industry, into gardens and can boast of a long list of heroes and statesmen, philosophers and poets. Whoever, knowing what Italy and Scotland naturally are, and what four hundred years ago, they actually were, shall now compare the country round Rome with the country round Edinburgh will be able to form some judgment as to the tendency of Papal dominion. The descent of Spain; once the first among monarchies, to the lowest depths of degradation, the elevation of Holland, in spite of many natural disadvantages, to a position such as no commonwealth so small has ever reached, teach the same lesson."

That Protestantism may be true to its glorious heritage, and that the curse of Rome's scepter may not fall upon our land, the truths of history as they throw light upon the aims of the Romish Church should be made the common possession of all our people. "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates."

Very truly yours,

Bedford City, Va.

Edward E. Lane.

Reflections from a Country Manse.

The average country congregation differs from the one in the city in many ways. Socially there are none of those undefinable circles termed social. All are upon an equality. This is largely the result of intermarriage, making them more or less kinsmen. These conditions make the country congregation an easy or a difficult one to manage. The universal depravity of human nature finds vent among the men and women comprising a country congregation despite the fact that they are kinsmen and in a measure isolated from the world's conflict as it does elsewhere. Differences arise between them socially and politically that, sad to confess, are often not dropped at the gates of the Church. Many of these differences are family ones and therefore the most diabolical differences to overcome. Their character being such that the kindest meant interference only tends to make the breach wider and draw innocent parties into the turbulency. The prudence of the country pastor is here tested in a degree that few city pastors have any conception of. Here on account of some such disturbance and lack of unanimity not a few of what has been or promised to be strong country pastorates are pastorless and likely to remain so. And in many instances because the well-meant and kindly efforts of their last pastor to bring about reconciliation only resulted in a confusion worse confounded and drove him from the field. This then is a branch of every country pastor's education that cannot be acquired in any seminary but alone in the school of experience, every fresh case demanding a new and careful diagnosis, no two being exactly alike. Our observation, however, is the pastor must keep his own council and his lips sealed, then far as it is possible sealing those of gossiping friends. Succeeding in doing this, earnest prayer, God and time usually accomplish the rest. The country congregation does not fluctuate in attendance on the church services to that degree witnessed in a city one. But they do more in their manifestation of interest and zeal; at times upon the hill-top, at others in the valley. Much of this is attributable to their manner of life and avocation. The farmer or planter is a chronic optimist-pessimist. An optimist when beginning his yearly work, a pessimist in the spring, an optimist in the summer and a pessimist in the fall until his crop is gathered, housed or sold. So in his religious matters the same conditions in a measure prevail. These conditions upon the country pastor have at times a seriously depressing effect and sometimes run him off. Even those who stay unconsciously find themselves compelled to fight against falling into the same habit in their own work. To us therefore it is no sign of failure to hear a country pastor complain, nor sign for exultation to hear him boast. It is at worst only the sign his work is doing splendidly. For these reasons spring and fall protracted services in the majority of country congregations have become fixed religious institutions. They are a seeming necessity to the reviving of the members as much as reaching those unconverted. These are the seasons when religious optimism prevails: when pastor and people are conscious of marked growth in grace; when the pastor knows his people are the best and his people think that they have the best pastor. To keep at this white heat is impossible for both: to remain, however, the whole year in icy indifference would be death, hence these fluctuating become the very life-giving powers of every one of our country congregations.

Again the widespread idea that country congregations are in the main illiterate and in culture behind the average city one, is an error. We have seen few that would not compare favorably with any and all city congregations. The great majority of the male members are classical scholars and university men: the women almost without exception have finished themselves in some well known female school or seminary. Hence to suppose that a country pastor has an easy time to prepare sermons suited to the ability of his congregation, is a fatal mistake. Take for an illustration—a country pastor at one time detained over the Sabbath in a Southern city; urged by and agreeing to preach for one of its metropolitan pastors, discovered that he had with him only the notes of what his people and himself considered one of his commonplace sermons; yet that city congregation called it a wonderful effort, and synopsis of which was considered worthy of space in a secular daily and a synodical weekly organ much to the country pastor's surprise. Whenever a country pastor then decides that unprepared and crudely digested work will answer in his pulpit, the sooner that pastor seeks a city church the better for him, for his country flock will surely leave him. Considering this fact it is not to be wondered at if many of our, for a time, country pastors are found flitting from presbytery to presbytery and eventually into the ranks of the W. C.'s, nor derogatory to our vacant country pastorates in allowing them to remain there. We are far from holding that country congregations are free from faults, but their judgment upon sermonizing is certainly not one of them. There has been much unwise advice given by city pastors to country congregations as to pastoral material and that material not coming up to their demands or expectations has led the country congregations to have slight faith in their recommendations and led many of our city ministers to assert that they are too hard to please. We admit they do know what they want. And they often do not want what a city pastor seeks to force upon them. The writer remembers at one presbytery where a licentiate who had been serving a country pastorate for some time with some success, received a call from the group over the head of sessions who doubted his ability and soundness. He applied for ordination as an extraordinary case. One of our ablest city pastors urged it be granted on the ground that he suited the people and field. One of the elders from that field—now in the Church triumphant—slipped us a note during the discussion which read "We do not want an extraordinary preacher, but a regular common every day one." Defeated in his object at that presbytery, at the next through sympathy of city pastors, he was ordained, although never installed pastor, and since then has left our ministry and joined that of the M. E. Church, South. Who measured him correctly? the elder or the city pastor? We admit again that a country congregation would gladly accept a four thousand dollar a year preacher if they could get him for six hundred dollars. But we must also admit that the majority of the four thousand dollar men were successful six hundred dollar country pastors at first; and here received the training that made them acceptable in their metropolitan pastorates. This they may have forgotten or may think that if out of such material as they were the country pastorate could turn out the rounded men they now are, the same could be done with any sort of raw material sent to them. Not recognizing that the country congregation like the potter knows almost at a glance the nature and difference in the clays. In every country congregation there are discovered three distinct species of membership. The willing, indifferent and unwilling. The willing have need to be held in check, or they will break themselves down and in overdoing unintentionally work an injury to the others. Nothing we know of really worries a country pastor more than in planning how to save his willing members from being unjustly burdened. They are ready in every emergency and using a country expression "are never known to balk or fail him at a critical juncture." That he therefore should be the more considerate for them is not surprising and yet here indifference to this fact by the country pastor has resulted in some instances to his awakening at an unlooked for time and find them gone or broken down and his dependency gone with them or badly shattered. The indifferent need continual watching and urging. There is little danger of overdoing on their part, and what they do demands constant supervision that it is done properly. It is amazing, however, the willing material that may be and is developed out of this indifferent membership when fostered carefully and prayerfully by the faithful country pastor. It is really his quarry, from which he fashions the active workers both in country and city churches. Here is where the new blood is furnished in the main that makes the city churches not only aggressive, but loyal and devoted to the blue banner of Presbyterianism. Clanishness has been unsparingly denounced, but clanishness is the quality that makes and has made Presbyterianism in the past and present, present an invincible front to her enemies. Their answer is ever Jacob's sons to Joseph, "We be brethren, true men, the sons of one father," and clanism says no more. The unwilling compose a small part of the country congregation. They possess all the natural qualifications of the willing, but are balky and unreliable. Yoked with a willing worker, they pull splendidly once they are yoked. Yet constant care must be taken to see that nothing frets or galls them in the least, or they will become unmanageable at the first stiff grade. High-strung, nervous and thin skinned, checking frets, whip enrages, and gnats make them kick. Yet under the guidance of a strong but gentle driver, hitched up with a sure and steady puller the amount of good work done by them is incalculable, for light work or simple speed and to show off. The country pastor wants nothing better to make his city ministerial brother green with envy, than to hitch two of those unwilling workers when docile to the load, and let them go. But at the same time he knows what the city visitor does not: that they are exhibiting their ability and enduring qualities, not their evil propensities, and best for him and them that he should not know, because some day they may become his members and the revelation to both will be in the nature of a surprise.

Franconia, Ala.

Jno. D. Dean.

Every attempt to make others happy, every sin left behind, every temptation trampled under foot, every step forward in the cause of what is good, is a step nearer the cause of Christ.—Dean Stanley.

It is by the passion of sympathy that we enter into the concerns of others. . . . For sympathy must be considered as a sort of substitution by which we are put into the place of another man and affected in a good measure as he is affected.—Edmund Burke.

We grow most under burdens. We get strength in struggle. We learn our best lessons in suffering. The little money we are paid for our toil is not the best part of the reward—the best is what the toil does in us in new experience, in wisdom, in patience, in self-conquest.—Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D.

"As We Have Therefore Opportunity."

A day, dark, rainy, gloomy beyond all telling; the gloom stealing into the very heart of the tired woman who lay on one of the little white beds in a city hospital. Only an occasional visit from the kind nurse, and a hasty one from the doctor had broken the monotony of the day for her.

The pain, the weakness and the loneliness seemed greater than she could bear.

A tap at the door, and in response to the feeble, "come in" the bright face of a dear girl, a busy teacher in one of the city schools, appeared.

A hearty clasp of the hand, a few moments of conversation, bright bits of talk about her teaching work; some earnest words of sympathy for the sufferer; an interesting book left on the table, which furnished delightful entertainment for many days; and then this angel of mercy went softly out, leaving behind her a flood of sunshine in the heart of the weary sufferer, with renewed strength and courage to do and suffer.

This gentle act of kindness took not so much time as many a woman spends over her toilet.

Might not some other woman thus "give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water?"

At the close of another long, lonely day of pain, God again sent an angel of mercy to his suffering child. This time, the busy pastor of one of the mission churches in the city.

The bright, cheery smile could not hide the tired look on the face of this servant of God, as he took his seat by the bedside, apologizing for the late call by saying, "this has been one of my busy days." As if every day was not a "busy" one!

Then followed some bright, cheerful talk of every day matters, some expression also of deeper spiritual things, the reading in reverent tones, of a few well chosen words of Scripture and an earnest prayer to the God of all comfort.

No one can estimate the good of such ministrations as these to the weary, suffering ones thus shut out from the world, and far away from kindred and friends.

And who does not feel sure the sleep of this busy worker would be the sweeter, his pillow the softer, for this beautiful deed of kindness?

O, friends, if only we could realize the opportunities that lie all about us for doing good to others; in sharing our strength with the weak; in pouring some of our joy into other joyless lives, life would be happier and richer for us, and easier for those about us.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

P. M. Arthur a Presbyterian.

A note from State Treasurer Lacy corrects The Standard for its statement that P. M. Arthur was a Methodist. We quote from his letter:

Peter M. Arthur, Grand Chief of the Brotherhood of Engineers, was a personal friend of mine. I had met him at a great many meetings, and at several conventions, and there had a strong friendship sprung up, and I flatter myself that there were few engineers that Mr. Arthur liked any better. I have not seen him since 1892, but he was a very strong Presbyterian at that time, and made one of the best prayers that I have ever heard any man make. I saw also a notice of his funeral, and he was buried from the second Presbyterian Church in Cleveland, of which he was a member. His pastor was the Rev. Paul Sutphen, and from the information I have he did not confine himself to the Presbyterian ceremony, but made a beautiful talk about the life and character of Mr. Arthur, claiming him not only as a member of his church, but also as his intimate and personal friend, and his last sentence was this; "Lastly I must bear witness to the sweetness and the tenderness and sincerity of the walk he had with God. There was little outward demonstration of his deep and religious feeling, but no one who ever knew him could question the secret of his life work."

There is another grand old man connected with the Brotherhood, who holds the place next to Mr. Arthur, whose name is T. S. Ingraham, and he also is a member of the Presbyterian Church. I was always struck with Mr. Arthur's fearlessness, and utter disregard of personal influence when talking to the engineers about sobriety and honesty and uprightness of life and character. Way back in 1868, when he was Chief Engineer of Div. 46, he introduced this resolution, which at that time was considered very unique and very remarkable. "Resolved that any brother, guilty of contracting debts of any nature, and then refusing to pay them shall be expelled from the Brotherhood."

Brother Arthur was chosen Grand Chief at a called session of the Brotherhood in Feb. 25th, 1876, and from that time to this he has been the leading spirit and the back bone of the order.

He has insisted that the Golden Rule must be the motto of the men.

The only charge that can be brought against him was that he was too conservative, and argued too long before he was ready to make an issue with the company.

The Brotherhood convention is composed of between 500 and 600 of the brainiest and best engineers in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, and Mr. Arthur was the only man that could preside and keep them in as perfect order as a Sunday-school Convention.

I was very proud of his friendship, and am very much afraid that we will have trouble in finding a man successfully to fill his place. He was a man of great intellect, and in character the purest type of manhood. His simple dignity and kindly sympathy secured and held the love and esteem of all with whom he came in contact.

His statesmanship and splendid genius made him one of the greatest men that the world has produced. The fact that he was a Christian and based his every action and every motive upon the Bible, was, in my opinion, the secret of his wonderful success.

B. R. Lacy, State Treasurer.

Whither?

The writer has a hazy impression of reading of a people among which a parent on becoming old and a burden is made away with for (to the younger generation) reasons that seem obvious and sufficient.

To the contrary of this, the crowning virtue of the "heathen Chinese" is a respect for old age and a filial love which clings the closer as age and physical decline comes on. Those thoughts are prompted by reading the following article in your issue of 29th ult. "The Methodists are now talking about limiting the tenure of office of their bishops and putting younger men into the places of those who are to be retired on account of old age. The Methodist Young Men's League of the Northren Church calls for ten new bishops. None over forty-five and all elected for eight years only."

The "tie that binds" among Christians is or should be, fraternal—while the relation of pastor and people is still closer, and in days not far in the past, the bond was strengthened as the years went on—and he was designated the father of his people.

We send missionaries to China and we do well—but cannot they give us a few points along this line as a sort of quid pro quo?

There can't be much said against putting young men into the bishopric when youth is not made the chief reason, or to take the places of those "about to be retired on account of old age"—but there is a very frigid atmosphere about the statement that none shall be elected "over forty-five and all elected for eight years only."

And at the end of eight years—what?

Is it in the arrangement to sit upon his qualification and pass judgment as to his measuring up to the possible requirements of the times? for these are too apt to change like the fashion plates. It has been in growing evidence that the hard lines of commercialism are getting to permeate even the pulpit, for it appears to be a question of so much and of such a quality, for so long a time for so much financial consideration, or for so long as it pays, in value received in the currency required.

The pastor's scholarly attainments, the result of the toil and sacrifices of his early manhood, and the best years of his life are to be exchanged for a compensation barely sufficient to support him in his station and not be a social discredit to those whom he serves—and when by reason of infirmity of age or other causes the balance shows on the wrong side of the account, the entry to equalize it is not one which shows too much consideration for the pastor, and when the sad time comes when he is compelled to step down and out, his is to be a life of scimping poverty, or one in which his sensitive soul is to be vexed with the degrading sense of grudging charity at a time when "the grasshopper has become a burden."

It would be hard for any one in any station who is not encased in armor proof against sensitiveness, to feel that he has outlived his usefulness and is compelled to live in an atmosphere of poverty and simple toleration. How much harder is it for the pastor who has for many years gone in and out among his people, sorrowing in their sorrows, rejoicing in their joys, and hungering for their souls—his life so intertwined with theirs as to feel as part of them?

He has surely worked hard and long and though he has assuredly earned and will receive the plaudit "well done" at the last days, is it not possible he may look upon this deplorable finale as an evidence that his work has been a failure as evidenced by such fruits?

We read of a steady falling off in the number of candidates for the ministry. What else can we expect? Unless a man is willing to take the Sermon on the Mount and live it—a Tolstoi and more—not only in old age, but always, the least he can do is to hesitate.

Possibly these times are intended to cull from the many a few Jeremiahs—surely there seems to be need of them—for, while we have no idols of silver and gold, silver and gold seem to be the idols of the people. Commercialism in the sense stated does seem to be about to take possession of the pulpits. That means it is now most everywhere else. The result is obvious and the promise of social and ethical trouble galore. Half a century ago a man was of value in proportion to his experience, character and ability being the same. Now fifty is the point that marks the beginning of decay (strange paradox when the term of actual life has lengthened), and sixty the dead line! Young men, and they only, are wanted—the newer middle age the less need to apply. These conditions, it is needless to say, for those who have not the means sufficient to engage in or to continue in business as against the competition of young men and capital, and those who seek employment.

These make it necessary that a competency be secured early in life, and the time which should be for the husbanding of strength for happiness in a ripe old age is dissipated in waste of energy. Fortune often is at the cost of a broken constitution and misery in event of success, and both and poverty in failure to secure it. Is it any wonder that so many use the wide open door to businesses that de-grade?

And what greater incentive to yield to the many tempting ways for gambling? Verily, the reasons are multiplying and urgent, why the Church should marshal all her forces—she needs all the young blood she can get and cannot afford to discourage the old. Not even the world can serve God and mammon at the same time. How imperative the Church should be clear of even the odor of suspicion.

H. G. T.

George McDonald says: "If you have a disagreeable duty to perform on Friday, do not blacken the hours of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday in thinking about it."

Steele Creek Church.

Fort Mill, S. C., Aug. 3rd, 1903.

I have just returned from a few days visit to Steele Creek Church, and am so full of the matter, that I must unload on some one. Just imagine a congregation of nearly 300 people, at preaching on Thursday night, and behold that great congregation, 200 of them, perhaps, under 25 years of age, standing up, during the second prayer.

This is one of the few churches, that have not varied in our form of government. Members are received by the session, and the congregations are notified by reading the names from the pulpit. There was no long string of people, marched up in front of the pulpit, to be examined before the congregation, as if, we were congregationalists, or presented, as an advertisement of the skill of the pastor, in his fishing for souls.

Rev. H. P. Gwinn is surely the right man in the right place. An able leader of a conservative, yet vigorous church. He has one of the finest private libraries that I have seen for sometime, and it would be dangerous for any man however popular his manners, to attempt to feed Steele Creek with an empty spoon. There have already been 20 additions to the church this year, and yet, they have no evangelistic meetings nor methods. They depend upon the regular services of the sanctuary, and the preparatory services of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. I found the old-fashioned country hospitality, and the people could not do too much for you. The pastor and his family were remembered from time to time in various packages, deposited at the gate. A dozen silver knives and forks graced the table, a pleasing gift from the people. This is the only church I ever visited in which I could detect no social distinctions. Whatever might be the grades of society, the instant the feet pressed the soil around the sanctuary "the rich and the poor met together," for the Lord was the Maker of them all.

"And the man with the gold ring and in goodly apparel, and the poor man in vile raiment (only there was no vile raiment) were treated exactly alike. The old graveyard carried out the same thought. It would take an expert to find out the difference in cost, between the tombstones of the settlers of that place. In fine, I look upon Steele Creek as one of the most conservative, and at the same time one of the strongest churches within our bounds. Any minister who receives an invitation to visit that field is foolish to decline, for he will come away a thorough-going Presbyterian, and rejoicing in the old Paths.

J. H. Thornwell.

P. S. A personal privilege to me was the company of one of the "lambs of my flock" who handled the reins in a skillful manner, and with her pleasing conversation turned the tedious ride from Steele Creek home into one of joy.

How to be a Pastor.

By Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

What is the chief object of the Christian minister? It goes without saying that it is to win souls to Jesus Christ. The chief element of power with every true minister should be heart-power. The majority of all congregations—rich or poor—are reached not so much through the intellect as through the affections. This is an encouraging fact; for only one man in ten may have the talent to be a very great preacher; but all the other nine, if they love Christ and love human souls, can become great pastors. Nothing gives a pastor such heart-power as personal attentions to his people, for everybody loves to be noticed. Especially is personal sympathy welcome in seasons of trial. Let a pastor make himself at home in everybody's home; let him come often and visit their sick rooms, and kneel beside their empty cribs and their broken hearts and pray with them; let him go and see the business men when they have suffered reverses, and give them a word of cheer; let him recognize and speak kindly to the children, and he will weave a cord around the hearts of his people that will stand a prodigious pressure. His inferior sermons (for about every minister preaches such sometimes) will be kindly condoned and he can launch the most sharp and pungent truths at them from the pulpit, and they will not take offense. He will have won their hearts to himself, and that is a mighty step toward drawing them to the house of God and winning their souls to the Saviour. "A house-going minister," said Chalmers, "makes a church-going people."

The chief end of a minister's work must never be lost sight of. It is to awaken the careless, to warn the endangered, to comfort the sorrowing, to help the weak, and to edify believers; in short, it is to make bad people good, and good people better. Preaching strong gospel sermons is one of the most effective means to this end. But it is not the only one. Outside of the pulpit every messenger of Christ can come to close quarters with the individual soul and preach eye to eye; no one can dodge such preaching or go to sleep under it. If the shepherd can only save the sheep by going after the sheep, then woe be unto him if he neglect his duty! As many souls are won to Christ outside the pulpit as in the pulpit. Every discourse, too, can be lodged more securely in the hearts of the people by constant and affectionate intercourse with them during the week. I am firmly persuaded that if many a minister would take part of the time he now spends in polishing his discourses, and devote it to pastoral visitation, he would have larger congregations and a far larger number of conversions to Christ. He would be a healthier man for the physical exercise; he would be a more fluent speaker from the practice he would gain in personal conversation; he would be a much more tender, eloquent, and heart-moving ambassador of Christ.

"How shall I become a pastor?" To this question I would reply; Determine to become one, cost what it may. If you are shy and bashful, conquer your diffidence; a man has no business to be a shepherd if he is afraid of the sheep. If you are naturally reserved and reticent, unlock your lips. Go and talk with your people about anything or everything, until you get in touch with them; and then if you have any grace or "gumption" you can certainly manage to say something to them about the "one thing needful." It is not best that a minister should talk exclusively about things spiritual. Talk to them about their business, and show your interest in what they are doing. Encourage them to talk with you about your discourses; you will discover what shots strike and what are only blank cartridges. Watch your chance to put in a timely and loving word for your Master. You are Christ's man on Christ's business. If you can only gain your point by going often to the house, then go often. One soul won will win others. You can reach the parents sometimes by reaching the son or daughter. These personal conversations with individual souls will train you to be a closer, more suggestive and practical teacher. They will make you colloquial and simple and direct in the pulpit. Half of all the preaching is fired into the air. By knowing your auditors thoroughly, you can learn how to take aim. You will gather also most precious material for your sermons by going about among your people and finding out what they are doing, what they are thinking, what they are suffering, and what they need.

Resolve to devote a portion of every day to pastoral service. To visit a large congregation consumes a vast amount of time; but can you spend it more profitably elsewhere? Be on the lookout for sermon hits wherever you go; one hour with a live man may teach you more than two hours with a dead book. Do your book work and your Bible study in the forenoon, when your mind is fresh; devote your afternoons to making or receiving visits. Your evenings can be used for religious services and for some social recreations, and for occasional pastoral visits and for general reading. But be wise enough not to burn out your brains in writing sermons by lamplight. Morning is the time which God gives you for study.

The Wages of Life.

What we get for our work in the world is quite a different thing from what we get for our life. The wages paid to us for the various kinds of labor that we perform can be reckoned in shillings, or dollars, or francs, or marks. But the wages of life, the reward that we get for simply living, is something that can not be computed in any coin. It is just this—more life.

This thought has come home to me in the reading of a remarkable book called "A Child of Nature," by Hamilton W. Mabe. The book is remarkable not because it is in any way sensational, but because it narrates with such singular clearness, simplicity and charm the life-history of a human soul. It begins at the funeral of John Foster, a New England farmer, whose work had not been very well paid from the pecuniary point of view, and who died at sixty, a rather lonely, poor and obscure man. But he was not an unsatisfied man. His hard-handed and hard-minded neighbors saw in his countenance, as they filed into the shadowed room to look for the last time at one of whom they had been used to think with something of pity and something of contempt, an expression of contented calm,—“the assurance of success which rested on John Foster's face like a decisive judgment on his life.”

They saw this, and half-wondered at it, half-resented it. It seemed to them as if he, the failure, had won something which they, the successful men, had missed. Like the first-hour laborers, in the parable of the vineyard, they felt injured because an eleventh-hour laborer, one who had done little work, according to their standard, had received full pay. And this pay, of which John Foster's peaceful face, with its tranquil lips half-smiling, seemed to say such beautiful and grateful things—what was it? Doubtless the hard-minded neighbors could never quite understand what it was; but to those who have the sympathetic mind and the thoughtful heart the book makes the secret an open one. The signature of peace on John Foster's face was his receipt in full for the wages of life.

The story goes back to his boyhood, and shows the shy, solitary lad growing up among the hills, and coming into harmony with them. Patient, expectant, sensitive, he looked and listened his way through his little world.

“Earth and the common face of nature spake
To him rememberable things.”

“His body was often at work while his mind was at play: for birds sang over the meadows as he did his chores, and over the harvest field there was always the arch of the sky, with room enough for a boy's soul to range in and a boy's heart to make its home.”

This fellowship with nature wrought its grace into his outward form. Something of the transformation which Hawthorne, in his story of "The Great Stone Face," describes in the countenance of Ernest, was accomplished in John Foster. The things that he saw and heard in the great world of everyday marvels were reflected in the light of his eyes and the tranquility of his brow. He inherited the insignia of one of nature's noblemen.

Then, one day when he had taken the Bible into the woods with him, the world of religion began to open itself to the boy. The book sang strange and sweet music to him, at first fragmentary and mysterious, but gradually growing clearer and more harmonious until at last he heard unmistakably the Divine Voice among the trees of the garden in the cool of the evening.

Other books, poetry, history, philosophy,—those books which Wordsworth says “are a substantial world, both pure and good,”—came into his possession and entered into his life. His horizon expanded. His interests ran far out beyond the bounds of his age and his habitation. His friendship overflowed the limit of his acquaintance. He knew more men and women than he had ever seen. He fell heir to a share in the residuary estate of humanity.

Then came love,—the miracle in which self is lost to be found. Why John Foster's romance had “no earthly close” the book does not tell us; there are no adventures in it; indeed it hardly narrates a single definite event. But though his love was untold, it was not fruitless. It pacified and enriched his heart by the adoration which it paid to serene and simple womanhood in the person of “one maiden only.”

A long, still, steadfast life, full of small duties and large thoughts bounded by narrow circumstances and expanded by lofty visions, poor in money, rich in meaning,—that was John Foster's existence. It satisfied him because through it all he knew that he was growing,—growing in self-control, growing in depth and wealth of feeling, growing in harmony with that

“One God, one law, one element
And one far-off divine event
Towards which the whole creation moves.”

The power of self-expression was a gift that had been denied to this rich life. But through his later years Foster had kept some record of his thoughts and inward experiences, written in fragmentary diaries and disconnected notes. After his death, a young man, Ralph Parkman, in many ways his exact counterpart, came to live in his deserted house. Parkman was rich in power of expression, but poor in inward experience; he had lived in the busy world and won many of its prizes, but had not yet entered into the full possession of his own life. Discontented with the abundant rewards of his brilliant work, he had come away to the quiet farmhouse among the hills as to a retreat, dimly hoping to find his better self. Nature welcomed him and healed him. The air of the old house, haunted by memories of its former tenant, tranquilized and elevated his spirit. The records of Foster's inner life, discovered one winter evening in the desk where they had lain unnoticed for many months, fell like vital germs into the fruitful soil of Parkman's mind.

Here was the truth for which he had been waiting. Here was the precious material upon which his hoping genius had been unconsciously preparing to work. “A little book went forth in the early summer from the old house, but it was very deep and beautiful; like a quiet mountain pool, it was far from the dust and tumult of the highways, and there were images of stars in it.” It was John Foster's resurrection; the memorial of his secret and complete success; the translation of the hidden meaning of his existence. And I think it read thus:

“Better than the wages of work are the wages of life.
For unto him that hath shall be given: and he shall have life more abundantly.”

Henry van Dyke, in The Interior.

Every farmer boy wants to be a school-teacher, every school-teacher hopes to be an editor, every editor would like to be a banker, every banker would like to be a trust magnate, and every trust magnate hopes some day to own a farm and have chickens and cows and pigs and horses to look after. We end where we begin.—Salina Index.

Hugh Price Hughes once said of a certain man: “He may be very religious, but he does not remind me of Jesus Christ.” Let the reader try his religion by this test—does it lift his life daily into approximation to the Christ likeness? Does it make him in any way a representative of his Lord?—Exchange.

This is the way to cultivate courage: First, by standing firm on some conscientious principle, some love of duty; next, by being faithful to truth and right on small occasions and common events; third, by trusting in God for help and power.—Rev. J. C. Walker, in Canadian Epworth Era.

“I can't convict you on the evidence,” said the back woods justice, “but I'm going to fine you ten dollars for contempt for lookin' like I couldn't.—Atlanta Constitution.

CONTENTS.

	Page
EDITORIAL:
Event and Comment.....	3
Legislation and Righteousness.....	4-5
Are We Worthy of this Praise?.....	5-6
Review of Contemporaries.....	6-7
DEVOTIONAL:
Principles.....	8
MISSIONARY:
'Love Me, Too.'.....	8
SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON:
David and Jonathau. Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D.....	9
WESTMINSTER LEAGUE.
Our Duty to the Stranger. Rev. H. W. Hoon....	9
CONTRIBUTED:
The Episcopal Church "Protestant." G. L. L....	10
The Papacy. Edward E. Lane.....	10-11
Reflections from a Country Manse. Rev. J. D. Dean	11-12
"As we have therefore Opportunity.".....	12
P. M. Arthur a Presbyterian. B. R. Lacy.....	12-13
Whither? H. G. T.....	13
Steele Creek Church. Rev. J. H. Thornwell....	14
How to be a Pastor. Rev. Theo. L. Cuyler, D. D.	14
The Wages of Life. Rev. Henry van Dyke, D. D.	15
CHURCH NEWS.....	16-19
THE WORLD .....	20-21
The Home Circle.....	22-23
Marriages and Deaths.....	24-25
Our Young People.....	26-29
Our Little Folks.....	30-33

The Editor's Chat with the Reader.

Dr. Leyburn sends us, with a happy introduction, a clipping that should contribute to the gayety of nations. Rev. Edward Lane who writes on The Papacy is the son of an honored missionary of our Church in Brazil, who knew what Romanism was as well as any man of his generation and fought it to the end of his life. Rev. J. D. Dean draws the time-honored contrast between the city and country pastorate. We wonder if there will ever be a debate between the inhabitants of the Holy City and the Heavenly Country, continuing one begun on earth? Dr. Cuyler sends a note with his splendid article on How to be a Pastor, which the editor is really too modest to print, though that may be an unsuspected virtue. "As we have therefore Opportunity" is a suggestive hospital incident. Our friend, the State Treasurer, corrects us as to the denomination to which P. M. Arthur belonged. We are glad to know that he was a Presbyterian. H. G. T. protests against the age limit on the wrong side. And Dr. van Dyke, in the Outlook, preaches on the Wages of Life. We are obliged to the Outlook for saying so clearly that this State was the Southerner's Fatherland.

PERSONALS.

We are sorry to learn that Rev. R. P. Farris, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., continues critically ill.

Rev. R. H. Morris has resigned the pastorate of the Barnesville, Ga., Presbyterian Church and will take a course in the University at Princeton.

North Carolina Presbyterians will sympathize deeply with Rev. E. E. Gillespie in the sudden death of his father, Mr. E. E. Gillespie, at Greensboro, on the 15th inst.

Dr. and Mrs. George Worth, of Wilmington, are preparing to return to China. These devoted missionaries leave their two little daughters sleeping in a Wilmington cemetery.

Rev. E. W. Smith, D. D., of the First Church, Greensboro, has been taking a two weeks' rest at home. His pulpit was filled most acceptably by Rev. C. F. Rankin, of Red Springs.

We regret to announce the death of Mrs. E. Gay Brooke, wife of the Rev. Dr. F. J. Brooke, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Alexandria, which occurred on the 11th at the Memorial Hospital, Richmond.

In the absence of Rev. J. R. Howerton, who is spending his vacation in Virginia, Rev. Walter Walsh preached at the First Church, Charlotte, last Sunday morning, and Rev. P. H. Gwinn, of Steele Creek Church, occupied the pulpit at night.

Church News.*GEORGIA

CLIMAX CHURCH.—At the last communion, the first Sunday in July, two persons were received on profession of faith. The new manse will soon be ready for occupancy, and will be finished in a short while.

Rev. A. B. Curry, D. D., of Memphis, Tenn., has recently been on a visit to this, his old home church, and preached four very instructive sermons, which were greatly enjoyed by the people, all denominations coming to hear him. We expect to hold a protracted meeting here, embracing the first Sabbath in September, assisted by Rev. C. H. Hyde, the Evangelist, of Macon Presbytery.

FACEVILLE CHURCH.—Our communion at this church was held on last Sabbath, the 9th inst. One person was received by letter, and Mr. Thos. Whigham was elected, ordained and installed deacon. At a meeting here in July we had the help of Rev. N. P. Quarterman of Quincy, Fla. Two were received on profession of faith and one infant baptized. The church has sustained a heavy loss in the recent death of an aged elder, Mr. John G. Fair.

CAIRO CHURCH.—Some valuable improvements have been undertaken in the house of worship, which will add greatly to its appearance and comfort; papering and painting the interior, and a new roof and painting for the outside.

PLEASANT GROVE CHURCH.—We expect to begin a protracted meeting here in September, having the assistance of Rev. Frederick Perkins of Bainbridge, Ga. We hope also before long to make some repairs and improvements in the church building.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Pee Dee Presbytery will meet in McColl, S. C., Tuesday, Sept. 29th, at 10 a. m.

ANTIOCH.—On 7th inst. a meeting was closed in Old Antioch near Reidsville, S. C. The organization was moved out of this church to Reidsville five miles away, years ago. A new population has gathered about the old building, and now there may be soon a new organization in it. There were about twelve inquirers for the way of life. Preaching was done by Rev. B. P. Reid.

OLD FIELD CHURCH.—Rev. V. R. Gaston, of Mt. Zion Church, Harmony Presbytery, S. C., preached five days for, Rev. B. P. Reid in Old Field Church, Laurens county, S. C. There were five additions to the church. The congregations grew under his preaching. His sermons are short, instructive and forcible. He is well suited for protracted meeting work.

ALABAMA.

At an adjourned meeting of the Presbytery of Tuscaloosa, held at Selma, Ala., July 30th, Mr. R. F. Otts was, after due examination, licensed as a probationer for the gospel ministry. He has been called to the pastorate of Valley Creek Church near Selma, and since he completed his course at Columbia Seminary in May last has been occupying the pulpit of that church. He is a son of the late Rev. Dr. J. M. P. Otts, of Greensboro, Ala.

J. G. Praigg, S. C.

TUSCALOOSA PRESBYTERY.—The next stated meeting of the Presbytery of Tuscaloosa will be held at Newbern, Ala., 7:30 p. m., Tuesday, Oct. 6, 1903.

J. G. Praigg, S. C.

PEA RIVER.—For many years the fourth Sabbath of July has been the time for the midsummer communion and protracted meeting at this church and to it the whole Presbyterian population look forward with much anticipation, many coming from adjoining counties whence their families had removed. The tender ties of kindred, precious memories and hallowed association all serve to bind their hearts to this spot. This year the meeting was begun by the pastor on Saturday, July the 26th, and was joined by Rev. J. W. Roseborough of Union Springs, Ala., on Wednesday following, who preached for us eight days with great pleasure and profit to all. There were seventeen additions to the church during the meeting, all young people, though a number were grown—one a young husband and father.

R. J. McF.

NORTH CAROLINA.

WILMINGTON PRESBYTERIAL UNION.—The Woman's Missionary Union of Wilmington Presbytery held its annual meeting at Chadbourn, N. C., June 17-18, 1903. There were present delegates from 13 Ladies' Societies and 8 Young People's Bands.

In addition to the delegates present were a number of visitors from other denominations, adding greatly to the spirit and interest manifested in this meeting which was indeed the most gloriously enthusiastic gathering held since the organization of the Union in 1887.

The meeting was opened with devotional exercises conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. E. L. Winecoff; a most happy greeting by Mrs. J. A. Brown, of Chadbourn Church, and response by Miss Annie Moore of Burgaw.

Then came beautiful words of cheer, along with encouraging report of the past year's work, by the President, Mrs. Jackson Johnson.

Following this came a written narration of "Organization and Development of W. M. U. in Wilmington Presbytery," sent by Mrs. B. F. Hall, who presided over the Union for 13 years from the time of its organization.

The afternoon of the first day was devoted to the Young People. Mrs. Stewart, agent of Y. P. work gave a most interesting account of this work in which she has labored for one year with much success.

The many delegates from the Young People's Bands, and their bright faces animated with fervent zeal, was indeed the most encouraging feature of the Assembly. Papers showing what has been accomplished in each of our seven fields and the appeal from each field, were contributed by them, as follows:

China—Mary Calvin.

Brazil—Marie Russell.

Mexico—Edna McMillan.

Japan—Charlotte Duffv.

Africa—Ethel Hanna.

Korea—Cora Moore.

Cuba—Ethel Clark.

"Five Barley Loaves"—Mary Corbett.

These papers so intelligently written and beautifully read were full of hope and promise for the future. This session was closed by "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" sung by little six-year-old Mary Hannis Whitted, who captivated all hearts.

On Wednesday evening Dr. McClure very ably set forth the necessity of Missionary work, dwelling upon the fact that Missions and Missionaries do not only promote spiritual interest, but discovery, commerce and all the material interests of countries.

The day was closed by a charming reception given to the delegates and visitors at the home of Mrs. J. B. Chadbourn. Excellent papers read during the meeting were, "Best Methods of developing children's work," by Mrs. A. A. Willard; "Forward Movement," Miss F. Pearsall; "The Debt we owe the East," Miss A. B. Black; "Systematic study of Missions," Miss M. J. Taylor.

The open discussion following the opening of the "Question Box" created a peculiar interest and gave rise to many helpful suggestions from individuals.

Very appropriate and loving words were spoken by the President during the "Memorial Service." The meeting closed with a very sweet Praise Service, conducted by Miss Katherine Cromartie. One delightful feature of this service was as follows: at the request of the Leader, one after another gave some special cause for thanksgiving,—"that 135,000 in Austria had turned from the Roman Catholic religion to Protestantism during the past year;" "that though our funds were lacking, we had volunteers willing to go out," etc. A very special cause for rejoicing as we came away from Chadbourn was, that one of the visible first fruits of the meeting there was the organization of a Young People's Band at the close of the first day, and at the close of the second day a Ladies' Foreign Missionary Society.

With devout thankfulness for the encouraging year just closed, with bright memories of our precious meeting together, and of the beautiful hospitality of the Chadbourn people, we go forward to the next year's work.

E. W. Murphy, Sec. pro tem.

SHILOH CHURCH.—A very profitable and gracious meeting was conducted in this church by the pastor the last week of July. God's people were greatly revived and five were added to the church on profession of faith in Christ.

RUTHERFORDTON.—During July there were seven additions to this church on profession of faith. Four of these are some of the fruits of Twitty's Chapel, erected a few years ago, three miles west of Rutherfordton.

DUNCAN CREEK.—This old church has been greatly revived by almost a week of preaching in which the pastor assisted part of the time by Rev. G. W. Belk of Charlotte. These were two added to the church upon profession of faith in Christ.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—The prospect for a large opening on Sept. 1st is very bright. Mr. W. W. Brand, the newly elected principal, has been making a thorough canvass of King's Mountain Presbytery, and finds the sympathy and support of the people of the Presbytery solidly behind the school.

SUGAR CREEK.—The summer Communion was held at Sugar Creek Church on the second Sabbath in August after a week's service. Rev. J. A. McMurray aided the pastor during the latter part of the meeting. There were two additions on profession.

TENNESSEE.

The Presbytery of Nashville will meet Tuesday, Sept. 8th, 1903, 7:30 p. m. in Hall Church, Rutherford county, Tenn.

R. S. Burwell, S. C.

VIRGINIA.

Union Theological Seminary.

The ninety-second annual session of the seminary begins on Sept. 9th. The buildings have been thoroughly overhauled and are sweet and clean, and the grounds, with their great sweep of green campus and white drives and walks, are more beautiful than ever.

Already there are more than twenty-nine students in sight, though it is nearly a month yet till the term opens. This looks like there would be a large attendance this year, a fact which will cheer the heart of the Church.

One of the new students expected is Rev. Mr. Sasakura, a Japanese brother who for ten years has been the pastor of our Church in Nagoya, but now comes to Union for fuller fitting for his work. The presence of these brethren from the foreign field has uniformly proved to be a source of pleasure and spiritual uplift in the seminary. The recent sojourn with us of Mr. Patton of China and Mr. Reynolds of Korea, is gratefully remembered.

The two Persian brethren who have been with us for some years, Rev. I. E. Yohanan and Rev. M. Y. Sayad, are soon to return to their native land. A special meeting to bid them farewell was held in the Grace Street Church last Sunday night.

The directors of the seminary have in mind plans for still other additions to its already excellent material equipment and for the still further increase of its efficiency as a training school for ministers who shall be earnest in spirit, sound in doctrine, and up to date in practical methods.

As the Christian Observer recently remarked, "The very name of Union Seminary stands for much in the affections of a large part of our ministry. Its history has been one of uninterrupted usefulness, and its alumni are men of sound views and real effectiveness in the ministry." That is a record which we may heartily thank God for, and we purpose by the aid of his grace to maintain it throughout the future.

PULASKI CITY.—Protracted services will be held at the Presbyterian Church in Pulaski, conducted by Rev. W. D. Morton, D. D., of North Carolina, commencing to-night and continuing a week or more. Preaching twice a day 10:30 a. m. and 8 p. m. The congregations of all the churches of Pulaski and the public generally are cordially invited. Dr. Morton is a very impressive preacher and has been very successful both as pastor and evangelist in several Southern States.—Exchange.

The Presbytery of Norfolk will meet at Gloucester, Va., Tuesday, Oct. 6th, at 8 p. m.

E. B. McCluer, S. C.

Winchester Presbytery will meet in Petersburg, Va., Sept. 1st, 1903, 7:30 p. m.

A. G. Liuk, S. C.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Wm E Dodge Dead.

The death of Mr. William E. Dodge, of New York City, occurred on last Sunday afternoon at Bar Harbor, at the age of seventy-one years. Though in impaired health for some time, his death was not anticipated, and came as a great shock to the family and a large circle of friends. Like his father, Mr. Dodge has been a wealthy citizen of much public spirit and of large Christian philanthropy. He was connected with many business corporations, and perhaps with more educational, art, and philanthropic associations. For years he has been a leading officer of the Young Men's Christian Association, and was President of the Evangelical Association.—Central Presbyterian.

A Decrease of $74,000.

This is what the annual report of the American Bible Society shows in the receipts of the year ending March 31st, as compared with those of the year preceding; a falling off of nearly one-third of the funds contributed.

When we consider that last year was one of unprecedented prosperity financially, that the most magnificent opportunities for circulating the Scriptures the world has ever known were presented through the open doors in all lands and the readiness of the people everywhere to receive the Bible; and the American Bible Society was making the largest distribution in its history, sending out nearly 2,000,000 volumes during the year; how can we explain this large decrease in gifts? Who is responsible for it? Brother pastor, did you fail to present the cause to your people and give them an opportunity to contribute to it?

And now what must be the consequence? Necessarily, a curtailment of the work. And what does that mean? In so far, a forfeiture of the golden opportunity offered us in Divine Providence of evangelizing the nations through the fundamental service of putting God's Word of saving truth into the hands of the people, and also the crippling of our foreign missions in withdrawing the important help of the Bible Society, which is admitted to be the right arm of the missionary in his work.

Let us look these facts squarely in the face, rally with fresh zeal and energy around this noble cause and all seek to do what we can to redeem the losses of the past year.

T. H. Law.

The Children's Mission School

Dear Children and Sabbath-school Workers:

The General Assembly some years ago appointed the fifth Sabbaths as the time for collections in all the Sabbath-schools for our "Mission Schools" in the Indian Territory. This not only gives the children some special work for Christ, but it seems specially appropriate that the Sabbath-school children should be asked to work for the good of other children who are destitute and in need of help.

No one can tell the possibilities for good wrapped up in a little child. Some educated in our "Mission Schools" will some day be called of God to preach the gospel. Others will be fitted for other positions of usefulness in the Kingdom of Christ. The pennies of the children may seem but a small offering to Christ, yet with his blessing they will bring in grand results in noble men and women, trained for the service of our Lord and Master.

Last year was our most successful year in mission work; and these schools will all open again in September. As the gifts of the children increase we wish to open more schools. There are thousands of needy children in the Indian Territory looking to the Presbyterian Church for help, who will get no education except as we furnish it.

The next fifth Sabbath will be August 30. Give the children a chance to help in this good work, and they will always respond.

Let us bring our gifts to Jesus in love and faith, believing that he accepts them for his work.

Forward offerings promptly to

W. A. Powell, Atlanta, Ga.

S. L. Morris,

Sec'y Home Miss., Pres'n Ch., U. S.

Making Room for the Little Fellow.

Charity and Children tells the story of a little boy, worn with premature burdeus, whose life went out in the plea: "Oh, Lord, can't you make room for a little fellow?" 'Twas the same pitiful situation repeated countless times since the inns were closed at Bethlehem, but making room for the outside child is what the Synod of North Carolina, Mr. Boyd and a few large-hearted men and women are trying to do at Barium Springs.

How much has really been done and how much remains to be done is not realized by our people. I am persuaded that the beginnings have been forgotten, and so I am going to tell it to you, and I only wish you could first sit down to dinner in the cool dining room, and see the prettily arranged and decorated tables, share the well-cooked and daintily served, but plain dinner, and then hear the Superintendent tell the story. I from start to finish, self was left out and those who steadied his hands with sympathy and money put far in the foreground.

The breeze rustled the curtains, a five-year-old baby lay asleep on each of two lounges and through the open door came the low laughter of little girls playing jack-locks.

The Synod took up the work begun by Charlotte ladies, in 1891. The frame building was opened in January and the first group of children was received. Through the spring and summer the burden was heavy, but the opportunity of laying the cause before the Synod at Durham cheered the workers; then, as now, the only thing needful was to get the ear of the Church. But at the Durham meeting the North Carolina Home Mission work was launched and there was only six minutes given to hearing of the plans and needs of the baby institution. The door was shut and the child was outside.

The heavy-hearted Superintendent could only go back to his desk and leave the burden with the Master. The answer was swift and sure. The cry of fire sounded and within a little while the Home was in ashes. In that day of heartsickness a friend, whose eyes looked into the future, sent the cheering message that this was God's way of placing the work upon the hearts of his people. Mr. Geo. W. Watts generously agreed to duplicate a $5,000 cottage to be built by the Synod. Then the central Rumble Hall was erected at a cost of $9,000, $3,000 of this amount being legacies, and the remainder subscription. The Lees cottage was next built and Mr. Watts gave the pretty little white Infirmary, but so well are the children, usually, that eight girls and a teacher use the building for sleeping rooms. The Superintendent's cottage came through Mr. Watt's thoughtfulness and the energy of Rev. E. E. Gillespie. The library is a gift of Mr. and Mrs. Burroughs of Charlotte, in memory of their only daughter who died childless, and whose paintings beautify the walls. The Howard cottage, a duplicate of and facing Lees cottage, will be ready within a few weeks and then 150 children can find a sweet asylum. Hundreds of shade trees have been planted, nearly a thousand fruit trees are growing and the dairy will soon furnish the milk and butter needed.

This far the story goes buoyantly forward, but to tell it all, we must go back a little. Nineteen months ago the laundry building was burned and where do you think those young girls have done the washing through all these weeks? In the chicken house—all by hand. And the 127 now there, soil aprons and shirt-waists in the same ratio that your boys and girls do.

With far-sightedness, the Regents planned a building that can be utilized in various ways. With an engine to run the laundry machinery, power can be furnished for the printing equipment (and you, who read "Our Fatherless Ones" must not forget that it is printed by thirteen year old boys—two of them turning a press large enough to print four of its pages at one time. That ponderous lever must be lifted and pulled forward 8,000 times to get out an issue. This will make your shoulders ache—at least I hope it will,) and a shoe-shop and wood-working shop can be possible. The walls of this building are up and the roof is on, as Mr. Boyd told us last week, but before its completion and equipment with boy and girl-saving machinery, $3,000 is needed.

This is the building season. The need speaks for itself.

Then Little Joe's Church is to be built. We all remember the little boy that died not long since, who left his pennies for a corner stone of the neat little brick church that will be located in the grove. About one-third of the amount needed has been sent. Greensboro, Raleigh, Winston and other places have done nobly.

Couldn't the children of North Carolina build this? Some gifts have come from mothers whose arms are empty—what more beautiful memorial—for the children, by the children?

The support fund would be everlastingly provided for if each of our four hundred (more or less) Sunday-schools would take up a monthly collection and send it in on Monday. Does yours? Nothing appeals so to the children of our Sunday-schools, and what is given regularly is twice given. For instance, if Mr. Boyd knew now what he would receive next month and the succeeding months, he could buy coal while it is cheaper, for the winter's needs.

Largely through gifts of individuals the Synod has a property of something like $45,000, the interest on which will be a continually growing band of trained young men and women. If you are not right sure about these things put down your work and look into the happy faces of our children, see the instant and cheerful obedience that is rendered, the tenderness of the older ones for the younger, the dignity, the esprit de corps,—these are the straws in vacation time. Beginning in September, a tenth grade will be added to the course of study and when completed the boys and girls can enter our Church and State colleges, or go out into the world ready to face it. X.

Publication Notes.

Work on our new building is under way, and we hope to have it ready for occupancy not later than Jan. 1st. The building will cover 50 by 65 feet, and will have four stories above basement. It will front on Sixth Street just off of Broad Street, in the most popular retail district of the city.

The first floor will be devoted to the retail department, and the second will be given up to offices and a small assembly hall seating about one hundred, which will be used by the city union of Presbyterian pastors, for call meetings of Presbytery and for special meetings concerning various departments of our Church work.

The third floor will be used as our mail order department, and the fourth will contain our Periodical Department.

The basement will be used for storage of stereotype plates and surplus stock, and will contain the heating plant and electric equipment for operating elevator. Pressed brick will be used for the exterior, and the cost of building complete will be $25,000. While not elaborate or expensive, the building is pleasing architecturally and will be a credit to our Church, and will be large enough to accommodate our business for years to come.

The residence on the lot purchased by the Committee will be retained, and has been rented for $800 per year.

We call attention to the following resolution, adopted by the Assembly: "That the Assembly's Standing Committees of Publication, Sabbath-schools and Young People's Societies be consolidated into one committee, to be called the Standing Committee of Publication and Sabbath-school Work, and that the Synods and Presbyteries be requested to make a similar change, in the interest of simplicity and effectiveness of organization."

The work delegated to our Committee embraces the publishing and distribution of helpful literature, the organization of mission schools in destitute regions, and the donation of literature to struggling churches, Sunday-schools, and needy individuals. In view of the complex character of this work, it is often difficult to tell who should direct the forces in the Synods and Presbyteries—the Publication or the Sunday-school Committee—and the consolidation of these two committees is clearly an act of highest wisdom.

Your Executive Committee has given the details of the proposed consolidation and re-organization the most careful consideration, and it is hoped the change will be made at the first available meeting of the Synods and Presbyteries.

We respectfully offer the following suggestions as to how the plan of the Assembly may best be carried out:

1. Let the Synodical Committee of Publication and Sabbath-school Work consist of the Chairmen of the Presbyterian Committees, with such other members as the Synod may see fit to appoint.

2. Let the Presbyterial Committees consist of five members, carefully selected with reference to their efficacy, and let the work be sub-divided about as follows:

1. Let one member be charged with the oversight of the equipment of the Sunday-schools, and approve to the Publication Committee all applications for free donations of literature.

2. Let another be charged with the duty of arranging each year for at least one Sunday-school Institute in the Presbytery (as ordered by the Assembly), and for the introduction of the graded course of lessons in the Sunday-schools.

3. Let a third be charged with the organization and maintenance of mission Sunday-schools in the destitute sections of the Presbytery.

4. Let a fourth man direct the organization and development of Home Departments in all the churches.

5. Let a fifth man be responsible for the organization of Young People's Societies in all the churches, according to the plan of the General Assembly.

This plan, if carried out, will give every member of the Committee a definite duty, and the result should be a decided advance in each Presbytery.

The Elizabeth Blake Hospital.

Dr. J. R. Wilkinson.

When the Elizabeth Blake Hospital was opened June, 1898, it was decided to place the expense of supporting each cot at $20 per year. The amount required to purchase the cot, supply bed clothes and clothing for the patient is $25. Up to this year no change has been made in the amount fixed as necessary to support a cot. The deficiencies have been made up from the general treasury and income of the hospital realized in collections from patients who were well able to pay for some portion of their expenses. In readjusting the work it has been deemed wiser to make more definite arrangements. The friends of the hospital, as a rule, desire to have the privilege of entirely supporting a cot. We have found that $50 will, on the average, cover the actual expense and this amount is now named as necessary for the annual support of a cot. The $50 is expected to cover the entire expense of one patient for one year, often including milk, chicken soup and eggs and beef, such diet as fever patients must have, medicines of all kinds, nursing, laundry, keeping up the bed clothes and clothes for the patients that are worn out or stolen.

The question may be asked if the entire support of the cots is provided for what will be done with the income of the hospital? We feel it wise to encourage all patients to contribute as they are able so as not to foster a spirit of helplessness and laziness among the people, but on the other hand to cultivate them in independence and self-support. Last year, 1902, the total expense of supporting the hospital which included the treatment of five thousand patients in the clinic and furnishing them all their medicines and bandages and dressing besides caring for 517 patients in the hospital on the cots where everything was furnished, was $1,400. Of this amount $1200 was received from sources of self-support, that is payment for food, medicines, etc., and visits to patients in their homes. Of the $1,400 expense last year the amount our churches were called on for was only $200 at the rate of exchange when I left Soochow last spring. The larger part of this amount was paid by friends in the home churches at the rate of $20 per cot; so only the balance of expense over what was thus paid was used of the $1,200. The unused portion of the income was turned into the general treasury to meet a number of expenses not provided for by special support. It will be seen, therefore, that if the entire support of the hospital is provided for by churches and societies the income of the hospital comes back to the mission and will be used to meet such general and special expenses as are not included in the amount contributed for special support.

If the hospital can be maintained at so little actual expense to our churches, and it is proving such a valuable means of spreading the gospel to this people, it is not unreasonable to expect the church, in addition to the prayers and moral support, to provide for sending out men necessary to the doing of good work in the hospital, itself and the training of the students more thoroughly for the positions which they would be called upon to occupy in the establishment of an independent Presbyterian Church. The hospital has now a church of twenty members. Many others are applying for admission and are being taught by our evangelists and workers.

The World.

Phil May, the humorous illustrator of England, died last week.

King Alfonso of Spain is reported to be suffering from consumption.

The British Parliament was prorogued by King Edward until Nov. 2.

The British House of Lords passed the third reading of the Irish Land Bill.

The Vesuvius Volcano is again in eruption and is causing intense alarm in Italy.

Lord Salisbury, late Premier of Great Britain, is seriously ill at his home in England.

The Catholic Herald announces that Vincenzo Vannutelli will be Papal Secretary of State.

The decline in prices in Wall Street has been reckoned as entailing a loss of $2,000,000,000.

Lord Curzon's term of office as Viceroy of India has been extended from January to May, 1904.

Privy Councilor Luig urges young Germans to visit the United States and study American methods.

Secretary of War Root will tender his resignation before he sails for Europe to sit with the Alaskan Boundary Commission.

The strike riots at Cracow, Austrian Poland, have resulted in sixty deaths through conflicts between the strikers and the troops.

The hundredth anniversary of the birth of John Ericsson was celebrated in New York by the unveiling of a statue in Battery Park.

The number of employes of the railways of the United States at the close of last year was 1,189,315, an increase for the year of 118,146.

The Island of Jamaica was swept by a hurricane, causing a property loss of $10,000,000. Fifty lives were lost and hundreds of people injured.

An earthquake in the island of Crete caused great loss of life and destruction of property. The shocks were felt throughout Greece and Italy.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the World's Museum of the Y. M. C. A. will be celebrated this week in Geneva, Switzerland.

The sugar bounty question is again before the Treasury Department. On Sept. 1 the agreement of European countries to abolish bounties goes into effect.

The Ottoman government has concluded negotiations with the Krupp works for the supply of 32 batteries of quick firing field artillery, each consisting of six guns.

The condition of spring wheat is 77.1; winter wheat, 410,000,000 bushels; average 12.4, compared with 13.8 last year. The condition of corn is 78.7; oats, 79.5.

Charles M. Schwab has resigned his position as President of the United States Steel Corporation. His resignation became necessary on account of his failing health.

The damage to the battleship Massachusetts, which ran on the rocks on the coast of Maine, is much greater than first reported, and a large sum will be required to repair the vessel.

A court-martial held at Monastir condemned the gendarme, Halin, to death for the murder of M. Rostkoveki, the Russian Consul at Monastir. The sentence was immediately carried out.

The city of Cleveland, Ohio, proposes not merely to light its streets and public buildings, but to supply light and power to consumers. Bonds to the value of $200,000 will be issued for the erection of the plant.

The Servians throughout old Serbia are in a state of panic because of the departure of the Turkish troops for Monastir, which removes all protection from the Servians against the vengeance of the Albanians.

The Ninth International Geological Congress is to hold its sessions in Vienna from the 20th to the 27th of this month, and the convention promises to be one of the most interesting in the history of the organization.

Cynthiana, Ky., Aug. 14.—The jury in the case of Curtis Jett and Thomas White, charged with the assassination of James B. Marcum at Jackson, Ky., returned a verdict of guilty to-day, fixing the punishment of each at life imprisonment.

A. W. Machen, ex-Superintendent of the Free Delivery Division of the Postoffice Department, who was indicted for bribery, has disappeared from his haunts at Washington. The belief prevails that he does not intend to stand trial, but will flee the country.

From the London Times comes an account of a massacre of Babs in Yerd, Persia. The Babs are Muslim religious reformers. It is stated that every Bab who fell into the hands of the mob was killed and the government made no attempt to save the oppressed.

Within four years a city has sprung up near Port Arthur. Danly did not exist when, in 1898, China leased to Russia for twenty-five years a territory of eight hundred square miles. Danly has now about 40,000 inhabitants, about nine-tenths of them Chinese.

The re-adoption of the old policy of repression in China has been shown by the closing of the University of Peking to European and American instructors, by the demand for the arrest of the editors of Supao, a reform journal, and by the torture of Shen-Shien, a reform journalist.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 14.—The Sviet, in an editorial says "If Turkey has given up hope of remaining a member of the European comity of Nationals and has made up her mind to be the playground for the savagery of her army, she will find no place on the map of Europe. It concludes by saying the time is past for any ceremony towards Turkey.

Wheeling, W. Va., August 16.—One of the greatest clashes between labor factions in this vicinity took place early this morning between the striking machinists and about 25 non-union men who took their places in the Riverside plant of the United States Steel Corporation, but despite the fact that over 1,000 shots were fired there were no fatalities and only a few persons were wounded.

A squadron of the Russian Black Sea fleet has been ordered to sail for Turkish waters. Notification of this move has been telegraphed from Sebastopol to the Russian ambassador at Constantinople. The dispatch of the squadron is intended to emphasize Russia's intention of making complete compliance with her demands to satisfaction for the murder, by a Turkish gendarme, of her consul at Monastir.

The use of storage-batteries to furnish the entire motive power for an electric road has not been successful. On lines where they have been used, notably on Thirty-fourth Street, in New York, the conducting wire or bar, with trolley or sliding-contact, is taking their place. But as an adjunct to the usual source of power and a means for saving up a surplus for use when it is needed they are gaining in popularity.

It is well known that "the naval grandeur of Spain succumbed in Manila Bay and in Cuban waters during the disasters of the American war." So we read in the Paris Temps. But a patriotic Spanish statesman, Senor Sanchez Toca, wishes to revive this naval grandeur. To this end he urged an appropriation which, although not huge, is, relatively to Spain's capacity for raising money, immense. Senor Villaverde, who happened to be Finance Minister when the question of the navy presented itself, left the cabinet at once. Now he is back in office as Premier, the former ministry of Senor Silvela having almost wholly disappeared. The Imparcial (Madrid) infers from this that the rebuilding of the Spanish navy will proceed at a pace more in consonance with Spain's finances than was at first suggested. But it professes itself rather uncertain upon this point, because, as it alleges, an alliance has been made with France upon the basis of Spain's claims in Morocco. Spain, we read further in the Epoca (Madrid), is not interested in the problems of international import now troubling the other Powers. But she has a vital concern in northern Africa, and will not tolerate any disregard of that fact. Therefore she must have a strong navy.—Selected.

Joseph Pulitzer has provided the sum of $2,000,000 to establish a school of journalism at Columbia University, New York. A new building for the school will be erected on Morningside Heights at a cost of $500,000 for the school, which will hold toward the University a relation similar to that of the other professional schools, as the law school, the school of medicine and the school of mines, and like them will be national in scope.

In the Lake Arkell district, 120 miles from White Horse, and 20 miles from the Yukon River, new placer mines are being worked, which promise to be fully as rich as the Klondike region. Prospectors were rushing to the country before the original discoverers had succeeded in staking out two or three claims. It is said that surface dirt yields 15 cents to the pan. Every man who can leave is joining the rush from Dawson, White Horse, and Skagway.—Exchange.

Paris, August 11.—Eighty-four bodies have been recovered and the death list probably will exceed 100, in the underground railway disaster which occurred here last night. The accident, which occurred on the Metropolitan Electric Railway, assumed the proportions of an awful catastrophe during the early hours to-day when more than fourscore bodies of the burned and suffocated victims were removed from the subterranean passage. The work continues and indications are that the death list will perhaps exceed fivescore.

The cotton manufacturing situation of New England and the North, generally, is in a very serious state, and over two million spindles will be idle this month. Several informal attempts have been made to have all cotton manufacturers enter a general agreement to shut down for a stated period or cease operations for a given number of days weekly, but owing to large number of union contracts, an ironclad agreement was deemed inexpedient. Notwithstanding the failure of the plan, mills will shut down all through New England, over 700,000 spindles being idle next week in Fall River alone, throwing out over 10,000 operatives.

The French government has been looking into the work of certain educational and reformatory institutions under the control of the Catholic Church in that country, and they have not found all of them perfect. The House of the Good Shepherd, an industrial convent at Nancy, was found to be guilty of the practice of shocking cruelties on its inmates. Now an establishment of the same kind at Tours has been found to be even worse. It is said that the inmates had to work sixteen hours out of the twenty-four, and in busy times even longer. If the girls became rebellious, the strait-jacket, imprisonment in a damp cellar, and even much worse forms of punishment were at hand, some of them quite indescribable.—Exchange.

An expedition sent out by the American Museum of Natural History has made what is considered a very valuable discovery; it is no less than the largest fossil head and the most complete yet discovered by scientists. The animal is reckoned among the dinosaurs, but a picture of a scientific restoration makes it look somewhat like the rhinoceros. That it was a terror in its time can be inferred from the size of the discovered skull, which is seven and a half feet long and five and a half wide. The find was made about 135 miles northwest of Miles City in Montana. This section was at one time a vast inland sea, and is now looked upon as a great cemetery of some of the most remarkable animals that ever roamed the earth or sea. It required about four weeks to excavate the immense head and prepare it for shipment to New York.

China's official board for the conduct of foreign affairs, styled the Wai-wu-pu, is the great instrument by means of which Russia carries out her plan of circumventing the Powers in the Far East, according to the general opinion of those European newspapers which adopt an anti-Russian tone. The Wai-wu-pu came into existence about a year ago, superseding the old Tsung-li-Yamen, and it enjoys precedence over all other boards, as well as enjoying the privilege of appointing many secretaries and subordinate diplomatic officials. Ku Chao-hsi is one of the most recently appointed members of the Wai-wu-pu, and he is described by the London Times as "a statesman who knows not a word of any foreign language, has never held office before, and has never been out of China. He is ignorant, even for a Chinaman, of foreign affairs, but the Chinese defend his appointment on the ground that he writes beautiful Chinese characters. His chief characteristic is that he is almost as deaf as the aged Wang Wen-shao, his chief colleague. On the staff of the Wai-wu-pu is Wu Ting Fang, some time Chinese Minister in Washington. His post, according to the London daily quoted above, is a very subordinate one.—Literary Digest.

Sofia, Aug. 16.—The Bulgarian government has presented a memorandum to the powers, setting out at great length the condition of affairs during the past three months in Macedonia since the Turkish government undertook to inaugurate the promised reforms. The most precise details, dates, places and names of persons are given in the memorandum, the whole constituting a terrible category of murder, torture, incendiarism, pillage and general oppression committed by Ottoman soldiers and officials. These particulars were obtained entirely from official sources, such as the reports of the Bulgarian government, and in many instances, the reports made by Turkish authorities. The Bulgarian government guarantees the absolute truth of every statement and challenges the Porte to disprove a single charge made in the memorandum, which begins by stating that during the past three months the Ottoman government has taken a series of measures with the alleged intention of inaugurating the era of promised reform and of assuring peace and tranquillity to the Bulgarian population of European Turkey, but which have had the contrary effect of further exasperating this population and reviving the revolutionary movement. Instead of proceeding solely against persons guilty of breaches of the public order, the military and civil authorities have sought every possible pretext to persecute, terrorize and ruin the Bulgarian inhabitants, alike in the large cities and in the small villages.

Temperance.

Prohibition in the South.

Texas—One hundred and thirty-six counties have total prohibition; 62 counties have partial prohibition, and 46 counties have unrestricted sale of liquors.

Tennessee—Out of 5,500 cities and towns in the State only 8 have unrestricted sale of liquors. In only 12 of the 96 counties can whiskey be sold legally.

Kentucky—Forty-seven counties have total prohibition; 54 have partial prohibition, and 18 have unrestricted sale of liquors.

Arkansas—Forty-four counties have total prohibition; 2 counties have partial prohibition, and 29 have unrestricted sale.

Mississippi—Sixty-five counties out of 75 have prohibition, and out of 200 legislators all but a dozen or less have signified their approval of a referendum for state prohibition.

Georgia—One hundred and three counties out of 137 have prohibition.

Educational.

In twenty-three years Prof. Jas. A. Fishburne has built up at Waynesboro, Va., a military classical school, of which the founder may well be proud, and of which the little city which first nurtured it and which now shares in its prosperity, is proud. Its fame, had some years ago, reached beyond the limits of this commonwealth and last session its patronage came from ten States, including the District of Columbia. The location of the Fishburne School is in one of the most healthy, moral and prosperous towns of the great Valley of Virginia, and upon the beautiful South Branch of the Shenandoah river, at the junction of the C. and O. and N. and W. railroads can not be improved upon. The town is well ordered, bar rooms prohibited, the people cultivated and conservative and the school surrounded by four churches so near that one can, with a few steps, reach any of them. The scholarship standard is high, the faculty experienced, the military training thorough, and discipline well maintained; this is the verdict of one in no way connected with the school, but for twenty years an interested observer. Those having boys to educate should send for a catalogue.

The Home Circle.

On the Uplands.

I suppose that the only way for us to find out the men among us who dwell in the uplands of life, and breathe habitually a purer air than that of the market place, is to note those, who, when the chance comes for a noble deed—great or small—do it simply and naturally, without any preparation. It is a real king's business to be kingly, and when the chance comes to him for his own work, he does it and goes on his way, and says nothing about it.

The lion, old Falstaff tells us, knows the true prince. But we human beings are duller of sight than the lion in this thing. We think that we recognize kings among our great political leaders or money makers bowing and smiling to wondering, shouting crowds. And presently some grimy engineer, or negro porter in the crowd does some great deed for his fellow-men—gives his life for them, perhaps, and we find out that he was the man of kingly birth—too late.

For example, there was a lean, freckled boy, who a year or two ago ran the elevator up and down in an old shakely office building in Philadelphia. I often went up in it, but certainly I never suspected "Billy" of any noble quality which raised him above other boys, high as was Saul among his brethren.

But one day the old house began to shudder and groan to its foundations, and then one outer wall after another fell amid shouts of dismay from the crowds in the streets. And Billy, as these walls came crashing down, ran his old lift up to the topmost story and back again, crowded with terrified men and women. He did this nine times. Only one side of the building was now standing. The shaft of the elevator was left bare, and swayed to and fro. The police tried to drag the boy out of it, and the mass of spectators yelled with horror as he pulled the chain and began to rise again above their heads.

"There's two women up there yet," said Billy stolidly, and went on up to the top facing a horrible death each minute and knowing that he faced it. Presently through the cloud of dust the lift was seen coming jerkily down with three figures on it. As it touched the ground the whole building fell with a crash. The women and boy came out on the street unhurt and a roar of triumph rose from the mob.

But it was six o'clock and Billy slipped quietly away in the dusk and went home to his supper.

For your real hero does not care for the shouts and slapping of hands.

One of the most real of heroes was a poor Swiss laborer whose name nobody knows. He was standing one day at noon in the crowd who were looking down at the bears in the great pit at Berne. There were two savage fellows there, freshly caught. A nursemaid, leaning over, held the child she carried loosely in her arms. It gave a sudden wrench and fell. The huge beasts clutched it. In an instant this workman flung himself down and, catching the baby in one hand, struck at the bears with a small knife that he carried in the other. Twice he was clawed down by them. It was a desperate fight. But at last ropes were lowered and he was drawn up, bleeding, but holding the child high and safe.

In the confusion he escaped through the crowd and could not be found. He never has been found to this day. The father of the child, a wealthy Englishman, offered a large reward to any one who would find him. The Humane Society voted him a gold medal. But the medal and the money are waiting still unclaimed.

I suppose that workman is going up and down the streets of Berne today in his blue overalls, nobody suspecting his royal blood. But how warm his secret must have kept his heart in all these years!

I remember a queer little incident that once happened on one of the great liners bound to an English port. It seems to have a bearing on this subject.

Our stewardess was a Scotch woman, a clean, tidy little body whose worn face and whitening hair told that she was past middle age. But her dark blue eyes and soft voice were still young and winning. We were wretchedly ill, but "Jessy" tended us so wisely and kindly that we presently took a pride in our misery and in her.

She had no other patients, and during the long days of watching we grew to be friends; and, silent and Scotch as she was, she opened up her whole life to us. She had been for many years a nurse in an English family, but at last had to give up her little charge to governesses and tutors. She showed us his photograph. "That is my boy," she said, proudly, her chin quivering and the real mother look in her eyes. She was past the age for a child or lover of her own to come into her life. But she had a great plan and hope in it.

"I'm not strong," she said, "and I'm tired out. I took this place because it brings in money to me fast. In another year I hope to quit work and go home to my mother. We can go back to our old cottage near Aberdeen. We had to leave it when my father died. We had to sell the cow. That was a sore hurt. She was a dun, Ayrshire, my mother reared her from a calf. We'll buy her back, and we'll have a field, and ducks and hens, and some flowers. My mother's fond of flowers. We'll have enough to bide there the rest of our lives, and"—

She looked out to the tossing sea, her eyes full of happy tears, forgetting to end her sentence.

Among the passengers was a troop of soubrettes of the lowest class—loud-talking, giggling, perfumed women, whose soiled, ragged clothes were pieced out with bits of tawdry lace and ribbons. It was amusing to watch the decent little Scotch woman when they came on deck; even her neat starched gown shuddered as they passed and in her face was the fierce antagonism of generations to her godly ancestors to the devil and all his works.

One day two of these women became violently ill with an eruptive disease. The doctor said aloud, "measles," but whispered to the captain, "smallpox of the most malignant kind." There was on this ship—as there may be on all ocean-going steamers, for aught I know—a stateroom deep in the hold of the vessel, a hospital cell for the use of quarantined patients, shut off from the world by a six-inch oak door, which, when it was once closed, was not opened until the voyage was over. To this cell the patients were hurried. The captain summoned the three stewardesses and told them the truth about the women. "At all cost," he said, "the matter must be kept secret from the crew and passengers, or we shall have a panic. One of you must take charge of them. Your meals and the medicine will be passed to you through a trap in the door. You can not leave the cell whether your patients live or die until we reach the other side. Which of you will go?"

The two older women began to cry and protest loudly. Jessy stood silent, staring into the captain's face.

"I know!" he cried. "They're hardly worth it! But we can't let them die like dogs. One of you must go."

"It must be me, then," she said. "I have no children depending on me. These others have. There's my mother—I thought—but there's others to care for her. No. It's for me to go."

The captain said afterwards that he saw that she was sure that she never would leave the cell alive. "I thought it, too," he said. "She was a weakly body at best and every drop of her blood rose against the women and the work."

She went to her cabin to make ready and one of the other women presently found her there writing.

"Them poor wretches are calling for you," she said.

"Let them call," said Jessy, fiercely. "I'll write to my mother, first."

But Jessy was not to be a martyr after all. When the ship was cleared of her passengers at Liverpool the oak door opened and she came out with her red, scarred patients. She was thin and gray like a ghost. But she laughed merrily, and was very kind and tender to the poor friendless women so strangely thrust upon her care.

When I saw her a year or two later, she was in the snug little cottage and the dun cow was in the paddock and her old mother sat knitting by the kitchen fire.

These are but common homely stories, you think? Why, that is the comfort, the triumph in them—that such things are now common among us. Every day we read of physicians, firemen, engineers or nurses giving up ambition, health and life itself to help others. Today it is a negro workman who stands back to let the women all pass out of the burning building until it is too late for him to follow them; yesterday it was an English surgeon, mortally wounded, who, hearing the shrieks of a dying soldier whose leg had been torn off, dragged himself closer, gave him a hypodermic injection or morphine and in a moment lay dead beside him.

Now these deeds are done without the stimulus of a great cause or the rage of battle or the hope of applause. Men who do them are often illiterate and ignorant. The hope of fame never could be an influence in their lives.

But we may be sure that the man who in the imminent moment of death sees the right thing to do and does it, has in life habitually done the right thing. The man who nobly dies has nobly lived.

The modern American has his vices, but he is apt to have in him a dogged loyalty to his duty, whether that duty be to run an engine or to nurse a case of diphtheria. He has, too, a hearty wish to help his neighbor, which comes to him from Christ, though he may not know it, and while he may call himself an agnostic or a Buddhist there is the human stuff out of which modern heroes are made.

Let us be glad that there is so much of it and that so many more folk than we know are living on the uplands.

Bothwell Bridge.

A monument was recently erected at Bothwell Bridge in honor of the gallant men who fought and fell in the battle of this place, 22 June, 1679. Says the Weekly Leader:

It seems surprising that the scene of such a memorable and momentous struggle for religious liberty should have remained so long unmarked by any distinctive monument save the historic bridge round which the bloody battle waged. But that reproach has now been removed. Scotland will not readily forget what it owes to these fearless men, who neither asked for quarters nor gave it, and who sacrificed their lives in defence of the religion which they held so dear. The speech which Lord Overtoun delivered in unveiling the memorial was in every respect suited to the interesting occasion. "The Reformation," he said, "was to Europe the awakening from sleep of a thousand years, and from the gloom of the Middle Ages, and it was the beginning of modern civilization. But the Reformation was more than a political, or even moral, upheaval; it was a movement born of deep religious conviction, which had been gathering for long, and finally burst into life. And again, "The year 1569 is memorable in the history of the Scottish Church for the great revival of religion, which came from heaven like the breath of spring after the chill blasts of winter. The Covenant was renewed till the whole land rejoiced. But the period of sunshine and gladness was only too short lived, and seemed to have been sent only to prepare the faithful ministers of Christ for the coming storm. It has ever been the case that spiritual revival has accompanied times of persecution. The struggle for religious freedom in Scotland was not carried on by ecclesiastics or politicians, but by men of God, who had drunk deep of the Spirit and were foremost in soul-winning, and it is to them that Scotland owes so much." Resolutions were afterwards passed expressing hearty approval of the movement to raise the memorial, and recognizing the debt of gratitude the people owed to the memorial committee for their various services, now crowned with success. Memorial services were held at the monument on Sabbath when there were large crowds present.

The Holy City.

Thirty men, red-eyed and disheveled, lined up before a judge of the San Francisco police court. It was the regular morning company of "drunks and disorderlies." Some were old and hardened, others hung their heads in shame. Just as the momentary disorder attending the bringing in of the prisoners quieted down, a strong, clear voice from below began singing:

"Last night I lay a-sleeping,
There came a dream so fair."

Last night! It had been for them all a nightmare or a drunken stupor. The song was such a contrast to the horrible fact that no one could fail of a sudden shock at the thought the song suggested.

"I stood in old Jerusalem, Beside the temple there,"

the song went on. The judge had paused. He made a quiet inquiry. A former member of a famous opera company, known all over the country, was awaiting trial for forgery. It was he who was singing in his cell.

Meantime the song went on, and every man in the line showed emotion. One or two dropped on their knees; one boy at the end of the line, after a desperate effort at self-control, leaned against the wall, buried his face against his folded arms, and sobbed, "O mother, mother!"

The sobs, cutting to the very heart the men who heard, and the song, still welling its way through the court room, blended in the hush. At length one man protested.

"Judge," said he, "have we got to submit to this? We're here to take our punishment, but this—" He, too, began to sob.

It was impossible to proceed with the business of the court, yet the judge gave no order to stop the song. The police sergeant, after a surprised effort to keep the men in line, stepped back and waited with the rest. The song moved on to its climax:

"Jerusalem! Jerusalem! Sing, for the night is o'er!
Hosanna in the highest! Hosanna for ever more!"

In an ecstasy of melody the last words rang out, and then there was silence.

The judge looked into the faces of the men before him. There was not one who was not touched by the song; not one in whom some better impulse was not stirred. He did not call the cases singly—a kind word of advice, and he dismissed them all. No man was fined or sentenced to the workhouse that morning. The song had done more good than punishment could have accomplished.—Exchange.

A FAITMUL MORO HUSBAND.

In a village on the island of Siminol, just south of Bongoa, lives an old Moro who so loved his wife, and, strange to say, in this polygamous community, his only wife, that, when she died, he watched her grave long beyond the appointed time, after which he had his house built over her burial place, and there lives to this day, still faithful to the mouldering bones beneath him. Surely a proof that great love sometimes stirs even savage breasts, happening in a country where polygamy is not only recognized, but encouraged, and where women are bought and sold by the pound. Considering the environment, such love is on a par with the idyllic attachments of history and fiction.—

And—think of American widowers!
From Tales of Tawi Tawi.

Fuller tells us that in the full tide of Sir Walter Raleigh's fortunes with Queen Elizabeth, he wrote on a pane of glass, with a diamond:

"Fain would I climb but that I fear to fall."

Underneath, the queen wrote:

"If thy heart fail thee, then climb not at all."

SKIN DISEASES ARE LOCAL.

Tetter, eczema, ring worm and other skin diseases are purely local in character and can be cured only by direct local treatment. Nauseating nostrums do more harm than good. Tetterine, a fragrant antiseptic ointment, having wonderful curative properties, never fails to reach the cause of skin diseases immediately and when used as directed, cures absolutely and permanently. 50c at druggists or by mail from J. T. Shuptrine, Savannah, Ga.

WANTED, A GOVERNESS.—One thorough in Latin, Mathematics and Music. Apply with reference, to L. M. Bell, Midriver, Ga.

VIRGINIA COLLEGE
For YOUNG LADIES, Roanoke, Va.
Opens Sept. 21, 1903. One of the leading schools for young ladies in the South. New buildings, pianos and equipment. Campus ten acres. Grand mountain scenery in Valley of Virginia, famed for health. European and American teachers. Full course. Conservatory advantages in Art, Music and Elocution. Certificates Wellesley. Students from 30 States. For catalogue address MATTIE P. HARRIS, President, Roanoke, Va.

Marriages.

NIVEN-RAY.—In Wilmington, N. C., Monday, August 3, 1903, at 10 a. m., by Rev. A. D. McClure, D. D., pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Mr. Edward E. Niven, of Waxhaw, N. C., and Mrs. Florence D. Ray, of Providence, Mecklenburg county, N. C.

JONES-DANIEL.—Married in Cumberland Presbyterian church, June 30, 1903, by Rev. J. M. W. Elder, Mr. P. R. Jones and Miss Mary E. Daniel, both of Cumberland county, Virginia.

MARSHALL-STYRON.—At the residence of Mrs. Annie Sadler, at Currie, N. C., on August 5, 1903, by Rev. V. H. Starbuck, Mr. Basil H. Marshall, of Wilmington, and Miss Mary Styron, of Currie.

HENDRIX-SENN.—By Rev. R. C. Ligon, at the Smyrna manse, August 2, 1903, Mr. W. H. Hendrix and Miss Carrie May Senn, both of Newberry county, South Carolina.

DENNIS-FLOYD.—By Rev. R. C. Ligon, at the Smyrna manse, August 3, 1903, Mr. A. T. Dennis and Miss Lelia Floyd, both of Newberry county, South Carolina.

Deaths.

VON GLAHN.—Died in Henderson, N. C., July 18, 1903, Horace Von Glahn, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Barnes, aged 3 months. Funeral conducted by Rev. James Henderlite and R. Walker. Another little one has gone
To dwell with Him who gave;
Another little darling babe
Is sheltered in the grave.
God needed one more angel child
Amidst His shining band,
And so He bent with loving smile,
And clasped our darling's hands.
Aunties.

PARKER.—On May 26th, William Bradley Parker was called home from Newport News, Va., where his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Parker, had just established their new home. He was 5 years and 10 months old, and a baptized child in South River Church, near Garland, N. C. He was faithful in the Sabbath School and affectionate and obedient at home. We know not why God should take away the only son; we only know that one more link binds us to the heavenly home.

V. H. S.

SLOAN.—Mrs. Elizabeth E. Sloan died at her home in Charlotte, N. C., August 3, 1903, in the 65th year of her age.

It was midnight when the summons came, and her purified spirit released from its fetters of clay, entered the eternal rest, exchanging the darkness of earth for the light of Heaven.

There is an aching voice in many hearts, a vacant place in the home that cannot be filled, a sorrow that time may soften but not heal. Her many months of weary invalidism was borne with Christian resignation and fortitude worthy of its source.

Her mind had been cast in no common mould, and her noble traits of character had won her many friends ever true to her trusts, and faithful in her friendships, yet it was in the inner circle of her home, in her untiring ministry to those around her, that her virtues shone brightest.

Her Christian character was marked by loyalty and devotion to her church, and love for its ordinances and until prevented by illness, though cumbered by more than ordinary share of domestic cares, was seldom absent from its services. We shall miss her kind thoughtfulness, her cheerful greeting here, but our beloved dead are gone before and "over there" they await our coming, and "sometimes, some day, our eyes shall see the faces kept in memory, some time their hand shall clasp our hand, just over in the morning land."

A Friend.

The Household.

THE VIRTUES OF POTATOES.

One morning early, we began to plant the chruhs. "Where will you have the rosey dandrums?" was my greeting from Thomas as I entered the garden. Having noticed from the breakfast table that he had slyly buried something at the bottom of each hole prepared for the planting, I waited my chance the first minute he was out of sight, dropped on my knees, felt around in the soft soil at the bottom of the hole and unearthed—a potato. Another hole and still another was examined. Yes, there was a potato in each; he must have wasted a bushel!

"Thomas," I said, when he had returned with a load from the compost heap, "what are these potatoes doing down here?"

"Not a tree will grow in Oireland without wan," he explained.

"How is that?" I asked, in darkest ignorance.

"Ye see, mum, the patatey sprouts frust off, thin, begorrah, it lifts the loife into the tree and obliges it to push up fornist." As a matter of fact, we did not loose a tree or shrub, in spite of the long drought.—From Country Life in America.

TO CURE A HUSBAND.

How to cure a husband. It is a question you hear put forth every day. A wife, if she be a wise woman, will set herself to find out her husband's best side, and, having found it, persuade the man to live up to it.

Set up an ideal before a man, let him think that to you he is that ideal, and the chances are a thousand to one that he will try to live up to it.

If he is mean and selfish make him think he is generous, and you will have cured half his meanness before he knows it. If he is bad tempered and full of crochets din it into him morning, noon and night that he is good temper itself, and (always supposing that the original bad temper does not arise from ill-health and physical suffering) it will not take very long to sweeten it.

If he is morbidly jealous don't be a fool and show him that you are afraid to speak civilly to any other man in his presence. He will begin to think he has good grounds for his jealousy then. But let him see that in your eyes at least no man can possibly come up to him in point of physical and mental attractions.

Place him on a pedestal, make a hero of him, and in his own despite he will be forced to live up to the character, and will feel himself, without any words of yours, how absurd his jealousy is. If a man's wife thinks him perfection he need fear no envy of lesser mortals.

If he is one of those fussy, interfering domestic sort of men, just try to make him feel that in your eyes he is the quintessence of everything manly, and that such small details are quite beneath his notice. He will soon give up interfering.

If he is prodigal and reckless coax him to save; don't always be taunting him with his extravagance.

Above all, if you are a wise woman, don't try to argue a husband—or, for the matter of that, anybody—out of any of the above or any other faults.

Moreover, let it not be forgotten that matrimonial arguing is but too apt to degenerate into nagging, and a nagging wife never had any real influence over a husband yet.—The Welcome.

The permanent interest of gifts is immeasurably enhanced by dates written, engraved, or even pasted at the back of pictures, silver, and books. Photographs should always bear date and name, in autograph, if possible. Old pieces of jewelry or lace or furniture may lose half their value as heirlooms by the death of the one member of the household who could have told their history. A scrap of paper laid in the box with the lace or tacked to the back of the secretary preserves at least the outline. The christening dress, the baby blanket that the grandmother knit—all need help of paper and ink if they are to carry an intelligent message to the next generation.—The Congregationalist.

TO TEST DRINKING WATER.

It is an excellent plan to test the family drinking water at least once during the season. Water that is at one time pure and wholesome may finally, for some reason, become too impure for use. A simple test of drinking water is to fill a pint bottle three-quarters full. Dissolve half a teaspoonful of pure granulated sugar in the water and cork the bottle. Set it in a warm place for two days. If in this time it becomes cloudy it is unfit for domestic use. Be careful that the bottle is as absolutely clean as you can make it and the sugar is pure. A second simple test is the following: Obtain about five cents' worth of saturated solution of permagnate of potassium. Add five drops of this to a pint bottle of water. This will turn the water a beautiful rose purple. If there is any considerable amount of organic matter in the water this color will turn, in the course of a few hours, to a more or less dirty reddish brown. If the color of the bottle remains for 12 hours unchanged from the rose-purple color it had at first it may be considered free from dangerous organisms.—Exchange.

Dr. Steiner observed in Java a method employed to induce sleep. It consists in compressing the carotid arteries. The operator sits on the ground behind the patient, whose neck he seizes with both hands. The index and middle fingers are then pushed forward into the carotids, which are compressed toward the spine. The patient's respiration becomes more rapid and more profound and his head relaxes backward. The method is absolutely harmless, anesthesia is rapidly obtained and the patient wakes promptly with no symptoms of nausea or malaise. Dr. Steiner declares the method to be well known in Java, where it is used to relieve headache, sleeplessness, etc., and points out the fact that the carotid artery was known to the ancients as arteria soporifera, and that its name in modern Russian is "artery of sleep." He does not seem to know that the method is widely practiced in India. Kipling's Kim, for example, is put to sleep by a process of the sort.—Christian Work and Evangelist.

I thank thee, Lord, that I am straight and strong,
With wit to work and hope to keep me brave;
That two score years, unfathomed, still belong
To the allotted life thy bounty gave.

I thank thee that the light of sunlit lands
And dipping hills, the breath of evening grass—
That wet dark rocks and flowers in my hands,
Can give me daily gladness as I pass.

I thank thee that I love the things of earth—
Ripe fruits and laughter, lying down to sleep,
The shine of lighted towers, the graver worth
Of meeting human hearts that laugh and weep.

I thank thee that as yet I need not know,
Yet need not fear, the mystery of the end;
But more than all, and though all these should go,
Dear Lord (this on my knees) I thank thee for my friend.

—Juliet Willor Tompkins.

CURED TO STAY CURED.

Mrs. S. T. Roberts, Clinton, La., sent a postal card request for a trial bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine to Drake Mormula Company, Drake Block, Chicago, Ill., and received it promptly by return mail without expense to her. Mrs. Roberts writes that the trial bottle of this wonderful Palmetto Medicine proved quite sufficient to completely cure her. She says: "One trial bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine has cured me after months of intense suffering. My trouble was Inflammation of the Bladder and serious condition of Urinary organs. Drake's Palmetto Wine gave me quick and entire relief and I have had no trouble since using the one trial bottle."

Drake's Palmetto Wine cures every such case to stay cured. It is a true unailing specific for Liver, Kidney, Bladder and Prostate Troubles caused by Inflammation, Congestion or Catarrh. When there is Constipation, Drake's Palmetto Wine produces a gentle and natural action of the bowels and cures Constipation immediately, to stay cured. One small dose a day does all this splendid work, and and reader of the Presbyterian Standard may prove it by writing to Drake Formula Company, Drake Block, Lake and Dearborn Streets, Chicago, Ill., for a trial bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine. It is free, and cures. A letter or postal card is your only expense.

STILLMAN INSTITUTE,
TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

For training Colored Ministers.
Offers good academic and theological instruction.

Now managed on the "Industrial" plan, by which a young man may exchange labor for an education.

Write for information to
REV. D. CLAY LILLY, Superintendent
TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

Carolina and Northwestern Railway.

TIME CARD.

BLOWING ROCK ROUTE.

Effective November 24th, 1901.

NORTHBOUND	PASSENGER	MIXED
Chester, Leave	8 25 am	8 50 am
Yorkville, "	7 30 am	10 48 am
Gastonia, "	9 05 am	1 20 pm
Lincolnton, "	10 09 am	2 55 pm
Newton, "	10 54 pm	4 43 pm
Hickory, "	11 16 pm	5 50 pm
Cliffs, "	11 50 pm	7 03 pm
Lenoir, Arrive	12 35 pm	8 00 pm
SOUTHBOUND	PASSENGER	MIXED
Lenoir, Leave	2 10 pm	5 30 pm
Cliffs, "	2 54 pm	7 20 pm
Hickory, "	3 12 pm	8 10 pm
Newton, "	3 37 pm	8 45 am
Lincolnton, "	4 22 pm	10 09 am
Gastonia, "	5 27 pm	1 20 pm
Yorkville, "	6 32 pm	3 18 pm
Chester, Arrive	7 45 pm	5 20 pm

NOW READY
"REPORT ON 1000 CONFINEMENT CASES"

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF MEDICINE RICHMOND VIRGINIA

MEDICINE-DENTISTRY-PHARMACY

"CLINICS 1902-3"—"TEACHING METHODS"
"CATALOGUE"

Southern Railway.

The Direct Line to all Points

TEXAS,
CALIFORNIA
FLORIDA,
CUBA and
PORTO RICO.

Strictly First-Class equipment on all Through and Local Trains, Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars on all night trains. Fast and safe Schedules.

Travel by the Southern and you are assured of a Safe, Comfortable and Expeditious journey.

Apply to Ticket Agents for Time Tables, Maps and General Information, or address

R. L. VERNON, F. R. DARBY,
T. P. A., C. P. & T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C. Asheville, N. C.

No trouble to answer questions.

SPECIAL LOW WEEK END RATES

From points on the Atlantic Coast Line to Seaside Resorts; tickets on sale Saturday, good returning including Monday following; attractive schedules; unsurpassed service.

SUMMER TOURIST TICKETS

To Mountain and Seaside Resorts limited for return passage to October 31st on sale until September 30th.

For full particulars, rates, etc., call on Ticket Agents or write to

W. J. CRAIG,
Gen. Pass. Agent, Wilmington, N. C.

Atlantic & N. C. R. R.

Time table in effect November 10, 1902.

Eastbound Trains.	Passenger Daily	Passenger Daily
Leave Goldsboro.....	3:30 p m	8:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	4:22 p m	8:48 a m
Leave New Bern.....	5:50 p m	10:10 a m
Arrive Morehead City.....	7:15 p m

Westbound Trains.	Passenger Daily	Passenger Daily
Leave Morehead City.....	7:05 a m
Leave New Bern.....	9:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	10:12 a m
Arrive Goldsboro.....	11:15 a m

PRIVATE SCHOOL wanted by a Virginia girl, who is a teacher of all common and high school branches, including beginners in music; age 23, size medium, church member; a good disciplinarian and can furnish the best of references by leading educators and ministers in Virginia.

Address Miss Bertha H., Box 176<sup>1</sup> mount, Illinois. 3114

For Sale Cheap

A one-horse power, high-speed General Electric motor, for 500-volt circuit; armature and commutator both new; all in thoroughly good repair. For particulars apply to
MANAGER PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD,
Charlotte, N. C.

Estab. '32 SCALES of every description. Satisfaction Guaranteed. Write for prices. JESSE MARDEN
109 S. Charles St., BALTIMORE, MD

Our Young People.

A Happy Memory.

"I'm a pilgrim, and I'm a stranger,
I can tarry, I can tarry but a night."

It was a quavering old voice from an upstairs room. Grand-uncle Nelson sat there alone by the window. He and Aunt Martha had often sung the sweet old hymn together in the years when they wished that their pilgrimage might be a long one. She had reached the City of which "her Redeemer, her Redeemer was the light," and ever since her going he had been glad that he, too, could tarry but a night.

In the hammock under the elm trees a girlish voice hummed somewhat abstractedly the refrain. He leaned his white head from the window.

"That you, Barbie?"

"Yes, uncle."

She looked up for a moment, then down again at the book in her lap. Its printed pages suddenly acquired new charms, for she was afraid that he was in a conversational mood, and she did not feel like listening to him just then. The day was hot and she was tired. There had been so many things to look after—what a difference it did make when mama was gone, if only for a day. Uncle Nelson was sometimes tiresome, especially in his reminiscient moments, and his memory was poor. He told the same thing over and over again. So she kept her eyes fastened on her book.

How pretty her brown head looked resting on the cushion of the hammock. Uncle Nelson thought, and her little slippered foot, too, as it touched the ground now and then, to keep up a gentle swaying motion. There was a soft play of light and shadow on her face, made by the thick, stirring branches of the elm trees.

"That's a snug little place you've got."

He wanted to get her to talking. he loved to watch her bright young face; somehow it rested his old eyes.

"How are your posies getting along, Barbie?" he asked.

"Pretty well, Uncle Nelson. I weeded my garden this morning."

"Did you? I used to be a great hand to fuss about a garden myself. Your Aunt Martha and myself always had a nice posy bed." He adjusted his glasses and leaned a little farther from the window. "You've got your sweet pea vines all trained, ain't you? Did all yourself, Barbie?"

"Yes, all myself."

"They'll be in bloom soon, won't they? Sweet peas always put me in mind of the bunch I took your Aunt Martha one time when I was courting her. I can see this minute how pretty she blushed when I said she was sweeter than the whole bunch of them put together."

He was quiet for a minute, with a far-away smile on his lips, then he began again.

"That's a nice little hammock you've got, isn't it, Barbie?"

"Yes, and this is such a good place for it. I got headache from being out in the sun, and it's so cool here."

"So it is. If I didn't feel kind of weak myself, I'd come down and sit with you a while, Barbie. My head aches, too."

"Does it, uncle?" and now Barbie looked up quickly. I'll come up and sit with you just in a few moments if you'd like to have me. I just want to finish this story first. It's a German story, you know, and I make it a rule to read something in German every day, so that I won't forget what little I know. Some of the girls come back

A Perfect Laxative is one which is palatable, pleasant to take and can be relied upon to act gently, but thoroughly; cleansing the entire system of all impurities. Such a remedy is Mozley's Lemon Elixir. It is a pleasant lemon tonic, acceptable to the most delicate stomach, and a thoroughly effective laxative, acting upon the bowels, liver, and kidneys, without the slightest unpleasantness.

MOZLEY'S LEMON HOT DROPS are without an equal for coughs, colds, sore throat and bronchitis.

Sold by all druggists.

Mozley's
Lemon
Elixir.

Statement

Stuyvesant Insurance Company of New York.

Condition December 31st, 1902, as shown by Statement Filed.

Capital; paid in cash.....	$ 200,000 00
Amount Ledger Assets Dec. 31st previous year.....	238,424 84
Income—From Policy-holders, $170,976 08; Miscellaneous, $91,875 81.....	262,851 84
Disbursements—To Policy-holders, $91,677 11; Miscellaneous, $ 71,570 15; Total.....	163,247 26
Fire Risks—Written or renewed during year, $17,128,339 00; In force.....	9,852,106 00
Marine and Island Risks—Written or renewed during year, $877, 779 00; In force.....	182,500 00

Assets

Value of Real Estate (less amount of encumbrances).....	$ 15,000 00
Mortgage Loans on Real Estate.....	14,000 00
Book Value of Bonds and Stocks.....	238,746 78
Interest and Rents due and accrued.....	1,451 25
Cash in Home Office and deposited in Banks.....	18,931 88
Agents' balance, representing business written subsequent to October 1, 1902.....	50,165 48
Agents' balance, representing business written prior to October 1, 1902.....	83 70
All other Assets, detailed in statement.....	1,760 86
Total.....	335,089 45
Less Assets, not admitted.....	2,654 06
Total admitted Assets.....	332,435 39

Liabilities

Losses and claims unpaid.....	17,104 58
Unearned Premiums.....	81,280 34
All other Liabilities as detailed in statement.....	17,314 19
Total Liabilities as to Policy-holders.....	115,699 11
Capital paid up.....	200,000 00
Surplus.....	16,786 28
Total Liabilities.....	332,485 39

No Business in North Carolina in 1902--Just Entered the State

President, A. K. Pierson.

Home Office, 76 and 78 William St., New York City.
General Agent for Service, Insurance Commissions, Raleigh, N. C.
Business Manager for North Carolina, From Home Office

Secretary, C. A. Garthwaite.

State of North Carolina,
Insurance Department,
Raleigh, June 1, 1903

I, James R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct abstract of the statement of the Stuyvesant Insurance Company, of New York City, filed with this Department, showing the condition of said Company on the 31st day of December, 1902.

Witness my hand and official seal, the day and date above written.

JAS. R. YOUNG,
Insurance Commissioner,

Mid Summer Cut Price Sale

of

Furniture, Carpets,
Pianos and Organs,

Wonderful Bargains can be had at this Store during this Cut Price Sale.

Everything Without Reserve is reduced in Price to the Lowest Price to sell the Goods and make room for the Changes now going on in our store. Come and See Us in Person, but if you can't come, you will get some reduction if you order by mail. Don't fail to grasp this opportunity to save money.

Parker-Gardner Company.

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA.

in the fall with their tongues all out of practice and half the words they knew before forgotten. I'll come up and see you just as soon as I get through."

"I'd be real glad to have you, Barbie."

Uncle Nelson withdrew his head from the window, and sat back in his cushioned chair, an expectant smile upon his face. The German story was not quite finished, when the gate opened and Gail Wetherall came hurrying up the walk.

"Barbara, put on your hat just as quick as you can. Sue Merrill's home. She astonished all her family by walking in on them today. She said she got so homesick she couldn't stay away another hour. Esther is over there, and I promised to come and get you."

Barbara sprang from the hammock. "Wait for me a minute, Gail, till I get my hat."

Half-way to the door, Barbara stopped short, a thought of Uncle Nelson and her promise to him entering her head. There was a moment's indecision, then she turned resolutely to Gail.

"I'm just as sorry as I can be, Gail, but there's something I forgot, something I've promised to do. I can't go to Sue's till I've done it."

"Oh, Barbara, can't you put it off?"

"Really, I oughtn't to, Gail, but I'll come over the moment I can. You'd better not wait. She will be so anxious for you to get back, and you can tell her I'm coming just as soon as I can."

Up the stairs to Uncle Nelson's room she hurried as soon as Gail was out of the gate. There was a bright little smile on her face. Uncle Nelson must not know how much she would rather be somewhere else. The faded old eyes answered quickly to the smile in the bright young ones.

"You're a good little girl, Barbie. Bring your chair up here to the window, where we can talk easier. There—that's right. Didn't I hear somebody talking to you a minute ago?"

Yes, uncle, Gail Wetherall was here just for a moment, but she's gone."

"Oh, then, I ain't a-keeping you from any of your friends. I was afraid mebbe I was, and I wouldn't want to do that, Barbie. I'm glad I ain't, because somehow I wanted to see you more than common."

"And I'm glad to be with you, Uncle Nelson. How is your head feeling now?"

Just aches a little, Barbie, nothing much."

His trembling hand had wandered to her hair, and rested there for a moment in the thick, wavy masses. She put up her own hand to meet it. Something in Uncle Nelson's face touched her strangely. How very old he looked, and what was that vaguely floating through her mind:

Neither shall his place know him any more. Would that be true, soon, of Uncle Nelson?

His voice broke in on her thoughts. You look a bit like your Aunt Marthy looked sixty years ago.

"Do I, uncle?"

No other topic of conversation was quite so sweet to him, Barbara knew. "May I get out her daguerreotypes, Uncle, and look at them again?"

"Certainly, certainly," with pleased aptness, "you know where to find 'em, Barbie? In the little blue box in the top drawer of that stand."

Barbara could have found that blue box in the dark—she had taken it out so often for Uncle Nelson to inspect the precious contents.

"Her face is very sweet, isn't it, Uncle? Her eyes look so bright and pretty."

"Bright—I should say so! They were just like stars, Barbie, when that

SOUTHERN DENTAL COLLEGE, ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

If you are interested in obtaining a dental education, write for free catalogue of full instruction.

ADDRESS DR. S. W. FOSTER, DEAN, 100 NORTH BUTLER STREET, ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

What Protection Means.

On March 6, 1873, the Hon. Armistead Burwell, of Charlotte, N. C., who is well known throughout the State of North Carolina, was insured with the Aetna Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, Conn., under Renewable Term Policy No. 95,253 for $4,000. Annual Premium $64 76 When the first term of ten years expired in 1883 the Company renewed the policy for the next ten years at the

ORIGINAL RATE, WITHOUT A NEW EXAMINATION.

and have renewed this policy respectively in 1893 and 1903 without increase of rate of premium and without re-examination. If Mr. Burwell lives till 1913 he will have been insured for forty years at an annual cost of $16 19 per $1,000.

This Renewable Term Insurance was originally introduced by the Aetna. The "OLD AETNA" LEADS; the other companies follow.

OVER ONE MILLION DOLLARS have been paid out in death claims in this State during the last ten years.

For rates, etc., apply to

J. D. BOUSHALL, Mgr, RALEIGH, N. C.

King's Mountain Military Academy,

Yorkville, South Carolina.

A high-grade school with a first-class patronage. Teachers and cadets live together as one family. A real home school. Stands for the best and nothing but the best. Faculty all active Christian men, who live in closest contact with the cadets.

Col. W. G. STEPHENSON, Supt.

North Carolina Medical College Davidson, N. C.

Three years' course to graduate. Sixteen Professors and Teachers.

Clinical instruction given in Davidson and Charlotte. Eighteen graduates this year made fine records before N. C. and S. C. Boards. Address

J. P. MUNROE, M. D., President, Davidson, N. C.

Private rooms in the Hospital.

Centre College, 1819. Central University, 1874 Consolidated 1901.

Central University of Kentucky

FOUR COLLEGES—Arts, Law, Medicine, Dentistry.

THREE UNIVERSITY SCHOOLS. Danville, Jackson, Elizabethtown. Total attendance last session, 1,321.

1. Centre College of Kentucky Danville. W. C. Roberts, D. D., LL. D., President; opens Monday, Sept. 9, 1903. 2. College of Law, Danville A. H. Throckmorton, A. M., LL. B., Dean; opens September 9, 1903.

Special Advantages.—Full Faculties of able and experienced men; each a specialist in his department. Complete Equipment, Campus Buildings, Libraries, Laboratories, Apparatus, Gymnasium, Athletic Field. The best moral and religious influences; no saloons; Danville a model college town; expenses very moderate. For full information, address,

L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Vice-President, Danville, Ky.

Oldsmobiles

BEGINNING AUGUST 1st, we can make deliveries in 10 days or less, and the price, with wood

wheels, F. O. B. Detroit, will be.....$650.00

Osmond L. Barringer

Distributing Agent

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA

first one was taken. She wasn't more than seventeen then. She was the prettiest girl in Springville."

"I wonder what there is about my face that looks like her face," Barbara said, scrutinizing the quaint portrait gravely.

"I guess it's your whole expression, Barbie, a kind of pleasant, bright look."

The examination of the deguerreotypes and the reminiscences suggested by them occupied a half hour at least.

"Would you like to have me read to you, Uncle Nelson?" Barbara asked, when the little blue box was at last put away.

"Thank you, Barbie, I don't care if you do. You might read a piece from John, if you feel like it. The Bible's there on that little stand. My eyes didn't feel quite equal to it myself. You might read my favorite chapter, Barbie—the fourteenth."

"Yes, Uncle Nelson."

He listened with a dreamy, contented look on his face as the girlish voice read the beautiful chapter. His loud regular breathing made her look up just as she reached the closing verses. He had fallen asleep, soothed by her voice, and she laid the big Bible back on the stand, and stole noiselessly from the room.

There was kissing and embracing a half hour later, when Barbara made her appearance at her friend's house.

How fast the time flew by. There were so many things to be talked over that had somehow not found their way into the girl's voluminous correspondence, and just as the visitors were thinking that they really must tear themselves away, Sue proposed a game of tennis. It was late in the afternoon when Barbara reached home.

"I'll just run up to Uncle Nelson's room for a minute," she thought, "and take him these sweet peas. I don't see why Sue's should blossom earlier than mine."

The sweet peas and the tender thought of Uncle Nelson brought back his favorite hymn:

"I'm a pilgrim, and I'm a stranger," she hummed as she ran up the stairs.

"I can tarry, I can tarry but a night,
Of that City to which I journey"—

The door was open. She gave a light tap to announce her coming, and crossed the threshold. He was still sitting by the window, his face turned toward the tall, blowing trees. His mind must be far away, thought Barbara. Not to hear her coming. She would slip softly to him and put the sweet pea in his hand, and a kiss on his forehead. He was so fond of her, it would please him.

Still he did not stir, though she came close up to his side, and the hand into which she gave the flowers was very cold. His mind was far away. His soul had slipped out from the tired body. The night of his tarrying was over.—Ex.

Fond of their Teachers.

A number of the patrons of the Bingham School, near Mebane, N. C., greatly appreciate the intimate and friendly relations that exist between the teachers and students. The boys also greatly value this feature of the school and are sincerely fond of the teachers. A handsomely illustrated catalogue will be sent upon request to Principal Gray, Mebane, N. C.

Robert's Mistake.

"Ting, ting, ting!"

The little bell sounded, giving notice of the closing of the reading room for the afternoon. Twilight was settling down, and already the little stir of preparation for departure had begun.

Robert Vance gave a little grunt of dissatisfaction, making no move to close the book in which he had been absorbed.

"What's the trouble?" asked the boy next him.

"I wanted just half an hour longer to get these notes."

"Can't you come tonight?"

"No; I'm going away for the week's vacation, and I have something else to do."

"Then you will have to wait for it."

"When I am so anxious to get out those facts for my next essay! It will be too late when I come back. I could do it in half an hour; but I can't come away down here again for it."

The reading room belonging to the Lincoln School was well furnished with books, maps, and works of reference. It was bright and cheery, in every way fitted to attract young readers and students. It was conducted on a liberal plan which placed its privileges at the disposal of any responsible person desirous of seeking them. Even the small tots were not overlooked, a selection of bound juveniles being always ready for their delighted examination.

In the little confusion attendant upon the dismissal, a new thought came to Robert.

"I don't see why I might not just take this book home with me on the sly," he said to himself. "Then I can slip it in in the morning before I go and get it into place before anybody knows. I don't see what harm it would be."

That he was conscious of some harm attending his action was shown by the care with which he guarded against even one of his boy friends seeing what he was about as he buttoned the book, a number of an encyclopedia bound in small sized volumes for greater convenience, inside the breast of his overcoat.

The half hour with the book in the evening finished his use of it, and he laid it carefully in a drawer in his room until the time came for returning it in the morning.

But, as many of us have experienced, the morning of a journey away from home leaves little opportunity for small errands. Every hour, every moment was more than filled, and it was not until the last fifteen minutes that Robert rushed to his room for final preparation.

"There's that book." It stared him in the face, checking for a moment his hurried movements. Well, I simply can't return it. It is just as safe here as it would be on the shelf. It must lie here until I come back."

But the remembrance of the hidden book, the consciousness of broken rules, of benefits abused, cast a slight shadow over all the pleasures of his visit.

Arriving home he soon made ready to return the book. Of course, no one had disturbed it. No; as he opened the drawer its respectable leathern back appeared exactly where he had left it. He hastily took it out.

"Oh my!"

He stood aghast at the sight of the front edges of the book, then jerked out the drawer.

Yes, there it was—the cause of the mischief—mischief too dire for any help or repair.

Not long before, coming home from some boys' frolic he had emptied into the drawer the contents of his pockets, consisting of bits of candy and peanuts. Mice had been attracted by them, and the small destroyers had not remained content with the goodies, but had feasted on the marble edges of the book, and had also pulled out

HICKS' CAPUDINE

Cures HEADACHES, COLDS and INDIGESTION.

No bad effects on head or heart.

For sale at all well-stocked drugstores.

EVERY SUFFERER SHOULD KNOW

=KADOK=

The Pleasant tonic Headache Cure.

Superior to Others and Free from

Opaites

Try a package,

Price 10c.

At all Druggists or sent prepaid by

L. Richardson Drug Company,

Wholesale and manufacturing Druggists,

GREENSBORO, N. C.

The Worth Co.

SUCCESSORS TO

WORTH & WORTH,

Wholesale Grocers

and Commission Merchants

HANDLE—
CITTOON AND NAVAL STORES.

SELL—
GENERAL GROCERIES,
FARM SUPPLIES,
LIME, CEMENT, NAILS,
HAY AND GRAIN.

Best Terms and Lowest Prices.

WILMINGTON N. C.

Southern Girl SHOES.

THE BEST SHOE
IN AMERICA
FOR
$2.00

TAKE NO
SUBSTITUTE
IF YOUR DEALER DOES NOT CARRY THEM,
A POSTAL CARD TO US
WILL TELL YOU WHERE YOU CAN GET THEM.

CRADDOCK-TERRY CO.

LEADING

SHOE MANUFACTURERS

OF THE SOUTH.

LYNCHBURG — VA.

whole pages. Robert gazed at it in despair.

"It is ruined, completely ruined!"

"Of course I shall tell of it," he communed with himself as he walked to school, "and, of course, I must pay for it. But there's no great hurry about it. There are plenty of such things in the library."

"Any time is no time," goes the proverb. Robert's time for telling of the mischief for which he was responsible was further and further postponed. As time went on he became more and more ashamed of his action, more reluctant to own it. Tricky, sly, underhanded—there were a number of bad sounding names which might be applied, and justly, he confessed to himself, to his action.

"What's become of Jimmy McCoy?" Robert asked one of his school mates some weeks later. I thought he liked so much to come here."

"So he did; but I've heard there's been a great rumpus about Jimmy. You know he works for Reed Brothers, and one of them became responsible for him, so he could come to the reading room nights. There's a book gone and the librarian said Jimmy had one of the set one evening, and she thinks it was that one. Mr. Reed had to pay for it, and like as not Jim's lost his situation, though I don't know."

Robert stood still as the other turned away, feeling as if he had received a heavy blow. "No harm"—only a little thing done on the sly, but it was working disaster to an innocent boy, to whom life had shown its hard side.

There's only one thing to be done now. If I've been a sneak, yes, that's an ugly word, but it's the one that fits me—before, I'll do things like a man now. But how much worse is it than if I had owned it at once!"

Setting things right involved the going to the librarian with his pitiful story, to be referred to the trustees. Then the interview with Mr. Reed, when he was glad to find that Jimmy cleared of the accusation against him, would be reinstated in his place and his library privileges.

But here poor Robert received another blow, coming within the discussion of the book for which Mr. Reed had paid.

"It was for the set, you know. You can't get such a book singly. It was thirty-five dollars."

"You will please give me a little time on it?" asked Robert, in as steady a tone as he could command.

"Certainly, all you want," was the response—a great relief to the boy, who dreaded the thought of burdening his father. And then you know you will have the broken set for yourself."

"I don't know that I should ever be able to bear the sight of it."

"I wouldn't feel that way about it, my boy," said the other kindly. "It will be a useful thing to have and if the sight of it should be a continual reminder that any shading off of a high tone of honor is an unsafe thing for boy or man, it will have an added value to you."—Sydney Dyre, in Sabbath-School Visitor.

WHAT IS THE APPEAL MEETING?

Where the reports and punishments in a school are left to one teacher, he is apt to err so that injustice is done. At the Bingham School, near Mebane, N. C., every afternoon the Principal and faculty hold "Appeal Meeting," when any boy, aggrieved by a report, by him considered unjust, may state his case; and then, if wronged is righted. For catalogue address Principal Gray, Mebane, N. C.

NOTABLE NEW BOOKS.

A limited number of advanced subscriptions will be accepted at Special Prices for following new books to be issued on or before September 1st, 903.

Life and Letters of ROBERT LEWIS DABNEY, D. D. LL. D.

By THOMAS CAREY JOHNSON, D. D. LL. D.

Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity Union Theological Seminary, Richmond Va.

A notably interesting book about one of the most remarkable men the South has produced. Interesting alike to historical students of social, political, and industrial conditions of the South, to Southern Veteran and Statesmen, to students of Theology and Philosophy, and to those who wish to be fully informed about the history and development of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

600 Pages. Cloth Binding, Regular Price $2.50 Net (add 18c for Postage.) To Advance Subscribers $2.00 Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

"APOLOGETICS"

Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D., LL.D., Prof. of Systematic Theology Louisville Seminary, Introduction by B. B. WARFIELD, D. D., LL. D., of Princeton Theological Seminary.

A clear, systematic statement of the great fundamental truths of the Christian faith. Adopted as a text book in some of the best Seminaries of the country.

480 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $2.50 Net; Sheep, $3.00 Net [add 18c. Postage]. To advance subscribers, cloth $2.00; sheep, $2.50 postpaid. Limit 500 copies.

PIONEERING IN AFRICA.

By Rev SAMUEL PHILLIPS VERNER, A. B.,

for six years a Missionary of the Southern Presbyterian Church on the Congo.

This book is out of the usual order, and is at once scientific, historical, critical and religious. A notable contribution to the literature about a great continent which is coming more into view every year. Illustrated with original photographs and maps not hitherto published.

450 Pages. Cloth. Regular Price $2.00 Net [add 15c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.75 Net Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

Christianity and Modern Evolution.

By Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D.

The remarkably original and forcible course of lectures delivered in Louisville, Ky., before very large and highly edified audiences have been revised, and are now presented in an attractive form for the benefit of a larger public.

250 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $1.25 Net [add 10c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.00 net Postpaid. Limit 300 Copies

A complete list of our publications sent on request. Any book in print furnished on short notice. Write us about your wants.

PRESBYTERIAN COMMITTEE OF PUBLICATION, Richmond, Va.

WOOL

Ship Direct to the Manufacturer and Save Dealers' Profits.

They pay freight on the wool and guarantee satisfaction.

In exchange for goods they pay 25 cents per pound for unwashed and 35 cents per pound for washed wool.

If you have wool to sell for cash, exchange for goods, or to be manufactured, ship it to CHATHAM MFG. CO., ELKIN, N. C., and you will not regret it.

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE.

FOR THE CURE OF

LIQUOR, OPIUM, COCAINE AND OTHER DRUG ADDICTIONS, NERVE EXHAUSTION AND TOBACCO HABIT.

GREENSBORO, N. C.

This is the only Keeley Institute in North Carolina, and owing to its beautiful and healthy location, its elegant buildings and attractive environments, its well supplied table and skillful management it presents to the unfortunate a perfect asylum for rest and complete restoration.

If you have a friend afflicted with any of the above addictions, write for their illustrated Hand-Book, entitled "THE NEW MAN." Address,

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE, Greensboro, N. C.

Wear Red Seal Shoes

Catalog for Postal

Our Little Folks.

GOOD-CHILDREN STREET.

There's a dear little home in Good-Children Street,
Where my heart turneth fondly to-day;
Where tinkle of tongues and patter of feet
Make sweetest of music at play;
Where the sunshine of love illumines each face
And warms every heart in that old-fashioned place.

For dear little children go romping about
With dollies and tin tops and drums;
And my! how they frolic and scamper and shout,
Till bedtime too speedily comes.
Oh! days they are golden and days they are fleet
With the little folks living in Good-Children Street.

—Eugene Field.

THE BUSY CHILD.

By Josephine Preston Peabody.
I have so many things to do
I don't know when I shall be through.

Today I had to watch the rain
Come sliding down the window-pane.

And I was humming all the time,
Around my head, a kind of rime;

And blowing softly on the glass
To see the dimness come and pass.

I made a picture, with my breath
Rubbed out to show the underneath.

I built a city on the floor;
And then I went and was a War.

And I escaped; from square to square
That's greenest in the carpet there.

Until at last I came to 'Us,—
But it was very dangerous.

Because, if I had stepped outside,
I made believe I should have died!

And now I have the boat to mend,
And all our supper to pretend.

I am so busy, every day,
I haven't any time to play.

—In June Harper's Magazine.

The Little Shepherd and Shepherdess

By Livingstone B. Morse,
One chilly November evening, just at dusk, I sat in the big armchair with my feet on the hearth-rug, enjoying the glow of the burning logs on the andirons. Through the window I could see in the twilight the treetops as they tossed in the wind, a tangle of swaying lines against the faint rose-gray of the west. Inside it was snug and warm. The fire was purring away to itself like a big, comfortable cat, and in the fitful light which it shed, the cosy-room appeared to me the cheeriest place in the world.

Every now and then the flames would leap up and send great shadows dancing upon the walls—shadows so strange and distorted that they might have been the shadows of anything—or nothing. Perhaps they were the shadows of my own thoughts; or possibly of the Fire's. And so, perhaps, the tale that it told me may have been only a shadow after all. But of one thing I am certain: it is to the Fire that I am indebted for the tale of the Shepherd and the Shepherdess. And as he had it at first hand from the old Green Sofa, I presume that the tale is true.

A Shepherdess was real Dresden china; that was why she was so proud and put on so many airs. It isn't every shepherdess, you know, who is real Dresden china; nor is it every one who is well born. Bless you, none of us was consulted in the matter. But too conscious, the little Shepherd thought. He was only common porcelain; but he had a good heart—though to be sure, it wasn't a Dresden china one. For, you see, he had dared to fall in love with the Shepherdess and was always playing serenades to her upon his guitar.

She was such a charming little thing, in her dainty cream-and-white gown with little gold roses scattered over it, and her tiny golden slippers, that it is no wonder he fell in love with her. A jaunty hat was perched upon the top of her powdered hair, and her head was cocked coquettishly on one side, as if she were smiling at some one over her shoulder and were just about to throw the rose which she held in her left hand. In the other hand she held a crook; but she never troubled herself to use it, for the only sheep she had to tend were those in the picture which hung above the mantel.

Often Connie used to scold the Shepherdess for being such a gay trifter and paying no heed to her sheep. "You really should be ashamed of yourself," Connie would say. "Can't you see how that little lamb, off there on the right, is running away down the hill, and you his mother is crying for him? Why don't you go after him and bring him back, you lazy Shepherdess? But I know why: It's because you're so taken up watching the Bronze Knight on horseback, over there on the mantelpiece. That is time thrown away. He will not stop for you. He is off to the Crusades. Don't you see his sword and shield, and the long lance that he is carrying? Perhaps you think he will fight a tournament for you"—Connie had just been reading Ivanhoe—"and then you will throw him the rose. But he won't; he's too busy riding away to the Crusades to think about an idle Shepherdess like you. Now, the little Shepherd over there would suit you nicely. He is always playing to you on his guitar; and you won't listen to him a hit, you saucy little thing."

Then Connie would take up the Shepherdess and turn her quite around so that she had no choice but to look at the Shepherd and could not see the Knight at all. Oh, how angry this would make her; she would sulk, and scowl at the poor Shepherd in the crosslest manner. But he was so happy to have her look at him at all, that he forgave her ugly frowns and tried by his sweet playing and good temper to cause her to forget her anger.

Rob would listen to all this with wide-open eyes. "Why, Connie," he would say, "how can she get into the picture and drive back the lamb; She's only china and can't move about?"

"Ah, but can't she, though!" Connie would reply. "You don't know what they all do when it is dark and quiet at night, and everybody is in bed asleep."

Then she would lift Rob onto the sofa beside her, and tell him long tales about the Shepherd and Shepherdess and the Crusader Knight and the rest, and how they all came to life when there was no mortal about to interfere with them. She didn't know how nearly right she was. For it often happens that what one says merely by way of a jest is the exact truth after all. Rob solemnly resolved that some night he would steal down-stairs and see for himself. But somehow, in spite of his good resolutions, he never could manage to wake up before morning—and then, of course, it was too late.

Once upon a time ✽

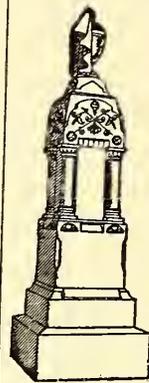

A man—for an hour—doubled up with cramps, took

Painkiller

(PERRY DAVIS')

was cured—immediately. His friends being told, said—"Pooh, we've all used PAINKILLER—for years.

Moral. Don't suffer—an hour—keep Painkiller (Perry Davis') in the house.

TUCKER BROS.

Wilmington, N. C.

THE PLACE TO BUY YOUR

MONUMENTS.

HEADSTONES,

and all Cemetery Work,

at Bottom Prices. All

work delivered.

Branch yard at

Goldboro, N. C.

THE BEST OF EVERYTHING FOR THE LEAST MONEY

Whatever your clothing wants may be, we ask the privilege of showing you our stock of

CLOTHING, HATS AND MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.

Give us a call, or if you do not live in Charlotte, we would be glad to send you goods on approval, returnable at our expense. We have been leaders in the Clothing business for years and our reputation for selling the best goods for the least money cannot be excelled.

Give us a trial on your next purchase. We guarantee satisfaction. Suits $10 to $25.

FULL DRESS, TUXEDO AND PRINCE ALBERT SUITS

Always on hand.

Long-Tate Clothing Co.

42 SOUTH TRYON STREET.

Goods sent on approval returnable at our expense.

XANTHINE! PROF. HERTZ' GREAT GERMAN HAIR RESTORATIVE

NOTHING LIKE IT.

NOTHING SO GOOD, AND NEVER WILL BE.

Never fails. Testimonials of unquestionable credibility.

INSIST ON GETTING IT. Take no other. Nothing else will give you satisfaction. If your druggist has not got it, write us. Not a dye, but always restores the beautiful natural color; stops dandruff; promotes growth.

At druggists. Price, $1. Insist on getting it. If your druggist has not got it, send us $1, and we will send you a bottle. Charles Freyald, Highest testimonials. Write us for circulars.
XANTHINE COMPANY, Richmond, Va.

Lot No. 73.—Two china figures, Shepherd and Shepherdess.

The Shepherd could hardly credit his good fortune. Even to be classed with her was happiness. And then, to think that they must be sold together; that they could not be separated! Oh, it was too good! In his joy he ventured to express something of this to her.

"It almost marries us, don't you think so, to be classed together in this way?" he asked rather timidly.

"Marries us! Indeed, it does nothing of the sort," she replied haughtily. "They should have given me a number all to myself, and a special card saying that I am real Dresden china." She turned sulkily away and would say nothing more to him all the evening.

The next morning the red flag was hung out of the window, and all the church people came, and the farmers and their wives drove up from the valley, and they walked about the house, whispering in corners about the pleasant surprise they had planned for the minister. They examined everything and made all sorts of comments and jokes about the various articles. They poked the beds and tried the beds to see if they were comfortable, and the "backs fitted"—"till I longed to break, just for the pleasure of spilling them out," as an old rocker said spitefully after it was all over.

To be sure, it didn't know about the secret—that the church people had held a meeting the week before and had decided to come in a body and buy all the things for the minister and his family, so that they need not lose the furniture to which they had become so much attached. You see, it is very easy to misjudge actions. There are many kind persons in the world; but it often takes a great trouble, such as this, to show them in their true light.

By and by the auctioneer came with his hammer and stationed himself behind the table which had been placed between the parlor windows. The people sat about in chairs, and the sale began. One piece of furniture after another was put up, commented upon in a manner to make it blush, then bid upon and knocked down to the highest bidder.

Sometimes it was very difficult to get a bid upon an article—like the broken-backed fire-screen with the impossible lilies upon it, that had belonged to Connie's grandmother. Then the auctioneer was obliged to make funny remarks about it to put the people in a good humor, so that they would bid for that which they did not really wish. But it was almost humiliating to the poor screen and very hard to bear.

When it came the turn of Lot No. 73, the Shepherd and Shepherdess were both terribly frightened. They had been growing more and more nervous as they felt their turn coming nearer and nearer, and saw, one by one, their friends and acquaintances auctioned off. But he, like a brave little man, did his best to reassure her, and told her that in any case he would be near to protect her.

When they were actually put up it was very trying. They had not imagined how dreadful it is to be so stared at and talked about so openly—you see, they had never been out in society at all. Her pride quite deserted her now. She clung very close to him, and her little china heart beat so very, very fast, that the rose trembled in the hand which clasped it tight.

"Oh, save me, save me," she whispered to him. "And if ever we get safely out of this, I will marry you. Indeed, indeed, I will."

Then he felt as brave as a lion and encouraged her to bear up. The ordeal would soon be over and he would

Southern States Trust Company

Capital,

$200,000.

GEORGE STEPHENS, President.

T. S. FRANKLIN, V. President.

W. H. WOOD, Treasurer.

A Co-worker

This is what your money
becomes when you put it
on deposit in our

Savings Department.

We pay four per cent. interest
and compound it quarterly.

Princeton Theological Seminary.

FRANCIS L. PATTON, D. D., LL. D., President.

The ninety-second session of Princeton Theological Seminary will open on Thursday, September 17th, 1903. Matriculation of Students takes place in Stuart Hall at eleven o'clock.

On Friday, September 18th, at eleven o'clock the Rev. William Park Armstrong will be inaugurated as Professor of New Testament Literature and Exegesis. His address will be on the subject, "The Witness of the Gospel." The exercises will take place in Miller Chapel. College Graduates of all denominations welcome. Faculty of seventeen. Modern methods of instruction. Choice of extra curriculum courses, and privilege of advanced study in Princeton University. A strong Y. M. C. A. An address each week by men prominent in aggressive Christian work. Annual conference of leading Christian workers. Three fine dormitories with parlor and baths in each. Ample grounds for recreation.

Address all correspondence, etc., to

Prof. GEERHARDUS VOS,
Princeton, N. J.

Are you going to College?

Some things in favor of your going to Greeneville and Tusculum College.

Fine Location, Beautiful grounds, Modern Buildings, Elegant Student Rooms, Eleven Experienced Teachers, Expenses very moderate. Co-educational, Progressive. Latin, Greek, English, Mathematics, Science, Bible, History, French, German, Music, Art, Elocution, Domestic Science, Physical Culture.

UNDER CARE OF THE SYNOD OF TENNESSEE.

SESSION BEGINS TUESDAY, SEPT. 1, 1903.

Write for Catalogue.

Rev. S. A. COILE, D. D., President, Tusculum, Tenn.

Handsomest Stock in Carolinas Men's and Boys' Underwear

During no former Summer have we disposed of as much Underwear as the present season—the demand has been enormous—and at no time was there ever displayed here such magnificent varieties of styles' colors and sizes, consisting of Balbriggan, Lisle and the finest of Silk, at prices ranging from

50 Cents to $20.00

Underwear that is cool, comfortable, perfect fitting, with lasting qualities. You cannot buy anything better for the price. It don't pay to buy shoddy underwear at any price—hence we keep only the best.

Ed. W. Mellon Co.

rely take care of her ever after. The terrible moment came. "Look at this now, for an ornament," said the auctioneer taking her up and turning her all about for the people to see. What am I bid for this lot? Real Dresden china—a lovely bit, too. Who'll give me a bid on this? Shall I start it at a dollar? Dollar, dollar, half will you make it now? Going at a dollar; Shepherd here thrown in, and real Dresden china. Going at a dollar; half, will you make it now? Only a dollar for this lovely piece of bric-a-brac—cheap at six times the price. What do you say, Madam—a quarter? Going at a dollar and a quarter; going, going at a dollar and a quarter; last call and final—am I bid any more? Sold to lady over there for a dollar and a quarter."

Poor little Shepherdess, how humiliating! How lonely she felt; how forlorn. She was quite willing to marry the Shepherd now, so that she might be cared for tenderly, and taken away from this horrible place. She even wished that the floor would open and swallow her, so great were her shame and mortification.

And just then something did happen. By mistake the auctioneer set her down too near the edge of the table and she fell onto the floor with a crash and was broken into a hundred bits.

The little Shepherd felt that now he was a widower in deed, and that life was no longer worth the living. He would have cried out had he been able. But no, he had to stand there mute before all those people and make no sign, though his poor little heart was like to break with grief, and his only wish was that he, too, might fall in fragments on the floor beside his little lady.

But it was not he. In this world we must learn to bear our sorrows. So he had to go on, just as if nothing had happened, and as if the whole course of his life had not been changed.

But Connie had seen it all, and her Shepherd and Shepherdess Little folk kind heart had told her just how he felt. Stooping, she picked up the golden rose which the Shepherdess had carried and tied it with a bit of silk to the Shepherd's crook. It was a very little thing to do, of course; but it was prompted by kindness—which is everything—and she hoped that it might comfort him a little.

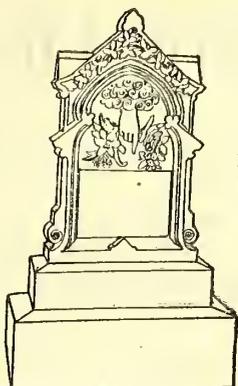

And so it did; for to this day he wears the rose tied to the end of his crook in remembrance of his lady love. And he has lived a widower ever since—at least, so the Fire told me.—The Delineator.

Ward Seminary for Young Ladies, Nashville, Tenn.

"An ideal Christian home." Seminary and special courses in Language, Literature, History, Science, Music, Art, Elocution. Faculty, 30. Certificate admits to Wellesley, Baltimore Woman's College. Nashville affords unusual advantages in Lectures, Recitals, and opportunities for practical education. Patronage 37th year, 22 States; enrollment in boarding department largest in history of the Institution. 38th year begins Sept. 24. Mild, equable climate. For Catalog R address J. D. BLANTON, Box 4.

ROANOKE COLLEGE, SALEM, VA.

51st year begins Sept. 23. Courses for Degrees, with Electives; high standard. Also Commercial and Preparatory Courses. German, French. Library, 22,000 volumes; working laboratory; good morals and discipline; six Churches; no bar-rooms. Healthful mountain location. Very moderate expenses. Special terms to clergymen's sons and candidates for ministry. Catalogue free. Address Prof. L. McREYNOLDS, Secretary.

Raleigh Marble Works.

COOPER BROS., Props.

RALEIGH, N. C.

MONUMENTS,

Tablets, Headstones, Iron Fences.

We Pay the Freight.

Please mention Standard.

Write for our New Catalogue

HAMPDEN-SIDNEY COLLEGE.

The 128th Session will open Wednesday, September 9th, 1903.

Four courses of instruction leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., B. L. and A. M. Nine professors and instructors. Healthful location. Moral surroundings. For catalogue apply to

RICHARD McILWAINE, President, Hampden-Sidney, Va

CLARKTON MALE INSTITUTE.

A MILITARY SCHOOL,

(UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE PRESBYTERY OF WILMINGTON).

Prepares Boys for college and for life. Board $8 per month. Tuition $27 for nine months. Write for catalog.

R. C. DEAL, Principal.

J. J. HUTSON, Commandant.

WARRENTON HIGH SCHOOL.

A Classical and Mathematical School of High Order.

Endorsed by the University and the various colleges, male and female. Total expenses per session of ten months (including tuition, board, room-rent, lights and fuel) guaranteed not to exceed $154.00. Fall term begins September 1st. For catalogue, address,

JOHN GRAHAM, Principal, Warrenton, N. C.

Aberdeen & Ashboro Railway Co.

CONNECTIONS FOR JACKSON SPRINGS.

Ly Aberdeen 7:30 A M	Ar. Jackson Spgs. 8:10 A M
" " " 9:40 " "	" " " 10:30 " "
" " " 6:40 P M	" " " 7:30 P M
High Point 2 05 P M	" " " 5:15 P M

H. A. PAGE, Aberdeen, N. C.

Life is a Blank

When Sight is Gone

TOO LATE TO GRIEVE
THEN.

Now is the time for action. Now is when you can come to us for a free examination and get our advice and information about your eye sight.

THERE IS DANGER IN DELAYS.

Examination free

Dr. J. H. Spilman,

22 West Trade Street, Blair's Drug Store, Charlotte.

ULCERINA.

The only cure for Chronic Ulcers on the market. The most reliable remedy known for Ring-Worms, Old Sores, Wounds of all kinds and chronic skin diseases. For sale by all druggists. Price 25 cents.

Manufactured by

R. G. ROZIER, M. D., LUMBERTON, N. C.

Medical College of Virginia.

Established 1838.

Departments of Medicine, Dentistry and Pharmacy

The sixty sixth session will commence on September 29, 1903. Well equipped Laboratories, splendid Hospital facilities and abundance of clinical material afford excellent opportunities for practical work.

Tuition fees and living expenses are very moderate. For announcement and further information, address, CHRISTOPHER TOMPKINS, M. D., Dean, Richmond, Va.

FOR RENT.—A furnished boarding house, well located, ample for forty boarders, at Davidson College. It will suit a family having children to educate, either in the Academy or in the College, or in the Medical College. Address,

REV. J. B. SHEARER, Davidson, N. C.

SEABOARD

AIR LINE RAILWAY.

In Effect November 23rd, 1902

Vestibuled Limited Trains.

DOUBLE DAILY SERVICE Between New York
Tampa, Atlanta, New Orleans and points

SOUTH and WEST.

SOUTHWARD.

	Daily No. 31.	Daily No. 27.
Lv New York, P. R. R.....	12 55 p m	12 10 a m
Lv Philadelphia, " "	3 29 p m	7 20 a m
Lv Baltimore, " "	5 45 p m	9 34 a m
Lv Washington, W. S. Ry..	7 00 p m	10 41 a m
Lv Richmond, S. A. L. Ry..	10 37 p m	2 15 p m
Lv Petersburg, " "	11 20 p m	2 53 p m
Lv Norlina, " "	1 55 a m	5 18 p m
Lv Henderson, " "	2 28 a m	5 41 p m
Lv Raleigh, " "	4 15 a m	6 58 p m
Lv Southern Pines " "	6 16 a m	8 50 p m
Lv Hamlet, " "	7 35 a m
Lv Columbia, I " "	10 25 a m	12 20 a m
Ar Savannah, " "	2 35 p m	4 55 a m
Ar Jacksonville, " "	7 00 p m	9 15 a m
Ar Tampa, " "	6 45 a m	8 00 p m

	No. 33.	No. 41.
Lv New York, N. Y. P. & N.	7 55 a m	8 55 p m
Lv Philadelphia, " "	10 16 a m	11 21 p m
Lv New York, O. D. S. S. Co.	7 30 p m
Lv Baltimore, B. S. P. Co.		6 30 p m
Lv Wash'ton, N. & W. S. B.		30 p m
Lv Portsmouth, S. A. L. Ry	9 05 p m	9 25 a m
Lv Weldon, " "	11 45 p m	11 55 a m
Lv Norlina, " "	1 55 a m	1 35 p m
Lv Henderson, " "	2 28 a m	2 02 p m
Lv Raleigh, " "	4 15 a m	3 45 p m
Lv Southern Pines " "	6 16 a m	6 18 p m
Lv Hamlet, " "	7 40 a m	9 45 p m
Lv Wilmington " "		3 20 p m
Ar Charlotte, " "	10 33 a m	10 32 p m
Lv Chester, " "	10 30 a m	12 5 a m
Lv Greenwood, " "	12 37 p m	3 25 a m
Lv Athens, " "	2 52 p m	5 58 a m
Ar Atlanta, I " "	4 00 p m	7 35 a m
Ar Augusta, C. & W. C.....	5 40 p m
Ar Macon, C of Ga.....	7 20 p m	11 35 a m
Ar Montgomery, A. & W. P.	9 20 p m	6 25 p m
Ar Mobile, L. & N.....	2 55 a m
Ar New Orleans, L. & N.....	7 25 a m
Ar Nashville, N. C. & St. L.	1 30 a m	6 55 p m
Ar Memphis.....	4 15 p m	8 20 a m

NORTHWARD.

	Daily No. 32.	Daily No. 38.
Lv Memphis, N C & St L....	12 45 n 'n	8 00 p m
Lv Nashville, " "	9 30 p m	9 30 a m
Lv New Orleans, L & N....	8 10 p m
Lv Mobile, " "	12 40 a m
Lv Montgomery, A & W P.	6 45 a m	1 00 p m
Lv Macon, C of Ga.....	8 00 a m	4 20 p m
Lv Augusta, C & W. C.....	10 05 a m
Lv Atlanta, I S A L Ry.....	12 00 n 'n	8 00 p m
Ar Athens, " "	2 57 p m	11 23 p m
Ar Greenwood, " "	5 15 p m	1 58 a m
Ar Chester, " "	7 17 p m	4 15 a m
Lv Charlotte, " "	7 27 p m	5 01 p m
Lv Wilmington " "	3 20 p m
Lv Hamlet, " "	10 40 p m	7 50 a m
Lv Southern Pines " "	11 33 p m	8 44 a m
Lv Raleigh, " "	1 35 a m	11 15 a m
Lv Henderson, " "	3 05 a m	12 50 p m
Lv Norlina, " "	3 50 a m	1 45 p m
Lv Weldon, " "	5 00 a m	3 00 p m
Ar Portsmouth, " "	7 15 a m	5 35 p m
Ar Washington, N & W S B		6 55 a m
Ar Baltimore, B S P Co.....		6 30 a m
Ar New York, O D S S Co.....		5 00 p m
Ar Philadelphia, N Y P & N	5 46 p m	5 10 a m
Ar New York, " "	8 15 p m	8 00 a m
	No. 34.	No. 46.
Lv Tampa, S A L Ry.....	8 00 p m	8 00 p m
Lv Jacksonville, " "	9 30 a m	7 50 a m
Lv Savannah, " "	1 40 p m	12 10 p m
Lv Columbia, S " "	7 05 p m	5 30 a m
Lv Hamlet, " "	10 40 p m	8 40 a m
Lv Southern Pines " "	11 33 p m	9 30 a m
Lv Raleigh, " "	1 35 a m	11 50 a m
Lv Henderson, " "	3 05 a m	1 10 p m
Lv Norlina, " "	3 45 a m	1 55 p m
Lv Petersburg, " "	5 53 a m	4 07 p m
Ar Richmond, " "	6 35 a m	4 55 p m
Ar Washington, W S Ry....	10 10 a m	8 36 p m
Ar Baltimore, P R R.....	11 25 a m	11 25 p m
Ar Philadelphia, P R R.....	1 36 p m	2 56 a m
Ar New York, P R R.....	4 13 p m	6 30 a m

R. M. COFFEY, C. T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C.

The Security Life and Annuity Co

(LEGAL RESERVE)

Home Office : Greensboro, N. C.

Guaranty Capital, - - - - $100,000.00.
(Deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.)

Our Life Annuity, Disability and Endowment Policy - - - -

HAS CASH AND LOAN VALUES.

1. Is fully paid-up in 20 years.
2. Is the most attractive policy issued.
3. Contains every essential idea in Life Insurance.
4. Provides a fixed income for Life for the widow.
5. Provides a fixed income for the children during their minority.
6. Provides a fixed income for the insured during disability and old age.
7. Is secured by a cash guaranty capital of $100,000.00 deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.

J. VAN LINDLEY, President.

GEO. A. GRIMSLEY, Secretary.

R. E. FOSTER, Actuary.

Atlanta & West Point RAILROAD COMPANY.

The Western Railway of Alabama.

Shortest and quickest route via Atlanta, Montgomery and New Orleans to all points in Texas, Mexico and California.

Operate Pullman's finest vestibuled sleepers. Unexcelled dining car service on all trains.

Through coaches between Washington and New Orleans.

Cafe-Observation cars on U. S. Fast Mail Trains Nos. 35 and 36, between Atlanta and Montgomery.

Rates and schedules cheerfully furnished by

B. HEYWARD, J. P. BILLUPS,
D. P. A., G. P. A.,
Atlanta, Ga. Atlanta, Ga.
R. E. LUTZ, CHAS. WICKERSHAM,
Traffic Manager, Pres. & Gen. Mgr.,
Montgomery, Ala. Atlanta, Ga.

DROPSY Cured! Gives quick relief, removes all swelling in 15 to 20 days; effects a permanent cure in 30 to 60 days. Trial treatment given absolutely free to every sufferer. Write to Dr. H. H. Green's Sons, Specialists, box 6, Atlanta, Ga.

Agnes Scott Institute FOR YOUNG LADIES.

DECATUR, (Six miles from Atlanta) GEORGIA.
Beautiful grounds Modern buildings and equipment. Equable climate. Unsurpassed health record. Graduate, College Preparatory, and Special Courses. Certification to Eastern Colleges.
For catalogue address
F. H. GAINES, D. D., President, Box X

Reading Notice.

On the first and third Tuesdays of July, August and September the Frisco System (Saint Louis & San Francisco Railroad) will have on sale reduced one-way and round trip tickets from Birmingham, Memphis and Saint Louis to points in Arkansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Indian Territory and Texas.
Write to W. T. Saunders, G. A., P. D., Frisco System, Atlanta, Ga., for information.

MAGNIFICENT PIANO

GIVEN AWAY ABSOLUTELY FREE

OVER 2000 names registered for the gift piano to July 13'h, 1903. Send in your name and address and two cent stamp for return of number and you may be the lucky person. The only question asked, "Are you the Owner of an Upright Piano?"—do you live in North or South Carolina, and has any member of your family registered?" Only one member of a family can register and you must live in North or South Carolina, and no matter what make, if you own an upright piano you are not eligible. Remember this piano will be given away absolutely free by

CHAS. M. STIEFF

in appreciation of the phenomenal sale of the "STIEFF" and to advertise the "KOHLER" Piano, which we control in the South.

All names must be received in Charlotte by August 19'h, 1903, and none will be registered after that date.

ON WEDNESDAY AUG. 26th, 1903

duplicates of every number on our books will be placed in a box and the FIRST number taken out by a little girl, will be given the beautiful "KOHLER" Piano now on exhibition in our warerooms.

Don't fail to enclose two-cent stamp, if you want your number returned.

STIEFF

SOUTHERN WAREROOMS:

211-213 N. Tryon, & 22 W. 5th St.

C. H. WILMOTH, Mgr.

Charlotte, - - - - N. C.

Wire Railing and Ornamental Wire Works.

DUFUR & CO.,

511 N. Howard Street.

Baltimore, Md

Manufacture Wire Railing for Cemetery Balconies, etc. Sieves, Fenders, Cag Sand and Coal Screens Woven Wire, Also Iron Bedsteads, Chairs Settees, etc.

Union Theological Seminary,

Richmond, Va.

FACULTY.

The Rev. Walter W. Moore, D. D., LL. D., McCormick Professor of the Hebrew Language and Literature.

The Rev. Chas. C. Hersman, D. D., LL. D., Henry Young Professor of Biblical Literature and Interpretation of the New Testament.

The Rev. Thomas Cary Johnston, D. D., LL. D., Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity.

The Rev. Thomas R. English, D. D., Stuart Robinson Professor of the English Bible and Pastoral Theology.

The Rev. Givens B. Strickler, D. D., LL. D., Professor of Systematic Theology.

The next session opens on the second Wednesday in September. For catalogue and other information as to course of study, apply to

DR. ENGLISH, Clerk of Faculty.

For information as to rooms, etc., apply to Dr. T. C. Johnston, Richmond, Va.

GREGG

SHORTHAND BY MAIL.

You need not leave your home to learn this system. It is easy to learn, easy to write and easy to read.

Typewriter sent to responsible students. Send today for Booklet C.

Southern Shorthand and

Business University.

J. M. RESSLER, President.

Norfolk, Va.

Cluster Springs Academy

Black Walnut, Va.

A select school for THIRTY boys. Three instructors with from FOUR to TWELVE years experience in training boys.

Address the Head Master for illustrated Catalogue.

Pantops Academy For Boys,

Near Charlottesville, Va.

Fully equipped Equable climate. Tract of 833 acres, formerly owned by Thomas Jefferson and named by him from two Greek words—"All-seeing" Also Summer School. Catalogue. JOHN R. SAMPSON, A. M.

Atlanta College of Pharmacy

Free Dispensary, only college operating an actual drug store. Greater demand for our students than we can supply. Address, GEORGE F. PAYNE, 21 N. Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

Washington & Lee University,

Lexington, Virginia. Law Letters Engineering Science

Founded 1749. Modern Equipment. High Standards. Expenses very moderate. Next session opens September 10. For full information address

President GEORGE H. DENNY, LL. D., Lexington, Va.

Positions

GUARANTEED BY A

$5,000 BANK DEPOSIT

Railroad Fare Paid. 500 FREE Courses Offered. Board at Cost. Write Quick

GEORGIA-ALABAMA BUSINESS COLLEGE, Macon, Ga.

SHORTHAND FREE.

Upon request Converse Business College will send a free lesson in Shorthand, with full explanation, to any one.

For the next thirty days Railroad fare will be paid for any one enrolling for one or more of our courses at the regular rate of tuition.

I. T. WILLIAMS, Secretary and Treasurer, Spartanburg, S. C.

Sewing Machines <sup>A</sup> <sup>N</sup> <sup>D</sup> Supplies

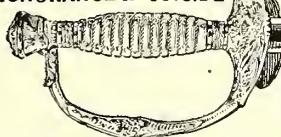

NOW is the time to buy a Machine, and F. H. ANDREWS' is the place. No use to send your money to a catalogue house a thousand miles away, when I can furnish an elegant Drop Head Machine at $16.50, and finer ones in proportion. Attachments, Parts and Needles for all Machines supplied promptly.

F. H. ANDREWS,

20 WEST TRADE STREET, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The Old Reliable Dealer in Pianos, Organs and Sewing Machines.

EDUCATION IS COSTLY IGNORANCE IS SUICIDE HOGE MEMORIAL ACADEMY BLACKSTONE VIRGINIA

Ours is a high-grade School, with moderate charges. Give boys what they need at a critical time. Develops backbone, builds character, while training the mind. Apply for information to COL. E. B. FISHBURNE, B. S., A. M., Principal

DAVIDSON COLLEGE, Davidson, N. C.

Classical, Mathematical, Scientific, Literary, Biblical, Commercial. Terms reasonable; Location healthful; Accommodations excellent; Teaching unsurpassed; Gymnasium complete.

Send for a catalogue

Address THE PRESIDENT.

DO YOU WANT

—A—

—TEACHER?—

We are in correspondence with hundreds of the best teachers in the U. S. for all grades school and college work. Can refer you to some that would probably suit. NO CHARGE. Members located in 18 states at salaries $2,500 per year down. Correspondence with school officers and teachers invited.

THE EDUCATIONAL BUREAU, Raleigh, N. C. (Established 1891) Branch Office; Fort Smith, Ark.

CONVERSE COLLEGE, Spartanburg, S. C.

A HIGH GRADE COLLEGE FOR WOMEN and Conservatory of Music. Schools of Art and Expression.

ROBERT P. PELL, President.

North Carolina MILITARY ACADEMY.

Red Springs, N. C.

Ample faculty of five instructors. Location unsurpassed for healthfulness. Educates for business or for college and stand taken by graduates and students in university work the test of thoroughness. Cost small, considering advantages. Religious influences good. Address for catalogue,

CAPT. C. A. SHORT, Principal.

DR. SAMUEL W. MURPHY, Head Master.

Red Springs Seminary,

The Ideal College for Women.

Faculty of twenty-six experienced teachers. College course leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S. and B. Lit. The best advantages in Music and Art. Large two manual Pipe Organ. Electric lights. Steam heat. A catalogue will interest you.

REV. C. G. VARDELL, D. D., Red Springs, N. C.

Summer address, Blowing Rock, N. C.

Brown's University School, Charlotte, N. C.

Best advantages for boys whose parents can afford it. Five boarders, as members of family. Combined advantages of home life and city culture.

Write for particulars.

W. G. BROWN (U. of Va.) Prin.

Catawba Male Academy

ROCK HILL, S. C.

A Military Fitting School. Entrance into any American University guaranteed to our graduates.

Thorough preparation for business.

WRITE FOR OUR ANNOUNCEMENT

Fishburne Military School, Waynesboro, Virginia.

Intelligence in adopting the best methods, old and new; honesty in doing our duty and inculcating a regard for duty in pupils; enthusiasm in our work and so arousing the same in pupils; courtesy, treating our boys as gentlemen and requiring them to be such. These and like principles characterize this school.

Able instructors, specially fitted for their work. Faithful moral and religious training. Located in the Shenandoah Valley, 1300 feet elevation, at junction of leading railroads. All modern conveniences.

Pupils: Boys free from bad habits and tendencies; truthful, manly.

Pupils fitted for University, College or Business.

For catalogue and other particulars, address,

JAS. A. FISHBURNE, A. B., PRINCIPAL.

Chicora College, For Young Ladies, Greenville, S. C.

A high-grade Presbyterian School whose pattern is the Christian home. Degree courses taught by specialists. Music, Art and Elocution schools not surpassed by any school in the South.

Beautiful Auditorium; Large Pipe Organ; Charming location, in centre of City; Pure Water; Fine Sewerage.

OUR AIM—Thoroughness in Intellectual, Spiritual and Moral Development.

OUR HISTORY—Phenomenal growth.

OUR MOTTO—Success.

OUR POLICY—Progress.

OUR SYSTEM—Efficiency.

OUR TEST—Try us.

Eighty non-resident pupils enrolled this session, besides a large list of day pupils.

Next session begins September 18th, 1903.

Write for illustrated Catalogue to

S. R. PRESTON, D. D., President,
Greenville, S. C.

HORNER MILITARY SCHOOL,

Oxford, North Carolina.

A Boarding School under Military Discipline with advantages of home training.

Thorough Preparation for Colleges and Universities.

Two Students Secured Appointments in Government Schools this year.

Base-ball, Foot-ball and Athletic Field surrounded by Quarter-mile Running Track on Campus.

Forty-third year begins Wed., September 2, 1903.

J. C. HORNER, Principal.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., AUGUST 26, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 34

ALL extreme sensitiveness, fastidiousness, suspicion, readiness to take offence, and tenacity of what we think our due, come from self-love, as does the unworthy secret gratification we sometimes feel when another is humbled or mortified; the cold indifference, the harshness of our criticism, the unfairness and hastiness of our judgments, our bitterness towards those we dislike, and many other faults which must more or less rise up before most men's conscience when they question it sincerely as to how far they do indeed love their neighbors as Christ has loved them. He will root out all dislike and aversions, all readiness to take offence, all resentments, all bitterness, from the heart which is given up to His guidance. He will infuse His own tender love for man into His servant's mind and teach him to "love his brother as Christ has loved him."

—JEAN NICOLAS GROU.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.

FACULTY.

The Rev. Walter W. Moore, D. D., LL. D., McCormick Professor of the Hebrew Language and Literature.
The Rev. Chas. C. Hersman, D. D., LL. D., Henry Young Professor of Biblical Literature and Interpretation of the New Testament.
The Rev. Thomas Cary Johnston, D. D., LL. D., Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity.
The Rev. Thomas R. English, D. D., Stuart Robinson Professor of the English Bible and Pastoral Theology.
The Rev. Givens B. Strickler, D. D., LL. D., Professor of Systematic Theology.

The next session opens on the second Wednesday in September. For catalogue and other information as to course of study, apply to

DR. ENGLISH, Clerk of Faculty.

For information as to rooms, etc., apply to Dr. T. C. Johnston, Richmond, Va.

GREGG
SHORTHAND BY MAIL.

You need not leave your home to learn this system. It is easy to learn, easy to write and easy to read.
Typewriter sent to responsible students. Send today for Booklet C.

Southern Shorthand and Business University.

J. M. RESSLER, President.
Norfolk, Va.

Cluster Springs Academy

Black Walnut, Va.

A select school for THIRTY boys. Three instructors with from FOUR to TWELVE years experience in training boys

Address the Head Master for illustrated Catalogue.

Pantops Academy For Boys, Near Charlottesville, Va.

Fully equipped Equable climate. Tract of 333 acres, formerly owned by Thomas Jefferson and named by him from two Greek words—"All-seeing" Also Summer School. Catalogue. JOHN R. SAMPSON, A. M.

Atlanta College of Pharmacy

Free Dispensary, only college operating an actual drug store. Greater demand for our students than we can supply. Address, GEORGE F. PAYNE, 21 N. Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

Washington & Lee University,

Lexington, Virginia. Law Letters Engineering Science

Founded 1749. Modern Equipment. High Standards. Expenses very moderate. Next session opens September 10. For full information address

President GEORGE H. DENNY, LL. D., Lexington, Va.

Positions

GUARANTEED BY A

$5,000 BANK DEPOSIT

Railroad Fare Paid. 500 FREE Courses Offered. Board at Cost. Write Quick

GEORGIA-ALABAMA BUSINESS COLLEGE, Macon, Ga.

SHORTHAND FREE.

Upon request Converse Business College will send a free lesson in Shorthand, with full explanation, to any one.

For the next thirty days Railroad fare will be paid for any one enrolling for one or more of our courses at the regular rate of tuition.

I. T. WILLIAMS, Secretary and Treasurer, Spartanburg, S. C.

Sewing Machines <sup>A</sup><sub>N</sub><sup>D</sup> Supplies

NOW is the time to buy a Machine, and F. H. ANDREWS' is the place. No use to send your money to a catalogue house a thousand miles away, when I can furnish an elegant Drop Head Machine at $16.50, and finer ones in proportion. Attachments, Parts and Needles for all Machines supplied promptly.

F. H. ANDREWS,

20 WEST TRADE STREET, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The Old Reliable Dealer in Pianos, Organs and Sewing Machines.

EDUCATION IS COSTLY IGNORANCE IS SUICIDE HOGE MEMORIAL ACADEMY BLACKSTONE VIRGINIA

Ours is a high-grade School, with moderate charges. Give boys what they need at a critical time. Develops backbone, builds character, while training the mind. Apply for information to COL. E. B. FISHBURNE, B. S., A. M., Principal

DAVIDSON COLLEGE, Davidson, N. C.

Classical, Mathematical, Scientific, Literary, Biblical, Commercial. Terms reasonable; Location healthful; Accommodations excellent; Teaching unsurpassed; Gymnasium complete.

Send for a catalogue

Address THE PRESIDENT.

DO YOU WANT

—A—

—TEACHER?—

We are in correspondence with hundreds of the best teachers in the U. S. for all grades school and college work. Can refer you to some that would probably suit. NO CHARGE. Members located in 18 states at salaries $2,500 per year down. Correspondence with school officers and teachers invited.
THE EDUCATIONAL BUREAU,
(Established 1891) Raleigh, N. C.
Branch Office; Fort Smith, Ark.

CONVERSE COLLEGE, Spartanburg, S. C.

A HIGH GRADE COLLEGE FOR WOMEN and Conservatory of Music. Schools of Art and Expression.

ROBERT P. PELL, President.

North Carolina

MILITARY ACADEMY.

Red Springs, N. C.

Ample faculty of five instructors. Location unsurpassed for healthfulness. Educates for business or for college and stand taken by graduates and students in university work the test of thoroughness. Cost small, considering advantages. Religious influences good. Address for catalogue,

CAPT. C. A. SHORT, Principal.

DR. SAMUEL W. MURPHY, Head Master.

Red Springs Seminary, The Ideal College for Women.

Faculty of twenty-six experienced teachers College course leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S. and B. Lit. The best advantages in Music and Art. Large two manual Pipe Organ. Electric lights. Steam heat. A catalogue will interest you.

REV. C. G. VARDELL, D. D., Red Springs, N. C.

Summer address, Blowing Rock, N. C.

Brown's University School, Charlotte, N. C.

Best advantages for boys whose parents can afford it. Five boarders, as members of family. Combined advantages of home life and city culture. Write for particulars.

W. G. BROWN (U. of Va.) Prin.

Presbyterian Standard.

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., AUGUST 26, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 34

Event and Comment.

The Secretary of the Unitarian Association is named St. John. Somewhere back in the line of his ancestry, there was a belief in the credibility of the Fourth Gospel. But a Unitarian St. John is a contradiction in terms.

The current issue of the British Monthly has much to say of Frederick Robertson, who died fifty years ago this month. He was the greatest preacher to preachers of the Nineteenth Century, and through them reached a great many in the pew who never suspected that he was doing the preaching.

It is reported that a million dollar cathedral will be built in Cleveland, Ohio, for the Greek Church, the Czar of Russia being the principle contributor. It will at least illustrate how much more tolerant a Protestant country is to other faiths than Russia can ever be while dominated by the Greek Church.

The Catholic Church attendance in New York City is 317,454 and the Protestant, 134,177. And yet there are Presbyterians who think that New York should set the fashion for Presbyterianism, and that we should pay great attention to the opinions of the metropolitan press, the most of whose constituents are Catholics and Jews.

Alexander Dowie admitted on the stand the other day that he has made several million dollars out of his Elijah business. We have not the slightest doubt that Dowie, who studied theology in Edinburgh, laughs in his sleeve at the fools he has found and made in America, and yet hopes to cheat the devil as thoroughly as he has his own dupes.

Says the Congregationalist: "It is encouraging to find the South Carolina papers realizing at last that Senator Tillman's interpretation of the Negro problem injures not only him, but the state he represents." The humor is in the phrase, "at last." It will be a great relief at last to know that a correct idea about the South can penetrate the Bostonian mind.

A correspondent of the Herald and Presbyterian has been trying to prove that Henry van Dyke did not preach much of a sermon at the General Assembly last spring. We have unfortunately forgotten the correspondent's name, but if he will put one of his sermons in pamphlet form, we rather suspect that the common people would buy more of Henry van Dyke's than of his.

Speaking of the Puritan ideas of the Sabbath, in the editor's letter to a correspondent, we might have gone farther back than New England to show how the rules about the Sabbath vary, while the great principle of one day in seven as a day of rest and worship remains unchanged. In the life of Archbishop Whitgift, who died in 1604, his biographer says, evidently with specific instances in mind:

"It was preached in Oxfordshire that to do any work on the Sabbath was as great a sin as to kill or to commit adultery. It was preached in Somersetshire that to throw a bowl on the Sabbath-day was as great a sin as to commit murder. It was preached in Norfolk that to make a feast or a wedding-dinner on that day was as great a sin as for a father to take a knife and cut his son's throat. It was preached in Suffolk that to ring more bells than one on the Lord's Day to call the people to church, was as great a sin as to do an act of murder.

In the time of the Roman Emperors the behaviour of the Christian soldiers was a strong witness to the truth of Christianity. The fame of the thundering legion was spread far. The Japanese Christians are making the same impression upon the Japanese Army by their courage and their good behaviour. The villages where Christianity is beginning to control are also making a reputation for orderly conduct among the Japanese. The greatest witness to the truth is the testimony of a godly life

The nation that stands for righteousness as the paramount issue and not for trade, is the nation that shall be blessed. Just now Russia seems bent on avenging the unspeakable wrongs that Macedonian and Bulgarian and Armenian have suffered from the rule of the Turk. Constantinople may be the prize before Russia's eye, and it may not be. But England is allowing fearful massacres of helpless people by allowing the Turk to do what he will with impunity, for fear that Russia will have Constantinople. The sentiment of Christendom will soon say, Better that she should have it than that the Turk should rule any longer. The United States should certainly be in favor of giving Russia the free hand in this matter.

Strange as it may seem, the only people who believe that the spirit of Leo XIII is now glorified in Heaven, are Protestants. They argue that, however much his faith was mixed with superstition and even idolatry, he did have faith in Jesus Christ as his Saviour. But the Catholics who believed him to be the Head of the Church and the Vicar of Christ, the Successor of Peter, having power to bind and loose, to absolve and to condemn, believe that his soul had to pass through purgatory, a place of punishment; and as the masses that are still said for the repose of his soul would indicate, he is still there and may be for an indefinite time. He himself left the order in his will that masses should be said for his soul for five years.

The following from the Congregationalist indicates that The Standard is occasionally read in Boston:

"Though we have felt obliged to decline to publish the names of some who have received honorary degrees, we willingly print unsolicited the announcement that upon Rev. C. W. Griffin of Savannah, the degree of Doctor of Divinity has been conferred by the Nurses' Training School of Washington, Ga. This institution is also a business college and a sanitarium, and in virtue of its three departments might be called a university if a sufficiently comprehensive title could be found for it. Dr. Griffin's name shall be inscribed in the hall of fame. We have no doubt he is past master in the nurses' art. We suggest as a motto for his coat-of-arms, 'Feed my lambs.'"

There was an accident the other day in an underground railway in Paris in which a hundred or more passengers lost their lives through the flames of the burning train or the suffocating gas. There was a great outpouring of popular sympathy, a public funeral and much ceremony, and the Catholic Prelate, not to be outdone in the spectacular, pronounced absolution over the bodies of those who had been killed. There may have been those on that journey on an errand of diabolical mischief. But there was popular sympathy for the victims of the accident, and the Church of Rome decrees that on account of the accident they are all safe now. We suppose the financial effect of the pronouncement was duly considered as being worth more than could have been obtained from the relatives by way of paying for masses.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established January 1, 1858.

A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER FOR THE FAMILY. DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM AS REPRESENTED BY THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

A. J. MCKELWAY, ..... EDITOR.
CORNELIA R. SHAW, ..... ASSOCIATE EDITOR.
H. M. MCALLISTER, ..... BUSINESS MANAGER.

WESTERN OFFICE:

GEO. L. LEYBURN, ..... EDITOR AND MANAGER.
3511 Bell Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

Subscription Price, ..... $2.00 a Year, in Advance.

The STANDARD is published every Wednesday at Charlotte, N. C., by the PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

For table of contents see page 16.

The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription has been paid.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the subscription.

In accordance with the general wish of our patrons the paper is discontinued only upon the written request of the subscriber. Arrearages must be settled in full at the same time, at the rate of two dollars a year and twenty cents a month for a part of a year.

When change of address is desired give both the old and the new address.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post-office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South. Address all communications to

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD, Charlotte, N. C.

The Missionary Failing.

Two of our friends have sent us a little pamphlet of jaundiced color and contents, and they seem to be aggrieved about some of its statements. Let us be philosophical, and when things are amusing, let us be amused.

We have the authority of John Calvin himself for the necessity of amusement in this pilgrimage of ours, and there has not come under our eye lately anything better calculated to contribute to the gayety of a trying season. The pamphlet is entitled, Our Largest, Neediest and Most Promising Mission Field, and is written by Rev. C. W. Blanchard, of the Baptist ministry. The field above described is the Atlantic Association and includes ten counties in Eastern Carolina. It contains forty-four Baptist churches, only six of them being self-sustaining. It will be observed, therefore, that notwithstanding the fact that the country "was physically constructed on Baptist principles—a plenty of water"—it is, to mix metaphors slightly, rather a Baptist desert.

Each of our correspondents, under whose eyes this little pamphlet fell, was struck especially with the following excerpt and was inclined to grow indignant over it. Tut, tut! There is more fun to the square inch in that paragraph than in a page of Puck. Let us waste no time therefore in letting it speak for itself:

"But the needs of the field can only be known when once you have looked in upon their environments, and have learned their cordial willingness to confess that they want something in the name of Christianity which they have not. They are stuffed, to be sure, Sabbath by Sabbath, and often day by day for weeks and months, with something that is called the gospel. They have for their instructors Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Methodists, Ultra Sanctificationists, both Methodist Free Wills and Independents, Campbellites, Universalists, Nashites, Adventists, Mormons, Christian Scientists (?), and so on in the scale of religious depravity.

Now, we really do not know whether it is a compliment or not, the putting of the Presbyterians at the head of the scale of religious depravity. We presume that as we believe in total depravity and there are no degrees in totality, it must mean that we are totally depraved, the others following as they are more or less depraved. It will be noted that on this theory our Episcopalian friends are a close second, while the Mormons are real saints as well as Latter Day Saints and the Christian Scientists are hardly depraved at all, though there be those who say that the Science itself is merely deep raving. And then do you notice that our friends, the Primitive Baptists, are honorably excluded from this list altogether? The fact is that there is a considerable flirtation just now between the Missionary and the Primitive Baptists, the courting being very assiduously done by the Missionaries. We do not blame the Missionary Baptists for trying to get rid of their distinctive name, seeing that the depraved Presbyterians, with thirty-five thousand members in North Carolina, contribute more every year to Home and to Foreign Missions than the Missionary Baptists, 175,000 strong (?)

Our zealous missionary continues: "And I am not too sure that if there is any other kind of ism in our Southern atmosphere, but what (sic) it has, before now, taken root in this sea of assortments."

Here we have air plants taking root in the sea, contrary to all the teachings of science, to say nothing of the grammar involved.

And then our humorist proceeds: "It would not be a defenceless position if I were to assert that it would be better for a great number of our people to hear no preaching at all than to be deceived and deluded by the folly of much that is given them in the name of Christianity."

And now, in the language of the street, it is certainly "up to" some of our Presbyterian brethren to explain, considering that our Church is at the head of the religiously depraved list. There is Dr. Farries, for example, of Goldsboro. We have heard of the reputation Dr. Farries made as one of the very strongest preachers in Canada before he was forced to seek Southern climate. And among his brethren of the Synod who have heard him he is recognized as one of the very best preachers of his adopted State. We are really grieved to hear that what he gives out to his people is really worse than no preaching at all. There is Rev. E. D. Brown, of Kinston, a Mecklenburg boy, trained in our schools of the prophets and making the false reputation of being a most earnest and successful Minister of the Word. It is a sore grief to learn from a brother minister that he is really dishing out something in the name of Christianity which his people would be better off for not hearing, and Mr. Blanchard ought to know, for they work in the same town. And then there is our Newbern pastor, Rev. H. S. Bradshaw. It is sad to think how he has imposed upon his people with the idea that he is preaching the gospel.

For if this accusation be true, we do not blame our zealous Missionary Baptist brother for boasting of something that would otherwise be forbidden the by law of nations and denominations.

He says, "One church, on ground that was altogether occupied by Methodists, was organized a little more than a year ago with 16 members, and in one year's time reported a roll of 110." And we are led to understand the method of this ingathering by the following remark: "There are many Baptists found, too, among the membership of all the other churches, who are of that candid sort that are willing to 'turn their coats' when they become apprised that they have them on wrong." Of course a church made up of turn-coats could not be catalogued among the religiously depraved.

Finally this missionary of the burning pen makes this declaration: "The great burden is upon us to teach them the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. Our peculiarity is that we have this truth."

It is time to be serious and give this zealot a taste of his own medicine. It is a failing of missionaries, especially when they are expected to raise the money for their work with the sweat of their jaw or the flow of their pen, to exaggerate just a little.

Our "mountain whites" have been sinned against by such as wanted to fire the Northern heart and unloose the Northern purse-string. They are not nearly so black as these friends have painted them as a preparatory step to making them white. Our negro orators have had tales to tell at the North of Southern barbarity and indifference that used to be potent in bringing out the shekels, though the method has somewhat lost its charm. And so the most charitable supposition about the Rev. C. W. Blanchard is that he is a little of a Jesuit and has been led by too much zeal into statements that he does not really believe, for the sake of the good that may follow that evil.

But if he believes all this rot that he has printed, then we desire to say to him that his bigotry is the kind that was fathered of Pharisaism and born of ignorance. Some of the denominations that he has aspersed were doing the work of Christ and "preaching the truth as it is in Jesus Christ" when there was not a soul on earth enough like a modern Baptist for Mr. Blanchard to have held close communion with him. The ministers of our own and of other denominations that he has slandered, are so much his superiors in all that makes the word "minister" revered, that the contrast becomes more striking the more one meditates upon it. Let us have done with that sort of intolerance and this insufferable ecclesiastical arrogance. This is the Twentieth Century of the Christian Era. And to say that the great Protestant Denominations are not preaching the truth as it is in Jesus, because they refuse to make an essential of a doubtful mode of celebrating an external rite, is an anachronism that needs to be held up to the contempt and the execration of sensible folk, Baptists and all.

A Letter and Its Answer.

Dear Bro. McKelway:

Et tu, Brute? I have been very zealous for the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ; have loved those who have striven to advance its interests and held in pity, sometimes in scorn and derision, those who have acted contrarywise! In the memorable General Assembly that gave such a death blow to the Sabbath and all discipline by the Church, I had only one member of that body associated in memory, as responsible for all of the evil enacted: our representative from Charleston Presbytery informed me how partial the moderator was—Judge Lapsley—in not allowing the case to be made out by our commissioners. I lost confidence in him at once. Though he had given a son to the Foreign Missionary cause, it all went for naught in my mind.

And now the Editor of the Presbyterian Standard, whom I had elected as my "Knight-Errant," in his last paper, ups and deposeth as follows: "This writer was a member of the Assembly of 1894 that met in Nashville and decided the Sadie Means case." (!!!)

Then you started a ball rolling (see page 26 of same paper) for evil and not for good!

I have always said that each body, the Synod of South Carolina and the General Assembly made up its mind from the misinformation sent broadcast by the secular press—that same press that is now doing so much to advance the cause of Roman Catholicism!

A venerable brother who voted with the majority in that Synod, a friend and college classmate of my father's, acknowledged before his death that he looked back upon it as being the worst day's work of his life!

And now, brother, nine years after, how do you view it? I have you in the balances and it depends upon your answer what the verdict will be—found wanting or not.

Yours for the advancement of His Kingdom.

L.

Dear Brother:

Your letter was probably not intended for publication, but no harm will be done if your name is withheld, and the editor will do a lazy man's trick—answer a letter that deserves a reply and furnish "copy" for the paper at the same time.

The Means Case brings up many recollections of a young man's first General Assembly. From the reference to it in the Standard, however, we think it would have been impossible to tell where our sympathies lay. We merely referred to the large subjects of debate that left us little fellows with such unimportant subjects to handle as the evangelization of some eight million negroes, for example. But it is never too late to correct wrong impressions, of which there are several in your letter. I know your sterling honesty and your zeal for truth. In this case you may have been misled as to the facts.

As to the Assembly's dealing a death-blow to the Sabbath, we recall that expression from a paper that took an extraordinarily absorbing interest in the case, having tried and condemned Miss Means and sentenced her to eternal punishment long before the Assembly met. That was before we had any newspaper to defend our views or character, and we took our ecclesiastical life in our hands and wrote to the editors that we thought the action of the Assembly had no more put a premium on Sabbath-breaking than the action of a certain Presbytery whose name we called, had put a premium on falsehood, by its acquittal of certain parties charged with that offense. You are also utterly mistaken as to Judge Lapsley's decision in confining discussion to the record of the case as made up by the courts. Judge Lapsley was asked to serve in the judicial proceedings by the venerable and beloved Dr. Graham, the moderator. And we are sure that the whole Assembly felt indebted to Judge Lapsley for the impartiality of his bearing during the case. This scribe got an impression of the majesty of the law from him that has never passed away.

And now, good friend, consider that the Woodrow controversy was still echoing through the Church. See how the lines were drawn: First Church, Columbia, Pro-Woodrow, Pro-Means; Second Church, Anti-Woodrow, Anti-Means; Charleston Presbytery, Anti-Woodrow, Anti-Means; Synod of South Carolina, Pro-Woodrow, Pro-Means.

And in the General Assembly there was Dr. Eugene Daniel, Pro-Woodrow, Pro-Means, and Dr. T. E. Converse, Anti-Woodrow, Anti-Means. The lines were drawn—there was no doubt about that. But the parties were pretty evenly divided and the balance of power was in the hands of those who had had nothing to do with the controversy. Are you sure that you were wholly without prejudice yourself, on account of your own convictions?

Again you say that the case was decided by the misrepresentations of the secular press, "which is doing so much to advance the cause of Romanism." Two errors there! There may be some Romanists in American editorial sanctums, here and there. The great majority of the editors are Protestant in belief. But they rightly, as it seems to us, consider that it is no part of their function, as conducting a secular paper, to discriminate against Roman Catholics. They are entitled to the same non-interference from the secular press that Presbyterians are entitled to, when the editor is a Methodist. Romanism is more or less spectacular, and furnishes more or less news, which it is the duty of those papers to print if they are what they claim to be, an accurate mirror of the events of the day—current history while it is still in the making. That error ought to be exploded that Romanism controls the secular press. It does not. And so far from the secular press influencing the decision of the Assembly, in the Means case, we believe that it was one representative of the religious press that was such an officious ecclesiastical sheriff on this occasion as to drive many people to the other extreme. And you will perhaps recall, if you were a reader of that paper then, that it published a letter on the occasion of the young lady's marriage, accusing her of having spent the Lord's day answering the calls of the "beer-gardens and saloons in Columbia," that aroused such a storm of indignation from Southern Presbyterian gentlemen, that the paper soon thereafter acknowledged that it had been judging the case by its own city instead of by the fair capital of South Carolina.

You will recall also that the case was somewhat complicated by technicalities. Our book provides for a voluntary coming before the Session with the confession of wrong-doing and the issue of the case without process. The very fact that there was an appeal shows that there was some mistake and unfortunately the records of the session were not full enough to warrant the view which the Session took of the matter. Doubtless some in the Assembly made the technicality the ground of their vote to sustain the Synod of South Carolina, in reversing the action of the Presbytery of Charleston, in sustaining the action of the session of the Second Church, Columbia. That sounds like a quotation from the melody about the house that Jack built.

But as you are conducting a personal examination we shall try to give you the reasons for one vote to acquit.

Miss Means was employed in the telephone exchange in Columbia and worked on Sunday.

Of course you believe that it is right to send for a doctor or to send to a drug store on Sunday for medicine. We were informed, after as thorough an investigation as we could make, that the telephone in Nashville then employed six girls at the exchange, and that if they were not so employed, there would have to be sent two hundred messenger boys on Sunday, for doctors and to drug stores for medicine. If the telephone is a labor saver, it is a labor saver for Sunday as well as for any other day. And in the complexity of city life, even in a place like Columbia or Charlotte, it is possible for a few to save the labor of the many on Sunday, even where necessary things are concerned. To take another instance, one engineer at the powerhouse can keep all the electric lights burning, for churches as well as for the streets, and thus save the work of many of the old-fashioned lamp-lighters. We voted for the smaller amount of work on Sunday instead of for the larger. And we have no doubt that the very editors who made all the fuss do not hesitate to use the telephone on Sunday to-day.

The Bible gives us principles, not rules, for keeping the Sabbath. When you go to a comfortably warmed church on Sunday you are desecrating the Sabbath, according to the old New England Puritan idea of two centuries ago. That does not mean that you do not keep the Sabbath just as well as they did, probably better. Two years ago we spent Sunday with a Presbyterian elder in New Jersey. And that good elder had a hundred Holstein cows milked Sunday morning and the milk shipped to New York City on a train that carried nothing but milk. Considering the hardships of the poor in that great city, their want of any means of keeping the milk from day to day, and the enormous quantity that is necessary every day, the failure of even a few men like our Presbyterian elder to send the milk fresh every morning would mean a lot of dead babies in the city the next day. So you see that the great principle, that works of mercy and of necessity may be done, has different applications under different circumstances. Is that clear?

Each Church and each age has the Sabbath problem in different form. It is easily possible that labor in a telephone on Sunday might be a profanation of the Sabbath. But when it comes up to the Higher Court, the decision might seem to say that all such labor was wrong. It is the duty of the Church to hold as steady a rein as possible on this question, both by precept and discipline. But a church court might be right now in disciplining for work that would be lawful on Sunday in the Twenty-First Century. Our Lord never laid down how far a Sabbath Day's journey should be. He left that sort of thing for the Pharisees.

There are few people whose esteem we prize more than yours. We trust that you are not going to write over us anything so dreadful as Mene, Tekel, Upharsin. We trust that we have made ourselves clear, and we have spoken the truth as we see it. With high regard,
Yours Fraternaly,

The Editor.

We welcome with no slight satisfaction the change of tone which has come over the leading papers in the North in the discussion of the negro question. The arrant Pharisaism which laid all lynchings at the door of Southern barbarity has given way in most instances to a sympathetic tone which, recognizing the problem as a national one, seeks to unite the moral forces of both North and South in finding and applying the remedy. The Outlook and Harper's Weekly have been conspicuously liberal in their recent editorial utterances.—Christian Advocate.

The I-am-holier-than-thou attitude helps to solve no problems. We be brethren. No class and no section can justly claim a monopoly of either wisdom or morality. Let the sectional lines of a former generation be rubbed out by freer contact among the Americans of today. The solid worth which is the heritage of our citizenship in every quarter is sure to command respect when it is known.—Christian Advocate.

Review of Contemporaries.

Sin.

With many thoughtful minds it is a serious question whether there has not been for some years a steady lessening of a sense of sin in the conscience of the present generation. By sin we mean want of conformity unto, or transgression of, the law of God. Much is said of vice and of crime; all forms of evil doing that work present and palpable injury upon the evil-doer himself or upon society, receive ample attention from the pulpit, the platform and the press. There has been no lack whatever of reform societies, movements, agencies looking to every imaginable betterment of man in the social sphere. Vice in well nigh all its forms and crime in every phase and stage of it, have been subjects of learned study, of careful scientific investigation, of elaborate philosophic treatment; whole libraries have been written discussing such matters in every possible relation to the present welfare of man and of society.

Be it understood, then, that in raising the question as to a lessening sense of sin in the conscience of this generation we are not ignoring so obvious a movement in current thought. In our conception sin is a much broader term than any common to such discussion as we have referred to; it includes every form of vice and crime: anything that works injury to man, whether in the person of the agent or that of his fellow, is a sin; the whole of that wide and varied realm that attracts and absorbs the attention of the reformer belongs to the dominion of sin; but alas! while forming a part and a very real part thereof, this realm is only a very small fraction of sin's vast dominion; it is, so to speak, but the outward and visible expression, the sporadic manifestation of a far wider, far deeper evil, which is the source and soil out of which such manifestations grow.

In modern thought evil is studied chiefly as related to man, i. e. as vice or crime; evil can be understood as sin only when viewed in its relation to God. Here is the distinctive difference.

If our readers will reflect upon the course of such studies as have fallen under their eye they will be impressed with the absence of such reference. One might almost say of these learned authors, that God is not in all their thoughts so seldom is it that his honor and glory figure in their elaborate analyses. Owing to this fact the very word sin has become obsolete in such literature.

More than this, there is reason to fear that even in some pulpits the Biblical conception of sin is fast becoming obsolescent though the word still retains its place; sometimes while retaining the scriptural terms, it is evident that the preacher gets his ideas from current discussion and the sermon presents a very pale and diaphanous apprehension of sin.—The Bible Student.

Non Church Attendance,

Here is one cause, according to a secular paper, one of the best, the Saturday Evening Post. Without altogether acquitting the Sunday papers of a share of responsibility, we can endorse much of what it says in its sprightly way:

"When a man has digested The Post on Saturday evening, why, the next morning, does he sit down to spend the day over the Sunday papers, instead of going to church, as his grandfather did? Why?"

The elder Smith, eighty years ago, listened to two heavy doctrinal sermons, every Sunday. His grandson Tom, subscribes to the support of a magnificent temple, to its vested choir, and to all of its charities, but for years he has not crossed the church threshold.

"Is it because, as clergymen are apt to tell us, that Tom and his generation are less religious in spirit than the older one, and more given to money getting and to vice?"

"That will be difficult to prove. In justice to Tom, too, we must remember that the weekly church-going was usually the only mental exercise within reach of his old farmer grandfather.

"Now, the younger Tom is just as sincere and sane a man as was his grandfather. His new possessions—literature, railways, wireless telegraphy, his share in the seething industries of this modern life, do not make himself—Tom Smith a whit less important to him.

"The fact is, the most important thing in life to him and to every other man is his secret self. Where did it come from? Where is it going? What have those unknown Others to do with it? How shall he make friends with them?"

"A couple of years ago Tom set out to find an answer to these questions. He went from one church to the other, giving, it must be confessed, but lax attention to the prayers, but listening to the sermons like a man condemned to death who thought to hear his reprieve in them.

"Doctor A. preached on a doctrinal point with lucidity and force. 'What has Apostolic Succession to do with my soul here to-day, or its chances if I catch the smallpox tomorrow?' Tom grumbled, as he walked away.

"He went from church to church. The next Sunday he listened to a charming monologue on the Uses of Cheerfulness, the next to reminiscences of travel in Syria, the next to a passionate appeal for a reformed civic government. He heard sermons on missions, on scientific themes (Evolution leading), and delightful essays on abstract moral questions.

"These things should be left to men whose metier they are," he complained. 'Have the clergymen forgotten that, after all, their business is with my soul? Was there not once a Man Who came to help it? Why do they so seldom speak of Him?"

"So then he fell into the habit of staying at home, and church-going folks blamed the Sunday papers, and the indifference of this generation to religion.

The Greatness of Goodness.

The qualities of goodness and greatness are not always nor even frequently united in the same individual, and the implication of much colloquial speech is that these two qualities of character are somewhat incompatible one with the other, or at least that the pursuit of the one makes the possession of the other difficult. There is an impression abroad that the biggest men in history, the "leaders" and "heroes" of the world, have been almost necessarily rascals, unscrupulous in the formation of their ideals and in the pursuit of their purposes, determined to win that intangible result, "success," at any cost, even though it were at the price of the blood of thousands of their fellows, or at the terrible hazard of the possible loss of character and Heaven itself.

It is by no means true, however, that the man of quiet tastes and upright walk of life, even if he dwell afar from battle-fields and arenas of strife, is a small or inconspicuous man, for peace hath its victories no less than war, and the greatest greatness is after all more a moral value—a product of spiritual struggle and higher thinking—than it is a spectacular triumph on the field of war, the "cloth of gold," or the gorgeous throne. What mankind needs is a new definition of greatness, which will find that quality of nobility is masterliness not so much in political conquests, commercial triumphs or even intellectual discoveries, as in the attainment of virtuous character, upbuilt by the slow, steady, self-sacrificing work of the years. The good man is the great man.—New York Observer.

"I was struck with the number of your organizations and their vastness. You go in for more of that sort of thing than we do, but on the other hand, there seems to be here a dangerous separation between the intellectual and spiritual. The intellectual preacher is apt to be unspiritual and the spiritual preacher is apt to be groovy and from the intellectual point of view impossible. If a stranger may say it without presumption the thing you want most is that some of your foremost thinkers should in some way become spiritualized."—From Rev. R. J. Campbell's "Impressions of America."

Devotional.

Lord, in that evil day
When my own wicked thoughts like thieves waylay me,
Or when pricked conscience rises up to slay me,
Shield me, I pray.

Aye, when the storm shall drive
Spread thy two blessed hands like leaves above me,
And with thy great love, though none else should love me,
Save me alive!

Shed down thy grace in showers
And if some roots of good, at thy appearing,
Be found in me, transplant them for the rearing
Of heavenly flowers.

—Alice Cary.

It is said of Fenelon that he had such communion with God his very face shone. Lord Peterborough, a skeptic, was obliged to spend the night with him at an inn. In the morning he rushed away, saying, "If I stay another night with that man I shall be a Christian in spite of myself." Fenelon's manner was full of grace, his voice full of love, and his face full of glory. The invitation, "Come to Jesus," was in every act. He was a "spiritual magnet." That is what God wants us all to be. That is what we all can be by just yielding up all to Him, and letting Him live again in us. Under no other condition can this transforming power fulfill its own mission to our souls.—Christian Work.

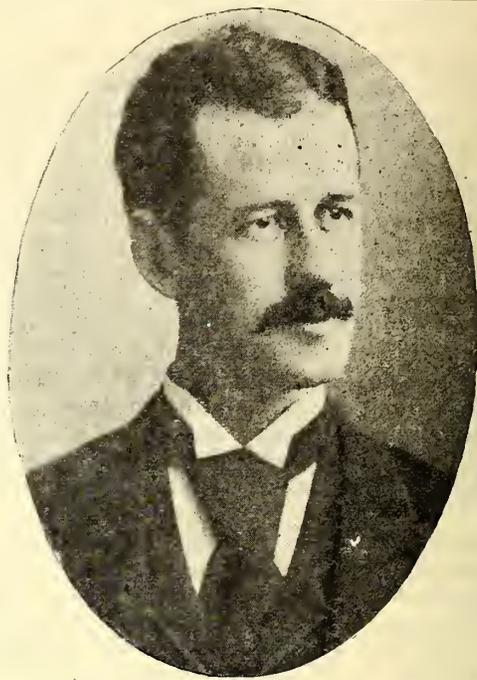

There are many things, besides sorrow's self, that come through sorrow's gate—gentleness, tact, sympathy, strength, beautiful traits of character, which seem to find no other mode of entrance into life. Long for unclouded joy as we may, it still remains true that few of us would choose for our most valued friend one who has never suffered. The eyes that have not known tears must needs lack something of tenderness. The heart that never has been torn with anguish and loss has never sounded its own depths, and cannot measure those of another. The soul grows strong through storm and conflict if it ever grows strong at all, and, however sweet a nature may be, we find it incomplete and unsatisfying if it has never known the softening, hallowing touch of grief. There are dark pages in our lives where we would gladly have changed the story if we could. There are wounds that still ache, and losses that even yet are hard to bear; but however we may feel about the sorrow itself, there are few of us who would be willing to give up all that it brought us and taught us—to be just what we were before it touched us. There are some precious gains that come through sorrow's gate.—The Wellspring.

The setting of a great hope is like the setting of the sun. The brightness of our life is gone. Shadows of evening fall around us and the world seems but a dim reflection—itsself a broader shadow; we look forward into the coming lonely night. The soul withdraws into itself. Then stars arise and the night is holy.—H. W. Longfellow.

Human character is molded by a thousand subtle influences; by example and precept; by life and literature; by friends and neighbors; by the world we live in, as well as by the spirits of our forefathers, whose legacy of good words and deeds we inherit. But great, unquestionably, though these influences are acknowledged to be, it is nevertheless equally clear that men must necessarily be the active agents of their own well-being and well-doing, and that however much the wise and good owe to others, they themselves must, in the very nature of things, be their own best helpers.—Samuel Smiles.

Think on thy wants, on thy faults. Recollect all the patience, all the kindness, all the tenderness, which has been shown thee. Think also on life—how short it is, how much unavoidable bitterness it possesses; how much which it is easy either to bear or chase away; and think how the power of affection can make all things right.—Frederika Bremer.

Missionary.

REV. CHARLES R. MORTON.

1865—1903.

Missionary to Southern Brazil. Supported by the Church at Durham, N. C.

A Chinese Memorial Tablet.

In the city of Taiku, Shansi, stands a memorial tablet to the missionaries who fell in 1900. The inscription was prepared by the Chinese themselves. A part of it reads as follows:

The truth of God is for all mankind. If any desire to understand its nature and origin and determine to follow it, they will realize this truth is from heaven. It embodies what God hath decreed regarding our natures. To obey it is to obey him. It is nourishment for the soul; enlightenment to goodness; the cultivation of heavenly nobility and the peace of the earth. These are indispensable and all impossible without the fear of God. If the emperor and all the people obeyed this truth, the officials, by good laws and righteous government, would compete for the welfare of the state; the gentry and literati, by intelligent principles, would change the customs; and the whole people, by their reverence and obedience, would lead in reform. Every class obeying the truth of God and advancing education would obtain not merely personal, but universal, good. Class differences would disappear and the desire to harm others. Benevolent thoughts would extirpate hate, for with the educated there are no race distinctions. The mutual desire for a common weal would prevail till the brotherhood of man be established and peace reign in the land. How admirable and how desirable!—Exchange.

Christ is our model in missionary service. His life work is not as full as it is fertile. Every incident is a principle capable of infinite application in life. His wayside ministries are a missionary's handbook. The true missionary is always on duty. His eyes are open for opportunities that slip others' observation. The Samaritan woman at Jacob's well might easily have slipped the disciples. But the Master's "Give me a drink" was the approach of the model missionary to a weary soul. Life's highways are golden with opportunities of missionary work. The open heart sees the golden gleam and, like the Master, gathers precious souls by the wayside. The personal work of Jesus Christ is worthy of study as a missionary model. "We are to be fishers of men," and the Master Fisher of Men can give us all points in personal work.

---

Sunday School Lesson.

---

 BY REV. H. G. HILL, D. D.

---

David Spares Saul.

John I Sam. 26, 5-1, 1-5. Aug. 30th, 1903.

For months, Saul had been pursuing David with vindictive hatred and had made repeated attempts to take his life. Having learned from the Ziphites that David was hiding himself in the hill of Hachilah Saul sought him with three thousand chosen men of Israel. David abode in the wilderness of Ziph and ascertained through spies the exact place of Saul's camp. He asks his followers, "Who will go with him into the Kings camp?" His cousin, Abishai, volunteers to go and is witness to what occurred there. By night they enter the camp and find Saul, Abner and his body guard fallen into a deep sleep.

I. Saul's Life in David's Power.—He is David's implacable enemy and has endeavored to shed his blood at different times with his own hand by the hands of his servants and with the sword of the Philistines. David has done Saul no injury, but on the contrary has rendered most important services to him and his kingdom. The King at this very time is seeking David's life in the wilderness with the force of his whole realm. David has been anointed for kingship and knows that at Saul's death, by Divine appointment he will become king of Israel. In the providence of God, Saul is placed completely in David's power. He and all his followers are asleep and defenseless and the spear for smiting the king is at hand. Abishai says to David, "God hath delivered thine enemy into thine hand this day, now therefore let me smite him, I pray thee with the spear even to the earth at once and I will not smite him the second time." If David allows Saul to be slain, his persecution would end, natural resentment would be gratified, his own safety assured and the Divine will seemingly accomplished. He is moved to take Saul's life, by righteous indignation, by self-defence, by personal ambition, by the counsel of his companion, and by a "providence of God, apparently fulfilling the Divine decree, that he should attain the kingdom."

II. David's Treatment of Saul.—Perhaps no incident in David's career more fully proves and illustrates his magnanimity of Saul and Divine sonship, than his sparing Saul under the conditions mentioned. His conduct towards the king is marked by generosity and forbearance. He does not slay him nor permit it to be done by another. He said to Abishai, "Destroy him not; for who can stretch forth his hand against the Lord's anointed and be guiltless." He will not take vengeance into his own hands, but leaves it to be executed by the Lord. He declares "As the Lord liveth, the Lord shall smite him, or his day shall come to die; or he shall descend into battle and perish." But he takes steps to prove to Saul that he had spared his life when in his power, by removing the spear and cruise of water, that were afterwards restored to Saul's messenger. He also, when at a distance, addresses the king, showing that his sparing his life proved that he bore him no ill-will, claiming that he had done no evil, and speaking of himself in most humble and loyal terms. Surely on this occasion, David manifested great self-control and showed that "He who ruleth his spirit is greater than he that taketh a city."

III. The Results of David's Kindness.—By his mercy and forbearance David secured many good results. He saved himself from needless bloodshed and life-long self-reproach. He taught his followers a much needed lesson of self-mastery and generosity and forgiveness.

Reverence is the chief joy and power of life—reverence for what is pure and bright in your youth, for what is true and tried in the age of others, for all that is gracious among the living, great among the dead, and marvellous in the power that cannot die.—Ruskin.

---

Westminster League.

---

 BY REV. HUGH W. HOON.

---

The Allied Forces of Righteousness.

John 17:20-23; 1 Cor. 1:10-13. Topic for Sept. 6.

One of the saddest facts of history is that Christian charity has not always characterized the forces of righteousness. During the centuries of the Christian Church's existence it is a fact that more energy has been expended by those who have composed the army of the Lord, against some portion of itself than against the common enemy. It is a tactic of the devil to engage the forces of righteousness in a civil strife. Well he knows that when such a warfare is being waged, he and his cohorts may stack their arms and become amused and pleased spectators. While there is plenty of common ground on which the hosts of righteousness can meet, the trouble is that too often the details which are of less importance are made the standard of a common meeting-place and the result is disastrous to the cause. The devil is quick to take advantage of this state of affairs. He takes things which are good and makes them to appear evil.

This is the cause of many of the breaches in the different churches. Two men differ as to some policy and neither can adopt the other's standpoint, and as from his own the other is plainly in the wrong, he puts it down that the other man is not sincere in his declarations of principle; that he is heading in a direction which will inevitably lead to ruin. What is true in individual congregations is still more true in regard to the conflict which goes on between different denominations. In many a town, members of one denomination will not even attend the services of the others. They have heard so much, from their ministers in many cases, of the utter inconsistency that exists in the teachings of the others that they have come to believe that anyone who can hold such a position can certainly not be sincere. Instead of uniting on the great and salient truths and thus presenting a solid front to the common enemy, they pick out the matters of detail which in themselves will neither save a soul if believed in alone, nor will they condemn one who does not believe in them. These minor matters are emphasized with the result that the world is given an argument against the practical effects of Christianity.

But this state of affairs is not as bad now in this respect as formerly. The last decades have seen a spirit of charity growing up in the minds of the people. There is more good fellowship between the different divisions of the allied forces of righteousness than ever before existed. We need never to expect that the day will come when the different denominations will be united under one name, other than the name of Christian. In Christ's prayer for the oneness of His followers he did not pray for a uniformity. It was that they might be one as He and the Father are one. Not a physical oneness; not a unity which is visible to the eye, but a spiritual unity. It is "to consist in so close an identity of nature, so absolute an interfusion of spirit, as that they shall be one in aim, and thought, and life, and spirit, spiritually one with each other, because spiritually one with Him.

"You may not care to admit it; you may even be ignorant of the full meaning of this marvelous fact; you may live an exclusive life, never going beyond the walls of some conventicle, or the barriers of some strict ecclesiastical system; you may bear yourself impatiently and brusquely toward those who differ from you; you may even brand them with your anathema: but if they are one with God, by His gracious indwelling Spirit of Life, and if you are also one with Him, you positively cannot help being one with them. Your creed may differ, or your mode of worship, or your views about the Church; but you cannot be otherwise than one with those who are one with God, in a union which is not material but spiritual.

Contributed.

Imputation.

The imputation of Adam's sin (including guilt and depravity) to his posterity, and the imputation of Christ's righteousness (including personal holiness and justifying righteousness) is a supernatural arrangement, and therefore finds no exact analogy in the natural relations of men. It is from not taking this fact into account that there results the confusion that besets us on this subject.

The relation of men, one to another, is individual; the relation of Adam to his posterity is federal; the relation of Christ to his people is federal.

This distinction between individual relations and federal relations is the key note of what we called the federal theology, and distinguishes the Christian religion from all the false forms of religion which the world has ever known. All the false forms of religion proceed upon the principle of individual relations and personal works.

To state this more in detail: The natural human relation is the relation of each individual for himself, one to another. The federal relation is the relation of the members of the whole federal body, consisting of a head-member and subordinate members. The federal relation therefore is two-fold, consisting of a relation of the head-member to the subordinate members, and of a relation of the subordinate members to each other. It is not so much the latter that is now under consideration as the consideration of the relation of the head-member to the subordinate members.

In the natural human relation each to other, each individual stands for himself. In the federal relation the head-member stands for the subordinate members, so that the whole concrete moral action of the head-member is reckoned the whole concrete moral action of the subordinate members. This is the imputation of the Christian religion.

The head-member of the federal body is the member from which the subordinate members derive their being, whether it be by creation, generation, or supernatural generation or regeneration. The subordinate members therefore come into being, bearing the personal moral character and moral status of the head-member. If the head-member is depraved and guilty the subordinate members will come into being depraved and guilty. The subordinate members partake of the personal moral character and moral status of the head-member. If the head-member is personally holy and guiltless, the subordinate members will come into being personally holy and guiltless, partaking of the moral character and moral status of the head-member.

To illustrate the individual as distinguished from the federal relation: Here is an individual, a person. He steals a sheep. The act is moral and the morality is bad. The badness is the badness of personal depravity from which the action springs and lays the agent under obligation to punishment or penalty for the crime. If the act of this agent is imputed to another, what is imputed is not the depraved nature of the agent which determines the badness of the act, but the obligation of the punishment incurred by the badness of the act. That is, there is, in thought a separation of the two elements of the concrete moral act, viz., a separation of the idea of the depravity from the idea of the guilt. Then the guilt is in thought imputed, or reckoned, or transferred to another and accepted by that other as his, and the penalty inflicted upon the other instead of upon the original agent. This is a case of natural human imputation upon the basis of the natural individual relation of one human being to another. The natural relation of one human being to another admits of this form of imputation under natural moral government. The justice of this form of imputation seems to rest in the mutual consent of the parties concerned and is limited by the obligation of each individual to take care of himself. But the natural relation of human beings one to another does not admit of the transfer of the personal moral nature of one person to another. It would shock our sense of justice, if the personal moral depravity of one who steals a sheep should be transferred to another, so that that other hitherto morally untainted should henceforth be morally depraved. It is the effort to carry this principle of natural imputation into the imputation involved in the Christian religion that causes the confusion in Christian theology and lies at the foundation of the human theories which have been invented to explain the doctrine of federal imputation. Imputation, federal imputation, is neither mediate nor immediate. Neither is it explained by realism or any other theory of human philosophy which has been invented to explain it. It is supernatural. It is of grace. It finds its explanation, therefore, only in the principles of God's supernatural, or grace system of providence. The imputation of grace under God's supernatural system of providence is as different from natural human imputation as the supernatural is from the natural.

Natural human imputation is individual. Supernatural or grace imputation is federal. Understand this and the doctrine of imputation in the Christian religion is clear and plain.

Federal imputation is based upon the union between the head-member and the subordinate members of the federal body. This union in its details is a mystery. We know the facts revealed. Revelation does not explain the philosophy of the facts. We receive the facts by faith. From what is revealed the union between the head-member and the subordinate members upon which federal imputation is based seems to be three-fold. (a) There is a federal union. This element of the union results from the constitution of the federal body. When the first Adam was constituted the head-member of the first federal body of mankind, his appointment to this position constituted the federal union between the first Adam and his posterity. So also of Christ the second Adam and his people. When Christ the second Adam was constituted the second federal head of the second federal body, selected and chosen from the first federal body, Christ's appointment to this position constituted the federal union between Christ and his people. As the first federal body includes all mankind descending from the first federal head by ordinary generation, so the second federal body includes all those selected from the first federal body by the election of grace and descend from the second federal head by supernatural generation, or regeneration or the new creation. (b) The second element of union between the head-member and the subordinate members of the federal body is a common nature between the head-member and the subordinate members of the federal body. This common nature includes a true human body and true human soul. This may be distinguished as the natural element of the union, as the common nature consists of what was originally and naturally a true human body and a true human soul. This natural element of the union seems to be a condition sine qua non of the federal union. (c) The third element of union is a common life. This is commonly called the vital union and is the result of both the federal and natural elements of the union. The union issues in a life—a moral life which is common to the head-member and the subordinate members of the federal body.

These three statements may be expanded, but they include the substance of what we know about the union of the federal body, upon which union is based the imputation from the head to the members.

The federal body therefore is one, the head members acting for and in the subordinate members, and the subordinate members acting by and through the head-member.

The covenant therefore is between God and the whole body. The head-member covenanting with God for the subordinate members, and the subordinate members covenanting with God through the head-member.

The whole federal body being thus one, the subordinate members are reckoned as performing the whole concrete moral act of the head-member. And so reckoned that the subordinate members partake of the common moral life of the head-member, with the subordinate members. The common moral life is either both depraved and guilty, or both holy and justified according as the head is. The holiness may be partial in this life if the covenant so provides. And we so understand the teaching of God's word.

Federal imputation being thus founded upon the supernatural union of the members of the federal body, what is imputed is not merely the merit or demerit element of the moral act of the head-member, but the whole concrete moral act of the head-member considered as so far supernaturally and mystically one with the subordinate members that the subordinate members partake of the moral life of the head-member.

This common moral life of the whole federal body is an entirely different thing from an individual under natural human relations imposing his moral life and character upon his fellow human being.

What is imputed therefore is not merely the guilt of Adam's first sin, but the whole concrete moral act of federal Adam, including the depravity from which the guilt arises. So it is not merely Christ's meritorious righteousness that is imputed to us, but the whole concrete federal atoning act of Christ, including the personal holiness that was working in Christ in making the atonement. So that we become partakers of the personal holiness and personal moral character that was working in Christ when he offered himself a sacrifice for our sins. We in him and through and by him as our federal head offered that sacrifice to God for our sins. The personal character that was active in Christ in that sublime act of worship in which he atoned for our sins, is active in us also in our offering ourselves to God a living sacrifice in his worship and service. Hence we are said to be partakers of the divine nature. We are partakers of the divine holiness that characterized Christ in his obedience unto death for his people.

This article was called forth by Dr. Beattie's articles in the Christian Observer on imputation, advocating the doctrine of immediate imputation. The Confession seems to favor the doctrine of immediate imputation. But the Confession in this is diverted from the general tenor of its teaching by the idea of a so-called covenant of works. If the above position is the true one we are making some advance in our apprehension of the old truth.

It remains in another article to vindicate the justice of God in the arrangement of imputing from the head-member to the subordinate members of the federal body.

K. M. McIntyre.

Carl, N. C.

Keswick and Kiswickism.

My Dear Standard:

Most welcome, most refreshing have you been to me in the various strange lands in which I have been wandering. Try as I would to save the Sunday pages for Sunday reading I could not help reading you, from the original wit of the first page to the scissored wit of the last, as soon as you reached me.

No paragraph has given me more happiness than one in the July 15th number about the revival carried on through the instrumentality of Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander; and your remark that their gospel of the five-fold power of prayer, the Bible, the Blood, the Spirit and personal work, was better than splitting hairs over Keswickism and Pre-millennialism met my especially hearty approval, for I have lately become acquainted with Keswickism face to face. What, therefore, none of our people ignorantly fear I am glad to declare unto the readers of the Standard. Keswickism named after the little village of Keswick because there every year there is a convention of Christian workers, met for the deepening of spiritual life, is no more an ism than the doctrine of Paul's epistles are an ism. In fact it is Paulinism pure and simple and I believe every evangelical church is willing to assent to the doctrine Paul taught at Ephesus, at Philippi, at Colosse.

Well, Keswickism is Philippism and Ephesusism; it reiterates, it explains, it illumines all those blessed ideals held up to us by every man of God from Moses to John the Beloved, and in the one week there I heard only those same five gospel truths which God has been using through Torrey. Sometimes they were logically and powerfully pressed home upon us by men mighty in the Scriptures, sometimes in glorious missionary meetings, in sweet, quiet prayer-meetings, thrilling instances of the five-fold power were told us; sometimes in our own hearts the five-fold power was so felt that we needed not that any man should testify of it. As to pre-millennialism, the power of the blessed hope of His glorious appearing is so interwoven with all the other truths that it was never separated; its shining thread of expectation was one and the same in the minds of the Keswickians as it was with Paul when he wound up each chapter of exhortation to the Thessalonians with its glad strength. Not a hair was split of it in any discussion.

There may have been visitors in Keswick with peculiar views; some little phrase now and then recurred in speeches so often that it apparently had some special significance, but that was all. Nobody was allowed to air his fads; not a word was there about divine healing, not an expression that could be called mysticism. Some of the audience in their first flood of peace and joy after a fuller surrender of themselves felt that their struggles with self were over, I suppose, for one of the speakers said: "A dear brother has announced to me that at last self is dead to sin; he will find that sin is very far from being dead to self."

This shows both what is taught at Keswick and also what a perverted idea a few get of that teaching.

There was therefore nothing new, nothing startling to me in Keswickism; it is just the repetition and emphasizing of the "great things of the law," if "they are counted as a strange thing" by many church members, so were they in the days of Hosea, so have they been counted in all ages by the great majority of them to whom God writes them; every pastor repeats the wail of the prophet when he reviews his church list and thinks how few are aiming to reach the mark of the high calling.

But if the five-fold gospel preached at Keswick is the same we are privileged to hear from our own pulpits, there were concrete examples of its might related that were new to me and may be now to the Standard.

Incidents of Power of the Bible.—A medical missionary told of an old priest in India who slipped in softly one day, waited until the other patients were gone, drew from under his robe a carefully enwrapped copy of John's Gospel, saying: "This is the food of my soul and of many more than you imagine, for I am teaching it to others." The surprised and delighted missionary wished to ask questions, the other said: "I must not be seen with you lest the people think that which I teach them a British-manufactured religion and I want them to know it is from God."

In Egypt a Mohammedan son of a sheik, a graduate of many Mohammedan colleges, a most zealous believer in his own creed undertook to proselyte the Christians near him. Not doubting his ability to overthrow the argument of any such ignorant people to get a Bible that he might better refute their doctrine by his knowledge of them. He was converted; to-day an exile from home, penniless, persecuted, he is testifying to Christ as his Saviour.

Another Mohammedan who noticed some reference to the Bible in the Koran bought one and was converted before he had read three chapters. His father in a rage offered a large sum of money to any one who would kill his son. Finding he was at a mission-house he rushed there to get him. Instead of his son he got a copy of the New Testament, took it home to read to his wife who noted the word "New" and immediately inferred the existence of our "Old." A united family studying the whole Bible is that family now.

