It may be presumed that an amendment wrought out and worked over with such painstaking care will meet the needs of the Church as well as anything that we are likely to get. The Presbyteries seem to be taking this view of it. A goodly number of Presbyteries have already passed on it and without an exception their verdict has been favorable. This gratifying unanimity gives the assurance that the amendment will become law, and that consequently after the next Assembly, both the candidate and the Presbytery under whose care he has placed himself will know exactly what relation they sustain to each other and what duties and responsibilities they owe to each other.

Perhaps the most significant feature of this amendment is that touching the activities of the candidate while he is pursuing his course of preparation in the Theological Seminary. It is the custom now, and we suppose has ever been the custom, for students in the Seminary, especially those of the middle and senior years, to go out and preach in vacant pulpits on the Sabbath, and also to spend their vacations in supplying churches. This custom has much to commend it. It is a valuable part of the students' training, enabling him to combine practice with theory. It affords him an opportunity of rendering valuable service. Many students during their long vacations have thrown themselves with great zeal into the Lord's work, and with most gratifying results. Souls have been won to Christ and churches greatly revived and strengthened. In the chronic scarcity of ordained ministers, this work of the students comes in as a most valuable adjunct. Furthermore, the student is able by such labors, both during his vacations and during the sessions in the Seminary, to do much toward self-support. Such considerations make it seem eminently desirable that our theological students shall engage in preaching during their course of preparation in the Seminary.

On the other hand, it is manifestly the meaning and intent of the law of our Church, as expressed in Chapter VI, Section 6, of Form of Government, that no candidate for the ministry shall preach until he is formally licensed by his Presbytery. The meaning of licensure is authorizing the candidate to make trial of his gifts in preaching. The implication is that he has not hitherto made such trial. The prime reason for licensure is that a young man should first be tested before he is entrusted with so grave a responsibility. When licensure is granted it is expressly on the ground that the candidate has "given satisfaction as to his accomplishments in literature, as to his experimental acquaintance with religion, as to his proficiency in divinity and other studies," and as to his soundness in the faith by having "adopted the Confession of Faith and the Catechisms of the Church."

Hitherto our law and our practice have not harmonized, and this fact has been a source of embarrassment. The proposed amendment seeks to harmonize our practices with our law, by authorizing our "theological students to conduct public worship, to expound the Scriptures to the people and to engage in other forms of public work." In other words, the amendment would make legal what our students are doing, and what everybody wants them to do, but avoids the technical word preach, reserving that for the period of licensure.

The Redress of Wrongs.

When a war is sprung upon a peaceable people, it is only reasonable to expect many blunders and some injustice.

This truth, however, ought to palliate in a measure the wrong done, and make those who criticize very charitable in their judgment.

When the war was being waged and every energy of this nation was needed to save the world from threatened ruin, every moment's delay and every effort made to hamper the administration meant the death or maiming of more men than necessary. For this reason those in charge had to act at once and in a decided manner, which meant that much injustice was done. We had no patience with the protests then made against any action, because when a man's life is in danger he has no time to argue points of casuistry. When the life of people is at stake, it is foolish to be raising conscientious objections to war, such as was done. We can understand why a man's conscience would forbid his shooting his fellow man, but cannot understand why conscience would interfere with his doing other war work, such as trench digging, clerical work, etc. Yet we find that many had consciences so tender that they could not use a spade in trench digging, because trenches were a part of warfare.

However, under the rigorous rule of a court-martial many extreme sentences were passed and much injustice was done.

We should, however, remember that when a man's conscience begins to act when danger is near, it raises a suspicion of his sincerity. We have no doubt that the threatened smell of powder revealed to many a man that he had a conscience and made him more obedient to conscience than ever before.

Now that the war is practically over, the authorities are doing all that is possible to right the wrong done, and to restore men to liberty.

There are many societies in the North concerning themselves about this matter, and flooding the editor's desk with letters that are seldom read. We have confidence enough in the Administration to believe that they will do the right without any unsolicited advice.

The Moral Side of Political Questions.

The Continent in a leading editorial calls attention to the protest of a Southern Presbyterian minister against the Federal Council of Churches sending commissioners to the Peace Conference at Paris, instructed to express the hope of Evangelical Christians in America for the formation of a world's society of governments to prevent future wars.

The Continent thus quotes from the protest:

"I object because I firmly believe it is wrong for Churches of Christ to take any part in politics, and this is politics on the most colossal scale, being world's politics."

As a general thing the Continent and the Standard look at questions from a different view-point, and though we admire Brother Best, we can rarely agree with him.

On this question we do agree, and we take pleasure in making it plain why we do. With the first part of the protest we are in full sympathy, as the reading of this paper for years past will show. The Church should have nothing to do with politics; but the question is whether the Federal Council is in this matter having anything to do with politics.

The Council did two things, first through its commissioners it expressed a hope, not a command, nor even advice, but merely a hope. The object of this hope was to prevent future wars. It seems to us that if any action was ever removed from politics, this was. It was in strict line with the Church's work on earth, to establish the reign of the Prince of Peace by making wars impossible.

The work of the Peace Conference has a political side and also a moral side. The political side is the exact kind of League to be constituted, the question of boundaries and other matters pertaining to the various countries involved. The moral side is the prevention of war, the insuring of the world against the awful horrors of the past four years.

If there be any subject on earth with which the Church should have something to do, it would seem that this is one, and so far from being "politics on the most colossal scale," it is morality in the highest sense.

We have an action of our own Assembly in a case very similar to the present one. In 1890 Dr. W. A. Campbell, of East Hanover Presbytery, asked the Assembly to invite the co-operation of the several churches of our own and other countries in an effort to arbitrate international disputes, by petitioning the Civil Governments to take such steps as would make wars impossible. Dr. Moses Hoge and Dr. W. A. Campbell were appointed delegates to a proposed Conference that was to petition the Governments of the world to consent to arbitration in order to avoid war.

Now the Federal Council does not dictate, nor even advise, but merely expresses a hope that there may be formed a world society of governments pledged to prevent future wars. When we consider some of the actions of this Council in the past, we ought to commend them, rather than protest. Our brother "doth protest too much, methinks."

The Discussion of the Tithe.

We have on our table a strong article on the tithe and also offers of other articles on the subject.

We have decided, however, to admit none except those upholding it, as we wish to do nothing to hamper the Stewardship Campaign.

Those advocating the tithe seem unable to grasp the idea that a man may oppose the claim that a tithe is morally binding, and yet recognize it as a method that is reasonable and valuable.

Though we have disclaimed any intention of opposing the tithe as a method of raising money, they refuse to give us that credit, so we shall give all the space possible to those who contend for its binding force, promising ourselves the pleasure of a full and free discussion when all danger of terfering with the Stewardship Campaign is past. We earnestly advise our readers, whether they believe in its binding force or not, to take the tithe as a minimum and determine to give more than the Jew of old did.

While we have never given, with the tithe as a measure, but as the Lord has prospered us, we found upon balancing accounts this year that we had gone considerably beyond the tithe, trying not to omit the weightier matters of the law.

What we want to do just now, is not to discuss mooted points, but to raise $3,500,000 for the Lord's work.

Let us act now and talk at our leisure.

"Perilous Times" Have Come.

It is not for us to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in His own power, and for that reason we have no sympathy with the craving, so manifest in these days, to know whether we are nearing the end of the world.

Our great business here is to be ready for that time when it does come, and to be found in our place doing the Lord's work.

Whether in the sense used by Paul in writing to Timothy, we are not prepared to say, but we do know that the times in which we live are full of peril, not only with regard to the war, but especially peril to the souls of men. The home and the church were once the places where men and women and children were protected from error. Children were trained in the catechism and the Bible, and as they grew older, they were carefully guarded against error found in books, and at the fireside, in the family circle, safeguards of every kind were thrown about them. The pulpit was safe, and under its teachings men and women were so filled with the pure Gospel that error could find no lodgement in their minds.

Gradually a great change has crept into our customs. The old ways have been forced to give place before the modern rush. The family altar has almost disappeared, except in some quiet country home. The demands of business have been pushed into a place where it has to wait for a more convenient season.

The catechism is almost as unknown as the extinct dodo, while Scripture instruction has gone to join the other lost arts.

The home has given place to the apartment house, where the husband is only a visitor during hours he can snatch from business, and where the wife rests when she is not attending clubs or playing bridge.

The pulpit is struggling manfully against the rite of unbelief, and many are faithful among the faithless.

On the other hand the old-time Gospel has too often been forced to give place to sermons on social betterment or quasi political deliverances.

These would be harmless enough if no other indictment could be brought; but the pulpit is too often used to spread error, or to tear to pieces the Word of God. Instead of the pure literature the parents once demanded for their children, the public libraries are filled with books dealing with subjects that the young were once supposed to know nothing about.

Then the Sunday newspaper has superceded the Bible and devotional books, with the result that those who do attend church crave the sensational.

The remedy for all these abuses lies in the hands of God's people. They must set their faces steadily against these evils. They must erect once more the family altar and begin anew the teaching of the catechism.

They must watch what their children read, and they must resolve to give more time to the oversight of their sons and daughters. What we need is more old-time family religion, and more sense of responsibility for our fellow men.

We must look not only upon our own things, but also upon the things of others.

The Soldier in Peace Times

By Rev. S. W. Moore.

SINCE you were kind enough to give space to my letter of last October concerning our work with the boys over here, I have thought it might interest their parents and friends who are readers of the Presbyterian Standard to know how it goes with them in these days of peace. And that thought has prompted this second letter.

Shortly after my letter to you in October our boys again moved up to the front, near Verdun, on the road from Verdun to Metz. They had been there only a few days when they were called out about daylight on Saturday morning, November 9, and from that day until 11 a. m. November 11 they saw fighting and were under heavy shell fire. And may I say that personally I know many sounds far more pleasant than the continual "ping" of shrapnel and the whistle of bullets coming perilously near! Unfortunately some of our splendid boys did not hear the sounds of the ones that made of them the supreme sacrifice. And it was a very sad ceremony to see them laid away on the morning after the signing of the armistice, when the earth was flooded with such glad sunshine and sweet peace had come after four years and more of such horrible strife!

Truly peace never had such a welcome sound as at 11 o'clock on that morning of November 11. For days the roar of the big guns, the rattle of the machine guns, the whirr of airplanes had been continuous. I was walking up the road near Verdun carrying some supplies to the boys, and was just behind the big 75s as they fired the last volley. And then when all at once everything became so quiet and peaceful it was hard to realize that the great war was over!

Our first Sunday after the armistice was spent quietly some distance back from the front. It was a still, cold morning, and the church call, the prettiest in the army, never sounded so clear and sweet to us as it did that Sabbath morning. I think Parsons, our rosy-cheeked, blue-eyed bugler from Tennessee, a fine Christian boy and soldier, put his whole heart into that call, and it seemed to me that with greater eagerness and gladness than ever before the boys answered the call and came trooping into the old chair factory for morning worship. A great company of them, grateful to God for life and health after such dangers as they had passed through. And how they did sing that morning! And what an opportunity to press upon them the claims of the Master! It will be many a day before I will have another such privilege and opportunity as came to me that day. I was glad to be there!

It was at first reported that we would follow up the Germans as they withdrew. But instead we turned our faces southward, and after many days of hard marching we arrived here, at Riel-les-Eaux, a little French village, on the River Ource, some distance from Chaumont, Haute Marne. Here we have been for a little more than two months, and we are very anxious to get home—naturally. We have a fairly comfortable Y. M. C. A. barrack building, and we are trying to make it as homelike and comfortable for the boys as we can. We have moving pictures—good ones, too—once a week. But lectures and other forms of entertainment are difficult to get. The boys get up a good entertainment among themselves each Thursday night. And we have had two or three good concerts and entertainments by visiting soldiers. But the thing that pleases me most, and is the thing of greatest importance, is the interest of the boys in the religious part of the work. We have a fine Sunday School, interesting weekly prayer meeting, and well attended Sunday preaching services. Each company in the battalion has its own Sunday School class and officers, and the superintendents of the company classes take turns in conducting the opening and closing exercises of the entire school. And they do it well. I am sure it would please the friends and parents of these young men if they could look in upon them some Sunday morning and see nearly every man in the class with his New Testament opened and following with attention and interest the lesson for the day. I hope we are training some good Sunday School superintendents, teachers and workers for the churches back home—and that these will find the men of the churches back at home interested in these spiritual things, so that no damper will be thrown upon their youthful enthusiasm! I am greatly in hopes that the churches at home, especially the men of the churches, will be awake to their opportunities when these young men return from the army. They have been up against the realities of life in the army, and have, I believe, come to realize as never before the value of things spiritual and eternal. When they return to the States I hope they will not find the men at home indifferent to these things. If they do, the effect will be bad. I hope the men at home and the women, too, will realize their opportunity, and use it wisely!

The boys seem to be in remarkably good health and fairly cheerful spirits, everything considered. But they certainly want to get home. Our first six weeks here it rained almost constantly, and the mud was something fierce! If the Prophet Isaiah could have foreseen this incident he would have had to make one exception at least to his exclamation, "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace and bring good tidings of great joy." For after one had pulled through the mud, and carried much of it with him to the barrack building and mounted the platform to preach, his feet presented anything but a beautiful appearance! However, a rock walk remedied that trouble, and recently everything has been frozen up tight, so we hope we are through with the mud here. We hope to be on our way home before the spring rains begin.

From An Ambulance Corps Contributor.

Sir: In the elbow box of my ambulance along with the cigarettes and the brandy I have been carrying George Gissing's "Born in Exile." The latter for me, the other for the wounded poilus. I was on twenty-four-hour duty yesterday at a poste de secours a few yards from the lines. A quiet poste, not many wounded; so in between my runs I snuggled up to a fireplace and let Gissing speak. In chapter V of Part II, I found the following:

"My own experience has been among the lower classes—I don't mean the very poorest, of whom one hears so much nowadays; I never went among them because I had no power of helping them, and the sight of their vileness would only have moved me to unjust hatred. But the people who earn enough for their needs, and whose spiritual guide is the Sunday newspaper—I know them, because for a long time I was obliged to lodge in their houses. Only a consuming fire could purify the places where they dwell. Don't misunderstand me; I am not charging them with what are commonly held vices and crimes, but with the consistent love of everything that is ignoble, with utter deadness to generous impulse, with the fatal habit of low mockery. And these are the people who really direct democratic movement. They set the tone in politics; they are debasing art and literature; even the homes of wealthy people begin to show the effects of their influence. One hears men and women of gentle birth using phrases which originate with shop-boys; one sees them reading print which is addressed to the coarsest million. They crowd to the entertainments which are deliberately adapted to the lowest order of mind. When commercial interest is supreme, how can the tastes of the majority fail to lead and control?"

Dr. Ogden's Plan

By Rev. E. M. Green, D.D.

WE Kentuckians, who are said to have the reputation of wanting the best of what is going, have congratulated ourselves that one of the churches of our Synod has secured the pastoral services of the distinguished young minister who for the past ten years has served with conspicuous ability the famous old Central Church of Atlanta. We welcome him to our Synod and congratulate the church of Stuart Robinson, John W. Pratt, C. R. Hemphill, Egbert W. Smith and J. M. Vander Meulen on adding to this illustrious list of pastors, the name of Dunbar H. Ogden. We predict for him a successful career in his new and important pastorate, and for the church enlargement and growth.

We have read with interest Dr. Ogden's recent contribution to the somewhat thread-bare subject of church union. We refer to it not to discuss the merits of his proposed plan, but to express regret that coming among us he should have found "so much of difficulty and heartburning." He thinks that his "brethren in the heart of the Church cannot realize the problem that exists on the border." How has he discovered so quickly what we who have lived here many years have never suspected? We know of no "heart burnings," nor of any "difficult problems." Dr. Ogden allows local disturbances here and there too much to affect his judgment of the situation as a whole.

The two Churches, Northern and Southern, have for years, with a perfect understanding of each other, been working harmoniously in the advancement of common interests. Within a square of Dr. Ogden's church stands a splendid monument of this spirit of fraternal co-operation—a theological seminary, second to none in the land as to equipment, its uncompromising orthodoxy, the ability and learning of its faculty and the high grade of theological instruction furnished.

Together these churches have worked with hearty accord in maintaining a Christian college which for a hundred years has been a blessing to the Church and the country, and in this centennial year they are engaged in a united effort to add a half-million of dollars to its endowment. Singly and together they have worked successfully in building up colleges of high grade for young women.

Side by side and shoulder to shoulder they have labored to give the Gospel to the vast mountain population of the State and have established among them, schools, colleges and orphanages.

Before Dr. Ogden came to Kentucky he was invited by the present writer to come to this Synod and witness the practical solution of the union problem, in which he was so interested, in the spirit of Christian unity that prevails, and the hearty co-operation in every good work. He has only to open his eyes to see it.

Dr. Ogden may not be informed as to the peculiar relations of the Southern Assembly to the Synod of Kentucky. When the Synod came in 1867 seeking union with our Assembly, they naturally wanted some guarantee that this Assembly was in substantial agreement with them in the principles and doctrines for which they had been contending for seven years, so that they would have no recurrence of the difficulties from which they had suffered in the past. They presented a paper of remarkable ability, the work of Stuart Robinson's great brain, a paper deserving to be classed with the "Magna Charta" and other great documents of history, setting forth fully the principles and doctrines which they held and for which they had contended, and proposed it as the basis of a covenant for organic union. The Assembly was thrilled by the reading of the paper, accepted the proposed platform and the two bodies entered into solemn covenant forever to hold, maintain and defend these principles and doctrines. Our Church is therefore bound by solemn covenant and pledge never to imperil these great principles and doctrines by union with a Church which has persistently and systematically violated them, nor with any other Church which will not covenant with her to maintain them forever.

Dr. Ogden charges that our committee on conference at the last Assembly "took as its task the digging up and magnifying of every possible objection to union." Not at all. They presented a formidable array of objections indeed, but by no means all, nor the strongest that could have been stated. On the other hand he claimed that the basis for union proposed by the committee of the Northern Church was "clear cut and forward looking." So it was. It was a fine statement of the platform upon which our Church had been standing for fifty-seven years.

But it was not the platform on which the Cumberland Church was received. It was not the platform on which the great New School body was received. It was not the platform on which they themselves were standing when they offered it to us.

In all this wearisome discussion of church union there is singular, and it may be significant, silence about doctrinal soundness. This is a day in which doctrinal truth is sadly discounted, church union is rated high above church purity and soundness in the faith. Referring to this lamentable fact of which we have painful evidence on every hand, one of the wisest and most observant ministers of our Church said a few days ago that unless this tendency to depreciate truth were checked, unless effort were discouraged of bringing churches together under emotional impulses, regardless of vital and fundamental truth, he would look in the near future for a great apostasy. The Church is the pillar and ground of the truth. If it does not stand for the truth, it is nothing.

Home Mission Day in the Sabbath School --March 30th.

The world war is past, and the Reconstruction Era confronts us. All thoughts turn to the church to lead in solving the problems which stagger us, and all denominations realize that Home Missions must receive new emphasis and a larger place in the interest, study, prayers and gifts of the Lord's people in this epoch-making period.

No phase of Home Missions is more vital to the future of our country and to the Kingdom of Christ than the work among the foreigners within our bounds. Our program for Home Mission Day in the Sabbath School is entitled "Our Open Gates," and deals with this phase of the work. Programs, pageants and envelopes are furnished free to all schools which will observe the day.

For the benefit of those schools which prefer it, we have prepared lessons based on the work conducted by our Home Mission Committee among these foreigners; and these lessons can be used March 30, the Review Sabbath of the quarter. Children and adults can be equally interested by these alternative methods of getting the facts before the Sabbath School.

Will not the superintendents and teachers join with us in this effort to educate the young in missions, and at the same time give them the opportunity to take part in Americanizing and Christianizing these foreigners, dependent on us for the means of grace?
S. L. Morris, Secretary.

He Faileth Not.

He who hath led will lead
All through the wilderness;
He who hath fed will feed;
He who hath blessed will bless;
He who hath heard thy cry,
Will never close His ear;
He who hath marked thy faintest sigh,
Will not forget thy tear.
He loveth always, faileth never;
So rest on Him, today, forever!

Again the Tithe

By C. R. Harding.

Dear Dr. Editor:

DOUBTLESS everything has been said and written that can be said or written on the subject of the Tithe, so far as these can influence a student who has reached a definite and positive opinion as to duty in the matter. And yet, because the question though so old still seems to be a live and indeed a lively one, if we may judge, for example, by the last issue of the Standard, let the writer say one or two things and ask one or two questions.

Your editorial note on the Tithe Law is interesting to a degree, but to those who take an opposing view some one or two of the statements therein seem strange. You say, "Let us remember that the tithe was given when men lived under the bondage of the law, while we live under the covenant of grace, where all that pertains to worship should be spontaneous. . . ."

"Our idea is that the tithe as a matter of convenience (italics mine) should be the minimum, for no one would like to think that a Jew could outgive him. The New Testament rule is to give as the Lord has prospered you, laying by in store."

Any one reading the above would imagine that God's law of old to the Jew, the Ten Commandments was bondage and as a slave and not as a child he should obey them, and as for spontaneity and cheerfulness in obedience to these commandments even down to tithing that was a thing not to be desired or expected under the old dispensation and that spontaneity and generosity were graces to be developed only under the new dispensation.

Again you make the tithe "a matter of convenience" and as a thing by which one might flatter his pride, "for no one would like to think that a Jew could outgive him."

Of course you do not, Mr. Editor, mean for your words to be thus interpreted, though they permit such an interpretation. Not only so, but as you and the whole church know, under the preaching of so many of the ministers of the Christian dispensation through the centuries to the effect that the tithe has no binding force of any sort it is everywhere true in the Christian Church that whether "one would like to think that a Jew could outgive him" or not, the Jew has outgiven him through all these centuries that the church has been playing with this matter of evangelizing the world and falling short of her duty financially because she has allowed the Jew to outgive and has refused to see God's plan in the tithe.

But conceding for argument's sake the fact that the tithe as a practice among God's people is older than the Mosaic law—in practice even among the benighted heathen of early ages—conceding the fact that our Lord certainly did not condemn the practice in His day, even if it be perversely argued that He did not endorse it—conceding the fact that there is no "thus saith the Lord" enjoining the duty, how can reasonable, open-minded, earnest followers of Jesus Christ argue that there is no moral obligation, no imperative duty resting upon them, when world-wide evangelization is the goal, to give at least as much as God commanded the Jew to give, when no such world field was open to him. It seems to me that the greater the task the larger the responsibility. How can a Christian man imagine that God will be pleased with less from him than the Jew, nor how can he imagine with the Bible before him that less than a tithe is a positive affront to God, when he prates about his liberty in Christ Jesus? Or being under grace and not under law and then does less as a son than the Jew as a slave, if you will, was bidden do! It seems to me a Christian stultifies himself in claiming here, that he has a right, if he so wishes, to give less than a tithe.

I suppose you advocates of anti-tithe claim that it is not expressly commanded in the New Testament. But the inference many of us think is undeniable. Practically all of the early Christian Church was formed of converted Jews and proselytes to the old Jewish faith. They knew nothing else but tithing. The Apostle argued as they that minister about holy things live of the things of the temple, and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar, even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel. The former lived under the tithing system, the inference is that the latter, if they are to have a competent living are to live under a like system. And because men have been wise above that which is written and have refused to see and then to follow God's plan for financing the Gospel, the ministry and all things ecclesiastical have suffered want and are still suffering.

How, again, is it that scholars and learned men continue to quote the Apostle Paul's utterance about "Let every one of you lay by him in store, as God has prospered him," an utterance called forth by his desire to have a collection for the poor saints at Jerusalem, as if that advice replaced the tithe?

Some one will say if the Apostle meant "tithe" he could have easily said so. Yes, he could. And he could just as easily given some specific command about the observance of the Fourth Commandment if he had wished, but he did not. On the contrary he wrote (Col. 2:16-7): "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day (yearly feast), or of the new moon (monthly feast), or of a Sabbath day (weekly)."

But conservative scholarship still holds to the binding obligation of the Fourth Commandment.

Some things to some minds seem to be unavoidable inferences. The tithe is one of these. If not commanded, and it is not in so many words, surely in the light of all the facts it is a moral obligation as the minimum for a Christian in giving.

A Voice From Heaven.

I shine in the light of God,
His likeness stamps my brow;
Through the valley of death my feet have trod,
And I reign in glory now,
No breaking heart is here,
No keen or thrilling pain,
No wasted cheek where the frequent tear
Hath rolled and left its stain.

I have found the joy of heaven;
I am one of the angel band,
To my head a crown is given,
And a harp is in my hand:
I have learned the song they sing
Whom Jesus hath made free,
And the glorious walls on high still ring
With my new born melody.

Do I forget? Oh, no!
For memory's golden chain
Still binds my heart to the hearts below,
Till they meet and touch again.
Each link is strong, is strong and bright,
And love's elastic flame
Flows freely down, like a river of light,
To this world from which I came.

Do you mourn when another star
Shines out from the glittering sky?
Do you weep when the voice of war
And the rage of the conflict die?
Then why should your tears roll down
And your heart be sorely riven,
For another gem in the Saviour's crown,
And another soul in heaven?

The Story of a Wonderful Gift

By Rev. Thornwell Jacobs, D.D.

FOR ten long years Oglethorpe University has been making a brave fight for her beautiful ideal of life. She has appealed to those who love the good, the true, and the beautiful. She has insisted that her buildings, her halls and rooms and equipment should outline in themselves all that her teachers put into their lectures. So the one lone building has stood superb and majestic on Peachtree Road since nineteen-fifteen, the most beautiful, the most efficient and the most expressive academic structure in the South, the massiveness of her walls, the elegance of her adornment and the honesty of her construction bearing witness to the quality of soul that is within her.

And in her dignified silence there was hope; hope that she would draw likeminded spirits to herself; that some day a man or woman would come and seeing how she had breathed her soul into her children, would say, "I also want to take part in this great spiritual adventure. I will build a mate for you."

Five years had passed since a memorable morning in Chattanooga when the now president of the institution was telling the Oglethorpe story to the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of that city. It was the sixty-sixth pulpit in which this had been done, and he was praying that, like all the others, they would give not less than one thousand dollars to the enterprise. But the Great War was on, the times were perilous, many new needs and calls were insistent in their cries. Then after the service a man with iron gray hair and kindly eyes came forward:

"How much do you want me to give?" he asked.

"From a penny up," was the answer.

"Well, I think I will give you about ten thousand," he said.

Now for years the Oglethorpe representatives had been raising and receiving gifts, but always in small sums: a few dollars, a few cents, never more than two hundred dollars in cash at one time, and so the joke of the remark was all he saw.

"Put it there," he said, laughing.

"How shall I pay it?" the man asked.

"Cash on demand," laughed the Oglethorpe man, carrying on the joke.

The man wrote it down and handed back the paper.

"It is some kindly weak-minded fellow," thought the Oglethorpe Pleader as he showed it to Dr. Bachman, the pastor.

But the Doctor's face was lighting up, and he had taken the man with the iron gray hair and the kindly eyes by the hand and was saying:

"Splendid! Lupton, Splendid!"

That was the first large gift Oglethorpe University ever received, and the spirit of its giving was greater even than the amount. It was the spontaneous generosity of a fine soul who saw an ideal and put its power back of it. It was as if God said: "I will let this dream live in stone and steel. See, I have touched a heart for you, one that can help, now go and set your torch aglow."

When the news of it reached Atlanta it gave new power and faith to all the backers of Oglethorpe. It put a new joy in their hearts and a new will into their efforts. They added their checks to it, larger checks, and by the hand of God the great building rose to her tasks.

And at those tasks she has labored for nearly three years. She has breathed into the souls of her boys the breath of the one beautiful ideal that the world holds. As she was unsurpassed in elegance so she would have her sons unsurpassed in character. Her honesty of construction, her beauty of design, her dignity of posture, her refinement of sentiment, her openness of welcome, her loyalty to the truth, her reverence of her Maker, all these, as a mother, she kept giving to her boys and the man in Chattanooga kept watching her.

And one day—February 6 was the happy date—she saw the Oglethorpe Pleader again. The thing that faith knew would some day happen was come. The beautiful answer to the prayer that would not end was ready. The Founder of all that is good and true and beautiful was about to speak a word to all those who see Him and trudge unceasingly onward in search for His glory.

For it was on that day that Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Lupton gave to Oglethorpe University, in memory of Mr. Lupton's mother, a mate for the beautiful structure that had so long waited its coming.

And the news of their generous gift to set forward the ideal that is building Oglethorpe will, as before, put a new zest and a deepened faith into the hearts of her thousands of friends in Atlanta, not only, but throughout the whole nation as well. Others will follow their leadership in the future as in the past. Out of the shadows of that future (which belong to God) other hands will be stretched forward to help; but of the big-hearted man in Chattanooga and of his lovely generous wife it will ever be said: "Their faith did not follow others and therefore our love shall forever follow them."

A Fine Work.

(Some sixty days ago, we published in the Church papers a request that some church should engage the services of a young colored girl, Eugenia Dennis, who has been working for the past two years at Nacoochee Institute, Ga.

She had been compelled to give up her work there through lack of funds for carrying it on, and her conduct at the Conference for Colored Women, at Tuscaloosa, as well as the splendid recommendation she got from our own white teachers at Nacoochee, made it seem most advisable that her services be retained in some place of usefulness in our church.

The following extract from a letter from her shows the novel and splendid position which came to her as the result of that call. Surely there are many churches in our Assembly that could use a trained, consecrated colored girl along lines similar to these, being followed out by the church at Greensboro.

Mrs. W. C. Winsborough).

"I have waited a while to write you because for the past months my work, at least part of it, was only temporary; now that it is permanent I give you in full my work.

In the slums of Greensboro the white Presbyterians have a mission. Each Sunday afternoon the children of this district and many grown people came to this mission for class work.

There are five white teachers. I am the only colored. There are, however, many children in this district who could come, but have not as yet been interested enough to come out.

During the week I visit the homes of these children and prevail with their parents to let them come to our mission. If their clothes are not sufficient I am to meet the children one afternoon each week, and prepare their clothes, mending or even making, washing and ironing, if need be.

I visit the sick and having had experience in nursing, I am able to give them advice along that line. I go to the homes of the aged and read the Bible to them or even help them with whatever I can, such as mending and the like. Other than this work I have charge of white Presbyterian church rooms, caring for their dining room, kitchen, table linen, and occasionally at some of their meetings I serve refreshments.

I am paid a very good salary, and like my work so well that I would not give it up for anything. The Conference of Tuscaloosa helps me wonderfully, and I plan to meet it the next time. I also have much to thank you for, for it was through you that I am here."

Eugenia Dennis.

An Improbable Charge

THE Rev. Dr. Gosoftly was on the committee (or commission) to install Rev. N. Thusiastic Youngblood as pastor of Flintrock Church. The young minister with his affable wife and their five children, the oldest a boy of high school age, had just been settled in the manse, and with his modern training and ambitious spirit he was ready for the new work that opened before him.

A large congregation was assembled—all rejoicing over the new pastor. The proceedings of the installation were in progress, and when the venerable doctor was called upon to charge the pastor, after felicitating the young minister and the church on the happy occasion and urging upon the new pastor the usual admonitions concerning his own piety in home and study and among his people, the doctor continued:

And I would urge upon you, my brother, to preach the Gospel. These good old Southern Presbyterians can stand it strong. They even can take a good deal of election and predestination and the sovereignty of God, and as these doctrines are in the Book you will not have to leave them out for policy's sake. But perhaps policy might limit some of your applications. For instance, there may be some of your listeners whose eyesight is poor and they have never seen the golden rule, and whose nerves are tender on the subject of money-making. Be gentle with them—a few rude sentences about exorbitant rents and outrageous prices on goods or dividends on stocks that are plain stealing, poor factory conditions that menace life and health of laborers, and a lot of other rant of that order will soon give your audience nervous prostration. Indeed if you searched you would find them prostrate in bed on Sabbath mornings instead of listening to your impractical applications.

Again, you must be cautious about what you say regarding worldly amusements. From the spread of bridge-whist among our churches it would seem that those good old times are returning—so vividly and alluringly depicted by George Eliott and Thackeray—when even the ministers joined their parishioners in those happy social gatherings and sometimes the parsons had to borrow a shilling or two so as to be able to share in the excitement. Of course it brought on the Wesleyan revival, but why rob people of pleasure or emphasize serious things now? The war is over and the Almighty's wrath won't break on our heads for a while at least—so "On with the dance,

Let joy be unconfined."

And that's another thing. Perhaps you'll find the modern dance is creeping into your homes. Be careful. Do not offend by slashing promiscuously at what prudes call a dangerous exercise. Of course everybody doesn't know that after nearly every dance many of the excited young men wander to the homes of those whose feet lead down to hell—and thus pollute their own lives and run the risk of bringing disease and deformity into the lives of others. The fair daughters of your deacons and elders, whose dishabille and charming eyes have been the innocent causes, are safely received back into the arms of their parents and relate what a perfectly glorious time they have had, their pure eyes blind to present harm and future menace. No, all do not know these things, and if you speak of them you will only offend. You must be careful too about laying too great emphasis on Christian Stewardship. The reticence of the ministry on this subject is without doubt the reason that the Gospel ministry is poorest paid profession; but let others sound the trumpet—not you. Of course your salary, which is hardly adequate now, will shrink as you and your family grow in your requirements. You will need books; you will need to attend conferences; you must dress well in order not to be a reproach to your excellent congregation; your children must be educated. Do not complain. If no call comes to arouse your church to the danger of losing you, don't be impatient. Go to the bank and keep a note of a hundred or so dollars with the cashier. He won't require endorsement. The fat would soon be in the fire if you had to worry your leading men with endorsing your notes. The cashier knows this and he knows you will pay. Character is good collateral. Keep a note in the bank and don't fail to pay your merchants' bills. Don't fret and don't let your wife fret or worry because your salary is insufficient to meet your expenses. Your church is simply helping to answer your prayer to be kept poor and humble.

Indeed, dear brother, all this is part of the reproach of the cross. Remember the Carpenter who redeemed the world received no salary and had no home. Of course that does not exonerate the church, but remember the words of the Psalmist. "I know, O Lord, that Thy judgments are right and that in faithfulness Thou hast afflicted me," and strive on. Spend nerve, brain and time. Use feet and hands. If you are not appreciated now, the day approaches when you will be. Be pastor, witness, preacher, comforter, president, choir-ster, social secretary, presbyter. Be it all, but not for money. The crown is not silver, but is made of rejoicing, a texture not of earth. Glory is waiting and a Master's applause.

The Inter-Church World Movement Approved.

The Interchurch World Movement has received the unqualified and unanimous approval of the responsible representatives of the Conference and Councils of Protestant Churches of America.

The Home Missions Council, Men's and Women's, approved it unanimously. The Foreign Secretaries' Conference, Men's and Women's, do likewise. So do the Educational Council of the Protestant Churches. The Sunday International Conference has acted in like manner.

In addition to this, twelve (12) of the Boards, Home and Foreign, had officially adopted it up to last week.

A general and executive committee has been formed and is at work.

It will be remembered that this work was undertaken in response to a call from Southern Presbyterians to the Boards of Northern America. The object of that call was to see if the time had come, and if plans could be devised for a United Survey, a United Educational Campaign, and a United Financial drive in behalf of the work of the boards and agencies represented.

The General Assembly of our church, and the supreme judicatories of all the churches, will be asked to definitely approve the plans at their coming meetings.

Dr. Chas. H. Pratt, Secretary of the Foreign Mission

Executive Committee at Nashville, Tenn., has been called as Executive Secretary of the Inter Church World Movement. It is understood the committee has agreed to loan him temporarily to this work. Dr. Pratt will move to New York at once.

The Prayer of One Growing Old.

Be with me, Lord! My home is growing still.
As one by one the guests go out the door;
And they who helped me once to do thy will Behold and praise thee on the heavenly shore.

Uphold my strength! My task is not yet done,
Nor let me at my labor cease to sing;
But from the rising to the setting sun
Each faithful hour do service to my King.

Show me thy light! Let not my wearied eyes
Miss the fresh glory of the passing day;
But keep the light of morn—the sweet surprise
Of each new blessing that attends my way.

And for the crowning grace! O Lord, renew
The best of gifts thy best of saints have had;
With the great joy of Christ my heart endure
To share the whole world's tears, and still be glad.

Permanent Buildings for Lees-McRae, Banner Elk, N. C.

By Miss Estelle McIver.

THE time has come when Lees-McRae Institute must make preparations for new buildings. The old graded school dormitory and recitation building, containing class rooms, music rooms, and auditorium, are old, dilapidated and inadequate and the work cannot be satisfactorily carried on in them many more years.

They have been added to and patched up on the outside until—well “they look the part.” The inside walls have been re-papered or painted over and over, in the effort to brighten them up a bit, and the floors scrubbed till the splinters on them make “the keeping clean” process a difficult and discouraging task. How many feet have gone back and forth, back and forth over these old floors?

The school building and part of the dormitory have been used for eight months for the last eighteen years, and during that time over 1,500 pairs of feet have gone about the daily routine, here, there and everywhere over every spot!

Where are those girls and boys who were once pupils in these rooms? More than twenty of them are nurses—one of these volunteered with her class to go to the stricken city of Wilmington in the recent epidemic, and by the way, she was the only one of the number who escaped the disease. One is a Red Cross nurse in France. One of the graduates is under appointment for the foreign field.

A number of these girls are teaching in public schools. Many of them are mothers, and are looking to Lees-McRae for the education of their little children. For several years now L. M. I. has had a number of her “grandchildren” in the primary grades, and one “grandchild” boarded in the dormitory last year.

Two of the day pupils are pastors of flourishing churches—another is at Hampden-Sidney—a candidate for the ministry. - Three of these “small boys” are lieutenants of the army. Another a Y. M. C. A. secretary during the closing months of the war.

Does the work pay? Shall it go on?

The school owns valuable property of 250 acres of land, a flour mill and saw mill, and a 100-horse power hydroelectric plant, with a splendid concrete dam.

This institute in the eighteen years of its existence has transformed hundreds of lives and homes. Far reaching possibilities are just ahead.

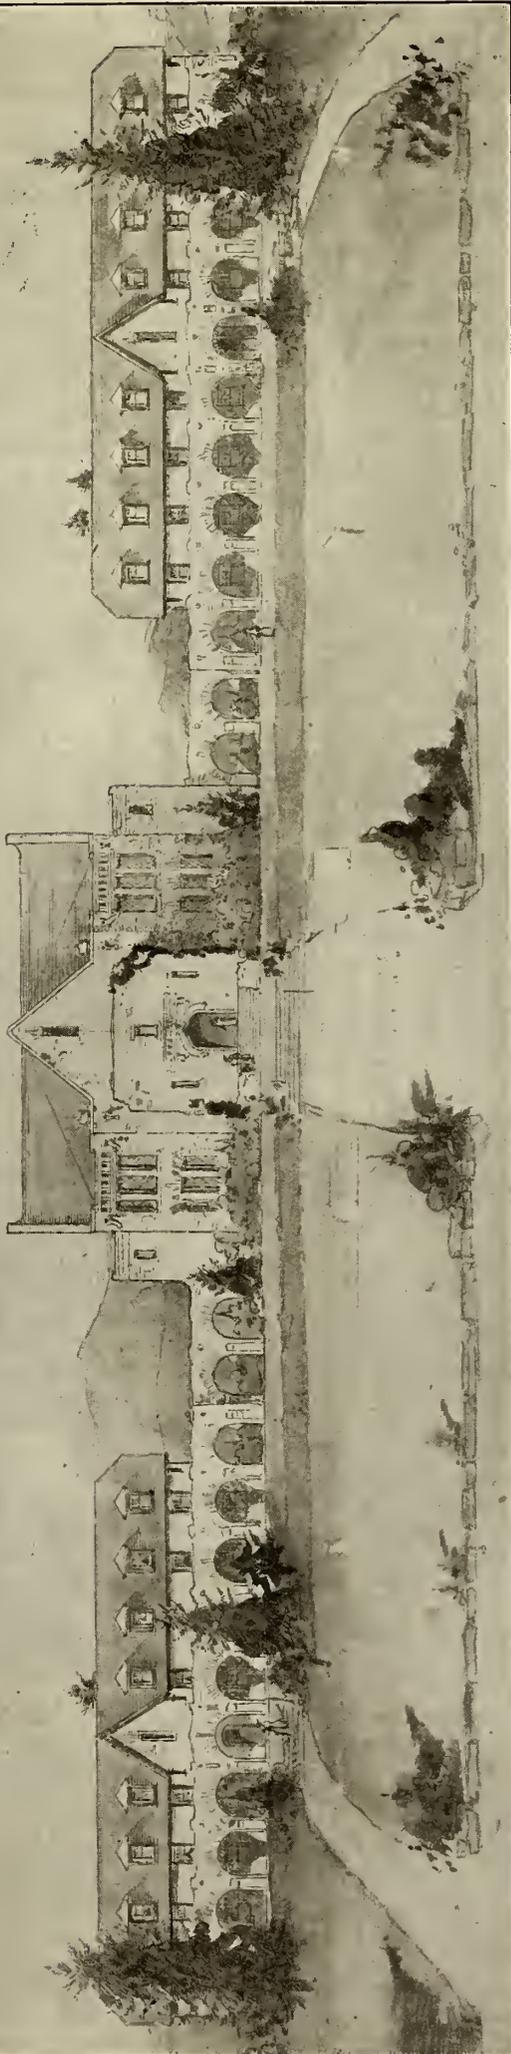

Beautiful plans have been drawn for three buildings to be named for the three States which lie partly in the mountain Synod of Appalachia. The central one is to bear the name of the State in which it stands. This North Carolina building is to be used in common by the graded department and the high school and will contain dining room, kitchen, laundry, auditorium, parlors, offices, etc. This is to have on either side, connected by covered ways, a building which will contain class rooms and bed rooms, needed by the high school and graded school. The whole is to have a central heating plant, the necessity for which is realized by the visitors, although they come to Banner Elk only during the hot (?) months of July and August. The elevation is 4,000 feet.

These buildings are to be made of native stone, and will cost about $40,000 each. The plan is to build the central one first, as this is most needed. Some sand and rock have already been placed on the site, and some cash is in hand.

The money that is contributed for these different buildings will be placed in the bank at interest and drawn out as needed.

Does not every lover of Christian education want to have a part in this work of erecting buildings for the improvement and education of future generations of the mountains?

The estimated cost of building one ton of rock into these walls is about $4.00. How many tons will you take? If you are a Virginian send your contribution to Miss F. K. Taylor, 8 Oakenwold Terrace, Staunton, Va. If you are from Tennessee send to Miss Emma Phifer, Jonesboro, Tenn. If you are a good old “Tar Heel” send to Miss Estelle McIver, Gulf, N. C.

News of the Week

Secretaries Baker and Daniels in a statement made public by Jno. R. Mott approved the expenditure of $205,138,381 in after-the-war welfare work among soldiers of the American and Allied nations.

Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig has been appointed English commander-in-chief of the home forces to succeed Sir Wm. R. Robertson, who becomes commander-in-chief of the army of the Rhine.

The past week records the death in New York, at the age of 83, of Amelia Barr, at one time a very popular novelist.

American merchant ships are now sailing the seven seas, exchanging American products for the essentials and luxuries of every land.

Secretary Daniels has suspended the building of battleships till he and naval experts return from Europe, where they will look thoroughly into the value of the various types. Mr. Daniels left for France on the 15th inst.

According to Frank W. Morrison, Secretary of the American Federation of Labor, organized labor will refuse to share in the result of price adjustment if the living standards are to be endangered.

Retention within the army of about 200,000 men, obtained originally through the drafts and by transfer from the National Guard, is planned by the War Department in building up the temporary military establishment of the nation.

It is estimated at present that the number of Americans disabled in the war will number 100,000. Of this number 80,000 will be able to return to their old occupations, leaving 20,000 who need retraining for work they can do.

Convictions under the espionage act of Eugene Debs, socialist leader, and Jacob Frohwerk, a newspaper editor of Kansas City, were sustained today by the supreme court in unanimous opinions delivered by Justice Holmes. Both men were sentenced by the lower courts to 10 years' imprisonment.

The bill in the North Carolina Legislature for a constitutional convention was finally killed in the House by an almost unanimous vote, though it had passed the Senate some weeks ago by a large majority.

Herbert Hoover, our Food Administrator, will resign his relief work this summer.

The Bolsheviks attempted to organize in Norfolk, Va., and 15 men, nearly all foreigners, have been arrested.

Nearly 200 sympathizers of the Industrial Workers of the World, including Alexander Chernoff, of Chicago, national organizer of the I. W. W. Movement, were arrested in a raid organized by the local police in Waterbury, Conn.

Solicitor Lamar, of the Post Office Department, has presented information showing that a propaganda against this Government is being conducted with the object in view of establishing a Bolshevik Republic in this country, following the overthrow of the Government by a "Bloody Revolution."

The first death from "sleeping sickness" was reported in New York, March 13. A number of cases have been reported in Europe and a few in this country, but physicians say that as yet there is no cause for alarm.

It is reported that the draft of the Peace Treaty has been completed and that it will be signed this month.

The personnel of the German fleet is to be restricted to 15,000, the Supreme Council has decided.

The number of acts passed and ratified by the North Carolina Legislature was 1,130. The income tax amendment is the only one passed that required a change in the constitution.

The 113th field artillery, commanded by Colonel Cox, which sailed for home March 5, will debark at Newport News instead of New York, it was announced at the War Department. The regiment is expected to land March 18. It is to be sent to Camp Jackson for demobilization.

William Jennings Bryan not only endorses the League of Nations, but pronounces it the greatest step toward peace in a thousand years.

The Victory Loan Campaign will run from April 21 to May 10.

President Wilson's determination to reorganize the Civil Service Commission together with the fact that he had asked for the resignation of two members, Hermon W. Craven and Charles M. Galloway, became known with the announcement at the White House of the appointment of two new commissioners, Martin A. Morrison, of Indiana, and George R. Wales, of Vermont.

Those opposed to the League of Nations have organized, with Senators Reed, Poindexter and Borah as movers, and Henry Watterson as president.

The Government employment offices in the United States have been reduced to 56.

The women conductors of Cleveland, Ohio, are appealing to the War Labor Board against being discharged in order to give place to striking male employes.

The strike of the N. C. and St. Louis Railway clerks has spread to the ticket men, gate men, train callers and others at the Atlanta depots.

President Wilson landed in France March 13, and left for Paris at once. The Peace Conference has been moving on more rapidly, and everything is getting into shape for final action.

Davidson.

At a meeting of the student body in Shearer Hall the question of a memorial in honor of the Davidson men, some 19 in number, that died in the service of their country during the late war, was up for discussion. The suggestion had been made that such a memorial should be something useful and that would serve the living at the same time it should be in honor of the dead, and it was thought by many that a swimming pool in the new gymnasium, that will cost several thousand dollars would be an excellent idea—a becoming tablet being erected to commemorate in whose honor it had been built. A committee of the students was appointed to consider the possibilities in the case and the advisability of undertaking the work, with instructions to report later.

Those who will represent their societies in the approaching commencement—selected from the speakers in the recent Junior Oratoricals—are: (From the Phi. Society): D. M. Chalmers, Charlotte; D. W. Roberts, Wilmington; W. F. Hall, Jr., Statesville. (From the Eu. Society): C. A. McGirt, Poulan, Ga.; H. B. Brown, Little Rock, Ark.; A. L. Wilson, Jr., Quincy, Fla.

The Glee Club, with R. E. Shields as manager, and Charles Vance as assistant manager, is making a short trip this week. The club appears in Queens College, Flora McDonald, Bennettsville and possibly Fayetteville.

Mr. Robert Miles, in charge of the Y. M. C. A., is giving added interest to his work as director in his organization of the "World Forum," whose studies and discussions relating to modern problems of missions as growing more especially out of the war, are attracting the attention of increasing numbers of the students each week.

A visit and lecture or lectures from Dr. Thos. W. Lingle, who returned from France some few weeks ago, are expected for the last of the week. Dr. Lingle will receive a wonderfully cordial and warm greeting by every one in Davidson.

Let us note first that indecision is shameful. Pilate's conduct as recorded in our Bible lesson has received the well deserved scorn of every generation since his day. His memory is covered with eternal contempt. He tried to be neutral in a matter of right and wrong. He attempted to decide both ways at once and to please both Jesus and His traducers. Of course the bold scoundrels took his measure and walked right over him. He was ignored and despised as he deserved to be. When the crisis was past he was found to have failed. Indecision had disgraced him and left him with none so poor as to do him honor. One clear, firm word would have saved the poor wretch from the abyss of shame into which he descended. What an unmitigated shame it was that he could not speak that word!

Our second note is that indecision is futile and dangerous. It solves no problems, it delivers from no emergencies, it prompts no action, it makes no friends, it opens the way for factionalism and strife, and it makes all bad matters worse. Pilate's indecision made a full botch of the business before him and accomplished precisely the opposite of all he wanted to do. He wanted to save Jesus, and he ended by precipitating what amounted to a lynching. When the full consequences of his indecision arrived, Jesus was dead and Pilate was discredited with both the Jews and the Roman authorities from whom he held his governor's commission.

Our third note is that indecision is a crime when the question at issue is moral. Every one of us should in all conscience be able to speak straight from the shoulder and clearly in matters of right and wrong. No one has any business being otherwise. There is something tragically wrong with those who lack the power. They are themselves inwardly corrupt. Pilate, who by weakness allowed the crucifixion of Christ, was at heart but little better than the Jews who did the deed. He would have crucified good men if his interests were to be served in it. In the upshot, his indecision on a moral question made him only less guilty than Caiaphas himself of the greatest crime in history. His vain washing of the hands was not the need of the hour. What was needed was a clear-cut decision for Christ. But alas, in his guilty weakness he did not speak it. Shall we allow ourself through indecision to be and do likewise when forced to face moral issues?

How shall we learn to act promptly in the great crises of life? There is only one way, and that is to form the habit of decision in the lesser questions that arise for settlement every day. When we have learned to act with decision in minor matters, the faculty there acquired will not fail us when we face the larger crises.

"WHAT WE OWE AND HOW TO PAY IT."

II Cor. 8:1-15.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

Mention is made in the last chapter of First Corinthians of the "Collection for the Saints" in Judea. The order for this collection was first given to the Galatian churches. They were all to proceed as follows: "Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him." Here we find in principle the answer to: "What we owe and how to pay it." Under the Gospel we are to deal with great living principles. Our debt is commensurate to the love and the self-sacrifice of our Lord, "for ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through His poverty might be rich."

This is the sublime ideal which is held before every Christian. Compared with this how paltry and timid is the spirit that is expressed in suggestions or "commandments" of tithes, or "at least a tithe." The ideal is that we owe to Christ such devotion as expresses itself freely and lovingly in such giving as will actually result in financial poverty. Was not this precisely what Jesus commended in the case of Shall We Add a Hundred Thousand Dollars to Our Foreign Mission Work?

By Rev. Hugh W. White.

The next General Assembly will have up for consideration plans for federation with other churches, a prominent feature of which plans is the uniting of the agencies for doing mission work. It is not the uniting of the churches on the foreign field—on that there is no question. They unite automatically. But to unite the home boards would raise the cost of maintenance about one-fifth. The missionaries of the Southern Church have always received salaries about a fifth lower than those of the Northern Presbyterian and other churches. Our buildings also are much less expensive, a fifth less would be an easy average. Now if we unite, in the nature of the case there can be no lowering of salaries and expenses. Hence our salaries will all have to be raised—a nice prospect for us missionaries, but what about the home church, which has to foot the bills?

There is another question, even more serious than this. The foreign work, as an educational and civilizing agency, has been a wonderful success, but for the saving of souls, if church membership is the criterion, there is something radically wrong. Missionaries in China at Kuling last summer were amazed to find from the latest figures that after a hundred and ten years' work, at enormous cost, the net results are an average of ten members for each paid worker, Chinese and foreign. For the year 1917, which was the best yet reported, there proved to be about one convert for each paid worker. What the fundamental error is I have tried to show in my little booklet, "Reorganization the Hope of Foreign Missions." (Order from the Presbyterian Committee of Publication or myself). It is the organizing of the work on the basis of western control. The Y. M. C. A. and some other workers have avoided this mistake, and we hope in time our churches will come to see this and correct their policy. But to unite the boards would still further centralize the authority in America, and thus is a retrograde movement. It would be far more to the point to remodel the work on democratic, Presbyterian lines, putting the management on the foreign shore, the home church recognizing that her function is to uphold, not control, the foreign work.

ISRAEL WARNED AGAINST COMPROMISE.

Golden Text—II Cor. 15:33: "Evil Communications Corrupt Good Manners."

Joshua 23:1-13.

March 23, 1919.

When Joshua assembled the Elders of Israel at Shechem he was near the close of his earthly career, for he lived to be 110 years old. He purposed giving them counsel, encouragement, warning and prophecy as to the results of disobedience. He was well qualified for such functions. He had led a long life of varied and impressive experiences. He had witnessed the plagues of Egypt, the overthrow of Pharaoh's hosts at the Red Sea, the wonderful providences and judgments of the wilderness, and the displays of Divine justice, holiness and power attending the conquest of Canaan. He had rendered to the nation most signal and important services and was entitled to be heard and heeded.

I. Consider Joshua's Counsels to Israel.

He tells them that the "Lord had given them rest from their enemies round about." He assures them that "the Lord had fought for them" and instructed him "to divide to them the nations that remained for an inheritance even to the great sea westward." He affirms that "The Lord your God shall expel them from before you and drive them out of your sight and ye shall possess their land as Jehovah your God hath promised you." He informs them that such results can be realized only by cleaving to Jehovah and obeying His commands.

II. Joshua's Encouragements to Israel.

He urges them to courage in keeping the law. He says, "Be ye therefore very courageous to keep and to do all that is written in the book of the law of Moses that ye turn not aside therefrom to the right hand or to the left." He persuades them to "cleave unto Jehovah your God as ye have done unto this day." He gives as a reason for so doing, "For the Lord hath driven out from before you great nations and strong, and no man hath been able to stand before you unto this day." He adds, "One man of you shall chase a thousand, for Jehovah your God, He it is that fighteth for you as He hath promised you." He thus encourages them to courage and steadfastness in abiding by Jehovah and His law by pointing them to what the Lord had already done for them, to the evidences of His Almighty power, and to the unfulfilling promises which He had made if they complied with His conditions.

III. Joshua's Warnings to Israel.

They needed not only encouragements to duty but warnings against sin. After his departure they would be tempted by their own hearts and by the heathen nations around them to idolatry and iniquity. Therefore He warns them not to let their love for Jehovah grow cold. He says, "Take good heed therefore unto yourselves that ye love the Lord your God." Just here is the beginning of apostasy, for Israel and ourselves. If we forget Jehovah's supreme excellence the benefits He has bestowed and His paramount claims upon us, and love declines, then are we disposed to forsake Him utterly. He warns them too against entering into any intimate relations or alliances with the impious nations around them. He declares, "If ye do in any wise go back and cleave unto the remnant of these nations, even these that remain among you, and shall make marriages with them and go in unto them and they to you, know of a certainty that they will be snares to you." He warns them that if they associated with these nations and imitated their ways the Lord would not drive them out before them, and they would not possess their land. "Jehovah your God will no more drive out these nations from before you."

IV. The Results of Disobedience.

Joshua intimates these in the words, "These nations shall be snares and traps unto you and scourges in your sides and thorns in your eyes until ye perish from off this good land which the Lord your God hath given you." Israel on this and other occasions promised obedience but did not comply with their engagements. During Joshua's days and the days of the elders that outlived Joshua who had seen the wonders of the wilderness and the manifestations of Jehovah's power at Jordan and in Canaan the nation adhered to Jehovah and His worship. But neglect of the Mosaic law and of the institutions it established and intercourse and alliances with the heathen nations around them prepared the way for decline of love, for neglect of Jehovah's altar, for gross idolatry and for multiplied Divine judgments. The whole book of Judges is full for four hundred years of Israel's repeated apostacies, of multiplied Divine captivities visited upon them and of successive deliverances granted them in answer to their cries for mercy. Not until the time of David who honored Jehovah did the Lord give them signal victory over their enemies. The captivity of the ten tribes by the Assyrians, the Babylonish captivity inflicted by Nebuchadnezzar, the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus and the Romans, all bear witness to the truth of Joshua's prophecy, "Ye shall perish from the land" if disobedient. Israel outside their own land has been scattered among the nations nearly 2,000 years.

the poor widow who cast into the treasury "all the living that she had?" Was it not out of their "deep poverty" and a "great trial of affliction, and abundance of their joy," that the Macedonians "abounded unto the riches of their liberality?"

We know how poor Belgium, and Serbia, and Northern France are today. So with Macedonia. Armies had swept over that devoted land time after time, the civil wars between Caesar and Pompey, between the triumvirs and Brutus and Cassius, and again, between Augustus and Antonius. Nor had the country recovered from the desolations and miseries which succeeded and accompanied its conquest by the Romans; and between those times and the civil contest between Pompey and Caesar, Cylla had disputed the possession of it with the general of Mithridates. As Servius Sulpicius beheld the ruined cities of the Saronic Gulf, he wrote to Cicero, commending patience in the suffering which was caused by the death of his daughter Tullia. Aetolia and Acharnania were barren wastes.

Thebes was only a vanished glory. Epirus a desolation. The mines of Macedonia were owned and operated by the Romans. Taxation was heavy and out of all proportion to the financial condition of the people. Patrae and Corinth—especially the latter—were the only prosperous cities in Greece.

Yet Paul is able to write to the Corinthians of the abounding liberality of these poverty stricken disciples of Jesus Christ.

What do we owe? What is it that we do not owe? How are we to pay? First by constantly keeping in mind the great ideal—Jesus: and by every means,—and especially by divine grace,—embracing this ideal with our whole hearts.

This is a part of the liberty wherewith Christ is seeking to make us free—has made us free, if only we are big enough and bold enough to embrace and to enjoy our freedom. It is a well known fact that the poor have always been more responsive to this ideal than the rich. As riches increase, wants increase. Often the wants increase faster than the riches. Nothing will check this disastrous tendency, and keep the rich from the snares that stand ready to entrap them, except embracing the example of Christ Jesus as their ideal; and having embraced it, to see to it that it is actually expressed in well thought out acts of bestowing their wealth for the glory of God and the good of their own souls.

Devotional

"I JES' LOVE TO P'INT HIM OUT."

Why should a man be required to love Christ? Is it not enough to admire Him as the chiefest among ten thousand? Is it not enough to imitate Him as the ideal man?

A traveler who was being rowed across the Mississippi by an old negro, was surprised to see the boatman drop his oars suddenly and spring to his feet in great excitement, shouting, "Lòok! Look! Dere's de Captain!"

On a sloop coming down the river stood a man leaning against the mast. This was "the captain," at whom the old negro was frantically waving his hat.

The traveler said presently, "Who is this man? And what has he ever done for you?" The answer was, "He's de man dat saved me. I fell into de water an' he jumped in an' flung his arms around me and saved me!" Then he added, "I'd jes' like to slave for him all my life; only my rheumatism's so bad I ain't no good. He runs by here once a month, an' I watch for him; an' I love to p'int him out. Ain't he de kindest-lookin' man you ever saw? I jes' love to p'int him out."

In view of such a natural demonstration of gratitude as this, one is led to wonder how it is that any man who trusts in Christ for salvation should ever fail to love Him.—Rev. David James Burrell, D.D.

WHAT MAKES A GREAT LIFE.

Do not wait to do great things; you may waste all your life waiting for the opportunity which may never come. But since little things are always claiming your attention, do them as they come, from a great motive—for the glory of God, to win His smile of approval, and to do good to men.

It is harder to plod on in obscurity acting thus than to stand on the high places of the field, within the view of all, and do deeds of valor at which rival armies stand still to gaze. But no such act goes without the swift recognition and ultimate recompense of Christ.

To fulfill faithfully the duties of your station; to use to the uttermost the gifts of your ministry; to bear chafing and trivial irritations as martyrs bore the pillory and stake; to find the one noble trait in people who try to molest you; to put the kindest construction on unkind acts and words; to love with the love of God even the unthankful and evil; to be content to be a fountain in the midst of a wild valley of stones, nourishing a few lichens and wild flowers or now and again a thirsty sheep; and to do this always and not for the praise of man, but for the sake of God—this makes a great life.—F. B. Meyer.

SIN.

Anything which makes sin less sinful connives at sin. Anything that glosses sin, that varnishes it, that decorates it, is in reality a minister of sin. And in this way even our very forgiveness can be the enemy of virtue and the barrier to a holy life. In our desire to be "nice" we are often hurtful, and in our wish to be sweet and pleasant we are often morally and spiritually destructive. We may smother the odor of an open sewer with a flash of eau de cologne. Our forgiveness may be just sweet-scented sentiment, and the uncleanliness of the sin is only daintily concealed. If the holy Lord is to forgive our sin, it must be in some way that will not make light of it. However He may forgive us, the sin which is forgiven must not appear light and frivolous; it must appear exceedingly sinful, black with the blackness of the night. If the holy Lord made sin less awful by the manner of his forgiveness, what an awful world would this become! It is at the cross of Christ that we see what divine forgiveness hast cost. At the cross the guilt of sin is forgiven, while its appalling nature is revealed.—Dr. Jowett.

THE GRACE OF CHEERFULNESS.

There are some quite good people who wear terribly long faces. No one questions their sincerity of life. They embody most of the virtues but they are sadly lacking in the one very important grace of cheerfulness.

To be a Christian means serious business. There are fierce temptations to be met and hard battles to be fought. There are tremendous issues involved in the work of advancing God's Kingdom. Unless we are on our guard the seriousness is likely to get into our lives to such an extent as to becloud our faces, sour our dispositions and interfere to a very considerable degree with our usefulness.

We may be assured that men will want precious little of our religion if the shadow of gloom is upon it. The efficiency of some church members is hopelessly impaired by their excess of severity, their ultra-puritanical way of looking at things.

Real Christian cheerfulness should wonderfully brighten up the home. The saintly Charles Kingsley wrote to his wife: "I suppose there is no home in England that has more laughter in it than ours." Save us from the chronic grouch, the insufferable crank. One misguided mortal of this sort will spoil completely the home life. Such an individual, professing to be a Christian, should very seriously face the question, Am I really a disciple of the cheerful Christ?

The grace of cheerfulness is greatly needed in the church just now. Instead of mourning with downcast faces the defects and failures of the church, would it not be infinitely better if we should brighten up, let the joy of the Holy Spirit possess us, and take a view of the situation that is brimful of courage and optimism? We do not believe that things are going to the bowwows and that the world is headed toward the abyss. The task facing the church today is a stupendous one, but it is not too big to be accomplished by men and women filled with God's grace of good cheer.

"Rejoice in the Lord always; and again I will say, Rejoice."—United Presbyterian.

AN IDYL OF THE KITCHEN.

A woman plied her tasks the livelong day—
The table spread, the dishes cleared away;
Then sewed and cooked, and spread the cloth once more—
The same dull round completed o'er and o'er.

And yet she did not sigh, but sang instead,
Blithe as the bird that swung above her head,
For whom no bars could cage the spirit bright
Nor mar the glory of the flooding light.

She washed and scoured, yet life was fair to view;
For love was hers, and happy children, too;
And though winged fancies led her forth to roam,
Her thoughts returned and centered in her home.

Lost in a book when household tasks were o'er,
Or in the garden at her kitchen door,
She looked beyond her treadmill rounds to see Life's beauty over all its drudgery.

—Washington Van Dusen.

LISTENING TIMES.

What we need above all things in these crowded days is the setting apart of many listening times; times of quiet in which we can hear the heavenly voices that call to us unregarded in the busy day. The great clock bell of Saint Paul's is not heard even a few streets off in the roar of traffic all day long; but it can be heard over half the metropolis in the silence of the night. One reason why God so often spoke to His servants in the night was that all was quiet then.—G. H. Knight.

Church News

Collections for March are for Sabbath School Extension and Publication. Treasurer is R. E. Magill, Richmond, Va.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Recognizing the increasing importance of Woman's work in the Church, the Standard proposes to have a Special Column devoted to the work of the Auxiliaries, both Synodical and Presbyterian, by which the officers can reach the various units without the drudgery of individual letters.

We invite them to make use of this column also in setting before the Church what they are doing.

In order to obtain the full benefit of this column it is necessary that the Standard be put into every home in this Synod.

Not only will these faithful women be helped in their self-denying labors by having the Standard in every home, but the Home Mission Superintendent will be enabled to reach every family with important data from the various fields of the Synod.

We hope that those canvassing in behalf of the Church papers will bear in mind this new feature of the Standard.

CHANGE OF PLACE AND TIME FOR MEETING OF MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY.

Owing to sickness and inability to finish the church, it will be impossible to hold the spring meeting of Presbytery at Aquadale. Notices are being sent out calling a meeting of Presbytery March 28, at 11 a. m., in the First Church, Charlotte, to change place and date for meeting of Presbytery, and to receive and dismiss ministers.

PERSONAL.

Dr. J. R. Bridges preached in Hickory, morning and evening, last Sunday.

Private J. R. Bridges, Jr., who has been in France since last May, has been ill three weeks with pneumonia. A recent letter gives hopes of speedy recovery.

The pulpit of the Tenth Avenue Church, Charlotte, was occupied by Rev. W. B. Lindsay, of the A. R. F. Church, in the morning, and by Rev. Leonard Gill in the evening, last Sunday.

Rev. C. E. White, of Roxboro, has accepted the call to the Marshville group of churches, subject to the action of his Presbytery.

From a private letter, written by a member of the "Western Section," we learn that our co-editor, Dr. R. C. Reed, was unanimously elected chairman for the year 1919-1920. This is an honor to be appreciated, and it is characteristic of the man that in writing of the proceedings he suppressed this most important item of news. "Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth."

Rev. R. C. Anderson and family returned to Montreat the early part of this week. Mr. Anderson is much better and hopes to resume work at once. He has been in Florida.

Rev. and Mrs. Lowry Davis, who have been in this country for some time on furlough, left Greenville, S. C., on March 6 for China to resume their work in the Kashing High School.

Friends far and wide will hear with anxious interest that Dr. W. J. Martin, president of Davidson College, is in Salisbury now expecting to undergo an operation for appendicitis, with possibly other complications. An early and complete recovery is earnestly hoped for him. Mrs. Martin and his former family physician and warm personal friend, Dr. J. P. Munroe, will be in attendance in Salisbury at the Stokes-Whitehead Sanitorium.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Presbytery of Fayetteville will meet in its 211th stated session, at Ashpole Church, near Rowland, N. C., Tuesday, April 22, 1919, at 8 o'clock p. m.

Eugene L. Siler, S. C.

Charlotte—This city has had the privilege the past 10 days of a series of services conducted by Rev. W. Moore Scott, D.D., pastor of the First Church of Savannah, Ga. The services were held in the First Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, of which Rev. W. B. Lindsay is pastor, and were largely attended. The interest was good from the first. Dr. Scott is no stranger in Charlotte, having on a former occasion conducted a series of meetings at the Tenth Avenue Presbyterian Church, at which time he made friends who gladly availed themselves of this opportunity of hearing him again. Services were conducted twice daily, those of the afternoon being for the upbuilding of Christian character and those at night being messages of warning and pleading to those out of Christ. There were a number of professions of faith during the meeting. Dr. Scott and Mr. Lindsay were formerly associated in their work in Tennessee, Dr. Scott having been pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Memphis at the same time Mr. Lindsay was pastor of the A. R. P. Church of that city.

April The First!—Just Two More Weeks!—This is the date we trust all our churches and church treasurers are thinking of, and making preparation for just now. The church year closes and treasurers' books everywhere in churches and Presbyteries should be ready to close up business for the year.

The treasurer of Presbyterial Home Missions in Fayetteville Presbytery hopes to close his books without any debt holding over our Home Mission Fund. If all the churches in Fayetteville Presbytery have been careful to send their apportionment for Presbyterial Home Missions, the books will certainly close with no debt. Most of our churches have done nobly this time. Have you and your church done your part? Send your contribution for Presbyterial Home Missions in promptly to Treasurer Dr. J. J. Hill, Red Springs, N. C., and let us have the best financial closing and the best financial report we have had yet.

Old Fort—Rev. W. T. Wadley, pastor.—On a recent Friday evening the occupants of the manse enjoyed a complete surprise party. Before we realized what was taking place the house was filled with Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, old and young; every one well armed with that club so often used now-a-days to smite the inner man and thrill him with all sorts of delightful sensations. We were helpless; we could do nothing but run up the white flag and say, Do unto us as may seem good to you.

Two hours were delightfully spent; the young around the piano for a while and then playing a number of innocent games, while the older people chatted with the pastor and his wife. One little two-year-old girl climbed up into the pastor's lap and said: "I brought you a package of catnip tea."

When the members of this mob took their leave of the manse, they were given a cordial invitation to return at any time they might be able to arm themselves with such clubs as they had just pounded us with.

We are just now driving hard as ever we can for our quota of the $3,500,000 and to put a Church paper and the Missionary Survey into every home where these are not now going. We are sure that these periodicals are indispensable to the growth, fruitfulness and happiness of the church.

Winston-Salem—The Week of Prayer, February 17-21, was observed with unusual interest by the women of our congregation. During this term our Woman's Auxiliary was formally organized with Mrs. J. H. Suttentfield, of the D. C. Rankin Missionary Society, president; Miss Delphine Carter, of the Ladies' Missionary Society, vice-president; Mrs. W. J. Hamner, of the D. C. Rankin Society, treasurer; Mrs. W. W. Smoak, of the L. M. Society, recording secretary, and Miss Louise Maddrey, of the Calvin H. Wiley Society, corresponding secretary. The auxiliary is divided into eight circles, including the Night Circle and the Calvin H. Wiley Circle of young girls.

Our congregation had the rare privilege March 11 of hearing Dr. S. M. Zwemer and Dr. E. M. Poteat in the interest of the Laymen's Movement. The other denominations united with us and we had a most inspiring meeting.

On March 9 our new Sunday School superintendent, Mr. Thomas Meslin, was installed in office. The session in accepting Mr. Norfleet's resignation, adopted the following resolution:

"The session desires to place on record its high appreciation of the service of Elder George S. Norfleet as superintendent of our Sunday School for the past thirteen years. During all this time he has labored in season and out of season to develop this school and to bring it to its present high degree of efficiency. He has been a leader in every sense of the word. He has perfected its organization and has led it to treble its attendance, and to multiply its benevolent gifts by ten. A steady flow of life has come through the Sunday School into the church. A spirit of unity and enthusiasm has pervaded the life of our Sunday School in these years. A large measure of the interest which each member of this school feels in its general work and progress is the result of the unfailing interest and devotion which he has shown as its superintendent and leader. He has never allowed anything to displace the Sunday School in his life-work, and our school has grown and prospered because of his ability and faithfulness as its leader.

"We are grateful to him that he has borne the burden of this large work through all these years, and the thanks of this session and of all our people are due him for his long and fruitful service in this most vital part of our work.

"May the memory of these happy and useful years be to him a constant benediction through all his life."

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Piedmont Presbytery will meet at Easley, Tuesday, April 15, at 8:30 p. m. Robert Adams, Acting S. C.

Charleston Presbytery will meet in regular session in Estill, S. C., at 7:30 p. m., April 15, 1919.

Alexander Sprunt, S. C.

Liberty—The church at Liberty last Sabbath called Rev. H. C. Knox, of Georgetown, S. C., and are hopeful he will accept. Rev. W. L. Boggs is supplying the Liberty, S. C., group this month.

To the Ministers and Clerks of Session of Piedmont Presbytery—By request of Dr. Mills, who has gone to France, I am acting as stated clerk until the meeting at Easley. Blanks for sessional reports have been mailed. Please return them to me at Pendleton as soon as they are made out.

Robert Adams.

Pendleton, S. C.

The annual meeting of Harmony Presbyterial Auxiliary will be held in the Indiantown Church, near Kingstree, April 8 and 9, 1919. All auxiliaries are earnestly requested to send delegates; names of delegates should be sent at once to Mrs. Thos M. Cooper, Fowler, S. C. The delegates will be met at Kingstree and taken to the church in automobiles. Lunch will be served on arrival and the opening session will be held at 3 p. m.

(Signed) Miss Bettie Aycock, Rec Sec'y.

Columbia—The Arsenal Hill Presbyterian Church of this city will break a custom reaching back for 30 years and will have an organ in the church and there will be music during the taking of the offerings. A congregational meeting was held in the church Sunday, and by a vote of 88 to 20 the church threw off its old cloak of aversion to instrumental music and decided to "make a joyful noise unto the Lord." The "hymn-hoister" and the tuning fork will be laid on the shelf and the piano and the organ will lead the people in their music worship.

The Arsenal Hill Church was founded by Dr. J. L. Girardeau, one of the South's leading theologians in 1888. Never since that has the church used instruments for music. The late Dr. G. A. Blackburn, son-in-law of Dr. Girardeau, held the same views about instruments in the church, and the wishes of these two pastors prevailed.

At the congregational meeting Sunday there were expressions of love for the two former pastors of the church, both now dead, and it was with no intention of violating customs set by them, but merely to keep the church abreast of the times and in line with the progress of the Presbyterian denomination that the congregation voted to have instrumental music.

J. W. Spillman, A. B. Langley and Dr. W. R. Barron were named a committee to secure the musical instruments necessary.

Columbia—The session of 1918-19 at Columbia Seminary will come to a close on May 7, when there will occur the commencement exercises and delivery of diplomas. The Baccalaureate Sermon will be preached Sunday, May 4, by Rev. J. B. Hutton, D.D., of Jackson, Miss., examinations continuing through May 6.

Rev. Henry Alexander White, D.D., professor of Greek and New Testament Exegesis in the Seminary, has been invited to deliver the Stone Lectures at Princeton Theological Seminary in 1920. This is a distinct recognition of Dr. White's standing as a teacher and scholar.

A recent visitor on the campus was Rev. Dr. Reynolds, missionary of the Southern Church to Korea. Dr. Reynolds delivered a very interesting illustrated lecture at Chicora College on his work in Korea.

John W. Davis, of Louisiana, a member of the Senior class, recently returned to the seminary much improved after an illness of several months. The students gave him a hearty welcome.

Rev. James O. Reavis, D.D., is conducting a series of meetings this week in Durham, N. C.

President Thornton Whaling preached last Sunday at Woodrow Memorial Church and next Sunday expects to be at the First Presbyterian Church, Laurens.

Prof. George S. Fulbright returned to Columbia last week and for the remaining weeks of the session will be engaged in his valuable work as instructor in expression at Columbia Seminary. For over a year Mr. Fulbright has been with the Y. M. C. A. at Greenville, and Anniston, Ala.

APPALACHIA.

Asheville—The West Asheville Church, organized recently, has only a temporary structure in which to worship. With commendable zeal the congregation is raising funds for the purpose of erecting a nice building. Rev. Paul N. Gresham, the pastor, is proving himself an efficient leader in this work. They are planning to build this coming summer—Appalachian Appeal.

Knoxville—First Church—Rev. W. T. Thompson, Jr., pastor. Sunday, March 2, was quite a memorable day in our church because on that day the largest number of officers in the memory of anyone present was ordained and installed. Messrs. T. J. Deane, Edward Hennegar, Hugh L. Vance and D. C. Webb were installed as elders. Messrs. Ralph W. Brown, F. W. Flenniken, A. R. McCullough, Wm. Rule, Jr., and J. Park Vestal were installed as deacons. We have now 15 elders and 15 deacons, every one on each board being active. Under their fine leadership we look forward to the richest year we have ever had.

For the past month our church has averaged about 150 at prayer meeting. At the last prayer meeting the members were interested to know what the attendance was at other churches in our denomination, and suggested that we inaugurate a "prayer meeting attendance contest" for the month of April, thinking that this might stimulate prayer meeting attendance in some of our churches at the very beginning of the church year. Each week the churches interested might make a return to the Church papers. To make the contest fair to the smaller churches, the standing should be based on the proportion of the resident membership present.

ARKANSAS.

Blytheville—We have been cordially received by the membership of this church. Until the arrival of our household goods, we were entertained in the hospitable home of Mr. S. E. Vail. We are now domiciled in the manse, a beautiful two-story eight-room house on the lot adjoining the church. The manse was erected during the pastorate of my predecessor, Rev. H. H. Orr, and is an evidence of the constructive and substantial work he did during the four years of his pastorate. He has left behind him a very fragrant memory. A beautiful custom prevails here in extending a welcome to a new minister. The other ministers of the town bring their congregations on a Sabbath afternoon, soon after his arrival, and they have a service in his honor. Such a service was held in our honor. It brings one at once into cordial fellowship with the other ministers, and introduces him to the people of the community. Blytheville is a new town and already has a population of about 7,000. It is growing by leaps and bounds. Many people from Mississippi have come here to live, being driven out of the cotton sections by the boll weevil. The church has fine prospects of growth. New members have been received since our coming, and there are many others who expect to join our fellowship in the near future.

Rev. C. P. Browning, lately pastor of Caruthersville, Mo., is the secretary of the Blytheville Chamber of Commerce. He expects to move his family here soon. He recently preached for us.

J. Walter Cobb.

GEORGIA.

Atlanta—From the "Central Presbyterian Weekly" we take the following:

"Those who were present last Sunday morning and evening heartily agree that the officers of the Central were very fortunate in securing Dr. T. M. McConnell to supply our pulpit for an 'indefinite time.'

"It is generally believed that a minister brings his best for the morning service. Dr. McConnell believes the evening service equally important, and lived up to the theory last Sunday. The morning sermon was eloquent with Gospel truth and logic, and the evening sermon, along evangelical lines, was delivered with such skill as to hold the congregation with unbroken interest from beginning to end.

"He has thrown new life into the Wednesday evening prayer meeting and the increase in attendance last Wednesday was very noticeable.

"It is Dr. McConnell's purpose to do the work of a pastor while here and it is hoped that the people of the church will heartily receive him into their homes and hearts as such, and stand by him in all the work of the church, cheering him with words of approval and strengthening each other by prompt and regular attendance upon all the services."

Savannah—Hull Memorial Presbyterian Church—In December, 1915, Rev. A. L. Patterson, D.D., entered upon the pastorate of the Hull Memorial Presbyterian Church. At this time there was a church debt approximating $6,000 which had been incurred at the time the building was erected. Within a year after the beginning of the present pastorate a Brotherhood was organized with the purpose of reducing this debt each year $1,000. The response to the call of the Brotherhood was so encouraging that they were able to pay off more than half the debt within the first two years. About four weeks ago a deacon, whom God called to the Church redeemed within a few days, and the pastor conceived the plan of asking for a Liberty Bond offering to complete the payment of this debt. The plan was adopted by the Brotherhood and the pastor announced that Sunday, March 9, had been designated as the day for the offering. There was no effort made other than the simple announcement. But there was a hearty response and the bonds or the equivalent contributed amount to more than $2,500 and more than enough to wipe out all the debt on the church.

The church, being now entirely free of debt, is looking forward to some real aggressive work. The membership is filled with zeal and purpose and a new hope. There has been an average accession of 45 each year during the pastorate of Dr. Patterson. All departments of the church are well organized. Now that it is free of the burden of debt it is anticipating the privilege of doing a larger work in the benevolences of the church. There has been a steady increase in the offerings during the trying period of the war, notwithstanding there have been many outside calls and the increased cost of living.

Under the consecrated leadership of Dr. Patterson the church faces a bright future. He is untiring in his ministrations both in the church and throughout the city, and enjoys the love and confidence of his people and entire community. He is doing a great work, and as the church is located in the best residential section of the city remote from any other Presbyterian church, every indication points to a much larger membership and greater usefulness in the Master's kingdom.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville—Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Ken- tucky—The seminary, and, indeed, much of the city, have appreciated the privilege of contact with the Kentucky Student Volunteers in annual convention in Louisville, March 7-9 inclusive, the evening sessions being held at the Baptist Seminary, the Baptist Training School and the Broadway Baptist Church, and the day sessions at the Presbyterian Seminary.

A number of speakers were heard, and none with more interest than Rev. W. H. Sheppard, D.D., former missionary to the Congo. There were 81 delegates present from 10 colleges of the State. New officers were elected as follows: President, Wm. Bell, of Asbury College, Wilmore; Vice-President, C. N. Tomlinson, of Georgetown College; Secretary-Treasurer, J. W. Tapp, State University; Assistant Secretary-Treasurer, Newell Trimble, Kentucky Wesleyan College, Winchester. Several foreign students were present. The reception, given by all the institutions and held at the Presbyterian Seminary, was most enjoyable.

Prof. Henry E. Dosker is absent this week, lecturing at Princeton Seminary.

MISSOURI.

The Presbytery of Upper Missouri will meet in the First Presbyterian Church in St. Joseph, State of Missouri, on the 15th day of April, 1919, at 8 o'clock p. m.

Chas. R. Nisbet, S. C.

910 Harrison St., Kansas City, Mo.

Memphis—The Ladies' Auxiliary assumed the burden of canvassing the congregation in the interest of the Survey and of the Church papers. The church has been placed on the Survey's honor roll. This week the teams are out in the interest of the Church papers.

An attempt is being made, through announcements and appeals in the weekly calendar and in circular letters sent into every home, to prepare the way for and greatly augment the work of the every member canvass.

Of our monthly congregational social in February the editor of the "Reveille," a local paper, himself an officer in a church of another denomination, says:

"At the First Presbyterian Church in this city last Thursday night occurred the monthly social of the congregation of that church. A large crowd was in attendance and all had an enjoyable time. A musical program was rendered in the auditorium, after which refreshments were served in the annex. . . .

"Social meetings such as these have a tendency to hold closer together the membership of a church and are a decided factor in the upbuilding of such a work. Dr. Hawley deserves great praise in bringing together his people in such gatherings, and it would seem from the interest manifested that emulation would be profitable to all pastors."

OKLAHOMA.

The Presbytery of Mangum will meet in stated session in the First Presbyterian Church of Gotebo, Oklahoma, April 15, at 8 p. m., 1919. Sessions are expected to send up records, reports and Presbytery tax of 15 cents a member as reported in 1918 Assembly Minutes.

TENNESSEE.

The Presbytery of Nashville, U. S., will meet in regular spring session in the Presbyterian Church of Shelbyville, on Tuesday, April 15, at 7:30 p. m.

The Presbytery of Nashville, U. S., has been called to meet in the First Presbyterian Church of Nashville at 11:30 a. m., Wednesday, March 26, for the following business:

1. To dismiss Rev. R. Q. Riley to the Presbytery of Waco in order that he may accept a call to the Presbyterian, U. S. A., Church of Hubbard, Tex.
2. To receive Rev. E. D. McDougall, D.D., and to arrange for his installation as pastor of the Franklin Church.

3. To receive Rev. E. B. Witherspoon and to arrange for his installation as pastor of Smyrna and Florence Churches.

TEXAS.

Austin—First Southern—Rev. W. R. Minter, D.D., pastor. At a congregational meeting on February 23 the First Church unanimously voted to increase the pastor's salary 25 per cent. Plans are also maturing for substantial improvements on the manse. The first of a series of receptions for our returning soldiers was held last week in the Sunday School Annex. On March 11 the Woman's Auxiliary had an all-day meeting, in the church, reviewing intensively "Women Workers of the Orient," followed by lunch and a praise and petition program as arranged by Mrs. Winsborough. The manager of the every member campaign in this church was host to his committee of 39, in a supper on the 12th, followed by a final conference before the canvass. This church expects to raise its quotas. Throughout the month of February a quiet evangelistic campaign was carried on in this church, in which every service or meeting was evangelistic, there being no additional services. There was a large attendance, and God's blessing was manifest, in spiritual awakening and additions to the church.

VIRGINIA.

Presbytery of West Hanover holds next stated meeting at Olivet Church, April 15, 1919, at 8 p. m.

J. C. Painter, S. C.

The Presbytery of Winchester will meet in Opequon Church, Kernstown, Va., on Tuesday, April 22, 1919, at 8 p. m. Those interested will please note the change of time and place.

Baltimore, Md.—Dickey Memorial Church—At a recent meeting of the congregation, Messrs. Ralph Arnold and Prof. B. E. Fleagle, of Baltimore City College, were elected elders; Messrs. John W. Zimmerman, Harry Arnold, Page Zimmerman and Lloyd Saleers were elected deacons.

Lexington—Sunday morning, March 9, completed the first year of the pastorate of Rev. Thos. K. Young, his first sermon as pastor—not as pastor-elect—having been preached Sunday, March 10, 1918. At the morning service, March 9, Rev. Dr. S. W. Zwemer, missionary to Arabia, preached for us on the great problem of Mohammedanism, "the most difficult problem by far that confronts missionaries anywhere." Dr. Zwemer preached again in the afternoon on "The Challenge of the War." He was followed by Rev. Dr. Poteat, his theme being, "What Are You Going to Do About It?" These two gentlemen were here attending the fourth Conference of the Student Volunteer Union of Virginia for Foreign Missions. The meetings were held in the Lee Memorial Chapel of Washington and Lee University, and were well attended by delegates from a number of institutions.

Newport News—Second—This church has had right recently a two week's evangelistic campaign. One of our General Assembly's Evangelists, Rev. W. H. Miley, D.D., most acceptably conducted the services. God has richly blessed and enriched us in spiritual things through the coming of this consecrated and faithful servant. We are deeply indebted to Dr. Miley for his earnest efforts among us, and we thoroughly appreciate the most excellent spirit of the man. His messages were full of the good things of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Our people are speaking of Dr. Miley as "the Ideal Evangelist." It is believed that the invisible results of the meetings are better and greater than the visible results. In the course of the campaign cards were signed as follows: 23 profession, 88 consecration, and 13 signed cards expressing a desire to unite with the church of their choice in this community. Thus far we have received 20 into the church, 16 by profession and four by letter or reaffirmation. There are others who will come soon.

The last day of the meeting a free-will offering was taken, and amounted to $100. This offering helps to support the Department of Evangelism under the Executive Committee of Home Missions.

At a recent meeting of the congregation the people and the Presbytery together increased the pastor's salary $300 per year. The pastor greatly appreciates the increase and the spirit which prompted the deed.

The Laymen's Convention held in Lynchburg was a remarkable meeting in a great many respects. In the first place it had as fine a company of men there as one would want to see—elders and deacons of the fine old Virginia Synod. Then the live, progressive pastors backing their men to the limit as they met to consider together their greater duties to the church in her hour of great need. It bore remarkable testimony to the divine blessing that waits upon the individual or the church that accepts God's plan of finance. It was a tither's meeting pure and simple. While the learned ones discuss as to whether the tithe is binding or not, here were some 300 men the most of whom have been practicing it from two to 25 years, and they were all saying, "O taste and see that it is good." I believe that no open-minded man could sit through that meeting and hear not theory, but years of experience of what making God the preferred creditor has done for hundreds of men; and not feel that tithing as the low limit is where we should all start, then march on to liberality. If such a meeting had been held in every Synod it would have put a spirit of liberality and increase of the sense of God in our common life that nothing I know of could do. Next year let us plan for such a convention in every Synod.

Rev. W. E. Hudson is the one man that more than any other "put it over." For many of us who believe that one more revival is needed and only one more and that when it comes the Kingdom will be nigh even at the doors, namely the revival of the New Testament principles of giving, the convention at Lynchburg was the dawning of a better day.

Chas. H. Pratt.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond—The speaker to the Society of Missionary Inquiry at its monthly public meeting for March was Dr. Douglass Freeman, an active Christian layman who is editor of the Evening News-Leader and whose remarkable editorials on the war and world diplomacy have been for some time the outstanding feature of Richmond journalism. He spoke with power on the effects of the war on our young soldiers and the church's duty to them as they return to America. On the following evening the society had a stirring address from Rev. Chas. H. Pratt, our field secretary, a graduate of the seminary in the class of 1905. The speaker chosen for the annual address to the society at the approaching commencement is Rev. Henry M. Woods, D.D., of Tsing-Kiang-Pu, China. He has been spending the winter in the seminary community, devoting much of his time to the raising of funds for the publication in Chinese of the International Standard Bible Encyclopedia. Dr. Woods, who was a student in the seminary some 35 years ago, is himself the author of various works in Chinese and one of our most active and useful missionaries.

The Baccalaureate Sermon will be preached on May 4 by Rev. James H. Taylor, D.D., pastor of the Central Church, Washington, D. C., known to many people as the church which President Wilson attends.

Former students, whose course in the seminary was interrupted by the war, continue to drop in as demobilization proceeds. An aviator from beyond seas resumed his place in the Junior class two weeks ago, and another young officer from France, also a member of the Junior class, takes up his work this week where he left off when he entered the army. So that the attendance for the year, which in the first half session was so much reduced by the absence of students who were in the service of the country, bids fair to come pretty close to the normal figure after all, the enrollment now being 62 regulars, not counting the 42 specials and men who have been taking post-graduate work for short periods.

Story and Incident

Peanut Brittle for His Wife.

"My wife and I are not getting along well together and have not been for several years," he said, dropping into the chair beside my desk. "Our likes and dislikes are so different. We do not seem to agree about anything. Oh, it is not that either of us cares for any one else," as he saw the question in my eyes. "I am sure she does not, and I do not believe that she thinks I do, but for some reason or other, we do not get along together. Perhaps it is just temperamental, but I do not see how it can be any other way.

"Of course we have talked it over many, many times during the latter part of the 10 years we have been married. Each time we have promised to do differently, to try to get along better, but the promises do not hold and the plan does not work. Everything I do disturbs her, and everything she does nettles me!"

He arose, and with quick, nervous step paced back and forth the length of my room.

"We are quarreling all the time. Both of us have come to feel that things ought not—must not—go on like this. But can they ever be any different?" He dropped disconsolately into the chair again. "We don't know. Perhaps the only way to have any peace is for us to separate.

"It was so different when we were first married." With chin resting in his hand, he studied the floor. "We were as happy as two persons could be. My income was small. We bought our furniture, a little at a time, as we had the money. We looked forward to every pay day to going out together to buy some new thing for the home—maybe a chair, perhaps a picture, like as not a few dishes. Always we made our plans together and we were very happy in carrying them out.

"Gradually a change came. We began to drift apart. She wanted her way and I wanted mine. We didn't plan together as formerly. Yet through it all we were very careful not to let any of our friends know that anything was wrong or different. In fact, it was a long time before either of us awoke to the fact that our relations were becoming strained, but now things have gone on until we live a regular 'cat and dog' life, jangling and scrapping all the time. We cannot stand it! I do not believe she would care much if I did not come home; and sometimes I feel as though I would not care much if I did not go. It seems to me that the only thing to do is to separate—yet I hesitate. My wife is a fine woman and is not any more to blame than I, but it is just this 'incompatibility of temperament' that makes living together almost a nightmare."

Such was the substance of his story. While he had been speaking I had been thinking. When he finished I picked up a sheet of paper, and drawing two parallel lines on it pushed it over toward him. "That was the way you two went when you were first married, and as long as you went that way you were both happy, weren't you?"

He quickly assented.

I drew two diverging lines below the parallels.

"That is the way you are going now, and you seem to be having anything but a happy time of it."

Then, to see if he had really thought through the situation: "Why not separate and have it over with? Would you not be happier?"

"That's just the trouble. I am afraid I couldn't be happy without her, and I cannot be happy with her!"

"How about her? Perhaps she would be happier without you? Perhaps you ought to think of her and of her happiness as well as of your own; perhaps even more than your own? I am not sure that you have done that, but tell me honestly, do you want a legal separation?"

He looked me straight in the eye and with tears coursing down his cheeks said, "God knows I don't, but I don't know what else to do." After a moment he continued, "I came in to see you hoping that maybe you could suggest something.

Maybe we could find some way of applying what we have learned in psychology so that I can come to understand my wife better and so straighten out our trouble."

"As I understand it, then," I said, "you want to make those diverging lines parallel? That can be done in one of two ways. The direction of both lines can be changed a little, or one can be changed a good deal. Perhaps your wife will be willing to change her path; perhaps not. If not, you must change yours all the more. You must both travel along parallel lines to avoid trouble. You speak of psychology helping you to understand your wife better. That is not the important part. We are all too much inclined to want to apply our knowledge of that subject to the other fellow. What you must learn first is not to know your wife better but to know yourself better.

"The salesman who gives more time to trying to understand his prospect than he does to understanding himself will never be a howling success as a salesman; the husband who spends his time trying to fathom his wife's peculiarities without recognizing that he has some of his own will seldom have a happy home."

"But suppose she won't help?" he interrupted.

"Then you must make the entire shift. Let us assume that your wife will not change her path. Are you willing to go all the way? Do not say you will meet her half way. This cannot be on a fifty-fifty basis. You have talked these things over with her many times but never made any headway. This time you must make your plan and carry it out without consulting her. You must be willing to go all the way! You may not need to, but you must be willing to do so.

"Life is too short to scrap things through, and it is too long to expect always to have your own way. All successful business enterprises are the result of compromises, and all happy homes are, too. Just now you must not ask your wife to make any compromises. You must make them all, for the present at least, until we see where we are going. In the early days of your married life doubtless both of you gave in many times?"

"Yes, often," he answered, "but in recent years neither does so willingly."

"Well, you must not ask her to give in at all!"

"You have learned in our study of psychology something of the impellent energy of an idea. An idea always tends to express itself in bodily activity. Suppose you get into your mind the idea of a happy home and a kind and loving husband. Never mind the loving wife, just now. You are going to do this thing without consulting her. You are going to make your home happy without consulting your wife, without letting her know you intend to do it. To state the extreme—you're going to do it in spite of your wife. In doing it you will make a new man of yourself, and discover a new woman in her.

"You will demonstrate the principle underlying the statement of Jesus when He said men should forgive seventy times seven, for you are going to determine that no matter what your wife may say or do you are not going to take offense. You are just going to forgive, and then forgive, and keep on forgiving until forgiving becomes an essential part of your being. You are going to act as though she was the dearest, kindest, most thoughtful wife in the world.

"Another thing we have learned in the psychology class has a bearing on your problem. We have learned that man, not his surroundings, can be master. We can determine what ideas shall find lodgment in your mind, and thereby determine what ideas shall find expression in your action. Do not let your surroundings determine how you shall act. You are your own master.

"Then think of the fine things you said to your wife when you were first married. They will stand repeating now. You have heard of the fellow who bought chocolates for his Deaths.

IN MEMORIAM.

Miss Mildred Moore.

Our entire community was shocked and saddened when it became known that on February 11, Mildred Moore had passed away, having been ill only a week with that dread disease influenza-pneumonia.

Born of godly parents, she was indeed a child of the covenant. A loyal member of the Presbyterian Church from childhood, ever willing and ready to do her part for the upbuilding of Christ's Kingdom on earth, she will be sadly missed by the members of her church.

Loyal to her Master, devoted to her family, faithful to her friends, and loved by every one, especially by little children, our community has lost one of its loveliest and most lovable young women.

Having been a teacher in the Primary Department of Graded School up to the time of her illness, she won the love, admiration and respect of each child, and to them all she gave her love, her self. Her life will be an inspiration, and her memory will be held in loving remembrance, for it can be truly said of her:

"None knew her, but to love her,
None named her, but to praise."

RESOLUTIONS.

Miss Flora McIver.

"Death lies on her lips like an untimely frost upon the sweetest flower of the field."

On January 27, 1919, the soul of Flora McIver passed into eternity. To our roll call she will never again respond. She will meet us in council no more. We mourn her death, but rejoice for the life she lived, for Flora was a Christian, and in this beautiful faith she lived and died. In the death of this lovely and gifted young woman, the Junior Auxiliary of the Carthage Presbyterian Church feels that it has lost one of its most valuable members; therefore be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to God's will.

2. That our prayers and sympathy be extended to the bereaved family.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family; also a copy be recorded in our minutes, one sent to the Moore County News and one to the Presbyterian Standard.

AN APPRECIATION.

Since October 15, 1918, there have been taken from our midst three choice characters—most fair, most useful, most inspiring.

In the loss of Dr. William Angus Ray, Mrs. Effie Ray Hatfield, and dear "Mother Ray," as many outside of her own circle loved to call her, the world has been made greatly poorer. "They were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided."

Dr. Ray was taken, in spite of the brave fight his sister, Mrs. Hatfield, waged for him. In two weeks the same destroyer—influenza—felled her, though having most careful treatment.

The mother never murmured, but, on January 28, went to join them in the "Summer Land of Light."

Dr. Ray's life was unusually stainless and chivalrous, and was devoted to every good work in Church and State, and his eminence in his profession was widely established.

Mrs. Hatfield was equally eminent as directress of hospitals. There has never been in Sanford a more devoted and useful life. Her pastor said of her: "Though her death was sad in the extreme, there is something about it noble and appropriate. She went along the same way the Master went, laying down her life in sacrificial service. I know there are many who will rise up and call her blessed. I think of a woman like that who stood and battled with Death for the life of another till she, too, fell a victim, and I know that the God of all goodness and justice was with her, and is gloriously keeping His promise. "The good shepherd layeth down his life for his sheep," and her life was like His, her death like His so far as it could be, and she shares in His reward."

Mrs. Flora Martin Monroe Ray shone brightest in quiet, home ways, as mother and friend, but her "candle" will never grow dim in the many, many hearts who loved her, and to whom she brought cheer and comfort—"alluring to brighter worlds and leading the way."

All echo the Voice of the Spirit—

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord . . . their works do follow them."

"Who follows in their train?"

Sanford, N. C. E. P. C.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Callie M. Glass.

In the early morning hours of January 27 the angel of death entered the home of Mr. G. M. Glass and claimed for his victim Mrs. Callie M. Glass, the wife and mother of this peaceful home.

Mrs. Glass had been in declining health for several years, but was able to perform her household duties, attend church frequently and visit her neighbors, until within the past few months.

While her death has cast a shadow of gloom over the entire community and left her loved ones stricken with grief and sorrow, yet the end did not come as a surprise.

Mrs. Glass was the light and life of her home. Her husband relied on her wise counsel and superior judgment in the regulation of their domestic affairs. He always found in her a willing, efficient helpmeet. Her children turned to her from infancy, ever feeling assured of a mother's sympathy, of a mother's tender love and a wise adjustment of all their childish woes, and as they grew into mature years and went out into homes of their own they were sustained by the influence of a mother's prayers. She was beloved by all her neighbors and acquaintances. Ever lending a helping hand to the needy, dropping a sympathetic tear with the sorrowing, comforting the sick and suffering, with deeds of kindness and cheering words. It has been the writer's privilege to know Mrs. Glass from early girlhood and to be intimately associated with her family for the past 30 years, therefore we feel safe in asserting that all who knew her, loved and admired her sweet, unselfish Christian spirit. She was the daughter of the late R. S. and Isabella Stewart, and joined Bethel Presbyterian Church when a mere girl, thus consecrating her life to the Lord in the days of her youth.

She married G. M. Glass on December 18, 1872. In May of the following year she moved her church membership to Alamance, identifying herself with all of its interests and continuing a consistent, faithful member of this church until her death.

Mrs. Glass loved her church, and her hospitable home was always open to her pastors. Her Bible was the sustaining comfort and guiding principal of her life. On her dying bed she was wont to repeat many of its precious truths and assuring promises. During her last hours her suffering was very acute, but she bore the agonizing pain with meek Christian patience, relying on the redeeming love of her Lord and Saviour.

“TRAILING ARBUTUS” TIME.

Dear Standard:

We have two little calves, the youngest one is a brownish black and the other one is red with a black head. My teacher, several of my friends and I went “trailing arbutus” hunting last Saturday afternoon on a hillside. We have a little biddie that hasn't any mother, so we keep him in a box in the kitchen in the day-time, but at night we bring him in the house and put him in a basket, so that the cat can't get it.

TWO RED MULES.

Dear Standard:

I am a boy ten years old and my teacher's name is Miss Mary Graham Stevens and I like her fine. We have two new mules; one of them is named Jim and the other is Kate, and they are red. I don't want my letter to reach the waste basket.

Your friend,

DOG GOES TO SCHOOL.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old. I go to school at Pine Hill. My teacher's name is Miss Ethel Spears. I like her fine. I am in the fourth grade at school. I go to Sunday School every Sunday I can. My teacher's name is Miss Pattie Johnson. We like her fine. I have four sisters; all of them go to school but one; she is too little to go. We have a pet dog; her name is Pat; she goes to school with us sometimes. I will close.

Your little friend,
Janie Stafford.

BROTHER IN THE NAVY.

Dear Standard:

I am a girl of twelve years. I go to

She has laid aside her earthly garments and gone to adorn the robes of righteousness and dwell in the heavenly mansion prepared for her.

Mrs. Glass had spent 68 years in her earthly pilgrimage, and is survived by her aged husband and five children—Mr. C. E. Glass, Mrs. Johnsie Keith, Mrs. Paul Coble, Mrs. Emmet Hines and Miss Lettie Glass; also by one brother, Mr. D. C. Stewart, and one sister, Mrs. W. C. Kirkman, all of Guilford.

Her funeral services were conducted from Alamance Church by her pastor, Rev. E. C. Murray, and her remains laid to rest in the cemetery of this old historical church, amidst a host of sorrowing friends.

GRANDDAUGHTER OF A MISSIONARY.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old and am in the fifth grade at school. My teacher's name is Miss Marianna McDonald and I like her fine. I have the mumps just now. I go to school every day I can. I have not had the “flu” yet. Ruth has a cat named Tabitha. As I was going from one church to another, near Eagle Springs, on a field nearby there was the biggest aeroplane in the United States. My papa is Rev. W. L. Wilson and my grandfather was Rev. Jonathan Wilson, who was a missionary in Siam for 54 years.

ASKS A QUESTION.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl ten years old. I go to school. Miss Duell Marshall is my teacher. I like her fine. Papa takes your paper and mama reads it to me and my two little brothers. I go to Sunday School at Steel Creek. Mrs. Zoe Byram is my teacher. I will close by asking a question: How many times is eternity found in the Bible?

ELIZABETH'S CHOICE.

This is a true story about a little girl named Elizabeth. She was ten, and she had a sister Lucy, who was eight, and a little sister Frances, who was only four.

They were very nice little girls, and they loved one another dearly. Elizabeth was generous and unselfish, and often sacrificed her own pleasure to make her sisters happy.

Grandma liked to reward Elizabeth for her unselfishness, and so, one day she said to Aunt Daisy:

“I have asked the little girls to come over this morning and get the presents we brought them from Europe. I am going to let Elizabeth choose the one she likes best. I think she deserves a reward for sending Frances driving with Aunt Mary yesterday, in her place. She was very proud to give up her seat to make her little sister happy.”

The little girls soon arrived, and grandma kissed them and helped to take off their coats and hats. Then she led them into the living room. The three gifts were lying in their boxes on the table; a turquoise ring, a little pearl locket, and a bracelet with tiny clover on it.

“Oh, how lovely!” cried Elizabeth. “Weren't you good to bring us such pretty presents, grandma?”

“Which is for me?” asked Lucy, with shining eyes.

“Me choose, grandma?” said little Frances, with an engaging smile.

“No, dear,” answered grandma, “Elizabeth is to have first choice this time, because she was so good to let you go with Aunt Mary yesterday. Come, Elizabeth, which do you like best?”

Elizabeth clasped her hands and drew a long breath of excitement and rapture.

“They're all so beautiful,” she said. “May I really do just as I like about choosing, grandma?”

“You certainly may, dear; this is your choice.”

Elizabeth looked at the gifts again closely, and touched each with a careful finger, lingering over the locket. Then she glanced at Lucy's wistful face, and at Frances, who was resting her little nose on the edge of the table in her endeavor to see the pretty things.

“Which do you wish you had, Lucy?” Elizabeth asked suddenly.

“Oh, the ring, the ring!” cried Lucy, dancing up and down.

Elizabeth took the ring from its box and handed it to her, and was nearly choked by Lucy's “bear-hug.”

“Which do you like best, Frances?” who stood on tip-toes and waved a fat hand.

“I fink I'd ravver like the bracelet,” she said. Elizabeth clasped it on her chubby arm, and Frances gave her a big, big kiss.

“Then this is mine,” said Elizabeth, joyously, taking up the little pearl locket. “It's just what I wanted, grandma. Thank you a hundred times for it.”

As she kissed grandma, she whispered, “It's lots of fun to have first choice, isn't it?”

Grandma looked at the little sisters dancing for joy, and then at Elizabeth's radiant face, and smiled.

“It is when you are generous,” she said softly.

What do you think of Elizabeth's choice?—Christian Register.

The commonest kind of hypocrisy is the laughing that is done at old jokes.

He who offers God the second place in his life offers Him no place.

Peanut Brittle for His Wife.

sweetheart and afterwards peanut brittle for his wife! A box of chocolates will not harm the situation at any time. If dinner is late, don't mention it. If it is ready on time, compliment your wife on her punctuality. When your plan begins to develop your wife will think something has happened to you—that perhaps you are sick. She may even want to send for the doctor. Maybe for the minister. But just keep on in your new way.

"You are bound to win. You would never give up a hard prospect in the selling game, and I am sure you will not now in this other big game. It will be the greatest thing you have ever done if you can re-establish the old relations with all the joy and happiness."

And so we talked for more than an hour, and when he left me I reached over and took the sheet of paper on which I had drawn the lines. Under the divergent ones I wrote, "Make these parallel."

"May I have the paper?" he asked.

"Wait a moment," and so under the other lines I wrote:

1. Know yourself as a means to knowing others.
2. Master yourself.
3. Ideas always tend to express themselves in action.
4. Your dominant idea is of a happy home and a loving husband.

Nearly a month passed, and I saw him only during class sessions and with no opportunity to refer to the matter of our evening's discussion. Nearly two months later he came in to see me, "to report," as he said.

He had started right in to live up to the new ideal, and while his wife had been rather snappy and inclined to nag at him as formerly, he had kept himself under control, and, as he said, "really enjoyed the situation." Instead of retorting in kind he took occasion from time to time to tell some jokes and to say some pleasant things, which quite surprised her. So they lived for two or three weeks. Then, one evening after dinner, his wife went to him as he sat before the fireplace, asking, "What in the world has come over you lately?"

"Nothing that I know of. Why?"

"Well, something has. You have not scolded or picked on me for over two weeks."

"Oh! Is that what you mean?" he replied, "that's only a little applied psychology."

She referred to the subject a number of times after that in an inquiring sort of way, for the old frictions were going or gone, and they were both quite happy again. She wanted to know what had caused the change, for she realized that the change began in her husband and not in herself.

About six months after our first evening conversation, my friend told his wife of our chat and of his plan to use psychology to make a "happy home and a loving husband." When he had finished she threw her arms round his neck, kissed him and said, "Psychology is a great subject, isn't it?"

More than a year has passed since he made his new decision. When I saw him recently and inquired about the relations at home, he said, "The last six months have been the happiest we have ever known."

"What about the 'incompatibility of temperament?'" I inquired.

"Huh," he grinned, "there isn't any such thing."—Burt E. Farnsworth, in "Association Men."

LETTERS FROM RHEUMATICS

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter, but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of Rheumatism you can at least

TO REGILD THE SUNS.

Herbert Kaufman, in the January Cosmopolitan, writes a stirring editorial upon the conditions brought about by the armistice:

"The war is won. France and Italy have brought Alsace and Trent back to their aching flags; Albert the Great is king again in little Belgium; Serbia the Giant-killer has wrenched her hills from Austrian ogre; Poland is no longer Cinderella in the House of Tyranny; Roumania has cast the Prussian yoke; Czech and Jugo-Slav sit in the Council of Nations; Ferdinand the False cowers in hiding; the sacred dome of St. Sofia is shadowed with Constantine's returning cross, the Hapsburgs are finished; God and Democracy have baffled Wilhelm of Hohenzollern, and defeat has ended his line.

"Justice is satisfied, but mercy is not. After the fighting, the righting. After the conquerors, the constructors. After success, succor.

"The Hun is beaten. But pestilence and privation prey in his crimson wake. Flanders is a blasted, breadless reach; the Holy Lands wail across the world for food and shelter. Defiled women, naked children, resourceless old folk, through a thousand miles of shambles, pray for help and healing."

appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring. This water overcomes many diseases, including Indigestion, Gout, Uric Acid Poisoning and Liver and Kidney diseases, but no patrons of the Springs are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their Rheumatism. Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the Management:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver and Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of Stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began using Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time I was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The Water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints on her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

AMERICAN SILK FOR AN ENGLISH BRIDE.

In the trousseau of Princess Patricia, niece of the late King Edward VII, American products will be conspicuous. Although British authorities have indicated that some items for the wardrobe will come from the Old World, at least $15,000 worth of silk made in the United States has been purchased by Wallace Revelle, of the firm of Revelle & Rossiter, of London, dressmakers to the royal family. Two trunks full of mole-skin satin, moon-glo crepe, moon-glo satin, fan-ta-si in stripes and black for outdoor wear and printed Pierrette crepe are now on the high seas soon destined to find an enviable home with royalty. Mr. Revelle decided to break precedent and buy material for royal gowns in this country for two reasons: First, he believed he would be unable to get what he wanted in France at this time. And, in the second place, Paris would be too convenient for the imitating competitors of the dressmaking establishment.

Only a part of this silk will be used for the bride. Intimate friends of Princess Patricia, during her residence in Canada, often heard her proudly tell that her uncle had promised her absolute freedom in marriage, assuring her that her wedding need have no diplomatic significance. Public records do not show whether the late king also specifically authorized Princess Patricia to purchase part of her marriage trousseau from the shopkeepers of America, but in silk circles in New York it is surmised that he did.

THE TEST OF TIME.

When an article is without merit public sentiment condemns it. It immediately dies a natural death. When an article has merit, it will be everlastingly in demand. Gray's Ointment has now been used for a full round century. No greater proof can be offered of its effectiveness. One hundred years of honest, good old-fashioned value for money received has made it a family word in every household. Effective for sores, boils, burns, cuts, bruises, stings, eczema and the many forms of skin eruption. Ask your druggist. If he can't supply you send his name to W. F. Gray & Co., 843 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., and a liberal sample will be sent you free.

MODERN ENGLISH.

In his talk at the banquet in honor of President Wilson, King George said that the American people "speak the tongue of Shakespeare and Milton." In the main, we do, but have added a few words and phrases that would make Shakespeare and Milton scratch their heads and look around with a nobody-home expression on their faces.—Arkansas Gazette.

HATCHED 175 CHICKS.

G. W. Miller, of Pittsburg, Okla., writes: "I used Reefer's Ready Relief and out of 175 chicks hatched didn't lose one." Mrs. T. E. Murphy, of Hughesville, Mo., writes: "Have been using Ready Relief for White Diarrhoea and only lost one chick out of 140."

You can do as well. Reefer's Ready Relief in your baby chicks' first drinking water will save them from dying off with that dreadful White Diarrhoea plague. This remedy is the discovery of a famous scientist. Send $1 today to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 9253 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package that will save 500 baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth five for a cent? You take no risk. Mr. Reefer will refund every cent of your money if you are not entirely satisfied and a million dollar bank backs up this statement. Send for a $1 package today, or better still, send $2.35 on special discount for three regular $1 packages and insure every hatch you get. If you don't want to try this bank guaranteed chick saver, at least write today for Mr. Reefer's free valuable poultry book that gives the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.—Adv.

THE HALLMARK STORE

TO THE HOLDERS OF TREASURY (TAX) CERTIFICATES, SERIES T-2.

United States Treasury Tax Certificates Series T-2 are dated January 16, 1919, and mature on June 17, 1919. They have no coupons attached and the interest is, therefore, payable separately.

These certificates cannot be used for the tax payment due on March 15, as they mature more than 60 days after that date.

United States Treasury Tax Certificates Series T-3 will be dated March 15, 1919, and will mature (Monday), June 16, 1919, the day on which the second installment of income and profit taxes will be due and payable (one day earlier than Series T-2). Moreover, each tax certificate (Series T-3) will have a coupon covering the interests from March 15 to June 16.

As all tax certificates are acceptable by collectors of internal revenue at face value only, those certificates with coupons attached are more convenient, as the holder can, at the proper time, detach the coupon, use his certificate in payment of his tax, and collect the interest separately by presenting his coupon to his bank.

Tax Certificates Series T-2, dated January 16, and without coupons, can be exchanged for Tax Certificates Series T-3, dated March 15, with coupons attached, and when such exchange is made interest will be paid on the Tax Certificates Series T-2, from January 16, 1919, to the date of surrender, March 15, 1919.

Holders of Tax Certificates Series T-2 are requested to present, or send, them to the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond on, or preferably before, March 15, together with a subscription for a like amount of Certificates of Series T-3. The exchange will be made as of March 15. Interest to March 15 will be remitted, or credited, and certificates of the new series will be delivered, in accordance with the directions of the subscriber. Respectfully,
Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond,
Fiscal Agent for the U. S. Gov.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities, may have a copy of his money-saving shoe book for the asking.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH in the UNITED STATES

Finish the Job

Don't Stop

If your Church has over-subscribed its quota and only two-thirds of the members have been seen, DON'T STOP. See the other third.

If only one-half of the members of your Church and Congregation have subscribed and the others have said, "Come back," DON'T STOP. See them again; these are the very ones we must interest.

If three-fourths of your Church have subscribed and one-fourth did not pledge anything, DON'T STOP. Send other men to see them. The first may not have presented the matter in the right way. The unproductive ones are ones from whom we will get our surplus. We can project new work, enter new Foreign and Home fields, build new Churches and Schools, provide for the workers and train the recruits with the money these hitherto non-givers will give this year.

Don't Stop Until the Last One Has Subscribed---It is the Lord's Work

"Give and it shall be given unto you, pressed down and running over."

Make it your business to see that your Church Reports:

"Quota Overscribed---Every Member Enlisted." You Will Not Fail!

The urgency of this special effort is enforced by our love for the homeland, our sympathy for the millions for whom Christ died who have never heard that Name that is above every name, our loyalty to His Church, and our obedience to the command of the Lord and Master who is our Saviour and Friend.

There is a place for you in the front line. Do not be a slacker in the Lord's work. You are needed now. Enlist for service now under Jesus Christ the Matchless Leader. Help reach the last man in the last church.

RAISED ENTIRE INCUBATOR HATCH

Mrs. Dan Holycross, Silverwood, Ind., writes: "Reefer's Ready Relief is all it is said to be. I have not lost one of my last incubator hatch and they are now four weeks old." And G. W. Miller, of Pittsburg, Okla., writes: "Hatched 175 chicks and haven't lost one."

You can have the same success. Ready Relief in your baby chicks' first drinking water will save them from dying off with that dreadful plague, White Diarrhoea. Reefer's Ready Relief is the invention of a famous scientist. Send $1 today to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 5253 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package that will positively help your baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth saving? You take no risk. Mr. Reefer will refund every cent of your money if you are not entirely satisfied, and a million dollar bank guarantees he will do it. send for a $1 package today, or better still, send $2.35 on special discount for three regular $1 packages and insure every hatch you get. Aren't your baby chicks worth five for a penny? That's about the cost of Reefer's Ready Relief. If you don't want to try this bank guaranteed chick saver at least write today for Mr. Reefer's free valuable poultry book that gives the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry. —Adv.

heeding the eye wound Mr. Fonville, who had gone through two months of hard fighting unscathed, continued serving the men, carrying supplies, acting as stretcher-bearer, and looking after hospital work where 1,500 wounded men were served hot coffee, chocolate and cookies in a day. He stayed on duty eight days, till the division was relieved, and then it was too late to save the sight of his eye. Major General Upton gave him a letter showing the high appreciation of his daring work. Concerning his work and sacrifice he has little to say, but he is enthusiastic about the American soldiers.

"My experience gave me an appreciation of American men and what they can go through," he said. "Our division was a shock unit. It never went any way but forward. Our division alone captured 12,000 prisoners. These men appreciated the Y. M. C. A. and understood the difficulties it had to contend with in getting supplies up to the front. I have no complaint to make about losing the sight of one eye, that is war, but it bewilders me to have known what I do of the work of the 'Y' in France and then come home to learn of the widely-repeated criticisms being circulated here. I believe that in due time the full appreciation of the Y. M. C. A.'s work for victory will be general." No question about it."—Red Triangle.

SHALL I GO TO COLLEGE?

Every High School Senior should be settling this question now, and parents should stand ready to give every encouragement to securing an affirmative answer. Russia's state is woeful, and it grows largely out of the ignorance of its people. True Democracy will not persist aside from proper education.

What Kind of Education is Best For Me? Germany's state is no better than Russia's, and Germany is a nation of largely technically trained people, whose education is materialistic. The heart and core of the educational life of America and England is cultural—the education of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

Shall It Be Christian Education? By all means. Have we not learned from sad experience of late that education without Christianity is dangerous? Think it over.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE is a Christian College of Liberal Arts and Sciences of long established reputation for breadth and thoroughness of courses and development of character. The aim here is to develop the whole man. The R. O. T. "THE WHITE LADIES OF WORCESTER"

By Florence Barclay.

The heroine, believing she has lost her betrothed lover, either through unfaithfulness or death while he is absent on a crusade, enters a convent. After she has taken this step the hero returns. From this interesting situation the author develops a story that, for decided power and charm, for dramatic effectiveness and prevailing wholesomeness, challenges comparison with "The Rosary."

Standard Piano Club Makes Piano Buying Easy

You will never know how easy it is for you to provide your home with a splendid Piano or Player-Piano until you have investigated the splendid money-saving proposition of the Presbyterian Standard Piano Club. Those who have purchased their instruments through the Club write us that they are surprised and delighted with the big saving in price, the convenient plan of payment and the superb quality of their Pianos and Player-Pianos.

The Ludden & Bates Player Piano

The Player-Piano has come to stay, for it enables every one, young or old, to perform on the piano, no matter whether they have ever studied music or not. But to play in the best time, with the best expression and with the sweetest tone quality, you must have the Ludden & Bates Self-player Piano. It is really two splendid instruments in one—a regular high grade Piano for use by musicians and a Self-Player Piano for those who do not know one note from another.

If you secure your Player-Piano through the Club you not only save approximately one-third the price, but you also secure the benefit of the Club's Free Music Roll Service by which you can exchange your old rolls for new selections at a nominal cost to cover postage and the expense of handling. This represents, in the course of time, a tremendous saving. Do not make the mistake of obtaining your Player-Piano from a house which cannot give you a free and comprehensive service in the exchange of music rolls.

And why shouldn't they be surprised and delighted? They are members of a powerful syndicate—a Club of One Hundred Buyers, and are logically entitled to the lowest price at which a high grade Piano can possibly be sold. The factory recognizes this right by making the lowest possible Factory price. Each Club member is responsible only for his own order—the Management fills up the Club.

In addition we have arranged a safe and convenient plan of payment which Club members say is ideal. It is vastly superior to the old installment plan for it perfectly protects every interest of the Club member and insures him against every disadvantage of the partial payment plan as ordinarily conducted.

Others Are Delighted, Why Not You?

The Club will save you approximately one-third the price, or about one dollar out of three. It positively insures your perfect satisfaction with every detail of the transaction. You must be thoroughly pleased with the Quality, Price and Terms, otherwise the Club will, after thirty days, ask you to return the instrument and on receipt of same will refund whatever you have paid.

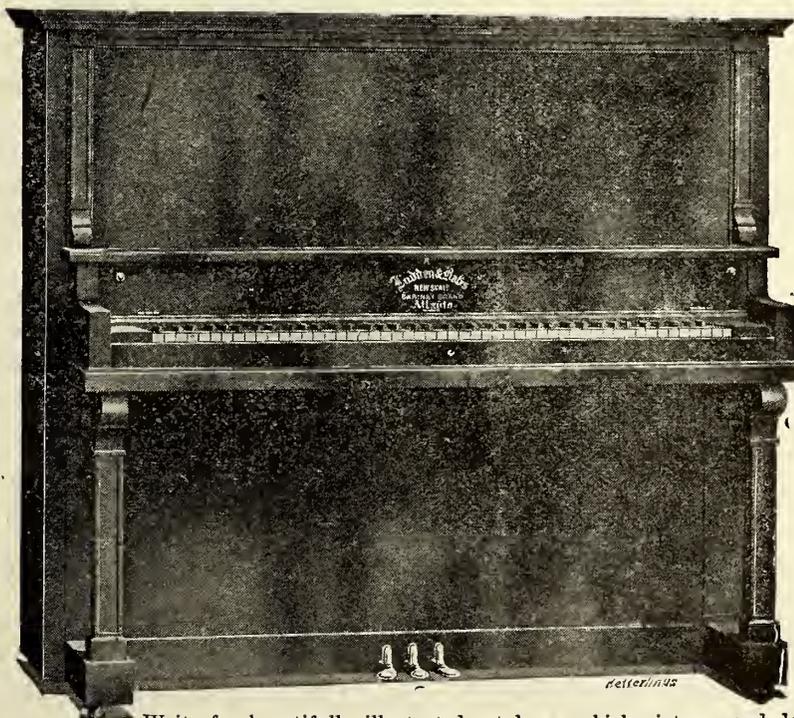

Do not look upon the Club as an experiment, for it passed that stage years ago. Thousands of delighted members are ready to assure you that the Club is the one perfect solution of the piano buyer's problem. We have printed hundreds of their letters in a book. Write for a free copy and see what they say. Here are a few samples selected at random:

Typical Letters From Club Members

Cedartown, Ga., Dec. 31, 1912.
Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.—"The Piano is a treasure, and everyone remarks on the sweetness of tone, and it has been so much pleasure to the family. The Club Plan places the Piano in so many homes that otherwise would have to wait an indefinite time to buy. Accept my sincere thanks for your courteous treatment."
MRS. R. A. SPINKS.

College Grove, Tenn., Feb. 15, 1913.
Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.—"In regard to the Piano, I am perfectly delighted with it, and everyone that has heard it, or has played on it says they never heard a finer toned one, and I can observe such a vast difference in this one and others that are in this community, that have been placed by agents. Too, every one, even those that know nothing about music, can tell the superiority of this Piano over others. Wishing you much success, I am,"
MRS. JORDAN RIGGS.

Columbia, S. C., Dec. 28, 1912.
Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.—"I have had one of your pianos in my home for several months and I find that it comes up to your representation in every particular. Your Club Plan for the payment of same strikes me as being very lenient and I think that every home can afford a Piano on this basis. Trusting that you have a very prosperous business along this line, I am,"
MRS. AVA JACKSON.

Write for beautifully illustrated catalogue which pictures and describes the superb Ludden & Bates instruments and explains the many attractive features of the Club.

Write for your copy of the Club Catalogue today. It will help you as it is helping others by the hundreds. Address

Because He Knows.

Through rocky gorge, up root-cleft steep
The shepherd ofttimes leads his sheep.
No wish has he to swell their woes—
He urges on because he knows
That just upon the other side
The springing fields are stretching wide.
But to his flock, the pastures green,
The bloom, the streams, are all unseen.

By rough, bleak paths, through wind-swept waves,
O'er moorlands lone, past hallowed graves
God sometimes leads, because He knows
Beyond these weary ways there grows
A greener, richer pastureland
Provided by His gracious hand.
Our holden eyes see not afar
The fruitage rare, so blind we are!

Anne Porter Johnson, in Continent.

Editorial

Yet One Other Amendment.

WHEN a candidate for the ministry applies to Presbytery for licensure, our Book prescribes an examination covering the usual course of studies that make up the curriculum of our first-class colleges and the course of theological studies embraced in our seminary curriculum. The license which the Presbytery confers testifies that the holder has stood a satisfactory examination on all these subjects, and the license to preach the Gospel wherever in the providence of God the candidate may be called is granted expressly on the ground that the examination has been held and proven satisfactory to the Presbytery.

In a short while the licentiate returns to Presbytery with a call from some church asking him to undertake the pastorate. On the basis of the call the licentiate asks to be ordained. The Presbytery grants the request and examines him with a view to ordination. It begins this examination just where it began the other, with experimental religion; it proceeds over substantially the same ground; and comes out at the same point precisely as in the former examination. Why this duplicate examination? The book says that this examination is that the "Presbytery may be fully satisfied of his qualification for the sacred office." But this was exactly the reason for his former examination. The Presbytery gave him a license on the ground that he had satisfied itself of his fitness for the sacred office, in so far at least as such an examination could furnish proof of fitness. When the licentiate comes before Presbytery for ordination he holds in his possession an official document, signed and sealed by the Presbytery, testifying that he has passed the religious, the literary, and the theological test of fitness to preach. The Presbytery absolutely ignores its own official testimony, and proceeds to subject the licentiate a second time to substantially the same test. Probably the examinations are not over three months apart. Frequently they are not over three weeks apart. After formally and officially declaring its satisfaction with the candidate's fitness to preach, why should the Presbytery seek satisfaction again in the course of three weeks? The candidate has not had time to forget anything that he knew or to acquire any new views on the subjects under consideration.

The Book intimates that if both these examinations are conducted by the same Presbytery the second one need not be as thorough as would be proper if it were conducted by a different Presbytery from that which conducted the first examination. But the Book outlines only the one examination for ordination whether conducted by the same Presbytery that licensed or by a different one. Nor does it make any recognition in either case of the license which the applicant for ordination holds. It deals with him as if he were a rank stranger, and assumes him to be guilty till it proves him innocent. Utterly regardless of the fact that only three weeks ago it declared him fit to preach the Gospel, it proceeds to examine him on experimental religion, as if in doubt of his conversion. The Presbytery would seem to have a very short memory, or to have discovered some suspicious evidence touching the licentiate's character.

Do our presbyteries as a rule pass the licentiate through the elaborate examination for ordination prescribed in the Book? Is it not the rule for this second examination to be farcical, or to use a milder term, to be merely pro forma? It is so obviously superfluous and tautological that the gravest and most sober minded presbyters find it impossible to treat it with any large measure of respect. It is quite common, we think, to ask the licentiate if he has changed his views, since his recent licensure, touching any of the subjects proposed for examination. When he gives an answer in the negative, the examination is sustained as satisfactory by a unanimous smile.

Why should our Book require any such examination for ordination? Is there any logical basis for it? Is it not, on the contrary, totally illogical? What is our doctrine of vocation to office? It is threefold, the man's own conscience, the concurring judgment of the lawful court of Christ's house, i. e., as respects our Church, the Presbytery, and the manifest approbation of God's people. A young man says, "I feel called of God to preach the Gospel." The Presbytery says, "If God has called you, He has endowed you with the requisite gifts and graces. We will examine you in reference to these." When the Presbytery is satisfied touching his gifts, properly trained and developed, and touching his piety, it expresses this satisfaction by giving him a license to preach. Two stages of the call are now passed, the testimony of two of the parties has been given. The young man testifies to his conscientious belief that it is his duty to preach. The Presbytery after carefully examining his gifts and graces testifies that it is satisfied. Only one thing remains—the manifest approbation of God's people. If he is called to preach, some congregation has been called to hear him preach. The Presbytery sends him forth with its license to secure the testimony of this third and last witness. He returns with this testimony in the shape of a call. What ought the Presbytery to do? What is the logical thing to do? To consider the case ended. To accept the verdict. We have all the evidence we demanded, all that we can have, to prove that the young man is called of God to preach. What then should we do? Ordain him without further question. To put him on trial again, and subject him a second time to the same religious, literary and theological test, is manifestly illogical. It is not surprising that it results in a farce. Our Book needs a general overhauling.

The Day of Big Things.

Man is an imitative animal, a trait that no doubt first suggested the supposed descent from the monkey. It shows itself in childhood, and does not leave even in mature age, as evinced in the fashions, whether followed by man or woman.

While this tendency may be a sign of weakness when carried too far, it is at times productive of much good.

This great war through which we have passed has surpassed all previous experience in war, whether we consider the number engaged, the variety of weapons used, the ingenuity displayed, and the awful toll of human life. Everything was on a big scale, and in order to meet the expense of these big things, the government had to float loans on a proportionate scale, asking and obtaining sums too vast for the average mind to grasp.

The churches began to imitate the secular government, and placed their estimates far in excess of any that they had dared to ask, and the encouraging feature of it all is the fact that the contagion of big giving has reached the people, and from every quarter we are hearing of the success of the different canvasses, whether in our own church or in those of other denominations.

The Baptists, who outnumber nearly all of the other denominations, have started out to raise $6,000,000, and unless they do discredit to their past history they will succeed.

The Congregationalists, who do not figure largely in the South, but are strong in the North, have set out to raise a "Pilgrim Memorial Fund" of $5,000,000.

The Disciples of Christ, better known in the South as Campbellites or Christian, have already finished their work of raising $6,300,000.

The Presbyterians, who are always strong on giving money, propose to raise the sum of $13,000,000.

The Methodists propose to raise a Centennial Fund to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Home and Foreign work.

Some have placed $85,000,000, while others modestly write down $100,000,000 as their limit, all to be raised in five years. These are immense sums, almost staggering, yet they will be raised, for the people have grown accustomed to big sums, and they think in big figures.

If the tendency to imitate will help us to raise these vast sums for the Lord's work, we ought to be reconciled to having one trait in common with the monkeys, even if it does give men an argument to prove our descent from these amusing creatures.

Church Union.

There are some questions that will not down, especially if they are questions into which conscience can be dragged. Luther once said, that in God's name all mischief began, which of course is an extreme position.

It is plain, however, that when a man's conscience is aroused, whether it be an enlightened or unenlightened conscience, he is going to give neither himself nor others any rest till he does what conscience says should be done.

The conscience of many are worried over the apparent divisions, not only in our own denomination, but in the Protestant Churches generally. They construe Christ's prayer for unity to be an organic as well as a spiritual unity, and they are convinced that as long as the body of Christ is divided, the Church will not prevail. There may be others who are fascinated by the idea of bigness, of being able to point to a great National Presbyterian Church extending from Maine to Texas, and from the Atlantic to the shores of the Pacific.

They long to be able to point to this great Church, and thereby impress the country with the greatness of Presbyterianism.

In our own Church there are many in the border Synods who see the friction of two churches in one field, the waste of the Lord's money and the waste of the strength of the Lord's people, and they naturally desire union.

Our dear brother, Joseph A. Vance, was so carried away with the idea of union that he wanted to unite all churches—and during his absence in France the committee of which he is chairman recently held a meeting in Detroit, and took steps toward union.

On this committee are representatives of the Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Congregational and Disciple Churches.

We are going to accept union when it is plainly the Lord's will, though we are still praying and laboring for the coming together of all churches in the spirit of Christian fellowship and union.

We would have more hopes of a permanent union in the future if we could see the same desire and energy shown in an effort to be of the same mind, being of one accord, as is shown in securing an external union. Our brethren seem to forget that even after we are bound together under one name, we are going to be different in our ideas and standards, and that it will take more grace to preserve peace when we are together than when we are apart.

However, we have our eyes fastened upon the pillar of fire by night and cloud by day. When that moves forward, we expect to follow, but we do not propose to hurry up matters.

The Aftermath of War.

The Peace Conference faces problems more difficult than the winning of battles, and the end is not yet.

The fathers and mothers of the boys who have been in France find themselves dreading the possible revelations of changes in their ideas and habits, produced by the customs of the country where they have been living. Their fears have arisen especially in connection with the drinking habits of France and the abundance of wine in every-day use. When they read that wine is used by the French families at meals very much as we use water, they fear lest their sons may return as wine bibbers. Then when they read of the thousands upon thousands of cigarettes that have been sent over and distributed by the semi-religious organizations, and see the soldiers in our own camps, always smoking, they do not see how their sons can resist the example set.

If they believe one-half of what certain wise men write about the change in the religious views of the soldiers, they must expect their boys who went out believing in the old-fashioned religion and trusting the old-fashioned God of their mothers, to return with no religion at all, or else with a kind that differs from any ever seen on sea or land.

These are not pleasant anticipations and the pictures our imaginations produce do not tend to peace of mind, so it may be wiser to think of the other side of the possible results of this war.

Instead then of dwelling upon what the people of France do to our boys, suppose that we dwell upon the possible influence of our boys upon them and their customs. The Scripture gives the assurance that good can overcome evil, so let us hope that our good habits and ways may overcome the evil over there.

We read, for example, that the French and Belgians were everywhere impressed with the fine physique of our men, their strong bodies, heavy frames, clear skin, buoyant spirits, good humor, and prowess in battle. Those men must think and they must reason that there is a cause for all these things, and when they learn that our nation is a temperate nation, that we have outlawed liquor, and that the military laws forbid the use of drinks of any kind, they must be impressed by the good results of such a life, and thus the leaven of prohibition will be planted and in time will work. Before many years the temperance wave will sweep over Europe as it has swept over this country.

Any movement that appeals to the conscience, if once started, can never be stopped. When we consider the spiritual results, why should we conclude that in the struggle the devil must necessarily come out ahead?

Among those millions of men who went over there were many men of many minds. Some were distinctly irreligious, and they no doubt are more so. Some were indifferent, caring little about such things, and they no doubt were injured spiritually. But then on the other hand there were hundreds of active Christians—young men who were strong in faith and aggressive in Christian work at home, who were not likely to lose their aggressiveness in a foreign land, when the need for it was so great.

Turn such men loose among the French and Belgians, and even if they cannot speak to be understood, their example will speak louder than words, and will leave an impress that in time may transform the community in which they were.

This may seem to some a view too optimistic, but we have great confidence in the power of good, and we are not yet ready to believe that the world is not growing better.

The aftermath is mixed, we have to confess, but we believe that in the end, when all the results are worked out, the good will overbalance the evil. At least it is a much pleasanter picture to draw.

Work Among the Overseas Soldiers

A Letter From Dr. Jas. I. Vance to the First Church, Nashville, Tenn.

THIS week, I am here at Chaumont, the headquarters of the American Expeditionary Force, preaching every night in a large Y. M. C. A. hall, to a big crowd of attentive, homesick American soldiers. A stone's throw from my hotel is the Hotel de Ville, on the steps of which a few weeks ago President Wilson and General Pershing reviewed the American Army. I have seen both of these great leaders since coming to France, General Pershing in Brest the day we landed, when he made a brief address to our group, and President Wilson, as he was leaving his hotel for the Peace Conference.

The statement made me at home that the church is facing its greatest opportunity with the soldiers has been strongly confirmed. My brother and I are part of an outfit of thirty preachers and singers, going from division to division of the army and holding for a week with each division, nightly meetings at which the simple Gospel is preached. The men are billeted in various towns of an area, so that it is not possible to reach all of them with a single service. Hence a preacher and his singer are sent to a unit to give the message to the same group night after night for the entire week. This intensive work is having splendid results. Last week I was at Ancy de France, the headquarters of the Eightieth or Blue Ridge Division. It was an experience never to be forgotten. The hut was packed night after night, 50 to 150 soldiers standing patiently throughout each service and listening with an eagerness to the old story that made it easy to preach. I have never had such attention. Sunday morning I administered the communion to a hundred soldiers, and it was worth coming to France for this service alone. I wish you could have seen the light in the faces of these boys, as they reverently took from me, each one of them, the emblems of our Saviour's passion. Several of them expressed the intention of studying for the ministry when they go home, and there were several others who had entered the army from the Theological Seminaries and who will go back to complete their preparation. Perhaps there were twenty men in these two classes at Ancy. In addition to this, my brother and I, at the request of the Paris office, are holding conferences with enlisted men, army officers, Y. M. C. A. secretaries and army chaplains to ascertain the views of these men on the church and the religious outlook after the war. The conferences held thus far do not indicate that these men want any radical change. They believe in the church and its mission. They express themselves as done forever with sectarianism and intolerance, but when you question them you find they do not mean by this a surrender of convictions or the creation of an institution in which Christian and Jew, Protestant and Catholic shall pool their beliefs and pull out of the pool a religious molly coddle.

The criticisms of the Y. M. C. A. which were being heard on every hand, when I sailed from America, I have found to be both ungenerous and unjust. That the "Y" has made mistakes, its best friends admit; and that among the 6,000 men it has sent overseas, were some who should never have been sent and who have grievously misrepresented the association, is not strange; but it is not fair to pass wholesale condemnation on an organization for these isolated instances. The doughboy is now criticising everything, and he wants to get home, but he is at bottom a fair chap, and when he gets home and looks back and tries to place the praise where it belongs, the "Y" will hold the center of the stage. It is doing a tremendous work, in the face of almost insurpassable obstacles. With 40 per cent of supplies and 30 per cent of transportation, it has done 60 per cent of its job. Wherever you go you find the "Y" and its men and buildings. It has not given away, except in the front trenches, cigarettes, for it was not allowed to do so by the army authorities; but it has done better than give cigarettes; it has given buildings, and it is the only organization that has done this on any considerable scale. Night before last at Dijon I saw a great building, formerly a famous house of prostitution, that has been taken over by the "Y," cleaned and fumigated from top to bottom, furnished with up-to-date shower baths and all modern conveniences and capable of furnishing beds for 250 soldiers at a franc a night. This is what you find wherever you go. The best eating places, where food is abundant and prices reasonable, are the "Y" joints.

The statement that the "Y" men were not in the front trenches can best be answered by a short and ugly word. More than 40 of them have lost their lives in the service.

Any one who tells you that the "Y" has failed in its work overseas is either misinformed or vicious. The association deserves your most generous and enthusiastic support.

We go from here to the Eighty-first Division, the Wild Cat Division, to which my son Crowell belongs. I have already seen him twice and hope to be assigned to work in his unit next week.

From there we go to the Army of Occupation along the Rhine.

I am not seeing as many of our church boys as I had hoped, for the Thirtieth Division, to which most of them belong, was ordered home just as I reached Paris. I rejoice, however, at their good fortune.

I am planning to sail about the 1st of April, and if all goes well, hope to be with you for the second Sunday in that month. I know you are remembering me in your prayers, for I feel it in the work I am trying to do.

With love to all my dear people, I remain

Devotedly, your pastor,

Address: Chaumont, France.

Dr. C. I. Scofield Honored.

We are all familiar with the subtle insinuation that a writer who believes the Bible in its entirety cannot justifiably lay claim to a place of dignity among scholars. This insinuation has been a favorite weapon of the destructive critics of the Bible.

In view of this fact it is gratifying to learn that the literary labors of a Southern scholar, whose writings have been confined to Biblical subjects, have been recognized recently by the French Academy as announced in the following news item:

Dr. C. I. Scofield has recently been paid the distinguished honor of being elected a member of the Societe Academique D'Histoire Internationale of France. His diploma of membership was signed at Paris, February 6, 1919, by Le President, officer de La Legion D'Honneur, Vicomte De Faria, and countersigned by Secretary General, officer de l'Instruction Publique.

The Academie Francaise was founded in 1635 for the purpose of refining the French language and its style. Originally it was limited to forty members, and a place among them was eagerly sought after as one of the highest honors which could be attained by an author. After several changes in plan and scope during the succeeding years the Academie consists at present of four classes, namely, Science, limited to 63 members; Languages, 37 members; History and Antiquities, 38 members; Arts, 40 members.

Dr. Scofield's election places him among the 38 "immortals" of the third class, and is as high an honor as can come to a literary man. Also the Doctor has been notified that he will shortly receive a gold medal from the Academie in recognition of his literary and historical writings.

This is all the more remarkable in view of the fact that all of Dr. Scofield's labors have been confined to the subjects recorded in the "History and Antiquities" of the one Book. Crescent City, Fla.

Dr. Green and Union

By Rev. D. H. Ogden, D.D.

IT has been my good fortune to count as my warmest friends many of the grand old men of the church. Among them is Dr. Green, to whom I am bound by strong personal ties. His article of last week entitled "Dr. Ogden's Plan," is written in that kindly spirit which marks his life and has so greatly endeared him to his brethren.

He does not discuss the "Synodical Plan of Union"—I wish that he had—but addresses himself to the following paragraph in one of my recent articles: "I wonder if our brethren in the heart of the church realize the problem that exists on the border. Shall we work out this problem along the 'sloughing off' line in which there is so much of difficulty and heartburning, or shall we as an Assembly face it and solve it now?"

In commenting upon this paragraph, Dr. Green writes: "How has Dr. Ogden discovered so quickly what we who have lived here so many years have never suspected? We know of no 'heartburnings' nor of any 'difficult problems.'"

Let us bear in mind just what I said: First that there is a problem on the border, and second that there is difficulty and heartburning in solving it along the sloughing off line.

In my former article I stated clearly that I was using Kentucky as an illustration in order to make the presentation concrete, and for that purpose alone. Dr. Green cites, and I gladly recognize, the fine joint work of the U. S. A. and U. S. Synods of Kentucky in a few specific causes, notably the Theological Seminary. This effective service rendered by these two Synods in those spheres wherein they have bound themselves into definite oneness for the doing of a special task does not refute my contention. On the contrary, it is an added illustration of the desirability of seeking to work out a plan by which the full, united strength of the Presbyterians of every section of the land shall be brought to bear upon all the work of the Kingdom.

Dr. Green bids me open my eyes and witness the practical solution of the union problem. When I do as he bids me, I see three things:

1. The Problem of the Border. Here we have overlapping Synods and Presbyteries and not infrequently congregations. There is friendly relationship but there is not constructive oneness, save in a few specific cases where an organic bond has been wrought out through which the spirit of unity may function.

The problem of the border arises from the lack of an organic bond that would enable the spirit of oneness to function in the full sweep of the work of the Kingdom.

2. The Sloughing Off Solution. I said that in the effort to solve the problem of the border by the "sloughing off" method there was difficulty and heartburning. If an important church or a Presbytery decides upon transfer from one Assembly to the other in order to solve a local problem, there is invariably the condition that I have indicated. Christian men and women may succeed in keeping out bitterness and church courts may try to act in an absolutely fair way, but the problem is extremely difficult. When I lift up my eyes as Dr. Green suggests I see this truth illustrated.

3. An Organic Bond. As I look to the Seminary I see one of the ablest and soundest theological schools in all the land, and I realize that the good will of the two Kentucky Synods could never have brought this institution into being unless there had been an organic bond established for the doing of this great task. If the Presbyterians of the border are sufficiently one in spirit and doctrine to unite in the training of the men who are to proclaim the Gospel, surely they are sufficiently one to unite in all the other tasks of the church. We simply need an organic bond to lift into fine efficiency the forces which divided are so much less effective.

It is natural that our younger men should feel more keenly the problem of a divided church and that from them should come suggestions for reunion. It is greatly to be desired that these suggestions be so sane as to merit the approval of the older men.

The plan that I have suggested, if adopted, would immediately gather into one Synod all the U. S. A. and U. S. Presbyterians in each state or definite territory. Each Synod would be given full authority over its purely local affairs. Over these Synods there would be a National General Assembly composed of commissioners from the Synods. This Assembly would have direct charge of all the general work of the church.

Thus we would safeguard the principle of local self government, create an organic bond by which the Presbyterian forces of a given territory would be brought unitedly to bear upon the entire work of the Kingdom, and bring into real and effective oneness the Presbyterianism of America.

Dr. Green admits that the basis for union proposed by the U. S. A. committee is "clear cut and forward looking." Of it he says: "It was a fine statement of the platform upon which our church has been standing for fifty-seven years."

The crux of the matter is simply this: Will the U. S. A. Church stand true to the proposals of its committee, and if so can we work out the details of union in a satisfactory way?

This is not the hour in which to build elaborate and ineffective ecclesiastical machinery. It is the hour for definite conference with the U. S. A. Church in the effort to find a simple and effective method of union.

The Synodical plan will make our system logical; it will give an effective oneness; it will safeguard local self government.

The Statement of Dr. Ogden.

By Rev. Jno. M. Wells, D.D.

I have just read the article of Dr. Ogden in the paper of March 26.

As to whether his so-called confessions are really in Dr. Whaling's article, I leave for Dr. Whaling to say. He is abundantly able to take care of himself, and will doubtless show that the so-called confessions are the creation of a vivid fancy. But lest some should be prejudiced against the plan of Federal Union under consideration by the committee of the Churches U. S. and U. S. A. by Dr. Ogden's alleged "three significant confessions," I desire as chairman of the committee of our Church to make this statement: Not one of the three alleged confessions is correct.

1st. It is not a fact that the Federal Union proposed is "Organic Union" in the current sense in which that term is in use in our church.

2nd. It is not a fact that "our Assembly will be asked to surrender in large measure its autonomy."

3rd. It is not a fact that "the union contemplated is to embrace at present only the U. S. A. and U. S. Assemblies."

Beyond this emphatic denial I do not care at this time to go into the discussion of the Plan of Federal Union. Meanwhile I make the reasonable request that the reader suspend judgment on the plan until the committee can complete and publish the full text.

Let me assure the Church that the "Plan" now gives promise of being one that will commend itself to the great majority of our Church. If opposed at all it will probably be opposed by a few extremists on either side—by those who are unalterably opposed to any change whatever at one extreme, and by those who will be satisfied with nothing less than to be swallowed up in Organic Union at the other. When the Plan of Federal Union really comes before the Church for discussion, those who favor it will be ready to discuss it with Dr. Ogden.

A New Dress, Please

A NEW dress, Madame, please," cried Germaine, a tiny refugee, but too young to remember all that word conveyed, as she thrust her eager little face before the busy lady who sat at her desk in the Faubourg St. Honore in Paris, passing out help to an endless stream of people who, humbly presented their record card which showed that they were a worthy refugee family, investigated by a Red Cross worker, that they were poor, oh! very poor, and badly in need of clothing.

"Germaine" was one of a family group; mother, little boy and girl. Their clothing was ragged, the little boy's feet were almost bare through the worn cloth espadrilles. Germaine held out her tiny skirt, torn, thin, wet with February rain. A visible shade came over the face of the woman at the desk. Her fingers wrote rapidly. "Germaine Bolle, one pair of shoes, two pairs of stockings, two flannel petticoats, two pairs of drawers. But—but I'm afraid—Miss Jenkins," she interrupted herself hurriedly in English. "See if you can possibly find a little girl's dress for me. I know they haven't been sending us any from the Red Cross, but maybe—this child does want a new one so," and she wrote out the list for the boy, putting in two extra pairs of stockings because he would be the worker of the family.

Then the three, clutching their slips of paper with the writing on them that meant warmth and comfort, moved slowly down to the rooms crowded with bundles of clothing gathered from the work rooms and homes of America.

Past the desk moved other groups. First two old, old women, with a little boy. Their cards showed that they had been twice evacuated in two years and that the little boy was a child they had found! They needed aprons and good warm petticoats and he needed shoes and trousers.

Then two young boys, in a nondescript bundle of garments came in, one with a horribly distorted face, bandaged; the other had such a cold on his lungs that he only wheezed when he talked. They had been prisoners in Germany and had walked in from far beyond Nancy—many, many miles.

Three girls were next; pretty, young, charming girls with refined and cultured manners. They spoke French with a pretty, clicking accent but their cards showed they were Serbians and their history indicated wealthy and educated parents. But they were grateful for the stiff unbleached muslin underwear and the flannel blouses which was all the Vestiaire could give them.

All day long the procession went by the desk, out into the clothing rooms and then again across the room and out the other door. Always the groups about the desk had that air of holding their breath and that look of patient waiting in the eyes. Always, at that outer door they paused, with that instinctive mannerliness of the French, turned and murmured to the room, "Bon jour, Madames. Thank you Madames." And then they would smile, the old people vaguely, the younger women with renewed courage, and the children—often the children giggled and chuckled and pointed to their wonderful new shoes and their miraculous warm capes and sometimes forgot to say "Thank you," because they were so happy.

For months and months the Red Cross has kept these distributing places supplied, but the stream seems absolutely endless, and the need grows with the passing months. As is well known, the fabric mills of France and of Belgium as well as of other allied countries have been destroyed, and the people are destitute. Not only can they not afford to buy clothing, but there is no clothing to buy, and nothing to make it from. The Red Cross is appealing to the people of America to supply this acute need which is said to be a greater need today even than of food.

The week of March 24 to 31 was set aside by the Red Cross for this campaign, but this week the need is just as urgent; not money is being asked but clothing; the sort of clothing that thousands of American families send to rummage sales each year or put away in camphor and never use again! These clothes are needed to reconstruct the people of the war torn countries. To be properly clothed means to retain or regain a certain amount of self-respect. It is a sanitary measure, too, for the European springs and summers are cool; the people are devitalized by four years of war; their resistance is low and unless they are adequately protected against the weather there will be untold suffering and death.

The American people, who responded so generously to every war-time appeal made to them by the Red Cross, will not fail to answer to this call now. The fear of increased high prices on clothing in America has passed. We are making our own dye stuffs; we are turning out woolen goods equal to the best ever "made in Germany," and with no army demands upon us, our civilian population will profit by our newly acquired industries and our people will soon be over-clothed again. From our surplus will we not give, and give generously?

The Red Cross stands ready to act for us—our part is just to give, and we cannot, must not fail to act the part that history, tradition, reputation and past precedent has made so peculiarly our own.

Meeting of Laymen's Missionary Movement

THE Executive Committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement of the Southern Presbyterian Church, will hold its regular Bi-annual Convention in Atlanta, Ga., June 10-12, 1919.

This announcement will be received with great interest and pleasure by many of our people all over the church, and it is confidently expected that this convention will be one of the most important and largely attended of any that have ever been held.

The movement regrets very much that it has not been able to make this announcement earlier, particularly as so many parties have been inquiring to know when the convention was to be held. Last fall the "flu" conditions were such all over the land that it was impossible then to arrange for the convention in February, 1919, the usual time for holding the convention as the movement had no assurance that the authorities would even permit them to hold the convention when February came, and so it was necessary to pass over the regular time.

When the executive committee met early in the year and canvassed the situation no suitable time seemed available this spring, except perhaps the last week in April, but that was crowding in the convention between the meetings of the Spring Presbyteries and the Assembly, and a number of the executive committee did not think it would be wise to hold the convention at that time, so after carefully considering every available date, June 10 to 12 seemed the most feasible and best time. This date comes before our real hot weather sets in and before our people break up for their summer vacations and after the closing of schools, and although the convention does not come at the usual time, it seems it is certainly the best date that could possibly have been selected under all the circumstances.

The invitation extended by the Presbyterians of Atlanta to the movement to hold its convention has been most enthusiastic and hearty.

A strong local organization has been perfected in Atlanta with the following officers, which will insure that everything will be done on the part of the hosts of the convention:

General Chairman, Judge Edgar Watkins; Vice-Chairman, Dr. Marion McH. Hull; Chairman Finance Committee, Mr. J. K. Ottley; Chairman Entertainment Committee, Mr. M. L. Thrower; Chairman Registration, Mr. James Morton; Chairman Reception, Mr. George Winship.

Simultaneously with the men's convention, the Laymen's Missionary Movement has invited the Woman's Auxiliary to

Using the Sunday Trains

Dear Standard:

Will you kindly allow me space in your valuable columns to say a few words?

The Student Volunteer Union of North Carolina met for its annual conference at Guilford College, March 14-16. These were days of privilege, full of interest and inspiration for the 125 delegates present as well as the college in which the conference was held. I am sure that each one of the 17 institutions represented will reap a blessing from this gathering.

The object of this letter is to present to your readers a matter that the writer and others consider to be one of the disappointing features of the conference. The writer was, during the past year, treasurer of the union. He is himself very young, and yet he wishes to state some views on the subject, held by himself and other members of the union.

A proper conception of the matter in hand requires a brief bit of history. In the spring of 1918 the Davidson Volunteer Band protested against a proposed plan which was to close the 1918 conference on Sabbath afternoon, in order that delegates might use the Sabbath trains and not miss any of Monday's work. The conference closed, and at the request of a few who remained over for the night a special service was planned. Flora Macdonald, Queens and Davidson delegations stayed, together with a few individual delegates.

If the writer's memory is correct, he wrote to the president-elect and made known his disappointment over the matter, also saying that he hoped it would not happen again. Be that as it may, there was no mention made in regard to this until Friday, March 14. Had the writer known of the plans for the conference earlier he would most certainly have protested. He did not know definitely that such was the plan until he arrived at Guilford.

Friday afternoon the matter was presented to the president of the union, and it was virtually agreed to submit the matter to the popular vote of the Union. This was postponed until a meeting of the leaders of the conference and officers of the union was held, and here it was definitely decided to put the matter to vote, the morning session Saturday being the logical time. This was not done until Saturday afternoon, at which time the writer presented the case, in substance, as follows: "The principles for which the Volunteer Union stands are too high for us to subject ourselves to the criticism of the world. It would be wrong for the union to close Sabbath afternoon, for it would be virtually saying to every delegate, 'Go use the Sabbath trains, and the good will of the union goes with you.' In the light of Bible teaching this is lowering our standards. In addition to this it is trying to appropriate a part of God's one-seventh to our own use and not sacrificing some of our six sevenths as we should."

It was acknowledged that the principle set forward was right and the argument for breaking the principle was that more delegates could attend if they knew that they would not miss any of Monday's classes. It was brought out further that Mr. Sharp, of the Student Volunteer Movement, had consented to the plan in 1918 rather than have the conference lose a few delegates. The whole series of arguments may be stated and answered as follows:

1. The law of Sabbath observance is acknowledged by all concerned to be right.

2. There will be time saved for Monday's classes by traveling Sabbath afternoon. It seems to the writer that one making this argument loses sight of the spirit of the fourth commandment and also of Is. 58:13-14. We ought to be willing to sacrifice a little of our time rather than want to use God's one-seventh for our benefit.

3. As to the number of students in attendance it may be said that it depends upon the presence of the Holy Spirit and not on the number of delegates to make a meeting a success. "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." "For them that honor me, I will honor."

4. It cannot be said that Guilford was unwilling to have the delegates remain over. However delicate a question this may have been, it was openly demonstrated that Guilford was beyond criticism as a host and was ready to have the delegates stay on through the Sabbath.

5. In spite of Mr. Sharp's consent to the program in 1918 it must be remembered that tentative programs suggested by the movement have a plan for a Sabbath evening service and that the leaders of the movement are opposed to closing in the afternoon.

6. It may be added in the last place that experience shows that an evening service adds greatly to the success of the conference, giving the desirable climatic effect.

In spite of these facts the conference in repeating last year's action has not only broken a precedent, but has established a program that violates the spirit and the letter of the fourth commandment.

The foregoing is offered as facts and these facts are not apologized for, for no apology is needed. The formal closing session of the conference was held at Guilford Sabbath afternoon at 1:30. An extra session of the conference was arranged for the evening. Greensboro College for Women, Queens College, Flora Macdonald College and Davidson College remained over by delegations.

The writer would not for a moment seek to injure the reputation of our union, yet he feels that the union has gone astray in this important matter. The writer is young and feels his lack of experience, yet he feels justified in calling for older men in North Carolina to use their influence actively to prevent such from occurring again.

May God's richest blessing rest upon the work represented by all those who are seeking to serve Him in foreign lands. May He also guide and guard us now lest we go astray.

Yours sincerely,

Union Seminary, Richmond, Va. R. E. McClure.

P. S.—This is a matter of interdenominational interest. Other papers desiring to copy have my permission.

participate with them in holding a great woman's convention. This invitation has been accepted on the part of the Woman's Auxiliary, and Mrs. Winnsborough has wired the executive committee that they will most heartily join in.

It is confidently expected that this additional feature will add much to the convention through the church and it will give opportunity for the movement to present the great work of our church not only to the men but to the women as well, and in view of the tremendous part that the latter have taken in recent years, this feature of the convention becomes not only desirable but a most important adjunct to the great Laymen's Conventions that have been held in the past.

In our next issue further details will be given as to speakers, themes, and other important information that our people will desire to know at once.

In the meantime, let all of our churches and organizations begin to plan to be represented at this Laymen's Convention.

The importance of the Church at this time in the history of the world makes it imperative that our people take advantage of this wonderful opportunity to plan how they may have a real part in making the work of the church felt as never before around the world.

The Eternal "If."

"If I just had a chance!" There are chances a-plenty

Right close to your finger-tips, day after day;

For each opportunity seized there are twenty

Overlooked and permitted to wander away.

And while we are waiting for some one offer,

Ways for winning success by some "push-button" plan,

With the splendid rewards she is eager to proffer,

Opportunity sighs: "If I just had a man!"

"And the Sword of the Spirit"---Eph. 6:17

By Rev. J. E. L. Winecoff.

IN the Presbyterian Standard of March 5, 1919, under the heading, "The Romanist Bugaboo," there are three sentences which are specially to be noticed:

1. "We have never been able to understand that dread of Romanism that seems to hang like a pall over men."
2. "Instead of fighting error, let us quietly promulgate the truth;" and
3. "There is no more probability of Rome controlling this country, than there is of the Kaiser again ruling Germany."

As to the first, can any one who knows Romanism in history and in present-day purposes and influence, view the question with perfect complacency? Has not Romanism been a shackle on the feet of progress the world over, one of the greatest hindrances to the true evangelization of the world? And if Protestantism had had the hold on Europe that Romanism has held for centuries, hindering the study of the pure Bible and the preaching of the true Gospel, should we have had the terrible world war through which we have passed? Then, if Romanism, by hindering the development of people in true Christian ideals, caused great wars in the past, may it not do so in the future? Or do we think that Romanism has changed its heart, its spirit, its doctrines, or its purposes of world dominion? If so, we would like for some one to present the proof.

As to the third (skipping the second, for the present), it would be a more nearly accurate comparison, to say that there is no more probability of Rome controlling this country than there was of the Kaiser ruling the world. The Kaiser did not succeed in ruling the world, but what havoc he wrought in the earth, in his effort to do it! The Pope wants to rule the world as bad as the Kaiser ever did; and through his subjects, he is working as persistently, as cunningly and as effectively, to that end, as the Kaiser ever did. Today the Kaiser is overthrown, and is no longer a menace, and if the world had gotten its eyes open and felt a little alarmed a few years earlier, it might have been spared that awful war. But the Pope is still in his strength, and the world is asleep as to his purpose and menace, refusing to be alarmed or disturbed about his workings; and unless the people can be awakened in time, what evils may be wrought in our own land through his emissaries.

The most alarming, and we may say, uncanny, phase of this question, is the stolid indifference of the large majority of so-called Protestant people, and the growing number of apologists of Romanism among people who have their names on the roll of Protestant churches. Many refuse to believe the truth about Romanism, and are impatient and resentful towards any efforts to expose Rome's errors; and under the watchguard of Protestant apologists, Romanism feels more and more secure in her footing, and grows more and more bold.

What if Roman Catholics have not been gaining numbers as fast as some others? Romanism does not have to gain a majority, to rule. It is a common saying, among people who know whereof they speak, "Give the Catholics one-third of the population of any town, and they will run the town." Where they have any strength, they co-operate with effective organizations, to run things, and then proceed to do it; and in many of the largest cities in our country they are already in the saddle. That is because the Protestants are asleep, or intimidated. Wake them up!

But the Standard says, "Instead of fighting error, let us quietly promulgate the truth." That will not wake up the world; and that is not the way Christ and the Apostles did it. They boldly and uncompromisingly attacked error, and exhorted the rest of us to do likewise. No one was ever more severe on teachers of false doctrines than Christ was on the Chief Priests and Scribes, "who taught for doctrines the commandments of men;" and the language of Paul is, "Reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." So, he said, "Put on the whole armour of God . . . and take . . . the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Armour and a sword mean war; and a sword means offensive fighting.

The Standard says, "Given a fair field and sufficient time, the truth always wins." Yes; but truth must take the field, with armour and sword. If error is ever overthrown, truth must become more aggressive. Nothing is more aggressive and pertinacious than error. It can be dislodged only by truth wielded manfully. Truth has had the time, and the field has been open for centuries, but truth has not yet won, because truth often stayed off the field.

It has been pointed out that Scotland became the most Protestant country in the world, because John Knox, unlike some other reformers, believed in and practised aggressive war of truth against Roman Catholic errors; and if the world is to be saved from the continental blights of Romanism, we must be followers of John Knox, and Paul, and Christ, in making war on pernicious errors of religion wherever we find them. "Take the Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God."

A Young People's Conference

By Rev. J. G. Garth, Chairman Synod's Committee.

TWO years ago North Carolina Synod authorized its committee on Young People's Work to hold a conference on work and spiritual life for the young people of our churches. Just about the time arrangements were being made by the committee, the Montreat Y. P. Conference was also in the making, and it was agreed that the Synodical Conference should give way to the Montreat Conference, which was done for two years. Excellent conferences have been held at Montreat, and our young people have in a measure shared in it. But it is the conviction of many who are anxious to see our young people's work carried to a high state of efficiency in our Synod, that this can only be done by conference work among our own young people. The Synod at Fayetteville in 1917 actually ordered that it be the policy to organize the young people so that they might work as a unit and have a Young People's Union of Synod, and a Synodical Conference would be a powerful factor to this end. Several other denominations have such state organizations that prove the efficiency of such a plan. Our own Women's Auxiliary is another illustration.

And so it is the plan to have representatives from all our Young People's Societies and Sunday Schools come together for seven days and be under one roof for that period, studying missions, the Bible, our work in the various phases of it, hearing inspirational addresses, conferring, conversing, singing and worshipping together. Certainly this will not only stimulate Christian life and service, but also unify and give purpose to the work of the young people throughout the Synod.

The Synod's Committee has voted to hold this conference in the coming month of June, either the first or second week, and they have selected Queens College, Charlotte, as the place it will be held. The only cost will be the railroad fare, and a fee of $10.00, which will include conference fee, board and room for six days.

The conference will be under the auspices of Synod's Committee of Young People's work, and the similar committee of the Woman's Synodical Auxiliary.

Presenting Christ to German Prisoners of War.

(The following sermon by Rev. W. S. Golden, was preached on Christmas Day to German prisoners, back of the lines, a German being the interpreter. Mr. Golden is the pastor of the church at Sanford, N. C., but has been engaged in War Work for several months and is still overseas.)

I have been asked to speak this morning especially about the words found in Luke, chapter 2, verse 11. The words are: "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."

What is a Saviour? I can tell you best by means of a story, which is true. During the great Civil War in America a man was drafted for the army. He did not want to go, and so he hired another man to go in his place, as his substitute. The law allowed him to have a substitute. So it came to pass that this man went to war in the other man's place, and was killed in battle. The body was never found, but the man who lived built a monument for the dead man and put on it these words: "He died for me." Jesus died for you and me, and that is what we mean by speaking of Him as our Saviour.

You and I ought to have kept the law of God, but we have not, so Jesus our Saviour has kept it for us. We have sinned, and sin deserves to be punished, but Jesus our Saviour has taken the punishment in our places. As Isaiah says: "All we like sheep have gone astray, we have turned every one to his own way, and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." "Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows." "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and by his stripes we are healed." He suffered in our place, and today and every day He asks God for His sake to pardon you and me. So I have tried to tell you what a Saviour is. I am sure that most of you already know, but we all need to be reminded again and again.

Look closely to what the words say: "Unto you is born this day a Saviour." For whom is the Saviour born? For you. If you have sinned, remember today that a Saviour was born for you. If your friends have been unkind, remember that you have a friend in heaven who will never treat you unjustly. If you are poor or sick or discouraged, this is the day to make your spirit glad by remembering that God was born on earth, to suffer and serve for you and be your Saviour. No man should feel poor who has all the wealth and power of God to look forward to. You have, if you desire it.

