 3 teachers and 131 scholars.
4. Goodland—Mrs. J. P. Gibbons, Principal, 3 teachers and 122 scholars.
5. Shady Point—Mrs. Cora Lindsay, Principal, with 10 scholars.
6. Cold Spring—Mrs. Elizabeth Allison, Principal, with 60 scholars.
7. Wapanucka—Mrs. J. J. Read, Principal, with 11 scholars.
8. Bennington—Miss Leola Russell, Principal, about 40 scholars.

10. Caney—Rev. C. J. Ralston, Principal, about 40 scholars.
11. Tuli Hikia—Miss Mollie Francis, Principal, about 30 scholars.

This makes a total of 11 schools, 23 teachers and 1,211 scholars. Is there a more blessed work in which the Sabbath-school children can engage? Will you not take part in this noble educational work for Christ by contributing something on May 31st?

Forward offerings promptly to W. A. Powell, Atlanta, Ga. S. L. Morris, Sec'y Home Miss., Pres'n Ch., U. S.

Railroad Men's Religion.

The Conference of the Railroad Department of the Young Men's Christian Association which has just been held at To-

...a, Kas., brought together nearly fourteen hundred railroad employees. These men spent four days in the consideration of the problems touching the religious life of railroad men. Among those present were the leading railroad presidents, engineers, firemen, conductors, brakemen, car greasers and holders of railroad securities.

The Pennsylvania Company provided a special Pullman at the company's expense from Philadelphia to Topeka and return for the benefit of the employees of that company. The Great Western Railroad provided a special train for the entire distance from Kansas City to Topeka without charge. Both these companies recognized this to be a good thing to do for their men as well as good railroad sense.

The sessions of the conference were directed by Col. J. J. Cook, Attorney for the New York Central Railroad. President G. W. Stevens of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad was present in his private car and President H. G. Burt of the Union Pacific and President B. F. Yoakum of the Frisco Railroad was also in attendance.

A feature of the Conference was the laying of the corner stone for the new railroad Y. M. C. A. building at Topeka by President Roosevelt. The railroad company contributed twenty thousand dollars towards the erection of this building, which, when completed, will be one of the finest in the country. S. S. Magill.

Lees-MacRae Institute.

The Commencement of the Lees-MacRae Institute, embracing 10th, 11th, and 12th May, was a brilliant success "ab initio ad finem." The minister invited to preach the baccalaureate sermon at 11 a. m. Sabbath, filled his appointment punctually and faithfully.

The church was filled with an attentive congregation. The text was, "As we have therefore opportunity let us do good to all men especially unto them who are of the household of faith," Gal. 6:10. The honored young Bishop who is not "the husband of one wife" did not in that presence emphasize the "men" nor the "all men"; but with earnest words, burning logic and unctious delivery he "laid himself out" on the "opportunity" and the "doing good."

What it is not and what it is and the reasons therefore, etc. The sermon was about fifty minutes long, but did not seem more than twenty. The brother who discoursed Sunday night, being an elder, Bishop and one who is "the husband of one wife" and the father of another delivered by request a practical address to the students.

He took the bold position that Woman's main business in life is to be the "help meet" of man for "the man was not created for the woman but the woman for the man." Therefore her training, education, etc., from her youth should be mainly to prepare her for an intelligent and efficient time-maker and home-keeper. You will perhaps not be surprised to learn that in less than twenty-four hours after the aforesaid bishop had ended his address he was vigorously attacked by one of the fair teachers of the Institution. He is still alive, however, and "may live to fight another day." There were several addresses, extempore talks, remarks, etc., made during the commencement by visiting friends. But of all these the address of the above mentioned young bishop Tuesday morning on the origin, progress and chief end of the Westminster shorter catechism just simply "capped the climax." It was very interesting not only to hear, but to catch the expressions of surprise, astonishment, bewilderment, depicted in the countenances of our diverse friends of other churches, while the speaker set forth the unique and stupendous facts connected with the place, the personnel, the times and gradual production of this marvelous compendium of Christian doctrine as to what "we should believe concerning God and what duty God requires of man."

At the close of this instructive address nineteen girls and one boy came forward to receive each a Bible and diploma for having recited perfectly during the year the shorter catechism. Six young children also were presented with each a New Testament for having recited correctly the child's catechism. I will venture the statement that there is not another Sabbath School Mission school in our whole Synod in which such a large proportion of its pupils have made such commendable progress in the study of our Catechisms. To one who for a number of years has seen and heard and taken knowledge of these mountain children in their homes and elsewhere—the charge in personal appearance—in tidiness of dress—in courtesy of speech and in gracefulness of manners—manifested in the pupils of this institution is most delightfully amazing. In addition to the awards made to the most successful students on the catechisms, there were four other prizes given. Mrs. Edgar Tufts offered a gold medal for the best essay. Rev. J. P. Hall offered a medal of some precious metal for the greatest progress in music. The school offered a large unabridged dictionary for the best Latin student in the senior class. Mrs. Cone of Blowing Rock, offered a five dollar gold piece for the best loaf of bread prepared and baked by one of the students. Miss Bessie Ingram won the essay medal. Master Robert Barr secured the music prize. The Latin medal was awarded to two sisters from Yancy county whose names I can't recall. The closest and most exciting contest was for the "bread" prize. Eleven of the girls entered this contest and therefore eleven beautiful loaves of toothsome bread were on public exhibition Monday morning. They were inspected and sampled by many of the visiting friends and referred finally to a committee consisting of three experts, two expert makers and one expert bread eater, (your correspondent was both surprised and disappointed that he was not chosen as the last named committeeman). After thorough examination by sight and touch and smell and taste the committee, with much difficulty, decided in favor of Miss Hattie Goforth.

The exercises of the pupils Monday night were speeches, orations, dialogues and recitations, interspersed occasionally with music, vocal or instrumental.

All of these exercises gave evidence of faithful and diligent work on the part of all the teachers of the institution.

Quite a few years ago our church had no school property at Banner Elk. But the land and buildings now owned for Christian school work aggregate about $6,000; all paid for except about $350, needed to finish the last building mentioned above. C. A. M.

He tears aside Life's thin disguise.
And man's true greatness, all unknown,
Stands clear before our eyes."

CURRIE.—Margarett B. Currie, May 16, 1903. She was a member of Shiloh Presbyterian Church aged sixty-nine years.

A large number of friends and relatives attended the funeral services. It is their privilege to sorrow not as those who have no hope, "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Again God is saying to us all, "Be ye also ready."

SHAW.—Duncan R. Shaw, who departed this life March 27, 1903, was born March 20, 1822 in Cumberland county. A few years after his birth, his parents moved to Moore county and settled near Bethesda Church where our departed brother spent the whole of his life.

He united with Bethesda Church under the ministry of the Rev. Archabald Smith, D. D., and for more than a half century was a regular attendant upon public service.

Bro. Shaw was venerated and honored by the congregation with which he worshipped, and loved and trusted by the community in which he lived. The host of loving friends who visited his home from day to day to inquire of his condition in his illness, bespeak for him a life of high esteem.

To the sorrowing wife and bereaved children, the congregation and community extend a deep sympathy and commend them to the grace of God who does all things well. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose" Rom 8:28.

T. F. Haney.

Lee Gilmer Wharton was born in the present limits of the City of Greensboro, N. C., on the 30th day of May, 1873. His parents, both of whom survive him, are Jesse R. Wharton and Mary Rankin Wharton, a union of two of the oldest and most substantial families of Guilford County. The Whartons and Rankins have for more than a hundred years been distinguished in Presbyterian councils, having furnished probably more Presbyterian preachers and elders than any other two families in the State, and there is hardly a State in the South where their representatives do not now reside. The subject of this sketch was therefore blessed in having a Godly ancestry, and inherited the sturdy qualities for which the two families had been distinguished for generations. He was raised on his father's farm along with his brothers, Rev. T. A. Wharton, Henry W. Wharton, Earnest R. Wharton and Robert H. Wharton, and while ample time was given for education and all manly sports, their father wisely taught them to work and to know the value of time and money. After finishing his education, he went into business with his brother, Henry, and rapidly developed into a careful, energetic and successful business man, and before his death he saw the business, started at first on a small scale, grow into one of the best and most successful in the City.

When a boy of sixteen years he joined the First Presbyterian Church, and at an early age took the greatest interest in its work. He became specially active in the Sunday-school and in the Christian Endeavor, and was faithful to every trust committed to him. On July 4th, 1897, while still almost a boy in years, the congregation called him to the office of deacon, and about three years later, in March, 1900, he was elected a ruling elder. He was frequently put on committees requiring hard work and tact, and always cheerfully undertook the task put upon him.

THE OLD RELIABLE

POWDER

Absolutely Pure

THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE

He was of a remarkably sweet disposition, and we do not know of an enemy he ever had. He was unobtrusive, modest and as gentle as a woman, and yet he was anything but effeminate. He had the courage of his convictions, and held to them tenaciously and could say no when the occasion required as firmly as any one we have known. He excelled in many of the sports where manly strength and endurance are required. He was always a courteous gentleman in the true sense of that word, and he never failed to respect the rights and feelings of others. He was one of the most congenial men it has ever been our good fortune to know, and if he had any vices we have never known of them. He was liked by all that knew him, and, as may well be imagined, the influence for good of such a life, especially on young men, was unbounded.

About one year ago his health began to fail, and he continued to grow weaker until his death on the 8th day of March, 1903. He endured his suffering with the greatest patience, and without complaining though he had long prayed that his end might be peaceful and free from pain. His prayer was answered. He fell asleep as quietly and sweetly as a child.

He died in the full bloom of young manhood, in the midst of his success with years of usefulness and service behind him, and we had thought with long life of Christian work ahead of him. The Session realizes only too well the great loss it has sustained in the death of this beloved young elder. The Church has lost one of its most useful members and the State one of its best citizens. The bereaved family has our most heartfelt sympathy and prayers, and we commend them to the God of all comfort.

And it is resolved that a copy of this paper be sent them as a slight token of our love for our beloved brother in Christ and a copy be spread upon the minutes of Session, and that it be published in the Presbyterian Standard in the hope that a truthful record of such a life may be an inspiration to others.

Floral Notes

February is a good time to start pansy for early blooming.

Put back oleanders early in spring are starting into growth.

Grouping house plants will revive if sprinkled with camphor water.

Plant gladiolus bulbs early, as soon as the frost is out of the ground.

This is a good time to take heliotrope cuttings for your flower garden in the summer.

All things considered, the Virginia creeper is the best climber for shading porches.

Do not forget to plant a few dahlias about the middle of March; then the plants will bloom this year.

Polihocks can be made to bloom the next year if the seeds are planted now in boxes and transplanted later on.

Bring your fuchsias up from the cellar. Cut back old plants, and cuttings may be taken from plants that are well grown.

A little lime water occasionally will keep your pot and other plants, at the same time it will kill all angle worms in the soil.

Sweet peas can be started in a cool place in the house and transplanted outdoors as soon as the ground is ready. They perhaps hasten bloom somewhat.

Put branches of the lilac and other woody shrub, or fruit or wood's tree, bring them in the house and place in water in the living room; they will burst into bloom.

Canary bird vine is a good annual summer. It is very easy of culture, and profuse bloomer; its pale green, fine foliage and yellow fringed blossoms are very attractive.

Unless your rubber plant is growing it do not give much water. Keep the leaves free from dust, and give fresh water frequently. Do not place in full sunlight, but do not keep it in much shade. Aim to have the temperature about seventy degrees.

February is a good time to start verbenas seed. A light rich soil is required. Verbenas growing thriftily can use considerable water, and they should be in full sunlight. Pinching in the ends of the shoots in the early stages of growth causes the plants to branch freely. When sowing is left until late in spring should not then be attempted, but cuttings can be procured at small cost. Exchange.

Rev. W. R. Lambuth, D. D., Secretary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who has recently returned from Cuba, will give an address on "Cuba as a mission field" at Lookout Mountain Missionary Conference.

Rev. A. L. Phillips, D. D., Secretary of the Board of Publication and Sabbath-school Work of the Presbyterian Church, South, will conduct a class on Home Missions at the Conference for Missionary Leaders on Lookout Mountain, Tenn., and at Silver Bay, New York, in July.

The Home Circle.

Angels Unawares.

By Elizabeth Mortou Johnston.

Farmer Willis was taking his accustomed after-dinner stroll. His face brightened as he viewed the fields of waving grain now ripe for the harvest. The rich dark green of the slender young corn, bending gracefully with the breeze, blended harmoniously with the golden hues of the ripening grain. He has reached the end of the lane, and as if in reverence for the peace and harmony of nature, stands with bared head, looking from the east to the west, "the proud Monarch of all he surveys." His eyes rest lovingly on the stately old brick house which has been the home of his father and his father's father.

With a feeling of pride he gazes, and for the hundredth time that morning congratulated himself that he has never parted with one acre of the old plantation. Suddenly, in the midst of his musings, he is accosted by two of the most uncouth specimens of African progeny, that ever met man's gaze. The elder, a stout boy of about seventeen, dressed in an old Confederate uniform, advances, and with much stammering and hesitation addresses the astonished farmer with these words, "Me and Johnny gwine wuk fer yon." Having recovered his composure to some extent the farmer inquired their names, asked them the necessary questions as to their ability to plow, cut wood, etc. To all his inquiries he was answered in the most decided affirmative by Johnny. Then the trio marched in silence homeward. Arrived there the farmer leads the way into a massive kitchen and having ordered a supply of bread, meat, and potatoes, sits down with an air of satisfaction, mentally observing that the boys' capacity in one direction at least is not to be despised. At last Will, having diligently applied himself to the pleasant task imposed upon him by the generous farmer, arises and declares that he has "got bout enough," but Johnny, having evidently had instilled into his mind one Biblical principle, does not cease until he has gathered up the last fragment and is assured that nothing may be lost. Then the farmer rises and beckoning to the boys leads the way to the barn, "Now Will," he said, "take one of the horses and ride to the office and get my mail. You Johnny, take the black mule to the shop and have him shod." "All right sir," came from the abysmal depths of the husky throats. Amused and a little doubtful in regard to his new friends the farmer walks leisurely toward the house. In the sitting room he is greeted by a chorus of eager questions. Hans, a scholarly looking boy of seventeen, looks up as his father enters. "Father," said he, "there were some typical Africans here a few moments ago. I could have sworn one of them was the 'missing link.' They wanted work, but I told them you had engaged your hands, then Tom told them where you were. He actually became very much interested in them and I could hardly tear him away. He declares he could train them for a circus."

The farmer loved his children and indulged them to the extent that the neighbors prophesied, "they would all be so stuck up they couldn't see their shoes," but their forebodings gave way when Jack, the eldest, after four years abroad, on the very day of his arrival home had mounted his horse and ridden to the home of each old neighbor carrying with him some token of his remembrance and love.

In due time Will and Johnny returned and the farmer's relief was great. "Well, Will," said he, "did you bring me much mail?"

"Never got no mail, never seen none to get, I seen a student walking long had snmpen look like mail and I says, 'Gimme Mr. Willis' mail and he look like a fool and turned round and says, 'you gits mail at the Post Office, I knowed nothin' bout dat so I come home.

"Well, Will," said the farmer, "that will do, put the horse up, eat your supper and go home." The big eyes-opened wider, the thick lips parted but seemed powerless to form aught but the accustomed reply, "All right sir." And now Johnny rode up. "Well, Johnny," said the crestfallen farmer, "you got him shod did you?" "No sir, I never seed no body looked like dey knowed how to shoe a horse. I seen one boy and told him I show would like to git the mule shooed," and he says, "Gimme your hammer and nails." I says, "Mr. Willis orter sent his hammer and nails, den I come home," and breaking into a loud laugh he trotted off on the limping mule, before the chagrined farmer could regain his composure. In due time the boys came into supper. Will had already begun to cast sheepish eyes of admiration at the trim yellow girl who reigned supreme in the kitchen. With wonderful tact, day by day, she managed to impose new tasks on her ever willing selves, and as a recompense for their services at night as the three sat out on the little back porch, she read to them alternately, from "Jack the Giant killer," and the "Shorter Catechism." Lulled by the monotonous spelling out of the words, first one head after the other would nod, till finally the reader herself having come to the limit of her familiarity would likewise doze to be recalled by the loud mewling of a hungry cat, whose supper she had forgotten, or by the merry laugh of little Jim, the spoiled darling of the house.

Time passed on and autumn came. Very reluctantly, one by one the boys and girls returned to their college duties. The farmer generously continued to give employment to the boys, overlooking their many blunders, which were always of the head and not of the heart. He taught them patiently and noted with pleasure the thoroughness of their work. Their affection grew into devotion utterly unlooked for from such sources. Their love for little Jim was almost pathetic. Never were they too tired to dismount at his command and hold the little fellow on for a ride while one or the other would walk by his side and listen with sincere pride and pleasure to his prattling questions.

The eighth of December dawned bright and clear, and in all the dignity of six years Jim arose early to have a birthday. Late in the afternoon he missed from the home. A servant sent to the fields to search for him, no sight of the familiar little figure gladdened the eyes of the distressed parents. Will and Johnny were sent out to alarm the neighborhood, and search began at once. Men and boys alike sprang into their saddles and galloped off in all directions, and from each heart went up a prayer for the little favorite. Johnny and Willie, for once moved out of their state of placid indifference, wide-eyed and excited started off on foot. Instinctively they turned their course toward the little hut, where so often they had carried their little master to get some of Mammy's "luscious cake." "Hits near train time but I go on de railroad no how Will," said one with one accord they started up the track. Suddenly Will gave a wild whoop of delight exclaiming "Lord Johnny dar is de chile er setting midway of trestle. Run nigger and lessen we do have time fo' the train come you git dis track and run down dar and stay de creek under de trestle and I'll pit dat chile to you." A shrill whistle put an end to Will's command and was enough for the figure of Johnny was just disappearing beneath the bank. At the end of the trestle for an instant Will paused, a kind of calculation going on in the dull brain, his life or the child Jim sees him and claps his hands joyfully. "Wait dar, honey, Will gwine come and fetch yon home on his back." Set right still." The train was now plainly visible. In a moment more it would be on the trestle. With three quick leaps Will had reached Jim's side, in a moment more he snatched him in his arms "Look out nigger," he screamed, "catch dis child."

Johnny was ready below and in his outstretched arms the little fellow was soon safely encircled. Will turned dizzy the conductor sees him, but alas! too late. In a moment more a soul is in eternity, on the track a mangled body floating on the water below the tattered fragments of an old Confederate uniform and the train rolled on.

Surely never a soldier more worthily wore the gray.

The Life and Best Works of Emerson

On the twenty-fifth day of this month the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Ralph Waldo Emerson was celebrated at Concord, Massachusetts, where he spent the greater part of his life; in Boston, where he was born; and in many places throughout the country which he loved so deeply and served so well.

The poet, philosopher and essayist was born in a parsonage in what was then a little provincial city; was educated at a small college which has since become a great university; entered the Unitarian ministry, and retired from it after a brief experience as a pulpit teacher; settled in the little town with which his ancestors had been associated, and, with the exception of three journeys to Europe, remained there until the end, writing books and delivering lectures.

He was in no sense a recluse, but I

"the quiet life" as simply and ly as any man of his time. Reputa- came to him early, but it was not ral for many years. He lived in its later as simply as he had lived in erty. He read widely, knew litera- in several languages, was familiar the older thought of the East and the younger thought of the West with the younger thought of Europe; he believed that each age must do its thinking, write its own books, and its own life. He believed profoundly e divinity of man; in the right of man to have a personal relation God, and in the equality which access to the Infinite establishes an indestructible basis. He was, efore, an American of the Americans is faith in free government, in free ols, in open libraries, in the widest rtunities for education and growth. him America meant Opportunity. rejoiced in the simplicity of Ameri- life, in the democracy of American ety. He was the most eloquent cher of self-reliance we have had. was not afraid of commercial pros- ty and he took delight in the work- power of the country; but he insisted keeping the things made with the ds in subjection to the things made he spirit, in keeping the soul free a bondage to conventions or to the eus and cares which come with th, in placing civic greatness above tical success, and in the duty of the ublic to give the world a new kind plomacy and a new example of nish ublic life.

Emerson's most characteristic works his poems, his essays, "Representa- Men," "Nature," "Society and Soli-," and his occasional addresses. was not a great poet in the range of thought or the perfection of his art, he has left a few poems descriptive terpretive of Nature on her more erions or symbolic sides which have ace of their own by reason of their ght, their sense of the unity of gs, their pure and spiritual beauty. he occasional addresses, spoken ly to young men and on college sions, Emerson presented the ideal- ception of life with noble nry and a quiet and persuasive confi- e, expressed not only in his words also in the serenity of his bearing in the rare beauty of his expression. was a winning speaker; his voice singularly expressive of his thought, he bore himself like one who came a higher and purer world than ours. message to young men was a simple as all really deep and noble mes- sages must be; follow the highest things utely; believe in the best that is in "hitch your wagon to a star"; trust yourself; live your own life; keep your- unspotted from the world. How his s contain his philosophy of life and his confession of faith, his view of cracy, his thought about hman ions, occupations, resources, pleas- in a style which seems obscure at s because the results of thinking r than its processes are presented, which is, at its best, marvelously le, sincere and beautiful.

The essays are full of passages of that kind of eloquence which is the matching of great thoughts with great words. He belongs, with Hawthorne and Poe, in the front rank of American writers; and in range, insight, spiritually, he is our foremost man of letters. The best books about him are the Memoir, by Mr. J. E. Cabot; the shorter biography in the American Men of Letters Series, by Oliver Wendell Holmes, and "Emerson in Concord," by Dr. Edward Waldon Emerson, his son; but real acquaintance with his pure and beautiful genius and life can be made only by acquaintance with his books. This country has given the world nothing finer; they ought to be in every American home and school. —Hamilton W. Mabie, in May Ladies' Home Journal.

Chapter VII.

Jack Dysart, thus suddenly "brought to" stopped and stared around him. He stood in the midst of three sinister looking individuals, in nondescript garments. They might be Yankees, Rebels, bush-whackers, anything; but of one thing the boy was sure—he was in the hands of desperate and hardened men: so he stood still with beating heart, wondering what would come next.

The man who held him prisoner gave him a shake, "Now then, where's them horses?" he growled. "Horses?" repeated Jack, inquiringly. Another shake. "No lies now, 'twont do no good: you know you've been out to feed them horses your folks is got hid; tell us where they are and you may go." "And if you don't, Good-bye," chimed in another. "That's the ticket," exclaimed the third. "But I haven't been to feed any horses," replied Jack, "and know nothing about any."

The first man released his hold to hold up an admonishing finger. "Now young feller," he said, "I'm going to tell you once and for all how 'tis. Me and my friends here are in a hurry, for reasons that no ways consarn you, and we need them hosses, and if you'll show us where they are you may go free; if you don't we'll tie you to a tree, and shoot you like a dog, so help me!" There was a growl of assent from the other two, and as the boy's eyes glanced from one to another, he read his doom in their faces. What to do he did not know: if he cried out, Tom would probably hear and come to his aid, to be shot down, after which his other friends would most likely be murdered too. No, he would not shout and he could not get away. There was nothing to be done.

"I have told you the truth," he answered quietly—perhaps after all the men were merely trying to frighten him. He was soon undeceived. No sooner were the words spoken than he found himself seized and placed with his back to a tree: a dirty cord was produced to bind him. "Ain't we going to try stringing him up a little, first?" asked one.

"I tell you the ain't no time," snarled the leader. If we can't get them horses quick, we got to silence him, so he can't tell no tales and get on, and hunt some elsewhere."

"Now, you're talking," cried the next. "Ready there," and three pistols were pointed at the slight form with its white face and blazing eyes, which fronted them so bravely. The young heart was beating as if would burst. Jack felt as if they must be able to see its throbbing, so as to know where to aim: but he never thought of crying out or begging for mercy.

"Want to say any prayers? Got any last words, Youngster?" sneered one. Jack closed his lips tightly. No need they should know the petition rising from his agonized spirit that he "might be a good soldier, and that God would bless."

The rough voice recalled him. "Once more and for the last time will you give up them horses."

"Didn't I tell you I've got no horses?" flashed back the boy, in desperation.

With a terrible oath the outlaw raised his weapon to fire, when a new voice called out, "Halt there," and the boy stared bewildered at a body of men on horseback, who, advancing at a sweeping gait, had unexpectedly surrounded his tormentors.

The new comers were in full uniforms of gray with broad hats ornamented with black plumes. They were well mounted and equipped. Jack knew them at once, for the famous "Stono Scouts:" and the officers at their head for a personal friend of his father. "Capt. Walpole," cried in a quivering voice, "its me, Jack Dysart, save me," and then he fainted away.

When a few minutes later he came to himself he was lying on the ground with somebody's coat under his head, and the men in gray were tying the last knots in the ropes which secured their prisoners' hands behind their backs.

So complete had been the surprise that not a shot had been fired: the strangers had been knocked down and searched, their pistols being examined were found loaded with ball; their pockets were filled with plunder, rings brooches watches, teaspoons and valuables of all sorts.

No sooner had Jack's eyes opened than Capt. Walpole accosted him: "Now, then Jack if you're better, look sharp son, and tell us what these scoundrels were up to, as far as you were concerned. We have learned a good part of their past history already," with a smile under his black moustache that augured ill for evil-doers.

"We weren't going to hurt the boy," muttered one of them; but the Captain gave no heed; only nodded to Jack who told his story in his own laconic fashion.

Capt. Walpole listened without comment or question, and at its conclusion merely gave an order to the troop: "Ready there, all, forward, march!"

In a moment the troop was in the saddle, the prisoners walking in the center. It was now their turn to look white. Jack left standing, gazed after them as in a dream. He could not comprehend what was to be done with the prisoners, or why Capt. Walpole should leave him without a word.

Before he had collected his scattered senses he heard the sound of returning hoofs, and there were the scouts once more, but no prisoners. Where could they be?

The captain checked his horse. "You'll be safe now Jack, I think," he said. "I believe you told me you had not far to go. Only to the next plantation? Then goodbye, we have more to do. Tell your father, his youngest son is a brave soldier." And they were off leaving him still bewildered, pondering, as he sped at last on his way what they could have done with those men.

He thought of the stern, set faces of the scouts as their captain said, "We have more to do!" What was it they

He had heard that these is constituted the only protection of istricts that had been over run, that administered speedy justice to rob- and outlaws, and now he understood his would-be murderers had been hted and dropped, bound as they into that swollen and maddened r. It was part of their terrible day's k. Jack shuddered: he seemed to see still despairing looks those condemned men east on him as they passed to meet r fate, and all his fear and anger forgotten at the thought of their arable end. et a turn of the road gave his ideas w direction. He had almost neared residence of Dr. Moss, and Annie Felicia two little daughters of the tor, hand in hand were coming ly towards him, and uttered a joyous at seeing him. Trying to find something to eat," Annie simply, then as Jack opened mouth for a question she sat down in road and began to cry. Felicia stood helplessly, the tears rolling down her ks. "It's so," she said. "O, Jack, dreadful to be hungry and have noth- to eat! I never"—here she broke n too. There was a lump in the s throat, which alarmed him,—a e more and he. Jack Dysart, would crying too,—so he said abruptly, here's your father? I must have him ome medicine for a sick man and I've such a time on the way, may be dead by now." I remember," said Jack grinning, pa took him in the study and prayed him,—the old wretch, he needed it, then all the folks in the house helped . Well," pursued Annie, "afterwards scouts caught him, they took off his , and rubbed off his false wrinkles, then searched him. His old coat was ally lined with money,—Confederate greenbacks, and the lists were in his -book. Papa's name was on the k list, marked with double crosses to w that he was rich and working for government. "But," began Jack— d," shaking her head, "of course we are not rich, but the negroes had said we were, and so we could not convince them: they thought we were living in this plain house to deceive them and that our real home was somewhere else—so they were mad, and stripped us of every- thing, even the last morsel. They tied up the last bit of meal in the baby's last dress and carried it off, and we never tasted food from Friday morning until Sunday. Then as they had gone we stole out and found some grits where they had fed their horses, and we cooked and ate that; Jack, then was so little that we dared not even wash it; the next day we found a few small sweet potatoes, but we were still so hungry that we were starting out to look for something more, when you met us that morning." "Yes," cried Felicia, "and you asked about Jenny Lind and we couldn't bear to tell. "I heard about it afterwards," said Jack, "how they hitched that beauti- ful horse to the buggy, loaded it with all the meat in the smoke-house and set it on fire—the cruel beasts!" "She ran a mile," said Felicia and then plunged into the river. How glad we were when we knew her suffering as over. But we had enough else to think of: the Yankees swarmed all over our house for two days and nights, breaking and spoiling everything they could—oh, it was a good thing Papa was too lame to get up. He would have tried to fight and been killed." "When that man pointed his gun at Mama," struck in Annie, "he dragged himself around, asking the rest to tell him that one's name so that he could find him afterwards, but they only laughed. Then when they went away you know they left us nothing!" Yes, Jack remembered well the scene on that miserable morning.

Children's Letters.

Belmont, N. C., May 9, 1903.

Dear Standard:

I have a cousin boarding here and going to school to my sister. I have two brothers. The oldest one is in far-a-way Montana. He left home the first of January and said he would not be home until the first of next year. I will be so glad to see him. The other one is a senior at the North Carolina M. C. One of my sisters, Maggie, has gone to attend commencement. I have no pets, except a flock of little chickens. When I go into the poultry yard they fly upon my head and shoulders and they will eat from my hand.

We have no pastor now. We attend church at McLean's chapel. I have recited the child's catechism. I am now learning the shorter catechism. I live near the bank of the Catawba near the South Carolina line. With best wishes for the Standard, I am,

Your little friend,

Nell McLean.

Red Springs, N. C., May 11.

Dear Standard:

I am going to school at Red Springs Seminary. I stay at Grandpa Conoly's. We have 43 scholars in the primary room. Miss McFadyen is one of my teachers. I like her very much. The commencement will be from the 17th to the 20th. Governor Aycock will speak on Wednesday. I have four little brothers. One of them is going to school at Antioch. With best wishes, I am

Dear Standard:

I have never made no attempt to write to you. I will try and write to-day. I have been hoeing corn. But rather plow than hoe. I can do most anything that Papa can. I have no pets only a little dog; his name is Jess. I am not going to school now. But I go to Sunday-school. Most every Sunday at Dallas. My teacher is Miss Carrie Puett. We all like her fine. I like to live out in the country. It is so nice and pleasant. Mama has raised about 75 little chickens this year. I believe I will close for this time, hoping to see my letter in print.

There are so many pretty flowers on the hill. We have a nice time gathering flowers of all kinds. When our friends

The Juice of Lemon Will Prevent Typhoid.

IF THE JUICE OF THE SOUR FRUIT IS USED.
DOCTORS DECLARE IT WILL KILL TYPHOID GERMS.

New York, Dec. 31.—Dr. Ernest G. Ledele, president of the health department, referring to the discovery said to have been made recently in England that lemon juice would kill typhoid germs in water and to have been proved by experiments in Chicago, says he knows these experiments have been tried often before and that many physicians treat their typhoid patients with lemon juice.

"I haven't made any experiments myself but I am sure that lemon juice in water will kill germs if enough is used. Orange juice will kill germs if enough is used. Orange juice will do the same thing, and, in fact, we have been feeding patients that right along. There is nothing new in this discovery of lemon juice. It takes more orange juice than lemon juice, because the former has not so much citric acid in it and yet it is a powerful neutralizer. There is no doubt that acid will kill typhoid germs."

is a perfect liquid laxative, made from the juice of choice lemons, the medicinal value of which is recognized everywhere. It is pleasant to take and acts gently but thoroughly. It regulates the bowels and keeps the system free from all impurities, thus enabling it to resist fever and other dangerous diseases. # THIRTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE WITH BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

The Use of Buffalo Lithia Water in the Clinique.

Dr. E. C. LAIRD, formerly of Haw River, N. C., now Resident Physician Hot Springs, N. C.

To the Editors of the New York Medical Times:

I want to state to your readers some of my experience with BUFFALO LITHIA WATER, covering a period of more than thirty years, since my first visit to those now far-famed springs. Each year of my professional life I have used these waters more and more extensively, finding their virtues applicable to a wider range of diseases.

I am thoroughly convinced of the correctness of the views expressed so well by Dr.
 Hunter McGuire, in the following words, when speaking of the waters of the Buffalo Lithia Springs: "I know from constant use of it personally, and in my practice, that the results obtained from its use are far beyond those which would be warranted by the analysis given. I am of the opinion that it either contains some wonderful remedial agent, as yet undiscovered by medical science, or its elements are so delicately combined in Nature's laboratory, that they defy the utmost skill of the chemist to solve the secret of their power."

I have often and repeatedly prescribed the various preparations of lithia and potash, but am thoroughly convinced that the results obtained from the pure BUFFALO LITHIA WATER are far superior.

I have frequently heard Prof. Wm. T. Howard, declare, before his class in the University of Maryland, THAT HE HAD SEEN MORE AND GREATER BENEFIT DERIVED FROM BUFFALO LITHIA WATER THAN FROM ANY OTHER KNOWN MINERAL WATER.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER Spring No. 1, is unexcelled as an appetizer and promoter of digestion in all forms of dyspeptic trouble affecting the whole, or any part of the alimentary tract.

Physicians and patients all testify to its virtues as a powerful restorative of the broken down or enfeebled system, whether resulting from overwork, worry or disease. It acts directly in producing a better quality of blood, and invigorating and toning up the nervous system generally. Its aphrodisiac properties are very distinctly shown in many cases each year.

As an alkaline diuretic and HEART TONIC, it has proved most efficacious and certain.

In the various forms of LITHAEMIA it is especially effective and happy in its action.
HEPATIC disorders, whether of GOUTY or MALARIAL origin and attended with JAUNDICE or BILIARY CALCULI, yield to the action of this Water like magic.

In many cases of DIABETES I have seen most gratifying results from its use.
DISEASES PECULIAR TO WOMEN, AMENORRHOEA, MEMORRHAGIA, DYSMENORRHOEA, are each regulated and adjusted in a wonderful degree by these waters. Especially is this the case with young and anemic girls just entering into womanhood.

GOUT, RHEUMATISM and ALL URIC ACID troubles are markedly relieved by Nos. BUFFALO LITHIA WATER. "I have now under treatment a 1 and 2 most interesting case of "SENILE or GOUTY HEART," in which my patient is comparatively comfortable, and often able to attend to large business interests, so long as he is fully under the influence of these waters, but to suspend their use for even one day so intensifies all of his symptoms of failing circulation, as to utterly prostrate him.

As a solvent and ELIMINATOR of PHOSPHATIC or URIC ACID GRAVEL, these waters have never failed me. I have often placed GRAVEL in the fresh water, and to hasten the disintegrating process, changed the water a few times, when the gravel would first become "honey combed," and then break down into fine sand. It is this action on LARGE STONE in the KIDNEY, BLADDER or GALL BLADDER that causes the continued outpouring of small particles, so often, for days or weeks, with the ultimate complete relief of all those distressing symptoms from which the poor sufferer has so long complained, and sought relief in vain from "many physicians."
 Under the in- No. 2, I knew a patient to fluence of BUFFALO LITHIA WATER, PASS SIXTY-EIGHT CAL- CULI in one day, following an attack of NEPHRITIC COLIC. Another patient (a lady) after a severe attack of HEPATIC COLIC passed ten gall stones in one night, at once experiencing entire relief from most distressing symptoms, from which she had suffered for months.

CYSTITIS and URETHRITIS, simple or gonorrhoeal, often yield to the healing influence of these waters, at once, when other and standard remedies have failed completely.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE in every stage and form, is benefited by these waters.
 In many cases large amounts of ALBUMEN, EPITHELIUM HYALINE and GRANU- LAR CASTS entirely disappeared from the urine, while in those whose kidneys are too far gone to hope for permanent benefit, all those distressing symptoms are ameliorated in an astonishing degree.

In NEPHRITIS following SCARLET FEVER, the action of these waters is especially gratifying. I invariably BUFFALO LITHIA WATER as soon as the put my scarlet fever patients on disease is suspected, and have yet to see any kidney trouble follow where this has been done.

In the NAUSEA and VOMITING, URÆMIC POISONING and ALBUMINURIA of PREGNANCY, I know of BUFFALO LITHIA WATER. So uniformly nothing to compare with gratifying has been my experience with this agent, that it has long been my habit to prescribe it as a prophylactic, as well as most potent remedy through all the stages of GESTA- TION.

My object in this letter is to lead my professional colleagues to think of this agent in cases where they have not before used it, with the belief that the experience will accord with my own, which covers so many years.
 Haw River, N. C., Feb. 7, 1896. Fraternalty yours, E. C. LAIRD, M. D.

need not expect much from me as I have never been to but very little school. I would have gone this season but my Ma has been sick in bed all of this year and she has no one to keep me in fix to go. I love to read the little children's letters in your good paper. Mr. Caligan is the preacher at Lumber Bridge and he is liked well. I have two brothers and one sister. The younger brother is two years old and the oldest, eleven. My sister, M. A. will be six next month. I love to attend to the chickens and feed the little bidies. I will tell how it was with the bidies that McD. of Big Rockfish spoke of about the hawk caught one out of five and kept five. The hawk dropped it and it came back. So I will say no more this time, hoping to see this in print.

Dear Standard:

As I have not seen any letters from Cherryville I thought I would write. I am a little girl eleven years old. I have two brothers; one is eight years old and the other one is three. Their names are Thomas and Earuest. I have two dolls. Their names are Julia and Bessie. Rev. J. J. Kennedy preached at our church last Sunday. He is blind. Our free school went out in March. The teacher's names were Mr. Rufus Carpenter and Miss Maud Torrence. I recited three lessons to Mr. Carpenter and one to Miss Torrence. Mama takes your nice paper. I enjoy reading the children's letters so much that I always turn to them first. Me and my oldest brother are learning the child's catechism. I will close by answering Minnie Torrence Stowe's question, It was Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. I will ask a question, How long did the waters prevail upon the earth?

Hampden-Sidney College

MEMORIAL HALL.

Born amid the throes of the Revolution, herself the offspring and titular representative of the struggle for civil and religious liberty, Hampden-Sidney College in the ancient commonwealth of Virginia after a century and a quarter of continuous usefulness, will enter upon her hundred and twenty-seventh session on Wednesday, the ninth of September next. A long line of presidents from Samuel Stanhope Smith to Richard McIlwaine, connects her with events remarkable in the history of the State and the nation, and her alumni, in every field of labor and honor, trained after her methods, have wrought no little part in the shaping of great republics.

Linked with a past that has been so fruitful of good, with wise conservatism she maintains the old curriculum as the basis of academic thoroughness, while meeting with prompt alertness, the demand for enlarged facilities in the Sciences and broader scope in every department of the work. Thus, at the option of the student, courses may be taken, leading up to degrees in the literary and scientific departments, or to preparation for business in the commercial. A library of sixteen thousand volumes, apparatus for instruction in Physics and well-equipped physical and chemical laboratories are among the main accessories to the various courses of study.

Withdrawn from the distractions of city life, yet in touch with all wholesome activities, the college forms the centre of a little community made up of families of culture and refinement. The site is commanding and picturesque, the country rolling and the whole section is famous for its salubrity. Hygienic arrangements leave nothing wanting to safe-guard the health of the students, and to the attractions of woods and fields in promoting out-door exercises have been added specially prepared athletic grounds and a well-furnished gymnasium. Upon the highest point of the campus stands the main dormitory building, an imposing pile erected seventy years ago. The lower central section of this, once the Chapel, is now fitted up as a gnasium, a lofty and spacious hall which is often utilized for social gatherings. Within a convenient distance eastward rises Memorial Hall, a lasting monument to the noble energy of President McIlwaine. In this are the New Chapel, the Lecture rooms and the Chemical Laboratory; under the mansard are the hall of the two literary societies, the Union and the Philanthropic. The Library Building Grecian in style is also a modern structure, with accommodations for many thousand volumes.

Thus situated, thus equipped, with the historic back-ground and the inspiring traditions, Hampden-Sidney offers exceptional advantages as a training school for youth, whether the preparation be for a subsequent university course, or for the diverse pursuits of non-professional men.

Farmville, seven miles distant, on the Norfolk and Western railroad, is the nearest town. With this, the college is connected by a macadam road, telephone and double daily mail.

Some Characteristics of College Life at Davidson

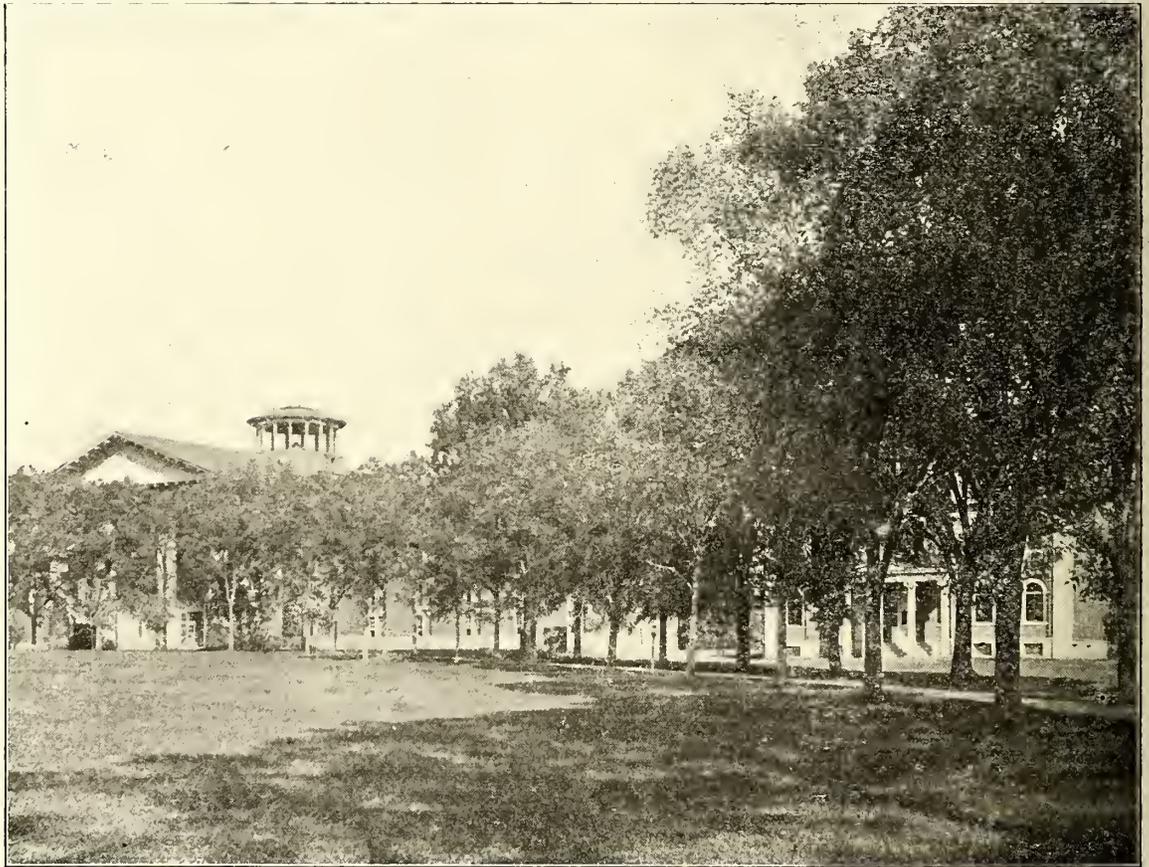

EVERY institution of learning develops in the course of years a definite individuality, often so marked as to impress even a casual visitor. Nearly all those acquainted with other colleges and universities, who learn to know familiarly student life at Davidson, assert that the "atmosphere" of the Davidson campus is unique. A traveling College Secretary of the International Y. M. C. A., after visiting four hundred other institutions of learning, spent several days and nights on the Davidson campus with the Davidson students. At the conclusion of his visit he told the writer that he had never met such a large number of young men. "If," said he, "the South knew what you have on this campus, there would be seven hundred students applying for matriculation at the opening of the next term." Similar testimonies could be added almost without limit. As the South ought to "know what can be found on the Davidson campus," let us enumerate a few of the special advantages possessed by Davidson College for the right training of young men.

1. The Select Patronage Enjoyed by Davidson, which is the envy and admiration of similar institutions. Its value cannot be over-estimated. Her students represent the flower of Southern Presbyterianism, coming from homes where culture and godliness have moulded for generations the family habits and ideals.

2. The Character and Attainments of the Faculty.—Of the eight full professors at Davidson, six are Ph. D's, four of Johns Hopkins and two of the University of Virginia. The seventh completed all his courses and examinations for the Doctorate at Johns Hopkins, but was called away before completing his thesis. The eighth is an ante-bellum M. A. of the University of Virginia. There is, so far as the writer can learn, not another College or University, North or South, three-fourths of whose Faculty (practically seven-eighths) are Doctors of Philosophy from such institutions, or, indeed, from any institution.

With one exception, all these Professors are young men, in full sympathy with the young men under their care. Several of them are trained athletes, and take active part in coaching the various college teams. Their social and official relations with the students are peculiarly cordial and friendly.

Every member of this Faculty was a professional teacher before obtaining his University degree, and each one is an active, conscientious Christian, of irreproachable life and character.

A CAMPUS VIEW—Showing Martin Laboratory and Chambers Building.

3. The thorough Study of the English Bible, which is required of all Students.—The Bible is the chief classic in the English language, the standard of literary beauty and sublimity, the basis of all Anglo-Saxon law, the inspiration of heroic souls in every age, and the Revelation to man of God's will, power, and love. No education is complete without a careful study of the Book of Books, and no one receives a diploma at Davidson who has not successfully completed a two year's course in the history, geography, prophecy, archæology, and ethics of the Holy Scriptures. A third year of advanced Biblical study is optional, but chosen by a large majority of the students. The teaching in this department is not a course of sermons, nor Sunday School lessons, nor theological discussions. The classes study the English literature; study Milton and Shakespeare. They are tested by the same rigid examinations, and must reach the same standard. For general culture and the formation of moral character, for personal uplift and inspiration, this course, as taught by Rev. J. B. Shearer, D. D., L. L. D., is of inestimable value.

4. Reinforcing all other moral and spiritual agencies in College life at Davidson is the privilege enjoyed by her students in spending these formative years under the daily pastoral care of Dr. A. T. Graham. The honored guest at all class fraternities, banquets, the genial companion of the boys at all social functions, and their favorite referee on the athletic field, their constant attendant in sickness, their warm personal friend and trusted adviser at all times—all who know Dr. Graham, and his work, unite in calling him "the ideal College pastor," and his place and work unique among institutions of learning.

5. All these causes have combined, especially of late years, to make the moral standards of the Davidson campus, and the spiritual life among her students, altogether exceptional. To those knowing the drift of modern College life, especially in the upper classes, away from the religion of our fathers, it may seem incredible that within the past year and a half, eight of the students, nearly all of them in the higher classes, not one of whom had such an intention upon entering College, have declared their intention of studying for the ministry, most of them having already placed themselves formally under the care of their respective Presbyteries. Yet such is the case, and to make it still more remarkable, there was no "revival" of any sort during the time mentioned, nor did any two of these young men, so far as the writer knows, make the decision in the same month. It is claimed that a young man cannot find evil companions at Davidson nor fall into bad habits, but for every one choosing evil courses, a score are inspired and uplifted by breathing the moral atmosphere of the campus and class-room.

AND then suppose that the Christian life, in its daily manifestation, should come to be marked and known by simplicity and happiness. Suppose that the followers of Jesus should really escape from bondage to the evil spirits of avarice and luxury which infect and torment so much of our complicated, tangled, artificial, modern life. ~ ~ Suppose they should truly find and clearly show their happiness in the knowledge that God loves them and Christ died for them and Heaven is sure, and so set their hearts free to rejoice in life's common mercies, the light of the sun, the blue of the sky, the splendor of the sea, the peace of the everlasting hills, the song of the birds, the sweetness of flowers, the refreshment of sleep, the charm of music, the blessings of human love and friendship—rejoice in all these without fear or misgiving, because they come from God and because Christ has sanctified them all by His presence and touch.

Suppose, I say, that such a revival of the joy of living in Christ and working for Christ should silently sweep over the Church in the Twentieth Century. What would happen? Great would be the peace of her children. Greater still would be their power.

Event and Comment.

Rev. R. J. Campbell, of the City Temple, London, evidently the attraction for Northfield this summer.

The Northern Assembly unanimously ratified the vote of the Presbyteries adopting the overtures which amend the Confession. The next Assembly meets in Buffalo.

The Biblical Recorder, commenting on the amended Confession of the Northern Church, says: "A live man revises his creed every morning." The editor of the Political Recorder is one of the liveliest men we know.

One of the blessings from the settlement of the Reunion controversy in the Northern Church is that The Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, can now speak of Henry D. Dyke's sermons in glowing terms of admiration.

We gather from some of our Baptist exchanges that the Savannah Convention was rather afraid to ventilate the facts about Diaz and the Cuban muddle. We have heard of a fellow to die as hard as the ex-missionary.

Both the Northern and the Cumberland Assemblies have adopted resolutions appointing standing committees on comity and union. The committee is the proved body for promoting wise and for killing unwise movements quietly.

Dr. Robert F. Coyle, the Moderator of the Northern Assembly, is a native of Ontario, Canada, and a graduate of Wabash College. He was pastor of the Fullerton Avenue Church, Chicago, before going to his present charge, the Central Church, Denver.

Circuit Attorney Folk persuaded several more of the "woodchoppers" to make a clean breast of it the other day. He has also declined the present of a house that his admirers wanted to give him. He is merely doing his duty. But if he does not mind he will be elected President some of these days.

The Congregationalist tells of a perpetual candidate for vacant churches who has had his four pages of testimonials printed to save the trouble of copying them. The perpetual candidate is a nuisance to be abated. He is mainly responsible for the impression a church sometimes gets of the place-hunting preacher.

Now that Mr. George Cadbury, the most eminent Quaker maker of England, has determined to endow a training school for Quaker preachers and even the Salvation Army is being exhorted to do the same thing, perhaps we shall not hear so much of the theory that the Holy Spirit can use an untrained intellect to better advantage than a disciplined mind.

We hope the quashing of the New Orleans overture, thinking that no amendments be made to the Confession of Faith, and the embarrassment resulting from an overture to do nothing, will prevent future obstructive overtures of this kind. We know how blue the atmosphere is about New Orleans and how much we love the old Confession. Nevertheless we need not be Bibliolaters.

The Diocese of West Missouri recently changed its own name to that of Kansas City and now wants the name of the Protestant Episcopal Church changed to the American Catholic Church in the United States. Napoleon said that the Holy Roman Empire was neither Holy nor Roman nor Empire. The Anglicans who are arguing for that name are neither American nor Catholic.

After a while it will be better for rich divorced people to hire a justice of the peace than to get a minister in trouble for tying a second knot. The Bishop of London has denounced the latest, possibly not the last, Vanderbilt re-marriage as a "moral scandal." He might have called it an immoral scandal. The Bishop says he will not visit the church in which the marriage took place, until amends are made.

The division that the Assembly has made of the Sunday-school and Publication Offices is probably a wise disposition of the matter. The Standard tried to prevent any electioneering for the office temporarily filled by Dr. Philipps and believes that it succeeded. Mr. Magill has proved himself a good man and certainly the Sunday-school work is enough for the mind and heart of any man.

The Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland proposes to change the declaration, "The immersion of believers is the only Christian baptism," into a little more liberal form, "Christian Baptism is the immersion in water of those who have professed repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ." That defines what Baptists believe without being so cock-sure that all the rest of the Christian world is wrong.

The family of a negro who was lynched in Ohio has recovered $5,000 from the county in which the lynching occurred. That is a good law for Southern States to adopt which are sometimes troubled with the same spirit of lawlessness. We are glad to note that since 1892 the number of lynchings has decreased, though there have been enough of them in all conscience, 1,872 negroes and 1,256 whites, 108 whites for the crime for which thirty-five per cent. of the negroes are lynched.

We learn from a published interview with Mr. W. P. Fife, who has lately gone into the mining-stock business, that it was after "entire nights spent in agonizing prayer to God" that he proceeded to organize the investment company of which he is president, and that the company "never makes any deal without invoking the blessing of the Almighty." After such an advertisement as that one must be skeptical indeed not to invest his money with the Fife Investment Company. The "drummer evangelist" has become an evangelistic drummer.

In Victoria, recently, there was a strike of railroad employes. The railroads are owned by the Government. The Government declared that the railroad employes, as public servants, had no right to enter labor organizations. When the strike began, the Parliament passed a law providing that any railroad employe who left his work without four days' notice would be subject to fine and imprisonment. That stopped the strike. The Postoffice officials never strike. Government ownership of public utilities may be a necessity some day.

Rev. Edward Abbott, D. D., of Cambridge, rector of St. James Parish, proposes to interpret that "canon" which has been quoted so often against the preaching of non-Episcopal ministers in Episcopal Churches, more liberally. He proposes to allow any baptized person to address any parish, the rector being present. That will do more toward church unity than the Lambeth Articles. It is no new thing in Virginia. Presbyterian ministers have preached in Episcopal pulpits in Lexington in the last few days. The Bishop of Massachusetts consents to the plan, and we suppose The Living Church will attribute it to the pestiferous influence of Phillips Brooks.

Still the Protestant Episcopal Church.

It is with sincere pleasure that we have watched the rising tide in the Protestant Episcopal Church sweep over the Protestant sentiment and decide that the church shall be Protestant in name as it is Protestant in sympathy and inheritance. Perhaps it may be said also that the lay delegates have saved the day for the old name and for the things the old name stands for. In many of the dioceses that have been voting on the subject they reversed with a heavy majority the decision of the clerical delegates. It has been difficult for the lay mind to grasp the idea which the clerical mind has been trying so hard to teach, that as far as the Episcopal Church was concerned there never was a Reformation, that Rome split off from England rather than the Anglican Church from Rome, and that except for such a minor matter as Papal Infallibility, which of course unchurches Protestant Episcopacy and is therefore not to be tolerated, there is a much closer sympathy between Anglicanism and Romanism than between Anglicanism and Protestantism.

The Living Church is the main organ of this branch of the Clericals. A few quotations will give the point of view of this party in the Episcopal Church.

"The Church being so largely influenced by the Protestantism about her and within her, shares in this inevitable decadence of spirituality". "The title of the Protestant Episcopal Church does not suggest to other Christian people, that continuity with the historic Church, that point of contact with the person of our Lord through the eleven apostles, that is our highest claim to their allegiance." The reader must not be too greatly shocked at this claim upon the allegiance of "other Christian people." "The term, Protestant, in England, rightly describes the Pope and his followers, who protested against the Reformed Prayer Book, against the resumption of the communion in both kinds, against the Royal Supremacy, and against the Reformation generally, finally culminating this protest in withdrawal of their adherents from the ancient Church in England." This is history as she is wrote and logic as she is taught in the Romanizing circles of the Protestant Episcopal church, and nowhere else in the world.

For consider the well known facts of history. So far as the continuity of the Protestant Churches with the New Testament Church is concerned, the claim can be made good for one as well as for another. All must trace their descent through the Roman Catholic Church. That Church did not grow corrupt all at once. And down to the very time of the Reformation, and even since, it taught the great essentials of Christianity to true disciples of Christ, however overlaid those essentials were with error and superstition. The case was no whit different in England and in Germany and in Switzerland. The claim of the Roman Catholic Church to the obedience of the people of Western Europe was nowhere denied. The hierarchy of England and of France were equally under the authority of the Pope. And it makes the veriest non-sense of history to make any other claim.

Luther and Calvin and Cranmer were all Romanists to begin with, all priests of the Roman Catholic Church. Luther made his memorable protest against the errors in doctrine and the corruptions in practice which he had found to be errors and corruptions through the study of the Scriptures and the testimony of his outraged conscience, and the Reformation dawned upon the world. Henry the Eighth, king of England, denounced the doctrines of Luther, even wrote a book against them which received the applause of the Roman See. The Reformation, nevertheless, won its way in England, in spite of persecution by the English Church, following the example of the Roman Catholic Church everywhere. Calvin, in France, renounced the doctrines of Romanism and became a Protestant. He went to Geneva and wrought out the principles and the order of the Reformed Faith. But in England, the many-wived Harry wanted to be divorced from Catharine, having seen Anne Boleyn and having been convinced at the same time that it was unlawful for him to have married his brother's widow, he applied to the Pope for the divorce, which after a period of vacillation, was refused. Henry thereupon, with the connivance of Cranmer, the recently appointed Archbishop of Canterbury, held an ecclesiastical court which pronounced sentence of divorce. The Pope summoned Henry to appear before the papal court and Henry refused, shortly afterwards, calling into operation the act of Parliament entirely abolishing the papal power in England, the power having been given to the king by the Parliament to call the act into operation when he pleased. More, and Fisher, the Archbishop of Rochester, were put to death for refusing to acknowledge the king's right of headship to the church as opposed to the Pope's. This is what the Living Church calls, The protest of the Pope and his followers against the Royal Supremacy and the withdrawal of their adherents from the ancient Church of England.

So far, therefore, as the succession is concerned, The Living Church will pardon "other Christian people" if they prefer tracing their descent from the early church, through the Roman Church, with Luther or Calvin or Knox as the connecting links between the ld and the new, rather than with Cranmer and Henry e Eighth as the connecting links.

Of course God brought good out of evil. The Reformation in England was the real ground on which the Parliament was able to pass the bill abolishing papal authority. It is true that the Anglican Church again acknowledged the supremacy of the Pope during the reign of Bloody Mary and Bishop Bonner, but their reign was brief, and with the accession of Elizabeth the principles of the Reformation were fully and finally acknowledged. Now we might ask, what claim has the Anglican Church upon the allegiance of us other Christian people that we cannot make good for our own churches.

The lay delegates have saved the Episcopal Church from a very practical error as well as from historic foolishness, in the attempt to drop the name Protestant.
It is a glorious name. It stands for a glorious fact in the history of the Church of God. It unites the Episcopal Church to the great Churches of Europe and America, the Lutheran, the Presbyterian, the Congregationalist, the Baptist, the Methodist. While the name, The American Catholic Church, would have allied the Episcopal Church with Romanism besides being false in fact. There is an American Catholic Church, the best part of the Roman Catholic Church, by far.
And it is losing its hold upon the American people and would be a fast disintegrating body save for the additions that come to it from European immigration, the next generation even of the immigrants being generally lost to Catholicism. And for the Protestant Episcopal Church to yield to the Romanizing tendencies within her pale, forego the glorious history which it shares in common with the rest of Protestantism and still be a sort of imitation of the real Roman Catholicism, would have been a disaster to Protestant Episcopacy and to Protestantism and to Christianity.

And we should like to close this word of congratula-tion with quoting the following paragraph from the Southern Churchman, our excellent Virginia contemporary and the representative of the historical Episcopacy of that state, which might be profitably imitated by states to the South of it:

"When we say, in the Apostles' creed, 'I believe in . . . the Holy Catholic church,' and, in the Nicene creed, 'And I believe one Catholic and Apostolic church,' and when 'more especially we pray for Thy holy church universal,' we do not mean, or certainly we ought not to mean, 'The Protestant Episcopal church in the United States of America' alone; but we do mean, or certainly we ought to mean, the whole of Christ's Body or church, i. e., 'all who profess and call themselves Christians.' * * * being at unity with 'The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America' in the essential doctrines of the Apostles' creed, though differing otherwise, of course, are all members of the one Body, Christ's Body or church,
'the church, which is His Body,' or 'The church catholic or universal,' as it is called—in other words, they are distinct and separate colleges or schools of the one great University of Christ, their theological distinctions originating in the scholastic acerbity and controversy of individual schoolmen, rather than in any differences on the essential doctrines of the Apostles' creed, as to which all of them are agreed—many members of one family or 'spiritual fraternity'
—radii of a common circle with a single centre—bil-lows or waves of one only sea—branches of a vivifying vine—separate segments of a solitary sphere—scattered sheep of the same sheepfold—and so forth.

Therefore, a new name (if, indeed, a new name is necessary, or is to be had) should be found for 'The Protestant Episcopal church in the United States of America," which will not have the arrogant appearance of attempting to exclude from "The church catholic or universal" any others, who also may be entitled to inclusion."

The "Net Gain" of the Churches. Christendom, the new weekly religious magazine, published in Chicago, comments upon the small net gain of the churches, taking the Presbyterian Church for a text. The figures show that the church received 63,000 members last year on profession of faith, making the whole membership
1,059,130, a net gain of 13,792.

Christendom comments: "There must be something disappointing in a net gain which is barely one new member for every thousand old members. A business investment that could not show a larger increase would be regarded as in need of reorganization."

Well, that may be a business way of looking at it, though even then the net gain is 13 in a thousand, Christendom having made a misprint that upset its calculations. But it is not the gospel way of looking at it.
It is not exactly the thing for a church to be counting its members in the spirit in which a miser counts his dollars or an Indian his scalps. Doubtless, the Presbyterian church, and the other churches mentioned by our contemporary, ought to do more than they are doing. But we recall High Authority that said: "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." We should not be contemptuous about a net gain of 13,000, if the records show that 63,- 318 souls have at least given credible evidence of their faith in Jesus Christ.

And this whole talk of the "net gain," is misleading and savors of making the Father's house a house of merchandise. Why is it that there is only a net gain of 13,000 with 63,318 souls received on profession alone?
For it has often been proved that the Presbyterian Church, for some reason, gains more from than it loses to other denominations while it does not believe in preseclyting either. The simple explanation is that out of a million people several thousand die every year.
And surely those whom the church, by its ordinances and means of graces, turned toward Christ, and trained in lives of sanctity and usefulness in this world for blessedness in the world to come should not be counted "lost by death." More than this. There is many a man doing a noble work for Christ which is all the nobler because it is a failing work.

The statistics from his church show a "net loss" instead of a "net gain." Children trained for Christ move from country fields to the cities when manhood and womanhood come. And the old saints die. And the faithful pastor stays by his charge and trains the children for the prosperous city churches and visits the sick and buries the dead, while ever and anon there is joy in the presence of the angels because he has led some soul into repentance and light. Shall he stop his work because, forsooth, "a business investment that could not show a larger per cent of increase would be regarded as in need of reorganization." Suppose there are left almost none in a community who have not given themselves to Christ. shall the community be punished for that by a withdrawal of the preacher and the taking away of the preached word? Then it will be a poor Church, from the business point of view, when the earth is full of the knowledge of God as the waters cover the sea.

He Leadeth Me.

In pastures green? Not always; sometimes He Who knoweth best, in kindness leadeth me
In weary ways, where heavy shadows be.
Out of the sunshine warm and soft and bright,
Out of the sunshine into darkest night,
I oft would faint this sorrow and afflict,
Only for this—I know He holds my hand,
So whether in green or desert land
I trust, although I may not understand.
And by still waters? No, not always so;
Oft-times the heavy tempests round me blow,
And o'er my soul the waves and billows go.
But when the storms beat loudest, and I cry Aloud for help, the Master standeth by,
And whispers to my soul, "Lo, it is I."
Above the tempest wild I hear Him say,
"Beyond this darkness lies the perfect day,
In every path of thine I lead the way."
So, whether on the hill-tops high and fair
I dwell, or in the sunless valleys, where
The shadows lie—what matter? He is there.
So where He leads me I can safely go;
And in the blest hereafter I shall know
Why, in His wisdom, He hath led me so.

