The rally meeting of the Young People's Society of Mecklenburg Presbyterial will meet at Providence Church August 26. All societies of Mecklenburg county are urged to attend the meeting en masse and bring picnic dinners. Each society will elect a delegate to make a narrative report from his society. The meeting will open at 10:30 a. m.

J. W. Orr, Chmn. of Y. P. Work.
Louise Parks, Sec'y. of Y. P. Work.

Wilmington—The Wilmington Star has the following to say concerning Mr. James Sprunt's very generous gift of $20,000 to the Church of the Covenant for the erection of a manse:

"The gift of Dr. Sprunt will make possible the erection of a parsonage that will compare favorably with the church structure that was erected at a large expense and which itself compares with churches of larger cities of the South from a standpoint of architecture and furnishings."

First Church, Charlotte—On July 13 this church in a "hilarious" manner raised a debt of $11,000 that has been upon the church for ten years or more. The pastor preached upon the "Building of the Tabernacle," referring to the debt; the chairman of the board of deacons, Mr. Jesse Oldham, gave the items for which the debt was contracted, and, in about ten minutes, over the amount asked for was gladly given. This was done with a third of the congregation away for the summer. Twenty-seven members have been received into the church the last quarter, twelve of them on profession of faith in Christ.

On last Sabbath the pulpit was occupied by Rev. Geo. Bitzer, of Valdosta, Ga., who preached in the absence of the pastor, Dr. Johnson.

Davidson—Rev. C. E. Ervin, who for a part of the summer has been the supply at Brawley's School House, a preaching point east of Mooresville, will take work with the Home Mission Committee of Concord Presbytery in the early fall. He will visit among other fields at an early date a Lenoir group and the Coolemeec section. This week he is holding a protracted meeting at Brawley's. Davidson regrets the loss of him and family.

An inviting field for a minister without charge will soon be vacant in this immediate section, the Bethel-Cornelius group of Presbyterian churches. Mr. R. C. Clontz, ex-'21, now a student at Columbia Seminary, is supplying these churches during his vacation and working with great acceptability to the congregations. He returns to Columbia about the middle of September. He has just closed a most successful meeting at Bethel in which there were some thirty-three professions, twenty-six of whom united with the church last Sunday and others will unite before the communion service on the third Sunday. A similar series of services will begin at Cornelius about the 20th inst.

This group of churches, Bethel, with a membership of 175, and Cornelius, with a membership of about fifty, with a comfortable manse at Cornelius, and in their proximity to Davidson College and the presence at Cornelius of a public high school of A grade, is a very inviting one for a minister wishing a pastorate of promise to get in correspondence with.

(Continued on Page 16)

OF MORE VALUE THAN MONEY

The Story of Another Praying Woman

In another State a great campaign for a College was on. A worker went one day to see an old lady, whose broken body spent its days in a wheel chair. Her mind and soul were as fresh as in the morning of youth. The following conversation took place:

"Mrs. Mason, I have come to get your subscription to the endowment for our College."

"Why, God bless you, my boy, you know I couldn't give a dollar if it would save the College."

"I know that, and I came to ask you for something worth more than money."

"What is that—to pray?"

"Yes, I came to ask you to promise to pray every day for the campaign until it closes."

"Certainly I will, and if you will kneel here I will begin now."

She laid her hand on his head and talked to God about him and the College and the people of the State and the students and then fervently asked that success might be won. She kept her promise and all during those days of strenuous work she was praying. Victory was won with a fine margin. Many had given their thousands. Everybody was joyful. The Board of Trustees met to pass resolutions of thanks, etc., but in that humble home a broken body had given more than many who measured theirs by money.

There are hundreds of Presbyterians in North Carolina unable to give much money, but they can do more. They can pray for the success of the Million Dollar Campaign for our schools and colleges. Will you join the host now praying?

AIMS

1. To help North Carolina Presbyterians, 50,000 strong, to appreciate the fundamental place of the Christian college in training effective Christian leaders.
2. To visit practically every member in every church in the Synod of North Carolina; to discover and enlist many friends able to give largely; large numbers able to give in small sums; hosts willing to pray and work.
3. To reach the minimum goal of One Million Dollars within the time limits.

PRAY

1. That God may be honored in all the methods, efforts and spirit of the Campaign.
2. That the money secured may be so given as to bless the givers as well as the colleges.
3. That many young men and women may be inspired to enter one of these Christian colleges for better preparation for their life's work, and that through these colleges many may find God's plan for themselves.
4. That the men directing the Campaign—the committee: Mr. A. M. Scales, of Greensboro, chairman; M. E. Melvin, the manager, and all the men who work in the field—may have God's blessing upon them and His direct leadership in this great effort; that they may be wise, patient, tactful and victorious—and helpful.
5. That the Campaign may kindle many fires among the Presbyterians of North Carolina that shall light up the darkest parts of the earth.

PRAYER PLEDGE

Believing in the fundamental importance of Christian Education; interested in the success of the Million Dollar Campaign for our schools in North Carolina; with faith in God and the power of prayer, I covenant to pray daily, or as near thereto as possible, for the success of this effort.

Name _____

Address _____

Date _____

(This pledge will be kept in confidence and not used publicly)

Will you not sign the attached pledge and mail to Headquarters? You can pray as well without signing it, but we can work better and harder if we know you are praying.

Campaign Headquarters
Presbyterian Schools
Greensboro, N. C.

Church News.

(Continued from Page 14)

Philadelphia Church—The following is the program of the Mecklenburg Christian Endeavor Union picnic and conference to be held Saturday, August 16, beginning at 3 p. m. and closing at 9 p. m.:

Hymn, prayer, Bible reading, roll call of societies, reading of minutes, address, Why Have a County Christian Endeavor Union, awarding efficiency chart, address on Efficiency Chart, address on Expert Endeavorers, address, The Tenth Legion, address, The Quiet Hour, treasurer's report, offering, Union Lookout Committee report, address, Home and Foreign Missions for the Individual Society, address, The International C. E. Convention at Buffalo, question box, address, How the Society May Help Its Pastor and How the Pastor May Help the Society, announcements, adjourn, 5:30 to 7:30 p. m., supper on the grounds, picnic and games.

7:30 to 9 p. m., conferences for officers, prayermeeting or Program Committee, Lookout Committee, Missionary Committee, Social Committee, Intermediates, Juniors and General. Five-minute talks will be given on appropriate subjects in each of the separate conferences, which will be held simultaneously in different portions or rooms of the church and full discussion of each subject will be invited by those present.

The meeting will close with a consecration service, which it is expected will be most impressive, as it will be in charge of an experienced Endeavorer.

All those attending should provide themselves with means for taking notes on the talks and discussions, as these will be found quite helpful.

Present indications from reports sent to the officers are that several hundred persons will attend this meeting, many of them coming twenty-five miles in autos.

G. M. Beaty.

ALABAMA.

Tuscaloosa, First Church—Chas. M. Boyd, pastor. The following additional elders and deacons have recently been ordained and installed: Elders—Judge A. S. Van de Graaf, President George H. Denny, Editor James H. Nunnelee, and Messrs. George B. Davidson and Charles B. Verner. Deacons—Messrs. J. S. Free, F. J. Stevens, F. A. De Vere, H. L. Bateman and J. A. Savage.

Carrollton—Rev. Chas. H. Nabers, pastor of the Carrollton Presbyterian Church, held a very successful meeting the last week of July in the Hargrove Methodist Church. During his absence, the Carrollton congregation purchased and paid for a Cable piano for our church. Carrollton lost an elder by removal this past month when Prof. W. R. Osborn moved to Tuscaloosa to become superintendent of the farm and professor of Scientific Agriculture at Stillman Institute. Although there have been no special services within the past 18 months, the Carrollton congregation is growing steadily.

Reform—Rev. Chas. H. Nabers, of Carrollton, conducted a revival at this church during the first week of August. The interest and the attendance grew each day, and the church was crowded at each service in spite of the intense heat. Mr. Nabers preached very practical sermons and stressed duties to the church, to the town, and to the home. Seven new members, including the heads of two substantial families, were received into the church upon profession of faith. Despite heavy losses during the year by both death and removal, this congregation is in much better shape in every way than at any other time in its history.

OKLAHOMA.

The Presbytery of Mangum will meet in the Central Presbyterian Church, Shawnee, Okla., September 16, 1919, at 8 p. m.
J. W. Moseley, Jr., S. C.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. Jno. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

COLORED WOMAN'S CONFERENCE AT TUSCALOOSA, ALA., SEPTEMBER 20-27.

The above is the final and decisive date for this Conference. Please notice it and advertise it.

The Conference will have the best program it has yet enjoyed, and all indications point to a record-breaking attendance. The board for the period will be six dollars. Each delegate should have several dollars for incidentals. This amount, added to the railroad fare, will give the cost of sending delegates.

We strongly advise permitting the delegates to pay as much of their own expenses as possible. Every one should be present by Saturday night, and be prepared to remain until the following Saturday.

We earnestly hope that every colored minister's wife will be sent to the Conference. Will you not see that this is done in your Presbytery?

For further information, address the Woman's Auxiliary, Delmar Building, St. Louis, Mo.

ATTENTION, PRESBYTERIAL RECORDING SECRETARIES.

Although it is nearly the first of September, which marks nearly the close of the first half of the church year, there are still nine Presbyterial secretaries who have not sent us the list of their officers for this year.

This means there are nine Presbyterials whose officers we do not know, to say nothing of the officers in the local societies in these Presbyterials.

Information is going out all the time for the help of Presbyterial and local officers, and if your list has not yet been received at this office, your Presbyterial is failing to receive the help which should come to them.

We have written repeatedly for this information, and can do nothing more.

Are you willing that your delay should hamper the efficiency of your whole Presbyterial?

Please send the names at once to the Woman's Auxiliary, 520 Delmar Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

MISSOURI.

The Presbytery of St. Louis will meet in O'Fallon, Mo. on the 16th day of September, at 8 p. m.

Walter M. Langtry, S. C.

VIRGINIA.

The Presbytery of Winchester will meet in the Presbyterian Church at Berkeley Springs, W. Va., on Tuesday, September 2, 1919, at 8 o'clock p. m.

Jos. A. McMurray, Stated Clerk.

Waynesboro—This place has recently enjoyed a four weeks' tent meeting with the preaching done by Rev. Gypsy Smith, Jr. The preaching was scriptural and with power and many professing Christians were constrained to rededicate their lives to God, and a number professed their faith for the first time. There were fourteen additions to the Presbyterian Church as a result of the meeting.

The Moderator of the Synod of Virginia, Dr. E. W. McCorkle, has appointed the following committee to prepare a memorial of the Rev. V. H. Starbuck, Marshall, Va.: Rev. A. R. Bird, Rev. J. Royall Cooke, Rev. L. F. Harper, Rev. W. C. White, with Ruling Elders C. E. P. Janney and J. A. Alexander. By the rule of the Synod, these memorials are limited to one page of the printed minutes.

James P. Smith, Stated Clerk.

Story and Incident

Calling a Junior Superintendent.

Mary Sherburne Warren, in The Continent.

"I WAS so relieved when I heard you had taken the junior de—"

"But I have not taken the junior department and I shall not take the junior department." Miss Phoebe Barnes arranged the sixth grade arithmetic papers with precision as she spoke. "It is true Mr. Taylor is coming to the house tonight to 'talk it over.' I shall repeat what I said last Sunday, 'I absolutely refuse to consider it.'"

"Yes," smiled Edith Howe, "but when Mr. Taylor bids you farewell this evening he will thank you graciously for accepting the superintendency of the junior department of the Bethany Sunday school. Mr. Taylor hasn't built up three Sunday schools to a startling grade of efficiency without knowing what he wants and how to get it. So I congratulate our juniors in advance."

"But he cannot persuade me against my will," Phoebe defended herself. "I have an answer for every argument he can present."

"No. 1. Mr. Taylor: 'There are several women in this church whom we could "try out" in our junior department, but I cannot let forty children suffer during the unsatisfactory process. I know you can conduct this department successfully. Having taught the sixth grade for—er—several years you understand children of junior age. Many of the principles of teaching apply both to public and to Sunday school work.' Miss Barnes: 'I admit I understand the sixth grade for I have made a business of teaching for—er—several years. I work diligently from Monday morning to the following week. Sunday is my one day of rest. I attend church and an adult class in Sunday school where problems that do not concern children are considered. Monday morning I return to my school room refreshed in body and mind and thoroughly convinced that teaching decimals is the most delightful work in the world.'

"No. 2. Mr. Taylor: 'But Miss Barnes, you would be required to do no actual teaching at present. The six teachers in the junior department are graduates of a training class while four of them hold diplomas from a summer school. As it happens, however, not one of the six possesses all the qualities of a successful junior superintendent—the power to command the love and respect of the children that will help them to listen quietly and thoughtfully to the teaching of the lesson, and executive ability to make the opening exercises interesting, instructive and progressive.' Miss Barnes: 'But teaching the lesson would be a simple process compared to planning such exercises. They would take more time than I can afford to give.'

"No. 3. Mr. Taylor: 'By planning your exercises a month in advance you would find the work less arduous than would appear at first.' Miss Barnes: 'But to plan and work out the most systematic program would take more hours and strength from my school work than it would be right for me to give. I only wish I did not feel it my duty to say no.' There, Edith, those are all the arguments I remember now.' They will be sufficient, I think, don't you?"

"For any man but Mr. Taylor," was the reply. "Well, good-by once more. I will send you some Jacksonville views next week. The very first Sunday after our return I will

(Continued on Page 20)

Appomattox and Farmville Churches, of which Rev. C. F. Rankin is the pastor, have recently enjoyed gracious revivals. In the former church Rev. F. W. Osborn did the preaching and as a visible result of his earnest Gospel messages there were twenty-three additions to the church. In the Farmville church Rev. Geo. W. Belk did the preaching with convincing and convicting power and the church and pastor were made happy over the reception of thirty-seven persons into the church as a result of the meeting.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

By Rev. R. F. Kirkpatrick, D. D.,
Chairman Sub-Committee on Evangelism.

The department of evangelism is pleased to announce to the Church that Rev. Coleman O. Groves, D.D., Kosciusko, Miss., has accepted its call to become a regional evangelist, and expects to enter upon his duties the first of October. Dr. Groves has not only been a very successful pastor in Kosciusko and at the Westminster Church in Memphis, but he has also found time to hold a great many evangelistic meetings with the most gratifying results. He has also had successful experience in evangelistic work, having served the Presbytery of Memphis as evangelist. The department feels that it is exceedingly fortunate in securing Dr. Groves' services, and commends him to the favorable consideration of the Church.

During the month of June Rev. Trigg A. M. Thomas, D.D., conducted a meeting of two weeks at the East Dallas Church, in which there were 70 recorded professions, 40 of whom united with the church. There were also seven additions by letter.

Dr. Frank E. Fincher, D.D., has just concluded a splendid campaign through points in West Texas, in the course of which there were 405 confessions, 104 of whom pledged membership to the Presbyterian Church. As some of the visible results of Dr. Fincher's work in this campaign, at one point a good start for a $15,000 church building was made and a committee set to work. Two other fields pledged to buy cars for their home mission pastors.

Rev. W. H. Miley, D.D., has recently concluded a meeting at Orange, Va., in which there were eleven professions of faith and seven promised to bring their church letters.

The department is busily engaged in perfecting plans for a church-wide campaign of evangelism to begin this fall. The various Presbyteries of our Church will be asked to approve this campaign and take the necessary steps to push it to a complete success.

Rev. J. McD. Lacy, fresh from overseas service as chaplain in the American expeditionary forces, has entered upon his work as one of the Assembly's regional evangelists, and is now engaged in a two months' campaign in East Alabama Presbytery.

THE COLUMBIA SEMINARY AND THE NEXT SESSION.

The Columbia Seminary opens on September 18, 1919. The prospects were never so bright for a full attendance of students in all the long and splendid history of the institution. Men of the choicest character have enrolled from every section of the church and from far more than the majority of the synods. All of the professors will be in their places ready for work, and in addition, the Rev. Dr. Mills, with Professor Fulbright, will give their special and valuable courses without interruption this year. The course in Rural Sociology has no parallel in the church. The buildings have all been worked over and will be found in perfect and beautiful condition. It is believed that no plant designed for theological-seminary work is more satisfactory and convenient in its classic beauty and historic associations. An attractive building has been purchased by the Seminary and will be converted into apartments for married students. Each apartment will be complete in itself and conveniently arranged for housekeeping by those who occupy it.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriages.

Smith-Ross — At the Presbyterian Church, Florence, S. C., by the Rev. H. Tucker Graham, D.D., on June 25, 1919, Mr. Theodore Z. Smith and Miss Thelma Ross, both of Florence. They will reside at St. Matthews, S. C.

Crowell-Commander—At the home of the bride's father, Mr. R. C. Commander, July 27, 1919, by the Rev. H. Tucker Graham, D.D., Mr. George Sims Crowell and Miss Barbara Mathilda Commander, both of Florence. They will reside at Bishopville, S. C.

Deaths.

Withers—Mrs. Lillian Withers died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. B. B. Holder, on July 10, and was a little past the 60th year of her age. On the following day, in the presence of a large concourse of sorrowing friends, she was laid to rest in the cemetery at Summer-ville. Her pastor, Rev. J. A. Caligan, assisted by Rev. Donald McIver, of Burlington, N. C., conducted the services.

Mrs. Withers was the widow of the late Mr. John A. Withers, and is survived by five children, two daughters, Mrs. B. B. Holder and Mrs. H. McD. Ray, and three sons, Mr. James A. Withers, of Harnett, and Messrs. Benjamin C. and Alister Withers, of Florida.

Mrs. Withers joined the church in early life, and at the time of her death was a member of Leaflet Presbyterian Church. She lived a devoted and beautiful Christian life, reared a family of honorable and useful children, and was noted for her thoughtful and inspiring service to her church and community.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth."

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Euphrasia Hoole Dabbs.

Mrs. Euphrasia Hoole Dabbs died at the residence of her son, Mr. E. W. Dabbs, near Mayesville, S. C., on the fifteenth day of July, 1919, in her ninety-fourth year.

She was born May 20, 1826, in Darlington county.

Her father died a few months later, and her widowed mother, with some difficulty, reared and educated her five children. The two older ones were sent to college, and Mrs. Dabbs received a good education in the best schools of that day. Endowed with a strong natural intellect, wonderful energy, and a gift for controlling her pupils, she became a successful teacher.

From her earliest youth, she showed great decision of character, firmness of purpose, and integrity of principle.

To her many natural excellencies were added the refining and finishing touches of grace.

She joined the Presbyterian Church in Darlington and became a most active earnest, praying Christian. For eleven years a member of Wedgefield and twenty-five years of Salem Black River, she gave to her churches and to her pastors a loyal devotion, second only to her Savior.

She seemed to long after saving others and often sought out individuals and urged upon them the importance of making peace with God.

Her Savior was "not a mental concept," but a living reality—a personal Friend and Savior.

Her faith was always strong and clear—supporting her under the trials of poverty and widowhood.

Her generosity was overflowing all the time. According to her ability, and many times beyond it, she would share her blessings with others less fortunate.

Her humility was deep and unfeigned—her submission to the divine will was uncomplaining.

Her sense of justice was keen, and she was always brave in defending the right and fearless in denouncing the wrong.

April 2, 1862, she married J. Quincy Dabbs and was the mother of two sons. Her husband died in 1880; her second son in 1885; her aged mother in 1887; so that she was left alone with her oldest son, Eugene W., until he married, in 1893, Miss Maud McBride, a noble Christian lady. In their home, Mrs. Dabbs enjoyed "a green old age." Not a care—not an anxious thought. The grand-children grew up around her and her happiness was complete.

So the years rolled on and when a second daughter-in-law came to offer loving service, she grew more and more peaceful. In the ministries of these dear daughters, Mrs. Dabbs seemed to be reaping the harvest of her own sowing—loving deeds done for others, without hope of reward.

Her heart went out in love to all the world. She said to her son, in her last illness, "Give my love to everybody. Love! Love! It is all I have to give. Do not make any fuss over me. I am just a poor sinner saved by Grace."

Such characters as hers are like beacon-lights along the shores of time. They teach the exceeding value of generosity, honesty and self-forgetting. They point upward to a world that is so far above this in all that is pure and beautiful and attractive.

(Miss) E. W. Bearley.
Daughter of Her First Pastor and Life-Long Friend.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Julia E. Woodcock.

Mrs. Julia E. Woodcock died March 10 at her residence, 199 Montford avenue, Asheville, N. C., in the eightieth year of her age, after an illness of more than a month, the latter week of which she was mostly unconscious. She was loved and respected by all who knew her.

She was actuated by sincerity and loyalty in all things. She was a consistent member of the Presbyterian church from early girlhood.

She left three sons and a step-son, whom she often told that she cared as much for as any of the other boys. Her long talks and precepts will always be remembered and cherished.

This is written by a step-son in fulfillment of a promise made to her years ago and several times referred to in our talks. She often requested that she might read it before passing to the other side of life. This I never did, as it seemed too unfeeling to me.

Although the writer is only a step-son, according to man's laws, yet, after fifty years, having learned to love her and admire her as he did, he feels that according to God's laws, he is a full-fledged son.

Children's Department

KITTEN HAS DOUBLE NAME.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl four years old. I will be five, though, the 17th of next month (August). I have a little brother three and a little sister one year old. We all love to attend Sunday School. We go to South River Presbyterian Church.

I wrote you a letter all by myself but mother said perhaps it would be best for her to help me write this one. I hope this won't be sent to the waste basket, as I want to surprise my Daddy. My uncle and auntie gave me a kitten and I have named it for both of them.

Your little friend,
Rachel Beatty Herring.
Tomahawk, N. C., July 28, 1919.

A LITTLE WESTERN VISITOR.

Dear Standard;

I am a little girl ten years old. My home is in Urbana, Ill., but I am visiting my grandmother, who lives five miles from Chapel Hill, N. C. We have a large farm and our cousins live near enough to come out and see us sometime. I have two little sisters, one two and one eight years old. I hope my letter will not reach the waste basket, for I wish to surprise my mother.

Your little friend,

Agnes Johnston.

Greenhill Farm, N. C.

SUN FLOWER CHEER.

Dear Standard:

I am going to write you a letter and tell you how I enjoy reading your nice paper, especially the letters and stories. The Standard always gets a welcome smile from me when it arrives.

I have some chickens and a pig. I like to feed my pig. We have the sweetest little baby boy in our home. His name is Ernest Woodrow Howey. I forgot to tell you, but I have a bed of Japanese sun flowers in the front yard. They are beautiful. There is a lady who is very delicate, and is not able to work any flowers, living close to us, so I broke the first sun flower that opened and took it to her and it made her so happy. I will close, hoping that my letter will not reach the waste basket. Your unknown friend,

Joe Berkley Howey.

Osceola, S. C.

HER FIRST LETTER.

Dear Standard:

I am going to write to you for the first time. My father takes your paper and I like it fine. My school was out April 11th, and I was promoted to the eighth grade and received my seventh grade certificate. I am 13 years old. Rev. J. A. Caligan is our pastor. I go to Barbecue Church.