Christ was born for you.

But it may be useless for you.

Unless you believe in Him and try to serve Him, for you it is the same as if he never had been born. The only good you get from Him is that by His influence in the life of other people, He has made the world a better place to live in. But before many years are gone, we shall be gone from this world, into another world where He is All and in All, the King of kings, or into a world where He is not honored by any one, where there is no mercy nor love nor goodness, but only sin and the sorrows which sin produces.

If we choose, we may spend our years where there is war and oppression and sorrow and pain. If we choose we may spend our years where there is love and light and peace and joy and God. Jesus was born and lived and died and rose again that you might go from this world of sin at last to the kingdom of peace, with God and those who have followed the Saviour.

If at last you have no Saviour and no heaven, and I should ask you why, you could not answer, "I did not know," for I have told you, and you have heard it many times. You could not say, "I didn't understand," for you are not required to understand. Jesus said that we must come as little children. You cannot expect to understand God and eternity just yet. You cannot say, "I was poor and tired and did not have time to be religious," for He said: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

For many men no Saviour is born, they have no Saviour. The reason they are lost, without God and without hope, is this, and only this: "He came unto His own and His own received Him not." When you return to those you love they will welcome you. But if they closed the door and would not let you in, they would treat you like millions have treated the Saviour. They have refused to have His friendship or to try to do His will, to believe the words that He said.

For you a Saviour is born, but He will not, and I cannot, compel you to accept Him. Today, He is just waiting for you. Today men everywhere are trying to be happy, and some are trying to make others happy. What is the reason? Because a Saviour is born, and His life and death and resurrection have given hope to the world. He is your Saviour if you are His believing child.

A Help for the Delegate to the Presbyterial.

The day of statistical reports from delegates to the Presbyterial is past. These reports are made by the Secretary of the Presbyterial. The delegate is expected to bring a concise, newsy, interesting narrative report of what her society has done during the past year. It is not always easy to prepare this kind of a report, and East Hanover Presbyterial has prepared a blank containing the following questions, the answers to which make an interesting narrative report.

Narrative Report to East Hanover Presbyterial.

(To be read at the Presbyterial by your delegate)

Name of Church.

Name of Societies.

1. In what are you most successful?
2. What suggestions can you make that might aid other workers?
3. What are the most interesting things you have done this year?
4. What is your greatest need?
5. How much has your society contributed during the past year for the support of Superintendent of Home Missions and Sabbath School Extension in East Hanover Presbyterial?
6. What plans are you using for developing stewardship and spirituality?
7. How much will your society contribute during the coming year to the Home for Returned Missionaries?

Little Whiteface and Your April Program.

Africa is the subject for study during April, and no more fascinating subject could be considered.

This year we are especially fortunate in having a wonderfully interesting "human document" to add interest to the study of both grown-ups and children.

Mrs. Motte Martin is known not only in our Church but throughout Missionaries' Circles in America as a writer of rare charm as well as a speaker of convincing power. Nothing that has come from her facile pen is more attractive than her new book, "Little White Face and His Brownie Friends." This is the story of Motte, Jr., and was written as the introduction states, "In real sure enough Brownie land," which some people call Africa, 1,200 miles from the mouth of the Congo River.

Although the booklet is dedicated to the boys and girls, those of larger growth will find it none the less interesting.

Every family in our Church should have a copy of this book. Price, 40 cents per copy. Order from the Presbyterian Standard Publishing Company, Charlotte, N. C. Order at once and have it ready for your April meeting and for the enjoyment of the children of the family for months to come.

Mrs. W. C. Winsborough.

It is reported that the progress on the Peace Treaty is such that Congress may be called to meet by May 15.

Allied troops in the past few days have occupied the greater part of Hungary, with the exception of Budapest and the surrounding districts, for the purpose of suppressing plundering of bolshevik gangs and restoring order, according to a dispatch from Vienna to the Exchange Telegraph Company by way of Copenhagen.

Bishop James H. McCoy, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, died at his home in Birmingham, Ala., after a long illness. Bishop McCoy was regarded as one of the greatest orators and ablest scholars of his denomination.

Governor Manning and Mrs. Manning have gone to Europe. He will attend a meeting of the Peace League in Paris, study the cotton seed oil situation abroad, and visit the grave of his son who was killed in action, and at the same time visit his other sons still in service.

Clerks of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis railroad, who went on strike two weeks ago demanding discharge of the federal auditor of the road returned to work Monday, local Chairman E. M. McGhee announces. It was stated that clerks throughout the entire system also would go back to their post at the same time.

The Government of Hungary has broken off with the Entente and joined the Russian Soviet. This is giving much concern to the Allied Governments.

The London Observer says that Wilson's position, "No League, No Peace Long," is right. It says that the President's stand for that method is one of the strongest things in his career.

General Pershing has settled the controversy as to whom to give credit for breaking the Hinderburg line by awarding that honor to the Thirtieth Division.

Raleigh last week accorded a great welcome to the men of the 113th Artillery. It is estimated that 200,000 people greeted them.

Under automatic control, an airplane capable of carrying a heavy load and without any human being aboard to guide it, has made a trip of more than a hundred miles and landed within a very short distance of the point it was sent to reach.

Defending the military service bill in the House of Commons, Winston Spencer Churchill, Secretary of War, declared the whole of Egypt was in a virtual state of insurrection. The position was so dangerous, he added, that the government had to appeal to men on the point of demobilization to return and save their comrades from being murdered.

Following a sudden drop in temperature a heavy snow-storm prevailed in western Maryland last week. Fruit buds are almost ready to blossom and growers in the fruit belt fear the buds were frozen.

Attorney General Manning rules that section six of the cotton storage warehouse act of the recent Legislature of North Carolina is unconstitutional in that the tax of 25 cents a bale on all cotton ginned is in violation of the constitution, but that the State Board of Agriculture must proceed with administering the other provisions of the act, including election of a state warehouse superintendent, who is to give $100,000 bond.

By a vote of 128 to 27, the Baltimore conference, in session in Staunton, Va., concurred in the action of the General Assembly in granting women the right to hold office in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Governor Bickett has appointed the Mount Mitchell Park Commission, naming Former Governor Locke Craig, Charles A. Webb and Dr. George T. Winston, all of Asheville; E. J. Watson, of Burnsville, and Dr. J. S. Holmes, Chapel Hill, who is State Forester.

Governor Bickett has also appointed as State Highway Commissioners: Lieut. Frank Page, Aberdeen, chairman; John E. Cameron, Kinston; James K. Norfleet, Winston-Salem, and James J. Stikeleather, of Asheville. Their terms of office begin April 1, on which date they are to meet in Raleigh for organization. Chairman Lieutenant Page, who is just from overseas, will be the highway commissioner, devoting his entire time to the service at a salary of $5,000.

According to a dispatch to Montreal, Canada, half of the inhabitants of Northern Labrador died during the winter, as victims of smallpox, measles and influenza. It is estimated that only 400 inhabitants from Grooswater Bay to Nain are left alive, the dispatches say, but the full extent of the calamity will not be known until the opening of navigation in the summer.

General Pershing has reported to the War Department there are still 5,500 officers and men of the expeditionary forces listed as missing. This total compares with the British official figures of 161,800 missing, and the French of 290,000.

President Wilson has issued a statement that the revised Covenant of the League of Nations is now practically completed. The delay in the conference has not been due to time devoted to work on the League of Nations, as revision of the Covenant has been done at night.

THE IMMENSITY OF AFRICA.

IT is difficult to realize how large an open door God has placed before the Church in Africa. There is room enough on the lower end of the continent for the whole of the United States with her 85,000,000 of people; Europe with her many states and hundreds of millions can be placed on one side of Central Africa; China with her 400,000,000 could be accommodated on the other half of Central Africa, and there is plenty of room for all India, with her 300,000,000, and England and Wales, Scotland and Ireland in the lower Valleys of the Nile and along the coasts of the Mediterranean.

PEACE.

If sin be in the heart,
The fairest sky is foul, and sad the summer weather,
The eye no longer sees the lambs at play together,
The dull ear can not hear the birds that sing so sweetly,
And all the joy of God's good earth is gone completely,
If sin be in the heart.

If peace be in the heart,
The wildest winter storm is full of solemn beauty,
The midnight lightning-flash but shows the path of duty,
Each living creature tells some new and joyous story,
The very trees and stones all catch a ray of glory,
If peace be in the heart.

What does it mean to keep the Sabbath holy? It means keep it separate to God. We address ourselves for six days to the labor of the world, but on the seventh day we turn our energies restfully to the things of God and the Spirit. The change is often abrupt.

Though separated to God, the Sabbath is in the interests of men. There are secular powers in men which will wear and break without a rest for one full day in seven, and there are tender and fugitive instincts of the Spirit which will surely die unless given undisturbed opportunity one day in seven to come forth into the sunshine and grow. Without the Sabbath the whole man therefore must perish. And with the perishing of the man the glory of his Creator would seem to be dimmed. It is an impious crime to break the Sabbath.

We must keep our thoughts separated unto God. Resolutely must we drive out on the Sabbath all planning for work or pleasure. Isaiah says we must not think our own thoughts on that day. They are all to be challenged at the threshold of the mind when they assert themselves and attempt to crowd in. "Go back," we sternly call to them. "the mind is a holy place today; the separate things of God are there, and they must not be disturbed." The daily newspaper, the secular magazine, the novel and the history, must lie untouched for the day; and the Book of God and religious papers and books which deal with Him and His work must be read instead. Our thoughts are key to behaviour. If we control the thoughts there will be no trouble about the conduct.

Our speech must be separate to God. Isaiah says we must not speak our own words on the Sabbath. Words of levity, words of business, words about week-day pleasures—all these must be left behind with Saturday and begun again on Monday, and Sunday's talk must be only of God and His ways and work. What is God doing in your heart? How have His Providences affected you? How fares your soul, and your brother's? How goes it with the work of the church? What think you of God's character and His Book? What duties does God match to the hour for you to perform? Will the Lord come soon to the world? And what are the signs of His coming? Only to these and kindred topics must our conversation turn on the Sabbath.

Our deeds on the Sabbath must be separate. The acts permissible and required are those of necessity, mercy and religion. There can arise no need for a catalogue to describe them. Form within the heart a solid purpose to keep the Sabbath holy, and the Spirit of Jesus will make plain every hour the things we must do or refrain from.

Give your reasons for believing Jesus did not abolish the Sabbath. Consult your pastor about this.

Christian Endeavor

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING APRIL 6, 1919:
THE SAVING AND PRESERVING POWER OF THE CHURCH—Matt. 5:13.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

Does not this verse reveal to us the effect of Christians individually upon the world, rather than that of the church? Does not history teach us that frequently the church has frightfully suffered from moral evil, "That rotting inward slowly moulders all?"

Was not this the case when Luther posted his famous theses? When Calvin and Knox lived and wrought for Christ? When the Wesleys preached and sang? Christ did not say: "Ye may be, if you choose, the salt of the world," but "Ye are the salt of the earth," just as directly He says: "Ye are the light of the world." We think that He meant to emphasize the fact that every believer, by virtue of his faith in God, his love to God and his fellows, and his joy and hope, is of necessity salt—is of necessity light.

So that the preserving and saving power of the believer is his because he is a believer. The mere nominal Christian is neither salt nor light. Unfortunately—so at least it seems—the church is composed, as an outward body, of believers and unbelievers. The latter have been, are, and must ever be a source of weakness and decay in the body of the church. But believers are the salt—the conserving, purifying, sweetening influence in both church and society at large. When God called Abram out of his father's house, He said to him: "I will bless thee . . . and be thou a blessing." He was first to become a blessed believer and the friend of God, and then he was to be salt—a blessing to others. His influence upon others was to powerfully preserve them from corruption and sweeten their lives. The Christian cannot—absolutely cannot live to himself. The very genius and

PRIZE CONTESTS ON LIVE TOPICS.

The American Sunday School Union has done its part during the war by furnishing to our soldiers and sailors nearly a million pieces of good reading matter, ranging all the way from a Sunday School lesson leaflet to a hundred-page life of Lincoln. These have been personally distributed by Chaplains and Y. M. C. A. Secretaries in connection with their work. This service is still going on, and will continue as long as it is needed.

To aid in solving our after-war problems, the Union now offers two thousand dollars in prizes for book manuscripts as follows:

One thousand dollars for the best manuscript on Christianity and Modern Industry: How to Apply Christian Principles to the Relations of Employer, Employee, and Consumer. This work is to deal with actual achievements, as well as with principles and methods, and shall include the rural as well as the urban situation.

Another thousand dollars will be divided into two parts, six hundred dollars for the best manuscript and four hundred dollars for the next best, on Everyday Heroism: The Challenge to the Heroic Presented by the Common Tasks of Life. This manuscript must have a special appeal to young people and shall emphasize the present-day calls to community service and world-wide brotherhood.

All manuscripts must reach the American Sunday School Union, 1816 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, not later than December 1, 1919. The results will be announced as soon thereafter as the judges reach their conclusions, and the prize volumes will then be published and sold at prices which will promote their wide circulation. Fuller details may be secured by writing to the society's headquarters in Philadelphia. These prizes are offered under the John C. Green Income Fund, under which a dozen similar prize volumes have been previously issued.

GOD OUR HEAVENLY FATHER.

Golden Text—Matt. 6:9: "Our Father Which Art in Heaven, Hallowed be Thy Name."

Matt. 6:24-34.

April 6, 1919.

Our relations to God are expressed by a variety of terms. He is our Creator, for by Him we have our being. He is our Preserver, for by Him our lives are prolonged. He is our Benefactor, for from Him "cometh down every good and perfect gift." He is our Redeemer, for God in Christ "has redeemed us from the curse of the law" by His sacrificial death. But He is also our Heavenly Father, and the term expresses not only nearness of relationship but the tender affection He cherishes for His offspring. Our lesson relates to Divine Service, Objects of Anxiety, Reasons for not Being Anxious About Temporal Needs, and the Chief Concern of Christians.

I. We Can Not Serve God and Mammon.

Mammon was the heathen god of riches, and is here put for supreme devotion to worldly wealth. A man can not serve Jehovah and at the same time give all his energies to getting, holding, investing and using worldly substance. Our Saviour says that "Riches block the way to heaven" and that "It is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of God." The service of God and mammon are incompatible. It is impossible for a human being to be the bond-slave, or to render supreme allegiance to two persons of opposite character at the same time. Both God and mammon, piety and riches, as to worship, demand the whole man, and homage can not be paid at both shrines. The service of God and mammon too foster unlike qualities, which tend to separation and nourish hatred of one and love for the other. If a man is enslaved by the love of money, he is prone to dislike religion and the Lord's service.

II. Anxiety About Temporal Needs.

The mass of mankind are prone to carroding care about these things. "What shall I eat, what shall I drink, and wherewithal shall I be clothed" occupy the minds and claim the energies of many of our race. "After all these things do the Gentiles seek." Such anxiety is manifested by the heathen and reveals a want of knowledge of God and of trust in Him. It should not dominate the souls of those who believe the Bible and have in Christ a Divine Saviour. It is written "Trust in the Lord and do good, so shall thou dwell in the land and verily thou shalt be fed." Not only is undue anxiety about physical wants being supplied heathenish and an indication of lack of faith in God, but it is useless. It does not accomplish results or minister to our wants any more than anxiety can "add one cubit to our stature."

III. Helps for Avoiding Needless Anxiety.

We should give proper attention to our physical needs and employ wise efforts for meeting them. But when we have done our part we should expect God to do His and not worry ourselves with unnecessary apprehensions. It will help us to shun anxiety to remember that "our Heavenly Father knoweth that we have need of these things." He is not ignorant but knows what we require far better than we do ourselves. It will also relieve us of anxious care to contemplate His boundless resources, and His complete sovereignty over all agencies that can minister to our welfare. It will check our anxiety too to consider that Jehovah habitually ministers to the wants of His humblest creatures. The fowls of the air which neither sow nor reap, nor gather into barns, He feeds. Will He not give essential food to human beings made originally in His own image? He clothes with more than Solomon's regal splendor the lillies of the field, which are today and tomorrow are cast into the oven. Will He not clothe those whom His Son hath redeemed and whom He has adopted into His own family? "He who spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him freely give us all things."

IV. The Christian's Chief Concern.

The believer is commanded, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." The chief care to the Christian should be to have the Kingdom of God or His rule established in his own soul, and in those of his fellow man, and to secure that righteousness or conformity to His will and law, that He has promised to all who obey the Gospel and accept Christ as a personal Saviour. The first act of submission to God is to believe on Jesus as man's only Saviour provided of God and to confess Him before men by identifying ourselves with His disciples and endeavoring to keep His commandments. By doing this we will be "seeking first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness" for ourselves. Then we should strive and pray to bring others into this kingdom and to make them partakers of the righteousness which is by faith in Jesus Christ. He who does this is assured by God that all his temporal wants shall be supplied.

spirit of his faith makes this impossible. If a light does not shine, it is no light; for even under a bushel or a bed it shines. So salt—when it is salt—is a conservative power, a sweetening agent.

To be then the conserving power needed imperatively to check the putrescence of society, men must simply be the disciples of Jesus: branches in living union with the true vine. The vernal influence of his smile must fill our hearts with the sap of life: and then we will bear the fruit of life eternal for others.

The most remarkable instance of the need for this salt we have been witnessing during these last momentous years since 1914. In Germany the salt had lost its savour. Jehovah had been degraded into a local or national god, a god of lust and conquest and insane pride of race. One could with difficulty believe that the things spoken and printed there could originate in the land of Luther and Melancthon. It was only left to be "cast out and trodden under foot of men," as has been literally done. But what then? What is to preserve Germany, and all Europe, and the world from the violence and selfishness of men? Jesus has spoken. "Ye are the salt of the earth." What is necessary to prevent Bolshevism and anarchy is simply the living Christ in the hearts and comprehending intellects of true Christians. Christians must believe in their Master, His principles; and have the grand courage of their convictions. For millenniums Machiavelli's "Prince" has been personified in all the chancelleries of the world. Nations have been confessedly false and cunning and selfish. The strong have oppressed the weak. The need of a suffering world is the salt of Jesus in the lives of His followers. Justice, and love; an interest that overleaps national and racial lines; a sense of brotherhood.

And finally: only thus can Christians preserve their own faith. We must be salt to others, or corruption will undermine that within us which is most priceless. And Jesus warns us. He says: "But if the salt have lost its savour . . . it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men." To be true to our Lord and to ourselves as His children is the first necessity of our lives; by so being we will be that power which saves and preserves. It fills us with a pleasing astonishment that God has so honored us as to make His people the salt of the earth; but it is a fact personally and historically capable of verification; it is a fact that makes us grateful to God; it is also a fact that should deeply impress us with our high and holy mission. It is a privilege to be used, a power to be exerted—or lost both for ourselves and others.

SENSATIONALISM.

The times are strenuous. Alcohol is not the only intoxicant. Men get drunk with business, drunk with pleasure, drunk with politics; and when they come to church, they want more stimulant. They insist on a half hour's entertainment to keep their nerves on edge. We are told that no calm reasoning as to the great problems of the spiritual life will satisfy them. If the preacher cannot give them a sufficient rousement with science, politics, and beautiful rhetoric, then let him bring on vaudeville; the hurdy-gurdy, and the stereopticon; anything to stimulate. And, unfortunately, there is a yellow pulpit which, like the yellow press, yields to this demand. Alas, that it should be so.

In the palace of Cæsarea there was a prisoner who was generally known as the most eloquent preacher of his time. In the same palace there was a Roman governor with itching ears. He said to his mistress Drusilla: "The time hangs heavy on our hands; let us call for our eloquent prisoner to entertain us." Paul came accordingly; but the display of sensationalism that day was more than Felix had reckoned on, for the preacher discoursed on "righteousness, and temperance, and judgment," so that his audience trembled and dismissed him, saying, "Go thy way!"

How shall this demand for sensational preaching be met? Well, to begin with, the preacher must never be dull. The unpardonable sin of the pulpit is dullness. If the people in the pews fall asleep, it is high time to wake up the man in canonicals. It is his business to be heard; and he is under bonds to preach the Gospel so that the people shall hear him.

To this end, however, it is not necessary that he should turn aside from his vocation or violate the solemn terms of his ordination vow. Why, indeed, should he turn aside? Is there anything more sensational than the Gospel which he is commissioned to preach? Think of its themes—God and the Incarnation, sin and Redemption, Heaven and Hell! Oh, that our lips were touched with a live coal from the heavenly altar to declare these verities in burning words!

Why need we turn aside? "Cry aloud; spare not; lift up thy voice like a trumpet!" There is no reason why the faithful presentation of Christ should not always produce results like those on the Day of Pentecost, when Peter so preached that the multitude "were pricked in their hearts" and thousands were added to the church in a single day.—David James Burrell, D.D., in Presbyterian.

GOD'S CONSTANT CARE.

The fact that God cares for me is a constant comfort. Money cannot buy that fact and that experience. My life is a proof of the promises of God. What a variety of experiences one has on the way from the cradle to the grave, and yet all the way the Lord leads and blesses better than we can plan for ourselves. I survey the future with calm confidence, born of the knowledge of His love and care. "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life."

The Ahava river prayer meeting, led by Ezra, was the finest sort of a confession of faith, while the four months' journey, safely ended, proved that faith is the victory. "He is able to deliver." Both Abraham and I can bank on the promise, "I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward. Angels and chariots will compass me day and night." The pillar of cloud by day and fire by night is for all the people of God.

Oh, men of the world, you may stumble on, if you will, in the darkness of unbelief, but Enoch and I will walk with God, who says, "Fear not, I am with thee all the days of thy life. I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep." "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee because he trusteth in Thee."—W. H. Jordan, in Banner.

BUILDING TEMPLES FOR GOD.

Some years ago, in a town in Massachusetts, a harness maker sat in his little shop, working before an open window. He was a man who took pride in his work, and nothing ever left his hands that was not strong as well as handsome. Men for miles around came to buy up his time weeks and months ahead, and he could always be found stitching away or working in some fashion in front of his wide window. This morning an unusual commotion made him lift his head quickly. Down the sharp slope of the hill galloped a young colt, not yet well used to harness, hitched only to a light buggy; and in the buggy, beside the white-faced driver, his own boy, a sturdy four-year-old, sat clutching the side-support and the back of the seat with dimpled fingers that were suddenly stiff at steel. The father leaped through the window and stood watching the swaying buggy, the frightened animal, the determined driver, and the little fellow on the seat who was strictly attending to his own business of holding on. Then he drew a long breath and spoke to the bystanders. "The 'air harness won't break anywheres. I made it faithful!"

An instant or two later, the runaway came to a standstill, and the boy a while after came dustily trudging up the hill, uninjured. The driver followed, leading the colt by the bit.

"Luckily it was one o' your harnesses, Jed," he remarked, laconically, after the fashion of New England men. "I pinned my everlastin' hopes for me and your boy, too, on the faithful work I knew you put into that harness."—Pilgrim Teacher.

HAS WORRYING EVER HELPED YOU?

In all your life did you ever gain anything, ever get the slightest benefit from worrying over any situation? Did it ever help you to bear your burden better or to make it lighter? What have all the years of worrying in the past done for you? You know that worrying has done nothing but sap your vitality, lower your courage, weaken your initiative, handicap your executive ability and distress and confuse your mind, thus unfitting you for clear thinking and decisive acting. It has probably cut off years of your possible life. It has deepened the furrows in your face, whitened your hair, put a drag on your steps, and taken the spontaneity and buoyancy out of your life. It has made you a poorer husband, a poorer father, a poorer friend, a less agreeable and less effective partner and comrade, whether in business or in social life. It has crippled your efforts and your business. Multitudes of days have been pretty nearly ruined by worry and anxiety. The fear of disaster, of misfortune, of possible failure, has been your worst enemy. You have harbored it, welcomed it, encouraged it by dwelling upon it, listening to its doubts and dire predictions. Multitudes of people who have harbored it have been ruined by it. It has filled our poor houses, our insane asylums, our hospitals. Fear is the great human curse.—Orison Sweet Marden, in The New Success Magazine.

HOW DO YOU WORK?

Man must work. That is as certain as the sun. But he may work grudgingly, or he may work gratefully; he may work as a man, or he may work as a machine. He cannot always choose his work, but he can do it in a generous temper, and with an up-looking heart. There is no work so rude that he may not exalt it; there is no work so impassive that he may not breathe a soul into it; there is no work so dull that he may not enliven it.—Henry Giles.

Thank God every morning when you get up that you have something which must be done whether you like it or not. Being forced to work and forced to do your best will breed in you temperance, self-control, diligence, strength of will, content and virtues which the idle will never know.—Sel.

Church News

Collections for April are for Christian Education and Ministerial Relief. Treasurer, Jno. Stites, Corner Fifth and Market Streets, Louisville, Ky.

To Pastors

During the recent canvass many of our strongest churches postponed the canvass for the Church papers on the ground that such an important matter deserved a separate effort. In the event that you were one of these, we venture to ask that you do not fail to attend to this matter, working either through your regular Canvassers or else through your Societies and Bible Classes. The benefits to your work that will follow the placing of one of our Church papers in every home in your congregation will be great enough to justify any effort on your part.

The Church papers will donate one-half of all collected from new subscriptions to any church benevolence you may select.

This offer is limited to April 15th.

Sample copies and subscription blanks will be sent on application.

You will find the Church paper your ablest assistant. It stimulates the people to every form of church activity. We trust that you will have this canvass as soon as possible.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. T. Hall has changed his address from Statesville, N. C., to Cleveland, N. C.

Rev. J. E. Robinson's address is now Yadkinville instead of Glass, N. C., as formerly.

Last week the churches of Charlotte were busy with the Every Member Canvass. Reports are not all in, but as far as we can learn the results are encouraging, the totals being over 50 per cent in advance of last year.

Rev. Dr. A. S. Johnson, of the First Church, Charlotte, preached a most timely sermon on Sunday morning on Religion in the family. He had cards distributed on which pledges to have family prayers each day were to be written.

Rev. Frank Arnold, of Kansas City, Mo., is holding a series of services at Westminster Church, Charlotte, this week. Dr. Bunyan McLeod, pastor, is doing a fine work in that church.

The condition of the people in the far East is appealing to our people. Last week we received from one Sunday School, only 67 members being present, the large sum of $426 for the Armenian and Syrian Relief Fund. This remarkable record is that of the Presbyterian Sunday School of Smithfield, N. C.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg will meet at Marshville, N. C., April 15, 1919, at 8 p. m., instead of at Aquadale, on April 8, at 3 p. m., one week later. The churches will please notice that the Presbyterial Tax has been increased from 11 cents to 12 cents per member this year.

John E. Wool, S. C.

Charlotte—Second Church—Rev. A. C. Ormond, of Gulf Port Miss., now working in the Queens College canvass, preached on Christian Education at the Second Church last Sunday. His sermon delighted a large congregation.

Pineville—The home-coming appointed for April 6, Pineville Presbyterian Church, has been postponed just one month, May 4. Former members, pastors and friends will please take due notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Charlotte—Tenth Avenue—Rev. A. Y. Beatie, who is in Charlotte in the interest of the educational fund campaign, preached at this church last Sabbath morning. In his fine presentation of the cause he represents he made a deep impression on his audience.

Rex—A very interesting and profitable meeting has just closed at Rex Church, Fayetteville Presbytery, in which Rev. L. A. McLaurin, of Jonesboro, did all the preaching. There were 13 additions to the church on profession of faith, and seven by letter and restatement of their faith in Christ. The whole community was greatly helped.

Albemarle Presbytery will convene in Washington, N. C., Tuesday, April 15, at 8:00 p. m. Trains arrive over the A. C. L. at 1:50 p. m. and 7:00 p. m., and over the Norfolk Southern at 11 a. m. and 7:00 p. m.

Pastors and sessions are requested to send the name of their representatives to Mr. B. G. Moss, chairman entertainment committee. H. B. Searight.

Mecklenburg Presbyterial—The annual meeting of the Mecklenburg Presbyterial Auxiliary will be held in Sharon Church, April 21, at 8 p. m., to April 23. Please send names of delegates at once to Mrs. C. H. Little, Charlotte, R. F. D. No. 2.

Delegates will meet at Second Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, where transportation will be provided to Sharon Church.

To the Presidents of the Missionary Societies Belonging to Mecklenburg Presbyterial—All missionary societies which have not yet contributed to the Albemarle Fund are urged to do so as soon as possible. The apportionment for Mecklenburg Presbyterial is $75, and up to this time only about one-third of the societies have sent in their contributions. The smaller societies are asked for one dollar each. The larger societies are asked to give more. Please send funds to Mrs. A. T. Graham, 908 W. Fifth St., Charlotte, N. C.

Secretary S. P. and C. Home Missions.

Charlotte—Westminster—This church was vacant for six months of the year, and for the last six months Dr. Bunyan McLeod has been in charge. Notwithstanding the handicap under which it has labored, the annual report is full of encouragement.

Nine members have been added upon profession, and thirty-two by letter. The total for benevolences was $2,440, and for current expenses, $6,005.

In their recent canvass they have already raised over $8,000 for all purposes with a prospect of reaching a higher figure.

Orange Presbyterial Auxiliary—The annual meeting of Orange Presbyterial Auxiliary will be held in the First Church, Burlington, April 7-8-9. All auxiliaries are earnestly requested to send delegates. A very helpful and inspiring program has been arranged by the president. The speakers will include Captain and Mrs. W. L. Swinehart, Korea; Miss Carrie Lee Campbell, Richmond; Mrs. H. E. Gurney, Monroe; Miss Mabel Hall, Levi, Ky. The opening address will be given by Captain Swinehart, Monday evening at 7:30 o'clock.

Mrs. Lynti B. Williamson, Presbyterial Sec'y.

Mecklenburg Presbytery—A called meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery was held in the Charlotte First Church on Friday, March 28, at 11 a. m.

The place of the Spring meeting was changed from Aquadale, N. C., to Marshville, N. C., and the time changed from April 8, at 3 p. m., to April 15, at 8 p. m., one week later.

Rev. T. G. Tate was received from Kings Mountain Presbytery. He has taken charge of the work at Baden, N. C.

Rev. R. C. Long was dismissed to Greenbrier Presbytery, where he becomes pastor of the Richwood Church, West Virginia. John E. Wool, S. C.

Wilmington Presbyterial Auxiliary will hold its annual meeting at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, N. C., April 16-18. Mr. Wade C. Smith, of Richmond, Va., will give the opening address Wednesday evening. A special Foreign Mission budget, to include definite objects in each of the seven fields in addition to our China hospital work, will be presented Thursday morning.

Plans for group conferences for October and for the organization of a Y. P. or Presbyterial will be presented at this meeting.

Send names of delegates, stating time of arrival, to Mrs. J. C. Stewart, Wilmington.

Mrs. W. M. Baker, President.

Mrs. J. O. Carr, Recording Sec'y.

St. Pauls—Our Every Member Canvass has been very successful, the congregation subscribing for beneficence $2,575, the Sunday School $300, the Ladies' Society $500, and the Christian Endeavor $100; total $3,475. The subscriptions for congregational expenses amounted to $2,700, making altogether $6,175. The Ladies' Society had an interesting week of prayer for Foreign Missions, and contributed about $175. They also canvassed for the religious papers, as they do every year, and secured fifteen new subscribers. After the interruption by the influenza, etc., the Christian Endeavor has reorganized with about fifty members; and another Endeavor Society has been organized at the Elizabeth Mill Chapel, of about twenty members.

E. C. Murray.

The Religious Census of North Carolina—The advance sheets of the results of the last religious census have been received by the department of Sociology of the University. One article has been published in the University News Letter giving the percentage of church membership to the total population in each county. Brethren are put on their guard in using these figures lest they make a false impression, as this does not take into account the large number of infants and small children in the population.

Other tables are being prepared with labor and much care which will give the percentage of those of age mature enough for church membership who are out of the church. These tables will be published at an early day in the University News Letter and the Presbyterian Standard. In the Standard these will be arranged by Presbyteries as well as counties. You are asked to wait for these figures.

A. W. Crawford.

Wilmington—First Church—At the close of the morning service on last Sunday a congregational meeting was held as previously announced. Rev. J. Oscar Mann, pastor of the Church of the Covenant, at the request of the session, acted as moderator of the meeting.

Upon the recommendation of the session and board of deacons, the congregation voted to increase the salary of the pastor to $5,000 per annum and requested Wilmington Presbytery to permit the amendment of the call to the pastor to comply with the above figure.

Dr. Wells was in Charlotte on Wednesday for a conference with the educational committee of the Synod, as the representative of the trustees of Grove Institute.

On Thursday he was in Atlanta for a conference there. Tomorrow he leaves for Pittsburgh, where he goes as chairman of our General Assembly's committee on Federal Union, for a conference with the similar committee from the Presbyterian Church in U. S. A.

Albemarle—Albemarle Presbyterian Church is growing rapidly under the pastorate of Rev. Geo. W. Cheek, who was called here a little more than a year ago at a salary of $1,500. Since his coming the membership has grown more than 25 per cent. At an enthusiastic congregational meeting last Sunday, the church, upon recommendation of the board of deacons and elders, voted to raise the pastor's salary $300, which came as a complete surprise to him.

Last week the deacons and elders held a joint meeting at which every elder signed a pledge to tithe during the coming year, and all deacons present but one also signed the pledge to tithe. As many of these officers are men of large business interests with large incomes this puts the church on a firm foundation from a financial standpoint for the coming church year. However, this is not all. The every member canvass made last Sunday afternoon resulted in a large per cent of the entire church membership signing the pledge cards to tithe during next year. Already a new church is being talked by many.

The Sunday School last Sunday morning was a record breaker, both from a standpoint of members present and cash collection. The collection goes to Barium Springs. The young men's class taught by Rev. Mr. Cheek had double its past record in members present, while the Men's Brotherhood class taught by A. C. Huneycutt, Esq., had a much larger number present than for some time past.

The Pastor's Aid and Missionary Society has been divided into a number of circles and its membership and regular attendance is growing at a rapid rate. In general the church might well be termed as on a big boom. Cor.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Wedgfield—Mr. Geo. A. Hudson, a member of the Junior class in Columbia Seminary, greatly delighted the Wedgfield congregation last Sunday by an excellent sermon in the morning and by a most interesting and instructive talk on China in the afternoon.

Dalzell—The Tirzah Church, situated at Dalzell, has long been supplied by Rev. Mr. Legters, pastor of the Bishopville Church. He has given it up and it is now seeking a pastor in conjunction with the church at Wedgfield. Mr. M. F. Daniels, a student of Columbia Seminary, preached for the church last Sunday. The people were much pleased, and it is hoped that this visit of Mr. Daniels may result in a pastorate.

Columbia—Last Wednesday evening Arsenal Hill Church united with the First Church to hear Chaplain Lacy, who was with his regiment at Camp Jackson. Chaplain Lacy has had a thrilling experience as a soldier in France, but in his remarks at the First Church he chose to speak on "The Inseparable Love of God."

Rarely have we heard a more simple, direct and beautiful presentation of the old Gospel as it appeals to the modern man. We do not wonder that the soldiers from North Carolina are strongly devoted to Chaplain Lacy, and we look forward to a prosperous ministry for him wherever he may feel called to labor. A. W. B.

Latta—Rev. Andrew J. Howell has entered upon the pastorate of the Latta and Dumbarton Churches. He has just left the service of the Army Y. M. C. A., Camp Gordon, Ga., where he had been since last September. He has met with an enthusiastic reception by the people of Latta, who are looking forward to a successful pastorate. On Sunday evening there was a union service in the Presbyterian Church in compliment to the new pastor, the congregations of the Methodist and Baptist Churches giving up their own services on account of it. The pastors of these two churches made appropriate talks, and Mr. Howell delivered a sermon on the promise of a spiritual awakening of the church. It was a meeting full of enthusiasm and friendly interest. Mr.

Howell was formerly pastor of the Winter Park Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, N. C., which had a large and rapid growth under his ministry.

Fort Mill—In a letter received from Rev. J. B. Black, of Elizabeth City, N. C., to the Fort Mill Church, he has announced his decision to accept the unanimous call extended to him at a congregational meeting held March 16, and will probably take charge of the work about May 1. This church has been without a pastor since last July, when Rev. R. K. Timmons resigned to accept the presidency of Stillman Institute. The congregational meeting was presided over by Rev. W. M. McPheeters, D.D., of Columbia Theological Seminary. At the same meeting the board of deacons was authorized to sell the present manse, which is an old building and undesirably located, and build a new one, which will probably be located on the church grounds. The congregation during the past year has met the full assessment made by Presbytery for the benevolent causes in addition to paying about the usual local expenses.

C. S. Link, Cor.

Greelyville—We have been wonderfully blessed in our revival at McDowell Presbyterian Church, Greelyville, conducted by Rev. William Black, Synodical Evangelist for the Synod of North Carolina. Mr. Andrew Burr, Brother Black's singer, conducted the music. The singing and the preaching was just splendid; it thrilled our very being with new vigor and Spiritual life. The Methodist, Baptist and all denominations joined with us in this revival. There were about sixty-five or seventy professions of faith in Christ. Twenty-five or six united with the Presbyterian church on a profession of faith and by letter. Quite a large number are to join the Baptist and Methodist Churches. Every person in our town and surrounding community are charmed with the preaching and singing of Brothers Black and Burr.

As a token of our appreciation of their splendid services, the good people of our town and community gave them a little purse of $325.

This makes, in all, added to McDowell Church, for the past year, about forty-five or fifty members. The Lord is blessing our good people of McDowell Church. The deacons and session of McDowell Church announced, recently, to the congregation that they had decided to increase their pastor's salary to the amount of $200. We are now confronted with the great problem of building a new church as we are outgrowing our old church building.

E. B. Carr, Pastor.

Reidville Group—On the morning of the 16th of March, at Reidville, on the afternoon of the same day at Antioch, and on the morning of the 23rd, at historic old Nazareth, in Spartanburg County, Rev. C. O'N. Martindale (who recently came from evangelistic work in New Orleans Presbytery), in the presence of representative congregations, was duly and fittingly installed into the pastorate, Rev. W. Cuttino Smith, Rev. J. S. Watkins, D.D., and Ruling Elders N. P. Anderson, J. W. Gaston and D. Buist Anderson happily sharing in the work of the commissions appointed by Enoree Presbytery, to the edification of all present. The pastor and family, after their furniture had been moved by some of the good men of the churches to the nice two-story manse, found kitchen and pantry filled with many good things needful, coal and wood in the yard, and the stocking of the poultry yard well provided for.

Attendance on services has been quite good, even during cold and rainy weather. The Every Member Canvass has been put "over the top" successfully under capable leadership. These are big-hearted and open-handed people to live among and labor for, with many men and women "willing workers" in Christ's cause. They met their pastor and family's moving and traveling expenses over a long distance, and are now helping him to secure an auto for his pastoral work, which extends over a wide territory, one lady alone giving $100 as a starter towards its purchase. May God abundantly bless them and help us to give of our best and most in their interest.

C. O'N. M.

The First Church of Clinton is just closing a most successful year. In spite of losses by death and removals there has been a good increase in the membership. About twenty have been added on profession of faith, besides those received by letter.

Last year's drive for benevolences went over $4,500, and reports indicate that all debts of the church will be fully paid before April 1. This year $1,000 more was raised on the afternoon of the drive than last year, and our quota of $5,200 has been easily secured. Besides this a new furnace has been paid for and installed in the church. The pastor's salary has also been increased $600.

All of the Woman's and Young People's work has recently been reorganized into the Woman's Auxiliary. The new organization has received co-operation from all ladies of the church. Gifts will be stimulated and already new workers have been found. The young people's work has been extended and there is a place for every child to be trained for active church work and a work for each to do. Last year the Christian Endeavor was the banner society of the State. On the whole the church is thoroughly organized. One out of every five members is a subscriber to the "Survey" and there is a wide circulation of Church papers throughout the entire congregation.

The pastor, Dr. Frank Dudley Jones, has served this church seven years. During his pastorate the family altar has been instituted in more homes and tithing is becoming more prevalent among the church's members. There is a deeper spiritual life and there are more active workers for the advancement of Christ's Kingdom in this church than ever before.

A Member.

APPALACHIA.

Montreat—The church at Montreat is now making long strides forward under the vigorous leadership of Rev. Anton Ver Hulst, recently of Jonesboro, Ark. As it is now almost two years since this church has had a pastor, the congregation is most enthusiastic in welcoming Mr. Ver Hulst and his family and exceedingly willing to follow his lead in organization of forces as well as in effort towards a higher plane of spiritual life. Already the Sunday School has taken on new life and ambition and the work of the Montreat chapel, really the most important work of this section, is showing renewed power and interest.

The meeting of Asheville Presbytery here in Montreat on April 22 is anticipated with cordial interest by residents of all denominations.

ALABAMA.

Birmingham—South Highlands Church—This church has been vacant since the removal of Dr. Albert Sidney Johnson to Charlotte. Then in addition to that obstacle to church work the influenza raged and closed the church for a season.

The Ladies' Society, however, rose far above such drawbacks and worked with faithfulness worthy of all praise. They had no entertainments and no pastor, but they had faith in God and in themselves, and in their annual report they announced that they have raised during the year $2,953.50.

Paul would have said of them as he said of certain women of Philippi, "Help those women which labored with me in the Gospel."

ARKANSAS.

Blytheville—On Sunday, March 23, the pastor-elect, Rev. J. Walter Cobb, preached on "The Pastor's Assistant." In the afternoon a house-to-house canvass of the membership was made by a committee under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary Society and under the management of Mrs. Chas. M. Gray for subscribers to Church papers. The report of the canvass shows a number of subscriptions, old and new, to the various Church papers. This makes a total of 58 per cent of the families of the church who will receive one or more copies of our own Church papers.

The new minister with his family recently received an old-fashioned "pounding," members coming in, about twenty-five strong, bearing greetings and things for the inner man.

KENTUCKY.

Guerrant, Breathitt County—Our new church building at Guerrant will be dedicated on the first Sunday in April. This new building has already proved itself to be of the greatest value to the spiritual life of the Highland School, located here, and to the community. It has been made possible by the gifts of Christian people all over the South. The building is beautiful but inexpensive and is designed to fill the needs of this large mission school and community for many years to come.

We still have a debt of $300 on the building, which we are very anxious to dedicate free from debt. Will the reader be one of three hundred who will give one dollar towards the debt by April 10? Send it to Rev. W. B. Guerrant, Guerrant, Ky.

Walton—"The Anna Lassing Memorial Fund"—Judge John M. Lassing has sent to the Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, through his mother's pastor, Rev. S. T. Hill, of Walton, Ky., a check for $500. This is to be held perpetually in the Endowment Fund for Ministerial Relief as "The Anna Lassing Memorial."

Throughout the long and useful life of Mrs. Anna E. Lassing she was a member of the Richwood Church. She had often expressed her deep interest in the cause of Ministerial Relief, and had frequently made contributions to this work. Just before her death she expressed a desire that this amount be set aside for that cause. What a fitting and lasting memorial is this. Throughout the coming years the interest from this fund will bring comfort and blessing to the homes of our faithful ministers, who on account of sickness and old age, have been forced to retire both from labor and their income, and of the needy widows and orphans of our deceased ministers.

VIRGINIA.

Rev. A. F. Eddins, of Grottoes, has been called to work in Winchester Presbytery, and has been dismissed.

Rev. Geo. H. Rector, pastor at Mount Zion, on Irish Creek, in Rockbridge County, has accepted a call to Sutton, W. Va., and will move about April 1.

Hampden-Sidney—The many friends of Rev. J. E. Booker, D.D., of Hampden-Sidney, and Superintendent of Home Missions, who was temporarily laid up and in the Johnston Willis Hospital, Richmond, for treatment, has recovered and is again hard at his work.

Shemariah—The Fairfield-Shemariah-Immanuel group of churches, until recently under the pastoral care of Rev. L. McC. Williams, has been divided, and recently congregational meetings were held in Shemariah and Immanuel and hearty calls were made out for Rev. A. W. Wood, who has for many years been the beloved pastor of Oxford Church, in Rockbridge County. It is understood that Mr. Wood has accepted these calls.

Lexington Presbytery has recently received Rev. C. D. Waller, until recently pastor of Easley, S. C., and a member of Piedmont Presbytery; Rev. C. A. Lawrence, of New York, who has recently moved to Staunton on account of his wife's health, and now supplying Staunton Second Church in the absence of the pastor, Rev. Wm. N. Scott, D.D., in Florida for the winter; and Rev. H. S. Turner, of Orange Presbytery, will be received and arrangements made for the installation of the latter at Bethel Church.

Lexington—The Sunday School had set as its goal the purchase of a $50 Liberty Loan Bond for the cause of Home Missions. Much to the delight of the entire school, the collection totaled $75. Another interesting fact is that until Sunday, March 23, when three new names were added to the cradle roll, Mr. John Champe and his little granddaughter, Mary Elizabeth McCormick, were the oldest and youngest members respectively of the Sunday School. Mr. Champe is one of our elders, and has been a faithful attendant at this school for fifty-four years.

Our Every Member Canvass was held Sunday afternoon, March 16, and as far as can be gathered at this writing the congregation has fully met the request for $4,000 for local expenses for the church year beginning April 1, and $9,600 for benevolences. A. H.

Craigsville—Bethany Church—The commission appointed to install Rev. E. Z. Lewis as pastor of this church has appointed March 30, at 11 a. m., and the commission consists of Rev. A. M. Fraser, D.D., to preach, etc., Rev. E. W. McCorkle, D.D., to charge the pastor, and Rev. J. E. Booker, D.D., to charge the people, and Ruling Elders R. D. Haislip, Staunton First; J. M. Ramsey, Rocky Spring; H. Jordan, Bethany.

Staunton Second—Owing to continued ill health, Rev.

Wm. N. Scott, D.D., for eighteen years the successful and much beloved pastor of this church, has found it necessary to resign as pastor, and the matter will be settled by the Presbytery at the Spring meeting.

The congregation has reluctantly and with many expressions of its great and lasting devotion agreed to unite with Dr. Scott in his request to Presbytery.

The congregation recognizes that Dr. Scott has been untiring in his work as pastor, and they have greatly appreciated his efforts.

Rev. Charles A. Lawrence, recently of New York, is now very acceptably supplying this church in the absence of Dr. Scott.

Staunton First—At a congregational meeting held Sunday morning by the members of the First Presbyterian Church for the purpose of ordaining four ruling elders for this church, the following were ordained: Messrs. Francis H. Bear, professor in Kable's Military Academy; Dr. Kenneth Bradford, Dr. George H. Thomas, who recently came to Staunton from Romney, W. Va., where he was an elder, and Hugh P. Sproul, who has been a deacon for many years and is now treasurer of the church.

The members of the congregation at this meeting also extended an invitation to be presented to the General Assembly to hold its 1920 meeting here.

Time and Place of Presbytery Meetings.

The General Assembly will meet in the Napoleon Avenue Church, New Orleans, La., Thursday, May 15, at 11 a. m.

The churches should send up to the Spring meetings of Presbyteries the following:

(1) Sessional Records; (2) Statistical Reports; (3) Sabbath School Reports; (4) Narrative; (5) Presbyterial Assessment (or Commissioners' Fund) generally 10 cents per member; (6) Report on Systematic Beneficence; (7) Reports from all Societies.

Story and Incident

Brought to Judgment.

HELLO, Billy."

Billy Sector turned in the direction of the voice, pushing his shapeless straw hat back from his red, perspiring face.

"Lo, Billy."

"Lo, Bill," and several voices had joined in the greeting. "What you doin', Bill?" This from Benny Wright.

"Playin' the piano," snorted Billy, disgustedly, as he stooped to lift a shovel full of rubbish from the corner of the back yard that he was cleaning. "Should think you could see that for yourself, without asking foolish questions," and he turned again to his work, with a grunt.

Benny crooked his arm over his knees as he answered, "Course I can see what you're doin'—I'm not blind—but what are you doin' it for, anyway?"

"Fer his health," piped up little Ted Alters. "Can't you see he is lookin' thin any pale?" The boys laughed long and loud at this, for Billy was decidedly on the plump order, and, just at this moment, far from pale, as he struggled with a heavy spadeful of dirt.

Then Benny leaned forward persuasively. "Say, Bill, cut that old work and go with us. We're goin' fishin' to stay all day—goin' to fry fish and eat our dinner at the river! Come on, Billy."

Billy had his wheelbarrow loaded by this time, and he looked up excitedly at the boys who had such fun ahead of them, while he must stay at home and work. Wiping his face on his sleeve, he shook his head. "Can't," turning to look at the task only half completed.

"Why not?" persisted Benny, and "why not?" from the others.

"Cause I've got to finish this work, that's why."

"Do you have to do it?" This from a wondering and disgusted Ted. "Well, I have to, if I get the fifty cents that I earn by doing it, and I can use that much money most any old time."

"Who's goin' to pay you?"

"My mother is."

"Ho, ho," and Ted laughed derisively. "How do you know she will?"

"How do I know she will?" belligerently. "Because she said she will, that's why," looking straight into the eyes above him.

"Maybe she's lyin' to you."

The blue eyes flashed fire. "My mother don't lie, I want you to know, and you just look out what you say about her."

"O, she don't, eh? Well, you just watch out, that's all. I guess she's no better than anybody else, and all mothers lie sometimes, don't they, Bud?"

Bud, proud of being appealed to by the leader, promptly agreed. "You bet they do. They'll fool you every time, if—you—don't—watch—out," singing the last words. "I guess I know. My mother promised me a dollar last spring, last spring, if I would clean the cellar and rake the yard and carry the old clo'es to the junk man, and about a hundred other things. Did she pay me? Nix. She kept putting me off, every time I asked her for the money, and then she got mad and told me to quit botherin' her, for she had enough to do with her dollars 'thout givin' them to me. I never got a red cent, no sir-ee, and I almost broke my back, too, at her old work," frowning. "And that wasn't the first time she fooled me, neither, but it is goin' to be the last. When I do any work for her, I'm goin' to have the money right here, first," nodding as he opened up the palm of his smudgy hand.

"That's straight," and Gene Bruce spoke up excitedly. "I know, for Ben was goin' to treat all us fellers with the dollar. I guess her ears burned, all right, for what we said about her was a-plenty. And my mother played just as low-down trick on me," he went on, his eyes flashing. "She promised me if I would come straight home from school every night, never stopping to play with the kids on the street, for two weeks, she would give me tickets to four picture shows, and there was dandy shows at the movies for a whole week." His lips set grimly.

"Do you think I saw that show? Not on your life, I didn't. Course I 'spected to go, but when the first night came and I asked her for the money, she said she couldn't spare it. I told her she promised," with a snap of the dark eyes, "but she said she couldn't be expected to keep every fool promise she made to kids, for if she did, she would be bankrupt. So now, I don't hurry home any more, for there ain't nothin' in it.

Benny nodded sagely. "See, son? Take it from me, mothers are the champeen liars, if there is anything in it. You'll see," wisely.

Billy's pudgy fists clinched. "Well, my mother is different. She never told me a lie in her whole life, so there."

"Ho, ho," and Benny's mocking laugh caught the crowd. "Don't you never believe that, son. You weren't sharp enough to catch her, that's all. You'll get yours all right, for it's comin' to you."

"My mother's different," persisted Billy, positively. "I've tried her too often, and she's been square every time. Just you wait and see, then you'll be ashamed of yourself, Mister Ben."

"Yah, we'll wait, sure thing," and Benny swung himself down from the gate, winking at the "fellers" who promptly and unanimously echoed, "Yah, we'll wait. Well, so long, Billy Boy. We'll leave you to find out you're workin' for nothin' and that you'll get your pay from mamma," jeeringly.

Billy went on with his work, but somehow, he had lost all the enthusiasm of an hour ago. He was just a little boy, and he could think of no one thing that would have been "more fun" than a fishing party and a day on the river. He had half a notion to drop everything and run after the merry crowd, but the thought of the money to be his in a short time helped him to withstand temptation. He would soon have a shining fifty "center," with no strings tied to it. It was his, to do as he pleased with, and he was spending it freely as he raked and scooped and dug until the task was finished to his satisfaction.

As he passed the open window with his last load, he look-

Marriages and Deaths

Deaths.

Woodcock—Died, at Black Mountain, N. C., Julia Emma, infant daughter of Dr. John and Mrs. Ruth L. Woodcock, Monday, March 10, 1919, aged two years.

While young, innocent and lovely, like a shadow thrown softly and lightly from a passing cloud, death fell upon her, and her pure and bright spirit was borne on angels' wings to the courts of heaven, there to be crowned with a crown of everlasting peace.

Smith—Sunday, December 15, 1918, at 10 a. m., the spirit of Helen Minerva, daughter of J. G. and L. A. H. Smith, went to be with Jesus, whom she loved.

This precious child was fifteen years old when God called her home. At the age of thirteen she had given her heart to Jesus and joined Rocky River Presbyterian Church.

Hers was an unusually sweet, gentle, lovable nature, and during the four tedious months of illness from typhoid fever and complications, she was always appreciative of every kindness from friends and considerate of her loved ones.

She has gone from the earthly home, but her quiet, beautiful influence still lingers to bless and comfort the home, which is so desolate without her dear presence.

Left to mourn her loss are her parents, three sisters and two brothers, the elder of which is still in France and knows not of her death.

IN MEMORIAM.

Miss Ada McCormick.

In the death of Miss Ada McCormick, which occurred on the 11th of October, 1918, of influenza-pneumonia, Iona Church lost an active and loyal member, the Women's Auxiliary its beloved and efficient president, the Junior Auxiliary its zealous and inspiring leader, the Sunday School a regular attendant and faithful teacher.

Whereas, in the mysterious providence of our loving Heavenly Father, our friend and co-worker has been removed from a life of faithful service among us, we, the members of the Women's Auxiliary, do realize our great loss and bow in humble submission to His will.

Resolved, That though we sadly miss her and shall feel our loss keenly in every department of church work, yet we know that it is her eternal gain.

That we thank God for her pure and consecrated life, which will ever be an inspiration to us, and record our appreciation of her services in the church and community.

That these resolutions be spread on our minutes, a copy be sent to her family and to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

IN MEMORIAM.

Dr. Daniel Hughes.

Dr. Daniel Hughes, the subject of this sketch, was born May 20, 1836, in Richmond, now Scotland County. Dr. Hughes was of pure Scotch descent. He was a son of John Hughes, who was born 1790 and was in the war of 1812. His mother was Miss Effie Gilchrist.

—His boyhood days were spent on his father's farm, who was a large planter. He had good school advantages, attending the best schools of his day.

Choosing dentistry as his profession, he entered Baltimore Dental College in 1859 and continued there until the beginning of the Civil War. He then returned home and volunteered, serving throughout the whole war in the medical department with Dr. Singletary.

When the star of the Confederacy had sunk into eternal night and the flag he loved was furled forever, he found his way back through the confusion and desolation of his beloved land to the old home. The farm was destitute of labor, their many slaves had been freed. He helped his father readjust the farm and then entered upon his chosen profession, the practice of dentistry, at Floral College, and later in Shoe Heel (now Maxton) until 1869, when he was married to Mrs. Caroline McKinnon, daughter of S. J. and Mary Bethune Cobb, of Lumber Bridge, N. C., moving the same year to Shannon, N. C., where for thirty years he engaged in farming and the practice of dentistry.

Compelled by age and declining health to give up active work, he retired and moved to Parkton, N. C., in the year of 1901, where he spent the remainder of his life, dying January 10, 1919.

Dr. Hughes is survived by three sons and one daughter: G. C. Hughes, of Hommersville, Ga.; J. G. and L. E. Hughes, and Mrs. Collier Cobb, of Parkton, N. C., one daughter dying in infancy. His wife preceded him to the homeland, having died November 9, 1909. He is also survived by sixteen grandchildren.

Dr. Hughes had good religious as well as educational advantages. He was born and reared in a home of culture and piety and in two miles of Floral College and Centre Church, which at that time was supplied by the best pastors of the Synod of North Carolina. He grew up in a genuinely Christian home and before he had reached manhood he publicly confessed Christ as his Saviour and was admitted to communion of Centre

Presbyterian Church, giving much of his time and means to church and Sabbath School work.

When he moved to Shannon, N. C., he found no Presbyterian church or Sabbath School nearer than five or six miles of his new home. Seeing the great need of church work in the community, he, together with his good wife, gathered the children and young people together in a small school house, and he as superintendent organized a Sabbath School, having preaching in the afternoon and evening, when they could get a preacher to come that way. The Sabbath School prospered and by the fruits of their efforts Shannon Presbyterian Church was organized, he being one of the first elders, and soon erected a good church building. When he moved to Parkton he was made an elder in the church and superintendent of the Sabbath School, serving as superintendent as long as physically able to attend to duties. No man stood in the esteem and love of the people more than Dr. Hughes, and that esteem and love were worthily bestowed, and was never abused nor betrayed. He was always on the right side of every moral question, and always stood foursquare to every wind that blew. He was modest and retiring in disposition, gentle in manner but firm in judgment, loyal to duty, thoughtful of every one near him, and loved by everybody.

Dr. Hughes was blessed in his children; he lived to see them all grow up and prosper and become men of large affairs. They walked in the footsteps of their ancestry, first seeking the kingdom of God and His righteousness, early in life giving their hearts and lives to Christ, and in Church as well as State filling places of honor and trust, two now being ruling elders in the Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Hughes was a man that read God's Word, not only reading it and praying daily in his own home at his family altar, but in the homes of others, especially in the homes of the sick and poor, those deprived from attending the service of the sanctuary. He loved his church and was faithful upon the public worship in God's house. He was an inspiration to his pastor. His fine Christian character is esteemed and will stand out as an example to his church and community for days to come.

Dr. Hughes' great power in Sabbath School work was partly due to his love for children, and they all loved him. It might have been said of him, as Motly said of William the Silent, "As long as he lived he was the guiding star of the Church, and when he died, the children cried in the streets."

Dr. Hughes' funeral was held in Parkton Presbyterian Church, conducted by Rev. H. G. Hill, of Maxton; Rev. J. K. Hall, his pastor, and the pastors of the other churches in town. He was

A TRIP TO THE HOSPITAL.

Dear Standard:

I am seven years old. This is my first year at school, so I want to write you my first letter. My teacher is Miss Flieta Johnson. My daddy and mother took me to the hospital last week to have my tonsils out and I am staying at my grandmother's until I am well enough to go to school. I go to church and Sunday School every Sunday. My pastor is Rev. E. Frank Lee. My Sunday School teachers are Miss Vera Wharton and Mrs. Joe Phipps. I love to read the letters in your paper. My sister wrote you last year. My mother and daddy don't know I am writing you.

Your little friend,

LIVES IN THE COUNTRY.

Dear Standard:

This is my first letter to you. I am a little boy five years old. I have one brother ten years old; he reads the letters in your good paper for me; we both enjoy them very much. I have two dolls named Katie and Billie. We live in the country and I love to gather the eggs and feed the little biddies. Rev. William Black began a meeting at our church the first Sunday in March.

Your little friend,

HAPPY BIRTHDAY TO YOU!

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy almost four years old. My birthday is the 6th of April. I hope that I can have a little party and a cake with candles on it. I have a little sister named Helen, and she is two years old. We have lots of fun playing together. Santa Claus brought me a little red automobile that I can ride in borne to the cemetery, accompanied by one of the largest congregations that ever assembled in the Presbyterian Church, and they tenderly laid him to rest beside his wife, to await the resurrection of the dead.

and brought little sister a carriage and four dolls. I help daddy bring in wood and gather the eggs for my mamma. I go to Sunday School every Sunday, and Miss Fannie Salmon is my teacher. I am studying the Child's catechism. Please print my letter as I want to surprise my daddy, who has gone to Conference at Blue Ridge.

Your little friend,

A CHAPLAIN IN FRANCE.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl eight years old. I go to school and am in the third grade. Miss Ruth Gunter is my teacher. Mrs. Gertrude Clark is my music teacher. I have one brother. He is eleven years old. His name is E. Myron, Jr. We attend Presbyterian Sunday School and church. Miss Addie St. Clair is my teacher and I like her. Our pastor, Mr. W. S. Golden, is a chaplain in the army in France. We miss him so much, but hope he will soon be back with us again. We take your nice paper and I always like to read the little letters. This is my first one, so I hope it will be published, for I want to surprise my daddy.

A BROTHER IN NAVY.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old, and am in the fourth grade at school. My teacher is Miss Mattie Paul. I like her fine. I go to Sunday School nearly every Sunday. My teacher is Mrs. D. B. Johnson. I like her very much. Mama takes the Standard and I like to read the girls' and boys' letters. But this is my first letter. I have three sisters and four brothers; one brother is in the navy. I hope he will soon be home. We haven't a preacher now as our pastor moved to South Carolina. I hope we will have one soon.

Your new friend,
Dorothy Black.

THE LONESOME DOG.

A good, kind dog found himself all alone in the world. He was hungry and thirsty and lonesome, and thought he would see if he could improve his fortunes.

As he trotted along through the streets of a town he smelled a fine smell. The screen door was shut, but he waited patiently until some one went in and he followed close behind. But the butcher saw him, and the butcher's boy and two customers, and they all shouted at him and jumped at him and hustled him out of the shop.

When he could run no more, panting with the heat, and with his tongue hanging out of his mouth, he looked for a place to rest. He had reached a house with green grass, and with vines on the porch, and with a soft, damp-looking flower bed, full of bright flowers, in front of the vines. So he went over to the flower bed, turned around and around on the cool soil until he had crowded out for himself a comfortable resting place among the plants.

He was just dozing off, when he heard a scream above him. "Peter, quick! quick! an awful dog! right in the flower bed! Drive him away!"

He ran as fast as he could without stopping, but he was so intolerably thirsty he kept looking for a place to drink. There seemed to be no water in all that town. As he lagged slowly along one street he saw a porch door open. He knew there was water on that porch. The open door invited him. He was just about to bury his nose in the pail and drink his fill, when the kitchen door slammed back, and a broom descended on his head, and he was ordered off in no uncertain tone.

"There is no place for me," he thought, wearily, "nor any food, nor any drink. I do not understand it."

He ran by more houses with vines, and flower beds, and green lawns, and no fences, but he did not venture in. A pretty child sat on some steps and called, "Here, doggie; here, doggie!"

How he would like to be called that way! He turned his head imploringly. "Here, doggie, come to Roxie."

The dog hesitated; could the child mean him? Was it a boy?

"Come, doggie," urged Roxie; "come—I'll give you a nice, cool drink," and Roxie led the way to the shady side of the house. There was a large crock. "This is for the birds," explained Roxie, "and now I'll fill it up for you," and Roxie turned in a stream from the hose.

The thirsty dog drank and drank—never did water taste so good. He raised his grateful eyes and wagged his grateful tail.

"Oh, you good dog," smiled Roxie; "I'll bring you something to eat in a minute. Now stay right there."

The dog scarcely knew what to do, but while he was still undecided, Roxie came back with a pan of scraps.

"These are my very own bones," said Roxie. "I've been praying for a dog for two days, and I've saved all my bones and scraps—now eat 'em!"

The dog ate in a half famished way—such good scraps!

"What are you doing, Roxie?" called a voice from an upper room.

"Feedin' my dog. God's sent him."

Roxie's mother hurried down, afraid she would find a mangy, sore-eyed dog,

Educational

CHICORA COLLEGE FOR WOMEN.

A Splendid Challenge—Chicora College for Women has recently received a gift of $200 from a generous and esteemed friend for the purpose of establishing a Student Loan Fund. This gift is appreciated not only because it is from a friend of the College and Christian Education, but also because of the great worthiness of the object for which it is made. Probably there is no cause of benevolence, save that of maintaining the Church, more worthy than that of enabling strong, ambitious, meritorious young women to secure a Christian education.

It may be that some one who reads this announcement would like to add his or her hundred or hundreds, thousand or thousands to this fund and thus meet the challenge of the first donation. If so, kindly write the president of the college.

DAVIDSON.

Recent elections in the student body have resulted as follows: D. W. Roberts, editor-in-chief of The Davidsonian for the coming year, with C. J. Matthews as business manager. L. L. McAlister will have charge of the circulation department.

D. M. Chalmers, of Charlotte, has been chosen as president of the Y. M. C. A. for next session; D. W. Roberts, vice-president; A. L. Currie, secretary, and J. C. McCaskill, treasurer. The officers-elect enter upon their duties about April 1.

Professor Garnant, who has filled most acceptably the chair of French during the present session, in the absence of Dr. Thos. W. Lingle, will not be at Davidson next year, having accepted an appointment to the chair of Modern Languages in Emory and Henry College, Virginia.

Colonel Mueller, after getting the drill work of the R. O. T. C. in good form, has announced that the classes in Military Tactics will begin the first week in April

PEACE INSTITUTE.

Miss Graham, president of Peace Institute, has returned to Raleigh, after an absence of several weeks. She spent a short time at her home in Charlotte, going from there to Chicago to attend the National Superintendents meeting. After visiting a number of educational institutions in and near Chicago, she went to New York City for a week, and to Connecticut.

Since her return Miss Graham has made another short visit to Charlotte for the purpose of attending the meeting of the program committee of the Conference for Young People, to be held early in June at Queens College, Charlotte.

Miss Fleming, Secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement, has been a guest here for a few days. She made two addresses to the students.

The students and faculty of Peace have contributed $200 to the Armenian Relief Fund.

The students in piano and voice gave an interesting recital Saturday afternoon, March 15.

The members of the expression department recently gave four one-act plays under the direction of Miss Alice Le Sueur Harsh. They were, The Magic Voice America's Call for Better Speech, by Florence Crocker Comfort. A Scene from Uncle Tom's Cabin, by Harriet Beecher Stowe. (Colonel Olds read a letter written by Mrs. Stowe telling why she wrote the play. Costumes of the period were lent from the Hall of History.) The Twelve Pound Look, by J. M. Barrie. The Rising of the Moon, by Lady Gregory.

Wednesday, February 26, Mrs. Horace Dowell gave a recital at Peace which delighted the large audience present.

The Cabinet Training Council of the Y. W. C. A. meets at Peace Institute April 18-20. There will be fifteen members of the Y. W. C. A. cabinet from Flora Macdonald College, five or six secretaries from headquarters, and a few other guests interested in this important work.

ed up to catch his mother's smile, but he never dreamed that she had been a listener to the conversation of a few moments ago.

And the smile did not vanish when he passed from her sight, for, in spite of the shock that had been given her at hearing the words "lie" and "liar" used so freely and easily by mere children, she yet had a thrill of joy and righteous pride as she repeated softly to herself, "My mother is different—my mother never lied to me in her whole life."

Someway she had a feeling that the strong words used were none too strong, when she considered the real grievances of these little ones. And she marveled that mothers could be guilty of wrecking their children's faith in them, laughing at the crime as if it were a trifling matter.

"My mother never lied to me in her whole life." No, not even when, as a tiny questioner, he came to her with wide, innocent eyes to ask questions as to the mysteries of life and creation. As far as he could understand she took him, with simple and pure mother language, into the mysterious realm, showing, by flower and folded bud, by tiny eggs and little brown seeds how nature works. And the caution given him that this was their own secret—mother's and his—was enough. It was not to be talked over with other boys, because that would not be honorable.

Then, when a few years had passed and he questioned still further, again, in pure mother words—instead of the language of the street—she lead him still farther into the land of knowledge, and again it was impressed upon him that this was "their secret." And the watchful mother, with eyes and ears made keen through love, had satisfied herself that the promise had been kept.

"My mother is different—she never lied to me in her whole life." Here is the text and here is the sermon. And I wonder if it would not be a more desirable epitaph than all the flowery expressions that might be carved on our headstones?—Florence Jones Hadley, in Presbyterian.

but instead she found a gentle creature, with a silky coat and beautiful eyes.

"Very well, Roxie," was the relieved answer. "If we find the dog belongs to any one else we can give it back."

"He doesn't," was the positive reply.

"Well—we'll play that way. We'll put the rest of the afternoon on the dog. We will scrub him and comb him and brush him and fix him a sleeping place and we will telephone right down to papa to bring up a collar. What name do you want?"

"Theodore," promptly.

"Why, Roxie! Theodore isn't a dog's name!"

"It's this dog's name," in a final tone. "You told me yourself Theodore meant 'Gift of God'—and that's what my dog it."

And the lonesome dog wagged his tail happily. His fortunes certainly were improved.—Jessie Wright Whitcomb, in Ex.

Miscellaneous

"Y" DID SOMETHING FOR THESE TWO.

Among memories of the army in France, there stand out in my mind the portraits of two lads whom I dare to believe are typical of a great many more in the American forces abroad. One was a San Francisco boy, detailed to the military police—which is a badge of extra brain power and extra will power, for the M. P. corps in the army is made up of fellows personally chosen on the basis of intelligence, keenness, common sense and courage. This boy was very candid about his past life, and in a frankly confidential talk remarked:

"I have made my poor old mother plenty of trouble in my time. From 17 to 24 I drank every drop of booze I could hold. And I went the pace in other things too. I was drunk most of the time and spent a lot of time in places where a man never wants to go until he gets some booze in him. And I wasn't very different from that when I came to France. But they sent me first down to Gievres, and while I was working down there I got to going to the Y. M. C. A. There was a fine bunch of fellows there, and they were so mighty friendly that I couldn't help listening to what they said. They told me about God and Jesus, and they made everything look different to me. I got something down there that makes me different, too. I have been going straight since that, and I am going home straight to my mother. She was always asking me to go to church at home. She is a mighty good Methodist herself and goes to church all the time. But I would never go with her. Sometimes after she went off to church, I would go and hang around on the outside and listen to the music, for I always did like music. But I never got inside the door. It is going to be different when I get home, though, for I am going to church with mother every time she goes. And she will be mighty glad for that thing that I got down in Gievres."

The other soldier whom I associate in my mind with this San Francisco boy came from Chicago. He was a sergeant in a camp where they were testing and repairing aviation motors, a highly expert machinist. I have never known his name, although I was formally introduced at a Y. M. C. A. service where it was a mouth-filling word that ended in "ski." He looked very little foreign, however—just a good, sound typical American boy, clear-eyed and straight-talking. He said to me:

"You know, my father was a Pole, raised in a Catholic family. But after he came to Chicago he married my mother, an American woman who was a member of the Methodist Church. They didn't agree about religion, of-course, and the result was that both of them quit church. We haven't had the slightest hint of anything that was religious in our home since I can remember. But I tell you, it is going to be different when I get home again. I am going to put it up to dad and mother whether they are not willing to make a change, and if they are not, I'm going to make the change myself. We've got to have some kind of religion in our house. I see now that a man can't live without it. And it's to the Y. M. C. A. that I owe this, too. I got my start last winter down at Camp Wheeler, and it's the best thing that has ever happened to me, to get into the army and see things like I do now."—Nolan R. Best.

Of the late Bishop Ingle, of Hankow, China, a friend wrote: "It never occurred to him that he was more gifted, more noble, of finer quality than men usually are; and it never occurred to him that there was any modesty in his not thinking so. Herein consisted his true humility and his real greatness."

THE PROFANE PULPIT.

Profanity has pushed its way into the pulpit as well as into the public press. We suppose no one will dispute the pater-nity of modern pulpit profanity. The father of it is, of course, Joseph Parker. What a sensation he made a good many decades ago when he said from his City Temple pulpit, "God damn the sultan!" Like many others, he did not live to see his child grow up.

Since that time, at rare intervals, some cheap imitator of Joseph Parker would call upon God to damn this or that or the other. Recently, however, due of course to the world war, the habit has become very widespread. There is probably not a city in the United States of over 10,000 population, from at least one pulpit of which the Kaiser has not been roundly damned, calling upon God to aid, or sent to the place which, according to Unitarians, does not exist. Recently, in Chicago, Billy Sunday passed out an entirely new line of adjectives, or rather ran out of them, in attempting to classify properly the Berlin crowd. Joseph Parker's little bit of embryonic profanity looked like the Sermon on the Mount beside Billy's machine-gun spray of carefully assorted epithets. It looks as if calling upon God to damn the Kaiser was getting to be quite the thing.

Quite apart from religious considerations, we seriously object to this growing habit of profanity in the pulpit. So far as the Kaiser is concerned, it is wholly a work of supererogation. It is too bad to waste perfectly good energy in asking God to do something which He cannot very well help doing—taking for granted that He has the same view of the situation that we ourselves have.—The Standard.

THE POPULAR DOUGHNUT.

Doughnuts for doughboys have had a spectacular rise to favor in France. At first, a few army cooks offered doughnuts as an addition to the mess. The demand for this toothsome dainty was instantaneous. It grew beyond all bounds and had it not been for the Red Cross canteen workers, it is likely that the gastronomical desires of the Yanks would have remained unsatisfied. The Red Cross asked for the loan of an army cook who spent three days with an American Red Cross chef of French nationality, teaching him the sublime art of doughnut making.

The appetizing brown doughnuts were baked for doughboys at the rate of 112,000 a day. Only the holes are small. Good flour, good butter, good milk, and good sugar are used in their composition. Praise for the doughnut rings from Verdun to the Swiss border. Soldiers in French uniforms in increasing number join the khaki-clad youths of America in singing the praise of the Yankee delicacy.—Ex.

MODESTY BECOMES THE BRAVE.

A large dog was walking along a country road. He could scarcely be called a mongrel, in the derisive sense, yet it was certain that many breeds met in him.

At a turn of the road he saw three smaller dogs ahead of him. One, a very small dog, was considerably in the lead. The other two were of middle size. All three were pacing sedately along, attending to their own business.

Suddenly a large bulldog parted the bushes at the side of the road and sprang upon the smallest dog. Seeing this the two dogs in the rear hastened to the rescue; but so sudden and fierce was the onslaught that before they could reach the scene of battle the bulldog had shaken the little dog into insensibility, and flung him, battered and bleeding, to the side of the road.

The middle-sized dogs grappled with the bulldog, and fur began to fly, and blood to flow. Sometimes the two dogs got the better of it, but often they were the worst sufferers.

The large neutral dog settled back on his haunches and watched the conflict. His attitude was one of watchful waiting. But there seemed to be some disagreement among his members. First one paw and then another would start forward, but would be curtly ordered back by the head. One specially large strong claw on the right forefoot seemed determined to join the fray, but was sternly repressed by the head.

After a long struggle the middle-sized dogs showed signs of weakness, but they still fought bravely on, though covered with mud made from blood-soaked dust. The little dog, too, had got back into the fight, and was giving a good account of himself.

Once, in a lull of the battle, the bulldog turned and cast a baleful glance back at the neutral dog. His look plainly said: "After I've finished these I'll not stand any nonsense from you!"

Then the neutral dog sprang forward and joined the battle against the bulldog. Once in the battle he fought well. Seeing this the nearly exhausted friends took fresh courage and vigor, and the four soon chased the aggressor, torn and bleeding, back into the brush.

But the erstwhile neutral dog swelled up with great pride and trotted down the road barking out: "I did it! I won the war!"—Emma Upton Vaughn, in Life.

A CENTURY OF SERVICE.

In 1820 a good old-fashioned doctor in North Carolina prepared an ointment for skin eruptions. It met the needs of his patients, and has likewise met the needs of millions of other doctors' patients. Grey's Ointment, the compound he prepared, is now rounding its hundredth year of honest, good old-fashioned service and value. It is very effective for sores, boils, cuts, bruises, burns, stings, eczema and the many similar forms of skin eruption. It soothes the pain, cleanses the wound, kills the germs and begins healing. If your druggist can not supply you, send his name to W. F. Gray & Co., 843 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., and a liberal sample will be sent you.

Railroad Wage Delay is Explained

Federal Manager today wired Superintendents of the Norfolk-Southern Railroad as follows:

"The director-general advised this morning that he has received and is today promulgating twenty-five interpretations made by the board of wages and working conditions upon various questions which have been raised for interpretation as to application of wage scales and working conditions. It is my understanding that some of these interpretations are those in which some of the employes in this part of the country are so interested and have shown some impatience because of the delay in receiving same.

"Whatever delay there has been occasioned by the large amount of work of this character which has been thrown upon the Washington boards. Will be glad to have you give this information to the press."

LET THERE BE LIGHT!

Word comes in a letter from France that at the coming of peace, the hilarious joy of the French people, living in the small, scattered villages that had long been under the menace of the guns, found expression in Light.

"Light, light—more light, Babette! See, here are candles. Light them; light them, every one! Put them in the window—the 'boche' will not come tonight! Put them in the old candlesticks on the mantelpiece! More, more! Ah, thank God, we can have light at last!"

It is the night of November 11, 1918. The small, squatty house looks quite like a Christmas tree, so brightly do its windows glow. Squares of yellow light fall across the snow. Within, Babette and the old woman can be seen flying about preparing a feast for the "poilus" who will drop in, and they laugh and sing and cry and talk excitedly of Pierre, who is coming back to them. Pierre of the laughing eyes and flashing smile. There is the delicious smell of something frying! A group of laughing soldiers comes down the street. Babette flings wide the door, crying: "Ah, come in, my brave ones. . . . Come, see, we have good food and the lights are shining! This is the great day of France!" And they troop after her, laughing, one by one, into the house.

And there is more singing and more laughter. The candles burn and sputter and Babette snuffs them with the old snuffer that hangs above the hearth. The winter moon climbs slowly in a sky whose trackless blue will no more be torn by marauding planes. The night goes. Peace has dawned upon the world! —Red Cross Bulletin.

India is in the grip of one of the worst famines in its history. War scarcity, plus crop failure, plus a deadlier scourge of influenza than any other land has suffered, has produced a triple extract of misery, and at an hour when the world has little to give. Over 1,800 members of the native church in two districts have already perished. It is estimated that the influenza victims will number 40,000 Methodist Church members in this Conference year. The orphans of these starved villages sit at the doors of hundreds of mission schools awaiting adoption or starvation. They ought to be helped for humanity's sake, and they ought to be helped for Christ's sake. From the very lowest point of view—self-interest—it pays to give relief. There are eighty native preachers in a single Indian Conference who came to Methodist schools in their boyhood as famine refugees. They came for bread and now they are breaking the bread of life to the multitudes.—N. Y. Advocate.

IF BERLIN HAD WON.

If Germany had won the war the terms she would have imposed on the Allies would have gone the limit in extortion. There was no official statement of what they would be except the assurances given out by the German financial authorities that the full cost of the war would be imposed on the conquered nations, which would have to "drag the leaden weight" through generations to come. But there were plenty of intimations as to terms. We have it on the authority of the Allied representatives to Rumania that when the Rumanian government protested against the severity of the terms imposed by Germany the German delegates replied that the terms were moderate in comparison with those that would be imposed on the Western powers. Influential men and newspapers in Germany insisted that Belgium would be retained and a portion of northern France annexed to include the French iron and coal fields, that Germany would take colonies and coaling stations from England, as well as the British fleet, and that a heavy indemnity would be imposed on all the conquered belligerents. The official offer to Mexico and Japan of part of the United States is an indication of the lengths Germany was prepared to go. The exactions already made on Russia and Rumania are proof that no moral feeling would have restrained the German lust for conquest. The Allies cannot afford to put themselves on the same savage level. There will be no seizure of German territory, no attempt to subject a German population to alien rule as Germany did with Alsace-Lorraine. The severest terms that can be imagined would be mild in comparison with those the world had ample reason to expect from a victorious Germany. But every consideration of morality demands that such punishment be imposed as shall bring the German people to realize the enormity of their crimes in the eyes of the world. Germany has been corrupted because of the success of the brilliant piracy of Bismarck. She will be helped to rid herself of false ideas by experiencing their bitter fruit. Nations, like mankind in general, must learn through experience that honesty is a virtue because it actually in practice is the best policy.—Kansas City Times.

WHAT TO EAT LAST.

Menus will be turned upside down if the warning of the author of "Diet and Dental Decay," in Good Housekeeping, is followed. "What you eat last at meals," writes Miss Lucy Oppen, "is responsible, to a large extent, for your dentist bills. For it is the last thing eaten which chiefly determines the nature of the after-flow of saliva that cleanses the teeth," she continues. "In other words, it is not so much what you eat as what you eat last, which is important in this respect. For instance, it is our custom at breakfast to give the children first of all some fruit, fresh or stewed, and to allow them to finish with porridge, often highly sweetened, and toast or rolls. The acid-forming foods are thus placed last, and their bad effect on the teeth continues long after the meal has been eaten. It would be better to eat the porridge first and the acid fruit afterwards, for thus the resulting flow of highly alkaline saliva would effectually rinse the mouth and counteract the acid-forming tendency of any particles of the sugar and porridge which might be left. Our widespread custom of having for dessert at luncheon and dinner some very sweet or starchy food is bad for the teeth. It means that the formation of acid in the mouth will later be heavy, and that the resulting saliva will be poor in alkaline quality. The French and Italians have solved this problem far better than we. They begin as a rule with some stimulating relishes and end with a simple fruit for dessert. It would be well if we followed their good example. And this would not be difficult.

"At breakfast save the larger part of the fruit for the end of the meal. For luncheon a little piece of acid fruit may be eaten for the relish or a radish or simple salad may form the first course. For dessert fresh or stewed fruit, fruit pudding, or pie may be used, providing that the fruit is not too highly sweetened and that the pie does not have much crust. Perhaps we can even learn to eat our salad last, and this would prove an excellent thing for the teeth in more than one respect. There is no tooth brush which will remove sticky pastries and cake from the fissures of the teeth with such effectiveness as will a green salad, celery, radishes, onions, apples, oranges, and fibrous foods generally, eaten the last thing. Under the 100 to 250 pound pressure of the healthy bite, these fibrous foods will grind out the particles of acid-forming foods."

TELLS WHY CHICKS DIE.

E. J. Reefer, America's foremost poultry expert, 4254 Poultry Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., is giving away free his valuable chicken book just off the press entitled "White Diarrhoe and How to Cure It." This book tells how to prepare a simple home solution that will cure this terrible disease over night and will actually save 90 per cent of every hatch. This book is worth $1 of any poultry raiser's money, but Mr. Reefer is sending it absolutely free as long as the present edition lasts.

FOOT TROUBLES

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, J. R. Simon of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. All of these diseases are probably due in whole or in part to imperfect digestion or imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection, Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder Troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, will give a permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began to use Shivar Spring Water and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by Rheumatism."

Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement."

If you suffer from Rheumatism, or from any curable disease, accept the guaranteed offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the Shivar Spring,

Box 4D, Shelton, S. C. Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. NOTE—"I have had the pleasure of serving the little church at Shivar Spring as Pastor for years, and am therefore well acquainted with Mr. Shivar and his associates, whom I gladly commend as honorable business men and worthy of the confidence of the public. I have personally derived great benefit from the use of Shivar Mineral Water and have knowledge of its beneficial effects in a great number and variety of cases."—Rev. A. McA. Pittman

The most remarkable prayer I have ever heard in all my life was uttered by an American soldier. We were spending the night in the cellar of a ruined house in the village of Brabant. The Germans, who had been driven out of the locality a few days before, had fixed up the cellar after the manner of a dugout. There were about twenty-five of us in the company, most of them private soldiers. There were a few bunks in the place, but the majority of the men were lying on the floor. The only light in the place was from an old stove, in which a fire had been kindled. I was just dropping off to sleep and things had become rather quiet, when I heard a young man, whose accent betrayed the fact that he had come from one of the Southern States, utter these words: "Boys, before we go to sleep what's the matter with having a prayer." Silence followed, and then there ascended to God a wonderful prayer. He prayed for himself and his comrades in the dugout. Then in tender tones he prayed for the fathers and mothers, the loved ones back in the home land. Just at that point I heard five or six sobs from the little company. Then the young man prayed for our army and for honorable victory. Finally he just committed himself and the rest of us into the care of the Heavenly Father for the night.—W. E. McCulloch, D.D., in United Presbyterian.

STUDIES OF THE SOUL

These four great books on the science of soul culture supply the minister and Christian worker with the very latest and most usable thinking on this vital subject. The inner mysteries of the human soul and its conversion are set forth in practical, applicable, everyday language. Invaluable tools for evangelistic work.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF THE CHRISTIAN SOUL Rev. G. Steven, M. A.

This book is the outgrowth of long experience with men and books. The academical and theoretical have been tested in life's laboratory and this masterly analysis of the human soul is the result. A book which should be in every Christian worker's library.

WOMEN AND WAR.

A laundress at Lourdes stood by the mangled body of her husband. She was unlettered, unversed in worldly graces, but she had a heart of steel. "He has given his life for France and so has done well," she said. "France was his mother. I am only his wife." A young girl wrote to her betrothed the following words which deserve to be chronicled in letters of gold: "Always remember that you belong to France. I come after her. . . . Go forward, beloved, and may God guard you, if the country will not lose by it. Living or dead, you will be my only love." A sister, from a home dark with the black shadow of death, sent this message to her brother: "They have taken them all. Out of eleven, eight are dead. Dear brother, do your duty, that is all we ask." The answer of the men, it could not be otherwise, has been the ever-memorable words: "They shall not pass."

Madame de Castelnau was the wife of the great general. Two of her sons had been killed, a third had been made a prisoner; then they came to tell her of the death of the fourth. "I know what you are going to tell me," she said. "God's will be done. But the mothers of France would do wrong to weep for me. Rather they should envy me."—Exchange.

MAKE STOCKINGS LIVE LONGER.

Stockings seem to wear out more quickly than any other article of apparel. Try some of these ways for making them last longer:

- Wash while new before wearing.
- Rinse out the feet of the stocking each night.
- Have the stockings long enough for the foot.
- Keep the nails cut short to avoid wear at the toe of the stocking.
- Paste a small piece of velvet over the worn-out lining of heel of shoe.
- Darn holes as they appear.
- Replace badly worn feet in stockings. New feet from stockings may be cut from the uppers of other stockings, the feet of which are worn.

Stockings beyond the stage of further mending may be used in some of the following ways:

- Make a dustless duster by dipping in kerosene.
 - Make a dustless mop by attaching stockings to a worn broom. The stockings should be cut into narrow strips within a couple of inches from the top, leaving this part to attach to broom or other handle.
 - Use uppers of white stockings for sleeve protectors.
 - Use for lining hot dish holders.
 - Use uppers of stockings in making short petticoats or yoke for petticoat similar to the jersey petticoats which are so well liked, but rather expensive.

Get Your Piano Through The Standard Piano Club And Save One-Third The Cost

No matter where you live, nor what style of piano or player-piano you want the Club will save you at least one-third the cost. By "bunching" our orders in a club of one hundred buyers, each gets the rock bottom factory price and saves from one to two hundred dollars according to the style of instrument selected.

But the big saving in price is only one, and by no means the most important, of the many attractive features of the Club. Read the following brief outline, then write for catalogue giving full explanation and particulars.

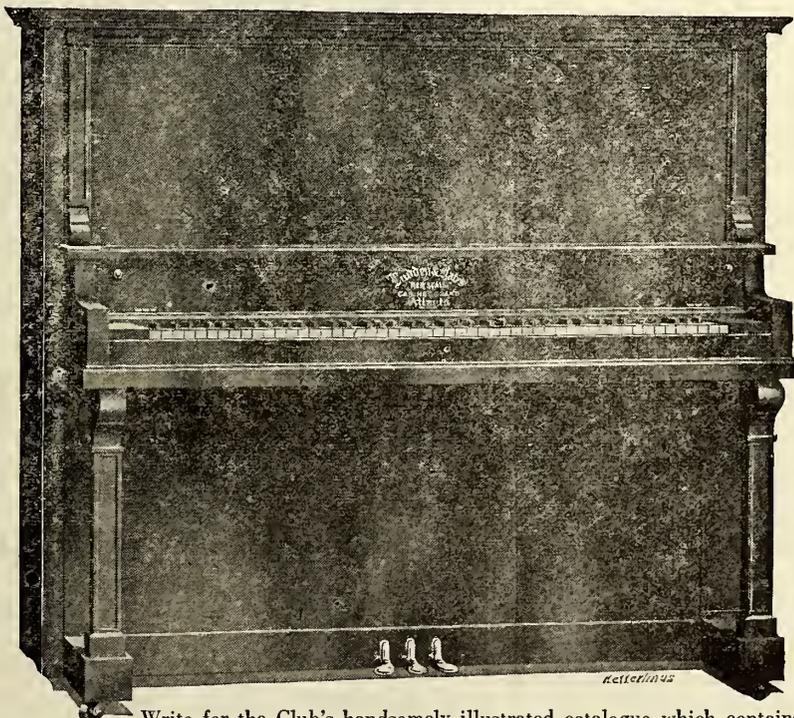

FEATURES OF THE CLUB

1. A clear saving of one-third the cost.
2. Nothing to pay unless, after a thorough trial of the instrument in your own home, you find it perfectly satisfactory and decide to keep it.
3. If, after the free trial, you are delighted with the superior quality of the instrument, the attractive price, the liberal and convenient terms, the protective guarantees and the Club as a whole, then you accept it. But if for any reason, you are not pleased, you simply notify the Club and upon receipt of their shipping instructions return the instrument, freight collect. The trial costs you nothing, puts you under no obligations and is the only perfect protection against every possibility of dissatisfaction.
4. Freight prepaid, safe delivery guaranteed.
5. Easy and convenient terms of payment and a clear receipt to your family in the event of your death before the instrument is fully paid for, provided, of course, you have complied with the printed regulations of the Club.
6. Every instrument is fully guaranteed against all imperfections of workmanship and materials.
7. Liberal allowances for old pianos and organs in exchange for new pianos and new player-pianos.
8. Each purchaser is responsible only for his own order and yet benefits by the combined action of the one hundred buyers.
9. You have a complete line of the best pianos and player-pianos to select from and will find no difficulty in getting an instrument that suits you exactly.
10. Even a child who knows nothing about business is perfectly safe in purchasing through the Club, for there are no tricks, no misrepresentations, no exaggerations, no falsifying, no special prices to special buyers, no imposition, no annoyance by insulting letters, no begging you to keep the instrument, etc., etc.
11. You get an instrument of the highest quality, of the sweetest tone, of rare artistic beauty, of the greatest durability, of the strongest endorsement, and of the most approved reputation and standing.
12. You deal with people of the highest standing, of unquestioned reliability, of greatest experience and efficiency, of clean and honorable reputation, people who would not cheat you if they had the opportunity.
13. Every statement and representation made by the Club is guaranteed both by the Advertising Manager of the Presbyterian Standard and by Ludden & Bates, one of the oldest, largest and most responsible piano firms in America.

Absolutely No Risk in Purchasing Through The Club

The Club assumes all of the responsibility of proving to your entire satisfaction that you are getting an instrument of the highest quality at the lowest possible price. You are the judge and the Club leaves the decision entirely to you. When you have tried the piano or the player-piano we know what your decision will be, for we know what hundreds of other people think of the instruments and the prices. If you would like to see the letters of those who have purchased through the Club we will gladly send you a booklet containing them.

If you would like to save a hundred dollars or more on your instrument and be absolutely sure of perfect and lasting satisfaction, write for your copy of the Club catalogue today. Address

Write for the Club's handsomely illustrated catalogue which contains full description and photo-engravings of the latest art designs in pianos and player-pianos.

Beside the Sea.

The snowflakes whisper on the pane,
The wintry night is dark and cold,
As, sitting by my glowing hearth,
I read once more the story old.

Once more I see the sacred Form
Through morning mists, beside the sea;
And, by the little fire of coals
Upon the shore of Galilee,

The company of fisher-folk
Gazing upon their Lord divine:
And, listening, again I hear
His gentle greeting, "Come, and dine!"

Tonight beside my blazing fire
I feel anew the comfort deep;
The call still echoes, "Follow me!"
And, "If you love me, feed my sheep!"

Help me, O Lord, to recognize
Thy loving presence guiding me,
As Thy disciples heard Thy voice
In days of old, by Galilee!

What Is Politics?

WE say to the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., "One serious objection we have to you is that you dabble in politics." The ready answer is, "We do no such thing. We perfectly agree with you that the Church should have nothing to do with politics." Then we point to prohibition, and the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. denies that prohibition is a political question, insists that it is a great moral question, and that for this reason it is a proper question for the Church to handle. Nay, it is even insisted that the Church cannot shirk the responsibility of handling it merely because the State is dealing with it.

The Federal Council has been called down by a minister of the Southern Church for having sent a commission to Paris to express to the Peace Conference the desire of the Churches of America that a League of Nations should be formed to prevent future wars. This on the ground that the Church should have nothing to do with politics. It is answered in defense of the Federal Council that to advocate a League of Nations is not to meddle with politics, that a League of Nations is to serve a great Christian, even spiritual end.

What is politics? Obviously we must agree on an answer to this question if we are ever to agree on the proper attitude of the Church toward politics. Is there any common standard to which we can submit this question? What about the dictionary? It would seem to be made for such an exigency as this. If we go to the dictionary we learn that politics is the "branch of civics that treats of the principles of civil government and the conduct of State affairs; the administration of public affairs in the interest of the peace, prosperity and safety of the State." All matters then with which the State deals in the conduct of its affairs are political matters; all legislation which the State enacts in the interest of its own peace, prosperity and safety belongs to the sphere of politics.

Try prohibition by this test. What is the prohibition of the liquor traffic? It is a piece of civil legislation enacted by the State, not in the interests of the Church, not in the interest of religion, but in the interest of its own peace, prosperity and safety, a very worthy object, but hardly the object set before the Church as its aim. And yet when the Church allies itself with the State to secure the enactment of prohibitory legislation, it is seeking just that object. It has entered the arena of politics to secure a political result. Moral is it? Certainly, as almost all civil legislation is. It is a commonplace that in this Christian country our constitutions and statutes are based on the ten commandments.

Test the League of Nations. What is the League of Nations? A bit of proposed legislation to secure the peace, prosperity and safety of the nations of the world. It is not concerned with the Church, or with religion; it belongs entirely to the sphere of civil government and therefore to the sphere of politics.

The churches that are forever dabbling with politics and yet persistently deny it, recognize no politics except partisan politics. So long as they do not join with the Republicans against the Democrats, or the Democrats against the Republicans, they are not mixing in politics. For that matter the "wets" and "drys" are as truly parties as any in the country. As for the League of Nations, that is coming to be largely a partisan question. If the Federal Council does not keep both eyes open it may find itself in close alliance with the Democrats against the Republicans. But the point is this, politics is purely a matter of the State, and the Church enters politics whenever it lends itself, or gives itself to an effort to secure an end by means of civil legislation. The nature of this end has absolutely no bearing on the question.

A Divided Team.

Ordinarily, harmony is necessary for efficient work, but in an editorial team, variation in views expressed not only adds to the interests of the paper, but insures adherents for the views of both editors.

The two editors of the Standard are over 100 miles apart, and have never yet had to confer in order to agree upon the policy of the paper, because they seemed always to think alike, and both having sat at the feet of Dabney and Peck, were trained according to the law and the prophets.

The Charlotte branch of the firm has always been pleased with the course of his Associate, who always rings true on every question.

On the general position of our Church with respect to political matters we are in full accord.

In the above editorial our Associate, like Homer, nodded, and instead of drawing a distinction between the Commissioners dictating to the Peace Conference as to the League of Nations, and the Commissioners expressing a hope that they would do something to prevent future wars, he takes a dictionary definition and from it by a logical process he establishes the fact that politics is what the Conference is doing and therefore is concerning itself with politics, things equal to the same things being equal to each other.

We are led to these remarks because three weeks ago we took the opposite position that in expressing the hope that the Conference would take some step to prevent war the Federal Council was dealing with a moral question in the best sense.

The contrary position would take from the Church the right of protest or petition which the Confession gives to us.

The Young People and Presbyterian Conservatism.

The Standard enjoys the reputation among some of our progressive brethren of being ultra-conservative. One dear brother, now in glory, once renewed his subscription on the ground that he did not wish to confine his reading to contemporary literature, but would like occasionally to delve into annals of the past.

We are conservative in doctrine and methods, yet at the same time we welcome and are ready to support progressiveness in the right direction.

We recognize the danger of moss-back-ism, refusing to do anything that our fathers did not do, and for this reason we have advocated the Young People's movement, ever since the Christian Endeavor started.

We have had no sympathy with those alarmists who have thrown cold water on this movement lest it should encourage the young people to attempt to manage the affairs of the church.

We are glad that the Synod's Committee has determined to hold a conference in Charlotte some time in June.

When we learn that the men in charge are such men as Dr. Richards, of Davidson; Dr. Henderlite, of Gastonia, Dr. Raynal, of Statesville, and Rev. J. G. Garth, formerly of Hickory, we are confident that whatever is done at this conference will be according to the pattern shown in the mount.

In early June Queens College, with its grass, flowers and trees, will be a place of beauty, where "far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife," these consecrated young people can confer concerning the affairs of the Kingdom. We hope that the young people will turn out in force.

The Tithe Discussion.

About the time when the Every-Member Campaign began, without considering the effect, if any, upon the campaign, we published several articles for and against the tithe as our measure of liberality.

Certain brethren intimated that this discussion might possibly impede the efforts of those in charge of the campaign, so we then shut down on the discussion, but promised those thus shut off a further opportunity to set forth their views when the canvass was over.

In the meantime, however, we gave full space to those advocating the tithe system, and refrained even from our usual comments.

The canvass is now over, and in giving space to those who do not believe that the tithe is binding, we are not in any danger of crippling the causes, and therefore we are publishing this week two articles which we have held for nearly a month. One is by Dr. Raynal, who is never so nappy as when he is delving into the writings of the old fathers, and the other is from Prof. Addison Hogue, Professor of Greek in Washington and Lee University, who taught the editor all the Greek that he knows, which, however, is not a tithe of what the Professor himself knows.

We beg our readers, in judging our position on this question, not to impute views to us that we do not hold. Our position briefly and clearly stated is this: We believe that the tithe should be the minimum of our giving, not because that particular amount is morally binding, but because we ought not to give less than the Jew, and also because it is better to have some standard in giving.

We hold that while the tithe should be our minimum standard, we should rise above that, and never reach the point where we feel that we have done all we should do. The believer is a steward holding his property in trust for God.

The question then is simply this: Is the tithe morally binding? We deny and our friends on the other side affirm.

It has always been our rule, both in the paper and in Church courts, never to argue any question when others would do the work for us, so, for that reason, we refer our readers to the two most excellent articles from the pens of Dr. Raynal and Professor Hogue.

Some surprise has been expressed that the Stewardship Committee in its posters made a statement concerning the tithe directly in opposition to that taken by the Assembly in its deliverances.

We have no idea that defiance was meant, or contempt for the authority of the Assembly. The truth is that the younger men of our Church are ignorant of much of its history. They need to study the deliverances of the Assembly, which may be found in Alexander's Digest. We commend a careful study of this book to our younger Secretaries and leaders in the various branches of work, because it rather savours of Bolshevism to have the Assembly on one side of a question and these would-be leaders and teachers on the opposite side.

To save these brethren the trouble of consulting the Digest on this question, we will give a brief outline of the Assembly's action:

In 1889, in answer to overtures asking if tithing ought not to be advocated as a means of raising money for the causes of the Church, the Assembly sent down the question to the Presbyteries. You will notice that it was not the opinion of a few commissioners constituting the Assembly of one year, but it was the calm and deliberate conclusion of the Presbyteries of the Church, thus making it more nearly the opinion of the Church as a whole. Of the 71 Presbyteries then constituting the Assembly, 68 replied, and of the 68, 51 voted that the tithe was not binding in the New Testament dispensation, and 10 voted that it was. Six declined to answer and one answered in such a way that it could be counted by neither side. Then of the 51 voting against it as a moral law, 16 thought that it was a useful guide in giving.

Eight years after, the Assembly considered the question again, and appointed an "ad interim" committee of seven, with the moderator as chairman, to consider the whole question of tithing, and report to the next Assembly. The answer was that any definite system of giving would be good, whether one-tenth or one-fourth.

We quote from the report: "The Assembly, while enjoining the personal adoption of some definite proportion as a minimum, does not feel authorized to fix that proportion which under the Gospel has been left to the enlightened conscience of the individual. The Mosaic law prescribes rules; the Gospel promulgates principles. Rules are for childhood, principles for maturity; and the Assembly cannot bring into bondage to the letter those who, having received the spirit of adoption, are no longer under tutors and governors."

Such is the position of our Church, expressed repeatedly in the past, which should be sufficient.

It seems, however, that a new generation has arisen which not only "knew not Joseph," but knew not the expressed views of our Church courts. A careful study of the Assembly's action will show that so far from encouraging those who would excuse their penuriousness behind the non-moral character of the tithe law, it really makes the tithe the minimum, and urges a giving far beyond one-tenth.

Such is the position of this paper and its editors.

Praying For the Editor.

The Watchman-Examiner had recently a very suggestive editorial under the above title, in which it is stated that at a certain service the pastor actually prayed for the editor in his work. We take our contemporary's word for this fact, but it must stand alone in our experience. We have heard prayers for every creature under heaven, but never for the editor, yet no class of men need the sympathy and prayers of God's people more.

This is not only true of the editors of the daily press, but it is especially true of the editors of the religious papers. Those who in the quiet of their homes read the Church papers, criticising here and there, have little idea of the difficulty attending the selection of the right kind of matter, the impartial spirit required in holding the balance between contending parties, or the strong temptation to write unadvisedly with the pen, else they would, like Sterne's recording angel, shed a tear to blot out our failings rather than abuse us for our stupidity or lack of judgment.

If we had no other duty than to write pleasant things, to be all things to all men, to abstain from criticising abuses as we see them; editing would be pleasant work, but what would the paper be? What Christ warned the believer to beware of will also apply to the editor—"Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you."

An editor must make enemies and he must at times disappoint friends, if he has opinions of his own and is bold enough to express them.

The editor who takes up the work with the right motive, does so because he feels that in this way he can best advance the interests of the Kingdom. It is, in his eyes, as much the carrying out of his vow to preach the Gospel as the regular preaching of it in the pulpit. If the pastor needs the prayers of the people, surely the editor does also, because any error on his part reaches more people than the sermon of any preacher. We trust therefore that not only will the preachers in the pulpit pray for us, but also that our readers may breathe a silent prayer that the editor may have grace given him to know the right, and that he may have that wisdom from above that may fit him for his responsible position.

Practical Religion

JUST now when the Church is thinking a great deal about the sort of religion that appeals to soldiers, the following clipping from the Jacksonian, the official journal of the army men at Camp Jackson, will be of interest:

"The congregation of the First Presbyterian Church last Sunday morning consisted of a large number of representative looking men, many of them officers and enlisted men from Camp Jackson. In his sermon Dr. Blackwood mentioned that this church took pride in the fact that it had always appealed to men—the real 'he' man, he added, and he stated that today a larger number of thinking men were giving thought to religion than to any other subject. In the course of his sermon he undertook to answer three interesting and important questions:

"What is meant by the 'practice' of religion? Why do men 'study the Bible?' and why do they 'join the church?' In the substance of his conclusions we would agree with Dr. Blackwood, with his permission, to express them as follows:

"The practice of religion is the obeying of God's laws.

"We study the Bible to become better informed as to these laws.

"We attend church for a double purpose: first, to enable us to gain a correct understanding of the Bible; second, to use the knowledge thus acquired, in helping others. So the object is not a selfish one.

"This much stated, the important question arises, 'Why do not all thinking men take up the practice of religion?' They are equally well informed as those who, like St. Paul, have become 'regenerated.' They know that failure to obey the laws of God—which are nature's laws—is committing sin, the expressed inevitable consequence of which is 'Death.' They accept the belief that this penalty, while inexorable, is not directed toward class or individual, but that it is a prime law of nature, upon the stern infliction of which the welfare of humanity depends. They know that its application to man, beast—everything in the universe possessing the mysterious attribute of Life—is with the same result, death—just as a tree will die when deprived of a circle of its bark.

"So why do thinking men postpone engaging in the actual practice of Christianity—not 'perverted' or 'so-termed' Christianity, but the kind that Christ practiced and described in his Golden Rule—the kind that St. Paul preached and practiced for a period of thirty years, until he was finally decapitated—the kind that David sang in his Psalms and practiced in his love for Jonathan—the kind that his great grandmother, Ruth, showed toward her mother-in-law and which that good woman returned to Ruth.

"Who denies the existence of an Almighty Supreme Being?

"The only answer to the question, 'Why thinking men put off obeying the laws of God?' is that they are still weak—that they lack the strength of character necessary to cause them to act on the courage of their convictions.

"So much greater the responsibility of those who are strong!"

How many there are today pretending to be loving both God and the world, men and women trying to touch the things that they should hate, and yet pretending to be living in the closest friendship of Jesus Christ! It is easy to put on the garments, but it is easier to see through the thin, mocking gauze of them the true impossibility of such living. Just so truly as God and the world are at war, so the moment our lives are laid down in uncompromising obedience to Him, they are laid down in utter and uncompromising contrariety to the things He has told us we are not to love. We must choose between the evil one of the world and the overflowing love of God.—Robert E. Speer.

A Church-Wide Evangelistic Campaign.

By Rev. R. F. Kirkpatrick, D.D.

ONE of the objective of the $3,500,000 campaign upon which we have entered is a vigorous evangelistic effort in all our churches for several weeks, following the financial drive on the 16th. Nothing could be more timely or appropriate. It will form a fitting climax to the whole campaign, and give an immense impetus to all the activities of the Church.

It is most likely that without exception the work of our churches has been seriously hampered during much of the past year by the prevalence of influenza everywhere, and if we do not engage in a special evangelistic campaign throughout the bounds of the Assembly, we shall almost certainly face a serious falling off in the number of accessions upon profession to be reported. This would be most regrettable, for according to the figures recently compiled by the Southern Baptist Home Mission Board, our Church led all the Churches of America last year in the percentage of increase upon profession of faith.

There was never a time in the history of the world when it was more important that we should preach the gospel of redemption.

We have but recently experienced the thrill of victory after the carnage and sacrifices of four and a half years of war. Yet already thoughtful spirits are pointing out that we might win the war and yet lose.

Widespread industrial unrest is manifest throughout the world. The ever-present race problem threatens to become acute in our Southland.

Civilization has awakened aspirations and released influences that must be curbed, or else given proper direction. Increasing facilities for communication have greatly contracted our world, and the impact of nation upon nation is tremendous.

A great conference is in session in Paris striving to bring about settlements that will secure the great ends for which so many precious lives were sacrificed, and to establish the peace of the world upon an enduring basis.

In the presence of such a crisis, we know that nothing can avail but the regenerating influence of the Gospel of Christ; and if only the Church is faithful in leading men to enthrone Christ in their hearts, the future is safe.

It is very much to be hoped, therefore, that every church will begin at once to lay plans for a vigorous campaign of evangelism as one of the objectives of the great Three and a Half Million Drive. Pastors and officers and people can come together in a prayerful spirit; and without any other assistance than that of the Holy Spirit throw themselves heart and soul into the effort to save men.

It is sure to result in a churchwide review and a great ingathering of the unsaved.

Book Notice.

"Wild Youth and Another"—By Sir Gilbert Parker. Illustrated. $1.50 net. J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

A new novel by Gilbert Parker will be greeted with pleasure by the many readers of his other books. There is about his stories of Canada life a whiff of fresh air, an odor of the green woods, and the picture of primitive man.

Here we have the gripping story of the modern Beauty and the Beast. An old man, coarse and brutal, buys a fresh young girl with a ten-thousand dollar mortgage, and brings her to Western Canada. There she is thrown with an attractive young rancher, and for the first time in her life the tender passion is aroused.

The story is good, and as we read, we find that time has not taken from the author's pen any of the charm that we found in his early books.

The Magnific Title of Publican

Or a Treatise on Decimal Arithmetic.

By Revs. H. M. Parker and C. E. Raynal.
(John Milton Collaborating)

IT will probably be granted without much demur that between the middle of the first and toward the end of the seventeenth century the Church produced few greater or nobler scholars than John Milton. But that between his enlightened age and our supposedly even more glorious one, no luminary of greater magnitude should have dawned upon the ecclesiastical horizon may seem a matter of doubt, and, therefore, one calling for demonstration. And yet so solid and steadfast are most of his conceptions that they might be taken as the latest results of research and invention. Indeed, the intellectual figure of this seventeenth century scholar, Christian and gentleman seems, upon examination, yet so fresh and vigorous, that his emergence now upon the meteoric pages of the Presbyterian Standard comes without shock or strangeness.

Milton's modernness consists not alone in those imperishable and ever youthful qualities of genius that belong to all great poets, but equally, and, even more vividly, in his understanding of, and in the expression he gave to, fundamental matters of Church and State. It is not only in the poetry of Paradise Lost that he is master of great themes, but in the prose of his political and religious writings. It is probably true that the conception of Christian liberty, which is the very ground and reason of the whole polity and theology of the Presbyterian system, has nowhere had a nobler or more uncompromising statement than in these tractate studies of John Milton.

It is not the purpose of this present paper to attempt a discussion of any of the wider implications of Milton's views. One or two of these may form an important element in later, and, it is to be hoped, more profitable investigations. It is not an essay of this article to present the underlying thesis of the particular tract from which the following quotations are made, though this thesis is evident in the meager excerpts here set forth. It is not even within the scope of this article, that the heresy displaced should be replaced by the Christian principle, for that great principle has never been overthrown, but stands there immovably, both in the Gospel and in all Presbyterian tradition, though somewhat encumbered about of late with alien and extraneous materials. Indeed, it is the sole purpose of this paper to turn the heavy artillery for a moment upon a minute and single point—to let John Milton speak upon "The Tithe as Law."

First, upon the proper and fundamental meaning of the tithe within the Mosaic law:

"That tithes were ceremonial, is plain, not being given to the Levites till they had been first offered a heave-offering to the Lord. He then, who by that law brings tithes into the gospel, of necessity brings in withal a sacrifice, and an altar; without which tithes by that law were unsanctified and polluted, and, therefore, never thought on in the first Christian times, till ceremonies, altars, and oblations, by an ancienter corruption, were brought back long before. And yet Jews, ever since their temple was destroyed, though they have rabbis and teachers of their law, yet pay no tithes, as having no Levites to whom, no temple where, to pay them, no altar whereon to hallow them: which argues that the Jews themselves never thought tithes moral, but ceremonial only. That Christians, therefore, should take them up, when Jews have laid them down, must needs be very absurd and preposterous."

From several pages, quarto on Abraham's tithe—much here sorrowfully omitted:

"But they think they have a better plea in the example of Melchisedec, who took tithes of Abraham before the law was given; whence they would infer tithes to be of moral right. But they ought to know, or to remember, that not examples, but express commands oblige our obedience to God or man: next, that whatever was done in religion before the law written, is not presently to be counted moral, when as so many things were then done both ceremonial and Judaically judicial, that we need not doubt to conclude all times before Christ more or less under the ceremonial law. To what end served else those altars and sacrifices, that distinction of clean and unclean entering into the ark, circumcision, and the raising up of seed to the elder brother? If these things be not moral, though before the law, how are tithes, though in the example of Abraham and Melchisedec?"

And on Jacob's vow after that he was delivered, upon which attempt has been made to found a general principle greater than moral law:

"Of like impertinence is that example of Jacob, who of his own free choice, not enjoined by any law, vowed the tenth of all that God should give him: which, for aught appears to the contrary, he vowed as a thing no less indifferent before his vow, than the foregoing part thereof; that the stone which he had set there for a pillar, should be God's house."

On the claim of universal and perpetual operation of the tithe:

"But say they, 'All the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or the fruit of the tree is the Lord's, holy unto the Lord.' And this before it was given to the Levites" . . . "therefore since they ceased. No question; for the whole earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, and the light of nature shows us no less; but that the tenth is His more than the rest, how know I, but as He so declares it? He declares it so here for the land of Canaan only, as by all circumstance appears, and passes, by deed of gift, this tenth to the Levite: yet so as offered to him first a heave-offering, and consecrated on his altar, all which I had as little known, but by that evidence." "Where did God ever clearly declare to all nations, or in all lands—that He required the tenth as due to Him or His Son perpetually and in all places? Where did He demand it, that we might certainly know?"

On a New Testament text oft quoted and almost as often misunderstood:

"This last proof they cite out of the Gospel, which makes as little for them, where our Saviour denounces woe to the Scribes and Pharisees, who paid tithe so exactly, and omitted weightier matters, tells them that these they ought to have done, that is to have paid tithes. For our Saviour spake then to those who observed the Law of Moses, which was not fully abrogated till the destruction of their temple." "This,"—inter alia et enormia—"is so apparent to the reformed divines of other countries, that when any one of ours hath attempted in Latin to maintain this argument of tithes, though a man would think they might suffer him without opposition, in a point equally tending to the advantage of all ministers, yet they forbear not to oppose him, as in a doctrine not fit to pass unopposed under the Gospel."

Adding to his faculties of Exegesis and Theology the testimony of Ecclesiastical History:

"Hence these ancientest reformed churches of the Waldenses, if they continued not pure since the apostles, denied that tithes were to be given, or that they were ever given in the primitive church, as appears by an ancient tractate in the Bohemian history."

On the effort to defend the tithe by reference to prelatial practice:

"And yet a late hot Querist for tithes, whom ye may know by his wits lying ever beside him in the margin, to be ever beside his wits in the text, a fierce reformer once, now rankled with a contrary heat, would send us back, very re-

The Tithe Not Obligatory

By Prof. Addison Hogue.

CAN this thesis be maintained, when so many earnest and learned and godly men teach just the opposite? "Produce your cause: bring forth your strong reasons" will rightly be said to one who is apparently in a small minority, if we are to judge by the articles in our religious papers, and by the speeches in our various conventions. Well, here are the reasons. Judge ye whether they be "strong," or not.

Pro. You admit, I suppose, that the tithe was obligatory upon God's ancient people, the Jews? and that their failure to honor Him with the tithe brought many calamities upon them?

Con. Certainly. The Old Testament is full of it.

Pro. And you likewise admit that our Saviour commended the Pharisees for their scrupulous tithing of the smallest garden herbs, when He said: "These (things) ought ye to have done?"

Con. Certainly; it stands so written.

Pro. And we Christians ought to honor Jehovah with our substance, and with the first fruits of all our increase?

Con. Yes; the spirit of that I fully believe in. More than that, I think it is a great reproach to the Church that it has not come up to the tithe even as a minimum. For now we are not under law, but under grace; and this should lead to better results than were obtained under the law.

Pro. Good for you. But can you show me any passage in the New Testament where the tithe is plainly repealed?

Con. No: there is no such passage.

Pro. Then it seems to me that you have given your case completely away; for you have admitted pretty much all that I could ask for.

Con. It is your turn now to answer questions; and as both of us are sincerely desirous to know the truth, we will ask that we may be guided by the spirit of truth. You know, of course, the distinction between "positive" and "moral" precepts or requirements?

Pro. Yes, a "positive" precept is one like the command to abstain from swine's flesh; while a "moral" precept is one like the command, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God."

Con. Correct. A "positive" command must be obeyed in case we owe obedience to the one who issues the command, even though the thing itself may be perfectly proper under most circumstances. On the other hand, a "moral" command has its foundation in the eternal distinction between right and wrong. We agree as to this?

Pro. Yes. So far we go absolutely together.

Con. Did not a great mass of the Jewish legislation consist of "positive" precepts, binding only upon the Jews, whom God wished to keep distinct from the other nations?

Pro. Yes, undoubtedly.

Con. Of all these "positive" requirements which one was most tenaciously held to by the Jews?

Pro. Circumcision.

Con. And yet even this was abrogated under the Christian dispensation, though it required a special decree of the Holy Spirit (Acts 15:28) to do away with it; and St. Paul had to attack it most fiercely and almost savagely, to keep Jewish Christians from imposing it upon the adherents of the new faith. You admit this?

Pro. Of course I do, but I hardly see the bearing of this upon our discussion.

Con. Well, let me take something that you will see. As the tithe concerns the right use of money, I will bring up another monetary precept that was binding on the Jews. You know that God forbade His chosen people to charge interest (not "usury," as in the A. V. That word was correct three centuries ago, but is misleading now) if they lent money to a poor Jew?

Pro. Yes; it is mentioned in various places in the O. T.

Con. Was that prohibition "positive," or "moral?"

Pro. It was clearly "positive;" for in Deut. 23:20 God expressly allowed the Jews to charge interest on money lent to a "foreigner" (R. V.)

Con. But of course the prohibition was still binding on our Saviour and on all the Jews of His time, as the Mosaic legislation had not then been repealed?

Pro. Yes, that is correct.

Con. It follows then that even if our Saviour had expressly commended people for observing it, this would not alter the fact that it was "positive" and not "moral?"

Pro. No, this would not have altered its nature.

Con. And can you show me any passage in the N. T. where this prohibition is plainly repealed?

Pro. No; there is no such passage, for of course Matt. 25:27 has no bearing here.

Con. Certainly not; for the slothful servant cannot be taken to represent a "poor" Jew—or any Jew at all, for that matter. Do you hold, therefore, that it is a sin for one Christian to charge interest on money lent to a brother Christian who happens to be poor?

Pro. N—no, I can't say that I do.

Con. And yet it concerns the right use of money; and it is emphasized in the O. T.; and has never been specifically repealed in the N. T. All this is correct?

Pro. Yes; there's no denying that. Now I begin to see your drift.

Con. Very naturally. You see, I believe that the tithe was just as truly a "positive" precept as circumcision was, and that it fell away with the great mass of the "law," and did not need to be specifically abrogated. Circumcision, however, did need a special repeal, because of the overwhelming importance attached to it by the Jews.

Pro. I see your point of view, though I do not agree with it.

Con. Naturally not; for you hold the tithe to be, if not a "moral" precept, at least one of universal obligation. But let me ask you this: Can you think of any moral precept that is not plainly reinforced in the N. T., and urged upon Christians as a duty?

Pro. Just at present, I can not. But that is a rather large question, and I can not commit myself to an out-and-out answer.

Con. Nor do I wish you to do so. We are not trying to catch one another; and we should be doing dishonor to our Lord if we indulged in any quibbles. But at any rate, neither of us can think just now of any plain "moral" precept that is not clearly taught in the N. T., and taught so clearly that we do not have to rely mainly on the O. T. to support it.

Pro. I gladly grant you that much, and I dare say you are right.

Con. I earnestly hope so; for above and beyond all else we both want to be right. I have wondered, therefore, why the tithe should be such a conspicuous exception, and though perpetually binding (as you hold it to be), should not be said to be so in the N. T.

Pro. Why, it is endorsed by the Apostles. Is not that enough?

Con. Who says it is endorsed by the Apostles?

Pro. Why, I have seen that stated over and over again on high authority.

Con. So have I. Even our Montreat Committee has advertised the fact in large print. But let us go to the highest authority, like the Bereans. Did you ever examine the Scriptures, whether these things were so?

Pro. Not specifically. I just naturally thought so from hearing it asserted so often.

Con. That must be true of the Montreat Committee also. If you do go to the fountain head—not to the Committee, but to the Bible—you will find these facts, I am quite certain:

1. In Matt. and Luke our Saviour commends the Phari-

Moneyless Joe

By W. H. Morse, M.D.

"Moneyless Joe!"

Moneyless? And he was one of the most prosperous Italians in the county. But, actually, he was without a cent of money. He bought and sold, and did not owe a dollar to any one; and yet, he did not have any money. He did not have any—in his purse, or in his house, or in the bank. He owned a farm of thirteen acres, on which he raised vegetables and fruit, and where he kept a horse, two cows, and a flock of poultry.

I was identified with his inception of the idea. We were provisioning the Italian reservists with Testaments when they were called to their colors from this country, and among those who contributed was Joe. I knew him as a zealous Protestant, and was not at all surprised when he came to contribute. Producing his purse, he emptied its contents, sixteen dollars and some cents, on the desk.

"There," he said, "is the last money that I have! From now on, until a certain time, I shall not have any more money of any kind!"

I looked at him for an explanation.

"Listen," he said, "You know me, Giuseppe Moneta. In English that is Joseph Money. I am to take out my papers, and have my name changed to Joseph Montearth at the June term of court. My brother in Sicily writes me very hard about being a Protestant. I am praying for him. Until he is converted I shall do without money. It is my vow. He writes that I disgrace our name. So I drop the name. Also the money. Not the prayers for him. No."

That was on May 30, Memorial Day. He did not explain himself further; but it was not long before it was quite generally known as to his scheme.

It was nothing else than barter. When he sold his produce he insisted on being paid in other commodities; and when he made purchases it was his insistence that he should pay in produce. Not a cent of money passed through his hands at any time.

He would go into the village with a load of potatoes or some other vegetable to sell. At the groceries and meat markets he had no difficulty in working out his plan as soon as it was understood, for the grocer and butcher were perfectly willing to pay him in sugar or bacon, round steak or molasses; and he was adept at driving a bargain, so that no one ever took any advantage of him in trade. If he did not have the load of vegetables ready, and wanted a ham or flour, he would get the dealer on the telephone, and bargain some of his produce for it. This worked admirably, in both ways. But when it came to the purchase of dry goods, millinery, medicine, or hardware, the dealers in these things were not always willing to take farm produce. The milliner was willing to sell Mrs. Moneta a hat, but would not take any fruit or vegetables; but when she saw that she was to lose a customer, she acceded, and then disposed of the cabbages or turnips at the grocery. Joe and his wife had no argument with any one. If the dealers would not barter, then they would go to some other who would. The tax collector was one who demurred at first, but finding that he could sell the apples that Joe offered, and at a small profit, he took them.

When asked what he paid for his coat, Joe would reply that it cost so many bushels of onions. Asked how much he received for his butter or parsnips, he would reply in terms of molasses, codfish, or some other groceries. He paid the hired man in vegetables. On Sundays he attended both services, and brought butter as his weekly contribution. He was one of the men who took up the collection, and when they had passed down the aisles and reached the rear of the church, he produced his brown package, and placed it on the plate. It was never worth less than a dollar. When his sister was married, and the bridegroom handed him a five-dollar bill to pay the minister, he declined to handle it, and instead made a donation of apples to the parsonage. If at any time the person he was dealing with refused to barter, Joe went elsewhere to make the trade.

Seven months went by. It was on the last day of December when an Italian stranger came to town and inquired for Giuseppe Moneta. He was directed to the farm. The following morning Joe came into the village with some butter and potatoes, and surprised the grocer by disposing of them for money. Of course the grocer, an inquisitive Yankee, put in his "How's this?"

"Mr. Harrington," Joe said, "my brother came yesterday. My prayers have been answered. He has found our Jesus. I said I should never touch money till he was converted."

On Sunday the brother, Giovanni, attended church with Joe and his wife, and the ball of butter was not on the plate that morning. At noon, at the First Church, which has the Italian mission in its charge, Giovanni went before the session; and in the evening he was received into membership.

"Not Moneyless Joe any longer!" Joe laughed. "See! I am worth my brother!"

sees for paying tithes of mint and anise and cummin (Mt. 23:23, Luke 11:41).

2. The Pharisee in the temple boasted that he paid tithes of all that he possessed. (L. 18:12).

3. The writer of Hebrews mentions tithes seven times in chapter seven, but by no means says that tithing is still binding. And these are the only places in the N. T. where the subject of tithes is even remotely touched upon. Of course, as has already been said, tithing was in force in our Lord's life-time, as the "law" had not then been superceded by the gospel. And as to the writer of Hebrews, he takes pains to assure his Jewish Christians that God had better things in store than the old dispensation contained. And of course no one contends that people are forbidden to pay tithes.

Pro. Do you really mean to say that these are the only places in the N. T. where the tithe is mentioned?

Con. I can find no other places. If the Montreat Committee can, they will do the Church a service by producing the passages.

Pro. Why, I was sure that Paul and other Apostles endorsed the tithe.

Con. "Live and learn." Not a single Apostle does so—not even the writer of Hebrews. In 13:5 he tells his readers to "be free from the love of money." Why didn't he tell them that though other things in their law were becoming old and nigh unto vanishing away (8:13), the tithe was of perpetual obligation? Was not that a capital opportunity to say so?

Pro. It would have clinched matters, certainly.

Con. Again: though the other N. T. epistles abound in practical exhortation to Christian duties, they never allude to the tithe. The Gentiles of course would need such instruction, and yet the great Apostle to the Gentiles says never a word to them on the subject of this great duty—this imperative duty, as you conceive it to be.

Pro. I never thought of that.

Con. In I Cor. 16:2, what a capital opportunity presented itself for him to say: "Let each one of you lay by him in store a part of his tithe," instead of saying "as he may prosper." And in II Cor. ch. 8—which discusses the grace of giving more fully, perhaps, than any other place in the N. T. does—Paul had an almost imperative occasion to inculcate this duty, if it was a perpetual obligation. There is no hint that he had ever instructed them on this matter—an all-important matter, too, in your opinion; and he certainly does not do so in chapter 8. On the contrary, he tells them in verse 12: "For if the readiness is there it is acceptable according as a man hath, and not according as he hath not." And in verse 10 he actually says: "and herein I give my judgment," having already said in verse 8: "I speak not by way of commandment, but as proving ("testing" would be

Sketch of Sharon Presbyterian Church

SHARON CHURCH is situated in a beautiful grove, seven miles south of Charlotte, N. C., on what is known as the Sharon and Pineville Public Road. This church was organized in 1830, with Rev. Samuel Williamson, D.D., as its pastor, and Dr. Jos. W. Ross, Esq., William Ross and Hezekiah Alexander as its first elders. Its charter members were composed mostly of persons who lived in the vicinity of the present church building and were members of Providence Church. As there were no macadam roads nor automobiles in this county at that time, people found it very inconvenient to travel ten or twelve miles, especially in the winter, to attend preaching at Providence Church. They therefore decided to build a house of their own, a plain but substantial frame building. This building served its purpose until the year 1889, when it was removed and the present brick building was erected in its place by the generous help of Mr. S. P. Alexander, a citizen of Charlotte.

It would require quite a book to give even a sketch of all the many ministers who have served this church, but it will be sufficient for the purpose of this article merely to give their names in the order of their service. As already stated, Rev. Sam'l. Williamson, D.D., who was at that time pastor of Providence Church, agreed to become its pastor, giving it one-third of his time. He was afterward called to the presidency of Davidson College, and was succeeded by Dr. Cyrus Johnson. After him came S. C. Pharr, who was also called to Davidson College as Professor of Latin. After him came Rev. Jethro Rumble, D.D.; after him came Rev. R. Z.

Johnson; after him came Rev. W. H. Davis; next was Rev. D. P. Robinson; next W. B. Arrowood; then Dr. G. D. Parks; then G. F. Thompson; then W. H. Davis a second time; then Dr. H. E. Gurney; and then our present pastor, Rev. C. H. Little.

This church is most remarkable for the high class of its eldership before the Civil War. There was Dr. Joseph W. Ross, the beloved physician who may fairly be called the father of the church; there was Capt. John Walker, a man of unusual ability, who represented this county as State Senator for a number of years; then there was Esq. John Wolfe, a man of sound judgment and sterling worth, having the entire confidence of the whole community; then there was Thos. Neely Alexander, one of nature's noblemen, who was perhaps the most popular man in the county, and who was high sheriff of the county for more than twenty years; then there was Prof. H. C. Reid, educated at Davidson College, and regarded as one of the finest teachers in the county. These are specimens of her eldership before the Civil War.

This church at one time previous to the Civil War had probably the finest choir in the county. It was composed mainly of Alexanders and Wolves. But these Wolves were of a gentle variety and were perfectly harmless. In fact the more you had to do with them, the better you liked them.

This church has not been very prolific in the production of ministers. During the 88 years of its existence it can only claim eight. It may, however, claim the honor of being the mother of two other churches, viz: Amity and Carmel.

The Magnific Title, or a Treatise on Decimal Arithmetic.

formedly indeed, to learn reformation from Tyndarus and Rebuffus, two canonical promoters."

As proceeding to other matters touching more nearly the Christian conception of liberality:

"On the other side, although it be sufficient to have proved in general the abolishing of tithes as part of the Judaical or ceremonial law, which is abolished all, as well that before as that after Moses; yet I shall further prove them abrogated by an express ordinance of the Gospel, founded not on any type, or that municipal law of Moses, but on moral and general equity, given us instead: 'Know ye not that they who minister about holy things live of the things of the temple; that they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? So also the Lord hath ordained that they who preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel.'"

And in an attempt to help a Christian ministry apprehend itself:

"But what if the person of Abraham can neither no way represent us . . . as we are co-heirs, kings and priests with him, a priest forever after the order or manner of Melchisedec. As therefore Abraham paid tithes to Melchisedec because Levi was in him, so ought we to pay none, because the true Melchisedec is in us, and we in him, who can pay to none greater, and hath freed us, by our union with himself, from all compulsive tributes and taxes in his church."

Showing also that Peter had to unlearn a lesser sanction in order to approach a greater:

"And the tenth part, though once declared holy, is declared now to be no holier than the other nine, by that command to Peter whereby all distinctions of holy and unholy is removed from all things."

Upon the question of whether liberty in Christ can be trusted to yield revenue:

"This would be well enough, say they, but how many will so give? I answer as many as shall be well taught, as many as God shall so move. Why are ye so distrustful, both of your own doctrine and of God's promises, fulfilled in the experience of those disciples first sent? 'When I sent you without purse and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said Nothing.' How then came ours, or who sent them thus desitute, thus poor and empty both of purse and faith? Who style themselves ambassadors of Jesus Christ, and seem to be his tithe-gatherers, though an office of their own setting up to his dishonor, his exacters, his publicans rather, not trusting that he will maintain them in their embassy, unless they bind him to his promise by a statute-law, that we shall maintain them. Lay down for shame that magnific title." "He doubtless will command the people to make good his promises of maintenance more honorably unasked, unraked for. This they know, this they preach, yet believe not: but think it as impossible, without a statute-law, to live of the Gospel, as if by these words they were bid go eat their Bibles, as Ezekiel and John did their books; and such doctrines as these are as bitter to their bellies."

In closing this particular tractate to those whom he says he sees "still so loth to unlearn their decimal arithmetic," Milton says:

"Thus much I had to say; and I suppose what may be enough to them who are not avariciously bent otherwise, touching the likeliest means to remove hirelings out of the church; than which nothing can more conduce to truth, to peace and all happiness both in church and state. If I be not heard nor believed, the event will bear me witness to have spoken truth; and I, in the meanwhile, have borne my witness, not out of season to the church and my country."

Milton cheerfully admits the tithe to be still a decimal. He shows it once to have been a Jewish law. He holds it to be now abrogated. He allows it no place in the Christian economy except that of an example or matter of purely voluntary practice. In this last position he is in agreement with the deliverances of General Assembly quoted in our first paper.

It is manifest that grave injustice is done John Milton in thus presenting his argument piecemeal. The two minor and entirely insignificant partners in this collaboration recognize this. They have found it bitter hard to select but a few slender shafts from such a quiver, where so much lay ready to their hand. It is their prayer that this injustice be rectified by a full perusal of John Milton, his book, and that the sweet charity of all readers disculpate therein our unworthy most miserable selves.

Dr. Ogden Rests His Case

By Rev. D. H. Ogden, D.D.

HAVING elicited from Dr. Whaling a fourth confession, namely that the now famous phrase "colloidal and molluscuous" was not original with him and should have been encompassed with quotation marks, I shall rest my case. Of course the resting is tentative; its permanence will depend upon the good behaviour of my brethren.

The matching of "facts" and "fancies" by Dr. Whaling and me has been pleasant to us and perhaps entertaining to the public. The contest between a professor of Systematic Theology and one who is "better fitted for popular speech than accurate argumentation" (so he styles me) must needs be one-sided. The question is, "which side?" I ask the reader to review the record and decide.

But the issue involved is far bigger than our wee bit of a debate, and in resting my case I wish to submit to the thoughtful men and women of our church the following considerations:

1. Our vital union problem lies in the relationship between our Church and the U. S. A. Assembly. We scarcely touch the other Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, but in a very large part of our Assembly there are U. S. A. and U. S. Synods, Presbyteries and sometimes congregations occupying the same territory.

Our great need is a bond of union by which unfriendly competition, where it exists, will be removed and through which the spirit of oneness, which is more commonly found, may function in the full sweep of the work of the Kingdom. We need something more than a truce of God: we need full and direct and positive co-operation.

2. The erection of additional ecclesiastical machinery is certainly unwise when the problem for whose solving it is created can be met more effectively by a change in the powers of our present Church courts.

A Federal Assembly would not be effective unless it were given very large authority and even then it could not fully make good the loss of constructive power which arises from the overlapping of our Church courts and congregations. It would work well in our foreign mission and kindred enterprises where there is now little or no problem: but in the place that the shoe really pinches a Federal Assembly would accomplish meagre results.

3. The Conference Committee of the U. S. A. Church presented to our last Assembly a proposed basis of reunion embodying the very principles for which our Church stands. If the U. S. A. Church supports the proposals of its committee the way to union is open. It might be well for all of our ministers and ruling elders to refresh their minds as to these proposals of the U. S. A. Committee. (See Minutes of our Assembly, 1918, p. 150.)

4. By giving to the Synod increased authority it is entirely possible to safeguard the principle of local self-government and to leave in the hands of each Synod the control of its purely local affairs.

As soon as I realized that union was not inconsistent with local self-government in the Synod, my attitude toward the problem changed. If I can judge by the letters that I am receiving, the experience of many others is similar to my own.

The plan which we call "Synodical" is simply this: to gather into one Synod all the U. S. A. and U. S. Churches in a given state or territory; to give to this Synod such authority as to enable it to control fully all its purely local affairs; to preserve the present Synodical boundaries, so far as possible, largely following state lines: to erect over the Synods thus constituted a National General Assembly composed of commissioners from the Synods and having direct responsibility for the general work of the Church.

However the details might be worked out, the heart of the suggestion is the entrance into real union, and at the same time the safeguarding in the Synods of the principle of local self-government.

The change proposed would make our system logical and would bring to all our Synods new life and power. It would also form a sound basis for the ultimate union of all the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in America.

I earnestly hope that the New Orleans Assembly will carefully consider the "Synodical plan of union," before committing our Church to the erection of new and elaborate ecclesiastical machinery.

The Tithe Not Obligatory.

a better rendering of dokimazon) through the earnestness of others the sincerity also of your love"—"not by way of commandment!" That was the very time to give a command as to the tithe, provided it is of universal obligation.

Pro. Don't you think you make entirely too much of the fact that the epistles are silent as to the tithe?

Con. I think not. You know that circumcision was to the Jews the embodiment of their law. It was the very center and heart of it; and when that was overthrown—and Paul certainly overthrew it, though at the cost of a bitter and prolonged contest—all the minor requirements would naturally be understood as falling with it. If you cut a man's heart out, he is dead enough, and you need not cut off his hands, to make sure of them likewise.

Pro. But are you not afraid that the causes of the Church will suffer, if your view should prevail?

Con. As to that, we have to leave the Church in the hands of its Redeemer. You can not persuade me that God's cause it ever promoted by human requirements, unless these are supported by the teachings of the Bible: otherwise it is mere will-worship. The true New Testament doctrine lifts the whole matter to an unspeakably higher plane, which I will try to set forth in another article—if so be that the editor will allow me another one.

Another Beautiful Gift to Oglethorpe.

When the new building given by Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Lupton to Oglethorpe University is erected there will be in the great tower, that will dominate the Oglethorpe campus for many years, a handsome clock and chimes.

This has been made possible by the gracious generosity of Mrs. H. Frederick Lesh, of Newton Center, Mass. It was the happy thought of Mrs. Lesh that both the architectural and aesthetic ideals of Oglethorpe called for such an equipment, and to that was added the practical use of the tower clock in governing the schedules of daily recitations and hourly life, thus justifying the thousands of dollars which will be spent in their installation.

The uniqueness of this gift adds to its interest. These are the only college chimes in the South and among the few in America. Atlanta will welcome the gift as adding a pleasant feature to her life and their playing will be so arranged that the passing automobilist may know the hour that he may stop on Peachtree and for a few moments enjoy the mellow memories of old songs and have his future brightened by the joyful notes of the college bells.

Mrs. Lesh is a sister of Mrs. Thornwell Jacobs, who was Miss Maude Lesh, of Newton Center, Mass. She has many friends in Atlanta, where she has on more than one occasion visited Mrs. Jacobs.

There is, therefore, a delicacy of sentiment about this gift which adds a special beauty to it, for to these features of the gift is added the thought that it is an intimate endorsement from one of the families associated with others in the accomplishment of this great task of all that has been done and the plans that are to be fulfilled. The many hours of the long hereafter will be, in the truest sense, filled with the music of this gracious contribution to the happiness and order of our university life.

One Million Members.

By Rev. James Russell.

That is the language of the Knights of Columbus, and they have already reached five hundred thousand. During the past war a number of our boys joined them. Let us wake up and go for immortal souls. A million for Christ in our homeland. He is watching. "Hitherto ye have asked nothing; you ask for gold, He wants souls! Ask, look and work, expecting great things for Christ." Shall not our Synod of South Carolina get fifty thousand from the non-church-going brought to Christ and to our Sabbath School and churches. It cannot be done by the pulpit alone. Peter at his opening work got just three thousand, but he had a goodly company of lay workers who were seeking for souls. Let our elders and deacons be found at the front benches on Sabbath night and at prayer meeting, let them see the house is filled from the club rooms, hotels, stores and office workers. If you elders will go around and get the house filled up you will see a change in the preaching. Hold up the preachers with your prayers, your sympathies and your work and Christ will appear among us again as in days of old.

My Marys.

By Hannah Allen Ives.

"Mary! Mother, behold thy son!"

And did our Christ speak thus Down the long centuries to all the Marys
That they should carry ever
In their tender breasts
Such yearning mother-hearts:
Gathering unto themselves
With His own ministry
Earth's lonely, sick and stricken ones.

"Mary!" And in the lifted, listening eyes
Of all the Marys in my little world
I seem to find a holy tenderness:—
A shadow of the cross
Of love divine and sacrifice.

Topic for Sun., Apr. 20—Eternal Life and How to Live It: John 5:24; Eph. 2:1-10.

Eternal life begins not when we enter heaven, but right here on earth at the hour when we become Christians. It is then that we pass from death into eternal life. We may live here on earth for many years after the eternal life has begun in us. The death of the body will be merely an event of interest to us, a time when we enter upon a new and more expansive stage of the new life which began at conversion. The soul that does not begin its eternal life here on earth never has eternal life at all.

What is eternal life? It is a new spirit and disposition in us, a newborn inward capacity for appreciating spiritual things and becoming the intimate friend, helper, and beneficiary of Jesus. John says eternal life is knowing God and His Son Christ. It is a power which when once born within us will never entirely die. It may become dormant and sluggish, but God is keeping it alive, and He will cause it to spring again into movement and power. This new life is called eternal because God is guarantor that when it once begins He will never let it end.

In what manner shall we live this endless life upon which we have started? We must trust in God. The new and eternal life is a gift from Him, and its continuance is by His power. We cannot generate it in ourselves or maintain it for ourselves after He has begun it. The great Giver of life must do this for us. The first duty of the Christian, therefore, is to trust Him to provide and protect this new life within us. We may be sure He will not fail. That He will do it faithfully is the main article of all His promises.

We must study Jesus, if we wish this new life to increase and abound. The gospels tell us about Him, so we must master what they say. And we must stay with Him personally in quiet meditation and communion. To know Him we must share His company. We must stay by Him even in His labors and combats; nothing helps us more toward knowing Him than a conscious effort to wrestle beside Him with His problems and help to bear His burdens. There grows up a fellowship which in the long run will mean a perfect knowledge, which is the fulfillment of the spiritual life.

Let us make sure, after all, that we have this life eternal. It is vain to attempt to live it unless we have it in us. And the only sure way to obtain it is to go to Jesus and ask for it. Ask and ye shall receive, is the solemn promise He has made.

The Prayer Meeting

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING APRIL 13, 1919:
IF A MAN DIE, SHALL HE LIVE AGAIN?

Job. 14:14, 15; John 6:47.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

The earnest minded of every age have asked this question. Some say: "Men will always be asking, but without avail." But the great interrogatory has been answered. Job himself felt that God, for His own sake, must not leave the souls of those who loved and trusted them in Sheol. Even there:

"Thou shouldst call, and I would answer thee;
Thou wouldst have a desire to the work of thine hands."

Job saw that God's love is eternal, and that that love would not call to ears that could not hear, and that God's "desire to the work of his hands" could not perish with the death of the body.

All this was very new to the conventionalism of the "Friends of Job," and it is of supreme interest in every age.

Nevertheless, it is to Jesus that we come for the supreme light on this momentous subject. Nor does He fail us. To the question: "If a man die, shall he live again," He answers: "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." Verily, verily, I say unto you he that believeth in me hath eternal life."

There is no single person who is not concerned with death. As we look death in the face, we have a feeling of utter helplessness. Here we reach the limit of every resource: we are overcome by our weakness. But Jesus was utterly different. His was a flawless conviction that the eternal and measureless love of the Father had provided both for this world and for the future. Under his reign death can only be a blessing to the children of God.

See how calmly He stands at the grave of Lazarus. Quietly He says: "Roll ye away the stone." We are also glad that Jesus was not there in the hour of His friend's sickness. We see now, after Jesus speaks the recalling word, that not even death can carry us beyond the reach of His grace, and love, and power. It ever will be a supreme trial

THE PILGRIM WAY.

But once I pass this way,
And then—no more.
But once, and then the Silent Door
Swings on its hinges—
Opens . . . closes—
And no more
I pass this way.
So while I may,
With all my might,
I will essay
Sweet comfort and delight
To all I meet upon the Pilgrim Way.
For no man travels twice

FAITHFULNESS.

The true path is well-doing. Not brilliant doing, but well-doing. Doing the work of life with a willing mind, a loving heart, with both hands, earnestly diligent in getting good, doing good. In this world all the grand prizes go to a few brilliant people. But what a blessing it is to us, the dim million, to know that God recognizes patient merit, and that the grandest prizes of all are not kept for the brilliant, but for the faithful.—Church Advocate.

CHRIST OUR SAVIOUR.

Golden Text—John 3:16: "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

John 11:35-51.

April 13, 1919.

Christ is the only Saviour provided of God, to save man from sin and its consequences. He is Immanuel, the Son of God, united to a sinless human nature. The condition of salvation is faith verified by works. The results of accepting Christ or believing on Him are rescue from perishing and the possession of everlasting life. But though Christ is the Saviour, there are a number of things needful to make Him our Saviour. There must be human effort and Divine power exercised. We are to "strive to enter in at the straight gate" and "The Kingdom of Heaven suffereth violence and the violent, the eager, take it by force." The Holy Ghost must regenerate and quicken, or man, "dead in trespasses and sins," will never be a Christian. There are various ways of rendering men the disciples of Jesus, and our lesson illustrates some of these.

I. The Testimony of John the Baptist.

The great mission of John was to testify to Jesus, His character, functions and manifold blessings. He did bear witness to Him as "The Son of God," far superior to himself and to the long promised Messiah, who would baptize His disciples with the Holy Ghost and with fire. But in our lesson his testimony relates to Christ as a sin offering, whose vicarious sufferings would free His people from the penalties of the violated law. He says to two of his disciples, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." If as a Divine Person, united to a faultless human nature He undertook to satisfy the claims of the Divine law upon transgressors, and to deliver them from the curse of eternal death, He was abundantly able to render the service proffered. His suffering of death satisfied the law's demand, and His Divine nature gave infinite efficacy to His atonement for the whole race of men. This aspect of Jesus' functions was peculiarly attractive to human beings conscious of guilt. "Christ crucified has ever been the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

II. Bringing Disciples to Christ by Testimony.

John the Baptist's witness-bearing as to Jesus' vicarious functions caused his two disciples to follow the Lord. Encouraged by His invitation and satisfied by communion with Him as to His claims as Messiah, they immediately became His disciples. Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, was one of John's disciples directed to Christ. We are told that He too straightway becomes a witness bearer. "He first findeth his own brother Simon and said unto him, We have found the Messiah and he brought him to Jesus." He made that his first and chief business, and he perhaps never rendered a greater service to mankind than in rendering Simon Peter a disciple of Christ. Philip brought to Christ by the Lord's direct summons, finds his friend Nathaniel and testifies, "We have found Him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of Joseph." By this testimony Nathaniel is brought to Jesus and has his faith in Him as a Divine Saviour confirmed. This witness-bearing of believers as to Christ's character and the blessings of His salvation has ever been a means blessed of God for multiplying Jesus' disciples.

III. The Effects of Coming to Christ.

When men are in darkness they do not see their needs nor the means for satisfying them. But when they seek the light all is clear. Thus it is in coming to Christ. "He is the moral light of the world" and in approaching Him many difficulties vanish and many hidden things are made plain. When John's two disciples were pointed to Jesus as "The Lamb of God" they were in doubt as to His true character. But seeking Him and having a few hours communion with Him all doubts were dissipated and they were fully satisfied that He was the Messiah. When Philip told Nathaniel that he had found "The Prophet of whom Moses did write and that He was of Nazareth," Nathaniel said, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" He had a prejudice against Nazareth, because of its bad reputation. Philip said unto him, "Come and see," and when his friend was brought to Jesus, his doubts vanished and he was fully satisfied. The best remedy for religious doubt and ruinous unbelief is seeking Jesus. In the light of His truth and love, difficulties and prejudice are removed and faith blooms to bear precious fruit.

IV. He Who Comes to Jesus Will Have Growing Proof of His Knowledge and Power.

It was thus with Nathaniel. When He came to Jesus he discovered that the Lord had been with him in his private devotions under the fig tree in the garden. Hence he says, "Rabbi, Thou art the King of Israel." But the Saviour tells him "Thou shalt have still farther evidence of my deity and Messianhip. Hereafter Thou shalt see heaven open and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man." Jesus promises, "He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

to die; yet who has not seen Christ's children meet death with the smile of victory!

It is a frightful thing to meet death thoughtlessly. It is a brave thing to meet death with natural courage: but faith's highest expression is to die calmly and sweetly and hopefully by faith in Jesus.

The raising of Lazarus, the resurrection of Jesus, the question, "Why seek ye the living among the dead"—these facts give us assurance of life eternal and enable us to go our way in joy and strength. Every one of us must determine for himself whether these things be true: whether Jesus did actually call Lazarus back from death; whether He did Himself come forth from the tomb. The man who fails to grapple this problem—to determine for himself whether these things really are true is at fault, and is cheating his own soul out of a clear light and a determining influence. Jesus says: "I am the resurrection and the life." Where Jesus is—these are. Where one leans on Jesus, these are his own. So that potentially and really every believer has now the resurrection and the life. Jesus therefore does not point us to some supreme far-off event: but by faith He puts us in possession of a life in God that can not die. Life, according to our Lord's teaching, involves the victory over death; and what is this but immortality and resurrection? What Jesus confers upon us as an unspeakable boon is life deepened and purified by union with the Father. This life can not die: it has within its bosom the elements of continuity and blessedness. There stands Lazarus. He will some day die again: but his life in God is subject to no invasion, no interruption. He is hid with Christ in God.

Those of us who have in our daily lives come to hear Christ's Word and obey it with joy shall also hear it and recognize its power when we sleep in death. They have felt its power to call them out of spiritual death into life and union with God; in comparison, it is an inevitable thing that that same voice will call them out of moral sleep to an abundant life eternal. For were they not once dead in sins—in trespasses: were their hearts not once deaf and dead to Christ's commands? But Christ's love sought them out, and called them into life! and to them the assurance is inevitable that the same voice of love and power will not fail to find them in their graves, and that nothing can separate them from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

EACH MORNING A NEW EARTH.

Did you ever go out of doors in the gray of the morning before the long yellow rays pushed back the heaps of black and night had fled to the west? If you were up early enough to hear the voice of the first bird, you felt the sense of surprise in the strange new comradeship. Then, from one tree and another the nests yielded their chorus, until the whole air was vibrant with melody. Then, all of a sudden, a section of orange light crept across the placid water of the inland sea to make a golden pathway from the measureless depths beyond straight to you. As the light grew brighter and the rays lifted long fingers up, up toward other boundless deeps beyond man's ken, you felt a strange sense of unfitness. "Surely, this is not all for me. Can the path to heaven be as clear for me as this unbroken way, that across the deep to the rising sun?"

Involuntarily you turned your back to the sun—perhaps the glory was too great, or was it the soul's unworthiness?

Again, the joy in life was reflected from the myriad drops of dew that caught the generous light and flashed it about in the blues, and reds, and all the rest of the rainbow tints. Land, sea and sky had awakened while you stood in wonder.

Oh soul of mine, awake; awake! A new earth is yours each morning. On waking turn your face toward Him, and the clouds of doubt and despair will be dispelled. Sorrow and sighing shall flee away. The sweet communion with Him before you break the silence of night with the tattered speech of day will set your soul in the clear light of His love, so that all day you may reflect His presence in the varied experiences that await you.

Oh soul of mine, awake! Look for the new heaven and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness!

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

A young, delicate, sweet-faced woman, a Salvation Army officer, was appointed to the charge of an Indian village, where the dominance of a certain case made any sort of missionary effort almost hopelessly difficult. On the face of it no good had been accomplished for many months before her arrival. But the pale-faced captain set herself to pray. Every morning before the people were astir she crept through the slumbering village to the jungle beyond, with no other companion than her Bible, and on the same spot morning after morning she prostrated herself on her face before God—the God of India, she said in her petitions—to intercede for the souls which sat in darkness around her. And her prayers were answered, though not as she had asked or expected. She died and never saw the fulfillment. One day, a long time afterwards, a tall, powerful, handsome Hindu, with luminous eyes and regal bearing, called at the little mud hut which served as the officer's quarters and told to that faithful captain's successor the story, unknown as it was supposed, of the dead woman's prayers. He had followed her to jungle, and, peering through the heavy undergrowth, had seen her throw herself upon her face and cry to the God of India—his country—and shed overflowing tears for the people of his village—her people, she called them. "Then," he said, "I believed that the God of that woman was a real God, and I made up my mind to worship him." This was the beginning of a great wave of soul saving in the village.—Exchange.

"DAY BY DAY MANNA FELL."

He does not bid us bear the burdens of tomorrow, next week, or next year. Every day we are to come to Him in simple obedience and faith, asking help to keep us and aid us through the day's work; and tomorrow, and tomorrow, through years of long tomorrows it will be but the same thing to do; leaving the future always in God's hands, sure that He can care for it better than we.—Madam Guyon.

Home Circle

GOSSIP.

A wise man whom it was my good fortune to know in my early life earned the reputation of eccentricity because he rigidly excluded neighborhood gossip from table and fireside talk in his family. To this mentor of my youth, I am indebted for the definition of the much bandied word which commends itself to my riper judgment as it did not when I first heard it.

"Gossip, stripped of veils and decoration," said he—whom we will call "Mr. Sterling" (and no name fits him better)—"is the uncharitable discussion of other people's business." And at my doubting look—"When not flavored with a dash of ill-nature or a suspicion of malice, it loses interest and dies a natural death. Test each morsel for yourself, and you will find that the rule holds good."

Many years later I read the caustic dictum of a renowned satirist: "There is a touch of pleasure in hearing of the misfortunes of our best friends." . . .

I know of no trade that is more easily learned. The child brings home a school anecdote of the ill conduct and disgrace of a mate; the young lady sister has a current story of a social scandal, mild, but promising interesting developments; the lad recounts an instance of foul play upon the ball-ground—and family talk degenerates into piquant gossip. By such insidious stages the tone of home and society conversation is formed. We all love to be diverted from the humdrumness of ordinary occupations and daily chit-chat. Few pause to reflect that it is a vitiated taste which finds in this great, wide, beautiful world, with its countless riches of science, art and human endeavor to make it yet more wonderful and rich in all that is sublime and elevating, naught better worth seeking and enjoying than raking in a dumping ground of scavenger carts. . . .

I have no scruple in branding as vulgar and uncharitable discussion of other people's business, and rolling the unsavory particulars as quiet morsels under the tongue. As decidedly I aver that the scandal-monger is a coward. Ninety-nine per cent of the stuff put upon the social market by the aforesaid "purveyor" is prefaced by "They say." Mr. Sterling was not the first to assert, "'They say' is half-a-lie at the outset." The veteran gossip bolsters up an especially "strong" statement by "They do say," as one might put a girder under a rotten plank. When pressed by a lover of truth and cleanliness to give his authority for the tale, he hedges still more ignominiously—"It is the common talk," or "I cannot recall who first spoke of it," or "I have no right to mention names." We all know the variety of mean subterfuges with which he would cloak the crime.

The resolute "Who say?" persisted in, before one will hearken to another word, is like the touch of Ithuriel's spear. It brings out the true nature and purpose of the offender against the "neighbor" he is bidden to love as himself.

This sneaking trespasser in the home vineyard is, at once, one of the meanest and best disguised of the pack. If you doubt it, watch for traces of his nibbling at the "tender grapes" of young minds. As the first trap, refuse to listen to "tales" out of the wide school in which we study while we live—tales that promise entertainment and what your boy calls "no end of fun." Break the thread off short at the first indication of detraction or ill mannered ridicule, or aught else that stamps the story as high game. We who are husbandmen and vine-dressers cannot be too constantly on the alert.—Marion Harland, in The Continent.

God bless the cheerful people—man, woman, or child, old or young, illiterate or educated, handsome or homely. Over and above every other social trait stands cheerfulness. What the sun is to Nature, what God is to the stricken heart which knows how to lean upon Him, are cheerful persons in the house and by the wayside.—A. A. Willets.

TRAIN KILLS MISSIONARIES.

We take the following from a New York paper coming as a news item from Seoul, Korea, under date of March 25. We have had no confirmation of this distressing news from the Foreign Missions office at Nashville, however.

"Seoul, Korea, March 25—Two American missionaries were killed and one hurt, when the Fu San express struck their automobile. Rev. P. S. Crane and Mrs. Eugene Bell were instantly killed and Rev. Mr. Knox was seriously hurt. Mr. Bell, the husband of Mrs. Bell, and himself a pioneer missionary in Korea, was uninjured."

PERSONAL.

Rev. Frank D. Hunt has changed his address from DeFuniak Springs, Fla., to Albany, Ga., Box 176. Mr. Hunt accepted the offer recently extended him to become Superintendent-Evangelist of Macon Presbytery.

In our issue giving the schedule of Presbytery meetings we by mistake gave April 22 as the time for the meeting of Kings Mountain Presbytery. Our readers will please note that it meets on April 15, at Lincolnton, N. C.

Rev. Jno. R. Hay's address is changed back to Brevard, N. C., after a period of several months in which he was engaged in Army Y. M. C. A. work. Mr. Hay's charges are the Brevard and Davidson River Churches.

The war has its advantages as well as its disadvantages. Many of our young men are securing educational advantages that would otherwise be beyond their purse. Rev. W. W. Pharr, pastor at Mount Hope, W. Va., who has been in France, is now studying at the Sorbonne, Paris. This university was founded in 1253, and is probably the oldest university in Europe.

Rev. W. Moore Scott, D.D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Savannah, Ga., has been offered the work of Evangelist for the Synod of Arkansas. This offer came to Dr. Scott while he was in Charlotte assisting Rev. W. B. Lindsay in an evangelistic meeting, at which time he was visited by a member of the Arkansas Synod's Home Mission Committee. Dr. Scott is one of the leading ministers of the Assembly. His work in Savannah as pastor of the First Church has been most successful. Dr. Scott has the matter under advisement, but has as yet given no definite answer to the committee.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Liberty—Rev. H. A. Knox, pastor of the Georgetown Presbyterian Church, has accepted the call extended him recently by this church and will enter upon his new field of labor about April 15.

Bethel Presbyterial Auxiliary will meet in Fort Mill Presbyterian Church at 11 o'clock, on April 15, and close at 5:30 April 16. An interesting and inspiring program has been prepared, the speakers being Miss Douglas, of Brazil; Rev. Mr. Winn, of Korea; Rev. Mr. Purcell, of Chester; Mrs. Hodges, Greenwood, and many others. All churches belonging to the Presbyterian are urged to send delegates and those who do not belong are cordially invited to send visitors.

Blanche Lindsay Carroll,
President Bethel Presbyterial.

Columbia—The seminar being conducted by Rev. Thornton Whaling, D.D., at Columbia Seminary, is proving a decided success. It was deemed best to accept only a few for work in the course offered, consequently a number had to be turned away who applied for admission.

Among those pursuing the course are: Rev. C. R. Bailey, Laurel Hill, N. C.; Rev. W. D. Ratchford, Cross Hill, S. C.; Rev. Ben Rivers, a Baptist minister of Chesterfield; Rev. G. C. Gardner, pastor of the Methodist Church at Bethune; J. O. Van Meter, physical director at the University of South Carolina, and several resident pastors in Columbia. The work of the seminar will continue through April 11, meeting on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons, 3-4:30 p. m.

Chester—A lovely foreign missionary pageant was given at the Sunday School building of Purity Presbyterian Church Sunday, March 30 at 4:30 o'clock, and was well attended by the members of the different denominations of Chester.

In addition to the pageant a number of beautiful musical selections were rendered by well-trained voices.

The cast of characters was: Miss Cora Hardin, Missionary; Miss Annie Johnson, Society Girl; Miss Margaret Brice, Mexico; Miss Athalee Bankhead, Mohammedan; Miss Marie Jones, China; Miss Pryor Hood, Africa; Miss Mattie Turner, Hindu; Miss Winnie May Turner, India; Little Widow of India, Miss Jennie Peay; Miss Mary McKinnell, Korea; Miss Muriel McLurkin, Japan; Miss Elizabeth McLure, Cuba; Miss Lillian McDill, Conscience.

The pageant opened with the audience beholding an improvised handsome drawing room of the girl. She is visited by the missionary, who endeavors unsuccessfully to convert her to missions. After the missionary departs, the society girl goes to sleep, and Conscience comes and stands at her back. Presently come all of the various countries, represented by the foregoing young ladies, attractively attired in the garments of the foreign nations which they represent. Each one pleaded her nation's needs for missionary help. Shortly after their departure the society girl awakes and becomes a convert to the cause of missions.

The pageant was splendidly arranged in every detail and elicited the warmest praise from all present.

Following the pageant Mrs. J. H. M. Beaty gave a reading, which was immensely enjoyed. The subject was "The Man That Died for Me."

Kingstree — Williamsburg Presbyterian Church—This church, which has been without a pastor for the past sixteen months, is now at last to have one, Rev. J. A. Herndon, of Lagrange, Ga. Our members are joyfully making preparations to receive him. An increase of $600 per year in salary has been pledged, and the deacons are now collecting dues unpaid during 1918. About $1,500 worth of improvements have been made on the manse. A committee of ladies collected sufficient funds to furnish beautifully one of the bed rooms, and a large range has been installed in the kitchen, the latter a personal gift from one of the officers. We feel sure that both our manse and our church are now as handsome and comfortable as any in the State. The membership generally are gladly looking forward to having a pastor once again, and are renewing their interest. The ladies are planning for a gathering to be held at the Sunday School room as soon as Mr. Herndon and his wife arrive, and later a reception will be given for Mrs. Herndon. Our church has a membership of about 250, a splendid Sunday School, with Mr. Tom McCutchen, one of our elders, as superintendent, and a Woman's Auxiliary with about sixty-five members, and an efficient and consecrated corps of officers. Recently a successful campaign for putting a Church paper in every home was carried out. There are a number of tithers among our members, and largely due to their liberal gifts our church property is entirely free from debt. We are looking forward to increased usefulness under the leadership of our new pastor.

Presbyterial Home Missions in Enoree Presbytery—This work in Enoree Presbytery at present consists mainly in sustentation work. A number of our churches have a fine type of members, but they are weak numerically and not strong financially. To the extent that our church desires to hold its own, it is of great importance to raise funds from the stronger churches, to supplement the salaries of struggling groups, to where the cost of living might be approximated, and then reached. We need a good man who has some means of his own who would be glad to take charge of a group in Union County, with headquarters at Santuc. A house with a few acres can be had reasonably; and it would be very hard to find a people easier to love and to work with and work for. Help us to locate the man.

Rev. T. P. Burgess will soon be installed as pastor over the group, Landrum-Campobello-Fulton; and we are happy over this answer to prayer.

The finest constructive work in this department is the work at Monaghan Mills, Greenville. General co-operation by many who are not Presbyterians, by the Presbyterians of Greenville, and especially by Dr. E. P. Davis and the Second Church; by the generosity of the Monaghan Mill; and the consecrated energy of Rev. J. F. Brown, of our Seminary at Columbia, has resulted in a fine development, with a bright outlook.

The cash receipts for Local Home Missions will show an increase of several hundred dollars for the year. Our committee will aid all struggling churches in helping to pay the pastor's salary, as far as we are able.

J. F. Matheson, Chairman.

Spartanburg—The report of Spartanburg First Church in 1917 showed an enrollment of 887 members, of whom 225 were non-resident. In the spring of 1917, the church for the first time adopted fully the Every Member Canvass and the dual treasurer plan. Our budget then was as follows: For our Spartanburg obligation, $6,000; for our world obligation, $4,000; total, $10,000. To this should be added about $2,000, for which the people were already obligated, embracing the salary of a missionary assumed by the Ladies' Auxiliary, two orphans at Balfour, N. C., adopted by this Sunday School, etc. So that our aim for the year beginning April, 1917, might be stated at $12,000.

In 1918 we advanced our budget to $12,500, our automatic obligations for outside objects having also in the meantime grown to $4,000, the Darby Fulton Association having spontaneously assumed the support of Mr. Fulton in Japan, and one couple giving $600 towards the salary of another missionary. So in 1918 we set $16,500 as our minimum aim.

This year we made our budget: For Spartanburg obligation, $9,000; world obligation, $9,000, including the same $4,000 already pledged; or a total of $1,800. Our subscriptions have already run above $21,000.

We attribute the increase principally to the operation of the Every Member Canvass plan of the Assembly. But also to three other causes:

1st. We secured during 1918 the services of a pastor's assistant (not an assistant pastor), a young Kentucky lady trained at the Assembly's School at Richmond, who has made a thorough canvass of our people, and has been instrumental in inducing numbers to bring in letters from their former churches, and thus get in closer touch with us.

2nd. Our pastor is never afraid to call for money as a part of worship, and to talk up the Assembly's plan.

3rd. We have a fine spirit of co-operation in financial work.

In 1918 we showed, after revising our rolls, a very slight increase in available membership. This year we shall report an increase of perhaps nine per cent actually enrolled, but we doubt if the increase in the number of those available as attendants and possible subscribers is anything like as large. It is simply that people are now being canvassed who were neglected before the full adoption of the Every Member Canvass.

H. E. Ravenel.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Notice—All delegates expecting to attend Concord Presbyterial, in Marion, April 23-25, will please send in their names at once to Mrs. E. H. House, Marion, N. C.

Gilwood Church—The Children's Missionary Band of Gilwood Church planted cotton patches last year, as they have done for several years. They have just sold last year's crop, realizing $180 for missions.