What a vast proportion of our lives is spent in anxious and useless forebodings concerning the future—either our own or those of our dear ones. Present joys, present blessings slip by and we miss half their flavor, and all for want of faith in Him who provides for the tiniest insect in the sunbeam. Oh, when shall we learn the sweet trust in God that our little children tell us every day by their confiding faith in us? We, who are so mutable, so faulty, so irritable, so unjust; and He, who is so watchful, so pitiful, so loving, so forgiving? Why cannot we, slipping our hand into His each day, walk trustingly over that day's appointed path, thorny or flowery, crooked or straight, knowing that evening will bring us sleep, peace, and home?—Phillips Brooks.

It requires a well-kept life to do the will of God, and even a better kept life to will to do His will. To be willing is a rarer grace than to be doing the will of God. For he who is willing may sometimes have nothing to do, and only be willing to wait; and it is easier far to be doing God's will than to be willing to have nothing to do—it is easier far to be working for Christ than it is to be willing to cease. No, there is nothing rarer in the world to-day than the true willing soul, and there is nothing more worth coveting than the will to do God's will. There is no grander possession of any Christian life than the transparently simple mechanism of a sincerely obeying heart.—Professor Dummer.

When we settle down to enjoy the blessings of God's grace, when we make the culture of our immortal souls a chief end of life, we find in the practice of religion not merely refreshment, but immunity from the harassing cares of worldliness, quiet of soul, a full sequestered life of inward communion. Encanopied by God, overshadowed by His protecting love, we recover calm and equipoise, and a sweet reasonableness, and an all-spanning trust, and an overmastering hope and joy, which make us strangely indifferent to the hard rubs of life, and alive only to the realities of the soul and of Heaven.—Dr. John Smith.

If I am asked what is the remedy for the deeper sorrows of the human heart—what a man should chiefly look to in his progress through life as the power that is to sustain him under trials and enable him manfully to confront his afflictions—I must point to something which, in a well-known hymn, is called "The old, old story," told of an old, old Book and taught with an old, old teaching, which is the greatest and best gift ever given to mankind.—William Ewart Gladstone.

Training Native Leaders in Korea.

Kunsan, March 27, '03.

Owing to the rapid development of our work we already have some very serious problems confronting the Mission. No one of these is more serious than the question of supplying native leaders and pastors for the local congregations. In addition to our three regular stations where we have a small force of resident missionaries, we have twelve outstations. By an outstation is meant a place where there is a body of believers and where regular Sabbath and mid-week services are held. There are twelve of these already and our work has reached that stage when, under the blessing of God, we hope and expect them to multiply rapidly. Among the male members it is a rare exception when there is one who is not willing to lead in prayer in public or take charge of and conduct Sunday services or a mid-week prayer-meeting. Their willingness in this respect is very commendable but is not, however, in itself sufficient to make efficient leaders. The training and developing of these leaders, by whom the vast bulk of the evangelistic work is to be done, is the problem now confronting us.

To partially supply this need we have adopted the plan of having annual Bible and training classes. The class for this year is now in session at the Kunsan station with Messrs. Tate, Junkin, Bull and Bell as instructors. The subjects taught are: Biblical and general geography, Life of Christ, Old Testament and Church History, Theology, Church Government, etc. During the class, conferences are held at which a free discussion is had as to the best way of developing and maintaining the work on a self-sustaining basis. There are fifty-eight present from the most intelligent of our fifteen groups of believers. From these we hope to raise up faithful and efficient leaders, church officers and pastors. As the men earn their own living and most of them have families depending on them we can only keep them two weeks at a time now. But after we have regular candidates for the ministry we hope to have them in secular and theological training a larger part of their time.

As is the case with the other departments of our work, this also is on a self-supporting basis and each attendant at the class pays his own board. A similar class has recently been held for women by the members of the Chunju station. So in this way we hope to train competent leaders who will help us care for the large number of babes in Christ and go with us out into the highways and hedges and compel a multitude of others to come in.

Eugene Bell.

A Call From the Darkness.

In a recent letter from Brother Hawkins at Luebo occurs these lines: "Sometimes old Joka comes waddling over this way, and is always tickled when we can tell him you have been heard from and are well. 'When,' in his gross, grum voice he will ask, 'will Verner come back?'"

Joka is Ndombe's Prime Minister. The Gospel is heard no more at Ndombe's capital. We have at Stillman Institute four good men ready to go. King Leopold promised us our concession at Ndombe whenever we were ready for it. I can not live there now, but I can send, and perhaps go for a short trip. For this I have written my book, for this I write my magazine articles, for this I lecture. With voice and pen I work incessantly to help discharge my obligations to those poor friends over there. Who will help?

The representatives of the "Forward Movement" of the Presbyterian Church, South, Messrs. Preston, Moffatt and Stuart, who have been doing such exceptionally successful work among the Presbyterian Churches, will give the benefit of their experience to the Lookout Mountain Missionary Conference.

Paul's Voyage and Shipwreck.

Acts 27:33-44. June 7, 1903.

During his voyage to Rome Paul identified himself with his traveling companions and shared their experiences. He did not hold himself aloof, but gave them the benefit of his counsel and co-operation. With those associated with us in life we should do the same. For a life of isolation can never be one of great influence or usefulness. In the signal emergencies and crises of life the Master spirit present habitually comes to the front and assumes leadership. Thus it was with Paul during the storm and the shipwreck.

In our lesson Paul appears as the dauntless leader and presents several important topics.

1. He Encourages his Shipmates. — He speaks cheering words. He urges them after long fasting, to take heed that they may have strength for further struggle. He assures them upon Divine authority, that not one of them should perish or sustain the slightest injury. He maintains a cheerful demeanor himself and "gave thanks to God in the presence of them all" for the food provided and for his continued care. He stimulates them to eat by setting them the example. Thus by his words, by giving Divine promises, by his cheerful temper and by his personal conduct, Paul becomes a source of encouragement to his desponding companions. He shows us on this occasion, how we too amid life's multiplied trials may become sources of cheer and help to our discouraged fellows.

2. Measures are taken for attaining safety. — The Lord had assured Paul that He had given him the lives of all who sailed with him. He had furthermore informed him that while the ship would be lost, not the slightest injury should be sustained by his companions. But this Divine promise by no means justified supine inaction on the part of the inmates of the ship. They were to be saved according to the promise of God by the wise use of appointed means. Hence when the sailors during the storm attempted to leave the ship by a boat, Paul said to the centurion "Except these abide in the ship ye can not be saved." The skill of the sailors was needful to navigate the vessel and to secure a safe landing. So when the storm abated and they approached the island where they went ashore, wise steps were taken to prevent disaster.

The anchors were raised and after they had eaten of the ship was lightened by throwing the cargo overboard. Men have sometimes to lose their possessions to save their lives. Many have lost their souls by clinging too eagerly and obstinately to worldly goods. When they drew near to the shore they directed the ship towards the land, so as to afford to the ship's company the best opportunities for escape.

3. All Escape to Whom the Lord Promised Salvation. — Not a soul was lost, though the waves were violent, though the vessel was wrecked and though there were two hundred and seventy-six persons aboard the ship. Despite multiplied dangers, the whole company came safe to land. All the prisoners were saved even though the soldiers counseled putting them to death to prevent escape. The Centurion was favorably impressed by Paul, who was fully aware of the services he had rendered, and used his authority to preserve the lives of the Apostle and his fellow prisoners. Though they reached the land, they did not attain safety in precisely the same way. They each had different experiences and every one had to use his natural endowments and providential means placed within his reach. They employed their physical organs and mental powers and required skill. Some swam, others floated on boards or broken pieces of the ship, but all attained safety by Divine decree, but in the use of Divinely appointed means. The same is true of all to whom God has promised eternal salvation.

Gold, or God.

Luke 18:18-30. Topic for June 14.

Christ's method of dealing with the young man who is mentioned in the verses from which our lesson is taken this week, seems to us to be harsh and not according to the ordinary gentleness of our Saviour. But whoever has such feelings while reading of the way in which Christ received the young man who came asking the way of life, has been a superficial reader. Sometimes a man is borne into the hospital and placed upon the operating table. We who are not experienced might think better to put him quietly to bed where he can rest peacefully. Instead we see the surgeon bury the knife deep in his flesh, and it is not until we see the knife separating between the healthy flesh and the morbid, diseased mass that we know that there is life in the knife; that it is in the hands of a skillful and learned physician who knows that in the use of the knife alone is there life for the patient. Just so when we come to look carefully and closely into the case of this rich young ruler who came to Jesus. The words of Jesus sound hard at first, but when we understand the case in hand we see that the Master was using the only method to free the young man from that which was bearing him down. The rich young ruler was talking about heaven when all the time he was glued to earth. Christ saw that heroic treatment was needed and He is far too kind to allow present ease to be bought at the price of eternal misery.

The young ruler was right, but it was not because he was rich that he was in danger. Abraham, the father of the Jewish race, was rich, but he was called the friend of God. The trouble with the young ruler was that for him life consisted "In the things which he possessed." His riches came between him and God. Therefore when Jesus put him to the test, "Go sell all that thou hast and give to the poor," he went away sorrowful because his earthly treasure was worth more in his eyes than "treasure in heaven."

One doesn't need to be rich in order to be in danger, just as this young man was. One doesn't necessarily have to give up all that is possessed in order to have treasure in heaven, but there must be the willingness to give up everything for Christ's sake. Many a person who hasn't a nickel has the same spirit as the rich young ruler who had great possessions. Many people are putting their life's blood into their efforts to heap up wealth and yet are always poor. If their minds turn more toward these things than toward God, they belong to the same class with the rich young ruler.

When we learn that religion consists in the spirit which animates our lives, we will have learned a lesson which will help us over many of the pit-falls that have been laid for our unwary feet. Jesus said to the woman at Jacob's well, "God is a spirit and they that worship Him must worship Him in Spirit and in truth." Too many people are still making religion to consist in action. Their question constantly is, "What good thing can I do to inherit eternal life." From this attitude, we must get away.

Then the bare searching for gold is in itself one of the greatest dangers of the present day. Men go to church services, but their minds are on the things of the world. Few people are willing to confess it, but there are many who belong to the class of the man who admitted that while he had been a regular attendant on the services of the Church for twenty years, he had never heard a sermon. As soon as the preacher announced his text this citizen began to plan his work for the coming week and his mind was not on what the preacher was saying during the entire time. How little time is really given to God that we claim to devote to His service!

We need to hear the Saviour's words constantly as He says, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth where moth and rust doth corrupt" etc.

The Lexington Assembly.

Fourth Day—Monday.—Your correspondent spent Sunday at his own church, 26 miles from Lexington, having with him Dr. Wilkinson, who gave our people a most interesting account of the work in the Elizabeth Blake Hospital, Soochow, China, of which he has charge.

Reaching the Assembly again at 10:30 this morning, I found that Dr. Hall, Chairman of the Committee of Bills and Overtures, had had the floor for some time, and the process of nipping in the bud insipient legislation, which forms a large part of the annual business of each Assembly, was proceeding at a lively rate.

The overture from the Presbytery of Enoree on double representation in the General Assembly; from Columbia Presbytery, to make the Synod of Tennessee a representative body; from the Presbytery of Nashville, to print the names of clerks of sessions in the minutes of the Assembly; from the Presbytery of East Hanover, to print the names of churches in the order of priority of organization—all these died without a struggle. Other overtures, some favorably recommended by the Committee of Bills and Overtures, and some unfavorably, went to the docket and will come up again.

Among these is the overture from the Presbytery of Tuscaloosa, to strike out the word "elect" from the elect infant clause of the Confession of Faith, another was the overture from the Presbytery of Lafayette, popularly known as Dr. Gordon's overture, to amend the Confession of Faith in the direction indicated by Dr. Gordon's articles in the Standard.

Each of these overtures comes up before the Assembly, with the unanimous vote of the Committee of Bills and Overtures against it.

Several overtures managed to run the gauntlet of the committee and were adopted by the Assembly. One of these was from the Presbytery of Abingdon, to resume the printing of the Sabbath-school lesson on the fourth page of the Children's Friend, which was discontinued by order of the last Assembly.

Another was from the Presbytery of Charleston, and directs the stated clerk to make suitable publication in the religious papers, of all days or special seasons ordered by the Assembly, such as Children's Day, Rally Day, days of special prayer, etc.

The answer of the Committee of Bills and Overtures to an overture from the Presbytery of Augusta asking for an interpretation of Par. 103 Book of Church Order, was adopted as follows: "The congregation has power to elect any male member of that church to moderate a congregational meeting called by the session, when it is impracticable to secure the attendance of a minister."

About this stage of the proceedings, the Assembly determined to make haste slowly, and recess was taken until 8:30 p. m.

Night Session.—This was devoted to the cause of Ministerial Relief, the first time, the Secretary stated, that a special popular meeting has been held by the Assembly in the interest of that cause.

Before the exercises of the evening began, this telegram was read:

"Los Angeles, Cal., May 25th, '03.

The General Assembly in session at Los Angeles, cordially responds to your fraternal salutations. 2 Cor. 9:8.

Robt. F. Cayle, Moderator,
Wm. H. Roberts, Stated Clerk."

Dr. McElroy, secretary of Ministerial Relief, conducted the devotional exercises and introduced the speakers. Addresses were made by two ruling elders, Hon. Henry Moore, Texarkana, and Dr. W. M. McPheeters, Grand Avenue Church, St. Louis, Mo., and Rev. J. T. Plunkett, D. D. Augusta, Ga.

Fourth Day.—We have a suspicion that sometimes a Presbytery which has a member with a cranky notion in his head, allows him to put his notion in the form of an overture to the General Assembly.

The Presbytery passes the overture, sends it up to the Assembly (taking care not to send with it a cranky brother who was the author of it) and the Assembly gives the overture a public funeral, which is presided over by the Committee of Bills and Overtures.

At least one old lady of Scotch-Irish extraction, presumably a resident of the country of Rockbridge, who has an appetite for speechifying was disgusted with the brevity of the Assembly's proceedings to-day. She was overheard saying: "I came here to hear something and there ain't been nothing worth hearing yet."

The reason alleged on the floor of the Assembly for the early adjournment (about 11 a. m.) was a desire to give the committees an opportunity to complete their work.

In this connection, however, it might be stated that the far-famed Natural Bridge is just 12 miles from Lexington.

It might also be supposed that judgment had been passed upon somebody for some reason; for just in the middle of the afternoon there came up a heavy thunder storm and towards night there was a report going the round that seven miles out of the city, two secretaries and one stated clerk and one business manager of a certain Presbyterian paper, were standing in the mud surveying the wreck of a vehicle which had been unable to be picked up under so much Presbyterian dignity.

(As a matter which is somewhat confidential, but which will be very consolatory to the many friends of the stated clerk, your correspondent will state that about the time of the accident he saw a well known silk hat hanging serenely on the hat-rack of the manse in Lexington, so that it was not involved in the catastrophe.)

Fifth Day—Tuesday.—The first thing this morning the Assembly got into one of those discussions which kills time with the avowed purpose of saving it. A motion was made to limit all speeches hereafter to ten minutes, this was amended by a motion to limit speeches to five minutes, and after twenty minutes wasted in discussing these motions they were both voted down.

The committee on Foreign Correspondence, Rev. R. A. Webb, D. D., chairman, then got the floor recommending to answer various communications, which answers were adopted.

My dear Sir:

The Presbyterian Historical Society recently celebrated the Fiftieth Anniversary of its organization. A display was made from every denomination represented in the Society. These loans were temporarily placed on screens and in show cases, and the return of this material, coming in many instances from private sources, leaves your church without adequate representation in the Collections of the Gallery and Museum. Will you not, at the forthcoming meeting of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Church in the United States, bring the subject to the attention of those interested in the preservation of historical material before it is irretrievably lost, and attempt to secure pictures and relics either of churches or individuals, illustrating your Church History?

All donations are carefully catalogued, and are so preserved as to be safe yet readily accessible to our visitors and members. Deposit may be made for temporary display or safe keeping in the rooms of the Society.

Records of the past, and all contemporary church histories, are deposited in the library where they are catalogued and preserved.

Trusting that through your efforts, and those of the brethren of your Church, much valuable material may be secured, I am Very truly yours,

Alfred Percival Smith, Curator.

Per H.

There has been referred to your Committee on Foreign Correspondence a letter from the Curator of the "Presbyterian Historical Society" of Philadelphia.

is letter informs the Assembly that the 'Society's Gallery and Museum' are entirely destitute of pictures and relics illustrating the history of our Church, and asks for any donations the Assembly may desire to make of Historical materials. We recommend that the stated clerk be appointed a medium of communication on this matter, to transmit to the society any materials of the kind which he may gather up, or which may be placed in his hands for the purpose.

There has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Correspondence the Annual Report of the Western Section of the Executive Commission of the Alliance of the Reformed Churches. This report asks this General Assembly to take important action on several matters.

1. It asks the Assembly to appoint an Evangelistic Committee to co-operate with other similar committees, appointed or to be appointed by other allied bodies in the hope that there may result a general revival of religion, covering our entire continent. We recommend that the Assembly decline to make this appointment; that refer the subject matter of the proposal to the Executive Committee of Home Missions to render such co-operation as it may deem wise and practicable.

2. The Alliance has submitted a scheme of advanced studies in the Bible for Sabbath-schools. This matter has been referred by the Assembly to its Standing Committee on Sabbath-schools, and consequently calls for no recommendations from the Committee on Foreign Correspondence.

3. The Alliance asks that the Second Sabbath in September be set apart as a day of prayer for public schools. We recommend that the Assembly so order it.

4. The Alliance asks that the Assembly appoint a delegate to a "Joint Conference on Divorce and Re-marriage." We recommend that the Assembly decline to make such appointment, inasmuch as it would be contrary to our well-established practice.

5. The Alliance asks the Assembly to pass to all its ministers strong injunction, forbidding them to marry persons who have not been divorced for Scriptural reasons. We recommend, in lieu of the action proposed by the Alliance, that the Assembly declare its superlative regard for the sanctity of marriage and the purity of the family; that its standards of faith and practice clearly teach that all re-marriages, except such as are scriptural, are sinful; and that it would disapprove the solemnizing of any unscriptural marriages by its ministers.

6. The Alliance asks this Assembly to pay four hundred and eighty dollars to its Treasurer, as the portionment of our Church for the annual expenses of the Alliance. We recommend that the Treasurer of the Assembly be directed to pay this amount.

7. The Alliance asks that the names and addresses of the thirty-two representatives of our Church to the General Council to meet next year in Liverpool be sent both the American and the English Secretaries of the Alliance. We recommend that the Stated Clerk comply with this request.

8. The Alliance informs the Assembly that the Reformed Churches in France, Italy, Austria, Hungary, and Russia are surrounded with conditions unfavorable to their growth and prosperity, and it asks that persons interested in the state of these churches communicate with Rev. James I. Good, D. D., Reading, Pa. We recommend that the Assembly hereby express its sympathy and sympathy, and hopes for a brighter story in its respect in the next annual report.

Respectfully submitted,

R. A. Webb, Chairman.

Philadelphia, Pa., May 4, 1903.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States:

Members and Brethren:

The Western or American Section of the Executive Commission of the Alliance of the Reformed Churches, regarding the Presbyterian System, respectfully presents to you its annual report.

The Commission has held during the past ecclesiastical year two meetings, one at Philadelphia, Pa., Oct.

27th and 28th, 1902, and the other at New York, N. Y., April 15th and 16th, 1903. Both meetings were well attended. The Philadelphia meeting had as distinctive features on Monday evening a dinner tendered by the Presbyterian Social Union of Philadelphia, and on Tuesday evening a popular meeting in the interest of Sabbath-school work. During the business sessions special attention was given to the topics: The Formation of Union Churches in Missionary Lands, and Evangelistic Work in the Congregations connected with the Churches of the Alliance.

On the subject of Presbyterian Union in India, the following Resolution was unanimously adopted: Resolved, that this Executive Commission cordially commends the Union of the various Presbyterian Bodies in India into a single Church.

In connection with the subject of Evangelistic Work, the Secretary of the Commission was authorized to send out a circular to all the congregations of the Alliance inviting their co-operation in the evangelistic movement undertaken by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., and the General Synod of the Reformed Church in America. A circular was sent to fifteen thousand pastors of the Churches in the Alliance asking, "immediate organized effort for the salvation of souls and united and earnest prayer to the throne of grace for the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit upon the evangelistic work of all Christian Churches throughout the World. So far as the Commission has received information, this united evangelistic movement resulted in much good.

The following resolution on Evangelistic Work is submitted to your venerable body for action:

"Whereas, the general conditions on this continent favor a wide-spread evangelistic effort, therefore:

Resolved, That the Western or American Section of the Alliance, rejoicing in the Evangelistic work already accomplished, cordially commends to the General Judicatories of all the churches the appointment of evangelistic committees, with power to co-operate each with the other in evangelistic effort, in the hope that under the divine blessing there may be a revival of religion covering the entire continent."

At the meeting in New York City in April, 1903, the Commission met at the Marble Collegiate Reformed Church, 29th St. and 5th Ave., for the business sessions, and were the guests on Thursday evening at a reception of the Reformed Church Union of New York. On Wednesday evening members of the Commission spoke upon the interests of the Alliance, in many of the Presbyterian and Reformed churches of the city.

Three matters considered at the New York meeting are presented for action by you, viz:

The Commission adopted unanimously a report upon an advanced course of Sabbath-school lessons, and directed that it be presented to each of the Supreme Judicatories of the churches of the Alliance for their action. This matter is so important that the entire report has been put in print, and is submitted to you in a separate communication.

The Commission also requests that as last year, so this year the Second Sabbath in September be set apart as a day for prayer for public schools.

The Commission further requests that your Church appoint a delegate to a joint conference on the subject of Divorce and Re-marriage, which has been established by the co-operative action of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the North, and the Baptist Churches, North. The purpose of the Joint Conference is to secure action from the ecclesiastical side upon this deeply important matter, vital to the welfare both of the Church and of the State. The Conference has already held a meeting and an Executive Commission has been appointed, the chairman of which is the Right Rev. Wm. Crosswell Deane, Bishop of Albany of the Protestant Episcopal Church; and the Secretary, the Rev. Wm. H. Roberts, D. D., LL. D., of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. The work done thus far, however, is purely preliminary, and with a view to the fuller representation in the conference of the Christian Churches of the U. S. A. It is hoped that the action taken by your body will be such as to strengthen this movement in behalf of the interests of the family. Should the way be clear, it is also suggested that the following Resolution be adopted by your Body.

Resolved, That all ministers under our care and authority are hereby enjoined to refuse to perform the marriage ceremony in the cases of divorced persons, except as such persons have been divorced upon grounds and for causes recognized as Scriptural in the Standards of this Church.

The Alliance has appointed as a delegate to carry to your venerable body fraternal greetings, the Rev. R. P. Kerr, D. D.

It is respectfully requested that provision be made for the payment of the apportionment of your Church for the annual expenses of the Alliance. The amount is $480, and should be sent to the Treasurer, F. K. Hipple, Esq., LL. D., President Real Estate Trust Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

Notification was given in last year's report, of the appointed meeting of the Eighth General Council of the Alliance at Liverpool, England, 1904. The date of the assembling of this Council will probably be June 21st of that year. The number of your representatives in the Council is 32 and it is requested that the names and addresses of the delegates be forwarded at an early date to the American Secretary of the Alliance, Rev. Wm. H. Roberts, D. D., Philadelphia, and also to the General Secretary, the Rev. George D. Matthews, D. D., London, England.

Your attention is once more drawn to the needs of the Reformed Churches on the Continent of Europe, in particular in France, Italy, Austria Hungary, and Russia. While there is much encouragement in connection with the work of some of them, the conditions which surround them are still to a large extent unfavorable to their growth and to the highest development of their spiritual life. Especially is this true in Russia. Earnest prayer is requested on their behalf, and contributions for the promotion of the welfare of the congregations connected with them are recommended whenever the requests for aid are properly authorized. In this connection attention is drawn to the need of providing during the summer months, Stated Supplies for preaching stations to be established where American tourists most congregate.

There are American evangelical churches in the larger cities of the Continent such as Paris and Berlin. While these and similar congregations should be liberally supported, there is an interesting demand for temporary religious services at various points on the Continent. It is requested that parties interested in this work communicate with the Chairman of the Committee of the Alliance upon "Work on the European Continent," the Rev. James I. Good, D. D., Reading, Pa.

Tendering to you the cordial regards of all the other Churches in the Alliance, invoking the blessing of God upon our co-operation in so many lines of Christian Work, and rejoicing in our spiritual unity, we are, in behalf of the Western Section of the Commission of the Alliance.

R. P. Kerr, Chairman.

Wm. Henry Roberts, Secretary.

Fifth Day—Tuesday.—The three Synods overturing in favor of the appointment of a committee of conferences were Tennessee, Alabama and Mississippi, the four Presbyteries were Brazos, Fort Worth, Red River and Maryland. The committee's report, which was finally adopted was in substance that in response to these overtures its confidence in the doctrinal soundness of the Reformed Church in America, its appreciation of their testimony to the spirituality of the Church, its genuine and warm affection for them; and expresses its readiness to appoint the committee asked for in these overtures, whenever the Synod of the Reformed shall indicate that such an appointment would be agreeable to them.

Rev. J. P. Wood, of Henderson, Texas, offered and warmly advocated a substitute for the committee's report, to the effect that our Assembly take the initiative and appoint a committee of conference at once. Rev. J. W. Moore of the Japan Mission spoke very earnestly in favor of Mr. Wood's substitute, characterizing the course recommended by the committee of Foreign Correspondence as unnecessary, unwise and dilatory.

Dr. Webb then took the floor in defence of the action of his committee and against Mr. Wood's substitute. He said that the action recommended by the committee was really the best way to secure the end aimed at in Mr. Wood's motion, and was as far as it was expedient for our church to go at this time. He referred to a mass of correspondence which had been in the hands of his committee giving an inside view of the state of feeling on the subject of union both in their church and ours.

If we appointed a committee they would be compelled in courtesy to do the same; and if the matter was not ripe on their side, the conference would drive the two churches apart rather than draw them together.

Dr. Graham spoke in the same line with Dr. Webb, referring to his acquaintance with brethren of the Dutch Reformed Church for many years, speaking of the result of a former effort at courtship on our part, and expressing his conviction that the committee's report was the best thing in the present stage of affairs.

The substitute of Mr. Wood was then voted down, and the committee's report adopted by a very considerable majority.

In this connection Dr. Graham was appointed to prepare a suitable response to the letter of Rev. Peter Crespell, fraternal delegate from the Dutch Reformed Church to ours, expressing our appreciation of it, conveying the salutations of our Church to his, and communicating this action just taken by our Assembly, looking to closer relations.

After a brief recess in which the Assembly had its photograph taken, an address was heard from Rev. Jno. Balcom Shaw, representing the forward evangelistic movement in the Northern Presbyterian Church.

Several other matters of minor interest were transacted before the dinner recess. An answer to a communication from the American Anti-Saloon League was adopted, expressing the hearty sympathy of the Assembly with the cause of temperance, but declining to take any steps which commit our Church as a Church to any affiliation with organizations outside of the Church.

Another item of interest was the turning over to the committee of Ministerial Relief for its permanent endowment fund, the legacy of Mrs. Mary Stewart of Alexandria, Va. This legacy had been left to the trustees of the General Assembly without instructions as to the use which should be made of it and amounts to $3,700. The heartiness with which this sum was voted to this cause, amidst many other conflicting claims, is one of many indications of the new hold this blessed interest is taking on the affection and benevolence of the Church.

Afternoon Session.—The first thing this afternoon was Dr. Rice's most excellent and stimulating address on the subject of Church and Christian Education. While Dr. Rice made no direct allusion to it, the Assembly could see the towers of the Atlanta Presbyterian University gleaming in the background of all that was said.

In the line of routine business, the committee of Bills and Overtures cleared the docket of several unimportant overtures, and then came the first grapple between the two parties in the Assembly, over an overture from the Presbytery of New Orleans. This overture asked the Assembly to decline all propositions looking to the amendment of the Confession of Faith. The committee of Bills and Overtures recommended that this overture from the Presbytery of New Orleans be read to the Assembly, and no further action be taken on it.

This recommendation was debated at length, the main ground of objection to it being that it made no dispoon of the overture, but left it still before the Assem-

Dr. Webb, in behalf of the committee explained that the considerations which influenced the committee were, that if the Assembly granted the overture, it would imply the judgment of the Assembly that the Confession ought not to be amended in any particular, if the overture was answered in the negative it would be a step in favor of amendments to the Confession, several of which were pending on the Assembly's docket. The committee of Bills and Overtures thought the best course was to allow the Presbytery of New Orleans an opportunity to deliver its testimony by reading its overture to the Assembly, and to take no action for or against the substance of the overture.

Dr. Wm. Irwin of Bowling Green, Ky., then made a square issue, by moving that the overture be answered in the negative. Then came further debate, amendments, points of order, an appeal from the moderator's decision, all of which were ruled out or voted down, and then, that master of parliamentary tactics, the pastor of the Lexington Church, offered the following substitute which was promptly adopted and ended the matter.

"In answer to the overture of the Presbytery of New Orleans touching amendments to the Confession of Faith, the Assembly informs the Presbytery that its overture has been received and considered without either adoption or denial."

The rest of the afternoon was occupied with the report of the Standing committee on Ministerial Relief. This would have gone through unanimously and heartily, had it not been for one item of the report which proposed to change the time for the collection from July to December. This of course antagonized the loved evangelization which has its collection in December, besides throwing the whole scheme of collections into confusion.

After protracted discussion this item was referred to the committee on Systematic Beneficence. The rest of the report was adopted.

Night Session.—Japan was before the Assembly tonight, presented in addresses by Dr. Chester and Rev.

W. Moore of the Japan Mission. There was also a stereopticon exhibit of Japanese views by Rev. H. F. Williams, editor of The Missionary, and explained by Dr. Moore. The meeting was presided over by Dr. Marquess, chairman of the Assembly's Standing committee of Foreign Missions.

Paragraphs.—The Assembly evidently did not want tag-law, judging by the decisive majority with which the effort to put in operation a ten-minutes rule was voted down.

A more effectual time-saver, if it were in any way practicable, would be to muzzle the enterprising brother whose strident and insistent "Mr. Moderator, Mr. Moderator!" becomes as monotonous and vexatious as the buzzing of a big, blue bottle fly on a weary summer afternoon.

The magic lantern feature of the missionary meeting to-night was a new departure. It might be well for those in charge of such exhibitions to give special consideration both to the views which are thrown on the screen, and the views which are known to be entertained by a considerable part of the membership of every assembly.

Sixth Day—Wednesday.—Among the orders of to-day fixed this morning is to make the report of the Committee on Bills and Overtures on the Elect Infant Clause of the Confession, the second order for to-morrow. The first order will be the report of the ad interim committee upon the law of commissions. This pushes the former pretty far along into the meeting of the Assembly.

Foreign Missions had the right of way this morning. Dr. Marquess read the report of the Standing Committee of this Assembly. Then the Assembly wasted ten minutes in the effort to save time, discussing two notions, the one to take up the report item by item, the other to adopt it as a whole. This last was finally withdrawn and the report went through section by section until Section 10 was reached. This section is the response to the request of the Korean Mission that its members be permitted to go into the organization of a native Presbytery in which they shall have the rights of voting and speaking out still be connected with their home Presbyteries.

The Assembly's committee recommended the reference of this matter to an ad interim committee who shall report to the next Assembly a plan to meet the necessities of the case in Korea and other missions.

Rev. W. H. Hudson of the China Mission commissioner from the Presbytery of Enoree moved as a substitute for the committee's report that the Assembly declines to make any delivrance on the subject and refers the missionaries to their own Presbyteries as the seat of original jurisdiction.

Dr. Marquess in defence of the committee's action said that the committee did not wish to antagonize the Korean missionaries, but were led by the action of the last Assembly which had decided adversely to the request of the missionaries on this very point. Also they feared the missionaries would find that if their request was granted and they were allowed to organize a independent Presbytery on the plan proposed it would work badly in practice. The native pastors might resent their anomalous position and serious friction might result. And in answer to Mr. Hudson's main point he said that our ministers in foreign fields while as ministers they are under the jurisdiction of their Presbyteries, as missionaries are under the jurisdiction of the General Assembly.

Dr. Marquess' speech settled the matter; the amendment was voted down and the committee's recommendation to appoint an ad interim committee was adopted.

The regular business was suspended at this point to hear addresses from four foreign missionaries.

Sixth Day—Wednesday.—Four most excellent missionary addresses were then made, on China, by Dr. Wilkinson of Soochow, on Corea by Dr. C. C. Owen, on Brazil, by Rev. S. R. Gammon, on the Congo work, by Rev. Morrison. This last was especially thrilling. Nothing so far has so stirred the Assembly as his account of the marvelous work at Luebo and Ibanj, with 500 pupils in the day schools, 600 in the Sabbath-schools at Luebo, 2,000 communicants in the two churches—this on the bright side of the picture. And on the other side, the atrocities of the Congo Free State authorities, with 15,000 cannibal soldiers let loose to mutilate and murder and enslave a helpless population, and a settled policy to drive out all Protestant missionaries from the bounds of the Congo State.

Afternoon Session.—The report of the Standing committee of Foreign Missions occupied all the earlier part of the afternoon. The remaining sections of the report went through smoothly with no further effort at amendment or discussion, until the last section was reached, the appointment of the secretary and the Executive committee.

Here two amendments were offered. The first offered by Rev. R. M. Dubose, of North Alabama Presbytery, favored the appointment of a co-ordinate secretary, who shall share the duties of the office, and with the present secretary, have charge of The Missionary and other editorial work. This was lost with very few votes in favor of it. The second, offered by Rev. J. P. Robertson of Brownwood, Texas, revived a matter that most of us hoped was dead and buried beyond resurrection. The amendment was in the form of a proposition to take the matter of fixing the secretary's salary out of the hands of the Executive committee, and have the Assembly fix the amount at $2,500—$500 less than as fixed by the committee.

Much was said about the spirit of luxury creeping into the Church and invading the ministry itself. Comparisons were made between the salaries of this secretary and some other secretaries, and between the secretary's salary and the average salary of the average Presbyterian minister.

A few remarks by Dr. Alexander, the stated clerk, and by Prof. J. D. Blanton of Nashville, served to put this matter in its true light before the Assembly.

First, that it is the uniform practice of the Assembly to leave the fixing of the salaries of our secretaries in the hands of the Executive committees, who are as careful of the Church money as any member of the Assembly can be, who know the cost of living and the other circumstances of each individual case. And again, that in the case under discussion the salary had originally been $3,000; in 1893 it was reduced, on a voluntary proposition from the secretary himself to $2,500, and in 1894 to $2,400, on account of the financial stringency affecting all of our benevolent causes. It had been restored by the committee to the original figure when times grew easier and at the same time the cost of living had largely increased.

The amendment was voted down by an overwhelming majority, the recommendation of the committee adopted and then the report adopted as a whole.

The next order of business developed another storm center. This was a majority and minority report from a joint committee composed of the Standing committees on Publication and the committee on Sabbath-schools. The majority report recommended the consolidation of the office of Secretary of Publication with that of General Superintendent of Sabbath-schools.

The minority report recommended that these two offices be kept distinct, in accordance with overtures from four Presbyteries, Orange, Nashville, West Hanover and Abingdon to this effect.

Col. Livingston, of Atlanta, and Capt. Baker, of San Angelo, Texas, championed the minority report and Rev. Dr. J. A. Wallace, of Bristol, Tenn., defended the report of the majority. This discussion was still on when the Assembly took recess until 8:30 this evening.

Night Session.—Dr. Morris and Rev. J. L. Caldwell, D. D., of Pine Bluff, Arkansas, Rev. Lynn R. Walker, of Pensacola, Florida, Rev. O. G. Jones, Big Spring, Texas, and Rev. W. P. Dickey, Durant, I. T., gave the Assembly a most stirring Home Mission meeting. One of the last speakers, Rev. Mr. Dickey was himself a most impressive object lesson in Home Mission work. His father went to Texas in a wagon with his wife and baby 43 years ago, moved, as the speaker said, not by hope of salary, for hardly $100 was promised him, but hearing the dumb cry of those appalling destitutions.

Mr. Dickey is pastor in Durant, where there is a Presbyterian college with seven professors and three hundred students, and a $15,000 building which a year and a half ago had no existence. He represents the Presbytery of Durant with eight ministers and twenty-two churches. All these ministers have come into the territory and twelve or fifteen of these churches been organized in the last year and a half.

Seventh Day—Thursday.—The status of our Publication business is fixed so far as this Assembly can fix it. The issue of the discussion, began yesterday afternoon, and which occupied nearly all the morning session, was the displacement of the majority by the minority report and its adoption by the Assembly.

The discussion took a wide range and was participated in by a number of speakers.

The main points made against the majority report, viz., the combination of secretary of publication and superintendent of Sabbath-schools in one man, were, first, that the business was too great for any one man; and the interests of one or the other office, and particularly the Sabbath-school interest, must suffer by the consolidation. Further, that the work of the two was essentially different. The place of the secretary is in an office chair, and the place of the superintendent is, so to speak, in the saddle. The same sort of man cannot succeed in both departments, the man of business, methodical and painstaking, is needed for the secretary, the man of magnetism, enthusiastic and winning, is needed for the superintendent of Sabbath-school work. In connection with the speeches on these points, there was some criticism of a number of matters in the business management of the work of publication, such as the sale of the building, the selection of a new location, some statements in the expense account, etc. The charge here, of course, was simply bad judgment, with no hint even of anything wrong.

The principal defense of the majority report was made by Dr. J. P. Smith. He explained most satisfactorily, so your correspondent thought, the matters criticised in the business management, making the point that these matters, particularly the sale of the old building and the purchase of a new site, had been passed upon by some of the best business men in Richmond who are on the committee of publication. He explained also the plan of organization which the committee had been following in the crisis of its affairs which preceded and succeeded the death of Dr. Hazen. This plan follows largely that of the Northern Board of Publication. They have four executive officers—a secretary of publication, a business manager, a superintendent of Sabbath-school work, and an editor of Sabbath-school literature. It is evident that these four officers are necessary to successful conduct of the departments into which this work naturally divides itself. Now our committee also felt the necessity upon them for economy, and the question with them was, how to carry on these departments with the least expense to the Church, and yet with the most efficiency in the work. The best plan seemed to be the combination of the secretary and the superintendent of Sabbath-schools in one man, as these departments naturally go together. As a part of Dr. Smith's speech, Mr. R. E. Magill, the business manager recently elected by the committee, made a statement before the Assembly, showing the great increase in the business recently, and explaining other matters connected with the practical work of the committee.

While Dr. Smith's remarks cleared up any difficulties in the mind of the Assembly touching the management of the business, it did not satisfy the majority of the Assembly as to the wisdom of making the same man the secretary and the superintendent of Sabbath-schools.

When it came to the vote, the minority report carried the Assembly by a vote of 105 to 51 and there was added to this action which keeps the two offices separate and distinct, the election of Mr. R. E. Magill as Secretary of Publication and Business Manager. It is understood that to complete this action, the standing committee on Sabbath-schools will recommend the reelection of Dr. Phillips General Superintendent of Sabbath-school work. (This was done in their report presented this afternoon, but docketed for future consideration.)

It may be further said that what more than anything else determined the Assembly in this was the widespread desire to keep Dr. Phillips at the head of the Sabbath-school interest, and to allow no other demands on his time.

The Inspiration of the Scriptures.

Rev. W. T. Hall, D. D.

This was the subject of the sermon with which the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church opened. The text on which the sermon was practically founded was in Paul's second letter to Timothy, Chapter 3, and the first clause of verse 16. All scripture is given by inspiration of God.

The first question discussed was the Nature of inspiration. It was claimed that this can be learned only from the Scriptures, their didactic statements and their phenomena. Paul used a simple word to express all that is contained in the long phrase, "Given by inspiration of God." The literal meaning of the Greek word is God-breathed. All Scripture is God-breathed. In this case the literal is also the historical meaning of the word. It appears from this that the Scriptural nature of inspiration is fixed: and that Paul meant to say that the Scriptures are the Word of God in a very literal sense. Other Scripture passages were used to show that Paul's notion of inspiration was common to all the sacred writers. There was, however, also a human element in inspiration. God was pleased to em-chosen men in communicating his will to men, and to make a permanent record of that will in human language. This feature was also proved and illustrated in the Scriptures, and the whole was made to yield the following definition of inspiration: A supernatural influence of the Holy Ghost exerted and chose men which rendered them the organs of God in communicating his mind and will to men. Inspiration was then fully distinguished from Revelation and from Spiritual Illumination, and it was shown that this Biblical doctrine of inspiration implied that the autographs of the books of the Bible were free from all error.

The second topic handled was the Extent of inspiration. Paul says: All Scripture is given by inspiration of God. By this he meant, first, that every book in the Bible, in all its parts, is inspired; and second, that words as well as the thoughts are inspired. Both these points were shown to be taught in the text, and to be taught in common by all the sacred writers.

The third topic was the Proof of the doctrine. On this point the speaker dwelt with special emphasis. He merely alluded to the inferential arguments, such as the claims of the writers to speak for God, the organic unity of the Bible, and the supernatural truths in the record. He passed at once to the Miracle as the single positive proof assigned in the Scriptures. He showed that it is true that the Bible Proof of inspiration is the Miracle and that alone. The speaker said that the enemies of supernatural revelation have always and uniformly recognized the fact and hence their war without truce on the miracle. But he said the friends of revelation had not been as wise in their generation as their enemies. Works on inspiration in this day, even when written by evangelical men, make scant deference to the miracle as evidence. In fact some of them have taken the ground that a miracle when witnessed and when reported on satisfactory proof, is not decisive of the inspiration of an Apostle or a prophet.

This led the speaker to raise the question what the Bible meant by a Miracle. He showed that three terms were used in the Scriptures to describe the phenomenon. First, the word wonder.

This impressed the effect on the mind of the hearer. Wonder comes on beholding the unexpected. Every wonder is not a miracle, but every miracle is a wonder. The specific difference of the miracle as a wonder is the violation of that order in nature which we expect from ordinary experience to be uniform. The second word used is power. The idea of power is weakened in beholding an effect. Every effect must have a cause and an adequate cause. We judge of the nature of the power by the effect. The Miracles of the Bible are supernatural effects and consequently require mighty power. No being but God can raise the dead. Hence the Miracle when wrought in connection with the claim to be a message from God, is a clear confirmation of the claim. God becomes a witness in the miracle. The third term used is sign. A miracle, simply as a phenomenon, is proof of the presence of God, but as a sign it is proof of his presence for a specific purpose. In other words it seals the claim of a commission from God. This point was closed by a refutation of the claims of spurious miracles.

The fourth and last topic discussed was the relation of the text to the remaining part of the verse. The speaker showed that the Apostle claimed in the four words used in the second claim of the verse, that the Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice. That the first and second words refer to it as a rule of faith, the third and fourth present it as a rule of life. The Bible teaches all that we need to know in order to be saved; and also all that we are required to do. Now, said the speaker, the Apostle claims all this for the Bible because it is inspired of God. The main element of inspiration gives infallible certainty to the Gospel. It binds the law and the conscience with divine authority. The second element—the * * * * gives stability to Bible truth to all classes and conditions of men.

A Great Loss.

The entire Church of Jesus Christ has of late years sustained a great loss in losing a sense of the "sinfulness of sin." The writer has recently attended a Baptist Convention, a Methodist Conference and a meeting of Presbytery.

During these meetings many prayers were offered and in each of them the writer listened in vain, with a few exceptions, to hear the leaders in prayer confess their guilt before God. If the ministers of Christ have lost a sense of sin, how can they expect the congregations to produce the fruits for which they pray? We are in a most deplorable condition in this respect. It strikes at the very foundation of Christianity; because the crucifixion loses its significance in proportion to our loss of the sense of sin.

Said Jesus to a certain class, "The harlots go into the kingdom before you." The reason that sin is not confessed, is because it is not felt. In brief, let us glance at some of the causes and some of the effects. First, unregenerated men attempting to lead others; "the blind leading the blind." Such men are ashamed on account of pride and self-righteous conceit to even acknowledge what the Bible teaches them upon this subject.

They are afraid that they will lower themselves in the estimation of their congregations, forgetting that "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted." The sinless Christ made Himself of no reputation. Surely if He bore our sins it is as little as we can do to confess them.

Second, another cause is due to the fact that ministers study books written by men at the expense of Bible study. We should not ignore books; but we should not neglect "the Book."

Whatever other qualification a minister may have, if he has not a knowledge of sin, he has no right to preach. This the Bible affords.

Third, a superficial theological education. I would not intentionally reflect upon any teacher of the school of the Prophets; but it is a striking fact that the students under Thornwell, Girardeau and Dabney are peculiarly marked by ability in presenting the "sinfulness of sin."

Fourth, the holiness movement has not failed to impress itself even upon the orthodox Presbyterians.

It is our duty not only to protest against it, but to explain true Bible holiness.

Fifth, perhaps no better explanation can be found than the home affords. The first lessons of a child's religious education consists in teaching it to be a Pharisee. Neither the father nor mother informs the son or daughter that they are born in a lost world without the redemption purchased by Christ. In stating the causes I have suggested the remedy.

But what have been the effects of this loss we have sustained? In brief, it has dried up the fountain of sympathy both for Christ in His sufferings and for the wretched condition of the lost. It has made more adept methods by which to save men rather than the blood of Christ. It has resulted in fewer true conversions. It has impressed men with the idea that the Church is only a decent society. It has paralyzed prayer itself. It has caused the Lord to withdraw His spirit from us. It has ignored Christ as a substitute and made Him a mere example to man. Hence, it has destroyed the idea of the necessity of the atonement. Dr. Neander Woods opened the Assembly in Little Rock with a sermon from the text, "Fools make a mock of sin," but in that assembly many of the prayers did not even so much as notice sin. I trust that the coming Assembly will be baptized with the spirit of the sense of sin and that its holy influence will spread through our Church till the cry thereof will be heard the world around.

Anxiety.

The only way to be loved is to be and to appear lovely; to possess and to display kindness, benevolence, tenderness; to be free from selfishness and to be alive to the welfare of others.—Jay.

A Second Chance.

The potter's house becomes the scene where the prophet Jeremiah was taught some instructive lessons. He was directed to go to the potter's house and study the process of moulding, for that process had its spiritual application to the house of Israel. He would observe that the potter, while at work moulding vessels of every variety, would occasionally spoil a vessel in the process. But the same clay of the marred vessel, while yet soft, untempered and pliable could be moulded again, and altogether another vessel formed out of the same clay. "So he made it again." Upon investigation this object lesson will be found full of instruction, fraught with spiritual truth and moral lessons applicable to modern times. God shows economy in dealing either with individuals or nations, in all his dispensations toward them. One present purpose of this vivid illustration was that God gave to a nation a second chance. The clay that was marred the first time was given a second chance by being used a second time. So of a nation. If a nation upon which the doom of destruction has been pronounced repent, God will exercise forbearance and give that nation a second chance. Ninevah is an example in proof of this. The reverse of this principle is just as true. If a nation to which prosperity has been granted wilfully and persistently sin against him he will rebuke that nation and withhold prosperity. This was verified both by Judah and Israel at different periods of their history. God deals with nations according to general fixed principles. These principles are uniform and hold true to-day. Again, men get a second chance. The spiritual import of this suggestive parable was to the effect that upon condition of repentance and reformation the national life would be prolonged, national tranquility restored and perpetrated. Not this alone, but the people constituting the nation would also be spared to the enjoyment of spiritual and temporal blessings. Repentance and reformation were moral acts of the people. Being made again would be a lengthening of tranquility to the nation itself, to the home and citizen, and also the continuance of their civil and religious liberties.

The ordinances of worship would have continued and the worshiper would have had a second chance. But the second chance is in this world.

These conditions are applicable to this present life, not to the world beyond this life. Nations as such do not have a future state. Individuals do, and their future state is determined in this life. That there may be ample time, a first and second chance is given. The prodigal son neglected the first, but seized hold upon his second chance. It would have been fatal had he not done so. The second chance is the crisis in the career of men and nations.

Some inferences worthy of attention may be drawn from this brief discussion.

1. God is absolutely sovereign. He is more sovereign in his dealings with men and nations than the potter over the clay.

2. God has a plan and a purpose in his own mind. The potter had a plan. If his first design was marred he could form another plan. The plans and purposes of the infinite mind are infinitely wise and gracious. They cannot be frustrated.

3. The gracious nature of God is unfolded and magnified in granting the sinner a second chance. No state or government can confer upon any criminal such a dispensation of grace as God confers upon the apostate, hardened sinner, when "he made it again." The criminal will bear the brand of his crime while he lives, but the true penitent becomes "a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." Let no man or nation presume upon the forbearance of God and sin away the first chance.

W. H. McMaster.

An Equitable Schedule of Apportionments.

The question has been asked scores of times on the floors of Presbyteries: "On what principle are these apportionments for the beneficent causes determined for each church? What is the basis of calculation?"

Has any one ever received a satisfactory answer? Memberships, of course, cannot constitute a just basis. Nor does pastor's salary; for while many churches are straining every nerve to support their pastor, with others pastor's salary is merely one item in a large budget. If neither membership nor pastor's salary is a just basis, of course a combination of the two is not; two wrongs do not make a right. Liberality is, we fear, the generally accepted basis, each church being apportioned what it will probably give to each cause. This is simply putting a tax on liberality and a premium on stinginess. Moreover, as each church has its favorite causes, such a schedule abounds in inconsistencies; no law of proportion can be observed. The schedule too, must be altered with every change of pastors, and in a few years becomes a curious Chinese puzzle.

Now the committee on apportionments of Orange Presbytery, at its recent meeting, brought in a report and schedule which were so highly commended and adopted with such practical unanimity that the main features are herewith submitted.

The basis of calculation throughout is the apportionment for foreign missions. This is taken as being the largest amount and therefore a convenient dividend. This apportionment for foreign missions is determined for each church as follows: Town churches are apportioned at the rate of about 70 cents per member, village churches at about 50 cents, country churches at 30 cents, and mission churches at 20 cents. The exact rate for each church is determined by the financial ability of its members. The apportionments for all other causes are determined by taking a certain fractional part of that for foreign missions: Assembly's missions, one-third; Synodical and Presbyterial missions and orphanage, one-half; ministerial education, one-fourth; Presbyterial Fund, one-sixth; relief fund and colored evangelization, one-seventh; colportage, one-eighth; church and Christian education and Bible cause, one-thirteenth. The last two causes were included because they are parts of our regular schedule and should not be overlooked by church treasurers.

The total amounts according to the above ratios are just about what are needed for the various causes, taking into consideration the special contributions of stronger churches to certain causes. The apportionment per member for all causes amounts, for town churches, to about $2.70; for village churches, to about $1.90; for country churches, to $1.15; and for mission churches, to 80 cents. It may be objected that these rates are unfair to the country churches. That would be true but for two facts: 1. The great demands upon town churches for local mission and charitable work; and 2, their generous contributions to certain causes. Foreign, Synodical and Presbyterial missions are largely supported by town churches interested in special fields.

The merits of the whole scheme are: 1. It is constructed according to a definite principle, and is consistent throughout. 2. While the principle is permanent, its application to each church is elastic, and the whole schedule may be easily revised every year to meet changing conditions. 3. The distribution of the burden among churches is effected on an equitable basis, and if there is any unfairness it can be readily detected and corrected. 4. The apportionments being partly on the basis of membership, sessions will be incited to transfer non-resident members. E. C. Murray.

By Henry Jerome Stockard.

A column of sand before the Kamsin's breath,

Colossal, mad, inane,—

Wrought of the desert's death, that threats with death

The pilgrim of the plain,—

Such is the atheist, shapen of shadow vast,—

A ghost dancing the storm,

That flings back to the dead, lone tracts at last

Its spent, collapsing form!

A Change in the Ecclesiastical Year.

r. Editor:—

Can you tell us why our church calendar runs from April to April instead of coinciding with the ordinary year? It would seem more natural for the two to harmonize unless there is some cogent reason for the diversity, and your correspondents have sought in vain for such reason. On the other hand, many practical advantages would follow the changing of our time-schedule so that the year would end Dec. 31st instead of March 31st.

First, the change would bring harmony. December the month for overhauling the books and closing accounts. The farmer and business man and house-keeper wind up the business of the year, take an inventory of their stock and prepare for the new year. It is more natural and convenient for the accounts of the church to be settled at the same time. It is more business-like.

Morally the effect would be better than to wait till March for the annual church settlement. The preacher could direct the thoughts of the people to their spiritual accounts and to their church obligations. These could thus become an integral part of the annual reckoning, as things to be taken into account in balancing the books for the year past and in planning for the year to come. The moral pressure of this association of business and adjustment of spiritual claims, and, in a financial way, would result in the devising of more liberal things for the coming year. Moreover December is the season of joy when the heart is warm and open, and a man will give more to make up any deficits that may occur in church apportionments. Money is scarce in March. The merchant has bills for spring goods to meet. The farmers are a most important class in our agricultural South and at that season have their fertilizers to buy and other heavy expenses to bear. So financially the change would be beneficial.

Second, the greatest advantage lies in the wider range of possible dates for the spring meetings of Presbytery. The General Assembly meets about the middle of May. Hence the Presbyteries have to wait till after March 31st for the sessional reports from the churches, they have to limit their time of meeting to some date between April 1st and May 15th; and practically this margin narrows down with most of them to the second and third weeks in April. Let the year end Dec. 31st and there would be a range of four months or more in which the Presbyteries could each choose the most convenient date for its spring meeting.

1. In that case they could select different dates, instead of so many meeting at the same time.

The church suffers every spring from a Presbyterial congestion. Out of a list of eighty meetings of Presbyteries, thirty-one occurred in one week and twenty-four in another. Nearly three-fourths in two weeks. Of the eight Presbyteries in the Synod of North Carolina, five met one week, three the next. Now here is the evil of such a condition plainly manifest. The various agents and secretaries are debarred from attending the vast majority of the Presbyteries, and must confine their visits to the General Assembly and various Synods. The representative of one of our most honored and useful colleges, that is furnishing more ministers to the Synod than all others combined, after making an address before Albemarle Presbytery that will be felt in every church represented there, expressed his regret at owing to the present custom of bunching the meetings together he thought he would not be able to visit the Presbytery again for five years. Rarely does the secretary of Foreign Missions or Home Missions or the other great causes appear before a Presbytery. Now what the people need is enlightenment of a specific and practical kind as to the condition and claims of these causes. Personal interest springs from personal knowledge, and then the money follows. Of course the quickest and surest way to the church at large is through its nearest court, the Presbytery. It is the working body of the church and an impression made on it yields vastly larger results than one made on the higher and remoter courts. It directly touches every church in its bounds, and thus touches the individual member.

Let the Presbyteries meet at different dates and thus give our secretaries and agents an opportunity to attend, instead of confining them to Synods and Assemblies, and the good results would speedily appear throughout the church. A visit from Dr. Phillips would be felt in every Sunday-school in Albemarle Presbytery, for every school would endeavor to be represented if he were expected to be present. And so it would be with the other causes and the other Presbyteries.

2. In a range of four months Presbytery could better adapt its time of meeting to circumstances. Each could choose the date that would secure the largest attendance and greatest convenience of the delegates, and that might chance to fit best all round. This date would probably vary in different sections and under varying conditions.

A minister or candidate would have a better chance of being transferred from one Presbytery to another without having to wait six months for the fall meeting.

The wider range of possible dates would obviate the necessity for many a pro re nata or adjourned meeting.

Especially the matter of convenience and comfort could be considered in selecting the time of meeting.

E. g., in this section April is about the most inopportune month that could be chosen. It is a busy month with nearly all classes. Farmers are preparing their crops. Merchants are either getting ready to go North for goods, or have gone, or just returned, have interests involved that require their personal attention. Physicians are kept busy with the many ills of this mercurial month. And house-keepers dread the ordeal of entertaining Presbytery in April, when the pantry is empty and the garden bare.

Here are some practical benefits that would accrue from such a change. Others occur to the mind that lack of space precludes mentioning. Emphasis is laid on the advantage gained in this section by its Presbyteries' being enabled to select an earlier date of meeting. In other sections of the Assembly a later date may be more opportune. In this very thing lies one virtue of the proposed change: Each Presbytery is enabled to choose its own best time, with regard to climatic conditions, the docket and special items of business.

Now what obstacles are in the way? The change would in no wise affect the Book of Church Order. It is true that in the introduction of the new policy one difficulty would emerge, only one and that comparatively trivial.

The first year of the change the reports from the churches would be incomplete (covering only from April to January) and to that extent the clerical work of the courts would be disarranged. Then the business of the church, readjusted to a more natural and practicable calendar, would move forward the more rapidly and smoothly. The obstacle is a small one, whereas the benefits are numerous and worthy of serious consideration.

Minister and Elder.

Men weary of platitudes; they have a disgust of crudities. They tire of spiritless, dry, and heartless forms. They believe in sincerity and earnestness. They relish manly words. They like to feel the pull of a great soul on their souls—the tug and draw of a sympathetic heart. They require the grip of mind. They must believe in the absolute honesty of the preacher. In every service of worship they demand, with the force of an instinct, that it shall be worship; it must have the soul.—Bishop Foster.

In his old age Bishop Randolph Foster said of himself: "Every morning I say, Father, let me come home. My work is done. Why may I not come home to-day?"

The Editor's Chat with the Reader.

Our Assembly Correspondent has certainly made the scenes of the Assembly live before us. This issue concludes the report with the exception of some of the Assembly papers which will be published in full next week "for information and attention."

We reserve comment also on some of the items which Mr. Lapsley reports, until next week,—when we shall give a review of the three Assemblies—the Southern, the Northern and the Cumberland.

But by cutting down two pages of the editorial space and moving other departments forward we have found room for some interesting contributed matter. Rev. W. H. McMaster sends a suggestive article, The Second Chance. Rev. E. C. Murray, D. D., discusses An Equitable Schedule of Apportionments. A Change in the Ecclesiastical Year is another suggestion that is worth considering. The poem, by Henry Jerome Stockard, dedicated to Dr. Momet, who has been supplying the Raleigh Church, is a gem of its kind.

THE LEXINGTON ASSEMBLY.

Seventh Day—Thursday.—The publication discussion occupied so much of the morning that there was little room for anything else.

The report of the standing committee on Theological seminaries was read and adopted. So also was he report on the Assembly's Home and school. This last was accompanied with a brief address from Mr. S. W. Somerville, superintendent in which some of the interesting facts relating to that most deserving institution were presented to the Assembly.

Afternoon session.—It will interest the many devoted friends of the Latin Thesis to know that the official count of the vote of the Presbyteries was presented to the Assembly this afternoon, and showed that this landmark of consecration is retained by a vote of 47 Presbyteries in its favor, 27 against it, and 3 who did not know how to vote (presumably).

The report of the standing committee on Education was read and adopted; the reports of the committees on Sabbath-school, and Publication were read but put on the docket.

Then came that gust of eloquence which always accompanies the choosing of the next place of meeting. Dr. Plunkett put Augusta, Ga., in nomination, urging the plea that the First Church, Augusta, the mother church of the Assembly, would celebrate her centennial next year, and she asks that the Assembly come and help her keep her one hundredth birthday.

Rev. D. A. Planok, D. D., of Mobile, Ala., put that city in nomination, presenting the invitation from the venerable Government Street Church, Mobile, endorsed and backed up by the new Presbytery of Mobile.

There were many seconds to both nominations, and when the vote was counted, Mobile showed up 90 and Augusta 76. As a facetious brother, whose home is not far from Waynesville, N. C., expressed it, the Augusta man Plunk-ed in the eloquence, but the Mobile man Plan(c)k-ed down the votes.

The Assembly then got back to serious business by taking up the report of the standing committee of Home Missions.

Things went on smoothly until it came to the question of adopting the new plan of Home Missions presented by the ad interim committee (printed in the Standard with its commendation last week.) This was endorsed by the standing committee with only one slight amendment. The Assembly locked horns over an amendment offered by Rev. C. R. Hyde, D. D., to the effect that the Assembly adhere to its present plan.

This fight was on when the Assembly took recess until 8.30 p. m.

Just before recess, however, by unanimous consent the following resolution offered by Judge W. H. Mann, of Nottoway, Va., was adopted.

Resolution on conferring with the President.—Resolved: by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States that a committee, of which Rev. W. M. Morrison shall be Chairman, consisting of five members be appointed by the Moderator, whose duty it shall be to prepare and present to the President of the United States, a memorial setting out the rights of Missionaries from this country in the Congo Free States, under the treaty of Berlin, and how these rights are disregarded by the Government of the Congo Free States, and urging the Government of the United States to take such action as may be necessary and proper under the circumstances to ascertain and correct the wrongs complained of and to secure the rights to which citizens of the United States, who are Missionaries to Africa, are entitled.

And the senators and representatives for the states under the jurisdiction of this Assembly are earnestly requested to give to the committee appointed under this resolution all the assistance which it may be in their power to afford.

Night session.—A fine meeting was had tonight in the interest of colored evangelization presided over by Rev. Melton Clark, of Florence, S. C., and participated in by Rev. I. C. Champney, of Montgomery, Ala., (colored) and the secretary, Rev. D. Clay Lilly, D. D.

The colored brother's address was a sensible well worded address, giving a fair picture of the condition and needs of his race. Dr. Lilly was at his best and his conclusion in which he pleaded for white teachers to gather the colored children into Sunday-schools, was especially affecting.

After Dr. Lilly's address the Assembly resumed business. It was evident to an experienced eye, that there was throughout the Assembly that parliamentary restlessness which precedes a coming storm.

First, a motion to adjourn was voted down by a close vote on a division of the house. Then one or two minor matters were put through quietly.

The report of the standing committee on colored evangelization, which had been read as a part of the popular meeting, was adopted unanimously.

With like unanimity the Assembly adopted a resolution offered by Rev. R. B. Willis, D. D., Searcy, Ark., that the devotional exercises of to-morrow morning's session should be devoted to special prayer for our missionaries on the Congo, in view of their dangerous and difficult situation as disclosed by Mr. Morrison's address. The resolution also asks for special prayer on the part of all our people in their churches and their homes.

The Assembly also adopted most heartily a resolution offered by Rev. A. D. McClure, D. D., of Wilmington, N. C., expressing its great appreciation of the work of Rev. Dr. Phillips as ad interim secretary of publication.

Then a little storm center developed around a report from the committee of foreign correspondence, presented by the chairman, Rev. Dr. Webb. This was in response to a telegram received this afternoon from the general assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church now in session at Nashville, Tenn. Their telegram asked that we appoint a committee of conference with a view to close relations and if possible or-union, between all the Presbyterian Churches in this country. Dr. Webb's report recommended that we send this telegram in answer:

"While this Assembly sympathizes with your telegram we do not see our way clear to appoint the committee requested."

This brought Rev. Dr. Willis to his feet, who said that he felt that it was almost a waste of words to ask this Assembly to take any other course than that recommended by the committee. But for the sake of those situated like himself, he wished some other action might be taken. He explained the situation in Arkansas and throughout the West, where the Cumberland Presbyterians are at least as numerous as we are. He said that church is made up of two elements, one Arminian and the other Calvinistic. With the hope of one day attracting to our church that Calvinistic element he wished that a committee of conference might be appointed. But he felt that in urging this on the Assembly he was beating against a granite wall.

Rev. J. W. Moore, of Japan, followed in the same strain, saying that he did not believe the Southern Church would go to union with any other church, even if that church could be made to order.