Power of the Blood of Christ.—Just as the most striking instances of the effect of the Bible come from mission lands, so also those of the power of the blood of Christ to cleanse from the guilt and pollution of sin.

Nobody interested me more than a lame hump-back, a worker in South America, once a self supporting teacher there, as the large societies would not send a man so physically incapable. And the two items that appealed to me the most in his talk were of a murderer and a black sugar carrier. The former was in prison under a sentence of some years, a just sentence, too. To this convict camp came a native convert with the message that Jesus saves from sin. Several heard, believed, and are to-day faithful Protestants living saved lives in their homes. This particular man mentioned was not satisfied unless he could go to others and to-day is a preacher swaying his fellow natives as a foreigner could not do. Said the missionary: "I heard him one night just before I left South America, and as I heard those brilliant words rolling from those lips, as I saw the brilliancy of those eyes in which the very joy of heaven seemed reflected, I felt a great rush of adoring love and praise: 'Thanks be to God for His unspeakable gift.' The blood of Jesus Christ can make murderers into apostles of blessings."

"The sugar-carrier, a stalwart giant, clothed in a coarse sack, listened on the edge of the crowd gathered near the shed where I preached. Convicted and regenerated in that same hour, he went home and said to his wife, 'I have become a believer.' The Roman Catholic owner of the fellow's hut turned him out the very next day and there followed trying days, but the German overseer of these carriers noted the unlikeness of this fellow to the others, noted his faithfulness as he went backward and forward from the boat to the landing with the heavy loads, and without knowing what caused the difference made him foreman of the whole gang. To-day where that shed stood there is a cottage, one small family room for the use of the occupants, one big room for the use of the missionary in preaching and that house is the black sugar-carrier's. He is educating his own family, he is supporting two nieces, he is a pillar of strength. What did it? Nothing but the blood of Jesus."

Power of Prayer and Personal Work.—Of course the Power of the Spirit must be present with every verse of the Bible, every prayer, every personal effort that is to be effective and He must apply the blood of Christ, therefore not one instance of soul-saving, of progress of the Kingdom, but exhibited the power of the Spirit; everything told illustrates that. The power God has given to us through prayer and personal effort was illustrated over and over again, especially in the tributes of missionaries, evangelists, pastors, workers to what is being accomplished by the "One by One Band," an organization linked together by two definite aims, two definite pledges, the aim to be intercessors and soul-winners, the pledge to pray for an awakening of God's Church through the Spirit and to pray statedly and persistently for those God puts in our hearts. Thousands are joining and the minister who told us of the revival he had witnessed in Australia attributes it not to preaching, but to persevering, united prayer.

Two stories he told we shall not forget. About the time the meeting was to be held in one town a scurrilous letter denouncing revivals in general and this evangelist in particular, appeared in the paper over the name of a leading citizen. What did the workers do? They wrote not a word in reply, but spread the letter before the Lord and prayed for the conversion of its writer, continuing to do so daily at their prayer-meetings. One night that man walked up the aisle and confessed Christ publicly, saying that in his place of business he had been convicted by the Spirit. There flashed into his mind the thought, "They are praying for me at that meeting." He fought hard before he yielded, but though his partner, a spiritualist, and his brother refused to continue the partnership and there were many difficulties to overcome, he took his stand boldly on the Lord's side. The other anecdote was to show how whole families are seeking the Lord: a worker in one of the after-meetings was leaving because of the lateness of the hour and seeing a little girl apparently alone he advised her to go home. The child said, "Please, I am waiting to be a Christian." A little talk, a prayer, and the lamb had found its way into the fold. Then a woman from the other end of the bench moved up saying: "Please, I am this child's mother; could I become a Christian, too, to-night?" Another prayer, another acceptance of the promises declared in Jesus when to the worker's surprise a man sheepishly looking at his hat stammered: "I am the father of the little girl, you reckon I could be a Christian too, to-night?" For the third time the growing group rose from their knees rejoicing in the Saviour's willingness to save, and there stood a wrinkled old woman who asked tremblingly and eagerly: "Can the child's old granny come to the Lord too and be a Christian right here and now?" That night a family complete in Christ went home to a new life—how ripe the harvest to the worker's hand!

Yet after all, the fact that this was a time of a special outpouring of the Holy Spirit kept it from coming to us with the comfort and courage that we got from less striking accounts of individual work in shops and schools and in every-day ways.

The quaint literalness of the forewoman in some factory room touched and amused us. She was found walking around the chairs in her room one by one and on being questioned, answered simply: "I read in the Bible this morning that every place the sole of our foot should tread should be ours for a possession; I want every girl who is to set in this room!" "And," added the speaker, "though we smiled then, we marvel now at the birth of souls into the Kingdom in that work-room, and those girls have formed into a daily Bible class there under her. She took the promise literally, He fulfilled it literally."

As I listened to such narratives of the results of prayer and personal work on the part of school boys and school girls—one pastor told of a boy, an ordinary boy, who in the last year had brought many of his schoolmates to Christ—of common men and common women in the common walks of life my heart cried out for the same blessings in my own dear country. For all through this trip in Scotland and in England I seem to be hearing "the going in the mulberry trees." Though there is no great revival meeting there are reports at the noon prayer-meetings of drunkards reclaimed, of the presence of God at the street corner services and other services. And oh! there are so many in Great Britain giving their time, their means, their whole lives to the Kingdom in various ways, but all with the same aims, the lifting of others to Christ. It is true that Romanism has crept, some fear, into the Established Church; it is true that many churches are not much more than comfortable Sunday clubs; but I have seen this other side too and the pessimism that fell on me on the continent has turned into joyous optimism. The vision of Zion awake and arraying herself in her beautiful garments no longer seems an impossible one for our own times; and when that vision is seen in every Christian land surely it will not be long before there will come the voices heard by John, saying: "Let us be glad and rejoice and give honor to Him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come and His wife hath made herself ready."

Mildred C. Watkins.

God's Mysteriousness and a Mother's Love,

Your babe is dead. Only a mother can realize the feelings of a mother on such an occasion. Only a mother can comprehend a mother's love. Only a mother can comprehend the agonizing grief of a bereaved mother. Yet, grief-stricken mother, God has taken your child. Why he has done this we do not, and cannot know now. But He knows; God as revealed in his Word, knows that, as his very name is love, the love of an infinite being cannot be less than the most tender love of the most loving of all his creatures.

You loved your babe; but love, that is incomprehen-ple, has safely removed it from all that can cause bodily pain or mental grief. No tear shall ever dim its eye; no sin shall ever mar its beauty. Its mind shall expand under teaching that cannot err or lead astray. And mother, you would gladly have retained it, and altered it as far as you could from evil of every description, yet the evils are innumerable from which no human prudence, foresight or love can protect. Your child had days and nights of pain and suffering in all of which you suffered still more. You would gladly have endured all it suffered if thereby you could have given it relief, but you were compelled to look on its sufferings with great grief, while powerless to remove its sufferings. Why was this? Why would one who had never known actual sin thus suffer? These are questions which we cannot answer. We cannot now interpret all God's dealings with us. They are mysteries which we cannot now solve, and we can only fall back on his assurance, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter."

Yet though we may not know we may sometimes see probable, or at least possible, reasons for that which seems so mysterious. For instance the child may be unable to recall the sufferings through which it has passed and through eternity may render grateful praise for final and complete deliverance from sufferings which will forever seem as nothing in comparison with the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" which is its portion.

Again the child may rejoice with unspeakable joy in the effects produced upon the parents if these effects have been such as the loving Father intended should be the result of his chastisements. "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous; nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby."

When such is the effect of chastening of this kind, and the parent, recognizing in it the wisdom and love of God, is brought to say from the heart, "Thy will be done," may we not suppose that this will be a source of great joy and gratitude to the child?

Such reasons as these may possibly influence the divine mind; but if they do not, we may rest assured that reasons consistent with infinite holiness, wisdom, love and every other attribute of deity determine his acts which are ever such as ought to bring trust, confidence, hope and peace to every one of his children.

J. C. W.

Educational Danger.

It is to be noted that the main stress is laid upon the higher education in the addresses made at college commencements, school exercises, and educational gatherings throughout the country. We would by no means disparage the higher education. It is something desirable and worthy to be sought and attained. It is one of the noblest aims of life to equip oneself to fill worthily and honorably any position to which he may be called.

But we contend that the lower education is equally important, and in some respects the more so, being always needed in the vocations of life from the lowest to the highest, and without which no education is complete. It requires no careful observer to see that the ground work in our education is greatly neglected. Things that lie at the bottom, and for which there is a daily use, ought to be well known and thoroughly fixed in the mind. The rushing process, the passing over hurriedly the elementary branches, has already done harm, and the effects of it are seen and felt in after years.

A great deal has been said and written about our educational development, and if one were to believe all that has been claimed, the impression would be made that no good thing can come out of the past, that could be successfully applied to the present. Right here we might learn a lesson, and save a great deal of trouble. It is better not to go too fast, provided we do it at a sacrifice. It should always be kept in mind that there are certain underlying principles upon which no improvement can be made. The more we get off from them, the harder it is to solve the great and complicated problems, that arise as the age advances. To this departure we may trace many of the evils existing at the present day. The mind of sober thinking people are agitated as to the best way of meeting the condition of things now facing us. But after all, we can only go back to the underlying principles of law, morals, and religion to get the solution and to find the remedy.

So it is in the matter of education. We are getting away from the foundation, and trying new ideas and theories to better what cannot be improved. We are starting in the middle of education, and not at the beginning. The basis of language is to a harmful extent neglected, consequently so much misspelling, mispronunciation, and misuse of words, so noticeable in our children and youth, and even in college graduates. There can be no real progress when there is so much behind that needs to be regulated and remedied. All the higher education can never repair a defective foundation. We are apt to be carried away with appearances. The seeming movement forward attracts attention, while the movement backward escapes notice. It is in the undercurrent that lies the danger in our education.

The question may well be asked, why is it that after so many years trial of what is called progressive education, there is such a manifest ignorance of the rudiments of education? The answer is not hard to find. It is greatly owing to the defective construction of some of the text books, particularly spellers and grammars, and more especially to the unfruitful methods now used in our schools. Frequent calls are made for new books, and yet the complaint is made that the children do not seem to make any perceptible advance, and what they do know, they do not seem to know it clearly and definitely. Methods are often kept up and books used because they are modern and up to date, to the detriment and drawback of the pupil.

The retrograde movement in spelling began when the new education entered the field and abolished Webster's speller from the schools, and observation will bear us out in the statement. Its restoration would be a great blessing, and meet with the approval of the people. Though arbitrarily laid aside, yet no book so far published is equal to it in construction and adaptability, being more in accordance with the natural workings of the child's mind. The best spellers of the day are its products, and that is a sufficient argument in itself. A book that still lives in the affections and esteem of the people must have merit, otherwise it could not retain such a strong and lasting hold upon them.

The problem that now faces us must be met. The interests of our children must be consulted. In justice to them, let us rise to the supreme importance of the occasion, and avoid the danger that threatens the very foundation of our education.

A. Kirkland.

The Nearest First.

Apologists for Home Missions, like apologists for God, are numerous. In very many instances where writers and speakers venture a word in behalf of missionary work at home, their remarks, like the discourses of not a few on such subjects as predestination and election, sin and retribution, are prepared with a kind of apology. They seem impelled to state at the onset that they are not opposed to Foreign Missions, as if the two were in antagonism and that a strong, positive, advocate of the one were opposed to the other; or, as if Home Missions were so insignificant and unimportant that for fear its friend and advocate should be estimated accordingly, an apology of some sort is deemed necessary. It has the effect to disparage the cause and not to rob any appeal of its practical force.

Now, whatever else may be said, it is indeed unfortunate for the Church as a soul-saving agency that the distinction should have become current, that the ever-widening breach and disparity between the two should have been tolerated, and that the distinction should have been carried to that extreme which casts reproach upon Home Missions and which all but ignores the consecrated and self-denying men and women who give their lives and labors to communities and centres of crime, vice, lawlessness, and who endure physical, educational, social, privations. If it is ever true that any man ever takes his life in his own hands (which is seriously doubted) in a world over which God rules, that man can be found in fields of domestic missionary labor as well as in fields of foreign missionary labor. It is therefore unfortunate and disparaging that the laborers in the home field whose consecration is just as sincere, whose privations are just as painful! whose talents and efforts are devoted to obtain a like object with the laborers in foreign fields; aye, a shame that the one should be regarded with reproach and slight, while the other is hailed as a hero, and crowned with social glory and honor.

A careful study of the Scriptures and a clear understanding of their teaching places the matter in its true light, both as to primary and practical bearing. In the Scriptures the nearest is first as a fact of duty.

Duty is created by obligation. Obligation is made up of many factors. One of these factors is nearness. Each man is under obligation first to cultivate and develop his own powers and faculties and build himself up after God's ideal; and in the matter of missions he is obligated first to evangelize those nearest,—his own household, his own town, his own state, his own country. According to the express teaching of the Scriptures, Home Missions come before Foreign Missions in the order of operation. The disciples were instructed to begin at Jerusalem, then advance into Judea, then Samaria and the uttermost parts of the earth. The restored and redeemed demoniac of Gadara was enjoined to return and first proclaim what great things God had done for him to his own house before he should fill ten cities. The apostle Paul cordially acknowledged himself a debtor to the Greeks and barbarians, to the wise and unwise, but he felt especially obligated to save his own countrymen; and while he labored with matchless devotion and assiduity to give the gospel to Greeks, Corinthians, Romans, Ephesians, barbarians, he slighted no opportunity to save his own flesh and blood as a brand plucked from the burning. The Saviour goes first to the lost sheep of the house of Israel; the disciples do likewise; the great missionary to the Gentiles agonizes for the salvation of his own countrymen with a willingness to make any sacrifice. The nearest is first. It is the divine order and method of procedure and should not be reversed. It is the divine order and method of operation and no work in any other quarter can legitimately supercede it. All the charity of the world cannot excuse the man who neglects the essential improvement of himself out of love for some other man, or who neglects his own family out of philanthropy for some other family. The blot on John Howard is that of neglecting his own family and of allowing his own son to grow up a moral pest, though he himself was engaged in philanthropic work among prisoners. Neither can any work or labor of love in any other direction relieve the individual or the Church, which is a collection of individuals, from the duty to evangelize the nearest first. Aye, it is the prime duty of the individual respecting himself, of each family respecting itself, of the Church respecting its local territory and country, to make, mold and fashion it so approximately to the pattern which God has given, that, if every other individual, every other family, every other territory and country, should follow, each would be vastly bettered, greatly elevated, and brought nearer to God.

The obligation expresses itself still more forcibly. Deep-seated in the heart of every true Christian is the feeling that he must foster and promote those institutions which glorify God in the reduction of the enormity and prevalence of crime. First and foremost among these institutions is the Christian Sabbath. "The rule is," to quote the words of an eminent writer, "where there is no Church and church-going there is no Sabbath, and where there is no Sabbath and no Sabbath-keeping there is no religion, and where there is no religion there is no God, and where there is no God there is no conscience, and where there is no conscience, there is no respect for the rights of men, and where there is no respect for the rights of men there is no security for life or property." When these things are taken out of a community or state or a country there is not much left that is worth possessing. What institution is it, then, that will lead men back to conscience and God, and keep them there? It is the Christian Sabbath. What is the starter and incentive to the Sabbath? It is churches and the preached gospel. When these prevail crime is restrained and God is brought before the mind. When the question is raised relative to the ignorant and lawless districts, some propose educating them. It is all true that they must be educated. But they need first to be educated in the blood-bought doctrines of salvation, which, when believed, become the power of God unto salvation. The divine order of reducing crime and elevating mankind is evangelization, first, and education, second; one right in the path of the other, but to reverse the order means a partial failure, and ultimately an entire failure. In a state there was a most lawless section. A Church sent missionaries there. Sabbath after Sabbath they gathered the people, and in the course of time built a church. The church stood for righteousness. It called the people to worship on the Sabbath Day. It was instrumental in restoring Sabbath observance, and Sabbath observance has been instrumental in reducing crime, in restraining sinful conduct, in reviving conscience, in making God a living reality and in preparing men and women for great usefulness in the Church.

Home Missions, as a matter of fact, are next in order to Foreign Missions. The supply for the foreign demand comes from the home field. Many of the ablest ministers and most efficient missionaries have come from home missionary centres. The large congregations of city churches are supplied by people from the by-ways and hedges of gospel privilege. It is often a wonder to some as to why the Presbyterian Church is largest in the cities and populous towns. In her earlier days the Presbyterian Church was a moral church, she preached the gospel in the destitute regions; she went into the by-ways and hedges compelling the people to come; and her large congregations in cities, her generous contribution and gifts to Foreign Missions to-day is a result and reward of Home Missionary work performed in the past. If this state of prestige is to be perpetuated, it must be done by a return to the Scriptural order of operation: The nearest first.

Home Missions appeal most touchingly to the heart of every father and mother. In offering their children to God in holy baptism, they solemnly promised that they would bring them up in the fear and admonition of the Lord. The promise includes not merely the exertion of home influences and home training, but that they should be followed with the gospel privileges wherever they should subsequently go. The children speedily grow up, early separate, widely scatter into different parts of the land. How much do they then need the Church and the benefits of the gospel? A minister after days and nights spent in travel one evening drew up to a small log tavern in a mining camp. He went out to the stream which dashed playfully down the mountain, to quench his thirst and rest. A rough-looking miner abruptly asked him if he was the minister-man that was to come. He replied in the affirmative. The miner then asked him to call and see a man who was in a dying condition. The minister, without rest or supper, hastened to a cabin, and there on a crude bed, amid every discomfort, lay a young man, a college graduate, the son of wealthy parents, dying. The man of God read the Scriptures, prayed with him, gave him a drink of water, held his head as he breathed out his life. He telegraphed the sad news to his parents. It was a great shock. Had they felt one-fifth part of the pain when their son left home which they experienced upon the reception of the sad news, they would have been exercised for the establishment of a mission in that distant, benighted place, so that, though their son was away from home, he would still have gospel influences and church fellowship. Home Missions follow the prodigal wherever he may go; it reaches the children and ministers to their spiritual necessities in all their separations; it seeks and saves the wandering ones and shelters the absent ones.

The nearest first is the divine order. That so many churches should be entirely closed at this season, should be doing absolutely nothing, is a rebuke to the profession. That so many ministers should receive well-filled purses of gold and spend it in foreign travel and idle pleasure when large numbers of their brethren actually stand in want of the commonest elements of comfort, to say nothing of the hardship endured and needed rest in comparison, is a riddle. Charity begins at home, and well it may, but it does not end there. It goes everywhere ministering to every needy being. Missions begin at home, and well they may, but they do not end there. They go to every needy, sinful creature, and must go, until the "knowledge of God shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea."

Cleveland, Tenn.

R. L. Benn.

A Hint to Mothers.

How much I owe to my mother for having so exercised me in the Scriptures as to make me grasp them in what my correspondent would call their "concrete whole," and, above all, taught me to reverence them as transcending all thought and ordaining all conduct! This she effected, not by her own sayings or personal authority, but simply by compelling me to read the book thoroughly myself. As soon as I was able to read with fluency, she began a course of Bible work with me which never ceased until I went to Oxford. She read alternate verses to me, watching at first every intonation of my voice, and correcting the false ones, till she made me understand the verse, if within my reach, rightly and energetically. It might be beyond me altogether; that she did not care about; but she made sure that as soon as I got hold of it at all, I should get hold of it by the right end. In this way she began with the first verse of Genesis, and went straight through to the last verse of the Apocalypse; hard names, numbers, Levitical law, and all; and began again at Genesis next day. If a name was hard, the better the exercise in pronunciation; if a chapter was tiresome, the better the lesson in patience; if loathsome, the better the lesson in faith that there was some use in its being so outspoken. After our chapters (two or three a day, according to their length, the first thing after breakfast, and no interruption from servants allowed, none from visitors, who either joined in the reading or had to stay upstairs, and none from any visitings or excursions, except real traveling), I had to learn a few verses by heart, or to repeat, to make sure I had not lost something of what was already known; and, with the chapters above enumerated, I had to learn the body of the fine old Scottish paraphrases, which are good, melodious, and forceful verse, and to which, together with the Bible itself, I owe the first cultivation of my ear in sound. It is strange that of all the pieces of the Bible which my mother thus taught me, and which cost me most to learn, and which was to my child mind chiefly repulsive,—the cxix Psalm,—has now become of all the Bible the most precious to me, in its overflowing and glorious passion of love for the law of God.—John Ruskin.

The sins by which God's Spirit is ordinarily grieved are the sins of small things—laxities in keeping the temper, slight neglect of duty, lightness, sharpness of dealing.—Horace Bushnell.

One of Many Commendations of Dr. Laws' Bible Studies.

Fulton, Mo., July 29, 1903.

Dr. S. S. Laws:

Dear Bro: I hope you will not consider it presumption in me to address you without formal introduction.

I have read with the deepest interest and satisfaction, your recent Bible Studies, published in the Presbyterian Standard. I wish to thank you most heartily for these edifying articles.

You have sounded the very depths of practical Christianity, and have brought out the most profound and at the same time the most comforting doctrines of God's Word.

You brought before my mind the objective righteousness of Christ, in a way that no other has done. Also in your treatment of the relation of believers to the law, you have made clear a thing much needed, because little understood by the masses.

Your lucid statement of the following of our justification logically by our sanctification will comfort many a heart. Your remarks on the Sacraments show the absurdity of the Roman Catholic and the Baptist views.

Dr. Gage told me that you spoke of publishing these articles in pamphlet form. They are worthy of the most substantial binding. They will greatly help the Church and should be well circulated in a nice book that can never be lost.

I preach to four congregations around Fulton, Mt. Olivet, White Cloud, New Bloomfield, and Ebenezer, and consequently meet with some of your old students.

Could your articles be generally read, and mastered by our people, what a defense it would be against the evils that have such a hold here!

May the Saviour keep you in health and great comfort as the years move on.

Most Sincerely,

J. C. Carson.

Eden.

How fair was Eden at creation's dawning—

Fragrant with bloom—bright with the smile of God.

How rare the blush upon the cheek of morning—

Those first bright days, that beam'd on Eden's sod.

Glad days! bright genesis of coming ages;

Beaming with quick'ning rays upon the earth.

And Adam gazed alone—no other sages

Were there to joy with him at Nature's birth.

Alone with God! in Eden's primal glory,

Alone, without one friendly human soul.

Thus Adam dwelt, and should he thus grow hoary?

Was this to him life's only hope, life's goal?

What though all creature life should own his Power—

The lion fawning, heed the Master's will,

Delights regale him from each bud and flower—

His heart for human love is hungry still.

Sleep came to him—a while his hunger ceases—

He dreams and smiles, as visions come and go;

He sighs, awakes, the light of dawn increases—

His Eden world with glory all aglow.

Beside him, Oh it seems a happy vision—

A maiden form is pressing Eden's sod.

A thrill of joy makes earth seem all elysian—

And Adam's heart goes out in thanks to God.

We leave them here, e'er Eve by tempter blighted

Follow'd the trail the serpent's track had made

E'er Adam with her sin became united,

And all the blame upon the woman laid.

We love to think of Adam's pristine glory—

Eve, so radiant, spotless, sweet and pure.

We love to dwell on Eden's matchless story—

Could wish the world were Eden ever-more.

It will be Eden, for there comes a dawning

Upon the sons of Adam, bright and clear—

A glad and blissful resurrection morning,

When Christ—the second Adam shall appear.

—Wm. Laurie Hill.

Floral Manse, N. C.

CONTENTS.

Church News.

VIRGINIA.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.—The types made us say last week in regard to the number of students expected next session that there were twenty-nine students in sight. There would not be anything to cheer the heart of the Church in snob a statement as that about our largest seminary, as such a total would not indicate an increase, but the heaviest decline in the number of candidates ever known in the history of the Church. What we wrote was that there were already more than twenty new students in sight, which indicates that the whole attendance will be nearer sixty-nine than twenty-nine, and in this of course there is very great ground for rejoicing. Let us hope that, now that the tide has turned, the number of candidates will increase as rapidly as it has been decreasing for some years past. And let our people not forget that, after all is said, the most vital question before the Church at the present time is the supply of her ministers.

PULASKI.—Dr. Morton, of Rocky Mount, N. C., has been assisting the pastor in a series of meetings which have been blessed of God to the good of the people.

The sermons were of a very high order and God's people were greatly strengthened in their faith. There were five additions to the church, making fifty during the last year.

With growing congregations, a large and prosperous Sunday-school and Young People's Society, the church is in a very hopeful condition.

ROANOKE PRESBYTERY.—The Presbytery of Roanoke met at New Concord Church, Campbell county, Va., Aug. 11th and was opened with a sermon by Rev. J. M. W. Elder, in the absence and by request of the Moderator, Rev. C. C. Owen, of our Korean Mission. We had present fourteen ministers and fifteen ruling elders. Rev. J. A. Paisley was chosen Moderator and Ruling Elders W. L. Ray and L. C. Aster, Temporary Clerks. We had with us as corresponding members Rev. Dr. McIlwaine of Hampden-Sidney, West Hanover Presbytery, and Rev. Messrs. A. N. Perryman and F. L. McFadden, D. D., of Montgomery. From this Presbytery was received Rev. James Arthur, called to be pastor of Chatham and Spring Garden churches, where he is to be installed on the third Sunday of September; at the former in the morning, and at the latter place in the evening.

Mr. Charles E. Clark, of Diamond Hill Church, was taken under care as a candidate for the ministry.

Much interest was manifested in regard to matters Presbyterian in Lunenburg and Patrick counties, where of late the course of events has been discouraging. It is hoped that the steps taken will result in a speedy and permanent betterment of things. Ebenezer Church, Lunenburg, has recently been bereaved of one of its best ruling elders, Mr. E. C. Stokes, but is able and willing to provide a manse for a pastor and support him for one-half his time. The difficulty lies in providing for the other half. Measures were set on foot to raise the money to support him for that part of his time in evangelistic work, and the supply of a couple of weak churches in other parts of Lunenburg and an adjacent portion of Mecklenburg. The Patrick Church has lost, also by death, its only and excellent ruling elder, Judge Powhatan Bouldin, Jr. Matters are in a discouraging condition, but vigorous steps will be taken to renew and prosecute our work there. Rev. B. F. Bedinger, of the Synod's Evangelistic force, is now laboring in the Lunenburg and Mecklenburg field, and the first of September will go to Patrick to spend two months there, to be followed very soon, it is hoped, by a permanent re-occupation of the field.

Certain discouraging obstacles having been removed, the Presbytery's Twentieth Century Education Fund committee was instructed to proceed with the canvass of the churches. Rev. S. K. Winn, D. D., has been engaged for this work. The churches are urged to give Dr. Winn a cordial reception and a favorable hearing in regard to this important matter.

Rev. Dr. T. R. English and Ruling Elder George Hunt, of Buffalo Church, were chosen commissioners to the next General Assembly, with Rev. T. S. Wilson and Ruling Elder J. J. Wood, of New Concord Church, as their alternates.

In compliance with the recommendation of the General

Page

EDITORIAL:
 Event and Comment..... 3
 The Missionary Failing..... 4-5
 A Letter and its Answer..... 5-6
 Review of Contemporaries..... 7
 DEVOTIONAL:..... 8
 MISSIONARY:
 A Chinese Memorial Tablet..... 8
 SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON:
 David Spares Saul. Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D..... 9
 WESTMINSTER LEAGUE.
 Allied Forces of Righteousness. Rev. H. W. Hoon 9
 CONTRIBUTED:
 Imputation. Rev. K. M. McIntyre, D. D..... 10-11
 Keswick and Keswickism. Mildred C. Watkins... 11-12
 God's Mysterionsness and a Mother's Love. J. C. W. 12-13
 Educational Danger. Rev. A. Kirkland..... 13
 The Nearest First. Rev. R. L. Benn..... 13-15
 One of Many Commendations of Dr. Laws' Bible Studies. Rev. J. C. Carson..... 15
 Poem: Eden. William Lanrie Hill..... 15
 CHURCH NEWS..... 16-19
 THE WORLD ..... 20-21
 THE HOME CIRCLE..... 22-23
 THE HOME CIRCLE..... 22-23
 Marriages and Deaths..... 24-25
 Our Young People..... 26-29
 Our Little Folks..... 30-33

The Editor's Chat with the Reader.

That is a fine article on Imputation by Rev. Kenneth McIntyre, D. D. By the way, we don't recall whether or not we commented on the good sense of Davidson in giving the D. D. to a man who is really a Doctor of Divinity, a theologian born.

Miss Mildred C. Watkins writes delightfully of her impressions of Keswick and the Keswickism she heard there. God's Mysterionsness and a Mother's Love are two sacred considerations. Rev. A. Kirkland has a thoughtful article on the Educational Danger. Rev. R. L. Benn is always a welcome contributor to these columns. Rev. J. C. Carson writes a deserved tribute to the Bible Studies recently published in The Standard from the pen of Dr. Laws. And the poem entitled Eden, by William Laurie Hill, has the true poetic fervor.

We think the Devotional and the Missionary Departments, which with the World and Young People's Departments are the special care of the Associate Editor, are uncommonly good this week, though these and our Sunday-school Lesson and the Westminster League compare favorably with any such columns in any of our religious papers.

PERSONALS.

Rev. F. J. Brooke of Alexandria, Va., is spending some time in Staunton, Va.

Rev. J. P. McMillan of Lumberton, N. C., is resting for a month at Acworth, Ga.

Rev. and Mrs. W. P. McCorkle, of Savannah, Ga., are now visiting in Talladega, Ala.

Rev. D. S. McAllister, of Washington, Ga., preached at Lumberton, N. C., on last Sunday.

Rev. J. W. Stagg, D. D., of Birmingham, who is visiting his family at Mooresville, N. C., preached at the Second Church, Charlotte, last Sunday.

We are grieved to hear, through Rev. J. D. McLean, that Rev. R. L. Dale, Evangelist of Paris Presbytery, Texas, accidentally killed himself while handling a shot-gunn on the 16th inst. The distressing accident occurred in the presence of Mrs. Dale. Mr. Dale was a successful evangelist and a man who was great through simple goodness.

Changed addresses:

Rev. W. W. Powell from St. Petersburg, Fla. to Jackson, Ky.

Rev. R. M. DuBose from Sheffield, Ala., to Courtland, Ala.

Rev. W. A. Ross from Alma to Fort Smith, Ark.

Rev. I. A. Waddell from Roxbury to Lexington, Va.

Rev. E. A. Sample from Franklin to Hendersonville, N. C.

Assembly and of the committee in Richmond, Presbytery consolidated into one its Publication, Sunday-school and Young People's Societies committees. The consolidated committees consist of Rev. W. T. Daggett, Danville, Va.; Rev. A. J. Panton, Whittles, Va., and Ruling Elder F. L. Walker, of Danville.

Martinsville was chosen the place of next spring stated meeting, and it was ordered that a Sunday-school Institute be held during the sessions there.

The sum of $400 was apportioned among the churches of the Presbytery at the rate of 4 per cent on amount of pastor's salary, to be raised at the two collections in November and April, for the education of candidates for the ministry.

A large concourse of people attended daily, who were entertained with a lavish hospitality. Bountiful provision was made for all.

We were sorry to find and to leave Mrs. Rogers, wife of Rev. D. P. Rogers, pastor of New Concord, very critically ill. Constant prayer was made for them.

H. A. B.

Miss Mary Coles Preston, of Bristol, has been elected and has accepted the position of teacher in the Presbyterian Orphans' Home, at Lynchburg.

NORTH CAROLINA.

WAYNESVILLE.—The Presbytery of Asheville will meet with the Davidson River Church on Tuesday, Oct. 6th, 1903, at 7:30 p. m.

Rev. D. M. Douglas and Elder L. C. Neill are the committee of arrangements, Brevard, N. C.

Frank D. Hunt, S. C.

ASHEVILLE.—Rev. Samuel Phillips Verner recently delivered at the First Presbyterian Church three interesting lectures on mission work in Central Africa. His stereopticon views illustrating African scenery and the habits of the people are very fine.

Mr. Verner is a clear and forcible speaker, and his lectures give evidence of close observation and strong, honest thinking.

STOKES COUNTY.—Rev. R. W. George has conducted a very successful eight days' meeting at Pine Ridge, closing Aug. 9th. Fourteen have thus far joined the Presbyterian Church. This church, composed of members gathered out of a "hard shell" neighborhood through the evangelistic labors of Bro. George, now numbers 45 members and is steadily growing. There seems to be plenty of raw material there, as three families count up 46 children. Since the organization of our church there the moral conditions of the neighborhood have been greatly improved. Bro. George begins a meeting at Ashbury Aug. 23. Rev. E. C. Murray has just closed a meeting at Dan River. There was only one profession of faith, but the church, which has been in a very low spiritual condition, seems to be greatly revived. Our Church has done a great work in Stokes county, and there is no limit to the possibilities for the future.

E. C. Murray.

BETHEL.—A most interesting and profitable week's meeting has just closed at Bethel Church, Guilford county, N. C., in which the pastor, Rev. J. McL. Seabrook, had excellent help from two of Bethel's sons, Rev. S. M. Rankin, pastor of Alamance and Springwood Churches, and Rev. J. C. Story who is engaged in Synodical Missions in Brunswick county, N. C. The preaching of these brethren was plain, practical, earnest, and "in demonstration of the spirit and of power." Large congregations attended every day. The interest was deep from the first. Believers were revived. Thirteen professions of faith were made. The most of those making them will be received later.

BENSALEM.—We have just closed a series of meetings at Bensalem Church, in which there was a manifestation of the Spirit's power.

The meeting went on for six days and every service was well attended. At the conclusion of the services the doors of the church were opened and eleven, on profession of faith, were added to our roll. We thank God and take courage.

T. F. Haney.

PENDER COUNTY FIELD.—We learn from an outside source that the Rev. T. D. Johnston has entered most successfully on his work in this group consisting of Burgaw, Pike Creek, Mt. Williams, Hopewell, Keith and Maple Hill. All the churches give evidence of continued and increasing usefulness. Hopewell has been repainted and repaired. Pike Creek has been slightly remodeled and a new organ purchased. Maple Hill has a new organ and Burgaw has just secured a full supply of the new hymn books. Mr. Johnston has been most kindly received by the people of his churches and there is every reason for congratulation both as to pastor and to flock, in the prospects for this large but most encouraging field.

MISSISSIPPI.

Presbytery of Mississippi will meet in Bensalem Church, Tuesday, Sept. 29, 1904, at 11 a. m.

S. C. Caldwell, S. C.

Tombeckbee Presbytery meets with the Bethel Church, Lowndes county, Thursday, Oct. 1, 1903, at 11 a. m. Crawford is the railroad point. Jno. W. Moseley, Jr., S. C.

Meridian Presbytery will meet at Moutrose, Miss., Thursday 7:30 p. m. Oct. 1st.

A. B. Coit, S. C.

GEORGIA

MACON.—Rev. R. E. Douglas, pastor of First Church, left Monday 17th for a month's vacation to be spent in Kentucky. Rev. R. H. Morris, of Barnesville, Ga., will preach for him Aug. 23 and 30. Arrangements for the remaining two Sabbaths have not yet been completed. Rev. Mr. Frazer, of the Tattnell Square Church, is spending his vacation in Alabama. Rev. Luther Link supplied his pulpit last Sabbath.

M.

TEXAS.

Meeting of Presbytery—Durant, Ada, I. T., Friday, September 25th, 8 p. m.

R. F. Kirkpatrick, S. C.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

CHARLESTON.—Rev. W. C. Hagan, of Newells N. C., will fill the pulpit of the Second Church, Charleston, S. C., during the absence of the pastor, Rev. J. K. Fraser. Mr. Fraser will visit his home in Canada while resting.

MISSOURI.

The Presbytery of Potosi stands adjourned to meet in the Presbyterian Church, Caruthersville, Missouri, on Friday, September 25, 1903, at 7:30 p. m.

Geo. W. Harlan, S. C.

MEMPHIS.—Rev. W. S. Foreman, pastor of the church at Memphis, Mo., will spend his vacation as follows: two weeks at Winona Lake, Indiana, where he now is; the last two weeks of the month he will supply Cote Brilliant Church, St. Louis; make an address before the Woman's Presbyterial Union of Palmyra Presbytery at Palmyra, and attend the Y. P. S. C. E. Convention the 28th, at Louisiana, Mo. He will also be present as Moderator at the meeting of Palmyra Presbytery, at Big Creek Church, Reusselaer, Sept. 1.

MARSHALL.—In answer to the direction of Lafayette Presbytery to show cause, if any, why the pastoral relation between the Marshall Church and Rev. C. E. Thomas should not be dissolved, he having offered his resignation at a recent meeting of Presbytery, a congregational meeting was held August 16, and with practical unanimity the church concurred with the pastor in asking that the relation be dissolved: with the request that Mr. Thomas be continued as supply until he has located elsewhere.

Both Lafayette and Palmyra Presbyteries are to meet September 1st, the former at Hughesville, the latter at Palmyra.

TANEY COUNTY.—Dr. E. C. Gordou, Home Mission Chairman of Lafayette Presbytery, Dr. W. R. Dobyms, Chairman Synod's Committee of Home Missions, and Mr. Higgins of St. Joseph, have recently visited Forsyth, Taney county, to confer with Dr. Ganss and Rev. Mr. Forsyth, our missionaries in the lower Ozark field, and the citizens of the county as to the establishment of a Presbyterian Academy. They had a very pleasant visit and were interested in what they saw of the work that is being done, and the condition of things in that county. What the results of this visit will be are not yet fully known, and perhaps will not be until after a committee meeting is held.

ST. LOUIS.—At a meeting of St. Louis Presbytery, Aug. 1, Mr. Rockwell Brank, son of Dr. R. G. Brank, for many years the beloved pastor of Central Church, was received as a candidate for the gospel ministry. And it was with peculiar pleasure that the Presbytery thus received under its care the son of one who so long and faithfully served the Master within its bounds. Mr. Brank will go to Princeton Seminary in the fall, where his kinsman, Dr. Warfield, is Professor.

COOK AVENUE.—At a recent communion twenty members were added to this church on profession of their faith. These additions were largely the results of a series of evangelistic services held in a tent on the church lot. The pastor, Rev. J. T. Boyer, has been much encouraged since taking charge of the church by increased attendance, interest and contributions, as well as by additions to the membership; and he is spending the month of August at Winona.

CENTRAL.—The pastor, Rev. Mr. Mauze, goes west this summer for his vacation as far as the Pacific coast. During his absence the pulpit is supplied most acceptably by Rev. C. R. Hyde of Fort Worth, Tex.

CAPE GIRARDEAU.—Services in memory of Rev. J. L. Alsworth, pastor of this church, whose sad death by drowning has already been noted, were held on the third Sabbath of August. They were conducted by Rev. C. M. Lackham of Jackson, Mo., and were participated in by other ministers, and attended by a large and deeply interested and sympathetic congregation, for he was well known and greatly admired, and his sudden death touched the heart of the whole community. At last accounts his body had not been recovered.

TEXAS.

LOVELADY.—Lovelandy is a growing town in Eastern Texas, on the International and Great Northern railroad, about one hundred miles north of Houston. It is surrounded by a good farming country, where corn, cotton, ribbon cane, potatoes, etc., are produced, cotton being the principal crop, though some are giving attention to raising Irish potatoes, tomatoes and fruit for shipment. It is also in the timbered section, where fine lumber is produced. The town has a flourishing public school, of which Mr. F. M. Martin is principal. Methodists, Baptists, Disciples and Presbyterians have churches here, the Presbyterian having about twenty-five or thirty members. The Presbyterian Church has lately received four members on profession and two by certificate. Mr. C. F. Hancock, a candidate of Anstin Theological Seminary, is supplying the church.

S. F. Tenney.

TYLER.—We have just closed a meeting in our church here, in which I had the assistance of Rev. Geo. F. Robertson of Paris, and Prof. T. G. Makin of Livingston, Ala., Bro. Robertson doing the preaching, and Prof. Makin leading in the singing. I have never heard the Word preached and sung with greater power and sweetness. Both men were at their best, being filled with the Spirit. Great emphasis was laid on the work of the H. S. and the necessity for Bible study. The visible results of the meeting were not what we hope for, but saints were edified and strengthened, and sinners converted. There were four additions to our roll. We look for others.

Fraternally,

J. D. McLean.

VIRGINIA.

FALLING SPRING CHURCH.—A beautiful scene was witnessed at this historic church on Sunday morning, Aug. 9th, when nineteen intelligent young persons stood in a semi-circle about the pulpit and were publicly received into the Church, all on confession of their faith in Christ, more than half of them through the sacrament of baptism. This was the joyful conclusion of a series of services beginning on Saturday two weeks before, preparatory to the Lord's Supper on the fourth Sabbath of July.

The Communion was followed by seventeen services conducted by Rev. Henry Miller of Rockbridge Baths. Bro. Miller's preaching was most earnest and effective, accompanied by his house-to-house and hand-to-hand personal work from day to day, in company with the pastor, assisted by faithful elders and a number of earnest, praying Christians.

There was no excitement, no sensational methods, no letting down of the bars. Bro. Miller insists upon a profound conviction of sin, sole trust in Christ and unconditional surrender to Him.

Every candidate for church membership was dealt with in private meetings of the session. All were of sufficient age and intelligence to apprehend the meaning of the step taken, having been instructed and prayed with privately and in the Sabbath-school.

It is a long while since such a scene was witnessed in this old mother church. The results of this meeting, together with other evidences of revival and growth, and largely increased attendance upon the regular services, having produced a hopefulness in the people and encouraged the new pastor in this large and promising field; and, it is certain that Bro. Miller will long be remembered for his faithful work here.

At the close and following this meeting were two enjoyable and profitable episodes. After the reception and baptism of new members, our beloved Dr. Morrison, recently returned from Africa, a missionary from this county of Rockbridge, addressed the largest audience we have had. Dr. Morrison, seven years ago, before leaving for Africa, had for a time supplied the Falling Spring Church. It was a happy reunion between him and the people and his address was greatly enjoyed.

In the afternoon he spoke also at Glasgow on other interesting phases of the work in Africa, giving an entertaining and amusing account of the manners and customs of the people.

The other incident was a social gathering of the congregation at the manse on Tuesday afternoon and evening, on the spacious lawn under the beautiful trees, wired and lighted with many colored lanterns, throwing light upon the tables where refreshments were served to some two hundred people or more. The people of our congregation and community now know one another better, have been refreshed spiritually and socially and are more interested in the Church. A meeting is contemplated at Glasgow soon. May we have a like refreshing there.

A. G. B.

ARKANSAS.

The Presbytery of Washbourne will meet at Bentonville, Ark., Sept. 30th, Wednesday, 7:30 p. m.

S. W. Davis, S. C.

FLORIDA.

SANFORD.—The provisions of the Form of Government having been complied with, a special meeting of the Presbytery of St. Johns will be held in the Presbyterian Church, St. Petersburg, on Tuesday, 25th August, at ten o'clock a. m. for the purpose, if the way be clear, of

1. Dissolving the pastoral relation between the Rev. W. W. Powell and the St. Petersburg Church, and
2. Dismissing Rev. W. W. Powell to the Presbytery of West Lexington.

C. E. Jones, Moderator.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Missionary Society of Fayetteville Presbytery.

(This was written for a friend and was not intended for publication, but as it may be helpful for the guidance of those interested in the organization of Presbyterian Unions, it is used without the knowledge of the writer.)

The Woman's Missionary Union of Fayetteville Presbytery was organized Sept. 26, 1889, but a large minority of the Presbytery opposed the Union so actively there was no action taken by the eleven societies composing it, until after the spring meeting of Presbytery, April 1890, when the constitution was adopted by Presbytery with more unanimity.

The President, Mrs. E. A. MacRae, issued a circular letter to the societies and churches, urging the organization of societies in every church, and more active work and liberal contributions. This letter was a perfect failure, very few responding in any way and no new societies were formed. Several prominent ministers, elders and churches were still opposed to a Union, and their influence was felt through most of the Presbytery.

After waiting six months and no action was taken in regard to the letter, I determined to visit as many churches as possible and organize Societies where the pastor and session were willing. I made appointments for three weeks and left home in bitter cold weather, went among entire strangers, visited from house to house talking Missions, the great need of societies in all new churches, and the privilege we women have of being co-workers with God the Father in the salvation of the world. I dwelt particularly on the great blessing the Missionary Society was to a woman in the country, how the feeling of individual responsibility enlarged our ideas, drew us away from the selfish routine of our hard work in our homes, made us happy to realize that we were of some importance in the great world. We could pray for and think of the work as we went about our household labors; could practice self-denial and save money to send this blessed gospel which is so precious to us, to the poor wretched men and women in heathen lands.

After talking in this way in as many homes as possible we would gather together in the church after services and organize a Society, appointing the officers myself, after carefully noting the qualifications during my visits. I would carry with me copies of the Constitution, and the Missionary and the Children's Missionary, and get as many subscribers as possible to each and send the names and money to Nashville in order to secure prompt attention to this important matter. If a large church I would call a meeting for children and talk to them and organize a Children's Society, and make an earnest appeal to them to join the great body of workers in our Church who were doing their part in hastening the coming of the Kingdom, tell them of the blessedness of this service, the joy it brings into the life when we cheerfully obey the Saviour's last command: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." It is a great pleasure to interest the children in this glorious work, and it is of invaluable advantage to them in laying the foundation of consistent Christian characters. It teaches them self-restraint and self-sacrifice, educates the will-power and makes them very happy to feel that they belong to the great army of workers for the world's redemption.

During the nine years of my leadership the Auxiliary Societies increased from eleven to eighty-five, besides a number of Children's Societies. The membership and contributions quadrupled until we reached the proud position of being the Banner Presbyterian Society of our Church. Most of these Societies I visited every year, and all every two years, being scattered over eight counties. I wrote to each society once if not twice every year. I wrote to them to have their report promptly filled out (blanks being sent for the purpose) and brought or sent to every meeting of the Union. This report called for the name of church and society, date of organization, number of members, time of meeting, average attendance, manner of conducting meeting, amount contributed for the year, average contribution per member, numbers of copies of the Missionary taken and also of the Children's. If any of the Missionary literature read, if much interest in the meetings, if any additions of membership or increase of contributions. It is very necessary to have the reports accurately filled out and tabulated by a committee. Our Secretary writes to several Missionaries in the field in time to have the letters read at the meeting. We make our meeting as interesting as possible; have a lecture by some distinguished minister or Missionary the evening preceding the meeting to which the public are invited. The meeting opens in the morning by the pastor, who cordially welcomes the delegates. Then roll call of Society and Auxiliary delegates. The report of the President, report from each society read distinctly so that all in the house can hear. This will occupy the morning session. A picnic dinner in the grove, papers read, letters from Missionaries. At night another public meeting and popular lecture, collection taken up to defray the expenses of the lecturers, etc.

Morning session, unfinished business, electing officers, place of next meeting. All talks limited to ten minutes. Afternoon session devoted to the children. Reports of societies, papers read and recitations with good music, closed with Lord's Prayer in unison. The exercises may be intensely thrilling if every one will come with a prayer for God's blessings and a determination to do their part faithfully, to make the meeting attractive and beneficial to all present.

I have entered into detail hoping to be of service to a new Union. I neglected to mention that in less than two years all prejudice against the Union had passed away. All the ministers heartily co-operated with us, and all the churches (except one who would not permit us to talk to their women).

You ask how you shall make a success of your Union. Only by faithful, laborious efforts on the part of all your officers, especially the President, and by prayer.

This is a great work in which we are engaged, a work that would fill an angel's heart and to which we must bring our best endeavors. We can only plan and organize when led by the Holy Spirit. We must bring our best common sense to bear on every detail of this work and act with tactful judgment, especially in selecting officers for our Auxiliary Societies as well as for our Union. It is especially important that your Secretary be qualified for her office, and it requires several years' experience to make a good Secretary. And there is no telling how much joy and pleasure such a one gives the President.

This has been written in pain and suffering and is not as interesting as it should be. I could have told you my valuable experience with much more enthusiasm, but you must excuse the paucity of style for the sake of the successful outcome of the original idea of visitation to home and churches which has in our Union been so abundantly blessed.

May the Holy Spirit guide and direct in all your deliberations and make your Union a power for good, not only in your state, but the whole Church, prays your friend and co-worker in Christ,

Mrs. E. A. MacRae.

Publication Committee Notes.

The rapid development of this work leads our Committee to think the time is at hand for us to plan for another forward step in the matter of organization.

It is already apparent that one man cannot meet the demand for attendance upon Sunday-school Institutes and Conferences scattered from Maryland to Texas, and, as this feature of the work is proving so helpful, it is our purpose to divide the territory into three sections, and, as soon as the money can be provided, to put a trained Sunday-school missionary into each of the three districts, whose work will be directed by the Synodical and Presbyterial Committees of his section, in conjunction with the General Superintendent of Sunday-school Work.

Our plan contemplates the division of our Synods into the following districts:

No. 1—Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

No. 2—Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi.

No. 3—Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas, including Indian Territory and Oklahoma.

Funds are not yet available for the employment of the three men, but we expect to put a man in District No. 3 (the need there being apparently the greatest) by the first of October, or as soon as a suitable man is found.

The carrying out of the plans of the Assembly will mean a larger expense, and necessarily more liberal collections from all our churches. Last year the churches and Sunday-schools gave $10,234.15 for Publication, and this year the Assembly directed that the sum of $20,000 be apportioned among the Presbyteries for this cause. We ask that you urge your church and your Presbytery to give their proportion of the increase.

No special cause or day endorsed by the Assembly ever met with such a cordial response as did the order that the Sunday-schools of our Church should observe the first Sunday in October in each year as a special day for arousing greater interest in Sunday-school matters.

In 1901, the first year the day was observed, 297 Sunday-schools sent $1,400 as a result of their special collection for Sunday-school missions.

In 1902, when more of the schools were advised as to the purpose of the day, 523 schools sent $3,800 as the result of their collections.

It is estimated that there are 2,400,000 white children within the geographical limits of our Church who are not enrolled in any Sunday-school, and they are largely deprived of all Gospel privileges.

The World.

In all England there are about 600 women physicians.

Turkish troops pillaged the town of Krnshevo and killed about 300 Bulgarians.

In the city of New York there are only 737,477 white persons born of native parents.

Major Charles H. Smith ("Bill Arp") is lying unconscious at his home at Cartersville, Ga.

The dictum of the Teamster's Union in Detroit is that there shall be no more Sunday funerals.

The Government of India will spend $150,000,000 in the construction of irrigating works.

The Census Bureau reports that the Southern States lead the Union in growth of population.

According to census statistics the birth rate among the negroes is falling below the death rate.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie has offered Dublin $140,000 towards the erection of a free public library.

Premier Combes of France has announced his intention of carrying the anti-clerical war to the bitter end.

The State prison at Jackson, Mich., has received an appropriation of $150,000 for the betterment of the cells.

Charles Carroll Bonney, who was president of the World's Congress at the Columbian Exposition, died in Chicago last week.

The Bible Circle of Dr. Clifford's Church, London, has recently made a pilgrimage to the grave of William Penn, near Chafont, St. Giles.

The Government of Switzerland has refused to permit Dr. Lardy, the Swiss Minister at Paris, to act as arbitrator in the Venezuelan dispute.

The Governor of Jamaica has asked the British Government to advance the colony a loan of $1,210,000 to assist in repairing the damage done by the recent hurricane.

It is stated that the Chérmin de Fer de l'est in France has made its railway ties of beech last over thirty years by soaking them with tar oil.

At Hatfield House, near London, Lord Salisbury died on the 22nd inst. After the long struggle the end came without the slightest evidence of pain.

According to treaties between the United States and Canada, an imaginary line is drawn across Lake Erie beyond which American vessels are not allowed to fish.

In Greensboro, N. C., from Oct. 12th to 16th will be held a reunion of non-resident Carolinians. The indications are that the gathering will be a large and representative one.

The French government is making arrangements to provide for the native women in the largest villages of Algeria, women doctors, who are to be paid by the government, consultations being free.

The Herdervary ministry in Hungary had a short life. The attempt to restore Kossuth to the leadership made Herdervary unpopular. Azell, who was premier five years ago, is now at the helm of State affairs.

Secretary Wilson, of the Agricultural Department, in an interview to-day, declared that infinite mischief is being done to the cotton manufacturing industry and to the cotton growing industry by the speculative movement in cotton.

All the members of the infamous Humbert family have been found guilty in Paris courts of obtaining loans (covering some millions of dollars,) under false pretenses. The sentences cover from two to five years' imprisonment.

Some 1,500 negroes, representing almost every section of the country, assembled in the House of Representatives, Nashville, Tenn., the 19th, the occasion being the opening of the fourth annual convention of the National Negro Business Men's League.

The question of permitting the Mississippi River Commission to contract for levee work in excess of the appropriations made by Congress will be referred to the Judge Advocate General of the War Department or to Attorney General Knox for an opinion.

The building of an enormous sea-dike will soon begin in Holland, from Wieringen to the Frisian coast, nearly twenty-five miles. This will cost sixteen millions and will be finished in nine years. The land drained will be divided by canals and cultivated.

Chicago has been celebrating the hundredth anniversary of the beginning of the building of Fort Dearborn on the 17th of August, 1803. Maj. John Whistler (the grandfather of James McNeill Whistler,) was in command during the earliest days of the fort.

It is estimated that this year's cotton and cotton seed crop within the next twelve months will bring the southern farmers at least $600,000,000, and that other southern agricultural products will amount to not far from $900,000,000, a total of about $1,500,000,000 for one year's farming.

The Russian Black Sea squadron, which was ordered to Turkish waters and which arrived at Iniada, Eastern European Turkey, August 19, in order to support Russia's demand on the Sultan growing out of the assassination of M. Rostkowski, the Russian consul at Manastir, has been recalled.

The great fair of Nijni Novgorod is now at its thickest. It is frequented daily by 200,000 buyers and sellers from all parts of Russia and western Asia, and its exchanges amount to $5,000,000 every twenty-four hours. They will aggregate two or three hundred millions during the time of the fair.

General Booth has returned to England from a tour on the Continent and is making ready for the conference of officers that will be held in September. The question of starting a work in Russia is foremost in the minds of the Salvation Army just now. It is making encouraging progress in the Klondike.

The Central Association of Inventors "Germania," of Bayreuth, will hold a general exhibition at Nuremberg during September and October of this year for the purpose of facilitating the sale of patents and copyrighted patterns. There are more than 200,000 copyrighted patterns in Germany and over 140,000 patents.

Prof. Langley's 12-foot aerodrome was tested on August 8, with results considered decidedly encouraging by its inventor. The model flew a distance of 600 yards and then sank in 22 feet of water. When it was finally recovered, all that was left was a tangled wreck of twisted wires. The time consumed in flight was not more than 45 seconds.

President Roosevelt has made applicable to all departments of the government service the principle he enunciated at the time he re-instated Wm. A. Miller to the position in the Government Printing Office from which Miller had been dismissed because of a disagreement with the bookbinders' union. The President has plainly stated to the members of his cabinet that that principle is to "indicate the policy of the President" in similar cases.

Sofia, Ang. 23.—From eastern Adrianople come reports of more fighting, which thus far seems to be resulting chiefly in favor of the revolutionists. Many villages have been burned and their inhabitants have taken refuge across the Bulgarian frontier. After a long fight at Stoiloro, the insurgents defeated a detachment of Turkish troops, which lost 20 killed and wounded. At Chanagasko, near Surovicovo, the insurgents are reported to have annihilated an entire Turkish regiment.

Basle, Switzerland, Ang. 23.—The sixth Zionist Congress opened here to-day under the presidency of Dr. Theodore Herzl, of Vienna.

Dr. Hertzl, in his opening address, referring to the collapse of the project to establish the Jews on the Sinai Peninsula, announced that Great Britain had offered a large tract of territory in East Africa for colonization by the Jews, who would be given an autonomous government under British suzerainty. The question of acceptance of the offer will be submitted to the congress.

The long-delayed Henry Ward Beecher memorial in Brooklyn will probably take the form of a building directly opposite to Plymouth Church. "The plans," says The Outlook, "have not yet been decided upon in detail, but they will be arranged, it is expected, so as to make the building, or buildings, suitable to serve both as a repository for books, pictures, and other articles pertaining to Mr. Beecher and the Beecher family, and also as a library and place of recreation and instruction."—Digest.

The approaching meeting in London between Messrs. Root, Lodge, and Turner on the one side, with three British Commissioners representing Canada on the other again calls attention to the interesting question which is before them for adjudication, not arbitration. After the organization of British Columbia in 1871, the Canadian Government requested that the boundary line between Alaska and Canada should be adjusted, but it was not until 1898 that the British Government acted in the matter. Thus, for more than seventy years (through the Russian occupancy of Russian America and the American occupancy of Alaska), the British Empire made no formal protest against Alaskan boundaries as marked on maps, official and otherwise. In view of such history, the Canadian claim, countenanced in 1898 by the British Government, seems curious—that the Alaskan eastern boundary should run from Prince of Wales Island at 54 min., 4 sec. along the mountains nearest the shore and across all the indentations of the sea up to Mount St. Elias. The grant of such a claim would contravene the phrase from the official language (French), "parallele aux sinuosités de la côte," found in the Russo-British Treaty of 1825. The correspondence leading up to this Treaty shows indubitably that its purpose was 1, to give to Russia a continuous strip of territory on the American mainland around all sea-indentations, and, 2, to make this territory ten marine leagues wide unless there should exist inside that limit a chain of mountains which could constitute a watershed. The country is still largely unexplored, but we now know that a natural watershed exists on the summits of the White and Chilkoot Passes. These are less than ten marine leagues from the coast. Under a modus vivendi with the Canadian Government, our own boundary has thus been brought nearly to the coast line at these points, and is such a waterline at these points, and if such a watershed exist elsewhere, the boundary line should be changed accordingly. This granted, the general claim that the boundary should follow, not the actual indentations, as provided for in the Treaty, but the general trend of the coast, rests on insufficient basis, as is seen even from Canadian and British sources. For instance in the British Admiralty Chart No. 787, corrected to 191, the American frontier is marked as giving a continuous strip of territory, cutting off Canada from all contact with any of the indentations which jut into the continent between Portland Channel and Mount St. Elias. Furthermore, by actual occupancy and usage the United States has acquired by prescription a confirmation to its title.—The Outlook.

Educational.

North Carolina Educational Notes.

A campaign for better education has been completed in Lincoln County. Supt. Heafner has shown much wisdom in arranging his rallies in townships and especially in organizing the school officers and in preparing the way for the speakers. Immense crowds gathered at all the appointments except in one place where there was a misunderstanding as to the date; and in each of the five districts, before the meeting closed, the people came together and signed a petition asking for an election. When the matter was presented to them they were easily convinced that it is the duty of the community to provide for the education of all the children in the community.

Prof. Jno. E. Ray, who has just returned to Raleigh after a two weeks educational campaign, says he has never seen the people so easily aroused on any other question as that of the duty of the community to provide for the education of all the children in the community.

This enthusiasm is not confined to any section of the State. The following counties have carried elections for schools during the present year: Alamance in eight districts, Burke in one, Caldwell in one, Caswell in one, Catawba in one, Cherokee in one, Chowan in one, Cleveland in one, Cumberland in two, Duplin in one, Gaston in two, Gates in one, Johnston in two, Lenoir in one, Martin in one, Nash in one, Orange in one, Pitt in three, Randolph in two, Polk in one, Richmond in one, Robeson in three, Rutherford in one, Surry in one, Tyrrell in one, Union in four, Washington in two, Wilkes in two, Wilson in one and Yadkin in two.

Wherever a local tax district is established it stands as a complete argument that carries conviction to other districts as is shown by the large number of districts where local taxation is now pending. Currituck in preparing to vote in four districts, Duplin in three, Sampson in one, Union in one, Dare in sixteen, Wake in one, Northampton in seven, Cabarrus in eight, Burke in two, Guilford in one whole township, Randolph in three districts, Gaston in one, Nash in two, Vance in one, Lincoln in five, Orange in one, Halifax in one, Beaufort in two, Rockingham in three, Gates in one, Forsyth in one, Yadkin in one and Cleveland in several.

Catawba Male Academy

ROCK HILL, S. C.

A Military Fitting School. Entrance into any American University guaranteed to our graduates.

Thorough preparation for business.

WRITE FOR OUR
ANNOUNCEMENT

The Home Circle.

To Love God's Will is to Do God's Will.

"Thy will be done," was said one night,
Alone with God in precious hour of prayer,

In answer to His call for work—

Service then hard; but oh, how sweet it grew!

Thy will I will do.

"Thy will be done," gave pleasure then,
It kept the heart and mind and soul
all true—

True to the training of self for His work;
And a longing grew to fly to the heathen, that

His will I might do.

"My will to be done, could'st thou wish my child,"

And the voice was low and tender and full of love,

"If my will should say, 'Lie still and wait?'"

My child, to love my will is to do my will

My will canst thou love?"

"Thy will be done," I could but pray,

"At any cost teach me this prayer al-
way,

That be it waiting, suffering here

Or be it longed-for work in mission lands

Thy will I may love.

Thy will was done, my prayer was heard.

I thank Thee now for this once dreaded cross,

For on this very bed of pain

I've learned, with all my heart, to love Thy will.

Thy will I now do.

"Thy will be done," in the midnight hour,

I lisp, and pain seems sweet, for it is
His will.

My Saviour comes, methinks I hear

His voice, so tender and low and sweet and clear,

Whose will I now love.

"My will I do," that voice says,

"I now prepare the child whom I have called.

I teach thee now my will to love,

That in the darkened land to which I lead

My will thou canst do."

M. G. M.

Whistler as Man and Artist.

In the death a short time ago, of James McNeill Whistler there passed from earth the greatest artistic genius and the most eccentric man in the Anglo-Saxon world of culture and art. Now that he is dead his acquaintances—friends in the best sense he had none—mourn the artist taken away, the distinct and irreparable loss to the world of its foremost master, and not the man who has gone from among them.

"He was essentially a contradiction," said a man yesterday, who has seen more of Whistler in recent years than has any other person on this side of the Atlantic. "He was natural to painfulness and embarrassment, but at the same time he was par excellence the great poser of the world. Even his naturalness and over sincerity was a pose. His great ambition was to be the most peculiar and quarrelsome man in the world and his stock in trade was the atmosphere and eccentricity with which he surrounded himself."

The man who said this was David A. Kennedy of the firm of H. Wunderlich and Co., a connoisseur and dealer whose duties have brought him into the closest personal relations with Whistler during recent years.

"Of course," said Mr. Kennedy, "I realize that it is not graceful to say hard things of a man who has just died, but if the world wishes to know anything of Whistler it certainly wishes to know the truth. The world knows him as a pre-eminent artist, but it knows him better as the man who lost no opportunity to make himself ridiculous; the man with the monocle and the white lock of hair, who posed before his mirrors for hours at a time, more careful of his make-up than the greatest actress of the day; the man who lost no opportunity to say sharp and biting things of his fellows; the man who held Yankees in contempt and called Britishers as bores and cads; in short the impossible man whose intimacy no one could stand for longer than six months; the most selfish and egotistical of men and with it all the greatest artist of his time.

"This was Whistler. The numerous caricatures of him exaggerate his peculiarities, but do him no injustice. A small, slight figure of a man with a big head, hair more carefully arranged than that of a belle, the worried look, the monocle, the dandy cane and the white plume of hair over all to add the finishing touch.

"No one at present can say in which of the two fields, painting or etching, Whistler's name will be given the higher rank. Now that he is dead I feel that I have a right to tell something of Whistler which so far as I know has never yet been told. It is Whistler's secret.

"As I have said, Whistler's stock in trade was mystery and eccentricity. He was one of the greatest portrait painters the world ever saw. I regard his portrait of Carlyle as the finest portrait in the world without exception. This work alone would prove beyond cavil his right to the title of master. But, strange to say, it is not upon these few portraits that Whistler's reputation with the public rests. It is on those strange pieces of landscape or of coloring termed studies, pieces which, when you look at them defy analysis. Some of them are so bizarre that you never know when you have them right side up and yet it is upon these paintings and the letters of caustic comment with which he followed them that Whistler really based his claim to distinction.

"And now I come to his secret. I have watched him at work, and do you know to what the Whistler effect, so called, is due? It is to the fact that Whistler always painted these studies in the dark. I do not mean that he worked in total darkness, but I have watched him time and time again and I can say without exaggeration that the large part of all his painting was done in the increasing darkness of twilight. In my humble opinion this is the mechanical explanation of the so-called Whistler effect. I do not mean that a common painter could paint as Whistler did by doing his work in the dark, but I do mean that I believe Whistler obtained his vague and incomprehensible effects by painting in the dark."—Exchange.

(Whistler is of especial interest to North Carolinians, since his mother was a native of Wilmington. Her sweet-faced portrait that hangs in Luxembourg Art Gallery, Paris, is one of the five paintings of the.)

One Confederate Flag that Never Came Down

"Surrender," was the message. "Go back to your homes, I will not have one of these young men encounter one more hazard for my sake."

That night Richard Hunt fought out his fight with himself, pacing to and fro under the stars. He had struggled faithfully for what he believed, still believed, and would, perhaps, always believe, was right. He had fought for the boardest ideal of liberty as he understood it, for citizen, State, and Nation. The appeal had gone to the sword and the verdict was against him. He would accept it. He would go home, take the oath of allegiance, resume the law, and, as an American citizen, do his duty. He had no sense of humiliation; he had no apology to make and would never have—he had done his duty. He felt no bitterness, and had no fault to find with his foes, who were brave and had done their duty as they had seen it; for he granted them the right to see a different duty from what he had decided was his. And that was all.

Renfrew the Silent was waiting at the smouldering fire. He neither looked up nor made any comment when the General spoke his determination. His own face grew more sullen and he reached his hand into his breast and pulled from his faded jacket the tattered colors that he once had borne.

"These will never be lowered as long as I live," he said, "nor afterwards if I can prevent it." And lowered they never were. On a little island in the Pacific ocean, this strange soldier, after leaving both property and kindred forever, lived out his life among the natives with this bloodstained remnant of the Stars and Bars over his hut, and when he died the flag was hung over his grave, and above that grave to-day the tattered emblem still sways in southern air.—From "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," by John Fox, Jr.

The Chronicle of a Beautiful Life.

Mrs. O. M. Fitzgerald, mother of Bishop Fitzgerald, recently celebrated her ninetieth birthday in her quiet little home in Newark, N. J., where she has lived for fifty years. It is not strange that she clings to the old home with the many sacred associations and the circle of friends at hand lovingly to minister to her. All the furnishings of her comfortable abode are quaint and old-fashioned, and the attendants are of her own choosing. The cook is an old negro, eighty years old, and the housekeeper seventy-two. In spite of the fact of her declining years and an illness from which she has not wholly recovered, she is bright and cheerful. Her Bible is her constant companion, and she enjoys the distinction of having read the sacred Book through ninety times. She says:

"When I take this Book in my hand, I know it to be the Word of God. When I commence each time to read it anew, I do not begin it, I do not finish it, just to say I have read the Bible through so many times. I read it as a miner seeks for gold. Each time I read it through I find something new and precious, and if I should live to be a hundred years old and so be able to read it many more times, I should continue to find new things and precious within it." She frequently reads Bibles through, making passages in them for near friends who so desire.

She has read the Bible in three languages besides her own—Spanish, German and French. A systematic plan is always observed in her reading, and she carefully looks up the marginal references, making comparisons. Each reading occupies about sixty days. It is difficult for her to mention favorite passages of Scripture, as the Book abounds in riches for her, although the sweet, reverent voice is often heard repeating the following precious promises, which seem to flow from her very soul:

"If ye abide in Me and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done." "If ye will obey My voice indeed and keep My covenant (the bargain I make with you), ye shall be unto Me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation." "No good thing will He withhold from them that walk uprightly." "If we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

"When I was twelve years old," she said, "I could say the gospels by heart—by head, I should say. To know the gospels by heart—that means a great deal."

She is truly an optimist, and her cheerfulness brings many young people around her who come for counsel and comfort. In fact, she is constantly being sought by both young and old for consolation and advice.

Her mind is wonderfully bright and active, and her judgment so highly valued, that her advice is eagerly desired in secular as well as spiritual matters. She is president of the Newark Home for the Friendless, organized by her over thirty years ago, and has been a member of the official board of many of the charitable institutions of Newark. For over fifty years holiness meetings have been held in her home every Friday.

Every summer she conducts the series of holiness meetings at Mount Tabor, having supreme control. When the week ends, she holds three meetings daily in her cottage, at hours that do not conflict with the regular camp-meetings, and her rooms are always crowded.

Of her own religious experiences, Mrs. Fitzgerald says: "I know that I was converted when I was only seven years old, a little child sitting on my father's knee. I had been convicted of sin. Two years before—when I was five—I had heard some merry young men say: 'Let's steal some corn to-night and roast it.'" In a childish spirit of imitation, I took one of uncle's watermelons. There was no reason why I should not have had one for the asking, but I did not ask. My young brother showed me I had broken God's law. I did not trouble myself much over it then. A year later a small schoolmate had a little gingham bag, with a drawstring in it, which I wanted; I had a lead-pencil—lead pencils were rare in those days—which she desired. We decided to exchange. I wanted it done legally before witnesses. We deposited bag and pencil in a crack of the school-house wall until recess, when we came together to transact the business in due form. The pencil was gone. The girl hung her head. I said, 'You have taken the pencil. I shall take the bag.' But my conscience gave me no peace and I returned it to her. That revived my memory of the watermelon incident. What was I to do to make that right? My father could not pay uncle for it. I could not. To pay would not adjust it. I lost my appetite with worry. The doctor was sent for, but his wisdom was of no avail. At last, I could not eat at all. My father sent a servant to bring me to the table. I said, 'I don't want any dinner, I want to see papa.' He took me on his knee and I laid my trouble before him. He was a lawyer. I thought maybe he could tell me what to do. Uncle, of course, did not care. It was against God I had sinned. Papa showed me how Christ had paid for my sin. He bade me promise my Heavenly Father that I would never take so much as a pin that was another's without asking, would never tell a lie, and would never repeat what another said unless I could do it in their own words. So he showed me how to pray, and how to accept Christ's atonement. And then, oh, how the Lord filled my little soul with joy! I ran singing all over the house. From that hour, I began to study my Bible."

So the life of this dear saint goes on, exhaling the sweet fragrance of a holy life.—Southern Churchman.

LET EVERY THING BE DONE DECENTLY AND IN ORDER.

A slipshod and irregular way of doing things is a poor training for a boy. At the Bingham School, near Mebane, N. C., there is a daily inspection of dress, room and person; these, together with other wise rules, are designed to secure neatness, order, punctuality and obedience.

ULCERINA.

The only cure for Chronic Ulcers on the market. The most reliable remedy known for Ring-Worms, Old Sores, Wounds of all kinds and chronic skin diseases. For sale by all druggists. Price 25 cents.

Manufactured by

R. G. ROZIER, M. D.,
LUMBERTON, N. C.

FOR RENT.—A furnished boarding house, well located, ample for forty boarders, at Davidson College. It will suit a family having children to educate, either in the Academy or in the College, or in the Medical College. Address,

REV. J. B. SHEARER,
Davidson, N. C.

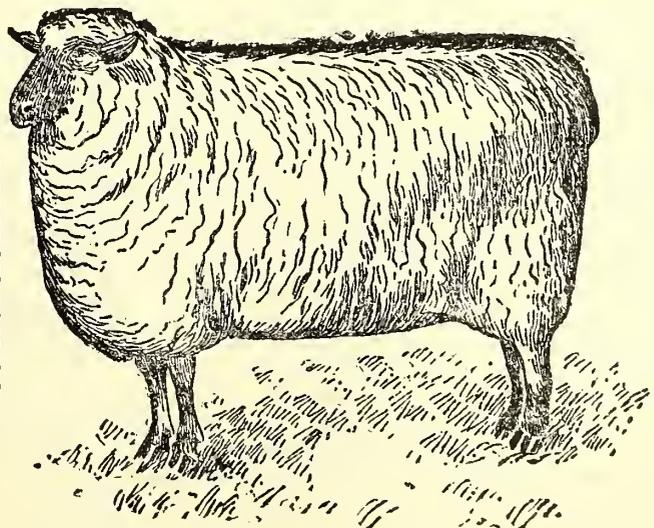

PRIVATE SCHOOL wanted by a Virginia girl, who is a teacher of all common and high school branches, including beginners in music; age 23, size medium, church member; a good disciplinarian and can furnish the best of references by leading educators and ministers in Virginia.

Address Miss Bertha H., Box 176
Mount, Illinois. 3114

WOOL

Snip Direct to the Manufacturer and Save Dealers' Profits.

They pay freight on the wool and guarantee satisfaction.

In exchange for goods they pay 25 cents per pound for unwashed and 35 cents per pound for washed wool.

If you have wool to sell for cash, exchange for goods, or to be manufactured, ship it to CHATHAM MFG. CO., ELKIN, N. C., and you will not regret it.

Deaths.

Blow softly the bugle,
And muffle the drum—
Their battles are over—
God's favor they've won.
—Christene Wood Bullwinkle.

M'LEAN.—John McLean was born in Richmond county, N. C., Aug. 17th, 1834. In his youth he made a public profession of faith in Christ and united with the Presbyterian Church at Marks Creek. When the church was organized at Ida Mills he cast in his lot with that little band of Christians and served them as a ruling elder. He moved his residence to Hamlet shortly before the organization of a Presbyterian Church at that place, and became a member of the new session.

He ever held dear the interests of his Church, and was one of the most regular attendants at preaching and Sunday-school up to the time of his last brief illness.

June the 6th he was called to his reward, bearing his suffering without a murmur, and meeting death without fear.

KEITH.—At his home near Raeford, N. C., July 19, 1903, Duncan M. Keith in his fifty-third year. A child of God from his youth and a ruling elder for many years. A devoted wife and three children mourn the death of their father. "Servant of God well done, enter thy Master's joy."

M'RAE.—Died, June 24th, 1903, at Gulf, N. C., John McRae in the 83rd year of his life.

At a meeting of the session of Gulf Presbyterian Church held in the Office of W. S. Russell, an Elder in said Church, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas God in His Providence did remove from our midst, June 24, 1903 our honored friend, and beloved brother Elder, John McRae in the 83rd year of his age; we, the session of this Church desire to put on record the high esteem and love in which he was held by us, and the Church over which God had made him overseer. A long, useful and honored life has closed on earth, and he has gone to receive the plaudit of the Master; "Well done good and faithful servant,—enter into the joy of thy Lord."

Mr. McRae held many posts of honor and trust during his long life and filled them with credit to himself, and eminent satisfaction to all interested.

Hence he came to be known, as a man who could be trusted and relied upon under any, and all circumstances.

His young manhood was spent in Fayetteville, in the busy days before the civil war; where he was known to a large circle of the best people of the Cape Fear section, who remember him as a man of stirring integrity, and uprightness of character.

The last 20 years of his life was spent at Gulf, with his beloved wife who survives him.

To her and to the large circle of kindred we extend our sympathy and condolence.

And we point all to his blameless life and peaceful death, and doubt not that he died the death of the righteous.

It is ordered that a copy of this paper be sent to the widow, read before the congregation, and spread upon our minutes.

J. M. McIver, Clerk.

The Household.

Summer Salads

By Mrs. Frances C. Kiner.

For young housekeepers who have not yet learned to make salads, these receipts are offered:

Lettuce Salad—Chop coarsely two heads of nice, crisp lettuce, one medium sized cucumber, and one small bunch of green onions. Season well with pepper, salt and vinegar. Cut hard boiled eggs in rings and arrange on top.

Another Lettuce Salad—Cleanse one large, tender head of lettuce and dry well with a cloth, break the large leaves in two pieces, and lay some of them in a glass dish, cut some thin slices of cold boiled chicken breast and lay over this. Then put another layer of leaves and next a layer of sausage, also cut thin. Then lay on the white heart leaves of lettuce, surround with tufts of water-cress, and fancy shapes cut from cooked red beets.

To make the dressing for this salad, put into a cup and mash fine, the yolk of one hard boiled egg, add one teaspoonful made mustard and a desert spoonful of castor sugar. Stir one way and add gradually two tablespoonfuls of good salad oil, a gill of cream, and two spoonfuls of tarragon vinegar. Ornament the top of the salad with the white of the egg cut in rings. Pour the dressing over the salad just before serving.

Cabbage Salad—Stir two beaten eggs, two teaspoonfuls of sugar, a teaspoonful of salt, and a piece of butter the size of an egg together, then add two tablespoonfuls of flour mixed in half a cupful of milk. Stir this mixture into a half pint of hot but not boiling vinegar. Take from the fire and add a small tablespoonful of mustard mixed in a little water. Stir in one quart of finely chopped cabbage and cook a little. This is best cooked before the mustard is added. Serve with meat.

Potato Salad—With three cupfuls of cold boiled potatoes sliced, mix one sliced beet, one braised onion, and four stalks of celery cut in small pieces. Arrange on a dish and pour over the salad four tablespoonful of salad oil and three of vinegar, pepper and salt to taste. Let it get very cold before serving.

Beet Salad—Cook half a dozen young beets until very tender, and slice thin. Lie a dish with crisp white lettuce leaves, and place the beets in a pile in the centre. Mayonnaise dressing may be poured over it, or served in a pitcher with the salad.

Bean Salad—Take cold beans and cold potatoes equal parts, one or two onions, a little slawed cabbage. Chop all fine, season with pepper and salt and a little vinegar, a spoonful or two of home-made mustard. Mix together and serve.

Turnip Salad—Peel and cut the turnips into small pieces, boil about ten minutes in salted water, drain and keep in cold water until wanted, then drain and cover with remoulade sauce.

Carrot Salad Wash and scrape some rich colored carrots. Put into boiling water and cook until tender, cut into thin slices, sprinkle with sugar, add the juice of one large lemon, and a wineglass of fine olive oil. Garnish with thin sliced onions and crisp lettuce leaves.

Tomato Salad—Peel and slice nice ripe tomatoes and let stand for a few minutes to drain off the juice. Set on ice to cool. When ready to serve, cut the slices into small pieces and to one pint of tomatoes add, after it has been prepared, the following dressing: Four tablespoonfuls of vinegar, the yolk of one egg, and enough salt, pepper, and mustard to season highly. Toss the tomatoes and dressing up together and serve very cold.

Celery Salad—Wash and wipe dry six heads of celery, cut into small pieces and put into a salad bowl. Make a dressing with the yolk of one egg, a teaspoonful of mustard, a little salt and pepper, the juice of one lemon, and two tablespoonfuls of water. Beat all together. Pour in drop by drop four ounces of olive oil, to which add a teaspoonful of hot water. Pour this mixture over the celery. Serve cold.

Another Celery Salad—Three bunches of white celery stalks cut into pieces half an inch long. Dust the celery lightly with salt and pepper, and to every half pint of salad allow a half pint of mayonnaise dressing. Mix the celery and dressing together. Heap on a dish and set in a cool place until ready to serve, or it can be served immediately.

Fruit Salad—This is a delicious salad. Slice oranges, bananas, and good ripe pineapples. Use a silver fork and mix the fruit with the juice of two lemons. Arrange in a fancy glass dish in alternate layers of fruit and powdered sugar; put in the refrigerator to get cool before serving.

Nasturtium Salad—To make it, use both leaves and blossoms as will line a fancy glass salad bowl. Arrange the leaves around the outer edge with blossoms alternating and leaning against them. Then throw a few more leaves and blossoms into the salad bowl, and heap with chopped celery, cold beans, potatoes, peas, or other green vegetables, and pour mayonnaise dressing over all. When serving give to each person several each of the leaves and flowers.—New York Observer.

Household Suggestions

From New York Evening Post.

Put away silk waists and ribbons wrapped in brown paper instead of white. If the silk is white, blue paper should be used to prevent yellowing.

Raspberry shortcake is as good as the time-honored strawberry shortcake, the fruit blending perfectly with cream. Raspberry and currant shortcake is also very nice.

A very good upper crust for a deep pie ade by rubbing a tablespoonful of er into three tablespoonfuls of flour stry flour preferred. Use enough water to make a paste.

um camphor burned in a tin dish
a lamp or gas jet is an old-time s of getting rid of mosquitoes.
t care should be taken that the bor does not ignite during the pro-ommon tacks are useful for cleaning fes and bottles. Put a few of these oken ones will do—in the bottle

a little soapy water and shake
ly. The sharp edges will scrape off the stains.

hen lemon juice or other acid has e a white spot on a colored fabric try ying ammonia to neutralize the same.
with a little chloroform, after which original color should return as bright ver.

he old-fashioned art of tatting is bereived. This is a very old form of naking, dating from the sixteenth ury.

at flowers should be placed in the re-erator overnight. In the morning the stems about an inch, and put n, cool water in the vases. Do not nkle them, as a rule, although roses ot seem to be injured in that way.

eel, halve, and core ripe pears, the er the variety the better. Pack them an earthenware jar or a casserole
a little sugar and a cupful of cold er, and bake in a cool oven for sev-hours. They may be eaten hot, but better if allowed to get very cold.
e with whipped cream.

he prettiest of salad sets are reason-in price at the china shops, and are he form of lettuce leaves, marvelously in shape and color. The salad bowl the small bowls for mayonnaise to assed separately are made of several es folded together, while the salad es are simple leaves of lettuce slighturled at the edges.

ed tea is better if allowed to cool re bringing to the table. Of course, should have been poured off of the es as soon as it had properly steeped.
er be so ill-advised as to shake iced in a lemon shaker, as is done in some aurants. The tea is simply ruined his process. The only excuse for it e rapid and very complete cooling ch is achieved.

he very nicest dessert, barring ice
m, for a hot-weather dinner is Bar-uc jelly with cream cheese. Salad le-Duc is served at Ardsley with a adation of crisp lettuce, and the jelly rs the cheese. Bar-le-Duc costs ty-five cents the small jar, and the se not more than ten cents. Thus not an expensive dessert.

offee to be iced should be made very
ig. An allowance of two table-nfuls to each person is not too much.
od recipe calls for the yolk and shell ne egg to be allowed each cup.
the coffee and egg in a bowl, and one cup of cold water. Then add ups of freshly boiled water, and n the fire to boil five minutes.
ver shaved ice in tall glasses le the coffee is hot. Sweeten and whipped cream.

SOUTHERN DENTAL COLLEGE, ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

If you are interested in obtaining a dental education, write for free catalogue of full instruction.

ADDRESS DR. S. W. FOSTER, DEAN, 100 NORTH BUTLER STREET, ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

NOTABLE NEW BOOKS.

A limited number of advanced subscriptions will be accepted at Special Prices for following new books to be issued on or before September 1st, 1903.

Life and Letters of ROBERT LEWIS DABNEY, D. D. LL. D.

By THOMAS CAREY JOHNSON, D. D. LL. D.
Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity Union Theological Seminary, Richmond Va.
A notably interesting book about one of the most remarkable men the South has produced. Interesting alike to historical students of social, political, and industrial conditions of the South, to Southern Veteran [and Statesmen, to students of Theology and Philosophy, and to those who wish to be fully informed about the history and development of the Southern Presbyterian Church.
600 Pages. Cloth Binding, Regular Price $2.50 Net (add 18c for Postage.) To Advance Subscribers $2.00 Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

"APOLOGETICS,"

Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D., LL.D. Prof. of Systematic Theology Louisville Seminary.
Introduction by B. B. WARFIELD, D. D., LL. D., of Princeton Theological Seminary.
A clear, systematic statement of the great fundamental truths of the Christian faith. Adopted as a text book in some of the best Seminaries of the country.
480 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $2.50 Net; Sheep, $3.00 Net [add 18c. Postage]. To advance subscribers, cloth $2.00; sheep, $2.50 postpaid. Limit 500 copies.

PIONEERING IN AFRICA.

By Rev SAMUEL PHILLIPS VERNER, A. B.,
for six years a Missionary of the Southern Presbyterian Church on the Congo.
This book is out of the usual order, and is at once scientific, historical, critical and religious. A notable contribution to the literature about a great continent which is coming more into view every year. Illustrated with original photographs and maps not hitherto published.
400 Pages. Cl. th. Regular Price $2.00 Net [add 15c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.75 Net Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

Christianity and Modern Evolution.

By Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D.
The remarkably original and forcible course of lectures delivered in Louisville, Ky., before very large and highly edified audiences have been revised, and are now presented in an attractive form for the benefit of a larger public.
250 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $1.25 Net [add 10c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.00 net Postpaid. Limit 300 Copies
A complete list of our publications sent on request. Any book in print furnished on short notice. Write us about your wants.

PRESBYTERIAN COMMITTEE OF PUBLICATION, Richmond, Va.

Centre College, 1819. Consolidated 1901.
Central University, 1874
Central University of Kentucky

FOUR COLLEGES—Arts, Law, Medicine, Dentistry.
THREE UNIVERSITY SCHOOLS. Danville, Jackson, Elizabethtown. Total attendance last session, 1,321.
1. Centre College of Kentucky Danville. W. C. Roberts, D. D., LL. D., President; opens Monday, Sept. 9 1903.
2. College of Law, Danville. A. H. Throckmorton, A. M., LL. B., Dean; opens September 9, 1903.
Special Advantages.—Full Faculties of able and experienced men; each a specialist in his department. Complete Equipment, Campus Buildings, Libraries, Laboratories, Apparatus, Gymnasium, Athletic Field. The best moral and religious influences; no saloons; Danville a model college town; expenses very moderate. For full information, address,
L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Vice-President, Danville, Ky.

Oldsmobiles

BEGINNING AUGUST 1st, we can make deliveries in 10 days or less, and the price, with wood wheels, F. O. B. Detroit, will be.....$650.00

Osmond L. Barringer

Distributing Agent
CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA

Our Young People.

Elizabeth's Reward.
Della Hine Mertz.

Elizabeth burst into the sitting room, and throwing down her books and hat on the conch, dropped down beside them, and said to her mother, who sat by the window, sewing.

"Mother, Richard"—one of the high school boys—"has invited me to go to the 'Drill,' and you remember it takes place this afternoon."

Elizabeth was a high school girl, and you all know how the school girls look forward to the drills, and wonder among themselves if they shall be fortunate enough to receive an "invite." While Elizabeth bounced up and down the conch, and talked rapidly to her mother, the telephone bell rang, and, springing from her seat, she hastened to the phone to receive the message, the instrument being on the wall at her right hand.

Mrs. Hill, Elizabeth's mother, was amazed to see the deep scowl which appeared on her daughter's brow, and, leaving her place at the window, hurried to Elizabeth's side, saying with deep concern.

"What can be the trouble, dear, to cause you to frown as you are doing?"

In the meantime, Elizabeth had placed her lips to the mouthpiece of the telephone and answered, "All right," in any but gracious accents. Replacing the receiver, and turning to her mother who still stood by her side, with anxious eyes, Elizabeth answered.

"Robert"—her father's errand boy—"has gone home with a violent headache, and father has telephoned for me to come to his office to take Robert's place, as father will be extra busy, and it is necessary for him to have some one in the office whom he can trust to run errands. It is a shame," she continued, "I do not believe Robert is one bit sick. He has heard of the drill and has played off sick so that he may be able to attend it. I shall go, of course, but it seems too bad! Father has never asked for my assistance before, and why I am needed just at this time, seems hard!"

Mother felt worse than Elizabeth about the matter, and said:

"I will go, dear, in your place."

"You sweet little mother! you shall do no such thing," replied Elizabeth, and put loving arms around the unselfish woman, who was always willing to do the things others shirked.

"Do you think I would allow you to go instead?" replied Elizabeth, not much! Well, good-bye, mumsie; tell Richard when he calls for me why I cannot go with him, please;" and, kissing her mother, she started off, hailed an approaching car, and in a quarter of an hour was standing before her father in his down-town office.

"Well, Pop!" she said cheerfully, noticing with compunction the worried lines in his forehead, "here is your new office boy."

At the sound of the sprightly voice, the furrowed brow smoothed out as if by magic, and the worried, hurried lawyer turned a relieved face to his little daughter, and answered,

"Heigh-ho! I knew my small Mercury would not fail me! I wish you to take these letters to the postoffice. You need not hurry, for I want you to remain until the four o'clock mail is distributed. When you return with the letters and papers, prepare to hustle for the next hour and a half."

Elizabeth took the letters her father handed to her with a smiling face, and Mr. Hill gave his attention to a man who was awaiting his turn of the busy attorney's time.

The smile faded from Elizabeth's countenance as she stood in the hall, waiting for the elevator. She frowned in the lift, on the street, and in the post office, as she sat, dolefully, on a chair, watching for the mail to be placed in the boxes.

While sitting there she thought—as, alas we all do when things do not go our way—of all the unpleasant events of the week, and this was Thursday. To begin with, on Monday her pet canary died; Tuesday she flunked in Latin for the first time that term; Wednesday she had a flare-up with her chum and had lost the beautiful hat pin her Uncle James brought to her from over the sea; to cap the climax, this.

As she walked up the avenue, after receiving her mail, her attention was attracted by a glittering display of jewelry in the window of a goldsmith, and she stopped and gazed at the beautiful bangles. A pin cushion stuck full of hat pins caught her eyes, and she thought, with a sigh, that her birthday and Christmas were a long way off, and that her pin money for weeks and weeks ahead was pledged.

She particularly admired a silver hat pin in the shape of a golf stick, with the picture of a girl in golfing costume in the act of striking the ball, on the end of the pin. How she did desire it! Her thoughts were far away, and when she heard a well known voice say, "A penny for your thoughts," she turned with a start to see Uncle James standing by her side.

"I was looking at the 'pretties,'" she answered, waving her hands toward the show window.

"Yes, but I know you were thinking of some special article. Come, tell me which one," remarked Uncle James.

"The silver hat pin shaped as a golf stick," replied his niece.

"I think you have very good taste," said uncle.

The man and maid entered the store, and the obliging jeweler came forward to wait on them. Uncle James asked to see the pin, and the salesman went to the window and returned with the "golf stick" in his hand.

Uncle James directed the smiling showman to wrap the pin, and when he had done so, and handed the parcel to him, Uncle James presented it to Elizabeth, with an elaborate bow.

Elizabeth's skies were blue once more. She forgot her troubles, and thought this old world of ours was a pretty good sort of a place after all. She thanked her uncle, and, bidding him a cheery farewell, hastened to her father's office, and, as he had foretold, the next hour and a half was a busy time for the

Just a second, please—

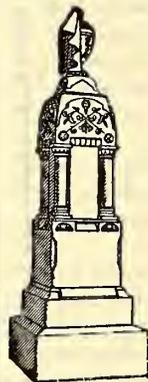

To tell YOU that

Painkiller

(PERRY DAVIS')

is an infallible cure for Cramps, Colic and all
Stomach Complaints.

For 25c.—a large bottle

TUCKER BROS.

Wilmington, N. C.
THE PLACE TO BUY YOUR
MONUMENTS.

HEADSTONES,
and all Cemetery Work,
at Bottom Prices. All
work delivered.

Branch yard at

Goldsboro, N. C.

THE BEST OF EVERYTHING
FOR THE LEAST MONEY

Whatever your clothing wants may be, we ask the privilege of showing you our stock of

CLOTHING, HATS AND
MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.

Give us a call, or if you do not live in Charlotte, we would be glad to send you goods on approval, returnable at our expense. We have been leaders in the Clothing business for years and our reputation for selling the best goods for the least money cannot be excelled.

Give us a trial on your next purchase. We guarantee satisfaction. Suits $10 to $25.

FULL DRESS, TUXEDO AND PRINCE ALBERT SUITS

Always on hand.

Long-Tate Clothing Co.

42 SOUTH TRYON STREET.

Goods sent on approval returnable at our expense.

XANTHINE!
PROF. HERTZ' GREAT GERMAN
HAIR RESTORATIVE

NOTHING LIKE IT.
NOTHING SO GOOD,
AND NEVER WILL BE.

Never fails. Testimonials of unquestionable credibility.

INSIST ON GETTING IT. Take no other. Nothing else will give you satisfaction. If your druggist has not got it, write us. Not a dye, but always restores the beautiful natural color; stops dandruff; promotes growth.

At druggists. Price, $1. Insist on getting it. If your druggist has not got it, send us $1, and we will send you a bottle. Charges prepaid. Highest testimonials. Write us for circulars. XANTHINE COMPANY, Richmond, Va.

little maiden. She ran hither and thither, every once in a while raising her hat—where he had placed the hat pin—to take a comforting feel of the "sporty" gift.

At six o'clock Mr. Hill closed his desk, and said, "Come, daughter, now we shall lie us homeward." When they reached the street he remarked, "In here a moment, Eliabeth," and led the way to the candy store on the corner, and our heroine was further rewarded by being made the recipient of a box of bonbons. Then they hailed a trolley, and were soon in sight of home.

Mother saw them coming, and opened the door to the returning ones before they rang the bell. She ushered them in most graciously, and listened with interest to her daughter's recital of her pleasant encounter with Uncle James, and admired the jaunty hat pin. Then she said:

"I have good news for you, Elizabeth. Richard called and told me to tell you that the drill was postponed until tomorrow afternoon, as General Carnes—the noted and brave soldier who was to review the cadets—was detained. Richard will be on hand tomorrow afternoon to escort you to the parade ground."

A good night's rest restored Robert to his accustomed good health, and he reported in the morning at the office for duty, much to the relief of all the Hills.

In the afternoon, Elizabeth, decked out like the other girls in long streamers of ribbon, in the colors affected by their favorite companies of cadets—in this instance dark blue and white—sat enthroned in state in the grand stand.

How those boys and girls did root and wave canes, also decorated with the brilliant ribbons, when their favored ones appeared.

During the general excitement, Elizabeth's chum, who was present, spoke to her; it flashed through her mind that she could make up her Latin, and it was a very happy girl who recounted her experiences of the day at dinner table that evening, to her father and mother. But, best of all, our little friend had the comfortable feeling of knowing that she had earned her reward.—Chris. Standard.

Something to Keep.

By Jennie H. Tomkins.

"They are always searching for some new thing to 'keep,' these Americans!"

She was a sweet-faced old lady, our Grandma Pentravvers, gentle and dignified, and by no means timid about expressing her opinion. It was an opinion worth hearing, too; and several pairs of eyes were turned upon her, now, as she spoke in her thoughtful, quiet manner.

"To keep?" repeated Genevieve, in a questioning tone, with a puzzled drawing of the eyebrows.

"Yos, dear. I hear constantly of birthdays and anniversaries and memorials, and festival occasions of various sorts, all to be 'kept' with proper zeal and ceremony. As for this Fourth of July, you have been keeping it vigorously for more than four times a fourth."

We all laughed. We realized how truly the dear old lady spoke.

"But, grandma, isn't it right to keep the Fourth, and—and—other days?" questioned one of the children.

"Quite right, my dear. I would not have it otherwise. But I have been thinking very seriously, lately, of one occasion, more important than all others to be kept, and yet which so few of us make any real effort to keep; which we show no enthusiasm about celebrating."

We all gazed at grandma in surprise, wondering what event in history we had forgotten.

"One of our country's anniversaries, grandma?" asked Tom, looking up, as if to say, "I shan't be caught."

"One of our country's, one of all countries," the very oldest and grandest and best of events which brighten the pages of history, and yet, it is so neglected, so almost scorned and forgotten, that sometimes I fear we shall be punished for our careless indifference."

"Why, grandma! I don't see what you can mean," said Genevieve. But a light began to glow in the faces of the older people.

"Of course," said Tom, slowly, "we don't each one of us attend all the celebrations and parades and things on the different birthdays, Lincoln's or Washington's. But we all remember the days, and know they ought to be kept."

"Christmas, Thanksgiving, New Year's Day," repeated Alice to herself in a musing tone, as if trying to remember what anniversary could be so neglected as grandma appeared to think.

"The churches, the President, the governor, these are the authorities who command or advise the keeping of the days you have mentioned. But One higher than any of these has bidden us 'Remember to keep.'"

"Oh, Sunday," cried the children, as grandma paused.

"Yes, my dears," replied the old lady, impressively, "I have been astonished and grieved to see how carelessly people regard the keeping of this, the greatest of all days; while all other and less important occasions are celebrated enthusiastically, and some people are eager to seek out some heretofore unmarked event, and stamp it for general celebration. All great men are honored; renowned battles are kept in mind, our brave soldiers and sailors have eloquent tributes paid to their memories; birthdays of nations and of men are zealously celebrated, but the one Day which God has commanded us to remember to keep holy, is slighted, neglected, made an occasion for worldly pastime and amusement set apart for frivolous and boisterous pleasure or for selfish and idle ease. I see boys and girls in this Christian country to whom God's days seems to mean only a day for wearing their best clothes and having no lessons. I see them racing, swinging, bicycling, lounging with not a thought of the holiness of the day. These are not heathen children, they are the children of Christian parents. Some of them even go to Sunday-school. But that does not atone for sins committed during the remainder of the day. Do not think I am harsh and puritanical, my dears. But it makes me sad to see how we keep all other days, and forget to honor God's day. It is not our day and yet, how ready we are to make it ours, and to fill it with our own

The Eyes of School Children

Many parents allow their children to go through school half equipped for the work.

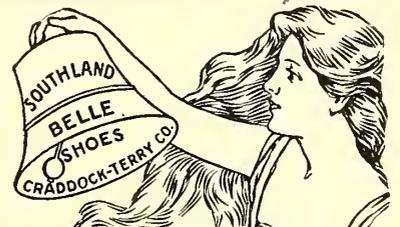

Defective eyes do not show in children as plainly as in grown people. Yet defects are present then if ever. They probably never know what it is to have perfect sight; thus they know no better, since there is no soreness and inflammation.

Don't wait for such signs.

Examination free

Dr. J. H. Spilman,

22 West Trade Street,
Blair's Drug Store, Charlotte.

THE COUNTRY IS RINGING WITH
THE PRAISES OF THE

Southland Belle Shoes

FAMOUS
BECAUSE MERITORIOUS.
THE BEST IN AMERICA FOR $1.50
TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE.

IF YOUR DEALER DOES NOT CARRY THEM, A POSTAL CARD TO US WILL TELL YOU
WHERE YOU CAN GET THEM.

CRADDOCK-TERRY CO.
LEADING SHOE MANUFACTURERS
OF THE SOUTH.
LYNCHBURG-----VA.

Medical College of Virginia.

Established 1838.

Departments of Medicine, Dentistry and Pharmacy

The sixty sixth session will commence on September 29 1903. Well equipped Laboratories, splendid Hospital facilities and abundance of clinical material afford excellent opportunities for practical work.

Tuition fees and living expenses are very moderate. For announcement and further information, address,
CHRISTOPHER TOMPKINS, M. D., Dean,
Richmond, Va.

plans and pleasures. When I see—as I have seen recently—such preparations, such enthusiasm, such universal and unwearyed zeal in keeping our country's Independence Day—which is quite right and good,—then I wonder why we do not 'Remember' God's day 'to keep it holy.'—N. Y. Observer.

A Good Investment.

John and James were twins fourteen years old. Their father was very wealthy. On every birthday they expected a rich present from him. A week before they were fourteen they were talking over what they most wanted.

"I want a pony," said James.

"And what do you want, John?" asked his father.

"A boy."

"A boy!" gasped his father.

"Yes, sir. It doesn't cost much more to keep a boy than it does a horse, does it?"

"Well, no," replied his father, still very much surprised.

"And I can get a boy for nothing, to begin with."

"Yes," replied the father, hesitatingly, "I suppose so."

"Why, papa, I know so. There are lots of 'em running around without any home."

"Oh, that's what you are up to, is it? Want to take a boy and bring him up, do you?"

"Yes, sir; it would be a great deal better than the St. Bernard dog you were going to buy me, wouldn't it? You see, my boy could go about with me, play with me, and do all kinds of nice things for me—and I could do nice things for him, too, couldn't I? He could go to school, and I could help him with his examples and Latin."

"Examples and Latin? God bless the boy, what is he aiming at?" and Judge Roding wiped the sweat from his bald head.

"I know," laughed James. He wants to adopt old drunken Pete's son."

"Yes, papa; 'cause he is running about the streets as dirty and ragged as he can be, and old Pete don't care a cent about him, and he's a splendid boy, father. He's just as smart as he can be, only he can't go to school half the time, 'cause he hasn't any thing decent to wear."

"How long do you want to keep him?"

"Until he gets to be a man, father."

"And turns out such a man as old Pete?"

"No danger of that, father. He has signed the pledge not to drink intoxicants, nor swear, nor smoke, and he has helped me, father, for when I have wanted to do such things he told me his father was once a rich man's son, and just as promising as James and I."

"Do you mean to tell me that you ever feel like doing such things as drinking, swearing, smoking and loafing?" asked his father, sternly.

"Why, papa, you don't know half the temptations boys have nowadays. Why, boys of our set swear and smoke and drink right along when nobody sees them."

"Don't let me ever catch you doing such things."

A Perfect Laxative is one which is palatable, pleasant to take and can be relied upon to act gently, but thoroughly; cleansing the entire system of all impurities. Such a remedy is Mozley's Lemon Elixir. It is a pleasant lemon tonic, acceptable to the most delicate stomach, and a thoroughly effective laxative, acting upon the bowels, liver, and kidneys, without the slightest unpleasantness.

MOZLEY'S LEMON HOT DROPS are without an equal for coughs, colds, sore throat and bronchitis. Sold by all druggists.

Mozley's Lemon Elixir.

Statement

Stuyvesant Insurance Company of New York.

Condition December 31st, 1902, as shown by Statement Filed.

Capital, paid in cash.....	$ 200,000 00
Amount Ledger Assets Dec. 31st previous year.....	233,424 84
Income—From Policy-holders, $170,976 03; Miscellaneous, $91 875 31 .....	262,351 34
Disbursements—To Policy-holders, $91,677 11; Miscellaneous, $ 71,570 15; Total.....	163,247 26
Fire Risks—Written or renewed during year, $17,128,339 00; In force.....	9,852 106 00
Marine and Island Risks—Written or renewed during year, $877, 779 00; In force.....	182,500 00

Assets

Value of Real Estate (less amount of encumbrances).....	$ 15,000 00
Mortgage Loans on Real Estate.....	14,000 00
Book Value of Bonds and Stocks.....	238,740 78
Interest and Rents due and accrued.....	1,451 25
Cash in Home Office and deposited in Banks.....	13,931 88
Agents' balance, representing business written subsequent to October 1, 1902.....	50,165 48
Agents' balance, representing business written prior to October 1, 1902 .....	33 70
All other Assets, detailed in statement.....	1,739 36
Total.....	395,489 45
Less Assets, not admitted.....	2,654 06
Total admitted Assets.....	392,835 39

Liabilities

Losses and claims unpaid.....	17,104 58
Unearned Premiums.....	81,230 34
All other Liabilities as detailed in statement.....	17,514 19
Total Liabilities as to Policy-holders.....	115,849 11
Capital paid up.....	200,000 00
Surplus.....	16,786 28
Total Liabilities.....	332,435 39

No Business in North Carolina in 1902—Just Entered the State

President, A. K. Pierson. Secretary, C. A. Garthwaite.
 Home Office, 76 and 78 William St., New York City.
 General Agent for Service, Insurance Commissions, Raleigh, N. C.
 Business Manager for North Carolina, From Home Office
 State of North Carolina,
 Insurance Department,
 Raleigh, June 1, 1903

I, James R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct abstract of the statement of the Stuyvesant Insurance Company, of New York City, filed with this Department, showing the condition of said Company on the 31st day of December, 1902.
 Witness my hand and official seal, the day and date above written.
 JAS. R. YOUNG,
 Insurance Commissioner.

Mid Summer Cut Price Sale
 of

Furniture, Carpets,
 Pianos and Organs,

Wonderful Bargains can be had at this Store during this Cut Price Sale.

Everything Without Reserve is reduced in Price to the Lowest Price to sell the Goods and make room for the Changes now going on in our store. Come and See Us in Person, but if you can't come, you will get some reduction if you order by mail. Don't fail to grasp this opportunity to save money.

Parker-Gardner Company.
 CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA.

"Not now, father, I think, for I am trying to surrender all—every vice, every bad habit, unnecessary pleasures. I don't see how I could enjoy a dog or pony when I know a nice boy suffering for some of the good things I enjoy."

"You may have the boy, John, and may God bless the gift."

And God blessed the gift. John Roding grew up to be a much better man because of the almost constant companionship of drunken Pete's son, and as for the drunkard's boy, every thing he touched seemed to prosper. John and James' mother said it was because God teaches us, "When your father and mother forsake you, then will the Lord take you up." The Lord had taken up drunken Pete's son, and he could not help prospering.

Pete's son not only lifted up his own fallen family, but became as much of a prop for Judge Roding's family. His delight was "in the law of the Lord." He was like a tree planted by the rivers of water, and whatsoever he did prospered.—National Advocate.

DON'T HEAR THE NOISES.

The class rooms at the Bingham school, near Mebane, N. C., are separate from each other. Hence, the necessary noises of one are not heard at the others, and the school work can go on in a quiet and uninterrupted manner.

About Our Birds.

"No one should rob a nest unless he would like to have his own home torn away from him. Even to birds born in cages, like the canary, there comes great torture. For every canary well kept, a dozen are neglected and become a wretched sight to behold. The example is a bad one to set, even where these birds are properly treated. Can a bird—a winged thing—be properly treated in a cage?"

"It is very cruel to shut up birds in close rooms; the air which human beings often manage to breathe is misery to them. They want constant fresh air to keep them in health."

"Birds were not created for trimming bonnets and hats; how can people like to have the remains of their little dead bodies, after they have been killed with great barbarity most likely, stuck on to their clothes, or like to make their heads into a grave-yard for small birds? Neither did the Heavenly Father form them for amusing folk who shut them up in cages, where they sing, it is true, but only because they have no other way of making their sorrows known. People fancy these songs, which tell of a captive's longings for the green woods, to be gay, but the warble of a caged bird to anyone who is not hard-hearted is the saddest sound almost that can be heard; because it speaks of man's selfishness and tyranny over God's works."

"Without birds it would be impossible for man to live on the earth at all. Let us think why: Our water would be unfit to drink, and the air choked up by flying crowds of flies. Certain tribes of birds keep the air clear of millions of small winged insects, which, if unchecked, would soon make it unfit to breathe."

"Swallows are the most useful of birds to clear the air of flies which fill the air, and would also overcrowd the water with their offspring if left alone. The sparrows do much towards keeping the gutters, pavements and yards around houses clean and wholesome; they pick up morsels and scraps too small to be noticed by other eyes, which would, in time, breed illness."—Our Dumb Animals.

UNDER THE CARE OF THE TEACHERS.

At the Bingham school, near Mebane, N. C., the teachers live and sleep in the dormitories with the boys, boarding in the dining hall and playing on the athletic field with them, the Principal living nearby with his family. Thus, at night, the health, morals and manners of the students are under the care and supervision of the faculty. Catalogue will be sent upon request to Principal Gray, Mebane, N. C.

Ward Seminary for Young Ladies, Nashville, Tenn.

"An ideal Christian home." Seminary and special courses in Language, Literature, History, Science, Music, Art, Elocution. Faculty, 30. Certificate admits to Wellesley, Baltimore Woman's College. Nashville affords unusual advantages in Lectures, Recitals, and opportunities for practical education. Patronage 37th year, 22 States; enrollment in boarding department largest in history of the Institution. 38th year begins Sept. 24. Mild, equable climate. For Catalog R address J. D. BLANTON, Box 4.

OPIUM COCAINE AND WHISKY
 Habits Cured at my Sanatorium, in 80 days. Hundreds of references. 25 years a specialty. Book on Home Treatment sent FREE. Address B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

EVERY SUFFERER SHOULD KNOW

=KADOK=

The Pleasant tonic Headache Cure. Superior to Others and Free from Opaites Try a package, Price 10c.

At all Druggists or sent prepaid by L. Richardson Drug Company, Wholesale and manufacturing Druggists, GREENSBORO, N. C.

The Worth Co.

SUCCESSORS TO

WORTH & WORTH,

Wholesale Grocers

and Commission Merchants

HANDLE—COTTON AND NAVAL STORES.

SELL—GENERAL GROCERIES, FARM SUPPLIES, LIME, CEMENT, NAILS, HAY AND GRAIN.

Best Terms and Lowest Prices.

WILMINGTON N. C.

HAMPDEN-SIDNEY COLLEGE.

The 128th Session will open Wednesday, September 9th, 1903.

Four courses of instruction leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., B. L. and A. M. Nine professors and instructors. Healthful location. Moral surroundings. For catalogue apply to

RICHARD McILWAINE, President, Hampden-Sidney, Va

CLARKTON MALE INSTITUTE.

A MILITARY SCHOOL,

(UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE PRESBYTERY OF WILMINGTON).

Prepares Boys for college and for life. Board $8 per month. Tuition $27 for nine months. Write for catalog.

R. C. DEAL, Principal.

J. J. HUTSON, Commandant.

Truthful, Pure, Manly Boys for The Fishburne School, Waynesboro, Virginia.

English, Classical and Military. Experienced teachers. Thorough work. Superior location. Presbyterian training. Write for catalogue.

JAS. A. FISHBURNE, A. B., Principal.

Raleigh Marble Works.

COOPER BROS., Props.

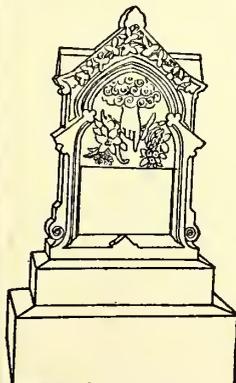

RALEIGH, N. C.

MONUMENTS,

Tablets, Headstones, Iron Fences.

We Pay the Freight.

Please mention Standard.

Write for our New Catalogue

"Oh, won't you please let me stay, and I will be so good? I won't eat hardly anything, and I promise you I won't get in your way a moment if you will only keep me. Please do!"

There were no signs of yielding at first in the stern face that looked down at the pleading child.

Ten years before Mr. Janvier had buried his only son, and since then he had been a cold, hard man, who seemed to have become embittered toward all boys by his loss. All his love was given to his little four-year-old flaxen-haired daughter, but to other children his manner was repellent, and he never encouraged a child to speak to him.

Dorothy's little friends wondered sometimes that she was not afraid of the father who seemed so grim and cross even to her; but Dorothy had learned to trust the love to which he rarely gave expression.

Mr. Janvier's first impulse was to sternly refuse the boy who pleaded so earnestly to be allowed to remain, but something in the dark eyes made him think of his dead son, and his determination faltered.

"Get in with you, then," he said rather roughly.

And Francois sprang into the wagon, too overjoyed by the permission to care how ungraciously it was given.

Mrs. Janvier was surprised when she saw her husband drive up to the door with a boy, after all his refusals to have anything to do with the invitation to the poor children, but she wisely made no comment upon his change of purpose.

Those were very happy days that followed for little Francois.

Dorothy was charmed with her little playmate, and did her best to make him happy, and Francois thought he had never seen anything half so lovely as this dear girl, with her sunny curls and blue eyes.

The two children spent many pleasant hours together, and the one cloud that overhung Francois' happiness was the thought that each day brought nearer the day of his departure.

Fresh Air, the boys called him, not understanding the French name, and the little fellow answered quite as readily to this name as if it had been his own, and smiled when Dorothy used it, as she often did. One morning, Francois and Dorothy were on their way to the village on an errand for Mrs. Janvier, and they were walking along side by side, so absorbed in the fluffy dandelion heads by which they were telling the time of day, after the fashion of country children, that neither of them saw a cloud of dust a little distance down the road, as a crowd of men and boys came running along, shouting and waving their hands in warning.

Francois was the first to hear the shouts.

"See!" he cried. "Something must be the matter. Those men are calling something to us. Look! there is a dog running!"

"Mad dog! mad dog!"

They could hear what the shouts were now, and, young as Dorothy was, she knew enough of the danger that threatened them to turn deathly pale.

Francois looked about him for some way by which they might escape.

High, prickly hedges lined each side of the road, and a slender sapling which grew near was the only means by which one of them could get out of the dog's way.

To Francois' honor be it said that not once did the thought of making his own escape and leaving Dorothy occur to him.

"Run, Dorothy!" he cried, seizing her by the hand.

He lifted her in his arms as soon as they reached the tree, and with all his strength held her up so that she could grasp the lower branches of the tree and pull herself up in to a place of safety.

Light as her weight was, the slender branches were hardly strong enough to sustain it, and Francois saw that there was only room for one in that refuge.

Dorothy was safe, and, terrified as he was, Francois still felt a strange sense of happiness.

On came the panting dog, followed closely by his pursuers, and trembling Francois thought there could be no escape from those cruel teeth.

He shut his eyes as the dog came nearer and nearer, and the words of a prayer his mother had taught him before she died rose to his lips.

In another moment those sharp teeth would be fastened in him, and then—Ah, Francois had heard what happened to people who had been bitten by a mad dog, and it was no wonder that his heart seemed almost to stop beating.

The shouting came nearer, and he could hear the labored panting of the dog.

"Hold fast Dorothy!" he cried, with white lips.

But the dog did not bite him. Could it be that the mad animal had gone past, after all?

Francois opened his eyes to see the dog speeding down the road, keeping a course as straight as an arrow, while the men in pursuit raised a ringing cheer as they saw the little hero was safe. Brave Little Fresh Air!

When, a short distance further, the dog had been killed, the men came back to gather around the trembling children, and praise Francois for his courage and unselfishness. Mr. Janvier drove up with blanched face, which grew radiant with delight as he clasped little Dorothy unharmed to his heart.

He heard the whole story from the men, and then, putting both children in the wagon, he drove them home, lest the story should reach the mother before Dorothy herself, and give her the moments of agonized suspense that Mr. Janvier himself had endured.

Can you not guess the remainder of the story? When the rest of the fresh air excursion went back to the hot city, Francois was not among them.

There would always be plenty of room in the brown farmhouse for the brave boy who protected Dorothy at the risk of his own life.

The lonely little fellow is no longer an uncared-for waif, but a member of a home circle, where he fills the place that had been vacant so long.—Golden Days.

The Best Traveling Companion

is Hicks' Capudine. Prevents and cures headache, sea-sickness, colds, grip, etc. Take a bottle with you when you start.

AT ALL DRUGGISTS, 10c., 25c., 50c.

Handsomest Stock in Carolinas Men's and Boys' Underwear

During no former Summer have we disposed of as much Underwear as the present season—the demand has been enormous—and at no time was there ever displayed here such magnificent varieties of styles, colors and sizes, consisting of Baloriggan, Lisle and the finest of Silk, at prices ranging from

50 Cents to $20.00

Underwear that is cool, comfortable, perfect fitting, with lasting qualities. You cannot buy anything better for the price. It don't pay to buy shoddy underwear at any price—hence we keep only the best.

Ed. W. Mellon Co.

The Normal and Collegiate Institute, FOR YOUNG WOMEN. ASHEVILLE, N. C.

The Fall Term Opens September 16, 1903.

1. A normal course for the thorough training of Teachers under instructors from best Normal Schools
  2. A Commercial Course, including Stenography, Typewriting, Bookkeeping, etc.
  3. A Course of Domestic Science, including (a) Scientific Cooking, (b) Draughting, Cutting, Fitting, and Making of Garments.
  4. An admirable Musical Department has been provided under trained and experienced teachers.
- Systematic study of the Bible in all Departments.
Terms for Board and Tuition in any of the Departments, $50.00 per term, or $100.00 per year.
For Catalogue, address REV. THOMAS LAWRENCE, D. D., Asheville, N. C.

All In a Dream

It all happened the night after the white kitten had the fit. Peter would never have believed it had he not heard it with his own ears.

"Ah dear," said the white kitten, "how my head does ache. I don't believe I'll ever be well again."

"Don't you worry, my dear," said the black cat, "in a day or two you'll feel all right. Why, when I was a kitten I had fits all the time, and now, just look at me, see how sleek and fat I am," and complacently the black cat licked her soft sides.

"Any way," continued the white kitten, "it was not my fault. If that boy Peter had fed me as he should have done, I would not have stolen the cook's beef and made myself sick eating it. Why, I hadn't had a mouthful to eat but what I had picked up, for twenty-four hours. I think it's a dying shame for boys to have pets, anyway, and not tend to them."

"I do, too," said Mngs, the fat little poodle. "Though I've got nothing to complain of in the feeding line—for I must confess Peter gives me the best of everything to eat—I do think I might have more attention given me personally. I was mortified to death the other day to hear a stranger speak of me as that 'dirty little poodle,' and 'what do you think, the fleas almost eat me up. I can't sleep at night for them, and I'm afraid, though I wouldn't have you breathe it for the world, that Peter's mother thinks I put them on the baby. You know I love that baby dearly, and wouldn't put a flea on it for anything if I could help it. And I could help it, too, if Peter would only give me a good soap-suddy washing every now and then. But dear me, that boy never thinks of such a thing."

"He's too busy having a good time playing," said the goat, "to think about us poor creatures. I do believe though," continued the goat, "he treats me worse than any of you."

"Indeed!" said the lame Rooster.

"What does he do to you, pray?" asked the black cat.

"Why," said the goat, "he hitches me to his wagon and drives me around in the hot sun till I feel as if I shall fall in my tracks. He often forgets to feed me, or to give me water. If I weren't the most patient of creatures I'd run away with him and smash his wagon all to pieces."

"I don't think Peter means to be cruel," said the white rabbit, "he just doesn't think."

"Of course," sneered the old rooster, "you'll take up for him. You're his pet—anybody with half an eye can see that."

"But you needn't pride yourself," said the little Bantam, "on being his pet long. We all were pets when he first got us."

"Yes, indeed," said the Ducks and the cute little Guinea-pigs. "That boy's father gets him anything he takes a fancy to and how long is he amused with his pets?"

"Till something new comes along," said the Bantam.

"That's so," said the grey goose. "I used to be a great pet, but now, that I am getting old, he thinks nothing of me. Why, he actually tried to sell me to the neighbors yesterday. But I'm thankful to say, they wouldn't give what he asked for me."

"I wish he would sell me," said mother duck, "to somebody who would treat me like a feeling creature. Why, what do you think he and that boy Tom who comes to see him so often, did last Sunday? While all the family were off at church, they put my little ducklings in a tub of water and tried to make them swim. As if boys could teach ducks how to swim!"

"Why that's nothing to what they did to us," said the other ducks. "They ran around the yard with us just as fast as they could and threw us up in the air to see us fly. And then as if that were not enough, they climbed upon the garden fence and took turns about throwing us into a large tub of water while Zeke the cook's boy, stood below and fished us up as fast as we were thrown in."

"The wretches!" cried good mother duck, "I'd like to get hold of them for a little while!"

"So would I!" cried the lame rooster.

"And I!" cried the grey goose.

"And I!" cried one and all the pets, till there arose such a clatter that little boy Peter couldn't sleep one minute longer. But when he ran to the window to see what was the matter, he found it was only mother duck urging her little ones to wake up before day dawned in the east.

Mary Callum Wiley.

VERY IMPORTANT STUDIES.

There are three courses which ought to be taught in every school in the South. All of them are taught and emphasized at the Bingham School, near Mebane, N. C. These studies are Bible, Penmanship and Physical Culture. The catalogue of this institution can be obtained by a postal card request to Preston Lewis Gray, B. L., Mebane, N. C.

SKIN TROUBLE CURED.

There's no other remedy like Tetterine. None that compare with it in the treatment of tetter, ring worm, erysipelas and all other skin diseases. A cooling, soothing, healing salve, easy to apply and immediately beneficial. Thousands of people have been cured by its use. Nothing else as good. If your druggist does not keep it, send 50c to J. T. Shuptrine, Savannah, Ga., who will send a box postpaid.

THEY THINK HIGHLY OF THE BOARD.

At the Bingham School, near Mebane, N. C., a good and abundant fare is furnished. A prominent patron from a personal experience writes: "The quantity and quality of the food you serve is all that can be desired." A student writes: "The board furnished is most excellent." Another says: "My gain is not a miracle at all when the variety of food served by the boarding department is considered."

OPENING OF THE A. AND M. COLLEGE.

The State Agricultural and Mechanical College will open Thursday, September 3. Entrance examinations will be held at the College the day before. The capacity of the College has been recently increased; but the demand for admission is still very large. Students desiring rooms will have to be present promptly the first day; and a dollar extra is charged all who are late. The college is usually full by night of the first day, and the program of work is carried on with the precision and punctuality of clock-work. Young men who are training for industrial careers are thus taught that system and promptness are the first requisites of business. If a boy is late in entering the A. and M. College, you may know he is a new student. Many of the old students return even a week in advance to review their studies and get a good start.

Southern States Trust Company

Capital,
$200,000.

GEORGE STEPHENS, President.
T. F. FRANKLIN, V.-President.
W. H. WOOD, Treasurer.

A Co-worker

This is what your money
becomes when you put it
on deposit in our

Savings Department.

We pay four per cent. interest
and compound it quarterly.

What a Freight Master Did.

An engine bumped against some empty cars in the early dawn of a winter morning. A boy who had been asleep in one of them was thrown, dazed and bewildered, against the door, which he had pulled to when he crawled into the car the night before.

Just then a brakeman thrust his head into the car, and reached for his jacket, which he supposed was hanging where he had left it. He was somewhat surprised to find a boy on it, and took it from him without ceremony.

"Now get out of here!" he said, thrusting the boy from the door. "If I catch you in one of these cars again, I'll give you to the policeman!"

"What's he been up to, Bill?" said a man who was putting freight into the next car.

"Up to my coat," he said, giving it a vigorous shake as he walked off.

The boy looked dirty and dejected, as he limped along by the side of the track. The man who had spoken called after him:

"Hello, there! Do you want a job?"

The boy turned back quickly.

"If you'll help me load these firkins, I'll pay you for it; but you'll have to work spry."

The prospect of a little money brightened the boy, and he set to work in earnest, though he was stiff and cramped and hungry.

"Do you live around here?"

The boy shook his head.

"In case we should want to hire a boy about your size, can you give me any recommendations as to your character?"

The boy's face flushed, but he made no answer. The man watched him narrowly, and when the car was loaded, handed him twenty-five cents.

"We're short of hands in the freight room. Do you think you'd like the job?"

"Yes, I would like it."

The boy's face was almost painful in its eagerness, as he followed the man into the freight room.

"Now," said the freight man, seating himself on a box, "we'll have a bit of a talk before we get to business. I don't know anything about you except that you are cold and hungry; you look like that. But I think it's likely you've got into some scrape, for if you hadn't, you wouldn't be loafing about stations and sleeping in freight cars. I'm not going to ask you whether you have done anything wrong, but I'm going in and ask whether you've got a mother.

"No, she's dead."

"Got any father, or folks that belong to you?"

"I've got an uncle and some cousins."

"Well, now, if you had a mother, I'd send you to her in no time, for there is nothing that a mother won't forgive; but uncles and cousins are different. If I recommend you at the office, they'll take you; but mind, if I do it, I'm going to watch you as a cat does a mouse. You'll have to spend the evenings and Sundays with me. I went wrong myself when I was no older than you are," lowering his voice. "And if it hadn't been for my mother—well, that was a long time ago.

You've got switched upon the wrong track I am very sure, and as you haven't got any mother to help you get into the right one, God helping me, I'll do it, if you'll let me. Preaching isn't in my line, but there's just one thing you don't want to forget, and that is the good Father is giving you a chance now to get where you can do right and feel right. Are you going to take it?"

The boy answered faintly that he would try. He was taken into the freight yard, and was put under his new friend's eye constantly, and it was not long before the man had so won his confidence that he told him his story.

There was trouble and dishonesty connected with it, but for two years the lad proved himself faithful and trustworthy in his new occupation. He was then advanced to a more responsible position, but there was something almost pathetic in his devotion to him who had befriended him, and in his respect for the religion he professed.

Here was practical Christianity worthy of any man's emulation.—Youth's Companion.

BUSINESS MEN DISLIKE A POOR HANDWRITING.

They do not like to employ a boy who writes a slow, cramped and awkward hand. They want a clear, plain and rapid style of penmanship that can be easily read. This art is taught and emphasized at the Bingham School, near Mebane, N. C., a catalogue of which can be easily obtained by writing Principal Gray, Mebane, N. C.

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE.

FOR THE CURE OF

LIQUOR, OPIUM, COCAINE AND OTHER DRUG ADDICTIONS,
NERVE EXHAUSTION AND TOBACCO HABIT.

GREENSBORO, N. C.

This is the only Keeley Institute in North Carolina, and owing to its beautiful and healthy location, its elegant buildings and attractive environments, its well supplied table and skillful management it presents to the unfortunate a perfect asylum for rest and complete restoration.

If you have a friend afflicted with any of the above addictions, write for their illustrated Hand-Book, entitled "THE NEW MAN." Address,

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE,
Greensboro, N. C.

King's Mountain Military Academy,

Yorkville, South Carolina.

A high-grade school with a first-class patronage. Teachers and cadets live together as one family. A real home school. Stands for the best and nothing but the best. Faculty all active Christian men, who live in closest contact with the cadets.

Col. W. G. STEPHENSON, Supt.

North Carolina Medical College Davidson, N. C.

Three years' course to graduate. Sixteen Professors and Teachers. Clinical instruction given in Davidson and Charlotte. Eighteen graduates this year made fine records before N. C. and S. C. Boards. Address

J. P. MUNROE, M. D., President, Davidson, N. C.

Private rooms in the Hospital.

What Protection Means.

On March 6, 1873, the Hon. Armistead Burwell, of Charlotte, N. C., who is well known throughout the State of North Carolina, was insured with the Aetna Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, Conn., under Renewable Term Policy No. 95,253 for $4,000. Annual Premium $64.76. When the first term of ten years expired in 1883 the Company renewed the policy for the next ten years at the

ORIGINAL RATE, WITHOUT A NEW EXAMINATION.

and have renewed this policy respectively in 1893 and 1903 without increase of rate of premium and without re-examination. If Mr. Burwell lives till 1913 he will have been insured for forty years at an annual cost of $16.19 per $1,000.

This Renewable Term Insurance was originally introduced by the Aetna. The "OLD AETNA" LEADS; the other companies follow.

OVER ONE MILLION DOLLARS have been paid out in death claims in this State during the last ten years.

For rates, etc., apply to

J. D. BOUSHALL, Mgr,
RALEIGH, N. C.

SEABOARD

AIR LINE RAILWAY.

In Effect November 23rd, 1902

Vestibuled Limited Trains.

DOUBLE DAILY SERVICE Between New York

Tampa, Atlanta, New Orleans and points

SOUTH and WEST.

SOUTHWARD.

	Daily No. 31.	Daily No. 27.
Lv New York, P. R. R.....	12 55 p m	12 10 a m
Lv Philadelphia, ".....	3 29 p m	7 20 a m
Lv Baltimore, ".....	5 45 p m	9 34 a m
Lv Washington, W. S. Ry..	7 00 p m	10 41 a m
Lv Richmond, S. A. L. Ry..	10 37 p m	2 15 p m
Lv Petersburg, ".....	11 20 p m	2 53 p m
Lv Norlina, ".....	1 55 a m	5 18 p m
Lv Henderson, ".....	2 28 a m	5 41 p m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	4 15 a m	6 58 p m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	6 16 a m	8 50 p m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	7 35 a m
Lv Columbia, †.....	10 25 a m	12 20 a m
Ar Savannah, ".....	2 35 p m	4 55 a m
Ar Jacksonville, ".....	7 00 p m	9 15 a m
Ar Tampa, ".....	6 45 a m	6 00 p m
	No. 33.	No. 41.
Lv New York, N. Y. P. & N.	† 7 55 a m	8 55 p m
Lv Philadelphia, ".....	10 16 a m	11 21 p m
Lv New York, O. D. S. S. Co.	† 3 00 p m
Lv Baltimore, B. S. P. Co.		† 6 30 p m
Lv Wash'ton, N. & W. S. B.		30 p m m
Lv Portsmouth, S. A. L. Ry	9 05 p m	9 25 a m
Lv Weldon, ".....	11 45 p m	11 55 a m
Lv Norlina, ".....	1 55 a m	1 35 p m
Lv Henderson, ".....	2 28 a m	2 02 p m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	4 15 a m	3 45 p m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	6 16 a m	6 18 p m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	7 40 a m	9 45 p m
Lv Wilmington ".....		3 20 p m
Ar Charlotte, ".....	10 33 a m	10 32 p m
Lv Chester, ".....	10 30 a m	12 5 a m
Lv Greenwood, ".....	12 37 p m	3 25 a m
Lv Athens, ".....	2 52 p m	5 58 a m
Ar Atlanta, †.....	4 00 p m	7 35 a m
Ar Augusta, C. & W. C.....	5 40 p m
Ar Macon, C. of Ga.....	7 20 p m	11 35 a m
Ar Montgom'ry, A. & W. P.	9 20 p m	6 25 p m
Ar Mobile, L. & N.....	2 55 a m
Ar New Orleans, L. & N.....	7 25 a m
Ar Nashville, N. C. & St. L.	1 30 a m	6 55 p m
Ar Memphis ".....	4 15 p m	8 20 a m

NORTHWARD.

	Daily No. 32.	Daily No. 38.
Lv Memphis, N C & St L....	12 45 n' n	8 00 p m
Lv Nashville, ".....	9 30 p m	9 30 a m
Lv New Orleans, L & N....	8 10 p m
Lv Mobile, ".....	12 40 a m
Lv Montgomery, A & W P..	6 45 a m	1 00 p m
Lv Macon, C of Ga.....	8 00 a m	4 20 p m
Lv Augusta, C & W C.....	10 05 a m
Lv Atlanta, † S A L Ry.....	12 00 n' n	8 00 p m
Ar Athens, ".....	2 57 p m	11 23 p m
Ar Greenwood, ".....	5 15 p m	1 58 a m
Ar Chester, ".....	7 17 p m	4 15 a m
Lv Charlotte, ".....	7 27 p m	5 01 m
Lv Wilmington ".....	3 20 p m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	10 40 p m	7 50 a m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	11 33 p m	8 44 a m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	1 35 a m	11 15 a m
Lv Henderson, ".....	3 05 a m	12 50 p m
Lv Norlina, ".....	3 50 a m	1 45 p m
Lv Weldon, ".....	5 00 a m	3 00 p m
Ar Portsmouth, ".....	7 15 a m	5 35 p m
Ar Washington, N & W S B		6 55 a m
Ar Baltimore, B S P Co.....		† 6 30 a m
Ar New York, O D S S Co.....		† 5 00 p m
Ar Philadelphia, N Y P & N	† 5 46 p m	5 10 a m
Ar New York, ".....	8 15 p m	8 00 a m
	No. 34.	No. 36.
Lv Tampa, S A L Ry.....	8 00 p m	8 00 p m
Lv Jacksonville, ".....	9 30 a m	7 50 a m
Lv Savannah, ".....	1 40 p m	12 10 p m
Lv Columbia, †.....	7 05 p m	5 30 a m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	10 40 p m	8 40 a m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	11 33 p m	9 38 a m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	1 35 a m	11 50 a m
Lv Henderson, ".....	3 05 a m	1 10 p m
Lv Norlina, ".....	3 45 a m	1 55 p m
Lv Petersburg, ".....	5 53 a m	4 07 p m
Ar Richmond, ".....	6 35 a m	4 55 p m
Ar Washington, W S Ry....	10 10 a m	8 36 p m
Ar Baltimore, P R R.....	11 25 a m	11 25 p m
Ar Philadelphia, P R R.....	1 36 p m	2 56 a m
Ar New York, P R R.....	4 13 p m	6 30 a m

R. M. COFFEY, C. T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C.

The Security Life and Annuity Co.

(LEGAL RESERVE)

Home Office : Greensboro, N. C.

Guaranty Capital, - - - - - $100,000.00.
(Deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.)

Our Life Annuity, Disability and Endowment Policy - - - - -

HAS CASH AND LOAN VALUES.

1. Is fully paid-up in 20 years.
2. Is the most attractive policy issued.
3. Contains every essential idea in Life Insurance.
4. Provides a fixed income for Life for the widow.
5. Provides a fixed income for the children during their minority.
6. Provides a fixed income for the insured during disability and old age.
7. Is secured by a cash guaranty capital of $100,000.00 deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.

J. VAN LINDLEY, President.

GEO. A. GRIMSLEY, Secretary.

R. E. FOSTER, Actuary.

Atlanta & West Point RAILROAD COMPANY.

The Western Railway of Alabama.

Shortest and quickest route via Atlanta, Montgomery and New Orleans to all points in Texas, Mexico and California.

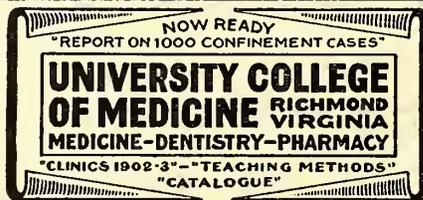

Operate Pullman's finest vestibuled sleepers. Unexcelled dining car service on all trains.

Through coaches between Washington and New Orleans.

Cafe-Observation cars on U. S. Fast Mail Trains Nos. 35 and 36, between Atlanta and Montgomery.

Rates and schedules cheerfully furnished by

B. HEYWARD, J. P. BILLUPS,
D. P. A., G. P. A.,
Atlanta, Ga. Atlanta, Ga.
R. E. LUTZ, CHAS. WICKERSHAM,
Traffic Manager, Pres. & Gen. Mgr.,
Montgomery, Ala. Atlanta, Ga.

Agnes Scott Institute FOR YOUNG LADIES.

DECATUR, (Six miles from Atlanta) GEORGIA.
Beautiful grounds Modern buildings and equipment. Equable climate. Unsurpassed health record. Graduate, College Preparatory, and Special Courses. Certification to Eastern Colleges.
For catalogue address
F. H. GAINES, D. D., President, Box X

Reading Notice.

On the first and third Tuesdays of July, August and September the Frisco System (Saint Louis & San Francisco Railroad) will have on sale reduced one-way and round trip tickets from Birmingham, Memphis and Saint Louis to points in Arkansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Indian Territory and Texas.
Write to W. T. Saunders, G. A., P. D., Frisco System, Atlanta, Ga., for information.

MAGNIFICENT PIANO

GIVEN AWAY ABSOLUTELY FREE

OVER 2000 names registered for the gift piano to July 13th, 1903. Send in your name and address and two cent stamp for return of number and you may be the lucky person. The only question asked, "Are you the Owner of an Upright Piano?"—do you live in North or South Carolina, and has any member of your family registered? Only one member of a family can register and you must live in North or South Carolina, and no matter what make, if you own an upright piano you are not eligible. Remember this piano will be given away absolutely free by

CHAS. M. STIEFF

in appreciation of the phenomenal sale of the "STIEFF" and to advertise the "KOHLER" Piano, which we control in the South.

All names must be received in Charlotte by August 19th, 1903, and none will be registered after that date.

ON WEDNESDAY AUG. 26th, 1903 duplicates of every number on our books will be placed in a box and the FIRST number taken out by a little girl, will be given the beautiful "KOHLER" Piano now on exhibition in our warerooms.

Don't fail to enclose two-cent stamp, if you want your number returned. Watch our advertisements for special announcement.

STIEFF

SOUTHERN WAREROOMS:
211-213 N. Tryon, & 22 W. 5th St.
C. H. WILMOTH, Mgr.
Charlotte, - - - - - N. C.

Wire Railing and Ornamental Wire Works.

DUFUR & CO.,

311 N. Howard Street,

Baltimore, Md

Manufacture Wire Railing for Cemetery Balconies, etc. Sieves, Fenders, Cag Sand and Coal Screens Woven Wire, Also Iron Bedsteads, Chairs Settees, etc.

Peace Institute and Conservatory, Raleigh, North Carolina.

A THOROUGH SCHOOL OF HIGH-GRADE FOR GIRLS. IN PINE BELT OF NORTH CAROLINA SO FAMOUS FOR HEALTH. * * * * *

We canvass closely and select carefully hence the high-tone and character of this school and its pupils. Catalogue free. Address, JAS. DINWIDDIE, President.

THE AUSTIN Presbyterian Theological Semin'y AUSTIN, - - - - - TEXAS.

Second Session begins Wednesday, October 7, 1903.
The Rev. S. A. King, D. D., Professor of Systematic Theology. The Rev. R. E. Vinson, B. D., Professor of Old Testament Languages and Exegesis; acting Professor of New Testament Language and Exegesis—first year. The Rev. R. K. Smoot, D. D., LL. D., Professor of Church History and Polity; acting Professor of New Testament Language and Exegesis—second year.
There are a number of scholarships available. Students who hold a scholarship receive table-board, fuel and light free of charge, as well as tuition and furnished room.
For full particulars, address

T. R. SAMPSON, D. D., Prest.

STATESVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE

The best College accessible to the young women of Western North Carolina, and the cheapest for the opportunities offered. The session opens September 9, 1903. Send for information,

REV. J. A. SCOTT, President,
Statesville, N. C.

King's Business College!

(INCORPORATED)

Capital Stock, - - - - - $30,000.00

200 students are now attending the summer session of King's Business Colleges, Raleigh, N. C., and Charlotte, N. C. Fall opening September 1, 1903.
$75, $60, $70 and $50 per month are the starting salaries of our graduates placed in positions in two weeks' time. Take our course and we will try to do as well by you. Choice of 50 positions each month.

We Prove that we have the best by a business offer

Write for our Offers and College Journal.

KING'S BUSINESS COLLEGE, .. Charlotte or Raleigh, N. C.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE FOR WOMEN, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Tuition and board lower than any school of same grade in the South. Under the control of the Presbyteries of Concord and Mecklenburg.

For catalogue, address, REV. J. R. BRIDGES, President.
Or MISS LILY LONG, Dean.

WARRENTON HIGH SCHOOL.

A Classical and Mathematical School of High Order.

Endorsed by the University and the various colleges, male and female. Total expenses per session of ten months (including tuition, board, room-rent lights and fuel) guaranteed not to exceed $154.00. Fall term begins September 1st. For catalogue, address,
JOHN GRAHAM, Principal,
Warrenton, N. C.

Are you going to College?

Some things in favor of your going to Greeneville and Tusculum College.

Fine Location, Beautiful grounds, Modern Buildings, Elegant Student Rooms, Eleven Experienced Teachers, Expenses very moderate. Co-educational, Progressive. Latin, Greek, English, Mathematics, Science, Bible, History, French, German, Music, Art, Elocution, Domestic Science, Physical Culture.

UNDER CARE OF THE SYNOD OF TENNESSEE.

SESSION BEGINS TUESDAY, SEPT. 1, 1903.

Write for Catalogue.

Rev. S. A. COILE, D. D., President, Tusculum, Tenn.

THE MERCHANTS & FARMERS NATIONAL BANK,

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Capital and Profits, - - - $290,000.

Out of Town Accounts.

Depositors living outside of Charlotte can send us their deposits by mail or express, upon receipt of which the amount will be credited to their account and the deposit acknowledged by mail same day.

We furnish such accounts check books, free of cost, and write up the account monthly, mailing detailed statement with all cancelled checks.

DR. J. H. McADEN, - - - President.
C. N. EVANS, Jr., - Cashier.

Teachers' Interstate Examination Course.

Teachers wishing to prepare for examinations should write at once to Prof. J. L. Graham, LL. D., 152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn., for particulars concerning his Special Teachers' Examination Course

This course is taught by mail, and prepares Teachers for examination in every State in the Union. Leading educators pronounce it the best course ever offered to the Teaching profession, and all Teachers wishing to advance in their profession should immediately avail themselves of it. Enclose stamp for reply.

HOUSTON, DIXON & CO.,

SCHOOL BOOKS, OFFICE SUPPLIES, and HURD'S VERY FINE STATIONERY.
Opposite Central Hotel, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Literary, Business, Teachers' Normal, Music and Shorthand. Excellent Boarding Halls and Dormitories. 280 students from 36 counties, 6 states and Cuba. 25 free scholarships. Splendid New Buildings. Beautiful and Healthful Location. Expenses very reasonable. Graduates assisted to positions. 41st term opens August 26th. Illustrated catalogue free. Address W. T. Whitsett, Ph. D., Whitsets, N. C.

Teachers Wanted.

We need at once a few more Teachers for Fall schools. Good positions are being filled daily by us. We are receiving more calls this year than ever before. Schools and colleges supplied with teachers free of cost. Enclose stamp for reply.
AMERICAN TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION
J. L. GRAHAM, LL. D., Manager.
152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn.

BIG 8 Chain of 8 Colleges owned by business men and indorsed by business men. Fourteen Cashiers of Banks are on our Board of Directors. Our diploma means something. Enter any time. Positions secured.
Draughton's Practical Business Colleges.
(Incorporated, Capital Stock $300,000.00.)
Nashville, Tenn. U Atlanta, Ga.
Ft. Worth, Texas, S Montgomery, Ala.
St. Louis, Mo. S Galveston, Texas.
Little Rock, Ark. A Shreveport, La.

For 150 page catalogue address either place. If you prefer, may pay tuition out of salary after course is completed. Guarantee graduates to be competent or no charges for tuition.
HOME STUDY: Bookkeeping, Shorthand, Penmanship, etc., taught by mail. Write for 100 page BOOKLET on Home Study. It's free.

HORNER MILITARY SCHOOL,

Oxford, North Carolina.

A Boarding School under Military Discipline with advantages of home training.

Thorough Preparation for Colleges and Universities.

Two Students Secured Appointments in Government Schools this year.

Base-ball, Foot-ball and Athletic Field surrounded by Quarter-mile Running Track on Campus.

Forty-third year begins Wed., September 2, 1903.

J. C. HORNER, Principal.

Cluster Springs Academy,

BLACK WALNUT, VA.

A SELECT SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN—LIMITED TO THIRTY.

Three gentlemen of from four to twelve years' experience have charge of the class rooms.

Each pupil is given individual attention and treated as a member of the Head Master's home.

Twenty-acre Campus; Ten-acre Athletic Field; New Gymnasium; Swimming Pool; Excellent Reading Room; Convenient to Churches; Unsurpassed Railroad Facilities; Telephone Connections; Fine Mineral Waters.

Our boys are noted for their high moral tone, and their success in the colleges and universities attests the thoroughness of our work.

If you want your boy to have these advantages let us send you our illustrated Catalogue.

HAMPDEN WILSON, Head Master.

Chicora College, For Young Ladies, Greenville, S. C.

A high-grade Presbyterian School whose pattern is the Christian home. Degree courses taught by specialists. Music, Art and Elocution schools not surpassed by any school in the South.

Beautiful Auditorium; Large Pipe Organ; Charming location, in centre of City; Pure Water; Fine Sewerage.

OUR AIM—Thoroughness in Intellectual, Spiritual and Moral Development.

OUR HISTORY—Phenomenal growth.

OUR MOTTO—Success.

OUR POLICY—Progress.

OUR SYSTEM—Efficiency.

OUR TEST—Try us.

Eighty non-resident pupils enrolled this session, besides a large list of day pupils.

Next session begins September 18th, 1903,

Write for illustrated Catalogue to

S. R. PRESTON, D. D., President,
Greenville, S. C.

Princeton Theological Seminary.

FRANCIS L. PATTON, D. D., LL. D., President.

The ninety-second session of Princeton Theological Seminary will open on Thursday, September 17th, 1903. Matriculation of Students takes place in Stuart Hall at eleven o'clock.

On Friday, September 18th, at eleven o'clock the Rev. William Park Armstrong will be inaugurated as Professor of New Testament Literature and Exegesis. His address will be on the subject, "The Witness of the Gospel." The exercises will take place in Miller Chapel. College Graduates of all denominations welcome. Faculty of seventeen. Modern methods of instruction. Choice of extra curriculum courses, and privilege of advanced study in Princeton University. A strong Y. M. C. A. An address each week by men prominent in aggressive Christian work. Annual conference of leading Christian workers. Three fine dormitories with parlor and baths in each. Ample grounds for recreation.

Address all correspondence, etc., to

Prof. GEERHARDUS VOS,
Princeton, N. J.

VIRGINIA COLLEGE

For YOUNG LADIES, Roanoke, Va.

Opens Sept. 21, 1903. One of the leading Schools for Young Ladies in the South. New buildings, pianos and equipment. Campusten acres. Grand mountain scenery in Valley of Virginia, famed for health. European and American teachers. Full course. Conservatory advantages in Art, Music and Elocution. Certificates Wellesley. Students from 30 States. For catalogue address MATTIE P. HARRIS, President, Roanoke, Va.

Address
WILBUR R. SMITH,
LEXINGTON, KY.

FOR CIRCULAR OF THE
"Cheapest and best College."

COMMERCIAL COLLEGE OF KY. UNIVERSITY

Refers to thousands of successful graduates. Cost to complete Full Business Course, including Tuition, Books and Board, about $90. Phonography, Type-Writing and Telegraphy taught. Address WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

State Library

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., SEPTEMBER 2, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 35

REV. J. R. MILLER, D. D.

COURTESY OF THE INTERIOR.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.

FACULTY.

- The Rev. Walter W. Moore, D. D., LL. D., McCormick Professor of the Hebrew Language and Literature.
 The Rev. Chas. C. Hersman, D. D., LL. D., Henry Young Professor of Biblical Literature and Interpretation of the New Testament.
 The Rev. Thomas Cary Johnston, D. D., LL. D., Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity.
 The Rev. Thomas R. English, D. D., Stuart Robinson Professor of the English Bible and Pastoral Theology.
 The Rev. Givens B. Strickler, D. D., LL. D., Professor of Systematic Theology.

The next session opens on the second Wednesday in September. For catalogue and other information as to course of study, apply to

DR. ENGLISH, Clerk of Faculty.

For information as to rooms, etc., apply to Dr. T. C. Johnston, Richmond, Va.

GREGG
SHORTHAND BY MAIL.

You need not leave your home to learn this system. It is easy to learn, easy to write and easy to read.
 Typewriter sent to responsible students.
 Send today for Booklet C.

Southern Shorthand and Business University.

J. M. RESSLER, President.
Norfolk, Va.

Cluster Springs Academy

Black Walnut, Va.

A select school for THIRTY boys. Three instructors with from FOUR to TWELVE years experience in training boys

Address the Head Master for illustrated Catalogue.

Pantops Academy For Boys, Near Charlottesville, Va.

Fully equipped Equable climate Tract of 833 acres, formerly owned by Thomas Jefferson and named by him from two Greek words—"All-seeing" Also Summer School. Catalogue. JOHN R. SAMPSON, A. M.

Address
WILBUR R. SMITH,
LEXINGTON, KY.
FOR CIRCULAR OF THE
"Cheapest and best College."

COMMERCIAL COLLEGE OF KY. UNIVERSITY

Refers to thousands of successful graduates. Cost to complete full Business Course, including Tuition, Books and Board, about $90. Phonography, Type-Writing and Telegraphy taught. Address WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

Medical College of Virginia.

Established 1838.

Departments of Medicine, Dentistry and Pharmacy

The sixty sixth session will commence on September 29, 1913. Well equipped Laboratories, splendid Hospital facilities and abundance of clinical material afford excellent opportunities for practical work.

Tuition fees and living expenses are very moderate. For announcement and further information, address,

CHRISTOPHER TOMPKINS, M. D., Dean.
Richmond, Va.

SHORTHAND FREE.

Upon request Converse Business College will send a free lesson in Shorthand, with full explanation, to any one.
 For the next thirty days Railroad fare will be paid for any one enrolling for one or more of our courses at the regular rate of tuition.

I. T. WILLIAMS, Secretary and Treasurer, Spartanburg, S. C.

Sewing Machines AND Supplies

NOW is the time to buy a Machine, and F. H. ANDREWS' is the place. No use to send your money to a catalogue house a thousand miles away, when I can furnish an elegant Drop Head Machine at $16.50, and finer ones in proportion. Attachments, Parts and Needles for all Machines supplied promptly.

F. H. ANDREWS,
20 WEST TRADE STREET. : : CHARLOTTE, N. C.
The Old Reliable Dealer in Pianos, Organs and Sewing Machines.

EDUCATION IS COSTLY
IGNORANCE IS SUICIDE

HOGE MEMORIAL ACADEMY BLACKSTONE VIRGINIA

Ours is a high-grade School, with moderate charges. Give what they need at a critical time. Develops backbone, builds character, while training the mind. Apply for information to
COL. E. B. FISHBURNE, B. S., A. M., Principal

DAVIDSON COLLEGE, Davidson, N.C.

Classical, Mathematical, Scientific, Literary, Biblical, Commercial.
 Terms reasonable; Location healthful; Accommodations excellent; Teaching unsurpassed; Gymnasium complete.
 Send for a catalogue

Address THE PRESIDENT.

DO YOU WANT

—A—
—TEACHER?—

We are in correspondence with hundreds of the best teachers in the U. S. for all grades school and college work. Can refer you to some that would probably suit. NO CHARGE. Members located in 18 states at salaries $2,500 per year down.
 Correspondence with school officers and teachers invited.
THE EDUCATIONAL BUREAU,
 (Established 1891) Raleigh, N. C.
 Branch Office; Fort Smith, Ark.

CONVERSE COLLEGE, Spartanburg, S. C.

A HIGH GRADE COLLEGE FOR WOMEN and Conservatory of Music. Schools of Art and Expression.

ROBERT P. PELL, President.

North Carolina MILITARY ACADEMY.

Red Springs, N. C.

Ample faculty of five instructors. Location unsurpassed for healthfulness. Educates for business or for college and stand taken by graduates and students in university work the test of thoroughness. Cost small, considering advantages. Religious influences good. Address for catalogue,

CAPT. C. A. SHORT,
Principal.

DR. SAMUEL W MURPHY,
Head Master.

Red Springs Seminary, The Ideal College for Women.

Faculty of twenty-six experienced teachers College course leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S. and B. L. t. The best advantages in Music and Art. Large two manua Pipe Organ. Electric lights. Steam heat. A catalogue will interest you.

REV. C. G. VARDELL, D. D., Red Springs, N. C.
 Summer address, Blowing Rock, N. C.

Brown's University School, Charlotte, N. C.

Best advantages for boys whose parents can afford it. Five boarders, as members of family. Combined advantages of home life and city culture.
 Write for particulars.

W. G. BROWN (U. of Va.) Prin.

Presbyterian Standard.

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., SEPTEMBER 2, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 35

Event and Comment.

The Salvation Army has gone as far North as Dawson City, but it found a Presbyterian Church there built, for it to use for its services.

President Roosevelt's anti-profanity lecture would have a greater effect but for the rumors that when that trolley-car struck his carriage last summer he spake unadvisedly with his lips.

As one result of the Passive Resistance plan in England, the entire separation of Church and State in the matter of education is now being discussed. America has done a good deal for the Mother Country by the settling of such problems and England is learning the American ideas pretty fast.

A correspondent of one of our religious papers writes of "The Age of Untruthfulness in Children." Evidently it is thought that the language of the Psalmist, "As soon as they be born, speaking lies," is a poetic license.

The Interior, rebuking an ignoramus who talked of the doctrine of Hell-Fire in the Old Testament, says: "The sane, solemn warning to which this coarse phrase is applied belongs distinctively to the New Testament—to the teachings of Jesus." And that is a profound suggestion.

After taking the religious census of London, as regards church attendance, a labor which cost six hundred men six months of time, one conclusion is reached that it may not be amiss to mention, namely, that "Wherever there is the right man in the pulpit, there are few if any empty pews."

Now that the Macedonian cry is being heard so literally in Europe it is just as well to recall that the Sultan desired the New Testament censored because it contained the word, "Macedonia." That was the acme of the stupidity that is at the bottom of the present anarchy. Another emendation was, "Jesus Christ came to save Christian sinners." Comment is unnecessary.

The Southwestern thinks that if the editors who laugh about the much-needed rest of the preachers were to try preaching for a while they would all cry out for a little surcease of work. Maybe so. But outside of New Orleans it is the general impression in editorial offices that the average pastorate would be a perpetual vacation.

The latest Zicnism scheme is to make a Zion in South Africa instead of in Palestine. We have great faith in the ingenuity of the millennial exegetes to discover some prophecy to fit this case. But the segregation of the Jews in a colony of their own would be nothing at all unique in their history. However, the United States seems to be good enough for most of them.

The preachers will generally endorse the dictum of the Labor Unions of Detroit in deciding that there shall be no more funerals on Sunday. The undertakers of that city can hire only the carriages belonging to the Teamster's Union and the Union has decided against Sunday funerals except in the case of contagious diseases. Maybe, when everything is unionized nobody will have to work on Sunday.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan will not undertake a special evangelistic campaign in St. Louis, during the World's Fair, after all the announcements that have been made to that effect. He had a disagreement with the committee. They wanted the work done in the churches and he wanted a great auditorium at some central point. The auditorium while more spectacular of course would have drawn from the regular congregations of the churches and it seems strange that the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan should have insisted upon a plan that looked just a little selfish for one of his deep spiritual life.

Dunfermline, Scotland, is fortunate in having been the birth-place of Andrew Carnegie. He gave the town the other day two million and a half dollars and a park, and mentioned the purposes of the bequest in this fashion. To quote his own words, the object is "to attempt to introduce into the monotonous lives of the toiling masses of Dunfermline more of sweetness and light, to give them, especially the young, some charm, some elevating conditions of life which their residence elsewhere would have denied, so that a child in his native town will feel, however far he may have roamed, that simply by virtue of being such, his life has been made better and happier."

The Churchman is suggesting to the Bishops of the Episcopal Church that they lead the thought of the Church more along scholarly lines, and points to Lightfoot and Stanley among others in England who in spite of the administrative labors found time to give to the world the products of their ripe scholarship. Come to think of it, Dr. Briggs is about the only Episcopal scholar that we know of in America and he learned all he knew and taught more than he knew while in the Presbyterian ministry. But then scholarship might make some of the Bishops as broad as Lightfoot and Stanley and Milman and that would play havoc with certain High Church ideas, with the Apostolic Succession, in the accepted sense, and other fundamental matters. For instance Lightfoot found Presbytery but not Episcopacy in the New Testament and Dean Stanley wrote once that it was as certain that nothing like modern Episcopacy existed in the first century as it is that nothing like modern Presbyterianism existed after the beginning of the second. Scholarship hath its perils.

We think it ought to be noted, the beautiful relation that exists between Dr. Stagg and his former charge here in Charlotte, the Second Church. There is not the least bitterness over his going to the field of wider usefulness, as he thinks it to be. Yet it may be a long time before any preacher can command such audiences as have greeted him when he has been able to preach here again. They packed the big auditorium, the hottest Sunday in August, twice in one day, to hear him, and we may add they were repaid by two as good sermons as one may ever want to hear. Ordinarily, the very last thing that a pastor can afford to do is to direct the choice of his successor. And yet the Second Church is so well assured of his good judgment and the undying interest he has in the church, that they are willing to leave the matter largely to his wisdom. He has been most earnest in the effort to secure some one who could adequately carry on his work here, and there is not a trace of jealousy at his suggestions, while the desire has been evident in his conduct that his successor shall be a better man and better paid than he was.

It is not often that this is seen and we have forgotten mention of it before only because we feared that the facts in the case might seem distorted by the partiality of friendship.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established January 1, 1858.

A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER FOR THE FAMILY. DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM AS REPRESENTED BY THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

A. J. MCKELWAY, ..... EDITOR.
CORNELIA R. SHAW, ..... ASSOCIATE EDITOR.
H. M. MCALLISTER, ..... BUSINESS MANAGER.

WESTERN OFFICE:

GEO. L. LEYBURN, ..... EDITOR AND MANAGER.
3511 Bell Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

Subscription Price, ..... $2.00 a Year, in Advance.

The STANDARD is published every Wednesday at Charlotte, N. C., by the PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

For table of contents see page 16.

The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription has been paid.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the subscription.

In accordance with the general wish of our patrons the paper is discontinued only upon the written request of the subscriber. Arrearages must be settled in full at the same time, at the rate of two dollars a year and twenty cents a month for a part of a year.

When change of address is desired give both the old and the new address.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post-office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South. Address all communications to

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD, Charlotte, N. C.

A Neglected Beatitude.

We suppose that it was the current opinion in the time of Christ, as it is very largely today, that an insult should be received only to be avenged. The Oriental method, as is best exemplified in India today, was to avenge the verbal insult with a deadlier one. The western way has been to answer the word with a blow. But there came One into the world, who when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not. And he taught his disciples, Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. So blessed are they who are thus reviled that they should rejoice and be exceeding glad. For great is their reward in Heaven.

Persecution for righteousness' sake, even to martyrdom, has something of the heroic about it. We doubt not that men have often been sustained under the fires of persecution by calling upon their store of heroism. Persecution, of the active kind, is generally suffered under the world's eye. Blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness' sake. But the same blessing is promised those who are the sufferers by that lowest and meanest form of persecution, that cheapest of all the vices, lying with tongue or pen. The heroic element is lacking save to the finer sense. And yet the blessing is sure.

Passing by as admitted, the heavenly reward, consider the blessings of revilement as we may see them, as we may even experience them here.

First, the condition of the blessing is that the reviling shall be false, that "all manner of evil things" shall have been said about us falsely. Now the self-examination to determine whether they were true or false tends to the grace of humility. It is a very stupid reviler that makes his lie out of the whole cloth, as the saying is. The slander may have one barb that hurts because an element of truth is in it. We should be slow to claim the blessing until we are sure that the slander was all false, or until we have made it false by our resolve never to give even that occasion for like slander again. The false part, which is generally the main part, goes to our credit in the making up of the reward, and the true part goes to the development of our own characters here.

Another condition is that the reviling shall have been occasioned for Christ's sake. And this is a harder condition than the other. Even if the slander is all false, we may be more or less to blame for having given the occasion of it. We may have interfered where we had no right and taken hold of a dog by the ears when we had to go out of our way to do it. We may have stirred up strife needlessly, or for motives that had more of self in them than the interests of Christ's kingdom. And so this tends again to the humbling of self and the resolve to be more and more concerned about the cause of Christ. So the reviling does us good in this indirect way.

Further, we must follow the example of him who, when he was reviled, reviled not again. To revile again is to lose our reward. The reviler may richly deserve the utmost limit of our objurgative vocabulary. Nevertheless when we have paid him back in his own coin, we have paid ourselves at the same time. Public opinion balances the account and says that both are to blame. And even when what we say is the truth, and what the other reviler says is a lie, the world makes very little discrimination in its condemnation of both of the scrappers. Nor need we expect the world to balance nicely the occasions for the several revilings. It just condemns both sides for the bad language, and the fuss.

But when the reviling is false, when it was made because of our interest in the building up of Christ's Kingdom or the pulling down of Satan's kingdom (which is the same thing), and we suffer it in silence, then, if we have patience enough to wait, we shall see something like this:

At first there will be those who will join the reviler because we have borne the reviling in silence, and they impute to us cowardice. Still a larger number will imagine at first that the slander is true because it is unanswered. Even some friends who do not understand the higher motives that restrain men will regret that we did not take up the gauntlet and finish the reviler off hand. And then it will begin to dawn upon the minds of men that there is something here that is at least a faint echo of the spirit of the Master. The reaction that falsehood always brings in time against itself, will put one in his true position. The world will begin to see that there is something finer here than the ordinary motives and methods of personal revenge. Then, if the reviler does not himself become heartily ashamed of himself as often happens, after a while he is by so much lowered in the estimation of the public, himself, as he has brought an undeserved reproach upon the abused and slandered one. That lessens the influence for evil. Really, after a while, there is nothing more powerless to hurt than the slanderer who has been found to be false. Character tells in the long run and men have an instinct that appreciates character whether they be good or bad. Reputation itself will fail when it opposes character and many a reputation has been sifted out because of senseless abuse of character. In the long run the abuse tends merely to advertise one to the favorable consideration of men, the reproaches fall off as did the bonds of the men who were thrown into the fiery furnace, and we can come forth with not even the smell of fire upon our garments. But this is not saying that it may not be a trying situation while it lasts and that a sensitive soul may not suffer untold agonies when he finds the world turning against him because of false witness. Doubtless many such a soul has claimed the heavenly reward before the earthly has had time to come.

We would not advise any one to covet the infliction of a reviling. There is a certain degree of humiliation that one must feel when the mud-throwers begin their work. Nevertheless the truth must sometimes be spoken and evil must sometimes be rebuked and the part of Nathan before David and of John the Baptist before Herod must be taken by somebody. Especially is the fight against the saloon evil a battle in which some mud-stains must be worn for a while. By that craft men have their wealth and there is many a Demetrius who is able to stir up an uproar, when there is danger that this craft shall be set at naught.

Nor are those of that craft the most scrupulous or honorable of antagonists. But it is to no man's credit, considering our responsibility for the evils that exist around us, that he escape enmity and slander altogether. And when it does come, remember this neglected beatitude, and remember also that it is not necessary to go to heaven to receive a part of the promised reward.

Jesus and John the Baptist.

John testified of Jesus that he was the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world. Jesus testified of John that among those born of women there had not arisen a greater than John the Baptist. But perhaps we have not appreciated how closely akin in spirit were the two.

The greatness of John was the ability to lose himself in his cause. He was but the fore-runner. He came to prepare the way for the worthier and mightier one, and the way being prepared he must get out of it. The prophet was not the Messiah. It was necessary in the carrying out of the Divine plan that John must decrease as Jesus increased. There must be no comparisons in the popular mind between Jesus and John. And so the eloquent voice of the preacher of repentance is stilled and John himself shut up in the gloomy fortress of Machaerus, that Jesus might have no rival. Even as the disciple of Jesus and numbered among his followers, John would have attracted too much attention to himself, and the need of the world was Christ. They are sad words, in a sense, as of one who has finished his task and must wait his vindication in another age, yet brave words, grand words, "He must increase, but I must decrease." John's ministry was the double one of self-assertion and of self-denial. He drew great crowds to his feet and brought thousands to repentance before God, that they might the better receive the faith that is in Christ. But that work over, he must decrease, in order that Christ might increase. For that was the Cause, after all, for the sake of which John had been sent into the world, sent by God.

Whether John's faith began to waver while in prison, or whether he sent his disciples to Jesus for their own sakes, we do not know. But the answer to the question, Art thou he that should come, or look we for another, showed the real kinship between Jesus and John, underneath the temporary alienation of doubt. There had been no great uprising of the people to greet the Messiah, the King. The fact that Jesus spoke of the least in the kingdom of heaven as greater than John, seems to indicate that there was something of privilege connected with the spiritual nature of the Kingdom that even John had missed. But the answer to the question, The blind receive their sight and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed and the deaf hear, the dead are raised and the poor have the gospel preached to them, was an all sufficient answer to John. Probably it was the last message that he received from Jesus, ere the executioner came with his sword. For that also was in the plan, that for the sake of the cause John must die, as Jesus must die. The message proved that the kingdom of God was to be established by the self-denial of the Master as well as of the disciples. It was not to come with observation. Its methods were not those of force, but of healing and helpfulness. It was to be the transformation of society, beginning with the poorest, the outcast, the leper, the afflicted and so the worthless ones, and upon that foundation was to be established the Kingdom. The rule of the kingdom was to be, not over the lives and fortunes of its subjects, as in earthly kingdoms, but over their hearts. And the climax of the argument has been often noticed. After the miracles of healing, even after the miracle of the resurrection, is put the preaching of the gospel to the poor. Not many mighty were called, even by Christ himself. But the poor, the accursed of Jewish society, thronged him.

John doubtless recognized this as the fulfillment of prophecy. It had been said by a prophet of the long ago, "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart and the tongue of the dumb sing." It had been said, of the promised Servant of Jehovah, "The Lord hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor." And this was fulfillment of inspired prophecy.

But there was deeper fulfillment, and doubtless it was this that appealed the most to John. He had felt the great need of the world for a Saviour and here was a Saviour. Here was one who had given up as John had done, but infinitely more. He had left Heaven for earth, and the Throne for the manger. He had emptied himself of his glory and had been made in the likeness of men. And then, with a second voluntary act of humiliation, being found in fashion like a man, he had humbled himself, and was soon to become obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. John did not know all that we know, or ought to know. But there is here something so divine, that men who quarrel with the miracles cannot find it in their hearts to despise. The miracles were to the eyewitnesses, or to those who believed their testimony, the proofs of the claims of Jesus Christ to a Divine mission. But we prove now, not Christ by the miracles, but the miracles by him, the greatest Miracle of all.

So, after all, that which made John the greatest of those born of women was the spirit of Christ, the spirit of self-subordination, self-humiliation, self-denial, self-effacement, for the Cause. May the same mind be in us that was also in Christ Jesus.

Speculation and Gambling. Speculation may be legal or illegal and it may be right or wrong. The wrong kind may be legalized by some laws. The right kind may be illegal under the law that is trying to reach the wrong kind. So the question, where to draw the line between legitimate speculation and gambling, is further complicated by questions of law.

It would seem that our Superior Court Judges in North Carolina are making a concerted effort to close up the so-called "bucket shops." One was closed in Reidsville, largely through the efforts of Colonel Webster, of Webster's Weekly. Judge Neal gave a charge to the Grand Jury of Mecklenburg county concerning the law as it now stands and the duty of enforcing that law so far as it should be found to have been violated in Charlotte. The Grand Jury brought in three presentments which are to be delivered to the solicitor before the next term of the court. Judge Brown made the same sort of charge in Greensboro, the other day. Judge Allen charged the Grand Jury at Lexington last week in similar fashion. We think that there can be no question as to two facts, First that there is a legitimate speculation in cotton futures, and second, that there is a great deal of that speculation that is pure gambling, in intent and in its results, and that it is about as demoralizing to the best interests of the community involved as anything can well be.

So far as Charlotte is concerned, the matter is in the hands of the courts and we prefer to reserve comment until the matter is decided. Speaking on general principles, the law as it now stands, forbids "every contract, commonly called 'futures' as to the several articles and things hereinbefore specified or any of them, whereby the parties thereto contemplate and intend no real transaction as to the article or thing agreed to be delivered, but only the payment of a sum of money or other thing of value, such payment and the amount thereof and the person to whom the same is to be paid to depend on whether or not the market price or value is greater or less than the price so agreed to be paid for the said article or thing at the time and place specified in such contract"—which is the way the law has of saying that one must not buy cotton futures unless there is the bona fide transaction of the delivery of the cotton itself.

Some of the lawyers with whom we have discussed this question say that all transactions here described are both illegal and wrong. The Standard believes that there may be legitimate transactions in that business. Thus:

A cotton merchant has an order to supply a cotton factory with a thousand bales of cotton in December at a certain price. The cotton merchant in time delivers the cotton at that price. But he is merely seeking a fair commission on that purchase. He therefore protects himself, or "hedges," by buying through his agents on the Cotton Exchange a thousand bales of December cotton. Then if cotton goes up he is insured against loss. If it goes down he has discounted any larger profit that he might have made. But this is rather anti-speculative than otherwise. Or a cotton factory contracts for the delivery of its cloth six months from now at a certain price. It protects itself against a rise in the price of the new cotton by buying futures in cotton. It strikes us that this is a legitimate transaction. But it is also true that the present law declares it to be illegal. The same thing is done by the cotton shipper to protect himself against a fall in price while the cotton is crossing the ocean. The commission he pays his agents on the Cotton Exchange is the premium on that kind of insurance.

On the other hand, the man who buys cotton futures, neither wanting the cotton nor needing the protection for a bona fide transaction in cotton, is guilty of the sin of gambling as well as of the crime as defined by the law. It seems to us that the law should be so framed, or so interpreted by the courts, as to make the discrimination between speculation that is legitimate and that which is not.

Every legitimate transaction has stamped upon it, "Value Received." The man who gets something for nothing by buying cotton futures or by selling them is merely gambling with an unseen gambler at the other end of the wire, and when he wins the other man loses and when he loses the other man wins, after the approved gambling fashion. It is all a breach of the Eighth Commandment.

---

Review of Contemporaries.

---

The Orphanage at Ashley Down, Bristol, founded by the late George Muller, received £41,792 last year "simply in answer to believing prayer," making in round numbers £1,120,000 since the beginning, "without any appeal, verbal or printed, to the public, or solicitation for help addressed to one single individual." Mr. James Wright, who issues the report, refers to a prediction made when Mr. Muller died, in 1898, to the effect that the work would now have to be carried on by new methods. "Yet for five years this work has gone on, and is going on today, on precisely the same lines on which it was conducted for the previous sixty-four years." The list of gifts is a long one. Quite a number of donors send small sums "instead of insuring the boiler," or "instead of insuring plate-glass window and shop," etc. Many send thank offerings and specify their causes of gratitude. Among the entries "in kind" the words, "old false teeth" occasionally occur, and the report states that the sale of these articles, especially those with gold plates, has benefitted the institution by hundreds of pounds.—Episcopal Recorder.

---

A Remarkable Religious Census.

The London Daily News—the only paper, we believe, in the metropolis which consistently refuses to publish sporting and betting items—has recently been conducting a religious census. The enumerators visited all the churches within what is called "Inner London," and by deliberate count ascertained how many people attended public worship. In order to be as fair as possible, no great church festival was chosen by the enumerators, but an ordinary Sunday, when an average attendance could be more accurately gauged.

The population of "Inner London" is about four and a half millions, and the enumerators found that of this number some 840,000 were in attendance at Divine worship on a given Sunday. This looks considerably worse than it really is. It has often been pointed out by those who should know, and is equally borne out by experience, that only about one-third of the church-going population are to be found at public worship at one and the same time. If such a statement is correct, then nearly half of the population of Inner London may be classed as "church-goers." Making all allowance for those who may be classed as "twicers," this is a very remarkable showing. Nearly half the population of London may thus be spoken of as habitually attending public worship. We would be the last to maintain that all such are Christians, and by no means think that all excluded from the category of church-goers are devoid of or unreached by religious influences. The fact, however, remains that nearly half the population of the largest city in either the ancient or modern world are well under the influence of the Christian Church.

Perhaps more remarkable than the figures are the conclusions drawn by Mr. R. Mudie Smith, the Superintendent of the enumerators. It has been the custom for people to imagine that the Anglican Church has an overpowering influence, due to a large majority over the other denominations. The census proves that this is not the case. The Anglican Church has a very slight lead, indeed, even in the metropolis, and the Nonconformists are steadily wiping even this out. The Roman Catholics are very far behind.

Mr. Mudie Smith assures us that the figures prove—so far as figures can prove anything—that the power of preaching is undiminished. "Wherever there is the right man in the pulpit, there are few, if any, empty pews." The Rev. R. J. Campbell preached to more people at the City Temple than were in St. Paul's Cathedral on the same Sunday. A man of "strong convictions, keen sympathies and a magnetic personality," is never without numerous hearers.—Episcopal Recorder.

"What Is It All Worth?"

Is the Church accomplishing the work which has been committed to it? Does the Church turn out the product which it advertises? Does it give to the world what it promises? It promises to make good men, men of God. Does it fulfill its promise? The farm accomplishes its purpose fairly well. If a farmer should plow and plant and labor on his farm for a year, and at the end of the season have no harvest, he would be disappointed, distressed, and discouraged. If this failure should be repeated the next year and the next, the farmer would give up in despair, sell his farm, or give it away, and move to a more promising country. The factory is a success. It turns out an annual output of machines which, upon the whole, is satisfactory. They are carefully inspected, pronounced all right, and shipped away. The report comes back that the article is what it promised to be. The school turns out its annual class of young men and women equipped with mental training and knowledge for the work of life. The verdict of the people is that the schools are worthy of our patronage and support because they accomplish the work which has been committed to them.

Can we say as much of the Church? Many answer in the negative. They say the Church does not make good men. They declare that Church members are no better than other people. But the judgment of the world is not just. The world did not judge Jesus justly. It did not judge His disciples justly. It condemned and killed them. It has never judged great and good men justly. Some Christians do not judge wisely concerning the success of the Church. There are Christians who lament that the Church in our times has degenerated and is doing nothing worth counting.

We often make mistakes in our estimate of the Church because our point of view is unfortunate. Looking back on the Church as it existed in former times, one can easily see that it did produce saints. Even in the darkest days when the Church was most corrupt there were some great and good men in it, men of whom the world was not worthy. We often witness the singular spectacle of the Church killing prophets and making saints at the same time. It ought not so to be, but so it is. The Church has never been perfect. Sometimes it has been very corrupt. But in its worst times it has not altogether failed. We agree that in the past the Church has brought forth much good fruit. But many will not believe that it is doing so now. There is scarcely a church among us which has not produced a few saints. Let any pastor consult the records of his church for the past two years, and he will find that he has buried several men and women as good and true as ever lived.

But some will say, These are gone. Where are the living saints? How slow we are to appreciate our neighbors! How little we know about the good men and women whom we meet every day! There are some in every congregation who are walking with God in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation. They would lay down their lives for Christ at a moment's notice. They are the fruits of the Church of Christ on earth. The world is not worthy of them. They live for the most part in obscurity. Their names are never in the daily papers. But God knows them and they know Him. They are His. There never were so many true saints on the earth as there are to-day.

What is the Church worth? "What is all this worth?" A great statesman propounded this question in the climax of a great speech in defense of the American Union. His heart burned within him as he contemplated the magnificent political fabric which the fathers had erected and the possibility of its dissolution. He broke forth in this startling inquiry, "What is all this worth?" But there is a grander fabric. It is the Church of Christ.

What is it all worth? Ask the little children in the Sunday school who are being taught the things of God by patient and devoted Christian teachers. They seem restless and listless, but thousands of them are receiving impressions which will be a blessing to them forever, and multitudes will be saved from the snares of sin by these instructions.

What is it all worth? Ask the fathers who, having fought the battles of the Church for forty years and more, are now leaning on the top of the staff and tottering on the verge of eternity. They will tell you that the Church has been an incalculable blessing to them.

What is it all worth? Ask the monuments in the cemeteries where Christian men and women lie buried. They will tell you that this one died in the Lord, and that one fought a good fight, and all finished their course with joy.

Draw aside the veil that hides eternity from time, and behold the blood-washed throng before the throne of God. They have been promoted from the Church militant to the Church triumphant, which is without fault before the throne of God. They have not forgotten the hallowed spot where they were first forgiven. Although they sing the song of Moses and the Lamb, they still join with their brethren below in singing, "How amiable are Thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts!"—The Christian Advocate.

A splendidly bold suggestion has been made in regard to the new Liverpool University, which, if carried out, will make it quite unique in this country. The Lord Mayor of Liverpool (Mr. Watson Rutherford, M. P.) proposes that there shall be no fees whatever, but that education at the university shall be absolutely free—to those qualified to profit by it. He would have the matriculation examination as severe as any in the country, and the standard for degrees as high as that of any university in the world. But his idea is to connect the university directly with the city, and that the poorest citizens of Liverpool should have no financial barrier between them and all the benefits of the university. Whether Mr. Rutherford proposes to restrict these advantages in any way to Liverpool people is not made quite clear in the letter he has addressed to the City Council. He believes that a penny rate would more than cover the cost of the students' fees. Two objections have been raised, which the Lord Mayor meets. He has—we think quite rightly—no fear that an education of this kind, costing nothing, will be undervalued, and he does not believe that the university's connection with the city will prevent wealthy citizens from continuing to make munificent gifts for the equipment of the University.—Episcopal Recorder.

Christendom asks, "Are we educating men away from Religion?" We do not know what Christendom may be doing, but as a general proposition only the half-educated or the uneducated are irreligious. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.

Devotional.

We look into ourselves, and we find there much which is inconsistent with the divine command; we see, perhaps, great faults of temper. How many of us allow our tempers to be uncontrolled, and think very little about the matter? You may hear Christians sometimes lightly confess that they know that their tempers are bad, and they talk as though that were nothing: "I know I have a bad temper. I know what it inflicts upon other people, and especially upon those with whom I am in constant contact, but it is a very common failing." Yes indeed, one of those failings which probably cause more misery in the world than any other we can think of. The man or woman with a bad temper, who has not by careful discipline got the mastery over it, is surely a terrible grief to all those with whom he lives; and he himself does not know what suffering he inflicts on others. How common it is! And yet, if we are honestly striving to keep straight before God, we shall assuredly soon find out, when we look into ourselves, that this is a grievous offense against the Lord; and that if we are to be true Christians, we must fight it down.—Archbishop of Canterbury.

One thing is certain in regard to fame; for most of us it will be very brief in itself; for all of us it will be transient in our enjoyment of it. When death has dropped the curtain we shall hear no more applause. And though we fondly dream that it will continue after we have left the stage, we do not realize how quickly it will die away in silence while the audience turns to look at the new actor and the next scene. Our position in society will be filled as soon as it is vacated, and our name remembered only for a moment—except, please God, by a few who have learned to love us, not because of fame, but because we have helped them and done them some good.—Henry van Dyke.

He who is ashamed of a mean garment will be proud of a splendid one; he who, not content with a slender meal, is disquieted with the desire for a more sumptuous one, would also intemperately abuse those dainties should they fall to his lot; he who bears a private and mean condition with discontent and disquietude, would not abstain from pride and arrogance should he rise to eminence and honors.—John Calvin.

Trouble is not such a new thing to you. But it is to me, and I hear it saying many things. Some I never knew before; others one has heard, but never believed; others one has heard often, and as often forgotten. But the great benediction of it seems to lie less in the personal elements than in the larger views one gets of what is permanent, eternal and worth living for.—Henry Drummond.

Mary's ointment was wasted when she broke the vase and poured it upon her Lord. Yes; but suppose she had left the ointment in the unbroken vase? What remembrance would it then have had? Would there have been any mention of it on the Gospel pages? Would her deed of careful keeping have been told over the world? She broke the vase and poured out, lost it, sacrificed it, and now the perfume fills all the earth.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

Unworldliness is the spirit of holding all things as not our own, in the perpetual conviction that they will not last. It is not to put life and God's lovely world aside with self-torturing hand. It is to have the world, and not to let the world have you; to be its master and not its slave. To have Christ hidden in the heart, calming all.—F. W. Robertson.

Put a seal upon your lips, and forget what you have done. After you have been kind, after love has stolen forth into the world and done its beautiful work, go back into the shade again and say nothing about it. Love hides even from itself.—Professor Drummond.

Missionary.

Facts and Statistics.

The reports, tracts and other literature of our own Executive Committee show the following facts concerning the foreign missionary work of our Church:

Nine missions, with forty-four occupied stations.

One hundred and seventy missionaries, with one hundred and thirty-one native helpers.

Eight volunteers preparing to sail, several under appointment, and more offering themselves for service.

Six thousand, six hundred members in eighty-four native churches, with ten thousand adherents. Ten churches are entirely self supporting.

An increase of 20 per cent in church membership on the foreign field last year; at home, 6 per cent. A larger number received into the foreign churches than in any one of our home Synods, though each Synod has a larger working force.

One hundred and eighty thousand dollars spent for Foreign Missions; two million, one hundred and eight thousand dollars for work at home. The number of people to be evangelized equal.

Ninety-four per cent of the amount contributed for Foreign Missions actually spent on the field; six per cent used at home for securing funds and directing the work.

The General Assembly has called for $250,000. No less amount will adequately support the work and meet the urgent demands for extension.

The total gain for the past fiscal year was $15,575. The 122 Forward Movement churches show an increase of $11,790, and the increase from legacies was $4,218. The thirty-seven churches pledging the support of missionaries prior to the inauguration of the Forward Movement paid during the year a total of more than 99 per cent of their pledges.—Selected.

Re-establishment of Mission Work.

In the four provinces of Chihli, Shantung, Shansi, and Honan (not to speak of Manchuria) where the Boxer cyclone was the most destructive, it is interesting to note that after three years the visible outcome has been the re-establishment of almost all mission work upon a better basis than before, and in most cases with an incomparably better plant. This applies especially to the missions in the great capitals of Peking, Pao Ting Fu, and T'ai Yuan Fu, as well as to the fine college of the American Board at T'ung Chou, now rebuilt in an almost ideal location. Another result of the general upheaval has been the marked and widespread impulse to co-operation between Protestant missions. The fact that several of them have cordially combined in general educational and more lately in medical, and in theological education, is known in the United States, and undoubtedly approved of wherever it is known.—Christendom.

A heathen in Burma happened to obtain a copy of the Psalms, left behind by a traveller who stopped at his house. For twenty years the man worshipped the God revealed in the Psalms, using the fifty-first Psalm as his daily prayer. Then a missionary appeared on the scene and gave him a copy of the New Testament. The story of salvation through Jesus Christ brought great joy to his heart, and he said: "For twenty years I walked by starlight; now I see the sun." This is but another illustration of the old Pauline idea that the law, or the Old Testament generally, is a schoolmaster to lead men to Christ.

There is a Presbyterian mission at Point Barrow, three hundred and fifty miles north of the Arctic Circle, being the most northern mission station on earth, except one, Upernavak, Greenland, being twenty miles further north. At Point Barrow is a Presbyterian missionary and wife, and a government teacher and wife.

Sunday School Lesson.

BY REV. H. G. HILL, D. D.

Death of Saul and Jonathan.

I Sam. 31, 1-13. Sept. 6, 1903.

When David had gone into the land of the Philistines Saul ceased to pursue him. But his domain was soon invaded by the Philistines, his restless enemies. In his perplexity and distress, he sought counsel of Jehovah but the Lord, answered him not either by dream or vision. Receiving no communication from God he determined to employ unlawful means for holding communion with the spiritual world. He seeks the witch of Endor and urges her to call up Samuel from the realm of the dead. To her evident surprise the Lord sends Samuel to speak with Saul and to reveal to him the future. The seer tells the distressed king that because of disobedience, the kingdom is rent from him and given to David, that the Lord would deliver him and Israel into the hands of the Philistines and that on the morrow he and his sons would be among the dead. Unnerved by these grievous tidings, Saul engages in battle the next day on the fatal field of Gilboa. Our lesson describes this struggle and its results present several subjects for consideration.

1. Saul and Jonathan Slain.—Both father and son fall in the battle, but their deaths differ as much as their characters. Jonathan was the nobler man of the two. He sustained his father so far as righteousness allowed, though he would not unite with him in persecuting David and exposed himself to his father's displeasure by defending his friend. He kept his covenant with David even when he understood that the kingdom was assigned to him and when his father's anger was kindled against himself, when, though foes invaded the land, prompted by filial piety, and patriotic devotion he stood by his father in the deadly struggle and defended his country from invading oppressors. He fell among the slain, by the sword of the enemy, but his death was that of a faithful son and a patriot hero. Sadly unlike this was Saul's departure from earth. He had forfeited Divine favor by transgression. The Lord had departed from him. He had used witchcraft and sought a knowledge of the future by unlawful means. He had commenced the battle with courage, but with a Divine assurance of defeat. He was sorely wounded by his enemies and dreading their malignity he died a despairing suicide. He passed away hopeless for this life and for that which is to come.

2. Saul and Jonathan Dishonored by the Philistines.—The dead bodies were treated with that barbarous ferocity more like to brutes than human beings and which mankind have ever manifested wherever the benign influences of the Gospel have not been felt. The victorious foe cut off the heads of Saul and his son, and fastened the naked bodies to the walls of Bethshau.

They put his head and armor in the house of their idol, and published his defeat and humiliation through the land of the Philistines. How vividly does Saul's sad end illustrate God's words, "Them that honor Me I will honor and they that despise Me shall be lightly esteemed."

3. The Tributes to Saul and Jonathan.—After their death a signal tribute of gratitude and honor was paid to father and son by the men of Jabesh-gilead. Saul, in the early part of his reign, had done heroic service for the men of Jabesh in rescuing them from the disgrace and dominion of Nahash the Ammonite. They did not forget the benefit bestowed and in the day of Saul's downfall manifested their gratitude by an act of noble daring. Their valiant men went all night, entered Bethshan, took the bodies of Saul and his sons from the wall and gave their remains honorable burial. Thus was Saul's heroic deed in the beginning of his reign acknowledged and rewarded by his beneficiaries. Heroism ever brings reward and a virtuous deed shines when the doer has departed.

Westminster League.

BY REV. HUGH W. HOON.

Feasting that Makes Lean Souls.

Ex. 16: 2-5; Ps. 106:13-15. Topic for Sept. 13.

"Frequently, the acquisition of earthly riches, so far from developing noble manhood, tends to the growth of a spirit of profound selfishness, the very breath of which is stagnation to every noble impulse of human helpfulness." This is a fact of too common observation. It was truthfully said of a millionaire who died a few years ago, that while he was one of the richest men ever born into the world that he was one of the most pitiful little souls that ever went out of it. It is not riches, but rather the spirit and manner by which wealth is often acquired, that makes it impossible for a "rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven."

Israel murmured against the Lord and their complaint resulted in God's sending the quail. The thing which ordinarily would have been a blessing, became a curse to the people. They had, so to speak, wrested the gift from God. Had there been no other bad result, the very fact that a rebellious spirit was in the people would have made the thing a curse to them. This teaches us that many things which are good in themselves may not be good for us individually. Many a man has become spiritually bankrupt just because he has attained wealth. The truth is, there is nothing material, no difference how good it may be in itself, that may not become a curse. Whether our possessions are to be a curse or a blessing depends on two things, how they are acquired and how they are used. Anything that is acquired dishonestly, is sure to have a reflex influence for evil upon the person so making the acquisition. It may never have a material effect, but it surely will have an effect upon the heart and life of the person who has gained the possession wrongfully.

But it is not only the class who wrongfully acquire wealth who have lean souls thereby, but those who use wealth, no difference how honestly gained, selfishly or for wrong purposes, are going to experience a leanness of soul.

This applies to the use of anything we have. We may so use our time as to bring about this soul-leanness. Pleasure is a good thing in its place, but when the seeking of pleasure becomes the ruling passion of a life, then the soul is rapidly becoming lean. This is selfishness, and selfishness and a well developed soul do not go together.

But we may come at this in another way and say that all forms of intemperance is a feasting that leads to leanness. We all know that the use of alcoholic beverages is not in keeping with the growth of the better part of one's nature, but do we realize as well that all indulgence of the appetite dwarf the soul?

Then intemperance is not confined to the physical nature, but it applies with equal force to the intellect. Men emphasize out of all proportion some principle which they imagine they have discovered and try to make all truth square with their hypothesis and inevitably this leads to a drying up of the soul-life. We need to heed the warning of Jesus, "if therefore the light that is in you be darkness, how great is that darkness?" If our knowledge does not lead us to Christ then it is taking us away from Him.

A life which is simple and trustful, but which makes us see Jesus more plainly, is better than the life of feasting, either physically or intellectually, which makes the soil in our hearts grow thin.

The one general lesson which we should learn from this is to be content with what God sends us, even though it may seem to us that a different lot in life would be better. God knows what we need, and He can see too often where a more bountiful supply of this world's goods would be harmful to us. If God has seen fit to give us abundantly of His bounty let us ask Him to enable us to keep these things from making our souls lean.

Contributed.

An Awful Book.

I refer to Rev. Thos. Dixon's novel, "The Leopard's Spots," which has been alluded to in the columns of The Standard, but never reviewed at length. I grant that it is a masterful book, a stirring romance binding together the social and religious ideas of a brilliant mind upon questions of absorbing interest. The literary finish of the book is of the first quality. Both the darker and lighter shades are laid on with a master hand. The historical setting, taken from the whole range of Southern politics since the War, furnishes villains of the first order. Haley, Tim Shelby, Rev. Ezra Perkins, Allan McLeod, "James Mileage," "Hog Scroggins," constitute a rogues' gallery of which any novelist might be proud. By a most clever touch of the novelist's art Mr. Dixon resurrects Simon Legree from the pages of Uncle Tom's Cabin, and makes him the chief rogue of the many who stand out against the lurid background of the reconstruction period in North Carolina. The scene where George Harris, (colored) pet and protege of Senator Lowell, (of Massachusetts) asks the Senator's permission to address his daughter, Miss Helen Lowell, is another master stroke.

And on the other hand, Miss Sallie stands out a life-like, radiant picture. Mistress of all the arts of coquetry, yet absolutely sincere, tender hearted as a child, yet mercilessly smashing the hearts of a hundred admirers, then giving herself with an entire devotion for all time to the man of her choice—no male reader but will echo the last words of the book, "I'd rather be the husband of such a woman than the ruler of the world."

The older women, Mrs. Worth, Miss Sallie's mother, and Mrs. Durham, are companion pictures worthy to hang in the same gallery of fair Southern women.

But great as is its literary charm, this is not the chief attraction of the book. What holds you from start to finish is its picture of the bleeding, impoverished South, rising from the ashes of defeat, rebuilding her civilization, overthrowing the black terror which had fastened at her throat, and driving from her borders the thieves who were despoiling her. The double climax of the story, which the author works up with great effect, is the overthrow of the Carpet-bag regime in 1876 and the Scalawag domination in 1900.

And yet there is no appeal to sectional hate, the issues of the War are accepted, secession and slavery are buried at Appomattox; the chapter on the New America thrills with a patriotism that knows no North or South, East or West. It is no wonder that the book has been universally popular, and since its publication in March, 1902, has reached the remarkable sale of 94,000 copies (I have the figures direct from the publishers.)

And yet it is an awful book. A lady of my acquaintance, a woman of the strongest character and high culture, was suffering from insomnia; and one sleepless night she took this book from her husband's study table, knowing nothing of its contents, and sat by the fire down stairs to read until she was sleepy enough to go up stairs to bed. The gray light of morning found her reading the last chapters, too scared to cross the hall and go up stairs, too fascinated with the gruesome story to put down the occasion of her fears.

The book buying committee of one of our best managed Y. M. C. A. libraries struck off The Leopard's Spots from its list of intended purchases. Their objections were to the details in some of the chapters, rendering the book in their judgment unsuitable for general reading.

My own criticisms, however, are not only upon these details, but strike at two features which are the vital points throughout the whole work.

First, you have here a book written by a minister of the gospel, which brings up the subject of religion again and again, and which leaves out of view the first principles of the gospel of Christ. One of the leading characters is the Rev. John Durham, D. D., a Baptist preacher. His portrait is painted full length, his views on social and religious questions form one of the main features of the book, and doubtless convey the author's own ideas. Yet none of the distinctive truths of Christianity appear in Dr. Durham's preaching or conversation, or are applied by him to the solution of the great problem which the book handles. For example, how does this sound from a preacher's lips? "Can God make a stone so big he can't lift it? In either case he is not omnipotent. It looks like he did just that thing when he made the negro."

The other main character, the hero of the story, Charles Gaston, is converted (p. 255).

In college he had come to doubt everything, God, heaven, immortality. He is brought back to faith, and how? By the power of the Holy Spirit working in him a sense of sin and need, and leading him to the atoning blood of a divine Redeemer? Nothing of the sort. By the magic of a woman's love he learns that nature is another name for God, and God is love.

The critical reader, who has had experiences of his own, can hardly help asking, suppose Miss Sallie had rejected Gaston out and out, or, yielding to her father's prejudices, had finally thrown him overboard, where would that sort of religion have landed him?

But this line of inquiry is answered clearly enough, and most tragically, in another one of the personages in the story, Tom Camp. In Tom, a one-legged Confederate veteran, you have a most engaging character, a simple everyday hero, brave as a lion, humble, deeply pious. Tom is a deacon in the Baptist Church, the ideal of an humble Christian; and around him centers the awful tragedy of the book. His oldest daughter is killed in saving her from the clutches of negro ruffians. He is robbed of his little home, taken from him under the forms of law during the shameless reconstruction era. His wife sinks under their troubles and dies, and still he bears up like a man and a Christian, saying, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." Then comes the finishing stroke. All that is left him is his youngest daughter, a fair flower, twelve or thirteen years of age. She is snatched from him by a nameless fate, and then this modern Job gives up the fight, curses God and dies a raving madman. And from Mr. Dixon's religious point of view this conclusion is not to be wondered at. A religion which sums itself up in the one single truth of Scripture, "God is love," is a miserably inadequate solution of the darkening enigmas of human life. The God of the Bible, who is also the God of providence, is not only loving, but just, holy, sovereign. He hates sin and will by no means clear the guilty, he does his holy will in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth.

The cross of Calvary, where his own Son dies a shameful death in the room and stead of guilty sinners, is at once the expression of his justice and his grace. And the sacrifice of Christ is the one key which unlocks the mysteries of this sorrowful world. When the day comes of crushing affliction, of seemingly unanswered prayer, of a bitter cup which cannot be put from our lips, woe to that faith which does not really know the only true God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent!

One great lesson which a genuine experience of the grace of God burns into the human soul is this: I am a hell-deserving sinner; nothing but the blood of a Divine Saviour stands between me and the infinite justice of God. Nothing then, that God can do with me or mine is hard, bitter or unjust. I deserve eternal perdition, what are the deepest sorrows of this fleeting world, compared with that? Saved from eternal despair, an heir of glory, let come what may I shall sing, "It is well with my soul!"

It goes without saying that you do not catch one glimpse of such a religion as this in The Leopard's Spots. And I do not wonder that on the author's own showing, in Tom Camp's case, religion turns out a woful failure.

Second, equally serious exception is to be taken to another main feature, which in fact gives the book its title and forms its chief purpose from end to end, viz., Mr. Dixon's view of the negro problem. This book cannot but intensify race antipathy. It will make the negro unwilling to receive the help which can only come from the whites; and it will make the white people more unwilling to extend that help. While making this criticism, I need hardly say that with one of Mr. Dixon's ruling ideas on the race question, I am in most hearty accord, which is that social equality between the Anglo-Saxon and the negro means race amalgamation; and at that door the Southern white stands armed to keep it inviolable forever.

But dismissing the idea of social and racial amalgamation as a preposterous and inconceivable abomination, what remains of Mr. Dixon's views is grim enough. He leaves us with but two alternatives, either the deportation of the negro to the shores of his native Africa, or his extermination. If any one doubts that this is Mr. Dixon's view, let him read his last word, what he puts into the mouth of Rev. John Durham, (pp. 459-460). But let these be the only alternatives and see what follows. Inasmuch as the compulsory deportation of the negro involves legislation which could never be gotten from the national government, besides a cost that is beyond computation, and anyway would lead to his partial extermination before you could enforce it, we are left with the shorter and sharper alternative. And this is the black heritage of fire and blood which The Leopard's Spots leaves before the eyes of every Southerner.

Now I do not deny that a race war, resulting in the partial extermination of the negro, is a cloud which must for generations to come lift its ominous shadow above the Southern horizon of these United States. But I do not believe that either the negro's annihilation, or what amounts to the same thing, his enforced emigration, is a necessity. The negro is going to stay here; and the masses of them are going to be, at least in the rural South, what they have always been, the invaluable and indispensable laboring population. I am old-fashioned enough to believe that the ninth chapter of Genesis has fixed the destiny of the negro race for all time. However individuals may rise above it, the curse of Ham is on his posterity, to their latest generation. "A servant of servants shall he be," and what the Almighty has decreed, the Anglo-Saxon is more than willing and abundantly able to carry out. He is not going to shoot the negro en masse, he is not going to send him back to Africa; but he is going to keep him in that position where he must either steal, work or starve. If he steals he is sent to the penitentiary and put to work there, and he is not going to starve. There remains the obvious alternative, as a cotton picker, as teamster and plough-boy, as cook and washer-woman and nurse, the Afro-American is as much a feature of Southern agriculture as cotton seed, cow-peas and crab-grass. The thrifty Southern planter knows what the last three mean, and he is also learning how to manage the "free nigger."

The writer paid a visit last fall to the home of his early manhood, in the heart of the Cotton Belt. There he saw the cotton bale, the stacks of crab-grass and peavine hay, the mule and the colored brother, in most hopeful and harmonious association, under the management of that younger generation of white men who now govern one of the fairest portions of the New South. The only difference from old times that I could see was, that the planter is now "De Cap'n," where his father was "Ole Marse."

But there is another factor besides Anglo-Saxon thrift and ability, to govern, to which we may look to save us from the sombre possibilities which Mr. Dixon portrays, and that is, religion. Mr. Dixon leaves this out of the problem so far as the negro is concerned. In the chapter, "Is God Omnipotent?" Rev. John Durham frankly says to Rev. Ephraim Fox (colored), "I've given you all up. I've said the grace of God is sufficient for all problems. I don't know now." If this is so, the negro tangle will be the first thing which the religion of Christ has taken hold of and not straightened out. But when I say, the religion of Christ, I do not mean the New England fanaticism which hugs the negro to its bosom one thousand miles away, and leaves him to starve at its own doors. And I do not mean the modern gush which prates about the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, and ignores the cross of Calvary. But I mean the religion which I find set forth from Genesis to Revelation. On the one hand, that old fashioned gospel is going to keep the white man from brutality to the negro. It will teach him to look beneath that black skin for a soul to save and a human body to be kindly treated. On the other hand, it will keep the negro from putting himself in a position where the white man will either shoot him, burn him, or drive him into the sea.

As to the effect of genuine religion upon the negroes, it may be well to give some illustrations. I have alluded to a visit to the Cotton States last fall. Riding with a friend who was a physician and knew the whole country, white and black, we passed a negro church with a large school building adjoining it. He told me the history of the school, erected after the War as a colored classical college (on the Miss Susan Walker plan). "That thing," he said, "played out, and now they have a sensible plain school there, managed by the colored preacher who preaches in that church, where a common school education is given and religion and the Shorter Catechism are taught. And," said he, "you can tell a negro who has been to that school wherever you see him. He touches his hat when he meets you in the road." He further went on to speak of the sobriety, honesty and fidelity as farm laborers, which were beginning to characterize the colored community in that vicinity.

And here and there all through the South, there are such points of light in the darkness. Often they are supported by the Southern white people, who have not lost faith in the power of Christ's gospel, both to save a negro's soul, and to make him humble, honest, chaste and industrious in the life that now is. Let any one follow the work of the graduates of our Stillman Institute, and he will see a force there which needs only to be indefinitely multiplied and the two races will live side by side in Christian fellowship, in all kindly relations of daily labor and service, yet as to social equality, as far apart as if separated by the broad ocean which once rolled between their forefathers and ours.

But if any one wants to see what may happen if the religion of the Bible is not applied to the solution of the race question, let him read The Leopard's Spots. There he will see portrayed in all its grisly terror "the black peril" that is upon us, if the negro shall grow in intelligence and wealth and not in grace and humility, and the white man shall increase in numbers and power without the love of Christ and of human souls.

I for one, still believe that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, to the sons of Shem and Japheth first, and also to the sable sons of Ham. When I cease to believe this, I too may quit preaching the glorious gospel of the blessed God, and take to writing novels for a living. Though in this connection, it may be well to say that it is one thing to criticize, and another thing to be able to write this brilliant, powerful, but awful book.

R. A. Lapsley.

Staunton, Va., R. F. D. No. 1.

Sermon to Business Men.

By the Rev. J. Ernest Thacker, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Norfolk.

Romans 12:11—"Not Slothful in Business, Fervent in Spirit, Serving the Lord."

If I were asked to place my finger upon the weakest spot in the work of organized Christianity today I should say it lies in the indifference and inconsistency of those who make up the constituent membership of the Church in the several spheres of their daily life. I have read that in a great assembly of workmen the name of the Church was mentioned and hisses came forth from many lips. Why? Because of the failure of Christians to exhibit the God-given principles of their religion in their daily walk and conversation, doubtless, especially in their business life. But presently the name of Jesus was mentioned and the great hall was filled with shouts and cheers. Why? Because they saw no imperfections in Him, only that which is pure, and holy, and just, and good. If you ask how this state of affairs is brought about, I answer, largely because men are trying to divorce what they are pleased to call the sacred and the secular. It's impossible; all things are sacred. When John caught the vision of the New Jerusalem he said: "I saw no temple therein." Why was there no temple in which to worship and to learn of God? Because every place was holy unto the Lord and every one, in all that they did, was praising Him day and night in his temple. So "holiness to the Lord" should be stamped on all that we do and say and think. You hear much about secular and religious education. No true education can be characterized as secular. I read that when Kepler discovered the laws of the planetary world he leaped to his feet in ecstasy and exclaimed, "Oh, Almighty God, I am thinking thy thoughts after Thee." And he was. Passing on from star to star, from planet to planet, unfolding the beauties of nature, he was teaching, in language more transcendent than the poets, that the heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth His handiwork. So if in your education or the education of your child you are not learning and teaching the relations of the creature to the Creator you are missing the basis of wise education and with all your wisdom not getting understanding.

Hospitals; are they sacred or secular? I look into these new and beautiful hospitals of our city; I see the ministrant angels with tender touch and loving hands relieving the sick, the afflicted and the suffering; and I can hear the Saviour say: "I was sick and ye visited me." If the physician recognize not that principle in his work, he has missed the meaning and the glory of his noble profession. Art is sacred. A rough sailor stood before Munkacsy's great picture of Christ before Pilot; as he gazed he became entranced with the central figure, learned there the sweet story of Redemption, and as he passed out said to the door-keeper: "I have never believed in Christ. I did not believe that anybody believed in Him, but as I have looked at that form and face I have thought that some man must have believed in Him, and it has touched me, and I have come to believe in Him, too. I am going out from this time to be a believer in Jesus Christ and a follower of His." All art as it sets forth the beauties of nature should lift us above them and lead us to pray, "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us." Music! Why as the master musician sweeps the chords he is lifting the soul into the presence-chamber of Almighty. Social life is sacred. Social intercourse is the highway upon which sympathetic messengers travel to the secret recesses of the soul. It's holy ground, whether in the assembly hall, the home or upon the street. Listen to this incident: "In Boston there was born into a house, one day, a little one with a deformed foot. All the household was in tears over the sad event. They were inconsolable. From across the street there came a crippled girl, who asked them the cause of all their distress. They told her that the little one would be a cripple for life. She replied: 'You don't understand the possibilities of such a life. You should not be inconsolable. I have been a cripple all my life, and this world has been a much more beautiful world to me than to many of my friends. Everybody is kind to me. I have only seen the beautiful and the loving side of it. When I cross the streets the policemen will stop all the cars and all the cabs and help me tenderly across. When I get on the train the baggagemaster will put me on the truck and roll me to the car and assist me kindly, tenderly, carefully into the car. I have only seen that which was beautiful and kind in the world.' And she had seen this in the streets. She had learned this divine lesson from the casual meeting of the rough policemen and from the baggage-masher at the depot." Wherever a hand may grasp another hand, a heart throb in sympathy with another heart, there's a place where God may use a man to bless another man, and we may learn to "be kindly affectioned one to another." The home is sacred. There God first established His Church; there are laid the foundations upon which character is builded; there is the source of strength and of manhood and womanhood; there God speaks to us in the early, plastic period of childhood, when life is being shaped and formed for time and eternity. There is no secular. All things are sacred as we see. As this is true in the spheres mentioned above it is equally true in business life.

I. The Basal Principle—First I would call your attention to the basal principle upon which all business should be conducted. Every sin committed is a sin against God primarily. David sinned against the purity of another's home, yet in confessing it he said to God, "Against Thee and Thee only have I sinned." You can't think an evil thought about your neighbor, or do an unkind thing to your business competitor without in that thought and that act first violating the teachings of Christ, and therefore sinning against Him. "Do all things as unto the Lord," saith the Scripture. And Jesus saith: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me. Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these ye did it not to me." Applying the same principle to business life God says, "Be not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Every man's business is to be a voice proclaiming the truths and principles of God to men. It cannot be so if it's a bad business. It cannot be so, no matter how good the business is, if it is conducted on bad principles. A firm telegraphed to a distant city regarding a certain business man this message: "How much is he worth?" The answer came: "His note is worth a million dollars, but his word isn't worth a cent." Soon his note wasn't worth any more than his word. His business went to pieces because he failed to conduct it on the God-given principles of honesty, integrity and righteousness. "What are you doing there?" said a man to a blacksmith as he walked into his shop and saw him hammering away upon the white-heated iron on the anvil. "I'm preaching the Gospel to regions beyond," said the blacksmith as he continued his work, with the desire not so much of making a living as to exhibit the teaching of Christ and to contribute to the spread of the Gospel. I declare to you that that old dingy, dirty blacksmith shop was a place where God delighted to abide and the ring of that hammer was as sweet to God as an angel song, because his name was glorified and his teachings honored there. At all times and everywhere the divine message is, "Whether, therefore, ye eat, or drink or whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

II. Money Loving—In the second place I would call your attention to the fact that the money loving spirit has to a large extent replaced the proper basal principle in modern business life, "The love of money is the root of all evil," says God. Four special sins were connected with the crucifixion of Christ. 1. Envy. "For envy the chief priests delivered Him up." 2, Slander. "And the whole multitude led him unto Pilot and they began to accuse him, saying, We found this fellow perverting the nation and forbidding to give tribute to Caesar, and saying that he himself is Christ a King." 3. Servility. "And Pilate, willing to content the people, delivered Jesus when he had scourged him, to be crucified." 4. But the sin that led immediately to his betrayal was money-loving. "Judas said unto them, what will ye give me and I will deliver him unto you. And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver." The tingle of it sounded like music in his ears, but seeing that he had betrayed innocent blood, he flung it down with a dull cold thud that told of death temporal and spiritual, and went out and committed suicide. Money as the result of honest toil, gain acquired by giving value in return is good. If God has given any man a talent for making money he expects him to cultivate and exercise that talent to its greatest capacity in the fear of the Lord. Every upright merchant is a money maker; every honest laborer is a money earner; every respectable professional man is a money getter; but the love of money is quite a different thing. Misers are money lovers. Persons and not things should be the objects of our affections. When a man loves money more than he loves his brother man, when he is willing to sacrifice the welfare of others for the sake of selfish, personal gain, then he places himself among the money-loving Judases of our days. John Ruskin said: "We do great injustice to Iscariot in thinking him wicked above all common wickedness. He was only a common money-lover, and like all money-lovers the world over, didn't understand Christ; couldn't make out the worth of Him, or the meaning of Him. Now, this is the money-lover's idea the world over. He doesn't hate Christ, but he can't understand Him, doesn't care for Him, sees no good in that benevolent business; makes his own little job out of it, come what will." Who are the money-lovers of our day? you ask. When a man is willing to sacrifice his higher interests and his spiritual welfare for worldly gain he makes of himself a common money-lover. "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" When a man is willing to sacrifice the welfare of others for personal gain he becomes a money-lover. Christ says: "It must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh! Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea." Honest work, service and toil bring in gain, but they likewise contribute to the welfare of others. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." "In honor preferring one another." "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others."