Hoping this will be printed, I will close. Best wishes for the Standard.

A true friend, Vera Cameron.

Jonesboro, N. C.

SUMMER BOARDERS.

The red-headed gardener looked slowly at the black-headed gardener.

"Perhaps if we call her out now and let her see how nice everything looks, she might let?"

He stopped for the black-headed gardener was already halfway across the lawn.

"Mother, Mother," he shouted, "we want you to come out."

"Just as soon as I get my hands out of this dough," called back a cheery voice.

"She's coming," said Mark, walking back to his brother who was still standing where he had left him. A moment later their mother ran briskly across the lawn. She glanced first at merry, black-eyed Mark, then at grave Stuart, then away to the tall golden glow neatly tied up, then at the long, weeded flower beds and the smooth lawn.

"There aren't such steady hired men in town," she declared. "I presume Lawyer Hopkins, Judge Peters and Banker Stevens will all grow pale with envy, when they go by our yard. Free admittance to the cooky jar all day."

"Thank you, Mother," said Stuart, politely, "don't you think we ought to have a croquet set right here?"

"I've thought a good deal about that croquet set," said she, regretfully, "and I can't see the way clear at all. You know Baby was sick so long that we had to spend all our good-time money. I am afraid you had better forget all about it till next summer." She drew the tall ten-year-old twins to her and softened her refusal with a kiss. "Baby's crying, I'll have to fly," she said, and away she ran.

"Let's go fishing," said Mark.

"Too hot," said Stuart, throwing himself on the grass. There was a joyous bark and Bonnie, the big collie from the next house, bounded over the hedge and began to tell the boys how much he thought of them.

"Wish we had a dog," said Mark, shaking Bonnie's paw for the tenth time.

"We can't have anything," said Stuart, bitterly.

Mrs. Fuller, who had been picking sweet peas on the other side of the hedge, and who had listened to the talk of her small neighbors, gave her head a little shake and smiled and leaned over the hedge. "Good morning, boys," she said, pleasantly.

"Good morning, Mrs. Fuller," said the twins, picking themselves up from Bonnie's rough and tumble play and standing erect.

"I am looking for a boarding place for Bonnie when we go away next week, and I thought perhaps you boys would take care of him for me. I will give you fifty cents a week."

"Oh, Mrs. Fuller," said Mark, "we'll take care of him for nothing."

"No, no," said Mrs. Fuller, "you know you will have to feed him and take him for walks and wash him in the pond. No, no, if he comes, he must come as a paying guest."

The boys' eyes shone. "We'll keep him if Mother lets us," they said together.

There was a moment of silence in the house, then there was a great shout and the twins appeared beaming. "She'll let us," they cried.

"Woof, woof," barked Bonnie, gladly.

The next two weeks were very happy ones. "Bonnie is a four-footed gentleman," said Mother, as she watched the baby clutch his long hair.

"Mother," said Stuart, "can't we board another dog?"

"If you can find another as good," she answered, comfortably.

After dinner Stuart and Mark found their way to the barn where they worked busily. "You have to advertise if you want business," said Stuart, wisely, "and we'll put this on the side fence. None of the family will be apt to see it." He held up a pine board on which the boys had painted in red and yellow letters:

DOG BOARDERS WANTED

50c @ week,

Stuart

& Hill.

Mark

"That will bring them, I guess," said Mark, looking at the sign when it had been placed on the side fence.

That evening Hugh Peters appeared with a sleepy-looking Boston terrier and a silver dollar, which he presented together. "We are going to Old Orchard for two weeks, and Mother said I'd have to leave Puck behind, and I saw your—"

"Mother," broke in Mark, "we can keep Puck, can't we? He's a real nice dog."

Mrs. Hill hesitated. Mark squeezed her fingers coaxingly, and Puck thumped his tail blandly on the floor and she gave in with, "I suppose so," and Hugh departed leaving Puck whimpering in the kitchen. Early the next morning while the boys were feeding the hens he disappeared, and the boys hunted high and low. Mark ran to the big Peters' mansion in the hope that Puck might have run home. But there was no Puck at the deserted house and he came back sadly. Stuart searched through all the back yards on the streets until a cross old lady asked him if he was after her apples. Then he, too, ran home.

"What will Hugh say?" he asked Mark.

"Maybe old Judge Peters will put us in prison, and anyway we'll have to give back the board money," said Mark, gloomily.

"Boys, boys," called Mother. Something in her tone gave the twins new courage, and they flew upstairs where Puck was safely cuddled in the bed of "the best room," his wrinkled brown face resting comfortably on the ruffled pillow. He grunted as the boys carried him downstairs. After that when the lazy fellow disappeared, they looked in the bedrooms first, and there they would find him cuddled in a fat, sleepy little ball. The twins were rather relieved when Hugh came after him and took him home.

For the next two or three days there were no new boarders.

"I don't believe there'll be any more," said Mark, "and we have enough money for the croquet set. Let's take the sign down."

"By and by," answered Stuart, thrusting his freckled little face still closer to the fascinating library book.

"Look here," whispered Mark. Mother and a very thin, tall young lady and the tiniest of white poodles were coming across the grass.

(Continued on Page 21)

Story and Incident.

(Continued from Page 17)

visit the junior department and see how you are progressing. Au revoir."

* * * * *

"Phoebe Barnes, which argument convinced you?" demanded Edith Howe when she had watched forty happy-faced boys and girls march from the junior room. "Not a word shall you hear about Florida until you confess."

"I wasted precious time in preparing those arguments I rehearsed to you," laughed Phoebe. "They were too commonplace for Mr. Taylor to consider. 'Miss Barnes,' he began in that wonderful voice of his, 'I have come to offer you an opportunity for joyful service that is given to few women. All honor to the superintendents of the beginner's and primary departments but their burden is light compared to that I am asking you to assume. Little children are adorable but those wiggling juniors!—'they make me so nervous.'" Ah, but the juniors are interesting to one who understands them—so ready to work, so eager to serve. If we can keep them close to the heart of the Sunday school and bring them into the church when about 12 years of age the chances are we shall never lose them. And it is so easy to accomplish results for one who understands the secret. We have recently lost a boy from this department who could have been held with bands of iron by a junior choir. We need Ben's voice, his enthusiasm now and in the years to come. The sixth grade children remain in your charge only a year, the juniors three years—yours to love with a Christian mother's love, to counsel with a Christian mother's wisdom for less than one-third of those children come from homes where the Master is honored. In future years of usefulness they will rise up and call you blessed. Moreover if you should leave your position in our public schools for a more desirable one an able teacher would be found to take your place without doubt. But God Himself, I think, has chosen you to be a leader in our Sunday school and has no substitute ready at present."

"And, Edith, before I could form a reply Mr. Taylor had unwrapped a package of elementary books and magazines and five minutes later we were deep in the discussion of the best method of teaching songs of worship. I suppose it was the mother talk that did it—the thought that so many of those children need me to supplement their home life."

"But doesn't your school work suffer?"

"Forgive me for boasting, my dear, but at the teachers' meeting Thursday night Superintendent Crowley spoke of the remarkable work of the Linden Street sixth grade during the past three months. I wonder what he would say if he knew I garnered three of my 'unique plans' from a Sunday school magazine."

THE MINISTER'S DAUGHTER.

The Sewing Circle was busy in Aunt Martha's sunny morning room—busy with flying fingers on fancywork for the coming fair, and busy also with tongues.

"I suppose the new minister's family will be here for the fair," remarked Dell Denton, straightening her hemstitching over her finger. "There's a girl about our age, you know. I wonder if she will want to take a table or something."

"Dear me!" Emily sighed. "It's going to be pretty hard to see her in Eleanor's place. There never could be another minister's daughter like her."

Alice pricked up her ears combatively. "She'll never be in Eleanor's place—she needn't expect it. Of course we'll be pleasant to her, but it will never be the same."

"She has been away to school," contributed Maud Aldrich. "Probably she feels very superior and grown-up."

"Oh, dear!" groaned Polly. "I can't bear superior girls—I mean girls that feel so. I did hope she'd be nice, but, of course, if she's that kind—"

Maud relented a little. "I didn't say she is; I only said probably. Shall we invite her to join the Circle?"

There was a dismayed silence before Emily said: "Of course we'll have to, and into everything else. She'll expect it—the minister's daughter."

Just why Aunt Martha's return from an excursion after tea and crackers should have turned the conversation so suddenly no one stopped to reflect, but it certainly had that effect, and they would have been less comfortable if they had known that an open window had carried it all to her quite distinctly.

"Miss Martha," asked Alice, when they were settled again, "I am going to take up my geraniums for the winter tomorrow. Will you please tell me where I ought to put them, and how to fix the soil?"

Miss Martha stirred her tea, keeping her eyes upon the spoon.

"Well," she said gravely, "I think I should fill the pots with as poor soil as I could get—dry and hard—and a good many stones; then I should transplant my geraniums into it and set them in a dark place where there is as little sunshine as possible. I wouldn't water them much, either—only enough not to neglect them altogether; and then I should stand out one side and see what they would do."

"Why, Miss Martha!" Alice's voice was full of surprise. "You don't mean all that—you are making fun of me!"

"No," said Aunt Martha, "I'm not making fun. Don't you think that would be a good way to make geraniums blossom and do their best? I had very beautiful ones last year. I did not treat them that way, to be sure, but of course I could not expect these new ones to do as well anyway, so what is the use?"

Some of the girls began to look at each other consciously, but Alice was still in the dark.

"You don't mean it," she repeated.

"But I don't know yet, what you do mean."

Aunt Martha looked into the perplexed face with a quiet smile. "Why, isn't that the way you girls are planning to treat the minister's daughter? She is going to be transplanted from a place where people love her, and set down here among strangers, and you have quite decided to give her as little friendly sunshine as you respectably can. Instead of preparing a nice welcoming place for her, where she can feel at home as soon as possible, you are thinking grudgingly how small a space you can push her into. You all showered love on Eleanor, and she deserved it, but this girl, who may be every bit as lovely, you are going to be 'pleasant' to. If you think geraniums would not grow and blossom in poor soil, with no sunshine, how can you expect a poor little homesick, transplanted girl to be her best in the sort of welcome you are getting ready for her?"

Polly was the first to find her voice. "Oh, Miss Martha, you make us sound so—so wicked! We never thought about her side of it, did we, girls?"

"We won't, oh, we won't!" echoed Emily. "We'll take her right in and—shine on her."

"Suppose those girls where Eleanor has gone should treat her that way!" cried Maud in conscience-stricken tones. "We will be good to the new one, Miss Martha."

Miss Martha's face lighted up with smiles. "I knew you would," she said, "as soon as you realized what it would mean not to."

Ten days later the minister's daughter, packing her trunk to go to her new home, brushed away a few tears that wanted to fall among the piles of linen.

"I mustn't be foolish," she said. "It's hard to leave my friends here, but it isn't as if I wasn't going to find friends there, too. Such dear girls they must be, to send me that sweet letter before they had ever seen me!"

Alice's geraniums were a delight to all beholders. But not a blossom on them was half as lovely as the friendship that blossomed between the Sewing Circle girls, and the minister's daughter.—Mrs. M. M. Thornton in What To Do.

SUMMER BOARDERS.

(Concluded from page 19)

"A new boarder boys," said Mother, and did her eyes twinkle a little?

"We've decided we won't take any more boarders, Mother," said Stuart, hastily.

"You must stick to what you advertise," said Mother firmly.

"Beppo will have to be washed every morning and taken for a long run, and you must only give him his puppy biscuit to eat," said the young lady.

"A bargain's a bargain," said Mother, "especially when you advertise."

A roguish dimple appeared in her cheeks as she looked at the thin young woman, the small poodle and the very sober twins. All at once Stuart looked very businesslike.

"You said Beppo had to be washed every day?"

"Every day," said the young woman.

"And dried?" said Stuart.

"With a clean towel," said the girl.

"I see," said Stuart, graciously, "and given long walks?"

"At least a mile, and you must take him on his leash," said she.

"And what about his food?" continued the boy.

"I'll bring over his puppy biscuit," she promised.

Stuart stood up very straight and shook his skinny little hand in the air. "Our price for regular boarders is fifty cents a week, but that is for dogs who can wash themselves in the pond and don't have to be led and who eat the things we do. I should have to charge Beppo a dollar a week."

"Well," said the thin, tall young lady, and she counted out two silver dollars, "you may keep him two weeks."

After she had gone Stuart and Mark started for the side fence and tore down the red and yellow sign. Mother watched them as they thrust it in the kitchen stove. "Next time I hope you will be more open and straightforward," she said, gravely.

They both nodded. "But next year, if you'll let us, we'll have regular boarders, one at a time," said Mark, "Puck Peters and Bonnie Fuller and Prince Day and"—

"Perhaps so," said Mother.

"And, Mother," said Mark, "you're to spend Beppo's board money for rose bushes."

"Aren't we the best hired men in town?" they demanded, as they gave her a bear's hug and three kisses.

"Go and give Beppo his bath," commanded Mother, patting the red-headed and black-headed gardeners tenderly.—Mary Davis, in-Congregationalist.

"I had ammonia last winter," said Tommy.

"You mean pneumonia," corrected Willie. "Ammonia comes in bottles; pneumonia comes in chests."—Boston Evening Transcript.

THE OUTSHINING LIGHT.

A mother came to a mission school in Japan bringing her two daughters. She wished them to be entered as pupils. The principal asked the usual questions and received the usual replies until she came to the query, "What do you expect us to do for your girls?" To this the woman answered: "I live in this city and have often watched the faces of your pupils. They seem to shine more than my children's do. I want you to put some of that same polish on the faces of my girls." It was her way of saying that she recognized that the teaching in that Christian school had an effect on the hearts of the pupils that worked its way to the surface through their countenances.

A young woman who recently applied at the Mission Rooms in New York for appointment to foreign work as a nurse was asked how she was led to abandon the teaching profession for that of nursing. She said that on one occasion she had set out to select from various illustrated publications the portraits of young women in order to arrange them for a poster design. Among so many faces of young women in many walks of life were several of trained nurses, and in these countenances she had noticed a look of satisfaction and happiness which did not characterize any other class. So strongly was she impressed by this distinction that she was led to give up the profession of teaching, for which she had been carefully prepared and in which she had attained success. She resigned, entered a hospital, was graduated, and having given a year to her country with the army overseas, had returned to offer herself for foreign mission work among the Chinese. Another instance of the influence of a countenance.

One of Stephen Graham's books is devoted to "the quest of a face." His idea is that the human features of the the Saviour must reproduce themselves in the countenances of those who seek to reproduce His character in their own lives. So he studies many individual Christians in the endeavor to select from their myriad faces the blessed lineaments of our Lord. The idea will seem to many far-drawn and fantastic, but it is not to be too lightly dismissed. "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he," and as he is so he looks. The Japanese mother seeking to gain for her own precious daughters the "polish" she saw in the faces of those whose features were beginning to express the inward joy and peace of the Christian faith—is she not unconsciously testifying that genuine Christianity shows on the surface? And if there is anything in the curious incident narrated by the nurse it points in the same direction. The Chinese who spoke of Bishop Bashford as "the man of the shining countenance" did not know what others knew, that the source of that radiance was the Light of the World.—New York Advocate.

FOOT COMFORT ASSURED

Brooklyn Man Solves the Problem.

It is no longer necessary to suffer agonies that are caused by misfit shoes, for Mr. Simon of Brooklyn has proven that he can fit perfectly by mail, Simon's EzWear shoes are built to give every possible foot comfort; they are soft and stylish and do not need breaking in. They fit like the proverbial pair, the minute you wear them. Every pair is guaranteed to give satisfaction and to fit perfectly.

Mr. J. R. Simon will gladly send a free catalogue of over 500 styles of EzWear shoes to all who write him, along with his scientific self-measuring blank. Write for your copy today and give your feet their much needed happiness. Address all communications to Mr. J. R. Simon, 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., and you will receive personal attention.

Tommy (to German prisoner): Put your hands up, man! I don't want to have to dig the grave of a chap of your size.—London Opinion.

In Your Cotton Alleys

Clover--

Vetch---

Alfalfa--

Inoculate the Seed With

NITRA-GERM

and be Sure of a Good Stand

It enables you to grow these crops where you failed before. Improves your crop and land. Costs $2.00 per acre delivered. Write for FREE book No. 6-G Address Nitra-Germ, Savannah, Ga.

With Oats and Rye

Makes very best feed. Will double your yield and build your soil. Vetch stubble turned under is equal to 700 lbs. of good grade fertilizer per acre.

The Best Paying Crop

4 or 5 crops per year without cultivation. Grows several years without re-seeding. Wonderful land builder.

GETTING RID OF EASY MONEY.

One answer to the high cost of living problem is that people are holding their money too cheaply. Thousands of Americans who never were more than a dozen paces from the breadline are today owners of Liberty Bonds or some other form of securities and they have never learned the lessons which Ben Franklin sought to teach a growing nation. Some of the people are spending their Liberty Bonds. Their savings in these securities represent money that came comparatively easy, that is to say, the holdings were accumulated in small weekly or monthly payments—money that was hardly missed from the pay envelope.

The people are spending as furiously as they fought and worked in war times. They are on a spending "jag," so to speak, not only in this country where the fruits of victory seem to make spending a necessary part of the peace program, but in the rest of the world, not even omitting the countries of the Entente. The money of the times is apparently very cheap, it seems to come easily and to go easily, but this condition can't last indefinitely.

When spenders are free and easy, prices go up with equal ease. Those who hold their "easy" money too cheaply make hard buying for those who must part sparingly with their limited funds and, by the same token, those who demand luxuries without accounting the cost may expect to pay more for necessities. The trouble is not so much the high cost of living but the cost of high living.

Some one remarked very sagely that if all the wealth of the rich were equally distributed among those who have little or nothing, the rich would soon have it back again and the other class would be in the same position as before the division was made. This is the natural consequence because the rich, or the great proportion of that class, learned to accumulate wealth by habits of savings and would no doubt recognize the necessity of saving more quickly than the class that had never been accustomed to it.

"There is one lesson that we all need to learn, and that is that we shall save nothing from the wreck of life but the deeds and gifts of love which we have given unto Christ."—Bishop Whipple.

The world looks not at your faith, but at the kind of life your faith causes you to live.

GROVE INSTITUTE

(Formerly James Sprunt Institute)

KENANSVILLE : NORTH CAROLINA

A Preparatory School for Girls. High Grade, Thoroughly Christian. Very Moderate Cost. Students receive Close, Personal Attention in a Home-Like Atmosphere. NEXT SESSION BEGINS SEPTEMBER 10th.

For Catalog and Particulars, address REV. W. F. HOLLINGSWORTH, Pres.

Chicora College for Women

THE PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE OF SOUTH CAROLINA

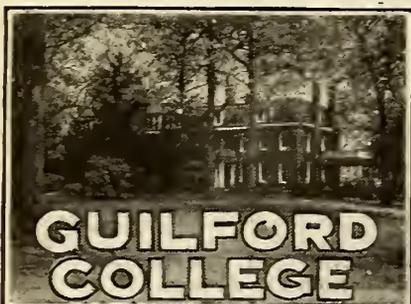

A Standard College of Distinction and Character

Religion and Philosophy
Home Economics

Letters and Science
The Fine Arts
(Music, Art and Expression)

For Catalogue and Information, address

Pres. S. C. BYRD, D.D., Columbia, S. C.

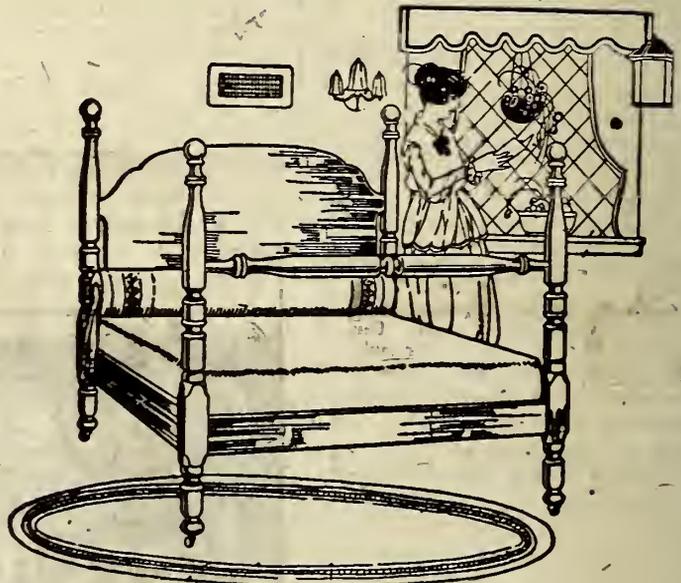

GUILFORD COLLEGE

GUILFORD COLLEGE, N. C.

A coeducational College of the highest type. High standards in scholarship and morals. Christian environment. Confers B. A., and B. S. degrees. Excellent musical training. Domestic Science. Strong Preparatory Department. Able Faculty. Fine Athletic Record. Ten Modern and Completely Equipped Buildings. Large Campus. Healthful Climate. Pure Water. Rates Reasonable. For Catalogue or further information, write

THE PRESIDENT

The Kind of Furniture Our Forefathers Had

Those magnificent solid mahogany "Post Colonial" bed-room suits that we are showing will be priceless treasures when handed down to the succeeding generations. Let us show you some real furniture.

W. T. McCoy & Co.
Charlotte, N. C.

THE HOME OF GOOD FURNITURE

LABRADOR ESKIMO ALMOST WIPED OUT.

There will be genuine grief over the announcement that the Labrador Eskimo has been in some places almost completely wiped out of existence. Reports from Moravian missionaries just received give details of a terrible influenza epidemic which swept over that part of the world destroying entire settlements. At Hebron, for instance, all of the 100 Eskimos were ill, and in a single week eighty-six died, leaving only eight children, five women, and one man. At Cartwright, out of a population of some seventy persons, barely a half-dozen were able to be about. At Paradise only three men had strength enough to move around. One of the most tragic phases of the situation was the inability of the people to take care of their dead. Bishop Martin, who sends in the report, says that the bodies were carried on the ice by sleds and buried at sea in order to protect them from the dogs. The colonial secretary of Newfoundland, who has given this report of the missionaries to the public, says that this is "another step nearer the end of the Labrador Eskimo."—Zion's Herald.

HOSIERY—Darnproof; 12 pairs gents' or ladies', assorted, intense black, guaranteed, $1.50, parcel post, to introduce our high-grade hosiery.
Dixie Hosiery Mills, Kernersville. N. C.

The McCALLIESCHOOL
A HOME SCHOOL FOR BOYS
Able men train boys for college. Individual attention. 1,000 feet elevation. Big athletic field. All sports. Swimming. Boating. Military drill. Honor System. Boys live in Masters' homes, under their personal guidance. Address
Headmasters: S. J. & J. P. McCallie
Missionary Ridge, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Cancer Treated Successfully at the Kellam Hospital

The record of Kellam Hospital is without parallel in history, having restored, without the use of the Knife, Acids, X-Ray or Radium, over ninety per cent. of the many hundreds of sufferers from cancer which it has treated during the past twenty-two years. We want every man and woman in the United States to know what we are doing.