Dr. Webb explained that the brethren had overlooked the language of the telegram from the Cumberland Church. That did not ask for a committee of conference with the Cumberland Church, but for a committee to consider union with all the Presbyterian churches in this country. That step he did not think our church was prepared to consider.

The vote was then taken almost unanimously in favor of the committee's report.

After this little ripple came the great wind—another set to for the elect infant clause.

Dr. Whaling got the floor, and held it in spite of every effort to take him off his feet by amendments and substitutes, and motions to adjourn.

He first moved to take from the docket the report of the committee of Bills and Overtures answering in the negative the overture from the Presbytery of Tuscaloosa asking to strike out the word "elect" from the clause, "elect infants during infancy, etc."

Dr. Whaling stated in advance that his purpose in calling this matter from the docket was to make a motion which would put the said infant to sleep so far as this Assembly is concerned.

The point of order was at once raised that as this matter was made a special order for to-morrow afternoon, it could not now be taken up. The moderator ruled that it was always competent for a court to order the taking up of business even in advance of a special order. The vote was taken on the motion of Dr. Whaling, and the vote stood on a division in the house, 60 to 60. The clerks, however, who had not voted at first, put in their vote, both voting for Dr. Whaling's motion and so the matter came before the Assembly.

After a number of interruptions, the motion having been made to adopt the report of the committee of Bills and Overtures, Dr. Whaling made his speech. He said in substance that he believed a very large majority of our ministers and people all over our church were nansated with the discussion of this question, and that at least eighty per cent of the members of this Assembly were willing to abide by the decision of the Jackson (the last) Assembly, and did not even want the matter discussed at this meeting. He did not think it right that at the other fifteen or twenty per cent should be allowed to have this fire-brand amongst us. And as the pastor of the church in which the Assembly was meeting, and in behalf of the other pastors and Christian people of the community, he did not want the Assembly to leave behind it the legacy which this discussion would entail.

And so to test the sense of the Assembly, he said "Mr. Moderator, I call for the question."

And then came a scene as near approaching disorder as is possible among Presbyterians, who sometimes get excited, but rarely lose their temper. One brother (from North Carolina, the way) waved his hand and said: "Mr. Moderator, he has no right to muzzle this Assembly!" Another brother moved to adjourn, cries of "No! No!" rose from all over the house. The Moderator said, "shall the question now be put?" and then said (after the vote) "the noes have it, and the motion is lost!" A division was called for and the vote stood 68 to 62 against Dr. Whaling's motion!

The Assembly was then ready to go to bed, and promptly adjourned with prayer by Dr. Marquess.

Eighth day—Friday—morning session.—After protracted debate occupying a good part of this morning's session, and finally limited by the adoption of a five minutes rule, the Assembly voted overwhelmingly for the amendment offered by Rev. Dr. C. R. Hyde of Fort Worth, Texas, as noted in the account of yesterday afternoon's proceedings. This takes the milk out of the cocoanut so far as the report of the ad interim committee on Home Missions is concerned. The part stricken out by Dr. Hyde's amendment (see p. 13 last Presbyterian Standard, top of right hand column) is sections 1, 2, 3, as follows:

1. The General Assembly's Executive committee of Home Missions shall be composed of the Assembly's Secretary and one representative from each Synod, ordinarily the Chairmen of Synodical Home Missions, together with two business men residents of the city where the committee has its main office, a majority of the whole committee constituting a quorum.

2. The Executive committee shall hold one regular meeting at the office of the Assembly's secretary on the third Wednesday of February of each year, at which all appropriations for the ordinary Home Missions work of the year beginning April the first next thereafter shall be made.

3. The Assembly, at the time of the election of said committee, shall designate seven of the members as a sub-committee, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum, who shall meet monthly at the secretary's office to issue and such business as may be committed to it by the Executive committee. Said sub-committee shall also hold such special meetings as may be called by the secretary.

For this the amendment simply substitutes the words: "The Assembly's executive committee of Home Missions shall be as at present constituted."

The debate was participated in by Rev. J. S. Moore, D. D., Sherman, Texas, Rev. J. L. Caldwell, D. D., Pine Bluff, Ark., Dr. Hyde, the author of the amendment, Rev. O. Y. Jones, Big Spring, Texas, Rev. J. H. Patton, D. D., Marietta, Ga., Rev. J. P. Robertson, Brownwood, Texas, all of whom spoke in favor of Dr. Hyde's amendment and against the committee's report. These brethren urged the expense of getting the members of the committee together, if it should consist of a member from each Synod, consisting in railroad fare enough to support a home missionary half a year. Also it would differentiate this committee from all the other executive committees; as well might the Foreign Missions committee be composed of at least one member from all of our mission fields. Making up the committee in this way would cause it to be largely composed of interested members, each of them representing divergent interests, instead of being composed as at present of those who have an outlook over the whole field and represent no particular field. And finally it would make it difficult for the Presbyteries to get their needs directly before the committee, as each would feel bound to present his case through his Synodical representative on the committee.

The other side of the question in favor of the ad interim committee's report was represented by Rev. W. D. Morton, D. D., of North Carolina, Elder J. M. Love, of Kansas City, Missouri, and Rev. Lynn R. Walker, of Pensacola, Fla.

They argued that this new plan was the product of two years' deliberation on the part of those who had studied the situation from every point of view; and it was endorsed by a committee of this Assembly, and so entitled to the utmost consideration.

It came also from those who represent the Synods that raise the money which supports the work, while those who spoke on the other side were, with one exception, the representatives of the beneficiaries of it.

It also was necessitated by the complications which had beset the Home Mission work, growing out of the constantly increasing local Home Mission movement. It was urged by Mr. Walker especially that the Home Missions committee as at present constituted was organized in the interest of the frontier work, instead of the whole church; and that the destitutions in the older Synods were, in his judgment, woefully neglected. He said it was time to call a halt in that policy of BETHANY—The Bethany Church, Presbytery of Columbia, had a communion service, the first Sabbath in May. The services beginning Friday evening, were conducted by the Pastor and were well attended. It was a pleasant, and to many, a profitable service. One member, a young man, was received by letter, making six who have been received by letter and one by examination since the beginning of the present pastorate, Dec. 1, 1902. A. L. Doak.

LOUISIANA.

SHREVEPORT; First Church.—During the year closing March 31st, 1903, nineteen members were received by confession, twenty-two by letter. Fifteen thousand dollars were contributed to all causes. The support of two foreign missionaries was undertaken. A suburban mission work was begun under the care of Rev. Geo. G. Woodbridge. A beautiful and well-equipped church-house was erected, containing school, Bible-class, missionary, reception and kindergarten rooms. The Sabbath-school enrollment has increased about one hundred during the year. Since the close of the church-year special meetings have been held by Rev. Frank Wright, and twenty-three new members were received at the May quarterly communion.

Our boys here will have a few months vacation in the summer, during which they are anxious to secure employment, to support themselves, and also, if possible, to help them along in their school term.

Any one wishing to employ labor might do well to communicate with us. These colored young men have been working under Southern white gentlemen, and recognize the point of view of the Southern people, and are polite and sensible in their relations toward the white people. Some of them are fairly good gardeners, some will make excellent butlers, table-waiters, house-servants, etc., a few can teach school, and all can perform ordinary manual labor.

Our friends could help us materially in securing employment for these young colored men this summer.

EUTAW—We have recently enjoyed a very delightful meeting here, beginning the first Sabbath in May and continuing through the following Sabbath. Rev. D. C. Lilly, of Tuscaloosa, preached the first sermon on Sabbath night greatly to the edification of our people, and on Monday morning Rev. R. C. Gilmore, of Livingston, came to our assistance and continued the services through the week.

Bro. Gilmore is an excellent preacher, easy and quiet in his manner, but earnest and forcible in his presentation of truth. His preaching was greatly enjoyed by our people, and Christians were quickened in the spiritual life, and brought to a heartier consecration in the Master's service. There were four additions to the church on profession of faith, to two of whom the ordinance of baptism was administered. We are thankful to God for this season of refreshment and encouragement and pray that God's blessing may rest upon our brother in his own field of labor.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Davidson Commencement.

Commencement of 1903 would have been notable if only for the presence on the Sabbath of Dr. Jones, of Philadelphia, and Dr. Campbell, of Asheville, and for the address on Tuesday of President Ira Remson, of the Johns Hopkins. Dr. Remson spoke on "Scientific Methods," putting his remarks in popular form, but evidencing throughout the trained scientist and the scholar worthy to be at the head of a great university.

Dr. Campbell is too well known in the North Carolina and adjacent Synods to need any introduction or to make fitting any lengthy notice of his sermon. It is enough to say that both personal friends (and they are legion here) and all others that heard him, were open in their expressions of satisfaction and pleasure in his work. Dr. Sparhawk Jones, though a preacher of national reputation, is not so well known in the South, and a word about his discourse may be in place. All here, with one consent, agree that the back laureate was a great sermon. Barring two defects, and there are real ones, a too rapid utterance at times, and a too indistinct articulation, making it impossible for those in the back part of the church to hear, Dr. Jones was at his best, and exhibited the perfection of his art. He possesses an attractive personality, indeed a striking face, with its keen eye, indicative of the light that burns so brightly and so steadily within. The rapid play of feature and the quick and varied movement in expression betoken the actor that plays his part true to life. In pose of the head, in gesture even in the pause and seeming hesitancy when turning a page, as if the eye could not for the instant catch the looked-for word, or, if memory were failing to recall it, in it all there lies an indescribable charm. A voice not rich and deep, but under full control and whose varied intonations delight the hearer, sometimes with its mellow softness and then again with genuine oratoric thrill. The text was John 6, 67 and 68, "Would ye also go away? Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go, thou hast the words of eternal life." The meager outline of the thought is 1, the evanescent, fleeting character of popularity, the necessity for ebb and tide in human honors; 2, the grand contradictions and seeming inconsistencies of Revelation; but a little while before the Saviour had confidently declared the ultimate triumph of His Kingdom, "all that which the Father giveth me shall come unto me." and now apparently His soul has over it a shadow of gloom. Would ye also go away? Christianity has its contradictions, its mysteries, but as the world despite its valleys and mountains, its depressions and lofty eminencies, still retains its sphericity, so paradoxes and contradictions stand reconciled in the mind of God; 3, the bold inspiring and inspired utterances of Peter, "to whom shall we go," which translated means "if we reject the Gospel, what remains what better can others offer," to men across whose pathway sooner or later the shadow of religion will and must fall. We hesitate to outline so imperfectly a sermon that was great both in its perfection of form and in its spiritual import, teaching the old but ever engaging truth that Jesus alone has the words of eternal life. It may be compared to an exquisite fabric of artistic design, woven in the richest colors and illuminating in its beauty the immeasurable worth and preciousness of the Gospel of Christ.

At the reunions in the societies' hall on Monday evening addresses were made by W. F. Stevenson, Esq., and A. L. Gaston, Esq., valedictories and responses by W. M. Dunn, R. G. McAlilly, A. R. McQueen, W. M. Bain. The closing moments of the two sessions were further enlivened by bright and witty impromptu speeches from the many visitors.

On Tuesday night in the Junior Contest, orations were delivered by J. W. Currie, R. D. Dickson, J. W. McNeill from the Phi., C. A. Cornelson, B. G. Team, L. W. White, from the Eu. At a later hour the Alumni Association was called to order by President G. H. Cornelson.

Rev. W. L. Lingle, of Rock Hill, and Dr. John R. Irwin, of Charlotte, were elected trustees, and Mr. Lingle succeeds the late Hutchison White on the executive committee. The officers of the association for the coming year are: Rev. G. W. Cornelson, President; Rev. W. C. Brown, vice-President; Prof. John L. Douglas, secretary. At 11 a. m. a general reception was tendered the alumni in the rooms of the Biblical Hall at which were present trustees, faculty, alumni, and visitors. The hour was of course the more delightful by reason of the presence of the ladies. A great crowd always assembles on Wednesday. The auditorium just completed in time for the exercises is as large as ever, but thoroughly renovated and greatly improved in appearance, and is equipped in more modern style. The entrance doors open in either direction and are provided with large glass panels, so that speakers and audience can be easily seen by those standing outside on the fourth floor balcony. A new rostrum, not so high as before, sloping floors and ornamental wood carvings above the windows are noticeable features among the changes. Above all, the acoustic qualities are good.

The programme announced orations by the following members of the graduating class: W. W. Arrowood, valedictory; H. H. Caldwell, salutatory; W. M. Dunn, philosophical oration, R. D. Daffin, A. R. McQueen, R. S. Johnston.

Rev. G. W. Cornelson, in a tasteful speech, presented prizes from the Eu. Society to R. K. Timmons, debater's al; W. E. Cooper, essayist's; W. F. O'Kelly, declaimer's, from the Phi., to J. W. McNeill, debater's medal; H. E. Murray, essayist's; H. B. Smith, declaimer's.

ev. Dr. W. E. Boggs, of Jacksonville, Fla., well known one of the gifted speakers of the Southern Church, delivered the orator's medal, won the evening before, by C. A. Nelson; the William Banks' Biblical medal to H. H. Caldwell, and a Bible from Dr. Shearer to W. W. Arrowood, for special proficiency.

another session of this strong institution for the education onng women has closed. It has been a year eminently sfactory from all points of view. The school has been sed in health and results, and its personnel was never r,—a fact, in view of the record at Peace, which speaks mes.

On Sunday, the 17th, Dr. Egbert W. Smith preached the annual sermon. His theme was service—not to be ministered unto, but to minister—and the speaker left a lasting impres- sion for good upon all who heard him.

On Monday afternoon a large number of friends and alu- maue gathered upon the beautiful lawn, the occasion being the class day exercises. An attractive programme was given, many features of which were unique. Original poems and songs, bright speeches, clever responses, a letter from the grand daughter of James Russell Lowell, etc., contributed to the pleasure of all.

Tuesday evening came the grand concert. The music was of the highest order. Visitors from a distance, whose oppor- tunities of travel and culture in athletics pronounced it sur- prisingly fine.

The graduating exercises were on Wednesday, the 20th.

A large audience assembled at 10:30, a. m. Among those, besides the graduates, who occupied the platform, were Drs. Moment, Smith, Stringfellow, and Dinwiddie. After a sol- emn, fervent invocation by Dr. Moment, an invocation char- acteristic of the great divine, a well-arranged program was carried out.

The young ladies who received diplomas were the follow- ing:

Hazel Doles, Elm City, N. C.—First Honor. Literature and language.

Helen Wilson Easley, South Boston, Va.—Literature and Science.

Fannie Myatt Fort, Raleigh, N. C.—Literature and Sci- ence.

Annie Dudley Green, New Bern, N. C.—Literature and Science.

Kate Bernard Hill, Fulton, Ky.—Second Honor. Litera- ture and Science.

Irene Lacy, Raleigh, N. C.—Literature and Science.

Etta Ferebee Peace, Oxford, N. C.—Second Honor.— Literature and Science.

Jennie Mabel Powell, Raleigh, N. C.—Second Honor. —Literature and Science.

Myrtle Maude Surratt, Jackson Hill, N. C.—Second Honor. Literature and Science.

Lillian Russell Beavers, Raleigh, N. C.—Violin.

Elizabeth MacMurtrie Dinwiddie, Clarksville, Tenn.— Steuography and Typewriting.

Annie Dudley Green, New Bern, N. C.—Elocution.

Elizabeth MacMurtrie Dinwiddie, Clarksville, Tenn.— Second Honor. Full Graduate.

The following certificates were issued:

Annie Clark, Raleigh, N. C.—Mathematics.

Edua Earl McEachern, Jacksonville, Fla.—English, History and Science.

The President then read the following:

Honor Roll.—Whit Bond, 96.2; Hazel Doles, 96.13; Mary Sherrill, 96.13; Kate Hill, 95.87; Etta Peace, 95.8; Bula Brown, 95.51; Annie Laud, 95.49; Louise Finley, 94.41; Myrtle Surratt, 95.17; Lily Pair, 95.03; Evelyn Vroom, 94.9; Minnie Lon Kelly, 94.7; Ruth Pilson, 94.59; Daisy Eggleston, 94.56; Kate Lee Banks, second term, 94.43; Elizabeth Dinwiddie, 93.75; Jennie Powell, 93.75; Buena Spruill, 92.65; Lila McLean, 92.17.

Preparatory Department.—Eugenia Clark, 96.5; Alice Mc- Farland, 65.86; Amelia Stockard, 95.45; Marion Keav, 94.52; Bernice McAden, 94.37.

After the presentation of diplomas Dr. Dinwiddie spoke very feelingly as his last words to the graduating class. He was brief, but intensely to the point. "The straight and narrow way" was his theme, the way he himself has walked so far.

Dr. Stringfellow, o Boydton, Va., then addressed the assembly. His message was one of helpfulness and encour- agement. He paid a high tribute to the young women of the institution. They impressed him as being of an unusually high type socially and intellectually. He paid his respects in strong terms to society, and his warnings were worthy the remembrance of everyone.

The Everitt Mathematics Medal was presented to Miss Maude Surratt, of Jackson Hill, N. C. Miss Hazel Doles, of Elm City, N. C., was a close competitor, falling below only a small fraction. Miss Doles made the highest average in her class, and was especially commended by the president.

An elaborate banquet followed, at which Miss Doles was toast master. Dr. Bratton, Hon. Josephus Daniels, Dr. Alfred A. Moment, Dr. Stringfellow, Dr. Dinwiddie, and others responded most felicitously to appropriate toasts and they all arose and sang the song composed by Mr. Stockard for the commencement. As Dr. Moment said, it was an occasion to be remembered. He had attended commencements at the most notable institutions in this country, from our own Princeton, in New Jersey, to Leland Stanford, in California, but had never been present on a more delightful occasion.

THE LEXINGTON ASSEMBLY.

expansion which the present committee was pursuing until the destitutions of the older portions of the church were better overtaken.

As already indicated, however, it may have been as to argument, the vote went strongly against the report of the committee. The fact that Dr. Moore, chairman of the standing committee, spoke against the report and Dr. Morris, the secretary, gave it only a qualified support, may have had something to do with the result. But outside of this the determining factor, as far as your correspondent could see, was that the work has taken on new life under the committee as at present constituted, and it might be a set-back to this new impetus if the machinery were interfered with.

Besides the settlement of this important question a number of other items were transacted at the morning session. The report of the auditing committee and of the standing committee on the Bible cause were adopted. The records of the Synods of Louisiana, Mississippi, Georgia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Alabama were approved.

The Assembly was engaged in a discussion of another item of the report of the standing committee of Home Missions, the answer to an overture from Greenbrier Presbytery when recess was taken for dinner. Just prior to the recess the Assembly spent a half hour in special prayer for our missionaries on the Congo in accordance with the resolution offered last by Dr. Willis.

Afternoon session.—The agony is over, so far as the elect infant question in this Assembly is concerned.

Though championed by such a man as Rev. Wm. Hoge Marquess, D. D., of the Louisville Theological Seminary, not even an explanatory foot-note is to be sent down to the Presbyteries for their adoption.

The discussion occupied the entire afternoon session and was participated in by Dr. Marquess, Elder Jas. Quarles, of Louisville, Ky., Dr. Hall, Elder W. M. McPheeters, of St. Louis, Rev. K. M. McIntyre, North Carolina, Rev. O. B. Jones, Big Springs, Texas, Dr. Converse, Dr. J. A. Wallace, Dr. Webb, Rev. W. P. McCorkle, Savannah, Ga. Of these, Marquess, Quarles, McPheeters, McIntyre, Jones, Converse, McCorkle, "lined up" on the side of Dr. Marquess' paper given below. Hall, Wallace and Webb were against it, and championed the winning side.

Only a synopsis of the discussion will be attempted, though your correspondent took full notes, and if a special edition of the Standard is called for, devoted to this subject, the discussion can be reproduced in full.

First, I give Dr. Marquess' paper which he presented at the close of his speech.

"In answer to the overture from the Presbytery of Tuskaloosa, asking an amendment to the Confession of Faith, Ch. 10, sect. 3, striking out the word 'elect,' we recommend that the request of the Presbytery of Tuskaloosa be answered in the negative, for the reason that the section as thus amended would not fully state and properly correlate the doctrines of grace as held by our Church in relation to the salvation of infants.

In lieu of the proposed amendment the General Assembly does hereby recommend and send down to the Presbyteries for their advice and consent the following explanatory foot-note to the Confession of Faith, Ch. 10, sect. 3, to wit:

1. This language is not properly continued as teaching that any infants dying in infancy are not saved.
2. The Holy Scriptures, when fairly interpreted, warrant us in believing that all infants, who die in infancy are included in the election of grace, and are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Holy Spirit."

The first part of Dr. Marquess' paper, answering the Tuskaloosa overture in the negative and giving the reason therefor, was adopted by the Assembly with but two dissenting votes.

The two proposed foot-notes were voted on separately an aye and no vote. On the first roll-call the ayes were the noes 76; on the second roll-call, the ayes were 53, noes 86.

In the discussion there were some matters which were disputed by anybody. First, the thorough Calvinism and entire loyalty to our standards of both sides of the discussion; second, the entire accord of both sides in the belief that infants dying in infancy are elect and so saved.

It is to be noted again that the Assembly was a unit (with but two dissenting votes) against the proposition to amend the Confession.

The simple question on which the discussion turned was, it expedient to have adopted by the Presbyteries and printed in the Confession a foot-note explaining this much disputed clause?

It was contended that this clause is ambiguous, or whether ambiguous or not, it is continually misconstrued. Ambiguity is not the genius of Calvinism. Our creed is not a political platform which is framed to mean one thing to one man and another thing to another. And this ambiguity and misconception is not found among our enemies alone; it is found by our own people.

It was even said that a storm is slowly gathering which when it breaks will raise not only this clause, but may sweep away the very foundations themselves. By a reasonable concession to this feeling now, we may quiet this agitation and avert this more serious danger which threatens us in the future. So much in advocacy of the foot-note.

On the other hand, it was pointed out that this movement has a history, and is inseparable from its history. That history shows that the objection is not to the word elect in the one clause, but to the doctrine of election wherever found. And if we make one concession, even to the extent of an explanatory foot-note, we will simply feed the flames. The agitation will grow bolder and more determined; this pressure which began with our enemies will not be lifted, until the trace of the word elect is found in our entire system.

In the judgment of your correspondent, it was this view, evidently, which determined the Assembly. A majority of our church has set its face like a flint against not only the lowering of our flag, but even anything that looks like lowering it.

The discussion of this subject, as said, occupied the entire afternoon session, and the Assembly took recess until 8:30 p. m.

Night session.—It was thought by many that the Assembly would strike a more rapid pace to-night and business would go through on railroad schedule.

But though the Assembly resisted all motions to adjourn early, and held on to business until towards mid-night, only a few matters of consequence were disposed of.

The report of the standing committee of Home Missions was finally adopted, with two important amendments. The first amendment was the cutting out of the report the important change recommended by the ad interim committee, proposing to give Synodical representation on the Executive committee. This, as we have seen, was stricken out and the committee remains as at present, with the addition of two members on the side of Atlanta, Rev. T. P. Hay, of Florida, and Rev. E. F. Davis, of Alabama.

The second amendment was in relation to the overture from Greenbrier Presbytery, which was under discussion this morning just before recess for dinner. This overture recommends the appointment of an ad interim committee, which shall suggest to the next Assembly some remedy for a great and wide spread evil, viz., the many ministers without charge and the many vacant churches.

This overture had been referred to the standing committee of Home Missions and they recommended that the Assembly decline to appoint the committee, on the ground that the Book of Church Order leaves this whole subject in the hands of the Presbyteries.

Plunkett, who defused this recommendation of the committee, said that he had been appointed by his Presbytery years ago to look into this matter and draft an overture to the Assembly on the subject. He had written to Drs. Hey, Strickler, Palmer, Barnet, and other fathers of the church and learned theologians, and they had answered that evil was without remedy, except in a more vigorous exercise of the episcopal powers of the Presbyteries.

On the other side and in advocacy of the appointment of a committee, facts and instances were given to show that the value of the good advices of these learned theologians, varies continued and increased: good ministers were left out of work and were thinking of turning to secular occupations; other denominations kept their pulpits supplied and ministers employed—surely jure divino Presbyterianism could be so worked as to accomplish the same end.

The outcome of the discussion was that the Greenbrier Conference was acceded to by the Assembly, and the ad interim committee appointed, to consist of Rev. Eugene Daniel, D. D., Rev. M. L. Lacy, D. D., Rev. R. L. Telford, D. D., T. C. Johnson, D. D., Rev. C. D. Gilkeson and Elder Preston of Lewisburg, W. Va.

In the report of the committee of Home Missions, the report of the standing committee of Sabbath-schools and Young People's societies ran the gauntlet of the Assembly, though numerous amendments were proposed, it went through with but little change. In connection with this report Dr. Phillips made a stirring little talk, commending the Young People's Societies for boys which have their headquarters in Richmond, and have proved a most effectual means of instilling boyish energy and enthusiasm in the direction of Christian work: and particularly of imbuing them with the spirit of Presbyterianism.

The report of the committee on Systematic Benevolence was called up, and here another storm center developed. The report recommended a change in our schedule of collecting education from the month of November and putting it in July, and giving November to collections for the fund.

Dr. Alexander, who is a member of the assembly's Executive Committee of education, strongly opposed this and Dr. Plunkett, and the secretary of Ministerial Relief, Dr. McPherson, as strongly advocated it. Rev. T. E. Converse, D. D., moved to amend the committee's report by putting the date of the fund in April instead of November, as proposed. Another brother moved as a substitute for both propositions that the schedule of collections remain just as it now is. Without reaching a vote on this proposition the Assembly adjourned until to-morrow morning at nine o'clock, leaving the matter and a number of important items of business still undecided.

Thursday—Saturday morning.—Unfortunately for the interests of journalism, the mailing facilities of Lexington will not permit of your correspondent's getting off the account of the last hours of the Assembly in time for the Standard's last issue to press.

There are still on the docket the reports of the standing committees of publication and of church and Christian education; and the report of the ad interim committee on the subject of commission, which was printed and distributed to members of the Assembly early in the session, made an order of the day a number of times, and this shoved aside until the next day and which will almost certainly go over to the next assembly.

There is one other action which the Assembly will certainly take and with more than usual heartiness and unanimity.

That is, a most sincere vote of thanks, to the church and people of Lexington, the warmth and abundance of whose hospitality has seldom been equaled and never excelled; to the genial pastor of the church, whose effort to stave off unpleasant discussion will be swallowed up by the memory of his abundant courtesy, unflinching tact and skillful arrangement of the Assembly's popular exercises; to the committee of arrangements, and the fair postmistress who handed out letters to all, and discussed theology—and—and—other things, with the unmarried members; to the railroads, telegraph and telephone companies, the court-house and even the jail (!) which afforded unusual facilities for the convenience of the Assembly; to Washington and Lee University and the Virginia Military Institute for courtesies exchanged—in short, to everybody and everything who have contributed to make this one of the pleasantest and most successful meetings of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

Your correspondent has only to add that he sat down to the reporter's table, when the moderator took his text in the opening sermon, and expects to be found there, when the Assembly shall sing: "Blest be the tie that binds," and within the limits of time and (newspaper) space has described all he heard and saw to the best of his knowledge and belief.

R. A. Lapsley.

Staunton, Va., R. F. D. No. 1.

From Associated Press—Saturday.

Consideration of reports by committees developed so much discussion that a five-minute rule of speech-making was adopted. The committee on the narrative of the state of religion was submitted and ordered to be inserted as an appendix to the minutes. The report showed that 81 out of 82 Presbyteries had submitted narratives to the committee. The committee on foreign correspondence reported relative to a communication from the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church asking that a committee be appointed to consider, with a like committee, a closer union of the Reformed Churches, that the appointment of such a committee be not made, as there was evidence in sight that justified the Assembly in hoping that the object proposed might be gained in another way.

A resolution of thanks to Robert White, elder of Regent Square Presbyterian Church, Loudon, England, for services rendered the Assembly's African mission as its representative in London, and for kindly aid given missions and missionaries, was passed. The report of the committee on Sabbath-schools was adopted by the Assembly. Dr. A. L. Phillips, of Richmond, as recommended in this report, was retained as general superintendent of Sabbath-schools and Young People's societies. The report on systematic benevolence was adopted. It showed that every Presbytery on the rolls, including two new ones organized during the past year, had sent a report. This report showed that a grand total of $466,753 had been given for specific causes during the year ending March 31, which, compared with last year's report, showed a net gain of $13,975.

The forty-third General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church formally adjourned to-night.

The executive committee of publication was directed that after conference with Presbyterian authorities, the sum of $20,000 be raised for the publication cause. The Assembly's standing committees of publication and Sabbath-schools and Young People's Societies were consolidated into one committee under the name of Committee of Publication and Sabbath-school Work.

In Memoriam.

Esther Phifer White was born of godly parentage at Concord, N. C., on Nov. 27th, 1843. Her father, Robt. W. Allison, was for many years a ruling elder in the First Presbyterian Church at Concord, while her mother daily ministered to the necessities of the Saints. Consecrated to God in infancy and reared in an atmosphere of piety, in early life, she gave her heart to the Saviour and was permitted to witness a good confession and by a consistent life commend the religion of Christ. She was educated at the old Barhanville College at Columbia, S. C., as also the Burwell College at Charlotte, N. C., and was thus fitted by nature, culture and grace, to adorn any sphere in society. She was married Nov. 21, 1866, to Capt. Samuel Elliot White and at once removed to Fort Mill, where for 37 years, she was not only his loving companion, but the friend of the entire community. Identified with all its interests, everything that tended to the financial, moral, or religious prosperity of the town, met her hearty approval and support. She was an influential member of the Fort Mill Memorial Association, and in a tribute to her memory, the ladies say, "She was our first vice-President and the most ardent and influential member of the Association: Her wise counsel, prudent forethought, and prompt liberality made her our moving spirit and proper leader. Sad indeed, are our hearts, when we feel that no more will we have her dear presence with us, and no more hear her sweet words of wise and loving counsel."

The Kings Mountain Chapter of D. A. R.'s say, in speaking of their loss, "She was a woman of unusual charm of manner and grace of character, combined with intellectual gifts of a rare order."

By inheritance her veins were filled with patriotic blood and so she ably seconded her husband's efforts in erecting the Monument to the soldiers, the women, the faithful slaves and the Catawba Indians that adorn Confederate Park and very much of the beauty and grace of the marble as well as of the eloquent and thrilling inscriptions are the product of her taste and fluent pen.

Everybody loved Mrs. White. Wherever she went, she made friends. And in hundreds of letters received by the family, tributes are paid by old and young, rich and poor, to the loveliness of her character, the gentleness of her disposition and the purity of her life.

Her Christian life was beautiful in the harmony with which she had learned to speak a word in season to the weary and lend a helping hand to the needy. Man rise up to bless her memory and like the friends of Dorcas in the Upper Chamber unfold the precious memories of her loving care. She looked after the operatives in our mill, (of which her husband was president) with a motherly interest ministering to their necessities, sympathizing with them in their sorrows and advising them in their perplexities, and there were no sincerer mourners in the large concourse that attended her funeral than the Mill population, many of them with flowers for grave and tears of sorrow on their cheek.

Expressions of sympathy for their honored President in his great sorrow was signed and forwarded by every operative in the factory. She was loyal and true to her Church and her pastor for a quarter of a century she was a teacher in the Sabbath-school—the organist, and the alto singer in the choir. She was a Charter member and the first vice-President of the Foreign Missionary society and the returned traveller from Foreign lands will miss her cordial greeting and her liberal contribution.

In a service of 21 years she was the pastor's friend, ready at all times to assist by influence, prayers and means. Constant in her attendance upon the services of the sanctuary and always ready with a pleasant greeting and the helpful word. The writer never heard her gossip or slander; the bright side of her church, her friends and her neighbor was for the public: the dark side was for an interview with the Master who heareth in secret. Loved by every one and surrounded by every comfort, she had much to detain her on this side of the river: there were ties she would not willingly break and yet, with father, mother, sisters, four children and many friends waiting on the battlements to greet her, she was not a stranger in her Father's house. With exquisite taste and a dear lover of beautiful things, we cannot begrudge her the company of her Saviour and the glories of the new Jerusalem. One child, Mrs. LeRoy Springs of Lancaster, two brothers, Rev. J. Y. Allison, of Louisiana, and Hon. J. D. Allison of Concord, N. C., and one sister, Mrs. J. M. Odell, of Concord, survive to join her beloved husband in mourning their irreparable loss.

She died suddenly in her home at Fort Mill, Tuesday afternoon, April 28th 1903, at about five o'clock. For several days she had been suffering with an attack of gastritis, but on the day of her departure seemed unusually well. She had promised her little grand-son, Elliot Springs, to take a walk with him and the little fellow becoming tired of waiting for her went into the house and found his grand-mother upon the floor dead. "It is evident that she expired in a few minutes, the cause being acute gastritis, complicated with heart trouble." Just a few hours before he g away, she had expressed her entire business and the wish that the sums might come suddenly; even then the ariots and horsemen were at the in waiting."

Thursday morning after services at

The Household.

The Guest Room.

the natural instinct of hospitality is one to give to one's guests the best the house affords. True welcome in this outpouring of one's love and ght, but when one takes for the t room the best room in the house, a mistake. The guest room, being occupied, needs only to be pleas-and have a good outlook, but the best in the house should be for the heads of the family.

The first duty of the guest room is to make the guest comfortable, and to this everything should be turned which can be done within the room. There should be nothing in the room so expensive that if an accident happens to it the guest is made unhappy by a sense of having lost something which cannot be replaced. Let the room be furnished as taste and means of the housewife dictates, but have these minor matters carefully noted.

The bureau should be left to the temperamental occupant; so should the closets and small writing desk or table should provide all the conveniences for writing which the guest would require, even envelopes and postal cards being provided.
The dresser should be a cloth brush, and all the minor conveniences of the toilet. Some good housekeepers go so far as to supply a curling iron and the means for heating it, though this is rather more than is required.
It is always well to have a conch in the guest room, because sometimes the guest wishes to rest and yet hesitates to disturb the bed.

Nor is it necessary that this should be expensive. A cot with wire-woven mattress on which is any cheaper mattress and a fancy cover will be comfortable and if supplied with many gay pillows will be an ornament for the room. The imitation Bagdad rings make artistic covers.

One of the fancy work baskets or bags, which are so pretty, may well be devoted to the comfort of the chance comer within the home. Let it hold needles of all sizes; fine and coarse thread, both black and white; darning cotton, thimble, scissors, hooks and eyes, and buttons. This may be so tastefully and yet inexpensively made that it is an ornament to the room. Most women carry with them their own toilet appliances, still it does no harm for the hostess to place on the washstand a little almond meal, rose water, and glycerine, or such conveniences as one most approves. Of course, every housekeeper provides liberally towels, face cloths, and such essentials, but not every housekeeper send drinking water to the room at night, or sends in, with the morning call, a pitcher of hot water where the house is not provided with all modern improvements. Such little additions add greatly to the comfort of the guest and really take but little time and strength.

Matches and small lamps should be provided even where the house is lighted by gas or electricity. Many persons who are bad sleepers like a lamp beside the bed and by its light they read themselves asleep. Other light does not serve the same purpose, for the exertion of turning out the gas drives away the sleepy impulse. In the room let there be some reading matter—prose or poetry, or a volume of both. Magazines or lighter reading will be preferred. There need be only a few volumes, and these may be in paper covers if no better is in the house, but the reading matter itself is of great importance, as every one can testify who has been a guest in a strange house and has not wanted to appear too early to the family.

The guest room should speak of quiet, welcome and repose. There is a fancy just now for the guest book in which each occupant of the room writes his or her name and anything else that seems applicable to the visit. The prettiest thing for the outside of such a book is a design of poppies, which hold within their frame these verses:

OUR GUEST.

Sleep sweetly in this quiet room,
Oh, thou, whoe'er thou art,
And let no mournful yesterdays
Disturb thy peaceful heart.

Nor let to-morrow mar thy rest
With dreams of coming ill;
Thy Maker is thy Changeless Friend;
His love is round thee still.

Forget thyself and all the world;
Put out each glaring light.
The stars are watching overhead;
Sleep sweetly then,—good-night.

MISS IDA M. SNYDER,

Treasurer of the Brooklyn East End Art Club.

MENSTRUAL irregularities are generally the beginning of a woman's troubles. With the vitality at a low ebb, the blood weakened, the digestion disordered, she goes about pale-faced, hollow-eyed and haggard, a piteous contrast to the blooming health of her former self. But over 1,000,000 women have found health again by taking Wine of Cardui.
As a regulator of the menstrual periods
Wine of Cardui has never been known to fail. It has seldom failed to restore perfect health, even in the most persistent and aggravated case of weakness.

Miss Ida M. Snyder, of No. 535 Bergen Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., has used Wine of Cardui and she says it helped her into a new life. Health to Miss Snyder is worth a great deal. She is an attractive young woman with intellectual attainments and she occupies the position of Treasurer of the Brooklyn East End Art Club. This position marks her as a person of intellect, culture and refinement and it speaks highly of the respect and trust her fellow women have in her. She writes:

"If women would pay more attention

Miss Ida M. Snyder.

to their health we would have more happy wives, mothers and daughters, and if they would use more intelligence in the matter of medicines, observing results, they would find that the doctors' prescriptions do not perform the many cures they are given credit for.

"In consulting with my druggist he advised McElree's Wine of Cardui and Thedford's Black-Draught, and so I took it and have every reason to thank him for a new life opened up to me with restored health, and it only took three months to cure me."

You may secure the same relief as Miss Snyder, if you take Wine of Cardui as she took it. Thedford's Black-Draught is the companion medicine of Wine of Cardui and it is a liver and bowel regulator which assists greatly in effecting a cure. If you take these medicines according to directions, the relief and cure is simple. Some cases are cured quickly and others take longer because the disease has run longer.
Remember how Miss Snyder took Wine of Cardui and has health. The same medicines are offered you to-day.

WINE of CARDUI

A million suffering women have found relief in Wine of Cardui.

The Home Circle.

Inverness and Memories of Flora Macdonald.

Our farthest north on our European tour was Inverness, the capital of the Highlands, which we reached from Oban by way of the magnificent route through the Caledonian canal, and which we left by way of the railroad that runs southwards through the battlefield of Culloden, where the young Pretender was defeated and the cause of the Stuarts finally overthrown in 1746. The town has 20,000 people, is well built of substantial materials, a fresh-looking pink stone predominating, and is the cleanest city we have seen in Great Britain. It has a fine situation, its business portion occupying the more level ground on both sides of its broad, clear river, while handsome villas stretch along the terrace which rises above the valley. At a short distance from the town there rises from the level plain on the riverside a strikingly beautiful wooded hill, on the summit and sides of which the people of Inverness have made their cemetery, one of the loveliest of all the lovely cities of the dead.

From elevated points, and especially from the Castle Hill in the midst of the town, one gets a very fine view of richly diversified scenery, comprising, besides river and firth and valley, a wealth of hills, some wooded and others gay with purple heather and green ferns. This central hill, on which the handsome castellated county Buildings now stand, was the site of Macbeth's Castle, concerning which Shakespeare represents King Duncan as saying: "This castle hath a pleasant seat; the air nimbly and sweetly recommends itself unto our gentle senses." Just in front of the buildings which now occupy this celebrated site stands a graceful statue of Flora Macdonald. She is represented as a comely young woman, with her left hand lightly holding her dress skirt and her right raised as though shading her eyes while she gazes intently across the water. A very finely executed Scotch colliie at her side looks up into her face.

The Career of a Royal Adventurer.—Being a native of North Carolina and having most pleasant memories of the Highland Scotch communities of the Cape Fear country and the fine old town of Fayetteville, where Flora Macdonald lived during a portion of her maturer life, I was delighted to be thus reminded that I was now so near the scenes connected with the romantic incidents of her younger days, when, at the peril of her own life, she saved the worthless life of Prince Charles Stuart, the young Pretender to the British throne.

Students of that period of English history, or readers of Waverley, that immortal romance which, as the first venture of its then unknown author in this line of literature, gave its name to the whole series of those unrivalled historical romances which were put forth thereafter in rapid succession by Sir Walter Scott, and which have given a greater amount of wholesome pleasure to the world of readers in general than any other series of books that were ever written—students of history and readers of Waverley, I say, will remember that, after the Pretender's delusive victory at Preston Pans, near Edinburgh, and his disappointment at the failure of the Roman Catholic population of western England to rise in support of his cause, he fell back to the northern part of Scotland, and there, on the desolate moor of Culloden, four miles from Inverness, he was overwhelmingly defeated by the Duke of Cumberland, and his army of devoted Highlanders cut to pieces. Over that bloody field the star of the Stuarts, a race which had so long been a curse to Great Britain, sank to rise no more, and the Protestant succession has never since seriously been called in question.

A Fugitive in the Hebrides.—The Pretender, with a few faithful friends fled through the wild country to the southwest, and, after many hardships and hairbreadth escapes, reached the Outer Hebrides, and was concealed in a cave there on the wet and windy island of Benbecula. But the fact that he was on this island soon became known to the government, and then his position became perilous in the extreme. By sea and land every precaution was taken to prevent his escape, every road, pass and landing place being guarded, and the whole coast being patrolled by government vessels in such numbers that no craft, however small, could approach or leave the island unobserved, except perhaps under cover of darkness by special good fortune, while some two thousand soldiers made diligent search on shore; in addition to which a prize of $150,000 was offered for his capture. In this crisis of his affairs it was agreed that a final attempt for his rescue should be made through the agency of a young lady of the neighborhood, Miss Flora Macdonald, then twenty-four years of age, two years younger than the Prince himself, but whose selection for this perilous office argues a prudence and strength of character far beyond her years.

A Woman to the Rescue.—This remarkable young woman was well born, being the grand-daughter of the Rev. Angus Macdonald, known throughout the Isles as "the strong minister," on account of his extraordinary physical strength. She was also well-bred and well educated, having enjoyed not only the advantages of her own home and of the other respectable families of her native island, but also the benefit of long residence in the home of her kinsman, Sir Alexander Macdonald, of Monkstadt, in the Island of Skye, and of three years in the Ladies Seminary of Miss Henderson, at Edinburgh. Sir Alexander was loyal to the house of Hanover, and had refused to take any part in supporting the pretension of Prince Charles. Flora also was indifferent to the claim of the Stuarts, and saved the Pretender's life out of pure compassion. Indeed, afterwards, when she had been released from her imprisonment at London on the charge of treason, and the Prince of Wales called on her and asked her, half jocularly, how she dared to assist a rebel against his father's throne, she answered with characteristic simplicity and plainness that she would have done the same thing for him had she found him in a distress.

Feminine Courage and Resource.—The plan adopted and successfully carried out for the escape of the Pretender from Benbecula to Skye was this: The heroine having expressed a strong desire to visit her mother, then living in Skye, procured a passport for herself and two servants from her step-father, Captain Hugh Macdonald, who though in command of a body of the King's militia, Benbecula, shared the general compassion for the beaten prince, and the general desire that he might escape with his life. One of these servants was Nathaniel Macdonald, a faithful, intelligent, and pretty well educated youth, who had spent several years in Paris, and therefore spoke French fluently, and who, after the adventures with which we are here concerned, followed the Pretender to France, and became the father of the celebrated Marshall Macdonald, Duke of Tarentum, one of Napoleon's great generals. The other, ostensibly an awkward and overgrown Irish girl, was really Prince Charles himself. With the principal member of the party thus disguised, and armed with the passport for use in case of need, these three, with a picked boat crew of six, set out on a dark night when the rain was falling in torrents, and, after an exceedingly tempestuous and perilous voyage, arrived safely in Skye, where the coolness, courage and resourcefulness of Flora Macdonald baffled the King's officers, overcame all difficulties, and eventually accomplished the desired end of getting the Pretender to the mainland, when, after three months more of severe hardships he got aboard of a French vessel and so reached the continent. That was utterly unworthy of the great service rendered him, is clearly shown by the fact that, though he lived for more than forty-two years after he parted with her on the beach of Portree, he never acknowledged by letter or otherwise the dangers to which she exposed herself in order to save his life. At his death his body was appropriately laid to rest in St. Peter's Cathedral at Rome with the rest of his Romish kindred.

Flora Macdonald's part in the escape of the young Pretender could not long be concealed. As soon as it became known she was arrested and taken aboard one of the King's vessels, and General Campbell sent to Dnnstaffnage Castle on Loch Etive, his note to the Governor of the castle referring to her as "a very pretty young rebel." After ten days of imprisonment there, she was taken to Leith, the port of Edinburgh, and placed on board the Bridgewater, where she was detained for nearly three months, being lionized the while by the aristocracy and professional men of the Scottish metropolis in a way that would have turned a weaker head. An Episcopal clergyman of the place wrote of her as follows:

"Although she was easy and cheerful yet she had a certain mixture of gravity in all her behaviour, which became her situation exceedingly well, and set her great advantage. She is of a low complexion, and well shaped. One would not discern in her conversation that she had spent her former days in the Highlands, for she speaks English easily, and not at all with the Erse tone. She has a sweet voice, and sings well; and no lady, Edinburgh-bred, can acquit herself better at a table, than what she did when in the Western Isles. Her wise conduct in one of the most perplexing scenes that can occur in life,—her fortitude and good sense—are memorable instances of the strength of a female mind, even in those circumstances that are tender and inexperienced.”

November, 1746, the Bridgewater was with our heroine and others, to stand trial on charges of treason. Her popularity, however, was so great, and public sentiment so strongly opposed to the infliction of any stern punishment upon a young and attractive woman for the performance of a self-sacrificing act of humanity, that, after a confinement in the gloomy Tower of London, whose walls have enclosed so many heavy hearts in the course of the centuries, she was turned over to friends, and became responsible to the Government for her appearance when demanded, after remaining a State prisoner in a mitigated manner for some twelve years, she was set at liberty, under the Indemnity of 1747. The first use made of her freedom was to solicit a special favor that her fellow-prisoners from the Isles should be granted the liberty as herself, and the request granted, one of those thus released was her future father-in-law, Macdonald Kingsburgh.

Marriage.—Some three years after her return to her native islands, she was married, in 1750, to Allan Macdonald. In his Journal of a Tour to the West Indies he describes the man to whom his heroine yielded her heart and hand: “He was completely the figure of a great Highlander, exhibiting the gracefulness and manly looks which our Scotch song has justly attributed to that character. He had his tartan thrown around him, a large blue sash with a knot of black ribbon like a sash, a brown short coat, a tartan coat with gold buttons, a bluish sash, and tartan hose. He had jet-black hair, tied behind, and was a large, manly man, with a steady, sensible appearance.”

Entertains Dr. Johnson and Boswell.—It was in 1773 that Boswell and Samuel Johnson were entertained at the hospitable home of Allan Macdonald and his famous wife. The great biographer and moralist was delighted with his hostess and describes her as “a woman of middle stature, soft features, gentle manners, and elegant.” He asked her as a special favor to let him sleep in the bed which had been occupied by the unfortunate Prince, a request which she readily granted, and, to his immense gratification, she would also furnish him with the usual sheets on which the Prince had lain, and which, by the way, she will till the end of her days, taking with her to North Carolina and where they continued to live comfortably and happily for eight or nine years. She died on the 5th of March, 1790, and was buried in the church yard of Kilmuir, in the north end of Skye, her funeral being more numerously attended than any other that has ever taken place in the Western Isles.

hook, and in which, at her own request, her body was wrapped after her death. Before leaving the house next morning Dr. Johnson laid on his toilet table a slip of paper containing the pencilled words, Quantum cedat virtutibus avrum, which Boswell renders, “With virtue weighed, what worthless trash is gold.”

She Moves to North Carolina.—Through no mismanagement or extravagance of his own, but solely in consequence of losses incurred by his father, by the part he had taken in the Pretender's cause, Allan Macdonald had become seriously embarrassed, and so, in the hope of mending his fortune, he determined to emigrate to North Carolina, where many other families from Skye had already settled. Accordingly in 1774, with his wife and their nine children, he sailed for Wilmington, and, after receiving various attentions there, whither the fame of his wife had preceded them, they went up the Cape Fear River to Cross Creek, now called Fayetteville, and after some months in Cumberland county, where they were regular worshippers in the Presbyterian Church, purchased a place on the borders of Richmond and Montgomery counties, which they named Killiegray.

Misfortunes in the New World.—Their life in America was a sad one. Two of their children died, a bereavement made the more trying to the mother because of the absence of her husband, whose duties as a military officer required his presence elsewhere. The Revolutionary War was on the point of breaking out, and Governor Martin, seeing the honor paid to Allan Macdonald by the Highlanders, made him Brigadier General of a command of his countrymen, which became a part of the ill-fated army that was defeated by the American patriots at the battle of Moore's Creek. He was captured and committed to Halifax jail, Virginia, as a prisoner of war. With misfortunes thickening around her, her husband in prison, her five sons away from home in the service of the King, her youngest daughter enfeebled by a dangerous attack of typhus fever, and her adopted country in the throes of war, Flora Macdonald resolved, on the recommendation of her imprisoned husband, to return to Scotland, and, having obtained a passport through the kind offices of Captain Ingram, of the American army, she went to Wilmington, and later to Charleston, when she sailed in 1779.

Her Return to Scotland and Her Last Days.—During this voyage she had the last of her notable adventures, in a sharp action between the vessel on which she sailed and a French privateer. She characteristically refused to take shelter below during the engagement, but appeared on deck and encouraged the sailors, assuring them of success. She had an arm broken in this battle, and was accustomed to say afterwards that she had fought both for the house of Stuart and the house of Hanover, but had been worsted in the service of both.

When peace was restored between Britain and America, her husband was released from his long imprisonment and returned as speedily as possible to Skye,

Covenanters Play Baseball

We are always glad to hear from our Covenanter boys. Below we publish a letter from Company 17, telling of their visit to a neighboring town and playing a game of base-ball. There is no better place to try a boy's faith than on the ball ground, and we are happy to be able to say that the boys of the Davidson company, showed themselves to have the true spirit in their conduct on the diamond. From a private source we happen to know that their behavior under trying circumstances on another occasion led to the organization of a company of Covenanters because the people saw the beneficent influences of their society on the lives of the boys.

The base-ball nine of the company of Covenanters No. 17 of Davidson, N. C., played the Concord High School on the home ground, on the sixth day of April, and easily won by a score of 13 to 1. The next game between the two teams was played in Concord on the twentieth. It was a great day for the boys, despite their being beaten 9 to 4, and will be remembered by them all.

Three buggies, three surries, and one large three-seated hack were occupied by the seven girls and the eighteen boys, who constituted the party that arrived safely in Concord at 2 p. m., chaperoned by Miss Mary Martin and Dr. Maxwell.

Immediately after the arrival, rain began to pour in torrents; and soon it was seen that the prospects for a game were poor. It continued to rain until five and then every one prepared to return.

Just at this time the captains decided to play a game of five innings, which was played under the greatest difficulties to both sides, resulting in the Covenanters being beaten 9 to 4.

At 6:30 the party from Davidson began their homeward journey with eighteen miles of muddy road and two or three swollen creeks before them.

They were hardly out of the city before darkness set in, with only here and there a lonely star visible.

The first half of the trip was free from accidents, except that one of the whippertrees on a surry was broken which was kindly fixed by Mr. Charlie Hamilton, near whose home it was broken. During the return there were none except that a surry, having been driven a little out of the road, for it was so dark that one could not see more than ten yards ahead, ran against a large stump, had to be backed, and the road found again. Sometimes a buggy in front would suddenly stop, its occupants asking something about eating some supper, and thus cause the whole line of vehicles, which were going at a rate that would befit a funeral procession, to stop.

They reached Davidson about half past eleven. The day was enjoyed immensely by all those who were in the party, and from that time the Covenanters have taken a greater interest in their work and more people are becoming acquainted with the name of "Covenanters" as a religious society for boys.

Papa, the Chaplain, or Enduring Hardness,

By Leigh.
Chapter IX.

It was weeks after the time of our last chapter, and early spring in Osage. Mr. Dysart and his children were taking their accustomed Saturday morning walk in the woods, when they vied with each other in collecting all sorts of specimens to exhibit at home. But this practice which had been somewhat discontinued of late had led them to-day beside the railroad, where broken and twisted rail, telegraph wires torn down, and charred sleepers and poles made a sorry show, and then turning into the woods the mouldering bodies of slaughtered animals made them plunge hastily deeper into the pine forest.

The laugh had died off Jack's lips, and the spring out of Polly's step. In silence they sat down on a bank overlaid with the velvety pine-needles to wait their father's approach. As he came up he saw the boy moodily digging on the earth beside him with his knife while his sister watched absently: evidently her thoughts were of the ruin she had just seen. This would never do. He pointed to a yellow jessamine which had climbed to the very top of a pine-tree, and there where the sunlight had touched it, a long spray full of buds had burst into bloom, and waved a golden banner above the dark green. "Come, come Jack," he said, "don't you see that challenge. I thought this morning we were to see who could take back the first yellow jessamine to mamma. Agile as a cat the boy sprang into the low branches of the tree, and in a few seconds descended with the prize; but seeing the wistful look on his sister's face laid the flowers on her lap. Mr. Dysart gave his son's shoulder an approving pat, and then as they all sat down again said meditatively, "I wonder how that jessamine had the courage to bloom!"

Polly raised her eyes in astonishment: "Why, Papa, they always do bloom in March, and this is the very last of the month!"

"Well then I wonder how they always have the courage to bloom in March! It's no time at all since we had frost and sleet and chilling rains, and"—here a strain of clear, sweet notes from a neighboring branch interrupted him—"and if there isn't a red bird and yonder a blue bird, come back. What in the world are they thinking of?"

"Papa, what are you thinking of?" cried Polly, it isn't always winter: we have had that a long time, and now the days are beginning to be warm and the birds and flowers know it, and so they are coming back."

"And you are sure it will?" continued Papa, looking quizzically at the earnest face before him.

"Why of course, it is always so."

"And yet," said Papa, "though the birds and flowers instead of looking back at the dark skies and nipping frosts of winter, put forward to the joyous spring. I know a boy and girl who are acting just the other way. Although we have been kept so wonderfully through the long, dark winter of war, they seem to no hope, no faith at all, for the future. Why, just think! The fever, the pestilence, the famine, have laid us low, and that should give us hope for the days to come. Surely these young soldiers are not going to forget their courage, and lose heart now?"

"But, sir," said Jack, "you spoke of peace. How can it be that when the war is all going on?"

Mr. Dysart shook his head with a sigh. "A very little longer, Jack," he said, "his eyes were as the eyes of a man who has stood by the bed-side of the dying and knows that he is watching the struggle. 'It will soon be over and peace will come.'"

"You mean Papa, that we will have peace up," the boy said in a choking voice, "and you call that spring?"

"Not the spring we would have chosen for dear Boy; not the one we have dreamed and prayed for; yet for all that the will of God's sending: and what we are to do is to accept it, not only with submission, but trustingly and bravely, there is good wrapped up in it since it comes from a Father's hand."

There was a pause while the birds sang and the children sat thinking. Then Jack jumped up, smiling, "Then Papa, I expect we had better go back by 'Middle Branch' and get white violets and blue flowers. They always bloom earliest."

Mr. Dysart knew that his two soldiers had gotten their courage back, and were ready for a new campaign.

As they bent their heads together over the bunch of white violets Polly whispered to Jack, "Does Papa think the Yankees will give us a better?"

"Yes," very glumly, "and this is just the way he took to let us know it, to shake our minds, you know?"

"Yes," said Jack again, "but it was for you Polly; any fellow knows that how long can't starve forever like our fathers have been doing."

"Well," said the little girl looking up at her father, the tears shining in her eyes, "that's one good we've found all right, they won't have to be hungry any more."

She ran gaily off to exhibit her new dress to her father, Jack whistled to himself; he should have to look to his laurels in this sort of fighting, or his little brother would show herself the better warrior.

It was easier to face danger than to shake off the gloom and anger he felt knowing that the war was ending, and defeat for the South. He betook himself to breaking and gathering clumps of bay, but all the time he was struggling with bitter thoughts. "I don't believe I can do it," he said aloud unconsciously. "You must if you are to be a good soldier," said his father's voice to him.

"Must what, sir?" stammered Jack concerted at being overheard.

"Why endure the hardness of defeat and disappointment, and face the future as a brave strong man," replied his father smiling.

"How did you know what I was thinking of, sir?" asked the boy.

"Because I know what I was thinking of," was the answer. "Do you suppose I haven't been preaching this doctrine to myself to-day and other days?" He held out his hand. "It's a hard fight," he said, "let's try it together," and Jack returned his father's grasp without a word.

On an April evening we take our last peep at the Dysart family. The tidings of Lincoln's assassination had just reached the town, and people aghast were looking blankly at each other.

Mr. and Mrs. Dysart, with their two younger children were seated upon their front piazza listening to Tom Dysart who had just brought the news. "It is a terrible misfortune," murmured Mr. Dysart, when the tale was ended. This experience was quite beyond Jack's comprehension. He had always supposed Mr. Lincoln to be the cause of all their woes, if he were out of the way would not things go better, and yet here were all the grown folks looking like mourners. Some mutterings to this effect caught his father's ear.

"Mr. Lincoln was a just and moderate man," he responded quietly. "Now, the policy he would have exercised will be overturned: the South will be blamed for what really comes to it as a shock, and we shall suffer again."

He relapsed into silence, broken by Tom. "Just what I think, sir; and so I came to tell you and mother that I have decided to join the party soon to start for Brazil." A slight exclamation from his Mother's quiet lips checked him an instant. "You see Mother," he resumed presently, "no mortal can tell what is to happen next, and so Dr. Gaston and the rest have arranged to leave at once. It is best so because if things go badly here I can have matters arranged for you all to join me. They say it is the very best place for a mechanic, and Jack here will soon be old enough to be my right hand man."

"But what about me, Brother Tom," said Polly half crying at the idea of ever leaving home for good and all.

"You," said her Brother, catching her in his arms, "why you will grow up into a lovely Senorita, and marry a rich Brazilian, to be sure!"

The children's dreams that night were of the strange country of which Tom had talked. Jack hunted and fished in tropical forests, while Polly gathered brilliant flowers and beautiful fruits, or watched the flight of the wondrous birds of which her brother had told her.

Were those dreams to come true? And did they really seek a new home, in South America?

Well that is in the next verse of the song.

The End.

A Curious Tree.

There is a tree in the West Indies that the natives say "grows in dishes!" It looks like an apple tree. They call it the calabash.

It bears very queer leaves and large white blossoms that grow right from the trunk and larger branches. After the flower comes the fruit, just as our apples or peaches do. But this fruit is in the shape of a gourd, only stronger and much larger, sometimes a foot in diameter,

Lincoln's Promise.

While a member of Congress, Abraham Lincoln was once criticized by a friend for "his seeming rudeness in declining to test the rare wines provided by their host." The friend said to him: "There is certainly no danger of a man of your years and habits becoming addicted to the use of wine."

"I mean no disrespect, John," answered Lincoln, "but I promised my precious mother only a few days before she died that I would never use anything intoxicating as a beverage, and I consider that promise as binding to-day as it was the day I gave it."

"But," the friend continued, "there is a great difference between a child surrounded by a rough class of drinkers and a man in a home of refinement."

"A promise is a promise forever," answered Lincoln, "and when made to a mother it is doubly binding."—Selected.

Forty Thousand.

Every woman who wears a bird on her has is a party to the taking of innocent life, thoughtlessly though it may be. God made the beautiful songsters for a wiser and more beneficent purpose than merely to gratify a passing fancy. A startling and it would seem incredible report is to the effect that "forty thousand birds, mostly sand pipers, have been recently killed on the North Carolina coast for millinery purposes." Forty thousand innocent lives sacrificed! Surely, there ought to be some action taken against this wanton destruction, this war that is being waged, the world over, against "the free tenants of land, air, and ocean, Their forms all symmetry, their motions grace."

Boys' Hymn

"Just as I am," thine own to be,
Friend of the young, who lovest me,
To consecrate myself to Thee,
O Jesus Christ, I come.

In the glad morning of my day,
My life to give, my vows to pay,
With no reserve and no delay,
With all my heart I come.

"Just as I am," young, strong and free,
To be the best that I can be
For truth, and righteousness and Thee,
Lord of my life, I come.

With many dreams of fame and gold,
Success and joy to make me bold,
But dearer still my faith to hold,
For my whole life, I come.

And for Thy sake to win renown,
And then to take my victor's crown,
And at Thy feet to cast it down,
O Master, Lord, I come.

Catching a Train in China.

In the great cities of America what a hurrying and scurrying there is to board a through Pullman train, which one knows will pull out majestically at the appointed moment, regardless of your or my comfort or discomfort!

Several years ago, one sunny day in Tien Tsin, China, found the writer comfortably seated in a north-bound train, scheduled to leave at "thirteen o'clock."

It lacked a minute or two of the hour and every thing promised a speedy departure, when a perfect Babel of noise without brought the passengers to the car windows to see what could be the trouble.

Several panting and dripping chair coolies were violently gesticulating and debating, while from the red and green sedan chairs, which they had just set down were alighting a Chinese mandarin of high rank and the women of his family.

His face was the picture of perplexity. Liveried servants, official style, costly garments were for the moment forgotten in his perturbation over trying to be on time for this wonderful "fire-wheel cart," this belching thing of iron and fire, which he was told would leave exactly at a fixed time.

How plebeian this unseemly haste! Neither he nor any of his ancestors had ever had such an experience. Hitherto his cavalcade of mule litters, chairs, and carts had waited his pleasure for starting. But this was quite different! What if some of the family and luggage should board the train and some be left!

He hastened here and there, ordering about both sons and servants in the loudest of voices.

"Are all the little boys here? Where is the green chest? Who has the blue cloth bundle? Who has the bundle of caraway seed cakes? Where can we put the women? Are the waiting-maids all here?" All this, and more, in breathless excitement, as he hastens to and fro on the station platform.

The ladies entered my car at last, and stopped to gaze at me curiously, smiling and nodding in a friendly way as they hobbled on, supported by their women and taken to a private apartment.

Servants continue to pass in and out with parcels of all sizes and kinds, depositing them under the seats and in racks, regardless of how much room they monopolized. The sons appear at intervals to assure their father that the baggage is safe in the second car behind, with servants guarding it. Still he is not quite sure, and rises nervously every few minutes to stream out of the rear door some question about the "pigskin trunk," or the "cash-bag."

All of this time the engine puffs and rings, setting the old man's nerves at highest tension. But still the train waits, and not until quiet is restored and we rest assured that no mistake has been made and that no smallest bundle has been overlooked, do we slowly pull out for the day's travel.

Twenty minutes late? What matter if in truth we can say: "All aboard!"—Western Advocate.

THE HEART MAKES THE WISH.

Two little Indian boys, to whom the missionary, going back and forth across plains on his errands of love was a familiar figure, were talking the other day as to what they would like to be and to do when they were men.

One exclaimed, "I wish I could be a preacher. Then I'd go and tell everybody of all the good things I know."

The other hesitated for a while. But suddenly his face brightened and his shrill little voice rang out with a note of triumph.

"I wish I could be a horse and sug-

Our Little Folks.

CONDUCTED BY MRS. A. J. MCKELWAY

Children's Letters.

Red Springs, N. C., May 23, 1903.

Dear Standard:

We take your nice paper. I read the children's letters first. My school is out. My teacher was Miss Sallie Lytch. Our pastor is Rev. L. A. McLaurin. He is sick with typhoid fever. My papa has gone to the Confederate Reunion in New Orleans. I will close for this time.