Wilmington—Church of the Covenant—We clip the following from "The Fatherless Ones:"

"Rev. J. Oscar Mann, a former Barium boy, is winning new laurels as pastor of the Church of the Covenant, Wilmington. His salary was recently raised to $3,000 as an expression of the congregation's appreciation of their pastor."

Wilmington Presbyterial—The regular meeting of Wilmington Presbyterial will be held at Wilmington, N. C., April 16-18, at St. Andrew's Church. The program promises to be unusually good, and it is earnestly desired that all auxiliaries send delegates in order that every branch be well represented. Those expecting to attend please send names to Mrs. J. C. Stewart, 220 N. Second street, Wilmington, N. C.
Mrs. J. O. Carr, Secretary.

Mooresville—Under the splendid leadership of Rev. S. H. Hay, the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Mooresville made the annual "every member canvass" for congregational and benevolent causes Sunday, March 23. The total subscription, including special causes, amounted to $9,000, this being a large increase over the previous year and the best in the history of the church. The $9,000 subscription does not include $1,200 contributed by one family to the support of a missionary. The splendid success of the canvass is largely due to the untiring efforts and zeal of the beloved pastor, Rev. S. H. Hay.

Mecklenburg Presbyterial—The annual meeting of the Mecklenburg Presbyterial will be held in Sharon Church, April 21, at 8 p. m., to April 23. Please send names of delegates at once to Mrs. C. H. Little, Charlotte, N. C., Route No. 2.

Delegates will meet at Queens College (instead of Second Church) from 5:00 to 5:30 p. m., Monday, April 21, and transportation will be provided to Sharon Church. Cars will also meet delegates at Queens College, Tuesday and Wednesday, April 22 and 23, at 10 a. m.

Mary Alexander, Rec. Secy.

Durham First Church—During the month of March our church has received twenty-six new members, four by certificate, twenty-two on profession of faith. Most of these came in as the direct result of a meeting of eight days, in which the pastor, Dr. Leyburn, was ably assisted by Dr. Reavis, of Columbia Seminary. Dr. Reavis' preaching was strong and attractive, and made a fine impression on our people, and was a great blessing to our whole congregation. Since the first of the year we are having our mid-week service in the main auditorium of the church. Our attendance for the three months has averaged about seventy. We are hoping to increase that very largely, and hereby announce that we accept the challenge of the First Church, Knoxville, Tenn., and enter the contest for attendance during the month of April.
Pastor.

Wilmington—St. Andrew's Church gave a reception to Rev. Mr. Koelling, former associate pastor of the church, who was chaplain overseas, and the men members of the church who have returned, after the prayer meeting Wednesday night, April 2. That brought out a very large attendance of members and friends. The refreshments were served by one of the circles of the Women's Auxiliary of this church.

The auxiliary has just closed a fine year, giving more than twice as much to all causes as by all societies of women and girls in former years. The circles of the auxiliary are taking turns serving refreshments after prayer meeting each first Wednesday of the month. This gives additional interest and attendance at all our prayer meetings. A committee of young people has been choosing and providing and leading the music at prayer meetings. That also helps.

Charlotte—By the will of Mrs. Sallie Caldwell White, the residue of her estate is to be devoted to the purchase of a lot and the erection of a Presbyterian Church in memory of her parents, to be known as the "David A. and Martha Caldwell Presbyterian Church."

The will directed that a Sunday School in connection with the church be established also in memory of her sister, Lila Caldwell, and her daughter, Edith White. The church and Sunday School shall be under the supervision of Mecklenburg Presbytery and the Southern General Assembly. This was done, the will stated, in obedience to a request of her parents.

She also left $300 to the Lees-McRae Institute for girls at Banner Elk, and $300 to Barium Springs Orphanage.

Wilson—In this church the every member canvass has just been completed. It was a great success. The canvassers were enthusiastic in their work, and their reports before the congregation showed that our subscriptions for the benevolences had gone far beyond that of all former years, and "over the top." A large number of subscriptions to our religious papers were secured. For the third time in little more than three years the pastor's salary has been increased. The last increase makes the salary $2,100. A prayer and tither's league with a large membership has been organized, and is entering upon its work with enthusiasm. Under the leadership of our pastor, Rev. J. B. Massey, some of our Christian workers are opening up a third outpost in a community which is destitute of religious services. An intensive study by a number of our members of the text book, "Money the Acid Test" is in progress.

Gastonia—The year just closed was in many respects the best in the history of this church. A large advance was made in the activities of the church both in its local work and in the foreign field. The regular contributions were the largest of any year and more than one hundred members were added to the roll, the majority on profession of faith. This will probably make this the fourth church in membership in the Synod of North Carolina. Returns from the every member canvass indicate that the church will take its place this year in the progressive program of the Assembly for the benevolences, in addition to some extensive expenditures now being planned for our local work.

The congregation elected eight additional ruling elders and nine deacons recently. Last Sunday there were 180 men at the Men's Bible Class.

Davidson—The news from President Martin, who several weeks ago underwent a very serious operation in Whitehead-Stokes Sanatorium, is good. His condition is pronounced entirely satisfactory and a complete recovery is confidently expected. He will, however, probably be in the hospital for several weeks yet and in no event will he be strong enough this spring to resume the duties of his office here at Davidson. As the term is far advanced and the assistants in his office, with the help of members of the faculty, have the work of any administrative nature well in hand, no great inconvenience is occasioned by Dr. Martin's enforced temporary absence. He may visit New Orleans this spring on a recuperating outing before going to his cottage in Montreat.

The recent canvass in this church in line with the $3,500,000 drive shows a gratifying response on the part of the congregation. Exact figures are not yet available, but the showing is excellent.

Recent election to the Y. M. C. A. cabinet for the coming year are: R. R. Craig, L. L. McAlister, S. H. Askew, D. W. Roberts, A. D. McArn, L. G. Calhoun, J. T. Maddrey, W. F. Hall, C. M. McCaskill.

Badin—This is a new and thriving town on the Yadkin Railroad, in Stanley County, N. C., thirty-five miles from Salisbury, and five miles from Albemarle, N. C. It was started about three years ago by the Tallahassee Power Company, who operate a large aluminum plant here employing over two thousand men. The town is a thriving business place, with a large department store and many other creditable places of merchandise. In the near future six or more new stores, a new bank building and an up-to-date garage are to be built. We have a large and well equipped school building, a modern hospital, and a commodious opera house. There are three organized churches, and the Lutherans have services twice a month also.

The Presbyterian Church was organized two years ago by Revs. Leonard Gill and D. B. McLaughlin with a small charter membership. There are now eighty-five enrolled, twenty-one of whom have been added in the present pastorate beginning January 1, 1919. There are many Presbyterians and others in town, whom we hope to get into the church. We have a growing Sunday School, an active Ladies' Aid Society; the Methodist and Presbyterian congregations have been uniting on Wednesday evenings in the prayer service and considerable interest has been manifested. Recently two elders and two deacons were added to our board of officers, making in all four elders and five deacons. The church since its organization has been using the community building as a meeting place, but that has been sold; we will therefore be forced to move to the opera house until we can get a church home of our own. The entire membership is enthused over the prospect of beginning on the church and plans have been made to commencing on the campaign. The company has already donated a lot worth $1,500. We hope with outside help to be able to build a church home and be in it by late fall.

Greenville—Albemarle Presbytery—In spite of a year that seemed to us at one time to be hurtful to the plans which we had made to put our church "over the top" in the $3,500,000 drive, Greenville is happy to report that the year just closing is the best year in her history as a church, from many standpoints. Our pastor, Rev. S. K. Phillips, left us last May for work in the army, and was gone for six months, but our officers held things together during his absence, and since his return in December we have been steadily at work upon our organization. Our report for the year shows that we not only met all our obligations but went $582 beyond what we had pledged to benevolences, and our per capita gifts are $37.57 for the past year.

For a number of years we have been a Home Mission Church, but we face the new year upon a self-supporting basis. Last Sunday afternoon, we made our Every Member Canvass, ten of our men pledging over $2,000 and the other pledges meeting all our apportionments under the new $3,500,000 drive. The canvass was thoroughly organized, our people were eager and responsive, and our officers feel that the canvass was of vital spiritual benefit to our entire congregation.

On the 17th of March, our elders and deacons had the pleasure of entertaining all the elders and deacons of Pitt and Edgecombe counties. Some sections of our Synod may have a hard time working up a stewardship conference, some complain that their farmers who represent the country churches, will not attend; but it is not so in eastern Carolina. We had sixty-five present, and there was not one who did not gladly leave his business and his farm to come and plan for the Kingdom.

The program was intensely practical. Such subjects as "The Hour," "The Field," "The Equipment," "The Tithe," "Stewardship," and "The Assembly's Plan," were presented; and then at a banquet table, served by the gracious hands of loving women, some elder or deacon from each church (and all were represented), pledged his church to do its best to measure up in the great campaign.

Only a few years ago, it would have been possible to have counted on two hands, all the Presbyterian officers in both counties, but today they number almost seventy-five of the clearest-headed, most substantial citizens in this section. There are still thirteen counties stretching away from us, in which there is not a single Presbyterian Church, but with the help of God, the future will see us entering these counties, to discharge our duty to them.

We praise God for all His goodness, and confidently step out together, into a new church year, which we believe is going to be the greatest year Southern Presbyterians have ever faced.

Charlotte—Westminster—Dr. Frank Arnold, of Kansas City, has been preaching for Dr. McLeod, at Westminster Church, in this city. This is his second week. Large congregations have attended and the interest has been deep. We hope by next week to be able to announce the visible results.

Charlotte—Knox Church—Very interesting commencement exercises for the Sunday School were held at the 11 o'clock hour March 30. The various classes recited selections from the year's memory work in Bible, catechism and hymnal, and officers and teachers for the ensuing year were formally installed. Fifty-seven pupils were promoted with honor for attaining the standard in the memory work assigned for the year, while a goodly number received Robert Raikes' diplomas for conspicuous fidelity in attendance and other good habits inculcated by the weekly marking system.

A current effort to pay off its indebtedness made it impossible for this church to accept its benevolence apportionment; but a goal of $1,500 was fixed, being a 50 per cent advance over last year's advanced goal. The actual subscription secured in the canvass amounted to $1,700. The current expense budget was also materially increased and practically fully subscribed. Thirty new members were welcomed last Sunday.

APPALACHIA.

Asheville Presbyterial—The annual meeting of Asheville Presbyterial Auxiliary will be held in Asheville First Church, May 5-6-7. Societies are requested to send the names of their delegates as soon as possible to Mrs. J. W. Huston, 169 Flint street, Asheville, N. C.

Newport, Tenn.—This congregation has raised its quota in the recent canvass, has raised its pastor's salary $200. Last Sabbath of the church year found five new members ready for admission, all adults of substantial value. The Ladies' Societies have adopted the auxiliary plan, and a "drive" for the Church papers placed one in most of the homes. The outlook for the new year is very hopeful.

Asheville—The Ora Street congregation passed the following resolutions on the resignation of Rev. A. S. Caldwell:

"Whereas, Rev. A. S. Caldwell has asked the congregation of Ora Street Presbyterian Church to concur with him in asking Asheville Presbytery to dissolve the pastoral relations between pastor and people.

"And Whereas, The relations between pastor and people have been very cordial at all times.

"Therefore be it Resolved, That we ask Asheville Presbytery to dissolve the relations as requested in Brother Caldwell's letter.

"Be it Further Resolved, That we express our regret at losing our pastor, one of God's servants; and ask the choicest blessings of God upon him and his family wherever they may go."

Rev. R. P. Smith, D.D., Moderator.

A. P. Burgin, Clerk.

Mrs. Caldwell's health demands her living at a lower elevation than Asheville. Mr. Caldwell will leave Asheville early in April.

FLORIDA.

St. Petersburg—The Rev. Billy Sunday preached in the public park on the morning of the 23rd to the largest crowd ever assembled in our city, which he estimated at 15,000. Seven churches gave up their morning appointment and united in this service. It is probable that he will be secured for a meeting of ten days or longer after his engagement at Tampa is fulfilled. Mr. Rondthaler, his singer, is to give a talk and musical entertainment on the 31st for the benefit of the Westminster Guild of our church.

Edward J. Young.

GEORGIA.

Atlanta—Beginning July 8 next, Oglethorpe University will become an all-the-year-round school. Its academic year will be divided into four terms of approximately twelve weeks each. The summer term will be devoted to intensive university work. Standard college courses will be offered leading to degrees and affording full college credit. These courses will be taught by the regular faculty of the university in all departments.

All of these courses will be open to women and proper dormitory facilities will be afforded them at the university. The regular tuition and boarding charges will be in effect during the summer term as during the other terms.

This change in the policy of the university has been brought about by the demand on the part of many students that they should have facilities for the shortening of the period of their education from four years to three, which will thus be made possible; others for facilities for making up deficiencies during the summer term and by the desire of many teachers of graded schools and smaller colleges to take advantage of the summer months by pursuing standard college courses taught by the regular faculty of the university along the lines of their particular interests, these studies to afford them full college credit leading toward college degrees.

Oglethorpe University thus becomes the first institution in the Southern States to hold its doors open all the year round for regular university work, the courses offered during the summer term consisting of standard university subjects.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville—Berry Boulevard and Harvey Browne Memorial Churches—These churches, of which Rev. William T. McElroy is pastor, have both gone "over the top" in the $3,500,000 campaign, the Harvey Browne Memorial Church reaching its quota of $300, and the Berry Boulevard Church securing more than its quota of $225. The Sunday School attendance at the Berry Boulevard Church is nearly double that of last year, there being 107 present on Sunday, March 23, and the average attendance for March being about 100. An evangelistic meeting will be held in this church April 13 to 20, the preaching to be done by the pastor. A series of services will also be held in the Harvey Browne Memorial Church early in May, in which the pastor will be assisted by several of the city pastors.

LOUISIANA.

Upper Tangipahoa Parish—The last of February marked Amite City, Kentwood, and Tangipahoa's loss of their evangelist-in-charge, Rev. C. O'N. Martindale, by removal to a larger work in Enoree Presbytery, South Carolina. Other denominations united in the final services to show their appreciation and fraternity. Complimentary and grateful and commendatory resolutions were passed by the respective congregations served by him for some three years, the Amite people remembering their pastor and family with a nice check as a parting "love-offering." These are good and lovable people, and it is hoped they will soon have another efficient and consecrated minister. The Home Missions Committee of New Orleans Presbytery supplements what the churches raise for support. They have made notable gains in benevolence year by year, and they look to God afresh for guidance and help. Amite had a live Christian Endeavor, and Kentwood entertains New Orleans Presbytery at its spring meeting. Dr. Jo. G. Prichard (Amite) and Mr. Henry A. Addison (Kentwood) are officers therein.

MISSOURI.

Synodical Superintendent—Rev. John E. Abbott, D.D., Synodical Evangelist in the Synod of Missouri, has been elected Superintendent of Home Missions in this Synod and expects to enter upon the discharge of his duties May 1. Dr. Abbott succeeds Rev. Trigg A. M. Thomas, D.D., who retired from this position to go into evangelistic work under the General Assembly's Committee. Brethren having matters to submit to the superintendent can address Dr. Abbott at 3501-A Smart Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

Chas. R. Nisbet, Chairman,
Synodical Home Missions Com.

Kansas City—Central Presbyterian Church—More than a year ago this church voted to move to a more advantageous location in the residence section of the city. The movement was halted by war conditions, making it impossible to build. Now that the war is over the movement has been revived with the result that a beautiful lot has been purchased, located on the southeast corner of Armour boulevard and Campbell street, and a campaign launched to raise $150,000 to cover the cost of building and lot. To date about $50,000 has been subscribed, and a campaign for the balance will proceed for a limited time.

Kansas City—Eastminster Church—News reaches us that Rev. W. P. Neilson, D.D., pastor of Eastminster Church, will return to his charge, from Camp Meade, Md., where he has been serving as religious director of the Y. M. C. A., on May 1. Rev. John E. Abbott, D.D., Synodical Evangelist, who has been serving the church as stated supply during Dr. Neilson's absence, will on that date enter upon the discharge of the duties of Superintendent of Evangelism and Home Missions.

Kansas City—Southeast Church—The baby church of the Presbytery, Southeast Church, corner Thirty-sixth street and Indiana avenue, Kansas City, is forging rapidly to the front under the leadership of their new pastor, Rev. E. M. Nesbit, who came to this work from the Y. M. C. A. War Work. This church, located in an attractive residence section, has had a phenomenal growth in the less than twelve months of its history.

Kansas City—Northeast Church—The Northeast Church also enjoys the ministry of a new pastor, Rev. John P. Davis, who comes to us from the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., Synod of Kansas. Under his energetic work and forceful preaching this church is going forward and has in mind the building of a new church plant.

With our new church organization at Mount Washington, a suburb of Kansas City, this gives us five churches now representing our Assembly, all of which, after the removal of Central Church, will be well located and may be expected to do a great service in the future. Charles R. Nisbet.

VIRGINIA.

Richmond—Union Theological Seminary—One of the most interesting addresses that has been heard here in many a day was given in the chapel Tuesday night by Dr. Thomas W. Lingle (class of 1900), who is fresh from stirring experiences as a war worker in France. His subject was "A Year Under the Enemy's Guns Around Verdun." He spoke for more than an hour, and the large audience would have been glad to listen for an hour longer. Dr. Lingle expects to return to France this month and to remain abroad till August, when he will come back to resume the duties of his professorship at Davidson College.

The students and community have been favored with a number of notable addresses during the past week. Dr. Frank K. Sanders, Director of the Board of Missionary Preparation, New York, and Dr. S. H. Chester, our Secretary of Foreign Missions, addressed the Society of Missionary Inquiry on successive evenings, the one on conditions in China, and the other on conditions in Mexico.

Rev. John McNeill, of Scotland, and Rev. Camden M. Cobern, of Meadville, Pa., spoke to large audiences on each afternoon and evening throughout the week.

The classes that graduated in '69, '79, '89, '99 and 1909 will have their reunion and alumni banquet as guests of the Seminary on Commencement Day, May 7, at 1 o'clock p. m., in Richmond Hall, on the campus.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Mullens—The first Presbyterian Church ever organized in Wyoming County was organized in Mullens, Sunday, March 30, by a commission of Kanawha Presbytery, consisting of Rev. F. C. Brown, of Logan, chairman; Rev. R. Wallen Blain, and Rev. R. E. Redding. Seventeen members were received; fifteen of this number were adults and nine of them were heads of families. This new organization is partly the result of the efforts of Rev. R. E. Redding, who has been laboring in this field during the past year, under the Home Mission Committee of Kanawha Presbytery. After the organization was perfected one elder, Mr. C. J. Kinzer, and one deacon, Mr. W. B. Morefield, were elected. These officers were ordained and installed at the evening service.

Mullens is on the Guyan River, at the junction of the Winding Gulf Branch and the main line of the Virginian Railway. The future outlook for this new church is very hopeful. Cor.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriages.

Blue—The soul of little James Harold, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Blue, of Raeford, N. C., returned to God, March 17, 1919.

Blue—Mrs. Mary Catherine Blue, a well beloved member of Raeford Church, aged nearly 82 years, entered into rest December 31, 1918, and was buried near her old home, at Union Church, Moore County, N. C., January 1, 1919. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

Currie—Mrs. Catherine Margaret Currie, the oldest member of Bethel Church, and probably the oldest person in Hoke County, died at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. M. A. Clark, near Raeford, N. C., January 31, 1919, at the age of 94 years, 6 months and 25 days. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

McQueen—Mr. Robert Martin McQueen, son of the late Rev. Archibald McQueen, and a member of Bethel Church, departed this life at his home near Raeford, N. C., March 4, 1919. He was waiting and watching for the sudden call and expressed his readiness to answer it.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Mrs. Laura F. Shields.

Whereas, Our Father in Heaven has removed from among us the spirit of Mrs. Laura Featherstone Shields, one of our best loved members.

Be it Resolved, That we bow in submission to His infinite love and wisdom. That as she had dedicated her youth and beauty to the extension of the Kingdom of God on earth, so may we more fully dedicate our powers of body and mind to the same purpose.

That we extend to her bereaved husband and parents our hearty sympathy, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Standard for publication, a copy sent to her husband and parents, and that they be spread on our minutes.

Mrs. J. E. Alston, President.

Mrs. J. E. Boyd, Cor. Secy.

Woman's Missionary Society of Nutbush Church.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Lillian MacNair Williams, at a hospital in Richmond, Va., departed this life, in the thirtieth year of her age. She was born October 30, 1888, near Maxton, N. C., and married Mr. Earnest P. Williams, October 22, 1913. She was the oldest daughter of Mr. Howard McNair, one of the deacons of Maxton Presbyterian Church. After marriage she and her husband lived for about a year in Whiteville, N. C., but most of her married life was spent in Maxton.

Amiable in disposition and attractive in person and manners, she has left many relatives and friends to deplore her early departure.

Her last illness was protracted, but mitigated by the presence of kindred and friends and all possible medical attention.

We trust that the change gave her a release from pain and suffering and the realization of abiding joy.

H. G. Hill, Pastor.

IN MEMORIAM.

Charles M. Brown.

Charles Michael Brown was born in Salisbury, N. C., October 15, 1848, coming of sturdy Scotch-Irish ancestry. He moved to Washington, N. C., in 1866, soon after the close of the Civil War, and began his business career. For over half a century he was closely identified with the civil, commercial and religious life of the community, serving the public in many important and useful capacities. His industry, intelligence, integrity won for him confidence and friends, and enabled him to forge steadily forward in the path of prosperity and happiness. From a clerk in a drug store he rose to the presidency of the First National Bank of the city.

As a young man he was ambitious and enterprising. He became proprietor and editor of the first newspaper published in the town. He established a private bank, under the caption, "C. M. Brown, Banker," and organized the present ice factory. While attentive to his own private interests, he was also a public spirited citizen, and served his community as alderman, county commissioner, justice and mayor.

His business ability, fine judgment, and strong character contributed greatly to the growth of our city. He filled a large place in the life of our community, and his presence will be sorely missed.

In 1871 he was married to Miss Mary W. Martin, daughter of Edwin Martin, and a descendant of one of the oldest and most cultured families of the State. The union was a beautiful and helpful one; and theirs was a hospitable and happy Christian home. She was a devoted and most dutiful wife, a true helpmate, who did her husband good and not evil all the days of her life. His heart safely trusted in her, and found rest and comfort in her affection and sympathy. Five children were born to them, two dying in infancy, while three survive their revered parents—Dr. E. M. Brown, Mrs. F. C. Kugler, and C. M. Brown, Jr., all of Washington, N. C. Surrounded by his children and grandchildren, his old age was unusually serene and happy. The death of his beloved wife and companion in November of 1914 was an irreparable loss to him: it left in his heart and life an aching void which nothing else could fill. They were lovely and pleasant in their lives; and it is sweet to think that their hearts are reunited in the heavenly home, where partings are no more.

Thrice blest whose lives are faithful prayers,
Whose loves in higher love endure;
What souls possess themselves so pure,
Or is their blessedness like theirs?

Mr. Brown was a staunch Presbyterian of the Old School, loyal and faithful to his church, deeply attached to her doctrines and principles, and profoundly interested in her prosperity. He was elected ruling elder of the Washington Church in 1878, holding this high and sacred office for forty-one years. For forty years he was the efficient clerk of the session. As an elder he ruled well, and was diligent and faithful in the house of God. He never missed a service unless sick or absent from the city. He was a wise counsellor, a liberal contributor to the church and to all charitable causes, and a consecrated worker. Mr. Brown loved the work of our church, was a frequent attendant upon her courts, and served both the Synod and Presbytery in numerous ways. As a member of Presbytery's Home Mission Committee for many years he rendered very valuable service, and will be sorely missed.

He was a trustee of Peace Institute,

A PRETTY TEACHER.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy 7 years old. This is my first year at school. I have a pretty teacher; her name is Miss Hatcher. My pastor is Rev. Stanley White, and our church is made of stone.

Your friend,
Jo. Jr. Butts.

Halifax, N. C.

STUDYING MUSIC.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old. I go to school. I am in the third grade. My teacher's name is Miss McMillan. I go to Sunday School every Sunday I can. I have one brother and one sister named Chesley and Virginia. We have one kitten. There are two cases of measles in town. I take music from Miss Jones. I will close.

Your friend,
Martha McCaskill.

Maxton, N. C.

A NICE TEACHER.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy five years old. We have a car. I have two little kittys. I have two sisters. We go to Sunday School every Sunday. My mother is my teacher. I want to answer Marie Louise Walsh's question: Samson was the strongest man. Please don't put my letter in the waste basket as I want to surprise my father.

Your new friend,
George B. Cathey.

Loray, N. C.

ANSWERS A QUESTION.

Dear Standard:

This is my second letter to you. I take music. My teacher's name is Mrs. J. M. Watts. I like her fine. I have not missed Sunday School in two years and two months. I have a sister and a brother. My brother is writing too. I want to answer Grady Byron Walsh's question. Methuselah was the oldest man. I hope my letter is not getting too long and hope it will be published.

Your little friend,
Nancy Cathey.

"A CATECHISM PARTY."

Dear Standard:

I have written to you once before, but I want to write again because I have some real news to tell you. I recited the Child's Catechism on January the 29th and have gotten my Testament. I am so proud of it. I am learning the "Shorter Catechism" now; already know forty questions. I am going to try to get my Bible by the 14th of June, for I will be nine years old then. My Aunt Alice teaches me and she grades me one hundred on every page that I learn perfectly. Aunt Alice is going to give a "Catechism Party" Saturday before the fourth Sunday in this month. I am so glad that I learned mine in time to go. I wonder how many of the little girls and boys like to hunt for eggs! I do better than most anything. I found forty eggs today. One new nest had sixteen in it. We have eleven little chickens that came off today. I have one little white hen all my own. Her name is Sally, and I call her my missionary hen, because I give a tenth of what I make by selling her eggs to missions. I hope she will have some little chickens this summer. I guess my letter is long enough, so I will say goodbye. I wrote it myself and hope you can read it. This carries lots of love to you and all the little girls and boys.

Your little friend,
Alice Hart Turner.

Garner, N. C.

HER FIRST LETTER.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl seven years old. I am in the second grade at school. My teacher is Miss Bessie Alderman. My first teacher was Cousin Mildred Moore. She died in February. I miss her very much. My Sunday School teacher is Mrs. D. B. Johnson. I like to go to Sunday School. This is my first letter, so I will close.

Your friend,
Mary Harriet Black.

A FIRST OF APRIL FISH.

Once upon a time a little boy went fishing on the first day of April. He went because his big brothers were kind enough to allow him to go with them. They even let him take a fishing pole and promised to bait his hook for him if only he would be as still as a mouse and not talk louder than a whisper when they reached the river.

"Please do not tease little George," mother said to the two big boys when the little fellow ran on ahead. "Don't try any unkind April-fool jokes on him."

"All right," promised the big brothers. "We won't try to fool him until we are home again."

Thus it happened that little George forgot that that Saturday was the day for jokes as he trudged happily along, watching the birds and the squirrels.

When the boys reached the river, they baited their hooks and sat down to fish.

"Remember that you mustn't talk," Brother Frank said to little George.

"If you do, the fish will know we are here and go away," added Brother Tom.

"Can I say something when I catch a fish?" inquired little George.

"O, yes; you must tell us if you get a bite," Frank replied as he winked at Tom.

Tom straightway winked back. The big brothers thought their little brother was too small to catch a fish.

Sitting in a row on the river bank, the boys held their poles and waited and waited. There they sat and fished and fished, while the wind sang in the tree tops and crows answered the call of blue jays.

Little George smiled at his brothers; but not a word did he say as the three hooks went trailing through the water, waiting, waiting for a bite. At last little George grew so tired of sitting still that he whispered to his brothers: "Fishing isn't much fun, after all."

Just then something tugged at little George's line. It tugged and tugged so hard that the boy almost lost his pole. "O, I have caught a fish! I have caught a fish! Help! Help!" called little George.

"Sure enough, he has caught a fish, and it must be a big one" exclaimed Frank, running to help George.

"Hang on to him! Hang on to him!" called Tom. "We'll be there to help you land him as soon as we get our lines out of the water!"

"He is a big fish! He is a big fish!" exclaimed little George as he pulled and pulled until out of the water popped something that was not a fish. It was a long, round, wriggling body, squirming and twisting and scaring little George so that he almost dropped his pole.

"O, what is it? What is it?" he called.

"It is an April fool," answered Frank as he landed the strange creature. "It won't hurt you, Georgie. You have caught an eel, a long old eel."

"I wish I hadn't," wailed the little brother, almost crying.

"April fool! April fool!" shouted Tom. "The river played an April fool joke on Georgie!"

"It played one on you, too, because it didn't let you catch anything," said little Georgie, wiping his eyes and walking slowly around the eel outstretched on the bank.

"We were all April fooled," Frank insisted, "because, you see, we all thought it was a big fish."

For a long, long time the boys fished, but they caught nothing. Little Georgie played in the woods until it was time to go home. He didn't care to fish any more that day.

Then father and mother were April fooled, because they thought the boys were dragging a string a fish behind them and there it was, an eel!—Frances Margaret Fox, in Our Boys and Girls.

THE NICE THINGS.

It was Masie's first day at school, and she felt very small and strange. She had always been a shy little girl, choosing rather to stay with her mother than play among the other children of the neighborhood, and now, as she sat at her desk surrounded by unfamiliar faces, her eyes grew very bright, with a sort of moist brightness, and her cheeks were very red.

Under cover of her desk she squeezed her handkerchief into a hard little ball—she was almost sure she was going to cry.

Outside, the sun was dancing about the grass and walks in long, bright streaks and all the leaves on the great tree by the window just at her hand seemed to be nodding at her and whispering, "Come out and play! come out and play!"

She swallowed a little harder, and rolled her handkerchief a little tighter. "Oh, why did one have to go to school!"

Then, just as the tears were about to fall, a small brown bird perched suddenly on the tip of a low bough and dipping his little head this way and that began to sing, and as he sang Maisie suddenly remembered how she and her own yellow canary had been singing together yesterday when her mother came in and told her she was to start to school on the morrow. "And remember, dear," she had said, "that if you feel lonely and strange the best thing you can do is to look about and see how many nice and joyful things you can find, and the very first moment you get a chance try to do something loving and kind."

Maisie, now, sat very still and straight. Yes—there was the bird for one thing; and tree. Then, timidly, she glanced about the room.

What a pretty girl sat next her! She caught her breath a little—she'd like her, if only she knew her, she was sure; and as if in answer to her thought the other girl turned and their eyes met, and—"why," thought Maisie, "what a lovely smile!"

Another girl just beyond, with freckles and a torn apron, looked as shy and uncomfortable as Masie had felt only a moment before, and as Maisie caught her eye she remembered yet again her mother's words. Touching the tips of her fingers very lightly she tossed her a kiss, and something sweet and warm drove the very last thought of tears away as she saw a happy smile come into the other girl's face.

A moment later the teacher came down the aisle. "Getting acquainted?" she asked kindly; and suddenly Maisie smiled almost as brightly as the sun outside. Why—how many nice things there were! Shaking out her handkerchief she put it in her pocket. Cry? not she! "I like school!" she whispered softly, and the little brown bird seemed fairly to dance on the swaying bough as he sent out the last clear note of his song.—The Child's Gem.

and of Union Seminary, and twice a Commissioner to the General Assembly. Few lives, among the elders of our Synod, have been fuller or more useful.

He was active almost to the end of his life. His fatal illness lasted only a few weeks. He suffered intensely, but bore his pain with exemplary patience and resignation.

The end came peacefully on March 3, when his weary and waiting soul was gently released from the infirm and suffering body, and passed into the glorious presence of his Divine Lord and Redeemer, to behold His beauty, and to be with those he had loved long since and lost a while.

"Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace."

It is not death to die—

To leave this weary road,
And 'midst the brotherhood on high
To be at home with God.

IN MEMORIAM.

Alpheus H. McLeod.

Died in Charlotte, N. C., October 15, 1918, aged 48 years.

Alpheus H. McLeod, a deacon in the Lumberton Presbyterian Church, passed to his reward on October 15, 1918, a victim of the dread disease, influenza.

Mr. McLeod had been laid aside for some months by sickness, but was thought to be improving in health; and had gone to Charlotte for treatment, and while there contracted the disease which caused his death.

Mr. McLeod was a tower of strength in the church at this place; he was a genial soul and had a cheery word at all times and for everyone. His place will be hard to fill; he took a delight in the Sabbath School, and it was his joy to attend the mid-week prayer meetings and the Sabbath services of the sanctuary. He was generous with his substance and was always ready to contribute largely of his means to the service of the church at home, and to all the benevolent causes. He was also a cheerful, good and ready helper in every good cause.

It was a great shock to the whole community here when the report of his death reached us.

He was the son of Alexander H. McLeod, Sr., who was for many years a highly respected elder of this church.

He has left to mourn his departure, a widow and six children (the eldest of whom is now a student at the State University, at Chapel Hill), two brothers, Alexander H. McLeod, Jr., and George B. McLeod, a host of friends and the whole church at this place.

Mr. McLeod was a fine Christian gentleman, a good husband and father; a very helpful member of the church, a worthy citizen, and a splendid neighbor. We are fully persuaded that he has gone to be with Jesus, which is far better.

"We do not sigh when golden skies have donned

The purple shadows and the gray of night,

Because we know the morning lies beyond,

And we must wait a little for the light.

"So when grown weary with the care and strife,

Our loved ones find in sleep the rest they crave

We would not weep, but learn to count this life

A prelude to the one beyond the grave."

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Sarah E. Smith.

On Saturday afternoon, March 8, at 3:30 o'clock, Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Smith passed quietly away at her home in Grays Creek. Although she had been in declining health for several months, her death was a great shock to her loved ones.

Mrs. Smith was a daughter of the late Thomas and Ann Eliza Marsh, of Grays Creek. She was born November 9, 1847, and on October 13, 1869, was united in marriage to Mr. John L. Smith, who preceded her to the grave 21 years ago.

She was the mother of nine children, six of whom survive. She was a consistent member of Sherwood Presbyterian Church, and was always interested in Sunday School and church work. Her pastors always found a hearty welcome in her home. And her children rise up and call her blessed.

All that loving hands and tender hearts could do was done, but God in His infinite wisdom knew best.

Truly there is a place vacant in the home which can never be filled. But let us bow ourselves in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well.

"Not now, but in the coming years,
It may be in the better land,
We'll read the meaning of our tears.
And there sometime we'll understand"

We feel it can be truly said of her:
None knew her but to love her.
None named her but to praise.

On Monday, at 11:30 o'clock, among a large concourse of relatives and friends, she was laid to rest in the family cemetery, near her home. The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. D. L. Jones.

The floral offerings were beautiful.
A Friend.

Story and Incident

Fighting Fred.

One day a drunken cowboy boarded a train on the Santa Fe line. He at once reclined upon the floor of the coach and began to shoot holes in the ceiling. The conductor was a little man, only five feet and five inches tall, and weighing less than one hundred and twenty pounds, but he kicked the revolver out of the bad man's hand and yanked him along the aisle and threw him off the back platform.

Now the cowboy did not like the manner of his leaving, so he picked up a stone and hurled it through a window in the coach. The conductor stopped the train and pursued the miscreant, but the fugitive made good his escape. The delay made the train half an hour late when it pulled into the yards. The superintendent demanded an explanation, then advised:

"Funston, it was all right to throw him off, but what did you mean by chasing him?"

"I suppose I was mad," said Fred. "Wouldn't you be mad if a man threw a rock through your window?"

"Probably," the superintendent admitted; "but don't do it again."

Subsequently Funston left the railroad. A friend brought him an offer from the Agricultural Department to collect botanical specimens in the interior of Alaska, but he denied any knowledge of the subject further than "knowing a violet from a sunflower." However, he set to work to learn practical botany, and in 1892 he went to Alaska.

Funston spent the winter with some Indians. They went hunting and exploring almost every day. In the spring he returned to America with a vast store of highly comprehensive and valuable botanical material. This he could never have accomplished if he had not educated himself in the subject before going to the country which he termed "magnificent but lonely."

The insurrection of the Cubans against their Spanish masters attracted the botanist. He became an artillery officer. Temporarily with the Cuban cavalry he was shot four times in two battles, and was badly injured when his horse fell upon him.

He learned that fifty Cubans that had been fighting with the Spanish had been captured and were to be executed. He hobbled to headquarters and begged for their lives. When his request was denied he resigned his commission, though he had been in the thick of twenty-two battles. General Garcia provided him with a signed order for his transportation to the United States.

When war was declared upon Spain the little man tried to raise a regiment of rough riders, but he did not succeed. Although he was soon offered a place on the staff of General Miles, he chose rather to accept command of the Twentieth Kansas Regiment. It did not get to Cuba, but the War Department afterward sent it to the Philippines.

In the fighting at Malolos he found himself and his command on one side of a river, while a native force on the other side was in a good position and worrying the Kansas men with a steady fire. Funston called for volunteers who could swim. He asked twenty to follow him as he held his revolver above the water and swam the stream. The men put their guns on logs and pushed them across as they swam. Reaching the other side they charged the enemy and captured eighty.

Funston's campaign in the Philippines is dotted with such incidents. The guerilla warfare is not as impressive as Gettysburg, but it was filled with danger and constant risk. To Funston and his brave boys, acts of heroism were weekly and sometimes daily occurrences.

The little man from the sunflower state virtually ended the war when he and a force of native soldiers by a ruse captured Aguinaldo, the head of the insurrection. It was probably the most brilliant accomplishment in the whole of his military career.

A note-carrier for Aguinaldo had been captured. He gave the location of his chief, and said it would be impossible for American troops to get within fifty miles of him without his moving. It was arranged that the loyal natives in ragged clothes should simulate a body of insurrectionists who had surprised and captured five Americans. It was necessary for these native troops to learn a new dialect.

The gunboat Vicksburg landed the force on a coast one hundred and ten miles from Aguinaldo's headquarters. They marched through mud and mire for many days. They sent forged letters to the Philippine chief, and thus succeeded in reaching his residence. Soon he was told, "You are a prisoner of the Americans," and he said, "Is this not some joke?" It was not.

A few days later General MacArthur, at Manila, sent for Funston. As the sturdy little fighter entered, he said very seriously:

"Well, Funston, they do not seem to have thought much in Washington of your performance. I am afraid you have got into trouble."

Funston looked at the cablegram that MacArthur handed him. It was an appointment as brigadier-general.—Carl Schurz Lowden, in Youth's World.

Mitchell College.

Though Mitchell College has had her share of ups and downs, the school year has been one of encouragement and success.

When the college opened in September every room was filled, and hope was high that there might be an overflow. The influenza came on, and dissipated our dreams. It scared us mightily, but left us unscarred. Not a one of the boarding students had the disease. It was rumored abroad that Mitchell was the only immune spot anywhere, and had we a mind, we might have made it a sort of city of refuge against the plague.

The quarantine cut off the sinews of local support, and took from us about half the teaching force. The doors of the college were closed for about a month, and at the reopening there was an overflow of local patronage.

The total attendance for the year will go well over two hundred, a record possibly unsurpassed in the history of the institution.

Tuesday evening, March 18, Dr. T. W. Lingle greatly delighted a large audience with a recital of his thrilling experiences before Verdun. The Davidson College Glee Club came to Mitchell the last of March, and gave a concert that was highly enjoyable.

The college will send out this year four full graduates, and twenty department graduates.

The Students' Recital, so keenly looked forward to by music lovers, will be given Friday evening, May 9. Rev. Bunyan McLeod, Ph.D., of the Westminster Church, Charlotte, will deliver the commencement sermon in the First Presbyterian Church, Statesville, on Sunday morning, May 11, and in the evening he will preach the sermon before the Y. W. C. A., in Shearer Hall. Dr. McLeod is a preacher of attractiveness and power. The people of Statesville will hear him gladly.

Monday afternoon the annual Alumnae Reception will be held. This reception is of special interest, being in honor of the first graduating class of the institution.

The graduating exercises, the award of diplomas, certificates and medals will take place Monday evening, May 11. Dr. D. W. Daniel, Professor of English, Clemson College, S. C., will make the address to the graduates. Dr. Daniel is widely known, and is very popular as a commencement speaker. The college is fortunate in securing him for this occasion.

Miscellaneous

HOW IT HAPPENED.

When the superintendent of the Sabbath School came with twelve boys from the primary room to this teacher, she refused to take them. Finally she said, "I will take them." Twelve boys with a thousand muscles to wiggle and not one to keep still. She made each one responsible for one thing in class. She formed them into a club, which they named "Loyal Brothers." Their motto was, "Try, Try Again." Their work—gathering waste or surplus Sabbath School material (in a year they had sent five bundles to the Philippines). They met once a month, had their own president, secretary, treasurer, and Lookout Committee. They would have a business meeting, games, light refreshments, and then stories; how they loved the stories! This teacher worked as never before; it was the most difficult work she had ever tried to do. Sometimes she would say to herself, "This is my last Sabbath; I do not have to do this." Then one boy would say to her, "May I sit with you in church this morning?" or another say, "Grandfather and I are making you a dandy birdhouse." No, she loved them too much; she could not give them up. The most impossible one she made secretary of the class and had no more trouble with him. He rose to the dignity of his office. At a club meeting she said, "Is your class all you want it to be?" "Oh, no," they said. "Why, what is wrong?" "We do not behave." "Then, why not appoint two of you to make a set of rules for behaviour, you adopt them; it is your class, you know; I am only the teacher." They agreed to this, and at the next meeting the rules were ready; twelve of them, as follows:

1. No chewing gum allowed.
2. No throwing paper wads or anything else.
3. No talking allowed during prayer.
4. Do not talk while any of the teachers are talking.
5. Pay attention to what the teachers are saying.
6. Read your Bible daily.
7. Keep your Work Book fixed up each week.
8. Never run out of Sabbath School unless it is necessary.
9. Go to church.
10. Do what your teacher tells you to do.
11. Come to the meetings if you can.
12. Bring your Bible and Work Book every Sabbath.

After much halting and squirming they were adopted, one by one. Then their work was easier—we began to have self-government. This teacher no longer sat in sackcloth and ashes during the church services, because she was so far from her ideals.—Pennsylvania Herald.

A LESSON FROM THE CHINESE

Two Chinamen have recently opened a laundry on a neighboring street not far from my home, and hung out their sign. What strange letters theirs are, and what a curious language they speak! But what good-natured and industrious fellows they are! They have already displayed their good intentions by joining the Chinese Sunday School, and they seem to be anxious to learn our ways and language.

Doubtless few would care to take lessons in the Chinese language and customs, yet there is much to be learned from them, nevertheless. For example, here is a suggestion from their great philosopher Confucius, who wrote the following proverb so long, long ago that no one knows just when:

Hearing of a philosopher, the King of Tsi desired that he should be brought before him, that he might hear his teachings. "What should one do to a friend who has badly administered the affairs entrusted to him?" said he.

"Break with him," said the king.

"And to a magistrate who does not perform his duties properly?"

"Remove him from office," said the king.

"And if provinces are badly governed, what should be done with the king?"

The king, pretending not to understand him, looked to the right and to the left, and spoke of other things.

How true to life, though so very ancient! How ready we all of us are to criticise others, taking little thought of our own shortcomings! Surely we should all strive to exercise the same tolerance and fairness and charity in our judgments of others which we expect them to display in judging us.—Banner.

SERIES V-A.

Treasury Certificates of Indebtedness of Series V-A mature May 6, 1919. In view of the determination to open the Victory Liberty Loan campaign April 21, it is apparent that this issue must be refunded before the proceeds of the loan can reach the treasury. Accordingly, the Secretary of the Treasury has authorized the Federal Reserve Banks, until further notice, to redeem, in cash before maturity at par and accrued interest to date of redemption, Treasury Certificates of Indebtedness of Series V-A, dated December 5, 1918, at the holder's option, the right being reserved, however, to make such redemption only after ten days' notice, from the holder to the Federal Reserve Bank of the district, of the intention to exercise such option.

For the present and until we are otherwise instructed by the Treasury Department, all Certificates of Series V-A will be redeemed at face value, with accrued interest to the day of receipt by this bank. In case any certificates are received by us after the receipt from the Treasury Department of an order to require ten days' notice from the holder, the application for redemption will be taken as notice of the desire for redemption, and the actual redemption will be made ten days thereafter, with accrued interest to the day of redemption. In every case, prompt notice of the holding of an application for redemption, will be given to the sender.

THE HIGH COST OF CHANGING EMPLOYES.

"It costs me a thousand dollars every time I employ a new traveling salesman," said a manufacturer to the writer some time ago. "Before he learns the ropes and begins to be efficient, no matter how much native talent he may have for the position, he has cost me a thousand dollars in profits on lost sales." Experts have made calculations, based on thousands of cases, which show that even substituting one ordinary unskilled worker for another in a factory costs between forty-five and fifty dollars for each case; while in the instance of fairly skilled workers, a shift costs between two hundred and two hundred and twenty-five dollars. The greater the skill, the greater the expense.

The reason employers of labor are not more concerned about this problem is that heretofore figures on the subject have been almost impossible to obtain. These losses do not appear anywhere in a trial balance. They are reflected only in lost profits, which is a phase of business of which most people are woefully ignorant. In these efficient days, however, they can no longer be ignored. Every business man should know, not merely what profits his business is making, but what profits it is possible for him to make, based on the size of his potential market, and the possible productive capacity of his plant. And the man who studies his problems in this scientific, sensible fashion, will find that maintaining the health of his working force at its maximum is one of the most important and earliest of tasks which he must face.—From "Bigger Business from Better Health, by O. J. Hamilton and Alan Denby, in Physical Culture.

YOU CAN SAVE MONEY IN BUYING A PIANO

Write for a copy of the Presbyterian Standard Piano Club's catalogue of Pianos and Player-Pianos. It will explain how the Club has already saved its members hundreds of thousands of dollars, and how it provides such an easy plan of payment and instruments of such excellent quality that every member of the Club is "perfectly delighted."

The Club insures perfect satisfaction to every member, so that dissatisfaction is impossible. Everybody must be pleased. Then, too, the Club price is so much lower than you would have to pay for a good piano if you were to purchase it independently. By placing your order through the Club of one hundred buyers you are responsible only for your own purchase yet you get the benefit of the big saving in price which results from the whole transaction.

You will never know how easy it is to buy a new piano until you have investigated the Club's proposition. We have a catalogue for you, write for it today. Address the Managers, Ludden & Bates, Standard Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.

THE ART OF LIVING LONG.

Thomas A. Edison is one of the many famous Americans whose birthday falls in February, and he has just celebrated his 72d anniversary. If he follows the example of some of his ancestors he may be spared to see many returns of the day.

His great-grandfather lived according to certain rules of diet laid down by Cornaro, an Italian nobleman, whose book on "The Art of Living Long," he once happened to read, and reached the age of 102 years. His grandfather followed the same rules and lived to be 103 years old. His father and all his six uncles, by abstemious living, lived to be more than 90 years of age each, and when his father passed away at 94 it was without apparent illness.

A copy of Cornaro's book is before us as we write. Born in Venice in 1464, he died in Padua in 1566. At the age of 83 he wrote the first of four discourses which constitute his famous treatise, "The Temperate Life," better known as "The Art of Living Long." He tells how, with a constitution naturally weak and apparently ruined at 40, he had enjoyed 40 years of perfect health. He says, "I never knew the world was beautiful until I reached old age." In his quaint way he remarks: "At my present age of 83 I have been able to compose a delightful comedy full of innocent mirth and pleasant sayings. Now, if that good old man, a Greek and a poet (Sophocles) was so highly commended for having written a tragedy at the age of 73, and was, by reason of this deed, regarded as vigorous and sound-minded, although tragedy is a sad and melancholy form of poetry, why should I be esteemed less fortunate, or less hale than he, when I have, at an age greater than his by ten years, written a comedy which, as everybody knows, is a cheerful and witty kind of composition."

This discourse was followed by three others, one written at the age of 86, one at 91, and the last at 95. At 91 he writes: "All my senses are in perfect condition, as are also my memory, my heart and my mind, and I write eight hours a day with my own hand." At the age of 95, having lost a considerable portion of his income through misfortunes befallen his grandchildren, his interest in life was so keen that he could cheerfully write that he had found a sure way of repairing that loss by means of true and scientific farming.

Peacefully and without pain he died in Padua in the 103d year of his age. His wife lived to about the same age and her end was equally happy.

In his book he shows that men reap what they sow and pictures the reward to be reaped in old age from a life spent in conformity with reason and nature. He accustomed himself to the habit of never fully satisfying his appetite, either with eating or drinking, always leaving the table well able to take more, and by finding out what foods agreed with his stomach and sticking to them. He was also careful to avoid extreme heat and cold, never allowed his accustomed sleep and rest to be interfered with, and avoided poorly ventilated places.

Simple and easy rules, surely, to follow, but how few of us are willing to follow them? Many of us feel like the old woman, who, being asked what had given her the most pleasure throughout her life, replied, without the least hesitation, "My vittles."

A famous Glasgow divine once shocked his congregation by informing them from the pulpit that many of them "were digging their graves with their teeth."

This truth could be proclaimed also in America, and in these days of the high cost of living it might be both healthful and profitable for us to follow the advice of the wise old Venetian.—Presbyterian Banner.

I heard Him call,
"Come, follow"—that was all.
My gold grew dim
My heart went after Him.
I rose and followed—that was all.
Who would not follow
If he heard Him call? —Selected.

The great king of Sweden, Gustavus Adolphus, was warned not to risk his life in battle. He answered, as an answer which was to silence all objections, "God the Almighty liveth."—Selected.

THE MAN WHO KILLED "JOHN BARLEYCORN."

Morris Sheppard, the junior senator from Texas, has become the accepted leader of the prohibitionists of the country, and he has crowned a sixteen year fight in Congress by starting the movement that put the United States on a completely dry basis.

The accepted idea of temperance leader, which has been fostered by the comic papers and the stage is a pious-looking, bald-headed individual with a white tie and a saintly air. Sheppard does not fit the picture in any particular.

He is a sturdy man of 43 years, with hair just showing a touch of gray, keen for a game of golf when he can find the time, father of a growing family of youngsters, a strong believer in the athletic development of the American youth. He has tackled the liquor question because he early came to believe that it was undermining not only the American boy, but the nation. In all his long fight for prohibition, it is not on record that anyone has questioned the absolute honesty and sincerity of Sheppard in the cause he represents.—Bassett Blakley, in The New Success.

DON, ONE OF OUR HEROES.

Our readers will surely be interested in the record of one of the heroes of the war. True, he is only a dog, but of all the "distinguished for service" mascots this courageous collie bears the honor of being the only dog officially commended by his commander for bravery. A "truly American" dog, he has been "over the top" with the 106th Brooklyn Infantry, receiving in actual battle two wounds. This entitles Don to wound stripes and a service stripe, which he proudly wore when he stepped off the Leviathan at the dock at Hoboken, N. J., and was greeted by the admiring crowds gathered to receive our returning heroes. The following is his service record:

Official Citation of a Dog.

Name—Don.

Rank—Mascot.

Date of Enlistment—May 17, 1917.

Allotment—None.

Insurance—None.

Emergency Address—Company B, 106th Infantry.

Remarks—Wounded September 2, 1918, Vierstradt Ridge, machine gun bullet, left foreleg. Wounded September 29, 1918, Hindenburg line, shrapnel, neck.

Awol—June 20 to 22, 1918.

Note—Fearless and true and always faithful to his comrades, Don, Company B, 106th Infantry's famous mascot, deserves special mention and with full consent of the entire company this note is written on his service record:

Joined B Company of the Twenty-third Regiment while camped at Yorktown, N. Y., and continued a member of this company at Camp Wadsworth and throughout all engagements overseas. Twice wounded, both times in battles, he is entitled to wear two wound stripes, also a service stripe for his six months' overseas service. Being always a good mascot and a neat one, he is also entitled to wear the division insignia.

It is requested that Don be given a conspicuous position in the line of march when the regiment parades for the New Yorkers and Brooklynites.

U. S. S. Leviathan, March 4, 1919.

The C. O. of Company B, 106th U. S. Infantry, has authorized to place Don in any position, either in front or rear of the company, as he may choose during any parade of the regiment in the United States.

Franklin W. Ward,

Colonel 106th U. S. Infantry.

—N. Y. Advocate.

CHILDREN OF MINISTERS LEADERS IN LIFE

It is the children of ministers more than any other class who in England and America have been leaders in art, science and literature. More than any others are they the authors, teachers, college professors, journalists and professional men of note. Nor are their names wanting among successful men in business and politics; witness Woodrow Wilson, the present President of the United States.

A few months ago an article appeared in The Popular Science Monthly containing the following statements: "The English Dictionary of National Biography gives these figures: A comparison of eminent men (of England) shows 1,270 to be the sons of clergymen, 510 the sons of lawyers, 350 the sons of doctors; one and a half times as many as of the former as of both the latter." Names of some of these were Ben Jonson, Cowper, Goldsmith, Tennyson, Coleridge, Addison, Keats, Kingsley and Matthew Arnold. Daughters of clergymen were represented by Jane Austen, the Bronte sisters, Mrs. Gaskell and Lucas Malet (the daughter of Charles Kingsley).

In America, the "Who's Who" in a list of something less than 12,000 showed 898 to be the sons of clergymen. If the proportion had been the same as for the other professions and callings, there should have been about fifty, but there were eighteen times that number. These included Justice Brewer, Senator Doliver, Justice Hughes, Levi P. Morton, and Presidents Faunce of Brown University, James of Illinois, Wright of Clark, and Taylor of Vassar. Among famous professors are Lounsbury of Yale, James of Harvard and Sloane of Columbia. Others were the railroad king, Edward H. Harriman; W. H. Maxwell, superintendent of schools in New York City; Bishop Potter, Henry James, Governors Bates of Massachusetts and Kellogg of Louisiana, David I. Hill of the Department of State, Richard Watson Gilder, Lyman Abbott, William Hayes Ward; among the daughters are Catherine and Harriet Beecher, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Jeanette Gilder and Marshall Saunders.

The hall of fame at Washington has fifty-seven American names. Ten of these, almost a fifth, belong to the families of clergymen. They are Agassiz, Beecher, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Henry Clay, Jonathan Edwards, Emerson, Lowell, Morse, Bancroft and Holmes.—The Continent.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities, may have a copy of his money-saving shoe book for the asking.

"I DO NOT LIKE TO PROMISE."

"What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward me? I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all His people."—Ps. 116:12, 13.

In the course of my pastoral visitation I have met not a few of our people who have declined, or at least have objected to, "signing the enlistment card, on the ground that they "do not believe in making promises." To all such I would like to say what I have said personally to a few of the above-mentioned members of our church.

You say that you do not believe in making promises. Do you mean that you do not believe in making promises to God and to His church? What have you to say about God's "great and exceeding promises to you?" Would you like God to withdraw, withhold or refuse to perform His promises to you? There are many thousands of such promises recorded in the Bible, covering every need, condition or circumstance of your life, from the forgiveness of your sins, the keeping you from falling during your life in this world of sin and temptation, to the receiving of yourself into heaven and "presenting you faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy" (Jude 24). Of Abraham it is said that he "staggered not at the promises of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that what he had promised he was able also to perform." (Rom. 4:20-21). Would you like or dare you say to God: "I do not believe in making promises; I prefer to leave all matters between thee and me without promise?"

"Oh, that is different," was replied.

In other words, you want God to promise everything to you and keep His promises with you; but you do not want to promise anything to God. How can you justify such an attitude? Let me put this case to you. When you rented your house, did you say to your landlord, I like this house and will take it, but as I do not believe in making promises, we will just leave the matter of paying rent to my conscience, both as to amount of rent to be paid and time of payment! You know perfectly well that if you were to attempt to work your non-promising principles upon your landlord and other men with whom you have business dealings, you would soon find yourself upon the street.

I counsel you to do as David did when he said: "I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all His people."

"Lord Jesus, I have promised to serve Thee to the end;
Be Thou forever near me, my Master and my Friend,
I shall not fear the battle, if Thou art by my side;
Nor wander from the pathway, if Thou wilt be my Guide.

"O Jesus, Thou hast promised, to all who follow Thee,
That where thou art in glory, there shall thy servant be;
And, Jesus, I have promised to serve Thee to the end;
O give me grace to follow, my Master and my Friend."
—By Rev. George F. Pentecost, in The Presbyterian.

The Art of Preaching

A HISTORY OF PREACHING

Dargan, Edwin Charles, D.D., LL.D. This monumental record of the great Christian preachers from the Apostolic Fathers down to the end of the 19th century is very much more than a history. The unusual value of the book is in the author's ability to fire the imagination of the minister who reads it, and to teach him how to employ in his work today the enthusiasms and methods of the master preachers of the ages. In two volumes. Vol. I. Apostolic Fathers to the Great Reformers. A. D. 70 to 1572. Vol. II. Close of the Reformation to End of the 19th Century, 1572-1900. 8vo. Cloth. Each, $2.50

PREPARING TO PREACH

Breed, Prof. David R. An indispensable guide book for the Christian minister, characterized by originality and practical value, and containing a wealth of suggestions not found in any other similar book. Some of the chapter titles are: "The Attack Upon the Text," "Pulpit Manners," "Originality," "Homiletical Maxims." Seven general kinds of sermons are described and analyzed. This great aid to a successful pulpit delivery should be in the library of every student and preacher. 8vo. Cloth. Net, $2.00

ON THE PREPARATION AND DELIVERY OF SERMONS

Broadus, John A., D.D., LL.D. A new and revised edition of a book long recognized as a leader in its class. Its remarkable success is eloquent proof of its practical value. "One of the books which do not grow old with time, but are as fresh and suggestive as ever."—Advance. 8vo. Cloth. Net, $1.75

THE PREACHER: His Life and Work

Jowett, J. H., D.D. The inimitable power and spiritual force of this great preacher-author overflow from every page. Both the student in the seminary and the minister in his study will find his mind and heart kindled to new enthusiasm for his high calling by reading this masterly book. 12mo. Cloth. Net, $1.25

THE PREACHER AND HIS MODELS

Stalker, James, M.A., D.D. Dr. Stalker's lectures are notable for their depth of thought, combined with simplicity and clarity of expression. His viewpoint is fresh and original. The preacher will find rare stimulus and inspiration in the study of this volume. Its influence on his preaching will be lasting and immensely beneficial. 12mo. Cloth. Net, $1.25

BARIUM ROCK WATER RELIEVES WEAK AND NERVOUS PEOPLE.

Barium Rock Water is being prescribed by many physicians in the treatment of nervous debility and as a tonic and flesh-builder. They also recommend it in cases of indigestion, dyspepsia, rheumatism, gout, eczema and diseases arising from uric acid poisoning and for disorders of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

Mr. J. W. McCoy, of Charlotte, N. C., writes: "I had a violent case of typhoid fever and for three years was a nervous wreck. I was totally unfit for any kind of business. I suffered continually from my stomach. My improvement began with the use of Barium Rock Water and I was entirely cured."

If you are weak and nervous, if you suffer from melancholia, hysteria or are afflicted with any of the above diseases, send $2.00 for ten gallons. If it fails to relieve your case, we will refund you $2.00. It is understood that the empty demijohns are to be returned prepaid. Address Barium Springs Co., Box E-21, Barium Springs, N. C.

LETTERS FROM RHEUMATICS

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter, but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of Rheumatism you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring. This water overcomes many diseases, including Indigestion, Gout, Uric Acid Poisoning and Liver and Kidney diseases, but no patrons of the Springs are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their Rheumatism. Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the Management:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver and Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of Stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began using Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time I was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The Water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints on her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

"ONLY A WOMAN'S HAIR."

Among the personal effects of Jonathan Swift, the famous dean of St. Patrick's, was found, after his death, a small packet briefly inscribed, "Only a woman's hair." That inscription has been variously interpreted. Critics have condemned it as heartless, cynical, cruelly disparaging. By others it has been regarded as being charged with tenderness, implying an underlying pathos that might not be expressed in words. As almost everybody knows, the hair was that of Esther Johnson — Swift's "Stella."

Long, beautiful hair is, and ever has been, universally admired. It may be an inheritance, but, often as not, it is the result of patient, systematic care. Be it one or the other, constant "grooming" is necessary to the preservation of its beauty. Not infrequently, beautiful hair is sacrificed to indolence. The initial important duty is to give it rest during the night, more especially if, in the daytime, it be drawn away from its natural direction and an unnatural strain put upon it. When taken down at night the hair should be disentangled with a comb, the teeth of which are wide apart, then divided and brushed out until it feels soft and looks glossy. The brush should be drawn gently over the scalp, and down through the entire length of the hair. Under no circumstances should an endeavor be made to comb out tangled locks by beginning at the top and dragging the comb through the hair.

Opinions differ as to how hair should be washed. If it be light and fluffy, showing that the oil-glands either are not well supplied or defective, the hair should be washed no oftener than the conditions of the scalp makes absolutely necessary. Soap, no matter how little is used, will still further deplete the small stock of oil in the glands. If, however, the hair be heavy and greasy to the touch, it should be shampooed once every two weeks, at least. After each abluion it should be carefully dried, otherwise a disagreeable, musty odor will result, while the hair will appear just as streaky and heavy after washing as before.

In washing hair naturally brittle, and possibly harsh also, ammonia and borax should be used only in small quantities, if not avoided altogether. Both are very drying in their effect, and ammonia, especially, will occasion premature grayness. There is no better shampoo than a raw egg rubbed thoroughly into the scalp. It contains a moderate amount of oil and phosphorus, which will nourish and soften dry hair. After using the egg shampoo copiously, a thorough rinsing should follow. Warm water and soap are needed. If there be any symptoms of approaching grayness, use sulphur soap.

Opinions also differ as to the advisability of frequently cutting the hair. The very finest head of hair I ever saw was that of a relative of my own. Its length was abnormal and so thick that to dress it was a serious difficulty, the weight refusing to be restrained by ordinary hair-pins. The ends were very occasionally clipped; it was only brushed to keep it clean, and retained its golden luster through all its owner's years. I have mentioned these facts only to indicate that some fortunate people have no need to resort to methods which others are obliged to employ, or de employ, out of fear of losing their greatest natural adornment.—Ex.

ATTACK ON THE SABBATH.

The usual attack on the Sabbath has materialized in the Pennsylvania Legislature and the friends of the Sabbath are again called on to defend this venerable and beneficent institution. Who the prime movers are in this attack is doubtful. The movie picture people say it is the Jews, and the Jews say it is the movies. The point of attack changes from time to time. Many years ago it was the barbers; to keep the barber shops open on Sabbath was declared to be a necessity. The barbers repudiated the claim. Then it was candy and cigars. These were necessities and could not be purchased on Saturday. The bottom dropped out of that plea when it was discovered that all such things could be bought on Saturday. Now it is the movies. It is always a plea for suffering humanity and it is always a fraudulent plea.—Banner.

TOO GOOD TO KEEP.

(John 3:16; Matt. 28:19; Rom. 10:14)

A Chinaman asked John Foster, the statesman, who once represented us in China: "What right have you Christians to come over here to China and talk with these people about your religion?" The diplomat replied: "The right to give others something that is too good to keep." If the qualities of our life's foundation are of the best material, we may give and give and give them to others, and the more we take from them for others, the stronger our own become. Such is the strange and beautiful paradox of the religion of Jesus Christ.

The Church's course cannot be stopped simply because difficulties are insuperable.—Bishop Ingle.

COUNTRY LIFE.

Let me live the years of my stay upon earth 'way out in the country, close to nature and to nature's God.

I want to feel the touch of the seasons as they come and go, making up the years.

I want to feel the chill of winter in my frame, not too severe, but enough to make the blood tingle.

I want to feel the gentle warmth of spring, as with her touch of magic, she wakens new life in things dead.

Lastly, I want to catch the cool breath of autumn coming in to fan away the heat and lethargy of summer.

I want to hear the cry of the whipporwill as the twilight settles o'er the hill and hollow.

Then, when old Jack Frost passes by, with his touch of white, I want to wander down the old rail fence and on to where the muscadines hang in rich profusion, and there for a long time feast and forget.

Yes, let me live out the years of my stay upon earth in the fullness of the country, and then, dying, let me rest in the quiet church yard near where father and mother sleep—where the sunbeams play in the summer, where snow drifts high in winter.—Ex.

VICTORY LIBERTY LOAN SUNDAY—MAY 4.

May 4 has been fixed as Victory Liberty Loan Sunday, it was official announced by the War Loan Organization, Richmond, Va. Lewis B. Franklin, Director of the War Loan Organization of the United States Treasury, stated in a telegram, received in Richmond, that the above date had been set to avoid any conflict with the Easter services of Sunday, April 20.

Coming just after the middle of the Victory Liberty Loan Campaign, it is hoped that this Sunday will be observed as a special day of thanksgiving for victory. Every minister in the Fifth Federal Reserve District will be asked to co-operate to this end. Ministerial unions will also be expected to participate. Sunday Schools and Bible classes will be requested to observe Victory Sunday, as the Easter season seems a fitting time for a day of rejoicing and thanksgiving.

"If a newspaper copies any item from another paper it should always give full credit to the paper from which it copies," says Dr. Talcott Williams, of the school of journalism of Columbia University, in the New York Tribune. "Evidently a certain young editor from Nola Chucky was a firm believer in that doctrine. He copied in his paper a poem beginning, 'Full fathoms five thy father lies,' and at the end of the poem put these words of credit: 'William Shakespeare, in the New Orleans States.'"—Youth's Companion.

In our account of the Winterman-Hull wedding in last week's issue our reporter intended to state that "after a brief wedding trip the newly married couple would make their home at the Old Manse," but through a typographical error, which escaped the proofreader, and which we regret exceedingly, "Old Manse" was made to read "Old Man's." Montes Parturiunt.

WE are thinking of the meeting in Philadelphia last winter of the representatives of nineteen denominations; of the much planned for, and much talked of World Conference on Faith and Order; of the mission of three bishops to interview the Pope; of the meetings of various committees to discuss plans of union; and last, but not least in point of interest, of the two days' conference recently held in Pittsburg in which brethren of the U. P. Church held forth on the advantages and disadvantages of union with the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. All of which indicates much restlessness of spirit, and much eager desire to have denominational relations different from what they are at present. Some would make a clean sweep and blot out all divisive lines and merge Protestantism and Roman Catholicism; some would leave only the broad line between Romanism and Protestantism; some would prefer to blot out only the lines that run through family groups; while some would find temporary rest if only they could blot out the line between two families in a group. It is strongly urged, clamorously urged that something must be done. From the amount of noise made, and the various sources from which it emanates one might easily get the impression that all members of all churches are fretting against the denominational barriers that hedge them in, that all are eager to break over the lines drawn by the fathers and find wider scope for the exercise of brotherly affection and fraternal co-operation. Such an impression would be wide of the mark. We know one church, the one to which we belong, in which there are thousands of office-bearers and tens of thousands of private members who are perfectly content with their present denominational status. They are happy under their own vine and fig tree, and wish there were none to molest them or make them afraid. Their love goes out unrestrained by boundary lines. They are ready to manifest this love to all their brethren in Christ, irrespective of denominational names and to co-operate with them heartily in the work of their common Lord.

We believe this is true in respect to the members of other churches. The sympathies of Christians are broadening, prejudices, born of ignorance, are melting away, and yet with few exceptions Christians love their own church the best, and if let alone would be perfectly content to serve the Lord all their days without seeking any change. The agitators are relatively few and must do much agitating before they can stir up any general desire for denominational readjustment.

Despite all the lamentations over divided households and the perpetual misinterpretation of the Saviour's prayer for the unity of His people there has been only one union among Presbyterians in Scotland in the last fifty years. That union has been far from encouraging. The growth of the United Free Church has been nothing like so rapid as the previous growth of the two churches before union. In this country there has been but one union among Presbyterians in the last fifty years. The result of this union has not been such as to add force to the pleas for further unions.

We almost felt jealous when we read the account of the Conference in Pittsburg, and noted how strongly and eloquently some of our old friends in the U. P. Church were advocating union with the Presbyterian Church North. Then we recalled how delightful the fellowship, a few years ago, between the committees of conference of that church and the Presbyterian Church South, how easily they agreed on a basis of union between the two churches, and with what pride and pleasure they presented this basis of union to their respective Assemblies. Then we further recalled how absolutely flat the failure when the basis of union was passed on to the Presbyteries. The montes parturiunt and not even nascetur ridiculus mus. Such will be the outcome of this recent conference. The U. P. Church is not going to play the part of Jonah to the Presbyterian whale.

The only thing in prospect is a Federated Union of the Presbyterian family. This seems to be growing in favor. How big it will grow remains to be seen.

Our Ministerial Supply.

Ever since our Saviour's day we have been uttering that prayer, Lord, send forth laborers into the harvest, and it is always a good sign of growth when such a dearth exists.

The old men die, and therefore there must be a steady flow of young men to take the vacant places, and then if the Church is growing, new fields are opened and men are needed to man them, thus requiring each year a steadily growing supply of ministers.

There is another fact that makes the demand greater. Churches are each year more insistent upon having young men, with the result that the older men are crowded out. Here and there you find an old man in charge of a church, but you rarely find an old man being called to a church. Once they drew the line at sixty years of age, but each generation lessens the age till soon forty will be the dead line.

To supply this growing demand for the callow youth, or as an old gentleman once expressed it, for "prentice preachers," every denomination is facing a growing deficit in its ministerial supply, and long and serious are the consultations how to meet it.

Formerly the preacher's family furnished a regular supply, but statistics show a falling off there, due to the gradual change in the relation of people and pastor. The time once was when the relation was almost that of the same family, each sharing their mutual joys and sorrows. Now it is too often different. The pastor has become the employe and the church the employer, and the whole relation is that of "quid pro quo."

Once the phrase in the call, "that you may be free from worldly cares and avocations," was taken literally, but now it is used in a figurative sense, and the stipend in these days of high prices barely keeps the wolf from the door.

The boys of that family are not apt to become enamored of the ministry, and naturally seek other employment.

Let the churches care for the preachers and once more make them members of the family, and then the manse will again be a source of supply for the depleted ranks.

But, as a contemporary expresses it, the problem is by no means one-sided. One side of the problem is to get men of the right kind, not only earnest, consecrated men, but also men of natural ability "apt to teach."

The other side is how to keep the wrong kind out, or what to do with them after they have secured an entrance into the ministry. There are many one-talent men in the ministry who have put to shame the ten-talent men, but their earnestness and consecration won, where their mental gifts would have failed. There is no problem about such men. We are thinking of the one-talent man, both mental and spiritual, who lacks tact, is awkward in manner and prosy and commonplace in sermonizing, who spends his ministry in being tossed from pillar to post. Such men deserve our sympathy and help, but what a blessing it would be to them if they were in some other place than the ministry, for Presbyteries cannot deal with congregations as they ought to be, but as they are. These congregations know what they want, and they are apt to demand it.

The Sabbath in Danger.

We have never believed the report that when our soldier boys return, they will demand a new religion. The truth is that all of this kind of talk has come from ministers who have never been loyal to the old truths, and who are anxious for the very change that they pretend to fear.

The soldiers we have met have changed in no respect from what they were before going away. Those that were bad are still bad, perhaps worse, while many of those who were nominal Christians seem deepened in their spiritual life, because they had stood upon the verge of eternity and faced an invisible world.

While this is true, at the same time there are some after effects of the war that we must expect, and, if possible, try to counteract.

During the war, upon the plea of necessity, our Sabbath laws were ignored, and those in high authority and low, made Sunday no more sacred than any other day. It was impossible for such things to be done without leaving evil effects to face us hereafter.

When young men, under the stress of war, spend nearly two years in work where the Sabbath is necessarily ignored, they will find it easier upon their return to do as they have done. Even those who have been trained to reverence the day will find their conscience dulled, and what would once have shocked them will now be a matter of indifference.

This tendency is seen in the movement in several States to tone down the Sabbath laws, so as to permit paid concerts, lectures and entertainments on the Sabbath. This movement is pressed by those who will be financially benefited, and by the foreign element in our cities who favor a continental Sabbath. When our boys come home from abroad, these anti-Sabbath men will no doubt find fertile soil for their theories, unless the pulpit begins a campaign of education, to show that the Sabbath is as much a moral law as that against murder.

The New Secretary of the American Bible Society.

For many years Dr. John Fox has been the senior secretary of the American Bible Society, and as such he has been brought into touch with the churches of every denomination. He has always stood for orthodoxy in the New York Presbytery, and for that reason also he has been honored by all who prize the faith once delivered unto the saints.

About a year ago he resigned, and Dr. W. I. Haver, his colleague, became senior secretary in his place.

Now for the first time in the history of this hundred-year-old society, the directors have chosen one who is not a minister, and their choice has fallen upon a young man of 36 years of age who has been serving in the army. Lieutenant Frank Mann is a young Virginian, a nephew of William H. Mann, only a few years ago governor of Virginia, a prominent Presbyterian elder.

Young Mann at the death of his father went to live with his uncle. He is a graduate of Hampden-Sidney College, a worker in the Y. M. C. A. and a worker in the City Charities of New York. He is superintendent of the mission school connected with the John Hall Memorial Church and a leader in work among the young people.

This recognition of the training of a Virginia home will be appreciated by those of us who believe that it is rarely surpassed anywhere, and the friends of the denominational college can point to this new secretary as a product of the small college.

Asking for Bread and Receiving a Stone.

Just now various cities in our country, both North and South, are bubbling over with patriotism, which is to find expression in the erection of monuments to returning soldiers or in public receptions, that will cost thousands of dollars. It seems that no account is taken of the wishes of the soldiers themselves, but assuming that it will be agreeable, these communities are contributing money for the display.

Whenever the soldier has a chance to speak he soon lets it be known that he needs money more than brass bands and oratory. We clip the following from the Philadelphia "Presbyterian":

"As a member of the American E. F. and one of Philadelphia's boys, I would like to give a suggestion as to the reception that Philadelphia is preparing for us fellows. That is all that the boys are talking about over here now, and they all seem to think the same thing, and that is, instead of spending so much on the parade and reception, why not divide it up and give each soldier something. Of course, there are quite a few wealthy men's sons with us that do not have to worry about their future, but there are thousands of us that are wondering what we are going to do for money while we are trying to get a good position."

Of course the public reception gives the city a wider advertisement, but we should consider the wishes of the men themselves.

Many of them gave up lucrative positions, which may not be open to them now. The meagre salary of $30.00 per month does not enable them to accumulate a bank account to draw upon while they are seeking work.

We believe that where a committee could raise $10,000 for a public reception, it could raise double that amount if it were announced that it was to be divided among these boys who went out from us across the sea. We know several well-to-do slackers in our city who might wish to quiet conscience by giving.

Death of Rev. C. A. Munroe, D. D.

This beloved and useful minister of the Gospel quietly fell asleep at Davidson College, on Tuesday, April 11, at 6:00 a. m.

Dr. Munroe was born in Troy, N. C., October 11, 1844. He was a graduate of Davidson College, and of Union Theological Seminary, class of 1874. He was licensed by Fayetteville Presbytery, April 15, 1876, and ordained by the Presbytery of Mississippi, April 15, 1877. He was Stated Supply of the Lumberton and Rockingham, N. C., Churches for one year. From 1876-'82 he was pastor at Crystal Springs, Miss., and in 1882 he became evangelist of Concord Presbytery for one year. Then he went to Huntington, W. Va., where he remained as Stated Supply and pastor-elect from 1883-'85. He was pastor of Lenoir and Hickory Churches from 1885-'91, and then he became the pastor of Lenoir Church from 1891-'03. In 1903 he became evangelist of Concord Presbytery, which position he held till forced to retire by failing health. He moved to Davidson College, where he died.

Dr. Munroe came of a family of preachers, and from a home where family religion was impressed upon the young. His work in the pastorate has stood the test of time and is written in the renewed lives in the churches to which he ministered.

As the evangelist of Concord Presbytery he built up home fields with a rare judgment that is shown in the churches that grew under him. His personal consecration, his thirst for souls, his warm sympathetic heart, and his loyalty to friends made him a power in Presbytery and in the social circle.

The editor will miss his cheery greetings and his warm words of appreciation, and will always count it a privilege to have known such a man and to have won his approval.

Impressions of Mission Work in China

By Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D.D.

On Steamer Nearing Japan, February 28, 1919.
CANDOR compels me to confess that two days ago for the first time in my life I was seasick. What neither the Atlantic nor the Pacific with their mighty breadth and volume could accomplish, this little three days' strip of waters between Shanghai and Kobe did and did thoroughly. Never again will I smile superior upon my suffering fellow passengers. A few days ago a veteran missionary told me that he believed I had had at least a taste of about every experience of travel and wayside adventure to which missionaries are subject. I rise now to remark, and my words they are plain, that seasickness is the climax of them all.

On my last day in China I had the pleasure of meeting with the Joint Conference Committee of our two missions and of recommending to them a certain forward step in organization, requiring joint action, which in my judgment will complete and perfect our present missionary organization in China, and the need of which had been steadily growing upon me through all the thirteen station conferences it was my privilege to hold in that country. My recommendation after full discussion was endorsed by the Joint Committee and will come before the two missions at their annual meetings for final action.

In reviewing the four months spent in China my chief and deepest impression is that of the stupendous difficulty of the task that confronts our missionaries in that land. To the superficial observer and critic of mission work the progress of the Gospel in China, in view of the immense and long-continued outlay in men and money, seems amazingly slow. Compared with the fruitage of missionary effort in Africa and Korea it is slow. But to one who really understands the situation, the wonder is not the slowness, but the fact of any progress at all. And the remarkable progress that has been made is proof to him that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation.

The vast majority of Chinese men and women grow up from childhood in such an unbelievably complicated and steel-like network of laws, customs, and superstitions, religious, domestic, social, financial, that to break away requires an effort and involves a loss that most people in America have no conception of.

The worship of ancestors, to take one feature of the situation, is grounded in the most sacred and tender instincts of the human heart. To cease to make offerings to them leaves them to suffer and pine in the spirit world. Such conduct on the part of a son means bitter anguish to his parents, brings on him the anathema of the family and the clan, and makes enemies of all the spirits of his ancestors who in Chinese belief can and will injure him in his person, his family, his business.

For a merchant dependent on his business to become a Christian and close his store on Sunday, means certain beggary for himself and his family.

Many places have their own local and peculiar difficulties. For example at two important centers in care of one of our stations there has been no progress for some time. So the missionary and I had a long conference with the native minister who has general oversight of those points, a man of exceptional standing and ability, from whom we learned that the arrest of the work at the larger of the two points, a city of 50,000, is due to three facts: (1) The moneyed class, whose annual income is divided among the members of the clan on the annual ancestral worship day, have agreed that any member embracing Christianity is to be cut out and his portion divided among the others. (2) The large clerk and employe class are not permitted by their employers to become interested in the meetings, for the employers know that acceptance of Christianity will be followed by refusal to work on Sundays, which means dismissing a trained employe and breaking in a green one. (3) The soldier and police class have been forbidden by the higher authorities to become attendants on pain of dismissal.

The cessation of growth at the other point, a town of 5,000, where formerly there had been nightly preaching to crowded houses and where now it is hard to get people even to attend the services, we found to be due to the fact that three women in one family, who had believed and joined the church, shortly afterwards lost by death one after another the three male breadwinners of the family and were reduced to poverty, while a farmer who had begun to attend the preaching lost his only son. These circumstances were made the most of by the opposition, and the deaths were declared by the Buddhist priests to have been caused by Buddha's anger. The result was that great fear fell upon all and of the rest durst no man join himself unto them.

Another impression that has steadily deepened, through my conferences and talks with missionaries from Peking to Hangchow, is the groundlessness of the reports brought back to us by sanguine evangelistic world-travelers of great sections or classes of the Chinese people being on the eve of turning to Christianity. I have yet to find a place where there are signs of such wholesale transformation or a resident missionary who greets the statement with anything but a smile. Promiscuous audiences can be gathered by a little advertising to fill and overflow any auditorium. They will listen attentively to the message and from their native desire to be obliging sign cards without number. Much good is no doubt accomplished. But the follow-up work of the resident missionary proves how narrow is the basis for the large hopes and prophecies often uttered. Much smaller meetings, of carefully selected individuals, preceded and succeeded by earnest personal work, have proved far more permanently fruitful. My observation is that students of both mission and government schools are thoughtful listeners to a serious message, but for the best results there must usually be continued loving personal Christian contact and effort. True converts are not machine-made nor turned out in wholesale lots.

I deprecate also the continual use of the word, "crisis," in relation to missionary work in China. It is misleading. The impression it produces on American minds is largely a false one owing to the almost unrealizable difference in knowledge and attitude between the two countries. Not one person in ten in China can read. Moreover, the earthly-mindedness induced by centuries of Confucianism, and the hard struggle for subsistence, have developed in the average Chinese an individualism that forms a striking contrast to the national spirit of the Englishman or American, or the passionate loyalty to his Emperor that marks the Japanese. It follows that governmental or political changes, or dangers or disasters that would stir us to the depths, are either unknown to the average Chinese, or affect him in what would seem to us an unbelievably small degree.

It is true that certain great events that come to his knowledge may tend to dispose him favorably or unfavorably toward the foreigner and his institutions. For example, the decisive overthrow of the anti-foreign Boxer movement was followed by a reaction of favor toward foreigners that facilitated missionary work. The present extraordinary popularity of President Wilson among intelligent Chinese has heightened the already high esteem in which Americans are held and to that extent has helped the work of the American missionary.

But whether China remains politically chaotic and divided, or achieves a unified stable government, or falls under an alien rule, or is aided by an allied commission—whatever

JOHN MILTON represents in his tractate on the tithe practically the whole Protestant or Non-Prelatic Church of his time, but the Collaborators, having presented his argument, desired also to secure, both for their own instruction and for the benefit of the readers of the Standard, expressions from some of the leaders of Presbyterian thought in our own day. They therefore wrote to four of our great Seminaries, addressing particularly seven of their distinguished professors, and asked for statements of opinion. The Collaborators had no means of knowing beforehand what the answers would be and they were very careful to explain that they were not seeking confirmation for any of their own positions, but desired only the privilege of transmitting to the Church the present stage of informed opinion on this subject. Five answers have so far been received, and the Collaborators count it an honor of very exceptional proportions that they are now able to present to the Church papers of such value as the following:

The tithing law of ancient Israel has no applicability to the charitable giving of the Christian Church. If any one wishes to determine the amount of his gifts, more or less exactly, by what he understands to have been required of the Israelites in the way of tithes, he has a clear right to act in accordance with his romantic wish. But there are no grounds on which he can urge this eccentric action on others as duty, or even commend it to them as reasonable. There is no tertium comparationis between the tithes of Israel and the Christian's gifts to Charity. Benjamin B. Warfield.

I think the tithe constituted a part of the Jewish Polity, both Civil and Religious, but it was abolished with the Judaism of which it was a part. However, the principle underlying it is permanent and the Christian conscience under the motive power of the Gospel ought certainly to give as large and liberal a proportion for religious use as the Jew was compelled to do by law. Neither the Constitution of the Church nor the Ministry has the right to enact the tithe as a rule or to enforce it as a divine ordinance: but Christian liberty allows us the privilege of giving freely and gladly a far larger proportion than the tenth. Tithes were the total revenue of organized Israel. They had to meet all the expenses of the Theocracy—ecclesiastical, civil, educational, and charitable.

1. At Sinai the people were organized into "a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation" (Ex. 19:3-8). Tithes were set apart to support this entire administration. They were made collectible and distributable by the Levites.

2. Down to the time of the monarchy, there was no hint of any other taxes in the Théocracy.

3. Samuel admonished the people that if they set aside the divine government and erected a monarchy, they would find it a very costly business (I Sam. 8:10-18). The royal support would require a heavy part of the tithes and additional taxes.

If, therefore, we are to follow the ancient Hebrew example, the State, the Church, the schools, and all charities are to be a charge upon our tithes. R. A. Webb.

I think the General Assembly has stated correctly the teachings of our Standards and the Scripture concerning the tithe. Two paragraphs of the statement may be quoted here:

"1. The General Assembly would by no means discourage the giving of one-tenth of their income by individuals who may conscientiously fix upon this proportion for themselves. Many who previously had no system have unquestionably found blessings, both temporal and spiritual, in the practice of the tithe. Any definite system of giving is vastly better than the far too common haphazard habit of giving without regard to any system whatever. This is true whether the fraction fixed be one-tenth or one-fourth or one-half, or any other definite proportion; and, other things being equal, the larger proportion will bring the larger blessing, as recorded in the case of the churches of Macedonia, which gave, out of 'deep poverty,' to their power, yea, and beyond their power," and as verified in the experience of many Christians since.

"2. But the Assembly, while encouraging and even enjoining the personal adoption of some definite proportion as a minimum, does not feel authorized to fix that proportion, which, under the Gospel, has been left to the enlightened conscience of the individual, in the exercise of 'the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free.' The Mosaic Law prescribed rules; the Gospel promulgates principles. Rules are for childhood, principles for maturity; and the Assembly cannot bring into bondage to the letter those who, having received the spirit of adoption, are no longer 'under tutors and governors.'"

Then, "the Assembly, recognizing the need and duty of a much larger liberality on the part of God's people for the support and extension of the Gospel in response to the enlarged providential opportunities of this, our day," calls attention to the principles of Christian liberality as set forth in the New Testament.

My views on the tithe are well expressed in the ad interim committee's report on the tithe to the General Assembly, 1909.

To what is there set forth, I may add a few reflections:

1. The Levitical law usually referred to in discussing the tithe was the law requiring a tenth to be given for the support of the tribe of Levi. When God enacted a tithe law He specified the object. As the support of the tribe of Levi does not devolve on the Christian Church, the law providing for their support is not binding on the Church.

2. There is not the faintest trace of evidence that the Christians of Apostolic days observed this law. No one claimed the tithe; no one had a right to claim it.

3. The post-Apostolic Church did not pay tithes. In all the writings of the Apostolic Fathers there is not a word about the tithe—some strong lessons on alms-giving and voluntary contributions.

4. The Church of the second century did not pay tithes. Uhlhorn, in his "Conflict of Christianity With Heathenism," quotes from Justin Martyr: "Such as are prosperous

The Tithe Not Obligatory

Second Article.

By Prof. Addison Hogue.

PRO. You said at the close of our former discussion that the true New Testament doctrine lifts the whole matter to an unspeakably higher plane than the law of the tithe puts it upon. That was an assertion which many of God's devoted people will find hard to accept. How do you justify it?

Con. First I will set forth the principle by illustrations; and of course you are too fair minded to expect them to tally in every particular with the truth they are intended to enforce.

Pro. I recognize that most readily. We all know how futile (and sometimes how grotesque) have been the attempts of commentators on our Lord's parables to force some analogy between every detail in the story and the spiritual truth He was endeavoring to impress upon His hearers. Now for your illustration.

Con. A certain couple had two sons who were "under law" while they were young. They had to bring to their parents each week a part of their earnings. This law was intended to bring them to a clear conception of one important part of filial duty. The boys at times felt this to be irksome and were reprimanded for the neglect. When they grew up and went into business for themselves, of course this law fell away; and anything they did for their parents, now old and needy, had to be left to each son's instinctive love and gratitude. If he sent his parents nothing, they had no redress: the earlier days of "law" were gone, and the sons were supposed to stand on the lofty plane of devotion to the parents to whom they owed so much. And these parents would rather have suffered in body and in spirit than feel that they were receiving help based merely on the plane of "I've got to send this to father." It so happened that they did have just this pain to bear; for the elder son, a prosperous business man bent on accumulating a fortune, sent just the same proportion he had had to give when he was "under law:" no less, it is true; but also no more, though he might easily have supplied every want of the old people and still have lived in luxury himself.

The younger son had a business that paid him very little.

If matters went well he could just make both ends meet and still send his parents a token of grateful love. The token was small, but the love was great; and in the eyes of the parents that love enriched the gift, and made it far more acceptable than the much larger sum sent by the elder son who was still in bondage to his "assessment." One Christmas the younger brother had nothing to send. There had been long and sore sickness in the family, and his business had not prospered, and he was in debt, sorely against his will. He knew very well that his parents would repudiate his sending to them money that belonged to other people: so he sent a letter full of regret, but also full of the most grateful recognition of his parents' loving care of him in his younger years, and likewise full of the most genuine devotion to them. In reply they said: "John dear, your love and gratitude are the main things we want, as you well know; and your letter cheers our spirits and warms our hearts. The readiness is there, and we accept it according as you have, and not according as you have not. Your brother, we grieve to say, sends us only what he calls our "allowance," which is pitifully small in comparison with what is left for himself. He might send us—not one-tenth, but—nine-tenths of what he makes, and then have very much more than your income."

Pro. That's not a bad illustration; that is, from your point of view.

Con. It is a very bad illustration unless the point of view is based on the teachings of the Book. But my understanding of them, especially as set forth in Galatians, Colossians, and Hebrews, makes me feel that in this matter I have the mind of the Spirit. The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life; and I fully believe that the Spirit of the N. T. teachings, if acted upon, would bring far larger gifts into God's treasury than the mere letter of the tithe as an inexorable obligation.

Pro. You had another illustration, did you not?

Con. Yes. Our government lays taxes upon its citizens, and the payment of these is obligatory. But they are graded according as a man hath. Some persons pay no taxes, as the government recognizes that they cannot afford it. From the wealthy it takes much larger sums; and from those with immense fortunes it takes the lion's share of the income, because what is not taken still leaves the tax-payer quite wealthy. Our government has also called for subscriptions to the Liberty Loans, and to the Red Cross work; and to each call the nation responded with large oversubscriptions, because we were put on our honor, so to speak. Of course some men were stingy, and either did not help, or helped just enough to "save their face;" but the nation as a whole responded finely to the appeal for voluntary offerings; and men who merely paid their taxes earned the contempt of their patriotic fellow citizens who counted it a privilege to show that the cause for which we were fighting was one in which it was an honor to "go over the top" with as large subscriptions as they could make.

Pro. How do you apply this to the tithe? I'm not certain that I fully understand you.

Con. Why, thus: while no human government could finance itself with merely voluntary subscriptions, and consequently must also impose taxes, I believe the N. T. teaching is that God does now rely on these, and on these alone. Then, as we recognize it to be a fair principle for the government to lay its taxes on the basis of how much it left the man for himself, so I believe Christians should recognize this same principle in their voluntary offerings for what we specially call "the Lord's work;" and thus in many instances it would be seen that the tithe was a pitiful and niggardly sum to give. And finally, the appeal to the sense of loyalty to a noble and righteous cause is an appeal to the sense of honor, and often meets with a far more generous response than a legal obligation would. In the O. T. we find the chosen people often censured for not bringing in the tithes, but in Ex. 25 God appealed for a willing offering: "of every man whose heart maketh him willing shall ye take my offering." In chapter 35 Moses presents the appeal: "whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring it, Jehovah's offering" (v. 5). And with what result? Chapter 36 tells us: Moses had to make the people cease bringing these voluntary gifts!

Pro. That's not a bad point you have made there. I had not thought of that in this connection.

Con. If it helps us to get at the truth it is good; otherwise it is not. But it at least points to the fact that human nature often responds to appeals to its generosity much more readily than it does to compulsion.

Pro. What would you do, then, in regard to this matter, if you were pastor of a congregation?

Con. For one thing I should preach earnestly against the statement that "one-seventh of a man's time, and one-tenth of a man's income belongs to God." I think it likely that this has done much harm by obscuring the truth.

Pro. What truth?

Con. The great truth that all of our time and all of our money belong to God—to be used in a variety of ways, of course, but all equally for His glory. If one-tenth of my income belongs to God, to whom do the other nine-tenths belong?

Pro. Oh, of course people know what is meant by that.

Con. Whatever is meant, the statement itself is utterly wrong; and wrong modes of statement work some harm in our minds, as wise old Socrates said on the day of his death. Many a man has doubtless been led to lie back in careless ease and content, spending nine-tenths of his income on him-

Moral Obligation of the Tithe

By Rev. Thomas E. Peck, D.D., LL.D.

BUT the question is, whether the precise proportion of the tenth is the divinely ordained proportion—that proportion alone (or, at least, the smallest) which God will accept as a rental, or as an expression of our dependence, our gratitude, our devotion to Him. To discuss any other question than this precise one is, in our judgment, a waste of time.

1. The proof from the light of nature for the tithe is easily disposed of. (1) It has not been shown to be universal; (2) Where the custom did obtain, it seems to have been observed, when statedly observed, as a mode or the mode of sustaining the priesthood: when occasionally observed, to have been offered as an acknowledgement of special divine favors. The only pre-Mosaic instances in the Bible are those of Abraham (Gen. 14) and Jacob (Gen. 28). The tithe paid by Abraham was a solitary instance, was a tithe of the spoils of war, not of his own property or income, and was a tithe paid to a priest. If the instance proves anything for the theory of moral obligation, it proves that there ought always to be a visible priesthood to receive the tithes. In point of fact, as we shall see, the divine obligation of the tithe was not asserted in the Christian Church until the ministry of the Word had become a priesthood. The two things, tithe and priesthood, stand or fall together in every free church. The case of Jacob is a clear case of a voluntary vow, of a vow made to do a thing which there is no previous moral obligation to do. The cases of the two patriarchs have been mentioned here only in connection with the proof from the "light of nature." We shall have something more to say about Abraham's tithe when we come to examine the argument from Scripture.

As to both cases, they were sporadic and occasional, and can furnish no proof of the moral obligation of the tithe in the only sense in which we are using the term in this paper, that of a tenth of one's income statedly paid for religious uses.

3. If the light of nature reveals the moral obligation of the tithe, how comes it to pass that the church did not see it for the first three centuries of its existence? Surely, Christians were not blinder than the heathen to the light of nature. Yet we have the statement of a scholar in the tithe-supported Church of England "that the fathers of the first three centuries nowhere speak of tithes as even a minimum due de jure divino, though they had occasion for saying so, had such been the opinion of the church, or had tithes generally been paid as legally due: they frequently and earnestly exhort to alms giving, they never exhort their hearers to give tithes." (Vio Dr. Sharpe in Smith's Dict. of Eccl. Antiq., under tithes).

These facts are all the more weighty from the tendency of the Church to revert to the Mosaic institutions of a mortal priesthood, temples, altars, and ritual sacrifices. A similar argument might be made from the fact that the tithes were not easily collected, even from the Jews themselves, although the "light of nature" was reinforced by a positive divine command (Mal. 38).

It appears to us, therefore, that the argument from reason, or the light of nature, ought to be given up. The utmost that it can prove is, that God ought to be acknowledged and honored by giving Him of our substance.

Home Mission Receipts

THE Executive Committee of Home Missions has closed and balanced the account for the year ending March 31, 1919. The receipts were by far the largest in our history, amounting to $303,391.97, which is an increase of $69,401.24, being a gain of 29.6 per cent for the year. The increase for the past two years is $110,028.49. This is another tribute to the splendid work of the Stewardship Committee, as to this source we attribute the large increase to all the benevolent causes of the church.

For Administration, Literature and Promotion, the books show that the entire expense of conducting the work required 7 per cent of the receipts. It was this conservative management which justified the expert auditors—employed by the Permanent Committee of Systematic Beneficence, acting under instructions of the General Assembly—after a complete examination of the office and accounts, in saying: "We are of the opinion that the work is well cared for at a minimum outlay for expenses."

It is highly gratifying to announce that, after paying all appropriations and accounts presented, instead of an indebtedness the treasury shows a creditable cash balance. This amount, however, will be considerably reduced when all the delayed, "unexpired" appropriations for the year are paid, and when the "specials" which have accumulated for building and equipment are counted off. Still, however, it will leave a sufficient balance in the treasury to enable the committee to meet the appropriations during the first quarter without the usual necessity of borrowing from the bank during the early part of the year. This balance with which to begin the year is our first experience in years. This is all the more gratifying considering the fact that we had paid increased salaries during the past year, and this surplus will go to the missionaries in still further increase during the present year, and to equipment long in waiting.

The blessing of God upon the work of our missionaries and their ministry is equally manifest; and this splendid showing will put new spirit into these laborers in the Master's vineyard. While we render sincere thanks to the Church for its cordial support, we are profoundly grateful to our gracious Heavenly Father for His good hand with us and His manifest approval of the workers and their work.

self and his family, when by teaching him the truth of the matter and by appealing to the highest motives he might have been led to devise liberal things. You asked me before whether I did not think my view was a dangerous one. I say now that I think it is your doctrine that is dangerous.

Pro. But may not many people abuse your view of giving?

Con. Of course. Men may wrest this doctrine to their own destruction, just as they do other Scripture teachings. But that is the fault of the men, not of the truth; for, to quote Socrates again, "The Truth is never refuted." A man may thank God for free grace "because it never cost me a quarter of a dollar," and thereby merit the stinging rebuke, "May the Lord have mercy on your stingy soul!"

Pro. But you told me that you think it is a great reproach to the Christian Church that it does not come up to the Jewish measure of the tithe, even as a minimum.

Con. Yes; I believe so most emphatically. I also believe that as the O. T. makes the tithe so prominent, Christians should keep this in mind, even if it is not now made obligatory on us as it was on the Jews. We all know some people—and I am thinking of beloved and honored brethren in the ministry of some of you—who have to pinch to the utmost in order to have the bare essentials of a decent living. To go back to my first illustration, the "obligation" on the grown sons was of a far higher and nobler sort than the earlier one, and should have brought to the parents far larger gifts when possible. Our present obligation is not that of the Jewish law; but it is the spirit of noblesse oblige, sanctified and ennobled and elevated by the Holy Spirit.

be the course of her public affairs, it will affect the thought and attitude of her huge population of one-fourth the human race incomparably less than Westerners would suppose. Throughout it China will remain the world's greatest mission field, wide open and appealing, with all her major missionary problems, tasks, and difficulties substantially unchanged.

Christians in the home land whose missionary zeal is dependent on the spasmodic stimuli of ever-recurring crises or on thrilling reports of wholesale movements toward Christianity, should seek deeper rootage for their faith and fervor. The church at home may as well make up its mind that what lies before it in China is not a decisive battle, enlivened with spectacular charges and crowned with complete and speedy victory, but a long and arduous campaign, whose hero will not be the visiting official or evangelist or student or book-writer, but the obscure yet undiscourageable missionary, and in whose final success our children and grandchildren will bear their part.

Signs of that coming success are visible in Christianity's steadily accelerating rate of progress. The 1918 report shows new communicants to the number of 25,000 added to the previous year, the largest number ever reported, at which our own missions contributed 852, their largest addition also, these 852 being the remainder after protracted testing of a far larger number of applicants. The example I gave in a former letter of the swift acceleration in the growth of one of our stations, while too good to be typical of the general growth, is yet a cheering prophecy of what we may increasingly expect. At the end of its first twelve years this station reported 90 communicants, at the end of the second twelve, 1,001.

Other cheering facts, more really significant than figures, abound. For example, I found that every one of our stations had its record, however brief, of native saints and heroes, who in the face of temptation and opposition, had stood firm and in whom the Gospel had borne its characteristic fruit of strong and holy character.

The two Christians, one the lady principal of a girls' school, the other a famous evangelist, who, of all the Chinese believers I have met, impressed me most deeply with the rare spiritual beauty of their faces and characters, I was acutely interested to learn later were both Christians of the second generation. In them I saw the unspeakable enrichment that is yet to come to the church universal through the sanctifying work of the Spirit upon the Chinese race. In them I saw also the beginning of the end of our missionary enterprise in China. For this contingent of native preachers and teachers, born and reared in native Christian homes and perfect masters of the native life and language, though a very small reinforcement as yet, will swiftly multiply, as the American troops did in France, and will eventually prove, as they did, the decisive factor in the final victory.

When a railroad bridge is built across the Mississippi the most tedious and difficult part of the work must be done before any results appear above the water. Then the progress becomes manifest. Just so in China a long and arduous foundation work has been done. The structure is beginning now to rise into view. Henceforth the progress will be more apparent. The very latest figures of the growth of one of our two missions have just come under my eye and will show, when published in our next annual report, an increase of 36 per cent over the year before. Two of the leading missionaries of our other mission have just told me that since I visited their stations five weeks ago the most surprising and delightful developments have taken place in their fields, showing in the native membership such a spirit of progress and aggressiveness as they had never before seen.

God is working in China. He is preparing, I believe, to pour out His Spirit in a measure unknown heretofore in that land. Signs are multiplying that He is about to give His faithful servants a new confirmation of His promise, "He that goeth forth weeping, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

and willing give what they will, each according to his choice." From Tertullian: "Each of us deposits a small gift when he likes, but only if it be his pleasure, and only if he be able, for no one is under compulsion." From Irenaeus: "There were oblations among the Jewish people; there are such in the Church; but with this difference that there they were offered by slaves, there by freemen. The Jews were constrained to a regular payment of tithes; Christians, who have received liberty, assign all their possessions to the Lord, bestowing freely not the lesser portions of their property, since they have the hope of greater things."

5. The Church did not begin to talk of the tithe law till the sacerdotal idea of the ministry entered. The two ideas devolved together, and when the Church came to have a clergy that claimed to be in succession to the Old Testament priests and Levites, then this clergy urged more and more strongly its right to the tithe. The claim was first given the form of law by the Council of Macon in 585, but was not strictly enforced till the age of Charlemagne.

6. The doctrine of stewardship, which is the doctrine of the New Testament, is that ten-tenths of our possessions belong to God. We can not purchase a quit-claim on nine-tenths by giving one-tenth.

7. It is a misapprehension of New Testament teaching to say that we owe God a tenth, and therefore cannot begin to give till our debt is paid. We owe the remaining nine-tenths as absolutely as we owed the one-tenth. "We are not our own, for we are bought with a price." He did not buy only one-tenth.

8. When the Lord redeemed us He did not tithe. He gave all. He demands no less from us. "If a man forsake not all that he hath" not merely a tenth—"he cannot be my disciple."

9. Paul taught that Christian giving is a grace. Law and grace are opposed. Law exacts payments, grace offers gifts.

10. He taught that this grace like all others is to be cultivated and developed. The only way to cultivate a grace is to appeal to motives for its exercise. Paul's appeal was to love, not to law; also to the hope of reward—the reaping is to be in proportion to sowing.

11. It is not necessary to revive the tithe law in order to raise the money needed. A few days since, I asked the first two friends I met whom I knew to be giving the tenth of their incomes for the furtherance of the Gospel, if they believed in the perpetuity of the tithe law. Both promptly answered no. One friend said that last year he gave a fifth, but scouted the idea that he was doing it under pressure of law.

12. Proportional giving is Scriptural. It is gratifying to find so many Christians giving as much as the tenth, and quite a goodly number going much beyond that proportion. May their tribe increase. * * *

PASTOR WAGNER ON THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Pastor Charles Wagner says the Lord's Prayer has its fixed abode in the brightness of infinite space, and in the heart of suffering humanity. It begins in God and ends in Him, after having passed through these three steps, in the life of tortured humanity—hunger, sin and evil. It begins with an expression of filial confidence and ends with a triumphant affirmation. It is faith which prays, which prays through the lips of him who possessed it in a twofold energy—faith in God and faith in man. The Lord's Prayer is, therefore, a confession of faith, framed by Him who was the supreme authority on the subject. There is no prayer so beautiful. Its luminous expanse stretches away to the farthest limit of the blue sky.—British Weekly.

Non-Church Membership in North Carolina in 1916.

By Rev. A. W. Crawford, Greensboro, and Miss Ernestine Noa, University of N. C.

PREPARED in connection with the Department of Sociology of the State University under the direction and supervision of Prof. E. C. Branson, and issued with his authority.

Counties ranged according to the per cent of people ten years old and over who were not church members in 1916; with totals of non-church members of responsible ages.

Based on the 1916 Census of Religious Bodies and the Census Bureau estimates of population in 1916.

State average 38 per cent. Total non-church members, 649,237, ten years old and over.

Dr. Ogden's Rest.

By Thornton Whaling, D.D., LL.D., President, Columbia Theological Seminary, Columbia, S. C.

I did not succeed in teaching my beloved pupil Logic twenty-five years ago, and he has not learned it since. He does well to rest his hypothetical case. The confessions he seeks to educe from me are amusing: his own confessions, however, are illuminating.

First, he does not really believe there is any substantial difference in the U. S. and the U. S. A. Churches as to principle.

Second, he can not really believe that multitudes of honored brethren really think so or he would not seek to foist upon them "a colloidal and molluscous combination" with a Church, which they think stands for unsound theological and ecclesiastical principles.

Third, he can not have studied well the Federal Union plan or he would know that it does the very two things that he is asking for, namely, first, furnishes "a bond by which unfriendly competition, where it exists, will be removed and through which the spirit of oneness, which is more commonly found, may function in the full sweep of the work of the Kingdom. We need something more than a truce of God; we need full and direct and positive co-operation." Second, the Federal Assembly is to be given very large authority in all the various fields of Church work.

Perhaps, I may suggest that his rest continue until he has taken time to thoroughly study and master the proposed

The United States Government is now interested in a novel building project, involving an outlay of approximately $900,000. It is constructing a helium plant, the only one in the world, at Fort Worth, Texas, and it is expected that it will be in operation before May 1. This will give impetus to building in the Texas city, according to reports received by the United States Department of Labor.

Helium, which American scientists have learned how to develop, as a means of aiding aerial warfare, removes danger of fire in the filling of gas balloons. It is said to have about 92 per cent of the lifting power of hydrogen and is not inflammable. The products of certain natural gas wells in Clay county, Texas, have been found best fitted for the extraction of helium, and this will be piped to Fort Worth.

By the toilers of America we mean the people who are doing manual work. The noble element of the country's life is making a good record also in the churches, notwithstanding the broad statements made incessantly to the contrary. Here in the South there is far less of a "problem" of the working man and the Church than many theorists suppose. It may be that if some of those who are most nervous on the subject would visit somebody else's Church, where not so much is said about the matter; they would meet a good many of our sensible, Christian working folks. The writer of these notes preached recently at an evening service in a church that is composed mainly of industrial workers. He had the largest and most zealous congregation he has seen at evening service in all his memory.

It is true, certain newspapers which claim to make a specialty of serving the people that do physical work, are for reasons of their own seeking to create a prejudice against the church. Such papers and persons are hurting the very people they profess to serve. Wherever there is a man that earns his living by working with his hands as Jesus did, let him turn a deaf ear to this wretched talk of the Churches all being subservient to "capital." It is false. The truest Churches want the laborers precisely as they do the rich; and many of them are getting them.

We are all full of sin—about equally so—whether we own a plant or work for wages in it. This being true, employers will impose on workers, and workers will impose on employers, as a general thing, if half a chance is given. Checks are needed on both sides. But the point of interest for us here is, that all being sinful all have equal need of the Lord who saves from sin. Let everyone of us appeal to Him, our common Redeemer, to wash away our sins and help us to deal unselfishly with one another.

Whether we earn our living by physical toil or by other means, let us turn our united strength to the splendid task which God has assigned to us of giving the Gospel to the world of dying men. In this great crusade we have a common interest and a common duty, as we have a common Lord. We owe no man a special duty because he is poor or because he is rich, but only because he has a need. The need of all is Christ. Let us see that all shall have Him.

AFRICA.

In the year 202 Tertullian, who is alluded to in history as "the first great mind in Western Christendom," said: "The numbers of the Christians in the cities are about equal to the numbers of the pagans." Some idea of the rapid progress of Christianity in Africa may be gleaned from the fact that in the year 235 a great council of the church

The Prayer Meeting

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING APRIL 20, 1919:
 CHRIST THE CONSTANT COMPANION.

Matt. 28:19-20; Gal. 2:20.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

In five brief verses Matthew compresses all that he wished to write of the forty days following the resurrection.

We are grateful for the fact that we can supplement the information he gives us (Mk. 16:15; Lu. 24:48; Jno. 20:21-23, 21:15-17). Matthew had set out to describe the founding of the Kingdom here on earth; and he contents himself with a partial description of this appointed meeting of our risen Lord with His disciples in Galilee.

This meeting must have been widely anticipated, and so must have been the occasion of the gathering of more than five hundred to greet the Saviour, and to hear Him speak concerning the Kingdom.

And they did hear never-to-be-forgotten words. They are words that could only have been spoken by the risen Jesus—the Christ of God and of the church.

Calmly, simply, masterfully, Jesus speaks, His words taking a range that stamps them forever as the conscience-forming, inspiring marching orders of His disciples.

The illative particle, "therefore," is of vast importance: it fixes the attention on: "All authority hath been given to me in heaven and on earth." Strange words these from Him who lay yesterday in that rock hewn tomb, to all appearances the victim of man's cruelty and of the course of nature. No:

was held in Africa, and that it was attended by thirty-five bishops. In the year 202 Septimus Severus issued an imperial decree which forbade the conversion of any one to Christianity. This decree, issued from political motives, because the Romans were alarmed at the rapid growth of Christianity, sent a storm of persecution which raged with a well-nigh cyclonic force over Egypt and nearly all North Africa. History has preserved the names of many, though it is believed of a comparatively small portion, of those who in those early years by a martyr's death gave evidence of their devotion to their faith. They came from every walk in life—the patrician and the plebian, the free-born and the slave. At least one person of prominence whose name has come down to us as a martyr was Leonidas, the father of Origen, who was one of the church's leaders in later years. They were burned, drowned, beheaded, crucified, torn by savage wild beasts, and yet the church had vitality and strength enough to survive this treatment.

O Africa, favored by God as the training ground of the Jewish nation before they were permitted to enter Canaan! Africa, chosen by God as the asylum of His Son! Africa, permitted through Simon the Cyrene, to share with Christ the burden of the cross! Africa, home of the intellectual giants and leaders of the early church! Africa, bathed in the blood of martyrs! O Africa, "if thou hadst only known the time of thy visitation!" But thou didst not, and now "thy house is left unto thee desolate." In the height of Christianity's glory in North Africa there were nine hundred Christian churches in that region. Had they understood their calling and perceived their time, the pages of Christianity's history would have had an entirely different reading. But they lost the Spirit of Pentecost; they became divided, they spent their time and wasted their strength in ecclesiastical combats, instead of turning it toward the evangelization of their own continent, and instead of being as it might have been a thousand years ago, the most luminous spot on the globe, it is known as "the dark continent," and only by an immense sacrifice of blood and treasure can it ever be anything else.—The Christian Missionary.

OUR RISEN LORD.

Golden Text—Matt. 28:6: "He is risen as He said."

Matt. 28:1-10.

April 20, 1919.

The resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead on the third day demonstrated all His claims and proved all His teachings true. If He had not risen from the dead prophecy would not have been fulfilled and He would not have been shown to be the Divine Messiah. Nor would we have any assurance that Christ's buried disciples would live again. The Resurrection of Jesus Christ places the seal of the Divine acceptance upon His redeeming work, and inspires the people of the final resurrection of mankind. Our lesson directs attention to certain facts connected with this event.

I. The Angels at the Resurrection.

Mary Magdalene and another Mary go very early on the first day of the week to the sepulchre. By the way they wonder "who shall roll away the stone from the door." When they reach the place they find that the angel of the Lord has already removed the stone. There had been a great earthquake and the angel, resplendent in countenance and raiment, sat on the stone, and his appearance intimidated the soldiers who kept the sepulchre. The power of death and the officials of the Roman Empire could not keep Jesus in the tomb. At the suggestion of the high priests they had put the government seal upon the sepulchre. But no created power could keep Jesus in the tomb any longer than He wanted to stay, for "He is the Lord of life." He said of His physical life, "I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." Angels minister to Messiah and His saints. They herald Jesus' advent, served Him during His earthly ministry and proclaimed His glorious resurrection.

II. The Angel's Words to the Women.

He tells them not to fear, for they were affrighted, as human beings are generally moved to fear by any supernatural appearance. He says that He knew that they sought "Jesus of Nazareth, who was crucified." He assures them that "He is not here, but is risen as He said." He testifies to His resurrection and reminds them that He had predicted His resurrection from the dead. Angels as well as Jesus' disciples bear witness to this wonderful event. All of Christ's apostles, who were nearest to Him, who knew Him best, who were best qualified to identify Him and to whom He revealed Himself repeatedly after He rose from the dead attest His resurrection. The angel directs the woman to enter the sepulchre to see where the Lord had lain and that He was not there. He also commands them to go quickly and inform His disciples that He was risen, to go into Galilee, and that there they should see Him.

III. The Effects of the Angels' Words on the Women.

There were other women from Galilee besides the two Marys specially mentioned in the lesson. They experienced fear at such manifestations of superhuman and Divine power. When God draws near in the natural world man trembles with fear. When Jehovah was revealed on Mt. Sinai Moses said, "I do exceedingly fear and quake." When at the sepulchre Christ proved Himself the conqueror of death, the women were affrighted. They also felt great joy. They rejoiced that their Divine Master was restored to life and to them, that His predictions had been fulfilled and that all His claims had been verified. They gladly obeyed directions to impart the glad tidings to His disciples and to assure them that they should see Him in Galilee. The angels' words produced in the women fear, joy and prompt obedience. They were to have in the path of obedience to the angels' command another joyful surprise.

IV. The Women Are Met by Jesus.

In the way of duty, Jesus met them and they knew Him. The two disciples going to Emmaus that same day did not know Him at first. But these women of Galilee, who had ministered to Jesus of their substance and had sought Him at the sepulchre had Him clearly revealed. Indeed, those who displayed the most love for Christ were the first to see Him after His resurrection. Mary Magdalene was the first of all, and then the ministering women of Galilee. Christ approached and greeted them, saying, "All hail." In adoration they fall before Him, embrace His feet and worship Him. They realize that "The Divine Victor over death" deserves heart homage and that "all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father." They felt like the Apostle Thomas when falling before Jesus. He exclaimed, "My Lord and My God." He accepts the woman's worship as He did that of Thomas. He quiets their alarm, saying, "Be not afraid." He treats them most graciously and gives them a cheering message for His disciples. He says, "Go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, there shall they see me." He calls these weak and erring ones who had forsaken Him in the garden and only one of whom stood by Him before the Sanhedrin and at the cross "His brethren." He promises that "they shall see Him in Galilee." Paul tells us that 500 disciples did see Him at once at the place appointed.

Prayer Meeting.

appearance in this case would lead hopelessly astray. He is in reality Master, Victor; not victim—not the vanquished. There is no trace of pride or bragadocio; simply He says: "All authority hath been given unto me—Therefore:" Then note the breadth of vision, the illimitable heart reach—heart embrace: "Go disciple all nations—and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

The King speaks: He of all authority "in heaven and upon earth."

Too often these great words are taken out of the connection in which our Lord used them. Paul (Gal. 2:20) does not do this. In the great crusade he had been crucified with Christ: yet there thrilled and surged within him a glorious life that was none other but the mingling of two lives—that of the Divine Master and his own. "I live; yet not I; Christ liveth within me."

Men and women who are faithful servitors of Christ's will, recognizing as of course the finality of this commission, were assured of trials of all kinds: and the gracious Master assures them that always in hours of joy and of fiery trial, the form of the Son of Man would be visible to the eye of faith; the heart of the divine would pulsate in actual identity with the human. "I live—yet not I."

There is no vague, no stage promise, for funerals and otherwise, here. It is a promise to kingdom builders, great or small. The humblest and the most eminent may share the glory of the Presence, the joy of the grace, the certitude of victory.

Has there not been a distinct loss in the isolation of these wonderful words? in taking them apart from the thought structure of our Lord?

If we would claim them as ours we must be builders of the Kingdom, co-laborers with the Christ. Perhaps it is true that the average church-goer is profoundly ignorant of the thought structure in which these words occur. A great gain would result in building up a distinct popular understanding of their living connection with the commission: "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you."

However, let no faithful Christian, father, mother, teacher, missionary, minister—let no follower of Jesus think that he is shut out of this gracious and sustaining promise. Fidelity brings unity and sustaining communion and strength and comfort.

PETTY SUPERSTITIONS.

One who had been an invalid remarked, "I have not been obliged to have a meal in my room for more than two years." The friend who listened, cried out, "Oh, knock on wood!"

"No," was the firm reply, "I am not a pagan; I am a Christian." Perhaps the friend did not fully understand the allusion. The custom has come down from the days of our pagan forefathers, who believed that knocking on trees (especially the oak or ash), would procure the favor and protection of the spirits who live in the trees. The civilized woman who does this, and there are several such left, ranks herself with the half-naked savage who calls her child, "Little dog," hoping that any wandering evil spirit that may happen to overhear will suppose that she does not value her baby, and will pass on without working harm.

You drop a dishcloth and tell me that company is coming, or you spill salt and fear a quarrel, or your left ear burns and you are sure that some one is saying disagreeable things about you. The times that these things can be done, with no after consequences, make no impression on your mind compared with the few coincidences which are triumphantly quoted as proof positive that old sayings are true.

An elderly woman of my acquaintance will never go anywhere, not even on a shopping tour, on Friday. Once, when a journey was in prospect, she went to considerable inconvenience to avoid that day, then missed her train and suffered various mishaps—on Wednesday. She laughed about this herself, but the probability is strong that she will never give up the false idea instilled into her mind in childhood by those who should have kept their tremors to themselves. If errors of this sort were not passed along—sometimes laughingly and with a show of regarding them as nonsense—they would die out.

My nephew is old enough and strong enough to help his family when moving: one time he did so, and then fled from the upset condition of the new home to seek consolation with me. We played crokinole and I beat him seven times running. "There!" he exclaimed, "that's because mother carried the cat." I inquired into this, never having heard that particular superstition. It seems that when you move from one house to another you must not carry the cat for fear of misfortune. In this instance the mother actually tried to lead the cat by a string, but, becoming impatient with her wandering propensities, picked her up for the rest of the way. I said to the boy, "You are tired, that's the reason you can't play as well as usual. It is very lucky (for me) that mother carried the cat."

I boarded one summer with an excellent woman whose fear of signs and tokens could only be excused by remembering that she was of Celtic blood. Gravely she assured me that to see the new moon through a pane of glass had brought disaster to her more than once, and that to dream of freshly-turned earth meant that a grave would soon be dug for one of your family. She could not turn back after leaving her home, not she, no matter what important thing had been forgotten, without fear of the failure of her expedition. She would have been grieved and indignant if I had pointed out that her trust in providential care was apparently no stronger than that of the ignorant African who, when he starts out, returns to his home at once if he happens to knock his right foot against anything, or if a certain bird, that is all black, flies toward him. If the bird should have wings tipped with white, that is a good sign and he may go on. He firmly believes that if a rat runs across his path from left to right, it is a good sign; if it runs ahead of him, a still better sign; but if it runs toward him, he may as well turn back; there is no use in facing bad luck! How paltry it all seems.

And now for a confession. The daughter of a noble, fearless father, who derided dreams and was remarkably free from the taint of superstition, I have yet not wholly escaped it. True, I can sit at a table with twelve others without the slightest fear that, of necessity, one of us will die before the year is out. I scorn the idea that a broken mirror or a bird flying into the house can possibly bring death in its train. But the chains of tradition are invisible and so light that we hardly know when we are bound by them. I told a dear friend, who came to see me, that I meant to write on this subject; we laughed together over the silly notions that people will cherish, and then—after saying good-bye, I caught myself going quickly into the house so as not to watch my friend as long as I could see her, which would mean that I would never see her again. How absurd!

I say to all the superstitious (including myself): "Who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" Shake off these shackles of a bygone age, and come out into the glorious liberty of the children of God!—Anna Stevens Reed, in Banner.

Devotional

THOSE WHO BROUGHT ME TO CHRIST.

I have been reading today the account of the paralytic who was borne of four; and I have thought not so much of him who was in need as of the four who brought their friend to Christ, the four who were willing to brave the jests or the sneers or the cold stares of the ecclesiastical select in order that their friend might come under the influence of the Great Healer—of the four who were interested enough to do that.

And as I have thought of them, my mind has turned back to those who brought me to Christ, those who had a personal wish, not only that Christ's kingdom should come in the world, but that I should come to Christ.

I have thought of my mother, who brought me to Christ even before my birth, and who wrote in the last Bible that she gave me before her death these words, "Greater joy have I none than this—to hear of my children walking in the truth."

I have thought of the little woman who led me to my first open confession of Jesus at the altar of our little village church when I was 10. She did not do much for the great cause of Christianity—just brought a little girl—but I bless her and place her among the bearers of my pallet to Christ.

And then, years later a woman in a great consecration service persuaded me by a touch and a word to make a re-dedication of my life. Years after I found and thanked her but she had forgotten. It was not much, not to her, and yet—she brought me to Christ.

And then in my college days I think especially of one professor whom I always felt was interested in my especial case of need. There were four of us, students in the primary grades of the school of life, in his Greek class. We wandered far from our text sometimes. We often wandered to Christ, he leading, the four of us following.

And in the years since, I have been brought to Christ many, many times by a group of little girls whom I have led. I think that I have never felt closer to Him than on the Sunday morning when one of my little 13-year-old friends came and sat by me on the day of her first communion. My girls in a body brought me very near to Christ one night when they came to the altar of our little church and accepted him as their personal Saviour.

And as I have thought of these friends, these friends whose friendship I know will continue after this life, I wonder, "Whom have I brought to Christ?" not "What organizations have I built up?" not "What money have I given in the great cause?" but "What soul, what friend of mine, have I cared enough about, to bring to Christ?"—Jane Robinson, in The Continent.

He who complains, or thinks he has a right to complain, because he is called in God's providence to suffer, has something within him which needs to be taken away. A soul whose will is lost in God's will can never do this. Sorrow may exist; but complaint never.—Catherine Adorna.

Church News

Extension of Time

Owing to the prevalence of bad weather during March, the three papers have agreed to extend the time-limit to APRIL 30th, so as to give a full opportunity to place the Church papers in every home.

Collections for April are for Christian Education and Ministerial Relief. Treasurer, Jno. Stites, Corner Fifth and Market Streets, Louisville, Ky.

HOME MISSION WORK IN MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY.

The past year has been one of many drawbacks to Home Mission work. In the first place, the war demoralized the people and took from congregations the best young men. Then came the influenza, closing churches for weeks and thus cutting down collections.

In view of these facts we were prepared to have from the Home Mission committee a report far below any that they have heretofore presented.

We expect to publish that report in full next week, but in the meantime we take pleasure in commending them for what they have done, and to pronounce it a remarkable report in view of the many obstacles.

In the Home Mission Churches there have been received 207 members on profession and 66 by letter.

Though they have assisted one church and two manse to the extent of $1,950, they not only have not increased the debt, but have paid on it $392.84.

We are only giving these items now. The full report is worth studying.

DEATH OF REV. PAUL S. CRANE AND MRS. EUGENE BELL IN KOREA.

A cablegram received at the Foreign Mission office on April 2d, brings the distressing information of the death of Rev. Paul S. Crane and Mrs. Eugene Bell, members of the Korean Mission. The message gave no details except that the deaths occurred in an auto accident.

A press dispatch also mentioned that Rev. Robert Knox was injured, but our cable message contained no reference to Mr. Knox. We therefore infer that he could not have been seriously injured.

S. H. Chester, Secretary.

THE FIFTY-NINTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Will convene in the Napoleon Avenue Presbyterian Church, New Orleans, Thursday, May 15, 11 a. m., and be opened with a sermon by the Rev. James I. Vance, D. D., the Moderator of the last Assembly, to be followed by the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

The clerks will be in the church Wednesday afternoon and evening and Thursday morning from 9 to 11 for the purpose of enrolling the commissioners, who are requested to report with their commissions as promptly as practicable after their arrival.

By appointment of the last Assembly the first evening will be devoted to addresses in commemoration of the centennial of the organized work of education.

The Federal authorities in control of the railroads of the country have declined to grant special rates to those attending the Assembly. But the ministerial commissioners can use their clergy certificates and thus secure tickets through to New Orleans at half rates. If any have not procured these certificates they are urged to get them at once and use them on this trip.

Thos. H. Law, Stated Clerk.

J. D. Leslie, Permanent Clerk.

BANNER ELK AND REV. EDGAR TUFTS.

It seems that Rev. Edgar Tufts had decided to accept the call to the Appalachian Synod to become Superintendent of Home Missions for that Synod, when he was taken sick and was unable to take up the work. The committee offered to wait upon him, but in the meantime other obstacles besides sickness developed. Then the people began to plead with him with the result that he decided to decline and to remain where he is.

We congratulate the Church upon this decision. No man in our ranks has done such wise and successful work and for him to have left it in its present shape would have been disastrous.

Let the prayers of the Church be offered that he may be restored to health and that he may be spared long to be a blessing to the people among whom he has labored so successfully.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. H. Rosenberg, superintendent of the Hebrew Christian Association, headquarters at Nashville, was a visitor in our office this week. Mr. Rosenberg is a member of Nashville Presbytery and comes well endorsed. He preached at Sharon and Carmel churches in this county Sunday morning and afternoon and at night at Belmont, presenting the claims of his people upon the Church of Christ.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Hickory—This church which has been vacant since the resignation of Rev. J. G. Garth, who entered the war work, has given a hearty call to Rev. E. M. Craig, D. D., of Albany, Ga.

He has the call under consideration. This is one of our best churches and it has been accustomed to the best men.

Monroe—At the annual meeting of the First Church the deacons reported that all bills had been paid in full, and that in the every member canvass there had been an increase of 50 per cent over last year's pledges.

This church has increased the pastor's salary one hundred dollars.

Burlington, Piedmont Church—This church has recently renewed its support and affection to its pastor, Rev. H. C. Carmichael, by increasing his salary. The church has closed a prosperous year and is looking forward to growth and usefulness.

Mr. Carmichael has just declined a call to Effingham, S. C., for $1,500 and manse. Cor.

Barium Springs—Mr. and Mrs. Freeland, of Pomona, California have given the Orphanage a farm of 78 acres, valued at $1,500. It is about seven miles from Barium, near Bell's Cross Roads.

The only condition attached is that they receive the "Fatherless Ones" for life.

The Orphanage is ready to receive other donations on the same terms.

Charlotte, Knox Church. In the every member canvass the record of this church is one not to be ashamed of. Last year they raised for current expenses $3,800, this year $4,700.

For benevolences last year $1,000, this year $1,708. The congregation has subscribed for and is engaged this year in paying off a debt of $12,000, in addition to keeping up $10,000 building and loan stock which matures this year. The two funds will liquidate the entire indebtedness.

Robinson Church—A conference on the every member canvass was held Sunday. Revs. W. R. McCalla and J. C. Hardin and Messrs W. B. Newell and W. E. Price delivered addresses. Rev. W. R. McCalla is group manager of Newell, Robinson, Sugar Creek and Mallard Creek.

A committee of five was appointed to see every member of the church and secure pledges for the benevolent causes.

A good and abundant dinner was served.

It was a delightful and profitable day.

Charlotte, Second Church—At a meeting of the elders and deacons of the Second Church, acting as hosts of about 175 men of the church, April 7, a men's society was organized and nearly $3,000 was subscribed for missionary work. It was then decided that the men would at an early date give a dinner to the ladies of the church as a mark of appreciation of their work.

Dr. McGeachy was deeply gratified at the spirit manifested at the meeting and declared it to be his opinion that the meeting marked the opening of an era of unprecedented activity on the part of the entire membership.

Shelby—Our Spring Communion was celebrated by a large congregation April 6th. Four new members were welcomed into the Church.

At the request of the deacons a congregation meeting was called after the communion service. The congregation voted an increase of $200 per year to the pastor's salary.

The Shelby Church has entered enthusiastically upon the prayer meeting attendance contest during April. The attendance at prayer meeting has not yet quadrupled, as is so often the case in a new pastorate. But the interest and attendance is steadily increasing. The first Wednesday night in April our attendance was 31.6 per cent of our resident membership.

Albemarle—A call meeting of the board of trustees of Albemarle Normal and Industrial Institute was held yesterday at the assembly room of the institute. Among the resolutions passed was one to overture Presbytery which meets at Marshville the 15th instant for financial aid. The past two years the school has been run free of debt, but there is some old indebtedness contracted three years ago which is handicapping the work of the school and there is great need of a new dormitory. This is the reason for the request that Presbytery lend its aid at once. The out-of-town members of the board to attend were A. S. McRae, of Mt. Gilead, John McDowell, of Steel Creek, Frank Neal, of Charlotte, and W. R. Coppage, of Rockingham. The regular meeting will be held here the latter part of May, when the entire board will be present. Cor.

Henderson First Church—We are just winding up the work for the past year and it is also the end of the sixth year of the present pastorate. It is the best year in every way that we have had. The number of additions to the church shows an upward tendency and makes the roll larger than at any time in our history. The work of the Sabbath school is taking on new life after the long cessation of activities on account of the influenza. Our offerings are the largest ever made. They amount to $3,292 for current expenses and $3,190 for benevolences, almost an equal division. During the past year the pastor's salary has been increased $700 making it now $2,500. This is the second increase in two years, showing the thoughtfulness of these good people. The annual E. M. C. is just closing and will show an increase over last year.

We are grateful to God to be able to make so good a showing. Cor.

Charlotte—On Sunday morning Dr. A. S. Johnson preached a special sermon to the traveling men. The church was crowded and the sermon was worthy of the occasion.

Dr. John A. Preston, a former pastor, was accustomed to preach to the traveling men, and at his death they presented to the church a memorial window.

Rev. G. F. Bell, at the memorial service of the United Commercial Travelers, held April 13, made an address that was enjoyed by those present.

Rev. A. Y. Beatie, who has been working in the interest of the Queens College campaign for $50,000, preached for Dr. McGeachy on Sunday evening.

First Church—The Sabbath School, Hunter Marshall, superintendent, is increasing in efficiency. Besides being organized thoroughly, it now has its own organ, "The Flashlight," in which they record all events of interest and by which the officers keep in touch with the school.

It is published monthly, the mechanical work being done by the Presbyterian Standard Publishing Company.

Davidson—This community is saddened today in the news of the death of Rev. Dr. C. A. Munroe, occurring here at his home at 6 o'clock this morning. He had been in declining health for some time and it was known that he would not last a great while longer, but as so often happens his death came as a surprise.

Extended notice of this beloved and honored servant of God will of course appear in the religious press. This brief note will only say that the place he occupied in the affection and esteem of those among whom he labored longest—churches throughout Concord Presbytery—is well indicated in the name he bore—that of Bishop of the Presbytery, a title indicating affection, esteem honor and clear recognition of his worth and his service.

A movement is on foot and its success is practically assured by which Rev Robert W. Miles, Jr., here at Davidson this session under the appointment of the War Work Service of the Y. M. C. A., will remain next year as "Y" secretary. So popular is he among the students and so keenly are they and the faculty appreciative of the work he has done on the campus that members of the Y. M. C. A. have made themselves responsible for his salary and will undertake to raise a very large part of it in the student body.

Charlotte—The meeting of more than two weeks' duration that Dr. Frank Arnold has been conducting at the Westminster Church, assisting Dr. Bunyan McLeod, pastor, comes to a close tonight, Wednesday. Dr. Arnold has delighted the people with his interesting and earnest presentation of the Gospel message and with his sometimes unique services, and they showed their interest by coming in large numbers to hear him, the congregations at all services being excellent. The music and chorus and congregational singing added greatly to the interest. As a visible result of the meeting there were 200 consecrations and 25 professions of faith. From here Dr. Arnold goes to Monroe to assist Dr. Gurney in a series of services.

In addition to being a preacher, Dr. Arnold is a poet of no mean ability. The Standard is indebted to him for the poem on its cover page this week. The poem was written while Dr. Arnold was in Charlotte, and was inspired by the pine forests near the city.

Washington—Rev. R. G. McLees, of Chatham, Va., our well-known blind evangelist, recently conducted a ten days' meeting in our church. He preaches the Gospel of Jesus with wonderful power, pathos and persuasiveness. Our people were greatly delighted by his earnest and eloquent sermons, and the entire congregation has been awakened and warned as never before. The writer has heard many of the foremost preachers and evangelists of the world, but in his humble opinion, Bro. McLees preaches the Evangel of Jesus with greater simplicity, earnestness and tenderness than any one he has ever heard. He is filled with the Spirit of the Master and preaches the Gospel as we believe it ought to be preached. His mission has done us untold good.

Eleven members have been received into the church, eight of them on profession of faith.

We closed the church year with all obligations met and most of our apportionments for benevolent causes overpaid.

Our every member canvass in March was very successful. We have again "gone over the top," subscribed our quota and made a goodly advance over the previous year.

The past year has been the most abundant in labors and fruitful of results of any in the history of my eleven years' pastorate among these good people.

We thank God and take courage. Presbytery (Albemarle) meets with us April 15th.

H. B. Searight.

Raleigh—Some of the most progressive steps to be taken by the First Presbyterian Church of Raleigh have been inaugurated since the initiation of a joint meeting of the Diaconate and Session on the first Tuesday night of each month. These meetings begin at 6 o'clock. A short discussion is held until supper, served by the ladies of the church, is announced. After this much of the real business affecting both the church and its members is then thoroughly discussed and the necessary action taken. Afterwards separate meetings of the two bodies are held to attend to such matters as are of concern to them as separate organizations. The pastor, Dr. W. McC. White, presided over the joint meeting assisted by Mr. C. S. Brimley as secretary. The officers each pay fifty cents to defray the expenses of the supper.

It seems as if these meetings are being blessed with good results. The officers attend with much more regularity and punctuality than before and the affairs of the Church are prospering as a result of this careful and thoughtful consideration.

Not only is this reflected in the business of the church, but also in the enthusiasm which has spread to the congregation. For the past several months the services have been attended to such an extent that for the morning service it has been necessary to provide extra chairs to seat those who come in late. The pastor, of course, feels this renewed spirit and those in a position to know state that some of his most inspiring sermons have been delivered during this period.

To better care for the spiritual needs of the congregation it was recently decided to elect three other elders. From the nominees proposed in a recent congregational meeting, Messrs J. B. Wright, W. S. Fallis and J. C. Allison were elevated from deacons to elders by the popular vote of the congregation.

The every member canvass was held on Sunday, March 29, to enable the deacons to arrange for the finances of the church for the coming year. While the detailed report has not yet been made by the chairman, Mr. J. C. Allison, indications are that the apportionments of $8,000 for local needs, and $6,000 for benevolences will be fully met if not exceeded. The men who took part in the canvass found that it was put on this year with the least confusion yet experienced. The responses were heartier and the spirit of the members better than at any previous time.

As a whole the church seems to be entering upon a period of devout consecration to the service of the Lord and it is felt that the pastor is in a measure now being rewarded for his continuous labor and prayerful efforts to make it "bring forth much fruit."

F. H. Jeter.

The Presbytery of Wilmington met in the First Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, N. C., April 8 at 3 p. m., and the opening sermon was preached by the retiring moderator, Rev. L. E. Wells, from Hebrews 12:2. Present eighteen ministers and thirty-three ruling elders.

Officers—Rev. W. F. Hollingsworth was elected moderator and Rev. L. E. Wells and Ruling Elder Clarence Clark were chosen temporary clerks.

Dismissed—Rev. Andrew J. Howell was dismissed to Pee Dee Presbytery.

Named Changed—Bethbirei church to Phoenix.

Calls—Rev. J. O. Mann was called to the pastorate of the Church of the Covenant; the call was accepted and arrangements made for the installation. Rev. Geo. P. Elmore was called to the pastorate of the Pearsall Memorial and Winter Park Churches and said churches were given permission to prosecute the calls.

Installations—Installations were reported as follows: Rev. Geo. M. Matthis, Groves' Memorial; Rev. D. F. Caldwell, Immanuel; Rev. J. W. Stark, Chinquapin, Pink Hill and Beulahville. A commission was appointed to install Rev. J. O. Mann.

New Manual—The committee appointed to prepare a manual for the Presbytery made a report which was approved and the manual ordered printed for distribution and use.

Overture—The overture sent down by the General Assembly in reference to candidates for the ministry was answered in the affirmative.

Address—Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D., of Fayetteville Presbytery, by special invitation, spoke on the organization of Wilmington Presbytery and the men connected therewith.

Commissions to the General Assembly—Ministers, Rev. J. M. Wells, D. D., and Rev. W. H. Baker; Ruling Elders, H. C. McQueen and George Sutton. Alternates, Rev. R. L. Newland and Rev. A. D. McClure, D. D.; Ruling Elders, M. H. Wooten and D. J. Williams.

Popular Meetings—Popular meetings were held in the interest of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, Foreign Missions and Home Missions. The addresses in the interest of these several causes emphasized the church's opportunity and responsibility and were prophetic of the dawn of a new day in the activities of the church.

Memorial Service—Appropriate services were held in memory of the late Rev. W. W. Davidson.

Schools and Colleges—Presbytery approved the proposed Synod-wide campaign of the Synod's executive committee of education to be conducted by our Assembly Field secretary of Education, Rev. M. E. Melvin, D. D., and his colleagues.

Reports—The reports from the churches showed a falling off in the number added to the churches on profession as compared with other years, but the contributions indicate that there is a growth among our people in the grace of giving. Our Presbyterian manager, Rev. D. T. Caldwell reported that our apportionment of the three and a half million dollars for benevolences were in sight.

Plans were made looking to enlarged and more aggressive work, especially along the lines of Christian education, Sabbath school extension and evangelism.

Rev. A. W. Crawford, superintendent of Synod's Home

Missions, was present and spoke in the interest of the great work of the Synod.

Next Meeting—After the adoption of a hearty vote of thanks, Presbytery adjourned to meet at Chinquapin Church, October 7, 1919, at 11 a. m.

The report on systematic benevolence shows a substantial increase in the gifts to all the benevolent causes over last year except two, and the falling off in the case of these is due to the fact of special gifts that were made to them last year.

W. P. M. Currie, Stated Clerk.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Belton—Broadway Church paid every cent pledged last year and raised its budget $131 over last year, which means a raise in pastor's salary. One member was received last Sunday.
Albert E. Wallace.

Piedmont—Thirty days before Presbytery all the obligations of Piedmont church had been met and larger obligations for the next year were assured. Four members were received the fourth Sunday in March.

Albert E. Wallace, Pastor.

Columbia—Dr. Thornton Whaling, president of Columbia Seminary, conducts a large Bible class which meets every Tuesday evening at 8:30 in the auditorium of the Y. M. C. A. It is especially for the benefit of Sunday school teachers and is well attended by teachers from all the Sunday schools of this city.

Columbia—The members of the Shandon Presbyterian Church were tendered a delightful informal reception on Friday evening by the Woman's Society of the church.

A delightful program was rendered and the reception afforded the congregation an opportunity of becoming better acquainted with one another and the new members.

Coffee and sandwiches were served during the evening.

Columbia—The pastor of the First Church announced on last Sabbath the addition of many new members. This church continues to prosper and make steady progress under its active and versatile pastor.

Arsenal Hill—Rev. W. H. Boggs, pastor of this church, has had the pleasure of welcoming many new members in the recent weeks. The increasing congregations, both at the morning and evening services, bear witness to the revived life of the church.

Woodrow Memorial—Under the leadership of its two able pastors, Drs. Whaling and Reavis, the Woodrow Memorial church is making a decided advance. In the last two Sabbaths there have been twenty-four additions, twenty of them on profession.

Clinton—The baccalaureate sermon at the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, Clinton, will be delivered by Dr. H. Tucker Graham, of Florence, S. C., Sunday morning, June 1st, in the First Presbyterian Church. The sermon before the Y. M. C. A. will be delivered in the evening by Rev. J. P. Marion of Sumter, S. C.

Major Frederick J. deRohan is now on the grounds organizing the R. O. T. C. Dr. William E. Hoy, a Ph.D., of Princeton University, has been elected professor of biology, and will take up his work next September.

Gaffney—Rev. W. A. Hafner, pastor of the Limestone Presbyterian church of Gaffney, has returned from a meeting of Enoree Presbytery, which was held in Greenville. Mr. Hafner was proud of the financial report which he was able to make, the report showing that an average of more than $36 per year was contributed to the various causes by the members of the church. Mr. Hafner says that the contributions were willingly made by the members, no pressure of any kind being brought to bear upon them and that he believed the coming year would show an increase over the contributions of last year.

Wellford Church—Financial report made by this little church for the year ending March 31st, was the best made in its history. Total contributions for all benevolent causes, $642. Current expenses including salary of supply, $939. With a membership of 34 this is an average of $19 for benevolences and $46.50 for all causes. Rev. J. S. Watkins, D. D., pastor emeritus of First Presbyterian Church, Spartanburg, S. C., has been supplying our church for two years.

Laurens—An intermediate C. E. Society was organized Sunday, April 6th by members of the Presbyterian church, Laurens, S. C., consisting of twenty members, Miss Harriet B. Simpson, leader.

Miss Caroline Holmes is president; Mr. Jack Miller, vice president; Miss Vernell Crane, secretary and Miss Toccoa Gray, secretary.

Timmons ville—Union services in the interest of the Jewish war relief campaign were held Sunday night in the Methodist Church. The principal speaker was Chaplain John McSween, Jr., recently returned from overseas, who made a powerful appeal for those suffering people. Other forceful talks were made by Rev. J. P. Anderson, of the Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. Hubert Noland, of the Methodist Church.

Timmons ville's assessment of $500 was quickly raised.

Columbia—The Rev. W. H. Boggs, of the Arsenal Hill Church, preached a beautiful sermon in the First Church on Saturday preparatory to Communion, and the pastor administered baptism to five infants. On the Lord's day, twenty-two persons were received by certificate and twenty-three by profession of faith, after which 581 persons partook of the Communion. A number of others have sent for their certificates, which have not yet arrived. The reports for the past year from every organization are most gratifying.

A. W. B.

Columbia—Captain M. L. Swinehart dropped into Columbia unexpectedly a week ago and went to the A. R. P. Church to hear Dr. Reavis. On the blackboard in view of the congregation he saw this record:

Members, 250; tithers, 105; percentage of tithers 42.

Church officers, 16; tithers, 15; percentage of tithers, 94. Sabbath School teachers, 16; tithers, 16; percentage of tithers 100.

Young People's Union, 43; tithers 41; percentage of tithers 93.

Captain Swinehart spoke at the Christian Endeavor in the First Church and at the prayer meeting at Arsenal Hill. He greatly impressed the brethren here by his personality and his message, and we hope that he will soon return, when we can hear him in our pulpit. He helped to review the great parade of the Thirtieth Division.

York—In honor of two members of the congregation, Meach Stewart and Grady McClure, who made the supreme sacrifice in France, interesting and impressive memorial services were held in the First Presbyterian Church Sunday morning. The pastor, the Rev. E. E. Gillespie, D. D., made an address in which he discussed the sacrifices that had willingly been made to win the war—sacrifice of money, work, time, but most important of all, the sacrifice of human life. In future years when men ponder on the destructiveness of the war, the question will be asked whether the result attained was worthy of the cost, and this phase of the subject, said the speaker, could be fittingly discussed by a soldier who has participated in the mighty conflict. Here Capt. G. C. McCelvey, a former principal of the York graded schools, was introduced, who answered affirmatively the question, "Was the sacrifice worth while?" In a few remarks Captain McCelvey, who wore two wound stripes that attested the gallant part he had played in winning the war, discussed the far-reaching results of the triumph over the foe of freedom.

and civilization and said the outcome justified every sacrifice that had been made—even that made by the thousands of Americans who, like two from the First Presbyterian Church, had given their lives.

Meach Stewart, the first young man of the congregation whose star on the service flag of the church turned to gold, was killed in action October 10, in the fierce fighting that crumbled the German lines. Grady McClure, the other soldier who laid down his life, was desperately wounded October 15, in the great drive north of Verdun and died November 25. He was a member of Battery A, Three Hundred and Thirtieth Field Artillery. A letter was read from his commander telling how McClure had received his wound while manning his battery and praising his qualities as a soldier.

Forty-four men from the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church participated in the world war.

APPALACHIA.

The Montreat Church—This Church, by reason of its prominence, has a position of influence and power that render it somewhat unique among the Churches of our Assembly. Some of us have had the increasing conviction that this church in its divine life and departments of work and activity should lead the churches of our Assembly in enforcing and illustrating the lessons given here during the Summer conferences.

Should not this church to the full extent of its capacity not only fill its spiritual reservoir during the Conference season, but more especially release and forcibly illustrate as far and as perfectly as can be done with the material within reach the lessons brought here by the conferences?

The present condition of the church holds bright promise of this happy result. The Rev. Anton VerHulst, formerly of Jonesboro, Ark., entered upon his work as pastor in February.

The church celebrated its first sacrament of the Lord's Supper on the first Lord's Day in April. The sacrament, a beautiful and spiritual service, was administered in the forenoon in the Montreat Church and in the evening in the chapel just outside the gate. In the two services the pastor welcomed publicly 19 members that had been received by the session, five by letter and 14 on confession of Christ. The pastor administered the sacrament of baptism to nine.

The church under the earnest and tactful leadership of the new pastor is evidently entering upon a new career. In all its departments it appears to give promise of taking a place of real leadership among our churches and of furnishing that vital link between the Summer conferences from season to season.

R. B. W.

ALABAMA.

Opelika—The Presbytery of East Alabama will meet in this church April 15th. The opening sermon will be preached by the Rev. L. R. Scott, of Montgomery.

Dothan—The pulpit of this church was filled recently by Rev. S. M. Engle, of Baltimore. The church hopes soon to have a permanent pastor.

Troy—Rev. Thomas Wilkinson, of Louisville, has been temporarily supplying this church, and to the great acceptance of the membership.

Tuscaloosa—The baccalaureate sermon of the University of Alabama will be preached this year by Rev. Robert H. McCaslin, of Montgomery. In the afternoon Dr. McCaslin will deliver the commencement sermon for Stillman Institute.

Birmingham—Rev. Dr. Bush, of Lexington, has declined the call, recently extended him by the South Highlands church of this city.

Montgomery—The State Convention of the Christian Endeavor Society will meet in this city April 10-12. Among the prominent speakers to address the convention are Drs. Henry Wade DuBose, T. M. Hunter and George Stuart.

Mobile—The State Convention of the Alabama Sunday School Association will meet in the Government Street Presbyterian Church April 8th-10th.

Montgomery—At the Communion in the First Church Sunday, April 13th, the pastor, Rev. Robert H. McCaslin, welcomed 56 new members into the church, received since the last Communion.

Union Springs—On Sunday night, March 30th, before the largest congregation ever assembled in a church in Union Springs, the Rev. G. W. Belk, of Hendersonville, N. C., General Assembly's Evangelist, brought to a most successful close a two weeks' revival in our church.

All denominations unite in the opinion that we have had the finest revival ever held in these parts. In my humble opinion, Mr. Belk is among the best evangelists that I have listened to. The preaching was of the highest order and Biblical in every sense. There was elegant humor, tender pathos, void of all that is harrowing, force and gentleness beautifully blended, a vivid imagination that made the old Biblical characters stand out before you in flesh and blood, and with it all a simplicity that won the young and old.

As a result of such unusual manifestation of the Spirit of God in our midst, there were forty additions to the church and one hundred reconsecrations. Every denomination has been revived and quickened, and men and women interested in the church have caught a new vision of life and service for the Master. The pastor of the Baptist church at the last service expressed the sentiment of the entire community when he said that we should have Mr. Belk with us next year in a union meeting. If there is any church in need of a season of revival, I recommend Mr. Belk to you unqualifiedly and assure you of the very best meeting you could desire.

C. K. Taffe, Pastor.

GEORGIA.

Decatur—Since the coming of Dr. D. P. McGeachy as pastor of the Decatur Church on October 1, there has been a wonderful development in all phases of the work. There have been about forty accessions to the church. The Sunday school has grown from 400 members to 635; and the contributions during the six months have amounted to about $1,400, mostly for benevolences. The church societies have all taken on new life and have made most encouraging progress, both in spiritual growth and in giving to the spread of the Gospel. The every member canvass was thoroughly made after careful preparation and resulted in pledges amounting to over $16,000 for the benevolences, current expenses, and reduction of the church debt. The people are thoroughly united and have a heart to work; and the next year will doubtless see a greater proportionate advance than the last six months have shown.

Atlanta—The New Church in Atlanta—In one sense this is not a new church, for the organization is sixty years old, years of usefulness and power. But the building is new, and beautiful examples of scholastic Gothic architecture, its extended lines and simple brick front producing a building of impressive dignity.

On April 7th it was dedicated free of debt with an attendance of probably 1,500 people. Dr. T. M. McConnell, supplying the Central Church, took part. The sermon was preached by the pastor, Rev. J. S. Lyons, from Isa. 61:2.

Among the other equipment of the church of which they are especially proud is a fine organ, now in process of building under the supervision of its talented organist, Mr. Charles M. Sheldon.

When completed it will rank among the finest and most beautiful instruments in the South. It will have 59 complete stops.

With such a building and served by such a pastor, the church now enters upon a new period of usefulness.

Cuthbert, Macon Presbytery—The finances of this church are in better condition than they have been during the present pastorate. The pastor, Rev. A. H. Atkins, preached two sermons during the recent "drive" on the Tithes. In response twenty-nine officers and members covenanted to set apart one-tenth of their net income to charitable and religious purposes. The budget of the church was doubled and the pastor's salary was increased $200. A Tithers' League will be organized, the membership of which will be increased from time to time. We are not afraid that any wrong will be done in giving money thus secured to the benevolent causes of the church. Forty members have been added to the membership of this church during the present pastorate with very little material to draw from. The pastor will conduct a series of services in this church next week preparatory to communion services on the third Sabbath of April. The report that will be sent to Presbytery will be the best during the pastorate.

Atlanta, West End Church—This church has just closed one of the best years in its history. After a careful campaign that was marked by gathering momentum and increasing enthusiasm, sixty men went out on Sunday afternoon, March 16th, and canvassed the congregation in behalf of the three and a half million campaign fund and also for the local budget. Both were heavily oversubscribed. That evening, the pastor, Rev. Robert F. Kirkpatrick, began a series of meetings, continuing for two weeks, in which he did the preaching. The music was in charge of an experienced director and the singing was led by two large chorus choirs. The results were very gratifying indeed, both in professions of faith and in accessions to the church and awakened spiritual life throughout the congregation. The men who were engaged in the three and a half million campaign were so much pleased with the organization they perfected that they decided to make it permanent. Accordingly they met in the Sunday school room on the evening of April 8th for supper, after which they formally organized themselves into the Men's Association. So marked has been the development of the work within recent months that officers have found it necessary to add to the working force a church secretary who has been secured for the place, and has entered upon his duties with great enthusiasm.

FLORIDA.

St. Petersburg—At the regular quarterly communion service, April 6th, Rev. W. J. Garrison announced the reception of four members by certificate. E. J. Y.

De Funiak Springs—On April 6th a large congregation was present and observed the communion of the Lord's Supper and the pastor announced nine new members, seven by letter and two on restatement of faith. Also two infants were baptized. Despite the war conditions the church has had a year of gratifying success. The Sunday School, Ladies' Aid Society and other activities of the Church have held up well the attendance on public worship has been excellent and the plan for a new house of worship is now being pushed with vigor. To a degree that is most gratifying and unusual, the people of the congregation put their church foremost.

Daniel J. Currie, Pastor.

Jacksonville—The members of the Springfield Presbyterian Church who have been worshipping in a temporary building at Sixth and Silver Streets, are planning to erect a magnificent building at an estimated cost of $50,000. Rev. W. A. Cleveland, formerly of Franklin, Tenn., is the pastor and since he assumed charge there have been received about forty new members.

At a congregational meeting held Sunday night the following additional deacons were elected: H. C. Bullard, C. H. Haile, E. C. Weimer, F. L. White and W. W. Orr.

The committee recently appointed by the congregation to study ways and means to secure funds to erect a suitable place of worship made its report last night to an enthusiastic congregation and the report was unanimously adopted.

A campaign committee including the men who recently served in the every member canvass was asked to proceed at once to make an every member canvass for funds.

As soon as sufficient funds are secured, active work on construction will begin. Charles T. Paxon was selected as campaign manager.

LOUISIANA.

New Orleans—The Claiborne Avenue Church will hold a series of meetings beginning April 20. Dr. Robert Hill, of Tyler, Texas, will do the preaching.

The fifth anniversary of the pastor, Rev. A. H. Zeimer, was observed March 16. The congregation has petitioned Presbytery to permit them to increase substantially the salary of their pastor.

MISSOURI.

Springfield—From the Springfield Leader we take the following item: The annual congregational meeting of the Tabernacle Presbyterian Church was held Wednesday evening at the church, and was presided over by the Rev. W. Hooper Adams, who acted as moderator. The meeting was preceded by a chicken pie supper served by the women of the congregation.

The annual business session was opened with prayer by Elder W. W. Talbot. Elder T. J. Humphries, as clerk of session, read a report showing 112 members in good standing. Deacon E. A. Barbour gave a report of the finances which showed all bills paid and a substantial balance in the treasury. Benevolences likewise showed an increase over the previous year.

Encouraging reports were read by Mrs. Charles Boehmer for the Ladies' Auxiliary; Mrs. C. F. Kanning for the Ladies' Missionary Society; W. W. Talbot for Sunday school; Miss Effie M. Miller for the Young People's Society of C. E.; Miss Pansy Knight for the Intermediate Society, and Miss Mary Ellis Barbour for the Junior Society of Christian Endeavor, the patrol of Boy Scouts by Scoutmaster David Sherman. All these reports showed activity and progress. A piano was bought during the year by a committee headed by Mrs. L. D. Rosenbauer. After these reports had been made the congregation by unanimous vote elected H. L. Kann an elder and C. E. eWaver and Joseph Fisher deacons.

The Tabernacle congregation is only three years old, and worships in a temporary edifice until the property at the corner of Jefferson and E. Elm streets can be sold and with the proceeds and other funds a permanent church erected. The church was without a minister during half of this past fiscal year.

TENNESSEE.

Murfreesboro, First Church—Rev. J. Addison Smith, pastor. At the April Communion there were received in this church eight members.

Glen Levell Church, Nashville—On March 30th, the following officers recently elected were duly ordained: Ruling Elders, J. M. Overton, Geo. S. Parrish, W. B. Lish; Deacons, O. G. Hallinger, Carl D. Mitchell, Dr. John Overton, Prof. R. H. McNally.

Nashville Presbytery—On March 26th at a special meeting of Nashville Presbytery in the First Presbyterian Church, Rev. R. Q. Riley was released to unite with the Presbytery of Waco, U. S. A., in order that he might accept a call to the Presbyterian Church at Hubbard, Texas.

Rev. E. D. McDougall, D. D., was received from the Presbytery of Columbia and order taken for his installation as pastor of the Franklin Church.

Rev. E. D. Witherspoon was received from the Presbytery of Meridian and order taken for his installation as pastor of Smyrna and Florence churches.

The sympathy of the Presbytery was extended to Rev. and Mrs. M. W. Millard in the loss of their son, Ernest, a promising student in Columbia Seminary.

W. C. Alexander, Stated Clerk.

Deaths.

Patterson—The session of the Presbyterian Church of Wilmore, Ky., records its heartfelt grief at the taking by death of one of its members, Mr. William C. Patterson, on January 19, 1919, at Douglas, Ga.

The Bible commends as the chief qualification of a steward that "He be found faithful." This is the first word that comes to us as we think of our departed brother. He was pre-eminently and always faithful. Nothing was ever attempted by the church that he did not most heartily support. We never had a service but he was there if it was possible for him to come. He contributed cheerfully and most liberally to everything. He worked constantly for the peace and prosperity of the Kingdom, and we shall miss him.

We thank God for the life that he lived among us and rejoice as we think of his business in the presence of the Lord. Done by order of the session.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

Mrs. Jessie Kirkwood Henderson.

At a meeting today of the Ladies' Missionary Society of Bethel Presbyterian Church, Walterboro, South Carolina, the following resolutions relative to the death of Mrs. Jessie Kirkwood Henderson, which occurred on the 21st day of February, 1919, was unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our midst our beloved member, Mrs. Jessie Kirkwood Henderson, Therefore, Be it Resolved, First, That in the death of Mrs. Henderson our society has lost one of its most active, energetic and useful members, who for a number of years has enthusiastically supported and aided in the direction of our society.

Second, Be it further resolved that while we are deeply grieved, and keenly feel the loss of our beloved member, yet we bow in humble submission to the Divine will and extend to her family our sincere sympathy.

Third, That a page in the minute book be dedicated to her memory.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be published in the Presbyterian Standard, also in the Press and Standard and that a copy thereof be given to the family of the deceased.

Ina D. Savage,
Allie Gray Moore,
S. G. Wichman.

IN MEMORIAM.

Robert Craig Burgess.

Departed this life October 19, 1918, after a brief illness of influenza, resulting in pneumonia. He was born July 4, 1875, in Clarendon county, South Carolina, of Christian parents. His father and grandfather were officers in the Presbyterian Church, Bethel Harmony Presbytery.

Being tenderly and conscientiously reared in a Christian and pious home he early united with the Bethel Church of which he was a consistent member for a number of years until he removed his membership to the Midway Church. In this church he was elected a deacon and actively discharged the duties of this office until his death.

He was married November 28, 1907, to Miss Edwina Conyers Evans, a daughter of John S. Evans and Mattie Epps Evans, who with two daughters are left to mourn his loss, together with his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. D. Italy Burgess, of Williamsburg county, South Carolina; also a brother, Mr. Lute Burgess, also of the same place, and two sisters, Mrs. Thomas Fort, of Maysville, S. C., and Mrs. Charles Richardson, of Florence, S. C.

The subject of this sketch was a man of fine character, a kind heart to the unfortunate, a good citizen, an affectionate son and brother, a tender father and husband, a faithful friend.

The loss to the Church and community is deeply felt. His early and sudden death is one of those mysterious providences that we cannot understand. We can only say "Thy will be done."

By his pastor,

W. H. Workman.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Annie May.

"One more to welcome us
When we shall cross the intervening space
Between this land and that one over there;
One more to make the strange
Beyond seem fair."

On Mar. 19, 1919, our Heavenly Father in His infinite love and wisdom called our beloved friend and co-worker, Mrs. Annie May, to her rest in Heaven. Therefore, we, the members of the Senior Auxiliary of Carthage Presbyterian Church, offer the following resolutions:

First, That we reverently bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father who knoweth best.

Second, That through her death we have lost a worthy member of eminent Christian character.

Third, That we extend to the bereaved daughter and relatives our deepest sympathy, and commend them to Him who said "My grace is sufficient for thee."

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be recorded in the minutes of our society; and copies sent to the Moore County News and Presbyterian Standard for publication.

Mrs. E. H. Camp,
Mrs. J. L. Currie,
Mrs. Evaline Blue.

Children's Department

LIKES THE LETTERS.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl 12 years old. I go to school to the Flow school house. I am in the sixth grade at school. My teacher's name is Miss Pattie Johnston. I like her fine. My school has stopped now. I have two brothers in France. My mother takes your nice paper and I enjoy reading the letters and stories in it. I hope my letter won't reach the waste basket as I want to surprise my mother.

Your little friend,
Beulah Pinyan.
Mecklenburg, N. C.

SCHOOL HAS CLOSED.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old and go to school every day, in the third grade. My teacher is Miss Callie Creech.

Our school closes today and I am very sorry for I love my teacher and hate to see her leave. I got first prize for having the most head marks, and then I got another for not missing a day this term.

I go to the Presbyterian Sunday School every Sunday at "Mizpah" of which my father is superintendent. Rev. J. L. Ray is an engaged worker for the Sunday school.

I am always glad for the "Standard" to come so I can read the "Children's Department."

I am closing by asking you a question, "Who made the Blind Man See and the Lame Man Walk?"

Your little friend,
Ermia Narron.
Kenly, N. C.

LOVED HER PASTOR.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl, was nine years old Friday, March 30th. I like to read the letters and stories in all the church papers.

I have one sister and one brother older than myself. We all go to Sunday school and Christian Endeavor.

I have recited the Child's Catechism and got my Testament. I am on the Shorter Catechism now. We have no pastor now. Our pastor, Rev. W. B. Arrowood, died January 18, 1919. We all loved him and miss him so much.

Ellen Hope.

Sharon, S. C.

PASTOR IN FRANCE.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old. I go to Raeford graded school. I am in the third grade. Cousin Annie McKeithan is my teacher.

I am not in school this week on account of my sister having "flu."

I have a brother and sister older than

I am and a brother younger.

My little brother's name is Woodrow. He is five years old.

I go to Sunday school at Bethel. Mamma is my teacher.

Rev. W. C. Brown is preaching for us while our pastor is in Uncle Sam's service. I like him fine.

Our pastor is Rev. Eugene Alexander. He is now gone to France to bring back some of our boys. We all like him so much and will be glad when he gets back.

I have learned the names of all the Books in the Bible.

If my letter doesn't reach the waste basket I will write again.

Your new friend,
Katie Bell McLean.
Raeford, N. C., Route 1.

AN INTERESTING QUESTION.

Dear Standard:

I am a boy eleven years old living in the western part of Rowan county on a red land farm.

I help on the farm during the summer and during the winter I go to school.

Miss Mary Earnhardt is my teacher, and I am in the fifth grade.

I have two sisters and two brothers. My Sunday school teacher is Mrs. R. N. Johnston, and our pastor is Rev. E. D. Brown, and we like him fine.

I hope you can publish my letter as I want to surprise my mother.

I will close by asking a question: What child became a prince by crying at the right time?

Your friend,
Robert Sloop.

WILLIE'S AND TEDDY'S SLEIGHRIDE.

March had "come in like a lion" roaring and blustering about and leaving the ground covered with snow.

But the sun was shining brightly and Willie was happy to go to school in such weather. Teddy, his little brother, who was four years old, was happy also until he discovered that he had lost one of his little blue Christmas mittens, and mother would not allow the little fellow to go out to play in the snow that morning without mittens on both hands. You may know that he was something of a baby because he cried when his mother said:

"No, my little son, you can't go out of doors to play this cold morning until you find your mitten. It may be in the house, because I saw you take them both off last night when you came in with Willie."

"Don't cry, little brother, I'll help you hunt," promised Willie, but his tones were rather cross, and he hunted for the lost mitten in a cross fashion, as if he really wished to say: "Why were you so careless, anyway? Why didn't you put both your mittens in your coat pocket?"

Mother hunted for that mitten, too, and grandma and Sister Nettie; so did baby brother, but when Willie went away to school the mitten had not been found.

"And I'll be late to school if I don't hurry," said Willie, as he took his lunch-box and started. "If you're late nowadays you have to stand on the floor five minutes with the whole school looking at you! It's a new rule!"

Willie must have been sorry that his tones were so cross when he spoke of being late, because after he passed the five-acre field where he and little Teddy had played in the snow the day before, he said aloud: "I wasn't to blame because he lost his mitten!"

The boy was some distance from home when he reached in his coat pocket for his handkerchief. Out came the handkerchief and out came a little blue mitten. Then Willie was seriously unhappy. He picked up the little mitten. How it came in his pocket was more than he knew, but there it was, and it meant that perhaps little Ted could not play in the snow all day; and that might be the last snow of the season.

Willie walked on slowly for a few steps, feeling more and more unhappy.