KELLAM HOSPITAL, 1617 W. Main St., Richmond, Va.

Individual Cups

Every church should use. Clean and sanitary. Send for catalog and special offer. Trial free.

Thomas Communion Service Co., Box 310 Lima, Ohio

Aberdeen & Rockfish Railroad

Between Aberdeen and Fayetteville

Eastbound		Westbound
Daily Ex. Sunday	Mixed Pass.	Daily Ex. Sunday	Mixed Pass.
STATIONS		STATIONS
No. 22	No. 38	No. 41	No. 21
7 30 am	9 10 am	Lv. Aberdeen Ar.	6 41 pm
8 35 am	10 00 am	Rae ford	5 55 pm
12 10 pm	4 00 pm	Ar. Fayetteville Lv.	4 50 pm
			1 00 pm

WAGRAM BRANCH

Southbound		Northbound
Daily Ex. Sun.	Mixed	Daily Ex. Sun.	Mixed
STATIONS		STATIONS
No. 11		No. 12
Lv. 10 30 am	Rae ford	Ar. 12 40 pm
Ar. 11 15 am	Wagram	Lv. 12 00 noon

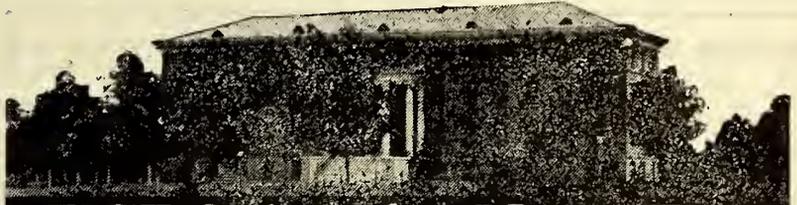

W. A. BLUE, General Supt.,
Aberdeen, N. C.

NORTH CAROLINA COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

Offers thorough instruction and excellent advantages in the training of young women for the mastery of courses fitting themselves to become self-supporting. There are courses leading to the degrees of Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science and Bachelor of Music. Total number registered last year, 1299. Free tuition to those students who agree to teach in the schools of North Carolina after leaving the college. Excellent equipment. expenses moderate. For catalogue and other information, address J. I. FOUST, President, Greensboro, N. C.

BLACKSTONE MILITARY ACADEMY

Safeguards the morals and develops the physique, culture, refinement, education and gentlemanly bearing of your boy. A thoroughly capable school based on honest principles and experience in the study of boy life. Thorough Academic, Preparatory and Commercial Courses. Excellently equipped modern buildings. Gymnasium, Infirmary and 40 new rooms now under construction. Two U. S. Army officers in charge of R. O. T. C. Trained nurse in charge of Infirmary. For literature, write,
COL. E. S. LIGON, President, Blackstone Military Academy, Box R, Blackstone, Va.

THE School for Your Boy

Nothing is so effective in the training of the youth—in guarding his morals, his physique—as a military training. All young men should begin with a military training. The training of is conducive of culture, refinement, thorough literary foundation and a gentlemanly bearing. Thorough academic, preparatory and commercial courses. Excellently equipped modern buildings. Gymnasium, Infirmary and 40 new rooms now under construction. Two U. S. Army officers in charge of the R. O. T. C. Trained nurse in charge of Infirmary. For literature, write,

BLACKSTONE MILITARY ACADEMY

COL. E. S. LIGON, President, Blackstone Military Academy, Box R, Blackstone, Va.

COLUMBIA COLLEGE

COLUMBIA, S. C.

A College for Women ranked in Class "A" by Board of Education, M. E. Church, South. Recognized for its high type of Christian culture.

Unusually complete educational facilities, strong university-trained faculty, thorough equipment, ideal location.

Handsome fire-proof buildings, elegantly fitted with every convenience for health, comfort and safety. Beautiful 20-acre campus, affording ample opportunity for outdoor games.

Library of upwards of 5,000 volumes in large, well-lighted quarters. Fine collection of magazines. Thorough courses leading to degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science.

Conservatory of Music under direction of skilled instructors.

Thorough courses in Art, Expression, Business, and Home Economics.

1919 session begins September 17th. For descriptive catalogue, address

G. T. PUGH, Ph. D., President, Columbia, S. C.

MEDICAL COLLEGE OF THE STATE OF
SOUTH CAROLINA

Schools of Medicine and Pharmacy
Owned and Controlled by the State

RATED IN CLASS "A" by the American Medical Association. Registered by the New York State Board of Regents; member of the Association of American Medical Colleges. Member of the American Conference of Pharmaceutical Faculties.

New Building With Well Equipped Laboratories. A full corps of efficient all-time teachers. Located opposite the Roper Hospital and very near the Charleston Museum, thus affording the students more extensive opportunities for research and training.

Requirements For Admission to the Medical School are certificate from a four-year high school which requires not less than 14 units for graduation, and two years of college work. The college work must include physics, biology, chemistry.

Women Admitted on the same terms as men. Session opens Sept. 26, 1919. For Catalogue, address.

H. GRADY CALLISON, Registrar
Charleston, S. C.

CUPID VERSUS MARS.

It would seem as if some, at least, of the American soldiers are finding it easier to love their enemies than they imagined when they set sail for France with fire in their eyes and revenge in their hearts. The American military authorities at Coblenz have received from one hundred and forty American soldiers and officers applications for permission to marry German girls. One German girl recently applied for the permission, saying the officer concerned was too useful to be excused to ask for permission. The total of 140 is expected to be swelled materially as soon as the anti-fraternization military rule is taken off and assurance is given that evidence of the violation of the anti-fraternization law will not work retroactively. While, ever since the arrival of the Americans it has been against the military rule to associate with German girls, it has been known all along that the rule was being broken, but it was realized that a strict enforcement of it, especially in cases where Americans were billeted in German homes, was impossible. The military authorities have taken no action on these applications, which, to tell the truth, have been made under the belief that the anti-fraternization rule had stopped functioning. No action is probable against the men or officers who are serious, and it is considered most likely that arrangements will be made by which they can marry German girls when the peace status has been definitely established. The rank of those who wish to marry German girls ranges from private to Major.—Presbyterian Witness.

A COLLEGE THAT IS BETTER THAN ITS CATALOG
GREENVILLE WOMANS COLLEGE

GREENVILLE, S. C.
1854—1919

COURSES:—Standard courses, requiring 14 units entrance, and 64 hours work for B.A. and B.S. degrees; degree M.A. conferred. Actual practice teaching under supervision required in Education for all. Courses in Kindergarten Normal Training Department, Commercial Department, Domestic Science; Conservatory of Music; piano, voice, organ, violin, other stringed and brass instruments, theory, public school music, sight-singing, Glee Club, choral work; degree B. Mus. awarded. Diplomas in Expression, Art, Physical Culture.

EQUIPMENT:—Modern classrooms, laboratories, domestic science equipment. Handsome library, reading rooms, literary society halls. Beautiful halls and parlors, given over to student activities. Complete and modern dormitories; all rooms furnished with single beds, mission furniture, running water. Large attractive dining-room; other culinary departments complete in appointments.

HEALTH:—Of prime consideration; physician, nurse, athletic director in charge, physical culture compulsory; wide campus, athletic fields, large swimming pool. Pure bracing mountain air. Perfect climate the year-around.

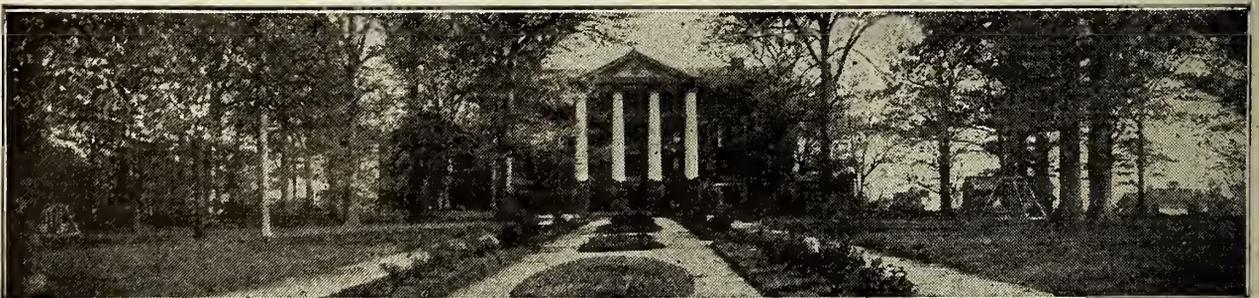

MANAGEMENT:—One of the strongest student government organizations ever worked out; Administration, Dean, and faculty in close personal supervision, Democratic atmosphere, happy social and home life.

Accessory Advantages:—In the great City of the Piedmont, the best lecturers, musicians, etc., under various auspices appear before students. Greenville is center of meetings of various organizations, bring talent from all parts of United States.

A Christian College; in precept and example instills a deep religious consciousness. In addition to the required Bible Study, there were during the past session classes in mission study and Christian Culture, enrolling all the students; Sunday School Pedagogy required of all. Social service work.

Correspondence invited; for catalog and information, address

President DAVID M. RAMSAY, D. D., Greenville, S. C., or ROSA PASCHAL, Dean.

PEACE INSTITUTE, Raleigh, N. C.

For Young Women - - - Established 1857

- I College Courses.
 - II Courses preparatory to Standard Colleges.
 - III Four years Preparatory School.
- Special diplomas awarded in Piano, Voice, Art, Expression and Home Economics. Secretarial and Commercial Courses.

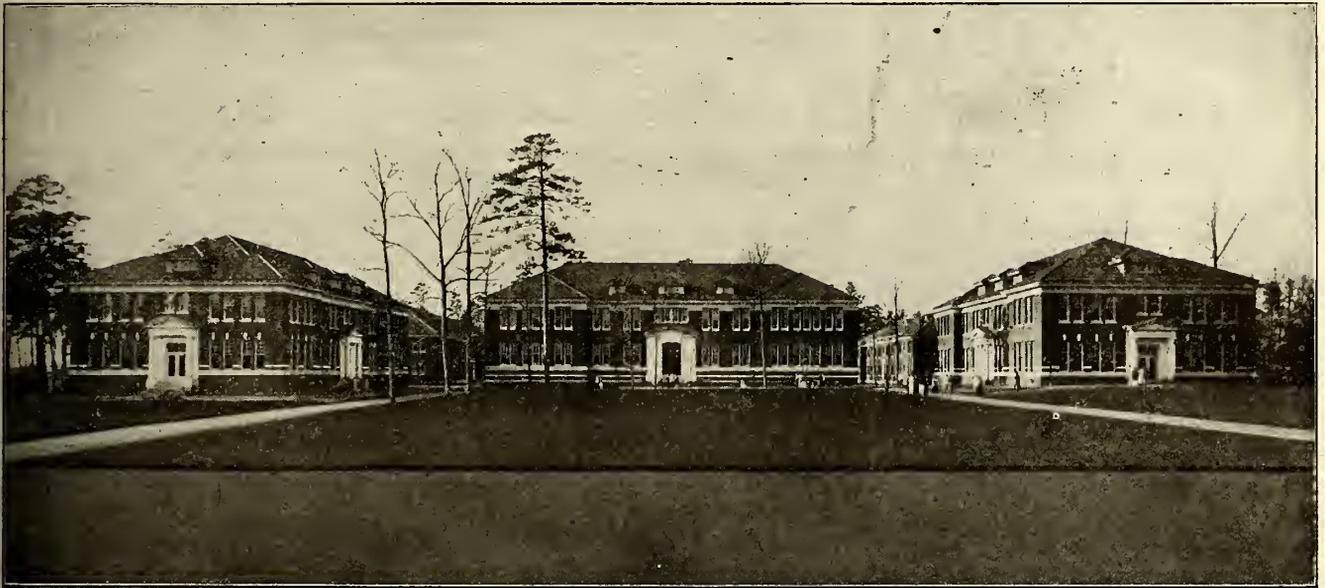

LULA B. WYNNE HALL,
Home School for Girls

Situation: Location in capital city gives special opportunities. Delightful social advantages. Climate permits out-door life all Winter. Athletics: Supervised indoors and outdoors by Athletic Director. Special attention individual development. Cheerful home-like surroundings. A good school that students really enjoy attending. For room reservation, catalogue or further information, write at once to

Miss Mary Owen Graham, Pres.

Queens College for Women

Charlotte, North Carolina

Established More Than Sixty Years Ago as "Charlotte Female Institute"

It is Now Recognized as the Best Equipped College for Women in the Entire South

We have five new two-story brick buildings with modern fire extinguishers, designed and erected solely for convenience, comfort, efficiency and safety. These buildings are located in the beautiful suburb of Myers Park, three and one-half miles from the center of the city.

We have a splendid wooded campus of 25 acres.

15 units required for entrance. Graduates from recognized State High Schools admitted on certificate.

This College is built on a firm belief in the inspiration of the Bible. Thorough Bible courses provided.

Standard college course leading to B. A. degree. Most complete equipment for thorough education.

Physical, Chemical and Biological Laboratories; Library, Gymnasium, Preparatory department. Able faculty. Dormitories divided into units of two rooms and connecting with bath, accommodating four students. Large, well-ventilated rooms, big closets. Buildings as near fire-proof as possible. Water, gas, electricity. Convenient street car service.

School of Music, Expression and Art offers superior opportunities. Music building has twenty-six rooms equipped exclusively for this department. Complete, thorough course leading to diploma. Post graduate course in music offered.

Our Motto: "Christian Women for Christian Homes"

Necessary expenses very moderate, about $325.00 for the regular literary course, including board. FALL TERM begins September 10, 1919.

For further information send for catalogue or write

WM. ANDERSON, Registrar, Box 300, Charlotte, N. C.

SIGN YOUR NAME HERE.

If you suffer with any curable disease that does not seem to be benefited by drugs; such as dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, neuralgia, rheumatism, liver or kidney diseases, or any ailment involving impure blood, you are cordially invited to accept the liberal offer made below. It is a mistake to assume that your case is incurable simply because remedies prepared by human skill have not seemed to benefit you. Put your faith in Nature, accept this offer and you will never have cause to regret it.

I believe this is the most wonderful Mineral Spring that has ever been discovered, for its waters have either restored or benefited tens of thousands who have accepted my offer. Match your faith in this Spring against my pocketbook, and if the water does not relieve your case I will make no charge for it. Clip this notice, sign your name, enclose the amount and let this wonderful water begin its restorative work in you as it has in thousands of others. Shivar Spring,

Box 4-A, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

Name
 Address
 Shipping Point

The mole that burrows in the ground has not much of an opinion of the sun.

"In the A. E. F. With an Artist"

The sketch book and diary of Lieut. J. B. Mallard. Send $1.00 for your copy to

J. B. MALLARD

Box 625

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The Cumberland General Hospital, of Fayetteville

N. C., offers to young ladies between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five the following courses of training for nurses: Three years practical and theoretical work which prepares for State Board Examinations. Fall classes being formed now. Apply at once to Supt. of Nurses.

MARY BALDWIN SEMINARY For Young Ladies

Established 1842. Term begins Sept. 12th. In the beautiful and historic Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. Unsurpassed climate, modern equipment. Students from 31 states. Courses: Collegiate, 3 years; Preparatory, 4 years. Music, Art and Domestic Science. Catalog. STAUNTON, VIRGINIA

EXPERT KODAK FINISHING

Developing and printing done by artists. Most beautiful work guaranteed at all times. Satisfaction or no charge. Developing, 10c. per film. Printing: 2 1/4 x 3 1/4, 3c.; 2 1/4 x 4 1/4, 4c.; 3 1/4 x 5 1/2, 5c. Quick delivery. Send one film to test our service.

Ligon Drug Co., Spartanburg, S. C.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE of South Carolina

One of the most modern and best equipped colleges for men under the control of the Presbyterian Church. Beautiful buildings, strong faculty, high standard of work, broad course, attractive student body, best moral influences, Reserve Officers' Training Corps and strong athletic team.

For Catalogue and information apply to

President Davison M. Douglas, Clinton, S. C.

STATEMENT NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF THE U. S. A. CHICAGO, ILL.

Condition December 31, 1918, as Shown by Statement Filed.

Amount of Capital paid up in cash.....	$ 500,000.00
Amount of Ledger Assets Dec. 31 of previous year.....	14,792,780.33
Income—From Policyholders, $1,474,181.03; Miscellaneous, $63,662.76; Total	1,537,853.79
Disbursements—To Policyholders, $520,484.10; Miscellaneous, $1,003,504.72; Total	1,523,988.82
ASSETS.

Value of Bonds and Stocks.....	$ 1,900.00
Cash in Company's Office	375.00
Interest and Rents due and accrued.....	20.14
Premiums in course of Collection.....	7,940.55
Bills Receivable	1,653.11
	16,042,491.00
All other Assets, as detailed in statement.....	713,104.42
Total	$16,784,001.72
Less Assets not admitted	148,044.41

Total admitted Assets$16,635,957.31

LIABILITIES.

Unpaid Claims	$ 43,753.66
Unearned Premiums	40,801.02
Commission, Brokerage and other charges due.....	2,690.24
Estimated amount for Federal, State, County, and Municipal Taxes	24,831.94
Reinsurance.	1,834.63
Advance Premiums	1,446.79
All other Liabilities as detailed in Life Statment	15,856,282.15

Total amount of all Liabilities except Capital.....$15,971,640.43

Capital actually paid up in Cash.....	500,000.00
Surplus over all Liabilities	164,316.88

Total Liabilities

BUSINESS IN NORTH CAROLINA DURING 1918.

	Premiums Received.	Losses Paid.
Accident	$11,377.66	$4,560.96

President, A. M. Johnson; Secretary, R. D. Lay; Treasurer, R. D. Lay; Home Office, Chicago, Ill.; Attorney for service, Jas. R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, Raleigh, N. C.; Manager for North Carolina, Home Office.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

Raleigh, April 19, 1919.

I, James R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct abstract of the statement of the National Life Insurance Company, of U. S. A., Chicago, Ill., filed with this Department, showing the condition of said Company on the 31st day of December, 1918.

Witness my hand and official seal the day and date above written.

JAMES R. YOUNG,
 Insurance Commissioner.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS FOR MEXICO.

The International Sunday School Association, at the request of the Committee on Co-operation for Latin-America, has agreed to pay its share of the salary of a man who will promote Sunday schools, young people's work and temperance in Mexico.

Action was taken at a recent meeting of the executive committee of the International Association at Cleveland. The plan is to ask other agencies to co-operate under direction of the union effort of the mission boards now at work in Mexico.

A survey of the Sunday school needs will be made first to plan for the growth of Christian education for the natives, old and young. Some work of this sort was done by the International Sunday School Association before the recent series of revolutions there. It is the hope of Marion Lawrance and others associated in the Sunday school work of North America that this will be the beginning of large Sunday school work in the Southern Republic.

If the Sunday school work develops as it has in this country, the time will soon come when a number of workers will be required on full time to prosecute the Sunday school activities of the land.

Humbugs are gilded coins of plausibility from the mint of deception.

The University of South Carolina

1801

1919

The University offers courses leading to the following degrees:

1. School of Arts and Science, A. B. and B. S.
2. School of Education, A. B.
3. Graduate School, A. M.
4. School of Engineering, C. E.
5. School of Law, LL. B.
6. Military Science and Tactics compulsory for Freshmen and Sophomores. Reserve Officers Training Corps.

For students of Education, Law, Engineering and those pursuing higher graduate work, the University offers exceptional advantages.

Next session begins September 17, 1919. For information, write

W. S. CURRELL, President, COLUMBIA, S. C.

COLUMBIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
COLUMBIA, S. C.

THORNTON WHALING, D.D., LL.D., President of the Seminary

Professor of Didactic and Polemic Theology

WILLIAM M. McPHEETERS, D.D., LL.D.

Professor of Old Testament Literature and Exegesis

HENRY ALEXANDER WHITE, Ph.D., D.D., LL.D.

Professor of Ecclesiastical History and Church Polity

RICHARD C. REED, D.D., LL.D.

Professor of the English Bible and Homiletics

EDGAR D. KERR, A.B., B.D.

Instructor in Hebrew and Greek Languages

GEORGE S. FULBRIGHT, A.B.

Instructor in Elocution

WILLIAM M. MILLS, A.B., D.D.

Instructor in Rural Sociology

J. O. REAVIS, D.D., LL.D.

Professor of English Bible, Pastoral Theology and Missions

Our most progressive Theological Seminary, grown from twenty-four to sixty four students in seven years. Full curriculum and special courses in Pedagogy, Sunday School Organization, Missions, Evangelism, Rural Sociology and Elocution. Scholarships for prepared students. For further information, write to THORNTON WHALING, President.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE

"The greatest single institution, in point of service, controlled by the Southern Presbyterian Church."

THORNTON WHALING, President.

Columbia Theological Seminary.

COURSES OF STUDY: Literary, Scientific, Classical preparing for ministry, medicine, law, engineering, business, teaching.

FACULTY experienced and University trained.

COLLEGE SPIRIT: The boys work in season and out for a "Bigger and Better Davidson." The typical Davidson student, or alumnus, is loyal, enthusiastic, and successful in whatever he undertakes.

Y. M. C. A. SECRETARY will be continued next year. Rev. R. W. Miles, General Secretary, will be a big factor in the boys' college life.

LITERARY SOCIETIES at Davidson have a rightful place on the campus. Davidson has contested 20 inter-collegiate debates and has won 14, or 70%. The student gets a fine parliamentary training.

IN ATHLETICS Davidson has football, baseball, tennis, track, golf outdoor gymnasium, large new gymnasium. R. O. T. C.

MUSICAL TALENT has expression and development through the Glee Club and Orchestra, an enthusiastic organization that furnishes music for public functions at the college, and gives concerts each year in other towns and colleges.

Students find the climate bracing and beneficial and the social atmosphere friendly and congenial.

Expenses exceptionally reasonable.

Old Students have already registered for next term from the following States: North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Mississippi, Maryland, Alabama, Tennessee, Texas, Arkansas, Georgia, West Virginia, District of Columbia, Louisiana, China, Japan.

New Students from the following: North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Missouri, District of Columbia, Colorado, Kentucky, Indiana, Japan.

Register early; make sure of room.

Illustrated folder and other literature will be sent immediately upon receipt of your request.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE

:

Davidson, N. C.

LUXURY AND INDIFFERENCE AS DANGER SIGNALS.

There is an alarming tendency visible to recur to the ways of the luxurious and extravagant living which were so threatening to our higher life before the war. An era of extravagant spending means added difficulty for the reconstruction of the world which is the main task of the hour. The abnormal sale of luxuries is a danger signal.

In the words of the well-known Babson Statistical Organization:

Abnormal demands for furs, jewelry, expensive clothing, etc., all show the attitude of the public. These things are all right in themselves, but when people turn all their attention to getting them without correspondingly increasing their own production, then trouble is bound to follow. At present the large amount of money in circulation is serving to maintain the appearance of sound business conditions. In so far, however, as this spending power is tending to turn the heads of people from thrift to extravagance, it is really undermining business conditions and is a sign for caution.