Your little friend,
Age 8. Malcolm McBryde.

Lucia, N. C., May 20, 1903.

Dear Standard:

I like to read the children's letters. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. I have recited the child's catechism, and am studying the shorter catechism. My teacher is Mrs. Harkey. I have got five brothers and five sisters. Our pastor is Rev. W. H. Wilson. I have joined the church. I will close by asking a question, Where is Presbyterian found in the Bible?

Your unknown friend,
Age 13. Minnie Killian.

Statesville, N. C., May 21, 1903.

Dear Standard:

As my other letter was printed, I will write again. Many thanks for the papers that you sent me. I love to read the children's letters. I will answer Kate McPhail's question, There are 38 books in the Bible. I will ask a question, Who was the oldest man, and who was cast on the Island of Patmos. We had the picture of our home taken not long ago. Papa, mamma and Leland and myself were standing in the yard and we had our little dog. I will close, hoping to see my letter in print.

Your unknown friend,
Huie Hill Wooten.

Waxhaw, N. C., May 16, 1903.

Dear Standard:

We are two little girls who live near Tirzah Church, and go to Tirzah High School. Our school is out now and our teacher, whose name was Mr. C. B. Brown, has gone to his home in Tennessee. We were very sorry to see him leave. We will answer Lois Thompson's question, Moses was 120 years old when he died, Deut 34:7. We will ask a question, Who slew a lion in a pit on a snowy day? Uncle John Walkup gives mama the Standard, and we enjoy reading the children's letters very much.

Your little friends,
Eunice Robinson, 12 years.
Janie Robinson, 10 years.

Hopewell, N. C., May 20th, 1903.

Dear Standard:

I am an orphan boy from Wilmington. I was sent to Thompson Orphanage when I was a little tot in dresses and remained there until six years ago. A lady came to the orphanage to get a little boy to live with her. I was the chosen one. Oh! how glad I was to go to the country to live. I have one brother. His name is Fred. He left the orphanage before I did. He went to Kittrell to live with a widow lady. The lady I am living with is a member of Hopewell church. We go there to Sunday-school and preaching. We have no pastor now since Mr. Stimson left. I am so sorry he is gone.

I recited the child's catechism and got a little Testament; also the shorter catechism and got a Bible. My Sunday-school teacher was Miss Ella McNeely but she got married and left Hopewell. I was so sorry for she was the best teacher a boy ever had. I have a nice teacher now; her name is Miss Annie Barnet. I didn't go to school last winter but studied lessons at home. I have had nine teachers since I have come here but I liked Miss Rose Miller more than all the others.

I will answer some of the questions asked by the little folks.

Moses was one hundred and twenty years old when he died. Butter is found in Proverbs, 13:33. The word "girl" is found in Joel, 3:3. The word "nose" is found in Psalm 150:6. David reigned over Israel forty years. Nimrod was the mighty hunter.

I have been through the Testament twice and have started through the Bible. Have read nine books. I read a chapter every night. I want to get through this year. The lady I am living with takes the Standard. I like to read children's letters and all the short stories. I will close by asking the little friends a question, Where is the word "consumption" found in the Bible?

Your little friend,
Frank Dalmer.

Kenansville, N. C., May 16, 1903.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl 8 years old and my Sunday-school teacher is Mrs. Shaw (the pastor's wife) a few week's ago we met at her home and formed a society we call "Little Helpers." I was made president. We have promised to give a tenth to the Lord, and are saving up our money so we will have some, when it is needed for any good cause. I have learned the child's catechism. As our every day school has closed at the James Sprunt Institute I am now on a visit to little cousins, and am having a lovely time.

Your's truly,
Hester James Farrior.

Begonia, N. C., May 20, 1903.

Dear Standard:

I see so many letters in the Standard from the little folks that I often think that I would like to write one too, and hope that you will not let my letter reach the waste basket. I like to go to school very much, but our school is out now. I have recited the child's catechism and received a nice Testament which I am very proud of. My little brother, Walter, recited the child's catechism last year and received a Testament with his name engraved on it. We are both studying the shorter catechism now. He is nine years old and I am eleven. My Sunday-school teacher is Miss Clara Patrick, and our pastor is Rev. G. A. Sparrow. I am very fond of my dolls. I have one real

A Little Hero

Reginald Morton taught a class in his school, to the great wonder of his friends. If he had been connected with the Sunday-school of the aristocratic church in which he held a pew, he would have been some allowance made to teach a class of newsboys. The blacks in that low quarter of the city seemed to them sheer waste of talent. He was well-nigh worshipped by the people. To do as Mr. Morton said, and with an approving smile, became the desire of every boy's heart; for he was to be a helpful personal friend, and with their love for him he was teaching them to know and love the Master, who he so devotedly served.

One morning just as the newsboys were going out with the early edition of the paper there was an alarm of fire from the hotel in which Mr. Morton had apart. Instantly all was confusion, and later there appeared upon the scene a boy with a bundle of papers slung over his shoulder and under the arms of the firemen and between the fire engines, shouting, "Is there any one here?"

He was not yet out of the doomed building when he was killed. Then Benny dropped his head and unheeding the rushing waters which almost washed away his feet, made a rush for the doorway. At the entrance he was met by a fireman, who said roughly: "Get out of the way, boy! This ain't no place for the likes of you. Do you want to be killed?"

"Get out of me, mister, do! I'm after my father; I know his room—been to it."

He was squirming himself out of the doorway, when he dashed up the smoking stairs, then up another, through a passage where the flames were reaching their tongues across as if to lick him. Pressing his hands to his eyes and covering his face, he stumbled through the smoke which fortunately was not locked, and found his way to the bed on which lay the body of his beloved friend, who was suffocated with the smoke pouring through the transom.

The boy's cries and shakings were unheeded, and with almost superhuman strength he succeeded in dragging Mr. Morton on to the floor, where the current of smoke, more free from smoke, partially covered him to a sense of danger. Pulling some blankets from the bed to protect himself, they crawled along to the hall, where the man again lost consciousness; but brave Benny was not going to desert him now, and springing to his feet he dragged him down the hall, where the flames had given way to scalding steam; but at the stairway they were met and carried down and out by the valiant firemen amid the cheers of the excited throng.

The nearest hospital received them, with other victims of the fire, some of whom were past all earthly help, as was poor Benny. Mr. Morton so far recovered in a few hours as to be helped to his bedside to weep over him unavailing tears, to listen to his last broken utterances, and bid him God-speed on his journey.

"My precious boy! What made you risk your life for mine? The firemen might have found me."

"But I—loved ye—an' Him, ye know; I reckoned He'd—like it."

"If I could only help you somehow, Benny!"

"You be a-helpin' me—jest—a seein' ye. I'm goin' up—yender—ner I ain't afraid—'cause He'll—know how't happened—an' let me in—won't He?"

"Indeed He will, dear child!"

"An' tell the chaps that—I love 'em—an' it better be me 'n them—'cause they've—got folks; an' could you—read that there place—where—He liked their children—ye know?"

The nurse brought a Testament, and Mr. Morton, with trembling hands, turned to the chapter from which the last Sunday's lesson had been taken, and read the tender story, and, even as he read, the child's eyes closed, and it seemed as if he had already gone into the kingdom; but after a little he looked up sleepily, and said, "An' mebbe you'll take—some other boy 'stead o' me—'n be good ter him?"

"Indeed I will! The dear Lord helping me, Benny, you shall not have died in vain."

"An' could—could ye jest sing 'bout—'by 'n by?'—an' ye don't think—but wot it'll be—al right—an'—an' He'll be glad—ter see me?"

"My precious child, yes! If I could ever hope to be as welcome in Heaven as you will be!"

And then (although it was the hardest thing that he had ever done) he sang softly.

"There's a land that is fairer than day," and before the song was finished the passing soul had found its wings and was away.

They who know this story, wonder no more that Reginald Morton has given up all the brilliant worldly promise of his youth to become a city missionary; but his useful life is a monument to the little unselfish hero, Benny.—Congregationalist.

R. M. COFFEY, C. T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C.

parations for the circus, and had got up very early for that purpose, only to find that he was too late.

Partly to make up for his disappointment, he coaxed his big brother, Fred to walk with him around the circus grounds later in the forenoon. There was really not much to be seen, for the animals were all inside the smaller tents, and only very ordinary-looking men were hurrying here and there. But one thing they saw did interest Johnny, and Fred, too. The preparations for dinner had already begun, and in the shade of the tents a group of eight or ten men sat paring potatoes, and there were ten bushels to be pared for dinner. After Fred and Johnny had recovered from their astonishment at the startling piece of news, Fred began to ask the men questions.

There were several tubs of fish standing by, and he learned that all those were to be cooked for dinner, too. Johnny stared in amazement. He had not dreamed that there could be such an army of people with just one circus, that they could eat three tubs of fish and ten bushels of potatoes at one meal.

"What makes you pare the potatoes so thick?" asked Fred, noticing what seemed to him the wasteful manner in which the men were doing their work.

"Oh," answered one of the men, with a laugh, "the peels go to the elephants, and they won't eat just skins; but I tell you an elephant likes potatoes as well as a boy likes candy."

"Oh, I see," said Fred, looking somewhat relieved by the explanation.

Johnny didn't say anything, but he was thinking hard.

If there was one peculiar animal that was a source of constant wonder to him it was an elephant. He had studied pictures of elephants by the hour, he asked questions about them, and he begged to have stories read to him about their ways and the manner of trapping them, but never had had a good look at one. To be sure, he had once seen one in a parade, but it had passed him so soon that he was not half satisfied. Now he hoped to see one again, for Fred had read in the paper that the parade was to pass their house. He did wish he could see it a good long time, instead of just a minute in a parade! And then, suddenly, to Fred's amazement, Johnny turned a summersault and ran on ahead of him the rest of the way home.

It was not long before the parade started. There was a great shouting of orders, a prancing of horses, then a burst of music, and the procession had started.

Mamma, Aunt Carrie and Fred came out upon the porch, Nora stood in the kitchen doorway and Johnny stood out by the shed.

The band passed first, then there were great gilded cages, and next a troop of riders on horseback. After that came another band, and back of it—and Johnny's heart gave a great bound at the sight—came, with steady, ponderous tread, an immense, great elephant.

It had reached the corner, was directly in front of the house, and then, to the horror of mama and the amazement of everybody else, a small figure, dragging a bright-red express cart loaded with potatoes, dashed down the slope of the yard, and dumped the potatoes in the middle of the street.

The elephant stopped, lifted a potato in his trunk and began to eat. Johnny pushed his cart to the edge of the yard, sat down in it and watched the elephant.

The chariot and their drivers came to a sudden stop; the cage of lions stopped, too. Back of the lions were a set of clowns, who were also halted.

Presently there was a great shouting,

"Move on there!" "What's the matter?"

Then a lot of men came running along. They discovered the elephant delightfully eating potatoes. They shouted to him, they tried to drive him, they poked him with great sticks but he would not move.

Then the people who were watching began to laugh, and the men grew angry, with no effect.

"I'd like to know who spilled those potatoes there!" one of them exclaimed, fiercely; but it never occurred to him that it could have been the small boy sitting in the express cart; and, fortunately, before he had time to find it out, the last potato disappeared down the elephant's throat, and the parade again moved on.

"Whatever possessed that boy?" exclaimed mamma, when she could find breath to speak. "And how did he know that elephants liked potatoes?"

But it was sometime before Fred could stop laughing to explain.—Julia Darrow Cowles, in Youth's Companion.

CLEVER MR. FOX.

The fox about which I am going to tell you and his mate had two young ones. As they were always hungry, like most healthy children, he was out hunting from morning till night, and often through the night, too, trying to get them enough to eat. But sometimes luck was against him, and now and then Mrs. Fox complained that he was letting the children starve.

One day off he started, after telling the little ones to be good and not worry their poor mother. As he trotted along he reflected, "Now it won't pay to go near the barnyard again today. They will surely be on the lookout for me. And I'm not ashamed to say that I'm afraid of the gun, for I can't dodge shot, no matter how fast I scamper." Just here he came to the river, and stopped to look at his own reflection in the water. I'm quite a good-looking fellow," he thought. Then his attention was attracted by some crawfish swimming along the bottom. A bright idea struck him. "I wonder if I can't catch some," he thought. He tried hard.

Still he wouldn't give up. "I've seen to reach them with his paw, but they always dodged the stroke.

boys fishing with lines," he meditated. "Why can't I try to fish with my tail? It's quite long." So, very quietly and cautiously, he dropped his tail into the water, just above the fish. "Rather cold work," he thought. But soon he got a bite. One of the crawfish had caught his tail with his claws. Up with a swish, he jerked it out of the water. With a good nip he made it let go. Then he sat down and quietly ate it, smiling all over. The trick struck him as such a good one that he threw back his head and silently laughed till he nearly fell into the water.

He recovered himself, and said seriously. "I must catch some more for the children," and again dropped his line into the stream. The crawfish nipped him every time and every time he landed them successfully. When he thought he had as many as he could carry, he took them up in his mouth and started for home. Mrs. Fox welcomed him and the fish with sparkling eyes. "I hope the children will like them!" she exclaimed.

The little foxes did like them very much, and soon the whole catch had disappeared. Now things looked a little brighter to the family.

"But still, you know," said Mrs. Fox, "that won't last us till tomorrow. You must try to bring in something more."

So away went Mr. Fox again. "Children are a great care," he sighed. He trotted along the river bank, hoping that something might happen to help him. Finally he came to the fish house. He didn't like to approach too near, as

LITTLE JACK FROST.

Little Jack Frost went up the hill, Watching the stars and the moon so still,
 Watching the stars and moon so bright
 And laughing alone with all his might.
 Little Jack Frost ran down the hill, Late in the night when the winds were still,
 Late in the fall when the leaves fell down,
 Red and yellow and faded brown.

Little Jack Frost walked through the trees,
 "Ah," sighed the flowers, "we freeze,
 we freeze."
 "Ah," sighed the grasses, "we die, we die."
 Said Little Jack Frost, "Good-bye,
 Good-bye."

Little Jack Frost tripped 'round and 'round,
 Spreading white snow on the frozen ground.
 Nipping the breezes, icing the streams,
 Chilling the warmth of the sun's bright beams.

But when Dame Nature brings back the spring.
 Brings back the birds to chirup and sing,
 Melts the snow and warms the sky,
 Little Jack Frost will go pouting by.
 The flowers will open their eyes of blue,
 Green buds peep out and the grasses grow;
 It will be so warm and scorch him so,
 Little Jack Frost will be glad to go.—

Of a certain bishop, famous as one of the plainest men in England, the Liver pool Post tells a pleasing tale. One day as this homely parson sat in an omnibus, he was amazed by the persistent staring of a fellow passenger, who presently said:

"You're a parson, ain't you?"
"Yes."

"Look 'ere, parson would you mind coming home with me to see my wife?"

Imagining the wife was sick, the clergyman went with the man. On arriving at the house, the man called his wife, and pointing to the astonished parson, said:

"Look 'e 'ere, Sairy! Yer said this morning as I wrn the hugliest chap in England. Now, just yer look at this bloke!"

"Why did you not help the defendant in the fight, if that's the case?" asked the examining counsel. Mr. Cassidy looked at the lawyer with contempt, and answered in a tone of blighting scorn, "For the r'ason that at that toime oi had no means of knowing which o' thim would be the defendant."—Exchange.

The principle that one man's opinion is as valuable as that of another was not approved by the professional man in the following story, taken from the Chicago Tribune:

"These shoes, doctor," said the cobbler, after a brief examination, "aint' worth mending."

"Then, of course," said the doctor, turning away, "I don't want anything done to 'em."

"But I charge you fifty cents just the same."

"What for?"

"Well, sir, you charged me five dollars the other day for telling me there wasn't anything the matter with me."—Forward.

"Diplomacy is a curious game," said one statesman.

"It is," answered the other; "it is one in which the most satisfactory results are achieved when both sides can go home and claim a victory."

A definition of the difference between "Old School" and "New School" has been thus: "The children of Old School Presbyterians sin as soon as they are born, and the children of New School Presbyterians as soon as they know how!"

The Touch of Human Hands

Among the hills of Galilee,
Through crowded city ways,
The Christ of God went forth to heal
And bless, in olden days.
The sinning and the sad of heart
In anxious throngs were massed
To catch the Great Physician's eye
And touch Him as He passed.

..

We have not in our hours of need
His seamless garment pressed,
Nor felt His tender human hand
On us in blessing rest ;
Yet still in crowded city streets
The Christ goes forth again,
Whenever touch of human hand
Bespeaks good will to men.

..

Whenever man his brother man
Upholds in helpfulness,
Whenever strong and tender clasp
A lonely heart doth bless,
The Christ of God is answering
A stricken world's demands,
And leading back a wandering race
By touch of human hands.

Event and Comment.

There is projected a union of the Unitarian and Trinitarian branches of Congregationalism. The Congregationalists who believe in Christ should pray to be delivered from the body of that death.

The next Southern Assembly meets in Mobile with an outlook upon the great Gulf. There will not be so many Confederate memorials there as in Lexington, shut in by the changeless hills, but perhaps it will be a good time for the men of this generation to assert their determination to run it.

There seems to be a reaction in New England circles toward more stalwart Calvinism. Said a Baptist speaker in Boston the other day, "The Pilgrim Fathers planted at the corner of a building lot a school-house under public control where we would plant a public house under brewery control."

Rev. William Morrison, of Lexington, Virginia, of the African Presbyterian Mission, has done a public service in bringing to light the abuses of the Congo Free State, which is in reality the worst sort of a tyranny under Leopold of Belgium, who seems to be more ambitious to become a money-king than to be worthy of the royalty he possesses. Mr. Balfour has taken notice of the matter and has promised to bring the subject to the notice of the signatory powers.

The Passive Resistance to the Education Act in England takes form of the old historic opposition to the church rates. The passive resister sits at home and lets the tax collector take what he can find or levy on his household goods. Under the last the offended is liable to a three month's term of imprisonment in jail. It is safe to say that not many will be imprisoned before there will be an overturning of the governmental majority and an appeal to the country.

The resistance will prove to be no idle matter. W. Robertson Nicoll is thundering away in the British Weekly, Professor Fairbairn, standing at the head of a deputation of the Free Churches, said to be the most influential delegation that ever waited upon a prime minister, said, "We will not submit." Professor Massie, of Oxford, has resigned his chair in order to devote his whole time to the overthrow of the act. Rev. F. B. Meyer has announced that he will go to prison before he will pay his part of the tax. It looks to us as though disestablishment itself would be secured before the matter is done with.

Rev. R. J. Campbell, of City Temple, London, says that the most malicious gossips he has ever known among men are preachers. We have known some ourselves who are as careless of their neighbor's good name as if they had never heard of the Ninth Commandment. The true woman is never a gossip, but all gossips are women, whether they wear pantaloons or petticoats, whether they wear clerical coats or business suits. And perhaps that is one reason why reference is sometimes made to "the women and preachers."

A writer in the Congregationalist shows that the Congregationalists have been enjoying the benefits of an "unintentional Twentieth Century Fund." They have raised for their educational institutions the sum of $8,641,000 and for paying off Church debts and giving to ministerial relief funds, the sum total is $10,500,000 in three years. The Methodist Church raised $20,000,000 for the same causes during the same time. The Congregationalist per capita, however, is $22 per member while the Methodist per capita is $9. This is certainly a splendid showing for the Congregationalists and one upon which we heartily congratulate them.

The Northern Assembly met so far away this year and the reports in the secular papers were so meager that we shall have to await the reception of our Presbyterian exchanges from the North before giving an intelligible review of that body. Three things stand out prominently, the unanimous enactment of the amendments to the Confession, the appointment of a permanent committee of Presbyterian Fraternity and Union, and appointment of an ad interim committee to report to the next Assembly whether it will be possible to put a white Presbytery and a negro Presbytery in the same territory.

It is rather amusing that Dr. Lyman Abbott and Dr. Hillis should be contending, the one in his magazine and the other in his pulpit, for the honor of echoing the sentiments of Henry Ward Beecher on the Negro Question. In the Outlook for May 30, Dr. Abbott published a letter from Beecher, written in 1885 which was a clincher. Dr. Hillis practically acknowledged himself defeated and did what the lawyers have been known to do when losing a case, went down to the tavern and swore at the court. We shall not repeat Dr. Hillis' profane remark, but it is just as well sometimes for a man of his intellectual size to betray his Lilliputianess.

A late statistician estimates that there are 140,000,000 Protestants, belonging to the Calvinistic, Lutheran and Arminian Churches and that the Lutherans have 70,000,000, the Calvinistic coming next. Some of the Lutherans are Presbyterian in government and some are Episcopalian. It is proposed to have an Ecumenical Lutheran Council after the order of the Pan-Presbyterian Council, to meet in Saxony, the old home of the Reformation. Probably the reason for the large estimate of Lutherans is the fact that the Calvinistic churches are not State churches, while the Lutheran Church is the State church of the German Empire which is growing so rapidly and colonizing so widely.

The Commissioners of the Northern Assembly stopped over Sunday in Salt Lake City and saw something of Mormonism and the tremendous fight Protestantism is making against it. The Assembly passed strong resolutions against the seating of Senator-elect Smoot. It also passed strong commendatory resolutions touching President Roosevelt. Unfortunately, while the Assembly was passing the Anti-Mormon resolutions the President was hobnobbing with Smoot. Such are sometimes the inconveniences of ecclesiastical meddling with political affairs. The Presbyterian way to down the Mormons is to send more missionaries to Utah and they are needed there a long sight more than they are in their competitive work with Southern Presbyterian missions in Texas, for example.

The Interior recites an act of Romish tyranny in Chicago. A young priest was summarily removed from his church where he was much loved and the suspicion was that some higher dignitaries had been offended by the priest's plain preaching against loose living in the priesthood. His people held an indignation meeting. Later the chairman of that meeting signed a most abject apology for his part in it, saying that he knew naught against any one in authority and promising to "bow in humble obedience whenever the constituted authorities deem fit to issue a command." The Interior remarks that one can almost feel the choke of the hand that was on the poor fellow's throat. And we call this a free country, and Cardinal Gibbons would have us believe that Romanism was always synonymous with liberty.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD, Charlotte, N. C.

The whole phrase is, "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." The glory of God does shine in the face of Christ, but it is the knowledge of that glory, the faith that Christ does reveal God, that is the light of life. It is the assurance that Christ is the brightness of the Father's glory and that the Son is the express image of the Father's person, that brings God near to men, and in such attractive guise, that our doubts of his goodness are turned into immovable faith, our awe into adoration, our fears into love.

The heavens declare his glory. Man himself is a very Shechinah. The prophets disclosed his character and his attributes. But to us in these last days God has spoken by his Son, and the revelation is all that heart could wish or mind conceive.

He who once walked among men, going about doing good, healing, comforting, cleansing, delivering, loving the sons of men, is setting forth in all that work of beneficence the very heart of God. He who said to the woman that was a sinner, Thy sins be forgiven thee, manifests the forgiveness of the Almighty. He who prayed for his enemies, Father forgive them, they know not what they do, displays the long-suffering of God. He who wept at the tomb of Lazarus shows the sympathy of the great Father of All. He who took up the little ones in his arms and breathed upon them his benediction discloses the compassion of God for helplessness everywhere. He who yearned over doomed Jerusalem reveals the infinite love of God, even for those who will not own his sway or accept his proffered help. This is one great purpose of the Incarnation, to show to men, in the person of a man, what sort of a God it is who created them and rules over them and will judge them at the last.

There are other attributes of God of which our own consciences tell us in tones that cannot be mistaken.

Just as we see around us the evidences of wisdom and power, so when we look within us we know that the ideal which our own imaginations frame of God is that of a being, infinite in holiness and justice and truth. Perhaps, if our hearts had not been marred by sin, so that the image of God reflected there had not been distorted, we should have known from human philosophy that infinite goodness also is at the heart of things. But because of sin, the Incarnation was a necessity to show us the goodness of our God.

And the crowning proof of that goodness is to be found on Calvary, where God the Father gave up his only-begotten, his well-beloved, to die, and where God the Son freely chose the thorny way of suffering. There is nothing beyond that. In fact the proof is so overwhelming that men have staggered at the greatness of this proof of the divine goodness, and yet the world has accepted the thing proved. The only popular philosophy at all to-day is that which exalts the goodness of God, without pausing to consider sometimes that the knowledge of that goodness has come to the world as it was reflected from heaven itself in the face of the Christ.

May the light of that knowledge shine into our hearts and illumine our lives.

The two matters in which the Standard was especially interested at this Assembly were the ad interim report on the unification of our Home Mission work, and the disposition to be made of the proposed amendments to the elect infant clause of the Confession. The Home Mission report had the heart of it taken out by the amendment declining to appoint a representative committee from the different Synods. The speeches made against the report were with one exception made by the beneficiary Synods of the West. The Eastern Synods that support the work were in favor of the new plan. It looked a little ungenerous for the Western Synods to oppose the plan with the argument that the Eastern Synods might not then give them as much as before. The men who know most about home mission work, from the point of view both of raising and of spending the money for that cause, were in favor of the plan, and it is only a question of time when something like it will be adopted. It is a pity, however, that more ministers do not have some business training and do not grow accustomed to considering large enterprises from some other standpoint than the size of the expense account. We are taking the admirable report of our special correspondent as an exact statement of the case. And according to him the idea was advanced that the expense of the meeting of a large committee from the different Synods would support half a missionary for a year. That kind of talk makes a business man ashamed for his church.

With regard to the other matter, we again take our correspondent's report and are even glad of his evident bias against amending the Confession in any way. If the former opponents of the Standard on that business are satisfied, we are.

The Standard made its main fight against the "fifth resolution" of the Little Rock Assembly. That resolution was unceremoniously and unanimously rescinded by the Jackson Assembly and a resolution contradicting it was unanimously passed, the Assembly by a all majority refusing to inaugurate the amendment of the Confession to the same effect. The Standard pronounced itself as abundantly content with that and never advocated any amendment of the Confession until the attempt was made to nullify the force or destroy the effect of the deliverance of the Jackson Assembly. Undoubtedly a large number of the Presbyteries could have been carried for amending the Confession, if the Standard had chosen to do more than make its open and public statements concerning the matter. The amendment proposed in the overture from Tuscaloosa Presbytery we knew would be open to attack by way of appeal to the ignorance and prejudices of the Assembly, and so it turned out. The overture was to strike out the word "elect," in the elect infant clause. The friends of amendment proposed two foot-notes to be submitted to the Presbyteries in the same way that an amendment is submitted. This course was pursued by the Northern Assembly, and this may have prejudiced the minds of some.

We do not blame Dr. Whaling for not wanting any discussion of the matter in his church. Dr. Whaling reads the Standard and knows the horrible statements that some of the brethren have made, which the Standard duly quoted and keeps on file. Our patriotism has extended a little further and we have wanted a constitutional quietus put upon the brethren aforesaid for the sake of the whole Southern Church. For it is a peculiarity of a certain type of mind, that when once a thing becomes constitutional it becomes even more sacred than if it were scriptural. Witness the effective settlement of the deceased wife's sister agitation by constitutional amendment.

But in the judgment of our correspondent the view which determined the Assembly to defeat the recommendation of the explanatory foot-notes was "that history shows that the objection is not to the word 'elect,' but to the doctrine of election wherever found. . . this pressure, which began with our enemies, will not be lifted until no trace of the word 'elect' is found in our system."

Now, there are some things that strike a fairly well informed newspaper man as so silly that there is not even material for characterization. The speech that carried the day against the amendment of the Confession last year at Jackson was an appeal to the fears of the ill-informed, which would have been ridiculous if it had not been so earnest. The New York Evangelist, then edited by an Episcopalian, was held up as a representative Northern Presbyterian paper, and its Anti-Calvinistic remarks made the result of opening the door of amendment. Well, the Evangelist sold out shortly afterwards to save itself from bankruptcy, and it did not have, though published in New York City, the supposed hot-bed of radicalism, nearly as many subscribers as the Presbyterian Standard of Charlotte. Where is that much talked of history to be found, that shows the real objection is to the doctrine of election instead of to the doctrine of the doubtfulness of infant salvation? The enemies of Presbyterianism are certainly not objecting to our holding on to a phrase that has been so misinterpreted by our own people as to make us appear to believe in infant damnation. The thing is balder-dash, tommy-rot, buncombe, and other things to the same effect. We say this in ignorance as to who used the argument. Certainly any theologian ought to know that even the Arminian believes in election, and that while some Presbyterians have objected to the doctrine of reprobation as extra scriptural, no one, not even a Cumberland Presbyterian, denies election. And yet this was the argument that moved the Assembly! Well, let us be philosophical. The only remedy for that state of things is the gradual enlightenment of the Church through the diffusion of information and the gradual elevation of newspapers to the dignity of their calling, that of printing the news and telling the truth.

But we would have the reader note that Dr. Whaling, speaking for the opponents of any amendment, declared that eighty per cent. of the Assembly were willing to abide by the decision of the Jackson Assembly, which was a straight-forward declaration of the truth of universal salvation as scripturally taught; that while Dr. Whaling's figures were excessive, those not satisfied with it were in favor of putting the same doctrine into its creed; that, according to our correspondent, there was entire accord on both sides in the belief that all infants dying in infancy are elect and so saved. Certainly it is something to have one Assembly unanimous about that and a succeeding Assembly equally unanimous. We call attention also to the fact that Dr. T. C. Converse, of the Christian Observer, was one of those that spoke for the foot-note that declared, "The Holy Scriptures, when fairly interpreted, warrant us in believing that all infants who die in infancy are included in the election of grace and are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Holy Spirit."

The Central has said recently that nobody now doubts this blessed truth. And the editor of the Southwestern is perfectly sound on that subject when he is preaching a sermon instead of editorially defending the impossible position that we should leave our creed ambiguous on a question which we believe that the Scriptures settle for us.

Finally, men and brethren, this is an impossible situation for logical folks like Presbyterians to remain in forever. We devoutly hope that the last notes of the controversy have been heard for some time to come. But we wish to place this on record: The controversy will again arise. The Southern Church has said that the Scriptures teach that all the dead children are saved. Our Confession has not said that quite so clearly, if it has said it at all. Our Confession of Faith is presumed to be a confession of our faith. Here is a confession of our faith, on a subject that touches every home, every father's heart, every mother's heart; that involves the fate of over half the human race; that is concerned with our conception of the very character of God. And we say this confession of our faith, on such a subject as this, must not become a part of our Confession of Faith. That is bibliolatry, the revering of a book rather than the reverence of the truth which is supposed to be the very object and end of the book. For our part, we put the truth first.

And when the controversy comes again, perhaps in another generation, we think that the future editor of the Presbyterian Standard will find that the old files of that paper contain a pretty thorough discussion of the subject in all its phases; that the paper was consistently on the side which the whole Church will have come to believe, and that some eminent ministers and some esteemed contemporaries whose opinions are also imbedded in those files, appeared to have lapsed on that particular subject into a doctrine of the dark ages.

The Cumberland Assembly.

This Assembly held its sessions in Nashville, Tennessee. Dr. Tinnon was elected Moderator. The Assembly continued in session from Thursday morning, May 21 to Thursday afternoon of the following week. The most important matter that came before the Assembly was the subject of union with other bodies, especially union with the Northern Presbyterian Church. The following was the paper adopted on a majority report of the committee on union.

"Your committee has carefully considered all memorials and resolutions on the subject of organic union that have been submitted to us. We note with pleasure a manifest tendency toward closer co-operation in the Christian work among all Protestant denominations, and particularly a disposition among ecclesiastical families which are allied in doctrine and polity to set aside their minor points of difference and to emphasize only things essential. This tendency is in accord with the spirit of the Master and with the history of the traditions of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and is certainly calculated to advance the kingdom of God among men. It is a matter of devout prayer by the whole church that this tendency may continue in its growth toward closer affiliation and organic union among members of the Presbyterian household in the United States until there shall be such a removal of the differences in doctrine, polity and social conditions as will insure the consummation and realization of a glorious and united Presbyterianism in the United States.

"We, therefore, recommend to the General Assembly the adoption of the following resolutions:

"Resolved, 1, That a committee of nine on Presbyterian fraternity and union be appointed by this Assembly to confer with such like committees as may be appointed by other Presbyterian bodies in regard to the desirability and practicability of closer affiliation and organic union among the members of the Presbyterian family in the United States, and if in any particular case after conference and investigation, union shall seem to be desirable and practicable, to suggest suitable measures for its accomplishment and to report such basis of union as may be mutually agreed upon to the next General Assembly.

"2. That the above resolution be reported immediately to the Presbyterian bodies now in session, and in due course to all other Presbyterian bodies in the United States."

The committee on Presbyterian Fraternity and Union was found by dividing the Assembly into four districts with about an equal number of commissioner in, each, and the districts elected their representatives in the committee. Moderator Tinnon was added to the committee and Rev. W. H. Black, D. D., of Missouri, was made chairman. The other members are Rev. Ira Landrith, Nashville; Judge E. E. Beard, Lebanon, Tenn.; S. M. Templeton, D. D., and Judge M. B. Templeton, Texas; B. P. Fullerton, D. D., St. Louis, and Judge W. E. Settle, Franklin, Ky.; D. E. Bushnell, D. D., Alton, Illinois, and President A. E. Turner, Waynesburg, Pa.

We suppose that the union between the Cumberland and the Northern Presbyterian Churches is pretty far off in the future as yet, and dependent upon a good many contingencies.

We learn from a private letter that we were misinformed as to the number of theological students expected at Clarksville next year. The three we mentioned were members of the present junior class. There are seven or eight men in the Academic department who expect to take the theological course at Clarksville next year and several more are expected from elsewhere.

Book Notices.

Studies of Familiar Hymns. Louis F. Benson, D., The Westminster Press, Philadelphia. $1.50. This interesting book grew out of six papers prepared for Forward and The Wellspring and their original simplicity has not been sacrificed. Beginning with Phillips Brooks' beautiful "O Little Town of Bethlehem," the story of the origin of many of the best loved and most generally used hymns is given. As the real beauty of a hymn can not be known until it is traced to its source and studied in its birth, Dr. Benson has conferred a great benefit to the Church in preparing this work. The make-up of the "Studies" is very attractive.

Books for Sunday-school Libraries.—David the Hero. Sarah Dickson Lowrie. The Westminster Press, Philadelphia. $1.00. David's heroic and fascinating career has been placed in a setting that may bring him much closer to the heart of the children, by whom he is so often regarded as a "gold-crowned person, given over to the constant playing of a harp."

That Dear Old Sword. Nettie Gray Daingerfield. Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va. Price 75 cents.

A sweet, simple story of a child, dubbed Sir William Bathurst by his father, stolen by some strolling players, and discovered through his motto "Noblesse oblige." "Mamma taught it to me. It means that we must be good and do right things because we are gentlemen and ladies. I must be brave because I am my Papa's knight. Mama 'splained it to me," was his translation of it to his captors.

The Ivy Vine. Annie E. Wilson. The Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va., $1.00. Those who have read short stories by the author need no introduction to this longer work. What she writes is helpful, stimulating, sympathetic, and this is a book no one need fear to place in the hands of a young girl. "The Ivy Vine" is the name of a club of four girls—the name suggested by the letters I-V in the number four, and the story covers a period until they have taken upon themselves the crowning glory of womanhood.

Dorris and Her Mountain Home. Translated from the German by Mary E. Ireland. The Presbyterian Committee of Publication. Richmond, Va. 75 cents.

A story of a girl's life in Italy and Switzerland, led under her Father's guiding hand, which took on additional beauty from the natural beauty that surrounded her.

Hillsboro, Colonial and Revolutionary. Francis Nash, Hillsboro, N. C. Any one interested in North Carolina history will wish to add this pamphlet to his collection of reference works, for the history of Colonial Hillsboro forms a vital part of the history of Colonial Carolina. The larger part of the contents appeared in the Charlotte Observer during years 1901 and 1902. Mr. Nash is peculiarly fitted for the work of putting into permanent form, the story of his native town. It is a valuable contribution to State records.

The lover of fiction—especially in the form of short stories—will turn with pleasure to the June issue of The Cosmopolitan. Here appear a charming love-story by Francis Willing Wharton, beautifully illustrated by Thomas Mitchell Peirce; a dramatic railroad story by R. H. Farnham; a romance of the business world by Trumbull White, and contributions by H. R. Martin and Henry Seton Merriman. In the same number, Edward Everett Hale writes on "Old-Age Pensions;" Dr. Albert Shaw, editor of the "Review of Reviews," discusses "Journalism" as a profession; H. G. Wells advances some more of his ideas on "Love and the Cultivation of the Imagination;" and Mary E. Thornton gives some practical advice on "How to Care for the Sick in the Home." An essay on "The Rose of Yesterday and To-day" is illustrated with photographs. In all, there are twenty-one stories and articles in the June Cosmopolitan.

The Open Court.

The Ambisedent Presbyter.

As an overture from the Mid China Mission to the assembly at Jackson has been followed by another from the Korean Mission to the Lexington Assembly, which has appointed an ad interim committee to consider and report, it is now a live question before our church.

The Term Defined.—As an ambidextrous man is one constituted by nature that he can use either right or left hand with equal facility, so for the lack of a better term the one at the head of this article is chosen, because:

1. The fact, if not the word is already in existence at Amoy and elsewhere in China in the persons of ordained missionary evangelists from the English Presbyterian and Dutch Reformed churches, who not only sit in their home Presbyteries according to their standards but also sit, debate, and vote in the local Chinese Presbyteries according to the constitution adopted by those bodies.

2. There is, so far as the writer knows, no one word to express what is proposed, viz: that a missionary evangelist, while retaining the full rights and privileges of sitting in his home Presbytery, yet may when the Constitution of the Native Presbyterian Church in China or Korea admits, also sit, debate and vote in such bodies. It is clearly understood, however, that the Constitution of the Native church, does, or shall provide that the foreign evangelist may be excluded from the Native Presbytery for disorder (not for doctrine) within its jurisdiction, but such exclusion can from the nature of the situation, have no effect on his standing in his own home Presbytery.

3. The term ambisedent then is both expressive and adequate.

The Discussion.—As this question is supposed to raise some points of expediency in our Mission policy as well as the interpretation of constitutional Presbyterian Church Law, the bounds of original and final jurisdiction, together with the history of the effort to decide the status of the Foreign Evangelist and the adjustment of extra-territorial Presbyteries; a calm, careful and thorough discussion is important in order to secure safety as well as progress in our Missionary operations.

The Result.—Whatever this ad interim committee may recommend to the next Assembly at Mobile, the solution of this problem not only bears upon the immediate conduct of our own work in China and Korea, but also in a measure holds the key to the larger question of uniting the adherents of various Presbyterian bodies in those fields into National, Independent, Presbyterian Churches.

The fullest light upon all phases of this subject should be welcome not as obstructing, but as facilitating progress.

W. H. Hudson.

[The editor has great faith in the elasticity of our Presbyterian system. We do not see anything in the essential principles of the constitution to forbid the membership of a missionary in a home and a foreign Presbytery at the same time. We have an instance in mind where we believe injustice was done a good man in the mission field because his membership was in a foreign Presbytery and there could be no appeal to the church courts at home. The question appears to be one of expediency and the best interest of the mission work ought to be the controlling fact in settling it. It is akin to the policy of making a minister a member ex-officio of three courts, the session, the Presbytery and the Synod, while the elder is a member ex-officio of the first only.—Editor.]

Every act of the man inscribes itself in the memories of his fellows and in his own manners.—Emerson.

The Presbyterian College of South Carolina.

To the Editor of the Standard:

In your editorial of May 27th "on the Presbyterian University," among other things you say, "Clinton will also take a hand in the discussion, as Clinton imagines itself to be profoundly interested, since one reason for its existence is, that it contains two feeders for Columbia Seminary, while it manifests its loyalty to that excellent institution by sending their graduates to Princeton, Louisville and Union." I do not know the source of your information, but you are generally accurate in your statements and in this instance have been honestly misled. From 1889 to 1902 Davidson sent thirty-one students to Columbia, the Presbyterian College twenty-six, and the Orphanage two. Dr. McPheeters, in furnishing the information, says: "That some of the brightest and worthiest men that we have had during my connection with the Seminary have been from Clinton College. With scarcely an exception they have been men who gave promise of real usefulness in the ministry." The Catalogue of Columbia, 1902-03, gives five from the Presbyterian College of South Carolina; two from the Thornwell College and six from Davidson College, so that Clinton has seven out of twenty-seven students. The catalogue of Union 1901-02 shows one from the Presbyterian College of South Carolina. My recollection is (I have not the catalogue) that there is one at Louisville and I do not know of any at Princeton. The fact is eighty per cent. of our candidates have entered Columbia Seminary; fifty-six per cent. of our male graduates are now preaching the Gospel in ten different states and on Foreign soil. The entire class of 1900, one fourth of the class of 1901, are either preaching or preparing to preach. In the course of sixteen years there have been only four classes where there were not from one to three candidates for the ministry. One year this institution had as many as twenty-two candidates. I desire to correct your statement unless you have information that is not in my possession.

The Presbyterian College "has taken no hand in the discussion" and cannot, as it is a matter for the controlling Synods, and so far as my connection with the college is concerned, we have tried not to meddle with things that do not concern us.

Fraternally,

J. H. Thornwell,

Chancellor Presbyterian College.

[We are glad to publish this letter from the Chancellor of the Presbyterian College of South Carolina. We spoke of "Clinton." Clinton is the home of two of our church institutions for which the Standard has always tried to say a good word. It is also the home of two publications which affect to represent these institutions as a sort of family property. One of these publications is like Poe's lost Lenore, "Nameless here forevermore." The other one is Our Monthly, which rewards the liberal space given to the Thornwell Orphanage in the Standard by abusing that paper, we suppose for family and business reasons. A recent accession to the staff of Our Monthly was educated at Princeton and so was his successor in the pastorate he recently resigned and we still contend that "Clinton" loyalty to Columbia Seminary, in the editorial and not the institutional sense, is a roaring farce. But as we said, we are glad that Dr. Thornwell has published this correction of the impression our paragraph made, possibly on others beside himself, as our language was open to misrepresentation. We have nothing but good will for the institutions themselves, though we may perhaps recognize their limitations more fully than their more interested friends.—Editor.]

It makes a great difference to the force of any sentence, whether there is a man behind it or no.—Emerson

Devotional.

The Gospel of Thoughtfulness.

Seeking others' comfort and weal, making others happy and glad. Not our own, but others. This is a divine art, this is a gift of the Holy Ghost. Not to be ministered unto, but to minister. Not self-consideration, but for the glory of God in the good of others. Thoughtful kindnesses, going about doing good. Looking out for the interests of the people. Jesus filled with the Holy Spirit manifested this spirit, making the parents happy by receiving and blessing their children, showing His interest in the child He had restored to life by saying, "She is hungry." When the multitudes were famished for food, He not only fed them abundantly, but set them down in a grassy place gently. He sent out His disciples by couples. He wrote in the sand to ease the mind of an accused woman, and to relieve her of embarrassment. He mentioned "And Peter" so kindly; He said, "Mary," so sweetly. Little things so full of power, of beauty, of blessing, come through thoughtfulness, the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Selected.

"When, passing southward, I may cross the line Between the Arctic and Atlantic Oceans,
I may not tell by any tests of mine,
By any startling signs or strange commotions
Across my track.

But if the days grow sweeter one by one,
And e'en the icebergs melt their hardened faces,
And sailors linger, basking in the sun,
I know I must have made the change of places
Some distance back.

When, answering timidly the Master's call,
I passed the bourne of life in coming to Him,
When, in my love for him, I gave up all,
The very moment when I thought I knew Him,
I cannot tell.

But as unceasingly I feel His love,
And this cold heart is melted to o'erflowing,
As now, so clear, the light comes from above,
I wonder at the change, but move on, knowing,
That all is well."

—Exchange.

The crosses of the present moment always bring their own special grace and consequent comfort to them: we see the hand of God in them when it is laid upon us. But the crosses of anxious forebodings are seen out of the dispensation of God: we see them without grace to bear them; we see them indeed through a faithless spirit, which banishes grace. So everything in them is bitter and unendurable all seems dark and helpless. Let us throw self aside; no more self-interest, and then God's will, unfolding every moment in everything, will console us also every moment for all that He shall do around us, or within us, for our discipline.—Fenelon.

Whatever befall thee, receive it not from the hand of any creature, but from Him alone, and render back all to Him, seeking in all things His pleasure and honor, the purifying and subduing of thyself. What can harm thee, when all must first touch God, within whom thou hast enclosed thyself?—R. Leighton.

"Terse sentences briefly expressed have great power in leading to a happy life."

Are there not scores of men and women living lives of discontentment which are always tending to become lives of self-reproach because the culture which is within the reach of others is not within their reach? Some hard, absorbing work consumes their time. . . . Will it be nothing, will it not be everything, for them to know that the greatest of all human beings lived not for culture, but for service? What He lived for is perfectly within their grasp—nay, it is crowding itself upon them all the time—the opportunity of unselfishly glorifying God, of unselfishly serving man.—Phillips Brooks.

Missionary.

Clippings from the Kassai Herald.

(It is interesting to know that this interesting little magazine is set up entirely by three of the mission boys, Madi, Mukendi and Mpanyi.)

It is with great thankfulness that we receive the news from Ibanj that the hearts of the Bakuba are softening toward the Gospel. Mr. Sheppard, while here attending the Annual Mission Meeting, reported that they had only recently baptized over thirty Bakuba. We have all long prayed that the hearts of that people might be broken, for they have seemed so hard.

The school at Luebo now has over two hundred pupils. An exhibition of school work was given as part of the Christmas entertainment and our European visitors were kind enough to compliment very highly the work of some of the small children. In order to cope with this continual increase we have decided to increase the hours for school work each day. We have about a dozen native teachers now and they add much to our teaching force. There is no age limit for pupils, consequently there are many married men and women in school.

A few weeks ago a native man from a village five days distant came with his two sons to enter them.

The latest book turned out from the Press is a catechism for use in the Catechumen Class. Two of our boys did all the type-setting. One of our boys, Madi, has been down at Matadi for a year in the excellent printing establishment of the Swedish Mission there. He has just returned and we are expecting him to be of great assistance. When we get our new Cylinder Press we shall be able to keep several hands busy all the time.

Lukenga, the chief of the Bakuba people, has recently paid a visit to the State post at Isaka, bringing his tribute. It is to be sincerely hoped that the State will not permit him to indulge in the barbarities of the former Bakuba chiefs. Though he has been in power for only a few months, yet we learn that he has killed several slaves to go into the spirit world with a dead relative.

Forty Protestant missionary societies are at work in Africa. But great as is the force, there are vast regions of unreached people. Only three years ago it could be said that "Northern Africa has one Protestant missionary to 125,000 Mohammedans. The Sahara has one Protestant missionary to 2,500,000 Mohammedans. The Soudan States have one Protestant missionary to 45,000,000 Mohammedans and Pagans. West Africa has about one Protestant missionary to 30,000 Pagans. Central Africa has one Protestant missionary to 80,000 Pagans. Southern Africa has one Protestant missionary to 14,000 Pagans."

Resolution passed by the Assembly:

Resolved, First, That the General Assembly having listened with profound interest to the thrilling recital, given by Rev. W. M. Morrison, of the labours and perils of our Missionaries in Africa and realizing that our work there is probably passing through a great Crisis, being exposed to dangers from which the hand of our Sovereign Lord alone can rescue it, devote the entire time for devotional exercises of Friday to prayer and supplication that God may bring to naught the wrath of man and preserve and prosper His work in the Independent Free State of Africa.

Second, That as far as may be practicable we agree as members of this Court of our Lord Jesus that we will, on our return home, call our people together, give full explanation of the dangers that threaten our African Mission and call on them to pray together and in private as well that God may protect, and greatly enlarge His work in the said Independent Free State.

Paul at Rome.

Acts. 28:1-24, 30-3. June 14, 1903.

After much delay and many adventures, Paul finally reached Rome. It was ordained of God that he should go thither and there testify concerning the faith of Christ. It was also appointed of God that he should be carried to Rome, not as a free herald of the Cross, but as a fettered prisoner. In this condition he obtained access to Caesar's household and to many hearers that he could not have otherwise reached and had leisure for penning many of those Epistles to churches planted, by which the people of God have been instructed and comforted in subsequent ages.

Our lesson deals with Paul's prison life at Rome and presents three topics claiming our attention.

1. Paul's Interview with the Jews.—Three days after his arrival he sent for his fellow countrymen, that he might acquaint them with the facts concerning himself and his position. He affirms that though he had committed no offense against his people or the customs of their fathers, yet he had been delivered as a prisoner to the Romans. He also asserts that when examined by the Romans they would have let him go because there was no cause of death in him. But when the Jews spake against his release he was constrained to appeal unto Caesar, though he had no accusations to bring against his nation. For this cause "he had called for them" that he might make this explanation and that he might testify that "for the hope of Israel" he was a bound prisoner. The Jews reply, "We neither received letters out of Judea concerning thee, neither any of the brethren that came shewed or spake any harm of thee." They express a desire to hear him as to the faith of Christians, and refer to them as "a sect everywhere spoken against." They appoint a day when they would come to his lodging and hear him expound his views.

2. Paul's Testimony Concerning Christ.—Granted his opportunity, the Apostle is not wanting in fidelity to his brethren or his Lord, because Christian doctrines and disciples were unpopular. He expounded his tenets and testified as to the spiritual Kingdom of Messiah. He persuaded them concerning Jesus of Nazareth as the Christ. He addressed their understanding, their heart and conscience, with the view of moving their wills to embrace and obey the Gospel. He would render them willing, devoted servants of Christ and therefore endeavors to win over their whole rational nature. Thus only can real Christians be made. The agency Paul employed was the sacred Scriptures. Doubtless he prayed too for the Holy Spirit to apply the truth as otherwise it would not be effectual. "He persuaded them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses and out of the prophets, from morning till evening." He showed how these Scriptures described Messiah and how the descriptions given were verified in Jesus' life and death. His testimony, though not crowned with complete success, was not in vain. "And some believed the things which were spoken and some believed not." It is ever thus. Testimony concerning Jesus sustained by the Scriptures and enforced by the Holy Ghost is believed by some and rejected by others.

3. Paul's Mode of Life at Rome.—We are told that Paul dwelt in his own hired house with a soldier that kept him for two years. The soldier was doubtless changed from day to day and the Apostle had an opportunity of expounding the Gospel to many members of the Roman guard during this period. His friends and fellow-countrymen also had access to him and we learn "that he received all that came in unto him." He was at liberty to publish Gospel tidings and spent much of his time in "Preaching the Kingdom of God and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ with all confidence."

How we May Learn to Use Our Sword.

Eph. 6:17; Heb. 4:12-13; 2 Tim. 2:15.

Topic for June 21.

In the sixth chapter of Ephesians the Holy Spirit gives us a list of the parts of the armor of the Christian. This is for a defensive warfare. There is an offensive warfare to be waged and for this we are not left unequipped. There is but one weapon, but it is a powerful one. It is the sword of the Spirit, that is, the Word of God. In any warfare the matter of arms is an essential one. Our government and every other progressive government, spends millions of dollars in equipping our soldiers with the most approved arms. They are constantly throwing away thousands of arms that are as good as they ever were, but that have become antiquated, though manufactured only a few years ago and at the time looked upon as the best that the world could provide. The reason for this expenditure is plain. Our soldiers must always have the very best that can be procured so that when the order to join the battle comes, they may have every advantage that improved weapons can give them.

The greatest warfare that has ever been known to earth is the conflict which is always being waged between Satan and the hosts of Immanuel's army. Yet how poorly equipped many of us are when the battle is being waged most fiercely!

In this spiritual warfare we have a great advantage over the armies that wage the earthly fights. Their arms soon become old-fashioned and of no use. Ours become more efficient the longer they are used. We need never lay aside our arms for anything more approved. Though of an old model, "the sword of the Spirit" is still just as effective as it ever was. What is needed is that we train ourselves in its use. Soldiers undergo all sorts of drills, and the government spends much money on target practices and imitations of the manoeuvres of war in order that our soldiers and sailors may know just what to do and how to do it when the time for actual fighting comes. Just so, the soldier in the army of Jesus should be in practice.

To this end he should not wait until the enemy has joined the battle before he begins to arm himself or to learn the use of his weapon. He should spend much time in drill and target practice. That weapon which we are to use should be our constant companion.

Then a country that is well prepared for war does not have to go to war as frequently as the little unprepared ones. The enemy will be careful about engaging with one known to be stronger than he. So the child of God who has been prepared for the fight "against principalities and against powers and against the rulers of the darkness of this world," will not have so many skirmishes with the enemy as that one who has not made the preparation. If the Word of God abide in us we will be ready at all times to meet our foe.

When Jesus was here in the flesh He gave us a lesson about meeting His enemy and ours. Had Christ successfully baffled the devil by some divine power, such as you and I cannot possess, we might rightly think the odds against us in trying to withstand this same foe. But Christ used a weapon for driving the tempter away which is at the disposal of each one of us. Every answer which he gave to the devil during the temptation began, "it is written." Written where? In God's Word where you and I may read it and from which we may commit it to memory and thus have a whole arsenal within us.

In answering the Jews and all those who sought to trap Him in His words, he appealed to the same blessed Scriptures for weapons with which to put them to rout.

What we need to learn then, is that the Scriptures alone can supply us with the facilities for successfully overcoming the enemies of our souls. History shows us that those who have done the most effective fighting are those who have known the Scriptures best.

The New and Living Way.

Once I walked through an endless and dark passage-way. The farther I walked the more its walls contracted—the more hopeless I felt of exit. I could not retrace my steps, for an inner, irresistible impulse urged me forward. On I went, but with a growing sense of despair. No light, no end of the way appeared. Dark and endless as was this dreary way, it was the way in which the souls of men have walked from Paul in the Seventh of Romans to the latest striver after holiness through self.

Trying to be good enough to be saved, is an endless and dark passage way, closed at the furthest end!

In this lone conflict-walk of the spirit, goodness fit to avail before God never gets the upper hand. It never has enough consistency to stand alone. It is always in danger of yielding to the onslaught of desire, and at last it is sure to fail. Can the effort to appeal to God by our goodness, or if that strikes us as impossible, at least to bring forward a good excuse for our failure, ever be successful, even if every energy of one being were bent to the task? Yet many suppose such an effort as this to be religion! It may be a species of religion, but it is not Christianity!

God in his kindness asks not that way of us, "weak through the flesh." Why do we demand it of ourselves? Salvation by self-effort may now be lawfully abandoned, since God in Christ has set before us a new and living way.

While still I walked in the suffocating, dusky lane shut in to self and its powerless efforts after perfect goodness—suddenly a door opened on my right. A flood of sunshine poured in, like a very morning of heaven. birds sang, dew drops silvered all the grassy ground. The soft green foliage, lightly lifting under the breeze, cast luminous shadows and the air was elixir.

"What can this be?" I cried, in utter freedom and joy of spirit. What is this escape from paralyzing effort and certain defeat? It was to me no other than God's new way—the way of immediate and entire forgiveness of all my sin, past, present and to come—the perfect restitution of thy spirit to the fulness of the Father's love and his affection. The scene was like a smile of God, resting on me, the struggler, the oft-defeated one!

It was a new way of being and becoming good. It was to take the goodness of Another, and the obedience of Another—a perfect One, for my own. I saw that "the Gift of God is eternal life," and in simple reception of that gift there came a power with the gift to do the will of God from the heart.

Since then I have lived in the garden,
In the sun-lighted smile of the Lord.
I work not for my salvation,
For that He has fully secured,
But I help the Lord of the garden,
To give of its fruits and flowers,
To the wearily passing pilgrims,
Or constrain them to rest in its bowers.

And dwelling with Him in the garden,
I shall daily look on his Face;
And grow in his holy likeness,
And learn to serve all by his grace.
He has put within me his Spirit,
And his life is new life in me—
A Fountain of living waters
That floweth eternally.

Why the Church Paper Should Go to Every Home.

Rev. R. W. Alexander, Tarboro, N. C.

The place of the church paper in the home is one of vast importance. Why? The reason is legion. Only a few can be recited at this time. It keeps one informed as to the movements and doings of the Church, and so in touch and sympathy with her hopes and interests. This is a fact that cannot be too much stressed. The attitude of indifference which the church has assumed toward the prosperity of Zion finds its explanation, largely, here;—want of information. Ignorance tends to death. It is not because men are so bad; it is not because men are unwilling to support and advance the interests of Christ's kingdom that the Church treasury is always empty and the Church is everlastingly begging. It is, largely, because men do not know what the Church is doing; it is because they are ignorant of her urgent need of funds, for when the facts are brought to their attention, when the appeal is made to them in Jesus' name and for his sake their response is always liberal and gratifying. The Church never refuses to support, and that right royally, a worthy cause when that cause is faithfully and clearly brought to her attention. Much of the Master's vineyard lieth in waste to-day, not because of the unwillingness, but because of the Church's ignorance. How is this ignorance to be dissipated? One of the cheapest and most efficient means is the universal circulation of our church paper. Let it come into every home. It will bring in every issue just that that will be the death-blow of ignorance,—information. It is a significant fact that where our church paper goes and is read our people are interested, really and genuinely, in the great work of the Church, as their abounding liberality abundantly proves.

But, another important mission of the church paper—it strikes down error. Men of genius, of intellectual strength, aided by the devil, are industriously doing all they can to counteract the force of the truth. A constant stream of Atheistic and pernicious literature is flowing through the land beguiling, deceiving and destroying the souls of men! Not a few quasi-religious papers are the vehicles of error. They are splendid organs for the dissemination of falsehood. Error is so sandwiched with truth that many are decoyed "into the land of strangers." For instance, in a recent issue of one of these papers appeared an editorial denying the necessity of Regeneration! That paper finds its way into many of our Sabbath-schools. That editorial is read, the poison is injected! Who can forecast the result? Now, the church paper unmasks the falsehood, tears open the sandwich and reveals the error. It points out the "rocks and dangerous shoals," and also the truth which shall "establish you in every good word and work." In proportion as one knows the truth is he strong and vigorous and valiant in the cause of righteousness and truth.

Finally, the church paper should come into every home because of its happy, ennobling effect upon the young. "A man is known by the company he keeps." No less true is it, a man is known by what he reads. And the associations of childhood tell upon the habits of manhood. As an illustration of this, there lives, or did live, a man in the Southern States who, in the good Providence of God, reared an interesting family. He succeeded in equipping them well for discharging creditably the duties of life, giving to each a complete college education. Secular newspapers, magazines, etc., etc., found their way to that home; but if a church paper did it was a chance "sample copy," or was sent through mistake of the mailing clerk! Result? Not one of that family, notwithstanding their many and splendid opportunities, has developed any love for and distinction in the work of the Church. At any rate, their neighbors have never so charged them! The case is a simple one, and easy of diagnosis: The great and precious doctrines taught in God's Word and emphasized in our Standards are unknown, and, of course, unloved, for love presupposes knowledge.

The wise man says, "train up a child in the way he should go; when he is old he will not depart from it."

Timely Sermon by Rev. William Hayne Leavell,

Pastor of First Presbyterian Church, Houston, Texas.

Text: Proverbs xiv. 34: "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." This is the cry of the prophets. Not one of them has ever failed to cry it aloud in the hearing of the generations. Righteousness exalteth a nation, a community, a family, an individual; but sin is a reproach and a calamity to everybody. All the lessons of human history are a running commentary on the text. Every nation built up by corrupt forces and fraudulent chicaneries is predestined to destruction: for whatever is rotten at the core, unsound in heart, must fall sooner or later. "Every plant which my Heavenly Father planted not, shall be rooted up," is what Jesus Christ said; and never a "jot or tittle" of His word shall ever be falsified by the facts. We may think otherwise. We see fraud triumph, apparently; see the wicked flourish like the "green bay tree;" see selfishness and pride and corruption crowned amid the plaudits of the mad crowd, but "be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." That and more—that in kind and more in bulk. If you "sow the wind, you reap the whirlwind," for the harvest is more abundant than the sowing. You can't sow cheat and harvest wheat; your harvest will be cheat inevitably and more abundantly.

You may think otherwise. You may fail to read aright the lessons of the past. You may shut your eyes to the lowering skies and not discern the signs of the times. You may sing in hilarious notes:

"It's a long time a-comin'."

But, notwithstanding, nevertheless, God always arrives. Men and communities and nations have mistaken God's patience and forbearance before this. They have assumed that He was not, or, if he was He did not know, or if He knew He did not care. Sodom and Gomorrah assumed something of the kind, and where are they? The Roman empire failed to learn that sin is a reproach and a snare, and it is wrapped in endless night. The French monarchy for years stamped upon the text, trampled it in the dust, and all its glories crinkled in the flames of the revolution. "Be not deceived. God is not mocked." Nor is God "slack" as men count "slackness." When the hour strikes and all hope of righteousness under other and gentler ministrations fail, the flames devour and it is found that God has not forgotten how to scourge. If you abuse the long suffering of God, you will find that He will overturn and overturn until He comes, whose right it is to rule. He will rule and rule in righteousness.

I do not undertake to fix the times and the seasons. I do not determine for God the "metes and bounds." I do not know the time when nor the method how He will arrive. I say only that the voices of all the prophets and the lessons of all history tell us that God does arrive, and that He does execute vengeance upon the devices of the wicked.

Now, my friends, what is the actual situation in our own city of Houston? We live here, and work here, and our duty is here. We can not determine the policies of the general government, we can not dictate the manner of our dealing with Cuba and the Philippines, we can not even force the general judgment in a specific case upon the naval department, but we can determine whether righteousness shall exalt this community, and whether the unblushing front of lawlessness and corruption shall plant itself in the open. This is the field of our operations, and here lie both our duty and our responsibility.

Do not mistake my meaning. I am not a political preacher. I am not even a politician. It is not my business nor my purpose to advise you to vote for one man or another in the coming municipal election. Of themselves I rarely expect much from any set of officials in the way of independent and unselfish action. Almost all officials among a free people reflect the sentiment and do the will of those who put them in office and who can put them out. Public opinion controls, not the opinion of the best portion of the public, nor that of the worst, but the opinion of the majority, of the dominant portion of the public, that portion which makes and unmakes officials. If that be the best portion, then public opinion is the opinion of the best citizens. If otherwise, then otherwise. It is almost impossible to range all good citizens in the same ranks. They are good citizens in different degrees. They see things in different lights. And so they divide upon almost all questions. And yet it should not be impossible to get everybody who believes that faith is better than faithlessness, honesty is better than fraud, morality better than immorality, sobriety better than drunkenness, and decency better than indecency, to co-operate in order to bring righteousness to the throne. But it is difficult to do this much, because our vision is not single and our motives are mixed. And this is the reason that in this and other communities in our favored land we are suffering for want of vigorous righteous pursuit of the best purposes; suffering from the unwholesome fires of evil which needs but little encouragement to make a mock of righteousness. We suffer from these things because in our indifference and unselfishness we suffer them. If we were determined that a certain policy should be administered here we could have it administered. If the churches, churches which profess and preach righteousness, were united in heart and purpose to make this community one where disorders and lawlessness should cease, cease at once and forever, they could have their will. There are almost no communities in our whole land where the professors of righteousness could not control the situation if they were but of one heart and purpose. And so I declare that right here in Houston we could make the devil hide his diminished head if the entire constituency of the churches were agreed on just who and what the devil is and that we wanted no more to look upon his face forever.