III. Curious Arts—J would, in the third place, call your attention to some curious arts in our modern business life. 1, There is a strange and unnatural way of inflating and depressing the market. "Getting corners" on certain things. Deceiving people as to value and supply. An ordinary pick-pocket we call a thief; a gentlemanly pick-pocket we call a shrewd business man. It's making an unnatural condition of affairs. It is, sometimes, growing rich by making false impressions. Deceiving people, wilfully, is lying and the Bible says "all liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth forever and ever, which is the second death." 2, There is a process among us of dealing in supposed substances. You buy wheat and corn and other things that have never been grown. You ask concerning these great deals, where are the commodities, the property values." The more you ask the question the more profound the mystery that surrounds these business transactions and the deeper the darkness enshrouds them. 3, There is a curious way of doing business below cost. Sometimes to close out odds and ends, or to quit business this is done in an honest way. But it seems to be done largely for one of three reasons. It may be done to run a weaker competitor out of business, and is often done for this reason by individuals and by corporations. It may be done to gain a good customer, with the intention of making it back on some one else. It may be done simply as a deceptive method of advertising. What a terrible moral character a man, or a company of men, must have who will deliberately plot the overthrow of a weaker brother, or willingly deceive with his modern methods the general public. 4, The liquor traffic. I have no very harsh words for liquor dealers tonight. The fact that men are found who are willing to conduct such a business does in no wise excuse the mighty people of our republic for legalizing it. The people who permit it are partners in the business, and responsible for its existence. However, I do not believe that men engage in this business because they wish to send more than 60,000 men down to a drunkard's death, a drunkard's grave and a drunkard's hell every year that rolls around, or because they love to hear the cries that come up from broken-hearted wives and mothers; or because they love to see the orphan hungry for bread and clothed in foul and tattered garments. No, but because they see that with the least expenditure of capital and labor they can make more money in this business than any other. Its the money-loving spirit. 5, The last curious thing that I shall mention is the strained relations between labor and capital. The world is closer together today than it has ever been. Men and nations are more dependent upon each other than ever before. Our grandfathers, raising their own food and manufacturing their own clothing, were well nigh independent of the world, while you and I are well-nigh dependent on the whole world. Take a single illustration to which our attention has been called in a recent book—the newspaper. Did you ever think upon how many persons you are dependent for it? How many reporters gathered the news; how many telegraph operators transmitted it, editors sifted it, compositors set it up? How many engaged in making the paper? How many engaged in the transportation lines that brought it to the office; how many in press work; how many handled it from the press to you? Back of all that thousands multitudes were constructing telegraph systems, laying cables, smelting ores, digging in mines, building ship, railway and car lines. All these had to be fed and clothed. So you are dependent on thousands, directly, for your newspaper, and upon a million or more indirectly. Man may no longer say his life is his own and he will do as he pleases with it, because he touches other men. "No man liveth to himself and no man dieth to himself." We are recognizing this. The laborer has things in common with other laborers and so unions are formed. One union unites with another union, thus our great labor organizations. The same thing is in the world of capital. One man and another, having mutual interests, form a copartnership, then corporations, then trusts. The curious thing is that capital and labor do not recognize that they have mutual interests. The one is as necessary to the other as the two wings of a bird are necessary. Clip one wing and both become useless. It's a sin for capital to oppress the hireling in his wages, the orphan and the widow. It's just as great a sin for the laborer not to give honest work and honest hours and manifest an honest interest in the affairs of capital. What's the remedy? Sneer at the Christian religion as you may, talk of arbitration as you will, I declare to you that only the golden rule of Christ will bring in the golden age of man. The problem came before the Christian church in the early ages. Read Acts 19:19-20—"Many of them also which used curious arts, brought their books together and burned them before all men: and they counted the price of them, and found it fifty thousand pieces of silver. So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed." So the principles of Christianity carried into business life today will solve the problems and the Word of God will prevail over the iniquities. For years the almighty dollar has been reigning among our people. It is high time to end this Fetishism of money, that Mammon worship cease to be our national religion, and that the idols be broken into fragments, and molded into coin which shall be dedicated to speaking forth the new divine creed of a mighty people, the creed of Christianity, in the homeland and the far-away places of the earth.

As I think of these great things to-night I have a dream. I have a dream that the principles of the Christian religion are to rule and govern more and more in the affairs of nations and of men as the twentieth century unfolds itself. I dream of a home where the hand that rocks the cradle and thus rules the world will open the pages of the Holy Bible and teach its truths to the future rulers and generations of the world.

I dream of a coming time when the darkness of superstitions, now hoary with age, which hover over heathendom, shall be dispelled. I have a dream that the withered hand of want will not always be stretched out for alms, but that sweet, Christian charity, robed in its garments of white, will minister to all necessities, relieve all suffering and throw her mantle over a multitude of sins. I have a dream that justice will yet find its proper place amid human relations and man will, some day, learn to do unto others as he would have others do unto him. I have a dream that this old world will yet be controlled by the Christian principles of liberty and love, of righteousness and faith, of justice and charity. And my faith in the dream rests in the fact that men more and more are listening to the Macedonian cry, consecrating their money to the spread of the Gospel, praying for the coming of God's kingdom, printing the Bible in the tongues of all peoples, and preaching the Word among all men. God says: "My word shall not return unto me void. It shall accomplish that which I please and prosper in the thing where to I send it." And He's sending it forth to bring the kingdoms of this world to be the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ. I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that, in your home life, social life, business life and church life, you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service; that you may do your part in the fulfillment of God's purposes.

The Proposed University.

For two reasons I write on this subject: as being requested to give my views, and as being a member of a Synod in control of both Columbia and Clarksville.

There are three questions calling for separate examination.

The first is whether a university is desirable. And to answer this we must determine what a university is. It is an institution which does three things: it combines, it specializes, it investigates.

It combines groups of students and teachers in different departments of study so as to have them influence one another. In almost every one of our universities there is a college or colleges providing the courses of a liberal education such as lead to the degree of A. B. Most of our universities now have, or are seeking to have, schools in different departments of study above the college. To carry out the idea fully, some also have academies below the college, and even grammar grades and kindergartens. Some not only admit to different departments or grades in the one institution students of different ages and different stages of progress, but also of both sexes. And most of our universities collect together professional schools around the college and the non-professional post-graduate schools. The Atlanta institution proposes to begin with a male college and one professional school, a theological seminary. In this idea of combination lies the ground for calling it a university.

A university specializes: it provides instruction and facilities in special departments of knowledge beyond what is attempted in the college proper or in the strictly professional school. This is meant by some to be that feature of university work which properly distinguishes it from college and professional school. The college aims to give a liberal all-round training to the man; the professional school aims to give a practical, all-round training for the profession; and the university aims to train the student to mastery of some special line of knowledge. So far the Atlanta institution says nothing of training specialists in any department.

A university investigates: it aims to add to the sum of human knowledge. It does this in two ways: by training specialists for investigation in particular directions, and by giving to specialists facilities for investigation, leisure from other work, and means of publishing results.

By combining in one organism the investigators, the instructors, and the students, of different grades and departments, so that they influence one another, and so far as it effects this comprehensive combination, an institution is a university.

That universities are desirable would appear from the same kind of evidences from which it appears that other schools are desirable, especially schools of higher education. For if education is desirable, so is higher education; and if higher, so also the highest. In fact, as those who deny the desirability of colleges do so from ignorance of what colleges accomplish, so those who deny the desirability of universities do so from ignorance of what universities accomplish. But while all sufficiently intelligent to judge will agree in the abstract that universities, higher institutions of combination, specialization, and investigation, are desirable, the intelligent may differ in a concrete case.

To any such movement as is now proposed certain general objections may be made. In the first place, some, admitting in theory that universities are of use, will feel that practically a university is dangerous as being a breeder of heresies. And there is undoubtedly ground for such a fear. A church is also dangerous in the same way, as the church that crucified Christ. But such grounds of fear are not reasons against having a church or a university, but reasons for promoting the conditions which make for truth. These conditions are just two: the maintenance of a life obedient to the truth already known; and freedom of thought and utterance, a freedom to be permitted to err in order that it may be secured to truth. It is difficult to secure either of these conditions in a university just as it is difficult to secure them in any society or community; but it would certainly be no more difficult to secure them with a university than without it.

On the other hand, some may say that the Southern Presbyterian Church is not capable of conducting a university, since it is too conservative in principle and spirit to permit that freedom which is the breath of life to a university. If this is true, it is serious; for it is saying that our Church is incapable of the best intellectual life. But the fear is based on a misapprehension and a fact.

The misapprehension misconceives the motive of university freedom. It is not a freedom to teach any opinion with impunity. In the nature of things, the inevitable consequence of teaching opinions, right or wrong, is to win confidence with those who are led to accept them, and to lose more or less confidence with those who are not led to accept them, but to reject them—confidence in one as a thinker or leader. And loss of confidence must affect the relations based on confidence, whether that be the relation of a pastor and his congregation, or of a professor and his university's management. There is no institution in the world which grants such a freedom of teaching. But the ideal university, as the ideal Church, will grant to every thinker within the opportunity to be heard by his intellectual equals willing to learn new truth from him, and, confident that truth is not imperiled by investigation and debate, will foster inquiry and discussion free, not altogether from the danger of losing place and salary, but from the danger of being imprisoned from competent hearers.

And the fact is that in our Church there is granted, in theory, and largely in practice, precisely such real intellectual freedom. This has led in recent years to much discussion, in which men have been fully heard by their peers, with a fullness and freedom unsurpassed in any university in the world. Whatever one may think of the decisions reached, he should not deny that freedom has been allowed. But from the fact that there has been much failure to convince, some have hastily inferred the restraint of intellectual freedom among us.

Our Church, then, is a comparatively fine soil for a great university, furnishing in large measure both the conditions of conservation of the truth and the conditions of intellectual freedom needful for a true university. If now one is tempted to object that a university is not needed, the answer is ready and convincing on two grounds.

We need a university among us for our own people. Our young men are going to universities; shall they have one of our own to go to? Universities in other parts of this country and in other churches (for even the Roman Catholics have their universities) are the most powerful engines of propagation. We have correctly said that a university combines and specializes and investigates, and does all in an atmosphere of intellectual freedom; but thereby it most effectually propagates. And a university conducted according to university principles just as fully absorbs and propagates the beliefs of its environment as does a newspaper. If, then, we have an environment conservative of truth, we need a university to preserve that environment from destruction.

And we need a university for the good of others. We are not isolated. We are in communication with all the parts of our country, and with all its schools of thought, yea, with all the intellectual world. All the intelligent world is now one debating society, and we are listening members, whether speaking members or not. But we should speak; and the modern voice that reaches farthest and deepest is the university. We need a great university. This is the one conspicuous need of conservative Christianity in America today.

One other objection remains, that the operating of a university is outside the sphere of a Church. If so, in exactly the same sense it is outside the sphere of a Church to operate a college. Whether the proposed university shall be under the control of our ecclesiastical courts, or under the control of a board appointed by them, or under that of a self-perpetuating board and thus theoretically a private institution, is a question with which we do not here undertake to deal.

We have endeavored to show that a Southern Presbyterian University is desirable and possible.

Let us turn to the second question: whether the proposed movement will give us such a university.

Is Atlanta the right location? It is the most central of the larger cities of the South, and the largest of all the cities available now. Twenty years hence Birmingham would probably be preferable, but it is out of the question now. Our university should be central to our people and any university must be in a city or be so rich as to constitute a city.

Counting the Synods of Florida, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia, as east of Atlanta, and the other Synods as west, and counting Arkansas, Kentucky, Missouri, North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia, as north, and the others as south, we had a year ago, in round numbers, 120,000 communicants east, and 110,000 west, of Atlanta, and 135,000 north, and 95,000 south. The greater relative increase in the Synods to the south and west will soon make Atlanta our center. Our Birmingham churches had about 2,000 communicants; Nashville, about 2,500; and Atlanta, more than 3,000,—so that in Atlanta we have the largest local membership anywhere in the central territory, and indeed the largest in all our territory. For even Richmond has fewer Presbyterians than Atlanta.

Will the resources be sufficient for the beginning of a university? It is understood that Atlanta contributes $250,000 for site and buildings, and that from Columbia and Clarksville would come as much, each for theological seminary and for college. If the mistake is not made of putting too little in a site, the institution would begin with a site equal to the demands of future development, and with buildings ample for the present demands. The productive endowment for theological education would be equal to that of Columbia and Clarksville combined,—enough for a beginning. And the productive endowment for college education would yield an income say of $12,000 to $15,000. The tuition fees added to this would probably pay all other expenses and much of the president's salary (which ought to be $5,000 at the least), having at least $10,000 for professors' salaries,—say $3,000 for one man, $2,000 each for two, and $1,500 each for two.

This would give a college faculty of six, counting the president, two of them men of high and established reputation, two of them men of equal qualifications as teachers, and two of them young men of promise. This is a small beginning for a college; but even so small a faculty properly selected would command instant confidence and distinction.

But where is the university? In this seed. In the combination to begin with in the establishment or affiliation of professional schools; in the affiliation of Agnes Scott; in the establishment of graduate schools as increasing endowment permitted; in the immediate beginning and the endless continuance of gifts; and in a rightly selected president. For establish this institution, and call to its head a man foreordained and qualified for this work, whose name would instantly command the attention and the confidence of our people and of the educational world, and our university is born.

But do not call it the Southwestern, for it should not be for a section of the Church. Do not call it Clarksville-Columbia, for hyphenated is next to asphyxiated. Do not call it Atlanta, for that name is already appropriated. Do not call it by the name of some donor, for then others may care less to contribute. Call it Union University. Let it be the union of Columbia and Clarksville. Let it be the union of theology and science.

And, if God so permit, let it celebrate the union of our Church and the Dutch Reformed.

The third question remains, Can we get this institution without too great a sacrifice? If the plan is to abandon both the Columbia and the Clarksville plants, and to give up the establishment of a college in Alabama as well as a college in Georgia, then the plan is objectionable. That would practically mean one college at Atlanta instead of three colleges in three States, and this one college necessarily more expensive and certainly attended by fewer students than the three. And if we succeed in building up a real university at Atlanta, it will need as feeders a college in Alabama and a college at Clarksville, as certainly as it will need our other colleges.

In no case can the buildings and grounds at Columbia be removed. If they must continue to be used for theological education, let them become the property of Stillman Institute. If this does not seem advisable, there is another pressing need which they might supply, a home for a training school for other church workers than preachers: church officers, Sunday-school or Bible teachers, women missionaries.

The buildings and grounds at Clarksville and some part of the endowment cannot be removed. Let that continue in use for a college. We shall still need a college in that region. Not one-fifth of those college students that would be drawn to Clarksville could be drawn to Atlanta.

Let the college in Alabama go on to establishment and success, to be a feeder to the university at Atlanta; or, if that institution should fail to develop into a real university, to become the nucleus in the future of that great Southern Presbyterian University, which is going to be.

Our conclusion is, that a university for our Church is desirable; that the Atlanta movement would probably develop into a university; and that this movement can and should be so carried to consummation as not to put an end to theological education at Columbia, or a college education at Clarksville, or to the establishment of a college in Alabama. F. P. Ramsay.

“Courage may become the habit of life, but it never really grows easy. There is always required the summoning of the highest power that is in us before we can do the hard, brave thing. To hold to the path of high purpose, to do our best rather than to do what is easiest, calls for the exercise of all manhood's finest abilities.

Pray hardest when it is hardest to pray.—Charles H. Brent.

CONTENTS.

	Page
EDITORIAL:
Event and Comment.....	3
A Neglected Beatitude.....	4-5
Jesus and John the Baptist.....	5
Speculation and Gambling.....	6
Review of Contemporaries.....	6-7
DEVOTIONAL:.....	8
MISSIONARY:
Facts and Statistics.....	8
SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON:
Death of Saul and Jonathau. Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D.	9
WESTMINSTER LEAGUE.
Feasting that makes lean Souls. Rev. H. W. Hoon	9
CONTRIBUTED:
An Awful Book. Rev. R. A. Lapsley.....	10-11
Sermon to Business Men. Rev. J. E. Thacker....	11-14
The Proposed University. Rev. F. P. Ramsay...	14-13
CHURCH NEWS.....	16-19
THE WORLD .....	20-21
The Home Circle.....	22-23
Marriages and Deaths.....	24
The Household.....	24-25
Our Young People.....	26-29
Our Little Folks.....	30-33

The Editor's Chat with the Reader.

Our contributed space is taken up this week with three solid articles, the first of which is from the pen of Rev. R. A. Lapsley. He calls Tom Dixon's book, The Leopard's Spots, an "Awful Book" and we rather think that he proves his point. It is the best review of the book that we have seen. And yet the book with all its exaggerations and crudenesses has been read eagerly at the North, over a hundred thousand of them having been sold, and as the views of the negro problem have been so extreme in that section it may have taken an extreme view on the other side to bring the thinkers to the sensible and sober mean. Another criticism that we have heard in North Carolina is the apparent supremacy of the Baptist Church.

Rev. J. Ernest Thacker's sermon to business men is an excellent one. There is often wanting between the pulpit and the business office a thorough sympathy and understanding. It would do most preachers good to have a good business training before they enter the ministry.

And Rev. F. P. Ramsay has a thoughtful article on the New University. We need an articulation of our Educational System in the Presbyterian Church. We understand that the controlling Synods are in favor of the new movement, as time will show. We are really hoping great things from our Presbyterian University, the South Atlantic University, if Dr. Ramsay will allow us to over-rule the name Union.

PERSONALS.

Rev. J. P. Anderson, of Greensboro, Ala., is at Clinton, S. C., for a short vacation.

Rev. J. D. A. Brown, of Eataw, Ala., is resting at Monteagle, Tenn.

Rev. M. G. Woodworth, of Burlington, W. Va., has removed to Clinton, S. C.

Rev. Martin D. Hardin has declined the call of the Second Church, Charlotte.

The address of Rev. C. T. Caldwell has been changed from Houston to Waco, Texas.

Rev. W. W. Moore, D. D., has returned to Union Seminary, from Winston-Salem, N. C.

Rev. W. M. McPheeters, of Columbia, S. C., is spending some time at Rockbridge Baths, Va.

A church of sixteen members has been organized at Sylva, Ala., by Rev. J. B. Mack, D. D.

The First Church of Anniston, Ala., has called Rev. D. N. McLaughlin, of Chester, S. C., to its pastorate.

Rev. N. L. Anderson, of the Central Church, Montgomery, is spending some time in western North Carolina.

Rev. E. E. Gillespie, of Greensboro, N. C., preached at Steele Creek Church, near Charlotte, on last Sunday morning.

Rev. J. F. Forsyth, of Forsyth, Mo., has taken charge of a mission work in Pulaski county and his address will be Crocker, Mo.

Rev. T. F. Haney, of Aberdeen, N. C., has been assisting Rev. J. M. Grier in a series of meetings at Huntersville, N. C., during the past few days.

Rev. Alexander Sprunt, D. D., of the First Church, Charleston, is supplying St. Andrews' Church, Wilmington, in the absence of the pastor, Rev. Dr. A. D. McClure.

Rev. Jesse W. Siler, of Seguin, has received and is considering a call to the Church at San Angelo, Texas. Mr. Siler has just returned to Texas after his vacation spent in western North Carolina.

A note from Rev. G. L. Leyburn, D. D., of St. Louis, says: "Have just heard that Dr. Farris passed away today, Aug. 28. This is not unexpected, for his friends have known for weeks that the case was hopeless. A good man and a strong one has entered into rest."

Church News.

FOREIGN.

Presbyterian Mission Polity.

In the Shanghai Conference of 1901, composed of representatives from eight different Presbyterian bodies, comparison disclosed three types of Presbyterian Polity.

1. The Mixed Presbytery—consisting of Native and Detached foreign Presbyters, mainly represented by the Northern U. S. A. Presbyterians.

2. The Co-operative Presbytery—composed of Native and Ambiscent Foreign Presbyters, evidenced by the English and Dutch Reformed Presbyterians.

3. The Autonomous Presbytery, to consist of Native Presbyters exclusively. This latter type has not yet been constituted in China, but is nominally the plan of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

In the discussions that followed, the Mixed Presbytery was open to the objection of hasty organization, urged by foreign Presbyters and the precipitate expulsion of missionaries by the Native Presbyters when the latter class was in majority and on equal terms.

The Autonomous Presbytery disclosed its high ideals but was shown to be at present impracticable on account of the character of the Chinese, diversity of dialect, distances, expense and failure to provide adequately for discipline, administration and extension.

The Co-operative Presbytery made the best showing, guarded more critical points, provided for more of the necessities of the present situation and promised as much for the future as either of the other plans.

As a basis of union of all the Presbyterian adherents in China the Co-operative Presbytery has more advocates than either of the other two.

The Presbyterian Council of Korea prefers this plan also.
Kashing, China. W. H. Hudson.

CUBA.

The address of Rev. P. H. Hensley, Jr., of our Cuban Mission, is changed to Camajuani, Cuba. Camajuani is the new station opened by our workers in that field, and it is a promising mission. Mr. Hensley writes that they have about gotten everything in order for aggressive work, and the people seem unusually intelligent and open to the gospel.

AFRICA.

Rev. J. E. Phipps, after having spent nearly eight years in Africa, says he does not expect to return to America for a long while, if God will permit him to stay in the field. In explanation he adds: "My father and mother are dead; brothers and sisters are scattered in the West Indies; I feel just as comfortable here as anywhere else, for I have not seen my way clear to go, but I have seen it to stay."—The Missionary.

Letters from Mr. Sheppard and Mr. Hawkins, our colored missionaries at Luebo, speak of a visit made the last of May by the judge of the Kassai District. He sent a letter in advance, stating to the missionaries that he would make the visit. He encamped at a trading-post about a mile from the mission. He spent several days with the missionaries, expressed himself as being much pleased with the work being done and the character of the natives under the influence of the mission. He attended one of the services, and at the close of the meeting spoke to the people, approving of the work being done. As far as could be seen the visit was entirely friendly and the officer expressed the feeling that more frequent conferences between the missionaries and officials would lead to a better understanding.—The Missionary.

VIRGINIA.

RICHMOND.—At the Grace Street Church the Rev. Dr. Strickler, of the Seminary, preached in the morning and Dr. A. D. McClure at night.

At the Second Church Dr. McClure, of Wilmington, occupied the pulpit again, preaching to a good congregation on the friendship of Jonathan for David, marking the principles of our devotion to "Great David's Greater Son."

Dr. English was in his pulpit at Westminster, and in the Church of the Covenant the Rev. I. E. Yohannan preached what will probably be his last sermon in America before his return to Persia.

The Rev. W. S. Campbell preached in Manchester, Mr. Cook and Mr. Walthall were in their pulpits at the Hoge Memorial and Mizpah Churches.

At the service on Sunday night in the Seminary Chapel the Rev. H. H. Patrick preached an excellent sermon on the Bereans who searched the Scriptures diligently and then believed.—Central Presbyterian.

LYNCHBURG.—Rev. Dr. R. H. Fleming, of Lynchburg, with his daughter, Miss Mae Fleming, are visiting Mr. J. A. Jones at Monterey. Dr. Fleming has purchased from Mr. Lunsford his beautiful home near Wier, in Highland.—Central Presbyterian.

ALABAMA.

GADSDEN.—The Gadsden Presbyterian Church has just completed a beautiful annex to the main building for Sunday-school work, at a cost of several hundred dollars. This addition is not only an ornament to the main audience room, but will supply a long-felt need in the Sunday-school primary department. The church has given to its pastor, Rev. R. B. McAlpine, a three weeks' vacation.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

MISSOURI.

The address of Rev. W. H. Albright is changed from Lawson, Mo., to 2915 Jule St., St. Joseph, Mo.

FLORIDA.

Rev. W. W. Powell was released from the pastorate of the St. Petersburg Church and dismissed to the Presbytery of west Lexington August 25. He takes charge of the church at Jackson, Breathett county.

The Presbytery of St. Johns will meet at Wildwood, Fla., Nov. 12, 1903, at 7:30 p. m.

D. L. Lander, S. C.

Two or three active ministers are wanted in the Presbytery of St. Johns. Attractive fields for the right men. Now is the time to come to Florida. Applicants correspond with Rev. J. G. Anderson, D. D., Tampa, Fla.

MISSISSIPPI.

BLOOMFIELD CHURCH.—A meeting of considerable interest has recently been held in this church by Rev. Dunbar H. Ogden, of Columbus, Miss. Six persons confessed Christ, and much good was done. An old lady of ninety-two years attended the services regularly, driving more than two miles in a wagon. Such an example is a blessing to any community.—Southwestern.

CAPE GIRARDEAU.—At last accounts, the body of Rev. J. Leslie Alsworth, who was drowned in the Mississippi, had not been recovered.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Missionary Union of Fayetteville Presbytery.

According to published program, the annual meeting was held August 25th-27th, at Mt. Vernon Springs. From the cordial words of welcome by the pastor, Rev. P. R. Law, until the closing hymn the meeting was earnest and helpful.

Rev. George H. Atkinson, of Monroe, N. C., was present and at the opening service gave an interesting account of the origin and workings of the Lookout Mountain Conference. He also made the Union his debtor by bringing a supply of missionary maps for use during the sessions.

On Wednesday morning, after devotional exercises conducted by Mr. Law, the Union was ready for work.

More than thirty delegates reported and there was a large number of visitors present, to be stimulated by coming into closer contact with the work and the workers.

At eleven o'clock Rev. S. P. Verner made an extremely practical address on the things a missionary should do and should leave undone, to enter the mission field to the best advantage.

At three o'clock the devotional half hour was led by Rev. W. F. Thom and reports from the local societies were read.

These showed an increase in contributions and this is always an index to increased love and interest.

A strong helpful paper on Woman's Work was prepared by Mrs. M. H. Russell, of Rockingham, which was read (because of the absence of Mrs. Russell) by Mrs. J. M. McIver of Gulf, N. C. Miss Anderson, lady principal of Red Springs Seminary, read an encouraging and vigorous paper on "The Outlook in China." It is good to know that so many young girls who are being trained at the Seminary are under the care of a woman so capable and consecrated as Miss Anderson.

Mrs. Sutherland, of Laurinburg, made an earnest appeal to the Union, that its members practice more personal self-denial.

After a beautiful solo by Miss Mattie Lee McIver, of Gulf, Mr. Verner again addressed a large audience at eight p. m.

As many in our Presbytery have had the pleasure of hearing him, it is almost unnecessary to say it was a plea for Africa, that in eloquence, in power and persuasiveness, could not be excelled. Every one who heard it knows where Mr. Verner's heart is. The stereopticon views were superb—and the African scenery beautiful—some of the scenes were pathetic beyond telling.

Thursday morning the Union re-elected the old officers and a new office was created, a manager for the children's work. Mrs. W. S. Lacy was chosen for this work. Mrs. Lacy L. Little addressed the Union at ten o'clock. How I wish all our people could hear this consecrated, earnest, gifted young woman tell of the Chinese Woman's home-life. A more attractive, magnetic speaker one rarely hears, and there is no estimating the good that her speech will accomplish.

And then our own Rev. Lacy L. Little told of the good things that are being done for the Master in our Chinese mission.

The closest attention was given to Mr. Little from start to finish and we are grateful to him for coming to us with his cheering message.

On Thursday afternoon reports from the Children's Societies were read. Under the loving leadership of Mrs. Lacy this part of the work will doubtless be greatly enlarged.

"A sermon to young Women" by Mrs. Lauchlin McDonald, a former president of the Union, was read by Mrs. Dugald Munroe—a sermon that will not soon be forgotten by those who heard it. In order that these forceful papers may be preserved and widely read we will have them printed with the minutes of the meeting.

Miss Elva Bryan read an interesting letter from Rev. H. F. Williams, the editor of our Missionary magazines.

On Thursday night Mr. Little again addressed the Union.

The next meeting will be held at Raeford, N. C., the last Wednesday and Thursday in August, 1904.

The Union was never more cordially received and entertained than by the pastor and people of Vernon Springs, and we take up the new year's work with renewed courage and gladness.

WASHINGTON.—On Thursday, Aug. 13, 1903, a commission appointed by Albemarle Presbytery organized a new church in Nicholsonville, a suburb of Washington. The new organization began with sixteen members; and was named Payne Memorial, in honor and memory of Rev. C. M. Payne, D. D., for so long the beloved pastor of the First Church, whose missionary zeal more than that of any other gave the mother church its present missionary enterprise.

The Payne Memorial Church just before its organization lost perhaps its most devoted friend, certainly one of its hardest workers in the death of Mrs. C. T. Buckman. She gave her life to the cause of the new church and all humanly wondered what could be done when the Lord took her. All hearts were gloomy; but the Lord was with the new work. It was organized in its nearly completed new building. On Sunday, the sixteenth, four members were received. Others are expected to join soon. The work shows that God is with us.

The new church is served by Rev. C. W. McDonald, who entered on evangelistic work in Albemarle Presbytery in May. His works show the man—an earnest, persistent, tireless worker, a strong preacher, and a consecrated soldier of the cross.

The First Church has given its pastor a rest from Aug. 25th to Oct. 1st. Not content with this it made him a present in money that will greatly increase the pleasure of the rest. The pastor hereby expresses his thanks for all this congregation's unceasing goodness to him and his. May the Lord reward them seven-fold in His own gracious way.

MONTEAT.—The Montreat conference for the season of 1903 closed Tuesday evening Aug. 18, with a ringing sermon from the Rev. Ira Landrith, of Nashville, Tenn. This conference has been one of the most successful in the history of Montreat, and the Rev. Walter Holcomb, the manager, has been commended on all sides for bringing together so much able talent. The speakers, by their wide differences in personality and style, have afforded a diversity that has kept the interest keyed up from first to last and the people of Montreat and vicinity have shown their appreciation not only by their attendance, but by a liberal financial support. All expenses of the meetings have been met and the way is clear for future work. Mr. Holcomb is now at the Winona conference, which is being held at Winona Lake, there to confer with Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, Winona conference manager, about Montreat speakers for next season.

LITTLE RIVER CHURCH.—A week's meeting was held at this church by Rev. L. M. Keischner beginning the second Sabbath in August. The good, helpful sermons brought a blessing to many hearts. There were several conversions. On the following Sabbath nine were received into our communion on profession of faith. The sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered.

We thank God for sending us a man to preach His blessed word. We pray God's blessings to be upon him.

PHILADELPHIA.—Rev. C. A. Munroe, of Lenoir, assisted the pastor, Rev. Jno. A. McMurray, in a meeting at Philadelphia Church, Mecklenburg county, embracing the third Sabbath of Aug. Bro. Munroe pleased our people by a simple perspicuous setting of the "precious word." Congregations were large in spite of weather and hearers were attentive. There were eleven additions on profession of faith.

ALBEMARLE PRESBYTERY.—"Lest we forget" I give below the "Missionary Supplies" appointed at last meeting of Presbytery:

Rev. John E. Wool, one Sunday at Shiloh. Rev. J. H. Henderlite to take oversight of Young Memorial until supplied and preach one Sunday there.

Rev. E. P. Bradley one Sunday at Young Memorial, Rev. J. H. Jarvis, needy points in Hyde county, Rev. G. W. Lawson, to take oversight of Aurora and preach one Sunday there. Rev. W. D. Morton, one Sunday at Strickland, Rev. Jas. Thomas, one Sunday each at Weldon and Roanoke Rapids, Rev. F. G. Hartman, one Sunday at Scotland Neck, Rev. W. D. Morton, one Sunday at Nahalah. Rev. F. W. Farries, one Sunday at Dover, Rev. R. W. Alexander, one Sunday at Crisp, Rev. H. S. Bradshaw to have oversight of Dover and preach one Sunday there.

Next regular meeting will be held at Goldsboro, N. C., on Tuesday, Oct. 6, at 8 p. m. E. D. Brown, S. C.

LOUISIANA.

Louisiana Presbytery will meet in Lake Charles, on Thursday, Oct. 1st, at 7:30 p. m.

M. B. Shaw, S. C.

MT. CALVARY.—Rev. B. P. Reid was installed pastor of Mt. Calvary Church, Enoree Presbytery, for one-fourth his time. Dr. T. H. Law and Col. T. J. Moore conducted the installation service.

In a meeting of four days which followed, there were sixteen additions to the church. Thirteen adults were baptized, Rev. W. H. White, assisted the pastor, preaching five impressive sermons. The people were much pleased with Mr. White's preaching. Mt. Calvary will erect a handsome house of worship soon.

B. P. Reid.

Harmony Presbytery will meet at Midway Church, Wednesday, Oct. 7, 1903, at 12 m.

W. W. Mills S. C.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

CHESTER.—We have just closed a meeting of much interest in Pleasant Grove Church. The pastor, Rev. C. G. Brown, was assisted by Rev. J. K. Hall, of Bethesda Church, who preached the pure gospel with great earnestness. There is reason to believe much good was done. There were five additions—three heads of families—one seventy-five years old

MISCELLANEOUS.

Publication Notes.

We are glad to report we now have eighteen Sunday-school missionaries at work in as many Presbyteries, supported in whole or in part by our Committee.

Their names are as follows:

J. E. Robinson, Newdale, N. C.
John G. Barkley, Greenville, Ky.
J. K. Coit, Asheville, N. C.
J. F. Rodman, Goldsboro, N. C.
I. P. Powell, Montgomery City, Mo.
L. H. Query, Westminster, S. C.
John Mable, Clarkston, Ga.
H. C. Brown, Penicks, Va.
R. F. King, Summerville, Ga.
N. B. Morris, Plain Dealing, La.
W. M. Clark, Leewood, W. Va.
J. F. Forsyth, Forsyth, Mo.
Mrs. E. L. Reinhart, Richland, Mo.
P. H. Burney, Coleman, Tex.
H. M. Jenkins, Okolona, Miss.
S. L. McKinstry, Laurel, Miss.
Rev. E. Hotchkiss, Durant, Ind. Ter.
Rev. E. H. Williams (col.), Greenwood, S. C.

Some of these are Seminary students, engaged only for the summer months, but twelve of them give their entire time to this work. They visit families, sell and donate good literature, organize mission Sunday-schools where there is a prospect of permanency, and the ministers hold evangelistic meetings as opportunity offers. Their experience would fill volumes, and their reports concerning the great spiritual destitution in their sections moves our hearts with a great longing to send more workers into this great field "white already to the harvest."

You will rejoice with us in the large increase in the circulation of our papers that has already come since we took their publication and distribution into our own hands, and you will be glad to know something of our plans for the betterment of our papers. The increased revenue which comes with the taking of the papers into our own hands will enable us to employ an editor for his full time, and we shall do this, as authorized by the Assembly, as soon as the right man can be found.

We shall also have the ablest Bible experts of our Church give us, in the "Earnest Worker," the results of the latest scholarship concerning Old and New Testament themes as they relate to the current Sunday-school lessons. For the Primary Department of our work we shall secure an expert, who will present the lesson truths in a way that will be most helpful to teachers and pupils alike. Mrs. Elizabeth Preston Allan, for so long the loved and honored editor of "The Children's Friend" and "Pearls for Little Ones," will continue to edit these popular papers.

We purpose to enlarge "The Children's Friend" from a 14x20 page to a 16x22 page on January 1st, 1904, and expect to add a special department for the older members of our Sunday-schools and homes. The "Earnest Worker" will be enlarged to 40 pages, and will contain items each month concerning the progress of all departments of our work.

The remarkable sale and popularity of our new Hymn-Book is a proof that the able committee of compilers did their work exceedingly well. Over 60,000 copies have been sold, and the book is already in use in scores of our churches. The commendations are cordial and hearty, and a notable improvement in the church music always follows the introduction of the new book.

We will cheerfully send sample copies to music committees for examination. We now give a discount of 10 per cent. on all church orders, and prepay delivery charges on new books.

The Assembly Minutes for 1903 are ready for delivery and every minister and elder should order a copy. The price is 25c., post-paid, which is about one-half the actual cost for printing and mailing the book. This loss is borne by the treasury of the General Assembly, and it can be reduced materially if we can circulate 3,000, instead of 1,500 copies.

Sabbath-School Institute.

The Sabbath-school Institute of the South Carolina Presbytery held one of the meetings authorized by Presbytery in the Richland Church Tuesday, August 18. Rev. F. H. Wardlaw, of Piedmont, is chairman of the committee in charge of this work, and arranged the program and presided over the meeting.

The first speaker in the morning was Rev. G. G. Mayes, of Greenville, S. C. He delivered a very thoughtful and carefully prepared address on "Methods of Bible Study." The discourse was helpful by way of condemning many commonly practical methods, and of suggesting the one most instructive and beneficial. The subject was then briefly discussed by several of the visitors.

Prof. Patterson Wardlaw, of the South Carolina College, spoke on "Some Principles of Modern Education Applied to the Sabbath-school." The addresses were instructive, entertaining, and practical. It was so well received that Prof. Wardlaw was requested to discuss some additional phases of the subject in the afternoon.

"Singing in the Sabbath-school" was discussed by Maj. S. P. Dendy, of Walhalla. The duty to make this part of the services an act of worship, and to encourage all to take part in it, was emphasized. In the discussion which followed many practical suggestions were made.

The Institute took recess at 12:30 o'clock, and all present repaired to the grove in the church yard where an elaborate dinner was served.

In the afternoon the congregation again assembled in the church and Miss Kitty Perrin read a paper on "Kindergarten Features of Sabbath-school Work." Miss Perrin has made a specialty of the work, and was well qualified to present the subject. This feature of the work ought to receive the attention of all our Sabbath-schools.

Mr. M. S. Stribling, of Westminster, S. C., made an address on "The Sabbath-school Library." He made many practical suggestions concerning the selection of books for a library. The quality of the books from a moral and spiritual view-point was emphasized.

Rev. T. H. Law, D. D., discussed the "Home Department." He showed how those confined at home for various causes can keep up with the lessons, and thus stimulate their interest in the work.

Rev. J. Fairman Preston presented the subject of "Missions in Connection with the Sabbath-school." His address will stimulate more interest in this cause.

At the evening session two subjects were discussed. The first was the "Preparation of the Lesson," by Dr. Law. He gave a very unique and exhaustive method of analyzing and studying the lesson.

The next subject, "The Proper Relation of Home and Sabbath-school," was presented by Rev. J. C. Shive, of Westminster, S. C. He emphasized the point that the Sabbath-school is dependent on the home for the attendance of the children and for the quality of the work that is done. Bro.

Shive sounded the key-note of the situation. It is to be regretted that more parents were not present to hear this admirable and forceful address, as it concerned specially their duties to the Sabbath-school.

A feature of the meeting was the song service at the beginning of each session so aptly conducted by Rev. F. H. Wardlaw.

We regretted that three of the speakers were prevented from being with us.

The people of our community opened their hearts and homes to the visitors and tried to make all enjoy the meeting.

We believe that all were prepared by this meeting to do better work for the Master in advancing his cause through the Sabbath-school. R. L. Rogers.

The General Assembly's Home Missions.

As the September Collection for Home Missions is at hand, perhaps no better way of emphasizing its importance can be devised than by laying before the Church the following Memorial, which was prepared by the Executive Committee and sent to the last Assembly. Let the whole Church hear this Memorial and make a suitable response in view of the urgent needs and great possibilities of the work:

To the General Assembly in Session at Lexington, Va., Greeting:

Dear Brethren: At the regular monthly meeting of the Executive Committee of Home Missions, May 12, 1903, additional applications were presented in due form to the Committee, asking for an enlargement of the work by appropriations for new and promising work in the West. As the appropriations were already larger than any year of the past, and larger even than our income in the most favorable year, this led to an earnest and protracted discussion of the whole subject of Home Missions.

Whereupon Drs. T. H. Rice and S. L. Morris were appointed to present the matter in a Memorial to the Assembly, which they did in the following form:

"In the discharge of this important duty developing upon us, we would enforce the consideration of this matter at the hands of the Assembly by several serious and weighty facts:

1. The Presbyteries composing the Synods in which the Assembly is carrying on its Home Mission operations, are begging this Committee for $10,000 more than our annual income from all sources. They claim that this is the least amount adequate to the demands of their growing work. In addition to this, Presbyteries in the older Synods are appealing for the Committee's help. The Committee is powerless to respond to these pressing needs of the Church.

2. Applications come to every meeting of the Committee for assistance in erecting new houses of worship. It is exceedingly mortifying and embarrassing to the Committee to be compelled to decline the majority of these worthy cases simply from lack of funds to meet the necessities of the work.

3. Under the pressure of such appeals the Committee undertook last year to increase the appropriations from $32,000 to $37,000, and yet such is the meager response of the Church at large that we are embarrassed as a Committee to meet even this small increased appropriation of only $5,000.

Full Settlement Asked.

To Presbyteries:

Following is a list of the Presbyteries that have paid in full their apportionments of the Home and School debt according to the recommendation of the Assembly of 1902:

Central Alabama, Cherokee, Columbia, East Hanover, Enoree, Ethel, Knawha, Lafayette, Meridian, Pee Dee, Pine Bluff, Roanoke, Tombeckee, West Lexington.

There are some Presbyteries that have paid nearly all, while others have paid nothing. The debt is reduced to $3,600 and enough has been promised to pay this amount if all the Presbyteries will pay in full the amount promised. We earnestly beg that every Presbytery will take up this matter at the approaching meeting and see that its apportionment is paid in full. Please instruct your treasurers when remitting to state that the amounts sent are for the debt, else they will go to the support fund.

Fraternally yours,

Fredericksburg, Va,

S. W. Schmerville.

The World.

The Czar of Russia will visit Vienna toward the end of September.

The Spanish authorities have discovered a plot to assassinate King Alfonso.

Lord Salisbury's funeral took place Aug. 31 at Hatfield, the home of the late Premier.

The Russian Government has indorsed the Zionist movement to establish an independent state in Palestine.

The crossing of the continent of North America in sixty-one days is the latest achievement of the automobile.

During the last fiscal year the total value of Alaskan business aggregated over $20,000,000, exclusive of gold.

The German Government issued a decree removing the prohibition on the export of arms and ammunition to China.

The Grand Army of the Republic has had 8,183 new members added during the past year; its total membership is now 255,100.

The German Reichstag will be asked to authorize the formation of two new army corps, at an annual expense of $9,000,000.

The promotion of General Luke E. Wright to the governorship of the Philippine Islands gives general satisfaction at Washington.

The twentieth anniversary of Wagner's death was celebrated in thirty-eight German and Swiss cities by performances of his operas.

China has conveyed official notification to the State Department at Washington that two ports will be opened in Manchuria on October 8th.

New York City has recently contributed $50,000 toward the support of its blind poor. The average contribution amounted to $49 each.

The rumor that President Wheeler, of the University of California, is soon to retire from his present position is denied by Dr. Wheeler.

The health authorities of Savannah, Ga., are stated to have decided that all weeds growing in otherwise vacant lots must be destroyed, as under suspicion of being the cause of hay fever.

Twelve more Christian villages have been destroyed by the Turks in Macedonia. The Mohammedans appear determined to accomplish the total extirpation of the Bulgarian population.

Because of the increased American interests on the Pacific coast it has been decided to re-establish the Southern Pacific Station and to maintain a cruiser squadron there of from three or four protected cruisers.

The refusal of Dr. Lardy and Prof. Matzen to serve as arbitrators of the claims of the allied Powers for preferential treatment in the settlement with Venezuela will necessitate a postponement of the meeting of the Arbitration Court.

A cablegram from Brussels last week read as follows: The British Minister has notified the Belgian Government that Great Britain formally objects to the granting of monopolies, the employment of forced labor and other features in the administration of the Congo Free State.

The "Cave of Giants" is the name which has been given to a new mammoth cave discovered in southern California in the heart of the Providence Mountains. The cave was discovered by George L. Berg, to whom its existence was revealed by a native Indian who lives on the west slope of the range.

According to an English expert the supply of coal yet remaining to be mined in the United Kingdom amounts to 80,684,000,000 tons, which, at the present rate of mining, would last 370 years. The same authority gives the total output of the world in 1900 as 767,636,204 tons, of which Great Britain produced 229,000,000 tons, or 30 per cent, and the United States, 240,000,000 tons, leaving a balance of about 35 per cent for the rest of the world.—Exchange.

Dr. Papp, a Hungarian deputy, arose from his seat in the chamber at Budapest, drew money from his pocket to the value of $2,000, and announced that the entire sum had been given him as a bribe. The uproar, according to all the press despatches, was "immediate."

St. Paul, Aug. 30.—Delegates are beginning to arrive for the annual reunion of the National Society of the Army of the Philippines, which will begin its sessions to-morrow afternoon in the State capitol. The reception committees say that fully 2,000 will attend.

The Pennsylvania Railroad tunnel under the Hudson River was begun on June 25. The tunnel work is divided into two sections, known as the northern and the eastern sections. The first drill holes for the first shaft were started at noon at the foot of 32d Street and Eleventh Avenue, New York.

A new machine for laying bricks, or rather for adjusting them after they have been laid by hand, has been invented by John Henry Knight, of Barfield, England. The machine does all the skilled labor, and all the necessary hand work is the spreading of the mortar and the placing of the bricks roughly upon it.

Rome, Aug. 28.—Sixteen soldiers of the Italian Army were killed this morning on their way to the Army Manoeuvres. Many more were injured. The trains carrying them collided with a freight. The King hearing of the disaster proceeded at once to the scene and gave his personal attention to caring for the injured.

Australia has decided to follow the example of the United States and Canada in establishing her capital upon neutral territory. The relatively unknown and unfortunately named city of Tumut, in New South Wales, has been selected for the purpose, and a territory of "at least 100 square miles," including this city, is to be set aside as Federal property independent of any one province.—Exchange.

In consequence of the inability of Dr. Lardy, the Swiss minister at Paris, and Prof. Matzen, of the Copenhagen University, to serve as arbitrators at The Hague in the claims of the allied powers for preferential treatment in the settlement with Venezuela, the foreign office has requested the postponement of the date, which was Sept. 1, of the first meeting of the tribunal until other arbitrators are secured.

Sir Thomas Lipton, in an article in the September Cosmopolitan on "My Efforts to Win the 'America's' Cup," draws attention to the personal danger attending the sailing of the modern racing-yacht. In addition to being a menace, these racing-machines, he declares, are practically useless. When the races are ended, they are worth only as much as the metal within them will bring.

A fire occurred on August 24 in a four-story building at Budapest, the two lower floors of which were occupied by a fancy goods firm and the upper floors as residential flats. There were 200 work people in the building, and the escape of many of them and of the residents on the third and fourth floors was cut off by the flames. The damage is estimated at 4,000,000 kronen ($800,000), mostly covered by insurance.

An important gathering of educators, British and Colonial, took place recently in the large room of the Royal Society, Burlington House, London, to confer on the question of establishing closer relations between the universities in all parts of the British empire. Twenty-eight universities were represented. Mr. Bryce, M. P., who presided, said that the conference was the first of the kind that had ever been held; and that it was a unique and great occasion.—Exchange.

The Salonica correspondent of The Daily Mail describes the situation in Macedonia as being one of the utmost gravity. The insurgents are everywhere increasing in numbers and holding their own against the Ottoman soldiers. Anarchy reigns supreme, asserts the correspondent, the vast Turkish army being completely out of control and eating up the country. In a few weeks famine must ensue, causing untold misery. Any outrage in the city of Salonica now would turn the Turks into soldiers and the populace into wild beasts. The country west of the river Varda, towards the village of Monastic, is expected to rise daily.

Tolstoi's last book, Thou Shalt Not Kill, has been suppressed in Germany, on the ground that it contains statements respecting Emperor William which constitute lese majeste.

An Internationall Rabbinical Congress was held at Cracow, Galicia, August 9-15, invitations having been sent to Rabbis all the world over. During this congress the civil authorities were invited at a special time, and a solemn declaration was made in the name of the assembled Rabbis and in behalf of Judaism, that there is not the slightest basis for the ritual murder accusation. Since the Kishineff outrages were committed, nearly forty additional Zionist associations have been formed in Germany and Austria.—Christian Work and Evangelist.

Sofia, Aug. 30.—Despatches received today from Constantinople, Salonica, Monastir and Adrianople, reveal an unsatisfactory condition of affairs in Macedonia. From Salonica come reports of new risings. At Monastir the insurgents are said to be masters of the situation. Telegrams from Adrianople declare that the insurgent bands are continuing their ravages. At the moment that the Porte is asking Belgium to supply officers for the Macedonian gendarmie the Swedish ambassador at Constantinople has notified the Turkish government that unless they receive their pay immediately, the Swedish officers now at Uskub will leave the country.

"The American public is learning at this late day that for years Russian diplomatic agents have been on the closest terms of intimacy with Irish agitators in the United States and have used them to keep alive the opposition to England." "If the secret history of Russia's relations with the Irish malcontents could ever be published, the world would marvel at the amazing revelations, and it would be seen that in all the wide circle of Russian diplomacy having for its object the thwarting of English plans and fostering national hatred of England, no small part of the success of that diplomacy is due to the labors of Russian ministers and ambassadors in the United States."—London World's Work.

Commerce between the United States and Russia made its highest record in the fiscal year just ended. In both exports to and imports from Russia, the figures for the year just ended are larger than at any time within the last twenty years, and the grand total of imports and exports combined is larger than any year in the history of our commerce with that country. The total exports to Russia in the year ending June 30, 1903, aggregated $17,626,812. This total is nearly double that of the exports in 1901, and about 50 per cent. in excess of those of 1902. Imports also show a marked growth for the past year, and the total for the year is greater than in any preceding year in the history of our trade with Russia.

Washington, Aug. 27.—The State Department has received a cablegram from Minister Leishman at Constantinople announcing that William G. Magelssen, United States vice consul at Beirut, Syria, was assassinated yesterday while riding in his carriage. The American minister immediately demanded action by Turkey. Cheekeboy, the Turkish minister to the United States, is hastening to Washington for a conference with Secretary Hay. The minister hurriedly left his summer legation here tonight for Washington. The dispatch of American warships to Turkish waters is a source of the greatest anxiety to the minister. Although confident himself that the Washington government's intention in taking this action was to protect American citizens, he fears it may have the opposite effect, and render more difficult the efforts of the Ottoman government to afford protection to foreigners. The appearance of the European squadron off Beirut will, it is pointed out, be taken by the revolutionists as an evidence of the Washington government's sympathy with their cause and thus arouse them to renewed atrocities.

Rome, Aug. 30.—General Ricciotti Garibaldi, who fought on the side of Greece against Turkey in 1897, has been interviewed regarding the rumor that Greece will support Turkey against Macedonia. He said he did not find it strange that Greece and Turkey should unite in suppressing the Macedonian insurrection. "I myself," he continued, "have urged Greece to come to an agreement with Turkey before Russian pan-Slavism or Austrian pan-Germanism gains the mastery over all the Eastern Adriatic coast. Greece, Albania and Italy have only one road to safety and that is a full, cordial agreement with Turkey. Saraffoff asked my advice in organizing the Macedonian insurrection, complaining that I was unfavorable to it. I answered that I could not approve it, because the insurrection was based on the hope of Austro-Russian intervention, which, if it came about, would be in the interest of those two countries. "My plan is the independence of Albania under Italian protection, with an understanding that Greece, while, contemporaneously, Saraffoff would appeal to Europe for Macedonian independence, renouncing all idea of Austro-Russian intervention. If my programme is accepted, I will appeal to the Italian people, convinced that in 24 hours 20,000 volunteers would follow me to the other side of the Adriatic. I am in hopes that the Italian government would not prevent my carrying out this project, but if it did, I would renounce Italian citizenship."

The theory that this country is entering on a period of industrial depression, as the result of the mysterious causes which bring about a business crisis each ten years, is finding many believers. It is pointed out that in the years 1853, 1863, 1873, 1884, and 1903, within recent history, the country met more or less serious reverses in property, the effects of which were felt for months and years afterward. The twenty-year intervals of 1853, 1873, and 1893 were especially disastrous, while the alternate dates of 1863, and 1884, it is argued, were less serious from a business standpoint. From these observations, the inference is being drawn by some that a moderate depression in business, lacking the severity of the panics of '73 and '93, but yet of great consequence, is upon us. This theory is advanced by its adherents as explaining the continued decline in the stock market, which has put the prices of the principal stocks from ten to twenty points below the panic prices of the famous flurry of May 9, 1901. While conditions and not theories govern the stock market, it can not be denied that the decline in the prices of securities has been ample to discount a severe industrial crisis. Furthermore, the decline has had a very important effect on business. Most fortunately, however, the decline in securities has come at a time when the underlying conditions of the country are exceptionally strong. The trouble has been acute in the stock market and the speculative community, but so far no question has been raised as to the strength and solvency of the banks of the country; the nation's credit was never better abroad, and the great masses of the people are prosperous. At the worst, therefore, the business depression can hardly be acute, and the recovery which will follow any depression will undoubtedly be rapid.—Christendom.

The postal scandal, we are told by a Republican Washington correspondent, will pale into insignificance in comparison with the new Indian scandal, both in the amount of money and the importance of the officials involved, if the charges made by Special Agent Brosius, of the Indian Rights Association, are corroborated. Twenty million acres of land, millions of dollars in money, and the interests of some four hundred thousand Indians are said to be affected. The charges are, in brief, that some of the government officials whose particular business it is to protect the Indians from land "sharks" have themselves formed land and oil companies, and used their official positions to despoil the red men of their land. As one paper puts it, "the watchdogs have joined the wolves." Mr. Brosius names about half a dozen land companies in his charges, and names a United States internal revenue inspector, a United States district attorney, an Indian inspector, a clerk of a United States court, an assistant district attorney, and the chairman and another member of the Dawes Indian commission as officers and promoters of these concerns. These land companies, it is charged, induce the Indians by the temptation of cash payment, or by delays at the office of the Dawes commission, or by the exhausting and expensive delays of litigation, to part with valuable land for next to nothing—often, indeed, when the Indian has no right to sell his land and the entire transaction is illegal. Complaints of these frauds it now appears have been coming in to the Department of the Interior and the Department of Justice for a long time, but by the interesting workings of department machinery the charges have been turned over for investigation to the very men who were to be investigated so that no great strenuousness has marked the prosecution of the charges hitherto. Now that the allegations have been made public, however, more activity is expected.—Literary Digest.

The Home Circle.

Ingenuity in Earning a Living.

Curious dramatic stories are told of some of the women in this country who were forced to go out into the market place to earn their living, and who made of the venture a notable success. One or two of these cases, it seems to me, give a useful hint to other women who must work for their living, but who have not yet decided what trade or business to undertake. The majority live in small villages or farms, and are outside of the great marts of trade. They have not the modern collegiate training nor any especial talent nor accomplishment which will bring in dollars and cents. What are they to do?

The most noteworthy instance which I know of the success of a woman in wresting a livelihood out of the barest conditions of country life is the following:

Mrs. S—, twenty years ago, was the wife of a sea captain who commanded a vessel running from Philadelphia to an English port. She lived in a small house among the New Hampshire hills, with a couple of barren grass-grown acres about it. She was a cripple, unable to take a step alone, but was otherwise healthy and strong, and kept a vigorous watch over her household as she was pushed about her little domain in a bath chair. Her husband's salary was not large and barely sufficient to supply her actual needs. But there were some poor kinsfolk that she longed to help, and there was always in the background the threatening presence of that grim old age waiting for her and the kindly old captain. But there was no comfortable little hoard stored away with which to hold him back. What could she do?

Every day she looked wistfully at the two stony fields surrounding the house. Neither flower nor herb would grow in them, not even a single trumpet vine to feed the bees if she should buy a hive. There were only grass and gravel enough on the waste to keep two matronly old hens alive. How they strutted to and fro, noisy and consequential! One day as Mrs. S— looked at them she suddenly leaned forward eagerly and stopped, smiling while she watched them and their brood. Then she left the window, consulted a book, a pamphlet or two and wrote a letter.

A week later one of the setting bantam hen mothers, going back to her nest after a five-minutes' dissipated run about the field, rustled anxiously as she settled down on her eggs. Were they chilled? Had they shrunken in size? She scrambled off the nest again and eyed them with sharp suspicion, while Mrs. S—, in her bath chair on the other side of the field, scarcely drew her breath in her agony of suspense. If Biddy should throw up the job! The poor lady had no more than ten dollars to spend on a clutch of eggs of a famous breed. But after a few moments of misery she heard the mother bantam's worried cluck as she snuggled down again in the nest. That brood were late in coming out, and there was something mysterious in their build and bearing which vexed the maternal hen mind, but it gave solid comfort to Mrs. S—. The foundation stone of her fortune was laid.

But the fortune itself was long in building. It requires great patience and accurate knowledge and long, untiring care to succeed in any work, even in raising fancy poultry. She persevered, studying by night and working by day, until she had a stock of several kinds of the best breeds. Then she inserted a brief advertisement in a New York paper, giving the names of the breeds whose eggs she was prepared to supply to customers. A few customers came, her eggs were fresh and carefully packed up by her own hands.

At first she managed the yards with the help of one lad; she was wheeled around the grounds all day long and knew every hen by sight and name. As her sales increased she employed a large force of assistants and bought all of the new appliances used in her business. But she gave the same personal care to it, even to the packing of every egg. "It is the Master's eye that brings luck and trade," says the old Dutch proverb.

Mrs. S—'s trade increased with every year, and her eye was watchful until it closed in death. Her venture was absolutely successful. She won comfort and even luxury for herself and her husband, and she filled the last years of her life with a new, healthy interest and with ideas outside of the narrow village gossip. It is certain, too, that these live interests and the outdoor life which she led lengthened her later years.

A curious story, which is absolutely true, was told to me of the origin of a certain liquid pepper sauce which was brought into public notice a year or two ago by its use at West Point in the scandalous hazing frolics there.

In the Attakapas district of Louisiana is a large estuary called Vermillion bay, which opens into the Mexican gulf. In it lie five green wooded islands, each of which, by the way, has its strange romantic history. One of them was for years the secret haunt of the pirate Lafitte. The graves of the buccaneer and four of his followers, looking like brick boxes, can still be seen in the swamp, but they have been broken open by modern savages more brutal than themselves in search of their treasure. The farthest outlying island, "La derniere isle," was the scene many years ago of a tragedy so terrible that it is still spoken of with bated breath throughout the South. A tidal wave one night swept over it, washing away great hotels filled with guests' and happy homes and their sleeping inmates.

The largest island, in which were salt springs, known in the days of Bienville, was, before the civil war, part of the great estate of Judge A— of New Orleans. The A— family often resorted to this island for the fishing or gunning. There was a plantation house on it and quarters for a few slaves.

Now, on the island, there grew a little wild pepper bush unknown elsewhere, and the judge, who was a skillful amateur chemist and a keen epicure, discovered a method of distilling the juice of these fiery pods into a sauce. He presently fell into the habit of making, every summer, a half dozen bottles of this wonderful decoction, which were sent as priceless gifts to certain of his friends.

Then came the war, in which the A—s took an active part. The Confederacy, shut out from the Kenhawa Salines, was in urgent need of salt. A son of Judge A— began to work the springs on the island and discovered the great dry salt caves which now rival those of Poland.

The war was over. The judge died, having lost slaves, office and fortune with the cause. His daughter, with her little family, went back to the island, which was the only remnant of their estate left to them and took shelter in the old plantation house with her brother, who, without men or money, was bravely trying to work the salt mines.

In that terrible year tens of thousands of black-robed women in both the South and North stood with out-stretched, empty hands looking to the right and the left to find work to keep their little ones from starving. The ordinary industries of the nation were shattered, the prices of the necessities of life were enormous, the men who had loyed and worked for them were rotting in countless unmarked graves, their children were crying out for food. That was the real meaning of peace at first. These children must have food and their mothers must earn it. But how? They could find no work, and if they found it, they never had been trained to do it.

I know of no more tragic figures in history than those of the American women in that terrible, empty first year of peace. If the country rose quickly to prosperity, it was due to their endurance and their energy. It needed less courage and strength to march over the Southern hills for a year, to fight a battle and be shot and lie dead at Manassas or Fredericksburg, than to stagger on with a broken heart for years, carrying the weight of hungry children.

But to come back to our island and to the woman who for the first time in her life was fighting poverty there. Most of father's old cronies were dead. One, however, remained, a man of high position in New Orleans. It occurred to her one day that it would surprise and please him if she should send a bottle of the red sauce to him on his birthday, as her father always had done. She had learned the secret of distillation from Judge A—. The pepper bushes had been killed by the workmen at the salt mines. She found one still living, however, gathered the pods, made the sauce and sent it to her old friend.

Now, it so happened, or, rather, God so willed it, that the General had a dinner party that night, and that one of his guests was a New York man with a keen palate for a new taste. The sauce was produced and tested and the General told his Northern guest the history of the judge and his daughter, who was left penniless.

"Penniless!" cried the excited epicure. "If she can make this sauce and put it on the market her fortune is assured!"

The story is told. Given an energetic woman, with a single pepper bush and a secret which would turn every seed into gold and the dullest reader can spell out the conclusion. It required hard work and constant personal care for years, but they were given and success and fortune came. We all know the tiny bottles, with their trade-mark, which are found now on almost every table in the United States. Be sure that a pepper-bush with golden fruit is growing somewhere for every woman who wants work if she knows how to find and use it. A large number of women in the South who had a peculiar skill in making some kind of pastry or confection went into their kitchens, made their cake or jam or pickle and put it on the market. As long as they gave the work their own personal care success invariably came to them. One Southern woman who manufactured pickles and a young girl in the North who makes jellies have amassed large fortunes by their work.

I know a widow in New York who bred Shetland ponies for the market with great success, and a young girl who earned a good income from her Persian cats. More than one Kentucky woman, left a widow, carried on large stock-raising farms with knowledge and skill. Why do I recite these odd bits of gossip? What do they mean? This: A large minority of the women of this country are forced now to earn their own living. Every craft, trade and profession is open to them. Then ask anxiously which will be the more profitable for them to follow.

These stories hint that the best work for any woman is that which she understands best—which lies nearest to her, no matter how ignoble or mean it may be in itself. These lucky widows and girls might have taken to authorship or painting. But they did not understand literature or art, and they did not understand ponies and pickles—hence their success.

What does the color of your horse matter if you know how to ride it with dignity and it carries you through the battle?—Rebecca Harding Davis, in the Interior.

Only a Few of the Cedars of Lebanon are Left.

There are only about four hundred trees, says Lewis G. Leary in an interesting article on "The Cedars of Lebanon," in "Scribner's." High up on the rocky slopes, Hadrian sculptured his imperial anathema against all who should cut these sacred trees; the Maronite peasants almost worship them, and call them the "Cedars of the Lord;" and a recent governor of the Lebanon has surrounded them by a great wall, so that the young shoots may not be injured by roving animals. Yet, century by century, their number grows less.

But if the cedars are few in number, these few are of royal blood. They are not the largest of trees, though some of the trunks measure over forty feet around. Their beauty lies in the wide-spreading limbs, which often cover a circle two or three hundred feet in circumference. Some are tall and symmetrical, with beautiful horizontal branches; others are snarled and knotted, with inviting seats in the great forks, and charming beds on the thick foliage of the swinging boughs.

The wood has a sweet odor, is very hard, and seldom decays. The vitality of the cedar is remarkable. A dead tree is never seen, except where lightning or the ax has been at work. Often a great bough of one tree has grown into a neighbor, and the two are so bound together that it is impossible to say which is the parent trunk. Perhaps the unusual strength and vitality of the cedars are due to their slow growth. When a little sprout, hardly waist-high, is said to be ten or fifteen or twenty years old, one cannot help asking, What must be the age of the great patriarchs of the grove? It is hard to tell exactly. By the aid of a microscope I have counted more than seven hundred rings on a bough only thirty inches in diameter. Those who have studied the matter more deeply think them a thousand years old. Indeed, there is nothing wildly improbable in the thought that perhaps the "Gnarian," for instance, may have been a young tree when Hiram began cutting for the temple at Jerusalem.—The Christian Advocate.

Our Own.

If I had known, in the morning,

How wearily all the day

The words unkind would trouble my mind

That I said when you went away,

I had been more careful, darling,

Nor given you needless pain:

But—we vex our own with look or tone

We might never take back again.

For though in the quiet evening

You gave me the kiss of peace,

Yet it well might be that never for me

The pain in the heart should cease!

How many go for that morning

Who never come home at night!

And hearts have broken for harsh words spoken

That sorrow can never set right!

We have careful thought for the stranger,

And smiles for the sometime guest;

But oft for our own the bitter tone,

Though we love our own the best!

Ah! lip with the curve impatient,

Ah! brow with the shade of scorn—

'Twere a cruel fate were the night too late

To undo the work of the morn!

—Author unknown.

"The Old Reliable"

E. M. ANDREWS.

Headquarters Greensboro, N. C.

Three large stores in one. We are now well prepared to furnish your home at a great saving to you. Our profit saved in the buying (five stores in all). Try a

Royal Felt Mattress.

They are the best. If desired, a month's trial free will be given. Feathers taken in exchange.

Make your wants known by mail and our representative will call on you. Photographs and prices sent on application.

E. M. ANDREWS, 315, 317, 319 South Elm Street.

Pianos Organs, Carpets, Matting.

The Woman's College,

Of Richmond, Va. Was Established in 1854.

Located in the beautiful, historic, cultured city of the South, the College offers unsurpassed advantages in Letters, Science, Music, Art, and Elocution. Educational advantages growing out of the location of this school in a great city, a centre of culture, could not be duplicated on an endowment of less than a million dollars. A large faculty of specialists, trained in the best schools and conservatories of this country and Europe.

The table is supplied with the best the markets of Richmond afford. Rates lower than those of any institution of like grade in the South. The health record of the college is indeed remarkable. Prof. John Hart, after a long experience as teacher in several places in Virginia, wrote Dr. Nelson the following testimonial:

"You ask my opinion of the healthfulness of Richmond. I have taught classes of young ladies in Charlottesville, Staunton and Richmond. The health of my family and students was decidedly best in Richmond.—John Hart."

"Students of the Woman's College from Presbyterian families attend my church and Sunday-school, and are under my pastoral care.—Russell Cecil, D. D., Pastor Second Presbyterian Church."

Send for catalogue. Address

JAMES NELSON, M. A., D. D., President.

Deaths.

He loves him; He who bore the bitter
Cross.

Desires him by His side;
We give him up to Him, and bless the loss
That cheers the Crucified.
For service, bright beyond compare,
He needs him in His presence rare.

PATE.—On the quiet Sabbath of August 9th at Clio, S. C., little Thornton Pate, age 10 years, was summoned from this life by the angel of death. During his extreme illness he was so thoughtful of his dear mother who watched faithfully by his side. We know not why God should take away this only son, but we do know that heaven is richer and brighter.

T. E. S.

VINCENT.—At a meeting of the officers of Bethesda Church, held Aug. 23rd the following resolution was adopted; Whereas, it has pleased God in his wisdom to remove from us our friend, officer and brother, John Vincent, therefore, be it resolved,

1. That we, the officers of the Church, while recognizing the loss we have sustained, bow in submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

2. That we rejoice in the hope that our brother now rests from his labors, and is now enjoying the rest that remaineth to the people of God.

3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to his sister and niece and other loved ones, commending them to the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort.

4. That a copy be furnished the Standard for publication and sent to the family. By order of session.

E. J. Orr, Clerk.

The Household.

When the Unexpected Happens

By Mrs. Rose Seelyek-Miller.

It is said that it is the "unexpected that always happens." Hence it would seem we might reasonably expect the unexpected. But unfortunately if we do try to anticipate all sorts of unexpected things, the real thing that does happen never seems to be amongst those that we have contemplated. There is one field in the domestic economy, however, which enables us in a measure to be prepared for the unexpected. This is making ready, in a reasonable way, for unexpected company. To a city dweller this preparation may not be needful, but many times in the country it has been a satisfaction beyond words.

City people seem to think that country folks are always prepared for company, and are always ready to receive them, and no doubt all are ready to entertain their real friends. But the idea that entertainment in the country costs nothing and that the farmer's wife is always ready, is quite a mistaken one. I have nothing to say however on this side of the question, what I want to say is addressed to those who cannot run to the store or meat market if any one comes unexpectedly. To the country liver the emergency shelf is a boon that will be blessed forevermore if once established. No doubt most country people have access to poultry, but sometimes there are only such fowls on hand as are desired for keeping. Then again I have known the supply of ham to fail before the next reinforcement is ready. Such things as sending the cream to the creamery do occur even in country neighborhoods, and sometimes the butter is such a case runs low. When milk is separated, unless it is saved out before separation, one cannot get milk at will any more than a city woman can, and hens do not lay fresh eggs very plentifully in moulting season. So it would seem that even in the country staple supplies are not always available. One thing we may do and that is try to keep supplied with enough with which we may cook, even if not much is ready prepared. If one will establish an emergency shelf in the cellar or elsewhere, upon which shall be placed things to be used only in case of such need, it will very much simplify the matter of entertaining the unexpected guest.

Some scoff at canned goods, but many of us are only too thankful to get them. Hence for our emergency shelf in times when meat is scarce on the farm, a few cans of condensed soup, of dried beef and even of salmon, cannot fail to be appreciated. Some can fowl for their own use, but I have never tried it. It certainly could be resorted to in cold weather, and even chicken could be simply potted and kept for quite a period of time when the temperature is low.

A can of chicken can be minced and made into a chicken pie on very short notice. Canned salmon is delicious heated very hot with a riotous sauce of butter well seasoned. Even the plebeian codfish makes a dish not to be ignored if dressed with the richest of cream and this thickened a little. Pickles can always be kept on hand, and these should find a place on our emergency shelf. Jellies, too, are nearly always available, and certainly help out a good deal. I know a country woman who nearly always makes a few small cheese, full cream, for home use, and these are at hand during the fall and winter when the garden supply is cut off or limited.

In these days of delicate wafers and cheese sandwiches we may nearly always have a box of something of the sort upon our emergency shelf. If a guest arrives cold and hungry, a little too late for a meal or a little too early, I know of nothing more acceptable than a cup of very hot cocoa or cream of chocolate, with a wafer or cheese sandwich. These are not expected to take the place of a substantial meal, but they will prove appetizing under some circumstances and can be prepared at a moment's notice.

Cream of chocolate is a powdered chocolate sweetened and ready for the cup. All it requires is hot water to make it ready for immediate use. Since using it I find many uses for it besides as a beverage. It will make a plain cake into one fit for company by simply using the same quantity of powdered sugar as you do of the chocolate, wetting them gradually with hot water, blending them and spreading over a cake. By its use you have almost before I can tell it, transformed a plain loaf into one fit for any one if a chocolate frosting could make it so. The cream of chocolate is ever ready for use. It should always be placed upon that shelf, that we may be more ready for the unexpected guest. It can be made into puddings and all sorts of things, and it has the advantage of being more quickly prepared than any thing of the kind I have ever used.

Cookies are just about as good a month old as when fresh baked, unless they are of the soft kind more like cake than cookies. A rich cookie will keep any length of time, and be just as good as when fresh.

A loaf of fruit cake is very convenient in the winter time, for it may be served as a cake or steamed and used as a plum pudding, and is every bit as good. As far as that goes a steamed suet pudding will keep for some time, if preserved in a cool place, and so be ready for use when the occasion demands. I do not by any means want to advocate making things to put away and spoil, what I do mean is simply to keep a few things on hand to make the unexpected guest welcome. We cannot feel half as free and comfortable when we greet a comer, if we are mentally surveying a hopeless larder. But with the consciousness of a plentiful supply, we can enjoy the unexpected guest, and take the time for such enjoyment, instead of being obliged to spend the whole time in making ready a sumptuous meal.

If one has canned fruit a shortcake for dessert is as quickly made as an adjunct to a dinner, and is nearly always acceptable. Whatever you do, do not feel hurried and worried. "Better a dinner of herbs," you know, than to get flushed and make your friends feel they have come unduly.

I sometimes think the unexpected comer is the pleasant guest, because, unless a pretty near friend, he or she would hardly think of coming unannounced. If one expects company she must make about so much preparation, or else she will feel she is not doing herself or her culinary skill justice, let alone the guests themselves.

If we hold ourselves in comparative readiness we shall not mind the appearance of real friends almost any time. To be sure sometime our work is so hurrying that we are not as free as we would like to be, but most of us can, if we will, set aside the work till another time, unless it is of such a character it must be done—and if so, let the guest come right into the kitchen or sewing room, where ever the work is being done, and if help is offered accept it cordially.

"That the feast may be more joyous.

That the time may pass more gaily,

And our guests be more contented."

But supposing we are not prepared, supposing there is no emergency shelf, supposing there are no means even for such a thing, well, then—I would still say welcome the coming guest. If she has come to see you, your simple fare will not matter. If she has come for a meal then there are other places where such things can be had. I have been placed at a fare as scant as it could be, and yet withal with such a spirit of hospitality that one could hardly think of the food save for its rare seasoning of hearty goodwill and simple, genuine hospitality. It is not so much what we set forth. The cup of cold water we may always extend.—New York Observer.

Ways of Serving Pineapple.

One of the best ways of serving pineapple for dessert is to peel the fruit, carefully removing the eyes, though the new seedless pineapples now in market have very small eyes. Dredge it thickly with sugar, and let it remain just twenty-four hours on the ice. The bowl in which it stands will catch the juice, and in a short time the entire fruit will be permeated with the sugar, and may be torn into bits with a silver fork. Pineapple is a fruit which requires little cooking, either for preserving or for any other culinary use.

Pineapple Sherbet.—A pineapple sherbet, or water-ice, is excellent served by itself as a dessert, or with vanilla or strawberry ice cream. Cut a thoroughly ripe pineapple into two equal parts. Chop one-half fine, and lay the remainder away for any further use you may have for it. Take the chosen half, which is chopped fine, and pound it to a pulp with a potato masher. Add a liberal cupful of granulated sugar, and pound the pulp again. Squeeze in the juice of two or three sound lemons. Add a quart of ice-cold water, stirring the whole with a wooden spoon. Strain the entire water-ice through a coarse sieve, and add the whites of two eggs, beaten to a stiff froth, adding the juice of half a cupful of sugar, and freeze the mixture like an ice cream. Serve it with pineapple cake for dessert.

Pineapple Ice Cream.—A delicious pineapple ice cream is made as follows: Peel a ripe, luscious pineapple, chop fine, and pound to a pulp with a heaping cupful of sugar. Cook it in its juice over the fire for five minutes, and let it cool while you make a custard of the yolks of five eggs, a pint of milk, and a cupful of sugar. Let this boil up over the fire, stirring all the time; then add the cooked pineapple, strained into the mixture through a pure-sieve, and last of all, a pint of rich cream. If the pineapple is ripe and sweet, it will not need any more sugar; but if it is acid, it may need another cupful—govern yourself by the taste, remembering that, as cooks say, a great deal of the sweetness will freeze out. It should, therefore, be much sweeter than an ordinary custard. Serve it with white sponge-cake, or what is familiarly known as "angel's food." This is also an excellent cake to serve with strawberry ice cream made with fresh, ripe strawberries.—New York Tribune.

Let every youth aim, first of all, and most of all, at self-mastery. Without it he must be base and miserable. Without it he cannot but be happy. Without it other things are but "gifts of the evil genii, which are curses in disguise."—F. W. Farrar.

MISS MONIE BOWEY,

No. 38 Perry Street,

DETROIT, MICHIGAN.

A couple of winters ago I slipped on a frozen sidewalk and fell flat on my back. On being examined I found that I had sustained internal injuries which laid me up for more than two months. After that I noticed that I had pains in the back and groin which I never had before. I doctored and doctored for several months but as the pains increased instead of growing better I decided that I was not having the right treatment. Reading in the papers of the wonderful cures performed by Wine of Cardui I wrote to one of the parties and received a very satisfactory reply and I immediately sent for some. In a very short time I felt generally better and after seven weeks faithful use I was once more well and strong. I have never had a sick hour since and I daily bless your splendid medicine.

Miss Monie Bowey.

Wine of Cardui makes women more womanly by curing their weakness and making them stronger. Wine of Cardui cured Miss Bowey. As a medicine for all women in every trying period of their lives can you think of a better medicine for yourself, your sister, your daughter or your mother? Can you think of a more acceptable present to give your friend than a bottle of this medicine which will bring her health and happiness? You are suffering? Your duty is to rid yourself of this pain. If your daughter, mother, sister or friend is sick and in need of relief, your duty is equally great to them. Many women, now well, owe their lives to friends who brought them Wine of Cardui.

Wine of Cardui is adapted to women at any age in any walk of life. For the working woman it gives her strength for her tasks and better treatment than a doctor for very small cost.

Your druggist will sell you a $1.00 bottle of Wine of Cardui. Secure the medicine today. Take it in the privacy of your home. Relief will come to you as surely as you take it.

MONIE BOWEY.

WINE OF CARDUI is one medicine that should always be kept on hand in every home for immediate use when female weakness first makes its appearance. Miss Bowey's painful and dangerous accident would not have resulted so seriously had she taken Wine of Cardui promptly.

WINE of CARDUI

A million suffering women have found relief in Wine of Cardui.

Atlantic Coast Line.

Thoroughfare of Travel between the

NORTH and SOUTH

FLORIDA ————— CUBA

A passenger service unexcelled for luxury and comfort, equipped with the latest Pullman Dining, Sleeping and Thoroughfare Cars.

For rates, schedule, maps or any information, write to

WM. J. CRAIG,

General Passenger Agent, Wilmington, N. C.

HIWASSEE ROUTE

Atlanta, Knoxville and Northern Railway.

SOUTHERN SCENIC LINE.

Short line between Atlanta, Ga., and Knoxville, Tenn., and between points in the Southeast and Northwest.

Low round trip rates to Mountain and Seashore Resorts. Why go to Switzerland or Colorado? For scenery the A. K. & N. Railway crosses the Great Smoky Mountains by the only standard-gauge loop line in the world; 2,000 feet above sea-level and 600 feet above the Hiwassee River.

For rates or information apply to

E. S. MILLER, T. P. A.,

18 N. Pryor St., Atlanta.

S. H. STOUT, General Agent, Knoxville.

J. H. McWILLIAMS, G. P. A., Knoxville.

Fruit Jar Wrenches

Have you ever seen the "Tobax" Fruit Jar Wrench? It will open the tightest fruit jar and will also put the cap on very tight.

We are offering them at 10c. each,

and you will say it is the best article in your kitchen.

Send ten cents and two stamps for postage.

WEDDINGTON HARDWARE CO

Wear Red Seal Shoes

Catalog for Postal

Estab. '32 SCALES of every description. Satisfaction Guaranteed. Write for prices. JESSE MARDEN 109 S. Charles St. BALTIMORE, MD

Our Young People.

When the Minister Came to Tea.

"Really, we ought to have the minister to supper, now that his wife is away visiting," said Mrs. Allen, thoughtfully. He was in yesterday and looked lonesome."

"We can't until we get some new dishes," replied Lesbia, decidedly. "I'd be mortified to death."

Lesbia was tall, straight and golden-haired. She had a firm chin with a dimple in it. Like most young girls, she had her ideals. She disliked shabby furniture, made-over gowns and worn carpets. Her especial aversion was nicked and cracked dishes. She complained a good deal in the little house because old things had to take the place of new. Mr. Allen was a poor man, and Mr. Allen was an invalid, so there was little left for "extras" when all expenses were paid. Lesbia worried and fretted over the little economies she was forced to practice, ignoring the fact that she had more blessings than she could count.

The little brown house was shabby enough, but it was clean and homelike. No one but Lesbia would have noticed its shabbiness, for, although the carpets had seen their best days, there were plenty of books and easy-chairs, the windows were full of flowers, and the sun shone into every room.

Mrs. Allen looked across at her tall girl wistfully. She was a slender, frail woman, with a sweet face, worn thin by years of ill-health.

"I don't think the minister would notice the dishes, dear, if you had one of your nice suppers," she said gently. "We could have fried chicken and hot biscuit and you might make—"

"No, mother, I can't!" replied Lesbia, shortly. "I'm ashamed of our old, shabby things. We haven't a whole cup in the house. Those that have handles are nicked and those that are not nicked have no handles. The same thing is true of the vegetable dishes. The only thing in the house that isn't broken is grandma's old blue china platter, and that wouldn't have escaped if we hadn't put it away. That's what those careless girls did for you before I was old enough to manage things."

"True enough, dear," answered her mother, cheerfully, "and grateful indeed both father and I are that we have a daughter to look after us. We only wish we could do more for her."

"I don't mind so much about my own clothes," said Lesbia, soberly, "but I should like a lovely home, with nothing old or broken in it."

"I don't believe the minister would care about the dishes," went on Mrs. Allen, still cheerfully. "You make such good tea he'd forget all about the cup that held it. I wish we were rich for your sake, little daughter, but I believe, I really do, that you take our poverty too much to heart. It's not always pleasant, but perhaps you needed the discipline."

"It seems to me I get a good deal of it," retorted Lesbia. "I won't complain, since it only distresses you, but I do like pretty things, especially dishes.

I love fine china and cut-glass and silver and beautiful table linen, and since I can't have them I'm not going to air our poverty by inviting the minister to tea. He gets his meals over at Mrs. Percival's. She is rich and has all those things!"

"Yes, but she's old and deaf and peculiar and I don't believe she has any more to eat in her fine dishes than we do in our old ones. At any rate, I know that the meals are not cooked any better and I should like to show the minister a little hospitality. His wife was so kind to me when I had that last bad turn! Never a day that she didn't come over or else send me something. Won't you, dear?"

But Lesbia rose quickly and went away beyond the sound of her mother's pleading voice. She shut the door of her little white room tight. Her dimpled chin looked firmer than ever. "I'm not going to!" she whispered, rebelliously.

Lesbia always said afterward that she would never have changed her mind if it had not been for that sermon. There were not many at church that Sunday morning, but Lesbia was always glad she went.

The minister took his text from Judges iii., 31: "And after him was Shamgar, the son of Anath, which slew of the Philistines six hundred men with an ox-goad; and he also delivered Israel."

His subject was "Christian courage," and he told how much God's people had accomplished with humble instruments—Gideon with his lamps and pitchers, David with his sling, Dorcas with her needles and so on down to our own times. He told of brave Benjamin West, who made his first paint-brush with fur from a cat; of Watts with his tea-kettle; of Sir Isaac Newton with his apple and of a long line of struggling, ambitious men and women who would not let circumstances conquer them.

"They didn't wait for the appliances of skill and science," the minister said. "If they had waited, they would have gone to their graves obscure and unknown. They worked with what they had."

Lesbia went straight to her mother's room after church that morning. "Mother," she said, "I've thought better of what you asked me. If you still wish it, we will have the minister to supper, after all."

Mrs. Allen's face lighted up. "Thank you, dear," she answered, and Lesbia knew by her tone how happy she had made her.

The minister said he did not know when he had such a pleasant time—not since his wife had gone on a visit. Lesbia had set the table with painstaking care. The table-cloth was white, the silver teaspoons shone and there was an abundance of flowers. The supper was delicious, and the minister ate as if he enjoyed everything.

After supper Lesbia played and sang a little and then the minister entertained the family with stories and anecdotes. It was good to see how Mrs. Allen brightened and how her husband's face lost its tired lines.

A definition—

"Painkiller," a sure cure for Cramps, Colic, and all Stomach Complaints. There is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis'.

From the people's dictionary.

THE BEST OF EVERYTHING FOR THE LEAST MONEY

Whatever your clothing wants may be, we ask the privilege of showing you our stock of

CLOTHING, HATS AND MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.

Give us a call, or if you do not live in Charlotte, we would be glad to send you goods on approval, returnable at our expense. We have been leaders in the Clothing business for years and our reputation for selling the best goods for the least money cannot be excelled.

Give us a trial on your next purchase. We guarantee satisfaction. Suits $10 to $25.

FULL DRESS, TUXEDO AND PRINCE ALBERT SUITS

Always on hand.

Long-Tate Clothing Co.

42 SOUTH TRYON STREET.

Goods sent on approval returnable at our expense.

XANTHINE! PROF. HERTZ GREAT GERMAN HAIR RESTORATIVE

NOTHING LIKE IT.

NOTHING SO GOOD,

AND NEVER WILL BE.

Never fails. Testimonials of unquestionable credibility.

INSIST ON GETTING IT. Take no other. Nothing else will give you satisfaction. If your druggist has not got it, write us. Not a dye, but always restores the beautiful natural color; stops dandruff; promotes growth.

At druggists. Price, $1. Insist on getting it. If your druggist has not got it, send us $1, and we will send you a bottle. Charges prepaid. Highest testimonials. Write us for circulars. XANTHINE COMPANY, Richmond, Va.

SPECIAL LOW WEEK END RATES

From points on the Atlantic Coast Line to Seaside Resorts; tickets on sale Saturday, good returning including Monday following; attractive schedules; unsurpassed service.

SUMMER TOURIST TICKETS

To Mountain and Seaside Resorts limited for return passage to October 31st on sale until September 30th.

For full particulars, rates, etc., call on Ticket Agents or write to

W. J. CRAIG,
Gen. Pass. Agent, Wilmington, N. C.

Lesbia saw it and crept away, humbled, but strengthened with a new courage and a new resolution—a resolution to make the best of narrow means, not to let poverty dwarf and thwart aspirations, but to accept her life with its environments as God-given and with all its limitations to press on to greater things.

Lesbia went to the door with her guest, that evening. The tall, gray-haired minister looked down upon her with kind eyes. "That was a very nice supper, Lesbia," he said, laying a fatherly hand on her young shoulder. "I don't know when I have enjoyed anything more. It is easy to see to whom I am indebted for it."

Lesbia smiled. "It is we who are indebted to you," she answered, gently. "Didn't you notice how much you helped mother? She'll think of it for a month." She looked up at the tall figure impulsively.

"Mother and father wanted you to come so much," she added, "but I—thought we hadn't things fine enough. I wanted new dishes and cut-glass, and we couldn't have them, so I felt rebellious. I wasn't going to ask you at all, until you preached on Shamgar and his ox-goad, and then it came to me to make the best of what I had. So I'm going to."

They stood in the open door. The minister laid a hand on the golden head. He read the new look of submission in the girlish face, the spirit of meekness that had lately come to her. He foresaw struggles before her, but in the end, with this new grace in her heart, there would be success and victory. "She will make a fine woman," he thought.

He looked off across the moonlit hills, thinking of his own life, and of the years when he, too, had fought against the hardness of his lot; of those hard years before he had learned to overcome, to sacrifice, to serve, to be humble.

"Keep it up, Lesbia," he said, "Good night!"—Youth's Companion.

Being Popular.

By Marianna Wood Robinson.

"Who was elected, Rob?"

"Tom Leighton, of course. No other fellow had any show at all. He's the most popular boy there is. They say it is because he is so good natured."

"Well, Tom is the kindest boy—the kindest big boy—I know," said Sadie, Rob's sister.

"Huh! That's all right, but what does he have to keep him from being kind? He has every single thing he wants. He never has to work till the very last minute before school time. And he always has lots of money to treat the fellows with. I could be kind, too—maybe I could be popular, if I had time. You have to have something to make you popular."

"Right you are, my son. I have felt that way a great many times. It's the men who have money, so they can do things for people, or leisure to make themselves agreeable, that are popular. It takes time even to be kind. When a man has to work all day in the shop, as hard as I do, he's got no time to make himself popular."

HEADACHE CAPUDINE COLDS

HICKS' CAPUDINE never fails to cure
HEADACHE AND COLDS

It is the great remedy also for Indigestion and Sour Stomach. Has no effect on the heart. For nervousness and brain fag it is unequalled.
 AT DRUGGISTS. 10c.. 25c.. 50c.

Handsomest Stock in Carolinas
Men's and Boys' Underwear

During no former Summer have we disposed of as much Underwear as the present season—the demand has been enormous—and at no time was there ever displayed here such magnificent varieties of styles, colors and sizes, consisting of Balbriggan, Lisle and the finest of Silk, at prices ranging from

50 Cents to $20.00

Underwear that is cool, comfortable, perfect fitting, with lasting qualities. You cannot buy anything better for the price. It don't pay to buy shoddy underwear at any price—hence we keep only the best.

Ed. W. Mellon Co.

WOOL

Ship Direct to the Manufacturer and Save Dealers' Profits.

They pay freight on the wool and guarantee satisfaction.

In exchange for goods they pay 25 cents per pound for unwashed and 35 cents per pound for washed wool.

If you have wool to sell for cash, exchange for goods, or to be manufactured, ship it to CHATHAM MFG. CO., ELKIN, N. C., and you will not regret it.

Princeton Theological Seminary.

FRANCIS L. PATTON, D. D., LL. D., President.

The ninety-second session of Princeton Theological Seminary will open on Thursday, September 17th, 1903. Matriculation of Students takes place in Stuart Hall at eleven o'clock.

On Friday, September 18th, at eleven o'clock the Rev. William Park Armstrong will be inaugurated as Professor of New Testament Literature and Exegesis. His address will be on the subject, "The Witness of the Gospel." The exercises will take place in Miller Chapel. College Graduates of all denominations welcome. Faculty of seventeen. Modern methods of instruction. Choice of extra curriculum courses, and privilege of advanced study in Princeton University. A strong Y. M. C. A. An address each week by men prominent in aggressive Christian work. Annual conference of leading Christian workers. Three fine dormitories with parlor and baths in each. Ample grounds for recreation.

Address all correspondence, etc., to

Prof. GEERHARDUS VOS,
Princeton, N. J.

North Carolina Medical College Davidson, N. C.

Three years' course to graduate. Sixteen Professors and Teachers. Clinical instruction given in Davidson and Charlotte. Eighteen graduates this year made fine records before N. C. and S. C. Boards. Address

J. P. MUNROE, M. D., President, Davidson, N. C.

Private rooms in the Hospital.

"It doesn't seem as if that were quite the right idea of making one's self popular," said Rob's mother. "What do you think, Aunt Katie?"

"I was just thinking," answered Aunt Kate, "of the two most popular men I know in our neighborhood at home."

"Oh, is one that nice old gentleman who sat on his porch so much and used to give me candy when I went by?"

"No, dear; he isn't one of them."

"Well, then," said Rob, "it's some of those swell fellows over on Lee avenue, two blocks from your street."

"No, Rob, it isn't exactly any of them. I was just thinking," she went on, "about what you said it took to make boys or men popular. I'm sure the same men are both extremely popular, but they both work at manual labor every day in the week, one of them, at least, all the year round, with, perhaps, a couple of weeks off."

"They must be awfully smart men," said Bob, "to do all that, and have time to make themselves popular, too."

"No, I don't consider them especially smart, as we usually think of smartness. They are able to do their work well and faithfully, and that is all."

"Well, I suppose their work is not the kind that frets or bothers them. They don't have to put their mind right on it," said Rob's father.

"I don't know about that. I should think the work of one would be very tedious and vexing, and as to the other, most representatives of his calling whom I have known have been cross as bears, without a word for anybody."

"Just like our postman," said Sadie.

"Yes, that's just what he is—a letter carrier; and the other is the janitor of the Washington school. The postman has a kindly, interested word to say at every door along his route. If you have been away, he is glad to see you back. If you don't get the letter you are expecting, he is as sorry as you are. If a package you are depending on is delayed, he tries to plan some extra way for you to get it in time. If you are sick, he inquires for you every day."

"The children run to meet him, and take turns going a way with him. They tell him their little secrets, and exchange stamp pictures with him."

"At Christmas time he enjoys his work more than ever, because it makes so many people happy. He seems to make his work the means of his popularity."

"Well, what about the other one, Aunt Kate? He can't be much like our janitor."

"The other man is much the same. You would think, wouldn't you?—I should—that he would see enough of the bothersome children, and would never speak to a child unnecessarily. But, instead, he is really interested in them, their home life, their older brothers and sisters who have gone from the school. He will often take a little tot on his knee to warm her feet by the furnace in the winter mornings."

Somehow, instead of regarding him as their natural enemy, as janitors are apt to be regarded, every one of these five hundred children considers him a friend. I know lots of rich people and people of leisure, but these two are the most popular men in our part of the city."

"That's it," said mother. "Rob, you and your father are wrong. The best way to make yourself popular is to be really and truly interested in people."

"I shouldn't say, either, 'make yourself popular,'" said Aunt Kate. "I doubt if any one who directly tries to make himself popular, ever really becomes so. Be thoughtful and kindly, right in the midst of your work, and the popularity will take care of itself."—Southern Presbyterian.

Why We Shake Hands.

The Prussian officer who held it his duty to kill a mere soldier who offered to shake hands with him had, from the official Prussian point of view, a complete case. Handshaking implies a certain degree of equality, and it is not possible for a Prussian officer to imagine any equal except another Prussian officer. Clearly, any that suggesting such a thing could not be expiated by any punishment short of the immediate death of the offender.

The custom of handshaking dates back to prehistoric times, a relic of those savage days when strangers could not meet without suspicion of murderous purpose. Then all men went abroad with weapons and shields, and, when they met, would stand in pleasant converse, each with his shield upon his left arm and with right hands clasped, so that there would be no chance for a sudden swing of the knife or bludgeon. The right hand was invariably used for the weapon, with the result that we are a right-handed race. The reason for this lay undoubtedly in the fact that the left arm was always employed in the important work of shielding the heart. Among the common people of the Aryan race, the old pledge of amity in yielding the right hand to be gasped and held has since remained the chief token of open friendship. In the Iliad the returning chiefs were "greeted with extended hands." Even at that remote day the early significance of the handclasp had been lost in the nobler meaning of civilized life. But it remains a salutation in which a greater or less degree of equality is claimed or conceded. It is, therefore, possible for a humble person to shake hands with the President of the United States, but not with an officer of the Prussian army.—Harper's Weekly.

The Christian Child.

Come hither, little Christian,
And hearken unto me;
I'll teach thee what the daily life
Of a Christian child should be.

When a Christian child awakes
He should think of God in heaven,
And softly say, "I thank Thee, Lord,
For the sleep that Thou hast given."

He must say when he arises,
'From evil and from harm
Defend Thy little child, O Lord,
With Thine everlasting arm.'

Then, dressing very quietly,
The Christian child should say,

The Eyes of School Children

Many parents allow their children to go through school half equipped for the work.

Defective eyes do not show in children as plainly as in grown people. Yet defects are present then if ever. They probably never know what it is to have perfect sight; thus they know no better, since there is no soreness and inflammation.

Don't wait for such signs.

Examination free

Dr. J. H. Spilman,

22 West Trade Street,
Blair's Drug Store, Charlotte.

Money saved is money made.

$2.50 BUYS A PAIR OF FAMOUS

Autograph SHOES

THE EQUAL OF
ANY $3.00 SHOE

ON THE MARKET
TAKE NO
SUBSTITUTE

IF YOUR DEALER DOES NOT CARRY THEM A POSTAL CARD TO US WILL TELL YOU WHERE YOU CAN GET THEM.

CRADDOCK-TERRY CO.
LYNCHBURG, VA.

ULCERINA.

The only cure for Chronic Ulcers on the market. The most reliable remedy known for Ring Worms, Old Sores, Wounds of all kinds and chronic skin diseases. For sale by all druggists. Price 25 cents.

Manufactured by

R G ROZIER, M. D.,
LUMBERTON, N. C.

“With Thy spotles robe of righteousness,
Lord, clothe my soul, I pray.”

He reverently kneels
To pray beside his bed;
With closed eyes and humble voice
His holy prayers are said.

And as he thus approaches
The God of heaven above,
He looketh down and smileth on
This little child in love.

He goes from his chamber
To his work or to his play,
But the prayers that he hath prayed
He must keep in mind all day.

He hath asked to be obedient,
And so he must fulfill
His parents' bidding cheerfully,
With a glad mind and will.

In all his daily duties
He diligent must be,
And say, “Whate'er I do, O Lord,
I do it unto Thee.”

When the little Christian plays
He must use no angry words,
For his little fellow-Christians
Are members of the Lord.

He hath asked to be made holy,
So he must strive all day
To yield his will to others' will,
His way to others' way.

No greedy thoughts dishonor
The Christian child at meals;
He eats what God giveth him,
And ever thankful feels.

To his crucified Redeemer
He must turn his thoughts and say,
“May the Cross upon my forehead shine
With living light away!”

When in fault he falleth,
He must not hide the stain;
Repentance and confession
Must yield their healing pain.

He must kneel down in his chamber,
Confess what he hath done,
And ask to be forgiven
For the sake of God's dear Son.

Again, when evening cometh,
The Christian child will pray,
And praise the Lord for blessings given
To him throughout the day.

Then his soul to God committing
He quietly may sleep;
God and His holy angel hosts
Will watch around him keep.

God bless thee, little Christian!
Be holy, humble, mild,
Obedient, truthful, diligent,
A truly Christian child.

God bless thee, little Christian!
And bid thou God bless me!
I've taught thee what the daily life
Of a Christian child should be.

—Southern Churchman.

OIL CURE FOR CANCER.

The Dr. D. M. Bye Co., of Indianapolis, Ind., report the discovery of a combination of soothing and balmy oils which readily cure all forms of cancer and tumor. They have cured many very bad cases without pain or disfigurement. Their new books with full report sent free to the afflicted. Dr. D. M. Bye Co., Drawer 505, Indianapolis, Ind.

A Perfect Laxative is one which is palatable, pleasant to take and can be relied upon to act gently, but thoroughly; cleansing the entire system of all impurities. Such a remedy is Mozley's Lemon Elixir. It is a pleasant lemon tonic, acceptable to the most delicate stomach, and a thoroughly effective laxative, acting upon the bowels, liver, and kidneys, without the slightest unpleasantness.

MOZLEY'S LEMON HOT DROPS are without an equal for coughs, colds, sore throat and bronchitis.

Sold by all druggists.

Mozley's
Lemon
Elixir.

Raleigh Marble Works.

COOPER BROS., Props.

RALEIGH, N. C.

MONUMENTS,

Tablets, Headstones, Iron Fences.

We Pay the Freight.

Please mention Standard.

Write for our
New Catalogue

Mid Summer Cut Price Sale

of

Furniture, Carpets,
Pianos and Organs,

Wonderful Bargains can be had at this Store during this Cut Price Sale.

Everything Without Reserve is reduced in Price to the Lowest Price to sell the Goods and make room for the Changes now going on in our store. Come and See Us in Person, but if you can't come, you will get some reduction if you order by mail. Don't fail to grasp this opportunity to save money.

Parker-Gardner Company.

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA.

Southern States
Trust Company

Capital,

$200,000.

GEORGE STEPHENS, President.

T. S. FRANKLIN, V.-President.

W. H. WOOD, Treasurer.

A Co-worker

This is what your money becomes when you put it on deposit in our

Savings Department.

We pay four per cent. interest and compound it quarterly.

Our Little Folks.

Lenoir, N. C., Aug. 18, 1903.

Dear Standard:

Last Sunday I had a nice trip to Marion to the camp meeting. I have another uncle very low with fever. We had an awful storm here last night; it struck a poplar tree near the yard. It shook a good many things. This is the third letter that I have written. I have been helping my father fix the turnip ground this morning before it rained. I hope my school will start soon. I will close for this time, hoping to see this little letter in print again.

Your little friend,
Ralph Winkler.

Lenoir, N. C., Aug. 18, 1903.

Dear Standard:

As I have never wrote to you before I thought I would write. My Aunt takes your paper and I like reading the stories. I have five sisters and one brother. I have no pets. I have been growing flowers this summer. I go to Sunday-school. I have a nice time playing with my sisters. My Sunday-school teacher is Miss Annie Bell; I like her very much. I will close now, hoping to see my letter in print.

Your unknown friend,
Fannie Winkler.

How Filipino Children Study.

An American school-teacher in the Philippines says that when she began the children did not know a word of English except the "Good morning" and "Good evening" with which they greeted the teachers, and they mixed these up in a very laughable way. Their faces seemed total blanks so far as any expression was concerned. It was a long time before she could get them to smile. They would much rather sit on the floor than on the nicest benches, and it shocked a boy very much to see a girl in the same room with himself.

At first the teacher had a great deal of difficulty in making them understand her. Their gestures are entirely different from ours. When she beckoned them to her they would run from her, and when she pointed to an object they did not know what she meant.

They are very fond of singing, though their native songs are chants. But they sing "America" and "Columbia, the gem of the ocean," in a way that almost raises the roof.

One thing that makes their attendance very irregular is the fact that they have to work at home. They pick rice, and rub the husks off the kernels to prepare them for cooking for dinner.

The children of this country ought to become very much interested in these little people whom it is our privilege to help to happier lives.—Junior Endeavor World.

"Teddy."

By Edith Lyndon.

A true story of a real "Teddy" who never became President, but who was much respected and admired for his many good traits of character.

He rejoices in the name of Theodore Roosevelt, and like the more famous Theodore, is often familiarly known as "Teddy." Like that other Theodore, too, he "scents a battle from afar," never resting until he is in the midst of the fray. He is a mighty hunter, haunting fields and woods and making them yield tribute. Here the resemblance between the two ceases, for the subject of this sketch is only a little fox terrier with a tail so short that he is sometimes called "the tailless tyke," a very black nose and a pair of brown eyes with which he can plead so eloquently that he escapes with half the whippings he deserves.

The whole story of Teddy's two years of life would be a record of a series of mishaps. When he was a little fat puppy he almost met an untimely end by being smothered by coal gas. Poor little fellow! When his plight was discovered he was scarcely able to crawl, but he had youth on his side, and in half an hour had sufficiently recovered to worry "Rabbit," the family cat. His legs were still weak, and he made a funny picture as he went staggering about with head erect and ears set, "Rabbit" the meanwhile spitting with all his might and swelling his tail to three times its normal size.

Not only does Teddy roam the fields and woods, but, sad to say, he loves the streets. There are so many people to tell him what a nice little dog he is, so many horses and automobiles to chase, so many dogs with whom to make acquaintance, and so many cats sunning themselves upon doorsteps that he has a busy, happy time about town. Besides all these delights he has come to know a certain bakery, and when master or mistress is with him he has only to jump up on the doorstep and wag his apology for a tail to open both heart and purse strings; the result is that the inner dog is regaled with a penny cake. Nor is the bakery the only attractive store. There is a certain dry goods store where the money is carried to and from the desk in little cup-like cars which run along miniature railways. Oh! the joy of chasing those cars! When he first discovered this diversion his home scarcely saw him for three weeks. The first thing in the morning, after scattering all the cats about his bailiwick, he would make for that shop, and all day long chase the cars back and forth. When six o'clock came a very tired little dog would seek his home to sleep until the next morning's sun would call him to his self-imposed task.

As I have intimated, Teddy is a sworn enemy of cats; in fact, I am afraid that he is known in the cat world as a murderer. He frequently meets a valiant tabby who is quite his equal and comes out of the fray with a decidedly dejected air and a long scratch, which tells the whole story. But fox terriers recover their spirits quickly, and in less time than it takes to tell about it my young hero is ready to renew the attack. One fine morning he ran to town ahead of master. It was a morning to stir one's blood, and he was off with eyes and ears open for something, he didn't care much what, but something must happen. Master's morning reflections were sud-

HALL & PEARSALL

Wholesale - Grocers

AND

Commission Merchants,

Wilmington, N. C.

SPECIALTIES:

Salt Fish, Molasses.
Meat, Flour, Salt,
BAGGING and TIES.

Samples and prices on request.

D. W. Badham,
Charlotte, N. C.

Tuner, Repairer and Salesman of
Pianos. School work a specialty.
Mention the Standard.

ORGANIZED 1832.
THE

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $800,000.
Agencies in every Town and County.

WM. H. PALMER      W. H. MCCARTHY,
PRESIDENT.      SECY
F. K. ELLINGTON, GENERAL AGENT.
RALPH, N. C.
E. NYE HUTCHISON, Agent
THOS. H. HAUGHTON,
Charlotte, N. C.

EVERY SUFFERER SHOULD KNOW

=KADOK=

The Pleasant tonic Headache Cure.
Superior to Others and Free from
Opaites
Try a package,
Price 10c.

At all Druggists or sent prepaid by
L. Richardson Drug Company,
Wholesale and manufacturing Druggists,
GREENSBORO, N. C.

Atlantic & N. C. R. R.

Time table in effect November 19, 1902.

	Passenger
	Daily	aily
Eastbound Trains.
Leave Goldsboro.....	3:30 p m	8:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	4:22 p m	8:48 a m
Leave New Bern.....	5:50 p m	10:10 a m
Arrive Morehead City.....	7:15 p m
Westbound Trains.
Leave Morehead City.....	7:05 a m
Leave New Bern.....	9:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	10:12 a m
Arrive Goldsboro.....	11:15 a m

denly disturbed by a caterwanling, dismal and blood curdling. In the middle of the street a crowd had gathered: two ladies, S. P. C. A. members, were alighting from a carriage to save a helpless kitten out of which a certain little white dog was shaking the life as fast as possible. They rescued the kitten from Teddy's clutches, while master appeared just in time to rescue Teddy from the clutches of the Society.

The proudest day in our hero's life was Labor Day. To be sure, a dog couldn't be expected to know it was Labor Day, but he certainly felt something in the air; besides, strains of music, which could faintly be heard from the direction of the town, told that it was not quite like other days. Bright and early Teddy started townward to investigate. There was not only a band, but joy of joys, a parade was forming! Teddy sniffed about with his little black nose, questioned with his bright brown eyes, and, although he could not understand it all, he made up his mind to be into the fun, whatever it was. When the parade marched down Main street, ahead of the Mayor and his aids, ahead of the prominent citizens in "carriages," ahead even of the ever-glorious band, marched two dogs; one was a huge black mongrel, the other little dock-tailed Teddy. What he lacked in size he made up in dignity of carriage, and bore his head higher and raised his fore feet in more perfect rhythm with the music than did his baser born companion.

Spring is the halcyon time of the whole year for Master Theodore. With the first whiff of spring-like air he is off to the woods to see if squirrels and rabbits are abroad; from that time until the intense heat of summer makes men and animals alike languid, no happier nor more active dog can be found in the whole countryside. Last spring he was enjoying to their full measure the warm days that Mother Nature favored us with in March, when one evening he came home in sorry plight. Evidently he had strayed too near a trap, and one little paw was sadly torn. The softest bit of rag in the house was hunted out; the paw was carefully bathed, and, after a healing lotion was applied, tenderly wrapped. Oh! how Teddy was petted, and what choice morsels he got from the dinner table! The little uplifted bandaged paw drew no end of sympathy to its owner when he appeared downtown, and hard-hearted indeed was the person who passed him those days without a pat upon the head and a word of consolation. Occasionally a very acceptable candy accompanied the sympathetic words. It took but a short time for Teddy to enter into the "enjoyment of poor health." Long after the paw was healed a little dog might be seen limping up and down the street looking up into the faces of passers-by with a "see-my-sorefoot" expression, and never failing to receive his full meed of condolence. Once in the woods the sore paw was forgotten, and Teddy was the intrepid little hunter of old.

One day a mad dog got loose in town; that was a blackletter day in Dogdom. Many a pet had to be shot or chloroformed because he had come in contact

SOUTHERN DENTAL COLLEGE, ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

If you are interested in obtaining a dental education, write for free catalogue of full instruction.

ADDRESS DR. S. W. FOSTER, DEAN, 100 NORTH BUTLER STREET, ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

NOTABLE NEW BOOKS.

A limited number of advanced subscriptions will be accepted at Special Prices for following new books to be issued on or before September 1st, 1903.

Life and Letters of ROBERT LEWIS DABNEY, D. D. LL. D.

By THOMAS CAREY JOHNSON, D. D. LL. D.

Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity Union Theological Seminary, Richmond Va. A notably interesting book about one of the most remarkable men the South has produced. Interesting alike to historical students of social, political, and industrial conditions of the South, to Southern Veterans and Statesmen, to students of Theology and Philosophy, and to those who wish to be fully informed about the history and development of the Southern Presbyterian Church. 600 Pages. Cloth Binding, Regular Price $2.50 Net (add 18c for Postage.) To Advance Subscribers $2.00 Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

"APOLOGETICS,"

Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D., LL. D. Prof. of Systematic Theology Louisville Seminary. Introduction by B. B. WARFIELD, D. D., LL. D., of Princeton Theological Seminary. A clear, systematic statement of the great fundamental truths of the Christian faith. Adopted as a text book in some of the best Seminaries of the country. 480 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $2.50 Net; Sheep, $3.00 Net [add 18c. Postage]. To advance subscribers, cloth $2.00; sheep, $2.50 postpaid. Limit 500 copies.

PIONEERING IN AFRICA.

By Rev SAMUEL PHILLIPS VERNER, A. B.,

for six years a Missionary of the Southern Presbyterian Church on the Congo. This book is out of the usual order, and is at once scientific, historical, critical and religious. A notable contribution to the literature about a great continent which is coming more into view every year. Illustrated with original photographs and maps not hitherto published. 40 Pages. Cloth. Regular Price $2.00 Net [add 15c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.75 Net Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

Christianity and Modern Evolution.

By Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D.

The remarkably original and forcible course of lectures delivered in Louisville, Ky., before very large and highly edified audiences have been revised, and are now presented in an attractive form for the benefit of a larger public. 250 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $1.25 Net [add 10c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.00 net Postpaid. Limit 300 Copies.

A complete list of our publications sent on request. Any book in print furnished on short notice. Write us about your wants.

PRESBYTERIAN COMMITTEE OF PUBLICATION, Richmond, Va.

What Protection Means.

On March 6, 1873, the Hon. Armistead Burwell, of Charlotte, N. C., who is well known throughout the State of North Carolina, was insured with the Aetna Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, Conn., under Renewable Term Policy No. 95,253 for $4,000. Annual Premium $64 76 When the first term of ten years expired in 1883 the Company renewed the policy for the next ten years at the

ORIGINAL RATE, WITHOUT A NEW EXAMINATION.

and have renewed this policy respectively in 1893 and 1903 without increase of rate of premium and without re-examination. If Mr. Burwell lives till 1913 he will have been insured for forty years at an annual cost of $16.19 per $1,000.

This Renewable Term Insurance was originally introduced by the Aetna. The "OLD AETNA" LEADS; the other companies follow.

OVER ONE MILLION DOLLARS have been paid out in death claims in this State during the last ten years.

For rates, etc., apply to

J. D. BOUSHALL, Mgr,
RALEIGH, N. C.

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE.

FOR THE CURE OF

LIQUOR, OPIUM, COCAINE AND OTHER DRUG ADDICTIONS,
NERVE EXHAUSTION AND TOBACCO HABIT.

GREENSBORO, N. C.

This is the only Keeley Institute in North Carolina, and owing to its beautiful and healthy location, its elegant buildings and attractive environments, its well supplied table and skillful management it presents to the unfortunate a perfect asylum for rest and complete restoration.

If you have a friend afflicted with any of the above addictions, write for their illustrated Hand-Book, entitled "THE NEW MAN." Address,

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE,
Greensboro, N. C.

with the mad brother's incisors. Teddy saw the enraged brute attack a smaller dog, and went to play the part of champion. Master in very decided tones commanded him to desist; for one of the very few times in his life the young rascal obeyed, so escaped joining the army of canines who met a sad and premature end. The City Fathers thought such an occasion as a mad dog scare demanded their attention, so an order framed in august language was sent forth for all dogs to be muzzled, otherwise they were liable to be shot. Oh! how many unhappy, indignant dogs there were in town! Teddy was enraged and insulted. He, a free citizen of Dogdom, to have his head put into a cage? Not if he could help it. In spite of all that master or mistress could do, Ted's muzzle usually hung like a ponderous pendant from his collar, and finally in some way it got broken. Another muzzle was bought. The weather had by this time become very warm and it seemed cruel to burden the poor dogs with those heavy cage-like things, but the mandate of the town officials was still in force. One very warm evening master strapped the muzzle loosely and sent Ted for his evening scamper. Ten minutes later the young gentleman appeared minus muzzle, with a huge bone in his mouth and a defiant expression of face, as much as to say, "Muzzle me again if you dare!" But Master would not be "dared," so a large leather affair was bought which almost hid doggie's saucy little face. Now indeed he was unhappy! His spirit seemed broken by this latest indignity, and a more wretched dog could not be found. But a fox terrier is nothing if not resourceful, so in the course of a few days the ugly leather muzzle went, only its owner knew where, and, city ordinances notwithstanding, the effort to keep one little dog muzzled was abandoned.

Yes, Teddy is certainly a bad dog; even his best friend could not call him otherwise. He will not be taught tricks, but he has so many "ways" of his own that we have ceased to regret this lack of docility. After he has been on his very worst behavior he has such a fashion of looking up and saying "Forgive me" with his eyes that it is hard to resist. Even after he has been whipped, the first thing of which we are aware is a little moist tongue caressing one hand and a pair of brown eyes looking oh, so pleadingly up to one! If this fails, he has recourse to the only trick we ever succeeded in teaching him, shaking hands. If we are stonyhearted enough to refuse one paw he proffers a second. Dear little Teddy, he is so forgiving, and has such a loyal, loving heart that we forgive him everything—aye, more—love him all the better because of his naughtiness, which, after all, is very winsome naughtiness.—Christian Work and Evangelist.

A Tale of the Little Mouse.

The little mouse lived with his father and mother and little brothers in a small round nest in a field. He was very happy, playing in the field all day and going to sleep snug and warm at night in his grassy nest.

One day there came to visit them a big, sleek, fat, gray mouse,—a cousin who lived in a house on the other side of the street. The little field mice were overawed.

"You would never be satisfied here if you saw my house," he said to them. "Such feasts as we have! There is always cheese in the dresser."

The little mice opened their eyes. Very often, in their home, there was not enough food to go around. They knew what it was to go hungry, to bed.

After the cousin had gone, the children asked their parents:—

"Why can't we live in a house, and have more than we want to eat?"

"Why can't we be fat, and have a fine gray coat like cousin's?"

But the wise parents said: "Don't be carried away by such tales. Your cousin is proud, and makes the most of his good things. He didn't tell on about the cat that lives in the house, and has eaten three of his family. He didn't tell you of the big steel trap laid around."

The littlest mouse thought differently. His parents did not understand, he thought. He wanted to find out for himself. So that night, after they had been snugly tucked in bed and his parents had gone to sleep, he stole softly out across the dark field and into the street to his cousin's house.

The littlest mouse had explained how he had stolen over, and that he wanted to see the life his cousin had told him about.

"Well," said the big gray mouse, "come with me, and I'll show you around; but look out for the cat!"

They started on their journey through the big house; and the littlest mouse opened his eyes in wonder, and said many times that he wished he, too, might live there.

"You're happier where you are," said his cousin shortly.

At last they reached the dining-room. There had been a mid-night supper, and the careless maids had let it stand till morning. Here was a feast! There was pie and cake and crackers and cheese. Five other mice were there enjoying the good things, all of them as sleek and fat as the cousin. The littlest mouse followed their example, and began to enjoy himself, too. But, just as their fun was at its height, there was a scuffle, a squeal, and a scampering; for a big gray cat bounded into the room and caught the mouse nearest the door.

Wild with fright, the other mice scampered away from the dangerous room, leaving their poor little comrade in the fearful clutches of the cat. They flew to their holes, the big gray cousin making room for the littlest mouse with him; and there they stayed, scarcely daring to breathe, for a long time.

At last they ventured out again into the kitchen, and, while the cousin nosed around, the littlest mouse spied a big piece of cheese in what he thought was a beautiful case. He made a dive for the tempting bit.

Snap! Klik! The littlest mouse was fast.

"Help! Help!" he cried.

The Worth Co.

SUCCESSORS TO

WORTH & WORTH,

Wholesale Grocers

and Commission Merchants

HANDLE—
COITON AND NAVAL STORES.

SELL—
GENERAL GROCERIES,
FARM SUPPLIES,
LIME, CEMENT, NAILS,
HAY AND GRAIN.

Best Terms and Lowest Prices.

WILMINGTON N. C.

Nearly 20 years we have been training men and women for business. Only Business College in Va., and second in South to own its building. No vacation. Catalogue free. Bookkeeping, Shorthand Penmanship by mail.

W. M. Smithdeal
President.

"Leading bus. col. south Potomac river."—Phila. Stenographer.

Carolina and Northwestern Railway.

TIME CARD.

BLOWING ROCK ROUTE.

Effective November 24th. 1901.

NORTHBOUND	PASSENGER	MIXED
Chester, Leave	8 25 am	8 50 am
Yorkville, "	7 30 am	10 48 am
Gastonia, "	9 05 am	1 20 pm
Lincolnton, "	10 09 am	2 55 pm
Newton, "	10 54 pm	4 48 pm
Hickory, "	11 16 pm	5 50 pm
Cliffs, "	11 50 pm	6 35 pm
Lenoir, Arrive	12 35 pm	8 00 pm
SOUTHBOUND	PASSENGER	MIXED
Lenoir, Leave	2 10 pm	5 30 pm
Cliffs, "	2 54 pm	7 20 pm
Hickory, "	3 12 pm	8 10 pm
Newton, "	3 37 pm	8 45 am
Lincolnton, "	4 22 pm	10 09 am
Gastonia, "	5 27 pm	1 20 pm
Yorkville, "	6 32 pm	3 18 pm
Chester, Arrive	7 45 pm	5 20 pm

Aberdeen & Ashboro Railway Co.

CONNECTIONS FOR JACKSON SPRING.

Lv Aberdeen 7:30 A M	Ar. Jackson Spgs. 8:10 A M
" " " 9:40 "	" " " 10:30 "
" " " 6:40 P M	" " " 7:30 P M
High Point 2 05 P M	" " " 5:15 P M

H. A. PAGE,
Aberdeen, N. C.

STILLMAN INSTITUTE,

TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

For training Colored Ministers. Offers good academic and theological instruction.

Now managed on the "Industrial" plan, by which a young man may exchange labor for an education.

Write for information to

REV. D. CLAY LILLY, Superintendent,
TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

Black River Institute,

IVANHOE, N. C.

REV. V. H. STARBUCK, A. B., B. L., B. D.,
Principal.

SESSION OPENS SEPTEMBER 22nd.

High grade work on very easy terms. Under care of Wilmington Presbytery.

For particulars address,

V. H. STARBUCK or E. J. W. ANDERS,
Ivanhoe, N. C.

The cousin ran to the rescue. "Oh, you silly mouse!" he cried. "You'll never get out. They'll come in the morning and give you to the cat. Oh, it was just so with your poor cousin."

The littlest mouse was wild with fright. He struggled and he wriggled. Something sharp had cut his foot, but he hardly felt the pain. If he could only get loose and back to his own home! Would he ever see it again? He twisted in and out. Desperately he wriggled until slowly, but surely, inch by inch, he finally worked himself out.

"That's because you're such a little fellow," said the cousin, joyfully. "I never could have got out."

With a hurried good-bye the littlest mouse ran, as fast as his bruised leg would let him, out of the house and across to his home. His mother had wakened and missed him. How glad she was to see him! She cared for the poor, sore foot, then wrapped him snugly in his little grass bed, where he went to sleep, happy and safe, resolving never to leave home again.—Anne Guilbert Mahon, in Kindergarten Review.

The Value of a Taper.

One night a man took a little taper out of a drawer, and lighted it, and began to ascend a long, winding stair.

"Where are you going?" asked the taper.

"Away high up," said the man; "higher than the top of the house where we sleep."

"And what are you going to do there?" asked the taper.

"I am going to show the ships out at sea where the harbor is," said the man. "For we stand here at the entrance to the harbor, and some ships far out on the stormy sea may be looking out for light even now."

"Alas! no ship could ever see my light," said the little taper, "it is so very small."

"If your light is small," said the man, "keep it burning bright, and leave the rest to me."

Well, when the man got up to the top of the lighthouse—for this was a lighthouse they were in—he took the little taper, and with it lighted the great lamps which stood there with their polished reflectors behind them. And then the bright light flashed out over the waters, and the ships outside the harbor were guided thereby so that they entered safely in.

You, who think your little light of so small account, can you not see what God may do with it? Shine—and leave the rest to Him. For our capacity we are not responsible, but for the way in which we use our abilities, God will hold us to a strict account.

An Irrepressible Child.

A writer in the Philadelphia Record, speaking of his little six-year-old daughter as a chatterbox, says:—

The worst of it is that when we have guests at the house she is continually making breaks of the worst sort—breaks that tend to rattle the dry bones of the family skeleton in the closet.

Recently when we had company at dinner she allowed her tongue to run away with her as usual, the result of which was that she very much embarrassed both her father and mother, although the guests, I am free to say, seemed delighted.

I had a very serious talk with her, and impressed upon her, or tried to, that she must not tell any family secret. The next time we had company she was permitted to come to the table only by promising that she wouldn't utter a word.

She behaved beautifully, and had nothing to say until the dessert was about to be taken away. Then her lips began to quiver, and finally she burst into tears.

"Why, what's the matter, darling?" her mother asked.

"I—I want some more ice cream, if that isn't a family secret," she wailed, between sobs.

TETTERINE IN MARYLAND.

Thousands of unsolicited testimonials have come to the manufacturer of Tetterine from all over the country. Here is one from the wife of a prominent Maryland merchant:

"Mr. J. T. Shuptrine, Savannah, Ga.

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find $1.50 for which send at your earliest convenience 3 boxes of your Tetterine. It is a wonderful ointment, giving relief in the most obstinate cases. Respectfully yours, Mrs. Adlay Clements, Crumpton, Queen Anne county, Maryland."

Tetterine cures all kinds of skin diseases—Tetter, Salt Rheum, Eczema, etc.

Southern Railway.

The Direct Line to all Points

TEXAS,
CALIFORNIA
FLORIDA,
CUBA and
PORTO RICO.

Strictly First-Class equipment on all Through and Local Trains, Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars on all night trains. Fast and safe Schedules.

Travel by the Southern and you are assured of a Safe, Comfortable and Expeditious journey.

Apply to Ticket Agents for Time Tables, Maps and General Information, or address

R. L. VERNON, F. R. DARBY,
T. P. A., C. P. & T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C. Asheville, N. C.
No trouble to answer questions.

For Sale Cheap

A one-horse power, high-speed General Electric motor, for 500-volt circuit; armature and commutator both new; all in thoroughly good repair. For particulars apply to
MANAGER PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD,
Charlotte, N. C.

Statement

Union Surety and Guaranty Company, Of Philadelphia, Pa.

Condition December 31st, 1902, as shown by Statement Filed.

Capital Stock authorized $250,000 00; Subscribed $250,000 00; Paid in cash.....	$ 250,000 00
Amount net Ledger Assets December 31st of previous year.....	335,608 75
Income—From Policy-holders, $140,833 24; Miscellaneous, $19,706 18; Total.....	160,539 42
Disbursements—To Policy-holders, $35,594 28; Miscellaneous, $103,244 17; Total.....	138,828 45
BUSINESS IN FORCE AT END OF YEAR.
Fidelity, $6,234,076 75; Surety, $13,879,097 77;.....	20,113,174 52
BUSINESS WRITTEN DURING YEAR.
Fidelity $10,478 975 00, Surety, $16,493,948 01,.....	26,972,923 01

Assets

Value of Real Estate (less amount of encumbrances).....	73 516 20
Value of Stocks and Bonds (United States, State, etc., owned).....	1,715 00
Loans on Real Estate (first lien on fee-simple).....	154,516 41
Loans on Stocks, Bonds and other security.....	33,534 38
Interest and Rents due and accrued.....	9,453 05
Cash in Home Office and deposited in Banks.....	33,273 33
Premiums unpaid.....	19,310 02
All other assets detailed in statement.....	256,360 57
Total.....	$ 581 679 56
Less Assets, not admitted,.....	15,132 76
Total admitted assets.....	566,546 80

Liabilities

Unearned premiums.....	$ 66,205 71
Unpaid policy claims.....	8,531 13
Ledger liabilities.....	195,596 17
All other liabilities as detailed in statement.....	1 828 87
Total liabilities as to policy holders.....	$272,161 88
Capital stock paid up.....	250,000 00
Surplus beyond all liabilities.....	44 384 92
Total liabilities.....	566,546 86

Business in North Carolina in 1902

FIDELITY.—Risks written, $287,000 00. Premiums received, $886 00. Amount at risk at end of year, $273,950 00.
SURETY.—Risks written, $214 587 49. Premiums received, $1,784 19. Amount at risk at end of year, $179,987 49.

President, Arnold Marcus. Secretary, W. S. Mackellar.
Home Office, 1428 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Penna.
General Agent for service, Lee H. Battle, Greensboro, N. C.
Business Manager for North Carolina, Managed from home office.

State of North Carolina,
Insurance Department,
Raleigh, July 1, 1903

I, James R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct abstract of the statement of the Union Surety and Guaranty Company, of Phila., Penna. filed with this Department, showing the condition of said Company on the 31st day of December, 1902.

Witness my hand and official seal, the day and date above written.

JAS. R. YOUNG,
Insurance Commissioner,

SEABOARD The Security Life and Annuity Co.

AIR LINE RAILWAY.

In Effect November 23rd, 1902

Vestibuled Limited Trains.

DOUBLE DAILY SERVICE Between New York
Tampa, Atlanta, New Orleans and points

SOUTH and WEST.

SOUTHWARD.

	Daily No. 31.	Daily No. 27.
Lv New York, P. R. R.....	12 55 p m	12 10 a m
Lv Philadelphia, ".....	3 29 p m	7 20 a m
Lv Baltimore, ".....	5 45 p m	9 34 a m
Lv Washington, W. S. Ry..	7 00 p m	10 41 a m
Lv Richmond, S. A. L. Ry..	10 37 p m	2 15 p m
Lv Petersburg, ".....	11 20 p m	2 53 p m
Lv Norfolk, ".....	1 55 a m	5 18 p m
Lv Henderson, ".....	2 28 a m	5 41 p m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	4 15 a m	6 58 p m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	6 16 a m	8 50 p m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	7 35 a m
Lv Columbia, ".....	10 25 a m	12 20 a m
Ar Savannah, ".....	2 35 p m	4 55 a m
Ar Jacksonville, ".....	7 00 p m	9 15 a m
Ar Tampa, ".....	6 45 a m	6 00 p m
	No. 33.	No. 41.
Lv New York, N. Y. P. & N.	† 7 55 a m	8 55 p m
Lv Philadelphia, ".....	10 10 a m	11 21 p m
Lv New York, O. D. S. S. Co.	† 3 00 p m
Lv Baltimore, B. S. P. Co.		† 6 30 p m
Lv Wash'ton, N. & W. S. B.		80 p m m
Lv Portsmouth, S. A. L. Ry	9 05 p m	9 25 a m
Lv Weldon, ".....	11 45 p m	11 55 a m
Lv Norfolk, ".....	1 55 a m	1 35 p m
Lv Henderson, ".....	2 28 a m	2 02 p m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	4 15 a m	3 45 p m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	6 16 a m	6 18 p m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	7 40 a m	9 45 p m
Lv Wilmington ".....		3 20 p m
Ar Charlotte, ".....	10 33 a m	10 32 p m
Lv Chester, ".....	10 30 a m	12 5 a m
Lv Greenwood, ".....	12 37 p m	3 25 a m
Lv Athens, ".....	2 52 p m	5 58 a m
Ar Atlanta, ".....	4 00 p m	7 35 a m
Ar Augusta, C. & W. C.....	5 40 p m
Ar Macon, C of Ga.....	7 20 p m	11 35 a m
Ar Montgomery, A. & W. P.	9 20 p m	6 25 p m
Ar Mobile, L. & N.....	2 55 a m
Ar New Orleans, L. & N.....	7 25 a m
Ar Nashville, N. C. & St. L.	1 30 a m	6 55 p m
Ar Memphis.....	4 15 p m	8 20 a m

NORTHWARD.

	Daily No. 32.	Daily No. 38.
Lv Memphis, N C & St L....	12 45 n 'n	8 00 p m
Lv Nashville, ".....	9 30 p m	9 30 a m
Lv New Orleans, L & N....	8 10 p m
Lv Mobile, ".....	12 40 a m
Lv Montgomery, A & W P..	6 45 a m	1 00 p m
Lv Macon, C of Ga.....	8 00 a m	4 20 p m
Lv Augusta, C & W C.....	10 05 a m
Lv Atlanta, S A L Ry.....	12 00 n 'n	8 00 p m
Ar Athens, ".....	2 57 p m	11 23 p m
Ar Greenwood, ".....	5 15 p m	1 58 a m
Ar Chester, ".....	7 17 p m	4 15 a m
Lv Charlotte, ".....	7 27 p m	5 01 m
Lv Wilmington ".....	8 20 p m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	10 40 p m	7 50 a m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	11 33 p m	8 44 a m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	1 35 a m	11 15 a m
Lv Henderson, ".....	3 05 a m	12 50 p m
Lv Norfolk, ".....	3 50 a m	1 45 p m
Lv Weldon, ".....	5 00 a m	3 00 p m
Ar Portsmouth, ".....	7 15 a m	5 35 p m
Ar Washington, N & W S B		6 55 a m
Ar Baltimore, B S P Co.....		† 6 30 a m
Ar New York, O D S S Co.....		† 5 00 p m
Ar Philadelphia, N Y P & N	† 5 46 p m	5 10 a m
Ar New York, ".....	8 15 p m	8 00 a m
	No. 34.	No. 66.
Lv Tampa, S A L Ry.....	8 00 p m	8 00 p m
Lv Jacksonville, ".....	9 30 a m	7 50 a m
Lv Savannah, ".....	1 40 p m	12 10 p m
Lv Columbia, ".....	7 05 p m	5 30 a m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	10 40 p m	8 40 a m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	11 33 p m	9 35 a m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	1 35 a m	11 50 a m
Lv Henderson, ".....	3 05 a m	1 10 p m
Lv Norfolk, ".....	3 45 a m	1 55 p m
Lv Petersburg, ".....	5 53 a m	4 07 p m
Ar Richmond, ".....	6 35 a m	4 55 p m
Ar Washington, W S Ry....	10 10 a m	8 39 p m
Ar Baltimore, P R R.....	11 25 a m	11 25 p m
Ar Philadelphia, P R R.....	1 38 p m	2 56 a m
Ar New York, P R R.....	4 13 p m	6 30 a m

R. M. COFFEY, C. T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C.

(LEGAL RESERVE)

Home Office : Greensboro, N. C.

Guaranty Capital, - - - - $100,000.00.
(Deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.)

Our Life Annuity, Disability and Endowment Policy - - - -

HAS CASH AND LOAN VALUES.

1. Is fully paid-up in 20 years.
2. Is the most attractive policy issued.
3. Contains every essential idea in Life Insurance.
4. Provides a fixed income for Life for the widow.
5. Provides a fixed income for the children during their minority.
6. Provides a fixed income for the insured during disability and old age.
7. Is secured by a cash guaranty capital of $100,000.00 deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.

J. VAN LINDLEY, President.

GEO. A. GRIMSLEY, Secretary.

R. E. FOSTER, Actuary.

Atlanta & West Point RAILROAD COMPANY.

The Western Railway of Alabama.

Shortest and quickest route via Atlanta, Montgomery and New Orleans to all points in Texas, Mexico and California.

Operate Pullman's finest vestibuled sleepers. Unexcelled dining car service on all trains.

Through coaches between Washington and New Orleans.

Cafe-Observation cars on U. S. Fast Mail Trains Nos. 35 and 36, between Atlanta and Montgomery.

Rates and schedules cheerfully furnished by

B. HEYWARD, J. P. BILLUPS,
D. P. A., G. P. A.,
Atlanta, Ga. Atlanta, Ga.
R. E. LUTZ, CHAS. WICKERSHAM,
Traffic Manager, Pres. & Gen. Mgr.,
Montgomery, Ala. Atlanta, Ga.

NOW READY
"REPORT ON 1000 CONFINEMENT CASES"

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF MEDICINE RICHMOND
VIRGINIA
MEDICINE-DENTISTRY-PHARMACY

"CLINICS 1902-3" - "TEACHING METHODS"
"CATALOGUE"

Agnes Scott Institute FOR YOUNG LADIES.

DECATUR, (Six miles from Atlanta) GEORGIA.
Beautiful grounds. Modern buildings and equipment. Equable climate. Unsurpassed health record. Graduate, College Preparatory, and Special Courses. Certification to Eastern Colleges.
For catalogue address
F. H. GAINES, D. D., President, Box X

Reading Notice.

On the first and third Tuesdays of July, August and September the Frisco System (Saint Louis & San Francisco Railroad) will have on sale reduced one-way and round trip tickets from Birmingham, Memphis and Saint Louis to points in Arkansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Indian Territory and Texas.
Write to W. T. Saunders, G. A., P. D., Frisco System, Atlanta, Ga., for information.

MAGNIFICENT PIANO

GIVEN AWAY ABSOLUTELY FREE

OVER 2000 names registered for the gift piano to July 13th, 1903. Send in your name and address and two cent stamp for return of number and you may be the lucky person. The only question asked, "Are you the Owner of an Upright Piano?"—do you live in North or South Carolina, and has any member of your family registered? Only one member of a family can register and you must live in North or South Carolina, and no matter what make, if you own an upright piano you are not eligible. Remember this piano will be given away absolutely free by

CHAS. M. STIEFF

in appreciation of the phenomenal sale of the "STIEFF" and to advertise the "KOHLER" Piano, which we control in the South.

All names must be received in Charlotte by August 19th, 1903, and none will be registered after that date.

ON WEDNESDAY AUG 26th, 1903 duplicates of every number on our books will be placed in a box and the FIRST number taken out by a little girl, will be given the beautiful "KOHLER" Piano now on exhibition in our warerooms.

Don't fail to enclose two-cent stamp, if you want your number returned. Watch our advertisements for special announcement.

STIEFF

SOUTHERN WAREHOOMS:

211-213 N. Tryon, & 22 W. 5th St.

C. H. WILMOTH, Mgr.

Charlotte, - - - - N. C.

Wire Railing and Ornamental Wire Works.

DUFUR & CO.,

311 N. Howard Street,

Baltimore, Md

Manufacture Wire Railing for Cemeteries, Balconies, etc. Sieves, Fenders, Cag Sand and Coal Screens Woven Wire, Also Iron Bedsteads, Chairs Settees, etc.

Peace Institute and Conservatory, Raleigh, North Carolina.

A THOROUGH SCHOOL OF HIGH-GRADE FOR GIRLS. IN PINE BELT OF NORTH CAROLINA SO FAMOUS FOR HEALTH. * * * * *

We canvass closely and select carefully hence the high-tone and character of this school and its pupils. Catalogue free. Address, JAS. DINWIDDIE, President.

THE AUSTIN

Presbyterian Theological Semin'y AUSTIN, - - - - TEXAS.

Second Session begins Wednesday, October 7, 1903.

The Rev. S. A. King, D. D., Professor of Systematic Theology. The Rev. R. E. Vinson, B. D., Professor of Old Testament Languages and Exegesis; acting Professor of New Testament Language and Exegesis—first year. The Rev. R. K. Smoot, D. D., LL. D., Professor of Church History and Polity; acting Professor of New Testament Language and Exegesis—second year.

There are a number of scholarships available. Students who hold a scholarship receive table-board, fuel and light free of charge, as well as tuition and furnished room.

For full particulars, address

T. R. SAMPSON, D. D., Prest.

STATESVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE

The best College accessible to the young women of Western North Carolina, and the cheapest for the opportunities offered. The session opens September 9, 1903. Send for information,

REV. J. A. SCOTT, President,
Statesville, N. C.

King's Business College!

(INCORPORATED)

Capital Stock, - - - - - $30,000.00

200 students are now attending the summer session of King's Business Colleges, Raleigh, N. C., and Charlotte, N. C. Fall opening September 1, 1903

$75, $60, $70 and $50 per month are the starting salaries of our graduates placed in positions in two weeks' time. Take our course and we will try to do as well by you. Choice of 50 positions each month.

We Prove that we have the best by a business offer

Write for our Offers and College Journal.

KING'S BUSINESS COLLEGE, .. Charlotte or Raleigh, N. C.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE FOR WOMEN,

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Tuition and board lower than any school of same grade in the South. Under the control of the Presbyteries of Concord and Mecklenburg.

For catalogue, address,

REV. J. R. BRIDGES, President.

Or MISS LILY LONG, Dean.

Centre College, 1819. Consolidated 1901.
Central University, 1874

Central University of Kentucky

FOUR COLLEGES—Arts, Law, Medicine, Dentistry.

THREE UNIVERSITY SCHOOLS. Danville, Jackson, Elizabethtown. Total attendance last session, 1,321.

1. Centre College of Kentucky

Danville. W. C. Roberts, D. D., LL. D., President; opens Monday, Sept. 9, 1903.

2. College of Law, Danville.

A. H. Throckmorton, A. M., LL. B., Dean; opens September 9, 1903.

Special Advantages.—Full Faculties of able and experienced men; each a specialist in his department. Complete Equipment, Campus Buildings, Libraries, Laboratories, Apparatus, Gymnasium, Athletic Field. The best moral and religious influences; no saloons; Danville a model college town; expenses very moderate. For full information, address,

L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Vice-President, Danville, Ky.

Truthful, Pure, Manly Boys for The Fishburne School, Waynesboro, Virginia.

English, Classical and Military. Experienced teachers. Thorough work. Superior location. Presbyterian training. Write for catalogue.

JAS. A. FISHBURNE, A. B., Principal.

THE MERCHANTS & FARMERS NATIONAL BANK,

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Capital and Profits, - - - $290,000.

Out of Town Accounts.

Depositors living outside of Charlotte can send us their deposits by mail or express, upon receipt of which the amount will be credited to their account and the deposit acknowledged by mail same day.

We furnish such accounts check books, free of cost, and write up the account monthly, mailing detailed statement with all cancelled checks.

DR. J. H. McADEN, - - - President.
C. N. EVANS, Jr., - Cashier.

Teachers' Interstate Examination Course.

Teachers wishing to prepare for examinations should write at once to Prof. J. L. Graham, LL. D., 152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn., for particulars concerning his Special Teachers' Examination Course

This course is taught by mail, and prepares Teachers for examination in every State in the Union. Leading educators pronounce it the best course ever offered to the Teaching profession, and all Teachers wishing to advance in their profession should immediately avail themselves of it. Enclose stamp for reply.

HOUSTON, DIXON & CO.,

SCHOOL BOOKS, OFFICE SUPPLIES, and HURD'S VERY FINE STATIONERY.

Opposite Central Hotel, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Teachers Wanted.

We need at once a few more Teachers for Fall schools. Good positions are being filled daily by us. We are receiving more calls this year than ever before. Schools and colleges supplied with teachers free of cost. Enclose stamp for reply.

AMERICAN TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION
J. L. GRAHAM, LL. D., Manager.
152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn.

BIG 8 Chain of 8 Colleges owned by business men and indorsed by business men. Fourteen Cashiers of Banks are on our Board of Directors. Our diploma means something. Enter any time. Positions secured.

Draughon's Practical... Colleges, Business ...

(Incorporated, Capital Stock $300,000.00.)

Nashville, Tenn.	U	Atlanta, Ga.
Ft. Worth, Texas,	S	Montgomery, Ala.
St. Louis, Mo.	S	Galveston, Texas.
Little Rock, Ark.	A	Shreveport, La.

For 150 page catalogue address either place.

If you prefer, may pay tuition out of salary after course is completed. Guarantee graduates to be competent or no charges for tuition.

HOME STUDY: Bookkeeping, Shorthand, Penmanship, etc., taught by mail. Write for 100 page BOOKLET on Home Study. It's free.

Ward Seminary for Young Ladies, Nashville, Tenn.

"An ideal Christian home." Seminary and special courses in Language, Literature, History, Science, Music, Art, Elocution. Faculty, 30. Certificate admits to Wellesley, Baltimore Woman's College. Nashville affords unusual advantages in Lectures, Recitals, and opportunities for practical education. Patronage 37th year, 22 States; enrollment in boarding department largest in history of the Institution. 38th year begins Sept. 24. Mild, equable climate. For Catalog R address J. D. BLANTON, Box 4.

OPIUM COCAINE AND WHISKY
Habits Cured at my Sanatorium, in 30 days. Hundreds of references. 25 years a specialty. Book on Home Treatment sent FREE. Address B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

Catawba Male Academy

ROCK HILL, S. C.

A Military Fitting School. Entrance into any American University guaranteed to our graduates.

Thorough preparation for business.

WRITE FOR OUR
ANNOUNCEMENT

Peele College

BETTER THAN A SAVINGS BANK

A high-grade school for training young men and women for business pursuits. Not a single full graduate out of a position in three years. No discount to individuals, hence, lower rates for scholarships. Beautifully equipped. Electric lights, Steam heat, Hydraulic elevator. Business taught by an experienced accountant. Stenography taught by a court reporter. Board $10.00 to $11.00 per month; good fare, with furnished room, in Christian home.

PEELE COLLEGE, Greensboro, N. C.

The Normal and Collegiate Institute, FOR YOUNG WOMEN. ASHEVILLE, N. C.

The Fall Term Opens September 16, 1903.

1. A normal course for the thorough training of Teachers under instructors from best Normal Schools
  2. A Commercial Course, including Stenography, Typewriting, Bookkeeping, etc.
  3. A Course of Domestic Science, including (a) Scientific Cooking, (b) Draughting, Cutting, Fitting, and Making of Garments.
  4. An admirable Musical Department has been provided under trained and experienced teachers.
- Systematic study of the Bible in all Departments
Terms for Board and Tuition in any of the Departments, $50.00 per term, or $100.00 per year.
For Catalogue, address

REV. THOMAS LAWRENCE, D. D., Asheville, N. C.

Washington & Lee University,

Lexington, Virginia. Law Letters Engineering Science

Founded 1749. Modern Equipment. High Standards. Expenses very moderate. Next session opens September 10. For full information address

President GEORGE H. DENNY, LL. D.,
Lexington, Va.

HAMPDEN-SIDNEY COLLEGE.

The 128th Session will open Wednesday, September 9th, 1903.

Four courses of instruction leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., B. L. and A. M.
Nine professors and instructors. Healthful location. Moral surroundings.
For catalogue apply to

RICHARD McILWAINE, President, Hampden-Sidney, Va

CLARKTON MALE INSTITUTE.

A MILITARY SCHOOL,

(UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE PRESBYTERY OF WILMINGTON).

Prepares Boys for college and for life. Board $8 per month. Tuition $27 for nine months.
Write for catalog.

R. C. DEAL, Principal.

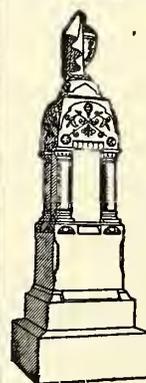

J. J. HUTSON, Commandant.

King's Mountain Military Academy,

Yorkville, South Carolina.

A high-grade school with a first-class patronage. Teachers and cadets live together as one family. A real home school. Stands for the best and nothing but the best. Faculty all active Christian men, who live in closest contact with the cadets.

Col. W. G. STEPHENSON, Supt.

TUCKER BROS.

Wilmington, N. C.

THE PLACE TO BUY YOUR

MONUMENTS.

HEADSTONES,

and all Cemetery Work,

at Bottom Prices. All

work delivered.

Branch yard at

Goldsboro, N. C.

Positions GUARANTEED BY A

$5,000 BANK DEPOSIT

Railroad Fare Paid. 500
FREE Courses Offered.
Board at Cost. Write Quick

GEORGIA-ALABAMA BUSINESS COLLEGE, Macon, Ga.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., SEPTEMBER 9, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 36

The Seabeach in Autumn

Written for The Presbyterian Standard

Beyond long lines of seaward dunes
Beats martial music of the seas;
Like Titan blows of rhythmic ease,
Or onset of old mailed dragoons.

***

All lesser sounds the surf-drums drown;
But on the wild main's hither side
Lie meadows green and marshes wide,
Deep inlets blue and cornfields brown.

***

Eight breezes turn the water-wheel
In mystic motion 'gainst the sky.
Gold ricks of salt sea-grass rise high,
And lengthening still faint shadows steal.

***

Long slants the light of Autumn's sun;
In choring chant the crickets sing;
Snow-white the sail as plumed dove's wing,
And peace falls wide, for day is done.

***

Lands, seas, float in empurpled light,
The level corn is topped with gold,
Green gilding over earth is rolled,
As down she drifts to beauteous night.

MARY C. GATES.

Peace Institute and Conservatory, Raleigh, North Carolina.

A THOROUGH SCHOOL OF HIGH GRADE FOR GIRLS. IN PINE BELT OF NORTH CAROLINA SO FAMOUS FOR HEALTH. * * * * *

We canvass closely and select carefully hence the high-tone and character of this school and its pupils. Catalogue free. Address, JAS. DINWIDDIE, President.

THE AUSTIN

Presbyterian Theological Semin'y AUSTIN, - - - - TEXAS.

Second Session begins Wednesday, October 7, 1903.

The Rev. S. A. King, D. D., Professor of Systematic Theology. The Rev. R. E. Vinson, B. D., Professor of Old Testament Languages and Exegesis; acting Professor of New Testament Language and Exegesis—first year. The Rev. R. K. Smoot, D. D., LL. D., Professor of Church History and Polity; acting Professor of New Testament Language and Exegesis—second year.

There are a number of scholarships available. Students who hold a scholarship receive table-board, fuel and light free of charge, as well as tuition and furnished room.

For full particulars, address

T. R. SAMPSON, D. D., Prest.

STATESVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE

The best College accessible to the young women of Western North Carolina, and the cheapest for the opportunities offered. The session opens September 9, 1903. Send for information,

REV. J. A. SCOTT, President,
Statesville, N. C.

King's Business College!

(INCORPORATED)

Capital Stock, - - - - $30,000.00

200 students are now attending the summer session of King's Business Colleges, Raleigh, N. C., and Charlotte, N. C. Fall opening September 1, 1903.

$75, $60, $70 and $50 per month are the starting salaries of our graduates placed in positions in two weeks' time. Take our course and we will try to do as well by you. Choice of 50 positions each month.

We Prove that we have the best by a business offer

Write for our Offers and College Journal.

KING'S BUSINESS COLLEGE, .. Charlotte or Raleigh, N. C.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE FOR WOMEN, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Tuition and board lower than any school of same grade in the South. Under the control of the Presbyteries of Concord and Mecklenburg.

For catalogue, address, REV. J. R. BRIDGES, President.
Or MISS LILY LONG, Dean.

Centre College, 1819. Consolidated 1901.
Central University, 1874

Central University of Kentucky

FOUR COLLEGES—Arts, Law, Medicine, Dentistry.

THREE UNIVERSITY SCHOOLS. Danville, Jackson, Elizabethtown. Total attendance last session, 1,321.

1. Centre College of Kentucky Danville. W. C. Roberts, D. D., LL. D., President; opens Monday, Sept. 9, 1903.
2. College of Law, Danville A. H. Throckmorton A. M., LL. B., Dean; opens September 9, 1903.

Special Advantages.—Full Faculties of able and experienced men; each a specialist in his department. Complete Equipment, Campus Buildings, Libraries, Laboratories, Apparatus, Gymnasium, Athletic Field. The best moral and religious influences; no saloons; Danville a model college town; expenses very moderate. For full information, address,

L. H. BLANTON, D. D., Vice-President, Danville, Ky.

Truthful, Pure, Manly Boys for The Fishburne School, Waynesboro, Virginia.

English, Classical and Military. Experienced teachers. Thorough work. Superior location. Presbyterian training. THREE STUDENTS OF LAST SESSION HAVE RECEIVED GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS. Write for catalogue. JAS. A. FISHBURNE, A. B., Principal.

THE MERCHANTS & FARMERS NATIONAL BANK,

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Capital and Profits, - - - $290,000.

Out of Town Accounts.

Depositors living outside of Charlotte can send us their deposits by mail or express, upon receipt of which the amount will be credited to their account and the deposit acknowledged by mail same day.

We furnish such accounts check books, free of cost, and write up the account monthly, mailing detailed statement with all cancelled checks.

DR. J. H. McADEN, - - - President.
C. N. EVANS, Jr., - Cashier.

HOUSTON, DIXON & CO.,

SCHOOL BOOKS, OFFICE SUPPLIES, and HURD'S VERY FINE STATIONERY.

Opposite Central Hotel, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Teachers Wanted.

We need at once a few more Teachers for Fall schools. Good positions are being filled daily by us. We are receiving more calls this year than ever before. Schools and colleges supplied with teachers free of cost. Enclose stamp for reply.

AMERICAN TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION
J. L. GRAHAM, LL. D., Manager.

152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn.

BIG 8 Chain of 8 Colleges owned by business men and indorsed by business men. Fourteen Cashiers of Banks are on our Board of Directors. Our diploma means something. Enter any time. Positions secured.

Draughton's Practical Business Colleges

(Incorporated, Capital Stock $300,000.00.)

Nashville, Tenn.	U	Atlanta, Ga.
Ft. Worth, Texas,	S	Montgomery, Ala.
St. Louis, Mo.	S	Galveston, Texas,
Little Rock, Ark.	A	Shreveport, La.

For 150 page catalogue address either place.

If you prefer, may pay tuition out of salary after course is completed. Guarantee graduates to be competent or no charges for tuition.

HOME STUDY: Bookkeeping, Stenography, Penmanship, etc., taught by mail. Write for 100 page BOOKLET on Home Study. It's free.

Pantops Academy For Boys, Near Charlottesville, Va.

Fully equipped Equable climate. Tract of 833 acres, formerly owned by Thomas Jefferson and named by him from two Greek words—"All-seeing." Also Summer School. Catalogue. JOHN R. SAMPSON, A. M.

Address WILBUR R. SMITH,
LEXINGTON, KY.

FOR CIRCULAR OF THE
"Cheapest and best College."

COMMERCIAL COLLEGE OF KY. UNIVERSITY

Refers to thousands of successful graduates. Cost to complete Full Business Course, including Tuition, Books and Board, about $90. Phonography, Type-Writing and Telegraphy taught. Address WILBUR R. SMITH, Lexington, Ky.

Medical College of Virginia.

Established 1838.

Departments of Medicine, Dentistry and Pharmacy

The sixty sixth session will commence on September 29, 1903. Well equipped Laboratories, splendid Hospital facilities and abundance of clinical material afford excellent opportunities for practical work.

Tuition fees and living expenses are very moderate. For announcement and further information, address, CHRISTOPHER TOMPKINS, M. D., Dean.
Richmond, Va.

Presbyterian Standard.

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., SEPTEMBER 9, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 36

Event and Comment.

The Presbyterian Evangelistic Committee has held one hundred and twenty-seven open air and tent meetings in Philadelphia this summer.

A writer in the Interior discusses the question: "Did St. Paul Suffer from Hallucination?" Well, the man that thinks it worth while to debate that old theory is suffering from hallucination.

An educated Hindoo, though not a Christian, advocates the use of the Bible as a text-book in all the schools in India. Respectfully referred to Catholic friends in Charlotte and elsewhere.

Dr. Washington Gladden, after serving as an Alderman in the City Council of Columbus, Ohio, now thinks "that the Church should keep itself from entanglement with practical politics." He might have learned that without experimenting.

We talk about the necessity of Sunday mails in some of our little one-horse towns in America. The city of Belfast, Ireland, had a petition for a Sunday postal service, which was forwarded by the city council, turned down by the protest of the Presbyterian and other Protestant people.

The cosmopolitan character of our American cities is indicated by the fact that a meeting of Greeks, Bulgarians, Macedonians, Servians, Armenians and Albanians, was held in Chicago the other day, to protest against the Turkish massacres. President Roosevelt was asked to send a note of protest to the European Powers.

At a meeting of the Church of England folks the other day, called the Convocation of York and Canterbury, it was resolved to form an "advisory lay council in each parish." We might paraphrase the remark of James I. and say that they are "aiming at a Scot's Presbytery which agrees with Episcopacy as God agrees with the Devil."

One of the features of the new Education Scheme in England, against which there has been such sturdy protest, is that it makes the tax-payer pay for Roman Catholic schools as well as for those of the Established Church. And some of the Anglicans are refusing to pay and are joining the Passive Resistance Party. That Education Scheme is going to turn the Government over into better hands before we hear the last of it.

The recent death of William E. Dodge deprived the City of New York of one of its foremost citizens and the Presbyterian Church of one of its most loyal members. His example always was that of a Christian citizen. He devoted a great part of his wealth to missionary and philanthropic enterprises and not the smallest of his contributions to the cause of Christ was the use of his fine business talents in the administration of the affairs of the kingdom. A prince and a great man has fallen in Israel.

While the peonage cases in the South are still remembered, it is just as well to point out that there is a system in New York City which apparently cannot be broken up, by which a sailor is made to owe the disreputable boarding-house where he puts up, is drugged and delivered to the captain of an outgoing ship, who advances to the boarding-house keeper the amount of the alleged debt. The captain gets the sailor, the hotel-keeper gets the sailor's money and the sailor is practically sold into slavery.

Leonard W. Bacon has printed a pamphlet entitled "Anti-Slavery before Garrison." In that he attacks the mendacious statements that the nation had not awaked to the evils of slavery before the crusade of William Lloyd Garrison and his friends. On the contrary, Bacon proves that before Garrison began his abolition agitation, the North was solidly against slavery and the South was divided on the question. After Garrison, the North became divided and the South became a unit in the defence of slavery. The infinite harm of fanaticism has nowhere been more strikingly shown.

The advent of the new Pope is the signal for an outcropping of the forces of progress in the pale of Catholicism. The younger clergy have lately made an appeal for an organization, and for the support of the press in their efforts to lift the pall of medievalism from their church. It is doubtful whether any reform from within is practical to the Roman Hierarchy, especially since the Reformed Church is always standing without as a warning against its abuse and a welcome to the earnest souls that are tired of those abuses. Nevertheless Protestantism will watch with interest the effort to harmonize ancient superstition with present day enlightenment.

The Living Church lays in deadly parallel the ceremonies attending President Roosevelt's visit to the fleet the other day and the Episcopal Ritual, thus: "The marines presented arms, the bugle sounded a fan-fare, and the drums gave four ruffles. Then the band played 'Hail to the Chief,' and Admiral Barker received the President on the Quarter-Deck." And this is made to correspond to "The Genuflexions. The Benedictus Qui Venit. The Reception." And then the contemporary asks, "If all this—why not this?" Well, that is about the funniest argument for ritualism that we ever saw, frankly, and people can hardly answer that solemn question for laughter.

Some time ago The Standard published a series of editorials under the caption, Competition, Combination, or Co-operation. One of the predictions made then is being fulfilled now in the combination of the Coal Teamsters' Union and the Coal Team Owners of Chicago. The Independent remarks that the present tendencies are making the great middle class of the population, who are just now between the two millstones of Organized Capital and Organized Labor, more sympathetic toward socialism than toward any other form of the social structure. There is a Christian Socialism that is coming in its own good time, when the picture will be drawn again, "And they that believed had all things in common, neither was there any among them that lacked."

The Calvinists of Geneva are going to build a monument to Michael Servetus with some such inscription as this: "Protestants and friends of Calvin have erected this expiatory monument to repudiate all coercion in matters of faith and to proclaim their invincible attachment to the gospel and to liberty." Servetus was condemned for his blasphemy in an age that thought blasphemy worse than the anarchy for which he could have been condemned in America in the Twentieth Century. The man who was made his prosecuting attorney and who pleaded for a more merciful fate than the Genevans decreed, following the old law of Catholic Geneva, has a grander monument than any made with hands, the Reformed Faith throughout the world and the civil and religious liberty of Anglo-Saxondom.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established January 1, 1858.

A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER FOR THE FAMILY. DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM AS REPRESENTED BY THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

A. J. MCKELWAY, ..... EDITOR.
CORNELIA R. SHAW, ..... ASSOCIATE EDITOR
H. M. McALLISTER, ..... BUSINESS MANAGER

WESTERN OFFICE:

GEO. L. LEYBURN, ..... EDITOR AND MANAGER.
3511 Bell Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

Subscription Price, ..... $2.00 a Year, in Advance.

The STANDARD is published every Wednesday at Charlotte, N. C., by the PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

For table of contents see page 16.

The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription has been paid.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the subscription.

In accordance with the general wish of our patrons the paper is discontinued only upon the written request of the subscriber. Arrearages must be settled in full at the same time, at the rate of two dollars a year and twenty cents a month for a part of a year.

When change of address is desired give both the old and the new address.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post-office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South. Address all communications to

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD, Charlotte, N. C.

The Bible,

The Public Schools,

And the Catholic Church.

Our Richmond contemporary, the Times-Dispatch, takes note of an incident that occurred in Charlotte the other day and comments as follows:

"It is reported from Charlotte, N. C., that as the result of an order of the school commissioners of that city, compelling the daily reading of the Bible in the public schools, it is probable that not a single child of Catholic parents will attend the next session of the Charlotte public schools. "The Catholics hold," says the correspondent, "that it is unjust to compel their children to listen to the reading of the Protestant version of the Bible in schools supported by public taxes."

"This is a vexatious question. No one contends that the Bible ought to be taught as a text-book in the public schools, for that would be sectarian instruction, and denominations would naturally be at cross purposes as to what peculiar doctrine should be taught. But Archbishop Magee has pointed out that even the reading of the Bible without comment is sectarian teaching. 'For I ask, in the first place,' says he, 'what Bible is to be read from, the Authorized or the Roman Catholic version? If from the former, it is decidedly sectarian as regards the Roman Catholics, who will not accept that version, and if from the latter, it is sectarian as regards the Protestants. Is it to be from the Old Testament and New Testament? Then it is sectarian as regards the Jew; and if from the Old Testament only, then it is sectarian as regards the Christian, who demands the New Testament also. You cannot read the Bible in the school without teaching certain opinions about the Bible held by different sects according to the nature of the Bible you use.'"

In the first place, it is no new thing that the Bible is ordered read in the Public Schools in Charlotte. The orders of the School Commissioners here tally with the laws of the Christian State of North Carolina. In the second place, at a subsequent meeting of the school commissioners it was found that there were few if any of the Catholic children who were attending the Public Schools in Charlotte. So the threat of non-attendance is altogether an idle one. In the third place, the advice to the Catholic population was largely an advertisement of the excellencies of the Catholic School in Charlotte and was discounted on that account.

So that the question is by no means a "vexatious one" locally, whatever efforts may have been put forth to make it so.

But our contemporary has been strangely beguiled into the old threshed-over error that the Bible is a sectarian book. Catholic authority, in the light of Catholic precedent as to any use of the Bible by the people, is hardly proof of the proposition. It is a notorious fact among scholars, even Catholic scholars, that the old Douay version of the Bible is an exceedingly faulty one. There has just been given permission to a Catholic scholar to make a better English translation of the Bible, changing the ridiculous phrase "do penance," for instance, into the Bible word, "repent." It would probably be irksome to Protestant parents whose children are concerned to have this faulty and partisan version read. Still, between that and no Bible they would say, Give us the Douay Version. But the charge of partisanship has never been lodged against the great English classic, the King James Version. And there is no probability that in accuracy and faithfulness to the original the Revised Version, the American Version, especially, will ever be surpassed.

There is a doctrinal difference behind all this controversy that American Catholics are afraid to state. So they dodge the issue and hide behind the "Protestant Version." The Protestant doctrine of the relation between the Bible and the people is summed up in the historic phrase, The Right of Private Judgment. The Protestant belief is that the Bible ought to be given to the people, and that its truth is so self-evident it will do its own blessed work, in spite of the ignorance of those who study it. They may be led astray in minor matters. But in the great essentials, "He who runs may read."

On the other hand, the Catholic Church holds the ridiculous historical position that the Church is before the Bible and is the only interpreter of the Bible. Hence it is better not to have any Bible than not to have the Church's interpretation. We say that American Catholics dodge the issue when they talk about the Protestant Version. The real issue is, that the Bible itself is unwelcome anywhere, unless there is a priest or a commentary of the Church somewhere along with it, to make it harmonize with Catholic traditions.

In other countries they are not so particular. Read the history of Catholic Spain or Brazil. It is as much as a missionary's life is worth even in Brazil today to give Bibles to the people. In the Philippines, one of the very last acts of the Papal Hierarchy there, was the poisoning of two Bible Colporteurs, one of whom died and the other was banished, after his recovery. The son of the latter is now giving all the Bibles he pleases to the Filipinos, under Protestant direction.

And the trick is such an old one that we are surprised our alert contemporary has never become aware of it. First the effort is made to exclude the Bible from the schools on the ground that it is a sectarian book. Next, if there is no religious teaching in the schools, even the reading of the Bible, then education is irreligious and the Catholic children must not attend the Catholic Schools. The third logical step has about been prevented after heroic efforts, namely, that since the Catholic children could not attend the godless, Bibleless, Public Schools, and were taxed to support them, therefore a part of the taxes should be devoted to the Catholic Schools.

After all, the money question obtrudes through the mazes of indirection. The parochial schools through their patronage by Catholic children bring a little more money into the ever unsatisfied treasury of the Papacy. The Public Schools threaten this source of income. Hence these tears about the hardship that the poor little Catholics have to suffer in listening to that partisan translation of the Bible, the King James Version.

Turning the World Upside Down.

There has always been a tendency to hold the messenger of truth responsible for the effects of the truth itself. When Elijah stood before Ahab, after the curse of the drought had fallen upon Israel, he said to him, Art thou he that troubleth Israel? And the surprising thing is that Ahab said that to Elijah, Ahab with Naboth's wine upon his table and Naboth's red blood upon his hands. The King of Syria who warred against Israel argued that if he could only get his hands on the Prophet that was in Israel who disclosed all his plots to the King then he could win the victory over God's people. The King of Israel, when, the famine was sore in Samaria, sought to slay the Prophet Elisha, holding him responsible for the whole war and its disastrous results. So, in New Testament times we see the same principle manifesting itself. Paul and Silas were preaching the gospel in Thessalonika. And the Jews believed that gospel. But some of them that did not tried to stop the truth by putting the truth-tellers out of the way. Yet they acknowledged that they were making quite a stir in the world with the truth of Christianity. "These men that have turned the world upside down have come hither also."

Christianity is from its very nature an intolerant religion. That intolerance has too often taken the form of persecution, ere men began to understand the truth that the Kingdom of God is not to be promoted by force. But the gospel is intolerant, nevertheless. There was not room in the Roman empire for the two religions of Christianity and Paganism. And Paganism went to the wall. In spite of all the classic history and traditions of Greece and Rome, Paganism succumbed to the religion of the Galilean Prophet who was crucified as a malefactor.

So will be brought to naught all the false religions of the world, spite of the sentimental ideas that some people have regarding them. There is not room enough in India for Christianity and Buddhism, nor in China for Christianity and Confucianism, nor in Japan for Christianity and Shintoism. There is not room enough in the world today for Christianity and Mohammedanism. The work may be slow or it may be swift. It will probably be swifter than we think, now that the great problems of transportation and communication have been solved. But the work is sure. Truth will turn the world upside down, but the false religions must perish as have perished the Judaism that would not acknowledge Christ, and the Paganism of Greece and Rome, and the human sacrifices that our ancestors offered in the forests of Germany, and the forgotten religions of the past, and the false religions of the present and the future. There is none other name given under heaven among men whereby we must be saved.

Again Christianity has an overturning force when it is brought in contact with tyranny in government. These Jews of Thessalonika told more of the truth than they knew when they spoke of Paul and Silas as doing contrary to the decrees of Caesar, saying that there was another king, one Jesus. There had come a new force into the world. Paul and Silas were law-abiding Roman citizens. But there was a power in the truth that they proclaimed that in time shattered the Roman empire to its foundations. It had been built upon the force of arms. It was supported by the might of unscrupulous tyranny; and therefore as the gospel of Christ pervaded the minds of men, and the principles of that gospel were understood, men cultivated those ideas of liberty of conscience, and then of liberty in government, that has sent many a king into exile or to the block and reared upon ruined thrones the strong structure of popular government.

So there is not room in the Turkish Empire today for Christianity and Mohammedanism, with its unspeakable cruelty. Christianity is there, though as yet in small measure. But the Turkish Minister is already trying to throw upon the missionaries the blame of the present disorders. The Missionaries are only responsible as they are the messengers of truth. But that truth is winning its way. It instills into the minds of men respect for human life of which the Mohammedan knows nothing. It gives to the Christian the instinct for human rights and liberties in general, and finally the resolve to assert those rights which has been the overturning of empires many a time. Those that turn the world upside down have gone to Turkey also.

Upon this same missionary journey Paul found another of the world-forces with which Christianity came into opposition. "By this craft we have our wealth," said Demetrius the silver-smith of Ephesus. "This, our craft, is in danger of being set at naught." The wealth of the world has been more often arrayed against a pure Christianity than it has been on its side. There are great aggregations of wealth today, such as the world has never seen. No man can foretell what the future may bring forth. But of this we may be certain, that if the clash does come between the gospel and the world of wealth, it will not be Christianity that will go down. It is in the power of that same gospel that ruined Demetrius and made the great Dana of the Ephesians a laughing-stock, so to endue the minds of men with the principles of honesty in the acquisition of wealth and of fairness in the distribution of government favors, as shall turn things upside down once more. But the power is in the truth itself.

The Interior Characterizes Itself.

We published the other day a tribute to General Lee's patriotism from the Outlook. Another religious weekly magazine, Christendom, Chicago, has been publishing a series of articles on General Lee, from the Confederate Chaplain, Dr. J. William Jones. Apparently the combination has been too much for the Interior. It is just as well, we suppose, now and then, for the Interior to indicate how much it lost in broadmindedness and clarity of vision when Dr. Gray died. The following paragraph would have been impossible in the editorial columns any time in the last five years of Dr. Gray's life:

"A good deal of writing and speaking of late has been devoted to the purpose of justifying the moral right of General Robert E. Lee's decision to serve the Confederacy against the Union at the outbreak of the Civil War. There are surely admirable motives behind the contributions which Northern men and journals have made to this object, a motive of charity toward the historic reputation of a man notably pure and Christian in private character, and a motive of fraternity toward those who remember General Lee as comrade to themselves or their fathers. But neither motive can atone for obscuring moral distinctions before the eyes of young men and women who study the history of the nation. The truest basis now extant for judging General Lee's sentiments at the hour of division between North and South is his famous letter of January, 1861, in which he wrote: 'I can anticipate no greater calamity for the country than a dissolution of the Union. It would be an accumulation of all the evils we complain of, and I am willing to sacrifice everything but honor for its preservation.' That is, General Lee knew secession to be wrong. Yet he fought four years to uphold that wrong thing. No heaping together of reasons that influenced him in his course can cover up the obliquity of his deliberate transgression of conscience and judgment. General Lee was a good and strong man, but not as good and strong a man as he ought to have been, or he would not have quibbled with the question of right and wrong in the issues of 1861 until he lost sight of it altogether in the minor question of where his political allegiance lay. Of charity for his error General Lee shall always have abundance in the memory of all Americans, but as we mean to honor rigid standards of righteousness in our own lives, we cannot afford even for charity's sake to let those standards be warped and twisted when laid against the character of General Lee or any other person living or dead."

Note that this stickler for rigid standards of righteousness without warping or twisting, proceeds to warp and twist General Lee's language into a confession that secession was wrong. He said that it would be a calamity, than which he could conceive of none greater, and he was willing to sacrifice everything but honor for the preservation of the Union. But a calamity cannot sometimes be prevented. If there had been a modicum of General Lee's sense of honor in the mind of this scribbler, there would never have been the attempt to confuse the prediction of a calamity with a confession of wrong, for having pursued a certain course of action after the calamity had come.

The trouble with so many of these tyros is their utter ignorance of the constitutional history of their country. Every one ought to know by this time that the right to secede was left an open question in the Constitution; that secession was threatened several times, mainly by New England States, before the fact of Southern Secession; that if this right voluntarily to withdraw from an association voluntarily entered into by sovereign States that had been independent colonies had not been granted, the Union would never have been formed in the first place. All constitutional scholars of the present era have given the right of secession to the South.

Then consider that this letter of General Lee's was written in January, 1861. South Carolina had seceded the month before. Virginia was vainly trying to act the peacemaker between the two sections. Northern newspapers were taunting her with the reproach that she could not be kicked out of the Union. Then came the base treachery in the War Department at Washington, in spite of assurances to the contrary, the plan to send re-inforcements to a part of South Carolina, Fort Sumter. Then came the storming of the fort and then Lincoln's call for troops to invade and subjugate the South. It was then that Lee put by him the glittering rewards of the chief command of the Federal Army and accepted a subordinate position in the Virginia Army. North Carolina did not secede until May 20, 1861. She and Virginia had to choose between an alliance with the Northern or the Southern States after the Union had been dissolved and the war begun.

And then think of the clotted nonsense of the abstract proposition, Secession is wrong, in a Presbyterian paper. Was the secession of the Netherlands from the rule of Catholic Spain wrong? Have the secession of the American Colonies from Great Britain, of Mexico and Cuba from Spain, of Brazil from Portugal, been wrongs? And yet there was no doubt as to the constitutional allegiance of these countries, to the mother country. The idea of measuring with a little piece of partisan tape-line William of Orange or Richard Cameron or George Washington or Robert E. Lee, and saying, "But secession was wrong"!

No, rebellion or revolution may be all right. But name it secession, and you shake the red flag in the eyes of that bovine animal never very much distinguished for discriminating intelligence.

The Pharisaism of it is almost as bad as the Philistinism. Counted for nothing were the nullifications of the Constitution, by Northern States, even the denunciation of it as "a league with death and a covenant with hell." Reckoned for naught the bootless descent upon the South of a murderous, fanatical anarchist from Kansas, with his hope of a negro uprising and his slaughter of inoffensive citizens. Forgotten the frenzied deification of John Brown, revealing to the South as by a lightning flash the real state of public sentiment in the North. It is convenient to remember nothing of the goading of the South into secession. But "secession was wrong." General Lee said it would be a calamity. Therefore he thought it wrong. Hence there was "the obliquity of his deliberate transgression of judgment and conscience."

Will the Interior excuse us if we gently intimate that General Lee's fame as a patriot is so secure that his admirers can dispense with the Interior's "charity for his error?" Lee does not lose by this anachronistic outburst. The Interior is simply classifying itself among the stultified re-actionaries, whose influence with intelligent Northern sentiment is as small as their bigotry is evident. It was an author who is forever nameless, because of his baseness, who was "disappointed in the Atlantic Ocean." We regret that the editor of the Interior with his "rigid standards of righteousness" is disappointed in General Lee's moral character.

Review of Contemporaries.

Pulitzer School of Journalism.

The question whether journalism can be taught as a theory or may only be learned by practice, has been suddenly lifted out of the sphere of mere academic debate by the munificent gift of two million dollars given by Joseph Pulitzer, proprietor of "The New York World," to establish a School of Journalism at Columbia University. There will be ample time, before the school is opened in the fall of 1904, to continue the debate as to the sense in which journalism can be taught, and the scope of the particular teaching to be afforded with respect to this important trade or "profession" as it is now properly coming to be termed. But the fact that a royally endowed school will be in actual operation if all goes well in a little over a year, will contribute a practical argument in favor of the study of the theory of journalism, which many minds will approve as sound, and the school so founded, will probably not lack for appreciative pupils from the very start.

Mr. Pulitzer has shown great wisdom and generosity in making his gift to this school so large, and in associating it with a university of acknowledged standing. Thus the enterprise is from the start made big enough and broad enough to command attention and respect from the general public. Such a school must be developed on large lines if it is to be a success. Its founder has shown that he possesses an adequate conception of what such an institution should be, and has also exhibited wisdom in committing the precise development of the course of instruction to a representative advisory board, composed of noted educators, who are men of high ideals and broad sympathies, and to whose membership will probably be added in due time, experts in the practical business of journalism.

The success of the school—which is of course an experiment, and an experiment on a huge scale—will largely depend upon the mixing of the theoretic and the practical in proper proportions. It is quite easy to sit down in a comfortable study or behind a teacher's desk and lay down general principles which should govern the manufacture and conduct of newspapers, and quite another and more difficult task, amid the complex business conditions which inevitably affect all publication work, to achieve the ideal or even to find time to remember what the ideal is—or at any rate that ideal which looms big and impressive in the imagination of the academic critic of the press, who mayhap does not know an "em" from a "space."

Nevertheless there is abundant scope and room, in our judgment, for a properly conducted School of Journalism, which, as Mr. Pulitzer well expresses it, shall stand in the same relation to journalism that law schools sustain to the pursuit of law, and which shall be conducted on the underlying assumption that the journalist is under moral obligation to the community to make the best of himself and not simply the best for himself. There is room for ideals in the conduct of newspaper men, who know all the difficulties in the case, as well as by doctrinaire pedagogues. The School of Journalism founded by the proprietor of "The New York World" is abundantly capable, if organized and conducted as doubtless it will be conducted, both to lift the ideals of journalism throughout America and to improve the practice of the office and the composing room. It may also perhaps exercise a wholesome and salutary though incidental influence in improving the relations between editors and the men behind the "stick."

It seems to be generally agreed on all sides that the great editor is born, not made. But that does not mean that natural aptitudes for newspaper work possessed by any individual may not be cultivated to his own advantage, and that of the community. It might be more correct to say that the great editor is both born and made. He is an evolution from past types—we mean no pun—and may also be educated by his environment and by distinct cultural processes, such as a college in its general courses and a School of Journalism in its special courses provides. There is almost nothing which a thoroughly equipped journalist does not need to know, or would not do well to know. Though specialism in journalism as well as in other lines has been developed to a great extent of late years, it still remains true that for a technical acquaintance with types and forms and "revises," a broad base in general culture may profitably be laid.

Mr. Pulitzer is to be congratulated on the high conception of the future of journalism which he entertains and to which he has given such practical and generous expression, and the unfolding of the School of Journalism at Columbia so endowed, will be watched with great interest by Americans from the Atlantic to the Pacific.—New York Observer.

The Marvelous Australian Revival.

When I reached Melbourne, I was informed by a committee that there were two thousand prayer-meetings held every week. Of course, God answered their prayers. Melbourne is a place made up of small Melbournes, with several town halls, magnificent buildings. The committee had engaged them all. In every available open space were held out-of-door meetings. There was a nightly attendance of fifty-three thousand people, listening to the gospel, with conversions from the very outset. At the afternoon Bible study the hall was not large enough; they had to divide the noon meeting into two, holding one at twelve for three thousand women, and one an hour later for three thousand men.

When they secured the Exhibition Hall, seating seven or eight thousand, they thought they had a big building; but the first night the building was packed, but those on the outside were determined to get on the inside, and they swept the police before them in their desire to get in. The power of God was there, and every night as we spoke of being weighed in the balance and found wanting, the judgment day, the baptism of fire, and heaven, heaven came down and hell was defeated. When our month in Melbourne was ended, we knew definitely of eight thousand two hundred and forty-seven people rejoicing in Jesus Christ, who were not rejoicing in Him when the month opened, and we don't know how many thousands there were who did not openly confess Christ. At the business men's meetings which were held, I took up the subjects, "Is the Bible the Word of God?" "Did Jesus Rise From the Dead?" "Infidelity—Its Causes, Consequences, and Cure," and similar subjects. Do you know there has not been a city in which we have not a record of skeptics and infidels brought to Jesus Christ? I remember one day in Melbourne a man was singing, "Where Is My Wandering Boy To-night?" and down in the audience a man jumped to his feet, and said, "I am here, I am coming home." Down the aisle he ran, and when I followed him into a private room I found him on his knees exclaiming, "Will God ever forgive me, for my blasphemy has been against Jesus Christ?" He found peace, and I discovered he was one of the lecturers of the Infidel Society of Melbourne.

In Australia, men and women were converted by the thousands; two men of eighty-four years, one of ninety-two. I shall never forget that man sitting that night down in the front seat, drinking in every word; at last he got up and said, "I had not been in a religious meeting since I was ten years old, and now at the age of ninety-two I take Jesus Christ as my Savior." Just a word about the Melbourne singing. Our choir this evening is a pretty good choir, isn't it? In Melbourne, twelve hundred and fifty people came and joined the choir, and many more would have liked to join. In Sydney, in a few days we had to turn people away by the thousands. Oh, those magnificent audiences, when the Town Hall was packed by men only! As the meeting closed they walked down out of their seats and stood up in front of the audience, and on one occasion two hundred confessed Christ. Tasmania I cannot stay to mention. We had twelve days in Hobart, and twelve days in Launceston, and then we started for Sydney; but when we returned, about four months afterwards, to Hobart, they told us they did not know of one convert who had gone back. I suppose some had, but they did not know of any. When we got to Wellington, the first night the meeting was full; in a few nights they could not pack them in, and the power of God was manifested every night.—R. A. Torrey in Showers of Blessing.

Devotional.

Our Life Melody.

"There is no music in a rest, but there is the making of music in it." In our whole life-melody the music is broken off here and there by "rests," and we foolishly think we have come to the end of the time. God sends a time of forced leisure, sickness, disappointed plans, frustrated efforts, and makes a sudden pause in the choral hymn of our lives, and we lament that our voices must be silent, and our part missing in the music which ever goes up to the ear of the Creator. How does the musician read the rest? See him beat the time with unvarying count and catch up the next note true and steady, as if no breaking place had come in between.

Not without design does God write the music of our lives. Be it ours to learn the time and not be dismayed at the "rests." They are not to be slurred over, not to be omitted, not to destroy the melody, not to change the keynote. If we look up, God himself will beat the time for us. With the eye on him, we shall strike the next note full and clear. If we say sadly to ourselves, "There is no music in a rest," let us not forget "there is the making of music in it." The making of music is often a slow and painful process in this life. How patiently God works to teach us! How long he waits for us to learn the lesson."—John Ruskin.

God's Opportunity.

Some one has said that "each human life is another opportunity for God to display His grace and power" So it is, and the thought will grow upon you as you meditate upon it. Just think, "I am God's opportunity!" Isn't it wonderful! Isn't it glorious! When we look at others whom God has richly blessed and honored in service, we can see how it is; but do we ever think of ourselves as God's opportunity?

Every one that responds to God's call, "Come!" gives God a larger place in the world.

Every one who obeys God's command, "Go!" assists God in gaining a larger place in the hearts of men. Every regenerated heart and life is a new garden in which God plants his seeds of love and grace; a fountain out of which flow constant streams of healing power.

Take it home, dear young friend, and say to yourself, "I am God's opportunity." Be that, and your life will become unutterably grand and your experience unspeakably sweet.—A. W. Spooner, D. D.

A friend once showed Ruskin a costly handkerchief on which a blot of ink had been made. "Nothing can be done with that," the friend said, thinking the handkerchief worthless and ruined now. Ruskin carried it away with him, and after a time sent it back to his friend. In a most skillful and artistic way, he had made a fine design in India ink, using the blot as its basis. Instead of being ruined, the handkerchief was made far more beautiful and valuable. So God takes the blots and stains upon our lives, the disfiguring blemishes, when we commit them to him and by his marvelous grace changes them into marks of beauty.—Sunday-school Times.

Make yourselves nests of pleasant thoughts. None of us yet know, for none of us have been taught in early youth what fairy palaces we may build of beautiful thoughts, proof against all adversity—bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings—treasure houses of restful and pleasant thoughts, which care cannot disturb, nor pain make gloomy, nor poverty take away from us—houses built without hands for our souls to live in.—Ruskin.

What was the secret of her power? What had she done? Absolutely nothing; but radiant smiles, beaming good humor, the tact of divining what every one felt and every one wanted, told that she had got out of self and learned to think of others. That was the secret of her heavenly power.—Robertson.

Missionary.

A Note from Dr. DuBose.

The question was often asked by friends, "Do you get seasick?" I am happy to answer with the advance of time, "I put away childish things." I was able to do full duty at the table three times a day without exception. The empresses on the Canadian line are large and comfortable, especially well-officered,—and with every attention paid to passengers—and make the voyage from shore to shore with only two Sabbath's intervening.

The ship ran as far north as the 52nd parallel, where it was quite cold, but this could well be endured on account of the speed. The meridians converge towards the pole, so whereas on the equator there are 60 miles to the degree, on the 52nd parallel there are proximately 36 miles. On the equator in a run of 360 miles we pass six degrees, while on the northern route with the same distance we pass ten degrees.

We were in view of the Aleutian Islands, some of which are 7,000 feet in height. Ulak was quite near, and we coasted past Amatignak whose rocky heights are covered only with green moss. The admiralty chart shows how large in number these islands are, and they extend near to the coast of Kamschatka.

The Church must grope her way into the alleys and courts and purlieus of the city, and up the broken staircase, and into the bare room, and beside the loathsome sufferer; she must go down into the pit with the miner, into the fore-castle with the sailor, into the tent with the soldier, into the shop with the mechanic, into the factory with the operative, into the field with the farmer, into the counting-room with the merchant. Like the air, the Church must press equally on all the surfaces of society; like the sea, flow into every nook of the shore-line of humanity; and, like the sun, shine on things foul and low as well as fair and high, for she was organized, commissioned, and equipped for the moral renovation of the world—Bishop Simpson in. The Missionary.

At the last annual meeting of the China Inland Mission in London, Mr. J. Hudson Taylor closed a half century of missionary service. A letter was read from Mr. Taylor asking to be relieved of the work of general director, on account of his health. In closing his communication he said:

"I feel very thankful to God that, when I am no longer able to bear the responsibility, He has given great unanimity of feeling, and experienced help for the future carrying on of the work. I have every reason to believe that all the various departments will be carried on prayerfully and wisely. If spared to see the autumn of the present year, I shall look back on fifty years since I sailed from Liverpool to China, with grateful acknowledgement for all the way God has led me and for His sustaining and providing bounty, and be able to testify that in no good thing that He has ever led me from His Word to expect has He failed me."—The Missionary.

"When comes the King in royal might
To crush the wrong and crown the right,
When all the Saints in glory meet
No more to die, no more to weep;
When thrones are set and crowns are given,
And all the rich rewards of Heaven.
O! in that glorious by and by
What's done for God can never die."

Earth has seen many sorry sights. But never has she seen a man who kept the path of duty, lose faith in God and Heaven.—Quo Vaditas.

Nature fashions her mountain peaks but not the paths to their summits. Man must chisel his own trail up the cliffs. He who would reach the stars must furnish his own ladder.

Sunday School Lesson.

BY REV. H. G. HILL, D. D.

David Becomes King.

II Sam. 2, 1-10. Sept. 13, 1903.

After going to the country of the Philistines and entering the service of Achish, David had a checkered experience.

Forbidden by the Lords of the Philistines to go with them to battle against Israel, he returned to Ziklag, only to find it burned by the Amalekites, who had carried away [captive their wives and children and all their possessions. Pursuing after these invaders, David and his men slay most of them and recover all the spoil. When they had been in Ziklag two days after his expedition against the Amalekites David hears of the fatal battle of Gilboa and of the death of Saul and Jonathan. He orders an Amalekite who has brought the tidings and who claims that he has slain Saul to be executed and pays fitting tribute to the virtues of the departed king and his friend Jonathan.

In the lesson before us David is considering what course to pursue and the passage suggests important topics.

1. David Seeking Divine Guidance.—Saul is dead and the nation is without a recognized king. David is uncertain as to whether he should abide at Ziklag or return into the land of Israel. He asks counsel of God in the way prescribed at that period through the priest with the Ephod containing the Urim and Thummim.

He desires to know if he shall return into the land of Israel and to what place he is to go? He wishes to know precisely what was the will of the Lord in the matter and to act accordingly. He knows that he has been anointed for kingship as Saul's successor, but he does not hasten to assume office without consulting Jehovah. David does not seek God's guidance in vain. He is plainly told to return to Israel and to dwell at Hebron. In times of perplexity and doubt we can not do better than to follow David's example and to seek Divine counsel and direction. We can obtain these by studying the Word, attending to providences and praying for the Holy Spirit.

2. David Crowned at Hebron.—David is made king over Judah at Hebron where he reigned over the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin seven and a half years. Here the elders of the people ratified what had been appointed of God and placed the crown upon the head of God's anointed king. It was fitting that at this place David should be invested with royal honors, for Hebron had been the home of the patriarchs and the cradle of his race. He entered upon his kingship long after he had been anointed for office by the Oil of Samuel and the Spirit of the Lord. But the years that had passed had been a time of discipline and preparation for his exalted functions. So believers in Jesus are rendered kings unto God long after they have been regenerated by the Divine Spirit. But the passing years with their varied experiences only qualify them the better for wearing crowns and for heavenly kingship.

3. David's Approval of the Men of Jabesh-gilead.—The valiant men of Jabesh at the risk of their lives had taken the bodies of Saul and his sons from the wall of Bethshan and given them honorable burial. They did this in recognition of the signal service rendered them by Saul in the early part of his reign in rescuing them from Nahash the Ammonite. The heroic soul of David could appreciate a gallant deed. Hence he emphatically commends the conduct of the men of Jabesh, entreats for them, truth and kindness from the Lord and promises himself to reward them for their praise-worthy achievement.

Ishbosheth's Kingdom.—The relatives of Saul did not at this time accept David as king. Abner, Saul's cousin, and the chief captain of his army, made Ishbosheth, Saul's son, king over the ten tribes.

Westminster League.

BY REV. HUGH W. HOON.

Why and How We Should Bear Witness for Christ.

Acts 5:27-32. Topic for Sept. 20.

In the early days of the Christian Church, men were truly courageous who would stand up and testify for Christ. The English word, martyr, comes from a Greek word which means, a witness, but because the witnesses of Christ's religion had so often to seal their testimony with their blood, the word came to mean one who died for his religious convictions, and now means one who gives up his life for his convictions on any subject. But this danger to life did not keep the early disciples from witnessing for Christ. It could not. Jesus had commissioned His disciples to go into all the world testifying of the things which they had seen and heard, and Peter told the officers who had commanded them to teach no more in that name, "We ought to obey God rather than man." If there had been no other reason given for our telling the story of Jesus and the salvation which He provided for a lost world, this is enough. It ought to send every Christian out on a mission of witness-bearing. Obeying Christ is the condition of friendship with Him. "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I have commanded you." If we value His friendship, we will obey Him, and the command is a plain one, to go and tell others the "good news."

There is no other way of salvation and we know it. If we love others we will not keep the knowledge of Jesus' redemptive work to ourselves. A Christian should love those about him. To "love thy neighbor as thyself" is the second great commandment and it is like to loving God supremely. Christ said so. He also taught the lesson that our neighbor is the man who is in need, no difference what his nationality may be or what his condition in life. We therefore cannot help telling the other man the story of Jesus if we are ourselves His friends. True love compels us to want the object of that love to have the very best things. The very best thing is to have a saving knowledge of Jesus.

Peter said: "We are witnesses of these things and so is the Holy Spirit, whom God hath given to them that obey Him." This makes the presence of the Holy Spirit in our lives dependent upon our obeying Him. Therefore for our own profit we should bear witness of Christ. Many people feel the lack of the Spirit's presence in their lives and yet yearn for Him, and wonder why He does not manifest Himself within them. If such will but examine themselves in the light of this passage they will see the reason, at least in the majority of cases. When we fail to bear witness, we must expect the Holy Spirit to depart from us.

There are many ways for us to witness for Christ. A basis of all true witnessing for Him, of course, is a belief in Him ourselves. This as its natural fruitage will cause us to model our lives after His. The principles of His life and teachings should enter into our lives and transform them. They should be no longer conformed to the world, but should be transformed by the renewing power of His Spirit. This being true the world will read the testimony of our lives. Our lives are read by the world, and as they tell for or against Him, so will His religion be judged.

We can bear witness for Christ by telling others what He has done for us. How His coming into our lives made us to have joy and peace. But here again we must show forth the joy that is in us, and the indwelling of this peace. If we have no joy in His service, our saying that we have will not be worth anything, and if we say we have His peace and yet murmur and complain just as the world does, our actions will have more weight than our words.

Finally we can bear witness for Christ by giving of our earthly substance to send the gospel to those who do not have it. Thus by our lives, by our words and by our gifts we can witness for Him.

Contributed.

Old-fashioned Sabbath Observance in Moore.

Not long ago a noted Northern bishop declared that the whole country looked to the South for the preservation of the Christian Sabbath. He said that in most of the Northern States the old-fashioned observance of the Sabbath had become obsolete, and it had been replaced by the European free and easy observance of the seventh day of the week. The bishop might have said also that the germ was working in the South and the disease rapidly spreading in its larger cities.

Whenever reference is made to the old time observance of Sunday and insistence is laid upon Sabbath observance, somebody cries out that we are trying to bring back blue laws and restore the Sunday of Puritanism. Not at all. In the Puritan settlements the pendulum swings too far in one direction as today it swings too far in the opposite direction, with this difference: the Puritan rigid and too much long-faced observance of the Sabbath made men whose supreme idea of life was duty. The present latitudinarian Sabbath tends to make men whose chief idea of life is Pleasure. Puritanism made men strong, upright, narrow if you please. The European Sabbath makes them so broad that it is like a stream that broadens and broadens until it has not enough depth at the mouth for large vessels. "The narrow stream runs strong." In the revolt from the hardness of Puritanism have we not gone into the softness of Latitudinarianism until character is weakened? Men are made strong physically by hard work, mentally strong by grasping and solving hard problems, morally strong by doing right, as well as by the exercise of faith. Do the men who have grown up under European Sabbath desecration have the same sense of duty, the same robustness of character, the same high religious convictions? The test of the best is the product turned out. Men reared under latitudinarian observance have more of outward graces and courtesies, but do they possess the oak-like quality that meets the storm and endures like men reared under the old-fashioned ideas of the Sabbath?

We do not wish to go back to the times told about in the life of Archbishop Whitgift, who died in 1604. His biography says:

"It was preached in Oxfordshire that to do any work on the Sabbath was as great a sin as to kill or to commit adultery. It was preached in Somersetshire that to throw a bowl on the Sabbath day was as great a sin as to commit murder. It was preached in Norfolk that to make a feast or a wedding dinner on that day was as great a sin as for a father to take a knife and cut his son's throat. It was preached in Suffolk that to ring more bells than one on the Lord's Day to call the people to church, was as great a sin as to do an act of murder."

What is needed in America today—and vitally—is not a return to the Puritanical idea of Sunday, when a man was forbidden to kiss his wife and children's lives were made hard and sad. Such a conception of the Sabbath is not the Bible idea. It tended to drive children away from such dolorous and long-faced religion. What is needed is such observance as was generally found in the South twenty years ago, and is found in many portions of it still, thanks to the feeling among our people that impels them to cling to "the ancient landmarks which the fathers have set." Sunday in such homes was not forbidding. It was cheerful, happy, uplifting. There was a recognition that it was God's day and was not to be profaned by the ordinary avocations or amusements. It was held to be a day when children should be instructed in the Bible, should read good books, should find a higher source of pleasure than upon the other six days. Wise parents directed the instruction of their children, while not denying to them such recreation as was wholesome and full of pleasure. It is a return to the Bible observance of the Sabbath that is needed to-day in all the country, but less in the villages and rural districts of North Carolina than in any other portion of the Republic. It is not needed at all in this section of Moore county, for the spirit of proper observance of the Sabbath predominates here now as always.

It was my good fortune on Sunday to attend services at Jackson Springs Church—an old-fashioned "Kirk," founded here by Scotch Presbyterians three quarters of a century ago. In 1821, on the high hill opposite the famous health-giving Jackson Springs, this church was built. The church was the outcome of the settlement made by those seeking health from the Spring, then noted locally for its health-restoring properties, for, even in those days as now indigestion cursed a large portion of the human family, and in the sand-hill country the people found a cure in Jackson Spring water. When they began to establish homes near here in order to enjoy the advantages of this water, like all good Covenanters, they built a church. That's the way of Scotchmen the world over and it is this acknowledgment of God in all their ways that has made them a power for good in every decade of history, and has made them among the foremost in good works—civic and religious—in North Carolina since the first of the clans settled on the Cape Fear and pushed on into this section of the State. Somebody ought to write a history of the Scottish clans in North Carolina. Mr. Hamilton McMillan and others have written sketches of great interest and value, but if Judge McRae and Mr. McMillan would collaborate a history of the Macs and other Scotchmen in North Carolina from Flora McDonald's day to this good hour, what a story of devotion to home, God and country it would make for the inspiration of youth!

The Scotch Presbyterians not only built a church wherever they located—and built it with their own hands—but they also were sure to build a school house, too. They did not neglect the education of their children. Ten years ago a citizen of Raleigh had business which called him into a remote section of Moore county. "I found people," he said, "living just like their grand parents lived in Scotland an hundred years ago. The women had their little looms and wove all the cloth and made all the garments worn by the family. After the day's work, the head of the family read aloud to his family from Burns, and Scott, and the children were duly instructed in the Shorter Catechism and in Patriotism.

Rev. Hugh McLaurin established here the first academy taught in Moore county and was also pastor of the church. The other pastors since 1850 have been Revs. A. D. Campbell, Samuel Paisley, J. H. Coltraine, K. M. McIntyre (who is still living and had a long pastorate here), Samuel Alexander, John D. Currie, Angus R. Shaw, A. M. Hassell (who died during his pastorate and is buried at Jackson Springs), and Rev. W. R. Coppedge, who is also county superintendent of schools of Rockingham county. He is the successor in the gospel of Hugh McLaurin, who established the first academy. With them religion and education have gone hand in hand.

The names of the present officers of this church are:
Elders—N. D. J. Clark, A. McN. Currie, Malcom Ray, Malcom Brown, D. W. McDonald, A. C. Ray.

Deacons—John M. Graham, John B. Clark, A. L. Currie, Daniel E. Patterson, William McKenzie, W. L. Holliday, Kennett McLeod.

At this church Sunday is observed exactly as it was in the "Kirk" in the Highlands. Regular services are held one Sunday in the month, but Sunday school is held every Sunday morning and from far and near the "bairns" are brought to be instructed in the Word. An organ furnishes music—an innovation from the early days. On Sunday there was a large attendance. Nearly all the members with their children came. They came early in the morning and spent the day, listened to two excellent sermons, and in the cool of the afternoon returned to their homes after having made "a Sabbath day's journey toward the kingdom." It was a splendid gathering of the best sort of North Carolina folks—men and women who "fear God and work righteousness." Parents were there with all their children from the babe in arms to the youth growing into manhood. Family religion is at no discount here. The people haven't found out that Solomon's teachings have been discarded by the smart set, and if they had, it would not affect them at all. They go to the Word for guidance; and do not ape the ways of fashionable folk. Parental responsibility is felt and children drink in the lessons of obedience with their earliest nourishment. These people live simple and frugal lives—close to nature and to nature's God. They have no tastes for the pleasures that carry away from right-living. They are honest, thrifty, industrious, holding this world not as a mere pleasure garden of life, but as a place to get ready for eternal life. People who hold that Bible view of life are of necessity sober-minded, taking their pleasures without going to extremes. Their life is full of pleasure—more normal and satisfying than those frivolous and harmful amusements that bring "the morning after." They make a citizenship of the sort that gives a country its sturdiest population in peace and its best soldiers in war. Their word is Duty—the first thing and highest thing for man to learn.

The church was crowded at the morning service. After appropriate music, the sermon was preached by Rev. Angus R. Shaw, now pastor of the leading Presbyterian church in Portsmouth, Va. It was an able and powerful presentation of the old theme, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." It was an old theme, applied to living, vital problems, with directness and point that held the large congregation from start to finish. It was a fresh and invigorating gospel sermon, free from dullness or sensation—the Scylla and Charybdis of preaching. The people were delighted to hear Mr. Shaw again. He was once pastor here and returns often to mingle with his old congregation. He is well pleased with his Virginia home, but the tar sticks firmly to his heels.

After the morning service, the people repaired to the surrounding grove to eat their dinners which they had brought from their homes. It was a familiar and pleasant scene to see them gathered in groups, chatting about the sermon, exchanging views with their neighbors, and drinking nothing stronger than the health-giving beverage of the spring here. It was a hot day—(you remember how hot it was last Sunday and how you sweltered?)—but these good people didn't seem to think it was too hot to go to church. On the day previous it was just as hot, but they didn't abandon their work. There is a sermon in this for folks who stay away from church on hot Sundays.

After dinner and a little rest the church bell rung again, and the church was crowded again. Is any time of day so hot as 3:30 of a summer afternoon? How it does pull at one's love of ease to go to church at that melting hour. But if these good old (and some of them were young, too, and good looking) Covenanters were hot, they didn't try to keep cool by staying away from church. They were there and ready for the gospel. They heard it, too, in a splendid, effective, and appropriate sermon by Rev. John H. Hall, Methodist pastor at Rockingham. "Stir up the gift of God that is within you," was the text, and it was a sermon calculated to make lazy Christians feel like getting to work, no matter if the weather was warm. He said there were too many men sitting down waiting for the world to be saved by prayer and faith without wroks. God has given the gift; man must stir it up by activity and useful effort. It was a fine sermon with not a grain of predestination in it, but everybody liked it, the disciples of Calvin as well as the Armenians and the straglers within the gates.

When the doxology was pronounced, and the "good-byes" had been said, the farmers hitched up their horses, the mothers gathered together their bairns, and with the consciousness of a Lord's day well spent, all returned to their homes happier for the proper observance of the Holy Sabbath day.

"From scenes like these old Scotia's grandeur springs,
That makes her lov'd at home, rever'd abroad:

Princes and lords are but the breath of kings,
'An honest man's the noblest work of God!'"
And certes, in fair virtue's heav'nly road,
The cottage leaves the palace far behind:
What is a lording's pomp?—a cumbrous load.
Disguising oft the wretch of human kind
Studied in arts of hell, in wickedness refin'd!"

This unpretentious church, with a membership of industrious, honorable and unpretentious people is only half a dozen miles from splendid Pinehurst, where the descendants of the Puritans seldom trouble to attend one service on Sunday. How much better citizenship is this honest yeomanry—"a people's pride?"

It is a stimulus to patriotism and religion to worship with such a congregation and to see how they keep the faith in a day of skepticism and doubt. It is such men and women as these who constitute the power and the glory of this old Commonwealth.

Speaking of the proper observance of the Sabbath, did you ever notice how no town ever observes Sunday so well after a railroad begins to run Sunday trains? Never in its history has a Sunday train been run on the Asheboro and Aberdeen railroad, owned by the Page brothers. They have been importuned to run Sunday trains, but their invariable answer has been "no." During the big Baptist meeting here a few weeks ago parties in Hamlet and other points wished to run an excursion to the meeting. Mr. Henry A. Page, president of the road, turned the application down and said: "We do not run trains over our road on Sunday and do not wish Sunday excursions to come to Jackson Springs." What is the result? Sunday is quiet here and those who come for rest and quiet are not disturbed by Sunday picnickers.

When the Southern Railway wished to make arrangements with the Asheboro and Aberdeen railroad to take their through Pullman trains to Pinehurst their plans provided for the running of Sunday trains. The management told Mr. Finley to "strike out the Sunday train." Of course, like all great lines, the Southern wished to keep in the Sunday trains and insisted upon it. But the Pages said "no" and no Pinehurst tourists could reach that place or leave on Sunday over the Asheboro and Aberdeen road. That's practical exhibition of the command, "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

—J. D. in Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer.

Christianity is positive in its suggestions, in its teaching and in the power it bestows for carrying out into its precepts and principles. The genius or demon of Socrates interfered, it is said, to prevent his doing wrong. The Spirit which governs Christians not only suggests their abstaining from evil, but puts before them a positive object at which to aim,—the actual doing of the right. Beyond this, it enables them to do right actions, by a power not their own.

The negative abstaining from evil may leave the world no worse than it is, but positive right action is certain to make it better than it is.

M. C. Gates.

Compensation.

Tempestuous is the sea of life
Lashed by Misfortune's blows;
But still the tide Serenity
Flows by the shore Repose.

Calamity, Remorse, Regret,
Those nettles in life's garden,
Must line the path of care and fret
That leads to Land of Pardon.

Though Poverty made me acquaint
With pangs of deprivation,
Yet still I read—though sore and faint—
'Tis for my soul's salvation.

And though Affliction's blighting hand
Is ever to me clinging,

It serves to open wide my mind
And set my soul to singing.

—Geo. F. Viëtt, Norfolk, Va.

Dr. B. M. Smith.

One who was on "the Hill," as the site of Hampden-Sidney College and Union Theological Seminary has been familiarly called from time immemorial, from the fifties to the seventies of the last century, frequently saw several well-known figures now passed away from human view: Professor Martin, picturesque, with long grey beard floating on the wind, going to meet a Latin or Greek class—a little late; Professor Holladay, on an afternoon stroll with a favorite pointer; Dr. Atkinson, with earnest face and stalwart frame, taking long strides through fields and woods in easy conversation with some student who loved him and wanted to learn from him; Dr. Dabney, in his garden working with the same determination and vim in taking his exercise and recreation as in his greater sphere of the lecture-room; Dr. Peck, wearing gold spectacles and taking his constitutional walk with measured step, in somewhat the same exact and careful way as that in which he led his students along the paths of Church History and Polity. But there was no form more familiar to the eye than that of Dr. Smith, who never seemed to walk for recreation, exercise, or any such frivolities, but always because he had to go somewhere to do something or to see that something was done. He was one of the busiest of men—busy in the lecture-room, in his study, on the road, and wherever he happened to be his hands seemed always full. His course of instruction was by no means light; yet in addition to this, the affairs of the Seminary of many kinds fell largely to his charge; while the duties of his copastorate of College Church, a wide correspondence, and the care of a little farm and his family imposed an additional burden. It is not strange then, that, whether you saw him with his portfolio under his arm, going to his classes, or on horseback, going out to visit his congregation, or on foot, starting out to look after his farming operations, you always said to yourself, "Here is a man who has much to do, and he is doing it with his might."

In the hard times just after the war when the resources of the Seminary were destroyed or unproductive, and there was little or no salary, especially during the summer of 1865, Dr. Smith, like Dr. Dabney, could be seen daily going forth to, or returning from, the fields in which, with his own hands he tilled the land to secure food for his household.

His busiest time of all was probably that during which he was writing his commentary on the Psalms and the Proverbs, as his part of the work now known as "The Bible Commentary" of Jamieson, Fausset, and Brown. The Hebrew students of that time will ever bear a vivid remembrance of the recitations in that language before breakfast on dark winter mornings to which the sleepy procession went down, each with lamp in hand, to find a professor who was himself quite wide-awake and very quick to catch the dilatory student napping.

Dr. Smith was born at Montrose, Powhatan County, Virginia, June 30th, 1811. His mother, who was widowed in his early childhood, had the sole responsibility of directing his conduct and shaping his character; and such was her character, that to his dying day, her memory was cherished by him with the tenderest reverence and filial affection.

He was graduated at Hampden-Sidney College in 1829; and though only eighteen years old, divided the first honor with the late Chancellor Garland of Vanderbilt University. He has left interesting and humorous accounts of his first experiences at college, when as a boy of fourteen "in roundabouts" he began his course. He had declaimed at school, but delivering a speech of his own he found quite another matter. He tells of his first debate in the hall of the Union Society soon after he entered college. His name beginning with S., many were called on before his turn came, and every one declined. When he was called and actually stood up to speak, small as he was, there was a silence which was appalling to so young a speaker. The question was whether the world would not have been better off if Napoleon had never lived. He had prepared no speech, but was determined to do his best, and so said: "I think Bonaparte was a very bad man!" and took his seat. He remarks that he was never scared afterwards. His capacity for stage fright seems to have been exhausted on that occasion. It scared all the scare out of him. Such was his success in speaking that he was chosen to represent his class at commencement, and at his graduation delivered a first honor oration.

Feeling assured that he was called to preach the gospel, after teaching two sessions at Milton, N. C., he attended Union Theological Seminary, and after finishing his course, and perhaps before, served as assistant instructor in Hebrew. He afterwards attended the Theological Department of the University of Halle, Germany, where among his teachers was the celebrated Tholuc, to whom he seems to have been much attached. After his return to America, he became pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Danville, Virginia, and afterwards, of Tinkling Spring and Waynesboro. While in the latter pastorate he was married to Miss Mary Morrison, daughter of the Rev. James Morrison, pastor of New Providence Church. She still survives at the good old age of eighty-one.

Later, he was called to the pastorate of the church in Staunton, which he served until he was chosen Secretary of Publication, and went to Philadelphia to take charge of this great work. In April, 1854, he was elected professor of Oriental Literature in Union Theological Seminary, Virginia, and returned to his native State to enter upon that which was to be the great work of his life, training young men for the ministry. It is said that, first and last, during the thirty-seven years in which he taught in the Seminary, nearly seven hundred men received the impress of his moulding hands.