At last he stood still, then said to himself: "Well, if I have to stand on the floor, I'll stand on the floor, that is all!" And back home he ran to carry the little blue mitten to his unhappy little brother.

"Oh, Willie!" exclaimed his mother, when the door opened and a blue mitten was tossed into the house. "I'm afraid you'll be late to school now, my dear child."

"Well, never mind, 'long's we are all happy," answered Willie most cheerfully.

"Wait," called his father, who had just come in from the barn. "I'll hitch up and drive you to school in the cutter, Willie, and Nettie can get Teddy ready to go, too! This is probably your last chance for a sleighride this year."

"It was my fault, anyway, Willie," Nettie confessed, as she buttoned little brother's coat. "After you left, I remembered that I picked up the mitten and thought I put it in Teddy's pocket, but evidently I put it in your pocket instead. Stand still, Teddy, or I can't get this top button buttoned!"

"It's hard work to thand shtill when you're so happy," declared the little fellow.

Thus it came about that Willie went flying along to school that morning in a cutter, behind jingling sleighbells, and reached the schoolhouse just in time to march in with the other children when the bell rang; and Willie was happy every minute of that day!—Lutheran.

TEXAS

First Southern Church, Austin—The reports to Presbytery from this church show 91 additions the past year—31 by profession and 61 by letter, or a net gain in membership of 10 per cent. The Sunday school enrollment is 485, gifts to beneficence $2,650, and to all causes $17,000. A burdensome debt was entirely paid in December. And for the coming year both the benevolent and local budgets were fully subscribed. On Wednesday evening, April 8th, a welcome service was held for the members who joined the past year. The quarterly communion service on the first Sunday of April was by reason of number of communicants and the spirit of solemnity and worship, a memorable occasion. With grateful hearts the church begins the new year.

VIRGINIA.

Petersburg, Second—The Communion service was observed on the first Sunday of April. The session announced the names of fourteen new members received on profession of faith. The financial report of the year just closed is the best in the history of the church, the total contributions being $20,619. Of this amount $9,439 was given for congregational purposes, and $11,180 for benevolences, foreign missions receiving $6,605. Last year the Church gave for all causes $12,129. The resident membership is $523.

Anderson Memorial Church, Martinsville at its annual congregational meeting, which was held the last Sunday in March, concurred in the request of the pastor, Rev. William P. McCorkle, that they unite with him in asking Presbytery to dissolve the relations between them. This request the pastor based upon "conditions, for some of which, at least, neither pastor nor congregation were responsible." The dissolution of the pastorate is to take effect the 15th of May, which will mark the expiration of its twelfth year. From the beginning the pastorate of this church has been an almost impossible one for one man to serve, the membership consisting of a congregation in an important and growing county town, with a country constituency scattered over half a county. Mr. McCorkle has served the congregation in town regularly, giving the fifth Sundays and such week-night services as were possible to the country members, who were so scattered that to serve them efficiently would have required him to maintain regular services in seven mission points. It is hoped that Presbytery will place a home missionary in the county, leaving the next pastor to serve the congregation in town all his time. The Presbyterian constituency in the county has grown very much during this pastorate.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond. The address of Rev. John McNeill, the celebrated Scotch preacher, to the students in the Seminary chapel on "The Minister as a Speaking Man," was one which will never be forgotten by those who heard it. In an informal, familiar, racy way he described his own method and experience in learning to preach without manuscript. It was a unique combination of sound advice, sparkling humor and evangelical earnestness.

Lieutenant Locke White, who graduated in 1917, and who is just back from his work as Chaplain with the army in France, was a visitor to the campus on Sunday and received the heartiest of greetings from a multitude of friends.

The Seminary community was shocked by the cablegram from Korea announcing the death of Rev. Paul S. Crane and Mrs. Eugene Bell, two of our missionaries, who were killed by a railroad train striking the motor car in which they were riding near Seoul. The message states that Rev. Eugene Bell and Mrs. Crane, who were also in the motor car, escaped with their lives. Mr. Crane, who was from Mississippi, graduated from the Seminary only six years ago (class of 1913). His brother, Rev. J. C. Crane, also of Korea, who was a member of the same class, has been pursuing post-graduate studies in the Seminary this year along with a number of other furloughed missionaries. Rev. Eugene Bell is from Kentucky, and was a student in the Seminary in 1893. Mrs. Bell was a sister of Rev. William F. Bull, of Norfolk, Va. (class of 1899), now at Kunsan, Korea.

Mary Alexander, Rec. Sec.

Presbyterian Auxiliary of St. Johns, Fla.—The Presbyterian Auxiliary of St. Johns held its 26th annual in the beautiful city of Orlando, Fla., April 1-2, 1919.

The watchword of the Auxiliary was "Service," which was brought before the meeting most forcibly and instructively at each session by the Bible teacher, Mrs. A. McCloud.

The attendance was fine and the program interesting and helpful. The people of Orlando were most hospitable.

The narrative reports were encouraging and the chart report showed an increase in membership and gifts.

Mrs. J. N. Whitner, historian, gave a history of St. Johns' Presbyterian which deserves special mention. There were many excellent addresses, including one by Mr. Stegall, of Luebo, Africa. The young people's work was especially emphasized.

The Presbyterian recommended that each local Auxiliary count every female member of the church as a member of the Auxiliary and make efforts to bring them into active

Story and Incident

Livingstone's Bodyguard.

Ralph Welles Keeler.

"GO slowly, Susi; the jar hurts my back." Dr. David Livingstone sank back in his kitanda and closed his eyes. He was on his return trip from Ujiji, where Mr. Stanley had found him. The journey was a tedious one, for he was sick. The malarial fever—Africa's dread enemy—was holding him tighter and tighter in its death-grasp.

For the last time Dr. Livingstone had seen the water a sea of gold as the sun set over Lake Tanganyika. He could no longer cross the streams astride of Susi's shoulders. Soon they laid him flat in a grass-filled canoe. When they were prepared to leave the little African village, where was the big chief with the Arab costume and the red fez, he was too weak to go out to the door to the kitanda which his strong men carried. So one side of the little house where Dr. Livingstone had spent the night was broken down to allow it to be brought to the spot where he was lying.

And now in Chitambo's village he was dying. His bed was raised from the floor by sticks and grass. It was near the end of the hut, close by the bales and boxes and the precious medicine chest. Outside, by the door, a bright fire burned, and near it, where he could hear his master's voice, the boy Majwara slept. The faithful black men took turns at watching beside the fires. Their hearts were sad, for they loved the good white chief.

Once during the night he asked, "How many days is it to the Luapula?" Later in the night he asked for the calomel and some water. Then he said, "All right; you can go out now." These were his last words, for when Majwara called Susi at 4 o'clock the next morning their master's suffering was over. On a box a candle flickered faintly, and in the dim light Susi saw his master by the bedside on his knees. His body was stretched forward and his head was buried in his hand upon the pillow. Softly they approached him and touched his cheek. It was cold. Bana, the master, was dead.

A cock crew outside the village and the band of men huddled and cowered around the watch-fire. They were at the farthest point from home, and without a leader.

In the morning Chitambo, leading his people, and accompanied by his wives, came to the hut to pay their respects to the dead white chief. Chitambo wore a broad red cloth which covered his shoulders, while a wrapping of native cotton cloth, which he wore around his waist, fell down to his ankles. All carried bows, arrows and spears. The women looked on with curious eyes, while two drummers beat the death lamentations on their funeral drums, and the servants fired volley after volley into the air. After the mourning was over and the customary presents had been given, Dr.

Livingstone's servants bore his body to another hut outside the village. Here a special mourner came, wearing anklets of hollow seed-vessels filled with rattling pebbles. He danced and sang this song:

"Today the Englishman is dead
Who has different hair from ours;
Come round and see the Englishman."

After these funeral rites were over, Farijala and Carras carefully cut open the body of their dead master to remove his heart, and put salt in the body instead. Then the precious heart was placed in a strong tin flour-box, fastened securely, and buried in a hole dug four feet deep. Jacob Wainwright then opened the prayer-book, and, while these African heroes crowded around the heart of the man they loved, he softly spoke the words of the burial service—"earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust."

With aching hearts the faithful followers of the great explorer placed the body where it would dry. After fourteen days it was wrapped up in calico like a package, and placed in a large piece of bark from a myonga tree. Around this cylinder a piece of sail-cloth was sewed, and the strange package was lashed to a pole so that two men could carry it.

With the body of Dr. Livingstone and the tin box which contained his notes and diaries, these brave fellows started out for the coast. First Susi and Chuma carried him, then Chowpera and Farijala.

Sickness, battles, hunger and thirst assailed them on their march of sorrow. Dr. Livingstone's donkey was killed by a lion. Jacob Wainwright was lost. Village chiefs refused to allow the dead body to come through. They had to pretend to bury the body. Removing the body and tying it up like a bale of cloth, they went through a make-believe burial with the bark case, carrying it away to the woods and destroying it. On they went, however, never caring for the pain and trouble until they came out at the coast town of Bagamoio. Their journey of love was over. Others were to bear their master's body over the sea to its resting-place in Westminster Abbey.

With great longing the followers of the white chief gave over his body to others. They had brought Bana's body to the coast. This was all that they could do.

But when the ship which bore him to England lifted anchor and sailed from their sight, they turned their faces once more toward the depths of Africa. Westminster Abbey might claim that part of their master which they had brought to Bagamoio. For theirs was the richer portion. They knew that in the little village of Chitambo stood two high, thick posts with a strong cross-piece connecting them like a lintel of a door painted with tar. And underneath this simple monument lay the heart of Bana. Far more than his body these swarthy native heroes loved the hero's heart. And Bana was a hero.

service. The field secretary, Miss Agnes Davidson, will be in St. Johns' Presbyterian in May, and much help is expected by the weaker Auxiliaries.

Mrs. R. C. Maxwell.

Orange Presbyterian Auxiliary—The 22d annual meeting of Orange Presbyterian Auxiliary was held in the First Church, Burlington, N. C., April 7-9.

There were one hundred and seven delegates and visitors present, thus showing a full representation from the fifty-three Auxiliaries. The program was full of interest and the speakers were exceptionally fine.

Capt. and Mrs. M. L. Swinehart and Miss Lavalette Dupuy, all of Korea, gave intensely human and entertaining pictures of missionary work in the land of their labors.

Miss Mabel Hall, of Kentucky, was the interesting speaker on Home Missions.

Miss Carrie Lee Campbell, of Richmond, Va., was present throughout the meeting and gave very clever and useful demonstrations on how to teach Foreign Missions.

A quartette from the First Church, Greensboro, was present one evening and gave four very enjoyable selections. The choir of the Burlington Church rendered a very beautiful musical program each evening.

Mrs. H. E. Gurney, of Monroe, held the Bible study hour each day, and there was no part of the program more important, helpful, or delightful, and all felt a spiritual uplift in following Mrs. Gurney in these four prayer studies.

The business part of the program was full, and the Presbyterian officers and the delegates in their reports showed nothing but interest, work and growth.

The pastor and members of the church were untiring in their efforts to make the delegates and visitors welcome and comfortable.

The theme of the 1919 meeting was Prayer, and the slogan, "Every member of the Women's Auxiliary a regular attendant at the mid-week prayer service."

This was one of the most successful meetings ever held.

Miscellaneous

THE SWEARING PREACHER.

He had just come back from France, and had gone into the pulpit to tell us about fierce battles and heroic deeds. He told us at the beginning that we must not be surprised if he used strange language for a preacher; that some things could not be properly described without what we have been used to calling profanity. He assured us that noble and righteous souls, under war conditions, used cursewords.

He showed us. It was poor swearing. He said he was a Presbyterian, and swore as a Presbyterian minister might be expected to swear if he swore at all. I know what swearing is when I hear it. I have heard sailors swear, and mule drivers, and cattle men from Texas, and I have listened to veterans of the Cuban campaign describe the "embalmed beef" and other things supplied to them when Alger was Secretary of War.

A preacher may quit preaching and take to swearing, but the chances are that he will make as great a failure as it as preachers usually do when they abandon their calling and go into some other business.

I doubt the necessity of profanity in describing what took place in Europe. I once heard an Armenian gentleman describe the destruction of his people by the Turks. He told the story without profanity and without fury. He placed before us, in quite simple language, scenes of unspeakable horror. Alva W. Taylor sat beside me and a greater pacifist than Alva W. Taylor does not exist. At the close of the address Professor Taylor remarked, with fervor: "I am in favor of one war, anyway; I would be glad of a chance to fight those Turks."

No doubt good men have blasphemed at times. Washington wasted a precious moment or two in that way at Monmouth, in startling contrast to his usual habit. Grant swore not at all, whether commanding a wagon train stuck in the mud of Mexico, an unruly regiment, or a broken army fighting a losing battle amid the flaming woods of Shiloh. The great generals of the late war seem to have won victories without blasphemy. There are no anecdotes of Foch, Petain, Haig or Pershing in which profanity plays a part in the story. Evidently swearing is not a military necessity. I do not remember what victories were written down to the credit of the army that "swore terribly in Flanders," but I doubt if they equaled the exploits of the host that fought under Fairfax and Cromwell, in which no man swore without paying a fine. Swearing and praying do not go together, especially if the praying is public. Swearing covers the soul with callosities. Those who return swearing strange oaths may be better men than they were when they went, but they are not better because they swear. A profane disposition is an insidious spiritual poison. Swearing is the outward expression of inward sleeping sickness. No desire to serve men can fully compensate for the habit of calling upon God to condemn (or damn) a fellow-being, an inanimate object, an animal or an abstraction.—The Christian Century.

THE HOME OF GOOD FURNITURE

A STATEMENT OF THE PRESBYTERIANS IN THE CLASS AT BLUE RIDGE, MARCH 17-26, 1919.

Facing the Reconstruction Period in civil, economic and religious life following the great war, the Southeastern Department of the Y. M. C. A. planned and with the approval of and the backing of the War Work Council, is giving to the churches of our Southland through groups of ministers and laymen of all denominations from cities and counties all over the South, a program of instruction and inspiration to better fit the churches to meet the situation and not only enlist the returning soldier in Christian service, but call the church to more adequately serve and uplift as well as save the souls of the people of their several communities.

This purpose is being carried out by a series of lectures, discussions and conferences led by specialists—Y. M. C. A. leaders, ministers, churchmen and soldiers. These conferences bring out clearly the facts and conditions both of the beliefs of the church and its mission to humanity and suggest plans based on the tested experiences of those leading them, for meeting the problems confronting the church.

These men leading in this work are many of them men of deep scholarship

A SILLY PARABLE THAT FITS.

A certain family had employed a maid servant for two whole years and, as the second anniversary approached, the master of the house called her before him and said:

Delia, you have been a pretty good girl. You were green at first and broke a lot of dishes, but you learned rapidly and worked willingly. Your kitchen is in good order and you have brought about many improvements in our daily menu. Now that your term is coming to an end I hope that you will seek re-election.

"You don't know what I mean? Of course you understand that good jobs like this must be passed around. There are lots of other girls who never did a tap of housework that would be glad to have your good home and draw your wages. A number of them handed me their cards today and one of them offered me a glass of soda water. Some of them have been active job hunters for ten years and it is about time they were getting something.

"But, as I said, I hope you will be a candidate for re-election, and when the family comes to vote on filling the place for the next two years, I am quite sure you will get some votes; for, as I said, you are a good worker, although not as affable and popular as some of the other girls. Maybe you have been too busy for that. What? You are going to leave for a place where good service is appreciated? How unreasonable!"

Can any one imagine this silly rigmarole in a well-ordered home? Yet it is just the situation that every public official faces. If he is crooked or incompetent, he cannot be removed until the end of his term. If he works hard and becomes useful, he must be measured periodically in competition with a lot of untried job pirates who have nothing to do but peddle campaign cigars and campaign gossip.

American government will not be on the same common sense plane as the American home until officials are elected to hold office as long as they make good.—Dependable Highways.

A CUP OF COLD WATER.

On the evening of the battle of Chickamauga, an Illinois regiment that had been engaged all day was falling back under orders. The men did not know that they were retreating; they supposed, on the contrary, that they were only withdrawing for the night behind the picket lines. They were in high spirits, ready for battle again in the morning. As a matter of fact, the flank of their division had been turned; General Thomas found himself obliged to change the position of his right wing.

As they passed an old straw stack, one soldier called out to his comrades that here was a better bed than he had in camp, and that he was tired enough to stop. Thinking himself well within the lines and close to his own regiment, he stayed; the others passed on.

He pulled straw from the stack, and made himself a good bed, when he heard groaning. It was not yet dark, and he made his way to the place where the groans came. There lay a Confederate soldier—shot through both hips.

"For the love of God, cover me up!" the wounded man pleaded. He had lost much blood, and was faint and cold.

Bringing straw, the Union soldier laid it round him, covered him with his blanket, and laid straw upon that.

"Have you any water?" asked the Southerner.

The Union soldier's canteen was a third full; he put it to the lips of the wounded man.

"Are you a Yank?" the latter asked. "Yes."

"And like as not the very Yank that shot me?"

"I hope not. In any case, we're friends tonight."

"What a pity we weren't always friends. Yank, have you got any more of that water?"

The terrible gunshot thirst was upon him; he drank till not a drop was left in the canteen. Then he said:

"Hit don't seem hardly right—two men that know how to be kind to one another after sundown, tryin' all day to blow daylight through each other, does it now?"

"No, comrade, it don't. And like as not both Christians, too."

"Yes, that's so. Like as not both Christians. Well, you've done your best by me. Good night."

Returning to his straw bed, the Yankee was soon fast asleep. He was awakened some hours later by voices and a light. In sudden fear he heard his wounded acquaintance call out excitedly:

"He's right over thar! He's right over thar!"

The next moment the light approached and he saw a man in a uniform of gray standing over him.

"Are you a Federal soldier?" he asked. "Yes."

"I am a Confederate surgeon. We have the field and are caring for the wounded. We are now removing a wounded man to the hospital, but he refuses to go till you are safe. The picket lines are forming and you are within them. Your camp lies over in that direction. I should advise you to move fast."

The Union soldier did move fast, but he stopped a moment to take the hand of the wounded man.

"You've saved me from capture," he said. "I want to thank you."

"Hit don't seem hardly right to let you be taken," said the Confederate. "Don't be the Bible say that if you give a cup of cold water you shall not lose your reward? Good night, Yank. Now you skedaddle."

"Good night. God bless you!" And the Union soldier disappeared in the darkness.—Selected.

SIR DOUGLAS HAIG, CHRISTIAN.

Evidence accumulates that the men who were in the high command of the Allied forces of democracy are genuine Christian men. A brother of Dr. Hugh Black, of Union Seminary, New York, Maj. James M. Black, of Edinburgh, a chaplain with the British forces at the front, writing to a friend, said:

"It was the dark Sunday of the German push—I was at general headquarters. Sir Douglas Haig was very quiet. He came up and thanked me after the services for the comfort I had given him, and he remarked: 'Remember, the battle is not ours, but God's.'"

A Northampton Scot has been describing, in the Northampton Daily Echo, a Scottish service at the front attended by Sir Douglas Haig. The commander-in-chief arrived at the head of a few officers, making altogether, with the privates, a congregation of about sixty. The chaplain talked with an accent reminiscent of Sir J. M. Barrie. "I confess," writes the Northampton Scot, "to being more interested in the great soldier than in the sermon. Here is the man whom the lads 'up there' speak of affectionately as 'Duggie,' and now he is taking part with us in this very simple service, in this very simple church, I begin to understand why. A glimpse of the man who is the directing brain of our army, in this quiet church on this Sabbath morning, far from all the turmoil, looking, as he does, full of health and full of hope, makes me realize that he is a man who is in agreement with the preacher in his claim that the source of our strength is eternal."

How he did fight in that conversation for his agnosticism, and how he did beat us off as we sought to press upon him the need of Christ's atonement and the claims of Christianity upon him! A needy and interesting soul we soon found him to be; and, as our train neared its destination, he seemed reluctant to let us go. His greedy eyes seemed to demand our staying and the impression which we gathered was that he had been allowed in some way to drift out to sea, but that even yet he was rich material for the soul-winner and the Gospel. A flippant skeptic he had become, but his skepticism hardly punctured his skin.

Oh, think of the thousands and thousands of such fellows who are just as valuable and in greater peril than the heathen abroad! Let not the heathen be neglected, but let us remember that beneath the sneering, blatant exterior of thousands of our young men are souls feeding on just such stuff and yet are eager to listen and drink from anyone who brings the real water of life.—Baptist World.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate lining of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

FIGHTING IN THE WILDERNESS.

It occurred in the smoking room on the train from New Orleans to Memphis. Utter strangers they were to us—one of them a young United States army officer, the other apparently a young business man. Earnest words were darting back and forth between them, words which soon caught our attention as we discovered that they were discussing the church and Christianity.

"I tell you," spoke up the young officer, "the church has got to cut out all of its old stuff and put up some new stuff."

"Yes, sir," spoke up the other; "they have got to do it sure. The old business might have done well back in the past, but the men are not going to stand for it in these times."

And thus the gattling gun rattled on, with its fusillade against the church and its out-of-date theories and methods. The shot was getting hotter and hotter. In fact, the whole place seemed to suffer from a rapid rise in temperature and we found ourselves growing restless. Our lips grew rebellious and threatened to get unlocked. Finally we asked the young officer if a gentle inquiry from us would be regarded as a casus belli—or words to that effect.

The officer cut his eye around in our direction and gave us permission to speak; at least, he seemed to be too surprised to forbid our speaking.

We expressed our deep interest in what they were saying and as courteously as we could we prodded them with questions, hoping to empty their hearts of all that they had on the inside on the subject of Christianity, and of their own personal religion. What a revelation it gave us! In what a bleak wilderness their souls seemed to be traveling! Even the possibility of a first cause was a concession that the young officer appeared loath to grant. He preferred to hang an interrogation point over such a possibility. A Methodist church he once joined, but his membership he treated practically as a farce.

Be not o'ermastered by thy pain,
But cling to God, thou shalt not fall;
The floods sweep over thee in vain,
Thou' yet shall rise above them all;
For when thy trial seems too hard to bear,
Lo! God, thy King, hath granted all thy prayer:
Be thou content.

A MISSOURI SCHOOLMA'AM.

Today we are hearing a great deal about the "rural problem." One who has used the most effective methods in dealing with it is Miss Jannette White, a school teacher in Missouri. When she went to Burnham District, Audrian County, Missouri, she found the typical country school. Grass and weeds filled the unkempt school yard; the school house door had a hole in it "large enough to admit a small boy;" and the building was so cold that children sometimes frosted their toes as they studied.

At present the school house presents a very attractive appearance. It has been painted and made sanitary in every respect. Pictures, flags and farm exhibits adorn the walls. Every fall an exhibit of domestic and agricultural science is held there. The school is on the State-approved list, for it gives nine grades and two years of high school. What is more, it is regarded as the model country school, not only of Audrian County, but of Missouri.

How did one young woman bring about such a change? In the first place, she is a born teacher. Then, too, she is a "Big Sister," not only to her pupils, but to the "home folks." She co-operates with the parents in grading school work. She gives the mothers cards on which they grade the girls in dish-washing, sweeping, bed-making, dusting, cooking, laundry work, and sewing. The boys are marked on milking, plowing, filling the wood box, currying horses, and various other chores. Both boys and girls are credited for neat appearance and clean hands and faces. Low voices and polite behaviour have become the rule in Burnham District.

Miss White has used great tact and ingenuity in dealing with the various needs of the pupils. Instead of punishing a boy for laughing in school, she finds out the joke and laughs, too. When winter and heavy snows come, Miss White encourages the boys to build Eskimo huts and tells them all about life in the frozen North. By the time the thaws come, the boys have an excellent idea of how the Eskimos live, and are quite ready to build canals and become Dutch for a while.

Local interests are encouraged. Seeds are bottled and classified; woods of the district are collected and labeled; ground is tested for fertility. The boys and girls are not made to feel that the country has no place or need for the young folks, and that it is beneath them to become farmers and farmers' wives.

Had it not been for the women who stood behind her, it would have been even more difficult for Miss White to accomplish her good work. Through them she has been able to reach the men, who do not hesitate to say that all credit for the success of the movement is due to the women. By working through them, Miss White has influenced the men to vote a levy of sixty-five cents each for the advancement of the school work. Those men now pay the highest rural salary in the State, and furnish a janitor besides. All honor to the plucky, skillful schoolma'am! — The Wellspring.

REVERENCE FOR PUBLIC WORSHIP.

The reverential dignity of worship by the Christians of Japan as described in a recent letter by Mrs. C. T. Willingham, is a rebuke to many churches in America. We are compelled to say that certain of our preachers are to blame for much of the flippancy of modern times in our public worship. The sacredness of the hour is often destroyed by the funny sermons that we sometimes hear. Great evangelists like Sam Jones and Billy Sunday have invaded the holy of holies in our hearts and have set the pace for the buffoon and the clown in the pulpit. The flippant and humorous church service is the bane of our time. Our Seminary which is the training camp for our pastors, ought to lay special stress on pulpit dignity. A great many good people enter the church with hungry hearts and reverent spirits and leave with souls unsatisfied. The Japanese, if they should happen to drop in some of our churches on Sunday morning, would be rudely shocked at the irreverence not only of the people but of the preacher as well. While we have made progress in many directions in Christian work we are persuaded that in the matter of reverence for sacred things we have lost ground. The old-time religious service, while crude and perhaps not attractive, was nevertheless attended with a beautiful dignity and reverence sadly lacking in many of our churches today. A hilarious service has in it not a single element of good taste. The pulpit is certainly not the place for the display of wit; but gentleness should mark the service through and through. The preacher should not roar and storm. His tones should be soft and low. The singing should not be rag-time, but stately and majestic; and the manners of the congregation should befit the occasion which is the hour when we come into the immediate presence of the Almighty. The writer is no Episcopalian but he sometimes wishes that some Baptist churches he knows had a little more Episcopalian decorum and reverence in the worship of the Lord's day. Moses in the presence of the burning bush, took off his shoes because the place where he stood was holy ground. With something of the spirit of Moses we should enter the temple of the Lord to render unto Him the homage of our hearts.

SOME BAD BARGAINS MAN HAS MADE WITH NATURE.

Man may have considerable wisdom, but in dealing with Old Mother Nature, there are many things he needs to learn.

Forty years ago, says an exchange, the planters of Trinidad were in despair. Rats were ravaging the great sugar cane plantations. Traps, cats and ferrets had all proved useless. Ruin stared the planters in the face.

Then some genius suggested the importation of the mongoose. The mongoose is a native of India, a charming furry beast that looks rather like a big and amiable ferret. It makes a delightful pet, but its reputation rests mainly on the fact that it is the deadly enemy of the poisonous cobra and also the finest ratter in the world.

A score of these animals were sent for. Soon there were no more rats. Then the mongoose turned his attention to the chicken yard. Shortly poultry were almost extinct, and eggs at a premium. Next the mongoose cleared out the native birds, and a plague of caterpillars ensued. How are the mighty fallen. Today there is a premium of three shillings on the head of each mongoose, yet the pest is said to be getting worse.

Now the islanders talk of introducing the Indian starling, in the hope of keeping down the grasshoppers which are ravishing the crops, or else of utilizing the Barbados blackbirds for a similar purpose.

But it will be as well to think twice. Rather less than a century ago some homesick Britisher living in Boston sent to England for a couple of pairs of sparrows.

Within less than fifty years the sparrow had established itself in thirty-five states and five territories. It had given up eating insects, and was running riot among the crops. It was said to have been spreading over the country at the rate of 60,000 square miles a year.

The Department of Agriculture was forced to take the strongest measures, and in 1886 the laws protecting wild birds were repealed so far as the sparrows were concerned, and every inducement given to slaughter the little pests. Yet today, after thirty years' battle, the sparrow is still on top. The damage they do to crops is estimated at something like $15,000,000 yearly.

The muskrat, which is an animal many times the size of the rat, has been trapped for generations in British North America for the sale of its fur.

Some twenty years ago a Hungarian land owner imported several pairs of muskrats, and turned them loose in a lake on his own property. They multiplied in surprising fashion, for they had none of the enemies which, in the native country, kept them under control, and for a time the importer reaped quite a considerable income by the sale of the skins.

But the animal soon began to spread, and then came stories of burst dams and broken canal banks. The creatures burrowed everywhere, and each year the tale of damage increased. Just before the great war broke out the Hungarian Government offered a prize of $25,000 to any person who could invent some method of exterminating them.

St. Helena, famous as the island prison of Napoleon, was at one time covered with thick forest. Cattle did not thrive there, and goats were imported to give meat and milk for the settlers. They soon ran wild, and betook themselves to the hills, where they multiplied by thousands, and browsed on the young trees and shrubs. Today the island is little better than a desert.

Sable Island is a great crescent of sand in the Atlantic off Nova Scotia, and for centuries had no inhabitants but gulls and rabbits. Rats were accidentally imported in goods consigned to the light-house, and they became such a pest that in 1880 cats were brought in to cope with them.

That finished the rats. And then the cats turned on the rabbits and wiped them out. The cats became so savage that they were actually a danger, and some bright settler imported a pair of big northern foxes to cope with the cats. The foxes killed the cats and then, having nothing left to eat, they died out. Today Sable Island has only the gulls left.

I never saw a long-faced Christian that amounted to anything. It is worse to meet such a man than to face an east wind in March. What we want is the spirit and confidence of the old martyr who said to a king who threatened to banish him because he would not give up testifying for Christ: "I am not afraid of that, for you cannot banish me from where Christ is." The king said: "Well, I will take away your property." The man replied: "No, you can't; my treasure is laid up in heaven; it is hid with Christ in God." The king said hotly: "I will kill you, then." "You can't do that, either; I have been dead these forty years!" exclaimed the martyr. "What are you going to do with such a fanatic?" asked the king. You can't do anything with him; he has a security and peace which all the kings on earth cannot disturb.—D. L. Moody.

The Enterprise Company, Inc., of Sumter, S. C., are advertising their famous Nancy Hall and Porto Rico Sweet Potato Plants; also all varieties of Tomato, Egg and Pepper plants, at very reasonable prices, so it would appear that there is no reason why everyone should not have a successful "back yard" garden this spring and summer, and take full advantage of the extra hour allowed by enabling everyone to get out doors and do their own gardening. Surely it will pay one to raise a few tomatoes, if nothing else.

Then shall all men's good
Be each man's rule, and universal peace
Lie like a shaft of light across the land,
And like a lane of beams athwart the sea,
Through all the circle of the golden year.

To be in the right place, to be doing the right work, is one of the important considerations for every Christian. It is often possible for a man who has become a failure in one piece of work, to march to an amazing success in another environment.—C. S. Cooper.

"BY AN UNKNOWN DISCIPLE"

This new telling of the life story of Jesus is wonderfully simple, vivid and beautiful. The Beloved Disciple himself, with unerring insight and sympathy, seems to be talking directly to you about his daily companionship with the Great Physician. The teachings of the Master are set in an atmosphere truly oriental and strikingly realistic. The Christ and His Disciples and the persons He meets, greets and touches with healing or comforting hand live for the reader as if seen in a panorama.

I See His Face.

By Rev. L. T. Newland.

I know, O God it is Thy hand
That spread the sky and built the land;
That swung great planets into space,
And sent abroad the human race.
On every side Thy might is known—
'Tis writ with stars, engraved in stone
Before such might I tremble, fall,
And own Thy power is over all.

I read, O God, Thy gracious plan
To conquer sin and rescue man.
While all must praise that justice good
Which does not yield yet spares the rod—
Which has in Christ made plain the way,
That leads from darkness unto day.
Such goodness, mercy, truth and love
Thy boundless grace does daily prove.

And yet, O God, Thou wouldst appear
As some great power to serve with fear;
If only thus I knew Thy mind;
And sought in vain thyself to find.
But though Thy throne with jewels blaze,
Nor angels dare their eyes upraise—
I can in sorrow clearly trace
The tear drops shining on Thy face.

How Many Officers in the Presbyterian Church?

According to our book there are three different officers—Ministers of the Word, Ruling Elders and Deacons. Our Book of Church Order in defining the three officers says that the “office of Ministers of the Word is first in the church both for dignity and usefulness.” It then proceeds to decorate the one who fills this office with ten different titles expressive of his various duties. One whole page is taken up in setting forth the considerations which impart dignity to this office and indicates its usefulness.

The contrast is very marked when we pass to the next paragraph which treats of the Ruling Elder. Nothing is said of the dignity and usefulness of this office and no title is affixed to him who fills the office save the title of Ruling Elder.

Dr. Thornwell is supposed to be our spokesman in his famous discussion with Dr. Hodge on the Eldership. The point that he urged with such persistency was that the Ruling Elder of our Church is the presbyter of Scripture and that the title of presbyter in Scripture is a generic term including two co-ordinate species, ruling elders and teaching elders. He says the Scripture recognizes no order which simply preaches. All those who preach belong to the order of presbyter. He further says that the one thing that discriminates between the two species of presbyters is the “possession or non-possession of the property of preaching.”

The impressions which Dr. Thornwell's writings make, and evidently were designed to make, is that in the N. T. there is no broad line separating between teaching elders and ruling elders. They belong to the same order, and the one differentiating factor is the function of teaching. They are not discriminated in Scripture by different titles. All presbyters are called pastors and bishops; all were charged with the same duties; and the same qualifications were prescribed for all. No such person can be found in the New Testament as the person defined in our Book filling the office of Ministers of the Word.

It is assumed that each of the seven churches in Asia Minor to whom John was directed to write was presided over by a minister of the word and that he is referred to as the “Angel of the Church.” This is possible, but far from probable. Manifestly there was no such person presiding over any of the churches to which the Apostle Paul wrote. It is inconceivable that there should have been and that Paul should have made no recognition of the fact. He mentions both the elders and deacons in his letter to the Philippians, but no minister of the word. He delivered a very solemn address to the elders of the church at Ephesus, but had nothing to say to any minister of the word. He places all the interests of the church in the hands of the elders, making no distinction between them, but bids them all and severally to discharge the duties of a shepherd to the flock.

Now if none of the churches to which Paul wrote had a minister of the word, a man occupying the “highest office in the church both for dignity and usefulness,” presiding over it, is it probable that all of the churches to which John wrote only a short while afterwards were blessed with the services of this chief officer? Is this a matter of such certainty as to warrant us in finding an “Angel of the Church” in each of our pastors?

Dr. Thornwell says that teaching elders and ruling elders are co-ordinate species of the one genus Presbyter. How can they be co-ordinate if the one species occupies a distinct office and that the “highest in the church both for dignity and usefulness?” Is it not obvious, that if our theory is correct, viz: that all of our elders are included under the same Scriptural titles of Presbyters, Pastors and Bishops, that we have put far too much in Sec II, or far too little in Sec III, in Chapter IV of our Book of Church Order?

The Church Encouraging Sabbath Violation.

We may be like the old lady who tried to sweep back the Atlantic Ocean with a broom when we lift up our voice against the loose views of Sabbath observance that are creeping into the Presbyterian Church and ministry.

Throughout its history it has been known as the Church that taught strict Sabbath observance and in that fact we gloried. In the years of our sojourn here we have seen a gradual decline in these strict views. We have seen a relaxation of rules and a tendency to make the Sabbath as other days.

Now the world may applaud what they call our growing broad-mindedness, but everyone knows that the testimony borne by us no longer comes to men with the same authority, nor does it inspire the same respect. This swerving aside from our old stand began first with the people. Then elders and deacons began to save time for business by taking Sunday trains. Then came the Sunday paper, and despite the warnings and pleadings of the pulpit, both officers and members would read them, and as a result they came to hear preaching with minds so absorbed in the news of this world that they cared little to hear news of the other world.

After the denunciation of the Sunday paper by the pulpits one would not have looked for the pulpits to make use of them, but gradually they are allowing the advertising advantages to overshadow their violation of God's law. They are now beginning to use the Sunday papers to advertise their hours of worship, thus putting a temptation before their people to use such papers.

Now, our brethren of the North have a director of publicity, who, according to a secular paper, will recommend to the Northern Assembly a system of local advertising in every community where there is a Presbyterian Church.

A secular paper of the South rejoices that this movement is extending to the Southern Church, and cites the example of a church in one of our large cities where the deacons have contracted for definite space for a year, the first of its advertising appearing in the Sunday paper. With the publicity feature we are in full accord. We believe in using the secular press to advertise the Church, but we do protest against the use of the Sunday paper.

The same end can be reached by the Saturday paper and at the same time we can be consistent.

The Editor at the Presbytery.

In one sense an editor has to lead a tread-mill life, as the cry for copy never ceases, so he has to grind out a regular supply of grist.

In another sense he has more freedom than the pastor, because he sustains to the Church a double relation, that of an editor and that of a Presbyter.

As a Presbyter he has to attend the regular meetings of his Presbytery and give that Court of the Church the benefit of that wisdom of which editors are supposed to have a large store. Then as an editor he has to keep in touch with the other brethren of his Synod in order to gain their support in his work, and as the only way to meet these brethren together is to meet them at their Presbytery meetings, it then becomes also his duty to attend other Presbyteries than his own.

As Kings Mountain Presbytery was in session at the same time as Mecklenburg, he decided to look in on the brethren at that Presbytery. Lincolnton, where the Presbytery met, has put on new life these recent years. From colonial times down to modern times, it seemed as completely finished as the pyramids of Egypt, but a few years ago it caught the spirit of progress, and now has all the conveniences of city life. It is true that some of the citizens still find time to sit in the shadow of the court house and decide the destiny of nations, but the majority of them are on the move.

General Hoke once said that there was no place in the State where a man could make a dollar go further than in Lincolnton, but it would be necessary for him to bring the dollar with him. That can no longer be said, if we judge the town by the prices now prevailing, as meat and eggs keep step in price with the city of Charlotte.

Among the improvements in Lincolnton none are more noticeable than the new Presbyterian Church where Presbytery met. We shall not attempt to draw a pen picture of the building, except to say that it is free of debt and equal in beauty and convenience to churches in much larger cities. The pastor, Rev. W. S. Wilson, D. D., matches the church, being one of the best and strongest preachers in the Synod.

As we had to witness the reception of the soldiers in Charlotte on Wednesday, we did not reach Presbytery till the last day, but we were there long enough to see that though "little among the thousands of Judah," no Presbytery in the Synod has abler men, who are devising great things for the spread of the kingdom. Their home work is growing fast, while the educational work at Westminster School under the wise leadership of Rev. T. E. P. Woods, can compare in economy and lasting results with any school in the State.

It has long since passed the experimental stage, and next session it will begin a new era, as Rev. J. G. Garth will be associated with Mr. Woods in the management, the two making a very strong team.

Rev. J. T. Dendy, of Belmont, presided over Presbytery with ability and firmness.

Mr. Joseph Bartlett, who has been teaching for three sessions at the Westminster School, was ordained to the work of an evangelist. Mr. Bartlett is blind, but by the law of compensation his mental eyes are exceedingly good. We did not hear his examinations, but we learned that they were remarkably fine, far beyond the ordinary examination.

We heard his trial sermon on "Contentment," which showed ability of a high order. He himself is a living illustration of the doctrine he preached.

The Presbytery patiently suffered an address by the editor, which already has begun to bear fruit.

The Lincolnton Church has long been one of the banner churches of Synod with respect to subscribing to the Standard. Nearly every family in the church is a subscriber to the paper. It is no wonder, therefore, that their average gifts to all causes was $52 per member. There are other churches in this Presbytery whose liberality we hope soon to record, in order to provoke others unto good works.

As Lincolnton has put on city airs, instead of the basket dinner, the members were whirled to the various homes where they were entertained in family style. Presbytery recommended the Standard to its families, and it is hoped that the pastors, like loyal members, will carry out this recommendation and seek to place a copy of the paper in every home.

If they will do so they will be amply repaid. As all things end, so did Presbytery, and also the editor's outing.

Whiteface and His Brownie Friends.

This is the title of a charming little book for children by Mrs. Motte Martin of our African Mission. It was sent forth with some misgivings on the part of the author, several months ago.

Its success has been wonderful. The first edition of 1,000 copies has been exhausted, and now the second edition of 2,000 has left the press and will soon be ready for distribution.

It is profusely illustrated with original pictures and is written in language that children can understand.

Every mail brings fresh orders. It carries to the young a knowledge of our work there that will never be lost.

This dainty booklet is from the press of the Presbyterian Standard Publishing Company. The general make-up and excellent typographical work have greatly impressed the Church and the public generally with what we are able to do in fine printing.

"Fifty Years in China."

The Presbyterian Committee of Publication has published a neatly paper bound book of 231 pages, with the above title. It is written by Dr. S. I. Woodbridge, of our China Mission. Two others preceded Dr. Woodbridge in the preparation of this book. Rev. Geo. Hudson gathered the material, and made an outline of the book, but died after he had written only two chapters. Then Dr. John W. Davis was appointed to finish the work, but had written only a few pages when he too passed away.

Dr. Woodbridge has been spared to finish the history, and in this modest little book we have the result of his effort. No one can read it without feeling the charm of his style, so graphic, yet so simple, or without having his faith strengthened, as he follows God's hand as it is plainly traced in the history of this work.

Now that our churches have begun a systematic study of missions, we commend this book as one admirably adapted to that purpose. The facts are arranged in a way that will make teaching an easy matter, and that will make learning a pleasure.

Relief Commission on Way to Bible Lands

By R. E. Magill.

IN MID OCEAN—On Board the Mauretania—This boat is the most famous of the great fleet of steamers built to carry tourists, on pleasure bent from America to Europe, and now four months after the armistice one finds it strange indeed that the one present purpose for operating the mammoth Atlantic liners is to aid in healing the hurts of the world's holocaust.

Right nobly has this mammoth floating palace performed her part as a mercy-ship, and whether as a floating hospital or a transport for troops she has maintained her record as the fastest big liner afloat, and through midnight blackness with all lights out, raging storms, perils of submarines and lurking mines, her 70,000 horsepower engines have driven her at top speed on her missions of mercy.

Probably no group she has carried has gone on a higher mission than the Sunday School Commission for Armenian and Syrian relief which sailed from New York on March 14. The names if published would reveal a number of leaders in Church movements and in the Sunday school activities of the leading denominations of the United States and Canada. One bishop, one seminary professor, three teachers, two missionary workers, ten editors and two plain business men are in the group.

One of the secretaries of the American committee for relief in the Near East, Mr. H. C. Jaquith, is with the party and will arrange for its itinerary and direct the relief work the commission will undertake for the American committee.

The commission fully understands that it is on a mission of service to distressed peoples and not on a sight-seeing pleasure jaunt. They are going, soldier fashion, in light marching order and equipped to look out for themselves as well as to minister to others. They wear a uniform which identifies them as relief workers from America and the equipment is complete even down to emergency army rations, so they will not be a burden upon the famine-stricken lands they are to visit.

The Mauretania carries an interesting passenger list and it is remarkable how large a place reconstruction work has in the plans of the cosmopolitan crowd one finds aboard a trans-Atlantic steamer during these past-war days. In fact it is exceedingly difficult to secure a passport and engage overseas passage unless the traveler can establish that he is engaged in a reconstruction war task. Among the passengers was noted General Pau, a famous general of the French Army, a one-armed veteran of many campaigns, who is returning after a special military mission to Australia. Dr. John R. Mott on a past-war Y. M. C. A. mission and Dr. Charles R. Watson, late secretary of the Foreign Mission Board of the United Presbyterian Church and for twenty years the head of the remarkable work this Church is doing in Egypt, who is on his way to establish a Christian university at Cairo, Egypt.

A number of English soldiers and naval men who saw service in the Mediterranean and in Palestine are among the passengers and by tactful questioning it is possible to get some first-hand stories from some brave but exceedingly modest men. One quiet little jackie wears a wound stripe for injuries received when his ship was sunk by a submarine in the campaign for the possession of the Dardanelles, and although but a boy in years and appearance he has served sixteen years in the Royal navy. As the Mauretania is English owned, and operated by an English crew, it is an easy matter to get some vivid pictures of some of the daring exploits of the English navy as it fought to free the world from the spectre of German domination and to retain that supremacy of the seas which has been England's proud boast for generations.

A survivor of the Lusitania, the sister ship of Mauretania, was found among the stewards, and on every hand limping and maimed soldiers bear mute testimony to the price that has been paid to make the world safe for democracy.

In common with all the big liners, the Mauretania was fitted out as a transport and the vast dining saloons, cargo storage and recreational space have been converted into sleeping quarters for returning soldiers and every trip from five to six thousand men and officers are landed at an American port.

It is interesting to study the arrangements that have been made to house and feed the equivalent of a city of eight thousand people within a space of 800 feet long and 100 feet wide. Two wicked-looking six-inch guns with an effective radius of five miles are still mounted aft, and will not be dismounted until after the peace treaty is officially signed.

New views of the large scope of the task of our relief commission are being brought to our attention as we come into touch with men who have just come out of the Near East district, and it is significant that whether they are soldiers, missionaries or traders, they are agreed that the United States must accept her share in providing stable government for the newly emancipated peoples of Europe and Asia who are not ready to set up democracies for themselves. There seems to be a growing conviction that we should become the mandatory for Armenia as we are known to have no territorial ambitions and no selfish motives to insert in the final terms of the peace table.

If it should be our lot to become the guardians of this distressed land, we should have on our hands the strip of territory which has been the football of contending forces, Asiatic and European, for 2,500 years and which has, during this turbulent period never known anything but the rule of heartless despots. Racially we would have on our hands peoples with age-long hatreds and feuds, and in extent we would control a territory approximating in territory, the States south of Mason and Dixon line and east of the Mississippi river. While we should meet every obligation the war has imposed upon us, I devoutly hope we may not have to send our boys to Turkey for police purposes.

"The Anna E. Lassing Hall."

In the death of Mrs. Anna E. Lassing the cause of Home Missions sustained a great loss. For many years she was a member of the Richwood Presbyterian Church of Kentucky, and manifested her interest in our mountain missions by her prayers and contributions. Having expressed her desire that $500 of her estate should go to the support of our Home Mission work, her son, Judge John M. Lassing, with the approval of the pastor, Rev. S. T. Hill, has kindly forwarded this amount to our treasury.

In order that this gift might assume a permanent form, it has been decided to use it in connection with the erection of a greatly needed school building at Heidelberg, Kentucky, for Beechwood Seminary, the institution selected and supported by the Christian Endeavor Societies as their Home Mission responsibility. The chapel or some other appropriate feature of the building will be set apart and known as the "Anna E. Lassing Hall." It will thus be a perpetual memorial commemorating the work of a good woman, and an inspiration to the students who will through the years to come receive the benefit of her generosity.

Some Misleading Statements Discussed

By F. S. Neal.

IN your issue of January 29th last is a sermon preached before Atlanta Presbytery, by Rev. Robert Ivey, D. D., on "God's plan for financing His Kingdom." It is not the object in this article to prove or disprove the statement, that the law of the tithe is still in force. Some of the statements in this sermon deserve careful consideration; others, I think, are misleading, to say the least. I think it dangerous to take a text out of its setting and put some construction on it that it was not intended to teach.

I quote the following statements in this sermon: "Away back there in the early dawn of history, we see the tithe, in germ at least, in the offerings of Cain and Abel. The Council of Seville, we read, viewed Cain's sin as one of covetousness in withholding a portion of that which God required."

Again: "Worship was by sacrifice. We do not know the origin of their sacrifice, but we do know that Cain and Abel sacrificed, and from the book of Hebrews we infer that the tithe was used to provide for the sacrifice. We do not know the origin of either sacrifice or tithe, (the worship of God or means for that worship) but both must have been instituted away back there by revelation of God, and with sacrifice went the means for it, the tithe."

There are here made three statements I want to call attention to: Origin of sacrifice; Cain and Abel's offering, and the use or purpose of the tithe. As to the latter, will only say that aside from the question as to whether or not God required the tithe before, or that He requires it since, during the whole of the Mosaic economy, the tithe was given by God to the tribe of Levi as their portion, in lieu of the fact that they were to receive no division in the land of Caanan. The tribe of Levi was called by God to the service of the sanctuary, and for their support, and as their part of the inheritance, the tithe, with certain cities and their suburbs were given them, carrying with it the same principle as the New Testament text, "For God hath ordained that they who preach the Gospel shall live by the Gospel."

The origin of sacrifice—Do we know it? I think so, if we are allowed, as stated in our confession, to draw reasonable inference from statements, circumstances and surroundings, in connection with other fundamental truths of the Bible. Let us take Gen. 3, verses 7th, 15th and 21st, "And the eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked and they sewed fig leaves together and made them aprons," "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman and between thy seed and her seed, it shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel." "Unto Adam also and to his wife, did the Lord make coats of skins and clothed them."

We have here the fall of man into sin—fleeing from the presence of the holy God—his effort to cover his nakedness, shame and guilt by a covering of fig leaves. We then have the first promise made to sinful man of a Savior to come, the seed of the woman. This is a wonderful promise—couched within a few words—pregnant with tremendous results—it brings into view the coming of "The Lamb of God, slain from the foundation of the world"—it foresees all the conflicts between Christ and His people with satan and his forces—it guarantees the ultimate triumph of the Church and the establishment of Christ's Kingdom. We then have the statement that the Lord God clothed Adam and his wife with coats of skins made by Himself. In the face of the promise of the coming Savior, the statement that God Himself clothed them with coats of skins is very significant. It is God's own provision in contrast with their efforts to cover themselves with leaves. If God Himself clothed them—covered their sin—then to Him it was an acceptable covering—they now are no longer under the Covenant of Works, but are brought under the eternal covenant of grace, which the coming seed of the woman would seal with His own blood. I am unable to limit this transaction to the mere covering of the body—it has a greater significance. I can see nothing wrong, or anything that is not logical in believing that here was the origin of sacrifice—that God clothed them with the skins of animals slain in sacrifice—typical of the blood to be shed by the coming one—bringing out here at the very beginning the doctrine of substitution and of the atonement.

As to the offering of Cain and Abel, Gen. 4:2-5, we are told here that Abel was a keeper of sheep; Cain was a tiller of the ground. Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord—Abel also brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof—that God had respect unto Abel's offering, but unto Cain and his offering He had not respect. You will notice here that both Abel and his offering were accepted, and both Cain and his offering were rejected. I am unable to see here even the "germ" of tithe or that Cain's sin consisted in withholding a part of what was due God. We are told the kind of offering—not the amount or proportion of either. We are told that Abel brought of the firstlings of his flocks and may reasonably infer that Cain brought of the first fruits of the ground. If so, then they both brought an offering of first fruits. The heart of the matter is contained in the statement in connection with Abel's offering, "and of the fat thereof," showing that his offering had been slain—that blood had been shed. We are told in Hebrews that "by faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain." Abel came into God's presence in God's appointed way—the shed blood of an innocent victim, typical of the promised seed to come. He believed God—he now stands before Him as righteous—his sins covered—just as Adam and Eve were, when God clothed them. Abel had the same kind of faith that the Hebrew had when he slew the lamb and sprinkled the blood on the door post—it was God's way—it was His plan—they believed it and were saved. Cain came into God's presence without the shedding of blood—no sacrifice for sin—testifying that he did not believe in the coming one. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission."

From the beginning God has had only one plan of salvation. The Old Testament saint looked forward, through types and shadows, to the coming one who would make atonement for sin with his own blood; the New Testament saint, through the emblem of the Lord's Supper, looks back to the same event. If one had before him for inspiration all the redeemed that have gone before and all that are yet to come, he would find it one vast throng of sinners that, without a single exception, had been redeemed by the blood of the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

In this day and time I cannot see that we have any more right to come into God's presence with our gifts, without coming through the merits of Christ's work, than Cain had to bring of the fruits of the field, without an offering for sin, typifying the seed of the woman that should bruise the serpent's head.

The Plan of Federal Union.

The General Assembly's committee on Federal Union completed its work at Pittsburgh on March 27th.

The plan of federal union finally adopted received the unanimous vote of the members of our church present. It received the vote of all the members of the committee of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A. present except two.

Both committees recommended its adoption to their respective Assemblies.

The text of the plan of union, as it is a report to the two General Assemblies, will not be given to our papers until published by the Stated Clerks of the two Assemblies. This will be about the first of May.

The 113th Field Artillery in Action

By Chaplain B. R. Lacy.

(Although the fighting is over the interest felt in the great battles and in the soldiers is at its height. We know our readers will welcome the opportunity of hearing at first hand something of the part some of our Carolina boys had in the conflict as it is told in a private letter of Mr. Lacy, who was the popular chaplain for the 113th Field Artillery, to his mother. We are glad of the opportunity to publish this letter and rejoice that Mr. Lacy and his brave soldier lads are once more safe at home.—Ed.)

YOU no doubt know that we fought through the St. Mihiel drive. If you can get a map of the Western front you can see what we did. From Coquiton near Reims, we went to Toul, camped in woods near Nucille-tour, right out on the ground in dog tents. The 30th Division was in Flanders, but they needed American artillery near Toul, so we supported the 89th division which had been trained at Funston by General Wood. It was new to the game just as we were, but a fine bunch. We had a little experience from August 20th to September 12th, going into positions near Berncourt and Beaumont, and firing a little. But anyone who has simply been in a quiet sector has not really seen war. It is a matter of hiding your battery by natural means and camouflage, firing at cross-roads in the day, and putting down barrages for raiding parties at night. But we could see that big things were coming. Every night heavy artillery were moving up, and all had prepared for positions north of Novaux. These are all little towns and hard to find on any but big maps. It rained all the time just before the drive on September 12 and we nearly killed our horses and men carrying up ammunition every night. The Boches shelled the roads a good deal, but did not get any of our men. They did reach once to a big ammunition dump near us and it exploded, destroying about 50,000 rounds. As each shell cost about $15 and it had taken a good deal of trouble to get it up, you can imagine what a loss it was. It was the biggest single explosion I ever saw or heard or felt.

Perfection of Artillery Preparation.

The drive was so wonderfully successful because of the perfection of the artillery preparation. No one will ever be able to describe such a scene and sound as ushered in the drive. At 1 a. m. the preparatory fire started, shelling gun positions, shelling to cut barbed wire, shelling at cross roads to prevent reinforcements or a retreat. That fire continued until a few minutes to five. At five the barrage was fired and the machine guns joined in the barrage. I shall always think of that as one of the supreme moments of my life, and the break of day that morning, one of the strangest. None of us had slept more than a few minutes, yet none seemed sleepy.

The Advance.

Well, I think I wrote you about our advance. We went through Linney, where Lieutenant Douglas, of Buffalo, N. Y., a splendid officer, had been killed or rather buried, for he had been killed further out on the battlefield. I wrote you my impressions of the first wounded, first prisoners, first dead, of my first funeral at twilight on the battlefield, of my spending until 2 a. m. trying to get a wounded captain to the hospital, of crawling with my blankets on the wet ground and sleeping until day, of finding the batteries the next day and of going with the first battalion through Bullionville to Theaiecourt. How we ever took three batteries over that road, through that town and the position on the hill, without getting killed, I do not know. While they were coming up was the only time I know of that they did not shell that road. In the sunken road about fifty yards back of our guns, were companies of the Sixth Marines and Twenty-third Infantry. They stayed twenty-four hours there, and then went forward about a thousand yards to the front for twenty-four hours. When they first stop they dig little graves just big enough for one man to lie in, later, they join these graves, and make a trench if they stay long. Our boys do the same thing near their guns.

Getting Out in Time.

We remained about Theaiecourt from morning September 13, until after dark, September 14. We had had gas thrown near us that night, thirteenth, and wore our masks for awhile. The next day at noon the Germans got hits at two batteries, wounding six men. Now Mr. Fritz has a strange way of registering his guns on a battery or any other target in the day and then at night opening up on it good and proper. We suspected he would fire again that night, so got ready to move all three batteries about two hundred yards from that position, but before we did, orders came to move out entirely. Later we found out from the infantry left there that our vacated positions were heavily shelled that night.

Long to Be Remembered Night.

As it was the night of the fourteenth will be one long remembered. We marched all night, going away from the front and wondering why we were going out and where. The Huns shelled our roads and came very near getting me. They killed one horse, that was all. Sunday, the fifteenth, we spent in and near the ruined town of Rambecourt. That night was moonlight and we moved to Mecue, traveling all night. Planes dropped bombs on both sides of the road while our column was held up. Sleepy? Captain McLendon went to sleep, sound asleep, on a rock pile, although it was a chilly night.

The morning of the sixteenth we were at Merrin on the Meuse. I spread my blankets in the cemetery and slept in peace and took my first bath in a long time in a river. The town was near the front, utterly deserted and almost utterly destroyed. We also stayed there the night of the sixteenth and I slept again in the graveyard. The seventeenth I went off to Commercy to send mail and that night marched to Nicey. Oh, the tug of those night marches in the rain. I got no sleep on the seventeenth for I went back to Toul for mail and sent you a cable, got mail, too. But I came very near not getting the regiment again, spent the night of the seventeenth, also raining, trying to get back again. Ran the Ford into the entrance of a dugout and had to be pulled out by a French truck.

Going Up to the Front.

I passed about fifteen hundred trucks loaded with infantry, all going in our direction, and any number of big tractor-drawn cannons. The roads at night before a big advance are something in themselves. Not a light of any kind, but everybody trying to get there at once. Big roads and little roads are all chock-full and often blocked. I caught a lovely cold that night slept for about two hours on a table in a room with a rotten roof at Beauzee and my shoes were full of water the next day. The regiment was at another little town. To cut this short, we went in to Barecourt near Clement where we spent Sunday and I had about six services. Thence we moved in the rain to Brocourt. I again went back for mail, and a terrific time on congested roads, and it took two days to go to Toul and back. Our guns were in front of Avocourt when I returned and the morning of September 26 saw us starting the famous Argonne drive.

Firing German Gun.

Nearly two weeks after that, at Recicourt, I wrote you a long letter telling you how we went through the forest of Avocourt and Montfaucon. I fired the German six-inch gun from the edge of the forest of Montfaucon, firing over the town on a village called Nantilliois and also in the Bois de Buerge which was full of machine guns. The observation post from which I directed fire for four days was in the infantry right line over Cierges and we fired on the Bois de Romangnes and machine guns in front of Gesnes. I saw the advance that captured Cierges and went up the Gesnes and was directing the fire of three batteries at the time. Mud

The Assembly's Minutes

THE General Assembly is soon to meet. It is a fit time to call attention to the need for accuracy in its minutes and to express the hope that no hurry to get out the volume or hasten its publication will be allowed to lessen the value of the records. If any publication should be as nearly perfect as possible it should be the minutes of our highest court, with its accompanying reports and figures. This book tells the world what our church is and what it is doing. It is the measure of its progress and the standard of its comparison with other denominations or with its own achievements in other years. And especially is it needful that the records be accurate, since by a peculiar law, errors in one Assembly's minutes are thought by many interpreters to be uncorrectible, no matter how glaring, on the ground that each Assembly is separate and distinct from the other, that when it closes it does not adjourn but is dissolved and another like it is called to meet at a certain time.

How mortifying and unsatisfactory, then, as well as misleading, such an error as appeared after the last Assembly, in the reports of the communicant roll of the church, ten thousand short in the single Presbytery of Lexington, and as a result ten thousand short in the church's total! The attempt to correct the error will never succeed. It will never be caught up with. The figures went out to the world and practically fixed themselves. In many comparative figures which have been published, in inter-denominational tables, the lessened credit to our church has been persistently followed. The book will be used and referred to by those who will never know the real facts.

Another glaring error that should have been corrected before the book was published has not been noticed publicly so far as we know. In the table of the Presbytery of East Hanover, one large church of nearly a thousand members is listed twice, and its figures as to every item of its report twice counted in making the totals. Thus while the Presbytery of Lexington's misprinted figures give us 10,000 too few members, the East Hanover mistake gives us 919 too many communicants, $2,183 more than our Foreign Mission collections, $3,000 more than our pastors' salaries paid and so on through twenty other errors, one of them involving as great a difference as that between $1,244 and $12,414.

But passing by other and numerous small errors that mar the minutes and that make them unreliable, perhaps the most serious is to be found on pages 26 and 27, in the body of the record, an error that misrepresents scores of men and puts them in a false light before the Church at large in a recorded vote expressly designed to show precisely where they stood. Even the venerable stated clerk himself is misrepresented on those pages. The record as printed is, "The substitute paper of Rev. J. M. Wells, D. D., was amended and adopted by the following ye and nay vote of 152 to 72 which was ordered to be placed on record." Then follow the names, and scores of men are represented as voting for Dr. Wells' substitute who were its most strenuous opponents, and as voting against it who were its warmest advocates. This minute is totally incorrect and misleading as to great numbers of commissioners. The facts of the case are as follows: Dr. Wells' paper had been substituted for another paper. Propositions were made to amend it, before its final adoption. One of these propositions was with reference to enlarging the committee of conference on federation. On this proposition a ye and nay vote was called for and was taken. That was the vote that was ordered to record, a vote simply on an amendment to Dr. Wells' paper, amendments having been proposed by Drs. Dobyns and Bittinger. Fifty-five or more men are represented, as the minutes read, as being on the opposite side of that for which they actually voted on the main issue, as witness the previous recorded vote. The ye and nay vote was solely on the amendment, and not on the amendment and adoption. No recorded vote was made when the question was on the adoption of the amended substitute. The viva voce vote was so nearly unanimous that there was laughter in the Assembly. One side simply refrained from voting. Many who most heartily favored the substitute were opposed to this particular amendment. Many who strongly opposed the substitute favored this amendment. By the record here they are represented on one page as voting for the substitute and on the next page as voting against it, and vice versa.

This is no unimportant matter. Those who are misrepresented by the record as it stands, the very purpose of which was to show the exact position of the men voting, and who will be misjudged by every reader of that record, can hardly be expected to bear that misrepresentation and misjudgment with equanimity

One of the Sufferers.

Ordination vs. Licensure

Marion, S C., April 8, 1919.

Rev. R. C. Reed, D. D.,
Columbia, S. C.

Dear Dr. Reed:

OUR Church owes you a vote of thanks for your recent article in the Standard on Candidates, Licensure and Ordination. Our Book of Church Order certainly should be changed in some particulars to meet the needs of the day. The purpose of this letter is to suggest two changes: one touching Ordination, the other Licensure.

1—Ordination. Add to paragraph 118 the following after the sentence, "He shall further be required to preach a sermon before the Presbytery," Trials for ordination, in the same Presbytery in which the candidate was licensed, may be omitted, and the Presbytery being fully satisfied, etc. (The underscored words indicate the addition).

2—Licensure. Add to paragraph 129 the following: "But when there is a call to a definite work and the examination for licensure shows the candidate is prepared for ordination, the Presbytery may omit the licensure and ordain the candidate without further examination.

The purpose of the addition to paragraph 129 is to meet a condition which is now very common—the candidate is called to a definite work (e. g. a church) before he is licensed, and when he comes before his Presbytery and is examined for licensure, that examination satisfies the Presbytery of his fitness for ordination as well, and since the call is on the table waiting to be put into his hands so soon as he is licensed, the Presbytery finds all three parts of the doctrine of vocation (paragraph 96) witnessing his fitness for ordination! Why then license him? In your last article (April 2), you contend that when these conditions are met it is illogical to put the candidate through the examinations again, and to do so results in a farce. You are right. Does not the same logical reasoning apply to licensure under the conditions stated above? And such conditions are not infrequent.

Last summer, in answer to a letter addressed to the stated clerks, replies from the 36 Presbyteries giving the information asked for, tabulated show these facts:

(1) Number of candidates licensed during the past five years, 144.

(2) Number of candidates dismissed to other Presbyteries as licentiates, 67.

Rev. Paul S. Crane

By Rev. L. T. Newland.

I HAVE no thought of preparing a memorial of Paul Crane, for I have not sought to gather any data on his life. I merely want to express my appreciation of his life and of his friendship which I valued so much.

Ever since his arrival on the field we have been closely associated in the work and being of nearly the same age our association soon ripened into warm personal friendship. We were together in our studies and in our work, and in our recreations and under the isolation of a mission field we were as much together as we would have been in years here in the homeland where other friends and interests would have claimed much of our attention.

I have watched Paul Crane through that most critical period in a missionary's life, when he is adjusting himself to the conditions on the mission field. The Koreans, of course, were new to him and their language strange and difficult. Many a missionary when he makes his first contact with heathenism is spiritually injured for years and only through earnest prayer can he overcome those first impressions. But with Crane it was different, the love of Christ constrained him, and his soul was big enough and his faith strong enough to pierce through repellent heathenism, and love the soul held in slavery. He was patient with the Korean's many faults, generous with their weakness and always eager for their salvation. Whenever we older missionaries complained of some outbreking sins on the part of our Christians, Crane was generally more generous in his statements than we were. Yet he was just, and rarely have I met a man even of maturer years that had such a hatred for sin wherever he found it.

I have also watched him in his relationship with his fellow missionaries. It is harder to orient oneself to the missionaries than it is to the conditions, for only men of determination can ever get out to the mission field. Our years as practical bishops in one field do not tend to lessen our weakness for wanting our own way. Yet here was a man that came into our midst and won our hearts. He took his place among us and immediately assumed his share of the burdens. The interest of the work was so dear to his heart that he immediately sought opportunities of being useful and he was a man of such varied and apparent talents that young as he was on the field, the older missionaries often found themselves consulting him, as learners rather than assuming the usual role of teachers.

But where he was pre-eminent was as a minister of the Gospel. He was our station pastor and it was a real spiritual treat to listen to him. He loved the Lord, he knew his Bible, he had the happy art of easy, forceful expression, these being the requirements of a real minister. For one who had been so few years in the ministry he showed an amazing maturity of faith and wonderful breadth of expression. Our Sabbath afternoon services under his leadership were fountains from which flowed streams upon which our spirits could feed during the following week.

As a last word I want to bear testimony to him as a friend. He was generous to a fault and absolutely true. There was nothing he would not do for his friends, and because he was so lovable there was nothing his friends would not do for him. I have preached with him, prayed with him, hunted and played with him. I have seen him in joy and I have seen him in sorrow. I have seen him under trial and also in the hour of victory, and with his life before me I want to say that Paul Crane was a man, a true Christian and a mighty warrior in the ranks of the great King.

I will miss him when I return to Korea and our work will always miss him. He had just entered upon what promised to be a career of unusual success as a missionary. We needed him in the ranks, but the Commander-in-Chief has seen fit to promote him over the heads of many of us who are older into the ranks of the commissioned officers, the consulting board, over the armies of Heaven.

We will long grieve over his loss and personally I feel that one of my dearest friends has been taken out of my life. Still he has left us an example of faithful devotion to the Lord's work and a standard of real conquering faith that we will strive to emulate. He was my friend, adviser and companion, and I trust that the few years we were together will hearten me as I take up the increased burden of the work, and that the memory of his life will always be an inspiration to make me undertake greater things for our common Lord.

The Simultaneous Conventions in Atlanta

As announced recently, the Laymen's Missionary Movement and the Woman's Auxiliary of the Southern Presbyterian Church are to hold simultaneous conventions in Atlanta, Ga., June 10-12, 1919, and from the interest already developed and the plans being made these gatherings promise to be the greatest of their kind ever held.

The Laymen's Movement, as originally formed had as its great purpose the informing and inspiring the men of the church to carry out the "Great Commission," as applied to the foreign field only and its slogan was "The Evangelization of the World in this Generation," and as a result in large part of the great bi-annual convention held under its auspices and its other activities the church has made tremendous advance strides in its foreign mission work.

In recent years the scope of the movement has been broadened and the conventions have alternated between considerations of the foreign and home work of the church.

The keynote of this year's convention will be "The Whole Task of the Church," and the work of all Assembly causes will be presented, having in mind the great opportunities and responsibilities of these reconstruction days in the light of America's position of world power and leadership.

The Interchurch World Movement will be presented by some of the strong leaders in this great new plan of cooperation between all the Protestant denominations of the United States and Canada, and just what part the Presbyterian Church should have in the great work will be clearly shown.

Some of the other features to be considered will be "Christian Education and Young People," "The Ministry and its appeal in this hour," "Stewardship of Life," "The Expression of Stewardship," "The Work Overseas," "The Work at Home," "The Resources of the Church," and other great burning questions of the hour.

The program is rapidly taking shape and will be ready for publication probably within the next week or two. It will carry the names of some of the strongest speakers in the country, with the possibility of including the name of our great Southern Presbyterian, President Woodrow Wilson, arrangements having been made for a deputation to confer with him very soon after his arrival from France.

There is enthusiastic interest in Atlanta over the prospect of these simultaneous conventions to be held there, and the chairman of the registration committee reports registration already coming in.

Every church should be represented at these great gatherings and the larger churches, especially those not too far distant from Atlanta should send large delegations, that the whole church may catch the fire of enthusiasm and consecration for greater service that will certainly be manifest, and launch out with new determination to more nearly measure up to our "Great Commission."

The 113th Field Artillery in Action.

was thrown all in the hole we were observing from and my telephone man was hit in the helmet by a fragment of a shell at that time.

Advance Magnificent.

The advance in broad daylight was magnificent. The German defensive barrage was great. For eight days we had our batteries between Iveny and Montfaucon and why we did not lose more than we did I do not know. The roads behind us at Avocourt were impassable for a big part of the time, and no other artillery or supplies could get up for several days except the artillery which had come up when needed before a big rain set in. We had orders from a major general to run our guns to the crest of the hill if the enemy broke through, and fire them at point blank range until captured. Needless to say they did not break through.

Horses and Men Suffer.

Near Montfaucon and up with the infantry I saw more men gassed, wounded and dead than at any other place in the same time. When they relieved us after we had fought first with the 37th and then with the 32d, our horses were all killed or almost so and our men worsted with diarrhoea. I sure was a wan soul myself. Now I am fat as a pig. From Montfaucon we came to Reucourt on being relieved, thence to Senoncourt, where I slept with Captain Hardison in a bed for twelve hours, thence to a deserted village called Boucecourt, thence to Troyon which is our brigade headquarters now. We are about eight miles east of Troyon. Here we went into position with the 79th Division, which was relieved by the 33d and we have been with them since.

On the Road to Metz.

The last American communique before peace told of our capturing Marceville, which was accomplished by a barrage which our brigade put down. Only twelve infantrymen were wounded, none killed and seventy-three Germans, all in the place, killed and captured. Heavy artillery had come up, and another day would have seen us in a big offensive towards Metz. Four days before peace they gassed two of our batteries with mustard gas and sent about twenty to the hospital besides killing one. I am glad peace came before we crossed that plain for the Germans had the range on all the roads and we could not leave them because of the mud.

Now we are marking time, living in the forest here away from everybody and any town. All of us are getting fat. Officers are going on leave and I am going to apply for one to Nice.

To the Citizens of North Carolina.

An Open Letter From the Governor.

Dear Sir:

Our soldiers and sailors are now returning home in great numbers. We are receiving them with open arms and it is eminently fitting for their return to be celebrated with great outbursts of patriotic enthusiasm. But these men cannot live on cheers and music and flowers and kisses. The fairest and finest thing we can do for them is to see to it that every man of them at once gets a good job.

I want every town and county in North Carolina to highly resolve that no soldier or sailor shall be denied a chance to make a decent living. Please lay this matter on the hearts of our people. Make it a matter of community pride and patriotism. Let every community be very sensitive on this point. Let no community be willing for another community to provide jobs for its heroes.

These men are neither afraid nor ashamed to work. They seek no charity—they scorn it. They want a job and they must not be denied.

Very truly yours,
T. W. Bickett, Governor.

Liberality and Little Joe's Church.

After reading the articles in the Standard for and against the practice of the tithe, and then the article by Dr. Raynal on "A Supreme Example of Stewardship," using Little Joe's Church at Barium Springs as the example, I feel constrained to write this note in defense of the tithing plan.

It was my privilege to work in the Orphanage at Barium Springs, N. C., for several years and to be associated with the superintendent and faculty, and while not now a member of the faculty I have had opportunity to know that the generous giving in Little Joe's Church, which is made up principally of the faculty and children in the Home, is due in large part to the teaching and example of the superintendent. I know in my own experience and that of others of the workers, that we were led to give the tithe through Mr. Walker. Not that we may not have wanted to do so before, but we had not realized the duty and privilege of it fully until we saw it exemplified in his own life and that of his family. He has often talked to us and the children along this line, and it has borne fruit in a remarkable way. Giving the tithe has helped some of us to know the joy of giving and to realize it is possible to give even more, and feel the Lord will take care of us. As an illustration of this I want to refer to two members of the faculty, members of our Missionary society. One on a salary of about $250 a year, gave in one year to missions $50, and in addition to this, contributed to the pastor's salary and the benevolent causes of the Church. Another, on about the same salary, did nearly as well. During the year just closing, the society contributed $200. Of this amount $50 was given during the self-denial week in November and $57 during the self-denial week in March. This society is made up almost entirely of the lady members of the faculty of the Orphanage and they have been enabled to give generously because they practice the tithe, some going beyond. In all my acquaintance I know of no one who gives more generously and gladly than the superintendent of our Orphanage and his family. Little Joe's Church at Barium Springs has done well, but it has been well trained, and trained in giving the tithe. Many of the members may now give beyond the tithe, but most of them first learned the joy of giving by giving the tithe.

Ordination vs. Licensure.

Cherokee 1, Bethel 1, Augusta 1, Montgomery 1. What these seven Presbyteries did is common sense, and yet it is positively forbidden by the Book of Church order as interpreted by the General Assembly in a judicial case (a judgment binds all the lower courts)—see the minutes of the Assembly 1914, page 33, "The Assembly, in voting to sustain this complaint, would be understood as expressing its judgment that in all cases of trial for ordination for the ministry, however soon they may follow trial for licensure, the Presbytery should not omit the examination of the candidate, and should require an ordination sermon." East Hanover Presbytery in 1913 did not require a sermon of a candidate for either licensure or ordination and omitted this part of the trial upon the ground that the candidate's ability as a sermonizer and preacher was personally known to the members of the Presbytery.

The above two changes, it appears to the writer, would relieve the difficulty so often confronting the Presbytery. Do you agree to these changes, or can you suggest something better?

J. M. Holladay.

(The questions propounded are not to be answered off-hand. Bro. Holliday makes it perfectly plain that something ought to be done. If any reader can suggest anything better than the above, let him now speak, or ever after hold his peace.—R. C. R.)

News of the Week

Col. J. T. Morehead, a well-known jurist and veteran of the Civil War, died suddenly in Greensboro, April 11th.

It has been decided that the enforcement of war-time prohibition falls upon the United States Attorneys and not upon the Internal Revenue Bureau.

The Peace Conference is nearly through its work. They have given France the Saare Valley to work the coal mines and other resources in perpetuity, one report says, while another has it that it is to be only for a stated time. As far as known the terms are based upon Mr. Wilson's fourteen points, with only three exceptions. The final conference with the German delegates will be at Versailles on April 25th. Though German statesmen and the press declare that they will never sign the treaty no fears are expressed on that point. In the event of a refusal it is not proposed to resort to arms, but a strict blockade, letting hunger do its work.

The great event of the week was the parade of the 120th regiment in Charlotte and the reception given the men. Though rain upset many of the plans, the boys were warmly greeted by the thousands and fed to repletion.

The War Minister of Saxony was thrown into the river and shot as he tried to swim. Soldiers whom he refused to receive or right their fancied wrongs were the guilty parties.

Eugene Debs, whose appeal for a new trial was denied, has been sent to the Federal prison.

The new Victory Loan canvass has begun. The interest will be four and three-fourth per cent. The bonds are convertible into three and three-fourth per cent, tax exempt. The loan matures in four years.

Germany will have to pay to the allies one hundred billion marks war damages, with additional billions to be determined by a special commission on which Germany is to be represented.

The youngest son of the Kaiser wishes to emigrate to America after peace is signed.

By a decision of the Supreme Court whiskey can be carried through a dry State.

Director General Hines has announced an increase in the wages of the express employees.

Secretary of War Baker has arrived in France. General Pershing was at Brest to greet him.

The Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals has granted a writ of habeas corpus to the prohibition agents who recently killed two men charged with smuggling whiskey.

Three major generals, Wood, Scott and Chamberlain are opposed to the taking from the President and the commanding generals the control of courts-martial.

The A. and E. State College student body who recently asked for the discharge of Dr. W. C. Riddick, president, as unfit for his office, have withdrawn the request.

Fifteen German cables have been turned over to the allies. The cables cut, but not used by the allies, will be returned to their owners.

The body of Edith Cavell, the English nurse who was executed by the Germans in Brussels in 1915, will be brought to England and placed in Westminster Abbey.

Major J. C. R. Wood, the English Officer, who proposes to cross the Atlantic in an airplane, left England April 18. He fell into the Irish Sea the next night, but escaped unhurt. He will resume his flight after repairs are made on his machine.

The Country Parsonage.

1—It indicates life. Dead churches and communities don't believe in, much less, build parsonages.

2—It helps the church. The parsonage with pastor hard by the church helps in all phases of the church work.

3—It increases the pastor's sphere of service. Living in the community makes it easy for him to visit the sick and bury the dead. This is the preacher's greatest missionary opportunity.

4—It helps to purify the social life of the community. Our young people are social beings and a good parsonage and a wise pastor will see to it that the social energies of the young people are directed along the right channel.

5—It makes it much easier for the church to enter upon a larger task. That is, it makes it easier for the church to go from once-a-month preaching service to half or full time; to build up a standard Sunday school; to increase the efficiency of the auxiliaries and double its offering to the Kingdom enterprises.

6—It contributes to the unity of the church and community life. It cultivates brotherly love and Christian fellowship and settle differences between the people without resorting to the church conferences and state courts.

7—It helps to win the unsaved to the Lord Jesus Christ and sets straight again "trunk members" who have wandered far from the paths of the Lord God of Hosts, and deepens and develops the Christian graces that fit and prepare God's people for taking the world for Him, whom we crown as Savior, King and Lord.

8—The country parsonage is an excellent tonic for curing the country church of many of its present day ills and ailments.

9—Country churches or groups of churches owning parsonages will find it easier to secure and hold trained and consecrated pastors than churches or fields having no parsonage.

10—The country people are abundantly able to build parsonages. It is their duty to make moral and financial investments in the moral and spiritual forces of the community. No investment will yield richer returns than money spent in parsonage building. The sweet, rich, inspiring influence of the pastor and his companion upon the lives of the young people of the community will more than justify such a course of expenditure.—G. C. My Saviour.

By Rev. W. W. Sprouse.

(Melody of "Macushla")

My Saviour! my Saviour! I hear Thy voice calling,
Calling me softly to give Thee my heart,
My Saviour! my Saviour! I answer Thy pleading,
I come to Thee, Saviour, and give Thee my heart.

My Saviour! my Saviour! no more shall I wander,
Oh wilt Thou forgive me, and make me like Thee,
Then my life shall be blessed, my soul be redeemed,
For no evil can conquer the soul saved by Thee.

My Saviour! my Saviour! Thy sweet voice is saying
That death shall not last, but life is for aye,
Then my soul shall awaken, awake from its sleeping,
Awaken in heaven, in heaven to stay.

God wants us to serve Him not merely in order to show that He is Lord and that we are His servants, but because there are practical needs in His universe that must be supplied. The whole spiritual and physical world is run for His glory, of course; and this glory is realized through achievements of solid practical value rather than by empty exhibition of His lordliness. He takes no joy in a mere retinue of liveried adherents. Both joy and glory for Him lie in having a true servant to fill every place of need in His kingdom

God needs men and women to serve Him by relieving human misery. The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. It is God's desire, we believe, that much of this pain shall cease. And He needs those who will dedicate their lives to the business of relieving it.

If I can stop one heart from breaking
 I shall not live in vain;
 If I can ease one life the aching,
 Or cool one pain,
 Or help one fainting robin
 Into his nest again,
 I shall not live in vain.

God needs servants to live righteous lives. In his scale of values righteousness is a thing of practical worth. It is spiritual capital, and God is interested in piling it up in His universe. Those who live righteously and who by teaching righteousness increase the volume of it in the world are serving God. They are a great help to Him. Only when we grasp this great truth can we understand why a righteous person who may be helpless for life upon a sick bed is of more value and service to God than some unrighteous man who may dig canals and build bridges and irrigate deserts. God has not as many righteous men and women as He needs.

God needs those who will serve Him by spreading His gospel throughout the earth. Only through this gospel can misery be relieved effectually; for misery waits on sin, and sin can be removed only by the gospel of Christ. The increase of righteousness depends also on the gospel. The fundamental need of men everywhere is this gospel. Christ is depending on men and women, as fast as they become Christians, to pass the saving knowledge on to others still in need. He is seeking volunteers for this service. "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" He is calling today as always heretofore. A few noble spirits have responded. Surely someone will say today, "Here am I, send me."

Tell what Jesus did to serve the Father.
 Name three forms of service to God that may be rendered by missionaries.
 Tell three things Endeavorers can do this week to serve God.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

By C. D. Waller.

Luke 6:39; 2 Tim. II 2:2:15:24.

The Church is, when true to its mission, an educational force of ever-widening, deepening and tremendous power. Her Great Book, her services, her ministers, her teachers, her seminaries, colleges and schools—all are both salt and light in the training, uplifting and saving of men. Christian education begins, and should begin in the home. It should antedate the birth of children. It should be an atmosphere into which children are born and in which the impressionable years of childhood are passed. The Great Commission is a teaching commission, the church is a teaching fraternity. But if teaching is to be done successfully, done with moulding and enlightening power, then the teacher must be taught. Our church is gradually waking up to this great fact. Witness the Assembly's training school and the teacher training classes here and there in the churches.

What a great—incalculably great—opportunity for Christian education is found in the Sunday school. Yet candor compels me to say that here sadly and often the blind lead the blind; the untrained, the unskilled, the thoughtless, the Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. R. F. Kirkpatrick Chairman Sub-Committee.

First: The executive committee of Assembly's Home Missions is happy to announce that the Rev. Dr. Frank E. Fincher, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of Houston, Texas, has accepted the call of the committee to become one of its general evangelists and that he expects to begin his services with a meeting at the First Presbyterian Church of Wilmington, N. C., April 23rd. The committee feels that the Church is particularly fortunate in securing the services in the evangelistic field of such a man as Dr. Fincher. He has not only shown himself to be a rarely successful pastor by the wonderful ministry he has had in Houston, but he has found time also to engage with great success in evangelistic meetings. Churches desiring to secure engagements with Dr. Fincher may correspond with him either at Houston or through the office of the Assembly's committee of Home Missions.

Second: Rev. R. A. Brown has entered upon his duties as regional evangelist in the district of Arkansas and Oklahoma and his labors are already meeting with gratifying results. His headquarters will be at Little Rock, and pastors or sessions desiring his services may write him there.

Third: Rev. Dr. W. H. Miley, after an extended campaign in Norfolk Presbytery is now entering upon a similar campaign in Charleston Presbytery, being engaged at present in a meeting at Knox Church, Charleston.

Fourth: Advices reaching the Home Mission office and many inquiries with reference to assistance in holding meetings indicate a large number of our churches engaged in special evangelistic services the last week in March as suggested by the committee or else that they are planning for such services within the near future. The expansion of the work has been so rapid as to make it difficult for the committee to enlarge its force sufficiently to meet the demands. The committee wishes all our pastors and sessions to understand that it will be a great pleasure to assist them at any time in arranging for the services of a suitable evangelist or pastor to hold such evangelistic services whenever they may be desired, but the committee should be notified as far in advance as possible in order to allow ample time in making these arrangements

THE HOLY SPIRIT OUR HELPER.

Golden Text: Luke 11-13—"If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?"

Acts, 2:1-8; 14-18.

April 27, 1919.

The Holy Ghost was promised to the apostles and the Church of Christ. So essential was His influences to them and their assigned work that they were forbidden to enter upon preaching the Gospel to the world until they received the Divine Spirit. Christ said to them, "Tarry in Jerusalem until ye be endowed with power from on high." "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you and ye shall be witnesses unto me in Jerusalem and Judea and in Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." But while the apostles were to wait for the Spirit's power, they were not to do so in a state of inaction. They were like the Church now, to pray for the spirit, and we are told that the whole church at Jerusalem maintained a ten-days' prayer meeting before the Spirit was poured out. Our lesson relates to the Spirit's baptism, the assembly gathered, the effects produced and Peter's sermon.

I. The Holy Ghost's Baptism.

There were physical signs of his approach. A rushing mighty wind whose sound filled the house, gave notice that he drew near with wondrous mighty power. Cloven tongues of fire sat on the heads of each one endowed with His extraordinary power. Elsewhere in the Scriptures the wind and fire are employed as symbols of the Divine Spirit's presence. We are told that "They were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance." The miraculous influences of the Holy Ghost were certainly felt by the apostles and perhaps by other members of the church. While His ordinary enlightening, convincing and converting power was exerted over multitudes. The wonderful sounds and scenes witnessed in the upper room at Jerusalem caused a multitude to tremble.

II. The Assembly Gathered.

This feast of Pentecost was largely attended in the latter part of the spring by vast numbers from Palestine and from foreign lands. We are informed "Now there were dwelling at Jerusalem devout men, Jews, out of every nation under heaven." The Jews were greatly scattered at this time in many countries. But not only those of Jewish blood, but proselytes from among the Gentiles were accustomed to attend the feasts. We have enumerated in this chapter from Europe, Asia and Africa, embracing the then known world, at least 11 countries or localities, that had sent delegations. Of course these persons spoke the languages of the lands from which they came. These conditions would give a vast and varied assembly to hear the apostles and to attend to their gospel message. It would best reach them in their own language, and many tongues must be used.

III. The Effects Produced.

They were all amazed by the extraordinary things seen and heard. But what astonished them most was that while the speakers were all Galileans they heard every one in the tongue wherein he was born, of the wonderful works of God. The power of the Spirit gave to the apostles the ability to speak in these varied languages which they had never learned. He also gave them clear views of gospel truths, the power to express them and the courage needful to testify to unwelcomed as well as pleasing doctrines and duties respecting Jesus of Nazareth. While the spirit wrought in the speech and in the minds and hearts of the apostles, He also moved the souls of the hearers. He fixed the attention, enlightened the minds, aroused the consciousness, convicted of sin and swayed the wills of many to accept and confess

Jesus Christ as a personal Savior. The Scriptures affirm that "No man can say that Jesus is Lord but by the Holy Ghost." It was the Holy Ghost that enabled three thousand souls to become Christians. But this is not accomplished without human agency and without preaching Gospel truth. Just as in securing a harvest man has duties to perform, while God must also work, so in converting souls to Christ man has to put forth effort, rendered effectual by the power of the Divine Spirit.

IV. Peter's Sermon.

No doubt all the apostles preached, but only Peter's sermon is recorded in condensed form. He denies the charge that they were under the influence of strong drink and directs attention to the fact that it was but third hour of the day when men prone to such indulgences were not in the habit of drinking. He affirms that what they witnessed only fulfilled the prophecy of Joel as to the outpouring of the Spirit and the effect it would produce. He presents the character and crucifixion of Jesus by the rulers with wicked hands. He declares His resurrection from the dead as fulfilling prophecy and witnessed by themselves. He urges them to repentance, faith and obedience. He offers them through Jesus the forgiveness of sin. He asserts that "The promise is to them and to their children and to as many as God shall call." He assures them if they become believers they shall have the Holy Ghost.

unprepared attempt to play the great part of teacher. How evident then is the need of training for Sunday school teachers. These teachers are often most excellent people, but most unskillful teachers. The need here is simply appalling. Teachers (sic) who stand before classes and read out of Helps printed questions are driving men and women out of our Schools, and are committing almost if not entirely a crime against the young people. On account of the lack of properly trained teachers, judged by results, the Sunday schools are certainly failing to equip our young people with that working knowledge of the Bible which is necessary on all accounts. Moreover, for the same cause, the Sunday school is failing to hold its pupils. (Just as I write this, the chairman of the committee of Lexington Presbytery on Sunday schools is lamenting the falling off of additions to the church from the schools.) The church surely should be awakened to the failure of the Sunday schools in large measure to attain that excellent standard in teaching which is certainly attainable, and consequently our duty to attain. Is not teacher training the key to the problem? The teacher may be most excellent in character but a failure, and hence a disaster to the work, for lack of a knowledge of simple principles of pedagogy. This matter is of such prime importance of such far-reaching consequence that one feels like enlarging upon it, and enforcing it by every possible means. Instead of one Assembly training school, there should be many here and there throughout our territory. One hears of 100 per cent schools, but sees teachers (sic) in these 100 per cent schools droning out, with no enthusiasm and with no results, on the part of pupils, but ennui and consequent desertion—droning out questions read out of our "Earnest Worker" or some other periodical. Excellent people, no doubt—but culpable failures as teachers.

Teachers—wherever found, in home, school, college or seminary—should have vision, enthusiasm, a working knowledge of pedagogy, and surely, surely, should not neglect preparation for the work in hand.

Teacher training classes might be held on prayer meeting night or on any occasion that suits, but they are indispensable in every church. The pupils should stand examinations. Real, earnest, intelligent study is essential. The best material should be carefully selected by pastor or superintendent looking forward to the making of teachers, and carefully trained for their future work. The failure to do this is to write failure in capital letters upon this great and indispensable work.

HIS WILL.

Accept His will entirely and never suppose that you could serve Him better in any other way. You can never serve Him well, save in the way He chooses. Supposing that you were never to be set free from such trials, what would you do? You would say to God, "I am Thine—if my trials are acceptable to Thee, give me more and more." I have full confidence that this is what you would say, and then you would not think more of it—at any rate you would not be anxious. Well, do the same now. Make friends with your trials, as though you were always to live together, and you will see that when you cease to take thought for your own deliverance, God will take thought of you, and when you cease to help yourself eagerly, He will help you.—Francis de Sales.

A MEDITATION.

O child, hast thou fallen? Arise and go with childlike trust, to thy Father, like the prodigal son, and humbly say, with heart and mouth: "Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy hired servants." And what will the Heavenly Father do but what that father did in the parable? Assuredly he will not change his essence, which is love, for the sake of thy misdoings. Is it not his own precious treasure, and a small thing for him to forgive thee thy trespasses, if thou believe in him? for his hand is not shortened that it cannot make thee fit to be saved.—Tauler.

BURDEN BEARING.

The many troubles in your household will tend to your edification, if you strive to bear them all in gentleness, patience and kindness. Keep this ever before you and remember constantly that God's loving eyes are upon you amid all these little worries and vexations, watching whether you take them as he would desire. Offer up all such occasions to him, and if sometimes you are put out, and give way to impatience do not be discouraged but make haste to regain your lost composure.—Francis de Sales.

LISTENING TIMES.

What we need above all things in these crowded days is the setting apart of many listening times; times of quiet in which we can hear the heavenly voices that call to us unregarded in the busy day. The great clock bell of Saint Paul's is not heard even a few streets off in the roar of traffic all day long; but it can be heard over half the metropolis in the silence of the night. One reason why God so often spoke to His servants in the night was that it was quiet then.—G. H. Knight.

We talk of a "cloudy sky," but in reality there is no such thing. The sky is always blue, the sun is always shining. The clouds are not the sky any more than the curtain is the window. So God is always the same. He never changes. Clouds may sweep between us and Him and obscure our vision, but He is where He always is, waiting to be gracious and ready to stretch forth a helping hand.—Canadian Churchman.

It is a fine thing that God makes work His gift and not money and not fame, not this thing nor that thing but just living work and that every day He gives to each of us a work for that day and offers to us the joy of conceiving it as a personal partnership with Himself.—Selected.

CO-OPERATIVE HOMEMAKING.

The 10-year-old daughter of the house was airing her grievances.

"Mother does all the interesting things about the house. There's nothing for me to do but horrid old dishwashing and dusting."

The next Saturday mother proposed that Daughter should make a simple dessert, and she would do the dusting. The childish face was all aglow with eagerness. Soon the little girl could prepare a family breakfast, if an easy one was planned beforehand, while Mother set the living room to rights, and after breakfast Mother washed dishes while Daughter did some upstairs work.

When the summer vacation came a schedule was laid out that gave Daughter a responsible share in the housekeeping. She needed constant instruction and oversight, of course, but her enthusiasm went a long way toward compensating for her lack of experience, and she had two or three red letter days that summer when Mother went visiting and she and her chum kept house all day.

Father made Son, aged 12, his understudy in the care of the furnace, and soon Son could manage it without much oversight, though his former responsibilities had been limited to keeping the ashes out. Son took the marketing lists and did the family buying as he came from school, learning to take pride in the family economies.

Father and Son planned and planted the garden together in the spring, and Son did the necessary hoeing and weeding all summer with less reluctance because it was his very own garden, and he sold the surplus vegetables and kept account of the money earned by his venture.

Little Lad, only 6, had a backyard flock of baby chicks that summer. The eternal vigilance of his mother was the price of their safety and well-being, but Little Lad grew into a sense of pride in his personal business undertaking.

The children, when they had a share in the constructive work of homemaking, lost much of their indifference and distaste for household duties they had been grumbling about, and the efforts of their parents to plan such home undertakings as the youngsters could feel they were carrying through themselves were amply repaid.—Continent.

THE RELIGION OF THE HOME.

In the patriarchal days, the relationship of the family to God was maintained and perpetuated through the priesthood of the head of the family. He it was who sustained the family devotions and made sacrifices to God in intercession for himself and his dependents. This relationship of the head of the house to the various members of the household on the one hand, and to God on the other, was perpetuated through the whole history of Israel. The Christian dispensation was not in any way to supplant the father of the family as the household priest, but rather is the husband declared to be the head of his family and, in consequence, to take upon himself those religious duties which were so well known to the Jewish father. The present condition of the household life has practically eliminated the office of the household priest and because the priesthood of the home has been destroyed, the altar is torn down and the family has lost its sense of religious unity at the best, and, in many instances, as sheep without a shepherd, is uncared for and lost to the Church. This is an alarming condition and will account for much of the irreligion of the community and the loss of high moral sentiment, which is necessary to sustain the laws and ordinances within the government of the town or State.—Bishop Capers' Council Address.

God has given us tongues that we may say something pleasant to our fellowman.—Heine.

Rev. Eugene Alexander, who has been for the past year a chaplain in the army received his discharge April 10, and will immediately resume his pastoral work with the Bethel group of churches in Hoke county. His address is Raeford, N. C. Mr. Alexander was stationed the greater part of the time he was in the service at Camp Meade. He had, however, one trip "across," having been sent to France on a troop transport.

Some time ago we published a very interesting history of Sharon Church of this county. Our attention has been called to the fact that the names of several ministers who at different times were pastors of this church, were unintentionally omitted. As it is very important to keep history straight, we are confident that the writer of this sketch will be glad to receive any fresh data concerning the work and organization of this church. These sketches will be valuable in coming years, so it is important that we have them as complete as possible. We will be glad to receive any data upon this subject.

We have received an invitation to the marriage of Rev. B. R. Lacy, Jr., and Miss Emma Elizabeth White, on April 29, 1919 in the First Presbyterian Church, Raleigh, N. C. Mr. Lacy is the pastor-elect of the Central Presbyterian Church of Atlanta, having just returned from France, where he won the title of the "Fighting Parson." He comes of good old Presbyterian stock, the Lacys and Burwells—both well known in our ministry.

The bride-to-be is also "to the manner born," her grandfather, Dr. Henry White, of Winchester, Va., being in his day one of the great men in the Virginia Synod, and her father is living up to his father's reputation.

The Standard sends congratulations and a fervent "God bless you."

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

The Committee on Pastors' Salaries is hereby instructed by the Presbytery to urgently request the churches within the bounds of Mecklenburg Presbytery which have not already done so, to increase the pastors' salaries not less than 25 per cent, and that no pastor's salary of individual churches or groups of Churches shall be less than Twelve Hundred Fifty Dollars and manse, and that the officers of the churches be urged to attend to this matter at once, and if possible, to make the increase retroactive from April, 1919.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Midway Church—On the first Sabbath in April nine young people united with this church by profession of faith.
W. H. Workman, S. S.

Purity Church, Chester—Sunday, April 13th, we celebrated our regular spring communion service. There were five accessions to the church, four by letter and one by profession of faith. This was a very happy occasion for us. May God continue to add His richest blessings to this church.

We had with us on Wednesday night, April 16th, the Rev. J. H. Rosenberg, of the Christian Jewish Board of Nashville, Tenn., who presented the claims for his work very forcibly. We hope to be able to do something for this noble work in the near future.

Mount Pleasant—This church is situated about eight miles from Bullock Creek, York county. The Rev. J. B. Swann has served this field over twenty-seven years, and is truly beloved by his flock and by all the community. He is truly an under shepherd in Israel in whom there is no guile. It was my privilege to be with him at the fall sacrament, a season of blessing, with large and attentive congregations, who heard the word gladly. There were no additions to the church, for I found Bro. Swann has already got the community, a cunning workman who knows how to feed the flock of God with the fat things of the Kingdom. They are truly a happy people, whose God is the Lord.

James Russell.

The Woodruff and Center Pt. Churches closed their year, meeting all the obligations in full. The Center Point Church, without a pastor to lead them, managed their own canvass in 1918-1919 and came out with something to spare. It is needless to say that they met the full quota this year. This church presents a splendid example of proportionate giving. The congregations are large at this point. The work is in the hands of competent leaders, who put their best thought and endeavor in the work of the Lord.

Woodruff Church is encouraged over the year's work and the prospect before it. This is the first year it has put on the canvass with any large sum in view. The benevolences were subscribed according to proportion announced by Presbytery, and the local budget was oversubscribed, so the pastor is told he must share in the prosperity. This is a responsive people. The pastor's effort in reorganization of the work during the year has met with cordial support by the membership. Ten united with the Church by profession and letter during the year, which adds some to the financial and working strength of the body. We have set our hearts and wills on a manse for this field in the near future. Already our people are beginning to plan for this new addition to our equipment.

T. D. Johnston.

Piedmont Presbytery met in Easley, S. C., April 15th.

There were present twelve ministers and eighteen elders. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. P. S. McChesney, retiring moderator, from Jno. 21:16.

Officers: The Rev. Dr. J. S. Foster, moderator, and the Rev. W. E. Davis, temporary clerk.

Dr. W. H. Mills resigned as stated clerk, and the undersigned was elected in his place.

Transferred: Candidate M. A. Boggs to the care of East Hanover Presbytery.

Received: The Rev. H. A. Knox from Harmony Presbytery.

Calls Accepted: By the Rev. W. E. Davis from Central Church, and by the Rev. H. A. Knox from Liberty, Pickens and Carmel churches.

Arrangements were made for the installation of each.

Manual: A revised manual was adopted.

Contributions: Reports showed a very gratifying increase over the preceding year, and a still further increase in pledges for the current year. A majority of the churches had made the every member canvass.

The Easley Church was granted permission to amend its call to its pastor by adding $200 to his salary.

Overture: The Assembly was overtured to change the church year so that it will conform to the calendar year.

Home Missions: The Presbytery expressed approval of the employment of a superintendent of Local Home Missions, leaving the matter in the hands of the executive committee.

Progressive Campaign: The committee on systematic beneficence was instructed to prepare the table of apportionments, and report at the fall meeting. The manager for the campaign next March is to be elected at that meeting also.

Next place of meeting: Broadway Church, Belton, S. C., October 7, 8:30 p. m.

Each member thought he had the best home in Easley.

Robert Adams, Stated Clerk.

Harmony Presbytery met April 15th, at Concord Church, one of the historic churches of the Presbytery. It was a most delightful meeting. The spirit of the church and community was most cordial, the entire congregation attending all the meetings, and seemed interested in every detail of the work. Delightful and bountiful dinners were served on the grounds, the two days of the meeting, thus facilitating both work and sociability.

Rev. R. L. Grier, pastor of the Mayesville church, being the retiring moderator, preached on the text, "Is thine eye evil because I am good?" Matt. 20:15. The sermon was a fine exposition of the parable and was greatly enjoyed.

Rev. R. C. Morrison, pastor of the Hebron and Hepzibah churches, was elected moderator and Rev. W. I. Sinnott, temporary clerk.

Rev. J. G. Herndon was received from the Presbytery of Atlanta and order taken for his installation in the Williamsburg Church at Kingtree, S. C.

Rev. D. M. Douglass, president of Presbyterian College of South Carolina, addressed the Presbytery in the interest of this institution and Rev. L. Ross Lynn presented the claims, etc., of Thornwell Orphanage.

The overture sent down by the Assembly to amend Book of Church Order was assented to.

Presbytery declined to recommend the plan of apportionment and that of the "Clearing House," proposed by Mr.

Spillman, but overtured the Assembly, as it had formerly overtured the Orlando Assembly, 1916, to make one of the Assembly's treasurers a "clearing house" treasurer for all Assembly causes, and because of their central location suggests the foreign or home mission treasurer. This idea being that each church will send all funds for these causes directly to this clearing house treasurer to be distributed by him to each of other treasurers as now established according to the per cent fixed by the Assembly, or as may be directed by the remitter, by this plan the treasurers of the particular or local churches will have only one person to send all funds to, and the treasurers of other Assembly causes will not be troubled with the small remittances. The reports from the churches were very encouraging. The summary of these show that the amount contributed for Foreign Missions was $11,150, about $1,500 less than last year, while Assembly's Home Missions was $5,756, about twice what it was last year. But the total to every purpose was $70,263, an increase over last year of $11,408, over $10,000 of this increase being beneficence.

Pastors' Salaries: An excellent report was made by elder of the Manning Church, W. C. Davis, as a committee on this subject. The following churches petitioned to be allowed to change their calls as follows:

Jordan Church, W. S. Trimble, pastor, increase salary from $100 to $150.

Summerton Church, W. S. Trimble, pastor, increase salary from $720 to $1,100.

Manning Church, L. B. McCord, pastor, increase salary from $1,500 to $2,000.

Hepzibah Church, R. C. Morrison, pastor, increase salary from $325 to $500.

Hebron Church, R. C. Morrison, pastor, increase salary from $600 to $1,000.

New Harmony Church, J. N. McCord, pastor, increase salary from 400 to $550.

Indiantown Church, W. R. Pritchett, pastor, increase salary from 800 to $1,700.

McGill Memorial Church, W. R. Pritchett, pastor, increase salary from $200 to $400.

Next meeting is to be at Central Church some miles from Kingtree, of which W. I. Sinnott is pastor.

W. H. Workman, Stated Clerk.

Enoree Presbytery—Enoree Presbytery met in the Second Church, Greenville, S. C., on April 8th, at 8 p. m., and was opened with a sermon by Rev. T. D. Johnston, the retiring moderator, on John 3:14, latter clause, after which the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was celebrated, Dr. T. H. Law presiding. Fifteen ministers and twenty-two ruling elders were present. Six of the ministers of this Presbytery are foreign missionaries.

Organization: Rev. W. S. Porter was elected moderator and Rev. W. A. Hafner temporary clerk.

Courtesies: Rev. J. W. McClure, who is supplying the Second Church, Spartanburg, and who is a member of West Lexington Presbytery; Rev. D. M. Douglas, D. D., of Bethel, Rev. J. Ross Lynn, D. D., of South Carolina, Rev. S. C. Caldwell, of Charleston Presbyteries, respectively, were invited to sit as corresponding members.

Requests Granted: Rev. J. Sprole Lyons, Jr., Rev. R. T. Chafer, Rev. W. S. Epperson and Rev. Asa D. Watkins were granted permission, at their own requests, to labor outside our bounds for the next six months. Excellent report from the faculty of Columbia Seminary in regard to the scholarship and our candidate for the ministry, Mr. George Hudson, was read to the Presbytery.

Reception: Rev. T. P. Burgess was received from the South Carolina Presbytery and arrangements were made for his supplying the Fulton-Landrum-Campobello group of churches.

Pastors' Salaries: A number of the churches in the Presbytery were reported as increasing the salaries of their pastors. The churches were commended.

Systematic Benevolences: The report on this subject was carefully considered and the committee was instructed to study Mr. Spillman's pamphlet on "Uniform System of Apportionments for Synods, Presbyteries and Churches," and report to the next stated meeting.

Memorial: A memorial of Rev. G. O. Griffin, M. D., was read by Rev. T. W. Sloan, D. D., and adopted by a rising vote.

Educational Institutions: Favorable reports were made by the Presidents of Chicora College for women, the Thornwell Orphanage and the Presbyterian College of South Carolina. Rev. J. Ross Lynn, D. D., addressed the Presbytery in the interest of the Thornwell Orphanage and Rev. D. M. Douglas, D. D., in the interest of the Presbyterian College of South Carolina. Rev. H. W. Pratt, secretary and treasurer of the Synod's schools and colleges, reported that twenty of the forty churches of Enoree Presbytery gave last year the sum of $1,737.55 to this cause.

Local Home Missions: Fresh interest was shown in this cause. Nearly all the churches contributed to it and many of the Sunday schools and missionary societies have sent remittances. The offerings for the year amounted to $2,090.58, nearly twice the sum contributed last year. The Presbytery approved of the following action of the committee, to-wit: "That it is the sense of the committee that some minister be secured, if possible, to devote a part at least of his time to our small vacant churches and mission points." Rev. A. D. P. Gilmour, D. D., Spartanburg, S. C., is the chairman of the committee.

Reports of Committees: Excellent reports on Assembly Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Publication and Sunday School Work, Bible Cause, Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, the Sabbath and Family Religion and Church Societies, were adopted and will be printed in the minutes of Presbytery.

Commissions: Commissions reported the installation of the Rev. C. O'N. Martindale as pastor of Reidville, Nazareth and Antioch Churches.

Conference: Presbytery spent the evening of the second day in an open conference on the state of religion within our bounds and various ministers and elders spoke on the subject.

Presbyterial Sermon: Rev. C. O'N. Martindale was appointed to preach the Presbyterial sermon at the next stated meeting and Rev. J. F. Matheson his alternate.

Overture: The following action was taken, to-wit: "Resolved, That Enoree Presbytery memorialize the General Assembly which meets in New Orleans in May to lay special stress on the Assembly's Home Mission work and urge the churches to give the full Assembly apportionment to this cause.

Next Meeting: Greer was chosen as the place of the next regular meeting on Tuesday preceding the first Sunday in October next at 7:30 p. m.

Vote of Thanks: The following action was taken, to-wit: "The Presbytery hereby records its high appreciation and hearty commendation of the pastor, officers and members of the Second Church and of the other churches who have helped in entertaining this body so hospitably, and of the Ladies' Working Society especially for their delightful dinner served at the church during its sessions."

Stated Clerk.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Charlotte, First Church—The pastor, Rev. Dr. A. S. Johnson, preached last Sunday a strong sermon on Christian Unity, taking the position that Christ prayed for unity of spirit and not uniformity.

After the custom of Presbyterianism in the past, he made no mention of Easter.

Mecklenburg Presbytery—One of the most important acts of this Presbytery was to plan a drive for Manse and Church Erection, on the second Sunday of May, or as soon as possible thereafter. The plan received an impetus by reason of the encouraging report from Badin, N. C., where a town sprung up overnight and is still growing.

The Church is bound to keep up with the growth, so that a building is absolutely necessary.

Hickory—Dr. E. M. Craig, of Albany, Ga., who was recently called as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Hickory, has accepted the call, and will come to Hickory. Dr. Craig is a native of Virginia and was a classmate of Dr. C. E. Raynal, of Statesville, and Rev. W. T. Walker, of Barium Springs.

Charlotte—In our report of the meeting conducted by Dr. Frank Arnold at the Westminster Church we failed to record the very generous offering made by the congregation. The amount raised, including the offering to Dr. Arnold was $850.

Hemp—Our good friend and spiritual leader, Rev. A. T. Lassiter, pastor of the Benson group of churches, has been with us again and has given us some real mental gymnastics and raised our spiritual ideas and ideals to a higher plane through his forceful ways of talking, thinking and living. He came to us Tuesday, March 25th and remained until March 31st. We regretted that his stay could not have been longer and we'll welcome him most heartily whenever he finds it possible to visit Hemp. Rev. W. L. Wilson was also present and assisted in the meeting. One addition to Elise Church and several members were deeply touched and sinners were uncomfortable under the power of plain gospel sermons.

The offering for Presbyterial Home Missions was forty-one dollars.

K.

Concord Presbytery—Met in Morganton, N. C., in regular spring session, April 15, 1919. Present: 30 ministers and 37 ruling elders.

Organization: Rev. S. H. Hay, moderator, and Rev. S. L. Cathey and Elder J. B. Johnston, temporary clerks.

Dismissed: Rev. J. G. Garth, to the Presbytery of Kings Mountain and Rev. Dugald Munroe to the Presbytery of Fayetteville.

Memorials of Rev. E. E. Pressly and Rev. C. A. Munroe, D. D., were read by Rev. S. L. Cathey and Rev. C. M. Richards.

Presbytery gave its hearty endorsement to the campaign to raise one million dollars for colleges and schools of our Synod, and was lead in earnest prayer in behalf of the campaign.

Home Missions: The report of the committee shows that most of our churches have been supplied during the year and that an evangelist has been secured for Yadkin county and recommends that we undertake additional work in Davie county, and in the South Mountain section near Morganton, and in Caldwell county. The financial report on this cause was by far the best on record. This being true also of all the benevolent causes, Presbytery's gifts being considerably over $55,000 for the causes.

Seven churches were allowed to increase their pastor's salaries, viz: Back Creek, Prospect, Front Street (Statesville), Spencer, Salisbury Second, Shiloh and Gilwood.

The next regular meeting will be with the Unity Church, Woodleaf, N. C., September 16, at 11 a. m.

E. D. Brown, S. C.

Waynesville—This church is making encouraging progress under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. W. M. Sikes, D. D. During the first week in March a series of evangelistic services were conducted by the pastor which has resulted in a splendid quickening of the spirituality of the church membership. This evangelistic meeting was followed for three consecutive Sundays by sermons on Christian Stewardship in which the pastor made strong appeals for the support of the various causes. At the close of the last one of these services the pastor called up the officers of the church before the pulpit and delivered a charge to them to the effect that they were going out on a divinely given mission in making the every member canvass, and this was followed by a solemn charge to the members of the Church to measure up to their full duty in subscribing to the support of the Lord's work. The same afternoon the officers canvassed the congregation and secured pledges more than covering the church's quota to the benevolent causes and also the local expenses. The church "went over the top" in fine fashion, and we are feeling greatly encouraged with the results. The men of the church say that the church is in better condition now than it has been for a number of years.

The last week in March, Dr. Sikes preached for Rev. R. J. Hunter at the Canton, N. C., church. This church is now in splendid condition. Mr. Hunter has done a fine work at Canton, and everyone esteems him highly for his works' sake. His church went well "over the top" in the financial drive in March. And the week's preaching by Dr. Sikes was the means of arousing the church to a higher degree of spirituality.

The first week in April Dr. Sikes held a week's meeting in the Hazelwood Church of which he is also the pastor. Large congregations gathered at almost every service. There were two professions of faith in Christ, and one addition to the church. The meeting evidently did the church great good, and everyone is entering upon the new year with renewed vigor and energy. There is a large opportunity for good solid work at this place. The Hazelwood church will more than raise during the year the quota of funds assigned to it by the Presbytery's committee

Lexington—The everymember canvass in March was altogether a gratifying success, the subscriptions averaging $35 per member. Fourteen of the fifteen officers of the church adopted the tithe as a minimum of their gifts—not as bound by the Jewish tithe law, but as bound by gratitude and love to Jesus Christ; not as slaves, but as sons of God. The pastor's salary was increased, as was that of our mission worker, Rev. J. H. Smith. During the past year the gifts of the church to benevolences were 80 per cent more than the previous year. Besides otherwise contributing to foreign missions, the church supports a missionary on the foreign field, Miss Elizabeth Talbot, of Kashing.

We have been interested in the prayer meeting contest, suggested by Rev. W. T. Thompson, Jr., its former pastor; but simultaneous evangelistic services will prevent our entering into it. The finest thing about this church, excepting its liberality, is its prayer meeting, the average attendance for the year being about 30 per cent of its membership.

On April 6th this church married off a daughter. Its mission, Dakotah chapel, was organized by a commission of Orange Presbytery into a church with the name Dakotah Presbyterian Church, which called Rev. J. H. Smith as its pastor. The Lexington Church will continue to be a mother to the new organization, continuing its loving interest, its financial support, and the supplying of a splendid corps of Sunday school teachers.

Rev. O. G. Jones, D. D., Synod's evangelist, preached for us the week, April 7th to 13th, the church being greatly edified and seven added to its membership, six being on profession of faith. Dr. Jones won a place in our hearts by his Christlike spirit, and our prayers follow him in his work of love.

The session in making its narrative to Presbytery expressed its opinion that the church is in the best condition of its history. For this we are grateful to God, whose is all the praise and glory.

L. T. Wilds, Jr., Pastor.

Huntersville—The annual meeting of the southern district North Carolina Christian Endeavor Union will be held at Huntersville, Saturday and Sunday, the 26th and 27th of April. There will be plenty of good music all through the meeting, and a social hour on Saturday afternoon. Free entertainment will be provided by the people of Huntersville, and the names should be sent to Miss Ethel Holbrooks, Huntersville, N. C., on or before Friday, the 25th, so that they may plan for the entertainment.

The following list of speakers and themes bespeak an interesting meeting:

Devotional exercises, Mr. C. C. Erwin; "We are glad you came," Rev. J. W. Grier; "So are we," Mr. N. C. White; More Intermediate Societies, Miss Florence Jamison; Report of District Junior Supt., Miss Nannie Hipp;

The Work of the Intermediate Society, G. M. Beaty; Junior Goals, Mrs. Lewis McFarland.

Saturday Night—Devotional Exercises, Mr. F. H. Bierman; The Monthly Program Drive, Mrs. Louis McFarland; Christian Endeavor Reaching Out—Special Reference to the Southern District, Rev. Bunyan McLeod; Christian Endeavor, a Spiritual Training School, Rev. Shuford Peeler; Dependableness, Rev. G. F. Bell.

Sunday Afternoon—Devotional Exercises, Mr. Bruce Hutchison; Christian Endeavor and Missions, Mrs. McFarland; Better Socials, Miss Sudie Wilson; The Christian Endeavor's Relation to the Church, Mr. Elbert Neel; Expert Endeavor Drive, Mr. F. G. Lilly; Election of District Officers.

Sunday Night—A Model C. E. Meeting, Mr. G. M. Beaty, leader; New Tasks for Christian Endeavor, Dr. H. B. Arbuckle.

Mecklenburg Presbytery held its spring meeting last week in Marshville, an attractive and progressive little town on the Seaboard, and, incidentally, a town aptly named; the elder representing the Presbyterian Church there, the Baptist pastor, the writer's host, and apparently a host of other citizens going by the name of Marsh.

The attendance of this meeting was not large, but the spirit was fine and harmonious, the entertainment all that heart could desire, and the attendance on the preaching and other popular services unusually good. Some one suggested that the people, having endured a quarantine lasting practically all winter, were now hungry for preaching. At any rate they crowded the building at the night services and forced an adjournment to the Baptist Church for Thursday evening in order to accommodate the many who wanted to come. Refreshing—"that's what we call it."

A preaching or missionary service was held morning and night every day, giving a fine spiritual tone to the meeting. The retiring moderator, Rev. C. G. Lynch, dealt with a fruitful subject and a timely one, The Common People, such as heard the Master gladly. Rev. G. F. Bell spoke on Self-Denial. One of the younger ministers, a man with a charming as well as a determined personality, Rev. Z. V. Roberson, of Rockingham, preached on the Crucifixion, while the veteran, George F. Robertson, was held over after adjournment to speak in the courteously tendered Baptist Church Thursday night. Mr. Walker spoke of the Orphanage's need of more good teachers just now and of the desire of the management to provide enlarged dormitory room. Dr. Crawford commented very interestingly on the recently released government statistics on the percentage of North Carolina population of responsible age not connected with any church and told of Synod's Home Mission committee's projected plan to try to raise the money and find a man for every community in the State really destitute of the gospel. The report on Presbytery's home mission was full of encouragement. The committee's indebtedness has been materially reduced. Rev. T. G. Tate gave a most interesting account of the rapid development of the town of Badin, on the Yadkin river, where millions are being expended in industrial development and the recently planted Presbyterian church is growing sturdily. In response Presbytery determined once more to revive the Church and Manse Builders' League immediately and to give Badin's ardent desire for a substantial new church the benefit of the first call. Let us hope that Montgomery county's county seat, Troy, which also wants a new and adequate building badly and has received some generous offers from local men, will get the second, and that soon.

The results of the every member canvass are but partially known as yet, the great majority of the churches having failed to reply to the systematic beneficence committee's earnest plea for the return of the report card. Nearly all of the fourteen churches reporting showed a goodly advance in benevolences in the subscriptions for 1919-1920. Meantime the plea still stands and the other seventy-three churches are very earnestly asked to sit up and take notice.

Hereafter the names of commissioners to the Assembly for the preceding ten years will be printed in the fall minutes for information and guidance to all presbyterial voters who wish to take rotation into consideration, as probably all do. This year the Little, Wool, Furr combination was chosen to represent the ministry, not because it will be greatly needed as far south at New Orleans, but because it well deserved the honor. Mr. George E. Wilson, of Charlotte First, Mr. William Ross, of Providence, and Mr. E. E. Marsh, of Marshville, will represent the eldership.

ARKANSAS.

Blytheville—The whole month of March with its five Sabbaths, was given to the Assembly's "Progressive Program." The every member canvas for current expenses and benevolences was made on the last Sabbath of the month. The pledges on that day exceeded the quota of $1,200 by about $48, since other pledges have come in increasing the amount by about an additional hundred. Mr. J. Nick Thomas, the congregational manager, deserves much credit for the efficient manner in which he handled the campaign. He was ably assisted by the officers of the church. The quota of $1,200 for this church represents an increase of $400 over the quota of last year. About ninety per cent of the membership made pledges. The per capita for benevolences and current expenses together is about $45.

On the second Sabbath of April the quarterly communion was held with a goodly number of communicants present. Ten new members were welcomed.

Arrangements have been made for the installation of the pastor-elect, J. Walter Cobb, on the first Sabbath in May.

An Appreciation—It might be of interest to your readers throughout the Synod of Arkansas for me to say a word about Rev. R. A. Brown, recently pastor of the church of Waycross, Ga. in Savannah Presbytery, since he has now become regional evangelist for that Synod and the writer was born, reared and educated in Arkansas and has been intimately associated with Mr. Brown for more than eleven years in the work of Savannah Presbytery, both as pastors and as co-workers in Presbyterial Home Missions.

Mr. Brown graduated at Davidson College in 1892 with Drs. Lingle, Cornelson, Richards, and in 1895 from Union Seminary with Drs. Lingle, Van Lear, Gilmore and other leading men of our Southern Assembly. In 1909 and 1910 he attended the Divinity College of the Glasgow University for special studies. In 1896 he was called, ordained and installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Waycross which church he served until he accepted the regional evangelistic work in the Synods of Arkansas and Oklahoma. Mr. Brown saw Waycross grow from 4,000 to 20,000, and his church from a little band of 36 members to a strong church of over 400 members. During these years he received into the church over 900 members, more than 400 of them coming on profession of faith, or from other denominations, through their fondness for Mr. Brown. He was commissioner to the Assemblies of Greensboro and Atlanta from Savannah Presbytery. He was a member of the board of trade of Waycross and of the Progress Club of 30 selected members, receiver for the original Y. M. C. A. when this work was abandoned because of the inauguration of the large railway Y. M. C. A., was chairman of civilian relief work, and identified with every phase of religious, civil and social life of the city. I have been told by traveling men of other denominations and even other cities that Mr. Brown was easily the foremost citizen of the city of Waycross, and when he and his good wife were severing their ties and leaving there those of all churches and of no church, those of all races and colors testified with their gifts and with their tears to the large and warm place which they had won for themselves and would ever retain in their hearts.

Mr. Brown is especially gifted and interested in evangelistic work, has many times been called to this work, and in the many meetings held throughout our Presbytery has always done a large and substantial work, a work of a substantial nature, and accomplished large results.

As an intimate friend and co-laborer with him here for more than eleven years I know most intimately of his work and am glad to give these few feeble words of appreciation of it; and as an old Arkansas man myself I am delighted to see my Synod secure the services for half time of one who is sound, gifted, fervent and faithful in the evangelistic arm of the Master's work.

FLORIDA.

High Springs—Rev. Jno. G. Anderson assisted the pastor, Rev. J. S. Jennings, recently in a series of services in this church. Rev. W. T. Pearmon, of Tennessee, conducted the singing. There were 10 professions of faith, of which seven joined the Presbyterian church. The greater part of the church membership rededicated their lives to Christ's service.

Gainesville, First Church—Evangelistic services have recently been held in this church. Rev. Jno. G. Anderson, pastor, conducted by Evangelist F. D. Hunt, assisted by Rev. W. T. Pearman in charge of the music. There were about 30 professions of faith, nineteen joined the Presbyterian church. Six others united by letter. The church was much revived and new interest is being taken in all the ten branches of church work.

Oakland—In pledging twenty-three thousand dollars in twenty-three minutes for a religious purpose, we believe the Oakland Presbyterian Church (seventy-five members) and community have made a new record.

During the week beginning March 17th, pledges were quickly secured by an every member canvass, which amounted to more than our apportionment for beneficence. On Saturday of the same week, March 22d, a great congregational and community picnic was held on the manse lawn with a view of ascertaining the sentiment of the people in regard to building a new church and a new manse. After the best kind of dinner the pastor standing upon the table on which a space had been cleared, (it still groaned with good things) made some remarks and introduced Dr. Stacy, pastor of the Lakeland Presbyterian Church, who in a splendid address, presented plans for the "Model Church." He was followed with stirring speeches by Elders L. W. Tilden and J. H. Sadler. The deacons were then asked to move through the crowd and call out pledges. On a blackboard prepared for the purpose and placed on the table, the amounts were checked off by Mr. Tilden as called out.

The amount to be raised was set at $22,000. In twenty-three minutes after the first pledge was called out, twenty-three thousand dollars were pledged, thus "going over the top." These were virtually cash pledges to be paid as needed. The harmony and dignified quiet and earnestness of the entire proceeding, together with the result, surpassed anything the people present had ever seen. Without any urging the different denominations represented at the picnic joined in the great work, and all rejoiced together with thanksgiving to God.

We commend the Oakland method.

Atlanta—Oglethorpe University, which has been the recipient recently of a number of large donations, is indebted to Mr. John K. Ottley, its treasurer, for still another handsome gift. This gift is for $5,000 to be available within five years. The gift was accompanied by a note of appreciation of what has already been accomplished by the institution.

Atlanta, Central Church—Rev. B. R. Lacy, Jr., our pastor-elect, has accepted the call extended him by this Church. This was the report made last Sunday by the committee appointed to prosecute the call.

In a letter read before the congregation last Sunday Mr. Lacy stated that he would be with us to preach his first sermon on May 18th.

This news is received with much joy by our people who are looking forward to his coming with great anticipation.—

Church Bulletin.

Atlanta—Last Sabbath was a fine day in the Central church—glorious weather, splendid Sabbath school and delightful communion service. At the close of the school 13 young people were received into the membership of the church, eleven of them on profession of faith in Christ. This Sabbath school is a great evangelistic agency. The teaching is along that line and for several weeks the pastor pro tem has been giving a short talk in connection with the closing exercises, setting forth the plan of salvation and urging decision. Some others who would have joined were unavoidably kept away, but will come in later. The school in all its departments has an enrollment of over 1,200.

At the preaching service a letter was read from Rev. B. R. Lacy, pastor-elect, accepting the call and stating that he would begin his pastorate the third Sabbath in May—18th prox. This was good news for the congregation who have been awaiting his decision and return from overseas. He preached here the last Sabbath in March and made a very favorable impression. He will find in this historic old church that has been served by some of the ablest preachers in the Southern Assembly, a warm welcome to a great work and he will be surrounded in it by a loyal united people. The reports to the Presbytery read by the clerk of the session the congregation showed a total membership of 1,557, and total contributions for the year of over $38,000.

North Avenue Church, Atlanta—This church has received word that its pastor, Dr. Richard Orme Flinn, has safely arrived overseas and has begun his work on the other side under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Dr. Flinn will go to the various camp centers carrying an evangelistic message of the love of Jesus Christ and His salvation.

Recognizing the fact that more church members should know each other, have more specific information regarding church and denominational life a social visitation campaign has been begun among the members of this congregation. Each of the thirty officers has been assigned four volunteer lieutenants and a list of twenty members. The list of twenty has been divided into groups of five who will be visited by the officer and one of his lieutenants. It is hoped by this means to get many suggestions for the work of the church, and to arouse interest in what is being done.

The day school connected with North Avenue Church has outgrown its present quarters, and plans are under way for securing larger ones. At present the school has an enrollment of about 250 pupils who receive daily instruction in the Bible.

TENNESSEE.

The Presbytery of Nashville at its recent spring meeting at Shelbyville, Tenn., passed by nearly unanimous vote the following overture which was forwarded to the General Assembly:

"The Presbytery of Nashville hereby overtures the General Assembly in session in New Orleans to appoint a committee composed of the present moderators of the several Synods of the Assembly, together with the retiring moderator of the Assembly, Dr. James I. Vance, as chairman for the purpose of taking definite steps towards organic union with the Presbyterian church in the United States of America."

This Presbytery loves the great mother church and it looks as if nothing short of Simon pure organic union will ever satisfy the needs felt by us in these border states.

Highland Church, Guerrant—On Sunday, April 6th, the beautiful new church connected with the Highland School at Guerrant, Ky., was formally dedicated. The completion of this building is one of the signal victories in the history of the work at this place. When Rev. W. B. Guerrant took charge of the church the school chapel afforded the only place for public worship. This is uncomfortable and dilapidated and impossible to heat in the winter time. He saw the great need of a suitable house of worship and interested Mr. Thomas J. Talbot in the plan to build one. To this end they have both worked with unflagging zeal. Friends arose to their support and a beautiful building was erected at a cost of $3,800.

The small remaining indebtedness was lifted by the people of the community at the dedicatory service.

The church was erected during the winter months, a task which in the mountains is attended with difficulties undreamed of by the dweller in the plains. The material except the rough lumber which was sawed at the mill belonged to the Highland School, and all the furnishings had to be purchased in the city, shipped to the mountain station of Athol and hauled out to the site over nine miles of unthinkably bad roads, through rain, snow and mud. The influenza epidemic prevailed throughout the community during all the months of its erection. Though more than once stricken with illness our pastor was day by day at his task of directing the hauling, and overseeing and advising the workmen. Much of his youth and strength and life was built into that church and no matter what changes the years may bring it will always be permeated with his personality.

For a country mountain church the building is unique. Houses of worship are few in the hills. These few are very crude, built of rough lumber with home made benches. But this is a real church. The building is bungalow style, tastefully finished both within and without, with ample Sunday school class rooms. The pews are modern and comfortable and the lovely pulpit furniture was given in memory of the late lamented Dr. Guerrant, who founded both the church and the school by his wife and children.

The dedication day was perfect. The hills were beautiful with bursting buds and flowers and floods of sunshine.

The members of the school, community and a large concourse of the mountain people were present at all the services. The visiting ministers were Dr. J. W. Tyler, Rev. A. H. Doak and Rev. Joe Hagins. Mr. Watson, of Wilmore and the workers from Shoulder Blade, Canoe and Athol were also present.

The music of the day consisting of the usual organ voluntaries, hymns and special selections, was ably rendered by the director and choir of six girls from the Highland School.

The morning sermon was delivered by Rev. A. H. Doak, of Wilmore. It was in his usual forceful and spiritual style and was deeply appreciated by his hearers. At this service Dr. Tyler presented the pulpit furniture on behalf of Mrs. E. O. Guerrant and children and led in the formal dedicatory service.

Rev. Joe Hagins gave an instructive and helpful discourse on the Lord's Supper in the afternoon and presided at the administration of the Sacrament.

At night Dr. J. W. Tyler delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the second graduating class of Highland School, consisting of three members. So much of help and inspiration do his sermons always bring to the young people that his arrival at the school plant is always hailed as a benediction.

So closed the day which had been filled with so much of all that was helpful and inspiring.

VIRGINIA.

Richmond, First—At the communion service Sunday, April 13th, the largest body of communicants ever known before took part in the communion service. Forty-two additions were announced as having been received, eighteen on profession of faith and 24 by letter. The reports for the past year are among the best yet experienced in this church. Sixty-six members were added during the year and the benevolent contributions amounted to $21,126. Total contributions of $31,526.

Leach—Ralph Leach, an honored and respected deacon in Bethesda Church, was called to his eternal reward on October 11, 1918.

Faithful in the discharge of every duty, energetic in its execution, he demonstrated fully the sterling traits of sturdy Scotch character which he inherited from that unique race. Perhaps no resident of our town could claim a wider circle of friends, friends who were drawn to him by his universal courtesies and naturally jovial disposition.

His well-balanced judgment was recognized by his fellow-townsmen, and for two terms he served very acceptably as mayor of Aberdeen, fulfilling the highest expectations of his friends as a faithful and aggressive official.

For eleven years Capt. Leach was an earnest member of Bethesda Church, and for four years he served most acceptably as a deacon.

He is survived by his wife, who before marriage was Miss Zadie Pleasants, three daughters and one son. With the feeling that we have lost a valued and faithful fellow-officer, who has gone to his eternal reward, the elders and deacons of Bethesda Church offer this tribute to his memory.

IN MEMORIAM.

John McEachern McIver.

John MacEachern McIver, son of Mary McEachern McIver and J. Milton McIver, was born in Guilford county, North Carolina, January 20, 1899. He attended the Lumber Bridge High School, from which he graduated with the class of 1918.

As a boy he was quiet, industrious, and obedient to his parents. His fine qualities won for him many friends. There was no more highly respected young man in his neighborhood than he.

When eleven years of age he made a profession of faith in Christ, and joined the Lumber Bridge church. When Rex Church was organized near his home he transferred his membership to the new church, becoming a charter member. He lived up to his profession. His life was without blemish, and he was always at his place in church and Sunday school.

In February of the present year he went to Kansas City, Mo., to take a special course in electricity. He had been in that distant city nearly a week when he was stricken with influenza pneumonia, from which he died February 11, 1919. On February 16th he was laid to rest in Rex cemetery beside his little sister and mother, the latter having preceded him to the grave about three years. An unusually large concourse of friends and relatives bore him to the grave which was covered with beautiful floral offerings, thus testifying to the love and esteem in which he was held.

UNCLE IN GERMANY.

I am a little girl not quite six years old. I have never been to school but I can say the alphabet and the Books of the Old Testament except the minor prophets. I haven't quite finished learning them yet. I go to the Sunday school every Sunday. My mother takes your nice paper and my sister reads the letters to me. My uncle is a chaplain in the army and is in Germany now.

Your little friend,
Evelyn Woodside.

LIVES IN THE COUNTRY.

Dear Standard:

I am a girl twelve years old. I live in the country. I like to feed the biddies and gather the eggs for mother. I go to Sunday school every Sunday. My teacher is Miss Mary E. Dickson. Our pastor is Rev. H. L. Sneed. I hope my letter will not reach the waste basket.

Your little friend,
Frances Nichols.

MISSED A LOT OF SCHOOL.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy nine years old. I am in the fourth grade at school. My teacher's name is Miss Langstone. I like her very much. I had to miss school about eight weeks this winter on account of a severe burn I had on my leg.

Our Sunday school class has about 30 boys in it. I have named the books of the Old and New Testament. Our class has six war saving stamps.

We have a fine preacher. His name is Mr. J. H. Henderlite.

We take your paper and I enjoy reading it very much.

Your unknown friend,
Dan Senn Lafar.

HAVE GREAT TIMES TOGETHER.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl seven years old. I am in the second grade. I go to school to mother.

I have a dear little sister. Her name is Margaret. She will be a year old next Friday. She can walk and talk.

I have a brother, too. His name is Frank. He is five years old. We have great times together.

I have a dog and his name is Blucher.

Your little friend,
Elita Wardlaw.

WHEN A PRINCESS HAD WHAT SHE WISHED.

"I wish I were rich and could have anything I wanted. I'd always be happy then."

I wonder if you have ever said that? If so, perhaps this little story about a real princess will show you that riches do not always bring happiness and that the best pleasures are very often those that we make for ourselves.

When Queen Victoria was a little girl, she was one day visiting Queen Adelaide, who told her that as a great treat she could have anything she liked to ask for. Thereupon the little princess said nothing would give her so much joy as to clean the windows!

So they gave her a pail of water and some pieces of cloth, and she spent a very happy time at her task. If you were a princess and could have what you asked for, I wonder if you would have made such a choice?—Jewels.

KITUK AND THE YELLOW DOG.

"I don't see what use you can ever be to me," said Kituk, looking at the dog with a serious air. The dog seemed to understand, for he tried to hide his face under one paw. "No, sir!" the Eskimo boy continued, "I don't believe you could ever be any use in the world. You won't pull, and if you were willing to, you couldn't do enough to help any. Look at your legs! You ought to be ashamed of them! They are only pipe-stems!"

The dog did look ashamed of himself, but he made no move to run away. Somehow a dog has a way of knowing when he has found a friend. This friend may make fun of him and say things about him, but he will treat him kindly after all, and give him good things to eat, and the dog knows! And the yellow dog knew.

And his ideas were just right, for when the Eskimo boy and the little dog team swung out in the clear trail an hour later the yellow dog was trotting along behind the sled. "There's one thing about it," Kituk said to the dog, laughing, "if we get into a blizzard it will take a long time to freeze you, for it takes a lot to freeze skin and bones, and that is all you are."

No one knew where the Yellow Dog had come from. He had appeared down on the sand pit at Nome where the Eskimo people were camped in their tents and upturned canoes. He had stayed about all summer, begging a bit of whale meat or seal blubber from the kind-hearted natives. Probably he had been stolen from some good home down in the "States" and shipped up to Nome, with hundreds of other dogs, only to be cast away later as unfit for sled service. Now, all the friendly tents had melted away from the sand pit and the long winter snow had come. It was fortunate, indeed, that this Eskimo boy had happened along just at that time.

Far to the north and west they traveled past Shinrock Charlie's roadhouse, up stormy Tissue River, by Port Clarence, round Cape Prince of Wales Mountain, and on and on, toward the boy's winter home on far away Gollivan Bay. Often there was little enough to eat, but at those times all shared alike, sled dogs, boy and his unfortunate new friend, who had never been able to pull. Sometimes the boy was sorely tempted to desert the stranger, but he was, after all, a dog, and to the Eskimo the dog had always been a best friend. No, he would not desert him! Sometimes he wondered vaguely if the creature could ever be of any use in the world. Perhaps he was a hunting dog. White men had told him of such dogs. But no, when a covey of ptarmigan flew up from the trail the Yellow Dog paid no attention to them, and when they crossed the track of a great white bear he took one sniff at it and began whining piteously. What possible use could such a dog be anyway?

Once the dog did a strange thing. They had rounded Cape Prince of Wales Mountain and were crossing great stretches of tundra when they came upon the tracks of two caribou, or reindeer, freshly made in the crusted snow. At once the Yellow Dog sprang away over this trail, his nose close to the ground. Kituk found it hard to call him back, and all that day he trudged along with a downhearted air.

"That was a strange thing for you to do," said Kituk to the dog that night. "Why did you do it? You won't hunt ptarmigan. You are afraid of polar bear. Why should you wish to follow that silly reindeer who is no doubt a hundred miles away by now? Don't you know that reindeer travel very swiftly?" But the dog only wagged his tail and looked more disappointed than ever.

The next day trouble overtook Kituk. He was traveling late in the evening when suddenly he felt his feet sink in an overflow. A warm spring had broken through the ice and the water had not yet frozen. It was bitter cold. There was no place to go. There was no wood to make a fire. He could only travel on as fast as possible. In a quarter of an hour he could feel his feet freezing. They did not pain him, but they grew stiff and hard like boards. How he wished he had worn his water-tight seal-skin mucklocks in place of the warmer ones of deerskin!

It is an awful thing to feel that you are freezing and yet to feel no pain. It is easy to fight when you feel the pangs of pain from the enemy's darts. But to feel nothing, that is terrible! Kituk had almost given up hope when dim in the distance he saw the black bulk of Sam Coldclod's cabin. The cabin had been deserted for years, but there was an old stove in it and perhaps some wood. With all the force of his dauntless spirit the boy forced his stiffened members forward. He had to drag himself the last quarter of a mile, but at last he was there. And there, oh, joy! there was a pile of wood in the corner! His frozen clothing was soon striped off. His feet and legs were rubbed and rubbed with snow. Then a fire was started and slowly the blood began to flow back painfully. His life was saved, but it would be days and days before he would dare to venture out alone from the cabin.

And how about his dog team? Left alone outside they at last became uneasy and began wandering about making wider and wider circles, until at last they found a trail that interested them and went spinning away, leaving their master, crippled and without food, in a lone cabin far from other human habitations.

It was sometime before Kituk discovered the desertion. When he did he was thrown into a panic of despair. What should he do? Was he saved from freezing only to die the more horrible death of slow starvation? Suddenly something touched his leg. It was the nose of the Yellow Dog. He had not deserted.

"Well," said the boy, with tears in his eyes, "I never knew what you were good for, and I don't know now, but I do know that you're a lot of comfort." At that he built up a good fire and stretched himself out on the cot to sleep.

The Yellow Dog did not sleep. He was restless. A strangely familiar scent had come to him near the cabin that day. He wanted to get out and explore. He nosed around the door till it opened a bit. He was soon making wide circles about the cabin. Wider and wider the circles grew until he came upon a wind-blown trail and away after this he went full speed. When Kituk awoke late in the night he called to the dog, but received no response. He saw the open door. "So," he said half bitterly, "he has deserted me, too—but then, what could one expect of a dog?" He dragged himself to the door and closed it. Then he wrapped the ragged cabin blankets about him and went to sleep.

When he awoke the sun was streaming in at the window and something was making a noise at the door. "Sounds like a dog pawing," said Kituk to himself. "I wonder if he came back after all? But what is all that sound of feet tramping? What makes that strange, arking? It is like reindeer." He dragged himself to the door. As he opened it the Yellow Dog sprang at him and began licking his face. "Down, sir!" said Kituk, peering out beyond him at the great herd of reindeer that surrounded the cabin. "Good!" he cried to himself, "it is someone's reindeer herd. They must be near and will come and take me away."

But the reindeer herders were not near. They were many miles away. Very angry they were, too, for their herd had run away in the night, and they must tramp many miles to find them. Here and there, as they followed the wide band of tracks across the tundra, they saw a strange track mingled with the hoofprints. Some said it was a wolf, others a dog. The creature had behaved very strangely. They could not see where it had injured the least fawn. There was no blood on the ground. But they could see where it had crossed and recrossed behind the deer, just as they might have done had they been driving them.

They came at last to the cabin and to the deer herd. They were much surprised, though overjoyed, to find their friend Kituk and were very sorry for him in his misfortune.

"Ah, I understand!" said Kituk, as they told him what the Yellow Dog had done. "A white man told me once that there were dogs who drove cattle, and cattle are like reindeer. This yellow dog is one of these. He is some good after all. He saw I needed help, so he brought the reindeer herd to my rescue. I fed him, and now for pay he has saved my life. I shall keep him as long as I live." And you may be sure he did.—Roy J. Snell, in Congregationalist.

vicinity have been reaping the results of the Billy Sunday meetings:

The Roseneath Church has received one member; Montrose Church, eleven members; First Church, Richmond, forty-five; Hogue Memorial, twenty-two; Laurel, thirty-three; Mizpah, twenty-three.

The following churches have increased their pastor's salaries: Aberdeen, $170; Amelia, $150; Bethany, $50; Blackstone, $200; Burkeville, $50; Emporia, $600; Montrose $100; Olivet, $50; Petersburg Second, $600; Market Street, $300; Providence, $75; Pryor Memorial, $150; Richmond First, $500; Richmond, Second, $1,500; Richmond, $300; Samuel Daves, $300.

Woman's Auxiliary.

Harmony Presbyterian Auxiliary met in annual session in Indiantown Church, Williamsburg county, April 8-9, 1919. The delegates were met with automobiles at Kingstree and carried to the church sixteen miles away.

Lunch was served on arrival and the opening session was held at 3 o'clock.

The local pastor, Rev. W. R. Pritchett, conducted the devotional and extended greetings from the church session, the congregation and the Woman's Auxiliary.

Rev. S. D. Winn, of Korea, delivered the Foreign Mission address.

Mrs. S. C. Hodges, of Greenwood, Synodical secretary of literature, delivered an inspiring address, "Building Our Flag for Jesus."

Mrs. S. L. Leiby, of Charleston, spoke of the Tuscaloosa conference and the school for negro girls.

Rev. D. M. Clark of the Andrews field was present and asked that the Presbyterian continue this work as special for another year at least. The figures presented showed wonderful progress since February.

After full discussion the Presbyterian decided to continue the Andrews work and then it was referred to the standing committee.

Of the 24 Auxiliaries in the Presbyterian, representatives were present from 21.

The register showed 34 representatives, 10 Presbyterian, 2 Synodical officers and 25 visitors.

The secretary of literature had a fine exhibit of literature.

The wall chart prepared by the recording secretary, "Summary of Annual Reports 1909, 1914, 1919," showed the progress made in all lines by the Presbyterian. Total to all causes 1909, $1,070; 1914, $2,087; 1919, $4,123.

The Presbyterian reached the standard of excellence 10 per cent increase in membership and $1,310 in gifts.

Three Auxiliaries were organized during the year, two enrolled in the Presbyterian Auxiliary.

After a rising vote of thanks to the good people of Indiantown and their friends the Presbyterian adjourned to meet at Wedgefield next Spring.

Albemarle Presbyterian Auxiliary—The twenty-first annual session of Albemarle Presbyterian Auxiliary convened in the Presbyterian Church at Roanoke Rapids, N. C., April 9th, 10th and 11th. At the organ recital followed by an informal reception, the pastor, Rev. Stanley White, gave us a most hearty welcome, and the delegates and local workers spent a delightful social hour getting acquainted.

The business session came to order the morning of the 10th, presided over by Mrs. J. N. Baker, who has so efficiently held the presidency for six years. Her opening address inspired us to undertake even the smallest opportunity of service, truly making it "My little job." The address of welcome was made by Mrs. J. F. Beckwith, of the local society, most cordially and gracefully extended their hospitality. Mrs. S. N. Harrell responded in her usual happy and unique manner.

The minutes of the last meeting and reports of the secretary and treasurer were read and approved. Reports from the societies were heard and although all had suffered from the dreadful epidemic of influenza, many of them had increased their contributions, showing that even under the strain and stress of war and sorrow they had pushed forward for greater things in the Master's kingdom. The morning session closed with devotional exercises led by Mrs. George Ramsey, of Raleigh, who conducted all of them.

At the afternoon session, Miss Mary Owen Graham gave us a short talk on Peace Institute which is so near and dear to the hearts of Albemarle Presbyterian Auxiliary. Other business and reports filled the remaining hour.

Probably the most attractive part of the program was the message from Korea by Mrs. Martin L. Swinehart on the evening of the 10th, at which time we had a rare treat, for with a personality all her own, with a keen sense of wit and humor, with a very human insight of the homely things we women want to hear about, and in the usual attire of a Korean woman, she brought us a message laden with the needs of that far-away land "boiling" with thirteen millions of people in an area the size of Kansas.

The session Friday morning was given over to the Young People's work and Miss Mary Owen Graham spoke encouragingly of the past and present, but urged the necessity for greater training of the young people—our future men and women.

Miss Jean McAlpine, of the Assembly's Training School in Richmond, spoke interestingly on "How to conduct a Mission Study class," and Miss Mabel Hall presented our Assembly Home Mission work, vividly picturing the needs of "Bloody Breathitt" county in Kentucky, and showing some of the possibilities, by hand work which she brought for our inspection.

The closing session on Friday afternoon was most interesting, especially in hearing intimately of the work and life, at the Assembly training school in Richmond, from Miss McAlpine, and adopting her as "Our Daughter."

The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. J. N. Baker; First Vice President, Miss Mary Owen Graham; Secretary and Treasurer, Mrs. S. K. Phillips.

After this inspiring and profitable session, we adjourned to meet in Kinston in 1920.

Mrs. B. R. Lacy, Secretary.

Fayetteville Presbyterian Auxiliary—The 30th annual meeting of Fayetteville Presbyterian Auxiliary was held in the Presbyterian church, Lillington, N. C., April 15-17.

There was a good attendance of delegates and a number of visitors. The program was excellent and the speakers brought the needs of the work home to our hearts.

Mrs. Swinehart presented the work in Korea in a most interesting and entertaining way, and Miss Mabel Hall, of Kentucky, gave a graphic sketch of the difficulties of the work among the mountaineers caused by the lack of equipment.

Miss Bringham, from the General Assembly's Training School for Lay Workers at Richmond, Va., held the Bible study hour each day, in a very inspiring, helpful way and also presented the cause of her school.

A questionnaire for delegates caused an interesting discussion of the problems met and their solution.

The conference on Young People's work conducted by Mrs. D. H. Shaw was very interesting and stimulated all to more intensive work for the young.

Miss Mary Owen Graham, of Peace, presented the work of "The Summer School of Missions" in a manner that made each delegate resolve that her church should be represented.

A very eloquent and earnest address on "Stewardship," was given by Rev. E. E. Gillespie, of York, S. C.

The new foreign mission study book was discussed by

Story and Incident

Three Cheers and a Tiger.

A PROMINENT manufacturer in a bustling little Western city took me to lunch with him during the session of the conference which I was visiting. He never tired talking of the minister who founded the first church. The bravery and eloquence of this first parson were the subjects of unending eulogy. The beauty, sweetness and courage of the parson's young wife were topics concerning which the old gentleman spoke with deep and affectionate feeling. He told the story of the parson's baby when it was the only one in town.

"The parson's baby was the first baby born in our town. It received a welcome equal to the Fourth of July. Every bell was rung, every shop and store was decorated in honor of the arrival of the new citizen. It seems childish now, but it seemed very proper and fitting then.

"As soon as the parson's wife was able to sit up, she was placed in the front room and sat there for hours, singing to her baby. She was a cunning little woman. She knew the boys were wild to see the baby, and she sat by the window, where all who walked by could look in. One of the fellows who had been hanging around for several days, hoping to get the first peep at the baby, was rewarded that morning by seeing the little woman carried close to the window and seated in a chair.

"I was the fellow: Like a great fool I stopped and looked in. She just smiled and shook her finger at me, and then held up the baby for me to see. I bowed and threw the baby a kiss, and was off like a shot.

"I told the fellows what I had seen. Would you believe it? Hundreds had errands that day that took them by the parsonage. The mother knew how hungry we rough men were for the sight of a baby's face. She did not resent our curiosity, but took pains to let every one have a peep at the chubby creature.

"You would have laughed to see the presents that poured in for that youngster. The boys got to speaking of it as 'our baby.' All began to wonder when it would make its first appearance in public. We clubbed together and sent off for a baby carriage. I was appointed as the one to present it. About twenty fellows went along with me. The parson's wife accepted the carriage with smiles and tears, and made me kiss her baby as my reward. She promised that I should wheel it out for its first ride in the new carriage.

"It was several days before I received word that the baby needed a ride in the open air. I put on my best clothes, and told everybody I met that if they would be on the lookout they would see 'our baby.' Before the little woman gave me her baby she asked me if I was safe company for the little one. I knew she was not joking. I felt hot all over. I knew I was not fit company for anything good or pure, and I started for the door as I said: 'Madam, I am not worthy to be trusted with your baby. I am a wicked man and ought to be ashamed even to look you in the face.'

"Her blue eyes were swimming in tears and her lips trembled as she said:

"'Jack, you were once a baby yourself. Your good mother loved you as I love my child. It would have broken her heart to have you grow up and become a wicked man. I would rather bury my baby than have him become a man like you. I am going to pray for you while you are giving my baby a ride.'

"Although I was so awkward in starting that the parson's wife laughed like a school girl at my clumsiness, I managed to get along without upsetting the carriage. I found every man on the lookout. I went up one street and down another. I found crowds everywhere. Everybody was happy. Some shouted and cheered and some cried. The roughest toughs in town seemed to be the heartiest in their cheers and some of them cried the hardest.

"As I pushed the cart along I saw my own sweet mother as she held me in her arms and rocked me and sang lullabies to me. I saw her face as plainly as if it had been yesterday that I had rested my head upon her breast. I heard her voice as she sang to me. The words all came back to me, and the tune, and I found myself humming:

"Hush, my dear, lie still and slumber, Holy angels guard thy bed!"

"I was so blinded with tears that I had to stop and wipe my eyes, and to conceal my weakness I pretended to tuck the clothes around the little one. The baby looked up into my face and cooed and gurgled, and caught my finger in its chubby little fist. I found myself praying as I wheeled the carriage. I became a new man while giving the baby its first ride. When I took it back to its mother I said:

"Madam, your prayers have been answered. Your baby has done for me what neither you nor the parson have been able to do; I am going to begin a new life.'

"We had some kind of a celebration in the church, and the parson's wife and baby made their first public appearance. As the little woman walked in the men cheered and clapped their hands. She smiled and blushed, but did not seem to be offended. During the exercises the brass band played a selection. They had hardly begun when the baby, frightened at the blare of the horns and the crash of the drums, broke out in a shrill cry of terror. It could not be quieted. The horns blew louder and the drums pounded harder, and the baby tried to cry louder. At last one big fellow jumped up, marched down the aisle, and seizing the leader of the band by the collar, gave him a savage jerk, and shouted:

"'Stop the racket of this band and give "our baby" a chance.'

"The band stopped instantly, and the baby kept right on. It cried for a minute at the top of its voice. When it ceased round after round of applause filled the house, and scores of voices shouted, 'Encore! Encore!' The man who had stopped the band stood up on the seat and cried:

"'Three cheers for the parson's wife, and a tiger for "our baby"!"

"That let pandemonium loose for several minutes. The baby got over its scare, and seemed to like the roar of the crowd. It crowed and cooed, and tried to clap its little chubby hands. The cheering only ceased when the crowd was exhausted. The leader in the interruption of the program now shouted:

"'You can go on with this show now, unless "our baby" wants another chance.'—J. Benson Hamilton, in Independent.

Mrs. Swinehart, of Korea, and the home mission book by Mrs. R. N. Page, of Biscoe.

The business part of the program was full and the reports showed encouraging progress.

The delegates were very grateful for the gracious hospitality extended by the people of Lillington.

Before the report of the nominating committee was read, Miss Patty Watkins gave a fine tribute to the work of our beloved president, Mrs. J. M. McIver, and announced that Mrs. McIver had refused, when approached by the committee to hold the office any longer. Mrs. W. L. Wilson then voiced the sentiment of the ladies in a short tribute to Mrs. McIver, and the feeling of deep sorrow and regret her decision caused. For five years she has been untiring in her zeal, and through her efforts wonderful progress has been made. As several other officers resigned quite a number of changes were necessary. Mrs. W. A. West, of Fayetteville, was elected president and we hope to go forward to even better work in the Master's vineyard under her leadership.

THE CHILD AND THE OGRE.

The trolley was well filled. Every seat was taken and the car swung around the curve of the Monongahela hills and bumped along on its way to the city, rocking and jolting a sweet-faced child in the arms of its father. The mother sat proudly by, her maternal smile hovering like a benediction over the beautiful child.

Its grimace and laughter kept the passengers in a pleasant mood as it nodded and ducked its head and courtesied to a little girl across the way as if they were old acquaintances, kissing its hand in baby fashion, attempting at times the military salute, touching its snow-white cap and then forgetting to withdraw its hand, and pirouetting to the merriment of everyone. The unaffected innocence of the child was the charm of the evening.

At one of the stations, two men decidedly under the influence of liquor, boarded the car. There were no seats available, and they stood at the side entrance, sagging, garrulous and imbecile. One of them soon left the car. The remaining one was inexpressibly disgusting in his appearance. He was a typical drunk; dirty, unwashed, filthy in his clothing, and with a countenance that was absolutely repellant. As he clung to one of the iron supports he noticed the little child, and began, in his maudlin way, to make friends with it, touching its snow-white arm with his filthy hand, crooking his dirty fingers, shaking his clenched fist, and twisting his brutal face into smiles. The child looked up at him in open-eyed wonderment. Its gaze was one of bewildered inquiry. Its pure black eyes were riveted for a moment upon the distorted face, then it swung across into the arms of its mother, threw its plump arms about her neck, and turned its face about to look again into the grim ogre whose clumsy attempt at levity was to us all so disgusting. The mother placed the child on the seat beyond her and turned its face toward the window, as if darkness without were preferable to the face of the drunkard within.

As we looked upon the scene we could scarcely keep back the words: "What concord hath Christ with Beliel," or what part hath a little child with a drunkard? Its face was so pure, so limpid and lovely, so suggestive of innocence and Christliness. The face of the drunkard was so offensive and suggestive of human depravity and ruin. Few greater contrasts are possible between two beings belonging to the same race. The extremes of character and beauty were commented upon, and whispered about the car. The tableau showed the possible descent from the loveliness of a little child to the revolting atrophy of all that is God-like in man.

And yet. Was there no hope at the bottom of Pandora's box? Had not those dark eyes and rosy cheeks stirred within that shriveled soul some smouldering spark of loveliness and beauty? Had not the sweet unconsciousness of the child called forth that empty, inane smile, and accomplished something in the soul of that man which not another person in the car would have attempted, except through the grace of Him who said, "Except ye become as a little child?" May there not have been some fraction of "the Kingdom of heaven" in that man's heart which our unchild-like eyes were too dim to see? There is no soul that is absolutely hopeless, no tight-barred heart of man to which God may not come with His key, though it be borne in the hand of a little child.

We left the car in the heart of the great city feeling that an earnest lesson of the day had impressed itself upon our own heart. The two contrasted figures that fill our vision, as we think of that Sabbath evening home-coming, are the ogre at the car door and the face of the little child. The smile of the babe in its mother's arms showed, in the responsive smile of the drunkard, that deep in every soul, however depraved and dissolute, God has hidden some priceless treasure. May ours be the joy of discovery.—United Presbyterian.

PROFANITY.

We desire to reinforce with all our power the fine article on "Patriotism and profanity," which we are republishing on the front page of this paper today.

The most deplorable thing about the profanity hatred to Germany has developed is the fact that Christian men not only tolerate but encourage it by indulging in the habit themselves.

A year or more ago one of the leading Baptist pastors of New York City, Dr. Eaton, of the Madison Avenue church, indulged in a tirade of profanity in his reference to the Kaiser, that shocked the judicious, but nobody else. What he said, if he was correctly reported, should have driven him from the Christian ministry. We are told that Dr. Eaton is a very amiable and attractive man. We have no reason to doubt it, but he should repent of his sin and confess that repentance or quit preaching the Gospel.

Nor is he the only preacher who has started a sentiment in favor of profanity. It has become the common thing, and the man who "speaks in public on the stage" and who confines himself to decent language is so rare as to excite remark. The result of all this violent and vulgar abuse will be a generation of swearers after the war is over. The children read the slogans, "To Hell With the Kaiser," and kindred expressions, and hear the profanity of public speakers and come to the conclusion that the training some of them receive at home is all wrong; and that the way to express one's self with force is to "cuss."

The truth of the matter is, as the Watchman-Examiner says, swearing is entirely useless. It does the Kaiser no harm—it is only harmful to the user and to innocent minds upon which his imprecations fall. It is notoriously true that the profanest man in the neighborhood is the most arrant coward. Abuse never yet won a victory. A fighter has no time to swear.

Those who profess to be Christians ought not to adopt the language of the gutter-snipe. If such language helped to win the war there might be some excuse for it, but it did not. On the contrary, it weakens the moral power of the community and thus helps rather than hurts the Kaiser.

The Third Commandment is in force now exactly as it was before the war, and the Kaiser, disreputable and base as he is, cannot nullify that great command. Our churches in time of war, as in time of peace, should not lower the standard in order to accommodate the German spirit within us, but should require of their members that they speak the language of Zion.

Profanity, like lying or stealing, cannot be justified under any conditions, and those among us who profess to lead us in the religious realm who condone swearing at Germany, and indulge in it themselves, should be asked to take a back seat where they belong.—Charity and Children.

BIARIUM ROCK WATER RELIEVES WEAK AND NERVOUS PEOPLE.

Barium Rock Water is being prescribed by many physicians in the treatment of nervous debility and as a tonic and flesh-builder. They also recommend it in cases of indigestion, dyspepsia, rheumatism, gout, eczema and diseases arising from uric acid poisoning and for disorders of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

Mr. J. W. McCoy, of Charlotte, N. C., writes: "I had a violent case of typhoid fever and for three years was a nervous wreck. I was totally unfit for any kind of business. I suffered continually from my stomach. My improvement began with the use of Barium Rock Water and I was entirely cured."

If you are weak and nervous, if you suffer from melancholia, hysteria or are afflicted with any of the above diseases, send $2.00 for ten gallons. If it fails to relieve your case, we will refund your $2.00. It is understood that the empty demijohns are to be returned prepaid. Address Barium Springs Co., Box E-21, Barium Springs, N. C.

FOOT TROUBLES

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, J. R. Simon of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.

PREDATORY PRAYER.

It is very difficult to make helpful criticism of public prayer. That is unfortunate, for much of it deserves criticism, and is in sore need of it. The purpose of this editorial is to remind ministers that it is the habit of some of them to commit larceny in prayers which are fractional parts of services in which several men unite.

One of the common forms of such deprecation is the opening prayer which constitutes a council. Manifestly the moderator, or other member offering the prayer, has no moral right to assume in his prayer what is to be the result of the council. If the council is indeed called to determine what is the will of God as revealed through the united judgment of the delegates from the churches, it is not only discourtesy to all the churches invited but a high offense against the leadership of the Holy Spirit for the moderator in his opening prayer to tell God what the council is to do.

A well-known minister died. He had been identified with so many interests that there were necessarily several participants in his funeral service, which was held in a crowded church. He had been musical and there was good deal of music, and there were no less than four speakers, beside the pastor of the church who presided and did not make a formal address. There was also an invocation at the outset and a formal prayer after the Scripture lesson. At the last moment a minister arrived who had not been expected, but who had come from such a distance that it was felt a place must be made for him to participate in the service. The presiding minister called him aside and said, "We want you to offer a very brief closing prayer.

The visitor said frankly, and properly, that he would have preferred an opportunity to pay a tribute to the dead man whom he had come so far to honor. The pastor said "I share your feeling, and would gladly arrange it so, but it cannot be; the service is perilously long. I have made this place for you where it had been planned only that I should offer the benediction, and you must be very brief." Just before the service began, the visitor asked, "Is not mine the principal prayer of the service?" The pastor replied, "No, there are two other prayers, and yours is to be of the briefest possible character."

The service was long, but it was noble and dignified and the people were uplifted by it—until the closing prayer. The man who had been thus doubly warned put into that prayer not only the whole substance of the address he had composed upon the train, but a review of each of the four addresses that had been delivered. Moreover, he gloried in his shame. He said to the pastor, "I felt that it was essential that the closing prayer should gather up the whole spirit of all that had gone before; did you not feel that it was fitting?" "No," said the pastor, "I felt like shooting you."

The non-liturgical churches have this invaluable privilege that in their public prayer they can talk face to face with God out of the heart of the man who prays, and out of the soul of the congregation. But, brethren, beware of predatory prayer.—Congregationalist.

The heir of a great estate, while a child, thinks more of a few shillings in his pocket than of his inheritance. So the Christian is often more elated by some frame of heart than by his title to glory.—John Newton.

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. All of these diseases are probably due in whole or in part to imperfect digestion or imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection, Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder Troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, will give a permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began to use Shivar Spring Water and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement."

If you suffer from Rheumatism, or from any curable disease, accept the guaranteed offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the

Shivar Spring, Box 4D, Shelton, S. C. Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

NOTE—"I have had the pleasure of serving the little church at Shivar Spring as Pastor for years, and am therefore well acquainted with Mr. Shivar and his associates, whom I gladly commend as honorable business men and worthy of the confidence of the public. I have personally derived great benefit from the use of Shivar Mineral Water and have knowledge of its beneficial effects in a great number and variety of cases."—Rev. A. McA. Pittman

SALVATION THROUGH BLOOD

Dr. Cuyler once said: "If I was a member of a church looking for a pastor, my first question with reference to a man's qualifications would be, 'Does he make foremost the atoning blood of Jesus Christ?'" So, if I were a pastor looking for a suitable helper for my meeting, my first inquiry would be: "Does he make foremost—does he emphasize the atoning, the cleansing blood of Jesus Christ?" I care not what other qualifications a man might have, he could not assist me unless he emphasized this fundamental doctrine. Martin Luther preached this doctrine of atoning blood to slumbering Europe and Europe awoke from the dead. Amid all his defenses of the Divine sovereignty, Calvin never ignored or belittled the atonement. Cowper sang of it among the water lilies of the Ouse. Spurgeon thundered this glorious doctrine of Christ crucified into the ears of peer and peasant with a voice like the sound of many waters. John Bunyan made the Cross the starting point to the Celestial city. Moody's bells all chimed to the keynote of Calvary. Gypsy Smith strings all his pearls on the red cord of the atonement. Billy Sunday, who thunders his anathemas against sin in high places, takes his stand beside the cross where Christ died to condemn all sin and to save the sinner. No man can expect evangelistic success who does not preach redemption through the blood.

ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE DOES IT.

When your shoes pinch or your corns and bunions ache so that you are tired all over, get Allen's Foot-Ease, the anti-septic powder to be shaken into the shoes and sprinkled in the foot-bath. It will take the sting out of corns and bunions and give instant relief to Smarting, Aching, Swollen, Tender feet. Used by the American, British and French troops. Sold everywhere. Don't accept any substitute.

I hereby announce myself as Candidate for Commissioner of Public Safety, in the city of Charlotte, N. C., subject to the primary of April 28. J. K. A. ALEXANDER.

A desponding man was once telling Mr. George Muller of his trials, and said he was sure he would end his days in the workhouse. Mr. Muller's reply was, "Well, dear brother, in proportion to your faith, so be it unto you."

To smile at the jest which plants a thorn in another's breast is to become a principal in the mischief.

I implore you, beloved, to love one another; and, if at any time, you have been grieved and vexed by others, forgive them. A forgiving spirit is a ready way to peace.—C. H. Spurgeon.

This cozy home may be ~ Your Home.

An attractive, snug, convenient, roomy little bungalow;

Graceful lines, embodying the most modern of architectural ideas; securely, substantially built to make it lasting and comfortable in the most severe weather. Built with a view to convenient arrangement. While small in appearance, its rooms are in reality of ample size for every comfort.

QUICKBILT BUNGALOW NO. 44

while beautiful, convenient, roomy and thoroughly substantial, is built at a tremendously reduced cost, due to the immense savings in quantity production. From the flooring to the roof, from the siding to the interior finish, it is already prepared for erection and partially built. In buying a QUICKBILT Bungalow you

SAVE

WASTE. All the material is already prepared and the large waste piles of scrap lumber are thus eliminated. Every foot of lumber is used. You buy no surplus material.