It is a comparatively easy matter and, constituted as we are, with always a leaning toward evil, a not wholly uncomfortable matter to lay the blame of the moral situation upon the officials. Whose officials are they? How did they get to be our officials? To whom are they responsible? Whose will do they execute? I do not mean to say that the officials are doing their duty. I do say, however, that I never knew a set of officials indifferent to the will of the people whose officials they were. If we honestly desire, if the dominant citizenship of Houston honestly desires to exact righteousness here in the administration of our municipal affairs it would be difficult to find and put in office any set of officials who would not try to do the thing we insist upon it they shall do. However blameworthy the officials may be, we who put them in place and keep them there are the more blameworthy. We can not hide behind the inefficiency of the officers. They are inefficient because we are not insistent. The fault is ours in the last analysis.

Let me give you one illustration: The laws of this great commonwealth of Texas as to the regulation of the liquor business are in many respects admirable. Faithfully executed they would greatly diminish the number of drinking places in Houston, and greatly diminish the amount of drinking, and would make it hazardous for men to enable or induce minors to drink. No one who claims to be even a respectable citizen could hesitate to give in his adherence to the desirability of these things. There is nothing extreme in these notions, no fanaticism, nothing that should deter conservative and respectable citizens from giving their influence to have these laws executed. The laws are not enforced. I am told this by men who should know, and their statement is not denied. Now, in one of the spasmodic efforts made by certain communities or individuals to do something for the cause of righteousness, a public meeting in Houston was called on a Sunday afternoon to secure the co-operation of our influential citizenship to the end that the laws governing saloons might be enforced by the sworn officials who were not enforcing them, and who needed prodding. I went down to that meeting and sat where I could overlook the number of people in attendance. Everybody knew of the meeting, everybody approves of enforcing law, and everybody knows that in this matter it is not enforced. Present at that meeting there were very few of the influential citizens of Houston. Why? There is but one honest answer to that question. They did not care enough about the matter to attend.

Very well, those who were there attempted something. The services of a most competent firm of lawyers were enlisted who proposed to see that every liquor dealer complied with the law. Some dealers were arrested, taken before the proper tribunals and, I am told, were turned loose. Why? Largely, because the officials knew the whole thing to be but a spasm from which we would soon recover and nothing more would be heard of it. We soon grew "weary of well doing" and stopped. The law firm found itself standing largely alone, and stopped. And the law still suffers violation among us all the time.

Is the fault the fault of the officials alone? Not by any means. Had those officials believed that every one of them aiding and abetting the violation of law would at the very next election be officially decapitated they would have done their duty. I am told that some of these officials are before the people for re-election and few of them, if any, will fail because of anything they did in connection with our virtuous spasm of some months ago. They felt sure we would recover and forget, and that the next spasm that afflicted us would have another cause. And sure enough we have now directed our concentrated energies to secure the passage of the anti-expectoration ordinance. A man with a quid of tobacco in his mouth will walk along the street, soil it with expectoration and say to you: "You know I rather think this anti-expectoration ordinance a good thing. Every one of us will think of it every time he expectorates on the sidewalk." And I am thinking that will be the extent of its practical value. However, the thing is indicative of this age of sanitation and mush. We let up on the matter of moral safety of our young men and interest ourselves in the preservation of our women's skirts and the lessening of our laundry bills.

The fault and the responsibility are ours. The actual moral situation here in Houston, unless I am greatly misinformed, is serious enough to awaken the deep concern of every one of us who has any reverence for God and any hatred of sin and desire for the triumph of righteousness; and the moral sentiment among us must be at very low tide when we get amazed that one of our judges is increasing the efficiency and maintaining the dignity of his court merely by enforcing certain minor requirements which have lain for long in supposed "innocuous desuetude."

In the matter referred to before. I am told that the liquor interests in Houston persistently, impudently and safely violate the law in very many ways, and that neither the officials nor the citizens are ignorant of this violation; and yet nobody does anything to uphold the law. I am told the officials incriminate one another; that one lot complain that when they do arrest a man for such disregard of law the first trial officer turns him loose, and that the other complain that the men who are arrested are the insignificant offenders, while the significant fellows who have money and influence are left alone. These things I am told. The one thing I know is that the law is violated with impunity; this I see every time I walk down the street.

Every little while the city papers record a murder. Somebody is shot down openly on the street by his personal enemy. Life is not respected; everybody who wants to do so carries a pistol on his person, although there is a law against carrying concealed weapons. Few men who have a serious quarrel think themselves safe enough under the protection of the law and think they must needs carry a pistol for their own protection. When a life is taken the man who commits the deed rarely even undertakes to run. He delivers himself up, feeling pretty certain he can prove to the satisfaction of some jury that he acted in self-defense, or otherwise justifiably, although it turns out that the dead man did not himself have a weapon. The trial is deferred until the public interest is as dead as the murdered man and then the one who killed him is cleared by a jury of his peers, and some lawyer is congratulated on his skill in handling the evidence, if not the jury. The thing is not done in a corner; it is not done once, but openly and often. We have lost our respect for the right of men to their 'life, liberty and pursuit of happiness.'" I am not sure but it would be a good thing to adopt the suggestion of an eminent chief justice of one of our sovereign States where homicide is frequent, and enact a law making every homicide which is the result of carrying concealed weapons a murder.

I am informed that the laws against gambling in Texas are very strenuous, strenuous to the extent that card playing in public places, on the trains even, is prohibited and yet it is asserted on all sides that gambling houses are openly run here in Houston without being interfered with at all. Of my own knowledge I do not know where these places are to be found, but I do know this, that not a few times I have been approached by distressed parents and brothers and friends to help save some young fellow who has stolen money from his employer and dropped it into the pit of some gambling house here in Houston. There is no more disastrous crime against good morals, none that is more productive of shame and sorrow and distress than this offense of gambling; and I am told that there is no passion so fascinating and so terrible as the passion for gambling. The devil allows a few men to prosper by this sin!—prosper so far as to accumulate money by this form of robbery; but he can not hinder their degradation from every standard of moral decency. There is no man more characterless, more wanting in every instinct and quality of honest manhood than the gambler; there is no vice more insidious. Laws are enacted to prevent every form of gambling and, not the officers merely, but public sentiment, the public sentiment here in Houston, allows the law to be a dead letter.

And yet there are numerous examples and illustrations of incipient gambling, practically schools where the gambling proclivities are fostered and educated, right here in Houston among people who even lay claim to Christian character. Notwithstanding the shame that too often results from gambling; notwithstanding the ruin that frequently follows; notwithstanding the tears of parents and the degradation of children; notwithstanding the terrible fascination of this vice and the havoc it creates; notwithstanding that the laws of our own and every other civilized State prohibit gambling under severe penalties, it, or something that bears a most dangerous and striking family likeness to it; it or its progenitors of the first generation; it or its equivalent is practiced persistently in the parlors of Houston homes, I am told.

There is no need that I should stop to argue the question that things which are equal to the same thing are equal to each other, for that is an axiom both in mathematics and in morals. It is the same thing in principle if I play for a $1000 in money, or for a silver service bought by the thousand dollars; if I play for a ten cent whistle or for the dime 'twill take to buy it. It is the same thing if I contribute to the treasury of a club for the purpose of providing prizes to be played for, or if, as one of a temporary club of four, I contribute my share of the money to make a lump sum to be played for. You may thrash the devil around the stump, but it is the same devil. You may say that you do not believe the two things are the same, do not believe them to be equal to each other, but that merely reduces the matter to a question of competency either of intellect or conscience, one or the other is at fault.

You may keep a straight face and declare that the prizes for which you play in card parties are in the same category with the prizes offered in Sunday-school or learning so many chapters of the Bible, or so many questions and answers in the Westminster catechism, or the prizes offered in school or college for the best class standing or the best essay, best intellectual production. I have too much respect for your intelligence to believe that you mean what you say, that to stimulate a youth to store his mind with healthy thought and by mental exercise develop and discipline his mental powers, is in the same category with the prizes offered for the most skillful and most successful card playing. If you believe that sort of thing you have been caught by the similarity of sound between two widely different things, and need a stimulus to develop and discipline your other powers. Why, you had as well say that the prizes in your card playing tournaments are in the same category with the stimulus that moved Moses to make his great decision and choose God for his portion rather than "enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season," "for he looked unto the recompense of reward;" as well claim they are in the same category with the inspired purpose of the great apostle Paul, who forgot the things behind and pressed forward toward the mark "for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." You are not serious about it, surely! To stimulate one to do some morally valuable thing must be morally different from stimulating him to do some morally valueless or hurtful thing.

Then there is another morally impossible thing I am told is done here among us. Some people think they can play in a game where prizes are played for and yet not be morally blameworthy; that because they do not keep the score and therefore never win the prizes they are not morally at fault. That is a most inconsequent subterfuge. Three men ask me to join a game for a $1000 just to make up the hands. I put up no money, indeed, but I abet the gambling and make it possible in a specific instance and can not be morally blameless if there is any moral blame attached to the thing. That is a mere bit of ethical sleight of hand. The tar is made all the same if I merely tend the fire, but do not contribute a single stick.

I am told, too, some other things are seen and done hereabout; that some of the women lose their tempers when they fail to win the prizes, or when their less skillful partners blunder in the play; and losing their tempers lose a good many other elements of admirable womanhood. That some of the women neglect their homes and children for the sake of their prize-playing card parties, and attend one, two, sometimes three such gatherings in one day; and that their cowed or incompetent husbands do not object. (Before I believe that they do not object I would have to get them into the confessional and in secret hear them say it where I could look them squarely in the eye and tell them just what I think of thoughtless husbands like that, the more particularly if they have children in their so-called homes.) That the returns show that the vice of gambling is just as fascinating and just as demoralizing for women as it is for men. That the tendency of this prize playing business is showing itself already, and some of the women are playing poker for money, are telling their friends how deliciously exciting it is, how much more exciting than mere playing for prizes. The devil is always that way. Give him "an inch and he'll take an ell," whether you pronounce that way or English it. I am not saying these things of my own knowledge, for I have never attended a card-party of any sort since I have been grown. I am telling you what is told me by persons who say they see and hear these things. But many of you know whether they are true. If people want to play cards, I can not see why it is not just as interesting to play for the game, as you do in chess or dominoes, and certainly it is far more innocent and morally sane.

Are these things true? Are our homes being converted into places for the demoralization of the young? Do any of you women have sons, or husbands, or both, who crowd the billiard and bar-rooms at the various hotels and public haunts of Houston? You women who do any of the things we have been talking about?

Then, you can not be surprised, for you are all "tarred with the same stick," and you do not deserve any better fate.

But this is enough! Enough!

Now this is the moral situation in Houston: The laws against gambling are not enforced; the laws regulating the saloon business are violated and trampled in the dust with impunity and impudence; the laws against carrying concealed weapons are universally disregarded and life is held cheap; our women are leaving the things for which God made them and for which our civilization elevated and preserved them, to follow the same laughing imps which have ever been busy unwinding the stout cord of our conscience and snapping its separate threads, are converting our homes into kindergartens for the training of gamblers.

And we, what are we doing? We have our eyes on the ship channel, on the cotton business, on the lumber yards, on the wholesale trade, on things utterly and only material. We are faltering with our duty. We are organizing pleasure clubs of all sorts and sizes. We are desecrating the Day of the Lord in many ways. And are shutting our eyes to the moral status: blind as bats; blind as the devil would have us. We are blaming officials who are doing their best to reflect our wills, who are anxiously and always keeping their fingers on the public pulse. These officials are doing what the next officials will do—reflecting the public conscience and doing the public will. No set of men you can elect will do otherwise. Water can not rise above its source without being forced above it by constant pressure. If you elect men to execute the laws and then show them you do not care a rap whether the laws are enforced or not, they will not care a rap either. That is human nature, official or unofficial, and human nature remains human nature. The moral atmosphere must be changed if we will change the conditions here in Houston.

Do you have the notion that there is no relation between your behavior as parents and the behavior of your children? No relation between your playing for stakes of any kind at your fireside and your sons playing for money in gambling hells? No relation between your violation of the law in your homes and the violation of law on our streets? Then you are criminally ignorant of the most primary operations of moral principle.

The decent doing of wickedness in our homes is bound almost as cause and effect, as parent and child, to the vulgar doing of wickedness on our streets and in the dens of vice. If we eat bitter grapes we inevitably set our children's teeth on edge. You are very largely responsible for the lawlessness and crime of which great complaint is made because you are yourselves guilty on velvet of what others are guilty on tessellated pavements and puncheon floors. Only the surroundings are different, the morality is the same. And God will bring you into judgment.

What then? You are Christian men and women. You make up the force of the Church of Jesus Christ in this community. What you do or fail to do will determine the influence for good or evil of the Church here in Houston. Do I want the Church to go into city politics? Never. What I want is that membership in the Church and profession of faith in Jesus Christ shall be the equivalent of good citizenship and the guarantee of good morals. What I want is that as Christian men and women you shall stand for the highest ideals of right in your homes and on the streets; that you shall not foster lawlessness and break down the moral barriers in the security of your parlors; that you shall pray for the triumph of righteousness here in Houston and honestly meet your responsibility as citizens in the spirit of your prayers.

Let the Christian men and women of Houston but cleanse their hearts of selfish indifference to the public morals, and illustrate in themselves the virtues they should preach, set their own houses in honest and lawful order, and it will take no great while to bring into power the righteousness which exalts, and drive out the sin and crime which are a reproach and a doom to any people.

If the Christian Church is not aiming at the redemption of our civilization, aiming at that through and by means of us who are its adherents, then it is false to the character and treacherous to the hopes of Jesus Christ, its founder. If we go with the world and do what the world approves and do not stand up stiffly for the righteousness that exalts, then are we two-fold more the children of hell than if we made profession of adherence to the devil. It is not possible for us to be really neutral. We can not establish the neutrality that cries out "Good Lord, Good Devil!" If you are not for God you are against Him. You can not serve God and Mammon. Christ has no concord with Belial. You can not blow hot and cold with the same breath. You must be one thing or the other.

What I beg of you in the name of God, in the name of humanity, in the name of civilization, in the name of our city, in the name of our homes, in the name of our children, and in the name of every interest and every hope of all these in one—what I beg of you is to stand up for Jesus Christ, to stand in His great might and fight for the righteousness that exalts, exalts a nation, a community, a family, an individual, and fight against the sin and the evil which are a reproach and a snare and a doom to everybody.

Keep in mind that life here in this world is not intended to be a mere rush after pleasure, after what men call happiness, a mad race for the things of this world in which men lose "all tidings of another and higher." "If what thou namest Happiness be our true aim, then are we all astray," says Carlyle in "Sartor Resartus." "With stupidity and sound digestion man may front much. But what in these dull unimaginative days are the terrors of conscience to the diseases of the liver! Not on morality, but on cookery let us build our stronghold. There, brandishing our frying pan as censor, let us offer sweet incense to the devil, and live at ease on the fat things he has provided for his elect!" Never.

My brethren, God is "slow to anger and plenteous in mercy," but He will not always forbear. Everything not planted of God shall be some day plucked up by the roots. He is not mocked. There is a reckoning in store. I adjure you by the mercy of God and the sacrifice of Jesus Christ that you stand up for righteousness in your homes and in your community, that you do what in you lies to bring to the throne that righteousness which exalts, and drive out from your hearts and lives the sin which is a reproach and a doom. May all your later life show you as loyal soldiers of Jesus Christ and lovers of the eternal righteousness.

Rev. James Phillips, D. D.

To one who has outlived the large majority of his contemporaries, there often come thoughts of those who were his associates in the days of his childhood and youth or of those who were then in the vigor of their manhood. When I was a youth the person above named was one of this latter class. While he was known as the able professor of mathematics in our State Institution at Chapel Hill he often preached whenever and wherever the opportunity presented itself. I never heard him preach a poor sermon; but the chief object of this brief notice is to make mention of one striking characteristic that made such an indelible impression that it has remained firmly fixed among the remembrances of him through the many years that have intervened since the scholar, preacher and above all, devout Christian passed from the scene of action. I have reference to his public prayers that produced a profound impression upon all listeners. There was a fervency and unction in these prayers that I have never seen equalled. The suppliant lost consciousness of any other presence than that of Him to whom he was speaking, and the volume of words poured forth from the lips, nay, from the heart like a mighty torrent and with an eloquence and power that had no thought of denial

His prayers were a standing rebuke to all luke-warm and formal suppliants.

Those who can recollect the genial mirth that exhibited itself in his cheerful face and sparkling eye when engaged in conversation, need not be reminded that his religion was of that cheerful type that dispelled gloom and successfully cultivated the joys that are the natural accompaniments of such a state as is described in Gal. 5:22.

There are yet living some who had the privilege of sitting under the instruction of Dr. Phillip in the class room (I never enjoyed this privilege) and who consequently knew him more intimately. Such doubtless could give to the public something in his life and character worthy of perpetuation. There was much relating to many of his day which posterity should not suffer to pass into oblivion but which is likely to do so.

The Spring Fleeting of Our Presbyteries.

A careful comparison from time to time of the reports of the Presbyteries, as published in the church papers, reveals some startling truths. From spring to fall, and from fall to spring, there is about the same report. Some faithful work done, much hoped for, in the future, but coupled with this is the complaint of Sabbath desecration, worldliness, and the open neglect of the family altar. In great measure we seem to be "marking time," busy, yet making little, if any, progress. What is the reason? To me the reason is two-fold.

The standard of holy living, among us, is too low. The Bible is full of the positive command, to put away all sin and uncleanness from our lives, yet we are not doing it. A friend of mine, teaching her Sunday-school class not long since, was urging the hatred of sin. A little girl not more than eight years old, spoke up, "Well, Miss J., the catechism says we can't help sinning."

As a consequence of this, we are not actively concerned for the salvation of the great world, lying in wickedness.

I have carefully examined the copies of the Standard, since the reports of the Presbyteries, this year, have been published. The majority do not mention Foreign Missions at all. A few report that progress is being made, though they do not enlarge on the subject. Several have commended the Woman's Union, while some seem to ignore this work. The two exceptions to the rule, as far as I can see, are Roanoke and Harmony Presbyteries. Dr. Owen, one of our medical missionaries to Korea, was chosen moderator of Roanoke Presbytery, and gave a night session in the interest of Foreign Missions.

Harmony Presbytery sent in a report on Foreign Missions, adopted at their meeting, in which is a tender memorial to Dr. Rankin. I am not pessimistic, but do not the majority of the reports show that there is a strange apathy as to world-wide evangelization among our pastors and elders? And can we doubt that the confessed leanness at home is a result of this indifference? There is one church in my own Presbytery, which a few years ago was an "infant" among the churches. It became infused with the missionary spirit, several commenced conscientiously tithing their incomes, and soon they decided to assume the support of a missionary. At the meeting of Presbytery, a few months after their missionary had been assigned them, the elder representing the church, reported the amount contributed for the past year, more than was given by any church in the Presbytery, except one. Their membership is sixty, the only church giving more, has a membership of several hundred. Their representative added, "You don't assess us enough for Home Missions."

Does this not seem as if there is indeed, a reflex blessing, on those who are reaching out to the unsaved, in the "regions beyond?"

Oh, brethren, the Latin Thesis may have its place, but the Master wants soul-winning at home and abroad, to take the first place.

Education in the Cove.

Education among the Coveites is neither scientific or classical, neither technical nor industrial. It is neither high school, nor grammar school, nor primary. Anything, it is only primitive. In quality it is merely the endowment which mother nature bestows upon all her children. The appetences, instincts and intuitions of the genus homo, somewhat reduced and developed by family traditions, personal experiences and hints gathered from fellow denizens of the forest. In quantity this education is little more than nothing. Nothing accentuated, with a plus and minus sign placed thereafter, about expresses the truth. The Coveite does not let his endowment out at usury. When the day of reckoning comes he loses all; for having not, he loses even that which he has. He is deficient both in knowledge and in wisdom.

It is of small moment that he does not know that "trek" is a South African term meaning an organized migration. It is of large moment that he is not wise to stay the ravages of the cankerworm and the march of locusts that go forth all of them by bands. It is of small moment that he does not know the genealogy of the House of Hapsburg. It is of large moment that he is not wise to regard the laws of heredity and consanguinity, the disregard of which has involved that house in ruin. It is of small moment that the chemical formula  $H_2O$  means nothing to him; but he allows the water to wash away his soil and has never so much as heard of reforestation. He is altogether ignorant of the rule of rhetoric that negatives negative one another. He is ignorant of that rule and thrives; but because he is ignorant of the fact that carbolic acid is a good antiseptic he permits putrefactive micro organisms to thrive beside him and when poisoned dies for the lack of an antidote.

The terms, psychology, and biology, chemistry and hygiene convey no ideas to the Coveite's mind. He is alike ignorant of geology and geography; alike ignorant of the typology of Scripture and of the topography of his native state. He does not distinguish between alchemy and chemistry. Aesthetics and anesthetics are alike strangers to him. He is ascetic enough to refuse the former and stoic enough to decline the later. He has never looked through a microscope to study a microbe, and bacteriology is a meaningless if not a senseless word.

He does not know physics, the science that treats of the phenomena associated with matter; he does know physics as cathartics; not physics in the singular, but physics in the plural, physics as cathartics, compound cathartics which his wife makes of herbs brewed and of roots boiled down. These she administers to him when he is ailing. He is ailing often, for culinary science in the Cove is neither scientific nor culinary. In fact of all the ologies he knows only the doxology. This he sings in long metre, in very long metre. Political economy to him means allegiance to a political party and voting the ticket which his grandfather voted. His knowledge of agriculture is inherited and he plants his seeds according to the phases of the moon and the signs of the Zodiac. He observes the wind and does not sow, he regards the clouds and does not reap.

I went by the field and by the vineyard of this man void of understanding; and lo it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof and the stone wall thereof was broken down.

At the head of the Cove I spied a school-house and was encouraged; but alas! on close examination, how inadequate I found it.

"Not big enough to cuss at cat in, sir; not big enough to cuss a cat in," said the Coveite to me as he saw me inspecting the house; "and, sir, if you should hold the cat by the tail you would get your mouth full of fur."

No, not big enough to cuss a cat in, nor warm enough to keep a horse in and yet—and yet.

I saw the teacher, a young man, too weak physically to drive a lumber wagon, too weak mentally to aspire to the legislature, too weak morally to preach and too well satisfied with himself to marry. This man was teaching a score of children. The four-score other children were in the harvest field or in the swimming hole.

This is what he taught them: The direct object of an active transitive verb is to be put into the objective case. After that a thirteen year old tow-headed boy "spelled down the school" by correctly spelling reciprocity and ratiocination. Then came the lesson in geography. The little fellows were taught without map, chart or globe the location of Afghanistan, and Beloochistan and the boundaries of Kamtschatka. Such is school teaching in the Cove.

When the Coveite pressed him the teacher acknowledged that his own mind was not clear as to the meaning of an active transitive verb. When the aforesaid tow-head was unable to define reciprocity the teacher explained that he taught spelling and not definitions. The children seemed to know no more about the location of the Asiatic countries than they did about the location of the lost Atlantis.

Western Correspondence.

A trip West at any time is of interest to the traveler, but much more in May, when our country puts on its finest appearance. Sabbath, May 24, was spent at Des Moines, Ia. The cause of moral reform was presented in the First United Presbyterian Church in two sermons. This church took a deep interest in the work. The pastor, Rev. A. C. Douglass, was chairman of the permanent committee on Reform and his report to the General Assembly was of the first order in point of merit.

The General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church of North America was next point of interest.

Rev. Jas. P. Cowan, D. D., of Indianapolis, Ind., was chosen moderator by acclamation. Dr. Cowan has been engaged in Home Mission work for twenty years, or all his ministry. Rev. D. F. McGill, of Alleghany City, Pa., was chosen Principal clerk of the Assembly in place of the lamented Rev. W. J. Reid, D. D., who died since last Assembly. Dr. Reid was popular and universally beloved. Dr. McGill will prove a worthy successor. The Assembly is full of interest this year. The attendance is larger perhaps than ever before. The full number of delegates is 313. The cause of missions is absorbing most interest. India has asked the appointment of 180 new missionaries, Egypt asks for 280 and the Soudan 25. Already much enthusiasm has been created.

Union with the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, South, and the Reformed Presbyterian New School is up for consideration. It is hoped some progress will be made this year in the direction of union with other branches of the Church.

The Assembly has just now acted upon the united application for large increase of new missionaries to India and Egypt. The Church will undertake to send out the new forces as soon as it can be done. Never before perhaps, was there so much enthusiasm in the cause of missions as was shown when this action was taken. Revs. Messrs. McCannellee, Balentine, Morrison, and Misses Fulton, Morrison and Miss Elizabeth Good as returned missionaries from India, were introduced to the Assembly and made brief addresses; also Miss Finney from Egypt. Miss Gordon is now a veteran, having been in the service for 50 years. Provision has been made for the conventions to be held in 1905, in the interests of an inspired Psalmody, similar to that held last year at Belfast. No better place could be found for one of these conventions than Charlotte, N. C. If you send in your invitation in time no doubt you can get the Convention.

The announcement has just been made of a great calamity at Topeka, Kan. The loss of 250 lives by flood and fire. The Union Depot at Kansas City has 2 1-2 feet of water. More anon.

The Editor's Chat with the Reader.

The Table of Contents above gives a sufficient indication of the feast of good things before our readers in this issue. Since penning the review of the Southern Assembly we have received the information from an undoubtedly authentic source that the resolution of Dr. Marquess offering the foot-notes to the Confession was really defeated by those who desired an out and ont amendment, enough of those so voting having declared themselves afterwards to have made a majority, with those voting for the foot-notes. So the Assembly was really in favor of a constitutional change in the language of our creed. This might not mean a sufficient majority to carry a three fourths vote in the Presbyteries, however, as some of them are still almost wholly dependent upon reactionary papers for their religious pabulum. If we were inclined to boast we would say that this is a pretty fair indication of the influence of the Standard in the Southern Church, as it stood alone against the other religious papers, the Central, the Christian Observer and the Southwestern.

The Open Court will be found to be interesting, and we hope that the discussion opened by the editor and Mr. Hudson will be continued until the mind of the church is reached. That is a timely sermon by Dr. Leavell. The reasons given by Rev. R. W. Alexander for the circulation of a religious paper are of especial force, for the Standard was necessarily in mind. The letter of Mr. McMaster and Education in the Cove, complete the Contributed Matter, and the other departments, now of their normal size again, will be found of much interest and profit.

Presbyterian College Commencement.

The Commencement of the Presbyterian College for Women, Charlotte, began, as already published in the Standard, with the Baccalaureate sermon of Rev. R. C. Reed, D. D. On account of the pressure of the Assembly Reports the full account has not been published before. It was a fine exhibition of the high standard of work that is now being done in every department of the College. The graduating class numbered 12 including the music graduates and those with special certificates. A banquet was given the class by President Bridges and Mrs. Bridges on Thursday night preceding Commencement.

The standard has been raised so high that this year no first or second distinctions were won in the collegiate department and in the Senior Class only one distinction, the third distinction.

This speaks volumes for the thoroughness of the work required and the faithfulness of the marking. The effort is being made to build up a school that shall be noted for the completeness of its scholarship. Its honors will be honors indeed.

The following is a brief account of the programme:

Commencement exercises were opened by a matinee pianoforte recital in the auditorium which reflected great credit both upon pupils and teachers.

None of those who took part in this entertainment belonged to the advanced grade, and many were only beginners, but there was real artistic merit in each rendition as well as genuine music.

The duets by Misses Hicks and Cooper, Misses Campbell and Lubin; Misses Fore and Irwin, Misses Annie and Ethel Todd and Misses McMillan and Bridges were greatly enjoyed by the audience for their beauty and for the perfect time and unison in which they were played.

Miss Julia Christian made the "Butterfly," by Lege, a "thing of beauty" to the ear, while Miss Madeline Orr's interpretation of Chopin's prelude in C minor and Schaikowsky's "Skylark" were especially good.

"Ravina," Etude No. 1, in the hands of Miss Virginia Robinson, was most skilfully and daintily executed.

Miss Nellie Van Stewart's presentation of Hayden's "My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair," was quite a surprise to the audience; the strength and fullness of the voice and easy breathing show that she has a future before her.

Miss Edna Wright sang finely Massent's "Open Thy Blue Eyes," her clear tones filling the big hall and showed that she, too, needed only time and study to make her a finished singer. Miss Foil, Miss Benneson, Miss Matheson and Mrs. Stewart had the training of these pupils and the work accomplished shows that Charlotte has reason to be proud of her musical advantage.

Those who attended the annual Concert on May 18 had the pleasure of listening to good music, some of it brilliant. The selections were all made with care, sufficient in variety, and adapted to a commencement occasion. The pupils gave abundant evidence of very careful training. They knew thoroughly what they were about and musical intelligence marked every effort. The audience was highly delighted and the applause was enthusiastic.

The programme began with a favorite overture—Rossini's "Tancredi," played on the grand piano in admirable style by Misses Mattie I. and Lucy Penn. The Choral Class gave great pleasure by singing "The Fisherman" and "Rise Again, Glad Summer Sun." The stringed instruments—violins and 'Cello, made a happy variation of music. Mrs. Fisher, Misses L. E. Summer, Nellie Van Stewart and Mary Wilson charmed the audience with their violins, while Miss L. Hilda Gehrken, looked so extremely handsome, was so beautifully attired, and handled the 'Cello so gracefully and skillfully as to captivate everybody.

Miss Edna Whisnant gave evidence of great talent in her brilliant rendering of a pianoforte solo—Kullak's "Wild Ride." The vocal solos of Miss Matheson's pupils, Misses Ellen Norfleet, Gertrude McFadyen and Elma Warburton evinced the same careful training united with their natural endowments of good voices.

Dr. C. R. Fisher, Mrs. Fisher, Miss Helen Foil and Miss Ellen Norfleet brought from the great organ richness of harmonies and wealth of musical tones.

Misses Blanche Rosebro, Lena Reinhardt and Bentley Wysar showed themselves to be good pianists.

The most brilliant feature of the concert was the exquisite rendition of "William Tell." The overture was played on the organ, four violins, two piano and 'cello, Miss Lottie Gray, one of the graduates, played the leading part on the first piano.

Commencement proper was the night of May 18. Hon. A. M. Waddell made one of the most brilliant addresses ever heard by a Charlotte audience on the Irish Origin of North Carolina. It was as chaste in diction as it was sparkling with wit and was received with great applause by the student body and the friends who filled the large auditorium.

Echoes from the Lexington Assembly.

This Assembly was worthy of our forefathers. It possessed a large measure what was called in the olden time "the gift of continuance."

Up to the time your correspondent started for home, at the inner recess on the ninth day, there were still a number of items on the docket, and the whole of Saturday morning had been taken up with the disposition of a few reports of standing committees.

Two of these reports were the occasion of considerable debate, and the things in dispute were of importance. First, was the report on systematic beneficence, which had been under discussion Friday night. The bone of contention here was the proposition already noticed, to exchange the months for education collection and the collection for ministerial relief, giving the latter November, and putting the former in July. This was the recommendation of the committee on systematic beneficence, and an effort was made to amend this, proposing to give education July and November and to put ministerial relief in April. Then a substitute was offered for both propositions, that the schedule of collections should remain unchanged, just as they now are. This substitute was finally adopted, but there was added to this action the appointment of an ad interim committee who shall consider the revision of the whole schedule of collections and report to the next Assembly.

The gist of this discussion lay in the fact that the collection for ministerial relief now has but one month allotted it, and that the very worst month in the year, the month of July. It was urged on the floor of the Assembly that with the revival of interest in this most worthy cause, better opportunity should be given for our people to make their offerings for it. As between this cause and that of education for the ministry, it was said that the young man could in a measure scuffle for himself, but all that was left the old man, or the widow and orphan, was to suffer in silence. The Assembly evidently felt the force of this appeal, but at the same time it was felt that if this next November were taken from the education collection that cause would fall sadly behind; and so between the two demands a compromise was finally reached as above stated, leaving the present order of collections unchanged, yet appointing a committee to suggest a revision of the whole schedule, mainly with the purpose of securing more adequate opportunity for ministerial relief to make its appeal to the people.

The other subject to which I wish to call attention, is the debate which also took a good slice of Saturday morning, upon the overture from the Presbyteries of Paris, Charleston and Pee Dee, criticizing the executive committee of publication. These overtures complained that the committee of publication had been disseminating unsound literature, and that our Sabbath-school publications had been made the vehicle of ritualistic views and practices, and asked the Assembly to put a stop to the matters complained of.

Your correspondent will confess that when these overtures were read and referred on the first day of the Assembly's session one thought that the brethren in Texas and South Carolina had found a mare's nest. And this was doubtless the feeling of the members of the Assembly. But when the facts behind these overtures were brought out, the case looked different. Not that there was anything as serious as the language of these overtures might lead you to expect, but it was evident that some things had crept in unawares through the business of the publishing house and in the Sabbath-school literature, to which the attention of the committee of publication might well be called. It was shown that there in Lexington during the sessions of the Assembly, the committee was offering for sale The Expositor's Bible, a commentary which contained much that was useful, but which embraced also some volumes that were tainted with the radical criticism.

It was also shown that in the Earnest Worker the statement had been made that the daughters of Philip were preachers, that this was the meaning of the word "prophecy" used in Acts 21:9.

And further, in the lessons for the month of April, there was found an Easter lesson, and while in one department of the Earnest Worker, the scripture teaching as to the commemoration of our Lord's resurrection by the change from the Jewish Sabbath to the Lord's Day, the first day of the week, had been correctly set forth, in another department the morning of the resurrection had been alluded to as "his blessed Easter morn."

Objection was also made to the liturgical forms which are printed on the first pages of the Earnest Worker as a responsive exercise, a part of one of them having been taken bodily from the Episcopal prayer-book.

Dr. J. P. Smith, who represented the publication committee on the floor of the Assembly, said in reply, that in regard to such books as the Expositor's Bible, the committee simply acted as agent for the parties ordering them and did not assume any responsibility for the views which these books contained. And if our committee is to be restricted to the sale of books which we can endorse in every particular, then the business of the committee would be contained within narrow limits indeed. As to the things criticized in the Earnest Worker, they were not in the department for which he was directly responsible, and they were just as contrary to his own convictions as to the convictions of any of the brethren who had spoken in the Assembly; and he could only say that he regretted that they had gotten into the Earnest Worker without his knowledge.

When this stage of the discussion was reached, it was evident that there was but one view in the Assembly as to the subject under discussion, and the only question was how to express that view in such a way as not to injure the work of the committee of publication and yet to put a stop to the evils complained of.

In this dilemma the Assembly was getting into a tangle of majority and minority reports, amendments to these reports and substitutes for the amendments, when the moderator relieved the situation by suggesting that a committee be appointed consisting of Dr. Marquess and Dr. W. P. McCorkle, who should retire and bring in as soon as possible a report which should express the mind of the Assembly. This was promptly moved and carried, and a little later Dr. Marquess presented a report which was unanimously adopted. This was in substance that the attention of the committee of publication be called to these overtures, and the committee be instructed to guard against the intrusion into its business or its publications of doctrines or practices which are not commonly believed amongst us.

And here the Forty-Third General Assembly passed into history, as far as the personal knowledge of your correspondent goes.

Looking back over its proceedings, there are some things which stand out prominently, to which parting allusion might be made.

One of these is the fullness of opportunity allowed for the presentation and consideration of every one of the benevolent causes of the Church. No man could say that the great aggressive work of the Church was crowded into a corner, while the Assembly spent its time wrangling over points of order, or discussing ad nauseam musty controversies. Besides full time allotted to the consideration of the reports of the standing committees during the business sessions of the Assembly every night except the very last was given to a popular meeting in behalf of one of the benevolent causes. One of the most notable features of the Assembly was a Foreign Mission meeting on Wednesday morning right in the heart of the Assembly's business, with addresses by four returned missionaries, and this in addition to a special meeting in the interest of the Japanese mission which had been held the night before.

But I am disposed to think that the cause for this may be looked for elsewhere. The Assembly took two afternoons off, Saturday and Monday, the very cream of its time. If the standing committee had sat up a little later Friday and Saturday nights and had made good use of Saturday afternoon, a whole day might have been saved. This is a matter of the greatest consequence if a full vote on important questions is to be had. Some of the best business men in the country are found in every Assembly, whose counsels and whose suffrages are of great value in a church court, but whose time is often very limited. Every effort ought to be made to expedite business in the earlier part of the proceedings, so that important measures may come to a vote in a full assembly.

R. A. Lapsley.

NORTH CAROLINA.

MOCKSVILLE.—The Twentieth Century Canvass in Mocksville is practically complete. The sum subscribed, of which a part has been paid in, now amounts to $650 and this will be increased by several small subscriptions. The Mocksville Church is small, having only about fifty members but under the able leadership of Rev. F. M. Allen rapid and gratifying progress is being made in every department of the work.

BARIUM SPRINGS.—The school year at the Orphans' Home has ended most propitiously. Much hard work has been done by both teachers and pupils. Constant improvement and progress is shown in each of the nine grades. Next session we hope to establish a tenth grade in which a class of children are prepared to finish next June. By adding this grade to the course those who care to pursue their studies further upon leaving us will be much better prepared to do so, and a number of them hope to do this.

When our children reach this degree of advancement and maturity their assistance is very valuable to the Home, as is also their influence.

All school exercises are now suspended for the summer and our teachers are away for the vacation. Everybody at the Orphans' Home is working with his hands the greater part of every day. [On our farm of 200 acres only the farmer and our own boys are at work. They are finding much to do since the illness of our farmer necessarily threw work behind.

We are hoping for a very favorable report from our Treasurer as to May collections. Many are still no doubt in the hands of church Treasurers. We hope these will be promptly forwarded to Mr. Brown so that we all may be encouraged in the outlook for the summer months.

The Carrie Burroughs Dula Memorial building is now completed, furnished and occupied. This building is a most delightful addition to our Home. In it our library presents a neat and attractive appearance. The Mary Watson Memorial Library by the Kings Daughters of Salisbury forms a valuable addition to our collection of books. A number of papers and periodicals are also contributed by friends and are greatly appreciated by our young readers here.

Our friends have not forgotten little Joe's Church, but contributions are still coming in.

Your Orphans' Home has been favored with some visitors who are much interested in the work the church is doing for the fatherless. These are heartily appreciated and welcomed. Let all who can, visit the Orphans' Home of this their Church.

Red Springs Seminary Commencement

On May 20th Red Springs Seminary closed the most successful year in its history of unparalleled successes.

Standing on the stage of the handsome auditorium, and facing an audience of over fifteen hundred people, it seems impossible that just seven years ago, this was a piece of virgin pine land.

Dr. Wells, of the First Presbyterian Church of Wilmington, N. C., preached the sermon to the graduating class.

On Monday night the senior class, numbering twenty, entertained their friends with a splendid musical programme.

In the prophecy Miss Eunice Nimocks called the seniors out one by one and read from the palm of each, what the future holds for them. The whole program was carried out with ease and grace that did not in any way detract from the force and vim, characteristic of the class.

The Art Exhibit Tuesday afternoon was exceedingly fine.

Special mention may be made of the very dainty work in China that was displayed in large quantities.

The Annual Concert Tuesday night fully sustained the Seminary's well earned reputation as one of the foremost music schools in the South. The grace, finish and ability for musical interpretation shown by the performers, all testified to the thoroughness and intelligence of the work done during the year. The governor of North Carolina was a delightful auditor and expressed himself both astonished and greatly pleased.

Wednesday morning brought one of the largest crowds Red Springs has ever known. At 11 o'clock the governor addressed a splendid audience who listened most attentively to one of his earnest, thoughtful, and eloquent speeches.

The following certificates and diplomas were then presented: Certificates, Miss Ella Steed, English; Miss Bessie Johnson, English; Miss Lettie Wharey, English; Miss Lonnie Kenan, English; Miss Pearle Johnson, Elocution; Miss Araminta Robinson, Elocution; Miss Maie Rowland, Art; Miss Ethel Johnson, Art; Miss Georgia Pearsall, Art; Miss Rosalie F. Williams, Piano; Miss Clara DeVane, Piano; Miss Lida Law, Post Graduate Piano. Diplomas, Miss Elizabeth Rockwell Brown, A. B.; Miss Nina Carmichael, A. B.; Miss Nellie Elliot, A. B.; Miss Alice Lee Elliot, A. B.; Miss Clara DeVane, A. B.; Miss Celestian Fennell, B. L.; Miss Lena May Flowers, A. B.; Miss Ethel Johnson, B. L.; Miss Alice E. Mebane, B. L.; Miss Della P. MacGoogan, A. B.; Miss Mamie F. McIntyre, A. B.; Miss Nannie L. McIntyre, A. B.; Miss Eunice S. Nimocks, A. B.; Miss Mary F. Patterson, A. B.; Miss Georgie Pearsall, A. B.; Miss Araminta J. Robinson, A. B.; Miss Phebe W. Shaw, A. B.; Miss Jane E. Williams, A. B.; Miss Rosalie F. Williams, A. B.; Miss Harriet Ellen Wise, B. L.

Rev. H. T. Graham, of Fayetteville, N. C., presented the Bibles to the graduating class and the exercises were closed with the benediction by Rev. A. N. Ferguson, of Laurel Hill, N. C.

The attendance of the Seminary the past year numbered 342 from thirteen States. A large number of applications for rooms for next year are already coming in.

CLARKTON.—The Presbytery of Wilmington will hold an adjourned meeting in the First Church, Wilmington, at 3 p. m., June 19th, 1903.

A. McFadyen, S. C.

BIG ROCK FISH AND HOPE MILLS.—Rev. Dugald Munroe was installed pastor of Big Rock Fish and Hope Mills churches May 31. Rev. David Fairley presided, preached and propounded the questions at Big Rock Fish at 3.30 p. m. Rev. H. T. Graham charged the pastor. At night at Hope Mills, they exchanged places. Mr. J. H. Curric, Ruling Elder of Galatia church, charged the people of both churches.

These services were all solemn and appropriate.

The brethren came to us "in the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ." May the relation thus established be for the glory of God and the welfare of the Redeemer's kingdom. Five new members were received at Hope Mills third Sunday in May, two by certificate, three on confession of faith. The outlook for this field is encouraging.

DAVIDSON.—Rev. Dr. Harding, formerly of Virginia and now of this state, filled the Davidson college pulpit on the 21st March.

The Doctor is always a welcome guest and his sermons are peculiar treats to our people.

He certainly has few equals as a scholar. His sermons are always beautiful and yet delightfully simple.

A. T. G.

CARMEL.—The pastor was assisted by Rev. J. B. Cochran in Sacramental services second Sabbath of May. Bro. Cochran delighted and refreshed us with his strong, plain gospel. There were six additions to the church—four on profession and two by letter.

SHELBY.—Our church has been greatly blessed in a meeting recently held. Rev. R. G. McLees, of Greenwood, S. C., preached for us for ten days—preached earnestly and graphically, tenderly and powerfully the Word of God. Large congregations attended, not only Presbyterians, but members of the other churches in town. God's people were helped and strengthened and fourteen were added to the Presbyterian Church on profession of faith. With increased devotion and faith this church takes up the work of the coming year.

SHILOH.—Dr. Geo. Oates and Mr. Chas. F. Hambricht were elected deacons of Shiloh church on second Sunday of May and on fourth Sunday of same month, in the presence of a large congregation, were ordained and installed. This church is making progress in its work and is very much encouraged.

The Westminster School

One year ago the 600 Presbyterians of Cleveland, Rutherford and Polk counties, N. C., though divided into the small churches and scattered over three counties, resolving to establish a good Presbyterian school to prepare our boys and girls college, but mainly to supply the demand for a Presbyterian mission work, went into their pockets to the five thousand and then into the woods and put up four comfortable school buildings and on September last with a corps of good teachers and a gratifying number of pupils, began the first year's work of the Westminster School.

And the first year has recently closed and more successfully than even its good beginning promised. An enrollment of nearly one hundred, good health, conduct and work on the part of teachers and pupils have made through the surrounding country a high reputation for our school and have increased the prestige and influence of our beloved church.

This year's work was brought to a close by a thoroughly enjoyable and enjoyed commencement.

Rev. M. McG. Shields, of Gastonia, N. C., preached the annual sermon. Mr. Jas. M. Carson, of Rutherfordton, delivered the literary address, which was followed by the school exercises, reading of honor roll, and announcements for next year.

The average price of board was $4.85 per month and it was sufficient and neatly served. Here, from fifty to sixty dollars pays all expenses for a boy or girl for one year's training in a good Presbyterian school where the Bible is taught as faithfully as arithmetic. We wish we could adequately show to the reader the picture we have in our mind of a poor boy 14 years of age before he entered, and the picture he presented on commencement day as with flashing eyes, bright, happy-faced, he delivered his speech. This result was made possible by a kind friend giving him a scholarship which paid his tuition, $16 in all. And of Robert Clark there are a score of duplicates convenient to this school, who with a scholarship in their reach, would, with even one year here, be a hundred fold better fitted for life's work.

The next session begins Sept. 10, 1903.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Columbia Theological Seminary.

The Board of Directors met in the Seminary chapel May 2, and continued its sessions about two days. Nine of the fifteen members were present.

The seminary was found to be in a healthy condition. Another year of uninterrupted and excellent work seemed to have been accomplished by both the Professors and students. Twenty-seven students had been enrolled during the year—two more than during the year preceding. Of these, five were in the senior class, nine in the middle, ten in the junior, and three took only a partial course.

Diplomas conferring the degree of B. D. were awarded to Messrs. E. N. Bradshaw, J. D. Henry, and J. P. Marion. Certificates were awarded to Messrs. P. S. Rhodes and R. F. Otts. To these graduates Rev. W. E. Boggs, D. D., delivered an earnest and helpful address.

A committee was appointed to consider and report to the Board at its next regular meeting the advisability of establishing a "Fellowship" in connection with the institution.

The financial condition of the institution is encouraging. All necessary expenses have been comfortably met from the income. By judicious investments the income has been increased several thousand dollars, and there is the prospect of a still larger increase.

Two hundred dollars worth of new books have been added to our already large and valuable library. And some improvements have been ordered to be made to the building and grounds.

The Board most cordially endorses and commends this seminary to the confidence and patronage of all wishing to prepare themselves thoroughly for the work of the gospel ministry.

TEXAS

PARIS.—Rev. Geo. F. Robertson was installed pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Paris, Texas, April 12th by Rev. Messrs. A. W. Wilson, D. D., of Dodd City, Texas, and J. D. McLean, D. D., of Tyler, Texas, both old friends of the new pastor. Dr. Wilson took part in the pastor's examination for licensure at Rogersville, Tenn., in 1880.

Dr. McLean preached, presided and propounded the constitutional questions and Dr. Wilson charged the pastor and the congregation.

This service was followed by a series of services conducted by Dr. McLean during which he won the hearts of the people by his earnest and helpful sermons. There were thirteen additions in examination amongst whom were a mother and her little girls. These three received the ordinance of baptism according to Bible precept and example.

Mr. Robertson took charge of this church early in December and he had the pleasure of welcoming forty-three new members. The congregations have increased and the Sunday school has more than doubled in attendance.

There are three flourishing ladies' societies in this church and a Junior Christian Endeavor band.

At a meeting of the session May 18, the pastor was granted by unanimous vote a vacation of two months beginning July 1st. He will spend most of this time in holding evangelistic services, the first being a tent meeting at Clarksville, Texas. Beyond this no definite arrangements have been made.

MISSOURI.

CALHOUN.—This church two months ago gave a hearty and unanimous call to Rev. W. T. Howison to become its pastor, and the call being accepted by him Lafayette Presbytery appointed a committee, Rev. Messrs. Abbott, Gordon and Leyburn to install him. This duty was performed by two of the brethren, Mr. Abbott being necessarily absent, on Sabbath, May 24, 1903; Dr. Gordon preaching the sermon and charging the people, and Dr. Leyburn presiding and charging the pastor. This is the first regularly installed and resident pastor this church has ever had; and this pastorate begins under very happy auspices, an earnest, energetic pastor with a united people ready to co-operate in every good word and work.

Rev. E. C. Gordon, D. D., of Lexington, Mo., preached the Baccalaureate sermon before the Ward Seminary, Nashville, Tenn., on the last Sabbath of May.

The address of Dr. O. W. Gauss is changed from Springfield, Mo., to Sparta, Mo. That of Rev. A. Y. Beatie is Springfield, Mo., he having taken charge of our church at that place, where he will be ordained and installed pastor, June 28th and that of Rev. Lynn F. Ross after July 1. will be Warsaw, Mo., where he goes to take charge of the Benton county mission field under direction of the Home Missions committee of Lafayette Presbytery.

LAFAYETTE PRESBYTERY.—An adjourned meeting was held at Boonville, Mo., on June 2. The chief purpose of this meeting was the examination of two young brethren for ordination, Messrs. Lynn F. Ross and A. Y. Beatie, Mr. Ross was a licentiate and after the usual examination was ordained as an evangelist to take charge of a mission field in Benton county, Dr. G. L. Leyburn his former pastor, giving the charge to the young evangelist. Mr. Beatie was first taken under the care of Presbytery as a candidate, and was then examined for both licensure and ordination, he having received a call from Westminster Church, Springfield, Mo., and after licensure the call was placed in his hands and accepted by him and a commission, Rev. Messrs. Abbott, Bonde and Leyburn with Elder F. C. Roberts, was appointed to ordain and install him the last Sabbath in June. These brethren are both recent graduates, Mr. Beatie of the Kentucky Theological Seminary and Mr. Ross of Union Seminary; the examinations were very creditable, the sermons of a high order, and the universal opinion is that Lafayette Presbytery has added to her ministers two choice young men.

Rev. W. L. Hickman offered his resignation as pastor of the Independence Church, and the church was cited to appear at the adjourned meeting to be held June 27, at Springfield, and show cause why the relation should not be dissolved.

VIRGINIA.

HAMPDEN-SIDNEY.—The one hundred and twenty-eighth annual session of the Board of Trustees of Hampden-Sidney college will be held at Hampden-Sidney, Va., Monday night, June 8th at 8 o'clock.

F. T. McFadden, Sec.

RANDOLPH-MACON.—This school closes its tenth session June 6th. Dr. R. D. Smart is to preach the Baccalaureate sermon and Dr. J. M. Buckley, of the New York Advocate, will deliver the literary address.

The session has been most prosperous. The dormitories have been full. Sixty-nine surplus applicants were on the "waiting list" when the session opened September 11th to take the places of any who might fail to claim engaged rooms. The senior class numbers thirty-one, and a splendid body of students fill the lower classes.

The Woman's College has abolished all sub-collegiate work and maintains the entrance requirements of the Southern Association of Colleges, of which it is a member. It is classed by the U. S. Commissioner of Education as one of the thirteen "A" colleges for women in the United States.

LEXINGTON PRESBYTERY.—Lexington Presbytery met at Hebron Church, Snyder, Va., May 5th, 1903, at 11 a. m., and was opened with a sermon by Rev. Wm. N. Scott, D. D., the last Moderator present with a sermon on Matt. 18.20.

Moderator—Rev. J. E. Booker.

Clerks—Rev. J. E. Ballou and Dr. A. F. Kerr.

ALABAMA.

A Visit to Selma, Ala.

On the third Sabbath of May, in the discharge of my official duties, I presented the claims of our proposed Presbyterian college to the two Presbyterian churches in Selma. I was not an entire stranger in either of these churches, having spoken from both pulpits when I labored in Alabama as superintendent of Evangelistic work.

It goes without saying that I met a most cordial reception at the hands of the pastor of Broad Street Church, Rev. A. A. Little, and his people. It was exceedingly pleasant to be permitted to make so many new friends and to renew so many old acquaintances. The lines have fallen to Brother Little and his family in pleasant places. There are several larger churches than his in our Assembly, but Broad St. Church is large enough—nearly 500 members—and with its beautiful new church and large, comfortable manse, located in the heart of the city, this church is admirably equipped from a material point of view. But by far the best equipment lies in the character of the men and the women who compose its membership. Few churches in our General Assembly have had such a succession of wise leaders, faithful pastors and able preachers of the Gospel. Dr. Lowry was an eloquent Apollos. Dr. Hooper was indefatigable in his labors, Rev. Alfred J. Morrison, lived only long enough for the people to realize what they had lost in his death. Dr. Cecil served this people with great acceptability for eleven years and still has a large place in their hearts. And now Rev. Archibald Alexander Little forms another link in this chain of the true apostolic succession, and under his labors the Church is growing in numbers, and spiritual power. One of the peculiarities of this Church is that there are so many men in it who are constant attendants upon all its services and active workers in every department of church life.

From such a church, trained by such men, I fully expected to secure a generous contribution for our Alabama College and I was not disappointed. This church gave as follows: The Sabbath-school, $600; the three Ladies societies, $600; the congregation, $3,705; the pastor, $600; Total, $5,505.

This amount was given unconditionally, but there is an earnest desire on the part of our people in Selma to secure the location of the college and as an expression of this desire, one man subscribed $200, and another $1,500, so that if we add these two subscriptions Broad Street church stands credited with $7,205 for the college. The Alabama Street church in Selma is a mission church and not self-supporting, but its pastor, Rev. T. R. Best and its people gladly took part with us. So far they have subscribed over $400 and will make the subscription $500, thus bringing Selma's amount up to $7,705. We have secured subscriptions from about fifty ministers, five churches, sixty Sabbath-schools and five Ladies Societies and we now have in sight about $27,000 for the college. There are in the Synod of Alabama 220 churches.

MISSOURI.

CROCKER AND MONTROSE CHURCHES.—Crocker and Montrose Churches and the region round about form the upper Ozark field of our Home Mission work. Mr. O. L. Byrns, a student of Louisville Theological Seminary, has been secured for this field during the summer and has already begun work. His post office for the next four months will be Crocker, Missouri. He will pay special attention to the Sunday-school work in that region and what he does will be largely supplementary to and in connection with the work Mrs. Rinehart has been doing so efficiently during the past year in this same part of the State.

SALINE CHURCH.—Saline Church is in Saline county about seven miles from Marshall, and recently called Rev. W. L. Barber. A commission appointed by Lafayette Presbytery consisting of Rev. Messrs. Thomas, Claggett, and Leyburn, with Elder Abiel Leonard, installed Mr. Barber in this church on Sunday, May 17. The work begins under happy auspices and a pleasant and useful pastorate is anticipated.

CALVARY.—Rev. Lynn F. Ross, a Licentiate of Lafayette Presbytery, is to take charge of the Mission field in Benton county, consisting of Calvary and Edwards churches. He will begin work about the first of June.

As a result of the heavy rains in the Piedmont section of North Carolina and a cloudburst at 6 o'clock a. m. June 6th six cotton factories are swept away in the vicinity of Spartanburg, S. C., and fifty people are reported drowned. Three railroad bridges are destroyed, and near Clifton, S. C., alone, 90 people are homeless and 4,000 are out of employment. The total property loss is estimated at $2,000,000. Aid for the wounded and destitute ones has been asked from the Government. Mayor Brown of Charlotte, has designated C. M. The new local anaesthetic of M. Conrtrade has the advantage over cocaine of being not poisonous, while its action is much less transitory. It is a para-amidobenzoic ether, a derivative of orthoform, and has been named anesthesine. It has proven especially useful in cases of throat ulceration by enabling the patients to swallow without pain.

Dispatches from the Bourges observatory show that the sun after a long period of quiescence has again entered into a state of activity. On March 27, there was visible on the solar disk a large spot measuring 1,864 miles in diameter. Again, on March 30, four sun spots, two of them extensive, were observed.

Rev. R. J. Campbell, pastor of the City Temple, London, has expressed his intention of allying himself with the "Passive Resistance" movement against the Education Act recently passed by Parliament. Instead of paying the portion of tax to be used for sectarian purpose, he will allow the collector to seize his chattels.

In South Africa the last of the concentration camps have been broken up and the burghers have resumed peaceful pursuits. About a month ago a British column of 500 encountered a native force of six thousand natives of Sokoto and Kano near the French sphere of influence, which terminated the Sokoto expedition and added one hundred square miles to Nigeria.

Two ex-senators in Missouri have made important confessions in regard to the corruption in the Legislature. One testified that he had handled a bribery fund of $5,000 raised to defeat an election bill; that in 1897 he received $1,000, for voting for the school text-book bill, and later received $500 for his vote on the St. Louis transit bill, and that "as near as he could figure," he had made $15,000 out of his legislative experience.

The other day at the convention of the American Medical Association, in New Orleans, where some 4,000 or 5,000 physicians and attendants were gathered, Dr. Billings drew attention to the decided over supply of medical men in the United States. He attributed the surplus to the fact that the medical colleges are graduating annually from 10,000 to 12,500 physicians, when the actual needs of the country call for only about 2,500.

Marshall, Field and Co., allow no work whatever to be done in their great Chicago stores on Sunday, they publish no advertisements in Sunday newspapers, and all the window-shades are kept down on Sunday. Thus the greatest retail business in the world honorably "remembers the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." In all three particulars, the example is worthy of universal imitation, and if generally followed, would be productive of great good.—Dominion Presbyterian.

Kansas City has been suffering from the greatest flood in its history, resulting from an almost continuous rainfall during ten days. It is estimated that 25,000 persons have been driven from their homes in that section, North Topeka being the greatest sufferer. Railway traffic is at a stand-still, dozens of bridges having been washed out. One hundred and fifty people are known to be drowned and a large number are missing.

A cyclone struck the city of Gainesville, Ga., on Monday, June 1, and within two minutes it killed nearly one hundred people and destroyed over $300,000 worth of property. The cyclone did not touch the main part of the city, but did its work on the outskirts. It seemed to come from a cloudless sky. Rain immediately followed, and in five minutes the sun was shining brightly again. The villages of New Holland and White Sulphur also were struck. The mortality was largely among the factory operatives.

A movement is on foot in England to establish by popular subscription a memorial to Sir Henry Bessemer. That some recognition is due to the man who reduced the cost of steel from $250 to $20 a ton in less than half a century, goes without saying. The scheme has not as yet been fully developed; but the memorial will doubtless take the form of an institution for instruction in the various branches of metalurgy, under the direction of the University of London. A public meeting is to be held on June 29, at which it is to be determined what plan will be adopted.

WHARTON.—Mrs. C. N. Wharton had for six years been under the bondage of physical suffering when on the 7th day of May her heavenly Father set her free. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Gilmer, of Guilford county, N. C. Their child, Daisy, the subject of this sketch gave her heart to God at an early age and became a communicant in the Bethel Presbyterian Church at the age of thirteen, Dec. 28, 1879. On January 21, 1893, she was united in marriage to Rev. C. N. Wharton, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Warrenton, where she resided until her decease. This earnest servant of God fully identified herself with the congregation of her husband. She lived and labored to do good and to increase the usefulness of the church where God called her to work. She conceived and executed the plan of organizing the Ladies' Aid and Missionary society and also the Ladies' Clothing society. Of both of these she became president; and not only in these but in the work of our orphanage she labored with zeal and effectiveness notwithstanding much pain and weakness until a short time before her death.

Mrs. Wharton was devotedly attached to her husband's charge and through her protracted illness they gave evidence in tireless acts of thoughtful kindness that they sincerely returned her affection. Her painful illness terminated at last and she fell asleep among her dearest and closest friends, in the manse at Warrenton. From the old church building where she loved to worship, after a funeral service among crowds of affectionate friends conducted by Dr. W. D. Morton, of Rocky Mt., the casket covered with flowers was borne to a waiting train and conveyed to Greensboro, thence to the cemetery of the Buffalo church, when the last rites of interment were conducted by Rev. J. McL. Seabrook. As we are reminded of her joyful release from pain and sorrow, the happy union with her infant son, little Charles Morton rises before us, the pain and sorrow forever gone, the eternal rest and peace now hers forever. We invoke her own sweet poet's pen to express it for us.

"Safe at last from the billows
Of earth's tempestuous sea
Safe where the sun of righteousness
Shines on through eternity."

Her sorely bereaved husband has the deep sympathy of his attached congregations and of his ministerial brethren who have long shared in his heavy sorrows.

POWELL.—Elam Powell, communing member of this church died May 25, 1903, in Lenoir. He was 27 years old, oldest son of Mrs. Horace Powell. He expected at one time to study for the ministry, but difficulties and circumstances he could not control, prevented. His sufferings were protracted and intense, but he told his pastor God had sanctified them to his good and he was ready to abide God's will, either to live or die. "The will of the Lord be done."

LEE.—Inasmuch as God, in his divine wisdom has taken from us our brother member, Chas. B Lee, we submit the following resolutions of respect,

First, Our Sunday-school and church has lost a faithful and earnest member; our community a noble young man whose short life is worthy of imitation.

Second, Although we miss his presence and help among us, yet we are willing to submit to him who knoweth best, and rejoice to think that his life has not been in vain, and he is at rest in the better world.

Third, That we extend our sincere sympathy to his bereaved family, especially the loving father, mother and young sister for whom the best years of his life were spent in labors of love.

Fourth, A copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, Laurinburg Exchange and Presbyterian Standard.

M'QUEEN.—Mrs Mary Moore McQueen, wife of the late Rev. James McQueen, fell on sleep May 9th, 1903. Six children and a host of friends remain to call her blessed.

An unusually large congregation of sympathizing friends came to pay the last tribute of love. The grave was covered with beautiful floral offerings.

A life of singular purity, sweetness, beauty and culture has closed as to this earth—the influence and precious memories still remain.

Her life was a constant blessing to others.

Through much patient suffering, she, for years, uncomplainingly bore a cross which He exchanged for a crown as she went up the shining pathway of the skies. She, with Christian faith, never referred to it as her cross or a cross, but with bright sunny disposition and genial temperament, dispersed sunshine and gladness.

This ministry of suffering left the delicate tracery of the divine character stamped upon her soul.

The final passing was peace. Without pain she passed from the land of shadows to the home of eternal light. "Doth God exact day labor light denied I fondly ask? But patience to prevent That murmur soon replies God doth need Either man's work or his own gifts.

They also serve who only stand and wait."

Do you know the best way in the world to remove the charcoal from the bottom of your burned cake is to scrape it off with a grater?
 That the easiest way to clean a coffee-pot is to boil it in water containing soda.
 That if you put lye into the water in which you soak your granite kettle with, which something has been burned on the top, you will have no trouble washing it the next morning.
 That soap suds take the new look from silver, and that frosted silver should be cleaned with water containing lye, and not with powder.
 That windows will never be clear again if washed when the sun is shining directly on them.
 That tissue paper is the best thing with which to polish mirrors.
 That glasses will not become clear if put into hot water when milky.—Exchange.

Making Use of Play.

How may play be made to form a part of the training for real life—to give it interest and intelligence? The exhibition of domestic traits and the accomplishment of duty in this direction may not wisely be made perfunctory, but it may be guided and encouraged by older people to the end that the child may continue truly interested in home life. He may be taught many things that will make her an intelligent woman in the administration of her home duties. He may be taught to dress her dolly according to the demands of the weather, to keep the clothing in a good condition, to set the little table in a careful and attractive manner, to fashion the doll's clothing in a becoming style, to keep the playhouse tidy and wash the bits of china well. The fashioning of doll's bonnets and paper dresses by children has formed the foundation for much good taste in dress. It may be a means of securing sweeter tempered children if one may use this instinct of childhood by having them try to teach their dolls to be sweet and lovable. One may even remind a child who is petulant that if she gives way to temper she may expect her own children to be like her.—Martha van Rensselaer, in Home and Flowers.