As a teacher, Dr. Smith was eminently practical and straightforward. There have been few instructors who have excelled him in impressing on their students a feeling of deep reverence for the Bible as the Word of God, and in applying plain, common-sense principles of interpretation in expounding it. He combined critical and exegetical methods in a most happy way. His sojourn in Germany had on him an effect the very opposite of that which it has had on many American students. Instead of being carried away with the neological theories so prevalent there, he seems only to have been impressed with the extreme danger of rationalistic principles, and thereby the better prepared for warning others against them. His robust understanding and firm faith stood steadfast amid the currents of tendencies that have swept so many feebler men from the moorings of faith into the swirling gulfs of skepticism, while his knowledge of them enabled him to station warning signals for those who came under his instruction in later years. It would be impossible to say to what extent the firm stand of the Southern Presbyterian Church on vital questions today is due to Dr. Smith's teaching and influence. All felt that he—unlike so many professors of Theology and writers on Theological themes, who with the word "reverence" continually used, yet remorselessly trample under foot the most sacred verities of Scripture—could say with Paul, "We . . . believe, and therefore speak."

One of the greatest services which Dr. Smith rendered to the cause of ministerial education, for which he did so much in many ways, was his energetic work in securing a financial basis for the continuance of the work of Union Theological Seminary just after the Civil War when its resources were so seriously affected by the general wreck and havoc of that unhappy era. Few men knew more people or had more influence over them. Knowing of many in the North who would, in all likelihood, be glad to extend a helping hand to the prostrate institution, he did what few Southern men, in their sore-heartedness and humiliation, could have done. He went to these friends and made known to them the facts of the case. A generous response was the result. His old friend, Cyrus H. McCormick, gave $30,000 for endowing one professorship, and Mrs. S. P. Lees, Mr. Henry Young, Mr. H. K. Corning, besides many others, gave generously for the rehabilitation of the Seminary. Among these donations should be mentioned that of Mrs. Brown, of Baltimore, for the erection of the new library building, an enterprise to which Dr. Smith's energies were earnestly directed for several years. It is thus referred to by Dr. W. W. Moore in a historical sketch of Union Seminary:

"It has already been noted that the Brown Library Hall was erected in 1880. The writer, who was then a student in the Seminary, remembers well the laying of the corner-stone with Masonic ceremonies and an address by Dr. Smith. That was a glad day for all the friends of the Seminary, but especially so for the man who had done so much to re-establish the institution after the war; who had watched and promoted the growth of the library with almost parental solicitude, and who had secured the liberal donation by means of which the books were now to be suitably housed and conveniently arranged for future generations of professors and students. Before the erection of the commodious building with room for 30,000 volumes or more, the 11,000 books already gathered were crowded into bursting shelves in the galleries of the Seminary chapel. When moved into the new building, they were, of course, rearranged and catalogued, a laborious task which had twice before been performed by Dr. Smith, viz., in 1834 and in 1869. In his report as librarian in 1869, after stating that he had again entered all the books in a manuscript catalogue, and also in a well-bound printed and double interleaved volume, he says: 'It is gratifying to state that, during a period of thirty-five years since the printed catalogue was prepared by me, I find that not over two or three volumes have been lost, and those of no great value.'"

But friends of the Seminary in Virginia, also, added liberally to the resources of the institution. In 1877 Mrs. Ann Davidson, of Rockingham County, left, by will, several thousand dollars with which the scholarship bearing her name was founded, and an unknown giver founded the Tabb Street Church scholarship by the gift of $5,000.

The largest of these scholarships was endowed by Mr. Joseph Blair Wilson, of Collierstown, Va., who, first and last, gave $34,000 for the purpose. When we remember that to Dr. Smith's personal influence and unceasing endeavors, most of these accessions to the resources of the Seminary were chiefly due, it does not seem strange that he was a busy-looking man.

Some may wonder how Dr. Smith and Dr. Dabney, gentlemen and scholars as they were, could bring themselves to the performance of such arduous tasks as their farming, which has been mentioned, involved.

One answer is in the word, necessity. The other is that they were real men as well as gentlemen, and where duty called they went. Hoeing corn, pulling fodder, and similar occupations were the duty of the hour for them in 1865 when the labor system had been suddenly broken up, and there was little money in their purses with which they could have employed it if it had been available.

Two students of Theology will always remember recitations to Dr. Dabney in the waning light of the evenings of that summer, when, after his day's work in the field, he would sit with them on his portico and examine them, without book, on what they had learned during the day in Hill's Divinity, which he had given them as the text-book for the time, though Turretin was the regular text-book studied in the Seminary in connection with his lectures and reference books. Though his hands had been wielding the hoe all day, he could not let them be idle now; and while examining his students he was generally engaged in plaiting straw with which to make a hat. It is hard to say now just how, in each case, families lived through the war times and those immediately succeeding. Living "on nothing a year" was a hard problem indeed. A glimpse into the way it was done may be gotten in this hat-making, and in the exhibition of samples of home-weaving by the ladies when in their social gatherings. In addition to their neat homespun dresses, each would have on hand a variety of samples of various patterns which she had woven with her own hands.

The writer remembers, as one of Dr. Smith's thrifty devices of the time, the turning of envelopes inside out. When a letter was received, the envelope was opened by no means carelessly—steamed, possibly—and then turned, made over with home-made mucilage and sent back with the answer enclosed. At this time, especially, his correspondence was voluminous and envelopes were probably quite dear. The making of "filibusses" was another scheme for doing away with the use of matches then under a heavy stamp tax. The old letters, instead of being burned after reading, were torn in strips and skilfully rolled in a graceful spiral so as to form excellent lighters for lamps, while they were not unornamental to the mantelpiece, standing in a flower-vase, as they generally did. He had the same disposition to keep his hands busy as Dr. Dabney. Though he did not, like him, make cart-wheels, doubtless many a sermon or lecture was shaped in his mind while these "filibusses" were rolled in his deft fingers. Where he got the name I never knew. Walker's filibustering expedition of some years before may have suggested this as a mode of harmless filibustering on the domain of the match manufacturers.

We can think of few greater contrasts than that between the work of these fingers and that of the mind which was subconsciously, or half-consciously, moving them.

Dr. Smith was at this time striving to save the Seminary and to set it on a new career of usefulness.

Through these years of stress and struggle he could say of this great work, "This one thing I do," though minor occupations were continually claiming his attention and receiving their relative share of it. Not only did he succeed in retrieving the losses occasioned by the war, but in preparing the institution for a larger work than it had ever accomplished before.

Whilst one of the most conservative of teachers in the best sense, he was at the same time progressive and enterprising in securing the best means for keeping abreast of the times and equipping the Seminary with the best appliances for furthering the knowledge and culture of the students. The progress of archaeology, which has become so marked a characteristic of our times, was comparatively in its infant stages then; but it enlisted his deep interest—especially everything in it connected with the newly deciphered cuneiform inscriptions. This can be illustrated by another extract from Dr. Moore's sketch. He sought help in this line from those able to give it.

"Among the donations of this period were an inscribed brick from Babylonia, two valuable casts of other cuneiform tablets in the British Museum, and a set of fine photographs of the cities of the seven churches in Asia, all presented in 1879 by Mr. W. R. Reynolds, of Norfolk, Va. In 1883-84 the same liberal gentleman made another generous gift to the library, a plaster cast facsimile of the celebrated black marble obelisk of Shalmanezzer II (S50 B C.), with its wealth of bas-relief sculpture and cuneiform text. About the same time, at Dr. Smith's request, Professor J. R. S. Sterrett, a member of the Wolfe expedition to Babylonia, purchased for the library two additional cuneiform tablets of small size."

During the eighteen years after the Civil War, Dr. Smith, while accomplishing so much for the general interests of the Seminary, had borne the whole burden of teaching in the department of Oriental Literature without assistance. In 1883 the Board of Directors took action looking to the employment of an assistant in this work. In the language of the record: "The consideration leading to this step is the propriety of bringing some relief to the Rev. Dr. B. M. Smith, the able, faithful, and honored professor in that department, in view of the weight of advancing years and the disabilities which naturally attend upon them."

Their choice, at Dr. Smith's own suggestion, fell upon the Rev. W. W. Moore, then a young pastor in Kentucky, who had been graduated from the Seminary a few years before, and who is now widely known as one of the ablest professors and most attractive preachers in our country.

For those who knew Dr. Smith only in his extreme old age when the strength and brightness of his faculties had somewhat waned, it will be interesting to have the estimate of an honored colleague who knew him at his best. The Rev. Dr. H. C. Alexander, in a paper before me, speaks as only one so capable of appreciating his varied excellences could, of his rare executive ability when he was in his prime; his astonishing facility and fecundity as an offhand speaker; of his more formal addresses before church boards and judicatories, as well as popular assemblies; of his peculiar, almost unrivaled genius, in his best days for debate; of his felicitous, and sometimes humorous, after-dinner speeches (or talks)—as for instance, at one of the triennial banquets of Washington and Lee University, and (in a more serious and impressive vein) at the Hampden-Sidney Centennial; of his unusual gifts and success as a pastor, both in town and country; of his long and useful service as collegiate pastor (with his mighty colleague, Dr. Dabney) at Hampden-Sidney and of his extraordinary qualifications and merits as an effective, as well as instructive, preacher, when he was roused to the utmost by the audience or the occasion."

He tells us of the estimate of a most competent judge of preaching: "Joseph Addison Waddell . . . has camly said to me that he has heard Dr. Smith preach in Staunton when he seemed to him to be 'almost inspired to say exactly the right thing, in exactly the right words, exactly at the right time.'"

But his own testimony is hardly less emphatic:

"The strongest impression I ever knew him to make by a single memorable discourse was at Columbus, Mississippi, during the meeting of the General Assembly. Dr. Palmer preached that day; but on returning from one of the Methodist churches where I held forth, myself, all the town was agog about Dr. Smith's grand sermon on the Kingdom of God." Dr. Alexander also speaks of his remarkable gifts as a debater, and remarks on a peculiarity in his case. While it is generally the case in the discussion of great questions that the first speech is the best, because it has been thoroughly thought out and arranged in the speaker's mind for the occasion beforehand, Dr. Smith grew stronger and stronger as a debate proceeded; and, so, very generally carried his point. He had the faculty of thinking while on his legs, and his speeches thus thought out often gave the impression of elaborate and painstaking composition.

One of his successors in the pastorate of Tinkling Spring Church tells of the impression he made on thinking men in the eldership of churches in the Valley of Virginia, and of the widely pervasive and permanent influence he exercised in that region of stalwart Presbyterianism: "The old men in Waynesboro, Bethel, Staunton, Tinkling Spring, all talked to me about him. Such men as old Mr. Matthew Pilson, Mr. Withrow, and Dr. Waddell, of Waynesboro, Captain Ben Ellis, and many others, all bore testimony to the fact that there never was such a preacher, after Dr. Speece, in the Valley of Virginia, and there were giants in those days too." He adds: "His preaching did more than that of any other man to shape the Presbyterian Church to the needs of a more active life. To him was due a good deal of the impulse which gave the church deacons well organized sessions, carefully kept rolls; and especially to him, much of the spirit of giving. The church was loyal, but did little work. Tinkling Spring, before 1840, did little more than meet for worship. One thing which took Dr. Smith to Staunton was to stir up Waynesboro and Tinkling Spring to support pastors separately; and the experiment was a decided success in many ways. As an ecclesiastic, his Valley life was as conspicuously successful. Both his boldness and readiness and his efficiency as a Presbyter were important factors in the early Virginia church."

Dr. Alexander also gives another view in concluding: "What he was as a social companion; as a friendly adviser; as a man of affairs, earthly and ecclesiastical; in the bosom of his domestic privacies—I must leave without further description or comment."

The great number of young men whom he has encouraged or warned or helped in various ways could bear testimony to his wisdom and goodness, but only those who have dwelt under his roof could know what he was to those nearest and dearest to him. Though never foolishly lavish and indulgent to his children, his tender affection and attention to every want can never be forgotten. A speaker in the Synod of Virginia some years ago spoke of the homes clustered about the Seminary as "little heavens." Many who knew Dr. Smith in his family life will ever bear in their memories the scene at the time of family prayers, when his large circle was gathered, each furnished with a hymn-book (and expected to sing); the reverent reading of the Word of God, like that of Burns's inimitable Cotter and the humble and earnest petitions at a throne of grace. To some it seems a heavenly dream of the past.

"Sweet dreamland faces
Passing to and fro,
Bring back to memory
Days of long ago."

This sketch would be incomplete without some reference to what was an essential element in Dr. Smith's efficiency for the work he accomplished—his personal religious life and experience. Serious thoughts came to him in early childhood. Among his very early recollections was that of his father's dying blessing, when as a child of six years old he stood by his bedside and felt on his head the feeble hand stretched out from the bed of death, and heard the invocation of God's blessing upon him. In his old age he wrote that for sixty-two years he had felt the pressure of that hand.

When leaving for college at fourteen years of age, he was taken into a private room by his widowed mother and solemnly dedicated and entrusted to God. Religious impressions were made on him at different times; but he was led to a final decision during a series of services held by that remarkable winner of souls, the Rev. Asahel Nettleton.

The question of duty as to his life-work caused him many spiritual struggles. There is still extant a writing containing in parallel columns the reasons for and against giving himself to the work of the ministry.

After his decision was made, recorded experiences in stated times of fasting, prayer, and self-examination show how earnestly he strove to prepare himself for the great work. These seasons of private fasting and prayer were continued to old age, and it is impressive to see in his private records of them his deep sense of sin, his self-abasement before God, and his entire dependence on Christ alone for forgiveness of sins and acceptance with God. His experience of salvation as a lost and ruined sinner through the redemption of Christ our Saviour was doubtless a chief factor in his efficiency in proclaiming, as he did, the precious gospel promises for the salvation of other sinners.

Rev. Parke P. Flournoy, D. D.

The $900 Minimum.

Rev. H. C. DuBose, D. D.

The overture adopted by the Lexington Assembly was from the Presbytery of Pee Dee which embraces six counties in Eastern South Carolina. This territory, from the intelligence of its citizens, the fertility of the soil, the scientific methods of cultivation, the variety of the harvests, the salubrity of the climate and the prosperity so generally diffused, may be considered one of the gardens of the Southland. Presbyterianism, from the time of the initiation of Synodical Missions, took upon itself new life, which is seen not only in the beautiful sanctuaries and Presbyterian High Schools, but also in the enterprise of its pastors and the value the people place on the ministry.

The increase of salaries is referred to the Presbyteries at their fall sessions. With churches that give $700 or $800, but who are abundantly able to pay their pastors $1,000, the question is an easy one, but with the weaker fields it is more complicated, yet "wisdom is profitable to direct."

The subject embraces the increased efficiency of the ministry, and the enlarged liberality of the people. The former points to preaching more times at more places, and the latter to getting more money from more people. The first belongs specially to the jurisdiction of the elders, both the teaching and the ruling; the last to the diaconate. An able committee composed of the three classes, who would visit, either personally or by delegate, the churches and fields paying a salary below "the living line," might, within the bounds of the Presbytery, accomplish much towards effecting the end in view; to wit, carrying out that which was ordained of the Lord, "that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

It has also a practical bearing on the increase in the number of candidates for the ministry, and the enlargement of our evangelistic force.

Three Generations.

At the funeral of the Rev. Alexander M. Doak, M. D., I sat in the arm chair of his grandfather, the Rev. Samuel Doak, the first resident minister in Tennessee and the founder of the first college (Washington) west of the Alleghany mountains. Dr. Doak's father was the Rev. Samuel Witherspoon Doak, D. D., the first president of Tusculum College. Three lives lasted from about 1750 to August 22, 1903, about one hundred and fifty years and more than cover the whole history of Tennessee.

Dr. Doak was born March 26, 1819, graduated at Tusculum College in 1841, was twice married, in 1844 and in 1879, taught, studied medicine and practiced it in Greene and Hawkins counties in East Tennessee. Later he was able to carry out his early desire and he studied theology and was licensed to preach (in 1872) and ordained by Holston Presbytery. His ministries of teaching, healing and preaching were performed in three adjacent counties in East Tennessee. Between 1880 and 1885 he was vice president and acting president of Tusculum College and preached to the students every Sunday night. He also taught in Mooresburg, Rogersville and St. Clair, and preached at Meadow Creek, Russellville, Mooresburg, St. Clair, Leesburg, Providence and Rheatown.

He died at St. Clair of no disease but old age, attended by a devoted wife, an affectionate sister and six of his seven children.

He was a good man full of faith, loving all and loved by all that knew him.

Morristown, Tenn.

James B. Converse.

Funeral of Dr. Robt. P. Farris.

As noticed in last week's Standard, Dr. Farris died on Friday, Aug. 28. He was buried on Monday afternoon from the Grand Avenue Church, of which he and his family have been attendants for years. The services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Cannon, the pastor, assisted by several brethren of the city—St. Louis—and neighborhood: and they were characterized by the utmost simplicity, reading of the Scriptures, prayers and singing. This was as he desired; for he left two requests as to his funeral:

One, That no remarks as to his personal character and work should be made: the other, That one of the hymns used be "My Jesus, as Thou wilt."

The whole was characteristic of the man: strength, simplicity, majesty and beauty all were there.

Our brother despised shams and hated pretense and deceit: he loved the truth and the light, and was ready at any sacrifice to "contend earnestly" for the truth as he saw it, "the faith once delivered to the saints" as he verily believed; but he bore no malice, he harbored no personal ill-will. He loved the Lord Jesus with an intense and supreme devotion, and he "loved the brethren" too, even those from whom he differed, all who truly loved that Lord, both theirs and his. And "after he had served his own generation by the will of God, he fell on sleep." "The fathers, where are they?" "Truly a prince and a great man is fallen this day in Israel."

G. L. L.

A Retrogression.

To the Editor:

We believe as civilization advances that the position held by our women in society becomes more exalted. In many respects this is true. There is one point, however, which I would like to emphasize in which we appear to be stepping backward. In ancient times the position held by women was deplorable and they had extreme drudgery to undergo, yet in our own land how many women have to work in sweat shops and factories. It may also be said women are gradually working into positions formerly held by men; the statistics appear alarming. Where will it stop? Do we want to see the majority of our girls working until they fade away like flowers from which the sun is withheld? Cannot something be done to call a halt in our Christian land where humanity and Christian sentiment are supposed to exist? Is not the home the place for our girls and women and the present status of affairs a retrogression?
J. M. H.

Ahmed's Way.

There were two brothers—so the story reads—
Ahmed and Omar, who by noble deeds
Desired to purchase immortality;
Some work perform, of which the world might say!
"Ahmed and Omar blessed their kind this way."
Omar with wedge and rope uplifted high
An obelisk whose summit pointed to the sky.
On this with skillful hand devices fair
He carved, inscribing noble figures there.
"Sure Omar's name," he said "will come to be
The synonym of liberality,
For he who pleasure gives unto his kind
Must be esteemed a man of liberal mind."
Ahmed, with deeper wisdom, sought a drear
And desert place, and there he dug a well
Where weary travellers their thirst might quell.
There graceful date palms cast their cooling shade,
Whose luscious fruits the climber's search repaid.
* * * * * Decades of years have fled,
Ahmed and Omar numbered with the dead,
And Omar's lofty dreams of good were vain,
His failure writ in ruins on the plain.
Not so when pilgrims visit Ahmed's well,
For resting 'neath the palms, they grateful spell
The cheering words cut in the rock, and say:
"Allah be praised that Ahmed passed this way."

L'ENVOI.

Oh thou who standing at life's open gate
Art filled with aspirations to be great,
Inscribe thy name upon the hearts of men
In helpful deeds, written thereon with pen
Of love. Then shall they grateful fellows say:
"Thank God that such a man has passed this way."
—O. H., In Davidson College Annual, 1903.

You find no difficulty in trusting the Lord with the management of the universe and all the outward creation, and can your case be any more complex or difficult than these, that you need to be anxious or troubled about His management of it?—Hannah Whitall Smith.

Anything which makes religion its second object makes religion no object. God will put up with a great many things in the human heart, but there is one thing He will not put up with in it—a second place. He who offers God a second place offers Him no place.—Ruskin.

The English Presbyterians have voted a present of $75,000 to their brethren in South Africa for the building of houses of worship.

CONTENTS.

	Page
EDITORIAL:
Event and Comment.....	3
The Bible, the Public Schools and the Catholic Ch.....	4-5
The Interior Characterizes Itself.....	5
Turning the World Upside Down.....	5-6
Review of Contemporaries.....	6-7
DEVOTIONAL:
Our Life Melody. God's Opportunity.....	8
MISSIONARY:
A Note from Dr. DuBose.....	8
SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON:
David becomes King. Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D.....	9
WESTMINSTER LEAGUE.
Why and how we should bear Witness for Christ. Rev. H. W. Hoon.....	9
CONTRIBUTED:
Old-fashioned Sabbath Observance in Moore....	10-11
Poem: Compensation. George F. Vielt.....	11
Dr. B. M. Smith. Rev. Parke P. Flournoy, D. D.....	12-14
The $900 Minimum. Rev. H. C. DuBose, D. D.....	14-15
Three Generations. Rev. J. B. Converse.....	15
Funeral of Dr. Robert P. Farris. G. L. L.....	15
A Retrogression. J. M. H.....	15
Poem: Ahmed's Way. O. H.....	15
CHURCH NEWS.....
THE WORLD .....
The Home Circle.....	22-23
Marriages and Deaths.....	24
The Household.....	24-25
Our Young People.....	26-29
Our Little Folks.....	30-33
Clippings.....	34

Church News.

PERSONALS.

Rev. O. W. Gauss of Sparta, Mo., may be addressed at Denver, Col.

Rev. A. Kirklaud changes his address from Americus, Ga., to Rochelle, Ga.

Rev. James Thomas, after an absence of several weeks spent in Green Brier, Va., has returned to his work in Wilson, N. C.

Rev. B. W. Mebane changes his address from Madison, N. C., to Mt. Airy, N. C., to which place he has recently accepted a call.

Rev. J. H. Davis, of Raines, Va., has returned to his home after spending a few weeks visiting and preaching in Mecklenburg Presbytery.

Rev. F. A. Barnes, who has been at Davidson, N. C., for some time on a visit to his mother, returned to his work at Colutta, Texas, last week.

Rev. B. C. Bell changes his address from Hughesville, Mo., to St. Charles, Mo., where he goes to become pastor of the First Presbyterian Church.

Note.

The Stated Clerk of the General Assembly requests us to call attention to an error on p. 642 of the minutes of this year. The grand total of contributions for the year is made the same as last year. It was a slip in transcription. The true total is found on p. 639 and is $2,374,648.00. It would be well if all having copies would note this correction.

Yours fraternally,

W. A. ALEXANDER.

MISSOURI.

SPARTA.—Rev. Dr. O. W. Gauss who has been laboring in Christian and Taney counties for some months has recently been quite ill, and on account of his sickness has resigned his place as Evangelist of the lower Ozark region, and has gone with his family to Colorado. Denver is his address for the present.

MARSHALL.—The pastor, Rev. C. E. Thomas, whose resignation has been noted, has received a call to the Presbyterian church at Lansing, Michigan.

ST. LOUIS GRAND AVENUE CHURCH.—Rev. J. F. Cannon D. D., has returned after an absence of a month, having been called back a little earlier than he expected by the death of Dr. Farris.

LAFAYETTE PRESBYTERY met at Hughesville, Mo., on Sept. 1, 1903, and was opened with a sermon from Matt. 5:20 by Rev. E. C. Gordon D. D., who in the absence of the Moderator, Rev. G. W. Jurey, was requested to preach. Rev. W. E. Beattie was elected Moderator and Rev. L. F. Ross Temporary Clerk. There were present during the meeting 14 Ministers and 17 Ruling Elders.

HOME MISSIONS.—One of the most interesting reports ever submitted was made by the H. M. committee. The Treasurer's report showed the largest contributions ever made to this cause in one year, with all appropriations promptly and fully paid, and a healthy balance in the treasury. Three brethren, serving five churches, have been helped from the sustentation fund, and from all the fields encouraging reports are made of growth, increased interest, and brighter prospects; while from the Evangelistic fund three men are largely supported: Rev. J. F. Forsyth in the lower Ozark field, chiefly in Taney county, where he has conducted a summer (day) school at the county seat, looked after the Sabbath School interests and preached at five or six places in various parts of the county. Rev. L. F. Ross who has recently taken charge of two churches, Calvary and Edwards, in Benton county, where he has been most cordially received by the people, and has preached to large and interested audiences, and Mr. O. L. Byrns in the upper Ozark field, who has also been much encouraged by the attendance and interest at the churches of Crookes and Montrose, as well as one or two other preaching points.

Besides these brethren, Dr. O. W. Gauss, supported by a private and special contribution, has done very valuable work for some months in Taney and Christian counties, ably supplementing the labors of Mr. Forsyth, and the committee hopes to have him continue in this work for a few months at least. The most interesting, important and inviting part of the work however is the prospect of founding a good Christian school of high grade in that lower Ozark field.

Of this the committee's report says, in part: "The permanent growth and ultimate success of work in this region depends largely, as we all agree, on the founding and maintenance of a week-day Christian school. Rev. Dr. Dobyus, Mr. Louis Huggins and the chairman of our committee (Dr. Gordon) made a visit to Sparta and Forsyth in order to examine into the condition of things, and to determine if practicable upon a site for such a school. Dr. Leyburn had visited the field with this and other objects in view, and our men on the ground, Messrs. Gauss and Forsyth had examined with some care into the conditions. They reported that it was desirable to establish the school as soon as possible.

We found the people of Sparta eager to secure the school. They have offered a site of ten acres of land and $500 or ten per cent of what it costs. At Forsyth not so much interest was at first manifested, but after hearing as to the character of the school we proposed to establish, a meeting of citizens was called to determine what proposition should be made us, and it will probably not be less than what Sparta offered.

We also learned that in a few months it is likely that trains will be running from Cartbage, Mo., to Branson, or Lucia, where the new line of the Mo. Pacific Railway crosses the White river in Taney county, and that this place, some ten miles west of Forsyth, will become an important place, perhaps the best location for our school. In view of all the information gathered we deemed it best to come to no decision as to the location of the school until we had something more definite from Forsyth, and as to Branson where we also have an offer of a site.

All of us, who saw this country and its people for the first time were very agreeably surprised at the situation and at the prospect for general development. The resources of the country are greater than we supposed; so is the enterprise of the people. We see no reason why we may not occupy this territory for our church, if we can get one or more good men to act as evangelists and can establish a good Christian school."

DISSOLUTION OF THE PASTORAL RELATION AND DISMISSALS.

Of these there were an unusual, almost an alarming number. Rev. W. L. Hickman, former pastor at Independence and whose relation to that church had been already dissolved, was at his own request given a letter of dismissal to the Presbytery of Paris, having received a call to the church at Bonham, Texas. The request of Rev. B. C. Thomas for dissolution of the pastoral relation between himself and the Marshal church was granted, the church concurring; and he was dismissed to the Presbytery of Lansing, (U. S. A.,) he having received a call to the Second church of Lansing, Michigan.

Rev. B. C. Bell having received a call to the church at St. Charles, Mo., the relation between him and the churches of Hughesville, Houstonia and Range Line was dissolved, and he was dismissed to St. Louis Presbytery, and the relation between Rev. D. M. Claget and the Longwood and Mt. Olive churches was dissolved, and he was dismissed to Kansas City Presbytery (U. S. A.) to the charge of the Broadway Church, Sedalia, Mo.

Rev. W. E. Beattie offered his resignation as pastor of the Higginsville church and the church was cited to appear and give reasons why it should not be accepted at an adjourned meeting, to be held at Lexington, September 15.

As suggested by the General Assembly the committees of Publication, Sabbath Schools and Young Peoples Societies were consolidated into one committee of which Rev. E. F. Abbott is chairman.

The committee of Publication and Sabbath Schools made an interesting report, noting among other things, that the Synodical Colporteur, Mr. I. P. Powell, had spent some time within our bounds; that Mrs. E. L. Rinehart had continued her work, had helped at the reorganization of three or four Sabbath Schools, and had organized two new schools, supplying them all with literature from our Publication Committee, although one has since become self-supporting; in these schools there are 240 pupils. Mrs. Rinehart has also distributed a good deal of wholesome religious and other literature, books, tracts, magazines and papers; for this purpose organizing and conducting a Young Peoples Reading Circle, something hitherto unknown in those parts.

In the lower Ozark field, Taney county, Rev. J. F. Forsyth at Forsyth, conducted a summer school for two months. In this school were enrolled 38 pupils, and besides the usual English branches two classes were formed for Bible study, the more advanced took a course in the Book of Genesis, and the other memorized the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments, the Beatitude and the Twenty third Psalm. One Sabbath school has also been organized in the county, and encouragement and assistance given to several other schools.

On recommendation of the committee Presbytery directed that an annual Institute or Convention be held in the interests of Sabbath schools and Young People's Societies.

An interesting report was heard from the Commissioner to the General Assembly, Rev. W. L. Hickman, of his attendance upon that body and of its proceedings; this was listened to with pleasure and his diligence commended.

After hearty thanks to the people of Hughesville and vicinity for their kind and abundant hospitality, Presbytery adjourned to meet at Lexington September 15, and in stated meeting at Boonville, the second Tuesday of April 1904.

SOUTH CAROLINA

BETHESDA CHURCH.—Twelve persons have been recently received into Bethesda Church, Bethel Presbytery, on profession of faith. Seven of these were received at Bethesda Church and five at Smith's Chapel under the care of Bethesda church. In the early summer the pastor was assisted in a three days' meeting at Bethesda by Rev. S. H. Hay of Clover, and at Smith's Chapel in August by Rev. A. H. Atkins of Lowryville in a four days' meeting. Both brethren preached to large and delighted congregations, and we believe that lasting good was done.

NOTICE BETHEL PRESBYTERY.—All sessions please elect delegates at once and notify me if pastor and delegate expect to attend, that I may arrange for transfer to this place.

J. M. HARRIS.

CHARLESTON PRESBYTERY will meet in Summer-ville, S. C., October 6th, 1903 at 8 p. m.

ALEXANDER SPRUNT, Stated Clerk.

EASLEY.—We have just closed an excellent meeting in which we were very ably assisted by Rev. R. G. McLees.

There have been fourteen additions to the Presbyterian Church, two by letter and twelve on profession of faith. Our church has been greatly revived. Bro. McLees is a strong, vigorous and eminently convincing preacher, and any church would do well to secure his services.

J. T. WADE.

ALABAMA.

THE PRESBYTERY OF EAST ALABAMA will meet at Lebanon Church, October 27, 1903, at 7 p. m.

E. P. DAVIS, Stated Clerk.

CARMEL.—During a six days' meeting conducted by the pastor, Rev. W. I. Sinnott, twelve persons were received into the full fellowship of the Carmel Church, one from the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and eleven by confession of faith in Christ. Ten received the ordinance of baptism.

NORTH ALABAMA PRESBYTERY will meet at Good-water, Ala., October 6, 1903, at 7:30 p. m.

W. I. SINNOTT, Stated Clerk.

TEXAS.

DALLAS PRESBYTERY will meet at Amarillo, Texas, Thursday, Sept. 24th, 1903, at 8 p. m.

E. M. MUNROE, Stated Clerk.

NORTH CAROLINA.

CHARLOTTE; SECOND CHURCH—Rev. R. S. Burwell, of Gallatia, Tenn., preached very acceptably to this people last Sunday morning and evening.

At the morning service a congregational meeting was held and a second call extended to Rev. Martin Hardin of Minneapolis. After having declined the first call Mr. Hardin had a visit from Dr. Stagg to whose persuasive powers a change of his decision was due. The congregation also by a rising vote extended their thanks to Dr. Stagg. Mr. Hardin is expected the first Sunday in October.

FIRST CHURCH—Rev. T. H. Law, D. D., of Spartanburg, S. C., presented the Bible Cause to the people of this church on Sunday morning

Dr. Howerton, the pastor, has returned from his vacation.

CONCORD PRESBYTERY will meet at Siloam Church, McDowell county, N. C., Friday, second day of Oct., 1903, at 3 o'clock, p. m.

W. R. McLELLAND, Stated Clerk.

THE PRESBYTERY OF FAYETTEVILLE will meet at Lumber Bridge Tuesday at 8 p. m., October 6, 1903.

P. R. LAW, Stated Clerk.

ROBINSON CHURCH in Mecklenburg county has recently enjoyed a season of refreshing. The pastor, Bro. Jno. A. M. Murray, was assisted by Rev. J. M. Forbes, of Kings Mountain, whose preaching was the sort that impresses and pleases and profits. Bro. Forbes is a son of Philadelphia Church which is in same group with Robinson, and he is the only son Philadelphia has ever given to the ministry.

BEULAH CHURCH.—A meeting of seven days was closed at Beulah church in Union county on last Thursday night. Rev. A. W. White, who has been serving this church, was aided in preaching by Rev. T. J. Allison of Sugar Creek. Over forty persons made a profession of Christ.

MOUNT AIRY—Rev. B. W. Mebane, D. D., has been called to the pastorate of Mt. Airy church, and will move there immediately. Dr. Mebane has been doing a most successful work in Rockingham county and his removal is a great loss to the Home Mission work of Orange Presbytery. This leaves vacant an important group of churches and mission points, Madison, Wentworth, Pine Hall, Smyrna, Stoneville, Mayordan, etc. The committee hopes to secure a good man for this field very soon.

E. C. MURRAY,

Chairman of Home Missions.

ALBEMARLE PRESBYTERY.—Rev. Dr. Phillips was encouraged to cooperate with our Home Mission committee to place a Sunday school missionary in the territory embraced by Albemarle Presbytery. The Sabbath school committee has been directing his movements. Mr. J. F. Rodman is the missionary. He is a candidate for the ministry and has been doing effective service this summer. He aided Rev. F. W. Farriss in organizing a young peoples' society at Goldsboro. He rendered good service in working with

Rev. C. W. McDonald at Nahalah. Bro. McDonald is much encouraged in work there. After holding services a week in July seven persons united with the Church on confession of faith. Mr. Rodman has also been working with Rev. J. H. Jarvis at Calvary in Hyde county where there is a decided religious interest. Mr. Rodman also worked in the Sunday school interest at Makelyville, another church in Mr. Jarvis' field where the work is in a very hopeful condition.

Mr. Robert H. Orr of Union Seminary has been laboring with acceptance in the Weldon group of churches for three months. He has now vacated the field for the purpose of continuing his theological studies.

The interest in the Shorter Catechism in the Rocky Mount Sabbath school increases. One of the most faithful of the pupils has recently been awarded a Bible for reciting the Catechism accurately. His pastor congratulates Whitfield Clary on his success. W. D. M.

BANNER ELK.—The fourth session of Lees-McRae Institute opened Tuesday, Sept. 1st, with 51 pupils in attendance the first day. Of this number 16 are boarding pupils. Every room in the dormitory is already engaged, and as many more could be filled if we had them ready and a few scholarships to help those who are not able to pay the full amount themselves.

On Monday night Dr. J. I. Vance delivered a very practical address to the students and friends who were present. His opening sentence as well as I can recall was as follows: "I and one of many friends are watching the progress of the Lees-McRae Institute with the view of doing large things for it if it proves worthy of such help."

To all such friends and any others who feel interested in this work we wish to say:

1st. That the mountains are full of bright, deserving girls and boys, many of whom are both eager for and worthy of an education.

2nd. Almost without exception the colleges, seminaries and universities are situated in the tidewater and piedmont sections, which leaves the mountain region almost destitute of such institutions, and makes it well nigh impossible for many of the young people from this section to get a higher education.

3d. From six years of observation and experience, I unhesitatingly say that one generation of evangelistic work supplemented by the work of an institution of this kind will result in more permanent good for the Church than three generations of evangelistic work without such help. God's word is to enlarge the plan of thy tent, to stretch forth the curtains of thy habitation and to strengthen thy stakes. The trouble with so much of our Mission work is the stakes have not been strengthened in proportion to tightened cords. The result has been disastrous to many new churches.

4th. All the while that we have been running the school the carpenter work has had to go on. As I pen these words four teachers are inside the new academy with their classes, and two carpenters on the outside with their tools. The painters will also be there with their brushes as soon as some of our friends send us the money for this purpose.

5th. This work cannot be carried on and the growing demands of the school met with good wishes and kind words. We need something more substantial; we need money. Every dollar that is sent will be used very carefully and very prayerfully.

EDGAR TUFTS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Jerusalem Convention.

Now, at the opening of the Fall-Winter season of 1903-4, I want to give you an idea of the progress of the plans for the World's Fourth Sunday School Convention for which we are to sail in but half a year. To those who are preparing for an absence of a few months such an interval is not long.

First let me say that there are to be two ships for the Convention—NOT two from America, as has been discussed, but one from our Continent (the Grosser Kurfurst) and the other from England (the Furst Bismarck). The former is to leave New York Tuesday, March 8, 1904, returning due Wednesday, May 18, 1904. A prospectus giving the itinerary, cost, etc., will be sent to any one not supplied, on application. The European steamer starts April 1, 1904, on an independent schedule, but covering much the same ground and joining the American one for the convention.

The United States and Canadian delegation is formed chiefly by appointments proportionate to the Sunday School strength, numerically, of the different states and provinces. Such appointments are substantially made, but some others may yet obtain credentials as delegates, from the World's Committee even if their state's quota is filled; those desiring such appointment should make their application at once with deposit of $25, to Treasurer W. N. Hartshorn, 120 Boylton St., Boston. Of the remaining berths most are in the $450 to $750 classification. Certificates of membership in the Crosser Kurfurst party are now being issued.

All who have made deposits up to and including August 1903 should remember that the second payment of $25 is due September 1, 1903, and should be sent to the Mercantile Trust Co., of Boston, by whom it is applied on the contract for berths with the steamship agent; and to whom the final payment should be made two months before sailing.

The interest in the project on both sides of the water increases. Men and women strong, intellectually and spiritually, have been appointed, and are engaging accommodations. The Cruise bids fair to be the most noteworthy Christian-social event of our times.

I shall be very glad to hear from any one on any phase of the subject. On behalf of the Committee, I am,

Faternally yours

E. K. Warren, Chairman.

Foreign Missions.

By reason of the noble generosity of one of our members, shown in the gift of $25,000.00 to our Foreign Mission work, we have been relieved of the necessity of sending out any emergency appeal for help during the summer. But although placed at the disposal of the Executive Committee without conditions, it was not deemed proper that so large an individual gift should all be expended for current needs. A considerable part of it was expended in the long needed permanent equipment of our different missions in the matter of dwellings, schools and hospitals. And so we come up to the first of October this year with our needs for the current work just as great and as urgent as ever.

In addition to the usual amount needed to support the regular work, six new missionaries and seven now on furlough are to sail about the first of October. To cover this extra expense we need about $5,000.00 in all.

But the Assembly has called on the churches for $20,000.00 for this fiscal year, and this is the first regular collection since that call was made. By way of an honest effort to reach this amount we appeal to every minister in charge of a church to try to increase the gifts of his church this year by at least fifty per cent.

The Sabbath-schools are a very important part of the Church. For their own training as well as for the needs of the cause, they should be given an opportunity to contribute to it at the regular times. We appeal to all Sabbath-school superintendents to see that this is done.

We also ask of all our Missionary Societies the prompt remittance of all funds that have accumulated during the summer, and an earnest effort to do even more at this time than they are so generously accustomed to do for our help.

Brethren, give to your committee of Foreign Missions, to whom you have entrusted this work, the fullness of hand that will enable them to carry it forward in a manner worthy of our noble Church; and pray with us that God will make his people willing to give even as He has prospered them.

Yours, brethren in Christ,

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions,

S. H. CHESTER, Sec'y.

Publication Committee Notes.

Our sales are steadily increasing in the book department, and a notable feature is the large number of orders we are filling for Sunday-school libraries. While in temporary quarters we are offering our own publications and other books in stock at very attractive prices, and it gives us great pleasure to furnish everything needed by our churches, Sunday-schools, or by the members of our churches. Any book in print will be furnished on short notice, at publishers' prices, and we wish to again emphasize the fact that our ability to supplement the gifts of the churches is only limited by the patronage given our Book and Periodical Departments. Last year we gave back, in the way of donations and salaries of Sunday-school missionaries, over $4,000.00 more than was given us by the churches, and we can increase this if the membership of our churches will favor us with their orders. Our 3,000 churches bought less than $13.00 worth of books each from us last year, and we feel sure they buy more books than this; so we ask our brethren in pastorates to call the attention of their congregation to our facilities for furnishing helpful reading matter.

We are making an earnest effort to help the Sunday-schools of our Church to place within the reach of the young people collections of helpful and interesting books. For several months we have had a highly competent reading committee at work, examining carefully and critically the vast array of books being offered as suitable for Sunday-school libraries. While there are hundreds of helpful and wholesome books on the market, there are thousands that are too insipid to be worth shelf room, and other thousands with false teachings and evil tendencies, which render them unsafe for our young people.

We shall issue at an early date a new catalogue of approved books for Sunday-school libraries, and we feel warranted in saying that this list will embrace the best of the old and new books, and it is hoped it will be of great value to those who desire to add to their present libraries, or to start new ones.

Until December 1st, 1903, we are making an extremely liberal offer to Sunday-schools that wish to add to their library equipment. Our special Library Leaflet explaining the proposition will be sent on application.

The rules laid down by the Assembly for our government in the matter of granting donations are generally understood, but a brief review of these regulations may not be amiss just here. The first limitation is necessarily a financial one, and we are not expected to impair the working capital of the Committee by expending for salaries of Sunday-school missionaries, and for donations of Sunday-school papers and books, an amount largely in excess of the amount collected annually from the churches for the cause of Publication.

With this limitation in view, we are authorized to donate literature to Sunday-schools in mission fields after the application has been endorsed in writing by the Presbyterian Chairman of Publication, and in cases of great need, the limit is extended to embrace a part of the price of a supply of hymn books. All our ministers and evangelists are entitled to a supply of tracts, for free distribution, to the amount of $5.00 per year, and one copy of the "Earnest Worker" and "Children's Friend" is to be sent to their address, without charge.

We are also permitted to donate a Testament to all children in our Sunday-schools who recite perfectly the Catechism for Young Children, and a Bible is given for the recitation of the Shorter Catechism.

Applications for these rewards must be made by pastors or superintendents of Sunday-schools.

The Assembly of 1903 directed that prudent effort should be made by our Committee to secure from the churches and schools making applications for donations the payment of at least a small part of the price of the supplies asked for. This action was based upon the well-established principle that the church or school which does most for itself will do the most effective work.

Again we repeat that the one purpose for which we labor is to help our churches and Sunday-schools, and we only want to earn an increased profit in our business department in order that we may help in a larger way than ever before.

Our parting word is an earnest plea for helpful suggestions and for the hearty sympathy and co-operation of all our brethren, and we also ask that you join us in an humble petition to the Great Head of the Church to give us wisdom to plan only for those things which will honor Christ and advance the interests of His Kingdom.

The General Assembly's Home Missions.

As the September Collection for Home Missions is at hand, perhaps no better way of emphasizing its importance can be devised than by laying before the Church the following Memorial, which was prepared by the Executive Committee and sent to the last Assembly. Let the whole

Church hear this Memorial and make a suitable response in view of the urgent needs and great possibilities of the work: To the General Assembly in Session at Lexington, Va., Greeting:

Dear Brethren:

At the regular meeting of the Executive Committee of Home Missions, May 12, 1903, additional applications were presented in due form to the Committee, asking for an enlargement of the work by appropriations for new, promising work in the West. As the appropriations were already larger than any year of the past, and larger even than our income in the most favorable year, this led to an earnest and protracted discussion of the whole subject of Home Missions.

Whereupon Drs. T. H. Rice and S. L. Morris were appointed to present the matter in a Memorial to the Assembly, which they did in the following form:

"In the discharge of this important duty devolving upon us, we would enforce the consideration of this matter at the hands of the Assembly by several serious and weighty facts:

1. The Presbyteries composing the Synods in which the Assembly is carrying on its Home Mission operations, are begging this Committee for $10,000 more than our annual income from all sources. They claim that this is the least amount adequate to the demands of their growing work. In addition to this, Presbyteries in the older Synods are appealing for the Committee's help. The Committee is powerless to respond to these pressing needs of the Church.

2. Applications come to every meeting of the Committee for assistance in erecting new houses of worship. It is exceedingly mortifying and embarrassing to the Committee to be compelled to decline the majority of these worthy cases simply from lack of the funds to meet the necessities of the work.

3. Under the pressure of such appeals the Committee undertook last year to increase the appropriations to $37,000, and yet such is the meager response of the Church at large that we are embarrassed as a Committee to meet even this small increased appropriation of only $5,000.

4. By reason of our limitations the Presbyterian Church has lost already much of its valuable territory, and we are compelled to stand still and look on whilst our people despairing of help from their own Church are being organized into other folds, or still remain outside of all folds "hoping against hope."

5. At the same time new territory is being opened up constantly to us by reason of the marvelous development of the country. Our success during the past year in this new territory in organizing and building up new Churches demonstrates the vast possibilities of the work if we had but the means to prosecute it.

6. The Assembly's Home Mission Cause represents the aggressive work of the Church for lengthening her cords and widening her bonds. The splendid results of the past year are but the pledge of the greater achievements; and the outlay in this department will prove the most profitable investment made by the Church.

7. Our Home Mission work is the basis of all growth. Simulate it to a large and healthy development, and all Departments will feel the stimulus and thrill of new life. The growth of our work in foreign lands will be ultimately retarded, unless there is such development at home as to sustain the ever increasing demands of our great Foreign Missionary operations.

8. The new territory now opening up in the settlement of the Indian Territory and Oklahoma presents the greatest opportunity, which will perhaps ever confront our Church again in all its history. The public lands are now exhausted, and there will be no more new territory opened in the history of our country.

THIS CRISIS OF OUR OPPORTUNITY CALLS FOR THE CLIMAX OF EFFORT.

In view of all these great considerations we most earnestly entreat this Assembly to take some action commensurate with the greatness of the issues at stake, and that will secure for our beloved Church the largest promise of success in her supreme mission of reaching and supplying the needs of the multitudes, "scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd."

In behalf of the committee,

T. H. RICE,
S. L. MORRIS.

MISSISSIPPI.

ROSE HILL.—A new church was organized at Rose Hill, Amite county, Miss., on Sabbath, August 30th, by a committee of Louisiana Presbytery consisting of Revs. M. B. Shaw and D. O. Byers with Elder I. D. Norwood of Norwood Church. Services began on Friday night previous. Fourteen were received during the services, and with members received from other adjacent Presbyterian churches, the membership of the new organization was 65. Messrs. L. P. Lindsey, Charles Dewey and Samuel McKneely were ordained and installed elders; Messrs W. S. Crawford and R. H. Rourk, deacons. After organization the Sacrament of the Supper was celebrated. The nucleus for this organization was the membership of the Comite Church, whose organization had been removed to Norwood, La. We have seldom seen so much earnest attention to the preaching of the Gospel. Notwithstanding that protracted services had been carried on for weeks in neighboring churches, the people crowded the school house to hear the Word and a great blessing descended upon them.

A great field of usefulness in the Master's service lies before the Rose Hill Presbyterian Church.

M. B. SHAW, Chairman of Committee.

TENNESSEE.

CLARKSVILLE.—The attention of all pastors and congregations throughout the Church is hereby called to the action of the General Assemblies of 1902 and 1903 appointing the second Sabbath of September of each year as a day of special prayer for public and private schools to be observed annually. It is understood that this action is not designed to suspend or interfere with the observance of the last Thursday of February as the annual day of prayer for our youth in colleges and seminaries.

W. A. ALEXANDER, Stated Clerk.

TIME AND PLACE OF THE MEETINGS OF THE SYNODS.

Alabama, Union Springs, Nov. 10, 7:30 p. m.
 Arkansas, Hope, Oct. 20, 7:30 p. m.
 Florida, Madison, Nov. 20, 7:30 p. m.
 Georgia, Brunswick, Nov. 10, 7:30 p. m.
 Kentucky, Cynthiana, Oct. 13, 7:30 p. m.
 Louisiana, New Orleans, Nov. 17, 7:30 p. m.
 Mississippi, Laurel, Nov. 17, 7:30 p. m.
 Missouri, Fulton, Oct. 20, 7:30 p. m.
 North Carolina, Wilmington, Nov. 3, 8 p. m.
 South Carolina, Cheraw, Oct. 20, 12 m.
 Tennessee, Memphis, Oct. 27, 8 p. m.
 Texas, Milford, Oct. 21, 7:30 p. m.
 Virginia, Abingdon, Oct. 20, 7:30 p. m.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Asheville, Davidson River, Tues., Oct. 6, 7:30 p. m.
 Frank D. Hunt, S. C.
 Mecklenburg, Wadesboro, Wed., Sept. 30, 1903, at 11 a. m.
 T. J. Allison, S. C.
 Wilmington, Wallace, Oct. 21, 11 a. m.
 A. McFadyen, S. C.

SYNOD OF ALABAMA.

Central of Alabama, Sylvan Street ch., Selma, Oct. 1, 7:30 p. m.
 I. C. H. Champney, S. C.
 North Alabama, Goodwater ch., in Goodwater town, Ala., Oct. 6, 1903, at 7:30 p. m.
 W. I. Sinnott, S. C.
 Tuskaloosa, Newbern, Tues., Oct. 6, 7:30 p. m.
 J. G. Praigg, S. C.

SYNOD OF ARKANSAS.

Arkansas, Searcy, Wed., Sept. 23, 7:30 p. m.
 J. E. Latham, S. C.
 Ouachita, Arkadelphia, Wed., Oct. 7, 8 p. m. All church sessions will be expected to send their records to this meeting of Presbytery, and to be represented by a ruling elder.
 C. H. Maury, S. C.
 Pine Bluff, Princeton, Thurs., Oct. 1, 7:30 p. m.
 E. P. Kennedy, S. C.
 Washbourne, Bentonville, Ark., Wed., Sept. 30, 7:30 p. m.
 S. W. Davies, S. C.

SYNOD OF FLORIDA.

Florida, Madison, Sat., Nov. 14, 7:30 p. m.
 B. L. Baker, S. C.
 St. Johns, Wildwood, Fla., Nov. 12, at 7:30 p. m.
 D. L. Lander, S. C.

SYNOD OF GEORGIA.

Athens, Elberton, Ga., Sept. 9, at 8 p. m.
 H. F. Hoyt, S. C.
 Macon, Albany, Ga., Sept. 30, 8 p. m.
 W. H. Frazer, S. C.

SYNOD OF KENTUCKY.

Louisville, Anchorage, Sept. 29, 7:30 p. m.
 David M. Sweets, S. C.
 Paducah, Paducah, First church, Henderson, Sept. 17, 7:30 p. m.
 L. O. Spencer, S. C.
 Transylvania, Perryville, Tues., Sept. 29, 7:30 p. m.
 E. M. Green, S. C.

SYNOD OF LOUISIANA.

Louisiana, Lake Charles, Thurs., Oct. 15, 7:30 p. m.
 M. B. Shaw, S. C.
 Red River, Monroe, La., Oct. 6, 7:30 p. m.
 W. A. Zeigler, S. C.

SYNOD OF MISSISSIPPI.

Meridian, Montrose, Thurs., Oct. 1, 7:30 p. m.
 A. B. Coit, S. C.
 Mississippi, Ben Salem ch., Tuesday, Sept. 29, 11 a. m.
 S. C. Caldwell, S. C.
 North Mississippi, Sardis, Sept. 30, 8 p. m.
 S. L. Grigsby, S. C.
 Tombigbee, Bethel ch., Oct. 1, 11 a. m. Crawford is the railroad point. Elders coming will please notify S. D. Potts, Crawford, Mississippi, R. F. D. The Presbyterial Sunday School Institute will meet on Wednesday at 7 p. m. Sunday schools are urged to send representatives.
 J. W. Moseley, Jr., S. C.

SYNOD OF MISSOURI.

Potosi, Pres. ch., Caruthersville, Frid., Sept. 25, 7:30 p. m.
 Geo. W. Harlan, S. C.
 St. Louis, Newport ch., Oct. 6, 11 a. m.
 Upper Missouri, Morton-Hardin ch., Sept. 29, 7:30 p. m.
 During the afternoon of that date a Y. P. S. C. E. Convention will be held.
 Chas. P. Foreman, S. C.

SYNOD OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

Charleston, Summerville, Oct. 6, 8 p. m.
 Alexander Sprunt, S. C.
 Enoree, Spartanburg, Tues., Oct. 6, 8 p. m. During this meeting the Presbytery will celebrate the quarto-centennial of its organization with appropriate addresses and other exercises.
 T. H. Law, S. C.
 Harmony, Midway ch., Wed., Oct. 7, 12 m.
 W. W. Mills, S. C.
 Pee Dee, McColl, Tues., Sept. 29, 10 a. m.
 A. H. McArn, S. C.

SYNOD OF TENNESSEE.

Columbia, Cornersville, Tues., Sept. 29, 7:30 p. m. East church is expected to send up semi-annual dues.
 W. A. Cleveland, S. C.

SYNOD OF TEXAS.

Brazos, Bay City, Sept. 15, at 8 p. m.
 J. G. Tanner, S. C.
 Dallas, Amarillo, Texas, Thurs., Sept. 24, 8 p. m.
 E. M. Munroe, S. C.
 Durant, Ada, I. T., Friday, Sept. 25, 8 p. m.
 R. F. Kirkpatrick, S. C.
 Eastern Texas, Livingston, Frid., Sept. 26, 8 p. m.
 F. E. Robbins, S. C.
 Fort Worth, Carlsbad, New Mex., Fri., Sept. 25, 8:30 p. m.
 John V. McCall, S. C.
 Western Texas, Lockhart, Sept. 30, 8 p. m.
 S. J. McMurry, S. C.

SYNOD OF VIRGINIA.

Abingdon, Riverview ch., Sept. 30, 7 p. m.
 John R. Herndon, S. C.
 East Hanover, Blackstone, Tues., Sept. 29, 8 p. m.
 T. P. Epes, S. C.
 Greenbrier, Spring Creek ch. (Falling Spring), W. Va., Tues., Sept. 29, 7:30 p. m.
 B. Harrop, S. C.
 Kanawha, Buffalo, W. Va., Tues., Sept. 29, 7:30 p. m.
 Newton Donaldson, S. C.
 Lexington, Buena Vista, Oct. 13, 7:30 p. m.
 W. C. White, S. C.
 Maryland, Hancock Pres. ch., Oct. 5, 7:30 p. m.
 P. C. Flournoy, S. C.
 Norfolk, Gloucester, Va., Tues., Oct. 6, 8 p. m.
 E. B. McCluer, S. C.
 West Hanover, Amherst ch., Friday, Oct. 9, 7:30 p. m.
 E. H. Stover, S. C.

The World.

Within twelve years the death rate from tuberculosis has been reduced forty per cent in New York City.

Baron Henri de Rothschild appeared in the Police Court in Paris and was given one day in jail and a fine of ten francs.

The final defeat of Sir Thomas Lipton's cup challenger, Shamrock III, was received in London with absolute listlessness.

Constantinople, Sept. 2.—Three explosions occurred today on the Austrian steamer Vaskapu soon after leaving the Bulgarian port of Burgas en route for Constantinople, by which twenty-nine persons perished. The vessel caught fire and had to be beached.

Oyster Bay, L. I., Sept. 2.—A man giving his name as Frank Weilbrenner was arrested at Sagamore Hill late last night while making a persistent demand to see President Roosevelt. The man was armed with a revolver, fully loaded. He was taken to the village and placed in the town prison.

The chairmanship of Ways and Means, which used to carry the actual as well as the nominal floor leadership of the House, will go to Representative Payne, of New York. His reappointment has never been in doubt, although in certain quarters contrary statements have occasionally been printed.

A number of officers of the Nishunish and other garrisons in Servia have been arrested in connection with the issuance of the proclamation demanding the trial by court martial of the conspirators who were concerned in the assassination of King Alexander, Queen Draga and their ministry, and threatening to resign their commissions if the demands are refused.

Progress is an iconoclast and obliterates "old landmarks" without mercy. The Dismal Swamp has been the subject of song. But the water from the lake has been largely drawn off for commercial purposes, and now we are told that the Ohio capitalists and farmers who recently purchased 20,000 acres of land in the heart of the swamp are cutting the timbers away and draining the lands and putting them in arable condition.

In its annual trade edition of September 1, The Galveston-Dallas News published statistics showing the amount of the Texas cotton crop for the year ending August 31, 1903. The total Texas crop for the year just closed is 2,646,215 bales, showing a decrease of 61,044 compared with the Texas crop for 1901-'02. The total crop for Indian and Oklahoma Territories for the year just closed amounted to 523,236 bales, a decrease of 7,262 bales compared with the crop for 1901-'02. The total crop for Texas and the Territories for the past year is 3,169,171 bales.

Secretary of the Treasury Shaw has already commenced the distribution of public moneys among the national banks. It was learned yesterday that one of the last things he did before leaving Washington on his present trip was to act favorably on the application of five banks to be designated as United States depositories. The deposits were not large in any individual case. Some of the other banks that have made application to the department for deposits have learned of the action of the Secretary, and are exerting all their influence to have their applications given equally favorable consideration. No action will be taken by the department, however, until after the return of Secretary Shaw.

London, Sept. 3.—The Tientsin correspondent of the Standard telegraphs the report that the steamer Stanley Dollar has been seized by a Japanese man-of-war because it did not have the permission of Korea to trade in lumber. A dispatch from Peking said the Stanley Dollar (formerly a dispatch vessel, but now owned by an American), which was sent by a Russian company from Tientsin to Yongaapho, at the mouth of the Yalu river, Korea, for a cargo of lumber from the Russian concession on the Yalu river, was prevented from entering Yongaapho by a Japanese gunboat, whose commander said Yongaapho was not an open port and that foreign merchant vessels had no right to enter it.

During a race riot in Pittsburg Monday night in a saloon at Monessen, between white and colored coal miners, Lemuel Gilmore, white, was fatally shot by George Williams, colored. Williams and another negro escaped and are being pursued by a crowd of white miners with the avowed intention of lynching Williams if he is captured.

The administration has come to no decision regarding the disposition to be made of the American warships which are now sailing to Beirut. Whether the Brooklyn and San Francisco will remain in Turkish waters will depend entirely upon the report which Minister Leishman makes concerning the situation in Turkey and the necessity which exists for warships to protect American interests. It is expected that the report of Minister Leishman will receive the consideration of the President before any determination is reached. It is understood that Minister Leishman's complete report will reach Washington about the time of the arrival of the squadron in Turkish waters.

A notable result of the eruption of Mont Pelee, Martinique, is a huge obelisk, or tower of rocks, extruded from the top, and adding 800 or 900 feet to its height, which is now some 5,000 feet. The pillar issues from the new cone of the volcano, and virtually plugs it. At its base the column is some 300 to 350 feet thick, and from certain points of view tapers to a needle or "aiguille." It also appears to bend, or arch, over toward the southwest, or in the direction of St. Pierre. On the southwestern face it is cavernous and slaggy, showing where explosions had carried away parts of the substance. On the opposite, or northeastern face, the surface appears solid and smooth, but having parallel grooves like glacial markings. It shows the marks of attrition by the surrounding rocks.—London Globe.

Kansas City—Twenty-five stock men from different parts of the Western grass country met in this city and arranged to perfect the organization of a packing company, to compete with the alleged packers' trust. The new company was named the Independent Packing Company. Articles of incorporation will be drawn up and signed tomorrow. The company will have a capital stock of $5,000,000, and will be incorporated under the laws of Arizona. Of the total capitalization, 51 per cent. will be so disposed of as to be held in escrow by the board of directors of the company. This will insure stockmen who interest themselves in the plan that the company will always be controlled by stock interests. The independent packing companies will build one plant in the Missouri valley. Another plant will be built later, probably in Texas.

Chekib Bey, the Turkish minister, has received from the minister of foreign affairs at Constantinople a dispatch, giving the Turkish version of the reported attempt on the life of United States Vice-Consul Magelssen, at Beirut. After declaring that the report of the assassination of Mr. Magelssen was false, the dispatch gives a version of the affair practically the same as has been told before in the dispatches from Turkey. It says the pistol was fired by a man returning from a marriage fete; that the shot was fired in the air, and that it happened just as Mr. Magelssen was passing in his carriage. This, the dispatch says, led the vice-consul to believe that an attempt had been made against his life. The man who did the shooting has been delivered to the judicial authorities. Chekib Bey's dispatch also asserts that order and tranquility prevail at Beirut.

The Hague, Sept. 1.—Prof. Lammasch, of Austria, has been appointed one of the arbitrators of the claims of the allied powers for preferential treatment in the settlement with Venezuela. The first session today of the court which is to decide the Venezuelan claims was occupied by the discussion of the procedure to be followed. The members of the counsel of administration and the Premier, Dr. Kuper, and the Baron Von Lynden, were present. The press was excluded from the court. The Venezuelan counsel has handed a protest to the secretary of the tribunal against the delay entailed by failure on the part of the Czar to appoint three arbitrators in time for the opening of the tribunal. It is believed that the Venezuelan counsel will insist on the nomination of arbitrators and the organization of the tribunal as soon as possible.

The Home Circle.

On Resurrection Morn.

See, poor stricken mother, bruised and inly bleeding,—

With your heart kaleidoscopic, on one only tender topic,
Of the child death claimed, your empty
arms unheeding,—

See by faith the little hand tight clashed by hands once bleeding,
On Resurrection morn.

Childhood's sore perplexities and sin mis-guiding

Hence your neighbor's boy; forever from all good perchance may sever.
Pure as when God-given is your babe abiding,

And—thank God!—you're sure you'll kiss that wee face so confiding

On Resurrection morn.

Life holds countless graves of cherished dreams soon speeding;

Hearts their weary mausoleum, like
some crumbling Coliseum,

Faded eyes their cenotaph, no sadder needing.

Lost ideals? No! they'll rise in purity exceeding,

On Resurrection morn.

—Mrs. Andrew J. Howell, Jr.

Telling "Nice" Things.

I know a girl, in fact, she's a very dear friend of mine—a young, timid, struggling artist, who is trying to support herself by her brush. This is not a small thing to accomplish, as perhaps many of you know by experience; so my little friend has begun housekeeping in a modest way. She lives in two rooms at the top of a very tall house, and she does her own cooking on a small kerosene stove; but she's a brave girl, and paints away for dear life.

I went to call upon her the other day,
and took with me a friend of mine who is also an artist, but one who is far along that hall of success which Nan is now so patiently climbing. I had hoped much for Nan from this call, so introduced them with a beating heart.

She shook hands cordially enough with Nan, who was trembling with nervousness, and seemed graciously interested in her work, for she turned over sketches, looked at paintings, and then, with the picture of an old woman's head in her hand, sat down and talked art all the rest of the afternoon to her heart's content. I did wish it had been to Nan's
"heart's content," but one glance at the child's face told me it was not, for it was art that was away over her head.

Meanwhile, there was no word of praise from her lips, neither any criticism, even of the kindest, and her comments were of the mildly polite style that is exasper-atingly like the faint praise that condemns. Do you wonder that I felt like shaking her when I looked at the repressed hope and longing on the face of the poor little striving Nan? I was almost ready to cry with disappointment when we got into the street again.

"Why didn't you say something nice to that child, you miserable woman?" I burst out at last. She looked at me in unmitigated astonishment.

"Say something 'nice' to her?" she echoed, her face one whole exclamation point of surprise. "Why, it never entered my head to do so. Do you suppose she expected me to say anything?"

"But," I artfully inquired, with an eye to the future, "don't you think she has talent?"

"Most certainly I do. The head of that old woman is a gem in itself, and, what is more, I know a man who will buy it at her own price. I wonder who her model was?"

"I don't know," I said abstractedly, for I was planning a call upon Nan the very next day; "but I will ask her." And I wish you could have seen Nan's face when I carefully repeated the "nice" thing I had saved for her. It was the impersonation of joy itself.

"And to think what a perfect goose I was yesterday," she said, with a happy laugh. "I actually cried myself to sleep after you had gone, and forgot about my supper. But there, I do believe I'll never be discouraged again," and she shook the fryingpan so joyously that the chop she was frying over the kerosene stove danced a merry jig, as though out of pure sympathy with her.

Oh, it's a wonderful tonic, is this "telling nice things to people!" I have seen it work the most surprising results at the most surprising times. I have seen jaded men lift their tired heads and square their shoulders after a hard day's work at desk or counter or bench, and the bright light of hope leap into their eyes again, from the magical influence of a timely, sincere word of praise, or that
"nice" thing one has heard, or thought, about them, and remembered to tell them.
I have seen wives and mothers, whose faces were faded and worn with the weary round of planning, baking, stew-ing and boiling, and the drudgery of counting the pennies, look up into the faces of their husbands at some unaccustomed word of praise or tenderness, with the light of youth in their eyes, and a tremulous feeling in their hearts that glorified every duty to them. I have seen servants take their brooms and sweep more carefully in the corners, dust the picture rails and the pictures, take up the rugs and give them an honest shaking, and then brush away the cobwebs that they had noticed hanging for a week at least, but had not thought it necessary to remove until that happy word had made it a pleasure to do so.

And I myself—why, I feel to this day
the glow of strength and hopeful possibilities that filled my heart at a word of affectionate appreciation from my pastor.
He is dead now, but often, when tempted to see the dark side of life, I recall the tender words of encouragement he uttered that day so long ago, and hope refuses to be thrust away.

The really selfish element in telling the nice things to people (if one can call it a selfish element) is the exquisite happiness it brings to one's self. I can liken it to nothing that is earthly, but to everything that is heavenly. Try it, and see for yourselves.—Christian Work.

Sunday-school teacher: "Well, who was sorry at the return of the Prodigal Son?" Little Girl: "The fatted calf."

The "Wilhelm Tell" Festival Play at Aldorf.

As we walked from Fluelen to Aldorf on the day of the festspielen, the hay in the meadows on either side of the road was piled in fragrant heaps, dappled with the shadow of the fruit trees that grew between. Here and there on the slope was a brown chalet, and on either side the magnificent hills made a sort of natural amphitheatre. The road was full of peasants and country people, in their best clothes, walking soberly, as if to some religious festival. We passed the fine statue of Tell and his child that stands in the principal square, and went on down a narrow street, to the Festival Playhouse.

It stands on the edge of the town with the wooded slope behind it, and beyond again the mountains—an ideal site for a Swiss national celebration. Nothing homelier can be imagined than the theatre itself. It is built of rough wooden boards. When one of the peasant endmanches who are acting as stewards has inspected your ticket, you find your numbered seat on one of the wooden benches which do duty for stalls. It is half-past one, and the midday sunshine comes through the open door with the scent of the pine woods.

The theatre holds twelve hundred people, and looks full—but obviously, not with English visitors from Lucerne.
Very few of these are in evidence. The bulk of the audience seems to consist of the people of the place, friends of the actors (who are almost all from Aldorf or the neighbouring villages), and good Switzers who have come together to do honour to their national hero. I see a Franciscan friar in the audience, and several priests. Acquaintances nod at each other across the theatre; you feel as if you were present at a great family party.

And now the orchestra strikes up the march from William Tell, the official on the steps close to us, in a white belt and tin helmet, shuts the door leading into the open air, the spectators open their little yellow copies of the play, and settle into attitudes of serious attention; there is a tinkling of cow bells behind the scenes, and the curtain rises on a view of the Lake of Lucerne.

We all read Schiller's play at school, and probably hated it. But here, as the old heroic story unfolded itself, phase after phase, on the very spot where it once took place, and presented by descendants of the very men who had stood for freedom with Uri and Schwytz and Unterwalden in days long past, it was impossible not to be moved. The audience followed the drama with almost religious seriousness; the play was about their mountains, their lake, their heroes, their freedom. At the end of each act,
a rippling murmur of "Furchtbar schon"
went round the building.

Schiller's idea of Tell as a simple, silent man, driven desperately on the deed that freed his country by a cruel wound to his domestic affections, was admirably carried out by the principal actor, a business man of good position, and the Obergerichtspräsident of his district. Gesler was an hotel-keeper, and president of the Altgemeinde of Altdorf. The rector of the canton school took the part of Attinghausen, and I found in the list of performers, clerks, shopkeepers, artisans, a veterinary surgeon, and a hair dresser.

The performance—for amateurs—was marvellous, and reflects the greatest credit on Her Gustav Thiess, Director of the State Theatre at Lucerne, who trained the actors. They were almost all men and women of striking appearance, and they wore their rich mediaeval costumes with dignity and grace. Gertrude, the wife of Stauffacher (and daughter in private life of 'Pastor Rossellman,' who also in private life conducts a printing business), looked a beautiful creature in her blue tunic and full white sleeves, but she spoke her lines with a somewhat harsh and monotonous delivery. A tendency to over-emphasis, and monotony of cadence here and there, were the chief faults to be found in the acting generally.

The part of Tell's wife was filled with real pathos and charm, and the boy who acted Walther had a clear ringing voice and a delightful childish spontaneity, that made him a most winning representative of the little hero.

A trifling contretemps now and then passed off, as such a thing might in private theatricals at a family party, as, for instance, when Rudenz and Bertha rode in on two chargers and declared their love for each other. The animals stood commendably still while a loud and impassioned dialogue went on over their heads. Then the curtain fell and was raised again, in response to the applause of the audience. Bertha (Fraulein Hefti) rode on and acknowledged the recall; but Rudenz's charger proving refractory, that noble junker came on just as the curtain was falling and got considerably mixed up with it. The audience smiled good-humouredly, and streamed out to drink beer and eat cakes at booths under the trees hard by, till a bell called them in to witness the next scene.

It was all over at 5.30, and we made our way back to Fluelen to wait for the boat to Lucerne, wondering at what had been accomplished by the zeal and artistic feeling of the inhabitants of this little Swiss town. How long will it be before English shopkeepers, clerks, and factory hands, give us such a representation of Henry the Fifth?

At the unveiling of the Tell Monument in 1895 it was decided that Altdorf, where the hero performed his wonderful (some say mythical) feat of archery, should have its Festival Play. The material for such an enterprise lay ready in the already existing and successful choral and musical societies of Altdorf. A committee was formed, presided over by Herr Alois Huber, the theatre was built, and a very successful series of performances took place in 1889, and were repeated in following summers. Dates and all particulars may be had from the Tell Comite in Altdorf.

I found that few of the English people in Lucerne seemed to know anything about the play. Yet how can a day be more pleasantly spent than in steaming down the lake, with the changing panorama of its romantic shores, reaching Fluelen and Altdorf in time for the performance, and returning quietly in the evening, with the echo of Schiller's noble lines still in one's ears, and one's heart still thrilling to the old tale of heroism so worthily commemorated by the folk of Altdorf today?"—"Travel."

Grandmother's Birthday.

A lady who spent some time among the peasants of the Tyrol, writes the following:

"The morning after our arrival we were awakened by the sound of a violin and flutes under the window, and hurrying down found the little house adorned as for a feast—garlands over the door and wreathing a high chair which was set in state. The table was already covered with gifts, brought by the young people whose music we had heard. The whole neighborhood were kinsfolk, and these gifts came from uncles and cousins in every far off degree. They were very simple, for the donors are poor—knitted gloves, a nice shawl, baskets of flowers, jars of fruit, loaves of bread; but upon all some little message of love was pinned. 'Is there a bride in the house?' I asked my landlord. 'O, no,' he said. 'We do not make such a bother about our young people. It is grandmother's birthday.'

"The grandmother, in her spectacles, white apron, and high velvet cap, was a heroine all day, sitting in state to receive visits, and dealing out slices from a sweet loaf to each one who came."—The New World.

Christopher Columbus's Last Funeral.

Christopher Columbus has just been buried again and probably for the last time. The event took place a few weeks ago in the famous and beautiful cathedral of Seville, Spain, wherein a special mausoleum has been constructed to hold the ashes of the once despised but now glorified navigator. The coffin was borne by seamen of the navy and was followed by a cortege headed by the Archbishop of Seville, the minister of marine, the captain general of Cadiz, and other dignitaries. The ashes of no illustrious man have been honored with so many burials and removals as those of Columbus. They rested for two centuries at Santo Domingo, and in 1796 were transferred to the cathedral at Havana. After the Spanish-American war they were taken to Spain, where, by desire of a descendant of Columbus, the Duke of Veragua, they have been interred in Seville cathedral. Surely the inscription "requiescat in pace," written over this tomb would have been of more than ordinary significance. It is to be hoped that this interment will serve to settle forever the dispute as to whether Columbus' remains were ever really removed from Santo Domingo.—Leslie's Weekly.

"I never build a song by night or day
Of breaking ocean or of blowing whin,
But in some wondrous, unexpected way
Like light upon a road, my love comes in.
And when I go at night upon a hill
My heart is lifted on mysterious wings:
My love is there to strengthen and to still,
For she can take away the dread of things."
Edwin Markham.

Southern Railway.

The Direct Line to all Points

TEXAS,
CALIFORNIA
FLORIDA,
CUBA and
PORTO RICO.

Strictly First-Class equipment on all Through and Local Trains, Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars on all night trains. Fast and safe Schedules.

Travel by the Southern and you are assured of a Safe, Comfortable and Expeditious journey.

Apply to Ticket Agents for Time Tables, Maps and General Information, or address

R. L. VERNON, F. R. DARBY,
T. P. A., C. P. & T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C. Asheville, N. C.
No trouble to answer questions.

For Sale Cheap

A one-horse power, high-speed General Electric motor, for 500-volt circuit; armature and commutator both new; all in thoroughly good repair. For particulars apply to
MANAGER PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD,
Charlotte, N. C.

D. W. Badham,
Charlotte, N. C.

Tuner, Repairer and Salesman of
Pianos. School work a specialty.

Mention the Standard.

Atlantic & N. C. R. R.

Time table in effect November 19, 1902.

Eastbound Trains.	Passenger	Passenger
	Daily	Passaily
Leave Goldsboro.....	3:30 p m	8:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	4:22 p m	8:48 a m
Leave New Bern.....	5:50 p m	10:10 a m
Arrive Morehead City.....	7:15 p m

Westbound Trains.	Passenger	Passenger
	Daily	Daily
Leave Morehead City.....	7:05 a m
Leave New Bern.....	9:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	10:12 a m
Arrive Goldsboro.....	11:15 a m

HIWASSEE ROUTE

Atlanta, Knoxville and Northern Railway.

SOUTHERN SCENIC LINE.

Short line between Atlanta, Ga., and Knoxville, Tenn., and between points in the Southeast and Northwest.

Low round trip rates to Mountain and Seashore Resorts. Why go to Switzerland or Colorado? For scenery the A, K. & N. Railway crosses the Great Smoky Mountains by the only standard-gauge loop line in the world; 2,000 feet above sea-level and 600 feet above the Hiwassee River.

For rates or information apply to
E. S. MILLER, T. P. A.,
18 N. Pryor St., Atlanta.
S. H. STOUT, General Agent, Knoxville.
J. H. McWILLIAMS, G. P. A., Knoxville

Marriages.

HINES-HUNT.—Married, on the 20th of August, 1903, in the Presbyterian Church, Milton, by Rev. Joseph Evans, Mr. Edward Hines to Miss Katie Ross Hunt, all of Milton.

M'DONALD-HARPER.—Near Milford, Tex., Aug. 27th, 1903, Prof. Donald McDonald, and Miss Annis Harper, by Rev. E. M. Munroe, D. D.

Deaths.

' From the care and grief and heartbreak,
from the cruel growing old,
From the wandering in the shadows, to the tender Shepherd's fold,
From the weary ways we are treading, to the radiant streets of gold.'

KENION.—Mr. L. N. Kenion, of Orange county, N. C., member of Little River Church, aged 84 years, died August 15, 1903. The funeral and burial services were conducted by Rev. L. M. Kerschner. He leaves two sons and two daughters.

WILSON.—Died in Steele Creek, N. C., August 20, 1903, Mrs. Samuel A. Wilson in the 29th year of her age. She was a daughter of Mr. J. C. Kirk, of Mallard Creek, Mecklenburg county, N. C., a cultured woman of beautiful Christian character, was married, May 21, 1902, to a faithful deacon of Steele Creek Church, and departed peacefully after only fifteen months of happy married life, leaving a devoted husband and an infant son and many relatives in profound grief.

BRITTON.—At his home at Lumberdale, N. C., August 12, 1903, Moses Britton in the 72nd year of his age. Mr. Britton was a successful business man—a telling factor in every community in which he lived during his long and useful life. He had been a member of the Presbyterian Church from early life.

The Household.

Cooling Drinks for Hot Weather.

By Mrs. Rose Seelye-Miller.

Many delicious and cooling drinks may be prepared at home in a short time by one who has any skill at all in the concoction of eatables or drinkables. We have given a great deal of favor to the common lemonade, and really it deserves every whit its popularity, but as a change there are many other things which will be received gratefully by those for whom we cater. These should occupy at least a small part of our time in the heated term of summer, for they are more refreshing than the elaborately prepared dishes of pastry and cakes, as well as heavy dishes of meat.

Almond Milk.—This is a delicious beverage. It takes some time to prepare it and does not go very far, but more can be made in proportion. Blanch two bitter almonds and a pound to a paste three dozen sweet almonds, and also macerate them until smooth. Upon the mashed almonds pour one gill of boiling water, crush and mash again. Strain and again put the almond meal that is left in strainer into the mortar and crush, adding from time to time a little water until you have used one pint. This should be again strained, sweeten with about two spoonfuls of sugar, or to taste. You can use a little more water if it seems desirable, and this drink is delicious with just a hint of lemon or orange in it.

Tutti Fruit.—This is made of a variety of fruit juices. Almost any thing available may be used and a number of juices mixed, sweetened to taste and set upon ice. Currants and raspberries make one of the most delectable drinks. Crush the fruit and strain, add sugar and water as desired.

Rhubarb juice may be extracted by cooking, and this, added to currant juice with sugar and water to taste, makes a most refreshing drink, and is available earlier in the season in the North than some other fruit drinks.

Strawberryade—than which nothing is better—is easily made by crushing the fruit, sweetening to taste, and adding as much water as required. This can be varied by using pieplant juice as a mixture, and is not injured thereby. To extract the juice from the pieplant, cut it up, and place on back of range with a slow fire, sprinkle the pieplant well with sugar and cover closely. The juice will exude freely and may be strained off, or the entire pulp may be mixed with the crushed strawberry pulp, and both mixed with sufficient water to make the desired drink. This may be strained or served with the bits of fruit in it.

These fruit juices may be prepared and put up in cans ready for use at any time during the heated season, and a greater variety thus be on hand. A quart of fruit juice is capable of being diluted a hundred per cent., and still be good and palatable—that is, a quart of fruit juice may have a quart of water added. Some who have little fruit and plenty of water will use even more of the latter.

Cherry juice, strawberry and currant make a most delicious compound, sweetened well and diluted with water, set upon ice and served upon a hot midsummer afternoon, instead of the proverbial cup of five o'clock tea.

One woman whom I knew well used frequently to make lemonade, and this she served with homemade cookies with caraway seeds in them. It seemed about as dainty a lunch as one could wish on a sultry day. Many would prefer a wafer or something of that sort if anything were eaten, but the cooling drink is excellent and sufficient, served alone without other sort of refreshment.

Russian tea is simply a good tea made cold and served in small glasses. A thin slice of lemon is floated upon the top, and lump sugar is passed. To make cold tea, take any good tea and put upon it cold water. Let stand until the aroma of the tea is extracted, and it is ready to be served after it is strained. It is well to place it upon ice. If convenient some use chipped ice in it.

Coffeeade—This is a drink rarely used, but it is a most delicious one. Make sufficient coffee and strain into a pitcher, set upon ice till wanted. It may be served with plain cream or with sugar as desired. A teaspoonful of vanilla to a quart of coffee does not hurt it any, and some consider it an improvement. Whipped cream always looks nice, but it is not as nice for hot coffee or tea, as it does not mix with the liquid as well, and hence does not make it seem as rich and smooth as a plain unwhipped cream.

Oatmeal Drink.—Some are fond of oatmeal water. It is made by soaking oatmeal in water until the fine floury particles are dissolved. The coarse part is removed, the fine is stirred into the liquid, and makes a milky fluid, which is very good and refreshing. One may use sugar if wanted, but it is more delicate without. A little lemon juice or orange makes it very nice.

Arab Racahout.—This is a drink prized very much in the Orient, but it is served hot instead of cold. A pound of rice, a pound of arrowroot and half a pound of chocolate are ground fine and mixed. They may be kept in a canister or jar. To use it take a tablespoonful and mix with milk or water into a paste. Stir the paste into a half pint of boiling milk. Let boil a couple of minutes and serve hot. Sweeten to taste.

Cambric tea is an old fashioned dish and is really tea without tea. Perhaps it originated at the time when our forefathers used all their tea in making a big drawing in the bay, and hence had to go without for a time. Heat a pint of milk to boiling point, add one pint of boiling water, and serve in small cups. This is a drink very much liked by children, and it is many times very acceptable to older people as well. It is relished by many who cannot take clear milk, and it is very refreshing when needed.

Frappe—This is made from a combination of lemons, oranges and pineapples, and is one of the most ambrosial drinks known. The rinds are grated, say from one third of the lemons and oranges used. The juice is extracted, the pineapple is grated, and the fruit is covered with crushed sugar if loaf sugar is used. The pineapple especially should be macerated in sugar for some hours until it is thoroughly seasoned through. The lemon and orange juice will readily dissolve the sugar without letting stand long. Mix the juices when ready to serve, and add ice water as desired.

An impromptu vessel was once used to serve this beverage at a wedding. A glass that is used by grocers to cover whole cheese was put into use by being inverted. After inversion it makes quite a little ocean of frappe when filled. Young girls daintily dressed, served this to all who desired it, through the entire function.

Orangeade—This is much better if with the juice from the oranges is mixed that of one lemon to four oranges. Either lemon or orangeade is better if the fruit is sliced and covered with sugar, and the sugar is crushed into the fruit. This extracts some of the flavor from the rind, and gives that peculiarly desirable taste that lemonade made just with the juice lacks. The same taste may be gained by grating the rinds of part of the lemons or oranges. If the ade is to stand this is better, as any lemonade made with the sliced lemons will soon turn bitter from the white skin, which gives a bitter flavor to anything. In putting up lemon or lime juice for picnic parties, or for keeping for future use, it is better to add some of the grated rinds. Be sure not to get any of the white part. One may crush bananas and add to either lemon or orangeade and give an entirely distinct flavor. It would be well in using these to put through a fine sieve. The juice from canned plums is delicious and will bear some reduction with water. Currant jelly may be dissolved, and this too makes a delicious drink. Black currant jelly is also used in this way, and many invalids relish it.—New York Observer.

When my baby shuts her eyes and sings her hymns at bedtime my stale and battered soul is filled with awe. All sorts of vague memories crowd into my mind—memories of my own mother and myself—how many years ago—of the sweet helplessness of being gathered up half asleep in her arms, and undressed, and put in my cot, without being wakened; of the angels I believed in; of little children coming straight from heaven, and still being surrounded, so long as they were good, by the shadow of white wings—all the dear poetic nonsense learned, just as my baby is learning it at her mother's knee. She has not an idea of the charming things she is told, and stares wideeyed, with heavenly eyes, while her mother talks of the heaven she has so lately come from, and is relieved and comforted by the interrupting bread and milk. At two years old she does not understand angels and does understand bread and milk; at five she has vague notions about them, and prefers bread and milk; at ten both bread and milk and angels have been left in the nursery and she has already found out that they are luxuries not necessary to her everyday life.—From "Elizabeth and Her German Garden."

Summer Hygiene.

Summer is the season of health and recuperation for those who properly regulate their mode of living. For those who do not it is a season of discomfort.

Pure, healthful light food that will not stimulate heat production while it properly nourishes and strengthens the body and brain is the great essential.

It is conceded that the best of all foods for summer diet are the quickly made flour foods—hot biscuits, rolls, puddings, cakes, muffins, etc., such as are made with baking powder. A most excellent household bread is also made with baking powder instead of yeast. These, properly made, are light, sweet, fine flavored, easily digested, nutritious and wholesome. Yeast bread should be avoided wherever possible in summer, as the yeast germ is almost certain in hot weather to ferment in the stomach and cause trouble. The Royal Baking Powder foods are unfermented, and may be eaten in their most delicious state, viz., fresh and without fear of unpleasant results.

Alum baking powders should be avoided at all times. They make the food less digestible. When the system is relaxed by summer heat their danger is heightened. The flour-foods made with Royal Baking Powder are the acme of perfection for summer diet. No decomposition takes place in their dough, the nutritive qualities of the flour are preserved and digestion is aided, which is not the case with sour-yeast bread or cakes.

Household Hints.

Brooms—If brooms are wet in boiling suds once a week they will become tough, will not cut the carpet, will last much longer, and always sweep as if new.—The Delineator,

Preserve Pickles from Molding—Drop a few slices or perhaps a few gratings of horse radish on the top of pickles in each jar. This addition adds piquancy to the cucumbers and preserves their crispness.

Oilcloths should never have soap used when washing them, as the lye will destroy the colors and finish. They are greatly benefitted and last much longer if a thin coat of varnish is applied once a year.—Selected.

Real Estate for Sale at Davidson, N. C.

For quick sale and easy payments; cash or gilt-edge paper: One neat five-room dwelling, with large brick cellar; good water, stable and garden; on lot 70x270 feet deep; price $1,000.

Also two vacant lots; one 75x285 ft. deep; one 75 ft. front by 300 feet; price $350 each; fine investment for health, society and education.

Also one storehouse on lot No 12, North Tryon street, Charlotte, N. C., 24 ft. front by 140 ft. deep; very desirable.

Also celebrated Barium Springs; 18 acres land; 7-room hotel; 3-room cottage; storehouse and barn; five miles Statesville; price $5,000.

In addition can sell farms and city property more or less throughout South Carolina, all sorts and sizes, with various business opportunities, at money-making prices.

J. EDGAR POAG, Broker,
Rock Hill, S. C.

DRAKE'S PALMETTO WINE.

For Indigestion, Flatulency, Constipation and Catarrh of the Mucous Membranes. Every case is cured absolutely with one dose a day; gives immediate relief and cures to stay cured. Seventy-five cents at Drug Stores for a large bottle, usual dollar size, but a trial bottle will be sent free and prepaid to every reader of the Presbyterian Standard who needs it and writes for it. Address your letter or postal card to Drake Formula Company, Lake and Dearborn Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Atlanta & West Point RAILROAD COMPANY.

The Western Railway of Alabama.

Shortest and quickest route via Atlanta, Montgomery and New Orleans to all points in Texas, Mexico and California.

Operate Pullman's finest vestibuled sleepers. Unexcelled dining car service on all trains.

Through coaches between Washington and New Orleans.

Cafe-Observation cars on U. S. Fast Mail Trains Nos. 35 and 36, between Atlanta and Montgomery.

Rates and schedules cheerfully furnished by

B. HEYWARD, J. P. BILLUPS,
D. P. A., G. P. A.,
Atlanta, Ga. Atlanta, Ga.

R. E. LUTZ, CHAS. WICKERSHAM,
Traffic Manager, Pres. & Gen. Mgr.,
Montgomery, Ala. Atlanta, Ga.

Atlantic Coast Line.

Thoroughfare of Travel between the

NORTH and SOUTH

FLORIDA ————— CUBA

A passenger service unexcelled for luxury and comfort, equipped with the latest Pullman Dining, Sleeping and Thoroughfare Cars.

For rates, schedule, maps or any information, write to

WM. J. CRAIG,

General Passenger Agent, Wilmington, N. C.

Our Young People.

What a Little Fire Kindled.

By Hilda Richmond.

"What is it now?" inquired Mr. Drake, coming in to find his wife packing a basket with groceries and vegetables. "Your new hat that everybody says is a beauty, or the fact that housekeeping is safely over for six months?"

"Frederick! How can you tease me so?" said his wife, with a loving smile. "This is the day that I feel specially like giving thanks for. It is just six years ago that we were married."

"Sure enough! And I ought to be the one to make the thank offering, dear," he replied, stooping to kiss her. "I got the best of that bargain. I guess I'll send that check to the Orphans' Home that I've been intending to give for so long. Who is your basket for?"

"Mrs. Clay. Poor woman, her husband left her with five children to support, and she has such a hard time to make both ends meet."

"I don't see why she should. One of her boys works at Born's and dresses in the latest style, and the other is at Walker's. Between them they ought to be able to keep their mother and little sisters."

"Do you think the boys get good salaries?"

"Judging from the way they dress, they must. Really, Helen, I sometimes think promiscuous giving does more harm than good. It is all right to help charitable institutions, but individual giving promotes pauperism."

Mrs. Drake reflected about her husband's opinions long after that gentleman had forgotten the subject, and when she next felt like giving a thank offering sent some money to a struggling hospital. Her conscience hurt her a little as she saw Mrs. Clay in a shabby black dress one day, but was soothed a few minutes later by the sight of Edward Clay in a fine new suit. "If he can dress like that it is not poverty that makes his mother wear old clothes," she said to herself, "for Mrs. Clay always said she has the best boys in town. Anyway, she never knew who sent her the gifts."

"The ladies of the church are going to present Mrs. Clay with a new black dress, Mrs. Drake, and I was appointed to see what each one wants to give. Of course it is to be done so that she will never find out who sent it, but we all feel so sorry to think she has such a struggle for existence," said a visitor to Mrs. Drake a few weeks after she had sent the basket. "Really, I don't believe she has had a new outfit since her husband died."

"I will give a dollar or more if necessary, but don't you think Mrs. Clay's boys ought to be able to support her?" said Mrs. Drake. "They are both working and dress very well, so it seems they are the proper persons to help their mother since she sacrificed so long for them."

"That idea never came to my mind," said the visitor, thoughtfully, "but since you speak of it I remember the boys always do look remarkably well. Mrs. Wendell hesitated about subscribing for the dress this afternoon, and I wonder if she doesn't think like you about it."

"We were speaking of Mrs. Clay when she was here last week, and she decided to stop sending Ethel's outgrown clothes to her any longer. Maggie Clay is getting too old to wear another child's cast-off garments, because children are sensitive about such things, and Mrs. Wendell says she can sell them at good prices to the second-hand store. Ethel is so careful of her clothes always."

"Maggie Clay never knew whose clothes they were. She goes to the West School and is not in the same set at all. Even her mother never found out where they came from, for Mrs. Wendell skillfully changed them enough to deceive her. If Mrs. Clay patronizes the second-hand store she may still get them at reduced prices. I think I will suggest it to her in a round about way."

Mrs. Clay did not get the dress that month nor for many months thereafter. It is astonishing how quickly and how far a little thing may reach when once it is started. Mrs. Gregg decided, since Mrs. Wendell found it profitable to sell garments at the second-hand store, to try it herself and immediately telephoned for the man to come and look at her stock of useless clothes. The missionary box for the far West lacked a substantial contribution, but Mrs. Gregg had a crisp new bill in her purse as a result of her sale.

The lady who had been appointed to collect the money for Mrs. Clay's new dress soon returned the few contributions she had received and gave up the task. It gave her no pang to see the patient little woman in her place the next Sunday in the rusty old gown, but she did feel indignant at the Clay boys for allowing their mother to go so shabbily clothed.

"I will be late today because two of our clerks are sick," remarked Mr. Wendt to his wife as he started to his store one morning. "I am afraid poor Smith will never get well, as he grows weaker every day. Young Mandel leaves this week for the city, so we are very short of help. I will have dinner down town, so don't look for me till quite late tonight."

"Can't you get extra help?" inquired his wife.

"Plenty of it, but you know we are very particular whom we take in, as we don't like to be changing all the time. Mandel has been in the store ten years, and only goes now because his father is sick and needs him. That Clay boy applied for a place, and I think we'll take him. He's had some experience at Born's and, while he is only seventeen, makes a good appearance. His mother is a widow too and needs all the help she can get."

"Well, I hope if you take him and give him higher wages than he gets now that he'll spend a little of his money on his poor mother. She goes in the poorest old clothes while the boys look like fashion plates."

"Don't they help their mother? I don't know about taking a boy who spends all he makes on himself."

"Why, Fred, you see her every Sunday in church, and you know how rusty

Painkiller

(BERRY DAVIS')

CURES

Colic, Cramps,
Stomach Complaints.

25c. & 50c. bottles.

THE BEST OF EVERYTHING FOR THE LEAST MONEY

Whatever your clothing wants may be, we ask the privilege of showing you our stock of

CLOTHING, HATS AND MEN'S FURNISHING GOODS.

Give us a call, or if you do not live in Charlotte, we would be glad to send you goods on approval, returnable at our expense. We have been leaders in the Clothing business for years and our reputation for selling the best goods for the least money cannot be excelled.

Give us a trial on your next purchase. We guarantee satisfaction. Suits $10 to $25.

FULL DRESS, TUXEDO AND PRINCE ALBERT SUITS

Always on hand.

Long-Tate Clothing Co.

42 SOUTH TRYON STREET.

Goods sent on approval returnable at our expense.

XANTHINE!

PROF. HERTZ' GREAT GERMAN
HAIR RESTORATIVE

NOTHING LIKE IT.

NOTHING SO GOOD,

AND NEVER WILL BE.

Never fails. Testimonials of unquestionable credibility.

INSIST ON GETTING IT. Take no other. Nothing else will give you satisfaction. If your druggist has not got it, write us. Not a dye, but always restores the beautiful natural color; stops dandruff; promotes growth.

At druggists. Price, $1. Insist on getting it. If your druggist has not got it, send us $1, and we will send you a bottle. Charles F. Prentiss, Highest testimonials. Write us for Circulars. XANTHINE COMPANY, Richmond, Va.

Fruit Jar Wrenches

Have you ever seen the "Tobax" Fruit Jar Wrench? It will open the tightest fruit jar and will also put the cap on very tight.

We are offering them at 10c. each,

and you will say it is the best article in your kitchen.

Send ten cents and two stamps for postage.

WEDDINGTON HARDWARE CO

her clothes look. Mrs. Wendell used to send Ethel's old clothes to Maggie Clay, but she thought the boys might take care of their mother and the little ones. I know Mrs. Drake has stopped sending her things on that account too, though she never told me. She used to hire Joe to slip big baskets of provisions into Mrs. Clay's woodhouse after dark, but she hasn't asked him to go down there for almost two years. She always made him promise not to tell, and he didn't, except to me, for he tells me everything, so I know she doesn't do it any more."

"I might as well give the place to some one else, then, for a boy like that never sticks long," said Mr. Wendt as he left the house. "I am glad you called my attention to the facts."

"I had such a surprise this morning, Helen, and I am sure the news will astonish you too. Mrs. Clay came to my office and wanted to mortgage her little home for five hundred dollars. It is not worth very much more than that, and no loan company will take a risk like that. I don't see why they need money so badly, for you send them things constantly, and the rest of the church people help them. I intended telling her what I thought about the boys spending all their money on themselves, but some men came in, and she slipped out. She will be back this afternoon and I can have a chance to advise her then."

"But I never send her things any more, and the church people have stopped helping her too. You told me that it was foolish to give like that, and it encouraged pauperism, Fred. Mrs. Wendell doesn't send Ethel's clothes to Maggie Clay any more because I told her what you said, and Mr. Wendt wouldn't take Charley Clay because he dresses so much better than he can afford."

"I don't blame him. I shall tell Mrs. Clay this afternoon just what people are saying," said Mr. Drake, "and perhaps in the future she will manage better. It seems to be the easiest thing in the world for poor folks to begin borrowing money on their homes, and nine times out of ten they lose them."

When meek little Mrs. Clay came into his office that afternoon Mr. Drake hesitated about telling her the facts he had meant to set before her. Something in the forlorn face led him to place the best leather chair for her as if she were some rich and influential client and encouraged her to speak freely of her troubles.

"It just seems everything is against poor people," said Mrs. Clay, wearily. "The boys both have places in clothing stores where the rules require that they must be well dressed, and it takes most every cent they earn to buy new suits. They know if they wear shabby things they will lose their places, but it seems they can't find jobs where old clothes are worn except in doing work that requires strong men. Charley thought Mr. Wendt would give him a place in his store in some department where he wouldn't have to dress so well, but some other boy got it. You see, in a clothing store it hurts the business to wear shabby suits."

Mr. Drake suddenly saw several things in a new light, but he allowed his visitor to finish. "People used to be so kind to us, too, and help us in so many ways. Many's the time I've found baskets of groceries in my summer kitchen, and often there would be a bill in an envelope in the bottom. I never found out who put them there, nor who sent the clothes I used to get either, but I think the folks that sent them must have moved to another city. It's nearly two years since they quit coming. Since then with sickness and schoolbooks and clothes for the little girls we've run behind, and I don't know what to do if we can't borrow some money on the house. I hate to give a mortgage, but that's the only way I see out of it till the boys get to making more wages."

"I'll tell you what to do," said Mr. Drake, hunting around among his papers to hide his tears. "Don't you worry a bit. I can arrange this business without a mortgage, I'm sure, but it will take a little time. Take this bill for the present and pay off your most pressing debts. You should have come to me long ago, and perhaps I might have helped you."

Mrs. Clay went home with a heart much lighter than Mr. Drake's, but at the close of a very busy afternoon his spirits rose also. "The next time I give you advice on the subject of charity let me know," he said to his wife that evening. "I am going to be very careful what I say in the future, for one never can tell how much influence he has till he tries to undo wrong."

"What in the world are you talking about, Fred?" asked Mrs. Drake, anxiously.

"About advising you not to send baskets to Mrs. Clay. I've been out all afternoon since the poor woman left my office trying to find places for the two boys where they won't be required to spend every cent they make on new clothes. I think I've persuaded Fred Wendt to take one of them, though he said his wife told him that my wife said that—"

"That her husband said it encouraged pauperism to give the way she did," interrupted Mrs. Drake.

"I'll take all the blame," said Mr. Drake. "The next time you have anything to be thankful for send your gift wherever intuition tells you to. That poor widow has had endless trouble and worry through my unchristian speech that day so long ago."

"And will your company loan her the money to pay her debts?" inquired Mrs. Drake.

"I shall not ask them to. Paying off her debts will be my thank offering that God has permitted me to undo a little of the harm my lack of knowledge caused."—New York Advocate.

Be such a man, live such a life, that if every man were such as you and every life a life like yours, this earth would be a paradise.—Phillips Brooks.

Secret devotion is the very essence, evidence, and barometer, of vital and experimental religion.—Spurgeon.

Estab. '32 SCALES of every description. Satisfaction Guaranteed. Write for prices. JESSE MARDEN 109 S. Charles St., BALTIMORE, MD.

The Eyes of School Children

Many parents allow their children to go through school half equipped for the work.

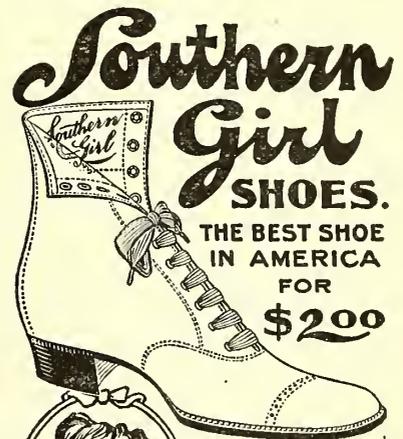

Defective eyes do not show in children as plainly as in grown people. Yet defects are present then if ever. They probably never know what it is to have perfect sight; thus they know no better, since there is no soreness and inflammation.

Don't wait for such signs.

Examination free

Dr. J. H. Spilman,

22 West Trade Street,
Blair's Drug Store, Charlotte.

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE
IF YOUR DEALER DOES NOT CARRY THEM, A POSTAL CARD TO US WILL TELL YOU WHERE YOU CAN GET THEM.

CRADDOCK-TERRY CO.
LEADING
SHOE MANUFACTURERS
OF THE SOUTH.
LYNCHBURG — VA.

ULCERINA.

The only cure for Chronic Ulcers on the market. The most reliable remedy known for Ring-Worms, Old Sores, Wounds of all kinds and chronic skin diseases. For sale by all druggists. Price 25 cents.

Manufactured by

R. G. ROZIER, M. D.,
LUMBERTON, N. C.

An Entertaining Evening.

There is usually a period in every young man's life when his idea of having a good time means being away from home. He forgets what the father of the young man in this story from the New York Times took effective means to make his son remember. The young man had to work till six o'clock, and had got into the habit of staying down-town to dinner and spending his evenings at the theatre or in calling on friends. One afternoon his father came to him and asked him if he had any engagement for the evening. The young man had not.

"Well, I'd like to have you go somewhere with me."

The young man himself tells what happened:

"All right," I said. "Where shall I meet you?"

"He suggested the Columbia Hotel at half past seven; and I was there, prepared for the theatre and a lecture on late hours. He had combined the two on several previous occasions. But when he appeared, he said he wanted me to call with him on a lady. 'One I knew quite well when I was a young man,' he explained.

"We went out and started straight for home.

"She is staying at our house," he said.

"I thought it strange that he should have made the appointment for the Columbia under those circumstances, but I said nothing.

"Well, we went in, and I was introduced with all due formality to my mother and my sister.

"The situation struck me as funny, and I started to laugh, but the laugh died away. None of the three even smiled. My mother and my sister shook hands with me, and my mother said she remembered me as a boy, but hadn't seen much of me lately. Then she invited me to be seated.

"It wasn't a bit funny then, although I can laugh over it now. I sat down, and she told me one or two anecdotes of my boyhood, at which we all laughed a little. Then we four played games for a while. When I finally retired I was invited to call again. I went upstairs feeling pretty small and doing a good deal of thinking."

"And then?" asked his companion.

"Then I made up my mind that my mother was an entertaining woman and my sister a bright girl.

"I'm going to call again. I enjoy their company and intend to cultivate their acquaintance."—The Presbyterian.

An Old-Time Thimble Party.

Quite an appropriate entertainment for the afternoon of Washington's Birthday is an old-time thimble party. The following was the invitation sent out recently for such a party:

"Ye matron, Mistress Carter, sends her greetings unto you,
And begs your presence at her home in Collins Avenue,
Where other friends will congregate in friendship true and hearty,
And join her in ye pleasures of ye old-time thimble party.

A Perfect Laxative is one which is palatable, pleasant to take and can be relied upon to act gently, but thoroughly; cleansing the entire system of all impurities. Such a remedy is Mozley's Lemon Elixir. It is a pleasant lemon tonic, acceptable to the most delicate stomach, and a thoroughly effective laxative, acting upon the bowels, liver, and kidneys, without the slightest unpleasantness.

MOZLEY'S LEMON HOT DROPS are without an equal for coughs, colds, sore throat and bronchitis.
Sold by all druggists.

Mozley's
Lemon
Elixir.

Raleigh Marble Works.

COOPER BROS., Props.

RALEIGH, N. C.

MONUMENTS,

Tablets, Headstones, Iron Fences.

We Pay the Freight.

Please mention Standard.

Write for our
New Catalogue

Mid Summer Cut Price Sale

of

Furniture, Carpets,
Pianos and Organs,

Wonderful Bargains can be had at this Store during this Cut Price Sale.

Everything Without Reserve is reduced in Price to the Lowest Price to sell the Goods and make room for the Changes now going on in our store. Come and See Us in Person, but if you can't come, you will get some reduction if you order by mail. Don't fail to grasp this opportunity to save money.

Parker-Gardner Company.

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA.

Southern

States

Trust

Company

Capital,

$200,000.

GEORGE STEPHENS, President.

T. S. FRANKLIN, V.-President.

W. H. WOOD, Treasurer.

A Co-worker

This is what your money becomes when you put it on deposit in our

Savings Department.

We pay four per cent. interest and compound it quarterly.

'Twill favor her if you'll recite ye dear old-fashioned rhymes,
Or sing ye song, or tell ye tale of long-forgotten times.
Perchance some bit of old-time garb upon your form will be;
But, surely, bring your sewing and prepare to stay to tea."

For the occasion every movable piece of modern furniture was replaced by an antique, and the hostess received her guests at the foot of the stairway, where a background of flowers had been arranged. The day light had been excluded from the parlors, and the light from a log fire in the grate mingled with the rays from numerous candles in old crystal and pewter candle sticks.

The guests were nearly all gowned in the style of Colonial days with the exception of a few who were in up-to-date attire with only a touch of the antique —as a bit of old lace, a high-backed comb, or some sort of jeweled heirloom.
All had complied with the request of the hostess: thimbles were uniformly in evidence and the work upon patchwork, darning and embroidery went merrily on.

When tea was announced the guests found their places at the table marked by silver thimbles, which were inscribed with their names and the date. All the pieces of antique silver and crockery available had been pressed into service.
Daffodils were used for the floral decorations in the dining-room, and the menu consisted wholly of the dainties which were favorites with our grandparents.

The party was entertained by the telling of quaint old tales and the singing of old-time songs. When the guests were about to depart they all joined very heartily in singing "Auld Lang Syne."
—Home Journal.

A Cat and Doggerel.

"O, see!" he wrote, "The cat-kins long
Are danglind from the trees;
The cat-nip sprouts, and in the swamp,
The cat-tails greet the breeze.

"The dog-wood blooms, the dog-bane starts;

The dog-rose is well met;

And in the woods, one now may see
The dog-toothed violet.

"The cat-bird calls, the cat-tle range
Upon the Cat-skills high;

The cat-amount doth watch for prey
In yon cat-alpa nigh.

"The dog-star shines once more in heav-
n—

Come, let us all be merry!

'Tis time to cease dog-matic themes,
And seek the ripe dog-berry.

"The cat-erpillar feeds upon Cat-awba vines beside

The roaring cat-aract that falls
Into the river wide."

'Twas after dog-days, that this bard
His dog-eared manuscript
Put by forever. Dog-gedly,
He crept into his crypt.

This cat-acomb cat-astrophe
Was caused by grim cat-arrah,
And cat-alepsy stopped the thoughts
Not cat-alogued thus far.

—Blanche Elizabeth Wade, in Frank Lesile's Popular Monthly.

SOUTHERN DENTAL COLLEGE, ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

If you are interested in obtaining a dental education, write for free catalogue of full instruction.

ADDRESS DR. S. W. FOSTER, DEAN, 100 NORTH BUTLER STREET, ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

NOTABLE NEW BOOKS.

A limited number of advanced subscriptions will be accepted at Special Prices for following new books to be issued on or before
September 1, 1903.

Life and Letters of ROBERT LEWIS DABNEY, D. D. LL. D. By THOMAS CAREY JOHNSON, D. D. LL. D.

Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity Union Theological Seminary, Richmond Va.
A notably interesting book about one of the most remarkable men the South has produced. Interesting alike to historical students of social, political, and industrial conditions of the South, to Southern Veteran and Statesmen, to students of Theology and Philosophy, and to those who wish to be fully informed about the history and development of the Southern Presbyterian Church.
600 Pages. Cloth Binding, Regular Price $2.50 Net (add 18c for Postage.) To Advance Subscribers $2.00 Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

"APOLOGETICS,"

Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D., LL.D., Prof. of Systematic Theology Louisville Seminary.
Introduction by B. B. WARFIELD, D. D., LL. D., of Princeton Theological Seminary.
A clear, systematic statement of the great fundamental truths of the Christian faith.
Adopted as a text book in some of the best Seminaries of the country.
450 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $2.50 Net; Sheep, $3.00 Net [add 18c. Postage]. To advance subscribers, cloth $2.00; sheep, $2.50 postpaid. Limit 500 copies.

PIONEERING IN AFRICA.

By Rev SAMUEL PHILLIPS VERNER, A. B.,
for six years a Missionary of the Southern Presbyterian Church on the Congo.
This book is out of the usual order, and is at once scientific, historical, critical and religious.
A notable contribution to the literature about a great continent which is coming more into view every year. Illustrated with original photographs and maps not hitherto published.
470 Pages. Cl. th. Regular Price $2.00 Net [add 15c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers
$1.75 Net Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

Christianity and Modern Evolution.

By Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D.
The remarkably original and forcible course of lectures delivered in Louisville, Ky., before very large and highly edified audiences have been revised, and are now presented in an attractive form for the benefit of a larger public.
250 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $1.25 Net [add 10c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers
$1.00 net Postpaid. Limit 300 Copies.

A complete list of our publications sent on request. Any book in print furnished on short notice. Write us about your wants.

PRESBYTERIAN COMMITTEE OF PUBLICATION, Richmond, Va.

What Protection Means.

On March 6, 1873, the Hon. Armistead Burwell, of Charlotte, N. C., who is well known throughout the State of North Carolina, was insured with the Aetna Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, Conn., under Renewable Term Policy No. 95,253 for $4,000. Annual Premium $64.76 When the first term of ten years expired in 1883 the Company renewed the policy for the next ten years at the

ORIGINAL RATE, WITHOUT A NEW EXAMINATION.

and have renewed this policy respectively in 1893 and 1903 without increase of rate of premium and without re-examination. If Mr. Burwell lives till 1913 he will have been insured for forty years at an annual cost of $16.19 per $1,000.

This Renewable Term Insurance was originally introduced by the Aetna. The "OLD AETNA" LEADS; the other companies follow.

OVER ONE MILLION DOLLARS have been paid out in death claims in this State during the last ten years.

For rates, etc., apply to

J. D. BOUSHALL, Mgr,
RALEIGH, N. C.

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE.

FOR THE CURE OF

LIQUOR, OPIUM, COCAINE AND OTHER DRUG ADDICTIONS,
NERVE EXHAUSTION AND TOBACCO HABIT.

GREENSBORO, N. C.

This is the only Keeley Institute in North Carolina, and owing to its beautiful and healthy location, its elegant buildings and attractive environments, its well supplied table and skillful management it presents to the unfortunate a perfect asylum for rest and complete restoration.

If you have a friend afflicted with any of the above addictions, write for their Illustrated Hand-Book, entitled "THE NEW MAN." Address,

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE,
Greensboro, N. C.

Our Little Folks.

Among the Hop Vines.

By Mary E. Q. Brnsh.

The sun shone in at the sitting-room window and laid its brightest rays upon the row of books in the rack above Cara Millard's desk. From where the girl sat, in the large, old-fashioned rocking-chair, she could read the title of every volume.

Her glance rested longest and most lovingly on the Latin reader and the well-worn geometry. Then she turned her head with a little gesture of impatience, exclaiming to herself, "Yon dear old friends! I daren't even look at you, for I want to reach out and grasp yon, and fussy old Doctor March says that I must not do a bit of studying for three months. Three months! just think—a whole quarter of a year! It will put me back so much! Dear me! what a hard time auntie and I have had this summer; what with my long sickness, her care of me, the expense and everything!"

Cara leaned her head wearily against the cushioned back of the chair, closing her eyes to keep back the tears that would persist in rolling down her pale cheeks.

Suddenly, in jarring contrast to her sadness of spirit, there came from without the sound of merry shouts, bursts of laughter mingled with stray snatches of gay songs.

Cara opened her eyes and looked out of the window.

A large hay-wagon, drawn by two sturdy horses and filled with merry young people, was moving rapidly down the road.

"Hop-pickers bound for the Gregory Farm," she said with languid interest.

Then as the green, low-hanging boughs of the tree-shaded road shut the vehicle from her sight, the girl sprang suddenly from her chair, and, with a new light in her eyes, a fresh glow on her cheeks, she hurried out into the kitchen, calling eagerly, "Aunt Myra! O Aunt Myra!"

Aunt Myra, a sweet-faced old lady in a gown of Quaker gray and with a spotless white kerchief folded across her breast, was briskly beating away at a bowlful of foaming, yellow batter.

"I thought I'd make some Yorkshire dumplings, to go with the veal stew, Cara. You used to like them, dearie, and I do hope they'll tempt your appetite now. Since your sickness it hasn't been very good, it seems to me."

"The doctor says that I must get outdoors more, auntie. And do you know what I've made up my mind to do? It's to go hop-picking!"

The spoon fell clattering from Aunt Myra's hands, slid down the side of the bowl and disappeared into the batter, while the old lady looked up with surprise and disapproval on her face.

"Hop-picking!" she exclaimed. "Cara! what are you thinking about?"

"About two things of vast importance, my little aunt!" came the prompt reply. "The first is the doctor's bill, and the second is how to get a speedy restoration of my health and strength."

"But picking hops! I don't mean to look down on honest work of any sort, my dear—but well, you know it seems to be the rougher class of persons who go out to do that work; people with whom you and I are not exactly in the habit of associating, my dear"—and half unconsciously, Aunt Myra's head, with its soft, snowy puffs of hair, was held a trifle more proudly.

"Rough and noisy the hop-pickers may be, but I know that Farmer Gregory, at any rate, is careful to employ no one who is not respectable. As for associating with them, I need not do that, intimately, if I don't choose. And yet"—here the doctor deepened in Cara's cheeks and her voice had a thrill of earnest feeling in it—"and yet you know, Aunt Myra, I profess to be a Christian; surely the 'armor of God' will protect me wherever I go and who knows but what I may be allowed to work for him?"

"I know that I can trust you anywhere, Cara. I was only thinking about what people might say, were you, who are preparing to become a teacher, to go out as a common hop-picker!"

"I don't intend to become a common hop-picker, Auntie, but an uncommon one! As for folks talking, why, let them! They'd do it anyway, and with lots more reason, if we didn't pay our bills! But I mean that we shall pay them. I know that I can earn as much as seventy-five cents a day—anywhere from that up to a dollar and a quarter."

"Do you think you can stand the hard work, dearie?" anxiously. "I really don't feel like giving my consent until I hear what the doctor says."

When bluff Dr. March was told of the plan he gave it his hearty approval.

"Of course; just the thing, if she doesn't allow herself to get too tired! Being out in the fresh air and sunshine 'll help her more than any pills or powders I can give her; then, too, the pollen of the hops is a tonic in itself. But be careful, young lady, not to get your feet damp, and be sure to have a wrap of some sort in case a shower comes on or it's chilly in the early morning and late evenings."

The sun was just peering over the notch in Panther Mountain when Cara joined the long line of pickers on their way to the hop yard.

She was conscious of many curious glances cast in her direction, and indeed, the night before had overheard sundry whispers, the gist of which was a wonder why "she" was "hop-pickin'!"

Mag Hanson, a tall, gypsyish-looking girl with flashing black eyes and cheeks like cherries, had tossed her dark curls, saying scornfully:

"Well, I don't know as we want any 'kill-joys' in our crowd! We've always had a jolly free-and-easy time here at Gregory's, and I for my part shan't thaw out much to fine stuck-up misses! Cara Millard had better stay at her books—somebody said she was intendin' to be a teacher—and keep out of our way."

"That's so," grumbled Lois Hicks. "I'm sorry she's here! I dare say she'll sneer at our grammar, be shocked at our slang and spoil all our fun! This fortnight's hop-pickin' is the only outin' we girls get in the whole year; the rest

The Worth Co.

SUCCESSORS TO

WORTH & WORTH,

Wholesale Grocers

and Commission Merchants

HANDLE—
COTTON AND NAVAL STORES.

SELL—
GENERAL GROCERIES,
FARM SUPPLIES,
LIME, CEMENT, NAILS,
HAY AND GRAIN.

Best Terms and Lowest Prices.

WILMINGTON N. C.

Carolina and Northwestern Railway.

TIME CARD.

BLOWING ROCK ROUTE.

Effective November 24th, 1901

NORTHBOUND	PASSENGER	MIXED
Chester, Leave	8 25 am	8 50 am
Yorkville, "	7 30 am	10 48 am
Gastonia, "	9 05 am	1 20 pm
Lincolnton, "	10 09 am	2 55 pm
Newton, "	10 54 pm	4 43 pm
Hickory, "	11 16 pm	5 50 pm
Cliffs, "	11 50 pm	6 35 pm
Lenoir, Arrive	12 35 pm	8 00 pm
SOUTHBOUND	PASSENGER	MIXED
Lenoir, Leave	2 10 pm	5 30 pm
Cliffs, "	2 54 pm	7 20 pm
Hickory, "	3 12 pm	8 10 pm
Newton, "	3 37 pm	8 45 am
Lincolnton, "	4 22 pm	10 09 am
Gastonia, "	5 27 pm	1 20 pm
Yorkville, "	6 32 pm	3 18 pm
Chester, Arrive	7 45 pm	5 20 pm

Aberdeen & Ashboro Railway Co.

CONNECTIONS FOR JACKSON SPRINGS.

Lv Aberdeen 7:30 A M	Ar Jackson Spgs. 8:10 A M
" " " 9:40 " "	" " " 10:30 " "
" " " 6:40 P M	" " " 7:30 P M
High Point 2 05 P M	" " " 5:15 P M

H. A. PAGE,
Aberdeen, N. C.

ROANOKE COLLEGE,

SALEM, VA.

51st year begins Sept. 23. Courses for Degrees, with Electives; high standard. Also Commercial and Preparatory Courses. German, French. Library, 22,000 volumes; working laboratory; good morals and discipline; six Churches; no bar-rooms. Healthful mountain location. Very moderate expenses. Special terms to clergymen's sons and candidates for ministry. Catalogue free. Address Prof. L. McREYNOLDS, Secretary.

ORGANIZED 1832.

THE

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $800,000.

Agencies in every Town and County.

WM. H. PALMER W. H. MCCARTHY,
PRESIDENT. SECY

F. K. ELLINGTON, GENERAL AGENT.
RALPH, N. C.

E. NYE HUTCHISON, Agent
THOS. H. HAUGHTON, "
Charlotte, N. C.

Wear Red Seal Shoes

Catalog for Postal

of the time is spent in slavin' in somebody's kitchen or at the factory."

Thus it came about that when Cara entered the hopyard that morning she found herself treated with a coldness that surprised and pained her. Accustomed to gentle courtesy and good breeding, the slights and sneers with which her first friendly overtures were received made her indignant.

"Perhaps this is just the discipline I need. Circumstances have placed me here in order that I may gain not only strength of body but also strength of Christian character. At any rate, here I am, and here I mean to stay; if they are rude to me, I must not yield to the temptation to be rude to them."

This was a cheery, wholesome, resolution, and Cara did her best to carry it out. No matter what dark frowns lowered on the faces of those around her, her own was always full of sunshine; sneers and slights she did not seem to notice, and somehow the sourness of every tart speech seemed to be sweetened by her kind rejoinder. She attended faithfully to her own business, was ever ready to lend a helping hand, and never failed to have a manner which, though unobtrusive, could not help winning respect because of its gentle breeding. "She's a lady and no mistake," acknowledged one after another of the rough but not really unkind girls. "She's a lady and there's no put-on polish!"

And Lollie Lee, one of the quieter girls, added in a low tone, "A lady—yes! I rather guess she's more than a lady—she's a real Christian, I do believe!"

Perhaps it was one thing in particular that had influenced Lollie to come to this decision.

On a certain afternoon there had been an unusual hilarity indulged in by the hop-pickers. Rough jokes had been interchanged; boisterous laughter filled the air; then had come the singing of silly comic songs, several sentimental ones, and others not only commonplace, but verging toward coarseness itself.

Cara standing there busily at work felt her face flush, her whole being in revolt.

Then a thought came to her, half frightening her, half arousing her to a strenuous Christian endeavor.

"Can I do it? Dare I do it? I will do it!" she said to herself.

Then, just as the applause following a "coon-song" sung in a rollicking way and with wild abandon, ceased, those standing around the huge hop boxes scattered through the yard listened breathlessly as a voice as clear as the lark's, sweet, and strong, soared upward, bearing the words of Newman's hymn, "Lead, Kindly Light."

The pale green hops fell with soft, silken rustle from the trailing vines laid across the large boxes, eyes suddenly dimmed and wistful, looked through the leafy vistas down to where the waters of Cooper's famous "Glimmerglass" sparkled in the sunlight; fingers went on mechanically with their tasks, but all voices were hushed save the bird-like one, singing steadily, unfalteringly, growing ever stronger and more clear as courage and hope entered into the heart of the singer.

"Please sing more!" Lollie pleaded softly, as Cara's voice ceased. "Yes—more! more!" was the cry.

So one grand hymn followed after another; some were new to the listeners, while others were so familiar that involuntarily voices began to hum the melody and join heartily in the chorus.

And from that time forth Cara found herself in more friendly relations with her companions of the hop-field, and though no one openly renounced careless speech and uncouth manner, still, unconsciously a subtle influence began to pervade, subduing wayward tongues, refining coarseness, smoothing roughness of words and actions. Only Mag Hanson remained obdurate. She seemed to glory in the rudest of jokes and the shrillest of laughter, and never lost an opportunity to sneer at Cara.

"She needn't think she can twist me around her finger, nor wheedle me into a milksop with that sweet voice of hers," Mag exclaimed. "I came here to have a gay, good time and to do as I please!"

There seemed to be but one soft spot in the girl's hard heart. That was her love for her little sister Dollie. The two were alone in the world, and Dollie was Mag's idol. For Dollie's sake she worked early and late all the year through.

One August morning toward the latter part of the fortnight Cara stood busily at work by the side of the huge box divided into four compartments of which each would hold ten bushels of hops. In her own the soft, green billows were rising fast. The yard-tender, a big, burly, good-natured man, had just laid a long, trailing vine, heavy with pungent-smelling clusters, across the box. "You're the neatest picker here, Miss Millard!" he remarked approvingly. "You drop less leaves and stems into your box than anybody I know. I guess you're about the fastest picker, too."

Mag Hanson, working near, overheard the words of praise, and her face darkened.

For the three past seasons she had been proud to be called "the fastest picker at Gregory's."

"Humph! Cara Millard the boss picker now? Well, I guess she won't be; not if I know it!" she exclaimed to herself.

Her large, red hands began to work in feverish haste.

"I'll beat her today, see if I don't!" she whispered to Lois Hicks.

Mag was so absorbed in this imbitious desire that she forgot to pay much attention to Dollie.

Suddenly there was a startled exclamation from one of the hop-pickers, and a shrill childish scream.

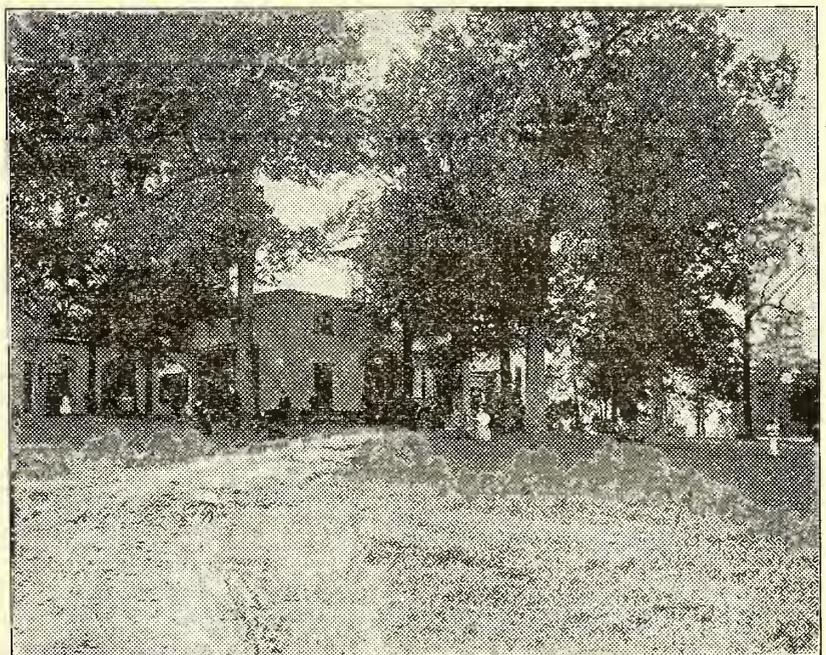

Everybody looked up, and the sight that met the gaze of the little band of

The Best Traveling Companion

is Hicks' Capudine. Prevents and cures headache, sea-sickness, colds, grip, etc. Take a bottle with you when you start.

AT ALL DRUGGISTS, 10c., 25c., 50c.

THE KEELEY CURE

Do you know what it does?

It relieves a person of all desire for strong drink or drugs, restores his nervous system to its normal condition, and reinstates a man to his home and business. For full particulars, address

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE, Greensboro, N. C.

Correspondence confidential.

toilers was enough to blanch the face and to cause the heart to leap into the throat.

For there, coming from the edge of the field, where a great pile of hop-poles were stacked up like an Indian wigwam, came little Dollie, her yellow curls flying, her face filled with terror, and close behind her, with head held low, eyes bloodshot, with white froth staining his parted lips, there ran a dog, a small, miserable cur.

"He's mad—it's a mad dog! O Dollie! Save Dollie!" shrieked Mag. She sprang forward, but her trembling limbs were not strong enough to carry her speedily. Some one else darted past her. It was Cara Millard.

Her face was white, yet luminous with great purpose. She held her large golf cape extended in both hands, and with one quick, dexterous movement she flung this over the dog's head and body. Regardless of her own peril—for the enraged animal was snapping and snarling—she wrapped the garment around him, blinding him and entangling him in its folds until the hop-yard tender, breathless from running, came hurrying forward and knocked the animal senseless with a piece of broken hop-pole.

Mag Hanson, sobbing wildly and uttering broken exclamations, caught little Dollie in her arms, hugged and kissed the child; then let her down and turned to Cara.

"You have saved her—saved my little Dollie. She's all I've got in the world, Miss Millard. You've saved her at the risk of your life—and—and—I've been so unkind to you—so mean and angry!"

And the light on Cara's pale face was beautiful to see as she reached out her arms lovingly to the contrite girl, saying tenderly. "It's all right now, Maggie; let us be true friends, dear!"—The Christian Work and Evangelist.

The Home-Made Ball.

Two grown up boys of sixty were standing in front of a window in which were displayed all sorts of games and sporting goods. There were several boxes full of baseballs, which ranged in price from ten cents to a dollar and a half.

"Our young fellows have too much of their fun ready for them," said one. "Look at those baseballs which my young gentlemen of ten or fifteen, with his allowance of several thousand dollars a week"—the other grinned,—more or less, buys by the dozen throws around and loses. I doubt if he has so good a time as I did. Ever make a baseball?"

"Hundreds of 'em. Hundreds of 'em. Do you remember how we used to watch for old rubber boots, so we could use the heels?"

"Yes, indeed! Real rubber they were then, too. Made a fine core. If you didn't start with a good core the other fellow's ball would bounce higher. A fellow was pretty poor stuff that couldn't bounce his ball over the shed."

"And mother used to give us the yarn. That never seemed extravagant to her, although maybe she objected if we spent a nickel for candy."

"I used to get enough yarn to make a ball from my old aunt Emma, as pay for holding five skeins."

Fall, 1903, Styles STETSON HATS.

We announce to the great army of men who come here for their headwear that our hat department now contains the new shapes as designed and made by Stetson, the world's greatest hat manufacturer. Stetson's hats are not only noted for style and beauty, but the wear—the long wear that one gets—is a feature of the Stetson that has made it the foremost hat for the price in America.

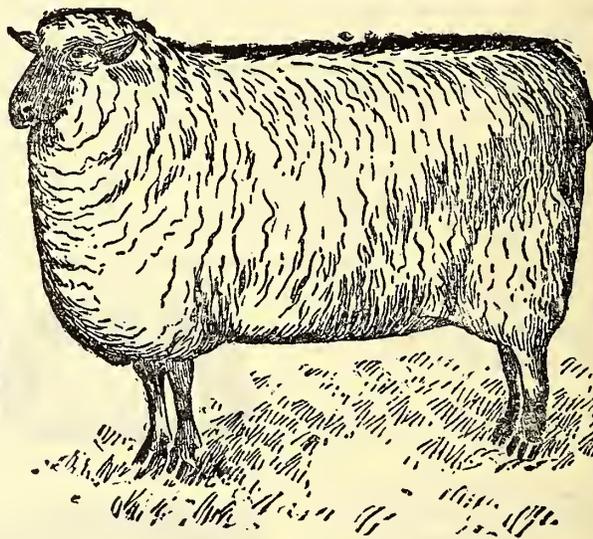

Also the "Miller" hat for the new season is ready for your inspection. With these two famous hats, and other lines, we are now ready to begin with much activity our campaign of hat-selling for fall service.

Ed. W. Mellon Co.

WOOL

Ship Direct to the Manufacturer and Save Dealers' Profits.

They pay freight on the wool and guarantee satisfaction.

In exchange for goods they pay 25 cents per pound for unwashed and 35 cents per pound for washed wool.

If you have wool to sell for cash, exchange for goods, or to be manufactured, ship it to CHATHAM MFG. CO., ELKIN, N. C., and you will not regret it.

The Woman's College, Of Richmond, Va. Was Established in 1854.

Located in the beautiful, historic, cultured city of the South, the College offers unsurpassed advantages in Letters, Science, Music, Art, and Elocution. Educational advantages growing out of the location of this school in a great city, a centre of culture, could not be duplicated on an endowment of less than a million dollars. A large faculty of specialists, trained in the best schools and conservatories of this country and Europe.

The table is supplied with the best the markets of Richmond afford. Rates lower than those of any institution of like grade in the South. The health record of the college is indeed remarkable. Prof. John Hart, after a long experience as teacher in several places in Virginia, wrote Dr. Nelson the following testimonial:

"You ask my opinion of the healthfulness of Richmond. I have taught classes of young ladies in Charlottesville, Staunton and Richmond. The health of my family and students was decidedly best in Richmond.—John Hart."

"Students of the Woman's College from Presbyterian families attend my church and Sunday-school, and are under my pastoral care.—Russell Cecil, D. D., Pastor Second Presbyterian Church."

Send for catalogue. Address

JAMES NELSON, M. A., D. D., President.

Brown's University School, Charlotte, N. C.

Best advantages for boys whose parents can afford it. Five boarders, as members of family. Combined advantages of home life and city culture. Write for particulars.

W. G. BROWN (U. of Va.) Prin.

"Did you put hard twine on the outside before you put on the cover?"
 "Yes, fine, hard twine or small fish-line. That was a little more expensive, but—well I made great balls!"
 "So did I. My brother taught me to put the cover from old boot tops, quarters, you know—pieces shaped like pieces of orange peel."
 "Yes, I've made 'em that way, too; but sometimes we cut the leather in two dumb-bell shaped pieces, like those balls in the window there. Then we sewed them with waxed thread."
 "Say, I'm going to teach that boy of mine to make a baseball. There are some things absolutely necessary to a liberal education. Good-bye!"
 "Good-bye! I suppose I shall see you at the directors' meeting at four?"—Church Register.

"That Eternal Morning"

Suddenly the gladsome light leaped over hill and valley, casting amber, blue and purple, and a tint of rich red rose, according to the scene they lit on, and the curtain flung around, yet all alike dispelling fear and the cloven hoof of darkness, all on the wings of hope advancing, and proclaiming "God is here." Then life and joy sprang reassured from every crouching hollow; every flower, and bud, and bird had a fluttering sense of them; and all the flashing of God's gaze merged into soft beneficence.

So perhaps shall break upon us that eternal morning when crag and chasm shall be no more, neither hill and valley, nor great untintaged ocean; when glory shall not scare happiness, neither happiness envy glory; but all things shall arise and shine in the light of a Father's countenance, because itself has risen.—R. D. Blackmore, in Lorna Doone.

Tactful

"Keep off the grass" is a form of command that arouses antagonism in some dispositions. "Please keep off the grass" is a shade more conciliatory, but the following sign, on a college lawn in Hanover, N. H., combines delicious humor and profound philosophy:
 "Every one who likes fair play will keep in the walk, and give the grass a chance."—The Lutheran.

To wear a cheerful face when the heart is aching is not deceit. When a good housekeeper cleans the front steps and porch before she sets the house to rights, she does not mean to deceive passers-by; she merely shows some pride in her house, and some consideration for her neighbors. We conquer our heart-aches more quickly when we begin by considering the friends who are near us.—Sunday School Times.

"As I have loved you," means love that is sweet and gentle to all men, who have many rudenesses and meannesses, who are selfish and faulty, who have sharp corners and vexing ways.—Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D.

Friendship cannot be permanent unless it becomes spiritual. There must be fellowship in the deepest things of the soul, community in the highest thoughts, sympathy with the best endeavors.—Friendship, Hugh Black.

"The Old Reliable"

E. M. ANDREWS.

Headquarters Greensboro, N. C.

Three large stores in one. We are now well prepared to furnish your home at a great saving to you. Our profit saved in the buying (five stores in all). Try a

Royal Felt Mattress.

They are the best. If desired, a month's trial free will be given. Feathers taken in exchange.

Make your wants known by mail and our representative will call on you. Photographs and prices sent on application.

E. M. ANDREWS, 315, 317, 319 South Elm Street.

Pianos, Organs, Carpets, Matting.

Statement

Union Surety and Guaranty Company, Of Philadelphia, Pa.

Condition December 31st, 1902, as shown by Statement Filed.

Capital Stock authorized $250,000 00; Subscribed $250,000 00; Paid in cash.....	$ 250,000 00
Amount net Ledger Assets December 31st of previous year.....	335,608 75
Income—From Policy-holders, $140,833 24; Miscellaneous, $19,706 18; Total.....	160,539 42
Disbursements—To Policy-holders, $35,594 28; Miscellaneous, $103,234 17; Total.....	138,828 45

BUSINESS IN FORCE AT END OF YEAR.

Fidelity, $6,234,076 75; Surety, $13,879,097 77;.....	20,113,174 52
---	---------------

BUSINESS WRITTEN DURING YEAR.

Fidelity $10,478,975 00, Surety, $16,493,948 01,.....	26,972,923 01
---	---------------

Assets

Value of Real Estate (less amount of encumbrances).....	73 516 20
Value of Stocks and Bonds (United States, State, etc., owned).....	1,715 00
Loans on Real Estate (first lien on fee-simple).....	154,516 41
Loans on Stocks, Bonds and other security.....	33,584 38
Interest and Rents due and accrued.....	9,453 05
Cash in Home Office and deposited in Banks.....	33,273 33
Premiums unpaid.....	19,310 62
All other assets detailed in statement.....	256,360 57

Total.....	$ 581,879 56
Less Assets, not admitted.....	15,182 76
Total admitted assets.....	566,646 80

Liabilities

Unearned premiums.....	$ 66,205 71
Unpaid policy claims.....	8,531 13
Ledger liabilities.....	195,596 17
All other liabilities as detailed in statement.....	1 828 87
Total Liabilities as to policy-holders.....	$272,161 88
Capital stock paid up.....	250,000 00
Surplus beyond all liabilities.....	44,384 92
Total liabilities.....	566,646 80

Business in North Carolina in 1902

FIDELITY.—Risks written, $287,000 00. Premiums received, $886 00. Amount at risk at end of year, $273,950 00.
 SURETY—Risks written, $214 587 49. Premiums received, $1,781 19. Amount at risk at end of year, $179,987 49.

President, Arnold Marcus. Secretary, W. S. Mackellar.
 Home Office, 1428 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Penna.
 General Agent for service, Lee H. Battle, Greensboro, N. C.
 Business Manager for North Carolina, Managed from home office.

State of North Carolina,
 Insurance Department,
 Raleigh, July 1, 1903

I, James R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct abstract of the statement of the Union Surety and Guaranty Company, of Phila., Penna. filed with this Department, showing the condition of said Company on the 31st day of December, 1902.
 Witness my hand and official seal, the d. y and date above written.

JAS. R. YOUNG,
 Insurance Commissioner.

Oldsmobiles

BEGINNING AUGUST 1st, we can make deliveries in 10 days or less, and the price, with wood wheels, F. O. B. Detroit, will be..... $650.00

Osmond L. Barringer

Distributing Agent

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA

Clippings.

The great Italian strike has collapsed, too. It is believed that a couple of steamers bound for New York suddenly blew their whistles.—The New York Mail and Express.

Politician: "Congratulations, Sarah, I've been nominated." Sarah—with delight: "Honestly?" Politician: "What difference does that make?"—The Detroit Free Press.

What Washington Did.—Mr. Evarts told Lord Coleridge, when they were at Mount Vernon, the legend of Washington throwing a dollar across the Rappahannock. "But," objected Coleridge, "the Rappahannock's a broad stream." "Yes," retorted Mr. Evarts, "but a dollar went further in those days."

At a dinner party this story was praised as Mr. Evarts' best. "Oh," said Mr. Evarts modestly, "I don't say all the good things credited to me. Now what I might have said was, that it was not so strange that George Washington threw a dollar across a river since he threw a sovereign across the sea."—Philadelphia Record.

Wire Railing and Ornamental Wire Works.

DUFUR & CO.,

511 N. Howard Street,

Baltimore, Md

Manufacture Wire Railing for Cemeteries, Balconies, etc. Sieves, Fenders, Cag Sand and Coal Screens Woven Wire, Also Iron Bedsteads, Chairs Settees, etc

Reading Notice.

On the first and third Tuesdays of July, August and September the Frisco System (Saint Louis & San Francisco Railroad) will have on sale reduced one-way and round trip tickets from Birmingham, Memphis and Saint Louis to points in Arkansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Indian Territory and Texas.

Write to W. T. Saunders, G. A., P. D., Frisco System, Atlanta, Ga., for information.

Ticket No. 1762.

Held by Mrs. E. C. Baldwin, of Maxton, N. C., secured the gift piano.

Evidently every person who registered for this piano is desirous of having an instrument in their home. To compensate for any disappointment and to aid them in adding music to their homes, we will make special prices and terms for the

NEXT THIRTY DAYS

to every person registered on our books.

We are Manufacturers,

We sell direct to the User.

We save all unnecessary profit

Write for full information in regard to our special offer and you can become the owner of a fine piano on easy terms and at a price that will induce you to buy.

Watch our Advertisements.

STIEFF

SOUTHERN WAREHOOMS:

211-213 N. Tryon, & 22 W. 5th St.

C. H. WILMOTH, Mgr.

Charlotte, - - - - - N. C.

Agnes Scott Institute FOR YOUNG LADIES.

DECATUR, (Six miles from Atlanta) GEORGIA.

Beautiful grounds Modern buildings and equipment. Equable climate. Unsurpassed health record. Graduate, College Preparatory, and Special Courses. Certification to Eastern Colleges. For catalogue address

F. H. GAINES, D. D., President, Box X

The Security Life and Annuity Co.

(LEGAL RESERVE)

Home Office : Greensboro, N. C.

Guaranty Capital, - - - - - $100,000.00

(Deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.)

Our Life Annuity, Disability and Endowment Policy - - - - -

HAS CASH AND LOAN VALUES.

1. Is fully paid-up in 20 years.
2. Is the most attractive policy issued.
3. Contains every essential idea in Life Insurance.
4. Provides a fixed income for Life for the widow.
5. Provides a fixed income for the children during their minority.
6. Provides a fixed income for the insured during disability and old age.
7. Is secured by a cash guaranty capital of $100,000.00 deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.

J. VAN LINDLEY, President.

GEO. A. GRIMSLEY, Secretary.

R. E. FOSTER, Actuary.

SEABOARD AIR LINE RAILWAY.

In Effect November 28rd, 1902

Vestibuled Limited Trains.

DOUBLE DAILY SERVICE Between New York

Tampa, Atlanta, New Orleans and points

SOUTH and WEST.

SOUTHWARD.

	Daily No. 81.	Daily No. 27.
Lv New York, P. R. R.....	12 55 p m	12 10 a m
Lv Philadelphia, " "	3 29 p m	7 20 a m
Lv Baltimore, " "	5 45 p m	9 34 a m
Lv Washington, W. S. Ry..	7 00 p m	10 41 a m
Lv Richmond, S. A. L. Ry..	10 37 p m	2 15 p m
Lv Petersburg, " "	11 20 p m	2 53 p m
Lv Norfolk, " "	1 55 a m	5 18 p m
Lv Henderson, " "	2 28 a m	5 41 p m
Lv Raleigh, " "	4 15 a m	6 58 p m
Lv Southern Pines " "	6 16 a m	8 50 p m
Lv Hamlet, " "	7 35 a m
Lv Columbia, † " "	10 25 a m	12 20 a m
Ar Savannah, " "	2 35 p m	4 55 a m
Ar Jacksonville, " "	7 00 p m	9 15 a m
Ar Tampa, " "	6 45 a m	6 00 p m
	No. 83.	No. 41.
Lv New York, N. Y. P. & N.	† 7 55 a m	8 55 p m
Lv Philadelphia, " "	10 16 a m	11 21 p m
Lv New York, O. D. S. S. Co.	† 3 00 p m
Lv Baltimore, B. S. P. Co.		† 6 30 p m
Lv Wash'ton, N. & W. S. B.		8 00 p m
Lv Portsmouth, S. A. L. Ry	9 05 p m	9 25 a m
Lv Weldon, " "	11 45 p m	11 55 a m
Lv Norfolk, " "	1 55 a m	1 55 p m
Lv Henderson, " "	2 28 a m	2 02 p m
Lv Raleigh, " "	4 15 a m	3 45 p m
Lv Southern Pines " "	6 16 a m	6 18 p m
Lv Hamlet, " "	7 40 a m	9 45 p m
Lv Wilmington " "		3 20 p m
Ar Charlotte, " "	10 33 a m	10 32 p m
Lv Chester, " "	10 30 a m	12 5 a m
Lv Greenwood, " "	12 37 p m	3 25 a m
Lv Athens, " "	2 52 p m	5 58 a m
Ar Atlanta, † " "	4 00 p m	7 35 a m
Ar Augusta, C. & W C.....	5 40 p m
Ar Macon, C of Ga.....	7 20 p m	11 35 a m
Ar Montgomery, A. & W. P.	9 20 p m	6 25 p m
Ar Mobile, L. & N.....	2 55 a m
Ar New Orleans, L. & N.....	7 25 a m
Ar Nashville, N. C. & St. L.	1 30 a m	6 55 p m
Ar Memphis " "	4 15 p m	8 20 a m

NORTHWARD.

	Daily No. 32.	Daily No. 88.
Lv Memphis, N C & St L....	12 45 n'n	8 00 p m
Lv Nashville, " "	9 30 p m	9 30 a m
Lv New Orleans, L & N....	8 10 p m
Lv Mobile, " "	12 40 a m
Lv Montgomery, A & W P..	6 45 a m	1 00 p m
Lv Macon, C of Ga.....	8 00 a m	4 20 p m
Lv Augusta, C & W C.....	10 05 a m
Lv Atlanta, † S A L Ry.....	12 00 n'n	8 00 p m
Ar Athens, " "	2 57 p m	11 23 p m
Ar Greenwood, " "	5 15 p m	1 58 a m
Ar Chester, " "	7 17 p m	4 15 a m
Lv Charlotte, " "	7 27 p m	5 01 m
Lv Wilmington " "	3 20 p m
Lv Hamlet, " "	10 40 p m	7 50 a m
Lv Southern Pines " "	11 33 p m	8 44 a m
Lv Raleigh, " "	1 35 a m	11 15 a m
Lv Henderson, " "	8 05 a m	12 50 p m
Lv Norfolk, " "	8 50 a m	1 45 p m
Lv Weldon, " "	5 00 a m	8 00 p m
Ar Portsmouth, " "	7 15 a m	5 35 p m
Ar Washington, N & W S B		6 55 a m
Ar Baltimore, B S P Co.....		† 6 30 a m
Ar New York, O D S S Co.....		† 5 00 p m
Ar Philadelphia, N Y P & N	† 5 46 p m	6 10 a m
Ar New York, " "	8 15 p m	8 00 a m
	No. 84.	No. 88.
Lv Tampa, S A L Ry....	8 00 p m	8 00 p m
Lv Jacksonville, " "	9 30 a m	7 50 a m
Lv Savannah, " "	1 40 p m	12 10 p m
Lv Columbia, † " "	7 05 p m	5 30 a m
Lv Hamlet, " "	10 40 p m	8 40 a m
Lv Southern Pines " "	11 33 p m	9 38 a m
Lv Raleigh, " "	1 35 a m	11 50 a m
Lv Henderson, " "	8 05 a m	1 10 p m
Lv Norfolk, " "	8 45 a m	1 55 p m
Lv Petersburg, " "	5 58 a m	4 07 p m
Ar Richmond, " "	6 35 a m	4 55 p m
Ar Washington, W S Ry....	10 10 a m	8 38 p m
Ar Baltimore, P R R.....	11 25 a m	11 25 p m
Ar Philadelphia, P R R.....	1 36 p m	2 56 a m
Ar New York, P R R.....	4 18 p m	6 30 a m

R. M. COFFEY, C. T. A., Charlotte, N. C.

STILLMAN INSTITUTE,

TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

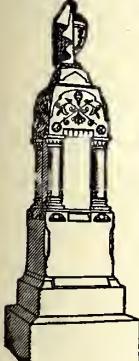

For training Colored Ministers. Offers good academic and theological instruction.

Now managed on the "Industrial" plan, by which a young man may exchange labor for an education.

Write for information to
REV. D. CLAY LILLY, Superintendent
 TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

Positions GUARANTEED BY A
$5,000 BANK DEPOSIT
 Railroad Fare Paid. 500 FREE Courses Offered. Board at Cost. Write Quick
 GEORGIA-ALABAMA BUSINESS COLLEGE, Macon, Ga.

EVERY SUFFERER SHOULD KNOW
=KADOK=
 The Pleasant tonic Headache Cure. Superior to Others and Free from Opaites
 Try a package,
 Price 10c.
 At all Druggists or sent prepaid by
L. Richardson Drug Company,
 Wholesale and manufacturing Druggists,
 GREENSBORO, N. C.

 TUCKER BROS.
 Wilmington, N. C.
 THE PLACE TO BUY YOUR
MONUMENTS.
HEADSTONES,
 and all Cemetery Work,
 at Bottom Prices. All
 work delivered.
 Branch yard at
 Goldsboro, N. C.

HALL & PEARSALL
Wholesale - Grocers
 AND
Commission Merchants,
 Wilmington, N. C.

SPECIALTIES:
Salt Fish, Molasses.
Meat, Flour, Salt,
BAGGING and TIES.
 Samples and prices on request.

OPIUM COCAINE AND WHISKY
 Habits Cured at my Sanatorium, in 60 days. Hundreds of references. 25 years a specialty. Book on Home Treatment sent FREE. Address
B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

SHORTHAND FREE.

Upon request Converse Business College will send a free lesson in Shorthand, with full explanation, to any one.
 For the next thirty days Railroad fare will be paid for any one enrolling for one or more of our courses at the regular rate of tuition.

I. T. WILLIAMS, Secretary and Treasurer, Spartanburg, S. C.

Sewing Machines <sup>A</sup> <sup>N</sup> <sup>D</sup> Supplies

NOW is the time to buy a Machine, and F. H. ANDREWS' is the place. No use to send your money to a catalogue house a thousand miles away, when I can furnish an elegant Drop Head Machine at $16.50, and finer ones in proportion. Attachments, Parts and Needles for all Machines supplied promptly.

F. H. ANDREWS,
 20 WEST TRADE STREET, : - CHARLOTTE, N. C.
 The Old Reliable Dealer in Pianos, Organs and Sewing Machines.

EDUCATION IS COSTLY
 IGNORANCE IS SUICIDE

HOGE MEMORIAL ACADEMY BLACKSTONE VIRGINIA

Ours is a high-grade School, with moderate charges. Give boys what they need at a critical time. Develops backbone, builds character, while training the mind. Apply for information to
COL. E. B. FISHBURNE, B. S., A. M., Principal

DAVIDSON COLLEGE, Davidson, N.C.

Classical, Mathematical, Scientific, Literary, Biblical, Commercial.
 Terms reasonable; Location healthful; Accommodations excellent; Teaching unsurpassed; Gymnasium complete.
 Send for a catalogue Address THE PRESIDENT.

DO YOU WANT
 —A—
 —TEACHER?—

We are in correspondence with hundreds of the best teachers in the U. S. for all grades school and college work. Can refer you to some that would probably suit. NO CHARGE. Members located in 18 states at salaries $2,500 per year down. Correspondence with school officials and teachers invited.
THE EDUCATIONAL BUREAU, U. S. Raleigh, N. C.
 (Established 1891) Branch Office; Fort Smith, Ark.

North Carolina MILITARY ACADEMY.

Red Springs, N. C.
 Ample faculty of five instructors. Location unsurpassed for healthfulness. Educates for business or for college and stand taken by graduates and students in university work the test of thoroughness. Cost small, considering advantages. Religious influences good. Address for catalogue,
CAPT. C. A. SHORT, DR. SAMUEL W MURPHY,
Principal. Head Master.

Red Springs Seminary, The Ideal College for Women.

Faculty of twenty-six experienced teachers College course leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S. and B. Lit. The best advantages in Music and Art. Large two manual Pipe Organ. Electric lights. Steam heat. A catalogue will interest you,
REV. C. G. VARDELL, D. D., Red Springs, N. C.
 Summer address, Blowing Rock, N. C.

Princeton Theological Seminary.

FRANCIS L. PATTON, D. D., LL. D., President.

The ninety-second session of Princeton Theological Seminary will open on Thursday, September 17th, 1913. Matriculation of Students takes place in Stuart Hall at eleven o'clock.
 On Friday, September 18th, at eleven o'clock the Rev. William Park Armstrong will be inaugurated as Professor of New Testament Literature and Exegesis. His address will be on the subject, "The Witness of the Gospel." The exercises will take place in Miller Chapel. College Graduates of all denominations welcome. Faculty of seventeen. Modern methods of instruction. Choice of extra curriculum courses, and privilege of advanced study in Princeton University. A strong Y. M. C. A. An address each week by men prominent in aggressive Christian work. Annual conference of leading Christian workers. Three fine dormitories with parlor and baths in each. Ample grounds for recreation.
 Address all correspondence, etc., to
Prof. GEERHARDUS VOS,
 Princeton, N. J.

Cluster Springs Academy,

BLACK WALNUT, VA.

A SELECT SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND YOUNG MEN—LIMITED TO THIRTY.

Three gentlemen of from four to twelve years' experience have charge of the class rooms.

Each pupil is given individual attention and treated as a member of the Head Master's home.

Twenty-acre Campus; Ten-acre Athletic Field; New Gymnasium; Swimming Pool; Excellent Reading Room; Convenient to Churches; Unsurpassed Railroad Facilities; Telephone Connections; Fine Mineral Waters.

Our boys are noted for their high moral tone, and their success in the colleges and universities attests the thoroughness of our work.

If you want your boy to have these advantages let us send you our illustrated Catalogue.

HAMPDEN WILSON, Head Master.

Peele College

BETTER THAN A SAVINGS BANK

A high-grade school for training young men and women for business pursuits. Not a single full graduate out of a position in three years. No discount to individuals, hence, lower rates for scholarships. Beautifully equipped. Electric lights, Steam heat, Hydraulic elevator. Business taught by an experienced accountant. Stenography taught by a court reporter. Board $10.00 to $11.00 per month; good fare, with furnished room, in Christian home.

PEELE COLLEGE, Greensboro, N. C.

The Normal and Collegiate Institute,
FOR YOUNG WOMEN. ASHEVILLE, N. C.

The Fall Term Opens September 16, 1903.

1. A normal course for the thorough training of Teachers under instructors from best Normal Schools
  2. A Commercial Course, including Stenography, Typewriting, Bookkeeping, etc.
  3. A Course of Domestic Science, including (a) Scientific Cooking, (b) Draughting, Cutting, Fitting, and Making of Garments.
  4. An admirable Musical Department has been provided under trained and experienced teachers.
- Systematic study of the Bible in all Departments.
Terms for Board and Tuition in any of the Departments, $50.00 per term, or $100.00 per year.
For Catalogue, address

REV. THOMAS LAWRENCE, D. D., Asheville, N. C.

HAMPDEN-SIDNEY COLLEGE.

The 128th Session will open Wednesday, September 9th, 1903.

Four courses of instruction leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., B. L. and A. M. Nine professors and instructors. Healthful location. Moral surroundings.

For catalogue apply to

RICHARD McILWAINE, President, Hampden-Sidney, Va

CLARKTON MALE INSTITUTE.

A MILITARY SCHOOL,

(UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE PRESBYTERY OF WILMINGTON).

Prepares Boys for college and for life. Board $8 per month. Tuition $27 for nine months
Write for catalog.

R. C. DEAL, Principal.

J. J. HUTSON, Commandant.

King's Mountain Military Academy,

Yorkville, South Carolina.

A high-grade school with a first-class patronage. Teachers and cadets live together as one family. A real home school. Stands for the best and nothing but the best. Faculty all active Christian men, who live in closest contact with the cadets.

Col. W. G STEPHENSON, Supt.

North Carolina Medical College Davidson, N. C.

Three years' course to graduate. Sixteen Professors and Teachers. Clinical instruction given in Davidson and Charlotte. Eighteen graduates this year made fine records before N. C. and S. C. Boards. Address

J. P. MUNROE, M. D., President, Davidson, N. C.

Private rooms in the Hospital.

Black River Institute,

IVANHOE, N. C.

REV. V. H. STARBUCK, A. B., B. L., B. D.,
Principal.

SESSION OPENS SEPTEMBER 22nd.

High-grade work on very easy terms.
Under care of Wilmington Presbytery.

For particulars address,

V. H. STARBUCK or E. J. W. ANDERS,
Ivanhoe, N. C.

GREGG

SHORTHAND BY MAIL.

You need not leave your home to learn this system. It is easy to learn, easy to write and easy to read.

Typewriter sent to responsible students.
Send today for Booklet C.

Southern Shorthand and

Business University.

J. M. RESSLER, President.

Norfolk, Va.

Teachers' Interstate Examination Course.

Teachers wishing to prepare for examinations should write at once to Prof. J. L. Graham, LL. D., 152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn., for particulars concerning his Special Teachers' Examination Course

This course is taught by mail, and prepares Teachers for examination in every State in the Union. Leading educators pronounce it the best course ever offered to the Teaching profession, and all Teachers wishing to advance in their profession should immediately avail themselves of it. Enclose stamp for reply.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., SEPTEMBER 16, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 37

Expect==Wait!

"In the Mussulman's devotions one constant gesture is to put the hand unto the ear, as if listening for the message from the other world."

Hast thou sent up some prayer today,
Some cry for strength, some call for grace?
Turn not despairingly away,
But list'ning, stand with upturned face
And hand unto thine ear—
The answer may be near!
Why not, oh child of God? Why treat
Thy heavenly Father with less trust
Than thou wouldst dare to meet
To him from whom thou askt a crust?
With hand unto thine ear,
Expect, and wait—and hear!

***

Who knows but that some message sweet
Is ready for thy soul today?
Some unexpected joy may greet
Thy waiting faith, for 'tis God's way
To lend a ready ear
Unto believing prayer.

O. H.

Peace Institute and Conservatory, Raleigh, North Carolina.

A THOROUGH SCHOOL OF HIGH-GRADE FOR GIRLS. IN PINE BELT OF NORTH CAROLINA SO FAMOUS FOR HEALTH. * * * * *

We canvass closely and select carefully hence the high-tone and character of this school and its pupils. Catalogue free. Address, JAS. DINWIDDIE, President.

STATESVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE

The best College accessible to the young women of Western North Carolina, and the cheapest for the opportunities offered. The session opens September 9, 1903. Send for information,

REV. J. A. SCOTT, President,
Statesville, N. C.

King's Business College!

(INCORPORATED)

Capital Stock, - - - - - $30,000.00

200 students are now attending the summer session of King's Business Colleges, Raleigh, N. C., and Charlotte, N. C. Fall opening September 1, 1903

$75, $60, $70 and $50 per month are the starting salaries of our graduates placed in positions in two weeks' time. Take our course and we will try to do as well by you. Choice of 50 positions each month.

We Prove that we have the best by a business offer

Write for our Offers and College Journal.

KING'S BUSINESS COLLEGE, .. Charlotte or Raleigh, N. C.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE FOR WOMEN, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Tuition and board lower than any school of same grade in the South. Under the control of the Presbyteries of Concord and Mecklenburg.

For catalogue, address, REV. J. R. BRIDGES, President.
Or MISS LILY LONG, Dean.

Truthful, Pure, Manly Boys for The Fishburne School, Waynesboro, Virginia.

English, Classical and Military. Experienced teachers. Thorough work. Superior location. Presbyterian training. THREE STUDENTS OF LAST SESSION HAVE RECEIVED GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS. Write for catalogue. JAS. A. FISHBURNE, A. B., Principal.

The Normal and Collegiate Institute, FOR YOUNG WOMEN. ASHEVILLE, N. C.

The Fall Term Opens September 16, 1903.

1. A normal course for the thorough training of Teachers under instructors from best Normal Schools
  2. A Commercial Course, including Stenography, Typewriting, Bookkeeping, etc.
  3. A Course of Domestic Science, including (a) Scientific Cooking, (b) Draughting, Cutting, Fitting, and Making of Garments.
  4. An admirable Musical Department has been provided under trained and experienced teachers. Systematic study of the Bible in all Departments.
- Terms for Board and Tuition in any of the Departments, $50.00 per term, or $100.00 per year.
For Catalogue, address REV. THOMAS LAWRENCE, D. D., Asheville, N. C.

Raleigh Marble Works.

COOPER BROS., Props.

RALEIGH, N. C.

MONUMENTS,

Tablets, Headstones, Iron Fences.

We Pay the Freight.

Please mention Standard.

Write for our
New Catalogue

THE MERCHANTS & FARMERS NATIONAL BANK,

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Capital and Profits, - - - $290,000.

Out of Town Accounts.

Depositors living outside of Charlotte can send us their deposits by mail or express, upon receipt of which the amount will be credited to their account and the deposit acknowledged by mail same day.

We furnish such accounts check books, free of cost, and write up the account monthly, mailing detailed statement with all cancelled checks.

DR. J. H. McADEN, - - - President.
C. N. EVANS, Jr., - - - Cashier.

HOUSTON, DIXON & CO.,

SCHOOL BOOKS, OFFICE SUPPLIES, and HURD'S VERY FINE STATIONERY.

Opposite Central Hotel, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Teachers Wanted.

We need at once a few more Teachers for Fall schools. Good positions are being filled daily by us. We are receiving more calls this year than ever before. Schools and colleges supplied with teachers free of cost. Enclose stamp for reply.

AMERICAN TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION
J. L. GRAHAM, LL. D., Manager.

152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn.

BIG 8 Chain of 8 Colleges owned by business men and endorsed by business men. Fourteen Cashiers of Banks are on our Board of Directors. Our diploma means something. Enter any time. Positions secured.

Car fare paid. No vacation.

Draughton's Practical Business Colleges
(Incorporated, Capital Stock $300,000.00.)

Nashville, Tenn. U Atlanta, Ga.
Ft. Worth, Texas, S Montgomery, Ala.
St. Louis, Mo. A Galveston, Texas,
Little Rock, Ark. A Shreveport, La.

For 150 page catalogue address either place. If you prefer, may pay tuition out of salary after course is completed. Guarantee graduates to be competent or no charges for tuition.
HOME STUDY: Bookkeeping, Shorthand, Penmanship, etc., taught by mail. Write for 100 page BOOKLET on Home Study. It's free.

Pantops Academy For Boys, Near Charlottesville, Va.

Fully equipped. Equable climate. Tract of 833 acres, formerly owned by Thomas Jefferson and named by him from two Greek words—"All-seeing." Also Summer School. Catalogue. JOHN R. SAMPSON, A. M.

Medical College of Virginia.

Established 1838.

Departments of Medicine, Dentistry and Pharmacy

The sixty sixth session will commence on September 29, 1903. Well equipped Laboratories, splendid Hospital facilities and abundance of clinical material afford excellent opportunities for practical work.

Tuition fees and living expenses are very moderate. For announcement and further information, address, CHRISTOPHER TOMPKINS, M. D., Dean. Richmond, Va.

D. W. Badham,
Charlotte, N. C.

Tuner, Repairer and Salesman of Pianos. School work a specialty. Mention the Standard.

Presbyterian Standard.

Established 1858. CHARLOTTE, N. C., SEPTEMBER 16, 1903. Vol. XLV.---No 37

Event and Comment.

"Christendom" has been run three months as a liberal religious weekly. It evidently found that field as well as the evangelical one, well occupied. And now it has combined with a monthly. The people who care about a really religious paper still prefer to take their doctrine straight.

Rev. R. J. Campbell, we are sorry to see, is being hailed as a comrade by the Universalist Leader, which expresses the hope that he will so enlarge the fellowship of the Congregational Church as to make it inclusive of Universalists. We had hoped for better things from the Rev. Reginald J. Campbell.

The Brotherhood of the Kingdom is a Society of Ministers of several denominations, who are trying to study social questions from the Christian point of view and to make over society into the likeness of the Kingdom of God. There is a great deal in the New Testament about social science that our age has not yet understood.

A lawyer in St. Louis, the other day went the whole length in defense of his client. He moved for a change of venue on the ground that "prejudice exists in St. Louis against perjury and bribery to such an extent that a fair and impartial trial cannot be secured." We suppose the next motion will be for thieves to be tried by a jury of unprejudiced thieves, murderers by murderers, and so on.

More people go from the Episcopal Church into the Roman Catholic than from any other. More people go into the Episcopal Church from other denominations than into any other. More Roman Catholics go into the intensely evangelical churches than into any other. Thus we have a continual round. Evangelicalism empties its refuse into Episcopacy, Episcopacy empties its refuse into Catholicism, and then when the Catholics get converted they go straight into the Evangelical Churches.

A converted priest, Mr. Joseph McCabe, has been telling the truth about Catholicism in Spain, in a way the Catholics do not at all relish. Mr. McCabe spoke of the "bulls," the old indulgence against which Luther protested, which in Spain are signed and sealed documents which any one may purchase for 15 cents, granting a plenary indulgence. Dr. Rivier, a Catholic defender of the faith, writes in the Catholic Union and Times that "the penance for certain venial sins of not too serious a nature, can be commuted to a small fine," and cites the instance of President Roosevelt recently commuting a sentence against a military officer. But the officer did not know that he could purchase immunity in advance.

It was with a good deal of surprise that we read Commissioner Harris' statement regarding religion in the public schools. But his theory really cuts so deep as to divorce education and religion entirely. He says: "The principle of religious instruction is authority. That of secular instruction is demonstration and verification." If that be so, then there should be no mingling of the two, even in the Church schools. But Mr. Harris' propositions are too sweeping. Who that ever taught does not recognize the place of authority in secular instruction? While it is equally true that the historical facts of our religion are capable of demonstration and verification, if any facts of history can be proved and verified. It is noteworthy that a Catholic paper, the Boston Pilot, pronounced the theory of Commissioner Harris "twenty-five years behind the times."

The Passive Resistance movement against the education bill continues in England, and it is worth while to note its progress from time to time. In Wales, which is almost entirely Non-conformist, the County Councils are making the bill unworkable. In England legal proceedings have been begun in the cases of fifty people who have refused to pay the tax rate. The goods of these persons are seized and sold at public auction, fifty dollars' worth being sold to satisfy a two dollar rate. In some cases the magistrates will have nothing to do with the trials and vacate their benches. After every seizure of goods there is an excited popular meeting. Twenty thousand people have enrolled themselves as the avowed supporters of the Passive Resistance Movement, and the trying of twenty thousand people who are protesting against the using of public money for sectarian schools will kindle a fire in England sure enough.

Our readers will remember, perhaps, the stories of the looting of the Chinese houses in Peking by the missionaries. There were two Protestant missionaries named, if we remember aright, but we said at the time it was probably the Catholic missionaries who were to blame for any wholesale looting. And now Christendom publishes the letters of the very correspondent who gave the facts to the press in the United States and here is what he says: "France poses before the world as the protector of missionaries. Her own missionaries are all Catholics and they have for years enjoyed rights in China that no other missionaries have enjoyed. But that is not the point. Since raising the siege in Peking, the Catholic cathedral here has been turned into a salesroom for stolen property. I talked today with a man who had himself purchased more than seven thousand taels worth of stolen property." Now that was in a letter to the correspondent's wife, which has just been published. But was any distinction as to the missionaries made in the New York papers at the time? Oh, no! It was better to condemn the guilty and the innocent together than to say that the Catholic missionaries were the guilty ones.

Says the Church Standard: "We wonder if it ever occurs to our non-Episcopal brethren that the concentration of responsibility in the office of mayor, in modern municipal charters, is the application of a principle that the Holy Ghost taught the Church in the first century of the Christian era." Probably not. The distinctive thing about the principle of Church government in the first century was the joint power of those who governed—"the elders that rule well," for example. The mayor preserves only one point of likeness, he is elected by the people, while the bishop, to which office the Church Standard slyly refers, is not. The remark of the Church Standard, however, shows the tendency of Episcopacy to monarchy as the chosen form of government. It is only in the plague spots of the land, the cities, that one man power and responsibility is demanded. So in the days of the Roman empire, the early form of Presbytery was overshadowed by monarchy in the Church. Episcopacy stops a little this side of monarchy, however. Its governing body is the House of Bishops. The consistent thing would be to have one ecclesiastical mayor, sometimes called a Pope.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established January 1, 1858.

A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER FOR THE FAMILY. DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM AS REPRESENTED BY THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

A. J. MCKELWAY, ..... EDITOR
CORNELIA R. SHAW, ..... ASSOCIATE EDITOR.
H. M. McALLISTER, ..... BUSINESS MANAGER

WESTERN OFFICE:

GEO. L. LEYBURN, ..... EDITOR AND MANAGER.
318 Washington Ave. St Louis, Mo.

Subscription Price, ..... $2.00 a Year, in Advance.

The STANDARD is published every Wednesday at Charlotte, N. C., by the PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

For table of contents see page 16.

The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription has been paid.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the subscription.

In accordance with the general wish of our patrons the paper is discontinued only upon the written request of the subscriber. Arrearages must be settled in full at the same time, at the rate of two dollars a year and twenty cents a month for a part of a year.

When change of address is desired give both the old and the new address.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post-office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South. Address all communications to

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD, Charlotte, N. C.

Literature, History And Life. There has been a good deal of nonsense uttered and quoted concerning the Bible and Literature. The Bible is Literature, for it is meant to be read and it is enduring. It is a noble literature, necessarily, because of the high subjects with which it deals and the elevated tone and uplifting sentiments in which it treats of them. Its translations are the foundations of literature, and no one can estimate what the King James Version did for the English tongue, or Luther's translation did for the German language. But as soon as we begin to talk about versions and translations we come to a human element of the Bible that is altogether transitory. The value of the Bible as literature, in the accepted sense of that phrase, depends a good deal upon the literary gifts of the translators.

The common English version was wrought out in the glow of the Elizabethan Era, the most famous era in the history of the English language, perhaps in the history of any language. Luther's efforts to make Job speak German were the efforts of a genius, who was yet a son of the soil and could make himself understood in the tongue of the common people. Moreover, as a matter of fact, the Hebrew tongue in which the greater part of the Bible was written, is an exceedingly barren language, with a small vocabulary and very little flexibility in the expression of ideas. The Hebraisms of our language are more forceful than literary forms of speech.

So, also, the Greek of the New Testament, Hellenistic Greek, is not the rich language that the Greek of Homer or of the Athenians was. With the exception of the New Testament and the books that sprang from it in the early history of the Church, Hellenic Greek has no literature to speak of. It would seem, therefore, that the Divine Author of the Scriptures has not been especially concerned over the literary form of the languages in which divine thoughts were to be clothed. While we know that the translations which have aimed to give most nearly the very thought of the sacred writers have lost something as literature, the Revised Version, for instance, whose authors Spurgeon declared to have known Greek, but to have been ignorant of English.

So we are by no means content with the patronizing declarations that we hear sometimes as to the study of the Bible in the Public Schools or in the Colleges, that the Bible is studied as literature. The Bible is so much more than mere literature that its true position in the world is infinitely lowered when its literary aspects are enlarged upon. Of course it is true that a man who does not know something of the Bible is uneducated. It is true that English literature is full of Scriptural illusions, which, if unintelligible, make the literature itself only half understood. It is true that the English Bible is a "well of English, undefiled," from which one may drink deep to his rich profit as a speaker or writer of the English tongue. But Shakespeare answers to all of these claims with counter-claims. And the Bible is infinitely more than Shakespeare.

The Bible is history; it deals with facts. These facts might be stated in our translation of the Bible in the driest and most commonplace manner, and still they would be facts that would concern us more than any other events of history. And history is more than literature. If the talk about teaching the Bible as literature could be dropped and the talk about teaching it as history taken up, then we should be content, because the religion of the Bible is a religion of historic facts, and when those facts have been grasped by the mind, other things may follow. Yet the Bible is more than history, though it is never anything less. We do not abate one atom our contention as to the historic fact of the Resurrection of Jesus Christ as against the sentimental view that it may be largely symbolism. But he who gives the assent of his mind to the fact of that resurrection, may yet deny in his life the power of the resurrection. The Bible is literature and it is history, but it is also life.

And here is the opportunity for the Christian teacher in all our schools, of Church or of State. With a faith that is unshaken in the great fundamental facts of the gospel, the teacher can so refer to those facts, can even put so much of reverence into the tones in which the Word of God is read, that the Bible shall be felt to mean more than literature and more than history, even life. The Bible reveals Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ reveals God. To know God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent, is life, eternal life.

The Missionaries and the Apostles. The expected happened when the Turkish Minister laid the blame of the attempted assassination of the American Consul at the door of the missionaries. The expected happened again when American papers that ought to know better endorsed the subterfuge of the Turkish Minister. Says the Charleston Post, speaking of that plea:

Such argument as this is not to be answered. Perhaps the missionaries are doing a good work in Turkey, but it is entirely natural that their presence should be objectionable to the people of the Sultan's realm. We wouldn't put up with Mussulman missionaries in this country, who undertook to substitute the Koran for the Bible and preached the righteousness of harems, and if the Sultan called us to account for ill-treatment of such people we should kick him away from the court to which he might appeal. But as soon as our missionaries get into trouble, because of the perfectly natural resentment to their presence and their efforts to convert the people from the faith of their fathers, they call upon the United States Government to support their rights and to punish the Turks for objecting to their proselyting. They rest upon their citizenship, rather than upon their faith, in time of danger. It was not so with the establishment of the Christian Church. What government protected Peter against Nero, and what power avenged the stripes of Paul?

The esteemed Post should have contented itself with saying that it was unable to answer the argument of Chekib Bey. It can be answered. "Perhaps the missionaries are doing a good work in Turkey"—well, the well-informed newspapers of the country know that they are doing a good work, and any paper published in a Christian land and under Christian influence ought to know that the preaching of the gospel of the Son of God in a heathen land is bound to do good. And the parallel between the right of Turkish and American missionaries is not well drawn. We would not prevent any peaceful attempt to "substitute the Koran for the Bible." As to "the righteousness of harems," the Mormons have been preaching that to a considerable degree and in most instances are undisturbed.

But right here is the distinctive peculiarity of the Christian religion. Against the things that it teaches "there is no law." An American missionary may not believe in the Turkish harem, but there is no law against his having one wife. As Pliny the Younger wrote about the early Christians, they bound themselves by an oath (probably the sacrament) not, as he had been led to believe, to murder and to steal, but to refrain from doing those things. The religion of Jesus Christ, just because it is of divine origin and essence, is inoffensive so far as human laws are concerned.

At the same time, as we have shown often before, its principles are those that make men free. Then comes the persecution of tyranny. The question is, should the missionary appeal to his government, when he is persecuted, for doing what any American citizen has a right to do? Or should he refuse such an appeal? The missionaries have decided that question both ways. For ourselves, we believe it is too late in the history of the world for the anachronism of persecution for religion's sake to be allowed by any nation from any other nation, where the citizens of the one nation are concerned. An American missionary has as much right to teach in Turkey as an American trader has to sell goods, and the American people should protect each in his right.

And our contemporary is especially unfortunate in its appeal to the Scripture. "What power avenged the stripes of Paul?" Well, the Roman Power, for instance. Paul was a Roman citizen. If our contemporary would get a New Testament and read it, it would find the account of certain stripes being laid upon Paul in the very territory now ruled by the Turks, Philippi, in Macedonia. And when the magistrates sent the prisoners word that they could go from their prison, Paul said, and he brought the magistrates to their knees, "they have beaten us openly and uncondemned, being Romans. Let them come and fetch us out."

A little later Paul appealed to the Roman authority again at Jerusalem and to his Roman citizenship. The real Apostolic Succession is the likeness of the Missionaries to the Apostles, and the words mean the same thing. The missionaries have Apostolic precedent for appealing to their citizenship to protect them from violence. And if they had had a Christian instead of a Pagan State to appeal to doubtless they would have done it oftener than they did. There is a good deal of nonsense exploited sometimes about the missionaries who "rest upon their citizenship rather than upon their faith."

More than a Conqueror.

We have been reading the reminiscences of Robert E. Lee by Dr. J. William Jones, in Christendom, a religious weekly published in Chicago. The last of the articles, "Robert E. Lee, the Man," we give below, with this brief introduction:

It seems to us that what the apostle meant by "more than conqueror" stands out conspicuously here. General Lee was a conqueror in two wars and on many battlefields. He was conquered at last. But greater than victory was his bearing in defeat. His whole aim was to forget the passions of the past and to work for the reconciliation of the sections that had become so bitterly estranged, the one from the other. It is good advice that he gave in 1865, that we would do well to heed forty years afterwards. There are some on both sides that have not learned the lesson yet.

The conqueror conquers; the more than conqueror wins. It is the more than conqueror that is winning his way into the hearts of Americans, North and South, and stamping there the ideal of the Christian gentleman. That will be the meaning of Lee's statue in the National Capitol. It will have won its way there because the character of the man, seen in clearer and clearer light in the perspective of the years, has made its own way into the love and the honor of all men.

REMINISCENCES OF ROBERT E. LEE.

"It is an old proverb that 'No man is great to his valet,' and it is a popular impression that few men can stand a close inspection of their actions, character, and motives.

"But the more intimately I knew General Lee, the closer I came to him in personal relations, and the more I have seen of his private letters and papers, and studied his character, the higher he has risen in my estimation, and the more thoroughly have I regarded him as one of the model men of the centuries.

"If called upon to name the controlling motive of the life of Lee, I should unhesitatingly answer, devotion to duty.

"As a boy, he was so devoted to his invalid mother, hurrying from school, when other boys went to the playground, that he might minister to her wants, that she exclaimed when he left home for West Point: 'How can I do without Robert? He is both son and daughter to me.' As a cadet, he passed through the military academy and passed second in his brilliant class without ever receiving a single demerit.

"As a young officer in the army, in Mexico, in his subsequent career in the Confederate army, and as college president, duty was the pole-star that guided him. Not long after the capture of the City of Mexico, at a brilliant banquet in one of the palaces, a toast was proposed to 'The young engineer whose skill and gallantry have found a path for the American army into the city of the Montezumas.' It was then discovered that Captain Lee, for whom the toast was meant, had quietly slipped out of the room. Captain John B. Magruder ('Prince John,' he was affectionately called in the old army), went to bring him, and found him in a distant room in the palace busily engaged on a map.

"Lee, this is mere drudgery. Make some clerk do it and come with me," exclaimed the impetuous Magruder. "No!" said the quiet worker, "I am but doing my duty. General Scott wishes this map, and it is my duty to furnish it; and with me duty must always go before pleasure."

"Not long after the Mexican war, he was chosen by the Cuban junta in New York to be the leader of the revolutionary forces in the island, and was offered rank and pay far beyond anything he could hope for in the United States army. But he decided that it would not be right for him while holding a commission in the United States army to accept rank and pay in a foreign service, and that it was his duty to decline the tempting offer.

"When he was summoned before the Virginia convention on April 23, 1861, and Hon. John Janney, in an eloquent speech, informed him that he had been elected commander-in-chief of the Virginia troops, he concluded his very brief reply by saying: 'Trusting in Almighty God, an approving conscience, and the aid of my fellow-citizens, I devote myself to the service of my native State, in whose behalf alone will I ever again draw my sword.'

"Men have differed, and will continue to differ, as to whether Lee made a right decision; but no one who knew him, or had any correct appreciation of his character, can doubt for a single moment that he acted from the highest conviction of duty, as he was given to see it.

"It is proper to add that when his course was once decided upon, he never faltered, and never for a moment regretted his decision or doubted that he was treading the path of duty.

"He said to his great lieutenant, General Wade Hampton, when in June, 1868, they were talking about the war and its results: 'I did only what my duty demanded. I could have taken no other course without dishonor. And if all were to be done over again, I should act in precisely the same manner.'

"One day in the spring of 1866, when we were conversing about the condition of some of our returned Confederate soldiers, General Lee said to me very emphatically: 'Yes! all that is very sad, and might be a cause of self-reproach, but that we are conscious that we have humbly tried to do our duty. We may, therefore, with calm satisfaction, trust in God, and leave results to him.'

"At Appomattox, when it became evident that his little band of ragged, half-starved heroes must either surrender to the mighty host which surrounded them, or die in the attempt to cut their way out, General Lee said: 'There is nothing left me but to go and see General Grant, and I would rather die a thousand deaths.'

"Colonel Charles S. Venable of his staff, who relates this incident, says: 'Convulsed with passionate grief, many were the wild words we spoke, as we stood around him. Said one, 'O General, what will history say of the surrender of the army in the field?' He replied: 'Yes, I know they will say hard things of us; they will not understand how we were overwhelmed by numbers and resources; but that is not the question, colonel; the question is, is it right to surrender this army? If it is right, then I will take all of the responsibility!'

"In his exquisitely beautiful farewell address to his soldiers he said: ' . . . You take with you the satisfaction that proceeds from the consciousness of duty well performed, and I earnestly pray that a merciful God will extend to you his blessing and protection. . . .'

"The famous letter purporting to have been written by General Lee at Arlington to his son Custis at West Point in which occurred the expression, 'Duty is the sublimest word in the English language,' was unquestionably spurious, but this expression did occur in a letter from General Lee to his son, and it is certain that he acted on it in his own daily life.

tionably spurious, but this expression did occur in a letter from General Lee to his son, and it is certain that he acted on it in his own daily life.

"Modest humility, simplicity and gentleness, and self-denial for the good of others pre-eminently characterized every act of this great man. There was a smaller number of attendants about General Lee's headquarters and less display of 'the pomp and circumstance of war,' than about the quarters of many officers of inferior rank. He was frequently seen riding alone among his troops, or attended by a single courier; more than half the time with hat lifted in response to loving salutations.

"One of his brigadiers asked him one day: 'Why is it, general, that you do not wear the full insignia of your rank, but content yourself with the stars of a colonel?' 'Oh,' replied the modest chieftain, 'I do not care for display. And the truth is, the rank of colonel is about as high as I ought ever to have gotten; or, perhaps, I might manage a good cavalry brigade if I had the right kind of subordinates.'

"Just as he rode among his victorious troops at Chancellorsville and was greeted with the enthusiastic cheers which they always gave him, he was handed a note from Stonewall Jackson, in which, without alluding to his own wound, he congratulated General Lee on 'the great victory he had won.' Colonel Marshall, his military secretary, says that Lee received Jackson's note with an expression of deep pain, and bade him write him at once: 'The victory is yours, not mine, and the congratulations are due to you, not me. I cannot tell you how distressed I am to hear of your wound. Could I have dictated events, I should have chosen, for the good of the country, to have been disabled in your stead.'

"The third day at Gettysburg, when the assault made by the Confederate troops on the heights had received its bloody repulse, General Lee galloped to the front, and was soon moving among his defeated legions. He was confident then, and died believing that the assault had failed, not through fault of his own or lack of courage on the part of his fourteen thousand men who had made the assault, but because of the failure of one of his lieutenants to obey his orders. But instead of placing the blame where it justly belonged, he took it on his own broad shoulders, and said: 'This is all my fault. I have lost this battle, and you must help me out of it the best you can. We want all good men to rally just now.'

"Does history afford an example of more beautiful self-abnegation than this? Giving to a subordinate the glory of the victory at Chancellorsville, and taking on himself the blame of the defeat at Gettysburg.

"General Lee never used tobacco or intoxicating liquors of any sort. In a letter to his son, W. H. F. Lee, who had recently been appointed to a lieutenancy in the United States army, he said in speaking of the drinking among army officers: 'As so few can use without abusing, the only safe rule is to do as you and I do—not use at all.'

"I have spoken of his refusing to receive gifts at the close of the war, and might illustrate this point by many other incidents, as I found his letter book literally filled with letters declining gifts. During the war the city council of Richmond (knowing that Arlington was in possession of the enemy, that the White House had been burned, and that Mrs. Lee and her daughters were living in rented rooms in Richmond), voted that the city should present General Lee with a suitable house, and appointed a committee to make the purchase. The action of the council was published in the papers, and as soon as General Lee saw it he wrote the president insisting that no further steps be taken in the premises, saying that he should be obliged to decline the kind offer, as his family was as comfortable as they could ask to be in those cruel war times. He added: 'If the city of Richmond has money to expend in that way, I hope they will use it to help the impoverished families, the widows, and the orphans of my private soldiers, who are more needy and more worthy than myself.'

"After the war the influence of General Lee in suppressing bitter feelings between the sections, and bringing about reconciliation was so marked that a volume would be necessary to set it forth fully. I can only give several illustrations.

"Soon after the grand jury found its indictment against General Lee, at a time when President Andrew Johnson was showing a purpose to carry out his threat to 'make treason odious by hanging the chief of the rebel leaders,' and when ultra men at the North were clamoring for vengeance for what they alleged to be 'the complicity of the South' in the assassination of Mr. Lincoln, a party of friends were spending an evening in Richmond, and the conversation naturally turned on these matters. Rev. Dr. — led the conversation in expressing, in terms of decided bitterness, the indignation of the South at the indictment of General Lee. The general pleasantly remarked: 'Well, it matters little what they may do to me; I am old, and have but a short time to live anyhow,' and very soon turned the conversation into other channels. Presently Dr. — got up to go, and General Lee followed him out to the door and said to him very earnestly: 'Doctor, there is a good old book which I read and you preach from, which says, 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you.' Do you think your remarks this evening were quite in the spirit of that teaching?'

"One day in the Autumn of 1869, I saw General Lee standing at his gate, talking to a humbly clad man, who turned off, evidently delighted with his interview, just as I came up. After exchanging salutations, the general pleasantly said, pointing to the retreating form, 'That is one of our old soldiers who is in necessitous circumstances.' I took it for granted that it was some veteran Confederate, and asked to what command he belonged, when the general quietly and pleasantly added, 'He fought on the other side, but we must not remember that against him now.'

"The man afterwards came to my house and said to me, in speaking of his interview with General Lee: 'Sir, he is the noblest man that ever lived. He not only had a kind word for an old soldier who fought against him, but gave me some money to help me on my way.'

"Upon the occasion of the delivery of an address at Washington College by a distinguished orator, General Lee came to me and said: 'I saw you taking notes during the address. It was in the main very fine; but, if you propose publishing any part of it, I would suggest that you leave out all the bitter expressions against the North and the United States government. They will do us no good under our present circumstances, and I think all such expressions undignified and unbecoming.'

"I found his letter book literally filled with letters of which the following to the distinguished war governor of Virginia is a specimen:

"Near Cartersville, Va., August 28, 1865.

"Hon. John Letcher, Lexington, Va.

"My Dear Sir:—I was much pleased to hear of your return to your home, and to learn by your letter of the 2d of the kindness and consideration with which you were treated during your arrest, and of the sympathy extended to you by your former Congressional associates and friends in Washington. The conciliatory manner in which President Johnson spoke of the South must have been particularly agreeable to one who has the interest of its people so much at heart as yourself. I wish that spirit could become more general. It would go far to promote confidence, and to calm feelings which have too long existed. The questions which for years were in dispute between the State and general government, and which unhappily were not decided by the dictates of reason, but referred to the decision of war, having been decided against us, it is the part of wisdom to acquiesce in the result, and of candor to recognize the fact.

"The interests of the State are, therefore, the same as those of the United States. Its prosperity will rise or fall with the welfare of the country. The duty of its citizens, then, appears to me too plain to admit of doubt. All should unite in honest efforts to obliterate the effects of war, and to restore the blessings of peace. They should remain, if possible, in the country; promote harmony and good feeling; qualify themselves to vote; and elect to the State and general legislatures wise and patriotic men, who will devote their abilities to the interests of the country and the healing of all dissensions. I have invariably recommended this course since the cessation of hostilities, and have endeavored to practice it myself. I am much obliged to you for the interest you have expressed in my acceptance of the presidency of Washington College. If I believed I could be of advantage to the youth of the country, I should not hesitate. I have stated to the committee of trustees the objections which exist in my opinion to filling the position, and will yield to their judgment. Please present me to Mrs. Letcher and your children, and believe me most truly yours,

"R. E. LEE."

"He was a daily reader and earnest student of the Bible, and did everything in his power to promote its circulation. He said to me one day: 'There are things in the old book which I may not be able to explain, but I fully accept it as the infallible word of God, and receive its teachings as inspired by the Holy Spirit.' A man of prayer, he had his regular hours of secret devotion, always had his family altar, and neglected no opportunity of joining in the public devotions of God's people. I saw him frequently at our services in the army as he listened with moistened eyes to the truths of the gospel, or bowed in the dust as some one led the devotions of the congregation. How vividly I recall those scenes at Stonewall Jackson's headquarters when thousands of the men in gray would assemble for worship and the ragged jacket of the men of the ranks would mingle with 'the bars' and 'the stars' and 'the wreaths' of rank. Among the most devout of the officers were Jackson and his beloved Commander, R. E. Lee.

"He closed his order for the observance of the 'Fast Day,' appointed by President Davis for August 21, 1863, with these ringing words:

"Soldiers, we have sinned against Almighty God. We have forgotten his signal mercies, and have cultivated a revengeful, haughty, and boastful spirit. We have not remembered that the defenders of a just cause should be pure in His eyes, that 'our times are in His hands,' and we have relied too much on our own arms for the achievement of our independence.

"God is our refuge and our strength. Let us humble ourselves before Him. Let us confess our many sins and beseech Him to give us a higher courage, a purer patriotism, a more determined will, that He will convert the hearts of our enemies, that He will hasten the time when war, with its sorrows and sufferings, shall cease, and that He will give us a name and place among the nations of the earth.

"R. E. LEE, General."

"When his last fatal illness struck him, his tongue was paralyzed, and he was unable to speak. We have, therefore, no last words of Lee. But we need none. His life was a 'living epistle, known and read of men,' and death to him was but the welcome messenger that the Master sent to call him to 'come up higher,' to lay aside his cross, and wear his fadeless crown.

"That crown with peerless glories bright,
Which shall new luster boast,
When victors' wreaths and monarchs' gems
Shall blend in common dust."

Devotional.

"What shall I do with this sorrow that God has sent me." "Take it up and bear it and get strength and a blessing out of it." "Ah, if I only knew what blessings there were in it; if I saw how it would help me, then I could bear it like a plume!" "What shall I do with this hard, hateful duty Christ has laid right in my way?" "Do it, and grow by doing it." "Ah, yes; if I could see that it would make me grow!" In both these cases do you not see that what you are begging for is not more faith, although you think it is, but sight? Faith says not: "I see that it is good for me, and so God must have sent it;" but "God sent it, and so it must be good for me."—Philips Brooks.

The morning is the gate of the day, and should be well guarded with prayer. It is one of the threads on which the day's action are strung, and should be well knotted with devotion. If we felt more the majesty of life, we should be more careful of its mornings. He who rushes from his bed to his business, and waiteth not to worship, is foolish, as though he had not put on his clothes or cleansed his face, and as unwise as though he dashed into battle without arms or armor. Be it ours to battle in the softly flowing river of communion with God before the heat of the wilderness and the burden of the way oppresses us.—Spurgeon.

It is necessary to live the whole life with reference to its end. Childhood should be directed with reference to the youth that is to follow, youth with reference to manhood, manhood looking to old age, and all as a preparation for what comes when earthly life is done. The memories and joys and sorrows and sobering lessons of earlier experiences should throw their light upon the problem of the present, and life's present stage should be held, as a ship in its course, to what is later to come. Life can never be complete until all experiences in God's plan have come. The youth only partially lives; the strong man is not so much alive as the aged; and for the old there yet remains more of life. In our ignorance we say of the very old man, "He is nearing death," when he is really entering into life more full. The harvests from the sowing of earlier years are gathered only in age. It is indeed true that for the last the first was made.—W. Q. Rosselle.

The Personal Testimony of George Muller.

The vigor of our spiritual life will be in exact proportion to the place held by the Bible in our life and thoughts. I can solemnly state this from an experience of fifty-four years. . . . In July, 1829, I began this plan of reading from the Old and New Testaments. I have read since then the Bible through one hundred times, and each time with increasing delight. When I begin it afresh it always seems like a new book. I cannot tell how great has been the blessing from consecutive, diligent, daily study. I look upon it as a lost day when I have not had a good time over the Word of God. Friends often say to me, "Oh, I have so much to do, so many people to see, I cannot find time for Scripture study." There are not many who have had more to do than I have had. For more than half a century I have never known a day when I had not more business than I could get through. For forty years I have had annually about thirty thousand letters, and most of them have passed through my own hands. I have nine assistants always at work, corresponding in German, French, English, Italian, Russian, and other languages. As pastor of a church with twelve hundred believers, great has been my care; and, besides these, the charge of five immense orphanages, a vast work; and also my publishing depot, the printing and circulating of millions of tracts and books; but I have always made it a rule never to begin work till I have had a good season with God and then I throw myself with all my heart into this work for the day with only a few minutes interval for prayer.—Daily Bible.

Missionary.

A Christian King.—The kingdom of Bunyoro has been under the sovereignty of a very weak and incompetent ruler, and by a revolution which was altogether peacefully conducted by the big chiefs, the old king has been set aside and a new one elevated to the post. The new man is described "as full of power as a chief and leader of men, and above all a most devoted servant of Christ. There is no one in the whole of Bunyoro who has done more for the advancement of Christ's kingdom throughout the country than Andereya, who has now been made king in the place of his brother. He is a most zealous worker, and always ready to fill a gap, or walk eight to ten miles on Sunday to take a service in a little village. Constantly he did this, and it was delightful to hear him give a report of his Sunday visits to those places. He always went quite alone, and would start off in the early morning, talk to the people in the village and collect them together, then have a short service with them, bid them good-by, and commence his lonely tramp home, full of heartfelt joy at having done the Master's will."

A Story From Moffat.—Robert Moffat, the great missionary to Africa, told this story: "Not long ago a woman came to me, having travelled fifteen miles, and said that she wished for a New Testament. I said to her, 'My good woman, there is not a copy of it to be had.'

"'What! Must I return empty?'"

"'I fear that you must.'

"'Oh, she said, 'I borrowed a copy once, but the owner came and took it away and now I sit with my family sorrowful, because we have no Book to talk to us. Now we are far from anyone else. We are living at a cattle ranch on post, and we have no one to teach us but the Book. Oh, go and try to find a Book! Oh, my elder brother, do go and try to find a Book for me! Surely there is one to be found; do not let me go back empty?'"

"'I felt deeply for her, for she spoke so earnestly, and I said, 'Wait a little, and I will see what I can do.'

"'I searched here and there, and at last found a copy and brought it to the good woman.

"'Oh, if you could only have seen how her eyes brightened, how she clasped my hands and kissed them over and over again.

"'Away she went with the Book, rejoicing, with a heart overflowing with gratitude.'"

Christ is our model in missionary success. Missionary work is slow and to worldly view seems a failure. Statistics may be marshalled to prove missionary work a failure. Occasionally the Church of Christ gets a feeling of despondency because the work goes on so slowly. But Christ is our model here as everywhere. Study the success of His ministry by numbers and it is strangely like failure. Counted, His followers at His crucifixion would have made a poor showing. But Christ never counted numbers as a proof of success "My kingdom is not of this world." It was not founded upon a census. Christ's success was in invisible forces brought into contact with worldly and sinful forces. Truth was His test of triumphant success. Missionary work is to be measured by invisible forces of truth and righteousness. Such forces lift the world upward to God without the clash of armies or the noise of battle. The dawning of the day is without noise. Christ's mission upon earth is likened to the rising of the sun.

It is a high, solemn, almost awful thought for every individual man that his earthly influence, which has had a commencement, will never, through all ages, were he the very meanest of us, have an end.—Carlyle.

Those who have suffered much are like those who know many languages: they have learned to understand and learned to be understood by all.—Madame Swetchine.

Sunday School Lesson.

BY REV. H. G. HILL, D. D.

Abstinence From Evil.

I Pet. 4.1-11. Sept. 20, 1903.

Conduct is the outcome of nature, just as fruit accords with the tree. Our Saviour declares "Make the tree good and the fruit good, or the tree corrupt and the fruit corrupt." To attempt reformation by suppressing or destroying the fruit would be in vain, for an evil tree would continue to bring forth corrupt fruit. So in the moral world a depraved nature must constantly produce sinful conduct and dealing with the outward acts, will accomplish no permanent good, without a radical change in the fallen nature of man. Bad men will perform wicked actions and good men will manifest excellent conduct. Accepting the Scriptural doctrine of man's depravity, the prime need of every human being is a Divine change of nature. Without this there will be no abstinence from evil nor perfecting of holiness. In the passage considered, the apostle presents two kinds of living and some helps for abstaining from a life of evil.

I. Carnal Living.—This is described as "living in the flesh to the lusts of men." He is guilty of carnal living who permits his life to be dominated and controlled by the affections and desires of the unregenerate, depraved nature of man. Some are more gross in their carnal living than others, are actuated by baser passions, and perform more hurtful deeds. But the most refined intellectual, scientific and moral men are carnal livers if they pay no attention to God and his word, and make no provisions for a future life. Alienation from God is a sure sign of carnality, for "The carnal mind is enmity against God." Showing how the carnal live the apostle affirms, "We walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings and abominable idolatries." The heathen mingled immoral practices with their religious worship, and their best things were defiled by sin. So now the unregenerate often pollute their best domestic affections with forgetfulness of God, and their outward forms of worship with the absence of heart homage. The carnal and the worldly too often wonder that Christians do not imitate their example and indulge in their sinful deeds.

II. Helps for Avoiding Such Living.—Even for Christians to abstain from carnal living they must have continually before them the incentives supplied and the aid given by the Scriptures. To shun the carnal life the apostle says we must "arm ourselves with the mind of Christ," and determine that we will suffer rather than sin. Again he who would avoid this life must make God's revealed will his rule of conduct. He must "live to the will of God." Those shunning an evil life should remember, too, that before conversion "the time past of our lives should suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, or heathen." Another motive for abstaining from carnal living is "the account we must render to the judge of quick and dead." Still another incentive for avoiding a carnal life is that probation in this world is on the wane and "the end of all things is at hand." If we are to become good in nature and conduct but little time remains to us for securing the change.

III. The Life of Fervent Love.—If the Apostle condemns carnal living and suggests some helps for escaping it he also points to the Christian life, and its controlling principle. He says, "Above all things have fervent charity among yourselves." This "fervent charity" is Christian love, and like Paul, Peter makes this the chiefest of the graces. It is the dominant motive of a Christian life and produces many admirable results. "It covers the multitude of sins." When it is possible without wrong doing, it hides from view the multiplied sins of our fellows. It prompts to a generous ungrudging hospitality. It inclines us to use our gifts, as the stewards of God, for serving our fellow men.

Westminster League.

BY REV. HUGH W. HOON.

Missions: Japan.

Mal. 4:2,3. Topic for Sept. 27.

The following is a partial report made about Japanese missions to the Toronto convention of the Student Volunteer Movement: "The results of Japanese missions may be broadly classified under two heads, direct and indirect. There are at present 723 missionaries at work in Japan, including the wives of the missionaries. Up to last year the church membership numbered slightly less than 45,000 Protestant Christians in a population of 45,000,000. 'What are these among so many?' is asked as of old by the timid disciples; but as of old the multitude may be fed by these few if they have the blessing of the Master. These figures do not include the large accession of inquirers, the result of the recent awakening. This accession alone is estimated at 20,000.

"Christianity has literally leavened the whole lump of Japanese life. While there is but one Christian for every thousand of the population, the number of Christians in Parliament since its organization in 1890 has been fifteen each session on the average, and it is the universal verdict that these Christian members have been the moulders of parliamentary thought. Out of the seven who have held the exalted post of President of the House, four or five have been pronounced Christians. These Christian members have been particularly active in educational, social and administrative reform measures. They have stood for a sturdy form of legal integrity. Indeed it is not too much to say that it is the influence of Christianity which placed the immortal article in the Constitution of Japan, guaranteeing religious liberty to every Japanese subject. The freedom of speech and of the press has been secured. The old ordeal in criminal law has been abolished. Honesty and economy in public expenditure have been secured. Life and property are as safe there as in the homes and on the streets here.

"In international affairs Japan has come as near to recognizing the application of the Golden Rule as any nation of ancient or modern times. Treaty revision, which should guarantee to the Japanese equal representation at the council table of the nations, was secured only after a long and painful fight. The missionaries' influence was not light in determining that result. When equal treaties became a fact, a great load was lifted, and the missionary was in Japan, not by courtesy and forbearance, but by right. A direct consequence of this has been the placing of Christianity in an open and unobstructed field of work for the Japanese.

"Any statement of the more important results of Christianity in Japan, would be incomplete which did not mention the effect of Christianity in the suppression of vice. Out of the heart of Japanese life, owing to the influence of Christianity, there arises a mighty protest which even those who sit on thrones of power must hear and heed.

"Christianity has given Japan a new literature and even a new literary style; a new poetry with a new poetic metre; a new music set to the old song of Redemption, that is ever new. But highest and best of all is the spiritual influence on the lives of redeemed men and women which leads them to establish Christian homes where the name of God is known and revered. Christianity has lifted up the fallen, healed the sick, ministered to those in prison, given hope to the hopeless, courage to the downtrodden. Its ministrations have touched every class and condition of men and women. Its results cannot be known till we know as even also we are known, till the book of the ages shall have been written by the recording angel."

Such has been the effect of Christianity in an empire where little more than thirty years ago it was not known. Can we who labor at home point to like results?

Contributed.

Lynchings and their Causes

They have organized in London a society for the purpose of suppressing the "horrible" lynchings in America, especially the lynching of negroes. The following article was written as a reply to a letter requesting the writer to become a member of that society:

Mr. Henry Lloyd Wilson,
London, Eng.

Dear Sir:

Your letter condemning lynchings in the United States was duly received. In reply I can say that no one more thoroughly regrets these public disgraces than do the good people of America. But you must know from personal experience that distance and repetition lend additional horrors to these atrocious deeds. Probably they are not as revolting as they have been represented. It is evident also that you do not appreciate the conditions that obtain in our country. The liberal immigration laws which have been in force so many years in our country have served as a standing invitation to the very scum of a rotten and effete eastern civilization, until today it appears nothing short of divine mercy and grace that we have any laws at all. The number of foreign immigrants to this country during the fiscal year that has just closed was 857,000. Think of it! Nearly one million in one year. Mr. Frank P. Sargent, Commissioner General of Immigration, regards the increasing tide of immigrants to this country as a national danger. He says, "unless something is done to check the unprecedented influx of an undesirable foreign element, a very grave danger threatens our country." He adds, "I am not an alarmist, but when I see hundreds of thousands of ignorant foreigners crowding into our great cities every year, I think I can realize to some degree the danger that awaits us." You send us the low, vicious, and lawless and expect us to make law abiding citizens of them; a task which you have signally failed to accomplish with everything in your favor. The foreign elements have ever been leaders in all our great strikes, riots and scenes of bloodshed and lawlessness. Our native-born Americans are naturally law-abiding citizens, but the trouble is from without and not within. Shut out the foreign criminals and jailbirds and our laws shall be respected and upheld.

The negro has been a bone of contention ever since English vessels brought him as a slave to America three centuries ago. You do not understand the negro, nor what is popularly known in America as the "negro problem." No man understands him half so well as the man who is raised with him. Intermeddling from the outside has done more harm to the negro than anything else. Leave the negro alone and he makes a peaceable and law-abiding citizen. But deluded and enthusiastic sympathizers of the negro have often fancied that they saw great wrongs perpetrated upon him by the people of the South because they refused to be ruled by him, or to place themselves upon a social level with him. False theories of education and social equality have done more harm to the negro than all the imagined horrors of slavery could ever have produced. All right thinking people will admit that the negro ought to be educated, but it must be such an education as will qualify, instead of disqualify, him for usefulness. And it is a sad commentary upon the educational theories of his so-called friends that the educated negro of today is the leader in crime and lawlessness. Social equality of negroes and whites is very abhorrent to the refined tastes of the American people, and especially so to the people of the South. And such a thing as the amalgamation of the races is contrary to common sense and, we believe, contrary also to the divine purpose. Our people cannot, they must not, they will not submit to such wild and insane dreams of the sentimental theorist.

That is a very erroneous idea which has gained credence abroad that the white people of the South hate the negro. A few years ago Dr. Parkhurst, speaking of the negro question, said that "the only difference between the people of the North and the people of the South is that the people of the North hate the negro and deny it, while the people of the South hate the negro and confess it." And Mr. Cumming replying to him in the Presbyterian Standard of July 15th, says: "I could give you the name of a young colored man, a mulatto, and of the younger educated class, too, who is as highly respected and as greatly beloved as any ex-slave in North Carolina. I will go farther, and say deliberately that I do not know any man, young or old, rich or poor, white or black that has more friends, real friends, mind you, of all ages, colors and conditions than this worthy, industrious, kindly negro brother of the newer generation. He is a man of high Christian character and morality, is a Deacon in the Colored Presbyterian Church here in Wilmington—and, while he is the most conspicuous example that I know, he is not by any means the only young negro who is respected and loved by the best white people in the community where he lives." No! Dr. Parkhurst does not discriminate. We of the South do not hate the negro—we are the best friends of the negro, and in nearly every case give the honor to every man in his several stations and relation, as superior, inferior, or equal that is due whether he be white, black or "colored." There is a class of brutes that we unceremoniously lynch, and will continue to do so as long as they commit their nameless and abominable crimes, or until our courts adjust themselves to the exigencies of the occasion. But we discriminate between them and those who are human.

We Americans are a charitable people and are free to forget our past grievances, but we cannot ignore the plain facts of history. Every school boy has read of the heartless cruelty displayed in exiling the Acadians from their peaceful homes in Nova Scotia and sending them to the swamps of Louisiana in 1713. The opium war with China is still fresh in our memories, whereby the British government forced upon the weak and unoffending Chinaman a drug which has done more towards destroying his nation than even your iniquitous rum trade in Africa is doing to decimate those ignorant savages. We are again reminded of your heartless cruelty when we see you impose exorbitant taxes upon the downtrodden peoples of India, and then, when the years of famine come, you leave them to starve while you spend your millions butchering the brave Boers of South Africa, or call upon charity of other nations to feed the famished multitudes of India.

And why all these atrocious crimes? For the sake of the almighty dollar. Your whole history has been a bloody one. And if we could forget these things we might receive your advice with better grace. But you will not let us forget. It is said that "one example is better than a thousand precepts." David prayed that his own sins should be forgiven and his own conduct corrected, and adds, "Then shall sinners be converted unto thee." I will not be uncharitable, but I shall remind you of the fact that our Saviour spoke of inconsistent critics as being hypocritical and suggested that it would be more consistent for the reformation to begin at home. "How canst thou say to thy brother, Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thyself beholdest not the beam that is in thine own eye. Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye."

J. S. Baird.

The only way to be loved is to be and to appear lovely; to possess and to display kindness, benevolence, tenderness; to be free from selfishness and to be alive to the welfare of others.—Jay.

Do you think you can know yourself by looking into yourself? Never. You can know what you are only by looking out of yourself.—Ruskin.

The Secret Prayer Life.

By John R. Mott.

I. Importance of Secret Prayer.—Secret prayer is essential as a preparation for public prayer. The power of all social or public prayer lies in the hidden springs of secret prayer. Without a very real secret prayer life there is danger lest in our praying in public we be more conscious of the presence of men than of God. Its importance is also seen in the fact that each man has his own individual needs, temptations, easily besetting sin, soul struggles and longings, which he can lay before God with far greater freedom and definiteness in secret than in the presence of others. There is a deeper reason. To become Christ-like, which should be the ambition of every true Christian, we must practice the presence of God. This is but another expression for secret prayer. It suggests a yet deeper reason for a genuine secret prayer life. To live the abiding life which Christ has commanded, the secret prayer life is implied. It is impossible to be consciously abiding in Christ without a real and constant secret communion. In a word, secret prayer is prayer at its best. It is prayer most free from all insincerity. It is the true gauge of our prayer life; for it is the standard by which God judges it.

II. Hindrances to Secret Prayer.—Those things which spoil our secret communion with God need only be mentioned in order to be recognized. Indolence is a decided hindrance to secret prayer. Real prayer is the most intense act a man performs. More important than the most earnest thinking upon a problem, more important than a personal interview to influence an individual, more important than addressing and swaying an audience—far more important than these and all other forms of activity is the act of coming into vital communion with the great God of the universe, and wielding the forces of the prayer kingdom. Surely this demands our best. David was able to say, "I give myself unto prayer." Let us not be satisfied with bringing to this supremely important work only a part of our being.

Haste is equally an enemy to secret prayer. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee," not whose mind simply now and then turns to Thee. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength," not they that glance at Him and run away. This passage is even better rendered, "They that wait upon the Lord shall change their strength," that is, they that spend enough time in actual communion with God to become really conscious of their absolute dependence on Him, they shall change the mere energy of the flesh for the power of God. It takes time to effect this transfer.

In how many cases is formality a hindrance to the prayer life. Have we not often found ourselves upon our knees, nominally in the act of prayer, yet not conscious of the words we are uttering; worse than this; not conscious of what our words involve; and still worse, not conscious of Him to whom we are addressing our words? This is formality.

Another hindrance, which in itself includes a multitude, is iniquity. This cuts the nerve of all prayer. Has God ever been known to hear a prayer from a heart in which any form of iniquity was fostered or tolerated? It is "the supplication of a righteous man" which "availeth much in its working." A last hindrance, not to mention others, is lack of preparation. We regard this as so important that we shall pass it by here and speak of it more fully later.