TIME. Every piece of material has its own place. Everything is numbered and systematized. The instructions to the carpenter are complete and the order of erection simple. No time is lost in looking for material. The time ordinarily required in preliminary cutting and trimming is saved. Furthermore, as a large portion of the house is already built in panels, just that much time and cost is eliminated in construction.

LABOR. With the entire process of erection systematized and instructions complete and the great building "bugaboo"—preliminary preparations—eliminated, the labor in the erection of a QUICKBILT Bungalow is reduced to a minimum, and therefore, of minor consideration. A carpenter of average speed and experience with two laborers, can erect the house in 8 days. The ordinary house will take almost as many weeks.

MONEY. A saving in waste of material, time and labor, is a saving in money. With a QUICKBILT Bungalow the expense of erection is cut in half, but that is not all. You need not pay a contractor's fee. The erection is so simple and systematic that any carpenter of average intelligence can erect it with ease. Many owners build them themselves. You pay no architect's fee. The complete plans with all specifications and instructions are furnished FREE. And yet, the plans are made after careful study by the best and most experienced of architects, with a view to eliminating waste and gaining the greatest possible convenience, economy and strength. The cost of the material is further reduced by the fact that you buy it from the mill, manufacturer and forest in one. Our complete plans cover the entire process, from the tree to the completed house. You pay no middle-man a profit. You buy direct from the source of material. In our complete plants in which hundreds of houses are built simultaneously, every short cut to perfection is used and every waste avoided. As the houses are made in great quantities you gain the advantage of the low cost of quantity production.

PRICE $952 less 10 per cent. for cash. Net price $856

F. O. B. Charleston. The price includes all necessary material, except the brick work and plumbing. Size over all, 21-ft. 5-in. x 30-ft. 6½-in. There are two large bedrooms, one 9-ft. x 12-ft., the other 12-ft. x 12-ft., one spacious living room 12-ft. x 18-ft., a kitchen 9-ft. x 12-ft., a bath room 9-ft. x 6-ft., and an attractive front porch 12-ft. x 6-ft. The house is well lighted, spacious, well ventilated and convenient. The construction is largely of North Carolina pine—"the Wood Universal," thoroughly kiln dried. Excellent flooring and ceiling. Walls built in panels of siding, lined with heavy builders' paper to insure warmth. Durable, fire-resisting, standard asphalt strip shingles with slate green or red finish. Artistic paneled inside finish. Excellent doors and sash. All necessary nails and hardware furnished. House comes with exterior walls stained any one of a number of standard colors or painted one heavy coat of priming paint. Exterior trim and inside finish painted with one heavy coat of priming paint.

SWEEPING THE SEAS.

The perils of the submarine has passed, let us hope never to return again. The seas, however, are not yet absolutely safe, for the hidden mine still makes certain paths of the ocean unsafe for the mariner. At the present time the boys in blue are "clearing up the mess," as they term it. In other words, they are clearing the sea of the thousands of mines which have been laid 'neath the waves by the Germans. Some idea of the immensity of their task may be gathered from the fact that one mine field alone extends over an area of 2,000 square miles, from the North Sea across to Scandinavia. And this is but one of dozens. Under the Admiralty order of September, 1916, mine sweepers were entitled to a reward of 5 pounds for the destruction or salvage of an enemy or British moored mine and 1 pound for a drifting mine. Extra pay is now being given to the men who take part in the big sweep. All officers, of all ranks and service denominations, will receive 4 pounds per week extra pay, C. P. O.'s and P. O.'s will receive 2 pounds 10s., and all other ratings 2 pounds. One pound for each British moored mine and 10 pounds for each German mine will be paid, the total earned by each ship to be pooled among officers and men alike. How long it will take to make the sea perfectly safe again for mercantile shipping, it is, of course, impossible to say, but it is estimated that in the course of six months the navy will have accomplished the task.—Presbyterian (Hali-fax) Witness.

THAT PIANO THAT YOU CAN DEPEND UPON.

Selecting a good piano is not an easy nor a simple matter. It represents thorough knowledge, not only of music, but of piano-making. Anyone who plays the piano can tell whether it has a sweet tone or a good action, but they cannot tell how long the instrument will last. Right here is where the Standard Piano Club comes to the assistance of the piano buyer, for the Managers of the Club have studied pianos and piano construction for a lifetime. They know whether a piano will soon go bad or whether it will last for a lifetime for they know piano construction.

Why not let the Manager of the club help you select your piano? His assistance would be worth many dollars to you, and the best part of it is that the Club will back his judgment with a guarantee of the quality and durability of your instrument, thus insuring you permanent satisfaction. If anything should go wrong you are protected by one of the oldest, largest and most reliable piano companies in the country.

By clubbing your order with those of ninety-nine other members you get the benefit of a big saving in price, amounting to about one-third. The Club's plan of payment is so fair and convenient that almost anyone can now own a fine instrument. You are cordially invited to join the Club. Write for your copy of the Catalogue. Address the Managers, Ludden & Bates, Standard Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.

Sparkles

The Girl With the Torch.

I waved her good-by when I steamed down the bay
 And out in the fog that was heavy and gray.
 Red battlefields waited at the end of the trip,
 And danger attended the path of the ship.
 The khaki I wore was still new, to my back,
 I had barely got used to a rifle's sharp crack.
 My comrades had sweethearts in plenty,
 but I
 Had none but the girl I was bidding good-by.

I am speeding today up the same busy bay
 With New York right ahead of us, noisy and gay;
 I am blowing a kiss to the same strapping girl
 Who lighted me forth to the battle's wild whirl,
 The girl with the torch and her feet in the foam,
 The first one to welcome the soldier boy home;
 The glorious girl whom we fought for in France
 When we halted forever the Prussian advance.

As our forefathers carried the fire, behold!
 From the hearth of a neighbor in winters of old,
 So we carried the flame from her torch o'er the wave
 And bore it, knee-deep in the blood of the brave
 To kindle new fires on new altars to be The beacons of nations we helped to set free.
 Miss Liberty, hail! and oh! how do you do?
 Not a girl in the world stands comparing with you.
 —Minna Irving, in New York Sun.

Looked Suspicious.

Gr-r-r-h! The train drew up with a mighty crash and shock between stations.

"Is it an accident? What happened?"
 inquired a worried-looking individual of the conductor.

"Some one pulled the bell-cord!"
 shouted the conductor. "The express knocked our last car off the track! Take us four hours before the track is clear!"

"Great Scott! Four hours! I'm supposed to be married today!" groaned the passenger.

The conductor, a bigoted bachelor, raised his eyebrows suspiciously.

"Look here," he demanded. "I suppose you ain't the chap that pulled the cord?"—Truth Seeker.

The Arsenal at Springfield.

This is the Arsenal. From floor to ceiling,
Like a huge organ, rise the burnished arms;
But from their silent pipes no anthem pealing
Startles the villages with strange alarms.

Ah! what a sound will rise, how wild and dreary,
When the death-angel touches those swift keys!
What loud lament and dismal miserere
Will mingle with their awful symphonies!

I hear even now the infinite fierce chorus,
The cries of agony, the endless groan,
Which, through the ages that have gone before us,
In long reverberations reach our own

The tumult of each sacked and burning village;
The shout that every prayer for mercy drowns;
The soldiers' revels in the midst of pillage;
The wail of famine in beleaguered towns;

The bursting shells, the gateway wrenched asunder,
The rattling musketry, the clashing blade;
And ever and anon, in tones of thunder,
The diapason of the cannonade.

Were half the power that fills the world with terror,
Were half the wealth, bestowed on camps and courts,
Given to redeem the human mind from error,
There were no need of arsenals or forts.

Down the dark future, through long generations,
The echoing sounds grow fainter and then cease;
And like a bell, with solemn, sweet vibrations,
I hear once more the voice of Christ say, "Peace!"

Peace! and no longer from its brazen portals
The blast of War's great organ shakes the skies!
But beautiful as songs of the immortals,
The holy melodies of love arise.

—Longfellow.

Meeting of Atlanta Presbytery.

(Editorial Correspondence).

THE Atlanta Presbytery is one of the great Presbyteries of the Church. Numerically there are only two that are greater, Fayetteville and Orange in North Carolina. Mecklenburg runs a close race for third place, but falls short by 136. There are four synods, each of which has fewer numbers than Atlanta Presbytery and come behind it in gifts to benevolences. It sends six delegates to the General Assembly, a privilege enjoyed by only three others.

This splendid body met on the 15th inst., at Carrollton, Ga., and found itself most fortunate in its meeting place. Carrollton is not so large that the coming of a presbytery makes no impression. It is not so absorbed in business as to be indifferent to a body that represents purely spiritual interests. The Presbytery was cordially welcomed, and generously entertained. It drew kindly attention from other denominations. The good women of the Methodist Church spread a great feast in the basement of their elegant church and sent their big-hearted pastor to invite the whole Presbytery with visiting wives, and all the Presbyterian hosts and hostesses who were entertaining delegates in their homes to come and help themselves. It was a great occasion, tables groaning with good things and Methodists and Presbyterians mingling in sweetest Christian fellowship. The Methodists of Carrollton grade high. One could easily mistake them for Presbyterians. They are fortunate in having as their pastor a man of good Presbyterian ancestry, his father having been a ruling elder, and his mother a dyed-in-the-wool. He could not explain his backsliding into Methodism except by resorting to the doctrine of predestination. It was one of the things foreordained, not by a positive but by a permissive decree.

The Carrollton Church is blessed with the services of a pastor who stands four square to every wind that blows. Those who have read the occasional articles in our religious journals by Rev. W. R. Henderson know that the flock over which he presides are living under the pure food law. No poisonous ingredient is ever mixed in the nourishment served up to them. Brother Henderson and his most admirable wife are happily ensconced in the confidence and affection of an appreciative people.

A ruling elder in this Church, Mr. Mandeville by name, is well known by most financial agents who go hunting for big game. He has a long purse with loose strings. He supports missionaries at home and abroad, and still has enough left to dispense a most lavish hospitality. On the second day of the Presbytery he gave the whole body a genuine old fashioned barbecue. A number of sheep and pigs were done to a turn, and served up in the highest style of the culinary art. The delicious and abundant menu was spread on long tables in a beautiful grove. The brethren demonstrated their appreciation to the utmost limit of their ability, and yet so bountiful was the repast that there were at least twelve basketsful of fragments left over. When the time came to elect commissioners to the General Assembly, it was noticeable how the votes piled up for Brother Mandeville. He had plenty and to spare. But there was no such connection as this in his mind. He is greatly given to giving barbecues, and that for the simple reason that his hospitality is so large that it must have all out of doors in which to express itself.

One of the noteworthy features of the Presbytery was a conference on the subject of the tithe. It was led by Rev. Carl Barth. He is a hilarious tither, and very soon turned the conference into an experience meeting. It was rather surprising to see the number who were ready to bear witness. So far as could be judged from the many speeches there was a general belief in the perpetuity of the tithe law. Our speaker called the tithe law and the Sabbath law twin laws—one demanding time and the other money. According to the proverb "time is money," and therefore the two laws merge into one. But while there was general belief in the binding obligation of the tithe, the testimony was quite uniform that tithing makes one both happy and prosperous. Obviously therefore these brethren need no law to force them to tithe. They deem it a privilege rather than a duty. Brother Barth called for a show of hands, and the tithers were in remarkable evidence. The propaganda is doing its work.

We wish to lift the example of Rev. J. B. Ficklin into such prominence that all the Presbyterial Chairmen of Foreign Missions may see it. There are 68 churches in Atlanta Presbytery. There were 68 churches in Atlanta Presbytery that reported contributions to Foreign Missions last year. This unanimity was due to the untiring diligence of Brother Ficklin. It shows what a first-class Chairman of Foreign Missions can do. Some of these churches are very small. I walked up the street with one of them, and that church made a contribution.

The Discussion of the Tithe.

Though some may have grown weary of the discussion of the tithe and some have thought it harmful, we are confident that it has accomplished good in clearing the question in the mind of the people.

Our conclusion of the whole matter is that we are stewards of the Lord and all that we have belongs to Him.

If any one wishes to tithe, let him do so. Not because it is a moral law binding on the believer, but because liberality can always be better developed by systematic giving. Giving all that we can is a moral obligation and no Christian can evade it without sin. This issue will end the tithe discussion for the present, as matters relating to the Assembly will demand all of our space for several weeks. We are preserving other articles, for and against it, with which we may lighten our columns during the heated term.

Eternal Life, a Present Possession.

In another column we publish an article from the pen of Dr. McWherter, once a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, and now a preacher in the Methodist Church, in which article he teaches that eternal life is a future possession dependent upon our life here.

The policy of this paper has always been to give a hearing to any man, whether we endorse his views or not. We do this because we seek only the truth, and, as truth is many sided, we like to see it, as it presents itself to others. It may be that we are wrong and that the other point of view may set us right. The idea of eternal life presented by our brother is just what we would expect from either a Cumberland Presbyterian or a Methodist. Our brother tells us that he has spent much time and study upon this subject, and he gives his view with no uncertain sound. He evidently believes that he is right, and we ourselves have lived too long to assert anything in a dogmatic way. We only ask our readers to look at this subject as it appears to us, which is the view of the Presbyterian Church. If a man approaches this truth from the human side, we can easily understand why he believes that eternal life, depending upon the life of man, ever prone to sin, must be uncertain, and can never be secure till man's life is ended and he has stood every test. On the other hand, we approach it from the divine side, we insist that it is something worked out between the Father and the Son, and we claim that it is independent of man, that it is a present possession and that it is not contingent. To take any other view would make the promises of God of none effect, in fact, it would make them empty promises. Christ in His last prayer, John 17:3, says that eternal life is to know God and Jesus Christ whom He has sent, and furthermore, in a preceding verse, He prays that the Father would glorify the Son by giving Him power over all flesh in order that He may give eternal life to as many as the Father has given Him. What a contradiction in terms it would be for the knowledge of God and Christ to be present, while the giving is to be future. If the giving were to be contingent upon the continuance of the knowing, would He not have said that eternal life is to continue to know God? Then again the Son gives eternal life to as many as God has given Him.

If the Son's giving of eternal life is conditional, then the Father's giving of souls to the Son is also conditional—and the condition is that man lives a holy life, thus making salvation a reward of works.

Our brother seems to have fallen from grace into the covenant of works. He does admit that the believer has the earnest of his inheritance in this life, but he does not seem to realize that an earnest is an assurance of something to come that is of the same kind, but in a larger degree. He should also read that we are sealed unto the day of redemption, that is made secure.

If anything more were needed to prove the absolute security of the believer John 10:28, 29 would furnish the proof: "And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father which gave them me is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." When we consider man's weakness, it is difficult to believe that he can have eternal life in this world. Let us, however, remember what the old Scotchman said, "It is not your grip upon the Lord, mon, that saves, but the Lord's grip upon you.

Such is the solution of the problem.

Report of Assembly's Committee of Home Missions.

We have space for only a brief account of what this committee has done. We wish that we could publish it in full, because it is a record of good and successful work. Judged by the money test it is remarkable. The calls upon our people by reason of the war were many and the responses have been liberal. Notwithstanding these calls, the contributions to Home Missions under the Assembly's call were $69,396.24 above last year, while the increase from legacies was $82,876.41. The total contributed to this cause was $303,386.97. The cost of administration literature and promotion of the work took only 7 per cent. of receipts.

Material prosperity and economic and social questions balance each other so evenly that it is difficult to estimate the advantage or disadvantage. The spiritual aspect of the matter concerns Home Missions more vitally. Surprises are the order of the day. The gratifying financial returns for the year, in view of the competitive demands upon the people, were not more surprising than the splendid reports of spiritual gains in the Home Mission fields. Affairs were complicated by the outbreak and widespread attack of influenza, a pestilence unprecedented in the history of the world. Church services were interrupted and Mission Schools suspended throughout the entire country.

We give a partial estimate of the work done: 31,000 sermons preached by our missionaries, 25,000 pastoral visits, churches and stations supplied which raised $184,270 for self-support and contributed $70,306 to the benevolences of the church, received 4,301 on profession of faith and instructed 50,000 people each Sabbath of the year.

The full report is full of interest. We advise those who would enjoy reading it, to write to Dr. S. L. Morris at Atlanta, and secure a complete copy of this report.

Rivers That Run Into the Sea

By Rev. M. B. Lambdin.

"All the rivers run into the sea," affirms the wise man in Holy Writ... Eccl. 1:7.

Of course they do. All of them. Whether they be great or small, ancient or modern, each one obeys the universal and irresistible law of Nature, that compels them eventually to lose their individuality and identity in the bosom of the Mighty Oceans, that, like the horseleach's daughters, incessantly and voraciously cry, Give! Give! Many of them

Famous Rivers.

Rivers with a history and a record of such a picturesque and marvelous nature, that it would be well worth the telling and the hearing, did not the limitations of space and time negative the pleasing task.

The old Nile. Life Giver to Egypt, revered and worshipped as a god; in its rhythmic sweep to the sea looking upon royal cities, towering pyramids, graceful obelisks, solemn temples that focussed a splendid civilization which flourished unbroken through long dynasties of a remote and mighty past.

Of no lesser note the Euphrates and the Tigris, whose waters laved the alluvial plains of Assyria and Chaldea, where once stood in military supremacy and regal pride, Nineveh the magnificent and Babylon the golden. Capital cities of imperial world powers that played a star role in the international affairs of long bygone days, and then disappeared into the dust of the earth.

The mighty Amazon, hurling itself like a frenzied lion unleashed, a hundred miles and more far out into the Atlantic, as though, in its unrestrained rage and fancy to overawe and subdue the very ocean itself to its imperious will and prowess. And the Mississippi, too, the "Father of Waters," in its leisurely flow of thousands of miles to the Gulf, cutting in twain geographically, but happily not nationally and politically, the grandest republic upon which the sun has ever shone

We must not overlook the classic Potomac, upon whose hills, "beautiful for situation," sits in serene dignity, sceptered and diademed, Washington, the capital of our beloved nation

Their Figurative Value and Design.

But however appealing it might be to congenial mind and fancy to project at fuller length a retrospective resume of those historic and romantic rivers, and others yet, like the Jordan, the Tiber, the Danube and the Thames, we must resist its lure and charm, as a more serious purpose lays its mandating finger upon our brain, thought and pen tip.

In the perspective of spiritual truth and teaching, with which all the varied phenomenas of Nature are invested, we look upon those earthly rivers as impressive types and symbols of other kinds of "Rivers that run into the sea." For one—

The River of Hope That Runs into the Sea of Disappointment.

Call them what you will, phrase them as you may, we all, at some time or the other have some cherished scheme, some hope of future good, to the attainment of which we give the very cream of our years, and the fine gold of our energies.

It matters not what the wished for object may be, whether wealth, or fame, or pleasure or power. For awhile, a brief dimentioned awhile, there may be, I grant you, a certain species of satisfaction that arises from the mere fact and stimulus of pursuit; with a pleasurable gratification should success crown our efforts. But in the final analysis of it all, in the genuine and unalloyed enjoyment of the sum total we have in hand, labelled "Earthly," the realization rarely measures up to its anticipation. Upon a conspicuous scale, with all the unlimited resources of his kingly power and opportunities at his command, as no other man has had the chance to attempt it, Solomon undertook to try out the problem. And he has rubber stamped the dreary experiment in the cynic report—"Vanity and vexation of spirit." "For what has man of all his labor . . . Wherein he has labored under the sun?"

It's the old story that sobs through all the ranges of man's weary stay upon the earth, like the wailing of a tombless ghost.

And that is a reason for it, given by no less an infallible authority than Jesus Christ Himself, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." How can it. They are of the earth, earthy. And the elementary features of the very best that the world has to offer can never meet the imperative needs of the soul, that is made in the image of God. A beautiful stream is

The River of Youth That Passes Into the Sea of Old Age.

None like it, as it flows onward under the brilliant radiance of one's earlier years, its surface of the passing days sparkling as with the sheen of liquid gold, its every ripple musical with joyous laughter, and with a cadence as soft and sweet as the strains of an aeolian harp. But very deceptive, too, is the passage of this river, as it moves with a current so slow and slumbrous apparently that we hardly notice its progress. Yet, withal, with a rapidity so stealthy and continuous, that ere we awake to the startling fact, it has left our youth far behind, with the estate of middle age suddenly issuing into view near at hand

Then ever onward without a single stop, and with an accelerated descent that shortly, ere we are aware of it, empties itself into the sea of the three score years and ten, with its decrepitude, weariness and decay.

Then there's—

The River of Time to be Absorbed Eventually into the Sea of Eternity.

Unseen by mortal eyes, hidden within the shadows of the Beyond, lies this drear and dread expanse of an endless eternity.

A pathless and trackless waste of countless cycles of milleniums of ages gone, others yet to come unending, with no shore line where its dark and murky waters cast their voiceless waves.

Through the many thousands of years that this old earth has had its existence the River of Time has been flowing onward towards this sea, carrying on its broad bosom the flotsam and the jetsam of the ancient and unrecorded civilizations that existed and expired long before the dawn of history; with all its possible arts and sciences and literature.

And with all the glory and grandeur, too, of famous empires and great cities of after days, with the historic recountal of the exploits and deeds of Eternal Life--What Is It, and How and When Do We Get It?

By Rev. Leroy McWherter, D. D.

The word life, like many other prominent words in the Bible has a number of different meanings. We call your attention briefly to three different kinds of life—physical, spiritual and eternal. Physical life is the result of a mysterious union between our souls and bodies. And physical death is the result of the absence of this union. It is a mere negative nothing, sustaining the same relation to its corresponding life that night does to day, or darkness to light.

Spiritual life is the result of a mysterious union and communion between our spirits and the Divine Spirit. Again, spiritual death is another negative nothing—simply the absence of spiritual life—soul-life.

Now eternal life is, or will be to us, when we possess it in reality, spiritual life conjoined to natural life—a life the result of a reunion of soul and body—eternally perpetuated. And eternal death will be natural or physical life, in the absence of spiritual life, eternally perpetuated. It will not be another negative nothing, but one of the most positive and fearful realities one ever contemplated—a death that never, never dies—eternal in its duration. No annihilation for those who die the second death—the death eternal.

We cannot have eternal life here in reality, but only in pledge and earnest.

When we are born of the Spirit we get spiritual life only, and we are then put on trial or probation to see whether or not our soul-life will issue in eternal life. Or, in other words, to see whether or not we will, as children and consequently heirs of God, inherit eternal; for that is the way we get it, if we get it at all.

The young ruler asked Jesus what good thing he must do to inherit eternal life. Jesus did not say you can not get it in that way, but told him what to do that he might inherit it, and have the Holy Spirit as a pledge and earnest of that inheritance.

And in the same story Jesus said to his disciples, in answer to the question, "Who then can be saved?" "There is no man who hath forsaken father and mother, brother and sister, and houses and lands, but shall have an hundredfold in this life, and in the world to come life eternal." There is where we will get eternal life in reality.

Hence, no man ever did or ever will lose the life eternal; for the simple reason that none, not even Adam, ever had it to lose. This is our life that is hid with Christ in God. When we inherit it, it is deposited in the Divine Urn for safe keeping unto the day of our eternal redemption of both soul and body.

When we receive the Holy Spirit as the gift of the Father, in Spirit baptism, we also receive eternal life in pledge and earnest, as the gift of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord, whom to know aright is life eternal—that is, the evidence or assurance to us that we shall live forever—live eternally. Once in possession of eternal life always in possession of it. Nothing eternal can be lost.

For this is the promise not to sinners, but to God's children, even the life eternal. And if we meet the conditions upon which the promise is made—complete consecration and faith in Christ—we are just as sure of eternal life as though it were already in our possession. For he that believeth in Him, not on Him, hath everlasting, or eternal life; and God is pledged to keep him unto a salvation ready to be revealed in the last time. He is pledged to preserve the souls of all His saints unto the redemption of both their souls and bodies. Thank God for the hope of the life eternal.

Greenville, Tenn.

A Vital Issue.

By Mrs. E. C. Murray.

It is a refreshing sign of the times that the young people's work is receiving a fuller share of recognition by the church.

The summer conference is a step in the right direction, but the young people need a fuller and more complete organization beginning at the very bottom. What is good for the women will surely be good for the young people, and a Young People's Presbyterian Auxiliary under the authority of Presbytery and fostered by the Woman's Auxiliary will develop leadership for the future church along Presbyterian lines.

This Presbyterian organization must be of such a name and nature as to be inclusive of the various kinds of young people's societies, and not exclusive of any.

Christian Endeavor must be reckoned with, as unless this can be fused along with all others into a homogeneous whole our young people will not be properly reached.

Several weeks ago the Christian Endeavor of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church was reorganized with a short and simple constitution modeled on the original Christian Endeavor constitution, but incorporating the following committees: Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Education and Relief, Young People and Sunday School Extension, these four being additional to the usual committees.

This, we believe, will develop our young people along the line of church loyalty and intelligence, and is offered as a valuable suggestion for the use of other Christian Endeavor Societies.

A Christian Endeavor Society modeled after the above plan can very easily become a part of a Young People's Presbyterian Auxiliary. Christian Endeavor appeals to the young people as no other form of organization has ever done but the church must guide and direct it within proper bounds, as this is vitally necessary to hold our young people.

Living in the Mists.

"Why live half way up the hill and be swathed in the mists when we might have unclouded vision if we climbed higher?"

'Tis passing strange how many folk
Seem satisfied to dwell below,
Where mists and clouds obscure the sun
And chilly blasts around them blow,
When just a little farther up,
Above the fogs, the sun shines bright,
And in the higher, purer air
Unclouded vision greets the sight.

So, soul of mine, mount higher yet,
And in God's clearer sunlight get
New visions of the realms of light,
Where faith with love finds all aglow.

A Last Word On the Tithe Question

The Tithe, a Permanent Principle and Fruitful Practice.

The readers of the Standard are probably growing weary of the tithe discussion; but perhaps the genial editor will think it only right to allow the defense a last word. And the last word will clearly indicate that the tithers are in nowise disposed to "hush up," as instructed to do some weeks ago.

Advocates and critics of the tithe are fully agreed that Christians owe God all, that we are but stewards and tenants, that some standard and system in giving is desirable, that Christians should not be less generous and devoted than ancient Jews, that the tithe is unobjectionable as a personal practice, and that the tithe is not to be enforced upon the conscience by legal enactments and penalties. We seem to differ merely as to whether or not the practice of the tithe is morally binding on the Christian conscience.

It being fully agreed and cheerfully admitted by all Christians worthy of the name that we owe God all and that we should make a practice of actually setting aside a due proportion of our income to strictly altruistic and gospel ends, this very practical question remains: What proportion? To quote Robt. E. Speer: "General principles do not sufficiently bite. The principle needs to carry with itself some form of application by which it can be easily related at once to action on the part of common Christian men and women.—We need to make sure that the principle of stewardship is a reality in our lives and that we do not inwardly find ourselves swept into self-deception." Familiar comforts, conveniences and luxuries soon seem to be necessities, and multitudes of well-to-do Christians are fully persuaded that, like the younger brother in Dr. Hogue's illustration, their hearts are all right but their circumstances straitened and their lack of generous giving thoroughly excusable.

The venerable Milton's dictum that "not examples, but express commands, oblige our obedience to God or man" proves too much. If he is right, what is to become of our insistence upon the baptism of infants in view of the household baptisms of the New Testament or of our stressing of the keeping of the Lord's Day as a Christian Sabbath because of New Testament example? Milton was consistent enough to deny both these obligations.

Dr. Hogue insists upon the distinction between positive and moral precepts. Is it not correct to say that a positive precept relates either to a temporary ceremonial that passes away when fulfilled or to special circumstances liable to radical change? For example, there is no New Testament command to keep the Sabbath, and many of the Old Testament restrictions on the Sabbath are recognized by all as merely positive and Judaic; yet the underlying principle of setting aside one day in seven for rest and holy uses is rightly insisted upon as undoubtedly moral, because based upon a perpetual human need and divine right. Not only the general principle of a set Sabbath day but the ancient specific seven-day system is still regarded as obligatory. The Old Testament tithe was undoubtedly mixed up with the old priestly ceremonial, as brethren urge. But quite regardless of rituals and offices, the obligation to support human testimony to God's truth, whether by priests or preachers, with personal contributions proportioned to our means and regularly and systematically offered remains, because based upon a permanent human need and divine right. The keeping of the Christian Sabbath is a voluntary practice based upon a sense of obligation to an underlying principle of perpetual force. So is Christian tithing.

If a specific seven-day system is insisted upon in the one case, why shall not a tenth-part system be insisted upon in the other? Neither one day in seven nor one part in ten exhausts our obligation to spend time and money for God.

It seems to be implied by some who attack that tithers are less generous and devoted than other Christians less legalistically inclined; whereas it is notoriously true that the average of Christian giving is far below the tithe. And tithing is quite generally insisted upon only as a minimum discharge of duty. In a recent church canvass ten per cent of the membership—people in varied circumstances—signed tithe cards; and that ten per cent subscribed forty per cent of the total raised for benevolences. A like proportion, or disproportion, would probably hold good for other causes and in other churches.

It is interesting to observe how many of the church's most generous and dependable and cheerful contributors have been quietly following the tithing system for years and to note how many earnest Christians, searching the Bible to know their duty in this matter, have in their simplicity been led of the Spirit, as was Jacob, to adopt the tithe as right and obligatory. One of the salt of the earth recently wrote across her signed tithe card, "A thirty year custom."

Tithing would solve the missionary and philanthropic monetary problems of the Kingdom. Missionary zeal and tithing so frequently go hand in hand that one is tempted to predict that as missionary propaganda spreads and altruistic devotion is increased so will the advocacy and practice of tithing grow by leaps and bounds, regardless of what our theories and technical objections may be.

If the advocates of the tithe have been a little careless in their language and inexact in their emphasis, let us accept correction from our brethren. But we shall still "carry on." Whether the tithe is to be advocated as a law, as a principle, as an example, or as a comparison that shames, while important, is not of so much moment after all as that it be advocated somehow and translated into systematic practice as a minimum discharge of duty to our Lord and His Gospel.

G. F. Bell.

Charlotte, N. C.

"Show Us the Good in It."

Mr. Editor:

What is all of this writing about the tithe for? What good is to be accomplished? Are these learned men trying to reduce the contributions to the benevolent causes? If their arguments prove convincing, they will certainly have that effect. It is heart-sickening to me to see ministers of the Gospel spending their valuable time trying to convince men that they are not called upon to give one-tenth to the Lord's box. If this time were spent in trying to save souls, how much more good they would do! The natural man clings to his money, and is glad of any excuse to ease his conscience in so doing. He needs to be educated up to parting with it, unless he sees some material benefit to himself. Now these leaders of the people come along and say, "The tithe law was intended for the Jews, but Christians may give as they please, or as they are prospered." Are these men doing God service, or is all of this writing to air their erudition? I can't see any good to be accomplished, but a great deal of harm.

John Milton and the rest of them to the contrary notwithstanding, I believe God's standard is the right standard for us to go by. He gave this to the Jews, and He has not replaced it with another, and we cannot set a better one. And having a standard, the responsibility is God's, as to our giving much or little. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him." If this week only $1.00 comes into my hands, the tithe will be small, but, if next week I receive $100, the Lord's box will be replenished in proportion—"as the Lord has prospered me." The responsibility is his. One-tenth is a debt, and must be paid, after that, free-will offerings are gifts.

Brethren, if you can't conscientiously recommend God's way, don't say anything, for it is evident that the course you are pursuing will do harm.

You see I have addressed the "brethren" in the last paragraph. I intended to ask you to give them the message.

Truly all editors, but particularly editors of religious papers, need the prayers of all God's people; for, of all callings, I think that the most trying. May God bless our editors. A Tither.

A Plea for "Constructive" Criticism.

I have read with growing apprehension, the articles written by our learned clergymen, on the Tithe question. In my humble opinion, and that of a number of others, these will do untold harm, encouraging those who give in a haphazard fashion to continue to do so. Instead of trying to prove that the tithe is no longer obligatory, why not try to persuade men to use the tithe as a basis for their giving, knowing full well, that if a man ever gives a tenth of his income, he is going to get so much pleasure out of it, that he will go beyond it in his free-will offerings! One generous man that I know of thought he was giving more than a tenth, until he decided to use the tithe as a basis. Now he conducts the Lord's part of his business, in a businesslike manner, deriving genuine satisfaction and pleasure from this plan.

"A Private in the Ranks."

Some Questions About the Tithe Law.

Since the editors of The Standard have opened their columns to those who do not believe the tithe law to be still binding, I wish the privilege of asking a few questions.

1. What was the real ground of the law as given to the Jews? This question I have never seen discussed in any newspaper article, nor adequately, indeed, anywhere else.

In one of the quotations from Milton, given by Drs. Parker and Raynal, it is hinted at, but not fully answered.

The story of the settlement of the Israelites in Canaan makes it very plain that, as the land was divided among the other tribes, and none was given to the Levites, one-tenth of the produce of the land, including the flocks and herds that fed upon it, was to be paid to the Levites in recognition of their surrendered rights in the property. It seems to me that any Bible student ought to be able to see this, and seeing it, to agree with Milton, that what is declared to be the law for Canaan does not apply to other lands unless there is a special enactment to that effect.

Who dares to say, that because an Israelite, who had his land given to him, was required to pay one-tenth of his crops to the Levites, therefore an American, who has bought his land, must pay the same proportionate part of all his income, no matter whence derived, for the support of the Church?

2. If the tithe law is of universal application, why is there no evidence that the priests were required to conform to it? The Levites paid one-tenth to the priests. What did the priests do with their tithe?

3. Why do many say, as does one at least of the editors of The Standard, that as the Jews gave the tithe, we should not give less? Who knows how much the Jews gave? There were certainly two tithes required by the law, possibly three. How much was paying, and how much was given? This is not meant as a play upon words. But what is the truth about it? When a farmer pays his land rent, does he give it to the landlord? What about the free-will offerings and others? Who can calculate their value?

Was not the second tithe just as binding as the first? Used for a different purpose, it is true, but required by law. It is a question of law that is before the Christian public. When can a man who wishes to go farther than the Jews, be sure that he has done so?

4. For what purposes may the tithe be used? In the account of the tithing league in Lexington Presbytery, recently published, it was said that the members were to give a tithe for religious and charitable objects. What right have they to use any part of the first tithe for charity? They must go to the second or third for that, or not do as much as the Jews did.

5. If the tithe law could be enforced, would it be a good thing for the Church? Could the Church be trusted properly to use so vast a sum of money as would be brought into its treasury? I have somewhere read this story of Thomas Aquinas and a certain Pope. The former entered the presence of the latter, on one occasion, when a large pile of coin lay upon the table. "See, Brother Thomas," said the Pope, "the Church can no more say, as it did in the days of Saint Peter, 'Silver and gold have I none.'" "Truly, Holy Father," replied Aquinas, "and neither can the Church now say to a lame man, 'Take up thy bed and walk.'"

When I think of it all I seem to catch an echo from the far away Galilean hills, and I hear a gentle voice sweetly saying, "Blessed be ye poor."

The Tithe in Law and Grace.

The writers in a number of articles in your good paper, concerning the tithe, some advocating it and others opposing it, seem to be writing not for Christians, but for the world. Christians are not under the law of the tithe, nor any other law. They are not under the law of the Sabbath, nor of any of the ten commandments. Paul, under the direction of the Holy Ghost, that is God, said, "Ye are not under law, but under grace." He meant what he said and said what he meant. Just why writers and preachers will try to put us back under law with its terrors and try to make us thus "fall from grace," as Paul expresses it, we cannot see.

If you are a Christian, you are under grace. If you are a Christian, you have surrendered yourself wholly to God. If you are a Christian, you would like to give your entire income to work for Christ. But you know and God knows there are many claims, just claims upon your income. There are personal claims, for food, clothing, shelter, and recreation. There are family claims for these same things for those dependent on you and besides, such matters as education for children. Then, there are business claims, such as the enlargement of business, the accumulation of wealth and the like. Besides these there are social claims, involving the expenditure of money. God has so ordered life that He expects us to meet these claims, and though He knows that your greatest joy would be experienced in giving all the money you make to Him, these other claims must be considered and met.

It is just here that grace comes in and makes pro-their famous men, "men of renown," who strutted their brief days away in the limelight of publicity and worldly applause. Nor can we tell how much longer yet this River of Time will continue to flow on before it becomes finally and forever extinguished in the Sea of Eternity.

But this we do know from the volume of Inspired Truth, that there is coming a final point in the experience of this world, that a mighty angel will stand, with one foot upon the sea, and one upon the earth, with uplifted hand to proclaim the omnipotent decree, "That there shall be time no longer." Rev. 10:6. A solemn and decisive moment that, when all things terrestrial shall come to an abrupt and predetermined end.

What's—

The Vital Meaning of It All?

Merely this, that in our rapid passage through this transient period of existence to our grave, and surrounded on all sides, as we are, with the melancholy picture of the world's sad vicissitudes and changing scenes, ever vanishing like the rivers hastening to the sea, that we are to find in mortal life nothing more than an empty show, and death a tragic finale?

Is it that the generations of mankind, as they come and go in seeming aimless succession are to adopt as its highest wisdom the hollow echo of the Epicurean philosophy, "Let us eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow we die?"

Is this all to life we are to find below the stars? Nay, verily! In its essential nature and loftier purport human life is not lugubrious and funeral, however painful and disappointing much of its experiences may largely be.

Nor is it a dirge of sorrow and a threnody of despair.

It may be made a psalm of praise and a paean of victory.

"Life and immortality are brought to light through the Gospel," and with an humble trust and a steadfast faith in Him who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life, you and I can attain to a destiny superb and eternal amid all the rapture and the bliss of the Heavenly Paradise.

In the light of this blessed hope, what matters it that the merely earthly streams of our unrealized desires, our fading youth, our vanishing time are passing away like "rivers that run into the sea"?

As they disappear they are but daily drawing us the nearer to that seraphic moment when "we shall awake in His likeness," and when we shall forever "drink of the river of His pleasures."

This is the secret of Life. This alone makes its living worth while.

A Place for Me.

Use me, God, in Thy great harvest field,
Which stretcheth far and wide like a wide sea,
The gatherers are so few, I fear the precious yield
Will suffer loss. Oh, find a place for me!

A place where best the strength I have will tell,
It may be one the other toilers shun;
Be it a wide or narrow place, 'tis well,
So that the work it holds be only done.

Our Gifts for Miscellaneous Benevolences.

By Rev. Wm. P. McCorkle.

At its meeting last Spring the Presbytery of Roanoke adopted a resolution requesting sessions to include in their reports to Presbytery the amounts contributed by the members of their several churches to interdenominational benevolences, such as Y. M. C. A., Red Cross, Associated Charities, etc., so far as these could be ascertained even approximately. There is a just reason for such a rule, although the directions emanating from the Assembly's committee as they appear on the blanks provided, distinctly forbid such a procedure. We are asked to report only such contributions as pass through the hands of the church treasurers. If this plan be pursued, hundreds of thousands of dollars contributed by our church members to such benevolences will not show in our reports.

Ought we not to have some means of ascertaining, at least approximately what our churches are doing for causes outside of the Assembly's budget? Is not the church entitled to the credit of what its members do when they work as units in an interdenominational movement? Is not the treasurer of such a movement acting pro tem as the treasurer of all the churches?

The writer proposed that resolution in his Presbytery, because he believed it would bring about valuable information to our presbyterial committees and managers, as to what percentage of the energy of the church is being expended in interdenominational community drives, and enable us to compare amounts expended by Presbyterians in such efforts with the amounts raised in the ordinary church collections for our mission work. I have strong reason to believe that during the Y. M. C. A. War Work drive, many a man gave as much as $100.00 to the Y. M. C. A. who was never known to give $50.00 at a time to the great cause of foreign missions, or even to the whole benevolent budget. Patriotism proved a strong ally to religious sentiment. But now that the war is supposed to be over, may we not say to all such men, "These things ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone?" Shall we make great sacrifices to give our boys Y. M. C. A. services, with movie shows, cigarettes, chocolate, hot coffee, etc.—and none of us object to any of that—while we leave heathen nations to perish for want of the Bread of Life?

Martinsville, Va.

Is America for Christ or Not?

I found the following figures in a Richmond paper, showing the standing of the United States. We have 100,000,000 population, in the United States, and there are 72,000,000 of them that are not identified with any church, Catholic or Protestant, and last year, 7,500 churches made report that not one accession by profession of faith had been made in the year. There must be many dead churches. It is true that in seven states of this Union the Bible has been excluded from all its schools and colleges. In Nebraska, I am told, the Book is forbidden in its university and colleges. Is it true the Gospel has been preached in America over one hundred years, and yet seventy-two millions not reached? We have neglected our home land, and see nothing but China and Japan. Oh! that God would baptize our pulpits with fire from on high.

A Year's Work of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief

By Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D. D., Secretary.

Many serious interruptions have come to various departments of our work during the year. Between three and four hundred of our ministers for shorter or longer periods, entered upon work of the Chaplaincy in the Army and the Navy, the Y. M. C. A., the Red Cross, and the other war activities. One hundred and eighty-four of our candidates for the ministry enlisted in the Army and the Navy.

The organization of the Student Army Training Corps in our own Colleges and the State Universities virtually transformed these institutions into war camps. There was scarcely a College in the South that could offer regular training for the young men who had not reached the age to enter the National Service, and who desired to continue his literary course. The demobilization of the S. A. T. C. in December brought added confusion to the work of these institutions.

Two of our ministers and ten of our candidates for the ministry laid down their lives in the service of the country as follows:

Rev. Thomas McNeill Bulla, Presbytery of East Hanover, and Rev. Herbert Franklin Wager, Presbytery of Dallas, and Candidates William B. Anderson, Presbytery of Harmony; Basil Ball, Presbytery of Transylvania; Daniel J. Currie, Presbytery of Florida; John Morgan Currie and Eugene Meek Ellison, Presbytery of Dallas; Deane M. Orgain, Presbytery of Roanoke; Charles H. Patten, Presbytery of Memphis; Daniel Reid Poole, Presbytery of Concord; Prentiss G. Thompson, Presbytery of East Hanover; John Henry Wheeler, Presbytery of Central Mississippi.

Splendid testimonials to the courage, fidelity and Christian character of all these men have been received. The Church has suffered a serious loss in these strong, stalwart men who were greatly needed. We bow our heads in humble submission to the will of God. His ways are not our ways. We pray that scores of young men of our Church may joyfully come forward to fill the places now left vacant.

Financial

The receipts for the department of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief to March 31, 1919 were $214,803.48 as against $145,921.84 the previous year, an increase of $68,881.64. This is an increase of $48,294.39 in the General Funds and $20,587.25 in the receipts for the Endowment Fund of Ministerial Relief.

I. Education for the Ministry

Applications from the Presbyteries for loans from the Fund of Education for the Ministry and Mission Service to the number of 151 (as against 228 the previous year) were received, and aid to the amount of $14,300.69 was remitted.

Of the 151 who received aid, 132 are Candidates for the Ministry, three are Candidates for Medical Mission Service, and 16 are young women studying for Mission Service.

One hundred and eight-four of our Candidates for the Ministry entered the service of the country for the period of the war. Eleven gave their lives for their country. The war accounts for the small number of Candidates for the Ministry in the colleges and theological seminaries. The great need of the Church continues to be adequate, capable, trained leadership. We must continue to "pray the Lord of the Harvest"

II. Ministerial Relief.

We have sent to the homes of our faithful ministers and the needy widows and orphans of deceased ministers on the roll of Ministerial Relief, $67,449, an increase of $6,146 over the amount remitted last year. This is the largest amount ever remitted in any year. What a comfort to be able to send the last quarter's appropriation promptly without waiting to see whether the amounts must be scaled and to know that further increases may now be granted these faithful servants of the Church.

During the year aid was granted to 107 ministers, 160 widows and 27 afflicted orphans. In these 294 homes are 70 little fatherless children under fourteen years of age.

The average amount sent to the 107 ministers was $310.82. The average amount to the 294 homes on the roll was $229.42 per annum, or 63c per day per family.

III. Endowment Fund of Ministerial Relief.

We have now in the Endowment Fund $571,840.35 safely invested. In addition to this we have $23,110 in Life Annuity funds, the interest from which goes vision. Grace, not law, says you must not give all your money to God's work, you must not follow your heart and experience the enjoyment of giving all to Him, but you can set aside one-tenth, and with perfect enjoyment, and with not a doubt caused by these other claims, you can spend that entirely in His service.

The same principle is illustrated in the matter of the Sabbath. The fourth commandment of the decalogue enjoins Sabbath observance. But the Christian is not under this law. If he is a real Christian, he wants to devote all his time to the service of Christ. If there were no other claims upon his time, his chief delight would be spending it all for Christ. But there are other claims upon every Christian's time. It is just here that grace steps in. Grace, not law, says, I know you would prefer to give all your time to the service of Christ. As things are now in the world, this cannot and must not be. But, says Grace, you can use one-seventh of your time for His service, and no power in heaven or on earth has the right to deprive you of that enjoyment.

One can easily see how in the application of grace to the question of the tithe and the principle of the fourth commandment, that while the Christian is not under law at all, but wholly under grace, the commands of the law are fulfilled in him by the Spirit, not by him, in a far more perfect manner than they could be if he puts himself under law.

News of the Week

The week closed with the Peace Congress apparently in a deadlock over the claims of Italy. By the treaty of London the two Allied Powers, France and England agreed to give Italy certain countries along the Adriatic Sea, in return for Italy's joining them against Germany and Austria. When Italy put in its claim at the Peace Table Mr. Wilson took the position that the conditions had entirely changed since the treaty—that the Austrian Empire, to defend against which this land was given, had collapsed—and finally that to give these countries to Italy would violate one of the fourteen points that they had all accepted when the United States had entered the war, that of self-determination. At this writing Mr. Wilson, supported by France and England, is standing firm, while Italy declares that she must have what was promised or else she will withdraw. Mr. Wilson is receiving much abuse from the Italian press, and from certain papers in England and France.

Rutherfordton is to have a new modern up-to-date tourist hotel soon. The corporation was formed Tuesday. More than $25,000 worth of stock has already been subscribed. The total incorporation is $140,000. It will be located halfway between town and the Seaboard depot, on Laurel hill, one of the most beautiful sites in the State for a tourist hotel. The hotel will contain about 75 rooms and will have running water, shower baths, lake, swimming pool, tennis courts, croquette grounds, and a baseball park.

IV. Schools and Colleges.

On every hand there has been an awakening to the supreme importance of Christian education. The fact that our schools, colleges and theological seminaries are all in need of larger funds is now being recognized by the Presbyteries and Synods, and we believe brighter days are ahead.

Extensive plans are being made by the Executive Committee to bring larger help to all these institutions of learning.

The President emphatically denies that he has entered into any secret treaty or alliance with any of the great powers.

Senator Simmons appeared before the United States Shipping Board with representatives of five Southern States asking for recognition of Southern ports, and insisting that the South should be recognized in plans for future maritime trade. V. The Student Loan Fund.

The total amount of the Student Loan Fund is now $42,276.56.

The total number of students receiving loans during the year is 54, of whom 23 are boys, and 31 are girls.

Total number of students securing loans since the founding of The Student Loan 218; of these 120 are boys, and 98 are girls.

We are putting forth every effort to complete "The Three Year Program" adopted by the last General Assembly, which will increase this fund to $250,000.

No other investments hold forth larger promise than these which are in the lives of our boys and girls of approved character and ability who will soon become the leaders in the home, the church, the

When we speak of the lure of the world, what do we mean by the "world?" We certainly are not referring to Nature, for the hills and lakes and flowers and stream and sea were loved by Jesus, and they did Him good. Nor do we mean humanity, for Jesus loved people, and He mingled with them constantly and was interested in all that concerned them. By the "world" we mean in this connection all of that system of things by which men are drawn away from God and true religion on earth. Some of these things are money, power, pleasure, place, and ambition.

* * *

There is nothing whatever wrong with the world as God made it. The trouble is in man. If we were right at heart, the things which God put into the world would not be used by us to the hurt of ourselves and the dishonor of God. Money is all right; the trouble is that we feel and act sinfully about money. Power is not a bad thing; God intended some to have it; the unfortunate part is that we want it more than we do God, and when we get it sinfully began to feel independent of Him. Pleasure is an excellent thing; the difficulty lies in the fact that our perverse nature allows us to desire the wrong sort of pleasure, and permits even right pleasures to absorb our attention and draw us away from duty. Place is not in itself sinful; but our sinful hearts allow it to steal away our humility or the desire for it to make us envious and discontented. Ambition is right; the sin consists in allowing the ambition to be selfish, or in permitting it to master us.

* * *

The end of worldliness is death. The world cannot give life. All it contains must sooner or later turn to wormwood or ashes. Life is in the things of the Spirit. These alone are free from the germs of decay and death. Our Bible lessons says, "All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and the vain glory of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

* * *

"A spider takes great pains weaving its web, running up and down, never tiring. When the housemaid with one movement of the broom brings all its labors to naught. So are brought to naught the toil and riches and pride and vanity of man. Remember the magnetic rock in the sea in the story of Sindbad the Sailor. Silently it drew his boat toward it, loosened its bolts, and destroyed it. If we look at the world, it fascinates us. Look to Christ." Only by keeping our faces set toward Him as the needle points to the pole shall we be able to pass with safety thru the world and its temptations.

The Prayer Meeting

FOREIGN MISSIONS

By Rev. C. D. Waller.
Isaiah 52:10.

Our prophet has seen the political emancipation of Israel through Cyrus assured; but he sees in the doubts and character of the Israelites themselves, difficulties of vast magnitude. He realizes that these barriers must be overcome; and that to overcome them, the people of God must have a new vision of God's love and power and faithfulness.

The exiles had a sense of the inexorableness of the penalty of sin which took on a hopeless cast. "But Zion said, Jehovah hath forsaken me and the Lord hath forgotten me." Isaiah's remedy for this skepticism was a new vision of God. The difficulties are there; but he strives to bring his people to see that all things are possible to those who believe. "Reality," says Geo. Adam Smith, "is not what we see: reality is what God sees. What a thing is in His sight and to His purpose, that it really is, and that it shall ultimately appear to men's eyes. To make us believe this is the greatest service the Divine can do for the human. It was the service Christ was always doing, and nothing showed his divinity more."

So millions of people have listened to the great Commission with the doubt as to God's love for the world—the whole world, alive in their hearts. What they need is to see as God sees, to realize that God's magnificent love and purpose makes the evangelization of the world a reality. Woe, therefore, to those who fail of this vision, who limit God's Kingdom and consequently His love and His grace. Then the Jews wailed: "Shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or the captives of the terrible be delivered?" (49:24 Vulgate and Syriac) This doubt has been paralyzing the hearts of many who look upon the hold that ancestor worship, Buddhism and other religions has upon hundreds of millions of our fellowmen. Granted that Jesus died for all men and commissioned His church to make disciples among all nations,—will the fearful yoke of these false religions ever be broken, and the captives set free? MAN MADE IN THE IMAGE OF GOD.

Golden Text: Gen. 1:27—"God created man in His own image."

Gen. 1:26-28; 2:7-8.

Eph. 4:20-24

Genesis means beginning and the first book of the Bible treats of the beginning of many things. It tells of the beginning of the Adamite creation, of the beginning of sin on earth, of the multiplication of nations, of the confusion of tongues, of Divine judgments, of the preservation of Noah and his family, of the call of Abram, of the development of Israel, of the plagues of Egypt, of the wonders of the wilderness and of Israel's final settlement in Canaan fulfilling Jehovah's promise to Abram. Dr. Pierson used to say, when teaching the Bible, that he kept his students a whole year studying Genesis, because there was nothing more wonderful in the Scriptures than what was there recorded, and that he who accepted Genesis as Divine in authority would accept the whole Bible." Our lesson relates to man's creation and dominion, the mode of his creation, and his re-creation.

I. Man's Creation and Dominion.

In the creation of man the Persons of the Godhead seem to have proceeded with deliberation. Man was to be connecting link between the material and the spiritual, between the Godhead, manhood and the lower creation. Hence God the Father, Son and Holy Spirit say, "Let us make man in our image after our likeness and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea and over the fowl of the air and over the cattle and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." Man was created with deliberation, after the highest model as to his spiritual nature, by Almighty Divine power and in full-grown maturity. Neither Adam nor Eve had an infancy or childhood. They came forth from the hand of their Maker perfectly developed. They were invested too with complete dominion over Nature's forces and all the living creatures that dwell on the earth. Men may have lost by the fall in some measure that dominion just as gradually they lost their physical powers, and length of years. But it is not surprising as we look back over the ages to find that there were "giants" in those days, and achievements that would task the science of modern times.

II. God's Mode of Creating Man.

Men not satisfied with the plain statements of the inspired word have been disposed to speculate upon the manner of man's creation. Man has a material body, a principle of animal life and a rational soul. Evolutionists have argued that the Almighty developed Adam's body from the body of an animal. The writer himself has heard a doctor of divinity gravely argue from analogies between the physical characteristics and habits of the young of animal, and those of man without the slightest reference to the Scriptures and with a good deal of elegance of diction and rhetoric that such was the origin of man's body. The Bible informs us that "God made man's body of the dust of the earth." Afterwards in condemning man for transgressions He said, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." He certainly does not mean that man shall return to the body of an animal, and it is a patent fact that when man dies his body does turn to dust. Man's body when made was lifeless. The principle of animal life and the rational soul came from God. The Scriptures declare that "God breathed into the inanimate body and man became a living soul." Let those who desire an animal paternity do so if they wish; we prefer a Divine fatherhood according to the Scriptures.

III. Man's Home in Eden.

When Jehovah had given Adam companionship by the creation of Eve, He prepared for them a dwelling place. The name of this home was Eden and it signifies pleasantness. We are told that "The Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden and there He put man when He had formed." He too caused to "grow out of the ground every tree that was pleasant to the eye and good for food." He also placed in the midst of the garden the tree of life as a symbol of the eternal life that obedience would secure and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, as a test of man's loyalty. In this delightful home Jehovah blest man with His companionship and communion.

IV. Man's Re-creation.

Man's fall, leading to depravity of nature and condemnation made necessary another act of Divine grace and power if he is to be saved. This re-creation is referred to in the last part of our lesson from Eph. 4:20-24. It is frequently mentioned in the New Testament. Christ declares that the first need of fallen man is regeneration. He says, "Except a man be born again he can neither see nor enter the kingdom of God." "Ye must be born again of the Spirit." The Scriptures affirm that we "are created in Christ Jesus unto good works." We don't make ourselves good and then come to Christ. But we are regenerated and brought to Christ to be made good. Here in Ephesians we are urged to "Put off the old man corrupt according to deceitful lusts and to put on the new man which after God is renewed in righteousness and true holiness."

Prayer Meeting.

China is a vital part of ancestor worship, and a deeply rooted hindrance to the acceptance of Christ. No wonder that men are slow to believe that these hoary and universally accepted faiths will yield their tyranny, and that Christianity will take their place. But if we can show to men that Jesus is the light of the world; then we can also show them that in His light men will see revealed the falsehood, the tyranny and the hopelessness of these ancient but false religions.

In ancient Israel, in order to divorce a wife, it was necessary that a man give to his wife a bill or writing of divorce; only thus could the separation be final and without recall.

Now, as the Jews in Babylon, some say: "God has divorced forever the sinner—the disobedient, exiled Jew, or the heathen world." But God challenges this statement, and says: "Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement, wherewith I have put her away?" It can not be found; but on the contrary God's heart is always going out to the peoples; and He is making bare His holy arm in the eyes of all the nations"; and all the ends of the earth are seeing (Isaiah said "shall see") the salvation of our God.

We have our doubts, there are great difficulties, but if we can only see what God sees, we shall not believe that what He commands is impossible: if we can only love Him and His work and ends, we shall find the way smooth and the victory sure.

Home Circle

COMFORTABLE TO LIVE WITH.

"There is one serious objection to the place," exclaimed the house-hunter, "neighbors so close on our left that, as one humorist put it, 'we could almost hear them change their minds.'"

"Yes," was the laughing retort of the agent, "but there are neighbors and neighbors, you know, and, my word for it, the little woman who lives in that house is the right sort."

"But those two children I see playing outside might be very annoying, nevertheless."

"Y-e-s," drawled the agent, "but what I said about neighbors applies to mothers as well. That one has too good sense to allow her children to make a nuisance of themselves. You just try the place, ma'am, for a month, and if at the end of it you find I have not told you the truth I will refund your money."

And so, with many misgivings, the quiet loving woman moved into the house in question, which resulted in the following, six months later:

"Yes," rejoined she, as a guest remarked on the closeness of neighbors, "I, too, thought that an objectionable feature at the start and hesitated about renting because of it, but now I would regret exceedingly to part with them. The mother is a veritable sunbeam. I have never once heard her nag, fret or scold. Some might dub her 'easy,' yet she is a model mother, withal, and keeps such a firm hand on those little boys of hers that they never cross the boundary line.

"The father is rarely at home, as he is a traveling salesman. That old gentleman? Oh, that is his father, though for some time I supposed it was her father, because of the harmony between the old gentleman and daughter-in-law, and especially the latter's indulgence of every whim of the former. For instance, when I remarked upon the turning over of sod, my little neighbor, replied, laughingly:

"Oh, yes, grandpa took a notion to make a little garden, so I told him to go ahead, though, really, that grass plot is worth far more to me as a playground for the boys; but grandpa's happiness comes first with me, for he's getting old, and naturally his good times are 'most over.'

"I expect, though," added she, with a happy laugh, "that his daughters will take me to task when they hear of his making garden, they caution me continually to watch their father, while, on the contrary, I let the dear old man do whatever he takes a notion to do, for he is too sensible to be treated like a child, and is still robust."

"So I understood the situation when, a few weeks later, grandpa, with whom I had exchanged but passing greetings before, as he is a man of few words, held out his hand, saying: 'I want to say good-bye, as I am going back to my old home in Kansas and will, doubtless, never return.'

"I expressed my surprise and regret, which met with a shake of the head and:

"I don't want to go, for a fact. California seems just made for old folks. But my daughters insist on my going back—write that one of them will come after me if I don't go right off. You see," added he, lowering his voice, "I felt so proud of my garden, and helping 'round—seeing my son is gone so much—that I foolishly wrote about it, and now the girls are up in arms, and so I must face about. Will have it that I am too old to wait on myself, even."

GOD'S LOVE.

Love has a perfect memory, and the perfect love of God never forgets the needs of His people nor His promises to protect and guide them. Through all the dark days of the past, God has not forgotten His people although often they have forgotten Him. Because His love is changeless, we can rest confidently upon His gracious promise that He will never leave us nor forsake us. One of the sweetest assurances of God's Word is: "Yet will I not forget thee."

When God speaks, He likes no other voice to break the stillness but His own, and hence the place that has always been given to solitude in all true religious life. It can be overdone, but it can be grossly underdone. And there is no lesson more worth insisting on in days like ours than this: when God wants to speak with a man, He wants that man to be alone.—H. Drummond.

"His daughter-in-law expressed genuine regret, aside, at his leaving, but her only comment was:

"Perhaps I don't know how to treat old people, for I was orphaned at so early an age that I can not even recall my parents; but it has always seemed to me that it is better to err on the side of letting old people overdo, if the overdoing is their own choosing. And so I tried to make father forget his advancing years, instead of continually reminding him of them."

"And now, just two months later," continued the story-teller, "you can see that very same grandpa making a new garden, for, as he put it this morning:

"I'm glad to be back where I can make gardens four times a year, if I want to."

"But why did the daughters consent to his coming back?" queried the interested guest.

"Well, I fancy that they found it a case of 'vinegar made of wine,' from what the old gentleman told me when I expressed surprise at seeing him back.

"I know it seems contrary to nature to prefer to live with a daughter-in-law to my own daughters," replied he, with a shake of his head, "but I do, for a fact. It seems mighty good to get back again, I tell you. My girls are as good as the average, too—fine housekeepers, good cooks and all that, but they are mighty uncomfortable for an old man to live with."

"I don't know," continued he, hesitatingly, "as I can make you understand, not knowing 'em, but it was 'Don't! don't! continually. They meant well, of course, but just as sure as I felt my blood stirring and started in to do something, one or the other of my girls—one a widow and t'other single—would cry out, 'You are too old to work!' and, honestly, the only way to keep peace was for me to let 'em cuddle me like a baby. I stood it just as long as I could—after the liberty I'd had here for a spell—and then I made a bee-line back to the place where I can act young when I feel like it, for I'm not so old but what I can draw checks, and here I'll stay!"

"Good for you!" exclaimed I; "your daughters, I fancy, would have shortened your life with mistaken kindness if you had not had the courage of your convictions."

"Sure they would!" was the hearty rejoinder. "Why, they made me feel like I was a hundred years old and nothing but the grave ahead of me; but now that I've got where I can handle an axe or a hoe when I take a notion, I feel like I've got a new lease o' life."—Herald and Presbyter.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE.

The management of the Young People's Conference to be held in Charlotte regret to find that the Christian Endeavor State Convention meets during the week the convention will be held, but on account of the advanced state of the convention program it will be impossible to change our date. It is hoped that both conventions will have good delegations.
J. G. Garth, Chairman.

PERSONAL.

Mr. George F. Dixon of Wynne, Arkansas, a valued subscriber, has been reading this paper for many years. While it was known as the North Carolina Presbyterian he read it in 1858, the year it was first published.

Rev. H. McQ. Shields of Townsville, N. C., has accepted the pastorate of the LaFayette Presbyterian Church, Norfolk, Va. His address is No. 18 LaFayette Boulevard, Norfolk, Va.

The Seventh Annual Meeting of the Christian Workers' Training School, Jackson, Miss., will be held June 17-27, 1919. The place of meeting is Belhaven College. It is under the direction of Synod's Home Mission Committee. The list of instructors is an able one.

Dr. J. R. Bridges preached last Sunday at Long Creek Church at 11 a. m. and at Bessemer City, N. C., at 3 p. m. These two churches are vacant and are seeking an active man to take charge. They have bought a manse and are ready to take the best of care of their pastor. The editor enjoyed his visit.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Pineville Home Coming—This has been set for May 4th and is an event toward which the members and friends are looking with interest. There will be but one day, with three services and dinner on the grounds—the Younts Grove, diagonally across the street from the church. The friends here and nearest neighbors, we feel sure, will come with well-filled baskets for the refreshing of visitors from a distance.

McKinnon—Rev. J. T. Hall preached for us from Wednesday, March 27, through Sunday following. On Sunday morning after he had preached a special sermon to the children during the Sunday school hour, 20 children arose at the invitation to accept Christ and were publicly received on profession of faith. It was an inspiring sight and happy occasion especially to the pastor and Sunday school teachers, who had prayed and labored for this harvest. Others, who were prevented from uniting with the church then, will be received later.
H. F. Beaty, Pastor.

Graham—Dr. A. R. Shaw is now supplying the church in Graham. He and Mrs. Shaw have been most cordially welcomed by the good people of the church and town.

Since coming to Graham there has been a marked improvement in Mrs. Shaw's health. The church here had called a pastor; but as he could not render a definite decision in several weeks, Dr. Shaw consented to serve as supply. The work of the church is moving on smoothly. The report made to the recent meeting of Presbytery was highly gratifying, especially along financial lines.

Burlington First Church—The deacons of this church have canvassed the congregation and report a gratifying increase in subscriptions for the year.

Gipsy Smith, Jr., will conduct a union meeting in Burlington beginning May 11th. This church has pledged its support and co-operation.

The congregation voted recently to increase the pastor's salary by $500.00.

At the beginning of the church year the Mens' Bible Class, taught by the pastor, Rev. Donald McIver, presented their teacher with a beautiful Hamilton watch.

The State Christian Endeavor Convention will be held in this church June 6th to 8th.

High Point—I suppose that almost any pastor who has a loyal and thoughtful and faithful congregation, is disposed to think he has the best people in the world. Certainly the pastor of the High Point church has every reason to feel that no congregation could be better to their minister than his. Four times in the last six years they have increased the pastor's salary, and three times in the last three years. In addition to an increase this year of four hundred dollars to the salary, they have presented him with a new Dodge car. It is a pleasure to serve a congregation so appreciative, and one that is working in perfect harmony with him and with one another.

The contributions to the benevolent causes have been steadily increased each year, and in every way the membership of this church is growing in liberality. Our congregations are splendid and the work is growing very substantially.

Charles P. Coble, Pastor.

Belmont—The annual report from this church to Presbytery was one of interest and encouragement. There were six infant baptisms and one adult baptism. Seventeen were added to the church roll, ten by examination and seven by certificate, making a total enrollment of 207 members. Last year we pledged $1,616 for benevolences and paid $2,212 to current expenses. We paid $4,097, giving a grand total for all causes, $6,309. For this year we have pledged $1,885 for benevolences. During the last two years the church has almost doubled its gifts for benevolences and has one of the best church edifices in Presbytery. Rev. G. W. Belk, evangelist, has been engaged to conduct a revival meeting, embracing the first two Sabbaths of June. We have a thriving Woman's Auxiliary, a good Sabbath School, a well attended prayer meeting and a bright feature before us.

Ida Mill Group—Rev. Charles R. Bailey, pastor. This group consists of three churches, Ida Mill, Aberdeen and Gibson. Last Sunday we enjoyed a visit from Dr. J. O. Reavis, professor of missions in Columbia Seminary. Dr. Reavis visited all three churches and delivered graphic addresses on our African, Japanese and Korean missions. The people were delighted with the picturesque descriptions and forceful style of the addresses. Ida Mill Church this last year contributed an average of over $5 per member to foreign missions. The financial report of the last year was the best both as to the benevolences and the local expenses, that the church has ever made. Aberdeen Church has organized a teacher training class with one of the elders of the church as teacher. The class is doing good work. This church also made a very good financial report to the Presbytery, showing large improvement. The Gibson Church has recently organized a Christian Endeavor Society. The Sunday school is prospering and the congregations are a number of times as large as they were a year ago. For all of which we have thanked God and taken courage.

Kenansville—From April 14th, through Sunday, April 20th, this church had the pleasure and profit of special evangelistic services conducted by Rev. O. G. Jones, D. D., synodical evangelist. A day service was held in the Grove Institute and the night service was held in the church. Some of the noticeable results are a spiritual quickening and consecration of many believers, about eighteen professions of faith, and twelve uniting with the local Presbyterian Church. An offering of forty dollars was made on Sunday for Synod's evangelistic work. Dr. Jones endeared himself to all who learned to know him, and his conservative methods are highly commended. He was especially helpful to the girls of Grove Institute, practically all of whom are now professing Christians. Although this church has lost heavily during the past two years by deaths and removals the last reports to Presbytery were especially good.

The Evangelistic Work of the Synod. Rowland—Nowhere in North Carolina is "Brother Black" more loved than in the Rowland community. To the best of the knowledge of the superintendent he has held about three meetings each at Rowland and at the mother church of Ashpole, which is a part of the same community, being only one mile away. He is warmly welcomed here whenever he can come and closed a fine meeting April 13. The attendance was large, the church well filled in the day and overrun at night. The last few days and nights it was a full capacity house; chairs, platform, some standing and others turned away. The Baptist and Methodist ministers with their members co-operated heartily. Seventy persons indicated their acceptance of Christ, 11 of whom expressed preference for the Baptist Church and 10 for the Methodist, 38 for the Presbyterian Church. Before the close of the meeting 19 persons united with the Rowland Church and six with Ashpole. Eight persons promised to establish family worship and about 300 to read the Bible and pray daily. At the time of this writing Mr. Black is at the St. Andrew's Church near Henderson.

A. W. C.

Lumberton—We rejoice in the Christian zeal and activity in which the churches of St. Pauls, Rowland, Ashpole and Fairmont have taken hold of the Assembly's call for larger benevolence and a grander "Stewardship" work.

We want to join the loved ones in a tear of sympathy and sorrow in the death of Dr. C. A. Monroe, who died last week at Davidson College. He ably and most satisfactorily served this church for one year, 1876, but this writer remembers him more closely and tenderly as his school mate at Mt. Gilead in 1866 and 1867, with the late Professor Peter C. Shaw. Golden days of long ago.

The cold hand of death, with its sting of sorrow, has again entered our church ranks and taken from our membership Mr. R. A. McLean, a young man of much promise, with a big, generous heart and bright talents. He was a son of the late Col. Neill Archie McLean, and member of a family of noted ability. He had responded to his country's call, but had been honorably discharged, and had accepted a position in Alexandria, Va., where he died suddenly on Monday morning, March 18th, from heart failure. He leaves five sisters and two brothers to mourn their loss, while the church feels its loss keenly.

Our pastor, Dr. G. E. Moorehouse, preached a sermon a few Sabbaths ago from the 2nd chapter of Malachi, which to our mind was full of spiritual information and warning to us poor professing Christians of today. He told of the vast opportunities offered Spain, Holland, France, and other nations to preach the Gospel of Christ; how they preferred domain, name and territory; how God had visited them by wars, desolation and disease until today some of them are almost off the map of nations. Now the call comes in tones of thunder to us, "What will we do?" M. G. McKenzie.

Kinston—The recent report of this church to the Presbytery of Albemarle shows that the church is having a slow but steady growth. During the past year sixteen were added to it by letter and five by profession of faith. We now have a resident membership of eight-eight, including five deacons and four resident elders. $1,737 was contributed by its members last year for current expenses and pastoral support, and $496 for systematic beneficences distributed as follows, for Foreign Missions $125.00, for Assembly's Home Missions $39.00, for Synodical Home Missions $70.00, for Presbyterian Home Missions $72.00, for Christian Education and Ministerial Relief $36.00, for Sunday School Extension and Publication $9.00, for Bible Cause $2.00, for Orphans' Homes $100.00, for Miscellaneous Benevolences $43.00, making a total of $2,233.00. On March 16th our board of deacons presented to the congregation a budget totaling $2,546.00, the largest ever presented to them at any one time before. This included $1,717.00 for current expenses and pastoral support, and $829.00 for systematic beneficences.

The response given by the congregation to the every member canvass was very encouraging. This totaled $1,874.00 for current expenses and $615.00 for benevolences. On the strength of this $200.00 was added to the pledge for pastoral support, which enabled the Presbytery to reduce its support to the extent of $50.00 and give the pastor an increase in salary of $150.00. The pledge of this church for pastoral support for the present ecclesiastical year is $1,100.00. This did not carry us quite "over the top," but many of those canvassed said that their pledge represented the minimum that they expected to contribute, not the maximum, hence we have every reason to believe that with the continued blessing of God we will go "over" in the end. Our woman's work has been reorganized and they have taken hold of the same in a most promising way.

Providence—The pastor, Rev. Charles Kinsley, recently returned from Florida, where he spent a long vacation doing mission work there in destitute fields. He received a most hearty welcome on his return, first evidenced by large congregations and later by a surprise visit of the whole membership at the manse, even the children coming and all bringing a substantial gift, even the little tots brought a token of some kind, while the older members brought such articles as live pigs for the pen, hens for the yard, several nice cured hams, and every conceivable thing for the larder, until that "Woman Kingsley", as one sweet little tot named the pastor's wife, could hardly find place to store it all. Then after all had gone a plain envelope was found in the study upon which was written, "A starter for a new automobile," and in the envelope was found a liberal sum of money.

The pastor and wife have had many such demonstrations of the love of the congregation but never a bigger and better one; surely if the churches knew how much such a thing encourages the pastor, it would be oft repeated, not for the pecuniary values, though this is no little thing and certainly a great help, but the spirit and love that inspires the gift.

The first Sabbath in May will be May communion, a day observed in this church for more than a hundred years. On this day many former residents of the community will come, especially from Charlotte. There will be an all-day service, preaching morning and afternoon by the pastor, dinner on the grounds.

This church has had a very successful year, being able to send up to Presbytery the best report for more than fifty years, the membership now includes practically all of the whole community, and is now greater than some seventy years back.

The Christian Endeavor Society has grown and prospered in spite of the flu and absence of the pastor, in point of membership, zeal and real work is second to none in the Presbytery.

Mecklenburg Presbytery met in its stated spring session in the Marshville, N. C., Presbyterian Church, Tuesday, April 15, 1919, at 8 p. m. The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. C. G. Lynch from Mark 12:38. There were 29 ministers and 37 elders in attendance.

The Rev. W. R. Coppedge was elected moderator.

Corresponding members: Rev. A. W. Crawford of Orange Presbytery, who stressed Synodical Home Missions, and Rev. W. T. Walker of Concord Presbytery, who spoke for Barium Springs Orphanage.

Visiting brethren: Rev. S. Taylor, of the M. E. Church, South, and Rev. A. Marsh of the Baptist Church.

Dismissed: Rev. E. W. Thompson to Orange Presbytery. Candidates, A. R. Howland, D. C. Young and C. J. Walsh to the care of East Hanover Presbytery.

Rev. A. R. Shaw, D. D., Rev. H. M. Pressly and Rev. K. L. Whittington were permitted to labor outside our bounds till the Fall meeting.

Calls: The call from Pegram Street Church, Charlotte, was placed in the hands of Rev. John E. Wool. He was permitted to hold it till the adjourned meeting in Charlotte. The calls from Marshville and Peachland churches were placed in the hands of Rev. C. E. White. The Rev. Geo. F. Robertson was permitted to hold the calls from Pineville and Banks Churches till the Fall meeting.

The following churches were permitted to increase their pastors' salaries, as follows:

McGee, Rev. L. W. Brown, from $450.00 to $600.00.

Mulberry, Rev. L. W. Brown, from $475.00 to $575.00.

Hamlet, Rev. A. T. Young, from $1,200.00 to $1,500.00.

Albemarle, Rev. G. W. Cheek, from $1,500.00 to $1,800.00.

Adequate salaries: The report of the Committee on Adequate Salaries for ministers caused a good deal of earnest consideration.

Albemarle school was heartily endorsed, and the churches were urged to contribute liberally to its support.

Queens College: The campaign for Queens College has been extended to May first, and our people appealed to not to let it fail.

Installation: Rev. Bunyan McLeod at Westminster Church, November 10, 1918.

Clerks: Rev. John E. Wool was re-elected Stated Clerk, and Rev. C. W. McCully, Permanent Clerk.

Memorial of Rev. John H. Dixon, prepared by Dr. Bridges, was read by Rev. Geo. F. Robertson.

The reports of the Executive and Permanent Committees showed gratifying progress.

Popular meeting in interest of Home Missions was held on Wednesday night, when fine talks were made by Rev. Leonard Gill, Superintendent of Home Missions, and Rev. T. G. Tate.

Badin Church was given preference in the drive for Church and Manse Erection on the second Sunday in May, towards erecting a new house of worship.

The Young People's Conference: At Queens College, June 2d through June 8th, 1919, was heartily endorsed.

The Stated Fall Meeting will be held at Steele Creek Church, September 2d, 1919, at 11 a. m., when the 50th anniversary of the organization of Mecklenburg Presbytery will be celebrated by appropriate exercises. Concord, Kings Mountain, and Asheville Presbyteries will be asked to take part.

A hearty vote of thanks was given the members of the Marshville Church, and the good people of the town, for their kind attention and hospitality.

Presbytery adjourned at 2 p. m. on Thursday to meet in the Charlotte First Church, Tuesday, May 5, 1919, at 2 p. m. John E. Wool, S. C.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Columbia—Rev. A. W. Blackwood, pastor of First Church, is assisting Dr. J. R. Sevier in a meeting in First Church of Augusta, Ga.. The meeting began on Monday, April 21st and will continue until Friday, May 2nd. The services in the First Church will be in charge of Dr. R. C. Reed, during the pastor's absence.

Columbia Arsenal Hill—Rev. W. H. Boggs, pastor of Arsenal Hill Church, is attending a special course of lectures at Blue Ridge, N. C., on "After War Conditions." He returns home to fill his pulpit on Sunday.

Central Church, Anderson—The Rev. Thornton Whaling, D. D., of the Theological Seminary of Columbia, preached the dedicatory sermon at the Central Presbyterian Church here Sunday morning and again in the evening he made an address to another large congregation on "The Making of Woodrow Wilson." Dr. Whaling is well qualified to speak on the subject as he was a classmate of President Wilson.

Beersheba—The people of Beersheba Church are rejoicing over the prospect of having the Rev. Dr. Geo. F. Robertson, of Pineville, N. C., to assist in a series of meetings which begin the first Sunday in August. Dr. Robertson was with us several years ago for 10 days, which resulted in a great ingathering and uplift to our church. We deem that church very fortunate who can secure him for special evangelistic services. Jno. L. Yandell, Pastor.

APPALACHIA.

Tazewell—In many respects the year just closed is the best in the history of the church. We more than raised the quota assigned to us a year ago, although our per capita apportionment at that time was the largest in Abingdon Presbytery and amounted to almost $23 for benevolences for each resident member. $4,688.00 was contributed to all causes $3,232.00 being for benevolences, and $1,456.00 being for church expenses.

For the coming year the outlook is bright for splendid financial support of the church's work. On one Sunday in March before the Every-Member canvass the pastor preached on tithing. The chairman of the board of deacons, and the clerk of the session also made brief remarks emphasizing the importance of proportionate giving. Tithers' cards were then distributed among the congregation with the result that 32 members of the congregation have pledged to give one-tenth of their income to the Lord's work, and others still have the matter under consideration.

The attendance on prayer meeting has been good for years, and has averaged perhaps something like one-fifth of our resident membership. But recently the attendance has been more encouraging than ever.

A religious paper comes into practically every home in the congregation. This was made possible by one of our laymen, who ordered the paper to be sent to all those who were themselves unwilling to subscribe.

At a recent meeting of the congregation, it was decided to give the pastor an increase of $300.00 in salary.

Banner Elk—April 13th was a happy day at Banner Elk, N. C., for the pastor of the church, the founder of Lees-McRae Institute, "The Wizard of the Mountains," as Dr. Guerrant called Rev. Edgar Tufts, once more stood in his pulpit to speak to his flock. For four long months his voice had not been heard in the church, as God's hand had been upon him, and he had been laid upon a bed of sickness, and suffering and weakness.

As the waiting congregation rose to sing, "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," many hearts were filled with thankfulness and praise. His own heart was too full to dwell upon the many kindnesses shown him by his people during these months, so with a brief reference to his gratitude he spoke to his congregation on the comforting words, "I had fainted unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living. Wait on the Lord."

The beautiful stone church, erected under his supervision, was well filled with the old and the young and the babies from the village, and a large number of children from the Orphanage, who during all the winter months had missed the visits of their friend and "father."

The school, the daughter of the church, had only a few days before, opened her doors, after the winter vacation, which had been longer than usual on account of the outbreak of influenza in October, when that department was closed.

The High School had held together, through difficulties and went on with the work till the end of the session, and graduated the class of 1918 on December 2nd.

Eighty-eight pupils have been enrolled up to the present writing, and the prospects for a good session are fine.

Surely God has been with us, and His blessing does rest upon Lees-McRae Institute and He is guiding us into another year's work.

April 22, 1919.

Estelle McIver.

GEORGIA.

Savannah—On Sabbath, April 20th, the First Church of Savannah, received 17 members, 11 of them on profession of faith, and four of them were baptised. The Sunday before, April 13th, five were received on profession of faith and four of them baptised. And the 6th of April five were received on profession of faith and all of them baptised. This makes 27 received since first of April, 21 of them on profession of faith and 13 of them baptised. Since the lifting of the influenza ban on the third Sunday in February 54 have been received into the Church, 25 on profession, 20 by letter from outside of Savannah, and nine from other denominations.

The past year was the best in the history of our Church. Our gifts to benevolences totaled $3,544, exceeding our Presbyterial quota by over $500. The year was closed with all current expenses met, no indebtedness of any kind on the Church and a balance of over $400 in the treasury. In the past 12 months we have received 93 members, 45 of them on profession of faith.

The pastoral relation between the First Church and Dr. Scott was dissolved at the recent meeting of Presbytery that he might accept the position of Superintendent-Evangelist for the Synod of Arkansas, thus closing a pastorate of 11 years and three months during which time 743 members were received, the resident membership increased from 251 to 502, extensive improvements made, an indebtedness paid off, and gifts to benevolences brought up gradually from $600 to $3,500 per year.

Rev. S. Dwight Winn of our Korean mission, spoke to the First Presbyterian congregation Sunday morning, April 21st, on his seven years of work in that field, and gave a most interesting and helpful address.

The pastor will be absent on the first Sunday of May, going to Arkansas to make arrangements for his removal and taking up the Synodical work and to meet with Synod's committee and evangelists in Little Rock on May 2nd, and the pulpit will be filled in his absence as he will return for the second Sunday and perhaps not be able to leave Savannah before the latter part of May, the Presbytery leaving with the pastor and Session the fixing of the exact date at which the dissolution of the pastoral relation shall become effective.

The Presbytery of Savannah met at Mt. Vernon, Ga., April 15th.

In the absence of Rev. R. P. Henderson, the retiring moderator, the opening sermon was preached by Dr. G. L. Bitzer, the last moderator present.

Nine ministers and thirteen elders were in attendance. Elder S. P. Quarterman of the First Church, Savannah, was chosen moderator.

Rev. R. A. Brown was dismissed to the Presbytery of Washburn to take up evangelistic work in the Synods of Arkansas and Oklahoma.

Rev. W. Moore Scott, D. D., offered his resignation as pastor of the First Church, Savannah, the same to take effect by June 1st. He goes to the Synod of Arkansas as Superintendent of Home Missions.

Candidate F. Milton Daniels was transferred to the care of Congaree Presbytery.

An unusually encouraging report was made on Presbyterial Home Missions and definite steps were taken towards securing a Superintendent of Home Missions for Evangelistic and Sunday School work. Dr. G. L. Bitzer becomes chairman of this committee on the retirement of Dr. W. Moore Scott.

The following overture was directed forwarded to the General Assembly:

"The Presbytery of Savannah overtures the General Assembly to take the necessary steps so as to change the method of paying expenses of the Commissioners to General Assembly.

"We would have the expenses of the Commissioners paid by the Presbyteries which send them."

Rev. A. L. Patterson, D. D., and Elder B. D. Brantley were elected Commissioners to the General Assembly and Rev. F. M. Baldwin and Elder S. P. Quarterman were elected alternates.

The Commissioners to General Assembly were directed to urge the adoption of the clearing house system for benevolent funds.

Rev. R. M. Mann was elected trustee of Davidson College to fill out the unexpired term of Rev. R. A. Brown.

Presbytery adjourned to meet in the First Church, Savannah, May 12th, 2 P. M.

The next stated meeting will be at Vidalia, Ga., Oct. 14th.
Robt. M. Mann, Stated Clerk.

KENTUCKY.

The Presbytery of Louisville met Tuesday, April 8, 1919, at the Flora Heights Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Ky., at 7:30 P. M. The opening sermon was preached by the retiring Moderator, Rev. C. H. Prather.

There were present 25 ministers and 26 Ruling Elders. Rev. W. B. Lile was elected Moderator and Rev. A. Killough was elected temporary clerk.

Rev. Ben Anders was dismissed to the Presbytery of New Albany, U. S. A., that he may accept a call to Bedford, Ind.

Rev. Finch A. Clark was received from the Presbytery of Winnebago, U. S. A., that he may accept the call of the Anchorage Presbyterian Church. A commission consisting of Rev. W. Y. Davis, Rev. W. H. Hopper, Rev. W. R. Anderson and Ruling Elder W. O. Eastin was appointed to install Mr. Clark Sunday, April 13, at 3 P. M.

On account of his increasing age, Rev. H. R. Laird resigned the pastorate of the Goshen Church. The church reluctantly concurred in his request to Presbytery for the dissolution of the pastoral relations which was granted. He continues pastor of the Herrods Creek and Springdale churches.

The Presbyterian sermon on the subject "Duties of Officers and Laymen to the Church" was preached by Rev. A. M. MacLauchlin.

Corresponding Members—Rev. J. G. McAllister, D. D., of the Presbytery of Transylvania and Rev. R. A. Webb, D. D., of the Presbytery of Nashville.

Mr. P. C. Dix, State Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. addressed the Presbytery on the future work of the Association as related to the Church. The Presbytery commenced the religious and other features of the Y. M. C. A. and urged it to enter the widening fields that are opening to that organization.

Mr. F. W. Simpson, a Ruling Elder of the Eminence Church, was received under the care of the Presbytery as a candidate for the Gospel Ministry.

Mr. Thomas Brewster, Mr. Wm. Newman and Mr. H. J. McGehee were examined and licensed as probationers for the Gospel Ministry. Mr. Brewster signified his desire to accept the calls of the Glasgow and Munfordville Churches.

On Wednesday evening the sermon was preached by Rev. Dunbar H. Ogden, D. D., on the subject, "Our Social and Spiritual Citadel."

The report of the Commission appointed to make recommendations about the petitions from the First Presbyterian Church was adopted as follows, by a vote of 24 to 5.

Report of the Commission of Presbytery in the Interest of the First Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Ky.

The commission, appointed by Presbytery on February 10, 1919, to confer with the First Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Ky., regarding the request of certain of their members and others for the reorganization of the Westminster Presbyterian Church at First and Ormsby streets, Louisville, Ky., and also regarding the petition from this congregation for their dismissal to the Presbytery of Louisville, U. S. A., that they might unite with the Warren Memorial congregation; and after such conference to make recommendations to Presbytery for their guidance would report as follows:

1. That, as it has been voted by the signers of the petition for the reorganization of the Westminster Church, in a called meeting for that purpose on February 12, 1919, that their petition be withdrawn from Presbytery. Of this action, the Commission has been notified in a communication in which these are the reasons given for their action: first, their inability to secure adequate financial resources to carry forward the work as a separate organization; and secondly, their desire to leave the Presbytery free to act in the matter of the proposed merger of the First Church and Warren Memorial, independent of their request.

It is therefore recommended that their petition be respectfully returned to them.

2 That after careful investigation and earnest consideration of the request of the First Church for dismissal to the Presbytery of Louisville, U. S. A., it is the judgment of the Commission that it would not be wise to accede to this request; and therefore, it is recommended that the petition be declined.

It is further recommended that the First Church be encouraged to proceed at once toward the securing of a pastor, and the active carrying on of all her work and worship.

In arriving at their decision in this important matter, the Commission would have it distinctly understood, as was also stated at the former meeting of Presbytery when this matter was discussed, that the difference in Assembly connection between the First Church and the Warren Memorial has had no bearing upon the question under consideration.

The compelling reasons for the decision made, in brief, are as follows:

First, the great division of sentiment in the First Church toward the proposed merger, with the large number of members who would not follow the church into this movement, does not justify the Commission in recommending this as a wise course for that congregation.

Second, the strong conviction of the Commission, without attempting to dictate to the First Church her future course of activity, is that the southern section of the city offers a large field for a strong Presbyterian church, and that the First Presbyterian Church is needed to meet this opportunity for a larger Presbyterianism and a stronger Christianity.

Respectfully submitted,

Rev. Alfred A. Higgins, Chairman
Rev. C. N. Wharton,
Rev. Charles H. Prather.

Louisville, Ky., April 10, 1919.

The report of the Home Mission Committee by the chairman, Rev. A. A. Higgins, showed practically all of the churches supplied with preaching. The Mission churches are all doing excellent work and the collections have enabled the committee to sustain the work and also pay off some of the indebtedness. Plans have been made for larger and more extensive Home Mission work during the coming year. Addresses were made by Rev. A. A. Higgins and Mr. T. B. Talbot.

Rev. Wm. McKay, the chairman of the Committee on Bible Cause, reported the increasing opportunities for distribution of Bibles and also reported larger gifts from year to year by our churches.

After a brief verbal report by Rev. W. H. Hopper, chairman of the Committee of Foreign Mission, in which attention was called to the outstanding features of the work of last year, Rev. R. A. Webb, D. D., addressed the Presbytery on the subject, "Christianity, a Religion of Hope." His appeal was for greater consecration and activity in sending the gospel of hope to the whole world.

Commissions reported the installation of Rev. N. G. Stevens as pastor of the James Lees Memorial Church; Rev. J. R. Benika as pastor of the South Louisville Church; Rev. W. T. McElroy as pastor of the Berry Boulevard Church; Rev. S. S. Daughtry as pastor of Frankfort Church.

Bardstown was selected as the place of the next stated meeting.

The Presbytery adopted the new percentage basis of distribution as recommended by the Committee of Systematic Beneficence, of which Rev. W. R. Anderson is chairman. The Committee urged the churches to follow this basis as closely as possible. This Committee recommended an overture to the Assembly to change the column in the statistical report from "Schools and Colleges" to "Educational Institutions."

The Presbytery endorsed an overture to the General Assembly.

Communication from the Presbytery of Louisville to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States in session in New Orleans, La.

In view of the fact that the General Assembly is to have before it the question of the relations between the Presbyterian Church in the United States and the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the Presbytery of Louisville, while not expressing any judgment on the merits of the Synodical Plan, would forward it to the General Assembly as worthy of its serious consideration.

The Synodical Plan contemplates the reunion of the Presbyterian Churches in the United States and the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America upon a basis that will safeguard the principle of local self-government by granting larger powers to the Synods, and will make logical our system of church courts by constituting the General Assembly of commissioners from the Synods.

The following are the essential items in the plan:

1. The acceptance by both churches of the principles set forth in the "Plan of Reunion" submitted by the Conference Committee of the U. S. A. Assembly to the General Assembly U. S. of 1918. (See Assembly Minutes p. 150).

2. The formation of a national General Assembly composed of commissioners from the synods in lieu of the present assemblies composed of commissioners from the presbyteries.

3. The granting to each synod of such authority over its local affairs as to give it full control of all purely local matters.

4. The gathering into one Synod of all U. S. A. and U. S. churches in every territory where there is overlapping of church courts, and the uniting of all overlapping presbyteries in every such Synod. (Except in cases where provision is made for separate racial Synods and Presbyteries.)

5. The appointment of committees of conference from each Assembly to work out the details of the Plan, and to report to the Assemblies of 1920.

The report of the Committee on Narrative gave the encouragement of progress in Christian development within our bounds, especially in church attendance and Christian liberality. A number of the churches have revised their roll of church members which reduces the total but records the actual working force of the church. Effort is being made to emphasize the work of evangelism during the coming year.

Rev. W. Y. Davis, chairman of the Committee on Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, reported eight candidates for the ministry and a large increase of gifts to this cause during the past year.

Rev. John Little made a report of unusually successful work in the Colored Work in this city.

The Presbytery adjourned to meet at the Presbyterian Theological Seminary Tuesday, May 6, at 3 P. M.

W. H. Hopper, Stated Clerk.

LOUISIANA.

New Orleans—The pastor of the First Presbyterian Church has been given a leave of absence of several months, on account of his health. He has not recovered from the effects of his attack of influenza several months ago, and his physician advises complete cessation of work for a time.

New Orleans—The local preparations for the meeting of the General Assembly, in New Orleans, May 15, are having active attention just now. The Assembly's members and others connected with its work and agencies will be the guest of the Presbyterians generally of the city, rather than of particular congregation in whose handsome new house of worship the sessions will be held. The committees preparing for the meeting are gathered from all the churches, even including the very smallest and most distant. On account of the long rides that will be needful in this "city of manifold distances," the mid-day meal, a light luncheon, will be served in a church building near by. All communications touching Assembly matters of a local kind should be addressed, "Assembly Arrangements Committee, Napoleon Avenue Presbyterian Church, corner St. Charles Avenue, New Orleans, La."

TENNESSEE.

Gallatin—Just before leaving Gallatin two elders called at the hotel at which Dr. and Mrs. A. R. Shaw were boarding, and in behalf of members of the church, presented Dr. Shaw a substantial purse in token of esteem and appreciation of the services he had rendered while supplying the church.

TEXAS.

Austin—At the annual "get-together" meeting of the University Presbyterian church, Rev. R. W. Jopling, pastor, April 9th, one feature was of unusual and general interest.

This was the unfurling of a service flag bearing thirteen stars, each representing a man or a woman, who has gone from this church to the Foreign or Home Mission field, or into the Y. M. C. A. as a life work.

The flag is of original design, made by the Woman's Auxiliary of the church, and, so far as we know, is the first flag of the kind to be unfurled in any church.

It is made of blue silk, with a white Constantine cross bearing the blue stars, artistically grouped and leaving space for more to be added, as others from this church may answer the call of God.

The names for which the stars stand are:

Foreign Missionaries—Mr. Robert Knox, Korea; Mrs. Robert Knox, Korea; Miss Mary Dodson, Korea; Mrs. John Vinson, China; Mrs. C. F. Hancock, China; Mrs. Conway Wharton, Africa; Dr. and Mrs. Eugene Kellersberger, Africa; Mrs. Frank McElroy, Africa.

Home Missionaries—Rev. S. L. Joekel, Texas; Miss Mabel Hall, North Carolina.

Y. M. C. A. Worker—Mr. W. A. Smith, Siberia; Mr. R. C. White, Texas.

In addition to these we have Mrs. M. P. Young in China; Miss Mary Kirkland, in Africa and Mr. J. S. McRae, a candidate for the ministry, who volunteered while attending our church, as students in the University of Texas. Also Misses Essie Mae Davidson and Anne Rutherford, members of the church, engaged in Y. M. C. A. work in Austin.

This church has the distinction of having two ministers, Rev. Robert E. Vinson and Rev. T. W. Currie, the former president of the University of Texas, and the latter acting president of the Austin Presbyterian Theological Seminary, who worship regularly with us, and whose families are on the rolls of the church.

We think this is a record of which any church of 328 members would be proud.

VIRGINIA.

Fairfield—Rev. L. W. Curtis, superintendent of Home Missions of East Hanover, has been holding special services in this church. On the last night of the meeting thirteen were received upon profession and one on reaffirmation of her faith.

Richmond—Rev. J. Y. Fair, D. D., the pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church, is now away on a two months' vacation with the hope of regaining his lost strength. After a severe sickness he was unable to continue the great work which he has been doing in the West End. The session of the church very wisely gave him relief for two months.

Lexington—Sunday, April 6th, was the regular day for our communion; but it was postponed because our pastor, Rev. Thomas Kay Young, was unable to be present—the result of exposure to the sharp March winds while engaged in his ministrations. Rev. J. C. Bowman preached in the morning. We had no night service, that our people might have opportunity of attending the Methodist Church to hear the farewell sermon of Rev. Dr. E. L. Woolf, who had won the sincere respect and the warmest esteem during his three years of service in Lexington.

The deacons' report was in the pews, and showed a total of $16,150 contributed for all purposes by this congregation for the year ending March 31. Of this sum Foreign Missions received $3,227; and the four kinds of Home Missions—Assembly's, Synod's, Presbytery's, and congregational—$3,304. The total for all the Assembly's causes was $3,532. The United War Work Fund received $2,200.

Saturday afternoon, April 19, the service preparatory for the communion the next day was held, the pastor being assisted by Rev. Mr. Yarbro of New Monmouth Church. At this service the pastor baptized two babies. Another baby was baptized the next afternoon.

After the morning service, April 20, a congregational meeting was held for the purpose of increasing the pastor's salary, and $200 was added to the $2,500 and manse, which was promised in the call. The increase would have been $500 except that the pastor had some time ago let it be known that he would not receive any increase until Rev. J. C. Bowman, doing home mission work in our bounds, had had his salary raised. The result was that Mr. Bowman's salary has been augmented $300, and Mr. Young's $200.

Union Seminary, Richmond, Va.—Several of the professors had to be away last week, Dr. Mack at the meeting of Asheville Presbytery, at Montreat, Dr. Lingle at the meeting of the International Sunday School Lesson Committee at Cleveland, Ohio, Dr. Moore at the Centennial of the Independent Presbyterian Church, Savannah, Ga., and Mr. Turnbull at the meeting of Lexington Presbytery. The students were glad of the opportunity thus given them to put in some special work in preparation for the final examinations which began on April 28th.

The licensing of ten of the students at one time by East Hanover Presbytery last week sets a record. It was not only unusual because of the large number of candidates, but also because of the profound impression made upon the presbyters by the spirit and bearing of these young men and the evidence they gave in their examinations and trial parts of thorough training for the ministry. All the members of the presbytery were warm in their commendation of them and of the thoroughgoing seminary which had trained them. A leading man in the presbytery, himself a graduate of another institution, said that with so large a number of candidates for licensure preaching at one time, the proceedings were likely to take on some air of perfunctoriness, but that these young men by the excellence of their sermons and the earnestness of their manner, freed the services entirely of any appearance of mere exercises, suffused them with the spirit of true worship, and gave the presbytery a season of real spiritual refreshing. So strong was the impression made by them that the chairman of the Committee on Ministerial Education wrote a special letter of congratulation to the faculty on the fine bearing of these young men, the readiness and accuracy of their answers on examination, their thorough acquaintance with the Scriptures, their soundness in the faith, and the manner of their delivery of their sermons, winding up with this gratifying statement: "I do not know when any set of men have called forth such warm expressions of appreciation of the service that the seminary is rendering the church."

Story and Incident

A Lively Trip Over.

“PEACE was in the air when I left New York to be a war correspondent in France,” says a writer in The Sunset Magazine. So he hurried. Had he not bought a brand-new correspondent’s uniform, and a beautiful Sam Browne belt, and an overseas cap? It would be a sin and a shame to have to put these things away without a few scars and stains on them indicative of the horrors of war. To his chagrin he discovered, however, that, urgent though the occasion might be, any appreciable amount of acceleration was out of the question. There was no wide and easy road by which a feverish war correspondent could reach France in record time.

“For a second time I was asked to swear to things the average man knows little about—the time and place of his birth and that of his father. The first time I was asked to depose on this point I hesitated slightly, but the second time I took the oath without a tremor. However, when I appeared at the French Consulate to have my passport vised and was asked to swear to it for a third time I began to be sensitive on the subject; a man does not like to have his nativity in question all the time.

“In due time I was given a war-zone pass. A day or two later I chartered a taxi, piled my luggage in and about the same, and whispered a pier number to the driver.

“He smiled knowingly and took me by a round-about route to a gate in a barbed-wire fence about a hundred feet from the pier, where we were halted by an American M. P.

“‘Fill out this card,’ he said, handing me a piece of pasteboard.

“I looked at it and saw a dotted line under which were the words: ‘Time and place of birth—time and place of father’s birth.’

“I inserted the required data and was allowed to pass. At the door of the pier there was another halt. This time I was detained by a man in a sea-going cap, a pea-jacket, and a foreign accent. Again I displayed my pass and again it failed to function.

“‘Sign zees papair,’ he said, holding out a paper that looked like a questionnaire.

“I took it none too politely, and altho it was printed in French I gathered that what was most desired was a brief statement giving the time and place of my birth and the time and place of my father’s birth. In a few hastily muttered but none the less forceful words I told him what I thought of people who made a practice of prying into the personal affairs of the traveling public. But he smiled blandly and said that he didn’t “comprond” English.

“So I filled out the paper and passed on.

“I was then permitted to climb a long flight of stairs while my luggage rode up on a nescalator. At the head of the stairs I was conducted to a small corral in which I was temporarily confined while waiting for the customs inspector.

“The inspector was a long time reaching me, and when he got there he never even glanced at the luggage that I had so carefully and so deceitfully displayed before him. All he did was to scowl and ask:

“‘When and where were you born?’

“Completely chastened in spirit, I told him, adding meekly that my father was born in Brockport, New York, on the 9th day of January, 1839.

“He entered this important information in a large book, marked with a piece of chalk a large OK on each piece of my luggage, and told me that I was at liberty to go aboard the boat.

“I walked down the gangplank with a firm con-

Woman’s Auxiliary

The Wilmington Presbyterian Auxiliary held its 31st annual meeting in St. Andrews Church at Wilmington, N. C., April 16th to 18th. The meeting was well attended, there being 70 delegates and 20 visitors besides a good representative of men and women from the city churches.

The theme was “Stewardship—A Tithe of Time, Talents and Money.” Our aim, “A Woman’s Auxiliary in every church in the Presbytery with every woman and girl a member. Every Auxiliary studying, praying for and giving to all causes of the church.”

We had three visitors of note, Rev. C. Connor Brown, Synodical evangelist, Mrs. M. L. Swinheart of Korea, and Miss Mattie Riffin. Miss Riffin has been accepted as a missionary to Korea and the Presbyterial assumed at this meeting part of her support.

“The Three and Half Million Dollar Campaign,” the proposed school for negro girls and the Woman’s Summer School of Missions were presented in brief talks during the luncheon hour on Thursday.

The speakers were unusually good, awakening an enthusiasm that means much for the future work. Mr. Wade Smith made the opening address entitled, “The Tie and the Myrtle,” delivered in his usual gifted manner. Mrs. Swinheart gave an interesting review of the work in which she and her husband were engaged in in Korea. Miss Mabel Hall in a bright, appealing way, gave an account of her experience as a mountain worker.

Three great forward strides were made by the Presbyterial in the adoption of a foreign mission budget giving to all the foreign fields the October “Day of Prayer” to be held in seven different districts according to railroad facilities instead of one place as heretofore; and a special responsibility assumed for Grove Institute, our church school for girls.

Friday morning was given to young people, narrative reports, with few exceptions, being given by the leaders themselves. At this time a most impressive address was given by Miss Graham of Peace Institute, in which she emphasized our responsibility to the youth of today, they being the future thought of the country.

The hospitality of the women of the hostess church will long be remembered, the informal reception at the opening session, the delightful mid-day luncheons and the automobile ride to the ship yards, as a fitting climax to it all.

Altogether every one went home feeling that in many ways the meeting had been blessed and theirs was the joy task to carry the zeal and enthusiasm with them, remembering that, “Nothing is eternal except what is done for God.”

Deaths.

Thomas—At Madison, Wisconsin, Clara Norwood MacNeill Thomas, wife of Charles Randolph Thomas, Jr., on March 28, 1919. She was born in Charleston, S. C., and moved to Greenville, S. C., in 1890. The burial was at Marion, South Carolina. She was loved by all who knew her.

McLean—Cora Liston McLean, the second and only living daughter of the late Dr. J. A. and Elizabeth F. McLean, died July 29th, 1918, having lived nearly the allotted time of man. Had she lived till the 12th of October she would have been 66 years old. She joined Bethel Presbyterian Church in early girlhood and remained an active, useful, and consistent member until summoned to her eternal home. For a number of years she taught with zeal and efficiency in the Sabbath school and had the pleasure and honor of seeing some of her scholars become useful ministers of the Gospel. She was a kind and obliging neighbor, a true friend and happy Christian.

Those who knew and loved her best recall with mingled feelings of sadness and pleasure her home life where she exerted a high and holy influence. When told that her life on earth was probably near its close she manifested some surprise but no fear. And a day or two later she passed away.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Margaret Long Barringer.

In the early morning hour of December 30, 1918, the word was passed from neighbor to friend that our beloved friend, Mrs. Margaret Long Barringer had entered into eternal rest.

Descended from a long line of Christian Presbyterian ancestry, she knew the way of salvation from a child and as she grew into maturity devoted herself to the service of her Master, continuing even to old age and the end of a long and useful life.

Mrs. Barringer was the highest type of Southern Christian womanhood, modest almost to timidity, gentle yet firm, charitable but just. She never shirked the responsibility of giving advice and counsel when sought, even when patience would seem almost exhausted she would listen to the unfortunate and uninteresting and often gave of her substance for their help.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Second Presbyterian Church wishes to place on record the great loss which they feel in the passing of Mrs. Barringer. She organized this society and for many years was its president, and always a leader in its affairs.

Being possessed of strong intellect and sound judgment her opinions were sought and her words quoted, the society always felt safe in her keeping.

The generous hospitality of her home made a place of pleasure and profit to many missionaries, more than all aid they realized the sustaining grace of her prayers for their safety and usefulness.

We extend to her family and her beloved sisters, Misses Helen and Elizabeth Long, our deepest sympathy and we assure them that we believe if Mrs. Barringer is accorded her rightful place, future generations will associate her name in equal rank with pastors and elders as a master builder of the Second Presbyterian Church.

SURPRISE FOR GRANDMOTHER.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy five years old. I have recited the catechism and received my testament. I enjoy the letters in the Standard. I hope you will print my letter. I want to surprise my grandmother.

Your little friend,
Worth Shaw.

HAVE ORGANIZED A SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Dear Standard:

I am a fourteen-year-old boy, I go to school at Edgewood, about three miles north-west of Pikeville, and am in the seventh grade. My teacher's name is Miss Cora Hines and I like her fine. We have organized a Sunday School, which is held every Sunday afternoon at our school house.

My Sunday School teacher's name is Mrs. Martha Lewis and she is splendid. I have five brothers. My oldest brother is at Raleigh taking a business course at King's Business College.

Hoping to see this published, I am,
Your friend,

Worth Aycock.

ANNIBEL'S FIRST SAIL.

Billy King had a big, toy sail-boat, and Annie Kate had a lovely baby doll. Billy Boy sailed his boat on the lake quite often, and Annie Kate took her baby for an outing nearly every day.

One afternoon the children met on the road.

"Where are you going, Billy Boy?" asked Annie Kate.

"I'm going to sail my boat on the lake," he answered. "What's your doll's name?"

"It's a baby, and her name's Annabel."

The children walked along quietly for a while, and then Billy Boy said:

"Let's give Annabel a ride in my sail-boat."

"Wouldn't that be fine! Do you think she would fit in?"

"Sure! My boat's a big one." Billy Boy held it out at arm's length proudly, and Annie Kate admired it.

They ran all the rest of the way to the lake. There was a pier with a diving float at the end of it, and the children hurried out to the float.

"Let me see you sail your boat first," said Annie Kate, hugging Annabel close in her arms.

"All right, here she goes!"

Billy Boy got down on his knees on the float and dropped the pretty boat into the water. She bobbed up and down on the waves for a minute, and then a gentle breeze filled the tiny sails, and she glided away gracefully. Billy Boy held a cord that was tied to the stern of the boat. He let it out gradually until he reached the end.

"Oh, bring it in, and I'll put Annibel aboard," cried Annie Kate, joyfully.

And Billy Boy pulled the string and brought the boat back to the float. Very carefully the little girl propped the baby doll against the mast. Then she tucked the long skirt into the bottom of the boat.

"Now be careful when you drop it into the water," she cautioned.

Away sailed Annabel in the boat. It was a pretty sight, and the children laughed happily. Billy Boy let out all the cord. Then Annie Kate shouted:

"Pull her in, Billy Boy."

But the backward pull was disastrous. Annabel slipped from the mast. She looked just ready to fall into the water, and Annie Kate cried:

"Hurry, hurry, pull faster!"

The faster Billy Boy pulled, the more Annabel slipped. Then, just as Annie Kate was stretching out her hands to clasp her baby, a puff of wind caught Annabel and toppled her overboard.

"Oh, Oh," shrieked Annie Kate. "Annabel's drowned!"

Billy Boy pulled in the boat and then leaned over the edge of the float and peered into the water.

"I can see her," he shouted, suddenly.

"She's lying on her back, and maybe we can get her."

Annie Kate dried her tears and looked hard. Yes, she could see her precious baby lying on the sandy bottom.

"Oh, Oh," she moaned, "you'll never get her."

"Yes we will. If I only had Uncle Jack's fishing net! Then we could scoop her up. Or his fishing line! I'll tell you, let's use the cord on the boat for a line. Annie Kate, have you got a pin?"

"Look and see," she replied, turning her back to the boy.

"No, everything's buttons! Oh, here is a gold pin at your neck. Perhaps that will do." He unfastened it.

"How's that going to get Annabel?" asked Annie Kate, anxiously.

"Girls don't know about such things," replied Billy Boy, with an air of great superiority.

He tied the cord about the pin, letting the point hang free from the hinge. Then he dropped it into the water, but it did not sink to suit him.

"Get me a pebble, Annie Kate," he cried.

Away flew the little girl to the shore.

Billy Boy examined his pin again, and slipped it through the knot until it hung from the fastener.

"Now," he said, when he had tied on the stone Annie Kate brought him, "This ought to work."

He lowered it slowly. The waves made Annabel look as though she was making faces at them. Billy Boy dangled the pin right over her mouth.

"Oh, don't," cried Annie Kate, "she might swallow it!"

But Billy Boy hardly heard her. He was thinking hard. If he could just get that pin caught in her mouth! Then the breeze drew the cord away, and when the water cleared again, the pin was lying on her dress. There was embroidery on it, and at once Billy Boy was trying to make the holes. Annie Kate was sobbing.

"Be quiet!" commanded Billy Boy. "I almost had her."

For a moment there wasn't a sound but the gentle lapping of the water against the float. Then Billy Boy straightened up. There was a yank, a splash, and Annabel was lying on the float safe and sound!

"Oh, oh, oh!" cried Annie Kate, hugging the dripping baby doll in her arms. "My precious Annabel! Billy Boy, I shall always, always love you!"—Maud Wilcox in The Presbyterian.

HOW THE SQUIRREL WASHED HIS FACE.

Once upon a time there was a little boy who didn't like to wash his face. It was a merry little face usually, with pink-tanned skin and red cheeks. That boy made a big fuss one rainy day when his mother said, "Jimmy, you must wash your face."

He had been playing in the cellar and his face was streaked with black. "Oh, dear, I don't want to wash my face!" Jimmy grumbled as he stood looking through the window at the steadily falling rain.

Jimmy never had liked to wash his face, so that was no news. He said nothing more for a while and his mother said nothing more. They might have heard the clock tick if the rain hadn't made such a noise on the porch roof. It came down hard—pat-pat-pat-pat—patter—patter—patter, and it was the first rain in a long time.

Jimmy knew as well as he knew anything that the next thing he did would be to wash his face. It wouldn't be of any use to get out his train of cars, or his blocks, or a picture book; he knew his mother too well for that. She would say again, "Jimmy, wash your face," and he would have to wash it.

Then something funny happened. A squirrel came out on the piazza rail; a happy, care-free, rollicking squirrel. Jimmy was half wishing that he might turn into a squirrel and so have no more troubles of a certain kind, when the squirrel ran out on a ledge and lifted his face to the sky.

Jimmy could scarcely believe his eyes after that, because the squirrel went out on that ledge to wash his face! He sat with his saucy little nose upturned to catch the raindrops; than he scrubbed and wiped it with his tail! This really happened!

"Oh, mother, come to the window quick!" Jimmy whispered, "Come and see the squirrel wash his funny little face!"

Jimmy's mother crossed the room softly, and she too, saw the little squirrel lift his face to let the rain splash upon it; she saw that squirrel scrub and scrub his face with his paws and wipe it with his tail!

Jimmy was so amused that he couldn't keep perfectly still for more than a few seconds; then he laughed aloud. The squirrel heard him and scolded, and scolded, and scolded! Jimmy laughed harder than ever at that until his mother said,

"Of course I do not pretend to understand squirrel talk; but it may be that the little fellow out there is the rain is saying that if he were a boy and lived in a beautiful house, with a beautiful washbasin in a white and shining bathroom, and if he had a stool to stand on, in front of the basin, made on purpose for him to use, and if all he had to do to get hot water or cold water, was to turn a faucet, and if he had pure soap and a clean washcloth and soft linen towels, he wouldn't be seen standing in a window with his face all streaked with black, like the back of a chipmunk, making fun of other folks who were doing their best to get clean with rain drops and paws!"

The squirrel turned his head on one side and listened to what Jimmy's mother said. Then he turned a summersault tossed his tail over his head, and went frisking away to his home in the hollow tree.

Without another word Jimmy went to the bathroom and washed his face clean; he told his mother that he scrubbed it hard with both paws—and then those two laughed!—Frances M. Fox in The Continent.

Just the Same.

"Do you act toward your wife as you did before you married her?"

"Exactly. I remember just how I used to act when I first fell in love with her. I used to lean over the fence in front of her house and gaze at her shadow on the curtain, afraid to go in. And I act just the same way now when I get home late."—London Tit-Bits.

A Lively Trip Over.

viction that all questions about my birth and that of my father had been definitely settled. And I enjoyed that conviction all the way to my stateroom, where it immediately shattered by the room steward, who required full details on the subject so as to enable him to assign me to a place in the life-boat. A little later the dining-room steward demanded the same information so that he could use discrimination in seating me at table."

But finally the harrassed correspondent got under way, and in the fullness of time the "sacred soil of France" was sighted. He was not much impressed by what he saw from a distance. It looked too much like a desert island. But presently pretty, wooded hills began to show themselves and little gray-stone cottages with red-tile roofs and long slim windows which even at that distance, he says, "I astutely recognized as French windows." After passing the gauntlet of sundry customs officials who were "regular officials, wore beards, and needed a hair cut," he made a landing and shortly thereafter was informed to his dismay that the war was over. Of these experiences and his subsequent hasty trip to Paris to find out if there wasn't some mistake about the war's end, he writes:

"We left Bordeaux at eleven in the morning and reached Paris at half-past eight at night, about three-quarters of the journey being made by daylight, during which time we passed a large camp of American soldiers on an average of every thirty minutes.

"One of the peculiarities of railroad travel in France is that the passengers are never taken into the confidence of the company as to the name of any station at which the train may stop. If the passenger wants to know he usually opens the window and shouts to the people on the platform. And when at length our train came to a full and determined stop and all the passengers except myself seemed to be about to leave it, I asked one of the departing passengers if it was Paris. He said that it was. So I got off.

"Everything was dark. Ah, the war wasn't finie after all! I had arrived in time!"

Buoyed up somewhat by this reflection, the correspondent started out to look for quarters. He approached a man in a Y. M. C. A. uniform who looked pleasant, but not "aggressively pleasant," and asked to be directed to a hotel:

"He smiled pleasantly 'I could direct you to any number of them,' he said in a pleasant tone, 'but they are all full,' he added even more pleasantly as he laid a pleasant hand on my shoulder.

"What are they full of?" I asked.

"Again that pleasant smile. 'Americans mostly,' he replied even more pleasantly than before. Then he had a pleasant thought. 'Haven't you any friends in the city that you could go to for the night? If you could do that you could easily get located tomorrow.'

"I had the friend and gave the address; whereupon, with a hum of pleasant industry, he produced a map and outlined a course that looked like a jigsaw puzzle to me.

"I took the complicated directions and went out into the night—and it was some night. In the first place it was so dark that a load of coal would have loomed up like one of those phosphorescent wrist-watches; and in the next place it was raining; and in the third and last place there was not one ray of artificial illumination anywhere to be seen.

"But dark as it was, there were plenty of people on the streets. I could hear footsteps on all sides of me, and occasionally when I bumped into somebody, I would hear other sounds as well. Sometimes it was an apologetic sound that I could understand, but oftener it was something entirely different.

"I came at last to a small square out of which streets radiated in ten or a dozen directions. I was in search of No. 10 in one of these streets. I didn't know which. So I decided to try them all.

"I counted five houses down the first street to the left, and rang the bell at a place that looked like a jail. Presently I heard the lock click and pushed open the iron gate and stepped inside. I waited some five minutes for things to happen, but nothing did. Then I raised my voice and called:

"Concierge! Con-n-cierge!"

"There was a stark and hollow ring to the place that I did not like at all. But after a little there came an answer from off somewhere in the dark. Presently a door opened and in the flickering light of a candle I could see a very cross-looking woman in curl-papers and the garb that is supposed to go with them.

"I asked if my friend lived there.

"No.

"Wasn't that Place Something-or-other, Numero dix?"

"No; it was Rue Something-or-other.

"Bang! The door was slammed in my face, and I was alone in the dark. I ran my hands along the wall until I came to a door which opened, and, feeling the rain in my face, I knew that I was outdoors.

"With slight variations that experience was repeated three times. On my third attempt I was told to go up two flights. I did so and rang—and then the lights went out. There was no answer, so I rang again. After a little some one asked in English who was there, and I was so overcome at the sound that I couldn't think who was. But the door was thrown open on suspicion—and I was in the hands of my friends."

The next morning the doughty correspondent, setting his trench cap at a determined angle, started out to track the war to its lair. He was reassured by what he heard. Paris was not expecting an early peace. The Allies were winning, but still a long way from Berlin. But his serenity was soon rudely shattered, for on the following Monday morning definite news of the signing of the armistice reached Paris. The ensuing scenes he describes as follows:

"The Americans instantly began to yell, and cheer, and sing, and shout, and make every other kind of noise they could think of.

"The English swore softly and contentedly as they lighted their pipes and cuddled them. Some of them even went so far as to admit that the situation was 'top hole.'

"But the French—the French hesitated a moment as if still in doubt, and then, being reassured by the cannonade and the sirens and the general uproar—began to kiss everybody in sight. Nor did they confine these tokens of affection to their own people. They generously included the stranger within their gates, without restriction as to race or color; and they were particularly friendly toward Americans.

"The Americans are not an osculatory race, so to speak. They slip a quiet one over now and then in the bosom of their own or another's family. They have been known to kiss each other good-bye in a public place, although such instances are rare. A newly made groom sometimes goes through the motions of kissing his newly made bride before the assembled guests; but he does it only because he has been told to, not because he is obeying that impulse. No, the Americans are not an osculatory race, and

The Westminster School.

We are glad to announce to our friends that, beginning with June of this year, Rev. John G. Garth and his wife will be associated with us in the management of the Westminster School. Mr. Garth, besides teaching in the school, will have the position of business manager, treasurer, and field representative.

Mr. Garth is a graduate of the Southwestern Presbyterian University at Clarkeville, Tenn., having taken the Master of Arts degree there in 1894 and the degree of Bachelor of Divinity the following year.

He has held four pastorates, all in prominent churches: Humboldt, Tenn., six and a half years; Murfreesboro, Tenn., four years; New Bern, N. C., two and a half years; and for the past ten years he has served the First Presbyterian Church of Hickory, N. C.

Last summer, in response to an urgent call from the Y. M. C. A. and prompted by his ever deepening interest in young men, Mr. Garth resigned his pastorate at Hickory and took up the Y. M. C. A. work at Camp Greene, where his labors were signally blessed. This work, for which he seemed so admirably fitted, was interrupted last December by an accident. As he was crossing the street in Charlotte, a recklessly driven car ran him down, fracturing his leg. For several months he lay in the Presbyterian Hospital and had to undergo three or four operations; but now he is regaining his normal health and strength. His injury did not stop his work among the boys in camp whose hearts he had won; for, though he could not go to them, they did come to him and received of his ministry of love from a bed of physical pain.

In scholarship, in experience, in natural gifts, in strength of character, and in the graces of Christian manhood Mr. Garth seems to be specially fitted for the work into which he is now entering and his coming to us gives Westminster an unusually strong faculty as our other teachers, true and tried, Mr. Johnson and Mr. Bartlett, will also remain with us.

Presbyterian Theo. Seminary of Kentucky.

The students are now on the last lap of a year of successful work, examinations being scheduled from April 29th to May 3rd, inclusive. The full program for the Commencement days to follow has just been announced. On Sunday, May 4th, at 4:30 P. M., the closing communion service of the session will be conducted in the Harbison Memorial Chapel of the Seminary, Professor H. E. Dosker, of the faculty, in charge. At 8 o'clock that evening the baccalaureate sermon will be preached in the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church by the Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D. D., of Louisville, secretary of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., and an alumnus of the Seminary. The other Presbyterian churches of the city unite in this service and the public is invited. The annual meeting of the board of directors of the Seminary will begin its sessions on Tuesday morning, May 6th, at 10 o'clock, Dr. W. A. Canfield, president of the board, and also president of Centre College, in the chair. The annual meeting of the Alumni Association, Rev. W. H. Hopper, of Louisville, president, will be held in the social room of the Seminary the same day, beginning at 12 o'clock. This will be followed, at 1 o'clock, by the Alumni luncheon, always one of the finest features of commencement. Rev. W. R. Anderson, D. D., of Shelbyville, Ky., will deliver the alumni address at the luncheon and brief addresses will be made by others. The luncheon will be served in the Belknap Reformatory of the Seminary and it is expected that many alumni of the Seminary will be present. The final exercises of the Seminary will be held in the Harbison Memorial Chapel at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening, May 6. These will be of unusual interest from the fact that Professor Henry E. Dosker will then have finished twenty-five years of teaching, the larger part of it in this Seminary, and appropriate recognition of this period of distinguished service will be made. Dr. Dosker was born at Bunschoten in the Netherlands; graduated at the Gymnasium at Zwolle, Netherlands; took his A. B. and later his A. M. at Hope College, Holland, Michigan; graduated at McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago; received the honorary degree of D. D. from Rutgers College and LL. D. from Centre College. After several pastorates in Michigan he was in 1894 elected to the chair of Church History in the Western Theological Seminary, Holland, Michigan, and there remained nine years. Since 1903 he has been Professor of Church History in this Seminary, during these years has ranked as one of the finest teachers and scholars in his department the country over. His fame as a lecturer has traveled far, and only recently he returned from Princeton Theological Seminary, where he delivered a course of lectures, soon to appear in book form, on "The Anabaptists." His "Outline Studies in Ecclesiastical History" was brought out in a revised edition in 1913. He has been a frequent contributor to the religious press. The address of congratulation to Dr. Dosker on the completion of twenty-five years of service in the department of Church History will be delivered by his warm friend and former student, Rev. John M. Van der Meulen, D. D., formerly pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of Louisville, and now pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Oak Park, Ill. Dr. Dosker's response to this address will be followed by the award of the Warren Prize for improvement in preaching and by the presentation of the certificates, diplomas and degrees. The public is cordially invited to attend these closing exercises.

Two members of the board of directors have died within the last few months, General Bennett H. Young, of Louisville, and Colonel Charles E. Hoge, of Frankfort, Ky., losses of which the board will make suitable recognition.

Columbia Seminary.

Final examinations begin on April 24th and continue through May 7. The baccalaureate sermon will be preached by Rev. J. B. Hutton, D. D., of Mississippi, on Sunday, May 4th, with final commencement exercises on May 7. The members of the Senior Class who will receive certificates or diplomas include F. J. Hay, Jr., A. H. Key, L. D. King, L. K. Martin, J. R. McGregor, D. A. Miller, J. R. Offrell, and I. D. Terrell. Most of these men have already accepted calls to pastorates, and more requests have been received at the office of the president from churches which desire permanent pastors or supply than there are students to meet them.

A marked increase in the size of the student body is expected for the next session, though the effects of war have been such as to cause a decrease in candidates for the ministry all over the church.

they did not know exactly how to receive these extremely cordial advances from the casual passer-by.

"The first person to approach me thus was a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war. He wore a long beard that had gone all through the war with him and looked it. And when he suddenly planted a hairy kiss on each of my cheeks I was ready to fight. But before I could strike a blow he began so sincerely and so feelingly to thank me for winning the war that I accepted his thanks and passed on.

"Before I was able to reach a place of safety in my apartment I had been thus personally thanked no fewer than twenty times by persons in every walk of life, from a countess to a coal-heaver.

"I saw two doughboys marching along in a parade, singing lustily. I attached myself to them and marched a block to learn the song. These are the words through the medium of which they were pouring out their young souls:

Be-vo, be-vo,
Pomme de terre;
Be-vo, be-vo,
Pomme de terre!

"How many miles they marched that night to these stirring words would be hard to tell, but it must have been quite a number."

* * *

And so it has come to pass that he who started from home so bravely, in Sam Browne belt and overseas cap, now sends his first war message from the peace-torn air of France as follows:

"La guerre est finie!"

Miscellaneous

THE BLESSING OF LAUGHTER.

"Among the countless blessings that mankind is privileged to enjoy not the least is the blessing of laughter," writes William Thomas M'Elroy, in the American Messenger. We do not mean the loud, boisterous laughter of dissipation and evil, nor the careless, thoughtless laughter of vanity, but the whole-souled, hearty laughter of thorough enjoyment and a heart thrilled with love for God and man.

A happy story is told in this connection of two men who were among the best known and most influential men of their age—Rev. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Rev. Dr. Charles H. Spurgeon, of London, England. It is related that on one occasion, after a period of unusually hard work, they went out into the country together for a holiday. As they roamed the highways and meadows with all the enjoyment that the true lover of nature can find under such conditions, Dr. Cuyler told of his experiences, at which the famous London preacher laughed heartily. A moment later he turned to Dr. Cuyler. "Theodore," he said, "let us kneel down and thank God for laughter." And there, says the writer who relates the incident, "on the green carpet of the grass, under the trees, two of the world's greatest men knelt and thanked the dear Lord for the bright and joyous gift of laughter."

It is not a small gift this lift of laughter. It is a true proverb that "he who laughs oftenest lives longest." Where true, heartfelt laughter is, there can be no evil, no worry and no wicked thoughts. For in themselves such things destroy the very qualities that tend to light-heartedness. It is impossible to laugh happily with a troubled conscience. And the laughter of the evil-minded is as harsh and as unpleasant as are their scowls and imprecations.

Laughter helps in many ways to make this old world better. It makes us more loving, more charitable toward others, more sincere in our efforts to help those who are in need, more useful to those who come in contact with us, more ambitious to prove ourselves of value to the world, more helpful, more kind, more healthy, and consequently more efficient, and more thoughtful of the Giver of all good and loving gifts.

One ship drives east, and another drives west,

With the selfsame winds that blow;
'Tis the set of sails and not the gales
Which tells us the way to go.

Like the winds of the sea are the ways of fate

As we voyage along through life;
'Tis the set of a soul that decided its goal

And not the calm or the strife.

CUP OF COCOA COST $1.50 IN ARCHANGEL.

The girl problem is as serious in Archangel, Russia, as in the big military centers, says Miss Elizabeth Boise, director of Y. W. C. A. work in Russia, who is home on a short leave of absence.

Many girls from Central Russia went up to Archangel to spend the summer because of the heat and of the food shortage and when military operations were begun in the territory surrounding they were unable to be home. They were virtually refugees without goloshes, furs and the heavy winter clothing necessary in that northern region. With the coming of the Expeditionary Force the housing question became a serious one. The Y. W. C. A. secretaries have fairly comfortable quarters—rooms with beds in and lighted with electricity. To be sure there are several of us in each room.

"Many girl clerical and stenographic workers were needed, of course, at army headquarters and at the postoffice. This offered employment to some of the refugees and women are doing everything in Archangel, even to running tram cars and trucking. They need organized recreation and that is what we are trying to give them.

"Prices are high and food is difficult to get up there. Dried fish are about the only thing which one can buy on the street. In a second class restaurant a cup of cocoa costs $1.50. That was one of the reasons why it seemed wise to open a Y. W. C. A. hostess house for American soldiers—so that they could have some place to go where they could have a bit of social life. There we have been able to concoct cookies from flour, oat-

WILL PROHIBITION PROHIBIT?

Advocates of free use of alcoholic beverages have always maintained that prohibition will not prohibit. They have usually objected to local prohibition on the ground that alcoholic beverages would be brought in from neighboring districts. They should be satisfied now, if their former objections were sincere, for national prohibition leaves no neighboring districts where intoxicants can be bought, except near national boundaries, and there the custom officers have to be reckoned with.

In order to secure the fulfillment of their prophecy, that prohibition will not prohibit, the whiskey people make use of every possible means to get intoxicating beverages into prohibition districts. For example, we have the efforts to nullify prohibition laws in Detroit. Detroit is the largest city that has yet come under prohibition laws. Her foreign element is large; her problem is the problem of the largest cities. Friends of whiskey have done everything in their power to bring whiskey into the city, where it can be sold at $8 per quart. Toledo, Ohio, is only sixty miles distant and the story of the attempted traffic between the "wet" and the "dry" cities is as amusing as it is instructive. Eight hundred thousand quarts of whiskey have been confiscated and jails have been crowded with law-breakers. Yet Detroit policemen say, Detroit dry is a better city to live in despite "bootlegging." The mayor says: "I have never been a teetotaler; I voted wet, but if an election were held now, I would vote dry; I believe Detroit would. Prohibition has been a revelation; it has upset all alarmist predictions of the wets and more than sustained all the rosier predictions of the "drys." We also say, "I am in favor of prohibition for Detroit because it has made us a better town." He enumerates many indications of the beneficent influences of prohibition. It will make any town a better town, and the friends of rum may just as well give up their fight. They are down and out because they are radically wrong, and are seeking to add to their own gains by destroying others.—Banner.

NATURE AND GRACE.

Dr. Goodell, of New York, puts it this way: "There hasn't been a new sin discovered in four thousand years. Graff? You will find in the Book of Daniel an intimation that there is special punishment for grafters. If a Roman Caesar would return to life and you took him along New York's Great White Way, he would find nothing new there. After beholding the vilest that the White Way has to offer, he would say: 'They did things a little better on the Capitoline Hill when Poppaea dined with Nero.' But there isn't a sin that the grace of God isn't mighty enough to conquer."

YANKEE FOOTMARKS WILL REMAIN FOR YEARS IN FRANCE.

The hobnailed brogan worn by the American soldier has made its mark in France. Stone can not resist the powerful action of the American steel-shod sole, even the steel sides of a "tank" are not immune to the Yank's "hob." On France's historical stairways, on French cobblestones, on the floors of buildings, the signs of the American invasion will continue for ages. A writer in The Spiker, published by the men of the Engineers' Railway, Somewhere in France, treats the subject in the following anthropological, zoological, and very cheerful manner:

Ages ago the web-footed Pollyhickus and other antediluvian monsters left the prints of their feet in what has since become the solid rock. But modern Yankee soldiers do not content themselves with leaving the print of their feet in the as yet unfossilized ooze. They even go the poet one better in his advice about "leaving footprints on the sands of time." Their hobnailed shoes are so constructed that they just naturally leave footprints in everything they touch, whether it be a cow-pasture or the side of a steel tank.

Paving-stones, in the base ports bear mute testimony to the ravages of the hobnail. They are polished as smooth as a hardwood floor and shine like the proverbial "cullud man's heel." Stairs in cathedral towers that have defied the footsteps of centuries are beginning to wear down under the grinding pressure of the modern hobnail. Apparently the fighting men of old removed their heavy iron socks and steel field-shoes before they went on climbing expeditions.

In one of the base ports is a building where Americans congregate in large numbers. The three or four flights of stone stairs in this building have been hollowed out in the center until they are almost worn through in places. Stone vanishes beneath the tread of the hob-nailed shoe like a horseradish that is rubbed with a rat-tail file.

Long after the Yanks have marched on the marks of their passing feet will endure in France's structures of stone.

AMERICANS ALL.

Howard Chandler Christy's poster, "Americans All," holds a great deal of interest that is not generally known. The fourteen names on the honor roll were selected from actual American casualty lists, and each man was born in the land of his nationality: Du Bois, French; Smith, English; O'Brien, Irish; Cejka, Bohemian; Hauche, German; Pappandrikopolous, Greek; Andrasci, Hungarian; Villotte, Italian; Levy, Jew; Turovich, Yugoslav; Kowalsky, Polish; Chriczanevich, Russian; Knutson, Scandinavian; Gonzales, Spanish.

But they are Americans all, who, fighting for democracy's sake, gave up their lives that freedom might live. Fourteen different nationalities to begin with, at the end side by side to find death in the service of their common country, the United States.

Jugoslav, Hungarian, Bohemian, Pole and Jew—each one of the five in a true sense a man without a country until, as Americans all, they found the land of real freedom, equality and fraternity. America, "the land of the free and the home of the brave," a country worth dying for—a country worth living for and building up to the height of supremacy that it deserves.

Americans all, you natural born or naturalized citizens, your country calls—not for you to give up your lives for her as those brave men on the honor roll have done, but for you to live for her, to see this big job through to the victorious end.

The fighting is done. The bill must be paid. Lend your money to your government, in this last war loan, the Victory Liberty Loan.

WHY ROCKEFELLER BELIEVES IN PROHIBITION.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., when attacked because of gifts aggregating $250,000 to the Anti-Saloon League, stated in the New York Tribune:

"My conviction concerning the rum evil was confirmed a few years ago when I was foreman of the grand jury that investigated the white slave infamy. I discovered then that the sale and use of alcoholic beverages had a very vital and intimate relation to the white slave traffic. In fact, I doubt if it would have flourished without connection with strong drink.

"I was permitted to have a near-at-hand observation of the practical operation of prohibition in Colorado in connection with the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, in which I am financially interested. When we first took hold of the property the company actually operated a saloon, the employes, many of whom were foreign-born, insisting that alcoholic beverages were essential to their comfort. Then Colorado went dry. In

EASY TO BUY A PIANO THROUGH THE CLUB.

If you have been putting off the purchase of a piano, for financial reasons, you should write for a copy of the Standard Piano Club's catalogue, it will open your eyes to the methods of piano buying and you will clearly see that it is no longer a difficult matter to buy a good instrument.

The Club has anticipated your needs and your difficulties and has perfected a plan that will save you approximately one-third the price, yet it makes the payment so convenient that you can get your piano at once. The Club's plan is the best plan because it gives you an instrument of standard quality and guaranteed durability at the lowest price at which a dependable instrument can possibly be sold.

a surprisingly short time the men seemed to forget all about the saloon, and their efficiency and earnings increased about 12 per cent. Denver remained wet for one year, while the remainder of the State was dry, and then Denver, by a large majority, joined the dry ranks. I believe that I am entirely within bounds when I say that if the question were again submitted to the voters of Colorado the State would vote dry overwhelmingly."

If men would humbly seek to live the Bible, they would get over the difficulties of negative criticism very soon, and would feel the construction of truth.—R. E. Speer.

POSTMASTER GENERAL BURLESON.

Postmaster General Burleson's position in the controversy over control of the wire service, will hardly be helped by his announcement of a 20 per cent increase in telegraph rates throughout the country, to go into effect at once. Considering all the circumstances, and having regard also to the burden which the increase will place on the community, the wording of Mr. Burleson's announcement is most unsatisfactory. When railway rates were advanced last May by Director General McAdoo, the order was accompanied by a careful and thorough statement of the causes (notably wage increases) which had necessitated this increase in gross receipts. Figures were added to show exactly what had been the increase in the expense account and what was expected to be the exact increase in revenue from the higher freight and passenger rates. Mr. Burleson merely tossed out the general statement that the higher telegraph rates are necessitated by the "wage increases now in effect made during the last year, and are barely sufficient for the purpose."

The managers of the Postal Telegraph Company assert that there is no need for such an increase; that it is lack of proper economies which has held down net receipts. This is a statement which, whether correct or not, Mr. Burleson cannot whistle down by hinting at personal animosity or insubordination. The very purpose alleged for government control of the wire service was to reduce the overhead expense, presumably through avoiding unnecessary duplication of competitive offices. Aside from this consideration, and aside from the public's justified dislike of Mr. Burleson's conduct in the matter, it will appear that the object lesson in government ownership or operation, which made so deep an impression on the public mind in the railway experiment, is now being taught with the telegraph also. Distinctly inferior service, coupled with very much higher charges for that service, provides indifferent propaganda.—New York Evening Post.

THE WAR IS OVER.

But the soldiers and sailors will never stop talking about the comfort they got from the Allens Foot-Ease, the antiseptic powder to be shaken into the shoes, which their sweethearts, mothers or sisters sent them. Until it is tried no one knows what a quick and wonderful relief Allens Foot-Ease is to painful, aching, swollen, tender feet, Corns, Bunions and Callouses. It makes walking a delight. Sold everywhere.

In early stages of religious experience or endeavor the thought of God's presence will be something strange, breaking in upon our ordinary course; by degrees it will become a very part of our inner consciousness.—Bishop Hall.

HIGH PRICE OF PAPER

Some of our friends, no doubt, feel like inquiring why prices of periodicals should be kept up since the war has ceased. We are sorry to say that we are paying a higher price for paper now than we paid at any time in the past, and wages have not been reduced. We feel that the price of paper is much higher than it should be, but publishers are not to blame. Dr. Arthur Little, a well-known chemical engineer, writing in The Atlantic Monthly, says the high prices are the result of waste that might be avoided. Amongst other things, he says:

"In the yellow-pine belt the values in rosin, turpentine, ethyl, alcohol, pine oil, tar, charcoal, and paper stock lost in the waste are three or four times the value of the lumber produced. Enough yellow-pine pulp wood is consumed in burners, or left to rot, to make double the total tonnage of paper produced in the United States. Meanwhile our paper-makers memorialize the community on the scarcity of paper stock, and pay $18 a cord for pulp wood which they might buy for $3. It takes many years to produce a crop of wood, and wood waste, which now constitutes from one-half to two-thirds of the entire tree, is too valuable a raw material to be regarded longer merely as an incumbrance, except by an improvident management."

We are grateful to our subscribers for their willingness to help to bear the burdens and increased expenses of publishing The Banner. The price we are paying for paper now is two and one-half times what it was three years ago, and other expenses have greatly increased, so that we were compelled to add to the subscription price. We are glad to be able to say that the addition does not seem to have appreciably affected our renewals, and we are able to maintain the high standard without financial loss.—Presbyterian Banner.

THE JEW'S BEQUEST.

The will of a Jew of Austrian descent and American residence and prosperity was offered for probate in a New York county court last week. Large sums of money were distributed among local philanthropies, and there were special endowments for the Old World "stadt" which he loved because it was his old home town. There was a gift for the poor Jews of that community and another of equal amount for the poor Christians! Still more strange and interesting was the provision that the distribution of the income to the Christians should take place at Easter and Christmas! No explanation is offered, but the humiliating thought arises that in those Old World towns the smoldering bitterness against the Jew flares up most fiercely at those times when the religious emotions of the Christian population are most deeply stirred. The history of Polish pogroms indicates this. The New York Jew, remembering the terrors of Christmas which perhaps in his boyhood kept him hiding indoors to save him from the hoots and jeers, and maybe the stones, of the worshipers coming from the churches, has now connected the two great Christian festivals with the good name and generous deed of a Jew.—New York Advocate.

A QUESTION OF VERACITY.

In the published report of the speech of Frank I. Cobb, editor of The World, at the Lotos Club, New York, he is represented as saying: "These backers of the prohibition amendment spent fabulous sums of money, the source of which is a mystery, and they kept no books nor did they ever render an accounting."

Mr. Anderson, of the Anti-Saloon League, answers: "The statement above, so far as the Anti-Saloon League is concerned, is an infamous lie, and if you made the statement as quoted above, intending to apply it to the Anti-Saloon League, you are either a silly, stupid, reckless liar, or you are a willful, malicious, criminal liar, as you have now given me the opportunity to prove conclusively by documentary evidence."

He also says: "Further, on the specific issue of reports and books raised by your quoted utterance, at such public meeting I will produce, among others, the very public accountant's report of national Anti-Saloon League activity which a reporter from The World held in his hands and examined at Westerville on the occasion of The World's recent and suddenly dropped attempt to 'get something on' the League which would be discreditable. I will also produce the certified public accountant's report covering every cent of receipts and expenses of the New York League, the substance of which, showing the total received and the purposes for which spent and the total for each purpose, is sent regularly each year to The World and the other papers of the State. And I shall there also invite you and a committee composed of one representative from each of the leading New York papers to visit our office, and after a careful examination of our entire financial system in general—our list of some 50,000 bona fide contributors, our record of contributions by churches, our collection methods, our handling of funds, our bookkeeping and our regular activities and expenses—to make a report of facts which shall be given to the press."

The New Version.

As the Governor of North Carolina said to the Governor of South Carolina, "What's yours—choklit or sassferilla?"—Macon Telegraph.

Hospitality As It Is Handed Out.

The American Bible Society, at the last meeting of its board, voted to propose to the British and Foreign Bible Society and other national societies a federation of the Bible societies of the world. James Wood, president of the American Bible Society, has announced that the annual output of Bibles reached the amazing number of 35,000,000, and that fully three-quarters of these are put out by non-commercial Bible societies throughout the world. "Even this large number of Bibles," President Wood said, "is entirely inadequate to meet the needs of the world and something must be done for more complete and efficient prosecution of the work of Bible supply. A great many considerations have led us to believe that the time was ripe for a combination of the forces whose principal interest is the supply and distribution of the Christian Scriptures."

THE CASE OF WILLIAM BURKE.

William Burke was a councilman in Philadelphia. So far as his neighbors and associates could judge he was a good and useful citizen. No one thought of questioning his past. He was in line for further honors from his fellow men and the electorate. Suddenly he astounded all who knew him in the city of Quaker ideals by a confession that he was an ex-convict. He made a frank and complete statement of his criminal record. He explained that he was making his confession because his past had been brought up by a man who was attempting to blackmail him. After the confession he disappeared from his city, probably expecting the condemnation of his old friends.

But Mayor Blankenburg and many other citizens took a more charitable view, a more modern view, a more righteous view. They started a movement to bring Burke back to Philadelphia and to give him all possible aid in re-establishing his life among them and to continue his life as an honest man. This humane and enlightened movement has been successful. Burke has returned. He is to be permitted to live without persecution.

The old idea was, and it is regrettable that it has not disappeared entirely, that a criminal had a diseased soul; that a man who was once a criminal always must be a criminal—that one false step meant a stain upon a man's life forever. The newer idea (though it is not new in reality, for the great Master, whose coming was heralded to the shepherds on the plains of Bethlehem by the star in the east, taught it) is that crime is largely social in its origin and that we all of us are more or less responsible for those among us who fail to preserve a moral equilibrium. To all the world Philadelphia is teaching a broad and humane lesson—a lesson by which other communities may profit. Social pessimists who hold that the world has not gone forward, that charity is not more kind, that opportunity is not more liberal and that the Golden Rule is not more generally observed than ever before in the history of the world, will also find a lesson in the case of Burke.—Editorial in the New York Times.

QUICKBILT BUNGALOW NO. 42

An attractive, snug, convenient, roomy little bungalow with graceful lines embodying the most modern of architectural ideas. Securely and substantially built to make it lasting and comfortable in the most severe weather. Especially built for convenience. While small in appearance, and snug its rooms are in reality of ample size for every comfort. Built at a tremendously reduced cost, due to the immense savings in quantity production. From the flooring to the roof; from the siding to the interior finish, it is already prepared for erection and partially built. In buying a QUICKBILT Bungalow, you

SAVE

WASTE. All the material is already prepared and the large waste piles of scrap lumber are thus eliminated. Every foot of lumber is used. You buy no surplus material.

TIME. Every piece of material has its own place. Everything is numbered and systematized. The instructions to the carpenter are complete and the order of erection simple. No time is lost in looking for material. The time ordinarily required in preliminary cutting and trimming is saved. As a large portion of the house is already built in panels, just that much time and cost is eliminated in construction.

LABOR. With the entire process of erection systematized and complete, the great building "bugaboo"—preliminary preparation—eliminated, the labor in the erection of a QUICKBILT Bungalow is reduced to a minimum, and therefore, of minor consideration. A carpenter of average speed and experience with two laborers, can erect the house in 7 days. The ordinary house will take almost as many weeks.

MONEY. A saving in waste of material, time and labor, is a saving in money. With a QUICKBILT Bungalow the expense of erection is cut in half, but that is not all. You need not pay a contractor's fee. The erection is so simple and systematic that any carpenter of average intelligence can erect it with ease. Many owners build them themselves. You pay no architect's fee. The complete plans with all specifications and instructions are furnished FREE. And yet, the plans are made after careful study by the best and most experienced of architects, with a view to eliminating waste and gaining the greatest possible convenience, economy and strength. The cost of the material is further reduced by the fact that you buy it from the mill, manufacturer and forest in one. Our complete plants cover the entire process, from the tree to the completed house. You pay no middle-man a profit. You buy direct from the source of material. In our complete plants in which hundreds of houses are built simultaneously, every short cut to perfection is used and every waste avoided. As the houses are made in great quantities you gain the advantage of the low cost or quantity production.

A CONVENIENTLY PLANNED HOME

The house is shipped F. O. B. Charleston, complete with all necessary material except the brick work. Size over all, 33-ft. x 21-ft. There are two large bed rooms, size 9-ft. x 12-ft., with closets, one spacious living room 12-ft. x 15-ft., kitchen 12-ft. x 12-ft. and an attractive front porch 12-ft. x 6-ft. The house is well lighted, spacious, well ventilated and convenient. The construction is largely of North Carolina Pine, "The Wood Universal," thoroughly kiln dried. Excellent flooring and ceiling. Walls built in panels of siding lined with heavy builders' paper to insure warmth. Durable, fire-resisting, standard asphalt strip shingles with slate green or red finish. Artistic paneled inside finish. Excellent doors and sash. All necessary nails and hardware furnished. House comes with exterior walls stained any one of a number of standard colors or painted with one heavy coat of priming paint. THE HOUSE WITH CLOSETS.

How dear to the heart of the housekeeping woman

Are the comforts of which so few architects tell:

Nice children, good servants and plenty of room in

The well-fitted mansion in which they must dwell.

But first of the blessings kind fortune can give her,

If she in the city or country abide,
Is that which she longs for and covets forever,

The big, airy closet, her joy and her pride—

The roomy, clean closet, the well-ordered closet,

The big, airy closet, her joy and her
pride.

Fond husbands, who fain would have home be an Eden,

For you and your eyes all complete as a whole,

To read in, to write in, to sleep in, to feed in,

Forget not the closets so dear to the soul;

But build them in corners, in nooks and in crannies,

Wherever a closet may harbor or hide,
And give to your Marys, your Kates and your Annies

The big, airy closets, their joy and their pride—

The roomy, clean closets, the well-ordered closets,

The big, airy closets, their joy and their pride.—Unidentified.

Infant Baptism and Corruption of Church.

PRESIDENT MULLINS is quoted as saying: "In early centuries when unconscious babes were made the subjects of Christian ordinances, the New Testament principle of individual responsibility was destroyed and Christianity suffered ship-wreck. European churches thus became the home of the unregenerate and the Christian ideals of righteousness and peace were destroyed. No nation with spiritual churches could ever have accepted the German ideals which brought on the great conflict."

How early were "unconscious babes made subjects of Christian ordinances?" Perhaps few Baptist scholars would deny that the custom of baptizing infants can be traced back to Irenaeus. This would allow one hundred and fifty years before the Union of State and Church under Constantine. What was the condition of the Church during this period? The answer which a Baptist historian gives to this question is that "during the second and third centuries the results of Christ's life and teachings were showing themselves in beautiful developments; in the private lives of individuals; in the growth of affection in the family circle, the relations of husband and wife and parents and children; in the extension of this love to all members of the Churches; and the further extension of this same love to the great masses of degraded and suffering humanity."

When did the Church of the "early centuries" become corrupt? This same Baptist historian says not till State and Church were united, and then "as the empire weakened and went to pieces from moral, political and economic causes, Christianity grew strong and ambitious; became worldly, political and immoral."

We put Baptist against Baptist. It is true that President Mullins believes that union of State and Church is a source of corruption. He is quoted as saying: "Christianity may be corrupted in two ways—at the bottom and at the top. It is corrupted at the top by the union of Church and State, which destroys spirituality and makes atheists of men. It is corrupted at the bottom when infant baptism is introduced, and the unregenerate world invades the Church." The difference between our two authorities is that the historian finds no corruption coming in at the bottom and discovers enough coming in at the top to account fully for the deplorable condition of the Church of the early centuries, whereas the President finds corruption flowing in both from the top and the bottom.

When it is alleged that a certain result is due to the operation of two causes, the way to test the accuracy of the statement is to eliminate one of the supposed causes and note the effect. In the United States one of these supposed causes has been eliminated. There is no union of State and Church in this country. How about the pedo-baptist churches? Is corruption still flowing into them at the bottom through infant baptism? Are they noticeably more corrupt than churches made up exclusively of baptized believers?

For the purpose of comparison we may restrict our view to the Baptists and the Presbyterians. We suggest such a comparison reluctantly, remembering what the Apostle Paul has to say about comparing ourselves among ourselves and measuring ourselves by ourselves. But we do it in no spirit of boastfulness or even of self-complacency. We know of no denomination that has cause to pride itself on its superior sanctity. We claim no superiority for Presbyterians, but in every community in which we have lived, we have found the Baptists and Presbyterians mingling together freely, frequently worshipping together and co-operating in religious work, and we never noticed any difference in their standards of piety, theoretically or practically. The preachers exhibit about the same measure of spirituality in their manner of life, and the same measure of zeal in the service of their common Master. They alike complain of the apathy and worldliness of many of their members, and the difficulty of maintaining high ideals of Christian conduct. In the churches of both denominations are many devout and earnest souls who are always abounding in the work of the Lord who make their influence powerfully felt for good in the community and through their missionary efforts they extend their beneficent influence throughout the country and even to the uttermost parts of the earth.

Moreover, both churches have substantially the same terms of admission to the communion—a credible profession of faith in Christ as an evident of regeneration. Both churches try to realize a regenerate body of communicants. To this end, both resort on occasion to the use of discipline. Perhaps in both, discipline has lapsed from its former strictness, and this to the detriment of Christian morals.

In the light of this comparison, which Baptist is probably right, the one who ascribes the corruption of the early church to infant baptism, or the other who finds a sufficient cause in the union of Church and State.

Infant Baptism and the World War.

Our attention has just been called to the fact that President E. Y. Mullins, of the Louisville Baptist Seminary and a number of Baptist editors have discovered that infant baptism caused the great war. Come to think about the matter, it is surprising that this had not occurred to the rest of us. Infant baptism is almost universally practiced in the countries which brought on the war. Obviously those doughty soldiers in their spiked helmets were nothing more nor less than baptized infants grown to man's estate. It is, therefore, too plain to need argument that if all those infants had been put out of the way before they were baptized there would have been no soldiers with spiked helmets, and consequently no war.

Pharaoh was a wise old coon. He feared the enslaved Israelites would rise in revolt and fight against him. He saw at once that a sure way to prevent it was to dispose of all the Israelitish infants before they reached the dangerous age of baptism. Had the midwives obeyed him, the scheme would have been a splendid success.

Herod the Great was sagacious enough to try the same plan to prevent trouble to his throne? So far as appears, he was satisfied with the result.

The Attention of the Peace Conference should be called to this. If they would put an end to infant baptism by stopping the supply of infants, the world would have nothing further to fear from Germany. Obsta principiis, said the wise old Latins.

"Mothers' Day."

The coming Sunday, May 11th, has been set apart as "Mothers' Day," and wherever mothers' children are, there it will be celebrated.

We rejoice that conditions have changed since its last celebration, for then many a mother's boy who remembered mother were soon laid in a grave far from the eye of a mother.

This year with peace in sight the children will remember mother wherever they gather.

We devote this issue largely to mothers. Dr. J. S. Foster has kindly consented to supply the sermon appropriate to the occasion.

The Peace Conference and Human Nature.

If Pope spoke wisely when he said, "The proper study of mankind is man," then we know no better school than the Peace Conference now in session, for there we see human nature stripped of all covering and revealing itself in selfishness. In the light of past facts and professions it is difficult to explain the great change that seems to have come over the Allies. Only a few months ago they were crying to us for help and for food. We lent money by the millions and sent men by the same measure. When the end came, the general testimony was that we had saved the world. But now, if we may judge from their papers and from interviews with prominent men, it is another example of "devil got sick, and the devil a monk would be; the devil got well, and the devil of a monk was he." Each country seems moved by selfishness, and all are intent upon securing territory. Very little of the discussion reaches us, but enough to show us that the old Adam in man is still present.

Mr. Wilson was once the popular idol, but now he is abused above all others. However the meanness of human nature is not strictly a European product. It also flourishes in America, and over here patriotism has given place to the partisan spirit, and those who should be supporting him as the representatives of America are joining his enemies in their opposition.

We have been amused in reading the comments of some of our editors of secular and religious papers. One would imagine that they possessed all the information in possession of Mr. Wilson, and also that he has been very greatly in the wrong in not taking each of them into his confidence. One of our Church papers whose leanings are decidedly Republican represents the country as disgusted over the delay, and viewing the performance of the Peace Conference with amazed disgust and weariness. When we remember the four great men who constitute the big four and the complex problem they have to settle, the feeling of disgust will the better describe how we view such criticisms. He is a wise man who knows when to be silent.

The Church Paper Canvass.

When the Stewardship Committee put the placing of a Church paper in every family in the Church as one of the objectives of the campaign, it not only took a new step, but it recognized a truth that the papers have long been trying to enforce. This request seems to have been generally observed, with the result that thousands of families are making the acquaintance, for the first time, with their Church paper.

From this time on, there will be among them a deeper interest in the work of the Church outside of their own congregation, which is bound to manifest itself in enlarged contributions.

In a certain sense this was a labor of love on the part of the pastors and people, and to them we send sincere thanks. We have not at this time the exact figures available, but the increase has been encouraging. Under the inspiration that numbers impart, we hope to make the Standard a better paper this coming year.

Now if the pastors will add to the obligation they already recognize by sending us news items, they will greatly help in making the Standard a paper of which this section will be proud.

The Prayer Meeting Problem.

There are two problems confronting the average pastor that of the prayer meeting and that of the Sunday evening service, and he who is able to solve either, especially the prayer meeting problem will be as much a benefactor of the ministry as the man who causes two blades of grass to grow where only one grew before, is, of the human race.

Some have solved the Sunday evening service by questionable methods. A friend lately moved to the West, writes that some of the churches in his town are drawing away the few faithful ones he has now, by using the movies to attract.

Others advertise sensational subjects which touch everything on the earth and under it except the text with which they start.

The prayer meeting still holds its own in its demand upon the preacher's faith and its only value in the eyes of many is to use it as a test of the consecration of members. Some have tried to change the old method of conducting them, by turning it over to the members as a forum for free discussion, with the inevitable result that no one except the performers reaped any benefit from it. We believe that the old method is the best, but its value depends largely upon the pastor and his willingness to prepare thoroughly. The pastor who makes thorough preparation will always find an audience, because people are always anxious to learn Scripture truth. The danger is that inadequate preparation is too often made. The pastor thinks that there will be few present, so he has no inspiration to prepare, with the result that many of those present this week will remain away the next, because they think it a waste of time to listen to a lecture not thoroughly prepared.

Thus the whittling process goes on—less preparation one week and less attendance the next, till in the end the attendance is reduced to a faithful few.

There was more than humor in the remark made by a young girl who came to the prayer meeting, and when her pastor expressed pleasure at seeing her there, said, "I had the blues tonight and when I told my mother that I did not feel as if I wanted to see anyone, she advised me to come to the prayer meeting."

How to solve this problem we candidly confess that we do not know, though we have an idea that more religion in the heart will help. We once had a deacon who never attended prayer meeting, though repeatedly urged to do so. A wave of deep religious interest swept over the town and sinners were convicted and saints revived, and among those blessed was this deacon, and from that time he was a regular attendant at the prayer meeting and evening service.

Rightly used, the prayer meeting is a valued adjunct to the pulpit.

We have known men to train their people in church history and in theology by means of the prayer meeting, and they never lacked an audience. It required hard study and as careful preparation as the Sunday morning sermon.

But however small the attendance, do not make that common mistake of scolding those present for the sins of those absent.

The Crown Rights of Motherhood

By Rev. J. S. Foster, D. D.

Prov. 31:28: "Her children arise up and call her blessed: her husband also, he praiseth her."

THE foremost Greek historian said that woman's highest praise consisted in not being mentioned at all. That we are able to say with Holland

"O! woman-mother. O! woman-wife—
The sweetest names that language knows," is due to the gospel of Christ. The honoring of motherhood is consonant with the mind of God. "Her children arise up and call her blessed." The poet and the novelist may speak of attachment to mother as sentiment or passion but saner thought designates it a principle in which both sentiment and passion in their holier aspects find a habitation. When one thinks beneath the surface of things he is carried by an unbroken chain to a recognition of an intimate relationship between the honor and reverence we accord our mothers and the will of God thereto. It is something more than sentiment, something deeper than passion, aye, it is divine influence that leads to the exaltation of mother. It is the harmony of man's mind with God's mind.

The Basis of Our Honor.

What is the basis of this assertion? To comprehend it cannot dim but must intensify the affection and reverence in which the mother is enshrined. True motherhood begins in the home and home is an institution of God. If we did not have it we should have to invent it for the welfare of mankind. Its erection was not accidental but sprang out of the great purpose of God for His earth and His people. "God setteth the solitary in families." It is the statement of the principle upon which the Church, the State and society are builded. Home begins in the protestation of love in its purest form and of honor in its deepest meaning for woman from man. A considerable portion of the first two pages of the Bible is made up of information about the origin of the family—the dwelling place of the mother. As we peruse it we catch the successive steps that led to the enthronement of woman. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness. So God created man in His own image, in the image of God created He him. And the Lord took the man and put him in the garden of Eden to dress and to keep it. And the Lord God said—It is not good that man should be alone. I will make him a help meet for him." Those who spend their time in discussing whether woman is inferior or superior to man are giving themselves to a shallow form of entertainment. Both are strong in their own spheres. One is the complement of the other. Each is a help meet for the other. How can there be inferiority when the rule of them both in the home is not as autocrats or as independents but is a joint rule? There may be subordination in station but there is no inferiority in essence. Thus in the creation of woman God lays deep the foundation for the honoring of mother. "And the Lord caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept: and He took one of his ribs and closed up the flesh thereof instead." In commenting upon this passage quaint Matthew Henry says "Eve's being made after Adam and out of him puts an honor upon her sex as the glory of the man. If man is the head, she is the crown to her husband. The man was dust refined: the woman was dust double refined—one remove further from the earth. She was made of a rib out of the side of Adam. Not made out of his head to top him: not out of his feet to be trampled upon by him: but out of his side to be equal with him: under his arm to be protected by him: and near his heart to be beloved."

Now that the woman has been created let us further trace the beautifully simple story of the outgoings of the man's heart for his help meet. "For this reason," because of the glory of the purpose of the help-meet's existence, her equality with her lover. "For this reason shall a man leave his father and his mother and shall cleave unto his wife and they twain shall be one flesh." The language suggests the old, old story, ever new, ever invested with heaven's benediction, of the lover pouring out his affection for his beloved. The scene of the first love story is the Garden of Eden. All the love stories since have been reproductions of that first disclosure of love—the man pledging his love and strength to the honoring and loving and protecting and reverencing of the woman of his choice. It is his lips that have spoken the first words. Her love is encased within her own breast until challenged by him who counts her worthy of his best. It is his solicitations that lead her out from the calm love of her home to build the new home in the pride of a husband's affection. Has your attention ever been attracted by the frequency with which the husband is admonished in the Scriptures to love his wife? No such specific commands are noted in regard to the wife, not that she is relieved of this obligation, not that her heart is proof against the loss of love, but that the principle upon which the home is builded may be ceaselessly recognized and honored on the part of him whose utterances of love led to the laying of the foundation of the new home.

The Foundation Further Strengthened.

Now when there comes into the family circle the child in whose veins flows the blood of both father and mother and it reaches the age of observation and meditation there is presented to its vision as an example a deferential homage, and bourn in upon its ears as a living testimony a spontaneous tribute to the worth of mother and wife that tends to the highest enthronement of mother as her lawful place in child life. Is it not to be expected that the true wife occupying the first place in the husband's esteem should by him be led into the first place in the child's esteem? The place that mother occupies is hers by divine right, by the exercise of neither mere sentiment nor passion but the expression of a principle inwrought into our very being.

The Mother's Response to the Challenge.

Has the mother in the field of experience demonstrated her right to the position assigned her by her Lord? The testimony of Mother's Day—Nationally recognized—and the abiding affection of the world are given her not alone because by divine appointment she occupies a lofty sphere but because her character and her conduct have nobly met the high task her Maker has bestowed upon her. To no other one person are we indebted for so much of value in our lives. This is her contribution and through this she lays tribute upon our affection and homage, that she has meant more to us than any other single factor. Like her Master her life is sacrificial. As before the rising sun the lingering shades of night disappear so in the mother's life all thoughts of self give way to a solicitude for others that stands out conspicuously as her chief glory. The crown of a true mother is her vicarious spirit. She gave life through sacrifice and that expanding life with its increasing demands is incapable of breaking her sacrificial spirit. She stood as the only teacher at the beginnings of our child life and gave shape to its thoughts and impressions. Those first years were important ones. Faculties were as yet undeveloped. The tone and temper of all future years were then being moulded. Moreover the training was long and exacting. We did not grow to manhood in a day. Nor were our footsteps always placed in paths of safety. The oversight required had to be constant, patient, long-suffering. Yet the task was assumed and met in a fidelity that causes us with every thought of her to arise and call her blessed. Mother is the word that makes the chords of the human heart vibrate because it is the incarnation to us of the deepest sacri-

An Appreciation of Dr. Smith.

Resolutions adopted by the Conference Committee of the Mid-China and North Kiangsu Missions in session in Shanghai in February, 1919:

"As a committee representing the two Missions of the Southern Presbyterian Church in China, we express to the Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D. D., our sincere appreciation of him personally and as the responsible representative of the Foreign Mission work of our Church at home; our appreciation of the help which he has brought to us and to our work during his visit among us; and our earnest expectation of the rich blessing yet to come to our field as a result of his conference with us. We wish also to assure Dr. Smith of our most cordial, prayerful and sympathetic support in the conduct of the work committed to him; and we do this more heartily because his visit has led us to regard him not only as a fellow-worker in the world-wide extension of the Kingdom of Christ, but also as a close personal friend, and we can only hope that the memories of us and of our field which he carries with him are as pleasant as those which he leaves behind. It is our conviction that his having been fice, the most intense devotion ever rendered us next to the sacrifice and devotion of the Son of God.

"The bravest battle that was ever fought,
Shall I tell you where and when?

On the maps of the world you will find it not,
'Twas fought by the mothers of men."

"Nay, not with cannon and battle shot,
With sword or noble pen:

Nay, not with eloquent word or thought
From the mouths of wonderful men."

"But deep in a walled up woman's heart—

Of a woman who would not yield,
But bravely, silently bore her part—
Lo, there is that battlefield."

"No marshalling troop, no bivouac song:

No banners to gleam and wave,
But oh! these battles they last so long
From babyhood to the grave."

The Deeper Meanings of Motherhood.

To the mother herself may it not be said that God designed her to be His chief helper in the rearing of character? The place of honor is the mother's place. Like all places of honor it has its responsibilities. How can the mother who grasps the dignity conferred upon her by the Lord and who is conscious of the strength of the tie which binds her child to herself refrain from erecting in the home the family altar to the glory of God? The atmosphere of every home should be distinctively religious. Under no other conditions are the functions of motherhood fully realized. The primary purpose of the mother is the spiritual education of her children. The intimacy of the relation between the two together with the long years of tutelage find their meaning in spiritual attainments. In every mother's home there is an altar. Sometimes it is the altar of indifference at which the child bows and then enters life to be negligent of the interests of God and man. Sometimes it is the altar of fashion, and at that altar with ceaseless devotion night and day exclusive homage is paid the fleeting things of life while the graces of the soul—purity of heart, spirituality of desire, unceasing love of holiness, a growing interest in religious themes—are utterly ignored. Sometimes it is the altar of wealth erected in the home. Bowing at that altar the atmosphere created tends only to the development of a spirit of worldly acquisition that discerns no value in the strengthening of the royal qualities of the soul. Sometimes the home altar before which the family knee is bowed is erected to the worship of pleasure. Such homes are missing their glory and dignity. There is something nobler than wealth and pleasure and fashion. A proper regard to the demands of fashion is commendable: a desire to lawfully acquire and wisely employ wealth is honorable: to open the heart to legitimate pleasure is a part of wisdom. But these with us will result in a distinct advance in the work of our church here in China."