In regard to religious matters the report takes a similar line of caution:

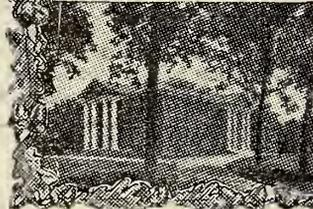

The tendency described is seen again in the lack of attention which people are giving to religion. . . . For a while the war served as a moral and religious stimulant, but the figures for 1918 show

OAK RIDGE INSTITUTE

OAK RIDGE, N. C.

T. E. WHITAKER, PRESIDENT

An old-fashioned Southern school dating from 1852. In its long history it has enrolled thousands from the Carolinas and adjoining states. Preparation that opens the way to bigger accomplishments in college, business, and life. 350 acres in campus, athletic grounds, orchards and farms. Modern school buildings. Steam heat and showers. Library. Military training. Healthful, accessible location near Greensboro. More than a thousand feet above sea level. Sane, moral influences.

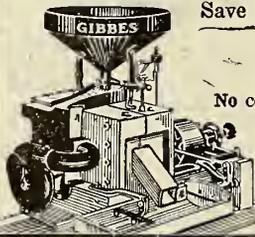

Courses thoroughly covering literature, science, teaching, bookkeeping, shorthand and music. Athletics encouraged. All male teachers. Discipline mild but firm. Costs reasonable, $350 for the year. Fall session opens September 9, 1919. Write for illustrated catalogue. Address

Oak Ridge Institute,
Oak Ridge, N. C.

Grind Your Corn the Simple Way

Delicate, Complicated Machinery is neither necessary nor economical. Save money in grinding your grain with—

The Gibbes Corn Mill

Simple—Fast—Economical—Durable

No complicated parts, whole machine easily handled. With ball-bearing system it is light running and rapid, requiring very little power. Little wear, smooth running, seldom a part to replace. Made of the best of materials. Absolutely guaranteed. For illustrated literature and prices address—

GIBBES MACHINERY CO., Dept. A-2, Columbia, S. C.

NEW SONG BOOKS

For Your Church

8c

A wonderful value; 83 familiar songs of the Gospel, words and music. Used all over the world. Only $3 per hundred for No. 1 or 2, round or shaped notes, and $15 for No. 1 and 2 combined, round notes only. Send 30c for samples. Money back if not pleased.

E. A. K. HACKETT, Dept. No. 56, FT. WAYNE, IND.

LINWOOD COLLEGE

For Young Ladies Only

Established 1883. Offers exceptional educational opportunities to young women. Located at foot of beautiful Crowders Mountain, in the healthy Piedmont section. Water supply from the famous All Healing Springs. Excellent board. Healthful record unsurpassed. Able faculty, thorough courses, leading to degrees of A. B., B. L., and B. S. Modern buildings, Christian influences. Board and tuition, $175 per year. Next session opens Sept. 17, 1919. For catalog address REV. A. T. LINDSAY, Pres., Gastonia, N. C.

YOUR FACE?

Is the Complexion Muddy, Tanned, Freckled?

If troubled with skin eruptions, sunburn, pimples, try

PALMER'S SKIN-SUCCESS SOAP

It cleanses, softens and clears the skin and tends to remove sunburn, tan, freckles, blackheads, pimples and eczema.

Thoroughly antiseptic. Ask your druggist, or write for free samples to

THE MORGAN DRUG CO.,

1521 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Medical College of Virginia

(State Institution—Co-Educational)

STUART MCGUIRE, M.D., LL.D., Pres.

MEDICINE DENTISTRY
PHARMACY NURSING

New buildings, completely equipped. Laboratories under full time instructors. Unusual clinical facilities offered in three hospitals owned by the college, also in city hospitals and institutions.

81st session begins September 17, 1919. For catalogue, address

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary

1121 East Clay Street RICHMOND, VA.

COLLEGE OF William & Mary

Historic in Association;
1693 Modern in Equipment; 1919
Progressive in Spirit;

William and Mary offers every advantage of a modern, liberal education in a cultured and historic community. Chartered by King William and Queen Mary, developed by such officials as Jefferson, Washington and John Tyler, it has for 226 years served the cause of American education. It educated John Marshall, James Monroe, Winfield Scott, George Wythe, Peyton Randolph, Jefferson and Tyler; its recent students are leaders in Virginia today.

Full Collegiate courses leading to the A. B., B. S., and M. A. degrees. Large, efficient faculty. High entrance and academic standards. Excellent laboratory facilities for the study of the natural sciences, drawing and manual arts. 12 buildings with modern equipment; heating and power plant; large shaded campus; 25 acre athletic grounds.

The College of William and Mary is the Teachers' College of Virginia; special two-year course, based on high school graduation, for the teachers' diploma. 132 scholarships for men and women training to be teachers. Free tuition to ministerial students. Special pre-medical course. Pre-electrical and chemical engineering. Courses in business administration and commerce. Courses for commercial teachers. All courses open to men and women.

The honor-system of student government had its origin at William and Mary. Pure religious and social surroundings; student life free from harmful and costly habits; low expenses made possible through state aid and situation in an inexpensive community.

THE COLLEGE OF WILLIAM AND MARY

J. A. C. CHANDLER,
President.

For catalogue and information, address,
THE PRESIDENT, College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va.

a drop such as has not been witnessed for at least twenty years. On the surface these figures indicate that people are too prosperous to bother with religious matters; but fundamentally they mean that people are disregarding the principles by which alone continued prosperity can be maintained.

Are you "too prosperous to bother with religion?" Is it true of your church or your community? If so it is a danger signal for the material and moral condition of the days to come.—Congregationalist.

The most perfect man is not he who, having reached a certain degree of perfection halts there, but rather he who ever tends to God with the most ardent yearnings of his heart.—St. Augustine of Hippo.

Personal Instruction
 is the prime secret of a thorough education. An excellent standard and high curriculum maintained for one hundred and thirty-four years and an intentionally limited enrollment insure a most thorough-going literary training at the

COLLEGE OF CHARLESTON
 Excellent equipment. Climate unsurpassed. Expenses moderate. CO-EDUCATIONAL. For catalogue and illustrated booklet, address Harrison Randolph, Pres., Charleston, S. C.

A Southern Presbyterian University, owned and controlled by a Board of Representative Presbyterians from every Southern State.

THE SCHOOLS
 Of Liberal Arts, Science, Literature and Journalism, and Commerce are open all the year and students may enter at the beginning of any one of the four terms as follow: Sept. 24, Jan. 2, Apr. 1 and July 6.
 A beautiful Book of Views, illustrating Student Life at the University, will be sent free, with catalogue, on application. Address

Oglethorpe University
 Oglethorpe University, Ga.
 (Suburb of Atlanta)

DR. J. M. BELK, MONROE, N. C.

W. H. BELK, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Belk Bros. Dept. Stores

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA

19 STORES

Send us your orders for Bibles, Testaments, Confession of Faith, or Book of Church Order, for quick delivery. 10 percent discount for Sunday Schools, Societies, or Churches, Preachers or Teachers—and in dozens we will give you wholesale price.

WHY NOT HAVE A BIBLE OR TESTAMENT IN EVERY SUNDAY SCHOOL SCHOLAR'S HANDS EVERY SUNDAY? WE WILL HELP DO THIS. WRITE TO US FOR THE PLAN. NELSON'S BIBLES

1184—Sunday School Scholar's Bible. Practical Helps for Young People. How to study the Bible. How to study the lesson. Bible questions and answers all in this Bible. Good black type, red edges, leatheroid binding. Size 5½x4x1. Special.....98c

Same Bible, gilt edge, better leather binding, illustrated ..$1.25 and $1.50

12—Linen Card Back Bible. Good big print. Fine for the Sunday School classes, about 6x5x1.....75c

1148—Sunday School Bible. Linen board backs, black type, 5x4x1...59c
7764—Teacher's Bible, $5.00.

India Linen Paper, self pronouncing Bible Dictionary, Combined Concordance, 12 Colored Maps, Morocco Binding, Silk Sewed, good print. Size 7¾x5½x1¼$5.00

6512—Teacher's Edition Bible—New and instructive maps, 14 maps, placed throughout the Bible, illustrating the Scripture, 20 beautifully colored pictures, complete Bible Dictionary, new Concordance and Helps. Leather binding, strongly made. Black face type. Size 7x5x1½$2.50
6512—Teacher's Bible, $3.95.

Linen Paper, thumb index, illustrated colored pictures, 12 new maps, Bible Dictionary, Morocco leather binding. Black face type, convenient size, 7x5-1¼. Special$3.95

1212—Illustrated Bible. 4,000 questions and answers, short history of each book of the Bible by A. T. Pierson, D.D. Harmony of the four Gospels. How to study the Bible. Colored maps. 7x5½x1½.....$2.00
7764—Teacher's Bible, $5.95.

Self pronouncing Bible, new, improved maps, finely illustrated, combined Concordance, 12 colored maps, newest and most complete dictionary yet printed. Morocco binding, silk sewed, a beautiful Bible. 8x5½...$5.95
Why not have a Confession of Faith in Every Home? We carry them in stock for your convenience—50c, 75c.

BOOK OF CHURCH ORDER.
Every officer in the Presbyterian Church ought to have this Book and study it. We will mail you one for 25c.

NELSON'S TESTAMENTS

402—New Testament, 65c.
Bound in leatheroid, large black face type. Size 6x5.

321—New Testament, 48c.
Bound same as 402. Black type. Size 5x3½.

400—New Testament, 25c.
This is a special number. Large black type, cardboard back, clear white paper—the quality equals most 50c books. Special25c

29—New Testament. Vest pocket size, leatheroid binding, fine for the children25c
403—New Testament, 98c.

This is leather bound. Large black type, gilt edge. Size 6x4½.

403P—New Testament and Psalms. Leather bound, gilt edge. Large print$1.19

SCHOFIELD BIBLES

We carry these in the newest Editions, bound in good, heavy Linen Cardboard backs, or can send you the finest Leather Bound. If you want a Bible to get "REAL HELP" right at home—the newest improved help—a Schofield Bible is the one to buy.

No 50—Linen Cardboard Backs. Good black type, with every help at home. Same helps as the highest price Bible. Size of Book 7x5-1¼.....$1.50

No. 70—Same as above, only larger size type and book, 8½x6½x1¼ $2.00

We carry Schofield Bibles in all kinds of Bindings—Morocco, Persian, Etc. Real Linen Paper, from $5.00 to $10. Let us send you one on approval.

We carry all kinds of New Testaments from 15c to $2.00.

ARMY NURSES ENJOY
THE BRIGHT LIGHTS

"How do we get to Chinatown?"

"Which shop has the prettiest evening dresses?"

"Where is the Bowery?"

These are only a few of the questions that returning army nurses are asking Mrs. Joseph Stearns, who is in charge of the Y. W. C. A. Information Booth at Hotel Albert, where hundreds of nurses come in every week from the ships.

"They want to see everything and do everything that New York affords," Mrs. Stearns said yesterday. "After months or years of sacrifice and service overseas, they begin to realize when they get here that they are due some good times."

Five hundred nurses who arrived last week on the Imperator, crowded the lobby of the Albert to get information about the way to make the most of their stay in New York. Miss Marion Porter, Y. W. C. A. secretary, who has charge of entertaining returning nurses, had a full program for them. They were taken on a Hudson River boat trip, given a dance at the Pershing Club, escorted in a party through Chinatown, provided with theater tickets and taken to the various museums.

Y. W. C. A. literature is given to the girls at the booth, directing them to the various Association privileges that are open to them at the different New York City branches. They include swimming pools, libraries, reading and rest rooms, use of the laundries, sewing machines, etc.

LIFE'S VOYAGE.

Though borne far out to sea, my bark upon the whelming tide,
I have no cause to fear the waves, my Pilot safe will guide;
He holds within the hollow of his strong, almighty hand,
The surging waters of the deep. He has but to command;
The storm at once becomes a calm, the winds are hushed to sleep;
And though the storm and darkness he doth ever vigil keep.
My way across the trackless waste, 'tis true I can not see;
What matter—he who holds the helm fills all immensity.

But still, above the tumult of the tempest I can hear
My trusty Pilot calling, "I am with thee, have no fear."
And though the flood may bear me on,
far out upon the tide,
My bark will anchor safe at last, upon the heavenward side;
Beyond the storm, beyond the tide, safe anchored by his grace,
Within the port, where I shall see my Pilot face to face.

—Relta B. Titus.

STATEMENT
NORTHWESTERN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Condition December 31, 1918, as Shown by Statement Filed.

Amount of Capital paid up in cash.....	$382,461,559.44
Income—From Policyholders, $57,261,501.38; Miscel- laneous, $20,767,014.67; Total	78,028,516.05
Disbursements—To policyholders, $46,996,354.24; Mis- cellaneous, $10,792,914.00; Total	57,789,268.24

ASSETS.

Value of Real Estate (less amount of encumbrances)....	$ 4,474,084.09
Mortgage Loans on Real estate.....	210,450,715.93
Loans secured by pledge of Bonds, Stocks, or other col- lateral	6,235.52
Loans made to Policyholders on this Company's Policies assigned as collateral	58,167,946.80
Premium notes on Policies in force.....	1,674,749.31
Value of Bonds and Stocks	125,793,895.26
Cash in Company's Office	4,914.42
Deposited in Trust Companies and Banks on interest...	2,107,953.11
Interest and Rents due and accrued	6,612,921.18
Premiums unpaid	5,029,810.61
All other Assets, as detailed in statement.....	731,172.26

Total.	$415,054,398.49
Less Assets not admitted.....	216,926.75

Total admitted Assets

LIABILITIES.

Net Reserve, as computed	$366,258,457.00
Present value of amounts not yet due on Supplementary Contracts, etc.	7,413,711.00
Liability on Policies canceled and not included in "Net Reserve," etc.	9,891.41
Policy Claims	3,490,783.41
Due and unpaid on Supplementary Contracts.....	45,028.63
Dividends left with Company at interest.....	229,679.02
Premiums paid in advance, including Surrender Values so applied	24,786.78
Unearned Interest and Rent paid in advance.....	481.53
Commissions due to Agents, etc.....	58,326.37
Estimated Amount payable for Federal, State, and other Taxes	1,423,062.68
Dividends due Policyholders	15,043,268.24
Amounts set apart, apportioned, provisionally ascertained, calculated, awaiting apportionment, etc.....	1,198,729.00
All other Liabilities, as detailed in statement.....	142,489.84

Total amount of all Liabilities, except Capital....	$395,338,694.91
Unassigned funds (surplus)	19,498,776.83

Total Liabilities

BUSINESS IN NORTH CAROLINA DURING 1918.

Policies on the lives of citizens of said State in force De- cember 31 of previous year, No. 4,163; Amount.....	$ 8,361,948.00
Policies on the lives of citizens of said State issued during year, No. 151; Amount	397,900.00

Total, No. 4,314; Amount	8,759,848.00
Deduct ceased to be in force during year, No. 191; Amount	463,092.00

Policies in force Dec. 31, 1918, No. 4,123; Amount.$

Losses and Claims unpaid Dec. 31 of previous year, No. 6; Amount	10,330.00
Losses and Claims incurred during year, No. 88; Amount	233,926.00

Total, No. 94; Amount

Losses and Claims settled during year in cash, No. 82; Amount	$ 207,210.00
--	---------------

Losses and Claims unpaid Dec. 31, 1918, No. 52; Amount	37,046.00
Premiums collected or secured in Cash and Notes or Credits without any deduction for Losses, Dividends, Commissions, or other expenses 225,129.02

 President, G. C. Markham; Secretary, A. S. Hathaway; Actuary, P. H. Evans; Home Office, Milwaukee, Wis.; Attorney for service, Jas. R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, Raleigh, N. C.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,
 INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

Raleigh, March 21, 1919.

I, James R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct abstract of the statement of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Milwaukee, Wis., filed with this Department, showing the condition of said Company on the 31st day of December, 1918.

Witness my hand and official seal, the day and year above written.

JAMES R. YOUNG,
 Insurance Commissioner.

WHO AM I?

I am a far too common sight in the neighborhood of every high school.
 I am small and innocent in appearance, but contain immense possibilities for working mischief.
 I ruin many a football team. No coach will permit his players to use me during the season, for I am sure death to wind, speed and "pep."
 I am responsible for innumerable failures in school, and for still more in after life.
 I can destroy a boy's ambition and will power, and put his brain to sleep.
 At my best, I am a worthless thing to spend good money for. At my worst, I injure the body, mind and morals.
 The evil I do is incalculable. Still I flourish.
 I am the student's worst enemy.
 I am the cigarette.
 —Congregationalist.

CLOVER AND CORN

Should grow on the same land the same season. Sow the clover in the fall and plow it under in the spring, just before planting the corn crop. But the clover crop frequently fails from poor seed or from lack of proper inoculation. Both these causes of failure can be avoided by having the seed tested for germination in the State Laboratories, and by securing the proper inoculating fluid from the State Department of Agriculture at Raleigh.
 W. A. Graham,
 Commissioner of Agriculture,
 Raleigh, N. C.
 'Tis greatly wise to talk with our past lives
 And ask them what report they bore to Heaven.
 —Young.

North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering
 WEST RALEIGH

A Land Grant College founded under an act of Congress by the State Legislature of North Carolina in March, 1887. Splendidly equipped for the education of the sons of the State in the technical and industrial arts.

Four year courses in Agriculture, in Agricultural Chemistry, and in Civil, Electrical, Mechanical, Chemical and Textile Engineering. New departments in Agricultural Engineering and Highway Engineering.

Numerous short courses.

Unit of Reserve Officers Training Corps. Seniors and Juniors receive pay amounting to $118 annually. All students receive free uniforms amounting in four years to $164.

Strong athletic teams.

$40,000 Y. M. C. A. building. Regular paid secretary.

Two hundred and forty free scholarships.

Requirement for admission: eleven units—practically equivalent to the completion of tenth grade work.

Board $16.00 per month. Tuition $45.00 per year. Room rent, heat and light $30.00 per year.

Enrollment last session 1,020, exclusive of all summer students.

Fall term begins September 3.

For catalogue, illustrated circular or entrance blanks, write

E. B. OWEN, Registrar

United States Railroad Administration

DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS

Seaboard Air Line Railroad

Reduced Summer Excursion Round-Trip Tickets on sale May 15th to September 30th, final limit October 31st, 1919, to the following points:

Alta Pass, N. C.	$ 7.14	Pensacola, N. C.	$ 9.06
Hickory, N. C.	3.30	Rutherfordton, N. C.	4.32
Johnson City, Tenn.	10.80	Shelby, N. C.	2.88
Lenoir, N. C.	4.50	Switzerland, N. C.	6.96
Norfolk, Va.	17.46	Virginia Beach, Va.	18.26
Old Point, Va.	18.06	Wrightsville Beach, N. C.	10.66

The above rates do not include war tax. Also attractive rates to other resorts.

For particulars as to fares, trains, schedules, etc., apply to any Railroad Ticket Agent.

E. W. LONG, P. S. A.,
 CHARLOTTE, N. C.

JOHN T. WEST, D. P. A.,
 RALEIGH, N. C.

Sparkles

The burglar had entered the house as quietly as possible, but his shoes were not padded, and they made some noise. He had just reached the door of the bed room when he heard some one moving in the bed, as if about to get up, and he paused. The sound of a woman's voice floated to his ears.

"If you don't take off your boots when you come into this house," it said, "there's going to be trouble, and a lot of it. Here it's been raining for three hours, and you dare to tramp over carpets with your muddy boots on. Go downstairs and take them off this minute."

He went downstairs without a word, but he didn't take off his boots. Instead he went straight out into the night again, and the pal, who was waiting for him, saw a tear glisten in his eye.

"I can't rob that house," he said. "It reminds me of home."—Ex.

That Printer Again!

Lord Roseberry has all his life been a wonderful orator, and he has probably made as many speeches as any politician living. He has told an amusing story against himself about a certain proof-reader who, after he had read the proof of a particularly long speech of his lordship's, wrote at the end of it the words, "Thank heaven!"

The proof was duly returned to the printer, who set up these words in type. The next day the speech was published in the newspaper with the following startling ending: "At the conclusion of his speech Lord Roseberry left for the South. Thank heaven!"—Pearsons.

Jane Addams was crossing the ocean once and, having been ill herself, started to sympathize with an Irishman in the second cabin, who apparently was having a very active time.

Laying her hand gently on the Irishman's shoulder, Miss Addams cried: "I am very sorry you are so ill, my good man. Your stomach is only weak, that's all."

"Wake stummick nawthin'," answered the Irishman. "O'im throwin' as fur as any man on this side the ship, mum."

After Dr. Blank had been preaching a few weeks as successor to the highly intellectual Dr. Blanket, a woman member of the congregation came up to him after the service one morning and said:

"Oh, Dr. Blank, I do so enjoy your sermons! I never had sense enough to listen to Dr. Blanket."—The Continent.

Mother: "Just run upstairs, Tommy, and fetch baby's nightgown." Tommy: "Don't want to." Mother: "Oh, well, if you're going to be unkind to your new little sister, she'll put on her wings and fly back to heaven." Tommy: "Then let her put on her wings and fetch her nightgown." — Technical World.

THE WESTMINSTER SCHOOL

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Operated by Kings Mountain Presbytery
$300.00 Per Year

Write for Catalogue to

Rev. T. E. P. Woods, Box 6, Rutherfordton, N. C.

4 Per Cent

Time Certificates of Deposit

They are Interest Bearing. They are Payable on Demand. They Afford a Good Income for Funds Awaiting Permanent Investment

GET ONE

AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY

Charlotte

::

North Carolina

YES,

Preachers and Teachers Are Human

They should have no discount and no cheaper railroad fares than you and I. They should be paid for services rendered—amply paid. If he can't earn enough for family use and the nest egg for the future, he made a sad mistake as to family, else he should change his calling instanter.

The Mutual Building & Loan

Will save a man and his family if they're worth saving, but they must help. It furnishes the "sure cure," but boasts no regrets at the demise of a feller who deliberately refuses to take the medicine.

E. L. KEESLER, Sec. & Treas., 25 S. Tryon St., CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Charlotte National Bank Resources $4,000,000.00

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

PAYS FOUR PER CENT.

On Either Time Certificates of Deposit or Savings Accounts

MAIL ORDER Business Solicited and PROMPT ATTENTION Given

JOHN M. SCOTT	-	-	-	-	-	President
W. J. CHAMBERS	-	-	-	-	-	Vice-President
J. F. ROBERTSON	-	-	-	-	-	Vice-President
W. H. TWITTY	-	-	-	-	-	Cashier
C. W. BUTT	-	-	-	-	-	Assistant Cashier

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

REV. J. R. BRIDGES, D. D.

EDITORS

REV. R. C. REED, D. D.

VOL. LX.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., AUGUST 20, 1919.

No. 33.

Little Bird Brother.