III. Place for Secret Prayer.—Muhammadans tell us that one prayer offered in Mecca is worth eighty thousand prayers offered anywhere else. The followers of some other religions entertain similar beliefs. A few months since, as we traveled along the base of Mount Gerizim, the words of Christ in this connection were brought vividly to memory: "Believe Me, the hour cometh when neither in this mountain nor in Jerusalem shall ye worship the Father . . . But the hour cometh, and is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and truth"—wherever they may be. Yet Christ clearly taught that there is a place for prayer to which He attaches special importance. Where is that place? "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thine inner chamber, and having shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall recompense thee." In this short passage, by three-fold reiteration, He strongly emphasizes the importance of the secret place, Landor says: "Solitude is the ante-chamber of God; only one step more, and you can be in His immediate presence."

Is there not need of emphasizing the advantages of solitude in this age of so many organizations and social movements? There is no danger that men will spend too much time alone with God. When a man says he obtains more help from social than from secret prayer, is he not in spiritual peril? There is danger that he is depending more upon the presence and faith of others than upon personal contact and vital communion with his God.

IV. Time for Secret Prayer.—Each person should have regular, stated seasons for private prayer. We all remember that Daniel had three such seasons. One reference would lead us to infer that David, during a part of his life at least, had seven regular seasons for prayer each day. Each one must decide for himself the number and the distribution of the times he will give to these spiritual exercises. It would seem, however, that all might agree upon the importance of having a regular prayer season three times a day. Surely the most appropriate way to begin the day is with God! It is the only fitting way to close the day. And what is more needful or helpful than to slow down the machinery at midday that we may hold close communion with him!

But we would plead not only for stated, but also for special seasons, for secret prayer. Such was the custom of Christ. We all remember His special and prolonged prayer before the choosing of the twelve; how He went apart for special prayer at the time of great temptation, when the people wished to make Him king; and how He nerved Himself for the final crisis of His life. The time we give to special prayer will be determined by the special emergencies, temptations, difficulties, and opportunities which confront us in our daily experience.

In speaking of special seasons for secret prayer, the importance of ejaculatory prayer cannot be too strongly urged. This means the looking up to God many, many times in the day, no matter where we are—whether alone or in a crowd. He who has not learned what ejaculatory prayer means has not learned the principal secret of overcoming temptation or of living the life most pleasing to God.

One of the most helpful features in several conventions recently attended has been the holding of a quiet day by the delegates assembled together. Why not carry out this same idea personally in secret?

The holiest young man I have ever met in the colleges had a habit of spending almost an entire day at the beginning of each month in communion with God.

What time in the day should we devote especially to secret prayer? It would seem that Robert Murray McChesney has answered this question in the best way possible: "I ought to spend the best hours of the day in communion with God. It is my noblest and most fruitful employment, and is not, therefore, to be thrust into any corner." It is possible for a Christian to accomplish more for the Kingdom of Christ by a faithful secret prayer life than by the most active public life without it. What mighty triumphs the Church would witness if individual Christians everywhere would recognize the possibilities of their priesthood unto God, and humbly fulfil their responsibilities.

How much time shall we devote to secret prayer? Time is the most expensive coin which we can pay, and yet God requires us to use this kind of coin. Without doubt it takes time to become spiritual. It will pay us to cut down anywhere else rather than in the time we devote to prayer. Did you ever know of a man who regretted spending too much time alone with God? Dr. Gordon told us one day at Northfield that the one regret of the holiest man he had ever known was that he had spent too much time with men and not enough with God. At the close of his wonderfully spiritual life, Henry Martyn mourned that he had devoted "too much time to public works and too little to private communion with God." It is indeed true that "He that saveth his time from prayer shall lose it. And he that loseth his time for communion with God shall find it again in added blessing, and power, and fruitfulness."

V. Preparation for Secret Prayer.—Secret prayer is our most important work, and yet as a rule we plan for it the least. If we are called upon to conduct a meeting or deliver an address, we think nothing of spending hours in preparation. Not long since a man many times a millionaire granted me ten minutes of his time for an interview. I wished to enlist his interest and cooperation in a special matter. I spent several hours in preparing myself to make the most of this opportunity. It was a humiliating thought which came to me afterwards that I was not in the habit of giving myself with like earnestness and thoroughness to preparation for meeting God. It is interesting to notice that the followers of certain other religions give so much time to preparation for their prayers. Our Muhammadan cook on the way through Palestine must have devoted several hours each week to mere bodily preparation for his five daily seasons of prayer. In this connection the warning given in the book of Ecclesiastes is most impressive: "Let not thine heart be hasty to utter anything before God; for God is in heaven and thou upon earth. Therefore let Thy words be few." Our prayers are not measured by their extent, but by their content. If we have an hour to spend in prayer, might it not be best to spend the larger part of it in preparation? Chalmers was in the habit of spending a day each month alone with God, in meditation, self-examination, Bible study, and prayer. He took ample time at the beginning of each of these days to plan and prepare for the best use of the day. How shall we prepare for secret prayer? A few hints may be given: 1. Devote ample time to self-examination and meditation. It is always well before prayer to pause and test ourselves with such questions as: To whom am I going? For what purpose? On what ground? With what motive? In what spirit? With what confidence?

2. Use a prayer list or cycle.

3. Obtain and use constantly a little book entitled "Scripture Promises; or, The Christian's Inheritance," published by the American Tract Society. It classifies under appropriate headings hundreds of the promises of the Bible as a special help in prayer.

4. There are four books on prayer which should be read by every Christian: "Prayer: Its Nature and Scope," by Dr. Henry Clay Trumbull; "With Christ in the School of Prayer," by Andrew Murray; "Secret Prayer," by Principal H. C. G. Moule; and "The Still Hour," by Professor Austin Phelps. These books can not be too strongly recommended. In no sense do they cover the same ground. Might I not also recommend three pamphlets which have been wonderfully used in promoting the prayer life: "Prayer and Missions," by Robert E. Speer; "Secret Prayer a Great Reality," by Henry Wright; and "The Practice of the Presence of God," by Brother Lawrence. We should give these a wide circulation.

5. Of very great importance among the helps to secret prayer is the special study of the Bible with reference to prayer. The Bible is the only authoritative text book on prayer. It alone acquaints us ourselves, others, and the world from God's point of view. Bible study gives prayer substance, reality, life, and power. Without devotional Bible study there can be no true communion; for we need to reiterate the thought that secret prayer is not monologue, but dialogue. Experience and testimony prove that the men who have neglected devotional Bible study have weakened in their prayer life. Yes, Bible study alone reveals the possibilities of the prayer kingdom and how they may be realized.

6. But preeminent among the helps to prayer are the Great Helpers in prayer—Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit. In and through them alone do we find our true preparedness for the irresistible prayer life. We should even remain in Christ's school of prayer, letting Him teach us by His example, by His prayers by His precepts, commands and promises about prayer. And with sincerity and faith should always acknowledge that "we know not how to pray as we ought; but the Spirit Himself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.—Daily Bible.

Lord Kelvin—England's Greatest Living Scientist.

Although a Scotchman by descent, Lord Kelvin was born in Belfast, in 1824. His father, Dr. James Thomson, was a well-known mathematician in his day, who filled the chair in mathematics both at the Royal Belfast Academical Institution and at the University of Glasgow. From his father the present Lord Kelvin clearly imbibed that taste for mathematics which marks all his scientific investigations. Together with his brother, Thomson studied at Glasgow College. From Glasgow he went to St. Peter's College, Cambridge, graduating in 1845. That his main work at Cambridge was mathematical goes without saying.

Even before his Glasgow student days came to an end, William Thomson's original work in science had begun. His first mathematical papers, written before he entered Cambridge, discussed the Fourier mathematics, then but little known. In 1842, when but seventeen years of age, he published a paper on "The Uniform Motion of Heat in Homogeneous Solid Bodies and its connection with the Mathematical Theory of Electricity." Even in that early paper he points out the analogy between certain problems in the conduction of heat and in the mathematical theory of electricity and magnetism; and he shows how to make use of solutions of the one set of problems in the conduction of heat and in the mathematical theory of electricity and magnetism; and he shows how to make use of solutions of the one set of problems in order to arrive at important conclusions with regard to the other. The papers which we have mentioned were followed by a treatise on "The Linear Motion of Heat," which contained principles later so powerfully applied to the question of geological time.

Owing to the very limited amount of space at our disposal it is impossible even to mention the many papers with which Thomson enriched the literature of pure physics. In the early forties electricity was passing through a transition stage. The discoveries of Faraday had opened up an unsuspected field. The function of the dielectric had been discovered and traced out; and the doctrine of lines of force had been expounded. Thenceforth action at a distance, so far as electricity and magnetism were concerned, was a notion of the past—an hypothesis utterly untenable and incapable of representing the facts of the case. Thomson eagerly grasped the truth; and using the new discoveries as the basis of his mathematical investigations, gave to them a mathematical form, which rendered them of practical service to later electricians.

Thomson's early investigations were soon translated into the language of "the potential;" and the connection was established between these results and the theories of energy, with which Joule was just then concerning himself. Thus it was that Thomson, at the early age of twenty-one, became the exponent of doctrines, the full value of which can scarcely be said to have been appreciated until he had reached his fortieth year. In 1867, the word "potential," which is now one of the stock terms familiar to every electrical student, was unknown except to a few advanced mathematicians.

At twenty-two Thomson was elected Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Glasgow—a chair which he has filled with honor and distinction up to the present time.

As we have already seen, even in his student days, Thomson had been attracted to the dynamical theory of heat. He was one of the first to appreciate the importance of the work of Joule. One of his earliest papers on thermodynamics shows how the theory of Carnot may be adapted to the modern doctrine of heat. Thomson's papers on the subject of thermodynamics constitute one of the most valuable and most remarkable contributions made to modern physical science. In 1852 the principle of the dissipation of energy was announced, in connection with which experimental determinations were undertaken both by Joule and Thomson. More than one joint paper of rare value was contributed to these two life-long friends.

In 1855-56 the problem of ocean telegraphy was placed before scientific men for solution. Thomson ardently threw himself into the work and gave to the world the first practical solution. Only a brief account of this, his most practical work can here be given.

Following the experiments of Faraday, Thomson had investigated mathematically the retardation of signals, and had formulated the law of squares, now so familiar in telegraphy. When the possibility of laying down a cable across the Atlantic was discussed, he pointed out that a conductor 2,000 miles long, unless unprecedentedly large cross section, might prove a commercial failure, on account of the slowness of the transmission of signals. The warnings of Thomson were not heeded. It was only when the 1858 cable was completed that the full force of his contention was appreciated. When Whitehouse, Thomson's rival, failed to make good his promises of transmitting messages at a fair rate of speed, Thomson was sent for by the director of the company, and asked to provide an instrument that would satisfy the conditions necessary for its success.

Experimenting with the reflection of the image of a candle thrown from his concave eye-glass on a sheet of white paper in a fairly lighted room. Thomson judged that the flame of a paraffin lamp reflected from a silvered mirror would give an image bright enough for the convenient reading of telegraphic signals. Such was the germ of the mirror-galvanometer. Mirrors and instruments were soon made; and in 1858 the mirror-galvanometer was successfully applied to the cable. The instrument is the first of Thomson's many inventions. With characteristic generosity he had intended to abandon the instrument to the public, but was finally induced by the company to take out patents. The fruit of his labors in developing the sounding machine and the mariner's compass he was also willing to leave unprotected. Sounding by piano wire was offered to the Admiralty, as well as the compass; but he found in each case that the only way of securing public attention to inventions was to patent them and work the patents.

In 1867 the siphon-recorder was invented and patented by Thomson. Three years later it was used on ocean telegraph cables. Up to the present time the mirror-galvanometer and the siphon-recorder are the only instruments by which signals are read on very long submarine lines.

For five or six years he devoted himself to electrical problems of transcendent difficulty. Almost every department of electricity bears the impress of his work. That a scientist of his attainments should have received honors from every country in the world is but a small acknowledgment of the valuable work he has done in modern science. He succeeded Sir George Stokes as president of the Royal Society in 1890, and was created first Lord Kelvin in 1892. He is a Fellow of almost every scientific society of note throughout the world, bears degrees conferred upon him by half the universities of Europe, and has received numerous medals for his eminent inventions and discoveries. In 1876 he was a judge at the Centennial Exhibition.

In 1884 he visited America to attend the Montreal meeting of the British Association. In 1897, the date of his last visit he attended another meeting of the British Association held at Toronto.—Scientific American.

The Cause of His Kingdom.

The long silence of your correspondent was not due to want of interest or want of interesting events, but want of time to write. It is almost out of the question to travel and write at the same time.

This summer brought your correspondent finer opportunities of travel, seeing the great West and visiting the people throughout the West. In addition to the Christian Endeavor convention at Denver in July, the Iowa Epworth League convention, and the U. P. Training School, of Iowa Synod, both held at Colfax, Iowa. Besides these large assemblies of people, the writer has been busy preaching and presenting the cause of moral reform from pulpits on Sabbath and holding meetings through the week. In this way many churches of different names were visited and many people were reached with the truth.

The phenomenal growth of the West is not conducive to religious or spiritual interests. The fabulous growth of Western cities has a corresponding growth of Sabbath desecration, intemperance and crime of all sorts. In some of these cities saloons are open on Sabbath, and business houses as on week days, and worst of all, no effort made to close them by the authorities of the law. An extract may be given here from a reliable source as to moral conditions in St. Louis, Mo.:

"A circular letter is in hand from an association of butchers which has decided to close shops on Sabbath, beginning September 1st." The association asks the pastors to set this fact before their people, and encourage the withholding of trade from those butchers who go on keeping open shop on Sabbath. The association deplores "the tendency to ignore the Lord's day," and "that four thousand retail merchants and seven thousand retail clerks in St. Louis are deprived of the opportunity to attend church because consumers purchase their supplies on Sundays."

Their movement for closing is very gratifying. But their motive is probably not to get a chance to "attend church," nor real sorrow over the desecration of the Lord's day, for the same association has the city posted with large colored sheets announcing a great picnic and barbecue, games and races, and prizes for first Sabbath in September. It is no easy task to push church work or make spiritual progress in a city where such moral conditions exist. Where Sabbath desecration becomes universal, churches become empty. Besides, failure to maintain the lawful observance of the Lord's day leaves the way for the saloon to be open on Sabbath. If butcher shops may be open on Sabbath, the saloon claims the same right. In many of the Western cities the saloon is open on Sabbath day and night. These two evils combined constitute a fearful condition for any community. It fosters crime of all sorts and is hostile to the presence of true religion. These twin evils are closely related, are mutual in interest and work to each other's hand. Let the standards of Sabbath observance be lowered, or broken down anywhere, and the saloon soon goes in and opens up.

What is most needed in Western States and cities, is the enforcement of existing laws upon moral questions. Many good examples are in proof of this. In most parts of Kansas prohibition does prohibit. We found some model temperance cities in that State. A beautiful little city in that State can be named in which the temperance sentiment is absolute and universal. In that same city business prospers, society is good, life is safe, churches prosper. It is a desirable place to live. Prohibition is possible and is found by actual experiment the best policy. Even from a financial point of view prohibition pays. Freeland and Greely, Colorado, both have absolute prohibition stipulated in their charters. They are beautiful, peaceful and prosperous towns. To these should be added Colorado Springs. These towns could not be induced to change their charters. Political parties are responsible for the change where a reversal of the law has taken place. This is true in Iowa. Iowa was a prohibitory State, and had a strong prohibition sentiment, but political partisan action reversed the law. The dominant political party in power in Pennsylvania could easily have made a constitutional prohibitory laws in 1889; but it refused to do so. Indeed that party was most responsible for the defeat of that measure. Vermont, after a long period of prohibition, has reversed her law against the will of the people, it is stated.

Something better than political reform is needed to-day throughout our country. A genuine revival of religion would afford most relief. The evangelization of our country is most imperative. This is the most patriotic work we could do at present in the best interest of our beloved land. Some of the denominations lead in systematic effort in this direction, but they are not sustained nor supported by co-operation and but little comes of it. The Northern Presbyterian Church made a concentrated effort a year or more ago with some good results. Co-operation on the part of leading churches might have been attended with greater results.

A forward movement is now on foot. The evangelization of our own country is now the great, grand end to be kept in view. Our country for Christ at once should be the prayer of every true Christian patriot. but evangelization and moral reform go hand in hand. Along these lines the kingdom has been growing since the days of John Knox and Martin Luther. The fact must be recognized that moral conditions in the community and in the country at large have much to do as to the welfare of the Church. The Church suffers just now from the moral state of our country so unfavorable to pure religion. The chariot wheels drag because of obstacles in the way. These obstacles are detrimental both to Church and State, and are deadly enemies to religion and good government. It is the duty of the State to suppress immorality, to punish crime, to make human life safe and sacred. That is the sacred provinces of civil government. For this end the State exists in part. It is so specified in all our State constitutions with perhaps three exceptions.

The missionary spirit is in the air and rapidly growing. This is one of the hopeful signs of the times. When the Church responds to her Lord's command and commission, she will receive power to fulfil her mission in the world. It is a question of obedience to the Lord and obedience is a condition to the richest blessing. The missionary spirit carried into action includes most of duty to God and man, involves most of the gifts and graces. The times are propitious in our country if indifference to our higher interests could be overcome, and greater concentration of forces be obtained upon essential lines of work.

The statistics of last Church year show conclusively that sanctified, systematic effort at home and abroad are well rewarded. These results are by no means all that we could wish, but they are enough to show that God, having blest feeble efforts, will crown more united and more consecrated efforts in His name and for His Kingdom with correspondingly large measures of blessings. To this end let us all labor and pray and His name shall be glorified on earth while His praises are sung in heaven.

W. H. McMASTER.

Blairsville, Pa., Sept. 3, 1903.

The Problem of Forgiveness.

A moral problem of no little difficulty, and which clothes itself in a myriad form, is that of the penitent whose sin returns upon him with apparent relentlessness of retribution, no matter how serious and genuine his repentance may have been. To many people the problem is one of such complexity as apparently to be impossible of solution. It is seldom an easy thing to dissolve partnership with evil, or to find one's way at a moment's notice into the full privilege of saintship. The consequences of wrong doing are as a flaming sword between the sinner and the tree of life.

Take, for example, the case of a son who has brought disgrace upon an honored name. Can repentance bring back that which was forfeited, or compensate a deeply wronged father, or smooth out the lines of sorrow from the face of a suffering mother? Does not the punishment of sin continue in the apparent inevitableness of the sequence of penalty, a penalty in which the nearest and dearest must also share?

Or suppose a man whose evil conduct, if repented of shall mean a broken heart to one or both of two trusting women whose evil fortune it has been to have loved him "not wisely, but too well." The first step on the road to righteousness means bitter agony to all concerned in such a case as this. A life of deceit is not atoned for so easily that the sinner can at once enter the full odor of sanctity, while his victims are drinking the cup of humiliation to the dregs.

What of him again whose fortune has been built upon a lie whose very success is a curse, but who cannot rid himself of it without bringing calamity upon the heads of the undeserving, and for whom restitution is impossible? What, too, of the ruined constitution, the loathsome body, upon which fell disease has written God's verdict upon sin? Does repentance cause the flesh to come again as the flesh of a little child? Doubtless many men are held back from acceptance of the Gospel appeal because of such considerations as these. They know life too well to expect that the past can be wiped out, or the poignancy of the present be taken away by a tardy act of confession and amendment.

Nor, indeed, is it desirable that we should prophesy smooth things in the presence of such experiences. Sin is sin, and the way of transgressors is hard. Palliatives and excuses avail nothing against the grim penalties that follow upon the deliberate mis-use of moral opportunities. And yet, if the Gospel has no message for such as these, it can scarcely be called a Gospel at all. What are we to say to them?

In the first place it should be remembered that sin is offence against God, no matter what the consequences may or may not have been—"The Lord looketh on the heart." There is no ratio between sin and penalty. A man might be punished to all eternity without being cleaned from his sin. Remission of sin stands in no relation to what are commonly called the penal consequences of sin. God in Christ forgives in response to the cry of penitence freely and fully.

Still, it may reasonably be expected that with remission of sin shall be associated some remission of penalty likewise. A loving parent does not usually forgive his child and punish him as though the word had not been spoken. Neither does our heavenly Father do so, albeit His ways are not as our ways, He could, if He chose, do away with all the penal consequences of a sinner's wrong doing, and sometimes He does so, as probably many humble Christians will thankfully testify. But if any are suffered to remain, as in the cases given above, the whole character of the experience is changed, once the sinner has become the child of God. Pain ceases to be punishment, and becomes the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ. The curse becomes the cross; the stains of evil become the stigma, "the marks of the Lord Jesus."

Herein are God's ways marvellous and just, as well as merciful and wise. There can be no better discipline for any Christian character than that which will do most to keep him humbly dependent upon the grace of God. Hence it is that God uses what are called the penal consequences of sin as the very means wherewith to ennoble and beautify the penitent soul. To see a loved one suffer through our fault is a severe chastisement, much more difficult to bear than our own suffering would be, but if there is any good in us at all such an experience will bring it out when we have our heart right toward God. But is it not hard on the sufferer? Quite so. The principle of vicarious suffering runs throughout all sentient existence. Is it present in all the heights and depths of the moral and spiritual experience of humanity; it culminates at the Cross of Cavalry. Nay, it is a benediction for the sufferer himself, mysteriously so sometimes, in spite of appearances.

If then we are asked for an evangel for a man whose moral entanglements seem to inhibit him from the higher life, we can only say, Take your burden to the cross, and then play the man! It is as certain as anything can be that your Heavenly Father does not mean you to be forever committed to the custody of sin, or to wander in the cheerless wildness of sorrow. The holiness of Christ is offered to you, is yours, though you must bear the cross to attain it. Every follower of Christ must assume the cross. In your case God has laid upon you the very one which most of all will serve to remind you of the hole of the pit whence you were digged. If you had not this one, then some other you must have, or you have no part with the Master. Cease to think of it as punishment, and remember it only as the love of a Master who never spares the loved. God will not fail you. If any man wants to live the Christian life he shall have the chance. There is no problem too great for Christ, and no need which the Gospel can not meet. Things which have seemed impossible before repentance wear an entirely different aspect when the life is wholly given up to God. The peace of God which passeth understanding is not merely a gift to a few of the best of His children, but to all who trust in Him.—R. J. Campbell in British Weekly.

Building a Christian.

"I never let fools or bairns see my work until it is done," said a famous Scotch painter; he knew that no production of human art could be rightly judged until it was completed. I remember that when I first saw Cologne Cathedral, nearly fifty years ago, it had a stumpy and unimpressive appearance, for it was towerless. The next time I saw the edifice it was disfigured by scaffoldings on which workmen were busy. But when, in the summer of 1894, I beheld the completed towers in their flashing splendor, I felt that it was a mighty and magnificent poem written in marble.

That illustrates the way in which the Master builds a true Christian. The Bible declares that the Christian is "Christ's workmanship created anew unto good works." Any one who looked at a company of church member in a prayer meeting or at a sacramental table might say that some of them were quite imperfect specimens of workmanship, as he could testify from intimate acquaintance. Very true; but if that same person wished to purchase a melodeon he would not go into the manufactory where the different parts were being fashioned; he would go into the sales room and inspect the completed instrument. This world is the great workshop in which Jesus Christ by his Spirit constructs Christian character. "Ye are God's building," wrote the Apostle Paul to his brethren at Corinth. Of himself he wrote at another time, "Not as though I have already attained, either am already perfect." He was still in the hands of his divine and loving architect. The scaffoldings were not yet taken down, and the work of grace was not yet completed.

It is easy to discover some flaws in even the best men and women; but the critic must consider what materials our Master has to work with in frail and fallen human nature, so often disfigured and defaced by innate depravity. Napoleon used to say that "he had to make his marshals out of mud." Certainly no power less than that of the Holy Spirit could have constructed such a conscientious and effective Christian as John Newton out of so hardened and desperate a sinner. A very eloquent and spiritually-minded minister once said to me, "Before I was converted I wondered how any one could live in the house with me." During my forty-four years of pastorate, when I received converts into the Church, I often recognized the fact that one candidate for membership had been reared in a frivolous and wordly family, and another had a naturally violent temper, and another was constitutionally timid and irresolute, and still another had to contend with hereditary sensualities of temperament or practice. Some of the overhasty and headlong had to be held back and tested, and some desponding doubters had to be encouraged. A study of the experience of our blessed Lord in building twelve disciples out of the material that came to his hands is full of solemn suggestion, and one of those twelve tumbled into ruin under the very eyes of the Master Builder!

Character building is like cathedral building—a gradual process. No Christian is born full grown, else there would be no sense in the divine injunctions to "grow in grace" and to "press toward the goal of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." The cornerstone of every truly regenerated character is the Lord Jesus; other foundations can no one build on without risking a wreck in this world and eternal ruin in the next world. The first act of saving faith is the joining of the new convert to the atoning Saviour. Then upon that solid foundation must be added the courage, the meekness, the patience, the consciousness, the honesty, the loving kindness and the other graces that make for godliness. Let no young beginner be disheartened. Oaks do not grow like hollyhocks. A solid Christian character cannot be reared in a day—nor is it to be done simply by Sabbath services or by sacraments.

The Bible is the only plumb-line to build by; and it must be used constantly. All the showy ornamentation that a man can put on his edifice amounts to nothing, if his walls are perpendicular. Sometimes we see a flimsy structure whose bulging walls are shored up by props and skids to keep them from tumbling into the street. I am afraid that there are thousands of reputations in trade, in politics, in social life, and even in Church life that are shored up by various devices. No Christian can defy God's inexorable law of gravitation. It is mere question of time how soon every character will "fall in," if it is not based on the rock, and built according to Jesus Christ's plumb-line. It may go down in this world; it is sure to go down in the next. Let every one, therefore, take heed how he or she buildeth; for the last great day will test the work, of what sort it is.

Finally, let us all bear in mind that if we are Christ's workmanship, we must let our wise and loving Master take his own way. We must allow him to use his own tools. Oh, how much cutting and chiseling we often need! How keen, too, and sharp is the chisel which he sometimes uses! The sound of his hammers is constantly heard; and with it are also heard the wondering cries of some sufferer who exclaims, "Why art thou applying to me the file, the saw and the hammers?" Be still and know that whom he loveth he chasteneth! If we are Christ's building, then let him fashion us according to his divine ideal of beauty, at whatever cost to our selfishness or pride, or indolence or vainglory. Christ working in us, and upon us—and we working with Christ and for him—that is the process that produces such structures as he will present before his Father and the holy angels.

Nothing is too small, and nothing is too great, that involves a Christian influence before a sharp-eyed world. We are to be his witnesses; Jesus Christ builds Christians to be looked at and to be studied. He rears us to be spiritual lighthouses in a sin-darkened world. Michael Angelo said that he "carved for eternity." In an infinitely higher sense is every blood-redemmed Christian carved and fashioned and upbuilt to be a habitation of God through his Spirit, to his praise, and unto his everlasting glory.—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D., in Christian Work and Evangelist.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL:	Page
Event and Comment.....	3
Literature, History and Life.....	4
The Missionaries and the Apostles.....	4-5
More than a Conqueror.....	5-7
DEVOTIONAL:.....	8
MISSIONARY:	8
SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON:
Abstinence from Evil. Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D.....	9
WESTMINSTER LEAGUE.
Missions: Japan. Rev. H. W. Hoon.....	9
CONTRIBUTED:
Lynchings and their Causes. J. S. Baird.....	10
The Secret Prayer Life. John R. Mott.....	11-13
The Cause of His Kingdom. Rev. W.H. McMaster.	13-14
The Problem of Forgiveness. Rev. R.J. Campbell.	14-15
Building a Christian. Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D. D.,	15
CHURCH NEWS.....	16-19
THE WORLD .....	20-21
The Home Circle.....	22-23
Marriages and Deaths.....	24
The Household.....	24-25
Our Young People.....	26-29
Our Little Folks.....	30-33
Clippings.....	34

PERSONALS.

Rev. W. R. Potter changes his address from Paint Lick, Ky., to Gaffney, S. C.

Rev. G. A. Grillboitzer has changed his address from Heathman, Miss., to Sterling, Va.

Rev. J. E. Booker, of Rockbridge county, Va., has accepted a call to Timber Ridge church.

Ebenezer church, Roanoke Presbytery, has called Rev. J. M. W. Elder as pastor for half his time.

Rev. E. H. Harding, of Farmville, Va., filled the Second Church pulpit, Charlotte, N. C., last Sabbath.

Rev. Geo. L. Leyburn, of St. Louis, changes his street address from 3511 Bell Ave., to 2418 Washington Ave.

Rev. Samuel J. Smith, pastor of First Presbyterian Church, Columbia, S. C., returned last week from his vacation, spent at Atlantic City, Philadelphia, and his old home in Greensboro, and filled his pulpit last Sabbath morning and evening.

VIRGINIA.

Opening of Union Theological Seminary

The old seminary has entered upon her centennial decade in full life and vigor. The ninety-second annual session opened last Wednesday under circumstances of bright promise. Eighteen new men were matriculated, and there are still some seven others who will be in a few days, so that with the old students who return the number for the session will be about sixty-five or seventy.

The opening exercises were held in Watts Chapel at four o'clock in the afternoon of Sept. 9th and were attended by the pastors of Richmond and a number of other friends from the city, as well as by the members of the Seminary community. This community, by the way, is growing by the addition of the most desirable elements, the latest comer to the neighborhood being Mr. S. H. Hawes who originated the General Assembly's present scheme of ministerial relief. He and his family have quite recently moved into their attractive new house with its spacious grounds, just opposite the residence of Rev. Dr. James P. Smith and Mrs. Anna Jamieson.

It was a pleasure to see all the members of the regular faculty present again, Dr. Moore among them, looking well and strong after his good rest abroad and his months of travel and investigation in Bible Lands. Dr. I. S. McElroy, the Assembly's Secretary of the Executive committee of Ministerial Relief, led in the opening prayer, and the address was made by Dr. Jounson, a solid, strong, practical address to the Seminary students based upon the Apostle's exhortation to the Christians at Corinth, "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong. Let all that ye do be done in love." He closed with the familiar, but always sincere and hearty invitation of the faculty to the students to visit them in their homes and to take part freely in the genial, refining, Christian social life for which the community has been celebrated throughout its entire history.

In addition to the other new students Rev. J. S. Crowley, formerly of our Congo mission, comes for a course of post-graduate study, and also Rev. Y. Sasakura, of Nagoya, Japan, who has been for nine years pastor of a flourishing church there.

The Seminary is in perfect working order also as to the mere externals. The buildings are apparently as clean and fresh as the day they were finished by the contractor. The beautiful grounds, with their wide spreading carpet of verdure and well kept white stone walks and drives, and flourishing shade trees, and glossy dark green hedge running like a well built wall around the entire twelve acres of campus, were never more lovely. One of the new men, who made a brilliant record at the university as a student, after watching the blue Coveuanter flag flying from the tower of Watts Hall over all this peaceful beauty where a few decades ago the red wave of civil war rolled round Richmond—the great grass covered fortifications which were thrown up to resist Dahlgren's raid being but a pistol shot distant on one side and the famous and beautiful capital of the Confederacy on the other—remarked that a man who could not study in such a place as this could not study at all. And the Church may

Church News.

The Causes of the Church.
September.

Our offering for this month is for the Assembly's Home Missions. Remit collections to W. A. Powell, Treasurer, Atlanta, Ga.

- January and September, Assembly's Home Missions, W. A. Powell, Treasurer, Atlanta, Georgia.
- February, June, August, Presbyterial and Synodical Home Missions.
- March, Publication and Colportage, R. E. Magill, Treasurer, Richmond, Virginia.
- April, November, Education of Candidates for the Ministry, G. W. McRae, Treasurer, Memphis, Tenn.
- May, October, Foreign Missions, Erskine Reed, Treasurer, Box 457 Nashville, Tenn.
- July, Ministerial Relief, S. H. Hawes, Treasurer, Richmond, Virginia.
- Third Sabbath in October, Bible Cause, American Bible Society, New York City.
- Thanksgiving Offering, November, The Orphans.
- December, Colored Evangelization, Dr. John Little, Treasurer, Tuscaloosa, Alabama.
- Last Sabbath in December, Assembly's Home and School, S. W. Somerville, Treasurer, Fredericksburg, Va.

confidently expect to hear a good account of her prospective ministers in this respect. They have evidently settled down to a diligent, careful, thoroughgoing year's work.

Dr. Moore remarked after reading Dr. Flourney's delightful sketch of Dr. B. M. Smith in last week's Standard that the principal desideratum of the Seminary's fine collection of oil portraits of Presbyterian worthies was a good oil portrait of his venerated predecessor, Dr. Smith, as no man who had ever served the Seminary was more worthy of such a memorial on its walls. It is hoped that before long a portrait of Dr. Smith may be placed among the others in the Spence Library along with Dr. Rice, Dr. Baxter, Dr. Dabney, Dr. Peck and the other members of this goodly company of men of God.

The first winner of the Moses D. Hoge Memorial Fellowship of post-graduate study, the highest distinction within the gift of the Seminary, was a Virginian, Mr. J. Gray McAllister, B. D., pastor elect of the church at Farmville, who had charge of the classes in Old Testament study last year and whom it was a pleasure to see at the opening exercises this session, being on his way to his new charge. The second student to win this distinction is from South Carolina, Mr. J. B. Massey, B. D., who is Moses D. Hoge Fellow for the current session.

There will be interesting news to report later in regard to the special lectures provided for the students this session in addition to the regular lectures of the curriculum by the Faculty.

THE PRESBYTERY OF ROANOKE has dissolved the Waverley church, attaching its members to Ebenezer church, Lunenburg county.

HILLSVILLE—Rev. J. B. Morton recently preached for a week to this people. There were two additions to the church and the people are much encouraged. The field is now without a pastor and while the salary is small living is cheap and the salary includes a manse. Rev. Geo. Gilmer of Draper's Valley is the Home Mission chairman in charge of this field.

GEORGIA

THE PRESBYTERY OF ATLANTA stands adjourned to meet at Carrollton, Ga., Wednesday, Oct. 7th, 1903, at 7:30 p. m.
P. P. WINN, Stated Clerk.

NEWMAN.—Rev. Chas O'N. Martindale and family have just returned from a pleasant vacation spent in South Carolina and Alabama, and he enters upon his winter's work with renewed energy.

TURIN.—Rev. R. L. Bell of McDonough aided Rev. Chas. O'N. Martindale in a delightful series of meetings at this church Aug. 5-9. While there were no additions there was a genuine reviving of Christians, and the work progresses.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

THE PRESBYTERY OF SOUTH CAROLINA met at Liberty, S. C., Sept. 2-4, 1903, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. J. T. Wade at the request of the retiring Moderator, Ruling Elder W. A. Templeton.

There were 21 ministers and 53 elders present.

Rev. R. L. Rogers was elected Moderator and Rev. F. H. Wardlaw Assistant Clerk. All the causes were ably presented in the reports of the permanent committees.

In connection with the report on Foreign Missions the Presbytery heard an unusually fine address by Dr. J. R. Wilkinson of the Elizabeth Blake Hospital, Soochow, China. Every one must have been convinced of the great work this agency is accomplishing in that heathen land.

Mrs. R. N. Brackett's report as President of the Woman's Presbyterian Foreign Missionary Union was listened to with interest and the ladies were commended for their zeal and the Union commended to those Societies not connected with it. The report on local Home Missions was unusually complete. At the conference speeches were made by Hon. J. E. Boggs, Rev. J. G. Law and Rev. S. L. Morris, D. D., Secretary. Dr. Morris gave us a vivid conception of the forward movement in the West.

Rev. J. C. Shive accepted the calls from Upper Long Cane and Little Mountain churches and arrangements made for his installation on the first Sabbath of October.

Rev. Francis W. Gregg accepted the calls from Pendleton and Fort Hill churches and arrangements made for his installation on the second Sabbath of October.

Hodges, Ninety-Six and Coronaca churches will be supplied by Rev. J. A. Black.

Willington, Mt. Carmel and Lebanon churches will be supplied by Rev. H. C. Fennell.

A commission was appointed to organize a church at Fairplay, Oconee county, on the fourth Sabbath of this month.

The committees on Publication and Sunday Schools were consolidated and the number increased to five, with work distributed as follows: Rev. H. C. Fennell, Sunday school equipment and donation of literature; Rev. F. H. Wardlaw, Sunday school institutes; Rev. J. C. Shive, Sunday school Missions; Rev. F. W. Gregg, Young Peoples' Societies, and Rev. W. J. Wily, Home Department.

A matter of considerable importance was brought to the attention of Presbytery by an overture from the Fort Hill church stating that there were 115 Presbyterian cadets in attendance at Clemson last session and showing the great importance of a resident pastor to keep in touch with these young men at this stage of their life and asking Presbytery to take steps as it thought best to supply this field. The committee on bills and overtures recommended favorable action. After much discussion the answer and the overture was docketed until next Spring meeting of Presbytery.

Presbytery was favored with the presence of several visiting brethren. Dr. Law was here to tell us of the status of the American Bible Society and by the way this work is likely to be hampered in its progress for the lack of funds which fell some $70,000 short last year. As stated above Dr. Wilkinson enlightened us all on our medical missions in Soochow. Dr. Morris, a son of this Presbytery, told of the Assembly's Home Missions. Rev. W. L. Boggs presented the claims of Chicora College.

On Thursday night Rev. S. J. Cartledge preached a very fine sermon.

The weather was beautiful, the climate and scenery grand and the Presbyters earnest and the people hospitable. Altogether it was a successful meeting.

It will not be out of place to mention that the brethren were shocked by an almost fatal accident to Prof. R. N. Brackett, Ph. D., who had come over in company with other Professors connected with our Church at the college to explain the overture, while attempting to board a moving train, was knocked under the trucks and his foot badly mashed. Had it not been for his presence of mind to turn over and away from the track the rear trucks would have undoubtedly cut off his legs.

Presbytery will meet in Hodges, S. C., April 13, 1904. There will be an adjourned meeting at Synod.

Hugh R. Murchison, Stated Clerk.

SALEM CHURCH—At Salem church, Enoree Presbytery, on the last Thursday of July, "Childrens day" exercises were held. About five or six hundred people were present and heard a well selected program rendered. More than $20 was collected which will be applied to the purchase of new Sabbath school and church hymn books. Continuing from this four days preaching was held and by God's blessing five young people were added to the church. Including the 3rd Sabbath, the pastor, Rev. Wm H. White, conducted a meeting of four days at Santuc, Cane Creek church. The attendance, as at Salem, was good, though lessened at times by rain, and three persons united with the church, one by letter.

Some time since, the pastor was aided by B. P. Reid in a meeting at Tackhart. The people attended well, and were interested by the efficient preaching of the brother. The visible result was five young people united with the church on confession of faith. Including the 4th Sabbath of August Bro. Reid helped us most of the time in another meeting held at Mt. Tabor church. The attendance here was good and the members much revived. Two persons were received on confession of faith.

The pastor Rev. Wm White will have a vacation during the month of September. He will visit the section of his boyhood.

NORTH CAROLINA.

CYPRESS CHURCH.—We began a meeting at this church on the fifth Sunday in August and carried it on up to the first Sunday in September. God abundantly blessed us in turning many souls to His service. At least sixty persons made an open profession of faith in Christ, forty-three of which united with the Cypress Church on Sunday afternoon of the first Sunday in September. Others will go to other churches, and there are still others to join at Cypress at the communion service to be held the first Sunday in October. With the exception of two sermons, preached by a visiting brother, the pastor, Rev. Letcher Smith, did all the preaching, and the Holy Ghost used the simple preaching of the Word to the conversion of souls. "We are not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." L. S.

RED SPRINGS.—Rev. A. McLaughlin and family, of Camilla, Ga., are spending September with friends in North Carolina.

CHARLOTTE.—The reception at the Second Presbyterian church Friday night, as a farewell to Rev. John W. Stagg, was well attended. When the congregation and guests had assembled, Dr. I. W. Faison called them to order and in a tasteful speech presented to Dr. Stagg a tray of silver worth $100. Dr. Faison spoke of the large place in their hearts which the people had for Dr. Stagg, because of the associations of the past years; and of the enlarged regard in which he is held because of his zeal in helping to secure a new pastor. He said that the acceptance of the church's call by Mr. Hardin was due to Dr. Stagg's influence.

Dr. Stagg responded in appropriate words. He spoke especially about the coming of the new pastor and his qualifications for his work. He said there are three essentials to a pastor—a good heart, a good head and a good body. Mr. Hardin possesses all three of these. He has plenty of religion; he is sound on the fundamental doctrines of the Gospel, and he has a strong body. His work will be the building up of this church. The time will come when this Sunday School room will have to become a part of the auditorium.—Charlotte Observer.

CLINTON.—Rev. Black closed a most successful meeting at Elmwood a few days ago. His first work since his return from a refreshing visit to Northfield. He begins on the 14th work with the pastor at Clinton. C. R. H.

SPENCER.—The corner stone of the new Presbyterian church of this place will be laid with Masonic ceremonies on the 30th of this month at 3:30 p. m. Hon. B. R. Lacy, State treasurer, will officiate as Grand Master.

L. M. Kerschaw, Pastor.

---

TO THE CHURCH TREASURERS OF CONCORD PRESBYTERY:

The time for the semi-annual payment of Home Mission workers is now at hand. The treasurer of the Presbytery, Col. H. C. Dixon, Hickory, N. C., reports "scarcely any funds" in his hands. Surely the August collections for all our Missions in our Presbytery have been taken by all our churches and are in your hands. Will you not to a man send these contributions promptly to our Presbyterial treasurer? Remember there has been no increase in appropriations to these Home Mission workers, although the cost of living is much greater this year. C. A. Munroe,

In Behalf of H. M. Com.

TWENTIETH CENTURY FUND.—Since our last published report, subscriptions for this fund have been taken to the amount of $6,876.00. The total of subscriptions now amount to $42,424.04. Church treasurers will please note that payments on many subscriptions are due October 1st. Please collect and forward promptly, and if any portion of remittance should go to special institutions, please so state. E. C. Murray, Treasurer.

Graham, N. C.

MISSOURI.

O'FALLON.—This church was organized by the Presbytery of St. Louis rather more than a year ago. Soon after the organization, Rev. B. A. Pendleton was secured as pastor for half his time, and has served them most acceptably. Together, they went promptly and vigorously to work to build a church, and the result is a substantial, commodious and tasteful house of worship, costing $1,500, and now nearly completed. They hope to occupy it for the first time at the next service, the third Sabbath of September, when the pastor returns from his vacation and a visit to family and friends in Richmond, Va. And all parties are to be commended for their diligence and success in this enterprise.

MONTROSE.—Mr. O. L. Byrns, who has charge for the summer of the upper Ozark (H. M.) field, has recently been assisted in a meeting at this church by Rev. Thos. H. Watkins, of Tusculumbia, Mo., and of this he writes: "The meeting at Montrose was encouraging. Mr. Watkins preached the gospel with power, and I hope we have succeeded in getting the Montrose church in a much better working and organized condition. There were twelve additions by letter, four families. Two Presbyterian families who live near and have recently come to the neighborhood; two Methodist families have also cast in their lot with us. The people are greatly encouraged and have much hope now of a good church. We expect to have communion services and elect officers, when Mr. Forsyth and I go there the third Sunday."

Rev. James F. Forsyth, who for more than two years has labored faithfully in the lower Ozark field, Christian and Taney counties, will succeed Mr. Byrns in charge of the Upper Ozark field, Crocker and Montrose churches, and the regions round about. His address is changed from Forsyth, Mo., to Crocker, Mo.

CROCKER.—Rev. R. L. Kinnoird, of Excelsior Springs, Mo., is holding a meeting with Mr. Byrns at this church. The meeting at this writing, September 9th, is scarcely well begun, but there are already encouraging tokens of interest and growth at this point also.

Rev. A. A. McGeachy, pastor of the church at Fulton, Mo., has sent the following to the press for publication: "The Two Synods, Etc."

"The two Synods of Missouri will meet this year in Fulton in order to celebrate, in connection with their regular meeting, the semi-centennial of the founding of Westminster College, and to dedicate 'Reunion Hall,' which has been erected as a monument to the reunion of the two Synods in the support of the college. The Synods will meet on Tuesday evening, October 20th, and it is expected that they will conclude their regular business by noon Thursday, so that the jubilee exercises may begin that afternoon. Tuesday and Wednesday evenings will be joint public sessions, the first a preaching service, the second devoted to missions. Owing to the limited time which we have for transacting the ordinary and necessary work of Synod, it will be impossible for us, without disarranging our entire programme, to give much time to the consideration of special matters. We hope, therefore, that the secretaries of both assemblies will appreciate the situation and defer their visits to Synod until some subsequent meeting.

A. A. McGeachy.

Fulton, Mo.

LA BELLE.—Four persons have recently been added to our membership on certificate. The Ladies' Aid Society has carpeted our church with a handsome carpet, adding much to its appearance and comfort.—Christian Observer.

TROY HILL.—On the fourth Sabbath in July two persons—man and wife—were received into our communion, the former on profession, the latter by certificate.

---

MISCELLANEOUS.

Presbytery of Central Texas

The Presbytery of Central Texas met in Belton September 3, 1903, at 8 p. m., and was opened by a sermon from the moderator, Rev. J. L. Bowling. Text, Luke 9:23. There were present in all sixteen ministers and eighteen ruling elders.

Officers.—Rev. J. D. Leslie, moderator, and Rev. L. H. McInnis and Ruling Elder M. M. Johnson, of Austin Free Church, clerks.

Received.—Rev. C. T. Caldwell, from the Presbytery of Brazos, and a commission appointed to install him pastor of the Waco First Church on the fourth Sabbath of September.

Corresponding Members.—Revs. T. R. Sampson and O. B. Caldwell, of Dallas Presbytery, and Rev. Thomas Hicklin, of Brazos Presbytery; Mr. C. L. Means, a former candidate under the jurisdiction of this Presbytery, but dropped on account of continued sickness, appeared, and after being examined, was re-enrolled as a candidate for the ministry.

Dismissed.—Rev. E. E. Bigger, to the Presbytery of Dallas; and Rev. J. A. Kee, to the Presbytery of Brazos.

Dissolved.—The church at Rice's Crossing was dissolved and the three members transferred to the Hutto church.

Semi-Centennial.—An ad interim committee was appointed to prepare a programme for the semi-centennial meeting next spring. The Presbytery will have been organized fifty years on the 10th of April, 1904. There were six places that offered for this meeting, but Mart was the successful one.

Christian Education.—Rev. T. R. Sampson represented the Austin Theological Seminary, and Rev. M. C. Hutton the Texas Presbyterian College for Girls, in an address each. Both these institutions were heartily commended to the patronage and support of the members of our churches.

Home Missions.—There was an enthusiastic meeting held one evening in the interest of this cause. Revs. W. M. Lewis and C. C. Weaver, the chairman, made excellent addresses, and a collection taken for the cause.

Narrative.—This presented an encouraging state of religion in the Presbytery.

Presbyterial Sermon.—This was preached by Rev. J. D. Leslie on the "Second Coming of Christ," and made such a happy impression he was asked to furnish a copy for our religious papers, and also to submit it to the Committee of Publication, and ask that it be published in pamphlet form.

The churches were especially commended for their prompt payment of apportionments for current expenses. Out of nearly $300, all was collected except about $4.00. Every church responded except one that had no elder. This probably places this Presbytery at the head of the list of Presbyteries.

One sad feature of this meeting was the number of ministers and elders that left and returned home before the close of the meeting.

After a hearty vote of thanks to the members of the Belton church for their cordial hospitality, the Presbytery adjourned to meet in Mart Thursday before the first full moon in April, 1904, at 8 p. m.

M. C. Hutton, S. C.

Davidson's Growth.

The rapid growth of Davidson College is a matter of much importance to the four Synods which own the institution, and to the whole Southern Church which it has served so long and well. At the opening of the term on September 3d, all records were broken, both by the number of old students who returned, and the number of new ones who entered for the first time. Before the close of the opening day eighty freshmen had matriculated, not including those connected with the Medical College. The number of new students enrolled up to the present date, September 12th, is 112, and the total enrollment 228. Thirty-two new dormitories have been added since last year, yet every one of them is full, and there is not a vacant room in any college building. In fact, the college has now reached the limit of its accommodations in dormitories, class rooms, laboratories, and teaching force, and without an immediate increase in its facilities its further growth in numbers is impossible.

The area of patronage is widening even more rapidly than the number in attendance is increasing. Besides the South Atlantic States usually represented, there are new students from Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Mississippi, Louisiana and the Indian Territory. The new men are older, on the average, than usual, and ten or twelve of them come from other colleges. Pantops, near Charlottesville, Va., sends the largest delegation, with Davidson Academy, Clarkton Male Institute, and the North Carolina Military Academy next in numbers.

The handsome new dormitory building, barely completed in time for the opening, is quite a notable addition to the equipment of the college.

The church building, erected eighteen years ago, having proved too small for the increasing number of attendants, is now being dismantled preparatory to its entire reconstruction. By the first of March the work will be completed, and students and villagers will enjoy the new building, with furnace, pipe organ, sloping floor, and every convenience, and an auditorium seating about 750. L.

Notes on Colored Evangelization.

I have presented my resignation as secretary of the colored evangelistic work and superintendent and teacher at Spillman Institute on the ground that "I feel unable to endure longer the heavy strain which rests upon whoever does this difficult work; and I respectfully ask you (the executive committee) to release me from these weighty responsibilities." This resignation was accepted by the committee, and immediately by unanimous vote, Rev. J. G. Snedecor was elected to fill the unexpired term till the meeting of the General Assembly, and he will have charge of the whole work after the first of October.

Brother Snedecor is thoroughly acquainted with the work, having been for years one of the most entrusted and faithful members of the Executive Committee. He has given evidence of his executive ability in his most admirable and successful management of this Synod's work for our orphans' home. He is accustomed to business affairs, and will bring to the colored work a variety of talents; as a successful preacher and pastor at Woodlawn, Ala., successful chairman of Synod's Committee on Orphans' Home, and faithful and efficient clerk of Synod's trustees of her College for Men.

The work is in fairly good condition at present, and it is in good hands.

I make this parting appeal to our Church for a more liberal support of this work. It is as good as any the Church has. The results are as large. The duty is pressing. They are our nearest neighbors. They are poor and ignorant and helpless. Give us an inspiring collection in December.

D. Clay Lilly, Secretary.

Union of Presbyterians.

Rev. Ira Landreth, a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Committee on Fraternal Union, said when shown Dr. Coyle's interview:

"At the last meeting of the Cumberland Presbyterian General Assembly in this city in May, a committee was appointed to confer with a similar committee from the Northern Presbyterian Church for the purpose of selecting a basis of union upon the terms suggested in Dr. Coyle's statement.

"This committee will hold its first full meeting in St. Louis, September 29-30, and on the following day it is expected that a joint committee of our own and the Presbyterian committee will be held in the same city. Thus far nothing has been formulated by our committee.

"Our own denomination has shown from the first a most cordial spirit favorable to union, if it can be accomplished upon terms mutually satisfactory to the Churches concerned. Certainly if it is made plain that Dr. Coyle is correct that the 'Lines which have so long kept his and the Cumberland Presbyterian Church separated, have now been effected,' there will remain no efficient reason for the separate existence of the two Churches.

"I am particularly anxious that an early union, if one is accomplished at all, may include the Northern and Southern Presbyterian Churches and our own."

The World.

Lima, Pern.—Senor Candamo has been installed President of the republic.

The Hamburg-American Line steamer Deutschland has made a trip in five days, 11 hours and 54 minutes.

A second successful test of radium has been made by Prof. Baskerville, of the University of North Carolina.

Congress may be called upon during the next session to completely remodel the monetary system of the Philippines.

The German Ambassador and Baroness Speck von Sternberg will return to Washington about the middle of next month.

Lieutenant Osborne has been sentenced to ten years and Thomas Coates, inspector, sentenced to eight years, for misappropriating government funds at Manila.

London, Sept. 10.—Except that the consuls in Salonica are again asking for the protection of warships, there is little direct news of the Macedonian troubles.

Salonica, Sept. 11.—According to official reports 103 Bulgarians were killed in a fight at Rena on Wednesday. Severe fighting has taken place at several other points.

Meridia, Yucatan.—According to official statement from the Yucatan government there were 128 cases of yellow fever in this city during August, of which 50 proved fatal.

After deliberating for several weeks over a mass of documents submitted by the postoffice inspectors, the Federal grand jury has returned seven indictments in postal cases, involving six different persons.

Berlin, Sept. 5.—Herr Lewald, the commissioner of Germany at the St. Louis Exposition, has made arrangements to have Berlin's comprehensive exhibit at Dresden's municipal exposition transferred entire to St. Louis.

Admiral Cotton wired from Beirut on the 10th that the governor general has expressed the desire to settle the case of the American vice-consul satisfactorily to the United States.

It is said that Andrew Carnegie is negotiating for the purchase of the famous battlefield of Bannockburn, near Stirling, Scotland, in order to save it from falling into the hands of builders.

Secretary Hester of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange states that the mills of the country have bought up every bale of cotton on the market and many have shut down for want of cotton.

The Alaskan Boundary Commission in London, after selecting Lord Chief Justice Alverstone to preside over the sessions, decided to commence oral argument on September 15 and conclude it October 9.

The storm which raged over the British Isles on the 10th wrought great havoc in shipping and many lives were lost. For several hours the velocity was 72 miles. Cable communication with America was cut off for nine hours.

The annual report of Commissioner Ware places the number of pensioners now on the rolls at 996,454, of which 729,356 are soldiers, and 267,189 are widows and dependents. Mr. Ware announces that it is not probable that the pension roll will again cross the million line, the highwater mark having been reached a year ago.

Commander Robert E. Peary, U. S. N., the well known Arctic explorer, will make another dash for the North Pole. Leave of absence for three years has been granted him with the permission of the President, by Mr. Darling, Acting Secretary of the Navy, and he has been assured of the hearty sympathy of both these officials in his new venture.

Melbourne, Victoria.—The governor, Sir George Clark, at the opening of the State Parliament of Victoria said that the deficit of $5,000,000 had been converted into a substantial surplus, and added that the good rainfall justified the hopes of a bountiful harvest.

Shanghai.—The Peking government proposes to insert an article in the American commercial treaty instructing the United States consul general at Shanghai to promptly suppress any newspaper, published in the foreign settlement, containing seditious or offensive articles. The Supao affair is still dead-locked between the consular and diplomatic bodies, each leaving the decision in the matter to the other.

Belgrade, Servia.—The papers report that a reconciliation between the opposing army factions is probable through the friendly influence of Prince Arsene Karageogevitch, King Peter's brother. It is officially announced that an investigation is proceeding, but any punishment inflicted on the regicides and their co-operators in their conspiracy will be slight.

The German government will introduce in the next Reichstag a bill designed to promote temperance. Among the provisions, saloon-keepers are required to sell non-intoxicants, such as lemonade, milk, coffee, and tea, and cold foods. Credit is forbidden, thus abolishing the system extensively used in the country districts and among students, and the number of barmaids is limited.

British experts familiar with South African gold regions who have visited the recently discovered gold fields in the districts of Mexico and Michoacan, assert that Mexico will soon be one of the greatest producers of the yellow metal in the world. Elro Camp is pronounced a superior to Rhodesia in every way. The experts made a prolonged study of the camps and have returned to England to make report.

London.—The rise in the bank rate last week depressed all investment stocks and home railways, and the week's business on the stock markets was again of the smallest proportions. The condition of the money market inspires anxiety, as it is feared that the heavy demands from Egypt and the United States may compel the banks to adopt a 5 per cent. rate before the year is out.

The Masons of North Carolina are making a determined effort to erect a handsome Masonic Temple in Raleigh, the capital city of the State. They are now preparing a grand Masonic Fair on a large scale to be held in Nash Square, October 12 to 24, 1903. Col. Noble F. Martin, one of the best managers of such events in the United States, has charge of the fair, while various committees are hard at work, and Masons all over the State are talking and pulling for the success of the fair. Col. Martin will introduce many new and novel features in this fair. There will be absolutely none of the usual vulgar midway attractions about it. Everything will be clean and bright, and the standard of Masonry will be kept elevated. The railroads will grant reduced rates, so that all can avail themselves of an opportunity of having a good time and placing one or more bricks in the grand temple building.

Native newspapers have attained throughout China a circulation and an influence that fill the dynasty at Peking with alarm. The more outspoken organs attribute much of the empire's misfortune to the fact that the Empress-Dowager has fallen under the control of Russia. Russia, according to these authorities, pursuing her traditional policy of coming to warm water through Asia, absorbed China north of the great wall, thanks to a compact agreed to by the late Li Hung Chang, who in his simplicity imagined that the Czar would be content to leave the Peking dynasty in peaceable possession of the immense region south of the wall. But Li Hung Chang has passed away and Russia is daily securing a firmer hold on the forbidden side of the wonderful wall. Such are the fruits of the Empress-Dowager's policy, the immense wealth of that aged royalty figuring conspicuously in the category. Our ability to infer all this from the native press is the result of the enterprise of The Celestial Empire, a British paper published at Shanghai, which regularly publishes translations from the leading vernacular organs.—Literary Digest.

Brussels.—The Patriote says the Congo State administration has ordered a number of armored turrets and Krupp guns for defence of the forts in the State, and adds that twenty-four Italian guns were recently dispatched to the Congo.

“The prospect of the reciprocity convention between Cuba and the United States being eventually sanctioned by Congress has not failed to affect British trade by deterring Cuban merchants from accepting proposals to open up business relations with British manufacturers. There can be no doubt that with or without the reciprocity convention British merchants have to bestir themselves if they wish to retain their present share of Cuban trade. Combination alone is likely to prove effective in maintaining our commercial position in this part of the continent. The results for 1902, though not so good as might have been expected in view of the large production of sugar, were by no means bad. It is encouraging to note the steady increase in vegetables for export and the development of Cuba's resources other than tobacco and sugar.—From Report of British Minister to Cuba.

Bogota.—The bill which Congress is now discussing, authorizing President Marroquin to negotiate a new Panama canal treaty with the United States, contains the following stipulations: “The perpetual use of the canal zone is granted, provided that at the expiration of each 100 years the United States shall pay during the succeeding 100 years 5 per cent. more premium and rental than for the preceding premium beginning at $400,000 and the rental at $100. The mixed tribunals of the canal zone will try suits between foreigners or between Colombians and foreigners. Sanitary measures shall be practically in charge of the United States. Twenty million dollars is fixed as the price of the concession, besides the rental (sum) of $10,000,000 payable by the canal company in consideration of Colombia's approval of the transfer of shares. The railroad shall in 64 years revert to Colombia, but the United States may buy it under a valuation. A term shall be fixed within which the canal must be begun and finished.”

Willemstadt, Island of Curaçoa, Sept. 13.—From every section of Venezuela troops were sent last week in the direction of the Colombian frontier and towards Maracaibo. Mauser rifles, artillery and ammunition in great quantity have been stored at Maracaibo and several new bridges have been built near San Cristobal, near the frontier of Colombia, to permit the rapid concentration of troops. President Castro has asked the president of each State in Venezuela to send two battalions within two weeks. A leading Venezuelan citizen, who is now here, in an interview regarding these military movements in Venezuela, said he believed they were only precautionary measures regarding Colombia, which, now the country is free from revolution, has reinforced recently its army on the Venezuelan frontier near Cucuata. Other Venezuelans say a Venezuelan war with Colombia is inevitable in the near future, as a consequence of the sympathy President Castro extended to the Colombian rebels during the recent rebellion, and also because of the question of navigation on the Orinoco. President Castro's great idea, they say, is a war with Colombia.

Constantinople.—Consular accounts received from Beirut totally differ from the Turkish government's version of the recent outbreak there. The Vali of Beirut was not on board the United States flagship Brooklyn when the first brawl occurred, but was in the country. Contrary to the official version the consular dispatches say the Mussulmans first attacked the Christians and the troops which intervened sided with the Mussulmans. One of the pillaged houses belonged to a French citizen. Though there has been no further disturbance at Beirut since Sunday, great uneasiness, amounting almost to a panic prevails among the Christians, many of whom have left Beirut and sought refuge in Lebanon. The foreign consuls at Beirut met on Monday and decided to make serious representations to the local authorities looking to the preservation of order. They also decided to telegraph to their respective ambassadors or ministers at Constantinople, demanding the recall of the incompetent Vali of Beirut and requesting that warships be sent for the protection of the Europeans.

The growing importance of Southern ports is strikingly displayed by export figures, these showing a reduction in the value of goods shipped through North Atlantic cities and an increase in those going out from ports further South. The figures of the fiscal year just ended, compared with those of the fiscal year 1901, presented by the Department of Commerce and Labor, show a reduction for Boston of $55,000,000 in exports; New York a reduction of $24,000,000; Newport News a reduction of $7,000,000, and Norfolk a reduction of nearly $2,000,000. Moving down the coast toward the South, however, and still comparing the figures of 1902 with those of 1901, Savannah shows an increase in exportations of about $8,000,000; Wilmington, N. C., over $2,000,000; Galveston an increase of $3,000,000; Mobile an increase of $1,000,000, and New Orleans a decrease of $3,000,000. These figures indicate that the products of the South are seeking a more natural and direct outlet, and with the steady growth of manufacturing in this section we may look for a continuance of the expansion in Southern exports as indicated by the above figures.—Charlotte Observer.

More than usual interest is being attracted to the National Irrigation Congress, which will be held in Ogden, Utah, commencing September 15 and continuing five days. The irrigation congress is not new to the West, but since the passage of the national irrigation bill by the last Congress the entire country has been attracted to the question and a new impetus has been given to the development of semi-arid regions in what was formerly known as the “Great American Desert.” The Department of the Interior has been busy for more than a year making investigations throughout the West for the purpose of locating large reservoirs for the storage of water and the ultimate reclamation thereby of several millions of acres of lands that now lie sterile for lack of moisture. Homeseekers and owners of capital are turning their attention to this promising field for homes and investments. The coming congress will be devoted largely to a display of products that have been raised on irrigated lands, which will be presented as a hint of the greater result to be obtained when irrigation is carried out in a systematic manner under government auspices and on a far larger scale than could be considered by private enterprise.—Washington Post.

An associated Press dispatch of the 13th says: The Albanian and Turkish troops collected in the villayet of Adrianople appear to be pursuing their usual tactics of burning and plundering the villages and killing the peasants, instead of making an attempt to break up the insurgent bands. Very little news is filtering through from Monastir, but all reports agree that the position of the Christians is desperate. The Turks are making a clean sweep of the whole Bulgarian element. The Albanian soldiers in the villayet of Adrianople are stated to be entirely beyond control. At Kastoursco, the influential beys complained to the officers of the excesses committed by the troops. The officers resented the criticism and told the soldiers that the beys were friends of the revolutionaries, whereupon the soldiers burned the beys' farms. The Turks have burned the villages of Amagik and Erikler, in the district of Losengrad. They beheaded 22 Bulgarians at Almagki, in the presence of their families. Twelve thousand troops are assembled around Losengrad and engaged in pillaging and burning the villages. The population everywhere is fleeing to the forests and mountains. All the Turkish population in the district of Losengrad has been armed—even the boys have revolvers. The Alban soldiers proceeding from Ordin to Losengrad plundered the villages en route, robbed the churches and burned the village of Korakej. A body of Albanians going to Valasiko on the Black Sea, was attacked by a band and is reported to have suffered a loss of 100 men. A band led by the insurgent chief, Atamasoff, was surrounded by Turkish troops at Kokushko. After six hours' fighting the insurgents cut their way through the soldiers by throwing bombs. The Turks lost twenty men. The final arrangements for a revolutionary outbreak in eastern Macedonia have been completed, but for some reason the risings hang fire.

The Home Circle.

Horizons.

By Mabel Earle.

The willow lane was very beautiful that afternoon, with its drooping branches and golden leaves, but Miriam turned away from it with a little sigh.

"I want to see out beyond it all," she said to herself. "I am tired of pretty nestling domesticities, and hills and things that shut one in cozily. I am going up over the hill today."

The railings of the fence sagged a little apart in one place, and Miriam climbed through them carefully, casting a cautious glance up and down the road to see if there were any passers-by.

A well-known sound of tearing cloth warned her of a rent in her skirt which would necessitate future reckoning with needle and thread, but for the present she only glanced down at it in defiance.

"You sha'n't spoil my afternoon for me," she said. "I'm free now for two whole hours. You belong to this evening or tomorrow." The short, dry grass and withered weeds cracked under her feet as she mounted the hill. It was not very steep or high, but Miriam knew of a spot upon its farther slope where she might rest in a delightful arm-chair of bushes and boulders, gazing out through a gap in the hills and trees to the glorious world beyond. There was an uninterrupted view of sixty miles from that nook of hers—a novelty in this region of narrow valleys and inclosing mountains. In the year since her people had moved to this new home, leaving the city life which had meant so much to Miriam's girlhood, she had suffered with a sense of isolation and imprisonment which refused to be argued away in efforts for contentment. It was a relief to leave the confined streets of the village, and spend hours in long, lonely walks, enjoying the freedom of the hills. She threw herself into her rustic "armchair," when she reached it, with a little sigh of comfort.

"There! I can be myself here for two hours. I wonder if it is wrong to be glad when I can get away from the house. I'm sure I am thankful for my home, and mother, and all of them; but I should grow downright wicked if I couldn't come out here sometimes to relax—as they used to say in the Delsarte class. I hope it wasn't wrong to come today. There was plenty to keep me busy at home, if I had wanted to do it, but that could wait, all of it. The waist to cut out for Hilda, and the peaches to pickle—I'll do them tomorrow; the shelf in the north closet that needs putting to rights, and the darning basket. Darning! I shall have to darn this skirt before I can wear it again.

The whole duty of woman—sewing, cooking, cleaning, mending! I wonder if something is wrong in my soul when I can't settle down and be happy simply in the beautiful home duties I read so much about?"

There was a real trouble in the girl's brown eyes as she looked out into the October sunshine. She was not selfish;

she longed, honestly, to fill her place as a daughter and a sister, and there was abundant occupation for every day, as she realized, in the ordinary duties of home living. Neither idleness of hands nor emptiness of heart were to blame for the hunger that tormented her.

"My life is like these little valleys," she thought, as she looked out through the gap, taking comfort in the mere reaches of distance. "It is all shut in. Oh, it's dear and cozy and comfortable, just as the valleys are sheltered and pretty—but I want a window to look out of! I want horizons—not just inclosures. I never felt this way when we lived in the city."

Her face grew yet more thoughtful as she mused; she picked up a fragment of rock from the grass beside her, and turned it over and over in her hands while her thoughts went on.

"I shouldn't probably be going to school any more, if we were in the city. I suppose it isn't that, altogether, that I miss. It isn't the parties and concerts and lectures—not so much. I do miss the girls, but they write to me, and I see some of them once in awhile. I wonder what I do really need, after all."

She looked up at the sky, very near and blue over the crest of the little hill.

"The valleys can look up if they are shut in—and so can I. And I do not as much as I should—but I do try, in the little church down there, and at home. But it doesn't satisfy—I do really believe this feeling in me is something that God put there himself, and that he doesn't want me to be satisfied until I can find out what it means and answer it, some way. I don't believe that he wants me to go away from home—not yet. Other girls can go and teach district schools, or work their way through college, and make their lives broader that way. But I know, if I know anything, that God wants me to stay at home for awhile. That's plain, everyday duty for me. Is there some way for me to get a horizon while I'm staying at home?"

The sunlight flashed on the bit of rock in her hand, and she turned it to the light, watching the exquisite play of rainbow color along its rough surface, and studying its appearance closely.

"I wonder what kind of rock it is?" she thought. "How strange not to know the name of anything as common and as beautiful as this! And that piece yonder is entirely different; and this boulder here—this is granite, I think. That's a third kind. I used to like botany, but it's too late for botanizing this summer. I believe it would be a comfort to study the rocks this winter."

She looked across the hill with a new interest.

"The boulders are loose and scattered about, as if they had been picked up and dropped here. But those sharp rocks yonder, standing up on edge—they must have been here always. I believe they are the framework of the hill! Over yonder they jut out in a little flat ledge, across the valley, where we went last week. Why do those rocks lie flat and these stand up on edge? Why are the boulders sprinkled about on top? What fun it would be to know!"

She sat upright, with a gleam of genuine enthusiasm in the brown eyes that had been so wistful a minute before.

"I perceive that my education has been sadly neglected," she said. "Somebody ought to have taught me geology. Here I have heard about drifts and stratifications and dips for half my life, and I couldn't give a clear account of it to anybody! I heard once that this part of the State was considered very interesting in that way. Why, I love the rocks, and I don't know anything about them! I'm going to get out that big green book of Brother Bob's tonight and see if I can make anything out of it. Come home with me, you bit of—glass, are you? I don't know. But I will learn your name. You shall be my mascot."

Miriam had forgotten about the horizon, as she went down the hill and slipped through the gap in the rail fence; but, without her knowledge, the "window in her life" had been opened. She looked at the hills with a new friendliness as she went along the willow lane. They were no longer merely sheltering barriers. They presented problems, food for thought, material for her vigorous young mind to use in intellectual gymnastics.

She found that she had need of all her mental vigor before she had gone far in her new study. The big green book of Brother Bob's, which she drew triumphantly from its secluded shelf that evening, proved to be full of long names and perplexing statements. Other books on the subject, which she picked up here and there, contradicted some of the statements.

Miriam worked over them for weeks. She was not easily discouraged, and, besides, as she said, her love of the rocks was inborn. She had found one of the things in the world for which she was fitted, and the difficulties of the pursuit only increased her zeal. Brother Bob, away at college, laughed over her eager letters at first, and then set himself to answering her questions. He bought books for her, he sent them in by special arrangement from the city library; he waylaid the professors of geology and mineralogy with her problems, and finally secured her a place in a correspondence school. In the next summer vacation after that October day when Miriam picked up the fragment and looked at the ledges, Bob was her attendant on numerous occasions when, like the maid in the song, they "Went chipping rocks,

With a little black box,
And a small geological hammer."

Miriam's collection grew in size and importance that year, and the next. Some of the specimens which she sent to the professors in the city were hailed with delight. Letters began to come to her, after a while, signed with distinguished names. The region in which she lived, interesting as it was, had never been thoroughly studied before, and there were many inquiries to be answered. Very gradually, so that she scarcely realized what was happening, the study which she had taken up in curiosity became the business of her life. The horizons were very wide before she knew that they had shifted at all; the training of her honest, hard work, the intercourse with cultured minds, had broadened all her life.

One autumn day, three years from the October when she had begun her work, Miriam walked down the willow lane and up over the hill to the armchair which waited for her still. She had a letter in her hand, and after the bowlders and bushes had taken her into their comfortable depths, she drew it out and read it again. Sentence after sentence shone out under her eyes, bright as the autumn sunlight.

"Under all the limitations against which you have struggled, you have made yourself practically an authority on your own locality."

"It is good of the professor to say so." she thought, "but how funny it sounds, about me!"

"You owe it to your self and to the world to perfect your training," the letter went on.

"And the way is open now at home, too!" she thought, with a little thrill of exultation. "It seemed, that day, as if it never would be—as if things would always be the same! I was completely discouraged."

"The university authorities are now prepared to offer you a residence scholarship."

But over those happy words Miriam's brown eyes grew dim again with blissful tears.

"To me!" she said. "When great, learned men might be proud to have it! I know what it means. It means work, and opportunity, and life—beautiful, wide life that may broaden and deepen into anything glorious! It means the being with the people whose very letters have made me richer; having the very best that the whole world can give, for my own, and the chance to use it for other people."

She patted a fragment of rock beside her with loving touch.

"The horizons are opened," she said.

"After all, God let me see out—through the hills!"—Forward.

The Stuff of the Republic.

She did not look heroic. She came rather breathlessly into the car and hurried nervously to the center to secure the turning of a seat before it would be too late to find two together vacant. After her trudging and toddled three little boys, while the fourth she dragged along by the hand. Her tickets, securely fastened in a prominent place that they might give her no further concern, betrayed that she was going to Oklahoma, but now she was in North Dakota.

An opportunity to do a kindness in the way of furnishing temporary amusement to two of the little boys brought out her story.

Yes, she had always lived in North Dakota; her folks had lived there, too, but they emigrated from New York; they had been rangers.

Her oldest—and she looked with a glance of maternal pride at a nine-years-old midget, who seemed not an inch taller than seven—had been herding cattle since last June and had earned fifteen dollars a month. His father had gone ahead to reconnoitre. It was partly on account of Jimmy she was moving; the cowboy took delight in teaching the little cowboys to swear, and sometimes gave them whiskey to drink just to see how queer they would act. She was going to bring her boys up to be good men, and somehow—she didn't know how—they were going to be educated, too.

Yes, it was dreadfully lonesome to go away from ones' folks—and here a little choke came into the voice—but you must think about the future of the boys.

To catch this early Monday morning train she had had to start Sunday evening, but only just a little ways. She had hoped to find a steamboat or a "keroseneboat" to take them across the Missouri, but they could get only a common rowboat, which was partly full of water, and it was a pouring rain. They all got drenched and covered with mud, and it was a long walk, more than a mile, to her aunt's, where she spent the night.

Yes, the babies were tired, but that was nothing to the mud. You ought to have seen their clean, brown linen suits! She put them to bed at once, but it was Sunday, and neither she nor her aunt would think of washing on Sunday, and yet those children's suits must be washed, and her own wool dress too. She couldn't go on a journey looking so. When the children were asleep, they waited till after the clock struck twelve, and it took her till six o'clock Monday morning to dry and iron those five suits. O, no, she didn't lie down at all. Yes, she was a little tired; but the children had slept, for which she was so glad. It would be only three nights and four days more before she could reach the end of her journey, and then—

"Who is it, baby dear, that you're going to see?"

"Papa! Papa! Papa," with a seraphic smile, gurgled the baby, and "Papa! Papa!" echoed the three older boys.

"He has been gone since February, you see," said the mother, apologetically.

"No," she went on, "I couldn't take a sleeper; the children are so small they can lie down in the seats, taking turns. I am sorry their clothes are getting a little rumpled already, but I have a fresh dress for baby when we get to Kansas City."

I had reached my station, and with a hearty "Godspeed" went on my way, thinking of that Sunday night—no, I beg her pardon—that early Monday morning's washing.

And she didn't look like a descendant of Jonathan Edwards, either!—Louise Manning Hodgkins in The Congregationalist.

Wire Railing and Ornamental Wire Works.

DUFUR & CO.,

511 N. Howard Street,

Baltimore, Md

Manufacture Wire Railing for Cemeteries, Balconies, etc. Sieves, Fenders, Cag Sand and Coal Screens Woven Wire, Also Iron Bedsteads, Chairs Settees, etc.

What will Cure a bad Catarrh

A Noted Doctor-Preacher of Atlanta Seems Able to Permanently Cure This Disease by an Entirely New Home Method That is Attracting Attention.

SENDS IT FREE TO ANYONE WITHOUT EXPECTING PAYMENT.

Those who have all along doubted whether there really was a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that an eminent Southern doctor-divine, J. W. Blosser by name, has discovered a home method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last speck without regard to climate or conditions, and so that there shall be no misgiving about it he will send it free to any man or woman without expecting payment, for while others are spending fortunes in advertising Dr. Blosser uses his money to build up his discovery, and therefore he can afford to send a trial package free and let the results speak for themselves.

The doctor's discovery is radically different from the schemes that the country has recently been flooded with, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of chronic catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in the nose and throat, coughing spells, difficulty of breathing, catarrhal deafness, scratching in the throat, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh. The first day's use will clear the nasal passages and the lungs, and then the catarrh germs are dispelled and you are forever freed from this annoying disease.

The doctor is willing to rest his case on the free package he sends you, and the fact that his company now occupies four floors would seem to prove that his discovery is genuine, so send your name and address without delay to the Dr. Blosser Co., 355 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package, illustrated book, etc. The least you can do is to find out what the doctor has got, as you can't be anything out, one way or another, and you surely should be cured.

Real Estate for Sale at Davidson, N. C.

For quick sale and easy payments; cash or gilt-edge paper: One neat five-room dwelling, with large brick cellar; good water, stable and garden; on lot 70x270 feet deep; price $1,000.

Also two vacant lots; one 75x285 ft. deep; one 75 ft. front by 300 feet; price $350 each; fine investment for health, society and education.

Also one storehouse on lot No 12, North Tryon street, Charlotte, N. C., 24 ft. front by 140 ft. deep; very desirable.

Also celebrated Barium Springs; 18 acres land; 7-room hotel; 3-room cottage; storehouse and barn; five miles Statesville; price $5,000.

In addition can sell farms and city property more or less throughout South Carolina, all sorts and sizes, with various business opportunities, at money-making prices.

J. EDGAR POAG, Broker,
Rock Hill, S. C.

Marriages.

SPENCE - WILSON.—At the residence of the bride's father, Mr. James C. Wilson, near Jenifer, Ala., Sept. 2, 1903, by the Rev. W. I. Sinnott, Mr. Joseph H. Spence and Miss Helen Wilson, both of Talladega County, Ala.

GRANT-HOLT.—In the Presbyterian Church of Mebane, N. C., Sept. 2nd, by Rev. R. W. Hines, Mr. Chas. Ross Grant and Miss Bettie Yancy Holt, both of Mebane, N. C.

McKENZIE FERGUSON.—Near Red Springs, N. C., on Sept. 2nd, at the residence of Mr. S. N. Ferguson, the bride's father, by Rev. A. N. Ferguson, assisted by Rev. C. G. Vardell, D. D., Mr. D. M. McKenzie and Miss Kate Ferguson.

VICK-SAVAGE.—At 3 p. m., on Aug. 26, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. R. Savage, near Ivanhoe, N. C., by Rev. V. H. Starbuck, Mr. W. Thos. Vick and Miss Katie Savage, both of Pender County.

GROSH-HEIGES.—On the 6th of Sept. by Rev. H. A. Brown, D. D., Samnel Lindley Grosh of New Bloomfield, Pa., to Miss Ella Heiges, daughter of Prof. S. B. Heiges, Supt. of State farm, Saxe, Va.

Deaths.

"Thy Lord Himself hath suffered too,
And thou canst lay thine head upon
His breast,
And thou canst tell Him all thy griefs,
And be at rest.

Then thou shalt say, "Thy will be done,"

And thou shalt trust in Him what'er
betide;

And thou shalt be made more like Him,
The Crucified."

CAMERON.—At Hope Mills, No. 2, in seventy-second year of his age, Mr. John C. Cameron was found dead in bed Aug. 17.

DENNING.—After a brief illness, Cartes Denning, of Cotton N. C., in twenty-first year of his age, departed this life Aug. 23, 1903.

WIGGINS.—At Hope Mills, No. 1, suddenly on base ball ground, June 29, Neill Wiggins. He was about 51 years old.

SARAH MORSE NADAL, wife of Mr. Anthony Nadal, who had been in feeble health this summer, died the twenty-seventh of August at sunset. She was eighty years old, and the oldest member of the Wilson Presbyterian Church. She has been identified with Wilson's history and beloved by all who knew her.

Upon the wooden sides of an ancient covered bridge at Lucerne can be seen a picture known the art world over: "From a group of children sitting round a cottage hearth Death has taken one by the hand and is leading it out of the door. Quietly and unresisting goes the little child, and in its countenance no grief, but wonder only, while the other children are weeping and stretching forth their hands in vain toward it." Peacefully her spirit returned to the God who gave it and her body was laid to rest in the new cemetery at Washington, N. C.

'Life's race well run,
Life's work well done,
Life's crown well won,
Now cometh rest."

James Thomas, Pastor.

Resolutions adopted by the Womans' Missionary Society of Raeford Presbyterian Church at their last meeting:

Whereas, God has removed from our number, by death, our faithful and beloved co-worker, Mrs. L. A. McLaurin.

Resolved, 1st. That we bow in reverence, submission and love to His will, believing that He is infinite, eternal, and unchangeable in His being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness and truth.

Resolved, 2nd. That we cherish her memory and commend her virtues, her unobtrusive modesty which was so beautiful in one so young and even added to the force of her firm and quiet zeal in Missionary work, her faithfulness in every duty and relation of life proved her to be dominated by love to the Savior of sinners.

Resolved, 3rd. That we wish to express our sympathy with our dear pastor and all those who loved her in tender ties.

Resolved, 4th. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on our minutes, also sent to the family of the deceased, Missionary and Presbyterian Standard for publication.

Mrs. Isabella Lamont,

Mrs. Ida P. McLeod,

Mrs. Frances Dickson.

Committee.

The Household.

Sunshine For the Invalid.

By Miss Lucy A. Yendes.

It is so hard to be shut away, shut in and kept from the activities of life, when our entire sympathy is with the world of work and of progress.

Imagine the hearing nothing, knowing nothing, having nothing fresh and bright to think about, save as some one comes in and brings a message from the outside world!

True, one may read, if eye and brain permit; and if the invalid chance to be a woman, why, there are some forms of light work that may do to help make the time fly instead of drag, as knitting, and its kindred occupations of sewing, crocheting, tatting, embroidery; making of lace, etc., but all these leave a major portion of the day, even for the one who can so occupy herself, with little to do.

Then it behooves all who may to provide "Sunshine" for the others, and for the rest of the day to such as can do the things suggested, or any others, a part of the time.

"What can I do?"

That is just what I wanted to hear.

Perhaps too, I would better begin with my list of negatives, and veer around to what you can do, after warning you away from what you should not, if you would carry "Sunshine" to the sick or the convalescent:

1. Don't talk of sickness, and tell of all who have had the same or some similar trouble, every time you enter the invalid's room. Talk health, strength, hope, cheer, (news of a pleasant nature), science, literature, anything with which you may reasonably hope to cheer the patient.

2. Don't whisper. Speak in a low tone as you should even to the well, who are not deaf, but don't "prose."

3. Don't insist upon sitting on the edge of the bed to show your interest in the patient. A chair is more comfortable for you, and will be ten times as likely not to make the invalid nervous.

4. If you are given a rocking chair, don't be excessive in its use. All superfluous motion is a disadvantage in most places, but especially so in the sick room. It will often give a well, strong person nervous prostration to have some one come into the living room, seize the big rocker and sway back and forth in it, as for dear life, for half an hour, and the effect on a sick one is much worse.

5. Don't argue, at full length, and with double force, even if you know that you are right and the patient wrong. Be as tolerant as you would like the patient to be, in case your positions were reversed, and you had to lie in bed, apart from the world day after day.

Now for some of the "Do" points:

1. Wear your sunniest expression, and use the lowest, sweetest tone of voice that is at your command. (Perhaps you have not yet found out the full extent of the power that lies in this sort of voice, nor how dependent it is upon its every day use for success. It does not come by chance, nor can it be put in and off entirely at will. It must be a habit.)

2. Wear, likewise, something pretty, if you are a woman, men have to be excused from this attempt, because of the conventionalities of dress. Wear something to rest and please the eye, if possible. Think how often the dear invalid has to count the stripes on the wall paper or rearrange its figures, as she lies there with no one to even hand her a violet or a rose.

3. Guide the conversation into other channels, if you find the invalid showing fretfulness, discouragement or indifference; otherwise let her speak on the topics that are nearest her heart. She may have been thinking for days on some theme that she wanted to exploit, with no one to listen, and that is always hard luck. One reason why most people enjoy their home is because they are sure of a hearing there.

4. Read to her, if she wishes, and what she wishes, if she has a preference; if not select something jolly, that is not coarse; something sweet that is not wishy washy, or something bright that is not entirely devoid of sense. But don't read too long.

5. Write a letter or a note for her, if she wishes, and if you can do it without tiring her all out with your questions as to how she would like the thoughts expressed, after she has given you their substance, or as to where the materials are to be had. Let some one else find them, if you can't hunt them up.

6. Take her some little delicacy in the way of food or drink; but don't insist upon her having it then, nor at all if you do not know her doctor or nurse, for they may have forbidden her to eat the very thing you take; but it shocks her that you were mindful of her, which will be something for her to think of, long after you have departed.

7. And finally, don't overdo the visit in the matter of length. She is not so strong as you, else she would not be set apart; and even a few minutes of rapid or intense visiting will be sufficient to tire her. And, when you start, GO, whether visiting the sick or the well.

Don't prolong the agony beyond endurance, or so to nullify the effects of an attempt to distribute "Sunshine."—New York Observer.

Simple Salads.

By Mrs. Carrie Ashton Johnson.

A very appetizing salad consists of head lettuce, which is crisp and tender, with walnut meats sprinkled over it and slices of lemon dotting its surface. Lemon juice can be squeezed over it just before serving if preferred. No dressing is used.

Very thin slices of Bermuda onions, which have been allowed to stand in salt ice water for half an hour before using, are laid on head lettuce, and lemon juice squeezed over it or slices of lemon arranged on it.

Peanut Salad—Two cupfuls of chopped peanuts, after the skins have been rubbed off. Two cupfuls of finely cut celery. Two hard boiled eggs, chopped fine. Mix with the following dressing:

Beat very light the yolks of two eggs, add slowly half a teaspoonful each of salt and mustard stirred together. Continue to beat and add four tablespoonfuls of melted butter and six tablespoonfuls of vinegar. Cook in double kettle, stirring constantly until it thickens. Remove from fire, and stir in the two well beaten whites of eggs. Before mixing with salad, add a cupful of whipped cream.

English Walnut Salad—Add equal quantities of chopped walnuts and finely cut celery. Mix with the following dressing:

Cook in double boiler one tablespoonful of butter, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one scant tablespoonful of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one half teaspoonful of mustard, two eggs, beaten very light, two-thirds cupful of vinegar.

Chicken Salad—Equal parts of finely picked chicken (the white meat is considered much nicer) and crisp celery cut fine. If nuts are liked, blanch some nice almonds and stir them through the salad dressing. Three eggs beaten separately and very light. Butter the size of an egg. One teaspoonful of mustard, one teaspoonful of salt, one-half salt-spoonful of cayenne pepper, one-half cupful of vinegar. Cook in double boiler until thick. Add before mixing a scant cupful of whipped cream.

A delicious salad which pleased the eye as well as the palate, consisted of a large slice of delicious pineapple, two small slices of tomatoes, two olives and a few nuts, with a spoonful of whipped cream dressing on the top.

Fruit salads are simple to prepare and easily digested. California grapes cut in two so that the seeds can be removed, are very nice served with an equal quantity of finely cut celery on lettuce leaves, with a whipped cream dressing over them.

Finely shredded pineapple, bananas, and grapes are very nice served together with celery on crisp lettuce leaves. Nuts are sometimes served with fruit salads.—New York Observer.

An Old Fashioned Woman.

No clever, brilliant thinker, she,
With college record and degree;
She has not known the paths of fame;
The world has never heard her name;
She walks on old, untrodden ways,
The valleys of the yesterdays.

Home is her kingdom; love is her dower;
She seeks no other wand of power,
To make home sweet, bring heaven near,
To win a smile and wipe a tear,
And do her duty day by day
In her own quiet place and way.

Around her childish hearts are twined,
As round with some reverent saint enshrined,
And following hers the childish feet
Are led to ideals true and sweet,
And find all purity and good
In her divinest motherhood.

She keeps her faith unshadowed still,
God rules the world in good and ill;
Men in her creed are brave and true,
And women pure as pearls of dew.
And life for her is high and grand,
By work and glad endeavor spanned.

This sad old earth's a brighter place
All for the sunshine of her face;
Her very smile a blessing throws,
And hearts are happier where she goes.
A gentle, clear-eyed messenger,
To whisper love; thank God for her!
—Congregationalist.

DRAKE'S PALMETTO WINE.

The wonderful tonic medicine that removes all congestion and disease from vital organs, tissues and blood. One tablespoonful, once a day, immediately relieves and absolutely cures Indigestion, Flatulency, Constipation and Catarrh of the Mucous Membranes. It is a positive specific for Congested Liver and Kidneys and Inflammation of Bladder, tones the Appetite and Nervous System, and purifies and enriches the Blood.

Seventy-five cents at Drug Stores for a large bottle, usual dollar size, but a trial bottle will be sent free and prepaid to every reader of the Presbyterian Standard who needs it and writes for it to Drake Formula Company, Lake and Dearborn Sts., Chicago, Ill.

Wear Red Seal Shoes
Catalog for Postal

SEABOARD
AIR LINE RAILWAY.

In Effect November 23rd, 1902

Vestibuled Limited Trains.

DOUBLE DAILY SERVICE Between New York

Tampa, Atlanta, New Orleans and points

SOUTH and WEST.

SOUTHWARD.

	Daily No. 31.	Daily No. 27.
Lv New York, P. R. R.....	12 55 p m	12 10 a m
Lv Philadelphia, ".....	3 28 p m	7 20 a m
Lv Baltimore, ".....	5 45 p m	9 34 a m
Lv Washington, W. S. Ry..	7 00 p m	10 41 a m
Lv Richmond, S. A. L. Ry..	10 37 p m	2 15 p m
Lv Petersburg, ".....	11 20 p m	2 53 p m
Lv Norfolk, ".....	1 55 a m	5 18 p m
Lv Henderson, ".....	2 28 a m	5 41 p m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	4 15 a m	6 58 p m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	6 16 a m	8 50 p m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	7 35 a m
Lv Columbia, † ".....	10 25 a m	12 20 a m
Ar Savannah, ".....	2 35 p m	4 55 a m
Ar Jacksonville, ".....	7 00 p m	9 15 a m
Ar Tampa, ".....	6 45 a m	6 00 p m
	No. 33.	No. 41.
Lv New York, N. Y. P. & N.	† 7 55 a m	8 55 p m
Lv Philadelphia, ".....	10 16 a m	11 21 p m
Lv New York, O. D. S. S. Co.	† 3 00 p m
Lv Baltimore, B. S. P. Co.		† 6 30 p m
Lv Wash'ton, N. & W. S. B.		50 p m m
Lv Portsmouth, S. A. L. Ry	9 05 p m	9 25 a m
Lv Weldon, ".....	11 45 p m	11 55 a m
Lv Norfolk, ".....	1 55 a m	1 35 p m
Lv Henderson, ".....	2 28 a m	2 02 p m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	4 15 a m	3 45 p m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	6 16 a m	6 18 p m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	7 40 a m	9 45 p m
Lv Wilmington ".....		9 20 p m
Ar Charlotte, ".....	10 33 a m	10 32 p m
Lv Chester, ".....	10 30 a m	12 5 a m
Lv Greenwood, ".....	12 37 p m	3 25 a m
Lv Athens, ".....	2 52 p m	5 58 a m
Ar Atlanta, † ".....	4 00 p m	7 35 a m
Ar Augusta, C. & W. C.....	5 40 p m
Ar Macon, C of Ga.....	7 20 p m	11 35 a m
Ar Montgomery, A. & W. P.	9 20 p m	6 25 p m
Ar Mobile, L. & N.....	2 55 a m
Ar New Orleans, L. & N.....	7 25 a m
Ar Nashville, N. C. & St. L.	1 30 a m	6 55 p m
Ar Memphis.....	4 15 p m	8 20 a m

NORTHWARD.

	Daily No. 32.	Daily No. 38.
Lv Memphis, N C & St L....	12 45 n n	8 00 p m
Lv Nashville, ".....	9 30 p m	9 30 a m
Lv New Orleans, L & N.....	8 10 p m
Lv Mobile, ".....	12 40 a m
Lv Montgomery, A & W P.	6 45 a m	1 00 p m
Lv Macon, C of Ga.....	8 00 a m	4 20 p m
Lv Augusta, C & W C.....	10 05 a m
Lv Atlanta, † S A L Ry.....	12 00 n n	8 00 p m
Ar Athens, ".....	2 57 p m	11 23 p m
Ar Greenwood, ".....	5 15 p m	1 58 a m
Ar Chester, ".....	7 17 p m	4 15 a m
Lv Charlotte, ".....	7 27 p m	5 01 a m
Lv Wilmington ".....	3 20 p m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	10 40 p m	7 50 a m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	11 33 p m	8 44 a m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	1 35 a m	11 15 a m
Lv Henderson, ".....	3 05 a m	12 50 p m
Lv Norfolk, ".....	3 50 a m	1 45 p m
Lv Weldon, ".....	5 00 a m	8 00 p m
Ar Portsmouth, ".....	7 15 a m	5 35 p m
Ar Washington, N & W S B		6 55 a m
Ar Baltimore, B S P Co.....		† 6 30 a m
Ar New York, O D S S Co.....		† 5 00 p m
Ar Philadelphia, N Y P & N	† 5 46 p m	5 10 a m
Ar New York, ".....	8 15 p m	8 00 a m
	No. 34.	No. 66.
Lv Tampa, S A L Ry.....	8 00 p m	8 00 p m
Lv Jacksonville, ".....	9 30 a m	7 50 a m
Lv Savannah, ".....	1 40 p m	12 10 p m
Lv Columbia, † ".....	7 05 p m	5 30 a m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	10 40 p m	9 40 a m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	11 33 p m	9 36 a m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	1 35 a m	11 50 p m
Lv Henderson, ".....	3 05 a m	1 10 p m
Lv Norfolk, ".....	3 45 a m	1 55 p m
Lv Petersburg, ".....	5 53 a m	4 07 p m
Ar Richmond, ".....	6 35 a m	4 55 p m
Ar Washington, W S Ry....	10 10 a m	8 36 p m
Ar Baltimore, P R R.....	11 25 a m	11 25 p m
Ar Philadelphia, P R R.....	1 36 p m	2 56 a m
Ar New York, P R R.....	4 13 p m	6 30 a m

R. M. COFFEY, C. T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C.

Our Young People.

The Mystery of the Man in the Iron Mask.

On the afternoon of the eighteenth of September, 1698, the great drawbridge of the fortress-prison of the Bastille, in Paris, was lowered with a clang to admit the new governor, the Sieur de Saint-Mars. A mounted escort surrounded a litter in which Saint-Mars was borne, and by his side, within its closed curtains, sat a singular figure—that of a man of middle age, of noble appearance and graceful manners, but whose face was concealed by a black velvet mask, secured by clasps of iron. The two—Saint-Mars and the Man in the Iron Mask—had come by slow stages from the prison of St. Marguerite, in the south of France, where Saint-Mars had been keeper for years. He brought no other captive with him to his new charge of the Bastille; but this one, evidently, was too important to be left behind. Saint-Mars was considered the paragon of jailers by his royal master, Louis the Fourteenth. From the age of thirty-five when he had been put in command at the famous prison-fort of Pignerol, in Piedmont, this nobleman of France had given his whole soul to business, and was a great favorite with the king in consequence. On this particular journey, it was noticed, he redoubled every precaution, sleeping by his prisoner's side, and keeping pistols always at hand, even during meals. On his part, the Mask uttered no word, sat always with his back to the light, and made no attempt to communicate with anyone, or seemed to notice the curious attention with which he was regarded by the escort, and by the villagers wherever they stopped for the night.

The drawbridge of the Bastille rose behind the two, and the Man in the Iron Mask never again crossed it alive. He was taken to a room in the tower of La Bertandiere, and there, for five years, he lived a perpetual mystery. His mask was never raised, day or night, not even when the aged physician of the prison attended him. It was known, indeed, that Saint-Mars had given strict orders to kill him instantly should he so much as attempt to remove it.

His voice was low and soft, but he seldom spoke. He never complained of his condition, nor did he ever give the least hint as to who he was.

Yet it is certain that he was treated with the utmost deference, although so strictly imprisoned. He was supplied with every luxury of the table; none was allowed to sit down in his presence, not even Louvois, the prime minister of Louis, who once visited him in his cell; he was clothed in the finest linen and costliest laces; and he amused himself by playing on the guitar. Saint-Mars never remitted his ceaseless watch upon him; he spied upon him daily, and sent full and careful reports to the king. He was evidently the most important prisoner in all the land of France; and when we consider that Louis the Magnificent had a passion for imprisoning his enemies, and a genius for making their captivity as melancholy as possible, this preeminence of the Iron Mask becomes more and more mysterious. Who was this unknown personage, whom the great king shut away forever in a living death?

Once, in St. Marguerite, before he came to the hopelessness of the Bastille the Mask is said to have made an effort to reveal his story. His meals were served on silver; and one day he scratched something with a knife upon a silver plate, and threw it out of the window toward a fishing boat that had landed near the foot of the prisoner's tower. The fisherman picked up the plate. He was not able to read, and thinking the silver had dropped by accident, he took it to the governor of the prison, very honestly. Saint-Mars read the inscription, with signs of much alarm. "Have you read this? Has any one seen you with it?" he asked. The man replied that he could not read, and that no one had seen him pick up the plate. Saint-Mars, not satisfied, detained him until he found his story was true. Then he dismissed him, saying, "It is a happy thing for you that you cannot read." After that, the prisoner was always watched at his meals; each plate was examined before removal to make sure that nothing was written on it; his linen, changed twice a week, was carefully examined for writing, also; even the candles were inspected for fear a paper wick might be inserted. Every day, in addition, Saint-Mars himself searched the prisoner. Thus the fatal purpose of King Louis was perfectly fulfilled, and the Man in the Iron Mask was cut off absolutely from the knowledge of his fellow-men.

How long was he a prisoner? Not even that is known. Some say that Saint-Mars had him as a charge in Pignerol first, and thence removed him to St. Marguerite and finally to the Bastille. The least estimate of his captivity is twenty-five years—the longest forty-five. No wonder that by the time he reached the Bastille, he had ceased to struggle against his fate, or to plan escape or appeal. Despair came, sooner or later to all the captives of Louis, and their last years were usually sunk in premature dotage. When historians begin, indeed, to search out the identity of the Iron Mask, the fact of Louis' cruelty is astonishingly brought to light. Under the glittering splendor of the Grand Monarch's life, we behold a depth of unrelenting evil which explains to us the gloomy melancholy into which he fell in his old age. The king's prisons were always full; his jailers were peculiarly honored and favored; and in the midst of a gay court he enjoyed constantly the reading of reports of the tortures or the slow decay of captive after captive. So it need not surprise us to find that, outside of all the victims who died in his various prisons, and whose death was recorded and known, there should be many, many more whose fate, after they once passed the gloomy portals, was never revealed; and that among these at least half a dozen were important enough to have been doomed to wear the fatal emblem of the Iron Mask. There was Fouquet, the wealthiest of his subjects, minister of finance early in his reign, outshining the young king most humiliatingly—a thing which Louis never forgave. Fouquet was thrown into Pignerol the moment the youthful monarch felt himself strong enough to do so.

For sixteen years he languished there, treated with singular severity. Then darkness closes over his fate. Some say he died and was buried in 1684—but grave authorities have upheld his claim to wear the Mask. There was Avedick, the Armenian patriarch of Constantinople, who defied the Jesuits, with the king behind them, and angered the prided Louis bitterly. The patriarch was kidnapped, and brought to France, where the cruel king watched him lose strength, eyesight and hope in the dark recesses of the royal dungeons. Was he the Man in the Mask? Many hold that belief. There was General de Bulonde, who lost the siege of Cunes, and who knew some royal secrets that Louis wished buried. He disappeared in the prison shadows, to an unknown fate. Perhaps it was behind the Iron Mask that he disappeared—who knows? There was Marchiel, head of a great conspiracy, implicating some too high to be reached by the hand of justice. He entered the royal prisons, and never was heard of again. Was it his face that was forever hidden. Books have been written to prove it, but the Mask holds its secret well. There was Count Matthioli, prime adviser of the Duke of Mantua, who sold Louis the fortress of Casale, key to Piedmont, which the French king coveted, and who then, before the place could be taken over by the French, resold the information to Spain, Austria, and Savoy, so that their immediate interference saved Casale, and made Louis ridiculous all over Europe. Like Avedick, Matthioli was promptly kidnapped, and flung into prison at Pignerol. None dared henceforward inquire into his doom. He never was heard of again. That he was the Mask has been eagerly asserted—and so the list goes on.

All these explanations, however, do not seem to explain the one central mystery—the wearing of the Mask itself. Everyone knew that Fouquet, Avedick, Matthioli, and the rest of the dismal list were the captives of Louis. There was no attempt to rescue any of them. A motive for the Mask is thus wanting. In seeking this motive, the great romantic theory of a possible royal claimant has suggested itself to many, and been worked out thus by Voltaire, Dumas, and other ingenious minds: There was a prophecy, known to Louis the Thirteenth, that twin sons should be born to him, and that the disputed succession that must follow would bring on civil war. Accordingly, when twins were born (the elder of whom was Louis the Fourteenth) the younger of the two infants was sent away into the provinces, to be brought up secretly as the son of a peasant. However, at nineteen, seeing a picture of his brother, the king, and a letter from Anne of Austria, written to his guardian, which hinted at the secret of his birth, he guessed the whole situation, and declared that he would appear at court and claim his place. At once, orders were sent from Paris to imprison the unhappy youth for life; the Mask was fastened upon his face, and Saint-Mars was made his jailer. A letter from Mary of Modena, found among the papers of Richelieu, professed to give the whole story. But most modern investigators believe the letter either a fiction or a forgery—so the Mask is not lifted an inch, after all. Yet it is not to be denied that this explanation, unlike any other, does account for the infinite secrecy observed and the remarkable deference paid to the mysterious prisoner. Whatever the captive's secret was the Iron Mask hid it to the end. In November, 1703, as night was falling, the drawbridge of the Bastille was lowered, and a scanty funeral train passed over it to the cemetery of St. Paul. Two of the officers of the prison followed the coffin to the grave, and the shadows of evening closed over the last funeral rites of the Man in the Iron Mask. No one outside the prison was informed of his death but the king; and as if to blot from memory his very existence, his furniture and clothes were burned, his silver plate melted, the walls of his chamber scraped and replastered, the ceiling taken down and renewed, the floor taken up and relaid, and every trace his five years' residence in the tower of La Bertandiere thus destroyed. On the burial register he was called, "Marchialy, aged forty-five." In the prison book he was set down only as, "the prisoner from Provence." Louis the Fourteenth certainly had cause to believe that the whole story would pass into oblivion long before the bones of his unknown victim fell to dust in their unmarked grave.

But it was not so to be. The very mystery defeated its object, and kept curiosity alive. The peasantry did not forget the masked traveler in the litter with Saint-Mars, who had passed through their villages. The court whispered among themselves. The guards of the Bastille gossiped about their prisoner and when, in the coming years, some literary men were flung into the Bastille, they found the story so attractive to the imagination that it was set down, and became the property of the public. More than fifty books have been written on the Iron Mask, and though the identity of the Grand Monarch's victim has not been solved, yet the cruelty of Louis himself has been fully unmasked in the process. Which would one rather have been—the Prisoner in the Bastille, sitting in his lonely cell through the long days, or the brilliant king at Versailles who hid an evil delight in torture and suffering behind his daily splendors? If the Man in the Iron Mask were indeed Louis' twin brother, was it not better to be Abel than Cain?—Priscilla Leonard, in "Forward."

King Frederick and the Irish Giant.

A queer and testy man was Frederick William I., the second king of Prussia and the father of the renowned monarch, Frederick the Great. He ascended the throne in 1713. He assembled and drilled a great army in time of peace. He was very proud of their numbers and discipline, and among his queer ambitions was one which was very odd indeed.

He desired to have a certain corps of soldiers which should consist wholly of giants. So he sent his agents all over Europe giant-hunting.

A difficult task the agents had, for giants were not so numerous in Europe as they are supposed to have been in very ancient times, before history was written. But one of them met with good fortune, as you shall presently be told.

One day, as one of the Prussian recruiting-sergeants was visiting London in search of tall men for Frederick's service, his attention was called to a crowd in the streets. He entered the crowd curiously, and to his amazement and delight he there found the tallest man he had ever seen. The man was an Irish giant. His head was covered with thick yellow hair; his shoulders were broad. He rose above the crowd like a tower among houses.

He had come to England to seek work. He was now out of money, but he was still good-natured and merry. Fat people usually are cheerful, whatever may be their condition.

The recruiting-sergeant elbowed his way through the crowd, greatly excited thus to find the very man he had been so diligently looking for.

He laid his hand on the Irishman's sleeve.

"Come with me! come with me! I'm a soldier myself, and I am always ready to help a comrade in distress."

"But o'm not a soldier."

"Aren't you? Why you look every inch a soldier; any man would take you for one. You ought to be a soldier, sure. But never mind that. Come and dine with me."

"That I will," said Pat; "and ye need not be after axing me twice."

The Irishman's appetite was as great as his body, and when he was well filled with a liberal meal, he was always credulous and jolly, and easy to be persuaded.

"You are a fine fellow," said the sergeant; "a wonderfully fine fellow. Did you never think of turning soldier?"

"An' what should I turn soldier for?"

"For honor and glory."

"A cannon ball wouldn't be apt to miss me, sure; and what good would honor and glory do me when my head was gone, clane gone intirely?"

"For money."

"How much?"

"I will offer you a safe position in the Prussian Life-guards. The king, I am sure, would pay four hundred pounds down for a strapping fellow like you."

"Four hundred ponnnds! Four hundred pounnds! Do I hear my own ears? Faix, I will not be long in choosing. Pat O'Flannigan is the boy for yez."

"Good. Can you speak German?"

"German, is it? Dutch-lie? Sorra a word of German can I speak, if it were to save my life from the hangman."

"Well, no matter. Three sentences are all you need to know. I can teach you them."

"What be thez?"

"When the king first sees you in the ranks he will come to you and say, 'How old are you?'"

"An' what shall I say?"

"Twenty-seven years."

"Then he will say how long have you been in the service."

"An' what will I say thin?"

"Three weeks."

"Then he will say: 'Are you provided with clothes and rations?' and you will answer, 'Both.'"

"I think my head will hold that much."

"I will try you. How old are you?"

"Twenty-seven years."

"How long have you been in the service?"

"Three weeks."

"Are you provided with clothes and rations?"

"Both."

On the journey to Berlin the sergeant asked the happy recruit these questions daily. He answered promptly and correctly.

About three weeks after his arrival he appeared on parade in the corps of giants for the first time. There were Arabs and Danes, and Moors and Swedes in the brigade; giants from almost all the countries of Europe—but Pat stood like a Saml among them all.

The king saw him and his face shone.

He beckoned to him to step forward.

Pat stepped forward proudly, and presented arms.

"I haven't seen you before," said the king. "How long have you been in the service?"

"Twenty-seven years."

The king stared. "Twenty-seven years! I should have known it had you been in the service a week. How old are you?"

"Three weeks."

"Three weeks! and been in the service twenty-seven years!"

The king turned purple with rage.

"Do you think I am a fool, or are you one yourself?" he shouted.

"Both."

"Seize that fellow!" said the king, locking as though he was going to burst. "Off with him to the guard-house!"

Pat remonstrated in Irish, which was not understood. Honor and glory, and even money, all looked cheap enough to him now, and he wished himself back on good old English soil.

The officer of the guard happened to know Pat's German acquirements, and he once rightly guessed the situation when the poor recruit was marched to the guard-house. He explained the whole matter to the king, who for once had a laugh that relaxed his usually clouded face.

The recruit was at once set at liberty.

"Faix," said Pat O'Flannigan, "niver pretend to know what ye don't know; else it is a whoppin' big blunder ye'll be after gettin' into."—The Church Standard.

A Brave Swimmer.

A story from the Royal Humane Society records is retold in McClure's Magazine. The hero was an obscure negro seaman, of the schooner Dolphin, which was sailing along the coast of Nicaragua. About two o'clock in the morning a sudden squall overturned the boat.

Within ten seconds the Dolphin was bottom up, her passengers and crew struggling in the water.

First came Wilson McField, swimming. McField was a negro, a subject of Great Britain. All his twenty-seven years of life he had known these waters, and he swam like a seal. Fortunately the vessel's helm lay deep in the water owing to the weight of the anchor and chain which had dropped out when the vessel turned. Here, by grappling hard, but not without being severely cut by barnacles, McField succeeded in climbing upon the ship's bottom. Then he shouted to the others, and one by one, as they reached the vessel's bottom, he pulled up five of the crew.

After the crew was safely perched on the Dolphin's bottom, they had to cling their best, for the sea had now risen, and the wind was blowing half a gale, although the worst of the squall had passed. Thus they sat for over two hours, drifting at the will of the sea. Then a strange thing happened. Anderson, the cook, asserted that he heard pounding from within the vessel. They all listened, and heard nothing. A little later Anderson again asserted that something was drumming on the ship's bottom under him.

They all heard it distinctly, Anderson even insisting that he also heard voices. They finally made up their minds that some one was imprisoned in the chain. They discussed the matter until it was broad daylight, and all the while the pounding was growing fainter. None of the white men could propose any way of saving those in the cabin, if there really was any one imprisoned. At last McField, the negro, said he would dive under and into the boat. They assured him he would not be able to get out again any more than those who were already there. But he insisted. They had secured a coil of rope that had been dragging from the vessel. One end of this was held by the men on the ship's bottom, the other end McField took in his teeth. Then he dove from the vessel into the sea, and quickly disappeared.

He went down swiftly, passed under the gunwale, and then rose through the hatch. It was pitch dark, and the interior of the vessel was full of disturbed cargo, and empty barrels and boxes. McField dived in among them, fearlessly holding his breath, and made for the cabin. The rope kept catching, and once he drove his head into a post with terrific force, but he kept on steadily. Finally, concluding that he had reached the cabin, he rose quickly and an instant later his head was out of the water. And yet so foul was the air, and so narrow the space between the top of the water and the ship's bottom, that he could scarcely breathe. Everything was in absolute darkness; he could see no men, but just at that moment he heard again the familiar knocking.

He called out. At first there was no answer; then he heard voices, but faintly swimming in the direction from which they seemed to come, he found two men braced against the cabin sides, and holding their heads above water. Here they had been for upwards of six

MISS FAY LEE,

President of the Shakespearian Club, Kansas City.

Miss Fay Lee.

"Your booklet came to my home like a message of health when I had suffered with headache, backache and bearing-down pains. I was weak, nervous and hysterical and had not consulted any doctor, thinking it would pass away in time, but instead I found that the pains increased and were more frequent. I decided to try Wine of Cardui and in a short time was much improved. It seemed to act like a charm. I kept up the treatment and the result was most satisfactory. Words fail to express my gratitude for the suffering that is now saved me. I am in fine health, physically and mentally. I can only say 'thank you', but there is much more in my heart for you."

BEARING-DOWN pains are the worst that women know. If you are suffering from this trouble you need not be uncertain about it. The pains in the abdomen and back that feel as if heavy weights were pulling down on the nerves of the stomach are "bearing-down pains". They may not be particularly severe at present but they are growing worse. That headache which nearly drives you distracted now is caused by the terrible nervous tension. The nerves soon begin to give way under the strain. You perhaps jump at any unusual disturbance, or laugh or weep, hysterically, at no apparent cause. That is what Miss Fay Lee, 603½ North Seventh Street, Kansas City, Kansas, was coming to when she rescued herself by taking Wine of Cardui. The Wine made her a strong, healthy woman again, as it has made a million other women strong and healthy. By inducing regular menstruation the entire system is relieved of the terrible wasting drains. The ligaments which hold the womb in place are strengthened by a healthy flow and that organ is returned to its normal position. Returning health is the result. This is what Wine of Cardui has done for thousands of the best women in America.

If you need advice write The Ladies' Advisory Department, The Chattanooga Medicine Company, Chattanooga, Tenn., describing all your symptoms freely, and a letter of advice will be sent you. Secure a $1.00 bottle of Wine of Cardui from your druggist to-day.

WINE of CARDUI

A million suffering women have found relief in Wine of Cardui.

HIGH HATS AND LOW HATS Broad Hats and Narrow Hats STIFF HATS AND SOFT HATS

EVERY SHAPE AND STYLE OF HAT THAT'S CORRECT

There is a great deal in habit in the matter of hats, as in other things. Some men have the habit of paying $5.00 for their hats. This is manifestly a bad habit, when you can buy as good a hat here for $3.00. You can get the regulation hat styles at any good store, but we go a step further; we not only show you all the regular styles, but we have all the variations and the exclusive styles. It will please you to place your head in one of our hats.

LONG-TATE CLOTHING COMP'Y

42 South Tryon Street, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Goods sent on approval returnable at our expense.

Mid Summer Cut Price Sale

of

Furniture, Carpets,
Pianos and Organs,

Wonderful Bargains can be had at this Store during this Cut Price Sale.

Everything Without Reserve is reduced in Price to the Lowest Price to sell the Goods and make room for the Changes now going on in our store. Come and See Us in Person, but if you can't come, you will get some reduction if you order by mail. Don't fail to grasp this opportunity to save money.

Parker-Gardner Company.

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA.

hours, knocking and knocking. McField recognized one of them as a young rubber-cutter, named Mallitz, and the other was a native Spanish-Nicaraguan, called Obando. Both fell upon McField, clamoring to be saved, so that he was compelled to threaten them with instant death unless they obeyed him. He fastened the rope around Mallitz and gave the signal to pull. Mallitz took a long breath and went down. McField dived into the water with him. Mallitz was panic-stricken, and entangled himself in the hatchway. McField lost precious seconds freeing him, so that when at last they went out under the gunwale both were nearly drowned. Mallitz was quite unconscious, and McField was more dead than alive when they reached the surface. They pulled Mallitz aboard, but McField would not follow.

As soon as the rope was free again, he took it in his teeth, and dove a second time, found the hatch, and entered the cabin. Obando was almost uncontrollable with exhaustion and panic, but McField finally secured him with a rope, and, both having taken long breaths, the signal was given to pull up. This time the trip was made without accident, and on reaching the surface both men were drawn on board.

In the course of time, and in a roundabout way, the story of McField's bravery came to the attention of the United States Government, and the negro seaman was awarded a medal and fifty dollars in gold. Later, the news reached England, and McField, being a British subject, the Royal Humane Society awarded him a silver medal.

SOUTHERN DENTAL COLLEGE, ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

If you are interested in obtaining a dental education, write for free catalogue of full instruction.

ADDRESS DR. S. W. FOSTER, DEAN, 100 NORTH BUTLER STREET, ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

NOTABLE NEW BOOKS.

A limited number of advanced subscriptions will be accepted at Special Prices for following new books to be issued on or before September 1, 1903.

Life and Letters of ROBERT LEWIS DABNEY, D. D. LL. D.

By THOMAS CAREY JOHNSON, D. D. LL. D.

Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity Union Theological Seminary, Richmond Va.

A notably interesting book about one of the most remarkable men the South has produced. Interesting alike to historical students of social, political, and industrial conditions of the South, to Southern Veteran and Statesmen, to students of Theology and Philosophy, and to those who wish to be fully informed about the history and development of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

600 Pages. Cloth Binding. Regular Price $2.50 Net (add 18c for Postage.) To Advance Subscribers $2.00 Postpaid. Limit 600 Copies.

"APOLOGETICS"

Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D., LL. D., Prof. of Systematic Theology Louisville Seminary. Introduction by B. B. WARFIELD, D. D., LL. D., of Princeton Theological Seminary.

A clear, systematic statement of the great fundamental truths of the Christian faith. Adopted as a text book in some of the best Seminaries of the country.

180 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $2.50 Net; Sheep, $3.00 Net [add 15c. Postage]. To advance subscribers, cloth $2.00; sheep, $2.50 postpaid. Limit 500 copies.

PIONEERING IN AFRICA.

By Rev SAMUEL PHILLIPS VERNER, A. B.

for six years a Missionary of the Southern Presbyterian Church on the Congo. This book is out of the usual order, and is at once scientific, historical, critical and religious. A notable contribution to the literature about a great continent which is coming more into view every year. Illustrated with original photographs and maps not hitherto published.

470 Pages. Cloth. Regular Price $2.00 Net [add 10c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.75 Net Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

Christianity and Modern Evolution.

By Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D.

The remarkably original and forcible course of lectures delivered in Louisville, Ky., before very large and highly edified audiences have been revised, and are now presented in an attractive form for the benefit of a larger public.

250 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $1.25 Net [add 10c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.00 net Postpaid. Limit 300 Copies.

A complete list of our publications sent on request. Any book in print furnished on short notice. Write us about your wants.

PRESBYTERIAN COMMITTEE OF PUBLICATION, Richmond, Va.

NOW READY
"REPORT ON 1000 CONFINEMENT CASES"

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF MEDICINE RICHMOND VIRGINIA
MEDICINE-DENTISTRY-PHARMACY

"CLINICS 1902-'3"-"TEACHING METHODS"
"CATALOGUE"

THE COUNTRY IS RINGING WITH THE PRAISES OF THE "Southland Belle" Shoes

FAMOUS BECAUSE MERITORIOUS. THE BEST IN AMERICA FOR $1.50 TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE.

IF YOUR DEALER DOES NOT CARRY THEM, A POSTAL CARD TO US WILL TELL YOU WHERE YOU CAN GET THEM.

CRADDOCK-TERRY CO.
LEADING SHOE MANUFACTURERS
OF THE SOUTH.
LYNCHBURG-----VA.

WOOL

Ship Direct to the Manufacturer and Save Dealers' Profits.

They pay freight on the wool and guarantee satisfaction.

In exchange for goods they pay 25 cents per pound for unwashed and 35 cents per pound for washed wool.

If you have wool to sell for cash, exchange for goods, or to be manufactured, ship it to CHATHAM MFG. CO., ELKIN, N. C., and you will not regret it.

HAMPDEN-SIDNEY COLLEGE.

The 128th Session will open Wednesday, September 9th, 1903.

Four courses of instruction leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., B L. and A. M. Nine professors and instructors. Healthful location. Moral surroundings. For catalogue apply to

RICHARD McILWAINE, President, Hampden-Sidney, Va

Our Little Folks.

Children's Letters.

Petersburg, Va., Sept. 4th.

Dear Standard:

I wrote to you once before. My aunt takes your nice paper. My unole has a very bad cold. I hope to see my letter in print. I will have to close.

Yours truly,

Nan Cuthbert.

Belmont, N. C., Aug. 6, 1903.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl 7 years old. I have two sisters and one brother. My father is a farmer.

School will start the next month.

We go to preaching at the Presbyterian Church.

Your friend,

Annie Hall.

The African Children.

Dear Little Friends:

Oft times when I look at our little folks here in Africa's sunny land, I think that you in the home land must wonder what they look like, also if they have a good time and are happy just like other boys and girls. I don't know that I can get you entirely out of wonderland, but I thought to try to help you just a little to see them as they come in and go out among us day by day.

First, these little people look very much like many of the little children that you see round about you every day. Though clothed only in a bit of cloth wrapped around the waist, many of them have pretty faces, are quick and bright, full of life and fun. Knowing nothing outside of their own villages and people, they are as happy as they can be and wish for nothing better than the little strip of cloth that they wear and a good bath in the sand in the sunshine. But the children in and around the Mission soon learn to want something more than the loin cloth and are very happy when they own a chikowela (shirt or dress.)

Play? Yes they play and have a jolly good time, and some of their games remind me very much of your own. They love best to play on moonlight nights (and the moon shines beautifully here); then they have "hide-and-seek," "round-and-round," or "run and I will catch you and forfeit my place as leader." The little tots love to play "frogs going to market." They all squat, part at the head of a given line and part at the foot. As they begin to hop toward each other they say in concert:

"Chiula, chiula, kuya kudi kunyi?"

Nyaya ku kasalu ka Baluba;

Beau bataha uwenza cinyi?

Bawenza ludimi buka masode."

The fun is in trying to pass one another without touching.

Many of them are quite clever in playing "Jack stones." They are so quick that after tossing up the marble (a small nut), they can put the "pigs" in the pen, take them out, and one by one "take them to water" before the marble touches the ground.

At night when the moon does not shine—and it is so dark!—they love to sit around the fire and tell tales. They know nothing of the good fairy who comes with her wand and makes everything so beautiful for good little boys and girls. But they tell of the leopard and his stealthy creep, of the lion, how he is king of the forest and towers in strength above all other animals. Their tales are not all so creepy, for they tell of a little bird singing for those who had been good, but for those who had tried to steal her young from her she would hurl stones at them. They enjoy this and find quite as much fun in it as you do. And just like you they get sleepy and before the tale telling is finished many of them will lie down where they were sitting and go to sleep. Some of the mischief loving ones now seeing a good chance for a bit of fun, get a string and tie the feet and hands of the sleeping ones together, then blacken or whiten their faces; this causes much laughter and fun.

I feel quite sure that I am leaving you still wondering, for I dare say you wonder if the girls play dolls, roll a hoop, or jump the rope, or if the boys play ball, spin a top or play marbles. Some other time, if you like, I'll tell you.

Lucy G. Shepherd.

Luebo, Africa.

Doing and Dreaming.

"I know I shan't pull that thousand dollars, but I may as well peg into this history lesson," said Teddy van Winkle, as he humped himself into a corner and then drew his knees up for a book rest. "I didn't know so many things ever happened in America. How did they come to, anyway? Seems 's if we'll never get to the end of 'em. I don't mind studying 'bout Indians—that's jolly easy. But when the French and English and Spanish come pushing their noses in, and then we go and get mixed up in a war among ourselves, why—whew!—learning 'out all that isn't any joke. Tell you what! If I had the running of this nation I'd hold things steady and not go to work and make a lot of history for school children to learn. And you just bet I wouldn't have a date to a single thing! Dates are the worst ever. Whoo! here goes!"

Teddy grasped the top of his book with both hands, fixed his eyes on a dot in the wall paper, and set his memory tugging away at the review.

It wasn't easy for Teddy to hold steadily at his study. Only a little way from him sat Hamlin, his elder brother, tipped back in his chair, with his hands back of his head. He was building the finest air castles you can imagine, and his little sisters were listening with all their ears.

For Hamlin was a good talker. He had a way of making you believe that the things he planned were going to come sure. He was a bright youth. Everyone liked him for his pleasant voice and gentle manner. He could learn very quickly; but he would much rather sit and build air castles any day than to study. The mother smiled and

Once upon a time ✽

A man—for an hour—doubled up with cramps, took

Painkiller

(PERRY DAVIS')

was cured—immediately. His friends being told, said—"Pooh, we've all used PAINKILLER—for years.

Moral. Don't suffer—an hour—keep Painkiller (Perry Davis') in the house.

Fruit Jar Wrenches

Have you ever seen the "Tobax" Fruit Jar Wrench? It will open the tightest fruit jar and will also put the cap on very tight.

We are offering them at 10c. each,

and you will say it is the best article in your kitchen.

Send ten cents and two stamps for postage.

WEDDINGTON HARDWARE CO

Atlantic & N. C. R. R.

Time table in effect November 19, 1902.

Eastbound Trains.	Passenger Daily	Passenger Daily
Leave Goldsboro.....	3:30 p m	8:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	4:22 p m	8:48 a m
Leave New Bern.....	5:50 p m	10:10 a m
Arrive Morehead City.....	7:15 p m
Westbound Trains.	Passenger Daily	Passenger Daily
Leave Morehead City.....	7:05 a m
Leave New Bern.....	9:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	10:12 a m
Arrive Goldsboro.....	11:15 a m

ELECTRIC LIGHTED TRAINS

Are operated by the

Between

TEXAS

And the

North and East

Between

BIRMINGHAM, MEMPHIS,

And the

North and West

Between

OKLAHOMA

And the

North and East

Observation cafe cars, under the management of Fred Harvey. Equipment of the latest and best design.

the Van Winkle children were expected to study two hours on Saturday mornings. After that they had the day to themselves. It was on that first Saturday that Ted curled himself up in the corner and talked away to himself as we heard him do at the beginning of this story. And while Ted fixed his eyes on a dot in the wall paper and made himself think the history, while Hamlin leaned back in his chair and told his little sisters all the things he was going to do with that thousand dollars. So, while Hamlin was idle, the little sisters were kept from study, too, because it was so pleasant to hear about the air castles.

Not every day was spent in that way. Sometimes Hamlin took his book and worked like a good fellow. But oftener he sat and dreamed—for there was a good deal more to dream about than there had been.

The six months were up before anyone realized it—I mean anyone but the father. He had been getting ready for it. And he told the mother on the sly that it was worth a good thousand dollars to him to get such a review of the subject.

So the day came and passed. The papers were handed in, and the principal of the school was invited over to dinner and paid a good sum for going over them with the father. And—but I'm quite sure you know already who won the thousand dollars; it was pinky little Ted. And you never saw so surprised a boy in all your life.

But there was still hope for Hamlin; because if his papers were reasonably perfect, he was to have the same amount. The professor and the father went over them carefully to see if this could be. But, even with great allowance made, they couldn't do it fairly. They called Hamlin into the library and showed him the number of his mistakes and let him see for himself he had not earned a prize.

He was deeply grieved and disappointed. Big fellow that he was, the tears came into his eyes. Teddie offered to go halves, but Hamlin was too manly for that.

"It's yours, Ted. You worked for it. I might have had the same. No one is to blame but Hamlin van Winkle, and he's very much ashamed of himself."

He did not sleep all that night, and instead of dreaming pleasantly he set himself to do some very hard thinking. Next morning he went into the library.

"I've come, father," he said, "to tell you that I've found out why the prize didn't come to me, as well as to Ted. It's because I spend my time building air castles and Ted spends his in doing what ever he has to do. It's going to be mighty hard, but I'm determined to turn over a new leaf. And I came to tell you that I'm glad you were so generous to make this offer to us. It has opened my eyes. I'm getting to be a regular no-account fellow." Mr. Van Winkle took both of Hamlin's hands in his and looked down into the boy's eyes very tenderly. "It was for this very reason that I did it, Hamlin. You make me very happy because you have thought the matter out for yourself. I'm sure you'll win. There's good stuff in you, my boy. I'll help you all I can."

A Perfect Laxative is one which is palatable, pleasant to take and can be relied upon to act gently, but thoroughly; cleansing the entire system of all impurities. Such a remedy is Mozley's Lemon Elixir. It is a pleasant lemon tonic, acceptable to the most delicate stomach, and a thoroughly effective laxative, acting upon the bowels, liver, and kidneys, without the slightest unpleasantness.

MOZLEY'S LEMON HOT DROPS are without an equal for coughs, colds, sore throat and bronchitis.

Sold by all druggists.

Mozley's
Lemon
Elixir.

E. M. ANDREWS,

The Old Reliable
Furniture Dealer

Headquarters Greensboro, N. C.

Three large stores in one. We are now well prepared to furnish your home at a great saving to you. Our profit saved in the buying (five stores in all). Try a

Royal Felt Mattress.

They are the best. If desired, a month's trial free will be given. Feathers taken in exchange.

Make your wants known by mail and our representative will call on you. Photographs and prices sent on application.

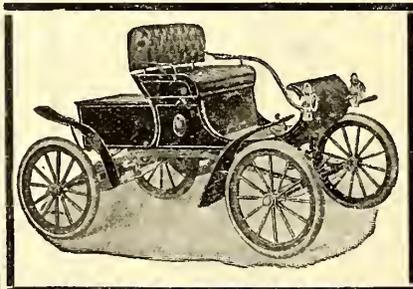

E. M. ANDREWS, 315, 317, 319 South Elm Street.
Pianos, Organs, Carpets, Matting.

Fall, 1903, Styles STETSON HATS.

We announce to the great army of men who come here for their headwear that our hat department now contains the new shapes as designed and made by Stetson, the world's greatest hat manufacturer. Stetson's hats are not only noted for style and beauty, but the wear—the long wear that one gets—is a feature of the Stetson that has made it the foremost hat for the price in America.

Also the "Miller" hat for the new season is ready for your inspection. With these two famous hats, and other lines, we are now ready to begin with much activity our campaign of hat-selling for fall service.

Ed. W. Mellon Co.

Oldsmobiles

BEGINNING AUGUST 1st, we can make deliveries in 10 days or less, and the price, with wood wheels F. O. B. Detroit, will be.....$650.00

Osmond L. Barringer

Distributing Agent

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA

And, though it wasn't at all easy, the boy did win. He has his times of dreaming yet, but he works when the time comes for work. It was a severe lesson, but it saved the boy.—The Christian Advocate.

The Boy Who Did Not Tease.

"Perhaps," said Mildred thoughtfully, stepping back a little to see if Hero's bow was tied becomingly, "perhaps we sha'n't like him after all, Hero. You know boys sometimes tease."

Hero looked up brightly and wagged his tail, to show he understood. He hated ribbons, and was aching that minute to tear the bow off and chew it up; but he loved Mildred, and remembered how badly she felt when he did those naughty things. So he did not touch the bow. Something was evidently about to happen for Hero had been freshly washed and brushed and combed, and then there was the big blue bow on his collar; and Mildred herself looked very sweet in her new cream cashmere gown.

And presently, when he and Mildred sat at the window watching the carriages, Hero knew that somebody was coming. And so there was—Uncle Fred and Cousin Hal were to spend a whole week with Mildred and her parents; and she and Cousin Hal had never seen each other.

At last the familiar home carriage came in sight; and there with father were a large, jolly-looking man and a rosy-cheeked boy. Mother hurried to the door, and Mildred ran—oh, where do you think? Out into the kitchen, with Hero at her heels!

She was a very shy little girl, you see, and when mother turned to speak to her, there was no girlie in sight. And she and Hal found her, a few minutes later, hiding in a corner, behind the big gray shawl!

Hal laughed merrily; and Hero—well, one look showed him that he liked this new cousin. He ran over to him, barking and jumping gayly, and showing in every possible way how glad he was that Hal had come. And Mildred soon forgot her shyness, and found Cousin Hal a delightful companion.

Hal never teased; but he understood what dogs like and before he had been there many hours, the hated blue bow was folded up and laid away; and Hero's collar was never decorated with ribbons again.

The days passed very swiftly, and were full of pleasant things.

One day Mildred said, hesitatingly: "I was afraid before you came, Cousin Hal, that we wouldn't like you, Hero and I. Bessie Moore said boys always teased."

Hal laughed. "And I thought," he said, "that girls were always fussy and wanted to play with dolls and such things all the time. But I've changed my mind. You like to coast and snowball, and be out of doors, as much as any boy, don't you?"

"Yes, indeed," Mildred said, earnestly. "And you've never teased once, so we've changed our minds, too. Haven't we, Hero?"—Alice Miller Weeks, in The Little Learner's Paper.

HEAD
ACHE

CAPUDINE

HICKS' CAPUDINE never fails to cure
HEADACHE AND COLDS
It is the great remedy also for Indigestion and Sour Stomach. Has no effect on the heart. For nervousness and brain fog it is unequalled.
AT DRUGGISTS. 10c.. 25c.. 50c.

COLDS

Atlantic Coast Line.

Thoroughfare of Travel between the

NORTH and SOUTH

FLORIDA ————— CUBA

A passenger service unexcelled for luxury and comfort, equipped with the latest Pullman Dining, Sleeping and Thoroughfare Cars.

For rates, schedule, maps or any information, write to

WM. J. CRAIG,
General Passenger Agent, Wilmington, N. C.

The Security Life and Annuity Co.

(LEGAL RESERVE)

Home Office : Greensboro, N. C.

Guaranty Capital, . . . . . $100,000.00.
(Deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.)

Our Life Annuity, Disability and Endowment Policy . . . . .

HAS CASH AND LOAN VALUES.

1. Is fully paid-up in 20 years.
2. Is the most attractive policy issued.
3. Contains every essential idea in Life Insurance.
4. Provides a fixed income for Life for the widow.
5. Provides a fixed income for the children during their minority.
6. Provides a fixed income for the insured during disability and old age.
7. Is secured by a cash guaranty capital of $100,000.00 deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.

J. VAN LINDLEY, President.
GEO. A. GRIMSLEY, Secretary.
R. E. FOSTER, Actuary.

HIWASSEE ROUTE Atlanta, Knoxville and Northern Railway. SOUTHERN SCENIC LINE.

Short line between Atlanta, Ga., and Knoxville, Tenn., and between points in the Southeast and Northwest.

Low round trip rates to Mountain and Seashore Resorts. Why go to Switzerland or Colorado? For scenery the A. K. & N. Railway crosses the Great Smoky Mountains by the only standard-gauge loop line in the world; 2,000 feet above sea-level and 600 feet above the Hiwassee River.

For rates or information apply to
E. S. MILLER, T. P. A.,
18 N. Pryor St., Atlanta.
S. H. STOUT, General Agent, Kucxville
J. H. McWILLIAMS, G. P. A., Knoxville

The Worth Co.

SUCCESSORS TO

WORTH & WORTH,

Wholesale Grocers
and Commission Merchants

HANDLE—
COTTON AND NAVAL STORES.
SELL—
GENERAL GROCERIES,
FARM SUPPLIES,
LIME, CEMENT, NAILS,
HAY AND GRAIN.

Best Terms and Lowest Prices.
WILMINGTON N. C.

Clippings.

Visitor, to office boy: "Please ask the manager of he is too busy to see me."

Office boy, a moment later: "Yes, he says he is too busy."

Visitor: "Very well. Tell him I will call again next year. I wanted to pay my subscription."

An Irishman was brought before the magistrates for stealing a piece of meat. In defence, he said: "Your worship, the last piece of meat I had since I landed in England was a roast potato, boiled hard, which I ate three days ago; and, if you don't believe me, I have it in my pocket, I can show it to you."—Ram's Horn.

"Not going to Newport this year? Why, I thought you were becoming so prominent socially that you simply had to go there."

"No, our social prominence is so well established now that we don't have to go anywhere."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"How many Hessians came to this country to fight for the English?" an applicant was asked in his civil service examination.

He didn't know, but he did not propose to be left entirely. This is what he wrote for an answer: "A great many more than ever went back."

"Poor man," she said, stooping over the victim who had just been dragged out from under her automobile, "have you a wife?" "No," he groaned, "this is the worst thing that ever happened to me."

"Yes, I explained the whole theory of the new discovery to my wife."

"And what did she say?"

"She said, 'George, can you remember whom the Sourfield girl married? I've been trying all day to think of his name.'"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

There is real philosophy in the story of the colored preacher who is said to have announced to his congregation in advance of taking his text, "Bredren, I have got er dollah sermon an' er five dollah sermon. Please take up de collection so dat I can tell whichun you wants."

Mr. Dooley's definition of a fanatic is quite to the point. He says that he is "a man who does what he thinks the Lord would do if he knew the facts in the case."

"A man dat's got a fast boss," said Uncle Eph'm, "don' keer how off'n he got to git shoes fur 'im. Hit's diff'runt if he's got a boy."—Chicago Tribune.

One of the best pieces of advice for a safe journey through life I saw on a sign at a railroad crossing. The sign read, "Stop! Look! Listen!"—Baltimore American.

Enraged reader: "I have come in to horsewhip the editor."

Office boy: "You'll have to wait; there are two others ahead of you"—Life.

A THING WORTH KNOWING.

No need of cutting off a woman's breast or a man's cheek or nose in a vain attempt to cure cancer. No need of applying burning plasters to the flesh and torturing those already weak from suffering. Soothing, balmy, aromatic oils give safe, speedy and certain cure. The most horrible forms of cancer of the face, breast, womb, mouth, stomach; large tumors, ugly ulcers, fistula, catarrh; terrible skin diseases, etc., are all successfully treated by the application of various forms of simple oils. Send for a book, mailed free, giving particulars and prices of Oils. Address Dr. D. M. Bye Co., Drawer 505, Indianapolis, Ind.

Atlanta & West Point RAILROAD COMPANY.

The Western Railway of Alabama.

Shortest and quickest route via Atlanta, Montgomery and New Orleans to all points in Texas, Mexico and California.

Operate Pullman's finest vestibuled sleepers. Unexcelled dining car service on all trains.

Through coaches between Washington and New Orleans.

Cafe-Observation cars on U. S. Fast Mail Trains Nos. 35 and 36, between Atlanta and Montgomery.

Rates and schedules cheerfully furnished by

B. HEYWARD, J. P. BILLUPS,
D. P. A., G. P. A.,
Atlanta, Ga. Atlanta, Ga.

R. E. LUTZ, CHAS. WICKERSHAM,
Traffic Manager, Pres. & Gen. Mgr.,
Montgomery, Ala. Atlanta, Ga.

Southern Railway

The Direct Line to all Points

TEXAS,
CALIFORNIA
FLORIDA,
CUBA and
PORTO RICO.

Strictly First-Class equipment on all Through and Local Trains, Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars on all night trains. Fast and safe Schedules.

Travel by the Southern and you are assured of a Safe, Comfortable and Expeditious journey.

Apply to Ticket Agents for Time Tables, Maps and General Information, or address

R. L. VERNON, F. R. DARBY,
T. P. A., C. P. & T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C. Asheville, N. C.

No trouble to answer questions.

XANTHINE
PROF. HERTZ GREAT GERMAN
HAIR RESTORATIVE
NOTHING LIKE IT.

NOTHING SO GOOD,
AND NEVER WILL BE.

Never fails. Testimonials of unquestionable credibility.

INSIST ON GETTING IT. Take other. Nothing else will give you satisfaction. If your druggist has not got it, write us. Not a dye, but always restores beautiful natural color; stops dandruff promotes growth.

At druggists. Price, $1. Insist on getting it. If your druggist has not got it, send us $1, and we will send you a bottle, Charles F. Peabody, highest testimonials. Write us for Circulars. XANTHINE COMPANY, Richmond, Va.

Ticket No.
1762.

Held by Mrs. E. C. Baldwin, of Maxton, N. C., secured the gift piano.

Evidently every person who registered for this piano is desirous of having an instrument in their home. To compensate for any disappointment and to aid them in adding music to their homes, we will make special prices and terms for the

NEXT THIRTY DAYS

to every person registered on our books.

We are Manufacturers,

We sell direct to the User.

We save all unnecessary profit

Write for full information in regard to our special offer and you can become the owner of a fine piano on easy terms and at a price that will induce you to buy.

Watch our Advertisements.

STIEFF

SOUTHERN WAREROOMS:
211-213 N. Tryon, & 22 W. 5th St.

C. H. WILMOTH, Mgr.

Charlotte, - - - - N. C.

Agnes Scott Institute
FOR YOUNG LADIES.

DECATUR, (Six miles from Atlanta) GEORGIA

Beautiful grounds. Modern buildings and equipment. Equable climate. Unsurpassed health record. Graduate, College Preparatory, and Special Courses. Certification to Eastern Colleges.

For catalogue address
F. H. GAINES, D. D., President, Box

ULCERINA.

The only cure for Chronic Ulcers on the market. The most reliable remedy known for Ring-Worms, Old Sores, Wounds of all kinds and chronic skin diseases. For sale by all druggists. Price 25 cents.

Manufactured by
R. G. ROZIER, M. D.,
LUMBERTON, N. C.

STILLMAN INSTITUTE, TUSCALOOSA. ALA.

For training Colored Ministers.
Offers good academic and theological instruction.

Now managed on the "Industrial" plan, by which a young man may exchange labor for an education.

Write for information to

V. D. CLAY LILLY, Superintendent
TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

Positions

GUARANTEED BY A

$5,000 BANK DEPOSIT

Railroad Fare Paid. 500 FREE Courses Offered. Board at Cost. Write Quick

GEORGIA-ALABAMA BUSINESS COLLEGE, Macon, Ga.

EVERY SUFFERER SHOULD KNOW

=KADOK=

The Pleasant tonic Headache Cure.
Superior to Others and Free from

Opaites

Try a package,

Price 10c.

At all Druggists or sent prepaid by

L. Richardson Drug Company,

Wholesale and manufacturing Druggists,
GREENSBORO, N. C.

TUCKER BROS.

Wilmington, N. C.

THE PLACE TO BUY YOUR

MONUMENTS,

HEADSTONES,

and all Cemetery Work,

at Bottom Prices. All

work delivered.

Branch yard at

Goldsboro, N. C.

Teachers' Interstate Examination Course.

Teachers wishing to prepare for examinations should write at once to Prof. J. L. Graham, LL. D., 152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn., for particulars concerning his Special Teachers' Examination Course

This course is taught by mail, and prepares Teachers for examination in every State in the Union. Leading educators pronounce it the best course ever offered to the teaching profession, and all Teachers wishing to advance in their profession should immediately avail themselves of it. Enclose stamp for reply.

For Sale Cheap

A one-horse power, high-speed General Electric motor, for 500-volt circuit; armature and commutator both new; all in thoroughly good repair. For particulars apply to

MANAGER PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD,
Charlotte, N. C.

SHORTHAND FREE.

Upon request Converse Business College will send a free lesson in Shorthand, with full explanation, to any one.

For the next thirty days Railroad fare will be paid for any one enrolling for one or more of our courses at the regular rate of tuition.

I. T. WILLIAMS, Secretary and Treasurer, Spartanburg, S. C.

Sewing Machines AND Supplies

NOW is the time to buy a Machine, and F. H. ANDREWS' is the place. No use to send your money to a catalogue house a thousand miles away, when I can furnish an elegant Drop Head Machine at $16 50, and finer ones in proportion. Attachments, Parts and Needles for all Machines supplied promptly.

F. H. ANDREWS,

20 WEST TRADE STREET, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The Old Reliable Dealer in Pianos, Organs and Sewing Machines.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE, Davidson, N.C.

Classical, Mathematical, Scientific, Literary, Biblical, Commercial.

Terms reasonable; Location healthful; Accommodations excellent; Teaching unsurpassed; Gymnasium complete.

Send for a catalogue

Address THE PRESIDENT.

DO YOU WANT

=A=

=TEACHER?=
||

We are in correspondence with hundreds of the best teachers in the U. S. for all grades school and college work. Can refer you to some that would probably suit. NO CHARGE. Members located in 18 states at salaries $2,500 per year down. Correspondence with school officers and teachers invited.

THE EDUCATIONAL BUREAU, U. S. A.
(Established 1891) Raleigh, N. C.
Branch Office; Fort Smith, Ark.

North Carolina

MILITARY ACADEMY.

Red Springs, N. C.

Ample faculty of five instructors. Location unsurpassed for healthfulness. Educates for business or for college and stand taken by graduates and students in university work the test of thoroughness. Cost small, considering advantages. Religious influences good. Address for catalogue,

CAPT. C. A. SHORT,
Principal.

DR. SAMUEL W. MURPHY,
Head Master.

Red Springs Seminary, The Ideal College for Women.

Faculty of twenty-six experienced teachers. College course leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., and B. L. T. The best advantages in Music and Art. Large two manual Pipe Organ. Electric lights. Steam heat. A catalogue will interest you.

REV. C. G. VARDELL, D. D., Red Springs, N. C.

Summer address, Blowing Rock, N. C.

Princeton Theological Seminary.

FRANCIS L. PATTON, D. D., LL. D., President.

The ninety-second session of Princeton Theological Seminary will open on Thursday, September 17th, 1913. Matriculation of Students takes place in Stuart Hall at eleven o'clock.

On Friday, September 18th, at eleven o'clock the Rev. William Park Armstrong will be inaugurated as Professor of New Testament Literature and Exegesis. His address will be on the subject, "The Witness of the Gospel." The exercises will take place in Miller Chapel. College Graduates of all denominations welcome. Faculty of seventeen. Modern methods of instruction. Choice of extra curriculum courses, and privilege of advanced study in Princeton University. A strong Y. M. C. A. An address each week by men prominent in aggressive Christian work. Annual conference of leading Christian workers. Three fine dormitories with parlor and baths in each. Ample grounds for recreation.

Address all correspondence, etc., to

Prof. GEERHARDUS VOS,
Princeton, N. J.

CLARKTON MALE INSTITUTE.

A MILITARY SCHOOL,

(UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE PRESBYTERY OF WILMINGTON).

Prepares Boys for college and for life. Board $8 per month. Tuition $27 for nine months. Write for catalog.

R. C. DEAL, Principal.

J. J. HUTSON, Commandant.

THE KEELEY CURE

Do you know what it does?

It relieves a person of all desire for strong drink or drugs, restores his nervous system to its normal condition, and reinstates a man to his home and business. For full particulars, address

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE, Greensboro, N. C.
Correspondence confidential.

What Protection Means.

On March 6, 1873, the Hon. Armistead Burwell, of Charlotte, N. C., who is well known throughout the State of North Carolina, was insured with the Aetna Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, Conn., under Renewable Term Policy No. 95,253 for $4,000. Annual Premium $64 76 When the first term of ten years expired in 1883 the Company renewed the policy for the next ten years at the

ORIGINAL RATE, WITHOUT A NEW EXAMINATION.

and have renewed this policy respectively in 1893 and 1903 without increase of rate of premium and without re-examination. If Mr. Burwell lives till 1913 he will have been insured for forty years at an annual cost of $16.19 per $1,000.

This Renewable Term Insurance was originally introduced by the Aetna. The "OLD AETNA" LEADS; the other companies follow.

OVER ONE MILLION DOLLARS have been paid out in death claims in this State during the last ten years.

For rates, etc., apply to

J. D. BOUSHALL, Mgr,
RALEIGH, N. C.

King's Mountain Military Academy,

Yorkville, South Carolina.

A high-grade school with a first-class patronage. Teachers and cadets live together as one family. A real home school. Stands for the best and nothing but the best. Faculty all active Christian men, who live in closest contact with the cadets.

Col. W. G. STEPHENSON, Supt.

North Carolina Medical College Davidson, N. C.

Three years' course to graduate. Sixteen Professors and Teachers.

Clinical instruction given in Davidson and Charlotte. Eighteen graduates this year made fine records before N. C. and S. C. Boards. Address

J. P. MUNROE, M. D., President, Davidson, N. C.

Private rooms in the Hospital.

Brown's University School, Charlotte, N. C.

Best advantages for boys whose parents can afford it. Five boarders, as members of family. Combined advantages of home life and city culture.

Write for particulars.

W. G. BROWN (U. of Va.) Prin.

The Eyes of School Children

Many parents allow their children to go through school half equipped for the work.

Defective eyes do not show in children as plainly as in grown people. Yet defects are present then if ever. They probably never know what it is to have perfect sight; thus they know no better, since there is no soreness and inflammation.

Don't wait for such signs.

Examination free

Dr. J. H. Spilman,

22 West Trade Street,
Blair's Drug Store, Charlotte.

Black River Institute

IVANHOE, N. C.

REV. V. H. STARBUCK, A. B., B. L., B. D.
Principal.

SESSION OPENS SEPTEMBER 22nd

High-grade work on very easy terms.
Under care of Wilmington Presbytery.

For particulars address,

V. H. STARBUCK or E. J. W. ANDERSON
Ivanhoe, N. C.

GREGG

SHORTHAND BY MAIL.

You need not leave your home to learn this system. It is easy to learn, easy to write and easy to read.

Typewriter sent to responsible students.
Send today for Booklet C.

Southern Shorthand and

Business University.

J. M. RESSLER, President.

Norfolk, Va.

HALL & PEARSALL

Wholesale - Grocers

AND

Commission Merchants,

Wilmington, N. C.

SPECIALTIES:

Salt Fish, Molasses.

Meat, Flour, Salt

BAGGING and TIES.

Samples and prices on request.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established 1858. CHARLOTTE, N. C., SEPTEMBER 23, 1903. Vol. XLV.---No 38

The Life Divine

When mid thy common days God sends thee one,
A day whose radiance of earth and sun
Is mated to thy soul's responsive mood,
And thou with open eyes seest all things good;
When the Lord speaks to thee in flower and bird,
And opens up to thee His hidden word,
And grants the long-held answer to thy prayer—
A day when suddenly thou art aware
Of truth's own message to thy heart revealed
And leaping to thy lips by love unsealed;
Oh, then give thanks and praise, for come what may,
The Holy Ghost hath shared thy life, one day.

***

But if the morrow bringeth thee again
Into the world of sinful, needy men,
Eager to tell thy message and to give
A gospel whereby dying souls may live;
And lo! the carping world will not believe
The heavenly sign, nor yet thy words receive;
When thy new speech thy brother doth offend
And thou art but a dreamer to thy friend—
Then, as thou seekest comfort from thine own
And findest thou art left with God alone,
Rejoice with joy that none shall take away,
For thou hast shared the life of Christ, one day.

—Ellen Hamlin Butler in The Congregationalist.

Peace Institute and Conservatory, Raleigh, North Carolina.

A THOROUGH SCHOOL OF HIGH-GRADE FOR GIRLS. IN PINE BELT OF NORTH CAROLINA SO FAMOUS FOR HEALTH. * * * * *

We canvass closely and select carefully hence the high-tone and character of this school and its pupils. Catalogue free. Address, JAS. DINWIDDIE, President.

STATESVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE

The best College accessible to the young women of Western North Carolina, and the cheapest for the opportunities offered. The session opens September 9, 1903. Send for information,

REV. J. A. SCOTT, President,
Statesville, N. C.

Kings Business College!

(INCORPORATED)

Capital Stock, - - - - - $30,000.00

The rush of fall students has begun. They are coming in daily and the enrollment promises to be the heaviest in the history of the College.

Fall Session Opened September 1, 1903.

Choice of 50 positions every month to our graduates, starting in at salaries from fifty to seventy-five dollars per month. Write or call about this at once

KING'S BUSINESS COLLEGE, .. Charlotte or Raleigh, N. C.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE FOR WOMEN, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Tuition and board lower than any school of same grade in the South. Under the control of the Presbyteries of Concord and Mecklenburg.

For catalogue, address, REV. J. R. BRIDGES, President.
Or MISS LILY LONG, Dean.

Truthful, Pure, Manly Boys for The Fishburne School, Waynesboro, Virginia.

English, Classical and Military. Experienced teachers. Thorough work. Superior location. Presbyterian training. THREE STUDENTS OF LAST SESSION HAVE RECEIVED GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS. Write for catalogue. JAS. A. FISHBURNE, A. B., Principal.

The Normal and Collegiate Institute, FOR YOUNG WOMEN. ASHEVILLE, N. C.

The Fall Term Opens September 16, 1903.

1. A normal course for the thorough training of Teachers under instructors from best Normal Schools
  2. A Commercial Course, including Stenography, Typewriting, Bookkeeping, etc.
  3. A Course of Domestic Science, including (a) Scientific Cooking, (b) Draughting, Cutting, Fitting, and Making of Garments.
  4. An admirable Musical Department has been provided under trained and experienced teachers. Systematic study of the Bible in all Departments.
- Terms for Board and Tuition in any of the Departments, $50.00 per term, or $100.00 per year.
For Catalogue, address REV. THOMAS LAWRENCE, D. D., Asheville, N. C.

Raleigh Marble Works.

COOPER BROS., Props.

RALEIGH, N. C.

MONUMENTS,

Tablets, Headstones, Iron Fences.

We Pay the Freight.

Please mention Standard.

Write for our
New Catalogue

THE MERCHANTS & FARMERS NATIONAL BANK

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Capital and Profits, - - - $290,000.

Out of Town Accounts.

Depositors living outside of Charlotte can send us their deposits by mail or express, upon receipt of which the amount will be credited to their account and the deposit acknowledged by mail same day.

We furnish such accounts check books, free of cost, and write up the account monthly, mailing detailed statement with all cancelled checks.

DR. J. H. McADEN, - - - President.
C. N. EVANS, Jr., - Cashier.

HOUSTON, DIXON & CO.,

SCHOOL BOOKS, OFFICE SUPPLIES, and HURD'S VERY FINE STATIONERY.
Opposite Central Hotel, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Teachers Wanted.

We need at once a few more Teachers for Fall schools. Good positions are being filled daily by us. We are receiving more calls this year than ever before. Schools and colleges supplied with teachers free of cost. Enclose stamp for reply.

AMERICAN TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION
J. L. GRAHAM, LL. D., Manager.
152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn.

BIG 8 Chain of 8 Colleges owned by business men and indorsed by business men. Fourteen Cashiers of Banks are on our Board of Directors. Our diploma means something. Enter any time. Positions secured.
Draughon's Practical Business Colleges,
(Incorporated, Capital Stock $300,000.00.)

Nashville, Tenn. U Atlanta, Ga.
Ft. Worth, Texas, S Montgomery, Ala.
St. Louis, Mo. S Galveston, Texas,
Little Rock, Ark. A Shreveport, La.

For 150 page catalogue address either place.
If you prefer, may pay tuition out of salary after course is completed. Guarantee graduates to be competent or no charges for tuition.
HOME STUDY: Bookkeeping, Shorthand, Penmanship, etc., taught by mail. Write for 100 page BOOKLET on Home Study. It's free.

Pantops Academy For Boys, Near Charlottesville, Va.

Fully equipped. Equable climate. Tract of 833 acres, formerly owned by Thomas Jefferson and named by him from two Greek words—"All-seeing." Also Summer School. Catalogue. JOHN R. SAMPSON, A. M.

Medical College of Virginia.

Established 1838.

Departments of Medicine, Dentistry and Pharmacy

The sixty sixth session will commence on September 29, 1903. Well equipped Laboratories, splendid Hospital facilities and abundance of clinical material afford excellent opportunities for practical work.

Tuition fees and living expenses are very moderate. For announcement and further information, address, CHRISTOPHER TOMPKINS, M. D., Dean. Richmond, Va.

D. W. Badham,
Charlotte, N. C.

Tuner, Repairer and Salesman of Pianos. School work a specialty.

Mention the Standard.

Presbyterian Standard.

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., SEPTEMBER 23, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 38

Event and Comment.

There are more Jews in New York city than there are in the whole German empire, with its 35,000,000 Protestants and 20,000,000 Catholics. We could wish that some of our millennial brethren could modify their interpretations of Scripture so that Jerusalem might be taken to mean New York.

The way some of our Northern exchanges, like the New York Sun, are advocating the secession of Panama from the United States of Colombia, is ridiculous or iniquitous to those who know their record as to the secession of the Confederate States of America.

The Biblical Recorder says that Dr. Taylor, lately elected president of the Georgetown (Kentucky) College, is an anti-invisibilisticist and is moreover not sound on Baptistism. Our advice would be to shoot him on the spot, and thus make him an invisibilisticist so far as this world is concerned.

Those who used to study at the Seminary "Ryle on the Gospels," will be glad to know that his successor in the Bishopric of Liverpool is well known for his evangelical sympathies who will carry out the broad traditions of his venerated predecessor. Dr. Chavasse is foremost in every Christian word and work.

Mrs. Mary Morrison Smith, widow of the late Dr. B. M. Smith, of Union Seminary, died in Lexington, Va., on Thursday of last week, and was buried at Hampden-Sidney by the side of her husband, on Saturday. She was in her 82d year, had suffered recently a stroke of paralysis and gently passed away in sleep into the world of light and reunion.

The Passive Resistance scheme by which conscientious non-conformists have allowed their property to be sold at auction rather than pay voluntarily for sectarian education, is likely soon to develop into Active Resistance, with the disruption of the Tory party. Not the smallest weight on that party in the next general elections will be the Education Act. The "non-conformist conscience" is still a force to be reckoned with in England.

France seems ever unable to discriminate between a true religion and a false, or to find any middle ground between Romanism and Infidelity. Premier Combes was recently one of the speakers at the unveiling in Brittany of the statue of Ernest Renan and prophesied that even in Brittany the people would throw off the yoke of the clergy. As between Richelieu and Renan, they prefer Renan. But there was a greater Frenchman than either, John Calvin, who can teach France the truth that neither of the others understood.

As to the gambling of the Spanish priests, their immorality, their encouragement of houses of ill repute, Dr. Rivier makes a general denial. But he says, naively: "Lotteries are not considered gambling in Europe, and are even resorted to most frequently by the very best people." Of course, he means Catholic Europe, and the lottery evil is not considered an evil, just because the Catholic Church has never condemned it and stands ready to profit by it. But Dr. Rivier makes one counter to the Spanish Bull Fight by reference to the pugilistic encounters in Protestant America.

The removal of Miss Huldah Todd from a fourth-class postoffice in Delaware, because she was "personally obnoxious" to Senator Allee, who is a creature of Addicks, the Unspeakable, is a blow to the cause of civil service reform that one would hardly expect to have been delivered by former Civil Service Commissioner Theodore Roosevelt.

One of the unexpected results of the South African war is the formation of an Anti-English party out of the Boers and the Africanders of Natal and the Cape. The familiar names of Louis Botha, Delarey and DeWet are prominent in this organization along political lines. The parallel continues between the Southern and the South African efforts for independence. The cry of the enslaved blacks was made a motive of revenge in both wars. The courage of the finally vanquished made both wars costly in blood and treasure beyond the dreams of the conquerors, and the same indomitable spirit acquired and is soon to acquire the political power, in spite of defeat in war. It would have been cheaper for America to have bought the slaves and for Britain to have purchased all the gold and diamond mines.

The Quadrennial Methodist General Conference meets next May in Los Angeles. The presiding elder of a Methodist district intimates that the delegates to the Conference are not always what the name of their next meeting place would imply, the angels. He says that there is a General Conference type of Methodist minister, a kind of unscholarly and uneloquent "hustler" who always succeeds in getting himself elected and his betters left at home. So this presiding elder suggests that the Conference elect to the Bishopric the folks that are not of that type, choosing them perforce from outside the Conference. But if that rule were adopted and the charges of the elder are true, the hustlers would hustle to stay at home and to get their most prominent rivals elected to the Conference. If all reports be true, we are glad that our Presbyterian ministers do not have to overcome the temptation to ecclesiastical politics that our Methodist ministers have to face.

Says our old friend, the Cumberland Presbyterian, of the new chapters of the Northern Confession of Faith on the Holy Spirit and Missions, that they "eliminate from the rest of the Confession of Faith, without specifically saying so, pretty nearly every vestige of fatality, foreordination and all else that conditions the freedom of the will." In the first place, additions do not eliminate. In the second place, there never was any fatality in the Confession of Faith, and if the Cumberland Church had not been cursed with the distinctive doctrine of an uneducated ministry from the beginning, it would be ashamed to say so in this enlightened year of grace. In the third place, the foreordination in the Confession stands exactly where it did as the more educated of the Cumberland ministers have been insisting in the columns of the Cumberland Presbyterian, and the effort to make out the contrary is due to the insincere motive of getting out of an untenable position and into fellowship with a really Calvinistic Church. In the fourth place, if any Cumberlander gets intelligent enough to understand Edwards on the Will, and will claim after reading it, that the will is not conditioned, he may telegraph us at our expense, furnishing clear proofs of his sanity, and we will make ample apology for this deserved chastisement of a hoary slander.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established January 1, 1858.

A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER FOR THE FAMILY. DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM AS REPRESENTED BY THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

A. J. MCKELWAY, ..... EDITOR
 CORNELIA R. SHAW, ..... ASSOCIATE EDITOR
 H. M. MCALLISTER, ..... BUSINESS MANAGER

WESTERN OFFICE:

GEO. L. LEYBURN, ..... EDITOR AND MANAGER.
 3418 Washington Ave. St. Louis, Mo.

Subscription Price, ..... $2.00 a Year, in Advance.

The STANDARD is published every Wednesday at Charlotte, N. C., by the PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

For table of contents see page 16.

The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription has been paid.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the subscription.

In accordance with the general wish of our patrons the paper is discontinued only upon the written request of the subscriber. Arrearages must be settled in full at the same time, at the rate of two dollars a year and twenty cents a month for a part of a year.

When change of address is desired give both the old and the new address.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post-office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South. Address all communications to

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD, Charlotte, N. C.

Calvinism in New York City.

It was the learned Dutchman, Kuyper, who made it clear to a forgetful generation in America that Calvinism was more than a system of doctrine. Among other things that it is, it is a life system. What the true Calvinist will do, may be predicted with tolerable certainty from a knowledge of the Calvinistic instincts. Calvinism does not protest against amusements. Calvin himself advocated the theatre as a means of amusement and instruction, too, in Geneva. Calvinism has protested, however, with all its grim might against the terrible moral sacrifice involved in the profession of the stage, especially in the case of women; and so with card playing and the dance. There is no harm in a game of cards. There is no harm in certain kinds of dancing; but Calvinism does protest again vehemently against the gambling into which card playing apparently almost always degenerates, and into that profaning of the person which the modern dance too often is. And wordly experience justifies Calvinism for these protests.

Another instinct of Calvinism is that for simplicity of worship. Calvinism strips men of sham and pretence and brings the soul immediately into communion with God, in the act of worship. It has always been something of a mystery, therefore, to us, that the Reformed Church, the old Dutch Reformed Church, should have been charged with being too "ritualistic" for us Southern Presbyterians. If any are Calvinistic, the Dutch more. In prisons more frequent, in deaths oft, for their Calvinistic faith. So on a recent visit to New York city we made up our minds to look into that little matter of the Dutch Reformed Ritual, and see what it amounted to.

We are glad to learn, at the outset, that the best preacher in New York city today, barring none, is the Rev. David James Burrell, D. D., of the Marble Collegiate Church. And he is a great preacher because he preaches the gospel, having the antiquated notion that it is more important where a man stands in relation to God than how he votes even in a municipal election, and that the pulpit is more concerned in getting men to heaven than in getting them out to the polls. It is refreshing to know, from disinterested authority, that the best preacher, admittedly, in New York city, is an old-fashioned Calvinistic preacher of the mighty gospel.

Unfortunately, for the completeness of this account, Dr. Burrell was out of the city. But there was an air of friendliness and comfort about the very building and an air of hospitality within that was neither obtrusive nor irreverent. We believe that any Southern Presbyterian will feel more at home in the Dutch Reformed Churches than in some that are called Presbyterian, in New York. One of the assistant pastors preached a very excellent sermon, in plain and practical style, to which the people listened eagerly and attentively. And now for a description of that service:

There was the organ prelude, followed by an anthem, "Seek ye the Lord." As it was from Isaiah, and it is supposed that Isaiah wrote some of the Psalms, even our Associate Reformed brethren could hardly have objected to the anthem. Then came the Invocation, followed by the Lord's Prayer, in concert, and the first benediction, which is called the Salutation. Next came the reading of the Scripture and a hymn, with such congregational singing as we have not heard for many a day. The congregation stood during the hymn, and then repeated the Apostles' Creed, the one that is printed for us in our Confession of Faith after the Catechism, but against the repeating of which in concert, some of our people seem to be hopelessly prejudiced. Perhaps it is because they have heard it recited too rapidly and in somewhat of an intoned style, with the bowing of the head at the name of Christ. Well, somehow this was different. The majestic affirmations of belief sounded out in sonorous cadence as if they came from the heart, and one there was glad to be able to say with these brethren, "I believe . . . in the communion of saints." There was the ring of conviction in the tones of the great congregation that was positively thrilling.

Then came the prayer that we should call the Long Prayer, and after the prayer, the choir sang another brief prayer, which the programme called the prayer-response. It was one of the Psalms. Then came another hymn followed by the offering. We noticed that the people seemed to think that the offering itself was an act of worship, and that the prayer dedication which some of our Southern Presbyterian preachers have added to our "ritual" was omitted. Then came the sermon, followed by another prayer, another hymn, which ended with the doxology after another good old fashion from which we have departed, and the service closed with the benediction.

The Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' Creed recited in unison were the only things to differentiate the service from one in the Southern Presbyterian Church. If that be "ritualism," then the brethren had better make the most of it while they can, for it will hardly stand the test of analysis, nor will it be allowed to stand in the way of a union of these two Churches when other things are propitious.

The fact is, so far as observation and experience goes, that the more elaborate service is to be found now in the Northern Presbyterian Churches rather than in the Reformed Church.

And we have been led to believe that the real Calvinists of New York city today are our Reformed Church brethren. We do not mean this as a criticism of the whole Northern Church, by any means, for that is in the main Calvinistic, as it has proved by its works in trying times. But in the metropolis, the impression is that the Presbyterians have yielded to the popular clamor against Calvinism. And now the reaction has come, the Dutch Reformed Church, that has stood squarely by the old faith without apology, is reaping the benefit of its uncompromising attitude in the time of storm. So be it! We are glad that New York has sense enough to recognize that the man who has been conspicuous for the preaching of undiluted Calvinism, who has steadfastly adhered to the doctrine of the integrity of God's word, who has not hesitated to call down the popular preacher and editor, Lyman Abbott, for his taking the "infidel positions," is the best preacher in the city and that it has learned to respect what he stands for as well as the ability with which he has defended the faith.

"Business and the Law of Christ." Not long ago a young man resigned his seat on the New York Stock Exchange. As he said that his own success was predicated on the misfortunes of others, "he could not see that there was any very general gain to society."

The young man will find a good many to agree with him. His remark is a pretty severe indictment of the whole stock-gambling business. If one gains only by the losses of another, there is not so great a moral distinction after all between the methods of the Stock Exchange and piracy. When the black flag was hoisted as the helpless merchantman hove in sight, preparation was made on board the pirate ship to transfer the wealth from those who were soon to walk the plank into the hands of the pirates, and there was "no very general gain to society" by the success that was predicated upon the misfortunes of others. On the whole, we are rather inclined to applaud the young man for resigning his seat in the New York Stock Exchange.

But a prominent secular paper, commenting upon the incident and upon the young man's remark, says: "This attitude, while decidedly altruistic, was certainly peculiar, and the logical application of it to all business would be absolutely ridiculous." Is that true?

Jesus Christ has given to men the golden rule. He has summed up the whole of the Law as concerns our relations to our fellow-men, in the precept, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

We heard Dr. Lyman Abbott refer to this commandment once as having been repealed by the "new commandment" which Christ gave his disciples, "That ye love one another as I have loved you." But the measure of the love of Christ for us was the measure of his self-love. He could not save himself because he was himself. So the measure of our love to our fellow-men should be the proper love of self which is at the basis of all character.

There is an infinite difference between self-love and selfishness. Selfishness would lead a man to think of his own life when there was a chance of saving a drowning child by risking that life. Self-love would not permit a man to hesitate at taking that risk. Self-respect is the foundation of character and there is as much difference between that and conceit as between self-love and selfishness. And now to come down to the question of the property rights of ourselves and others, the reason that the gambler has no scruples about taking from another man without adequate return is that he has no regard for his own property. He is careless about risking all he has. The man who knows his own rights and is careful of his own wealth is the man with whom is generally entrusted the wealth of others.

And now let us see if it is not possible in the business world to act upon this altruistic principle of loving one's neighbor as one's self. A man plants a crop of cotton. He pays fair wages to the hands that plant it and chop it and plow it and pick it. He has fulfilled the golden rule with them if he has given them what they deserved, and they with him, if they have given good work for their wages. He takes the cotton to the gin and pays for having it stripped of the seed and packed in bales, ready for the market. What he pays the ginner ought to be a fair price for the labor, with a fair dividend on the capital represented in the gin-house. The farmer sells the bale to the manufacturer, directly or through middlemen, who should get their fair pay for the knowledge they have acquired of the fleecy staple and the work which they do in the buying and selling. The farmer should get enough for his cotton to pay the expenses of cultivation, a fair dividend on the capital represented in his farm, and a fair price for his trouble and labor as the responsible manager of the farm. The manufacturer turns the cotton into cloth. The difference between the price of the raw cotton and the price of the finished cloth, should be a fair price for the labor of the cotton mill operatives, which should be paid to them, a fair price for the responsibilities and labor of the management, and a fair dividend on the capital represented in the cotton mill. The cloth may then go to the tailoring establishment, then to the wholesale clothier, then to the retail merchant, and in every stage of its journey from producer to consumer, the labor involved in handling it should be paid a fair return, with a fair return for the controlling management and a fair dividend on the capital invested. At last the man who wants a coat buys the cotton that came from the farmer's field and the price should include fair pay for all concerned in making it, and fair interest on the capital invested, and no more.

Now in this process, every man who has touched the cotton, from the owner of the cotton farm to the man who wears the coat, has gotten value received. That may be old-fashioned, but it is possible for every man concerned to love his neighbor as himself, and to do unto others as he would have them do to him.

And if the modern business world is organized on a plan which would make such altruism ridiculous, then the quicker it is disorganized and organized over again, the better. If competition is only the law of the jungle, the survival of the fittest, then competition as a system must pass away. If combination tends to abridge the liberty of the individual, tends to oppression, then it must give place to something better.

It is time for Christian men to reorganize on the basis of the Ten Commandments as summarized by Christ, and to stop talking about the impossibility of keeping them in the world of "business."

SOME INDEPENDENT REMARKS.

After long abstinence from exciting literature, a copy of the New York Independent came into our hands the other day. We found this contribution to the race problem: "The question is simply how to harmonize the will of the negro to rise with the will of a considerable body of men of the Vardaman type, that because he cannot rise he shall not." That is illuminating.

The Independent has been repeating this hoary slander, that the Southern people are trying to "keep the negro down" until there is not a memory of the Ninth Commandment left in the Independent office. Why should the Southern people want to keep the negro down?

Do our terrorized women, scattered in the thinly settled rural districts of the South, whom their husbands and brothers have to leave alone because of the poverty that sends the men to their work in the fields and keeps the women at their work in the home—do our women, or their protectors desire to keep the negro down to his animal instincts, strong within him, after centuries of savagery?

It will never do any good, this side the Judgment Day, for the truth to be told the Independent. It may find then that it did not pay to be too independent of the truth or too near kin to the great accuser of mankind. But it may do good to look at the clotted nonsense of that remedy for the evils that we are not suffering.

Everybody knows that Vardaman is not a representative Southern man, and that it was Rooseveltism in Mississippi that is responsible for his rise into prominence. He holds that the white men should stop taxing themselves for the benefit of negro education, letting the negro taxes go to the public schools.

But even this is not keeping the negro down. It is simply not helping him up. And the very fact that Vardaman is protesting against an established order of things, and vainly protesting, calls attention to another fact, namely, that the impoverished and defeated South has contributed its score of millions of dollars to negro education and evangelization when it knew that its own white people were illiterate and without the gospel in many sections.

There is no nobler sacrifice than that in history. The South took from the New England slave-ship and the New England slave-trader a nation of cannibal savages, and in a few generations fitted them for all the responsibilities of civilized society and American citizenship, according to the Independent. Then they were emancipated, no return being given by the section that sold them or the nation that legalized the sale. They were put in positions of authority and power over the white man. Every effort was made to antagonize the white men by the policy of the reconstruction era. And with all, the South has borne its double burden of uplifting this unfortunate race, and will still bear it.

If the Independent could only realize how small is the reactionary band which it represents, how its efforts to put the negro on top of the white man, politically and in closest proximity socially is a cruelty to the negro for which the atonement is often the death of the brutes whom the Independent encourages; and if it could ascertain, brutally and briefly, how many lies it has told against the South, ignorantly or maliciously, it would go into retirement and do penance for the rest of its unnatural life.

Review of Contemporaries.

Our excellent contemporary, the Church Standard, has this to say on an important theme:

"Sir Alfred Lyall, in his recent book on 'Tennyson,' in the English Men of Letters series, observes that throughout life the great poet retained the conviction that 'in default of a clear and certain prospect of immortality a man's soul may be lost utterly, that he must sink into sensuality, and cannot indeed be much blamed for it logically.' This conviction, the utterance of which again and again in his poems may easily be cited by one familiar with them, is in perfect accord with St. Paul's memorable outburst in First Corinthians xv.32 (a quotation from Isaiah xxii. 13), 'If the dead are not raised, let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die.'

"The apostle's exclamation has been much cavilled at in recent years. Some eminent and excellent writers who have the ear of cultured and refined society, if not of the world at large, have strongly protested against St. Paul's doctrine on this subject as unworthy of him, and as a distinct degradation of his Master's religion. Perhaps Matthew Arnold's sonnet, entitled 'The Better Part,' is the aptest and finest expression of their protest and dissent which could be quoted.

"'Long fed on boundless hopes, O race of man,
How angrily thou spurn'st all simpler fare!
'Christ,' some one says, 'was human as we are;
No judge eyes us from Heaven, our sin to scan;

"'We live no more when we have done our span'.—
'Well, then, for Christ,' thou answerest, 'who can care?
From sin, which Heaven records not, why forbear?
Live we like brutes our life without a plan?

"'So answerest thou; but why not rather say,—
'Hath man no second life?—Pitch this one high!
Sits there no judge in Heaven, our sin to see?—

"'More strictly, then, the inward judge obey!
Was Christ a man like us?—Ah! let us try
If we then, too, can be such men as he!'"

"Is it impossible to withhold admiration of verses breathing such pure and lofty morality, but it is just as impossible not to feel that the poet sees the life of men in 'a light that never was on sea or land.' And it is not a poet's vision only, it is the vision of one whose whole being has been moulded and penetrated by the Christianity of many generations. It is a clear proof of the saying, 'As we are, we see.' Matthew Arnold, and others of like parentage, with the inheritance and environment of an advanced civilization permeated with Christian ideas and influences, may say, 'Hath man no second life? then pitch this one high!' but history and experience will show that such preaching is vain. It has been well said: 'Had Christ's mission ended on Calvary, He would but have given to the world a purified form of Stoicism, a refined philosophy of suffering; and His teaching would have failed, as Stoicism failed, because a mere philosophy of suffering is quickly proved by experience to be a philosopher of despair.' As a matter of fact, the mass of mankind in every age do sink to a merely sensual or earthly life when they become oblivious of the Judge sitting in heaven, and the hope of eternal life has vanished from their hearts."

This is the testimony of Vladimir Tsandoff, a foreigner, writing in the Boston Transcript, as to the value of American missions in Turkey:

"Not only are these holdings extensive, but they are long established. Nearly a century has elapsed since devoted bands of American missionaries began to leave the shores of New England for the wilds of Asia Minor. In that inhospitable country they carried with them the blessings of the printing press, the blessings of school and the Gospel. It is too late now for America to disown the self-sacrifices of a century. It is too late to disown the brave missionaries whose work has redeemed Christianity in Turkey. All over the Orient the name 'America' has a living, breathing, stirring significance which it exercises nowhere else. . . .

"Wholly apart from any abstract question of liberty, the vast American missions in the Turkish empire are an absolute necessity there, because for many parts of Armenia and Syria the American schools supply all the schooling that exists. The Syrian Protestant College at the very city of Beirut has an influence extending a thousand miles. If Harvard University may be named a national necessity, then the college at Beirut is ten times a necessity, for there is no other of the kind. And the same is true of nearly a dozen American colleges widely apart, scattered over a huge territory, with their attendant network of American missionary schools. The Turks do not make provision for the study of anything except the Koran. They do not allow the enslaved Christians to open schools of their own; it remains, therefore, for these missionaries from Europe and America to provide schools. And they have a huge territory to cover. The Euphrates College at Harpoot, which the Turks tried to set fire to a short while ago, has some 1,100 students in its collegiate and preparatory departments. The colleges at Aintab, Marsovan, the Central Turkey College, the recently organized 'American College' at Smyrna, the famous Robert College overlooking the fortresses of the Bosphorus, all these and others with their attendant common schools, represent a field of work at which devoted missionaries have toiled for nearly a century, with increasing success, and with immeasurable beneficence. Aside from their cash value of six and a half million dollars (multiply ten times to appreciate the Oriental standard of money), these American missions have received not far from twenty million dollars' current expenses since the beginning of the work. Even if the commercial and political elements of the country neglected to protect these vast interests, it would be the duty of public spirited citizens to champion them. They represent to the world, when the time comes for a final judgment, the largest single contribution of the country to a cause from which it could never hope for the slightest material return, in a remote corner of the earth. America could not afford to repudiate this signal contribution of her own to the cause of Christianity and civilization. The institutions which she has founded she must protect."

The Interior has this well-deserved tribute to one of our ablest Southern Presbyterian thinkers:

"Dr. William M. McPheeters, of the Columbia Theological Seminary, has put the evangelical Christianity of this country deeply in his debt by his admirable article on 'The Higher Criticism' in the last number of the Presbyterian Quarterly. A statement so plain and discriminating from a source so conservative should certainly clear up for good and all that petty misunderstanding which has made the very words 'higher criticism' a bugbear at which the orthodox would shiver in affright. Some of Dr. McPheeters' most decisive sentences are there: 'The higher criticism is a perfectly legitimate discipline. All who in their efforts to settle questions of origin, form and value make any use of the internal characteristics of any book or books of Scripture, are to that extent higher critics. To confound the higher criticism with the results reached by any particular scholar or set of scholars, is a blunder that borders on being a crime. The legitimacy of the method by no means involves the correctness of the results reached in the use of it. As in all branches of applied logic, there may be material errors along with formal correctness.' Every man who has the wit to understand these distinctions ought to take care never to use the term 'higher criticism' when he means the radical theories of biblical literature, for to misemploy the words in that manner is to perpetuate an error which has already cost the Church a great deal. The chief misfortune of the recent period of conflict between opposing views of the Bible has been the refusal of conservative men to avail themselves of the methods of study employed by the radical men. The former therefore has gone into battle under-armed, and often have been worsted where they might have gained victory if they had not dreaded to use the critical weapons of their opponents. Let us have an end of all such trivial timidity."

Bishop Candler has the following excellent denunciation of lynching. We have all denounced it and it grows apace. The Bishop does not state that lynching began with the summary punishment of rape and that its being justified in that instance is what causes the appeal to it in other crimes for which the law gives no adequate or certain punishment. But we endorse all the Bishop says; we all do:

"It is the duty of all good people in every part of our country to unite in putting down the mob. For let us be well assured that the good people will put down the mob or the mob will put down the people. When a lynching occurs the law is more truly lynched than is the victim of the mob's fury. It is an outburst of anarchy and not an irruption of righteous indignation against an atrocious crime.

"In defense of lynching it is sometimes said: 'Stop the outrages that provoke lynching, and the lynching will cease.' But, pray, tell which outrage is meant? If reference to the horrible crime of rape is intended, it is enough to say in reply that it is not the cause of one-fourth of the lynchings which occur in the United States. Two years since, for example, the figures for a year showed only sixteen cases of ravishings against one hundred and twenty-eight lynchings. Lynch law, I repeat, is anarchy, and anarchy is always the forerunner of destruction in republics. This evil strikes at the very heart of our civil institutions. If unchecked, it will increase and eventually become unendurable by the vicious even. Men will grow so weary of it that they will welcome any sort of strong hand which will undertake to put it down, even the hand of tyranny.

"With reference to the various picturesque proposals which are periodically made to cure all our ills, it is perhaps, not unkind to say that the silence of their authors would be more valuable than their speech."

Devotional.

Missionary.

FORGIVENESS.

The true sign of forgiveness is not some mysterious signal waved from the sky; not some obscure emotion hunted out in your heart; not some stray text culled out of your Bible; certainly not some word of mortal priest telling you that your satisfaction is complete. The soul full of responsive love to Christ and ready longing, hungry to serve Him, is its own sign of forgiveness. Must there not be sorrow for sin? Must there not be resolution or amendment. Surely there must, but it is not sorrow for sin for the sake of the sorrowfulness that Jesus ever wants. He wants sorrow for sin only that it may bring escape from sin. * * I think that, with all we know of the divine heart of Jesus, He would far rather see a soul trust Him too much, if that is possible, than to trust Him too little which we know is possible enough.—Phillip Brooks.

RESPONSIBILITY.

No stream from its source
Flows seaward, how lonely soever its course,
But what some land is gladdened! No star ever rose
And set, without influence somewhere! Who knows
What earth needs from earth's lowest creatures?
No life
Can be pure in its purpose and strong in its strife.
And all life not be purer and stronger thereby!
The spirits of just men made perfect on high—
The army of martyrs who stand by the throne
And gaze into the Face that makes glorious their own—
Know this, sure, at last! Honest love, honest sorrow, Honest work for the day, honest hope for the morrow,
Are these worth nothing more than the hand they make weary—
The heart they have sadden'd—the life they leave dreary?
Hush! the sevenfold heavens to the voice of the Spirit
Echo, "He that o'ercometh shall all things inherit!"
—Lytton.

It is said of Michael Angelo that he always worked with a little lamp fastened to his hat, lest his shadow should fall upon the canvas.

There is a suggestive thought in this incident. It is this, that we should not let the shadow of self fall upon our Christian work. It is not how much work we do, but the purpose or spirit which prompts us to do it that the Master considers. How essential, then, that we watch the heart and keep a close censorship of the motive; for if we do right things in wrong ways, we may do wrong things. We should be zealous and aggressive, and ready for every task that comes to hand, but we should be all these for Jesus Christ. Selfish ambition must be held in contempt if we hope to reach the sphere of real usefulness and devoted service. We should not forget that there is no joy like the joy of self-forgetting effort; and there is no influence like the influence of the Christian worker who keeps his own shadow off his own work.

In Westminster Abbey is a marble tablet with medallion portraits of the two Wesleys combined, and underneath the inscription "God buries the workers, but carries on the work."—Selected.

The men whom I have seen succeed best in life have always been cheerful and hopeful men who went about their business with a smile on their faces.—Chas. Kingsly.

THE CHINESE KINDERGARTEN.

In all attempts to achieve moral uplifting, it is being more and more recognized that the effort which has the surest and most lasting reward is that which is directed toward children. Adults already have their habits of life formed, and therefore do not easily adopt other habits, even though they may be convinced that other habits are better. Children, on the other hand, are in the stage of life when habits are forming. With them there is no need of spending energy to destroy the bad, but only to construct the good. This truth is being discovered and demonstrated by missionaries in foreign lands. In accordance with this principle a number of kindergartens have been started in foreign mission stations. At Foochow, China, in connection with the Girls' Day School conducted by the American Board, is what is known as the Davis Memorial Kindergarten. This is held in a bright, sunny room in Davis Memorial Hall. From twenty to thirty little children attend daily. A trained kindergartner from this country, Miss Jean Brown, is in charge, and working with her are three or four native pupil-teachers. Under the direction of Miss Brown and her assistants these Chinese children, in their games, in their songs—which, by the way, are transforming their harsh and unmusical voices—at their work with cubes and oblongs, in their celebrating with gifts and decorations the coming of the Christ Child, are unconsciously and naturally absorbing ideals that are new to their land and motives that otherwise would never govern their lives. The work of such a kindergarten is true missionary work, though it could hardly be called "converting the heathen." It is work for children, who are in nature essentially the same the world over; yet it is distinctively work for China, for it is doing for the next generation of Chinese what the same effort a generation hence could do only in a small degree, if at all. To use the words of Miss Woodhull, of the Foochow Mission, "One needs to know something of Chinese life, its selfishness, petty jealousies, and unwillingness to work for the good of the whole, to realize what the kindergarten is doing for these children."—The Outlook.

AN AFRICAN'S DESCRIPTION OF THE RAILWAY.

A native of Uganda, who accompanied the Prime Minister on his way to the coronation of King Edward, wrote to his friend about the Uganda railway, giving the following description of it: "My friend, I can tell you the Europeans have done a marvelous thing to make the railway and the trains. They fasten ten or fifteen houses together and attach them to a fireplace, which is as big as an elephant, and the road it goes on is as smooth as the stem of a plantain. It goes as fast as a swallow flying, and everything you see outside flies past you like a spark from a fire. If it were to drop off one of the bridges not one in it would be saved, for it goes dreadfully quick. The hills it passes are as high as those of Koki, and they have bridged over great valleys so deep that you cannot see the bottom when you are going over them."—Exchange.

EVANGELISTIC WORK AT THE GREAT OSAKA EXPOSITION.

It is the most successful and fascinating evangelistic work ever seen. Of course, there are many who come in and sit down out of aimless curiosity, or simply because they are tired sauntering around, but there are hundreds every day who listen as if the Truth were taking hold of them. The Dendo Kwan is the steadiest going thing at the Exposition. The fire dancer's strength gives out; the Russian circus gets tied up for debt; the fine Canadian building closes on Canadian holidays, but the Dendo Kwan has gone on.—The Herald.

Sunday School Lesson.

BY REV. H. G. HILL, D. D.

REVIEW.

I Sam. 8, 1-10; I Pet. 4, 1-11. Sept. 27, 1903.

1. I Sam. 8, 1-10. Israel asking for a King.—The Causes of this Demand. The Demand displeases Samuel and the Lord. The Lord grants the request that he does not approve. He warns concerning the evils their choice involved.

2. I Sam. 10, 17-27. Saul Chosen King.—The sin of Israel in asking a King. Saul chosen of the Lord by lot. Proclaimed King. He manifests some excellent qualities. He is received by some with approval, by others with contempt.

3. I Sam. 12, 13-25. Samuel's farewell address.—Samuel vindicates his administration. Gives warnings to King and people. Calls on the Lord to work a miracle to convince the people of their sin. Encourages them in duty by promises.

4. I Sam. 15, 13-23. Saul rejected as King.—The cause of Saul's rejection, disobedience. His excuses vain. The Lord will accept no substitute for obedience to plain commands.

5. I Sam. 16, 4-13. Samuel anoints David.—Samuel sent to Bethlehem. David chosen King by God. David anointed by Samuel and the Lord.

6. I Sam. 17, 38-49. David and Goliath.—David enters battle with proved weapons. David and Goliath differed not only in weapons, but in person, trust and moral qualities. David's victory due not merely to personal prowess, but to Divine providence.

7. I Sam. 18, 5-16. Saul tries to kill David.—Saul's hatred of David nourished by his excellence and success. When Divine Spirit departed from Saul an evil spirit and wicked passions gained ascendancy. Saul's efforts to slay David increased his popularity and influence among the people.

8. I Sam. 20, 12-23. David and Jonathan.—David and Jonathan's friendship, based on noble qualities and fixed principles. It stood the severest tests. The covenant between them. The warning given David by Jonathan.

9. I Sam. 26, 5-12, 21-25. David spares Saul.—Saul completely in David's power. He protects and shares his life. He manifests magnanimity and forgiveness. He protests his innocence and conquers Saul by kindness.

10. I Sam. 31, 1-13. Death of Saul and Jonathan.—The contrast between the death of Saul and Jonathan. Their treatment by the Philistines. The heroic conduct of the men of Jabesh Gilead.

11. II Sam. 2, 1-10. David becomes King.—David seeks and receives counsel from God. He obeys Divine directions. He carries his family to Hebron to enjoy his honor, as they had shared his ills. The Lord inclines the men of Judah to crown him. Ishbosheth's Kingdom established by Abner lasts but two years.

12. I Pet. 4, 1-11. Abstinence from Evil.—Carnal living or ordering the life according to the lusts of the natural heart. Spiritual living, or regulating the conduct according to the promptings of God's Spirit. Abstinence from evil is secured as spiritual living is promoted. The dominant principle of spiritual life is Christian love. It has many phases, "covers a multitude of sins", and bears precious fruit in the heart, the speech, and the conduct.

The Lord permits men to learn by experience their own folly.

The Lord is sovereign and chooses a ruler who meets the people's expectations, yet exposes their mistakes.

The services of the best men are not appreciated by their fellows, yet they must continue to serve.

Disobedience to God leads to ruinous loss.

The Lord easily finds a substitute for a faithless servant.

Westminster League.

BY REV. HUGH W. HOON.

WHAT ABRAHAM TEACHES US.

Gen. 12, 1-8; Heb. 7, 1-10; Rom. 4, 1-9. Topic for October 4, 1903.

Abraham, friend of God, is one of the most interesting characters in the Bible. In reading about his life we are too apt to think that this man had revelations such as you and I cannot have. God talked with him, and we feel that we could do so much better if God would only talk to us. But if we look into the matter closely we will very shortly discover that our revelation is one of which Abraham never dreamed. Had the old Hebrew had such a store of knowledge of God's ways of dealing with His children as we have he would have given us a still more forcible example of what faith brings. Abraham was a man who had faith in God's naked word. He asked no proofs. God spoke and though the promise was a quarter of a century in beginning to be fulfilled, yet Abraham's faith never wavered. We grow impatient if we cannot see God's promises fulfilled over night. And some have even gone so far as to say that they had no longer a faith in God because they did not realize the fulfillment of His promises at once. Abraham's faith teaches us to wait patiently on God. Abraham was seventy-five years old when the promise was made, and had to wait twenty-five years after that, but he believed God and it was counted unto him for righteousness.

Abraham was a generous man. When the herdsmen of his cattle quarreled with the herdsmen of Lot's cattle, he settled the strife by telling his nephew to take his choice of all the rich and fertile country before him. What was left, Abraham would occupy. How different from those who go to law about the division of a small piece of property. One is afraid that another will get a little more than his share and rather than have this happen, they strive and ferment bad feelings and the result, in multitudes of cases, is estrangement for life, and often the hostility is handed down from generation to generation. When any who strive thus, read the life of Abraham, and of how he settled the strife between his servants and the servants of Lot, they should feel the rebuke.

Abraham was a brave man. When Lot was taken captive with the Sodomites by the confederated Kings, Abraham lost no time in arming his men and starting out to rescue the captives. His was a small band to undertake such a warfare, but a brave man who loves as Abraham loved will not consider personal danger when serving his friend who is in distress. True friendship will risk much. The world always regards a brave man with respect. Let us be sure though that we are brave in a good cause.

Abraham was a hospitable man. He entertained strangers. From his experience in this direction we have a most beautiful picture. The men who came to his camp had no claim upon Abraham and yet he hastened to provide for them the best his resources could furnish. Without knowing it, he was entertaining angels. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me." The Knight of the Holy Grail sought in vain in the far off foreign lands for the Christ that he might minister to Him, to return an old man to his early home and then at the giving of a cup of water to a beggar to have the Christ revealed to him. Christ walks our streets in His disciples and we often brush by them without so much as a smile. Let us learn from Abraham the blessedness of being kind to strangers.

Abraham teaches us a lesson in prayer, and above all a lesson in obedience. When God spoke to him telling him to get up and leave the land of his nativity he arose and went, not knowing whither he went. We with God's promises, are slow to do as He commands.

Do you do it?

Contributed.

ROBERT PERRY FARRIS, D. D.

BY. REV. J. A. QUARLES, D. D.

"A prince and a great man has fallen in Israel." Dr. Robert P. Farris left this world, from his home in St. Louis, Friday, August 12, 1:45 p. m., about a week before he would have completed his seventy-seventh year. He was born September 6, 1826, in the city where he died. He bore his father's name, who was a prominent lawyer, an associate and close friend of Col. Thomas H. Benton. He attended the St. Louis University two and a half years, and was graduated A. B. from St. Xavier College, Cincinnati, in 1844. The Jesuits controlled both these institutions. He was after this matriculated a Sophomore at Yale, and received its A. B. diploma in 1847. For a year he read law privately in St. Louis, and then, determining to enter the Gospel ministry, he studied theology at Princeton two years, and a third year under Dr. Nathan L. Rice at Cincinnati.

He was licensed to preach, June, 1851, by the Presbytery of St. Louis, and received ordination from the same body November of the succeeding year. On the death of Dr. Potts, he supplied the Second church, St. Louis, a year—1852-1853. He had but two pastorates. The first was at Peoria, Ill., where he organized the Second church, and served it efficiently for six years, 1853-1859. Impaired health forced the temporary abandonment of the wearing duties of the pastorate, and for a time he served the McCormick Theological Seminary, then known as the Seminary of the Northwest. In 1860, he returned to his native State and undertook the charge of the church at St. Charles, where he labored for eight years. I had a friend in Missouri who could not practice medicine because of his intense sympathy with his patients. Even the gentle Jesus was forced to exclaim, "How long shall I be with you? How long shall I suffer you?" The care of souls consumes the loving, sensitive natures that feel the sins and sorrows of others, as though they were their own. So it was with Dr. Farris, whose two pastorates brought peace and cheer to many aching hearts at the cost of worn, wearied nerves to himself.

His main work was done in connection with the religious press. He was the editor of our denominational paper at St. Louis for more than twenty years. This weekly was known at different periods of its existence as the Missouri, the Old School and the St. Louis Presbyterian, and was finally bought and absorbed by the Christian Observer. Dr. Farris' editorial life covered an interesting period in the history of the Missouri Synod, the post-bellum times of alienation and division. This gave a polemic cast to his work, deprecated by many and undesired by him. The contrast between Dr. Farris the editor, and Dr. Farris the man, was often remarked. No one in private was gentler and more loving than he; and no one was sterner and stronger in public conflict. Generously appreciative of those who held what he thought was most precious truth, he rained his ponderous blows without stint upon the devoted heads of those he considered recreant. Should the recreant be the dearest friend he had on earth, he would smite him under the fifth rib or upon the solar plexus, with sorrow indeed, but without remorse. A Roman Catholic polemic, or an apologist for the Northern General Assembly, was to him like a red rag to a bull. An uncompromising antagonist, he was eminently brave and fair; he always fought in the open and never under cover.

It must not be thought that there was nothing but controversy in the issues of his paper. While the editorial page was prevalently belligerent, the rest of the columns were full of the choicest, most spiritual matter; interesting to old and young, and always elevating in its character. Those that did not relish pepper sauce and mustard, could find plenty of bread and meat and sugared sweets in those pages. It was manifest that he fought not to fight, but for the truth that was dearer to him than life; and that he best loved the green pastures and the still waters of peace.

The most widely known service which Dr. Farris rendered the Church was in connection with the General Assembly. He was its distinguished and capable Moderator at the meeting held in Staunton, in 1881; where the executive committee, a proposed ritual, and the transfer of Dr. Palmer to the Columbia Seminary, were the interesting topics discussed. Dr. Farris made a model presiding officer; for he was not only courteous to all, but he was an intelligent and impartial parliamentarian. As no man serves the Assembly in the chair but once in a life time, it is creditable to our ministry that it is ordinarily done so well.

For many years and till his death, Dr. Farris filled the office of Permanent Clerk of the Assembly; an important position which involves laborious and perplexing duties. Every one who has served as temporary clerk of Presbytery or Synod can appreciate this. His discharge of these duties at the late meeting in Lexington, was hardly short of heroic. As I was in the house with him, I know the facts. He was then, in a sense, a dying man; indeed I was surprised that he had dared to leave his home as weak as he was; I feared he would collapse at any hour. During the twelve days he was here, he did not eat enough altogether to make one good meal for a strong man. Despite all this, determined to do his duty to the last and to the full, he rejected all proffered help and kept to his post till the task was done; never going to bed before 11 o'clock, and rising at five to transcribe his minutes on the typewriter before the call to breakfast. Noble old Roman, he could die at his post, but he would not leave it! So weak and exhausted, it seemed that he would not reach his loved ones at home alive; but he did, and under their loving, gentle ministry he slowly sank to rest, and heard the Master's "Well done," greeting him a welcome home.

Dr. Farris was tall and handsome, with a pleasant address and courtly bearing. His mind was clear and strong, disdaining quibbles and niceties, and caring only for the essential truth in every issue, and especially for its practical bearings. He had decided convictions on every question that interested him, and was frank and fearless in the expression of them. He fastened his friends to him with hooks of steel, and commanded the respect of his enemies by the manly openness of his fighting. His preaching was simple, clear, strong, full of unction, loyal to the Scriptures and to Christ, and making his hearers feel that he was in earnest. With true culture, his style, both as a writer and speaker, was characterized by a preference for simple Saxon English, by its transparent clearness and by its forcible directness. Though not a frequent speaker, his influence in the Synod of Missouri was commanding—due not to direct or obtrusive effort on his part, but to the weight of his character, his honesty and sound judgment challenging universal confidence. In his home the gentler side of his nature reigned supreme. That home was as near an unserpented Eden as this world knows—husband, wife and children all genial, and with each other perfectly congenial. He has not gone; no, the family is one; the father lives above with the children who had gone before, and the mother carries below a little longer. Some day soon they will all meet at the blessed feet of Jesus.

Dr. Farris was every inch a man, a Christian gentleman, a moral hero.

Lexington, Va.

When you find yourself—as I dare say you sometimes do—overpowered as it were by melancholy, the best way is to go out and do something kind to somebody or other.—John Keble.

THE ASSEMBLY'S CALL FOR LARGER GIFTS.

Wm. Hoge Marquess.

The sum of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars the largest our Church has ever proposed for the enterprise of Foreign Missions. It exceeds by twenty thousand dollars the sum modestly, but urgently demanded by the Executive Committee. And our people may be ready to consider the reasons that impelled the General Assembly at Lexington to venture upon so large an increase in the amount appropriated to this use.

1. It was the general feeling of the Standing Committee, and doubtless of the entire Assembly, that the divine blessing, given to our foreign work in so many and such signal ways, called for some practical expression of our profound gratitude. And our appreciation of God's favor in our work can be shown in no better or more acceptable way than by enlarging that work and undertaking more boldly and more widely the enterprise of reaching and saving the world which He loved. In Africa there has been opened to us a great door and a great field. The natives have been receiving the word with joy of the Holy Ghost. The converts are zealous of good works and eager to become useful servants of Christ and intelligent messengers of His grace to their fellowmen. Our missionaries have been encouraged by the Lord's swift and remarkable responses to their appeals for His presence and help. They have proved the truth of the promise: "Call unto Me, and I will answer thee and show thee great and mighty things which thou knowest not." What shall be the answer of the Church to God's answer to her petition? How hollow our thanksgiving would be, what a mockery of praise would be our ascription of glory to God as the giver of this blessing, if we made no earnest, vigorous, heroic effort to occupy this needy field more thoroughly and to lead its tribes more rapidly into the light!

Or take the field in China. Our missions and our missionaries have been led through grave perils in comparative safety. They have seen the temporary arrest of the work followed by greater opportunities to establish the Kingdom of Christ in China. In every mission that suffered persecution, the converts witnessed a good confession and loved not their lives unto death. The Church knows that Daniel and his three friends have shown themselves on Chinese soil, true to God and as ready for the flame and the lions. We know that our own native converts are of this same sturdy heroic mould. Could we ask any clearer seal of the Divine approval of the foreign work than the gift of such patience and courage and supreme consecration in the hour of trial to the converts whom we have gained? And can we render to the Lord a better return for all these benefits than to take the cup of salvation and pass it more readily to the millions who are thirsting? It would be the basest ingratitude to do only what we have done heretofore, to be content with merely marking time, when God has granted us such victories and opened to our army such possibilities of new conquest.

2. The Assembly believed that enlargement was an operative need of the work in foreign lands. There are times when important enterprises demand enlargement lest they suffer serious loss. Educators know that under certain circumstances the plant and equipment of an educational institution must be enlarged, the corps of teachers increased, the whole work projected on a larger scale, or students will fall away, and a period of decline set in. Those familiar with the history of Presbyterianism can easily remember in how many places and at how many times the happy beginnings of Presbyterian progress came to an untimely end, and their men entered into our labors where we should have held the field, simply through our failure to occupy the ground well and do the work efficiently. A careful study of the reports and letters of our missionaries can not fail to lead any one to the conclusion that in many of our most important fields we have reached a critical turning point. We can not refuse to go forward, to build more broadly, to recruit our corps of workers, to found evangelistic and educational agencies that are in some measure correspondent to the immediate opportunity. Every wise church buildeth its own house. And we must see that our missionary work grows and broadens and takes on new scope and strength. To all her people the Assembly says: "Not because I desire a gift, but I desire fruit that may abound to your account." And the Assembly was persuaded that her members, rather than waste much of the millions already expended and lose the splendid dividends now beginning to come in, would gladly increase their gifts and enlarge their work.

3. It was the feeling of the Assembly that the Church had both the ability and the will to raise this larger sum. It was a body of hopeful men that voted this appropriation. They had heard from abroad the stirring reports of the noble missionaries who were present. And they had heard from home the report of the Forward Movement and its marvellous hints of what the Lord's people were ready and able to do. That this confidence was well-founded, appears from the timely and generous gift of twenty-five thousand dollars made by one unknown soon after the adjournment of the Assembly. This shows what our Church might do if the missionary spirit were aroused in all her members. And, better still, it shows that the true missionary spirit is kindling in the hearts of the saints. It was the opening gun of our year's campaign. It was the fine first fruits of the coming harvest. Let some one equal that gift; let many approach it; let all emulate the spirit in which it was made. Let us all read again and again 11 Cor. viii and ix; and surely our response to the October call will assure the Committee that the entire sum asked for will be raised during the year.

THE PAPACY'S INFLUENCE ON ITALIAN CHARACTER.

By Alfred H. Moment, D. D.*

Last Monday, July 20th, Pope Leo XIII., in the 94th year of his age, and the 25th of his pontifical reign, died. From the time he came to the papal throne, Leo was one of the most picturesque personages of the age, one of the most talked-of and advertised men of the nations, and one of the best praised of the Popes. In consequence, his death is an event of universal interest, as the world is testifying.

Now, among other things involved in this notable event, there is a door opened for any intelligent and fairminded discussion of the Pope himself, or of that great historic institution which he represented with such consummate ability and fidelity. For a Protestant clergyman, at such a time as this, to speak on either of these subjects, or on any other pertaining to the Roman Catholic Church, should not be considered intrusive, in bad taste, or uncalled for—providing what he says be in the spirit of truth and charity. My subject: The Papacy's Influence on Italian Character.

Of all institutions established in the name of Christianity, the Papacy has been the most avowedly pretentious: claiming dictatorial power over the political rights and liberties of the nations, and spiritual supremacy over the consciences of men. When such political power has been denied it, the Papacy has been pessimistic as to the nation's future; while all rejecting its rule over their religious beliefs, have been branded as heretics. Moreover, this assumption of power has abrogated the Holy Scriptures from their supreme place as our only rule to direct us how we may glorify and enjoy God.

But it is a true saying, backed up by the laws and forces of both worlds, that "by their fruits ye shall know them." And where should we look for the true fruits of the Papacy, if not to Italy? The influence of that institution upon the people of its own country should be a real test of its true power and utility in the world. If Italy is great intellectually, morally and spiritually, the Papacy must have all the credit; but if that people are not great in these things, it must be because there has been, and is, something radically wrong in the assumption of those men who have claimed to be the successors of the Apostle of our Lord.

In view of this statement, look at Italy. It is one of the Bible Lands. Early was the Gospel preached and planted in that country. In it the great Apostle to the Gentiles wrote portions of the New Testament and suffered martyrdom. Once there, Christianity was never driven out; for, while all other Bible Lands have been overrun by Mohanmedanism, Italy has remained undisturbed in her religion for all these livelong centuries. For many ages the Vatican was the supreme religious and political centre of the Italians. The greater number, by far, of the Popes have been of native birth—many of these from the lowest of the people, and, therefore, not ignorant of the spiritual needs of the masses. The land has been filled with churches, with religious institutions, with hordes of ecclesiastics of all orders, and has had about one hundred and fifty holy days. The temporal power of the Papacy was there for about eight hundred years. With these facts in mind, it seems a fair thing to say that if the Papal system has had in it a real good for mankind, that good should, above all other places of earth, have made itself felt in its own native Italy. By their fruits ye shall know them.

But what fruitage should be expected from an institution, whose head is claimed to be infallible and the vicegerent of the loving and holy Christ? A people moulded by such forces of righteousness would have a pure and lofty home-life, would remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, would have a high standard of social and national morality, would have, in all their sanctuaries, a spiritual worship of God, divorced of all superstition, and would be, intellectually, well-furnished as to the loving and holy Christ Himself—the facts of His great life work and His glorious doctrines of salvation. Such a harvest of righteousness, as the foregoing, is not too much to expect from the Papacy, if, indeed, it is the infallible head of the church of God—the vicar of the world's Savior.

But does Italy show such a harvest? Who, having seen that land, has not been painfully impressed with its almost complete barrenness and sterility, so far as moral and spiritual fruitage is concerned? Out of a population of over 30,000,000, more than 20,000,000 of the people in Italy live in villages. Such villages have a great uniformity: small stone houses huddled together, containing neither furniture, nor the necessary comforts of home, used only for sleeping purposes, while in the numerous, little, dingy, restaurants and cafes of the village, the people eat, drink, smoke, have their amusements and quarrels, and thus spend what time is not taken up in work, or in sleep. Among Italy's multitudes there is practically no home life; no living of the family apart from the public; no training of children. A village may have a church, or one church may serve two, or more, villages in close proximity. The church is apt to be greatly out of proportion with the little sleeping places of the peasantry; once, no doubt, the church in question was well kept and brilliant, but now it is rather dilapidated, as money for such things is not so plentiful as in the time of the temporal power. Into this church a few of the men and many more of the women and children go daily for prayers and confession, stragling in and out, at all hours, from sunrise until sunset—the chief place of devotion being before the image of the holy virgin. Except on special saints' days, the people go not to church in any considerable number; and never, on any occasion, to hear the Word of God preached. It is a sad commentary on the religious life of the little hamlet we are considering, that priests thereof pride themselves in knowing nothing about what is contemptuously called the "Protestant's Book." Indeed, is it not a calamitous commentary on the papal system that, in the judgment of the supreme authority of the Vatican, nothing would so disqualify the priests of this village, for their holy office as for them, on any occasion, to preach the Gospel of Jesus to those simpleminded peasantry?

Excepting the higher classes, numbering far less than the fourth of Italy's millions, nothing can surpass the low ebb of that people intellectually. In all lands it is the village school-house and postoffice that are the tokens of education and general intelligence. The peasantry of Italy have not been furnished with anything that would, in this country, be regarded as an educational system; while an ordinary village postoffice there does not receive as much mail matter in a month as comes to one of our own communities of like size in a day, or two. In the long centuries of its power, the Papacy has given, intellectually, no uplift to the character of Italy's masses.

One might live in that country a whole year and not see the semblance of a Sabbath, except when Christmas would come round. This feature is the same in village and city.

The worst of it is, the church authorities desire to have no Sabbath. A few years ago a reform measure was set on foot. It was called the "Sunday Repose Movement." The purpose was to make Sunday a day of rest, when all business throughout the kingdom should be closed. It involved, however, another matter, that of diminishing the number of saints' days which are now such a menace to business in that country. The clergy, from the Pope down, antagonized the reform agitation. In Italy all church services must be free on the Sabbath; but on saints' days nothing is free, and, in consequence, it is on the latter observances that a revenue comes to the church. Because of this, the Papacy has done away with God's holy day for the sake of man-created holy days. Hence Italy is a Christian land with no Christian Sabbath.