(Extract from Minutes of Conference Committee, J. M. Blain, Chairman, D. W. Richardson, Secretary.)

The Young People's Conference.

A Suggestion to Presbyterian Delegates.

By Mrs. W. B. Ramsay, Pres. N. C. Synodical Auxiliary.

Every delegate to the Presbyterials received a prospectus of the Y. P.'s Conference to be held in Charlotte, at Queens College, June 2-8. What are you doing with your copy? May I ask, if you have not already done so, that you read it, every word. Next, consult with your pastor, your S. S. superintendent, your leaders of young peoples' societies to decide what two (or better five) delegates your church should send to this Conference. Then see that the necessary funds are provided. Keep up with the program notices of the Conference in this column and interest your delegates in the speakers and in the Conference plans. Follow them to the Conference with your prayers.

are minor and not the major things of life while the chief glory is in inculcating such ideas of God and duty as shall lead man to find the Fatherhood of God through the fellowship of Christ and to weave the revealed wisdom of God into all his wisdom and to take counsel of God in the use of wealth and pleasure. Notable are the examples in history of a mother's influence and prayers. There is our own peerless and pious Lee. Robert E. Lee's indebtedness to his mother was most pronounced, and no noble son ever gave more unstinted praise to the mother who bore him. Through all the years of his eventful career he saw his mother's hand stretched out to him and heard his mother's voice pleading with him to honor and serve God. Oft pointing to the sword of his father she told him the sword of a Lee was stainless of wrong and that should his hand ever be called upon to wield the sword she trusted that in the fear of God it would be wielded without reproach. Lee's life is a tribute to the imperishable power of a Christian mother and a Christian home. A mother kneels on the shores of Africa and watches the vanishing sails of a ship that is carrying away her son to the city of Rome with all its dissipations. He is an ungodly and wild youth. Her heart belongs to Christ and with her Master she pleads for the conquering of the heart of her boy. And the day comes when Augustine kneels at the feet of Monica his mother to testify to the power of the Christ over his own life—a life whose benediction abides within the Church of God today.

Our Answer to a Mother's Devotion.

To those of us who have wives and mothers should not a tribute of love oft be disclosed in words and demonstrated in an uprightness of life that will bring no sorrow? To love means heaviness if that love is unrequited. What is stronger than a mother's love? It would know it has been of value and is appreciated. Refrain not from giving to the living mother all possible testimonials of tender affection and all sympathy and obedience as evidences of true reverence and homage. And can we separate the mother love and the wife love? The sphere of each is distinct and the testimonials of affection for the one should be emulated by the testimonials of affection for the other. Happy is the man and woman whose courtship has no ending.

To many of us the face and the form of mother shall never again be seen till we stand with her in the immediate presence of God. Tho' dead she yet speaketh. Her removal from earth has in no wise lessened the duty we owe her memory and her influence. She spoke to us of fellowship with God. Is he our God? She bade us walk in paths of righteousness and truth. Are we buying the truth and selling it not? She has left us an example of holy ministry, and patient zeal and self-sacrificing service. Are we reproducing it? She has gone to her Father's house. Are we, too, journeying thither with the Saviour to whom she early dedicated us?

A Clearing House System for Benevolent Funds

Proposed by Mr. J. B. Spillman

Mr. Spillman is anxious to simplify the financial plans of the Church and to reduce them to a more businesslike basis. With this end in view he is sending out to the Church what he calls a Clearing House System. The idea is that all church treasurers shall send all contributions for the Assembly's causes to one central treasurer, to be arranged for by the Assembly. He in turn is to divide the amount sent among the causes, in accordance with the percentage basis adopted by the Assembly.

The church treasurer, he claims, will be saved much trouble and can send money oftener than is done now, many mistakes will be avoided and the committees will receive their money more regularly.

The charts given herewith show a comparison of the present with the proposed plan, and the reason why it is claimed that the change should be made.

The two charts show the weakness of our present system of remitting benevolent funds, and a plan to make this part of our Church work function properly.

Though there are a number of good reasons for the separation of the headquarters of the various committees, there is no good reason for funds being remitted directly by each church treasurer to each benevolent treasury under the present system of percentage division of the funds. And there are many serious disadvantages.

The logic of the percentage division of the benevolent funds makes a central treasury or clearing house, as it should be called, necessary to complete the system.

What a clearing house would do for the finances of the Church:

1. It would provide an absolute check on each one of the 3,442 local treasurers of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

We could require one check a month from each of these treasurers. If the check is not in the clearing house by the fifteenth of the month, we would know for an absolute certainty that it had not been sent in, and a letter could be forwarded to that treasurer to know why. If his church collected only one dollar a month for beneficence, he should be required to send in that one dollar the same as if it were one thousand dollars.

2. It would inspire confidence in the giver and induce more gifts.

The church that remits its benevolent funds each month will have more money to remit each month. The people will give oftener and more readily if they know the money they give is for immediate use—and will immediately go to the benevolent causes. Business men will be more ready to support the benevolent work if they know it is on a business basis.

3. It will be the means of making the congregation pay their pledges more promptly.

The clearing house will have the amounts pledged by a congregation for the year on file and will expect one-twelfth of that amount to be paid each month. If that amount is not remitted, the church treasurer will be asked to give a reason, and if the people are dilatory in paying their pledges, a list of the members making pledges can be secured and the clearing house can write them personal letters and send literature that will educate that particular congregation to pay their pledges weekly, thereby greatly assisting the church treasurer.

4. Interest charges now being paid by some of our committees will be materially reduced.

A careful compilation of the interest on the accumulated deficits by our four Executive Committees for the year closing

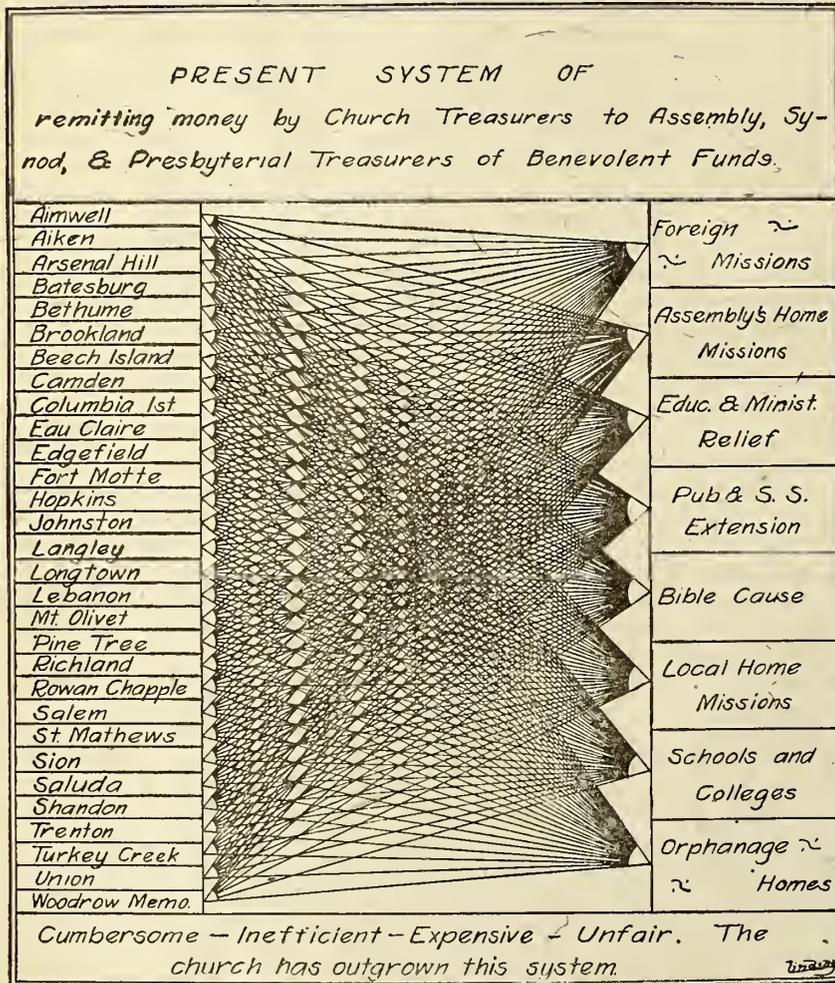

March 31, 1918, shows that this item was well over $10,000.00, and the charges accumulated by the benevolent treasurers in each Synod and Presbytery will equal this, making an interest expense of $20,000.00 a year.

5. This is the most economical way.

If each of our 3,442 treasurers remitted to each cause every month, the postage and stationery bills for sending the money and getting back receipts would be something like $30,000.00. One letter a month to the clearing house and return receipt would amount to only about $5,000.00.

6. This the fairest way.

Each of our benevolent committees will be sure of an equal and just division of every cent that is contributed by the Church, for a report would be made to each Presbytery and Synod as well as to the General Assembly, showing that

3,442 treasurers remitting twelve times a year to eight benevolent treasurers makes 330,432 letters at a cost of 5 cents each is	$16,521.60
Return receipts	16,521.60
	$33,034.20

Mr. Spillman says:

The Durant Assembly would not endorse the plan to bring all of our Executive Committees under one roof in one city, and wisely, I believe. We have a large territory, and it is wise for the Assembly to have the various branches of its work located in each great division of its territory—interesting the pastor, elders and deacons in its activities, thus giving wider range to the membership upon these committees.

all money received was divided according to the basis adopted.

7. An equitable method of financing all united work would be provided.

A certain per cent of all finances received could be set aside to maintain the work of the Stewardship Committee of the Every Member Canvass, of the Women's Auxiliary, of the expenses of the clearing house and expenses of the Missionary Survey, etc.

Organization of the Clearing House.

1. An Executive Committee should be formed, composed of one minister, one banker, one merchant, one lawyer, one manufacturer and one college president or professor, these men being appointed by the General Assembly, and they should be required to elect three additional members; three men being elected for a period of one year, three for a period of two years and three for a period of one year. Thereafter all elections should be for three years, and successors should be elected from the same business or profession. No committeeman should be eligible for more than two successive terms of office. This committee shall be responsible for the election of a clearing house treasurer, who shall receive a salary of $5,000.00 per year; said treasurer shall secure an assistant and one or more stenographers with the consent of the committee, and at such salary as the committee shall deem advisable. The Clearing House Committee shall secure a location at once, and as soon as the clearing house is open, notify each church treasurer. During the formation of the Executive Committee, the Assembly treasurer is authorized to pay all expenses, such expenses to be refunded after the office is open.

The system that divides the money contributed to benevolent causes in proportion to the needs of each cause will function best through one central receiving treasury—a benevolent clearing house treasury—this treasury dividing the funds received according to a fixed percentage. Our present quota or apportionment system will function best through one executive officer, so whether $3,500,000, $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 is asked for, the amount will be distributed to each church upon an exact proportional basis. The work of these two departments is so correlated as to make it expedient that they head up in the same officer.

Respectfully submitted for the advancement of the cause of the Lord Jesus Christ in the world.

CLEARING HOUSE FOR All Benevolent Causes Needed
The Effective, Efficient, Economical, Business Method of handling monthly remittances and disbursements, from all Treasurers, for all Causes.

If every treasurer sent in a check every month to the Clearing House treasurer, this would only require 41,204 letters a year, at a cost of 5 cents each is.....$2,060.20
Return receipts 2,060.20

$4,120.40

This system would take away every excuse a treasurer might justly have under the present system. There is only one excuse he could make, that of not having a cent in the treasury—no amount is too small for the Clearing House to divide proportionately among the causes.

The Troublesome Baby.

The little ones cling to the mother,
With kisses that softly fall,
But somehow the troublesome baby
Is nearest her heart of all—
Ill, and fretful, and small,
But dearest to mother of all.

The neighbors wonder and pity,
Hearing its querulous cry,
"She's losing her youth and beauty,"

Say friends as they pass her by;
"Well were the babe to die,
And the mother have rest," they sigh.

But over the wee white cradle,
Her soft eyes full of prayer,
Bendeth the weary mother;
And never was face so fair,
Pale and tired with care—
But the glory of love is there!

Rosy, and round, and dimpled,
Dewey with childish sleep,
She tucks in her other darlings,
Whom angels watch and keep.
Ah, if a darker angel
Anear this treasure creep!

Bless thee, beautiful mother!
Thy heart hath a place for all—
Room for the joys and the sorrows,
However fast they fall;
Room for the baby, small,
That may love thee better than all.

Foreign Missions in May

Facts From the Annual Report.

The total number of adult baptisms in all our fields during the past year was 5,491.

The total number of communicants in churches over which our missionaries have supervision is 43,221. This does not include members of independent churches connected with the Church of Christ in Japan nor of those connected with the Presbyterian Church in Brazil.

The contributions to the work made by the native church members and from other native sources amounted to $159,640.

The number of Sabbath Schools under the care of our missions was 638, with a school membership of 67,441.

The number of our foreign workers, including some associate and short-time workers not regularly appointed as missionaries is 384, and the number of native workers reported from the various missions is 3,024.

Our total income for the year from all sources was $791,440.73, a gain over the receipts of last year of $121,153.46.

The cost of the work for the year was $868,768.34, which is $77,327.61 more than the income for the year. Our total deficit on March 31st was $216,657.19.

There has been practically no enlargement of the work during the present year. Only six new missionaries were sent to the field and our losses were five by death and six by retirement.

The cost of the regular work last year, which as the above statement shows, was practically the same as the work this year, was $677,564, or $160,340 less than the cost of the work this year.

The Executive Committee desires to express its grateful appreciation of the generosity of our people as shown in the splendid increase of their gifts to our cause made notwithstanding the heavy financial sacrifices required of them for the winning of the war. We are convinced that this was due in large measure to the every-member canvass made last year in the month of March. We are also convinced that the canvass in March this year was much more thoroughly and successfully made than the one last year. We are therefore hopeful that, with some reduction in the cost of the work which ought to result from the establishment of peace, and with some relief to our people from the financial burdens necessary for the carrying on of the war, the end of this year may also bring us the long hoped for relief from the financial difficulties that for several years have so greatly hindered the progress of our work.

The above statement, however, will show why we need help at the present time, and the month of May has been assigned by the General Assembly to the cause of Foreign Missions in order that during that month we may lay before our people any special needs that have not been met by the regular income that we receive through the every-member canvass. There are always some people in our congregations who on account of absence from home at the time the canvass was made or for other reasons are not represented in the canvass. This appeal should come with special force to all persons in this class.

In many of our congregations also there are persons of large means whose pledges made in the every-member canvass do not include all that they expect to give to the cause during the year. Our hope is that many of these will see the necessity and embrace the opportunity of responding liberally to this appeal.

One thing especially, urgently needs to be done, but cannot be done at this time without the special help we are asking for or without further increasing our debt. In no one of our fields is the present salary sufficient to meet the present cost even of the economical living to which our missionaries have been accustomed. Meatless days and the wearing of wornout clothes are no part of the self-denial that may legitimately be required of them. They must have comfortable clothing and sufficient food and sanitary shelter if their work is to be done on an efficiency basis.

There are other urgent needs in all our fields which can wait, or rather which we know must wait. But this one ought not to wait and we trust that we may receive as the response to this appeal the help that will enable us to meet it at once.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF FOREIGN-MISSIONS.
S. H. Chester,
Secretary.

Watch, Mother, Watch.

Mother, watch the little feet,
Climbing o'er the garden wall,
Bounding through the busy street,
Ranging cellar, shed, and hall.
Never count the moments lost,
Never mind the time it cost;
Little feet will go astray;
Guide them, mother, while you may.

Mother, watch the little hand,
Picking berries by the way,
Making houses in the sand,
Tossing up the fragrant hay.
Never dare the question ask,
"Why to me this weary task?"
These same little hands may prove
Messengers of light and love.

Mother, watch the little tongue,
Prattling eloquent and wild,
What is said and what is sung
By the happy, joyous child.
Catch the word while yet unspoken,
Stop the vow before 'tis broken;
This same tongue may yet proclaim
Blessings on the Saviour's name.

To be a Christian is to obey Christ, no matter how you feel.—Henry Ward Beecher.

At Table-Setting.

For the table-setting
Fewer are the places,
Fewer, round the table,
Grow the children's faces.

Changes, changes, changes,
Life and death are bringing,
Sore my heart misgives me,
Fears my heart are wringing.

Otherwise I fancied
As I hushed their weeping,
Otherwise I fancied
As I watched them sleeping.

Small, we kept them near us,
Thou and I together;
Hard the task without thee,
Lonely the endeavor.

Round the board so crowded
Wider grow the spaces,
For the table-setting
Fewer are the places.

Outline of Annual Report of Presbyterian Committee of Publication

By Rev. Gilbert Glass, D. D., General Superintendent.

THE following brief summary is presented with profound thankfulness to God for many evidences of His favor and guidance during the critical period through which the Church has just passed, Increased Contributions.

It is gratifying to report a large increase in offerings for Sunday School Extension, a total of $67,001.13 having been received as compared with $47,381.63 given last year. These enlarged gifts were distributed as follows:

Received from 1,862 Churches.....	$35,557.08
Received from 1,133 Sunday Schools.....	25,713.19
Received from 543 Church Societies.....	4,029.59
Received from miscellaneous offerings.....	1,701.27
Total	$67,001.13

Sunday School Extension.

Quite a number of our field workers were called into some form of Religious War Work, or entered pastorates made vacant because of the stirring challenge to special service to meet war conditions. Rapid shifting of personnel and fields of service, and the closing of many Churches and Schools for long periods on account of the influenza epidemic, in addition to the reduction of forces alluded to above, had their inevitable effect on the returns from the field as tabulated. (See full report). Although 44 workers were on our roll during the year, quite a number of these labored for only a short time.

Standard of Efficiency.

The Assembly's Efficiency Standard has begun to come into its own as an incentive and guide to better work. The Honor Roll of the Gold Seal Schools in the Earnest Worker grows.

Attention is called to a change in the denominational requirements under Section IX, where an additional item calling for the teaching of the Church Catechisms has been inserted.

Revised Wall Charts containing this and other minor changes are being sent to all superintendents in the near future.

New Periodicals.

Our periodical department suffered quite a loss during the slump of last Fall and Winter owing to influenza. This has been largely recovered and there is a noticeable increase in the proper use and adaptation of our splendid Lesson Quarterlies to meet the needs of different departments.

Two new quarterlies, the "Young People's Bible Study," and a new "Lesson Quarterly for general advanced use and for the Home Department will be distributed next October. These are confidently expected to meet newly developed needs in a most satisfactory way. Look out for the new quarterlies! The "Young People's Bible Study" is for classes between 16 and 24.

New Young People's Standard.

The proposed Standard of Efficiency for Southern Christian Endeavor Societies, as printed in the church papers some weeks ago, has for its aim the enlisting and directing of our young people's interest and activities along lines of service in their home churches and toward definite fidelity and efficiency in the benevolent and missionary work of the Kingdom. This standard, with explanatory leaflets, will be sent to all of our Young People's Societies after undergoing criticism and action of the General Assembly, in case it is adopted.

A plan for the organization and correlation of Young People's Work in the local church with adaptation to various conditions will also be presented in the unabridged report for the action of the Assembly.

Appreciation.

We would here express our gratitude for the abounding liberality of God's people in the support of Sunday School Extension, and for the faithful co-operation of all Sunday School and Young People's workers and leaders in the promoting of enlargement and efficiency during the difficult year through which we have come.

The Convention Program

The program of the Sixth General Convention of the Laymen's Missionary Movement is rapidly shaping up, though some features are incomplete as yet.

Among those who have accepted and will speak of our own Southern Presbyterian leaders are:

Rev. Theron H. Rice, D. D., Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.

Rev. W. R. Dobyns, D. D., pastor First Presbyterian Church, St. Joseph, Mo.

Rev. Chas. H. Pratt, D. D., Executive Secretary, Interchurch World Movement.

Rev. Lewis H. Chafer, D. D., Bible Teacher, of Orange, N. J.

Rev. Egbert W. Smith, Executive Secretary, Foreign Missionary Committee, now on his way home from the Orient.

Capt. M. L. Swinehart, from Korea, Rev. H. C. Ostrom, from Japan, Missionaries in this country on furlough.

Capt. F. L. Slaymaker, Secretary of Laymen's Missionary Movement of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

Of our professional and business men who will speak are:

Mr. Alfred D. Mason, of Memphis, Tenn., just back from Mexico, where he has been investigating conditions of our work there.

Dr. Marion McH. Hull, of Atlanta, Ga., Sunday School Superintendent and Church Leader.

Dr. J. P. McCallie, of Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mr. J. B. Spillman, of Columbia, S. C.

Among the leading men outside our Church are:

Mr. J. Campbell White, president of Wooster College.

Mr. Geo. Innes, business man of Philadelphia, Pa.

Dr. E. M. Poteat and Mr. W. E. Doughty, Secretaries of Laymen's Missionary Movement in United States and Canada.

Mr. Karl Lehmann, Southern States Secretary of the Society of Christian Endeavor.

A number of other strong speakers will be on the program who are yet to hear from finally, whose names will be published in a short time.

Many of these speakers will also speak at the Women's Auxiliary Parallel Convention, and in addition there will be quite a number of leading women of national reputation as speakers on their program, whose names will be given in a subsequent issue.

One of the practical features of the Laymen's Convention will be a conference for discussion of eight of the most vital questions confronting our Church today, and suggestions of such questions are invited. Here is your opportunity to get that question or difficulty that has been bothering you and interfering with your Church work brought up and discussed by our leading workers of our church.

Send your suggestions to Laymen's Missionary Movement, Box 334, Athens, Ga., without delay.

Another practical feature will be a conference on "The Efficient Church," eight men of experience in local church activities presenting in short, rapid fire talks as many phases of local Church work followed by short periods of open discussion on the subjects suggested.

News of the Week

On April 26, Greenville, S. C., was visited by a serious fire. The Colonial Building and theater were both ruined. The Colonial Building, turned into an apartment house, was once Chicora College.

Nine Southern States, together with parts of Indiana and Illinois, on May 1 had their telephone rates raised.

Postmaster General Bursleson has recommended that the Government relinquish control of the American cable lines, and to restore the telegraph and telephone lines to private ownership, immediately after enactment by Congress of laws necessary to safeguard the properties.

The Department of Justice will see to the enforcement of National war time prohibition, effective July 1.

Preliminary organization was effected April 26 in New York of a cotton warehousing company to operate warehouses throughout the South and North as the culmination of a scheme inaugurated by the cotton buying and storage committee of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, was seriously injured in New York when a taxicab in which he was riding was struck by a Broadway surface car and hurled 20 feet to the curb. Despite the advanced age of the labor leader, who is 69 years old, the surgeons declared that there was no likelihood of the injuries proving fatal.

After May 1, many articles sold in drug stores will be taxed at the rate of one cent for each 25 cents.

The Italian muddle has not yet been cleared, though there are reports of a compromise being possible. In striking contrast to the rage of the Italians and their abuse of Mr. Wilson, the press dispatches state that this Government has advanced Italy $50,000,000.

On Friday night last there was a disastrous wreck on the Seaboard, between Hamlet, N. C., and Monroe, train No. 13. The engineer, Hill, was killed and a negro fireman fatally injured.

Sir Eric Drummond, of Great Britain, has been named as the first Secretary General of the League of Nations. Belgium, Brazil, Greece and Spain are to be represented on the Executive Council.

The Victory Loan has dragged, but they are confident that it will be taken up.

Judge Boyd, of the United States Court, has declared in a recent decision that the Child Labor Act, passed by the last Congress, is invalid. It will be taken before the Supreme Court of the United States.

Explosive bombs were sent to every Cabinet member and to Senators and Congressmen who had been in any way interested in checking anarchy or restricting immigration. Owing to lack of postage, few were delivered. The wife of ex-Senator Hardwick of Georgia and her negro maid were injured by the explosion. Senator Overman, of this State, escaped, owing to insufficient postage.

The Government states that by September next all of our troops will be home from Europe.

The Government experts predict a bumper crop of wheat. Nine hundred million bushels is their estimate.

Senator Lodge has notified Republican Senators that they would do well to withhold expressions of opinions as to the revised League of Nations until a conference be held to decide upon the attitude of the party. The Progressive Senators are rebelling, and they declare that they will not allow any set of men to decide for them.

Story and Incident

Her Second Honeymoon.

Harriet Lummis Smith in The Continent.

AUGUSTA was the last of the children to leave home. Little Jack had been the first to go, stealing off from the warm brightness of the snug nursery to undertake the great Adventure, such a tiny traveller to go alone. As the others grew up, and developed wills of their own and opinions, and set aside their parents' decisions with serene confidence of young America, Jack had remained in his mother's thoughts the same dear, dimpled manikin, her baby always, loving her best of all the world.

Rodney had gone west at 18. That was the second break in the circle. College did not appeal to Rodney. He was an outdoor boy always and on his uncle Preston's ranch in Colorado he was making good. Guy had just graduated from the Institute of Technology, and Ruth had finished her course in the nurses' training school a year earlier. Each had stepped immediately into a good position, good but exacting. None of the three absentees had been able to come home for Augusta's wedding.

Augusta had been engaged a year, a strenuous year during which all the activities of the household had been focused on the approaching wedding day. Mrs. Crawford wondered if she could ever again bring herself to undertake a piece of hemstitching. They had done miles of it, she was sure, underwear and table cloths and napkins and sheets and pillow cases and towels and bureau scarfs, and table covers, all hemstitched. Through these twelve months they had worked incessantly. When callers came Mrs. Crawford had apologized for keeping a piece of needle work in her hands. She had not encouraged callers that crowded, hurrying her. All her entertaining had been of Augusta's friends.

It had been what reporters call a simple home wedding, which meant that Mrs. Crawford bore the entire responsibility, unassisted by caterers. The small house had been packed with friends. The living room had been cleared of all its appurtenances to make space for the displaying of wedding presents. Mrs. Crawford, her cheeks aflame and her eyes feverishly bright, realized uncomfortably that she was not entering into the spirit of the occasion. Augusta was being married. Her home was soon to be bereft of the last of the young presences in whom she had lived and moved and had her being for a quarter of a century. And all she could think of was the chicken salad and the wedding cake. Even as the clergyman was declaring matrimony an honorable institution, divinely ordained, Mrs. Crawford smelled the coffee. It would be just like Julia's perversity to let it boil.

She had been thinking of how Augusta's dress fitted, how her veil hung, whether the bride's cake would be up to specifications, whether it was time for Augusta to change to her traveling dress. Her mind had seized upon superficial matters with greedy absorption. The meaning of all that was happening remained outside her consciousness.

The taxicab hurled the young people away. Augusta leaned past her husband to kiss her hand, smiling and pret-

One mistake is to expect too much of life; another is to expect too little. Life is neither full of satisfactions nor empty of them. We must not expect the earth to be a complete and hospitable home for the soul, nor must we fall into the contrary error of underestimating the value of what life does offer. Life is God's school for the soul. We cannot deny it is brief, full of pain, buffeting, dangers, and unfulfilled desires; yet it is the grand opportunity offered by God to the human soul for equipment for the longer and more real life of the world to come.

* * *

In this school of life we may expand and empower the talents which our natures contain. God places talents in all, sometimes ten and often less. These talents are not possessions apart from ourselves, but they are a part of ourselves. Whatever capacity we possess for art, service, righteousness, and spirituality, is a component part of us, of our very selves. Life is God's school in which we deepen and expand ourselves by developing the talents which are a part of us. If we make the most of ourselves by applying actively God's rules for this development, we shall in the next world enjoy the benefits forever.

* * *

In the school of life we ought to learn how to trust and obey the Lord. That is the biggest job before our souls. We are so full of native distrust and rebellion that it takes often a lifetime of God's schooling and sustained effort of our own to bring us to a full trust in Him and His promises and to submit our stubborn wills to Him. Often our most painful experiences in life are aimed by God at bringing us into this attitude. Our life has to be made miserable sometimes because of our slowness to learn this lesson. But our good Father is too firm to relax His discipline until He has brought us to the proper state of heart. If we would learn more rapidly, life would be sweeter.

* * *

We should at least begin to learn in this school to know Jesus. At the outset we know very little of His way of looking at things, and His way of doing them, and His reasons for His views and plans. We do not understand Him. Life offers the chance to observe Him in action, to co-operate with Him until we learn His methods, to catch His spirit and ideas, and to cultivate acquaintance with Him personally until we begin to know Him. Once we really know Him, we have gained the greatest factor of eternal life. A sick and broken man recently said to his friend, "Life is a poor game, and contains nothing." To which his friend replied, "No, not a great deal beyond the chance to learn to know and trust our Savior—but that itself is much."

What is the first step toward knowing God? Matt. 7:7. From what Text Book do we learn about God and His will? Does the Holy Spirit help us to understand the Bible?

Every business man knows how much the little things count in big business. Christianity is the greatest thing on earth, and each Christian needs to be careful and faithful about the smallest details of Christian living and example.—Selected.

The Prayer Meeting

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING MAY 11, 1919:
THE UNITY OF THE CHURCH IN PRACTICE—

Rom. 12:3-8.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

The unity of the church—or of Christians, is dear to the heart of her Lord. It was—and is—an object of his prayers, and of his holy will.

The burning question is? What is the Unity of the Church? Is it what we call "Organic union?" or is it the essential unity of purpose and faith and love?

Perhaps the study of our passage would persuade us that the unity is one of spirit, of loyalty and faith and love. A glance back through the centuries will reveal the fact that men and churches bearing the name of Christ have thought more highly of themselves than they ought to have thought; that their vanity and pride have been a kind of terrible madness; and that these men have not estimated themselves at all according as God had dealt to them a measure of faith.

On the contrary, they made power, and riches, and art treasures the basis of their self-esteem.

Now in the fourth and fifth verses, the Apostle brings us to the heart of this question of Christian unity. He tells us in so many words that if we are Christians indeed we are "one body in Christ, and severally members one of another."

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Notice to Commissioners.

The New Orleans Assembly Arrangements Committee welcomes, in advance, all those who will be its guests.

Owing to the large number of railroads entering the city, and to the numerous trains, and especially to the irregularity of train schedules, commissioners will not be met at the station but will kindly repair to the Napoleon Avenue Church immediately upon arrival. They will be met at the Church by the Reception Committee and be taken to their homes. Cards of information and introduction will be sent to all in time to reach commissioners several days before they are likely to leave home for the Assembly. Any who desire to do so may go at once from the station on their arrival to the homes assigned them. They will be expected, and the presentation of their cards of introduction will be all that will be needed to secure their welcome.

The Napoleon Avenue Church, directions for reaching which will be duly sent to all commissioners, will be open Tuesday evening and all day Wednesday preceding the Assembly, to receive guests and send them to the places of their entertainment. It will be closed at ten o'clock at night, and no guests will be expected in homes after that hour. The Reception Committee will be in attendance also on Thursday, the opening day of the Assembly.

Some stated clerks have not yet reported the representatives of their Presbyteries. Every effort has been made, for three weeks, to secure these names, and if any inconvenience arises to those whose names are not reported to us, we shall with great pleasure do our best to make it only temporary.

SIN AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.

Golden Text—Romans 6-23: "For the wages of sin is death but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Gen. 3:1-13.

May 11, 1919.

The Scriptures define sin to be "the transgression of the law." This law for our first parents in Eden, forbade the eating of the fruit of the tree of "Knowledge of Good and Evil." The tempter was Satan, who had previously fallen, and who used the serpent as his instrument. The serpent is described as more intelligent, or "subtle than any beast that the Lord God had made," and as going in a crawling attitude, is part of his sentence for his conduct, he probably moved in a more upright position and was more attractive in appearance originally. Our lesson directs attention to Satan's Temptations, Eve's Disobedience, the Effects of Transgression, and Man's Responsibility.

I. Satan's Temptations.

He tempts Eve to distrust and disobedience. He moves her to doubt God's character for goodness. He suggests that God had forbidden her to eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden, and thus limited her sources of enjoyment. She replies that they were allowed to eat of the trees, except one, and that was prohibited lest by eating of it they die. She affirms that God had said that they would die if they ate of that tree. The Devil tempts her to distrust God's word and asserts "Ye shall not surely die." He opposes His Word to that of Jehovah. He declares that so far from dying, eating that fruit as God knew, would exalt them and make them wise "like God, knowing good and evil." Eve, instead of trusting Jehovah's goodness and word of warning, depended on her own senses and Satan's assertions. "When she saw that the fruit was good for food and pleasant to the eye and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took the fruit thereof and did eat, and gave also to her husband, and he did eat." She could not prevent the temptation. But she was not forced to yield. She doubted God's truth and believed Satan's lies. And by carnal appetites and an ambition to be wise, was moved to disobedience. The apostle tells us that she was deceived by Satan, while Adam was not deceived, but determined to follow the example and share the fate of His wife.

II. Eve's Disobedience.

Her disobedience leading to that of Adam brought depravity and death into our world, and all our woe. Her first mistake was in continuing to converse with the Devil when he began to insinuate doubts of Jehovah's goodness, to contradict His Word, and to suggest that wisdom could be obtained by rebelling against His will. She knew Jehovah far better than she did Satan, and had received from Him such blessings as should have rendered her unwilling to listen to any aspersions of His character, doubts of His goodness, or hopes of advancement by disobeying His commands. Her wisest course would have been to forsake Satan's company, to avoid the place where she was urged to do wrong, and to dismiss the suggestions of the evil one by continuing to consider the temptation and the motives for yielding she was finally led to disobedience. Resist the very beginnings of evil, for it gathers force the longer it is contemplated.

III. The Effects of Transgression.

These are marked in Adam and Eve and very similar to those of sinful acts now. When our first parents had sinned, they were conscious of guilt and knew that they were morally naked or exposed to punishment. They endeavored to protect themselves, to cover their nakedness. "They sewed fig leaves together and made themselves aprons." Their physical nakedness was symbolical of their moral exposure to the divine displeasure, and their attempts to cover their bodies as ineffectual as their efforts to protect their souls. Conscious of guilt and exposure they feared Jehovah, separated from Him, and endeavored to hide themselves from Him among the trees of the garden. Ungodly men, stained with sin, still feel and act in a similar way. They dread to meet God and vainly strive to hide from His all seeing eyes and amid secular objects and occupations endeavor to forget His presence.

IV. Man's Responsibility to God.

For his character and conduct God holds man accountable. "The Lord will bring every work into judgment and every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil." When Eve and Adam had sinned, God called them to account. There was no avoiding the meeting, nor the sentence pronounced by Jehovah. They both tried to excuse themselves by casting the blame on others. Adam said "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree and I did eat." He tries to put the sin of the act first on the woman, but ultimately on God, as He had brought her to Adam. Eve declared "Serpent beguiled me and I did eat." His deception has caused my disobedience. But their excuses availed nothing. Adam was not deceived and should not have been led by his wife's example and persuasion to do what he knew was wrong. Eve had sufficient light to know Jehovah's character and claims, and her own duty and should not have been deceived by Satan. Hence they received from Jehovah righteous sentences mingled with mercy, and mitigated by promises.

Prayer Meeting.

other." We are: though we may live in different states or countries; though we call ourselves Methodist or Baptist or what not: we are members one of another—one body in Christ.

It has been a great tragedy that Christians have not accepted this plain statement of God's Word, and that they do not and have not acted upon it.

Before men will practice the unity of the Church, it would seem to be true that they must realize it. In the light of Paul's teaching, if once realized and accepted, how absurd and impossible would be the separatist views and feelings of vast multitudes of Christians in regard to their brothers. A theory of church government—a theory of one of the sacraments is made an organ of division or worse. These brethren do not think of or esteem themselves as God has dealt to them a measure of faith; but they esteem themselves and discredit others for reasons which would doubtless have astonished and shocked the Apostle; which would have drawn from him an epistle of protest which would startle the world.

Now, in the body of Christ are many individual members and many corporate members. These individuals and churches have different gifts. It is ours to use these gifts for God's glory. It is ours to convince men by prophecy, and serving and teaching, and exhorting, and giving, and ruling, and showing mercy—in every way that the Fatherhood of God, and the brotherhood of men in Christ are not idle words: that regeneration and adoption and sanctification and redemption are glorious realities; and that the Kingdom of God includes all the whole cycle of men's lives and relations and interests. Organic unity, federation of churches may be wise or not; but certainly spiritual unity is a fact; and a fact that should be heartily and gladly and fully recognized and put into practice before "organic union" or "federation of churches" is attempted. It was the spirit of separation, with its pride and hatred, and boasting that Paul so earnestly condemned at Corinth. We are brethren: Let us love one another. We are servants of Christ: let us serve according to the gifts conferred upon us by divine grace. Then a new era of grace and glory would come through the church upon the world.

Educational

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

The commencement address at the Presbyterian College of S. C. will be delivered June 4 by Dr. R. H. Bennett. The baccalaureate sermon will be preached by Dr. H. Tucker Graham and the sermon before the Y. M. C. A. by Rev. J. P. Marion.

The R. O. T. C. is now well organized and the students are enthusiastic over the work.

PEACE INSTITUTE.

The 1919 commencement of Peace Institute will be held May 30 to June 3.

Friday night, May 30—Junior Music Recital.

Saturday Night, May 31—Annual play by the School of Expression, under the direction of Miss Alice Le Suena Harsh, head of the department.

Sunday Morning, June 1—Rev. W. M. Moss, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Chapel Hill, N. C., will preach the baccalaureate sermon. Sunday evening, the services will be held under the auspices of the Young Woman's Christian Association.

Monday, the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees will be held, and also the Alumnae Association. Monday afternoon Senior Class Day exercises. Monday night the Annual Concert.

Tuesday night the commencement exercises will be held. Mrs. Josephus Daniels, an alumna of Peace, will deliver the address to the graduating class.

Peace Institute has just acquired one of the most beautiful residences and property in Raleigh for further development of her work. The Times carried this announcement:

"Peace Institute has bought the property belonging to Mrs. J. S. Wynne, 26 North Wilmington Street, for enlargement of the work of the school. The development of a home school for younger girls than Peace Institute is now prepared to take care of so impressed Miss Graham that the trustees decided to add this to the work of the institution.

Dulu Wynne Hall is the name for the school. This name was decided upon in honor of Mrs. J. S. Wynne, who has always been so interested in the growth and usefulness of Peace Institute. This department will be developed on the most modern ideas for the home-life and education of girls from twelve to sixteen years of age.

The residence of Dr. T. M. Jordan, which Peace has rented this year, will be used as a dormitory next year. The annex, as it is called, is a popular residence hall for Peace students.

"This year has been the most prosperous year in the history of the school. The registration has reached very close to the two hundred mark and Miss Graham reports that a large number of students were turned away on account of lack of room. Each of the special departments such as voice, piano, expression, cooking and sewing reached the limit of students soon after the fall season opened."

The Raleigh Times makes this editorial comment of the selection of Mrs. Daniels for Commencement speaker:

"We wish to congratulate Peace Institute on the selection of Mrs. Josephus Daniels as principal speaker at its annual commencement. We have no idea of how good an address Mrs. Daniels can make; nor is that the point. A woman's college baccalaureate address should be made from a woman's point of view.

"This idea of having a woman of affairs and of family, one who has met the problems which her hearers may expect to meet; that fits in with our notion of the eternal fitness of things. Did somebody also remark—"and the eternal femininity of things as well?" Perhaps, and we hope it does. Femininity, never a disgrace although for centuries considered such, has begun to take a hand in the shaping of its own destinies.

Ergo, it pleases and greatly that North Carolina should break the habit of inviting in a man to tell the girls just entering life outside of school and home how they should deal with problems of which he knows nothing."

GROVE INSTITUTE.

(Formerly James Sprunt Institute).

Recently the Presbytery of Wilmington, at the request of the Trustees, changed the name of the James Sprunt Institute to Grove Institute. This change had been under discussion for some time. When Presbytery assumed control of the school in 1896 it was named for Rev. James Sprunt, who was for many years a citizen of Kenansville, pastor of the local Church, president of Grove Academy (for boys) before the Civil War, and a noted divine and man of letters. The name, however, was misleading, and many persisted in believing it was named for the present Mr. James Sprunt, of Wilmington. When seeking for a new name, the Trustees could find nothing better than to take part of the name of the long since defunct male school, known as Grove Academy, and thus give historical continuity to the educational work. The local Church is one of the oldest Presbyterian Churches in the State, dating from about 1740—as early as 1760 it is said the local Church changed its name from "Goshen" to "Grove," and its first house of worship overlooked "Grove Creek," which almost encircles the town. Along with the Church of those early days went the school. Grove Academy (for boys) was chartered four years before the State University, or about 1786. For about a century this school continued its noble work and helped to educate some of the leading men of this and other States. Rev. James Sprunt was its honored president from 1845 through the Civil War. Some years ago Grove Academy ceased to exist. The present school for girls antedates the Civil War, when it was conducted as a private seminary. There are girls in our school this session whose grandmothers were educated here. In 1896 Wilmington Presbytery assumed control and gave it the name which it has borne ever since, until the recent change. The present session, which will close May 27th, with a full nine months term, has been the best in the history of the school, both from financial standpoint and in attendance. The dormitories have been full to their capacity.

Woman’s Auxiliary

THE WOMEN’S COLUMN AND ITS EDITOR.

In the name of the Synodical, Presbyterial, and local auxiliaries of North Carolina, we express to the Presbyterian Standard our appreciation of this special department in our Synodical Church paper. We gladly accept the offer of this space for the presentation and discussion of our work. The Standard has always given generous space to the reports and notices of the women’s work; but we believe a special department will add interest and efficiency.

Mrs. E. D. Brown, of China Grove, will serve as editor of this department. Her name at the head of this column means a newsy, attractive, and helpful page.

We ask for Mrs. Brown the hearty support and co-operation of all our officers and auxiliary workers.

We invite the auxiliaries of other Synods and Presbyteries to use this department for reporting their work.

We believe this is a forward step, and under the Spirit’s blessing we expect this department to unify, strengthen and multiply our service in the work of the Kingdom.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. W. B. Ramsay,
President N. C. Synodical Auxiliary.

ARE YOU GOING?

The Woman’s Parallel Convention of the Laymen’s Missionary Movement will meet in Atlanta, June 10, 11, 12. It will undoubtedly be the largest gathering of women ever assembled in our denomination. Three days will be devoted to hearing the very best speakers that can be secured on all the vital Christian themes of this critical hour, who will address both the Laymen’s and the Woman’s meetings; and in addition to these, there will be women speakers of national reputation who will address only the Woman’s Convention.

No one can afford to miss this wonderful opportunity to hear these leaders consider the problems of the hour.

Send your registration fee ($2.00) at once to Mr. James Morton, 75 Luckie Street, Atlanta, and ask for information regarding hotels.

Constitute yourself a member of a “Boosters’ Committee” and see if you cannot interest others, both men and women, in attending this, the greatest Convention of our Church.

Mrs. W. C. Winsborough.

Kanawha Presbyterial Auxiliary will meet with Bream Presbyterian Church at Charleston, W. Va., on May 13, 14, 15. Opening meeting May 13, 8 P. M. Five or more visiting speakers are expected. Mr. Thos. B. Talbot, of our Kentucky mountain work, will be among the speakers. Mrs. W. E. Mohler, of St. Albans, is the president of the Presbyterial. All planning to attend will please send their names and train of arrival to Mrs. Ulrich Wanner, Glenwood Heights, Station “A,” Charleston, W. Va.

The Congaree Presbyterial met April 17-18 at the Woodrow Memorial Church, Columbia. The opening exercises were led by Dr. Thornton Whaling, after which the president, Mrs. W. T. Madden, presided over the meetings. The large number of delegates, their enthusiastic reports, and the evident growth in their respective societies, was an inspiration to all present. Four new auxiliaries were added to the roll-call: Johnson, Winnsboro and Arsenal Hill and Shandon from Columbia. The statistical report showed a decided financial increase of gifts to the Assembly’s causes, and the fund for Miss Marchant, of Brazil, was well paid up to date.

Special features of the program were talks by Miss Dupuy, of Korea; Dr. S. I. Woodbridge, of China, and Mr. A. W. Blackwood, of Columbia. Mrs. Hodges, of Greenwood, gave an unusually interesting talk on her literature work. The atmosphere of the meetings was created by the earnest Bible readings which Mrs. T. S. Bryan gave, and the members of the Presbyterial received the real keynote of the convention when they heard her message. Mrs. Andrew Bramlett, the synodical president, strengthened and encouraged the ladies by her informal talks and each delegate went back to her society inspired to do more work for the Master.

Submitted to and approved by the Executive Committee.
(Signed) Margorie McAlpine,
Secretary.

PERSONALS.

Rev. W. H. Eubank has changed his address from Roanoke, Va., to Buchanan, Va.

We are indebted to the Graduating Class of Mitchell College for an invitation to attend the commencement exercises in Shearer Hall, Statesville, N. C., May 9-12.

The Senior Class of the Assembly’s Training School, Richmond, Va., also remembered us, and sent an invitation to attend their commencement exercises, Tuesday evening, May 6, in Watts’ Chapel, Ginter Park.

Rev. S. W. Moore, pastor of the Church at Bluefield, W. Va., who has been in France with the Army and whose letters have been enjoyed by our readers, has arrived in Philadelphia and will soon be at home.

We regret to learn that our friend, Dr. Byron Clark, of Salisbury, who has been operated upon in Baltimore for cataract, is temporarily blind with no definite hope of early recovery. The sympathy of his many friends goes out to him and his people.

W. C. Wells, the brother of Dr. J. M. Wells, of Wilmington, N. C., is one of two lawyers appointed to act as legal advisers to the Board of Liquidation in Paris, which has charge of all claims against our Government and of our Government against the several Allied Nations.

As there are hundreds of millions of dollars involved, the legal difficulties are many, so that it is a distinct honor which has been conferred.

The Synod of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, than whom there is no finer body of men, has been in session the past week in this city, meeting in the East Avenue Church, of which Dr. W. W. Orr is pastor. The attendance was large, the sessions full of interest and Judge Mower, of Newberry, S. C., as moderator made a most efficient presiding officer. Sister denominations represented on the program were the Presbyterian U. S., by Dr. S. L. Morris, who made an earnest address on Home Missions and the United Presbyterian, by Drs. Anderson and Kyle, who brought fraternal greetings to the Synod. On last Sabbath a large number of the Charlotte pulpits were occupied by the visiting brethren.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Laurens—From the annual report of the First Church, Laurens, we gather the following:

Church closed by quarantine or otherwise nearly four months.

Members received, 26. Total membership, 300, of whom 27 are non-residents. Offerings over $13,000, of which about one-fourth was expended upon the maintenance of our own Church and three-fourths contributed to the various benevolent causes.

To the Red Cross, $2,553.75; Armenian and Syrian relief, $1,220.00; United War Work and Miscellaneous, about $2,000.00; Foreign Missions, $2,160.00, and the regular home beneficences, $2,172.00.

Liberty—The pastor and his family have been most cordially received at Liberty. Upon our arrival here we were taken into the homes of the people and cared for most graciously until our household goods came. We were then moved into the manse. Upon entering it, we found it made most attractive throughout with paint, varnish and kalsomine. And this was not all. The pantry had been stocked and locked. However, we were given the key which opened up to us many and varied good things for the physical man.

Not only have we been heartily welcomed by our own people; but also by the other people of the town. On Sunday evening, April 27, a union service was held at the Presbyterian Church, at which words of welcome and encouragement were spoken by the pastors of the Methodist and Baptist Churches. For all these manifestations of kind interest, we are most grateful.

H. A. Knox.

Meeting of Bethel Presbytery, April 22.—Opening sermon by the Moderator, Rev. F. H. Wardlaw, Matt. 25:13: "The Neglected Doctrine." Present, Ministers, 14; Elders, 39. Rev. G. W. Nickell, of Bethel Church, was elected Moderator, Rev. F. H. Wardlaw, Stated Clerk, Rev. A. Martin, Assistant Clerk.

New Members Received: Rev. D. B. Green, from Pee Dee Presbytery; Rev. J. B. Bailes, from Piedmont Presbytery; Rev. J. E. Berryhill, from King's Mountain Presbytery; Rev. F. Ray Riddle, from Florida Presbytery.

Presbyterial sermon preached by Rev. J. B. Swann, Matt. 18:18: "Church Discipline."

A communication from Rev. C. H. Pratt, representing "The Inter-Church World Movement," was considered. Presbytery unanimously found itself unable to assume the sympathetic attitude which was asked and saw in the movement "one of many reminders that our church courts, our pastors and our congregations are in danger of becoming mere pawns in the hands of self-appointed leaders and agencies who are neither directly nor indirectly responsible to any organized branch of Christ's Church."

Two overtures to the General Assembly: One touching a Clearing House for Benevolent Funds; a second with respect to establishing a mission to the Jews,

Time and place of next meeting: 8 P. M., September 9, Liberty Hill, S. C.

F. H. Wardlaw, S. C.

Pee Dee Presbytery met in Marion, S. C., April 15, with 16 ministers and 26 elders present.

Rev. H. Tucker Graham, D. D., preached the opening sermon at the request of the Moderator, Rev. J. M. Halladay, D. D.

Rev. J. A. McQueen was elected Moderator and Mr. D. S. Matheson was elected temporary clerk.

Mr. J. D. Henderson, a member of the Carolina Church, and a student at the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, was received under the care of Presbytery as a candidate for the ministry.

The continued illness of Rev. A. W. White was reported and the stated clerk was instructed to write him a letter of sympathy and Dr. Graham led the Presbytery in prayer in his behalf.

Rev. A. J. Howell was received from Wilmington Presbytery and accepted calls from the churches of Latta and Dumbarton. A commission was appointed to install him May 11.

The pastoral relation between Rev. J. P. Anderson and the churches of Lamar and Fairhope was dissolved and these two churches were granted permission to employ a supply until fall meeting of Presbytery. Rev. J. P. Anderson will give his whole time to the Timmons ville Church.

Presbytery adopted an overture to the Assembly, presented by Rev. J. M. Halladay, D. D., on a change in the Book of Church Order on Licensure and Ordination, which, if adopted by the Presbyteries, will make our book conform to our practice in the licensure and ordination of candidates.

The application of Rev. A. L. Davis for appointment as a Foreign Missionary to Brazil was heartily endorsed by Presbytery.

Rev. J. M. Halladay, D. D., made a most inspiring report on local Home Missions. The condition of this branch of our work is most satisfactory and is due of the untiring efforts of the local Home Missions Committee. Dr. Halladay was commended for his work and in further testimony of its appreciation, Presbytery fixed his salary at $150 per year.

Dr. Halladay also presented a report on the Every Member Canvass, showing that last year the churches of Presbytery were apporportioned $27,898 and pledged $24,828. This year the churches are apporportioned $32,791 and pledge $31,283. The following increase in pastors' salaries was noted:

Bennettsville—Rev. G. M. Wilcox.....	$ 600
Carolina—Rev. C. G. Brown.....	100
Clio—Rev. C. G. Brown.....	300
Cheraw—Rev. A. H. McArn.....	450
Dillon—Rev. W. B. S. Chandler.....	500
Darlington—Rev. D. M. Fulton.....	400
Florence—Rev. H. Tucker Graham, D. D.....	300
Jefferson—Rev. A. W. White.....	100
McBee—Rev. A. W. White.....	100
McColl—Rev. J. J. Harrell.....	200
Patrick—Rev. A. W. White.....	900
Rocky Creek—Rev. A. W. White.....	10.00
Ruby—Rev. J. R. Millard.....	22.50
White Oak—Rev. J. R. Millard.....	50.00

The following churches have called or are seeking pastors at the increase indicated:

Effingham.....	$300.00
Blenheim.....	300.00
Hopewell—Rev. W. H. Johnson.....	500.00
Latta—Rev. A. J. Howell.....	200.00
Dumbarton—Rev. A. J. White.....	50.00

Presbytery adjourned Wednesday afternoon but many members of the Presbytery remained over to hear Chaplain John McSween, just home from overseas, give a most interesting address on his experiences and observations in France. This service was held in the Baptist Church. After Mr. McSween's address Dr. L. Ross Lynn, president of Thornwell Orphanage, and Dr. Davidson M. Douglas, president of the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, reported on the progress of these institutions and eloquently presented their claims upon the churches.

The next regular meeting of Presbytery will be held in the Kentyre Church.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Drive for Church and Manse Erection League Second Sunday in May—Presbytery has ordered that this cause be presented in all the Churches of Mecklenburg Presbytery, Sunday, May 11, or as near thereto as possible, and that subscriptions and pledges be taken, and that the first call be for the First Church at Badin.

We need the hearty support and co-operation of every pastor, and church. We must secure at least 3,000 subscribers to the League.

Let us meet our obligation and our great opportunity and assist in building churches in these needy and important fields.

All literature will be sent this week and plans made for speakers.

Be sure and do your part—let us make a strong pull and a pull together and we shall go over the top.

Remember the day, the second Sunday in May.

F. S. Neal, Chairman.

Wadesboro—In spite of four weeks of quarantine during the influenza epidemic, and the fact that it was for two months without a pastor, the First Church had a splendid report to make to Presbytery. During the year all current obligations were met and a $300.00 account paid, which leaves the Church entirely free of debt. The salary of the pastor, Rev. Jno. Jordan Douglass, has recently been increased $200.00.

Kenansville—Rev. O. G. Jones, D. D.—After more than a year's leave of absence spent in the Systematic Beneficence Campaign and in war work, Dr. Jones is back in the Synod's Evangelistic Work for his whole time and closed a good meeting at Kenansville in Wilmington Presbytery. A fine work was done among the girls of the school, nearly every one if not all who were out of the church accepting the Saviour. In all twenty persons signified their acceptance of Christ, of whom thirteen united with the Presbyterian Church before the meeting closed. Forty-three persons signed cards of reconsecration. At the date of this issue he is with Rev. J. R. Phipps at Pollockville. The Kenansville Church contributed $40.00 to the Synod's Evangelistic Work in the meeting.

A. W. C.

Elizabeth City—On Sabbath evening, April 27, our ministry of eight years here came to a close. The Church was filled with friends and members of other congregations, who came in to worship with us in the farewell service. After the benediction, Col. Lamb, for many years an elder of the church, presented on behalf of this congregation a purse of $237. It is needless to say that we were deeply touched by this token of love from this sincerely devoted and loyal people. Cann Memorial is a mission church. The organization has been maintained through this year at the cost of an ever increasing sacrifice, while there are about forty members on the roll, the financial burden of the congregation has rested upon nine families, who have contributed on an average of $1,200 per year to all causes. We pray that God's blessing may rest upon this consecrated people, that they may soon secure another pastor, and that the Lord Jesus, the great Shepherd of the sheep, may continue, in the future, as in the past, to lead them into "The green pastures and by the still waters."

J. B. Black.

Mecklenburg Presbytery—There will be an adjourned meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery on Monday, May 12, at 2:30 P. M. at the First Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, N. C.

John E. Wool, S. C.

King's Mountain—Sunday, April 27th, Rev. W. A. Murray, of Shelby, preached here and moderated a congregational meeting to call a pastor. The congregation unanimously called Rev. A. S. Anderson, of Hopkinsville, Ky. Our Church has recently decided to have a pastor for all his time. Heretofore we have been grouped with Bessemer City and Long Creek. The outlook here is very bright and it is earnestly hoped that Mr. Anderson will accept the call.

Hendersonville—This Church is making encouraging progress under the efficient leadership of the new pastor, Rev. J. F. Ligon, who has been in the field since December 1st.

During the last few weeks sixteen new members have been received.

On April 27th the following additional officers were ordained and installed: Dr. S. B. McPheeters and J. O. Williams, elders, and Messrs. R. M. Oats, J. D. Duff and Charles L. Grey deacons.

The every member canvass in March showed a decided increase over last year both for benevolences and current expenses. The canvass for the church papers has also been made and quite a number of new subscriptions obtained.

Items of News from Concord Presbytery—Concord Presbytery enters upon the new ecclesiastical year with encouraging conditions and hopeful prospects. Every pastorate has a pastor either on the field or in immediate prospect. The Presbytery, at its recent stated meeting, planned to "lengthen its cords" as well as to "strengthen its stakes." Provisions were made for the location of three local missionaries in counties in which our Church is weak; and two Sunday School Workers in sections in which such work is especially needed. There are but few pastorates in the Presbytery that have not increased their pastors' salaries during the past year. A very encouraging feature of the Home Mission Work of the Presbytery is, that the Churches pay their apportionments for this cause with such regularity and promptness that our treasurer is able to pay all bills at the end of each month. Presbytery has ordered an evangelistic campaign to include every Church in the Presbytery, giving every Church at least one evangelistic meeting during the year, and using the ministers of the Presbytery as far as practicable. The schedule of this campaign will be published at an early date.

The superintendent and evangelist would be glad to correspond with any minister who is specially adapted to mountain mission work, and who feels positively called of God to such work.

J. M. Clark,

Superintendent and Evangelist.

Hawfields—On the third Sunday in May the annual Home Coming Day will be observed. Dinner will be served on the grounds, and all of the children and friends of the Church are cordially invited to be present. It is expected that the Mebane Church, which Hawfields affectionately claims as a daughter, will unite in the day's worship. The communion sermon will be preached by Rev. A. W. Shaw, pastor of the Mebane Church. The pastor will preach the sermon on foreign missions.

Hawfields was organized in 1755, and here Orange Presbytery was organized in 1770. But Hawfields is one of the old country churches that has not passed into innocuous desuetude. This year's offerings to benevolences amounted to an increase of over 72 per cent above those of last year, with an additional offering to Synod's Home Missions through Bros. Black and Burr, of $168.72. There were 44 additions through the year on examination, and two on certificate.

On Sunday, April 20, seven additional deacons were ordained and installed, as follows: Messrs. Kerr Scott, Lorraine Turner, Edward Kerr, Dewey Covington, Julian Gill, John Fenton and Wm. Woods, Jr. The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor is doing an aggressive work; and from it, for the new church year, the session has appointed Mr. Kerr Scott as Superintendent of the Sunday School, with Mr. Loraine Turner as Assistant Superintendent. Under the able management of the cemetery committee, of which Mr. R. W. Scott is chairman, our endowment fund for the upkeep of the cemetery has grown to about $3,700.00, with $3,350.00 paid in, and invested in Liberty Bonds. At a largely attended meeting of the Ladies' Missionary Society, recently, plans were brought before them, looking to a greatly increased efficiency during the coming year.

Bethlehem and Bethany, which are grouped with Hawfields, report increases in benevolent contributions, respectively, of 60 and 184 per cent. Saxapahaw, the other member of the group, had done so well last year, and had suffered so severely from the influenza, that she failed to report an increase in contributions, but made a fairly substantial offering nevertheless. Not only did Bethlehem overpay the pastor's salary, but the pastor wishes to record his warm appreciation of many gifts in money and provisions from all of his four churches.

Jonas Barclay, Pastor.

Buffalo and Midway, Greensboro—Buffalo Church recently sent up to Presbytery the most encouraging report it ever sent in its long history. There has been an increase of more than 50 per cent in money raised for all causes and more than 100 per cent. to beneficence over one year ago; more than 300 per cent. increase to all causes over five years ago and more than 600 per cent. increase to beneficence during this time. In the last year 39 members were added to the Church, 33 of whom were received on profession of their faith.

In our recent every member canvass of the congregation the ladies canvassed the ladies for beneficence and got most gratifying results. The men did their part nobly in the canvass also, and the whole Church is looking forward with hope and expectation of seeing the new year far surpass anything it has ever done before. The Church is fortunate in having for the canvass a progressive and liberal congregational manager in Dr. W. P. Knight, who does himself what he tries to get others to do.

Our Sunday School is responding in a fine spirit to all the worthy objects presented for its support. During the year it gave more than $250 to the stricken Armenians, and several individuals and classes have adopted Armenian children for the coming year. This interest was created largely by our live and efficient superintendent, W. G. Wharton.

In connection with our school we have a thriving Men's Bible Class, known as the David Caldwell Bible Class. It is well organized and is endeavoring to interest the men of the community in Bible study and Church attendance, and in worthy objects of beneficence. H. A. Barnes is at the head of this class as its president, and expects to have more than 100 men enrolled as active members before the Summer is gone. It is enough to inspire any pastor to have these men and others who are equally interested loyally cooperating in making the Church a power for helpfulness and service in the community and the world.

Midway Church has recently asked for services four times per month instead of twice, as heretofore, and already a good effect is seen on the Sunday School and the preaching services. Both Buffalo and Midway have just made substantial increases in the pastor's salary, and are therefore keeping step with the "Progressive Program of the Assembly's Stewardship Committee." They already know how we feel about it!

E. Frank Lee, Pastor.

Kings Mountain Presbytery met in Lincolnton, N. C., April 15th, at 8:00 P. M., and was opened with a sermon by Rev. G. A. Sparrow, the last moderator present, from Matt. 21:28 and Is. 5:1-5. Thirteen ministers and twenty-four ruling elders were present.

Organization: Rev. J. T. Dendy was elected moderator and Rev. W. A. Murray, temporary clerk.

Reception: Licentiate Joseph L. Bartlett was received from Louisville Presbytery. Ordination: Licentiate Bartlett was regularly ordained as an evangelist.

Requests: Rev. W. S. Hamiter was granted permission to supply High Shoals Church.

The Shelby Church was granted permission to amend its call to its pastor by adding $200 to his salary.

A petition, signed by thirty (30) persons for the organization of a Presbyterian Church at Mayworth, N. C., was granted, and the following commission was appointed: Rev. J. T. Dendy, Rev. W. J. Roach, Rev. H. R. Overcash and Elder J. F. Ratchford. Alternates: Rev. J. H. Henderlite, D. D., and Elder Jno. M. Kennedy.

Overture: The following overture was adopted: "The Presbytery of Kings Mountain overtures the General Assembly to obtain for the Church a direct and definite part in the work of evangelizing the Jewish people, either in this country or abroad, or both, as the Spirit may direct."

Church Paper: The following resolution was adopted by Presbytery: "The Presbytery of Kings Mountain has heard Dr. J. R. Bridges, Editor of the Presbyterian Standard, with deep interest, and desires to record its appreciation and gratitude to him as editor and one of the owners of the paper for the splendid and manifold services rendered to the Church gratuitously by this most excellent church paper. The Presbytery hereby recommends the Standard to all our churches, and urges its introduction into all our homes.

Presbyterial Sermon: Rev. W. A. Murray was appointed to preach the doctrinal sermon on Sabbath Observance at the fall meeting of Presbytery.

Rev. W. S. Hamiter was appointed to preach the sermon on Family Religion.

Dissolution: The name of Waco Church was stricken from our roll inasmuch as the church has merged itself with the Cherryville Church.

Systematic Beneficence: The Committee on Systematic Beneficence was instructed to revise the table of apportionments and report to the fall meeting.

Next place of meeting: The next regular meeting will be at Lowell, N. C., September 16, 1919, at 8:00 P. M.

F. A. Drennan, Stated Clerk.

Fayetteville Presbytery met in its two hundred and twelfth stated session at Ashpole Church (near Rowland), April 22, 1919, and was opened with a sermon by the retiring Moderator, Rev. J. K. Hall. One hundred and twelve members were enrolled. Rev. J. J. Hill was elected Moderator and Rev. A. S. Anderson Temporary Clerk.

The following were present as corresponding members: Revs. A. C. Ormond, Meridian Presbytery; John McEachin, Orange Presbytery; A. C. Bridgman, Orange Presbytery, and A. S. Caldwell, Asheville Presbytery.

Rev. W. C. Buchanan, our Missionary to Japan, was present and was introduced to the Presbytery, owing to his long absence from our bounds.

The following ministers were received into this Presbytery and their names enrolled: Revs. A. W. Crawford, J. McI. Wicker and E. C. Murray, D. D., from Orange Presbytery; R. M. Phillips, from Charleston Presbytery, and Dugald Munroe, from Concord Presbytery.

A touching memorial service, in memory of Rev. H.-J. Mills, deceased, was held at the 11 o'clock hour the second day.

The Presbyterial sermon on Sabbath Observance was preached by Rev. W. L. Wilson, and immediately afterwards the Presbyterial communion service was held.

A popular meeting in the interest of Sabbath School work was held and interesting addresses were made by Rev. J. K. Roberts and others.

The Treasurer's report showed total funds handled by him during the year, $8,230.18, disbursement for all obligations, $6,044.14, leaving a balance in the treasury of $2,186.04.

Foreign Missions received much attention. A popular meeting was held and two splendid addresses from returned Missionaries—Rev. John McEachin, of Korea, and Rev. W. C. Buchanan, of Japan—were very much enjoyed by the Presbytery.

Rev. A. W. Crawford, Superintendent of Synod's Home

Mission work, presented a report of the work in this Presbytery for the last year, showing that Fayetteville Presbytery contributed $6,420, as compared with $3,932 last year.

The report on Christian Education showed that 184 candidates for the ministry entered the service of their country for the period of the war. Of these 11 died in the service. Two ministers also died on the field of battle—one, Rev. T. M. Bulla, was formerly from this Presbytery.

The report on Systematic Beneficence shows that our whole Presbytery contributed $101,924.00 for the beneficent causes during the year.

For Assembly's Home Missions the whole General Assembly contributed $303,391.97, being an increase of twenty-nine and one-half per cent. The special attention of our pastors is called to Home Mission Week, November 23-30.

Rev. E. C. Murray, D. D., is to be installed pastor at St. Paul's on May 24, at 4 P. M. Rev. J. K. Hall is chairman of the commission. Other members of the commission are Rev. G. E. Moorehouse and Dr. T. L. Stamps.

Eleven churches made request that they be allowed to change terms of call for their pastors and increase their salaries, as follows: Cypress, Vass, Cameron, Fayetteville First, Highland (Fayetteville), Bluff, Dunn, McPherson, Ephesus, Spence and Oakland. These requests were granted and the churches commended for their action.

Nominations: To preach Presbyterian sermon next meeting, Rev. J. A. McMurray—subject: "The Christian's Relations to Worldly Amusements."

Trustees Flora Macdonald College, exit 1922—Rev. J. K. Roberts, Messrs. B. F. McMillan, M. D.; A. T. McCallum, A. W. McLean, and J. A. McDonald, of Toronto, Canada.

The Home Mission report shows all of our fields supplied with preaching, except two, and much good has been accomplished during the year in spite of the hindrance from influenza, and the absence of several of our workers, who have been in the service of their country.

The next stated meeting will be held at Jackson Springs, at a time to be fixed later.

After adopting a hearty vote of thanks for the gracious hospitality of the Ashpole and Rowland churches, Presbytery adjourned to meet in the First Church, Fayetteville, Tuesday, June 3, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

E. L. Siler, Stated Clerk.

Orange Presbytery met in regular session in the Reidsville Presbyterian Church on Tuesday, April 15, 1919, with thirty-seven ministers and thirty-three ruling elders in attendance. This was a large meeting and a great deal of routine and other important business was accomplished.

The opening sermon was preached by the Rev. D. Clay Lilly, D. D., of Winston-Salem, at the request of the retiring moderator, Rev. C. W. Erwin, and it was a fine presentation of the "Precious Faith" of God's people, 2 Peter 1:1.

The Rev. E. R. Leyburn, D. D., of Durham, was elected Moderator and the Rev. C. P. Coble, of High Point, Temporary Clerk.

The Rev. A. R. Shaw, D. D., was present and was heartily invited to sit as a corresponding member, also the Rev. Messrs. S. B. Brown and W. S. Hester, colored Baptist ministers, were invited to sit as visiting brethren. The Rev. W. P. Robertson tendered his resignation of the pastoral charge of the Leaksville Church, and the Church cited to show why the relation be not dissolved. The Rev. Dr. T. M. McConnell and Rev. C. W. Erwin were granted permission to labor out of our bounds.

Certificates of dismissal were granted to Rev. A. W. Crawford and Rev. J. McI. Wicker to unite with Fayetteville Presbytery, and to Rev. C. E. White to Mecklenburg Presbytery. The pastoral relation between Mr. White and the Roxboro Church was dissolved.

A call from the Graham Church for Rev. E. N. Caldwell, of Nashville Presbytery, was presented, approved, and certified, and permission granted to prosecute the same.

The Rev. W. Boyd Goebel, of the "Convention of Louisiana Congregational Church," was invited to sit as a visiting brother. Mr. Goebel afterwards presented a certificate of dismission from the aforesaid Church and desired to be received into the Presbyterian Church. He was carefully examined in accordance with the Book of Church Order, and after answering the questions required, he was received as a member of Orange Presbytery and enrolled. Mr. Goebel will have charge of the Madison Church at a salary of $1,000.

The Board of Trustees of the Glade Valley School made a report touching the conduct of Rev. A. R. Woodson, and discharging him as superintendent of the school. The report was adopted and its contents referred to a special committee consisting of Revs. L. T. Wilds, Jr., C. F. Myers, C. E. Hodgkin and Elders F. C. Robbins and J. E. Conrad. Subsequently the committee reported recommending that Mr. Woodson be deposed from the ministry, and after due deliberation, the report was adopted.

The Rev. A. W. Crawford was heard in the interest of the Synod's Home Mission work. The Rev. C. E. Hodgkin was unanimously elected treasurer of the Presbytery.

The "Inter-Church-World Movement," as presented to Presbytery, was endorsed. The campaign in the Synod for $1,000,000 for colleges was endorsed.

The Home Mission Committee made a fine and encouraging report, notwithstanding the drawbacks of war, influenza and high cost of living the past year.

In connection with the Foreign Mission report, the Presbytery enjoyed the delightful treat of hearing our Missionary, Rev. John McEachern, of Korea.

The next stated meeting of Presbytery will be held with the North Wilkesboro Church. The Presbytery adjourned to meet in Winston-Salem on May 9, 1919, at 1:30 o'clock P. M.

On motion the closing prayer of this session had special reference to our President and the members of the Peace Conference, that God might guide them to wise conclusions in the closing days of the great Peace Conference.

D. I. Craig, Stated Clerk.

Jacksonville—Rev. C. Connor Brown recently conducted a series of meetings in this church. The meeting was a great blessing to the Church. Over thirty-five made a profession of their faith in Christ. While there were about one hundred and fifty that reconsecrated their lives to the Master. Seven gave their names to unite with Presbyterian Church, while a number gave their preference for the Baptist and Methodist churches. The meeting was a success considering certain prevailing conditions in the town. Our Synod is indeed fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Brown. He is a forceful and effective preacher. A collection was taken for Home Missions amounting to $60.50.

J. R. P.

GEORGIA.

La Grange—Rev. Thomas D. D. Batemon, of Cape Girardeau, Mo., has been called to the pastorate of the church here to succeed Rev. J. G. Herndon.

West End, Atlanta—The members of this Church held their annual congregational meeting and social on Friday evening, April 4th, at which reports were presented from every department of the church work; all of which indicated a most prosperous condition of affairs. There have been twenty-two members added to the Church during the year on profession of faith and the congregation had contributed a little more than $9,000.00 to all causes. The reports were interspersed by a delightful program of music. This was followed by a pleasant social hour. The Sunday School room had been tastefully decorated for the occasion and delicious refreshments were served.

The pastor, Rev. R. F. Kirkpatrick, and a large delegation from our Endeavor Societies, including the presidents of all three of the Christian Endeavor Societies, attended the State Christian Endeavor Convention at Augusta May 2nd to 4th.

Her Second Honeymoon.

tily, self-conscious. Mrs. Crawford went upstairs and hurriedly changed her dress to a gingham wrapper. Julia and the neat mulatto girl who had been brought in to help with the serving were collecting dishes on the little tables scattered here and there. Mrs. Crawford heard their soft voices blending with the clink of glass. She was reflecting that tomorrow she must begin to pack the wedding gifts, a great responsibility.

"What are you getting ready for now, Edith?" her husband's voice spoke behind her and she started. She had quite forgotten him. For some reason his question with its hint of authority, its suggestion of disapproval, vaguely irritated her.

"I shouldn't think you'd need to ask that, with this house upset from garret to cellar."

"Better leave the girls to straighten things. You're tired out."

"Oh, no, Hugh," she protested, "I'm not tired." A sudden terror of his interference assailed her. He wanted her to sit down, and fold her hands, exposing her defenseless spirit to those furies she had kept at bay so long by ceaseless activity. How was it that he could not see that for her the end of the world had come.

"It's 12 o'clock, Edith."

It was her husband's voice and again her start showed how little he had been in her thoughts.

"I supposed you were in bed and asleep long ago." There was reproach in the look she gave him.

"I'm waiting for you." He stood in the doorway, still in his evening clothes, his hands thrust into his pockets. Abstractedly she noticed his surprising air of youthfulness. Neither of her boys was so good looking as her husband. Unconsciously she had always half resented the fact.

"Don't wait, Hugh. I'm going to slip into the front room for tonight. I'm too nervous to sleep. I should only keep you awake."

Augusta's wedding night! Her flaming cheek pressed against the cool pillow, she stared wide-eyed into the dark. And it seemed only the other day that the nurse had brought Augusta in for her to see, a tiny, red, puckered object which only a mother could have thought beautiful. And now her baby had become a woman and gone the woman's way of love and sacrifice; wifehood with all that path she herself had trodden. They came back to herself, her desolation.

The dazed wonder of her thought crystalized into a definite question. What was she to do with her life? She had thought once, she remembered and thought tragically at the recollection, that the mothers whose children were grown up, and had left home were subdued, chimney-corner creatures, quite content to sit and dream over the past. Her tingling vitality gave the lie to the picture. She was under 50, intensely alive, charged with energy to her finger tips, a woman made for responsibility. And now her life-work had taken wings. The years that stretched ahead of her were as desert sands. She understood how it was that hale, vigorous men after retiring from business, sickened and died, from the sheer lack of something to do.

The night went swiftly. Each time the clock struck, she wondered what had become of the hour since its last warning. The gray light of the dawn stole into the room. She felt feverishly impatient to rise and begin packing Augusta's wedding presents. And then unexpectedly, as she planned the strenuous day, crowded too full of activity to leave time for thought, she fell asleep. When she woke the sunlight flooded her room, and her husband fully dressed, stood in the doorway, thoughtfully regarding her.

Mrs. Crawford started up. "Oh, I've overslept. Why didn't you wake me?" The odor of coffee and bacon made clear the extent of her transgression. "You've had your breakfast?"

"Yes." He advanced and seated himself on the edge of the bed. She realized with vague alarm that he had something definite on his mind. Disquieting suggestions raced through her brain. "Are the presents all right?" she exclaimed.

He ignored the question. "Edith," he said quietly. "I want to take a little trip starting the first of next week. Can you arrange to leave Monday?"

She lay looking at him with an incredulous amazement. "A trip? Leave Monday!"

"Yes."

"But why?"

"Oh, say, pleasure."

She found her voice and her wits together. "It's out of the question, Hugh. If you feel like a little change, probably Mr. Mason could arrange to go with you for a fishing trip. Or they're always glad to see you at Uncle Andrew's."

She paused. Her husband was more docile than the children. As a rule he accepted her suggestions without argument. Now he shook his head.

"That won't do. This time you'll have to go along."

"Me? It's impossible, Hugh. Everything has been set aside and put off until Augusta's wedding was out of the way. It can't make any difference whether—"

"It makes all the difference," he interrupted her gently. "This isn't an ordinary jaunt. It's our wedding trip."

"Our wedding trip! Do be serious."

"I never was more serious in my life." The sudden intentness of his gaze convinced her that he spoke from a strange fullness of heart. "Is it possible that you don't realize that we are starting at the beginning?"

"I don't know what you mean." There was apprehension in her answer, as well as appeal.

"It's twenty-five years Monday since Rodney came. And Ruth was next. They were pretty close, those babies, and you were a wonderful mother from the start. I don't take any credit for the way they have turned out. I earned the money you needed for them, and backed you up when you wanted my moral support and shared the griefs and joys as they came along. But the honor of making our boys and girls what they are all belongs to you."

She had gone through the strain of the previous day without a tear and even the torturing night had left her dry-eyed. Now she looked up at him with eyes frankly wet.

"That's very nice of you, dear," she said with a little laugh, "But I don't understand—"

"Wait, Edith. I'm not blaming you, God knows. It's not easy to crowd two absorbing interests into one life. But didn't you ever realize that I was lonely?"

"Lonely!"

She stared at him blankly. Under the kindness of his regard she felt a strange reproach.

"It's always been the children," he said. "When have we had a talk for fifteen years that wasn't about them, directly or indirectly? You've read up a little on engineering, so as to be somewhat familiar with Guy's interests. But what do you know of mine?"

"Hugh!" she gasped. In this strange mood he seemed almost a stranger. His next words coincided strangely with her flashing thought.

"I was 25 when Rodney was born, a mere kid, we'd think now, undeveloped, undisciplined. I'm not the man you married, my dear, but you haven't found it out. Ever since the babies began to come along I've been to you their father, and not much else. We're a million miles apart."

"You mean," she began but could not finish. Her ebbing color finished the sentence. He gave her a half whimsical and wholly winning smile.

"No, my dear, I'm not making this the preface to a confession. As far as I'm concerned, you're the only woman. I want to fall in love with you, and marry you and carry you off and start to get acquainted. I've learned something since our other wedding trip, that I've wished I'd known earlier, but better late than never. It isn't right to become so engrossed in any business as to forget you're an individual. And that's equally true whether your business is selling real estate like mine, or being a mother like yours."

"We've made a mistake, both of us," his steady voice

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Mrs. E. J. McLaughlin.

Passed by the Woman's Auxiliary of Raeford Presbyterian Church.

Whereas, it has pleased Our Heavenly Father in His wise Providence to call our beloved friend and co-worker, Mrs. E. J. McLaughlin, therefore be it resolved

First: That while we deeply mourn our loss, we bow in humble submission to His most holy will.

Second: That in the death of Mrs. McLaughlin the Woman's Auxiliary of Raeford Presbyterian Church lost one of its most faithful and devoted members.

Mrs. McLaughlin was one of the charter members of our society, and through all these years she has set for us a high standard of zeal, self-sacrifice and Christian living.

She was interested in every department of our work and proved her faith by her work.

We feel deeply our loss.

We shall miss her wise counsel, her prayers and her devoted service.

Of her we can truly say, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest upon their labors, and their works do follow them."

May a double portion of her spirit fall upon us, and may we follow her as she followed Christ.

Third: That we extend to her beloved family our heartfelt sympathy.

Fourth: That the secretary be ordered to spread these resolutions in the minute book of the society, published in the local and church papers, and a copy sent to her family.

Mrs. Luke Bethune,
Mrs. F. A. Nisbet,
Mrs. J. W. Currie.

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY.

It is with a heart full of love and sympathy that we, the Woman's Club of Ingold, have this way of expressing our sincere and deep sympathy to our club sister, Mrs. Henry Sloan, in the loss of her devoted and loving companion, Dr. Henry Sloan.

Whereas God, in his infinite wisdom saw fit to remove from our community our most beloved physician, Dr. Henry Sloan.

He was kind and gentle, never denying any one his services, but always willing and anxious to go to the relief of the suffering. He had practiced in our community forty years, and had endeared himself to every one.

It was at the bedside of one of our club women that he was stricken, and in three weeks, God, who never makes a mistake, called him home.

Therefore, be it resolved, (1) That we, the Woman's Club of Ingold, feel the loss of this good and kind physician. We feel that his place is hard to fill. But glad that he let his mantle of usefulness fall on his two young sons, who are both very promising physicians.

(2) That we hereby express to his family and relatives our heartfelt sympathy in this, their sad hour of bereavement.

(3) That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy spread on our minutes; and a copy sent to the county papers and the Presbyterian Standard.

Mrs. W. I. Wright,
Mrs. A. F. Johnson,
Committee.

IN MEMORIAM.

Rev. W. B. Arrowood, D. D.

Whereas, in His Wisdom, God has seen fit to remove Rev. W. B. Arrowood, D. D., from his sphere of earthly labors to the Heavenly home of eternal rest and peace and joy and sacred fellowship, be it resolved:

First: In the death of Dr. Arrowood we have lost a former pastor who was a very faithful and efficient teacher and preacher of the gospel of our Savior, a cheerful and sympathetic counselor and friend. For a decade with intense earnestness and zeal he shepherded us; by word of mouth and a life replete with good deeds. This devout man of God won our hearts and our lives to a consecrated service. When called to other fields of labor he never seemed to lose his love for Bethel Church, rejoicing with us in our progress and weeping with us in our sorrows. His influence abides and ever shall we feel it—inspiring us to higher and nobler aims, and to right convictions approaching we trust those for which he stood.

Second: While our hearts are grieved at the thought that we shall not again see the earthly face of this earnest servant of Christ, we extend our sincere heart-felt sympathy to the bereaved family and commend them to the only true comforter.

Third: That these resolutions be spread on the sessional record of Bethel Church, a copy be sent to the family and that they be sent to the religious newspapers for publication.

THE "PROMISSORY" BIRTHDAY PRESENT.

It was out in the tool house where Toggles and grandpa had most of their week day conferences (on Sundays it was usually in the hammock); and if you had been one of the chickens outside the door and could have heard what was said, you would have appreciated that it was an important conference.

"I don't suppose mother is well enough for a birthday party," said Toggles.

"I'm afraid not," answered grandpa.

They did not talk any more about that; there was no need to make each other sad by reminding each other of it.

"But of course we can give her presents," suggested Toggles.

"Certainly."

"You know, grandpa, I've thought a good deal about that. I would like to give her something very expensive, like a gold watch or a diamond ring or something like that. Only of course she has a watch, and she likes the ring father gave her better than she would any other, no matter how much it cost; and, anyhow, I haven't got very much money, not near enough to buy jewelry or anything like that."

"I don't believe mother would care a great deal for jewelry," commented grandpa.

"Maybe she wouldn't. There's candy, though; she likes that a little. I might get a box of candy."

"Yes." Grandpa stopped to drive a nail into the new chicken coop he was making. "But I never saw mother with a box of candy that she didn't give away a great deal more of it than she ate herself."

Toggles nodded. He knew that too, now that he stopped to think.

"Besides," grandpa continued, "grandma, you know, is planning to have a chicken for dinner, with custard for dessert—nutmeg on top and in the little glass bowls, you know—and then for supper, warm biscuits and maple sirup; and I really believe mother likes custard and maple sirup better than she does candy."

"Grandpa," exclaimed Toggles, "what would you get her if you had thirty-eight cents? What can I buy that she would really like?"

Grandpa laid down his hammer and gave his whole attention to the matter. "Why do you buy her anything?" he asked.

"Why, grandpa, I've got to give her something—that is, I don't mean I've got to, but—"

"You wouldn't need to buy it."

"No-o. I could make something, maybe. But would that be as nice?"

"I think it would be better if you made what I am thinking about."

"What is it?" Toggles demanded.

"Well," answered grandpa, "I wouldn't think first about the thirty-eight cents. I would begin by asking: 'What can I give that would please mother the most?' And I think I know."

"What is it?"

"Sometimes," grandpa began, "I have heard mother say, 'It's time to go to bed now,' or 'Can't you let Mabel play with the blocks for a while?' or 'Better put on your shoes now' when you want to go barefoot, you know; and always of course you did what mother asked you to do, but you did not always do it right off and as if you wanted to do it."

"I know," admitted Toggles.

It was not at all a pleasant topic to talk about, and he did not see what it could possibly have to do with mother's birthday.

"Well, now," grandpa continued, "I know, because I was a father long before I was a grandfather, that there is nothing makes fathers and mothers so happy as to have children mind right away as if they enjoyed it more even than having their own way."

"I know, grandpa," Toggles confessed, "and I mean to mind that way always, but you see I forget—"

"I know just how that is, and that's where the present comes in. Do you remember the day we bought the pigs—of Mr. Salow? And the piece of paper I gave him that I told you was a promissory note?"

Toggles nodded. He remembered all about it.

"Now if I should forget that I owe Mr. Salow that thirty dollars, he would just show me that piece of paper, and I would remember and pay him. What if you gave mother, for her birthday, something that she could show you to remind you? Well, suppose that you and Mabel were fussing a little bit; you know sometimes you do; and suppose Mabel were all in the wrong; you know sometimes she is. Mother might show you your present, and you would stop right then and there and give Mabel the croquet mallet or the next turn in the swing or whatever it was, not because Mabel deserved it, but because that would be your birthday present to mother, and you would know that it would please mother not to have any more fussing."

Toggles did not at first quite understand it, but they talked a long while about it, and after supper Toggles told grandma the plan, and she thought it was a very good one. It certainly was a great surprise to mother. She never guessed one thing about it; and even when she found it on the tray on which they carried in her breakfast and was unwinding the tissue paper wrapping, she had no sort of idea what it was. What came out of the wrapping was a little booklet, such as Toggles had learned to make in school, with a heavy, gray paper cover, the end tied with a bow of blue ribbon and lettered: "For Mother. From Toggles." She opened it; and inside were twelve little white slips, carefully perforated with a pin along one edge, so that they could easily be torn out, and on each slip, written just as carefully as a six-year-old boy could write it, were these words: "Good for One Cheerful Minding. On Demand. Signed Toggles."

And the best of it was that every one of them was paid as promptly and fully as anyone could have wished—Frederick Hall, in the Beacon.

AFTER SCHOOL.

Oh, mother, can't I have some cake?
Can't Johnny have some pie?
Can't we come in—just us—and take
An apple by and by,
If we both wipe our feet off clean
The way you told us to?
And if we run across Bill Green,
Can't Billy have one, too?

Oh, mother, have you seen my hat,
The one I wear to play?
And, say, ma, where'd I put my bat
And ball the other day?
Can't Johnnie wear my other shoes
Till his own pair gets dry?
Do you care, mother, if we use
Your old broom by and by?

We want to use the broom to sweep
The home plat off, you see.
And, mother, we want you to keep
Our things for John and me
So we won't lose them when we play;
Our knife and marbles, too—
Won't you please put them all away
Just as you always do?

If Billy Green should come and knock
At the back kitchen door,
Tell him we're in the vacant block
Right next to Johnson's store.
And let him have my other shoes—
My old ones—so's to play;
He can't play barefoot or we'll lose;
He's got to pitch today.

And would you care if Johnnie came
To supper when we're through?
If Bill should pitch a dandy game,
Can't I bring him home, too?
If Bill comes to the kitchen door,
Won't you give him some pie,
So he'll be strong and curve 'em more?
Thanks, ma! Good-bye! Good-bye!
—Exchange.

HELP MOTHER NOW.

Said Peter Paul Augustus: "When I am grown a man,
I'll help my dearest mother the very best I can.
I'll wait upon her kindly; she'll lean upon my arm;
I'll lead her very gently, and keep her safe from harm.

"But when I think upon it, the time will be so long,"
Said Peter Paul Augustus, "before I'm tall and strong.
I think it would be wiser to be her pride and joy
By helping her my very best while I'm a little boy."

Her Second Honeymoon.

went on. "For twenty-five years we've submerged our individuality in our children, at least you did, and I stood back and let it happen. And now we've got to face the penalty. I'm 50 and you're 46 and you're out of a job, and I've got to learn all over again to be a husband, not merely the father of a family. We're lucky that it's come now when we're still young enough and vital enough to be equal to a new start."

He stooped to kiss her, then rose. "You'll need a steamer-trunk," he announced masterfully. "And one dinner gown."

"But, Hugh, where are we going?"

"Leave that to me." There was a flashing, boyish mischief in his smile, a note of authority in his voice that made him seem curiously remote. Her eyes followed his departing figure as if it had been that of a stranger. In a sense he was a stranger. How little she had guessed his inward protest against the ordering of his life. She had thought his heart an open book for her reading, but it seemed the man she knew was the handsome boy she had married, not the man with the whitening temples and the dominating eyes. And Monday they would take their second wedding trip and begin as they had begun twenty-six years ago, the business of getting acquainted.

The room grew brighter as the June sun climbed in the heavens. Downstairs the coffee cooled and Julia's temper waxed warm. And Edith Crawford lying motionless, looking before her with unseeing eyes, wondered if in making up the arrears of twenty-five neglectful years, she had not perhaps found her life work.

Albemarle N. and I. Institute.

The officers of the Y. W. C. A. cabinet for the next term have been elected at the Albemarle Normal and Industrial Institute. The cabinet examination was given on Monday, March 31, and the papers were sent to headquarters at Richmond to be corrected. The new cabinet consists of: Mary Frances Alexander, president; Ruth McLeod, vice-president; Agatha Kirk, secretary; Annie Wilson, treasurer; Edna Nesbit, chairman of Social Committee; Mary Lou Grier, chairman of Program Committee; Myrtle Lee, chairman of Publicity Committee; Margaret Gibbs, chairman of Service Committee.

On Sunday, April 9th, the installation services of the new officers was held. The regular Y. W. C. A. installation service with special music was used. Also two addresses were given by the new and old president. The officers and girls were addressed by Rev. W. R. Coppedge, from Rockingham, one of the trustees of the school. His subject was, "The Privileges and Responsibilities of Leadership."

Rev. R. C. Morrison of Bishopville, S. C., is to preach the sermon for the Y. W. C. A. on Sunday morning, May 25th. On the evening of the same day Rev. G. F. Bell, pastor of Knox Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, will deliver the commencement sermon.

We feel that not only the school but the people of the town are to be congratulated upon the treat that is in store for them.

THE HOME OF GOOD FURNITURE

USES OF AN UNOFFICIAL EDITOR.

Dr. Charles Parkhurst is retiring from the editorial control of Zion's Herald of Boston after thirty-two years of unremitting service which assuredly have earned for him the rest that age and invalidism at length compel him to claim. Dr. Parkhurst, who is today easily the dean of the entire fraternity of the religious press in America, has held through all these years of duty the unique position of the only editor in the Methodist Episcopal connection who is not under control of denominational officers. The society which publishes Zion's Herald is composed of Methodists but not of Methodist officials. The paper thus affords its editor privileges of saying what he pleases about bishops and district superintendents and book agents and other dignitaries—and no reader of Dr. Parkhurst's trenchant editorials in any single issue of his journal can have failed to note that he appreciated (indeed, enjoyed) this license. Yet he has never been bitter, violent or even iconoclastic in the spirit or the matter of his criticisms. And he has never been an outlander; he has ever and intensely been a loyal church man—a believer in Christian organization.

The whole career of Zion's Herald under his leadership—as we are sure it will continue to be under the guidance of his brilliant successor, Dr. Dorion—has been a convincing study of the value of a free press in a democratic church. And before those Presbyterians who think that the Presbyterian Church should have an official journalism conclude their dogma as fixed and settled, they ought to give a bit of attention to how and why the Methodist Church with all its noble array of official organs has needed besides this outstanding independent representative.—The Continent.

SAVE YOUR SHOES.

Allen's Foot-Ease, the antiseptic powder to be shaken into the shoes, not only stops the pain of corns and bunions, and gives quick relief to sweating, callous, tired, aching, tender feet, blisters and sore spots, but Allen's Foot-Ease rests the feet, keeps them cool and comfortable all the time, saving the constant wear on shoes caused by nervousness of the feet. Shoes and stockings wear twice as long when you walk in comfort. Try Allen's Foot-Ease today.

Some one has estimated that the people of the United States pay ten million dollars a year in telegraph tolls alone just to add the word "please" to their messages. The price seems high; but when you consider that the returns from an investment in courtesy are respect, friendship and good will in business, you see that it is money well spent.—Presbyterian Witness.

CARE OF THE CHILDREN'S TEETH.

Because the child's first teeth are only temporary many mothers seem inclined to think them of little importance and not worth taking much pains to preserve. That, however, is a great mistake. It is true that the milk teeth are gradually replaced between the sixth and the twelfth years, yet they have very important work to perform. In the first place the child needs them for mastication just as he needs the permanent teeth later. In young children the digestive organs are not so strong as they are later, and the food must be well broken up in the mouth in order that the stomach may be able to take care of it properly. Just as the aged who have lost their teeth often suffer from digestive ills, owing to imperfect mastication, so the child who prematurely loses his teeth usually suffers during the interval before the permanent teeth erupt to take the place of those lost.

The teeth, as organs of speech are necessary for producing many of the consonantal sounds; if the child loses them early, he may acquire a habit of mispronouncing that will persist in later life. But even more important than that is the part the milk teeth play in moulding the jaw and preparing it for holding the permanent teeth. There are twelve more teeth in the permanent set than in the first—three on each side in each jaw—and although the natural increase in size of the jaws provides for the extra number, it is a snug fit. If the child loses his milk teeth too soon, the normal increase in size of the jaws are crowded together, pushed out of line, or twisted, and an ugly and deformed mouth results.

Apart from the question of future ills, there are dangers of infection to which a dirty mouth exposes the child. As a writer in a dental journal has said, there is in the unclean mouth of a child an area of several square feet—including the surfaces of the teeth—covered with filth which, if it were on the face or the body, would cause the mother no little alarm. The mouth is an ideal place for the growth of bacteria—both those germs that produce decay of the teeth and those that invade the body, causing diphtheria, pneumonia, tuberculosis, and other disabling or fatal diseases. The child's mouth deserves as much attention as the adult's, and the toothbrush, the dentifrice and the mouth wash are necessary parts of his toilet equipment. Brushing the teeth regularly morning and night from earliest childhood will establish one of the best habits that a child can acquire.—Presbyterian Witness.

If Christianity were a mere philosophy, you would spin it out of your own brain, and then you would write articles and defend your positions against others, and they would defend theirs against you, and when you got through it would make very little difference whether you or they came out ahead. A great deal of philosophical discussion consists in a trial of wits, in sword-play. If it were a matter of science, you would scrutinize the facts and by a process of induction generalize the laws that express the order of sequence in which these facts occur. Christianity is neither philosophy nor science. A circumstance occurred last night outside of your knowledge, except as somebody conversant with the facts comes to you and tells you the facts. And, upon the assumption that men generally speak the truth, you believe your informant, and you call the recital of the facts "a piece of information" about something that happened outside of your knowledge, and that you never could have known under any circumstances, and that no process of thinking could have ever educed, induced, or deduced; it is a piece of information given to us on the part of God.—Francis L. Patton.

A curious condition obtains among Christian ministers of America, as just reported by one Episcopal bishop, who is among the best known of American Christian leaders, but who must here be nameless. There are applying to him, he says, scores of ministers from other religious bodies asking him to receive them into his Church. He is unable to do so, owing to lack of rectorates for them, but he states that they are so numerous and so insistent that, were there dearth of young men entering the seminaries for a year or two, he believes he could himself fill the demand. Ministers who apply to him are resident in almost every State, and they are in practically every religious body. Asked if any Roman Catholics apply, he replied that not a week passes that some do not, and that they are quite as numerous in proportion as are those applying from other bodies. He does not assume, he says, that his Church is over popular; but rather that there is tremendous unrest among ministers, and that others beside him, in positions where they might place new men, are besieged as he says he is with applicants for admission into their respective churches. He says those applying are by no means young men, nor are they men who have failed in present pastorates. He intimates that were he to give names, which he refused to do, many people would be surprised at the desire of some men to quit prominent pulpits which they now hold.

BARIUM ROCK WATER RELIEVES WEAK AND NERVOUS PEOPLE.

Barium Rock Water is being prescribed by many physicians in the treatment of nervous debility and as a tonic and flesh-builder. They also recommend it in cases of indigestion, dyspepsia, rheumatism, gout, eczema and diseases arising from uric acid poisoning and for disorders of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

Mr. J. W. McCoy, of Charlotte, N. C., writes: "I had a violent case of typhoid fever and for three years was a nervous wreck. I was totally unfit for any kind of business. I suffered continually from my stomach. My improvement began with the use of Barium Rock Water and I was entirely cured."

If you are weak and nervous, if you suffer from melancholia, hysteria or are afflicted with any of the above diseases, send $2.00 for ten gallons. If it fails to relieve your case, we will refund your $2.00. It is understood that the empty demijohns are to be returned prepaid. Address Barium Springs Co., Box E-21, Barium Springs, N. C.

A LESSON FROM THE CASE OF PREACHERS' SONS.

It is astonishing how persistent is the life of a false proverb when once it gets started, especially when men can find in it any sort of comfort for their own failures and short-comings.

There is a proverbial saying about how bad and how worthless are the sons of preachers. The unfounded notion has been quickly accepted by hundreds of people who bear grudges against all preachers because the Gospel condemns their own sins; and by such sinners it has been reiterated with infinite satisfaction. Others accept it all too readily because their own children have been worthless failures, and they, too, repeat it with unctuous confidence. Nevertheless the saying is utterly unfounded in fact, as anyone may know by acquainting himself even tolerably well with any standard cyclopedia of biography.

Compared with the whole number of people, preachers and their families are not a very numerous class; and it would be fair to ask of preachers' homes to produce no more than their just proportion of useful and successful men. But as a matter of fact, from the families of preachers have come a far greater number of men notably useful and successful than from any other class of families in the world. This will be seen, if we begin to call the roll of some of the great men of history.

Among the poets Addison, Coleridge, Cowper, Ben Johnson, Goldsmith, Charles Wesley, Keble, Alfred Tennyson, James Russell Lowell, Oliver Wendell Holmes and James Montgomery were all sons of preachers.

Of the great essayists Matthew Arnold, William Hazlitt and Leigh Hunt may be mentioned as parsonage products.

Of the great artists and architects, both Sir Joshua Reynolds and Sir Christopher Wrenn were the sons of clergymen.

Of the great historians Alison, Bancroft, Hallam, Parkman and William Robertson were sons of ministers.

Out of the homes of preachers came the following among the famous scientists: Agassiz, Linneaus, Wollaston, Charles H. Hitchcock, Reginald S. Poole, Edward Jenner, John Bell, Johann Encke and Samuel F. B. Morse.

The homes of preachers have been especially fruitful of great preachers, all the following being sons of preachers: John and Charles Wesley, Jonathan Edwards, Robert Hall, John Howe, Norman McLeod, Adolphe Monod, Gardner Spring, Dean Stanley, Archdeacon Farrar, Richard S. Storr, Henry J. Van Dyke, George F. Pierce, Joseph S. Key and Henry Ward Beecher.

The bar has been equally indebted with the pulpit to preachers' families for some of its most brilliant lights such as Lord Ellenborough, Chief Justice of England; Justices Strong, Field, Brewer, Lamar and Hughes, of the Supreme Court of the United States; Samuel Puffendorf and Sir Travers Twiss.

Statesmen in great numbers and of the highest character have been sons of preachers. Among such may be mentioned Henry Clay, Edward Everett, John Hancock, Grover Cleveland, Allen G. Thurman, Judson Harmon, Woodrow Wilson, Cyrus W. Field, Jonathan P. Dolliver, Levi P. Morton and Chester A. Arthur, among American statesmen; and Sir William Vernon Harcourt, Lord Thurlow, Lord Talbot and Balfour, among Englishmen.

It is remarkable that of the signers of the Declaration of Independence nine were the sons of ministers, viz.,

The Art of Preaching

A HISTORY OF PREACHING

Dargan, Edwin Charles, D.D., LL.D.

This monumental record of the great Christian preachers from the Apostolic Fathers down to the end of the 19th century is very much more than a history. The unusual value of the book is in the author's ability to fire the imagination of the minister who reads it, and to teach him how to employ in his work today the enthusiasms and methods of the master preachers of the ages. In two volumes.

Vol. I. Apostolic Fathers to the Great Reformers, A. D. 70 to 1572.

PREPARING TO PREACH

Breed, Prof. David R.

An indispensable guide book for the Christian minister, characterized by originality and practical value, and containing a wealth of suggestions not found in any other similar book. Some of the chapter titles are: "The Attack Upon the Text," "Pulpit Manners," "Originality," "Homiletical Maxims." Seven general kinds of sermons are described and analyzed. This great aid to a successful pulpit delivery should be in the library of every student and preacher.

The names given above are not a tithe of what might be given if an attempt were made to mention even a small part of all the famous men who were sons of ministers; but this list is quite sufficient to show that, far from its being true that the sons of preachers generally turn out badly, it is rather true the world owes more to parsonages for its greatest men than it owes to any other class of homes.

Bishop W. A. Candler.

THE SWEET TOOTH OF THE SOLDIER BOY.

It has been announced by the war department that during the five months from November 11, 1918, to April 11, 1919, there were purchased for shipment to the oversea forces 39,094,375 pounds of candy; 5,350,000 packages of salted almonds and peanuts, and 2,625,000 packages of popcorn confection. It is figured that it would take a convoy of 835 three-ton trucks to carry this amount of candy. This would make a train eight miles long. During the progress of the war we heard much about the incessant craving of our boys for sweets and specially for chocolate. It was impossible because of the congested state of land and ocean traffic to ship to the boys sweets in sufficient quantities to adequately supply their needs, but since the cessation of hostilities the government has been forwarding to our boys sweets in ever-increasing quantity and variety. Every normal man and woman possesses a sweet tooth. The doctors warn us that habitual indulgence in much sweet stuff will ruin the digestion and make us fat and yet when the chocolate and bon bons are passed around we eagerly dip in and forget the doctor and all his sage advice to satisfy the craving of the sweet tooth. Knowing human nature as we do we are not surprised that the Esquimaux followed Dr. Cook resolutely through the Arctic rigors so long as his gumdrops held out. The lure of the gumdrop and chocolate bar has a potency confessed by both young and old. We like sweet things, but we don't like syrupy people. THREE SONGS.

The brilliant, fashionably clad audience roared an ovation to the great singer. She was unquestionably the best soprano in the world. The critic turned to his friend, the self-made millionaire, and said:

"Have you ever heard anything greater?"

"Yes," said the rich man, musingly, for he was touched by the magic of what he had heard. "Yes, I have heard three greater singers."

"I want to know!" exclaimed the critic.

"The first was years ago. The singer was plain of face and gray of hair and tired of body. There was much work to do and many little mouths to feed. I was the youngest child, sick and cross. And that dear singer crooned to me a lullaby and I slept. It was a wonderful song.

"The next was years afterward. We had a little cottage. It was summer and the windows and doors were open. My wife was in the kitchen preparing supper. She was singing something about her true love coming to her. It was for me. And that, too, was a wonderful song.

"Some more years elapse. There is a little toddler in the garden and she sings hesitantly something about daddy and his baby.

"These are the three singers, my friend, who beat all your Tetrizzinis."

And the critic? Well, perhaps the critic agreed with him.—Albany Times-Union.

TIM MURPHY AND LAUGHTER.

Tim Murphy, at a supper in his honor recently, was called on to respond to a toast, "Laughter," which he did in these terms:

"Here's to laughter, the sunshine of the soul, the happiness of the heart, the leaven of youth, the privilege of purity, the echo of innocence, the treasure of the humble, the wealth of the poor, the bead of the cup of pleasure. It dispels rejection, banishes blues and mangles melancholy, for it's the foe of woe, the destroyer of depression, the enemy of grief; it is what kings envy peasants, plutocrats envy the poor, the guilty envy the innocent. It's the sheen on the silver of smiles, the ripple on the waters of delight, the glint of the gold of gladness. Without it humor would be dumb, wit would wither, dimples would disappear and smiles would shrivel, for it's the glow of a clean conscience, the voice of the pure soul, the birth cry of mirth, the swan song of sadness. Laughter!"—Exchange.

ANOTHER "MOTHER OF PRESIDENTS."

New York Republicans are going to boom a New Yorker for the Vice-Presidency, but name no names. New York has had better luck in the Vice-Presidential line than even Indiana, which gets away with such a large proportion of the nominations for the second place. During President Wilson's first trip to Europe to attend the Peace Conference he gave away about $2,000 in tips. That is a small sum as compared with the $20,000 that President Poincare of France gave the Czar's servants when he was visiting Petrograd, but President Wilson's tips came from his personal bank account. When he learned in Rome that it is the custom for every visiting ruler to give $10,000 to the poor fund, he had to explain that the State Department did not authorize him to make any present on behalf of the Government.—Exchange.

SCIATICA, NEURALGIA AND URIC ACID

Out of Your System With Shivar Spring Mineral Water.

SHIVAR SPRING AS NATURE MADE IT. NOW PROTECTED BY SANITARY SPRING HOUSE.

The Guarantee.

Think of it! A mineral water of such wonderful blood-cleansing power that it is actually shipped to every state in the Union and even to foreign lands under a positive guarantee that the price will be refunded, should the user report no benefit.

Shivar Mineral Water is unquestionably the greatest of all American mineral spring waters and there are thousands who contend that it is the best mineral water in all the world.

In Rheumatism and in other forms of auto-intoxication such as Sciatica, Neuralgia, Chronic Headache and Uric Acid Diathesis, Shivar Mineral Water has succeeded where every known medicine had failed. Physicians attribute this to its peculiar power of dissolving and completely washing out of the system the leucomaines, or body poisons that cause these diseases.

Delightful to drink, wonderful in its blood-cleansing power, Shivar Spring Water may be shipped any distance, at any season, without losing its virtues in the slightest.

Though a thousand miles away, you may use it in your home with identically the same results, as if you drank it at the Spring.

The Results.

Read the following letters which are fair samples of tens of thousands that are received at the Spring, then accept Mr. Shivar's guarantee offer. It gives you the equivalent of a three-week's visit to his celebrated Spring, with no charge for the water should you report no benefit. Sign your acceptance on the coupon below.

Napoleon Avenue Church, New Orleans, Where the Assembly is Meeting This Week.

City Park, New Orleans

Editorial

The Approaching General Assembly.

THE Assembly which is meeting this week in New Orleans is charged with matters of grave interest to the Kingdom of Christ; and especially that part of the Kingdom known as the Southern Presbyterian Church. It is the supreme judiciary of this Church, and to it therefore belongs the supervision of all the plans, the enterprises, the institutions and activities of the church. If it had nothing before it claiming its attention save the various departments of Christian service to which the church stands committed and which it is prosecuting with varying degrees of success the Assembly would still be charged with great and solemn responsibilities. Indeed what are known as routine matters in our church courts are the matters of chief importance. It is to wisely manage and promote these that the church finds its prime reason for existence. Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Christian Education—these are the things that are really worth while. No Assembly is likely to have any more important business thrust upon it than to supervise, and to develop into ever enlarging measures of success these enterprises which are as old as the church itself. Yet this is the business with which every Assembly must deal. Hence all meetings of our General Assembly are important occasions.

In recognition of the importance of its work the General Assembly has invoked the prayers of God's people in its behalf. In 1821, an overture was received from the Synod of North Carolina, which reads as follows:

"Whereas, the General Assembly is the highest and most important judicatory of the Presbyterian Church, and whereas, to obtain the divine blessing on that judicatory must appear to every Christian of our denomination to be a matter of the utmost moment; therefore, Resolved, That this Synod do respectfully suggest to the General Assembly, the propriety of recommending to all the churches under their care to observe annually the afternoon, or evening previous to the meeting of that body as a season of special prayer to Almighty God for His blessings; that He would of His infinite mercy condescend to superintend and direct all their measures, deliberations and decisions, so that all may redound to the promotion of His own glory, and the general prosperity of that particular Church to which we belong." This overture from the Old North State was adopted. That was ninety-eight years ago. It was before the division had occurred which split the Assembly into Old School and New School. That overture expressed the sentiment of the undivided Church.

From that day till this, the General Assembly has confessed its need of the prayers of all the Christians under its care. In the minutes of our own General Assembly there is recorded afresh every year the appeal of this overture for the prayers of God's Children. The special time specified by our Assembly is the Sunday immediately preceding the meeting of the Assembly. But the spirit of the overture is that Christians under care of the Assembly should make continuous supplication to God that He would preside over and guide the Assembly during all of its sessions. Now is the time and during the coming week is the time when all our people should remember in their prayers the supreme judicatory of our Church.

It is to be feared that we will not pause and reflect seriously on our supreme duty and privilege in this matter. Do we really believe in the efficacy of prayer? Do we believe that by earnest and concerted prayer we can secure God's blessing on the Assembly in the way of special inspiration, direction and control? If we do, then it behooves us to seek this blessing by the way which the Assembly points out to us. The first General Assembly of the church which met in Jerusalem, the proceedings of which are recorded in the 15th Chapter of Acts, reached its decision by the same method employed in our General Assemblies today, that is by a free and frank discussion, open alike to teaching elders and ruling elders. So confident were the members of that Assembly of the presence and co-operating agency of the Holy Spirit that they did not hesitate to preface their decision with the statement: "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us." Have we not ground for a like confidence? If we are moving in the line of Christ's commands, He says "lo, I am with you always." Can we not claim that in the general work of our church we are striving to finish the work which He gave us to do? With great confidence, then, we should plead for and claim his co-operative presence. If our prayer is answered, all will go well. He can guide the young and inexperienced members, and through them as well as others bring to pass the issues which will be most for His glory.

The Union Seminary Commencement.

The old students under Dabney will remember with affection Turretin, and also his favorite expression, "Distinguo."

I must begin therefore with a "distinguo"—and guard against confounding Union Seminary in Virginia and Union Seminary in New York, for they are as wide apart as the poles. Ordinarily when one visits the scenes of his childhood and youth, he imagines that everything has shrunk.

Returning to these scenes of my Seminary life I find that everything is larger. I do not refer to the grounds and buildings, because they are not the same, the Seminary having changed its "local habitation," but not its "Name," since I went forth to try my gifts.

Of course the grounds and buildings are better than what we had—for our days were strenuous ones, coming in the wake of war that left the entire country prostrate.

Neither do I refer to the faculty—for comparisons are always odious. Those men of our day were great men and those of us who were permitted to sit at their feet can never be thankful enough for the impression made upon us.

The men of the present day were young students then, but in their subsequent life they have done credit to their Masters, and among their contemporaries in the theological world they stand like Saul of old, head and shoulder above. I refer to the Seminary advantages, as shown in the courses given and in the various advantages that have come by reason of the advances of science and the inventions of men. Of the Directors and Trustees I shall say little at present, except that they are men of wide vision, sweet spirit and generous impulses, who seem intent upon building up a Seminary of which the entire Church may be proud.

The student body by reason of war numbered the past session only 105, taking the course whole or in part.

I was impressed by their appearance as they stood to receive their diplomas.

They were clean-cut, intelligent young men, a rare combination for the most part, of spirituality, intellect and muscle. In their report to the Trustees the faculty bore testimony to the peculiar excellence of this class.

We can only trust them to the Lord's guidance, and pray that in this age of craving for the new in theology, they may not get the progressive bee in their bonnets, and rush in where angels fear to tread. Owing to domestic reasons the Trustees were quartered in one of the dormitories and had their meals in the refectory.

The old students will note that among the changes from the past these innovators have dropped the euphonious name of mess hall and dubbed the chow-house the refectory, thus showing the taints of Romanism, notwithstanding the warnings of the "Menace."

When we preachers once more sat cheek by jowl around one common board, partaking of uncommon fare, as compared with the past, we felt that we had renewed our youth, like the eagle's.

In my boyhood days the pronunciation of the word, tomato, was the test, whether a newcomer was a Yankee, just as "Sibboleth" proved a man to be an Ephraimite in the days of the Judges. In my wanderings West and my long sojourn in the dear "Old North State," my soul has been continually vexed by hearing that same to-may-to sound.

Imagine, then, my delight when I was asked to have some to-martoes. Of the students, past and present, 116 were in the war work, and of these two counted not their lives dear unto themselves. The present student body remained at home, but not in idleness. Owing to the high cost and scarcity of labor, they became as servants, cleaning their rooms, looking after the lawn and hedges, and attending to the furnaces, thus preparing themselves for the coming ages when the paterfamilias will have to divide his time between his study and the woodpile.

Among other improvements over the past may be noted the appointment of a business manager and treasurer.

Mr. Wm. R. Miller fills that office, and by his most excellent combination of tact, watchfulness and economy, has added much to the comfort of the President and to the buying power of our shrinking dollar.

He is also the "Vade Mecum" of the Board of Trustees.

Another change from our day, and a great improvement notwithstanding that fact, is the conferring of the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon those only who have won their spurs.

In the past and even now, these degrees were scattered around with a free hand and often lit upon those whose merits were "in potentia" rather than "in actu," of whom the writer is one of which.

Henceforth there should be some way of separating the sheep from the goats. We were born to this honor as Paul was to the citizenship, but the Seminary D. D. can say, With great labor obtained I this honor.

After the commencement exercises there was a class reunion with its invariable accompaniments, a banquet with speech-making.

One of the redeeming features of this after-dinner speaking is the fact that old stories are not regarded as having a chestnut flavor, and a man can trot out his most threadbare anecdote, confident that when compared with the prosaic speeches it will be as fresh as the early dew. Dr. W. T. Thompson, Jr., of Knoxville, Tenn., delivered an address on the Dignity of the Ministry, which gave great pleasure to his many friends. No subject could have been more timely and few could have treated it better.

Dr. Moore, the President, is a most versatile man, reminding one of Dr. Moses Hoge in his palmy days. It is impossible to catch him unprepared. Sometimes the suddenness of the attack may momentarily surprise him, but he will ramble around in the fields of the past, regardless of continuity of either subject or thought, while with his thinking faculties he is marshalling his forces, to sweep everything before him.

We do not wonder that his students both love and admire him.

We ourselves have been caught in the same current.

J. R. B.

Placing the Responsibility.

The problem of what to do with the Kaiser and upon whom to place the blame for the war has long been a puzzling one. Of course, the crossroads statesmen and curbstone orators have long ago settled it to their own satisfaction, and even among more intelligent people, it has been considered a question with only one side.

Upon first thought nearly every one would think that the Kaiser alone should be held responsible.

It seems, however, that there is by no means full agreement on that point. It is reported that Mr. Lansing, Secretary of State and a member of the Peace Conference, together with his associates, oppose capital punishment for the Kaiser on the ground that he is not legally responsible, as all of the German people were partners of his guilt, and he being their Head was merely carrying out their wishes.

The Japanese members are said to take the same view.

We hesitate to question the opinion of such authority on law as the Secretary of State, but to the average mind it would seem that while he was the Head of the German people, he was also their leader, and that without his lead, the war would never have begun.

Of course he could not be tried for making war, but for the manner in which he allowed war to be carried on. He, however, is not the only offender. Those in authority in the Army, Navy and State Department were all partners in the crime.

What is needed to avoid a repetition of the awful horrors, is by concrete example, to teach men that no man can turn himself into a savage and hide behind military necessity—but each one must be held responsible for what he authorized.

"A Monument More Enduring Than Brass."

Two of our young ministers and ten of our candidates for the ministry laid down their lives in the late war, a record that is in keeping with the history of our Church in all ages.

These fallen heroes are receiving, as they fully deserve, ample praise from men. Words, however, are cheap and easily forgotten, and as time dulls our memory, soon their sacrifice will be forgotten, or else only to be found in some history.

Dr. Sweets suggests that in addition to our words of praise, we perpetuate their memories by establishing a fund to help students in their education for the ministry, through all coming years, or else establish a memorial fund in behalf of aged ministers and their families.

In the time of our old friend, Quintus Horatius Flaccus, men were seeking a "monument more enduring than brass," because they realized that nothing was more ephemeral than fame.

The Students' Loan Fund, or Fund of Ministerial Relief, constitute such an enduring monument.

You may die and your memory fall out of men's minds, but the good done goes on forever. Each year a needy and worthy young man is helped, or the path of a faithful servant of God is brightened as the shadows of life grow darker.

When at the great day we all see what our life has been and what good we have done, there will be little in our life of which we shall be prouder than the fact that we have had some share in proclaiming through another the Gospel of our Lord, or brought comfort to some aged saints when his days of working were past.

Beautiful New Orleans

Where the Assembly is Meeting This Week.

NEW ORLEANS is often called the convention city, so numerous are the gatherings held within its bounds. This week the thoughts of Southern Presbyterians are turning to this great city at the mouth of the Mississippi, for within it are being held the sessions of the General Assembly of the church.

New Orleans is not a centrally located city and the trip for many of the commissioners will be a long and strenuous one, but so varied and unique are its objects of interest that all would be repaid for the tedium of the journey, even though there were not the honor and responsibility and interest of the convening of our highest court as an incentive and a reward.

A Tale of Two Cities.

New Orleans presents attractions for every taste and every man may find in her varied objects of interest just what he is looking for. Is one interested in a modern and beautiful American city? He finds it here on a tremendous scale. No more modern mercantile houses, office buildings, business corporations; no more up-to-date city railway system; no more beautiful and palatial hotels and residences can be found in any city than are found in New Orleans.

Is one interested in the artistic and the beautiful? Parks and squares, perfect in appointment, with handsome statues of famous men, whose noble beauty stir the heart, especially of the Southerner, are dotted over the city. Graceful palms and shrubs shade the streets and complete the lawns, and gorgeous flowers delight the eye at every turn.

But is one romantically inclined or does he enjoy turning back the pages of history and taking a peep at "ye olden days?" Then New Orleans is the city of all others that will appeal to him.

Canal Street, the city's main thoroughfare, divides it into two distinct parts. On one side we have the modernly equipped city, on the other a distinctively old-world city full of places of romantic and historic interest.

"French Town."

"French Town," as this part of New Orleans is called, is well named. One hears the language as he walks along the narrow streets, enjoys the fare in the little eating houses and wine shops, sees the architecture in the graceful balconies, and the long narrow windows of the residences, and more especially in the beautiful lines of the noble cathedrals.

The very atmosphere changes as one crosses Canal Street. Instead of an American city and the year 1919, one lives and moves in a French city and in a French city of many, many years ago. Standing within the shadow of large department stores, business blocks and other monuments of American Modernism, such odd little places may be found as the Old Absinthe House, in days gone by the rendezvous of the pirate Lafitte and his faithful band; or lovely old court yards may be penetrated where fountains and statuary, green grass and brilliantly hued flowers, have held time at a standstill for a century.

Built on a Large Scale.

Everything in New Orleans is built on a magnificent scale. The city itself occupies an area of 196 $\frac{1}{4}$ square miles. It ranks already as second port in the United States in combined exports and imports. Geographically and strategically it is the mistress of the Gulf of Mexico, and situated, as it is, at the mouth of the greatest of earth's waterways, it is the logical link between the Middle West and the Far East. Its harbor, embracing some forty-six miles of perfect anchorage, is only a little more than a hundred miles from the open sea, yet just far enough away from it to be free from any danger of storm or tidal waves, and is well able to care for the trade and commerce of centuries to come. It boasts the largest cotton warehouse in the world and a visit to its sugar wharf would convince one that every sweet tooth in the world might be satisfied from the barrels of "sweetness" lying ready to be shipped from this great port.

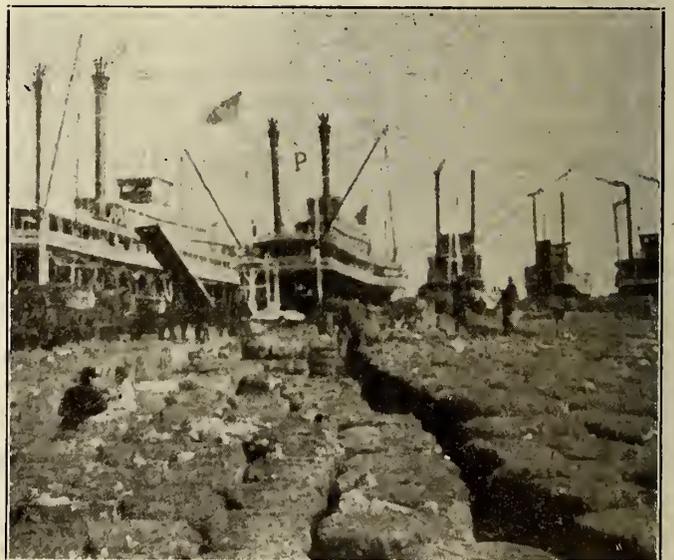

Public Buildings.

New Orleans is rich in libraries and museums. Near the Lee Circle, in which stands a handsome bronze statue of General Robert E. Lee, is the Public Library, an imposing building of gray stone. It contains a collection of 100,000 volumes, 7,000 of which are in foreign languages.

Two buildings of great interest to all lovers of history are the Howard Memorial Library and the Confederate Memorial Hall. The Howard Memorial Library contains many peerless historical works and books of reference, dealing with the colonial, ante-bellum and Civil War days, amounting in all to 50,000 volumes. The Confederate Memorial contains a wealth of historical relics relating to the conflict between the North and South.

Educational Institutions.

In the matter of education New Orleans also stands high. Besides a good public school system, it is the home of the Sophie Newcomb College for women, and Tulane University, whose fine equipment and splendid patronage make it one of our most renowned Southern universities.

Cotton Wharf, New Orleans

Presbyterianism.

But to no commissioner would a sketch of the Assembly's meeting place be complete without a word about Presbyterianism within that city. The Presbyterian Church is said to be the strongest Protestant denomination within this Catholic stronghold.

The old First Church dates its beginning over a hundred years back and its history is a most honorable one. It has been served by excellent ministers and for many years had as pastor Dr. B. M. Palmer, one of America's most famous preachers. That the denomination is a strong one is evidenced by the beautiful houses of worship situated in various parts of the city. Prytania, Carrollton, Napoleon Avenue, Esplanade, and First Street, as well as the original First Church, are all beautiful specimens of architecture. A glance at the names of the present leaders in the work is convincing: Summey, Cornelson, Alexander, Caldwell, Mooney, Voss, Ziemer, and Land. Truly, "there's a reason" why Presbyterianism is both popular and aggressive in New Orleans.

Napoleon Avenue Church.

Napoleon Avenue Church in which the sessions of the Assembly are to be held has a new building, completed the past year. It is beautiful and modern in every particular.

This church was organized in 1850, a small mission chapel, by the Missionary Committee of the Presbytery of Louisiana. In 1870 it was moved to Napoleon Avenue and Coliseum Street, the present site. The first building was dedicated September 28, 1873, and the dedicatory sermon was preached by Dr. B. M. Palmer of the First Church. This building was used until the present beautiful one was completed in 1918.

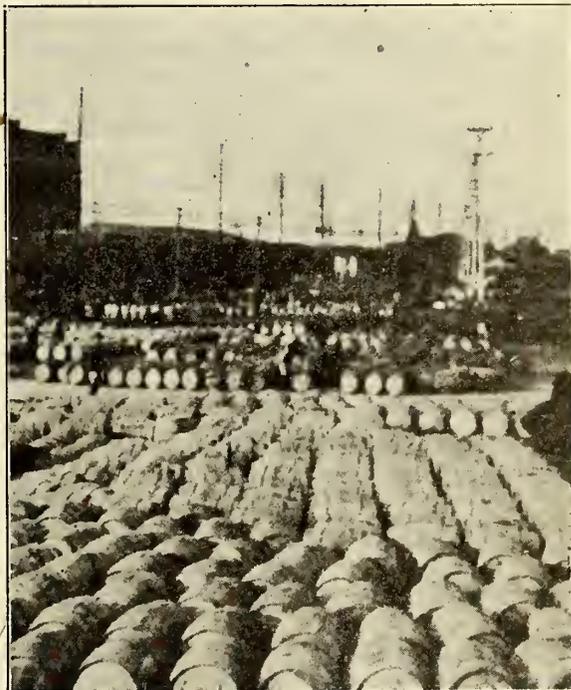

Rev. U. D. Mooney, D. D., Pastor Napoleon Ave. Church

The following pastors have served this church: Rev. Benjamin Wayne, 1861-1879; Rev. Robert Q. Mallard, D. D., 1880-1904; Rev. Henry W. Burwell, Ph.D., 1904-1909; Rev. Geo. D. Booth, 1910-1912; and the present beloved pastor, Rev. U. D. Mooney, D. D., since 1913.

The Assembly.

The Assembly convenes Thursday, May 15, with the sermon by Dr. James I. Vance, the retiring Moderator. As this great body gathers to deliberate on and discuss the matters pertaining to the Kingdom, it should be supported by the prayers and the interest of every member of the Southern Presbyterian Church. These are our representatives; let us be much in prayer for them during these days of convention. S. W. G.

Prayer Meeting Attendance Contest in Central Texas Presbytery.

By Rev. W. R. Minter, D.D

Following an address on Church Publicity before Central Texas Presbytery in its recent spring session, there was launched a campaign for increased attendance at prayer meeting. It is in the form of a contest for the largest percentage of attendance during May and June upon the mid-week service. Eight churches, as follows, entered the contest: First Waco, Second Waco, Gatesville, McGregor, Temple, Cameron, Taylor and First Southern, Austin. Percentage will be of the resident membership reported on April 1. Each of these churches will send by postal card to the others a weekly report of the number at prayer meeting, and also per cent. of resident membership, this number is.

Realizing that increased attendance alone does not make a good prayer meeting (however much it may help), each church, we are sure, is endeavoring to use every means to insure along with increased quantity, the equal consideration of increased quality.

The Power of Prayer.

Unless we are much mistaken, there are two things which Christians ought to do. The one is to quit the companionship of a self-indulgent, corrupting "world." The other is to come into closer companionship with Christ. Closer to Christ in godly living. Closer in persevering prayer. And let us not forget, brethren, that it is the close grip which achieves the victory and brings the revival blessings.—Dr. Cuyler.

On the Way to Armenia and Syria

R. E. Magill, Secretary.

IF any of my friends have an ambition to take a trip to Europe and the Near East at this time my first, second and third piece of advice is don't!

In the first place it is almost as hard to get out of the United States as it is for a life term convict to get out of state prison, and when you pass out of sight of the Statue of Liberty your troubles have just begun. Landing at a European port you are suspected of being a German anarchist in the disguise of a relief worker and no matter what your passport says about you, it will take from two hours to two days to fill all the information blanks which require your family history back to the Adamic period, the shape of your nose, color of eyes and declarations without number that you have no intention of giving the tottering thrones of Europe their final shove.

After you have revealed the secrets of your past life and you begin a quiet search for a hotel that is not full and with the help of Scotland Yard detectives, cooks' tour, the police department, and the U. S. Army, you discover there is no such animal.

Our party would have camped in the parks or on the streets in several cities had the Y. M. C. A. not come to our rescue. Just here let me record, not out of gratitude for a place to sleep, but as the result of observation and wide inquiry, that the Y. M. C. A. is the one organization that has been "on the job" throughout this war and it has made a larger contribution to the social, material and spiritual welfare of our boys than all other agencies combined. The criticisms that have been so widely published have had a small basis in the mistakes of a few individuals who were accepted for overseas duty when the Y. M. C. A. was called upon to furnish within about three months' time, nearly five thousand workers, and for jobs that needed men of the most exact technical training and of the highest type of character and executive ability. It would have been marvellous had they secured a 100 per cent corps of workers under such conditions, but after all the criticism has spent its force, the fact remains that the Young Men's Christian Association has rendered the greatest service that an army ever received and they were on the job from the day the first troops were mobilized in training camps and they will be on the transport that takes the last man home from France.

That there has been an organized propaganda to discredit the Young Men's Christian Association is a growing conviction in many minds and the facts will finally come out.

We landed at Southampton, England, and went up to London, where we expected to find arrangements for us to sail for Egypt already made. Transportation is still the big problem in Europe owing to troop movements and the need for space for food cargoes for the suffering millions so we had to change our plans completely and finally secured bookings on a Dutch steamer from Marsailles, France, to Port Said, Egypt. This required a whole week's time, which we spent in London quite profitably, but we almost froze in the unheated hotels and finally left England on March 29th with a four-inch snow on the ground.

We had unusual opportunities to look into the surroundings of our soldiers and to investigate a few phases of church life in the British Isles through interviews with a number of churchmen. Dr. Fort Newton, the brilliant pastor of the City Temple and successor of Dr. R. J. Campbell, was our guest for an afternoon and gave us a frank statement about moral conditions in England as they affect the lives of our soldier boys. We have seen conditions in Southampton that shocked us greatly and found that the civil authorities were blinking at facts that would set an American city on fire.

We made personal visits to various sections where men on leave and in uniform are permitted to go without hindrance, and we interviewed army officers, chaplains, Y. M. C. A. men and privates, and the uniform testimony was that the army is going through a more dangerous period now than when it faced the Huns on the battle fields of France.

It made us sick at heart to see the public drinking-places crowded with soldiers and to see men, women and even young girls in these hell holes drinking without any sense of shame and with the full knowledge that the civil authorities would not interfere.

Shocked readers at home will ask are any of our boys in England and have all military regulations been suspended?

I am sorry to say that thousands of our boys are in England on leave and waiting for transports to take them home, while about 1,500 picked young officers have been assigned to England and Scotland for four to six months' study in the technical schools and universities. I hope they will confine their studies to books.

Our new routing took us through Havre, Paris and Marsailles, so we had an opportunity to see these great French cities at close range.

After our experience in England and knowing that lower moral standards prevail on the continent than in the United Kingdom we were prepared for some unfortunate conditions, but it is not permissible to print what we saw or to describe it before pure-minded audiences.

It is horrible beyond imagination and a blot on Twentieth Century civilization that soldiers from any land should be made to face such conditions as exist in France. Here as in England no attempt is made to control vice and the war has produced a state of affairs that must cause the forces of perdition to howl with joy.

Our army chaplains, the Y. M. C. A. men and the officers are doing what they can to hold our boys but a distinct lowering in morale was inevitable following the signing of the armistice, and six months' idleness three thousand miles from home has made many of the men reckless.

It would be a gross libel to say all our men are yielding to the terrific temptations of this Godless land and thousands will come through clean. But oh the tragedy of the other thousands who will carry home moral and physical wounds more ghastly by far than those inflicted by German shot and shell.

I deeply regret the necessity for painting such a picture and my purpose is not to distress the hearts of the families of our boys but to suggest that every power available be invoked to force the war department to speed up the homecoming of our boys.

The nearer we get to the field of our work of mercy, that is relieving the distress and sore need of the Armenians and Syrians, the more appalling are the stories we hear as to what they have suffered at the hands of the unspeakable Turks.

We sail from Marsailles today, April 4, on an English transport for Port Said, where we begin our task which will take us through Palestine, Syria, Damascus, Beirut, Aleppo, Smyrna, Adana, Tarsus and out to the city of Van and thence by the Black Sea back to Constantinople, where we turn our faces homeward about July 1st.

Marsailles, France, April 4, 1919.

A Correction.

The Christian Endeavor Society has increased very rapidly in the Presbyterian Church of the United States.

The Christian Endeavor World is an excellent paper. In the issue for April 27, under the head of Denominational Briefs No. 3, "The Presbyterians," is this statement:

"The Northern and Southern Churches separated at the time of the Civil War over the question of slavery." Let not this statement go to our young people uncorrected.

Death of Rev. Paul S. Crane and Mrs. Eugene Bell

The following account of the distressing accident in which Rev. Paul S. Crane and Mrs. Eugene Bell, of our Korean Mission, lost their lives comes to us in a letter from Dr. R. M. Wilson, dated March 31st. Dr. Wilson writes:

"Mrs. Bell and Mr. Crane were in Seoul, and as they could not get a flat car, decided to come about half way home in an automobile and then get a car to bring the automobile home. About thirty-three miles from Seoul they had just passed the train and saw it stop at a station. To the left was a cut and a hill, and not seeing or hearing a train in that direction they were just crossing when suddenly the northbound train dashed into them, striking Mr. Crane and Mrs. Bell, who were on the back seat, and killing both of them instantly. Mr. Bell and Mr. Knox were on the front seat. Mr. Bell was only slightly bruised, but Mr. Knox received an injury to his eye which will probably cause the loss of it. He is now in the hospital at Seoul.

"Mrs. Knox, Mrs. Crane, Mr. and Mrs. Nisbet and I went to Seoul the next morning and brought the bodies back to Kwangju, where they were buried on the hill beside Dr. Owen."

A letter from Rev. R. T. Coit, written about the same time, also gives the details of the accident and makes this appeal:

"Prayer is being made continually for Mr. Knox that his life may be spared. This should be a clarion call to the Church at home to recruit our badly depleted force. We are due as a mission sixteen workers, and as Mrs. Crane will return and Mr. Bell may, we will be due at once seventeen or one-fifth of our entire force when it is complete.

Scarcely half of our present working force is on the field, the rest being on furlough or permanently retired. When Preston goes home in June, the Coits will be left at Soonchun to do the entire work outside the medical, while the Nisbets will have the entire work of Mokpo on land, and Kwang-ju has no itinerator until Mr. Knox is restored. We are barely holding the line at a perilous time. Send us reinforcements and lay down a barrage of prayer for our depleted forces."

Mrs. Bell before her marriage was Miss Margaret Bull, of Norfolk, Va., sister of Rev. W. F. Bull, of Mokpo Station, and of the late Rev. G. W. Bull, formerly pastor of the Moore Memorial Church, Nashville, Tenn. She was a woman of unusual gifts in many ways and from the date of her arrival on the field in the year 1904 to the day of her death was a faithful and devoted missionary of the Cross in Korea.

Mr. Crane was the son-in-law of Mr. C. A. Rowland, of Athens, Ga. He went to the field in August, 1916, and was stationed at Mokpo. He had been on the field just long enough to acquire the language and to begin taking an active part in the evangelistic work of the station.

The deep and heart-felt sympathy of our whole Church will go out to the family and friends of the deceased missionaries, and the executive committee of Foreign Missions shares with the Korean Mission what we know will be their feeling of the great and irreparable loss to our work.

A cablegram dated April 2nd stated that Mr. Bell and Mrs. Crane were both expecting to return home at once.

"A Vital Issue"

By Mrs. F. P. Hall.

The article entitled "A Vital Issue" in your paper of April 30 is of much interest. That same "Vital Issue" has for some time past been agitating the minds and hearts of the women of our church. Will you permit me, then, to present some suggestions from a different viewpoint?

Until a short time ago the field of young people's work and organized Sunday school classes was forbidden ground to us. Now the way is clear and we are given such unlimited opportunities that we are almost staggered by the responsibility. It behooves us to consider well before making any radical changes in this branch of our work. A blunder now would be a tragedy.

In the proposed independent "Young People's Presbyterian Auxiliary" there is much to lose and little to gain and it involves endless complications.

When young people are old enough, wise enough and financially able to support a Presbyterian they should join our adult organization.

The chief object of this movement seems to be the capture of the Christian Endeavor Societies organized in our churches. This organization is inter-denominational. It is completely equipped for work and is rendering a service so splendid that any interference on our part is of very doubtful propriety.

The Junior Endeavor is composed of children too young to form an independent auxiliary while the Senior Endeavor is not strictly speaking a young people's society. Among its members are ministers, elders, deacons, Sunday School teachers and most of our active auxiliary officers and workers. For example, in my home auxiliary nearly every officer and nine-tenths of the working members are enthusiastic members of the C. E. What, then, is to be gained by withdrawing these members to form a separate organization? In our own case it would mean the elimination of our local auxiliary simply to form another in place of it with fewer members.

The young people's societies are under the control of the church. They do as nearly as possible what our Presbyterial secretaries ask of them. They make their reports through our Presbyterials and Synodicals, and, except for the State Federation, we can do with them as we will. We are powerless to dissociate them from the inter-denominational State organization without their consent. Would it be wise to attempt it? They are becoming antagonized at the very suggestion.

There is a financial side to this question that should also be considered. Many of our conscientious and consecrated women (Presbyterial and Synodical workers) think there is too much expensive and unnecessary machinery connected with our women's work, that the expenditure is not justified by the results. Why, then, should we give cause for further dissatisfaction by installing new and unnecessary machinery when every dollar is so greatly needed?

Our Synodical has elected a secretary to take charge of this branch of our work. She has spent months in study and prayer over the subject. With the co-operation of Synod and the Women's Auxiliaries she is establishing a school to train young people to carry on the Master's work. Is it not our duty to stand loyally by her and give her a fair trial before agitating other methods of doing the work?

This article is written in no controversial spirit but in the interest of the Master's work and out of loyalty to our present workers.

"They Have Finished Their Course"

By Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D. D., Secretary.

One hundred and eighty-eight of our candidates for the ministry entered the service of the country for the period of the war. These men were assigned to almost every part of the service. In addition to this many of our ministers enlisted and some saw action in the thickest of the fight.

Two of our ministers and ten of our candidates for the ministry laid down their lives. This is a serious thing for the Church at this time when trained, capable leaders are in such demand. It should call for earnest prayer from the hearts of all that the Lord of the Harvest will send forth other laborers to take the place of those who have finished their course.

The hearts of our entire Church will go out in tenderest sympathy to the loved ones who are left behind in these stricken homes. May the consolation of the Gospel be multiplied in their hearts.

IN MEMORIAM

Two of the faithful ministers of our church and ten of our strong, consecrated candidates for the ministry laid down their lives in the service of their country during the recent war.

They went forth under the urge of duty; they counted it a great privilege to fight for justice and righteousness; they fought a good fight; they kept the faith. They have received their eternal reward.

Rev. Thomas McNeill Bulla became a candidate for the ministry under the care of the Presbytery of Fayetteville; he graduated from Davidson College in 1907 and from Union Theological Seminary in 1911; was pastor of a group of churches in the Presbytery of East Hanover. A fellow chaplain in the service wrote to the Secretary, "Chaplain Bulla was wounded severely in service for the men of his regiment, the 116th Infantry, on the field of battle north of Verdun. He died after an operation, October 17, 1918. He was God's noble man, a faithful minister of Jesus Christ, brave and fearless spiritually, morally and physically."

Rev. Herbert Franklin Wager was received under the care of the Presbytery of Dallas as a candidate for the ministry in 1910. He graduated from Austin College in 1915 and from Austin Theological Seminary in 1918. He was ordained by the Presbytery of Dallas as an evangelist on April 11, 1918. He volunteered his services to the country, and was made chief clerk of the headquarters company 322nd Sanitary Train, 97th Division. He found much time to assist the chaplains, camp pastors and the Y. M. C. A. workers in their Christian efforts. He was stricken with influenza while at Camp Cody, New Mexico, and died on December 14, 1918.

William Baxter Anderson, Presbytery of Harmony, in the Sophomore Class at the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, entered the service. Gave his life in the Field Artillery on the fields of France.

Basil Ball, Presbytery of Transylvania, was in the Junior class at Center College, died in France, October 20, 1918, from wounds received in action.

Daniel Johnson Currie, Jr., Presbytery of Florida, in the Junior year of Davidson College, was just preparing to enter the Student Army Training Corps, Junior class. He was seized with pneumonia, and died in October, 1918. Just before the end, he said, "I don't want to die, but I am not afraid. It is all right."

J. M. Currie, Presbytery of Dallas, received the A. B. degree from Austin College in 1916, and the M. A. in 1917; went as Second Lieutenant with the Rainbow Division to France; was wounded twice in the battle of Rheims Mountain, was killed on September 12, 1918, at St. Mihiel. He had planned to enter the Seminary in the fall of 1917.

Eugene Meek Ellison, Presbytery of Dallas, had just completed his course at Austin College; went over as Second Lieutenant with the 26th Infantry. He was killed while leading his company against the enemy near Soissons on July 20, 1918.

Deane M. Orgain, Presbytery of Roanoke, had just graduated from Davidson College; enlisted in the navy, and entered the Training School at Naval Base in Norfolk. He died at the Base Hospital there on Sunday morning, October 20, 1918.

Charles H. Patten, Presbytery of Memphis, had just graduated from the Southwestern Presbyterian University; was assigned to Camp Gordon for training; died in service there.

Daniel Reid Poole, Presbytery of Concord, student in the Sophomore class at Davidson College, was called into the National Army. He was assigned to Camp Jackson, died of spinal meningitis on December 15, 1918.

Pientis G. Thompson, Presbytery of East Hanover, was in business temporarily, expecting soon to enter the Seminary; entered the army early, and died in service in France.

John Henry Wheeler, Presbytery of Central Mississippi, after completing course at French Camp Academy, entered the Medical Department of the Army; was trained at Camp Mills, New York. He died October 10, 1918, while on his way to France. He was buried at sea.

The Young People's Conference, Queens College, June 2-8.

The following outline of program for the approaching meeting of the Young People's Conference, to be held at Queen's College the first week in June, is a positive guarantee of something both entertaining and profitable for any young person who may attend:

Bible Hour, Dr. T. H. Rice, Union Seminary; Foreign Mission Class, Dr. H. F. Williams; Field Secretary, Nashville, Tenn.; Home Mission Class, Miss Eleanora Berry, Literary Editor, Home Mission Department, Atlanta, Ga.; Christian Education, Dr. H. H. Sweets, Louisville, Ky.; Sunday School Work, Dr. Gilbert Glass, Assembly's Superintendent Sunday Schools and Young People's Work; Woman's Auxiliary, Mrs. W. C. Winsborough, Superintendent Woman's Auxiliary of Southern Presbyterian Church, and Mrs. W. B. Ramsay, president of Synodical Auxiliary of North Carolina. Addresses: Dr. C. F. Myers, Greensboro; Dr. A. W. Blackwood, Columbia, S. C.; Rev. S. M. Glasgow, Charleston, W. Va. Also a returned foreign missionary will speak, and we hope Dr. E. W. Smith, now returning home from a visit to our foreign mission fields, will be with us for the Sabbath day. Rev. G. F. Bell will be platform manager.

The Foreign Missionary speaker will be Rev. L. G. Newland, of Korea. Rev. H. C. Hammond, of St. Charles, S. C., will teach the interesting book, "Making Life Count," by Eugene Foster.

In addition to the benefits to be gained from such an excellent program, there will be that wholesome recreation that appeals to young people everywhere. The afternoons will be devoted to recreation on Queens College grounds. Gymnastic games, tennis, basket ball, base ball and other sports will be led by Mr. A. L. Faul, Physical Director Charlotte Y. M. C. A.

Don't forget the date beforehand. Attend the convention and we prophesy that you will never forget the happy experience afterwards.

Words of Truth and Soberness.

No truer words have been uttered concerning the religious press than these by the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World:

"It has the highest political ideals; it is foremost in promoting good citizenship; education; first in establishing and supporting philanthropy. Equally true is it that the most worthwhile portion of the religious element anywhere is that which subscribes to the religious press."

Yet in the face of this declaration by some of the keenest business brains of the country there are thousands of church members who fail completely to appreciate the crucial place of the religious paper. And to this is due the ignorance that often prevails concerning the church and its work.

No greater service can be done the church than for its ministers to do everything within their power to circulate the church paper. Upon this depends to a very large extent the intelligent co-operation of the people in the work of the denomination.—Zion's Herald.

Resignation of Dr. Whaling.

The Board of Directors of Columbia Seminary met at noon May 7th and continued in session two days. They found all the affairs of the Seminary in a healthy and satisfactory condition, and the outlook for the future most hopeful.

Dr. Whaling, feeling that the time had come, in view of the many substantial elements of prosperity with which the Seminary is blest, when he could safely do so, asked to be relieved of the duties of the presidency that he might devote himself more exclusively to the duties of his important professorship and also find time for certain literary work in the sphere of Theology. His insistence was such that the board was constrained to yield to his request.

On nomination of the faculty, the board elected J. O. Reavis to succeed to the office of president. After some deliberation, Dr. Reavis decided that he was unwilling to assume the responsibilities of so important a sphere of service. Whereupon Dr. Whaling was induced, by the unanimous request of the board, with the hearty concurrence of the faculty, to withdraw his resignation and thus restore the former status, with the understanding, however, that he be permitted to employ such assistance as will relieve him of all the duties of the office that can in his judgment be safely devolved on others. A Fitting Memorial.

By Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D. D., Secretary.

The executive committee of Christian Education has received from Mrs. Nellie Walker Nolte $400 for the Student Loan Fund of our Church. This is to be held perpetually as "The Lieut. Robert Walker Nolte and Dorothea Nolte Memorial Scholarship." The gift was made through the Sunday School of the Prytania Street Presbyterian Church of New Orleans, La.

It is in memory of Lieut. Robert Walker Nolte, of the Second Regiment, U. S. Engineers, and Dorothea Nolte. Lieut. Nolte was in the prime of life when he decided to enter the Army of the United States, being twenty-six years of age. He saw much service at the front and fell in the battle of Blanc Mont, France, October 9, 1918. Dorothea Nolte was early called by the King to come to His Beautiful Country. She died June 17, 1913, at the age of thirteen years.

This memorial scholarship of $400 will assist the boys and girls of approved character and ability, from poor Presbyterian homes, who desire to attend our colleges. As soon as possible after graduation, the money will be repaid and will be invested in other lives. Thus throughout the coming years trained, Christian leaders will be sent forth to take our place in the home, the Church, the State, the Nation, and the world.

News of the Week

The third biennial Southern Textile Exposition was opened last week at Greenville, S. C. It is claimed that this is the greatest exposition in the history of the textile industry and is a testimony to the progressiveness of the Southern textile men. The displays included almost every article required in the manufacture of textiles, from bobbins to looms. Every industry affiliated with the textile trade had their exhibits on display. The scope and variety of the exhibits were displayed by a prominent textile visitor today, who declared that a mill could be designed, built and equipped ready for operation, including the offices, by the exhibitors at the exposition.

As the outcome of the petition of the students of the South Carolina University, seeking the removal of the President, Dr. Currell, a clean sheet was given the University of South Carolina, its officers and faculty, and its student body in the report of the organization committee of the board of trustees just made public. This committee, consisting of Governor Cooper, L. P. Hollis, of Greenville, and D. R. Coker, of Hartsville, recently investigated conditions at the University. The report was unanimously agreed upon by the members of the board of trustees, with a few minor and immaterial changes.

The law now requires additional pay for North Carolina teachers. The State Department of Education is receiving reports showing that the various counties are preparing to make the increase. A typical one comes from Gaston county, where increases are provided for in teacher salaries on the basis of from $55 to $75 per month for elementary teachers and from $60 to $75 per month for the assistant high school teachers.

The county levies the full 35 cents school tax that the law allows and then 16 cents for incidentals and buildings and with the funds that the county will get from the State school fund will have $160,806 to spend for the year in school maintenance.

Reformation Day---October 26.

The committee appointed by the General Assembly to suggest a subject for presentation to our people on Reformation Day, which is the last Sunday in October, will recommend that the Assembly select, as the topic for this year, The Edict of Nantes. The story of the issuance of this edict by Henry IV, and its revocation by Louis XIV will bring up the whole history of the heroic Huguenot Church and the present condition and prospects of Protestantism in France, a subject of peculiar and urgent interest at this time.

There are still more than half a million Protestants in France. When the war began in 1914, the old Huguenot Church was a body of considerable size. Its strength was largely in Northern France in the territory overrun by the German invaders. Here were its largest and wealthiest congregations. They have suffered tremendous losses; many of their churches and manses have been destroyed, many of their members have been slain in battle, nearly one hundred of their ministers and theological students lost their lives in action or from sickness while serving in the French army, and many others returned home severely wounded and permanently disabled. Yet these decimated and impoverished churches have

After less than four months' work, the Entente Allies have completed the Peace Treaty, and delivered it to the Germans, who have 15 days for reflection, but not for argument. When one realizes how long other peace conferences took and the momentous issues involved, he is filled with wonder that so much could be done in such a short time. Of course certain editors and crossroads politicians could have done the job in less time, but ordinary men like the "Big Four," required more time.

President Wilson has called Congress to meet in extra session, May 19. He will cable his message to Congress and return later.

Greensboro, N. C., suffered from disastrous fire on May 3, costing one life, that of a negro employed at State Normal College. No estimate has yet been given of the loss.

Senator Moses, of New Hampshire, Republican, has issued a statement urging the nomination of Major General Leonard Wood as the Republican candidate for President in 1920. The New Hampshire Senator said Republicans of the State were preparing to present General Wood's name at the party's National convention.

Colonel Holmes B. Springs, of Georgetown, has made public a telegram from Lieutenant Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, of New York, denying reports that it was proposed to admit Union veterans of the Civil War but not Confederate veterans to membership in the proposed American legion.

Secretary Lansing has issued a statement concerning Finland as follows: "In view of the fact that the people of Finland have established a representative Government, the Government of the United States of America declares that it recognizes the Government so constituted as the de facto Government of an independent Finland."

The fifth and last popular loan of the United States, the "Victory Loan," of $4,500,000,000, has been oversubscribed.

continued their work as best they could through the storm of war, preaching the Gospel to their stricken people in their shell-torn towns and ruined villages, and circulating the Scriptures among their soldiers in the camps and trenches. They emerge from the war stripped of property and diminished in numbers but with the hearty respect and full confidence of their countrymen, many of whom see in Protestantism, the only religion consistent with democracy. It is this that gives them their coign of vantage and their great opportunity.

But in their poverty they need our help. The Interchurch Committee for Christian Relief asks the evangelical churches of the United States for $3,000,000.00 for this work in Northern France and Belgium. Our Southern Presbyterian Church is asked to give $100,000.00 of this amount. Our War Work Council has added this to its budget, and it is earnestly hoped that all our people will help to raise it. Let us remind ourselves of our debt to the martyr church of France, and let us come to her help in this day of her sore need and her great opportunity.

In view of the participation of our church in this movement for the relief of our brethren in France, the history of French Protestantism is a specially suitable and timely subject for consideration in our own observance of Reformation Day this year.

 I Kings 8:54-61; II Pet. 1:1-4.

Our Bible lesson makes it plain that God's promises refer primarily to spiritual benefits. The kind of life, security, and prosperity He promises is spiritual. He has not said we shall not be poor, or sick, or that we shall not suffer bodily death, or His children shall never lack food, and home, and clothing. But He does guarantee that they shall have spiritual salvation and life.

Guarantee of this does not satisfy all men. Some want the temporal blessings. They crave from God financial and physical safety and comfort. They are like the Jews who desired a Messiah that would give them political freedom and worldly power. And because Jesus undertook to show them that God's promise of a Messiah did not contain these things, but spiritual benefits rather, they would not have Him to rule over them.

God promises that we shall have righteousness. He thinks righteousness is a very fine thing. Humanly speaking, He can hardly understand how we wish for other things more than we do for righteousness. He knows its supreme value, and He wants us to appraise it as He does. But often we refuse to do so. We are like little children who deem gilt better than gold. The thing of real value we discount and ignore. Nevertheless, God ends in giving us righteousness, instead of some other things, according to the meaning of His promises.

* * *

God promises that we shall rise from the dead. Our graves shall be opened, and we shall come forth. God has promised there shall be a great stir in our cemeteries on the resurrection morning. He that believeth on Me, tho he were dead, yet shall he live. But when we rise, it shall not be to eat, and fight, and hunt, and work for money, but to a spiritual service and a spiritual fellowship with God. For the promises of God are spiritual.

* * *

God has promised eternal life. He tells us we have it, if we believe on His Son Christ. His honor is pledged to give it to us. He has covenanted to do it, and He never breaks a covenant. Eternal life is not mere existence, but it is existence enriched by fellowship with God. How insignificant is a guarantee of seventy years of earthly prosperity, compared with promise of everlasting blessedness in the form of fellowship with Christ! The things which God promises are the things of real and abiding value. Temporal blessings are worth thinking of only as they may have the power of ministering to the eternal and spiritual part of us. Jesus says if we seek first His Kingdom, other things that we need shall be added. But He Himself will of course be judge of what and how much we really need.

* * *

What promises are precious to you?
 Why did God make promises to us?
 Why should we believe God's promises?

The Prayer Meeting

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING MAY 18, 1919:
 THE GREAT MISSION OF THE CHURCH.

Eph III:8-12.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

The Church of Jesus Christ must of necessity be a great church with a great mission. This because it is His church. She can only lose her greatness by falling away from her allegiance. The more perfectly she comprehends her Lord, the more entirely she subjects her will to His will, the closer her heart beats to His own, the greater she must needs be. The Roman prison could not diminish the glory and the greatness of the Apostle. The inquisition could not destroy the greatness of the true spouse of Jesus. Her mission is as changeless as her Lord's purpose; as great as His love and His passion.

If the veil of the future could have been lifted for Stephen, he would have looked with amazed gladness at the future of the young man at whose feet his murderers threw down their garments. He would, even in that hour of martyrdom, have beheld with gladness "the fellowship of the mystery which from the beginning of the world had been hidden in God."

In Paul's use of the word, a mystery is something long hidden, but now revealed—and this glorious mystery of which Paul speaks here is a new creation—a new order of life and of love and of service. It was not only that the gospel was to be preached to the Gentiles; but that all to whom it was preached and who believed should, whether Jew or Gentile, become a new life and a new power in the world. A new creation. The baptism of the Holy Spirit inaugurates it.

Paul labored "to make all men see what the fellowship of this mystery is." It is a fellowship, a stewardship, a dispensation.

We may also well and nobly labor to the same great end: for unless men perceive this they will know little of the glory of the church. In the light and sweetness and power of this dispensation or fellowship all barriers are swept away, and men come to see the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. So great is this work of bringing men into this fellowship of love and life that Paul sees astonishment even in the heavenly places at this triumph of God's wisdom and grace. These "principalities and powers," as Paul calls them, are constantly enlarging their knowledge especially of God: and a vast area of light was added to their comprehension of God when they saw the amazing grace of God as poured forth upon the church.

A Savior for sinners! God's eternal and ever blessed Son living, serving, blessing, dying and rising from the grave; all to testify divine love and grace—this is the inauguration of a new thing even to the principalities and powers. A new thing and a great thing. A thing that makes men great. The sinner can not be too far away; crime can not bar the entrance of divine love; racial barriers, barriers of cast—nothing can withstand the mighty power of this gospel.

Now the church is the product and the servitor of this gospel, and she partakes of its greatness, in proportion as she yields herself to its spirit and lives upon its manna.

Then indeed she is beautiful. Then indeed she is invincible. The sword of the Lord is in her hand—and it is a light to lighten the Gentiles and the ancient people of God; a light to shatter the darkness and the slavery and the shame of faith falsely held, of superstitions age long and pitiless.

O that we could make all men see the glory and the strength of the Zion of God. "Ye are the light of the world," says Jesus. In the light of consecrated, happy, useful lives men will see the greatness and the great mission of God's church.

THE GRACE OF GOD.

Golden Text—Acts 15-11: "But we believe that through the grace of Our Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they."

Eph. 2:4-10; Titus 2:11-14.

May 18, 1919.

The phrase "Grace of God" is of wide significance and embraces many things. It is often used in the Scriptures, and is the subject of this lesson. In an enlarged sense, it means the free unmerited favor of God to man. This was shown at creation. Jehovah was not bound to create man at all. But He manifests His grace in creating man "after His own image, in knowledge, righteousness and true holiness," and in giving him dominion over the inferior creation. He revealed His favor in providing for him companionship, a most attractive home, and in granting him intimate communion with Himself. But the Divine Word most often mentions the Grace of God, as shown to man, not in his primitive condition, but in his fallen estate. He revealed His wonderful favor to depraved, sinful man, in the promise of Salvation from sin and its consequences, and of all the means essential to that result. His grace appears in the gift of His own Son to be Man's Redeemer, in the bestowment of The Holy Ghost to apply to us the redemption purchased by Christ, and in all the blessings of pardon, regeneration, Holiness and Sonship that He imparts to the believer; thro these Divine persons. Sometimes, "The Grace of God" designates one of these gifts and sometimes another, and often the influences of the Holy Spirit producing all the graces of the Christian character, making meet for heaven. Our lessons describes some of the manifestations and results of "The Grace of God."

I. God's Mercy Revealed.

Mercy is favor to the guilty and needy: Mercy is connected with great compassionate love and this leads to active efforts for bestowing benefits. The blessing, too, are bestowed upon the degraded, the helpless, the miserable, those "dead in sins." The benefits also begin with spiritual quickening, or imparting a new life. This new life is given in connection with His Son, the Author of all life, and the new life He confers is from "The Grace of God." "But God, Who is rich in Mercy, for His great love wherewith He loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, by Grace, are ye saved." But Divine Grace is revealed not merely by mercy and love and quickening, but by exaltation. "He hath made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." This eternal promotion is intended to manifest to intelligent creatures the glory of His attributes. "That in the ages to come, He might show the exceeding riches of His grace in His kindness towards us through Christ Jesus." How surpassingly rich in precious truth is this Scripture.

II. Salvation by Grace.

The Apostle proceeds to emphasize the fact that salvation for man from sin and its penalty is by the grace of God and those agencies that His grace provides. He says "By grace are ye saved thro faith and that not of yourselves it is the gift of God. The very faith in Jesus Christ, the condition upon which salvation is granted, will never be exercised by the natural man, but is a grace of the Holy Spirit. Unconverted men since the fall have been disposed to merit salvation, to save themselves, and work their way to Divine favor, and eternal life, when aroused to the importance of religion. Their question has even been that of the young ruler. "What good thing must I do to inherit everlasting life?" Salvation is "Not of works lest any man should boast." "We are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we shall walk in them." We have to be regenerated, rendered penitent, to exercise faith and come to Christ, before we can perform any works, good in God's sight. So far from works being the basis of salvation, a person has to be saved in Christ before he has any works that the Lord deems good.

III. The Life God's Grace Prompts.

If a person wants to know whether he has the grace of God that bringeth salvation he shall consider what sort of a life he is leading? The Apostle affirms that this "Grace will teach us that denying all ungodliness and worldly lures, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world." Those who possess the Grace of God shall live soberly and not be unduly excited and disturbed by the changes, cares, pleasures, and losses of this present world. They shall endeavor to be righteous or conformed to the law of God, in all their human and Divine relations. They shall strive to be godly or Godlike, and as the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty shall, using all appointed means, "perfect holiness in the fear of God."

IV. The Goal God's Grace Secures.

The Grace of God not only looks backward and downward but forward and upward. It directs attention not only to "the rock from which we were hewn and the pit from which we were dug." It bids us to be looking onward, and upward to the "Blessed hope and glorious appearing of the great God and Saviour Jesus Christ." It tells us that we shall see Jesus, in His glory, and shall be "like Him when we see Him as He is." It informs that we shall behold Him in the plenitude of His matchless attractions and honors, "Who gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people zealous of good works." For His disciples Jesus prayed "Father I will that they whom Thou hast given Me be with Me, where I am, that they may behold my glory." "And the glory Thou hast given me I have given them."

A Statement

By H. M. Parker, D. D.

I wish to call attention to a quotation in the Earnest Worker for April, Page 224, which for pure and unadulterated Arminianism can not be surpassed. It is as follows:

"Do you know that God is helpless in his own world to aid mankind without the co-operation of his own creatures? It was to this profound and mysterious truth that Deborah referred in her curses upon apathetic Meroz because they came not to the help of the Lord against the Mighty. Here lies at once man's greatest chance and most serious obligation."—Dr. C. E. Locke, in Methodist Mission Witness.

I call your attention to this not to criticise the Editor; he needs it when he allows such teaching to creep into our literature: but because of the need that our people be warned against such an attack on the Sovereignty of God; and on our church formularies.

This is an age of loose doctrinal statements and of gross ignorance of fundamentals.

Statesville, N. C.

Where is the secret of power? In my college days the professor of natural philosophy used to exhibit his great horseshoe magnet, wound about with coils of wire. He hung it up, charged the wire with a galvanic current, and it caught up and held four thousand pounds. He signaled to his assistant to draw off the current, and the power was gone. My brother, encircle your soul with faith and let the divine electricity of the love of Jesus Christ charge it. Then you can lift anything; you can do anything that God wants you to do. Draw it off, and you are a shorn Samson, a weakling.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

THE BRAVEST CHALLENGE.

O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? This is the sharpest and shrillest note, the boldest and bravest challenge that man ever rang in the ears of death. Death is here out-raved, called craven in his face, and bidden to do his worst.—Trapp.

THE TOUCH OF THE MASTER'S HAND.

A gentleman visited a jeweler's store to inspect certain precious stones. Among other gems he was shown an opal. As it lay there it appeared dull and altogether lusterless. The jeweler took it in his hand, and held it for some moments; then he showed it again to his visitor. It gleamed and flashed with all the colors of the rainbow. It only needed the touch and warmth of a human hand to bring out its iridescence. There are human lives everywhere about us that are rich in their possibilities of beauty. They seem dull and lusterless, perhaps they are darkly stained with sin. Yet they only need the touch of the hand of Jesus to bring out the radiance of the divine image hidden within. We have to be the hand of Jesus to these marred and lusterless lives: "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."—Selected.

THE CROSS.

"Upon a cold October day a man was sitting by the wayside, with his forehead leaning against the hands that clasped his stick. He was thinking over his hard life and lamenting his lot. 'O, dear Lord,' he said, 'no one had so hard a lot as I! No one has lost so many sweet friends! No one has had such bad luck with the lambing, and now my little house has burned down, and I have no money to build a new one. O, dear Lord, my cross is too heavy—my cross is too heavy!'

"As he said this a great wind came up the road and whirled all the scarlet and yellow leaves up from the ground, and from the branches, and as they sailed down again in a golden rain, the man heard a deep voice behind him say: 'I have heard your complaint; come with me and I will let you choose a different lot.' And immediately he felt himself borne up on mighty wings through vast spaces until he stood at the great gates of a temple.

"As the doors opened to let him in he found himself in an immense hall, beyond which there was another and another and another, all perfectly empty, but upon their walls hung hundreds and hundreds of crosses of different sizes and different colors. 'Choose,' said the voice. He wandered through all the rooms, trying now this cross, now that one! At first he took down a beautiful golden one that shone in the light, but when it was upon his back he sank down on his knees and could scarcely rise. He put it back trembling. After many attempts he found a wooden one which seemed a light burden, so he asked permission to leave the temple. But hardly had he gone a few steps down the hill when he noticed that this cross had sharp edges, which cut into his flesh at every step, and very soon he was back, knocking at the door and begging to have this cross removed.

"So the poor man went round the halls a second time and just as he reached the entrance again, full of despair and bewilderment he saw a small black cross that he had not noticed before. He tried it and it fitted him perfectly. 'This is the one I choose,' he said joyfully. 'Take it,' said the voice as the gates flew open and the wind carried him back to his roadside. 'It is your own that you have chosen.'—The Christian Commonwealth.

DREAD OF END OF THE YEAR.

"I dread to come to the end of the year," said a friend to us recently; "it makes me realize I am growing old."

That suggests a question, When is a man old?

In Shakespeare's time a man was old at forty, and often, because of the gay life, invalided long before that.

Sir Walter Scott at fifty-five bemoaned the fact that he was an old man.

Montaigne retired to his castle at thirty-eight to spend his declining years in peace and study.

Dr. Samuel Johnson once remarked that at thirty-five a man had reached his peak, and after that his course must be downward.

Physiologists tell us that in all mammals except man the period of life is five times the period of growth. A dog gets its full growth in two years, and lives ten; a horse in five years and lives twenty-five. On this basis a man should live from 100 to 150 years.

Why were these three men—Scott, Montaigne and Johnson—old while they were still comparatively young men?

The answer is, because they felt old and acted old.

William James said that some men are "old fogies at twenty-five."

He was right. The minute a man ceases to grow—no matter what his years—that minute he begins to be old. As long as he can look back on every year and say, "I grew," he is still young.

The minute he ceases to grow, the day he says to himself, "I know all that I need to know,"—that day youth stops. He may be twenty-five or seventy-five, it makes no difference. On that day he begins to be old.—Exchange.

NO OCCUPATION.

She rises up at break of day
And through her task she races;
She cooks the meal as best she may,
And scrubs the children's faces;
While school books, lunches, ribbons, too,
All need consideration.
And yet the census man insists
She has "no occupation."