Why are we singing, my brother,
Little bird brother, O say.
Is all your carol in gladness,
Joy at the blossoms and May?
Not so my singing, my brother,
Not so my singing today.

Loneliness closeth around me,
Raineth the mist from the sky,
Singing is aid to the hoping,
Shuts the tears back in the eye,
That's why I'm singing, my brother,
Little bird brother, that's why.

Both of us singing and trusting,
Trusting the Father divine,
I for the strength for my burden,
You for the shelter of vine;
Trusting he heareth our praying,
Yours, wee bird brother, and mine.

Both of us singing, my brother,
Hope in my song and in yours;
Knowing the sunshine's just hidden,
Never a cloud that endures.
Love at the heart of all nature
Gladness awaiting assures.

Never a sparrow that falleth
But that he heareth its cry,
Never a tear in the darkness
But that he knoweth whose eye.
That's why we're singing, my brother,
Little bird brother, that's why.

—Esma G. Denby.

Editorial

The Standard Challenged.

IT has come to light that some of the readers of the Standard dissent from some of the views expressed in the editorial columns. This is much to be deplored. As the name indicates the Standard is the yard-stick by which orthodoxy is measured. Therefore he who dissents comes short of full measure.

It is complained that the Standard is wrong in its conception of the spirituality of the Church. "This is indeed a hard saying, who can hear it?" It is in this particular that the Standard has always supposed itself to belong to the most straitest sect of orthodoxy. If it is wrong here, how can it ever be sure of being right anywhere?

It is objected that the Standard has departed from John Calvin, and that it "gives John Knox the cut direct in every issue." To this indictment we plead guilty with cheerful alacrity. It brings a rare pleasure to our hearts to be accused, for once at any rate, of keeping step with the march of progress, of belonging to the class of advanced thinkers. We belong to the twentieth century, and those great old worthies to the sixteenth. The light shines on us with a brightness unknown to them. For this reason we palliate if we cannot altogether excuse certain grave mistakes into which they fell. It was full two centuries after their death before the American Republic was founded. And then for the first time was written into the constitution of a civil commonwealth the pregnant doctrine of the complete separation of Church and State. This has rightly been called "America's contribution to the science of government." This doctrine is the logical corollary of the teachings of the founder of Christianity. It was unknown to the Old Testament. And the sad blunder of the early reformers was that following in the footsteps of the Roman Catholic Church they drew their ideas of the relation of Church and State from the Old Testament, and justified their practice by precedents drawn from the same source. This accounts for John Calvin's volunteering to prosecute Servetus for heresy before the Civil Council of Geneva, knowing that if he secured a verdict the penalty would be death by burning. It also accounts for the fact that the Confession of Faith drawn up by John Knox was adopted by the parliament of Scotland, and the celebration of the mass was made a capital offence.

We rejoice in the progress made since the days of Calvin and Knox, and we are hoping almost against hope that all of our brethren will avail themselves of the increased light. Under the leadership of the United States, the doctrine of separation of Church and State has grown in favor, but has been given only partial effect, in all the States of Christendom. So far as we are acquainted with the ecclesiastical writers of our country, the ablest expounders of this doctrine were James H. Thornwell, John B. Adger, Thomas E. Peck and Stuart Robinson. The crime of standing by the positions laid down and so strongly defended by these venerated men we "shall neither attempt to palliate nor deny."

It is objected against the Standard that it "thinks the spirituality of the Church consists in ignoring civic and social questions." Hardly. The Standard is an echo of the official standards of our Church. These official standards teach that it is the function of the Church to bear testimony against error in doctrine and immorality in practice wherever these are found whether within or without the Church. Is the wage earner suffering oppression from the selfishness and greed of the capitalist? The Church is to cry aloud against selfishness and greed, but it is not the business of the Church to investigate and sit in judgment on specific facts, to say how much wage and how many hours of work shall be allotted to the working man, to say what period of childhood and youth shall be exempt from factory labor, to demand compensation for injuries and pension for old age. These are purely secular questions, and as citizens of the commonwealth we have both the right and the opportunity to deal with them. They can only be settled by civil legislation, and the Standard echoes the Confession of Faith that "Synods and Councils should handle only that which is ecclesiastical, and should not meddle with the affairs of the civil commonwealth."

Brethren, it is an irksome and seemingly a thankless task, nevertheless we "will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things; yea, we think it best, as long as we are in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance."

The Ad-Interim Committee on Federal Relations.

By the action of the last General Assembly this Ad-Interim Committee on Federal Relations is to be composed of one member from each Synod, the said member to be elected by the Synod. By its action the Assembly sought to make this committee express the views of the respective Synods of the Church. No method could be fairer, provided that there is a free and fair expression of opinion. This paper is proud of our record as a Church. We love the Southern Church, and we believe that she has not only done a great work, but that at this crisis in the world's history she has even a greater mission.

To unite with the Church North would mean to lose our identity, to lose our history, and eventually to be swept away from the testimony we have ever borne, and to be infected with much of the evils of which our orthodox brethren North complain. As a constituent part of the great National Presbyterian Church we shall have to endorse our Assembly's action in political matters, and in time our pulpits may be filled by women preachers. We pray that we may be permitted to live our own life, and do our own work, in our own way.

At present we are harmonious and each year we make a record of which we are proud. Union means disruption and division and bitterness. Churches will be divided and friends estranged. We feel deeply and we pray earnestly, yet if it be God's will, we shall submit, though we never expect to become enthusiastic. It must, however, be very clear to us that the majority of our Church wishes union. We want a fair expression of opinion. We want to see the member from each Synod represent the majority of that Synod. We want the election to be fair and free, with no wire pulling, nor gum shoe methods.

Already it is reported that those in favor of union are pulling the ropes to insure the election of their men. We hope that the Synods will rebuke any such methods, no matter by which side practiced. Let us remember that we constitute a Court of the Church of Christ, and that the methods of political henchmen do not belong to us.

Whatever may be the decision, let us give no ground for the charge of underhand methods. Unless we are mistaken, the old devil will get in his work. No doubt he is already rejoicing that good men are turning away from saving souls and taking steps that must injure the cause of Christ.

Sunday at Montreat.

Sunday, August 10, was devoted to Home Missions. Dr. McCaslin, of Montgomery, Ala., preached in the morning to a crowded audience, packing the auditorium to its fullest capacity. The text was taken from Revelations and Esther, the open door and coming into the Kingdom at an opportune time. The sermon was an earnest and able plea for Home Mission work in view of the demands of the times and the opportunities presented. The preacher especially emphasized our duty to the negro. In the afternoon, Rev. Mr. Young, a colored evangelist, who works among his own people, preached to an immense audience of white and colored people. As the service was especially for the colored people, the middle block of seats was assigned to them, while the whites had to take what was left. The sermon was "A Rejected Saviour," and was a most earnest plea for the acceptance of Christ. The chief attraction which drew such an outpouring of the white visitors was the singing of the colored people. Evangelist Young has a voice of wonderful power and flexibility. We have heard him twice before at the meetings of our General Assembly, and he has never yet failed to charm his white hearers.

In the evening Rev. Trigg Thomas, formerly of Missouri, but now evangelist at large of our General Assembly, preached to a crowded house. In all of these services there is room for reform along one special line. The visitors to Montreat in age range from the cradle to the grave, and their tastes vary as much as their ages. The Program Committee keeps this variation in mind, and generally gives a varied literary diet.

At the Sunday morning services, when the largest audiences of the week assemble, there is always great pressure brought to bear upon the chairman of that committee to give opportunity to parties to give out different notices. Taken singly, these notices take little time, but when there are many of them they consume valuable time, which added to the time taken for the sermon, makes the services very long and fatiguing.

On Sunday morning, for example, we had a long song service, then two brethren took up some time in giving notices, then came the "long prayer," which fully answered to its name, so that when the sermon time came, the preacher had not a fair show.

The Good Book says that a merciful man is merciful to his beast, and surely the presiding officer of a Conference should not be less so to his audience, especially when he knows that there are present many old and feeble ladies. He insisted that all should stand during prayer, but he evidently forgot to ask the brother offering prayer not to pray too long, with the result that many of the feeble were almost ready to faint when he closed. They had scarcely taken their seats before the singing leader, with the same disregard of the feeble, also insisted that they stand through a long hymn.

These may be trifling objections, yet they impress visitors unfavorably, and they make us long for men to remember that the Lord loveth mercy rather than sacrifice.

On Monday, Dr. W. W. White, of the Bible School of New York, began a series of Bible readings. These readings of Dr. White could be more appropriately termed Bible lessons. He is above all a teacher, and his evident purpose is to teach his class how to teach. We fear that his method, as fine as it is, requires too much hard work ever to become popular except with a few. On Monday night Dr. Chamberlain, of the Dutch Reform Church of the United States, opened the Foreign Mission Conference with a fine address, which we fear was too abstract for his miscellaneous audience. It went over the head of the average man.

The days and nights of the week will be given to the missionaries, of whom an unusually large number is on hand. Dr. S. H. Chester, who has served as Secretary of Foreign Missions, in one capacity or another for 25 years, is in charge.

The Race Riots.

In recent years a race riot in the South has been rarely known. Certain lewd fellows of the baser sort have far too frequently brought disgrace upon our section by lynchings that reminded one of the Huns, but in every instance the better class of whites condemned it. We would, however, call attention to the difference between a lynching and a riot. In a lynching one man suffers, and whether guilty or not the mob at least thinks so, and would justify their act upon that ground. In a riot it is not one man that is attacked, but all men of one color, whether innocent or guilty, and those attacking are not concerned as to the guilt, but fired with blood thirst.

The lynching, as a general thing, is distinctively a Southern institution, much to our shame, but the innocent of the same color and locality are not molested. This can be explained by the fact that the Southern men as a people love the negro, as long as he behaves himself, and when they do lynch, the motive is to do quickly what the law may not do in the end. The race riot is different from the lynching. In the race riot no particular man is sought, but a blood thirsty mob clamors for blood, and they shoot down all of one color whether innocent or guilty. For years, after each lynching, we of the South have had to listen to lectures in which our semi-barbarism is held up before the world and a comparison is made between the benighted South and the cultured North. Even our Church papers of that locality have drawn their skirts about them and thanked God that they were not as other men are.

Since the recent riots in Washington and Chicago we have looked in vain for some sign of repentance, for some realization of their inconsistency. Those who have touched upon the subject have evidently been walking on eggs. They have tried to cloud the issue, and one published in Boston actually credits Washington City to the South, and informs us that the South is still killing negroes.

We have also in the lynchings and in the riots looked in vain for some condemnation of the crimes committed. The negro is always held up as the innocent party, and he is made to believe that the motive was hatred of the negro, and not hatred of his acts. Even our British contemporary in Canada, influenced by these exponents of the cultured North, also gives us a lecture and informs the world that no sheriff in a Southern State will protect the negro from the violence of a mob, when in fact there are many instances to the contrary, notably the course of the officers of the law in Winston-Salem when at the risk of the life of the defenders and the actual loss of life of those attacking, a negro, guilty of an outrageous crime, was saved from lynching. The negro leaders of the North and their white sympathizers have been making the world believe that the South is the enemy of the negro, yet after the Chicago mob had spent its fury and slain to its heart's content, the negro asked to be sent to the South, thus showing that he knows where his true friends are.

We are not surprised at the course of the secular papers of the North, for it makes good political capital, but we did expect better and fairer treatment from the papers representing the Churches of that section.

Contributed

The Union Seminary Review and Federal Union

By Thornton Whaling, D.D., LL.D.

THE charming editor-in-chief of the Union Seminary Magazine writes a very attractive review of the New Orleans Assembly. His article is characterized by the kindly spirit and elevated courtliness which mark the accomplished professor.

His viewpoint, however, is indicated in the following statement which he frankly makes:

"For my own part I have never been able to see any great principle of the Gospel or of Presbyterianism separating the Presbyterian Churches of America, though I have sat at the feet of the masters on that subject, but I am fully persuaded that the time for outright organic union has not yet arrived. There ought to be a spirit of complete unity between the churches before there is union. The spirit of unity is a long way from complete. Let us work and pray for unity and union can come afterwards."

Where his acknowledged masters, like Dabney, Peck, Latimer, Strickler, and Johnson have failed, of course, no living man has any chance of success.

The paramount attitude of the Reviewer, therefore, is indicated in this striking quotation. It is not believed that he represents in this position the Union Seminary either of the past or of the present.

His explanation of what he calls "the defeat of Federal Union" is interesting. Of course, there was no defeat of Federal Union by the New Orleans Assembly. That body declined to approve the plan of Federal Union recommended by its ad interim committee and recommitted this report, along with other papers, to a committee to be selected by the Synods of the church.

The reasons which Dr. Lingle assigns for the so-called defeat of Federal Union are equally illuminating. He says that the omission of Home Missions from the administrative powers of the Federal Assembly was the chief reason. The curious thing is that Home Missions was not omitted, as Dr. Lingle, in one place in his review, explicitly states. The only exceptional treatment of Home Missions was that, after a conference with other Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, the Ad-interim Committee recommended that the direct administration of Home Missions by the Supreme Courts of the constituent bodies be left to the determination of these bodies after they entered the Federal Union. As simple a fact as this ought not to be hard to receive. In addition to this, the Federal Assembly had committed to it the power of settling finally, and, if necessary, judicially, all questions of comity in the field of Home Missions arising between any of the constituent churches. Moreover, it should not be forgotten that this whole plan must be threshed over by the Federal Constitutional Convention representing all the constituent churches, which doubtless would take months, and perhaps years, to reach final decisions upon questions like this.

Another reason assigned by the Reviewer for the so-called defeat of Federal Union is that the "plan contemplated a highly organized and complex piece of machinery which would have nothing particularly to do." Such a reason as this assigned for the action of the New Orleans Assembly is surely not complimentary to the intelligence of that body, and I raise a protest against imputing this view to many members of said court. It is so evident that the plan contemplated creating a Federal Assembly, clothed with large doctrinal, administrative and disciplinary powers, that it passes belief that any considerable number of the members of the Assembly could fail to grasp that fact.

I am glad to agree with the Reviewer upon the point that the New Orleans Assembly commits to the committee to be appointed the whole field of the relations of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, and that Organic Union, Federal Union, or still other kinds of relation may properly be considered by that committee.

If brethren who desire light upon the meaning of the federal principle would read a famous book entitled "The State, or Elements of Historical and Practical Politics," by Prof. Woodrow Wilson, they will see, expounded by a master, what a large part that principle has played in politics, both civil and ecclesiastical, in the past and what its central place in organized society is today.

There is also a recent publication, which the literary editor of the New York Times says is in some respects the most remarkable book of the last quarter of a century, entitled "Fifty Years of Europe," by Charles Downer Hazen, professor of History in Columbia University. This volume might be summarized as a thorough and historical presentation of the progressive influence of the federal principle in the life of the world during the last half century. In Australia, South Africa, Canada, United States, Germany and England the principle has wrought mightily and produced stupendous results.

A third book, entitled "The Critical Epoch of American History," by John Fiske, will show what the work of the Churches Federal Constitutional Convention would be. Scores of the ablest men in America wrought for months in 1787 preparing the Federal Constitution of these United States, and the chapter on the Federal Convention is one of the most suggestive and instructive essays which the modern ecclesiastics might well laboriously study. It throws many sidelights upon the problems which are now before the Presbyterian and Reformed Church.

I have served on this committee for a term of years and interviewed personally and by letter representative men in every Synod of the Church, and I do not believe that Federal Union is defeated, but that it is the key to the future.

So far from the defeat of Federal Union by the New Orleans Assembly, that plan of union is more vital and aggressive today than ever before. It is the key to the relation of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, to the reunion of Protestantism, and perhaps the final reunion of Christendom. It is so much bigger and more statesman-like than the petty plan of consolidation, now called Organic Union, that it is unbelievable that vision of the church will shrink to the infinitesimal dimensions of this petty consolidation, when Federal Union sweeps the whole horizon of the church and of the Kingdom of God, both at home and abroad.

The real reason for the declination of the New Orleans Assembly to endorse as a final closing of the question the plan of Federal Union was that the plan was so full of weighty significance, so far-reaching and comprehensive in its provisions that the church was not yet fully prepared to accept it as the solution of its future relations to all the other Presbyterian and Reformed Churches. Mature study and frank, full, courteous discussion will bring the desired result. It is well that the New Orleans Assembly acted just as it did, and the new committee will have before it the plan of Federal Union, along with all other possible kinds of union or relation. Federal Union will win on its merits as it comes to be understood, with the United States itself as the parable expounding its significance.

There is no end of the many little crosses, which, if quietly borne in a Christian way, will, by God's grace, do the work of affliction, and help to tame our proud wills by little and little.—Keble.

Rightness expresses of actions what straightness does of lines; and there can no more be two kinds of right action than there can be two kinds of straight line.—Spencer.

A Teaching Ministry.

By Rev. G. E. Moorehouse.

YOUR article on the above subject in your issue of August 6 is certainly timely, and will be of great service if there is general notice taken of it both by the ministers and the congregations. It is often said that the ministry is like other businesses in that the demand makes the supply, and that the preachers give the congregations what is thought to be wanted or desired. Personally the writer has formed the opinion that the people expect the minister to preach the Gospel and be an instructor in Biblical subjects, whatever they may want, and the nearer the minister fulfills his calling along these lines the more he is respected and the more he panders to the "demand of the times," in preaching on all manner of social and political topics, the less he is esteemed. I was recently looking through the "Yale Lectures on Preaching" by Phillips Brooks, and was struck with some of the ideas expressed. He says that as a result of the critical tendency of some preachers, "That it invades the pulpit, and the result is an immense amount of preaching which must be called preaching about Christ as distinct from preaching Christ. Always discussing Christianity as a problem, instead of announcing Christianity as a message, and proclaiming Christ as a Saviour." Then he gives this word of warning: "Beware of the tendency to preach about Christianity and try to preach Christ." And in line with some of the tendencies of the present day to bring into the church so many different things, such as "Missionary Plays," pageants, etc., and into the pulpit various social, political and patriotic subjects, and then to introduce a bewildering number of special "Days" as Mothers' Days, Fathers' Days, Flag Days, and I know not what, until it is almost necessary to set apart a day to preach the Gospel, I found this thought: "As preachers we must bring the heroic into the life of men, demanding of them truth, breadth, bravery, self-sacrifice, the freedom from conventionalities and an elevation to high standards of thought and life. We must bring men's life up to Him, and not bring Him down to men's life." That men and women will attend to the systematic, sympathetic and evangelistic exposition of the Bible is proved by one church with which I am well acquainted where in the past three years the topics for the mid-week service have been the regular prayerful study of the Epistle to the Ephesians; the Book of Ecclesiastes; two Books of the Psalms, I to LXXII; and the Directory for Public Worship from the Book of Church Order. At the Sabbath morning worship, with an occasional change for a few Sabbaths, since January, 1917, there has been a regular exposition of the Gospel of the Kingdom, with the Gospel according to St. Mathew as the basis, and as far as is known there has been no weariness, but a tense and growing spiritual interest. At the hour of evening worship, the Book of Genesis and the Acts of the Apostles have been used. The interest has not failed, and in proportion to the membership of the church in question the attendance at all the services will compare favorably with other churches. And it may be here said there has been a steady growth in grace and a distinct development in spirituality among the people and a marked increase in the offerings for benevolences and home expenses. This may be encouraging to many who are feeling more or less the deadening influences of putting secondary causes in the place of first causes. There appears to be a danger of degrading the dignity of the church by the many devices which are constantly being advanced for raising money, and more than a necessary amount of effort to keep the church before the public mind. Your reference to the show tactics of the Methodist church at Columbus is a case in point, and the many schemes for raising money which have been introduced into our own church in recent times are more or less in the same class. To quote once more Phillips Brooks: "Never sacrifice reverence for truth to desire for usefulness. Say nothing you do not believe to be true because you think it may be helpful. Keep back nothing which you know to be true because you think it may be harmful. Who are you that you should stint the children's drinking from the cup which their Father bids you carry to them, or mix it with error because you think they cannot bear it in its purity?" It is my own impression that if the Church would give its time more earnestly to preaching the Gospel of Salvation for sinful men, and magnify the Saviour Jesus Christ in the pulpit, and leave some of the fads of the day, with their big "Drives" and the craze to "Go over the top," the blessing of the Lord would be much more manifest and the Church and the home, which are God's appointment for the salvation of souls and the training of the people, would again come into their own, and some of the man-made schemes which have almost destroyed the sanctity of the church and the reason for the existence of the home would shortly pass away to the great advancement of the Kingdom of God.

Lumberton, N. C.

The Rotary Amendment.

There are indications that the Assembly's action in sending down this amendment was hasty. The same proposition had been submitted to the Presbyteries only a short time before and had been overwhelmingly defeated, as announced at the Newport News Assembly, having received only 17 votes out of 87. The action was taken near the close of the Assembly, with little debate, with many representatives gone home. The provisions of the Book of Church Order are ample. If an officer feels no longer called to the service he can demit the office. If he or the congregation demand it the session can divest him of the office.

If he wishes to resign or the congregation desires him to do so either party may present the matter to the session and the session ascertain the will of the congregation and then dissolve his official relation with that congregation, leaving him still a deacon, ruling elder or minister, as the case may be. If he does that which is unworthy of his office he may be deposed. What need have we for any other methods? For the past forty years we have been changing our church order. One saving feature of these changes has been that they usually represented an effort to bring our law into conformity to that which is written in the Word. More recently, as in this proposed amendment, the aim seems to be to change to conform to the wisdom of the world or at best to be like some other church. There is no evidence advanced to show that the offices of elder and deacon were to be regarded as temporary. On the contrary the care with which they were to be selected, the tests by which they were to be tried and the qualifications which they were to possess, as well as the esteem in which they were to be held, indicate that the offices were to be permanent and perpetual as taught in our constitution.

W. C. C.

Three Propositions---Ergo.

All Presbyterians will doubtless agree on the three following propositions:

First: The Christian home is the greatest institution in the world.

Second: The most pitiful thing in the world is a neglected orphan.

Third: The noblest charity in the world is a properly conducted Christian Orphanage, Ergo,

The Presbyterian Orphans' Home at Barium Springs, being such a properly conducted Christian Orphanage, dependent upon the Presbyterians of North Carolina for its maintenance, we undoubtedly ought to rally to its support and give the regents the $10,000 needed at this time for enlargement of the plant. Send subscriptions or contributions to Rev. W. T. Walker, Barium Springs, N. C.

W. M. C.

Light of Light that shineth,
'Ere the world began,
Draw Thou near, and lighten
Every heart of man.

Restoration of Protestant Churches in France and Belgium

A Sermon Preached by Dr. Henry van Dyke, in the Brick Church, New York City, on June 1, 1919.

I Cor. XVI:1—Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye.

Gal. VI:10—As we have therefore opportunity let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith.

YOU see from the first half of the text that the collection as a part of Christian service is not an invention of the new era. It is an ancient thing, interwoven with the very first threads of Christianity, a voluntary necessity of true faith and real love. It sounds contradictory to talk of a "voluntary necessity," but it is one of those apparent paradoxes which are the essence of truth. The free spirit has its own laws which it must keep to live. One of these laws is giving—the assertion of the sovereignty of the soul, the heart, to dispose of its own possessions.