In Italy gambling is a government institution. Through its national lottery the public treasury receives ten millions of dollars annually. On every Saturday, throughout the kingdom, officials read out the prize list. Gambling is as native to the Italian people as the air they breathe: to men and women, the poor and rich, the laity and clergy. According to recent newspaper dispatches from Rome, the highest dignitaries of the church were patronizing the "bookmakers" on Leo's death and successor. One often hears it said in Italy, that the clergy there, in their social entertainments, "can only talk about wine, women, and gambling." And well might they talk about wine, for how Italy does drink! The one beverage of the people is wine from six to fifteen per cent. of alcohol—and much brandy to boot! Such a thing as a temperance movement has, I suppose, never been heard of in that nation.

Superstition! After ages of Papal influence, if Italy today does not abound with false worship then there is nothing of the kind in any heathen land. In St. Peter's at Rome there is a bronze seated statue of St. Peter, with the keys in one hand, the other raised in the act of blessing. All the faithful entering that famous church, kiss the great toe of the image, while many weep and prostrate themselves in the presence of that mute thing, which, two thousand years ago, was a statue of the heathen god Jupiter standing in the gorgeous Capitoline temple. In another part of the city of Rome stands a large common-looking house containing the "Scala Santa," or holy staircase; said to be the one in Pilate's house at Jerusalem, up which our Lord walked, and brought to Rome by the mother of Constantine, in the fourth century. The Scala Santa contains twenty-eight steps, up which, having first paid the price to the priest in charge, the penitents go upon their knees, saying a fervent prayer upon each one of the oak planks; and then a final one to some images that are at the top. It was to this place, in his great distress of mind and heart, that Martin Luther came, and having devoutly ascended a dozen of the steps, he suddenly stood up, turned about and walked out. Explaining his conduct afterwards, he said a voice whispered to him: "The just shall live by faith."

In the great church of St. Mark's at Venice, there is an image of the holy Virgin, which has long been considered by the Italian people as the most efficacious of any idol of the kind in all Italy. It is said to have been painted by St. Luke, from the original, in Ephesus, and that for a long time it was one of the churches of that city. Then it was taken to Constantinople where it blessed the people for many centuries. After that Venice fell heir to the holy thing. In another part of Italy is the Nazareth house, in which the "Holy Mother of God" lived, and which was transported from among the hills of Galilee to Italian shores, by the angels. Constantly great pilgrimages are made to that shrine of the blessed virgin. There is no place one goes throughout that papal-taught land, but that one is confronted with such superstitions.

And what do that people know of Jesus Christ and the saving truths of the Gospel? Absolutely nothing! They are as ignorant of the Bible as they are false in worship. Of such great doctrines as justification by faith, regeneration, atonement, sanctification, the Holy Spirit, and such like, the papal-taught masses of Italy have never heard. The Protestant clergy now at work, seeking to bring them out of their semi-heathen darkness, are compelled to preach to their congregations as a primary-class teacher in one of our Sunday schools, would talk to the youngest of the children.

The things now said give a sample of the harvest of the Papacy's sowing in native soil during great ages. If the institution is to be judged by the character formed, what judgment is to be passed? By their fruits ye shall know them.

But the influence of the Papacy is not as it once was. There are multitudes of thinking people there, within the communion of the Roman Catholic Church, who boldly speak out their minds and declare "the Papacy to be a rotten bough on the great Tree of Christianity." These people are not disposed to withdraw from the church of their fathers, but they would gladly have the church secede from the Vatican, and witness the finish of that false assumption of authority, which the Papacy has arrogated to itself. There are more than 20,000,000 of Italians, including all classes, except, perhaps, the wealthiest of the aristocracy, who have practically ceased to believe in the Pope as a spiritual pastor, or in the Papacy as a true religion—that is, a God-appointed institution.

I am stating these facts to show the exact status of things in the home of the Papal system, now that one of its sovereign pontiffs is passing from his throne to his grave. At the death of no former Pope has the Papacy been so weak as now. The reason is, the Italian people have ceased to respect an institution that has been to them a political and religious curse—not a moral and spiritual force!

The temporal power of the Papacy was established by the great Hildebrand early in the Eleventh century. As far as Europe was concerned, that political domination was broken early in the Nineteenth century, when Pius VII. was on the Vatican throne. From the first quarter of the last century the temporal power was confined to central Italy: the city of Rome and the adjacent territory of less than 20,000 square miles; with a population of between three millions and four millions, that yielded to the Pope's treasury about $14,000,000 annually. In 1870 the temporal power fell and Italy became united in one kingdom—the Papacy being graciously allowed to hold, as a politically independent possession, the Vatican quarter of the city of Rome.

For eight hundred years the Papacy's life blood flowed through veins of political ambition. Every Pope coming to the throne was pretentiously a spiritual pastor of the universal church; but actually, he was, in heart and purpose, a political ruler, or dictator. None of his numerous predecessors has ever had stronger political desires than Leo XIII. Of old Siennese origin; of high aristocratic family, the love of power beat in every nerve and pulse of honest old Lodovico Pecci. Though coming to the papal throne eight years after the downfall of the temporal power, it was his one ambition and determined purpose to bring back the fallen greatness and departed glory of the Vatican palace. A humble, good man, he had, nevertheless, great faith in himself; for from the time he was twenty-eight years of age he had had marvelous success, rising step by step, until the sacred college unanimously lifted him to the pinnacle of power. He was then sixty-eight years old. From his first pontifical hour he began working for restored sovereignty. There were, however, giants in the new kingdom against whom Leo leaped as one leapeth against Gibraltar. He made no progress. Ten years later the Pope was bold enough to declare to the world that his great life-work was to restore the power of the Chair of St. Peter which Italy's new King had usurped! From the day Leo mounted the throne, No Pope, perhaps, was ever more guided by a sense of duty; but that sense of duty caused him to seek to get back temporal power—not to elevate and purify Italy's millions!

There were two other great ambitions that fired his honest heart. He wanted to be the world's great arbiter and mediator of capital and labor. To this end, twelve years before his death, Leo XIII. gave out one of his most famous letters, with the hope that the wisdom and infallibility of the Vatican would be called upon to settle the profound industrial problem of the nations.

The Pope's third sweet wish was, without any compromise, to unite the churches of Christendom under Papal supremacy.

Now, that his ambitions are at an end, and his long life-work finished, it is most interesting to look dispassionately at Leo's three pontifical schemes. It is when this is done, that we see what they betoken. With Political Italy, the Protestant church, and Capital and labor, all invited, and longed for, to knock at the door of the Vatican, do we not behold in Leo, with all his honesty and high praise, the deep dye of the Papacy for the last thousand years! Never did that hoary institution have a more loyal son!

As a man of noble birth, large scholarship and intelligence, good temper, excellent wisdom and able diplomacy, Leo XIII. was a great man—history will so regard him. But measured by the lack of success he had in achieving his own great idols, he was not great—that will surely be the verdict of the future.

Now, mark you: Pope Leo's ambition was the one great evil of that mighty system, of which he was the administrator. For its work, like his, has not been for the world's spiritual uplift, but temporal power and glorification. Hence poor Italy's deplorable condition today. And if they were the only people who had suffered at the hands of Papal Rome the cause would not be so bad in the world as it now is.—Biblical Recorder.

MINISTERIAL ETIQUETTE.

Here is something I have just gone through with, "And there are others." I was conducting a meeting for Bro. ———. The house was packed, the people warm, and it was no time for prolonged services. The pastor took up just thirty minutes and wore out the congregation with these platitudes:

"Now before Bro. ——— who has come from his home to bring this blessed message to you, speaks—let us sing several verses of that tender hymn No. 4, "Behold, what manner of love—" Beloved let us sing this beautiful hymn with the spirit and the understanding "Behold—" This sweet singer calls us to contemplation of the matter as if it had escaped our minds. And I wonder, after all, if we do not need to be reminded. In the busy rush of this work-a-day-world spiritual matters are largely crowded out—(and here he unloaded the outline of some old sermon he had preached on the subject. I patiently waiting and "Beholding"—.) This being concluded with a great peroration, he proceeded:

"Now while I am on my feet I will give out the notices for the morrow. The Ladies Prayer Circle will meet at the home of Mrs. Jones at 3:30. Let me remind you ladies that this does not mean 3:31 nor even 3:28, but promptly on the hour named. If my history tells me the truth, and I have no reason to doubt the accuracy of the man, there was a famous battle lost by the General being just one minute too late. Think then what great things may hang upon the matter of the moments." (This formed an introduction to a talk on the value of the virtue PUNCTUALITY in particular, and TIME in general).

"I am asked to announce that the topic will be: "Does God hear and answer prayer?"—I am SO glad you have taken that topic, for the influence of prayer has never been measured: "Prayer moves the arm, etc." "Does God hear— Ah! does a father hear his crying child, yeas; there is not a sigh, there is not a tear, etc. "Does he answer?" Not always according to our petition, but as He sees best." (Here follows his old sermon on prayer):

"Now that we have spoken of the subject, I want us to have a few minutes of silent prayer and then I will lead you in a special prayer."

A prolonged pause followed by about ten minutes of prayer, in which he is plainly saying, "Now I am showing you how it is done."

"Our worker will now take charge of the meeting. I am sure you will give him your prayerful hearing and oh if there should be any ———, etc." He took a fresh bouquet, held it until wilted and then presented it to me. Brethren! In the name of common sense and courtesy "cut it out." "T."

WHICH IS CORRECT?

The minutes of our last Assembly in giving the report of the Standing Committee of Publication as adopted by the Assembly, state that Section 12 of that report was adopted, which referred a certain overture about publishing novels back to the author, with the suggestion that the overture should come up from Presbytery. Two of our church papers (the Southern Presbyterian and the Southwestern Presbyterian) report that Section 12 was amended so as to refer the overture to the Executive Committee of Publication.

At least one of the church papers, the Southern Presbyterian, reports that Section 13 of the same report was amended so as to grant the request of the overture of the Presbytery of Western Texas. But the minutes report that Section 13 was adopted without amendment.

Now, which is correct? Of course the minutes are official, and for that reason ought to be accurately reported. But are the official statements on these points correct? The stated clerk of the Assembly says he is inclined to believe that the report as given by the Southern Presbyterian is correct, as to Section 12 and Section 13, and that to his mind the report of the Southern Presbyterian has great weight—yet he was unable to verify this belief on his part because Dr. Farris, the permanent clerk of the Assembly, was sick while attending the Assembly, and has been very sick since, and the chairman of the Standing Committee of Publication had left before action on the report was taken. The stated clerk has reported these matters as they were reported to him, but there is reason to question the correctness of the minutes on these points. Perhaps some member of the Assembly may have information that would clearly show which is correct. It is a matter of importance to have our published minutes state accurately what the Assembly did.

S. F. TENNEY.

AN EVANGELISTIC TOUR OF THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

"The Elder unto the Elect lady and her children."

Having spent the month of July itinerating in the Indian Territory I desire to give you through the church papers a report of what I saw and like Caleb and Joshua I shall make a truthful report of the country. I landed in Cameron, I. T., July 3rd and lodged with Brother W. S. Lacy. I had been with him but a little while when I had cause to say, "Thank the Lord and hurrah for Dr. Mims, the secretary; for I found that Dr. Mims was about as well acquainted with the work out there as any preacher is with his own field. This seemed to astonish Brother Lacy, and he asked me what sort of man is Dr. Mims; he writes me asking about this one and that one in my field, and what they are doing, etc. He seems to know as much about my field and work as I do, who have been here for several years. I told him Dr. Mims was a kind of Napoleon, who did not sleep more than about four hours in 24 and believed in pushing; and let me say just here, that at Madill I saw the fruit of his pushing; and but for his pushing how different things would have been. I preached at night at Cameron to a small congregation on account of the rain and mud. The next day I went to Potean. Here I found a nice comfortable church building and an earnest set of workers. Potean is a thriving town of some 2,500 people and an important point to hold. They need a manse badly; for if they had a manse they could have a preacher. He could live at Potean and give them half his time and Shady Point and Cameron, the other half. Will the church at last help these earnest people to build a manse? They are poor and unable to build without your help. You can send your contributions to Mrs. S. B. Ragan, Potean, I. T. Here I saw that Dr. Mims was hindered in doing what he saw ought to be done, and done quickly, for want of money, and we may never be able fully to calculate our loss there because he did not have the money and men to do what he wanted to do. While we were coming another stepped in the troubled waters ahead of us. My dear brethren, if you saw the need and the golden opportunity as I saw it, you would give him all he asks for and take off the brakes and let him drive. You have a safe, most earnest man; don't hinder him, and send a liberal contribution to Mrs. S. B. Ragan, Potean, for the building of a manse. It is now or never. Other denominations are pushing ahead. Send in authorized evangelists with their tents to preach and organize churches. Suppose we had had an earnest man like Dr. Mims at the head of affairs some 75 or 80 years ago, when the people of Carolinas were flocking to South Georgia. We would today have in Macon Presbytery of 400 churches where we have 40. From Potean I went to Shully Point, where I preached another week. This is a beautiful place, and deserving much more attention than is being given it for want of means. Just let me say Brother Lacy, the missionary, taught the school at Cameron some 12 miles from here, all the week and preached to four churches. So you can see what time he had for pastoral work. Give Dr. Mims money enough to put a preacher in this group, in addition to the school teachers. They are in need of a church building at this place. Help them. send your money to Dr. J. C. Lindsay. There is a fine opportunity here for Presbyterianism. Shall we take it? We will be fully able. From here I went back to Potean and then to Madill, in the Chickasaw nation, Potean and points already visited, being in the Choctaw nation. I was never more surprised in my life than when I stood up before a Madill congregation to hold the first service ever held in their new church building. I could not tell from any appearances that I was not standing before a cultured congregation in middle Georgia or Atlanta. They have worked as few people have ever worked, and have built a beautiful house. Every cent has been paid. This church has been supplied in part by the North Avenue Church, Atlanta, and was only organized a few months, not years ago. It will soon be self-sustaining, and have a pastor for all his time. Brother Williams, the preacher here, lives in Ada, and is giving his whole being to this people. What I saw and heard here makes me again and again say, "Praise the Lord for Dr. Mims, and I devoutly pray that the Lord will send men like Williams by the hundred out here. I wish I had his self-abandon. If you could see how this people have worked and what a building they have put up, you would rush the money to them to build a manse, so they could have a man stationed here to work at Fishomingo and other thriving points, where we have no church. I saw people here lost to the Presbyterian Church who had been raised Presbyterians in the Carolinas, but had come out here and no preacher; and waited and waited and none was organized, and they lost hope of one and joined others more progressive. Should it remain this way? God forbid. We have the money and Dr. Morris can get the men, if you give him the money and let him have his way and in 50 years the Indian Territory will be a strong Presbyterian country, not the Indians' country, but the Presbyterians' country. The Indians take naturally to the Presbyterian Church. Said an educated Indian lawyer to me, "Yes say I, and so do all others when they understand it. There was a time I was not a Presbyterian, but it was when I did not know what they were. When I was a child I thought as a child, but when I became a man I put away childish things, and so will others." My brethren, you have got the grandest gospel that ever sang out on the ears of poor lost men and women. Go and as you go preach.

One of the officers in this church is an Indian, Brother Cliff Love, and no man stands higher in any community than he does in this. His praise is in the mouth of all. The Indians may well be called "the noble red men." I enjoyed the hospitality of Brother Love's home. I preached 12 sermons here, and from here went to Wapanucku in the Chotaw nation, back among the mountains again. Here I lodged, not "with one sermon, a tanner," but with one Kirkpatrick, a preacher, and while I never heard him preach, for he made me do it all, some of his people told me to my face they wanted him to preach some too. And all said he was a good preacher. Well he ought to be. Strickler, that peerless theologian, did his best with him and for him. Wapanucku is not a backwoods place. You would hardly be prepared to believe your eyes were you to step off the cars in Wapanucku. The finest bank I ever saw is there; the finest ginery, the American round bale, is there, and as fine folks as you will find anywhere. Here again I saw the worth of Dr. Morris to the Presbyterian Church. Brother Kirkpatrick was the only single missionary I struck up with, and I urged him to get married at once, and put an additional worker in that field. Well the Lord has spared to him a devoted mother, who is the equal of a preacher. So we have two any way, but if some good woman would go out here and capture Brother Kirkpatrick we would have three. Brother Kirkpatrick is here for all his time, and it takes all his time in this thriving Western town. Near here is Coalate, a town of several thousand people, and no Presbyterian church for want of a Presbyterian preacher. Won't some rich brother who reads this send Morris $700 dollars to send a missionary out there to work up that place. My brethren, this is no longer the Indian Territory, it is the white man's territory. There are more white people than Indians in the territory. Shall we take it for the Presbyterian church and God? If so, we must up and be doing. The people are coming in by the thousands. The church they find on the ground is the one they go into. Let's put a Presbyterian church in every village. Give Dr. Morris the means; he is not working for self, but for us.

I wish every preacher in the Southern Assembly could visit that grand country; for it is as grand a country as I ever looked upon and again I say we are fully able to take it. Let us pray the Lord that he will send laborers into his harvest; and let us hold up the hands of

Dr. Morris and sustain him. God's richest blessing be upon the elect lady and her children, whether white or red.

C. H. HYDE.

We once heard a missionary to the Indians, a brother of our Dr. Painter, a missionary to the Chinese, say that there were more Indians in this country now than at any time in their history. The following figures would seem to maintain his contention:

"Ethnologists assert that America contained approximately half a million dusky inhabitants, when first discovered. These latest figures given by States, are: Maine, 410; New York, 4,963; North Carolina, 3,000; Florida and Indiana, 892; Wisconsin, 8,006; Michigan, 7,313; Minnesota, 6,038; Iowa, 380; Kansas, 1,007; Nebraska, 3,694; Colorado, 978; Nevada, 8,238; Montana, 12,904; Wyoming, 1,800; Utah, 2,698; Idaho, 4,061; Washington, 10,289; Oregon, 4,627; Arizona, 19,468; Dakota, 30,271; California, 11,506; Texas, 290; New Mexico, 2,824; the Indian Territory, 75,799; a total of a quarter of a million. With Alaska and British America added, the total for the entire continent almost reaches 500,000."

EBB AND FLOW.

In the Sunset glow, on a Summer day,
I have wandered beside the sea,
And gazed on the billowy waves at play,
In graceful swifl and sportive way,
As a child in its gladsome glee.

The pulse of the tide was so strong that day,
'Twas the throbbing heart of the sea,
Ebbing and flowing in masterful sway
While unto my heart did it seem to say,
"Oh! I sing of Eternity."

This life is an ocean and on its tides
Are the hopes and sorrows of men,
Our joys are fleeting, no pleasure abides,
With flow and ebb like the ocean tides,
De earth's blessings fade from our kan.

'Tis an ebb and flow with our lives each hour,
Our moments—like waves of the sea,
They lift our frail barque with wonderful pow'r
And bear us in safety when storm clouds low'r,
Or wreck us—Ah! which shall it be?

WM. LAURIE HILL.

Floral Manse, N. C., Sept. 12, 1903.

"When comes the King in royal might
To crush the wrong and crown the right,
When all the Saints in glory meet
No more to die, no more to weep;
When thrones are set and crowns are given,
And all the rich rewards of Heaven,
O! in that glorious by and by
What's done for God can never die."

Earth has seen many sorry sights. But never has she seen a man who kept the path of duty, lose faith in God and Heaven.—Quo Vaditas.

Nature fashions her mountain peaks but not the paths to their summits. Man must chisel his own trail up the cliffs. He who would reach the stars must furnish his own ladder.

Make yourselves nests of pleasant thoughts. None of us yet know, for none of us have been taught in early youth what fairy palaces we may build of beautiful thoughts, proof against all adversity—bright fancies, satisfied memories, noble histories, faithful sayings—treasure houses of restful and pleasant thoughts, which care cannot disturb, nor pain make gloomy, nor poverty take away from us—houses built without hands for our souls to live in.—Ruskin.

CONTENTS.

	Page.
EDITORIAL:
Event and Comment.....	3
Calvinism in New York City.....	4-5
"Business" and the Law of Christ.....	5-6
Some Independent Remarks.....	6
Review of Contemporaries.....	6-7
DEVOTIONAL:
Forgiveness. Responsibility .....	8
MISSIONARY:
The Chinese Kindergarten.....	8
SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON:
Review. Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D.,.....	9
WESTMINSTER LEAGUE:
What Abraham Teaches Us. Rev. H. W. Hoon..	9
CONTRIBUTED:
Robert Perry Farrist, D. D. Rev. J. A. Quarles, D. D.....	10
The Assembly's Call for Larger Gifts. Rev. Wm. Hoge Marguess, D. D.....	11
The Papacy's Influence on Italy. Alfred H. Moment, D. D. ....	11-13
Ministerial Etiquette. T.....	13-14
Which is Correct? Rev. S. F. Tenney.....	14
An Evangelistic Tour of the Indian Territory. Rev. C. H. Hyde.....	14-15
Poem: Ebb and Flow. Rev. Wm. Lanrie Hill..	15
CHURCH NEWS.....	16-19
THE WORLD.....	20-21
THE HOME CIRCLE.....	22-23
MARRIAGES AND DEATHS.....	24
THE HOUSEHOLD.....	24-25
OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.....	26-29
OUR LITTLE FOLKS.....	30-33
CLIPPINGS .....	34

Correction.

Dear Standard: The date of Synod of North Carolina, as printed last week is not correct. You took it from Assembly's minutes and that is not right.

The Synod meets at 11 o'clock a. m., Nov. 3, and not at 8 o'clock. D. I. CRAIG.

We have received a number of letters since September 1st in which there is no clue to the postoffice address of the writer. In any case where requests have not been complied with we trust another letter will be written.

We ask our readers, who have not done so, to kindly comply with our circular letter, mailed September 1st, at once.

THE STANDARD.

The Standard can use two or three experienced agents at once. Good salaries paid.

PERSONALS.

Rev. W. W. Williams has removed from Horse Shoe, N. C., to Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Rev. O. W. Guass, who recently went from Missouri to Denver, Col., is now at Arvado, Col.

Rev. and Mrs. Edgar Woods, Charlottesville, Va., celebrated their golden wedding last week.

The address of Rev. J. L. Allsworth is changed from Cape Girardeau, Mo., to Mosciusko, Miss.

Rev. H. C. White, of Cartersville, Ga., filled the pulpit of the First Church, Charlotte, last Sunday night.

Rev. J. E. Summers, of Elmwood, N. C., will take charge of the church at Mallard Creek, N. C., early in October.

Rev. A. H. Temple, after preaching during the summer at Sparta, N. C., has returned to his old field at Locust, N. C.

Rev. James Y. Fair, D. D., of Savannah, Ga., preached in the Second Presbyterian church, of Saratoga, N. Y., on the 6th inst.

Rev. R. S. Burwell, of Tennessee, who has been visiting relatives in North Carolina, preached at Asheboro, N. C., on the 20th inst.

Rev. I. S. McElroy, D. D., of Richmond, Va., presented the cause of Ministerial Relief to the church at Yorkville, S. C., on the 20th, and stopped over in Charlotte on his return home.

Changed Addresses.

Rev. Geo. M. Matthis, from Mitchell, Va., to Culpepper, Va.

Rev. W. Fred Galbraith, from Milford to Ennis, Texas.
Rev. H. B. Rose, from Bonham to Austin, Texas.

Church News.*SOUTH CAROLINA.

NOTICE BETHEL PRESBYTERY.—All delegates will buy tickets to Kershaw, where they will find conveyance at the noon train October 2d. Your only chance without extra cost. J. M. HARRIS.

A PRO RE NATA MEETING OF BETHEL PRESBYTERY is hereby called to meet in Purity church, Chester, S. C., September 22d, 1903, at 8 p. m., to transact the following business:

1st. To act on the request of Rev. D. N. McLaughlin for a dissolution of the pastoral relations between him and Purity church.

2d. To dismiss him, if the way be clear, to North Alabama Presbytery.

He has accepted a call to the First church, Anniston, Ala. C. G. Brown, Mod.

TO THE MISSIONARY SOCIETIES OF BETHEL PRESBYTERY:

You are hereby cordially invited and urged to send delegates to the Woman's Foreign Missionary Union, which will hold its annual session in the Presbyterian church, at Lancaster, S. C., on the 8th and 9th of October next. The delegates so appointed and anticipating to attend will please furnish their name to the undersigned by the 1st of October. MRS. Y. C. GREEN,
Secretary Ladies' Aid Society.

ROCKY SPRINGS.—Rev. B. P. Reid, by invitation to the session, held a meeting of four days in Rocky Spring church, Lanrens County, S. C., now vacant.

Fourteen were added to the church upon confession. Nine adults were baptized. The meeting closed yesterday. It began last Sabbath afternoon at 4 o'clock.

ENOREE PRESBYTERY—QUARTO CENTENNIAL.—The following notice has appeared in the Spartanburg Herald, published by the authority of the committee appointed to arrange for a celebration:

At the fall meeting of Enoree Presbytery, which is to convene in the First Presbyterian church of this city on October the 6th, the Presbytery, according to a resolution adopted at the last meeting, will celebrate the quarto-centennial of its organization. The committee charged with the arrangements for this celebration, consisting of Revs. Messrs. Law, Watkins and James, have secured the services of three distinguished and able ministers, who will make set addresses at three successive night sessions. This is provided so that the people generally can attend and hear these addresses, while the day sessions of the Presbytery will be left for its ordinary business.

The program as now arranged will be as follows:
Tuesday evening, October 6th, the Rev. Dr. J. T. Pluket pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Augusta, Ga. will preach on Presbyterian Polity.

Wednesday evening the 7th, the Rev. Henry Alexander White, D. D., of the Theological Seminary, at Columbia, S. C., will speak on Presbyterian history.

Thursday evening, the 8th, the Rev. R. C. Reed, D. D. of the same seminary, will speak on Presbyterian doctrine.

These gentlemen are all scholarly, able and forceful speakers, and no doubt will deliver interesting, instructive and impressive discourses.

It is expected that this celebration, together with the fact that the meeting is to be held in our attractive and flourishing city, will draw an unusually large number of ministers and others to the Presbytery's meeting.

MISSOURI.

UPPER MO. PRESBYTERY.—At a called meeting of this Presbytery Sept. 10th, held in the First Presbyterian church, St. Joseph, Mo., the pastoral relation between Rev. Chas. P. Foreman and the Plattsburg church was dissolved. This was done at his request, that he might spend the winter in special study at the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Kentucky.

Resolutions Adopted by Plattsburg Church.

Whereas, the Reverend Chas. Preston Foreman, of the First Presbyterian church of Plattsburg, Mo., has presented his resignation to the congregation and members of his church, as its pastor;

And Whereas, it is the intention of our pastor to seek further light and knowledge of the Truth in a seminary at Louisville, Kentucky, where he will take a special course, and as it is for this reason alone that he seeks a severance of his relations as pastor of our church; Therefore, be it

Resolved, by the congregation assembled, That we feel that to refuse the same will be to restrict his usefulness in the Church of Christ, to hinder his laudable ambition to become a more able minister of Jesus Christ;

That we hereby tender Brother Foreman our thanks and gratitude for his years of able effort and faithful Christian service in our church, and we pray for the future God may grant him a long life and bless and hallow his every work.

R. H. MUSSEY,
C. B. CANBY,
CLAUDE TUANHOUSE,
Committee.

PLEASANT HILL.—The Synod's Home Missionary Secretary preached at this church September 13, and after services a congregational meeting was held and a hearty and unanimous call was made for the pastoral services of Rev. W. K. Johnston, of Jefferson, Texas; and it is hoped that this brother will see his way clear to accept and that he will soon enter upon this important and interesting field, where a warm welcome awaits him.

GEORGIA.

HAZLEHURST.—One of the members of this church writes: "Our church is now without a pastor, but we hope to have another soon." Rev. L. B. Davis, of Atlanta, preached at Hazlehurst August 12, and at Trinity church August 13, and his service was much appreciated.

LITHONIA.—The Sabbath School Institute held here August 25, for the schools in this section of the Presbytery was a pronounced success. All but two of the schools were represented. A very practical programme was rendered. The attendance amounted to fifty or over, of pastors, superintendents, officers and teachers. Friends of the Baptist and Methodist schools expressed themselves as specially benefited by the exercises. Another is asked for next spring.

SUMMERVILLE.—The Sunday school of the church at Summerville, Ga., has recently bought a library for the school, and the Ladies' Aid Society has bought a book case. This Society, though small in numbers, having only twelve active members, is a band of earnest, consecrated women, who believe in worshipping God with their substance. They have given twenty dollars, voluntary offering, since the first of the year, to the Orphanages of the church and to local Home Missions. The Society was organized for a special work, that of building a manse; the dues are kept for that purpose, and by their faithful, earnest work, they now have a fund of about three hundred dollars.

MORVEN.—Beginning August 2, protracted services were held in this church lasting seventeen days; and, if there were no other result, the eager, patient listening of these people to the plain, simple Gospel message would give encouragement for the future. There were twenty-five professions of faith, fifteen of whom united with our church. The pastor was assisted by the local Methodist preacher and the evangelist of Macon Presbytery, Rev. C. H. Hyde. The latter preached with great earnestness and power for eight days, and the results of those sermons prove the wisdom of Presbytery in taking up its own evangelistic work, as well as its wisdom, in selecting Mr. Hyde as evangelist. This mission church will, no doubt, reap good results from his labors for many days to come. Out of material gained in these services, we expect to find officers for a Sunday school to be organized the first Sunday in September. To God be all the praise.—Christian Observer.

The Presbytery of Savannah will meet in the Presbyterian church at St. Marys, Ga., Tuesday, October 27th, at 7:30 p. m. Sessional records and reports will not be required at this meeting.
D. F. SHEPPARD, S. C.

COURER.—A meeting of nine days was held in this church, embracing the second Sabbath of August. Rev. Thos. D. Cartledge, of Atlanta, did all the preaching. There were four members received on profession of faith. They were baptized. Three were received by letter.

DANIELSVILLE.—A protracted meeting was begun in this church August 22d. Rev. Thos. D. Cartledge came to our assistance on Monday and preached until Friday.

Eight members were received on profession of faith, and all of them were baptized.

We are all pleased with Mr. Cartledge's work at Courer and Danielsville. He has unusual gifts for evangelistic work. We feel under obligation to him for his good work among us.

TEXAS.

PORT ARTHUR.—Six new members have recently been added to the church at Port Arthur. Four of these were by letter, two on profession of faith. The Lord has richly blessed his cause at this place.

FLORIDA.

The Synod of Florida meets at Madison on 17th of November (not on 20th as in Assembly minutes) at 7:30 p. m.

WM. B. Y. WILKIE, S. C.

ALABAMA.

UNIONTOWN.—Rev. D. L. Lander, of Clearwater, Fla., has accepted a call from the church at Uniontown, Ala., and will begin work in his new field on the first Sabbath in October.

NORTH CAROLINA.

CHARLOTTE.

The work in the Presbyterian College is now under full headway. Its steady growth and thorough work have more than justified the expectations of its friends. The attendance is 30 per cent larger than ever before in its history, and already the trustees are planning for extra rooms. The boarding department is nearly full, while the day attendance is largely increased. The musical department has been greatly strengthened, and it is rapidly gaining in public favor.

PEACE INSTITUTE OPENS WITH FINE PROSPECTS.

The fall term of Peace Institute opened Wednesday, September 16th at eleven o'clock with fine attendance. The opening exercises were of an informal nature, consisting of short talks by Mr. Joseph G. Brown, Rev. Dr. A. H. Moment and others.

The number of applicants for places as resident pupils has been unusually large, and Mr. Dinwiddie has been obliged to decline boarding pupils.

The literary courses of the school have been carefully revised and enlarged.

The studio has been remodeled, being carefully arranged with reference to light, etc. Miss Searcy, the instructor, has had much experience as a teacher and has studied under the best masters. Water color, painting from nature and applied design may be considered her specialties. Work is offered in drawing, pastel, painting in all mediums, pen sketching, and pyrography.

Mr. Brawley returns from Europe, where he has had fresh study in Paris and London, and will again be the director of the music department.

Among the attractive new courses offered is one in Pedagogy and Normal work, in charge of Miss Edith Royster. Miss Royster is already well known as a successful teacher and institute conductor, and the pupils taking her course will be brought in contact with the latest and best methods. The work will consist of lectures, observations and practice in teaching, and will prepare the students for practical work in the class room.

Mrs. B. Sydnor Jerman will have charge of classes in rafia and embroidery. Rafia work, or basket making, etc., is now largely used in the most progressive schools and will doubtless be a very popular class.

Davidson, N. C., Sept. 18, 1903.

The meeting in the Y. M. C. A. hall was of unusual interest last evening. A large crowd gathered to witness the initiation of new members, and to hear the address of Rev. Dr. J. Knox Montgomery, of Charlotte, on the value and importance of Bible study. Sixty-four or more of the new men were received into the membership of the association, and nearly seventy men gave in their names as members of one of the four classes organized for special study in the Bible. The officers of the association are R. D. Dickson, president; C. A. Cornelson, vice president and chairman of the Bible committee; J. A. Mawhinney, secretary; W. F. O'Kelly, treasurer and chairman of the Missionary committee. The personnel of the several committees and the general membership are of a character to give promise of most successful and active Christian work during the current college year. The young men appreciated greatly the kindness of Dr. Montgomery in coming to address them and his inspiring and excellent talk on the Bible as a literature and as a guide and text book no doubt did much toward showing the students the value of these Bible classes in the association. It was for a while quite a question as to what could be done with the benches of the church while the building was undergoing repairs and enlargement, but the overflow of students made it necessary to place a number of extra seats in the recitation rooms, so the limited number of opera chairs in the Y. M. C. A. were transferred to the recitation rooms and the hall was then filled with the benches from the church and now the seating capacity of this auditorium is in keeping with the demands made by the large accession of membership to the association.

It is pleasant to note that the North Carolina Medical College (Dr. J. P. Munroe, President) has had a fine opening, the first year men being more than ever before in numbers.

Dr. J. M. Douglas has been absent this week, attending the marriage of his brother, Rev. Davidson Douglas, to Miss Welch, of Monaca, Pa.

Dr. W. R. Grey and family will spend the Sabbath in Lexington at his brother's, Rev. John Grey. The strength of the foot-ball team is hard to estimate at this early date as a large per cent. of the men are new, but the material itself is excellent.

NOTICE TO THE MEMBERS OF CONCORD PRESBYTERY.

Brethren attending the approaching meeting of Concord Presbytery in Siloam church, Oct. 2nd, should buy tickets to Greenlee. Train No. 11 due at Greenlee at 12:03 P. M. will, by special permission, on Friday, Oct. 2nd, stop at a point one mile beyond the station and within easy reach of the church. All who expect to attend will confer a favor upon the undersigned by sending him notice of such expectation not later than Sept. 28th. W. S. WILSON.

PATTERSON MILLS CHURCH.

We have just experienced a glorious revival in our church. Brother Cornelson, of the First Church, Concord, preached for us ten days, and the Lord honored the word so faithfully and earnestly spoken. There were nineteen conversions all of which have joined the Presbyterian Church. We have not reaped the full harvest of this seed sowing, others are under conviction, and God's people have been quickened in their spiritual life. JOHN WAKEFIELD.

Concord, N. C., Sept. 15, 1903.

RESOLUTIONS OF ELMWOOD CHURCH.

Whereas, God in His wisdom has called our pastor, Rev. J. E. Summers, to another field of labor, be it Resolved, 1st. That we, the members of Elmwood church, wish to express to him our sincere regret that he is to leave us and to thank him for his faithful services in our little flock for the past seven and a half years.

Second. That we wish we could increase his salary and give his family better advantages thereby inducing him to stay with us.

Third. That we hope he will be pleased with his new field of labor and pray that God will bless his work and that he may wear many stars in his crown when his work here is finished.

Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be given to him and his family, a copy be sent to the Presbyterian Standard and a copy be filed with the church records.

(Signed) ELMWOOD CONGREGATION.

Sept. 6th, 1903.

FAYETTEVILLE PRESBYTERY.

1. The Presbytery of Fayetteville will meet at Lumber Bridge, N. C., Tuesday at 8 P. M. October 6, 1903.

2. The churches are required to pay half their annual assessment for the Presbyterial Fund on or before this meeting. There is no money in the treasury and claims upon it are now pressing.

3. The railway lines have promised reduced rates to the meeting. Apply to local agents for return tickets.

4. All who expect to attend the meeting are requested to notify promptly Mr. Neill Shaw, Lumber Bridge, N. C., and state whether they expect to come by public or private conveyance. If it is more convenient to come by private conveyance it will be entirely convenient to entertain those who may prefer to travel in this way.

P. R. LAW, Stated Clerk.

POLK COUNTY.

Our mission field in Polk county enjoyed a visit by R. M. McG. Shields, the last week of August. Mr. Shields for several years been very much interested in this work and always evinced that interest by substantial help. His Presbyterial appointment was filled at Sandy Plain embracing the fourth Sabbath of August, and it was indeed a season of refreshing to the church at that place. Ten persons were admitted to membership on profession of faith and one child received the seal of the covenant. The Lord be praised for His everlasting goodness.

T. C. C., Evangelist

The Presbytery of Kings Mountain met with the Low church September 8th at 8 p. m. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. R. Z. Johnston, the Moderator, his text being I Kings 2:46.

The following organization of Presbytery was effected: Moderator: Rev. W. H. Wilson, Stanly.

Clerks: Rev. W. A. Murray, Lincolnton, engrossing clerk and Mr. R. A. White, temporary clerk.

Minister received: Rev. J. B. Cochrane was received from Savannah Presbytery.

Calls: From New Hope to Rev. J. B. Cochrane. From Ironton to Rev. W. A. Murray for one-fourth of his time.

Candidate received: Mr. Simon Barker, a member Unity church, was received under care of Presbytery as candidate for the ministry.

Foreign Missions: A popular meeting was held Wednesday night in the interest of Foreign Missions. Rev. M. McG. Shields, the chairman of Presbytery's committee, read an interesting report on Foreign Missions. Addresses were made by Rev. W. A. Murray, subject: "God's Ordained Missionary Society"; and by Rev. J. B. Cochrane, subject "Motives in Missions."

The following committees were appointed for the ensuing year:

Foreign Missions: Rev. M. McG. Shields, Gastonia, N. C. E. L. Pegram, A. M. Smyre.

Ministerial Education: Rev. W. H. Wilson, Stanley, C.; Rev. J. J. Kennedy, R. A. White.

Church and Christian Education: Rev. R. C. Morrison, Wildemere, N. C.; R. L. Ryburn, W. A. Cannon.

Publication and Sabbath Schools: Rev. T. C. Croke, Columbus, N. C.; Rev. J. M. Forbis, J. F. Flack, A. C. Miller, J. T. R. Dameron.

Ministerial Relief: Rev. R. Z. Johnston, Lincolnton, C.; S. D. Burgin, Edgar Love.

Colored Evangelization: Rev. J. B. Cochrane, R. F. I. Lowell, N. C.; J. R. Reid.

Auditing Committee: Rev. S. L. Cathey, Rutherfordton, N. C.; J. E. Page, J. Q. Holland.

Orphan's Home and Bible Cause: Rev. G. A. Sparrow, agent R. F. D., Lowell, N. C.

Sabbath: Rev. W. A. Murray, agent, Lincolnton, N. C.

Presbyterian Home Missions: Rev. W. R. Minter, chairman of Presbyterian Home Missions, made a report showing encouraging progress since the spring meeting of Presbytery.

Church and Christian Education: The report of the chairman, Rev. R. C. Morrison, showed one thoroughly Presbyterian school within our bounds. This school is under the efficient management of Mr. W. W. Brand and merits the support of every Presbyterian in Kings Mountain Presbytery.

Thursday the 10th at 12:30 o'clock Presbytery adjourned to meet in Wilmington during the meeting of Synod at that place the Moderator.

Next stated meeting will be held in Rutherfordton beginning Friday night before the second Sabbath of April, 1904. S. L. CATHEY, S. C.

The Woman's Missionary Union of Wilmington Presbytery will observe its second annual Day of Prayer at the Presbyterian church at Burgaw, October 3rd, 1903. The following program has been adopted by the executive committee of the Union:

PROGRAM.

Morning Session, 10:30 A. M.

Popular Meeting.

Devotional Exercises..... Rev. T. D. Johnston

Address ..... Dr. George C. Wort

Question Book.

A Season of Prayer.

Hymn.

12:30—1:30.....Lunch

Afternoon Session, 1:30 P. M.

Devotional Exercises conducted by Mrs. Jackson Johnston.

Silent Prayer.

Address ..... Mrs. George C. Wort

Silent Prayer closed by chain of prayer.

Hymn.

4 P. M. Popular Meeting.

Farewell service of prayer, sympathy and good wishes for our returning missionaries, Dr. and Mrs. George H. Wort conducted by Rev. A. D. McClure, D. D.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

To the Brethren of the Synod of N. C.:

I was asked by Rev. D. Clay Lilly, D. D., of Tuscaloosa, Ala., to take charge of the school and church work at North Wilkesboro and Elkin, and possibly another point. I came on the institute ground on the 3rd. I preached Sunday to quite an interesting congregation. I ask your prayers and sympathy in this work. I shall want to improve the grounds and farm; to do this we will need a one-horse wagon, a horse and farming tools. We ask our friends to help us along these lines. My address is changed from Tuscaloosa, Ala., to North Wilkesboro, N. C.

JOHN S. MORROW.

ORANGE PRESBYTERY.

Orange Presbytery met in the old historic church of Alamance, Guilford county, N. C., September 1, 1903. Seventeen ministers and twenty-three elders were in attendance, and it was a delightful meeting. This is the church where our ministers, Drs. David Caldwell and E. W. Caruthers, were the pastors during a period of 100 years, one succeeding the other. The present pastor is Rev. S. M. Rankin, and under his leadership the good people have recently greatly improved the church building and grounds. The interior walls have been beautified with paint and paper, a new carpet has been put down, a new organ purchased, and elegant white marble steps placed at the entrance of the church, a splendid old brick building. Large congregations attended all the meetings of Presbytery and the people seemed delighted to be there.

The Rev. E. C. Murray, D. D., a former pastor of this church, was chosen moderator by acclamation and Rev. J. V. Goodman and Mr. W. C. McLean were made temporary elders. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. J. H. Gray, the last moderator present, on the text, Luke 5:27.

Three new candidates for the ministry were received under the care of Presbytery, Messrs. S. W. Hodge, of Cross Roads Church; J. M. Walker, of Stony Creek, and C. H. Phipps, of Alamance. One candidate, Mr. G. C. Smith, was dropped from the roll of candidates, and one church organization, "Rougemont," was dissolved and the name dropped from the roll of churches.

A call was presented and accepted from the Mt. Airy church, for the pastoral services of Rev. B. W. Mebane, D. D. Dr. Mebane goes to Mt. Airy for all his time at a salary of $850.

The Leaksville church was permitted to employ Rev. W. C. Doggett, of Roanoke Presbytery, for one year at a salary of $350.

The pastoral relations between Rev. E. M. Gilliard, colored, and the Elkin and Beulah churches, colored, were dissolved, and Bro. Gilliard was dismissed to the Central Alabama Presbytery.

The usual Sunday school convention was not held, but the time was given to Dr. A. L. Phillips, who made a most interesting address on "The Model Sunday School" and Sunday school work.

The executive committees of publication and colportage, Sunday schools and young people's societies, were consolidated into one, after the plan of the Assembly, and Dr. B. W. Mebane, Rev. Joseph Evans, Rev. S. M. Rankin, and Elders E. F. Hall and J. V. Price, constitute the new committee.

Mr. J. L. Scott, Jr., of Graham, N. C., was re-elected trustee of Davidson College for another term of five years.

Interesting popular meetings were held in connection with the reports on Home and Foreign Missions. These reports show progress and much cause for encouragement. Also the reports from the committees on ministerial education, ministerial relief, colored evangelization, colportage and the Sabbath, were all presented and duly considered. All these reports give good ground for hope and encouragement. See printed minutes.

An open letter was received by Presbytery from Mr. J. C. Wharton, of Greensboro, N. C., deploring the fact that in this age "Children go home, or elsewhere, from the Sabbath school, and do not attend the preaching services." This letter and its suggestions were strongly endorsed by Presbytery and commended to the people and will be published in the minutes.

The next stated meeting will be held in First Church, Greensboro, N. C., April 12, 1904.

After a hearty vote of thanks to the good people of Alamance Presbytery adjourned to meet at the call of the Moderator in Wilmington, N. C., during the meeting of the Synod. D. I. CRAIG, Stated Clerk.

THE ASSEMBLY'S HOME AND SCHOOL.

Dear Friends: We are just entering upon our eleventh session. Ten years have passed in the history of the Home and School and if I could give you an inventory of the amount of good the institution has done in educating the children of our deceased ministers and of our missionaries, you would be surprised and gratified. God alone knows how much good it has accomplished. The longer our experience, the more we see the demand for the institution. You have no idea of the urgency of this work. Let me give you a practical illustration of what the institution is doing: Among those who now enjoy the privileges of the Home and School is a widow with six children. Her husband was an earnest and faithful minister of God's Word. He was receiving at the time of his death $750 per annum and you can well know that he had laid aside but little. Her total income at his death was about $100 per annum. Her youngest child is nine months and her oldest 11 years old. The Home and School gladly came to her help and today by its means education and support has been secured for her children. Reader, don't you know that the angels in Heaven would be glad to do such work? If you will take part in it you will experience much joy and peace. The above is only one illustration. You have no idea how important this matter is. We need $500 at this time as there are always many demands upon us at the beginning of the session. Please come to our help promptly and send us what you can. It is the King's business. Yours fraternally,

S. W. SOMERVILLE, Supt.

Fredericksburg, Va.

OCTOBER COLLECTIONS FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS.

By reason of the noble generosity of one of our members shown in the gift of $25,000 to our Foreign Mission work, we have been relieved of the necessity of sending out any emergency appeal for help during the summer. But although placed at the disposal of the executive committee without conditions, it was not deemed proper that so large an individual gift should all be expended for current needs. A considerable part of it was expended in the long needed permanent equipment of our different missions in the matter of dwellings, schools and hospitals. And so we come up to the first of October this year with our needs for the current work just as great and as urgent as ever.

In addition to the usual amount needed to support the regular work, six new missionaries and seven now on furlough are to sail about the first of October. To cover this extra expense we need about $5,000 increase on the receipts of last October, or about $20,000 in all.

But the Assembly has called on the churches for $250,000 for this fiscal year, and this is the first regular collection since that call was made. By way of an honest effort to reach this amount we ask every minister in charge of a church to try to increase the gifts of his church last year by at least fifty percent.

The Sabbath schools are a very important part of the Church. For their own training, as well as for the needs of the cause, they should be given the opportunity to contribute to it at the regular times. We appeal to all Sabbath school superintendents to see that this is done.

We also ask of all our missionary societies the prompt remittance of all funds that have accumulated during the summer, and an earnest effort to do even more at this time than they are so generously accustomed to do for our help.

Brethren, give to your committee of Foreign Missions, to whom you have entrusted the work, the fullness of hand that will enable them to carry it forward in a manner worthy of our noble church; and pray with us that God will make His people willing to give, even as He has prospered them.

Your brethren in Christ,

The Executive Committee of Foreign Missions,
S. H. CHESTER, Sec'y.

HOME MISSION NOTES.

The executive committee of Home Missions has been fortunate in securing the services of Rev. W. T. Matthews as Superintendent of Home Missions and Evangelist for the Indian Territory and Oklahoma. He has had much experience in evangelistic work and is expected to do good service in this great and promising field. Any one who knows of parties moving in either Territory, and will send their names to the Secretary, or to Brother Matthews at Durant, I. T., it will be greatly appreciated and will be of great assistance in his work.

Ten years ago the Assembly appointed the last Sabbath in September as "Children's Day for Home Missions." For years some schools have observed it also as "Rally Day" for gathering the scattered forces after the summer vacations. It is very important to teach the children the method of church work, and the needs of the destitute, if they are to become intelligent and earnest Christians. Many pastors observe "Children's Day for Foreign Missions", but take no interest in instructing the children in Home Missions. Are not both equally important?

As Secretary, I have prepared exercises at some trouble and expense, which will be sent to every pastor for his Sabbath school. Let each pastor examine them and see if they are not spiritual, instructive and helpful. If so, why not make good use of them?

A friend has offered the Secretary $2,000 for special work in Christian and industrial schools on condition that he raise the same amount for this purpose. It is needless to say that the amount will be raised, which makes this valuable gift available.

S. L. MORRIS, Secretary.

MISSISSIPPI.

THE PRESBYTERY OF CHICASAW met at Bethany Church, Aug. 27th, 1903, with five ministers and five ruling elders in attendance.

Rev. Newton Smith was chosen Moderator and Rev. M. L. Phillips, temporary clerk.

The stated clerk was directed to remind the churches of the amount apportioned to each one of them in order to meet the amount of $24.00 assumed by the Presbytery. Sarepta Church, with eight members was enrolled.

Chalybeate was selected for the place of the spring meeting, on Thursday before the first full moon in April, 1904, 11 o'clock a. m.

A Sabbath-School Institute will be held there on Wednesday preceding the meeting of Presbytery.

A thanksgiving service was held on the morning of the second day's session.

W. M. Cox and O. C. Carr were selected trustees for a term of three years.

The following resolution was adopted: That the Presbytery of Chickasaw declines to recommend any young man who is seeking the gospel ministry, for aid from the Central Committee on Education, who in any way uses tobacco.

It was recommended that Sabbath-School Day, Oct. 4th, be appropriately observed and a collection taken up for the work.

The Presbytery of Chickasaw respectfully overtures the Synod of Mississippi, in session at Laurel, Miss., that Synod resume its synodical evangelistic work; that a superintendent, who shall be a minister of the gospel, of synodical evangelistic work, shall be appointed, whose salary shall be provided for by pledges thereto from our larger churches, so that all other means contributed to this work may be applied to the direct work of evangelization in our bounds; That a Synodical Committee of Home Missions be appointed, composed of the chairman of the Presbyterian Home Mission Committee, and such other as the Synod may appoint, and that the Synodical Home Mission Committee shall co-operate with Presbyterian Home Mission Committee in this great work throughout our Synod.

Home Mission Report.—Pastors and churches are urged to raise the amounts apportioned to the churches to raise the $350.00 asked from them for this work. The Home Mission Committee was empowered to make such changes in the regrouping of churches as may be deemed necessary for the betterment of the work. Presbytery reiterates its recommendation to the Pontatoc Church, that they employ a minister for all his time, and that Zion and Monroe together shall employ a man for all his time, the committee render such aid as may be necessary.

After a two days' session with the good people of Bethany Church, Presbytery adjourned to meet at the call of the Moderator. J. W. ALLEN, S. C.

TIME AND PLACE OF THE MEETINGS OF THE SYNODS.

Alabama, Union Springs, Nov. 10, 7:30 p. m.
Arkansas, Hope, Oct. 20, 7:30 p. m.
Florida, Madison, Nov. 20, 7:30 p. m.
Georgia, Brunswick, Nov. 10, 7:30 p. m.
Kentucky, Cynthiana, Oct. 13, 7:30 p. m.
Mississippi, Laurel, Nov. 17, 7:30 p. m.
Missouri, Fulton, Oct. 20, 7:30 p. m.
North Carolina, Wilmington, Nov. 3, 8 p. m.
South Carolina, Cheraw, Oct. 20, 12 m.
Tennessee, Memphis, Oct. 27, 8 p. m.
Texas, Milford, Oct. 21, 7:30 p. m.
Virginia, Abingdon, Oct. 20, 7:30 p. m.

MEETINGS OF PRESBYTERIES.

SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Albemarle, at Goldsboro, October 6, at 8 p. m.
Asheville, Davidson River, Tues., Oct. 6, 7:30 p. m.
Frank D. Hunt, S. C.
Mecklenburg, Wadesboro, Wed., Sept. 30, 1903, at 11 a. m.
T. J. Allison, S. C.
Wilmington, Wallace, Oct. 21, 11 a. m.
A. McFadyen, S. C.

SYNOD OF ALABAMA.

Central of Alabama, Sylvan Street ch., Selma, Oct. 1, 7:30 p. m.
I. C. H. Champney, S. C.
North Alabama, Goodwater ch., in Goodwater town, Ala. Oct. 6, 1903, at 7:30 p. m.
W. I. Sinnott, S. C.
Tuskaloosa, Newbern, Tues., Oct. 6, 7:30 p. m.
J. G. Fraigg, S. C.

SYNOD OF ARKANSAS.

Ouachita, Arkadelphia, Wed., Oct. 7, 8 p. m. All church sessions will be expected to send their records to this meeting of Presbytery, and to be represented by a ruling elder.
C. H. Maury, S. C.
Pine Bluff, Princeton, Thurs., Oct. 1, 7:30 p. m.
E. P. Kennedy, S. C.
Washbourne, Bentonville, Ark., Wed., Sept. 30, 7:30 p. m.
S. W. Davies, S. C.

SYNOD OF FLORIDA.

Florida, Madison, Sat., Nov. 14, 7:30 p. m.
B. L. Baker, S. C.
St. Johns, Wildwood, Fla., Nov. 12, at 7:30 p. m.
D. L. Lander, S. C.

SYNOD OF GEORGIA.

Macon, Albany, Ga., Sept. 30, 8 p. m.
W. H. Frazer, S. C.

SYNOD OF KENTUCKY.

Louisville, Anchorage, Sept. 29, 7:30 p. m.
David M. Sweets, S. C.
Transylvania, Perryville, Tues., Sept. 29, 7:30 p. m.
E. M. Green, S. C.

SYNOD OF LOUISIANA.

Louisiana, Lake Charles, Thurs., Oct. 15, 7:30 p. m.
M. B. Shaw, S. C.
Red River, Monroe, La., Oct. 6, 7:30 p. m.
W. A. Zeigler, S. C.

SYNOD OF MISSISSIPPI.

Meridian, Montrose, Thurs., Oct. 1, 7:30 p. m.
A. B. Coit, S. C.
Mississippi, Ben Salem ch., Tuesday, Sept. 29, 11 a. m.
S. C. Caldwell, S. C.
North Mississippi, Sardis, Sept. 30, 8 p. m.
S. L. Grigsby, S. C.
Tombigbee, Bethel ch., Oct. 1, 11 a. m. Crawford is the railroad point. Elders coming will please notify S. D. Potts, Crawford, Mississippi, R. F. D. The Presbyterian Sunday School Institute will meet on Wednesday at 7 p. m. Sunday schools are urged to send representatives.
J. W. Moseley, Jr., S. C.

SYNOD OF MISSOURI.

Potosi, Pres. ch., Caruthersville, Frid., Sept. 25, 7:30 p. m.
Geo. W. Harlan, S. C.
St. Louis, Newport ch., Oct. 6, 11 a. m.
Upper Missouri, Morton-Hardin ch., Sept. 29, 7:30 p. m.
During the afternoon of that date a Y. P. S. C. E. Convention will be held.
Chas. P. Foreman, S. C.

SYNOD OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

Charleston, Summerville, Oct. 6, 8 p. m.
Alexander Sprunt, S. C.
Enoree, Spartanburg, Tues., Oct. 6, 8 p. m. During this meeting the Presbytery will celebrate the quarto-centennial of its organization with appropriate addresses and other exercises.
T. H. Law, S. C.
Harmony, Midway ch., Wed., Oct. 7, 12 m.
W. W. Mills, S. C.
Pee Dee, McColl, Tues., Sept. 29, 10 a. m.
A. H. McArn, S. C.

SYNOD OF TENNESSEE.

Columbia, Cornersville, Tues., Sept. 29, 7:30 p. m. East church is expected to send up semi-annual dues.
W. A. Cleveland, S. C.

SYNOD OF TEXAS.

Dallas, Amarillo, Texas, Thurs., Sept. 24, 8 p. m.
E. M. Munroe, S. C.
Durant, Ada, I. T., Friday, Sept. 25, 8 p. m.
R. F. Kirkpatrick, S. C.
Fort Worth, Carlsbad, New Mex., Fri., Sept. 25., 8:30 p. m.
John V. McCall, S. C.
Western Texas, Lockhart, Sept. 30, 8 p. m.
S. J. McMurry, S. C.

The Home Circle.

LOST—A CHILD.

By Mildred Welsh.

The town was an important one on the Atlantic Coast. Famed once for its prominence in Revolutionary history, it had grown slowly from the village of that time into something of a city on account of its fine position as a cotton market and its deep bosomed river down which lumber from the inland counties could be floated to the sea.

It ran its length along the river north and south and spread to the east over level fields to the sand hills beyond. The principal street was lined at its upper end with railroad headquarters and business houses of importance. A few squares farther down these gave way to grocery stores, small shops and the market with its fish and negro hucksters, still farther it passed a few squares of handsome homes to grow poorer, more straggling and neglected, until it ran out into a common strewn with broken glass and rubbish of all kinds. At this end of street stood a cotton factory that stirred the quiet of day and night into a continuous roar of machinery and jarring sound. Around it and stretching like long arms to the street above, were rows on rows of one-storied yellow houses that wearied the eye with their sameness of color and design.

The sun had gotten directly overhead when the shrill scream of a whistle fell sharply on the ear and the mill-hands poured out of the factory doors for their hour's rest and noonday meal. At first they took their tin dinner pails and scattered into groups in the yard. The men, heavy-eyed and stupid, with quids of tobacco in their mouths gathered around the pump. The women, dull and hopeless or bold and defiant as they were old or young, stood near the office and the children, of whom there were a number, hung around listening or watched their companions at play. Before long the groups grew together under the impulse of some excitement that moved them. "The boss was certainly mad today, fightin' mad," said one of the men. "He was, an' he gits mad every time these lady visitors come. Just let 'em turn their backs an' he goes ter cussin'," put in another. "Don't see why?" asked a woman. "It's because the ladies asks the children how old they is an' how long they have been workin' in the mill. He," she jerked her thumb toward the office, "he says it aint none of their business but I don't know." "Hush, here they is," said another hastily. The chatter of voices died away as two ladies came out of the factory doors. The "boss" stood at the office window and glowered at them with an expression that was none too pleasant. The younger and prettier of the two ladies stopped and spoke to the children. Some of them may have been twelve, the "boss" said they all were, but most of them did not look over ten, some were under it. A few were bright-eyed and alert, the others so listless, it seemed hard to win from them even the slow and sullen answers they gave. One little girl, attracted by something in the lady, edged her way in from the outside until she stood in front of her. She dug her toes in sand shyly and twisted the hem of her brown gingham apron like the others did. But in some indefinable way she was different. The brown eyes lifted to the visitor held some other world loveliness in their depths, the face was fair and white and the soft hair above it shone with a glint of the sun's brightness.

She answered the questions readily. "I'm nine years old an' I've bin workin' in the mill most a year now," she said. "Yes'um, I works from six in the mornin' till six in the evenin'. I lives with granddaddy and dranmar bout a mile from here out on the sandhills. "No'm, there aint no one ter work but me. The boss turned 'em off, said they was too old to work." "Yes'um, sometimes he gits a job, but he aint got no regular work." "No'm, I aint ever bin ter school." As they turned to go, the lady stopped and kissed the little girl's forehead, her eyes full of tears. The child watched them till they were out of sight, then she put her hand to her forehead as if to feel the kiss there, and a tender, dreamy smile came into the flower-like face.

II.

The short Southern winter passed into spring. It was only the last of April and yet the days were oppressive with their langorous heat. The factory was like an oven. The mill-hands worked or fell out, if the fever seized them.

The twelve o'clock whistle had blown and they were making the most of the breeze blowing in from the river. A sudden hush fell on them as a man in an old bottle-green coat and battered hat opened the gate and crossed the yard to the office. He stooped painfully under his seventy years and the hand that held his cane shook with age and weakness.

He seemed to be well known to the mill-hands for their hard faces softened into something like sympathy, although they were silent as he passed on without looking up. When he came out he still did not look up, but there was such stony despair in his face that a woman said gently, "What did he tell you, Owens?" The old man looked up at her blankly and his voice was hoarse when he answered, "He says I'm too old ter work. I aint fit even to pick cotton an' he can't do nothin' fer me." "An' the little gal?" the woman asked. "It's too late to save her now, the doctor says. If we could have sent her ter the county, but where's the use of talkin' about the country to we'uns?" "I reckon it's fever, aint it?" "No, the doctor, he says she's just a fadin'. Some children is like that. Don't nothin' seem ter hurt her, exactly; she jest don't keer no more. 'Pears like she don't take no interest in nothin'."

"She were sorter little an' peaked ter work all day," said the woman. All life and feeling had left the man's voice. He spoke mechanically, as if he related an old tale he had told so often, it had lost its meaning. "We kept her out as long as we could. We used ter live in the country an' it seems like now we was better off there. The little gal was always singin' an' playin'. Her mother died when she was born, but we did the best we could for her. One day a man come hirin' hands for the factory an' made out as we could make plenty of money an' the little one could go ter school. We come, but we was too old. My wife, she couldn't stand it on her feet all day in the hot room an' by an' by she had ter quit. I kept on long as I could but the boss he was always sayin' I was too old. Then he told me ter quit an' send the child if I wanted ter." He waited sometime before he spoke again. "She's bin workin' a year now. She warn't eight when she went in. Seems as if these hot days was too much for her. I thought mebber I could get a little job an' we could make out, but the boss told me ter git out and not bother him." The woman's face hardened.

The whistle interrupted her as she was about to speak and with a nod to the man, she joined the others hurrying back into the factory and Owens left the yard.

The old man plodded on slowly. The weary way wound on before him the sand was heavy in his shoes and the sun beat fiercely on his head. He left the more respectable part of the town behind, and the houses he passed now were small, unpainted and uncared for. Now and then, there appeared a corner-store with stale vegetables for sale and the familiar bar-room attached to it. At one of these shops he paused, drew a coin out of his pocket and asked the shop-keeper for one of the withered oranges lying in the window.

It was a long way and he was old but at last he came in sight of a row of houses at the end of the street. All around and beyond lay the sandhills, white as fields of snow in the blazing sun and shifting with every breath of wind. Scarcely a shadow fell across the wide expanse. Far out where the blue sky bent to meet the curve of the sandhills, a solitary live oak flouted the breeze with its banners of gray moss, but otherwise it lay stretched out lonely, flat, monotonous. The dreary prospect that never changed with changing days fell on the old man like a pall. He hesitated at the door of the farthest house, trying to master some emotion that threatened to overcome him, then he lifted the latch softly and entered.

The door opened directly in the living room where the sick child lay. The bed had been pulled out into the middle of the floor so as to catch the faintest stirring of the breeze. The windows were opened, too, and a faded blue curtain hung at one of them to keep out the glare. The grandmother was moving about aimlessly, putting things to rights in a room bare of comforts but clean and orderly. The two women, who sat near the door talking in low tones, glanced at her with pity. As Owens entered they looked up and he answered the question in his wife's face, with a shake of his head. She understood and her lips quivered but she only turned away and went on with her dusting.

As her grandfather bent over her and laid the orange in the child's hand, she moved uneasily and opened her eyes. A faint, shadowy smile stole into them but the heavy lids closed again in a moment.

The day wore on, the women went home and the man and his wife sat by the bed in silence.

When evening came and the rays of the western sun began to shoot long bars of gold across the room, there was a knock at the door and a lady wearing the cross of a King's Daughter entered. It was the visitor who had spoken to the child in the mill yard some months before. The old people brightened a little when they saw her. She knelt by the bed and looked at the child. One small blue-veined arm lay out on the coverlet, the eyes were closed and the damp yellow curls strayed over her white forehead. The lady smoothed the tumbled hair and watched the shadow that crept across the bed in the track of the sunbeams.

Once or twice the little girl put her hand to her head as if in pain and said, "The noise hurts me so. Won't it never stop?" She was back in the mill with the roar of the engines, the close smell and the heat. She moaned, "I'm so tired, I'm afraid I can't finish my job today an' the boss will be mad," then, "It's so hot an' it's a gettin' dark an' I'm afraid."

The voice died away. For awhile she dozed and woke again. But this time she had escaped from the prison house. Her eyes wandered around the room as if she did not recognize it. Then they fell on the bunch of violets ady wore on her coat, and the look ned into joy when they were laid er pillow. With a sob of perfect oving comprehension she buried ace in their purple sweetness and ed out through the golden light streamed in the window, far away

the noisy mill, the weary days, restless nights, to those happy red fields where the angels do al-behold the face of the Father in en.

MARY LYON'S DEVOTION.

beautiful example of Christlikeand conecration is portrayed in life of Mary Lyon of Mount Holy-Seminary.

ow fittingly was it said of her
"She seemed to stand between upils and God to assist them in ing His will." "Is it accord-o the law of love!" was a quesshe often pressed home to her books. She said at one time, cation, property, time, influence,
ds, children, brothers, and sis-all should be devoted to the object of the advancement of edeemer's Kingdom and the sal-n of men."

few days before her death, she
"There is nothing in the universe
r but that I shall not know all uty, or fail to do it."—The Watch-

RAIN WORK OF A PIANIST.

ite astonishing is the rapidity of ing the brain and nerves in modiano playing. At the conference usicians, in Dublin, it was shown the ordinary player must cultivate eye to see about 1,500 signs per min-the fingers to make about 2,000
ments, and the brain to perceive 500 signs while issuing the 2,000
s.

a part of Chopin's "Etude in E r," the rate of reading must reach signs in two and one-half min-
This is equivalent to about twenx notes per second, and as the eye receive only about ten consecutive essions per second, it appears that ry rapid music the notes must be in groups instead of singly.—
yterian.

SOME DAY OF DAYS.

e day, some day of days, treading
he street
With idle, heedless pace,
Unlooking for such grace,
I shall behold your face—
e day, some day of days, thus may we meet.

hance the sun may shine from skies of May,
Or winter's icy chill
Touch lightly vale and hill;
What matter? I shall thrill ugh every vein with summer on hat day.

more life's perfect youth will all come back,
And for a moment there
I shall stand fresh and fair,
And drop the garment care:
e more my perfect youth shall nothing lack.

ut my eyes now, thinking how twill be,
How, face to face, each soul.
Will slip its long control,
Forget the dismal dole
reary fate's dark separating sea.

glance to glance, and hand to hand in greeting,
The past with all its fears,
Its silence and its tears,
Its lonely yearning years,
l vanish in the moment of that meeting.
izabeth Stuart Phelps, in "Inde-ndent."

LITERARY VALUE OF THE BIBLE.

Where will you find such poetry?
Milton said, "There are no songs like the songs of Zion."

Or such oratory? Daniel Webster said, "If there is ought of eloquence in me, it is because I learned the Scriptures at my mother's knee."

Or such logic? Lord Bacon said,
"There is no philosophy like that of the Scriptures."

Or unity and completeness of beauty and power? Froude said, "The Bible is in and of itself a liberal education."

Or what book or books can compare with it? Sir Walter Scott said, "Bring me the book." "What book?" "There is but one book, the Bible."—A Quiver of Arrows.

HEREDITY.

There is no sin we cannot overcome,
Say not thy evil instinct is inherited,
Or that some trait unborn may make thy whole life forlorn,
And calls down punishment that is not merited.

Back of thy parents and grandparents lies,
The great Eternal Will! that too, is thine,
Inheritance, strong, beautiful, divine,
Sure lever of success for one who tries.

Pry up thy faults with this great lever
Will,
However firmly bedded in propensity
However firmly set, I tell thee firmer
yet,
Is that vast power that comes from
Truth's immensity.

Thou art a part of that strange world,
I say,
It's forces lie within thee, stronger
far,
Than all thy mortal sins and frailties,
and pray.

There is no noble height thou canst
not climb,
All triumphs may be thine in time's futurity,
If whatsoever thy fault thou dost not faint nor halt,
But lean upon the staff of God's security.

Earth has no claim the soul cannot contest,
Know thyself part of the eternal source,
And naught can stand before thy spirit
force,
The soul's divine inheritance is best.
—Author Unknown.

CONSIDER.

Consider
The lilies of the field whose blossom is brief—
We are as they;
Like them we fade away,
As doth a leaf.

Consider
The sparrows of the air of small account:
Our God doth view
Whether they fall or mount—
He guards us too.

Consider
The lilies that do neither spin nor toil,
Yet are most fair—
What profit all this care
And all this toil?

Consider
The birds that have no barn nor harvest-weeks;
God gives them food—
Much more our Father seeks
To do us good.
—Christiana Rossetti.

T. E. HELPER.

She is a woman—one in whom
The springtime of her childish years
Hath never lost its fresh perfume
Though knowing well that life hath room
For many blights and many tears.

Great feelings hath she of her own
Which lesser souls may never know,
God giveth them to her alone,
And sweet they are as any tone,
Wherewith the wind may choose to blow.

Yet in herself she dwelleth not,
Although no home were half so fair,
No simplest duty is forgot,
Life has no dim and lowly spot,
That doth not in her sunshine share.

She doeth little kindnesses
Which most leave undone, or despise
For naught that sets one heart at ease.
And giveth happiness or peace,
Is low esteemed in her eyes.

Blessing she is, God made her so,
And deeds of week-day holiness
Fall from her noiseless as the snow,
For she has never chanced to know
That aught were easier than to bless —James Russell Lowell.

THE LOST SHEEP.

De massa ob de sheep fol—
Dat guard de sheep fol' bin
Look out in de gloomerin' meadows
When de long night rain begin—
So he call de hirelin' shepa'd,
Is my sheep, is dey all come in?

O den says de hirelin' shepa'd,
Dar's some, dey's black and thin,
And some, dey's po' ol' wedda's,
But de res', dey's all brung in,
But de res', dey's all brun in.

Den de massa ob de sheepfol'
Dat guard de sheepfol' bin,
Goes down in de gloomerin' meadows,
Whar de long night rain begin—
So he le' down de bars ob de sheepfol',
Callin' sof: Come in, Come in!
Callin' sof: Come in, Come in!

Den up tro' de gloomerin' meadows,
T'ro' de col' night rain and win',
And up 'tro' de gloomerin' rain paf'
Whar de sleet fa' piercin' thin,
De po' los' sheep ob de sheepfol',
Dey all comes gadderin' in,
De po los' sheep of de sheepfol',
Dey all comes gadderin' in.
—Author Unknown.

Real Estate for Sale at Davidson,
N. C.

For quick sale and easy payments; cash or gilt-edge paper: One neat five-room dwelling, with large brick cellar; good water, stable and garden; on lot 70x270 feet deep; price $1,000.

Also two vacant lots; one 75x285 ft. deep;
one 75 ft. front by 300 feet; price $350 each;
fine investment for health, society and education.

Also one storehouse on lot No 12, North Tryon street, Charlotte, N. C., 24 ft. front by 140 ft. deep; very desirable.

Also celebrated Barium Springs; 18 acres land; 7-room hotel; 3-room cottage; storehouse and barn; five miles Statesville; price
$5,000.

In addition can sell farms and city property more or less throughout South Carolina, all sorts and sizes, with various business opportunities, at money-making prices.

J. EDGAR POAG, Broker,
Rock Hill, S. C.

Marriages.

LONG-THOMPSON.—At Cannonville Presbyterian church, Concord, N. C. by Rev. John Wakefield, on Sept. 9, 1903, Mr. Charles H. Long and Miss Bertha Thompson.

BOYER-LOVING.—In the Baptist church, Childress, Tex., by Rev. A. Muldrow MacLauchlin, pastor of Presbyterian church, August 2, 1903, Mr. J. W. Boyer, of Amerville, Tex., and Miss Ida Lee Loveing, of Childress.

BELLOWS-TAYLOR.—At the home of the bride's mother, in Childress, Tex., Sept. 9, 1903, by Rev. A. Muldrow MacLauchlin, Mr. O. C. Bellows and Miss Lucy F. Taylor, both of Childress.

PRESTON-WILEY.—In the First Presbyterian church, Salisbury, N. C., on Sept. 2, 1903, by Rev. J. Rumble, D. D., assisted by Rev. S. R. Preston, D. D., of Greenville, S. C., Rev. John Fairman Preston and Miss Annie Shannon Wiley, daughter of the late Samuel H. and Mrs. Miriam C. Wiley, of Salisbury, N. C. Mr. and Mrs. Preston are under commission as missionaries of the Presbyterian Church, and will sail for their field of labor in Mokpo, Korea, Oct. 7th, next.

Deaths.

BURWELL.—Died in Charlotte, N. C., August 28th, 1903, on her 19th birthday, Martha W. Burwell, daughter of Mrs. M. W. Burwell and of the late Mr. E. S. Burwell.

MOORE.—J. Lee Moore was born in Burgaw May 7th, 1883, and died in Wilmington March 25th, 1903.

God's ways are often mysterious, but never more so than when he calls from this earth those who seem fitted for doing so much of good in it. Just such a mysterious providence was the death here recorded. Lee was but entering on life, and life seemed to promise so much to him. Gifted in all that stands for success, both in business and in social circles, he had in spite of his youth won such position as is seldom open to one of his years. Yet from it all with its achievement and its promise God took him. Must it not be that over there we "finish what we here began"—must it not be that in the wisdom which knows no waste there is in such case simply a transfer from this world to that where "they serve Him day and night." Lee was not afraid to die—he was a child of the covenant and passed away trusting Him who doeth all things well.

SHEPPARD.—At the home of his father, Dr. James A. Sheppard, Broadway, Moore County, North Carolina, August 25th, 1903, Mr. John A. Sheppard, in the thirtieth year of his age.

Young Sheppard grew up on the farm and was vigorous in health and build, and of a jovial, sunny disposition. This writer remembers him most pleasantly as a student in the Thompson school, Siler City, N. C. He was the soul of honor and a favorite in school. He finished his education with a course in bookkeeping, and was book-keeper for a time for Weddington & Co., of Charlotte, N. C., and went from there to Wilmington to accept a similar position at increased salary. This position he held until he was compelled to give it up on account of declining health.

He was converted and joined Salem Presbyterian church under the preaching of Rev. J. B. Mack, then evangelist of Fayetteville Presbytery, about fifteen years ago. He never forgot his old home church and his yearly remittance for its support did not fail. In the little cemetery hard by the church his body rests. His life was short, but long enough, for God knows the best, and may he teach us all to be submissive, wait and work in full assurance of faith, "that sometime we will understand."

Sorrowfully, his friend,
M. D. McNEILL.

IN MEMORIAM.

DANIEL D. GILLESPIE.

Just nine years and one month, almost to the day, did this beloved father in Israel survive his wife. Of this devoted pair, united now in glory, over both of whom it has been my sad privilege, as pastor, to speak the farewell words, I can think of no truer description than that given by St. Luke of Zacharias and Elizabeth, "They were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless."

Among the sweetest recollections of my first pastorate are my visits to that Godly house, hallowed by daily household worship and brightened by Christian love and cheerfulness and hospitality. Of the Christian character and wisdom of these parents there can be no better proof than this, that all the children as they grew up in that home learned to love and serve their father's and their mother's God.

Born in Guilford County, N. C., on November 10th, 1824, at a spot a mile south of the then little village of Greensboro, Mr. Gillespie came of sturdy Scotch stock, and bore a name famous in the Revolutionary history of North Carolina. He was converted in boyhood. His conversion constituted a distinct and memorable epoch in his life, to which he often referred. He had gone out into the woods on his father's plantation for solitary meditation and prayer. There he surrendered himself to God, and received in his soul the clear and joyful witness of the Spirit that he was accepted in the Beloved.

To the genuineness of that conversion every year of the long life that followed bore beautiful and decisive testimony. To his native industry, cheerfulness, geniality and strong intelligence was added the grace of the Holy Spirit, directing and sanctifying all. He had a remarkable knowledge of God's word. He was unusually gifted in prayer. Energetic and successful in business, he provided things honest in the sight of all men. For nearly four score years he bore in this county and community the white flower of a blameless life, and to his children and grandchildren he has left the heritage and memory of a Godly name and character, more precious than the coronet of kings.

"My boast is not that I derive my birth

From loins enthroned and rulers of the earth;

But higher far my proud pretensions rise,

The child of parents passed into the skies."

When the South Greensboro chapel was erected in the early eighties, Mr. Gillespie was a deeply interested attendant on and helper in its Sunday school and other services. When in October, 1887 it was organized as the Westminster Presbyterian church, he was one of the first members and officers, being transferred by letter from the Buffalo Presbyterian church, of which he had long been a ruling elder, and at once elected an elder of the new church. I esteem it one of the blessings of my life that in those early days of my pastoral inexperience had the benefit of this beloved brother's wise counsel, warm friendship, and fervent prayers.

During recent years, his wife being dead, Mr. Gillespie has lived with and been tenderly cared for by his children, who all reside in Greensboro. Their names are Mrs. Nannie C. Weatherly, Mrs. Carrie G. Yates, Mrs. John L. Thacker, Rev. E. E. Gillespie and Mrs. Lee T. Blair. A beloved sister, Mrs. C. C. Gorrell, also a resident of Greensboro, survives him.

Through nearly the whole of his long life Mr. Gillespie enjoyed excellent health. A few months ago symptoms of physical decline appeared, confining him to his bed for several weeks. These passed away and he resumed his active habits. But on August 15, 1903, at 8 p. m., while sitting in his chair at the house of one of his daughters, in the presence of his loved ones, the end came suddenly, and, therefore happily for one so habitually ready for the summons. He was in his 79th year. He had faithfully served his generation by the will of God. He had been a pillar of the church. He had reared a family to serve God, and a son to preach his glorious gospel. His work was done. And so that Saturday evening as the shadows wrapped the earth, upon his forehead fell the dawning of a grander day, and into the sunshine of a Sinless Land he passed no longer weak with the infirmities of age, but glorious in immortal youth and strength and joy.

O child of God, O glorious heir,
How rich a lot is thine!
A hand almighty to defend,
An ear for every call,
An honored life, a peaceful end,
And heaven to crown it all.
EGBERT W. SMITH.

There's a money of the soul, my boy,
as ye'll find in after years,
It's pennies are the sweat-drops an' it dollars are the tears,
An' love is the redeemin' gold, that measures what they're worth,
An' ye'll git as much in heaven, as ye've given out on earth.
—"Eben Holden."

The Household.

THE REIGN OF THE ROSE.

A door opened and a panful of rubish was thrown into the alley. It contained a tuft of green, feathered parsley, only a little wilted. Two children caught the flash of green at the same time and sprang for it.

"Give it to me; I saw it first!" cried the little girl.

"But I got it first, and it's mine; take it," said the boy; and, sticking the trophy into the buttonhole of his ragged jacket, he strutted away, leaving behind him a very angry and dirty little face, which looked as if its owner was undecided whether to hurl at him opprobrious epithets or sit down and cry.

A woman with a covered basket coming through the alley, had seen the little skirmish, and stopped by the side of the vanquished child. She had a gentle face, and wore a quaint little black bonnet with white ties.

"Do you like flowers? See, here is a pretty one," and, lifting the cover from her basket, she took out a great dewy pink rose, put it into the child's hand and hurried away. Three or four little ragamuffins were on the scene immediately, crying, "Oh, lady, please give me a flower!" but the deaconess had escaped what would soon have been a mob of clamoring children by turning into a side passage and shutting the over behind her. The child held the flower a moment, looking at it stupidly, and then, as faces and voices grew more numerous, and were turning toward her, she suddenly scud down the alley.

"Oh, mother, look! Just look! A lady gave it to me!" She burst into a little, foul-smelling, half-lighted room. The mother, sitting on the edge of a rumpled bed, regarded the rose with a mild interest.

"Ain't it a beauty! Put some water in a dish, Anette, an' set in on the table by the winder so it'll keep fresh." The dish indicated was a broken-cosed pitcher, none too clean, and the rose hung over the edge until only its outer petals and its green calyx were to be seen.

"Say, mother, don't yer think it would look better in the glass?"

"The 'glass,' the only tumbler the establishment contained, was stained with ancient beverages of questionable character, and opakue with the marks of dirty fingers. Anette took it to the hydrant, where she rinsed and polished until it shone, and brought it in clear and dripping. Then, ten minutes were spent strengthening the stem of the rose with a hairpin, that it might stand at a proper angle to display all its beauties.

Never was a fairer rose—pale-tinted, beautifully cupped, crisply curved, sweet-breathed, a dainty thing, looking as much out of place in that miserable dwelling as a golden-haired princess in a coal mine.

"Mother, don't you think the rose would look prettier if they was suthin' white under it—suthin' clean and white?"

The woman looked at it considerately. She was very fat and very dirty. Almost unconsciously she pulled down the baggy folds of her limp calico dress and with both hands smoothed her unkempt hair. Then she touched the rose with a stubby forefinger, as one could lift a baby's chin.

"I'll see if I kin find suthin'."

She went to a broken trunk and began to turn over a heterogeneous collection of old rags. From somewhere near the bottom she produced a damask towel, worn and ragged, but tolerably clean—a relic of better days, perhaps, or included in some collection of old clothes from the charitably inclined. Anette took the towel and spread it on the table, folding it carefully, so that the ragged places were hidden. Exactly in the center of this she placed the rose in its tumbler, where it stood like a queen in its little palace of cleanliness and purity.

One little clean spot! But it acted like a magnet. The woman's eyes turned toward it continually, and as for Anette, she forgot everything else and gave herself up to the worship of the rose.

"Mother, let's wash up the dishes and put away these things on the table. They don't look nice with the rose."

"Good land! What's come over ye?" was the mother's only protest. But the dishes were washed, and the sway of the rose extended over the entire table, which was reduced to a condition of comparative cleanliness and order.

Four days the rose stood in the fullness of its beauty, and each day extended its empire of purity. The room was swept, the window cleaned, and every day Anette washed her face and hands, and made a pretense, at least, of combing her tangled hair.

On the morning of the fifth day, without any sign of drooping or decay, the petals laid go their hold, and lay scattered like pink shells on the white cloth. Anette gathered them up, pressed them and laid them away in a box that she bought of Sadie Jones for a cent.

The room had been cleaner and hearts gentler for those four days, and yet the rose had said nothing. It had only been sweet and pure, and had not held itself aloof from anything.—Miss Mabel Horton, in the Sunday School Advocate.

The Worth Co.

SUCCESSORS TO WORTH & WORTH,

Wholesale Grocers and Commission Merchants

HANDLE—COTTON AND NAVAL STORES.

SELL—GENERAL GROCERIES, FARM SUPPLIES, LIME, CEMENT, NAILS, HAY AND GRAIN.

Best Terms and Lowest Prices.

WILMINGTON N C.

ORGANIZED 1832.

THE Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $800,000.

Agencies in every Town and County.

WM. H. PALMER W. H. MCCARTHY, PRESIDENT. SEC'Y

F. K. ELLINGTON, GENERAL AGENT. RALEIGH, N. C.

E. NYE HUTCHISON, Agent THOS. H. HAUGHTON, " Charlotte, N. C.

Carolina and Northwestern Railway.

TIME CARD.

BLOWING ROCK ROUTE.

Effective November 24th, 1901.

NORTHBOUND	PASSENGER	MIXED
Chester, Leave	8 25 am	8 50 am
Yorkville, "	7 30 am	10 48 am
Gastonia, "	9 05 am	1 20 pm
Lincolnton, "	10 09 am	2 55 pm
Newton, "	10 54 pm	4 48 pm
Hickory, "	11 16 pm	5 50 pm
Cliffs, "	11 50 pm	6 35 pm
Lenoir, Arrive	12 35 pm	8 00 pm
SOUTHBOUND	PASSENGER	MIXED
Lenoir, Leave	2 10 pm	5 30 pm
Cliffs, "	2 54 pm	7 20 pm
Hickory, "	3 12 pm	8 10 pm
Newton, "	3 37 pm	8 45 am
Lincolnton, "	4 23 pm	10 09 am
Gastonia, "	5 27 pm	1 20 pm
Yorkville, "	6 32 pm	3 18 pm
Chester, Arrive	7 45 pm	5 20 pm

Aberdeen & Ashboro Railway Co.

CONNECTIONS FOR JACKSON SPRINGS.

Lv Aberdeen 7:30 A M	Ar. Jackson Spgs. 8:10 A M
" " 9:40 " " " " 10:30 " "	" " " " " " " " " " " "
" " 6:40 P M	" " 7:30 P M
High Point 2:05 P M	" " 5:15 P M

H. A. PAGE, Aberdeen, N. C.

Agnes Scott Institute

FOR YOUNG LADIES.

DECATUR, (Six miles from Atlanta) GEORGIA.

Beautiful grounds. Modern buildings and equipment. Equable climate. Unsurpassed health record. Graduate, College Preparatory, and Special Courses. Certification to Eastern Colleges. For catalogue address

F. H. GAINES, D. D., President, Box X

SEABOARD

AIR LINE RAILWAY.

In Effect November 23rd, 1902

Vestibuled Limited Trains.

DOUBLE DAILY SERVICE Between New York

Tampa, Atlanta, New Orleans and points

SOUTH and WEST.

SOUTHWARD.

	Daily No. 31.	Daily No. 27.
Lv New York, P. R. R.....	12 55 p m	12 10 a m
Lv Philadelphia, " "	3 29 p m	7 20 a m
Lv Baltimore, " "	5 45 p m	9 34 a m
Lv Washington, W. S. Ry..	7 00 p m	10 41 a m
Lv Richmond, S. A. L. Ry..	10 37 p m	2 15 p m
Lv Petersburg, " "	11 20 p m	2 58 p m
Lv Norlina, " "	1 55 a m	5 18 p m
Lv Henderson, " "	2 28 a m	5 41 p m
Lv Raleigh, " "	4 15 a m	6 58 p m
Lv Southern Pines " "	6 16 a m	8 50 p m
Lv Hamlet, " "	7 35 a m
Lv Columbia, † " "	10 25 a m	12 20 a m
Ar Savannah, " "	2 35 p m	4 55 a m
Ar Jacksonville, " "	7 00 p m	9 15 a m
Ar Tampa, " "	6 45 a m	6 00 p m
	No. 33.	No. 41.
Lv New York, N. Y. P. & N.	† 7 55 a m	8 55 p m
Lv Philadelphia, " "	10 16 a m	11 21 p m
Lv New York, O. D. S. S. Co.	† 3 00 p m
Lv Baltimore, B. S. P. Co.		† 6 30 p m
Lv Wash'ton, N. & W. S. B.		9 0 p m
Lv Portsmouth, S. A. L. Ry	9 05 p m	9 25 a m
Lv Weldon, " "	11 45 p m	11 55 a m
Lv Norlina, " "	1 55 a m	1 35 p m
Lv Henderson, " "	2 28 a m	2 02 p m
Lv Raleigh, " "	4 15 a m	3 45 p m
Lv Southern Pines " "	6 16 a m	6 18 p m
Lv Hamlet, " "	7 40 a m	9 45 p m
Lv Wilmington " "		3 20 p m
Ar Charlotte, " "	10 33 a m	10 32 p m
Lv Chester, " "	10 30 a m	12 5 a m
Lv Greenwood, " "	12 37 p m	3 25 a m
Lv Athens, " "	2 52 p m	5 58 a m
Ar Atlanta, † " "	4 00 p m	7 35 a m
Ar Augusta, C. & W. C. ....	5 40 p m
Ar Macon, C of Ga.....	7 20 p m	11 35 a m
Ar Montgomery, A. & W. P.	9 20 p m	6 25 p m
Ar Mobile, L. & N.....	2 55 a m
Ar New Orleans, L. & N.....	7 25 a m
Ar Nashville, N. C. & St. L.	1 30 a m	6 55 p m
Ar Memphis.....	4 15 p m	8 20 a m

NORTHWARD.

	Daily No. 32.	Daily No. 38.
Lv Memphis, N C & St L.....	12 45 n' n	8 00 p m
Lv Nashville, " "	9 30 p m	9 30 a m
Lv New Orleans, L & N.....	8 10 p m
Lv Mobile, " "	12 40 a m
Lv Montgomery, A & W P..	6 45 a m	1 00 p m
Lv Macon, C of Ga.....	8 00 a m	4 20 p m
Lv Augusta, C & W C.....	10 05 a m
Lv Atlanta, † S A L Ry.....	12 00 n' n	8 00 p m
Ar Athens, " "	2 57 p m	11 23 p m
Ar Greenwood, " "	5 15 p m	1 58 a m
Ar Chester, " "	7 17 p m	4 15 a m
Lv Charlotte, " "	7 27 p m	5 01 a m
Lv Wilmington " "	3 20 p m
Lv Hamlet, " "	10 40 p m	7 50 a m
Lv Southern Pines " "	11 33 p m	8 44 a m
Lv Raleigh, " "	1 35 a m	11 15 a m
Lv Henderson, " "	3 05 a m	12 50 p m
Lv Norlina, " "	3 50 a m	1 45 p m
Lv Weldon, " "	5 00 a m	3 00 p m
Ar Portsmouth, " "	7 15 a m	5 35 p m
Ar Washington, N & W S B		6 55 a m
Ar Baltimore, B S P Co.....		† 6 30 a m
Ar New York, O D S S Co.....		† 5 00 p m
Ar Philadelphia, N Y P & N	† 5 46 p m	5 10 a m
Ar New York, " "	8 15 p m	8 00 a m
	No. 34.	No. 46.
Lv Tampa, S A L Ry.....	8 00 p m	8 00 p m
Lv Jacksonville, " "	9 30 a m	7 50 a m
Lv Savannah, " "	1 40 p m	12 10 p m
Lv Columbia, † " "	7 05 p m	5 30 a m
Lv Hamlet, " "	10 40 p m	8 40 a m
Lv Southern Pines " "	11 33 p m	9 36 a m
Lv Raleigh, " "	1 35 a m	11 50 a m
Lv Henderson, " "	3 05 a m	1 10 p m
Lv Norlina, " "	3 45 a m	1 55 p m
Lv Petersburg, " "	5 58 a m	4 07 p m
Ar Richmond, " "	6 35 a m	4 55 p m
Ar Washington, W S Ry....	10 10 a m	8 98 p m
Ar Baltimore, P R R.....	11 25 a m	11 25 p m
Ar Philadelphia, P R R.....	1 36 p m	2 56 a m
Ar New York, P R R.....	4 13 p m	6 30 a m

R. M. COFFEY, C. T. A., Charlotte, N. C.

Our Young People.

Elizabeth's First Test

"Bettie! Bettie Comstock! You come right back here immediately. Mother said,—” but the white sunbonnet bobbed serenely along over the knoll and out of sight without pausing. Perhaps she had not heard, but Elizabeth felt morally certain that she had. She climbed up on the horse block, however, and called again with all the vigor of her fresh young voice, but Bettie did not turn back. She was subject to spells of deafness—on occasions, and this was clearly an “occasion.”

“Oh dear! It is nearly eight o'clock now and there are the dishes not washed. Bettie is so provoking. Well, I've just got to go, that's all. It won't do to be a moment late if the dishes are not washed today. Bettie knew I wouldn't have time to do them.”

It was an important day for Elizabeth. The school examiners were to meet at the little red schoolhouse and examine applicants for teachers and Elizabeth was going to be examined. She had thought about it all winter and had worked with that end in view. She had reviewed all the studies mentioned in the manual and had studied early and late. It had been uphill work, taking care of her mother who had been ill with rheumatism, and doing the work with only Bettie's help, but she had persevered. Now, however, her mother was nearly well and would soon be home, so she wrote from Sulphur Springs, and Elizabeth felt that she could be spared to go out into the world as a worker, and make a place for herself, if she should prove competent.

It was her first test and she meant to come out of it with honors. She had sat up late the night before trying to fix the most important of late current events in her mind in the order of their happening. She had heard that this was very necessary and furnished an abundance of “catch questions,” but she did not mean that they should catch her napping. She had a list of the most notable in her pocket, which she had compiled, and which she took out to look over occasionally. Not that she meant to use it unfairly, but because it gave her a sense of security to know that it was in her pocket. She had wanted to feel calm and collected today and here she was, all of a tremble with Bettie's conduct and all. And Bettie had made such promises when mother went away, too; but Bettie's promises were like piecrust. Mother knew her shortcomings and had counseled patience, but she had no time to exercise patience today.

She gave one despairing look about the untidy kitchen. Of course Betty would come home sometime in the middle of the forenoon, and probably she would wash the dishes—if she felt like it. It was such a mercy that father was working over on the other place and had taken his dinner, she thought as she shut the kitchen door and went upstairs to get ready.

Her freshly done-up lawn dress had a calming effect and her blue tie was especially becoming. She regarded the general effect of her costume with satisfaction as she pinned on her hat and ran down to let out the little turkeys. Mother was always particular not to have them let out until after the dew was off and she always had them put under shelter in case of a shower. It looked some like rain today. If only Betty could be depended on to attend to anything. She knew just how hurried she, Elizabeth, would be, and yet she had shirked everything and gone—somewhere. Nobody ever knew her to do such a thing in her life. She felt a sense of her own superiority as she went over her grievances.

It was just nine o'clock when she walked into the schoolhouse breathless and hurried. There were nine applicants present. Elizabeth took a seat by herself just ahead of a red-haired girl with freckles, a stranger whom she had never seen before. She wore a bow of brilliant orange ribbon and calf skin shoes. This inventory had impressed itself upon Elizabeth's consciousness during her hasty walk up the aisle. The girl's name was Bedellah Dobbs, so she found when she wrote her name in the register. Mr. Ellis, one of the board of examiners, was present and distributed the papers on Arithmetic, and Elizabeth took hers and read it over. It did not seem difficult at first sight. The first proposition was a problem in percentage. Percentage was Elizabeth's strong point and she finished it in good time to her satisfaction. Once she started and looked around with the impression that someone had whispered to her, but everyone was busy with their work. They were not allowed to communicate.

Presently she heard it again—a low sibilant whisper. It seemed to come from the seat behind her, and Elizabeth discovered presently that the girl with red hair was reasoning out her problems audibly, after the fashion of children. It was very annoying but she found herself listening intently to catch her words. “Extract the square root of the difference between the squares of the hypotenuse and given sides to find the other side,” she buzzed, her pen moving rapidly over the paper.

Mr. Ellis looked up sharply. “No communicating if you please, young ladies,” he said.

Elizabeth blushed consciously and moved to the farther end of the seat, but the girl only looked up wonderingly for a moment and then resumed her work and her mumbling. It was evidently a habit. Perhaps she had been compelled to study at home among a lot of children where only a steadfast, fixed purpose had made it possible for her to study. Elizabeth could imagine her surroundings; disorderly, noisy, distracting. Probably it had been only by this method of impressing the subject matter upon her mind through the channel of both eyes and ears that she had been able to succeed. Even the bow of orange ribbon grew pathetically interesting in this light. Elizabeth was given to romancing. It was only by the utmost effort that she could concentrate her mind on her work. She found herself listening whether she would or no, especially when she encountered a difficult proposition. The stranger hit them all at her tongue's end. Several times Elizabeth was on the point of exchanging her seat for one more distant but she did not do it.

The examination in history was more than usually difficult; so old teacher asserted after it was over. Certainly it was hard for Elizabeth, or it would have been without Bedellah. Owing to the proximity all Elizabeth had to do was to listen—and write. Bedellah was well informed. Wherever she received her education it was thorough. Elizabeth handed in her paper with burning cheeks. She felt the enormity of her conduct, but she tried to console herself with the thought that it was not her fault. She could not help hearing.

At noon she went home to dinner. Bedellah Dobbs had taken a new tin pail from the entry and sat composedly down to eat her dinner of bread, butter and pickles from it. Elizabeth longed to ask her to come home and have dinner with her, but something seemed to make it impossible. Perhaps it was her uncertainty in regard to Bettie's having washed the morning dishes, but it seemed more like a sense of treachery.

Bettie was just throwing out the dish water as Elizabeth came in at the gate. She looked up with an expression of assumed innocence. Evidently she expected reprimand and punishment, but she did not get either. Elizabeth went silently about getting the dinner ready. A sense of compunction made Bettie more than usually helpful. “Poor Elizabeth! It was mean of her to go off after field lilies when Elizabeth was in such a hurry. Supposing she should fail? Bettie set the table and brought her bunch of lilies to decorate it, but Elizabeth did not notice. She made a great show of alacrity and set about clearing up the table after dinner without waiting to be told; an unusual proceeding for Bettie, but that too went unnoticed. Bettie watched her solitiously as she started for the schoolhouse again. It gave her an uncomfortable feeling to see Elizabeth silent and subdued.

The room had been called to order when Elizabeth got back. Bedellah Dobbs looked up and nodded cordially. It seemed impossible in the face of the friendly recognition to take her belongings and go to another desk. She sat down and picked up the list of questions on Physiology. The first few were easy enough. She shut her ears resolutely to all sounds and wrote rapidly. The last one was complicated: “Name the muscles of the head, the trunk, the neck, the upper limb and the lower limb in the order and state their uses.” She regarded it with dismay. Physiology had been her hardest study. It was distasteful also. She felt an instinctive shrinking from a searching analysis of the human body. Elizabeth would never make a physician. She tried to recall the muscles of the head in their order. “Occipitalis, moves the scalp and eyebrow. Orbicularis, closes the eye.” The paused and nibbled her pen thoughtfully. Bedellah Dobbs was nibbling her pen; then she dipped it into the ink and began to repeat each word in a distinct whisper. "The Recti, four muscles, move the eyeball, Temporal and Sphenoidal, raise the lower jaw." Elizabeth was writing too now, rapidly lest she lose a word. "Platysma Myoroides, the Pastoid," her pen followed Bedellah's to the end of the long column. She finished the rest of the topics as in a flash. They were not difficult, but her sentences were the sentences of Bedellah Dobbs.

The papers were all in at six o'clock and the class was dismissed. Elizabeth left her seat until they had all passed and then she went into the entry for her hat. "How did you get along?" she asked with friendly interest. "As well as anything, wasn't it? I have been dreading it for weeks but I didn't if I had only known."

Elizabeth's murmured reply was unintelligible in the interruption of Mr. Dobbs' entrance.

"Miss Dobbs, I would like to see you sometime, if you please," he said and Bedellah went back into the schoolroom.

Mr. Ellis took up two papers and added them to her. "Which of these yours?" he asked. Bedellah promptly took out her own.

"This, then, is Miss Comstock's," he said. "You will see that the answers are the same, word for word," he added. Bedellah compared them thoughtfully.

"Yes, I see they are," she said.

"You sat directly behind Miss Comstock, did you not?" he said significantly. Bedellah looked at him a moment hesitatingly, then she colored up.

"Do you mean that I copied Miss Comstock's papers?" she asked indignantly. "I am not insinuating anything. It would be impossible for two persons to answer every question exactly alike without copying; unless there was some communication between you. Either fact would be a matter of papers from the examination."

"What's that you're saying, Ellis?" Bedellah had come in through the boy's doorway in time to hear Mr. Ellis' last remark. He had driven over after Bedellah.

Mr. Ellis turned. "I was just asking Miss Bedellah to explain, if she could, why her answers came to be worded exactly like those of Miss Comstock who was just ahead of her."

"Kind a' hintin' that my girl has been cheatin' eh? She don't have to cheat at none, Ellis. Why she knows every figur' of the whole 'rithmetic from the g'ogarithm and she's got the g'ography and the grammar right at her tongue's end. You can't stick her nowhere's Sander's spellin' book, either." Mr. Dobbs was growing excited.

Every word was distinctly audible to Elizabeth, who stood with clasped hands outside the entry door. She turned pale, then cold. Finally she took off her hat resolutely and hung it up and went back into the schoolroom. She walked directly up to Mr. Ellis. "It was I who copied, Mr. Ellis," she said. Her face was pale and she was trembling.

"You!" he said incredulously. "Yes, I. Those answers are all Bedellah's."

"I don't see how—" began Mr. Ellis. "Did you ask her assistance?"

Elizabeth shook her head. "No, I did not ask, but I accepted it just the same." Her voice shook perceptibly.

Bedellah's face brightened. "I know how it happened now. I was to blame after all," she said impulsively, turning to Elizabeth. "I must have made such a buzzing right behind you that you couldn't think of anything else. Wasn't that it?"

"I'm afraid I didn't try very hard," she said.

Bedellah turned to Mr. Ellis. "I have got into a bad habit of studying audibly at home and I must have forgotten myself. I know it must have been very confusing to Miss Comstock," she explained.

He looked puzzled. "Did you understand the questions?" he asked Elizabeth.

"Yes, most of them. There are some which I'm afraid I would have failed on, if it had not been for Miss Dobbs," she told him.

"Would you like to go over them again tomorrow?" he asked.

"Yes, give her another chance, Ellis. I told Bedellah her everlasting whisserin' would get her into trouble some time. It drives me clear distracted," Mr. Dobbs declared severely, regarding Elizabeth with compassion.

"I think not," she said.

"There is another examination in August. You will try again, will you not? I feel certain you will succeed," urged Mr. Ellis.

"Yes, do. I feel as though it was all my fault," urged Bedellah anxiously. "You will, won't you?"

Could she? It seemed as if she could never surmount this humiliation. Out of the tumult of her mind a "memory gem" which she had learned long ago came forth, clear and distinct:

"We rise by the things that are under our feet,

By what we have mastered of good or gain;

By the pride deposed and the passion slain,

And the vanquished ills that we hourly meet."

"Yes, I will," she said resolutely.

Bedellah followed her out. "I wanted to tell you—I think you are the bravest girl I ever saw. I never could have said what you did," she told Elizabeth.

"Oh yes you could if you had done what I did. You couldn't have heard any one accused unjustly, I am sure.

"I don't know. I believe I could—but I never will now," she added fervently.

Supper was all ready when Elizabeth got home. The little turkeys had been driven in and shut up for the night and Bettie was waiting for her at the gate. "Did you pass?" she asked with beaming candor.

Elizabeth shook her head.

"Oh dear! It was all my fault I

Just a second, please—

To tell YOU that

Painkiller

(PERRY DAVIS)

is an infallible cure for Cramps, Colic and all Stomach Complaints.

For 25c.—a large bottle

Fruit Jar Wrenches

Have you ever seen the "Tobax" Fruit Jar Wrench? It will open the tightest fruit jar and will also put the cap on very tight.

We are offering them at 10c. each,

and you will say it is the best article in your kitchen.

Send ten cents and two stamps for postage.

WEDDINGTON HARDWARE CO

Atlantic & N. C. R. R.

Time table in effect November 19, 1902.

Eastbound Trains.	Passenger	Passenger
	Daily	aily
Leave Goldsboro.....	3:30 p m	8:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	4:22 p m	8:48 a m
Leave New Bern.....	5:50 p m	10:10 a m
Arrive Morehead City.....	7:15 p m

Westbound Trains.	Passenger	Passenger
	Daily.	Daily
Leave Morehead City.....	7:05 a m
Leave New Bern.....	9:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	10:12 a m
Arrive Goldsboro.....	11:15 a m

ELECTRIC LIGHTED TRAINS

Are operated by the

Between

TEXAS

And the

North and East

Between

BIRMINGHAM, MEMPHIS,

And the

North and West

Between

OKLAHOMA

And the

North and East

Observation cars, under the management of the Frisco System. Equipment of the latest design.

know. "It's just as mother said! 'there ain't any dependence in me,'" wailed Bettie.

"You ain't the only one that hasn't any dependence in them, Bettie," whispered Elizabeth, kissing Bettie's cheek.

"Ain't you going to teach school, truly?" asked Bettie in a puzzled tone. Elizabeth's subdued manner impressed her.

"Not yet, dear."

"Was it because of me?" persisted Bettie.

"No, it was because of me," Elizabeth told her.

Bettie breathed a sigh of relief.

"I'm so glad I ain't the only one," she said.—The Interior.

On Standing Still.

If I were asked what thing, above all others, one must know how to do in order to get acquainted with the wild wood folk, I should answer, Learn to stand still. One night last summer I got home rather late from a drive. I had left several cocks of hay spread out in the little meadow, and after supper, though it was already pretty damp, I took the fork, went down, and cocked it up. Returning, I climbed by a narrow path through some pines, and came out into my pasture. It was a bright moonlight night, and leaning back upon the short-handled fork, I stopped in the shadows of the pines to look out over the softly lighted field.

Off in the woods, a mile away, I heard the deep but mellow tones of two fox hounds. Day and night all summer long I had heard them, and all summer long I had hurried, now here, now there, hoping, hoping for a glimpse of the fox. But he always heard me and turned aside. The sound of the dogs was really musical. They were now crossing an open stretch leading down to the meadow behind me. As I leaned listening I heard a low, uneasy murmuring from a covey of quail sleeping in the brush beside the bath, and before I had time to ask what it meant a fox trotted up the path behind me, and stopped in the edge of the shadows directly at my feet.

I did not move a muscle. He sniffed at my dew-wet boots, backed away, and looked me over curiously. I could have touched him. Then he sat down, with just his silver-tipped brush in the silver moonlight to study me in earnest.

The deep baying of the hounds was coming nearer. How often I had heard it, and how often exclaimed, "Poor little fox!" But here sat poor little fox, calmly wondering what kind of a stump he had run up against this time.

I could only dimly see his eyes, but his whole body said: "I can't make it out, for it doesn't move. But if it doesn't move I'm not afraid." Then he trotted to this side and to that for a better wind, half afraid, yet very curious.

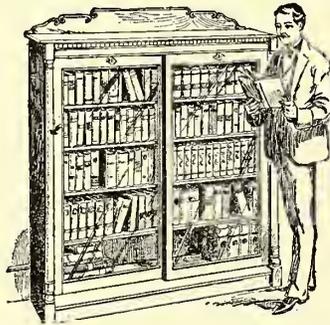

But his time was up. The dogs were yelping across the meadow on his warm trail. Giving me a last unsatisfied look, he dropped down the path directly toward the hounds, and sprang lightly off into the brush.

A Perfect Laxative is one which is palatable, pleasant to take and can be relied upon to act gently, but thoroughly; cleansing the tire system of all impurities. Such a remedy is Mozley's Lemon Elixir. It is a pleasant lemon tonic, acceptable to the most delicate stomach, and a thoroughly effective laxative, acting upon the bowels, liver and kidneys, without the slightest unpleasantness. Mozley's Lemon Elixir. MOZLEY'S LEMON HOT DROPS are without an equal for coughs, colds, sore throat and bronchitis. Sold by all druggists.

E. M. ANDREWS

The Old Reliable
Furniture Dealer

Headquarters Greensboro, N. C.

Three large stores in one. We are now well prepared to furnish your home at a great saving to you. Our profit saved in the buying (five stores all). Try a

Royal Felt Mattress

They are the best. If desired, a month's trial free will be given. Feathers taken in exchange. Make your wants known by mail and our representative will call on you. Photographs and prices sent on application.

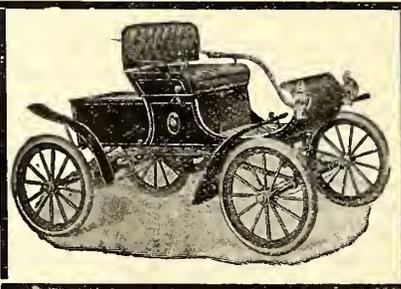

E. M. ANDREWS, 315, 317, 319 South Elm Street.
Pianos, Organs, Carpets, Matting.

Fall, 1903, Styles STETSON HATS.

We announce to the great army of men who come here for their headwear that our hat department now contains the new shapes as designed and made by Stetson, the world's greatest hat manufacturer. Stetson's hats are not only noted for style and beauty, but the wear—the long wear that one gets—is a feature of the Stetson that has made it the foremost hat for the price in America.

Also the "Miller" hat for the new season is ready for your inspection. With these two famous hats, and other lines, we are now ready to begin with much activity our campaign of hat-selling for fall service.

Ed. W. Mellon Co.

Oldsmobiles

BEGINNING AUGUST 1st, we can make deliveries in 10 days or less, and the price, with wood

wheels F. O. B. Detroit, will be.....$650.00

Osmond L. Barringer

Distributing Agent

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA

The din of their own voices must have opened the dogs, or they would have heard him. Round and round they circled, giving the fox ample time for the study of another "stump" before they discovered that he had doubled down the path, and still longer time before they came across the wide scentless space of his late jump, and once more fastened upon his trail.—St. Nicholas.

Chinese Etiquette

When a Chinaman takes his little boy to school to introduce him to his teacher, it is done this way, according to one missionary writer: When the Chinaman arrives at the school he is escorted to the reception room, and both he and the teacher shake their own hands and bow profoundly. Then the teacher asks, "What is your honorable name?" "My mean, insignificant name is so-and-so." Tea and a pipe are sent for, and the teacher says, "Please use tea." The Chinaman sips and puffs for a quarter of an hour before he says to the teacher, "What is your honorable name?" "My mean, insignificant name is so-and-so." "What is your honorable kingdom?" "The small, petty district from which I come is the United States of America." This comes hard, but etiquette requires the teacher to say it. "How many little stems have you planted?" This means, "How old are you?" "I have vainly spent thirty years." "Is the honorable and great man of the household living?" He is asking after the teacher's father. "The old man is well." "How many precious little ones have you?" "I have two little dogs." These are the teacher's own children. "How many children have you in your illustrious institution?" "I have a hundred little brothers." Then the Chinaman comes to business. "Venerable master," he says, "I have brought my little dog here, and worshipfully intrust him to your charge." The little fellow, who had been standing in the corner of the room, comes forward at this, kneels before the teacher, puts his hands on the floor and knocks his head against it. The teacher raises him up and sends him off to school, while arrangements are being made for his sleeping room and so forth. At last the Chinese gentleman rises to take his leave, saying, "I have tormented you exceedingly today; to which the teacher responds, "Oh, no; I have dishonored you." As he goes toward the door he says, "I am gone, I am gone." Etiquette requires the teacher to repeat, as long as he is in hearing, "Go slowly, go slowly."—Exchange.

A WONDERFUL MEDICINE.

If you read the Presbyterian Standard you know about Drake's Palmetto Wine for the Stomach, Flatulency, and Constipation. We continually praise it, as hundreds of our readers do. Any reader of this can have a trial bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine free by sending a letter or postal card to Drake Formula Company, Lake and Dearborn Streets, Chicago, Ill.

One dose a day of this tonic, laxative Palmetto medicine gives immediate relief, and often cures in a few days. Drake's Palmetto Wine is a wonder worker for the Blood and Liver and Kidneys.

Seventy-five cents at Drug Stores for a large bottle, usual dollar size, but a trial bottle will be sent free and prepaid to every reader of the Presbyterian Standard who writes for it.

Wire Railing and Ornamental Wire Works.

DUFUR & CO.,

511 N. Howard Street,

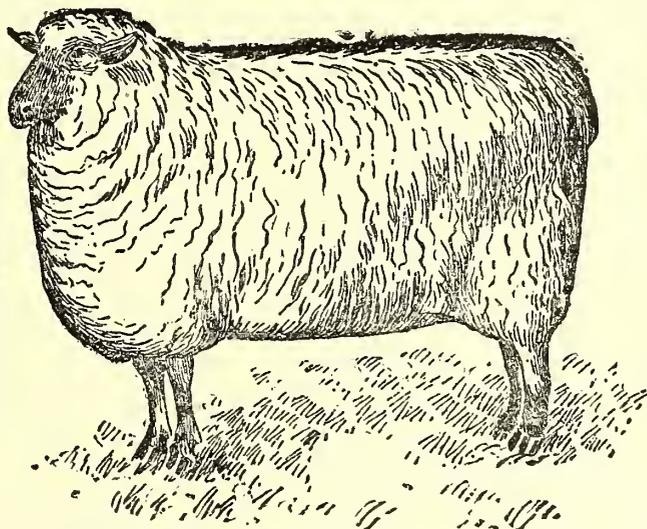

Baltimore, Md

Manufacture Wire Railing for Cemeteries, Balconies, etc. Sieves, Fenders, Cag Sand and Coal Screens Woven Wire, Also Iron Bedsteads, Chairs Settees, etc.

WOOL

Ship Direct to the Manufacturer and Save Dealers' Profits.

They pay freight on the wool and guarantee satisfaction.

In exchange for goods they pay 25 cents per pound for unwashed and 35 cents per pound for washed wool.

If you have wool to sell for cash, exchange for goods, or to be manufactured, ship it to CHATHAM MFG. CO., ELKIN, N. C., and you will not regret it.

NOTABLE NEW BOOKS.

A limited number of advanced subscriptions will be accepted at Special Prices for following new books to be issued on or before September 1, 1903.

Life and Letters of ROBERT LEWIS DABNEY, D. D. LL. D.

By THOMAS CAREY JOHNSON, D. D. LL. D. Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity Union Theological Seminary, Richmond Va. A notably interesting book about one of the most remarkable men the South has produced. Interesting alike to historical students of social, political, and industrial conditions of the South, to Southern Veteran and Statesmen, to students of Theology and Philosophy, and to those who wish to be fully informed about the history and development of the Southern Presbyterian Church. 600 Pages. Cloth Binding, Regular Price $2.50 Net (add 18c for Postage.) To Advance Subscribers $2.00 Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

"APOLOGETICS,"

Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D., LL.D. Prof. of Systematic Theology Louisville Seminary. Introduction by B. B. WARFIELD, D. D., LL. D., of Princeton Theological Seminary. A clear, systematic statement of the great fundamental truths of the Christian faith. Adopted as a text book in some of the best Seminaries of the country. 180 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $2.50 Net; Sheep, $3.00 Net [add 18c. Postage]. To advance subscribers, cloth $2.00; sheep, $2.50 postpaid. Limit 500 copies.

PIONEERING IN AFRICA.

By Rev SAMUEL PHILLIPS VERNER, A. B., for six years a Missionary of the Southern Presbyterian Church on the Congo. This book is out of the usual order, and is at once scientific, historical, critical and religious. A notable contribution to the literature about a great continent which is coming more into view every year. Illustrated with original photographs and maps not hitherto published. 450 Pages. Cloth. Regular Price $2.00 Net [add 15c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.75 Net Postpaid, Limit 500 Copies.

Christianity and Modern Evolution.

By Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D. The remarkably original and forcible course of lectures delivered in Louisville, Ky., before very large and highly edified audiences have been revised, and are now presented in an attractive form for the benefit of a larger public. 250 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth. $1.25 Net [add 10c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.00 net Postpaid. Limit 300 Copies

A complete list of our publications sent on request. Any book in print furnished on short notice. Write us about your wants.

PRESBYTERIAN COMMITTEE OF PUBLICATION, Richmond, Va.

CLARKTON MALE INSTITUTE.

A MILITARY SCHOOL,

(UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE PRESBYTERY OF WILMINGTON).

Prepares Boys for college and for life. Board $8 per month. Tuition $27 for nine months. Write for catalog.

R. C. DEAL, Principal,

J. J. HUTSON, Commandant.

Our Little Folks.

A Burglar In Bed-Room Slippers.

By Sarah Dickson Lowrie.

Fatty Hellows was not her real name, though she often mourned it as if it were. She had been christened Harriet and her family name was Fellows. Harriet Fellows—or even Hattie Fellows was not without meaning—but Fatty Hellows! Still that is what she was called, and generally Little Fatty Hellows into the bargain. Everybody liked to play with her, she was so fair and worked so hard and conscientiously over things. You never heard little Fatty Hellows say she wouldn't play, or it wasn't fair, or that she was tired. To be sure, she never could be got to care for games where imagination had much part—Knights or Highland Chiefs, or even "Let's pretend it's winter and wake up and find it's summer," but she was good for indefinite "Kick the wicket" or "Stilly Pond no-more—Moving."

She had one or two ambitions which the other children regarded as impossible of fulfilment in her case. One was that her hair should be long and curly. Now as little Fatty Hellows' yellow strands of hair, under the most careful expansion, could only be got to cover her head; and the wisp she called her plait might have looked meager on a doll, it seemed as if she had been over ambitions in her desire for it. Her other aspiration was to take "dares" unflinchingly. Her older sister Caroline both gave and took dares, with the result that there was scarce a pebble on the rectory grounds which did not mark the scene of a tragedy.

Caroline's constant accidents and daily tumbings from lofty places whither she had repaired to frighten the life out of Fatty, were constant sources of troubled admiration to her younger sister. For Caroline had not only fallen from trees, hay-mows, barn-roofs, walls, high fences, out of wagons, and into ponds innumerable, but she had the imagination and masterfulness to make all disasters appear like crowning acts of peerless bravery on her part. Fatty felt half apologetic, half bewildered at the tameness of her daily walk, and sought with troubled helplessness to belie her reputation for being the steady child of the family. Whether Caroline divined her discontent and so fostered it, or whether it just happened so, it would be hard to say, but at all events Little Fatty Hellows one eventful night took her family by surprise and played to a successful finish the wholly foreign part of a very mischievous, audacious little girl, frightening all in the house, except Caroline, who was reduced to the part of second for once, within an inch of their lives.

The church and rectory of St. Matthias were in the country, so far from town that one had to drive a good five miles to market and most other things, except woods and wheat-fields and frame houses. Of the latter there were plenty scattered all about, within plain sight of the rectory windows. As for meadows—as the children's great-aunt once remarked—there were enough meadows in the countryside to allow of endless variety. "For," said she, "if you grow tired of playing in one meadow you can climb the fence into the next, and so on all day, until you arrive in the next county."

Now all this free expanse of green had its advantages, no doubt, but the rector's wife could have told another tale, for cooks and housemaids and nurses have their feelings, and the fact that there was plenty of pure air to breathe did not make the evenings cheerful, nor the danger of spooks from the church yard any less horrifying. So when their mistress went away for a day or two she always did so with fear and trembling, for she was never quite sure what the state of affairs would be on her return.

This time she was more than usually worried, because the fears of Mary McCann, the cook, and Alberta, the waitress, not to mention big Annie or little Annie, the maids, that the house would be robbed and they murdered, in their beds, seemed not without a glimmer of foundation. There had been several robberies among the neighboring farm houses and more than one chicken had been spirited away from more than one poultry yard. Moreover, Caroline, who was always unfortunate in the timing of her information, had reported at the breakfast table that on the previous night she had watched some dark figures walking about the lawn. Although the rector's wife regretted the necessity which took the rector and herself away from home at the same time, and to relieve the situation she sent for a friend of the family to come and stay with the children and generally act as a pacifier in case of a catastrophe among the domestics.

She also left strict directions with the coachman to be on the lookout at night and sleep with the window towards the rectory open, so that in case he was needed he could be easily roused by calls from the back of the house.

It was warm summer weather and the little girls and the friend of the family—Miss McIlvaine by name—proceeded to enjoy themselves as best became their ages and temperaments. Miss McIlvaine read a book on "Nature," in the cool of a very thin dressing sacque, upon the veranda, eating cherries the while. Caroline had a feeling for gardening and put it to Fatty as a matter of conscience to follow in her whim. So Fatty weeded where Caroline marked stints for her in their garden, and Caroline raked vigorously in her wake.

While they worked, Caroline goaded Fatty with the fact that she always "gave things away" to the grown-ups.

Their older brother John, whom the children regarded as almost too bad to go to heaven, had fitted up a spectre in the cook's room, which he had fondly hoped would turn Mary McCann's hair white, and Fatty had been found at the crucial moment holding Mary McCann's hand and begging her not to be scared.

"You spoil everybody's fun in making up jokes, you're so tender-hearted," Caroline had ended.

"I'm not tender-hearted!" said little Fattie Hellows.

"Yes, you are," Caroline persisted loftily. "This very night, if I help you in an awfully funny joke on the maids you'd go and spoil it by telling that it was you, before the time."

"No, I shouldn't," said little Fattie Hellows.

"Well, then," began Caroline, and here her voice dropped to a husky whisper, "well, then, I'll tell you."

It was a peaceful night. Even the friend of the family slept, which was strange considering the cherries. Over her head, had she been wakeful, she might have heard almost a rhythmic chorus of snores, for the maids were all taking rest after labor. Below, in the hallway, the tall clock struck the hour of twelve.

Fatty had made up her mind that Caroline should see that she was not so tender-hearted to carry out a joke, and that she could keep a secret as well as anyone, though she was a girl; and you know they say girls cannot keep secrets. So Fatty surprised both John and Caroline by offering her services in the carrying out of the joke. The plot was this: Fatty was to enter the room of Mary McCann, the cook, and frighten her out of her wits by making her believe that a burglar was in the room. John declared that she looked like a real burglar after she had donned his coat, trousers, and hat. Caroline said that the only thing that spoiled the effect was a pair of red bedroom slippers which Fatty had put on in order that she might not make any noise in getting into Mary's room. So as the last stroke of twelve died away the three conspirators proceeded to the part of the rectory where Mary McCann, the cook, and Alberta, the waitress, slept.

"Now, Fatty," said John, "Caroline and I will stand outside of the door and listen to the fun. You just push open the door, gently, and go into the room and be sure you do not make any noise until you get to the bureau. Then you must pull the drawer open and make as much noise as you can in doing so, for Mary snores, and it will take a bit of noise to awaken her."

Fatty did as she was told. She rattled away at the drawer until she heard the snoring cease and saw Mary McCann sitting up in bed as white as the quilt that covered her. As soon as she was able to speak, she said:

"O, Mr. Burglar; dear, good Mr. Burglar! please don't be after takin' anything that I wear when Oi'm dressed up, for sure Oi've had an invitashun to Gerry O'Toole's party, and Gerry is just twenty-one—and a foine fellow he is, and that's the truth. But there's a foine box of candy in the top drawer, and ye can take that, and I'll never tell that ye were in the house, so I won't."

Now, the idea of a box of candy was too much for Fatty Hellows, and her little fat mouth watered so much that she forgot to disguise her voice and in her natural tone she called out:

"Well, be quick then. Tell me where the box is. In what part of the drawer can I find it?"

"Oi'll git up and foind it for you myself," said Mary, springing out of bed. As she reached the bureau her big foot went down upon Fatty's little foot ensed in the soft slipper, so that Fatty rly howled with pain. John and roline could hold in no longer and rst into loud laughter. The noise as so great that Alberta, the waitress, g Annie and little Annie, and Miss llvaine all came rushing into the om and wanted to know what it was about.

"O'll tell ye what it is all about," id Mary; "this little simpleton ough she could frighten me, but ary McCann is one of the kind that ver scares worth a cent. Oi could ndle twinty burglars in one night, so could."

This was too much for John, who id:

"Yes, Mary, especially- candy bur ars."

"Or burglars in bedroom slippers," id Caroline.—The Church Standard.

A Present for all Three

(By Alice Miller Weeks.)

"Oh, mamma, is it for me?" Dorris ked, looking eagerly at the big are parcel the postman had just left the door.

"For me?" echoed little Starice, om everybody nicknamed Dimples, r short.

"No, not for either of you," mamma plied, laying the parcel on the liary table. "It's for brother George." She sat down to read her letters and e two children looked curiously at e package, feeling it, and trying to ess what it could be.

"It feels like a box," Dorris said. "I fink it's a book," Dimples corcted. And they waited as patiently they could for brother George to me home from school.

Dimples was right; it was a book— beautiful green and gold book, filled om cover to cover with delightful imal stories. And on the fly-leaf as written: "To George, with loving irthday wishes, from Aunt Hannah." "Why didn't we think?" laughed orris. "It's George's birthday in out two weeks. Wasn't Aunt Hanah good to remember?"

Now, if there was one thing in the orld that George liked better than other, it was animal stories. When e children had looked the book over d admired the pictures, he took it, d started to go to his own room and joy the new stories. But two pairs xpectant eyes followed him; and hen he saw them, George changed his ind. He sat down, right where he as, opened the book and began to ad aloud.

Dorris came and leaned over his chair o look at the illustrations; Dimples eated herself on a stool in front of im; and both listened eagerly to evy word. It was a pleasure to read oud when both were so interested, d not one of the three heard the call dinner.

Mamma came to the library to see hat had become of her little people; d there they were, so intent on the ory of the bear who had set himself ire, and leaped into the river to put ut the flames, that she had not the eart to interrupt, and sat down till eorge had finished.

"Oh!" sighed Dorris, "wasn't he a rave bear, though? I'm so glad he asn't killed."

"He's a smart old bear, I fink," add- d Dimples.

"Well," said Doris, as they went out o the dining room, "I was just a eny bit disappointed, George, 'cause e present wasn't for me. I forgot bout your birthday, you know. But, a, I'm just as glad as I can be, now, at Aunt Hannah sent it to you. Be- cause I couldn't read it myself, you now, the words are so long. And it's ist lovely to hear you read."

George thought of the way he had

The Best Traveling Companion

is Hicks' Capudine. Prevents and cures headache, sea-sickness, colds, grip, etc. Take a bottle with you when you start.

AT ALL DRUGGISTS, 10c., 25c., 50c.

Southern States Trust Company

Capital,
$200,000.

GEORGE STEPHENS, President.

T. S. FRANKLIN, V.-President.

W. H. WOOD, Treasurer.

A Co-worker

This is what your money becomes when you put it on deposit in our Savings Department. We pay four per cent. interest and compound it quarterly.

Mid Summer Cut Price Sale

of

Furniture, Carpets,
Pianos and Organs,

Wonderful Bargains can be had at this Store during this Cut Price Sale.

Everything Without Reserve is reduced in Price to the Lowest Price to sell the Goods and make room for the Changes now going on in our store. Come and See Us in Person, but if you can't come, you will get some reduction if you order by mail. Don't fail to grasp this opportunity to save money.

Parker-Gardner Company.

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA.

HIGH HATS AND LOW HATS

Broad Hats and Narrow Hats

STIFF HATS AND SOFT HATS

EVERY SHAPE AND STYLE OF HAT THAT'S CORRECT

There is a great deal in habit in the matter of hats, as in other things. Some men have the habit of paying $5.00 for their hats. This is manifestly a bad habit, when you can buy as good a hat here for $3.00. You can get the regulation hat styles at any good store, but we go a step further; we not only show you all the regular styles, but we have all the variations and the exclusive styles. It will please you to place your head in one of our hats.

LONG-TATE CLOTHING COMP'Y

42 South Tryon Street, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Goods sent on approval returnable at our expense.

meant to read the new book, and said, with a smile:

"Well, it's a good deal better fun to read it aloud, because then we can all hear the stories and talk them over together. And I'll hurry home from school to night, and we'll read some more. Aunt Hannah didn't know she was sending a present for all three of us, did she?"

"But that's just what she did do," laughed Doris.—In the Little Learner's Paper.

The Spoiled Picture.

The Lloyd family had decided to have a picture taken. All the family relations were together in the front yard at grandma and grandpa's home, at 4 o'clock on a certain day, and the artist was going to take their pictures all together.

Kitty Lloyd was much delighted, and asked her mother a great many questions about it.

"Am I to be in it, mamma?"

"Yes, dear—all the family."

"And baby Ruth, too?"

"Yes, all the children and grand children."

"O mamma, can't I have my dog Sandy in it, too? I think if you have Baby Ruth, I ought to have Sandy."

"Well, you ask papa, tonight."

When Kitty's papa came home that night, the first thing he heard, when his little girl came to meet him, was:

O papa! may I have Sandy in the picture with me? Mamma's going to have Baby Ruth."

"I'm afraid you'll spoil the picture," responded Mr. Lloyd, "and Sandy is worse yet. You see, we shall have to keep very still to have our pictures taken, and I am afraid neither you nor Sandy can do that."

"Oh, yes, we can!" assured Kittie; "I'll teach Sandy."

Every day after that Kittie gave Sandy some lessons in standing still. The appointed day came at last and Mr. Lloyd got out the big carriage, and took them all over to grandpa's, where there was a large gathering of aunts, uncles and cousins who were to be in the picture. Sandy was allowed to go along, and Kitty was delighted.

At last the artist came in a newly painted wagon, with a big long word on the outside, which Kitty, after a good deal of spelling learned was "photographs." It was very interesting to watch the artist take out his camera, and set it up on a little frame, and peep through it with a black cloth over his head. When his machine was ready, he called the people together on the front porch, and, with grandpa and grandma in the center, the tall ones in the back, and the short ones in the front, the people were arranged, and made ready for the picture. Kitty had a place in the very front of the picture, with Sandy by her side, who was to sit upon his hind legs.

"Now, Kitty," said mamma, "you must keep perfectly still and not move, or you will spoil the picture. When the artist says 'Ready,' you must not even wink till he's through."

Kitty stood up very straight, and looked just where the artist told her to look.

"All ready?" said the artist. "Now." Kitty looked around awfully quick to see if Sandy was sitting up all right and just then the artist took the picture.

"Why, mamma, is it over?" asked Kitty, as they all began to move around and talk.

"Yes, Kitty," answered mamma, "it's all over now, and you can run about and play."

The next day the proof of the picture was brought to Mr. Lloyd, and he showed it to Kitty. There were

SOUTHERN DENTAL COLLEGE, ATLANTA, GEORGIA

If you are interested in obtaining a dental education, write for free catalogue of full instruction.

Address DR. S. W. FOSTER, DEAN: 100 NORTH BUTLER STREET, ATLANTA, GEORGIA

Atlantic Coast Line

Thoroughfare of Travel between the

NORTH and SOUTH

FLORIDA CUBA

A passenger service unexcelled for luxury and comfort, equipped with the latest Pullman Dining, Sleeping and Thoroughfare Cars.

For rates, schedule, maps or any information, write to

WM. J. CRAIG,

General Passenger Agent, Wilmington, N. C.

HAMPDEN-SIDNEY COLLEGE.

The 128th Session will open Wednesday, September 9th, 1903.

Four courses of instruction leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., B. L. and A. Nine professors and instructors. Healthful location. Moral surroundings. For catalogue apply to

RICHARD McILWAINE, President, Hampden-Sidney, Va.

The Security Life and Annuity Co.

(LEGAL RESERVE)

Home Office: Greensboro, N. C.

Guaranty Capital, . . . . . $100,000.00
(Deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.)

Our Life Annuity, Disability and Endowment Policy

HAS CASH AND LOAN VALUES.

1. Is fully paid-up in 20 years.
2. Is the most attractive policy issued.
3. Contains every essential idea in Life Insurance.
4. Provides a fixed income for Life for the widow.
5. Provides a fixed income for the children during their minority.
6. Provides a fixed income for the insured during disability and old age.
7. Is secured by a cash guaranty capital of $100,000.00 deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.

J. VAN LINDLEY, President.

GEO. A. GRIMSLEY, Secretary.

R. E. FOSTER, Actuary

ULCERINA.

The only cure for Chronic Ulcers on the market. The most reliable remedy known for Ring-Worms, Old Sores, Wounds of all kinds and chronic skin diseases. For sale by all druggists. Price 25 cents.

Manufactured by

R. G. ROZIER, M. D.,
LUMBERTON, N. C.

ROANOKE COLLEGE, SALEM, VA.

51st year begins Sept. 23. Courses for Degrees, Electives; high standard. Also Commercial and Preparatory Courses. German, French. Library, 22,000 volumes; working laboratory; good morals and discipline. Churches; no bar-rooms. Healthful mountain location. Very moderate expenses. Special terms for men's sons and candidates for ministry. Catalogue on Address Prof. L. McREYNOLDS, Secretary.

Wear Red Seal Shoes

Catalog for Postal

Grandma and grandpa sitting up in the center, looking as calm and placid as ever. There were mamma and Baby with as plain as could be, and Sandy sitting up as straight as a dog could; at the place where Kitty's face ought to be, there was the back of a curly head and a blur.

"You moved," said papa, gravely, and you spoiled the picture."

Kitty burst into tears. "I only looked around to see if Sandy was quiet," she sobbed, "and then it was all over. I didn't think the man could be so quick."

When the picture was shown to the other relatives, they decided that it was so good of grandpa and grandma that it must be kept. So, a short time later, Mr. Lloyd brought home the picture all finished and framed, and hung it up in the parlor. Kitty cried bitterly and begged him not to hang it up; but papa said he must. Then mamma took her little girl in to the parlor and looked to her.

"The picture is spoiled, dear, because you did not do as I told you at once. I told you to keep perfectly still when the man said 'All ready,' but you wanted to look around first and see what Sandy was doing. I want you to come and look at the spoiled picture very often, and always remember that it got spoiled because you did not obey promptly."

Kitty tried hard to remember the lesson, and when she forgot to mind promptly her mother would often say: "Take care, Kitty, you are spoiling your picture now," and then Kitty could smile into her mother's face, and hasten to do as she was told.—Exchange.

A Man of Affairs.

He has his little axe to grind,
His little bridge to build;
He has a picture book to find
And views to paint and gild;
He has his tool-chest to arrange,
His toys to put in place;
He has to exercise his tops,
And his dog to race;
He has his hobby horse to catch
So he can take the air;
He has his garden bed to spade,
His seeds to plant with care.
He has his world and his affairs,
And often, it is said,
His strong young man is much fatigued
Before he goes to bed.
—MARIA JONES HAMMOND.

Sample Mailed Free.

Fifty Thousand Trial Packages of Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure to be Mailed Free to Sufferers.

Dr. Blosser, the noted catarrh specialist, of Atlanta, Ga., is the discoverer of a wonderful remedy for Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma and Catarrhal Deafness. He has decided to send fifty thousand trial packages of his remedy to sufferers who will write him.

This remedy is a harmless, pleasant vegetable compound, which is smoked in a pipe, the medicated vapor being inhaled, reaches directly the mucous membranes lining the head, nose, throat and lungs, making a radical and permanent cure.

If you want to give the remedy a trial, write a letter at once to Dr. Blosser Company, 355 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga.

OPIMUM COCAINE AND WHISKY
Habits Cured at my Sanatorium, in 80 days. Hundreds of references. 25 years a specialist. Book on Home Treatment sent FREE. Address B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

Good Music.

"A valuable collection of popular airs and plantation melodies," as arranged and played by Mrs. Joe Person at the Southern Expositions. The collection includes:

- Italian Waltz,
- Weird Waltz and Polka,
- Carolina Racket,
- 'Liza Jane,
- Nelly Bly,
- Shoo Fly,
- Dance, the Boatman Dance,
- I'll Bet My Money on the Bobtail Nag,
- I'm Gwine Down Town.
- Dixie,
- De Year of Jubilee,
- Billy in the Low Grounds,
- Oh, Carry Me Back to Old Virginia,
- Walk Around.

In all 15 pieces, price $1; also a transcription of the "Blue Alsatian Mountains," "Down-Town Girls," and Boatman Dance, price, 50 cents. The collection and transcription together $1.25. It is emphatically music for the home circle, and no music is more popular and enjoyable than the old melodies. The arrangement is exceedingly simple, but brilliant enough to be played by any one. Can also be played on organ. For sale by

MRS. JOE PERSON,
KITTRELL, N. C.

I love my two white mice, and my little silver fishes,
And my sweet canary that will sing
When I call,
And my pigeons high up in the barn,
and old Jim in the stall,
And my goat, and little kitty with the white spot on the shoulder,
And my robin that comes back each year to the tree by the wall,
But I love old Rover, dear old Rover, best of all!

—GRACE L. BACKUS.

PERSONALLY CONDUCTED AUTUMN TOURS TO LAKE TOXAWAY AND THE SAPPHIRE COUNTRY—VERY LOW RATES.

In order to give everyone an opportunity to see and enjoy the wonderful and beautiful lake and mountain section in the Land of the Sky, known as the "Sapphire Country," the Southern Railway will sell tickets on Tuesday, September 29th, 1903, from Charlotte, N. C., to Lake Toxaway, N. C., and return at rate of $25.95. This rate includes railroad fare from Charlotte to Lake Toxaway and return, carriage ride between Lake Toxaway, Lake Sapphire, and Lake Fairfield; also seven days board at either the Franklin Inn, at Brevard; Toxaway Inn, at Lake Toxaway; Fairfield Inn, at Lake Fairfield; Sapphire Inn, at Lake Sapphire, or the seven days' time may be divided between any two or all of the hotels.

These excursions will be personally conducted from Hendersonville, and every attention will be shown to those making the trip, especially ladies and children traveling alone.

Lakes Toxaway, Fairfield and Sapphire are situated at an altitude of over 3,000 feet and are among the highest located lakes in the United States. Splendid boating, fishing and hunting.

Tickets good to return ten days from date of sale. For information address nearest ticket agent of the Southern Railway, or

R. L. VERNON, T. P. A.,
Charlotte, N. C.
S. H. HARWICK, G. P. A.,
Washington, D. C.

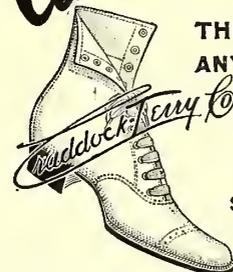

Estab. '32 SCALES of every description. Satisfaction Guaranteed. Write for prices. JESSE MARDEN 109 S. Charles St., BALTIMORE, MD

NOW READY
"REPORT ON 1000 CONFINEMENT CASES"
UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF MEDICINE RICHMOND VIRGINIA
MEDICINE-DENTISTRY-PHARMACY
"CLINICS 1902-3"-"TEACHING METHODS"
"CATALOGUE"

Money saved is money made.

$2.50 BUYS A PAIR OF FAMOUS

Autograph SHOES

THE EQUAL OF ANY $3.00 SHOE

ON THE MARKET TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE

IF YOUR DEALER DOES NOT CARRY THEM A POSTAL CARD TO US WILL TELL YOU WHERE YOU CAN GET THEM.

CRADDOCK-TERRY CO. LYNCHBURG, VA.

Ticket No. 1762.

Held by Mrs. E. C. Baldwin, of Maxton, N. C., secured the gift piano.

Evidently every person who registered for this piano is desirous of having an instrument in their home. To compensate for any disappointment and to aid them in adding music to their homes, we will make special prices and terms for the

NEXT THIRTY DAYS

to every person registered on our books.

We are Manufacturers,

We sell direct to the User.

We save all unnecessary profit

Write for full information in regard to our special offer and you can become the owner of a fine piano on easy terms and at a price that will induce you to buy.

Watch our Advertisements.

STIEFF
SOUTHERN WAREHOUSES:
211-213 N. Tryon, & 22 W. 5th St.
C. H. WILMOTH, Mgr.
Charlotte, - - - - N. C.

Clippings.

"He has courage, you say?"
 "Well, rather. Why we, tested it last night."
 "How?"

"We dared him to dine at a swell restaurant and come out without tipping the waiter, and he did it."—Chicago Evening Post.

Uncle Josh—"It seems ter me there" jest two things you kin do if you've got rheumatism."

Uncle Silas—"What's them?"
 Uncle Josh—"You kin grin an' bear it, or you don't need to grin."

Whenever we hear that a man's gone abroad in order to be baptized in the River Jordan we wonder how he ever had enough sense to accumulate the money for the trip.—Epworth Herald.

Mr. Carnegie predicts that North America and Great Britain will one day be one country, but he fails to specify which will be the one.—The Baltimore American.

"The station at Savannah," says a traveler in the South, "is surrounded in all directions with a lot of saloons and cheap restaurants. In great illuminated letters over one of these saloons was the sign, 'Open all night.' Next to it was a restaurant bearing with equal prominence the legend: 'We never close.' Third in order was a Chinese laundry, in a little tumble down hovel, and upon the front of this building was the sign in great, scrawling letters, 'Me wakee, too!'"

In a Philadelphia kindergarten teacher was telling the little children about a clock.

"Now, this," she said is the pendulum—this thing that swings back and forth. Did any of you ever hear the word pendulum before?

A child put up her hand. "Yes, teacher" she said. "Pendulum Franklin. I've heard it often—The Lutheran.

"Br'er Williams, what wuz de tex de parson preached from?"

"Bless God, I clean fergot! De sermon done me so much good I felled asleep en dreamed I wuz in glory!"—Atlanta Constitution.

The Rev. Chas. M. Sheldon, of Topeka Kan., says that after he had married a couple not long ago, the bride-groom fumbled in his pockets nervously without producing any thing, and finally admitted that he had neglected to provide for the clergyman's fee. "But" he added, brightening up, "I can show you how to fix your gas meter so that it won't register."

Merchant: "By the way, Mr. Slowman, can you pay that little bill of mine today?"

Slowman: "That little bill of yours?"

Merchant: "Yes, sir."

Slowman: "Well, I should say not, Why, I can't even pay my own little bills."—Chicago Daily News.

Has last Say.—"Say, pa", queried little Billy Bloobumper, "what's an echo?"

"An echo, my son," replied the old man with a sigh long drawn out, "is the only thing that can flimflam a woman out of the last word."—Lyre.

Cheap Settlers' Tickets.

On the first and third Tuesdays of each month until April, 1904, the Frisco System (Saint Louis & San Francisco Railroad) will have on sale reduced one-way and round trip tickets from Birmingham, Memphis and Saint Louis to points in Arkansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Indian Territory and Texas.

Write to W. T. Saunders, G. A., P. D., Frisco System, Atlanta, Ga., for information.

XANTHINE!
 PROF. HERTZ GREAT GERMAN
HAIR RESTORATIVE

NOTHING LIKE IT.
 NOTHING SO GOOD,
 AND NEVER WILL BE

Never fails. Testimonials of unquestionable credibility.

INSIST ON GETTING IT. Take no other. Nothing else will give you satisfaction. If your druggist has not got it, write us. Not a dye, but always restores the beautiful natural color; stops dandruff; promotes growth.

At druggists. Price, $1. Insist on getting it. If your druggist has not got it, send us $1, and we will send you a bottle. Charges prepaid. Highest testimonials. Write us for circulars. XANTHINE COMPANY, Richmond, Va.

Low Rates to California & Northwest

Will sell daily between September 15th and October 30th, 1903, low rate colonist tickets to points in

- |                |             |
|----------------|-------------|
| WASHINGTON,    | CALIFORNIA, |
| OREGON,        | MONTANA,    |
| IDAHO,         | WYOMING,    |
| COLORADO,      | NEVADA,     |
| UTAH, ARIZONA, | NEW MEXICO  |

Short line, quick time, no 'bus transfers. Free reclining chair cars.

For rates, schedules, maps and full information write to

E. E. CLARK, W. T. SAUNDERS,
 Traveling Pass. Agt. G. A. P. D.
 ATLANTA.

Anyone sending a sketch and description may quickly ascertain our opinion free whether an invention is probably patentable. Communications strictly confidential. Handbook on Patents sent free. Oldest agency for securing patents. Patents taken through Munn & Co. received special notice, without charge, in the Scientific American.

 A handsomely illustrated weekly. Largest circulation of any scientific journal. Terms, $3 a year; four months, $1. Sold by all newsdealers.
MUNN & Co. 361 Broadway, New York
 Branch Office, 625 F St., Washington, D. C.

HIWASSEE ROUTE
 Atlanta, Knoxville and North
 Railway.

SOUTHERN SCENIC LINE.

Short line between Atlanta, Ga., and Knoxville, Tenn., and between points in Southeast and Northwest.

Low round trip rates to Mountain and Seashore Resorts. Why go to Switzerland or Colorado? For scenery the A. K. & Railway crosses the Great Smoky Mountains by the only standard-gauge loop in the world; 2,000 feet above sea-level and 600 feet above the Hiwassee River.

For rates or information apply to
 E. S. MILLER, T. P. A.,
 18 N. Pryor St., Atlanta
 S. H. STOUT, General Agent, Knoxville
 J. H. McWILLIAMS, G. P. A., Knoxville

Atlanta & West Point
 RAILROAD COMPANY.

The Western Railway of Alabama.

Shortest and quickest route a Atlanta, Montgomery and New Orleans to all points in Texas, Mexico and California.

Operate Pullman's finest vestibule sleepers. Unexcelled dining service on all trains.

Through coaches between Washington and New Orleans.

Cafe-Observation cars on U. S. Fast Mail Trains Nos. 35 and 36, between Atlanta and Montgomery.

Rates and schedules cheerfully furnished by

B. HEYWARD, J. P. BILLUE,
 D. P. A., G. P. A.,
 Atlanta, Ga. Atlanta, Ga.

R. E. LUTZ, CHAS. WICKERSHAM,
 Traffic Manager, Pres. & Gen. Mgr.,
 Montgomery, Ala. Atlanta, Ga.

Southern
Railway

The Direct Line to all Points

TEXAS,
 CALIFORNIA
 FLORIDA,
 CUBA and
 PORTO RICO.

Strictly First-Class equipment on all Through and Local Trains, Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars on all night trains. Fast and safe Schedules.

Travel by the Southern and you are assured of a Safe, Comfortable and Expeditious journey.

Apply to Ticket Agents for Time Tables, Maps and General Information, or address

R. L. VERNON, F. R. DARBY,
 T. P. A., C. P. & T.,
 Charlotte, N. C. Asheville, N. C.
 No trouble to answer questions.

THE KEELEY CURE

Do you know what it does?

It relieves a person of all desire for strong drink or drugs, restores his nervous system to its normal condition, and reinstates a man to his home and business. For full particulars, address

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE, Greensboro, N. C.
Correspondence confidential.

What Protection Means.

On March 6, 1873, the Hon. Armistead Burwell, of Charlotte, N. C., who is well known throughout the State of North Carolina, was insured with the Aetna Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, Conn., under Renewable Term Policy No. 95,253 for $4,000. Annual Premium $64.76 When the first term of ten years expired in 1883 the Company renewed the policy for the next ten years at the

ORIGINAL RATE, WITHOUT A NEW EXAMINATION.

and have renewed this policy respectively in 1893 and 1903 without increase of rate premium and without re-examination. If Mr. Burwell lives till 1913 he will have been insured for forty years at an annual cost of $16.19 per $1,000.

This Renewable Term Insurance was originally introduced by the Aetna. The OLD AETNA LEADS; the other companies follow.

OVER ONE MILLION DOLLARS have been paid out in death claims in this State during the last ten years.

For rates, etc., apply to

J. D. BOUSHALL, Mgr,
RALEIGH, N. C.

King's Mountain Military Academy,

Yorkville, South Carolina.

High-grade school with a first-class patronage. Teachers and cadets live together as a family. A real home school. Stands for the best and nothing but the best. Faculty of active Christian men, who live in closest contact with the cadets.

Col. W. G. STEPHENSON, Supt.

North Carolina Medical College Davidson, N. C.

Three years' course to graduate. Sixteen Professors and Teachers. Clinical instruction given in Davidson and Charlotte. Eighteen graduates each year made fine records before N. C. and S. C. Boards. Address

J. P. MUNROE, M. D., President, Davidson, N. C.

Private rooms in the Hospital.

Brown's University School, Charlotte, N. C.

Advantages for boys whose parents can afford it. Five boarders, as members of family. Combined advantages of home life and city culture. Write for particulars.

W. G. BROWN (U. of Va.) Prin.

The Eyes of School Children

Many parents allow their children to go through school half equipped for the work.

Defective eyes do not show in children as plainly as in grown people. Yet defects are present then if ever. They probably never know what it is to have perfect sight; thus they know no better, since there is no soreness and inflammation.

Don't wait for such signs.

Examination free

Dr. J. H. Spilman,

22 West Trade Street,
Blair's Drug Store, Charlotte.

Black River Institute,

IVANHOE, N. C.

REV. V. H. STARBUCK, A. B., B. L., B. D.,
Principal.

SESSION OPENS SEPTEMBER 22nd.

High-grade work on very easy terms.
Under care of Wilmington Presbytery.

For particulars address,

V. H. STARBUCK or E. J. W. ANDERS,
Ivanhoe, N. C.

GREGG

SHORTHAND BY MAIL.

You need not leave your home to learn this system. It is easy to learn, easy to write and easy to read.

Typewriter sent to responsible students.
Send today for Booklet C.

Southern Shorthand and

Business University.

J. M. RESSLER, President.
Norfolk, Va.

HALL & PEARSALL

Wholesale - Grocers

AND

Commission Merchants,

Wilmington, N. C.

SPECIALTIES:

Salt Fish, Molasses.

Meat, Flour, Salt,

BAGGING and TIES.

Samples and prices on request.

STILLMAN INSTITUTE, TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

For training Colored Ministers.
Offers good academic and theological instruction.

Now managed on the "Industrial" plan, by which a young man may exchange labor for an education.

Write for information to
REV. D. CLAY LILLY, Superintendent.
TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

Positions GUARANTEED BY A

$5,000 BANK DEPOSIT

Railroad Fare Paid. 500 FREE Courses Offered. Board at Cost. Write Quick
GEORGIA-ALABAMA BUSINESS COLLEGE, Macon, Ga.

EVERY SUFFERER SHOULD KNOW

=KADOK=

The Pleasant tonic Headache Cure.
Superior to Others and Free from
Opaites

Try a package,
Price 10c.

At all Druggists or sent prepaid by
L. Richardson Drug Company,
Wholesale and manufacturing Druggists,
GREENSBORO, N. C.

TUCKER BROS.

Wilmington, N. C.

THE PLACE TO BUY YOUR
MONUMENTS,

HEADSTONES,

and all Cemetery Work,
at Bottom Prices. All
work delivered.

Branch yard at
Goldsboro, N. C.

Teachers' Interstate Examination
Course.

Teachers wishing to prepare for examinations should write at once to Prof. J. L. Graham, LL. D., 152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn., for particulars concerning his Special Teachers' Examination Course

This course is taught by mail, and prepares Teachers for examination in every State in the Union. Leading educators pronounce it the best course ever offered to the Teaching profession, and all Teachers wishing to advance in their profession should immediately avail themselves of it. Enclose stamp for reply.

For Sale Cheap

A one-horse power, high-speed General Electric motor, for 500-volt circuit; armature and commutator both new; all in thoroughly good repair. For particulars apply to
MANAGER PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD,
Charlotte, N. C.

SEVENTEEN YEARS EXPERIENCE

W. Drummond Marrow

Consulting Electrical Engineer

ELECTRICAL - CONTRACTOR

233 South Tryon Street

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

SHORTHAND FREE.

Upon request Converse Business College will send a free lesson in Shorthand with full explanation, to any one.

For the next thirty days Railroad fare will be paid for any one enrolling for one or more of our courses at the regular rate of tuition.

I. T. WILLIAMS, Secretary and Treasurer, Spartanburg, S. C.

Sewing Machines <sup>A</sup>ND <sup>D</sup>Supplies

NOW is the time to buy a Machine, and F. H. ANDREWS' is the place. No use to send your money to a catalogue house a thousand miles away, when I can furnish an elegant Drop Head Machine at $16 50, and finer ones in proportion. Attachments, Parts and Needles for all Machines supplied promptly.

F. H. ANDREWS,

20 WEST TRADE STREET. : - CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The Old Reliable Dealer in Pianos, Organs and Sewing Machines.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE, Davidson, N. C.

Classical, Mathematical, Scientific, Literary, Biblical, Commercial.

Terms reasonable; Location healthful; Accommodations excellent; Teaching surpassed; Gymnasium complete.

Send for a catalogue

Address THE PRESIDENT

DO YOU WANT

=A=

=TEACHER?=

We are in correspondence with hundreds of the best teachers in the U. S. for all grades school and college work. Can refer you to some that would probably suit. NO CHARGE. Members located in 18 states at salaries $2,500 per year down.

Correspondence with school officers and teachers invited.

THE EDUCATIONAL BUREAU,
(Established 1891.) Raleigh, N. C.
Branch Office; Fort Smith, Ark.

North Carolina

MILITARY ACADEMY.

Red Springs, N. C.

Ample faculty of five instructors. Location unsurpassed for healthfulness. Educates for business or for college and stand taken by graduates and students in university work the test of thoroughness. Cost small, considering advantages. Religious influences good. Address for catalogue,

CAPT. C. A. SHORT,
Principal.

DR. SAMUEL W. MURPHY,
Head Master.

Red Springs Seminary,

The Ideal College for Women.

Faculty of twenty-six experienced teachers College course leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S. and B. L. T. The best advantages in Music and Art. Large two-manual Pipe Organ. Electric lights. Steam heat. A catalogue will interest you.

REV. C. G. VARDELL, D. D., Red Springs, N. C.
Summer address, Blowing Rock, N. C.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

State Library

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., SEPTEMBER 30, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 39

The Last Voyage

Bishop Clark.

My work on earth is well-nigh done,
I wait the setting of the sun.
I hear the surging of the sea
That beats upon Eternity.
I see far off the shadowy realm,
And thither turn the trembling helm.

ee

The winds that blow so cold and drear
Grow softer as the end draws near !
The distant gleams of silver light
Relieve the darkness of the night.
There stand upon the misty shore
Faint forms of loved ones gone before!

ee

The voice that once said "Peace, be still"
Now whispers softly, "Fear no ill."
I sail alone, yet not alone ;
The Saviour takes me for His own.
I wait His greeting when I land,
I wait the grasp of Christ's blessed hand.

STILLMAN INSTITUTE, TUSCALOOSA. ALA.

For training Colored Ministers.
Offers good academic and theological instruction.

Now managed on the "Industrial"
plan, by which a young man may exchange labor for an education.

Write for information to
REV. D. CLAY LILLY, Superintendent
TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

Positions GUARAN-TEED
BY A

$5,000 BANK DEPOSIT
Railroad Fare Paid. 500
FREE Courses Offered.
Board at Cost. Write Quick
GEORGIA-ALABAMA BUSINESS COLLEGE, Macon, Ga.

EVERY SUFFERER SHOULD KNOW

=KADOK=

The Pleasant tonic Headache Cure.
Superior to Others and Free from
Opaites

Try a package,
Price 10c.

At all Druggists or sent prepaid by
L. Richardson Drug Company,
Wholesale and manufacturing Druggists,
GREENSBORO, N. C.

TUCKER BROS.

Wilmington, N. C.

THE PLACE TO BUY YOUR

MONUMENTS.

HEADSTONES,

and all Cemetery Work,

at Bottom Prices. All

work delivered.

Branch yard at

Goldsboro, N. C.

Teachers' Interstate Examination Course.

Teachers wishing to prepare for examinations should write at once to Prof. J. L.
Graham, LL. D., 152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn., for particulars concerning his Special Teachers' Examination
Course

This course is taught by mail, and prepares Teachers for examination in every State in the Union. Leading educators promote it the best course ever offered to the Teaching profession, and all Teachers wishing to advance in their profession should immediately avail themselves of it. Enclose stamp for reply.

For Sale Cheap

A one-horse power, high-speed General
Electric motor, for 500-volt circuit; armature and commutator both new; all in thoroughly good repair. For particulars apply to

MANAGER PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD,
Charlotte, N. C.

SEVENTEEN YEARS EXPERIENCE

W. Drummond Marrow

Consulting Electrical Engineer

ELECTRICAL - CONTRACTOR

233 South Tryon Street

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

SHORTHAND FREE.

Upon request Converse Business College will send a free lesson in Shorthand, with full explanation, to any one.

For the next thirty days Railroad fare will be paid for any one enrolling for one or more of our courses at the regular rate of tuition.

I. T. WILLIAMS, Secretary and Treasurer, Spartanburg, S. C.

Sewing Machines <sup>A</sup> <sup>N</sup> <sup>D</sup> Supplies

NOW is the time to buy a Machine, and F. H. ANDREWS' is the place.
No use to send your money to a catalogue house a thousand miles away, when I can funish an elegant Drop Head Machine at $16 50, and finer ones in proportion.
Attachments, Parts and Needles for all Machines supplied promptly.

F. H. ANDREWS,
20 WEST TRADE STREET. : - CHARLOTTE, N. C.
The Old Reliable Dealer in Pianos, Organs and Sewing Machines.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE, Davidson, N. C.

Classical, Mathematical, Scientific, Literary, Biblical, Commercial.

Terms reasonable; Location healthful; Accommodations excellent; Teaching unsurpassed; Gymnasium complete.

Send for a catalogue

Address THE PRESIDENT

DO YOU WANT

=A=

=TEACHER?=
||

We are in correspondence with hundreds of the best teachers in the U. S. for all grades school and college work. Can refer you to some that would probably suit. NO CHARGE. Members located in 18 states at salaries $2,500 per year down.
Correspondence with school officers and teachers invited
THE EDUCATIONAL BUREAU,
(Established 1891) Raleigh, N. C.
Branch Office; Fort Smith, Ark.

North Carolina

MILITARY ACADEMY

Red Springs, N. C.

Ample faculty of five instructors. Location unsurpassed for healthfulness. Educates for business or for college and stand taken by graduates and students in university world the test of thoroughness. Cost small, considering advantages. Religious influence good. Address for catalogue,

CAPT. C. A. SHORT,
Principal.

DR. SAMUEL W. MURPHY,
Head Master

Red Springs Seminary, The Ideal College for Women.

Faculty of twenty-six experienced teachers College course leading to the degrees of
A. B., B. S. and B. Lit. The best advantages in Music and Art. Large two manual Pipe Organ. Electric lights. Steam heat. A catalogue will interest you.

REV. C. G. VARDELL, D. D., Red Springs, N. C.
Summer address, Blowing Rock, N. C.

Presbyterian Standard.

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., SEPTEMBER 30, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 39

Event and Comment.

The Congregationalist shows a gleam of light in quoting Lord Salisbury's dictum, "so long as things are not claimed as rights it is easy to confer them as blessings," and suggesting that it may be applied to our race problem.

The two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Jonathan Edwards occurs on October 5. From the moribund way in which the Congregationalists are preparing to celebrate the occasion one would think that they were glad it was that long ago.

Lord Salisbury's funeral expenses amounted to seventy dollars. And yet the noble Lord was the finest type of the aristocrat. It would be well for those who would emulate his position to cultivate the simplicity that was his in life and death.

Bishop Warren declares that some preachers are so timid about preaching to fashionable audiences that they go at it in this style: "Brethren, you must repent, as it were, and be converted in a measure, or you will be damned, to some extent." The man who qualifies is like the woman who hesitates.

Leslie's Weekly, commenting upon an upward tendency in pastors' salaries, (that has hardly yet touched the South), says "the tendency can go a long way upward before the ministry as a profession will be in danger of suffering from an overplus of worldly goods and chattels. As a matter of fact, if the average salary paid to ministers throughout the country were increased at once by fifty per cent. it would be an act of common justice and of fair dealing to a class of men to whom the country owes far more for light and leadership than money itself can repay." And "Leslie's" is not a religious paper, either.

The spiritual condition of Korea from the missionary point of view is not so prominent just now as its destiny in the coming conflict between Russia and Japan. Yet there has been wonderful growth there of Protestant and especially of Presbyterian missions in the last twenty years. Twenty thousand Koreans have been enrolled as the adherents of Presbyterianism, of the Northern, Southern, or Canadian brand, and the brethren do not find any serious differences on the mission field. Thirty three hundred people recently attended a Bible Conference, lasting ten days. If the Russians and Japanese will give Korea time to absorb a little more Presbyterian independence of spirit, they can postpone their quarrel as to the destiny of Korea. She will not belong to either of them, but be her own mistress.

The union of Church and State is an anachronism which we hope that the Twentieth Century will see the last of. In France, for instance, the government pays the salaries of the Bishops in return for the right of nominating who shall be Bishops. The government has the same right to stop the salary of an obstreperous Bishop. Recently the salary of the Bishop of Nancy was stopped. On account of this a great ovation was given him at Marseilles and Bishop Andrieu of that city proceeded to issue a violent circular to his clergy reflecting upon the government. So Bishop Andrieu finds himself without any pay by the action of Premier Combes. The power of the purse is a great power. Some time Catholics in France and Anglicans in England will prefer to pay their own priests and school teachers as the price of freedom from governmental control.

A case of concrete Church Union is being watched by the Congregationalists and United Brethren with much interest. The two experimenting churches are in Illinois, both supported by the Home Mission Boards of their respective denominations. The Congregationalists had a church and no parsonage and the United Brethren a parsonage and no Church, so like the blind man and the cripple in the fable, they joined forces. But there seems to be a slight hitch in prospect, for only one pastor is needed, and as the new members are to unite with the church of their choice, it becomes an interesting question which pastor shall remain. Shall the Congregationalists drive the Brother out of his nice new manse, or the Brother take his church from the Congregationalists? As the two denominations are talking of uniting, it may be well to see how the thing works in practice.

The Encyclopedia Biblica, Dr. T. K. Cheyne, editor, was heralded on the appearance of its first volume as an epoch-making book. The work is now complete, but even The Outlook, with its natural sympathies for its radical position is constrained to confess a disappointment. It says in an elaborate review: "It contains a great deal of valuable information, but this is so mixed with partisan discussion for and against particular theories of different schools that as a book from which we learn things about the Bible generally known it is absolutely valueless. Its editor . . . is curiously unable to put a new theory under judicial inquiry. We doubt whether he ever sees more than one side of any question. The Encyclopedia is rich in its exposition of Doubts, Difficulties and Disbeliefs. . . . Generally speaking, we should say that if any student desires to know the latest, best and strongest arguments for rejecting the commonly current belief on any subject, he will find it here." Among these arguments is one "that belief in the resurrection was an illusion, was due to 'subjective vision.'" We think that the Encyclopedia should take down its sign and call itself the Encyclopedia Infidelis, at once. But The Outlook's criticism is a wavemark showing the receding tide of opinion concerning the Radical Criticism.

A great deal of interest is being manifested by the press on both sides of the Atlantic in the new departure recently taken by the London Daily News. That paper recently adopted the policy of excluding all reports of betting sports and all liquor advertisements from its columns. The first effect of the policy was heavy loss, for the paper lost $100,000 worth of advertisements last year. But, on the other hand, the policy is beginning to pay, and now the circulation is going by leaps and bounds. The proprietors are excluding the objectionable matter on principle, and not in the hope of larger gain, but it has been once more proved that in the long run principle pays. The action of the Great London Daily is tantamount to a declaration that betting on sports and the liquor traffic are an immoral alliance which is the source of great immorality. The Presbyterian Banner, an American Journal, has the following approving comment on the incident: "It is a hopeful sign that there is one great daily newspaper that is conducted with success in accordance with strict conscience, and it is to be hoped that others will come to see and follow this more excellent way."—Dominion Presbyterian.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established January 1, 1858.

A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER FOR THE FAMILY. DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM AS REPRESENTED BY THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

A. J. MCKELWAY, ..... EDITOR
 CORNELIA R. SHAW, ..... ASSOCIATE EDITOR
 H. M. MCALLISTER, ..... BUSINESS MANAGER

WESTERN OFFICE:

GEO. L. LEYBURN, ..... EDITOR AND MANAGER.
 318 Washington Ave. St. Louis, Mo.

Subscription Price, ..... $2.00 a Year, in Advance.

The STANDARD is published every Wednesday at Charlotte, N. C., by the PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

For table of contents see page 16.

The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription has been paid.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the subscription.

In accordance with the general wish of our patrons the paper is discontinued only upon the written request of the subscriber. Arrearages must be settled in full at the same time, at the rate of two dollars a year and twenty cents a month for a part of a year.

When change of address is desired give both the old and the new address. No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post-office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South. Address all communications to

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD, Charlotte, N. C.

The Committee on the Proof Text In answer to an overture from the Presbytery of Lafayette, asking the appointment of such a committee, the recent General Assembly granted the request and appointed on the committee the professors of theology in our five theological seminaries.

This came somewhat as an agreeable surprise. For after noting the composition of the Assembly, and of its more important committees, knowing the ultra conservatism of many of its principal men, its real leaders, and having seen in one of our Church papers that the overture of the Presbytery of Lafayette, anent a revision committee, had upon recommendation of the committee on bills and overtures been refused, it was a real pleasure and quite a surprise, when at last the ministers appeared, to read on page 507 "That the Assembly grant the first section of the overture of Lafayette Presbytery, asking for a committee ad interim to revise the proof texts, etc." Though to tell the truth it is hard to see how any one, whatever his views as to "revising the Standards" or however much opposed to changing even a word in the Confession, could seriously object to revising the proof texts, at least to appointing a committee to see if they could not be improved by revision. For that they sadly need revision all admit and the veriest tyro knows full well; moreover we Presbyterians claim that all we profess and have in our creed is based upon and drawn from God's Word, and when we cite the texts to prove this claim, surely they should be apt, appropriate, sufficient and convincing, but this they confessedly now are not. And to have declined even to appoint a committee to seek to remedy this defect and to bring these texts more in accord with the truth, so that proof texts should really prove, this seemed to many to be conservatism—or prejudice—"run to seed."

Yet even this the Assembly would probably have done, so it has been confidently affirmed, had the matter come up earlier in the session, when that body was in its usual negative mood and the watch dogs of conservatism all present and awake! But whether intentional or accidental—I would rather say kindly Providential—many are glad that the proof texts are to be revised; in this we do rejoice, yea, and we will rejoice.

But I wish specially to speak of the composition, or membership, of the committee appointed to do this work. Let me say first and with all emphasis, that the brethren appointed had nothing to do with it. I have no idea that one of them knew anything of it till his name was announced. The moderator appointed the committee and the Assembly confirmed the appointment; these are responsible parties. Nor do I for a moment or in the slightest question the ability and fidelity of the honored brethren composing the committee; they will do the work conscientiously and thoroughly, to the best of their ability—and their best is always very good. Still the composition of the committee is open to serious criticism, especially by way of omission. The objection is not to what was done, but to what was left undone; not to those put on, but to those left off.

First, as a matter of parliamentary courtesy and custom, the mover of the motion to appoint a committee is put on as chairman, unless he asks to be left off, or unless there are strong, special and expressed reasons for the omission. And always the movers, the real friends of any movement, are represented on any committee appointed (as in this case to consider, determine and report upon the subject under consideration;) to this, so far as I remember, I have never known an exception, and this certainly is not only courteous and customary but it is also fair and just, right and Christian. And fair-minded, manly, honorable Christian men at once and with one accord recognize the justice of this, if that which is "just and equal" is desired and is to be secured.

Now this plain, fair, common sense and righteous principle was flagrantly violated in the appointment of this committee. For none of the movers, no avowed friend of the movement, is found on this committee, not one, (some may be, but none, I think, has so expressed himself); while the chairman, and I believe another member, were avowed opponents of any and all revision, even of the proof texts. The mover of the resolution to appoint the committee was overlooked, and no member of Lafayette Presbytery that sent up the overture was put on it, not even the brother who, as was well known by all, had originated the whole matter, had openly advocated and had been sharply criticized for so doing, and who above all others deserves the credit for this revision so much needed. I think it goes without saying that this brother, Dr. E. C. Gordon, should have had a place on this committee, not only as the representative of the Presbytery sending the overture, but as its real originator, and especially as one eminently qualified to deal intelligently with the subject matter of the overture. For if there is a man in our Church who, during the last ten years, has so thoroughly, systematically and constantly studied, interpreted and taught the whole Confession of Faith and the whole Bible, or who has Given so much time and thought and study to the careful, painstaking, thorough examination of the proofs themselves, in a word who is so competent, so able and ready now to do just what this committee was appointed to do, as this brother is, I do not know that man, and I believe, he cannot be named. In this opinion the brethren who know him best and who know the facts will very heartily agree, I am sure.

It so happens, that by reason of his comments in the Earnest Worker, Dr. Gordon's interpretations of Scripture and his views of Bible truth and doctrine are more widely read and more generally known than those of any man in the Church; and perhaps an objection may suggest, that Dr. G's. views on some points do not agree with those of most of his brethren, and possibly that his interpretation and application of certain texts are not exactly those common in our Church, at least not those taught by the very letter of the Standards. To this I reply:

1. The same objection with more or less force and truth could probably be brought against every member of the committee. And the man against whom it could not be made would hardly be fit to be on such a committee.

2. This is the very reason why he, or some such man, should have a place on the committee. It would be a real misfortune, perhaps even a calamity, if all the committee were absolutely of one mind as to the exact meaning, interpretation and application of every Scripture text, indeed there is a sense in which the more radically some of them differ as to some texts the better. For "Truth, like a torch, the more it's shook, it shines."

I may add just here, that as I happen to know the chairman of the committee and I think one or two other members, more considerate and courteous and wise, too, than the moderator and the Assembly, have consulted with Dr. Gordon, have asked for his views and suggestions, and would gladly avail themselves of his labors and information. But this is a very different thing from being a member of the committee, appointed by the Assembly itself. And it is against this omission that I wish to utter my respectful but earnest protest.

Another criticism may also be justly made. The committee is composed of five theological professors, and these all professors of theology. As to this three remarks may be made. First, Is it ever wisest and best to have all the members of an important committee, like this, taken from one and the same class? E. g., suppose this committee had been composed of newspaper editors exclusively? or of any other class few in number? What would the Church have thought and said? and how would this Assembly itself have regarded such an appointment? "In the multitude of counselors there is safety." Second, if some or all the members of this committee were to be taken from our seminaries, why take them all from one chair, and that theology? Have we not professors in all our seminaries whose special department and work are the Bible, its interpretation, meaning, etc? These men are, they certainly ought to be, and as we all believe they are, specially fitted for the very work this committee has to do; why were none put on it? Surely they should have been represented. Third, why are no pastors on the committee?

They are by far the largest body of ministers in the Church; they after all, do the work, the most important and hardest work; they are closest to the people, best known in their views and feelings, their wishes and needs, and can best tell what would be satisfactory and sufficient; they are also, many of them, certainly, earnest, faithful and constant students of the Word, and they are really the best qualified to give a broad, common sense, true interpretation of texts, their real meanings and their proper application. And ought not one or two pastors to have had a place on this committee? I think so.

Since receiving the Assembly minutes I have seen but few of my brethren, and most of these sympathize with the views expressed above: what the others think I know not. I write on my own and sole responsibility. With the greatest respect for the Assembly, and with the kindest feelings and highest regards for the brethren mentioned, especially for the moderator—one of my oldest, truest, most revered and best beloved friends—I yet feel constrained to make this criticism and utter this protest.

G. L. L.

The Church
and
Her Soldiers.

Just now the Church is bewailing the small number of her candidates for the gospel ministry. The tide does seem to have turned, it is true, but it was none too soon. The prospect of fewer and fewer men to supply the places of those who have fallen, and to enter the new fields that have become white to the harvest, has alarmed the Church, to some extent, and perhaps changed its attitude toward those who seek to preach the gospel. Nevertheless, there is a sentiment that deters too many self-respecting men from entering the ministry, and that sentiment ought to be rebuked and it ought to be shown that it is not representative of the true and right feeling of the Church itself.

It generally starts with a little unconscious Pharisaism. If it happens at a Church court, for instance, that there are one or more ministers who were not the Church's "beneficiaries," then we are pretty apt to hear, in a discussion of the question, the doleful fear expressed that too many young men are tempted to enter the ministry by the fact that the Church makes an appropriation and that their sense of manly independence is dulled by the same fact that they receive "help" in their course of preparation. And since this sentiment really questions the whole policy of the Church in the support of its candidates and its ministry, too, and that tends to gratifying a very natural propensity, the saving of a contribution with a good conscience, the sentiment of one or two ministers is more than apt to be echoed by the eldership and the membership, and so we have it becoming pretty prevalent.

Let us try to look at it from the young man's point of view. He is a Presbyterian. He wishes to enter the Presbyterian ministry. He has had an ordinary common school education. If he wished to enter the United States military service, and be trained for official position in that service, his country would say to him: "Here are the requirements for your entering West Point: If you stand this examination, successfully, your career is in your own hands. You will be sent to West Point, all the expenses of your education and of your living will be paid freely, and when your work of preparation is over you will receive a good salary as an officer of the United States army. If you should become sick, you will be taken care of. If you should die in the service, your loved ones will receive a pension. If you live to the age limit of active service, you will receive an ample competence for your declining years. And this is simply a business proposition between us. I need the soldiers, you are good soldier material, and as there must be sacrifices on your part, even the chance of the sacrifice of life itself, your country offers you these inducements for you to dedicate yourself to her cause in her military service."

What does the Church say to her young soldiers? She says: "Before you can preach the gospel, according to the rules of the Church, you must have seven years of preparation, four in College and three in the Seminary. When you enter the ministry you may be sure that your reward, from the financial point of view, will be less than you could make in any other calling after seven years of preparation. Moreover, the relation of a pastor to his people is such a delicate one that you must not enter into competition with any of them by way of making your own living, or a supplement to it, through outside work. These are the sacrifices that I require of you from the financial point of view. You will probably be able to earn a living, but the chances that you can lay up anything for your old age, or make provision for your family after you are gone, are rather remote."

We think this to be a fair statement of the case.

Now what should the Church say, in addition to that? She should say: "Since I require you to leave whatever productive occupation you are now engaged in and also abandon any hope of anything more than a moderate living, therefore I cheerfully bear the full expense of your long course of education, and agree to support you while you are engaged in that course. And since it is not my wish that you should engage in secular work that would hinder your efficiency as a pastor of your flock, I agree that you shall have a competence during life, that you shall be taken care of in your old age, or in the case of disabling infirmity, and that your family shall be also provided for after your death, to the extent of the education of your children and the support of your widow. This I do in acknowledgment of your services to the Church of Christ and the sacrifices that that service compels you to make."

But what do too many of our thoughtless people say? Why you would suppose that the candidate for the gospel ministry were in the role of a beggar, a pensioner upon the Church's bounty. The requirements that the Church makes are forgotten, and therefore the obligations that the Church assumes. It is pointed out that the young man who goes into the other learned professions—medicine or law—is not given any help, and that it would be a great deal better if the candidate for the ministry worked his way through, too. But the course for either of the other professions is comparatively brief and inexpensive, and the rewards may be great. A lawyer or a gifted surgeon may sometimes receive one fee that will equal the salary of the average minister for a year or for all the years of his life. In other professions the rewards increase with the experience of the man. Not always is this the case in the ministry. And there is no sentiment against a doctor's or a lawyer's making all that he can, in his profession or out of it. The cases are not analogous. And so this is presumed to be the attitude of the Church itself, why should not the self-respecting Presbyterian say to himself, "I cannot preach the gospel in any other Church. I cannot give up all the best years of my life first in making money to pay for my course of preparation and then in preparing myself for preaching, and I cannot accept the position of being a 'beneficiary.' If the Church does not want me any more than it seems to, it can do without my services." We believe that this is what has happened, in very many instances, and the Church is infinitely poorer thereby. The Methodist Church is much nearer right on this question than we are. While our requirements are higher and rightly so, its promises to its soldiers, in preparation and in work and after working days are over, are much more nearly proportioned to the requirements it makes.

And then what a miserable pittance our Church gives in the work of preparation! It is nothing to brag about, as the rich man brags of his charity to the beggar. It must be supplemented by funds from somewhere, earned or borrowed or accepted as a gift in order to live at all.

And what a farce the pension system of the Southern Church is, after all, whether for the disabled, the wounded in the battle, or the families of the dead. We have even known objections to have been raised against that institution at Fredericksburg that is trying to give to the children of ministers and missionaries, fallen in battle, the education that they would have had if their parents had survived. Shame on us all! What a contrast our country makes with our Church in the treatment of its soldiers!

It is time for that sentiment to die the death. It has done enough harm. It was born of Pharisaism and Stinginess. God forbid that the Church itself, by its attitude, should put a premium upon the spirit that accepts charity. It is business that the Church should talk with her candidates, not charity. She wants the self-respecting men and not those whom she herself brands as public mendicants, who cheerfully accept the stigma. Men and brethren, are not these things so?

Review of Contemporaries.

WHY CHRIST AND THE APOSTLES PRAISED THE CHURCH.

Our Lord, we must believe, delights to praise his people. The spirit of querulous fault-finding is not his spirit. There will be no grudging acknowledgment when he speaks words of commendation. He lives his life with us, and it is his joy when we succeed. He has made us sharers of his victory and he has chosen to be sharer of the overcoming which is ours through faith in him. Christ is well pleased with our endeavors and his "well done" is spoken with cordial appreciation and delight. His words are just. He will not flatter us or hide part of the truth to make us feel content. But up to the limits of truth and justice we may be sure of cordial sympathy and his full recognition of all that we have done.

The praise of Christ is for those who are engaged in conflict, who endure and strive and overcome. If any one longs for a world of ease, life with no clouds of care, no need of difficult choosing, no peril of neglect, no days of drought and storms of trial, he is longing for a world in which there is no chance of living so as to earn the praise of Christ.

The passive and the active virtues have their turn in our Lord's praise. He especially commends the Church in Philadelphia because it has kept the word of his patience—no easy thing to do, as many of us know by sad experience. Is there any trial harder in the life of man than this—to have a longing heart and sit before forbidden doors of action day by day, watching while others enter and do the work of which we dream? Is there any virtue that obtains less recognition from our fellowmen than patience? We take for granted that men who cannot act should quietly endure; that disabilities should be accepted with unrepented face, that slights and sneers should be unrepented. Who gets praise for patience in this world that asks for patience in so large a share and so continually? But Christ puts it foremost in his commendation. He has not forgotten nor undervalued the endurance that is like his own. Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, he says, I also will keep thee in the hour of temptation which shall come on all.

There are interests which drive men apart. Christ and his apostles praise the disciples in the Church because they have been drawn together in a common love and hope. Paul found this hindrance of disunion everywhere. The churches of the age of the apostles were not always an example to the churches to today, as the churches of today are not setting an example in this regard which will be quoted with praise by the churches of tomorrow. Real brotherly kindness, the fellowship of work and hope which draws all together because all are Christ's is far rarer than it ought to be. It is the secret of efficient witness bearing. Where it exists Christ's work is done and Christ's praise is sure.

We have lost, to some extent at least, the old feeling that the Church is a society apart and with it we have lost, it must be feared, that sense of responsibility for our representation of Christ and of his kingdom which helped to make men careful of their words and deeds. The praise of Christ and his apostles came to careful walking for the sake of those who are without. We may delight in the unconsciousness of life with Christ, but we must remember also the abiding law of love to man which must continue as a motive of right living. If we can so live that it is instinctive to do well, that is far better; but if the conscious pressure of the law is needful for good works, let us be thankful for it if it helps to make us diligent in work for Christ.—The Congregationalist.

THE DOMINANT NOTE IN AMERICAN CHARACTER.

"It is no easy thing to write of religion in national character. The subject is very high and yet all-permeating, and at the same time as delicate and sensitive as the ten thousand nerve filaments that shoot through our being. But when we are analyzing the large and controlling elements of American character—(or, put it in the synthetic form and say, when we are drawing the outlines of that mighty form which looms so vastly against the modern skies, to wit, the American)—when we are doing this, how are we to escape dealing with religion? For does not the church edifice dominate our cities? Do not cathedral spires give character to all our assemblages of commercial architecture? Does not Trinity stand at the head of Wall Street? Or go into the country, and do you not find the places of worship (and hard by them the school houses) giving meaning and aspiration to the whole rural landscape? At the critical hours of American history when the noonday sky was midnight and the atmosphere saturated with murk—where do we find our great American leaders unable by human eyes to see before them? We find them, do we not, on their knees beseeching divine guidance and groping for a clasp of the Unseen Hand which would lead them and this people into the light again. The whole winter of the American troops at Valley Forge is an historical panorama of heroism, self-denial, and sacrifice. Yet every noble incident of that season of doom and dread furnishes but details of the background for the great central picture which the American mind loves to dwell upon—Washington on his knees at Valley Forge. It was Lincoln who in 1864 declared: 'God bless the churches, and blessed be God who in this hour giveth us the churches.' And Washington, in 1789, immediately after he was made the first President of the republic, wrote to the bishops of the Methodist Church:

"I trust the people of every denomination will have occasion to be convinced that I shall always strive to prove a faithful and impartial patron of genuine, vital religion . . . I take in the kindest part the promise you make of presenting your prayers at the throne of grace for me, and that I likewise implore the divine benediction on yourself and your religious community."

"Let us take no more time with illustrations to prove the existence of the deeply religious in American character. Detailed proof is superfluous that a tree exists where the tree itself stands before you and it is daylight, or that the ocean exists when you are riding on its billowy breast; or that the sun exists when you see it rise and set."—Senator Beveridge, in The Saturday Evening Post.

SCAPA.

This somewhat odd name is that adopted by an English society of some ten years standing, whose object is to prevent the landscape from being disfigured by advertising signs. Some months ago we referred to work that this society was doing in helping the authorities at Edinburgh and Dover to secure parliamentary interference in the erection of unsightly signs.

Scapa issues once in a while a paper, which is named "A Beautiful World," and after a silence of three years has favored us with another issue. The present number contains many matters of great interest in connection with this movement, and shows that it is by no means confined to England, but bids fair to become general.

The matter of disfiguring public landscapes has, we are told, been taken up by the Prussian government, and a law enacted prohibiting "outside of towns such advertising boards or notices or pictorial devices as disfigure the landscape." This law is sufficiently "elastic" as to be a burden to no one, while at the same time it recognizes the rights of the public in the beautiful in nature. The example set by the Prussian government is being followed by the Hessian Legislature.

Switzerland has entered the field, and the Grand Council of the Vaud Canton has appointed a commission, which in turn has petitioned the Council of State demanding the protection of "our dearest national inheritance, the beauty of our country," from the designs of advertising concerns.

Where is Scapa in the United States? Such a society is an immigrant whom all would welcome. The people of our own country have suffered much from advertising and more from the using of quack nostrums, and it is certainly time for us to act.—Episcopal Recorder.

The Northern Presbyterian Church is discussing very seriously the question of consolidating the seminaries. It has too many, it says. The recent endowment of old Princeton has put it far in the lead and there is a pitifully small attendance upon some others, with an overplus of good men to teach them. We need some consolidation also in the Southern Church and we are hoping that those in authority will have business sense enough to see the wisdom of it.

Devotional.

PUTTING IT UNDER.

There is a modern story of a merchant who was devoted to high purposes in life, who was determined to be a man free from bondage to the lower things. One day a ship of his that was coming homeward was delayed. He became anxious, and the next day was yet more troubled, and the third day still more.

Then he came to himself, awaking to the true condition of bondage to earthly things, and said: "Is it possible that I have come to love money for itself, and not for its nobler uses?" Taking the value of the ship and its cargo, he gave it to charities, not because he wished to be rid of the money, but because only thus could he get the conquest over himself, holding his love of money under his feet. —J. R. Miller, D. D.

If we are really and always and equally ready to do whatsoever the King appoints, all the trials and vexations arising from any change in His appointments, great or small, simply do not exist. If He appoints me to work there, shall I lament that I am not to work here? If he appoints me to work indoors today, am I to be annoyed because I am not to work out of doors? If I meant to write His message this morning, shall I grumble because He sends interrupting visitors, rich or poor, to whom I am to speak them, or "show kindness" for His sake, or, at least, obey His command, "Be courteous?" If all my members are really at His disposal, why should I be put out if today's appointment is some simple work for my hands or errands for my feet instead of some seemingly more important doing of head or tongue?—F. R. Havergal.

A little consideration of what takes place around us every day would show us that a higher law than that of our will regulates events; that our painful labors are very unnecessary and altogether fruitless; that only in our easy, simple spontaneous action are we strong, and by contenting ourselves with obedience we become divine. Belief and love—a believing love—will relieve us of a vast load of care. Oh, my brothers, God exists!—R. W. Emerson.

The very difficulties of life, of which we are so apt to complain, are converted into the means of that discipline, that self-improvement, which is the great end of life. Let a man's present desires be met and satisfied without any exertion on his part and he would be content to remain as he is. Progress is the child of struggle and struggle is the child of difficulty.—James Walker.

To wait patiently, men must work cheerfully. Cheerfulness is an excellent working quality, imparting great elasticity to the character. As a Bishop has said, "Temper is nine-tenths of Christianity;" so are cheerfulness and diligence nine-tenths of practical wisdom. They are the life and soul of success, as well as of happiness, perhaps the very highest pleasure in life consisting in clear, brisk, conscious working; energy, confidence and every other good quality mainly depending upon it.—Samuel Smiles.

If I am asked what is the remedy for the deeper sorrows of the human heart—what a man should chiefly look to in progress through life as the power that is to sustain him under trials and enable him manfully to confront his afflictions—I must point to something which in a well-known hymn is called "The old, old story," told in an old, old Book, and taught with an old, old teaching, which is the greatest and best gift ever given to mankind.—William Ewart Gladstone.

Missionary.

CHINESE LIBERALITY.

Foreign missionaries laboring among the Chinese are in more than one city embarrassed by the abundance of the gifts showered upon them by the natives. In some places the heathen have put into the hands of the American missionaries enough funds to build complete churches, hospitals and schools. In Canton, for example, one Chinese woman has contributed $3,500 to add a children's ward to the women's hospital in that place. Mr. Li, a merchant of Ningpo, has presented the Presbyterian Board with $30,000 for a high grade boys' school. Similar instances are reported from other cities.—The Interior.

In a letter Dr. John G. Paton gives an account of the work in Malekula, where he had spent four months on his way to Aniwa from the meeting of the New Hebrides Synod. He writes: "Malekula is the second largest island in our group, and is believed to have a population of from sixteen to twenty thousand savages, who cannot be said to wear any clothing. They strangle to death or bury alive many of their aged, and also of their sick and suffering and all infants whose mothers die. When their little girls grow up to be over six years of age they knock out their upper two front teeth generally, after which the father of each tries to sell her as a wife to the man who will give him the largest number of male hogs for her, ranging from six to twelve. She weeps and pleads with him not to sell and send her away. He disregards her pleading. She is sold, and forced to follow her purchaser to his home, where he may have three or more wives living already. If she runs away twice, he with fiery sticks burns three holes in a row into her breast or sides, and if she runs away a third time, he places hot burning stones behind her knees to prevent her being able to run away. So some are lamed for life. Yet even among these savages our three missionaries here have now, after a few years trying and often dangerous work, among them 234 intelligent church members and 1260 attending their church services and a hopeful work so begun and extending. Their converts are nearly all a fine powerful body of young men and women. On the most healthy spot near the mission house at each station they have built a new Christian village, in which they live, all clothed, and begin and close every day with praise and prayer, help each other and the missionary all they can, and from which they go forth to preach the gospel and talk to the heathen of sin and salvation by Jesus Christ. And in it the ablest are trained as teachers to be placed in distant villages among the heathen. They are a daily object lesson to the heathen of how happy and prosperous they may all be by becoming Christians. They invite all new converts to their village; and if they wish to live in it, they all unite in helping them to build and add their house to it.—Presbyterian Witness.

Suppose that a fresh flow of energy, brave, cheerful, joyous, should be poured into all the forms of Christian work. Suppose that foreign missions and home missions should no longer have to plead and beg for support, but that plenty of money should come flowing in to send out every missionary that wants to go, and that plenty of the strongest and best young men should dedicate their lives to the ministry of Christ, and that every household where His gospel is believed should find its highest honor and its greatest joy in helping to extend His Kingdom.—Selected.

A Hindu author, in a recently published book, says that there are over two thousand different castes in so small a town as Surat. Surely India needs the socializing influence of Christianity, which should be only another way of saying that it needs its religious influence.—Exchange.

Sunday School Lesson.

BY REV. H. G. HILL, D. D.

DAVID BRINGS UP THE ARK.

II Sam. 6: 1-12. October 4, 1903.

The ark, after its return from the land of the Philistines, remained at Kirjathjearim twenty years. When David was established on the throne and had some rest from his enemies, he determined to bring the ark to the tabernacle which he had prepared for it at Jerusalem. The ark was a symbol of Jehovah's presence with His people and an expressive type of Christ. It kept the law safely and so has Christ kept the law perfectly. Over it was the blood sprinkled. Mercy where the Lord graciously revealed himself to His worshippers. In Christ, too, we find our mercy seat, where through atoning blood God reveals himself in mercy to the earnest suppliant. It accorded with David's devout character that he should desire to have the ark near him, in his capital city, Jerusalem. Our lesson describes his effort to bring it there, and affords salutary lessons.

II. Notice David's attempt to remove the ark.

David's purpose was to honor Jehovah, and to secure the divine presence and blessing. He made extensive and costly preparations. He assembled thirty thousand chosen men of Israel. He had constructed a new cart, on which to place the sacred ark. To express his joy and gladsome expectations, the King and his companions played before the Lord upon all kinds of musical instruments. Yet despite his good intentions, and vigorous efforts, David's attempt to remove the ark at this time proved a disastrous failure. Why was he disappointed, and sadly carried the ark to the house of Obadom? The reason was as David afterwards acknowledged, because "he did not seek the Lord in due order," in his own prescribed way. He ought to have summoned the Levites of the house of Kohath as the Lord had directed, to bear the ark on their shoulders and not after the example of the Philistines, employed a new cart for its transportation. David was therefore guilty of disobedience to plain commands, and if he was ignorant of these commands he had the Scriptures and his ignorance was sinful. We must honor God in His appointed ways and not according to our own devices, and if we are ignorant of His ways, while possessing His Word, ignorance increases guilt. It is sad to consider that men designing to know God often commit sin in their very worship, because it does not accord with God's expressed will.

II. Uzzah's sin and judgment.

This son of Abinadab, unquestionably had a regard for the ark and his rash act in taking hold of it to steady it when shaken on the rough road, by the oxen, was proof of this. But he was guilty of irreverence and disobedience in touching the ark. The appointed bearers were forbidden to touch or to look upon the ark, and its sacredness was thus sedulously guarded. He had no divine authority for ministering at the ark at all and was positively prohibited from so doing. Hence his judgment for the Lord smote him with instant death. And God smote him there for his error; and there he died by the ark of God. We need not suppose that Uzzah perished for ever, for the Lord sometimes visits with temporal death for transgression those whose souls He in mercy saves. We find in 1 Cor. that the Lord smote with disease and death some who abused the Lord's Supper, and yet the context implied that they were not condemned to eternal death.

III. God's gracious presence brings a blessing.

David, because of the breach upon Uzzah, was afraid to carry the ark to Jerusalem, and removed it to the house of Obadom, the Gittite. Here it remained three months and became a means of blessing.

Westminster League.

BY REV. HUGH W. HOON.

WHAT JOSEPH TEACHES US.

Gen. 41: 14-16, 42-46. Topic for October 11.

The life of Joseph is a forcible lesson to us of how God honors them who honor Him. Joseph, as a youth, was clean and pure in his life and followed after the ways of God as they were taught him by his father, Jacob. Some might expect that as Joseph was thus a Godly man all his days he ought not to have been made to suffer. But no where is there a promise that the Godly shall not suffer in this life. But the promises are very numerous that God will overrule all these things to His own glory and the good of His followers. Joseph had sorrows and trials and came out of them stronger and better for having endured them. No one is a worse being for having undergone affliction provided he keeps his faith in God. It is only that person who imagines that he ought to be exempt from suffering who is the worse for it. He loses faith in God, because his faith was of the weak kind that comes and goes with the conditions which surround him.

Let us take a glance at the events of Joseph's life and see how much from a worldly standpoint he had to complain of. In the first place we find his father rebuking him and his brethren sneering at him for the visions which God gave him. We find the sneers of his brethren turning into hatred and malice toward him. They sell him into bondage. When he arrives in Egypt he is imprisoned on a false accusation. Instead of being guilty of the sin of which he is accused, he is innocent and punished for his innocence. In prison he puts his fellow prisoners under obligations to him only to be forgotten. What a long list of grievances this is! How many of us are there who could have gone through them all and remained faithful? To how many of us would the thought have come, what is the use? My fellow men have forgotten me. God has forgotten me. I might as well give it up. Many under similar circumstances have given up. One of the saddest things the writer ever heard was from a woman who had been a minister's wife, an active worker in the Church, in fact a leader in the Lord's work. For twenty years she had prayed and been a faithful Christian but that she had undergone so many sorrows that her faith had been stamped out and her prayers had not been answered in the way she wanted them answered, she did not believe in prayer any longer. Of course the woman had misinterpreted the providential dealings in her life. She had never learned that God's will must be supreme, and affliction in her life was the opposite of its effect in the life of Joseph. A true faith says: "Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him." To Joseph God's way was not understood at first, but his faith never wavered. In after years he was permitted to see what God's plan had been and then he could attempt to relieve the distress of his brethren by telling them: "Ye meant evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to pass, as it is this day, to save much people alive." We will have made long strides, in the Christian life when we can say: "I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake."

When Joseph was called into the presence of Pharaoh to interpret his dreams, he claimed no superior wisdom for himself. "It is not in me; God shall give an answer in peace." "What God is about to do He showeth to Pharaoh." The follower of Christ who claims nothing for himself but gives all honor and glory to God, is the one who will accomplish most for the salvation of sinners and the betterment of mankind in general. It is hard to bury the self out of sight in our work, but we should not be satisfied until we have done it. We should remember that whatever we are that is better than others is the the gift of God.

Contributed.

DEDICATORY SERMON AT CARROLLTON, MISSISSIPPI.

BY REV. T. D. LATIMER.

Dearly beloved, we have assembled on this auspicious morning to dedicate this edifice to the worship of Almighty God.

And our souls are jubilant with gratitude and love as we enter this beautiful structure so harmonious in all of its exterior and interior arrangements.

We are grateful to God for the zeal, the diligence the sacrifice and the harmony that has characterized this enterprise from its inception to its consummation.

And now that "the willing hands and loving hearts" that have contributed to this noble cause are here present before God we can but pray that He will accept this offering and "make his face to shine upon us and give use peace." "Peace be within thy walls, O! Zion!

In harmony with the solemnities of this occasion I shall invite your attention to God's word as contained in Rom. 1:16. "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

In an age like this it is hard to realize the full import of this assertion. Surrounded by the light of nineteen centuries, living in a land where Christianity is popular and powerful, where we may worship God "beneath our own vine and fig tree" unmolested, we are surprised that the apostle should make the declaration that he was not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ.

But the condition of things was very different then. The lapse of time has wrought wonderful changes in the toleration of Christianity.

When the words of the text were penned, Jews, and Gentiles, rulers and people, save a few here and there, were hostile to the Gospel and at variance with its requisitions. The Son of God had been treated as a malefactor and cruelly put to death. To profess allegiance to him or his followers was a voluntary assumption of all the odium and disrespect of the masses, and not unfrequently were the disciples of the blessed Master compelled to suffer even death itself for their devotion to His doctrines.

Hence the boldness of the expression, "Not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." To unfurl the banner of the cross in the midst of the pomp and pageantry of the proudest city the world ever saw; to proclaim the plain pungent truths of the Gospel to a people whose prejudices had grown inveterate by long continued popular odium and excessive corruptions; to assail vicious habits, idolatrous worship and unhallowed legislation, when no less a monster than the bloody Nero swayed the scepter, required no ordinary zeal. But Paul, equipped with celestial armor, sustained by the grace of God and guided by his promises, could unhesitatingly affirm in the very face of Jewish malice, Grecian wisdom and Roman power, that he was not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth.

Nor is this reason confined to the days of the Apostle. It is the plea of every blood-bought soul that has experienced the transforming power and imperishable beauty of the gospel. Its intrinsic excellence and its divine power to save souls has been and ever will be a sufficient reason for its acceptance and promulgation of all men.

I apprehend, there, my hearers, that I shall not speak without purpose if I signalize as my theme—The Divine Power of the Gospel.

What then are some of the elements by which the greatness of the Gospel's power is evinced?

I. It is great in the marvelous transformation it produces in the unregenerated soul in quickening and humbling it to the overtures of divine grace.

To the most superficial observer of the acts of mankind in an unregenerate state the appalling fact is clear that the human race by nature are out of harmony with the law of God, and "dead in trespasses and sins. Men of all castes and conditons are constrained by the convictions of their conscience to acknowledge that they sin against the purposes of the law. And yet, strange and unaccountable as it may appear, it is nevertheless a fact, that many even of those who admit the existence of a Supreme Ruler and acknowledge their accountability to him live indifferent as to his approval or disapproval of their conduct. To arouse the mind from this state of spiritual ignorance and indifference philosophers of every school have expended their energies but without success.

The treasures of literature and science have been exhausted in forming beautiful theories concerning man's chief good and the best way to attain it. Philosophy has furnished her deep and subtle disquisitions concerning the nature and origin of man's moral evil, its extent, tendency and proper remedy, and all of these have eloquently plead the cause of human nature, expatiated largely upon the purity of man's heart and the perfection and absolute sufficiency of mere reason, regardless of inspiration, to give a practical knowledge of the essentials, truths and duties that exalt humanity.

But how fruitless have all these methods proved in restoring the sinner's sin-sick soul to integrity or in elevating it to that perfection to which it must attain to obtain salvation. The history of heretical sects, who have ignored the teaching of the Gospel and turned away to worship the false Gods of philosophy, will suffice to convince any candid mind of the inadequacy of human devices to meet the requirements of the divine law. Nor will anything less than the Divine Power of the Gospel of Christ be sufficient to a correct standard of moral and religious excellence. For just in proportion as the mind has departed from the plain simple truths of the Gospel it has the more eagerly yielded to the delusive influence of error and braced itself in more desperate opposition to the doctrines of free unmerited grace. But when all expédients fail to quicken and humble the unregenerated soul, see the amazing power of the Gospel to free it from the dominion of sin and guilt and to restore it to primitive loveliness and glory.

The inimitable beauty and simplicity of the Saviour's character, the sublimity of his sentiments, the touching invitations and appeals of his mercy, the overwhelming agonies of the cross, and the unparalleled love of God in giving his Son to die for sinners, all tend to subdue the feelings and cause the heart to feel a godly sorrow that it never felt before.

A light pervades the Word of God which is calculated to break the slumbers of the guilty, to expose and blast the hopes of the insincere and to quicken the impenitent to seek salvation which far transcends the power of human wisdom. "For the Word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of the soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Guided by the unerring word of God the humble soul looks away to the cross of Christ and in silent wonder beholds Immanuel sinking in the agonies of death for ungrateful apostate man. There as he traces in characters of sorrow and blood his own guilt and the free sovereign grace—the unfathomable love of God; there as he contemplates with amazement the majesty, the beauty and harmony of the economy of redemption, the pride of his heart is struck with the paralysis of death and he seeks an abiding interest in his Redeemer. The doctrine of Christ and of him crucified has been efficacious to humble the proud heart of the sinner when the thunders of Sinai and the flames of Tophet have failed.

II. Again, the Divine Power that centers in the Gospel of Christ is great in its effects upon the intellectual and moral activities of the soul.

1. The entrance of the Gospel gives life.

The frosts of sin and death have laid their cold and icy hands upon the fairest flowers that have adorned the human soul and naught but the fructifying beams that radiate from the Son of Righteousness can resuscitate and clothe them with primitive beauty and loveliness. Christ alone is the believer's life, and from him issues a stream pure as crystal to transform into Eden the sterile waste of life.

2. The intrinsic power of the Gospel of Christ gives knowledge to the soul.

Astronomy may compute her stars, her suns and her solar systems yet fail to discover the great Son and center of the moral universe.

Geology may strive by her fossils and precious tones, her formative periods and strange petrifications to cast light upon creation's dawn, but the very first part of the Inspired Record sheds more light in regard to the world's formation than all geological science could have done throughout the ages. Nor could all the pomp of diction or erudition of heathen sages ever cast one ray of promise across the dark cavern of oblivion till the everlasting light of the Gospel began to shed its effulgence abroad. But wherever its beams diffuse themselves "they rekindle in the heart extinguished love, relight the lamp of life and restore the Sabbath to the soul." In the Gospel the rich and the poor, the simple and the wise find true wisdom. The paragons of infidelity both ancient and modern have failed in all their philosophical research to devise a code of morals in any sense comparable to the Gospel in simplicity of diction, sublimity of sentiment or purity of morals.

3. The divine power of the Gospel gives joy.

What peans of joy greet the soul when it hears amid the roar of time's effacing waves the sweet echoes of eternal life! While conscience in solemn reverence for law and justice shouts "the soul that sinneth it shall die," hear the sweet strains of the Gospel in loudest tones wafted back from calvary, "he that believeth in me shall never die." The Gospel penetrates the veil that intervenes between the eternities and alleviates the burdens of the weary soul. Its tread is marked by peace and plenty and with its handmaid, Science, it causes the desert to blossom as the rose.

Its children bask in the bliss of temporal and spiritual conveniences and comforts. Along its march the wigwam gives place to the cozy cottage, the log church to the lofty spired temple, and the wilderness to the golden fields of grain.

Enslaved woman is emancipated from her thralldom and exalted to be the happy companion and brilliant peer of domestic bliss. Who, that has traced the power of the Gospel in the past and felt the joys of pardoned sin, does not "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory."

And now in conclusion, my hearers, since we have seen the enlightening and sanctifying influences of the power that centers in the Gospel of Christ, let us in golden accents proclaim its hallowed virtues and reconsecrate ourselves to the services of this house of God "remembering that the best dedication is not the offering of the material structure to God but the personal dedication of its members." Then, dear hearers, let a holy zeal and heavenly walk conspire to attune your hearts in unison with heavenly love so that—

"The good begun shall onward flow

In many a branching stream and wider grow

The seeds that in these few fleeting hours

Our hands unsparing and unwearied sow

Shall deck our graves with amaranthine flowers

And yield fruits divine in Heaven's immortal bowers.

No good deed, no genuine sacrifice is ever wasted. If there be good in it, God will use it for His own holy purposes, and whatever of ignorance or weakness or mistake was mingled with it will drop away as the withered sepals drop away when the full flower was blown.—Frederick W. Farrar.

SOUTHWESTERN PRESBYTERIAN UNIVERSITY—CAN IT BE MOVED?

The late civil war left several crippled colleges either owned by the Southern Presbyterian Church, or closely identified with it.

Some of these still survive, and are prospering, while others have been closed.

There was, several years ago, a strong advocacy of consolidating all these institutions into a University, worthy of the Church.

The Assembly, of 1870, called a convention, to meet at Huntsville, Alabama, two days before the meeting of the Assembly there in 1871, to consider the educational policy of the Church. After full discussion, for two days, a paper, drawn by the writer of this article, was unanimously adopted, and was reported to the Assembly; and, after two days' full discussion there, was unanimously adopted, with a single added provision, which in no way affected the tenor of the paper.

The policy of attempted removals and consolidations had not a single advocate left, after a full discussion of that matter.

Synodical co-operation was recommended, and the development of schools already in existence.

With the Assembly's paper as a text, the Synod of Nashville invited several sister Synods to confer and co-operate.

The contiguous Synods of Kentucky, and Georgia, and also Missouri, declined to enter the combination to found a university, worthy of them all. I argued the matter in the Synod of Kentucky and Missouri. I was not present in the Synod of Georgia. Those Synods had other views and other prospects.

The conference resulted in the founding of the university at Clarksville, on the nucleus of Stewart College.

A number of other schools and places claimed the privilege of competing for the location of the university. This competition very much increased the bid from Clarksville, Tennessee.

Stewart College was founded by the Masonic Fraternity. The school failed of success, because of divided counsels, and the founding of a rival school elsewhere.

Nine or ten citizens of Clarksville purchased the college property, with the proviso, that a college be maintained there. These gentlemen transferred the school to the Presbytery of Nashville, and they in turn to the Synod of Nashville, who assumed the trust, and appointed a board of trustees, who, in the four years, immediately before the war, managed a successful school, and raised a subscription of fifty thousand dollars, of which about thirty-seven thousand dollars was paid, and remains securely invested to this day. The remainder of the subscription suffered the fortunes of the war.

The money was certainly given to carry out the trust undertaken by the Synod of Nashville, and was very largely given by citizens of Clarksville.

The school was broken up by the war; the property was dismantled, the library, apparatus, cabinets, etc., were destroyed. The trustees of Stewart College prosecuted a claim for damages before Congress, and, by the energy and wisdom of Dr. Summey, the claim was allowed, and twenty-five thousand dollars paid, which money certainly became a part of the same nucleus, as that named above, and, in its origin, antedates 1861.

There are certain other gifts of equipment and endowment, which belonged to the Stewart College regime prior to its transfer to the University Board. These, with the above mentioned funds, make an aggregate of nearly seventy thousand dollars, all of which funds have exactly the same permanent complexion, as if "Stewart College was written all over the investments."

Since the University Board took charge of the property, at least forty thousand dollars has been expended on the original real estate of Stewart College, in the way of new buildings, betterments, renovations, etc., besides material additions to the general equipment. No one will deny that all these things have the same complexion, as the things named above. Further than this, whenever special help was needed, to meet the needs of the young and growing university, the people of Clarksville always responded liberally. The last such effort, in which I took part, was in May, 1888, when six thousand dollars were contributed, one Sabbath night, in the Presbyterian Church, and it is a remarkable fact that several of the original purchasers of Stewart College were present, as the largest contributors.

We are now prepared to enunciate this proposition. In the growth and development of anything, be it a tree, a State, a man, a college, a university, the accretions are all assimilated, and become part of the organism, and partake of its distinctive and essential features and principles. The life of the organism permeates and assimilates all, and imparts its own character to all.

This principle would seem to settle the question of the removal of any of the assets of the university, however recently acquired. You undertake to dismember a tree, and remove all of its growth, except the original scion, that was planted, and the dismemberment is death; and that is what the attempt to remove the assets of the university means in its last analysis.

There are, however, other facts, that bear upon the question of removal. The offer from Clarksville for the location of the university was a joint offer of three distinct parties: The trustees of Stewart College; the City of Clarksville, and a number of private individuals, joining in a subscription to a fund.

These three parties acted jointly to secure the location of the University of Clarksville. The trustees of Stewart College offered all their property, both real and personal; the individual subscribers offered the subscription list, with the proviso, that it should be used for additional grounds and buildings—many of these subscribers are dead; the City of Clarksville offered fifty thousand dollars of bonds, with the proviso, that the city should be entitled to ten perpetual scholarships in the university, to be appointed out of their public school. Thus the acceptance of the three-fold offer for location became a contract, when accepted, and the contract with the city included the further provision of free tuition yearly to pupils from the graded school of the city, and this part of the contract has been virtually ratified every year since, by the appointment by the city of beneficiaries of these scholarships, and the university has taught all so appointed. It is difficult to see how the contract between all the parties could have been made more legally or morally binding. The estimated value of the joint offer made, and accepted, was about one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars, or more. Certainly not a dollar of this can be transferred to any other point.