Still Striding.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Southern Loan and Trust Company held here to-day the capital stock was increased from $100,000 to $200,000 to be paid in on or before July 1st. Coincidentally with this increase of capital, the stockholders of this progressive company decided upon the establishment of a life insurance branch which will begin business on July 1st. The Southern Loan and Trust Company has increased its capital stock within the last two years from $25,000 to $200,000, and it is the purpose of its stockholders to continue to increase its capital from time to time, and to make it one of the strongest financial institutions in the South. The life insurance branch will be under the direction of A. W. McAlister, the company's vice-president, and who will be the executive officer of this department. He will continue as manager of the Greensboro fire insurance companies which were organized by him and his associates, Messrs. E. P. Wharton and R. G. Vaughn, the conspicuous success of which has been one of the most noteworthy achievements of insurance management of recent years. Messrs. E. P. Wharton and R. C. Vaughn, the president and treasurer, respectively, will be closely identified with the management of the life insurance branch. Mr. McAlister will be ably assisted by W. W. Johnson, of Charlotte, and T. N. Winslow, of Greensboro. Mr. Johnson will occupy the position of field manager for the company, having had twenty years successful experience in the service of the leading insurance companies of the country. Mr. Winslow, who has made a reputation for his thorough knowledge of the subject of life insurance, will occupy a responsible position in the home office of the company. Dr. Thomas R. Little, of Greensboro, has been appointed medical director. The company has retained the services of Mr. David Parks Fackler, of New York, as consulting actuary, by whom all its rates and forms of policy will be prepared and approved. Mr. Fackler is the acknowledged foremost actuary of America, being ex-president of the Actuarial Society, and there is no more eminent authority on life insurance in the world.

The life insurance branch of the Southern Loan and Trust Company begins business equipped in the most thorough manner and proposes to offer to the public the best that there is in life insurance, and the most attractive contracts that have been devised. The company will qualify as an old line legal reserve company under the laws of the State of North Carolina.

It is a matter of more than passing interest that a $200,000 legal reserve life insurance company is within the next thirty days to begin business in North Carolina under the same management which in the last ten years has built up a fire insurance business at Greensboro with combined security or surplus to policy-holders of half a million dollars, and by conducting the business on original and independent lines has to a large extent defeated a 25 per cent advance in rates in North Carolina and secured the adoption of rates for this State averaging from 20 to 30 percent less than the rates charged in the rest of the Southern States and producing a present annual saving to the people of North Carolina of a quarter of a million dollars.—Exchange. ## The Home Circle.

Granville Sharp

By William Matthews, LL. D.

Granville Sharp was a poor English boy who began life as an apprentice to a linen-draper in Tower Hill, London, but whose name is inscribed high on the rolls of the world's benefactors. He was born in 1734, and thought the son of an archdeacon and the grandson of an archbishop; yet his father's poverty compelled him to begin life at the bottom of the ladder. At one time a fellow-apprentice, who lodged in the same house with him, assaulted his faith in the doctrines of the atonement and the trinity, and insisted that Sharp's misinterpretation of certain passages of Scripture arose from his ignorance of Greek. Thereupon he immediately set to work in his evenings to acquire a knowledge of that tongue, that he might wrestle with his opponent in Scriptural interpretation; and when a Jew became his fellow-apprentice and disputed the truth of Christianity itself, he studied and mastered Hebrew to refute the Israelite.

The cares of the linen-draper's shop engrossed seven years of his life, and the next eighteen were consumed in the equally obscure employment of a clerk in the British Ordnance office. Yet it was during this period that, as the Oxford professor of History, Sir James Stephen, says, Granville Sharp disclosed the nature, so singular and so lovely, which distinguished him; the most inflexible of human wills, united to the gentlest of human hearts; an almost audacious freedom of thought, combined with profound reverence for hoar authority; a burning indignation against injustice and wrong, reconciled with pity and long-suffering toward the individual oppressor; all the sternness which Adam had bequeathed to his sons, wedded to all the tenderness which Eve has transmitted to her daughters. He found the lineal representative of the Willoughbys de Perham in the person of a retired tradesman, and at once buried himself in pedigrees, feoffments, and sepulchral inscriptions, till his friend was enjoying his ancestral privileges in the House of Lords. He even dared to combat the great Hebrew scholar, Dr. Kennicott, in defense of Ezra's catalogue of the sacred vessels restored by Cyrus to the Jews, and of the chiefs and families, thus defending with signal ability the text of the Old Testament from the charge of corruption. At the age of thirty-two, he wrote and published a short treatise on The English Tongue, and, a year later, Remarks on Several Very Important Prophecies.

Besides these labors, he strove with all the energies of his great and ardent nature to abolish the outrageous practice of impressing seamen for the British navy, and, in a conversation with Dr. Johnson on the subject, boldly denounced "the plausible and important self-sufficiency" of the great dogmatist and Tory champion to his face. He denounced, also, to Lord Dartmouth, the British Secretary of State, the conduct of the Government in despoiling and exterminating, in the Charib war, that wretched remnant of the aborigines of the Antilles. As a citizen of London, he fought valiantly for Crosby, the Lord Mayor, in his struggle with the House of Commons. But it was not for his countrymen only that he championed the right; Americans should revere his memory for his defense of the liberties of their forefathers. He advocated the independence of the United States with great zeal and ardor. When, at the opening of hostilities against the American "rebels," orders came to the Ordnance office to ship munitions of war for the subjection of the revolted colonies, he felt that to obey it would be to imbrue his hands in innocent blood, and at once resigned his place and his means of subsistence, at a time of life when he could no longer hope to find any other lucrative employment.

The labors we have mentioned would of themselves have entitled him to a high place on the roll of the world's benefactors; but his greatest achievement was yet to come. He had already distinguished himself as an earnest and implacable foe of negro slavery, when one day an incident occurred which gave a bias and direction to the main labors of his life. A poor negro, named Jonathan Strong, who had been brutally treated by his master, a Barbadoes lawyer then in London, had become lame, almost blind and unable to work. Thereupon his owner, deeming him now valueless, turned him adrift into the street to starve. The poor creature, a mass of disease, after begging for a time, found his way to a surgeon, William Sharp, a brother of Granville, who gave him medicine and took him to a hospital, where he became entirely well. The brothers got a situation for him, but one day, while he was attending his mistress behind a hackney coach, his former owner recognized him and tried to get possession of him, now become valuable by his restored health. The negro, recollecting the kind aid Granville Sharp had rendered him some years before, wrote to him for help. Going at once to the prison, Sharp warned the keeper, at his own peril, not to deliver up Strong to any persons whomsoever, until the prisoner had been carried before the Lord Mayor. To the latter Sharp next went, and obtained a summons against the persons who had seized and imprisoned Strong without a warrant. When the parties came before the Mayor, it appeared that the slave's former master had sold him to a new one who claimed him as his property; but the Lord Mayor, who was not competent to decide the legal question of Strong's right to his liberty or otherwise, discharged him, and no one dared to lay hands on him. His new owner gave Sharp notice, however, of an action to recover his property, "of which he had been robbed."

At that time, the right of every Englishman to personal liberty, though cherished as a theory, was daily and grievously violated. Besides the press gangs, who seized and held men for British ships of war, kidnappers were employed in all the large towns of England to seize men and impress them into the service of the East India Company; and they were also shipped off to planters in the American colonies. Negro slaves were openly advertised for sale in the newspapers. The legal position of a reputed slave in England was clearly defined. Contrary to the popular opinion, the most eminent lawyers in England, including Yorke, Talbot, and the Chief Justice, Lord Mansfield, held that a slave did not, by touching the soil of that country, become free, but might legally be transported back to the West Indies. Even Sir William Blackstone, held, in contradiction to his former opinion, the same view. All this array of authority, which would have utterly disheartened and paralyzed a less earnest and courageous man, only roused the mettle of Granville Sharp and stimulated him to fight the battle of negro freedom to the end. "Forsaken by his professional defenders," he said, "I was compelled to make a hopeless attempt at self-defense though totally unacquainted with the practice of the law or the foundations of it, having never opened a law book, except the Bible, in my life."

As every hour of his time during that day was engrossed by his duties in the Ordnance Department, he was compelled to prosecute his new studies—those of the law—late at night or early in the morning. For two successive years he betook himself to his solitary chamber there night by night to explore the original sources of the law of England regarding personal liberty. In this dry, tedious and protracted investigation, he waded, without guide, assistant, or adviser, through a vast mass of repulsive reading matter, transcribing more or less of all the most important Acts of Parliaments, decisions of the courts, and opinions of leading lawyers. He now drew up and gave to the public the result of his studies in a plain, lucid and vigorous statement, On the Injustice and Danger of Tolerating Slavery in England, and sent copies of it to all the most eminent lawyers of the day. Meanwhile, the lawyers employed by the owner of the negro, Strong, were deterred from prosecuting the case against Sharp further, and their client was therefore compelled to pay treble costs.

Finally, after Sharp, by his indefatigable labors and promptness of action, had rescued many negroes from bondage, the famous case of James Somerset, a slave whom his master had brought to England, and afterwards sought to send to Jamaica for sale, came before the court of King's Bench. For the vindication of the freedom of that man, there followed a debate forever memorable in legal history for the masterly ability with which it was conducted, for the reluctant but utter abandonment by Lord Mansfield of a long cherished error, but, above all, for the magnanimity of the prosecutor, the tireless and heroic Granville Sharp, who, though poor, dependent, and absorbed in the duties of a laborious and irksome calling, supplied the money, the leisure, the persistence, and the learning for the great controversy. What a triumph! Alone, cheered on by no popular huzzas, against the opinions of the profoundest jurists, he fought out the most memorable battle for the liberof British subjects known to modern and won a complete victory.

forth a slave, the moment his foot ed English ground, became free.
any purer or more ecstatic joy fill human being's heart than that h, on the court's decision, thrilled of Granville Sharp.—Forward.

Beethoven.

is well known that Beethoven was and after having for some time a brass ear trumpet he found that ected his brain, and he took a slate, which those who conversed with him to write their answers. He had the rest ideas imaginable about the origin his deafness, and persistently preed that the doctors knew nothing at out it, and that they had treated all wrong, and that the real seat of evil was by no means the ear but the ach. He used to be attended to by rt of housekeeper, whom, however, ften sent on errands. It therefore pened sometimes that visitors rang knocked without the slightest result, ause he did not hear them. They ply opened one door after the other il they found themselves in his pree, he being made aware of their arrieither by seeing them, or, when his was not turned toward the door, by sensation of their treading the floor.
then instantly came forward, with slate in hand, to begin the conversain the only way possible for the poor

"I bear my ideas," said Beethoven, ry long with me in my brain ere I ept to write them down, and I can end upon my memory that I never et a phrase which has taken hold of mind. Sometimes I change some s, I entirely condemn others, and I try again until I think I have nd the right way, with which at last n satisfied myself. But then begins ny head the working out in width, readth, and height, without ever ng my hold on the fundamental idea, ch grows and grows and increases
l the whole picture stands complete re my mind's eye—then I need only down and write it out, which, once un, I do quickly and steadily, as I find time to do it, because I usually k at different things at the same e, but as I told you, without ever using one with the other. Perhaps may ask, where do I take my ideas ? That is more than I can say.
ideas come, and there they are;
etimes so palpable that I fancy I can my hands upon them while I am out he meadows or in the forest at sun-or while I lie sleepless in bed, as mood may seize me. The inspirawith a poet would come in words, reas to me it comes in tones that shout, storm or sigh sweetly, until ast they take quiet form in notes;
when I have written it down I bee calm again and look at my work turn it and mend it until I am satis-

or the English people he had a great iration, for his two great wants, love money, were more likely to be satishere. So he wrote to Ries: "I mend myself to your wife and to all the fair English women who consent to receive my greetings." But, although he had a very inflammable heart indeed, he did not encourage love made to him where he was not the originator of the romance. A Mrs. Halm wrote to him when he had already lived half a century, and most sentimentally asked him for a souvenir—if possible, a lock of his hair—and he was cruel enough to cut some gray hair from a goat and to send it to her in a locket which she had transmitted to him for the purpose.

There would not have been much harm in it, because Mrs. Halm, in perfect good faith, wore the locket; and since it is faith only that renders you happy, she, thinking that she wore the cherished hair on her heart, was happy.
But after her delusion had lasted for years, a friend of Beethoven, to whom he had laughingly confided the whole story, suddenly revealed the secret to the very lady who was the victim of the hoax, and she, with bitter tears, wrote to Beethoven, telling him how cruel it was to take such unfair advantage of her admiration for and her unbounded good faith in him, and to render a friend, a sincere adorer, if she might say so, ridiculous before all her friends, to whom she had often shown the relic with all veneration possible, and now it came out that it was all a goat's hair. She pleaded her case so well that Beethoven, touched with her resignation—she did not cry for vengeance, but submitted meekly —repented of his joke and sent her some of his real venerable gray hair, which made her happy.

Have you ever known an exception to the rule? It is just because they always pose as victims that they excite our pity and adroitly make us the weaker sex, and we have always to do their will.—Temple Bar.

Let Something Good Be Said.

When over the fair fame of friend or foe
The shadow of disgrace shall fall, instead

Of words of blame, or profit of thus and so,

Let something good be said.

Forget not that no fellow-being yet

May fall so low but love may lift his head;

Even the cheek of shame with tears is wet

If something good be said.

No generous heart may vainly turn aside

In ways of sympathy; no souls dead

But may awaken strong and glorified

If something good be said

And so I charge ye: by the thorny crown,

And by the cross on which the Saviour bled,

And by your own soul's hope of fair renown,

Let something good be said.

Intense aspirations for holiness sometimes seem to unfit people for living in this world. Christ never meant it to be so, however, and such religion is wanting somewhere. You need a religion, not that will lift you up out of the weekday world into the seventh heaven of rapture, making you forget your duties to those about you, but a religion that will bring God down to walk with you in all the hard paths of toil and service, making even drudgery divine, and prosaic and commonplace toil a joy:

That is what Christ wants to be to us.

Aunt Tabitha's Letter.

My dear Girls:

It seems to me quite a long time since I wrote you, but you have all been so busy with examinations, and Recitals, that I am quite sure that you have not missed your old Auntie's letters; and now the time of commencements has come, and the voice of the sweet girl graduate is heard in the land, it is a matter of doubt whether you will find time to read this, but I have something to say, and will hope that it may catch the eye of at least one earnest-hearted girl.

By the way, did you ever wonder, as I have, why the closing exercises of schools and colleges are called commencements? Perhaps it was in order to suggest that the closing of school days is really the commencement of life? If that is the reason, the name gives food for thought, and for some searching questions—but you have not time for them just now amid the rush of preparations, for prospective Essay readings, musical recitals, and elocutionary performances. The excitement of large audiences and the admiring gaze of numerous beaux, sweep away all serious thought and you will not think one until you are stranded on the sweet home shore, and not so many even there!

Just now, however, I'm going to talk of dress again! You think I manifest a great preference for this subject? Yes, dears, I do. I hope that I recognize the actual size of its importance, I know that I wish to, and desire for my girl friends that they may rightly estimate it.

It is important but not all important; it is valuable, as I have said before, as an accessory to the girl's self—"only this and nothing more."

Of course we are talking now of the matter of dressing. A vision of all that it means just now to the thousands who are preparing for commencement, rises before my mind's eye. You perhaps are gazing fondly with the bodily eye on some creation of the dress maker's skill which is to grace your form—or lend its aid, I should say. Oh, dear girls, I trust that you have learned that simplicity is the most artistic adornment for youth.

I have in my memory now, the picture of a young girl, the child of people of ample means, whose graduation dress was of simple lawn, and its only trimming was the broad white ribbon sash, the pretty lace at her neck and wrists, and natural flowers in her hair, and at her waist.

Her mother thought of the girls in the class who could not afford expensive dresses, and she reminded her child of this fact—and since that daughter believed that mother could make no mistake—she dressed as I described, and presented, I thought, the loveliest picture of maidenhood, that I ever had seen.

But what I wish to call your attention to, is the exaggerated importance which some girls attach to dress. I will say frankly that I do not blame them as much as I do their mothers, for God gave girl's mothers to mould their characters for them, and their tastes too, but you to whom I write, are old enough to think for yourselves.

Don't, I beg you, don't spend your days thinking about what you shall wear, and your nights dreaming of your clothes. Don't spend a half hour at a time studying the fit of your shirt-waists,—the hang of your skirt,—the droop of your pompadour,—indeed, I beg you don't have one that hides your brow, and spoils your eye-brow. It can be neither coquettish nor graceful. Don't waste time over the set of your hat, or the fit of your gloves.

Have you ever seen a girl, or a woman who devoted her time to dress who was of any special account to anybody—or who lived for the happiness of anybody but self? Have you ever seen one who was bright intellectually? Did you ever notice the kind of men that such girls attract?

Think about these things seriously, wont you? It will pay you to do it.

Remember too, dears, that Aunt Tabitha has not forgotten that she was young once, but she thanks God on her knees that there was a higher aim recommended to her than to be stylish—to look like a fashion-plate girl! Good-bye dears.

Yours affectionately,

Aunt Tabitha.

The Story of the Reindeer in Alaska

This little study in geography has been prepared for the children who know and love the reindeer which Santa Claus drives in his big sleigh, and who would like to hear about other reindeer that live in our own country and that carry the Eskimo boys and girls of Alaska over the ice and snow of that far-away land.

How the Reindeer came to Alaska.—The reindeer have not always lived in Alaska, and they were brought there at first not to use for traveling, but for food. In 1890 Dr. Sheldon Jackson, our agent of education for Alaska, in making a long trip through the country, found that the poor Eskimos of Northern Alaska had very little to eat. The whales, the seals, the walrus, and the wild caribon, which had supplied the natives with food, were all disappearing; sometimes the Eskimo would have to tramp fifteen or twenty miles before he could catch a single seal. Hunters and whalers had driven all these animals away. Not only was the Eskimo losing his food, but what is just as important in such a cold climate, his clothing. When the whale, seal, and walrus were abundant and easy to catch, he not only had a plenty of food, but he could trade the whale-bone, the ivory tusks of the walrus, the seal skin, and the oil with the traders of Siberia for reindeer skins, which kept him warm in winter. Now he had nothing with which to buy clothes. So Dr. Jackson thought that if he could bring over from Siberia, which is on the opposite side of Bering Strait from Alaska, some of the fine reindeer that ran in great herds in Siberia, the Eskimos might have food and good, warm clothing.

At first our government would not give Dr. Jackson money to buy the deer, but several private persons became so interested in his plan that they gave him $2,000. Capt. M. A. Healy was ap-

ed to buy the deer, but the Siberians not wish to sell to him, and he was ed to sail from village to village for 0 miles before he found an owner would let him have any reindeer.
ast he came upon a man who was ing to sell the deer in exchange for rican goods. These reindeer were n to Alaska and cared for, and now these herds and from others which bought later the Eskimos have large bers of deer, which increase rapidly y year

ood and Habits of Reindeer.—The deer in Alaska feed in winter on a of moss which they get by digging he snow with their strong little hoofs; pring and summer they graze on wil-sprouts, green grass, and mushrooms.
ou see they are not expensive animals are for. The fawns are strong and lthy, and those born in Alaska are er and heavier than the ones born in eria. All the reindeer are so timid t it is easy for one man to guard a usand deer, because if a few of the imals stray off they soon become fright-d and return to the herd; so the der never has to look them up. The deer cow gives about a cupful of very milk, almost as thick as the best am, from which a delicious cheese or refreshing drink can be made. A rse, tough thread can be obtained from sinews of the deer, and the Siberians and powder the blood, which they for food. Then, of course, the flesh the deer gives food for the Eskimo the fur furnishes him with warm thes. The reindeer is to the far north at the camel is to the desert regions, animal which God has provided for b peculiarly frigid conditions. The ater the cold the better the reindeer ives.

Reindeer Used for Traveling Purposes.
Until a short while ago the only way
Eskimo could travel was by dog ms. The dogs traveled slowly, makg, on a long trip, only fifteen or twenty es a day, and in some parts of the untry where there were no roads they ld not make the long trips at all, be-use they were not strong enough to pull ficient food for themselves and for ir drivers. Now, however, the peo-can use the reindeer. A deer, with o hundred pounds on his sled, can vel over plains without a road or a il from one end of Alaska to the other, ing on moss found in the country ere he travels. During the past nter reindeer carried the United ates mail from Nome to Candler City, the Arctic ocean, a distance of 260 es. The trains had heavy loads of ssengers and freight and made the trip eight days, while it would have taken gs fifteen or twenty days for the jour-
y. The reindeer can travel at night well as in the daylight, and thus durg the long arctic night, which lasts months, when dogs cannot be used, Eskimo can travel with a reindeer
m. The deer make good pack anials, and can easily carry one hundred d fifty pounds. They can also be rid-n in the saddle, and in Siberia one of sees a native Tunguse trotting along er-back.

The Bureau of Education at Washington hopes that after a while each mission station will own a herd of at least 5,000 deer. The reindeer can aid the missionaries in many ways; and, since gold has been found in Alaska and many Americans have gone there as miners, they will also be a great help to the miners. Food is scarce in Alaska, and groceries, bread-stuffs, and meats must be brought from other places. Steamers upon the Yukon can bring food to the mouths of the gold-bearing streams, but these provisions have then to be carried to the miners. It is very difficult for the dogs to do this. The reindeer will be able to transport an abundance of fresh food to the missionaries and miners; they will make it easier for the people of one settlement to go to another, and they will put all the people of Alaska in much quicker mail communication not only with each other but with the United States.

Reindeer Industry.—The raising of reindeer can be made very profitable. A fawn during the first four years costs his owner less than $1.00 a year to keep, and at the end of that time it can be sold as meat for $50 or $100; if it has been trained to the sled it will bring $150. If the deer are well-cared for and increase as rapidly as they have done so far, in the next thirty-five years there will probably be 10,000,000 in Alaska. Then the Alaskans will not only have a plenty of deer for food, warm covering, and traveling, but they will be able to ship carloads of meat to the United States.—Atlantic Educational Journal.

Our Father Who Art in Heaven.

By Minnie Kennedy.

It was a cold, wintry day, and the wind drove the sleet so furiously along the streets that they were nearly deserted, except where here and there a solitary figure struggled against the storm.

Half an hour before, when there had been a lull in the wind, a great many children had ventured out, that they might be in their accustomed places in Sunday-school. A lady, who was also on her way thither, was hurrying along with swift feet, when her glance fell upon a little boy who was crouched in a doorway, shivering as the cold wind swept past him.

"Why, you will freeze here my boy," she said kindly. "You ought to go home."

The child looked up at her with wistful dark eyes, that were half-appealing and half-fearful in their expression.

"Me afraid," he answered in broken English, cowering still farther back into his corner. His imperfect speech, dark complexion and clustering black curls showed at once that he was an Italian.

"What are you afraid of?" asked Miss Wilson kindly. Then, as the wind blew still more fiercely, she drew her wrap more closely about her and said: "Come with me; I am going to a place where it is nice and warm, and you can tell me about yourself while we are on the way."

The kind face and gentle words reassured the boy, who was inclined to be somewhat shy of a stranger, and as they walked along together toward the church, he told Miss Wilson that his name was Guiseppe Bazzeti, and that he was afraid of the man who had brought him with many others from his sunny Italian home. Every day he sent little Guiseppe out with his violin to earn what pennies he could by his playing and singing; and if he was successful and carried home a good deal of money, he was given a good supper before he went to his miserable bed on the floor of the cheap lodging house. If he was not successful—Guiseppe drew up the sleeve of his thin jacket, and showed a purple bruise that told of the treatment he received.

That morning he had started out as usual, but people did not want the quiet of the Sabbath day disturbed by the sound of the violin, and a policeman had forbidden him to play, so Guiseppe had wandered about in despair, not daring to go home penniless, and afraid to try to earn any money by his violin.

His troubles had reached their height when a party of rough boys had met him, and to gratify their love of mischief sport had taken away his instrument, notwithstanding his tears and entreaties.

Poor little Guiseppe! He did not know what to do. He was afraid to return to his master, for he knew that he would vent his vexation at the loss of the violin upon him, even though he was not at fault, and he had no friends to whom to go for refuge in this strange land.

Miss Wilson heard his sad story with great sympathy and interest, and Guiseppe felt as if he had gained a friend by the time they entered the door of the warm, well-filled mission-school.

The lady led the little stranger into the class that she herself taught, and sitting beside a ragged little boy of about his own age, Guiseppe listened wonderingly to the singing and the lesson. At the close of the lesson the whole school united in the Lord's Prayer, and the untaught child's eyes opened wide with amazement.

To whom were they talking? and who was it that the whole school called Father? Thus he questioned Miss Wilson when the school had been dismissed, and the children were dispersing. Sitting down beside him, the teacher explained that, poor and friendless as he was, he had a loving heavenly Father who was always watching over him and caring for him.

The brown eyes grew soft and velvety with tears as the little boy listened. It was a new thought to him that any one cared for him. He had been left an orphan when he was a baby, and the uncle upon whom he had been dependent had never been very fond of the child, and had been glad to get rid of him.

"Him love me? Sure?" he asked, and when Miss Wilson assured him of it, he went on. "If I ask something will He do it for me?"

"If he thinks it is best for you," was the gentle answer, and then Guiseppe, clasping his hands, prayed that he might never go back again to his master, but that he might have a happy home some where else.

You may be sure the boy's prayer was answered, for Miss Wilson would not send him back to his cruel master again. His brother, who was a doctor, wanted just such a little boy to open the office door and go on errands, and he went to see Guiseppe's master, and easily prevailed upon him to give up all his claim upon the child. In the happy Christian home where he is learning to be a good and useful man, Guiseppe's face is no longer sorrowful. He loves his kind friends dearly, and night and morning when he kneels in prayer he never forgets to thank the loving heavenly Father, to whom he has given his young heart, for all His care and mercies.—Christian Intelligencer.

A Temperance Dog

The old blue farm-wagon, with its load of fresh, green "garden truck," gave a pleasant touch to the city square, and the farmer had such a kindly face and such a homely air about him that many a man in the hurrying throng smiled half involuntarily as he caught his eye.

But it was the farmer's dog on which the glances of the passers-by rested longest—a magnificent, pure-blood Newfoundlander, black as coal, except for a little patch of white on his chest, and a hint of gray with which advancing age had touched his muzzle. He stood on the curb by his master, watching the passers with expectant eye, and wagging his tail in dignified approval whenever someone stopped to make a purchase.

By and by one man, who seemed to have more leisure than his fellows, paused a moment to speak to him.

"What's his name?"

"Dow," replied the farmer promptly.

"Dow? That's a queer name for a dog!"

"Yes, I s'pose it is, but it fits him. Neal Dow is his full name."

"O, I see! Temperance dog!" said the stranger, smiling. "Never takes anything but water, I s'ppose?"

"Yes, but he's more than that. He's a prohibitionist—a regular temperance reformer."

The stranger evidently wanted the story, and the farmer continued: "Yes, Jim Snow: a hired man up our way, got him of a tin peddler when he was about a year old. Jim was a good worker and a pretty decent fellow otherwise, but he never went to town without coming home the worse for liquor. One day, a week or two after he got the dog, he came home, as usual, staggering drunk. The dog was lying in the sun on the door-step. He had grown very fond of Jim; but this time, instead of running to meet him, he rose up, growling, with the hair on his back as stiff as bristles, and every tooth in his head showing. Any man in his senses would have kept away, but Jim was too far gone to know what he was doing. He spoke to him, but the minute he started to go a step nearer the dog fastened on his hand, and there he hung. Jim yelled, and the Spragues where he worked came running out, but the whole family had all they could do to make him let go. The next day the dog was as good-natured as ever, but when Jim came home drunk again a week or two later, he growled and snarled just as he had before, and finally went off to the barn and stayed two days. Jim kind of took the thing to heart. He'd had plenty of good advice before, but it didn't seem to take hold of him as this did; and after it happened the third time, he said: "Well, if I've got so low my dog is ashamed to associate with me, I guess it's time to quit!" He stopped right there—never drank another drop, and never had another bit of trouble with the dog from that day to this. At the time it struck everybody as a mighty strange thing. We didn't know how to account for it. But about two years afterwards the peddler told somebody how one time a drunken tavern-loafer struck this dog's mother with a hot poker, and after that she would never let anybody who had been drinking come near her. I suppose her puppy got the trait from her."

"But how came the dog in your possession?" asked the stranger.

"Well," said the farmer with a wink, "you see my name is Snow—James Snow. I was the hired man. If it hadn't been for Neal here, I might be a hired man yet, instead of owning a good farm. Poor old dog! He's getting well on in years now, but I ain't likely to forget him."—Youth's Companion.

The Boy Hero.

Till time shall be no more there can be no grander deed, in every sense, done by mortal soldier—let alone by a boy just out of school, a mere lad of seventeen, who yet was an officer in the Seventy-fourth Highlanders, row the "Highland Light Infantry."

Everybody knows the story of "The Loss of the Birkenhead"—how the troopship struck upon a rock; how the soldiers were formed in ranks to die, while the women and children were being saved; how the whole force—officers and men—stood at the salute, while "Still inch by inch the doomed ship sank low, Yet under steadfast men."

Russell was ordered into one of the boats carrying the women and children, for the purpose of commanding it, and he sat with dimmed eyes in the stern, some way off the doomed ship, watching the forms of his beloved comrades and fellows standing upright there. He saw the ship go down, carrying hundreds of brave hearts, saw those fearful creatures of the deep seizing their prey, and heard the screams of scores of human beings torn to pieces by sharks. Then, just when all for him was safe, when to him was given (with honor) life, ambition, and glory, he saw a sailor's form rise close to the boat, and a hand strive to grasp the side. There was not room in the craft for a single person more without great risk of upsetting the boat.

But as the sailor's face rose clear at the boat side a woman in the craft called out in agony, "Save him! Save him! He is my husband!" No room in that boat for one more! But Russell looked at the woman, then at her children, then at the sailor struggling in the waves, with his eyes beseeching help, then at the dreaded sharks feasting on every hand.

Alexander Cumine Russell rose in the stern of the boat. With a bold plunge he jumped clear of it, and helped that sailor into what had been his own place—and safety. Then, amid a chorus of "God bless you!" from every soul in the boat, the young officer—a lad of seventeen, mind!—turned round to meet his death. And those in the boat shut their eyes and prayed. When they opened them again Alexander Cumine Russell was nowhere to be seen!—Windsor Magazine.

Origin of the Weeping Willow.

The weeping willow tree came to America through the medium of Alexander Pope, the poet, who planted a willow twig on the banks of the Thames at his Twickenham Villa. The twig came to him in a box of figs sent from Smyrna by a friend who had lost all in the South Sea Bubble and had gone to that distant land to recoup his fortunes. Harker's Encyclopedia of United States History tells the story of the willow's arrival in America. A young British officer who came to Boston with the army to crush the rebellion of the American colonies, brought with him a twig from Pope's now beautiful willow tree, intending to plant it in America when he should comfortably settle down on lands confiscated from the conquered Americans. The young officer, disappointed in these expectations, gave his willow twig, wrapped in oil silk, to John Parke Custis, Mrs. Washington's son, who planted it on his Abingdon estate in Virginia. It thrived and became the progenitor of all our willow trees.

To-Day.

To-day no coward thought shall start
Upon its journey from my heart,
To-day no hasty word shall slip
Over the threshold of my lip.
To-day no selfish hope shall rest
Within the region of my breast,
To-day no wave of wrath shall roll
Over the ocean of my soul.
To-day I vow with sword and song
To fight oppression and the wrong,
To-day I dedicate my youth
To duty and eternal truth.

Our Little Folks.

CONDUCTED BY MRS. A. J. MCKELWAY

June 10th, 1903.

Dear Little Folks:

We told you a secret not long ago, and we tell you another now. Every one of these letters, except the first, has been buried in the Editor's pocket for ever so long, and only reached the office to-day. You are not old enough to know that a man's pocket is worse than the waste basket. Please direct your letters to "The Presbyterian Standard, No. 216 N. Tryon Street, Charlotte, N. C." and you will see them promptly.

The Presbyterian Standard.

Children's Letters.

Garland, N. C., April 2, 1903.

My dear Mrs. McKelway:

Strawberry season is with us again and the beautiful fruit is ripening fast and we are picking it. Our school has closed. I have no pets. I am the oldest girl and I have to pet the younger children. They have dogs and kittens and kids and every other kind of an animal that you find on a farm. Yesterday was all fool's day and we had cotton puffs for supper. What a jolly time we had fooling one another. Our missionary society is growing and we have twenty-two members. I will answer the children's questions that were in the last Standard. Washpot is found in Psalm 60:8, 108:9, sense is found in Hebrews 51:4. The man in the Bible that was left-handed was Edub; music is found in 1 Samuel 18:6 and in other places; Handkerchief is found in Act 19:12.

Your little friend,
Mary Moore Sloan.

Hamlet, N. C., April 5, 1903.

Dear Mrs. McKelway:

Mama is taking the Standard and I like to read the letters and pieces for the children very much. I have five sisters; their names are, Bessie, Alice, Mary, Annette, and Gilmore. Three of us go to school to Miss Effie McNeil. We love her very much. She is going to take her scholars fishing Tuesday. I am raising chickens. I haven't many, for I have just started, I have twenty-one little biddies and three hens setting. I am saving eggs for Easter. Alice is raising pigeons and growing flowers. I will close by answering Grace Dun's Bible question and asking a few myself, Handkerchief is found in Ezek; 13:1.8 Where is moon and mulberry-tree found in the Bible? Where is mother first found? Hoping to see my letter in print very soon, I remain yours truly, Age 12. Nancy Gordon.

Magnolia, N. C., April 17, 1903.

Dear Standard:

As our letters have not come out yet, I will write again. Mama said she knew you did not get them. My grand-ma takes your nice paper and I do enjoy reading the little letters so much. We don't have any Sunday-school, but we study catechism and have learned the Ten Commandments. Grandma gave us nice Testaments and we are so proud of them. Brother Roy and I are picking berries trying to make some money and want to send some for little Joe's church. We have preaching once a month at Mt. Zion; Rev. R. M. Williams is our Pastor; we all love him so much. My little sister, Annie High, wants to write letters too, but she can't.

Your little friend,
Age 7. Lidie Southerland.

Magnolia, N. C., April 17th, 1903.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy just 10 years old this April, the 15th, and mama forgot it in time to make my strawberry pies, so we had them yesterday, and they certainly were good. Sister Lidie and I are picking berries. We don't get many as they are not ripening fast. Brother Lindon went to Uncle Lonnie's to pick. Our school closed some time ago. Miss Ada Williams was our teacher. I want to see her so much. I study grammar, geography, arithmetic, history and speller. We boys have a fine time working our ox, when we are not plowing. Our corn is up and growing. I expect we will have a big frost to-night by the way it is turning cold. My papa died 6 years ago, this April. I have two sisters and one brother. I hope soon to see my letter in print.

Your friend,
Ray Southerland.

Dear Standard:

As I have never written to you before, I thought I would write you a short letter. My mother, Mrs. C. H. Clark keeps hotel and has several boarders. My father has been dead for five years; he died when I was four years old. I have two sisters and one brother; my oldest sister's name is Ethel; she is in Lumberton now. We have a very nice school here, the principal, Mr. R. C. Deal, has been sick for about three months. Capt. J. J. Huston is the commander of the military tactics. Mr. T. P. Bailey has been acting principal since Mr. Deal has been sick. I will close by asking a question, Where is loft found in the Bible?

Your little friend,
Age 9 years Mabel Clark.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl 5 years old the 19th of April. I like the little letters in your paper very much. I have five pets; Daisy, the calf's name; pig Dick; Muggins, the cat; Fitz Hugh Lee, the dog; (we just call him Lee) and hen Susie; I would like to have a pet lamb. I go to church to Bethel; Mr. Lapsley is our preacher; he has two little girls, whose names are Sara Pratt and Genie Brown, the baby boy is Samuel. I am glad that Sunday-school will soon commence; Miss Janie McClure was my teacher last summer. She is Mrs. Ed. Bumgardner now; sometimes she had a room full of little boys and girls. Miss Mary Berra Hogshead helped her often. The wild flowers were blooming in the woods, but they are covered with ice now. The

Watching for Papa

He always stood upon the steps
Just by the cottage door,
Waiting to kiss me when I came
Each night home from the store,
Her eyes were like two glorious stars,
Dancing in heaven's own blue—
"Papa!" she'd call, like a wee bird
"I'se looten out for oo!"

Alas! how sadly do our lives
Change as we onward roam;
For now no birdie voice calls out
To bid me welcome home.
No little hand stretched out for me,
No blue eyes dancing bright;
No baby face peeps from the door
When I come home at night.

And yet there's comfort in the thought,
That when life's toil is o'er,
And passing through the sable flood
I gain the brighter shore,
My little angel at the gate,
With eyes divinely blue,
Will call with bird like voice, "Papa.
I'se looten out for oo!"

When Gladys Went to Market.

She was lost; there was no getting out of that—even to herself. She had played first around her own home doorway; then she had seen something very pretty on the next corner, to which she took a fancy; then two bicyclists were trying which could make his feet go the faster up and down, and she followed them for a little way; and then a fire-engine rushed along, and it was so exciting that she could not help running a little with the rest of the crowd to see where the fire was; then the engine and the people went out of sight all at once, and she found herself mostly alone; then an aged gentleman came along yelling, "Old clo'es," and looked curiously at her, and she decided that she was tired and bored, and had better go home anyway.

So she started off toward the place where she lived, and walked very vigorously for a little girl six years old, and thought she spied the dear old house a little farther ahead. But houses in the city are so much alike, and it was not hers at all!

She felt homesick, desolate and a little frightened, she was sure this was about where she had left the house, and did not understand how it could have moved itself away during her short walk and run. She did not believe houses could play along the street, and run after fire engines, and get lost, the same as little girls could! She reluctantly concluded that she was really lost.

She asked the way of one boy who looked good-natured, and he laughed and told her to "go an' see a cop." Not knowing what that was, she felt more bewildered than ever, and was discouraged from asking anybody else. At last she saw, through an opening between two buildings, a church-spire which she was sure was close by her housse and tried to walk toward it as well as she could, along streets and around corners. She walked, and walked, and walked, but some how could never get sight of the church-spire again.

All at once she came upon a street where people seemed to be keeping several stores and groceries right out of doors, where the horses and wagons ought to pass. They were queer looking folks, too; nothing like anything she had ever seen. They had little hand-carts and wagons and baskets, and were yelling and hallooing to one another in a way which she had been always taught to consider very rude.

"Hullo, kid!" shouted a rough-looking fellow. "Come down to do your marketin' for the day? Goin' to carry the things home in your pocket, I suppose. Here's some prime fish; only ten cents a pound."

"No, she don't want any fish," screamed a burly woman. "She eats mutton chops to-day. Here's something, I'm sure you'll like, madame."

"You'll want some fruit with it all," interrupted another. "I'll take it right to your carriage for you, or deliver it at the house."

Now Miss Gladys, though very young, had a thinking-cap that she could put on when occasion served. She knew that she was probably a good way from home, and had been told that children were sometimes "stolen," if they ventured too far from their friends. She made up her mind not to be purloined if she could help it, and to get home by the very best method that presented itself, no matter what it cost her father. She knew that he would willingly pay a great many dollars rather than not take her on his knee when he came home at night, and tell her what he had seen during the day, and hear her observations concerning the same.

"I do not want to buy anything except some apples," she said, as quietly as she could, with her heart beating so wildly. "Nothing but some apples. If you will wheel these to No. 125 9th avenue, I will take them all."

"That's quite a ways," said the fellow who presided over the destinies of the push-cart.

"I'm afraid it is," faltered Gladys; "but I don't see how I can carry more than one or two of them, and I want them all."

"How do I know you'll pay for 'em when I get 'em there?" asked the man doubtfully.

"Because I tell you I will," replied the little girl.

"Can't you give me something for security?" said the fellow.

"Here is my watch," replied Gladys, with a new lump in her throat. It was a pretty little time piece that her father had given her on her sixth birthday.

"I'll just go around the corner and see if it's a good one," said the fellow.

"No you don't" broke in a still rougher-looking man, who had heard the whole conversation. "You give that watch back to that little girl and wheel the apples where she tells you, or I'll upset your apple cart in more ways than one. I've got a child or two of my own, whether you have or not. Now, start along."

The two men scowled at each other a minute or two, and a crowd gathered about; but the fellow with the cart finally decided that it was best to obey orders.

"I'll go along to see that you don't go around any wrong corners," growled the other.

The strange little procession had not moved many blocks when it met a man whose face was wonderfully familiar to Gladys. She rushed into his arms and could not speak for sobbing.

"What does all this mean?" inquired the little girl's father.

She told the whole story as well as she could between sobs of fear and delight.

Gladys' father was a man with a sense of humor, as well as of justice. He laughed, but with a kind of anxious cadence in the laugh. He kissed the little girl repeatedly; he paid the man for his fruit, dumped it among a lot of street arabs who had gathered around, and laughed to see them scrambling for it; and he paid twice as much as he did for the fruit to the man who had compelled the other one to come.

"And now, Miss Gladys," he remarked, "you have been to market, and did very well for the first time. We'd better go home before your mother worries too much about you."

And tucking her under his arm, he walked away.—Everywhere.

The Lamb's Own Story.

It was a wild, hilly country where our flock lived, but the turf was sweet, and tiny wild flowers grew among the rocks. There were no fields enclosed by green hedges, to keep the sheep from straying, and sometimes it happened that one lost its way and died.

This my mother had told me; but I did not pay much heed. I would never be so foolish, I thought, as to leave my mother and run away alone.

Our shepherd was a kind man. The sheep were fond of him; but the lambs thought him too strict.

I had quite a happy time playing with the other lambs at "Hide and seek" among the rocks. But after a time I got tired of that game; I thought it was stupid for a lamb of my age.

One morning I noticed that the sun was shining brightly on a distant part of the hill, while we were in the shadow of a cloud. This put it into my head to go and see what it was like there. It looked so bright and pretty, and was not so far away. I would be back again before any one found out I had gone.

I looked about me; all the sheep were busy grazing, and the lambs playing. No one, not even the shepherd, saw me as I went.

Soon I was far away, and I was free! I could go where I pleased; the shepherd's dog could not find me here, I thought.

I had forgotten now about the sunny place on the hillside. Here everything seemed different; on I ran, this way and that, always wondering what would come next. What came next was always the same—rocks and stony places. I shed there had been a little grass growing, for I was hungry. The white dust on the hills made me wet and cold and frightened.

If only my mother would come now and take me home, I thought, and shivered; it was such a long way to go home, and I did not know which way I had come. If I called perhaps she might hear me; she always came when I called.

"Baa! baa!" I bleated again and again. No answer came, and I was very sad. I tried to find the way I had come; but I fell on a sharp stone and gave a cry of pain. Then, from somewhere out of the mist, I heard my mother's voice. In a moment I was by her side; now I was safe—she would take care of me. Just then we heard a screech, and the flapping of wings; and we saw coming down upon us a great bird with a cruel beak. I turned giddy with fright. My mother bleated piteously. With another screech the great bird was upon me, fixing its claws in my wool.

But help was at hand. Suddenly there came a blow from behind, and the eagle fell to the ground—dead.

The shepherd had missed us, and guided by his dog, had come just in time to save us. He carried me in his arms all the way home. That was the last time I ever tried to run away, and by my disobedience bring danger upon my mother and myself.—Nora Crombie, in The Child's Own Magazine.

Cat-Life.

Dozing, and dozing, and dozing!
Pleasant enough,
Dreaming of sweet cream and mouse-meat,—

Delicate stuff!
Of raids on the pantry and hen-coop,
Or light, stealthy tread
Of cat-gossips, meeting by moonlight
On a ridge-pole or shed.—

Waked by a somerset, whirling
From cushion to floor;
Waked to a wild rush for safety
From window to door.

Waking to hands that first smooth us,
And then pull our tails;
Punished with slaps when we show them
The length of our nails!

These big mortal tyrants even grudge us
A place on the mat.
Do they think we enjoy for our music
Staccatoes of 'scat?'

What in the world were we made for?
Man, do you know?
By you to be petted, tormented?—
Are you friend or foe?

To be treated, now, just as you treat us,—
The question is pat,—
To take just our chances of living,
Would you be a cat?

Educational Matter—Stock Company Capitalized at $300,000.00

One of the largest corporations, perhaps, in the world conducting Business Colleges has recently been organized by Prof. J. F. Draughon, President of Draughon's Practical Business Colleges at Atlanta, Nashville, St. Louis, Montgomery, Little Rock, Ft. Worth, Galveston and Shreveport. Fourteen cashiers and presidents of banks are on the Board of Directors of this company, which is sufficient evidence of the reliability of Draughon's Colleges.

Prof. Draughon has just issued a pamphlet entitled, "A Little Talk About A Big Success," which is one of the most interesting pieces of literature of its kind that it has ever been our pleasure to read. It tells of the ups and downs of the founder of Draughon's Colleges since his first one was organized on wheels fifteen years ago. Prof. Draughon will take pleasure in sending one of the pamphlets free to any one who will write him in care of either of his colleges.

We are also authorized to say that his Colleges are for the benefit of literary teachers, students and others, making a special summer rate, a reduction of almost one half for tuition. Send for catalogue, 23t1.

Special Rates.

Th' wan great object iv ivry man's life is to get tired enough to sleep. Ivirything seems to be some kind iv wurruk. Wurruk is wurruk if ye're paid to do it, an' it's pleasure if ye pay to be allowed to do it.—Mr. Dooley.

Dawn.

By Alice Ward Bailey.

Darkness on which no ray hath risen,
Fetter and guard and prison,
In vain I bar to thee my soul,
I give thee dole, I give thee dole!

Thy trailing robes I cannot reach,
Deaf are thy ears, thou hast no speech;
Thou art not what thou seem'st to be;
O formless Dread, depart from me!

Hark! far away I hear a ringing note
Answered from many a throbbing throat.
The East is dappled like a fawn—
It is the dawn, it is the dawn!

The day breaks and the shadows flee:
Sing, sing your Benedicite!
Let all the earth the shout prolong,
Thank God for Light, thank God for Song!

Event and Comment.

Professor George Adam Smith is to be at Chautauqua this summer.

A commission was appointed by the Northern Assembly to inquire what is being done for the religious culture of the students in state universities and non-religious colleges. An excellent suggestion.

The stained window to be placed in the City Temple, London, in memory of Dr. Parker will have the same subject as that chosen by Rev. R. J. Campbell for his memorial sermon—St. Paul taking leave of the elders at Ephesus.

The Presbytery of Manila is one of the latest to be organized. A Presbytery in Manila was unthinkable six years ago. That is one reason why folks who were interested in the evangelization of the world were not very much afraid of the threatened evils of expansion and imperialism.

The Irish Presbyterian remarks, "It is an open secret now that Mr. John McDermott will be our moderator." We always knew that the Irish were good politicians, but we did not know that they carried the matter into the courts of Presbyterianism or that they were able to slate a moderator in advance.

The Northern Assembly resolved to raise twelve million dollars in the next three years for the purpose of endowing Presbyterian institutions of learning. It is to be called the Presbyterian Educational Fund. It was also decided to elect a secretary to have the charge of raising this vast sum of money.

The Southern Churchman reports that two of the Dioceses are evenly divided as to the change of the name, Protestant Episcopal; that seven postponed action; that five were in favor of a change, and that twenty-four were against any change. This certainly looks as though the conservatives were in control in the Protestant Episcopal Church.

There are now some 269,000 Indians in America and those who know say that there are as many now as there ever were, even before the white man came. And they are being pretty well cared for, too, by a government that is popularly supposed to have been simply a high-handed robber and murderer, so far as the aboriginal inhabitants of North America are concerned.

The Report on Presbyterian Unity in the Northern Assembly, brought in by Dr. Van Dyke, proclaimed a desire for closer unity with all Christians who hold faithfully to the Headship of Jesus Christ and "especially with members of churches related to us by name, faith and order." That means a permanent committee on organic union. A committee always likes to justify its existence by doing what it can.

There was a protest in the Northern Assembly against Decision Day, but the protest, though securing some adherents, was buried under an adverse majority of votes. We are glad, however, that the protest was made. The thing is out of all harmony with Presbyterian ideas, both of religion and of propriety. But there are some people who can only find out about an obstacle in their road by butting their shins against it.

They have been debating how to pronounce Dr. Kerr's name in Baltimore. Some called it Cur and some Car. Then Dr. Kerr came to the rescue and said it was pronounced like the "err" in "daguerreotype" and added, "It is so pronounced by the Duke of Roxborough, head of our house in Scotland and intimate friend of the Prince of Wales, and I preserve the correct pronunciation." One inducement for working for organic union now will be the prospect of having Dr. Kerr back with us with his noble kinships and their royal friendships.

The action of the Episcopal Church with regard to the change of its name and the Northern Presbyterian Church with regard to the amendments to its creed, indicate the reaction that is noticeable everywhere in the religious world away from radicalism. In the Southern Church there are no radicals. Its progressives would be called conservatives elsewhere and its conservatives, re-actionaries. Come to think of it, the moss is a little thick in some places and is even luxuriant down about the mouth of the Mississippi.

Says the Southwestern Presbyterian:

"The voice of the church has again been heard, in no uncertain way, against any effort to change her standards or to give explanatory foot-notes to clauses which are misunderstood only by those who wish to misunderstand."

Perhaps the Southwestern can tell us in a few plain words how it now understands or misunderstands the clause in question.

There were four ministerial representatives against amending the Confession to six in favor of it, from North Carolina. The Standard could not help wondering about the four and why they did it. And the result of its meditations took form something like this: "Yes, he is the son-in-law of his father-in-law. No, there is nothing so conservative as the new Stated Clerk of a new Presbytery. Yes, when there are more than one church in such places as Greensboro and Wilmington, and the pastor of one church is pronounced on one side, the other pastor is apt to take the other. That must have been the way it was."

Canon Henson recently told one of the Houses of Convocation some plain truths: that the Nonconformists equalled the Episcopalians in London, in numbers, and were superior in religious energy, and that no distinction could be drawn concerning the religious influence of the English Church and other branches of Christ's Church; that the alienation between Non-conformists and Episcopalians was immense, apparent and scandalous; that the laity of the Church of England could not understand the narrow and exclusive attitude of their church, and were therefore becoming estranged from the clergy; and then he asked the house if it was prepared to deny that there were non-episcopal branches of the true Church of Christ.

Now that the Northern Church has settled the subject of the salvation of the little ones, this is the way it begins to talk about the Southern Church and its unwillingness to do the same thing. The brethren on the frontier are likely to have a pleasant time shortly between the Cumberlanders and the Northerners together. It is the Presbyterian Journal that is doing the talking:

"The 'elect infant' was in attendance, as usual, at the recent session of the Southern Presbyterian General Assembly. A Presbytery had asked that the word 'elect' be eliminated from the Confession as applied to infants. This was denied, as also were two proposed foot-notes to the Confession, one stating that the word does not imply that infants are lost, and another that the Scriptures teach infant salvation. The brethren, we believe, have a 'hope' that the little spirits may be with God, but they do not know. The subject of foreign missions also interested the Assembly. What a cheerful message for the heathen!"

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD, Charlotte, N. C.

Two hundred years ago this day there was born in the manse of Epworth Parish a man child. There flowed in his veins the blood of Puritan ancestors. His mother, Susannah Annesley, was the daughter of an ejected minister and a woman of rare piety and intelligence. His father, Samuel Wesley, although he had conformed to the Church of England, was steadfastly opposed to the schemes of James II. and zealously supported the cause of the Revolution that seated William and Mary upon the throne.

His grandfather, John Wesley, for whom the boy was named, spent a good part of his time in jail and was often fined for preaching contrary to law; while his great-grandfather, Bartholomew Wesley, was ejected from his living by the act of 1662. The family name was supposed to be the same as Wellesley and it seems probable that John Wesley was related to the Duke of Wellington. Certainly he was of good English, Puritan stock, with an inheritance of non-conformity when conscience led the way against tradition. In fact the young John as an infant very nearly fell a victim to the evil passions of those evil days, some wicked parishioners whom Samuel Wesley had rebuked too plainly for their sins having tried to burn the manse while the family were within. The world would have been poorer if that infant had then lost its life.

After a good deal of conscientious struggle over the matter, John Wesley gave himself to the ministry, was ordained deacon in the Established Church in 1725 and graduated at Oxford with the degree of M. A. the following year. He was ordained priest in 1728 and remained till his death a priest of the English Church. While in Oxford he and his brother Charles were brought under the influence of a most earnest Christian man, John Law, who wrote the Serious Call. It was at Oxford also that the name of Methodists, was bestowed upon the Wesleys and the few that they had associated with them in doing regular and methodic work, such as visiting the poor and the prisoners in the jails, and meeting at stated intervals for prayer and the study of the Scriptures.

When 32 years old John Wesley came to the new colony of Georgia with General Oglethorpe to preach to the colonists and the Indians, and on the journey he fell in with a party of that wonderful missionary people, the Moravians, whose evangelistic zeal made a profound and lasting impression upon him. He was something of an ascetic at this period of his life, and had an unfortunate love affair with the daughter of the Mayor of Savannah. He was persuaded to give her up and then when she found another husband very soon he refused to admit her to the communion table, for which her husband sued him at the law. Wesley shook the dust of America from his feet and went back to England after two years sojourn on this continent. It was the year after his return that he experienced what he called his "conversion," while hearing in a meeting the preface of Luther's commentary on Romans read. He describes his experience thus: "I felt my heart strangely warmed; I felt I did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for salvation, and an assurance was given me that he had taken away my sins, even mine, and saved me from the law of sin and death." Very probably Wesley had all along been a converted man, but this experience was one that had a great influence in his life.

In the following year, 1739, Wesley began his work of organization with "the first Methodist society." Some eight or ten persons had come to him in great trouble about the salvation of their souls, and Wesley appointed Thursday evening of each week to talk with them. This was the beginning of these societies that soon were organized all over England, and at the time of Wesley's death numbered 80,000 members all over the English-speaking world. Each society was divided into "classes," each class had a leader who was to visit and talk with each member of the class each week, and in this way there was a perfect system for the giving and receiving of mutual experiences. The societies in their turn were grouped into circuits, the circuits into district conferences and the district conferences into a General Conference. The first conference was held in 1774, when John and Charles Wesley met two or three other clergymen of the Church of England and some of Wesley's lay preachers. The whole machinery of Methodism as it exists to-day was outlined in the plans of organization laid down by John Wesley.

Of his influence upon the religious life of England and America it is almost impossible to say too much. Wesley found the religion of the people of England, whether of the Anglican or Non-Conformist faith, at a low ebb. It was all barren formality. Wesley changed all that. Of course the Methodist Church in all its various branches is the chief monument to his influence. But the historian will find in the development of other churches along the evangelistic lines which Wesley marked out another great mark of Wesley's genius for organization and his passion for souls. Wesley lived for a long time, eighty-eight years, and saw of the travail of his soul. He died in 1791. There is a tablet to his memory in Westminster Abbey which represents Wesley as preaching upon his father's grave in Epworth church-yard. He belonged to the Church of England, but he preached to the people from outside the church, from the church-yard as it were.

A recent writer, President of a Methodist University, shows that Wesley did not originate anything distinctive in his organization, but adopted and adapted the plans of others. He got the idea of the Methodist societies from the Moravians; of the classes from a scheme for paying church debts; his out-door preaching from the Calvinistic evangelist, Whitefield; lay preaching from Maxfield, and the itinerancy itself from Wyclif and others before him. Nevertheless he was successful in thus putting all these separate plans into the one great organization which he formed. It seems to us that the two great ideas of Wesley were, simplicity of life and the passion for souls. The experience of which so much was made belonged to a more ignorant age and one less analytic of emotion, especially religious emotion. But all that he did by way of organizing and controlling the force under him, was that souls might be snatched from the burning, and he was so much in earnest about this great concern of the Christian life, that he took with great literalness the Scripture injunctions against luxury of every kind.

He himself was generous to a fault. He would give away all that he had to the poor. And he taught his followers how to deny themselves the things of this world in order that with more single heart they might apply themselves to heavenly things, might give themselves to the work of winning souls. And these ideas, with different applications perhaps for differing ages, are permanent and lasting. They are ideas that the world needs to learn anew.

This is not the occasion to speak of his doctrines, those known and those disputed. But we wanted to say, that the world is a better world, and the Church of Christ a greater blessing to mankind, because of the life and the labors, the prayers and the zeal, the self-denial and the saving common-sense, the piety and the eloquence, of John Wesley and because of the great Church which he founded and sent on its useful way in the world.

Evangelism      The Southern Church has gained a good deal by "standing pat," as the politicians say. On the negro question, which we make mention of elsewhere, the Northern Church is coming over to the ground that we have occupied all along and is trying to persuade itself that the Southern Church has been holding a position of unfriendliness toward the negro that it never dreamed of. With the drawing together of the two churches on this question it might be observed that they are rather widely separated as regards simplicity of worship. There has been an effort after "an enrichment of the service" in Northern Presbyterian Churches that has gone so far that it is sometimes hard for a Southern Presbyterian visitor to imagine himself in a Presbyterian Church at all. As a minister conducting the service he would not be able to get through at all without a printed programme or a prompter at his elbow. Of course there are a few signs of this in some Southern churches, but they affect such comparatively harmless forms as repeating the Lord's prayer in unintelligible unison, or making a presentation of the contents of the basket to the Lord, with the deacons grouped around the pulpit, on the theory that worship after the offering would teach people that the offering was worship itself. And then in fashionable churches the choirs can always be counted on to throw in a few extras not in the Directory for Worship.

But in the main the Southern Church has stood pat. It has said that ritualism was something not needed in its business. And now it is really gratifying to see the reaction in the Northern Church toward that same sweet simplicity of worship which distinguishes the Calvinistic from the Ritualistic churches everywhere when Calvinists know what they are doing.

Says Dr. Henry Van Dyke, whom one would count among the Liberals on such matters as this:

"There is too much ritualism in the Presbyterian Church to-day. The minister at one end and the choir at the other do the whole thing. There is also too much variety in the service. It has become so that it is a sort of Dolly Varden performance. You don't know what will happen next—whether to stand up or sit down. I have seen you put your hand in your pocket when the doxology was started, your nervous system so shattered you didn't know when the collection was made. We need a revival of the evangelistic spirit more than anything else. There is no use in having the right doctrine if you haven't the spirit that will carry it abroad."

The story is told on the great Dr. Hoge, that he was once supplying a church in Albany, New York, during his vacation. As he went into the pulpit he was handed a printed programme indicating a variegated service of the most approved type. The Southern preacher quietly put the programme aside and said to the congregation:

"I have been accustomed to conduct the service after a somewhat more simple fashion, to open with a short prayer, then to have a hymn, then the reading of the Scriptures, another prayer, and another hymn, the sermon, a closing prayer and hymn and the benediction, and by your permission, I shall conduct the service that way!" And the story goes on to say that the people, so long wearied by the variety, smacked their lips and said that they liked the simplicity of it all.

Dr. Van Dyke has hit the key-note in saying that the evangelistic spirit is needed rather than ritualism. The two things are antipodal.

Ritualism exalts everything above the sermon. Evangelism makes the sermon the supreme thing about the service. It believes that the preacher with a message from God is of more importance than any rites or ceremonies, however aesthetically charming or emotionally pleasing they may be. The evangelistic service aims at the effectiveness of the saints and the conversion of sinners. The pastors and teachers are God-given for the perfecting of the saints unto a work of ministering, and that work of ministering is the building up of the body of Christ.

Moreover, while evangelistic work and the evangelistic spirit are not confined to Calvinists, the very core of Calvinism is Evangelism and the farthest extreme from Calvinism is Ritualism. And the two extremes are not only widely separated from each other, but their relative position, one toward another, is that Ritualism is at the bottom of the scale while Calvinism is at the very top, according to the very philosophy of worship. Hegel declares that while at a lower level it is only the aesthetical worship that liberates the spirit, its highest emancipation is found in the realm of the invisible and the spiritual.

So Von Hartmann: "At the lower stage, religion is still inclined to lose itself in the aesthetic form. The more religion develops into spiritual maturity, the more it will extricate itself from art's bandage, because art always remains incapable of expressing the very essence of religion. Religion when fully matured will rather entirely abstain from this stimulant in order to concentrate itself wholly and exclusively upon the quickening of those emotions which are purely religious."

And Kuyper, who quotes these two men outside of Calvinism to prove the same point, says: "The fact that in these days, our Calvinistic churches are deemed cold and unbecoming, and a re-introduction of the symbolical in our places of worship is longed for, we owe to the sad reality that the pulse-beat of the religious life in our times is so much fainter than it was in the days of our martyrs.

"But so far from borrowing from this the right of descending to a lower level of religion, this faintness of the religious life ought to inspire the prayer for a mightier inworking of the Holy Spirit"—which comes back to Dr. Van Dyke's paragraph, with the philosophy of simplicity in worship.

So it is not such a small thing, this Calvinistic resistance for Presbyterian Churches of the beginnings of Ritualism, the celebration of Easter, the gymnastic performances of rising and falling of which Dr. Van Dyke speaks, the "enrichment of the service" for which some of the addle-pated are asking. These things do not belong to the Calvinistic system. They have their part in a less developed and more childish form of worship. Calvinism has put away childish things. It is a mistake to try the forcing upon it of swaddling clothes again. And unless Calvinism shall come to its second childhood it will eschew these ritualistic belongings as alien to its life and spirit. We agree with Dr. Van Dyke. Let us have no more Dolly Varden shows in the Presbyterian Church.

As has been before noted in the Standard the question came up by way of a memorial from the Synod of Tennessee, asking the Assembly to allow the setting off of separate Presbyteries for the white people and the colored people in the same territory. The memorial was answered by the appointment of a committee of seven, on which there are two negroes, to consider the question in all its bearings and report to the next Assembly.

Of course we do not know what the committee will do or what the next Assembly will do. But the appointment of a committee for the consideration of the subject is an important step. It certainly indicates an approach to the Southern position, when one recalls the lurid rhetoric that used to be employed about making the negro "stand aside at the communion table."

Perhaps a re-statement of the Southern position may not be out of the way. The Southern Presbyterian Church neither believes in nor practices such an absolute separation of the races in the Church of Christ as forbids negro membership in a white church, Presbytery, Synod or Assembly. But it has been deemed best for both races and for the interests of Christ's Kingdom that when the number of the negro members of a church, Presbytery, or Synod, become large enough for separate existence, then they be set apart. For Presbyterianism is an elective and representative system that does not need the complications of negro suffrage.

Moreover, as a matter of fact, and not of theory, the Northern Presbyteries in the South have been doing just exactly that. Presbyteries have been pulled out of their proper Synodical connection because of the desire to have the Synod all white or all black, and the case may be.

And in Tennessee, the line of a colored Presbytery was so long and so crooked that its very crookedness impressed the brethren with the idea that perhaps there was a straighter way of doing the thing than by the political trick known as gerrymandering.

The overture of the Synod of Tennessee is an appeal of the men on the ground to be allowed freedom from the hypocrisy that has oppressed some consciences no little. Surely honesty is the best policy.

It is said that the negroes object and that the change will never be made as long as they do object. It seems to us that there would be more hope of a peaceful living together if the negroes did not object so strenuously to the separation. It is that very characteristic of the negro of late years, that he is bound to push himself where he is not wanted, that renders the task of dealing with him that much harder.