That was what the poor widow did when she dropped her two mites into the treasury: it was all she had and Jesus blessed her. But he would not have blessed her for two mites if she had been the wife of a rich Sadducee.

That was what Joseph of Arimathea did when he gave his new tomb in the garden for the burial of Jesus. That was what the fairly prosperous Christians of Corinth and Galatia did when they made their collections for their poor brethren in Jerusalem, suffering under the scourge of war and ruin and starvation. That was what Ananias and Sapphira, those monumental liars, did not do. They sold their real estate in Jerusalem and concealed the price in order that they might dodge the responsibility of contributing a fair share to the relief of those who were suffering and starving. St. Peter condemned them, not because they did not give, but because they lied about their voluntary obligation.

Taxes, you understand, are entirely different. They are enforced payments, under the authority of the state, for the maintenance of common order. Jesus paid them, with the comment, "Render unto Caesar the things that belong unto Caesar."

Tithes are in the same category with taxes. They are contributions fixed by established churches on the basis of quotas determined by external authority. They are absurd and inadequate. A tenth of your income is too much to give in one case, and far too little in another case. These mathematical rules can never take the place of human, spiritual obligations. It is worth noting that since the abolition of tithing in America, the voluntary gifts of religious people to all good causes have increased more than a hundred fold.

The free-will offering belongs to the very life of religion. Its outward signs—the collection plate, the poor box, the subscription list—are essential parts of that symbolism which finds its highest expression in the Cross of Jesus Christ—the victorious emblem of self-sacrifice. Jesus taught that the strong are bound, not by outward compulsion, but by the inward constraint of faith and love, to bear the burdens of the weak. A selfish Christian is an infidel. A stingy Christian is a renegade. Only a generous, giving Christian belongs to the true fold of Christ.

The teaching of the Bible, beginning with the prophets of Israel, culminating in the words of Jesus, and continuing through the apostles, shows a heavenly common-sense in the working out of this doctrine of beneficence. It is at the opposite extreme from the crazy theories of the Bolsheviks and Anarchists, who deny God, degrade man, and destroy that which they propose forcibly to divide. The Bible doctrine emphasizes industry and thrift. "If a man will not work neither shall he eat." "Let every man lay by him in store as God hath prospered him." "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"—not more, nor less. And then it lays down in broad terms, the reasonable basis of Christian giving as we find it in the second verse of the text. First, "as we have opportunity let us do good unto all men." That is the doctrine of universal charity. Second, let us be mindful "especially of them that are of the household of faith." That is the doctrine of particular obligation to those who are bound to us by family and spiritual ties—the duty of caring for our own, not exclusively, but first.

On these two reasonable grounds I appeal to you today in behalf of the French and Belgian Protestant Christians—the people of our own household of faith—who have fought and suffered in this war for righteousness and freedom. What I want you to understand is that our own brethren in the faith have played a noble part in the world conflict, and now suffer under the pressure of the vast sacrifice which was demanded in order to save mankind from the German idolatry of Thor and Odin.

1. The wonderful thing about this war was the way in which it united the conscience and the religious faiths of men in resistance to the German paganism of unrighteous power. "The spiritual element is the dominating force in this war," said one of the soldiers who fought and died for freedom. Those of you who have read the wonderful book of Maurice Barres, "The Faith of France," will comprehend the religious spirit in which Catholics and Protestants and Jews and Socialists came together in "l'Union Sacree," to which, after too long hesitation our free American Republic joined her victorious strength.

No particular religious creed can claim pre-eminence in this conflict. Jews, Catholics, Protestants, stand on the same basis—the duty of those who believe in righteous peace to fight and suffer for it. I have seen much with my own eyes—having been among the ruined cities of Belgium and on the fighting line of Northern France under fire.

The ruin and desolation of these districts by the ruthless Germans are beyond description. Womanhood has been outraged, childhood crucified, old age martyred. But what I want you to understand today is that our Protestant brothers, the remnant left in France and Belgium, have borne their full part in the suffering and in the heroic fighting of the war.

2. In Belgium out of about seven and a half million people before the war there were only thirty thousand Protestants. Why so few? Because in the sixteenth century the separation of the northern from the southern Netherlands left the people of the south under the cruel tyranny of the Spanish Inquisition, and the survivors of the bloody persecution fled to Holland for refuge.

In France, out of thirty-eight or forty million people, there were only about seven hundred thousand Protestants. Why so few? Because St. Bartholomew's Day, and the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and the Dragonnades, had either exterminated the Huguenots or driven them abroad, mostly to America, to seek religious freedom. But out of a thousand French Protestant pastors, representatives of the remnant of religious freedom, more than five hundred, fifty per cent, were enrolled in the army of liberty as chaplains, stretcher-bearers, officers, and privates. Nearly half of them received citations for bravery and self-sacrifice on the field of honor, among whom I may name Chaplain Couve and Chaplain Leo, of whom the French commander said, "His bravery is considered a habit." Of these Christian soldiers more than fifty per cent were wounded, more than twenty per cent were killed.

In our American churches we have been proud of our service flags with their clustering stars of blue and gold. "But in France," says Chaplain Couve, "we had no such flags simply because every single man of our congregation under 45 was in the army. We kept lists only of our dead. Among the numerous service stars in your great churches there are always three or four gold ones. But every one of our Paris Protestant churches, which are smaller than these, had 30 or 40 dead."

If you would know the spirit in which these heroic brethren fought, read the letter of young Francis Monod, who

(Continued on page 8)

Salem, Va., Revisited

And Some Thoughts Apropos of the Times.

A Letter to the Editor by Rev. A. W. Pitzer, D.D.

I AM nearly 85 years old. Sixty-three years ago I was licensed to preach by Montgomery Presbytery. Fifty-one years ago I organized the Central Church in Washington City, and have been its pastor ever since, forty years as active and eleven as emeritus pastor.

I am now in Salem, Va., where I was born and where you were the beloved and acceptable pastor years ago. But if you could come back now, you would not recognize your church or the town of Salem.

The old church that has heard Moore, and Hoge, and Thornwell, and Green, and Peck, and many others of the ablest men in our Church, has been enlarged and greatly beautified and now has an up-to-date Sunday school room with all the modern appliances. The Episcopalians have built a $15,000 church just opposite our church. The Methodists have enlarged and beautified their building on College avenue. Roanoke College has now a large and beautiful group of buildings that would do credit to any literary institution. The Lutherans have also established a female college, named Elizabeth College, on the old Logan place, just east of the town. The Baptist denomination, which claims one-ninth of the entire population of the State, have a magnificent orphanage plant on the northern edge of the town. I joined the Salem Church sixty-five years ago and have claimed my membership therein up to this date.

Now, I must give you a few of the thoughts of my old age. In the Assembly's minutes for this year, on page 72, Treasurer's Report, we read as given to outside organizations as follows:

Federal Council Churches	$ 358.00
Alliance Reformed Churches, World.	420.00
Council Reformed Churches, America.	75.00
Expenses of delegates to Reformed Churches, Amer- ica	147.93
	<hr/>
	$1,000.93

Does It Pay

To tax our churches for the support of these outside organizations, especially the Federal Council, that has taken the world in charge and is attempting to do a great many things that Christ refused to do, and gave His Church no commission to do? Do you think that one person in a thousand of our members knows anything of these outside organizations? Is it worth while to continue this tax any longer?

The High Cost of Living.

We hear much now of the high cost of living. I do not see how it is possible for any governmental action to do anything more than to relieve to some extent the cost of living. As long as human nature remains what it has been in all the years past men who sell will get the best price they can, and men who buy will buy at the cheapest price. In an old book that I have, there are some rules given that if observed by all the people would greatly reduce the cost of living.

Rules.

(a) Owe no man anything; (b) Be ye free from the love of money; (c) Be content with such things as ye have; (d) Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others; (e) Beware of covetousness. General obedience to these rules would in less than twenty-four hours make a wonderful change in our mode of living.

Some of us who have passed through the Confederate war and the period of reconstruction know something of how little a man can live on. For months we did not see a grain of coffee or a spoonful of sugar, to say nothing of soft drinks, chewing gum and movies. A sorghum pudding made of sorghum syrup and corn meal was a great treat once in a while, and people would come for miles to enjoy the repast. But we are now living in great plenty and luxury.

God has filled our land with all kinds of foods for man and beast, and yet the nation has not turned to Him with grateful and obedient hearts. The people seem madly bent on pleasure. Theatres, dance halls, movies, etc., are crowded. "Many are running to and fro" and knowledge is increased and God forgotten.

Intervention in Mexico

An Open Letter to Congressman W. F. Stevenson, of South Carolina.

My Dear Mr. Stevenson:

KNOWING you are a man who gives careful study to the questions with which you have to deal as a representative of the people in our National Legislature, and whose official conduct is regulated, not by considerations of political expediency, but your convictions of right and duty, I desire to call your attention to the very urgent and ably conducted and unlimitedly financed propaganda now in progress to bring about military intervention by our Government in Mexico.

Those who are opposed to this step seem unable to command any large space in our public press for the expression of their views, while the advocates of it are filling columns in nearly all our large metropolitan papers every day.

We all know there is and has long been a desperate condition of affairs in Mexico. The present constitutionalist government, of which Carranza is the head, has not had all the success that could be desired in its effort to restore law and order. But, considering the difficulties with which it has had to contend, it has made quite remarkable progress in that direction, and the missionaries who live with the people and know them better than any one else are almost unanimous in the belief that this Carranza government is the only existing agency in which there is any hope of ultimate relief.

I have recently visited the country and the result of my observations has been to convince me that the kind of law and order which military intervention would produce would be no satisfactory or permanent solution of the Mexican problem. Porfirio Diaz maintained that kind of law and order in Mexico over thirty years, and at the close of his regime we had the same old Mexico that we had before.

At the town of Linares, where our missionary, Dr. Anthony Graybill, spent twenty-five years of his life, I found a community where the Mexican problem had been solved. The children of that community had been gathered into day schools and taught to read and write, and the people had been gathered into Sunday schools and churches and taught to live according to the moral teachings of the Bible. An intelligent and respectable middle class had grown up who were not amenable to the appeals of political and military demagogues.

If the Protestant churches of this country forty years ago had established mission stations all over Mexico at a distance of thirty miles apart, which would have cost less than the abortive Villa raid of three years ago, there would have been no revolution after the Diaz regime was once overthrown, and there would now be no Mexican problem. This is the only way in which we will ever have a decent neighbor in Mexico. It is the only way in which American busi-

(Continued on Page 8)

Restoration of Protestant Churches in France and Belgium.

(Continued from page 6)

fell at Rheims. Hear the prayer of the little soldier, Gaston Verpillot, dying in an ambulance:

"O God, let Thy will be done, not mine. Thou knowest that I never wished war, but I have fought because it was Thy will. I offered my life so that peace might prevail."

If you would know how the sorrow and sacrifice have been accepted by those whose dear ones have fallen for the faith, listen to these lines of a letter which came to me from an old Belgian gentleman and scholar of high renown. He and his wife are over seventy years old. They had gone to Brussels last December for the victorious return of the King and the troops. They had five sons, all in the army. Two of them, the oldest, were killed at the beginning of the war. The third, the youngest, fell but a few weeks before the armistice. This is what the old father writes: "He was a captain and had won honors. His morale never wavered for a moment, in the midst of terrible trials. He accepted them—welcomed them. He saw death coming and looked it in the face. His only regret was the pain his death was going to give us. It has given us much pain; but I should like to have died as he did. What joy, if all our five sons could have been with us on that day in Brussels! It was not God's will. But my faith is that even as our country has been restored to life, they also will live again in a better world."

These Protestants of France and Belgium were like the early Christians in one respect: "Not many rich, not many mighty, not many noble were called:" for the most part they were simple and humble folk, given to plain living and high thinking. In Belgium most of them belonged in the Walloon regions, the mining and manufacturing districts of the east. In France perhaps the largest Protestant population was in the north—Alsace, Lorraine, the regions that have suffered heavily in the war. But there were also congregations of the faithful descendants of the Huguenots in the Cevennes, in Poitou and in Saintonge, and other places where the hardy seed of the reformation had survived the persecuting sword.

These people had few chateaux, no palaces. But their simple homes, their farms, their workshops, suffered equally in the universal calamity of war. The Teutonic fury had no discrimination, no pity for the lowly and the weak. Nominally Protestant, but Pagan at heart, the German Kaiser sent his hordes to ravage and destroy Catholic and Protestant alike.

One hundred and thirty Protestant churches—more than one-eighth of the total number—were under enemy fire. More than two million dollars worth of actual destruction was inflicted upon them.

You have heard of the shameful, wanton damage done to the Cathedral of Rheims, splendid monument of Christian architecture, by the venomous German fire. But have you heard of the humble Reformed Church of Rheims, deliberately destroyed by German incendiary bombs? I want you to hear of it, and to remember it.

In a little French village, the other day a company of the faithful assembled for service in what was left of a Protestant Church. The roof was wrecked, the steeple tottering, the aisles were full of ruin. But the people joined in a reverent, joyful, service. And the pastor preached from the text: "Watchman, what of the night? The morning cometh."

The morning—yes, that is what we wait for, and long for, and are bound to work for—the dawning of a better day for all mankind believing in the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Christ.

The record of Catholics in France and Belgium, England and America, during this war, has been fine. The names of Cardinal Mercier and Cardinal Gibbons stand out as representing true patriotism and Christian feeling. But what I want you to understand today is that our Protestant brethren have borne an equal part in the honor and suffering of this righteous war. They have seen their homes demolished, their churches wrecked, their households broken and scattered, the industries by which they lived reduced to ruin. They cannot get upon their feet again unless we hold out our hand to them. The faith of our spiritual forefathers calls to our hearts in the time of trial.

Let us American Protestants, whom God has prospered, give freely and generously to help our brethren on the other side of the sea. Let us remember the cause of the freedom of conscience—"God's province"—for which our ancestors fought and suffered. Let us prove our faith by our works. Let us do good unto all men as we have opportunity—but "especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Not a grudging, meagre alms, but a big golden token of brotherly love is what we must send to our brethren over yonder in the name of Christ, the Prince of Peace.

Intervention in Mexico.

(Continued from page 7)

ness interests in Mexico can be made permanently safe. It is a process that will require time, but it will prove effective if it is thoroughly tried.

The Protestant churches of America have recently been planning to carry out a program of this kind. At a conference held at Mexico City in February the entire country was divided into geographical sections and the different Protestant denominations each assumed responsibility for evangelizing a specifically defined territory, and co-operative plans were arranged which in the next quarter of a century would make a new country of Mexico.

But if the United States goes down there with its army and installs a regime of militarism, this missionary program will have to be abandoned, and such a state of antagonism between this country and all Latin-America will be produced as will nullify all the altruistic plans and efforts of the Christian people of North America for South America and vex both continents for a half century to come.

I know it is possible that you may honestly differ from me in regard to this matter. But if these considerations impress you as they do me, I take the liberty of expressing the hope that you will use your utmost endeavor as a member of Congress to defeat the effort that is being made to bring on a war with Mexico in the supposed interest of foreign business in that country.

My wife and I gave with enthusiasm our three boys to fight the Germans for the preservation of Christian civilization in the world. It would be with little enthusiasm that we would see them go down to help in the slaughter of some thousands of helpless Mexicans in order that we might receive financial returns from a small investment in a silver mine in the State of Chihuahua.

With best wishes,

Very truly yours,

S. H. Chester.

NOT FOR SALE!

By contrast to the many "For sale" cards in the windows of our neighborhood it may be well to remind ourselves that the real possessions of life never can be sold or bought for money. With money one may buy real estate, and automobiles, and railroad tickets, and admission to the movies. But such things are not real possessions; they are merely accessories. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Life's real assets are imponderable as well as unpurchasable. They cannot be weighed on any mercantile scale or measured by any commercial yard stick. They are priced by the heart—which has its own cipher. One never can tell his most intimate friend what his best joy has cost him. Suffice it to say that it costs little when it costs money, merely. Said Robert E. Lee, when asked to lend his name to a lottery scheme: "My good name is all that I have left, and it is not for sale."—George Clarke Peck.

Book Notices.

"Uncle Sam's Boys With Pershing"—Henry Altemus Company, Philadelphia, Pa.; 50 cents.

"The Long Years Ago Stories"—Henry Altemus Stories, Philadelphia, Pa.; 50 cents.

Here we have two books for the young. One is for the boy whose mind is now intent on war. The author teaches him what the officers had to learn before going to war, and then when he lands his two young officers in France he sees to it that they ran with impunity the most dangerous risks. It is just such a book as will attract a boy. The other is for the very young—those who have just reached the age when they never tire of stories. The stories are about animals who are pictured as being like folks with the petty jealousies and curiosity. Animal society, according to these stories, is only a counterpart of the social life of man. The books for young people, issued by this company, can always be recommended as pure and admirably suited to the mental capacity of the young readers.

"Keynote Studies in Keynote Books of the Bible"—By Dr. C. Adphonso Smith, of the Naval Academy; Revell Co., New York; $1.25 net.

If we did not know Dr. Smith's reputation, the fact that these were the James Sprunt lectures, delivered at our Seminary in Richmond, would gain them a wide reading, because only those who have something to say are secured to deliver them. He deals with Genesis, Esther, Job, Hosea, John's Gospel, Romans, Philippians, and Revelation, and in each book he finds a keynote thought which he expands in a manner peculiarly his own. It is a book full of suggestions that a preacher will find very helpful in his work.

"Handbook of French and Belgian Protestantism."

This book is by Mrs. Louise Seymour Houghton, and is sent out by the Federal Council of the Churches. Some things sent out by this council we are unable to approve, but this book deserves our highest approbation. It is a handbook of Protestantism in France and Belgium, and it is full of important data of the past and present conditions that no pastor can afford to ignore. The price is only 75 cents and it can be secured through our committee in Richmond.

"Mexico Under Carranza"—By Thomas E. Gibbon.

Mr. Gibbon has evidently spent much time in Mexico, and being a lawyer he is able to arrange proofs such as will stand any test. We have never read a more terrible indictment of any man than he brings against Carranza. The reader will close the book with a feeling of despair and indignation. He will despair of Mexico unless the country becomes Christianized, and he will burn with indignation as he learns the outrageous cruelties perpetrated upon the natives. The Mexican question is only temporarily closed. In time it will again become critical. Here we have data for an exhaustive and intelligent study of it.

"Prophecy and Authority"—By Kemper Fullerton, M. A.; $1.50; Macmillan Co., New York.

This is a study in the history of the doctrine of interpretation of Scripture, and as such it has claims upon the attention of every studious pastor. Protestantism recognizes the Bible as the only authority demanding obedience, and in that respect it is the opposite of Catholicism which recognizes the Church, through its head, the Pope. He lays down certain scientific principles of interpretation of Scripture, recognized by the Reformers, which he claims are bound to lead to the abandonment of the Millennialist theory.

"Songs From a Watch-Tower"—By Richard Hayes McCartney; Fleming H. Revell Co., Publishers, New York.

These are poems of more than ordinary merit, some religious and some touching upon the war—yet all pure and written in good English. They touch upon a variety of subjects, yet there is not one that will not pay for the reading.

"Some Modern Isms."

Our old friend, Dr. Thomas Carey Johnson, of Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va., has long since made a name for himself as an author. He has written a life of Dr. Dabney, of Dr. Palmer, "Virginia Presbyterianism and Religious Liberty," and "Baptists in the Apostolic Age." His life of Dr. Dabney is one of the strongest biographies written within our knowledge. This present work deals not with the heresies of the early Church, but with the "Isms" of the present day, such as "Russellism," "Eddyism," "Mormonism" and many others.

Those who have to combat these errors will find this book a great help. It is published by our Richmond, Va., Committee of Publication, the price being $1.25 net.

Resolutions Adopted by Kwangju Upon the Death of Mrs. Eugene Bell.

On March 26th occurred the terrible automobile accident which deprived our station and mission of our beloved friend, Mrs. Eugene Bell. This ruling of Providence is to us inscrutable, for both as a worker and as a dear personal friend we hardly feel that we can do without her. Yet we bow in submission before a loving and all wise God, resting in the confidence that all He has wrought has been accomplished for her highest good, for our sanctification and for His Glory.

Mrs. Bell's name is one we can never forget, for her sweet personality had become so endeared to our hearts that we shall never cease to miss her. The keynote of her life was helpfulness, and this showed itself in her many gentle ministries to the Koreans as well as to the missionaries. Constantly busy with her home duties and her mission work, she was nevertheless always serene and unhurried. Often coming in contact with vexatious problems and petty annoyances she was never known to lose her temper or to utter a harsh word. She was never too occupied to listen with patience and kindness to any one who was in sorrow or trouble and to give her quick sympathy and tactful help. No one ever understood better how to help in every possible contingency and no one ever gave herself more unsparingly to this work of helping others. The sick, the sorrowing, the afflicted were her especial care and many of us shall ever remember her self-forgetting sympathy in times of distress. Her happiness was so involved in the happiness of others that she literally rejoiced with those who rejoice and wept with those who weep.

Our mission has sustained a great bereavement in the loss of Mrs. Bell from the work and Kwangju station especially will sorely miss her efficient service. She was keenly interested in any station enterprise and could be counted on to give her sympathetic help and wise council in every community effort. Among the Koreans she was particularly active and successful in connection with the annual women's Bible classes and institutes, the Sunday School and the industrial department of the Girls' School. Many of the Korean women whom she has helped with so much tenderness and patience will sadly miss this faithful friend.

Even more than the work she did, however, the life which she lived will shine as a continual example of Christian womanhood to each one of us and to the Koreans. The memory of Mrs. Bell, which we shall perhaps cherish most will be that of her modest, loving, gentle personality and her entire forgetfulness of self in the devotion of her life to helpful service. Possessed of an unvaryingly sweet disposition she was an ideal missionary and one of the finest spirits who ever lived on a mission field.

Be it, therefore, resolved:

First, that we thank God for the years she spent among us and for the inspiration she has been to us.

Second, that we extend to her sorrowing family our deepest sympathy and assure them of our prayers.

Third, that these resolutions be kept on record in the minute book and a copy of them be sent to the church papers.

News of the Week

The attitude of organized labor seems more favorable than it has been. The fact that they backed their demands upon the Government by threats turned away much sympathy from the cause.

Secretary Hester's annual report on the commercial cotton crop puts this year's crop at 11,639,653 bales.

Dr. W. A. McPhaul, head of the public health work of Robeson county, N. C., has resigned to accept the position as director of rural sanitation of the entire State of Alabama.

Walter Clark, Chief Justice of North Carolina, heads the Plumb R. R. Plan movement. He has issued a statement from Washington setting forth the principles urged.

The next Confederate Reunion will be held in Atlanta, Ga., October 7-10, inclusive, according to an announcement by General Mickle, Chief of Staff, United Confederate Veterans.

Major Graham, Commissioner of Agriculture of North Carolina, has issued a statement in which he says that former estimates of wheat crops were erroneous, but that under the new law they will be correct. Owing to the heavy rains in the spring, the crop will be short.