They tell us, however, that they do not expect to move any of the property or moneys, given to secure location, but will leave all that behind. But who, pray, has the right to step in, and cancel the joint contract with all its conditions and provisions, and hand back to all the parties their contributions? Shall the associated Synods? They were not parties to the contract, except through the Board of Directors. It is not competent for the Synods to cancel contracts by a vote, shall the Board of Directors, by a vote, cancel a contract, under which they have been working for nearly thirty years? Shall they serve notice on the living and the dead that they will work under the contract no longer, and will move to other pastures green? Contracts cannot be canceled so.

The importunate apostles of removal seem now to claim only the endowment of the Palmer Professorship and the McComb gift; and they make two pleas:

First: It will do so much more good at Atlanta. None but a prophet can tell this, even if it does not proceed upon the proposal to do evil, that good may come. The other plea is this: Mr. McComb gave this to the Lord and not to Clarksville.

It is of record that he gave it to the university, and yet it was to the Lord, for he proposed to be the Lord's steward in making the gift. A cup of cold water, food, raiment, service, money, are all gifts to the Lord, but they are all usually given to a definite person, place, or thing, for His glory, and the title thus acquired is good against all comers.

So, in this case, even if the terms and conditions of the gift were not so plain that they cannot be misunderstood, it is sufficient to repeat, here, that, when the gift was accepted by the university, it took the complexion of their trust, and must be used on the same principle as all the rest of their trust, and may not be detached at pleasure, for the benefit of some other kindred, concrete enterprise, for which it was not definitely given.

The Board of Directors of the University at Clarksville, saw in the papers, that it was definitely proposed to deliver the university to Atlanta, and, with such confidence that the subscriptions to the Atlanta University were conditions on such delivery; and that, too, when no overtures had been made to them on the subject. They, therefore, took up the matter and briefly stated their views of the impossibility of such removal and their unwillingness to entertain such a proposition; and deplored the harm done them, by such unseemly agitation. But they were informed by some of the agitators, in the papers, that it was none of their business, and that their masters, the Synods, would settle the matter for them. It became necessary, therefore, to set forth the relations of the Board of Directors to the Synods, and to all such questions. The Synods, by unanimous vote in them all, adopted a "Plan of Union," which is of the "nature of fundamental law," for university. Ecclesiastical control is secured at the pivotal point, by the election of a Board of Directors, by the Synods, and ecclesiastical administration (the bane and curse of so many church schools, in the past) was guarded against, by a definite provision, that the sole government of the university should be in the Board of Directors, and this provision has not been so guarded in all these years, that the Board of Directors, as such, make no official report to the Synods for their approval or disapproval, because that would introduce administration upon the floor of the Synods. But it is argued that removal is not a matter of administration, and, therefore, a matter for the Synods. Now it so happens that the "Plan of Union" provides that the Board of Directors shall "at their discretion locate and develop the institution as rapidly as their means in hand will justify, etc." Location (if anything) belongs to the Board of Directors, and removal is simply a change of location.

Under this Plan of Union, the Board of Directors have located, made contracts, administered and developed the University, at their own best discretion, until this day, without interference by the Synods. Any attempt, by one or more of the Synods, to alter this arrangement of the duties and responsibilities of the Board of Directors can only end in disaster.

This same "Plan of Union" was adopted by the South Atlantic Synods some years ago almost verbatim and the same constitution, substantially, has been adopted by the General Assembly, and by nearly all of the Synods and Presbyteries, as the proper constitution of schools under Church control, of any grade mutatis mutandis. As for myself, I feel more concern for the proper observance of the principles of this "Constitution" than for the fate of any one school, however important.

I may be allowed a personal word in closing. I yield to no one in my interest in the Atlanta movement. I was for years president of the Board of Regents of the South Atlantic University (proposed). I have long believed, and still believe that Atlanta is a great center for Presbyterian education, if we are true to ourselves. And I am rejoiced that our Church there is waked up, at last, to its needs. I believe they "will not be at rest till they have finished the thing," even though they have made a mistake, in the matter of moving the university from Clarksville, Tennessee. I may be permitted to say further, that my intimate connection with the movement at Clarksville, from 1870 to 1888, and even since, entitles me to speak with authority of all matters, concerning that institution, as no other living man can speak, except my friend and adviser and helper, during the entire period of my connection with that institution, Hon. D. N. Kennedy. I wish to say further, that, in this paper, I express my opinion about the possibility of moving any other institution. Every case must be judged on its own merits.

J. B. SHEARER.

SERMON.

R. W. ALEXANDER.

"Then they sought to take him: but no man laid hands on him, because his hour was not yet come."
—John, vii:30.

People seldom like to hear the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Like a two-edged sword, it cuts from around the heart and life the hypocritical mask and exposes the wearer, in his naked deformity, to public gaze. No wonder, therefore, we find here the words, "They sought to take him," for Jesus has been preaching the truth, and, naturally enough, the Jewish Rabbis were offended. But, being unable to overturn his propositions with arguments or to refute his assertions with facts, they begin to denounce and abuse him. Failing in this way to crush him, they determined to have him arrested as a common criminal. First, for blasphemy against God. Second, and in order to make his condemnation doubly sure, for conspiracy against the Roman government. So they send the officers of the law to take him. Clothed with power and authority from the highest court of the nation, a band of determined men go forth to make Jesus Christ their prisoner. Their search is quickly rewarded. They find him in the temple preaching and instructing the people. They mean to arrest him. This is why they have come. "But no man laid hands on him." Why did they not fall upon him, bind him and take him off to the Sanhedrin? Did friends conceal and protect him? No. He continued teaching in the temple. Then, why did they not take him? This is the reason they gave to the Scribes and Pharisees: "Never man spake like this man." And these officers were, doubtless, honest in what they said. There was no motive, no inducement for them to lie. I do not believe that they would put themselves to any great inconvenience to avoid telling the truth, especially when the truth would answer their purpose just as well, if not better than a falsehood.

These men gave to the Sanhedrin what they honestly believed to be the real reason why they did not arrest Jesus when they said: "Never man spake like this man." But the true explanation of their failure is to be found in the latter clause of our text, "Because his hour was not yet come." I say, in these words lies the true explanation of their failure. For after this he is arrested. Then they blind-fold him, slap his face with open palms, thump him across the head with sticks, whip him, spit upon him, thorn-crown and heap all manner of indignities upon him. But they cannot touch him now. Why? For no other reason than this: God's time for all this has not yet come, and until then, devils may plot, Scribes and Pharisees may command, officers may go forth armed with all human and Satanic power and authority, but they shall return empty-handed with the excuse: "Never man spake like this man."

"They sought to take him, but no man laid hands on him, because his hour was not yet come."

The one great truth of this text is the overruling providence of God. I confess that I am at a loss to know of what practical use this text is to those who affirm that when God had finished His work of creation He abandoned it, just left it to work out its own destiny. Neither can I understand how this Scripture squares with that system of philosophy which teaches "that God is everything and that everything is God." Nor can I understand how this text falls into harmony with that system of theology which makes so much of "human free-agency;" which denies to God absolute sovereignty; which denies to Him any definite, fixed plan, but affirms that His plans are determined, or are modified at least, by the acts of men.

The truth is, before the creation the plan was, and when the creation was affected it was according to the plan, and through every period of the world's history everything that has come to pass, has come to pass according to this pre-determined plan, and nothing ever will come to pass that is not embraced in God's eternal purpose.

I call attention, then, to the comprehensiveness of God's providence. Not only does He bear up some millions of systems of worlds, holding them in their proper places as they whirl and circle through space so that there is neither wreck nor jar. He also pastures the wild goat, guides the roe to the water brook and directs the bee to the blossom. The tiniest insect that flits through the air is just as really the object of His care as the mightiest planet or the most brilliant sun that hangs in the deep abyss of space. The gentle zephyrs and the howling cyclones, the beautiful sunshine and the black and stormy days come and go at His command. Prosperity and adversity, sickness and health, sorrow and gladness, are carefully distributed by His fingers. Worlds leap into being, and worlds melt and flee away at His bidding. Nations are subject to Him; rulers exercise authority by Him. He sets up kings and He deposes kings. "He sendeth the springs into the valleys. . . . He watereth the hills from His chambers. . . . He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man. . . . The young lions roar after their prey and seek their meat from God. . . . He opens His hand and satisfies the desire of every living thing."

We gather from this text, also, that God has "a set time and a fixed way" for everything that comes to pass, and everything must come to pass at that time and in that way. Not a moment before, not a moment after, but exactly at the set time and in the appointed way of God.

These men could not arrest Jesus for two reasons. First, they were not the men according to God's plan who should do it. Second, the fixed hour, according to his purpose, had not come. Friends, there are no "happen-sos" with God. He ever moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform, but always according to an eternally fixed plan. All things come to pass "according to His determinate counsel and foreknowledge," that is, just as He purposed they should and at the exact time He has set. Thus, in His own good time and way, He is bringing all things to a grand and glorious consummation.

It is absolutely essential that God should have "a set time and a fixed way" for all things. Were it otherwise He could not be God, for He would be but a finite being and a finite god is no god at all. Should anything come to pass unforeseen, Omniscience is destroyed, because He will have "gathered information from an accidental circumstance wholly independent of Him." But infinite wisdom is an essential attribute of Deity, and it is not possible that information, however slight, could be added to infinite wisdom. Says an inspired apostle: "Known unto God are all His works from the beginning." Not some, but all.

Then, should anything come to pass not in the way of His appointment, do you not perceive that Omnipotence, another essential attribute, is gone? For, "here is one act or circumstance, at least, over which He had no control." For example: We all know, since it has become a matter of history, what God's purpose concerning Joseph was. But suppose that Jacob, knowing the dislike of his brethren for Joseph, had not sent him to enquire concerning their welfare and bring him word. Or suppose that, Joseph having been sent, those Ishmaelites had not come along where they were tending their flocks and Joseph had been left in that pit! Do you not perceive that the purpose of God concerning Joseph would have been defeated? The truth is, God has His time and His way for everything and all things come about in His way and at His time.

Now, if God is so great in power and infinite in wisdom; why did He permit sin to come into the world? Being infinite in wisdom, He could not but foresee its awful consequences. Being infinite in power, He could have prevented its entrance! Then, why did He suffer it to come? I answer, frankly, I do not know. "The secret things belong unto God; the revealed unto us." But, if the question be asked, Why does He not destroy the evil and suffer only that which is pure and good to remain? I can easily answer that question. Our text answers it, "Because the hour has not yet come." Evil will be banished; the earth will be purified; the wicked shall cease to trouble and annoy; "God will bring to pass every jot and tittle of His purpose; He will perform all things whatsoever His hand and His counsel determined should be done." But in His time and in His way—not yours nor mine. We gather again from this text that God, in His providence, either restrains men in their career of folly and wickedness, or, permitting them to go on, makes their intended mischief to redound to His glory and His people's good. For example: The asperity, harshness and acrimony of the Scribes and Pharisees; the base treachery of Judas; the cowardly conduct of Pilate; the brutality of the crucifiers, were not these all overruled of God for the consummation of His own glorious purpose and the unspeakable benefit of His people? But had these men any idea, think you, that they were doing God's will? Nay, verily. Yet through them He accomplished that which "His hand and His counsel determined should be done." Ah! says one, I perceive that you would destroy "human free-agency" and reduce man to a mere machine! Not at all; but I will ask, what is "human free-agency?" Take the case of our text. Why did not these officers make the arrest? They went out from the Sanhedrin and hunted Jesus up for no other purpose. They went clothed with power and authority from the highest court of the nation. They had the warrant, legally drawn up and properly signed. Not a hand was raised to hinder them. Jesus made no effort to escape; they made none to arrest. Why? Ah! they would have been cutting across God's plan. There was an unseen influence holding them in check; an influence none the less powerful because hidden and unseen. Yet, did ever men act more freely than did these men when they went forth to make the arrest? Did ever men act more freely than did these men when they left Jesus and returned to the Sanhedrin with the excuse, "Never man spake like this man."

Again, Joseph's brothers sold him to a company of strangers. Had they any idea, think you, that they were not acting freely? Were they not conscious of voluntary wrong doing? They shall speak for themselves: "We are verily guilty concerning our brother . . . And Reuben said, spake I not unto you saying, do not sin against the child, and ye would not hear; therefore, behold also, his blood is required." Compare this, their first confession with Joseph's explanation when he makes himself known to them: "I am Joseph, your brother, whom ye sold into Egypt. Now, therefore, be not grieved nor angry with yourselves that ye sold me hither; for God did send me before to preserve life. Ye thought evil against me, but God meant it unto good." Did ever men act more freely than did these men? Yet, did ever men fulfill more perfectly the will and purpose of God? "Ye thought evil. . . . God meant good." In the light of these and many, many other passages and incidents that could be recited, what do you mean by the expression "human free-agency?"

This text teaches that our lives as individuals are in God's hands. To me, this is one of the sweetest truths taught in the whole compass of Scripture. Wherever I go, whatever I do my life is in God's hands. From earliest infancy to hoary age He is my keeper. From the cradle down to the grave there is nothing that happens with reference to my life by His appointment or His permission. When Job's cattle and property and children were all destroyed, what did the old patriarch say? Did he say, "The Lord gave, and the Sabaeans and the Chaldeans have taken away? Did he say, "God made me rich, but Satan has made me poor." Nay; he does not recognize the hand of Satan or any of his emissaries in his distresses at all. He knew that they were finite and limited beings and could have no power at all against him except it were given them from above. And so he looks behind and above all agents and second causes up to the great First Cause: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away."

Why could not Saul pin David to the wall with his javelins? Paul was in all manner of dangers; in perils of robbers, in perils on the sea, in perils among false brethren; he was stoned and left for dead. But, friends, he wasn't dead, and no power on earth or in hell could take his life away until he could say, "I have finished my course."

But, Christian! not only is your life in the hand of God in the sense that He holdeth all things in the hollow of His hand, "doing His will in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of earth," but in this more precious sense that He positively overrules all things so that all things are made to contribute to your highest and lasting good.

We believe that God, in the exercise of absolute sovereignty, has chosen some men and women (and all infants dying in infancy) to salvation and that for them "all things work together for good." But this is far from affirming, as some do, that God has created some for the express purpose of damning them—no matter what they do; and has created others for the express purpose of saving them—live as they may. Those who affirm such blasphemy to any part of the Calvinistic faith are either amazingly ignorant or superlatively dishonest—one or the other or both. No intelligent and honest man would make any such statement, however much he might dislike the doctrine.

But, friends, it isn't to be hoped that the world will ever love Calvinism. Human nature is human nature, no matter in what age or country you find it. By the world the King of Glory was despised and rejected, scorned and crucified! And it is a fact read and known of all men that the system of religious truth by the world with an exceeding fierce and bitter hatred. Against no system of religious faith does the world hiss and scowl and spit its venom as against the Calvinistic system. What does this mean? "If ye were of the world the world would love its own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world therefore the world hateth you." In other words, the more nearly any system approaches the system of truth taught by Jesus Christ the more will it be despised and rejected by the world. Did Jesus Christ teach this doctrine? "Every one that the Father hath given Me shall come to Me." And again "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you." Again in Matthew, Jesus distinctly says, that if certain privileges and opportunities, had been granted to the citizens of Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented.

et they were not granted! Why? "Even so, Father; or so it seemed good in Thy sight."

But, says some one; why if I believed that, I would tear my Bible into shreds, toss it to the winds and would never again darken a church door! We have only to answer: Perhaps you would, but a man of more hard, horse sense would not; and God Almighty will never change or modify His eternal purpose to keep you from making a spectacle of yourself. Such conduct neither proves nor disproves anything as regards the truth of this doctrine. It only proves the great lack of "grey-matter," in your cranium and piety in your heart. The truth is, God has an elect people and though

"They may, like the ships, by tempests be tossed
On perilous deeps, but cannot be lost,
Though Satan engages the wind and the tide,
The promise engages, the Lord will provide."

We gather, finally, an important and exceedingly precious lesson from this text; the final triumph of the Church of God. Many, to-day, are alarmed at the apparent progress of Infidelity, Socialism, Materialism, Christian Science and all those systems which are so antagonistic to the cause of truth. Many honest hearts quake and tremble to-day for the Church as did the heart of good old Eli for the Ark, as they behold the innovations, the dissensions, the formality and the worldly-mindedness of her members. And as they behold the work of the dissecting knife in the hand of the Higher Critic, that passage after passage is eliminated from the Sacred Book, their hearts sink within them and they wonder when and where this destructive work will end. And, friends, were it not for the sweet doctrine of our text, the overruling providence of God, well might we fear for the safety, for the very existence of the Christian Church. I say, were it not for the fact that the destiny of the Church is lodged in the hands of the Almighty, whose purpose cannot be defeated, well might every lover of Zion shake with fear as did the young servant of Elisha when he saw the mountains covered with the chariots and horsemen of the enemy who were seeking the old prophet's life. It has some times seemed that the Church would be wiped from the face of the earth! She has had "trial of cruel mockings and scourging, yea, moreover, of bonds and imprisonment." One king, in order to give expression of his hatred for the Church of Christ and to deter his subjects from indentifying themselves with the cause of truth, lighted up the streets of his city and his pleasure gardens with the bodies of Christians sewed up in bags of pitch! But through this period of storm and flame God was her refuge and strength, and she grew and spread far and wide. And friends, this God who watched so tenderly and protectingly over His Church in ages past will not forsake her now. For the confidence of His people and the encouragement of His chosen when storms of persecution gather and waves of infidelity beat high, He says: "Like as a lion and the young lion roaring on his prey: when a multitude of shepherds is called forth against him, will not be afraid of their voice, nor abase himself for the noise of them: so the Lord of hosts will come down to fight for Mt. Zion, and for the hill thereof. As birds flying, so will the Lord of hosts defend Jerusalem: defending also He will deliver it; and passing over He will preserve it." Here we are presented with three figures, rising in beautiful climax, setting forth and illustrating the absolute safety of the Church of God. First, as a hungry lion coming upon a flock of sheep cannot be frightened away by the noise of a multitude of shepherds, so the Lord of hosts cannot be intimidated or forced to abandon His Church by any power or combination of powers. Second, as a parent bird flying about keeping watch over her nest, seeing her young imperilled will fly at once to their rescue, so the Lord of hosts ever keeps watch above His own and is ever present for their defence. Third, as the destroying angel passed through Egypt, making the whole land to mourn, was accompanied by the Angel of the Covenant for the protection of Israel, so this same Angel ever keeps watch round about the walls of Zion that no enemy may enter her gates to do her mischief. Devils may plot, men may unite and conspire with them; they may seek to take her, but no enemy shall lay hands on her, for God is in the midst of her. He will help her, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against her. How appropriately one of the hymn-writers sings of the absolute safety of the Church:

"Thy walls are strength, and at thy gates
A guard of heavenly warriors waits;
Nor shall thy deep foundations move,
Fixed on His counsels and His love.

"Thy foes in vain designs engage;
Against His throne in vain they rage;
Like rising waves, with angry roar,
That dash and die upon the shore."

Tarboro, N. C.

PRESBYTERIAN DANCER FACTORIES.

Perhaps this caption may sound strange. Perhaps it is a little overdrawn. My purpose is not to criticise our Presbyterian schools for girls, but to call attention to some things that might be remedied. I do not speak an untruth when I assert that but few girls graduate from certain of our Presbyterian schools who are not proficient in the art of dancing. These schools do not actually teach dancing, but under their fostering care many girls acquire the art, and then go home to become a source of worry to their parents, church and pastor.

I could mention two towns in which there was never a dance until after the graduation of some young ladies, residents of these towns, from one of our Presbyterian schools. I could mention two churches which have recently had a great tide of worldliness to sweep over them, the inception of which can be traced to the influence of certain young ladies who graduated from one of our best schools.

Ought our young ladies to be encouraged to acquire an aptitude for an amusement that will prove a bane to their highest spiritual interests, and a source of so much demoralization to their homes and churches? Are our schools free from responsibility in the matter? Ought they not to discourage everything that may become a temptation in the life of their pupils? These questions are at least worthy of their consideration.

A LONGSUFFERING PASTOR.

AFTER SIXTY-EIGHT YEARS OF SERVICE.

July 4th, 1812—September 7th, 1903.

The lines on our cover page were written by Thomas March Clark, Bishop of the Diocese of Rhode Island, last November, after he had completed his ninetieth year. Dr. Clark was leader of the Broad Church movement and his influence was felt on the side of the modern reforms within the scope of church work. During the latter years he had delegated the duties of his office to Bishops Doane and M. Vickar. His life covered the four American wars of the nineteenth century. The war of 1812, the Mexican, Civil and Spanish, and he was probably the oldest bishop in the entire Anglican communion. "His simplicity, dignity and kindly beneficence," to quote Bishop Potter, "impressed the Church in whose service the long years were spent." In all young men he was deeply interested, and he won them for his Master in large numbers.

Now that he has gone on his Last Voyage, his courage and manly sympathy will live long in the memory of those he helped.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL:	Page
The Committee on the Proof Text .....	4-5.
The Church and Her Soldiers .....	5-6.
Review of Contemporaries .....	6-7.
DEVOTIONAL:
Putting it Under, Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D. ....	8
MISSIONARY:
Chinese Liberality .....	8
SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON:
David Brings up the Ark, Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D. ....	9
WESTMINSTER LEAGUE:
What Joseph Teaches Us, Rev. H. W. Hoon .....	9
CONTRIBUTED:
Dedicatory Sermon at Carrollton, Miss., Rev. T. B. Latimer .....	10-11
Southwestern Presbyterian University, Rev. J. B. Shearer .....	11-13
Sermon, Rev. R. W. Alexander .....	13-15
Presbyterian Dancer Factories .....	15
After Seventy-eight years of Service .....	15
CHURCH NEWS: .....	16-18
EDUCATIONAL .....	19
THE WORLD: .....	20-21
MARRIAGES AND DEATHS: .....	22
THE HOUSEHOLD: .....	22-23
THE HOME CIRCLE: .....	24-25
OUR YOUNG PEOPLE: .....	26-29
OUR LITTLE FOLKS: .....	30-33
CLIPPINGS: .....	34

Church News.

GEORGIA.

The Presbytery of Athens met at Elberton, Ga., September 9th at 8 p. m. The opening sermon, by request of the Moderator, Judge J. B. Estes, was preached by Rev. T. M. McConnell, D. D., on "The Eldership." Text 1 Pet. 3:15.

Attendance, 9 ministers and 16 ruling elders. Drs. S. L. Morris and T. H. Law were present as corresponding members.

Dr. T. M. McConnell was chosen Moderator and Rev. D. J. Blackwell temporary clerk, Rev. J. A. Black at his request was dismissed to Presbytery of South Carolina.

A permanent committee on Bible cause was appointed with Rev. W. F. Tims as chairman.

The offer of a building and loan for the establishment of a Christian school in Nacoochee Valley was accepted, and Presbytery pledged itself to raise $300 for that purpose by the 1st of January, the same amount to be donated by the Assembly's committee of Home Missions. Trustees were appointed and measures taken for opening the school as soon as possible.

The opening sermon of the moderator on "The Eldership" was requested for publication and the stated clerk instructed to request the Assembly's committee of publication to publish it for general distribution.

Rev. F. D. Thomas was appointed to preach a sermon on "Family Worship" at the spring meeting of Presbytery.

Adjourned to meet at Synod and to hold regular spring meeting at Danielsville.

H. F. HOYT, Stated Clerk.

MISSOURI.

Synod's Home Mission Committee met at Mexico, Mo., Sept. 24. Seven of the ten members were present. Reports were received from the Treasurer, showing that all obligations had been promptly met and there was a comfortable balance on hand; also from the Secretary giving a summary of his work since the last meeting, and from the two Ozark fields reports and statements were made, showing in both increased interest and a promising outlook.

The most important matter coming before the Committee was the establishment of a school somewhere in the southwestern part of the State in connection with our missionary or evangelistic work. This for a year or two has been felt to be essential to the permanence and growth of our mission work in the State, and after full discussion the following paper was adopted: We recommend

1. That the Synod approve of the foundation and establishment, as soon as practicable, of a school in the Ozark region of our State, and its maintenance under the auspices of the Synod as a Presbyterian institution, cooperating with evangelistic work in that region.

2. That the Home Mission Committee have for the present the charge of this movement, and that it be directed to select a suitable man to place at the head of it.

3. That this movement be commended to the liberality of those of our people who are interested in our religious work in southwest Missouri.

Lafayette Presbytery. At an adjourned meeting, September 15, the pastoral relation between Rev. W. E. Beattie and the Higginsville church was dissolved.

Rev. R. L. Brown, who recently resigned the pastorate of the Lawson church, Upper Missouri Presbytery, is spending a few weeks at Excelsior Springs, Mo., for the benefit of his health.

MISSOURI.

CROCKER.—There were eight additions to this Church as the result of a recent meeting, in which Mr. Burns and Mr. Forsyth were assisted by Rev. R. L. Kinnaird, of Excelsior Springs. This makes a total of twenty-two additions in the upper Ozark field, Crocker and Montrost churches during the last two months. This is the field that Rev. F. Forsyth has recently taken charge of, as already mentioned.

WESTMINSTER COLLEGE.—Has had a remarkable good opening, with fine prospects for a considerable further increase, and much to encourage in every way. Our correspondent under date of September 21st, says: "We have been rooming in the new dormitory after a rude fashion for two weeks now. Today we hope to fit up the dining room, kitchen and pantry for supper tonight. The dormitory is three-fourths full to begin with, better than we have hoped. The college already has one hundred and twenty students, an appreciable increase over last year, which was the best in ten previous years. In another week Reunion Hall will be entirely fitted up, I think. It is acknowledged to be the prettiest building and on the most beautiful site within a large section of country around. In all this, all the friends of the college will most heartily rejoice.

THE SYNODICAL COLLEGE, also at Fulton, Mo., has likewise opened well, with forty-three boarders and a full day school. The "Teachers' Recital," given on the evening of September 19th, was very good, and greatly enjoyed by all present. The entire programme gave pleasing and satisfactory evidence of the ability and skill of those taking part in it.

MISSISSIPPI.

THE PRESBYTERY OF ETHEL met in Mt. Vernon Church, Attala County, Miss., Sept. 3d, 1903. The last Moderator, Rev. J. W. Hilton being absent, by request, Rev. J. A. Turner preached the sermon from John 3:13-8. There were present five ministers and three elders.

Rev. C. B. Scott was chosen Moderator and elder S. F. Bell, temporary clerk. The standing rules were omitted. The minutes were read. Rev. J. Moats, of the Congregational Church, was introduced and invited to sit as a visiting brother. Later he was examined on the sacrament and theology which was sustained, and he was directed to serve the Mt. Vernon and Bethlehem churches with the Vaiden Mission.

Licentiate Alfred King, of Cumberland Presbyterian church presented himself to join this Presbytery, but was requested to secure his letter of his dismissal from his Presbytery, together with suitable evidence that he was licensed, and in the meantime granted permission to labor under the direction of Rev. J. A. Turner, in the Hattiesburg group churches, for the next six months.

Rev. W. E. Carr and the Ethel and Bethany churches were granted letters of dismissal, to unite with the Birmingham Presbytery.

During sessions of Presbytery 13 united with the Presbyterian Church on profession of faith, and on Sabbath five adults and fourteen children were baptized.

Ellisville was chosen as next place of meeting, March 1904.
R. H. ALSTON, S. C.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Plattsburg: Rev. Thomas T. Trumble, pastor of the Presbyterian church at La Belle, Mo., occupied this pulpit both morning and evening of September 20th.

NORTH CAROLINA.

CLINTON.—The Rev. Wm. Black has just closed a very successful meeting at Clinton. There were some forty professions, besides much uplifting of the Christians. Denominational lines seemed to be obliterated and the spirit was manifested in power.

MOORE COUNTY.—Elder J. Alton McIver conducted a meeting at a mission point near Lake View recently. Much interest was manifested. Many were reclaimed. Three were added to Union Church and three to Manly Church. The following week services were held at Culla church by the present supply and eleven were added to that church by profession. There are many evidences of growth in grace at Culla church, for which they are thankful to the Lord for His great blessings.

TWENTIETH CENTURY NOTE.—Among the churches recently visited by the representatives of the Twentieth Century Educational Fund is the church at Monroe. The response of the congregation to this important cause was prompt and liberal. Over $1,000.00 was given and subscribed, and a much larger amount promised conditionally.

VIRGINIA.

NORFOLK.—Presbytery will meet at the Ghent church October 13, 1903, at 8 p. m. The time and place of meeting has been changed owing to sickness in the Gloucester church.

SYNOD OF VIRGINIA.—The 116th session of the Synod of Virginia will convene in the Sinking Spring Presbyterian church at Abingdon, Va., Tuesday, the 21st of October, 1903, at 7:30 p. m.

We send this to the Church papers to request every elder and minister who will attend this meeting to send name and address to R. A. Preston, chairman of Committee on Entertainment, Abingdon, Va.

We will gladly refer any others who may wish to attend this meeting of Synod, to good boarding houses and hotels. All guests will be met at trains arriving between the hours of 8 a. m. and 9 p. m. Guests arriving during the night will please report at lecture room of church the next morning, and Committee on Entertainment will direct them to their homes.

Trains from the East arrive at Abingdon at 10:7 a. m., 2:30 p. m. and 10 p. m.

Trains from the West arrive at 8:40 a. m., 1:30 p. m. and 7:22 p. m. Trains from the South arrive at 11:30 a. m. and 5:30 p. m.

PORTSMOUTH.—Rev. A. R. Shaw, pastor of the First Church, Portsmouth, preached on the Olympia, Dewey's flagship, last Sunday. Mr. Shaw has been elected president of the Presbyterian Ministers' Association of Norfolk, Portsmouth and Berkeley. Rev. J. N. H. Summerell is vice president.

TENNESSEE.

The Synod of Tennessee will meet in the Second Presbyterian church, Memphis, Tenn., Tuesday, October 27th, 1903, at 8 o'clock p. m.

R. S. BURWELL, S. C.

The undersigned committee of enrollment will be in the lecture room of above church Tuesday, October 27th at 10 o'clock a. m., to enroll the names of delegates to Synod.

R. S. BURWELL,

C. S. SHOLL.

DEATH OF REV. DR. J. S. MOORE.

At the meeting of our General Assembly, held at Lexington, Va., in May last, one of the most appreciated of the members was Dr. Moore, of Sherman, Texas. On Thursday, September 17, he dropped suddenly dead. We have no particulars beyond this fact. He had been unwell for a few days, but no one thought him seriously so. The funeral was appointed to be held at Sherman, on Friday last, at ten o'clock.

Dr. Moore was a native of Kemper county, Mississippi. He was baptized and reared in the old Hadden church near Payneville, Sumter county, Ala., which adjoined it on the east. His father's home and the church were just across the State line. He was graduated at the University of Mississippi and at the Columbia Theological Seminary in 1870. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Tuscaloosa in that year. Immediately he accepted a call to Jefferson, Texas, and was ordained and installed by the Presbytery of Eastern Texas in the fall of that year. There he continued to labor till 1877. His next field was at McKinney, Texas, on the railroad north of Dallas. Two years later, in 1879, he was called to the First church at Sherman, Texas, where he has labored for about twenty-four consecutive years. About the time of his removal to Sherman he received the degree of D. D., from the University of Mississippi.

The opportunities of Dr. Moore were very great. He had the privilege of growing with the growth of the city, till Sherman became one of the prominent cities of Texas, and his church one of the most efficient in the Synod. His temper was so genial, his manner so attractive, his sermons so clear and so rich, that he could not fail to be a power for good. Among the students of Austin College, he was esteemed and beloved. In the home he was a friend to whom one would open his heart. And withal he was a man of prayer, and of the study of God's word. He was one of those whom the world honors.

Our correspondent says of him: "No man has done more for God and the Presbyterian Church in Texas, than Dr. Moore. In addition to his own pastoral work, he has always been the leading spirit in the Home Mission work of his Presbytery and Synod, and a faithful and earnest Trustee of Austin College, until last Synod when he resigned. The whole Synod of Texas will miss him, but God knows best. He leaves a wife and six children (all grown) to mourn their loss."—The Christian Observer.

Educational.

WHERE SHALL THE ALABAMA PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE BE LOCATED?

The Board of Trustees is now prepared to give this matter earnest consideration and hereby request all towns and cities desiring to secure the location of the college to prepare their bids, reduce them to writing, and submit them to the Synod at its approaching meeting in Union Springs, Ala. November 10, 1903. For the information of the public I call attention to the following resolution of our last Synod:

"Resolved, That the Synod pledge itself to raise $100,000 for the establishing of a college for males of which amount it will require the community in which it shall be located to give a suitable site and $25,000 in money or its equivalent in suitable buildings, reserving the right to reject any undesirable location which might meet these conditions."

Let all correspondence on this subject be directed to the undersigned at Birmingham, Ala.

WM. E. McILWAIN.

Wanted, needed and must have a piano. This is the second appeal. The first brought an organ all the way from the southern part of Georgia. A piano house has offered to let us have a new instrument at a very reduced price. We appreciate this, but what good can it do us when our treasury is empty?

The Lees-McRae Institute belongs to the Presbyterian Church of North Carolina. It is doing a noble work for Christ and the Presbyterian Church. Can we reasonably expect the Methodists or the Baptists or the Episcopalians to support it? Is it their duty? No. But it is the duty of the Presbyterians of North Carolina to support it. We expect it; we have a right to.

Think of it. The present music class numbers 18. It is the most attractive feature connected with the school. Already several girls have been fitted to lead the church music in their respective neighborhoods. Only one piano and one organ in the school. In order to get around the teacher has to send the pupils to two of the neighbors' to practice, and then teach a part of the Saturdays.

These facts ought to be sufficient to induce more than one person to send us a piano or the money to buy one. We believe it will be done

EDGAR TUFTS.

We learn from our Asheville correspondent that The Bingham School has had the most successful opening in its history for 110 years.

Its 64 dormitories are occupied by 128 pupils. Part of the overflow is accounted for in the Infirmary building till the addition to the quarters now in progress can be completed, which will be in about two weeks, and the rest of the overflow is being declined.

The pupils come from an area extending from Connecticut and Nebraska, through to the City of Mexico, which sends a pupil and to British Honduras, which sends another.

The C. people will be pleased to know what this N. C. School is doing, and Presbyterians will be pleased with the reflection that the School has been administered by a succession of Presbyterian Elders for 110 years.

THE FISHBURNE SCHOOL at Waynesboro, Va., has opened with increased numbers and with brighter prospects than usual, so that it may be necessary to enlarge the teaching force. The pupils enrolled represent many States,—Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania, etc., as far as Texts.

According to the fixed rule of the school these boys have been chosen with great care as to habits and character. Only those of the preceding session who came up to the revised standard are asked to return, and new applicants are looked after carefully before being enrolled. This is one of the schools in which the teachers are chosen not only for their ability as instructors but it is necessary that they be consistent members of the Church. The Bible, too, is made a regular textbook, with daily recitations. Thoroughness and fidelity to "duty" are inculcated and insisted on in every department.

The best social and spiritual influences are thrown around the students, and it is no wonder that the praise of the institution is to be heard at home and abroad.

Rochelle, Ga., Sept. 26th, 1903.

Yesterday closed the first month's work of the Presbyterian High School at this place. The work of the teachers has been entirely satisfactory and the prospects for a successful year are very bright. The enrollment is now 125 and is steadily increasing. As soon as the farmers get their cotton gathered the attendance will be considerably increased.

Until this year, there had been a city school here, but it did not prepare boys and girls to enter colleges, as it was run as a public school. But last fall, the town gave up the school building to Macon Presbytery so that a first-class high school could be established here. The Presbytery elected a board of trustees who selected the teachers. Mr. Paul P. Brown, of Newton, N. C., a graduate of Catawba College and Davidson College, was elected Principal. As his assistants, the board selected Rev. Alex. Kirkland, of Americus, Ga., a graduate of the University of North Carolina; Miss Mattie Sallas, of Meda, Ga., a graduate of the Georgia Normal and Industrial College; and Miss Worthy Johnson, of Athens, Ga., a graduate of the State Normal School, Georgia. Miss Maude Blalock, of Macon, Ga., was elected music teacher.

The school building is a handsome brick structure, fitted up with modern school furniture and apparatus necessary for carrying on a good school. The auditorium is fitted with opera chairs and will seat about four hundred. It has been supplied with a new piano for the use of the music department. A young ladies' dormitory will be built in a very short time for the boarding young ladies.

A literary society has been organized and the work of the members has been very satisfactory. Besides regular debates, the programme includes vocal and instrumental music and declamations and recitations. The students seem to be greatly interested in the work of the society and will make it a success. They decided at the last meeting to take up the study of some standard author's life and work at the next meeting and continue the study of various men during the year.

Rochelle is one of the healthiest towns in southern Georgia and the climate is delightful. The water is the very best there being limestone water and a splendid artesian well here.

The people are kind and hospitable and are deeply interested in the school. There are several Tar Heels in the town and many more can be found in the county.

THE ALABAMA PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE.

I am just home from Alexander City where I held a ten days meeting. This is my third protracted meeting in this town. About ten years ago whilst Evangelist of Synod made my first visit. I found the Methodist and Baptist churches well established, good houses of worship, resident pastors and large memberships. The Presbyterians had almost nothing—no church building—no lot and not more than a dozen members, if so many. At the close of this meeting the situation was entirely changed. A valuable lot had been purchased, at least $1,000 had been subscribed to build a church, and the membership had been more than doubled. The evangelist, though on the eve of leaving the State, yielded to the earnest entreaty of our people and consented to return and hold another meeting. But he stipulated one condition and that was that the new church should be completed and ready for dedication. This was done and one year from that date he returned and dedicated the new church which cost at least $2,000, free from debt. The evangelist received the most cordial support of Rev. P. P. Winn, in charge of the church at my first visit. During the meeting, which followed the dedication of the church, there were a number of additions on profession of faith. One of these was an aged mother, whose two sons had already united with the Church and are now the pillars thereof. This mother, now in her eighty-eighth year still lives to rejoice in her own faith and the faith of her children and grand children.

A precious feature of this first meeting was that the church experienced a whole year of revival. Scarcely a month passed without additions on profession of faith.

Brother Winn was succeeded by Rev. H. E. McClure whose brief ministry was greatly blessed.

On my recent visit I found Rev. J. A. Woods in charge of the church. He has been the pastor for seven or eight years and during this time a comfortable manse has been built and paid for and the membership greatly strengthened. On the second Sabbath of my recent meeting I presented the cause of our Alabama College and was not disappointed in the response of the little Presbyterian band. The Ladies' Society gave $100, the Sabbath school will add $75 or $100, and the entire subscription will approach $1,100. This is about $20 per member, as the church has only about 60 members, and what would be the result if this standard was maintained throughout the Synod. Instead of raising $100,000 for the college these 14,000 members of Synod would raise more than a quarter of million dollars

WM. E. McILWAIN.

TEXAS PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE FOR GIRLS.

This institution opened September 17th under the most auspicious circumstances. The enrollment the first day was over 100 per cent. over last year; and the local patronage lacked only two of being double the entire enrollment for last year. The main building is filled to its utmost capacity, and two nice five-room cottages adjacent to the college grounds were secured to accommodate the overflow; and these have been filled, and still the applications continue to come in. In a few of the largest rooms three girls are placed. There are girls from five different States, either on the grounds, or else engaged, namely, Texas, Louisiana, Missouri, Mississippi and New Mexico. In addition to this Dr. Evans has received inquiries concerning the college from Old Mexico and Arkansas. All this, and yet not one day was given to canvassing. It is as fine a body of girls as I ever saw; and they seem perfectly happy over the prospects.

Three new departments provided with teachers have been added this year, namely, Violin, Primary and Fine art and Needle work.

The foundation of the second building, the same in size as the main one, has been laid, and only awaits the necessary means to go on to completion. Dr. Evans is confident that if he had this building completed now, he could fill it with girls by Christmas. God is greatly blessing the Synod of Texas this school. Let every Presbyterian come to the help of this institution.

The report from Austin College is indeed gratifying. It is said that the college begins the new scholastic year under the most favorable circumstances it has had for ten years. A good report also comes from Daniel Baker, another Synodical institution. All this speaks well for the educational interests of Presbyterianism in the Synod of Texas.

M. C. HUTTON.

THE NORTHFIELD SCHOOLS.

Robert Ingersoll and Dwight L. Moody were contemporaries. Both died within a short time of each other. Both were largely glorified by the press, though each stood for radically different principles. The memory of the former, however, has nearly passed away, while that of the latter is renewed afresh with each summer migration to his home, and with each session of his schools. Why this is so, is because Mr. Moody, casting himself aside, strove to provide for the needs of others. Passing a hut, one time on the mountain side, he saw some girls about the school-girl age, braiding palm leaf hats. There was no school near them and they could not afford to go away to one. After a few questioning remarks Mr. Moody determined to found a school for just such girls. That was in 1879. The school was Northfield Seminary. Two years later he established a similar school for boys and called it Mount Hermon. In the twenty years since then, these schools have developed so that last year the total enrollment was about 1,200, representing not only nearly every State in the Union but also many foreign countries. That these students are the ones for whom the school was founded is shown in the report of the principal of Northfield Seminary, who says: "Two-fifths of our girls have no high school within reach, one-third are from towns of 5,000 inhabitants or less, and nearly one-fifth are farmers' daughters. Two-fifths have lost either father or mother, or both. One-third are girls who have done something toward self support. Twenty-seven are paying their own way and ten others are meeting their expenses in part, while fifty-seven more are being assisted by the Students' Aid Society and Scholarships. Our plan is not to accept girls whose parents could afford to send them to more costly schools, nor to accept those who would be likely to prove poor investments." The annual report of the principal of Mount Hermon school has a similar import. Of the 725 boys registered there, one-third are working their own way. This is possible from the fact that the average age of the school is higher than it is at the ordinary college preparatory school, and because the method by which the school is run is, to provide board, room and tuition for the students, at just half the actual cost. This opens a way for sturdy industrious fellows to prepare for college and smile at their empty pockets. The idea is a free education, but an education possible through work. That young men and women are anxious to avail themselves of such a place is shown when it is known that at Mount Hermon the ratio of applicants to vacancies is four to one; and this year at Northfield Seminary, for every vacancy there were seven applicants. This means that hundreds of deserving men and women have to be turned away because of lack of accommodations. As might be expected from a place connected with D. Moody, a strong religious sentiment permeates both schools. Daily chapel exercises are held, a well established church is maintained, and in addition, students are required to pursue courses in Bible the same as in Latin or Greek. Character, rather than brightness, is the standard by which each student is judged and not infrequently assistance is given to the more vigorous Christian when the merely clever student is turned aside. Hence a preparation for college there means more than the regulation amount of mathematics and languages. The ideal, however, for which most students strive is the university or college and such is the standard set by former students that there are few colleges in the East but are glad to welcome into their halls, a boy from Mount Hermon, or a girl from Northfield Seminary. Nor is their confidence misplaced. Four years of high intellectual training, coupled with the physical effort of self support and influence by the healthy spiritual life of Northfield, combine to give a preparation not only for college but for the best and noblest kind of life. And that is the purpose and first object of the Moody schools.

AN APPEAL FOR THE SAILORS.

"Is it nothing to you that tempest tossed
Thousands of sailors are yearly lost?
Is it nothing to you that women weep
O'er their loved ones, sunk in the mighty deep?
Many bright young lives, in hope's early day,
They are gone—but whither—who shall say?"

"Is it nothing to you that life on shore
Is beset by temptations, dark and sore?
Swept on by the current, fierce and strong,
Of cruel greed and fiendish wrong;
Their honor and manhood and truth give way,
And our sailor lads are the land-shark's prey.

"Is it nothing to you that souls today
Are drifting from heaven and peace away—
Souls for whom Jesus has shed his blood—
Souls that are dear to the heart of God?
Drifting away into dark despair—
No one to pity—no one to care.

Oh, think as you sit in your cheery home,
Of the sailors tossed on the Ocean's foam,
Oh, think, as the Gospel words you hear,
No church bell falls on the sailor's ear.
Oh, think, as you call the Saviour your own,
To many, alas, his love is unknown."

—J. L. W., in Chart and Compass.

In January, 1902, mission work was begun among the sailors visiting Hampton Roads. A Sailors' Rest was opened in Newport News in July, 1902, in an old church building. On January 15, 1903, the present quarters on West Avenue, adjoining the wharves, was occupied. Since the latter date, there have been 9,473 visits of sailors to its rooms—an average of forty daily. Sixty-six religious services have been held in the Rest with an attendance of 1,167. Afloat on the men-of-war visiting the harbor, twenty services have been held, with 1,182 present. As near as can be told, 345 free lodgings and 786 free meals have been bestowed on destitute and distressed seamen, many of whom have also been assisted with clothing, medical and legal advice, transportation and finding employment. Two have been buried in our cemetery—strangers among strangers. Forty-four have signed the temperance pledge; eighty-six have joined the Floating Christian Endeavor Society. Six hundred and thirty-one portions of God's word have been distributed, and thousands of pieces of religious and secular reading matter given to men leaving for sea. Entertainments have been frequently held during the season with large attendance of seamen.

This is in part a summary of this new work for Christ among the seamen. The field is a large one and the Lord has opened it up to the Mission. Yet, in spite of all these men coming to its rooms and attending its services and entertainments; in spite of the good work of distributing food to the hungry, giving shelter to the homeless, and scattering broadcast the precious word of God, this great work so well inaugurated is in danger of collapse and failure, because God's people are not rising to their privilege and responsibility in providing even a most meagre support for it.

It is impossible to maintain such an institution without expense. If there is not sufficient income to cover this expense, two alternatives present themselves. To close up, or go ahead getting into debt, in hope that God's people will come to the rescue. This last has been done in this case. It seemed impossible to close the doors in the face of such a multitude;—so the work has gone on day by day in Jesus' name; and the debt, kept down as much as possible by rigid economy and self-denial, has gone on increasing. But this cannot continue much longer. An earnest appeal for help is made. If aid is withheld much longer, this splendid effort will fail, and, in all human probability, it will be long before another is made in the same place.

The amount needed is comparatively small, and could easily be given by our rich people without being felt. Contributions can be sent to Rev. R. E. Steele, P. O. Box 22, Newport News, Va.

RED SPRINGS SEMINARY.

Red Springs Seminary opened September 10th. The most sanguine hopes for a successful beginning have been more than realized. Two hundred and eighty-eight students have been registered in the Literary Department, 135 in the School of Music, and 44 in the School of Art. This does not include the class in china painting, which has not yet begun work.

These students represent ten States—New York, New Jersey, Wisconsin, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, South Carolina and North Carolina.

All indications point to a most brilliant year. The new members of the faculty are Miss Johnnie Bason, well known in Charlotte as a violinist; Miss Sallie McLean, Miss Elizabeth Flautt, Mrs. L. G. Short and Miss R. M. Ellis.

Miss Ellis fills Miss E. Brown's place as instructor in French language and literature during the latter's absence in Paris.

We are glad to have with us again Miss Cora Wetherill as instructor in wood carving. Miss Wetherill is a pupil of the famous Liberty Todd, and is herself a skilled worker in wood.

Mrs. Laura Grant Short, of Chicago, has charge of the organ for this school year. She has had fifteen years' experience on the organ, having had leading church positions during all this time. She was a pupil at the College of Music, Cincinnati, then of the famous Clarence Eddy for four years, and later had a year's study in Germany under direction of Josef Rheinbergen, the great German composer. Mrs. Short will give a recital in the Seminary auditorium Friday evening, October 2d, assisted by Miss Louise Hughes, voice; Miss Johnnie Bason, violinist, and Miss Julia Richardson, accompanist.

The following is the programme:

Concert Overture in C.....Alfred Holliers
Sonata for Violin .....Tartini
Miss Bason.

Tocata and Fugue D Minor.....Johann Sebastian Bach
Die Frage und Die Antwort.....W. Wolstenholme
Andantino D. Flat.....Edwin Lemare
The Holy City.....Stephens Adams
Miss Hughes.

A Royal Procession .....Walter Spinney
In Paradisium .....Theodore DuBois
Allegretto in B Flat.....Robert Volkmann
Violin—Romanza .....Wieniawski
Miss Bason.

Nymphs and Fauns .....Bemburg
Madrigal ..... Chaminade
Violets .....
Miss Hughes.

Nuptial March .....Alexander Guilmant

The Alumnae Association of the Presbyterian College gave a silver tea in the reception rooms of the college last Friday evening from 7 to 10. Representatives of the different classes since the beginning of the institution were receiving in the various parlors and halls on the first floor, while on the third the studio and society halls were open to each guest.

Tea was served in the sitting room, and cream and cake in the dining room. The whole building was brilliantly lighted and decorated with cut flowers, ferns and palms.

As the tangible result of the evening, the treasurer reports nearly fifty dollars clear, which goes to the Educational Fund. From this fund the Association pays the expenses of one student who could not otherwise enter college.

Much credit is due the president, Mrs. J. R. Irwin, and the chairman, Mrs. J. E. Carson, for their energy and interest. In fact, the Association as a whole is to be heartily commended for its loving loyalty to the college.

Charlotte, N. C., Sept. 28.

The World.

Rural guards surrounded and captured Juan Lopez, the leader of the recent insurrection in Cuba.

The Sultan of Morocco has issued a decree, ordering all foreigners, except the Consuls, to leave Fez and proceed to Tangier.

Eleven hundred and thirty-eight trains arrive daily in the city of Chicago upon 23 railways, carrying an average of 100,000 passengers.

A bronze monument has been veiled on the battlefield of Lake George by the governors of New York, Massachusetts, Vermont and Connecticut.

The architect of the Capitol at Washington has received instructions to have things in readiness for the extra session of Congress on November 9th.

According to Prof. Richards, of the Lehigh University, the waste gases from a modern blast furnace are capable of developing 10,000 horse power if utilized in suitable gas engines.

A motion to change the words to the music of "Dixie" and have the song rewritten in a more dignified style, a motion most caused a riot at the Ex-Confederate Reunion at Columbia, Mo. The motion was voted down.

Danville, Va., Sept. 27.—No. 97, the Southern Railway fast mail, plying between New York and New Orleans, plunged over a trestle north of this city this afternoon, killing nine men, injuring seven others and completely wrecking three mail and one express cars.

The largest public school building in the world is the new Houston street building in New York city. It has ninety-four class rooms and will seat nearly 5,000 children. There will be two principals and about 100 teachers in the school.

The Brooklyn, N. Y., Eagle, in an elaborate article in its recent issue, declares that of the foreign immigration that is coming into the country a large percentage is made up of paupers, who immediately, on taking up their abode in this land of promise, become a charge on the public.

Buffalo, N. Y., September 25.—Mrs. Jefferson Davis, widow of the President of the Confederacy, is still in a critical condition at the Castle Inn, in this city. Dr. Charles G. Stockton, Roswell G. Park and Allen Jones have been in continuous attendance upon the patient throughout the day and night.

Uncle Joe Cannon, the prospective Speaker of the new House, is a very interesting personality at this time to the members, and especially the Republican members. He is to name the committees and fix the chairmanships and his work in this regard is a matter of great concern to the ambitious congressmen.—Banner.

A small specimen of radium was recently put on exhibition at the American Museum of Natural History, and has attracted wide attention. The specimen weighs about two grains, and was shown in the gem room on the fourth floor of the building. The two grains cost about $300. A company has been formed in Buffalo to extract radium from the uranium ores of Utah.

Laredo, Tex., September 25.—The yellow fever both in this city and Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, is on the increase. Reports from Nuevo Laredo are to the effect that there have been five deaths since yesterday and many new cases are reported. Two hundred cases of illness are said to exist there, but the majority of them are pronounced by the physicians to be dengue fever and not yellow jack.

Now that the friendliness of feeling between France and Great Britain—a phenomenon of wide-reaching import to every European power—has become the admitted preliminary to something very like a mutual understanding, voices of detraction begin to be heard here and there. The official press of France is warmly opposed to such a development as a Franco-British compact, whatever its nature may be.

Powder and bullets are not the only methods of waging war, as, if reports are to be credited, Macedonia is about to demonstrate. For according to foreign dispatches, the revolutionists in Macedonia threaten, in case they cannot bring about a war between Turkey and Bulgaria, or induce European intervention, to decimate the populations of the Macedonian cities controlled by the Turks by poisoning the wells with the bacilli of the bubonic plague. This threat is not to be laughed at, for the plague can easily be disseminated by bacilli capsules thrown into the wells.

President John Skelton Williams, in referring to the status of the Seaboard Air Line Railroad and his reported intention to resign, made the following statement: "There has been no change in the Seaboard Air Line situation as announced at the time of the entrance of the Frisco-Rock Island interests into the board, six weeks ago. The Seaboard system is an independent property and no change in this condition is contemplated, nor am I considering any change in my official connection with the system as its president. My interests in the road are now, and always have been large, and so long as this condition exists, I expect to remain president."

The United States, Germany, Austria, Spain, France, and Russia have signed the protocol adopted at the recent International Congress for Wireless Telegraphy held in Berlin. Great Britain and Italy have so far withheld their signatures. The protocol provides for the construction of coast stations to allow communication with ships at sea regardless of the particular system of wireless telegraphy which a vessel may happen to use. To facilitate the transmission of messages the protocol also provides for the technical explanations of all systems. A general system of charges is to be introduced. Services are to be so regulated that signal stations will disturb one another as little as possible.—Scientific American.

The expulsion of the Jesuits from France appears to be resulting in the multiplication of monasteries in England. From some returns recently published, it appears that, while in 1870 there were only 67 monasteries and 232 nunneries in England, this year there are 305 monasteries and 285 nunneries. Ireland is said to have 215 monasteries and 177 convents, and Scotland 62 similar establishments. The effects of the expulsion of French monks and nuns is seen in the fact that forty-seven new convent schools were started in Great Britain last year. Carisbrooke House, Isle of Wight, has been secured as a settlement of nuns, who will embark from France in large numbers as soon as the house and grounds are complete. This is the third community of French nuns established in the Isle of Wight since the exodus began.—Episcopal Recorder.

What promises to be one of the most serious struggles in which organized labor has engaged, namely, a direct conflict with the Roman Catholic Church, is among the possibilities of the immediate future. Father M. J. Ward, of Beloit, Wis., has declared that neither he nor any other priest of the Roman Catholic faith will give absolution to those who have taken the oath of the International Typographical Union. The oath to which he objects is as follows: "I hereby solemnly and sincerely swear (or affirm) that my fidelity to the union and my duty to the members hereof shall in no sense be interfered with by any allegiance that I may now or hereafter owe to any other organization, social, political, or religious, secret or otherwise."—Exchange.

The world's impending wood famine, which is predicted both by foresters and publicists, is likely to be averted after all through the planting of eucalyptus forests. As a result of the scientific enthusiasm of the late Baron Ferdinand von Mueller, government botanist of Victoria, Australia, large areas in every continent are being planted to this phenomenally fast-growing hardwood genus. Conditions today seem to promise fulfillment of his prophecy that "eucalypts are destined to play a prominent part for all time to come in the sylvan culture of vast tracts of the globe." To that prediction this eminent scientist added the significant belief that for hardwood supplies, for sanitary measures and for beneficent climate changes, many of the countries of the earth would have to rely on eucalypts during uncountable periods.—Scientific American.

Never in all the fifty-five years of his reign over the dual monarchy of Austria-Hungary has been Emperor-King Francis Joseph been confronted with embarrassments so acute as those which face him today, thinks the Paris Figaro. The deadlock between the twin states of the Hapsburg realm seems to defy every effort at its termination. The Hungarian element is thought to see in the present crisis an opportunity to make good its claim to independence. Yet it would be a mistake to despair of the limitless tact of Francis Joseph, says the Paris Temps. "In the midst of the cares and embarrassments which the love of his subjects does not spare him, he receives in his old age successive visits from brother sovereigns, who are impressed by the example of his long life, so troubled, so filled with reverses and crosses, which, nevertheless, have failed to affect the courage, the self-control, the sense of duty of this dean among monarchs."—Digest.

According to the latest account the great Simplon tunnel of the Alps is about three-quarters completed, and when finished will be fourteen miles long, or twice the size of the Mont Cenis bore. It is expected that the Simplon tunnel will be ready for use in about two years. One of the greatest obstacles encountered in the work is the high temperature in the center of the bore, which compels the employment of two gangs of men on short shifts. Power for compressing air for the drills and refrigerating the tunnel is furnished by a flow of water from the south end of the bore at the rate of 15,000 gallons per minute. It is estimated that the cost of the tunnel alone will be about $1,000,000 per mile, or nearly the same as the contract for the subway under New York city. It is reported that a hot spring has been struck in the workings of the Simplon Tunnel, and the increased heat is unbearable. About two miles remains to be bored.—Engineering and Mining Journal.

The British Association for the Advancement of Science is an institution of some importance. The foremost scientists in Britain are numbered among its members. Many distinguished men, such as Tyndal, Huxley and Lord Kelvin, have occupied the presidential chair of the institution. Their addresses have been eagerly studied and discussed. The Association is at present in session at Southport, England, and Sir Norman Lockyer has delivered his address as president. It is not on an abstruse academic theme, but one of great practical importance to the British people. Sir Norman brings out with graphic and startling distinctness the fact that Britain is falling behind in equipment for the activities of commercial and industrial life, being outstripped both by the United States and Germany in the means of proper training for leadership in business enterprise. Immense sums have been spent on the navy, but behind the sea power there must be brain power. Both by public and private beneficence the educational institutions of the United States by far outnumber those of Britain. In a lesser degree the same holds good in Germany. The remedy suggested by the president of the British Association is that that government must be prepared to bestow much larger means for the extension, equipment and endowment of universities and colleges.—The Interior.

Deaths.

"Steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time,
Say not "good night," but in some better clime,
Bid me "good morning."
—MRS. BARBAULD.

SMITH.—Little John Henry Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Smith, died at his home near Antioch, N. C., on September 6th, 1903, aged 14 months.

"God knows the way. He holds the key,

He guides us with unerring hand,
Sometime, with tearless eyes we'll see,
Yes, there, up there, we'll understand."

McMILLAN.—On September 8th, 1903, Miss Mary Isabel McMillan, died at her home in the village of Dundaroch, N. C., in the 61st year of her age.

She was a devout Christian, of a highly respected family, and although death came with but little warning of his approach, she was ready for the solemn change.

J. A. C.

ROSEMAN.—Since the last regular meeting of our society, one of our beloved members, Mrs. Ella Reedy Roseman, died on the first day of July, aged 47 years. She always paid her monthly dues and contributed as she was able, quietly in other ways in which this society aids the service of our church. Specially did she assist in furnishing the orphan boy at Barium Springs, whom this society clothes. Faithful wife and stepmother, her death dismantles a home shadowed by frequent bereavements. She did what she could till, tired and prostrated, God gave his beloved sleep. In testimony of our love and appreciation of her faithful service, we make this record on our minutes and request its publication in the Lincoln Journal and Presbyterian Standard.

By order of the Ladies' Aid Society of Lincolnton Presbyterian church, N. C., Sept. 6th, 1903.

MRS. S. W. McKEE, President.
MRS. ANNIE M. HOKE, Vice-President.
Attest:

MISS MARY KNOX JOHNSTON,
Secretary.

The Household.

The Modern Mary.

By Annie Balcomb Wheeler.

"I haven't tried to keep up my music, I haven't tried to shine socially, I haven't even tried to be a good housekeeper; I have simply tried to bring up my children, this takes up all my time," said a mother to me not long ago.

Her "I haven't even tried to be a good housekeeper," reminds us of that little scene enacted two thousand years ago in Bethany, where two sisters were entertaining a very dear friend as he passed through their village. Food would not keep well in that country, it had to be prepared freshly; they could sweep and garnish the modest home when they heard of his approach, but they could not cook the meals ahead as the twentieth century housekeeper can, enjoying her hours with her guest, broken only by the minimum of serving. Martha, an energetic housekeeper, plans a most elaborate menu. Can we not fancy Mary saying, "Would you have us work every moment when the Master is here; have we not much to learn from his lips?"

But Martha goes on with her preparations, and instead of cooking the simple, wholesome fare of broiled fish and barley cakes, supplemented by ripe figs and native wine, she painstakingly concocts her most wonderful dishes, gets out the choicest pottery and spreads the board in grandest style.

Mary's keener insight tells her the Master would prefer their society rather than the fancily prepared meat, leeks and lentils, and the rich sweetmeats. Perhaps she was a bit selfish in not assisting even in the work she considered unnecessary; but she certainly saw in this visit an opportunity not to be lost of learning of things eternal. Fancy if we of the present day had no books, no newspapers! How we would welcome the guest, especially a great teacher, whose moments were so crowded that visits were of the rarest occurrence! How attentively we would listen that we might remember every word he said!

Most of us at some time sympathized with Martha; but that was before we reflected upon her overweening pride in her housewifely accomplishments, and realized her narrow outlook.

"Now Jesus loved Martha and her sister and Lazarus," and how gently he reproved her when she made complaint of Mary. "Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things; but one thing is needful, and Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her."

This one Modern Mary, a woman of superior intellect, is well fitted for social distinctions. Some would have enjoyed it at any cost, even to the neglect of the material and moral welfare of those entrusted to her care; some would have seriously involved the husband who earns only a medium salary, in their efforts to keep abreast of society and maintain a fine establishment; but she has chosen to forego these, at least for a time, and is living in and for her family, making them happy and comfortable, teaching them to be kind, self-reliant and ambitious of noble things; she has kept them in church and Sunday school, encouraged them in Christian Association and Christian Endeavor work, taught them to feel above price in the matter of dress; for in order to take up music and other things "that good part," they were unable to wear as good clothes as many of their associates. She has sacrificed much that woman holds dear—dainty surroundings, the concert and orchestra that she loves; she has made over, turned, dyed and let down cheerfully; she has seen dust and blur; windows get the upper hand more than once, and house cleaning get well behind; but she has never neglected her family and now she is beginning to see the results. Last year she came to me with shining eyes.

"It pays," she said.

"Of course, it always does; but what is the particular piece of good news?" I asked.

"Jerold has entered the university with honors."

"And that will mean a scholarship I am so glad!"

Jerold was the oldest, a fine, manly boy, active in church and association work; he had worked vacations at anything he could do to start his college fund, and his mother and two sisters had ungrudgingly retrimmed their old hats, turned their gowns and cut down their coat sleeves. I wish I might tell you of the other children, especially the second, one of the sweetest girls I have ever known, soon to enter the Normal Art School now that the hoped-for scholarship has materialized and the family finances are not so severely taxed; Lena, the artistic genius of the family, her success in retrimming, remodeling, turning, twisting and making pretty things from almost nothing, a capital apprenticeship, having long ago determined her particular bent. But space will not permit further argument. I will simply add that only a few more years of struggle and mother is going to be looked after. They have not failed each other, and they will not fail her, and their already whispered plans for her future comfort are beautiful to hear. This Modern Mary has seen her three oldest children witness a good confession and unite with the Church.

And now to the all-important question: What can we best neglect when time, strength and money must be economized? We must care for the body, keep it nourished with elements to repair the waste and build up bone and brawn; we must give it a proper amount of sleep; we must clothe it neatly; but in this service for ourselves and others need we be a Martha?

The Modern Mary, first, will attend to the duty of teaching her little ones, beginning when they are quite small, how to help about the house, so that a day's illness or vacation will not set the house at sixes and sevens. This help, saving her many steps, will economize her time and strength, and leave her in better condition for the more important duties of the home.

Delicious Supper Dishes.

By Miss Dora M. Morrell.

For those suppers which one prefers quickly either to end an evening's entertainment or for the regular meal, a number of appetizing dishes not too well known, may be prepared, or is it necessary to have a chafing dish for their cooking. Anything which may be cooked in a chafing dish may as well be cooked on a kerosene, gas or coal stove. Any of the named dishes are readily prepared even by an inexperienced cook. The basis of all of these is a cream exactly like that for creamed toast. It is made by melting a spoonful of butter in the pan, adding a tablespoonful of flour and stirring this to a smooth paste. This paste is then thinned to proper consistency by the addition of cream, milk or even water. If the latter is used, much more butter must be allowed.

Sometimes the cook has a good deal of difficulty in making the paste come smooth. She may, if she prefer, mix four flour first with enough cold water to get the lumps out, then turn it into boiling water and let it thicken. To this is added the butter and seasoning. Once the cream is made which may be a day before it is wanted, if it is kept in a cool place—one is ready for creamed fish, sweetbreads, veal, chicken or turkey, oysters, clams, lobsters, potatoes, celery, turnips, or eggs.

Curry powder for seasoning will make a curry of any of these, but for curry the sauce is not as thick, and usually one adds boiled rice to it. For nearly all articles to be cooked in a curry or a cream sauce, all that is necessary is to add the meat or vegetables to the warmed sauce and let it heat up. This can be done with no danger of scorching by setting into a little of boiling water or by using a double boiler.

Sweetbreads to be served must first be blanched by simmering in hot water for ten minutes and then standing in cold water for the same length of time. Break them up after they are blanched and bring to a boil in cream. Serve on points of toast. This is a good rule to follow in serving all creamed dishes. Before the acid goes for her Sunday out, she can prepare the sauce and then it will be nothing to have the remainder of the dish prepared. Curry should not stand any length of time.

Another delectable dish for a supper is made from five eggs, a small box of sardines, one tablespoonful of butter, the juice of half a lemon, salt and cayenne to taste. Bone the sardines and flake them with a fork. Melt the butter, lay the sardines in it until they are hot, then add the beaten eggs and when they are set stir in the lemon juice, and salt and pepper. Try this receipt sometime when you want something new, substituting salmon for the sardines. 'Tis my own invention, and I assure you it is good. Somewhat similar is a salmon omelet which you may make by beating stiff the yolks of three eggs to which you will add three tablespoonfuls of milk. Add the same amount of minced salmon ad season. Cut into this the well beaten whites of the eggs. Cook until brown, double and serve at once. Omelets need the smoothest of iron pans and enough butter to insure their easy removal from the bottom of the pan. This receipt may be followed for other omelets. Chicken or veal in place of the fish is delicious. Don't be afraid to experiment with such materials as you have at hand.

Shrimps a la Newburg deserve to be better known than they are. Either fresh or canned shrimps may be used, there being the advantage to the latter that they do not have to be shelled. The little black line that runs down the back should be removed. Cook the shrimps in a tablespoonful of butter for three minutes with half a teaspoonful of salt, a few grains of cayenne and a teaspoonful of lemon juice. Remove the shrimps, keeping them warm. Make a sauce by adding to the pan in which the shrimp were cooked half a tablespoonful of butter with the same amount of flour mixed into it, half a cupful of cream and two yolks of eggs. Add the shrimps and flavor with lemon. Serve on toast points.

Cheese dishes are to be commended because they are nourishing and not unhealthful. There is an air of festivity about the Welsh rarebit which has made it many friends. This receipt is good for a mild rarebit. Melt half a tablespoonful of butter, add half a teaspoonful of cornstarch, and half a cupful of thin cream. Cook for two minutes, and add half a pound of mild cheese broken in small pieces. When smooth season with salt, mustard and pepper. Serve on toast. To make this better to the masculine taste, transform it to a Golden Buck by dropping on each slice of toast a poached egg. Eggs scrambled with cheese are delicious. To make this dish you need do nothing but add bits of mild cheese to your ordinary receipt for scrambled eggs. Cheese fondu is light and is a good supper dish. Melt a tablespoonful of butter in a pan, add to it one cupful of milk, one cupful of bread crumbs, two cupfuls of cheese, grated or broken in bits, and season with mustard, salt and red pepper. Stir constantly and just before serving add the well beaten whites of two eggs.

Small birds are very well cooked in a pan. Each bird is duly washed and wiped dry, and then put into the pan with a tablespoonful of butter for each bird. They must be turned often or they will burn. When cooked through, place on a slice of toast and pour over each a sauce made by cooking a half a cupful of stock with a squeeze of lemon in the pan in which the birds were cooked. Hot water and butter may serve instead of the stock.

New York Observer.

Mrs. Laura S. Webb,

Vice-President of Women's Democratic Clubs of Northern Ohio.

THERE ARE MANY sickly women between the ages of 45 and 55, but there are very few invalids over 55 and 60 years of age. The change of life coming to a woman near her forty-fourth year, either makes her an invalid or gives her a new lease on life. Those who meet this change in ill health seldom live ten years afterward, while a woman who lays aside the active duties of womanhood in health seldom fails to live on in happiness, years after she has passed 60. This is truly a critical time.

Mrs. Laura S. Webb.

Mrs. Laura S. Webb, of Toledo, Ohio, recognizes the change of life as a dangerous period and she also has faith in Wine of Cardui. She writes:

"As I had always been troubled more or less at the menstrual period, I dreaded the change of life which was fast approaching. While visiting with a friend I noticed that she was taking your Wine of Cardui, and she was so enthusiastic about it that I decided to try a bottle. I experienced some relief the first month, so I kept on taking it for three months and now I menstruate with no pain and I shall take it off and on now until I have passed the climax. I do not dread it now, as I am sure that your Wine of Cardui will be of great benefit at this time."

Wine of Cardui is the remedy to re-inforce a woman against the shock that comes with the change of life. It re-establishes healthy functions after years of suffering. In doing this it has saved thousands of sufferers just in time. Do not wait until suffering is upon you. Thorough preparations should be made in advance. Begin the Wine of Cardui treatment today.

WINE of CARDUI

A million suffering women have found relief in Wine of Cardui.

The Home Circle.

THE JUDGEMENT OF LOVE.

(By William Person Merrill.)

The news of his death came with a great shock to those who loved him, and they were many. It seemed impossible that death could have claimed him so soon. It was but a few days since he had stood in the pulpit and brought the message—his last word to them. They had noticed then that he seemed worn and tired, but they had forgotten this in the intensity and vividness of the sermon. They remembered the theme—could they ever forget it?—"We must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ." It was a heart-searching sermon, calling out shame, repentance, even dread; yet setting forth the Son of Man as the Judge and love as the test, and so calling out hope and faith. There seemed a strange fitness in this, his last message. His life was now finished, ready for the judgement. Even the thoughtless were profoundly impressed. Many a one said in his heart, "I wish I were as ready as he to stand before the judgment seat."

So completely had his mind been filled with the message, that when the fever smote him his thoughts went back continually to the theme of the judgment. In the delirium of the disease the text was ever on his lips, and his imagination was ever picturing the Son of Man judging the deeds of men by the law of love. And so when brain and body gave way, and he awoke out of great pain into great peace, when he realized that he was on the other side of the mystery of death, his first thought was of the judgment. With a solemn awe that was almost dread, he realized that now the time of judgment had come for him.

He heard a voice commanding, yet sweet, saying, "Arise." He saw no one, yet he knew who had spoken, and the thought in his heart leaped to light in the question, "Whither, Lord To the judgment?" But the answer came, "Tarry here yet awhile with those who love you."

Then as he looked there rose before him the familiar scenes in which his life had been spent. He saw the people he had known, among whom he had lived and worked; he heard their words, he could even read their thoughts.

His heart turned first to the one he loved best. In the years of their married life they had grown to be so truly one that the pang of parting from her was like the wrenching apart of the soul and body in death. He saw her now alone with her grief, sitting by the dead form that was still sacred to her because through it the spirit of her loved one had given itself to her. He longed to tell her that he was still living, loving, with her; but something held him back. He seemed in some way to understand that for her now faith and hope were the best, far better than even the vision of him would be.

She was speaking of him now, words whispered to herself, incoherent, confused. But they were plain to him. "Ah, my beloved, there was no one like you. Never once did you fail me. Never once did you cause me grief, or lay a burden upon me through selfishness. Oh, how can I live without you? But than kGod, thank God, that such a man wanted me, shared his life with me! Oh, the beautiful years together! O God, let me have him again; I will wait, only bring me to him sometime, my perfect lover."

As he heard a great shame stole over his spirit. His conscience began to say, "Were you really all that to her? Were you worthy of such love?" Out from his past life memory began to drag pictures he did not want to see. He thought of how often he had failed her, how selfishness had marred his love for her. He had left her to bear burdens alone. He had come home tired from his work and had selfishly thrown on her the burden when she was already carrying loads too heavy for her to bear alone. When she came to him for sympathy, how often had he failed, and made his own fatigue the excuse. And now her great love for him, that overlooked all his failure, made his whole home life appear black with selfishness and thoughtlessness. He bowed himself in remorse, hardly able to bear the thought of his failure and selfishness, that had suddenly started into light in the presence of her great love.

He became conscience of other faces and other voices; the people of his church, to whom he had ministered, were thinking and speaking of him. In their tears, in their words, in their looks, were the evidences of the great grief which is the shadow of great love. They said little to one another; they could not trust themselves to say much. But in their thoughts he read only love and appreciation. "He laid down his life for us. He would not spare himself. He was the true pastor, never thinking of himself, always of his work and his people." How much he was to me when my great sorrow came. At once, he came to me, regardless of trouble or discomfort, and just as long as I needed him he was mine." "How patient he was when we came and interrupted him in his study. How lovingly he turned from his absorbing work to greet us, though often we deserved nothing but a rebuke for taking his precious time for our little needs." So ran the loving thoughts, dwelling on all his relation with them, and seeing in him, as memory revealed him, the perfect pastor and friend.

As he listened, every loving word seemed to cut his heart. Oh, how different it had been. Oh, the weariness and impatience with which he had turned from the study to greet the one who had called on him to meet some simple, human need. How perfunctory his calls had been. How unlike the Good Shepherd he had been. Day after day stood out sharp in his memory when he had turned away from the service he should have rendered, to selfish enjoyment. How mean and poor the reasons seemed now that then looked so convincing—"He needed the rest; he must do some reading in justice to his work; to give the afternoon to seeing such works of art or hearing such music, was but preparing himself the better to help and inspire men." He could see how often those pleasures were specious, hollow, and insincere; and in the light of his people's love, his ministry looked black and selfish. He had given himself so grudgingly, spared himself so readily. His heart cried out, "God forgive me for the way I have failed."

And now it seemed to him that again he was in the church where he had preached so often. The air was heavy with the scent of lilies; the music of the organ was soft and sad; they were playing the hymns he had loved best. With a heart-throb he realized that they were meeting in memory with him. Now the music ceased, and one of his dear friends rose and began to read from the Bible. Could they mean those words to apply to him? "Well done, good and faithful servant." "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." Was he worthy that such words should be spoken of his life? And even while he was thinking with deep shame how little he deserved thus to be regarded, he became conscious of a voice that was speaking directly of him and his life. He could not doubt the words. But as he listened he seemed to be hearing only evidence of how skillfully he had kept his faults out of sight, what a little way below the surface even those who knew him best had ever penetrated. In the light of perfect truth he saw now that he was not what they thought him. His past life was startlingly clear to him; and it seemed to rise and protest against these generous estimates of his character and spirit and words. How unworthy he was of such love!

The scene at the church faded from his sight. Again he was in his home; his wife was there, returned from following the body to its last resting place. With her was their boy, a manly little fellow, just old enough to begin to understand something of the sadder side of life. She was talking with him about his father, and this was the burden of the words: "I want you to be like him, as pure, as true, as manly as he; I want you to love God and serve Christ, and give yourself for man, as he did. All your life remember what your father was, and try to be like him; there is nothing nobler or better for you." And the man, looking into the crystal purity of the child's heart, felt a deeper shame than ever a sense of impurity and moral weakness. "What am I," he thought, "to be a model for that young life? God be merciful to me the sinner."

Suddenly he became conscious of essence nearer than any of these. One was looking into his heart, and he had no power to turn away, or shut his heart against that searching gaze. All that he had been and thought and felt was laid bare; he was being seen just as he was. But with the shame of it there began to rise within him a wonderful sense of comfort. He looked up and saw the Master whom he had served, and in the Master's look was love and only love. There was One who knew him as he was, yet here was the greatest love of all. He seemed to hear the question asked of him, as the same tender voice asked it by the Sea of Galilee, "lovest thou me?" At once the shame was gone, as the pride had gone before; no thought of self, of the past, of regret, no self-satisfaction remained, only a great true love which he knew now had been the secret of all that had been good in his poor life; and he cried with humble gladness, "Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee."

Again the voice spoke, "Follow me." Again, though now with no dread, he asked, "Whither, Lord? To the judgment?" But the answer came, "For the judgment is past; you have been standing before the judgment seat of love."—The Interior.

OIL CURE FOR CANCER.

Dr. D. M. Bye has discovered a combination of oils that readily cure cancer, catarrh, tumors and malignant skin diseases. He has cured thousands of persons within the last ten years, over one hundred of whom were physicians. Readers having friends afflicted should cut this out and send it to them. Book sent free giving particulars and prices of Oils. Address the home office, Dr. D. M. Bye, Drawer 505, Indianapolis, Ind.

Something Lacking.

Many people become so absorbed in the pursuit that, like a tree near the edge of the forest, they grow one-sided; and their life always lacks something to complete its harmony. Many men and women grow crabbed and crusty as they grow old. A little change in their circumstances—a wife, husband, child, anything to keep them from perpetually thinking out themselves and their troubles, and that would draw out and enlist their sympathies for others—would have kept them from becoming like Egyptian mummies in the midst of a people of flesh and blood. We are such creatures of habit that any bad habit may soon become fixed upon us. One may be absorbed, even in the practical duties of life, to such an extent that he will neglect some things that would be of great advantage. As an illustration of this, the following story is told of John Ericsson, the great inventor, and Ole Bull, the distinguished violinist:

"John Ericsson and Ole Bull were boys together in their native Sweden. John turned his mind to mechanics.

Ole gave his soul to music. In after years, when both had become famous, they met in New York. The musician went into the shop where the mechanic was wedded to the things of the industrial world, and said: 'John, come to Music Hall to-night, and hear me play.'

"No, Ole, I've no time for that.'

"If you don't, John, I'll come tomorrow and play in your shop.'

"Ole, if you bring your fiddle into my shop, I'll smash it.'

"But the musician came next day, nevertheless, and said: 'John, something is the matter with my instrument. It is a very choice one, and I wish that you would fix it for me.'

"At once the great mechanic was interested, and soon by his quick glance and masterly skill was able to readjust the arch of the soundingboard, which had become slightly strained. Then the musician sat upon a bench, and drew the bow across the strings to learn if the alteration had restored the harmonious balance of his cherished violin. In a moment the workmen dropped their tools, drew near, and listened with bated breath as the divine music filled all the air with its enchantment. Soon the music ceased; but Ericsson, with tears streaming down his face, said with choking voice to his old-time playmate: "Go on, Ole, go on! I never knew before what was lacking in my life."—Selected.

DRAKE'S PALMETTO WINE.

This wonderful tonic medicine will immediately help you and absolutely cure you. Every reader of Presbyterian Standard, who desires to give this remarkable Palmetto medicine a thorough test is offered a trial bottle of Drake's Palmetto Wine free. One tablespoonful once a day immediately relieves and absolutely cures Indigestion, Flatulency, Constipation, Catarrh of the Mucous Membranes, Congestion of Liver or Kidneys, and Inflammation of Bladder, to stay cured. It is a wonderful tonic for the appetite, nervous system and blood, and promotes and maintains health and vigor.

Seventy-five cents at Drug Stores for a large bottle, usual dollar size, but a trial bottle will be sent free and prepaid to every reader of Presbyterian Standard who needs such a medicine. Address your letter or postal card to Drake Formula Company, Lake and Dearborn Streets, Chicago, Ill. A trial bottle will be sent prepaid.

ULCERINA.

The only cure for Chronic Ulcers on the market. The most reliable remedy known for Ring-Worms, Old Sores, Wounds of all kinds and chronic skin diseases. For sale by all druggists. Price 25 cents. Manufactured by

R. G. ROZIER, M. D.,
LUMBERTON, N. C.

Chicken livers with curry are very good. Dip the livers in crumbs, in egg, and again in crumbs, and brown in butter. Remove the livers, add one until yellow. Then add one tablespoonful of chopped onion, and cook until yellow. Then add one tablespoonful of flour mixed with half a teaspoonful of curry powder and one cupful of stock. Pour over the livers and serve with rice balls, made by pressing steamed rice into moulds.—

One of the greatest characteristics of the past and present day is

Individuality.

The individuality of the Stieff Piano is its chief charm. There is no other Piano just like the Stieff. Others try to imitate, but some how they fail to reach that "something"—that individuality characteristic of the Stieff Piano.

The Stieff Piano

enjoys still another "individuality" foreign to any other great make. It is sold direct to the user instead of to the retail dealer to resell. This "individuality" keeps the retail dealer's big profit in your home, and yet you secure an ideal piano; one that will meet every demand of the greatest pianist or most exacting musician. It costs no more than a medium grade, or more likely cheap thump box through the middle man.

STIEFF

SOUTHERN WAREHOUSES:
211-213 N. Tryon, & 22 W. 5th St.
C. H. WILMOTH, Mgr.
Charlotte, - - - - N. C.

ORGANIZED 1832.
THE

Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $800,000.
Agencies in every Town and County.

WM. H. PALMER PRESIDENT. W. H. McCARTHY, SEC'Y
F. K. ELLINGTON, GENERAL AGENT. RALEIGH, N. C.
E. NYE HUTCHISON, Agent THOS. H. HAUGHTON, " Charlotte, N. C.

Our Young People.

A Question of Neighbors.

Alice M. Guernsey.

It was a curious group which waited the coming of Lois Masten that hot Sunday in August. Ralph Wenkle, in spotless white suit, sat between Tom and Jerry Saunders—as clean as he, but in gingham blouses and shabby inner knickerbockers. Mike Phinney's face showed his nationality no less plainly than did his name, and the Fatherland was written in every gleam of Fritz Schroeder's blue eyes. A motley, ill-assorted group, one would have said, but a group held together by the loving faithfulness of their teacher.

"She's the best teacher in this school!" cried Mike, at the close of a heated argument with the boys of the next class and Tom added, loyally, "She's the best there is anywhere!"

"Who is your neighbor, boys?" asked Lois, as the lesson study began.

The boys looked puzzled. At last Fritz said a bit slowly, "Carl Hengel's my neighbor—t'any rate, he lives 'cross the hall. But I don't like him," he added, as the memory of sundry encounters came to mind.

"And I don't like Tim O'Rary," cried Mike. "I just hate him, and I'll never get on that he's my neighbor at all."

"We have some nice neighbors, I guess," said Ralph; "but we don't know them any. Out in the country, where we used to live, we knew everybody, and it was lots nicer."

"Oh, we've got an uncle," said Tom, eagerly, "an uncle who lives out West—w-a-y out west—and he hasn't got any neighbors nearer 'n ten miles."

"Whew!" whistled Mike, under his breath. Small wonder that the story seemed incredible to the tenement-house lad, in whose mind the country was a mixture of playground, sand heaps, recreation-pier breezes and Mulberry Park trees.

Lois smiled, as she said, "Listen, boys, and I'll tell you a story. Once on a time a great crowd of people were standing round Jesus and talking with Him. At last somebody asked a question, and Jesus told this story in answer. He said that there was a man who went down from Jerusalem to Jericho. The people He was talking to knew all about that road. Robbers lived along the way, hiding in the rocks, and pouncing on travelers and stealing all they had—their money and clothes and everything."

"Why didn't the police stop 'em?" questioned Mike.

"I'm afraid the police on that road were not good ones," answered Lois.

"Praps they made the thieves divide up with 'em," concluded Mike, sagely.

Unheeding the interruption, Lois went on. "One day a traveler went along this road, as I said, and the thieves fell upon him, and took his things away, and half killed him, and then ran off. There the poor man lay, almost naked, and bleeding and sore, with nobody to help him. A priest came along and looked at him and then crossed over to the other side of the road and went along down toward Jericho."

"I call that mean," said Tom. "I should think he might have helped a fellow."

"Mebbe he was scared of the robbers himself, and wanted to hurry away," said Jerry.

"Then another man came along," continued Lois, "a man who went to the same church and belonged to the same country as the traveler. But he just looked at him and turned away."

"That's meaner yet," said Ralph. "You'd think that a man who went to the same church would help him, anyhow."

"What if he didn't have any money," suggested Tom.

"Well, he might ha' told him that he was sorry for him, and tried to help him up. Did he do that, Miss Lois?"

"No," said Lois. "He just went by on the other side. Then there came along another man, but he was of a different nation, and his people and the people of the man who was hurt hated each other. They were always quarreling and injuring one another. When he came and saw the man, what do you suppose he did?"

"Hit him again," said Mike.

"Did he kill him, Miss Lois?" asked Ralph, his eye growing wide at the thought of the possible tragedy.

"No; when he saw him he was very sorry for him. He forgot all about the old quarrel, and he bound up his wounds, gave him something to drink and to wear, and then he put him on his own horse, and held him there until they reached a place where he could be taken care of. This man came from Samaria, and people call him the Good Samaritan. All night he looked after the man, and the next morning he said to the landlord, 'I must go along to attend to my business, but here's some money. You take care of the poor fellow, and if it costs any more, I'll pay the rest the next time I come this way.'

"I said, you remember, that Jesus told this story in answer to a question. The question was, 'Who is my neighbor?' Do you think Jesus meant that the two men who 'passed by on the other side' were real neighbors to the man who was robbed?"

"What! the fellers who went off and left him? Not much they weren't his neighbors!" said Mike, emphatically.

"Well, did the poor man who was robbed and half murdered live next door to the Good Samaritan?"

"No, ma'am; nowhere near him."

"Were they old friends?"

"No, ma'am; they was folks that didn't like each other."

"I s'pect they really hated each other, like Tim an' me," said Mike.

"Well, if they didn't live near each other, and didn't really like each other, how could the Samaritan and the wounded man be neighbors?"

Five puzzled boy faces looked into the earnest eyes of their teacher.

"I don't see's they could be," said Jerry.

"'Who is my neighbor?' Who is your neighbor?" asked Lois, pressing the question home.

"I guess I know," said Tom, at last. "Your really true neighbor's anybody you can help."

"Yes," said Lois. "Our neighbors are the people we can help, and there are a lot of them, as Mike says. This week I want you to find out some of them, to remember every neighborly act you do or see, and Friday night I want you to come to my house to talk it all over. Will you?"

Would they! They had been to Miss Lois' home before. It was a small flat, and Miss Lois never wore fine dresses; but there was sure to be ice cream or lemonade. Trust the boys to go for the sake of the treat, if for nothing else!

"Will you do it, too, Miss Lois?" asked Ralph.

"Will I do what? Look for my neighbors and tell you about it? Yes, we'll all do it together."

* * *

There was ice cream for the boys on Friday night, and after the "second helping" all around had disappeared, Mike began the stories:—

"Say, Miss Lois, I don't hate Tim O'Rary so bad's I did. I 'most like him."

"What have you done to help him?" asked Lois.

"Why, how'd you know I done anything? I haven't done much, only he lost his ball, and I let him take mine, and he an' I are 'most friends."

"Why, I did just that way with Carl," said Fritz. "He used to make faces at me, and Monday I said, 'Oh, come on; let's play. I'll let you help me fly my kite!' and he hasn't been ugly one bit since. I think I'm going to like him real well."

"My mother's my neighbor," said Jerry, timidly, and the boys stared at him.

"'Course she is, 'cause she's your mother, and you have to be good to her," said Ralph.

"No, you don't—leastways—" and Mike hesitated.

"Do you mean that boys are not always good to their mothers?" prompted Miss Lois.

"Yes, ma'am; that's what I mean. You see, sometimes mothers gets tired an' forgets they're neighbors too."

"I'm glad my boys are remembering to be good to their mothers," said Miss Lois. "Now tell us where you've found neighbors whom you didn't know of before."

"Why, Tom and me, we're going into the country with the Fresh Air s—I mean we're going to the same place; but we aren't going in the city 'cause we're too old. But Tom's mother, his mother lives in the country, and we're going to visit her. Don't you think that's really true neighbors, Miss Lois?"

It was a long speech for Jerry, but his cordial smile helped him through it. "It's a beautiful, neighborly thing," she said, "and I'm glad you and Tom are going. Have you found your neighbor, Ralph?"

"I don't know as I've found him," said Ralph, doubtfully. "But I told the boy what good times we have in Sunday-school, and how we were hunting for neighbors this week; and he said he guessed he'd come, too. He doesn't dress very well, Miss Lois, his clothes are ragged and he isn't very clean. Do you think he's a neighbor?"

"Yes, indeed, Ralph!" replied Lois. "He is a neighbor to every one of us. We will give him such a welcome that he will be glad to join us."—The Sabbath-School Visitor.

The Run-Around Member.

Frank H. Sweet.

The "Do What We Can" circle of the "King's Daughters" were discussing their work for the ensuing month. "I don't know of any urgent need in our own neighborhood," said May Whitely, pursing her lips and trying to look wise. "We've fitted out the Feneses and McDuggans, and have sent a ton of coal to Widow Cracken. There's old John Smithers," doubtfully, "but he traded the last flour we sent him for whiskey. I don't suppose it would be worth while to send him any more?"

"No, indeed!" exclaimed Clara Godrich. "If we can't find anything more deserving than that we'd better give our money to some other circle. I don't propose to skimp my pin money for such an old reprobate as Smithers."

Kate Markham, who was sitting by the window, now looked up from her sewing.

"I don't think we need bother about our next work," she said, quietly. "If you are not mistaken it's coming toward us now."

Several of the girls left their sewing and hurried to the window.

Coming down the opposite side of the street was a small boy of ten or twelve, his hands deep in his pockets, and his feet keeping time to some merry tune, which he was energetically whistling.

"He doesn't act as though he was overburdened with care," one of them remarked. "But I do believe he's coming here."

The boy had stopped and gazed across the street inquiringly. Then he came running toward them.

"Who is he?" asked May Whitely. "One of Ben Carter's children," Kate answered, "Ben is the lame man who used to peddle clams around the village. He lives somewhere near the salt ponds. Our hired man was down that way yesterday after a load of seaweed, and he stopped at Ben's to ask about the tides. He says they need help. Ben was in bed with the rheumatism and hadn't done a day's work this winter. And there were two small boys and a sickly woman. I heard Peter tell papa that they had absolutely nothing in the house to eat except a few small potatoes. He said he told them about our circle. I suppose that is what brings the boy here today."

"We shall have to make some inquiries before we give assistance," observed Miss Leeson, the president, gravely.

Quick footsteps on the stairs put an end to further conversation. A moment, and there was a light knock upon the door.

"Come in," said Miss Leeson.

The door opened and a bright-faced, merry-eyed boy stood before them. His clothes were patched and his shoes were worn, but his shoulders were well thrown back and his eyes did not shrink or waver as they looked into those of the president.

"Be you the—the club that helps folks?" he asked.

"Yes, what can we do for you?"

The boy shut the door carefully behind him without answering. Then he came and sat down on a chair near Miss Leeson. Some of the girls looked at him and nodded pleasantly. Instantly his own face rippled into quick returning smiles.

"I've come to jine," he said, modestly.

"Join—what?" Miss Leeson let her sewing fall into her lap.

"Why, your club, of course," eagerly. "Pete Gunny was down our way yesterday and told us all about it. He said them that jined hunted out poor folks an' the whole club pitched in an' fixed 'em up. Now, we've got a poor family down our way—desprit poor!" emphatically, "an' we need somebody to help us look after 'em. I couldn't seem to hit on nobody till I heard o' your club. That settled it."

Miss Leeson shook her head.

"I'm sorry, my boy, but we can't take you in," she said, smilingly. "Our circle is only for girls, and, besides, it is limited to ten members and we are full already. But we shall be glad to help you."

"An' you can't let me jine, no way?"

He smiled persuasively, but his smile vanished at the positive refusal on her face.

"I'm awfully sorry," he said, dismally. "I'd counted for sure on it. An'—an' I kinder promised a pair o' shoes to that little Eyetalian." He gazed thoughtfully on the floor for a few moments, then his face suddenly brightened.

"I s'pose you have consider'ble runnin' round to do?"

"Yes," wondering what was coming next.

"Well, s'pose I jine as a run-around member? You see," complacently. "I don't care shucks for mud and slush and rainy weather, an' all of 'em would be mighty hard on your nice dresses an' pretty shoes. I could run arrants an' fetch an' carry things; an' I'd be great on findin' poor folks. Now what do you say?" and he looked at her so confidently that she forgot the ragged clothes and poverty, and only saw the brave, earnest soul looking through the clear eyes. Her gaze wandered to the girls, questioningly. May Whitely came promptly to the rescue.

"Fellow members!" she cried: "I move we create the office of member extraordinary in our circle;" She paused until an "I second the motion," came from somewhere in the room.

"Good?" said Miss Leeson, catching the girls' spirit. "It is moved and seconded that the office be made. All in favor of the motion please signify by the usual sign."

There was a quick upraising of hands, accompanied by smothered laughter.

"Contrary minds the same sign. It is a vote. Anything more?"

"Yes." May went on; "I further move that we appoint Mr."—glancing inquiringly at the boy.

"Lish," looking at her a little doubtfully.

"Mr. Lish"—

"Carter," added Kate Markham.

"Mr. Lish Carter," said May calmly, "to the office just created." The president put the question and the new member was unanimously voted in.

"Now," went on the irrepressible girl, "let us inquire regarding the philanthropic enterprises in which our colleague is interested."

The boy looked at her with a puzzled expression on his face, but detecting an undercurrent of merriment in the room he took courage and bowed his thanks.

"Be I a reg'lar member?" he asked beamingly as he rose to his feet, "an' can I fetch in my poor folks?"

"We shall be very glad to hear about them," said Miss Leeson.

There was not the least trace of embarrassment in the face of the boy, nor any hesitation in the eager voice which poured forth the story of the "poor folks." Ever the girls felt themselves coming under the influence of his enthusiasm as he proceeded.

"Are they actually starving?" asked one of the girls, as he paused for a moment's breath.

"No," promptly. "Pap's been sendin' 'em taters off an' on, an' Ben an' me give 'em most of our walnuts and chestnuts. An' then I dig 'em a few clams now an' again, when the weather 'lows, an' hunt wood for 'em. But they're desprit off! most desprit! The father an' mother's sick an' there's five small children, an' none of 'em ain't much good for anything. You see," patronizingly, "they're Eyetalians, an' only come here last fall. They don't know our talk yet, nor how to scuffle round for vittles. They jest huddle up close to the fireplace an'—an' famish," knitting his brows for a suitable word. "An', would you b'leeve it?" excitedly; "there ain't a blessed shoe in the whole fambly! Them children paddle round in the snow and water barefoot, an' when it's awful cold they wrap their feet up in old rags. The biggest boy helps me some, and it's him I want to get shoes for. That's why I jined the club," glancing around the room as though he wished to impress this fact upon them. "I couldn't see no way to get 'em alone."

"Do they live near you?" asked Clara.

"'Bout half a mile. But their house ain't got any floor, like ourn. They live right on the bare ground."

"Hasn't anybody helped them besides your folks?" Clara asked again.

"No'm; but we've got along pretty well so fur. You see," proudly, "my pap's a real good provider. Last fall he chopped wood enough to last all winter, an' he worked round 'mong the farmers an' took his pay in small taters—hog taters, they call 'em," in smiling explanation. "We had 'most four barrels full. An' I sold clams myself an' bought salt an' a barrel o' turnips. I guess we'd a had plenty to stand us clean through the winter if it hadn't been for so many mouths. Eight Eytallians can eat a pile o' stuff when they're hungry."

"Yes," assented Miss Leeson, when he paused as though waiting for confirmation of his statement.

"I heard pap ask Pete Gunny yes'day," the boy resumed, with another smiling glance around the room, "if he know'd anybody in the village who'd be willin' to help a poor fambly. That's what made Pete tell about your club. Pap know'd the taters was 'most gone, an' I guess he thought Ben an' me couldn't scratch round lively enough to keep two famblies goin.' You see, pap's down with rheumatics."

"Yes, so I hear. But was it just quite right for you to give away all of your potatoes? If you are not careful you will need help yourselves."

"Oh, we're all right," answered the boy, carelessly. "There's only four of us, an' Ben an' me's both well. We ought to be able to look arter one fambly. But how 'bout the shoes for the Eytalian? S'pose we'll be able to get 'em?"

"Yes," answered Miss Leeson, "the children shall have shoes. Haven't we some on hand?" turning to one of the girls.

"There's the lot Mrs. Briggs sent in. They are almost as good as new. And there are some jackets and other things."

"Very well. And if any of you have shoes or underclothing or anything at home which you think will be useful, and which you do not need, suppose you send them in tomorrow morning. The committee will make a selection.

We shall have to buy some provisions, and perhaps a few other things. Now," turning to the boy, "suppose you tell us how old the children are that we may have some idea about providing for them."

"You don't mean all of 'em?"

"Yes, all."

"Won't they be jest tickled!" he cried, enthusiastically. "Shoes all round, an'—an' other things! Why, they won't know what they're walkin' on, they'll be so set up! The lame one'll want a jacket, if it can be squeezed out. He ain't nothin' but a caliker waist an' short britches."

"How shall we send the things down?" asked Miss Leeson.

"I can get pap's carryall," said Kate.

"That will be just the thing! Suppose you and May Whitely act as committee to deliver them and see what more is needed. Can you be here tomorrow?" to the boy.

"Yes'm. 'Tain't much over a mile"

"The girls will want you to act as guide. What time?" to Kate.

"Ten o'clock."

The next day was pleasant, and when the girls arrived they found the new member waiting patiently on the steps. He insisted on carrying all the packages and stowing them away in the carriage, and then he climbed up on the front seat beside Kate and took the reins which she smilingly offered him.

"I suppose you know how to drive?"

"Yes'm; pretty well, I've often driv' horses for the seaweeders."

After leaving the village the road wound across the fields and down along the sandy shore of the salt ponds, and finally dwindled into little more than a footpath. At length the boy stopped in front of a small cabin.

Springing from the carriage he turned to assist the girls; then he took an armful of packages and started toward the cabin.

It required but little investigation to prove that the family was in dire need. Kate took out her notebook and made copious entries. When they returned to the carriage she and May looked very grave.

"We will go to your home now," she said to the boy, as she took the whip and touched the horse lightly. "We want to be introduced to your mother and Ben."

"They'll be awfully glad to see you," he said, delightedly. "I told 'em all about our club last night."

"We would have blundered sadly if we had offered to give that boy anything," said Kate, as she and May drove home. "But I have spoken to papa about it, and he is going to give him some odd jobs to do. Lish' shall have new boots, as well as his 'Eytallians'."—The American Boy.

A definition—

"Painkiller," a sure cure for Cramps, Colic, and all Stomach Complaints. There is but one Painkiller, Perry Davis'."

From the people's dictionary.

Fruit Jar Wrench

Have you ever seen the "Tobax" Fruit Wrench? It will open the tightest fruit and will also put the cap on very tight.

We are offering them at 10c. each

and you will say it is the best article in your kitchen.

Send ten cents and two stamps for postage.

WEDDINGTON HARDWARE CO.

Atlantic & N. C. R. R.

Time table in effect November 19, 1902.

Eastbound Trains.	Passenger Daily.	Passenger Daily.
Leave Goldsboro.....	3:30 p m	8:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	4:22 p m	8:48 a m
Leave New Bern.....	5:50 p m	10:10 a m
Arrive Morehead City.....	7:15 p m
Westbound Trains.	Passenger Daily.	Passenger Daily.
Leave Morehead City.....	7:05 a m
Leave New Bern.....	9:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	10:12 a m
Arrive Goldsboro.....	11:15 a m

Southern Girl SHOES.

THE BEST SHOE IN AMERICA FOR $2.00

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE

IF YOUR DEALER DOES NOT CARRY THEM, A POSTAL CARD TO US WILL TELL YOU WHERE YOU CAN GET THEM.

CRADDOCK-TERRY CO.
LEADING
SHOE MANUFACTURERS
OF THE SOUTH.
LYNCHBURG — VA.

Cheap Settlers' Tickets.

On the first and third Tuesdays of each month until April, 1904, the Frisco System (Saint Louis & San Francisco Railroad) will have on sale reduced one-way and round trip tickets from Birmingham, Memphis and Saint Louis to points in Arkansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Indian Territory and Texas.

Write to W. T. Saunders, G. A., P. D. Frisco System, Atlanta, Ga., for information

Estab. '32 SCALES of every description. Satisfaction Guaranteed. Write for prices. JESSE MARDEN 100 S. CHARLES ST. BALTIMORE, MD.

Wear Red Seal Shoes
Catalog for Postal

A Chess-Town.

The village of Stroebeck in Prussian Saxony is unique in its devotion to the game of Chess. According to tradition, a Wendish prince, imprisoned by the local prince-bishop in 1011, killed away the hours of his captivity with the aid of a set of chessmen carved by himself, and taught the game to the numerous peasants who served as his successive jailers, and who, in turn, imparted their knowledge to the other villagers. The tower in which the prince was confined is still standing and is called the "Schachthurm" or Chess-tower.

However this may be, it is certain that the Stroebeckers, men, women, and children, have for ages been renowned for Chess-playing. Instead of dying out, the craze has become intensified in modern times, and instruction in Chess now forms part of the regular education of children. At the close of each school year, a Chess-tournament or tourney is held under the supervision of the school and town authorities, and six prizes are awarded to the best players—three to boys and three to girls. The prizes are all alike, each consisting of a chess-board inscribed "reward of diligence," which is forthwith installed in the place of honor in the "best room" at home, to inspire younger brothers and sisters with pride, envy, and emulation.—From Die Woche.

TALKING IN THEIR SLEEP.

"You think I'm dead,"
The apple tree said,
Because I have never a leaf to show;
Because I stoop,
And my branches droop,
And the dull, gray mosses o'er me grow!
But I'm alive in the trunk and shoot;
The buds of next May
I fold away—
But I pity the withered grass at my root."

"You think I'm dead,"
The quick grass said,
Because I've parted with stem and blade!
But under the ground
I'm safe and sound,
With the snow's thick blanket over me laid;
I'm all alive and ready to shoot
Should the spring of the year
Come dancing here—
But I pity the flowers without branch or root."

"You think I'm dead,"
A soft voice said,
Because not a branch or root I own!
I never have died,
But close I hide
In a plummy seed that the wind has sown;
Patient I wait through the long winter hours;
You will see me again—
I shall laugh at you then
Out of the eyes of a hundred flowers."
—From St. Nicholas,

A Perfect Laxative is one which is palatable, pleasant to take and can be relied upon to act gently, but thoroughly; cleansing the entire system of all impurities. Such a remedy is Mozley's Lemon Elixir. It is a pleasant lemon tonic, acceptable to the most delicate stomach, and a thoroughly effective laxative, acting upon the bowels, liver, and kidneys, without the slightest unpleasantness.

MOZLEY'S LEMON HOT DROPS are without an equal for coughs, colds, sore throat and bronchitis.

Sold by all druggists.

Mozley's
Lemon
Elixir.

E. M. ANDREWS,

The Old Reliable

THREE LARGE STORES IN ONE

REMEMBER I HAVE MOVED.

Headquarters Greensboro, N. C.

Our money is made in the buying. You save in the same proportion when you deal with Andrews.

Visit our mammoth store in person, or you should write us for catalogue and prices.

Royal & Borden's Royal Elastic Felt
Mattress is the best.

WE PAY THE FREIGHT.

E. M. ANDREWS, 315, 317, 319 South Elm Street.

Pianos, Organs, Carpets, Matting.

Mellon's

Fall and Winter

Clothing

IS NOW READY.

That which has been passed upon and stamped fashionable for the service of men who care to be well dressed this fall and winter, now grace our counters. For weeks we have been earnestly at work receiving from the tailors and arranging for your inspection the new clothing lines; and now that all is in readiness we bid you come your first opportunity and view the new styles in all their freshness and beauty. It is a splendid showing of men's apparel with few equals.

Ed. W. Mellon Company.

Oldsmobiles

BEGINNING AUGUST 1st, we can make deliveries in 10 days or less, and the price, with wood wheels F. O. B. Detroit, will be.....$650.00

Osmond L. Barringer

Distributing Agent

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA

Our Little Folks.

Children's Letters.

Sept. 16, 1903.

Dear Standard:

I will write a short letter this morning. The little friends have almost quit writing letters; there was not one last week. I am sorry, for I love so much read them. Our school has not commenced yet. I have no pets but my cats. Their names are Apple Jack, Jipsey and Toney. I have been to three picnics this summer had a nice time at all of them.

I will answer Irene Abernethy's question. Churning of milk is found in the 30th chapter of Prov. and 33rd verse. I will ask a question and close: Where is sweet spices found in the Bible?

Your little friend
LOLA FESPERMAN.

Laurinburg, N. C., Sept. 20th, 1903.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl, 8 years old. I have three brothers and one sister. My father is in Florida engaged in the lumber business. He came to see us in July and we are going to see him Christmas.

Dr. Rose is my pastor and I like him very much.

Your friend,
MARY PHILLIPS.

LITTLE "ALL BLACK."

He was our first pony, and brother Maddy and I valued him accordingly.

We were the sons of a hard-working Pennsylvania farmer, and our greatest pleasure and recreation was a daily scamper along the valley road, on the glossy back of pretty All Black. He was, indeed, rightly named. His thin satin coat was of midnight blackness. He was gentle, too, and possessed a wonderful amount of endurance and go. He had been given us by our wealthy Philadelphia uncle, Clement Madoc Holt, because my twin brother and I were both his namesakes. We were twelve then, and thoroughly dissatisfied with our busy, prosaic home life.

"Clem," said Maddy, the first September day of 1860, "we have worked harder this summer than any boys of our age in the whole country. I'm sick of it all and so are you. Suppose we end it all by going away!"

"You mean by running off?"

"Yes, Clem, I mean that. We will go to Uncle Holt in Philadelphia."

"But it's miles and miles from here, and we haven't much money," I added reluctantly.

Yet Maddy only laughed.

"I know it, Clem. All Black can carry us both, and it won't cost a penny. We want an education and we want to get rich, like Uncle Holt. We never will here on father's farm"

"But Maddy," I put in uneasily, "can we—should we leave mother?"

Our eyes fell to the four bare feet on the ground before us. Dear, patient uncomplaining mother! For a moment we had both forgotten her.

"Steve is ten now, and most as tall as we are," replied Maddy at last. "He'll be good to mother, never fear!"

"But we are her eldest sons," I suggested again with only half emphasis. "She'll be glad enough that we went, if we come home rich some day and grown up men at that."

"But she may die before then," I faltered.

"Don't say or think of it, Clem. We have our own way to make! No help from father or mother either, for that matter. We've got to go and now for the 'rangements. We have two good suits apiece and they can go into one bundle. In fact, Clem, they are tied up already, down in the bushes by the lane gate."

"Why, Madoc Holt," I cried in astonishment.

"You see, I've thought about it a long time," he went on. "You can ride All Black tonight, as usual, an' wait for me out in the road."

"But won't we tell mother good-bye?"

"It can't be, Clem. She'd read us through in a minute."

"All right," I said slowly. For a great lump rose in my throat at the thought.

After chores I stole back to the kitchen.

"Mother," I asked with assumed carelessness, "may Maddy and I ride All Black?"

"Of course, child. Don't you do it every night of your lives?"

I kissed her for the answer, and turned to walk away.

"Clem," she called, "are you sick?"

"No, mother."

"Be careful of the pony. Father thinks he isn't well. Don't go too far and be back before dark."

And I went on without a word. Brother Steve was whistling in the wood-shed, and father was down in the poultry yard. Maddy, I knew, was waiting for me out in the road.

I saddled All Black and was off in a moment. I had left home!

"Clem," cried Maddy from the hedge, "I guess it's all right all around. I've got the clothes, and we'll put on our second best suits right here."

It was hurriedly done. Indeed I never remember dressing in less time. And soon we were up and away.

"We've 160 pounds for All Black's back," I said, with a forced laugh. "Father thinks he's sick, but that's nonsense."

"We'll reach Philadelphia in a week," said Maddy. "We're no weight at all for a Canadian pony."

"What will we do when we get there?" I ventured.

"Work," said Maddy again.

"But won't we go to Uncle Holt's?"

"Not at first. He would send us back on sight. And we've got to sell All Black. Errand boys don't ride on horseback, and I, for one, am going into a grocery. See if I don't have a store of my own in ten year's time!"

"You'll let me tend it for you, Maddy?"

"Of course. But you ain't ambitious enough, Clem. You must earn a store too."

"Uncle Holt may help us."

"Perhaps—perhaps not. Better not depend on him for anything."

All Black was going at a good gait. I looked back and our farm house was already out of sight.

"Maddy," I ventured again, "where are we going to spend the night?"

"Oh, I don't know. In the woods somewhere I guess."

I shivered at his answer. If there was ever a coward born, it was myself, Clement Holt. And we were going to sleep in the woods. Why, the thought of it was terror to me.

We hastened on then, for a time in utter silence. I knew Maddy was thinking hard and I did not attempt to interrupt him.

Darkness came at last, but we still kept on.

"We're going straight to Philadelphia," said brother, proudly. "The lights 'cross there are M—, and we've come four miles already. When we're tired riding, we'll stop in the first woods we come to, and"—

"Why not at a farm house, Maddy?"

"Oh, folks would see us and know us. It will be bad enough, if we have to ask now and then for something to eat."

"I'm hungry now."

"But we both had supper; and only babies whine."

"I'm tired, too, Maddy."

"You ain't as strong as me, I know. But All Black must be the tiredest. I fed him well, and I'm glad of it. He walks as though he was lame."

"Mebbe he's sick, as father said."

"Stuff, Clem. You're a croaker from Croakersville. Here's a nice bit of woods, and the grass and leaves will make a fine bed."

"Ain't you 'fraid, Maddy?"

"What of?"

"Oh, ghosts and lots of things."

"You'd better turn 'round and go home."

"No," I decided then and there, "I'm going to Philadelphia with you."

So Maddy hitched All Black to Maple tree, and we laid down for the night. Our extra suits from the bundle we used for covering. But the air was chilly, and the grass was damp. The pony was restless, too, and kept pawing the ground about him. So Maddy and I did not sleep, and before daylight we arose, feeling both stiff and tired.

"Let's go on," said brother, without even a whistle. "We may reach a farm house where they'll give us breakfast. I've got a dollar, and we won't beg till we have to. Come, Clem."

And we remounted All Black, who gave a dissatisfied snort. The road forked just ahead, as we could see, even in the darkness.

"Which way now, Maddy?"

"We'll turn to the right," he answered unhesitatingly. "I've heard father say that Philadelphia is exactly northeast of us."

And turn to the right we did. All ack went faster than, and it both surprised and pleased us.

"He must feel better," said Maddy. "There's nothing like an early start. At daylight we may be five miles further on."

"And five miles further from home!" added with a sigh.

"To be sure, Clem. No prodigal sons for me. I wouldn't go back for a moment!"

And our next mile was gone over in haste. All Black limped a good deal, but he was still making time.

When daylight came at last, we began to look around us.

"The road don't look a bit strange, does it?"

"I wonder where we are, Maddy?"

"I hardly know."

"Why, there's a house just like the neighbor John Fenton's," I cried. "It looks like Fenton's and there runs his dog around the ramble!"

"Yes, that's Scramble," echoed the other, in thorough disgust. "We just turned around in the dark and came home by the other road. It's just plain as the alphabet, Clem."

"And here comes father," I cried again, after a second good look at an approaching horseman.

"It's all up with us, Clem. All Black has brought us home. No use trying to get away again now!"

We stopped short, then, till father came up to us.

"Good morning boys!"

But we only hung our heads.

"Breakfast is ready," he went on, with a curious smile. "Mother sent me in search of you. All Black must be hungry, too. Glad you changed your minds about going to Philadelphia."

"Were you coming after us, father?" I interrupted, gratefully.

"Certainly."

I looked at Maddy, and his face was as study. Pride and anger, joy and anxiety were struggling for the mastery.

"It is good to be most home again," he admitted honestly. "I guess our coming to Philadelphia was one of those not-to-be's."

"It is one of God's providences," said father slowly and reverently. "He knows what is best for us all."

"And you, too, know what is best for them and me," continued Maddy, gravely. "The work is hard sometimes, but,—"

"Yes, it is hard, and I am afraid you'll have to keep it up. Your Uncle Adoc is here and thought of helping me to send you away to school, but he doesn't think now that it would be best."

So Maddy and I took up our old routine of work, admitting to each other that our punishment was just. A year later father called us and said: "A letter and a check have come from Uncle Adoc. You are both to have an education and a start in life. You will begin by going away to school, and"—

"Don't!" Maddy and I cried together. "We aren't a bit deserving. We've been wicked and ungrateful!"

But father reached out his sun-burnt hands, and after a lingering clasp, he placed them on both our heads. I still hear his rough but kindly voice in benediction: "God bless and keep you always, my lads."

And then we both went to mother, kissing her face, and her rough, brown hands. And she clasped us both in return, saying softly and tenderly: "These, my sons, were lost, and are found!"—Mrs. Findlay Baden, in Christian Intelligencer.

BABY'S EYES.

Such a terrible thing had happened! Rose's baby sister could not open her eyes. Rose's baby sister was quite blind.

The only thing for Rose to do was to ask her fairy godmother to make baby's eyes open.

At the magic hour—

"What is the magic hour" you say. I will tell you seven minutes past seven in the morning and seven minutes past seven at night. Then fairy godmothers are kindest, then fairy godmothers may be seen driving in their crystal coaches.

In the evening when dear little baby was sleeping (you could tell by its regular breathing, not by its eyes, for they were always, always shut) Rose went to the garden gate. At exactly seven minutes past seven a beautiful sparkling fairy coach came flying along the road. As it passed, drawn by ten white butterflies, Rose called out:

"Oh, please, Your Highness!"

It always pleases fairies to be called Your Highness. For one minute they think they are princesses.

"Well," said Rose's godmother, stopping the coach, and leaning her lovely face out of the rose-lined carriage.

"What do you wish, my dear?"

"Baby is blind!" Rose said, almost crying. Oh, can't you make her better?"

The fairy godmother looked very grave.

"Her eyes will never open unless all the leaves of the forest trees are silver, and all the brooks run up the hills for one night," she said. Then waving her diamond wand she was driven out of sight.

Rose, who was only nine years old, cried herself to sleep that night. How could she make the leaves of the forest trees silver? How could she make the brooks run up the hills?

Next morning she wheeled poor blind baby out in the perambulator. Who should she see coming down the lane but a great friend, a Mr. Frog, who was both kind and gentlemanly. He came along with a grand walking-stick, a cigarette in his mouth, and a flower in his fine green velvet jacket.

Rose said to him, "Dear Mr. Frog, good morning. Baby sister's eyes will never open."

"Why not?" said Mr. Frog. "Why not?"

"Because all the leaves of the forest trees must be silver and all the rivulets must run uphill!"

Good Music.

"A valuable collection of popular airs and plantation melodies," as arranged and played by Mrs. Joe Person at the Southern Expositions. The collection includes:

Italian Waltz,
Weird Waltz and Polka,
Carolina Racket,
Lizz Jane,
Nelly Bly,
Shoo Fly,
Dance, the Boatman Dance,
I'll Bet My Money on the Bobtail Nag,
I'm Gwine Down Town.

Dixie,
De Year of Jubilee,
Billy in the Low Grounds,
Oh, Carry Me Back to Old Virginia,
Walk Around.

In all 15 pieces, price $1; also a transcription of the "Blue Alsatian Mountains," "Down-Town Girls," and Boatman Dance, price, 50 cents. The collection and transcription together $1.25. It is emphatically music for the home circle, and no music is more popular and enjoyable than the old melodies. The arrangement is exceedingly simple, but brilliant enough to be played by any one. Can also be played on organ. For sale by

MRS. JOE PERSON,
KITTRELL, N. C.

XANTHINE!
PROF. HERTZ GREAT GERMAN
HAIR RESTORATIVE

NOTHING LIKE IT.

NOTHING SO GOOD.

AND NEVER WILL BE

Never fails. Testimonials of unquestionable credibility.

INSIST ON GETTING IT. Take no other. Nothing else will give you satisfaction. If your druggist has not got it, write us. Not a dye, but always restores the beautiful natural color; stops dandruff; promotes growth.

At druggists. Price, $1. Insist on getting it. If your druggist has not got it, send us $1, and we will send you a bottle. Charges prepaid. Highest testimonials. Write us for circulars. XANTHINE COMPANY, Richmond, Va.

Southern Railway

The Direct Line to all Points

TEXAS,
CALIFORNIA
FLORIDA,
CUBA and
PORTO RICO.

Strictly First-Class equipment on all Through and Local Trains, Pullman Palace Sleeping-Cars on all night trains. Fast and safe Schedules.

Travel by the Southern and you are assured of a Safe, Comfortable and Expeditious journey.

Apply to Ticket Agents for Time Tables, Maps and General Information, or address

R. L. VERNON, F. R. DARBY,
T. P. A., C. P. & T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C. Asheville, N. C.

No trouble to answer questions.

"Well, that's very difficult," Mr. Frog said. "But I know Mr. Autumn has a big paint brush, and perhaps he might paint the trees for you, just for one night." He stood thinking on one leg. "But it is summertime now, and Mrs. Summer likes her trees to wear green."

"Oh, darling Mr. Frog, suppose we took baby, dear blind baby, to their house! They might have pity on her when they saw her, and say: 'Yes, I will do it, just for once!'"

Rose danced about in her excitement, and blind baby could not understand what they were saying.

"Come along, then," said Mr. Frog kindly. "Leave the perambulator here. I'm sure the bank will look after it."

The bank at the side of the road said in a low voice, "Certainly."

"Come with me. Carry your sister," Mr. Frog added.

They walked quite a mile, and presently reached a round piece of grass. It was a fairies' elevator, though you might not have guessed it. They stood on it, said the magic verse (which I must not print, or the fairies would do me harm), and sank down and down until the elevator stopped with a jerk. They were in a land of flowers and winter, for here was snow and ice.

"You see, all the seasons, Spring, Summer, Autumn and Winter, live together; they each have so much of the garden and make it like themselves. Their house is lovely; it is made of porcelain, the walk up to it has on one side lilies, on the other snowdrops

They walked up the path and rang the bell. The Dresden china door was opened by a favorite month, such a pretty one, Miss July. You see, it was Summer's turn to be head of the house, and if you are head of the house you may choose your own servant.

A tremendous noise was heard coming from one of the rooms.

"Who is here, July?" asked Mr. Frog.

"The winds, sir."

"What, all the winds?"

"Mr. North Wind and his children, Master Northeast and Miss Northwest. Come this way, please, sir."

Mr. Frog and Rose and the poor blind baby were shown into the sweetest blue china room.

Mrs. Summer sat on a rosebud throne drinking honey water. You couldn't see the Winds, of course. You never can. But you heard them talking. Blowing is talking.

The Winds are at parties those nights when you hear them howling round the house. They are talking and laughing and singing.

"Can I see Mr. Autumn?" said Mr. Frog, with a sweeping bow. (I forgot to say he had a three-cornered hat with a feather in it.)

"He is asleep, I think, in that corner," said Summer—said Summer coming down from her throne, and smiling on Rose. "What a darling baby!" said she. "Is it asleep?"

"No, ma'am," said Rose, with wildly beating heart. "She's blind! Quite blind."

HEAD
ACHE

CAPUDINE

HICKS' CAPUDINE never fails to cure
HEADACHE AND COLDS
It is the great remedy also for Indigestion and Sour Stomach. Has no effect on the heart. For nervousness and brain fag it is unequalled.
AT DRUGGISTS, 10c., 25c., 50c.

COLDS

Southern States Trust Company

Capital,
$200,000.

GEORGE STEPHENS, President.

T. S. FRANKLIN, V.-President.

W. H. WOOD, Treasurer.

A Co-worker

This is what your money
becomes when you put it
on deposit in our
Savings Department.
We pay four per cent. interest
and compound it quarterly.

Mid Summer Cut Price Sale

of

Furniture, Carpets, Pianos and Organs,

Wonderful Bargains can be had at this Store during this Cut Price Sale.

Everything Without Reserve is reduced in Price to the Lowest Price to sell the Goods and make room for the Changes now going on in our store. Come and See Us in Person, but if you can't come, you will get some reduction if you order by mail. Don't fail to grasp this opportunity to save money.

Parker-Gardner Company.

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA.

HIGH HATS AND LOW HATS

Broad Hats and Narrow Hats

STIFF HATS AND SOFT HATS

EVERY SHAPE AND STYLE OF HAT THAT'S CORRECT

There is a great deal in habit in the matter of hats, as in other things. Some men have the habit of paying $5.00 for their hats. This is manifestly a bad habit, when you can buy as good a hat here for $3.00. You can get the regulation hat styles at any good store, but we go a step further; we not only show you all the regular styles, but we have all the variations and the exclusive styles. It will please you to place your head in one of our hats.

LONG-TATE CLOTHING COMPANY

42 South Tryon Street, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Goods sent on approval returnable at our expense.

he told Summer the story. The nds listened and rustled and said it s a great pity.
eanwhile Mr. Frog had found Au-
n. He came forward crossly, with hered leaves falling as he walked.
ose fell on her knees with baby and
: "Oh, kind Autumn, paint the est trees silver, or baby's eyes will er open."
I can't be bothered," said Autumn,
vning.
Oh, but look here! Look at the r pet," said Summer. "Take pity!
ould do it if I had a paint brush!"
wonderful change came over Au-n's face as he looked at the poor le child, who laughed and crowed.
or, blind baby!
Well, I will," said he. "She is so
all and nice."
hen there was a great noise in the
m. Mr. Frog stamped his stick, said, "Hurrah!" Mrs. Summer pped her hands, the Winds blew and aped about the room, and Rose cried joy.
ut there's another thing," she said, denly. "Oh, dear! All the rivers st run uphill! Oh, Mr. Frog, how do we do that?"
he North Wind said very quickly:
ldn't I blow and blow, and my chil-n should help, and we would blow
the brooks uphill for one evening,
n if we were very tired the next day
I had to stay in bed for breakfast!"
he little Winds shouted, "Oh, yes.
what fun!"
Rose said, "Dear Mr. North Wind, y are you so kind "
Because baby sister is so small and e, and it's a pity she can't see. She ll see! She shall see! Come along, nt your trees at once. Come chin, we will lie down and rest here,
Mrs. Summer will let us, and be dy for the evening."
Autumn went away at once to get his
sh. It was a wonderful evening.
e sun stayed up to watch from the
r. The moon and stars all gazed wn. By seven minutes past seven trees in the forest were all silver.
d at that moment the three Winds, father and children, all blew with ir whole might, and sent the oks flying up the hillsides. Winds a blow very strong when they like.
rather, they can speak very fast d loud. Rose stood under the anches of the forest trees, with Mr.
og beside her and baby in her arms.
elve struck at last.
And at that moment the baby sister
ve a little cry and opened her eyes.
ey were lovely blue eyes, and they ked round with joy and wonder.
Rose was so happy. She kissed and anked the tired Winds, invited Mr.
tumn to tea with her the next day,
d waved her hand to the fairy god-ther, who smiled down from a star.
by crowed and gurgled and stared nd, and the three went homeward
Mr. Frog and Rose and the little sis—homeward through the forest under the silver branches.—The Houseld Ledger.

SOUTHERN DENTAL COLLEGE, ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

If you are interested in obtaining a dental education, write for free catalogue of full instruction.

ADDRESS DR. S. W. FOSTER, DEAN, 100 NORTH BUTLER STREET, ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

The Security Life and Annuity Co.

(LEGAL RESERVE)

Home Office : Greensboro, N. C.

Guaranty Capital, . . . . . $100,000.00.
(Deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.)

Our Life Annuity, Disability and Endowment Policy - - - - -

HAS CASH AND LOAN VALUES.

1. Is fully paid-up in 20 years.
2. Is the most attractive policy issued.
3. Contains every essential idea in Life Insurance.
4. Provides a fixed income for Life for the widow.
5. Provides a fixed income for the children during their minority.
6. Provides a fixed income for the insured during disability and old age.
7. Is secured by a cash guaranty capital of $100,000.00 deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.

J. VAN LINDLEY, President.
GEO. A. GRIMSLEY, Secretary.
R E FOSTER Actuary

NOTABLE NEW BOOKS.

A limited number of advanced subscriptions will be accepted at Special Prices for following new books to be issued on or before September 1, 1903.

Life and Letters of ROBERT LEWIS DABNEY, D. D. LL. D.

By THOMAS CAREY JOHNSON, D. D. LL. D.
Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity Union Theological Seminary, Richmond Va.
A notably interesting book about one of the most remarkable men the South has produced. Interesting alike to historical students of social, political, and industrial conditions of the South, to Southern Veteran and Statesmen, to students of Theology and Philosophy, and to those who wish to be fully informed about the history and development of the Southern Presbyterian Church.
600 Pages. Cloth Binding. Regular Price $2.50 Net (add 18c for Postage.) To Advance Subscribers $2.00 Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

"APOLOGETICS"

Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D., LL.D., Prof. of Systematic Theology Louisville Seminary.
Introduction by B. B. WARFIELD, D. D., LL. D., of Princeton Theological Seminary.
A clear, systematic statement of the great fundamental truths of the Christian faith. Adopted as a text-book in some of the best Seminaries of the country.
180 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $2.50 Net; Sheep, $3.00 Net [add 18c. Postage]. To advance subscribers, cloth $2.00; sheep, $2.50 postpaid. Limit 500 copies.

PIONEERING IN AFRICA.

By Rev SAMUEL PHILLIPS VERNER, A. B.,
for six years a Missionary of the Southern Presbyterian Church on the Congo.
This book is out of the usual order, and is at once scientific, historical, critical and religious. A notable contribution to the literature about a great continent which is coming more into view every year. Illustrated with original photographs and maps not hitherto published.
450 Pages. Cloth. Regular Price $2.00 Net [add 18c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.75 Net Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

Christianity and Modern Evolution.

By Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D.
The remarkably original and forcible course of lectures delivered in Louisville, Ky., before very large and highly edified audiences have been revised, and are now presented in an attractive form for the benefit of a larger public.
250 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $1.25 Net [add 10c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.00 net Postpaid. Limit 300 Copies.

A complete list of our publications sent on request. Any book in print furnished on short notice. Write us about your wants.

PRESBYTERIAN COMMITTEE OF PUBLICATION, Richmond, Va.

Aberdeen & Ashboro Railway Co.

CONNECTIONS FOR JACKSON SPRINGS.

By Aberdeen	7:30 A. M.	Ar. Jackson Spgs.	8:10 A. M.
" "	9:40 "	" "	10:30 "
" "	6:40 P. M.	" "	7:30 P. M.
High Point	2:05 P. M.	" "	5:15 P. M.

H. A. PAGE,
Aberdeen, N.

OPIUM COCAINE AND WHISKY
Habits Cured at my Sanatorium, in 80 days. Hundreds of references. 25 years a specialist. Book on Home Treatment sent FREE. Address B. M. WOOLLEY, M. D., Atlanta, Ga.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Clippings.

A man was aken on as a laborer in one of the large shipbuilding yards on the Clyde. The first job he had to do was to carry some rather heavy planks. He had been about an hour carrying them when he went up to the foreman and said:

"Did ah tell you ma name when ah started?"

"Aye," said the foreman. "You said it was Tamson."

"O, that's a' right," replied the man, looking over at the pile of planks he had yet to carry. "Ah wis wunnerin' if you thoct ah said it wis Samson."—Tit-Bits.

PREACHER'S DISCOVERY.

A prominet Minister of Atlanta, Ga., is the Discoverer of a Wonderful Cure for All Catarrhal Diseases.

Rev. J. W. Blosser, M.D., Atlanta, Ga., is the discoverer of a successful remedy for the cure of Catarrh. Catarrhal Deafness, Bronchitis, and Asthma. It consists of a combination of medicinal herbs, roots and leaves, which are smoked in a common clean pipe—the fumes being inhaled into the throat and lungs and exhaled through the nose. While the manner of its use is simple, yet, no other means can so easily reach and cure the disease in all its forms.

Dr. Blosser offers to mail a three days' sample to any sufferer who will write to him for it. If your case is a stubborn one and you desire special advice, he makes no extra charge. This remedy has met with wonderful success, curing cases of 15, 20 and 25 years standing.

If you wish a box containing a month's treatment, send $1.00 and it will be forwarded, postage paid. Address, Dr. Blosser Company, 355 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga.

Real Estate for Sale at Davidson, N. C.

For quick sale and easy payments; cash or gilt-edge paper: One neat five-room dwelling, with large brick cellar; good water, stable and garden; on lot 70x270 feet deep; price $1,000.

Also two vacant lots; one 75x285 ft. deep; one 75 ft. front by 300 feet; price $350 each; fine investment for health, society and education.

Also one storehouse on lot No 12, North Tryon street, Charlotte, N. C., 24 ft. front by 140 ft. deep; very desirable.

Also celebrated Strohecker Barium Springs; 18 acres land; 7-room hotel; 3-room cottage; store-house and barn; five miles Statesville; price $5,000.

In addition can sell farms and city property more or less throughout South Carolina, all sorts and sizes, with various business opportunities, at money-making prices.

J. EDGAR POAG, Broker,
Rock Hill, S. C.

Our superb stock of silks and dress goods for the fall of 1903 is now ready. Write for samples and prices, stating particularly the color desired and whether you wish plain or figured cloths, light weight or Broadcloths.

We pay express charges on all orders of $5.00 and over.

MILLER & RHOADS,
Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Mechanics and Investors Union.

A Raleigh Investment and Loan Company

Has during the past year $32,000.00 paid for Matured Certificates

Maturity in this Company means cash.

For persons wishing to make monthly payments we issue Short Time Definite Contract Certificates to mature in 45, 50, 60, 80 or 100 months.

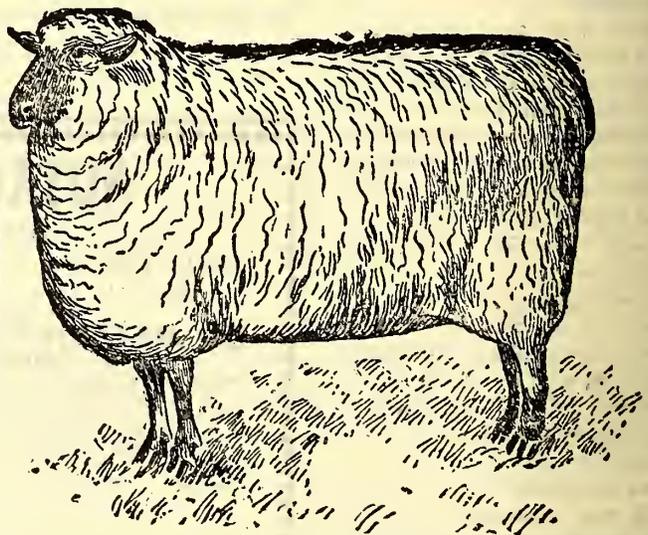

Also issue Full Paid Ten-Year Six-per-cent. Coupon Certificates of $100.00, which are being sold for one cash payment of $90.00. The Coupons are payable in June and December. Taxes on all Certificates are paid by the Company. For particulars address,

GEORGE ALLEN, Secretary, Raleigh, N. C.

WOOL

Ship Direct to the Manufacturer and Save Dealers' Profits.

They pay freight on the wool and guarantee satisfaction.

In exchange for goods they pay 25 cents per pound for unwashed and 35 cents per pound for washed wool.

If you have wool to sell for cash, exchange for goods, or to be manufactured, ship it to CHATHAM MFG. CO., ELKIN, N. C., and you will not regret it.

N. W. PERRY, Prest.      A. J. DUNN, V. P.      A. D. GILCHRIST, Sec. & Treas

Charlotte Paint & Wallpaper Company.

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA.

HOUSE PAINTERS, PAPER HANGERS, INTERIOR DECORATORS.

We make a specialty of out-of-town work. Artistic Wallpapers in stock. Write us for estimates.

The Worth Co.

SUCCESSORS TO

WORTH & WORTH,

Wholesale Grocers and Commission Merchants

HANDLE—COTTON AND NAVAL STORES.

SELL—GENERAL GROCERIES, FARM SUPPLIES, LIME, CEMENT, NAILS, HAY AND GRAIN.

Best Terms and Lowest Prices.

WILMINGTON N. C.

Carolina and Northwestern Railway.

TIME CARD.

BLOWING ROCK ROUTE.

Effective November 24th, 1901.
NORTHBOUND	PASSENGER	MIXED
Chester, Leave	8 25 am	8 50 am
Yorkville, "	7 30 am	10 48 am
Gastonia, "	9 05 am	1 20 pm
Lincolnton, "	10 09 am	2 55 pm
Newton, "	11 16 pm	4 48 pm
Hickory, "	11 16 pm	5 50 pm
Cliffs, "	11 50 pm	7 05 pm
Lenoir, Arrive	12 35 pm	8 00 pm
SOUTHBOUND	PASSENGER	MIXED
Lenoir, Leave	2 10 pm	5 30 pm
Cliffs, "	2 54 pm	7 20 pm
Hickory, "	3 12 pm	8 10 pm
Newton, "	3 37 pm	8 45 am
Lincolnton, "	4 22 pm	10 09 am
Gastonia, "	5 27 pm	1 20 pm
Yorkville, "	6 32 pm	3 18 pm
Chester, Arrive	7 45 pm	5 20 pm

HAMPDEN-SIDNEY COLLEGE.

The 128th Session will open Wednesday, September 9th, 1903.

Four courses of instruction leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., B. L. and A. M. Nine professors and instructors. Healthful location. Moral surroundings. For catalogue apply to

RICHARD McILWAINE, President, Hampden-Sidney, Va

CLARKTON MALE INSTITUTE.

A MILITARY SCHOOL,

(UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE PRESBYTERY OF WILMINGTON).

Prepares Boys for college and for life. Board $8 per month. Tuition $27 for nine months. Write for catalog.

R. C. DEAL, Principal.

J. J. HUTSON, Commandant.

King's Mountain Military Academy,

Yorkville, South Carolina.

A high-grade school with a first-class patronage. Teachers and cadets live together as one family. A real home school. Stands for the best and nothing but the best. Faculty all active Christian men, who live in closest contact with the cadets.

Col. W. G. STEPHENSON, Supt.

North Carolina Medical College Davidson, N. C.

Three years' course to graduate. Sixteen Professors and Teachers.

Clinical instruction given in Davidson and Charlotte. Eighteen graduates this year made fine records before N. C. and S. C. Boards. Address

J. P. MUNROE, M. D., President, Davidson, N. C.

Private rooms in the Hospital.

Brown's University School, Charlotte, N. C.

Best advantages for boys whose parents can afford it. Five boarders, as members of family. Combined advantages of home life and city culture. Write for particulars.

W. G. BROWN (U. of Va.) Prin.

What Protection Means.

On March 6, 1873, the Hon. Armistead Burwell, of Charlotte, N. C., who is well known throughout the State of North Carolina, was insured with the Aetna Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, Conn., under Renewable Term Policy No. 95,253 for $4,000. Annual Premium $64 76. When the first term of ten years expired in 1883 the Company renewed the policy for the next ten years at the

ORIGINAL RATE, WITHOUT A NEW EXAMINATION.

and have renewed this policy respectively in 1893 and 1903 without increase of rate of premium and without re-examination. If Mr. Burwell lives till 1913 he will have been insured for forty years at an annual cost of $16.19 per $1,000.

This Renewable Term Insurance was originally introduced by the Aetna. The "OLD AETNA" LEADS; the other companies follow.

OVER ONE MILLION DOLLARS have been paid out in death claims in this State during the last ten years.

For rates, etc., apply to

J. D. BOUSHALL, Mgr,
RALEIGH, N. C.

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE.

FOR THE CURE OF

LIQUOR, OPIUM, COCAINE AND OTHER DRUG ADDICTIONS,
NERVE EXHAUSTION AND TOBACCO HABIT.

GREENSBORO, N. C.

This is the only Keeley Institute in North Carolina, and owing to its beautiful and healthy location, its elegant buildings and attractive environments, its well supplied table and skillful management it presents to the unfortunate a perfect asylum for rest and complete restoration.

If you have a friend afflicted with any of the above addictions, write for their Illustrated Hand-Book, entitled "THE NEW MAN." Address,

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE,
Greensboro, N. C.

The Eyes of School Children

Many parents allow their children to go through school half equipped for the work.

Defective eyes do not show in children as plainly as in grown people. Yet defects are present then if ever. They probably never know what it is to have perfect sight; thus they know no better, since there is no soreness and inflammation.

Don't wait for such signs.

Examination free

Dr. J. H. Spilman,

22 West Trade Street,
Blair's Drug Store, Charlotte.

Black River Institute,

IVANHOE, N. C.

REV. V. H. STARBUCK, A. B., B. L., B. D.,
Principal.

SESSION OPENS SEPTEMBER 22nd.

High-grade work on very easy terms.
Under care of Wilmington Presbytery.

For particulars address,

V. H. STARBUCK or E. J. W. ANDERS,
Ivanhoe, N. C.

GREGG

SHORTHAND BY MAIL.

You need not leave your home to learn this system. It is easy to learn, easy to write and easy to read.

Typewriter sent to responsible students.
Send today for Booklet C.

Southern Shorthand and

Business University.

J. M. RESSLER, President.

Norfolk, Va.

HALL & PEARSALL

Wholesale - Grocers

AND

Commission Merchants,

Wilmington, N. C.

SPECIALTIES:

Salt Fish, Molasses.

Meat, Flour, Salt,

BAGGING and TIES.

Samples and prices on request.

Peace Institute and Conservatory, Raleigh, North Carolina.

A THOROUGH SCHOOL OF
HIGH-GRADE FOR GIRLS. IN PINE BELT OF NORTH CAR-OLINA SO FAMOUS FOR HEALTH. * * * * *

We canvass closely and select carefully hence the high-tone and character of this school and its pupils. Catalogue free.
Address, JAS. DINWIDDIE, President.

STATESVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE

The best College accessible to the young women of Western North Carolina, and the cheapest for the opportunities offered. The session opens September 9, 1903
Send for information,

REV. J. A. SCOTT, President,
Statesville, N. C.

Kings Business College!

(INCORPORATED)

Capital Stock, - - - - - $30,000.00

The rush of fall students has begun. They are coming in daily and the enrollment promises to be the heaviest in the history of the College.

Fall Session Opened September 1, 1903.

Choice of 50 positions every month to our graduates, starting in at salaries from fifty to seventy-five dollars per month. Write or call about this at once.

KING'S BUSINESS COLLEGE, .. Charlotte or Raleigh, N. C.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE FOR WOMEN, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Tuition and board lower than any school of same grade in the South.
Under the control of the Presbyteries of Concord and Mecklenburg.

For catalogue, address, REV. J. R. BRIDGES, President.
Or MISS LILY LONG, Dean.

Truthful, Pure, Manly Boys for The Fishburne School, Waynesboro, Virginia.

English, Classical and Military. Experienced teachers. Thorough work.
Superior location. Presbyterian training. THREE STUDENTS OF LAST SES-SION HAVE RECEIVED GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS. Write for catalogue.
JAS. A. FISHBURNE, A. B., Principal.

The Normal and Collegiate Institute, FOR YOUNG WOMEN. ASHEVILLE, N. C.

The Fall Term Opens September 16, 1903.

1. A normal course for the thorough training of Teachers under instructors from best Normal Schools
  2. A Commercial Course, including Stenography, Typewriting, Bookkeeping, etc.
  3. A Course of Domestic Science, including (a) Scientific Cooking, (b) Draughting, Cutting, Fitting, and Making of Garments.
  4. An admirable Musical Department has been provided under trained and experienced teachers.
- Systematic study of the Bible in all Departments.
Terms for Board and Tuition in any of the Departments, $50.00 per term, or $100.00 per year.
For Catalogue, address REV. THOMAS LAWRENCE, D. D., Asheville, N. C.

Raleigh Marble Works.

COOPER BROS., Props.

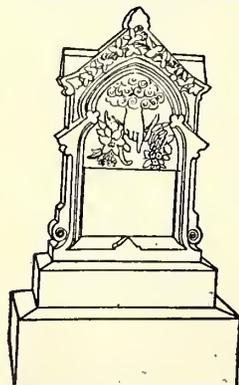

RALEIGH, N. C.

MONUMENTS,

Tablets, Headstones, Iron Fences.

We Pay the Freight.

Please mention Standard.

Write for our
New Catalogue

THE MERCHANTS & FARMERS NATIONAL BANK,

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Capital and Profits, - - - $290,000.

Out of Town Accounts.

Depositors living outside of Charlotte can send us their deposits by mail or express, upon receipt of which the amount will be credited to their account and the deposit acknowledged by mail same day.

We furnish such accounts check books, free of cost, and write up the account monthly, mailing detailed statement with all cancelled checks.

DR. J. H. McADEN, - - - President.
C. N. EVANS, Jr., - Cashier.

HOUSTON, DIXON & CO.,

SCHOOL BOOKS, OFFICE SUP-PLIES, and HURD'S VERY
FINE STATIONERY.

Opposite Central Hotel, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Teachers Wanted.

We need at once a few more Teachers for Fall schools. Good positions are being filled daily by us. We are receiving more calls this year than ever before. Schools and colleges supplied with teachers free of cost. Enclose stamp for reply.

AMERICAN TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION
J. L. GRAHAM, LL. D., Manager.
152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn.

BIG 8 Chain of 8 Colleges owned by business men and indorsed by business men.
Fourteen Cashiers of Banks are on our Board of Directors. Our diploma means something. Enter any time. Positions secured.
Draughon's
Practical... Colleges,
Business ...
(Incorporated, Capital Stock $300,000.00.)

Nashville, Tenn.	U	Atlanta, Ga.
Ft. Worth, Texas,	S	Montgomery, Ala.
St. Louis, Mo.	S	Galveston, Texas,
Little Rock, Ark.	A	Shreveport, La.

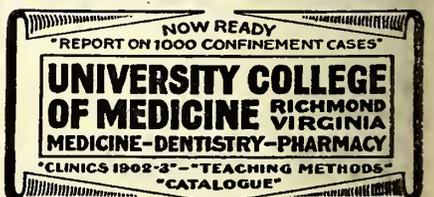

For 150 page catalogue address either place.
If you prefer, may pay tuition out of salary after course is completed. Guarantee graduates to be competent or no charges for tuition.
HOME STUDY: Bookkeeping, Shorthand,
Penmanship, etc., taught by mail. Write for 100 page BOOKLET on Home Study. It's free.

D. W. Badham,

Charlotte, N. C.

Tuner, Repairer and Salesman of
Pianos. School work a specialty.

Mention the Standard.

Wire Railing and Ornamental Wire Works.

DUFUR & CO.,

311 N. Howard Street,

Baltimore, Md

Manufacture Wire Railing for Cemeteries,
Balconies, etc., Sieves, Fenders, Cag
Sand and Coal Screens Woven Wire,
Also Iron Bedsteads, Chairs Settees, etc.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., OCTOBER, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 40

IN THE MIDST of our Christian life there will come transfiguration times . . . . . Some day He taketh his disciples apart and is transfigured before them; on some hilltop of prayer where it is good to be, they see his own heavenly glory come down and clothe their Lord, and the disciples fall upon their faces and worship the Master they have loved. They know whom they have believed, for they have seen his glory. Whatever else may waver, our doubting time is over. We have heard the voice from out the cloud attest Christ's sonship and our duty—"This is my beloved Son, hear him." We go down with a new trust in God, new faith in Jesus, new sympathy with Heaven, new hope for men, to begin again our walk of quiet daily Christian duty, to see the daily miracle and feel the daily blessing, to strive and struggle to the end.

—Phillips Brooks in 1858.

HAMPDEN-SIDNEY COLLEGE.

The 128th Session will open Wednesday, September 9th, 1903.

Four courses of instruction leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., B. L. and A. M. Nine professors and instructors. Healthful location. Moral surroundings. For catalogue apply to

RICHARD McILWAINE, President, Hampden-Sidney, Va

CLARKTON MALE INSTITUTE.

A MILITARY SCHOOL,

(UNDER THE CONTROL OF THE PRESBYTERY OF WILMINGTON).

Prepares Boys for college and for life. Board $8 per month. Tuition $27 for nine months. Write for catalog.

R. C. DEAL, Principal.

J. J. HUTSON, Commandant.

King's Mountain Military Academy,

Yorkville, South Carolina.

A high-grade school with a first-class patronage. Teachers and cadets live together as one family. A real home school. Stands for the best and nothing but the best. Faculty all active Christian men, who live in closest contact with the cadets.

Col. W. G. STEPHENSON, Supt.

North Carolina Medical College Davidson, N. C.

Three years' course to graduate. Sixteen Professors and Teachers. Clinical instruction given in Davidson and Charlotte. Eighteen graduates this year made fine records before N. C. and S. C. Boards. Address

J. P. MUNROE, M. D., President, Davidson, N. C.

Private rooms in the Hospital.

Brown's University School, Charlotte, N. C.

Best advantages for boys whose parents can afford it. Five boarders, as members of family. Combined advantages of home life and city culture.

Write for particulars.

W. G. BROWN (U. of Va.) Prin.

What Protection Means.

On March 6, 1873, the Hon. Armistead Burwell, of Charlotte, N. C., who is well known throughout the State of North Carolina, was insured with the Aetna Life Insurance Company, of Hartford, Conn., under Renewable Term Policy No. 95,253 for $4,000. Annual Premium $64.76 When the first term of ten years expired in 1883 the Company renewed the policy for the next ten years at the

ORIGINAL RATE, WITHOUT A NEW EXAMINATION.

and have renewed this policy respectively in 1893 and 1903 without increase of rate of premium and without re-examination. If Mr. Burwell lives till 1913 he will have been insured for forty years at an annual cost of $16.19 per $1,000.

This Renewable Term Insurance was originally introduced by the Aetna. The "OLD AETNA" LEADS; the other companies follow.

OVER ONE MILLION DOLLARS have been paid out in death claims in this State during the last ten years.

For rates, etc., apply to

J. D. BOUSHALL, Mgr,
RALEIGH, N. C.

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE.

FOR THE CURE OF

LIQUOR, OPIUM, COCAINE AND OTHER DRUG ADDICTIONS,
NERVE EXHAUSTION AND TOBACCO HABIT.

GREENSBORO, N. C.

This is the only Keeley Institute in North Carolina, and owing to its beautiful and healthy location, its elegant buildings and attractive environments, its well supplied table and skillful management it presents to the unfortunate a perfect asylum for rest and complete restoration.

If you have a friend afflicted with any of the above addictions, write for their illustrated Hand-Book, entitled "THE NEW MAN." Address,

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE,
Greensboro, N. C.

GREGG

SHORTHAND BY MAIL.

You need not leave your home to learn this system. It is easy to learn, easy to write and easy to read.

Typewriter sent to responsible students. Send today for Booklet C.

Southern Shorthand and

Business University.

J. M. RESSLER, President.

Norfolk, Va.

XANTHINE! PROF. HERTZ GREAT GERMAN HAIR RESTORATIVE

IF EVERYBODY KNEW THE

XANTHINE AS WELL AS THOSE WHO HAVE USED IT, EVERYBODY WOULD USE IT.

Never fails to restore the beautiful natural color to gray and faded hair; stops dandruff; promotes growth.

Nothing else will give you satisfaction. Take no other in buying, for we will send it to you, express prepaid, if your druggist has it not.

At druggists. Price, $1. Insist on getting it. If your druggist has not got it, send us $1, and we will send you a bottle. Clippings, Free. Highest testimonials. Write us for circulars.

XANTHINE COMPANY, Richmond, Va.

Fruit Jar Wrenches

Have you ever seen the "Tobax" Fruit Jar Wrench? It will open the tightest fruit jar and will also put the cap on very tight.

We are offering them at 10c. each,

and you will say it is the best article in your kitchen.

Send ten cents and two stamps for postage.

WEDDINGTON HARDWARE CO

The Worth Co.

SUCCESSORS TO

WORTH & WORTH,

Wholesale Grocers

and Commission Merchants

HANDLE—
COTTON AND NAVAL STORES.

SELL—
GENERAL GROCERIES,
FARM SUPPLIES,
LIME, CEMENT, NAILS,
HAY AND GRAIN.

Best Terms and Lowest Prices.

WILMINGTON N. C.

Atlantic & N. C. R. R.

Time table in effect November 19, 1902.

Eastbound Trains.	Passenger Daily	Passenger Daily
Leave Goldsboro.....	8:30 p m	8:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	4:22 p m	8:48 a m
Leave New Bern.....	5:50 p m	10:10 a m
Arrive Morehead City.....	7:15 p m
Westbound Trains.	Passenger Daily	Passenger Daily
Leave Morehead City.....	7:05 a m
Leave New Bern.....	9:00 a m
Leave Kinston.....	10:12 a m
Arrive Goldsboro.....	11:15 a m

Presbyterian Standard.

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., OCTOBER 7, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 40

Event and Comment.

The Presbyterian Church has two churches in Maine, eight in New Hampshire, three in Vermont and five in Rhode Island. And yet some people wonder at the frequent recurrence of the phrase, "Pagan New England."

An English Publicist spoke earnestly the other day on the comparative value of brain-power and sea-power and besought his countrymen to spend more on colleges and universities and less on ships. It would be even more practical advice to our own nation, with its vast uneducated horde of foreigners, blacks and even natives; and the Government that can spend its millions for defence should be able in some way to devise a plan for supplementing the efforts of the States in the matter of the education of all the people.

A Baptist paper, speaking of the fact that Southern Presbyterians gave an average of ten dollars last year to the work of their church, says that it is an old proverb that you cannot build a Presbyterian Church where there is no bank. It would therefore be an advisable thing for the Baptist Denomination to build more banks and fewer churches, judging from the average of the contributions and the indication they are of the grace of giving. But perhaps the Presbyterian Church has a way of building banks.

The Presbyterian Standard really thinks it is time that it is setting up its claim to be the oldest religious newspaper in the world. Dr. John Holt Rice established in 1813 in Richmond, Virginia, the Religious Remembrancer. It is well known that Dr. Rice once preached at Cub Creek Church in Charlotte county, Virginia, which some of the ancestors of the present editor of the Standard attended. Afterwards in Richmond, there were established other religious papers, with more or less inconvenient breaks between them, and one of them was edited by Dr. William Brown, who was the great-uncle of the editor of our Children's Department. Further we graduated from the Seminary that Dr. John Holt Rice founded. This makes the chain complete.

The New Voice is the successor of the Old Voice which had about died into innocuous silence before its successor was born. The New Voice is the yellow journal of reform. Its methods are sometimes iniquitous and its doctrines often Jesuitical. Its statements on the one cause of total abstinence and prohibition are wild and untrue, more often than they are sober and just. It is a fine example of intemperance in language and its cessation tomorrow would be the best thing possible for the temperance cause. And yet this discredited organ has the face to talk this way about theology on the ground of its lack of fruitage: "Theologies are getting old and crabbed. Their arteries are hard. Their voices are harsh. Their nerves are irritable. They take each other too seriously. They ought not to argue. They have had their day. Theologies must decrease. Humanities must increase, and by their fruits ye shall know them."

Born, October 5, 1703, writing a treatise on the immortality of the soul when he was ten years old; graduating from Yale College at the age of seventeen; starting in his church the great Calvinistic Awakening that swept the length and breadth of the colonies; laboring as a missionary to the Indians because he was driven out of his church for righteousness' sake; writing the treatise on the Will, on scraps of brown paper saved from the scissors of his busy wife and daughter as all three struggled against poverty; called to the Presidency of Princeton College and dying at the age of fifty-five; having wrought well for his generation and for all time—such was Jonathan Edwards, whose memory Presbyterianism reveres today more than the Congregationalism that claims his name and has wandered far from his faith.

The Presbyterian of Philadelphia is shocked at the way the Cumberland Presbyterian is trying to substantiate its claim that Northern Presbyterianism has come over to Cumberlandism. Our esteemed contemporary should not grow excited but rather pity the congenital weakness of vision which is due to the straining effort to see fatalism in the Confession all these years, complicated with mental strabismus owing to the habit of looking for a half-way ground between Calvinism and Arminianism. There are some things that only time and the gradual diffusion of information can cure. Be philosophical, friend.

The Christian Observer in arriving at its alleged ninetieth year which the Presbyterian Banner neatly refutes, of continued existence, felicitates itself to some degree and takes a solemn view of its responsibilities, as is fitting a nonogenarian. The Christian Observer, as we can easily prove, did not always claim such a succession as would entitle it to write "Volme Ninety-One." But that by the way. What we especially wished to call attention to was its calculation that if each copy were read by five persons and each spent an hour in the task, then each year it is responsible for thirteen hundred years of its readers time. Or to put it differently, if one man should spend five hours on each copy of each issue of one year he would be sentenced to the delightful employment of reading Christian Observers for thirteen hundred years. We can imagine no more pleasant prospect. It reminds one of the old hymn that used to say, "I'd sit and sing myself away to everlasting bliss."

Erre another issue of the Standard reaches its readers the Reunion Celebration at Greensboro of the exiles and the home-folks of North Carolina will have been observed. It answers to Home Week in some of the New England States and if we are not mistaken the Standard was the first paper in North Carolina to recommend the celebration. This year, Greensboro will entertain the large concourse of people from home and abroad that will attend. The Standard acknowledges the courtesy of an invitation which it hopes to accept. Sunday of next week will be noted for the preaching of two distinguished preachers of Carolina birth and ancestry, Dr. A. C. Dixon of Boston and Dr. W. W. Moore of Richmond. Dr. Dixon has just been playing the part of John the Baptist in refusing, even in Boston, to re-marry divorced people or to allow the re-married divorced to join his church on the frank ground that they are living in sin. Dr. Moore—well we all know him and admire him and love him. Other distinguished names are on the programme, which follows:

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 11TH.

Reunion Sermons by Rev. A. C. Dixon, D. D., of Boston (Cleveland county); and Rev. Walter W. Moore, D. D., of Richmond, (Mecklenburg county).

MONDAY, OCTOBER 12TH.

Hon. M. W. Ransom will preside over the session of the Reunion.

Address of welcome by His Excellency, Governor Charles B. Aycock.

Responses to Address of Welcome by Representatives of North Carolina Societies in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Richmond, Atlanta and elsewhere.

Receptions at various Headquarters, including headquarters of the University, Agricultural and Mechanical College, Wake Forest, Trinity, Guilford and other Colleges.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 13TH.

AT GUILFORD BATTLE GROUND.

Addresses by:

Hon. Hoke Smith, (Lincoln), Georgia.

Mr. Walter H. Page, (Wake), New York.

Hon. Joseph M. Dixon, (Alamance), Montana.

Hon. L. R. Tyson, (Pitt), Tennessee.

Dr. Paul Barringer, Virginia.

Dr. E. A. Alderman, Louisiana.

Hon. Hannis Taylor, Alabama.

TUESDAY NIGHT.

General Reception.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established January 1, 1858.

A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER FOR THE FAMILY. DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM AS REPRESENTED BY THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

A. J. MCKELWAY, ..... EDITOR
 CORNELIA R. SHAW, ..... ASSOCIATE EDITOR
 H. M. MCALLISTER, ..... BUSINESS MANAGER

WESTERN OFFICE:

GEO. L. LEYBURN, ..... EDITOR AND MANAGER.
 318 Washington Ave. St. Louis, Mo.

Subscription Price, ..... $2.00 a Year, in Advance.

The STANDARD is published every Wednesday at Charlotte, N. C., by the PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

For table of contents see page 16.

The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription has been paid.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the subscription.

In accordance with the general wish of our patrons the paper is discontinued only upon the written request of the subscriber. Arrearages must be settled in full at the same time, at the rate of two dollars a year and twenty cents a month for a part of a year.

When change of address is desired give both the old and the new address. No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post-office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South. Address all communications to

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD, Charlotte, N. C.

The Typographical Union, the Catholic Church and the United States

Some Roman Catholic Priest in the West drew attention to himself and his Church the other day, after the well-known advertising fashion that that Church has, by refusing some priestly rite to a member of a typographical union, on account of the oath which its members are compelled to take. The oath puts loyalty to the union above any political or religious organization. The priest's contention was that such an oath would prevent a man from being a good Catholic. It was pointed out also that it would prevent proper loyalty to one's country, considering the country as a political organization. The intelligent leaders of the Union, which is necessarily one of the most intelligent of the labor organizations of America, have explained that the oath had no such significance, in their minds, and that what was objectionable about it could be easily changed. We know some excellent Presbyterians who belong to that Union, who would hesitate long at signing anything which would even seem to impeach their loyalty to the Presbyterian Church.

But the Roman Catholic Church has raised here a question that cuts deeper than was intended. What about loyalty to the Pope, the Head of the Church, claiming also temporal power and authority over the nations?

If a union man can be accused of disloyalty to his Church or to his country on account of this oath, what about the Catholic who is loyal to his Church and that Catholic's patriotism? The knife cuts both ways.

And the truth emerges of the essential difference between Catholicism and Protestantism.

We happen to know something of the principles of the Typographical Union and it is difficult to imagine how any of those principles could possibly come into conflict with the principles of Presbyterianism, let us say. The two organizations move in different spheres and there is no intersection of their orbits at any point. The one is religious and the other is industrial. Their purposes are different and their methods are not the same. The same man belongs to both and there is no question in his mind, and can arise none, thus far in the history of either organization, of a preference for either, so far as his loyalty is concerned.

But we can very easily see the conflict, oath of allegiance or no oath, between Unionism and Catholicism, just as the contrast may be made very clear between allegiance to the Pope and allegiance to the United States Government.

The Catholic Church assumes still to be arbiter of the destinies of nations. It still assumes to interfere with the domestic politics of the nations. It was ably pointed out in these columns, not long ago, that one of the last authentic messages of the Pope to the head of a nation was Leo's congratulations to President Roosevelt upon his negro policy. Of course, it is easy to slide out of the consequences of such interference in the South, for instance, by saying that the message was not an ex cathedra deliverance. In the same way the Pope has issued his encyclicals upon Labor Problems, which, so far as they could be shown to mean anything, betrayed a hopeless ignorance of the real problems that confront us here in America. It was well known that the sympathies of the Pope were all with Spain, in the late war between Spain and the United States. It is also true that no ex cathedra deliverance was issued. But there might have been except for Leo's smartness. There is even now a conflict between the United States and the Roman Catholic Church in the Philippines over the question of Church Property, and there has been done already a good deal that straight-forward American citizens by no means approved of; the embassy of Governor Taft to the Vatican, the reception of Archbishop Ireland at the White House, and the known, disturbing fact that the Church has entirely too much influence with its members on election day to make it safe to offend the Church in a Presidential year. There is a regular Catholic Lobby in Washington. Here there is conflict of interests, and with that there are bound to be conflicting claims as to where loyalty is due, should an American Congressman vote what he believes to be right, vote for the best interests of his country, in that Philippine property tangle, or vote as his Church wants him to vote and perhaps tells him to vote.

The whole difficulty is that the Roman Catholic Church is not a purely spiritual organization. It uses other than spiritual weapons. It claims other than spiritual power. It alleges its right over the conscience itself, so that a man should even yield his conscientious convictions of duty to the teachings of the Church. It is this that makes the Catholic Church the hated anachronism that it is in this Twentieth Century. The idea that the Church of Christ should place the ban of absolute condemnation upon the whole Masonic Order, for instance, and class every Mason as an infidel, or should even claim to have anything under the sun to do with a man's being a Mason if he wants to be! It is this sort of tyranny over the conscience that makes the Church so odious to those who know it as it is.

One of the principles of Protestantism is the Spirituality of the Church. It was a principle that did not emerge clearly into light all at once. But it is now clearly a Protestant principle. It is pre-eminently a Presbyterian principle. Let the Presbyterian Church hold to that with a firm grip and she will raise no questions of loyalty to herself that do not also involve the question of loyalty to Jesus Christ.

There is not and can never be such a thing as the "Presbyterian Vote."

And we think that it is this Protestant instinct that has made the Southern Church so earnest and apparently so uncompromising on the subject of the violation of that principle by the Presbyterian Church in the Northern States in 1861 and after the Civil War. Both the Old School and New School branches of Presbyterianism there presumed to settle the question as to whether a Presbyterian's allegiance were due to his State or to the Union, which had already been sundered in twain. It was a monstrous thing in Protestantism and in Presbyterianism. It was a betrayal of the principle of the Reformed Faith to the enemy who has always claimed a right to dictate in such matters. The inherent right or wrong of the South's contention had nothing to do with the question. The Presbyterian Church had no business putting its authority to the proof in any such business. And then insults were added to injury after the close of the war by requiring that Southern people wishing to join the Presbyterian Church in the North, should be examined—not on their faith in Christ and obedience to him—but whether they had been abettors of treason and rebellion against the Union. Nor was there any way for these unfortunates to get into the Northern Presbyterian Church save by repentance and confession for their sin.

And the thing looks so plain to Southern Presbyterians still that they cannot understand how, forty years after that strife and its passions, for which all reasonable excuse should be made, the error into which our brethren fell cannot be recognized and removed.

Yes, a good many principles arise to the surface on account of the Catholic contention that a man cannot belong to the Typographical Union and receive absolution. Up to date we have not heard of any great haste to satisfy the conscience of the Catholic printers. Perhaps there are not a great many of them. For, as we remarked at the outset, the nature of their work has made their organization conspicuous for its intelligence. And Rome thrives where ignorance most abounds.

We simply suggest one other principle. The workingmen claim that the Church at large is not friendly to their cause. Perhaps that is for the reason that so many half-baked political sermons are preached sometimes from Presbyterian pulpits. Even if a minister were a specialist in political economy, we have an idea that the economy of redemption would be a more practical theme for him to expound. And then there would not be so much talk about the sympathies of the Church for this or for that class, seeing that all are sinners needing redemption.

The World-wide Need of the Spirit's Work.

No one can read the testimony of Christ about the nature of the Spirit's work in the world, or the testimony of the Apostles concerning the actual experience of that work, without a longing for such a Pentecostal outpouring again in these last times.

It is small wonder as men look abroad upon the face of the world, and see the need of the world, as they are confronted with those dreadful charts of life and death, of Heaven and Hell, that are called missionary maps with their little dots of light in the darkness of the heathen mass; as they have forced upon the conviction that the work has been so slow since the First Coming of Christ until now; that they should look and long for his Second Coming, not for the coronation of the great work but for the doing of the work itself. When we question more closely what that work is, it resolves itself into the regeneration of men, the destruction of the powers and the institutions of the devil, and the speedy saving of mankind. But if we leave out the speed which our own haste demands, what is there to be accomplished, by way of redeeming the world, that can be accomplished by Christ's earthly presence, that cannot be done, according to Christ's own word, by the power of his Spirit? We might have Christ shown to us in the flesh as he was to multitudes that turned away from him, but the Spirit takes of the things of Christ and shows them unto us. We might receive the testimony of our senses concerning him, but the Spirit testifies of him. And the great proof of the importance, as we might say the comparative importance, of the Spirit's work, since the comparison was divinely framed, is the declaration of Christ, "It is expedient for you that I go away. For if I go not away the Comforter will not come to you. And when he, the Spirit of Truth, is come, he will lead you into all truth. . . . He shall convince the world of sin, of righteousness and of judgment"

Now this is the work of the Spirit, according to the testimony of Christ. We have only to consider the Spirit's Omnipotence to feel that the work could be accomplished "quickly." The promise is, or ought to be, a cure for pessimism. There is more than the promise, however, there is the pledge of the performance of this work in actual history.

There was a time when those who believed were a small band but mighty by reason of three things—their unity, their earnestness and their prayerfulness. "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication," and the affirmation is made in different terms more than once. These were the antecedent conditions to the Pentecostal outpouring on the Early Church.

And then what a marvelous growth was there! The little company that could meet in an upper room, grown to three thousand in a single day! Multitudes even of the priests of the old Judaism believed. And then the fair picture is drawn for us, that was soon blotted and obscured by human selfishness, but that means something to our own day, that contains at least the outlines of the golden age of the Golden Rule, "And they that believed had all things in common: neither was there any among them that lacked . . . praising God and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added daily to the Church such as should be saved." Why should we Christians of these latter days hesitate about claiming the promise for our own age that had its germinal development in old Jerusalem, when God shall pour out his Spirit upon all flesh? Suppose that we who read these lines this week should unite in earnest prayer for the outpouring of the Spirit upon our own Church, would there not be an awakening indeed? Suppose all the Church of God today, of every name and nation, forgetting difference and grievance, should unite in this fundamental thing, should be earnest in our union and united in our earnestness and earnest in united prayer that God would pour out his Spirit upon all flesh, according to his Word. Would not the world itself feel the mighty impulse and be speedily lifted higher to God?

We recognize more and more the absolute failure of all human schemes for the regeneration of society. Some of us fall back in despair and say that it is never to be redeemed. Others of us say that there will be no redemption but rather a worsening, until Christ shall come again. Why not take his own word, leaving the question of the time of his coming to settle itself, and pray that the Spirit may come as He has never yet come in the history of the world, to convince the world of sin, because it believes not on Christ, and then to take of the things of Christ and show them unto convicted souls? Why not?

Review of Contemporaries.

PASSIVE RESISTANCE OF ENGLISH FREE-CHURCHMEN.

The new "Education Act" is now in full force in England. Never has English Nonconformity been so aroused. It has reached a great crisis in its history. It has determined that the people and not the Romanizing clergy of the Church of England shall govern the common schools. Nonconformity is willing and is always ready to pay all just taxation. Among the constituents of English Free-Churchmanship are some of the most loyal and patriotic, as well as devout and godly, men. It is unwilling to go back to the dark ages. It is unwilling to sacrifice a blood-bought principle for mediæval superstitions. It is unwilling, and most rightly so, to have its children taught the religious dogmas of an established Church that is purportedly Protestant, but reeking with Mariolatry and Romanism. English Free-churchmen, as represented by such men as Reginald Campbell, R. F. Horton, Robertson Nicol and hosts of others, have determined to offer "passive resistance" to that portion of the education rate that is to be used for sectarian schools. They have determined to unite for mutual support and encouragement all those who on religious, moral or national grounds refuse to pay the aforesaid rate. The principles involved in this trouble are so vital to the best interests of the kingdom of Christ in England that English Free-churchmen are everywhere warning all Protestant citizens of the grave personal responsibility which attaches to the payment of this rate. Many of our own Presbyterian and Congregational brethren, "refusing upon sacred and conscientious reasons to pay" this iniquitous rate, have had their goods seized and auctioned. It is a new era of persecution. It seems a sad blight upon this free and fair land of England. Yet this unjust bill is the logical sequence of an established hierarchy, which is the root of the whole problem whose solution is "Disestablishment." When we consider that for which this rate is to be used we are not surprised at conscientious magistrates resigning their office on the bench rather than imprison, fine or issue "distrain" warrants against their fellows; We are not surprised at auctioneers refusing to conduct "distrain" sales; we are not surprised at Free Church Councils passing unanimously resolutions to passively resist the shackling of their consciences and manacling of their "well-foughten" privileges handed down to them by their fathers. To us, as eye-witnesses, it has seemed a strange spectacle in this Twentieth Century to see ministers of the gospel, honorable citizens and devout office bearers in the Christian Church ready to go prison for the sake of a free gospel and religious liberty rather than commit sin by disobeying the teachings of their childhood and the dictates of their conscience and the voice of God. No wonder the Welsh Presbyterians, almost to a man, have decided to passively resist that portion of the education rate which seeks to Romanize, for it is nothing less, the children of Protestant parentage. Would not we in America "passively resist" if as Presbyterians we were taxed to endow Roman Catholic and other forms of sectarian and sacerdotal teaching? Would we not "passively resist" if we had to support a system which debarred our sons and daughters from an honorable branch of the civil service because they had not been confirmed by an Anglican bishop? This is one of the most deplorable aspects of the bill. Every Free-churchman, however brilliant his university attainments, or his abilities as an instructor, is absolutely debarred from becoming the head master of an English common school if he is not a churchman, i. e., if he has not been confirmed in the Anglican Church by the laying on of the hands of an Anglican presbyter. No wonder that the eminent Dr. Clifford should emphasize that a feature of the bill was the coercing men and women to profess a faith they do not believe, thus setting a premium on dishonesty and hypocrisy, and destroying those priceless liberties for which our forefathers died, and defaming the Protestant faith as false and schismatical, and thus denouncing the Christian ministry of the Free churches and the sacred ordinances as administered therein, as invalid. "We beseech you," is the clear, strong manifesto of Protestantism to its constituents, "to consider carefully and prayerfully the responsibility you would incur by paying this unjust rate. Did the act inflict a merely personal injury, one might resolve to suffer it; but to us is committed as a sacred trust the religious liberties for which our fathers—some of whom were pioneers of Protestant Nonconformity—fought and suffered. Woe be to us if we hand them down soiled and tarnished to our sons. Seek the direction of God and the guidance of conscience, and act accordingly."

This is the spirit of Knox, of Jerome, of Prague, of Martin Luther and of John Huss and of the martyrs of Smithfield. We thank God that we have solved this problem in America a good many years ago, when Presbyterians and other "dissenters," Quakers, Baptists, Lutherans, etc., all had a taste of that civil and religious liberty which the Church of England was disposed to grant then in America as now in England. That was a conspicuous part which the Presbyterians played in the war of the Revolution. History tells of Cleaveland, Shelby, Sevier, Campbell and Williams, the five colonels who won the battle of King's Mountain, all of whom were Presbyterian elders. It tells of General Morgan, who was another, and of Chaplain Caldwell, whose heroism has been immortalized in a poem by Bret Harte. With the blood of heroes in our veins, we, too, can sympathize with our English brethren in their struggle for their present religious liberty in the free and common schools of England. Great is the struggle going on in England now, and we watch it with intense interest. The tax that a Free-churchman, rich or poor, refuses to pay may only be twenty-five cents. But it is not a question of amount, but of principle, far-reaching in its effect.

"Passive resistance" is no election cry. It is the struggle for the crown rights of Free-churchmanship. It is the assertion of a free birth-right. It is the withstanding of principalities and powers for the "wrong that needs resistance and the right that needs assistance." In some parts of England today Free-churchmen are treated as social pariahs. It is hard for those who are not under the thumb of an ecclesiastical establishment to understand this. The new Education Act only enhances this condition of affairs. No true Anglican will rest satisfied until every preacher in England is an Anglican Churchman, when every child in the country shall be taught "church principles." The sacred ambition of many modern Anglicans is to see every Nonconformist place of worship with a bishop's throne within. The struggle is a fierce one. One wonders what the outcome will be! We are saved by hope!—The Presbyterian Journal.

THE OCTOPUS.

"Like a huge octopus, the Mormon hierarchy is fastening its tentacles throughout the Rocky Mountain States, and is sapping from its devotees the very life-blood of American freedom."—Presbyterian Home Missions, by Sherman H. Doyle, D. D., Ph. D.

So many inquiries have been made regarding "Dr. Thompson's Los Angeles address on Mormonism" that we give our readers that part of the Secretary's address at the General Assembly last spring:

"I have spoken of the plains. At their end we come to the mountains—gigantic, obdurate, menacing. Knit and compacted by elemental fires, they long resisted the attack of civilization. They stand for some moral conditions that are among them in some of the states of the mountains—gigantic, obdurate, menacing.

"Have you read Victor Hugo's 'Toilers of the Sea'?" Then you remember that awful portrayal of the man in the sea who encountered an octopus. Listen to it again:

"Its folds strangle. Its contact paralyzes. It is disease embodied in monstrosity. It is not to be torn away. It adheres closely to its prey. How? By a vacuum. The octopus on the chase hides. It contracts, condenses itself, reduces itself to the simplest possible expression. It confounds itself with the shadow. It looks like a ripple of the waves. It resembles everything except something living. The octopus is a hypocrite. When one pays no heed to it suddenly it opens—a glutinous mass possessed of a will. What more frightful! Glue filled with hatred! The octopus is vulnerable only in the head. There is a certain moment in which to seize it. It is the instant when it thrusts forward its head. He who misses at that juncture is lost."

"Awful description, but it describes Mormonism. It, too, strangles whatever it enfolds. It, too, is a vacuum—promises that have no substance back of them. It, too, resembles beautiful things—a shadow, a ripple on the wave. It, too, when you touch it, is clammy with death. It, too, clings to what it fastens on—relentless, inexorable, glue filled with hatred of what is good. And it, too, has one vulnerable point—only one—its head is an organism of vitality and power. Its ultimate aim is hierarchical domination of the State, and that is not to be educated, civilized, reformed—but crushed! If we miss at this juncture we, too, are lost.

"Its doctrines are full of evil. Its machinery for propagating them is well-nigh perfect. Professor Ely has recently said: 'Its organization is the most nearly perfect piece of social mechanism with which I have ever in any way come in contact, excepting alone the German army.'

"It moves with the impact of trained regulars, and with the zeal of fiery fanatics. It moves to western coasts, to eastern capitals. Its hypocrisies blindfold a nation while it chases, paralyzes and strangles. With what easy indifference we regard its advance!

"If we were told there were two thousand men going through the country, every one of them infected with smallpox, the nation would rise in a panic, would flee or would grapple the danger. But to be told there are two thousand men abroad, trying with deftest art to infect a nation with a religious system that is blasphemous and with practices that are subversive of social morality and destructive of the national conscience, is to awaken a mild protest here and there—and again here and there to call forth an apology. 'Are not Mormons industrious? Look at their towns, their schools, their irrigating ditches, their commercial prosperity!'

"With such superficial views we go to sleep while the system spreads and its apostles hasten toward their avowed goal—the control of the western states and territories—the ultimate holding of the national balance of power!

"And are the churches alive to the situation—they who presumably stand on high ground and are able to see and measure the dangers to which men on merely commercial planes may be blind? Confess the fact. Our churches in Utah are a brave protest and little more. Our schools are a gracious invitation—and little more. While Mormons send missionaries to us far faster than we send missionaries to them. Beware of the Octopus!

"There is one moment in which to seize it, says Victor Hugo. It is when it thrusts forth its head. It has done it. Its high priest claims a Senator's chair in Washington. Now is the time to strike. Perhaps to miss it now is to be lost!"—The Assembly Herald.

STILL ANOTHER LIBERAL VICTORY.

To the recent liberal victory in Scotland is now to be added another. At the bye-election in St. Andrew's, Scotland, to fill a vacancy created by the appointment of a Liberal-Unionist, Mr. Anstruther, appointed to a Government directorship in the Suez Canal Company, Captain Ellice, Liberal, was elected by 1,324 votes against 1,288 for Thompson, Unionist. The fact, as stated in the cable dispatch, that "the election was fought with unparalleled keenness on the fiscal and educational questions and the report of the South African war commission." is very significant. The Liberals seem to be fully justified in their confident expectations over the impending Parliamentary election. With Mr. Chamberlain's sensational retirement, the prospect for a Liberal victory seems bright. But still the question demands answer—who is the man under whose inspiring leadership the confidence of the country is to be won.—Christian Work and Evangelist.

All interested in our public school system will be glad to know of a very successful experiment which has been put into operation in the public schools of Batavia, N. Y., by Mr. John Kennedy, Superintendent of the schools of that city. One of the serious problems in connection with our graded school system has been the dragging along of large classes—composed of quick and dull children—over a given course of study within a specified time. Superintendent Kennedy met the difficulty by putting into large classes an extra teacher, not to hear classes, but to give personal, individual instruction to the pupils who are falling behind." This second teacher was not the assistant of the first, nor was she in any way regarded as her inferior, but simply an individual instructor to those who needed instruction. The plan worked almost like magic. The work began to improve at once, and soon the dull scholars were brought up and in many instances forged ahead, leaving the bright scholars behind, or at any rate making the pace of instruction more rapid. The experiment soon ceased to be experimental, and already there are seven individual instructors in the Batavia schools. Nor is the effect upon the pupils the only benefit. The teachers themselves are relieved of much mental strain and saved from the nervous prostration incident to their profession.—Episcopal Recorder.

We like to believe that in the South there is a particularly high regard for morality and decency. The papers report that an enterprising young man from Nashville, Tenn., has been very successful with a sort of permanent exposition this summer on Coney Island, New York. He is quoted as saying: "Clean and wholesome amusement is what the people want despite the talk of a lot of misguided managers, who think that nothing in the amusement line will succeed unless there are a lot of women in scanty attire kicking up their heels and other senseless and worse nastiness. The cardinal rule here is decency and cleanliness, and it's been my experience that Americans prefer that every time to shows that are off color." We know nothing whatever about this particular "show," but that is sound sentiment.—The Christian Advocate.

UNION OF PRESBYTERIANS.

St. Louis, Oct. 1.—The committees on the union of Northern Presbyterian and Cumberland Presbyterian churches held a joint meeting today. A basis of union has been formulated and is being considered.

Dr. W. H. Blake, chairman of the Cumberland committee, said, "I think the chances for ultimately effecting a complete union of the two branches are good. I am pleased with the spirit shown at this meeting, and hope for great results before the conferences shall have been concluded."

Rev. W. H. Roberts, chairman of the Presbyterian committee, said, "The conference was a pleasant, harmonious one, and affairs are now in good shape for fraternal consideration. Each side seems to know what it wants and that is always a great aid."—Associated Press.

An ardent admirer of the new methods and zeal displayed by the Presbyterian Church through its Evangelistic Committee has declared that "if the movement spreads as it promises to, the Presbyterian church will soon supplant the Salvation Army." During the last twelve months the Church added 5,797 souls to its membership on profession of faith, or an average of 188 a day. "And the Lord added daily to the Church such as were being saved."—Christian Advocate.

Profs. Charles William Burkett, Frank Lincoln Stevens and Daniel Harvey Hill, of the North Carolina College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, have collaborated upon a book, "Agriculture for Beginners," which has just been issued from the presses of Ginn & Co., of Boston. Feeling that there is no difference between teaching a child the science and art of agriculture and the fundamentals of grammar or arithmetic, these North Carolina teachers have prepared this text book which will be of value for the purpose for which it is intended. It is attractively gotten out, and the illustrations add much to its effectiveness.

There is no more interesting study than nature and this little book will help each reader to get better acquainted with this "shy and silent teacher."

THE TROUBLE IN AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

In the Parliamentary sessions in the winter of 1902-03 certain reforms were clamored for by the party known as the Hungarian Independents. The Prime Minister agreed to grant some, but considered others impossible. One of those rejected was the Hungarian army should be entirely separated from the Austrian; that it should not be proportioned to the latter, and should have the privilege of exclusively using the Hungarian language and flags. The Prime Minister went out of office on account of a want of tact. His successor, reported a "strong man," dissembled and tried to please both parties. He also had to resign. Since then the king has sought in vain to get some one to take the place of Prime Minister. Now he turns again to the late Premier Kheun Hedervary. The king also intimated that if matters are not promptly settled he will suspend the Constitution. Resentment against Hungary is being aroused in Austria. Some of the Provincial Diets have by large majorities denounced the Hungarian demands. Some have raised the cry, "Away from Hungary!" That cry is met beyond the Leith with the counter-cry, "Away from Austria!"—The Christian Advocate.

One of the London Daily News staff employed in taking the religious census of that capital speaks of the adult Bible schools as "one of the most cheering incidents of the census." He found one with 483 men in attendance, and smaller ones all over London, "each telling a tale of progress." He was especially interested in a measure adopted by several missions of having Bible study circles on a week evening for men in their working clothes; and it has proved remarkably successful. We do not know of any similar attempt in this city, though we know of one institution which is making plans along that line, believing that the prospect of co-operative work toward a better understanding of the Bible would attract many workmen, and, rightly guided, with most desirable results.

Earnest protests are being made in England and in America against the extravagant expenses incurred at funerals. It is often seen among those the least able to afford it. It is a false pride, which prompts the great sacrifice which the poor often feel called upon to make at funerals. The richest man of England, in modern times, was the Duke of Westminster. The funeral expenses were so restricted, by his own direction, that they did not exceed $35.00. Lord Salisbury, the English statesman, a man of high rank and great wealth, was buried a fortnight ago, with a total of $75.00 in expense. And this was done by men of a strong sense of the reality of things when death comes, and as an example to all the people of the land.—Central.

The progress of Christianity shows itself not only in a thought and a care for fellowmen, but also for dumb beasts. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is an outgrowth of the Christian spirit, and in line with this is the recent order of the Secretary of War as to cruelty practiced on horses. The order reads: "Any alteration in the length or shape of the tails, manes, or forelocks of public horses by docking, banging or clipping is hereby prohibited, and only such reasonable plucking and trimming as may be necessary to prevent shaggishness of appearance will be permitted." It is to be hoped that private citizens may follow the example of the army and the imported fad of docking horses' tails be soon a thing of the past.—Intelligencer.

Devotional.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.

Baron James de Rothschild once sat for a beggar to Ary Scheffer. While the great financier, attired in rags of a beggar, was in his place on the estrade, I happened to enter the studio of the great artist, whose friend I had the honor to be. The Baron was so perfectly disguised that I did not recognize him and, believing that a veritable beggar was before me, I went up to him, and slipped a louis into his hand. The pretended model took the coin and put it into his pocket. Ten years later I received at my residence an order on the office in the Rue Lafitte for 10,000 francs inclosed in the following letter: "Sir—You one day gave a louis to Baron Rothschild in the studio of Ary Scheffer. He has employed it, and today sends you the little capital with which you intrusted him, together with its interest. A good action always brings good future.—Baron James de Rothschild." On receipt of this order I sought the billionaire, who proved to me from the books before him that, under his management my louis had actually fructified so as to have swelled to the large sum sent me.

If an able financier as Baron de Rothschild could thus increase in value what was given to him, can we doubt the promise of our Lord to repay us an hundredfold even in this present time, and to give us finally life everlasting?—A French Paper.

"Guard me when I am off guard," prayed one the other day. It was a wise prayer, for it is not the danger against which we have fortified ourselves, the temptations which we know and are watching, which are so likely to compass a fall as some unthought-of point where no peril was suspected.

Look back over the days, and you will find that their failures have nearly always been in unexpected places. The task which seemed so easy that you scarcely thought of seeking help for it, the good temper which is yours naturally, the endurance manifested so many times that you were quite confident of finding it ready for any stress—just in these things came surprise and defeat, the weakness that wounded your self-respect and left you heartsore. You gather your forces for the struggle you foresee, you arm against the enemies whose power you know, but when human watchfulness has done its utmost, there is still a wide margin for that urgent petition: "Guard me when I am off guard."—J. R. Miller.

The little that I have seen of the world and know of the history of mankind teaches me to look upon their errors in sorrow, not in anger. When I take the history of one poor heart that has sinned and suffered, and represent to myself the struggles and temptations it passes through—the brief pulsation of joy, the tears of regret, the feebleness of purpose, the scorn of the world—that has little charity—the desolation of the soul's sanctuary, and threatening words within, health gone, happiness gone—I would fain leave the erring soul of my fellowman with Him from whose hands it came.—Dr. Chalmers.

Have you ever thought that some day you will never have anything to try you or anybody to vex you again? There will be no opportunity in that happy realm to learn or to show the spirit of patience and forbearance.

If you are ever to learn these things you must learn them now, and oh, when you shall see those glorious jewels shining in some one else's crown which were formed out of tears of sorrow and drops of blood, what would you not give to be able to live your life over again and win the recompense which can only come from trial and suffering?—Matthew Simpson.

There is always one bright thought in our minds when all the rest are dark. There is one thought out of which a moderately cheerful man can always make some satisfactory sunshine, if not a sufficiency of it. It is the thought of a bright, populous heaven. There is joy there at least, if there is joy nowhere else.—Frederick W. Faber, D. D.

Missionary.

THE MISSIONARY SPIRIT.

As throughout the Boxer rebellion the steadfastness displayed by missionaries in China was heroic, so today in Macedonia there is a display equally heroic. It has as yet attracted little attention because of spectacular events in the military world. The missionaries are actually going their work as if nothing unusual was taking place. Last week a letter came to hand from one of the American missionaries at Monastir, a woman working in the very heart of the Macedonia disturbances. She speaks calmly of the endeavors not being prosecuted there, especially of the plans for reopening this autumn the schools of which she is one of the principals. She then says: "We are more quiet than some of our friends are, probably. Whatever comes to us, it is right that we should be here. We can leave the future with God." The Monastir missionaries have expressed no thought whatever of withdrawing from the disturbed country, although several months ago the American Board (Congregational) gave authority to them to withdraw if it seemed wise for them to do so—an authority given in all cases of political or special disturbance in any country. The Board puts the responsibility upon the missionaries on the ground, while it keeps them informed so far as it is able to give information which they may not possess. The Monastir missionaries write that their withdrawal would probably produce a panic among the native Christians. The missionaries say that their presence is essential, first, to prevent such a panic, and also to help the suffering and discouraged. Many of the terror-stricken natives sleep on the missionary premises at night, not only at Monastir, but even at Salonika to the south, where there is a much larger foreign population, and where, if necessary, missionaries can have the protection of foreign vessels. To the north of Monastir there is an American missionary station at Samakov, just over the Bulgarian border. On Monday of this week it was reported from Samakov that the missionaries there are continuing their work as usual, although under abnormal conditions. Taking the situation as a whole, therefore, in the disturbed districts, an impressive calmness has characterized the missionary labors. Nor has this position been assumed with any distorted view of the value of martyrdom. It has been taken from a pure sense of duty and privilege.—The Outlook.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The religious achievements of the century are thus enumerated: One hundred years ago Carey baptized his first convert. In 1825 there were but 60,000 members of Protestant churches on foreign mission fields; today there are 1,317,841. The first foreign missionary society of American origin was organized less than a century ago; today these organizations are numbered by the score. One hundred years ago there was less than $75,000 contributed annually for foreign missions; today there is given, throughout the world, not less than $19,000,000. One hundred years ago there were not more than one hundred foreign missionaries on the field; today there are 15,400. One hundred years ago the Bible had been translated into sixty-six languages and dialects, spoken by one-fifth of the world's population; today it is translated into 330 languages, spoken by four-fifths of the world's population. One hundred years ago there were six Protestant missionary organizations in the world; today there are 537 missionary societies and auxiliaries. The first foreign mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church was established in 1833; today in all mission lands the Methodist Church has a membership of 107,003, with 75,954 probationers.—Exchange.

Life is God's school, and they that will listen to the Master there will learn at God's speed.—George MacDonald.

Sunday School Lesson.

BY REV. H. G. HILL, D. D.

GOD'S COVENANT WITH DAVID.

II Sam. 7.4-11, October 11, 1903.

When David was established on his throne, and had rest from his enemies, he desired to honor Jehovah. He prepared a tabernacle at Jerusalem for the Ark of Covenant; with imposing ceremonies and great gladness he brought up the Ark to its appointed place. But he was not satisfied with this. He desired to build for the Lord a temple more splendid and costly than his own dwelling. At first Nathan, the prophet, approved and commended his design. But in the present lesson he is directed to inform David more fully concerning the Lord's will and gracious designs. Several topics deserve attention.

David's purpose to build God's House.—The Lord approved his purpose, and all the more, because he had never in all Israel's past history instructed any ruler to build Him a house. David's desire to do this was, not the result of command, but the spontaneous outcome of a grateful devout heart. Hence it was the more acceptable unto the Lord. Yet David was not permitted to accomplish his design, though he was enabled to make large preparations for its fulfillment. He was forbidden to build the house for the God of peace, because he had been a man of war and bloodshed. Still he was allowed during the rest of his reign to accumulate much rich material with which Solomon completed the temple.

II. God's Dealings with David.—The prophet reviews David's lowly origin and past history and shows that his present blessings were due to the Lord's goodness. It would be well for us all oftener to survey past dealings and to trace our blessings to their Divine source. Nathan tells David that the Lord had taken him from humble station, from the sheep-cotes to make him ruler over Israel, Jehovah had been with him wherever he went, that He had cut off his enemies, and that He had given him a great name among the magnates of the earth. Thus does the prophet ascribe David's exaltation and greatness to the power and providence of the Almighty. The uplifting of all human beings is mainly due to some supreme causes. But Jehovah's blessings bestowed upon David in the past were only earnestests of future benefits to be enjoyed in the future by the king and his people.

III. Gods Promises to David.—The Lord promises to David's people, Israel, a fixed habitation, deliverance from affliction and rest from their enemies. He assures him that the Lord will build him an house and that when he slept with his fathers, He would set up his seed after him and establish his kingdom. He affirms that his son shall build a house for His name and that he would "establish the throne of His Kingdom forever." He declares "I will be his father and he shall be my son. He says "If he commit iniquity I will obasten him with the rod of men and with the stripes of the children of men. But my mercy shall not depart away from him, as I took it from Saul whom I put away before thee." He furthermore promises, "And thine house and thy Kingdom shall be established forever before thee: thy throne shall be established forever." These precious and far-reaching promises of God to David were partially fulfilled to Israel and David's seed during Solomon's reign. They assure us that Solomon, despite his falls and wanderings, was brought to repentance and obtained Divine mercy. But these promises are yet to find complete fulfillment in Israel's future history and David's "Greatest Son," Jesus Christ.

"Before mine eyes this hope doth daily move,
That God will count my spirit fit to stand
Among the glorified at His right hand,
When earth is past, with all its life and love."

Westminster League.

BY REV. HUGH W. HOON.

GREAT MEN OF THE BIBLE. LESSONS FROM MOSES.

Ex. 34:28-35; Matt. 17:3-4; Heb. 3:1-5. Topic for October 18.

In almost every life that has been a power in the world, we are able to see some attributes or traits of character which stands out prominently. In many cases the photograph of a man's character is displayed in a few words which makes the picture easily recognizable. Moses is noted for his meekness, and yet he had something else at the bottom of his character which brought forth as its fruit, the spirit of meekness. Moses like his ancestor, Abraham, was pre-eminently a man of faith, and the best teachings of his life are brought out by contrasting the strong parts of his character when he had become this man of faith, with the places in his character as a self-sufficient man, which these strong points supplanted.

In Moses, we have a contrast between the man when relying on himself, and when relying by faith upon God. Moses' life was proscribed from his birth, but his mother being a woman of faith, found a way to protect and save her boy's life. It was no doubt the example of his mother's faith, which had so much to do in the later days in making the son lean so heavily on God. But in Moses himself the lesson had to be learned. No doubt in his early days his mother had instilled into her child thoughts of the future filled with blessings to his distressed people; these blessings coming through himself as the instrument. As a man he felt his own wisdom and by his own manhood and prowess tried to make his people look upon him as their leader. But failure crowned his efforts, and as a fugitive from the wrath of the king, he hid himself in Midian. Here he learned to put a right estimate upon himself. It was while pondering on the mountain sides that he realized how insignificant man is. Here he learned that meekness which ever after distinguished him.

Before the lesson of his own weakness was learned he imagined that all he had to do was to announce himself as the leader of his people and they would rally to his standard. When the lesson had been learned he had to be persuaded to undertake the work, and then it was not until he was sure God was going to work through him.

But there is another side to the lesson. We should never imagine that because a task looks impossible from man's standpoint, or because failure has resulted from past efforts put forth in our own unaided strength, the same undertaking is impossible when God works through us.

There were three lessons which Moses had to learn. The first was that he himself was not strong; the second, that the work before him was too much for any man alone; the third was that God could use a weak and imperfect instrument for accomplishing His will. He didn't learn these lessons in a day. It took him eighty years to get them even well enough learned to begin to put them to much use. We are much more favored than Moses was in this respect, for we have the advantage of his experience with its failures and successes to instruct us.

The task before Moses was a gigantic one. Looking at the enterprise from every conceivable human standpoint, it was absolutely impossible, and yet for God it was nothing. It was no strain upon His resources. It was no tax upon His wisdom. How very little and weak we creatures of the earth are anyway! We work and worry and fret over the petty affairs of everyday life, when if we would but go to God and become a co-worker with Him we would find our lives smoother and free from the vexations which so often overcome us. When will we cease to grovel and begin to walk like the sons and daughters of God?

Contributed.

The Attraction of Northfield.

The attentive readers of the press have wondered why Northfield in Massachusetts, the former home of D. L. Moody, claims so large a share of public notice during the summer and draws thither such a large number of visitors. During the life-time of D. L. Moody, the magnetism of the man and his world-wide fame as an evangelist may have in some degree accounted for this. But Moody having dwelt upon the threshold a long time, lives in heaven now, and his modest grave crowning "Round Top," suggests sad as well as gladsome memories, and is not a sufficient magnet to attract the multitudes that frequent the place.

The concourse of ministers and pious laymen of various denominations, from the United States, Canada, Nova Scotia and Great Britain and of missionaries from different parts of the world, was greater than ever this summer. On the second Sabbath in August the auditorium contained 2,900 people and between two and three thousand attended the exercises for more than two weeks. What drew and kept these unlike people together? Man has a complex nature, and if a place wins and holds many it must be attractive to the varied phases of human nature.

Northfield has rare Physical Attractions.—The bodily organs find there much to comfort, win and delight. The temperature in summer is charming and you can sleep under blankets every night, while during the day the air is bracing though sufficiently warm. The scenery is beautiful. The 14 buildings of the Female Seminary, crowning gentle slopes, are surrounded by green graded walks and drives. The surrounding views are lovely, and in the new town, with many handsome residences, art has done much to embellish nature. Northward beauty develops into grandeur as up the winding valley of the Connecticut river, with its gleaming waters, and shady banks, appear the foot hills and loftier heights of the mountains of New Hampshire and Vermont. The provisions made for gratifying the appetites, are ample and furnished at a price within the reach of persons of small means. But there are many places where the physical man finds gratification that are not so attractive as Northfield.

II. It has at these Meetings Social Attractions.—The visitor is brought in touch with some of the representatives of Christendom. The cultured, the refined, the intelligent, the pious and some of the most diligent workers for the Kingdom of Christ are met here. Some of the most zealous Christians of our own and other lands are brought into intimate contact and take sweet counsel together. Pleasing acquaintances are made. Genial friendships are formed and delightful memories are stored in the mind. The narrow and provincial spirit is made to yield to wider and more catholic views, and we are made to realize that some serve the master who follow not us. We are won from old ruts of thought and drawn to new themes of meditation. Communing with the brotherhood of believers, we take a broader survey of the Christian world and have our zeal for the master's service quickened. But if Northfield ministers to the physical and social nature, it does more.

III. It Stimulates the Spiritual Nature of Man.—It appeals most strongly to the religious side of man's character. Reverence for the Divine words and earnest efforts to understand and interpret it, mark the Northfield meetings. The auditorium where the Scriptures are diligently studied five or six times each day, is the very centre of its life. Daily scholarly expositors speak to very large and attentive audiences, concerning the doctrines and duties of Holy Writ and the prophecies which relate to Christ's growing Kingdom. You may not be willing to accept all you hear. But the lectures of G. Campbell Morgan on the "Minor Prophets," the discourse of G. F. Pentecost on "The Orient, The Anglo-Saxon and Christianity," and the sermons of Griffith Thomas and Samuel Chadwick, will abide in the memories of many who heard them.—H. G. Hill.

An Autumn Thought.

It is almost irresistible to find comparisons between the waning years and our declining lives, and although the simile is so trite, the fading verdure, the falling leaves, the lessening light, bring us always back to the same place, and we begin to use all the old phrases which have doubtless been said and sung since first men conveyed their thoughts in language.

There is a point where the illustration fails to be a true one: I admit no winter in human lives except that which death makes. Spring, and the warmth and glory of summer, these are both beautifully expressive of our youth and maturity, but after these, until the angel of release wings his strong flight from earth, bearing that which cannot die unto its safe haven, it is always autumn in the human life. Frozen stillness, extinction of growth and expansion, dreary bondage of kindling energies, do not fitly delineate old age. It is yet autumn—the harvest time, while men and women love, and desire, and cherish the things which the long years have brought to them.

If we better realized this, we would not so soon give over the efforts of brain and hand to produce; we would not so quickly settle ourselves down to nurse our older opinions, perhaps our older fallacies, and make great barriers between us and the progressing minds of our children and the ever widening wonders of the world.

The passing decades have freed us from the heavy responsibilities of certain forms of activity, but our minds are not meant to lie, like winter fields growing harder and harder as the cold grows more intense, neither giving nor receiving any enrichment of life's wine, but daily becoming less lovely and lovable because the sun has so short a time to stay above our horizon.

This day makes me have visions of wrecks and lost hopes; of ventures that will be torn to pieces in fierce winds, of ships that can never make their ports. Now comes the time for those who stand confessedly in the autumn of their lives to use the rich harvest of their experiences, and teach men the tenacity of hope, the shortlivedness of evil and its fortunes.

A young man staggering under the misfortune which often overtakes us in the fervor of our strength does not come into his old father's presence to find an immovable, irresponsible, ice-bound atmosphere. "If you had lived through as many storms as I have done, you would not despair, my son; there is no such thing as destruction to a man's career; no such possibility as annihilation of hope and victory unless a man poisons his own life and destroys his own harvest." This is the autumn lesson of age to youth. It has learned not only to sow but to reap—not only to reap but to garner; it has found the secret of repose in the time of storm; it has discovered what a store of blessings remain for those who have been true and of good courage while the summer days shone and kept the freshness of the spring with which life began its course.

Our memories, if the past has been faithful and honest, true to its ideals, inflexible in its purposes of right, are indeed well-filled storehouses. It must be a barren record which does not give access to unending food for refreshing and reviving our own weary hours, and hold something suited to the needs of those about us who are yet in the heyday of life. These are not lifeless, impotent recollections, but vitalized, forceful, helpful, human experiences—they are charts to the young and comforting sources of sympathetic intercourse to those of our own generation lingering tenderly over the past, which is still in one sense the present to them.

The thinning ranks—ah, there is the great danger point with those who are in their autumn days—it is hard to see the beloved faces passing out of sight and mark the wide gaps in the once unbroken circle of our beloved ones. The fond and strong and faithful features we held dearest, the bright and gladdening friends with whom we shared the laughter and the joy of life, the tender and dependent companions with whom we dared to interchange the closer secrets of our hearts. The autumnal simile becomes too vividly strong for our composure as we think of them. Today, while we watch the wild gale tearing away the leaves, set green upon the boughs, and leaving the denuded branches graceless and looking as if affrighted, while the yet vigorous stems wave violently in the harsh wind, we remember with acute pain how we have had to let go our hold on the dear lives which were to us the grace and glory of life's gala days.

They have gone—the narrow space we call ours on God's fair earth looks strangely altered by their absence, but if the ties that bound us are forged of flawless metal, we shall slowly discover that the flower, the rail, beautiful blossom, has truly shed its petals and disappeared, but the fruit, the germ of life, which ever renews itself, is in our sheltered autumnal garner-house—we have not lost it! No love or faithful friendship or ennobling intercourse of all the past years can be taken from us.

Sometimes we are driven to ask: "And what is left to us?" Much of everything we ever strove for, and all we ever really attained! What we have merely possessed of the gifts of fortune, or the loveliness of youth we cannot hold fast, but what we have won of trust and honor, and of unity with the greatness of man and the glory of God, remains to us and lives. No winter this!

Prays some dear saint: "Sift the in-gatherings of our memory that evil may grow dim and good may shine forth clearly." There is much to ponder over in this petition, much to strive for in anticipation of autumn and its storms and its need to live on what we have reaped and stored. The bitterness and strife and evil we have kept in mind and fanned into continued new life will make a sorrowful revelation of itself in the days when we nourish the present upon that which we sowed in days long gone. In what is left to us in the season when our sowing time is over, let us be careful there is no residuum of malignity, no treasured bitterness, no hardness of unforgiven injuries. We have pressed the grapes, we have stored the wine, let there be no poison in our cup.

Of those who sit within the circles of their children and grandchildren it is almost a folly to question: "What is left?" No harvest like this—no warmth like this to keep the spirit vividly alive until with folded hands and closing eyes, our earthly sun sets for the last time and our cold winter comes at last. There comes a thrill of eagerness to stir the heart when one thinks of the aged people surrounded by young lives which have caught their first vigor from them. To be to these not mentors only, nor yet benefactors, but comrades who shall teach them the use of arms and guide them in the thick of the inevitable battle, is inspiration enough, heaven-given inspiration, to keep us from thinking we have come to a time of sloth and inertia. He or she who have children to live for should never cease to be young in heart. We lose half that remains for us when we cling too tenaciously to our own early ideas and drive youth from us by dissent. Prays on any unknown saint: "Keep us from narrow pride in outgrown ways, blind eyes that will not see the good of change, impatient judgments of the methods and experiments of others." Wise saint! May his autumn days be rich with the living intercourse of young hearts that love him.

The maturity which has outlived the heart and fire of summer passion and struggle, should give to us absolute firmness—the firmness of tested truth—on which our younger dear ones can prove the value of their discoveries in all matters essential. But this is a different matter from turning a deaf ear, and condemning without examination what is new to our experience and foreign to our early convictions. Many an old man's life is left very lonely from unwillingness to enter into any plan that involves methods hitherto unknown to him. "Blind eyes that will not see the good of change."

Whittier's beautiful words may not be too familiar for quotation, since they so aptly fit my need:

My autumn time and Nature's hold
A dreamy tryst together,
And, both grown old, about us fold
The golden-tissued weather.

I lean my heart against the day
To feel its bland caressing;
I will not let it pass away
Before it leaves its blessing.

O stream of life, whose swifter flow
Is of the end forewarning,
Methinks thy sundown afterglow
Seems less of night than morning!

That clouds must veil this fair sunshine
Not less a joy I find it;
Nor less yon warm horizon line
That winter lurks behind it."

With a conception of life's later years like this, it ceases to be our anxiety to know what is left to us; we can hardly receive the adequate idea of our large possession.

The stretch of our far, unobstructed view shows us so much! We have lived to see cause and effect, to realize what small beginning may produce; we no longer hesitate to aid the development of tiny germs of life that we may not hope to see reach their full maturity, for we have watched the growth of so many noble things which were at first no more to us than seeds planted in a child's garden. We lose the fear to venture to commence great works for future good, simply because we cannot foresee the end. Have we not seen a man's or a woman's heart and faith carry a blessed scheme of civilization, or redemption, or solace of pain to an incredible issue of success and triumph, and even stood in joyful wonder while it grew in power after its originator had passed on to his or her reward?

We have left to us, if we have not misused our lives, belief in what in our youth we are sometimes tempted to doubt. We know that that love and faith and steadfast truth are undying realities, and we can bid our children to hold them fast. We have had opportunity to sift the whole bewildering mass of the world's allurements and know what is worth striving for. It is our own fault if we have clung to the dross and let the pure gold pass out of our reach.

It is left to us to gently unmask things which might deceive, to show the worth of the rough way and the steep path, and to encourage the ascent. The perils of the frail flower-time being past, we should now hold in our grateful grasp the rich clusters of ripe fruit full of the new wine that gladdens the hearts of man.

It is left to us to cheer on our own and the coming generations, and to show that life is really worth the living; to tell of dangers safely passed, and gales which, having spent their fury were but precursors of bright days of calmest peace.

Do not let our autumns take on winter's chill nor fail to remember that it wears the harvest of the year.—N. Y. Evening Post.

The Dispensary.

In the temperance agitation in North Carolina we unfeignedly rejoice. Yet there is in us a strong and unchanging conviction that upon one point a false step has been unwittingly taken by many of the best friends of temperance. We refer to the establishing or seeking to establish dispensaries. We have wished that some one would sound the needed note of warning against this, in our judgment, specious subterfuge of the Evil One. That the temperance forces of North Carolina may not be snared on the eve of victory, we purpose to give for the thoughtful consideration of the Standard's readers some of the reasons why the dispensary under no possible circumstances should be favored by Christian people. We submit the following arguments against the dispensary:

The Dispensary Removes Furtherest the Success of the Temperance Cause.—This is seen to be true: 1st. Because the dispensary enlists as its friends and supporters that element which is opposed to the saloon and which, in order to drive out the saloon, acquiesces in and morally supports the dispensary. Many of the friends of prohibition are thus made into friends of the dispensary and their guns for prohibition are spiked. To move in behalf of prohibition they must cut a complete somersault, reverse themselves and turn enemies to their erst-while friend and the creature of their own making—the dispensary. 2nd. The facts of dispensary history, despite exceptions, bear out our first objection. This is strikingly true of the dispensary in South Carolina. The blandishments of the dispensary in that State have seduced from their first and true love not a few former prohibitionists and it has so stealthily established itself with the multitude as to make prohibition a very remote possibility. "Union County voted for prohibition three months before the dispensary was established," remarked a prominent citizen of that county, "but now prohibition would be overwhelmingly defeated at the polls." It is a current saying in South Carolina that the dispensary killed the prohibition party.

Take Fayetteville as an example: There we see the unique spectacle of the church people being satisfied with the dispensary and having no thought or desire (so an elder of the Presbyterian church told the writer) for a change, while the whiskey men initiated the struggle and helped to forward the movement that led to prohibition and they are primarily responsible for Fayetteville's dryness today. There is prohibition, but in spite of the dispensary.

II. The Dispensary Removes the Odium of the Whiskey Traffic.—There is a strong odium attached to traffic in whiskey. An odium that ought by all legitimate means to be increased and intensified. The dispensary, since it is largely established, morally supported and run by the ministers and church people loses that odium that is felt towards the saloon and is lifted into the realm of the respectable and honorable vocations. This, we believe, is one of the most dangerous and subtle evils which troop in the wake of the dispensary.

The ministry, church officers, and Christian women have a tremendous power in molding the opinions and sentiments of the public and especially of the young people. Public sentiment today is justly prejudiced against the saloon-keeper, just because all these Christian forces have condemned and opposed the saloon.

What then will be the inevitable result upon the opinion of the young people and the general public towards the dispensary, when preachers, elders and Christian women became ardent supporters of and sponsors for that institution? When they dilate on its blessings and beneficent results. When they work and speak and vote for it. There can be but one result; to the extent of the molding power of the good Christian people, and that power is very great, the dispensary will be respectable-ized. Public opinion will be led to say: "The dispensary is all right; it is an entirely honorable business, it has become respectable. Why, aren't all our church people for it?" Thus insidiously the church of God is shorn of its locks.