When breakfast dishes all are done,
She bakes a pudding, maybe;
She cleans the rooms up, one by one,
With one eye watching baby;
The mending pile she then attacks,
By way of variation.
And yet the census man insists
She has "no occupation."

She irons for a little while,
Then presses pants for daddy;
She welcomes with a cheery smile,
Returning lass and laddie.
A hearty dinner next she cooks
(No time for relaxation).
And yet the census man insists
She has "no occupation."

For lessons that the children learn
The evening scarce is ample,
To "mother dear" they always turn
For help with each example.
In grammar and geography
She finds her relaxation.
And yet the census man insists
She has "no occupation."

INVITATION TO THE ASSEMBLY.

The First Presbyterian Church of Charlotte is extending a very cordial invitation for the next meeting of the General Assembly. It has been nearly 25 years since the Assembly met in this stronghold of Presbyterianism.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. C. Kennedy has changed his address from Mt. Mourne to Kannapolis, N. C.

Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D., of Maxton, N. C., attended the meeting of the Board of Trustees of Union Seminary last week in Richmond, Va. This was the 48th regular meeting of this body that Dr. Hill has attended.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Summary of Synod's Home Mission and Evangelistic Work for Quarter Ending April 1, 1919—28 men engaged; 61 organized churches and 31 mission points supplied; 816 sermons preached; 377 professions of faith; 180 additions to the Presbyterian Church on profession; 50 additions by letter; 5 Sunday Schools organized. A. W. C.

Fayetteville Presbytery—Rev. E. L. Siler, stated clerk, writes: "Kindly correct, in your next issue, a mistake I made in the abstract of proceedings of Fayetteville Presbytery. It was Rev. J. A. Calligan who preached the Presby-terial sermon, Sabbath Observance, and not Rev. W. L. Wilson. And a most excellent sermon it was and enjoyed by the whole Presbytery."

Charlotte—The friends of Queens College are happy this week over the successful ending of the campaign to raise the final $50,000 which would leave the institution entirely unhampered by debt. Dr. M. E. Melvin and his assistants have worked well and besides being successful in their undertaking have, by their tact and courtesy, not failed to make new friends for the institution and for themselves during their stay in this community. People who know this beautiful plant and its noble history believe that Queens College has a future of great usefulness ahead of it.

Winston-Salem First Church is stressing the studying of the Shorter Catechism. The "Calendar" of May 4 says:

Study the Catechism. Earn a reward. To any one who recites perfectly the Westminster Shorter Catechism a silver cup will be given by the family of Col. A. B. Gorrell, five dollars will be given by Mr. Wm. B. Taylor, and a Bible by the Presbyterian Committee of Publication. To secure these rewards the catechism must be recited perfectly before a committee appointed to hear the recital.

Clarkton—On a recent Sabbath, designated before-hand as Decision Day in the Sabbath School, three of the children made a profession of their faith in Christ and were received into the full communion of the church immediately, the session holding its meeting in the presence of the school.

On the first Sunday of May there was a "Household Service" at 5 o'clock in the afternoon when eleven children were baptized. This church has recently increased the pastor's salary.

To the Ministers of Fayetteville Presbytery—Through the courtesy of the Standard I have this opportunity of reminding you that the Sunday School Committee will need the services of every minister in the Presbytery for Institute work during the week, July 6-11.

The committee, necessarily, must do a great deal of preliminary and detail work before our plans can be put into operation. Therefore, you may expect a communication from your district committee as soon as these plans are fully matured. J. K. Roberts, Chairman.

Immanuel Church, Wilmington—Rev. C. Conner Brown, evangelist of the Synod, closed a good meeting in this church Sunday night, April 27, assisting the pastor, Rev. D. T. Caldwell. There was deep interest throughout as was evidenced by the fact that 75 persons indicated their acceptance of Christ, besides 15 others who had been church members but had not been living the Christian life.

Results were only partially in when the meeting closed but the session on the following Sabbath received 25 on profession and six by letter. The pastor writes that he could count at least ten more who would come in on profession. A contribution for the Synod's Mission Work was made amounting to $105.00. A. W. C.

Rev. William Black, evangelist of the Synod, closed a meeting at the little St. Andrews Church, near Henderson, Sunday night, April 27.

The meeting was well attended from the start, and as usual in Brother Black's meetings, towards the last the church was taxed to the utmost.

About thirty persons indicated their acceptance of Christ, many of them indicating their preference for other churches. Of those indicating preference for the Presbyterian church, 13 united with the St. Andrews Church before the close of the meeting. Nine persons promised to establish family worship.

The little congregation made a fine contribution to the Synod's Mission Work, amounting to $64.53.

The evangelist and the retiring pastor, Rev. H. McQ.

Shields, reorganized the Sunday School and left it in good operation. With evidence of good work of the retiring pastor upon every hand, he goes to take charge of the Lafayette Church, Norfolk.

At the time of this writing, Brother Black is at the Lakeside Church, Fayetteville.
A. W. C.

Winston-Salem—Rev. E. J. Hertwig, pastor of the Waughtown church, has tendered his resignation to that congregation, effective June 1, to accept the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church at Statesboro, Ga. He will take charge of that work after a two weeks' vacation prior to his going to Georgia.

The Waughtown congregation has appointed a committee to recommend a pastor to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Hertwig's resignation, and some action is expected to be taken during the next few weeks.

Mr. Hertwig came to Winston-Salem from Union Seminary, Richmond, Va., as assistant pastor to Dr. N. L. Anderson, then pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of this city. At that time Mr. Hertwig took charge of a work conducted by the First Church in Waughtown, and at once organized a congregation. That was just five years ago on June 1. Services were then held in a cottage on Nisson avenue, two cottages having been secured in which to accommodate the thrifty Sunday School work. Within a few weeks plans were put on foot to erect a house of worship and a year later the congregation moved into their present handsome church building.

Spray—Although Spray Presbyterian Church has been without a pastor for nine months, it has not been an unprofitable season. Quite a number of able ministers have filled the pulpit from time to time and encouraged the people to go forward. The Sabbath School has grown steadily until it is now at the high-water mark in the history of its six years' organization.

Last Sabbath, May 4, there were 137 present and a liberal offering. Dr. E. C. Caldwell rejoiced the hearts of his old and new friends by preaching twice on that day—sermons full of encouragement and instruction. He was a guest in the congregation for nearly three weeks and gladly received everywhere.

The Christian Endeavor has been vigorous and wide awake with an average attendance at the weekly meetings of from thirty to thirty-five members.

The Woman's Auxiliary has been the leaders in buying a fine new Estey organ, chairs for the primary room and other necessities for the comfort and success of workers.

Rev. H. M. Wilson, of South Carolina, will come on May 17 to serve the church for the summer months. By that time it is hoped an acceptable pastor will be ready to take charge of the work permanently.
S. S. S.

Charlotte—The Presbyterian Hospital of this city boasts as beautiful grounds and surroundings possibly as does any hospital in the South. Noble trees, graceful shrubs and wide stretches of green sward make a beautiful setting for the handsome red brick buildings of the institution. On last Sabbath afternoon a large representation of people from the city and county visited these grounds and enjoyed an hour of its restful beauty. The occasion was the first event of commencement week when the baccalaureate sermon was preached on the grounds. A platform had been erected with chairs placed for the audience. As a prelude to the sermon an old fashioned and truly delightful "singing" was held, with representatives of the choirs from the various county and city churches leading. Rev. C. H. Little, of the Sharon Church, presided and prayers were offered by Revs. C. C. Anderson, the newly arrived pastor of the West Avenue Church, and Watson Boyce, of the A. R. P. Church, with a special prayer of thanksgiving by Rev. G. F. Bell, of the Knox Church, for the passing of the Influenza scourge. The sermon of the occasion, an excellent and appropriate one, was preached by Dr. Luther Little, of the Baptist Church, on the Achieving Life. Commencement proper when the graduating nurses received their diplomas was held Tuesday evening. This institution with its increased facilities is doing a noble work. Charlotte is proud of its record.

Mecklenburg Presbytery's assignment of ministers for evangelistic campaign is as follows:

Allen, Rev. D. B. McLaughlin; Aquadale, Rev. G. W. Cheek; Altan, Rev. C. E. White; Bethlehem, Rev. D. B. McLaughlin; Badin, Rev. C. C. Brown; Bulah, Rev. C. E. White; Bethany, Rev. L. Raleigh—A statistical study of the records of the First Presbyterian Church at Raleigh reveals some interesting figures. It shows that the church as a unit is in a very healthy condition. For instance, the church now has 12 elders and 24 deacons which are serving a congregation consisting of 593 resident members and 58 non-resident. Fifteen members were added during the past year on examination, and 31 on certificate. There are 937 members of the Sunday Schools under the supervision of the church.

The church gave $23,365 to the various causes during the past year, and while this does not reach the record of the previous year, when $26,072 were contributed, all of the apportionments were met in full, and many of them largely exceeded. Members of the congregation made large donations to Peace Institute the previous year, which explains why this exceeded the past year's contributions.

There were not as many accessions to membership during the past year as in previous years, and this is a cause of greatest concern to Dr. W. McC. White. At this time the Sunday School enrollment, embracing both the cradle roll and the home department, is very satisfactory and the work of the school as a whole is progressing favorably. Full reports from the different societies and organized classes are not available at this time. Indications are, however, that these reports are encouraging in the highest degree.

The final report of the Every Member Canvass, was held during the last of March, shows that at the present time the members have not pledged themselves to meet in full the apportionment placed on the church. With special offering and the collections not included in the envelopes to be considered, however, these apportionments will be more than met. For local expenses and needs, a total of $8,000 has been asked, and for benevolences, $6,000. The offering during the past few years has greatly exceeded these amounts, and the board of deacons feel that they will be able to fully meet all obligations.
F. H. Jeter.

Mecklenburg Presbytery held an adjourned meeting at the Charlotte, N. C., First Church on Monday, May 5, 1919. There were 17 members present.

The Rev. C. E. White was received from Orange Presbytery. He will be installed pastor at Marshville on Sabbath, May 25, 1919, at 11 a. m., and at Peachland at 4 p. m. the same day.

The Rev. Leonard Gill to preside and preach the sermon, Rev. John J. Douglass to charge the pastor, and Elder John R. Pharr to charge the people at each place.

The Rev. John E. Wool offered his resignation as pastor of Mallard Creek Church. The church was cited to appear at the adjourned meeting next Monday, the 12th inst., at 2:30 p. m. at the Charlotte First Church to show cause why the resignation should not be accepted and the pastoral relations dissolved.

The time of the Stated Fall Meeting was changed from September 2, 1919, to September 16, at 11 o'clock a. m., at Steel Creek Church.

Paw Creek Church was permitted to increase its pastor's salary from $800 to $900, to begin April 1 of this year.

The committee on evangelism, Rev. Leonard Gill, chairman, made its report appointing the brethren to hold evangelistic services in the Home Mission churches. This list will be published later in the Standard.

The name of Elder T. G. Hardie was substituted for that of Elder T. J. Smith as alternate to Elder G. E. Wilson, commissioner to the Assembly.

A committee, consisting of the stated clerk, permanent clerk, and Rev. G. F. Bell, was appointed to revise the standing rules, and submit its report to the Fall Meeting of Presbytery with a view to early publication.

The committee to arrange for a Sabbath School Institute, Rev. J. W. Grier, chairman, was requested to fix the date and determine the place where it shall be held.

Presbytery adjourned to meet in the Charlotte First Church on Monday, May 12, 1919, at 2:30 p. m.

Pineville Church Home-Coming—This was a great day for the Pineville Presbyterian Church. For the first time since its organization, in December, 1875, by the late Rev. Robert Hett Chapman, D. D., and the late Ruling Elder Jos. B. Rankin, both of Charlotte at that time, had any radical changes been made in the building. But under the leadership of Rev. Geo. F. Robertson, pastor, the interior of the old building was so thoroughly overhauled and beautified that it is like a new church.

May 4 had been set for a home-coming service. The day was all we could ask for glory and beauty. All the former pastors had been invited, but owing to distances and previous and imperative engagements, none of them could attend.

This laid the work of the day on the pastor's shoulders. But with his youthful vigor and broad shoulders, he bore the burden, preaching at 11 a. m. to an overflowing congregation on Bible home-comings—physical and spiritual, and to as attentive a congregation as ever listened to a sermon in Pineville.

This was followed by one of the best picnic dinners anybody ever ate. Though the crowd was large, the dinner was ample with enough over to feed as many more.

The pastor preached at 3 p. m. on Heaven and at night Rev. C. H. Little, of Sharon Church, gave us a fine sermon on Eph. 3:17: "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith."

The visitors, old members and others, were in numbers from Charlotte, Gastonia, Rock Hill, S. C., and other places far and near.

Several choirs—Steel Creek, Amity, Sharon—contributed singers who came armed with the unsurpassed and unsurpassable American Tune Book from which old familiar and favorite anthems and hymns were sung with keenest relish. Some of them the pastor had not sung since he led the choir of Davidson College during his senior year 1877-78, and he used the same book he had then.

The crowd said the singing was fine. One old anthem, "The Earth is the Lord's," sung at the morning service, was repeated by request at the afternoon meeting.

This was a day of delight. Old friends, separated for more than a score of years, met and rejoiced together. Many were missing, of course, who we'll not meet again until we come to "the General Assembly and Church of the First Born." Perhaps there was many an upward look with a longing for the better things of the morrow. Who knows? Perhaps there were high resolves born in many a heart to attempt greater things for God ere He call us away. God grant it.

McKinnon and Bayles Memorial—After very hard work and considerable opposition these churches were separated February 1, 1918, and arrangements made to secure a pastor for Bayles Memorial. They had gotten along very peaceably together but both saw that each needed a pastor, for full time in order to grow. There had been little gain in either church for 15 years. During the 14 months since the separation each of these churches has collected more than three times as much as during any previous year. The additions to the two churches for the past year were 62, of which 40 were by profession. Within the year McKinnon has become self-supporting and Bayles Memorial nearly so, while both together were not self-supporting 15 months ago, paying only about $60.00 a month. In the every-member canvass in March, 1918, McKinnon was apportioned $365 for benevolences, the Session raised it to $425, and the pledges amounted to nearly $465, and the final report on March 31, 1919, showed $522 actually paid. Bayless Memorial has done as well or better in some respects. Presbyter.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Pendleton—On Sunday, May 4th, Messrs. W. B. Aull and C. C. Stewart were ordained as elders, and Messrs. B. H. Sadler and H. G. Seawright as deacons in the Pendleton Church.

Five members have recently been received in this church by certificate.

The Rev. T. C. Ligon has recently removed from Townville to Pendleton to make his home with his son-in-law, Mr. J. B. Harris. Robert Adams.

Columbia—Arsenal Hill Church—Dr. J. B. Hutton occupied the pulpit of the Arsenal Hill Church at the evening hour and preached again with great power. It was a sermon to the Society of Missionary Inquiry of Columbia Seminary. Dr. Hutton made a good impression for himself by rendering such whole-hearted and enthusiastic service to the Master. Both the message of the morning and the evening focused attention on the Divine Christ, and mightily drew the hearts of his hearers to Him in devout homage and adoration.

Columbia—On Sunday morning, May 4, at the 11 o'clock service, Rev. J. B. Hutton, D. D., of Jackson, Miss., preached in the First Presbyterian Church the commencement sermon to the graduating class of Columbia Seminary. The theme was the investment of life, and the sermon was a very strong and impressive appeal, not only to the young men of the Seminary, but to all the crowded congregation, men and women, to invest their lives in service to Him who is worthy of the best that they can give.

At the evening service, the pastor, Rev. A. W. Blackwood, gave his people an account of the revival meetings in which he had been engaged during the previous two weeks in the First Presbyterian Church of Augusta.

Monaghan—On the first Sabbath in May, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was celebrated at Monaghan Church, near Greenville, S. C. The house of worship was formally opened last December and the church is served by Rev. J. F. Brown, a student in the middle class in Columbia Seminary. A good Sunday School has been maintained for years by faithful officers and teachers. During the meeting of the Sunday School on the first Sunday in May, Testaments were donated to Misses Margaret Brown and Edna Newton and Masters Paul Harrison and Harley Mosteler for memorizing the Introduction to the Shorter Catechism, and to Mr. James Brown for reciting the Shorter Catechism.

McColl—On last Friday evening we closed an eight days' meeting in the Presbyterian Church of McColl. The preaching was done by Rev. L. A. McLaurin, of Jonesboro, N. C. Brother McLaurin is a son of the McColl Church and the mother was delighted to have a visit from the son. The preaching was of a very high order, simple and plain, so that the smallest child could understand. Mr. Burr, the singer, who has sung the Gospel with Rev. William Black so long in North Carolina, helped us greatly in the music.

The members of the church were much revived by the meeting, and new consecration vows were expressed. Three of our Sunday School scholars united with the church and others will join later. We praise the great Head of the church. Pastor.

Fort Mill—The Rev. J. B. Black, who was recently called to the pastorate of this church, arrived here last Saturday from Elizabeth City, N. C., to begin his work. Services were conducted by him Sunday morning and evening and at the latter service the pastor and congregation of the Methodists joined as a matter of courtesy to the new pastor.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be observed at the conclusion of the usual morning service next Sunday morning, preparatory service to be held Friday evening. On the third Sunday morning there will be a congregational meeting, called for the purpose of electing additional elders and deacons, and a report will be heard from a committee appointed to consider the building of a new manse.

Charleston Presbytery met April 15th in the Estill Church, and was opened with a sermon by the retiring moderator, Rev. D. P. Junkin.

Rev. Melton Clark, D. D., was elected moderator and W. F. H. Glover assistant clerk.

Encouraging reports were read on Missions, Home and Foreign, and Presbytery heard them with appreciation and thankfulness. The recent quota assigned this Presbytery has been more than pledged for the year coming, as was that of the year past.

Knox Church, Charleston, asked for more time of their pastor, and henceforth he will give this church all his time.

Walterboro Church also asked for another Sunday's service of their pastor, and he will henceforth give them three Sundays each month.

Rev. R. M. Phillips was dismissed at his request to Fayetteville Presbytery, after his relation to the Summerville Church was dissolved by mutual consent.

After some years of faithful service, Mr. Dunbar Robb resigned the office of Treasurer of Presbytery, and Presbytery gratefully appreciated his service. Mr. J. Gardiner Gordon, of Charleston, S. C., was elected Treasurer.

Mr. C. Bissell Jenkins, Jr., was elected a Trustee of Chicora College for Women in Columbia, in place of Mr. Geo. Moffett, who was at his request excused.

Rev. J. L. McLees and Mr. T. C. Stevenson, of Charleston, were elected Commissioners to the General Assembly, and Rev. S. C. Byrd, D. D., and W. F. H. Glover are their alternates.

Presbytery expressed approval of the scheme for our finances suggested by Mr. J. B. Spillman.

Harmony Church was chosen as the place of next meeting, October 15th. Alexander Sprunt, Stated Clerk.

Greenville—On the 31st of March, the Second Church, Greenville, closed one of the best years in its history, despite war conditions and influenza. It has property valued at $45,000, free from debt. It received 62 members, 44 by letter and 18 by profession, and gave $10,385 to all causes, $4,382 of the amount being for benevolences. The gifts for benevolences were $1,414 more than its apportionment by Presbytery. It elected three additional trustees, two additional ruling elders and eight additional deacons during the year. It has 418 members. The Sunday School has 21 officers and teachers and 413 scholars, and contributed $1,956 to all causes, $1,541 of the amount being for the benevolences. It makes offerings for all the causes of the Assembly and Synod. The Ladies' Working Society that antedates the organization of the church has 40 members and contributed $276 to local causes. It does not raise any money by bazaars, suppers, fairs. The Ladies' Missionary set $660 for its goal last year and reached it; while the Senior, Intermediate and Junior Christian Endeavor Societies and Sunbeams have done successful work. The people gave the pastor a Chevrolet automobile for a Christmas present; and, on the recommendation of the Deacons Board, the congregation added $600 to the pastor's salary on the last Sunday in April. The church is well located and has a promising future. The budget for the coming year amounts to $10,000. It has all been subscribed.

APPALACHIA.

Montreat—Intent upon the Master's business, 38 earnest men, led by two beloved "despots," met here on 22nd ult.

and wrought through the work of the Spring session of the Presbytery of Asheville.

The moderator of 1918, Rev. Dr. Chas. Morris, gave us a good sermon on Christ the Lord of all tempests, after which he was succeeded by Rev. W. S. Hutchison, of Horse Shoe, as moderator for 1919.

We then listened to a good, strong, long—too long, 55 minutes—address from Rev. Jacob H. Rosenberg (the only ordained Hebrew minister of the Southern Church), the purpose of which was to induce the Presbytery to send an overture to the General Assembly urging that the Assembly start an organized effort to reach the Jews with the Gospel. The overture was sent.

This Presbytery was not much under the dominion of parliamentary law. The careful, strenuous, time-wasting, critic and self-elected censor was not there; but our Lord was there and as a delightful result the session of the Presbytery and its work were a spiritual tonic to the local church.

The usual routine work was done and popular, awakening meetings on behalf of home and foreign missions were held. The discussion Wednesday evening, led by Messrs. Campbell, Sikes, Hay, R. P. Smith and numerous participated in by the members of the Presbytery was climacteric and full of spiritual power. A freewill offering of more than $80 was given.

The music of the chorus, composed largely of the pupils of the Montreat Normal School, under the masterly tutorage and direction of Mr. and Mrs. Crosby Adams, was very helpful and merited special mention.

Our ladies, with their characteristic kindness and generosity, furnished delightful lunches at the church building.

Constituted on Tuesday evening, Presbytery adjourned on Thursday afternoon, a session of less than two days and all work well done.

FLORIDA.

Seminole Heights—Rev. Ray M. Busler reports a rapid growth in the attendance on the Sunday School, so that a larger building has become a necessity. The prospect for building up a strong church here is very encouraging.

Clearwater—Rev. D. A. Dunseith has been supplying this church for the past six months with great satisfaction to the members of the church. The largely increased attendance on the regular ministry of the Word, and the growth in the numbers attending the Sunday School has made it clear that more commodious quarters must be provided. A movement is on foot to build a new church and something like $15,000 is in sight as a beginning.

The Home Mission Work in St. Johns Presbytery is developing very rapidly under the efficient work of Dr. Winard, the superintendent. The receipts from the churches for the prosecution of the work for fiscal year ending March 31 were largely in excess of any previous year. The H. M. fields are nearly all supplied with the regular ministry of the Word, and larger and better things are being planned for the current year.

Tampa—The Tampa churches are reaping the results of the Billy Sunday campaign. Every Sabbath there have been additions to the churches, the First Church having had large ingatherings. Dr. Tims has had a severe attack of the Spanish Flu, but is slowly recovering.

Rev. J. R. C. Brown, having resigned as pastor of the Hyde Park Church, is now in charge of the Inverness and Dade City churches. The Hyde Park Church has not so far secured the man it wants as pastor.

DeFuniak Springs—On April 13 one new member was received on certificate.

Ponce de Leon, one of the points at which the pastor preaches on Sunday afternoons, has sent a petition to Presbytery asking to be organized into a Presbyterian Church. There were 23 petitioners.

At the beginning of the church year another $100 was added to the pastor's salary. This congregation does not forget its pastor at any time. Only a year ago $300 was added to salary.
D. J. C.

St. Petersburg—As stated before, this church has assumed the entire support of a foreign missionary, and Mrs. L. B. Tate, of Chunju, Chosen, has been selected. Some of the members are personally acquainted with her.

In the contest for attendance at prayer meetings for the five meetings of April, this church had an attendance of 32 per cent out of a resident membership of 282.

GEORGIA.

Donalsonville—Rev. Frank D. Hunt, Superintendent-Evangelist, came from the meeting of the Presbytery of Macon at Thomasville to assist the pastor, Rev. J. W. Stokes, in a ten days' meeting including the fourth Sabbath in April and the first in May. Rev. C. M. Campbell, of Boston, also was with us and had charge of the singing. Both preacher and singer did earnest and faithful service. Despite local conditions affecting the attendance, the meeting was productive of good to the church and to the community. A special feature was Mr. Hunt's talks at the chapel hour to the school children. A good many made profession of faith and declared their purpose to unite with some church. It was a pleasure to have Mr. Hunt in the home; it was an education and inspiration to hear him expound the Word from the pulpit. The Presbytery is to be congratulated on securing Mr. Hunt to superintend its varied home mission activities.

The Presbytery of Macon met in Thomasville, Ga., April 22, at night, and continued in session till noon of the third day with 16 ministers and 22 elders.

Rev. J. K. Currie was elected moderator. Rev. J. P. Word, of Presbytery of West Texas; Rev. M. McG. Shields, of Atlanta, and Rev. G. H. Atkinson, of Mecklenburg were introduced to the Presbytery. Rev. C. U. Leach was received and arrangements made for his installation at Sylvester and at Poulan. Rev. Frank D. Hunt was received and entered upon his work as superintendent-evangelist. Dr. E. M. Craig was released from the pastorate at Albany and granted certificate to Presbytery of Concord. Rev. G. H. Ellmore was given letter to Wilmington Presbytery.

Elder W. A. Watt, of Thomasville, was elected chairman and treasurer of Presbytery's Home Missions. Rev. J. W. Stokes was re-elected stated clerk for the term of three years and Rev. J. T. Wildman was elected permanent clerk. Many churches requested amendment to their calls by increasing pastor's salary and Presbytery appointed M. H. Westberry, T. S. Lowry and W. A. Watt a committee to urge all the churches of Presbytery to increase the salaries.

Addresses were heard from Rev. Mr. Shields and Rev. Mr. Hunt and sermons by Rev. J. E. Wallace, L. G. Henderson and J. E. Wards. Dr. J. G. Patton was appointed to preach the doctrinal sermon at the Fall Presbytery on "Discipline."

Presbytery adopted a memorial of Rev. H. W. Head, deceased.

Climax was chosen as the place of next meeting.

Augusta—The most beautiful and impressive church service I have attended in the fourteen years I have been in the field for Christian Endeavor was the Rose Sunday service in the First Church, Augusta, Sunday morning, May 4. This service is an annual event in this church and is held in the height of the rose season. The church is beautifully decorated with an abundance of roses, the pulpit and choir rail a mass of blossoms. Miss Margaret Battle, the soprano soloist of the church, rendered splendidly the beautiful solo, "In the Time of Roses."

The pastor and session welcomed into the fellowship of

DAVIDSON.

The debating teams of the college have met with fine success this week, Messrs. Currie and Lilly winning over Messrs. Rushton and Wilson, representing Washington and Lee University and Flinn and Hall winning over representatives of Mercer University. The contest with Virginia was held here at Davidson in Shearer Hall. The contest with Mercer University was held in Atlanta. The double victory is a most pleasing and gratifying one to the campus in view of the fact that the ball season just closed did not net Davidson as many triumphs as the campus by past experiences was warranted in expecting.

Major W. G. Somerville, since the signing of the armistice, again a student in Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, is here on a visit this week to the student body and renewing his acquaintance with the campus. As a student the church forty-seven new members, thirty of them on profession of faith. The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered by the pastor, assisted by Rev. R. F. Kirkpatrick, D. D., of Atlanta. Two visiting elders, J. T. Fain, of Rock Hill, S. C., and E. H. Wilkes, of Laurens, S. C., who were attending Georgia-South Carolina Christian Endeavor Convention, assisted in the distribution of the elements.

The famous and historic old church is one of the liveliest and best churches of the South with a splendid Sunday School and Christian Endeavor. The church is unusually blessed in the leadership of their pastor, Rev. Joseph R. Sevier, D. D., the secret of whose success lies in the fact that he is training a corps of efficient and consecrated workers who are multiplying his influence and work many fold. In all my travels I have never seen a pastor more beloved by his people than Dr. Sevier.

The First Presbyterian Church of Augusta and her fine pastor left nothing undone to make a great success of the convention which met with them May 2-4.

Karl Lehmann,

Southern States C. E. Secretary.

KENTUCKY.

Madison Avenue, Covington—This Church, of which the Rev. I. Cochrane Hunt, D. D., is the pastor, made what is to both pastor and people an exceedingly gratifying report of its work and progress during the past year.

Despite the heavy demands for the various war activities, it reported a total of $2,531 for benevolences as against $2,255 for the preceding year; and the result of its E. M. C. showed pledges aggregating $2,726 for benevolences for the current year, the Sabbath School and Societies not being included in this amount. The active membership now reported is 235, with the addition of four members since the first of the month.

The Christian Endeavor Society is making wonderful strides both in point of numbers and attendance and efficiency in its work. It is planning to present the Assembly Foreign Mission Program on Korea in lieu of an evening church service in the near future. Mrs. Ada Hamilton Clark, of the Chun-ju Station, is a member of this Church.

MISSISSIPPI.

Jackson—The Mississippi Training School for Christian Workers. The seventh annual session of the Training School for Christian Workers, under the auspices of the Synod of Mississippi, will be held in Belhaven College, Jackson, Miss., June 16 to 26, inclusive. The program here several years ago he was most popular and influential.

It is pleasing to note that on the coming Sunday Rev. Dr. W. W. Moore, president of Union Seminary, will be here and preach. His coming, like that of several other distinguished doctors of divinity, is always a great event in the year's program, and his visit is alike delightful to students, faculty and town.

The commencement program is as follows:

Sunday, May 25

11 A. M.—Baccalaureate Sermon, Rev. J. Layton Mauze, D. D., Huntington, W. Va.

8 P. M.—Annual Sermon Before the Y. M. C. A., Dr. D. Clay Lilly, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Monday, May 26

10 A. M.—Class Day Exercises.

4 P. M.—Musical Entertainment by the Davidson College Glee Club.

provides for three sessions each day. The morning and evening exercises are to be devoted to Bible study, lectures and addresses by some of the choice men of the country. The afternoons are to be given over to group conferences, at which matters of practical and personal interest to those composing the several groups will be considered under the direction of skilled leaders.

The following leaders and instructors have been secured: Dr. John M. Wells, Dr. R. A. Webb, Dr. Thornton Whaling, Dr. J. O. Reavis, Dr. W. Bristow Gray, Dr. W. McF. Alexander, Dr. G. F. Kirkpatrick, Prof. Alfred Hume, LL.D., Rev. W. L. Hickman, Rev. J. C. Crane, Rev. Grayson L. Tucker, Dr. William Crowe, Rev. C. T. Gillespie, Rev. C. L. Power, Rev. C. O. Groves, Rev. R. E. Hough, Rev. J. A. Christian, Dr. W. H. Frazer, Dr. J. B. Hutton.

Rev. W. H. McIntosh will have supervision of the men's conference; Mrs. C. S. Everts, the women's conference; Rev. W. Bristow Gray, D. D., the boys', and Mrs. W. L. Hickman, the girls' conference.

The boarding department will be under the direction of Rev. and Mrs. E. J. Currie, of Chickasaw College, and a number of young ladies from that institution will assist Dr. Currie.

Rev. C. T. Thomson will be platform manager, Dr. W. H. Frazer, transportation manager; Rev. E. Z. Browne, musical director, and Miss Irene Combs, pianist.

Board and lodging for the entire session may be had for only $10.00; for less than the conference period the rate will be $1.25 per day. Reservations are being made, and indications point to a very large gathering this session.

The secretary, Rev. R. E. Hough, Jackson, Miss., will be glad to answer any inquiries regarding the school.

Woman's Auxiliary

Leaders of Y. P's. Societies—Your Presbyterian Secretary of Y. P's. W. has written you enclosing folders and registration cards for the Y. P's. Conference which the Synod of North Carolina is holding June 2 to June 9, at Queens College, Charlotte. Write her at once if you fail to receive these folders and cards.

We are asking the best in teachers and speakers for our boys and girls and it will be a rare privilege for them to have for seven days the companionship and influence of the consecrated men and women on our program. Synod's committee has asked our co-operation—may we respond enthusiastically to this opportunity given our boys and girls and have at least one boy and one girl go from each church.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriages.

Kidd-Wilson—At the home of the bride's father, Mr. W. P. Wilson, Mecklenburg Co., N. C., May 7, 1919, by Rev. R. S. Burwell, Mr. Chester W. Kidd and Miss Bonnie L. Wilson.

George-Nelson—In the Glenwood Presbyterian Church, Greensboro, N. C., April 16, 1919, by Rev. J. G. Walker, R. Wesley George and Daisy May Nelson, both of Greensboro, N. C.

Deaths.

Siniard—McDonald Douglas Siniard, 14-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Siniard, of Brevard, N. C., died on April 11th of hydrophobia. He was a member of Brevard Presbyterian Church and Sunday School, a fine little fellow.

Litaker—Mitchel H. Litaker, of Rowan County, N. C., entered into rest May 3, 1919, in his twenty-sixth year. He leaves a devoted wife and one child. He was a faithful member of Thyatira Presbyterian Church for ten years.

AN APPRECIATION.

Mrs. Cora McLaughlin.

In the death of Mrs. Cora McLaughlin the Presbyterian Church lost a most earnest and faithful member. She made it a rule to be present, and to be present punctually.

Her marked fidelity to her church and all its organizations is well worthy of emulation and commendation in this day of our history when there are so many worldly attractions. Mrs. Mc-

Laughlin did not allow anything to interfere with her duty to her church.

She will be greatly missed in the church, prayer meeting, Sunday School and in the society.

The Master of all services and sacrifices has said: "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."

In the interpretation of that text, Mrs. McLaughlin has entered into the larger life. She was faithful unto death.

Her kindness to the writer and his family since their residence in Wadesboro will never be forgotten, and this little tribute is paid her out of a sincere appreciation of the virtues of her Christian character and her kindly thoughts of her pastor and his family.

THE LONGEST WORD.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl ten years old. This is my second letter to you. I go to school at Beaver Dam. My teacher's name is Miss Trotter. I like her fine. I also go to Sunday School at Beaver Dam.

My father is superintendent. I will close by asking a question: What is the longest word in the Bible?

Your unknown friend,
Katherine White.

Santuc, S. C.

PADDLE THEIR OWN CANOE.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old, and I am in the fourth grade.

I live on the lake, and in the summer my little friends and I go in swimming, and go out boat riding on the lake in a canoe.

We have some little biddies, some are yellow and some little black ones.

I was invited to an Easter party and they had some little cotton biddies for each one, and we hunted some Easter eggs and found a great many. I hope my letter will not reach the waste basket. Your friend,

Noelle Thomson.

Lake Waccamav, N. C.

A DEAR LITTLE BROTHER.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy nine years old. I am in the third grade.

My teacher's name is Miss Gerald Lowry. I like her fine.

I have a dear little baby brother three months old.

I go to Sunday School and Christian Endeavor.

Your friend,
York, S. C. James Barnwell.

A BROTHER IN FRANCE.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl twelve years old. I am in the seventh grade. I like my teacher very much. Her name is Miss Thelma Naylor.

I have a brother in France.
Your unknown friend,
Sumter, S. C. Rosalie Spann.

READS THE LETTERS.

Dear Standard:

I enjoy hearing Mother read the letters in this department, and hope you will print mine.

I am in the first grade. My teacher's name is Miss Sudie Allison.

My brother and I have a pair of pet rabbits. We enjoy playing with them. I go to Sunday School every Sunday.

Your little friend,
York, S. C. Brison Barnwell.

MARY CONTRARY.

On the top step of the back porch sat Mary Belle with her doll Nancy in the pleasant spring air while the sun dropped down into rosy and peach-colored cloud blankets. Mother was cultivating her tiny lettuce plants, and father was setting out tomato plants. When he had finished, there was a little space between the last sturdy tomato stalk and the lettuce bed.

"There's almost room for another bed here," he said.

"Hardly a whole bed," said mother, smiling; "just a little crib."

That caught Mary Belle's ears. She jumped down the stairs calling, "Oh, give it to me, please, for my own little garden crib! Please say it is mine before Curtis wants it for carrots or Helen begs it for more peppers."

"Will you truly try to make it grow something that people can eat?" asked mother.

"I truly will," answered Mary Belle, "and I shall have more time, because I go to the kindergarten only in the morning."

And indeed it seemed that whenever Mary Belle was wanted it was wise to look first for her in the back yard. And every day doll Nancy wore her oldest gingham dress, so that she could go out, too, and sit in a grape basket while her little mother watched and weeded the five short rows. The two outside rows and the one in the very middle were going to be beets, as round as a ball and as red as a ripe apple. The two rows in between were to be radishes.

"That's a fine plan," said father, who had thought there could not possibly be more than two rows of anything in the crib garden. "The radishes will grow quickly and give you something to eat this spring, and they will be gone in time to give the beets more room when they get big enough to need it. And they will give you a crop for late summer."

But there were troubles, too, with that garden crib. Even before the tiny plants were up Dorothy came over from next door with her hand half full of big, flat white seeds.

"I brought them for your garden crib," she said. "They will grow into great big squashes. Let's plant them before school."

"Oh, I wish I could have squashes growing in my garden," said Mary Belle, "but there isn't any space left."

The next week Cousin Beth came over with a pill box full of surprise, more big seeds, which were gay in color. "Even the seeds are good to eat," she told Mary Belle, "but if you plant them they will grow as high as the garage in one summer."

"Oh, what are they?"

"They are sunflowers," said Beth, "and I brought them to plant in your garden crib."

"Oh, I'm sorry," said Mary Belle, "but I have to stick to the beets and radishes. They take all the room I have."

Beth was not very polite about it.

"You're a regular Mary Contrary about your old garden," she said.

It was a week or two later that Curtis brought home from the grocer's a package with a handsome picture on it of cut-open melons.

"Muskmelon seeds," he said. "I'm going to raise a bushel of melons."

"But your space is given to sweet corn and carrots," said Helen.

"Well, I'll stick them in, anyway, and later if it's too crowded I'll decide which I want to pull up and throw away," said Curtis. But he came to Mary Belle with some of the tempting seeds, too.

"You'll let me plant some of my muskmelons in your crib garden, won't you? I'll share up even with you on the melons, and you know how well you like muskmelons."

"But I can't, now. My beets are so big and strong!" Mary Belle felt almost like crying. "I wish I had a whole farm full of land; but I can't have muskmelons this year."

Curtis was a good deal disappointed, or he would never have said, "Cousin Beth is right. You ought to be named Mary Contrary."

After that, some of the other children picked up the nickname and used to sing at her, "Mary, Mary, quite contrary, how does your garden grow?" Mary Belle wished she could talk it over with father, but she did not want to tell tales. She did not know that he knew all the time.

Then one day the whole family were out looking at the garden after supper. Mother's rows had all grown very well, and had been giving them many good things to eat. Father's tomatoes were ripening fast, and his string beans had climbed all over the iron fence. Then they came to Curtis' space. It looked like an African jungle, crowded with a dozen new things that he had planted since he put in his carrots and corn in the spring. None of the plants could grow well; so there was not anything good to eat either above the ground or beneath it. Curtis just made a funny face at it and said, "Next year I guess I'll stick to what I choose in the spring."

Then they came to the crib garden, with the forest of tomato plants on one side of it and, hugging it close, on the other side the salsify that mother had planted after her lettuce was gone. The radishes had been served for breakfasts weeks before, scarlet and crisp, but the beets had grown so big that they filled all the space between the rows. Mary Belle pulled up one. It was as round as a ball and as red as a ripe apple. Mother and Helen and Curtis all said, "How fine! How big and red!"

Daddy said nothing for a moment. Then he reached down and took Mary Belle's hand and squeezed it hard as he said, "I wish we had more Mary Contraries in this family. It would be good for gardens and for our country."

And Mary Belle told doll Nancy all about it because she was so happy over it.—Emma Mauritz Larson, in The Youth's Companion.

THE PRINCESS FANNETTE.

Fanny was a very unhappy little girl. She couldn't have beautiful clothes, and ride in a wonderful carriage like the little Princess did. That was the reason Fanny was so unhappy. She even hated her name, and made up her mind that she would change it some day. Sometimes she wondered what kind of food the Princess ate. She knew it must consist of lovely, pink-frosted cakes and ice cream.

One day, when she was longing most to be just like the Princess, she suddenly found that she was walking in the palace grounds. She felt a little bit afraid at first, but there was a lady with her, so she knew she was safe. It was a very, very beautiful garden, and she wanted to pick some flowers, but the lady said:

"No, no, Princess, you are forbidden to touch the roses. You might prick your fingers."

So she was a Princess. Oh, how beautiful! Still, it would be nicer if she could pick just one rose.

A beautiful butterfly was winging its way from flower to flower. The little girl darted after it, but the lady called out:

"Oh, oh, you musn't run like that. It is very undignified in a Princess. Come, let me take you to the palace."

The palace! She was really going to the palace! On the way she passed the gardener, and smiled very sweetly to him. The lady scolded her about it, but she couldn't understand just what she had done that was wrong.

In the great hallway, another lady met her, and bowed before her. How funny! No one had ever bowed like that to her before.

"I have orders from the Queen Mother to dress you for a ride."

Dress her, Why she had been able to dress herself for years. Anyway, she was already dressed. What a bother to do it all over again!

"The Princess Fannette will please lead the way to her boudoir."

Of all things! What was a boudoir? But somehow she seemed to know the way. At last she was gowned in a wonderful blue velvet robe. It was quite long and heavily trimmed.

As she stood at the top of the stairs, and looked at the shiny banister, she thought what fun it would be to slide down it. She got ready to do it, but the two ladies threw up their hands in horror, and she knew that she had made a mistake. Couldn't a Princess do anything!

The carriage was waiting, and she saw her mother sitting in it. She ran delightedly to meet her, but her mother frowned as she said:

"There, there, you will wrinkle me all up. You must learn to control your emotions."

Oh dear, she couldn't even kiss her own mother. She sat very quiet in the big carriage, until she saw a little girl whom she knew. Then she jumped up and waved both hands to her.

"Princess Fannette," said her mother, in surprise, "I have told you repeatedly that it is not becoming in a Princess to wave her hands. You must just bow."

Fannette didn't enjoy the ride very much, because there were so many things she couldn't do. At last they were back in the palace, and the ladies had to dress her for supper. This dressing business was a nuisance, but now for the pink-frosted cakes and ice cream. They led her to another beautiful room, and she sat down at a little table. A man in wonderful clothes, with shiny buttons, brought a bowl of milk, and set it before her. Then he brought some slices of bread on a plate. As she was very hungry, she soon finished them. Next, a tiny square of sponge cake was given her. That was the end of her supper. Oh, how disappointed she was! No pink-frosted cakes, no kind mother to tell her she musn't eat too much jelly! How she longed to see her mother. The tears began to burn in her eyes. Then, from away off somewhere, she heard a voice calling:

"Fanny, Fanny, come in to supper."

She opened her eyes, and there she was lying under the apple tree. Had she really just been dreaming!

"Fanny, I've made you a dear little tart."

She jumped up quickly. It was her own mother's voice that called her. Oh, how glad she felt that she was Fanny, and not the Princess Fannette! On the way to the house she stopped to pick a wild rose. There was no one to tell her she might prick her fingers. She ran happily to the kitchen, and tucked the flower in her mother's dress. Never again would she wish that she was a Princess!—Exchange.

CHICORA COLLEGE FOR WOMEN.

One of the strongest and most helpful factors in the student life of Chicora College for Women is the Co-operative Student Government Association. This association has just held an election of officers for the session 1919-20 and the following young ladies were chosen: Miss Esther Ashe, chairman and president of the student-body; Miss Kate Yarbrough, secretary and representative of the Junior class; Miss Elizabeth Salley, representative of the Senior class; Miss Margaret Russell, representative of the Sophomore class; Miss Claudia Key, representative of the Specials. The representative of the Freshman class will be elected after the college opens in the Fall.

THE WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.

The following is the program for commencement at this school: Commencement Exercises of the Westminster School will be from May 17 to May 20.

The following program is announced:

Saturday, May 17, 8 P. M.—Entertainment by the Primary Department.

Sunday, May 18, 11 A. M.—Commencement Sermon by Rev. J. G. Garth, of Charlotte, N. C.; 8 P. M., Sermon to Y. M. C. A. by Rev. H. C. Hammond, of St. Charles, S. C.

Monday, May 19, 10 A. M.—Entertainment by Senior Class; 2 P. M., Annual Meeting of Board of Trustees; 8 P. M., Annual Debate.

Tuesday, May 20, 10 A. M.—Oratorical Contest; 11 A. M., Address by Rev. J. T. Dendy, of Belmont, N. C.; 12 M., Awarding of Medals, Honors, and Certificates; followed by Dinner on the Ground.

ELISE HIGH SCHOOL.

The fifteenth annual commencement of the Elise High School will be held on the 20th day of May, 1919, at the High School auditorium, Hemp, N. C.

Rev. E. C. Murray, D. D., of St. Pauls, N. C., will preach the baccalaureate sermon on Sunday morning, the 18th of May. On Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock the graduating exercises will be held and Rev. Eugene Alexander, of Raeford, will give the Class Address in the afternoon. The preliminary contest in declaiming and reciting will take place on Friday evening, May 9, and the final on Monday evening, May 19. Gold medals will be awarded the successful boy and girl at the final contest. Unusual interest is being shown in this work.

We urge every person interested in Elise High School to come to Hemp at this time. This marks the close of a very successful year of work and it is hoped that next year the present pupils will all return and as the war will be over and business conditions on a better footing, a most pleasant year of work is looked for. The work this year has been much more successful than it was possible to hope at the beginning of the term and, despite war, sickness and financial difficulties, all have enjoyed the year's work.

On Tuesday evening, the 20th of May, "Cinderella in Flowerland" will be given by pupils from all departments and it promises to be a musical treat as well as a most pleasing little play. Admission will be charged to cover the expenses connected with the commencement exercises and also to apply on a new piano. A gold medal is to be awarded the pupil who has made the best progress in music, and one to the pupil whose record for the year's work is the best.

The graduating class is composed of nine young ladies and three young men. The distinctive mark of this class is that we have three sets of sisters, four of whom are twins, Margaret and Grace Carter, Margaret and Alice Brown and Pratt and Katherine Covington. With but few exceptions, the members of this class all expect to enter college next fall and it is probable that each and every one of them will do so. The class motto, "We strive: to seek; to find; and not to yield," is very fitting for these young people.

FLORA MACDONALD COLLEGE.

Flora Macdonald College commencement will be held May 18 to May 21, beginning on Sunday, May 18, with the baccalaureate sermon by Rev. W. E. Hill, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Fayetteville, N. C. Rev. A. C. Ormond, of Davidson, N. C., will preach the sermon before the Y. W. C. A. in the evening.

Monday, the 19th, will be Alumnae Day. The business meeting of the association will be held at 11:30, and at one o'clock a Cafeteria luncheon will be served. All alumnae who expect to be here—and it is hoped that they are many—are asked to write to Miss Polly MacRae, Red Springs, as soon as they read this notice and let her know that they are coming.

On Monday evening the class of 1919 will present Shakespeare's As You Like It.

On Tuesday, the 20th, at 9:30 o'clock, the Board of Trustees will meet, and at eleven o'clock the annual meeting of the Scottish Society of America will be held. The principal address will be delivered by Hon. A. W. McLean, now of the War Finance Corporation, Washington, D. C. Others who will speak and take part in the exercises include Colonel J. Bryan Grimes, president of the Society; Dr. Archibald Henderson, of the University of North Carolina, and other prominent members of the society who are interested in the establishment of the Scottish Library in the State.

On Tuesday afternoon and evening the art exhibit and concert and Wednesday the commencement address and graduating exercises of the class of 1919, when 19 diplomas and four certificates will be presented to the following: Nancy Lee Anderson, of South Carolina, B. M.; Julia Gordon Arrowood, of North Carolina, A. B.; Agnes N. Coxe, of North Carolina, B. L.; Kate McRae Evans, of South Carolina, A. B.; Stella Winston Etheredge, of North Carolina, B. M.; Margaret Faulkner, of North Carolina, A. B.; Annie Covington Henagan, of South Carolina, B. L.; Grace Henderson, of North Carolina, A. B.; Mary Patterson Livingston, of North Carolina, B. M.; Kate Arrowood McIntyre, of North Carolina, B. L.; Sadie Campbell Menzies, of North Carolina, B. L.; Janie McMillan McGougan, of North Carolina, A. B.; Ruth Elizabeth Manning, of South Carolina, B. L.; Mattie Mills McCutchen, of South Carolina, B. L.; Ruth Marks Patterson, of North Carolina, A. B.; Leila Caroline Porter, of South Carolina, B. L.; Byah Hardy Richardson, of North Carolina, B. M.; Annie Burt Stainback, of North Carolina, B. L.; Helen Stransky, of New York City, A. B. Certificates in Household Arts will be awarded to Willie May McCallum, Mary McGirt and Hazel Evans O'Brien, of North Carolina, and Mary Willie Tate, of South Carolina.

It has been practically impossible to get complete returns from the Three and a Half Million Campaign. The figures given above represent only partial reports from any Synod. In some Synods only about half the churches have made any report. It is known that in every Presbytery there are churches that have made the Every Member Canvass but have neglected to report the amount subscribed. The pledges received to date, with several Presbyteries missing, reach about $2,400,000. When to this amount is added the pledges of the churches not reporting, together with the normal contributions of the churches not making the canvass, it will be seen that a marked advance has been made over last year. With an earnest and persistent effort on the part of the campaign managers, we believe the goal of $3,500,000 can be reached by the close of the church year, March 31, 1920.

THE HOME OF GOOD FURNITURE

CRITICISM OF THE FRENCH.

We have read recently that Premier Clemenceau is somewhat concerned over the matter that American soldiers have been criticizing the French people with more or less severity. The Premier should not be unduly agitated over the matter, for Americans are given quite freely to the exercise of the critical function and in some cases must not be taken too seriously.

One thing against which American soldiers in France have declared themselves in more or less emphatic fashion is the supposed habit of French tradesmen to overcharge in the selling of goods. Articles bought in French stores were said to cost considerably more than those purchased in commissary stores or canteens. Many of the boys have persistently declared that there was one price for French people and another, considerably larger, for the doughboys. A good deal of testimony to this effect has reached America through the letters of soldiers to their home folks. We have no doubt that in quite a number of cases this is true. French tradesmen, particularly those in the smaller towns and villages, are human enough to secure the largest possible profit in the handling of their wares. So far as we are informed, this is quite characteristic of the human race the world round—United Presbyterian.

MOTHER'S ALLY.

There is always one good remedy on the family medicine shelf that mother can use in all accidents and mishaps to the members of the family. Burns, bruises, cuts, stings, boils, sores and various forms of skin eruption are quickly soothed and steadily healed with Gray's Ointment. Its constant use for a hundred years has made it a family word in every household. You should keep a box of it on your shelf for emergencies. If your druggist cannot supply you send his name to W. F. Gray & Co., 843 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., and a liberal sample will be immediately sent you free.—Adv.

EDITH CAVELL'S LAST HOURS.

How Edith Cavell, the British nurse officially murdered by the Germans during their occupation of Belgium, spent her last hours was published last week in an Associated Press correspondence from London giving an interview with Rev. H. S. T. Gahan, an Anglican clergyman, who ministered to her the night of her execution. She was brave to the last, true to her noblest self and to the cause of humanity even in the face of death.

"I expected my sentence," she said to Mr. Gahan, "but I am glad to die for my country. In the sight of eternity, I know now it is not enough to love only your own country. You must love all, and not hate any."

Aided by a German Protestant military chaplain, Mr. Gahan received permission, he says, to see Miss Cavell in prison on the night before the death sentence was executed.

"With the chaplain," Mr. Gahan said, "I went to the cell door, and it opened and Miss Cavell stood in the doorway. I had gone prepared for a very trying scene. There stood my friend—looking as calmly sweet as any one could look. She was unchanged, except that she appeared better for the enforced rest in prison. The warden withdrew, and we were not interrupted.

"I remember practically all she said. She was thankful for the quiet time, as her life had been such a burden and rush in many respects. She was not sorry to go, for her life had contained so much trial that she was weary beyond endurance. 'They have treated me very kindly here,' she said."

The little communion vessels were placed on a chair, and after the service Mr. Gahan recited "Abide With Me," Miss Cavell joining under her breath.

"Then I felt," the minister continued, "that I must not stay much longer, for I had been there an hour. I stood up and said, 'Good-by,' and we were face to face. She was looking slightly strained, but nothing more. We shook hands and smiled, and I added: 'We shall meet again. Good-by.'"

The great crime of hurrying the execution, according to Mr. Gahan, belonged to the military governor of Brussels, who would not wait to communicate with headquarters.

SOME PESTS THAT PESTER YOUR GARDEN.

Cutworms head the list. The bug books list more than twenty kinds of cutworms.

How to control cutworms: If you have only a few plants, put paper collars around them, an inch or so from the plants. Push the paper down an inch into the soil. Or, melt the bottom out of old tin cans, set them over the plants and press them into the soil an inch or so. Where cutworms are very troublesome and there are many plants to protect, the best remedy is to use poisoned bait. Scatter the bait around the plants. Since the cutworms usually hide before they die, dead ones will seldom be seen.

Control of plant-lice: Plant-lice can not be poisoned, for they suck their food from beneath the surface of the plant tissue. The way to make them hump their backs is to spray them with kerosene emulsion. To make the emulsion dissolve one-half pound of soap in one gallon of hot water. Remove from the fire and while hot add two gallons of kerosene. Churn the mixture until it is creamy. Dilute with twelve parts of water.

Striped cucumber-beetle: This small beetle is one of the most serious enemies of cucumbers, squashes and melons. To get under their tough shells and kill them is almost impossible. The beetles refuse to eat poisons. Cheesecloth and mosquito netting are often used to protect the plants. Sometimes a shallow box is used; the bottom is taken out, netting or screen is tacked over the top and the covered frame is placed over the plants. Others sprinkle flour or finely-powdered air-slaked lime over the plants to keep the beetles away. Tobacco dust is also used successfully:

Colorado potato-beetle: That is its Sunday name; all through the week it is called "potato-bug." The larvae which hatch from eggs laid by the beetles do the damage. They are reddish in color. In small patches they can be controlled by hand picking and killing with boiling water, or kerosene. On large fields, spray the vines with Paris green, one pound to fifty gallons of water. To avoid burning the leaves, add two pounds of lime. Or, use three pounds of lead arsenate paste to fifty gallons of water. This will not burn the leaves, but is a slower acting poison. Spray when the small larvae are hatching from the yellow eggs attached to the leaves; if a second brood appears, spray again.—The Farm Journal.

THE PARABLE OF MAGNANIMITY.

I sat in a restaurant, and one of the sons of Ham did serve the table. And there sat nigh unto me a very Unreasonable Man who complained of the service, and the food, and the prices, and of much beside. And to the Ethiopian he was abusive. And the Ethiopian took it very courteously.

And after the man had gone out, I commended the Ethiopian. And I said unto him, That man was most unreasonable, and thou didst show rare patience.

And he said, Yassah, he sho was mighty vigorous in de language dat he used.

And I said again, And thou didst do well to govern thy temper.

And he said, Yassah. Thank you, sah.

And I said, It is a rare and fine quality, that of holding one's temper under such conditions.

Now when I had said this, the Ethiopian waiter grew confidential.

And he said, When a man is in my position ob superiority, sah, he kin affohd to be magnanimous.

And I wondered what he considered his position of superiority.

And I said, Any man who can control his temper is in a position of superiority.

And he said, Yassah. But I has de exceptional advantage, and I kin affohd to overlook sech things as dat man said.

And I was interested. And I besought him that he should tell me about his position of superiority which enabled him to control his temper, and to exhibit magnanimity.

And for a time he would not. But when I desired him much, he told me in what manner he made proof of his superiority.

And he spake thus privately unto me, I did put dishwater in his coffee.

Now when I heard these words, I considered many things.

For I saw that indeed the Ethiopian possessed a position of superiority, and could avail himself of many expedients that might assist him in the discipline of self-control. And I resolved that I would be very considerate of the feelings of Ethiopian waiters. For I am not fond of dishwater, and I have had much coffee that tasted magnanimously like unto it.

And I considered yet farther, and I said, If this humble son of Ham can establish within his own soul, either with or without the aid of dishwater, a sufficient assurance of superiority so that he can rise to a place of magnanimity, so may every man. And it might be that most could achieve magnanimity that would make the dishwater superfluous.

Nevertheless, I smiled within myself to think how the abusive man had gotten what he deserved. But no quantity of dishwater would make him magnanimous.—Congregationalist.

ANDREW CARNEGIE'S GIFT TO HIS DAUGHTER.

We have all been interested in the announcement of the marriage of Miss Margaret Carnegie to Ensign Roswell Miller. The newspapers mentioned in great headlines the things we expected them to mention, and we were told that Miss Margaret would be the richest woman in the world and would inherit a fortune of $600,000,000. It was also stated in an amazed, exclamatory sort of way that no member of the "400" was present. It seems, however, that this absence on the part of the "400" did not indicate that they had snubbed Mr. Carnegie and his charming daughter, but that no member of the "400" happened to be invited. As to who constitutes the mystical body of the "400" we have not as yet been informed. The thing, however, that specially interests us is that she married a young man whose chief distinction and attraction did not consist in inherited millions. He was a volunteer in the last war and made good. He is in college now taking a course in civil engineering, and he intends to make his own way in life and put the shield of his strength and love rather than the shield of millions over his bride. We never saw Miss Carnegie, but we liked her picture. It revealed a wholesome, sunny-hearted, genuine American girl. Her father did not give her a bushel of diamonds (very much to the regret of the newspaper paragrapher), but we are told that his wedding gift to his daughter was a "sunny disposition, a smile, and a hearty kiss." Truly, a splendid gift, and to be desired of any bride. We are glad that it was a nice, quiet home wedding and that we were not afflicted with newspaper vulgarities about the display of the vulgar rich. It is true that this wedding was not wholly planned to please us, but nevertheless we are glad to state that we are very well pleased.—United Presbyterian.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

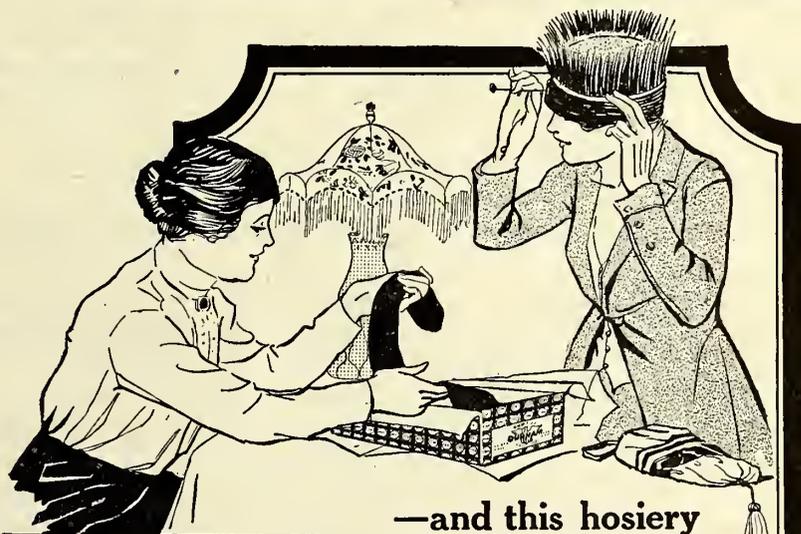

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities, may have a copy of his money-saving shoe book for the asking.

DRUG TRADERS FLOOD CHINA

All the civilized powers contributed to rid China of the blight of opium, which had sapped the energy and the strength of her 400,000,000 people for centuries. That was a big achievement. But while the great war has been in progress and the vigilance of the western powers has been relaxed, advantage has been taken thereof to flood the country with morphine and with cocaine.

These drugs are being manufactured by the ton in Korea, in Formosa, in the Philippines, and in certain districts of Japan especially around Osaka, in defiance of the prohibition of her government, and are being disseminated all over China.

Missionaries of all denominations, foreign merchants, consular officials, mine managers, etc., are all alive to the phenomenally rapid growth of the evil. The Chinese government is in such a condition of confusion and chaos that it

An Attractive House Is Easily Rented

At all times the artistic dwelling is in demand, whether large or small, expensive or inexpensive. An attractive, inexpensive house, however, is an exception. QUICKBILT Bungalows combine beauty and economy.

QUICKBILT

BUNGALOW NO. 43

thoroughly covering the needs of the average renter; is especially built for renting purposes. It is well built, cozy, convenient, well lighted well ventilated, attractive both inside and out, and small, but cozy. It is inexpensive in construction, but will bring a good rent. A house too large is as much a drawback as a house too small. This one is just the right size. Bungalows are always in demand. QUICKBILT Bungalow No. 43 is neither cheap nor elaborate. It is especially designed to make the best investment from a rent standpoint.

In erecting this bungalow you will SAVE

WASTE. All the material is already prepared and the large waste piles of scrap lumber are thus eliminated. Every foot of lumber is used. You buy no surplus material.

TIME. Every piece of material has its own place. Everything is numbered and systematized. The instructions to the carpenter are complete and the order of erection is simple. No time is lost in looking for material. The time ordinarily required in preliminary cutting and trimming is saved. As a large portion of the house is built in panels, just that much time and cost is eliminated in construction.

LABOR. With the entire process of erection systematized and complete, the great building "Bugaboo"—preliminary preparation—eliminated, the labor in the erection of a QUICKBILT Bungalow is reduced to a minimum and therefore, a minor consideration. A carpenter of average speed and experience with two laborers can erect the house in 7 days. The ordinary house will take almost as many weeks.

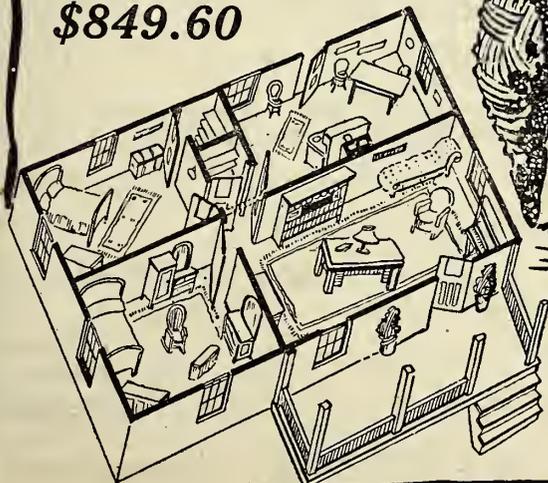

MONEY. A saving in waste of material, time and labor, is a saving in money. With the QUICKBILT Bungalow the expense of erection is cut in half, but that is not all. You need not pay a contractor's fee. The erection is so simple and systematic that any carpenter of average intelligence can erect it with ease. Many owners build them themselves. You pay no architect's fee. The complete plans with all specifications and instructions are furnished FREE. And yet the plans are made after careful study by the best and most experienced of architects, with a view to eliminating waste and gaining the greatest possible convenience, economy and strength. The cost of the material is further reduced by the fact that you buy it from the mill, manufacturer and forest in one. Our complete plants cover the entire process, from the tree to the completed house. You pay no middle-man a profit. You buy direct from the source of material. The price is therefore rock bottom. In our complete plants in which hundreds of houses are built simultaneously every short cut to perfection is used and every waste avoided. As the houses are made in great quantities, you gain the advantage of the low cost of quantity production.

A Safe, Profitable Investment.
One of the best investments obtainable is the attractive, serviceable, rentable house. That is, if the cost of the house is not too great. It is difficult to lower the cost without cheapening the house. It is possible, however, with the QUICKBILT Bungalow No. 43, for it is built for just that purpose. A house and lot costing $1,500.00 and renting for an average of $25 per month, is bringing 20 per cent. interest. Taxes, insurance, repairs, etc., will reduce it to about 16 per cent. Can you make a better investment? The rent incomes from an attractive QUICKBILT Bungalow at this time of high rents and universal demand for houses, will make it a profitable investment.

Bishop Partridge is a collector of anecdotes about ministers, and in an anecdotal mood he said the other day:

"I once asked a minister how he had got through a certain service. He answered grimly:

"Well, bishop, the service was soothing, moving, and satisfactory."

"Yes," I said a little puzzled.

"Yes, exactly," said he. "It was soothing because over half the congregation went to sleep. It was moving because half of the other half left before I was through. And it must have been satisfactory, inasmuch as I wasn't asked to come again."—Los Angeles Times.

It Rhymed.

"If," said the teacher, "you rhyme the facts of history, it will help you remember them. For instance: 'In fourteen hundred ninety-two Columbus sailed the ocean blue.' That will help you to remember the date of the discovery of America."

Next day the teacher said: "Johnny, when did Columbus discover America?"

"In fourteen hundred ninety-three Columbus sailed the dark blue sea!"—Continent.

The Stingy Christian.

HE is having a hard time. The incessant appeals for money give him no pleasure. The arguments on which the appeals are based trouble his conscience. He is finding it more and more difficult to justify his niggardness to his own better self. He is afraid of the light. He must keep the cover on his penuriousness, and he cannot disguise from himself that his secret is a guilty secret.

He is afraid of the tithe law. It suggests that he is in danger of falling into the hands of the sheriff. It points to a possible reckoning in which he might be found wanting. He welcomes the assaults of those who would prove that the tithe law passed with Judaism. But the comfort which these assailants bring is often lessened or destroyed by their insistence that the Christian should not need a law to make him do even more for Christ than the Jew did under constraint for his religion.

He is afraid of the doctrine of stewardship as that doctrine is being preached in this modern day. All these years he has been singing:

"Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were a present far too small,
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my love, my life, my all."

But he has reasoned that if the "whole realm of nature were a present far too small," the little pittance that he possessed would be no present at all. So he has contented himself with the idea that such a noble confession was in itself a sufficient tribute. Now, however, the doctrine of stewardship is preached as involving an obligation resting on the pocketbook. It cannot be met by uttering pious platitudes, or professions of entire consecration. It demands the loosening of the purse-strings, and the return to the Divine Owner of a part of that which has been given in trust. Moreover, this part must be a definite part, and such a proportion as looks really respectable. A poor, pitiful bagatelle will not serve the purpose, but will be an insult rather than the payment of a confessed obligation.

What especially disturbs the stingy Christian is that the laymen are getting after him. He had grown used to the preacher, and could counter his appeals by calling him a "great beggar." It was a part of the official business of the preacher to present the causes, and if he did it effectively and touched the springs of emotion, the result was spasmodic and the stingy Christian soon tightened his grip again. But now the layman is abroad in the land. His specialty is church finance. He speaks with startling and painful directness. His message is aimed at the pocketbook. He makes a clear-cut, definite demand. He has already met it himself, and for this reason presses it more relentlessly. He not only proves that the standard which he sets ought to be met, but that it can be met, has been met, and the result has been attended with blessing. The stingy Christian finds it hard to parry the appeal of his brother layman. He feels ashamed of himself to have one who like himself belongs to the pew get up and prove him a shirker.

The lessons of the war add to the hardships of the stingy Christian. He is confronted with the fact that at the call of patriotism money flowed free as water; that when his country's flag was threatened, not millions but billions of dollars were turned into the channels of war; and that no sacrifice seemed too great, not even life itself when the object was to defeat the foes of freedom. It is not at all pleasant to the stingy Christian to be asked to look at his miserable little dribbling into the treasury of Christ in contrast with the great outpouring of sacrificial giving evoked by the war. He is forced to undergo this very unpleasant experience time and again.

So it comes to pass that the stingy Christian is fasting badly these days. He is made to look at himself from various angles, and the more he sees of himself the less reason he sees to like himself. It will be a blessed day for him when he sheds his stingy skin, and enters into the joy of genuine Christian liberty.

The K. of C. and the Y. M. C. A.

The logicians teach us that one of the most fruitful causes of error in this life is by what is known as "hasty generalization."

A traveler rushes through the South, for example, and at several small railway stations he sees a few idle loungers whose English is by no means classical. He thereupon writes up the South as a section where the people are idle and illiterate, ignoring the fact that in the quiet of their homes or business places there are men and women equal, in appearance and culture, to the people of any section.

The many unjust and harsh judgments passed upon the Y. M. C. A. War Work have been due to the same hasty generalization.

In a great organization, numbering thousands of workers, hastily gathered under the stress of circumstances, unable to be sifted so as to weed out the unfit, there must necessarily be many misfits and many unfits.

Because soldiers come into contact with such men, they have no right to judge the thousands of worthy men by these few, and moreover they have no right to forget the many benefits they receive from the Association—the huts where they find entertainment, and the men who at the peril of their lives have ministered to their comrades on the battle-front.

However, we do not blame the boys as much as we do those who listen to their complaints and spread the charges, for the young are always impulsive and hasty in their judgments, but older persons ought to know by experience how unreliable are these judgments of the young, and instead of retailing these charges upon every occasion, they should do all they can to check them, and in the meantime make a thorough examination of these charges. Facts will be gladly furnished by those in charge, and when they are presented it will be found that no organization in the War Work has a record of which they have more reason to be proud.

The readiness with which good men, without any investigation, have accepted these charges at their face value has not been complimentary to our human nature.

Recently, we are glad to note, there has been a revulsion of feeling, and hasty judgments have been reversed, and those who at first were too ready to entertain these charges, are now among the stoutest defenders of the Association.

On the Way to the General Assembly.

THE orthodox plan of reaching the Assembly is to start just in time to reach the place of meeting at the opening day in order to get into touch with the preliminary movings which generally foretell what is to be done. At least such is the plan for busy men, and surely no man could be busier than an editor.

Occasionally, however, in life, the best laid schemes of mice and men gang aft a-gley, so that the Sunday before the Assembly met found us in Birmingham. We landed there in the midst of the great reception to the 167th Regiment. We have seen crowds before, but this one was the greatest. Thousands lined the streets which became so jammed that the street cars could only advance by feet. Having already witnessed the Charlotte reception of the 30th Division, which was a counterpart of this one, though not as large, we were soon satiated.

On Sunday morning we attended the South Highlands Presbyterian Church, and found that John McNeill, the famous Scotch evangelist, would appear for the first time and begin his pastorate in this Church which he recently accepted. This Church has been without a pastor since the resignation of Dr. Albert Sidney Johnson in the early Summer.

Being just across the street from the Jewish Temple, where Dr. Edmonds, the deposed Presbyterian preacher, holds forth to a "Cave of Adullam" congregation, it has had a difficult time in keeping its flock together.

Dr. Edmonds has a queer conglomeration of theological dyspeptics, men and women who have no liking for sound doctrine, but long after the mild and the sentimental. He seems to have a peculiar knack of satisfying these cravings, and if we may judge his preaching by his letters to the daily press, he ought to be able to measure up to every demand. The Jew and Gentile alike find much to please, while the skeptic and agnostic find no stumbling blocks in their paths. He draws large crowds, and therefore must affect the success of the work across the way.

That Mr. McNeill should be willing to accept a pastorate and settle down has surprised every one, though a possible explanation may be that he is growing old, and wishes to enjoy the quiet life of a pastorate. He may be old in years, but physically he seems as strong and mentally as alert as when we heard him at the Chicago Exposition, nearly 30 years ago. Time alone will prove whether he will be a stronger attraction than the theological comet across the way. He is not only a man of parts, but he is a man of much humor and many twistings of body and grimaces of face. He not only shocks the sense of reverence peculiar to a Presbyterian congregation, but he actually takes pleasure in so doing—in fact he does it with malice aforethought.

After one of his humorous remarks he said, "I am glad to see you smile. You people imagine that you are pious and spiritually minded when you sit with solemn tombstone faces. You cannot fool God by that pretense, nor can you fool me."

Again, "Come to the prayer service Wednesday evening. I promise you that it will not be dull. Give me a chance and if I am dull, then you may stay at home afterwards." Of course, being an "Old Mossback" and hyper-conservative, our sense of propriety was somewhat shocked. When, however, we left out the humorous sallies and the evident attempts to provoke laughter, we have to confess that we have rarely heard sounder doctrine or more wonderful preaching.

His sermons stand out in the mind like pictures. The sermon in the morning was from Chronicles where David moved the ark and Uzza was stricken dead—and the one at night from 23d Psalms: "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life."

He rings true on all the fundamentals, and while he may be lacking in public dignity according to Presbyterian standards, he is sound on the essentials and strictly conservative where the gospel and social service are brought into contrast.

It means a great deal to the Presbyterian Church to have on one side of a street a preacher of the old doctrines, while a novice in theology is holding forth on the other side. Soon the novelty will wear off, and men and women hungering for the old gospel will turn from the false and cleave to the true.

On Tuesday evening we left Birmingham for the Assembly, but not till the next morning did we find ourselves in the midst of the brethren on their way to New Orleans, where the Assembly was to convene. There were men from Virginia especially, which meant that the editor was once more among old friends. We arrived in New Orleans at noon on Wednesday, which gave us time to rest and get acquainted.

There is an old saying that dog will not eat dog—which means that men of the same profession will always stand together. Dr. George Summey, who has much to do with the entertainment of the Assembly, was once an editor, which meant that he would see that the editors landed on their feet. He opened his own home to the three editors of the Observer, the Presbyterian of the South, and the Standard—where in three large rooms on the second floor they could be at their ease, with none to molest them or make them afraid. While the Commissioners were, in many places, placed two in a room, these knights of the quill were blessed with a room for each man. The arrangements for the comfort and business of the Assembly are the best that we have had for years.

On Thursday morning at eleven o'clock the Assembly was formally opened with a sermon by the last moderator, Rev. Dr. Jas. I Vance, from Jno. 12:24, in which he asked the question, "Can the Church rebuild the world?"

Dr. Vance is a charming preacher, abounding in epigrammatic sentences, which sometimes obscures his meaning—and enables others to place a wrong construction on his views.

The choir opened the service by singing "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," which at once glided into "My Country 'Tis of Thee," rather a combination of Church and State that must have jolted the ideas of some of the strict constructionists.

At every Assembly the most interesting moment is when the moderator is elected.

Only two names were placed in nomination, that of Dr. W. R. Dobyns, of St. Joseph, Mo., and that of Dr. A. M. Fraser, of Staunton. In the minds of the members, Dr. Dobyns represented the union sentiment of the Church, while Dr. Fraser represented the opposite view.

The nominating speeches were characterized by elongation and were fulsome as well as full—and one wondered at their close whether these excellent brethren recognized themselves. Both are strong preachers, men of deep spirituality and great moral courage, and either one would have graced the chair. The choice fell upon Dr. Fraser by a vote of 112 to 139. After the moderator question had been settled, Rev. Dr. Adams, of South Carolina, and Rev. E. D. Brown, of North Carolina, were elected clerks to assist the regular clerks.

Greetings were received from the Baptist Convention.

The afternoon was devoted to hearing the reports of the various executive committees. The Foreign Mission reported through Dr. Chester that in the foreign field there has been 5,491 additions, the majority being in Africa.

Can the Church Build the New World?

By Rev. Jas. I. Vance, D. D., Retiring Moderator.

Sermon preached in the Napoleon Avenue Church at New Orleans, Thursday morning, May 15, 1919, at the opening of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States:

Text—"Except a grain of wheat fall into the earth and die, it abideth by itself alone; but if it die, it beareth much fruit."—John 12:24.

BY death he does not mean stagnation nor extinction nor oblivion. He means surrender and sacrifice and service and the immortality which builds itself out of such graves into a glory that is fadeless and a life that is eternal. "Except a grain of wheat fall into the earth and die, it abideth by itself alone; but if it die, it beareth much fruit."

It is Nature's law. Not a blade of grass leaps from the sod in the springtime but must first obey this law. Not a flower lifts its face toward the sun but does it from a grave. Not a harvest field billows from green to gold across the wide plains but marches over places where slain life sleeps. Not a tree stands up in the forest, not a vine climbs a wall or wraps its tendrils around a trellis, but started on its way by kissing the face of death. It is Nature's law and its application is as wide as God's world.

It is also a law of grace. Jesus lifts it from the flower-gardens and the farm fields, from the forests and the meadows, and enacts it into the code of the spirit. It is one of the natural laws in the spiritual world. It reveals the soul's trail to God. No man can find life without tasting death, can achieve victory without experiencing surrender, can climb up without first climbing down. Humiliation precedes exaltation. The cross anticipates the crown. Self-effacement must supplant self-glorification. Death must build the road for life.

This means that service is a bigger thing than salvation; that salvation is a by-product of service; that the business of a Christian is not so much to get to heaven as to do the will of God. It was this Paul meant when he said, "I could wish myself accursed for my brethren." The salvation which would take him to heaven and leave his brethren in hell could never satisfy him. He would rather go to hell himself than have his people there.

Christ indicts the cloister idea of sainthood which substitutes a spiritual boudoir for a street of service and self-repression and repose for sacrificial suffering. Christ sought the sepulchre not as a couch of repose, not as an escape from the world, but as a place from which he would rise into life, into a ministry of undying service, and ceaseless intercession for mankind. And he who would know God must efface himself and first kiss the face of death.

It is the law to whose demands the world's Redeemer yielded. Jesus never asked men to do what He has not done. He was a great preacher but His singularity consists in that He practiced all that He preached. He preached death and He died; He talked of the cross and He lived in its shadow and stumbled down the broken road with its heavy beam cutting into his tired flesh and climbed the hill to where its gaunt arms waited to claim Him as their victim. Christ had His Calvary and so He can preach it; He effaced Himself. There in the garden, He said, "Not My will but thine be done." Yonder on the cross He cried, "Into Thy hands I commit my spirit." He was wrapped in the bands of death and laid in Joseph's tomb. Jesus comes to us from a grave and so can say, "Except a grain of wheat fall into the earth and die, it abideth alone."

Shall we stop here with this law? It is the law to which Christ Himself conformed; it is Nature's law; and its application is as wide as God's world; it is the law for the individual Christian. If he is to enjoy fellowship with God, he must experience something of what Paul meant when he said, "I die daily."

A Law for the Church.

Is it not also a law for the Church? If it be true that a grain of wheat must die before it can live, that a Christian must think more of serving than of getting served; that even Christ spared not Himself but sought a cross, are we to conclude that His Church may repudiate all this for itself and imagine that it can live without dying? Is there one law for the individual Christian and another law when these individual Christians are gathered together into an organization? Are there obligations that are binding in a personal way but from which we are immune in an ecclesiastical way? While it was a holy thing for Paul to say, "I could wish myself accursed for my brethren," would it be an impious thing for the Church to wish itself accursed for the sake of humanity? Is the salvation of the Church more important than the work it was sent to do? While Christ speaks of death to the individual Christian, are we to conclude that the Church is so holy, so self-sufficient, that He would never suggest that it would best die in order to live?

Is it not possible for good people to be hypnotized into the strange belief that the business of Christianity is to save the Church? That when the Church is prosperous, that when its statistics are fat and its pews filled, Calvary has scored, and the pale Sufferer who hung there and whose face was marred with anguish and whose heart was broken by the agony of His atonement, at last sees of the travail of his soul and is satisfied. Is not this to commit the same blunder about the Church that Germany made about the State? Germany regarded the nation as immune from those ethical obligations which are binding on the individual. Is it not possible to make the same fatal blunder in our theory of the Church?—to conclude that there is one law for the church member, and another law for the church composed of these members—that while the individual is to serve by ministering, the church is to serve by being ministered to?

Two Conceptions of the Church.

There are two views of the Church. There are good people who worship the church. They say their prayers to an organization. Their piety is ecclesiastical and their attitude to social problems is not what the church can do for them but what they may do to the church. Their opinion of any proposed change in ecclesiastical machinery, method or belief, is determined by what they feel will be its effect on the Church. They are out to save the Church and they feel that when the Church is prosperous, society should be satisfied. Such people are jealous of precedents, devoted to traditions, fond of statistics, and bound by dogmas. Since their devotion to the Church is so acute, they feel that their loyalty to Christ should not be questioned.

There are others who look upon the Church as an instrument for work and worship. Its value is to be determined by its efficiency. Its business is to take from the hands of its crucified Lord the cause for which He gave his life, and carry on. This it is to do in His Spirit and with His disregard of personal safety and comfort. Its glory is not in what it gets but in what it gives; not in the cathedrals it builds but in the sacrifices it makes; not in the systems it defends but in the truth it proclaims; not in the perquisites it secures but in the service it renders.

This second view of the Church regards it not as the end of Christianity, but as a means to an end. If the Church is doing anything that stands in the way of its efficiency as a means to this end, it must stop doing it. If it possesses anything, it must give it up; if it believes anything, it must cancel it from its creed; if it is anything, it must change and become what it needs to be. It must view its orders and

Presbyterianism in New Orleans

By Rev. Geo. Summey, D. D.

UNTIL Louisiana was bought by President Jefferson, all faiths except the Roman Catholic were proscribed in New Orleans. Soon after the purchase, and especially following the Statehood, which came ten years later, the other denominations began to come in. Presbyterianism efforts up the country were begun several years earlier, owing to the better attitude of the people towards Protestant tenets, but the first definite work was done in New Orleans by Rev. Sylvester Larned, a brilliant young man just graduated from Princeton, who came to the Crescent City in January, 1818, and began a vigorous work. He was cut down quickly, after but a few months' service, dying of yellow fever, then so prevalent, now so happily controlled. Sylvester Larned has always been looked upon as almost a martyr. In 1824, the little congregation which he had begun to gather was organized into a church, only to begin a most unhappy life under the ministry of Dr. Theodore Clapp, who developed Unitarian views. The faithful ones in the growing flock drew out, and in 1832 were a second time organized, with greatly depleted numbers, into a Presbyterian Church, with fifteen members as against twenty-four with which it started eight or ten years before. But its early handicap made it strong. With all the oratorical power and popularity of their leader, the Unitarian group remained stationary and is today a little handful, while Presbyterianism, in all the uncongeniality of the surrounding, has grown into a stately body of nearly five thousand communicants, twenty churches, large and small, with an influence and weight in the city which makes it decidedly the foremost Protestant body in the community. It is in the rather unusual situation of outnumbering by several hundred the combined forces of the Methodist and Baptist Churches, its numbers being insignificant, however, beside the nearly two hundred thousand communicants of the Roman Church.

The church developed rapidly in the thirties. The latter part of the forties witnessed the formation of several new organizations, as the Prytania Street, Lafayette, Third and Fourth, now Canal Street, Churches, while in the fifties the Second, afterwards called the Thalys Street, and now the Memorial, the Carrollton, and the First German, now the First Street Church, come into being. In the first of the sixties, the Napoleon Avenue Church and Second German, now the Claiborne Avenue Church, were organized. It has been the settled policy of Presbyterianism to organize "branches" and do advance work at strategic points, and today several of the churches are conducting such work. Other denominations have seen the effectiveness of the plan and have followed it.

No mention of New Orleans Presbyterianism would be complete without reference to the famous pastor and preacher, Dr. B. M. Palmer. For forty-six years, beginning in 1857, he was a tower of strength in the community, easily the "first citizen," admired, respected, and loved by everybody. On his eightieth birthday the city named a beautiful avenue, on which his own home was located, for him, and a park also bears his name. With him were associated, for many years, two other strong men, Drs. Thomas R. Markham and Henry M. Smith, and these men made a famous and powerful triumvirate in the city and in the church. Their ability, tactfulness, and large hearted and liberal spirit won for our cause universal respect, even from those who were not partial to its faith.

The characteristics of New Orleans Presbyterianism are pronounced. It is intensely conservative, while progressive. It gives liberally and has intense loyalty. It deals kindly with other faiths and received many adherents from them by the kindness and sympathy but never by compromising its tenets. It has been a thoroughly united and compact body. Only lately has this been slightly broken into by an intrusion, taking advantage of personal estrangement and resistance of constituted authority, of another body which organized two or three little churches of a combined membership of about one hundred.

A marked feature of the work of the Presbyterians of New Orleans is and has been the effort to carry the gospel to its home field. In the midst of them and all around them are thousands of people of other tongues. Besides their own regular work they are sustaining large enterprises, and with effectiveness, among the colored people, the Chinese, the Italians, the French, and the Hungarians. The work among the French is bi-lingual, and largely, as a policy, from the standpoint of our own language and methods, as the great bulk of the people, especially out in the Parishes, are decidedly bent upon a greater Americanization of their children. The French is rapidly going to the rear.

A Protest.

By Rev. C. T. Squires.

We are just in receipt of the advance literature advertising the conventions in Atlanta, June 10-12, under the auspices of the Laymen's Missionary Movement and the Woman's Auxiliary.

"A Call" is issued in which the opening paragraph and the partial list of speakers reveal that our "pre-millinarian" brethren who evidently have the program in charge, have arranged an elaborate feast for the advocates and devotees of their pet theory. Some of us who learned theology at the feet of Dabney, Strickler, Webb, Johnson, and the other great teachers of systematic theology, and have been unable to bring ourselves to an acceptance of this view of eschatology, have become somewhat wearied at the persistent exploitation of these conventions and those at Montreat for the promulgation of this, to say the least, debatable theory.

At the Laymen's Convention in Memphis, devoted to the Home Mission enterprise; at Charlotte, in the convention in the interest of Foreign Missions; and at the Stewardship Conference in Montreat last summer we had each day allopathic doses of pre-millinarianism administered.

We yield to none in loyalty to the blessed Savior and the Church which He redeemed with His own precious blood. We furthermore believe that He has equipped His Church with the all-needful and the all-sufficient power, namely, the Holy Spirit, to regenerate every man on the face of the globe; and that He, the great Captain of our Salvation, is leading his militant hosts to final and complete victory.

We protest against this abuse of their position by the brethren in charge of these programs, which compels a "post-millinarian" or a "non-millinarian" either to remain at home and give the erroneous impression that he is not interested in the vital work of his Church; or to attend the convention and sit in complacent silence and thus give apparent approval to some Scripture interpretation which he is convinced violates the rudiments of sound exegesis.

A Prayer.

"The Lord preserve thy going out,
The Lord preserve thy coming in,
God send his angels round about,
To keep thy soul from sin.

"And when thy going out is done,
And when thy coming in is o'er,
When in death's darkness all alone,
Thy feet can come and go no more,

"The Lord preserve thy going out,
From this dark world of grief and sin,
While angels standing round about Sing "God preserve thy coming in."

The New Theology or Radical Higher Criticism as the New Paganism.

By Rev. Lowry Davis.

Recently there appeared in the Sunday School Times a startling series of articles asking the question, "Are Our Universities Pagan?" The writer was certainly correct in many of his conclusions and descriptions of the results of modern radical thought. But his question would have been more comprehensive if it had been, "Are Our Universities and New Theology Seminaries Pagan?" In proof of this statement I give below a digest of the main points brought out in a two-hour conversation with a typical young theologian of the modern school. He is a recent graduate of one of the most radical seminaries of America and is regularly serving a congregation as pastor, near New York City. It is one thing to read the books written by modern critics; it is quite another proposition—and more startling!—to hear from the lips of a well educated, polished young student and pastor the modern doctrines of "progress" which are to save the world from mediaeval superstition! The following are in substance, some of his illuminating propositions, which he states as representative views of "modern" seminaries:

1. He was very doubtful about the Trinity, especially about Christ. He preferred not to use the name Christ.

2. The inspiration of the Bible is absolutely untenable. He simply scouted the idea of a God who could try Abraham's faith on Mt. Moriah; who could order the slaughter of the Canaanites; or who could allow the imprecatory Psalms to form a part of the Scriptures. He said that the Israelites chose God in a democratic manner, not that God first chose the Israelites!

3. The fixing of the Canon of Scripture was purely arbitrary—made by the early church councils. Hence Paul's writings are not binding.

4. The entire idea of the blood atonement is a superstition of the Middle Ages and cannot be found in the Four Gospels! It was Paul who elaborated this idea. But Paul is no longer considered an authority!

5. The true doctrine of salvation is taught in Luke, Chapter 15, where the Father receives his repentant son directly, without the aid of a mediator. (I told him that heathen Confucianists had a better doctrine than this since they did require a mediator, at least in former times, between Heaven and the people. He said he had not studied comparative religion!)

6. The doctrine of the new birth and the supernatural influence of the Holy Spirit were untenable. I referred him to the modern miracles at the Jerry McAuley Mission. He coolly affirmed that if he knew all of a man's past history up to the moment of his conversion at McAuley Mission he could explain by natural development and psychology every step in the whole process. (This is agnostic evolution bold and blank!)

7. Hence the importance of modern social service and the natural growth of the good in man as opposed to the new heart given the individual by the Spirit according to the old idea. (This is pure Confucianism. I asked him what message he would have for the heathen. He made no reply. He said his seminary had sent many missionaries to foreign lands. I challenged him to show that they had a message if they believed as he did!)

8. He affirmed that he was in quest of the Truth! (and that those who did not agree with him were static!) And yet such men are offended when you tell them that they are preaching Prussianism in the essence. It was such denial of God's truth which ruined Germany.

The pastoral instinct is the greatest evidence of the Good Shepherd. It never came into the world until He came. The hospitals of today are the greatest evidence of the Great Physician, and this living tide of service which we see is the greatest evidence of One who laid down His life for His sheep.—Bishop Ingram.

The Young People's Conference.

By Rev. C. M. Richards, D.D.

Plans are maturing satisfactorily for the Synodical Young People's Conference at Queens College June 2-8.

An excellent program has been outlined and speakers of ability and recognized power are being secured.

The committees on young people's work from the Synod and the Synodical Auxiliary are jointly doing all in their power to make this such a conference as shall prove a blessing to our young people and to our church through them. Many are praying for its success. Not more than five young people from any one congregation can be enrolled. We are expecting so many churches to send representatives that it appears certain the buildings will be filled to capacity. It seems to the writer that it is specially desirable that many of our boys and young men should receive the benefit of the intensive training of these appointed days; and he is writing this notice particularly to ask our pastors to take the matter up with their sessions and ask them to appoint, in each case, two young people, always one of them a boy, to attend the Conference. If it is a sessional appointment, made long enough in advance, the appointees will go. From experience I should say there could scarcely be found a better investment of ten or twenty dollars of any church's funds than in sending one or two of its young leaders to such a Conference.

A Daughter's Memorial to Her Father.

By Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D. D., Secretary.

The Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief makes grateful mention of one of the most remarkable benefactions of which it has ever been the recipient.

We have just received a letter from a devoted Presbyterian in which she enclosed a check for One Thousand Five Hundred Dollars. She says: "This is a memorial gift to my father, whose one hundredth birthday I wish to commemorate. Please place this to the credit of the Endowment Fund of Ministerial Relief. I do not wish any public acknowledgment of this except as from 'A Daughter's Memorial to Her Father.'"

No trait of human character is more beautiful than filial reverence and love. The thoughtfulness of this daughter may call others to obey the only commandment with promise, "Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

Who could suggest a more fitting or more permanent monument than this? The interest from this invested fund throughout the coming years will bring comfort and blessing to the homes of our faithful ministers who, on account of sickness and old age, have been forced to retire both from labor and from income, and to the widows and orphans of our deceased ministers. This monument will be more lasting than granite and more fruitful than bronze!

The Anvil of God's Word.

LAST eve I paused beside a blacksmith's door,
And heard the anvil ring the vesper chime;
Then, looking in, I saw upon the floor,
Old hammers worn with beating years of time.

"How many anvils have you had," said I,

"To wear and batter all these hammers so?"

"Just one," said he, and then with twinkling eye,

"The anvil wears the hammers out, you know."

"And so," I thought, "The Anvil of God's Word

For ages skeptic blows have beat upon,

Yet, though the noise of falling blows was heard,

The Anvil is unharmed, the hammers GONE."

The Significance of the Sixth General Convention of the Laymen's Missionary Movement

Surely at a time like this, with the tremendous changes that are taking place and the wonderful opportunity for the church to assert its leadership over the lives of men, every church should see to it that they are represented by their strongest men at the Laymen's Convention in Atlanta, June 10-11-12.

The First Church at Pine Bluff, Ark., is a church of vision, and one that appreciates the situation. This church has voted to send four representatives to the Atlanta Convention. They selected their pastor, an elder, treasurer of board of deacons and superintendent of Sunday School, the four key men of the church.

The example of the First Church at Pine Bluff should be followed by our churches all over the South. The program of the Convention, which appears in our paper today, is perhaps the strongest program that the Movement has ever arranged, and it is so constructed that every phase of church life will be covered and no matter in what sphere one is serving, he will be distinctly helped by attendance upon this Convention.

In addition to this, a parallel Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary will be held at the same time, the two Conventions uniting in the evening session, so that the wives should accompany their husbands, as well as our leaders in the woman's work, both in the Societies and the Sunday Schools.

The provisional program is as follows:

Tuesday Morning, June 10.

Opening Address: America's Opportunity, a Challenge—Rev. J. Layton Mauze, D.D., Huntington, W. Va. (Representing the Assembly's Committee of Home Missions).

Leadership of the Holy Spirit in the Work of the Church—Rev. Theron H. Rice, D.D., Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.

Tuesday Afternoon, June 10.

Young People and Christian Education.

Work of Christian Endeavor in the Southern Presbyterian Church—Karl Lehmann, Southern States Secretary of Christian Endeavor, Chattanooga, Tenn.

A Sunday School Facing the Whole Task of the Church; Personal Experiences of Successful Superintendents—Dr. Marion McH. Hull, Atlanta, Ga.; Dr. J. P. McCallie, Chattanooga, Tenn.

The Ministry and Christian Service and Their Appeal in This Hour—Rev. H. H. Sweets, D.D., Louisville, Ky.

Why Send Presbyterian Boys and Girls to Christian Schools and Colleges?—Mr. Robt. C. McQuilkin, Philadelphia, Penn.

Quiet Hour: Season of Prayer for Young People.

Tuesday Evening, June 10.

The Significance of the Interchurch World Movement—Rev. Chas. H. Pratt, D.D., Secretary Interchurch World Movement, New York City.

The Seven Major Biblical Signs of the Times—Rev. Lewis H. Chafer, D.D., East Orange, N. J.

Wednesday Morning, June 11.

The Work at Home.

The Sunday School and the New Day—Rev. Gilbert Glass, General Superintendent Sunday Schools, Richmond, Va.

Changed Conditions Facing the Church—Rev. R. H. McCaslin, D.D., Montgomery, Ala.

Conference: The Efficient Church, conducted by Mr. A. D. Mason, Memphis, Tenn.

Know Your Men: Service Card, Rev. P. B. Hill, Roanoke, Va.; Lead Your Men: Committee Division of Work, Capt. F. L. Slaymaker, Athens, Ga.; Teach Your Men: Organized Class and Club, Mr. Chas. T. Paxon, Jacksonville, Fla.; Build Your Men: The Family Altar, Rev. J. R. Sevier, D.D., Augusta, Ga.; Enlist Your Men: Individual Work for Individuals, Mr. John M. Alexander, Jackson, Miss.; Recreate Your Men: Helpful Amusements, Rev. D. P. McGeachy, Decatur, Ga.; Challenge

Your Men: To Use Business for the King, Mr. J. Nat Harrison, Petersburg, Va.; Reach Out for Men: Advertise, Mr. J. B. Spillman, Columbia, S. C.; Serve With Your Men: Community Uplift, Dr. Chas. H. Pratt, New York City; Train Your Men: In Bible Study and to Pray, Rev. Geo. E. Guille, Athens, Tenn.

Wednesday Afternoon, June 11.

The Work Overseas.

Mexico—Mr. Alfred D. Mason, Memphis, Tenn.; Japan—Rev. H. C. Ostrom, Tokushima, Japan; Korean Pageant—Participated in by Korean Missionaries; Korea—Capt. M. L. Swinehart, Kwangju, Korea.

Quiet Hour—Dr. E. M. Poteat, Secretary Laymen's Missionary Movement, New York.

Recreation Hour—Between the afternoon and evening sessions opportunity will be given for recreation and to visit points of interest. The Trustees of Agnes Scott College, Decatur, invites the the Convention to visit the grounds and buildings at this hour.

Wednesday Evening, June 11.

Releasing the Power of the Church Through Prayer—Dr. W. E. Doughty, Secretary Laymen's Missionary Movement, New York City.

Impressions After Eight Months in the Orient—Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D.D., Executive Secretary Foreign Missions, Nashville, Tenn.

Quiet Hour—Season of Prayer for Men—Rev. Geo. E. Guille, Athens, Ga.

Thursday Evening, June 12.

Will We Accept the Challenge of the Hour?—Mr. J. Campbell White, Secretary Interchurch World Movement, New York City.

Closing Exercises.

The Living Voice.

It seemed like the gardener's footstep—
His dress like the gardener's dress;
For her eyes were filled with weeping,
And her heart with heaviness.
But Oh! at that sweet word, "Mary!"
Doth the soul within her rejoice;
It may be the gardener's semblance—
But the voice—it is Jesus' voice!

Forgotten the nights of vigil,
Forgotten the dawns of tears;
Her Lord is standing beside her,
His greeting in her ears!
Could mine be a bygone rapture,
The moment—the place—my choice,
I would be the maid in the garden,
When she knows it is Jesus' voice!

Can the Church Build the New World?

tenets, its properties and practices in the light of its mission; and it must never forget that the law of its life takes it to Calvary; not merely to Christ's Calvary, to sing a hymn and say a prayer and then go away to feed its pride with thoughts of power and peace, but to its own Calvary, where it lays down its life, where it gets itself crucified, where it has the nails and the spear and the thorns driven into its flesh, and where it quits counting statistics and, entering upon the agony of its intercession, can say, "I am crucified with Christ."

It is this kind of a Church, I think, Christ had in mind, when He uttered my text. It is such a Church the need of the world clamors for today. It is such a Church that men will seek, for they will know that it thinks more of their welfare than of its own success, and that it seeks them, not to use them, but to serve them and to teach them how to serve.

A New World.

There is a new world waiting to be built. The old world is in ruins. The war has done more than shoot up a section of France. It has shattered old traditions; it has kicked out despotic dogmas, that for generations have tried to fetter free thought; it has made a scrap-heap of systems founded on privilege and caste. As one goes through the devastated area of France, it is a scene of desolation that confronts him. City after city is beaten down to the ground; villages by the hundreds are now crumbling heaps of broken stone; in many a town, not a house is left standing; the inhabitants are gone; people can live there no longer; and yet love is tenacious of locality and, here and there, you will come upon a little group of French peasants, burrowing among the ruins where they once had a home, unwilling to live anywhere except on the old spot. But the ruins can never be rebuilt; a new town may arise on the old site, but the shell-shattered debris must first be cleared away; it can never again become a human habitation.

It is an illustration of what has befallen society. Much that went to make the old order has been shot to pieces. Some, tenacious of the old ways, are crawling back amid the ruins, but the world can never live there again. In politics, the old doctrine of national isolation and selfishness has been shelled. The League of Nations is the Magna Charta of the new internationalism and over the portal of the state house of every decent country, the world of tomorrow is saying, "Not trade, but service, must direct the statesmanship of the future." In business, the old principle of competition is discredited and commercial life confronts co-operation as an economic and industrial necessity. In religion sectarianism has lost all its friends and even denominationalism most of its arguments. If the Church is to get an audience today, it must go in the spirit of Him who said, "Ye are brethren."

A new world is waiting to be built and it must be a world of brotherhood. The rent in humanity made by this accursed war must be closed. The wounds must be healed; the sorrows comforted; and the alienations reconciled. On the ruins of the old order, human life must build a house to dwell in where people are free from fear, free from the menace of war, solicitous for each other's welfare, concerned for one another's happiness, and daily striving to translate the golden rule into all of life's relations.

Can the Church Build a New World?

Is the Church equal to this task? If not, society is doomed. If the Church can not promote fraternity and foster brotherhood, is there anything on earth that can? If the Church with the Gospel of the crucified Redeemer who loved the world enough to die for it, cannot lead a crusade against dishonesty and greed in politics, against selfishness, and the worship of mammon in business, against bigotry and intolerance in religion, then love has no constituency left to follow its white flag against the foes of hope.

If the Church can not teach men to acquire self-mastery, to be free without being arrogant, to possess their privileges without depriving others of their rights, to find in service and sacrifice the road to God, then the Church has professed with no hope of performance. It is a vain boaster. Its message is the empty wind and its right to existence is gone forever. If the Church can not build the new world, it can not do what it was created to do; for it exists, not to write insurance against disaster beyond the grave, but to establish a kingdom of good-will on the earth and fill time as well as eternity with righteousness and peace.

If the Church can not build the new world, it has come to the hours of its supreme opportunity only to fail; only to break down and show that, for two thousand years, men have staked their hope on a counterfeit. No such challenge has summoned the Church since Calvary and no such opportunity has faced it since Christ called it into being. I do not believe the Church will fail. In the ruined cathedral at Soissons, we found a wonderful picture of the Great Supper unharmed. In some strange way the painting had escaped. Quietly the faces of Christ and His Apostles looked out upon the desolation around them. So amid the ruin of the world, calm and serene remains the power of Christ to make men free and build life up toward heaven, and this power the Church may command.

But to command it the Church must itself be under the spell of this power. If the Church is to build a new world, it must, in some respects, become a new Church. I do not believe that it needs a new message. With Paul, it may still say, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ." As I have gone through the war zone and preached to the soldiers, my conviction has been strengthened in the ability of the old Gospel to meet the situation. This gospel does not need to be defended—it only needs to be proclaimed and read. Repeatedly the soldiers have told me that they are tired of dogmas, disgusted with sectarianism, but that they believe in Jesus Christ and His religion of service and sacrifice. There are, however, some things the Church must do if it is to build a new world.

It must break with discredited and worn out traditions. What would you think of a boat tied to the dock in New Orleans that wanted to go to Panama? It starts but it stops for a good rope and a stout pilehead hold it to the dock. If it ever gets to Panama, it must cast off. The Church has been tied up to some things that prevent progress. If it is to move out, it must cast off. It is easy to mistake traditions for principles but nothing is a principle that is powerless. Principles are eternally dynamic. If your theory of the church and state can not lift society, can not improve mankind, rest assured it is not a principle—it is a tradition and the quicker you get it to the grave-yard, the better.

The Church must emancipate itself from dogmatism and intolerance. I am not pleading for a colorless creed but protesting against confounding crotchets with convictions, against placing the distinctive principles of a denomination in the same class with the fundamentals of Christianity; against making a sacrament or a rite or a creed or anything but service and sacrifice a condition of fellowship.

The Church must also be united. At present, this does not necessarily mean organic union. It certainly means co-operation and federated effort. It means for the Church what it meant for the armies of the Allies when they were united under a supreme command. The British army was not merged into the French nor the French into the American, but they did not get in each other's way. They had one plan and moved as one man and victory marched out to meet them. I doubt if uniformity is what the Church needs just now. Little is to be gained by Methodists becoming Baptists and Baptists Presbyterians. What is needed is not that we should whittle down our beliefs until we all think alike, but that we should achieve harmony in action and move as one man for victory.

To do this the Church must forget itself. If it is to inoculate the new world with its life, it must die daily. It must be willing to decrease that Christ may increase; to die that society may live; to be lost that the world may be saved. The task to which scientific medicine sets itself today is that of preventing disease. The doctor deliberately attempts to make himself unnecessary. The ideal of the Church should be as high. "I saw no temple therein," writes John, in his

Commencement at the General Assembly's Training School

THE commencement exercises of the General Assembly's Training School for Lay Workers, Richmond, Va., were held in the Watts Chapel on Tuesday evening, May 6th. Rev. Stuart Nye Hutchison, D.D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Norfolk, Va., delivered a most appropriate and helpful address to the graduating class. There were ten graduates who had completed successfully the whole course of two years at the Training School. Four other students who have attended the school for only one year received certificates of proficiency in the studies which they had completed. The following are the graduates who received diplomas:

Miss Florence Dolphy, Mobile, Ala.; Miss Edith Henshaw, Kearneysville, W. Va.; Miss Bertha Howland, Charlotte, N. C.; Miss Elizabeth Martin, Charleston, W. Va.; Miss Annah Ruckman, Staunton, Va.; Miss Rosa Walker, Burgaw, N. C.; Miss Charlotte Webb, Winston-Salem, N. C.; Miss Nancy Finley White, Churchville, Va.; Miss Elizabeth Wright, Moffatts Creek, Va.; Miss Frazier Wynne, Waycross, Ga.

The following received certificates of proficiency:

Miss Lillie C. Bringhurst, Houston, Texas; Miss Victoria Hudson, Mooresville, N. C.; Miss Vivian Johnston, Carrolltown, Miss.; Miss Reba Winston, Houston, Texas.

All of these students have taken positions in definite Christian work. Three will become assistants to pastors in city churches to help with the Sunday School and Young People's work. There is a large demand for such workers. Three expect to go to the foreign field. Five have gone to vision of redeemed society. The Church has so successfully executed its task as to put itself out of business.

"The hour has come when the Son of Man shall be glorified." The hour has come for the new world to be built; for daybreak and millennial dawn. Yonder on the skyline the Kingdom awaits. Just above our heads, the Holy City, coming down from God out of heaven, pauses in its chariot of light to see whether Christ's Church is ready for it to drive down to men or back to God and wait another million years. The hour is come—what says the Church? "Verily I say unto you, except a grain of wheat fall into the earth and die, it abideth by itself alone; but if it die, it beareth much fruit."

On the Way to the General Assembly.

Mexico has been divided into separate fields for each denomination, so that hereafter there will be no more conflict of interests. Though the contributions were greater than last year, owing to war, the increased cost of foreign exchange and the high cost of living the debts have been increased by $80,000.

The Home Mission report was a fine one. We have already given a summary of their gains.

Dr. Sweets reported great progress in the work of Christian education, and Dr. Glass, in the absence of Mr. Magill, brought a fine report of the work of the Publication Committee. As usual, the photograph of the Assembly was taken, a proceeding that always consumes precious time.

In the evening to an immense audience Dr. Vance delivered his lecture on "The Doughboy in France." Those who have heard Dr. Vance will easily imagine what a thrilling story he made of his subject.

In order to reach the paper in time for the next issue, we shall have to stop here, with the promise of more next time.

By tomorrow the Assembly will be in the midst of its work and then things will be lively.

As an old philosopher once said, "The best times to live in are the worst to write about."

take up some form of home mission work in the Appalachian Mountains. Two will return to their own home churches as volunteer workers. One will return to the Training School next year as an instructor.

The Presbyterian Committee of Publication awarded Teacher Training Certificates to sixteen of the students who had completed successfully the first year's course in teacher training. The Training School lays great emphasis upon teacher training and Sunday school work. One purpose of the school is to train teachers who will go out and organize and teach classes of young people and prepare them to be teachers in our Sunday Schools.

The United States Government presented certificates to twelve of the students for having completed successfully an excellent course in Household Economics which the government has been giving during the year in the city of Richmond under the direction of Miss Maude Wallace. This will be an especially valuable course for those students who expect to give themselves to home or foreign mission work.

The Training School has had an unusually successful year. There have been enrolled forty-nine students from twelve States and two foreign countries. Eleven of these students expect to go as foreign missionaries. Inquiries have been received from seventy prospective students who would like to enter the Training School next year.

During the year over $10,000 in cash and about $8,500 in good subscriptions have been contributed to the building fund of the Training School. The Woman's Synodical Auxiliary of Texas has completed the founding of a $2,000 scholarship. An elect lady of Richmond has given $5,000 in Liberty Bonds for the endowment of a scholarship. All current expenses have been paid and there is a small balance.

It was announced that Prof. M. R. Turnbull, who has been teaching the English Bible in Union Theological Seminary for the past two years, had been elected head of the Department of English Bible in the Training School and would hereafter give his entire time to that work. Prof. Turnbull is a graduate of Washington and Lee University and Union Theological Seminary and was the Moses D. Hoge Fellow at Union Seminary. He has also taken the course at the Bible Teacher's Training School in New York City. He will spend the coming summer in the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago. In making the announcement of Prof. Turnbull's election, Dr. Walter L. Lingle stated that he did not know of any one in our whole church who knew Training School work quite so well as Prof. Turnbull, or who was so well qualified to become the head of the Department of English Bible in the Training School.

Quite a number of the former graduates of the school were present and an Alumni Association was formed with Mrs. E. S. Currie, of Richmond, Va., as president.

At a meeting of the board of managers the present excellent faculty was re-elected for next year. Rev. Walter L. Lingle will continue to act as president for another year.

The next session will open on Wednesday, September 24, at 4 P. M., with an address by Prof. M. R. Turnbull.

Let us always remember that hope in us kindles hope in others, that smiles beget smiles, that trust creates trust, that goodness awakens goodness, that love awakens love, and that in unseen but sure ways integrity, strength and honor in us plant seeds of honor, strength and integrity in numberless other lives, many of whom we may know nothing of.—J. T. Sutherland.

The course of life is a thousand trifles, then some crisis; nothing but green leaves under common sun shadow, and then a storm or a rare June day. And far more than the storm of the perfect day the common sun and common shadow do to make the autumn rich. It is the "every days" that count. They must be made to tell, or the years have failed.—William C. Gannett.

News of the Week

The fifteen days allowed Germany to digest the peace terms that the Allies have handed her will end Thursday of this week. On May 17 Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau, head of the German peace delegation, started for Berlin. Following the lead of President Ebert, but in more forceful language, the German Chancellor, Philip Scheidemann, in an address in the national assembly, declared the peace terms unacceptable to his country. He was warmly applauded by all factions in the assembly except the independent socialists. It has been announced that Marshal Foch has been sent to the Rhine by the council of four to take such action as may become necessary in the event the treaty is not signed.

The next thing on the program is for the Austrian government to hear what the peace terms hold for its country. Chancellor Renner has arrived in St. Germain, apparently in excellent spirits, with his peace delegation, and at a later day will hear the terms of the treaty.

Reports in circulation at Coblenz are to the effect that if the Germans sign the peace treaty all the American troops, except the third corps and three divisions and a few headquarters, will be taken out of the occupied district of Germany by June 1. Rumor further says that General Liggett will remain in command of the forces that are left in Germany.

Possibly more interest is felt in the attempted flight of the American naval seaplanes across the Atlantic than in any other event of the week. On May 15 the NC-1 tried in vain to make the start. During the delay the NC-4 caught up, landing at Trepassey, N. F. On May 16, at a late hour, the three planes rose from the waters of Trepassey bay and headed for the Azores, attempting a trip as dangerous as that that Columbus made five centuries ago. The NC-4 led practically all the way and landed safely May 17 at Horta, Fayal, in the Azores, after a record flight. NC-1 was reported missing on this same date and NC-3 had had to descend and its crew had to be taken up by a vessel 200 miles from the island. The flight is being watched with the keenest interest by London as well as America.

Secretary Daniels of the Navy, with Mrs. Daniels, is back in Washington after an extended trip abroad.

The 66th Congress convened in extraordinary session Monday, May 19. The President's message was cabled and made approximately 3,000 words. The message dealt largely with domestic questions.

Southern cotton growers of the entire South in session at New Orleans adopted a plan for the formation of a $100,000,000 cotton exports corporation and a permanent organization, with J. S. Wanamaker, of South Carolina, as president. The acreage is to be cut one-fifth. The convention went on record as being for "America first" and that Germany was not to receive one bale until she had signed the treaty.

A race riot occurred in Charleston, S. C., May 16, between sailors and white citizens on the one hand and negroes on the other. Two negroes were killed and about 17 wounded. The cause of the riot is being investigated by the naval authorities.

Sunday School Institute Drive.

Fayetteville Presbytery, in session at Ashepole Church, directed the Committee on Sabbath School Work to hold a One Day Sunday School Institute in each church of the Presbytery during the week, July 6-11, 1919.

The purpose of this campaign, or drive, is to unify our Sunday School work by bringing it into line with the plan of the Assembly's Committee; to encourage our weaker churches by carrying to them the message of our Sunday School Work—a message that would be equally as helpful to our strong churches; to lay before each member of each church in the Presbytery the call of our Sunday School Work.

In connection with the Topic, "Sunday School Extension," the Home Missions Committee will present its work and the proposed Forward Movement in the Presbytery.

The Presbytery is divided into three districts of three counties each, with one committeeman from each county, as follows:

District No. 1—Johnston County, Rev. A. T. Lassiter, District Chairman; Cumberland County, Rev. W. E. Hill, D. D.; Harnett County, Rev. G. F. Kirkpatrick.

District No. 2—Scotland County, Rev. C. R. Bailey, District Chairman; Hoke County, Rev. J. W. Goodman; Robeson County, Rev. J. K. Hall.

District No. 3—Moore County, Rev. J. K. Roberts, District Chairman; Lee County, Rev. L. A. McLaurin; Chatham County, Rev. W. L. Wicker.

The County Committeemen will appoint committees in their respective counties.

The District Committees will arrange for the drive, select speaker's teams and schedules in their respective districts.

The program, together with schedules of speaker's teams, will be published in due time.

A religious survey will be made within the bounds of each church preceding the Institute in order to lay before every church a comprehensive view of its own work. Each Sunday School will take its own census. Cards will be furnished schools and churches for this canvass.

A record of the attendance of officers and teachers and resident members upon each Institute will be made on a percentage basis. To illustrate: A church having ten officers and teachers, eight of whom attend the Institute, will make 80 per cent on their attendance. If the same church has a resident membership of 100, 60 of whom attend the Institute, will make 60 per cent on their attendance. The per cent averages of the Institute will be tabulated by counties and districts and so published after the drive, together with the names of the churches whose percentage is not less than 75 per cent.

We are depending upon the active and hearty support of all our Sunday School workers to make this drive a success. Further information will be given from time to time.

Chairman of Presbytery's Committee on Sabbath School Work.

Endorsement of General Order No. 456 By the Students of Union Theological Seminary in Virginia.

Secretary of the Navy, Josephus Daniels,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir:

We, the students of Union Theological Seminary in Virginia, note with sincere gratification your General Order No. 456, regulating the observance of the Sabbath Day in the Navy. Being aware of the numerous inroads on the sanctity of the Sabbath Day which have been made both in the secular and social life of our nation, we believe that no or-

Topic for Sunday, June 1—Our Relation to God—Reverence and Public Worship—Ps. 33:1-11; John 4:19-26.

* * *

Reverence is respect raised to a very high degree. The children of Jonathan Edwards always rose to their feet when their parents entered the room, and continued standing until both parents were seated. Their respect reached the high degree at which it could be called by the name of reverence. But such reverence for father or mother is but a faint illustration of that which we should all have for God. He is far greater and more holy than any earthly father, and has ten claims upon us to one claim that our earthly parents have.

We know we should reverence God because the Bible commands it. It says, Be still and know that I am God. That does not need any explanation. We are also told that the fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge. All sound education begins with reverence as its bed rock. Fearing Jehovah is not like fearing a powerful robber, but like fearing a mighty angel because of his power and holiness.

The Bible tells us also in the Third Commandment that we must not take God's name in vain. This means we must not use God's name to make our language sound stronger, or shall not make our prayer sound like a witch's incantation, or shall not use God's name senselessly and in wanton defiance of His sanctity and majesty. To do these things is to use God as a tool and makeweight, whereas it is God that has a right to use us. Profanity is one of the worst of sins.

If the Bible had never told us to reverence God, our own native instincts ought to make us do it. For we all know God made us, and our Maker naturally deserves our reverence.

* * *

We must show our reverence by public worship. On memorial days we show our respect for the dead by assembling together and discussing their benefactions, and singing songs, and publicly decorating their graves and monuments. If we so exhibit our respect for the dead forefathers, should we not show our reverence for God by public praise and prayer and by the study of His Book?

We must show reverence by our behavior. Obedience is a surer sign of reverence than lip service or forms of worship. It was easier for Moses to take off his shoes on holy ground beside the burning bush than it was for him to honor God and obey Him in the hour of vexation.

We must show God a reverent heart. They that worship Him must do so in spirit and truth, even more than by forms of worship or acts of obedience.

* * *

What warning in the Commandments does the loving God give against irreverent speech?

Is any man great enough to be exempt from the duty of showing reverence to God?

How do we show reverence in church worship?

The Prayer Meeting

TOPIC FOR THE WEEK BEGINNING MAY 29, 1919:

MEMORIALS OF GOD'S POWER—Josh. 4:19-24.

The story connected with the names of Moses and Joshua is of everlasting significance and undying interest.

If we will take position by the side of Joshua now we will witness a gracious and marvelous putting forth of power. The river that connects the historic and once beautiful sea of Chinneroth with the sea of the Arabah is at the flood. The children of Israel "had not passed this way before." But the great Leader had said to the people: "Sanctify yourselves: for tomorrow the Lord will do wonders among you." Everything is now ready. The order is given for the priests to advance. Jordan was flowing, overflowing. What suppressed excitement prevails everywhere! What trust in the God of Israel. The priests, bearing the ark advance, their feet touch the waters of the River, and then the great thing happened. The waters which came Union Seminary Secures Hon. William J. Bryan as James Sprunt Lecturer.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va., announces the engagement of Hon. William Jennings Bryan, of Lincoln, Nebraska, as special lecturer on the James Sprunt foundation. Mr. Bryan, whose great lectures on The Prince of Peace and Back to God have helped to confirm the faith of thousands of people in every part of America, has for years been meditating a book on Christian Evidences, and in response to the communication of the faculty of the Seminary expressed his pleasure that their invitation afforded him the opportunity he desired to bring out his book under the most favorable auspices. His aim is to present an unanswerable argument for Christianity. The Seminary is to be congratulated on securing the greatest of living orators to render this service to the Christian faith at such a time as this.

The exact date of the lectures will be announced later. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, D. D., of London, England, will give the lectures on this foundation next fall, shortly after the opening of the session, and Mr. Bryan's lectures will be given some months later. Dr. Campbell Morgan's subject will be the Ministry of the Word. With two such illustrious lecturers and two such vital subjects, the only difficulty will be to make room for all who wish to hear them.

No lectures on this foundation have excited more interest or drawn larger audiences than those of Dr. C. Alphonso Smith, head of the Department of English in the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., which have just appeared from the presses of the Fleming H. Revell Company, of New York, under the title of Keynote Studies in Keynote Books of the Bible. Price $1.25.

The whole church will felicitate the Seminary on utilizing in this way the talents of distinguished laymen like Dr. Smith and Mr. Bryan in the exposition and defence of the faith.

No. 456. May God, whom you are thus honoring, honor you in giving you continued success in your efforts to make our Navy a strong defence to the Nation and our Nation a glory to God.

REPENTANCE.

Golden Text—Mark 1:15: "Repent ye and believe the Gospel."

Jonah 3:1-10.

May 25, 1919.

Jonah when commanded to go to Nineveh at first went exactly in the opposite direction. By considering his environment and personal views we can find reasons for his disobedience. Jonah prophesied during the reign of Jeroboam II, and he warred with the Syrians successfully by Jonah's direction. The prophet was a courtier, had the King's favor, and might be indisposed to leave a place of ease and honor for a journey of toil and difficulty. Going to Nineveh and delivering his message involved sacrifice, labor and danger from which he might naturally shrink. Besides he regarded the Assyrians as the enemies of his country and might not be disposed to put forth strenuous efforts in their behalf or even to warn them of coming doom. We may be profited by considering Jonah's experiences.

I. Jonah's Mission.

He was sent to Nineveh on the Lord's business, and he was not inclined to go. Personal and secular considerations controlled his conduct and he was guilty of willful disobedience. But "Who has hardened himself against Jehovah and has prospered?" Stern discipline and reiterated command secured his compliance. The Almighty has many rods with which to correct His wayward servants. The storm, the raging billows, the threatened shipwreck, the capture by the great fish and his marvelous deliverance when cast upon the dry land, all prepared Jonah to do as he was bidden and to seek Nineveh. Many an erring servant of God, like rebellious Jonah, has been urged to the path of duty by afflictive providences.

II. Jonah's Message.

Jonah was sent to Nineveh not to do his pleasure or to speak smoother things, but for the Divine glory and human salvation. His duty was to deliver his message and to leave the result with God. He was only responsible for the faithful presentation of his warning and not for the effects that might follow. The Lord charged him, "Go to Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee." He was not at liberty to proclaim any truth that the Lord had not put in his mouth. It was not a pleasant message to the Ninevites that he bore, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be destroyed," however agreeable it might have been to Jonah with his hostility to the Assyrians. Indeed it may be doubted as to whether the prophet fully understood his own message, or the effects it might produce. He evidently deemed his warning an absolute prediction of fast involving the truthfulness of the prophet, and not a prediction of an event that might be averted by repentance. He was manifestly disappointed and chagrined when the Ninevites repented and were saved.

III. Nineveh's Repentance.

As repentance is essential to salvation and we must all "repent or perish," it is well to have a concrete example of genuine penitence that God accepted. The Ninevites were moved by warning, not to worldly absorption or despair, but to real repentance. This repentance was universal, extending from the King on the throne to the humblest of his subjects. They were so concerned and absorbed that they put off their robes and ornaments, donned the habiliments of mourning, abstained from food and drink, and caused their animals to do the same. They also prayed for the Divine mercy, forgiveness and favor. Nor was this universal fasting, humiliation and prayer a mere form without any effect upon the conduct and life. We are told that they reformed their lives and "turned every one from his evil ways. Thus the Ninevites repented and complied with God's demands and realized His promise when He says, "Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts and let him return unto the Lord and He will have mercy upon him and unto our God and He will abundantly pardon."

IV. Jehovah's Mercy.

God was true to His promise and did not destroy Nineveh. When its inhabitants sought Him, confessed and forsook their sins, reformed their conduct and entreated His forgiveness and favor, He revealed Himself as a gracious God, and did not visit threatened and merited destruction. He employed Jonah's ominous words as a means of working in the Ninevites repentance unto life. He shows mercy unto Jonah Himself when he complains that he did not fulfill his prophecy and visit destruction upon the guilty but repentant Nineveh. Jonah had far better opportunities of knowing Jehovah's character than those he warned and had himself signal experience of His mercy. Yet when he complains of His showing mercy He deigns to give him reasons for so doing, and to point him to the "six" score thousand children in Nineveh that did not know the right hand from the left.

Prayer Meeting.

down from above stood and rose up upon an heap; the bed of Jordan quickly became dry below, and while the priests stand with the ark in mid stream, the great host quickly passed over. Nor was God willing that this great event should be forgotten.

One might say: "Forget it! It is impossible." But "lest we forget" is appropriate for every age and country. God therefore commanded that a man chosen from each of the twelve tribes of Israel should severally select and carry from the bed of the river a stone—rough, unhewn, to Gilgal. These stones Joshua piled together as a memorial of God's power, so that men might not forget, and so that they might tell the mighty story to their children, and "that all the people of the earth might know the hand of the Lord, that it is mighty: that ye might fear the Lord your God, forever."

It is remarkable that the note of world evangelization is sounded here. It is the same mind—the same Great Heart speaking here that gave the Great Commission to the disciples. This great miracle had for its motive the same heart of love for the world that spoke so eloquently in the miracles of Jesus.

"Lest we forget." That pile of rocks speak to us not only of the duty of remembering but also of the deadly peril of forgetting. Forgetfulness of God's mercies is a universal peril and a great sin. If the Jews did forget, if they really were ungrateful in a fearful degree, do not we forget? Are we not ungrateful? Jesus knew our liability to forgetfulness and ingratitude: hence He instituted the Lord's Supper, for which millions of his people praise his blessed name; for it periodically recalls his passion, his love, his salvation; thus enkindling anew the fires of devotion and faith and hope.

But these memorial stones preach a much neglected truth to parents, and proclaim the usefulness and the duty of parental instruction. Fatherhood and motherhood are sacred relationships: and the duty of the teacher inheres in them. It is the sad fact that many children are today born of parents who entirely delegate this duty of teaching to others. It is a shameful thing. The effects are disastrous both to parents and children. God arranged differently—commanded differently. Let us obey with blessings for father, mother, child.

Every memorial of God's power is also a memorial of his grace. His power is always used beneficently for his children. In Jehovah's world love is regnant: let us beware lest we miss its copious outflowings, or lest we misinterpret the lightnings and the thunders.

Devotional

HIS GRACE ALL-SUFFICIENT.

There are two ways, and only two, as far as I know, of obtaining relief when the burden is too heavy to be borne. We can either go and ask some friend to take part of our load and carry it for us—which is a way God very seldom deals with His people—or we can go aside and get new encouragement, new cheer, new hope, new strength ourselves, and then take up the burden with the renewed strength, the increased power, and carry it as it is appointed us to bear; that is the way our God very frequently deals with His people. St. Paul asked Him three times over to take this thorn in the flesh away, and three times over the loving, all-wise God refused the petition. But He said, "Paul, I cannot take the thorn in the flesh from you, but, my dear servant, here is something better: 'My grace is sufficient for thee.'" And what God said, what God meant for His servant of old, God means for us today.—Principal T. R. O'Meara.

DOUBTING PRAYER.

We must watch against the least suspicion of unwillingness on the part of God to grant our petitions. We have not to wring a benefit from the hand of one who hesitates to give, but do receive thankfully blessings God delights to bestow. We must not draw a false inference from the parable of the friend at midnight or of the unjust judge. In each case there was unwillingness: unwillingness to rise and give bread, and unwillingness to avenge the widow. But the point for us to learn is importunity and perseverance. God, as a most loving Father, rejoices to give the true bread, and as a righteous Judge to protect and deliver the oppressed. And whilst we must constantly and patiently wait upon Him, we must be sure that no word of prayer, no thought of prayer is in vain.—Rev. H. C. Holloway, D.D.

TAKE THEM AS THEY COME.

"The lessons as they come every day are not so hard. It is after a while, when the examinations come and bring them all at once, that the trouble comes," fretted a girl who wanted to stand high in her studies.

"Take them as they come. If you learn each one well you will find when you meet them again in examination, that they are old friends," wisely encouraged her mother.

That is the good, old rule. It smoothes away many a Hill Deficiency that seems to loom up ahead. We need not do all our life tasks at once. Take them as they come, master them thoroughly, and each conquered lesson, when we meet it again, will prove an old friend instead of a new foe.—Selected.

"God broke our years in hours and days
That hour by hour and day by day,
We might be able all along
To keep quite strong.
Should all the weight of life
Be laid upon our shoulders
And the future rife with care and struggle,
Meet us face to face,
In just one place,
We could not go—our faith would fail,
And so, God lays a little on us every day
And never, I believe, in all the way
Will trials press so deep
Or pathways lie so threatening and so steep
But we can go, for by God's power
We only bear the burdens of the hour."

THE CHILD'S PRAYER.

"Come, dear, say your prayers, and cuddle down to sleep."

"I'm not going to say any prayers, mother."

The eight-year-old voice was very serious and determined, and the mother, who was slowly and painfully acquiring the letting-alone virtue, went quietly away.

Another night and yet another, and the same statement—"I'm not going to say any prayers tonight"—made the mother wonder if indeed letting alone was wise treatment here. How about the formation of childish habits and all the rest of it? How about obedience? How about a great many things which later proved entirely negligible? But the mother held herself to the policy of keeping out, and the problem solved itself, as children's problems, unhurried and unagitated, have a fashion of doing.

The fourth night the child was found sobbing distressfully. "Mother, I want to say my prayers."

"Very well, dear, I will wait."

"But, mother, I can't."

"Why not?"

"Because I don't know how, mother. I don't want to say just 'Now I lay me' and 'God bless.' It aches inside with the things I want to say, and I can't say them. I'm bigger now and I want to say bigger things."

Swiftly the mother's mind traveled to the far-off days, to the immature, loving disciples, with their great spiritual longings and their inability to put them into words. "Lord, teach us to pray," was no glib utterance. The answer, "After this manner pray ye," was tenderness and comprehension itself.

When the beautiful, simple story had been told as the child could best understand it, she was comforted in part. "'Our Father' is too big for me, mother. I don't know what all the things mean. That was for those big disciples. I'm glad they had to be helped, though. I don't feel so ashamed about it."

Almost startled by the magnitude of her privilege, trembling for fear of failure on this untried ground, the mother formulated for the listening child the simple petitions which she could follow, which touched the interests of her own life. Praise and thankfulness, a plea for bodily wants, for forgiveness and help—"after this manner" she prayed, with the Great Prayer for guide.

And slowly the child has been taught to pray for the things she desires, child-wise, but reverently, comprehendingly.

The children desire help more even than we desire to give it sometimes, and they are always offering clues to the labyrinth of their dimly lighted soul life, if only we mothers are watchful enough and wise enough to see and follow.

Jesus Himself taught; He also set "a child in the midst." It is not easily nor carelessly that this fastness of a child's mind has here been opened for the mothers to see. It is because a child—any child, yours or mine—may teach us all, if we are willing.—Grace Duffield Goodwin.

A RECIPE FOR A HAPPY LIFE.

Take a large quantity of cheerfulness; let it simmer without stopping. Put with it a brimming basin of kindness; then add a full measure of thought for other people. Mix into these a piling tablespoonful of sympathy; flavor with essence of charity; stir well together, then carefully strain off all grains of selfishness. Let the whole be served with love sauce and fruit of the Spirit. Gal. 5:22-23.—Selected.

The only life worth living in the long run is a life of love and service to others.

PERSONAL.

Rev. A. D. McClure, D.D., of Wilmington, N. C., will conduct the vesper services at the Young People's Confer-ence to be held at Queens College, June 2-8. All who know Dr. McClure know that this means a delightful and helpful hour for the young people.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Enoree Presbytery—At a called meeting of Enoree Pres- bytery in the First Church, Greenville, S. C., May 15, 1919, Rev. George W. Taylor, Jr., was received from At- lanta Presbytery. He goes as a missionary to Brazil in June.

NORTH CAROLINA.

St. Paul's—The Woman's Auxiliary and the Christian Endeavor Society of the St. Paul's Church have each pur- chased a Victory Bond for Foreign Missions in addition to their other pledges.

Philadelphia—We added 28 on confession of faith Sun- day and four by letter. Baptized seven babies. We ob- served communion and decision day. The services were very much enjoyed. D. B. McLaughlin, Pastor.

Henderson—On Sunday, May 11, our session had the pleasure of ordaining and installing three new deacons. They are Messrs. J. R. Porter, G. W. Dunkley and J. C. Cooper and will prove valuable additions to the diaconate. This now gives us a complement of twelve deacons and ten elders.

At the same meeting that elected these deacons a resolu- tion was unanimously adopted and a committee appointed to take up the matter of creating a fund for the purpose of building a new church as soon as practicable. We are badly in need of room properly adapted to our Sunday School work, the school having outgrown its old quarters.

One new member has recently been received by letter.

Mallard Creek—At a meeting of the session of this church on last Sabbath the following resolutions were passed relative to the resignation of their pastor, Rev. Jno. E. Wool:

"Whereas, our pastor, Rev. Jno. E. Wool, has resigned the pastorate of this church to accept work in another field, we, the session, would record the following:

"1st. Mr. Wool during his stay of four and one-half years among us has greatly endeared himself to the congrega- tion by his excellent qualities both as a preacher and as a pastor.

"2nd. It is with genuine regret that our church and community give up him and his good wife, and our prayers will follow them as they go into their new field of labor."

Monroe—Rev. H. E. Gurney, pastor. We have recent- ly had the privilege of having the Rev. Frank Arnold, D.D., of Kansas City, Mo., with us in a two weeks' series of evangelistic meetings, resulting in much good. Twenty-five additions to the church, twenty of which were on profession of faith. The general results of the services were spiritu- ally wholesome and helpful.

Dr. Arnold came to us as a stranger, but in the opening services he won the esteem and confidence of all. His methods are wise, his preaching is sound, and his person- ality very attractive.

We are grateful to Dr. MacLeod, pastor of Westmin- ster church, Charlotte, for introducing his friend, Dr. Arn- old, to us.

Greensboro, Westminster Church—Rev. C. E. Hodgkin, pastor. This church has recently had a successful series of evangelistic services conducted by our Synodical Evangelist, Rev. C. Connor Brown. The membership of the church was greatly revived and strengthened. About thirty-five made profession of faith in Christ and twenty-eight united with the church. The offering for Synodical Home Mis- sions was $200.

Mr. Brown is a splendid evangelist. His methods are sane and conservative, and his preaching is pointed, practi- cal, and thoroughly Scriptural. He came to us as a stranger but won many strong friends during his stay with us. Every department of the work of the church received a helpful impetus from his faithful ministry.

This church has recently voted a fifty per cent increase in the salary of the pastor beginning with the new church year.

Sevier—Eight years ago the church at this place had been dissolved by order of Presbytery because almost all the members had died or moved away, and so the church had to die, too. But the present pastor began a week night service once a month which has been kept up persistently and con- tinuously through all sorts of weather during all these years. A Sabbath service has been held occasionally. The church grew. It would not stay dissolved. It arose and flourished. Today we have a splendid new church, seat- ing more than 200 people, a membership of 33 and a Sab- bath School of 131 pupils. During the past year more an $400 were contributed to all causes. The people are loyal and enthusiastic in their service to their Lord. They are very generous in supporting their pastor.

J. C. Story, Pastor.

Marion—The annual report which this church sent up to the spring meeting of Presbytery was very gratifying both to the people and to the pastor. During the year there were 19 additions, bringing the present membership up to 32. Splendid progress has been made in the Sabbath school and Young People's societies. The Ladies' Aid Society and the Woman's Auxiliary made the largest contributions to benevolences in their history. Both of these organizations pursue a systematic study of missions.

Our contributions to all causes amounted to $3,187. During the past year the pastor's salary was increased $400. This is the fourth time these splendid people have increased their pastor's salary during the past eight years. The pastor and his family have during all these years been the recipients of many favors and kindnesses at the hands of these noble people. The Lord has blessed us all. To Him be all the glory.

J. C. Story, Pastor.

Mebane—The session received at the quarterly communion seven members, five by letter and two by profession. The church sent to Presbytery the best report in its history, the contributions to benevolences being over three times the amount contributed last year, and we are pleased to note that our budget, both current expenses and benevolences, has been fully subscribed for this year.

Christian Endeavor Society gave a reception to the returned soldiers of our church and town Friday evening, April 18, and on the following Sunday there was a welcome service at the church. The address of welcome was given by T. C. Carter, the service flag, containing twenty-four stars, was demobilized by Capt. J. H. Hurdle and Lieut. G. G. Scott and presented to the officers of the church, and was accepted by E. Y. Farrel in their behalf with appropriate remarks. In order to keep in touch with the soldiers returning from the service, the Young Men's Bible class has been reorganized and a fellowship supper was given by the church to the class, which was enjoyed by all and a renewed interest in church work was manifested.

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg held an adjourned meeting in the Charlotte First Church on Monday, May 12, 1919. Eighteen members were present.

The Board of Trustees of the Albemarle N. & I. Institute were authorized to secure a man to raise funds for a more adequate support of the school.

The Rev. C. C. Anderson was received from the Presbytery of Durant. A call from West Avenue Church was accepted by him. The following commission was appointed to install him on June 15 next, at the evening service: Rev. A. A. McGeachy, D.D., to preside and preach the sermon; Rev. John E. Wool, to charge the pastor, and Elder W. E. Price, to charge the people.

The pastoral relation between Rev. John E. Wool and Maillard Creek Church was dissolved. He accepted the call from Pegram Street Church, Charlotte, N. C. The following commission was appointed to install him: Rev. W. R. McCalla, to preside and charge the pastor; Rev. C. H. Little, to preach the sermon; Rev. C. G. Lynch, to charge the people; Rev. C. H. Rowan, alternate to each, with Elder D. A. Johnston. Time, June 22, at 8:30 P. M., or a time to suit the commission and the church.

Presbytery heartily and unanimously endorsed the invitation of the Charlotte First Church to the General Assembly to hold its next meeting in that church.

The Rev. R. J. McIlwaine was elected a trustee of the Albemarle N. & I. Institute in place of Elder R. A. Dunn, resigned. John E. Wool, S. C.

Steele Creek Church—In looking over the record of our past year's work, we find that in many respects it has been a year of splendid effort.

As to the material part of the work, we find much that is encouraging and much for which to be thankful.

We have installed a "Lighting System" in the church which was much needed and which adds greatly to the pleasure and benefit of night services.

We have just paid off the debt that was on our new marriage and it is free from debt. They are now preparing to put in this building water and sewerage which will give us city conveniences. The church has raised the pastor's salary and made a number of improvements about the marriage.

We made the best financial record in the history of the church. We gave to all causes over $8,100, about four times as much as of this went to benevolences. We gave to Foreign Missions $1,400 and to Syrian Relief $250, and met our apportionments on the other causes.

Our Sunday School has been reorganized and modernized and we start out in this work with new interest and bright prospects.

We run these schools, one at the church and two at the chapel of the church. These are all in healthy condition and we confidently expect great things from the Lord this year.

Our Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor is very flourishing. We have seventy-five males and sixty-one females as members.

The determination of these young people is remarkable, and much seems to be accomplished in the name of the Lord.

We have never seen better attendance or better programs. It is the rarest thing that one fails to respond when placed in the program.

Our additions last year were not as large as usual, but we had 15 added to the church.

In all, it has been a remarkable year.

We held our spring communion service on the second Sabbath in May, 1919. Dr. John Grier, of Concord, N. C., was with us and did the preaching for us. This is Dr. Grier's old home, and the people were delighted to have him with us again, as it had been a long time since he had preached here.

His preaching was fine; he did not fail to preach the pure Gospel in a powerful way and the effect was splendid.

We had a large communion service, several hundred communing. There were added to our communion on this occasion, five.

We thank God and take courage.

ALABAMA.

The Presbytery of Northern Alabama met with Vire Street Church, Birmingham, April 15. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. J. A. Warren. Rev. S. E. Hodges, D. D., was elected moderator and Rev. W. C. Clark, stated clerk, and Rev. E. C. Scott, temporary clerk.

Calls reported and acted upon: From South Highlands to Rev. Jno. McNeill, D. D.; from Limestone to Rev. J. P. Stevenson; from Townley to Rev. T. J. Ponder; from Avondale to Rev. T. P. Hay, D. D. Appreciation was expressed to representatives of Mrs. E. F. Miller for generous bequest and order taken for its use in accordance with the terms of the will.

Candidates R. B. Gardien and Stewart Hotchkiss were licensed and Mr. G. F. Pollard was received as a candidate for the ministry.

Rev. D. W. Hollingsworth preached the Presbyterian sermon and Rev. S. O. Coxe was appointed to preach next Presbytery.

Rev. H. M. Moffett preached on Foreign Missions and made chairman of that committee.

Rev. W. C. Clark presented the report on Home Missions and men from the field told of the progress of the work. The report showed a good year and a balance on hand for the new year.

Rev. W. C. Clark was released, on his request, from the Woodlawn Church and granted permission to supply the First Church of Sheffield.

The overture on reception of candidates was answered in the affirmative and the Assembly was overtured to make this year conform to the civil year and provide a central home for its committees and a central treasury for its funds.

Place of next meeting, Anniston Second. Thanks expressed to pastor and people. W. C. Clark, S. C.

FLORIDA.

The Presbytery of Florida met in Panama City, Fla., April 15, 1919, at 7:30 p. m. and was opened with a sermon by Rev. W. S. Patterson, the retiring moderator.

There were present six ministers and twelve ruling elders. Rev. W. E. McIlwain, D. D., was elected moderator and Judge A. G. Campbell, recording clerk.

Rev. Frank D. Hunt was dismissed to Macon Presbytery and Rev. H. A. Love was received from Ebenezer Presbytery.

A call was presented from the Quincy Church for the services of Rev. H. A. Love as assistant pastor and a commission was appointed to install him at a time to be selected by the commission.

Presbytery received petitions from Havana, Fla., and from Ponce de Leon, Fla., asking for the organization of churches at these points, and commissions were appointed to visit these places and effect organizations if the way is clear.

Presbytery agreed to accept its quota of the $4,000,000 campaign for the next ecclesiastical year and elected Rev. W. S. Patterson Presbyterian manager.

The Assembly's overture touching the amendment to the Book of Church Order as to the reception of candidates for the ministry was approved.

In connection with the report on Palmer College the privilege of the floor was given to President W. M. Kemper, who spoke in behalf of the college. Presbytery appointed a committee on schools and colleges and by a unanimous rising vote endorsed the campaign of Palmer College to raise $100,000 for buildings and equipment, $30,000 of which is to be raised immediately for a new Administration Building, and asked the churches to open their doors to agents of the institution.

A popular meeting was held in behalf of Foreign Missions and in connection with the report of the Presbyterian Committee several brief addresses were made on different aspects of the subject.

In connection with the report of the Committee on Presbytery's Home Missions important changes were made in the grouping of churches. A gratifying increase for ministerial support was reported in a number of the mission fields and a goodly balance was reported in the treasury.

Ruling Elder T. C. Merchant, of Madison, was chosen to give the Presbyterian Discourse on the Duty of the Church to the Masses and Ruling Elder S. K. Gillis, of DeFuniak Springs, was made his alternate.

After a rising vote of thanks to the people of Panama City and St. Andrews Churches for their abounding hospitality, Presbytery adjourned to meet at Monticello Church at 5 P. M. on June 15 to install the pastor-elect, if the way be clear.

The next regular meeting will be held in the Knox Church, Pensacola, on November 4, 1919, at 11 A. M.

Daniel J. Currie, Stated Clerk.

GEORGIA.

Augusta Presbytery met in Eatonton, Ga., April 15th, and was opened with sermon by the Moderator, Rev. E. P. Mickel, F. F., text Acts 9:6, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

Present, nine ministers and ten ruling elders. Rev. R. C. Wilson, Jr., was elected Moderator and Mr. Irvin Alexander, Temporary Clerk.

Reports from all the committees showed that the work of all the churches has been most excellent during the past year and that the prospects for the future are bright and encouraging.

Committee on Home Missions made the gratifying report that all our churches are now supplied with ministers or will be at a very early day. Greensboro and Penfield were given permission to call as their pastor Rev. M. C. Liddell of McLough, Ga.; and Waynesboro to call Mr. J. H. McGregor, a student in Columbia Seminary. A number of churches under the efforts of the Superintendent of Presbyterian Home Missions, Rev. C. M. Chumbley, formerly aided by Presbytery, have assumed the full support of their pastors at the rate of $1,200 per annum, or $300 for one-fourth of a minister's time. Action of the committee was approved, allowing Greene Street Church to have the services of Rev. C. M. Chumbley until the return of their pastor, Rev. M. M. MacFerrin from Y. M. C. A. work with our armies in Europe.

Evangelistic work is planned with a meeting for every church, and a tent has been purchased for use where it can be of service in such meetings.

Presbyterial Manager of Every Member Canvass reported that nineteen of our twenty-four churches have made this canvass with the most successful results, and that Augusta Presbytery will come very near to subscribing our full quota assigned as our part of the efforts of our denomination to raise $3,500,000 this coming year.

Mr. Edward C. Clyde of Augusta, Ga., was duly examined, preached a most satisfactory trial sermon, and was licensed to preach the Gospel as a probationer for the ministry.

Eatonton is a most beautiful old town in middle Georgia and the hospitality of its people is of the full and hearty old time type. The meeting was a most pleasant one in the bloom of spring, and will long be remembered with pleasure by all who were in attendance. The pastor, Rev. James Thomas, and his church are to be congratulated on the good use they are making of the many blessings with which the Lord has endowed them.

Next meeting, Milledgeville, Ga., Tuesday, October 14, 1919.

E. P. Mickel, Stated Clerk.

MISSISSIPPI.

Jackson—Central Church, Rev. R. E. Hough, pastor. We have had a very good year. Thirty-five members were received, and our contribution to the benevolent causes amount to about $2,200. We are gratified over the prospects.

Rev. Charles M. Boyd, pastor of the First Church, Tuscaloosa, Ala., begins a special meeting for us on the first Sunday of May to continue for a week or ten days. Prof. Capero, the noted musical director, is to have charge of the music.

MISSOURI:

The Presbytery of Upper Missouri was called to meet in Pro Re Nata session in the Central Presbyterian Church, Kansas City, Mo., May 8, 1919, at 10:30 A. M. to transact the following business:

1. To take action on overture of the Kansas City Presbytery to the General Assembly U. S. A., protesting against new location of Central Presbyterian Church in Kansas City.

2. To discuss Presbytery assuming control of Italian Mission, Kansas City. Chas. R. Nisbet, Stated Clerk.

The Presbytery of Upper Missouri met in the First Presbyterian Church, St. Joseph, Mo., Tuesday, April 15, 1919, at 8 o'clock P. M.

After a joint program, in the interest of missions, with the Upper Missouri Presbyterial, the meeting being addressed by the Rev. E. C. Hunt, moderator, and Miss Florence Patton, of Okazaki, Japan, the meeting was called to order by the moderator, Rev. E. C. Hunt, and constituted with prayer by the Rev. C. G. Partridge.

Roll-call showed eleven ministers and 23 ruling elders present, every church being represented.

Ministers received: The following commission was appointed to receive Rev. E. M. Nesbitt from the Presbytery of Tuscaloosa, and take orders looking to his installation as pastor of the Southeast Presbyterian Church, Kansas City, Mr. Nesbitt being unable to be present on account of the illness of his wife: Revs. C. R. Nisbet, D. D., F. W. Haverkamp, Ruling Elders Geo. V. Lewis and K. A. McKenzie.

Rev. John P. Davis was received from the Presbytery of Solomon, Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., and the following committee appointed to install him as pastor of the Northeast Presbyterian Church, Kansas City, Sunday, May 11, at 3 o'clock P. M.

To preside, Rev. F. W. Haverkamp; to preach the sermon, Rev. C. R. Nisbet, D. D.; to charge the pastor, Rev. W. P. Neilson, D. D.; to charge the people, Ruling Elder J. G. Trimble.

Statistical reports revealed the following sums contributed to Systematic Beneficence: Foreign Missions, $14,222; Assembly's Home Missions, $3,479; Synod's Home Missions, $3,665; Congregational Home Missions, $1,914; Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, $2,080; S. S. Extension and Pub., $725; Schools and Colleges, $10,219; Bible Cause, $354; Orphan Homes, $630; Miscellaneous, $2,661; War Work of Our Assembly, $436; making a total of $40,385. Current expenses and pastors' salaries, $48,155. Grand total, $88,540.

Overtures: Presbytery overtured the Assembly to establish a Clearing House "through which all Benevolent Funds shall be cleared."

Also overture to adopt the following method of obtaining quotas from Synods, Presbyteries and Churches: 33 1-3 per cent on basis of resident membership; 33 1-3 per cent on basis of three years' average gifts to benevolence; 33 1-3 per cent on basis of three years' average to pastors' salaries and current expenses.

The following chairmen of permanent committees were appointed: Foreign Missions, Rev. H. L. Saunders; Assembly's Home Missions, Rev. J. M. Campbell; Sabbath School and Publication, Rev. J. B. Bisceglia; Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, Rev. John P. Davis; Local Home Missions, Rev. W. R. Dobyms, D. D.; Narrative, Rev. W. P. Neilson, D. D.; Sabbath, Rev. E. C. Hunt; Systematic Beneficence, Rev. C. G. Partridge; Bible, Rev. Johnston Robertson.

Walnut Grove Church was selected as the place for the fall meeting of Presbytery, beginning Tuesday evening, September 16, 1919, at 8 o'clock.

Rev. Raymond C. Lippard was elected moderator.

Chas. R. Nisbet, Stated Clerk.

OKLAHOMA.

Oklahoma City People's Church—The year ending March 31 made the poorest showing in six years in members added to this church, and through removal and other causes, the total membership has been reduced about 20 per cent. Notwithstanding all this, the contributions to pastor's salary and to benevolences exceeded anything heretofore done. A year ago, the church assumed 15 per cent more of the pastor's salary (thus reducing by that much the part paid by the Home Mission Committee in Atlanta). This extra amount was not fully paid, but a new record was made in payments on pastor's salary. The $4 per capita for Foreign Missions minimum was reached, and the church went "over the top" by $300 (about 45 per cent) more than its quota for benevolences. Eleven families have joined the Family Altar League of our Assembly, in connection with which there is one very interesting incident. About two years ago, a two-year-old boy discovered that his unconverted father had gone to bed without praying. "Papa, you must pray." The father finally got up and got on his knees, and then said, "George, I don't know what to say." "Papa, you say my prayer," and the little two-year-old was teaching his father to pray. Recently, the boy, now four years old, "rounded up" the family, coralled them into one room, and started the family altar. This family is now enrolled in the Family Altar League. The ladies are very proud of the gold star—the highest honors—awarded their society at the recent meeting of the Presbyterial at Gotebo. The pastor resigned on April 20, effective at the pleasure of the congregation, and he and his wife expect to leave for an extended visit "home"—Virginia and Washington City—early in June. J. S. J.

The Presbytery of Mangum met in the First Presbyterian Church of Gotebo, Oklahoma, April 15, at 8 P. M. In lieu of the opening sermon, Mr. M. L. Swineheart, of Korea, addressed the Presbytery in the interest of Foreign Missions. Mr. Swineheart's plain statement of concrete facts from our own Korea caught the attention of all and aroused a responsive enthusiasm for the great work.

The Presbytery was called to order and opened with prayer by Rev. J. W. Moseley, Jr., the last moderator present. Rev. T. D. Murphy, of Cordell, was elected moderator. Elder E. C. Winford, of Cheyenne, was elected temporary clerk.

A call from the Gotebo Church for Rev. S. L. Hogan as pastor for full time was placed in his hands and accepted. A commission with Rev. J. E. Latham as chairman was appointed to install. A call from Union Presbyterian Church of McLoud for the services of Licentiate E. C. McBride was heard. Mr. McBride, after a very satisfactory examination on some of the parts of trial, was ordained to the gospel ministry under the extraordinary clause. The call was placed in his hands and accepted. A commission with Rev. John Scott Johnson as chairman was appointed to install at some convenient time. An overture was sent to the Assembly requesting the establishment of a "Clearing House" for all Assembly benevolences. This contemplates a clearing house treasurer who will receive and distribute all funds raised for the benevolent causes of the Assembly. The advantages of this system were so patent to all that the overture created no discussion. Mr. A. F. Davidson, of Walters, Oklahoma, was appointed treasurer of the home mission committee, and instructed to receive and distribute the benevolent funds of the Presbytery as follows: Assembly, 40 per cent; local, 60 per cent. The latter to be distributed as follows: Orphanage, 6 per cent; Synod, 30 per cent; Presbytery, 24 per cent. Shawnee was selected as the next place of meeting. J. W. Moseley, Jr., Stated Clerk.

TENNESSEE.

The Presbytery of Nashville met in the First Presbyterian church of Shelbyville, April 15, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. D. H. Scanlon.

Organization—Ruling Elder L. I. MacQueen, Moderator, and Ruling Elder R. M. Reams and Rev. E. N. Caldwell, Clerks.

Attendance—Smaller than usual.

Reports from churches encouraging from financial point of view. Fine results from every member canvass. Only one minister not fully paid but some salaries inadequate to the demands of present conditions. Dearth of candidates for the ministry a matter of grave concern. On account of war conditions a larger number of churches without gospel ministrations than usual.

Home Missions—Forward movement taken in decision to employ Presbyterian or pastor at large, and all churches urged to hold special meetings before next fall meeting.

Minister received, Rev. G. H. Turpin, from Presbytery of Suwanee, and order taken for his installation as pastor of the West Nashville Church on May 4, at 3 p. m.

OVERTURES.

Evangelization of Jews—The Presbytery of Nashville hereby overtures the General Assembly to empower and instruct the General Assembly's Home Mission Committee to provide for the evangelization of the Jews within our bounds through the Department of Evangelism or in such manner as it may deem best."

Organic Union—"We, the Presbytery of Nashville, hereby overture the General Assembly in session at New Orleans to appoint a committee consisting of the present moderators of the several Synods within the Assembly together with the retiring moderator, Dr. Jas. I. Vance, as chairman to take definite steps toward organic union with the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A."

The hospitality of the Shelbyville Church was most delightful.

Place of next meeting, Mount Olivet Church, near Watertown, Tenn. W. C. Alexander, S. C.

TEXAS.

The Presbytery of Central Texas met in the Second Presbyterian Church of Waco April 15, and was opened by a sermon from the Moderator, Rev. L. E. Selfridge from I Cor. 6:19-20.

Present in all, twenty-one ministers and twenty elders.

Corresponding members—Revs. H. C. Evans, H. W. Burwell and W. R. Hall, of Dallas Presbytery.

Received—Rev. Rinaldo Avila from the Presbytery of Southern Arizona.

Officers—Judge M. M. Johnson, of the First Southern Church of Austin, moderator; Rev. John MacWilliams, temporary clerk, and Rev. E. S. Sansom, reading clerk.

Dismissed—Rev. J. S. Sleeper to the Presbytery of Fort Worth, and Revs. E. B. Paisley and R. F. Gribble to the Presbytery of Western Texas.

Pastoral relation, by mutual consent, between Rev. John MacWilliams and the Maysfield Church was dissolved.

A memorial of Dr. Samuel A. King was adopted and ordered spread on the records of Presbytery. (This has been previously published).

One half-day was spent in an interesting conference on the offices of the elder and deacon.

Three of our churches, namely, First Southern, Highland and Bartlett, were commended for increasing their pastor's salary. First Waco has also increased pastor's salary.

Rev. C. G. Christian was permitted, at his own request, to demit the ministry; and to choose his own church-home.

Rev. T. W. Currie preached the Presbyterian sermon on Sacrificial Living. Bartlett Church was permitted to continue the same relation with Rev. J. M. Lewis as their supply.

Thorndale Church, at the request of its members, was dissolved, and the members transferred to the First Church of Taylor.

Encouraging reports were made on Home and Foreign Missions. Rev. Walter S. Scott, our Mexican Evangelist, and Rev. W. F. McElroy, our Missionary to Africa, delivered very interesting addresses on their respective work. Mr. Scott was permitted to labor outside of our bounds, to carry out the work indicated by the Synod in the Northern portion of the Synod, so far as approved by the several Presbyteries concerned.

A very encouraging report was made on Systematic Benevolence, in which it was stated that 30 out of 39 churches have made the "Every Member Canvass."

The Keynote of the Presbytery was the matter of Schools and Colleges. Much time was given to the discussion of this subject both by members of the Presbytery and visiting members from the Executive Committee of Schools and Colleges and others. It is hoped that this will result in placing our religious institutions on a solid basis. Presbytery assumed its quota of $200,000, as indicated by the Executive Committee.

An interesting report on Ministerial Relief and Education was made by the chairman, Rev. R. W. Jopling, after which Presbytery was led in prayer for these causes.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the members of the Second Church, after which Presbytery adjourned to meet in Cameron, September 16, 1919.

M. C. Hutton,
Stated Clerk.

VIRGINIA.

Richmond, First Church—At the conclusion of the sermon on last Sabbath morning, Rev. F. F. Baker, who graduated at the Seminary last week, was ordained to the full work of the Gospel ministry by the following commission: Dr. J. C. Stewart, who delivered the charge to Mr. Baker, Dr. Theron H. Rice, Dr. Duncan Thomas, Dr. F. T. McFaden, who preached the sermon, and Elders E. L. Bemiss and E. H. Chalkley. Mr. Baker will sail for Brazil, where he will take up missionary work, in the early fall. During the summer he will supply the Tinkling Spring Church.

Roanoke, Belmont Church—The pastor of this church, Rev. W. H. Eubank, has very reluctantly resigned his pastorate here to accept a call to the High Bridge Church, Natural Bridge, Va. He leaves with genuine regret many warm friends in this and other congregations of this city. But he felt the step necessary in the interest of his health. And, too, he felt the leading of Divine Providence in the hearty and unanimous call of the High Bridge Church. After a short rest he will enter upon his duties there. His address, after May 21, will be Buchanan, Va.

The Presbytery of Greenbrier met in regular session in the church of Cass on April 15, and was opened with a sermon by Rev. I. S. McElroy, Jr., by request of the retiring Moderator. Rev. R. R. Gray was elected Moderator. Rev. R. L. McKinnon and Rev. J. M. Sydenstricker were elected clerks. In the absence of the Stated Clerk, Rev. J. M. Sloan, Rev. J. E. Flow acted as Stated Clerk. Rev. R. C. Long was received from the Presbytery of Mecklenburg and a commission was appointed to install him pastor of the Richwood Church. Steps were taken to dismiss the Richwood Church to the Presbytery of Tygarts Valley because of its inaccessibility to Greenbrier. Mr. O. N. Niles was taken under the care of the Presbytery as a candidate for the ministry. Rev. J. L. Line-weaver accepted a call to the Beckley Church and a commission was appointed to install him pastor. The church of Winterburn was dropped from the roll. Some ten or twelve churches reported an increase of their pastor's salary. Gifts to benevolent causes exceeded those of last year, and the roll of members exceeds the four thousand mark, thus entitling the Presbytery to double representation in the General Assembly for the first time under the new basis of representation.

There were three overtures sent to the General Assembly: One asking that the salaries of all home and foreign missionaries be increased, a second that the Assembly take up the matter, in conference with the Federal Council of Churches in America, of opening up a mission station in Russia as soon as practicable, and a third one requesting that the General Assembly consider the advisability of establishing a newspaper, daily except Sunday, the editorials and articles of which shall be favorable rather than antagonistic to the principles of evangelical religion. Encouraging reports were received from the Committee on Schools and Colleges, Home and Foreign Missions. Rev. J. E. Flow was requested to postpone the preaching of the Presbyterian sermon till the Fall meeting of Presbytery in the Carmel Church at Gap Mills.

Educational

Commencement at Kentucky Theological Seminary.

A fine year of work has just closed at this Seminary. The exercises of commencement were inaugurated with the communion service in the Harbison Memorial Chapel at the Seminary on Sunday afternoon, May 4, at 4:30, conducted by Rev. E. L. Warren, D.D., librarian and intendant of the Seminary. The baccalaureate sermon was delivered in the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church on Sunday evening at 8 o'clock. Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D.D., secretary of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, Louisville, and an alumnus of the Seminary, preached the sermon to a large audience, made up of the various Presbyterian churches of the city. Dr. Sweets preached from the text Hosea 4:6: "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." The sermon was a stirring appeal to Christians to recognize the value of their Christian schools and give them enthusiastic support.

On Monday evening, from 8 to 10 o'clock, a most de lightful reception was tendered to the graduating class by the faculty and the two lower classes. This was held in the social room at the Seminary. Tuesday, the 6th, was, as usual, a busy day. The board of directors, Dr. W. A. Ganfield, president of Centre College, Danville, Ky., presiding, was in session the greater part of the day. It expressed great gratification over the report presented by President Charles R. Hemphill. The institution, through a very trying period and as a result of the special work of the president, closes the books of the year with all expenses paid and with a substantial sum added to the permanent endowment. The following larger gifts were reported: Two scholarships for $2,500 each, from donors who wish the names to be withheld; a scholarship of $1,000 established by Mrs. Jessie Swope Norton in memory of her husband, Captain George C. Norton, for many years an elder in the Second

The Asheville Presbyterial—The fourteenth annual meeting of the Asheville Presbyterial was held in First Church, Asheville, May 5, 6, 7.

Every session was an interesting one and full of good things, from the opening hymn to the closing benediction. We regretted that Mrs. Winsborough could not be present to take her place on the program, for we had expected to get much help from her suggestions. However, we were fortunate in having Mrs. Walter McCoy, our Synodical President, who made a number of interesting talks on the various subjects before us. She was not only helpful in matters of business, but gave us spiritual messages that were uplifting.

It is our custom to begin the exercises of the first evening by celebrating the Lord's Supper. It was conducted by Dr. R. P. Smith, who was assisted by Rev. J. F. Ligon, of Hendersonville, and Rev. Paul Gresham, of West Asheville. Home Missions being the subject for the evening, Rev. J. F. Ligon addressed us on Assembly Missions, explaining very clearly the different departments of this work and the special needs in each. Rev. Paul Gresham spoke on Synodical Missions or The Work of the Synod of Appalachia. He told us very clearly what there was to do, and how we could do it. Dr. R. P. Smith showed by statistics and concrete examples what a strong force our Presbyterial has been in pushing forward all branches of mission work in this Presbytery. The Societies of our Presbyterial were well represented and the reports were especially good and showed that the Lord's work had not been neglected while so many worthy outside demands had been made upon the women.

The Heart to Heart service Tuesday morning was very impressive, each lady telling of something which had come into her life during the past year for which she was very thankful. The 1919 literature was so ably explained to the women by Miss Edith Lawrence that all were eager to procure what she had.

Mrs. C. T. Carr explained the Federation of Local Societies, and the Presbyterial voted to try this plan. The Young People's Work could not be left out, so its Presbyterial secretary, Mrs. Joseph Fulton, after giving her annual report, spoke very plainly and forcefully, laying the blame of no Young People's Work in a local church, first, on the pastor, second, on the local secretary, and, third, on the Woman's Society. Our returned missionary from Africa, Mr. C. R. Stegall, gave us a very vivid word picture of the condition of women in Africa, showing also what Christianity has done for them.

Our Presbyterial meeting did not seem quite right without our recording secretary, Mrs. Kate C. Pegues, and all regretted most deeply her illness. However, Mrs. Pegues' "Don'ts" seem to be a small bit of herself and all delegates were given a typewritten copy of them to take to their respective societies, hoping Mrs. Pegues' work will be made easier for her next spring.

After an interesting discussion of society problems, led by Mrs. J. W. Huston, the Presbyterial adjourned to meet in May, 1920, at Waynesville. Mrs. M. F.

ARE YOU COMING TO MONTREAT THIS SUMMER?

The best program yet offered is being prepared.

The Bible hour will be led by Mrs. W. J. Webster, of Front Royal, Va., a Bible teacher of remarkable strength and power.

Mrs. J. C. Sligh will give three novel and delightful Bible studies illustrating "Sacred Art."

Dr. Morris will present his new study book, "Christianizing Christendom," while the Foreign Mission book, "Fifty years in China," will be given by Mrs. H. M. Sydenstricker. The second choice Home Mission study book, "In Black and White," will be taught by its gifted author, Mrs. L. H. Hammond—and then there will be the methods hour—the parliamentary law class led by Mrs. Shawhan—the twilight story hour by Miss Cook—a missionary pageant—afternoon reception and all the splendid things that go with the Summer School at Montreat.

Don't forget the date—July 13-21.

Young People of Orange Presbyterial—Your rally will be held June 17-18 at Durham. We want you to come and surely you want to go! The meeting opens on Tuesday night and closes Wednesday afternoon. Please appoint the delegate at once from your society. We want at least one from each church. Watch the Standard for the program.

Mrs. L. T. Wilds, Jr.,

Secretary of Young People's Work.

O our Savior, of ourselves we cannot love Thee, cannot follow Thee, cannot cleave unto Thee; but Thou didst come down that we might love Thee, didst ascend that we might follow Thee, didst bind us around Thee as Thy girdle that we might be held fast unto Thee. Thou who has loved us, make us to love Thee; Thou who has sought us, make us to see Thee; be Thou Thyself the Way, that we may find Thee, and be found in Thee, our only Hope, and our everlasting joy.

A SWIMMING POOL.

Dear Standard:

I am a girl twelve years old. We have a swimming pool where we live. I have recited my Shorter Catechism and will get my Bible Sunday. I hope this letter won't reach the waste basket, as I am going to surprise my father and mother. Your little friend, Sallie Abernethy.

LOVES THE COUNTRY.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl thirteen years old and am in the sixth grade at school. Our school is out. It was out the fifth of April. My teacher's name was Miss Jennie Currie. The primary teacher's name was Miss Pearl Maness. I liked them fine.