The N. C. Rock Spring Camp Meeting, August 10, witnessed the largest crowd in its history of 100 years. Twenty thousand people are estimated to have been present. The politicians were there in force, so that religion and politics were combined.

The street car employes of Charlotte, N. C., began a strike on last Sunday, August 10. The management tried to meet them halfway, but they refused to yield in their demands. Hopes are still entertained that the management and the men will get together.

Andrew Carnegie, iron master and philanthropist, died last Monday at his home in the Berkshire Hills. He was 84 years of age, being a Scotchman by birth, but came to this country at the age of 11 years.

Both branches of Congress are devoting time to consideration of the high cost of living. One-half million dollars wanted for that purpose by the federal trades commission.

The railroad brotherhoods through their counsel have filed charges with Congress that the private management of the railroads has been corrupt.

Senator Lodge on Tuesday delivered his long promised speech in opposition to the League of Nations. He was cheered by the gallery crowd.

The fight against the high cost of living is bringing forth fruits in the development of hoarding, and by confiscation the Government is showing that it is in earnest. A New York State groceryman was fined $500 for selling sugar at 15 cents, and at Tampa, Fla., more than 1,000,000 eggs, 100,000 of canned goods and 30,000 pounds of sugar were seized.

The meeting of the North Carolina Federation of Labor for 1920 will be in Charlotte, N. C.

Arrangements have been completed for the inauguration of a London-Paris passenger and baggage air line. The round is to be made in a day.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth district has by a recent decision established the principle that a labor union is responsible for the acts of its members.

(Continued on Page 11)

Home Circle

A THOUGHT FOR WASHING DAY.

The clothes-line is a rosary
Of household help and care;
Each little saint the mother loves
Is represented there.

And when across her garden plot
She walks with thoughtful heed,
I should not wonder if she told
Each garment for a bead.

For Celia's scarlet stockings hang Beside Amelia's skirt,
And Bilbo's breeches, which of late
Were sadly smeared with dirt.

Yon kerchief small wiped bitter tears
For ill success at school;
This pinafore was torn in strife
'Twixt Fred and little Jule.

And that device of finest web
And over-costly lace
Adorned our eldest when she danced
At some gay fashion place.

A stranger passing, I salute
The household in its wear,
And smile to think how near of kin
Are love and toil and prayer.

—Julia Ward Howe.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

A Parable on Growing Old.

Keturah spake unto me, and inquired of me, saying, Wilt thou love me when I am old?

And I answered, I will not.

And Keturah said, Verily thou didst promise.

And I said, I promised nothing of the kind, neither will I perform it. I promised to love the woman whom I married, and she was a young woman, and thou art that woman. Wherefore then should I love a woman who is old?

And she said, But, alas, my husband, I am not young as when I married thee.

And I said, If the years have done anything to thee, they have done the same to me, and I see thee no different, only more dear and more fair. Yea, and when many women are gathered in any place, then do I look around till I find the fairest of them all, and that is thee. For I have always loved fair women and no others, and I am too old to want any other kind. Therefore I love thee more than all else.

And Keturah said, Thou speakest like the foolish lover whom thou hast ever been; and inasmuch as I have thee fooled, it were greater folly to seek to make thee wise. God grant thou be ever as foolish as thou art now.

And I said, O Keturah, I am not unmindful of what the years have wrought in both of us. Thou art the mother of soldiers, of men tall and strong, and a daughter who is older than thou wert when first God gave thee to me. Thou didst not wear glasses when first I knew thee, neither was there a gray hair in thy brown and waving hair, and thy dark eyes looked at me from under a smooth brow. I do verily see in thee some marks of physical change, and I welcome them not either in me or in thee, for mine is an heart of youth, and I delight not in anything that diminisheth strength. Yea, I dread the time when I shall have to be careful what I eat, and when I shall be admonished to take life less strenuously, for that I am no longer young. And I rejoice now as a

(Continued on page 11)

Christian Endeavor

By Rev. S. H. Hay.

M., Aug. 25—The World's Need: Matt. 9:35-38.
 T., Aug. 26—The Inner Impulse: Jer. 20:7-13.
 W., Aug. 27—The Divine Commission: I Cor. 9:16-27.
 T., Aug. 28—The Divine Equipment: Jer. 1:4-10, 17-19.
 F., Aug. 29—The Divine Charge: Acts 20:28-35.
 S., Aug. 30—"Send Me:": Isa. 6:8.

* * *

Topic for Sunday, August 31—The Christian Challenge to Life-Service. Matt. 4:18-22. (Missionary meeting. Life-Work Recruits).

* * *

We are challenged to service by the Saviour's need of us. In our Bible lesson we are told of His calling Andrew and Peter and the sons of Zebedee to His side to help Him in the great enterprise which He had started. He is pleading with us today to join His band of workers on the same great task, still unfinished. What a shame that He has not had from us the needed help to complete the work! If we realized how much He needs us, and how much the building of the Kingdom is retarded by the lack of help, surely we'd offer ourselves. But our response is so dull and sluggish that the wonder is He does not abandon the whole plan of saving us, and let us die in our sins. But he does not give up; He is still calling for help in saving mankind. Will we allow His calls to go unheeded?

* * *

We are challenged by the human need, which is next in importance to that of the Lord. Doctors and nurses are needed to man the 7,000 protestant missionary hospitals already established, and the thousands that will yet be built.

We need thousands of teachers in heathendom to run the mission schools that are seeking to lift a ray of light in the darkness.

We need ministers and women evangelistic workers to tell the simple plan of salvation among the millions that have not been made to see that the blood of Jesus Christ affords the long-sought means of pardon and cleansing.

We need here at home twenty really devoted workers to every one that we now have. The standing disgrace of Christendom and the church is the fact that in every congregation a little handful of people do all the work and the rest do less than nothing. Doctors, financiers, housekeepers, laborers, teachers, lawyers, and others are being called of God today to a life of devotion which will transform the church from the miserable thing which it is today into the mighty power which it could and ought to be.

* * *

We are challenged by the need there is in our own inner selves. There are stunted men and women in plenty who have never yet found themselves and never found expansion and contentment because they have not devoted themselves and their resources to Christian service. They are not doing the thing for which God made them. They are like eagles with wings they never tried in flight. Dwarfed and stultified, they need to launch out and find their strength. Like the Apostle Paul before conversion, they are restless and unhappy, and they need, as he did, to find their place in life and the blessedness of Christian service.

* * *

God does not want us all to be preachers and missionaries. Nobody would be left to finance the work and carry on the life of the earth. Homes, business, schools, and even amusements must run right on, but all must be organized into a unit for God so that their whole force can be employed for establishing the Kingdom.

* * *

Have brief debates on these queries: (1) Resolvtd that a truly Christian doctor can do as much as a minister for

The Prayer Meeting

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING AUG. 24, 1919:
 THE CHURCH AND THE LOCAL COMMUNITY.

Acts 4:33-35; Gal. 6:10.

The first suggested reading or text given above should have commenced with the thirty-second verse: "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and soul." The experiment in communism was one of the beautiful mistakes of the Jerusalem church life; but it sprang from a root that is the vital breath of the local church. The love and the sympathy of these early Christians knew no bounds; and while it led to an economic blunder, it was fruitful in many precious ways. There is nothing that can take the place of kindness, and love, and sympathy, and helpfulness, in the church. These things make the Christian community one in influence and in effectiveness. They tremendously

(Continued on page 12)

God. (2) That a business man here at home can do as much for God as a missionary can.

When we run everything for the sake of advancing the Kingdom, tell what effect that has on the way we run the home? The business? Our amusements? Our schools?

News of the Week.

(Continued from 10)

The United States Government has warned Mexico that the lives of our citizens must be protected, else this country will be forced to resort to more extreme measures.

The President has arranged with Foreign Mission Committee of the Senate to talk over the treaty next Tuesday at the White House.

The American First Division, the first to go to France and the heroes of Cantigny, have begun to leave the Rhine for home.

Samuel Gompers, president of American Federation of Labor, who attended the labor congress at Amsterdam, sailed from Brest last Sunday for his return to America.

Paris' first real display of styles since the war began is being attended by about 300 American buyers. They are, however, showing greater independence of French styles than ever before.

Home Circle.

(Continued from page 10)

strong man to run a race, neither do I know sickness nor weariness nor pain. But I suspect that the years have left some mark upon us both, only I see it not in either of us. And thou art more fair to me than ever, yea, and ten thousand times more dear.

And I said, Age dependeth not on how long a man hath been born, for some men were old from their birth. The angel that rolled the stone away from the tomb of the dear Lord Christ had been in heaven ten thousand years, but the women saw him, and had he been old they would have noticed it; but he was a young man.

And I said, Keturah, if thou art any older than when I married thee, I do not suspect it.

And Keturah said, Just for that I will make thee a cherry pie; and my cherry pies are as good as when we first were married.

And I said, yea, and I thank God that my appetite for them is as good as it was then.

And I might mention that it was some pie.—Congregationalist.

Sunday School

By Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D.

SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY.

Golden Text—"As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially to them who are of the household of faith."

Gal. 1-10; Luke 10:25-37.

Aug. 24, 1919.

Cain, the first murderer, said: "Am I my brother's keeper," and denied to his Maker all responsibility for the welfare of his fellowman. In all ages since, the selfish among mankind have been disposed to do the same thing. The Almighty held Cain responsible for his treatment of Abel, and He will call every man to account for his conduct towards his fellowmen. In the passage studied Christ enforces the duty of "Social Responsibility" and illustrates it by an impressive example. The scribe with whom our Saviour talked desired to know how he could work his way to heaven and eternal life. Our lesson presents to us Salvation by Works, the Victim of Thieves, the Neglectors of the Sufferer, and the Samaritan's Help.

I. Salvation by Works.

The question of the scribe is very common among men and has been asked by the thoughtful in all ages. It was propounded to our Lord by the amiable Young Ruler. Every sane thinking man knows that he needs salvation from sin and threatening evils and sometimes inquires, What can I do to deliver myself and to attain everlasting life, or perpetual existence and felicity? The Saviour's answer given the scribe should settle the question for all men. He tells the inquirer if you would work your way to heaven and eternal life "Keep the Commandments;" not some of them but all of them, not in a defective way, but perfectly, not from fear of punishment, but from love of the law and the Law-giver. Christ, too, approves of the summary of the law given, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind and with all thy strength, and thy neighbor as thyself." But every reflecting man knows that he has never kept the Divine law perfectly. He has not done it in the past, and is liable to penalty for past transgressions, and he will not do it in the future. It is written, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law to do them." Salvation by works then is impossible for fallen and condemned man. This way to eternal life is closed. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." The scribe desires to know "Who is my neighbor?" and the parable of "The Good Samaritan" answers him and sets him a shining example.

II. The Victim of Thieves.

He is described as a sad case well calculated to stir the heart to pity and help. Going from Jerusalem to Jericho, he is assaulted by highway robbers. They beat him, strip him, rob him and leave him half dead. They rob him of health, of clothing and substance and attempt to deprive him of life. The victim has done them no harm. He only possesses what they want and assuming, as others have done in modern times, "that might gives right," they endeavor to take by force what could not be attained with honesty. Some think that "To the victor belong the spoils," and that thieves and robbers can perpetrate deeds like these with impunity. But Holy Writ says "Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days." A Sovereign God declares, "But the transgressors shall be destroyed together, the end of the wicked shall be cut off."

III. The Neglectors of the Sufferer.

Two of these are mentioned and they show neglect in diverse ways. The Priest and the Levite were both ministers of religion, though the first performed more sacred functions than the last. As both were avowed servants of God, they might have been expected to help the needy. Had they been publicans, whose main object was selfish gain, they might have manifested indifference without surprising us. The Priest glanced at the victim but did not go near him. He perhaps thought that some one occupying a less dignified position might afford help. The Levite "came and looked on him and then "passed by on the other side." He was pained to contemplate distress and to be reminded of duty that he was unwilling to perform, and departed as soon as possible. He was probably appalled at the trouble, effort and expense that aid given would involve.

IV. The Samaritan's Help.

He was not a Jew but belonged to a different and an alien nation with which the Jews were at variance. The Samaritan was moved by compassion and not by any hope of gain. He afforded varied, self-sacrificing and efficient help. He bound up the sufferer's wounds, "pouring in oil and wine." "He placed him on his own beast" while he walked. He "carried him to an inn and took care of him." He paid the innkeeper for service already rendered and promised to repay in the future any other expense he might incur in caring for the patient. He aided by his property his efforts, his money and credit. Our Saviour says, He was a true neighbor and "Go thou and do likewise."

Prayer Meeting.

(Continued from page 11)

augment the influence of the church in its local environment. The Apostolic Constitution (Book IV, Ch. ii) says: "Do you, therefore. O presbyters, be solicitous about maintaining orphans, letting them want for nothing; to the widows be as husbands; to the artisans, give work; to the stranger, an house; to the hungry, food; to the thirsty, drink; to the naked, clothing; to the sick visitation; to prisoners, assistance." "Mind your business with becoming seriousness, so that you may always have enough to support yourselves and those who are needy, and not burden the Church of God."

Thus soon did the infant church see the mistake made yonder in Jerusalem; but the spirit of love and sympathy survived.

The church ought to be more helpful to those who need help. Many young men and young women need the helping hand and wise guidance of the church; in deciding upon the future calling, in securing positions. Communism bleeds the economic community to death; but economic helpfulness builds it up. It is easy for a Christian to impress the young with their spiritual solicitude, if he has first shown by his economic interest that his love is genuine. Such Christians are the strength and glory of the local church. They will not lack opportunity "to work that which is good toward all men," and their lives and testimony will powerfully affect the community and be mightily used in building the spiritual house of God.

There are too many divisions—too many "churches." These various "churches" are too little the church of God. They often dislike each other. They are often meanly jealous of each other; and between church hostilities and competitions the Christ is again crucified. The condition is frequently appalling. True Christian love is not and cannot be bounded by the limits of sects: and sectarianism deliberately murders Christian love in behalf of "the church."

This is an imperative aspect of the church in relation to the local community. It is high time to stop all this, and to let Christ come into his own.

Paul did not wait for opportunity to confront him, to demand of him, to plead with him. He made no excuses to sidetrack opportunity, neither did he pin it to another's shoulder or conscience; but he sought out opportunity to do good unto all men, especially his fellow Christians. Ah, what glory and power would come to the local church if her men and women were so. That Mission Sunday School would have the best workers, it would grow under the smile of God, until in a few years it would, without friction, or scism, or party spirit, become a new local church. Too many churches glory in bigness and sterility. They want no children. They abhor a colony. They remind one of the rich man of Luke 12:16-21.

Presbyterian Standard

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE.
 REV. W. L. BOGGS, Circulation Manager.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.
 ESTABLISHED JANUARY 1, 1858.

Entered at the Post Office at Charlotte, N. C., as second class matter.

A Religious Newspaper for the Family, Devoted to the Interest of Christ's Kingdom as Represented by the Southern Presbyterian Church.

CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE

The Standard Challenged	2
The Ad-Interim Committee on Federal Relations Sunday at Montreat	2
The Race Riots	3
CONTRIBUTED—
The Union Seminary Review and Federal Union. By Thornton Whaling, D. D.	4
A Teaching Ministry—By Rev. G. E. Moorehouse	5
The Rotary Amendment—By W. C. C.	5
Three Propositions—Ergo—By W. M. C.	5
Restoration of Protestant Churches in France and Belgium—By Dr. Henry van Dyke.	6-8
Salem, Va., Revisited—By Rev. A. W. Pitzer, D. D.	7
Intervention in Mexico—By S. H. Chester.	7-8
Book Notices	9
Resolutions Adopted by Kwanju Upon the Death of Mrs. Eugene Bell	9
DEPARTMENTS—
News of the Week	10
Home Circle	10
Christian Endeavor—By Rev. S. H. Hay	11
Prayer Meeting—By Rev. C. D. Waller	11
Sunday School—By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.	12

ANNOUNCEMENT.

 The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription is paid.
 When change of address is desired, give both the old and the new address.
 When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the last subscription paid.
 No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

TREASURERS OF BENEVOLENT CAUSES.

Foreign Missions—Edwin F. Willis, 154 Fifth Ave., N., Nashville, Tenn.
 Home Missions—A. N. Sharp, 1522 Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga.
 Christian Education and Ministerial Relief—John Stites, Fifth and Market Streets, Louisville, Ky.
 Publication and Sabbath School Work—R. E. Magill, 6-8 N. Sixth Street, Richmond, Va.
 Bible Cause—Wm. Foulke, Bible House, New York.

Church News

Collections—August is not assigned to any one of our Church causes, but in many of the Synods and Presbyteries it is assigned to Synodical, Presbyterian, or congregational home missions. Pastors and churches can obtain information from the chairman of the committee of their own Presbytery.

WANTED—ANOTHER MEDICAL MAN FOR CHINA.

Following the call recently issued by the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions for an additional medical missionary to help Dr. Price in the new hospital about to be built at Taichow, and another to help Dr. Young at Soochow, we now send out an urgent call for another man to be sent to Kiangyin to help Dr. Worth and to be ready to take his place during his furlough in 1920. We hope this call may meet a response from some of our young Christian doctors returning from the war.

S. H. Chester, D.D., Secretary.

PERSONAL.

Mr. C. B. Riddle, of Burlington, N. C., has been secured as the campaign director for the States of Virginia, North and South Carolina, in the interest of the endowment campaign that Agnes Scott College is conducting. Mr. Riddle has had experience in this line of work, having given large aid in the recent Elon College campaign for endowment. He is the editor of "The Christian Sun" and "The Tither."

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Presbytery of Concord will meet in regular fall session in Unity Church, Woodleaf, N. C., at 11 a. m., September 16, 1919.
 E. D. Brown, S. C.

North Wilkesboro—We held two services in Clark Memorial Church at Danbury Sunday and both services were well attended and at the evening service ten children were baptized.
 John S. Morrow.

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg will meet in Steele Creek Presbyterian Church, near Charlotte, N. C., on September 16, 1919, at 11 a. m. Special fiftieth anniversary exercises will be held on Wednesday, the 17th.
 John E. Wool, S. C.

Siloam Church—Beginning the first Sunday in August, the pastor was assisted in an eight days' meeting by Rev. J. T. Hall, of Cleveland, N. C. Two joined our church on profession. Christians were encouraged and strengthened. Mr. Hall not only delighted the people with his preaching, but greatly endeared himself to them. The people also won Mr. Hall's heart, for they are a delightful people to serve. Having been college mates, it was a great pleasure for both him and the pastor to be associated these few days in the work of their Lord.
 W. T. Wadley.

Unionville—We have just closed a meeting with Brother Shankle, July 10, at Unionville. Between eight and ten pledged to accept Christ as their personal Saviour, two joined the church Sunday night. The crowds were not large but many expressed their appreciation of the meeting. Mr. Shankle is very much loved and appreciated by the people of Unionville of all classes and churches. I am to assist him, beginning Thursday night, 14th, at Bethlehem, and will go from there to Allen's, beginning the last Sunday in August.
 D. B. McLaughlin.

Raleigh—The congregation of the First Presbyterian church of Raleigh has added to many previous kindnesses to their pastor by presenting him with a six-cylinder Buick touring car. Two Ford cars had already been given him, and had gone the way that all Fords go, in time. This splendid car succeeds them, and will greatly facilitate the work both in the city and in the country. This is one church that lives up to the familiar congregational promise in the installation service—"to furnish him (their pastor) with whatsoever you may see needful for the honor of religion and for his comfort among you."

W. McC. W.

Charlotte—Rev. Daniel Iverson, of St. Matthews, S. C., has notified the congregation of the Tenth Avenue Church of his acceptance of the call to the pastorate of the church which they extended him recently. The date of his entering on the work has not been decided upon.

Charlotte—Rev. H. H. Sweets, D.D., secretary of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, filled the pulpit of the Second Church on last Sabbath. In the morning Dr. Sweets spoke on "When a Man is a Man," showing conclusively that a man is not at his best unless he is a Christian. In the evening he had as his subject "Joy in Religion." Both sermons were strong and practical and delighted those present.

Concord Presbytery met in called session at Hickory, N. C., August 9, 1919. Present, five ministers and one ruling elder.

Rev. E. M. Craig, D.D., was received from the Presbytery of Macon, and on the following day was installed pastor of the Hickory church.

Rev. W. T. Wadley tendered his resignation as pastor of the Old Fort and Siloam churches, and after hearing from the churches, the resignation was accepted and the pastoral relation dissolved, to take effect September 1. Mr. Wadley was dismissed to the Presbytery of Albemarle.

E. D. Brown, Stated Clerk.

Charlotte—At the First Church last Sabbath Rev. W. R. Dobyns, D.D., of St. Joseph, Mo., preached at both the morning and the evening services in the absence of the pastor, Dr. Johnson. Dr. Dobyns is a welcome visitor to Charlotte, where he has preached on several occasions, and he was heard Sabbath by large congregations at both services. On Saturday evening Dr. Dobyns was one of the speakers at the Conference of Young People that was holding its sessions at the First Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church of this city. He spoke on "Stewardship" on this occasion and greatly delighted his audience both by his matter and method of handling the subject.

Philadelphia—Dr. Wm. Black assisted me here in a meeting that closed the 27th. The Spirit of God was very manifest and Dr. Black preached with greater power, I think, even than usual. There was added to our church 64 and between 20 and 30 will go to the other churches. All differences between members of the congregation was cleared up and a Godly fellowship now exists. I think the harmony and fellowship of the church is better than it has been for years. We are so grateful to Brother Black. With the addition of 64 while he was here and two last Sabbath, makes the number added since I came here just a little better than a year, 150, and pretty near all on confession of faith. We are expecting others and we hope by the end of the second year to make it even 200. God has been good to Philadelphia church and its people. We have great reason to give thanks.

There will be a missionary conference of the county held here next Saturday from 3 p. m. to 9 p. m., and we expect a large crowd and a good time.

D. B. McLaughlin.

Macedonia Church—On the first Sabbath in August the pastor, Rev. Robert S. Arrowood, according to appointment, began the week's meeting at this church, preaching twice to large and attentive audiences. This is always a home-coming Sunday at this church, and many visitors were welcomed back to their old home church.

On Monday Rev. Robert S. Arrowood, Jr., arrived from Salisbury, where he is now located, and for the next three days preached twice a day to the appreciative congregations who each time filled the church, with growing interest in the glowing words of the excellent Gospel sermons. At the final service there were twelve additions to the church; and in response to the call of the pastor a great number of re-consecrations.

The Home Mission collection was $62.63.

This church is daily expecting the arrival of the new organ recently purchased.

Officers and people feel encouraged and strengthened as a result of this meeting.

L.

Sanford—The pastor, Rev. W. S. Golden, was discharged from duty as a chaplain in the army on July 2 and returned immediately to his work with the Sanford Church. On his return he was delighted with the good work done by the church in his absence. The largely increased pledges for benevolences had been paid on time, in spite of the long period when the church was closed on account of influenza. The people had already raised the money for a new pipe organ, to cost $3,000, and had ordered a new automobile for the pastor, which is extremely useful to him in his work. During the past year, as frequently as circumstances would permit, services have been held by Rev. J. McIver Wicker. His preaching, his visiting and his influence were no doubt largely instrumental in helping the church through this trying period.