III. The Dispensary is a Moral Compromise.—Since drunkenness with its allied evils is moral in its nature (or rather immoral), that which causes these results, the making and selling of intoxicants is a moral question. Primarily then, the dispensary is a moral question, only incidentally is a question of expediency. The dispensary is a moral middle ground upon which Satan and the Christian meet (the thoughtful reader will distinguish between Satan and the saloonists. The opposition of the saloonist does not necessarily argue Satan's opposition.) It is in the plain of Ino; Satan and the Christian both make concessions. Satan concedes to the Christian that no liquor shall be sold after sun-down, that it shall be sold only in unbroken packages, that it must not be drunk on the premises and that the seller's gain must not be determined by the amount of the sales. In consideration of these concessions, the Christian dispensaryite concedes to Satan that liquor shall be sold and as much as the people want. If that is not a compromise we have no conception of the meaning of the word. And a compromise on any moral question means a surrender. That you may see how shameful a surrender this one is, observe the concessions made by each side. Satan concedes only minor points, that is, how whiskey is to be sold and drunk and the method of paying the dispenser, yet holding to the main point, to wit: that whiskey be sold. The Christian in consideration of these trivial points yielded, gives up to the adversary the only essential point, namely, that whiskey be sold and in such quantities that all may buy and be drunken!

IV. The Dispensary is a Mild Solution of Jesuitism.—It does evil that good may come. It seeks to accomplish beneficent results by foul means. It claims (a claim we admit for argument's sake) to decrease drunkenness and the sins and crimes attendant upon drunkenness. That of a truth is a result greatly to be desired. But many stop right there. That phrase "decrease of drunkenness" has slain its tens of thousands of unguarded prohibitionists. They fail to look at the means. As a matter of fact the dispensary uses wrong means to bring about that result—namely, a compromise of morals and the lifting of the whiskey traffic (under the name, dispensary,) under the patronage of the church and thus secretly yet surely crippling the church's spiritual power and testimony. Decrease of drunkenness at that price is far too dearly bought. Decrease of drunkenness is desirable if it can be secured by right means, otherwise not. We would commend a study of the first temptation of our Saviour to those afflicted with the decrease-of-drunkenness-by-any-means disease. There Christ refused to accomplish a most desirable end, by the use of wrong means. Before he would have used wrong means and made bread of those stones by his word of power, he would have starved.

But the dispensary is the most practicable solution of the whiskey problem, we are told in its defense. Many are diverted from the main issue and won under the sophisticated word "practicable." Suppose it is practicable, what if it is not right? As well say, it is not practicable to keep the eight commandments, therefore some stealing is permissible. Or it is not practicable to enforce the observance of the seventh commandment, therefore adultery under certain restrictions is the best solution.

V. The Dispensary Willingly Makes Drunkards.—For that reason, no Christian should consent to it. The dispensary whiskey can make a man as drunk, just as thorough a brute as any iced draught of mint julip served in golden chalice over onyx bar between the mirrored walls of the gilded saloon. The bare fact is, the dispensary makes drunkards, it fills drunkards graves, it is a successful instrument in populating the drunkard's hell, therefore it cannot be consented to by Christians. It is cold comfort indeed to the unhappy pauper of a widow to be told that she was widowed and her children left shivering and breadless, not by the terrible saloon but by the plain straight liquor from the dispensary which the good church people fought so hard to establish in town. If the dispensary is not putting drink to our neighbors' lips, then the saloon is not either. Both equally ought to go. "But there will be drunkards under prohibition, too," some one replies. The difference is wide indeed. Under prohibition there may be drunkards, but not by our consent but over our earnest protest and in spite of the fact that at every hazard we strove to keep liquor from their lips. But with the dispensaryites, there will be drunkards with their consent.

It behooves every one to weigh carefully the meaning of advocating the dispensary, and unless the reasons above and others that might be added, are fairly met and satisfactorily answered at the bar of an enlightened conscience, he does well to halt in his advocacy of any such measure. If these words may but cause some to stop and seriously to ask as to the dispensary: "Is it right?" "Can a Christian afford to befriend it?" we shall be content.

Knox.

[Our correspondent has a second article on the Dispensary in South Carolina. The second explains the first. The second and first together can be easily answered, so it seems to the editor, so far as these articles touch the altogether different problem of the local dispensary in North Carolina, as an alternative to the saloon. At any rate a reply, if not an answer, is promised in the next issue of the Standard.—Ed.]

Some Athletic Statistics and their Lessons

When one reflects how our daily happiness and our daily efficiency depend upon bodily vigor, or counts up the appalling tax, paid in time, money, pain, and tears, which sickness exacts from every community, he can but wonder at the prevalent lack of interest in the bodily training of the young. The wonder grows when he recalls among the young people of his acquaintances instances of arrested growth, actual deformity, or chronic malady, which a little care on the part of parents or teachers might have prevented.

To stimulate interest in the subject, and to show how regular athletic training increases bodily growth and development, even in young men whose average age is over 21, I wish to call attention to some statistics for '03-'04 handed me by the Physical Director at Davidson. The physical measurements alluded to are voluntary, and only 95 of the students had them taken both at the beginning and at the end of the last Collegiate year. From the 95 names the Director selected those who were in regular training almost the whole year, most of them being members of the foot-ball, baseball, or track teams. This group numbered thirty. The other 65 were almost all interested in some form of athletics, but took no such regular or sustained training.

Average gain of 65 students between Sept. '02, and May '05: In Weight 7 lbs, Height 6-10 of an inch, Normal Chest 1.11 inch, Expanded Chest 1.84 inch, Depth of Chest .18 inch, Breadth of Shoulders .63 inch, Lung Capacity 8.3 cubic inches.

Average gain of 30 students who regularly played on the College teams or followed regular training in Gymnasium: Weight 11.8 lbs, Height 1.36 inch, Normal Chest 1.35 inch, Expanded Chest 2.20 inch, Depth of chest .22 inch, Breadth of shoulders .88 inch, Lung Capacity 15.2 cubic inches.

These astonishing figures are not quoted as a defense of football, or intercollegiate athletics, or College "teams" of any kind. They are used for the wider and deeper purpose of showing to all teachers, parents, and young people how rapidly and permanently bodily training influences bodily development, even in young men who are old enough, on the average, to vote, and are presumably "grown."

The students taking desultory exercise, or none at all, gained 7 lbs each, those taking regular athletic training nearly twice as much, though eating the same fare, and living under the same circumstances as the first class. The athletes gained nearly an inch and a half in height in 9 months, though averaging over 21 years old; the others grew less than half as fast. Each of these thirty men, on the average, will remain through life nearly an inch taller than if he had failed to take this year of regular training. The increase in lung capacity is equally permanent and equally remarkable. To meet pneumonia and consumption, the two deadliest enemies of the human organism, these trained young men carry into life an added lung capacity nearly twice as great as that of the average student.

In consideration of these facts, about which there is no fog of argument, theory, or sentiment, is it not time

1st. For parents and teachers to realize that the growing body is almost as plastic as the growing mind, and to cease their criminal neglect of bodily training?

2nd. For the philanthropists of our great and liberal denomination to endow at Davidson a Chair of Physical Culture, place at the head of this department a trained medical athlete, who is also a Christian gentleman, with the same rank and authority as the other members of the Faculty, give him a thoroughly equipped gymnasium and athletic grounds and a corps of assistants, place the developments of the body on the same plane as that of the mind, and thus send to the service of the Church and of the world graduates who are equipped not only with trained minds and characters, but with square shoulders, deep lungs, an erect bearing, and a vigorous constitution.

Henry Louis Smith.

A Promising Experiment.

Amid all the mistaken philanthropy, is directed effort, and energy fruitlessly expended in behalf of the negro, it is a real delight to find one experiment that is being conducted on the principles of common sense and sound judgment, and gives promise of some really beneficial results. The experiment alluded to is the John C. Martin Bible Conference for the Benefit of Colored Ministers, which has just closed its session held in Atlanta, Ga. The white people of the South have seen so many misdirected efforts for the benefit of the negro race, have so often watched them fail, or felt the force of their unwholesome influence upon the people whom they would benefit, that many of us have begun to believe that the negro should be left to work out his own salvation. This John C. Martin Conference, however, seems well worthy of support and encouragement.

The plan of the conference is somewhat as follows: Mr. Martin's agent, a man born and reared in the south before the civil war, selects some town easily accessible to the surrounding country, where the conference will be held. The meeting is called by announcements, circular leaders, etc., sent to all the negro preachers of the community. Men from both races, but always such as are known to be men of ability and thorough consecration are selected as speakers. The speakers are always men of the immediate neighborhood. The John C. Martin fund bears the entire expense. The usual course of lectures is as follows:

"The Dignity and Importance of the Gospel Ministry."

"The Minister's Responsibility as a Messenger of God."

"The Object of Preaching."

"Preparation and Delivery of Sermons."

"Public Reading of Scripture, Hymns, and Prayer."

"How to Study the Bible."

"Bible Writers and their Times."

"The Christian Home."

"Christian Living and Influence."

"Purity, Temperance, Economy, etc."

The strong points of this plan can be easily seen.

In the first place it gets down to the roots, and aims at a moral and spiritual improvement. We have heard that much was said in the anti-slavery agitation about an alleged neglect of the religious training of the negro on the part of the Southern planters, but we have noticed that almost without exception, the philanthropic efforts of the people of the North have been directed toward the intellectual and material improvement of the negro rather than toward the fact that education without moral and religious training puts a new and dangerous weapon into the hands of the thief, the liar, the profane and the insolent. This may well account for the fact that the people of the South have begun to question, in the light of their experience, whether or not education is good for the negro, and is, no doubt at the bottom of the agitation in several of our states looking toward an apportionment of school funds between the races according to the amount of the taxes paid by each. This Martin Conference aims simply and solely at the moral and spiritual education and improvement of the negro. It is also a well known fact in the South that the best results in all efforts to benefit the negro can be secured only when such efforts are made through and directed by those who understand the negro and are acquainted with their nature condition and needs. This conference is under the personal direction of Mr. Martin's agent, Mr. W. B. Rankin, who is a Southern man, and all of the speakers are chosen from the immediate neighborhood of the conference, from both races, and always with a view to their ability and character.

The great difficulty in helping the negro has always been how to secure his own cooperation and at the same time give him something that he really needs, without truckling to his weaknesses in order to secure his attention. The Martin Conference seems to have been remarkably successful in this respect. The meeting is held in a negro church, yet there are no unusual demonstrations, not even a choir. The conference is not red-labelled in the newspapers as a philanthropic enterprise for the benefit of the negro race, yet the preachers come.

There are no bombastic speeches and the speakers are not imported from New England, yet the preachers listen, and the discussions that are heard after the speaker is through speaking indicate very clearly that they are profiting by what they hear. It was very gratifying to see the conference to tender Dr. Theron Rice a rising vote of thanks after a very earnest address on "Christian influence and Christian Living," and to hear one old preacher from Alabama say that Dr. Rice had made plain to him something that he had been trying to see for twenty years, namely the negro preacher's opportunity for usefulness and the need that exists for his services. Evidently something is being done.

A negro preacher recently published over his signature the statement that the thing to be deplored in the negro race is not poverty or ignorance, but moral deficiency and for this, he says the Afro-American pulpit is largely responsible. We recognize the fact that the preacher is the leader among his people. It is his example that they follow and his word to which they give heed. We think that this Martin Conference has found the strategic point.

W. E. Hill.

"Futures" and Gambling.

"A cotton merchant has an order to supply a cotton factor with a thousand bales of cotton in December at a certain price. The cotton merchant in time delivers the cotton at that price. But he is merely seeking a fair commission on that purchase. He therefore protect himself, or 'hedges,' by buying through his agents on the Cotton Exchange a thousand bales of December cotton. Then if cotton goes up he is insured against loss. If it goes down he has discounted any larger profit that he might have made. But this is rather anti-speculative than otherwise. Or a cotton factory contracts for the delivery of its cloth six months from now at a certain price. It protects itself against a rise in the price of the new cotton by buying futures in cotton. It strikes us that this is a legitimate transaction."—Editorial in Presbyterian Standard, Sept. 2.

The fact that this doctrine is set forth deliberately by one of our ministers and editors, one of the ablest and most conscientious among us, demands a patient examination of the question. The present article aims to help toward this examination, as among brethren who respect one another's convictions and judgments.

We need first of all to get a correct definition of gambling.

In the first place, the issue of a gambling transaction must turn on a future contingency, not certainly foreknowledge by the parties. But this element of risk and speculation is common to gambling and to other forms of trade generally. Whoever buys to sell in the market runs a risk, in a measure speculates. We cannot condemn speculation as such. A given speculation may be wrong for a given man; but to condemn speculation in itself is to condemn commerce. It would be to condemn the raising of cotton, since it is always a contingency whether the price of the cotton will exceed the expense of raising it. To show, then, that the buying of futures diminishes the risk in a certain complex of transaction is not to touch the question whether the buying of futures is gambling.

In the second place, if it is right in the cases supposed to buy futures, it must be right to sell them. The question, therefore, whether the transaction is gambling cannot be determined by considering only the action of one of the parties.

In the third place, there must be contemplated in gambling some transfer of value without compensation. Nor can we here admit as compensation the chance of gain by him who turns out the loser; for this is present in every gambling transaction.

We propose therefore the following definition of gambling: A transaction in which one party must lose if the other gains, a contingency determining which shall lose. And the element which makes the transaction always sinful is the necessity that one loses for the other to gain, the transfer of value without compensation.

The objection is made then that insurance is gambling; but the objection is not well-founded. If I insure my house, and it does not burn, the insurance company does not get my premiums without compensation; and the compensation lies in the increased commercial value of the house pending the insurance policy. And if the house burns, neither do I get something for nothing (for in no case must the insurance paid me exceed my loss), nor does the company lose; for the rate of premium must always be sufficient to cover the sum of losses by fire and to compensate the company for its capital and work. In no case does either party gain by the other's losing; but in every gambling transaction, it is to the advantage of one party that the other lose. This is not so in insurance, whether fire, accident, or life insurance; for if, under the name of insurance, there is such a transaction that it is to the advantage of one party that the other lose, such a transaction would be gambling.

Now let us apply our definition. In the case of the cotton merchant (and the argument would be the same in the other case), there were two distinct transactions supposed, one with the cotton mill, a confessedly proper commercial transaction, and one with the seller of the futures. Is there gambling in this? Tying this transaction to the other does not alter its character. For each of the transactions is with a different party and is complete in itself.

For suppose that a horse merchant has agreed to deliver a certain horse to a party for $100, knowing that the horse is to be sold and calculating that he can effect the purchase at $200. He thus expects to make $100 commission. But when he approaches the present owner to sound him concerning the price, he is told that the horse is to run in a race; he can have the horse for $100 if the horse is beaten, or for $300 if he wins the race. Then our horse merchant, meeting a man who is willing to bet $100 that the horse will be beaten, accepts the bet. If now the horse is beaten, the horse merchant pays $100 on the bet and $100 for the horse, in all $200; or if the horse wins, he makes $100 on the bet, and then pays $100 for the horse. Thus by making the bet, he removes the risk. Is the transaction in which he bets $100 on the horse race gambling? If so, the fact that he has so related his bet with another transaction as to keep himself from losing or gaining on the two transactions, does not take away the gambling nature of the betting transaction.

To come back to the supposed transaction of the cotton merchant in buying futures, the mere fact that he has so related this transaction to another that he will neither "lose nor gain" on the "two," does not "take" away the gambling nature of the one, that between him and the seller of futures.

For if the cotton mill should burn down meanwhile and abandon its transaction altogether, the transaction with the seller of futures would still stand. If when cotton went up 1 cent and he made $5,000 on his deal, in futures, would it be by gambling? For if cotton went down 1 cent and he lost $5,000 by this deal in futures, would he lose by gambling?

And in any case, would the transaction in futures be gambling on the part of the seller of futures?

F. P. Ramsay.

An Address on The Bible.

By Theodore Roosevelt.*

As all of you know there are certain truths which are so very true that we call them truisms; and yet I think we often half forget them in practice. Every thinking man, when he thinks, realizes what a very large number of people tend to forget that the teachings of the Bible are so interwoven and entwined with our whole civic and social life that it would be literally—I do not mean figuratively, I mean literally—impossible for us to figure to ourselves what life would be if these teachings were removed. We would lose almost all the standards by which we now judge both public and private morals; all the standards toward which we, with more or less of resolution, strive to raise ourselves. Almost every man who has by his lifework added to the sum of human achievement of which the race is proud, of which our people are proud, almost every such man has based his lifework largely upon the teachings of the Bible. Sometimes it has been done unconsciously, more often consciously; and among the very greatest men a disproportionately large number have been diligent and close students of the Bible at first hand.

Lincoln—sad, patient, kindly Lincoln, who, after bearing upon his weary shoulders for four years a greater burden than that borne by any other man of the nineteenth century, laid down his life for the people whom living he had served so well—built up his entire reading upon his early study of the Bible. He had mastered it absolutely; mastered it as later he mastered only one or two other books.

In this country we rightly pride ourselves upon our system of widespread popular education. We most emphatically do right to pride ourselves upon it. It is not merely of inestimable advantage to us; it lies at the root of our power of self-government. But it is not sufficient in itself. We must cultivate the mind; but it is not enough only to cultivate the mind. With education of the mind must go the spiritual teaching which will make us turn the trained intellect to good account. A man whose intellect has been educated, while at the same time his moral education has been neglected, is only the more dangerous to the community because of the exceptional additional power which he has acquired. Surely the mere statement of it is enough, that education must be education of the heart and conscience no less than of the mind. You may look through the Bible from cover to cover and nowhere will you find a line that can be construed into an apology for the man of brains who sins against the light. On the contrary, in the Bible, taking that as a guide, you will find that because much has been given to you much will be expected from you; and a heavier condemnation is to be visited upon the able man who goes wrong than upon his weaker brother who cannot do the harm that the other does, because it is not in him to do it.

So I plead, not merely for training of the mind, but for the moral and spiritual training of the home and the church; the moral and spiritual training that have always been found in, and that have ever accompanied the study of this book; this book, which in almost every civilized tongue can be described as "The Book," with the certainty of all understanding you when you so describe it. One of the highest tributes of modern times to the worth of the Bible as an educational and moral influence of incalculable value to the whole community came from the great scientist Huxley, who said: "Consider the great historical fact that for three centuries this book has been woven into the life of all that is noblest and best in our history, and that it has become the national epic of our race; that it is written in the noblest and purest English, and abounds in exquisite beauties of mere literary form; and finally, that it forbids the veriest hind, who never left his village, to be ignorant of the existence of other countries and other civilizations and of a great past, stretching back to the furthest limits of the oldest nations in the world.

"By the study of what other book could children be so much humanized and made to feel that each figure in that vast historical procession fills, like themselves, but a momentary space in the interval between the eternities?

"The Bible has been the Magna Charta of the poor and of the oppressed. Down to modern times, no State had a constitution in which the interests of the people are so largely taken into account; in which the duties, so much more than the privileges, of rulers are insisted upon, as that drawn up for Israel in Deuteronomy and Leviticus. Nowhere is the fundamental truth that the welfare of the State, in the long run, depends upon the righteousness of the citizen, so strongly laid down. The Bible is the most democratic book in the world."

The immense moral influence of the Bible, though of course infinitely the most important, is not the only power it has for good. In addition there is the unceasing influence it exerts on the side of good taste, of good literature, of proper sense of proportion, of simple and straightforward writing and thinking. This is not a small matter in an age when there is a tendency to read much that even if not actually harmful on moral grounds is yet injurious because it represents slipshod, slovenly thought and work; not the kind of serious thought, of serious expression, which we like to see in anything that goes into the fiber of our character.

The Bible does not teach us to shirk difficulties, but to overcome them. That is a lesson that each one of us who has children is bound in honor to teach these children if he or she expects to see them become fitted to play the part of men and women in our world.

If we read the Bible aright, we read a book which teaches us to go forth and do the work of the Lord; to try to make things better in this world, even if only a little better, because we have lived in it. That kind of work can be done only by the man who is neither a weakling nor a coward; by the man who in the fullest sense of the word is a true Christian, like Great Heart, Bunyan's hero. We plead for a closer and wider and deeper study of the Bible, so that our people may be in fact as well as in theory "doers of the word and not hearers only."—Daily Bible.

A pretty story of Professor Herkomer is told in one of the London papers. His aged father, who lives with him in his splendid home at Bushey, used to model in clay in his early life. He has recently taken to it again; but his fear is that his hands will soon lose their skill, and his work will show the marks of imperfection. It is his one sorrow. At night he goes to his early rest, and when he has gone, Herkomer, the talented son, goes into the studio, takes up his father's feeble attempts and makes the work as beautiful as art can make it. When the old man comes down in the morning he takes the work and looks at it, and rubs his hands and says, "Ha! I can do as well as ever I did!"

Trouble is hard to bear, is it not? How can we live and think that any one has trouble, and we can help them—and never try?—George Elliot.

*This address was delivered before the Long Island Bible Society in June, 1901, while Mr. Roosevelt was still Vice President. Sixty thousand copies have been printed by the American Bible Society, many having been sent to our insular possessions.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIA:	Page.
The Typographical Union, the Catholic Church and the United States.....	4-5
The World-Wide Need of the Spirit's Work.....	5
Review of Contemporaries.....	6-7
DEVOTIONAL:
A Good Investment.....	8
MISSIONARY:
The Missionary Spirit.....	8
SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSON:
God's Covenant with David.....	9
WESTMINSTER LEAGUE:
Great Men of the Bible, Lessons from Moses.....	9
CONTRIBUTED:
The Attraction of Northfield, Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D.....	10
An Autumn Thought.....	10-11
The Dispensary, Knox.....	11-13
Some Athletic Statistics and Their Lessons, Henry Louis Smith.....	13
A Promising Experiment, W. E. Hill.....	13-14
"Futures" and Gambling, F. P. Ramsay, D. D.....	14-15
An Address on the Bible, President Roosevelt.....	15
CHURCH NEWS.....	16-19
THE WORLD.....	20-21
MARRIAGES AND DEATHS.....	22
THE HOUSEHOLD.....	22-23
THE HOME CIRCLE.....	24-26
OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.....	27-29
OUR LITTLE FOLKS.....	30-33
CLIPPINGS.....	34

The Editor's Chat with the Reader.

The Presbyterian Standard has been at the mercy of other busy printing offices for a few weeks, but hopes to greet its readers in better dress soon again, though as it is all in the family, to which the editor addresses his chat, we hope that errors and appearances will be excused.

But the matter is all right—Dr. Hill's account of his Northfield Trip, for example. An Autumn Thought is an appropriate reflection for this season of the year from the New York Post. Knox, who means to claim Presbyterian parentage at least, writes about the Dispensary. Dr. Smith has an article on Athletic Statistics which will be read with interest, especially by those interested in the youth in our colleges. A Promising Experiment is also a title which awakens expectation as we all like experiments. Rev. F. P. Ramsay asks some questions about Cotton Futures, with an illustration from the Horse Market, which we shall try to answer next week. President Roosevelt made the Address on the Bible which we now publish some months ago. We are afraid that it will be considered political if we defer its publication any longer.

And we again remark that the other departments of the Standard are up to the Standard.

PERSONALS.

The address of Rev. J. E. Summers is changed from Elmwood, N. C., to Derita, N. C., Route 14.

The address of Rev. Chas. P. Foreman is changed from Plattsburg, Mo., to 821 Second street, Louisville, Ky.

Rev. J. D. Snedecor, of Woodlawn, Ala., is now at Tuscaloosa, Ala., ready for his new duties as Secretary of Colored Evangelization.

Rev. E. J. Young, of New Orleans, La., has located at Lake Como, Fla., and hopes that the change of climate will be beneficial to his health.

Rev. and Mrs. F. L. Leeper have been warmly welcomed by the church and people of Jefferson City, Tenn. There were six additions to this church on last Sunday.

Rev. Letcher Smith, of Dunn, N. C., has been conducting a meeting at Cypress Church, in Fayetteville Presbytery, in which there were sixty professions of faith in Christ.

Rev. W. C. Hagan, of Newells, N. C., has been dismissed to the Presbytery of Savannah and will immediately take charge of the church at Fitzgerald, Ga.

Church News.

VIRGINIA.

UNION SEMINARY NOTES.—Westwood, the well-known summer residence of the late Dr. Hunter McGuire, which was kindly leased by friends of the Seminary for the use of the students, now presents a unique scene every afternoon, when some thirty or forty students are seen plying every kind of garden implement in the brave endeavor to prepare a space for twelve tennis courts. Arrangements for neat lines of back-nets have been effected, and the "clearing off" process is done with some alacrity in view of the many hours of delightful exercise to come as a reward. With the sole exception of a limited patronage of Brook avenue and other private walks, tennis is used as a welcome aftermath of the class-room.

All of the Seminary buildings, including the professor's houses, are very much improved by a new coat of paint. The latest addition in the way of equipment is a large fire bell, placed in the Westminster Hall. Several past experiences tell the tale, and fully vindicate it against any charge of intrusion upon the sacredness of these walls.

The student body would gratefully acknowledge the receipt of a number of copies of the excellent pamphlet, "A Bible Study of the Two Obstacles Between Man and Heaven," by Dr. S. S. Laws, of Washington. These were sent for free distribution as a gift from the author, also the Seminary is the recipient of a supply of coal amounting to $500 in value. A gentleman from West Virginia, who wished to help the institution in some way is the kind and very thoughtful donator.

Many will learn with pleasure of the increasing interest in the famous old Makemie desk, which is the property of Union Seminary. Last year it attracted attention at an exhibit held in Philadelphia, and now a gentleman from Jersey City writes requesting special photographs of the desk to be made and forwarded to him at his own expense.

Next Monday, October 5th, being the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Jonathan Edwards, appropriate exercises will be held in the Seminary. The faculty is arranging for a number of lectures during the year on questions of practical value to the student body. About the middle of the session, Dr. A. L. Philips will hold a number of conferences on Sunday School work and methods.

Friends will be gratified to learn that Dr. W. W. Moore has been chosen by North Carolina, now living in Richmond, as their speaker during the celebration of North Carolina Day in Greensboro, beginning October 12th. Richmond has honored a number of her prominent citizens from the Old North State, all of whom are interested in the unique occasion mentioned above.

Rev. J. S. Crowley, formerly of our African Mission, who is taking a special course in the Seminary, will speak in the chapel next Sunday evening, taking some phase of the African work. Later on we hope to have visits from two other missionaries now on furlough, Messrs. Lacy Little and W. M. Morrison. The missionary spirit is exceedingly healthful here, shown in one way by the interest in the voluntary study of missions. All but two students are enrolled in these classes, and quite a number are volunteers for the foreign field.

W. M. W.

NORFOLK.—The following paper adopted by the Presbyterian ministers of this section, at their Monday meeting this week, explains a great work that Rev. Dr. Pratt, now residing in Portsmouth, is doing for the Christian religion—the preparation of the commentaries of the old Scriptures into Spanish—a work never before accomplished under Protestant auspices.

The Rev. H. B. Pratt, D. D., for many years a missionary in Colombia and Bible translator and missionary in Mexico now retired from active work in the field, is spending his remaining days preparing commentaries on the books of the Old Testament in Spanish. There is no one in better position to do this work than Dr. Pratt. He is a man in thorough sympathy with conservative theology, yet up-to-date in his knowledge of Biblical criticism. He is in full possession of his mental and physical powers. Then his long residence in Spanish-speaking countries has made him acquainted with the needs of those lands and gives him a knowledge of the language. There is no greater need than good commentaries upon the Bible in the Spanish tongue. Here is a man doing the work. One difficulty stares him in the face, viz: the need of money to print the volumes as they are prepared. He finished the commentary on Genesis, which was published a year ago. The cordial reception it received manifested its value and worth.

He has now finished the volume on Exodus, but the money is lacking with which to print. One can readily see that the demand for Spanish commentaries, while urgent, must necessarily be limited. The profits on sale of one volume do not print the next. This would not be true of an English edition. It has been suggested to Dr. Pratt, by friends who are acquainted with his commentary on Genesis, that it would be a most valuable and popular work if printed in English and would probably yield a revenue which would supply the money to print the succeeding volumes of Spanish commentaries. Dr. Pratt has acted on this suggestion and the commentary on Genesis has been translated in English and is ready for the printer. It is highly commended by those who have read the manuscript.

How shall the money be raised with which to print the English edition? Two ways. Dr. Pratt offers the work to advance subscribers at one dollar a volume, when ordered in blocks of ten, thus giving a book of five hundred pages that will sell for one dollar and a half for one dollar. But there is a better way yet for one or more whom God has blessed, who are deeply interested in the work of missions, to contribute the eight hundred dollars needed to print the first edition, thus creating a permanent endowment for the printing of the Spanish commentaries which are to follow. Is there not one or more, whose attention is now called to this golden opportunity, who will send Dr. Pratt part or all of this amount? Remember that it is money given to foreign missions mainly, as well as to printing a volume of absorbing interest and value in English. These words are written without solicitation and constitute the appeal of the Presbyterian Ministers' Association of Norfolk and vicinity, by whose action a committee was appointed to write same.

(Signed) Joseph Rennie, Committee.

Dr. H. B. Pratt's address is 303 Court street, Portsmouth, Virginia.

GEORGIA.

NOTES FROM AGNES SCOTT INSTITUTE.

The session opened the 16th. At the opening exercises the chapel was crowded. The most interesting feature of these exercises was an address by Rev. T. H. Rice, D. D., pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church of Atlanta. His subject was the "Agnes Scott Ideal," which he explained and enforced most impressively.

The enrollment of students is in advance of any previous year at this date.

Last Sabbath was a most interesting day to Agnes Scott. In the morning at 11 o'clock the annual matriculation sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. J. T. Plunket, of Augusta, Ga. In the evening at 6 o'clock he spoke to the Agnes Scott Christian Band, and again preached at night in the Presbyterian church. Dr. Plunkett made a very fine impression upon the large congregations which greeted him.

NORTH CAROLINA.

GREENVILLE.—This church installed three new officers on last Sabbath, one elder and two deacons. The new superintendent of the graded school, Prof. W. A. Dove has taken charge of the Sunday school work with a full corps of assistants. The church building has recently been repainted outside, re-calced inside and the lot enclosed with a neat iron fence. A new library has been purchased for the Sunday school. All the members who were absent during the heat of summer have now returned and a good many new comers have cast their lot with us. Altogether, the work here is full of promise. The fall season, with its work, is entered upon with new courage.

F. G. Hartman, Pastor.

GREENSBORO.—The First Presbyterian Church of Greensboro, N. C., (Dr. E. W. Smith pastor) has just supplied said church with 300 of the new note books, Psalms and Hymns, which have been delivered. M.

SPENCER.—State Treasurer B. R. Lacy addressed a large gathering of people here on September 30th, the occasion being the laying of the corner-stone of the new Presbyterian church which is to be erected near Salisbury avenue and not far from the Spencer depot. The exercises were very impressive and befitting the occasion. The State Treasurer was introduced by the master of ceremonies and he spoke in a forceful manner. His address made a profound impression on the large number of hearers. Rev. Dr. J. Rumble, of Salisbury, also spoke of the movement of this denomination at Spencer and the great need of a new church, after which a handsome cash collection was taken, which will go towards completing the edifice.

DAVIDSON.—The next copy of the College Bulletin, which will appear a few weeks hence, is to be in the nature of a "Souvenir Album," containing about twelve pictures, full page size, and an equal number of printed pages of descriptions and general information. Photographer Van Ness, of Charlotte, was here a few days ago and took some photographs of campus walks and buildings that are unusually handsome.

The total enrollment of students to date is about 135, of these 116 are new, 105 being academic students and 11 special students from the North Carolina Medical College. Heretofore the students of the North Carolina Medical College have taken all their chemistry and physics with the academic students and so appear in the Davidson catalogue as special or elective students. Hence last year the entire count gave Davidson 221. This year a similar count would make Davidson's present numbers between 250 and 260, but a change in the Medical College takes a number of Chemistry students off the Davidson rolls so that while the list shows about 205 academics as against 174 for last year and a freshman class 25 per cent. larger than that of 1902-'03, the present enrollment is as yet only about 15 in excess of the catalogue list for the entire scholastic year of 1902-'03. Dr. Munroe reports the numbers of the Medical College as considerably larger than ever before.

Dr. Smith attended the meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery at Wadesboro, this week, and Dr. Shearer is absent at the meeting of Concord. He is especially interested to know what action the Presbytery will take in reference to the Statesville College and the appointment of a new board of trustees as it is understood that these two Presbyteries, Mecklenburg and Concord will give up their joint control of the two colleges for women and each will assume control of the institution within its own bounds.

Rev. M. E. Sentelle, at present of the Synod of Texas, has resigned his charge in the West and will come to Davidson in a few days as an assistant, and no doubt later, as an associate professor in the Department of Bible, which Dr. Shearer has taught so successfully and ably for many years. Mr. Sentelle is a first honor graduate of Davidson, who in addition to his Seminary course has pursued graduate studies in Philosophy and other departments at Yale and Princeton, and from these institutions brings the highest testimonials. He is also an experienced teacher. Rev. William Black is assisting the pastor in a meeting at Machpelah this week. In the absence of Dr. Graham at Presbytery, Rev. Dr. Harding will fill his pulpit morning and evening, October 4th.

In college games tennis is the popular pastime for those that find football rather rough, and the courts are scattered everywhere, but the football practices excites the general interest and gathers the crowd. Coach Brewin is being helped in his work now by Mr. Allen, who played and coached for a long time at Ann Arbor and who is now on a visit to the South. His own enthusiasm and perfect knowledge of the game is likely to result in making the present team the strongest Davidson has ever had.

RED SPRINGS.—During the month of August, while our pastor was off on vacation, we had a variety of four good sermons from as many good preachers. The pulpit was filled the first Sunday by Rev. J. A. Calligan of Antioch. The second by Rev. C. H. Hodgin, of Greensboro. The third by Rev. P. R. Law, of Lumber Bridge. The fourth by the Synod's great man, the Rev. William Black, who had stopped over for a few days on his return from Northfield. The faithful pastor, not knowing that his pulpit could be filled on that day, and knowing the need of his congregation had also returned the day before and was present. On the second Sunday in September Dr. Vardell, this being his custom, the first Sunday the opening of his school, preaching one of his strong, practicable sermons to a large body of students, both male and female, and the regular congregation. The other Sundays we have also had a new preacher, or new preaching, by the same old pastor. Or it may be new hearing by the same old hearers, the latter preferable, as his preaching was good enough before. Anyway, we all think his last sermon one unexcelled.

The school here opened with a gain of several students over previous years, and those in charge are much encouraged. Many old students returned, bringing with them new ones, which is one of the best, ads for any institution. President Vardell has his work so well systematized and so much more room than was at his command the first years, that the opening of the present session was something like the return of a family after a summer's vacation. The N. C. M. A. also had an easy opening, with an increased number of boys on hand the first day, seven States being represented. Dr. Murphy, after an absence of more than a year, is with this school again as head master, with renewed health and energy. The boys all like the Doctor. Prof. J. A. McArthur, an old North State made man, is also in his place in this school, doing his part well, for he knows not how to do otherwise. Captain Hardesty is a new man, but stands high with the boys, and is a man of unquestionable character. The other teachers have been tried before, and have not been found wanting. Prospects for our schools here were never brighter, and no wonder, when so many Christian teachers are at the helm.

J. McL.

THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA.

The nineteenth annual session of the Synod of North Carolina will be held in the First Presbyterian church, Wilmington, N. C., and will convene on Tuesday, November 3rd, 1903, at 11 o'clock a. m.

The committee of enrollment will meet in the lecture room of the first church on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock, and members of Synod will please promptly meet this committee, and thereby save delay and confusion in the organization of the body.

Arrangements for reduced rates of travel have been made, for all delegates and visitors, over the Southern Railway, the Atlantic Coast Line, the Seaboard Air Line, The Atlantic and North Carolina, the Norfolk and Western and the Carolina North Western Railroads.

Round trip tickets will be sold at all the principal stations in North Carolina, and at Norfolk, Suffolk and Danville, Va., on the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th of November, with a limit of about ten days.

D. I. Craig, Stated Clerk.

SYNODICAL HOME MISSION ECHOES.

Rev. William Black has recently assisted Rev. R. M. Mann in a meeting at Clinton. The whole church was greatly revived, about forty professed faith in Christ and at least fifteen will unite with the Presbyterian church.

The superintendent spent ten days with Rev. S. Calvin Smith this month, assisting him in a meeting at Ebenezer church, about nine miles from Jefferson, Ashe county. Having labored in this field five years, it was peculiarly pleasant to clasp the hands of old friends and to preach again in the first Presbyterian church erected in the county of Ashe. The attendance was good, and a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit accompanied the preaching of the Word. Among those who were converted were some very aged persons. One man about 78 years old yielded his heart to the Saviour, and a grand-mother over 80 years old was brought to Christ, baptized and received into Presbyterian church. There were about fifteen professions in all, six of whom united with Ebenezer church at the close of the meeting.

Bro. Smith is the right man in the right place and doing a most excellent work throughout the Ashe county field. He has recently completed a church at Obids. At present he is engaged in the erection of a school building at Nathan's Creek. The outlook at this point is exceedingly bright.

The Alleghany field was supplied during the summer by Rev. A. H. Temple, who has now returned to his former work in Mecklenburg Presbytery. He did good work while in this field and made many friends to the church he represented.

The material for the Presbyterian church in Sparta is on the ground and the building will be erected at an early date. An evangelist has been called to the field and we trust will soon take charge of the growing work in Alleghany.

Church treasurers are earnestly urged to collect all they can on pledges for Synodical Missions and forward the same, with any other funds they may have on hand for this cause, to the superintendent at once as the books of the committee must be closed soon and funds are very much needed.

E. E. Gillispie, Superintendent.

Greensboro, N. C.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

To the good people and the Ladies' Aid Societies.—We come to you again this year for some help. I am contracted again to keep scholars, and boarding them, enlarging from fifty to seventy pupils, only to feed them, and lodging accommodations; no clothing. This number will be all full blood Choctaws. I have a good many orphan children. So we ask you again to help us to clothe these poor children. I and Mrs. Bacon work hard to build this school, in order to build a school into a permanent school. And we spend everything we earn from government, are not making anything; only help our people. So we will receive all way from shoes to blankets and will sure appreciate your help. So please let us hear from you. Our school enlarges every year. Next year will have one hundred scholars. In a few years all of our schools will be abolished, but our school will be permanent, because we will have a big body of land given by individual donations to our school. We have about 110 acres already; just as soon as we receive a charter I am going out to secure more land for our school.

I remain yours fraternally,

S. L. Bacon.

Hugo, Indian Territory.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LILY SEMINARY, FOR COLORED GIRLS, TUSCALOOSA, ALABAMA.

Prospectus.—On the 12th of October, I will begin a School for Colored Girls, which I trust may grow in size and usefulness until it shall become one of the great schools of the South.

The name of this Seminary has been chosen to perpetuate the memory of the noble work done in behalf of our race by the Rev. D. Clay Lilly, late Secretary of Colored Evangelization of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

The location of this Seminary in the same city with the Stillman Institute is, I think, a happy circumstance. It may grow to be what Scotia Seminary is to Biddle University.

The course of study will embrace all ordinary English branches, and we expect to develop a good normal course for the training of teachers.

We also expect to give useful instruction in sewing, dress making, laundrying, cooking, and general housekeeping.

Faculty.—Rev. E. M. Gilliard, Principal, (Stillman Institute, Class of 1901.) Mrs. M. V. Gilliard, (N. O. University, Class of 1900) Instructor in Sewing, Dress Making, and Household Economy. Miss Minnie Spencer, (Fisk University) Instructor in Music and English.

The terms of tuition will be extremely low, ranging from fifty cents to one dollar per month in the English branches. Special terms for music. The morals and manners of pupils will receive constant attention. Parents will find this a great advantage and we hope to receive a large patronage.

An Appeal.—We propose to begin this school in a modest way, using at first the building of the Colored Presbyterian Church, but we appeal to the friends of our people to help us in securing land and buildings suitable for such a school.

We pray that God will bless and magnify this undertaking in His name.

Respectfully,

E. M. Gilliard, Principal.

"RAGS AND TATTERS."

So the General Assembly characterizes the contributions of our churches to the Bible Cause. In the report of the committee on Systematic Beneficence as adopted by the Assembly at Lexington, this language occurs:

"As for the Bible Cause, with us it is in rags and tatters; it is put off with an average of a fraction over two cents per member, and yet, what can a missionary do in a foreign land without the Bible in the vernacular of the people to whom he goes?" Does the Bible Cause merit nothing better at our hands? Is the American Bible Society, our great agency for distributing God's Word among all people, which has done so much for us in the past and is now doing for us such a noble service, deserving such treatment from us? And are the golden opportunities now set before us for covering the earth with the knowledge of the Lord through His printed Word to be met with "rags and tatters?"

Our answer will be given in the collection for the Bible Cause ordered by the Assembly to be taken in all our churches on the third Sabbath in October. Beg pastors and sessions to consider the claims of this Cause, and urge their people to make contributions worthy of it. The American Bible Society greatly needs our help, and an open, eager, dying world cries to us for the Word of Life.

Thos. H. Law,

Chairman Assembly's Permanent Committee.

Spartanburg, S. C.

CLEAN CLOTHES.

Westminster School in King's Mountain Presbytery is primarily for poor boys and girls who could not go to the other preparatory schools of the State. And there are thousands of such. Its expenses for a year are from $60 to $75. Board last year averaged $4.85 a month. On a small scale an Industrial Department has been begun, in which the girls will be taught to cook, sew, launder, etc., and at the same time help pay their way through school. What is pressingly needed now, is a small laundry, not to cost over $100. This small outlay of money would enable many poor girls to pay towards their education, with their own labor, from six to twelve dollars a year—a big sum with many of them. In giving to this cause you are helping through the coming year, many a poor, willing girl to help herself towards an education. And how much better is this than making them objects of charity by a direct gift. May some willing steward of God be moved to erect this simple, yet sorely needed laundry.

We might add that Westminster School has four teachers and over 75 pupils, thirty of whom are boarders. Two of this number are candidates for the ministry to whom, (or to the Church) the school is giving free tuition. Write to Mr. J. F. Flack, Treasurer, Rutherfordton, N. C., or to Rev. W. R. Minter, Chairman of trustees, Shelby, N. C.

W. R. Minter.

ENCOURAGING PROGRESS.

An hour spent in the study of the last minutes of our General Assembly, reveals many facts that must be stimulating to those whose hearts are in the progress of the Kingdom.

First, as to conversions. The number added on examination throughout the whole Church during the past ecclesiastical year was 10,489, which is 4.45 per cent. of our total membership. This is 1,084 more additions than last year, a net increase of 43 per cent.

When we compare together the various Synods, we find Virginia first in the aggregate number of accessions on profession, but last in percentage. In the relative number of conversions the Synod of Texas leads with 6.33 per cent; that is to say, for every ten thousand members in her churches Texas added 633. Georgia is second with a percentage of 6.04. Virginia is last with a percentage of 3.47, or nearly one per cent. less than the general average throughout the Church. Arranged according to the relative number of accessions, the order of Synods would be as follows:

Texas, 6.33; Georgia, 6.04; Louisiana, 5.85; Alabama, 4.98; North Carolina, 4.75; Missouri, 4.59; Florida, 4.48; Arkansas, 4.17; South Carolina, 4.15; Mississippi, 3.74; Tennessee, 3.52; Kentucky, 3.51; Virginia, 3.47.

The two Presbyteries which had the largest number of accessions are Concord, with 417 and Atlanta, with 368. But the Presbyteries which had the largest relative number of additions are naturally in Texas, one of which, Western Texas, has a percentage of 9.70.

The First Church, Nashville, as is to be expected, leads in the number added on examination, with a total of 56. But a little church located in a little town that rejoices in the name of Kiam, in Texas, is a close second to the great church at Nashville, with a total addition of 51. First Greensboro and LaFayette, New Orleans, also welcomed as many as 50 into fellowship.

However, the net gain in the organized churches the past year is less than the previous five years. There were 68 churches organized and 38 dissolved, leaving a net increase of 30. While this is less than in previous years it is by no means so small as to cause alarm. It is a silent but eloquent exhortation for increased effort in our destitute territory.

Second, infant baptisms are on the increase, both absolutely and relatively. Last year there were 5,136 children who were allowed to embrace their covenant privilege and receive the sacrament of baptism. That is to say, for every ten thousand communicants within our Church 218 children received baptism. The previous year there were 4,868 infant baptisms, just 211 infants baptized among ten thousand communicants. There was a net gain last year of 7 per cent. in every ten thousand communicants.

Third, in the matter of Sabbath schools there is a measure of healthy and definite progress. During the past year there were 155,768 scholars in the Sabbath schools of our Church. There were 662 scholars in our schools for every thousand communicants in our churches. This is not a fact that will justify too much hilarity; but it is better than past conditions. The year previous to last, there were 149,482 scholars in all of our Sabbath schools. There were only 684 scholars in our schools for 1,000 communicants in our churches. There has been a net gain in one year of 44 scholars per one thousand communicants. Certainly this increase is cause for devout gratitude.

May we not believe that the progress in these three vital departments of church life are the first droppings of a shower of divine blessings that will result in a pentecostal revival throughout our Church and country?

D. W. Brannen.

Milligeville, Ga., September 25, 1903.

Please tell your readers that I am a hopeless "shut in." And to please send me their very old cancelled stamps and old broken bank bills. I now know where I can exchange them for medicine and things I so badly need. I gladly refer all as to my case to postmaster here, or our pastor. I do not ask for food or raiment, only for that which is being daily burnt and cast under foot. I am alone in the world, having no people living, and I know there are many old stamps if people would look them up.

Mrs. N. J. Robinett, Hodd, Va.

The World.

Booker T. Washington, head of the Tuskegee (Ala.) Institute, is in Paris.

The army and the navy now recognize "The Star-Spangled Banner" as the national anthem.

During the last seven years, Germany has laid 7,375 miles of cable, at a cost of over $7,000,000.

King Alfonso of Spain, it is said, is engaged to wed the Archduchess Eleanor of Austria, his cousin.

The differences between President Marroquin and the Colombian Senate have developed into an open rupture.

Denver's model charter, conferring upon the city direct legislation and civil service reform was defeated by about 7,000 votes.

The Brazilian Chamber of Deputies has passed a bill providing for an international steerable balloon competition at Rio Janeiro, in 1904, for a prize of $100,000.

Hon. Seth Low has been nominated for mayor of Greater New York by the Republican and Citizens' Union conventions, and his past administration endorsed.

Ex-Judge W. P. Bynum, of Charlotte, has donated to the University of North Carolina the sum of $25,000 for the erection of a gymnasium at the institution.

Prominent negroes will hold a suffrage convention at Washington this month. The blacks interested in the movement are waging war on Booker T. Washington.

Premier Balfour fired the opening gun in the political campaign in England in the shape of a speech at Sheffield, in which he outlined the Ministry's fiscal policy.

Sofia, Oct. 4.—Serious news has been received here from the frontier of fighting between Turkish and Bulgarian troops at Demir-Kappia, both sides sustaining losses.

The town of Frank, British Columbia, has been deserted, owing to the landslide down the Turtle mountain. This is the second one of the kind in a comparatively short time.

The exports from the Berlin Consular District to the United States for the quarter just ended amounted to $2,991,002, an increase of $558,814 over those of the third quarter of 1902.

Mgr. Guidi, Papal Envoy to the Philippines, has been recalled to Rome. The negotiations for the sale of the Friar lands will in future be conducted by the Vatican and the United States.

A permit has been granted to the Philadelphia, Washington and Baltimore Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad to build twin tunnels under the United States capitol. Electricity is to be the motive power.

Spencer's airship sailed from Crystal Palace, Sydenham, around St. Paul's Cathedral and over miles of the densely-built part of South London. The airship descended safely after a fairly successful flight at New Barnet.

The thirty-eighth annual conference of British Conservative Associations at Sheffield, England, developed radical differences of opinion on the preferential tariff scheme, but the majority of the delegates favored Chamberlain's policy.

There are in the County of London 2,334,456 females, of whom 719,351 are wage earners, more than half a million of whom are unmarried. The occupations followed by these female workers are said to cover the whole range of employment.—Exchange.

The syndicate organized to convert $200,000,000 of United States Steel 7 per cent. preferred stock into 5 per cent. sinking fund bonds expired to-day, according to the original terms; but by consent of a great majority of its members has been extended till July 1, 1904.

Laredo, Tex., Oct. 4.—There has been practically no change in the yellow fever situation during the past few days. The official bulletin to-day shows there have been four new cases and one death. The total number of cases to date is sixty-one while there have been five deaths.

Prof. W. J. McGee, the scientist, who has been in charge of the Bureau of American Ethnology of the Smithsonian Institution, has resigned his position with the bureau. Prof. McGee's work as an ethnologist and anthropologist has made him an international reputation.—Exchange.

The capture of Bumir, Nigeria by the British is reported; by this campaign nearly 500,000 square miles of territory has come under British rule and the abolishment of the slave trade is a natural result. In the city of Kano alone, as many as 500 men and women have been sold in a day.

Brig.-Gen. Joseph P. Sanger, Superintendent of the Philippine census, has completed the first accurate count ever made of the Filipinos, and finds from a preliminary reckoning that the population numbers 6,976,574, of whom 650,000 are included in the category of "wild tribes."

The question which is agitating all South Africa at present relates to a supply of laborers, not only for the mines, but also for commerce and agriculture. Johannesburg alone wants 50,000, perhaps 100,000 more workmen than it can secure. But it wants them at a low price, such as few white men will work for.

Statistics recently published by the Bulletin de l'Office du Travail of the strikes in France during 1902 show that more than half had for their object to obtain increases of wages; 111 times out of a total of 512 strikes this object was attained, 184 times there were compromises, and 213 times the strikers were unsuccessful.

Empress Carlotta, widow of Maximilian, who has been mad for thirty-seven years, is dying in her prison, Chateau de Bouchant. The latest news pictures her as still holding mock court daily, fancying herself empress of Mexico. Her attendants pretend that she presides over their entertainments.—Exchange.

A census report of the quantity of cotton ginned in the United States from the growth of 1903 up to and including Aug. 31 gives the following figures: Total commercial bales 17,587, including 16,991 square bales; 507 round bales of upland crop and 26 bales of Sea Island crop. The total gins in operation numbered 2,176.

Cardinal Ferrari, who attended the German Catholic Congress, took back with him to Milan as a present the bones of the three kings, Melchior, Gaspar and Balthasar, which were the most famous relics in the Cologne Cathedral. The legend is that the relics were taken away from a Milan church by Frederick Barbarossa's men, and the gift is intended as a restitution.

The Cunard Line steamship Lucania, which arrived in this city a day or two ago, reports that she was in wireless touch with different steamships all the way across the ocean. She talked with the St. Louis, the Aurania, the Campania, the Moltke, the Vaderland, the Minnetonka, the Saxonia, the Philadelphia, the La Bretagne, the Augusta Victoria, and the La Lorraine.

After formally announcing his resignation of the premiership in the Hungarian Diet, Count Hedervary asked the House to adjourn pending the constitution of a new Government. Immediately afterwards, Count Hedervary, with the other minsters, left the House. The President, Count Apponyi, however, ruled that the resignation of the Cabinet was not sufficient ground for an adjournment, and the House continued work.

London, Oct. 1.—Addressing a mass meeting at Sheffield tonight in connection with the conference with the national union of conservative associations, Premier Balfour delivered the speech which has been long heralded as the first heavy gun to be fired in the fiscal reform campaign, which is absorbing the attention of the United Kingdom, her colonies and, indeed, the whole world, and which has caused the present British cabinet crisis, the result of which it is impossible to foretell. Mr. Balfour, in the course of his speech, did not even hint at the successors in the cabinet to Mr. Chamberlain, Lord George Hamilton, and Mr. Ritchie. In fact, he did not mention the ministerial resignations, ignoring altogether that phase of the situation on which it was expected he would make some declaration.

It is gratifying to note that Lieut. Peary has received a leave of absence which will allow him to carry out his cherished hope of another trip in search of the pole. Instead of relying upon sails as the chief part of motive power, the explorer will depend almost entirely upon steam, sails only being used as an auxiliary. Peary's plan is to make his base on Grant Land, and winter at Cape Columbia, or some part further west. Some of the Eskimos will transport his party across the hummocky ice that exists between the 83d and 86th degrees of latitude. The men who are to make the dash for the pole are not to engage in any of this toilsome work, but are to preserve their energies for the last stage, which will be 300 miles long. The expedition will be small. In all probability it will not number more than twenty-five men—Scientific American.

The floor space in the Machinery Hall of the World's Fair, St. Louis, 1904, has been applied for some four times over. It is now practically finished and the adjoining Steam, Gas, and Fuel Building is over 60 per cent. completed. This latter building is a steel, fire-proof structure, measuring 326 by 300 feet. The total length of Machinery Hall is 1,000 feet and along more than one-half of this distance will be found prime movers constituting the power plant of the Exposition. It was originally supposed that 40,000 horse power would suffice to perform all the functions devolving upon a power plant at the Exposition; but more than 60,000 horse power is now planned for installation in the Machinery Building, and of this amount a trifle more than 50,000 horse power has been assigned work in the service of the World's Fair.

An announcement of interest to archaeologists is made in a Berlin dispatch of last week. According to the dispatch the Dictionary of the Ancient Egyptian Language, compiled by the Berlin Academy of Sciences, under the direction of Professor Erman, Germany's greatest Egyptologist, is nearly completed. The work is endowed by the Emperor. Professor James H. Breasted, Director of the Haskell Museum, University of Chicago, by special invitation assisted in the work, in which Mrs. Breasted also joined. It will probably surprise not a few to learn that the utterances of the Egyptians require 280,000 words for their expression in English. Very clearly the subjects of the Pharaoh's cultivated the use of the tongue more assiduously than has been supposed.—Christian Work and Evangelist.

United States Government holds in trust for the Indians, about $24,000,000 in money and about 116,000,000 acres of land. If this property were divided among them each person would have about $100 and 466 acres. Out of the 250,000 Indians 180,000 are self-supporting. The Government policy of continuing the reservation or agency system keeps about 3,000 offices for distribution by politicians and officeholders, and offers large opportunities for unscrupulous money making, which are abundantly used, as we are freshly reminded by recent disclosures. Mr. Wood urges that the control of Indian affairs should be placed in the care of one head, the commissioner, that he should be held to strict accountability and have such power given to him and such assistance as is necessary to discharge his duties. It goes without saying that the speedy abolition of the reservation and agency system is to be sought till it is attained. Congregationalist.

Sir Michael Herbert, the British Ambassador to the United States, died recently at Davos-Platz, Switzerland, after a long and plucky fight against consumption, which terminated with tragic suddenness. The first announcement of the Ambassador's untimely end was at this afternoon's session of the Alaskan Boundary Commission. The intense silence which followed the delivery of Lord Alverstone's tribute was broken by Jacob M. Dickson, of the American counsel, who voiced the American sorrow, and proposed an adjournment of the Commission. On all sides, American, Canadian and English, genuine sorrow was exhibited, which was evidently actuated by a sense of deep personal loss. Sir Michael had been at Davos-Platz about five weeks. When he returned to London from America he confessed that he felt far from well, but his physicians still held hopes of his conquering the consumption. The Ambassador expected to leave Davos-Platz a week or so ago, in order to greet the Alaskan Commissioners here, but he contracted bronchitis. Of this he wrote, only a few days ago, quite slightly, saying it was only annoying because on account of it the doctor insisted on his not going to London to see his American friends. Lady Herbert intended to leave Switzerland a short time ago with her children, but she apparently changed her plans and remained at Davos-Platz.

F. Steinhart, the United States consul-general at Havana, has just made an elaborate report which contains interesting information concerning the resources and products of Cuba. The report shows the remarkable progress and prosperity of the little republic during the past year and a half, while, on the other hand, it discloses the fact that the United States has not made any commercial gain in Cuba since the establishment of that republic. The consul-general finds that the importations from the United States into Cuba since 1899 have fallen off considerably, whereas importations from Germany, and from other countries in Europe, show a steady increase. We learn from the report that the imports into Cuba from the United States were only $26,053,395 in 1902, as against $29,181,700 in 1899. Meanwhile the imports into the island from Germany increased from $2,024,000 in 1899 to $3,612,038 in 1902. Spain still does considerable business with Cuba, altho its imports to the island decreased from $11,116,500 in 1899 to $10,105,816 in 1902. There has also been a decrease in the percentage of Cuban exports to this country. In 1899 the United States received 83 per cent. of the exports of Cuba, whereas last year only 76.2 per cent. came here. Mr. Steinhart does not blame the Cubans for this loss of trade to the United States, but he believes that the decrease is due to the refusal of American manufacturers to take advantage of the opportunity presented in Cuba.—Literary Digest.

For ages antiquary after antiquary found himself baffled by a simple problem at the Tower. How, in the old days, did the garrison get a supply of drinking water? The antiquary could show you the original fireplace at which William the Conquerer warmed his hands, could point approximately to the spot on which the murdered Princes fell; he could lead you to the place where Henry VIII's queens were butchered, and to the tombstones that collapsed upon their poor bones; he knew the tiny dungeon in which Sir Walter Raleigh spent twelve dreadful years hidden from the light; and could have you in a twinkling in the stone dog-kennel where still remains the ring to which they chained Guy Fawkes. But how these unfortunates and their janitors drank, none could tell. Then there came a thick-headed, unimaginative mason, to whom and his fellows the work of converting certain of the historic dungeons into storehouses for war material meant ninepence-halfpenny an hour and no more. His pick struck through the flooring of the corridor from which the prisoners used to enter their cells. Behind these latter and corresponding with the main one, ran, and still remains, the little secret corridor along which eavesdropping officers tip-toed to listen to conversations between captives, for the purposes of evidence. A few blows from the pick brought to light the mouth of a pit. Sixty feet down was water—thirty feet of it. The mason had happened upon the historic well for which search had been made in vain for centuries! It was as perfect as the day that the Conquerer sunk it. To-day it still carries its thirty feet of sweet spring water, and should ever the Tower be beleaguered, its garrison would still be independent of outside supply.—St. James Gazette.

Marriages.

FLETCHER-FULLBRIGHT.—In Presbyterian Manse, Jackson, Mo., Sept. 9th, 1903, by Rev. C. W. Latham, Mr. B. W. Flecher and Miss Alvenia Fullbright, both of Cape Girardiau, Mo.

ENGLISH-OLIVER.—In the Presbyterian Manse, Jackson, Mo., Sept. 20th, 1903, by Rev. C. W. Latham, Mr. W. C. English, Fort Stanton, New Mexico and Miss Margaret Oliver, Neely's Landing, Mo.

Deaths.

"I can not say, and I will not say,
That he is dead. He is just away,
With a cheery smile and a move of the hand,

He has wandered into an unknown land
And left us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be, since he lingers there,
And you, oh you! who the wildest yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return,

Think of him faring on, as dear
In the love of There as the love of Here;
Think of him still as the same I say,
He is not dead—he is just away."

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

BROWN.—Archibald Alexander Brown, departed this life July 1903, in the 23rd year of his age. He was the youngest child of Duncan and Flora Brown, and the great nephew of Rev. A. Currie. The circumstances of his death were peculiarly sad. For two years he had been a student of the A. and M. College and in order to obtain some practical knowledge of his chosen profession, civil engineering, as well as to help defray his expenses at college the ensuing year, he had secured a position with the Catawba Power Company and had been with them for five weeks. On the day before his death, he and his squad of hands had been moved from the quarry near by and assigned work on the coffer dam and in an effort to stop some cars that had broken loose and were in danger of going into the river, he was thrown with great violence from the dam against some timbers lower down and then into the water. It is supposed that his death was instantaneous. After considerable difficulty the body was recovered and brought home by a heart-broken brother and a cousin, who were working with him. On a beautiful Sunday morning, in the presence of a great concourse of friends and neighbors who came to mingle their tears with those of the bereaved ones we laid the body to rest by the side of the father to await the Resurrection morn.

The death of one so young, so energetic, so faithful, so filial, so manly, so full of promise, so earnest a Christian, is unspeakably sad for those who are left to mourn his loss and yet for him who is gone, death was just the gateway to higher spheres of usefulness and blessedness.

Then weep not, sorrowing ones; he is only gone on before and is waiting to welcome us into that land of pure delight where there is no more sickness, sorrow nor death, and where,
"Twill be passing sweet to gaze,
On Him in all His glory,
And lost in love and glad amaze
To sing redemption's story."

PASTOR.

The Household.

THE HOME AND ITS INFLUENCE.

The home and the family are closely associated with the larger and wider life that exists in the State, society, and the Church, and because of that association and its effects in its broader relations the consideration of that which will best promote its influence is not without importance.

When God called Abram to be the father of the theocratic people, and gave the promise that of him he would make a great nation, the relation of the family to the State was clearly evidenced. When Israel had become a mighty people of numerical importance, and of political, social and religious influence, she could still trace her origin to the little family migration setting out from Haran toward a new land. Later in the world's history when Roman power began to be exerted, a new state was erected that was built not on kindred but locality, nevertheless it had as its basis the family and the home. It was formed by the association of families of various localities into subject provinces or free States. Later still, when the Teutons won their conquests over Rome, another form of government was established, based on representation, but still the foundation of existence was to be found in the families which, associated together, were governed by their representatives. Under these three forms of the State all governments can be classified, and the family plays no small part in their existence and maintenance.

The same truth is revealed in the study of the great social body in its corporate life. It may be provincial or cosmopolitan in its character, but the family is its base and the necessity of its life. The morals of a community are determined by the morals of the home circle. The whole is not greater than its parts, is an axiomatic truth of mathematics, and its application emphasizes that the moral standard of a community cannot exceed the standards of its component parts in the family. The customs of society are regulated for the same reason by the customs of the household. Laws become effective when enforced by the sentiments of the governed. A law that is obnoxious to the citizens in their individual and family affiliations can never be enforced in their social or political relationships.

In the Church of God the family is its type as well as beginning. The kingdom of heaven upon earth began with the call of the father of Israel, and out of the family, contemporaneously with the development of the State, there grew the Church, and the individual family in the varied relations of its members was typical of that larger family of God. The later separation of Church and State, based on their distinctive spiritual and temporal purposes, did not separate the Church from its source. As it exists today the visible Church is made up of the collection of families of a community or the adherents of a creed, or those who espouse a certain form of ecclesiastical government. The disintegration of the family as an institution, or the weakening of its life, manifests its influence not only in the stability or weakness of the Church, but in the staunchness or laxity with which it performs its work.

Such being the far-reaching effects of the home, the home life becomes no slight question. Since in its bearings the national, social, and religious world is affected by it, its morals, practices, and religion ought to be beyond question. The stream polluted at its source bears its contaminating influence far along the course. The disregard of the requirements that are imposed in the home, is productive of lawlessness in the State. The failure to recognize the rights of the brother and sister leads to the undermining of the foundations of society. The laxity of religious belief and practice in the family circle tends to a lowered standard of spiritual vitality in the Church.

In order to the highest attainment and the most beneficent influence, Christ and his Gospel must enter in no small degree into the life of the family. His code of ethics as a basis of moral law, prepares the way for the growth of a strong moral character that will make itself felt in all its relations. His mandates and promises will provide motives for activity that will

Free Help to Sick and Weak.

Simply write Dr. Hathaway, of whom You Have all Heard, Just How You Suffer and he will tell you what to do to Quickly Cure Yourself at Home—Save Dr. Bills.

Eight Medical Books—A Small Library in Itself—Free to All—Send to the Doctor for the One You Want

There is no longer any need of giving out money for doctor fees to find out what diseases you have when you can write Dr. J. Newton Hathaway, the distinguished Southern specialist, and he will tell you for nothing; DR. HATHAWAY and as no man st His Knowledge is and higher in the Free to the Sick. profession of medicine and science than he does, what he tells you can be relied upon as being correct. In this way hundreds upon hundreds that we know of throughout the south have been cured, for this great doctor is not only an expert in knowing what you suffer from, but his cures are brought about in an entirely original way, along new lines, developed by him after two generations of years in the profession. The cures are now perfected for home uses, so he wants to hear from all men and women who suffer from any disease of the throat, lungs, heart, stomach, kidneys, bladder, female trouble, rheumatism, piles, prostatic trouble, blood poison, nervous debility, varicocele stricture, night sweats, weak back and all other affections of the nerves, muscles and glands. He will instantly stop all aches and pains, soreness and swelling; steady the nerves, arouse muscular energy, get the blood to circulating, put strength in the back and firmness in the tissues, and once again make you as determined and ambitious as of old. By writing to him joy and happiness can be brought into the home at no cost at all.

The doctor is also famous as the author of many medical books on chronic diseases that are standard among the profession, and these have now been issued in special editions for free circulation among the masses. Every person who is sick and every head of a family should have them for reference in case of an emergency, and this can be done by addressing Dr. J. Newton Hathaway, 16 Inman Building 22 1-2 South Broad street, Atlanta, Ga., telling him which book you want, and he will send it free at once. Altogether there are 8 of them, as follows: 1. Disease of the vital organs; 2. Throat, lungs, catarrh; 3. Female diseases (new edition); 4. Stricture; 5. Variocoele; 6. Blood poison (modern edition); 7. Kidney, bladder, rheumatism; 8. Nervous debility and weaknesses of men (enlarged new edition). Ask for the book you want and the doctor will send it to you, free; write him how you suffer, and he will tell you disease and the quickest way to be cured, free.

Make up your mind to write Dr. Hathaway the first spare moment you have since it costs nothing anyway; he will nurse you back to health and it will not be long before you are again hale and hearty.

productive of quickened energies and blessings. His teachings emphasized life will become powers of helpfulness. Consecration to his service will mark a nobility of career that will live in its influence to eternity. The family altar, the family prayer, the family love, the family life is the world's hope.

FLOWER WINDOW AND HOW TO OBTAIN IT.

The cuttings that have been made for the winter's window garden, and the seeds that have been sown, should now be taken up and put in the pots and boxes where they are to remain for the next six months, says the New York Tribune.

Where to put all these plants so that they may have the sunny exposure essential to their wellbeing is the next question, and to get as much benefit as possible from an asuitable window, therefore, is important. The metal brackets that come for wall lamps, if placed one above the other on the casement and painted with enamel paint to match the wood work, make excellent holders for pots, in which of which may be planted some blossoming plants and creepers, so that in a short time they will form a floral frame to the window. When watered, the pots being placed one above the other, catch each other's drippings, except the one at the bottom, which can be arranged for the front of the window may easily be converted into a verdant and flowering bank by placing the pots in—not on successive steps, or, rather, boxes, the top plank being left off of each step so that the pots can stand inside. This is an excellent arrangement, as the pots are concealed from view, and they can stand inside on a piece of tin, with the edges turned up to hold the moisture.

In potting plants, inexperienced persons are apt to fill the pot with earth to the top. This alone is the cause of many failures, as to insure good drainage the earth should be an inch, at least, below the sides of the pot. In fact, "luck," as it is called, with house plants, does not exist. It is intelligent care that produces good results, and a certain amount of real experience together with the perseverance that makes stepping stones of failures by discovering the causes of success. Drainage is the rock on which many people split in their care of house plants. In potting, care should be taken that the bottom of the pot has some porous substance which will retain moisture and yet permit the water to run through. A woman who has had great experience and success in window gardening says that she finds nothing better than a layer of "excelstor" fiber at the bottom of the pot.

Where window gardening is taken seriously, and new plants are propagated in a greenhouse, a box of earth should be placed in the cellar for use in the winter. The proper mixture is one-third garden loam, a third of leaf mold, and the rest well-rotted manure and sand, in equal proportions. Insects should also be destroyed, and there is nothing better than soap suds sprayed upon the plants once in a while to keep them clean. A little fertilizer is good occasionally, and tea leaves and coffee grounds help the growth put around the stalk.

It is not too late now to start bulbs for winter blooming. Chinese sacred lilies, which mature in a few weeks and require nothing but water and pebbles, are wonderfully satisfactory, and when in bloom make a beautiful table decoration. All bulbs should be started in the dark, whether planted in water or soil, as it encourages the roots to form first, and thereby greatly improves the flowers.—Exchange.

SEASONABLE RECEIPTS.

From "Boston Cooking School Magazine."
Lime Squash—Put a tablespoon of simple syrup (one pound of sugar boiled ten minutes with one pint of water) in a glass. Squeeze in the juice of two limes, and add a tiny pinch of baking soda and two tablespoonfuls of shaved ice. Fill with water, stir, and drink while effervescing. This can be varied infinitely. Crushed strawberries or cherries may be added or a few sprigs of fresh borage, which has the flavor of celery.

Iceland Shiver—Mix the juice of four lemons and two oranges with six tablespoonfuls of simple syrup. Fill a glass with shaved ice. Add four tablespoonfuls of the mixed juice and syrup, and sip with a spoon.

Russian Cup—Make a syrup of two pounds of sugar and three quarts of water. While hot add two large cucumbers, sliced. Let stand two hours and strain. Add a pint of strong tea and the juice of six lemons. Serve with cracked ice.

Parfait Amour—Wash some large white grapes, peel, and remove seeds. Half fill glasses with the grapes, then fill with crushed ice. With a spoon press the ice onto the grapes to bruise them and cause the juice to flow. Add a tablespoonful of lemon juice, the same amount of orange juice, and a tablespoonful of simple syrup. Let stand half an hour. Give a few stirs with a spoon, add a few strawberries, and fill the glass with water. Serve with a straw.

Peach Cup—Weigh ten pounds of peaches. Peel, cut in slices, and put in layers with sugar. Use one pound of sugar. Let stand two hours. Add two quarts of water, and strain through cheesecloth, pressing out all the juice. Add a pint of strawberries, in slices, or raspberries, and a few sprays of bruised mint. Pour onto a pint of cracked ice.

Dr. King's

Iron Tonic Bitters.

A judicious and faithful use of this flesh and blood maker will give to the angular form the beautiful rounded limb, and replace the pale, sallow cheek with the delicious bloom of youth.

Makes old people young, renews youth, builds up waste tissue, renovates the system, gives new energy. The best tonic known for old or young.

Makes Weak People Strong.

Restores Youthful Vigor.

Gives Refreshing Sleep.

The system needs some sort of a tonic. There's no one but that would be benefited by using the right kind of a tonic. This lack of energy and "tired feeling" is a common ailment at this season, and can be successfully treated without the aid of a physician.

Perhaps you have in mind some medicine you'd like to take. If you can get

Dr. King's Iron Tonic Bitters.

(the demand is so large sometimes the makers are behind orders) take that—don't hesitate. And, like all Dr. King's Medicines, it's always sold. No Cure, No Pay. $1.00 per bottle; three for $2.50.

Carolina and Northwestern Railway.

TIME CARD.

BLOWING ROCK ROUTE.

Effective November 24th, 1901.

NORTHBOUND	PASSENGER	MIXED
Chester, Leave	8 25 am	8 50 am
Yorkville, "	7 30 am	10 48 am
Gastonia, "	9 05 am	1 20 pm
Lincolnton, "	10 09 am	2 55 pm
Newton, "	10 54 pm	4 43 pm
Hickory, "	11 18 pm	5 50 pm
Cliffs, "	11 50 pm	7 03 pm
Lenoir, Arrive	12 35 pm	8 00 pm
SOUTHBOUND	PASSENGER	MIXED
Lenoir, Leave	2 10 pm	5 30 pm
Cliffs, "	2 54 pm	7 20 pm
Hickory, "	3 12 pm	8 10 pm
Newton, "	3 37 pm	8 45 am
Lincolnton, "	4 22 pm	10 09 am
Gastonia, "	5 27 pm	1 20 pm
Yorkville, "	6 32 pm	3 18 pm
Chester, Arrive	7 45 pm	5 20 pm

There's Health
—IN—
Lemon Juice.

Various experiments by eminent scientists have proven the great value of lemons in destroying the germs of typhoid and other fevers. Germs of diseases are deposited in the system by the failure of the bowels to act regularly. MOZLEY'S LEMON ELIXIR is an ideal laxative, made from the juice of pure lemons, and has no equal for cleansing the system of all impurities. It acts promptly on the bowels, liver and kidneys, and does not gripe or cause any unpleasantness. 50 cents per bottle at all drug stores.

Mozley's
Lemon Elixir.

Made of Lemons.

One of the greatest characteristics of the past and present day is

Individuality.

The individuality of the Stieff Piano is its chief charm. There is no other Piano just like the Stieff. Others try to imitate, but some how they fail to reach that "something"—that individuality characteristic of the Stieff Piano.

The Stieff Piano

enjoys still another "individuality" foreign to any other great make. It is sold direct to the user instead of to the retail dealer to resell. This "individuality" keeps the retail dealer's b'g profit in your home, and yet you secure an ideal piano; one that will meet every demand of the greatest pianist or most exacting musician. It costs no more than a medium grade, or more likely cheap thump box through the middle man.

STIEFF

SOUTHERN WAREHOUSES:

211-213 N. Tryon, & 22 W. 5th St.

C. H. WILMOTH, Mgr.

Charlotte, - - - - N. C.

ULCERINA.

The only cure for Chronic Ulcers on the market. The most reliable remedy known for Ring-Worms, Old Sores, Wounds of all kinds and chronic skin diseases. For sale by all druggists. Price 25 cents.

Manufactured by

R. G. ROZIER, M. D.,

LUMBERTON, N. C.

The Home Circle.

THE WITNESSES.

By Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews.

The old clergyman sighed and closed the volume of "Browne on The Thirty-nine Articles," and pushed it from him on the table. He could not tell what the words meant; he could not keep his mind tense enough to follow an argument of three sentences. It must be that he was very tired. He looked into the fire, which was burning badly, and about the bare little, dusty room and realized suddenly that he was tired all the way through, body and soul. And swiftly, by way of the leak which that admission made in the seawall of his courage, rushed in an ocean of depression. It had been a hard, bad day. Two people had given up their pews in the little church which needed so urgently every ounce of support that held it. And the junior warden, the one rich man of the parish, had come in before service in the afternoon to complain of the music. If that knife-edged soprano did not go, he said, he was afraid he should have to go himself; it was impossible to have his nerves scraped to the raw every Sunday.

The old clergyman knew very little about music, but he remembered that his ear had been uncomfortably jarred by sounds from the choir, and that he had turned once and looked at them, and wondered if someone had made a mistake, and who it was. It must be, then, that dear Miss Barlow, who had sung so faithfully in St. John's for twenty-five years, was perhaps growing old. But how could he tell her so; how could he deal such a blow to her kind heart, her simple pride and interest in her work. He was growing old, too.

His sensitive mouth curved downward as he stared into the smoldering fire, and let himself, for this one time out of many times he had resisted, face the facts. It was not Miss Barlow and the poor music; it was not that the church was badly heated, as one of the ex-pewholders had said, nor that it was badly situated, as another had claimed; it was something of deeper, wider significance, a broken foundation, that made the ugly, widening crack all through the height of the tower. It was his own inefficiency. The church was going steadily down, and he was powerless to lift it. His old enthusiasm, devotion, confidence—what had become of them? They seemed to have slipped by slow degrees, through the unsuccessful years, out of his soul, and in their place was a dull distrust of himself; almost—God forgive him—distrust in God's kindness. He had worked with his might all the years of his life, and what he had to show for it was a poor, lukewarm parish, a diminished congregation, debt—to put it in one dreadful word, failure!

By the pitiless searchlight of hopelessness, he saw himself for the first time as he was—surely devoted and sincere, but narrow, limited, a man lacking outward expression of inward and spiritual grace. He had never had the gift to win hearts. That had not troubled him much, earlier, but lately he had longed for a little appreciation, a little human love, some sign that he had not worked always in vain. He remembered the few times that people had stopped after service to praise his sermons, and to-night he remembered not so much the glow at his heart that the kind words had brought, as the fact that those times had been very few. He did not preach good sermons; he faced that now, unflinchingly. He was not broad minded; new thoughts were unattractive, hard for him to assimilate; he had championed always theories that were going out of fashion, and the half-consciousness of it put him ever on the defensive; when most he wished to be gentle, there was something in his manner which antagonized. As he looked back over his colorless, conscientious past, it seemed to him that his life was a failure. The souls he had reached, the work he had done with such infinite effort—it might all have been done better and easily by another man. He would not begrudge his strength and his years burned freely in the sacred fire, if he might know that the flame had shone even faintly in dark places, that the heat had warmed but a little the hearts of men. But—he smiled grimly at the logs in front of him, in the small, cheap, black marble fireplace—his influence was much like that, he thought, cold, dull, ugly with uncertain smoke. He, who was not worthy, had dared to consecrate himself to a high service, and it was his reasonable punishment that his life had been useless.

Like a stab came back the thought of the junior warden, of the two more empty pews, and then the thought, in irresistible self-pity, of how hard he had tried, how well he had meant, how much he had given up, and he felt his eyes filling with a man's painful, bitter tears. There had been so little beauty, reward, in his whole past. Once, thirty years before, he had gone abroad for six weeks, and he remembered the trip with a thrill of wonder that anything so lovely could have come into his sombre life—the voyage, the bit of travel, the new countries, the old cities, the expansion, broadening of mind he had felt for a time as its result. More than all, the delight of the people whom he had met, the unused experience of being understood at once, of light touch and easy flexibility, possible, as he had not known before, with good and serious qualities. One man, above all, he had never forgotten. It had been a pleasant memory always to have known him, to have been friends with him even, for he had felt to his own surprise and joy, that something in him attracted this man of men. He had followed the other's career, a career full of success unabused, of power grandly used, of responsibility lifted with a will. He stood over thousands and ruled rightly—a true prince among men. Somewhat too broad, too free in his thinking—the old clergyman deplored that fault—yet a man might not be perfect. It was pleasant to know that this strong and good soul was in the world and was happy; he had seen him once with his son, and the boy's fine, sensitive face, his honest eyes, and pretty deference of manner, his pride, too, in his distinguished father, were surely a guaranty of happiness. The old man felt a sudden generous gladness that if some lives must be wasted, yet some might be, like this man's whom he had once known, full of beauty and service, it would be good if he might add a drop to the cup of happiness which meant happiness to so many—and then he smiled at his foolish thought. That he should think of helping that other—a man of so little importance to help a man of so much! And suddenly again he felt tears that welled up hotly.

He put his gray head, with its scanty, carefully brushed hair, back, against the support of the worn arm-chair, and shut his eyes to keep them back. He would try not to be cowardly. Then, with the closing of the soul-windows, mental and physical fatigue brought their own gentle healing, and in the cold, little study, bare, even, of many books, with the fire smoldering cheerlessly before him, he fell asleep.

A few miles away, in a suburb of the same great city, in a large library peopled with books, luxurious with pictures and soft-toned rugs and carved dark furniture, a man sat staring into the fire. The six-foot logs crackled and roared up the chimney, and the blaze lighted the wide, dignified room. From the high chimney-piece, that had been the feature of a great hall in Florence two centuries before, grotesque heads of black oak looked down with a gaze which seemed weighted with age-old wisdom and cynicism, at the man's sad face. The glow of the lamp, shining like a huge gray-green jewel, lighted unobtrusively the generous sweep of table at his right hand, and on it were books whose presence meant the thought of a scholar and the broad interests of a man of affairs. Each detail of the great room if there had been an observer of its quiet perfection, had an importance of its own yet each exquisite belonging fell swiftly into the dimness of the background of a picture when one saw the man who was the master. Among a thousand picked men, his face and figure would have been distinguished. People did not call him old for the alertness and force of youth radiated from him, and his gray eyes were clear and his color fresh, yet the face was lined heavily, and the thick thatch of hair shone in the firelight silvery white. Face and figure were full of character, and breeding, of life lived to its utmost of will responsibility, success. Yet to-night the spring of the mechanism seemed broken, and the noble head lay back against the brown leather of his deep chair as listlessly as a tired girl's. He watched the dry wood of the fire as it blazed and fell apart and blazed up brightly again, yet his eyes did not seem to see it—their absorbed gaze was inward.

The distant door of the room swung open, but the man did not hear, and his head and face shining clear-cut like cameo against the dark leather, hand stretched nervelessly along the arms of the chair, eyes gazing gloomly into the heart of the flame, he was still. A young man, brilliant with strength, yet with worn air about him, and deep circles under his eyes, stood inside the room and looked at him a long minute—those two in the silence. The fire crackled cheerfully and the old man sighed.

"Father!" said the young fellow by the door, quickly.

In a second the man's whole posture changed, and he sat intense, staring, while the son came toward him and stood across the rug, against the dark wood of the Florentine fireplace, a picture of a young manhood which any father would be proud to own.

"Of course, I don't know if you want me, father," he said, "but I've come to tell you that I'll be a good boy, if you do."

The gentle, half-joking manner was very winning, and the play of his words was trembling with earnest. The old man's face shone as if lamps were lighted behind his eyes.

"If I want you, Ted!" he said, and he took his hand.

With a quick step forward the boy caught it, and then, with pretty impulsiveness, as if his childhood came back to him on the flood of feeling unashamedly bent down and kissed him. As he stood erect again he laughed a little, but the muscles of his face were working, and there were tears in his eyes. With a swift movement he had drawn a chair and the two sat quiet a moment, looking at each other in deep and silent content to be there so together.

"Yesterday I thought I'd never see you again this way," said the boy; and the father only smiled at him, satisfied as yet without words. The son went on, eager, stirred feelings crowding to his lips. "There isn't any question growing enough, there isn't any quarrel enough, to keep us apart, I think, father. I found that out this afternoon. When a chap has a father like you, who has given him a childhood and a youth like mine—"

The young voice stopped, trembling. In a moment he had mastered himself. "I'll probably never be able to talk to you like this again, so I want to say all now. I want to say that I know, beyond doubt, that you would never do anything, as I would, on impulse, or prejudice or from any motives but the highest. I know how well-balanced you are, and how firmly your reason holds your feelings. So it's a question between your judgment and mine—and I'm going to trust yours. You may know me better than I know myself, and anyway you ore to me than any career, though I did ink—but we won't discuss it again. It could have been a tremendous risk, of course, and it shall be as you say. I found out this afternoon how much of my life you were," he repeated.

The older man kept his eyes fixed on the dark, sensitive glowing young face, as they were thirsty for the sight. "What do you mean by finding it out this afternoon, Ted? Did anything happen to you?"

The young fellow turned his eyes, that were still a bit wet with the tears, to his father's face, and they shone like brown stars. "It was a queer thing," he said, earnestly. "It was the sort of thing you find in stories—almost like," he hesitated, "like Providence, you know. I'll tell you about it; see if you don't think so. Two days ago, when I—when I left you, father, I caught a train to the city and went straight to the club, from habit, I suppose, and because I was too dazed and wretched to think. Of course, I found a grist of men there, and they wouldn't let me go. I told them I was ill, but they laughed at me. I don't remember just what I did, or if I was in a bad dream, but I was about with them, and more men I knew kept turning up—I couldn't seem to escape my friends. Even if I stayed in my room, they hunted me up. So this morning I drifted to the Oriental, and shut myself up in my room there, and tried to think and plan. But I felt pretty rotten, and I couldn't see daylight, so I went down to lunch, and who should be at the next table but the Dangerfields, the whole outfit, just back from England and bursting with cheerfulness! They made me lunch with them, and it was ghastly to rattle along feeling as I did, but I got away as soon as I decently could—rather sooner, I think—and went for a walk, hoping the air would clear my head. I tramped miles—oh, a long time, but it seemed not to do any good; I felt deadlier and more hopeless than ever—I haven't been very comfortable fighting you." He stopped a minute, and his tired face turned to his father's with a smile of very winning gentleness.

The father tried to speak, but his voice caught harshly. Then, "We'll make it up," he said, and laid his hand on the boy's shoulder.

The young fellow, as if that touch had influenced him, gazed into the fire thoughtfully, and the big room was very still for a long minute. Then he looked up brightly.

"I want to tell you the rest. I came back from my tramp by the river drive, and suddenly I saw Griswold on his horse trotting up the bride-path toward me. I drew the line at seeing any more men, and Griswold is the worst of the lot for wanting to do things. So I turned into a side-street and ran. I had an idea he had seen me, so when I came to a little church with the doors open, in the first half-block, I shot in. Being Lent, you know, there was service going on, and I dropped quietly into a seat at the back, and it came to me in a minute, that I was in fit shape to say my prayers, so—I said 'em. It quieted me a bit, the old words of the service. They're fine English, of course, and I think words get a hold on you when they're associated with every turn of your life. So I felt a little less like a wild beast, by the time the clergyman began his sermon. He was a pathetic old fellow, thin and ascetic and sad, with a narrow forehead and a little white hair, and an underfed look about him. The whole place seemed poor and badly kept. As he walked across the chancel, he stumbled on a hole in the carpet. I stared at him, and suddenly it struck me that he must be about your age, and it was like a knife in me, father, to see him trip. No two men were ever more of a contrast, but through that very fact he seemed to be standing there as a living message from you. So when he opened his mouth to give out his text I fell back as if he had struck me, for the words he said were, "I will arise and go to my father.'"

The boy's tones, on the press and rush of his little story, were dramatic, swift, and when he brought out its climax, the older man, though his tense muscles were still, drew a sudden startled breath, as if he, too, had felt a blow. But he said nothing, and the eager young voice went on.

"The skies might have opened and the Lord's finger pointed at me, and I couldn't have felt more shocked. The sermon was mostly tommy-rot, you know—platitudes. You could see that the man wasn't clever—had no grasp—old-fashioned ideas—didn't seem to have read at all. There was really nothing in it, and after a few sentences I didn't listen particularly. But there were two things about it I shall never forget, never, if I live to a hundred. First, all through, at every tone of his voice, there was the thought that the broken-hearted look in the eyes of this man, such a contrast to you in every way possible, might be the very look in your eyes after a while, if I left you. I think I'm not vain to know I make a lot of difference to you, father—considering we two are all alone." There was a questioning inflection, but he smiled, as if he knew.

"You make all the difference. You are the foundation of my life. All the rest counts for nothing beside you." The father's voice was slow and very quiet.

"That thought haunted me," went on the young man, a bit unsteadily, "and the contrast of the old clergyman and you made it seem as if you were there beside me. It sounds unreasonable, but it was so. I looked at him, old, poor, unsuccessful, narrow-minded, with hardly even the dignity of age, and I couldn't help seeing a vision of you, every year of your life a glory to you, with your splendid mind, and your splendid body, and all the power and honor and luxury that seem a natural and fitting background to you. Proud as I am of you, it seemed cruel, and then it came to my mind like a stab that perhaps without me, your only son, all of that would—well, what you said just now. Would count for nothing—that you would be practically, some day, just a lonely and pathetic old man like that other."

The hand on the boy's shoulder stirred a little. "You thought right, Ted."

"That was one impression the clergyman's sermon made, and the other was simply his beautiful goodness. It shone from him at every syllable, uninspired and uninteresting as they were. You couldn't help knowing that his soul was white as an angel's. Such sincerity, devotion, purity as his couldn't be mistaken. As I realized it, it transfigured the whole poor place. It made me feel that if that quality—just goodness—could so glorify all the defects of his look and mind and manner, it must be worth while, and I would like to have it. So I knew what was right in my heart—I think you can always know what's right if you want to know—and I just threw my pride and my stubbornness into the street, and—and I caught the 7:35 train."

The light of renunciation, the exhaustion of wrenching effort, the trembling triumph of hard-won victory, were in the boy's face, and the father thought, as he looked at it, dear and familiar in every shadow, that he had never seen spirit shine through clay more transparently. Never in their lives had the two been as close, never had the son so unveiled his soul before. And, as he had said, in all probability never would it be again. To the depth where they stood words could not reach, and again for minutes, only the friendly undertone of the crackling fire stirred the silence of the great room. The sound brought steadiness to the two who sat there, the old hand on the young shoulder yet. After a time, the older man's low and strong tones, a little uneven, a little hard with the effort to be common-place, which is the first readjustment from deep feeling, seemed to catch the music of the homely accompaniment of the fire.

"It is a queer thing, Ted," he said, "but once, when I was not much older than you, just such an unexpected chance influence made a crisis in my life. I was crossing to England with the deliberate intention of doing something which I knew was wrong. I thought it meant happiness, but I know now it would have meant misery. On the boat was a young clergyman of about my own age making his first, very likely his only, trip abroad. I was thrown with him—we sat next each other at table, and our cabins faced—and something in the man attracted me, a quality such as you speak of in this other, of pure and uncommon goodness. He was much the same sort as your old man, I fancy, not particularly winning, rather narrow, rather limited in brains and in advantages, with a natural distrust of progress and breadth. We talked together often, and one day, I saw, by accident, into the depths of his soul, and knew what he had sacrificed to become a clergyman—it was what meant to him happiness and advancement in life. It had been a desperate effort, that was plain, but it was plain, too, that from the moment he saw what he thought was the right, there had been no hesitation in his mind. And I, with all my wider mental training, my greater breadth—as I looked at it—was going, with my eyes open, to do a wrong because I wished to do it. You and I must be built something alike, Ted, for a touch in the right spot seems to penetrate to the core of us—the one and the other. This man's simple and intense flame of right living, right doing, all unconsciously to himself, burned in to me, and all that I had planned to do seemed scorched in that fire—turned to ashes and bitterness. Of course it was not so simple as it sounds. I went through a great deal. But the steady influence for good was beside me through that long passage—we were two weeks—the stronger because it was unconscious, the stronger, I think, too, that it rested on no intellectual basis, but was wholly and purely spiritual—as the confidence of a child might hold a man to his duty where the arguments of a sophist would have no effect. As I say, I went through a great deal. My mind was a battle-field for the powers of good and evil during those two weeks, but the man who was leading the forces of the right never knew it. The outcome was that as soon as I landed I took my passage back on the next boat, which sailed at once. Within a year, within a month almost, I knew that the decision I made then was a turning-point, that to have done otherwise would have meant ruin in more than one way. I tremble now to think how close I was to shipwreck. All that I am, all that I have, I owe more or less directly to that man's unknown influence. The measure of a life is its service. Much opportunity for that, much power has been in my hands, and I have tried to hold it humbly and reverently, remembering that time. I have thought of myself many times as merely the instrument, fitted to its special use, of that consecrated soul."

The voice stopped, and the boy, his wide, shining eyes fixed on his father's face, drew a long breath. In a moment he spoke, and the father knew, as well as if he had said it, how little of his feeling he could put into words.

"It makes you shiver, doesn't it," he said, "to think what effect you may be having on people, and never know it? Both you and I, father—our lives changed, saved—by the influence of two strangers, who hadn't the least idea what they were doing. It frightens you."

"I think it makes you know," said the older man, slowly, "that not your least thought is unimportant; that the radiance of your character shines for good or evil where you go. Our thoughts, our influences, are like birds that fly from us as we walk along the road; one by one, we open our hands and loose them, and they are gone and forgotten, but surely there will be a day when they will come back on white wings or dark like a cloud of witnesses—"

The man stopped, his voice died away softly, and he stared into the blaze with solemn eyes, as if he saw a vision. The boy, suddenly aware again of the strong hand on his shoulder, leaned against it lovingly, and the fire, talking unconcernedly on, was for a long time the only sound in the warmth and stillness and luxury of the great room which held two souls at peace.

* * * * *

At that hour, with the volume of Browne under his outstretched hand, his thin gray hair resting against the worn cloth of the chair, in the bare little study, the old clergyman slept. And as he slept, a wonderful dream came to him. He thought that he had gone from this familiar, hard world, and stood, in his old clothes, with his old discouraged soul, in the light of the infinitely glorious Presence, where he must surely stand at last. And the question was asked him, worldlessly, solemnly:

"Child of mine, what have you made of the life given you?" And he looked down humbly at his shabby self, and answered:

"Lord, nothing. My life is a failure. I worked all day in God's garden, and my plants were twisted and my roses never bloomed. For all my fighting, the weeds grew thicker. I could not learn to make the good things grow. I tried to work rightly, Lord, my Master, but I must have done it all wrong."

And as he stood sorrowful, with no harvest sheaves to offer as witnesses for his toiling, suddenly back of him he heard a marvellous, many-toned, soft whirring, as of innumerable light wings, and over his head flew a countless crowd of silver-white birds, and floated in the air beyond. And as he gazed, surprised, at their loveliness, without speech again it was said to him:

"My child, these are your witnesses. These are the thoughts and the influences which have gone from your mind to other minds through the years of your life." And they were all pure white.

And it was borne in upon him, as if a bandage had been lifted from his eyes, that character was what mattered in the great end; that success, riches, environment, intellect, even, were but the tools the master gave into his servants' hands, and that the honesty of the work was all they must answer for. And again he lifted his eyes to the hovering white birds, and with a great thrill of joy it came to him that he had his offering, too, he had this lovely multitude for a gift to the Master; and, as if the thought had clothed him with glory, he saw his poor black clothes suddenly transfigured to shining garments, and, with a shock, he felt the rush of a long-forgotten feeling, the feeling of youth and strength, beating in a warm glow through his veins. With a sigh of deep happiness, the old man awoke.

A log had fallen, and turning as it fell, the new surface had caught life from the half-dead ashes, and had blazed up brightly, and the warmth was penetrating gratefully through him. The old clergyman smiled, and held his thin hands to the flame as he gazed into the fire, but the wonder and awe of his dream were in his eyes.

"My beautiful white birds!" he said, aloud, but softly. "Mine! They were out of sight, but they were there all the time. Surely the dream was sent from Heaven—surely the Lord means me to believe that my life has been of service after all." And as he still gazed, with rapt face, into his study fire, he whispered, gently, reverently: "Angels came and ministered unto him."—Scribner's for October.

Positions GUARANTEED BY A

$5,000 BANK DEPOSIT

Railroad Fare Paid. 500
FREE Courses Offered.
Board at Cost. Write Quick

GEORGIA-ALABAMA BUSINESS COLLEGE, Macon, Ga.

HIWASSEE ROUTE
Atlanta, Knoxville and Northern Railway.

SOUTHERN SCENIC LINE.

Short line between Atlanta, Ga., and Knoxville, Tenn., and between points in the Southeast and Northwest.

Low round trip rates to Mountain and Seashore Resorts. Why go to Switzerland or Colorado? For scenery the A, K. & N. Railway crosses the Great Smoky Mountains by the only standard-gauge loop line in the world; 2,000 feet above sea-level and 600 feet above the Hiwassee River.

For rates or information apply to
E. S. MILLER, T. P. A.,
18 N. Pryor St., Atlanta.
S. H. STOUT, General Agent, Knoxville
J. H. McWILLIAMS, G. P. A., Knoxville

ORGANIZED 1832.
THE
Virginia Fire and Marine Insurance Company

Of Richmond, Va.

Assets - - - $800,000.

Agencies in every Town and County.

WM. H. PALMER                      W. H. MCCARTHY,
PRESIDENT.    SEC'Y

F. K. ELLINGTON, GENERAL AGENT
RALEIGH, N. C.

E. NYE HUTCHISON, Agent
THOS. H. HAUGHTON, "
Charlotte, N. C.

SEABOARD

AIR LINE RAILWAY.

In Effect November 23rd, 1902

Vestibuled Limited Trains.

DOUBLE DAILY SERVICE Between New York

Tampa, Atlanta, New Orleans and points

SOUTH and WEST.

SOUTHWARD.

	Daily No. 31.	Daily No. 27.
Lv New York, P. R. R.....	12 55 p m	12 10 a m
Lv Philadelphia, ".....	3 29 p m	9 20 a m
Lv Baltimore, ".....	5 45 p m	9 34 a m
Lv Washington, W. S. Ry..	7 00 p m	10 41 a m
Lv Richmond, S. A. L. Ry..	10 37 p m	2 15 p m
Lv Petersburg, ".....	11 20 p m	2 58 p m
Lv Norfolk, ".....	1 55 a m	5 18 p m
Lv Henderson, ".....	2 28 a m	5 41 p m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	4 15 a m	6 58 p m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	6 16 a m	8 50 p m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	7 35 a m
Lv Columbia, †.....	10 25 a m	12 20 a m
Ar Savannah, ".....	2 35 p m	4 55 a m
Ar Jacksonville, ".....	7 00 p m	9 15 a m
Ar Tampa, ".....	6 45 a m	6 00 p m
	No. 33.	No. 41.
Lv New York, N. Y. P. & N.	† 7 55 a m	† 8 55 p m
Lv Philadelphia, ".....	10 16 a m	11 21 p m
Lv New York, O. D. S. S. Co.	† 3 00 p m
Lv Baltimore, B. & P. Co.		† 6 30 p m
Lv Wash'ton, N. & W. S. B.		80 p m
Lv Portsmouth, S. A. L. Ry	9 05 p m	9 25 a m
Lv Weldon, ".....	11 45 p m	11 55 a m
Lv Norfolk, ".....	1 55 a m	1 55 p m
Lv Henderson, ".....	2 28 a m	2 02 p m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	4 15 a m	3 45 p m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	6 16 a m	6 18 p m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	7 40 a m	9 45 p m
Lv Wilmington ".....		3 20 p m
Ar Charlotte, ".....	10 33 a m	10 32 p m
Lv Chester, ".....	10 30 a m	12 5 a m
Lv Greenwood, ".....	12 37 p m	3 25 a m
Lv Athens, ".....	2 52 p m	5 58 a m
Ar Atlanta, †.....	4 00 p m	7 35 a m
Ar Augusta, C. & W. C.....	5 40 p m
Ar Macon, C of Ga.....	7 20 p m	11 35 a m
Ar Montgomery, A. & W. P.	9 20 p m	6 25 p m
Ar Mobile, L. & N.....	2 55 a m
Ar New Orleans, L. & N.....	7 25 a m
Ar Nashville, N. C. & St. L.	1 30 a m	6 55 p m
Ar Memphis.....	4 15 p m	8 20 a m

NORTHWARD.

	Daily No. 32.	Daily No. 38.
Lv Memphis, N. C. & St. L....	12 45 n' n	8 00 p m
Lv Nashville, ".....	9 30 p m	9 30 a m
Lv New Orleans, L. & N....	8 10 p m
Lv Mobile, ".....	12 40 a m
Lv Montgomery, A & W. P..	6 45 a m	1 00 p m
Lv Macon, C of Ga.....	8 00 a m	4 20 p m
Lv Augusta, C & W. C.....	10 05 a m
Lv Atlanta, † S. A. L. Ry.....	12 00 n' n	8 00 p m
Ar Athens, ".....	2 57 p m	11 23 p m
Ar Greenwood, ".....	5 15 p m	1 58 a m
Ar Chester, ".....	7 17 p m	4 15 a m
Lv Charlotte, ".....	7 27 p m	5 01 a m
Lv Wilmington ".....	8 20 p m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	10 40 p m	7 50 a m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	11 33 p m	8 44 a m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	1 35 a m	11 15 a m
Lv Henderson, ".....	3 05 a m	12 50 p m
Lv Norfolk, ".....	3 50 a m	1 45 p m
Lv Weldon, ".....	5 00 a m	8 00 p m
Ar Portsmouth, ".....	7 15 a m	5 35 p m
Ar Washington, N & W S B		6 55 a m
Ar Baltimore, B. S. P. Co.....		† 6 30 a m
Ar New York, O. D. S. S. Co..		† 5 00 p m
Ar Philadelphia, N. Y. P. & N.	† 5 46 p m	5 10 a m
Ar New York, ".....	8 15 p m	8 00 a m
	No. 34.	No. 66.
Lv Tampa, S. A. L. Ry.....	8 00 p m	8 00 p m
Lv Jacksonville, ".....	9 30 a m	7 50 a m
Lv Savannah, ".....	1 40 p m	12 10 p m
Lv Columbia, †.....	7 05 p m	5 80 a m
Lv Hamlet, ".....	10 40 p m	8 40 a m
Lv Southern Pines ".....	11 33 p m	9 38 a m
Lv Raleigh, ".....	1 35 a m	11 50 a m
Lv Henderson, ".....	3 05 a m	1 10 p m
Lv Norfolk, ".....	3 45 a m	1 55 p m
Lv Petersburg, ".....	5 53 a m	4 07 p m
Ar Richmond, ".....	6 35 a m	4 55 p m
Ar Washington, W. S. Ry....	10 10 a m	8 36 p m
Ar Baltimore, P. R. R.....	11 25 a m	11 25 p m
Ar Philadelphia, P. R. R.....	1 36 p m	2 56 a m
Ar New York, P. R. R.....	4 13 p m	6 30 a m

R. M. COFFEY, C. T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C.

Our Young People.

WHY WILSON REFORMED.

"William," said Mrs. Barry one evening to her husband, "I caught Wilson smoking today." Wilson, be it explained, is the 12-year-old hope of the Barry family.

"I'll talk to the boy," said Mr. Barry.

He kept his word, and talked long and earnestly to his son, but without effect, for one night about two weeks later Mrs. Barry said:

"William, Wilson has been smoking again."

Mr. Barry does not believe in corporal punishment. Therefore, he talked to the lad once more. He called the boy to him and explained the folly of smoking, what an expensive habit it was, and how injurious to the health. "But you smoke," argued Wilson.

"I'm a man," replied the father. "Do you think you are a man?"

"I'm man enough to smoke."

"Not at 12 years of age," said the father. "However, you are stubborn about it, and I suppose you will have your own way in the matter. So, if you think you are man enough you may smoke as much as you wish."

Wilson went to bed that night slightly uneasy. He knew his father, and he expected something to happen.

The next morning Wilson did not come down to breakfast at the usual hours. His father called him.

"I can't come down," wailed a voice that sounded as if the owner might be on the point of tears.

"I can't find my clothes."

Upstairs the father went. His son was sitting on the edge of the bed, clad only in a night shirt.

"Why don't you dress?" asked Mr. Barry.

"I can't. Every stitch of my clothes is gone."

"There are clothes on that chair. Put them on."

"They're yours. I can't wear them. They're too big."

"Put them on."

Wilson looked at his father and obeyed, sobbing gustily.

"If you are big enough to smoke like a man you are big enough to wear a man's clothes. Hereafter you will dress to suit your assumed age. You may have the use of my wardrobe until you can get one of your own; but all clothing you buy must be of size and style appropriate to your adult condition. I will expect you downstairs at once."

With these words the father left the room. When Wilson appeared in the dining room he was a sight, the coat, vest, trousers, shoes, shirt and collar so much too large for him that despite his flushed, tear-stained face, his appearance was anything but pathetic. He had no appetite, but under the eye of his parents managed to choke down some food. Breakfast finished, Mr. Barry said:

"You seem awkward in the dress you are wearing. We will sit on the back porch and have a chat."

The porch was broad and cool, screened from neighborly observation by thick vines. It was altogether a desirable place to Wilson just then.

"Have a cigar," said Mr. Barry, politely, when they had seated themselves. "It's a pretty good cigar, though perhaps not as expensive as your brand. Here is a match. Take part of the morning paper and make yourself comfortable."

The boy took the cigar, and, impelled by an indefinable fear, lighted it, though he felt bashful and constrained. Then he tried to hide himself behind a section of the newspaper. But he had no peace. From time to time his father asked his opinions about the most peculiar things—tariffs, strikes, Balkan States, politics and finance. Not only were his opinions asked, but his father gently though firmly insisted upon starting long arguments on each subject, completely bewildering the boy. At first Wilson thought his father intended to sicken him by making him smoke too many cigars, but when the first was finished, and he was not pressed to have another, he abandoned that idea. His father merely said: "You know where the box is. Help yourself."

No more cigars did Wilson smoke that morning. A terror in his heart he floundered through discussions that meant nothing to him. Twice he saw and creep under the fence into forbidden territory, where there was a cat that was fond of rabbits raw. Each time he started up to drive the creatures back, and each time his father detained him and made some slighting remark about boyhood and the foolishness of maintaining useless animals. Once he heard the "gang's" shibboleth raised by his own particular chum. He was about to answer it when his father stilled the reply before it was uttered by descanting on the nonsensical cries boys adopted for signaling each other and on the great nuisance the yells were to sensible adults who liked quiet. Everything pertaining to youth was derided by the inexorable man, and he assumed that the boy agreed with him.

Dinner time came, and a most unhappy youngster was Wilson. His head ached from the awful talk about "grown-up" things. The clothing he was wearing was most uncomfortable. He had broken an appointment with his chum. His rabbits had not come back after their second excursion to the domain of death. His limbs ached through lack of exercise. What was his father's plan? What was coming next? He could not guess.

Dinner at 1 o'clock was the same as breakfast to Wilson—a mockery of a meal. Then came adjournment to the porch. The father offered another cigar to the son. Wilson broke down.

"I don't want it," he cried.

His father said nothing. After a while Wilson began to fidget; or, as he had been fidgeting all morning, his post-prandial actions may be described as the very hysteria of fidgets. He sat down. He stood up. He went to the end of the porch. He came back. He stood on one foot. He stood on the other. He looked at his father and he looked away from him. He started to speak and checked himself. He twisted his fingers together, and he did almost everything except stand on his head.

"What's the matter?" asked his father.

"Our baseball club has a meeting tomorrow afternoon in Brown's barn," replied Wilson, "and I'm to be elected captain. If I don't go to the meeting—"

"You are a queer man!" exclaimed Mr. Barry. "Haven't you got over baseball yet? Why do you want to be elected captain of a boys' club? By the way, do you believe the British will succeed in overthrowing the Mad Mullah?"

"I'm not a man!" cried Wilson. "I'm only a boy. Give me back my clothes and let me be a boy! I don't want to talk about Mullahs and strikes and money and things. I don't want to smoke. Give me back my clothes and let me be a boy and I'll never smoke as long as I live."

"My son," said the father, "when you are older, say in six years from now, you may smoke if you wish. Until that time, remember that you are a boy who was a man for a few hours and didn't like the experience. Go to your mother and she will give you your clothes."

Half an hour afterward Wilson and his chum were hunting the missing rabbits and arranging that the chum should be pitcher of the ball team when Wilson was captain. "And, say, Billy," remarked Wilson, "I've stopped smoking. I don't want to be a man too soon. It's no fun."—Public Ledger.

WHEN THEY MEET.

The American and the Englishman say:

"How do you do?"

The German: "How do you find yourself?"

The Frenchman: "How do you carry yourself?"

The Italian: "How do you stand?"

The Spaniard: "Go with God, Señor!"

The Russian: "How do you live on?"

The Hollander: "Have you had a good dinner?"

The Chinese: "Have you eaten your rice?"

The Egyptian: "How do you persepire?"

The Mohammedan: "Peace be with you."

The Persian: "May thy shadow never grow less."

The Burmese rub their noses against each other's cheek, exclaiming: "Give me a smell?"

Arabs of eminence kiss each other's cheeks and say: "God grant thee His favor and give health to thy family."

WHEN THEY PART.

The American and Englishman say: "Good-bye."

The Frenchman: "Au revoir."

The Austrian: "Auf wiederschen."

The German: "Lebe wohl."

The Turk solemnly crosses hands upon his breast and makes a profound obeisance.

The Russian form of parting salutation is brief, consisting of the single word "praschal," said to sound like a sneeze.

The genial Jap removes his slipper, and says with a smile: "You are going to leave my despicable house in your honorable journeying—regard thee!"

The Hindoo falls in the dust at your feet.

The Fiji Islanders cross two red feathers.

The Burmese bend low and say: "Hib! Hib!"

The South Sea Islanders rattle each other's whale teeth necklace.

In the Philippines the parting benediction is bestowed in the form of rubbing one's friend's face with one's hand.—The Presbyterian.

QUESTIONS TO THINK ABOUT.

If you are good at guessing or answering, here are a few questions you can wrestle with:

Why are all cow-paths crooked and none straight?

How old must a grape vine be before it begins to bear?

What wood will bear the greatest weight before breaking?

Can you tell why leaves turn upside down just before a rain?

Why does a horse eat grass backwards and a cow forward?

Why does a hop vine wind one way and a bean vine the other?

You can see any day a white horse, but did you ever see a white colt?

Where should a chimney be the larger, at the top or bottom, and why?

How many different kinds of trees grow in your neighborhood and what are they good for?

Can you tell why a horse when tethered with a rope always unravels it, while a cow always twists it into a kinky knot?—Exchange,

Boy's Composition on Parents.

Parents are things most boys have to look after them. Most girls also have parents. Parents consist of Pas and Mas. Pas talk a good deal about what they are going to do, but mostly it's Mas that make you mind.

Sometimes it is different tho. Once a boy came home from college on vacation. His parents lived on a farm. There was work to be done on the farm. Work on a farm always has to be done early in the morning. This boy didn't get up. His sister goes to the stairway and calls:

"Willie, 'tis a beautiful morninug. Rise and list to the lark."

The boy didn't say anything. Then Ma calls:

"William, it is time to get up. Your breakfast is growing cold."

The boy kept right on, not saying anything. Then his Pa puts his head in the stairway, and says he:

"Bill!"

"Coming, sir!" says the boy.

I know a boy that hasn't got any parents. He goes in swimming whenever he pleases. But I am going to stick to my parents. However, I don't tell them so 'cause they might get it into their heads that I couldn't get along without them. Says this boy to me:

"Parents are a nuisance; they aren't what they're cracked up to be."

Says I to him:

"Just the same, I find 'em handy to have. Parents have their failings, of course, like all of us, but on the whole I approve of 'em, and I hope good boys will continue to have 'em."—Exchange.

Odd Death of a Bird.

A curious instance of bird death is recorded by W. E. D. Scott in his recently published "Story of a Bird Lover." He tells a story of a Kingfisher who was shot, pursued his flight, apparently unhurt, for two hundred feet, and then dropped dead. Still, when the body was examined, there was no mark of a wound upon it, which gave rise to the possibility that a wild bird could be frightened to death. "I have seen the same thing happen many times since," continues the story. "I know now the reason for this. A single shot striking a bird in flight, penetrating the thin side of his body and entering his lungs, makes a very small hole and no external hemorrhage ensues. There is little or no shock to the bird; I fancy he hardly feels pain, but presently the internal hemorrhage from the great blood-vessels that have been severed makes him suddenly unconscious, and in a moment he is dead. The time, however, between the penetrating of the shot and the internal hemorrhage is sufficient to allow the animal to travel a very considerable distance seemingly uninjured."

The Best Traveling Companion

is Hicks' Capudine. Prevents and cures headache, sea-sickness, colds, grip, etc. Take a bottle with you when you start.

AT ALL DRUGGISTS, 10c., 25c., 50c.

Fire Insurance

Every Owner of Household Goods, Dwellings, or Business Houses, in North Carolina should be protected against loss by fire and every North Carolinian should procure that protection from a North Carolina Company. The PIEDMONT has

Over one hundred agents in the State

And ranks first with the strongest companies in existence. its policy is as near perfection as it is possible to make. Patronize The PIEDMONT and keep your money in the State. If you do not know our representative in your vicinity, write to home office. We will acquaint you with him, and give you any desired information by return mail.

ASK FOR OUR POLICY

The PIEDMONT
FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CHARLOTTE.

HENRY M. McADEN, President.

B. D. HEATH, Vice President.

A. L. SMITH, Secretary.

Mellon's
Fall and Winter
Clothing
IS NOW READY.

That which has been passed upon and stamped fashionable for the service of men who care to be well dressed this fall and winter, now grace our counters. For weeks we have been earnestly at work receiving from the tailors and arranging for your inspection the new clothing lines; and now that all is in readiness we bid you come your first opportunity and view the new styles in all their freshness and beauty. It is a splendid showing of men's apparel with few equals.

Ed. W. Mellon Company.

Oldsmobiles

BEGINNING AUGUST 1st, we can make deliveries in 10 days or less, and the price, with wood

wheels F. O. B. Detroit, will be.....$650.00

Osmond L. Barringer

Distributing Agent

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA

TURN ABOUT.

* * *

The horse and the dog had tamed a man and fastened him to a fence;
 Said the horse to the dog, "For the life of me I don't see a bit of sense
 In letting him have the thumbs that grow at the sides of his hands, do you?"
 And the dog looked solemn and shook his head, and said, "I'm a goat if I do."
 The poor man groaned and tried to get loose, and sadly he begged them: "Stay!"
 You will rob me of things for which I have use by cutting my thumbs away!
 You will spoil my looks, you will cause me pain! Ah, why would you treat me so?
 As I am God made me, and he knows best! Oh, masters, pray let me go!"
 The dog laughed out and the horse replied, "Oh, the cutting won't hurt! You see,
 We'll have a hot iron to clap right on, as you did in your docking of me!
 God gave you your thumbs and all, but still the Creator, you know, may fail
 To do the artistic thing, as he did in furnishing me with a tail!"
 . . . . .
 So they bound the man and cut off his thumbs, and were deaf to his pitiful cries,
 And they seard the stumps and they viewed their work through happy and dazzled eyes.
 "How trim he appears," the horse exclaimed, "since his awkward thumbs are gone!
 For the life of me I cannot see why the Lord ever put them on!"
 "Still it seems to me," the dog replied, "that there's something else to do;
 His ears look rather too long to me, and how do they look to you?"
 The man cried out, "Oh, spare my ears! God fashioned them as as you see,
 And if you apply your knife to them you'll surely disfigure me!"
 "But you didn't disfigure me, you know," the dog decisively said,
 "When you bound me fast and trimmed my ears down close to the top of my head!"
 So they let him moan and they let him groan while they cropped his ears away,
 And they praised his looks when they let him up, and proud indeed were they!
 But that was years and years ago, in an unenlightened age!
 Such things are ended now, you know; we have reached a higher stage!
 The ears and thumbs God gave to man are his to keep and wear,
 And the cruel horse and dog look on and never appear to care.
 —Our Dumb Animals.

E. M. ANDREWS,

The Old Reliable

THREE LARGE STORES IN ONE

REMEMBER I HAVE MOVED.

Headquarters Greensboro, N. C

Our money is made in the buying. You save in the same proportion when deal with Andrews.
 Visit our mammoth store in person, or you should write us for catalogue and prices.

Royal & Borden's Royal Elastic Felt Mattress is the best.

WE PAY THE FREIGHT.

E. M. ANDREWS, 315, 317, 319 South Elm Street.

Pianos Organs, Carpets, Matting.

Southern States Trust Company

Capital,
 $200,000.

GEORGE STEPHENS, President.
 T. F. FRANKLIN, V.-President.
 W. H. WOOD, Treasurer.

A Co-worker

This is what your money becomes when you put it on deposit in our Savings Department.
 We pay four per cent. interest and compound it quarterly.

Mid Summer Cut Price Sale

of

Furniture, Carpets,
 Pianos and Organs,

Wonderful Bargains can be had at this Store during this Cut Price Sale.

Everything Without Reserve is reduced in Price to the Lowest Price to sell the Goods and make room for the Changes now going on in our store. Come and See Us in Person, but if you can't come, you will get some reduction if you order by mail. Don't fail to grasp this opportunity to save money.

Parker-Gardner Company.

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA.

Our Little Folks.

THE SENTENCE OF THE BROWN OWL.

By Jean M. Thompson.

Little Mary Elizabeth had a garden of her own. Such beautiful flowers grew therein—four o'clock, lady-slippers and great yellow marigolds. Quite apart from these commoner flowers grew her especial pride—a beautiful damask rose. Moreover, it was covered with buds, and on the very top was one full-blown rose. Mary visited her garden every day and dug in it a little. One day after study hour she came dancing down the garden walk, her yellow braids flying and her apron strings trailing behind. When she reached the rose-bush she stood on tiptoe and bent down the small branch whereon blossomed the one rose. Just as she did so a yellow lady-bug with black spots, that had been hiding in the rose, spread its wings and flew hurriedly away.

"Oh, you wretched, spotted lady-bug," exclaimed Mary, "you've eaten the very heart out of the first rose on my bush. Yes, every leaf has a hole in it," she cried in vexation.

"My, how I wish you could be punished somehow for eating my beautiful rose. I intended to give that rose to Mama. Oh, dear," she sighed. "There may be more roses to-morrow, but if old Miss Lady-Bug eats a hole in every leaf as she did to-day, she will ruin them all."

Mary Elizabeth had a big, red apple in her apron pocket; she had almost forgotten about it, but now she was thankful enough for it. So she climbed into the hammock swinging beneath the oak tree, and began to munch her apple contentedly. It certainly was most comforting. There were lots of bees humming about in the air. They made such a pleasant droning sound. Mary kindly tossed them the core of her apple, which was instantly pounced upon by a band of yellow hornets. The hammock was very restful and swayed gently in the summer air. Mary settled herself among the hammock pillows and watched the efforts of a thin blue wasp who was endeavoring to drive away the yellow hornets from the apple core.

Mary was not at all surprised at last to hear them speaking sharply to each other in very thin, piping voices. Soon she became aware of other voices, and an occasional snatch of song. Mary noticed for the first time a mole, with the softest gray coat, and a pink star on his nose, in earnest conversation with a large, hard-shelled June-bug. The June-bug had such a cold he could barely speak.

"Yes," he was saying hoarsely, "my cousin Dormouse gives her musicale to-morrow. Ker-choo," and he sneezed violently. "Such a pity," he continued, "I cannot take part on account of this distressing cold."

"You see," he panted, "everybody is laid up—all the singers—why, I couldn't even hum the scale." Here he stood very erect and tried his voice, but succeeded only in making a burring noise.

A guinea-pig joined them, and an orange-and-brown striped caterpillar crawled slowly into the group. A very dusty brown sparrow hopped down from a nearby twig; Mary thought every minute he would devour the caterpillar of June-bug, but instead they exchanged the pleasantest greetings.

"We were discussing the Dormouse musicale," explained the ground-mole, who spoke in quite a smothered voice,

"Is the programme made out?" he inquired, eagerly.

"Why, yes," replied the sparrow. "My cousin, the sea-robin, is the deep bass, for one. But I find he, too, has influenza. Its epidemic, you know."

"Why, here comes Mme. Cricket, our prima donna, and Cousin Dormouse, too," interrupted the mole. "Now we shall hear all the latest news," remarked the sparrow.

"Oh," panted the dormouse, gratefully accepting a plantain leaf and beginning to fan herself vigorously, while Mme. Cricket hopped about fussily arranging her wings, "I am in such a predicament, my dears. Invitations all out for my musicale, and now all the talent are down with the influenza, all excepting dear Mme. Cricket; she has kindly consented to sing and, just for the occasion, to put off her mourning, and wear a pink evening gown. It was to be made of rose leaves; you know the damask rose belonging to the little girls with the yellow pigtails—"

"She must be some relation to our family," broke in the guinea-pig eagerly.

Mary felt quite indignant that he should infer such a thing, and the caterpillar was so overcome by the joke that he instantly rolled himself into the tightest little brown ball.

"Pray don't interrupt me again," spoke up the dormouse, touchily. "What was I saying?" she continued. "You'd begun to tell about the rose leaves for my gown," chirruped the cricket sweetly.

"To be sure, my dear."

"And Mme. Cricket has such a charming song to sing," broke in the ground-mole, who never liked anybody to stick to one subject long.

"Would you mind humming a few lines, Mme. Cricket?"

"It's so cheerful; we all have influenza, which is so depressing."

"Let's hear the song!"

"Give us the song!" they all shouted eagerly.

Mme. Cricket hopped gracefully to a larger, brown toadstool, and after arranging her shining black wings coquettishly, began her song in a very high, screechy voice:

"I sing all day for the butterflies' ball;
Summer days, as they dance in the breeze,

And I trill in the eve when night shadows fall

While the whippoorwill calls in the trees."

Chorus:—

"I trill, trill, trill in the sunshine bright,

By the brook, where the cat-tails grow tall,

And I shrill, shrill, shrill by pale moonlight

On the hearth, when night covers all.

"When Winter winds blow fierce and strong,

When snow covers wide the earth,
Still I chirp and sing the whole day long.

In my warm nest under the hearth."

(Chorus.)

Everybody joined in the chorus, and when the song was finished the applause was so loud that a little brown owl whom Mary had not seen before but who had been asleep all the time on a limb over her head, flopped down to learn the cause of the commotion.

"Now finish about Mme. Cricket's gown, and the rose leaves," said the ground-mole, stroking his whiskers, and casting admiring glances at the cricket, who had modestly retired to the shade of a burdock leaf.

"Oh, where was I?" began the dormouse, piteously. Mary thought she seemed to be very forgetful and absent-minded indeed.

"You'd got as far as the rose leaves," said the caterpillar, slowly unrolling himself.

"Mme. Cricket and I went to select the rose leaves," went on the dormouse, monotonously; "it takes just four leaves for the costume," she explained, "and what do you think; that spiteful Miss Lady-Bug, her cousin, had been there that day, and eaten a hole in every leaf."

"What a shame!" they all cried in chorus.

"Why," said the sparrow, "she destroys everything beautiful. I heard the little girl Mary—"

At this the little brown owl, who had been dozing, with one eye open, seemed to rouse himself. He began by flicking one wing nervously. Finally he opened both eyes slowly, and widely, until they shone like great yellow moons.

"The little girl Mary said," went on the sparrow pecking at the caterpillar, absent-mindedly, whereupon he instantly became a ball again, "that the lady-bug should be punished."

"Punished, punished," drowsily murmured the owl, scratching his ear with one claw thoughtfully.

"Yes. Punished, or banished, or something done to stop her wholesale destruction of all the beautiful flowers," broke in the caterpillar, unrolling his head cautiously and keeping a watchful eye upon the sparrow. "Why, even I never get a leaf but it's second-hand, nowadays," he added tearfully.

"If you wouldn't all speak at once," said the owl, now coming wholly out of his trance. "It confuses one so. Especially when you represent the law. It's plainly a case. And I have an idea." He flopped clumsily over to the great toadstool, whereon he perched. After ruffling up his feathers he yawned prodigiously; then slowly doubling up one claw into a very tight knot, he drew it up into his vest. It seems the owl was the head of the court in that kingdom. So they all formed a circle about the toadstool and waited in respectful silence for him to continue.

"Fellow Citizens: You have all heard the complaint lodged against the lady-bug. We hear how she wantonly destroyed the rose planted by the little girl with yellow pigtails down her back, known as Mary Elizabeth, and in so doing ruined the costumes of Mme. Cricket, the prima donna. I will now pronounce a sentence upon the lady-bug, whereby she shall be restrained from her evil ways—"

"Hear! Hear!" shouted the audience vociferously.

A woodpecker rapped lodly with his beak for silence.

"I order," continued the owl, waving his claw impressively, "that whenever the lady-bug alights upon a flower or shrub, and tarries there beyond reasonable resting time, she shall be doomed to hear a voice that shall warn her to instant flight. In case she disregards this warning," he continued solemnly, "she shall find her house on fire and her children perishing in the flames."

Everybody cheered and hopped about in the liveliest manner over the sentence pronounced by the owl upon the lady-bug. Mary was very happy, too, and jumped about so wildly that the hammock rope broke, and down she came to the ground—pillows, and all. But very wide awake. Had she been dreaming? Surely not. She glanced up into the branches of a pine ree near by, and there sat a little brown owl, balancing himself on one foot; blinking, blinking in the sun.

A brown-and-orange striped caterpillar was hurrying up the trunk of a tree. And there, sure enough, was the apple core drawn almost out of sight into the hole of a ground-mole.

"Well, I don't care," exclaimed Mary Elizabeth, rubbing her eyes, "I'm very glad it's all clear now, and everything settled so satisfactorily. And, beside, I shall always know why it is the lady-bug will fly home so quickly when you say:

Lady-bug, lady-bug, fly away home,
Your house is on fire, and your children will burn."

—The Delineator.

THE DOG AND THE PARROT.

Grandpa Jenks' farm, where Flo and Harry were visiting, was not far from New York city. One morning Grandpa Jenks said, "Harry, to-day we'll take Frolic to see a parrot that is smart enough to earn his own living."

"Where shall we find such a parrot?" cried Harry.

"Every day, on the New York side of the ferry, I pass a place where a parrot does a thriving business," was Grandpa Jenks' reply.

After dinner grandpa and Flo and Harry and Frolic went over the ferry into New York, and there, near the ferry, almost at once the children noticed a throng of men and boys around a little booth at a street corner, and all seemed to be watching something curious and amusing. As they drew nearer they saw that the booth was a news-stand—a news-stand that appeared to be tended only by a fine green parrot.

The green parrot walked about over the piles of newspapers, calling out: "Paper, sir? Paper, sir? Extra Sun?"

Grandpa Jenks and his young people stopped to look on. Every few moments some man would come up, take a paper and toss two cents into a little box, upon which the green parrot kept an eye all the while. At such times the bird stopped, nodded his head, and said, "Thankee." Then he began shouting again, "Paper? Extra Sun?"

"Is it possible that the parrot keeps the stand alone?" cried Harry. "Suppose somebody should cheat him by taking more than one newspaper without paying for them, how would he know?"

"No one better try it," answered grandpa. "Once a boy tried to steal two Telegrams, but the parrot pounced upon him and gave him such a pecking and mauling that he was glad to drop them. But of course, the parrot has a partner. Don't you see him?"

In the rear of the booth there was a lad about Harry's age. He had nothing to do, however, but to watch the papers and the box and to come forward and make change now and then.

Grandpa gave Frolic some pennies, and pointed to the two piles of paper to show that he wanted one of each. Frolic knew how to buy things. Besides, he had been observing the scene closely. He flew from Harry's shoulder to the stand in his blue cloak and cap and hopped along on one leg holding the money tightly clasped in his other claw.

The parrot newsdealer was very much surprised to see his queer customer, and was on the point of driving him off. But when he saw the other parrot gravely drop the pennies into the box just as all his patrons did, he smoothed down his feathers again and said, "Thankee," as usual,

HIGH HATS AND LOW HATS
Broad Hats and Narrow Hats
STIFF HATS AND SOFT HATS

EVERY SHAPE AND STYLE OF HAT THAT'S CORRECT

There is a great deal in habit in the matter of hats, as in other things. Some men have the habit of paying $5.00 for their hats. This is manifestly a bad habit, when you can buy as good a hat here for $3.00 You can get the regulation hat styles at any good store, but we go a step further; we not only show you all the regular styles, but we have all the variations and the exclusive styles. It will please you to place your head in one of our hats.

LONG-TATE CLOTHING COMP'Y

42 South Tryon Street, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Goods sent on approval returnable at our expense.

NOTABLE NEW BOOKS.

A limited number of advanced subscriptions will be accepted at Special Prices for following new books to be issued on or before September 1, 1903.

Life and Letters of ROBERT LEWIS DABNEY, D. D. LL. D.

By THOMAS CAREY JOHNSON, D. D. LL. D.

Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Polity Union Theological Seminary, Richmond Va.

A notably interesting book about one of the most remarkable men the South has produced. Interesting alike to historical students of social, political, and industrial conditions of the South, to Southern Veteran and Statesmen, to students of Theology and Philosophy, and to those who wish to be fully informed about the history and development of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

600 Pages. Cloth Binding, Regular Price $2.50 Net (add 18c for Postage.) To Advance Subscribers $2.00 Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

"APOLOGETICS,"

Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D., LL.D. Prof. of Systematic Theology Louisville Seminary. Introduction by B. B. WARFIELD, D. D., LL. D., of Princeton Theological Seminary.

A clear, systematic statement of the great fundamental truths of the Christian faith. Adopted as a text book in some of the best Seminaries of the country.

180 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $2.50 Net; Sheep, $3.00 Net [add 18c. Postage]. To advance subscribers, cloth $2.00; sheep, $2.50 postpaid. Limit 500 copies.

PIONEERING IN AFRICA.

By Rev SAMUEL PHILLIPS VERNER, A. B.,

for six years a Missionary of the Southern Presbyterian Church on the Congo.

This book is out of the usual order, and is at once scientific, historical, critical and religious. A notable contribution to the literature about a great continent which is coming more into view every year. Illustrated with original photographs and maps not hitherto published.

450 Pages. Cloth. Regular Price $2.00 Net [add 15c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.75 Net Postpaid. Limit 500 Copies.

Christianity and Modern Evolution.

By Rev. FRANCIS R. BEATTIE, D. D.

The remarkably original and forcible course of lectures delivered in Louisville, Ky., before very large and highly edified audiences have been revised, and are now presented in an attractive form for the benefit of a larger public.

250 Pages. Regular Price, Cloth, $1.25 Net [add 10c. for Postage]. To Advance Subscribers $1.00 net Postpaid. Limit 300 Copies

A complete list of our publications sent on request. Any book in print furnished on short notice. Write us about your wants.

PRESBYTERIAN COMMITTEE OF PUBLICATION, Richmond, Va.

WOOL

Ship Direct to the Manufacturer and Save Dealers' Profits.

They pay freight on the wool and guarantee satisfaction.

In exchange for goods they pay 25 cents per pound for unwashed and 35 cents per pound for washed wool.

If you have wool to sell for cash, exchange for goods, or to be manufactured, ship it to CHATHAM MFG. CO., ELKIN, N. C., and you will not regret it.

while Frolic dragged away a paper from each pile in his beak.

Harry and Frolic were talking now with the boy, who told them the bird's name was Ned (and Frolic thought he would be friendly, too. "How do you do?" he called out politely. The other bird looked at him sharply, and then croaked out: "No time to chat! You clear out! Paper, sir? Extra Sun? Telegram?")

Presently a messenger boy stopped to watch the droll newsdealer. Ned's bright eyes always saw whatever was going on. As soon as he caught sight of the boy's uniform he screamed, "Hi, Buttons, hurry along! No idling here!"

"Oh, please!" put in Frolic.

Ned cocked his eye at him, "You clear out!" he croaked. Then, turning to the messenger boy again, he remarked: "Come, hurry along! Hurry along!" tell the little fellow how to go.—Exchange.

THE ORGAN OF PUMPKIN PIE.

Once upon a time—a long while ago, children—there lived a wise old man who was always trying to see what he could discover.

Having made several perpetual-motion machines, and one or two airships, he was walking through the fields to avoid his creditors, when he came upon a pumpkin.

"This," he said to himself, bending down and feeling of the yellow orb, "is a vegetable growth; but I firmly believe that it acquires its hue from small particles of gold which it extracts from the earth."

So he put the pumpkin on his shoulder and took it home, telling all anxious inquirers that he was going to discover how to extract the gold from it.

At home, in spite of all his wife said, he cut the pumpkin up, and put it in a pot and boiled it—only he argued that he was melting it.

When at last it was a pulpy mass, he poured it out of the pot and right on top of a pan of dough that his wife had rolled out for the purpose of making a dried-apple pie.

Now you know the kind of a wife he had, do you not? A woman who will feed her husband on dried-apple pie deserves to be married to two or three inventors, doesn't she?

And so he put the pumpkin and the dough into the oven, asserting that he would harden it with the heat and produce a solid sheet of gold, and be so rich that he could afford to run for office on a reform ticket.

But, bless you! when the pumpkin and the dough came out of the oven it was not a solid sheet of gold at all, but a rich, golden, tantalizing section of goodness.

And the poor inventor was hungry, so he bit into it.

A few moments later several of his creditors broke into the house and came upon him, crying, "Look here! Where is all that gold you were going to get for us?"

And he never even looked up at them, but kept right on eating, saying, "Who cares for gold? (Bite, bite. O-o-o-oh!) Who cares for gold? Men, I have discovered pumpkin pie!"

And the creditors sat down also and ate, and they, too, were happy ever after.

So now, when you eat pumpkin pie you should be glad that the poor inventor did not succeed in making gold of the pumpkin. For if he had the pumpkin might never have gone further than to fill your teeth.—Judge.

The Dull Side of Riches.

A little street waif was taken once to the house of a great lady and the childish eyes that had to look so sharply after daily bread were dazzled by signs of splendor on every hand.

"Can you get everything you want?" the child asked the mistress of the mansion.

"Yes, I think so," was the reply.

"Can you buy anything you'd like to have?"

The lady answered, "Yes."

And the child, who was of a meditative turn of mind, looked at her half pityingly and said wonderingly, "Don't you find it dull?"—Exchange.

DREAMS.

(By Henry Jerome Stockard.)

The things that goodliest, most enduring, seem,
For which some strive forever here,
and die—
Houses and land and gold and pageantry—
Are fashioned of the substance of a dream,
The cloud-built palace all with sun a-gleam,
So soon to change and fuse into the sky,
Avails its lord far more than bodied high
In stone and mortar, could the mason's scheme.

The morn's frontiers, the South's blue-skied domains,
The luring eve and star-ranged avenues
And chambers of the north,—these would I own!
Silver of flute be mine, and gold of strains
Touched from some spirit harp whose murmurs lose
Themselves on winds from elfin lands outblown.

S. S. TIMES.

Raleigh, N. C.

AT THE FAIR IN SEPTEMBER.

In clean waists and dresses—the weather was fine—
Their lunch in a shoe-box tied up with stout twine,
Went Patsy and Polly and Dolly and Fred,
With Jennie and Bennie and fat little Ted,
To the Fair on a day in September.

They rode, every one, in the merry-go-round,
They bought toy balloons—quite the best to be found—
They had sticks of taffy so sweet and so warm,
They hid in a cow-shed when up came a storm
At the Fair on that day in September.

They ate all their lunch sitting down in the shade,
With drinks of deliciously cool lemonade,
They munched at hot peanuts, they crunched at pop-corn,

Cure Catarrh at Home.

A Practical Remedy So Simple and Pleasant That Even a Child Can use It.

A neglected cold lays the foundation for catarrh; neglected catarrh lays the foundation for consumption. Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure will break up the cold, or cure the catarrh and prevent consumption.

The symptoms of catarrh are a discharge, which is either blown from the nose or runs back and drops into the throat; a dull headache; a stopped-up feeling in the nose and head; extreme liability to take cold, etc. These conditions often lead to noises in the head, deafness, sore throat, bronchitis, asthma, indigestion and consumption.

If you suffer from any of the above troubles you should begin the proper treatment at once.

Dr. Blosser's Catarrh Cure is the best remedy known to medical science for these diseases. It cures 95 out of every 100 cases.

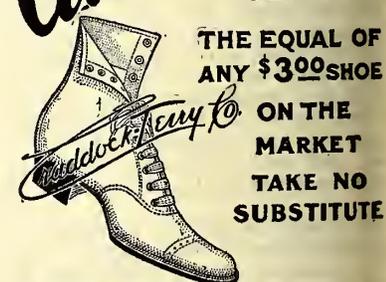

SAMPLES MAILED FREE.

In order to demonstrate its virtue, a three days' trial treatment will be mailed absolutely free to any interested sufferer. The price of the remedy is $1.00 per box (one month's treatment), sent postpaid. Address, Dr. Blosser Company, 355 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga.

Money saved is money made.

$2.50 BUYS A PAIR OF FAMOUS

Autograph SHOES

THE EQUAL OF ANY $3.00 SHOE

ON THE MARKET TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE

IF YOUR DEALER DOES NOT CARRY THEM A POSTAL CARD TO US WILL TELL YOU WHERE YOU CAN GET THEM.

CRADDOCK-TERRY CO. LYNCHBURG, VA.

Low Rates to

California & Northwest

The

Will sell daily between September 15th and October 30th, 1903, low rate colonial tickets to points in

WASHINGTON,	CALIFORNIA,
OREGON,	MONTANA,
IDAHO,	WYOMING,
COLORADO,	NEVADA,
UTAH,	ARIZONA,
	NEW MEXICO,

Short line, quick time, no bus transfers. Free reclining chair cars.

For rates, schedules, maps and full information write to

E. E. CLARK, W. T. SAUNDERS,
Traveling Pass. Agt. G. A. P.
ATLANTA.

and Fred bought a whistle and Ted bought a horn
At the Fair on that day in September.
They climbed on the grand-stand, and then, hand in hand,
They went to the dog-show, they heard the brass band,
They "mooded" at the cows, and they clucked at the hens,
They fed the prize rabbits, pink-eared, in their pens,
At the Fair on that day in September.
Then ragged and rumped, with never a dime,
Tired out—but, dear me, they'd had "such a good time,"
Name Patsy and Polly and Dollay and Fred,
With Jennie and Bennie and fat little Ted,
From the Fair on that day in September.

—Primary Education.

THEY DIDN'T THINK.

Once a little turkey, fond of her own way,
Wouldn't ask the old ones where to go or stay.
She said "I'm not a baby. Here I am half grown;
Surely I'm big enough to run around alone!"
Off she went; but somebody, hiding, saw her pass;
Soon like snow her feathers covered all the grass.
So she made a supper for a sly young mink,
Cause she was so headstrong she wouldn't think.
Once there was a robin who lived outside the door,
Who wanted to go inside and hop upon the floor,
"No, no," said the mother, "you must stay with me;
Little birds are safest sitting in a tree,"
"I don't care," said the robin and gave his tail a fling;
"I don't think the old folks know quite everything!"
Down he flew, and kitty seized him before he'd time to wink.
"Oh!" he cried, "I'm sorry; but I didn't think."
Now my little children, you who read this song,
Don't you see what trouble comes from thinking wrong?
Can't you take a warning from their dreadful fate,
Who began their thinking when it was too late?
Don't think there's always safety; don't suppose that you know more
Than anybody knows who has gone before;
But when you're warned or ruin, pause upon the brink,
And don't go under headlong,
Cause you didn't think.

—Phoebe Cary.

FRUIT OF THE PALM.

Drake's Palmetto Wine; a tonic, laxative, unfailing specific from pure juice of the wonderful Palmetto fruit. Gives immediate relief and absolutely permanent cure in all cases of Catarrh, Stomach troubles, Flatulency, Constipation, Congested Kidneys and Inflammation of bladder. Seventy-five cents at Drug stores for a large bottle, usual dollar size, but a trial bottle will be sent free and prepaid to every reader of Presbyterian Standard, who writes for it. A letter or postal card addressed to Drake Formula Company, Lake and Dearborn streets, Chicago, Ill., is the only expense to secure a trial of Drake's Palmetto Wine. One small dose a day cures to stay cured.

LIFE WAS NOT WORTH LIVING.

Shelby, N. C., April 30, 1902.

I had been a severe sufferer from nervous prostration for two years and everything I ate disagreed with me. This made me feel so wretched and bad all the time that life was a burden, and I felt that I had rather die than live. I could not eat meat or any solid food at all and everything I did eat caused me to suffer. I had terrible nervous spells when I would become cold and feel almost lifeless—then hot baths would have to be applied. I suffered from gas on the stomach all the time, and so weak I didn't do any work for twelve months. Nothing I tried did me any good.

I was in that condition when Mrs. Joe Person called to see me last July and said everything she could to persuade me to try her remedy, as she was so confident it would cure me. I bought half a dozen bottles, and felt a great deal better by the time I had taken the third. I continued it until I took eighteen bottles, which cured me. My indigestion is well, and I can eat anything I want, and it is very seldom I ever have even a touch of nervousness. My health is good and life itself seems a different thing to me and well worth living. When I commenced the remedy I weighed 105 pounds; now I weigh 140 pounds, which was my natural weight before I was taken sick.

If anyone suffers from indigestion or nervous prostration they need not hesitate to try the remedy. I would not take any amount of money for what it did for me.

Mrs. R. J. BREVARD.

Southern Railway

The Direct Line to all Points

TEXAS,
CALIFORNIA
FLORIDA,
CUBA and
PORTO RICO.

Strictly First-Class equipment on all Through and Local Trains, Pullman Palace Sleeping Cars on all night trains. Fast and safe Schedules.

Travel by the Southern and you are assured of a Safe, Comfortable and Expeditious journey.

Apply to Ticket Agents for Time Tables, Maps and General Information, or address

R. L. VERNON, F. R. DARBY,
T. P. A., C. P. & T. A.,
Charlotte, N. C. Asheville, N. C.

No trouble to answer questions.

Our superb stock of silks and dress goods for the fall of 1903 is now ready. Write for samples and prices, stating particularly the colors desired and whether you wish plain or figured cloths, light weight or Broadcloths.

We pay express charges on all orders of $5.00 and over.

MILLER & RHOADS,
Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

Mechanics and Investors Union.

A Raleigh Investment and Loan Company.

Has during the past year $32,000.00
paid for Matured Certificates

Maturity in this Company means cash.

For persons wishing to make monthly payments we issue Short Time Definite Contract Certificates to mature in 45, 50, 60, 80 or 100 months.

Also issue Full Paid Ten-Year Six-per-cent. Coupon Certificates of $100.00, which are being sold for one cash payment of $90.00. The Coupons are payable in June and December. Taxes on all Certificates are paid by the Company. For particulars address,

GEORGE ALLEN, Secretary, Raleigh, N. C.

Atlantic Coast Line.

Thoroughfare of Travel between the

NORTH and SOUTH

FLORIDA ————— CUBA

A passenger service unexcelled for luxury and comfort, equipped with the latest Pullman Dining, Sleeping and Thoroughfare Cars.

For rates, schedule, maps or any information, write to

WM. J. CRAIG,
General Passenger Agent, Wilmington, N. C.

Clippings.

Bishop Potter is amusing his friends with an account of a recent visit he paid to a Sunday-school class in New York, presided over by a staid young clergyman. The bishop was asked to question the children, so that he might be edified by their knowledge of matters Biblical. As a starter, he said to a little girl whose face beamed with intelligence: "Who were the foolish virgins, my dear?" "Them as didn't get married!" was the prompt and emphatic answer.

A Scottish tourist wandering about the streets of Paris, some distance from his hotel, found himself in a maze from which he could not escape, and, to make things worse, he failed through ignorance of the language to get any light to guide him homeward.

Then a happy thought struck him. By dint of signs he concluded a bargain with a fruit hawker for a basketful of gooseberries, and then, to the amazement of everybody, went about shouting: "Fine Scotch grossets! A penny a pun!" This went on for a while, till a fellow-countryman rushed forward to him, and, seizing him roughly by the shoulder, asked:

"Man, d'ye think yere in the streets of Glasca, that ye gang about like a madman, crying grossets?"

"Eh!" he replied, with a sense of relief. "Ye're just the man I was looking for. D'ye ken the way to the hotel —?"—Scottish American.

A sergeant, watching the line of feet as the new recruits endeavored to obey the word of command, found, to his astonishment, that one pair of feet never turned. Without taking his eyes off those feet, the sergeant, so says The Epworth Herald, called out a second order:—

"About face!"

He could see that all the feet except those he watched turned in obedience.

Rushing up to the owner—a little fellow—he seized him by the shoulder, shouting:—

"Why don't you turn with the rest?"

"I did!" replied the trembling recruit.

"You did, eh? Well, I watched your feet, and they never moved."

"It's the boots they gave me, sir," said the poor fellow. "They're so large that when I turn my feet turn inside of them."—Forward.

A recent number of Lippincott's Magazine contains an amusing little story of the account given by Chloe, a young negro house servant in an Atlanta family, of a wedding she had attended.

The next day her mistress said to her:

"Well, Chloe how did the wedding go off?"

"Oh, my, missus, it was de grandest weddin' I eber saw. It was jess lubly! Oh, yo' jes ought to ob seen de flowahs an' de splendid weddin' suppah an' de bride—oh, de bride! She had on de longest trail, an' a white veil all ovah her, an' a wreath ob flowahs, an' oh, it was jess de mos' elegant weddin'!"

"How did the bridegroom look?"

An expression of infinite disgust came into the face of Chloe as she said scornfully:

"Shuh, missy, dat good for nothin', no 'count niggah nebbah come nigh!"

"How did that poem of yours turn out?"

"Oh," answered the author, "there was the difference of opinion that usually attends the production of a masterpiece. The postmaster insisted that it was first-class matter and the editor insisted that it was not."

Mark Twain's Memory.

I remember the day I was born. It was bitter cold. I came into the world without clothes. I was astonished. I spoke of it to my parents. They had no explanation when taken so suddenly, except the old excuse that it was customary. What was custom to me at that age? All you care then is how you look. I never felt so embarrassed in all my life.—Mark Twain.

Atlanta & West Point
RAILROAD COMPANY.

The Western Railway of Alabama

Shortest and quickest route via Atlanta, Montgomery and New Orleans to all points in Texas, Mexico and California.

Operate Pullman's finest vestibule sleepers. Unexcelled dining car service on all trains.

Through coaches between Washington and New Orleans.

Cafe-Observation cars on U. S. Fast Mail Trains Nos. 35 and 36, between Atlanta and Montgomery.

Rates and schedules cheerfully furnished by

B. HEYWARD, J. P. BILLUPS,
D. P. A., G. P. A.,
Atlanta, Ga. Atlanta, Ga.

R. E. LUTZ, CHAS. WICKERSHAM,
Traffic Manager, Pres. & Gen. Mgr.
Montgomery, Ala. Atlanta, Ga.

Aberdeen &amp; Ashboro Railway Co.

CONNECTIONS FOR JACKSON SPRINGS.
Lv Aberdeen 7:30 A. M. Ar. Jackson Spgs. 8:10 A. M.
" " 9:40 " " " 10:30 " "
" " 8:40 P. M. " " 7:30 P. M.
High Point 2:05 P. M. " " 5:15 P. M.
H. A. PAGE, Abe deen, N.

The Security Life and Annuity Co.

(LEGAL RESERVE)

Home Office: Greensboro, N. C.

Guaranty Capital, - - - - $100,000.00

(Deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.)

Our Life Annuity, Disability and Endowment Policy - - - -

HAS CASH AND LOAN VALUES.

1. Is fully paid-up in 20 years.
2. Is the most attractive policy issued.
3. Contains every essential idea in Life Insurance.
4. Provides a fixed income for Life for the widow.
5. Provides a fixed income for the children during their minority.
6. Provides a fixed income for the insured during disability and old age.
7. Is secured by a cash guaranty capital of $100,000.00 deposited with the Insurance Commissioner of North Carolina.

J. VAN LINDLEY, President.

GEO. A. GRIMSLEY, Secretary.

R. E. FOSTER, Actuary.

CASH OR CREDIT.Catalogue
FREE.PRICE
$31.50

It will pay you to send for our Catalogue No. 6, quoting prices on Buggies, Harness, etc. We sell direct from our Factory to Consumers at Factory Prices. This guaranteed Buggy only $31.50; Cash or Easy Monthly Payments. We trust honest people located in all parts of the world.

Write for Free Catalogue.
MENTION THIS PAPER.

CENTURY MANUF'G CO., East St. Louis, Ill.

Peace Institute and Conservatory, Raleigh, North Carolina.

A THOROUGH SCHOOL OF HIGH-GRADE FOR GIRLS. IN PINE BELT OF NORTH CAROLINA SO FAMOUS FOR HEALTH. * * * * *

We canvass closely and select carefully hence the high-tone and character of this school and its pupils. Catalogue free. Address, JAS. DINWIDDIE, President.

STATESVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE

The best College accessible to the young women of Western North Carolina, and the cheapest for the opportunities offered. The session opens September 9, 1903. Send for information,

REV. J. A. SCOTT, President,
Statesville, N. C.

Kings Business College!

(INCORPORATED)

Capital Stock, - - - - - $30,000.00

The rush of fall students has begun. They are coming in daily and the enrollment promises to be the heaviest in the history of the College.

Fall Session Opened September 1, 1903.

Choice of 50 positions every month to our graduates, starting in at salaries from $10 to seventy-five dollars per month. Write or call about this at once.

KING'S BUSINESS COLLEGE, .. Charlotte or Raleigh, N. C.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE FOR WOMEN, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Tuition and board lower than any school of same grade in the South. Under the control of the Presbyteries of Concord and Mecklenburg.

For catalogue, address, REV. J. R. BRIDGES, President.
or MISS LILY LONG, Dean.

Truthful, Pure, Manly Boys for The Fishburne School, Waynesboro, Virginia.

English, Classical and Military. Experienced teachers. Thorough work. Superior location. Presbyterian training. THREE STUDENTS OF LAST SESSION HAVE RECEIVED GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS. Write for catalogue. JAS. A. FISHBURNE, A. B., Principal.

Raleigh Marble Works.

COOPER BROS., Props.

RALEIGH, N. C.

MONUMENTS,

Tablets, Headstones, Iron Fences.

We Pay the Freight.

Please mention Standard.

Write for our New Catalogue

N. W. PERRY, Prest. A. J. DUNN, V. P. A. D. GILCHRIST, Sec. & Treas

Charlotte Paint & Wallpaper Company. CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA.

HOUSE PAINTERS, PAPER HANGERS, INTERIOR DECORATORS.

We make a specialty of out-of-town work. Artistic Wallpapers in stock. Write us for estimates.

HALL & PEARSALL Wholesale - Grocers

AND

Commission Merchants,
Wilmington, N. C.

SPECIALTIES:

Salt Fish, Molasses.
Meat, Flour, Salt,
BAGGING and TIES.

Samples and prices on request.

HOUSTON, DIXON & CO.,

SCHOOL BOOKS, OFFICE SUPPLIES, and HURD'S VERY FINE STATIONERY.

Opposite Central Hotel, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Teachers Wanted.

We need at once a few more Teachers for Fall schools. Good positions are being filled daily by us. We are receiving more calls this year than ever before. Schools and colleges supplied with teachers free of cost. Enclose stamp for reply.

AMERICAN TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION
J. L. GRAHAM, LL. D., Manager.
152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn.

BIG 8 Chain of 8 Colleges owned by business men and endorsed by business men. Fourteen Cashiers of Banks are on our Board of Directors. Our diploma means something. Enter any time. Positions secured.

Car fare paid. Draughton's Practical Business Colleges. No Vacation. (Incorporated, Capital Stock $300,000.00.)

Nashville, Tenn.	U	Atlanta, Ga.
Ft. Worth, Texas.	S	Montgomery, Ala.
St. Louis, Mo.	S	Galveston, Texas.
Little Rock, Ark.	A	Shreveport, La.

For 150 page catalogue address either place. If you prefer, may pay tuition out of salary after course is completed. Guarantee graduates to be competent or no charges for tuition. HOME STUDY: Bookkeeping, Shorthand, Penmanship, etc., taught by mail. Write for 100 page BOOKLET on Home Study. It's free.

D. W. Badham, Charlotte, N. C.

Tuner, Repairer and Salesman of Pianos. School work a specialty. Mention the Standard.

Wire Railing and Ornamental Wire Works.

DUFUR & CO.,

311 N. Howard Street,

Baltimore, Md

Manufacture Wire Railing for Cemeteries, Balconies, etc. Sieves, Fenders, Cag Sand and Coal Screens Woven Wire, Also Iron Bedsteads, Chairs Settees, etc.

For Sale Cheap

A one-horse power, high-speed General Electric motor, for 500-volt circuit; armature and commutator both new; all in thoroughly good repair. For particulars apply to

MANAGER PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD,
Charlotte, N. C.

STILLMAN INSTITUTE,

TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

For training Colored Ministers. Offers good academic and theological instruction.

Now managed on the "Industrial" plan, by which a young man may exchange labor for an education.

Write for information to

REV. D. CLAY LILLY, Superintendent
TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

EVERY SUFFERER SHOULD KNOW

=KADOK=

The Pleasant tonic Headache Cure.

Superior to Others and Free from

Opaites

Try a package,

Price 10c.

At all Druggists or sent prepaid by

L. Richardson Drug Company,
Wholesale and manufacturing Druggists,
GREENSBORO, N. C.

TUCKER BROS.

Wilmington, N. C.

THE PLACE TO BUY YOUR

MONUMENTS.

HEADSTONES,

and all Cemetery Work,

at Bottom Prices. All

work delivered.

Branch yard at

Goldsboro, N. C.

Teachers' Interstate Examination Course.

Teachers wishing to prepare for examinations should write at once to Prof. J. L. Graham, LL. D., 152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn., for particulars concerning his Special Teachers' Examination Course.

This course is taught by mail, and prepares Teachers for examination in every State in the Union. Leading educators pronounce it the best course ever offered to the Teaching profession, and all Teachers wishing to advance in their profession should immediately avail themselves of it. Enclose stamp for reply.

THE MERCHANTS & FARMERS NATIONAL BANK,

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Capital and Profits, - - - $290,000.

Out of Town Accounts.

Depositors living outside of Charlotte can send their deposits by mail or express, upon receipt of which the amount will be credited to their account and the deposit acknowledged by mail same day.

We furnish such accounts check books, free of cost, and write up the account monthly, mailing detailed statement with all cancelled checks.

DR. J. H. McADEN, - - - President.
C. N. EVANS, Jr., - - - Cashier.

SEVENTEEN YEARS EXPERIENCE

W. Drummond Marrow

Consulting Electrical Engineer

ELECTRICAL - CONTRACTOR

233 South Tryon Street

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

SHORTHAND FREE.

Upon request Converse Business College will send a free lesson in Shorthand, with full explanation, to any one.

For the next thirty days Railroad fare will be paid for any one enrolling for one or more of our courses at the regular rate of tuition.

I. T. WILLIAMS, Secretary and Treasurer, Spartanburg, S. C.

Sewing Machines AND Supplies

NOW is the time to buy a Machine, and F. H. ANDREWS' is the place. No use to send your money to a catalogue house a thousand miles away, when I can furnish an elegant Drop Head Machine at $16.50 and finer ones in proportion. Attachments, Parts and Needles for all Machines supplied promptly.

F. H. ANDREWS,

20 WEST TRADE STREET.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The Old Reliable Dealer in Pianos, Organs and Sewing Machines.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE, Davidson, N. C.

Classical, Mathematical, Scientific, Literary, Biblical, Commercial. Terms reasonable; Location healthful; Accommodations excellent; Teaching surpassed; Gymnasium complete.

Send for a catalogue

Address THE PRESIDENT

North Carolina

MILITARY ACADEMY

Red Springs, N. C.

Ample faculty of five instructors. Location unsurpassed for healthfulness. Educates for business or for college and stand taken by graduates and students in university world the test of thoroughness. Cost small, considering advantages. Religious influence good. Address for catalogue,

CAPT. C. A. SHORT,

Principal.

DR. SAMUEL W. MURPHY,

Head Master.

Red Springs Seminary, The Ideal College for Women.

Faculty of twenty-six experienced teachers. College course leading to the degrees A. B., B. S. and B. Lit. The best advantages in Music and Art. Large two manual Pipe Organ. Electric lights. Steam heat. A catalogue will interest you.

REV. C. G. VARDELL, D. D., Red Springs, N. C.

Summer address, Blowing Rock, N. C.

The Normal and Collegiate Institute FOR YOUNG WOMEN. ASHEVILLE, N. C.

The Fall Term Opens September 16, 1903.

1. A normal course for the thorough training of Teachers under instructors from best Normal Schools.
  2. A Commercial Course, including Stenography, Typewriting, Bookkeeping, etc.
  3. A Course of Domestic Science, including (a) Scientific Cooking, (b) Draughting, Cutting, Fitting and Making of Garments.
  4. An admirable Musical Department has been provided under trained and experienced teachers. Systematic study of the Bible in all Departments.
- Terms for Board and Tuition in any of the Departments, $50.00 per term, or $100.00 per year. For Catalogue, address

REV. THOMAS LAWRENCE, D. D., Asheville, N. C.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., OCTOBER 14, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 41

THE HOME OF JOHN KNOX,
EDINBURGH, SCOTLAND.

Peace Institute and Conservatory,

Raleigh, North Carolina.

A THOROUGH SCHOOL OF HIGH-GRADE FOR GIRLS. IN PINE BELT OF NORTH CAROLINA SO FAMOUS FOR HEALTH. * * * * *

We canvass closely and select carefully hence the high-tone and character of this school and its pupils. Catalogue free. Address, JAS. DINWIDDIE, President.

STATESVILLE FEMALE COLLEGE

The best College accessible to the young women of Western North Carolina, and the cheapest for the opportunities offered. The session opens September 9, 1903. Send for information,

REV. J. A. SCOTT, President,
Statesville, N. C.

Kings Business College!

(INCORPORATED)

Capital Stock, - - - - - $30,000.00

The rush of fall students has begun. They are coming in daily and the enrollment promises to be the heaviest in the history of the College

Fall Session Opened September 1, 1903.

Choice of 50 positions every month to our graduates, starting in at salaries from fifty to seventy-five dollars per month. Write or call about this at once

KING'S BUSINESS COLLEGE, .. Charlotte or Raleigh. N. C.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE FOR WOMEN,

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Tuition and board lower than any school of same grade in the South. Under the control of the Presbyteries of Concord and Mecklenburg.

For catalogue, address, REV. J. R. BRIDGES, President.
Or MISS LILY LONG, Dean.

Truthful, Pure, Manly Boys for The Fishburne School, Waynesboro, Virginia.

English Classical and Military. Experienced teachers. Thorough work. Superior location. Presbyterian training. THREE STUDENTS OF LAST SESSION HAVE RECEIVED GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS. Write for catalogue. JAS. A. FISHBURNE, A. B., Principal.

Raleigh Marble Works.

COOPER BROS., Props.

RALEIGH, N. C.

MONUMENTS,

Tablets, Headstones, Iron Fences.

We Pay the Freight.

Please mention Standard.

N. W. PERRY, Prest. A. J. DUNN, V. P. A. D. GILCHRIST, Sec. & Treas

Charlotte Paint & Wallpaper Company.

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA.

HOUSE PAINTERS, PAPER HANGERS, INTERIOR DECORATORS.

We make a specialty of out-of-town work. Artistic Wallpapers in stock. Write us for estimates.

HALL & PEARSALL

Wholesale - Grocers

AND

Commission Merchants,

Wilmington, N. C.

SPECIALTIES:

Salt Fish, Molasses.

Meat, Flour, Salt,

BAGGING and TIES.

Samples and prices on request.

HOUSTON, DIXON & CO.,

SCHOOL BOOKS, OFFICE SUP-

PLIES, and HURD'S VERY

FINE STATIONERY.

Opposite Central Hotel, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Teachers Wanted.

We need at once a few more Teachers for Fall schools. Good positions are being filled daily by us. We are receiving more calls this year than ever before. Schools and colleges supplied with teachers free of cost. Enclose stamp for reply.

AMERICAN TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION

J. L. GRAHAM, LL. D., Manager.

152-154 Randolph Building, Memphis, Tenn.

BIG 8 Chain of 8 Colleges owned by business men and endorsed by business men. Fourteen Cashiers of Banks are on our Board of Directors. Our diploma means something. Enter any time. Positions secured.

Draughon's Practical Business Colleges,

(Incorporated, Capital Stock $300,000.00.)
Nashville, Tenn. U Atlanta, Ga.
Ft. Worth, Texas, S Montgomery, Ala.
St. Louis, Mo. S Galveston, Texas,
Little Rock, Ark. A Shreveport, La.

For 150 page catalogue address either place. If you prefer, may pay tuition out of salary after course is completed. Guarantee graduates to be competent or no charges for tuition. HOME STUDY: Bookkeeping, Shorthand, Penmanship, etc., taught by mail. Write for 100 page BOOKLET on Home Study. It's free.

D. W. Badham,
Charlotte, N. C.

Tuner, Repairer and Salesman of
Pianos. School work a specialty.

Mention the Standard.

Wire Railing and Ornamental Wire Works.

DUFUR & CO.,

311 N. Howard Street,

Baltimore, Md

Manufacture Wire Railing for Cemeteries, Balconies, etc. Sieves, Fenders, Cag Sand and Coal Screens Woven Wire, Also Iron Bedsteads, Chairs Settees, etc.

For Sale Cheap

A one-horse power, high-speed General Electric motor, for 500-volt circuit; armature and commutator both new; all in thoroughly good repair. For particulars apply to
MANAGER PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD,
Charlotte, N. C.

Presbyterian Standard.

Established 1858.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., OCTOBER 14, 1903.

Vol. XLV.---No 41

Event and Comment.

As the other editorial part of the Standard has gone to press, we have space here merely to comment upon two important matters, relating to the welfare of Presbyterianism—the report of the Committees on Fraternal and Organic Union between the Northern and Cumberland Presbyterian Churches and the report of the committee appointed by the last Northern Assembly. The Southern Church is simply a more or less interested spectator of the proceedings; probably less, as the proceedings develop.

The Northern Assembly appointed a committee consisting of the following ministers and laymen on Cooperation and Unions: W. H. Roberts, D. D., R. F. Coyle, D. D., D. B. Putnam, D. D., C. A. Dickey, D. D., R. H. Hartley, D. D., E. S. Wells, Reuben Tyler, Wilton Merle Smith, D. D., W. N. Page, D. D., John R. Davis, D. D., and Elisha H. Perkins. The last four of the committee were absent. The others known to us are Coyle and Dickey and Roberts. Roberts is a good Stated Clerk, with the Stated Clerk habit abnormally developed. Dickey was the superintendent, we believe, of the Presbyterian Hospital in Philadelphia, and the grateful protegee of John H. Converse, and Coyle, like Dickey, had been elevated to the Moderator's chair, though the reports from him in the papers as to the wiping out of the line between Calvinism and Arminianism in the Revised Confession are not reassuring as to the amount of his gray matter. To this trio, with their associates, the Northern Presbyterian Church committed a weighty matter.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church appointed a committee also, all of whom were present at the meeting in St. Louis. It is doubtless the ablest committee that could be formed from the membership of that Church. The committees met, for their organization in adjacent rooms of the Southern Hotel. They soon fused into a single group with "spontaneous friendliness," the "sense of brotherhood" and an "impromptu prayer meeting," from which the Cumberlanders emerged with a decided tactical victory, namely, that overtures of union should come from the Northern Church. Our Northern committeemen should learn to watch as well as pray.

Then the Northerners drew up a paper to which the Cumberlanders took exceptions, in some minor details, and made their counter proposals after the approved manner of a horse-trade. The Northerners came at them again with their original paper "modified and re-phrased," and this was received with much more favor. And right here the Northerners displayed the first gleam of comprehension and decided that it would be better to adjourn before the Cumberlanders accepted their propositions outright. They were just about to have organic union, without waiting for the Assemblies to consider the question.

So Dr. Roberts and Dr. Black united in this pronunciamento to a wondering world.

"In all the associations and negotiations of the two committees, both severally and jointly, there was absolute cordiality and fraternity, and there were no negative votes upon any question finally acted upon by either committee or in the joint committee conferences. Such unanimity was the normal fruitage, we believe, of the devotional spirit that pervaded every session, the blessed answer to the prayers of the members of both Churches everywhere. While slight doctrinal and other differences were thought to exist by some members of the committees, a thoughtful and prayerful consideration of these supposed barriers has so far either removed these obstacles, or so nearly shown them not actually to exist, that we entertain the confident hope that within a very few years, reunion may be accomplished in a manner wholly creditable to both Churches and honoring to our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ."

Wednesday, September 30th, was the day devoted to this matter and we repeat that Roberts, Dickey and Coyle were evidently the great theologians to modify and re-phrase such a statement of doctrine as was entirely satisfactory to the Cumberlanders. The day and the names should be immortal.

On the same distinguished day the committee appointed by the Northern Assembly on Presbyterian Boundaries met in St. Louis. It must have been in order to know whether any Southern Cumberlanders would object to the action taken. The courtship does seem to be an ardent one. This committee consists of Ministers S. J. Niccolls, D. D., chairman; E. A. Elmore, D. D.; C. H. Uggains; F. O. Ballard, D. D.; Elders L. P. Berry, Brice A. Miller, Wm. MacAllister. Dr. Ballard and Mr. Miller were absent.

One or more of these are colored men. Two of this committee were absent. They also came immediately and unanimously to conclusions which will not yet be published, but which are outlined as follows:

1. It is impossible to countenance any idea of organizing the colored members of the Presbyterian Church into a separate denomination.

2. No recommendation will be adopted which would tend to drive the colored people from the Church.

3. There must be no legislation discriminating between white and black introduced into the Presbyterian Book of Government.

Comment next week.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

Established January 1, 1858.

A RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER FOR THE FAMILY. DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM AS REPRESENTED BY THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

A. J. MCKELWAY, ..... EDITOR
 CORNELIA R. SHAW, ..... ASSOCIATE EDITOR
 H. M. MCALLISTER, ..... BUSINESS MANAGER

WESTERN OFFICE:

GEO. L. LEYBUEN, ..... EDITOR AND MANAGER.
 3418 Washington Ave. St. Louis, Mo.

Subscription Price, ..... $2.00 a Year, in Advance.

The STANDARD is published every Wednesday at Charlotte, N. C., by the PRESBYTERIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

☛ For table of contents see page 16.

☛ The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription has been paid.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the subscription.

In accordance with the general wish of our patrons the paper is discontinued only upon the written request of the subscriber. Arrearages must be settled in full at the same time, at the rate of two dollars a year and twenty cents a month for a part of a year.

When change of address is desired give both the old and the new address. No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post-office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South. Address all communications to

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD, Charlotte, N. C.

The Dispensary System. Our friend Knox has a second article this week on the South Carolina Dispensary. He is a South Carolinian, living in North Carolina. His contribution to the discussion of this question is not therefore the fruit of personal experience, as with so many South Carolina pastors who have seen the immense difference in favor of the dispensary as contrasted with the saloon. Moreover the position he took in last week's Standard as to any sale of liquor under any circumstances would indicate that if the dispensary had been entirely successful in South Carolina, in the abolition of drunkenness and crime, he would yet have regarded it as a "Moral Compromise." We may be permitted to suggest therefore that our correspondent is not an entirely unprejudiced observer of the facts. This is shown by his argument in this week's Standard.

The facts are as he states them, that the State of South Carolina was carried for Prohibition and that the Dispensary system was substituted in the Legislature, mainly through the influence of Governor, now senator, Ben. Tillman. Certainly these were adverse circumstances for the successful working out of a new experiment. The Prohibitionists were then the only people who opposed the saloon and their plan for which they had fought and worked was shelved. The great body of the people therefore from whom most help might have been expected in the enforcement of the dispensary Laws were put in opposition to the law that was passed. Further, Tillman himself was not universally popular, nor is yet. Every enemy of Tillman joined hands with his friends among the Prohibitionists in denouncing the law and making its enforcement odious, so that there was actual bloodshed in the execution of the law.

It was only natural under these circumstances that its "political history," to take up our correspondent's second point, should not have been an ideal one. Few political histories are. The execution of the law, a hated law at the outset, was entrusted to those among the Tillmanites who had not been Prohibitionists and who had supported the saloon in the battle that had just been fought. There have been great abuses of administration doubtless. The legislation that has been unfavorable to temperance may also be attributed to the fact that too many good people were so hostile to the system that they were willing to see it made as bad as it could be made. And our correspondent admits that some of the dispensary features of the law have not been expected. But now suppose the shoe is put on the other foot. Suppose Prohibition had been put upon the people of South Carolina against their will as just expressed at the polls. Suppose that the amendments to the original law and the enforcement of the law were left to the saloon party and the facts were proved that the laws against the illegal sale of liquor were not enforced, and their non-enforcement was winked at, does our correspondent think that there would be a Paradise in South Carolina for far as the evil of drunkenness is concerned?

And yet, admitting all the facts that our correspondent sets forth, of unpopular legislation, unpopular with the best people originally, of imperfect legislation, legislation that might be and doubtless will be improved along certain lines, of inadequate and dishonest administration, of the non-enforcement of temperance features of the dispensary laws, our correspondent is forced to admit that the system has won its way into the estimation of the people of his native State to such an extent that a former prohibition majority is turned into a "leaven" in the measure of meal. We quote his exact words, "The Prohibition party of South Carolina is well nigh a corpse and it is a South Carolina proverb that the Dispensary killed it." Our correspondent attributes this to the debauching influences of the Dispensary. He should recall the words of Burke about bringing an indictment against a whole people. The people of South Carolina have expressed themselves in open vote at the polls, settling the issue fairly and squarely to the effect that they believe the dispensary system a better solution of the question than either the saloon system, which is now unconstitutional in South Carolina, or Prohibition..

Looking at the figures which our correspondent produces we are reminded of the old rule of ill logic, "Post hoc, propter hoc." He shows that the sales have increased from a million and a quarter dollars in 1879 to two and a half millions in 1902. But we suggest that this does not mean that the drinking of liquor has increased that much. The opposition to the dispensary in 1897 simply led everybody that was opposed to it to get their liquor in other ways. There was a long fight against the Express Companies, against the jug trade in general, before the State and the Federal Legislation necessary could be secured. Nor is there any way of determining how much more liquor was sold by the saloons in South Carolina. Yet our correspondent may be surprised to know how really temperate his people are, with all his million figures. Two and a half million dollars seems to his righteous soul a heap of money to waste on liquor. And so it is. Yet when we take the per capita view the people of South Carolina consume about two dollars worth of liquor a year, per head, while the whole people of the United States consume ten dollars worth, per capita, per year. Things are not so bad in South Carolina after all but that they are a great deal worse in the country at large. In the light of this fact South Carolina is five times more temperate, gling from the amount of liquor consumed than her States, taken as a whole. It is such facts as these, in spite of prejudice and theory that has "made the Presbyterian Church in South Carolina practically solid for the Dispensary" to quote from one of the Presbyterian ministers of that State who has had the widest opportunity for knowing the sentiments of our Church.

As to the increase in crime, during the six years under the dispensary, our correspondent should remember that the wave of criminality has swept over the whole country during this period, North and South, but especially in the South, as the new generation of negroes have come to maturity in idleness and viciousness. It is true that in communities dominated by the saloon, a large percentage of crime can be traced to the use of whiskey, because the saloon promotes drunkenness. But the figures will have to be gathered with much more particularity, before it will be believed that the closing of the saloons in South Carolina was really the cause of nearly double the murders in that State. It will have to be shown how large a percentage of these crimes is due to drunkenness, and we have yet to see from a competent observer of conditions in South Carolina the statement that drunkenness has not been very materially diminished by the dispensary system.

Our correspondent is no more a Prohibitionist than the liquor is, where it is believed that Prohibition is the best system. But we are unlike in this respect, that with one, Prohibition seems to be an end in itself; with the other it is a means to this end, the decrease of drunkenness.

The old question, Does Prohibition prohibit, can always be answered affirmatively, Yes it prohibits the saloon. So does the Dispensary. Neither prohibits effectively either drinking or drunkenness. Prohibition encourages the blind tiger, although it is a great deal better to have a dozen blind tigers after your boy than one with his eyes open. The Dispensary gives a lawful supply to a demand which is to some extent a legitimate one.

North Carolina is essentially a rural State. It has no large towns. It has a great many small towns. In North Carolina to-day it is forbidden to sell whiskey at all outside of incorporated towns, thanks to the Anti-Saloon League. In the great majority of the towns in North Carolina, the legitimate demand for liquor is so small that it can be supplied in other ways, so that Prohibition is by long odds the best solution of the problem there. We have advocated it in several such places on the platform, and rejoice in the victories that have been won. When the problem touches the larger towns, with their greater population, it becomes a more complicated one.

We repeat that there is some legitimate demand for liquor. Probably Knox would admit that, if allowed to limit it to wine for sacramental purposes or for the sick room. Very well—then somebody must make it and somebody must give it or sell it. There are a great many good and sensible people who would extend the legitimate demand for liquor to that for temperate use as a beverage.

We have no quarrel with them, admonishing them only of Paul's law of Charity, which is a law, however, of which the enforcement is necessarily left to the individual. It is certain that our Lord, if we believe his own testimony, used the common wine of the country as a beverage, since his religion did not embrace the asceticism of John the Baptist, the Nazarite. John the Baptist came neither eating bread nor drinking wine. The Son of Man came eating and drinking. Of course it is possible to follow our Lord's example without using his discretion, but truth is truth, and nothing is to be gained by concealing or qualifying or denying the truth.

Therefore, since total abstinence and temperance are not the same thing, nor prohibition itself the end desired, but the diminishing of drunkenness and the evils flowing from drunkenness, the substitution of the dispensary for the saloons, as in Raleigh, the other day, is not a moral compromise, nor a mild solution of Jesuitism. It is not permitting evil that good may come, because neither the use nor the sale of liquor, in themselves, are evils. It is the abuse of both that we are fighting. We presume that the disciples bought the wine for the passover at some wineshop in Jerusalem. But drunkenness was so rare in Jerusalem that it was an unheard-of thing for one to be drunk at the third hour of the day, as Peter indicated in his speech at Pentecost. And it is noteworthy that while drunkenness is everywhere forbidden and its punishment is hell itself, there is not a word in the New Testament against the wine-seller as such. Anything akin to the American saloon was unknown then, of course. So it seems to us that it was a poor objection that our friend made in last week's Standard, that the Dispensary Removes the Odium of the Liquor Traffic. Things are hated because they are hateful. Remove their hatefulness and you remove their odium. Is it not a good thing to remove the hatefulness of the liquor traffic? If the traffic is not an evil except as it leads to drunkenness and crime, would it not be a good thing to remove these tendencies from the traffic? If the Christian people of South Carolina as represented by the Presbyterian Church have come to regard that traffic with less of hatred than they formerly felt, is not the conclusion irresistible that conditions have vastly changed for the better? We happen to know some of the Presbyterian people of Fayetteville, for instance. Knox intimates that they were somehow seduced by the dispensary itself. But they are just as good people, so far as their characters are concerned, as Knox is. Would it not be a more reasonable and at the same time a more just and charitable supposition that the Fayetteville people knew more about the effect of the dispensary upon the morals of their own community than Knox does?

And we have a condition confronting us in North Carolina and in every Southern State except South Carolina, that the alternative to the Dispensary or to Prohibition is the Saloon. Apart from the fact that the Dispensary is sometimes a better solution of the problem than Prohibition could be, it is true that in some localities, Prohibition cannot be carried. The only alternatives are the Dispensary or the Saloon. We advise Knox to use his influence in revising the South Carolina law along the lines of the Dispensary Law provided in the Watts Bill, giving to every community the right to vote the dispensary out, as in many instances, doubtless, should be done.

The wisdom of the temperance movement which is sweeping over North Carolina to-day is that it is not concerned with drinking so much as with drunkenness, that it is more anxious to save the drunkards than to interfere with sober people who may not believe in total abstinence. It is appealing to the men who control the destinies of this State because it has put away childish things. Let us all stand on its broad platform of opposition, unceasing and remorseless to the saloon, leaving to localities and to circumstances the choice of the solutions of the liquor problem. The saloon is no solution at all.

Review of Contemporaries.

THE NEW NEGRO CRIME AGAIN CONSIDERED.

Since we suggested that the perpetration of assaults by colored men upon white women might fairly be described as "the new negro crime," and that the cause of the phenomenon seemed to require investigation, the question has received a good deal of discussion in all sections of the country. That the premise is sound there seems to be an agreement of opinion. The only person disposed to dispute its soundness has asserted that he has found two examples of the crime under the slavery regime during the two or more centuries that preceded the civil war. Even if conclusive proofs of the authenticity of the two instances alleged had been produced, which is not the case, it is plain enough that they would not have sufficed to impugn our averment that crime was practically unknown in slavery times, either at the South or at the North. We now purpose to make another averment, as to which, also, we challenge contradiction. Not only was the particular crime, of which we are speaking, practically unknown in the South under the slavery regime, but it continued to be unknown there until about twenty years after the negroes were emancipated, or until a generation had grown up which lacked the respect for white women which had been ingrained in the blacks of the preceding generation. We desire to submit a third assertion, namely, that the crime which we call new did not exist in the Northern States either, until very recently, although for many generations the negro there had borne something like the same numerical proportion to the whites that he bears now. We would make still further additions to our original premise. What we have termed the new negro crime seems to be confined to the United States. At all events, we seldom, if ever, hear of it in the British West Indies—except, of course, during the frightful uprising of the blacks against the whites in Haiti—or in the Spanish or Portuguese speaking countries of Central or South America. If it be true, as we allege, that the crime is practically unknown in the other American countries just named, the query will at once suggest itself, Does the crime there fail to exist because in those countries intermarriage between whites and blacks, or, in a word, amalgamation, is allowed by law?

So much for our premises. If the truth of all of them be conceded: if it be acknowledged that the crime which we are discussing is not only modern, but also local, in the sense of being confined to the United States, it obviously follows that it must be the outcome of conditions peculiar to our own country, and to conditions, moreover, affecting the present, but no previous generation of negroes in the United States. What are those peculiar conditions? We have been able to discover only a single cause for the phenomena. That cause may be thus stated: The whole system of reconstruction devised by Thaddeus Stevens (who carried out his principles in private life) and by other leaders of the Radicals, who dominated Congress under the Johnson administration—the system embodied in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments of the Federal Constitution, and in the Congressional and State legislation growing out of them—was based on the fundamental idea of absolute equality, social as well as political, between the white and the black races. Following the lines of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments of the Federal Constitution, and, in some cases perhaps, preceding the definite adoption of the last named amendment, a number of so-called "civil rights acts" were passed by Congress. The reconstruction or "carpet-bag" laws, the validity of which was disputed, dominated and abrogated a State law forbidding the intermarriage of whites and blacks. These reconstruction judges assumed, and they were undoubtedly correct in the assumption, that the theory on which their Radical masters at Washington had proceeded was favorable to amalgamation. Upon no other theory can some of the civil rights acts be explained, for their tendency to bring about absolute social equality between the black and the white races is obvious and indisputable.

There is, in a word, no doubt that the idea of absolute social equality between the black and the white races, to which amalgamation was the logical and inevitable corollary, pervaded the atmosphere of Washington during the reconstruction period, and that of all the Southern States under the carpet-bag regime, so far as the blacks and the white emigrants from the North were concerned. That idea was inhaled with the air when the present generation of negroes was growing up to puberty and entering on adult life. They became infected with the belief, and the belief was justified, that if the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Constitutional Amendments, and the civil rights acts founded thereon, had any theoretical basis, and pointed forward to any ultimate consummation, that basis and that consummation must be looked for in the intermarriage and eventual fusion of the two races. Amalgamation, therefore, instead of being regarded with loathing and abhorrence, as it had been by the Southern whites, was held up to the post-bellum generation of negroes by their radical teachers at the North and by their own common-sense interpretation of constitutional and statute laws, as at once lawful, proper and desirable.

Not many years elapsed, however, after the emigration of negroes from the South to the North began, before the opinions and the feelings of Northern whites regarding the expediency, or even the permissibility of intermarriage between the races underwent a profound and startling change. Startling in the sense that Northern radicals themselves were shocked at the logical consequences of the theory that had inspired their reconstruction legislation. As for the Southern whites, we need not say that they had never ceased to view amalgamation with disgust and horror. What we would here indicate, however, is that, in the new negro crime, we behold the fructification of the idea planted in the minds of colored men during the reconstruction period, an idea which we cannot expect to see instantaneously uprooted; merely because the Northern radicals who planted it have begun sincerely to repent of having done so. Finding, to his surprise and bewilderment, that the fundamental theory on which the constitutional and statute legislation of the reconstruction period was founded is in process of extinction, if not utterly extinct, and that the faces of white men at the North, as at the South, are set like nt against the intermarriage of the races, a negro is ow and then provoked to assert by violence the right

a cohabitation that is either forbidden by law or probited by public sentiment.

In this way only are we able to explain the phenomenon presented by the crime that we are discuss-g, a phenomenon which is at once modern and local.
is modern because, before the reconstruction period,
e black man never looked upon marriage or cohabi-tion with a white woman as conceivable, much less s warranted by the theory of law. It is local, be-ause in the Spanish and Portuguese speaking coun-ies on this side of the Atlantic, it is unnecessary for negro to resort to force, for the reason that the in-ermarriage, or voluntary cohabitation of whites and acks is neither prohibited by law nor condemned
y public sentiment.

If we are right in our diagnosis of the conditions
nder which the new negro crime arose, we may reasonably expect to see it vanish when those conditions hall have disappeared. As we have formerly pointed ut, it has vanished already in Mississippi, where the egro has learned that, whatever may have been the heory that inspired reconstruction legislation, the black man in that State is not the political, much less he social, equal of the white. The crime is likely to vanish elsewhere when the same hard, but indispensable, lesson is driven home.—Harper's Weekly.

LYMAN ABBOTT ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The most obvious signs that there is still life in the woman suffrage movement nowadays are the occasional attempts to check it. No discriminating person wastes ammunition on what is already done for,
and that Dr. Lyman Abbott should have set forth in the September Atlantic Monthly the reasons why, in his opinion, women do not wish the suffrage, indicates that he thinks the suffragists are still active enough to be worth attention.

He says that when the Massachusetts women were asked in 1895 whether they wished the suffrage, only 22,204 out of a possible 575,000 voted yes. That is, about four per cent. of them wanted to vote. The rest didn't care. Dr. Abbott thinks this result expressed fairly well the average sentiment throughout the country. At any rate, he is confident that an overwhelming majority of American women have silently determined that they do not wish to vote, and he undertakes to set forth the reasons for their indifference. These reasons, as he finds them, are neither new nor unfamiliar. Of course, he does not argue that women are inferior to men. Of men and women he says that because their functions are different all talk of equality or non-equality is but idle words without a meaning.
His argument is that the family is the basis of society, that the basis of the family is the difference of the sexes, that the military function in all its forms and phases belongs to men, and that the object of government being the protection of persons, property, and reputation from foes that assail them, it rests finally on the power to compel obedience. But to furnish that power is indisputably the function of men, and not of women. Behind a vote must be the strong arm that supports authority. Women do not care to vote because they recognize that voting involves a fitness and willingness to fight, and because they recognize that fighting is not included in the duties that fall to them.

Such is Dr. Abbott's position, crudely and briefly stated. The root of the matter seems to be in it.

---

When the regularly commissioned representatives of the United Free Churches of Scotland in their respective Assemblies came together under the title of the United Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland, a disaffected remnant of the Free Church, with congregations almost wholly composed of Highlanders, refused to go into the union and claimed the property found in their respective parishes. They affirm the illegality of the union and assert their title to all the assets of the Free Church. Scotch Presbyterians are therefore brought face to face with the problems which had to be threshed out in our American courts when ecclesiastical bodies shifted and transferred their relations at the outbreak of the Civil War. The House of Lords in London is the final court in all cases of this kind in Great Britain, and it is perhaps the slowest and most uncertain body in the world clothed with judicial authority. The come-outers, who, however, claim to be the original and legal body, have secured recognition from King Edward as a church, but this does not settle the contention that they are "the" church. It may be years before a decision is reached; and, looking over precedents established by the House of Lords, the officers of the United Free Church are by no means confident to which side Parliament will lean. In the meantime the small company of recusants suffers most by the delay.—The Interior.

---

The London Times correspondent in Beirut writes confidently asserting that but for the presence of the United States vessels and marines off the city the foreigners would have been massacred. Turkey is reported as having intimated her desire that our vessels leave Beirut. Reports from Washington do not indicate that such will be our course, at least not until Turkey makes concessions respecting claims long pending against her.—Congregationalist.

---

We see him wherever we go, at farm house and city residence—the old man on the porch, his life work done and he only waiting. Often a little grandchild will be in his lap, and youth and old age will be comparing notes, grandpa telling stories of the long ago and the little one prattling of her childish interests—not very far separated from each other, the old man and the child. And as they sit there, removed from the rush and business of the busy world, the old man recalls the past, the pioneer days of early mankind, the struggling to build a new home in the country, the discouragement and the hardships, and the final success, and as the one prattles and the other dreams, golden hair and gray beard blend and they sleep, the little child and the old man on the porch.—
Exchange.

---

Devotional.

---

"THAT I MAY KNOW HIM."

By Mary C. Dickey.

How much the world owes to the man whose passion is to know—the chemist, the explorer, Edison, Marconi, Tesla, and all who for the recompense of the reward of knowing things have delved, have studied, have experimented with infinite patience, have isolated themselves from home, from family, from comfort and ease, and have made the whole world rich!

St. Paul had the passion, the thirst to know, as might be expected of a man who had sat at the feet of the most learned men of his time. The scholarly, logical Paul, the master of forceful diction, the leader of men. Hear him state it: "That I may know him!" The master passion of this master of men! To know him! Ah, where is the learning of the Pharisees, the erudition of the Sanhedrin, the culture of Rome and of Greece? Ah, I count it all but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord!

A woman whose life seemed parched by all the desert winds of adversity, her plans thwarted, her ambitions stifled, her heart well-nigh broken, knelt one day before him whom her soul loved and cried to him with the insistent questioning that would not be stilled. And to her still smitten heart came these words, as plain as if spoken at her side "and the fellowship of his sufferings." The hand of the Christ was laid that day upon her life, and unquestioning, strong in the triumph of faith, she went forth no more a slave to the galleys, but as one reigning in life, to do joyously the work she was sure now he had sent to her. Then, "knowing him," and the wonderful fellowship, there came a blessed day when that work faithfully done, was laid aside, and a sphere of blessedness and usefulness far beyond her dreams was opened to her. Ah, she was glad she had trusted! so thankful she had been willing to pay the price of the fellowship of his suffering, for the excellency of the knowledge! To know him! Ah, over all our worldly knowing One has written "It shall be done away," but the knowledge of Jesus—ah, we shall be still learning while the ages roll. At any cost we must "know him," and, blessed fact, we shall enter into the mystic "fellowship," though it be by the way of the cross.

Sooner or later we find that life is not a holiday, but a discipline. Earlier or later we will discover, that the world is not a playground. It is quite clear that God means it for a school. The moment we forget that, the puzzle of life begins. We try to play in school. The Master does not mind that so much for its own sake, for He likes to see his children happy; but in our playing we neglect our lessons. We do not see how much there is to learn, and we do not care. But our Master cares. He has a perfectly overpowering and inexplicable solicitude for our education; and because He loves us He comes into the school sometimes and speaks to us. He may speak very softly and gently, or very loudly. Sometimes a look is enough, and we understand it, like Peter, and go out at once and weep startling the summer night. But one thing we may be sure of—the task he sets us is never measured by our delinquency. The discipline may seem far less than our desert, or even to our eye, ten times more. But it is not measured by these. It is measured by God's solicitude for our progress; measured solely by God's love; measured solely that the scholar may be better educated when he arrives at his Father's home.—Henry Drummond.

---

Missionary.

---

"BE STRONG!"

We are not here to play, to dream, to drift.
We have hard work to do, and loads to lift.
Shun not the struggle; face it. 'Tis God's gift.

"BE STRONG!"

Say not the days are evil—Who's to blame?

And fold the hands and acquiesce—O shame!
Stand up, speak out, and bravely, in God's name.

"BE STRONG!"

—The Missionary.

---

THE NEW INTERPRETATION OF LIFE NEEDED

---

The whole difficulty, it appears to us, not only as regards foreign and domestic missions, but all forms of social service—of which religious service is the corner stone—is the need of a new interpretation of life from the point of view of Christ. Not because Christians of to-day are essentially different—less devoted, less faithful—than those of any earlier age, but that the conditions of life have become changed by the progress of science and of business. When the Judsons went to Burmah it would have been perhaps absurd for three hundred Christian missionaries to go with them. There was no way by which so many could have been made useful. Means of transportation there were none, vernacular Bibles and other literature were utterly wanting, only men and women of distinguished ability and very unique consecration could be useful. But now any man, any woman, who has the spirit of wisdom and self-sacrifice may find a place to work in the mission field. That is one of the new conditions. The other is the inordinate value which in the development of commerce, and consequently of material comfort we have come to put upon business as a duty, and the need of comfort as a means to the best performance of business duty. We are so highly strung in this twentieth century life of ours, that we must be comfortable, even to a degree luxurious, if we are not to break down and die before our time. Thus we are confronted with the problem of unlimited opportunities for missionary work—at home as well as abroad, and in educational and benevolent as well as evangelistic lines—at such an enormous aggregate cost that even the wealth of to-day—the consecrated wealth, as we understand consecration—stands aghast at the demands made upon it. And the only way to meet the double difficulty is a new interpretation of life that shall recognize that the missionary and the benevolent and philanthropical opportunity are simply compelling in their claim.—Christian Work and Evangelist.

After half a century of very earnest work in behalf of China, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, for so many years the general director of the China Inland Mission, resigns his position and puts aside, in a large measure, the responsibilities which he has so long borne. His name has been widely known in connection with his long and useful service for the Master. Hereafter he will be known as the consulting director of the mission. In his letter of resignation he says: "I shall look back on fifty years since I sailed from Liverpool to China, with grateful acknowledgment for all the way God has led me." Mr. D. E. Hoste will succeed him as the general director of the China Inland Mission.—Exchange.

---

Sunday School Lesson.

---

 BY REV. H. G. HILL, D. D.

---

DAVID'S CONFESSION.

Ps. 51, 1-2. Oct. 18, 1903.

The most shameful blot upon David's character and the darkest chapter in his history is found in his dealing with Uriah, the Hittite, and his wife. It was conduct which involved many transgressions. It included deception, seduction, adultery and murder. It was expressly excepted by the Lord Himself in commending David's life of habitual obedience. It was sternly condemned by God and vividly painted by Nathan, the prophet. Though Jehovah assured David of ultimate forgiveness, yet he predicted that on account of these previous offenses, severe chastisement would be inflicted and dire ills would be experienced in his own household. David's subsequent history verified these predictions. In the 51st Psalm, we have a record of David's sore and sincere repentance for his aggravated sins, and it expresses the sentiments of every real penitent.

1. Mark David's Confessions.—He makes more than one confession. He admits his sin. He says, "For I acknowledge my transgressions and my sin is ever before me." He does not try to cover or to extenuate his sin to himself or before God. He confesses that his sin had been mainly against God. He exclaims "Against Thee, Thee only have I sinned; and done this evil in thy sight." He had sinned against his own soul, against Uriah and his wife, and against his people. But his sin against God had been so much greater that it dwarfs and obscures his sin against man. Confessing fully his sin and acknowledging it to be mainly against God, David also admits the depravity of his nature. He declares, "Behold, I was shaken in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me."

2. Note David's Prayers.—These are as instructive as his confessions. He prays for mercy shown in forgiveness. He entreats "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving kindness; according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies, blot out my transgressions." He asks for blood-cleansing. He says, "Purge me with hyssop and I shall be clean; wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." The hyssop-branch was used to sprinkle the blood of the sacrifices, typical of the blood of Christ that "cleanseth from all sin." He prays for a new heart. His language is "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." He desires the washing of regeneration as well as cleansing from guilt by the blood of Christ. Hence he says, "Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin." He yearns for restored joy and gladness. He petitions, "Make me to hear joy and gladness, that the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice." "Restore unto me the joy of Thy Salvation."

3. Consider David's Pleas.—Not only David's Confessions and Prayers deserve consideration, but the pleas or grounds upon which he bases his petitions. These are found not in himself, nor in the conduct of creatures, but in the Divine Nature, and in compliance with the terms that God had prescribed. David is relying upon God's "tender mercy, and loving kindness."

---

Westminster League.

---

 BY REV. HUGH W. HOON.

---

WHAT THE BIBLE TEACHES ABOUT GIVING.

Topic for October 25.

II Cor. 9:6-11; 8:9.—The subject of giving does not receive the attention of Christian people that its importance demands. Under the old dispensation there was no trouble to tell just what each person was to give to the Lord. The tithe was required. No right thinking man can claim that we who live under the dispensation of the gospel of Christ, are to give any less than this amount.

But in this as in all other questions we must have a starting place. About the best as well as the earliest starting place we can find is in the very first verse of the first chapter of Genesis. It reads, "In the beginning God created the Heavens and the earth." What a man brings into existence belongs to him. The same principle ought to be true with regard to God. There is nothing in this universe that He did not create. This being true it all belongs to Him.

The second thought to be considered is that man is God's steward. In the Bible, Christ tells the parable of the pounds. The faithful servants replied, "Thy pound" hath gained ten or five pounds. Even the unfaithful servant acknowledged the right of his Lord in the pound and replies, "I hid thy pound." But men do not like to think of themselves as the stewards of the Lord. When they give they want it to be understood that their little offerings are gifts. In this country the fact is recognized that rent money is a very important thing to be paid. If a land-owner rents his farm to another for so many bales of cotton, it goes without saying that those bales are to be paid the very first thing. They come before the grocer's bill or the dry goods merchant's bill. Disposing of rent cotton is a serious thing. It is considered stealing.

Upon this point a writer says in a recent work, "While the spirit of Old Testament benevolence is to be continued and enlarged, the observance of the Mosaic law is not enjoined. It is rather taken up by Paul and glorified, in that he makes an enlightened Christian conscience the standard by which our gifts are to be measured. Under the law, a tenth was the rule, but, sometimes much more was actually given. Numerous special offerings were made by the more prosperous, which in some cases, added an extra tithe, or more; but under grace no effort is made to determine by any specific enactment just what we shall give. It is clear, however, that if, under the old order of things, the setting apart of a tenth for religious purposes was essential to a life of fellowship with Jehovah, the standard has not been lowered for us who live under the Gospel's blazing light. We may safely go farther and say that, since our facilities for acquiring wealth are ever enlarging, and the objects of benevolence are ever increasing, much more is required for us; but only as a free-will offering." Paul looked into the future and saw that this whole subject would cause endless discussion if left undetermined by the Apostles. "Hence in one master effort, he lifted the whole subject up from the plane it had occupied for ages into the realm of love, where an enlightened judgment and a quickened sense of gratitude are brought into play in determining how much and to what particular objects we shall give. By planting the standard there he would remove all grounds of controversy a point so vitally connected with the growth of the Church and the ultimate salvation of mankind."

Contributed.

The Three R.s.

By The Country Parson.

The day has passed when "Read'n, 'Rit'n and 'Rith' are to be considered the acme of a finished education. Yet the day will never pass when a person who cannot read intelligently, write legibly, and add and subtract, multiply and divide correctly, can be considered well educated.

So the day will never pass when we can dispense with what Rowland Hill called the three R.s in religion, Ruin by the Fall, Redemption by the Blood, Regeneration by the Spirit.

See how the three R.s run through the Bible. First, ruin that came by Adam's sin, "by one man sin entered into the world"; that is universal, "all have sinned"; that is total, "the whole head is sick and the whole heart faint"; that is irremediable, "dead in trespasses and sins." Second, redemption that is found only in Christ, "neither is there salvation in any other"; that is the purchase of his atoning sacrifices "ye are not redeemed with corruptible things . . . but with the precious blood of Christ"; that is sufficient for a world of sinners, "he is the propitiation for our sins and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world"; that is efficient only for his believing people. "The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." Third, regeneration that is the direct work of the Holy Spirit, "born of the Spirit"; that is sovereign, "born not of blood, nor of the will of man, nor of the will of the flesh, but of God"; that is indispensable, "ye must be born again"; that is not by human works or merit, "not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost."

Now there are people in these modern days who would call these statements theology, and the preaching which is faithful to the three R.s, dry, dull, doctrinal. The reader will see, however, that I have simply put together in connected form familiar passages of Scripture, and where I have quoted one passage I might as readily have quoted ten. Hence if this be doctrinal preaching, the objection to such preaching is at bottom objection to scriptural preaching. No other sort of preaching than that built up on the three R.s is faithful to God's word, and no other sort ever did or could convert sinners and edify saints.

The Country Parson has formed a habit of testing all sermons which he hears or reads by the three R.s; and judged by this rule they may be brilliant literary gems, "so bright and inspiring, you know," but considered as sermons they are too often thin, poor stuff. Here for example, is that notable sermon to young men on "Manly Character" preached by Rev. Sylvester Skyrocket, D. D., and published in full by the Richville Daily Meteor. I note that this brilliant divine in this epoch-making effort, carefully avoids all reference to that death in sin which is a conspicuous feature in the character of every descendant of Adam. In what he has to say on "character building," he is equally careful to leave out of view the one foundation stone, a new heart wrought in men by the power of the Spirit of God. I note also that in his sermon there are a number of beautiful allusions to the life and example of Christ, but if the cross of Christ is anywhere in that sermon, it is so covered up with flowers that I fail to find it.

And this is not simply the judgment of one preacher on another. The members of our churches note the absence of the three R.s just as quickly and surely. I got a letter not long ago in which there was a reference to some pulpit performances which the writer did not admire, and there was a sentence to this effect: "I have gotten so tired of these brilliant literary efforts, with their nice little Bible stories and thin theology." What the writer missed was the three R.s, conspicuous by their absence from the preaching she had lately heard.

On the other hand, the Country Parson happened to be visiting a little while back in a strong country congregation, one of those mother churches which has sent out a steady stream of ministers and missionaries. He asked: "What is your preacher preaching about now?" The answer was "his last sermon was on the text, 'the exceeding sinfulness of sin.'" I did not inquire further. I knew no man could handle that sort of text without ringing the changes on the three R.s, feeding his people on the truths which bring the needs of a perishing world, and the needs of their own souls close home to their hearts.

Isn't it strange, by the way, that a truly converted man could preach in any other way than this? A man who has seen and felt that he was a guilty sinner lost to God; and been led by the Spirit to find peace through the blood of the cross, how can he help pointing out to other lost sinners their danger and the divine remedy? And how is it that preachers should seek popular applause and so-called success, in declaring "another gospel which is not another" and which moreover, is not what the mass of mankind are hungering to hear? They surely are blind to all the example of the past, of preachers like Whitfield, Spurgeon and Moody, who have had "the world for their parish" others like Rutherford, the Erskines, McCheynes and Payson, who being dead yet speak to us. These all were content to declare the threefold truth, ruin by the Fall, redemption by the Blood, regeneration by the Spirit—why should not the lesser lights of these latter days be willing to follow their example—"holding forth the word of life, that they might not run in vain, neither labor in vain?"

And so the Country Parson closes with this little bit of advice—first, to his brethren in the ministry: Look at that sermon, my dear brother, which you are preparing to preach next Sunday—are the three R.s in it? If not, tear it up and build it over again. Lay at the foundation the solemn fact that those hearers of yours are by nature lost, totally, universally, irremediably lost. Recognize the regenerating Spirit as the master workman, and cement the entire structure with the blood that was shed as a sacrifice for sin.

And to all who listen to or read sermons, let me say keep your ears and your eyes open for the three R.s. There is that brother who visited your church not so long ago, "with a view to a call"—did his trumpet give no uncertain sound along these lines? Were there the deep notes of compassion for lost souls, the tender melody of Calvary, the all-pervading harmony of the Spirit's power and grace, running through the music of the new preacher's voice, dominating his brilliant thought and captivating language?

The next sermon you see printed in the Standard, try it by the three R.s: if it measures up to them it is the sort of preaching which both saves the preacher and them that hear him; if not ———!

A Criticism of a Criticism.

Dear Editor: The careful readers of your editorial met the same surprise perhaps that I did in reading the article on "The Committee on the Proof Texts" in your issue of Sept. 30. It read so unlike the usual tone of the Standard that I had to wipe my glasses and rub my eyes several times, and then only found relief in the initials of the editor of the western office at the end of it. It makes a valuable contribution to the humor department, though it is not printed under that head for the most delicious humor is the unconscious variety. To read Dr. Leyburn's appeal to "parliamentary courtesy" as a salve to vicarious sensibility wounded by another man's being left off of one of the Assembly committees is funny enough, but to hear his reason why that other man ought to have been put on the committee is better than Josh Billings or Mark Twain. As he excludes himself from possible membership of such committees, (as he is himself a "new paper editor") and "writes on his own and sole re-nsibility," who is he so grieved about? Surely Dr. C. Gordon needs no such championship as this, and are left in painful doubt as to what "Billy Patten" is struck.

It will be news to the Church that Drs. Hall, Webb, Rickler, Beattie and King are open to the same or similar objections that apply to Dr. Gordon. And it news to everybody, I think, that unless one is a rider hobbies and a teacher of vagaries he is not fit to re-se the proof texts of our standards—but so read Dr. Ayburn's first and second replies!

As to the necessity for revising the proof texts there little doubt. A haphazard opening of the Confession of Faith at page 272. (Larger catechism On 113) Fords a singular evidence of this need, for under the head, "sinful lots," (note E.) our Westminster Divines, their Annotators, give Est. 3:7 and 9:24—instead Prov. 16:33. Reading back from this note, in the body of the same answer, gives us a delicious joke on the Westminster Divines themselves for these grave and reverend brethren of b'essed memory there solemnly assert that "sinful cursing" is forbidden by the third Commandment! What sort did they think was of sinful?

L. B. Johnston.

S. Boston, Va., Oct. 5 '03.

P. S. I believe I am getting to feel a little hurt that was left off of that committee as "one or two pastors," for I am pastor of two churches. L. B. J.

"Can It Be Possible?"

This question was recently asked under quite embarrassing circumstances, and with a marked betrayal of ignorant surprise. Three travellers on a train were engaged in discussing Calvinism. The topic, it seems, had been suggested by a brief reference to Calvinism in the morning paper. These men were by no means its friends. One in particular, whose manner betrayed a certain gushing superficiality, seemed to have a heapful of objections which he indiscriminately hurled at Calvinism (as he understood it) as the train counted off the miles. Presently an apparently timid man who had been listening to his slush, slander and caricature, turned, and with a singular calmness of voice and courtly dignity of manner, said to him "Has it ever occurred to you that there are serious objections against Arminianism?"

The question from this unknown man instantly provoked silence: instantly the face of the man flushed crimson; instantly the fire of antagonism which had flamed with such threatening fury languished in his eyes and in tones of ignorant surprise, he asked "Can it be possible?"

It seems almost incredible that, after the lapse of centuries, after all that has been said and written upon the subject, after all the pains on the part of Calvinists to define their position; that, after every imaginable opportunity to ascertain a correct understanding of the only system of theology that is of intrinsic value, any intelligent man should yet be uninformed or so completely blind. And yet the position of this man exhibits the biased and prejudiced position of many another who is blindly devoted to opinions which are merely pigments of the imagination; and in their ignorant self-confidence and self-complacence, it has never occurred to them that they might possibly be wrong, or that there might be serious objections to Arminianism.

In this day when the attention is directed to Calvinism with no favorable design: when the masses obtain their ideas of it from the secular paper and the popular novel; when few people think for themselves; when indiscriminate objections multiply without the piece of thought; when large numbers are called upon to surrender their convictions, unlearn all they have learned, bow the knee to Pope Liberal, it is well to bear in mind that there are serious objections to all anti-Calvinistic theories of salvation, and that in so far as these theories are "Evangelical," they are comprised under the one term "Arminianism." All theories of redemption which are evangelical in doctrine and motive are either Calvinistic or Arminian. There is no middle ground. A strenuous effort may be made to maintain a middle position, but the absurdity of it, and the Arminianism of it, will manifest itself, as is so often the case with Cumberland Presbyterian. In briefly comparing some features of these two systems the truth and force of the homely proverb will appear that "those who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

1. Arminianism exalts man and makes his will the chief end of God. Calvinism exalts God and makes his glory the chief end of man. A wide difference! The Arminian conditions God. Its favorite phase is that when God created man and endowed him with free moral agency God limited himself. Man in possession of a free will is unlimited, and from the nature of the case, God is limited. What! God limited, bound, powerless! By what means? By means of man's will. The Almighty is powerless and dependent, because man has a free will. The designs and purposes of Jehovah are perpetually liable to be charged and prostrated. Why? Because the volitions and actions of man are uncertain. The All-wise has no fixed plan in the government of the world. Why? Because he has no certain control over his creatures. He created man with a free will and when he did that he limited himself.

The God of the Arminian is a mere puppet conditioned by the volitions and actions of men. Such a view of God is not only incompatible with the divine perfections, not only derogatory to the glory of God, but it is incompatible with the very idea of the existence of a God. In the Scriptures the earth is called upon to rejoice, because the Lord omnipotent reigns; the confidence and trust of the human heart in special or particular providence is elicited because, while "a man's heart deviseth his way, yet the Lord directeth his steps"; the habit of prayer is encouraged on the assurance that God controls all things and will grant the petition of his children for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Arminian has no higher source of help or comfort than his own "free will." The Calvinist has the grace and sufficiency of God.

2. The next step will more clearly illustrate. The work of Christ according to the Arminian was without certainty and definiteness; whereas, the Calvinist maintains that Christ came into the world, suffered and died, to accomplish something. But according to the Arminian it was possible for Christ to have died in vain, died without saving a single soul, for instead of coming to save, to redeem, to reconcile, he came to make salvable, to make redeemable, to render reconcilable, and hence, his work on the cross has brought men into nothing more than salvable, redeemable, reconcilable, condition. Now look at it. All men are brought into this semi-saved condition and yet all are not saved. The work of Christ, therefore, is, and will ever be, a partial failure; and had no one accepted the overtures of mercy it would have been a total failure. All men are now in a semi-saved condition. They are mid-way up the pit of sin. How are they to get completely up? By an exercise of their free will in originating faith. On the contrary, the Scriptures teach that Christ is a complete savior, the author and finisher of faith. And so far as faith or any good work are considered as the condition or moving cause of man's election unto life, just so far does it detract from the merit of Christ and the infinite love of God which are the sole cause of salvation. Arminianism engenders spiritual pride and self-boasting, and no Arminian can consistently say "we are what we are by the grace of God"; for, if a man climbs one half of the way out of the pit by his own energy and strength he cannot consistently attribute his deliverance to another. If the Arminian partly saves himself he cannot shout with the ransomed "not unto us, not unto us, but unto thy name be all the praise."

3. Arminianism practically denies the necessity for any gospel at all. If God is the Father of all without distinction; if all are the children of God without distinction; if all are heathen without distinction, then, the gospel is not necessary. If all men are the children of God indiscriminately, then, as Dr. Webb has said, God has children in hell, which is contrary to the teaching of the Scriptures. This is the final outcome of the system which poses to be scriptural, and source of whose zealous advocates claim that the Arminian, alone, has to right the preach the gospel over the earth. God is the Father of all men by creation and all men are his children by creation. His true Fatherhood is restored and realized only in the redemption of Christ. By nature men are aliens from God and children of wrath, children of the devil and by regeneration they become the children of God. Heaven is their home and not hell; and when they die, they can confidently say "I am going home." This is Scripture; it is Calvinism; and Calvinism is "scripture full."