The time is bound to come when the Northern Church must settle the question of the negro's ecclesiastical relations. It may as well be done now as later. And the Southern Church will not be disposed at all to carp and criticise during the process, but is interested in its issue for more than one reason.

Review of Contemporaries.

Keep the Record Straight.

The Christian Observer has the following review of the action of the present and previous Assemblies:

"In 1901 objections were raised to the addition of a foot-note to the Confession by mere resolution, without submission to the Presbyteries, and the instruction of 1901 was rescinded."

The Observer forgot to add that its own objection to the Atlanta foot-note was the expressed fear lest, if we knew that any infants were elect it might lead to infanticide. The Observer also omitted to state that one of its editors was the author of the fifth resolution, which denied that we had ground in the Scripture for a credal statement on infant salvation.

The Observer continues: "The Assembly of 1902 adopted a resolution expressing the convictions of our people on the salvation of those who die in infancy; but when a motion was made to submit a similar declaration to the Presbyteries as an amendment to the Confession, the motion was rejected by a vote of 83 to 94."

The Observer again forgot to add that the "fifth resolution" was rescinded by this Assembly and by unanimous vote. What the Observer can forget when aiming at suppressio veri is a plenty.

And this gives another opportunity to point out the indefensible logic of the Observer's position. Of course if a man believes in the possibility or the probability of infant damnation he is logical in not wanting the opposite doctrine in his creed. But the Observer confesses that this declaration of the Jackson Assembly for universal infant salvation as taught by the Scriptures is one "expressing the convictions of our people." If the convictions of our people on such a subject as that do not deserve expression in their creed, what ought to be in a creed?

Another proof of the mental or moral obliquity of the Observer in discussing a question on which it has made a record like this is to be found in its editorial comment on Dr. Marquess' resolution. It printed that resolution in one place, verbatim, thus: "We recommend that the request of the Presbytery of Tusca- coosa be answered in the negative, for the reason that the section as thus amended would not fully state and properly correlate the doctrines of grace held by our Church in relation to the salvation of infants." Out of this resolution the Observer makes Dr. Marquess say, "That the language of the Confession ought not to be changed." We take it that Dr. Marquess does not relish being stultified as much as the Observer delights in stultifying itself.

The Observer continues its review: "In the Assembly of 1903 the motion was made to submit the question of adopting a foot-note to the Confession upon this subject, and the Assembly refused, by a much larger majority, to submit the matter to the Presbyteries, the vote being 57 to 86."

It was just like the Observer to take the vote on the second resolution, after the report had been mutilated, instead of the first vote, which was 66 to 76. A change of six votes would have carried the question. Moreover, ten or more members who voted against the foot-notes afterwards asserted that they voted against the foot-notes because they were in favor of an out and out amendment. So the real majority of the Assembly was in favor of a constitutional change in our language here, either amendatory or explanatory. The reader will see how necessary it is to keep the record straight when the Christian Observer, with its constitutional limitations as to straight lines and square edges, starts out to make a record of its own and at the same time to take care of the record that it has made.

The following appeared recently in a San Jose, California, newspaper:

"Found Asleep—So you slept in church yesterday, did you? Well, it was rather a drowsy day, but if you had been at the Second Presbyterian Church you wouldn't have dozed. The pastor preached two earnest, enthusiastic sermons, and the music was alive and inspiring. Mrs. Hillman Smith sang that old favorite, 'The Holy City,' to the enjoyment of all, and the chorus choir rendered two anthems. The congregation was nearly as large as the church itself. An old-timer there looked around and remarked to a bystander: 'Well, I declare, I thought I knew every one who came to this church, but the last few weeks I don't seem to know more than half of them.'"

And yet there are people who do not believe in advertising.

The South's Unequaled Combination of Advantages.

From "Facts About the South," by R. H. Edmonds. Nature has given this section advantages unequalled by those of any other country. About 75 per cent of the world's cotton is raised in the South. More than one-half of all the standard timber in the United States is in the South. Iron and coal are in unlimited supply, and owing to their proximity, and to the low cost of mining, pig-iron and steel can be made at a smaller cost than in any other part of the country, if not in the world. Nearly every Southern State has an abundance of the best water-powers to supplement the advantages of cheap coal. It is not an exaggeration to say this favored land has greater advantages and resources, such as mineral, timber and agricultural potentialities, than any other section; it has greater advantages than any other country in the world; by virtue of its rivers and long seacoast it has the guarantee of the lowest freight rates; it has a climate that is conducive to good health and long life—a climate that reduces the cost of living to a minimum; it has all of these mighty factors to insure its prosperity, and with fewer disadvantages than any other equal area in the world.

It can produce nearly everything, from the widest range of agricultural growth to the widest limit of manufacturing and mining diversity, at the lowest cost. It is becoming a great iron and steel centre; it is monopolizing the manufacture of coarse cotton goods, and is turning its attention to the finer grades; it is becoming the market garden of the North; its people can live more cheaply, because of natural advantages, than those of other sections, thus always insuring the maximum profit on everything that the South produces. The vast traffic of the West, which has heretofore sought a foreign market through Northern ports, is now turning to the South, and along the South Atlantic and Gulf coast there will of necessity grow up a number of opulent seaports. Climate attractions are making the South a winter home for an ever-increasing number of tourists and health-seekers, who annually spend in the aggregate many millions of dollars there.

Some countries have coal and iron, some have timber, some have oil, some have phosphate, some have good agricultural lands, some a good climate, some have water powers, some have other advantages, but no other country combines all these, and to them adds cotton, which is the foundation of one of the greatest manufacturing interests in the world. Nowhere else is this combination found.

The South is a well-watered country, with a regular and abundant rainfall. From the great mountain ranges that form its backbone innumerable streams and rivers flow to the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico. Some furnish cheap transportation and will forever regulate railroad rates; others afford water-powers, used only to a comparatively small extent now, but capable of furnishing sufficient power to spin all the cotton which the South produces.

The lumbering business of Michigan and the adjoining States was for years the foundation of much of their progress and prosperity; it afforded employment to millions of capital, to many thousands of hands, and yielded very large profits. In the extent and variety of its standing timber the South far surpasses any other section. It has the basis for a lumbering and wood-working business much greater than that of the North West. Its virgin forests of hardwood will furnish the raw material for as many factories to manufacture costly furniture and fine woodwork of all kinds as are now in operation in the entire country; its cheaper lumber will go into the lower grades of furniture, while its pine will continue, as it now is, indispensable in building operations.

Nowhere else are the natural conditions so favorable for the production of iron and steel on the largest scale that the increasing consumption demands and at the lowest cost. In the greater mineral and timber belt which stretches from West Virginia to Northern Alabama, covering, roughly speaking, an area of about 700 miles in length and 150 to 200 miles in width, there is a concentration of mineral and timber wealth greater than can be found in any other equal area in America or Europe, with ideal conditions for its development.

Instead of having to haul ore 1,000 miles, as many Northern furnaces do, and coke 500 to 600 miles, as many Western furnaces are compelled to do, the iron-maker in this section finds ore and coal and limestone within a few miles of each other. And as new railroads open up new and large fields, the cost of production should steadily decrease, against a gradual but certain increase in a very large part of the North and in Europe.

On one side of this mineral belt is the cotton, fruit and truck-growing and yellow-pine region of the South, needing the coal, iron and hardwoods of the mountains, and furnishing in exchange its cotton, its fruits, its vegetables and its pine lumber, creating a mutually profitable exchange. On the other side are the rich and populous prairie States, which will afford an almost unlimited market for all the manufactured products of this central work shop region, while the development of these industrial interests will create a new market for all diversified products of the farm.

Alone With God.

Still, still with Thee when purple morning breaketh,
When the bird waketh, and the shadows flee;
Fairer than morning, lovelier than daylight,
Dawns the sweet consciousness, I am with Thee.

Alone with Thee amid the mystic shadows
The solemn hush of nature newly born;
Alone with Thee in breathless adoration,
In the calm dew and freshness of the morn.

As in the dawning, o'er the waveless ocean
The image of the morning star doth rest;
So in this stillness Thou beholdest only Thine image in the mirror of my bresat.

Still, still to Thee! as to each new-born morning
A fresh and solemn splendor still is given,
So does this blessed consciousness awaking
Breathe each day nearness unto Thee and heaven.

The Lord's Prayer.

The word for prayer in the original Greek, taken from the verb prosenchomai, conveys the idea of making vows, in addition to that of offering petitions, merely, unto God. This idea seems to have been incorporated and assigned first place and prominence in the remarkable formula given as a pattern of prayer by Christ himself.

The purport of the Lord's Prayer becomes more fully and forcibly apparent by regarding the body of it as composed of three vows and three petitions, instead of six petitions only. As readily observed, the first three petitions are in the form of resolutions pure and simple, while the second three are regularly framed petitions only. Christ evidently meant to inculcate the idea of a resolute determination on our part that God's name be hallowed, His Kingdom come, and His will be done, through our instrumentality, as being the requisite standpoint of legitimate petition to our Father in Heaven; and in connection and consistency with which we are privileged to ask what we will believing and it shall be done for us.

While it is true that the three vows treated as petitions imply such determination on our part, it is also true that their force as vows is seriously abated by shifting them from the vantage prominence assigned them, to the back ground of generalities in this way, in consequence of which the sinewy structure and grappling power of the Lord's Prayer is comparatively unavailing in our hands.

To our closets and houses of prayer God is calling us to-day as it seems he has never so urgently called us before.

A strenuous and world-wide exposition of God's Word in its fullness and exactness, and a general insulated connection with the centre of the universe constitute the net work by means of which the forces of this world may very soon be seized and harnessed for Christ.

Sin is a frenzy of soul to-day as it has ever been. It is rampant in the world as from the beginning, and needs the same radical treatment that emanates from outside the man himself that is presented in the gospel. We recall here on this subject the words uttered by that great preacher, Phillips Brooks, in a sermon: "I have no patience with the foolish talk which would make sin nothing but imperfection, and would preach that man needs nothing but to have his deficiencies supplied, to have his natural goodness educated and brought out, in order to be all that God would have him be. The horrible incompetency of that doctrine must be manifest to any man who knows his own heart, or listens to the tumult of wickedness which arises up from all the dark places of the earth. Sin is a dreadful, positive, malignant thing." Let the sharp surgeon's knife do its terrible work.—Lutheran World.

Missionary.

Missionary Heroes.

One missionary sailed to the West, dropped anchor at the mouth of a little river in Ireland, and soon Christianity conquered the Celts, and it has never lost its hold on Belfast, Edinburgh, and Aberdeen. There came Augustine to Canterbury in 590, with Christianity's victory over five million Saxons, that are now thirty millions at home and one hundred millions abroad. In the next century the Germans and the Scandinavians yielded, and they, with their neighbors, are now one hundred and fifty millions. And if it be said that Christianity has lost its grip on the Latin nations, we answer that the Christian spirit there, is in the words of Christ, asleep, but not dead.

Even more signal the reforms that Christianity wrought. It began by rescuing unwelcome and orphan children; then, under the lead of Telemachus, the monk, in one dramatic stroke, stopped the gladiatorial games. Its law of love soon ameliorated the condition of the lame, the halt and the blind, through innumerable plans of relief. In the eleventh century Bernard and Peter the Hermit inaugurated their crusades; and, returning from the Holy Sepulchre, they sowed all Western Europe with the seed of Eastern civilization. Then came the great outburst. "Let us have buildings worthy of His worship," said the architects and the guild masons, and soon Europe was covered with cathedrals, all bearing the shape of Christ's cross. "Let us have music worthy of His praise," said Stradivarius, and the monks organized the skilled workmen of every city to make violins, and cellos, and bass viols, and organs, and wind instruments, while musicians wrote Te Deums worthy of his praise. "Let us paint the pictures of his divine career," said the artist, and when Cimabue unveiled his canvas, representing the infant Christ and his mother and the crucified Saviour, the people of Florence closed their shops, and forming a procession with banners they marched to the church, to unveil the new art.

Then the movement took on a new form. "Let the people have liberty and the laws." The city was Florence, and the speaker was the Monk of San Marco. "Let the people have direct access to God." The land is Germany, and the speaker is Luther. "Let the people control their own church life." The land is Switzerland, and the speaker is Calvin. "Let the people read the Bible for themselves, and own their own books." The land is Holland, and the speaker is Erasmus. "Let each present his own prayer to God." The city is Paris, and the speaker is Caligny. "There is only one king who rules by divine right, a sovereign citizen, to whom the monarch is responsible." The land is England, and the speaker is Cromwell. "Let us have a new country, where we may lay the foundations free from the debris of past centuries." The land is Massachusetts, and the speakers were our Pilgrim Fathers. And now has come the new era, when the old walls around China and the old cruelties in the islands of the sea, have fallen, and the world is becoming one world, and the nations are becoming one people, and the strong tribes are helping the weak ones to make their government safe, their laws just, their liberties secure. All this is history. All these are facts that cannot be denied, that cannot be minimized, that can only be confessed; verily, the leaven has worked; verily, the light could not be hid. Events prove that Christianity has a self-propagating power.—Newell Dwight Hillis.

If I could give you information of my life it would be to show how a woman of very ordinary ability has been led by God in strange and unaccustomed paths to do in his service what he has done in her. And if I could tell you all, you would see how God has done all, and I nothing. I have worked hard, very hard, that is all; and I have never refused God anything.—Florence Nightingale.

I dimly guess from blessings known of greater out of sight.—Whittier.

Paul's Charge to Timothy.

II Tim. 3:14-4:8. June 21, 1903.

Timothy as a youth had rare advantages for religious training. His grandmother, Lois, and his mother, Eunice, were both pious and faithfully taught him the word of God. He sustained to Paul peculiar and tender relations. Paul was his spiritual father and gave him much instruction and training for the Gospel ministry. The 2 Epistle to Timothy was written by the apostle from Rome, near the time of his martyrdom and contains many truths and counsels, useful not only to Timothy, but to all engaged in publishing Gospel tidings. The passage before us presents three most important topics.

1. Paul's Testimony to the Scriptures.—The apostle affirms that Timothy should continue in the tidings learned on account of the excellent character of his mother and grandmother from whom he had learned them. He also asserts that "the Holy Scriptures which he had known from a child, were able to make him wise unto salvation, through faith in Christ Jesus." He further declares that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." He thus sanctions the Divine origin and authority of all the Scriptures that were deemed inspired in his day and states distinctly their manifold uses in settling creed and regulating conduct. He also testifies that the minister of the Gospel or the man of God "is complete and thoroughly furnished unto all good works," just in proportion to his practical acquaintance with the word of God.

What valuable testimony to the Scriptures do we find here? They make wise unto salvation even children faithfully taught by parents. They are all inspired and have multiplied in precious uses. They qualify the minister of the Word for all his functions and are essential to his highest success in serving God and man.

2. The Duties Enjoined on Timothy.—Paul proceeds to charge Timothy in view of his responsibility at the judgment seat of Christ to discharge with fidelity his ministerial duties. He urges him to "Preach the Word." As a herald he is intrusted with a message which he must faithfully deliver. He should preach not of himself, nor secular knowledge, but the Word of God which is able to save the soul. He should be diligent in doing this at stated seasons and at all times. He should proclaim the word in different forms as needed, as reproof, rebuke, exhortation and doctrine, with long-suffering patience. He must do this because some men would not endure sound doctrine, but moved by their own lusts, would multiply for themselves teachers tickling their ears with new things.

He intimates that such erroneous teachers would win disciples, turning them away from the truth and into fables. Amid such defections, Paul enjoins upon Timothy "Watchfulness." He must watch against evil and for the truth and for souls. He urges him to "endure afflictions," to encounter them as a servant of God, bearing them patiently and being developed by them. He charges him to do the work not only of a pastor, but of an evangelist and to make "full proof of his ministry by diligent toil."

3. Paul's Career and Reward.—Regarding his life as a sacrifice for Christ, Paul says: "I am now ready to be offered," the victim is prepared for the altar. About to leave the shores of time for the realm of eternity, he declares "The time of my departure is at hand." Looking back over his past life he exclaims "I have fought a good fight."

Cheerfulness is like money well expended in charity; the more we dispense of it, the greater our possession. —Victor Hugo.

Christ in Our Cities.

Acts 18:1-11; Luke 19:41-44; Matt. 11:23, 24. Topic for June 28.

Some one has said: "God made the country, but man made the city." What God made was perfect in all its parts, but man always makes a bungle of whatever he undertakes.

When one goes into a large city and views it superficially, he is apt to say that it is all grand. The first sight of a great city with its teeming thousands of people and its great sky-scraping buildings is apt to give one the impression of greatness and grandeur. One may stay for months in a city and not know anything about its real life when the months are gone. Possibly the thought that people are thrown together daily for years and yet do not know each other is one of the strangest facts that is brought to the notice of the stranger in a city.

But the real life of a city is the part which it is hard to get at. Oftentimes the very people who have spent all their lives in a great city are the most ignorant about it.

There are many reasons why the life in a city is so very different from life in the rural districts.

Great masses of people cannot be thrown together without causing conditions which cannot prevail in any other way. When people come to town to make their home, they lose their identity to a greater or less degree. One person in a hundred may be an important factor, but one person in tens of thousands is nothing. People who in the country were influential people in the community and in the Church, move to town and they are never heard from more. The country may develop the man with one talent, but seldom is the one-talented individual developed in a city.

In the city ordinarily people become like those with whom they are thrown. If their lot happens to fall with the virtuous and the good, then whatever is good in the new-comer is developed and possibly does not suffer from the transplanting. But too often, the humble and obscure are lost in the crowd, and in the course of time they go with the crowd.

In the country nearly everyone has a church affiliation. In the city where the churches are composed of people coming from a crowded community for blocks around, they are strangers to each other and when they meet on the Sabbath day they have seemingly little in common. This being true, people who move to town and do not form a church connection in the first few weeks of their sojourn in the new surroundings, do not form that connection at all.

The result is demoralizing. Jesus Christ is not the important factor in their lives that He once was.

Then there are so many other attractions in the city. Life is more or less of a whirl. Those who are used to life in the open, miss the fresh air of the country and when the Lord's day comes around, they find the fields more inviting to them than the Lord's house.

But in addition to this, the devil loves a crowd and therefore he is in the city with all the power he can command. One's life is lived among multitudes where each act is not scrutinized and the devil makes use of this fact to lead people into sins which they would not think of committing when under the gaze of neighbors and friends who had been known for years.

For all these reasons it is hard to get any tight grip on the masses in our cities. Because of the difficulties in the way, many who would do good resort to machine methods instead of the plain practical preaching of the gospel. We need to always keep in mind that the gospel of Christ is "the power of God unto salvation." Let us do all that we can to keep people up to the same standard of living in the midst of the multitude that they would adopt among their home friends.

President Roosevelt on Methodism.

I am glad to have the chance of addressing this representative body of the great Church which Wesley founded, on the occasion of commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of his birth. America, moreover, has a peculiar proprietary claim on Wesley's memory, for it is on our continent that the Methodist Church has received its greatest development. In the days of our colonial life Methodism was not on the whole a great factor in the religious and social life of the people. The Congregationalists were supreme throughout most of New England; the Episcopalians on the seaboard from New York southward; while the Presbyterian congregations were most numerous along what was then the entire Western frontier; and the Quaker, Catholic, and Dutch Reformed Churches each had developments in special places. The great growth of the Methodist Church, like the great growth of the Baptist Church, began at about the time of the Revolutionary war. To-day my theme is purely Methodism.

Since the days of the Revolution not only has the Methodist Church increased greatly in the old communities of the thirteen original States, but it has played a peculiar and prominent part in the pioneer growth of our country and has in consequence assumed a position of immense importance throughout the vast region west of the Alleghanies which has been added to our nation since the days when the Continental Congress first met.

Great Work of the Pioneers.—For a century after the Declaration of Independence the greatest work of our people, with the exception only of the work of self-preservation under Lincoln, was the work of the pioneers as they took possession of this continent. During that century we pushed westward from the Alleghanies to the Pacific, southward to the Gulf and the Rio Grande, and also took possession of Alaska. The work of advancing our boundary, of pushing the frontier across forest and desert and mountain chain, was the great typical work of our nation; and the men who did it—the frontiersmen, the pioneers, the backwoodsmen, plainmen, mountain men—formed a class by themselves. It was an iron task, which none but men of iron soul and iron body could do. The men who carried it to a successful conclusion had characters strong alike for good and for evil. Their rugged natures made them powers who served light or darkness with equal intensity; and together with heroic traits they had those evil and dreadful tendencies which are but too apt to be found in characters of heroic possibilities. Such men make the most efficient servants of the Lord if their abounding vitality and energy are directed aright; and if misdirected their influence is equally potent against the cause of Christianity and true civilization. In the hard and cruel life of the border, with its grim struggle against the forbidding forces of wild nature and wilder men, there was much to pull the frontiersman down. If left to himself, without moral teaching and moral guidance, without any of the influences that tend toward the uplifting of man and the subduing of the brute within him, sad would have been his, and therefore our, fate. From this fate we have been largely rescued by the fact that together with the rest of the pioneers went the pioneer preachers; and all honor be given to the Methodists for the great proportion of these pioneer preachers whom they furnished.

Part Played by the Preachers.—These preachers were of the stamp of old Peter Cartwright—men who suffered and overcame every hardship in common with their flock, and who in addition tamed the wild and fierce spirits of their fellow pioneers. It was not a task that could have been accomplished by men desirous to live in the soft places of the earth and to walk easily on life's journey. They had to possess the spirit of the martyrs; but not of martyrs who could oppose only passive endurance to wrong. The pioneer preacher warred against the forces of spiritual evil with the same fiery zeal and energy that they and their fellows showed in the conquest of the rugged continent. They had in them the heroic spirit, the spirit that scorns ease if it must be purchased by failure to do duty, the spirit that courts risk and a life of hard endeavor if the goal to be reached is really worth attaining. Great is our debt to these men and scant the patience we need show toward their critics. At times they seemed hard and narrow to those whose training and surroundings had saved them from similar temptations; and they have been criticised, as all men, whether missionaries, soldiers, explorers, or frontier settlers, are criticised when they go forth to do the rough work that must inevitably be done by those who act as the first harbingers, the first heralds, of civilization in the world's dark places. It is easy for those who stay at home in comfort, who never have to see humanity in the raw, or to strive against the dreadful naked forces which appear clothed, hidden and subdued in civilized life—it is easy for such to criticise the men who, in rough fashion, and amid grim surroundings make ready the way for the higher life that is to come afterwards; but let us all remember that the untempted and the effortless should be cautious in passing too heavy judgment upon their brethren who may show hardness, who may be guilty of shortcomings, but who nevertheless do the great deeds by which mankind advances. These pioneers of Methodism had the strong, militant virtues which go to the accomplishment of such great deeds. Now and then they betrayed the shortcomings natural to men of their type; but their shortcomings seem small indeed when we place beside them the magnitude of the work they achieved.

The Growth of Methodism.—And now, friends, in celebrating the wonderful growth of Methodism, in rejoicing at the good it has done to the country and to mankind, I need hardly ask a body like this to remember that the greatness of the fathers becomes to the children a shameful thing if they use it only as an excuse for inaction instead of as a spur to effort for noble aims. I speak to you not only as Methodists—I speak to you as American citizens. The pioneer days are over. We now all of us form parts of a great civilized nation, with a complex industrial and social life and infinite possibilities both for good and for evil. The instruments with which, and the surroundings in which, we work have changed immeasurably from what they were in the days when the rough backwoods preachers ministered to the moral and spiritual needs of their rough backwoods congregations. But if we are to succeed, the spirit in which we do our work must be the same as the spirit in which they did theirs. These men drove forward and fought their way upward, to success, because their sense of duty was in their hearts, in the very marrow of their bones. It was not with them something to be considered as a mere adjunct to their theology, standing separate and apart from their daily life. They had it with them week days as well as Sundays. They did not divorce the spiritual from the secular. They did not have one kind of conscience for one side of their lives and another for another.

We Must Face Facts as They Are.—Well, if we are to succeed as a nation we must have the same spirit in us. We must be absolutely practical, of course, and must face facts as they are. The pioneer preachers of Methodism could not have held their own for a fortnight if they had not shown an intense practicality of spirit, if they had not possessed the broadest and deepest sympathy for, and understanding of, their fellow-men. But in addition to the hard, practical common sense needed by each of us in life, we must have a lift toward lofty things or we shall be lost, individually, and collectively as a nation. Life is not easy, and least of all is it easy for either the man or the nation that aspires to do great deeds. In the century opening the play of the infinitely far-reaching forces and tendencies which go to make up our social system bids fair to be even fiercer in its activity than in the century which has just closed. If during this century the men of high and fine moral sense show themselves weaklings; if they possess only that cloistered virtue which shudders from contact with the raw facts of actual life; if they dare not go down into the hurly-burly where the men of might contend for the mastery; if they stand aside from the pressure and conflict; then as surely as the sun rises and sets all of our great material progress, all the multiplication of the physical agencies which tend for our comfort and enjoyment, will go for naught and our civilization will become a brutal sham and mockery. If we are to do as I believe we shall and will do, if we are to advance in broad humanity, in kindliness, in the spirit of brotherhood, exactly as we advance in our conquest over the hidden forces of nature, it must be by developing strength in virtue and virtue in strength, by breeding and training men who shall be both good and strong, both gentle and valiant—men who scorn wrong-doing and who, at the same time, have both the courage and the strength to strive mightily for the right. Wesley said he did not intend to leave all the good tunes to the service of the devil. He accomplished so much for mankind because he also refused to leave the stronger, manlier qualities to be availed of only in the interest of evil. The Church he founded has throughout its career been a Church for the poor as well as for the rich and has known no distinction of persons. It has been a Church whose members, if true to the teachings of its founder, have sought for no greater privilege than to spend and be spent in the interest of the higher life, who have prided themselves, not on shirking rough duty, but on undertaking it and carrying it to a successful conclusion.

Scriptural Christianity.

A sermon preached by the Rev. John Wesley, M. A., at St. Mary's, Oxford, England, before the University, on August 24, 1744.

"Whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning; if the sword come and take him away, his blood shall be upon his own head."—Ezek 33:4.

"And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost."—Acts 4:31.

The same expression occurs in the second chapter, where we read, "When the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all" (the apostles, with the women and the mother of Jesus and His brethren) "with one accord, in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." One immediate effect thereof was, "They began to speak with other tongues;" in so much that both the Parthians, Medes, Elamites, and the other strangers who "came together, when this was noised abroad, heard them speak, in their several tongues, the wonderful works of God"

In this chapter we read that when the apostles and brethren had been praying and praising God, "the place was shaken where they were assembled together, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." Not that we find visible appearance here, such as had been in the former instance; nor are we informed that the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost were then given to all or any of them—such as the "gift of healing, of working other miracles, of prophecy, of discerning spirits, the speaking with divers kinds of tongues, and the interpretation of tongues."

Whether these gifts of the Holy Ghost were designed to remain in the Church throughout all ages, and whether or no they will be restored at the nearer approach of the "restitution of all things," are questions which it is not needful to decide. But it is needful to observe this, that even in the infancy of the Church, God divided them with a sparing hand. Were all even then prophets? Were all workers of miracles! Had all the gifts of healing? Did all speak with tongues? No, in no wise. Perhaps not one in a thousand. Probably none but the teachers in the Church, and only some of them. It was, therefore, for a more excellent purpose than this that "they were all filled with the Holy Ghost."

It was to give them (what none can deny to be essential to all Christians in all ages) the mind which was in Christ, those holy fruits of the Spirit, which whosoever hath not is none of His; to fill them with "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness" to endure them with faith (perhaps it might be rendered fidelity), with meekness, and temperance; to enable them to crucify the flesh, with its affections and lusts, its passions and desires, and, in consequence of that inward change, to fulfill all outward righteousness, to "walk as Christ also walked," "in the work of faith, in the patience of hope, the labor of love."

Without busying ourselves, then, in curious, needless inquiries touching those extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, let us take a nearer view of these His ordinary fruits, which we are assured will remain throughout all ages—of that great work of God among the children of men, which we are used to express by one word, "Christianity;" not as it implies a set of opinions, a system of doctrines, but as it refers to men's hearts and lives. And this Christianity it may be useful to consider under three distinct views:

1. As beginning to exist in individuals
2. As spreading from one to another.
3. As covering the earth.

I design to close these considerations with a plain, practical application:

1. And first let us consider Christianity in its rise as beginning to exist in individuals.

Suppose, then, one of those who heard the apostle Peter preaching repentance and remission of sins was pricked to the heart, was convinced of sin, repented, and then believed in Jesus. By this faith of the operation of God, which was the very substance or subsistence of things hoped for, the demonstrative evidence of invisible things, he instantly received the spirit of adoption, whereby he now cried, "Abba, Father." Now first it was that he could call Jesus Lord by the Holy Ghost, the Spirit itself bearing witness with his spirit that he was a child of God. Now it was that he could truly say, "I live not, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by faith in the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me."

This, then, was the very essence of his faith, a divine evidence or conviction of the love of God the Father, through the Son of His love, to him a sinner, now accepted in the Beloved. And "being justified by faith, he had peace with God," yea, "the peace of God ruling in his heart;" a peace which, passing all understanding, all barely rational conception, kept his heart and mind from all doubt and fear, through the knowledge of Him in whom he had believed. He could not therefore "be afraid of any evil tidings," for his "heart stood fast believing in the Lord." He feared not what man could do unto him, knowing the very hairs of his head were all numbered. He feared not all the powers of darkness, whom God was daily bruising under his feet. Least of all was he afraid to die; nay, he desired to "depart and to be with Christ"; who "through death had destroyed him that had the power of death, even the devil, and delivered them who, through fear of death, were all their lifetime (till then) subject to bondage"

His soul therefore magnified the Lord, and his spirit rejoiced in God his Saviour. "He rejoiced in Him with joy unspeakable, who had reconciled him to God, even the Father;" "in whom he had redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins." He rejoiced in that witness of God's Spirit with his spirit that he was a child of God; and more abundantly "in hope of the glory of God;" in hope of the glorious image of God, and full renewal of his soul in righteousness and true holiness; and in hope of that crown of glory, that "inheritance, incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away."

"The love of God was also shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost, which was given unto him." "Because he was a son, God had sent forth the Spirit of His Son into his heart, crying, Abba, Father!" And that filial love of God was continually increased by the witness he had in himself of God's pardoning love to him; by "beholding what manner of love it was which the Father had bestowed upon him, that he should be called a child of God." So that God was the desire of his eyes and the joy of his heart; his portion in time and in eternity.

He that thus loved God could not but love his brother also; and "not in word only, but in deed and in truth." "If God," said he, "so loved us, we ought also to love one another;" yea, every soul of man, as "the mercy of God is over all His works." Agreeably here to the affection of this lover of God embraced all mankind for His sake; not excepting those whom he had never seen in the flesh, or those of whom he knew nothing more than that they were "the offspring of God," for whose souls His Son had died; not excepting the evil and unthankful, and, least of all, his enemies—those who hated or persecuted or despitefully used him for his Master's sake. These had a peculiar place, both in his heart and in his prayers. He loved them "even as Christ loved us."

And "love is not puffed up." It abases to the dust every soul wherein it dwells; accordingly he was lowly of heart, little, mean, and vile in his own eyes. He neither sought nor received the praise of men, but that which cometh of God only. He was meek and long suffering, gentle to all, and easy to be entreated. Faithfulness and truth never forsook him; they were "bound about his neck, and wrote on the table of his heart." By the same Spirit he was enabled to be temperate in all things, refraining his soul even as a weaned child. He was "crucified to the world, and the world crucified to him;" superior to "the desire of the flesh, the desire of the eye, and the pride of life." By the same almighty love was he saved both from passion and pride, from lust and vanity, from ambition and covetousness; and from every temper which was not in Christ.

It may easily be believed he who had this love in his heart would work no evil to his neighbor. It was impossible for him knowingly and designedly to do harm to any man. He was at the greatest distance from cruelty and wrong, from any unjust or unkind action. With the same care did he "set a watch before his mouth, and keep the door of his lips," lest he should offend in tongue either against justice or against mercy or truth. He put away all lying, falsehood, and fraud; neither was guile found in his mouth. He spake evil of no man; nor did an unkind word ever come out of his lips.

And, as he was deeply sensible of the truth of that word, "without Me ye can do nothing," and consequently of the need he had to be watered of God every moment; so he continued daily in all the ordinances of God, the stated channels of His grace to man: "in the apostles' doctrine," or teaching, receiving that food of the soul with all readiness of heart; in "the breaking of bread," which he found to be the communion of the body of Christ; and "in the prayers" and praises offered up by the great congregation. And thus he daily "grew in grace," increasing in strength, in the knowledge and love of God.

But it did not satisfy him barely to abstain from doing evil. His soul was athirst to do good. The language of his heart continually was, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." My Lord went about doing good, and shall not I tread in His steps? As he had opportunity, therefore, if he could do no good of a higher kind, he fed the hungry, clothed the naked, helped the fatherless or stranger, visited and assisted them that were sick or in prison. He gave all his goods to feed the poor. He rejoiced to labor or suffer for them, and whereinsoever he might profit another, there especially to "deny himself." He counted nothing too dear to part with for them, as well remembering the word of his Lord, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

Such was Christianity in its rise. Such was a Christian in ancient days. Such was every one of those who, when they heard the threatenings of the chief priests and elders, "lifted up their voice to God with one accord, and were all filled with the Holy Ghost. The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul." (So did the love of Him in whom they had believed constrain them to love one another.) "Neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things in common." So fully were they crucified to the world, and the world crucified to them! "And they continued steadfastly with one accord in the apostles' doctrine, and in the breaking of bread, and in prayer." "And great grace was upon them all; neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses, sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold and laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need."

2. Let us take a view, in the second place, of this Christianity as spreading from one to another, and so gradually making its way into the world: for such was the will of God concerning it, who did not "light a candle to put it under a bushel, but that it might give light to all that were in the house." And this our Lord had declared to His first disciples, "Ye are the salt of the earth," "the light of the world;" at the same time that He gave that general command, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father, which is in heaven."

And, indeed, supposing a few of these lovers of mankind to see "the whole world lying in wickedness," can we believe they would be unconcerned at the sight, at the misery, of those for whom their Lord died? Would not their bowels yearn over them and their hearts melt away for very trouble? Could they then stand idle all the day long, even were there no command from Him whom they loved? Rather would they not labor, by all possible means, to pluck some of these brands out of the burning? Undoubtedly they would; they would spare no pains to bring back whomsoever they could of those poor "sheep that had gone astray, to the great Shepherd and Bishop of their souls."

So the Christians of old did. They labored, having opportunity, "to do good unto all men," warning them to flee from the wrath to come; now, now to escape the damnation of hell. They declared, "The times of ignorance God winked at; but now He calleth all men everywhere to repent." They cried aloud, Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; "so iniquity shall not be your ruin." They reasoned with them of temperance and righteousness or justice, of the virtues opposite to their reigning sins, and of judgment to come; of the wrath of God, which would surely be executed on evil-doers in that day when He should judge the world.

They endeavored herein to speak to every man severally as he had need. To the careless, to those who lay unconcerned in darkness and in the shadow of death, they thundered, "Awake, thou that sleepest: arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light;" but to those who were already awakened out of sleep, and groaning under a sense of the wrath of God, their language was, "We have an Advocate with the Father; He is the propitiation for our sins." Meantime those who had believed they provoked to love and to good works; to patient continuance in well-doing; and to abound more and more in that holiness without which no man can see the Lord.

And their labor was not in vain in the Lord. His word ran, and was glorified. It grew mightily and prevailed. But so much the more did offenses prevail also. The world in general was offended, "because they testified of it, that the works thereof were evil." The men of pleasure were offended, not only because these men were made as it were, to reprove their thoughts;—"He professeth," said they, "to have the knowledge of God; he calleth himself the child of the Lord; his life is not like other men's; his ways are of another fashion; he abstaineth from our ways, as from filthiness; he maketh his boast, that God is his father"—but much more, be-ause so many of their companions were taken away, and would no more run with them to the same excess of riot. The men of reputation were offended because, as the Gospel spread, they declined in the esteem of the people; and because many no longer dared to give them flattering titles or to pay men the homage due to God only. The men of trade called one another together, and said, "Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth. But ye see and hear that these men have persuaded and turned away much people. So that his our craft is in danger to be set at naught." Above all, the men of religion, so called, the men of outside religion, "the saints of the world," were offended, and ready at every opportunity to cry out. "Men of Israel, help! we have found these men pestilent fellows, movers of sedition throughout the world." "These are the men that teach all men, everywhere, against the people, and against the law."

Thus it was that the heavens grew black with clouds and the storm gathered a main; for the more Christianity spread and more hurt was done in the account of those who received it not; and the number increased of those who were more and more enraged at these "men who thus turned the world upside down;" inso-much that more and more cried out, "Away with such fellows from the earth; it is not fit that they should live;" yea, and sincerely believed that whosoever should kill them would do God service.

Meanwhile they did not fail to cast out their name as evil; so that this "sect was everywhere spoken against." Men said all manner of evil of them, even as had been done of the prophets that were before them. And whatsoever any would affirm others would believe. So that offenses grew as the stars of heaven for multitude. And hence arose, at the time foreordained of the Father, persecution in all its forms. Some for a season suffered only shame and reproach, some "the spoiling of their goods;" "some had trial of mocking and scourging; some of bonds and imprisonment;" and others "resisted unto blood."

Now it was that the pillars of hell were shaken and the kingdom of God spread more and more. Sinners were everywhere "turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." He gave His children "such a mouth, and such wisdom, as all their adversaries could not resist;" and their lives were of equal force with their words. But, above all, their sufferings spake to all the world. They "approved themselves the servants of God, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors; in perils in the sea, in perils in the wilderness, in weariness and painfulness, in hunger and thirst, in cold and nakedness." And when, having fought the good fight, they were led as sheep to the slaughter, and offered up on the sacrifice and service of their faith, then the blood of each found a voice, and the heathen owned, "He being dead yet speaketh."

Thus did Christianity spread itself in the earth. But how soon did the tares appear with the wheat, and the mystery of iniquity work as well as the mystery of godliness! How soon did Satan find a seat even in the temple of God, "till the woman fled into the wilderness," and "the faithful were again minished from the children of men!" Here we tread a beaten path; the still increasing corruptions of the succeeding generations have been largely described from time to time by those witnesses God raised up, to show that He had "built His Church upon a Rock, and the gates of hell should not (wholly) prevail against her."

3. But shall we not see greater things than these? Yea, greater than have been yet from the beginning of the world. Can Satan cause the truth of God to fail, or His promises to be of none effect? If not, the time will come when Christianity will prevail over all and cover the earth. Let us stand a little and survey (the third thing which was proposed) this strange sight, a Christian world. Of this the prophets of old inquired and searched diligently; of this the Spirit which was in them testified: "It shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established on the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it. And they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation; neither shall they learn war any more." "In that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people. To it shall the Gentiles seek, and his rest shall be glorious. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set His hand again to recover the remnant of His people; and He shall set up an Ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah, from the four corners of the earth." "The wolf shall then dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. They shall not hurt nor destroy, saith the Lord, in all My holy mountain. For the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

To the same effect are the words of the great apostle, which it is evident have never yet been fulfilled. "Hath God cast away His people? God forbid." "But through their fall salvation is come to the Gentiles." "And if the diminishing of them be the riches of the Gentiles, who much more their fullness?" "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery. That blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in; and so all Israel shall be saved."

Suppose now the fullness of time to be come and the prophecies to be accomplished. What a prospect is this! All is "peace, quietness, and assurance forever." Here is no din of arms, no "confused noise," no "garments rolled in blood." "Destructions are come to a perpetual end;" wars are ceased from the earth. Neither are there any intestine jars remaining; no brother rising up against brother; no country or city divided against itself, and tearing out its own bowels. Civil discord is at an end for evermore, and none is left either to destroy or hurt his neighbor. Here is no oppression to make even the wise man mad; no extortion to grind the face of the poor; no robbery or wrong; no rapine or injustice; for all are "content with such things as they possess." Thus "righteousness and peace have kissed each other;" they have "taken root and filled the land;" "righteousness flourishing out of the earth," and "peace looking down from heaven."

And with righteousness or justice mercy is also found. The earth is no longer full of cruel habitations. The Lord hath destroyed both the bloodthirsty and malicious, the envious and revengeful man. Were there any provocation, there is none that now knoweth to return evil for evil; but indeed there is none that doeth evil, no, not one; for all are harmless as doves. And being filled with peace and joy in believing, and united in one body by one spirit, they all love as brethren, they are all of one heart and of one soul. "Neither saith any of them, that aught of the things which he possesseth is his own." There is none among them that lacketh; for every man loveth his neighbor as himself. And all walk by one rule, "Whatever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do unto them."

It follows that no unkind word can ever be heard among them, no strife of tongues, no contention of anykind, nor ailing or evil speaking; but everyone "opens his mouth with wisdom, and in his tongue there is the law of kindness." Equally incapable are they of fraud or guile; their love is without dissimulation; their words are always the just expression of their thoughts, opening a window into their breast, that whosoever desires may look into their hearts, and see that only love and God are there.

Thus where the Lord omnipotent taketh to Himself. His mighty power and reigneth doth He "subdue all things to Himself," cause every heart to overflow with love, and fill every mouth with praise. "Happy are the people that are in such a case: yea, blessed are the people who have the Lord for their God." "Arise, shine (saith the Lord), for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." "Thou hast known that I, the Lord, am thy Saviour, and thy Redeemer, the mighty God of Jacob. I have made thy officers peace, and thy exacters righteousness. Violence shall no more be heard in the land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders: but thou shalt call thy walls salvation, and thy gates praise." "Thy people are all righteous; they shall inherit the land forever; the branch of My planting, the work of My hands, that I may be glorified." "The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory."

4. Having thus briefly considered Christianity as beginning, as going on, and as covering the earth, it remains only that I should close the whole with a plain, practical application.

And first I would ask, Where does this Christianity now exist? Where, I pray, do the Christians live? Which is the country the inhabitants whereof are all thus filled with the Holy Ghost? Are all of one heart and of one soul? Cannot suffer one among them to lack anything, but continually give to every man as he hath need? Who, one and all, have the love of God filling their hearts, and constraining them to love their neighbor as themselves? Who have all "put on bowels of mercy, humbleness of mind, gentleness, long-suffering?" who offend not in any kind, either by word or deed, against justice, mercy, or truth; but in every point do unto all men as they would these should do unto them? With what propriety can we term any a Christian country which does not answer this description? Why, then, let us confess we have never yet seen a Christian country upon earth.

I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God, if ye do account me a mad man or a fool, yet as a fool bear with me. It is utterly needful that some one should use greater plainness of speech toward you. It is more especially needful at this time, for who knoweth but it is the last? Who knoweth how soon the righteous Judge may say, "I will no more be entreated for this people." "Though Noah, Daniel, and Job were in the land, they should but deliver their own souls." And who will use this plainness if I do not? Therefore I, even I, will speak. And I adjure you, by the living God, that ye steel not your breasts against receiving a blessing at my hand. Do not say in your hearts, Non persuadebis, etiamsi persuaseris, or, in other words, Lord, Thou shalt not send by whom Thou wilt send: let me rather perish in my blood than be saved by this man!

Brethren, "I am persuaded better things of you, though I thus speak." Let me ask you, then, in tender love and in the spirit of meekness, Is this city a Christian city? Is Christianity, scriptural Christianity, found here? Are we, considered as a community of men, so "filled with the Holy Ghost?" as to enjoy in our hearts and show forth in our lives the genuine fruits of that Spirit? Are all the magistrates, all heads and governors of colleges and halls, and their respective societies (not to speak of the inhabitants of the town), "of one heart and one soul?" Is "the love of God shed abroad in our hearts?" Are our tempers the same that were in Him? And are our lives agreeable thereto? Are we "holy as He who hath called us is holy, in all manner of conversation?"

I entreat you to observe that here are no peculiar notions now under consideration; that the question moved is not concerning doubtful opinions of one kind or another, but concerning the undoubted, fundamental branches (if there be any such) of our common Christianity. And for the decision thereof I appeal to your own consciences, guided by the word of God. He therefore that is not condemned by his own heart let him go free.

In the fear, then, and in the presence of the great God before whom both you and I shall shortly appear, I pray you that are in authority over us, whom I reverence for your office's sake, to consider (and not after the manner of dissemblers with God), are you "filled with the Holy Ghost?" Are you living portraitures of Him whom ye are appointed to represent among men? "Ye have said ye are gods," ye magistrates and rulers; ye are by office so nearly allied to the God of heaven! In your several stations and degrees ye are to show forth unto us "the Lord our Governor." Are all the thoughts of your hearts, tempers and desires suitable to your high calling? Are all your words like unto those which come out of the mouth of God? Is there in all your actions dignity and love? A greatness which words cannot express, which can flow only from a heart full of God, and yet consistent with the character of "man that is a worm, and the son of man that is a worm."

Ye venerable men, who are more especially called to form the tender minds of youth, to dispel thence the shades of ignorance and error, and train them up to be wise unto salvation, are you "filled with the Holy Ghost?" with all those "fruits of the Spirit" which your important office so indispensably requires? Is your heart whole with God? Full of love and zeal to set up His kingdom on earth? Do you continually remind those under your care that the one rational end of all our studies is to know, love, and serve "the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom He hath sent?" Do you inculcate upon them day by day that love alone never faileth (whereas, whether there be tongues, they shall fail, or philosophical knowledge, it shall vanish away); and that without love all learning is but splendid ignorance, pompous folly, vexation of spirit? Has all you teach an actual tendency to the love of God and of all mankind for His sake? Have you an eye to this end in whatever you prescribe, touching the kind, the manner, and the measure of their studies; desiring and laboring that, wherever the lot of these young soldiers of Christ is cast, they may be so many burning and shining lights, adorning the Gospel of Christ in all things? And permit me to ask, Do you put forth all your strength in the vast work you have undertaken? Do you labor herein with all your might? Exerting every faculty of your soul? Using every talent which God hath lent you, and that to the uttermost of your power?

Let it not be said that I speak here as if all under your care were intended to be clergymen. Not so; I only speak as if they were all intended to be Christians. But what example is set them by us who enjoy the beneficence of our forefathers? by fellows, students, scholars; more especially those who are of some rank and eminence? Do ye, brethren, abound in the fruits of the Spirit, in lowliness of mind, in self-denial and mortification, in seriousness and composure of spirit, in patience, meekness, sobriety, temperance; and in unwearied, restless endeavors to do good in every kind unto all men, to relieve their outward wants, and to bring their souls to the true knowledge and love of God? Is this the general character of fellows of colleges? I fear it is not. Rather have not pride and haughtiness of spirit, impatience and peevishness, sloth and indolence, gluttony and sensuality, and even proverbial uselessness, been objected to us, perhaps not always by our enemies, nor wholly without ground? O, that God would roll away this reproach from us, that the very memory of it might perish forever!

Many of us are more immediately consecrated to God, called to minister in holy things. Are we then patterns to the rest "in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity?" Is there written on our forehead and on our heart, "Holiness to the Lord?" From what motives did we enter upon this office? Was it indeed with a single eye "to serve God, trusting that we were inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost, to take upon us this ministration, for the promoting of His glory and the edifying of His people?" And have we "clearly determined, by God's grace, to give ourselves wholly to this office?" Do we forsake and set aside, as much as in us lies, all worldly cares and studies this way? Are we apt to teach? Are we taught of God, that we may be able to teach others also? Do we know God? Do we know Jesus Christ?

 bath "God revealed His Son in us?" And bath He made us able ministers of the new covenant? Where, then, are the "seals of our apostleship?" Who that were dead in trespasses and sins have been quickened by our word? Have we a burning zeal to save souls from death, so that for their sake we often forget even to eat our bread? Do we speak plain, "by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God?" Are we dead to the world and the things of the world, "laying up all our treasure in heaven?" Do we lord over God's heritage? Or are we the least, the servants of all? When we hear the reproach of Christ does it sit heavy upon us? Or do we rejoice therein? When we are smitten on the one cheek do we resent it? Are we impatient of affronts? Or do we turn the other also; not resisting the evil, but overcoming evil with good? Have we a bitter zeal, inciting us to strive sharply and passionately with them that are out of the way? Or is our zeal the flame of love, so as to direct all our words with sweetness, lowliness, and meekness of wisdom?

Echoes from the Lexington Assembly.

(Concluded)

And in connection with the waste of precious time, let me briefly allude to a figure always prominent in every meeting, and that is the Assembly Bore. As there is usually more than one of him, and as no individual of this species ever imagines that he could be the person spoken of, I may describe him with some particularity. We will call him for want of a better name, Young Lochinvar. One of the principal things he brings to the Assembly is a sonorous voice, and the sound of it is charming in his own ears. By the time the Assembly is half over every tone of that voice, every gesture and look of the countenance behind the voice is painfully familiar. Now there is a nemesis which waits for every man who wears out the patience of a deliberative body. There comes a time when some question is up in which he is deeply interested, and upon which he might have spoken in such a way as to influence the decision of it. But when this time comes he speaks indeed, just as he has spoken on every other matter great and small, but he is speaking to the empty walls. A few very conscientious brethren listen with weary patience, the rest read the church papers, or crack jokes, the burden of which is, how many times, all told,—has been on his feet during this Assembly, and is there not some good way to get him to heaven soon, so that he will never inflict on any other Assembly what this one has suffered. I think the members of the Assembly will agree that in this case nemesis fell upon the offender somewhere during Friday night's session.

Somewhere in Trevelyan's Life of Macaulay, he quotes a description of a struggle on the floor of Parliament. "When hungry Greek throttled hungry Greek on the floor of St. Stephens, until the loser cried, 'hold, the place is thine!'"

Something of this unpleasant impression was left on the Assembly and the Church by a struggle over the collections between the secretaries. Everybody knows, of course, that these brethren have no personal or selfish interest in the matter, and they are simply contending for what they conceive to be the interest of the causes committed to their trust.

But if they will take advice from the son of a lawyer, they will see to it that every case of this kind is settled out of court.

If the nation which has no history is blessed in its rulers, the church court which has no parliamentary tangles is blessed in its moderator. Only those who have seen the time wasted in needless debate and the interminable wrangling over many points of procedure when a poor parliamentarian is in the chair, can appreciate what it means to say that this Assembly went through without a parliamentary hitch. Not even the threat of such a tangle occurred except once, and that was promptly resolved by a simple suggestion from the moderator. Of course there were times of excitement and animated debate and struggles for the floor, but the figure which stands out prominently in the memory of such scenes, is the venerable Moderator standing gavel in hand, erect and unmoved amidst the turmoil. "Like some tall cliff, that rears its awful form, Springs from the vale, and midway leaves the storm: Though round its base the battling clouds are spread, Eternal sunshine settles on its head."

The New Plan of Home Missions.

At the last meeting of the General Assembly, the ad interim committee submitted its report on Home Missions, which was adopted in full except the modification of one section relating to the constitution of the committee.

Some have expressed the opinion that the new plan does not differ essentially from that which has been in operation for the past ten years; but a careful comparison will show very material differences between the two.

1. The former plan was local in its benefits. Arkansas, Florida, Texas, Indian Territory, etc., were named as the sphere of operations, and no other parts of the church could expect assistance except in very special cases.

The new plan adopted enlarges the sphere of operations to embrace the whole, making the Assembly's work to stand for all the destitutions of the whole church, "for the purpose of aiding the weaker Presbyteries and frontier districts in the various Synods," the only preference being "the new territory and unorganized sections of the West."

According to this plan, any weak Presbytery may apply for aid as well as Arkansas, Florida and Texas which aid is to be limited only by the ability of the committee considering all the applications. Local Home Missions will be pressed with unabated vigor, and the Assembly's committee will supplement the efforts of the weaker and more destitute sections. Instead of there being no difference, it will be found quite radical in its effects.

2. As to the Constitution of the Executive committee the change is also marked. Under the former plan the committee was local, being confined to Atlanta. The ad interim committee proposed one representative from each Synod.

The action taken by the Assembly was a compromise between the two. It reduced the number resident in Atlanta, and added the Synodical Chairmen of two adjacent Synods together with several prominent ministers in the Synod of Georgia outside of Atlanta. This new plan constitutes the committee exactly as the Executive committee of Foreign Missions is constituted. If there is still desire for enlargement, the next Assembly can add several more from other adjacent Synods.

3. A third change which has been made is in reference to donations and loans to churches, which places the matter more on a business basis and throws some additional safe guards around the funds of the Church.

As the appropriations for the present year are already made, the plan cannot go into full operation until the beginning of the new year. This is very fortunate, as it will give all parties time to adjust themselves to the changes. It will also give the Church opportunity to enlarge its contributions to the enlarged sphere of work. Unless the receipts for this work, are much larger the committee will be utterly unable to meet the increased demands upon it. The present amount of $36,000 if spread over the entire destitutions of the Church would be so exceedingly thin as to be of but little benefit to any. If the Church expects to reap much benefit from this change, she must enlarge her efforts and her gifts, so the committee will be able to relieve as far as possible the destitutions. The committee can only administer and use the funds furnished for the needs of the work. May we not, as a Church, "attempt greater things for God and expect greater things from God!"

The Editor's Chat with the Reader.

This is something of a John Wesley number. The Standard is not narrow enough to fail in recognizing the greatness of the Apostle of Methodism and the two hundredth anniversary of his birth seemed a fitting time to indicate the admiration we have always felt for his character and the appreciation we have had for his services to the Church Universal. The Presbyterian Church itself is richer to-day for the lesson of John Wesley's life and work.

However much we may differ from President Roosevelt's politics and policies, there is no doubt about the combined strength and charm of his literary work. We give an address of his on Methodism delivered at one of the Wesley Memorial occasions that have been plentiful this year. The sermon of Wesley reads mighty well, even after the lapse of a hundred and fifty years or so. The gospel is the same for all ages.

Rev. R. A. Lapsley sends the final echoes of the Assembly. The Standard can hardly resist saying that the Synod of North Carolina would not have to hunt far to find the Assembly Bore, or at least one of them. And we are glad of the explanation given by the Secretary of Home Missions of the plan adopted for the future of that great work. It does not seem to have been entirely ruined as our first reports indicated.

SPARTANBURG.—The Thirteenth Commencement of Converse College passed off successfully and pleasantly on Monday, June 13. The baccalaureate sermon was preached the day before in the presence of an immense congregation assembled in the College auditorium, by the Rev. I. D. Bratton, D. D., President of St. Mary's College at Raleigh, N. C., formerly an instructor in Converse College. On Commencement day the Literary address was delivered by the Hon. Locke Craig, of Asheville, N. C., after which, with appropriate remarks, President Robt. P. Pell presented diplomas from the literary department to twenty-five graduates, and also the diploma awarding the degrees of Associate of Music to two young ladies.

President Pell's first year has been attended with satisfactory success, and the prospect of the college was never brighter.

ENOREE PRESBYTERY; Trough Shoals Church.—The dreadful flood which wrought such fearful destruction of the Clifton and Pacolet Cotton Mills in Spartanburg county, S. C., on the 6th inst., swept away the Trough Shoals Church building situated at Pacolet Mills. This congregation, composed entirely of people connected with the cotton mill, and served by the venerable A. A. James, is also in large measure broken up by the scattering of the population consequent upon the utter destruction of two large cotton mills at that place.

The city of Spartanburg was not at all injured by the flood which swept away the magnificent cotton mills at Clifton and Pacolet near by, and the people of the city promptly rallied to the relief of the sufferers at the mill town, contributing thousands of dollars in money and a vast quantity of clothing to supply the immediate wants of those who had been rendered destitute.

Commencement at Chicora College.

Chicora College for young ladies at Greenville, S. C., has just closed one of the most successful years in its history. Rev. J. W. Stagg, D. D., pastor of the First Church, Birmingham, preached the Baccalaureate sermon and also delivered the Commencement address.

Dr. Stagg is a forceful and eloquent speaker and delighted the large audiences assembled in the beautiful auditorium.

Prof. Josef Hagstrom, the accomplished Director of Music, has built up a large class. He is a graduate of the Royal Conservatory, Sockholm, Sweden, and is an eminent teacher.

The School of Expression is in charge of Miss Annie Lowe Jones, whose reputation as a splendid teacher and impersonator extends from New York to Texas. Her class is so full as to tax her strength. The Music and Expression recitals at Commencement, on separate evenings, merited the unstinted praise given them by the crowds that came.

The Art Department under the leadership of Miss Emma Oewell, never appeared to better advantage than at the Art Reception Saturday last, when the walls of the spacious and elegant parlors were covered with the most exquisite paintings in oil, pastel, and water-colors, and with skillfully wrought specimens of pyrography and china. Miss Oewell is a graduate of Julian Academy, Paris, France, and Woman's Art School, Cooper Union, New York. She has been four years at Chicora and her beautiful studio is crowded with pupils.

Monday morning, June 1st, brought the Commencement exercises to a close. There were eleven graduates taking the degree of Baccalaureate of Arts; two taking Baccalaureate of Literature; seven in special schools, and three in the extra branches. Dr. Stagg made an eloquent address on "The Importance of an Education," concluding with a few brief remarks to the graduates on "Enlargement of Circumstances." The school has grown to such an extent that the authorities have deemed it necessary to secure a Lady Principal and for that position Miss Ellen E. Dill has been engaged. Miss Dill has been engaged in this work in Columbia, Rogersville, Tenn., and for the past year was incumbent of the chair of Mathematics in the Presbyterian College for Women at Charlotte. After delivering the medals and diplomas President Preston addressed the graduates, taking for his subject the class motto "The End Not Yet."

During the past session one hundred and sixty-five pupils have been enrolled, of whom eighty are non-resident pupils, representing seven States. Few young colleges in the South have made a finer record.

Greenville is a city of 22,000, located in the Piedmont section of South Carolina in sight of the Blue Ridge, and is noted for its pure water from Paris Mountain, and its salubrious climate. The Presbyterians have builded more wisely than they knew in establishing this splendid school for our daughters. The advantages are not surpassed in older colleges, and the prices are very reasonable. The buildings will be full next year, as they have been for the past two or three years.

MISSOURI.

FARMINGTON.—On Sunday, June 7, 1903, Rev. C. E. Hickok was installed pastor of the Farmington church by a commission of Potosi Presbytery, consisting of Rev. Messrs. A. J. Cheatham, C. W. Latham, G. W. Harlan and Elder A. J. Leathers. A memorable occasion of great interest, as thus far during the 71 years since the organization of this church it has had only two pastors, Rev. Amos H. Rogers, four and a half years, ending April, 1852, and Rev. J. L. Alsworth, a year and two months, ending February, 1902. The outlook of the church is now very encouraging.

FLORIDA AND PERRY.—Mr. Thos. M. Stribling, a student of the Kentucky Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky., has taken charge of these churches for the summer months, and his address until October will be Perry, Mo.

ELMWOOD SEMINARY COMMENCEMENT.—This institution is situated at Farmington, Mo., and is in charge of President F. T. Appleby. After a successful and satisfactory year on part of both teachers and pupils, the Commencement exercises were held from May 29th, to June 2nd. The Baccalaureate sermon was preached by Rev. B. M. Shive, of Campbellville, Ky., and on Commencement day an interesting address was delivered by Dr. J. Addison Smith, of Pattonville, Mo. There were also the usual exhibitions of different departments, the annual concert, the delivery of medals and diplomas. Announcement was also made that Mr. Appleby assisted by the same faculty, who have given such universal satisfaction, would continue in charge of the school. And a local paper in closing its account of the exercises says, "Thus ended one of the most successful years of Elmwood Seminary and one of the most interesting commencement seasons."

VIRGINIA.

ASHLAND.—The Presbyterian Church was crowded Sunday night, May 31st, with members of the various churches of the town, who assembled to hear Rev. Dr. R. Howison preach his farewell sermon. Out of respect to this honored reverend gentleman, services of the other denominations were suspended. Dr. Howison has been the faithful minister of his church here for nearly nine years, and the large gathering who braved the wretched weather gave ample and complete testimony of their love, respect and high esteem.

MONTEREY.—Rev. W. S. Trimble was installed on Saturday and Sunday, June 6th and 7th as pastor of Crab Bottom, Pisgah and Monterey group of Churches.

Rev. L. H. Paul, Rev. Ivanhoe Robertson and Rev. Henry Miller taking part in the services.

FRONT ROYAL.—An adjourned meeting of Winchester Presbytery was held at Front Royal, Va., June 3rd, 1903.

Ministers present, 10, ruling elders 3.

Communication from certain members of the North River Church, asking to be organized into a separate church to be known as the Hanging Rock Presbyterian Church—request granted. Commission to organize said church: Rev. E. D. Washburn, D. D., Rev. R. A. White, Rev. J. S. Sibley. Elders Himelwright of Capon Bridge and I. H. C. Paucake. Time to be fixed by commission.

Commissioners to General Assembly, instead of waiting until next regular meeting of Presbytery to present bill for expenses, are instructed to present itemized statement of expenses to an auditing committee composed of the Treasurer of Presbytery and the stated clerk. The Treasurer is instructed to pay the same, if found correct.

Candidate A. M. Earle licensed to the Gospel Ministry and dismissed to the Presbytery of Abingdon. Licentiate James A. McClure ordained and commission appointed to install him pastor of the Front Royal and Ninevah churches. Commission, Rev. A. G. Link, Rev. H. M. White, D. D., Rev. P. D. Stephenson. Elders, Henry Sommerville and Judge Giles Cook.

Rev. Geo. W. White, D. D. offered his resignation of the pastorate of the Moorefield Church. Rev. Chas. Ghiselin, D. D. offered his resignation of the pastorates of the Shepherdstown and Kearneysville Churches. All these congregations were cited to appear by their commissioner or commissioners at an adjourned meeting of Presbytery to be held in Martinsburg Presbyterian Church, June 30th, 1903, at 3:30 p. m.

Rev. H. M. White, D. D., S. M. Euple and Ruling Elder Jno. Raese, of the Davis Church, were appointed a committee to prepare for fall meeting of Presbytery a memorial of Rev. R. W. Carter.

NORTH CAROLINA.

RALEIGH.—By mistake, the name of Miss Minnie Sparrow, of Begonia, N. C., was omitted from the Honor Roll of Peace Institute. Miss Sparrow's average was 95.87.

Jas. Dinwiddie, President.

HOPEWELL.—A congregational meeting was held at Hopewell church on Sunday, 14th inst., for the purpose of calling a pastor. The Rev. A. J. Craue, of Concord Presbytery, was unanimously elected, and it is hoped that he will see his way clear to come to this important field.

CROSS ROADS.—Six members were received into Cross Roads church on first Sunday, 3 by letter and 3 by examination, one having been received on profession just before. Four of these are heads of families. This makes about 30 additions to this church within the past ten months. They carry on outpost work at three different points of the congregation. Also they have recently covered their neat and commodious church building with slate. R. W. C.

GREENSBORO.—A committee from the First Presbyterian Church of Richmond was here last night in consultation with Rev. Dr. Egbert Smith, of the First Presbyterian Church of Greensboro. It develops to-day that an effort is being made to get him to consent to accept a call to the pastorate of the Richmond Church at a salary of $4,000 a year. All that Dr. Smith would promise the committee was that he would take the matter under advisement. The people of Greensboro, regardless of sect or creed, look upon Dr. Smith as one of the city's most important, valuable and beloved institutions, and the bare possibility of losing him has caused a commotion.—Charlotte Observer, June 10th.