I live in the country on a farm. I sure do like to live in the country. I love to see everything so pretty and green. The trees are all covered with pretty green leaves. The dogwood trees are in bloom.

I go to Sunday School and preaching at Bensalem Presbyterian church. Our pastor's name is Rev. W. L. Wilson. We like him very much.

We have a pet dog. His name is Rex. He is a big black and white spotted dog with long curly hair.

I have four sisters and three brothers. One of my brothers is in France and one has been to France and come back. He is in Boston, Mass. He is a sailor.

One of my sisters is in the Philippines. She is teaching school there. She is coming home next April.

I will close by asking a question. What is the shortest verse in the Bible?

Your friend, Bessie E. Kelly.

WITH THE FAMOUS 30TH.

Dear Standard:

I am writing you my first letter.

I am a boy 10 years old. I go to school to Mrs. McKinnon and I like her fine.

Our church at Antioch raised a fund of about $14,000 this year. Our pastor, Rev. J. W. Goodman, is such a good man. We love him very much.

My Uncle Clarence came home from France. We were so glad to have him back. He is a member of the 30th Division, and helped break through the Hindenburg line. I enjoy hearing him tell of it.

Hope to see my letter in the Standard soon. Your friend, Red Springs, N. C. Ray McNeill.

A SUPREME SACRIFICE.

A clear and sunny day last winter when the temperature was 13 degrees below, Cedric Mackenzie's mother decided it was wiser not to go to church as she was just recovering from an attack of bronchitis. Dr. Mackenzie had been summoned to the Falls at nine o'clock and had not returned at church time. Cedric felt fully the importance of representing the family and started for church a little ahead of time, followed by his faithful dog, Roderick, who was so well-trained that he never even asked to enter church doors. He did not understand this morning why his Master passed the church without stopping, but "his not to question why," so he enjoyed the additional walk with him to the Opera House, and when Cedric said to him, "Home, Rod!" he turned around obediently and went back with his sedate Sunday air, which to be sure usually lasted for only about a block.

At the door Cedric joined a great friend of his, Mr. Norcross, president of the Bank, who was over eighty, and together they were ushered down the middle aisle and given seats towards the front. It was the first Sunday of the union services of all the Protestant churches, arranged on account of the coal shortage. The novelty of such a service was very interesting to Cedric. Usually you knew where to look for this one or that one of your pals and had them located almost at once or knew which one was absent. Today it was only by accident, now and then, that he picked them out among the crowd, and not until the sermon did the last one finally come to light, and that one his Jonathan—Murray Holl—who leaned over the railing of the balcony and almost waved to him.

The service was most impressive. Flags were draped all about the auditorium. The five clergymen sat in a row on the platform and a sixth man with them who was a stranger and was in khaki. The volume of singing was inspiring, and Cedric joined in the hymns with a will, singing in his clear, childish treble, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and "Stand up, Stand up for Jesus." The text of the sermon was, "Fight the good fight, endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." There were many allusions to the war and references to the many young men of the town who were somewhere in France or on the seas or in the training-camps here at home. There was much about patriotism and loyalty and sacrifice. Cedric did not lose a word. He still saw visions of his five brothers who were in different branches of the United States service: John, at a base hospital in France; Gordon, the aviator, who had left Pensacola and was doubtless almost across to France; Don, in the trenches facing the Germans; Ronald, from whom they had not heard for three months so that they were watching the mails anxiously; and Ross, whose last letter had come from a hospital where he was recovering from a wound received while driving an ambulance. Cedric also saw himself, at times, in uniform leading a forlorn charge and encouraging his men to follow until he fell covered with wounds. He was too young to get far beyond the glory of the pictures of war which his imagination conjured up.

Towards the close of the sermon Mr. Manstead came closer home. "We at home," he said, "can all do our bit. We must all be ready to sacrifice. We here are not called on to make the supreme sacrifice, even unto death, but many are making, have made, a supreme one—in giving their sons, brothers or husbands. What mother is there but would find it easier to make the supreme sacrifice herself rather than to endure sending her boy to do it. All honor to the mothers the country over, the world over!" Cedric's heart swelled. Oh, if mother had only come!

Then they sang "The Son of God goes forth to war!" Mr. Langdale, Cedric's minister, pastor of the Congregational Church, rose and announced that Major Kincaid of Ottawa would make a short address. The man in khaki stepped forward and greeted the audience. "We have just been listening to words about sacrifice. You have been making sacrifices yourselves, I suppose, of one kind or another. Indeed on my way here this morning I passed a service flag which bore five stars, and there are doubtless many such. I want to ask for sacrifice in behalf of the organization which is transporting dogs for the war. Canada has sent numbers. More are needed. If any one here can send one, please communicate with Mr. J. S. Porter, Broad Street, A———" The rest of his speech was a blur in Cedric's mind. He mechanically bowed his head for the benediction, and as mechanically said good-bye to Mr. Norcross. Then he joined his Sunday school class. He was dimly glad that the lesson was on a different subject, not on sacrifice, but about God calling Samuel. It was mighty easy to answer that call, but—!

He hurried out of the building, heedless of the other boys' calls to wait, not caring if they thought he had a grouch. All the enthusiasm which the sermons and hymns had aroused in him had gone since Major Kincaid's appeal. He saw nothing but Roderick, his loving, loyal friend, and the eyes that said so much without words. How could he do without that affection which was never unstinted, those welcomes which always awaited him after they had been separated? "I can't. I can't," he cried to himself as he turned into the yard. And Rod made it no easier for him, as he hurried to meet him and expressed his joy on his return. All the pent-up misery in Cedric's soul went into the hug which he gave him.

Dinner was a silent meal, for Dr. Mackenzie had returned from the Falls only to be summoned in another direction. After asking various questions about the service, which awakened no enthusiasm from Cedric who usually overflowed with eager accounts of what he had done or heard or seen, and which sounded like cross-questioning, Mrs. Mackenzie gave up her attempts for sociability, wondering if he had taken cold or what the matter was. Cedric's appetite for chicken did not come up to the customary mark and dessert was refused, an unheard of event. But his mother did not question the boy, knowing that often at bedtime things which had been hidden were brought to light.

After dinner Cedric and Rod took a long tramp over the crusty fields and came back so tired that they lay down on the rug before the open fire and slept over an hour, wrapped in each other's arms. But Cedric apparently had no confidences to give when his mother tucked him in for the night. Her observant eyes noticed in the morning, however, that the bed showed signs of a night of tossing and turning, and she found under the pillow a damp wad of a handkerchief. At breakfast a sober but determined Cedric asked if Rod was really his very own. On being reassured on that point he told of Major Kincaid's appeal and asked his father to arrange about sending Rod. "You know Rod came from Canada so he belongs to the Allies," he added, for Rod was a Canadian bred dog.

Then Cedric fled to school, leaving his mother and father sure that he was worthy of his five brothers. No one knew of where Cedric and Rod said good-bye, but, according to Cedric's wish, Rod disappeared with Dr. Mackenzie Thursday while he was at school. Nothing was said of the departure, nor did anyone speak of missing Rod. On her rounds before retiring that night Mrs. Mackenzie found over Rod's bed a small service flag made of red flannel, with one skewy white paper star sewed on it, and her heart entered into Cedric's suffering as only a mother's could. Friday dawned, dragged and finally died for Cedric. Saturday was just as endless although work and play filled every moment, and it took no urging to persuade Cedric to go to bed even earlier than usual. He was too physically tired not to sleep and sleep soundly, but early Sunday morning into his sleep came a familiar sound which increased until he woke. No one else made that noise but Rod. Surely he wasn't dreaming! He opened the window and called softly, "Rod," and the old dear reply came. It did not take long for Cedric, clad only in pajamas, to slide down the banisters and open the front door. For the next few moments it would have been hard to tell which was boy and which was dog in the joyous reunion. And their joy was equal. Not for a moment did Rod reproach his master for letting him be taken away. Nothing mattered now that they were together again. All the family, who soon assembled to see what was going on, were so happy at seeing Rod again that they forgot to reprove him for desertion. They had not come anywhere near such a thought when the telephone bell rang violently.

Phoebe ran to answer, and, coming back, reported, "Long distance for the doctor." Cedric's heart gave a great drop. Yes, of course, it must all be gone through with again! He clung convulsively to Rod with one arm, laid one ear against Rod's rough head, and covered the other ear with his free hand. After what seemed ages to Cedric, his father came back from his office, looking happier than he had at all since he had taken Rod to Albany, but of course Cedric could not see his face. "The call was from Albany," he said, "to see if Rod was safe. They found that he had broken loose, and though that probably he was here."

"Yes, go on," cried Cedric, "go on quick!"

His father put his hand on the boy's shoulder. "It's good news, Cedric," he said simply. "Rod could not pass the physical examination. His eyes aren't good enough. He's yours again." The transformation in Cedric's face was wonderful to see. "Mr. Porter says," continued Dr. Mackenzie, "to tell you that your patriotism and sacrifice are as much appreciated as if Rod had been accepted, and he thanks you heartily."

Cedric gave Rod an ecstatic hug, and whispered in his shaggy ear, "We'll never part again, puppy." And Rod expressed his joy in his own dog fashion.—Jane C. Crowell in The Congregationalist.

Report of the Committee of Conference on Federal Union

Your Committee would respectfully present the following report:

1. The history of these negotiations is familiar to your body.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., in session in Dallas, Texas, in May, 1917, adopted a report suggesting the organic union of that Church and our own, and telegraphed same to our Assembly, in session in Birmingham, Alabama.

Our Assembly adopted the following answer:

"While this Assembly does not regard organic union as practicable at this time, yet it hereby appoints the committee of conference on union asked for by the Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., and recommends to the proposed conference the consideration of the federation of all the Presbyterian Churches of our country upon some practical and effective basis."

The committee appointed as the result of the above action held four meetings, three of them being conferences with the Committee on Church Co-operation and Union of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.

After considering in those conferences both organic union

Presbyterian Church, Louisville; a scholarship of $1,000, established by Mrs. Mary R. Henry in memory of her husband, John F. Henry, Esq., for years a member of the same church; a scholarship for $2,500 in memory of Colonel Charles E. Hoge, of Frankfort, Ky., by his children; Mr. Wm. M. Webb, of Akron, Ohio, by a gift of $500, completes a scholarship of $1,000; Mrs. H. O. Hausgen, of Anchorage, Ky., gives $250 to care for two suites furnished some years ago in memory of her mother and father and for the renewal of furniture in the reference room of the Seminary. The sum of $200 has been received as a bequest in the will of the Rev. Wm. M. Morrison, D.D., an alumnus of the Seminary and famous missionary to the Congo. This fund will be used as a nucleus for the establishment of a scholarship by his friends in memory of this most distinguished graduate of the Seminary. It was also announced to the board that a bequest of $2,500 in the will of Miss Fannie L. Slaughter, of Louisville, had been paid. This goes to the establishment of a scholarship in memory of Miss Slaughter's mother. Mr. Lewis R. Atwood, of Louisville, Mr. W. G. Duncan, of Greenville, Ky., and Mr. S. French Hoge, of Frankfort, Ky., were elected as new members of the board of directors to fill an original vacancy and others caused by the death of General Bennett H. Young, of Louisville, and Colonel Charles E. Hoge, of Frankfort, Ky., concerning whom appreciative resolutions were passed by the board.

Matters of unusual interest were settled at the Alumni Association meeting which began its sessions at noon yesterday. Announcement was made that more than fifty of the alumni had served their country, in the ranks or as chaplains or Y. M. C. A. workers, in the great war and that four had been wounded, two of them quite seriously. Resolutions of appreciation were passed setting forth the service of General Bennett H. Young and Colonel Charles E. Hoge, members of the board of directors who have passed away within the last few months. After the alumni luncheon and its fine fellowship, Rev. W. H. Hopper, of Louisville, presiding, addresses were delivered by Mr. A. E. Dallas, of Corbin, Ky., representing the graduating class, on "A Graduate's Outlook on the Field;" by Dr. Peyton H. Hoge, of Pewee Valley, Ky., and Dr. Henry E. Dosker, of the faculty, by the Rev. W. R. Anderson, D.D., of Shelbyville, Ky., who delivered a fine address on "The Church and the New Era."

The final exercises of the Seminary, which were held at the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening, the 6th, were of unusual interest. A great missionary address was delivered by the Rev. John M. Vander Meulen, D.D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Oak Park, Ill., on the subject, "At the Cross Roads." Dr. Vander Meulen also delivered the address of congratulation to Professor Henry E. Dosker on the completion of his twenty-five years of teaching in the department of church history, Dr. Dosker making appropriate response. The E. L. Warren prize of $25 in gold, for improvement in the preparation and delivery of sermons, was divided between Mr. Thomas Brewster, of England, and Mr. J. C. Watson, of Mississippi, members of the graduating class. Diplomas were then awarded to nineteen young men, sixteen of whom received also the degree of B. D., and the faculty address to the graduates was delivered by Dr. Dosker. It has been noted as quite a coincidence that there were nineteen graduates in the class of nineteen-nineteen. The class represents seven States and four foreign countries. Mr. Blanco of this class was born in Barcelona, Spain, was a sailor two years, a soldier in the United States Army for three, took his academic work at Berea College and now finishes with his degree at this Seminary. Mr. Kikujiro Clifford Kondo, born in Japan, taught for a number of years in Hawaii and expects to return to Hawaii as a minister in the near future. Mr. Thomas Brewster, from England, and Mr. T. V. D. Dillon, of New Zealand, will take work in this country. Here are the names of the graduates, with their new field of work:

Graduates for 1918-1919—Bachelors of Divinity: Grover Cleveland Bidwell (Arkansas), Ward, Ark.; Henry Blanco (Spain), probably Arizona; Virgil Leon Bryant (Mississippi), Maiden, Miss.; Archibald Elgin Dallas (Kentucky), Mt. Vernon, Ind.; Christopher McCoy Franklin (North Carolina), Crossnore, N. C.; Bluford B. Hestir (Arkansas), Grayson, Ky.; David Stuart Hotchkiss, A. B. (Alabama), Rockport, Ky.; Kikujiro Clifford Kondo (Japan), Hawaii; Bertram Maxwell Larson, A. B. (Tennessee), Etowah, Tenn.; Henry James McGehee (Mississippi), Nachitoches, La.; James White McNutt (Nebraska), undecided; Ralph Reo Murphy, A. M. (Kentucky), Winchester, Ky.; Ernest Wolsey Newland, A. B. (Kentucky), Carrolton, Ky.; William Lee Newman, A. B. (Kentucky), undecided; Henry Reubelt Pearcy, A. B. (Kentucky), Louisville, Ky.; James Carl Watson, A. B. (Mississippi), Louisville, Miss.

Graduates Receiving Diplomas: Thomas Brewster (England), Glasgow, Ky.; Trevor Victor Dixon Dillon (New Zealand), Southport, Ind.; Willis Slater Fordyce (Missouri), undecided.

Oklahoma Presbyterian College for Girls.

On Sunday, May 18, the commencement sermon will be preached by Rev. Edgar Williams, of Bonham, Texas.

On Thursday, May 22, at 8:30 p. m., at the First Presbyterian Church, the graduating exercises will be held with the commencement address by Hon. Gabe E. Parker, of Muskogee, Okla.

Stonewall Jackson College.

The following is the program for commencement for this institution: Friday, May 30, 8:30 p. m., concert; Saturday, May 31, 11:00 a. m.-6 p. m., household economics and art exhibits; 8:30 p. m., reception. Sunday, June 1, 11:00 a. m., baccalaureate sermon, Rev. H. M. Woods, D. D., missionary to China; 8:15 p. m., sermon to Y. W. C. A., Rev. H. W. Woods, D. D. Monday, June 2, 4:00 p. m., meeting of board. Tuesday, June 3, 10:00 a. m., literary address and delivery of diplomas.

and federation under a paper declaring that "the jurisdiction of this committee is to deliberate and reach conclusions as to any recommendations to be made to our General Assembly upon the whole subject of organic union and all phases of federation," the committee presented the following unanimous report:

"Having had three conferences with the Committee of the U. S. A. Church in which the differences between the two Churches have been faithfully considered and the difficulties in the way of union and federation have been honestly and frankly faced, it is the judgment of your committee that neither organic union nor federal union at present can be effected.

"We would recommend, however, that the Assembly accede to the request of the Committee of the U. S. A. Church, that your Committee be continued another year, to receive any added light that may be had and make final report to the Assembly of 1919."

2. This report was heard by the General Assembly of 1918, and referred by the Assembly to a select committee made up of one member from each Synod. This select committee presented two reports, a majority and a minority.

The majority report, signed by sixteen members, recommended immediate steps looking to organic union.

The minority report, signed by one member, recommended the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

Both the majority and minority reports were rejected by the Assembly, and this substitute was adopted:

"The Assembly approves the report of our Ad-Interim Committee on Conference and continues a committee, as requested by the Committee on Conference of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America.

"The Assembly goes on record as opposing organic union at this time, but as approving the idea of a federal union of all the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in the United States.

"It is ordered that the committee be enlarged so as to include one member from each Synod; that these committee-men be selected by the commissioners present from the Presbyteries constituting their respective Synods; and that this committee select its own chairman."

3. The following were selected by the representatives of the Synods as members of the committee:

Thornton Whaling, D.D., R. F. Campbell, D.D., James I. Norris, D.D., J. G. Venable, Homer McMillan, D.D., T. M. Hawes, D.D., George Summey, D.D., J. B. Hutton, D.D., W. R. Dobyns, D.D., J. M. Wells, D.D., Erskine Brantly, D.D., I. C. H. Champney, D.D., Hon. W. F. Stevenson, A. B. Curry, D.D., Wm. M. Anderson, D.D., A. M. Fraser, D. D., Ernest Thompson, D.D.

The Assembly approved these members, and appointed Rev. J. M. Wells, D.D., to call the committee together.

4. To this committee the General Assembly referred the following papers:

1st. The substitute mentioned above, under which the committee was appointed. Minutes of the General Assembly of 1918, page 27.

2nd. A paper offered by Rev. Thos. D. Wesley to the Assembly. Minutes of the General Assembly of 1918, page 36.

3rd. A Plan of Federal Union for all the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in America, submitted by the Council of Reformed Churches in America to the Assembly. Minutes of the General Assembly of 1918, page 39.

5. The committee held the following meetings:

1st. An informal meeting was held at Durant, Oklahoma, during the meeting of the Assembly. Only the members attending the Assembly were present and as they did not constitute a quorum no business was transacted.

2nd. The first regular called meeting was held in Cincinnati, Ohio, on February 18, 1919.

Dr. John M. Wells was elected permanent chairman, and Dr. Homer McMillan, secretary.

The question of the scope of this committee's negotiations was fully discussed and the following paper adopted:

"Resolved, That this committee is limited by the action of the Durant Assembly to the consideration of Federal Union with the other Presbyterian bodies, and negotiations with the committee of the U. S. A. Church shall be limited to that subject."

Drs. Dobyns, Hawes, Whaling and Venable asked that their protest to the above be recorded.

The chairman was directed to communicate to the Committee of the U. S. A. Church that, in accord with the action of the last Assembly, our committee was ready to take up with them the consideration of a Plan of Federal Union.

Our committee, taking under consideration the Plan of Federal Union found in the report of the Committee of Conference to the Assembly of 1918; the Plan of Federal Union submitted by the Council of Reformed Churches in America referred to us by the Assembly; the paper presented by Rev. Thos. D. Wesley to the Assembly of 1918 and referred to us by said Assembly; and other papers and suggestions, carefully formulated a Plan of Federal Union and presented same for consideration to the Committee on Conference of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A.

As this paper was subsequently extensively revised and changed, and in its revised form will be given in full later, we do not regard it as necessary to present it here.

After a full discussion of the suggested Plan of Federal Union in joint conference, the Committee of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. presented the following communication:

"The Committee on Church Co-operation and Union of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. having carefully considered the Plan of Federal Union submitted to it by the Committee on Federation and Union of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., of which you are the chairman, draws the attention of your committee to the fact that the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., by Assembly action in May, 1918, has already adopted a Plan of Federal Union in connection with the Council of the Reformed Churches in the United States holding the Presbyterian System, and also states that on the same date a proposal was made and adopted for the organic union of all the Evangelical Churches in the United States, a plan of union which may be interpreted to mean Federal Organic Union.

"Having thus stated the attitude of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., through its General Assembly, to the matter of Federal Union in a broad sense of the expression, the committee of the U. S. A. Church on Church Co-operation and Union proposed, in connection with the plan submitted to it by your committee, the inclusion in it of the following subjects:

"1. The inclusion in the definition and description of the powers of the Federal Assembly of the subject of Home Missions;

"2. The vesting of the final authority in matters of Doctrine and Discipline in the Federal Assembly; and

"3. That the language attributed to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., viz: 'Church property is the property of the whole Church,' be used in the definition and description of the powers of the Federal Assembly.

"If the above changes be acceptable, then the U. S. A. Committee can proceed with the further consideration of the Plan of Federal Union as submitted to it with the hope of success."

Our committee made this answer to their communication:

"The Committee of Conference on Federation of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., having carefully considered your communication, has adopted the following answer:

"That we cannot accede to the request of the U. S. A. Committee to the inclusion of the following subjects in the Plan of Federal Union as suggested:

"1. The inclusion in the definition and description of the powers of the Federal Assembly of the subject of Home Missions;

"2. The vesting of final authority in matters of Doctrine and Discipline in the Federal Assembly.

"3. That the language attributed to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., viz: 'Church property is the property of the whole Church,' be used in the definition and description of the powers of the Federal Assembly."

In response to this answer, we received the following proposal:

"The Committee on Church Co-operation and Union of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A. put in the following form its views as to the negotiations now in process.

"1. We favor Union as an ideal, and we prefer Organic Union between the two Churches in the sense of consolidation.

"2. In view of existing conditions, we favor at present a Plan of Federal Organic Union.

"3. We favor the appointment of a sub-committee of six, three from each committee, to put into a proper form as to details a Plan of Federal Union in line with the plan presented by the committee of the U. S. Church, to be reported to and considered by a joint meeting of the two committees to be held in the future, and said sub-committee to give full consideration in the details of such a plan to the views of this committee; on Home Missions and on Doctrine and Discipline as matters to be included in the powers of the Federal Assembly."

Our answer to this proposal was as follows:

"The Committee on Federal Union of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., in answer to the statement of 'The views as to the negotiations now in progress' of the Committee on Church Co-operation and Union of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., would present the following paper:

"1. As the terms 'Organic Union' and 'Federal Union' have been given distinct and definite meanings in the act of our General Assembly creating this committee, he would ask that any further negotiations between the two committees shall be distinctly upon the basis of a 'Plan of Federal Union.'

"This statement is made in view of the fact that our Assembly has clearly stated that it is not in favor of 'Organic Union' at this time, and has appointed us to confer as to 'Federal Union.'

"2. We agree to the 'appointment of a sub-committee of six, three from each committee, to put into proper form as to details a Plan of Federal Union in line with the plan presented by the Committee of the U. S. Church, to be reported to and considered by a joint meeting of the two committees to be held in the future.'

"And while our committee has voted today not to recede from its action previously taken touching the management of Home Missions and the question of Doctrine and Discipline as matters to be included in the powers of the Federal Assembly, we are ready to give full authority to said sub-committee to give the fullest weight in their consideration of the details of said plan to the views of your committee touching said matters."

Drs. John M. Wells, Thornton Whaling and R. F. Campbell were elected to serve on the sub-committee asked for.

3rd. The two sub-committees met in Baltimore and carefully considered the "Plan of Federal Union" presented by our sub-committee and a "Plan of Federal Union" offered by their sub-committee. From these two plans was prepared and adopted a "Plan of Federal Union" for submission to the two committees.

4th. The final meeting of the two committees was held in Pittsburgh on March 26th, 1919.

The report of the sub-committee was first presented to the committees in separate session. Extensive changes and amendments were made by both committees.

The committees then met in joint session. The report of the sub-committee, as amended by the two committees, and thus constituting two separate papers, was presented.

These papers were fully and comprehensively discussed.

The following resolution, unanimously adopted by the committee of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., was presented at the close of the discussion to the committee of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.:

"We have presented in the paper last submitted by this committee substantially the Plan of Federal Union we can commend to our Assembly."

The following answer was received from that committee:

"In reply to your communication of this date, it is our desire to continue the conference between our two committees, at which the Plan of Federal Union submitted by your committee shall be considered, with a view to ascertaining how far the two committees are in agreement, and with the understanding that amendments may be made and considered."

The "Plan of Federal Union" thus finally before the two committees was fully discussed, amended, voted on section by section and finally adopted as a whole by the committees acting jointly and in separate session.

The final vote on adoption was unanimous on the part of the members present of the Committee of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. All the members present of the Committee of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. voted for its adoption except two. These asked permission to explain their vote as an unwillingness on their part to give up the idea of organic union.

Our committee requested its chairman to present the report of the committee in person to the Assembly, with such explanatory statements as he may see fit.

The full minutes of both meetings of the committee have been submitted with this report, and are in the hands of the stated clerk.

6. The Plan of Federal Union adopted and submitted is as follows:

Outline of the Plan of Federal Union.

Whereas, We believe that by a federal union on the part of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches of the United States a closer and more efficient unity of organization and work may be secured, we propose to our respective General Assemblies the following plan:

1. A Federal Union shall be formed, into which all the various Presbyterian and Reformed Churches of our country shall be invited, as follows:

The Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.

The Presbyterian Church in the U. S.

The Reformed Church in the United States.

The United Presbyterian Church of North America.

The Reformed Church in America.

The Associate Reformed Presbyterian Synod.

The Christian Reformed Church in North America.

The Welsh Calvinistic Methodist or Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.

The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of North America.

The General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Colored.

2. This Federal Union shall become effective when three or more of the Presbyterian or Reformed Churches shall adopt the plan of union to be proposed.

3. The ecclesiastical organizations of the constituent Churches acceding to this plan shall for the present remain unchanged, and their several judicatories or other ecclesiastical agencies shall continue to exercise the powers and duties committed to them by the constitutions of the constituent Churches, respectively, except in respect to the matters hereinafter expressly delegated to the "Federal Assembly" to be constituted.

4. The "Federal Assembly" to be constituted shall be the declarative, executive, administrative and judicial agency of the Federal Union, and shall possess the ecclesiastical powers hereinafter named, and shall represent in one body all the Churches federated therein, and shall constitute the bond of union, peace and correspondence among all the congregations and courts of the constituent Churches, and shall have the title, the "Federal Assembly of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in the U. S. A."

5. Subject to a more detailed enumeration of its powers, to be set forth in a formal constitution to be adopted by the legal action of the constituent Churches, the powers to be delegated to the said Federal Assembly shall be, in substance, as follows:

(a) To receive into the united body any other ecclesiastical body conforming to the doctrine and order of the united Churches of this Federal Union. The question of the organic union of any two or more of the constituent Churches shall be a matter outside the province of the Federal Assembly and entirely within the jurisdiction of the Churches proposing such union.

(b) In general, to recommend to the constituent Churches measures for the promotion of charity, benevolence, truth and holiness.

(c) To correspond with other Churches.

(d) To institute and superintend the agencies necessary to the general work of evangelization by the Federal Union, namely: Foreign Missions, Publication, Ministerial Relief, Schools and Colleges, Home Missions, Church Election, Colored Work, Evangelism, Stewardship and such other causes as may be expressly delegated to it, subject to the provisions of the constitution to be adopted.

(e) Inasmuch as it has been found in the experience of some of the Churches concerned that efficiency in the work of Home Missions is greatly increased by local responsibility, supervision and control, the direct administration in Home Missions shall continue to be exercised as at present in each constituent Church through the General Assembly, General Synod and other lower courts, except in cases where any constituent Church shall deem it expedient to commit any part of its work of Home Missions to the administration of the Federal Assembly.

(f) The General Assembly or General Synods of the constituent Churches shall send up their records for information and shall report to the Federal Assembly on all administrative matters, and the Federal Assembly shall receive and consider said records and reports and shall make such deliverances thereon as are calculated to stimulate the whole Church on matters pertaining to the advancement of the Kingdom of Christ.

(g) The Federal Assembly shall have the power, by executive commission or otherwise, as it may from time to time determine, to exercise judicial functions in settling all questions of comity arising between constituent Churches, and to enforce any and all agreements entered into by or between any two or more of said constituent Churches. The findings of the Federal Assembly in any case shall be final, and shall be enforced through the courts of the constituent Churches.

(h) It shall exercise such power as to doctrine as may be necessary in the discharge of the administrative and judicial functions conferred upon it by the constitution to be adopted, but it shall not have power to frame symbols of faith for any of the constituent Churches.

(i) It shall exercise such judicial powers as may be required for the work committed to it by the constitution, but cases of judicial process involving heresy or immorality arising in any of the constituent Churches shall terminate as at present in said Churches.

(j) It shall hold and administer all properties given to said Federal Assembly or any of its chartered, incorporated or other agencies.

6. The Federal Assembly shall consist of two sets of commissioners, as follows:

First, six ministers and six elders, elected by the General Assembly or General Synod of each of the constituent Churches; second, of two commissioners, elected by each subordinate Synod or body corresponding thereto, and two additional commissioners for each additional 50,000 communicants, or major fraction thereof, after the first 50,000, said commissioners to be ministers and ruling elders in equal numbers, from each subordinate Synod or body corresponding thereto.

These two sets of commissioners shall sit as one body, but whenever any one of the commissioners elected by the General Assembly or General Synod of any constituent Church shall call for a vote by Churches, the action before the united body shall not pass unless adopted by a majority of the Churches expressed through commissioners elected by the General Assemblies or General Synods of the constituent Churches.

7. The Federal Assembly shall meet biennially, and special meetings shall be called as provided in the constitution to be hereafter adopted.

8. At any session of the Federal Assembly the request of any constituent Church to withdraw from the Federal Union may be considered, and shall be granted, provided such proposal to withdraw shall have been submitted to and approved by the same courts of the withdrawing Church as were required to approve its entrance into this union.

9. It is agreed that the General Assemblies or General Synods of the constituent Churches shall provide a fund sufficient for the expense of said "Federal Assembly" on the basis of the numerical strength of the constituent Churches.

10. All of the property rights of the constituent Churches shall remain as at present vested, and shall not be changed except by the proper and constitutional procedure of the said respective constituent Church. And it shall be agreed upon by the constituent Churches entering into said Federal Union that the General Assembly or General Synod, or body corresponding thereto, is the supreme court as respects property rights of the respective constituent Churches.

11. The details of the constitution shall be taken up and reported upon by the committee to be appointed by the supreme judicatories of the respective Churches which shall approve of this outline of a tentative plan.

The constitution shall be adopted and may be amended by a favorable vote of all the constituent bodies, each Church acting in accordance with its own constitution.

* * * *

7. Your Committee has consulted informally with a large group of the most influential men in the United Presbyterian Church. These men, after hearing the "Outline of the Plan of Federal Union," were unanimous in their expressions of approval of the plan, and the consensus of opinion among them was that their Church would heartily enter into such a Federal Union.

The Chairman of the Commission on Closer Union of the Churches of the Reformed Church in the U. S. was consulted, and, after a full discussion of the "Outline of the Plan of Federal Union," expressed his approval of the same, and his belief that his Church would heartily endorse and accept same.

Prominent men in other Presbyterian and Reformed Churches have been consulted and, without exception, have approved of the plan.

8. Your Committee respectfully makes the following recommendations:

1st. We hereby submit the above Plan of Federal Union to the Assembly and recommend it for favorable action.

2nd. Should the report of our Committee be approved by the Assembly, we further recommend that the Assembly appoint a committee to represent our Church in framing the constitution of the Federal Assembly provided for in the "Plan of Federal Union," and in any further steps needed in carrying said "Plan" into effect.

3rd. In case of your approval of the Plan of Federal Union, this Committee hereby requests the General Assembly to appoint the Rev. Thornton Whaling, D. D., and the Rev. R. F. Campbell, D. D., to visit the supreme judicatories of each of the several Churches which we invite to join with our Church in the proposed Federal Union, to present and explain this plan of union.

4th. We recommend that the General Assembly present this "Plan of Federal Union" to the Council of Reformed Churches in America holding the Presbyterian System as the response of our Church to the communication of that Council touching a Federal Union of Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, referred to this Committee, and that the Council be requested to consider this plan as a substitute for the one it has proposed.

5th. That our Stated Clerk be directed to send at once to each of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches mentioned in Section 1 of the "Outline of the Plan of Federal Union" a copy of said "Outline," with a cordial invitation to join our Church in the forming of such a Federal Union.

Miscellaneous

THE PASTOR AND THE HOME.

Is the pastoral visit a thing of the past? Or, more to the point, has the desire for it departed? Not long ago The Continent published an article concerning attempts of the small boys of the parish to absent themselves from home on the days when our President's grandfather, Dr. Thomas Woodrow, made his pastoral call. The article brought forth a protest from one reader whose childhood experience with the minister's visit had evidently not resembled so closely a kind of third degree in the catechism.

Regret Passing of Pastoral Visits.

"Why, oh, why, should any child want to avoid the pastoral visit? Oh, the precious memories I cherish of the visits of our beloved pastor. The very atmosphere of the room where the family had gathered around him, where after a genial time together he had talked of the work of the church and explained its glorious doctrines and invoked God's blessings upon us, seemed sweeter and purer; and we all, even the little tots, walked softly as in the presence of the Lord for hours afterward. I fail to see how any Christian can but deplore the passing away of these real pastoral visits."

That there has been a "passing away of these real pastoral visits" seems evidence that many pastors have decided there is no longer any desire for them. One wonders whether the decision may not be the result of the natural desire of the pastor himself to evade pastoral visits. That the modern family with its ceaseless round of social activities is more or less indifferent about whether or not the minister ever sets his foot inside the door is doubtless true. But we know too that among those few who still lead quiet lives there is a good deal of pleasure created by the coming of the pastor and even the busier ones though not noticing his failure to come are very happy if he does come.

Seeking Efficient Substitutes.

One thing is certain, mere church receptions and similar gatherings can not be relied upon to supply the necessary contact between the pastor and his people. If the church is too large or other things make it impracticable for the minister to make many calls there should be an assistant or a committee definitely appointed to go into the homes of the people to strengthen the tie with the church. One church has recently had a sudden and overwhelming increase of membership and attendance. New pastor? No. New building? No. Same old pastor, same old church, only there aren't any empty pews and occasionally a few people stand through the service. Nor has the preacher suddenly received the gift of tongues. He has merely started to advertise, not only newspaper advertising but the kind of publicity that results from having thirty-five interested (and interesting) women carrying on a quiet but persistent calling campaign each week. When a woman joins that church there are at least six persons to call upon her the following week. Doubtless any dream that woman may have had of being a merely passive member of the church fade somewhat under such an onslaught of enthusiasm. Doubtless there are those who would say that this plan is very good, that there should be more of this sort of thing, but that it does not take the place of the "real pastoral visit." Even so, may it not be a necessary substitute in many churches?—Continent.

The only woman bank director in the country is said to be Miss Catherine Olney, a member of the board of directors of the Park Trust Company, of Worcester, Mass. Miss Olney is a sister of Congressman Richard Olney, of the Eleventh Massachusetts district, and a niece of Richard Olney, Secretary of State under President Cleveland. She has been with the company three years, and was chosen a director as a result of her good work, as well as efforts in all the Liberty Loan campaigns.

Unto those who talk and talk

The steam that blows the whistle
Will never turn the wheel.

UNIVERSITY SUMMER SCHOOL.

With many applications for rooms enquiries pertaining to courses coming in daily, indications are that the forthcoming thirty-second session of the summer school, which will open on June 24th and come to a close on August 8th, will be most successful both in point of view of attendance and work accomplished. Many new courses, besides those that have been given in the past, will be offered, according to information contained in an abridged announcement pamphlet just issued, which is being mailed free upon application.

The program for the forthcoming commencement at the University, the dates of which are June 15, 16, 17, and 18, has just been announced. It contains several new features, including an historical pageant to be presented on the afternoon of class day exercises and arrangements whereby the various reunion classes will have more time to themselves for renewing the bonds of friendship.

Secretary of the Interior Franklin B. Lane is the commencement Day speaker, while Rev. John Ellington White, pastor First Baptist Church of Anderson, S. C., will preach the baccalaureate sermon. The visit of Secretary Lane will mark the fourth University commencement address by cabinet members within the past four years. Secretary McAdoo was here in 1915, while Secretaries Daniels and Baker were present for the 1917 finals. The visit of Secretary Lane to North Carolina, particularly at this time, promises to make the occasion one of momentous importance to the State. More emphasis is being put on the class reunion program than heretofore, the get-together affairs having been styled "Victory Reunions."

"What became of Piute Pete?" asked the visitor at Crimson Gulch.

"He joined the army," answered Broncho Bob.

"Thought he was too old to fight."

"He was. But he was such a fighter that nobody dast tell him."—Washington Star.

LIFE'S LAW OF LOVE.

After a great battle I had been up all night helping to bring in the wounded" said Dr. Kelman, one of Scotland's scholarly ministers, who went to minister to the men with the colors. "I was alone in the clearing station at four o'clock in the morning. A boy came in badly wounded; and, as he stood with his arm around my neck, I said to him, 'Laddie, why have you been so long coming in?' 'O, sir,' he said, 'I've been busy.' 'What have you been doing, laddie?' 'O sir, my mate was dying out there in two feet of water, and I couldn't come away and leave him, I held up his head above the water till he died.'

"My tunic was soaked with blood from the boy's wounds; and yet, as I helped him to the ambulance, he refused to go till we had taken another who he thought needed it more."

And this significant sentence was added by Dr. Kelman when he related the incident: "Through this love for their mates they are led up to the love that bled for us on Calvary."

"Take every chance you possibly can get to be kind, for some day there may be no more chances," says a popular author. Nakhichevan means literally "the first stopping place," and tradition says it is the place where Noah stopped first on descending from the ark. It is at the foot of Mt. Ararat.

A translation of the document follows:

To the Imperial Representative,
The Supreme President of the United States.

The Musslemans of Nakhichevan and its vicinity in general, and their local Chief in particular express their heartfelt thanks to your Supreme Highness for the money, clothing and grain given by the American Relief Workers for the aid of the villages and hungry, orphans and poverty stricken community of Nakhichevan on the Arax River in the Caucasus.

From the depths of our hearts we applaud the advance and increase of glory of the American Republic, and her manifest faithfulness and sincerity in the pathway of humanity's progress. From Almighty God we pray long life, for your Supreme Excellency.

We are confident also that in the future, America, the Servant of Humanity, will extend to our State a guiding hand to help us.

Today (March 3, 1919), in the orphanage opened by America, in the presence of a great multitude, official prayers were offered for your Supreme Excellency and for the American Republic.

We beg that your Supreme Excellency receive our thanks offered humbly at your feet.

Chief of the Nakhichevan Government.

SYRIA'S NEEDS.

The need of clothing in Syria is so great that many people have to borrow garments before they can appear on the street, according to a letter received by the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief from Major James H. Nicol at Beirut. He says:

"When we came into Syria after the occupation, it might really almost be said that there was no clothing in the Lebanon mountains. Some who appeared on the street in a fairly respectable way were found to have no under-clothing of any sort and very little bedding in their homes. Cases are reported to me constantly where women have to borrow clothing to come down to the headquarters, and certain pieces of clothing are handed from one person in a village to another; and this is the condition even after we have been working as hard as possible to make and distribute clothing for four months past. We should have had at least 500,000 garments to distribute, whereas the best we have been able to do up to the present is to make and distribute about 100,000. This clothing need will go on for some time to come, as very little cloth is coming in and most of the people in the mountains have no means for purchasing what there is here."

THE FIGHTING KING.

Standing in picturesque isolation amid the rolling sanddunes at La Panne, a seaside village hard by the high road to Ostend, is a little white cottage which will live in history. It was the home of the King and Queen of the Belgians throughout the tragedy of Germany's occupation of their country. They were under fire practically without cessation. Many times they were advised to leave, but when for administrative purposes early in the war the Belgian government moved into France, the King and Queen resolved to reside in Belgium till the end. All this time the King was in command of his army and was the most familiar of the generals seen in the front line, while the Queen, her personal staff reduced to one lady-in-waiting, fulfilled her duties as a trained nurse.

A few days ago I met in London a Belgian officer who had had his wounds—very bad wounds—dressed several times by the Queen. "You have no idea what a divine influence she has been in these grim years," he said fervently.

Circumstances gave to King Albert—a fine upstanding man of six feet three inches, in the full prime of his 43 years—the opportunity to don the mantle of the fighting kings of history, and with splendid bearing he wore it. Day after day he went up the line to organize and inspire his war-worn troops. His life was that of a fighting commander. Shells fell around him, bullets whistled past him; few soldiers had more narrow escapes.

He had in personal attendance just four officers and a secretary. Every morning he rose at 6 a. m., his secretary was with him in less than an hour, his morning's business was followed by a ride (he is a keen and accomplished horseman), and military conferences and visits to his troops in the thick of the fighting occupied the remainder of the day. He was on many air reconnaissances over the enemy lines and he flew over Ostend a month before the Germans evacuated it.

Small wonder that King Albert and Queen Elizabeth have gripped the imagination of their people and made the emancipation of Belgium under their guidance a glory which is in itself a crown.—London Daily Mail.

Moderator New Orleans Assembly.

Editorial

General Assembly.

Editorial Correspondence.

IN my last letter I mentioned the organization of the Assembly and a few items of the opening business. As that letter was sent in a hurry in order to catch the mail, in this I will in a more leisurely way try to enable our readers to see the Assembly as we see it.

In the first place we must get a proper vision of this great city where we meet, for I doubt whether the average reader begins to realize what a great city we have at our door. Nearly 400,000 people of a most cosmopolitan character, stretching fourteen miles along the river, with Presbyterianism growing faster and exceeding in numbers any Protestant denomination in the city.

It is a city of beautiful homes, which at this season seem almost hid in flowers.

Never in the history of the Assembly have the arrangements for the convenience and comfort of the members been more complete. Every possible want has been anticipated. All this is due to the energy and skill of Dr. George Summey, assisted by workers of rare faithfulness.

For weeks before the meeting Dr. Summey has carried this burden, and now that the crowd is here is still hard at work, finding homes and making new arrangements where the old have been upset.

Thus far, even the weather has been perfect, cool breezes, bright days and delightful nights. Probably it would be wise to touch wood, but the mosquitoes have even refrained from their usual activity.

The attendance is large, the personnel being of a high order. Here and there we have the grey hair, but the majority are young men. The race for the Moderatorship was confined to two entries, both good and able men, and either of whom would have filled the chair in a manner equal to any of the distinguished men who have gone before. The nominating speeches were too numerous and rather extravagant, but the speakers were young men who will learn better, after they, in the future, have suffered awhile. Dr. Fraser, who was chosen, is one of the strong, conservative men of the Church, and already he has justified the choice by the prompt expedition of business.

In the reports of the Executive Committees the effect of the war was seen, yet it is remarkable that notwithstanding all the drawbacks, we have made a wonderful advance along nearly every line. The war opened the purses of people and accustomed them to think in large figures, and the Church has evidently shared in the opening.

On Thursday evening Dr. Vance delivered his lecture on "The Doughboy in France" to a packed house.

He brings word that the soldier longs for the old gospel. When he went over, he took with him several lectures on war subjects with a little gospel interspersed, but he soon learned better, and gave heed to the advice of a commanding officer, a Presbyterian elder, who told him that the men were tired of war, and wanted the gospel. On one occasion, as many as 1,200 men stood up and accepted Christ.

According to Dr. Vance the real hero of the war was not the generals, but the doughboy who braved danger and suffered discomforts, all with a cheerful heart and a joke.

Dr. Vance is gifted with a most magnetic voice which adds pleasure to his stories. He is by long odds our best platform orator.

Friday morning was devoted to reports of Committees. The report of the Committee on the Sabbath and Family Religion was not an encouraging one. It is evident that family religion is lacking in having a family altar, without which there can be no vital religious growth. This report also touched upon the desecration of the Sabbath, showing that both preachers and Y. M. C. A. secretaries used the Sunday trains, in order to save time.

This was a most exhaustive report and showed not only great research, but much labor.

The Reformed Presbyterian Church asked that the Assembly join with them in petitioning that the United States Government add the following amendment to the preamble to the Constitution:

"We, the people of the United States, devoutly recognizing the Authority and Laws of Jesus Christ, the Saviour and Ruler of Nations, and desiring to form a more perfect union, etc."

The Assembly will later hear the delegate of this Church and consider this question.

The report of the President of Woman's Work, Mrs. Winsborough, was read by Dr. S. L. Morris, who spoke in the highest terms of the work done. He spoke of the educational value of the various meetings of these ladies in training them in knowledge of Presbyterian Church government. He also called attention to the Conference of Colored Women organized under Mrs. Winsborough, in which many domestic utilities were taught, and a higher aim given to their lives.

On Saturday morning an important communication from the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of China, was received, in which we were informed that there has been organized in China a Provincial General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of China, comprising the churches known as Northern and Southern Presbyterian, German Reformed, Dutch Reformed, English Presbyterian, Church of Scotland, Free Church of Scotland, Irish Presbyterian, Canadian Presbyterian, and New Zealand Presbyterian. There are more than 76,000 members. Rev. P. F. Price, D.D., of our Church, is Moderator.

A joint Committee composed of six Presbyterians and six Congregationalists has been appointed looking to a Federal Council of the two denominations, with a view to organic union.

When the report of the Special Committee on Federal Union was presented, there were two reports, one, the majority, read by Dr. J. M. Wells, and the other, the minority, by Dr. W. R. Dobyns.

Both papers were referred to a Special Committee appointed by the Moderator, of which Dr. Tucker Graham was elected chairman.

In view of the influence exerted by the Jews and Knights of Columbus in the war as shown by favors granted by the Government, the Protestants have organized an inter-church movement which was laid before the Assembly by Dr. Vance.

He explained that it was a spiritual and evangelistic movement rather than doctrinal and that it was begun first by our Church. Rev. Chas. H. Pratt added to what Dr. Vance had said. He emphasized the advantages of systematized work in avoiding any conflict of interests.

One of the questions that excited much interest was how to deal with non-resident members. Among many suggestions we name a few:

1. Let the pastor teach his people the importance of taking letters with them when they move.
2. Let the pastors always notify the church to which they go.

3. Write a tactful letter to those moving away, urging them to unite at once with the local church.

On Saturday afternoon the Presbyterian churches of the city gave an auto ride to the members of the Assembly and visitors. From 2 o'clock till 6 o'clock we were carried over the city, and thoroughly shown every point of interest.

We doubt whether any city in the South has more points of interest or more beautiful homes.

All will carry with them the most pleasant impression of this great city of the South, and of its hospitable people.

On the Sabbath the Presbyterian churches of the city were supplied by members of the Assembly. Ordinarily the Methodist churches turn their pulpits over to us, but as the pastors were making a special effort to finish their "Centenary Drive," we could not expect that courtesy. The Moderator filled the pulpit of the Napoleon Avenue Church, preaching a strong sermon. The three editors of the Church sat in the pulpit with him, and gave him their moral support.

After the rest of the Sabbath, the commissioners met on Monday, ready for steady work.

The day was filled with routine business, but at the evening hour the Foreign Mission Committee had their popular meeting.

There were only two missionaries present, Rev. W. C. Buchanan, for 27 years a missionary in Japan, and Rev. S. D. Winn, of Korea.

Mr. Buchanan brought encouraging reports from Japan, showing that in 45 years there had been gathered 95,000 members of the Protestant churches. While there were fewer missionaries than usual, they had a star attraction in the person of Dr. Egbert Smith, the Executive Secretary who came in, just from a nine months' tour among our mission fields in Japan, China and Korea.

He seems to have led rather a strenuous life while absent from his office. He spoke to the missionaries 50 times and to the natives 118 times, and from his accounts the Chinese are more patient hearers than the average American, as he had often to preach two sermons to the same audience, while we congratulate ourselves if we can hold one audience thirty minutes.

It seems that the fame of our President has reached even the interior of China, and that they look upon him as the great man of the world.

When Dr. Smith travelled among them, they really took him, on two occasions, for Woodrow Wilson, and in other places Dr. Smith made the President his text, explaining his training in the manse and the effect of religion on his life.

Dr. Smith's address was really the best we have ever heard from him, a model as to time and matter. It was only 40 minutes in length, but it was full of information and incident, and it left his hearers anxious for him to continue—a rare experience in the life of a secretary. It would seem that his sojourn among our self-denying missionaries had exerted a wonderful influence over him.

Seldom in the history of a General Assembly has any man, brimful of interesting matter, gifted with imagination and a flow of words, standing before an immense audience who listened with intense desire for more, ever stopped "in medias res," of his own accord. In the language of the small boy, "We must certainly hand it" to Dr. Smith. May his tribe increase.

After this service, Dr. Vance brought before the Assembly the inter-church movement. It came endorsed by the representatives of our Executive Committee, and Secretaries Sweets and McMillan, together with Rev. C. H. Pratt, spoke in its favor.

It was referred to a special committee consisting of Dr. W. R. Dobyns, Dr. Fleming, Rev. T. L. Green and Elder T. C. Stevenson. This committee brought near the close of the Assembly a report endorsing this movement. Dr. Fleming, without bringing in a minority report, stated his reasons for refusing to sign it. Dr. Summey and others spoke against as having in it dangerous possibilities, but it was adopted by the Assembly.

On Tuesday there sprang up a sharp debate over the question whether the contributions of the Ladies' Societies should be sent direct to the Executive Committees or to the Woman's Auxiliaries. It was decided that the report of the committee, of which Dr. Henderlite was chairman, should be sustained, which was that such moneys should be sent to the Executive Committee.

Such was the action of the Assembly, but we have a shrewd suspicion that the ladies will send their moneys where they please.

Much time was given to hearing the representatives of the Federal Council in the persons of Dr. Chas. E. Macfarlane, Capt. Albert Leo, representing the Protestant churches of France, and Rev. Pierre Blommeart. Rev. Dr. Chas. W. Gilkey was also heard as the special representative of the Federal Council.

These speeches took up much valuable time, which meant that at the close of the Assembly important business would be rushed through in haste. Courtesy demands that we give them a hearing, though sometimes they forget that courtesy also demands that they be as brief as possible. In reporting the views of soldiers, these visitors who have been abroad are often guilty of that logical fallacy of arguing all from one. They no doubt talk with a few soldiers who have their peculiar views on church work and doctrine, and they at once assume that such is the opinion of the entire army, forgetting that any of us at home can talk to men on the streets and get similar views. Yet no one ever thinks of inferring that the churches must reorganize their methods and find new doctrines.

The Organic Union matter in the shape of various overtures was referred to a special committee, of which Dr. H. Tucker Graham was chairman.

The report of this committee was an exceedingly able and well written one. After stating that there is general unrest in our churches in the border States, it concludes as follows:

In view of all the facts brought to its attention your committee favors some form of closer relations. Your committee therefore recommends:

1. That the majority and minority reports, with all other papers that have been in its hands, be referred to an Ad Interim Committee which, in conjunction with similar committees from one or more of our sister churches of like faith and order, shall consider the whole question of closer relations.

2. That whatever plan, or plans, this Ad Interim Committee shall decide to report to the General Assembly shall be formulated in the most definite terms possible, and that this Ad Interim Committee shall make its report to the next stated meeting of the General Assembly.

3. That this Ad Interim Committee be instructed to publish in the church papers, not less than two weeks prior to the meeting of the Assembly, the plan, or plans, to be submitted by them to that body.

4. That this Ad Interim Committee shall be composed of one member from each Synod and that each Synodical representative and his alternate shall be nominated by the commissioners of such Synod who are members of this Assembly, and that their names shall be reported to the Moderator for appointment before the final adjournment of this Assembly." The Moderator is requested to designate the time and place for these group meetings.

Your committee feels that it cannot conclude this report without placing upon record its appreciation of the able and

Travel Notes From the Near East

By R. E. Magill.

"LIFE is full of surprises" is a truism acknowledged by all but it is safe to say that only those who have been bold enough to attempt a trip through Europe and Eastern Asia during these turbulent war days really have had a full 100 per cent experience in surprises.

First of all is the amazing difficulty of getting permission to go where you started for and next is the problem of getting there after your permits are issued.

We left New York on March 14 after spending four weeks in securing passports and after changing our steamer reservations to five different boats, and our landing place to four different ports. We expected to begin our relief work as representatives of the American Committee for Relief in the Near East within two weeks after leaving New York, but a month has passed and we have just reached Port Said, Egypt, where is located the largest refugee camp in Asia for deported Armenians.

It would make a long story to tell of our amusing and exasperating experiences in trying to convince doubting war officials that we were harmless Americans on a mission of mercy and not on mischief bent, but it would make an incredible yarn if I should tell of the wreck and demoralization of the transport system of the continents.

Naturally all transportation is still under military control and a military attache must O. K. your passport before you can board any sort of a train or boat. This simple (?) process requires from two hours to three days and we usually find that the office is "closed for the day" and will "open tomorrow at three o'clock." The unexplained mystery is what these O. K. officers do with all their time when not putting visas on passports. They are a most obliging and handsome set of young fellows when you get at them and our guess is they have so many dates with the pretty girls of these European and Asiatic cities that they find keeping office hours a great nuisance.

Riding on a continental train was never a very joyful sensation but in these war times you get more thrills for your money than you ever had on a "shoot the shute" at the county fair.

You run the gauntlet of a string of soldiers from the time you sight the station until the guard locks you in your queer little box stall and when the train finally starts the military guard and the train men begin their inquisitions.

Holding a seat ticket is no evidence at all that you are entitled to travel and you must produce a permit from the district commander-in-chief that you are on urgent business and therefore must ride on a train or boat. No matter what route you take you are guarded by armed forces and you can't move your elbow without punching a soldier in the ribs.

The movement of soldiers is not confined to demobilized men by any means and on our trains and boats the vast majority of the soldiers were still in active duty and on their way to new fields of service.

We shipped on an English transport, from Marseilles to Port Said and were under strict military orders the trip through. We donned life belts every time we passed through a narrow channel not through fear of submarines but to be ready for trouble should our ship strike a floating mine, many of which are still adrift in the Mediterranean Sea.

After considerable effort we secured a permit to run down from Port Said to Cairo and here again we had evidence that the war is far from being over regardless of what the Peace Conference may do.

An interesting story could be told about the situation in Egypt and the troublous days ahead but it would be presumptuous indeed for a casual visitor to prophesy what the outcome of the present agitation and unrest will be. Unfortunately the proceedings of the Peace Conference are not reported in European papers as fully as in the American press with the result that the countries most vitally concerned are in the dark as to their future and the unrest grows with each day's delay.

It interests our commission to hear the high praise universally accorded our President and the word "Americanos" has undoubtedly been our safeguard in some rather doubtful situations.

We do not know what reports the American press has carried but the situation in Egypt is exceedingly grave if we are to believe the statements of military officers, intelligent Arabs and missionaries who sense public sentiment quite accurately.

There has crept into the mind of the intelligent class of every nation the idea that the principle of "Self Determination" for which President Wilson has contended means that every subject people will have the right to erect a form of government free from outside control after the treaty of peace is signed.

There is a strong sentiment for setting up an independent government for Egypt and their slogan is "Egypt for the Egyptians." It matters not that they are enjoying the most liberal and humane form of control they have ever enjoyed and that England is planning even more liberal things under the new form of protectorate, the fact remains that the progressive Egyptians want freedom from all outside control. We saw the delegation of public officials on their way to Paris as we made our way into Cairo on April 11. As is usual in such cases the movement has some unwise leaders and in their celebration of the sending of the delegation to Paris a clash between the British troops and a boisterous procession occurred.

The usual result followed and order was restored after about fifty natives and some twenty soldiers had been killed. The rebellious spirit flamed up all over Egypt and the troops are quelling riots with that thoroughness and dispatch for which the British Army is noted.

Scattering an unruly mob and quelling the spirit back of it is a different matter, however, and the best posted observers feel that a long period of unrest and troublous days are ahead for England or any other power that undertakes to govern this ancient land.

We arrived in Cairo the day after the most serious trouble and the air was tense with feeling. This old city is always interesting but a new touch was added by the presence of alert British troops on every street and the sinister look of gatling guns as they peered down from the roof of buildings which commanded the main thoroughfares. Even the quiet of the Pyramids and Sphinx was disturbed by the war spirit and the great pyramid is capped by an army wireless station while the beautiful valley at the foot of the Pyramids is commanded by an artillery post on the crest of the ridge. The city was quiet during our stay but in our trip through old Cairo where the heavy fighting occurred the streets which showed the barricades of the previous night's battles our guide had to explain to the sullen crowd on every turn "These are friendly Americanos."

We experienced nothing more harmful than looks of hatred but we did not think it prudent to do any sight seeing after dark.

What the future has in store for this seething pool of illiterate and Godless humanity only high heaven knows, but one thing is sure and that is the signing of a peace compact at Paris will not mean peace and contentment for this turbulent people.

We are to make a thorough investigation of the condition of the 8,000 Armenians in the Concentration Camp at Port Said and will then go to Jerusalem to inspect some orphanage work there before going into Syria and Asia Minor.

"Honor Roll" of Churches Increasing Pastor's Salaries

Different Viewpoints—No. 1—Self Versus Service.

By Rev. W. H. Miley, D.D.

WE have been very much interested in the honor roll, and while it is gratifying to see how many churches are already coming to the front in this matter, we cannot help asking why the number does not increase more rapidly. Every one has been forced to recognize the fact that every item of living expense has climbed to the top. To meet this increased cost of living, various Unions, Brotherhoods, Fraternities and other organizations have taken concerted action for increased wages, larger salaries and better income. This call has received a favorable response in almost every quarter from the Government down. Why has the Church been so slow to make the move? Is it because the minister has not demanded it? But if the minister says anything he is accused of preaching for money, and the cause that he loves suffers! Since his lips are thus sealed, the matter rests on the voluntary action of his people. And here we find the difficulty in the different viewpoint. It is our purpose to notice briefly in this article Viewpoint No. 1:

Self Versus Service.

And the following facts will illustrate our meaning: We recently heard a splendid Christian woman, wife of an eminent lawyer, explaining her husband's absence from home by saying: "He is at the Capitol lobbying. You know there is a bill before the Legislature looking to an increase in the salary of the judges. His brother is one of the judges, and unless that bill is passed, he will have to resign. He can't live on the present salary, for it is only $3,000.00." In less than fifteen minutes the same woman was lamenting the loss of their pastor, and said: "We can't understand why he left us. He was the most popular minister we ever had. Everybody loved him, and he was doing such splendid work. It could not have been a question of money, for we were paying him $1,000.00, and if that had been the trouble we could easily have raised it to $1,200.00."

It is hard to understand how that good woman could so readily see how her brother-in-law was unable to live on a salary of $3,000.00, and yet could not think of her pastor needing, or even wishing for more than one-third of that amount. Then, there was an acknowledgement that they could easily have done a little better if the demand had been made.

About the same time, we knew of an officer in one of our churches who, in giving a reception to some friends, paid $150.00 for a floral design for his dinner table, and a few days later said to his pastor: "I will have to reduce my church subscription. The income tax is ruining me. It is over $50,000 this year." (And that was before the heavy war tax). These are, perhaps, extreme cases, yet how strongly they illustrate the spirit of the times! The explanation is that self is put before the Kingdom. Thus, in many cases, the minister, deprived of the actual comforts of life, and forbidden to say anything on penalty of injuring his work and influence, is left to bear the burden, while those for whose highest welfare he is laboring—whose every known burden and sorrow is his also, live on in luxury forgetting the Saviour's declaration: "The laborer is worthy of his hire," and that "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

When David, directed of the Lord, asked to buy the threshing-floor of Ornan that he might build therein an altar to the Lord that the plague might be stayed. Ornan said unto David, take it to thee—lo, I give thee the oxen also for burnt offerings, and the threshing instruments for wood, and the wheat for the meat offering; I give it all."

"And King David said to Ornan, Nay; but I will verily buy it for the full price: for I will not take that which is thine for the Lord, nor offer burnt offering without cost." I Ch. 21.

The sooner the Church gets back to David's idea, the better it will be for her.

For, surely under present conditions of cost of living, and wage of unskilled workmen, the average church cannot say of her trained pastor, who has spent years in time and expense of preparation, "We are paying 'Full Price.'"

WE rise to say "Amen" to your suggestion that "readers of the Standard might enjoy a rest" from the discussion of the tithe.

If brethren will note carefully the difference between "tithes and offerings" and also Rom. 6-14 and 2nd Cor. 8-5 and 11-12 and 2nd Cor. 9-7, and follow these Scripture teaching, there will be no occasion to discuss the "thou shalt" and "thou shalt not" but encourage all to enjoy and use the privileges of Christians rather than study the law.

We have enjoyed a very mild winter—rather the absence of winter—for we had only a few days of cold weather. Presbyterianism is not so popular here as in the Piedmont country. In fact, outside the cities our churches are weak and many of them waning. This Northern Florida was once a vast forest of (mostly) long leaf pine. The lumber and turpentine business were the principal industries. Now, the timber is mostly destroyed. Much of it wasted, as in all timber sections, and people are adjusting themselves to new conditions. General farming with cattle and hogs a special side line has developed wonderfully in a few years. Corn, cattle and hogs are being shipped from here to Kansas City. When the lumber business was in full blast towns and villages sprung up at or near the mills. Often some of the owners and managers of the mills were Presbyterians, or favorably disposed towards us, so many Presbyterian churches were organized with the lumber men as the principal supporters. But when the mills were closed or removed, these people went with them and left a few feeble folk in the midst of "Hard Shells," "Holy Rollers," "Adventists," "Campbellites," etc., to maintain our church. Some of them soon gave up and let the church perish. Some are exemplifying the "perseverance of the saints" by staying and struggling to maintain the church until some Presbyterians "move in," which they do sometimes, or until they can develop some good members through the Sabbath School, but the material at present available must be caught very young and carefully trained to make real Presbyterians. This Presbytery (Suwanee) has recently employed a Presbyterial Superintendent, Rev. A. P. Gregory, of Tennessee, who is not new to the work and who seems to be doing fine service here. Probably some of the weaker churches will be dissolved and the field left to others. A regrouping will give better service to others. But what a mission field and how loud the call for real Home Mission workers!

The little band of Presbyterians in this modern town of 4,000 people have a neat brick church and about 60 resident members, and they ask us to remain, but we do not feel that we should settle here. Have no special plans for the future, but wish to follow the Lord's orders.

With kind regards and best wishes to all.

The Lord's Hand at Nacoochee

A Testimony by the Superintendent.

LOOKING over the past twelve months, remembering some of the Lord's dealings with us, I am constrained to record the following as a witness to His goodness.

A year ago I was absent from the office one afternoon at mail time. Our bookkeeper looked me up to hand me a letter from our banker in which he called our attention to a small overdraft, and to notes due within a few days, the total amounting to $1,029.00. The letter was written in a cordial tone but my heart went into my boots as I wondered what provision could possibly be made to meet these demands. After insisting that I read the letter again, he handed me the following entirely unsolicited letter:

"My Dear Mr. Coit:

"I am enclosing from Mr. one check for $1,000.00 for your most worthy Institute. I know how difficult must be your efforts in these strangest times in the world's history and we are very glad to help a little."

As I looked up, the bookkeeper added: "There are several smaller checks in the mail amounting to $40.00."

One of our greatest needs for many years has been additional farm lands. A business friend told us of his hopes in securing $5,000.00 of trust funds for the purpose of purchasing land. We took option on adjoining lands for $8,000.00. Some months passed and all went well. Then the prospects of securing money from this source began to fade, when, without any appeal having been made, a letter came from an almost unknown friend in another State, enclosing a check for $6,000.00 for the purchase of additional land. today Nacoochee has clear titles, duly recorded, to 260 acres of land.

During the past four months we have been staggering under a series of unprecedented epidemics, not only influenza but other serious sickness invaded both school and neighborhood.

For a long time it has been clear that Nacoochee could not go forward without some better provision being made for the care of the sick. When the second outbreak of influenza came, a meeting of our workers was called to discuss emergency measures. It was the unanimous opinion of every one present that the only thing that we could possibly do was to close school and get every one away as quickly as it could be done. Of course we were all feeling very blue over the situation.

Within a few minutes of the time the decision was reached, three telegrams were handed to me—one of these read: "Hospital fund unanimously voted to Nacoochee." This came from the president of a hospital organization in Atlanta, reporting the decision held that day for the purpose of disposing of an unused balance which had been out on interest for the past ten years. Our workers' meeting was immediately transformed into one of praise and thanksgiving.

As I record this testimony we have deposited in the bank this check, which came a few days later, $4,705.72.

Also a check received from a lady in another State to whom no appeal had been made with the following note: "Having heard that you were trying to get up funds with which to build a hospital, I am enclosing a check to be used in that way." She asked that her name be not mentioned. The gift was for $1,000.00.

Surely these experiences are from the Lord and through them His voice is declaring His will—that we take fresh courage and with renewed faith go forward.

Nacoochee Institute, March 31, 1919.

The hospital fund above referred to was given with the understanding that a total of $10,000.00 be raised and this entire amount be used at once in erecting and equipping a hospital for serving the school and community.

If any reader wishes to help with this fund, please send to J. K. Coit, Sautee, Ga.

A Vital Issue Once More

By Mrs. E. C. Murray.

AN "independent" young people's organization was never contemplated by the writer of the original article, A Vital Issue. Such an organization would be an anomaly in the Presbyterian Church. The article in question was merely suggestive as to the name and nature of a separate organization that is already being projected, as the following quotation taken from the prospectus of the Young People's Conference to be held at Queens College will bear witness:

Purpose.

1. The Young People's Committees of Synod and Synodical Auxiliary, convinced of the need for a State Conference in addition to the one at Montreat, are planning a conference for the young people of our churches to gather them in one place for seven days to worship, study and confer on the work of Christ's Kingdom and its relation to young lives.

2. To stimulate Young People's Work in all the churches of the Synod of North Carolina and ultimately organize it as efficiently as other departments of our Church work.

The writer of the article in question is not only a hearty supporter of the new Young People's Conference but at our last Synodical Auxiliary meeting was on the Committee of Young People's Work that recommended said Conference as proposed by our Secretary of Young People's Work. The object of the article was not so much to capture the Christian Endeavor Societies as to assimilate them along with all others into one unbroken body, not necessarily interfering with their interdenominational work, but at the same time deepening their Church loyalty and intelligence. The number of older people in the Christian Endeavor Societies is a negligible quantity, just enough to give dignity and stability to their organization, otherwise they are not truly Y. P. S. C. E as their literature will show.

As to the financial side, as regards organizational machinery of our woman's work, the total gifts of the women have increased in the last five years by over $100,000.

Our young people's contributions have increased by about $2,000, showing that they are not developing proportionately.

New machinery and expensive is not being advocated.

Let us take what is already in existence, and make of our Young People's Presbyterian Rally Days all that they should be, by using a somewhat closer organization with a "local habitation and a name," whereby they might, as one of them expressed it, "be somebody and something."

Our young people must not be kept in leading strings but must be taught to be self-reliant and resourceful.

At the same time the Young People's Chairmen in Presbytery and Synod, and the Young People's Secretaries in the Woman's Auxiliary, should be in direct touch with and control of all that is done by the young people.

A Young People's Auxiliary was enthusiastically endorsed and voted for by the Christian Endeavor Societies of Greensboro, Durham, Winston-Salem and other leading churches of Orange Presbytery at the annual Rally Day held in Lexington last Summer, and there need be no conflict with their great interdenominational work.

Those of us who are interested are, after all, one in heart and aim, our sole purpose being to seek the ultimate good of the Young People's Work.

Cousin Bettie's Chapel

By Rev. Hugh W. White.

YOU have seen families in which every generation produces preachers? Such was the home in which she grew up. From earliest years she felt the call to Christian work. The foreign field especially attracted her, but Providence did not open the way. Thus Cousin Bettie, or Aunt Bettie, as she is known all over the Southern Church, i. e., Miss Bettie Penick, of Raleigh, N. C., gave her life to Christian work in Sunday Schools, Bible classes, visitation, and the like.

But the call to the foreign field always rang strongly in her heart. She did go to China by proxy, for nephews, nieces, cousins, represent her there. Then when she had no further need for her little property, she gave five hundred dollars to build a chapel in the Yencheng field. Is there anything wonderful in that? Do we not often hear of such gifts? No, we hear of some who are able to give by the thousands for hospitals, schools, residences in the missionary centers. We hear of those with smaller means giving sums for Bible women, preachers, cots. It does not occur to people of moderate means to give five hundred or a thousand dollars for a country chapel.

So Cousin Bettie's Chapel went up at Funing, a town where no missionaries live, a town of forty or fifty thousand people, the center of a territory of at least half a million. The local Christians, stimulated by her gift, out of their poverty gave liberally, and now they have a nice place of worship.

But the good work did not stop there. Hearing of this chapel, a gentleman in Louisiana said he would give five hundred to put up either a school or a medical building alongside it. As there was a more urgent need for a school at Dienhu, a town twenty-odd miles away, he consented to put his money there. We also hear of a lady who thinks of giving a five hundred dollar chapel for Dienhu. Now comes the word that this brother in Louisiana still wants to see the work in Funing provided for, and offers to be one of three to give five hundred dollars each for a boys' school, a girls' school and a medical building on the lot where this chapel is built.

This offer comes just in time to be included in the big drive. The North Kiangsu Mission authorized Yencheng to call for five thousand dollars gold for country chapels, and these buildings would be included. Surely this is of the Lord, and he will find two others in our Southland to take up this offer. Don't let anybody tell you that five hundred dollars will not build a school or a hospital. We have a good medical work at Funing in a seventy-five dollar Sunday School building, given largely by the people of Myatt's Chapel, near Raleigh, N. C. But seventy-five dollars does not give much room for wards, you may imagine. Suppose your boy in France had to have his leg cut off in a seventy-five dollar hospital! A good many poor Chinese soldiers are treated at Funing.

Now will not Cousin Bettie be rejoiced up yonder, when she knows how her five hundred is growing? "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth."

Yencheng, Kiangsu, China.

Montreat.

By Rev. R. C. Anderson, Pres.

The many friends and patrons of Montreat will be pleased to know that a most excellent program has been provided for the approaching season. And among the number of new speakers to be added this season are the names of Hon. W. J. Bryan, Dr. Campbell Morgan, Dr. A. T. Robertson and Dr. A. C. Dixon.

The indications are that the attendance this year will be larger than ever before and that Montreat will be full to the limit of its capacity. There are only one or two cottages yet unrented and hotel and boarding house reservations are being made daily. Much improvement is being made in the way of equipment to give the best accommodations in the hotels. Hotel Alba is now being repainted inside and out and many conveniences are being added for the comfort of the guest. The Montreat store is being painted inside and out and other improvements are being made. An excellent manager for the store has been secured and everything is being done to provide the best possible service for the cottagers and boarding houses, also a much larger and more convenient Post Office is being provided.

It may be of interest to some to know that while nearly all of the cottages have been rented, there are several very attractive and desirable homes that could be bought at reasonable rates. This might enable some to come to Montreat this season that otherwise would find it impossible to do so.

Mrs. J. Wilbur Chapman has most generously donated the beautiful Chapman home and buildings with all equipment to the Mountain Retreat Association to be used for ministers as a memorial to the late beloved Dr. Chapman. And this home for ministers will be opened during the coming summer. It is planned to have a fitting memorial service to Dr. Chapman with a memorial address by Dr. F. C. Ottman during the first week in August, at which time the very valuable property of the Chapman home will be formally presented to the Association.

The program for the approaching season has not yet been printed, but we hope to have it ready for distribution at an early date.

An Earnest and Urgent Appeal.

By Rev. Edgar Tufts.

On a beautiful knoll overlooking the Grandfather Orphans' Home and within 150 yards of the Girls' Dormitory, is situated a five-room bungalow, which was built four years ago when labor and materials were cheap. The lot that goes with the building adjoins the Orphans' Home property. It contains nearly three acres of land on which have been erected several outhouses and a nice young orchard started.

The owner of this property offered it to the Home for $1,100. It did not take Mr. Holcomb and myself long to decide to buy it. There were three good reasons: First, we believed that the property is worth the price. The owner told us that he was letting the Home have it at what it cost him, and that he had been offered $1,200 for it.

Second, the Home needs this property. It needs it for the home for a hired man. Mr. Holcomb and his boys do a wonderful amount of work, but they cannot do it all. It is therefore necessary that a man be hired by the year. In order to keep such a man it is necessary that we furnish him a home. This one is exactly where and what we want for this purpose.

Third, we did not want the property to fall into the hands of others who might not be in sympathy with the Home, and who might cause trouble. Anyone can readily see that if an uncongenial family should plant themselves almost in our back yard and we had no way of getting them away it would be a deplorable situation.

For these reasons we bought the property and paid $100 down. This was a legacy that had been left the Home by the late Miss Anna Twelvetrees. There is, therefore, a balance of $1,000 to be raised.

We appeal to everyone who reads these lines to help us to raise this money. It will be due in a short time. Send contributions to either Mr. Holcomb or myself.

Trusting that our friends will approve of the deal that we have made and that they will help us to raise this money,
I am, Faithfully yours,
Edgar Tufts.

The Sunday School Program

By Rev. Daniel Iverson.

THE greatest child of the Church today is the Sunday School. It is from the Sunday School that the Church receives her greatest growth. It is from the Sunday School that the Church receives her teachers, deacons, elders, ministers and missionaries. It is the place of greatest opportunity, therefore the place of greatest service. The Sunday School, with a comprehensive program carried out, offers to the Church the largest field of usefulness and the greatest opportunity for growth.

Because of these facts the Southern Presbyterian Church should take advantage of the great opportunities afforded her through the Sunday School by making her Sunday Schools instructive, evangelistic and efficient in methods or organization.

Our Sunday Schools would be better places of instruction than they are if we had trained teachers and officers. Our Sunday School program ought to include a system of instruction in teaching and in God's Word that would prepare our teachers to teach.

We have a Teacher Training Course compiled by our Assembly's Committee that measures up with any course used today. If any criticism should be made, it would be that a course in Presbyterian Doctrine, so called, be added so that our teachers would be better fitted to teach our catechisms.

We have an Efficiency Chart that requires a school to have a class in teacher training for both present and prospective teachers in order to gain what our Assembly calls the Efficiency Standard. The International Association requires a teacher training course for a Sunday School to reach their Banner School Standard.

Through these methods and others, efforts are being made to develop teachers so that they can teach. So that they can adapt their subjects to the pupil and not try to adapt the pupil to their subjects. Trained leadership is the great need in the Sunday School today.

Our Sunday School program ought also to be evangelistic. We ought to have teachers who are in love with the Lord Jesus Christ and are trained to lead others to Him.

In our Sunday Schools we have thousands and thousands whose souls are literally "clay in the potter's hands." What an opportunity these souls offer to strong, developed Christians who are sympathetic and love young people. In such positions as superintendents and teachers leaders with these qualifications could render a great service to the Church. "When we win an adult we are simply winning a soul; when we win young people we are also winning careers of usefulness."

Our Assembly's Committee and the International Association are trying to help our Sunday Schools catch the vision of evangelism through the Decision Days and also through their efforts to help all teachers and officers be personal workers.

If we had a definite evangelistic program in all of our Sunday Schools what a growth our Church would have!

Our Sunday School program ought also include efficient methods of organization. We may have trained workers and an evangelistic program and while these stimulate attendance, they do not hold the scholars as well as an efficiently organized Sunday School. A Sunday School with interesting and carefully prepared exercises, graded, good records, observing special days, and with equipment, such a Sunday School will get the scholars. Then the work of the teacher is to evangelize the child. But it takes organization to increase the attendance.

Our Assembly's Committee on Sunday School work has as fine a plan to make efficient Sunday Schools as is to be found anywhere. It is more complete than the Banner School Chart of the International Association. The Efficiency Chart has as its aims trained teachers, evangelism and efficient methods of organization.

These things are necessary in order to make the Sunday School the factor it ought to be in the work of the kingdom. The Sunday School upon this basis would have a place for every member of the Church in addition to those outside of the Church. It would be the place where the whole Church would be taught the Word of God. It would be our best medium of Church extension. It would be the place where the one talent and the five could all be used. It would indeed be the whole Church at work for the whole world.

The problem that confronts us, however, is to help all of our churches to catch the Sunday School vision. Our denomination covers so much territory that the number of men we have employed to build up our Sunday Schools cannot begin to cover the ground.

A number of practical Sunday School experts, say at least one for each Synod putting forth all their efforts to bring our Sunday Schools up to our Efficiency Standard would do more to meet the future needs of our Church along missionary, ministerial and benevolent lines than any other program we could map out for our Church. It would in addition bring a natural, healthy and large growth to our Church membership.

One of the main reasons for the remarkable growth of the Baptist denomination in America is her large Sunday School program. They have men in almost every State visiting Sunday Schools that are weak, holding institutes, teacher training courses, organizing new Sunday Schools and doing other forms of practical Sunday School work. As a result their growth has been remarkable. Their work in South Carolina has been especially so. A Sunday School expert in each Synod doing this same work would accomplish the same results for us.

We have as good a program for Sunday School work as any denomination. Dr. Glass is to be commended for his program. But he needs help to put it across. Congaree Presbytery has overtured the New Orleans Assembly to increase our Sunday School staff so that we will have under Dr. Glass at least one Sunday School expert in each Synod. This would help the Home Church grow and in that way help all of her causes to expand.

We have had the Evangelistic Assembly, the Country Church Assembly, we ought now to have the Sunday School Assembly and at that Assembly map out and adopt a program that will make our Church a great Sunday School Church. Let us do our best to bring our Sunday Schools up to the Presbyterian Standard of Efficiency keeping in mind the fact that Sunday School of today is the Church of tomorrow.

St. Matthews, S. C.

"One day
A wanderer found a lump of clay,
So redolent of sweet perfume
Its odors scented all the room.
'What art thou?' was his quick demand;
'Art thou some gem from Samarcand,
Or spikenard in this rude disguise,
Or other costly merchandise?'
'Nay, I am but a lump of clay.'
'Then, whence this wondrous perfume—say?'
'Friend, if the secret I disclose,
I have been dwelling with the rose.'
Sweet parable! and will not those Who love to dwell with Sharon's Rose,
Distill sweet odors all around,
Though low and mean themselves are found?
Dear Lord, abide with us, that we May draw our perfume fresh from Thee."

General Assembly.

self sacrificing work done by the members of the Ad Interim Committee of Conference on Federal Union. Theirs was a difficult and delicate task. It has been discharged with skill.

It seems clear to your committee that the existence of these diverse currents of opinion and desire cannot be safely or wisely ignored. We face a condition, not a theory. Something should be done to remove friction and prevent injury and waste. Those sections of the church that are strong and untroubled should strive to ease the burdens of our brethren who are facing a situation replete with difficulties of a grave and trying nature.

Five courses of action have been proposed, viz:

1. Complete Organic Union.
2. Organic Union according to the so-called "Synodical Plan."
3. Organic Union on the basis of Provincial Assemblies—with one Supreme National Assembly as the capstone of the system.
4. A federated body having only advisory powers, inspirational in its influence, serving as a kind of clearing house for the sentiments of fraternity and comradeship that dwell in the Presbyterian heart.
5. A Federal Union with clearly defined powers and responsibilities, and which, at the same time, conserves the autonomy of the constituent churches in doctrine and discipline, as well as in all other matters of local interest, including the tenure of church property and other material assets. This last is in substance the majority report of your Ad Interim Committee on Federal Union.

This report was signed by 13 out of 17 members of the committee.

These four brought in a minority report as follows:

"The undersigned members of the Assembly's Special Committee, appointed to consider the report of the Assembly's Ad Interim Committee on the Federal Union of Presbyterian and Reformed Churches; and to consider certain overtures bearing on the general subject of our relation to other churches, would respectfully recommend that the Assembly approve and adopt the majority report of the Ad Interim Committee, outlining a plan of Federal Union as indicated in the Committee's report, to be used as the working basis in the formulation of a Constitution for the proposed Federal Assembly by a similar committee acting with committees of other Presbyterian and Reformed churches.

This was signed by J. P. Robertson, E. B. McCluer, W. A. Zeigler, Harvey McDowell.

When this matter came up Wednesday morning, Dr. Wells and Dr. Dobyns, who had brought in majority and minority ad interim reports, were given the floor. Dr. Wells occupied 41 minutes of the time and Dr. Dobyns 53 minutes. Both speeches were clear and strong expositions of their respective views.

At first there was a move made to check the debate, but in the interests of fair play these two brethren were given a free rein.

The Assembly then began the discussion of the special report brought in by Dr. Graham, known as the majority report.

The minority report signed by the four objectors came before the Assembly as a substitute for the majority.

The question was whether to substitute this report for the majority report. The vote was 134 votes against the substitution and 100 votes in its favor, with the result that the majority report was adopted, which means that the Assembly voted that the majority and minority reports, with other papers relating to the subject be referred to a special committee, which in conjunction with other similar committees from one or more of our sister churches of like faith and order, shall consider the whole question of closer relations. We are careful to state the issue clearly, because the secular press has spread abroad that the Assembly voted for organic union with the Northern Church.

Such was not only not the case, but really the Northern Church was not considered.

They had wired us that they refused to consider any other question than organic union. The Assembly, taking them at their word, in so many words, said, "Very well, brethren, then we will consider closer relations with other Presbyterian churches."

The only time that the sentiment of the Assembly on the question of organic union ever came even remotely to a test was on the vote for Moderator.

Dr. Dobyns has long been known as an earnest and consistent advocate for organic union. Coming as he does from a border Synod and his church being on the border line of that Synod, he naturally felt the effect of friction.

Dr. Fraser, on the other hand, being far in the interior of the church, in the Synod of Virginia, strongly opposed to any union, stood as the representative of the anti-union forces.

While some voted for Dr. Dobyns because of his lovable character and his services to the church, the vote in the main turned upon the organic union and anti-organic feeling.

When the question did come up, even before any discussion began, organic union was relegated to the rear, when the Northern Church telegraphed that they would not consider that question. There was therefore no reason why we should discuss a question that had already been ruled out of the report of the Ad Interim Committee, under the instructions of the previous Assembly. The next question then was that recommended by our committee, federal relations with churches that would federate. Two views then developed, one to federate according to the recommendation of the Ad Interim Committee, and the other, to study the whole question, in connection with similar committees from other churches.

The Assembly therefore, by its vote, did not touch the question of organic union, but federation only, and it voted to appoint a committee to work out a plan in connection with other churches. The effect of this vote may not be to kill the question of organic union, but it will certainly postpone it for some time at least.

The Assembly took one radical step in sending down to Presbyteries an overture to make the office of elder or deacon rotary. When either is elected, at the end of five years, the election must be held over.

This change is desired as a means to rid a church of undesirable officers, but, in the case of an elder it would be a contradiction of our Book of Order. We have no idea that the Presbyteries will endorse it.

The Northern Assembly complained to this Assembly that the Central Church of Kansas City in building near one of the Northern churches of that city had violated the articles of agreement between the two churches.

Our Assembly replied that the proposed location is nearly one mile from any Presbyterian church of the city and is in the center of its own membership.

It further reminded the Assembly that the accepted rules of comity concerned only communities of 5,000 and fewer, and furthermore that this Assembly endorsed the action of the Presbytery of Upper Missouri which carefully investigated the case on the ground.

The Committee on Bills and Overtures made the following report:

From the Presbytery of New Orleans, memorializing the

MITCHELL COLLEGE FINALS.

By strenuous work Mitchell College made up her lost time and closed as scheduled, May 9-13, with a successful year recorded and an interesting commencement.

A preliminary concert was given May 2 by the voice pupils of Mrs. M. C. Wood, piano pupils of Miss Henley and expression pupils of Miss Anderson. This was pronounced one of the best concerts ever given in Shearer Hall.

A large audience attended the recital given by Dr. Karel Bondam's piano, organ, 'cello and violin pupils in Shearer Hall Friday evening, May 9.

Dr. Bunyan McLeod, of Westminster Church, Charlotte, preached the annual sermon to the graduates and friends of Mitchell College, Sunday morning, May 11, at the First Presbyterian Church. Dr. McLeod's text was: "And Jacob was left alone"—left alone with his sins, his possibilities and his responsibilities. It was a sermon well worth remembering and Dr. McLeod delivered it with rare attractiveness and power.

Sunday evening Dr. McLeod addressed the Mitchell College Y. W. C. A. in Shearer Hall on "Keep Your Face Toward the Sunrise," and again he delighted his audience. At both services the college girls formed the choir, Miss Elizabeth Carlton singing the morning and Miss Evelyn Sadler the evening offeratory, with Miss Laura Moore at the pipe organ, while Misses Louise Brady and Juliet Bristol sang a duet.

Monday afternoon, May 12, Mrs. J. M. Moore gave a delightful reception to the Mitchell College Alumnae Association in honor of the graduates of the classes of '59-'69, this being the sixtieth anniversary of the first graduating class of the college, then known as Concord Female Seminary. The list of the "honor guests," all of whom could not be present, was: Miss Jane A. Caldwell, of Salisbury; Miss Annie Stimpson and Mesdames Harrill, Irvin, Williams, Leinster, Tomlin, Cooper, Kennedy, Howard, Hill and Drake, of Statesville; Mrs. Aleck Stockton, of Philadelphia; Mrs. Octa S. Barden, of Wilmington; Mrs. J. M. Downum, of Lenoir; Mrs. G. W. Fowler, of South River; Mrs. Massey and Miss Lydia Anderson, of Raleigh, and Mrs. S. A. Brown, of Troutmans. Refreshments were served by the Domestic Science Class, assisted by a dozen boarding pupils. Scotch broom, so dear to every Scotch-Irish heart, decorated the halls with pink roses in the library and yellow iris in the parlor to do honor to the guests of honor. The guests found it hard to decide which were the fairer, the girls of '59 with snow on their hair or the girls of '19 with only roses. The Alumnae Association held a short business meeting after the reception, when the officers of the association were re-elected, plans for a "china shower" for the domestic science room formulated and further endeavor to make the "James Hall Loan Fund" worthy of its name. One girl has help from this fund this year but the hope is to give help to many.

Dr. D. W. Daniel, of Clemson College, S. C., delivered the literary address Monday evening, May 12, in Shearer Hall. He is a charming speaker. His subject, "The Measure of a Man," was appealing to the girls in its very name and his handling of it left nothing to be desired.

Mrs. M. C. Wood sang exquisitely with Dr. Karel Bondam as accompanist.

The graduates with their degrees were: Susan A. Abernathy, B. S.; Evelyn E. Sadler, B. L.; Bessie Beula Elam, B. A.; Virginia Steele, B. A.

Certificates in home economics were awarded Cora Ewart, Sara Steele, Katherine Morrow, Gertrude Summerville. Certificates in stenography, Jean Caldwell, Julia Foster, Hattie Fowler, Marjorie Cochrane, Blanche Gillespie, Nellie Hines, Irene Patterson, Eugenia Satterfield, Ethel Teague, Beryl Troutman, Evelyn White, Claudia Williams.

Certificates in piano, Grace Kipka, Nola Charles Turner, Margaret Sloan. In violin, Ruby Johnson.

The Joseph P. Caldwell English Medal was awarded Miss Beula Elam for the best work in English. The Wm. A. Wood Bible Medal was won by Miss Katherine Pressly. Dr. Chas. E. Raynal presented these medals.

The board of trustees met Monday and were pleased with the work of the college the past year, the largest enrollment in the history of the institution being recorded last fall.

FLORA MACDONALD COLLEGE.

The Flora Macdonald College commencement was opened on Sunday, the 18th of May, 1919, with the baccalaureate sermon by Rev. W. E. Hill, D.D., of Fayetteville, from a text found in the twelfth verse of the first chapter of Esther: "But the Queen Vashti refused to come at the King's commandment by his chamberlains." The message was most earnest and inspiring to the thoughtful young women who heard it, and its appeal for modesty, moral courage, silent fidelity to humble duties, and for Christ as the center of character was certainly the most timely in a day when too many of our women, both young and older, are daring so much in the wrong direction as to very perceptibly lower the standards of civilization.

Vesper services were conducted by Dr. Vardell, and at 8 o'clock Rev. E. L. Siler, of Maxton, preached the sermon before the Y. W. C. A., basing his discussion of Opportunity on the passage, "And the door was shut." This fine sermon was much appreciated.

There was an unusually large number of Alumnae at commencement this year and they held their meeting on Monday, the 19th. At the business session, held in the E. X. Society Hall, Monday of commencement week was fixed as Alumnae Day instead of Tuesday. Officers of the Association elected were: President, Mary Fairley, of Laurinburg, N. C.; first vice president, Bessie Covington, of Red Springs; second vice president, Kate Evans, of Minturn, S. C.; recording secretary and treasurer, Mrs. R. W. Massie (Wyatt McKinnon), of Red Springs; corresponding secretary, Bess Sikes, of Red Springs; field secretary, Bess McNair, of Maxton; alumnae editor of the Pine and Thistle, Mrs. George Bullock (Beatrice McEachern), Red Springs.

On Monday evening the class of 1919 played As You Like It to an audience which taxed the capacity of the auditorium, while many had to be refused admission. The play was staged attractively and the parts were well taken.

On Tuesday, the 20th, the Board of Trustees met at 9 o'clock. At this meeting a cheering report was made regarding the progress of the endowment, and there is every reason to believe that at the expiration of the probation period—the close of 1919—the sum of $100,000 will be in hand and thus assure the gift of $50,000 from an interested friend, offered on condition that twice this amount be given by others. The board also adopted a resolution of thanks and commendation of the student body for the amount they have raised for church and humanitarian contributions during the year. The total is $3,072.79, and has been distributed to the Red Cross, $186.79; Hospital Bed in France, $300; United War Work Fund, $1,347; Orphans' Home, $40; Red Springs Church Debt, $48; Foreign Missions, $202; Negro Evangelization, $83; Delegate Fund (Blue Ridge), $178; Students' Aid, $60; S. S. Extension, $20; Armenians, $80; French Orphans, $146; Home Missions, including the Williamsburg Mission to the Jews, $52; Social Service, $44; National Board Y. W. C. A., $173; Waldensians, $18; Incidentals, $95.

A large part of this money was earned by doing actual work, such as picking cotton and the entire amount raised for the hospital bed at Neuilly was earned by doing the Topic for Sunday, June 8—Conditions Necessary for World-Peace—Micah 4:1-5.

Before we mention the conditions of permanent world peace, let us mention one mechanical necessity. It is a league of nations of some sort which will assist the various governments in getting along together. In the United States we have a union or federal government which helps the States to regulate their lives toward one another. The peace conference in Paris spent much of its time working to form some such league for the nations. What the conference offers may or may not be the kind of league needed, but all of us agree that sooner or later there must and will be a league of some sort to assist the nations in their efforts to deal properly with each other.

When the nations finally get the sort of league that is needed, war may occur again before the league gains full power, exactly as there was war between the sections in the American union after the federal league of States, or the Constitution, had been ratified. But finally the league triumphed because it was a necessity in the life of our States. So a league of nations is a world necessity, and sooner or later the right sort of league will be found in successful operation among the nations of the world.

But the success of a league of nations must depend on the spirit among the peoples. The league will fall to pieces before it is formed, or immediately thereafter, unless the spirit of forbearance, righteousness, and unselfishness shall become prevalent. This is nothing less than the spirit of Jesus. His Spirit must be in the hearts of larger numbers of men than ever before. Unless the world is different from the world of five years ago, any true league will be impossible. All those that have any real faith in the league must surely mean that they have faith in Jesus, that He will make the operation of the league possible by giving the peoples a new spirit.

Jesus Himself must be the real head of any league that will bring and keep the peace. He is the rightful Prince of Peace. Not that He will wear an earthly crown or call Himself President. But He must be the "power behind the throne." The minds of governors and governed must be so filled with His Spirit, and wills must be so dominated by His will, that He shall in reality rule. He must be lord of lords; and only when He has become such may lasting peace be expected.

The work of the church and of Christians is to make Christ known to all men and nations, so that He may become their King. He that is praying and working with all his might and heart for the enthronement of Christ is doing as definite service toward bringing permanent world peace as any delegate in attendance on the Paris conference.

How is every true church worker a peacemaker?

What does Jesus say about peacemakers? Matt. 5:9.

What does most to endanger peace, selfishness, or hatred?

My spiritual ends have no independent existence as "mine;" in fact, I only attain them in so far as God is sustaining His ends at the same time.—E. A. Burroughs.

The Prayer Meeting

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING JUNE 1, 1919:
 ASSEMBLY'S HOME MISSIONS—Luke 14:23.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

Our Lord is not to be denied. The guests first honored with the gracious invitation exhausted their ingenuity in excuse making. That every one of these excuses is "framed" is evident. No wonder the Master of the House is angry. He sends out into the streets and lanes of the city and brings in the poor, and the maimed and the halt, and the blind. What a heterogeneous aggregation! A motley crew! So far, so good. The Master is delighted. But the room is as great as the Master's heart, and yet there are vast spaces to be filled. "Go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in that my house may be filled."

It is the urgency of a great love that lays this imperative command upon the servant. Note the singular number—"the servant." This is the church. Upon the church Christ's love has placed this commandment. It is a love that house work of sweeping and dusting by the students: it should be said that they volunteered to do this service.

The tenth annual meeting of the Scottish Society of America was also held on Tuesday, the 20th. The president of the Society, Hon. J. Bryan Grimes, of Raleigh, in his address made an effective appeal that the people of this section—the Scotland of America—preserve the records of their history while it is yet possible to rescue the remains and proposed and advocated the establishment of a Scottish Library at Flora Macdonald College. The Society elected the following committee to prosecute the plan for such library: Hon. A. W. McLean, chairman; Hon. J. Bryan Grimes, Raleigh; Colonel Walter Scott, New York; Messrs. J. W. McLauchlin, of Raeford; J. McN. Johnson, Aberdeen, and Rev. C. G. Vardell, Red Springs.

On Tuesday afternoon the annual art exhibit was attended by the many visitors and in the evening the auditorium was again filled by music lovers for the concert by graduates and other students in the Conservatory of Music. A very delightful program was beautifully rendered, and the ensemble work of double quartets, the orchestra, and choral association was good.

On Wednesday, the 21st, the address was delivered by Rev. E. C. Murray, D.D., of Saint Pauls, N. C. We hope later to give an outline of Dr. Murray's splendid address. Diplomas and degrees were conferred upon nineteen young ladies in the literary department—seven A.Bs., eight B.Ls. and four B. Ms.—and four certificates in the household arts course. Certificates were also awarded to Misses Marguerite Jordan and Bess Nash in Stenography and Typewriting. This is not only the largest class which the College has so far graduated, but is the first class which has matriculated and graduated since the change of name to Flora Macdonald. A member of the class says it has also the distinction of being the youngest class.

Do you know what I admire in the world? It is the powerlessness of material force. Sooner or later the sword is conquered by the idea.—Napoleon Bonaparte.

FAITH—WHAT IT IS AND WHAT IT DOES.

Golden Text—John 14:1: "Ye believe in God, believe also in me."

Heb. 11:1-10; 12-1.

June 1, 1919.

Much of our knowledge, both secular and religious, is derived from faith. Faith in the testimony of historians gives us most of our knowledge of past events and famous characters. Faith in the affirmations of travelers imparts to us most of our information as to localities on earth that we have not seen. So in matters of religion we depend for our knowledge upon the testimony of men or of God. It is well to have a correct conception of the nature and value of Faith. Without it we can neither please God nor men. Destitute of it we can not be saved or happy. A man who has no trust is a lost sinner and a miserable being. Our lesson shows the nature and effects of faith in the lives of many heroic saints.

I. Faith Defined.

The apostle declares: "Faith to be the substance of things hoped for and the evidence of things not seen." Faith in God's revelations gives reality and controlling power to things hoped for because promised by God. It also proves to us and gives us assurance of the existence of things seen neither with the eye of sense nor reason. We trust Jesus as a Divine Saviour, though we have never seen Him in the flesh and do not understand the constitution of His person any more than Israel did the manna they depended on for life. The apostle affirms that by "faith" the elders obtained a good report, or secured a good character, and by it we know that "God created the world." The illustrations of the effects of faith that he gives from the lives of eminent Bible saints accord with the definition stated.

II. The Faith of Abel and Enoch.

Abel's faith was manifested in offering the lamb as he was commanded, to typify "The Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." He expressed His faith by His obedience and trusted the Saviour whom the lamb typified. Hence he was accepted by God while Cain, refusing to offer the lamb and to trust the Saviour provided, was rejected. His faith made real the Redeemer offered and satisfied Him that his sins were pardoned and that he had the Divine favor. "Without faith it is impossible to please God," and Enoch before translation had testimony "that he pleased God." The brief but impressive record concerning Enoch in Genesis is "Enoch walked with God and he was not for God took him." He agreed with God, communed with Him, grew like Him, obeyed Him, until without dying he was summoned to His presence with a glorified body and soul. His faith rendered God and His companionship realities, and made heaven and its joys personal and blessed experiences. How strong must have been his trust in Jehovah and His Word, since he was the first and one of only two of our race that reached glory without encountering death.

III. Noah's Faith.

His faith was extraordinary, for it was conspicuous in a world utterly Godless and doomed to perish. God's words to Him were "Come, Thou, and all thy house into the ark, for thee have I found righteous before Me in this generation." He manifested his faith by believing God's warning as to the coming flood, though it was delayed for 120 years. He showed his trust by building the ark on dry land, though he had only God's word to assure him that it would ever be needed. He proved his faith by sheltering the animal tribes in it and by entering it himself with his household when no water had fallen to make it float. His faith made the flood a reality, controlled his conduct for years in constructing the ark, and caused him to enter it at God's command. His faith assured him of the safety he hoped for while the waters prevailed.

IV. Abram's Faith.

Abram was commanded to leave his country, his home, his friends and his kindred to go into a land that the Lord would show him. He was not even informed as to what that land was and departed "not knowing whither he went." He was directed to sojourn there, and promised that his seed should inherit it when he had no child, and when he had no possession in it save a burying place. He was promised a child by Sarah, whose posterity should have that land for a heritage, and yet had to wait 25 years before the heir was given. This very heir he was commanded to offer in sacrifice upon an altar and this offering was the very culmination of the testing of His faith. Abram's faith was tried by separation from country, home, kindred and friends, by going on a long journey without knowing his destination, by sojourning in a land promised to his descendants, and yet having no adequate possession by being assured that Sarah should bear a son, to whose posterity the promises shall be fulfilled, and yet having to wait for that heir for a fourth of a century, and by being required to offer that beloved son of the promises as a sacrifice upon the altar with his own hands. Surely none of the sons of men ever had their faith in Jehovah subjected to severer tests than did Abram. During much of his life he had little to depend upon but the Lord's Word. For more than a century "Faith was to Him the substance of things hoped for and the evidence of things not seen." Is it surprising that He is called "The father of the faithful."

Prayer Meeting.

will not be denied, that knows no bounds. Strange doubtless this command seems to the servant; but there is no thought of disobedience: and so the highways and hedges are searched and all found there are constrained to come to the supper.

Our Lord is urgent also because "all things are now ready." A supper is not intended to supply the needs of tomorrow—but the present need.

None like Jesus ever knew, or can know, the imperativeness of the unconscious hunger of the sinner's heart for God. Sin divests the hunger of the heart to objects which can not satisfy it. Jesus lays upon the conscience of the church to show to men everywhere the true object of man's desire—that which alone can satisfy it. In our Assembly's Home Mission work our church is attempting to translate the urgency of Jesus into work for men on the highways and along the hedges—everywhere, in city and country side, on the prairies and in far-off mountain glens—among the polyglot races that come to us in a never ending stream. These men and women and children are hungry. St. Augustine, who tried to satisfy his heart with many things of every moral complexion, said after he had come to the supper, "Man's heart is made for God, and he is never satisfied until he finds rest in God."

If only men could see the reality of the supper, if only they could understand that it is a royal feast, if only they could know how urgently and lovingly the Master calls them—invites them, would they not come? It is ours to be light for these in darkness—to cause them to see into the banquet hall—to enable them to understand that the food supplied there really and eternally satisfies. This is our great Home Mission work—the Assembly's work—Assembly's work, therefore yours and mine. Every missionary in New Orleans, or in the great mountains, or in the neglected country sides—every one speaks with your voice and mine, is supported by your prayers and mine, is the exponent of your love and mine. Our own voice and prayers and love plus the voice and prayers and love of Jesus. This is our Assembly's Home Mission Work. Jesus' command is upon our hearts and consciences—let us rejoice that it is so, and be faithful.

Devotional

DR. WILFRED T. GRENFELL ON "MY BIBLE."

Personally, I always read with a pencil in my hand. I find it keeps me looking for something worth writing down. I only interleave specially studied parts, especially when noting the thoughts I want to hand on to a Bible class. The copy gets too big if you interleave much.

I read mostly the four Gospels—they are the four glass panes of a lighthouse to me—but I like the Old Testament also, if it didn't take up too much room for one's pocket. When I have used up all the spare space with my notes I get a clean new copy. One comes to the Bible with a new attitude, I find, practically every time, and old notes are like stale food—they clog the appetite and cramp the mind as with clothes one has grown out of. The old words want watering, as it were, each time with the dew of new daily mercies, just fresh, if they are to live and give the new life each time. One comes then to the familiar passages as if one had never seen them before—the kind of interest with which children come to these stories which they have never heard before—the daily portion comes like a new letter from the very last delivery; but most letters with all their special delivery stamps and joyful freshness are really only old truths in new lights.

Here is my last page of reading. A telegram had brought us overnight the news (utterly unexpected, as I had received a letter from him in the morning, had just been his guest, and he was to be ours next month) of the "peaceful passing" of a man I loved as a brother—and whose death meant infinite loss to my own life and work. We read, before resting, Paul's brave words in Corinthians 15. But our eyes were dimmed all the same with scalding tears, and the night failed to bring the peace which is real rest. Our portion the next day was Mark 5:20. My scrawls on the margin read this time as follows (had it been, say a message bringing me the news of the endowment of our hospital or of an orphan child, the line of thought and comment would obviously have been quite different):

Verse 20. "The man began to tell all Jesus had done for him."

March 5, 1918. I find that He is carrying my trouble, as He has so often done, though I couldn't see it last night. He surely has taken the sting from death, for there is none left.

Verse 21. "A great number of people gathered to meet him." No empty pews when He is really round. Because He is giving what they are looking for.

Verse 22. "As soon as he saw Jesus, he threw himself at His feet." Of course. There are occasions when there is nowhere else to go. To "see Him" yourself is the way to learn that.

Verse 23. "I pray you, lay Your hands on my little daughter that her life may be spared." That is the real ordination which gives it life and gives it back; "to know Thee"—and that is the time to be ordained also. Whatever death-bed conversions do bestow, they certainly do not give "life" on earth, or save those who are left behind from the sting of death.

Verse 24. "So Jesus went with him." Because He was asked to go. Have you ever asked Him?

Verses 25-27. "A woman came and touched Him. Many were pressing round Him." How many women in proportion came to Jesus in trouble. They do so still. Many of us press around, but don't touch Him. He gives a love portion, not a mathematical solution. Faith, not science, is the point of contact.

Verse 28. "If I can only touch—." I can if she could, but it needs my determination, my will, to do it. "At once the mischief was stopped." The facts of experience are better than the philosophy of our protoplasm.—Congregationalist.

Home Circle

TRAINING LITTLE CHILDREN.

I like to remember that Froebel said, "The nursery was my university." This statement gives every mother a bond of understanding and sympathy with Froebel and his ideas as they have been worked out in the kindergarten.

The best modern kindergartens center their programs largely around the natural home activities of the child. Hence even though mothers may find it impossible to secure kindergarten privileges for their children, materials and opportunities are close at hand with which to provide, to some degree at least, for this need.

Last February, a laddie who was just "half-past three," with hands well scrubbed and nails manicured, cut out thirty-eight valentine heart cookies for his mother. Before he had finished he learned to be neat, quick, firm of touch and economical in his spacing. In addition he was unconsciously gaining a sense of participation and co-operation and the feeling of being a "real help" to mother.

Children love to have a place that is their "very own." My husband and I feel that the eight dollars we invested in a fence for a play yard for our two boys were well spent. The play yard is fifteen feet square, and contains a little cherry tree, some grass and a large space from which grass has long since disappeared. Here we put a big sand pile which, when wet, supplies dough for all sorts of delectable bakery products, and when dry affords opportunities for constructing bridges and mysterious tunnels.

Songs, stories, handwork and nature study are important lines of kindergarten activity which a mother can pursue at home with the help of good books and her own resourcefulness. The child deprived of kindergarten is not so likely to suffer for want of these activities as for the lack of the social training which, to me, is the biggest contribution of the kindergarten. The child needs to play with other children. "Here," says Jean Paul, "the first social fetters are woven of flowers." And therein lies the unique value of the little play yard. Children learn there to give and take, to adjust themselves to each other and co-operate. They also develop the initiative that makes for leadership.

Play in the play yard is undirected so long as harmony prevails.

The neighborhood is the next larger natural group after the family, and prepares the child for a conception of the larger school group and the community. In the summer I invite the children of the neighborhood—about sixteen in all—to come to our big lawn twice a week and join in our "Twilight Play Circle." During the winter I also invite them to come once a week to play indoors. We call the winter meeting our "Neighborhood Fun Club." I took my neighborhood as I found it, and the children vary from three-year-olds to two eighth-grade girls. One of the latter plays the piano for us, and the other helps in numberless ways. I serve no refreshments.

Last winter we learned three simple folk dances, and a number of the beautiful games that are so deeply rooted in the early social experiences of the race, such as "London Bridge" and "Here we go 'round the mulberry bush."

We also played other games suitable for a large number of children indoors, and learned about thirty riddles. Children who could read prepared special contributions, such as child poems of Eugene Field and Robert Louis Stevenson. Two little girls sang duets for us, and one day we had a little guest who taught us some charming solo dances based on Mother Goose rhymes.

The children's love of the dramatic was shown by their fondness for guessing pantomimes. A child usually planned a pantomime beforehand, and then invited others to help him work it out for the rest to guess. Our pantomime material was drawn largely from Mother Goose, Aesop's Fables and well known fairy tales.—Mrs. Dora Ladd Keyes.

REV. T. J. ALLISON.

Death has again invaded the ranks of the ministry, this time the call coming to Rev. T. J. Allison, one of the faithful servants of the church, serving at different times as pastor of a number of our churches and at one time on the editorial staff of this paper. Mr. Allison died in Charlotte, May 22, at the home of his son, following an illness of many months’ duration. We will in our next issue have a more extended notice of his life.

REV. MESSRS. ELDRIDGE AND SHELTMAN.

From the secular press we have the following account of a distressing accident:

Two of the best-known Presbyterian ministers in Central Kentucky, the Rev. W. M. Eldridge, of Paint Lick, Garrard county, and the Rev. Clyde Shelton, of McAfee, Mercer county, were instantly killed in an automobile accident at Dix bridge, five miles from Lancaster, yesterday afternoon, May 19.

The two clergymen, in an automobile, were on their way to Paint Lick to conduct a revival meeting at the Presbyterian church there.

Approaching the hill, just before reaching the bridge, at a sharp bend in the road, the machine became unmanageable and before control could be regained, plunged down an embankment, overturning and pinioning both men underneath the car.

The tragedy was not discovered until half an hour later, when motorists driving along the road saw the machine in the ravine and righted it, releasing the two bodies. Death apparently had been instantaneous.

Mr. Eldridge was married and is survived by his widow and four children. He was pastor of the Paint Lick Presbyterian Church. He had driven over to Danville to meet Mr. Shelton, whom he had invited to take charge of the revival in his church, and was driving back to Paint Lick when the accident occurred.

Mr. Shelton also was married, and had gone to Danville, accompanied by his wife, early yesterday morning, to visit their daughter, who is in school there.

Mrs. Shelton parted from her husband soon after their arrival in Danville, taking a train for Louisville to visit a kinswoman, Miss Carrie Cooper, of 1613 South Third street. She did not learn of Mr. Shelton’s death until several hours afterward.

Mr. Shelton was pastor of the Old Providence Presbyterian church at McAfee.

ROBERT ALEXANDER WEBB.

Dr. Robert Alexander Webb, professor of Apologetics and Systematic Theology in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary, is dead—or shall we not say the rather, has entered through the gateway of death into the fuller life above? After an indisposition of several days, one that was not considered alarming until May 22, he passed away quietly, at his apartments at the Seminary in Louisville, at 1 o’clock on Friday morning, May 23, 1919, making heaven richer and earth poorer in his going.

Dr. Webb was born in Oxford, Miss., September 20, 1856, the son of Robert Clark and Elizabeth Eaton (Dortch) Webb; graduated A. B. at the Southwestern Presbyterian University, Clarksville, Tenn., in 1877; and graduated at Columbia Theological Seminary, S. C., in 1880. Southwestern honored him, and itself, as well, by conferring upon him the degrees of D.D. in 1890 and LL.D. in 1908. Dr. Webb was pastor of the Bethel Presbyterian Church, in York County, S. C., from 1882 to 1887; at Davidson, N. C., 1887-8; and at Westminster Presbyterian Church, Charleston, S. C., 1888-1892. He became professor of Systematic Theology in the Southwestern Presbyterian University in 1892 and continued in that work until called, in 1908, to the professorship of Apologetics and Systematic Theology in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Kentucky, where he labored with distinguished success until called to higher service. At Southwestern Presbyterian University he immediately succeeded Rev. Joseph R. Wilson, D.D., father of President Woodrow Wilson and his former professor in the Seminary at Columbia. Two years ago, at the commencement of the Seminary in Louisville, a service was held in recognition of the fact that Dr. Webb had completed twenty-five years’ of teaching in the department of systematic theology. Dr. Webb has been a frequent and always valued contributor to the religious press, and his book, “Infant Salvation,” has had a wide reading. Besides a wide circle of former pupils and friends, he leaves to mourn his loss his widow and two children, Miss Annie Webb, who is teaching at Montreat, N. C., and Dr. Robert A. Webb, Jr., who has been in charge of the convalescent hospital at Bristol, England, and is now supposed to be on the Atlantic returning for service in the United States.

The funeral services were held in the Harbison Memorial Chapel of the Seminary in the presence of many sorrowing friends at 2:30 o’clock Saturday afternoon, May 24, and in accordance with the wishes of the family they were marked by simplicity throughout. President Charles R. Hemphill, who had just returned from the meeting of the General Assembly in New Orleans, was in charge and out of a long and intimate friendship sketched the rare traits of his friend and colleague and the loss to the Seminary, the city and the church at large of one whose Christian character and brilliant gifts had alike been consecrated to the upbuilding of the Kingdom. Drs. Cotton and McAlister, of the Seminary faculty, Dr. W. Y. Davis, a friend of many years, and Dr. D. H. Ogden, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church and a former pupil of Dr. Webb at Clarksville, assisted in the service. Early Monday morning the body was taken to Nashville, Tenn., where in simple commitment it was interred in the Christian's hope of a glorious resurrection at the last day.

The earnest Christian, the brilliant teacher, the faithful friend, the genial, lovable, unassuming man, as Assemblies here on earth were closing, has entered into the General Assembly and Church of the First-Born whose names are written in heaven.

"Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ:
The battle fought, the vict'ry won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

CHURCH ADVERTISING.

Though we are classed as an ultra conservative, and we do not deny the charge, we claim that it is true only in matter of doctrine. In methods we are willing to advance, and therefore we are in favor of the churches of our land using the press to increase church attendance.

The children of this world in worldly things are wise, and often the church can learn from them.

Mr. J. B. Spillman proposes to furnish churches with a weekly matrix service. Let pastors and officers study his advertisement in this issue.

PERSONALS.

At the First Church, Charlotte, Dr. Walter Lingle preached in the morning of May 24, a most helpful sermon, such as he always preaches.

On last Sabbath Rev. W. L. Boggs, of the Presbyterian Standard, preached the baccalaureate sermon before the High School at Laurel Hill, N. C.

Dr. A. A. McGeachy delivered the commencement sermon to the Queens College graduating class, Sunday evening, May 24, in the First Presbyterian Church, Charlotte. The commencement address will be delivered by Dr. John Henry McCracken, president of Lafayette College.

The Rev. Bolling Hobson has resigned as pastor of Cactoin and Faith Chapel, in Loudoun Co., Va., and May 1 began his work as superintendent of Home Missions and Sunday School work in Potomac Presbytery. His address after June 1 will be Point of Rocks, Maryland, R. F. D.

We missed seeing our friend, Dr. J. L. Mauze, of Huntington, W. Va., when he called. Dr. Mauze delivered the baccalaureate sermon at Davidson College, Sunday, May 24. Dr. D. Clay Lilly, of Winston-Salem, N. C., preached the annual sermon before the Y. M. C. A.

Rev. R. T. Chafer, who has been spending the Spring months in Florida in Bible conference, teaching and literary work, will be engaged in the same work in the North during the Summer. All of July will be spent lecturing before the Erieside Bible Institute and Conference at Cleveland. His Summer forwarding address will be Trumansburg, N. Y. Mr. Chafer will return to the South early in the Fall.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Presbytery of Albemarle stands adjourned to meet in Raleigh, Tuesday, June 10, at 10 a. m. An important meeting.
J. N. H. Summerell, S. C.

Mallard Creek church held its Spring Communion on the second Sabbath in May. The pastor, Rev. John E. Wool, was assisted by the Rev. W. R. McCalla, of Sugar Creek church. Two members were received by letter and five children of the church were received on confession of their faith in Christ.

Charlotte—Dr. Bunyan McLeod left Monday night for Park College, Missouri, where on Sunday night, June 1, he will deliver the commencement sermon before the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. of the college. During his absence the pulpit of the Westminster Church will be occupied by Rev. J. F. McKinnon, of Oakland, Fla.

Kannapolis—During a revival meeting held by Rev. S. H. Hay, of Mooresville, beginning May 4, and running through May 11, there were ten new members added to our roll, six on profession of faith and four by letter. Besides this the entire church was lifted up spiritually and new zeal is shown in the work already. During the past year our material gains have been a great satisfaction to the pastor and session, the church paying as much to benevolences the past year as the quota set for it the coming year, making a nice sum above the amount accepted as our quota for that year.
Correspondent.

Hawfields—Our home-coming day, May 18, was a most delightful one. Many of the old members from all over the State were with us and crowded the church and galleries. At the morning service the congregation had the pleasure of hearing one of the best sermons ever preached in the old church on Foreign Missions. Rev. Geo. L. Cooper, a young seminary student, preached this sermon. The ladies of the congregation served delicious dinner on the grounds. In the afternoon communion service was conducted by Dr. Shaw, pastor of the Mebane church. We were glad to have so many old friends and hope that their interest in home-coming day will grow from year to year.

Statesville—A meeting of the men of the First Presbyterian Church, Sunday afternoon, discussed increasing the church budget from $9,000 to $12,000. This was approved and a number of individual subscriptions were increased at the meeting, this increase amounting to about $1,000. A motion was adopted to increase the salary of the pastor, Dr. C. E. Raynal, from $2,200 to $3,000. This will be passed upon at a meeting of the congregation.

At a recent meeting of the men of this church, Dr. M. R. Adams, J. B. Gill and N. B. Mills were appointed a committee to arrange for an entertainment for the soldiers. The character of the entertainment and the date was not definitely determined.—Landmark.

Wilmington—From the calendar of the Church of the Covenant we have an account of the installation of Rev. J. Oscar Mann as first regular pastor of the church:

"The services on last Sunday, both morning and evening, were of especial interest to the members and friends of this church. The installation service of our pastor occurred at the morning service, when Rev. A. D. McClure, D.D., delivered the charge to the pastor, and Rev. J. E. Purcell delivered the charge to the people. The installation sermon was preached at the evening service by Rev. J. M. Wells, D.D. At the morning service a telegram was read from Rev. Marion S. Huske, who was the first acting pastor of this church. Mr. Huske telegraphed from Asheville cordial greetings on the occasion of the installation of this church's first regular pastor. Mr. Huske's friends will be pleased to know he is regaining his health."

Fayetteville—Rev. William Black, evangelist of the Synod of N. C., closed a meeting at Lakeview, Fayetteville, May 11. This is a mission of the First Church and is served by the Rev. A. S. Anderson.

The attendance was good, the house full at night and crowded for the last services.

Sixty-five persons signed cards indicating their acceptance of Christ, 36 of whom expressed preference for the Presbyterian church, 17 united with the Presbyterian Church during the meeting, three persons promised to establish family worship and about 275 to read the Bible and pray daily.

One hundred and forty-two dollars and thirteen cents was contributed to the Synod's work. The week of this writing he is at North Wilkesboro.
A. W. C.

Rev. O. G. Jones, D.D., Evangelist of the Synod of N. C., conducted an unusual series of evangelistic services at the mill town of Draper, in Rockingham County, closing May 15.

There is no Presbyterian church in the town. The pastors of the Methodist and Baptist churches united in requesting the services of one of our evangelists for a union meeting and we gladly arranged for Dr. Jones to answer the call.

All worked together in perfect harmony and with fine results. Seventy-eight persons signed cards indicating their acceptance of Christ and their purpose to unite with the church, the most of them for the Methodist or Baptist church. Five persons united with the Presbyterian church and their names were placed on the roll of the Presbyterian church in the nearby town of Spray. A baptismal service was held in one home which was attended by the Baptist pastor, who led in prayer in the service, at which time four children were dedicated to God in baptism.

A contribution of $183.87 was made, which goes to the Synod's work. It is a satisfaction to know that these servants of Christ in these sister churches were brought to him through the agency of the Synod's work as literally thousands of others have been in the years past in the evangelistic services of our evangelists.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Columbia—Wednesday afternoon at 6:30 o'clock in the First Presbyterian Church, the Rev. M. F. Daniels preached instead of the pastor, as previously announced. Mr. Daniels has completed his other trials for licensure by Congaree Presbytery, and after the sermon he was licensed to preach. He has been called to the pastorate of the church at New Brookland, and is serving as stated supply in the mission at Rose Hill.

Mt. Zion—The pastor, Rev. H. C. Hammond, was absent the third Sunday from his pulpit last Sunday, serving the Westminster School, Rutherfordton, N. C. His place was supplied by Rev. R. C. Reed, D.D. He announced that Rev. Geo. L. Petrie, D.D., of Charlottesville, Va., would preach for the Mt. Zion congregation on the following Sabbath.

Midway—The Midway Church, in Harmony Presbytery, has called to its pastorate, Mr. J. R. Offield, a recent graduate of Columbia Seminary. He has not yet announced his decision.

Fort Mill—At a congregational meeting held at the conclusion of the morning service yesterday morning, three additional elders and eight additional deacons were elected to serve the Fort Mill Presbyterian church. As elders, Mr. E. W. Kimbrell and Mr. K. Shannon were elected from the diaconate and Dr. J. B. Elliott from the congregation. The following deacons were elected: G. W. McKenzie, J. P. Crowder, E. F. Phillips, A. T. Neely, J. M. Hutchinson, S. R. Cook, B. E. Patterson, and J. J. Bailes. A report from the board of deacons indicated that while only a small part of the congregation had been canvassed a sum aggregating $5,000 had been subscribed for the purpose of building a new manse. A committee composed of Dr. J. Lee Spratt, J. Lee Capps, Osmond Barber, J. B. Mills, and Dr. J. B. Elliott was authorized to proceed immediately with the building of the manse and complete same as early as possible.

At the conclusion of the regular services on the second Sunday morning, the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was observed. There were three additions to the membership.

FLORIDA.

St. Petersburg—A unique prayer meeting was held on May 14, after previous announcement, when the service was devoted to expressions from the pew on the subject: "How would I preach from the pulpit in view of the condition of the world today?" It was not intended as a criticism of the pastor, or his methods, but afforded opportunity to hear individual opinions regarding the most important topics and ways of working in meeting present day problems. Nearly all the speakers stressed the need of the gospel invitation to sinners, which corroborates the testimony from other sources that the old gospel message is now, as ever, the only panacea for the ills of humanity. This sentiment accords with the constant preaching from this pulpit. At the conclusion the pastor expressed himself as greatly helped by the interchange of views, and said this was the largest prayer meeting of home folks he had ever attended in any church.

Sunday morning, May 18, we were privileged to hear a strong and masterful sermon from Rev. Dr. Dickie, of Detroit, who was pastor of the American Church in Berlin for twenty-five years. The principal evangelical churches of this town will begin a series of simultaneous evangelistic services in June, lasting two weeks. There will be a union meeting every morning alternating in the different churches, and each evening the various congregations will meet in their own building. Much good is anticipated from this concord of praise and petition and earnest gospel preaching.

GEORGIA.

Atlanta, Central Church—Last Sunday was indeed a day of joy and gladness to our people when Rev. B. R. Lacy, Jr., took his place in our pulpit and preached his first sermon as pastor of our church.

The full congregation which greeted him at the morning service testified to the hearty welcome we extend to him. The fine, strong sermon which Mr. Lacy preached at this service reached out and gripped the hearts of all who heard him.

The large number who were present at the Wednesday evening prayer service received a message that will stay with them for many a day. Mr. Lacy took as his theme "Prayer." He emphasized the point that prayer was the "highest work" that God's people could be called to do and that the strength of the church was in the prayers of those who no longer were able to do so much of the active work coupled with the constant and organized labor of the others.

First Presbyterian Church, Cuthbert—Rev. A. H. Atkins, pastor. Mr. C. B. Arnold was unanimously elected a member of the board of deacons on last Sunday by the congregation after the morning sermon. He will be installed at the morning service, the third Sunday in May.

Reports to the Presbytery were submitted to the congregation. As a whole they were the most encouraging submitted by the church for several years. They showed a steady and substantial growth of the church, increased liberality of the members, the pastors salary and other obligations paid.

North Avenue Church, Atlanta—Letters from Dr. Flinn, pastor of this church, who is overseas, speak of the unusual opportunities afforded him to deliver his message, and how the men seem to want the simple gospel message of Jesus and His love.

Last Sunday twenty new members were received into this church. Fourteen by profession of faith and six by letter. God is greatly blessing the ministry of Dr. John H. Elliott, who is serving as acting pastor.

Connected with this church is a Boy Scout troop, of which we are justly proud. It is about the largest in the city, and for the last two months has led in the efficiency contest among the various troops of the city. At a recent meeting of all the troops three of the highest honors out of four were won by members of this troop.

In connection with the Howell Mill Mission Sunday School of this church a Woman's Society with twenty-five members has recently been organized. Already they are at work and thoroughly interested and alive to the work that is to be done. This Sunday School which was started a little over a year ago now has about 175 members and continues to grow steadily. Beside the Sunday School service on Sunday, a prayer meeting is held there each Tuesday evening under the leadership of members from North Avenue Church.

LOUISIANA.

New Orleans—The St. Charles Avenue Branch of the First Presbyterian Church, New Orleans, Rev. J. S. Land, pastor, had an encouraging report to read to Presbytery. In spite of the war and influenza that hampered to some extent all church work, this church had 64 additions last year, 24 by profession and 40 by letter. Presbytery will meet in this church in the fall.

A series of popular gospel services has just closed here. The pastor was very fortunate in securing the Rev. J. Edwin Hemphill, pastor of the Pryor Street Presbyterian Church, Atlanta, Ga., to do the preaching. This man of God has been a great blessing to the people here. He is a man of unusual consecration and prayer with a passion for the salvation of souls. He is an earnest preacher of the pure gospel in its simplicity and power. He knows nothing "save Christ and Him crucified," as the way of life. The visible results of his visit there will be about 15 accessions, four of them to other churches, and over 50 reconsecrations. But no less felt and important is the unseen good done by these services. The Rev. A. H. Ziemer, pastor of the Clairborne Presbyterian Church, ably led the singing throughout the entire meeting.

MISSISSIPPI.

Central—Jackson—This church was greatly refreshed by the special services conducted by the Rev. Charles M. Boyd, of Tuscaloosa, Ala., during the week embracing the first and second Sundays of May. The attendance was excellent and the preaching of a very high order. Twelve or fifteen names will be added to the church roll as one of the results of this meeting. Mr. Boyd possesses unusual evangelistic gifts, and is safe and sane in all his methods. Prof. Cupero, the noted musician, was director of the music, which proved to be one of the attractive and helpful features of the services. The pastor and people are greatly encouraged.

MISSOURI.

Eastminster Church, Kansas City—Having returned to my church after an absence of six months in Camp Meade, Md., I desire to express my pleasure at the progress of the work while I was away. The church was fortunate in having as supply Dr. John E. Abbott, who rendered a valuable service as preacher and pastor. There have been additions to the church regularly and the officers have realized their aim of the past four years of securing personal pledges in the E. M. C. to fully cover the local expense and benevolent budgets. The canvass was organized and directed by C. G. Lord, city Y. M. C. A. secretary and member of this church. The canvass was a complete success. The congregation has given us a happy and hearty welcome home and we look forward to months of activity and fruitfulness in the Master's service. William Parker Neilson.

VIRGINIA.

Lexington—At the regular monthly meeting of the session Tuesday night, May 13, the following resolution was passed unanimously, ten of the thirteen elders being present: "The session of this church wishes to assure our pastor, Rev. Thos. K. Young, that he has our most hearty and thorough approbation and commendation of his action in refusing to preach on the Victory Loan, as the ministers in this town were requested to do. We also thank him sincerely for stating to the congregation his reasons for declining the request. He was called by this church to preach the Gospel to us, and not to make our pulpit a platform for the discession of political and governmental matters, even though these may be fully endorsed and supported by Christian patriotism, as was the case in this instance.

"As a session we go on record as hoping that the attitude and example of our present pastor in this matter may be followed by as many future pastors as God in His Providence may call to be under-shepherds of this flock."

A. H.

Anderson Memorial Church, Martinsville—Sunday, May 11, the writer closed his ministry of twelve years with this good people. The Baptist and Methodist pastors came with their congregations to the evening service, and the Episcopalians also were out in pretty full force. The visiting pastors conducted the service, leaving only the preaching to be done by the retiring pastor. Such tokens of good-will are gratifying. Since May 15, 1907, the local membership of this church has been almost doubled. In the town of Martinsville, 61 per cent. of the present membership have been added under my ministry, the greater part of them coming in on profession of faith. Of the whole membership—including non-residents—more than fifty-five per cent. have come into this church during the twelve years. The Presbyterian constituency in the county is small, families with children are few among us, our home Sunday School is small for that reason, and the work grows slowly. Yet the total membership has increased more than one-half, and in town, where I have been required to spend most of my Sundays, the increase has been nearly one hundred per cent., notwithstanding a large number of deaths and removals. Spiritually, there has not been the development that we would desire. Financially and numerically, the church occupies now a better vantage-ground than ever. The following things have been done by the church during this pastorate, for none of which the pastor claims any credit: 1. A debt on the manse of some hundreds of dollars was paid off; 2. the church renovated and refurnished; 3. a lot bought for a mission chapel at the cotton mills; 4. a fund of several hundred dollars has been accumulated toward a building there, and a larger fund—amounting now to more than five hundred dollars—has been accumulated by the Ladies' Aid Society for a Sunday School annex to the church building. I leave the church in vigorous condition, with good prospects for future growth. Martinsville is a thriving town of 4,000 inhabitants, half way between Roanoke, Va., and Winston-Salem, N. C. The manse is a neat 7-room building, with modern conveniences. My successor will find a loyal and devoted people, whom it will be a privilege to serve. Their kindness to me and mine has been unflinching and abounding to the last. Their parting gifts to their late pastor and wife have been generous. May God reward them for their labor of love. Wm. P. McCorkle.

East Hanover—This Presbytery met April 21 in the Porter Street Church, Richmond, and was opened with a sermon by the Moderator, Rev. William B. McIlwaine, Jr.

East Hanover Presbyterial met with the Presbytery for its opening service, the remainder of its sessions being held in Overbrook Church.

Rev. F. M. Allen was elected Moderator.

Rev. W. L. Carson was dismissed to the Presbytery of Memphis. Candidates were received as follows: H. Allen Scott from Washburn Presbytery; Stewart R. Oglesby from Ouachita Presbytery; C. J. Walsh, Ray Howland, D. C. Young from Mecklenburg, and M. A. Boggs from Piedmont, and P. J. Murdock from the M. E. Church, South. The following candidates were licensed: Graham F. Campbell, Frank F. Baker, D. C. Young, Ray Howland, H. A. Scott, M. A. Boggs, S. R. Oglesby, C. J. Walsh, J. A. Vache, P. J. Murdock.

The following licentiatees were dismissed: Graham F. Campbell to Atlanta Presbytery, C. J. Walsh to West Hanover, H. A. Scott to Durant and S. R. Oglesby to Albemarle.

Messrs. J. R. Williams and Kenneth J. Foreman were received as candidates.

Grace-Covenant Church presented a call for the pastoral services of Rev. C. L. King, and Rev. Dr. Russell Cecil, Rev. Dr. F. T. McFaden, Rev. Dr. J. C. Stewart, Rev. T. H. Rice, and Elders Calvin Wilson and S. B. Love were appointed a committee to install him. The church also presented a call for the services of Licentiate M. A. Boggs as associate pastor. He will be ordained at an adjourned meeting to be held on May 8, and will be installed by the same commission that is to install Mr. King.

A call from the Samuel Davies Church for Licentiate Ray Howland was placed in his hands and was accepted by him.

The Presbyterian sermon on Sabbath observance was preached by Rev. Duncan Thomas.

The reports from the churches and by the committees showed the work of the churches and of the Presbytery in a very gratifying condition. Contributions to all causes showed increase. We received very encouraging reports from the Every-Member Canvass, which was conducted in nearly all the churches, in almost every case going beyond the apportionment.

The Home Mission work of the Presbytery under the superintendent, Rev. L. W. Curtis, is showing gratifying progress.

The next stated meeting of Presbytery will be held at Bon Air September 23, at 8 p. m.

An adjourned meeting will be held in the Presbyterian Publishing House, Richmond, on May 8, at 10 a. m.

Woman's Auxiliary

THE WOMAN'S CONVENTION AT ATLANTA, JUNE 10-11-12.

The women all over the church are showing deep interest in this our first large Convention, and a record breaking attendance is expected.

If you wish to know the galaxy of famous speakers to be heard at that time, read first the announcement of the men who are to address the Laymen's Convention, for practically all of these will deliver the same address at the Woman's Convention also. In addition to these, there are a number of women speakers who will address only the Woman's Convention.

Mrs. E. C. Cronk, secretary of the Inter-Church Movement, and editor of the methods department in the Missionary Review of the World, will be with us throughout the Convention. Mrs. Cronk is well known in the South and much loved, and no more popular speaker could have been secured for the Convention.

Miss Anna Milligan, Educational Secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the United Presbyterian Church, taught the Mission Study Books at Montreat last summer and won all hearts by her charming presence, her spiritual message, and her ability to handle the text books. Miss Milligan will bring us several messages concerning the Foreign Mission field, which she has visited in person.

In addition to the above, we will have a group of women missionaries from China, Japan, Korea and Brazil, and Home Mission speakers on the mountain work, the work among immigrants and the negro work. Altogether, the program is a splendid one.

A registration fee of $2.00 admits the delegate to all sessions of the Woman's Convention, and to the night sessions which are joint meetings of the Men and Women's Conventions. It is advisable that the enrollment fee be sent in advance if possible, and should go at once to Mr. James Morton, 75 Luckie Street, Atlanta, Ga. An especial railroad rate of one fare and one-third for the round trip has been granted for the Convention. This rate is good for the purchase of tickets from the 6th to the 11th, and good returning until the 16th.

See if you cannot get up a delegation in your church to attend the meetings.

Concord Presbyterian met in Marion at 3:30 p. m., April 22, adjourning on the 23rd to meet in Morganton.

Mrs. Geo. Banner, in the name of the local society and church, made a cordial address of welcome, to which Miss Daisy Beam, of Salisbury, fittingly responded.

Rev. J. C. Story gave a fine address in a public meeting on the first evening.

The Presbytery was fortunate in having the devotionals conducted helpfully by Mrs. W. L. Willis, of Montreat, for both morning and afternoon sessions, and one by Mrs. C. M. Richards, of Davidson, for the young people's program.

In honor of Rev. C. A. Monroe, who labored so long and faithfully in Concord Presbyterian, the Presbytery voted to establish a C. A. Monroe Scholarship Fund to aid in educating girls at our Christian Training School in Richmond.

The Presbytery urged all churches to send delegates to the Young People's Conference meeting at Queens College, Charlotte, June 2-9.

Mrs. M. L. Swineheart held the audience in a most unique and interesting address on Korean customs and conditions.

Miss Eleanor Berry ably presented the cause of Home Missions.

Mrs. De Long Little, of Lenoir, was elected secretary of young people's work to succeed Miss Margaret Turner, who, to the regret of the Presbytery, resigned.

Miss Johnsie Coit, of Salisbury, is our new secretary of literature.

Mrs. J. C. Black, of Davidson, the secretary of church education and ministerial relief. The other officers terms are unexpired.

Mrs. R. W. Orr, Rec. Sec.

The Macon Presbyterian Auxiliary held its nineteenth annual meeting in the First Church of Quitman, Ga., May 12-14. The meeting was well attended, only eight societies were not represented. The theme was "The King and the Kingdom."

Rev. F. D. Hunt, Presbyterian evangelist, was present and gave a splendid address on "After the War, What?" Rev. L. T. Newland, of Korea, gave us an unusually interesting message on the Korean Women.

Reports from the Young People's Societies were given Wednesday morning, and the open conference on "Presbyterial Problems" led by Mrs. R. S. Sanders was very helpful.

The secretary's report showed an increase in membership of 76 and in gifts of $3,401.00. Eight societies had reached the Standard of Excellence; and every society had reported.

Special music furnished by the Thomasville Christian Endeavor Society and by the organist and choir of the Quitman church was thoroughly appreciated.

Mrs. J. W. Elder led the quiet hour at the close of each session and her talks were most helpful and inspiring.

In the absence of our president, Mrs. J. A. Craig, first vice-president presided. The following officers were elected to fill the several vacancies: Mrs. R. M. Pegram, president; Mrs. Ruth Vaughn, second vice-president; Mrs. Bradwell, of Camilla, recording secretary.

It was with deep regret that the resignation of our beloved president, Mrs. William McKay, was accepted.

The hospitality of the Quitman ladies will long be remembered. The next meeting will be held at Bainbridge.

Meeting adjourned after the observance of the Lord's Supper, with Rev. J. P. Word in charge.

Mrs. R. M. Pegram, Sec'y.

We talk of a "cloudy sky," but in reality there is no such thing. The sky is always blue, the sun is always shining. The clouds are not the sky any more than the curtain is the window. So God is always the same. He never changes. Clouds may sweep between us and Him and obscure our vision, but He is where He always is, waiting to be gracious and ready to stretch forth a helping hand.—Canadian Churchman.

News of the Week

Interest during the week has been keen as to the fate of Harry G. Hawker, the Australian, and his navigator, Grieve, whose bold attempt to fly across the Atlantic created such interest on both sides of the water. The news that they were both safe, that after the wreck of their machine, they were picked up by a small vessel that did not carry wireless outfit and therefore could not notify those interested, brought joy to those waiting.

It is understood that the appointment of Hon. E. Y. Webb to the N. C. Western District Judgeship will be announced about the first of June.

The cabled message of President Wilson to Congress was read Tuesday. The principal points in the message were: He urged revision of war taxes; announced that the railroad systems and telegraph and telephone lines will be returned to private ownership; outlined a general program respecting labor; recommended that the tariff laws be supplied with teeth to protect American industry against foreign attacks; recommended repeal of the war time prohibition law, so far as it applies to wine and beer only; urged the enactment of woman suffrage constitutional amendment; approved Secretary Lane's program for land for returning soldiers.

General Pershing's expected visit to London has been postponed, his presence being still needed in France for military purposes.

The American steamer, Lake Placide, struck a submerged mine off the coast of Sweden, May 20, and sank in five minutes. All those on board were rescued.

National suffrage for women was endorsed by the house of representatives for the second time, the vote being 304 to 89. The representatives in the house from North Carolina voted against the amendment 9 to 1, Weaver of the Asheville district being the only one to vote for it. The measure will come up next before the Senate and the leaders are confident that it will pass successfully.

A disastrous fire occurred in the residence district of the older section of the city in Mobile, Ala., May 21. The property loss will exceed $500,000 and about 1,500 people are homeless.

"BUT HE WAS ASLEEP."

(Matt. 8:24).

By Rev. Andrew J. Howell.

Jesus asleep on a pillow in the hinder part of the ship was rather a strange paradox, a mysterious phenomenon. That is, He was a tired man, worn out with contact with the multitude, who pulled upon His sympathies and drained His energies. At the same time, He was the God who never slumbers nor sleeps. The waves could not swamp the ship, for they could not submerge God. Jesus knew that, and the apostles should have known it. Therefore, the most reasonable question He could have asked when awakened was, "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?"

Apparently, Jesus was oblivious to the storm and the peril threatening the boat and the apostles; but they were safe, with Him in the boat, and the boat must therefore reach the other shore.

This scene on Lake Galilee from the life of our Lord Jesus forms a certain suggestive parallel with our own days. It is this:

This whole Christian world feels in these days the ap-

A deficiency bill providing urgent appropriations of $45,000,000 for war risk allowances to soldiers' and sailors' families passed the House on May 22.

Sergeant Alvin C. York of the 328th Infantry arrived this week in New York on special furlough and received many special attentions and honors while in the city. Sergeant York, who is a Tennessean, wears the French Croix de Guerre and the congressional medal of honor, the highest honor medal this country could bestow. His special feat of bravery was performed at the head of a detachment of seven men, when he killed 20 Germans, took 132 prisoners, and put 36 machine guns out of commission. This was during the Argonne drive last October.

Representative M. B. Madden of Illinois on the first day of the new Congress offered a bill to do away with separate cars for white and colored people.

To finance the railroads for the balance of this year and to pay the government's operating loss for 16 months up to this month, Director General Hines has asked Congress for an appropriation of $1,200,000,000. Hearings on the appropriation will begin at an early date.

At the National Baptist Convention held in Denver, Colo., the largest individual gift ever made to missionary work in any denomination was made, this being a gift of two million dollars by Jno. D. Rockefeller. This gift is made contingent upon the completion of the six million dollar church fund.

Conditions seem to be growing more and more serious in China. The anti-Japanese boycott is spreading and Japanese authorities have lodged a protest against the use of the term "enemy goods" with relation to Japanese goods.

Greenville, S. C., has been selected as the place for the first annual reunion of the famous 30th Division, and September 29-30 as the time.

The German peace delegation was granted an extension of seven days, or until May 29, in which to reply in full to the peace terms. This was in reply to the German plea that more time was needed that they might formulate arguments of much importance.

parent lack of the wakeful energy and power of the Lord. During the great war, with its attendant horrors and distress, and in the midst of the large prevalence of disease and suffering and the unsettled state of peoples and governments, the Lord has seemed to be oblivious to the dangers threatening His people. And we feel it is something like the time when He slept in the boat on the lake of Galilee while the storm raged and the apostles were afraid. Not that the church has been inactive and floating helplessly in the storm, for she has planned large things and has undertaken to increase her generosity and enterprise. But the thrill of spiritual power has been lacking and deep movements of the heart are not felt as in other times.

With all this, it is good to feel that the Lord is still mighty, and He is biding His time to bestir Himself and speak the word to calm the fears of His people. He is able to quiet the strong winds and the threatening billows, and He will do this in His own time.

There is need, though, for Christians to cry to Him to awake, as the apostles did, and surely He will hear and let it be known that He is still with us and is sufficient for any emergency.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Mrs. Henrietta Crockett Williamson.

Our fellow-worker, Mrs. Henrietta Crockett Williamson, died April 17, 1919, therefore, be it resolved by the members of the Missionary Society of the Monroe Presbyterian Church, that we are sad over the loss of one of its honorary members, who was always an inspiration to others by her loyalty to its officers, enthusiasm to work, and love for the church.

Resolved, we, as members of that society, keep in memory the lovely traits of Christian character and by emulating them make our own lives better, and cheering others around us.

Resolved, we extend to the members of the bereaved family our sincere sympathy and may the Holy Spirit, the Comforter, abide with them and the consolation of our gospel be theirs in this hour of sorrow.

Resolved, That these resolutions be written in the minutes, a copy sent to the bereaved family and a copy sent to our town papers and the Presbyterian Standard for publication. God knew all about those who loved her.

How bitter the trial must be, and right through it all God is loving, and knows so much better than we.

MAMA'S HELPER.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl six years old. I go to Sunday School. My teacher is Mrs. Goodman, our pastor's wife. We all love her so much.

I help mama clean up the house and wash the dishes and can help her do lots of things. I love to do things for mama. Please print my letter. I want papa to see it. Your little friend,

A COUSIN IN FRANCE.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl seven years old and am in the second grade. I have four little kittens about a month old. I have a cousin in France. I have four brothers and one sister.

As this is my first letter, I hope it will not be put in the waste basket.

Your little friend.

NO DANGER OF WASTE BASKET.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl eleven years old. I go to school. I am in the fifth grade. At the end of school I got three certificates, one for promotion to the fifth grade. The others are prizes, one for being on the honor roll and the other for being neither tardy nor absent this year. My brother larger than myself won a gold medal in a contest.

I have recited both catechisms and got my Testament and Bible. I have three other brothers that have recited, both of the catechisms and have got their Testaments and Bibles. My Sunday School teacher is Mrs. Sharpe. I like her fine.

I want to surprise grandma and Aunt Mary, so please don't let this reach the waste basket. Your friend.

La Nilta Wimberley.

SICK A LONG TIME.

Dear Standard:

I have just finished reading your paper and I thought I would write to you.

I am eleven years old. If I went to school I would be in the fifth grade, but I have been sick all last summer and winter.

I have two sisters and two aunts. My Aunts are on my father's side. I have two Uncles, too. They are on my mother's side. One teaches at college.

I hope this does not reach the waste basket, as I want to surprise my mother and father. Your little friend,

Mary Eldridge Quinlan.

THE PRINCESS CLUB.

Max and Bud and lots of the boys have started a club. They call it the X Y Z Club, and they meet every Monday evening, and it is just boys. We girls wanted to belong, but the boys didn't ask us, and we couldn't suggest it ourselves. Max never belonged to anything I didn't before, and he said he'd just as soon the girls would come, but some of the fellows didn't want them. It's a debating society, and they do it to get the practice, so they can win from some other school team. The secret part is, they have officers with initials, and we know what the initials are—but we don't know what they stand for. Max is M. P., and we say it means "Most Perfect." He doesn't like that—he isn't so very perfect, and he knows it. But he is a nice boy, and I should think so if he wasn't my brother.

The X Y Z Club made us girls feel a little lonesome, and one day Arria Dale said:

"Let us have a secret society, too, and have fun, and make the boys wish they had asked us to join theirs. Come on, let's!"

"Don't let's be hateful," said Eleanor. "The boys have a right to be by themselves if they want to. But we could have it secret to please ourselves."

"And could we debate?" I asked.

"Why, we don't know how!" said Eleanor.

"Well, we could learn," said Arria. "The boys get all the things they say out of books, and we could, too."

"I vote we have refreshments," said Tilda Estes.

We all laughed at that; Tilda likes to eat best of anything. We talked till the bell rang for school, but we didn't get anything settled.

"Tomorrow's Saturday," said Eleanor, as we went in. "Everybody come to my playroom in the afternoon and we'll talk it over."

I told Mother about it while she was putting Lou to bed—it was all the chance I could get to see her alone, and Louie was too sleepy to notice. I don't have any secrets from Mother—I always tell her everything. So we talked about our club, and I asked Mother what would be a good name for it.

"What are you going to do?" she asked.

"Oh, some of the girls thought we'd better debate, and perhaps recite pieces, like How He Saved St. Michael's, or The Polish Boy—Arria does that real well. And Tilda thought we'd better have something to eat."

"You ought to have some object," answered Mother. "The boys have—they are anxious to improve themselves, so they can speak easily in public. But you girls won't have to do that, or if you do, reciting dramatic poems won't help you."

I didn't answer, for little Lou was ready to say her prayer. Mother always lets her make them up, the way she did Max and me. She taught us to ask for what we want, and not for anything we don't want—for that's not honest. Little Lou always begins her prayer with, "Thank you, our Father," and tonight, after she'd said that and asked for what she wanted, she ended, "And please make me a sweet little princess." Then Mother kissed her and tucked her in.

I went to Mother's room with her while she got her work and I asked her what Louie meant. And she said she'd had, "The King's daughter is all glorious within" for a verse in Sunday school. And her teacher told her that every little girl was a King's daughter, and must try to act like one. Louie knew that a king's daughter was a princess, so that explained her prayer.

"I'd like to be a sweet princess, too," I said.

Mother smiled. "Well, you can be," she said.

I shook my head. I have such a quick temper and I think patience is something I never shall learn.

"Eleanor could be one," I said, "but I'm afraid I couldn't."

"Why can't you have a club of Sweet Princesses?"

"Everybody trying to be as nice as a princess?" I asked.

"Yes," answered Mother. "Begin with yourselves, but don't stop there. Go further than that and be helpful to others—girls not in your set, or little children, or lonely old people."

"Could be make birthday cakes for Mrs. Emmons and Uncle Alex Greene and that lame Miss Scott, who has to stay in the house?" I asked.

"Yes, and you could help the Mothers' Club find clothing for poor children, and make some yourself."

"And could we have committees, and officers with initials, and a motto and a club color?" I asked.

Mother laughed. "Oh, you can plan all that with the other girls. Perhaps a good way for your committee work would be for every member to be a committee of one, to find some special work and do it," she said.

The next day at Eleanor's we got it all settled. We elected Eleanor our T. S. P.—that's The Sweetest Princess—and we decided that should be our chief officer. Arria is T. L. P., The Live-liest Princess, and Gladys is The Tal-lest Princess, and Tilda is The Hun-griest Princess. Every one of us has a title. We meet Saturday afternoons, and we have splendid times. Our colors are white and gold—they are symbols of our object—to have our characters white, and gold is for the gifts of time or work or money that we make to the poor, or other people. And we are all committees of one, and we can choose a name for it. Mine is the Loneliness Committee, for I pity lonely people more than any one else. It is terrible to have to eat all your meals by yourself, and not have any family except a cat.

I made a birthday cake for Uncle Alec Greene—he's eighty. He isn't poor, but he must be lonely, he hasn't any family, just a housekeeper. His birthday is Oct. 18. I made a round cake, with nuts and raisins, and pink frosting on it. Men usually like red best, but pink is the nearest to it for frostings. It was late for flowers, so I went down to the swamp and got some cranberry vines, with the ripe berries, and made a wreath and put it around the cake. But I got caught, hanging it. I put it on his doorstep and rang the bell and hid behind the big syringa bush. No one came, so I rang again and stopped a second to fix the wreath, for the wind had blown it part off, and he came and caught me. But I didn't mind very much, for he's one of my friends, but it is really more successful when no one finds out.

He was so pleased with the cake, and he said: "Why, Mary, you didn't make it yourself, did you? Well, well, it seems only yesterday you were a baby!"

Then he asked me why I did it, and I told him about the Club of Sweet Princesses, and that the only secret things were the initials and things we did for people. "So you 'do good by stealth.' Not a bad way, my dear," Uncle Alec said.

Then he went into his own room and brought out a little box. "I've been wondering what I should do with this little ring of my mother's that I've had so many years, and now I'm going to give it to you, Mary," he said, as he opened the little box and took out a gold ring set with a cameo.

I know it is more blessed to give than to receive—it makes you feel so good to give things away—but I did want that little ring so much, I put my hands behind me for fear I'd take it. I never had had a stone ring in my life. Mother says I shall have a nice pearl when I'm sixteen—but that's so long to wait! But I said, "Uncle Alec, it's lovely, and I'd love to have it—but it's one of the rules of the club that we mustn't receive any kind of payment for the things we do, so I really musn't take it."

"But I want you to have it. Can't you break the rule?"

I was so surprised till I saw the twinkle in his eye.

"No, of course I can't," I said. "It is a beauty of a stone. What a lovely face the lady had that it was copied from!"

"It is a very finely-cut stone," he answered. "It was bought in Europe many years ago. Well, since you won't be paid except in thanks, I give you many, my dear. And will you kiss an old man on his birthday?"

So I did, and then I went home. The next week the Princess Club met with Rose Estabrook, and we all told something we'd done during the week. Eleanor had knit two pairs of baby socks and worked all the buttonholes in three little petticoats, for the Mothers' Club to give away. Arria had read the whole of "Little Men" aloud to Jack Noble, who's had a slow fever. Gladys had mended two pairs of stockings for old Mrs. Owen, and she and Christine had finished knitting a comforter for her. I've forgotten what Rose and Tilda did—there are eight Princesses. And when I told about Uncle Alec and the ring, Arria said (her father owns the mills), "Here, Mary, take this turquoise ring of mine—my hands aren't white enough to wear it any way." That's just like Arria—she'd give anything away. But of course I didn't take it.

"I don't believe Uncle Alec meant it for payment," said Eleanor.

"But that's the rule, and I think Mary did just right," declared Christine.

"We can't break rules, of course," said Eleanor to me, going home, "but I wish you could have that lovely ring, Mary."

"Well, I can't, so let's not think about it," I said. "I'll race you from the willow to your house, Eleanor." And I did and beat her. I didn't care much about racing, but if there's something you want and can't have—you want to forget about it.

When I got home Max was waiting for me on the veranda.

"You're late, Mary," he said. "Supper's ready, but I waited, because I had a package for you from Uncle Alec Greene."

I snatched the package. It was the cameo ring and a card. Uncle Alec had written on it, "For Mary Morrison, ex-officio."

"That means out of office," said Max. "In the X Y Z Club we"—

But I didn't stop to hear him. I rushed into the dining-room to show it to Mother. "That is a beautiful cameo, dear, and I think you can keep it."

"But how can I keep it?" I asked. Father picked up the card.

"I was just telling her," said Max.

"Why, it means you, yourself, Mary, in your own person, not as in any office," said Father.

I began to see. "Oh, Mother! Just me—not the Loneliness Committee! that's what Uncle Alec means. And I can keep it!"

"Course you can," said Max.

Mother smiled. "Yes, you may keep it, dear."

And I wear it every single day—it's just a fit for my ring finger. I'm so happy now I've got a truly stone ring, that there doesn't seem to be anything left to wish for. Of course it's very blessed to give—but it's nice to receive, too, when it's something you just love to have!—Hattie Vose Hall in Congregationalist.

General Assembly.

General Assembly to memorialize the Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America touching the latter's failure thus far to notice in any way so far as its published minutes, or any reported action show, the fraternal communication of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States in May, 1917 (Minutes, page 53), or to explain the reasons for making a change in an agreement that was formally entered into and officially accepted and signed, or to account for the fact that the provisions of that agreement have not been carried out.

The Presbytery also overtures the Assembly to carry out its own provision, if the said agreement is not carried out implied in the action of 1916 (Minutes 1916, page 21, Minutes 1915, page 76) that the matters of comity referred to be referred to the Council of Reformed Churches of America, in accordance with the provision of articles of agreement.

Answer: The Moderator is authorized in response to this overture to appoint a committee of three, whose duty it shall be to make a thorough investigation of the matters referred to in the overture, and recommend suitable action to the next Assembly.

The Assembly refused to join in a petition to change the preamble to the Constitution of the United States, in order to secure an acknowledgement of Christ by this country.

Because the Federal Council has been again meddling with the affairs of the State the Assembly was about to decide to withdraw, but hearing four various men who had also seen its value in dealing with the Government concerning our soldiers, it was decided to remain.

It was shown that in various ways the council had meddled with civil affairs, and that its control is coming more and more into the hands of a few men who have no such scruples as we have, and who really ridicule our position as antiquated.

Dr. Lyons of Atlanta was heard. He said that he, too, had to overcome his prejudices, as his soul was frequently vexed by seeing acts that were contrary to our position.

But in view of the fact that Protestant Christianity had no other field in which to express itself as one body, he was willing to overlook much.

He found it a rallying point, and that it enabled us to bring to bear upon the officials of the Government the united influence of the Protestant Church.

Rev. A. R. Bird of Washington, D. C., gave his experience. At first the officials would hear the various representatives of the denominations, but soon time became too precious, so they demanded that Protestantism come together and be heard through one body.

He being a resident was asked to serve on the committee, which he did, after conferring with certain brethren.

He strongly urged the necessity of some form of co-operation.

In view of this wide testimony, the Assembly decided to remain.

Rev. A. R. Bird was appointed to represent our Church in the Council in all matters connected with the Army and Navy.

Dr. Wells presented the report of the Committee on Foreign Missions, in which he recommended that paragraph 26 of the Manual be so amended as to allow the committee discretion to change for the time if they find it desirable, the allowance fixed for the children of missionaries. This same provision was practically made for the children of our Home Missionaries, upon a motion by Dr. H. T. Graham.

Dr. Chester was thanked by the Assembly for his 25 years services as secretary, and was given 10 minutes in which to speak. He called attention that in his 25 years' experience he had seen our force on the field increase five fold and our ingathering of converts increase tenfold.

The Leave of Absence Committee asked that Presbyteries in appointing commissioners send only those who can remain through the sessions of the body.

This request is regularly made and regularly ignored. When the Assembly adjourned, there were less than 100 members present, and often during the sessions of the Assembly there were far too many under the trees instead of in the house.

Rev. Dr. W. T. Thompson, Jr., presented the report of the Committee on Systematic Beneficence. He had to defend this report, but he held his ground, and finally succeeded in having it substantially endorsed.

The most radical recommendation was the one to discontinue both the Committee on Systematic Beneficence and also the Stewardship Committee, and out of the two to make one committee. It also recommended the appointment of an Ad Interim Committee, four elders and three ministers, to study the whole matter of the Clearing House Plan, advocated by J. B. Spillman of Columbia, S. C., and report to the next Assembly.

The following vote of thanks was offered by Dr. D. N. McLaughlin, and adopted by a rising vote:

"On the eve of its closing the General Assembly wishes to give voice to its appreciation of the most thoughtful and cordial hospitality extended to its members during its session.

To the pastor and congregation of this church, to the other Presbyterian pastors and congregations of the city, sharing our entertainment, to the young ladies presiding in the lunch room and the boys acting as pages here, to the newspapers of the community which have aided us, to the Whitney Central National Bank, which so kindly handled our papers, and to all other individuals and institutions giving aid, comfort and cheer to us in many ways we tender our most sincere and heartfelt thanks.

We recall the liberal arrangements made and executed that we might see this beautiful and interesting city, with its environs. These excursions were unexpected in this magnitude and most thoroughly enjoyed. The Crescent City, rich in historical associations of the past and in memorials of the Old South, richer still in the splendors of modern achievement, has been a paradise of wonders to many of us, and to all a "thing of beauty and a joy forever." Our most emphatic appreciation and thankfulness we have reserved in order to bestow them upon the ladies who have with so much labor and loving faithfulness supplied us daily with those elegant and satisfying luncheons. We shall ever recall the gentle ministry and grace that glorified feeding into a fine art. New Orleans and her people have more than pleased us, and the charm of our sojourn here shall linger in memory with fragrance forevermore. It is our ardent prayer that this people we have learned to love so much may find in their kind care of us much spiritual blessing, and firmly do we believe that God has come to us through the associations of this happy visit."

The Assembly then adjourned to meet in Charlotte, N. C., at the First Presbyterian Church, the third Thursday of May, 1920. In our next issue we propose to have some Assembly notes, which will throw some sidelights on the meeting and the doings of the brethren.

STYLES IN THE NEAR EAST.

Pajamas for street wear, bed jackets for afternoon tea, and convalescent suits for dress-up occasions will soon be the mode in Syria, Asia Minor, and the Caucasus.

The steamship Newport News, which is on its way to Constantinople with a cargo of relief supplies for the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, carries thousands of these garments for the destitute Armenian, Greek, Syrian and other refugees, at present clothed in rags.

When the cargo of the Newport News was being assembled in New York, it was discovered that the American Red Cross had in its warehouses a large quantity of pajamas, bed jackets, and convalescent suits, cut and ready for sewing, which were left on its hands when the armistice was signed. The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief at once sent a representative to the Red Cross to try to get them.

The question was raised whether the persecuted Armenians were particular about having pajamas for sleeping. To this the committee replied that the need of clothing was so great that the refugees would take them for general wear. "There are many thousands, none of whom in several years has had as much clothing as a whole suit of pajamas," said the committee. "The few rags they possess are indiscriminably dirty. The weather in much of the country is very hot. We'll take the pajamas."

Accordingly, the pajamas, the bed jackets and the convalescent suits were loaded on the Newport News, which is a naval vessel loaned by the United States government for the purpose, and started on their journey. With them went lots of other things, such as thousands of cases of soap, hundreds of hand sewing machines, rakes, hoes, spading a conclusion drawn from my own point of view as an evangelist, but it is a matter easily proved by a few hard facts.

"When I was in India two million pilgrims gathered in Allahabad for a religious celebration. They were jammed in a city normally of 175,000 souls which was without a modern sewage system. They bathed together in the dirty river. They drank the water in which they bathed.

"Eighty per cent of the people of India are diseased. Many have horrible and loathsome and incurable ailments, maladies rare in this country. These two million pilgrims after a few days of religious observance scattered and carried the germs of sickness they had exchanged back to thousands of villages.

"Such pilgrimages are common in India. They are going on all the while. Five hundred thousand in a pilgrimage are only a fair crowd, while fifty thousand are a handful.

"That is how Hinduism operates to spread disease. It also prevents its cure. There are practically no hospitals in India—I mean, none adequate to care for the three hundred million people.

"And there can not be hospitals. In every town where you decided to build a hospital, you would find you would have to build fire, or ten, or a hundred to get the Hindus into them at all. This is because a Hindu would not enter a hospital caring for sick persons of a lower caste. You would have to have different hospitals for the different strata of the population.

"So it is useless to try to cleanse India until you cleanse her soul, by giving her a clean religion. Christianity means health in India."—New York Advocate.

OLD SORES SHOULD NOT RUN FOREVER

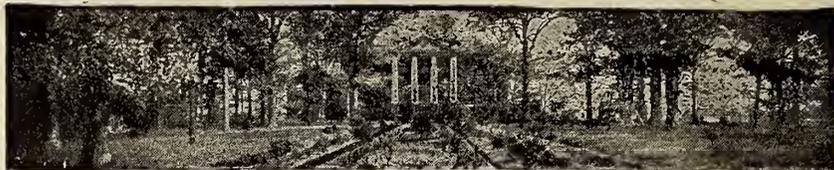

While it may not look dangerous and may not rapidly grow larger, its progress may fool you. Dirt and millions of germs will attack it every day. Blood poison is likely to set in at any time. Buy a box of Gray's Ointment. It immediately soothes the pain, cleanses the wound, kills the germs and begins healing. It is immediately effective with sores, boils, cuts, stings, burns, bruises, eczema and the many similar forms of skin eruption. If your druggist cannot supply you send his name to W. F. Gray & Co., 843 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., and a liberal sample will be sent you free.—Adv.

The Measure of a College

Elegance of buildings and grounds and wealth of equipment and endowment do not make a college. The REAL MEASURE of a college is found in its ideal—in the personality of its teaching force, and in the quality of its teaching. The real work in education is accomplished by the person. The school can rise no higher than the character of those who give it life.

MITCHELL COLLEGE

maintains a faculty of men and women of strong Christian character and influence, whose qualifications for teaching have been gained by years of thorough preparation and experience. The classes at Mitchell College are small, insuring for each student the utmost benefit of individual instruction.

Well Planned Courses Offered in All College Subjects

Courses of superior excellence in English, Bible, Music, Expression, Home Economics, and Business. The Department of Music is in charge of a graduate of the Hague Conservatory.

Measure These Advantages

Invigorating climate, small classes, efficient instruction, supervised evening study for all, home life, and positive Christian influence; moderate expenses.

A Preparatory Department offering the best advantages is maintained. Catalog on request.

HEALTH AND RELIGION.

More persons died in India of cholera and plague in the four years of the great war than died on the battlefields of Europe.

More men, women and children die in India every year of fevers than were lost by the allied nations of the earth in the war.

This is the picture of the most unsanitary country in the world, as described by Dr. James M. Taylor, who has come back after a tour of the East to lecture for the Methodist Centenary.

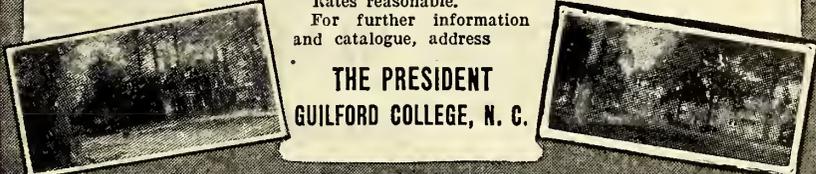

"India's frightful health conditions are largely due to her religion," said Dr. Taylor. "This may seem at first glance

HOW THE FIREMAN DID HIS "BIT."

In summing up the lessons of the great war there is one class of public servants that has received less than its proper share of credit. Working skillfully and devotedly under handicaps not realized by the general reader, the members of our hundreds of city fire departments have been too busily engaged with their duties to give much thought to public recognition.

Everyone assumes, as a matter of course, that the American fireman will unhesitatingly risk his life in extinguishing a blaze, but comparatively few realize to what an extent the modern doctrine of fire prevention has added to the labors as well as to the efficiency of those who formerly were merely fire fighters.

Fire prevention as a military factor is a distinctly new note in the conduct of wars, as we have repeatedly shown, but the fire prevention war service of our men in blue is an important story that remains to be told. Notwithstanding the serious depletion of their numbers through the call of the army draft and the attraction of higher wages in other lines of work, the fire chiefs and their forces have made an enviable record; they have contributed largely, though unobtrusively, to the winning of the war.

In the early days of fire fighting the fireman felt that his duty lay entirely in extinguishing a fire after it had started. Just what might have been its origin did not seem to be a matter about which he should concern himself. More recently, however, the realization has been borne in upon the fire fighter that the extinguishing of fires is only a part of his duty, and that his largest field of service lies in fighting fires before they occur. This has been particularly true of the past two years, or during our participation in the world war.

There are a number of obvious conditions which render fire probable, and fire prevention engineers have now made such an exact study of these dangers that it is possible to institute safeguards against them. Instead of a given factory, dwelling or other structure being permitted to harbor conditions which make fire an ever-present probability, they can be rendered practically immune to destruction from this cause.

Realizing this situation, most of the leading fire departments have organized their fire prevention activities upon a comprehensive scale, of which some of the more important features will be given separate consideration.

Inspections.

Inspections have played a prominent part in the fire prevention work of most departments, and it seems safe to say that practically all large cities are now receiving some degree of inspection. In many places where there is an adequate force of men every single structure is examined at some time during the year. Bridgeport, Connecticut, reports having