GASTONIA.—Gastonia was the scene of the Twentieth Century work for last week. This place was first visited over two years ago and the present visit was intended mainly as a visit of inspection. The Twentieth Century work was found to be in excellent shape. Several new subscriptions were added to the list, $400 in cash collected and some special contributions arranged. Rev. M. McG. Shields, the pastor, is doing a noble work and is supported in it by a loyal people.

DAVIDSON.—Dr. H. L. Smith spoke in Greenville on last Sabbath in the interest of Davidson. He made the annual address before the literary societies of Newberry College on the 9th inst.

Some slight reference was made in the report of commencement of proposed changes in the church building to be undertaken this summer.

The matter has now received definite form and the work will likely begin by the first week in July and with the understanding that the church will be available for use early in the fall term. The Shearer Biblical Hall, however, has an auditorium that will be an excellent and convenient substitute till the other building is ready. It is proposed to put on an annex and make other changes in the church building at a total cost of about $4,000. The rapid growth in the number of students in both the colleges, the increased attendance at the Sunday-school and the present size of the village congregation, largely in excess of what it was some years ago, have made the enlarging of the church a necessity. As the college itself is directly interested in the matter of providing church privileges for its students and has to make provision against their over-crowding, Dr. Smith has promised to the building fund $1,000 from the Davidson League. The changes proposed are as follows:

The pulpit to be placed on the south side of the present building, back of it a pastor's study, and on one side an organ loft for the new pipe organ, for the part payment of which the gift of a $1,000 is already in Dr. Graham's hands. And it may be said here that the committee in charge are figuring on an instrument that experts say will be a very fine one.

The present site of the pulpit will contain a large central window answering to the one now on the west side, and on either side of this new window will be a smaller one, the window farthest north being in the form of a half door. The annex on the north side is 31 by 50 feet.

The question of new seats for the whole building is still undetermined, as the cost of different parts of the already enumerated work is not yet definitely known.

In a few weeks the Davidson campus will again be full of life. Beginning the 8th of July the Piedmont Summer School will enter on its first session, a teachers' summer school for which Prof. R. J. Cochran, the superintendent of education in this county, has arranged, assisted by the faculty of Davidson and prominent educators in this and other counties. Several adjoining counties are directly interested in the movement. Its success seems assured. Dr. T. P. Harrison is president, Prof. J. A. Butler, of Iredell, is secretary and treasurer, Prof. R. J. Cochran, superintendent.

A pleasant feature of Commencement, hitherto unnoticed in this correspondence, was the unveiling in the Biblical Hall on Tuesday morning of the portraits of Dr. and Mrs. Shearer, a gift to the college highly appreciated by the Trustees and friends of the institution. Dr. Rumble presented the gift in behalf of the donor.

CHARLOTTE; Tenth Avenue Church.—The following officers have been installed in this church:

Ruling Elder—Mr. A. T. Walker; Deacons, Messrs. W. H. C. Barkley, O. D. King, C. P. Edwards and L. S. Boyd. There were two additions to the church on 7th instant.

Five more men could be given employment. Thirty-two have been engaged for the work. Since the inception of the Synodical work, twenty-one years ago, more than $225,000 have been contributed, eighty-six churches have been organized, nearly 100 Sabbath-schools established, sixty-five houses of worship erected, twenty-eight new counties entered and more than 11,000 members added to our Church and many to other churches. The influence of the movement has been felt throughout the entire Church.

MISSISSIPPI.

MOSS POINT.—On the last Sabbath in May, in the presence of a large congregation, Rev. E. H. Gregory was formally installed pastor of the Moss Point Church. Dr. J. E. Jones, of Meridian, Rev. R. L. Campbell, of Laurel, and Dr. J. T. Evans, of Scranton, were the commissioners appointed by Presbytery. In the necessary absence of Rev. Mr. Campbell, Dr. Jones preached the sermon, propounded the constitutional questions, and gave the charge to people and pastor, the whole service being deeply solemn and impressive. Notwithstanding, the occasion was a most happy one, for much good is looked for from this union. The church is in a prosperous condition, and the field beyond the limits of the cultured, well-to-do congregation, is a wide one, extending out amongst the lakes and bayous, where extensive lumber plants have drawn around them a population who also need the gospel and its privileges.

Mr. Gregory is an able preacher, and a man of very scholarly mind. In manner he is genial and sympathetic, while his experience as a man of business prior to entering the ministry, has given him a peculiar fitness for dealing with all classes of men. May God's richest blessings follow his labors.

GEORGIA.

NEWTON.—The commission appointed by Macon Presbytery to install the Rev. Archie McLanchlin as pastor of the churches of Newton and Camilla, performed that duty on Sabbath, May 31st.

These churches have taken on new life since the active work of Mr. McLanchlin began a few months since. The church at Newton with a small membership has just finished and furnished a very neat building at a cost of about $1,800, which will be dedicated in the near future, free from debt.

In accordance with the request concurred in by Macon Presbytery, a church was organized at Palhem, Ga., with eighteen members, on Monday evening, June 1st. This church intends building a neat house of worship at once; and we befor them a bright and prosperous future with the blessing of God attending their work. They have secured the services of Rev. Archie McLaughlin, Camilla, Ga., for part of his time.

Educational.

STATESVILLE.—Statesville Female College closed its work of the session 1902-3 on May 17th-19th.

The attendance of friends, patrons and alumnae was large and gratifying. Every feature of the Commencement program was carried through successfully. The Baccalaureate sermon was eloquent, intellectual, spiritual. The Art Exhibit and reception gave entire satisfaction to the lovers of beautiful pictures. It showed how wide the range of art work and how high the standard at this college.

The alumnae banquet was largely attended and the exercises were bright and enthusiastic. The Commencement evening was full of interest. The hall was crowded to its utmost capacity. On the platform were seated the President and Rev. C. M. Richards and Dr. W. N. Scott, and the nine graduates. The exercises of the evening consisted in addresses by the graduates, beautifully written and well delivered; the announcing of certificates, distinctions and degrees by the president; a brief and impressive address by Dr. Scott; and music by the students.

There were nine graduates; two took A. B.; one took B. S.; four took B. L., and two took Business Graduate.

The session just closed was the most successful under the administration of President Scott, and, it is said, the most successful in the history of the college for many a year.

Safe and sound after a rough passage from Gourock, Scotland, of 16 days and 22 hours, Sir Thomas Lipton's latest challenger for the America's cup, the Shamrock III., is now lying at anchor off Tompkinsville, Staten Island, in company with the steam yacht Erin, that had towed her most of the way across the Atlantic, and by the Shamrock I., towed by the British tug Cruiser. One hundred and fifty-six men manued the yachts and their convoys.

An expedition recently left Baltimore for the purpose of making an exhaustive study of the Bahama Islands. Its members will spend about two months amid the group, and the result of their labors will be compiled in a volume which will be donated to the United States government. The expedition, however, might be termed international in character, since it has the hearty co-operation of Great Britain and the governor of the Bahama Islands will place all of the facilities he possesses at its disposal.

The grand jury has reported an indictment against August W. Machen, former superintendent of the free delivery service of the Postoffice Department, who was arrested several days ago charged with sharing profits on government contracts for letter box fasteners. The indictment was brought for violation of section 5,501, of the Revised Statute. The amount which is a "fine not more than three times the amount asked or accepted or received, and by imprisonment not more than three years." The amount which the indictment finds he received illegally is $18,987.79.

The greatest ocean depth ever discovered was sounded only a short time ago, during the recent cruise of the Albatross in the Pacific. Professor Agassiz was in charge of the expedition, and near the island of Guam. There the beam trawl, attached to a steel cable, was lowered to the depth of 28,878 feet, five miles, almost as high as Mount Everest. By means of thermometers attached to the trawl it was found that the water at this depth bore the temperature of only thirty-five degrees, just a little above freezing point.

News comes from Turkey that a terrific earthquake occurred on April 29 at Melazgerd in the vilayet of Van, eighty miles southeast of Erzerum. It is said that the entire town was destroyed, together with its population of 2,000, among whom were 700 Armenians and the garrison. About 500 houses in the neighboring villages are said likewise to have been destroyed. The town lies 40 leagues to the southeast of Erzerum, the capital of the vilayet. It is about 110 miles distant in a northeasterly direction from Mount Ararat and 700 from Constantinople.

The estimate of Governor Wong, of Kwang province, China, that over 1,000,000 natives are starving in the territory in his jurisdiction is pronounced here to be approximately correct. The distress in certain districts is most acute. Children and women are freely offered for sale. The rice harvest promises well, but it will not be available for from four to six weeks. Extensive relief operations will be difficult without foreign supervision which will be hard to obtain in Kwang-Si. The distribution of relief sent from America is to be through the American and British missionaries.

On the 19th and 20th of April the local Jewish community of Kischinev were attacked by a mob of working men. The riots began with the pillaging of Jewish shops and dwellings. Notwithstanding the efforts of the police and the troop, the ruffians spread over the town, smashing windows in Jewish houses, and, occasionally, also in Christian houses, pillaging or destroying property. The riots, renewed on the following day, assumed a threatening character. Fights took place in which stones, sticks, crow-bars and revolvers were used, whereby 25 persons were killed, about 75 seriously wounded, about 200 only slightly. By order of the Minister of the Interior, the town of Kischinev and its district have been declared in a state of enforced guarding.—St. Petersburg Herald.

A cablegram has been received by the International Reform Bureau in Washington, signed by the Methodist presiding elder in the Philippines, Dr. Stunz, appealing in behalf of the Evangelical Union and the Chinese Chamber of Commerce for assistance in defeating threatened legislation to establish an opium monopoly on the same plan that has been followed in Great Britain and India. The cablegram declares that this policy is not only bad morals, but worse politics. It is very desirable that all good citizens should appeal to the President to prevent the consummation of this legislation. The monopoly if put in force will stimulate the consumption of opium rather than restrict it. It is hardly credible that American public opinion will sanction the sale and distribution of opium in the Philippines.—Exchange.

About a hundred men and women recently gathered in the laboratory of Mr. Miller R. Hutchison, in New York city, for the purpose of witnessing tests of the Acousticon which he has devised to enable deaf mutes to hear. The results attained were almost incredible. A young woman of twenty-two who had lost sight and hearing at the age of six, listened rapturously to the sounds of musical instruments and the human voice, conveyed to her for the first time since her affliction, by the new instruments. A boy student of the New York Deaf and Dumb Institution, who although deaf, had been taught to speak by watching the lips of others, repeated words after hearing them.

The essential feature of the invention is a cup-shaped body, into the open end of which the soundwaves enter, the bottom or inner end of the body being shaped to reflect and concentrate the soundwaves and finally direct them backward until they strike the center of a vibrating diaphragm mounted in the cup at right angles to its axis.

The "acousticon" is not intended for indiscriminate use by the deaf. The art of hearing must first be taught. And for this purpose an instruction outfit has been devised, which, since it is not intended to be carried about by the deaf mute, is of more pretensions appearance and size than the "acousticon." The mouthpiece and the earpiece of this instruction outfit are each provided with a nose-piece by which the nasal sounds, which by other instruments are either lost or only partially transmitted to the ear, are wholly conveyed to the earpiece. The nose-piece serves the subsidiary purpose of preventing the pupil from watching the movements of the lips.—Scientific American.

FLOW.—Whereas, it has pleased God in his all-wise providence to call from our midst one of our most active and faithful members, Mrs. D. W. Flow, April 17, 1903. We, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of Philadelphia church, desire to express in some measure our sorrow for her departure, therefore be it, Resolved, First, That though we accept with humble resignation the righteous dispensations of our dear Father, we sorrow deeply for the dear one who has gone before, realizing that in her departure our society is bereft of one of its oldest, most faithful and untiring laborers, Mrs. Flow having been our first President when our Society was organized June 27, 1875. But thanks be unto God that, although we miss her presence, we sorrow not as those who have no hope, but as pilgrims whose task is not yet finished and who hope to clasp her hand again where partings are unknown.

Resolved, Second, That this society press onward with renewed energy and zeal, remembering that though God has called home this weary toiler his vineyard still needs workmen and He has bidden us to "Work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work."

Resolved, Third, That we extend our sympathies to the lonely daughter and commend her to the kind and loving care of a sympathizing Father, who has assured us that though "Weeping may endure for a night, joy cometh in the morning."

Resolved, Fourth, That this memorial be sent to the Presbyterian Standard for publication, and that it be entered on our society records.

RAMSEY.—Thomas James Ramsey, aged 63 years, died at his home in Wilmington, N. C., June 1st, at night fall. The end came suddenly from an attack of heart disease, with which he had been afflicted for years. He was born on Harrison's creek in Pender county, Oct. 8th, 1836, and early in life united with the Presbyterian church. He was a fine man, devoted to his family and faithful in his work. He never told a falsehood but once in his life and then he corrected that, never tasted liquor and never used profane language. He was beloved by all for his gentle and genial spirit and his upright life—some one said of him, "No one could say anything against him without telling that which was not so." He was a member of the Third North Carolina Regiment and was one of the very truest and bravest in the command. On the evening before his death he attended service at Immanuel Presbyterian Church and listened to a sermon on Heaven which made an impression on his mind and he spoke of it within an hour of his death. He leaves a family of four devoted children, all of them grown who will cherish his memory. He was buried with his people in the family burying ground on Harrison's creek.

RAINEY.—Died at his home March 14, 1903 of paralysis, Mr. John P. Rainey in his 61st year. In connection with this event the officers and members of Red House Church as a tribute of respect and affection adopted the following:

1st, That while bowing in loving submission to the will of Him who is ruling in wisdom and love, we can but feel that our Church has suffered a sad bereavement.

2nd That for above 36 years he was a ruling elder of our Church and clerk of our session in which he discharged all his duties with loving fidelity.

3rd., That during his entire connection with our Church he was a faithful laborer in the Sabbath-school and for above 25 years the faithful and enthusiastic superintendent of our school. Never will he be forgotten by the young, who through so many years came under his instruction and guidance, wise and loving and well calculated to benefit the for this life and for the life to come.

4th, That in his death we all have lost a kindly genial, faithful friend our community a generous, upright honorable citizen, always standing up for what was right and ever ready to lend helping hand to those who needed help.

5th, That we tender to his brother, faithful deacon of our Church, and his loving, aged aunts, always so dear to him and all his other relations, our tender sympathy and pray God to sustain and comfort them

6th, That we enter this tribute on session record, send a copy of it to his sorrowing relatives and another copy to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

J. M. Long, Clerk of Session.
Hycotee, N. C., June, 1903.

M'ASKILL.—On the 19th of May, 1903, Miss Josiphene McAskill, aged fifty two years. She was a consistent and devoted member of Bensalem Church for many years. We sorrow not as those who have no hope.

"Rest from thy labour, rest,
Soul of the just, set free!
Blest be thy memory, and blest Thy bright example be!"

SLOOP.—The ladies of the Missionary Society of Prospect Church wish to place on record this tribute to Mrs. D. A. Sloop, who fell quietly asleep Dec. 1, 1902, in her sixtieth year.

To many hearts there comes a peculiar sadness at this intelligence of a loved one gone up higher. She was thoroughly imbued with the spirit of human kindness that manifested itself in her cheerful countenance, kindly words and helpful deeds. "Miss Bettie," as she was lovingly called by many friends, had a smile for every one and was always ready in every good work; visiting the sick, giving to the needy. Everyone knew they would find in her a ready sympathizer in their sorrows and a sharer in their joys. She was cheerful under all circumstances. Even when in feeble health she was full of energy and thought of helping others. To be in her presence was to feel that a Christian's life is a happy, cheerful one. The world is better for her having lived in it.

She leaves, behind a sorrowing husband, a son, and three daughters besides a host of friends.

Sitting Up Straight.

Children should be taught to sit erect, pecially if they are growing rapidly. When tired or in a position for rest, let them lie down, and entirely remove the strain from the muscles of the back.

If young persons who suffer from nervousness or headache are carefully observed, it will frequently be noticed that their position is faulty. The curved form of the spine results in the pulling of the muscles at the back of the neck, and the difficulty is quite certain to be removed by correcting the habit of sitting.

Growing people and children alike are inclined to fall into the very bad habit of sliding down into a chair and sitting for hours with the spine bent almost in a half-circle. That this is injurious thousands of people who indulge in it never so much as dream, but that it is the cause of many serious ills those who have investigated the subject are well aware. The continual strain upon one side of the spinal column, with the corresponding compression on the other, gives rise to nervous difficulties and affections of the brain. Dizziness, nausea, and blind spells are not infrequently the result of this practice. While the strictly upright position is undoubtedly the most healthy, it seems rather hard work to persuade the young and indolent to maintain it.

Remember, that portion of the human anatomy generally known as the backbone was intended to be worn in an upright position, and the constant pressure of the sections of the vertebrae upon each other is productive of various ills.—Selected.

How to Be Charming.

A woman can make or mar her attractiveness. She can, by an utter disregard of hygienic laws and a neglect of toilet accessories, in the opinion of Home Chat, lose entirely that charm of face and form that nature obviously intended should be hers. A few drops of soothing lotion will transform a pair of rough hands into soft ones; systematic care of the complexion will keep it smooth and ward off wrinkles and an eagerness to read clever books and to know things, and a lively interest in the current events of the day, will brighten the eyes as nothing else can, except it be the sympathy of the man one loves. The woman possessing this knowledge is far more charming and attractive than she in whose path no beautifying whims have ever come. And the woman who applies this knowledge is the one who will develop into the entertaining, interesting [grandmother] of the next generation, as dainty and as youthful as was the mother of the past generation.—The Presbyterian.

MISS MONIE BOWEY,

No. 38 Perry Street,

DETROIT, MICHIGAN.

A couple of winters ago I slipped on a frozen sidewalk and fell flat on my back. On being examined I found that I had sustained internal injuries which laid me up for more than two months. After that I noticed that I had pains in the back and groin which I never had before. I doctored and doctored for several months but as the pains increased instead of growing better I decided that I was not having the right treatment. Reading in the papers of the wonderful cures performed by Wine of Cardui I wrote to one of the parties and received a very satisfactory reply and I immediately sent for some. In a very short time I felt generally better and after seven weeks faithful use I was once more well and strong. I have never had a sick hour since and I daily bless your splendid medicine.

Miss Monie Bowey.

Wine of Cardui makes women more womanly by curing their weakness and making them stronger. Wine of Cardui cured Miss Bowey. As a medicine for all women in every trying period of their lives can you think of a better medicine for yourself, your sister, your daughter or your mother? Can you think of a more acceptable present to give your friend than a bottle of this medicine which will bring her health and happiness? You are suffering? Your duty is to rid yourself of this pain. If your daughter, mother, sister or friend is sick and in need of relief, your duty is equally great to them. Many women, now well, owe their lives to friends who brought them Wine of Cardui.

Wine of Cardui is adapted to women at any age in any walk of life. For the working woman it gives her strength for her tasks and better treatment than a doctor for very small cost.

Your druggist will sell you a $1.00 bottle of Wine of Cardui. Secure the medicine today. Take it in the privacy of your home. Relief will come to you as surely as you take it

MONIE BOWEY.

WINE OF CARDUI is one medicine that should always be kept on hand in every home for immediate use when female weakness first makes its appearance. Miss Bowey's painful and dangerous accident would not have resulted so seriously had she taken Wine of Cardui promptly.

Kenilworth Castle

Tall grasses and flowering weeds grow in the banqueting-hall, and over the broad courtyards Nature has spread her green turf for flocks of sheep to graze upon. The winter storms and summer sunshine pour through the unglazed windows, penetrating into the darkest corners of the old castle as though to chase away the yet darker memories that linger there. On the mouldering battlements, overtopping the highest spray of ivy, the delicate "quakers" nod in the summer breeze. No sounds but those of peace are echoed now by the tottering walls, yet, as we climb the steps that King Weather has so often mounted in Mervyn's Tower, or rest at the grassy base of the stern old Norman Keep, how the scenes of less peaceful days will seem to rise! The sheep and the greensward of the court-yard fade from sight, and on the stony pavement a host of armoured men appear. Behind the battlements high overhead, the watchman marches to and fro, ever and anon looking out over a country very unlike that which now surrounds the old fortress. For eight hundred years have left a mark on hill, valley and plain, almost as distinct as on the castle itself. In those days Geoffrey de Clinton was Lord of Kenilworth (having founded it in 1120), while Henry I. was lord of England.

And what a wild England it was!—so soon to experience the gloom and sorrow of Stephen's misrule. What stories of knightly enterprise might be read in the shadows of these decaying walls if you could turn back the pages in the book of time! The flag was not always loyal that floated over Kenilworth, for when Henry III. gave his sister in marriage to Simon de Montford, he presented him with the castle as well. Henry had bought it from Geoffrey de Clinton's grandson.

Not satisfied with this royal dowry as it stood, the ambitious Simon immediately set about enlarging and fortifying it. Perhaps he thought, even then, that he might some day make it the rival to Windsor, as indeed he did, for we all know how he led the barons against his brother-in-law, the King and, at the battle of Lewes, carried his flag to victory. The weakly Henry, who had been too much governed by favourites, thus lost the kingly power, though he was never actually driven from the throne. Scarcely a year had passed after the battle of Lewes when the fortifications of Kenilworth were put to the test.

Simon had gone to Hereford to settle a dispute, and had taken with him the captive King and young Prince Edward. The latter had been furnished by his friends with a fleet-footed horse, and one day, when out with his guards for a little exercise, he hit upon a plan for gaining his liberty. Suggesting that it would be fine fun if the gentlemen in attendance were to indulge in a little horse racing, he quietly sat by to watch the sport. Waiting until sufficient racing had been done to exhaust the horses of all those present, he suddenly set spurs to his own animal and galloped for the English border.

Away go his keepers in pursuit, but spur as you may, my merry warders, Prince Edward has broken his chains; he rides for freedom, his victory and—a crown! And see where Roger Mortimer, ready with a gallant company to defend him, awaits his coming! Back to Simon de Montford went the crestfallen pursuers, and the news they brought left him scarcely time to arm against the difficulties that surrounded him. Prince Edward's actions were as swift as his horse had been. Mustering his army he intercepted a force which was marching to Kenilworth, and gave orders to his men to bear the captured colours on high toward de Montford's camp at Evesham. The ruse was not discovered by the enemy in time, and in the terrible battle that ensued the great Baron fell.

Over the green fields and land made desolate by the civil war, the news reached Kenilworth, and the watchman on the high tower soon saw the knights and bowmen of King Henry's army marching toward the castle. The drawbridge spanning the moat was lifted, and all was bustle and uproar, as preparations were made for the defence, under the commands of Simon's second son. His eldest had fallen at his side on the fatal field of Evesham.

The victorious Royalists, confident of success, commenced the attack, but the hand that had overcome them at Lewes was resisting them now; for had not Simon de Montford designed and built the fortifications against which the arrows and stones were launched in vain? For six long months Kenilworth withstood the attack. Then, on an October day in 1266, the drawbridge was lowered, and the 'Barons' Wars,' with the exception of a few small outbreaks, were at an end.

Like the shadows that are stealing over the waving grass the events of sixty years slip by. The reigns of Henry III. and Edward I. have ended, and here in this castle of Kenilworth, the inglorious rule of Edward II. is coming to a close. Royal favourites had again pushed their way between and King and his subjects, and in the consequent rebellion, Edward was carried a prisoner to the fortress which has resisted his grandfathers' arms. His son, Edward III., was proclaimed in London, and on January 7th, 1327, there arrived at Kenilworth a deputation from the King's Parliament. Edward of Carnarvon was called upon to appear before them. Clad in gown of sombre hew, and wearing in his countenance a yet more eloquent guise of humility, he was led in to their presence. The stories of his follies and errors were poured into his ears, and he was called upon to resign the sceptre which his hands were all too weak to hold. With tears in his eyes he faltered out a prayer for pardon from those in whose presence he stood, and: "Deeply is my heart afflicted," said he, "to have lost my subject's love, yet, as I deserve so little at their hands, I thank them for choosing Edward, my eldest son, to take my place."

The staff of office was then snatched from his hands and twain before his eyes to signify that, far as the people of England were concerned, Edward of Carnarvon, first Prince of Wales, and the second of the name to sit on the English throne, was dead.

But they are not all gloomy memories that lurk round the ivy-clad ruins; for bright days came for England as the centuries passed, and the sunlight fell upon the princely home as often as the shadow and the storm. It came again into the possession of Royalty, with John of Gaunt, uncle to Richard II., who seemed to have a talent for marrying wealth. He added more graceful buildings to those than Simon de Montford had done, and when, some two hundred years later Queen Elizabeth gave it to the great Earl of Leicester it received the finishing touches.

"Come and see my beautiful home," he said to his royal mistress, though, no doubt, the invitation was issued in more courtly phrase. It was graciously accepted, and on July 19th, 1575, the lady arrived. But she was by no means the only guest, for the time of festivities that followed cost the noble Earl £1,000 a day. Three hundred and sixty-five hogsheads of beer were consumed, and people poured into this pretty corner of Warwickshire from every point of the compass; from London, Coventry, Warwick, and Worcester, the roads were dusty with their trampling feet. Among the crowds that filled the little town of Kenilworth, some had come from Stratford-on-Avon, thirteen miles away, and of these, doubtless Mr. John Shakespeare was one, hand-in-hand with his little son William; for he was very unlikely to miss such an opportunity of paying his respects to the great Queen Elizabeth.

But the Queen's visit, with all its gaiety, was soon over, and the time passed away to leave a garland of romance on the old castle which will last longer than its walls.

'Leicester's Buildings' have suffered more from the attacks of time and weather and the iron hands of Cromwell's soldiers than the older parts, though over all Time has laid the moss and flowering grass—a curtain of grace and beauty through which we read its brightest and its darkest stories.—Presbyterian Witness.

Great Literary Men.

By Chas. Hughes Johnston, in The Morning Post.

Of the great group of authors regnant in New England thirty-five years ago only Julia Ward Howe, Edward Everett Hale, and Thomas Wentworth Higginson remain. The last of the above named, probably the person best qualified in America to speak personally of so many different literary, scientific and political writers of the last century, in the following lecture delivered Friday evening at the Harvard union, confined his reminiscences to a few representative literary men, and the character of the description to those "personal touches" that he could give at first hand.

His school days with Lowell and Holmes, their early display of that readiof wit and grace on all occasions which made them both from their boyhood the recognized spokesmen when one would be called upon for any important or happy short addresses, the early signs of the acute, piercing humor of Holmes, his sweet unassuming character, the twinkling of his eyes, always revealing some innocent mischief, the allness of his stature, then, to the boy-like, boy-like picture of the child well as he, with his beautiful brow, curly black curls unconcealed by the tall cap on the back of his head, proudly entered up to the school door on his tall brown pony, having saddled him to ride just across the street—all such vivid recollections were given in such a personal way that one felt as though he were in their very presence. So, too, one could see vividly the whole group clustered together, our embryo poets, in the temporary "Temple of Bliss" on the banks of the Charles river, Cambridge, listening eagerly and breathlessly to well as he read to them the wonderful beauties of Spenser's "Fairie Queen." From this childhood scene we were induced to look upon the same group as they in a body went to hear the great lecturer, Emerson, to see how they had chosen such seats as would be convenient in an early retirement, were the speech to their liking, as was generally the case; but to note also that from some mysterious attraction in the great but simple earnestness of Hawthorne's Great Stone cove, they for the first time in their lives sat through it all, with anything but clear ideas, dazed and mystified somewhat, but withal wonderfully inspired by the diffused tranquil human love and sympathy.

Next the speaker gave his audience glimpses of the Quaker Poet, Whittier, who was so very modest and unassuming, but so powerful in a quiet way in organizing individuals and communities into forces to think and act with him. Then there was drawn for us a vivid picture of a great square-shouldered, square-jawed, almost too slovenly dressed, but athletic figure, standing on the corner of Washington and Boylston streets, Boston, amidst a great throng of admirers; a man on whom the eyes of the whole country, as well as those from all the windows and shop-doors on those particular streets, were turned—a man known to many of his friends as "Black Dan," from his swarthy complexion and dark, bushy, over-hanging eyebrows. This, of course, was Daniel Webster.

The next picture was that of a class rebellion at Harvard over forty years ago. Students were gathered in groups around the campfires, whispering threateningly, on the eve of a rebellion against the more authoritative demand or restriction of the faculty. Two or three different members of that body had attempted to dispel the gathering crowd either by persuasion or command, but their words were unheeded. Soon, however, a quiet, gentle-looking, polite gentleman approached deferentially and requested the favor of an audience for a few minutes. There was a ready assent. "We will hear Prof. He always treats us like gentlemen," they said. And of all that class who well remembered this incident clearly, none could remember what he said, nor what their special grievance was. All chiefly recalled how they then and always found sympathy and deferential regard in this teacher. It will be interesting to know also that he was the one who introduced into Harvard College the custom of addressing the students as "Mr. —," This universally beloved gentleman was America's Longfellow.

By a special and unanimous request of the enthusiastic body of advanced student the speaker was induced to take us across the water to the motherland, and let us feel the same life-like contact with Browning, Tennyson and Darwin, as they severally appeared to a friend and a visitor. Browning impressed one more as a business man, a bank-president or an executive, observant of minute details, quick to detect, the pros and cons of all questions, eager to attack and solve matters and problems practical. His appearance was characterized as non-poetical, but by no means anti-poetical.

Charles Darwin, the modest, cheerful, genial, untiring, incessantly active student of nature and life, cordial in his hospitality, unconscious apparently that he was even then so prominent a figure in science, was the next Englishman introduced. In his home life a perfect companion to every member of his family, loved and almost revered by his sons, was this man whose writings and whose great intellectual insight and constructive epistemological power as well, have changed the whole trend of modern thought. His sense of humor was great. It was he, who first in England, and among the first even in America, saw, enjoyed and proclaimed the genius of Mark Twain. And by no means least among his varied acquirements was his ability to show always a sunny disposition, despite the fact of great bodily suffering, and intense and incessant intellectual labor.

The closing picture was that of Tennyson, as he received his visitor, showed him his favorite flowers in his beautiful garden, which itself was as picturesque in its way as the distinguished owner was in his. And then the speaker closed with a picture of the poet as he sat at the bedside of a dying child, whom he had called to see with his visitor. Here we saw the man—above even the poet, his features illumined with the great human love intensified by the sight of the fading of a fragrant, precious human flower.

And here the speaker stopped, but the spell upon the audience remained. We for the time had entered the the sacred portals, and had been touched by the magic wand. An artist had, as it were unwittingly, opened some hidden doors to many, who perchance had begun to think that life in its fullness could be found ultimately in their peculiar fields. But for us then a greater "sum of things" had seemed "to flit along the chords and go." Truly, to quote Dr. Wm. James, "Aesthetic culture and emotion does not cook our bread; it is, however, none the less vital."

Bensie's Wonder-Morning.

Mary Wilson.

"Cook a-doodle doo! Time to get up!" crowed the White Rooster. "Rise and get to work," he added severely, after an instant's pause.

The farmer's wife opened her eyes quickly. "Indeed, I must get to work," she thought. "So much must be done this busy day!"

She dressed rapidly, then knocked at Ben's door. "Yes, mother," answered a sleepy voice. "Come, laddie," she said. "You and I have some work to do." And, almost before the words were said, Bensie was out of bed.

Little Sue was almost dressed before mother reached her door, and Baby Boy crowed his delight when he was lifted from his crib.

No wonder the children were glad to waken on such a bright, sunshiny morning. The birds were holding a morning concert; the spiders had spread the finest of lace work all over the lawn. Mother Nature had scattered diamond dew-drops over the lace, and now called the children to admire her handiwork.

Bensie and Sue hurried out of doors to breathe the fresh, sweet air, and delight in the glorious morning. Ben didn't express his feelings in words; but he turned handsprings just from pure happiness, while Sue danced round the garden, exclaiming over the new flowers that were opening their eyes for the first time that morning.

Ben didn't stop to play very long; for he was father's "right-hand man," and had chores to do in the farm-yard. Down the path he hurried, whistling so cheerily that Mr. Blackbird at once set up a rival performance which nearly split his little throat.

Suddenly Ben stopped, and bent down to examine a flower which grew by the garden path—a tiny flower which shone out like gold from the surrounding grass. "I never saw a flower like that before! Guess you'd better go home to mother, and get yourself named." And the blossom was carefully fastened in Ben's button-hole.

A few steps further and Bensie's brown eye discovered a small bird on the ground.

"Hey, you poor little chap!" laughed Ben. "Tumbling out of the nest? Well, stop your squawking. I wouldn't hurt you. Guess you and I will pay a visit to the old folks at home." And up the tree went Bensie Boy to put the nestling back in the little brown bird-house.

Then something so surprising happened that Ben nearly fell out of the tree in his astonishment; for he actually heard Mother Bird say: "Oh, what a relief to get you home, dear Twitter. Ben, you are certainly the best boy."

"Oh! why! Jiminy!" gasped Ben, slipping down the tree to tumble on the ground in his surprise.

"Ben, my man," he said to himself sternly, "this will never do. You must be dreaming. Get up and go about your work. A boy of thirteen ought to know that birds can't talk."

He hurried on until he reached the barn-yard gate.

Mother Hen was clucking and scratching away inside; but, when she saw Ben she came hurrying toward him, calling loudly: "Hurry, neighbors! Come, cluck, come! Here is Ben with our breakfast." Before Ben could recover from his surprise, all the hens came screeching "O Ben! Thanks, thanks! you shall surely have some fresh eggs to-day."

Ben dropped down on the ground by Mother Speckle, and addressed her earnestly.

"See here, will you please tell me, ma'am, why you can talk to-day when you never could talk before?"

All the chickens burst into a loud cackle of laughter, but not another word could Ben get out of them. Ben scattered their corn, and then went on to the barn, feeling greatly perplexed.

He was greeted thus by Madam Cow as the stable door opened: "Bensie, bring me some nice, sweet hay, and you shall have good milk to-day, enough for baby and little Sue, father, mother, and Bensie, too."

"Coo, coo!" said the soft-voiced doves circling round his head. "Bring some corn for our breakfast, do. Bensie we are waiting for you."

Ben began to think this great fun. "I tell you," he exclaimed, "I'm going to see if my dear old Dobbin is in this talking business, too. He'll tell me what has happened to all of you."

Off went Ben to the horse's stall. Putting his arms around Dobbin's neck, he gave him a great hug, crying as he did so,—

"Say, old fellow can you talk too?"

"I always could talk," remarked Dobbin, quietly, leaning over to nose around Ben's pockets. "Have you any sugar, little master?"

"Yes, here's a lump; and now tell me why didn't you ever talk to me before?"

"I have, a great many times," answered Dobbin, "but you didn't understand me. The reason you hear this morning is because of that flower you are wearing."

"This flower!" exclaimed Bensie much surprised, drawing it from his button-hole to gaze at it.

"You see," said Dobbin, confidentially, reaching over Ben's shoulder after a whisp of hay, "this is Midsummer Day. Any boy who has never in all his life been cruel to a bird or animal may find the good-luck flower to-day: and, as long as he wears it, he can understand our language. I always knew you were a good boy, Bensie; and I'm not at all surprised at your finding it."

"Hurrah!" shouted Ben. "This is surely fine. I must hurry and feed the rest of the animals, so I can run home to tell Sue."

"Good-bye," said Dobbin with a kind nod; and Mother Cow stopped munching her breakfast to say "Good-bye, Ben; you surely deserve the good-luck flowers."

"I wonder what the pigs will have to say," Ben thought, with a little chuckle. It was all such fun!

"Uff, uff!" called the pigs as he drew

"I declare, I've never been hustled so all my life," laughed Ben. "Every- thing says 'Hurry!'" How Sue will hgh!"

Work finished, Bessie ran home; but, when he reached the farm-house, his wonderful flower was gone.

"I must have dropped it," he said, going back to search for it; but, look as he might, he could not find it; and he had only his story of the morning's adventures left.

"I tell you," said Ben, that night, "I mean always to be as good to birds and animals. Who knows but I may find the good luck flower again?"

"At any rate," said mother, fondly, "If you keep on being my good, kind son, you will be a brave, good man; and father and I would ask no better luck than that."

"You'll make a good farmer, Ben," called father from the porch where he was resting from the day's work; "for a good farmer always looks after his farm-yard friends."

"Hurrah for 'Farmer Ben,'" laughed the happy boy; and Sue cried, "I know Bessie dear, you'll find the good-luck flower again; for you're the kindest boy in all the world."—Christian Register.

A Wide-Awake Hero.

John Lee was having a beautiful dream. He had been reading in his class at school that day about the keeping of the bridge—how three brave men had held the bridge against a great host of foes, and that had so excited his imagination that now he was dreaming the whole scene over, with himself the central hero.

But just as he was about to vanquish the one who had rashly pressed forward, a voice from the waking world called him away from the scene of the dream-battle. He opened his sleep-bewildered eyes to find his mother bending over him. Her face was a little white in the dim light, but her voice was as sweet and steady as ever as she said "Jump up quickly, Johnnie dear, and run down the street for Dr. Patton. Baby is sick and I'm afraid she is going to have a bad attack of croup. Papa is away, you know—you will have to be mamma's right hand man to-night."

Dr. Patton lived about three squares down the village street, dark and deserted at this time of night. But Johnnie's heart gave a frightened bound at the thought of danger for the precious little sister. So he sprang up and, assisted by his mother's quick fingers, was soon ready for his run.

Out of the gate, which clicked sharply behind him, and down the street he sped, his flying feet disturbing the solemn night silence with their rapid patter. The trees reached over and made the way darker; but still, after he had been out a minute or two, he could see objects pretty well for a short distance.

And one object he saw very nearly brought him to a standstill. It was a tall, dark form, a man, he felt sure, with something like a bag over his shoulder,

He was standing just inside a gate a little ahead of Johnnie when the latter first caught sight of him. Then, before the boy had even time to slacken his pace, the tall figure sank out of sight behind the gate. Evidently he was not anxious to be seen, whoever he was, and hearing the boy coming had hid behind the fence.

A queer little shivery feeling flashed over Johnnie. What if the man sprang out and caught him as he passed? He thought swiftly; should he try to pass at all or to turn back to home and safety? There was a moment's struggle between the two desires. And then the anxious face of his mother seemed to smile upon him through the gloom and darkness, and her "I know you will hurry, for baby's sake, dear," warmed his heart and gave him courage.

It was all over—discovery and fear and resolve—much quicker than can be told. In another instant he was past the gate with the lurking figure behind it. In a minute or two more he had aroused the doctor, and was breathlessly gasping out the errand upon which he had come, and then the other story of the form in hiding.

How the doctor telephoned to the police authorities before he and Johnnie went, and how a few minutes later the bold burglar and all his plunder were safely in custody, does not belong to this story. But when the sick baby was sleeping safely and comfortably, the doctor turned to Johnnie with keen, kindly, eyes.

"Well, young man, you have done a pretty good night's work for a twelve-year-old. But how was it that you were not scared? Were you not afraid to pass that fellow when you knew he was trying to hide from you?" was asked.

"I was scared!" admitted Johnnie. "but baby had to have you—and I was past before I had much time to think about it."

"Hump! Some youngsters would have taken time to think about it," commented the doctor, and then he went away.

But afterward, held close in mother's arms, the brave little messenger whispered confession of the quick, silent cry for help which he had sent to God in the moment of fear; and of how the thought of her face and voice had come to him and given him courage, strengthened his heart for duty.

And to that, mother answered softly and reverently. "Yes, Johnnie, God always sends his help in the way that it will best help. And so he used the love and willingness to serve me which he found in your heart to help you when you needed help. And so God can always use the good he finds in us for further good, if we will let him and ask him."

Later, Johnnie remembered what he had been dreaming when his mother called him, and he told her laughingly. She laughed, too; and then she said in a proud tone which made him flush with pleasure: "It is easy to be a hero in a dream. I am glad that my boy is a wide-awake hero, too, and that even when his courage is weak, he knows where to ask for more."—Phil. Standard.

Mr. Weather Man.

Evening red and morning gray
Sets the traveler on his way;
Evening gray and morning red
Brings down rain upon his head.

Such was the way in which our grandparents foretold the weather.

If it was noticed that the old tabby washed herself by rubbing her paw over her ear, or that the little tree-toads trilled their mournful little songs, or the fire-flies flitted low among the flowers and the vines, the old folks shook their heads and spoke of rain; or if grandmother's feet ached the little folks grew very sorry—not because grandmother had a pain, but because it meant bad weather on the morrow.

Strictly speaking, our Weather Bureau is made up of a great many buildings scattered all over the United States, and the one at Washington is the central station that governs and directs the smaller ones, and to which they send in their daily reports; for it is by getting reports from all the different sections of the country that Uncle Sam's weather-makers are able to make their predictions. There are one hundred and eighty towns and cities in the United States where there are observation stations, having the same instruments and apparatus as the Washington bureau. Now, the observers at these one hundred and eighty stations do not spend their time waiting for spiders to crawl out of their holes or looking at the sky to see whether it is red or gray in the evening. They look at their thermometers, barometers, anemometers, and so on, which are far better guides than all the other signs put together.

At eight o'clock in the morning and at eight o'clock in the evening of every day the observer at each one of these weather stations from Maine to California looks at his different instruments, and carefully notes what each of them marks. Then he takes a look at the sky, to see whether it is fair or raining or snowing, and to see what sort of clouds may be sailing about. According to the Weather Bureau, there are seven different kinds of clouds, and it is important that the observer should see what particular kind is hovering around, for each kind means some special sort of weather or some particular state of the atmosphere. When he has finished his observation and noted all the indications, he telegraphs his report to Washington.

In that way, then, the Washington station receives an account of the weather at all parts of the country at the same time, and, as you may easily believe, it keeps the four telegraph operators busy receiving the messages that come pouring in soon after eight o'clock. As each message is received in the telegraph room it is carried by a messenger across the hall to the forecast room, or room where predictions are made, and handed to the translator. As the translator reads aloud the cipher reports from the different stations, other men in the room mark what he reads upon a map of the United States, so that when the last message has been translated the map shows just what the weather is at each one of the one dred and eighty stations. The map was turned over to the official who made the predictions. In order to check his bearings, he traces across the map different places throughout the country where the temperature is the same as the places where the barometer is the same. The one he marks with red lines and the other with black lines, and when you will look at a weather map you will see these red and black lines wriggling and twisting all over the country. When the reports from the Northwest show a great fall in temperature, he knows that a cold wave has started on a journey through the United States, and he keeps a lookout to see how fast it reaches the different stations in the West. Then he calculates how rapidly it is moving and what kind of weather it has to encounter, and perhaps when he has worked out the problem he will telegraph the following bulletin: "Hoist cold-wave flag; thermometer will fall thirty degrees in next twenty-four hours," and, if severe enough, by next day Jack Frost has hold of our noses and toes, and the cold-wave flag is almost tearing itself to pieces with delight. But sometimes the cold wave does not come as was expected and it is switched off on a side-track or it cuts on the way—and then the cold-wave flag droops in shame.—Clifford Ward, in St. Nicholas.

What Was the Bear's Barometer?

"I'd like to know how it is that a bear knows more than a weather bureau!" said Milo Bull crossed his legs and rested his crossed arms on them in his usual camp-fire fashion. Milo was a tall, sinewy North woods guide, well known as a story-teller along the whole length of Fulton Chain. He stopped when he said this and looked deep into the blazing camp fire. November had come, and every visitor to the camp stretched out on the balsam bed in front of the tent knew that few days of hunting or story-telling were left that year. "They don't, do they?" said one of the men, just to show his interest. "They don't, eh?" said Milo. "Well, no, they just do. You've heard about that bear cub Milly used to have, haven't you?" And the same man said he remembered Milly (Milo's handsome, English wife) crying her eyes out when they shot it. "Well," said Milo, "we got that bear as a trap early in the summer, and he was too young to know much. Milly took a great fancy to him, and had a door cut in the side of a big box for him when he fell came, and straw put in so he couldn't sleep cold. "Of course he was chained, and of course he chased himself round and round the stake all summer, like every other bear cub you ever saw. It used to worry Milly a good deal how that bear cub couldn't any more sense, and she used to do a lot of planning how he could be kept in the house when it come winter. "I didn't know myself how he was going to like it, but we were having a fine young Indian summer, and I was letting the double take care of itself. One day that bear began to act mighty funny—acted like he was house cleaning. He began in the morning, the prettiest day you ever saw, and hauled out every bit of that straw and spread it out in the sunshine. Long about noon he went at it and turned it all over.

"About three o'clock—the days are pretty short up here round about Thanksgiving time—he began putting it all back in his box. Picked it all up, every last straw of it, and put it in. Then he went in himself, and packed a lot of straw up against the door.

"Mind ye, it was as pretty a day as you ever saw in your life when he went into that box, but the next morning if there wasn't a good ten inches of snow on the ground, and no bear to be seen, an' we didn't see him, neither, till the next spring!

"I took good pains when the city papers came up to see what they said that day the weather was going to be, an', no, sir, there wasn't a word about snow! Now what I want to know besides is, how that bear knew it was the fashion for bears to go to sleep with the first snow, and how he knew when that snow was coming."—Religions Intelligencer.

How Time is Made

Strange as it may seem, Uncle Sam does not make use of the sun for reckoning time, but turns his attention to some of the regular steady-going stars, or "fixed stars," as they are called. Every clear night an astronomer with a big telescope looks at certain of these stars and makes his calculations, from which he can tell just when the sun would cross the seventy fifth meridian. One of the great clocks in the observatory is called the transmitter, because it transmits or sends out the signal that keeps standard time. This clock is set and regulated by the star time, and then every day at three minutes and fifteen seconds before 12 a switch is turned on, and the beats of the pendulum of this clock are sent by electricity over the wires to the telegraph offices in Washington and New York. When the telegraph operators hear this sound on their instruments they know that the noon signal is about to be sent out, and they at once begin to connect the telegraph wires with other towns and cities, until in a minute or two the "tick, tick" of the clock at Washington is heard in hundreds of telegraph offices.

The beats stop at ten seconds before 12, as a notice that the next "tick" will be the noon signal, and so as to give the operators time to connect their wires with the standard time balls and clocks. There are time balls in a great many cities, usually on top of some prominent building, where they can easily be seen. The one at Washington is on the roof of the State, War and Navy Department Building, at the top of a high pole, ready to drop the instant the signal comes over the wire. In the government offices at Washington, and in many places in other cities there are large clocks, connected with the observatory by electricity. These are so arranged that when the 12 o'clock signal is flashed over the wires the hands of each one of these clocks spring to 12, no matter what time the clock may show; in this way hundreds of clocks are set to the correct time each day. The moment the sun is supposed to cross the seventy-fifth meridian the telegraph instruments give a single tick, the timeballs drop, the clocks begin to strike, and everybody in the district knows it is 12 o'clock.—St Nicholas.

The memory of kindly word
For long gone by,
The fragrance of a faded flower,
Sent lovingly,
The gleaming of a sudden smile
Or sudden tear,
The warmer pressure of the hand,
The tone of cheer,
The hush that means "I cannot speak,
But I have heard!"
The note that only bears a verse
From God's own word—
Such tiny things we hardly count
As ministry;
The givers deeming they have shown
Scant sympathy:
But, when the heart is overwrought,
Oh, who can tell
The power of such tiny things
To make it well?

Our Little Folks.

CONDUCTED BY MRS. A. J. MCKELWAY

Children's Letters.

Cambridge, Mass., 27 Walker St.

Dear Presbyterian:

My grand-mother takes your paper and I enjoy reading the stories and letters. I go to the Peabody School every day but Saturday and Sunday. On Sunday I go to Sunday-school; my teacher's name is Miss Nina Anderson and our pastor's name is Rev. Alexander MacKenzie. I have not got any pets except a little brother named James Spencer Love

A few days ago it was my birthday and I was eleven years old. Good-bye.

Cornelia S. Love.

May 29, 1903.

Brownsville, N. C., June 3, 1903.

Dear Standard:

We are two little sisters, who live in the northern part of Granville county and belong to Shiloh Presbyterian Church. We joined last August; and were baptized by Rev. W. D. Morton who held protracted services at our church several days. We do not have preaching except fifth Sundays. Rev. J. E. Wool, our pastor, has planned to have a meeting there some time in September. We have recited the child's catechism, the commandments and the beatitudes and are trying to get the shorter catechism. We attend the Baptist Sunday-school sometimes as the church is near and we have no school at our own church. We have one big sister and six brothers, all of whom, except the youngest brother, are members of the Presbyterian Church. Our papa is one of the elders and our oldest brother was a deacon before he moved to Texas. Papa has been taking your paper some time and we enjoy reading it very much. Will ask one question, Who was Caesar Augustus? and will answer Huie Hill Wooten's question, Methuselah was the oldest man.

Your friends,

Zelma and Esma Clement.

Begonia, N. C., June 4, 1903.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old. I love to read children's nice little letters very much. I have one brother and one sister. My sister is the oldest; her name is Mildred Anderson and my brother's name is Carrol Lenard. I have not recited the child's catechism yet, but am studying it now to recite. I go to Sunday-school almost every Sunday. My teacher is Miss Clara Patrick and our pastor, Rev. G. A. Sparrow. I like to go to school very much, but our school was out the 26th of March. We had a nice time the last day. Mr. L. H. Cathey was my teacher. I will close by asking a question, Where is the word fellow found in the Bible?

Your little friend,

Errol Birtie Henderson.

Dixie, N. C., June 4th.

Dear Standard:

I enjoy reading the little letters in your paper and thought I would write one. I have five brothers and one sister. I go to school at Dixie. Miss Myrtle Wolf was my teacher. Our school closed the 16th of May. We had a nice commencement. My sister got the reciters medal. One of my brothers will graduate at the University of North Carolina this year. He will get home Thursday. I will close, hoping to see my letter in print.

Your little friend,

Age 8. Mary Euna Collins.

Playing Cripple

"What in the world are you children doing?" cried mamma, coming into the sitting-room in a great hurry. "Papa thought the chairs and tables must all have taken to dancing around to make all this racket, but it is caused by three little people."

"We're playing we're crippled, mamma," explained Roy, balancing himself on two broom handles, and holding one fat leg out behind him. "Mabel lost a foot in a railroad accident, and Bob and I are wounded soldiers."

"It's lots of fun," pouted Mabel, fastening the string of her shoe on the foot supposed to be lost. "I'm learning to manage my crutches just right."

"Whatever started you on this queer play?" asked mamma, pulling the rugs straight, and picking up the things the children has upset in their attempts to use sticks instead of feet.

"Miss Abbott said in Sabbath-school yesterday that it would be nice if we would all do without candy and such things for a month, to help little Ben Fish get a wheel-chair," said Bob. "He goes on crutches, you know, and Miss Abbot says they hurt his arms. We thought we'd try and see if it is hard work going on crutches, and it ain't at all."

"So you don't think it is necessary for Ben to have the chair, then?" said Mrs. Pearl quietly.

"Why, you see, mamma, we're willing to help," said Mabel quickly, "but we don't see why Miss Abbot wants us to give up all our money for a month to buy the chair. If Ben gets the chair this summer, it will be time enough, for he can't go out when the weather is bad anyway."

"Well, you must do as you think best about it," said Mrs. Pearl. "You earn your money, and spend one-third of it as you please. If you want to give your allowance for Ben's chair, I think you will enjoy it more than candy, but that is for you to decide."

"I'm going to rake the yard one of these days," said Roy, "and I'll give that money for the chair. You know papa said we might spend the money we got for odd jobs as we pleased; so I'll give that."

"And I'll hem your towels, and give my money," said Mabel.

"Let's go out in the yard, and play marbles," suggested Bob, but mamma called him back. "I haven't seen your new play; so wait till I get my work, and you may show me till dinner-time how it goes."

The children took their sticks once e, and mamma settled herself by a dow to watch. At first it was great trying to see which could do her nds to the other rooms first, but by-

-by the game became tiresome, and bel slipped her crutches under the e of the lounge, and took up a favor-book.

"Come here, Mabel," and mamma k the pillows off the lounge so the le girl could lie flat on her back.
his is the way Ben has to rest many es a day because his back is so weak.
n he walks a short distance on his ches, it makes him very tired; so he s down without a pillow to rest.
e, Roy, there is room for you at the er end; and Bob can have the cushs on the floor."

They didn't like to lie down, but it s part of the game; so Bob laid down toy engine he was repairing, and tied himself on the pillows; while his ther studied the paper on the ceiling, d wondered how long mamma wanted
m to play being crippled.

"Is it an hour?" asked Mabel twisting out on her end of the couch.

"O dear, no," laughed mamma. "It just seven minutes since you all lay wn. Isn't it odd the time seems so g? Ben says sometimes he is sure it a week before the doctor will let him up, when it has only been three or four hours."

Three or four hours! Three small ple knew they never could stand an ur of lying perfectly still, and began make plans to escape, by coaxing mamma to let them play something else.
seemed to Bob he had never wanted to so many things before as he did while oking to his cushions. He felt sure pet dog had not been fed, and would fer if he did not attend to him immeately; but mamma, sewing by the ndow, showed no sign of wanting m to get up. Mabel hoped Roy would t to leave the lounge, but Roy being e oldest had to keep up his reputation endurance; so they listened for the ck to strike the half hour, and tell m dinner-time was surely, if slowly, ning.

"Mamma, I believe I'll give all my ney for Ben's chair, and hem your vels as soon as we stop playing this," d Mabel suddenly. "I don't see how or little Ben lives, if he has to lie his back like this."

"I'll give mine, too," said Bob.
m so tired of playing cripple. Do a snoppe a chair will help Ben's back, mamma?"

"The doctor thinks so, my boy. He a be out in the fresh air most of the time ring pleasant weather, and the crutches a be laid aside. It hurts his back so oh to walk with them, but his mother s always been too poor to buy a chair.
e on all sure you want to do with-t candy for a month, and give your ney to Miss Abbot for the chair?"

"Sure!" came back the answer from e three childish voices.

"Then I think it would be better not play cripple any more, but try to earn me money to help the fund along.
n't you?"

Bob, Mabel and Roy sprang from their places, and in a few minutes were busy at the tasks their mother found for them.

"Please don't burn up my crutches, mamma," said Mabel soberly. "I want to keep them to remind me of my resolve, if I should get lazy and selfish before Ben gets his chair. I never knew how hard a time the poor boy had till to-day."

"I guess I'll keep mine too," remarked
Roy. "I'm glad they're not for sure ones."

The children never played cripple again, but when the new chair was bought for little Ben, no one was happier than the make-believe cripples, and they faithfully pushed the invalid up and down the shaded streets day after day when other children forgot the poor boy.
Whenever Mabel saw the crutches she had used the only time she had played the new game, she made new resolves to help crippled children every chance she had, and the boys shared their candy with Ben before touching a bite of it.

"I wish all the children would try playing cripple," said Miss Abbot when Mrs. Pearl told her the story. "I wondered why four little folks were so faithful to poor Ben. Their hearts will always have a very tender place for unfortunate people."—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

Charlie.

It had been along, cold spring; but, now that a really warm day had come,
summer seemed to have arrived at last,
and, taking with her a diminutive spade,
the little girl went out into the yard, for she dearly loved playing with her rich, brown earth and the few seeds which she had all winter kept among her choicest possessions gave her a good excuse.
Placing the envelopes containing the seeds on the ground, she began her excavations with the greatest enthusiasm, stopping after each spadeful of dirt was thrown out of the hole to examine the wriggling worms and insects whose homes she had so ruthlessly invaded.

Presently she paused and drew back, half curious, half fearful. A clod of earth, which she had thrown to one side as containing nothing of any interest, was in motion, giving curious little hops and jumps, and seeming about to throw itself back into the hole whence it had been taken. The little girl was so surprised that, for a moment, she quite forgot to run away, and then something happened which prevented her doing so; for the lump of earth fell apart and there, squatting upon the ground and looking up at her, was a little creature with a crooked back, wide month and shining eyes.

With a cry of joy, the little girl, quite regardless of her clean white frock, knelt beside her visitor, for she saw at once that it was a toad. Ever since she could remember, toads had been her greatest delight, though few enough of those fascinating creatures were to be found in the city where she lived.

She at once picked it up and brushed the remaining dirt away; then, quite forgetting her gardening, she ran into the house to show her find. But, sad to relate, she encountered her nurse in the kitchen, and that worthy woman, shuddering at the sight of the toad and predicting that the hands of her young charge would be covered with warts, flatly refused to allow the new pet to be taken upstairs. The little girl could not help shedding tears of disappointment, but she knew that an appeal to any other authority would be useless; nurse had been with the family for many years, since before the birth of the little girl in fact, and she must be obeyed.

The toad, for his part, appeared relieved at finding himself back in the warm sunshine, and when the little girl put him down beside a clump of ribbon-grass which, after a survey of the yard, she had decided upon as being the most fitting place for his residence, he at once disappeared amidst the vegetation; and the little girl, fearing that she should never see him again, sadly completed her planting.

The next day, on approaching the clump of ribbon-grass, what was her surprise to see the toad sitting before his home, basking in the warm sunshine. He did not move when she drew near, but graciously allowed her to scratch his back, evincing his satisfaction by blinking his great goggle eyes. The little girl was delighted by his tameness, and when day after day went by and she found him every morning in the same spot, she decided that her pet, even though she might not keep him in the house, must have a name. After much thought, she named him Charley, after a friend of her sister, a young man who lived next door and who was a great favorite with the whole family. The next time this gentleman called on her sister, the little girl told him of his name sake, and she was surprised and hurt to find that he did not seem at all pleased by the honor done him, even though she assured him that the toad in question was the very nicest one she had ever known!

Charley the toad—naturally enough—cared nothing about the displeasure of the man whose name he had been given, though the little girl explained it to him most carefully, and he appeared to listen with the gravest attention. He soon learned to know the call of his little mistress, and, if not already sunning himself, would come from his lair in the ribbon-grass at the sound of her voice. He learned to eat from her hand, and the little girl often caught flies or dug worms in order to give him a treat, for she loved to see his long tongue come out and wrap itself about the article of food before he swallowed it.

One day the little girl had a surprise. She had often secretly felt rather ashamed of Charley's dingy appearance, though she would not for the world have said as much to any one, for fear of hurting his feelings. She had noticed for sometime that he seemed rather dull and languid and, on this particular morning, she was dismayed to find him lying quite limp on the ground and taking no notice whatever of her approach. She hastened forward and, on examination, found that her pet's skin was split all the way down his back! Speechless with horror and indignation, she was just about to rush away and discover, if possible, the offender who had been guilty of such cruelty, when the toad began to twitch and jerk his legs. She could not leave him in such apparent agony and, with a heart aching for his sufferings, she seated herself upon the ground beside him. And then something happened which appeared to her little short of magic.

Charley was still struggling violently, but she now saw that his contortions were not due to pain. First the head and then the body of the toad emerged through the slit which had been along his back; then pulling out his legs, one after the other, and with as much exertion as a person would make in removing a very tight glove, Charley stood before her in all the glory of a bright new skin!

Nor was this all; taking up the cast-off skin which lay on the ground beside him, Charley rolled it between his four paws until it was in a tight little wad, and then popped it into his mouth and swallowed it!

This happened late in the summer and, with the approach of cool weather, Charley seemed to become uneasy, hopping constantly from place to place and digging shallow holes here and there about the yard. Whenever the little girl found one of these holes, she filled it up carefully, until her big sister caught her thus occupied one day, and told her that the toad was only looking for a place to pass the winter, and then, giving over her attempts to keep the yard in order, the little girl left Charley to his own devices.

That night there was frost for the first time that season, and when the little girl went out into the yard next morning, no Charley came at her call. Nor did she ever see him again, though whether he came up in one of the adjoining yards the next spring, or perished during the severe winter weather, she never knew.—The Churchman.

The Orange Secret

It was told me by Maritza, a little Greek girl, in far-away Turkey; and I am going to tell it here and now to everyone, because I never have found any American child who had discovered it.

I was finishing my breakfast one morning, when I heard a little sound at my elbow. It was Maritza, who had slipped off her shoes at the outer door, and come so softly through the open hall that I had not heard her.

After I had taken the parcel of sewing her mother had sent, I gave Maritza two oranges which were left on a dish on the table. One of them was big, and the other quite small.

"One orange is for you," I said, "and the other you may carry to Louka. Which one will you give to him?"

Maritza waited a long while before answering. At any time she would have thought it very rude for a little child to answer promptly, or in a voice loud enough to be easily heard, but this time she waited even longer than good manners required. She looked one orange over, and then the other. After a little more urging from me, she whispered, "This one." It was the big one.

Curious to know of the struggle which had made her so long in deciding, I said, "But why don't you give Louka the all orange? He is a small boy." Maritza dug her little stockinged toes into the carpet and twisted her apron before she answered. "Is not Anna waiting for me at the gate?" she said. "Anna and I will eat my orange together. Mine has twelve pieces, and the other only eleven. Anna would not like to take six pieces if I had only five."

You cannot see through the orange skin, Maritza, to tell how many pieces there are. How do you know?" I asked. When Maritza told me the orange secret, and this is it.

If you look at the stem-end of an orange, you will see that the scar where it was pulled away from the stem is like a little wheel, with spokes going out from the centre. If you count the spaces between these spokes, you will find that there are just as many of them as there will be sections in the orange when you cut it; and so you can tell, as Maritza did, how many "pieces" your orange has. Perhaps you think every orange has the same number, just as every apple has five cells which hold its seeds; but you will find it is not so. Why not? Well, I do not know. But, perhaps, way back in the history of the orange, when it is a flower, or perhaps when it is only a bud, something may happen which hurts some of the cells, or makes some of them out grow the rest. Then the number of cells is fixed, and, no matter how big and plump and juicy the orange becomes, it has no more sections than it had when it was a little green citron, just beginning to be an orange. The next time you eat an orange, try to find out its secret before you open it. Julia E. Twichel, in Little Folks.

Clippings

"Well, how do you like married life?" inquired the friend.

"Not at all," replied the man who had married money and was suffering for it, "I'm a case of matrimonial dyspepsia."

"Matrimonial dyspepsia?"

"Yes. She never agrees with me; she's too rich."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The celebrated English preacher, Rowland Hill, once read from his pulpit an anonymous letter telling him that our blessed Lord did not ride to church in a carriage, to which Mr. Hill replied that if the writer would come to him next Sunday saddled and bridled he would be glad to follow our Lord's example, (by riding on an ass.)

"I'm de onluckiest pesson in de roun' world," said Brother Dickey. "I tuk out a accident policy six year ago, come Chris'mus, en moved within a stone throw er five railroads, en not one er dem hez runned over me in all dat time! I ve'ly b'l'eves dat ef I wuz ter lay down en go ter sleep on de track de engineer would stop de engine en tell de head fireman ter wake me up!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Puck's Philosophy.—Praise from people that we despise generally convinces us that they have good points after all.

"O mother!" exclaimed three-year-old Margie the first time she saw hail falling, "tome look. It's wainin' pills."—Exchange.

—As a substitute for the objectionable moth ball some housewives find turpentine efficacious in keeping moths at distance. The fluid may be used either for garments or household fabrics and, unlike most moth eradicators, it leaves no odor clinging to the articles when released from their wrappings, as the fumes soon evaporate. The turpentine is applied with the aid of an atomizer. After the articles to be put away have been cleaned and brushed, they should be sprayed with turpentine, wrapped closely in newspaper and finally rolled in an old sheet. It is a good plan also to spray the packing room or closet with turpentine. An ordinary cupboard or packing box may be utilized effectively for storing woollens and furs if well sprinkled with oil of cedar. Care must be exercised so that the oil will not come in contact with the articles to be packed, as it will leave a stain.