The whole month of July the church was co-operating with the other churches of the town in the McLendon meetings. Twenty-one have united with our church on profession as a result of the meetings. There has never before been so much interest shown in this section of the State in a revival meeting, and all the churches of the town and county have felt the stimulus of it.

Waynesville Church—Rev. W. M. Sikes, D.D., pastor. At a recent communion service the pastor had the privilege of welcoming twelve new members into this church, nine on certificate and three on profession of faith. Two of these new members are heads of families, and all are substantial supporters of the church. This ingathering has been the result of personal work on the part of pastor and people without any protracted meeting. Two infants were baptized by the pastor recently also.

Waynesville is now crowded with visitors from the warmer portions of the country, and consequently our church is having large congregations at every service. Our Presbyterian friends from other places are delighted with our beautiful church building and with the inspiring and helpful services conducted by the pastor. There is probably no more lovely place in the mountains where friends can enjoy the pleasures of good climate, scenic beauty, invigorating atmosphere, and good Presbyterian church privileges than in the city of Waynesville. Be sure to attend the Presbyterian church when you come to Waynesville.

Montreat—Beginning with a most forceful address on the training of the child by Rev. John M. Vandermeullen, D. D., formerly pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Louisville, and now pastor of Oak Park Presbyterian Church, Chicago, and closing with an address by the same speaker on "The Rewards of the Ministry," the entire program of the Montreat Conference on Christian Education and Ministerial Relief was one that gave distinct impetus to these great causes of the church. Other speakers who were heard during this Conference were Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D.D., secretary of the executive committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, who presided over the Conference; Rev. M. E. Melvin, D.D., field secretary of the executive committee; Rev. D. M. Douglass, of Clinton, S. C., president of South Carolina College; Miss Mary Owen Graham, of Raleigh, president of Peace Institute, and the first woman who has spoken on the Montreat platform during a Conference in the interest of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief. In addition to the address delivered by these speakers, one session of the Conference was devoted to

(Continued on Page 16)

Read II Kings 6:17--Then This Poem

"Ye weary ones, ye may not see
Your helpers in their downward flight,
Nor hear the sound of silvery wings,
Slow beating through the hush of night.

There are, who like the seer of old,
Can see the helpers God has sent;
How life's rugged mountain side
Is white with many an angel tent."

And Then Join the Increasing Host Who Are Praying for Our Success

Every week many pledge their support by a promise to pray.
There are literally hundreds praying of whom we know nothing.
We know this—Because God is daily answering prayers.
The first month of the Campaign $55,000 was pledged.
The town of Statesville has just gone over $50,000.
Practically none turn down the appeal to help raise the Million.

This is the Day of Opportunity for Christian Education in N. C.

Pray That God May Do More for Us Than We Dream or Think

AIMS

1. To help North Carolina Presbyterians, 50,000 strong, to appreciate the fundamental place of the Christian college in training effective Christian leaders.
2. To visit practically every member in every church in the Synod of North Carolina; to discover and enlist many friends able to give largely; large numbers able to give in small sums; hosts willing to pray and work.
3. To reach the minimum goal of One Million Dollars within the time limits.

PRAY

1. That God may be honored in all the methods, efforts and spirit of the Campaign.
2. That the money secured may be so given as to bless the givers as well as the colleges.
3. That many young men and women may be inspired to enter one of these Christian colleges for better preparation for their life's work, and that through these colleges many may find God's plan for themselves.
4. That the men directing the Campaign—the committee: Mr. A. M. Scales, of Greensboro, chairman; M. E. Melvin, the manager, and all the men who work in the field—may have God's blessing upon them and His direct leadership in this great effort; that they may be wise, patient, tactful and victorious—and helpful.
5. That the Campaign may kindle many fires among the Presbyterians of North Carolina that shall light up the darkest parts of the earth.

PRAYER PLEDGE

Believing in the fundamental importance of Christian Education; interested in the success of the Million Dollar Campaign for our schools in North Carolina; with faith in God and the power of prayer, I covenant to pray daily, or as near thereto as possible, for the success of this effort.

Name _____

Address _____

Date _____

(This pledge will be kept in confidence and not used publicly)

Will you not sign the attached pledge and mail to Headquarters? You can pray as well without signing it, but we can work better and harder if we know you are praying.

Campaign Headquarters
Presbyterian Schools
Greensboro, N. C.

Church News.

(Continued from Page 14)

the interest of the orphanage work, and this work was brought before the audience present in a forceful manner by exercises furnished in attractive program by children from the Thornwell Orphanage, the Barium Springs Orphanage and the Balfour Orphanage, and added to this were messages from the superintendents of the three orphanages named.

Mamie Bays.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Piedmont Presbytery will meet in Belton, S. C., Tuesday, October 7, at 8:30 p. m. Robert Adams, S. C.

Central Church, Central—On July 13 the following additional officers were ordained and installed over this congregation: L. C. Posey and W. A. Oliver, elders; T. A. Folger, deacon. Several members have been received since the present pastorate was begun a few months ago.

W. E. D.

Fort Lawn—Rev. R. C. Reed, D.D., of Columbia, S. C., recently closed an eight days' meeting in this church. The largest congregations ever assembled in the church came to hear him preach the old-fashioned Gospel Truth in a plain, clear and convincing way. Only a few were added to the church membership; but the entire membership and all the community were much benefited by the services. Cor.

Trenton—A most promising young man in the person of Mr. William Wise was ordained elder, at the age of just twenty, in this church. Mr. Wise, upon graduation at the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, came home, went in business with his father and with the church. He is one of the youngest elders in the Southern Church and promises to be one of the best young men. "Go thou and do likewise." Mr. Wise is now our Sunday school superintendent and the school is doing well. Pastor.

Columbia—At the recent commencement of the University of South Carolina, Rev. Andrew W. Blackwood, pastor of the First Church, had the degree of Doctor of Divinity conferred on him by this institution. Dr. Blackwood is spending his vacation in Chicago, where he is preaching for Dr. Plumer Bryan at the Church of the Covenant. In the meantime the pulpit of the First Church is being filled by Drs. Melton Clark, L. Ross Lynn, Edwin Muller, and D. M. Douglas.

First Church, Greenville—This church was the scene of a delightful occasion Friday evening, August 1. The congregation with their friends met to welcome Rev. George A. Nickles, who comes to us as an assistant pastor to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Rev. J. R. Cunningham. Mr. Nickles has but recently returned from "over there," where he served for seven months as chaplain with the Thirty-sixth Division, 142nd Infantry. Prior to his enlistment he was serving the church at Black Mountain and it is with deep regret that the people there give him up to enter his new field. Mr. Nickles will have entire charge of the work during the time Dr. Sloan is away on his vacation.

The work at Camp Sevier goes on despite the fact that there are no cups of coffee or hot biscuit to be added to the thousands served "the boys" during the encampment, for there are hundreds there to be ministered to and right joyfully does the church enter into this service. Different organizations have adopted different wards and add in many ways to the comfort and happiness of our boys there who have given of their best to their country and are now suffering from the effects of the horrible German gases. It is an inspiration to see the wonderfully fine spirit manifested by the men upon their beds of sickness and during the convalescent period.

The church has suffered heavily within the past two months in the passing of three of our most devoted ruling elders. During the month of June death claimed J. C. Caldwell; in July T. C. Stuart answered the call, and August 1 our hearts were again saddened by the death of our senior elder, H. W. Cely. While the church mourns the loss of these consecrated men, they will ever be with us, for the lives of such men can but bear fruit through the ages to come.

Mrs. E. L. Hughes, Sec.

Seneca—Sunday, July 27, 1919, will always have a place in the history of the Seneca Presbyterian Church, for that was the date on which their handsome new building was formally dedicated to the worship and service of Almighty God. Dr. James I. Vance, of Nashville, preached the sermon, the pastor, Rev. I. E. Wallace, and people joined in a responsive reading in which they solemnly set aside the building to the worship and service of God; and Rev. M. R. Kirkpatrick, a former pastor, offered the dedicatory prayer. The building was completed and occupied about two years ago, at a cost of about $20,000, but a debt of about $6,000 was carried over. At the annual meeting of all the officers of the church in January, when the church plans and policies are made out for the year, it was decided that the time was opportune to lift this debt. And a committee was appointed to make a canvass of the congregation for this purpose. It soon reported that this purpose had been accomplished. The Ladies' Aid Society of the church have installed a handsome pipe organ at a cost of about $2,000. This congregation in the last four years, in addition to this expenditure of about $20,000 on their plant, have more than doubled their contributions to benevolences, and have increased the pastor's salary twice. A large congregation, of all denominations and from the whole surrounding country, gathered to share in this occasion. Dr. Vance spoke again at the vesper service in the afternoon to a large and appreciative congregation. At this service he told of his experiences with, and his impressions of, the doughboys in France. Dr. Vance not only has a high regard of what our boys effected over there, but takes an optimistic view of its effect upon them.—Christian Observer.

ALABAMA.

Rev. W. H. Richardson has closed his evangelistic work in North Alabama Presbytery, after a service extending over two and one-half years. Mr. Richardson will continue in the evangelistic work and will be available for service in any Synod. His address is 3510 West End Avenue, Nashville, Tenn.

ARKANSAS.

Womble—This church has greatly enjoyed a series of services conducted by Rev. W. Moore Scott, Synodical Superintendent of Home Missions, held the last week in July. There were more than forty professions of faith, and thirty-seven additions to the Presbyterian Church. Dr. Scott greatly delighted the people by his fine sermons as well as by his genial fellowship among them.

Home Missions—Announcement has been made through the chairman of Home Missions, Dr. J. C. Williams, of the gift of $20,000 in five per cent bonds by a prominent lawyer of the state, to be used for the cause of Home Missions in the State of Arkansas. This splendid gift will be of great benefit in carrying on the work in the State.

Batesville—Under the auspices of Arkansas Presbytery and the Presbyterian Ministers' Association of Memphis, Tenn., a delightful conference for Christian workers was held at Arkansas College, August 5-14. The program committee had been very happy in their selection of teachers and speakers. With Dr. W. M. Scott and Rev. J. W. Jeter teaching Home Missions, Dr. A. B. Curry, Foreign Missions, Drs. W. W. Harrison and R. A. Brown, Evangelism, Mr. A. H. Whitmarsh, Stewardship, Drs. W. S. Lacy and T. W. Currie, Christian Education, and Mrs. Winsborough and Mrs. J. B. Newell, Woman's Work, every phase of Church work was presented and that by experts.

In addition to this part of the program there was a series of popular lectures by Rev. C. W. Somerville, D.D., on Bible Doctrine and by Dr. Wm. Crowe on Church History, and a delightful story hour for children by Mrs. Torreyson, a Bible hour for women by Mrs. Street, Sabbath School Methods by Mesdames Head and Edmondson and Teacher Training by Mrs. Castles.

The conference closed August 14 and was regarded as a real success as to attendance and interest aroused. The program was praised by all as equal to the best offered anywhere.

Rev. O. W. Wardlaw, of Oakland and Hickory Wythe, led in the size of delegations from churches.

There is little doubt as to holding similar conferences next summer and the following years.

GEORGIA.

Waycross—Rev. J. S. Sibley, D.D., has entered upon his new field of service as the pastor of this church under very favorable circumstances. He is being greeted by large congregations in spite of the hot weather and has received a most cordial welcome by the people that he is to serve.

Athens—Athens and Augusta Presbyteries, at a joint meeting held recently in this city, decided to employ jointly a superintendent of Home Missions and Evangelist, and Rev. C. M. Chumbley, of Augusta, was elected to the office. Mr. Chumbley is already the evangelist for Augusta Presbytery and in addition to this, for the past four months has been supplying the pulpit of the Greene Street Church, during the absence of the pastor overseas. He has not given his decision in the matter of the call.

Pryor Street, Atlanta—One of the most impressive services ever held in this church was witnessed by the congregation on the last Sunday morning in July when twelve of our young people dedicated their lives to the gospel ministry and Foreign Mission work. Five of them were young men and seven were young women. This seemed a fitting conclusion of the visit of Rev. and Mrs. A. Hoyt Miller, missionaries under appointment to Africa, as well as the natural outcome of years of prayer and preparation on the part of both pastor and people. Mr. Miller had preached a most earnest sermon on Foreign Missions, which was all the more impressive to us from the fact that he has served this church for two summers as assistant to the pastor, Rev. J. Edwin Hemphill. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have the unbounded confidence of our people and their daily prayers. In addition to the regular support of Rev. H. Maxey Smith in China, this church has taken great interest in helping supply the equipment for Mr. Miller, as he goes forth to Africa.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville—After a six months' leave of absence, spent in study and in rest, the pastor of the Highland Church, Rev. T. M. Hawes, D.D., expects to take up his work again the first of September.

Louisville—During the absence of their pastor, Dr. Ogden, on vacation, the congregation of the Second Church held a congregational meeting at which they decided to increase his salary from $5,500 to $6,000. Dr. Ogden, during the year that he has served this church, has greatly endeared himself to his people. The church is planning greater activities and increased service for the future.

MISSISSIPPI.

Jackson—The Brotherhood of the First Presbyterian Church, Jackson, has undertaken together with Dr. Frazer, president of Belhaven College, to complete the new annex building at the college by placing a handsome swimming pool in the first floor of the new annex building.

The contract for this pool has been let and it will be ready for use by the time school opens.

This makes something like $20,000 which the friends of Belhaven College have put in this new building. This is a commendable work worthy of emulation for the Presbyterians in other parts of the State.

The accrued reservations of the college are larger than ever before and with this new attraction the dormitory will be overflowing at the time school opens.

Dr. W. H. Frazer, president of the college, who is so popular with the student body and the public, is away on his vacation at Montreat, N. C., and with relatives in Alabama.

MISSOURI.

The Presbytery of Upper Missouri will meet in the Walnut Grove Presbyterian Church, Tuesday evening, September 16, 1919, at 8 o'clock. Charles R. Nisbet, S. C.

Memphis—The new manual pipe organ, which was contracted for last spring and is being built by the Kilgens, of St. Louis, is expected almost any time. The deacons are raising the money to have the church and manse repainted. The pastor, Dr. F. M. Hawley, returned with his family July 4, after spending his vacation in the Carolinas with relatives. While away Mrs. Hawley successfully underwent a serious operation, prolonging their stay several weeks. A handsome purse was handed Dr. Hawley soon after their return to assist in meeting the expense of the trip. After the monthly social in July the manse folks found that their back door had been barricaded with jars of fruit and other good things while they were on the church lawn.

VIRGINIA.

Richmond, First Church—The board of deacons of this church has recently accepted the resignation of their treasurer, W. C. Camp, who has served them in that capacity for the past thirty years. Mr. Camp has made a most efficient and faithful officer during this time and resolutions of appreciation of him and his work were passed by his fellow officers.

The Presbytery of Montgomery met in special session in the Westminster church, Lynchburg, July 22. Rev. C. B. Ratchford offered his resignation as pastor of the Academy and Quaker Memorial churches, that he might accept a call to a field in Potomac Presbytery. After hearing from Mr. Ratchford, giving his reasons for resigning his present charge, the representatives from the churches were heard, entering a protest. Presbytery declined to accept the resignation. Mr. Ratchford's salary was raised $300.

IMPORTANT EDUCATIONAL MEETING.

There was held on Monday, August 11, at Chicora College, a very important meeting of the presidents of the South Carolina Presbyterian Educational institutions, namely, Drs. Lynn, of the Thornwell Orphanage; Douglas, of the Presbyterian College; Byrd, of Chicora College; Whaling, of the Columbia Theological Seminary, and Dr. Melton Clark, of the Second Church, Charleston. Dr. Clark was requested to act as chairman. It was decided to call a meeting of committees appointed by the respective boards of the institutions, to be held in the office of the president of the Columbia Seminary on Thursday, September 11, at 3 o'clock, to arrange for details of the canvass. The amount that will likely be asked for is one million, all to be divided between these four institutions, purpose to be to put them on their feet in the way of endowments and equipment for the highest and most effective service. Committees of the various institutions are as follows:

Columbia Seminary—Rev. Dr. W. J. McKay, Sumter, S. C.; Rev. Dr. Hugh R. Murchison, Lancaster, S. C.; Mr. John McSween, Esq., Timmonsville, S. C.; Rev. Dr. Thornton Whaling, Columbia, S. C.

Chicora College—Mr. J. S. Wannamaker, St. Mathews.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. Jno. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

Orange Presbyterial Auxiliary was very fortunate in securing the services of Miss Mabel Hall for nine days during the month of June. The president prepared an itinerary which embraced some of the churches that are not often given the opportunity of hearing our home and foreign missionaries. Miss Hall presented the needs of the mountains of Kentucky where she has been laboring. Her message was full of interest. One of the Auxiliaries had a free-will offering just after hearing her earnest appeal, and the contribution was sent to help supply the needs of one of the mountain schools in Kentucky. Miss Hall is a native of North Carolina. She is now at Vanderpool, Va., where she is taking a much needed rest for a few weeks.

Mrs. Geo. W. Oldham.

MORE ABOUT THE TUSCALOOSA CONFERENCE.

In connection with the notice of the Tuscaloosa Conference for Colored Women, September 20-27, in the last issue of the "Standard," I should like to urge that our women who have not already done so take up at once the sending of delegates to this conference. Please do not think that just because your Presbyterial is sending a delegate your obligation ends there. What we do so want this year is that a very large number of our colored ministers' wives shall be at this conference.

In our judgment no step has been taken in our colored work that has such wonderful possibilities for the betterment of the home and community life of the negro as this conference has. Oh, how blind we have been!

Do we not see that just as the white woman sets the standard for the home, so the colored woman does?

Now, let us get busy and have not just one or two delegates from each Presbytery, but as many ministers' wives as we can. If we get really interested and enthused over it, telling what this conference really stands for, and what we know it has done for some who have attended, and how they are passing the good on to others, it will not be hard to get the money for expenses of delegates.

Am giving below some "Results of the Conferences" as they have been reported to Mrs. Winsborough:

Some Results.

From Mrs. Booker T. Washington, Tuskegee Institute, Ala:

"I have read many times lately the report of the third annual conference at Tuscaloosa. I noticed in the last report that you asked for means to bring the ministers' wives of the Church to the conference. I do not believe that a more important move can be made. These are the women who must lead. If your conference did nothing more than improve this class of women it will have served a most valuable purpose. I am enclosing a check for twenty-five dollars.

"I wish that it were many times more, but there are so many places where money is needed and since the war is over there will be many more.

"I received much inspiration while I was there and I hope that I was of some service to the women who were gathered there."

S. C.; Rev. Dr. E. E. Gillespie, York, S. C.; Rev. H. W. Pratt, Abbeville, S. C.; Rev. Dr. S. C. Byrd, Columbia, S. C.

Presbyterian College—Rev. Dr. A. D. P. Gilmour, Spartanburg, S. C.; Dr. Melton Clark, Charleston, S. C.; Rev. Dr. Alexander Martin, Rock Hill, S. C.; Rev. Dr. D. M. Douglas, Clinton, S. C.

Thornwell Orphanage—Mr. C. M. Bailey, Clinton, S. C.; Mr. Amos Morse, Abbeville, S. C.; Rev. G. M. Wilcox, Bennettsville, S. C.; Rev. Dr. L. Ross Lynn, Clinton, S. C.

Maria Fearing, 20 years a missionary to Congo Belge, Africa:

"I am going around and finding children who do not attend any Sunday school and persuading them to attend some Sunday school, and at same time trying to interest their mothers to attend church and mothers' meeting.

"The conference was a great help to me. It made me stronger spiritually and more determined to help and encourage others to live near the Lord."

A lady in Virginia writes as follows concerning Anna Long, wife of the principal of the Christiansburg Industrial School:

"Our delegate has been sorely tried since returning home from the conference. Her husband, children and almost all the entire Industrial School, of which her husband is the head, were prostrated with the influenza. She did splendid work in this crisis, sending the students into our town to nurse in both white and colored families, she has always worked well with the boys and girls, but never emphasized the spiritual life. Now she feels the need of Bible study, prayer and the prayer life. She has plans, many plans for work, but can do nothing until this terrible influenza passes. But, if nothing more results than the change in her, the placing of more value on the real things of life, we shall feel richly rewarded for sending her."

Zillah F. Whitt, Lake Charles La., principal of the Colored Public School:

"I am glad that I am able to make a report under all of the setbacks we have had since I attended the conference in September. We had the influenza to stop us, and just as we were about to get busy, the smallpox set in.

"I have a large sewing class in my school, taking in the third and fourth grades. I have organized the boys of the community into a club for social and civic betterment. I have two divisions, the junior from 12 to 15 years, the senior from 15 to 21 or older.

"I got so much from the class in nursing at the Tuscaloosa conference. When the influenza was raging here one of the ladies of the Presbyterian church sent for me. Really I had more work than I could do. This lady knew that I attended the conference, she felt that I was just the person for the work. I gave satisfaction.

"The first of this month I had a very sick woman who died and left seven children, the oldest a boy of 14 or 15. The girl, 13, keeps house. I am trying to see to them during the cold spell through the women of the community. Each one promised to do her part.

"I thank God for the many good things I got at the conference and keep in touch with the ladies who sent me there. May God bless you!"

NEIGHBORINGS THAT REALLY HELPED.

On the Fourth of July, 1918, near the little town of Fairmont, in the State of Georgia, an aged woman—a wife and mother breathed her last.

The next day, on a little hillside in a quiet country graveyard, the body was laid to rest: the sod being covered with flowers picked by friendly hands from home gardens.

Just as the sad-hearted throng turned their faces homeward, one who had helped lower the body to its last resting place called out: "Attention!"

He then reminded the people that their neighbor was a farmer, that during the illness of the wife the husband had been obliged to neglect his growing crop; and he went on to say that if they wished to show their sympathy, there was no better way than to come over the next day and give a little help with the crop.

Before the sun set the next day the whole neglected field of cotton and corn was put in good condition.—Mrs. Metta Dunn, in Religious Digest.

The greatest object in the universe is a Christian struggling with adversity; yet there is still a greater—the one who comes to relieve it!—Goldsmith.

Story and Incident

The Wortzford Stranger.

THERE was great excitement in Wortzford, a little village so far away from here, among the mountains, that no record of it has ever been made upon the map.

That morning the king's herald passed through the principal street of the town, crying with a loud, piercing voice a newly-issued proclamation of the king.

"To my worthy subjects in Wortzford," announced the herald, "greetings. Whatever young man of your village shall perform, during the next two months, a great deed each day, will be admitted free of charge at the royal university. And, furthermore, after his graduation he will be appointed to a life position in his majesty's service."

"But how will the king know who does the great deeds; who will act as judge?" a citizen remarked, quizzically, standing before a small group of eager men and women.

"Leave that to him," replied Lizette Brahung, quickly. "A king who is so wise as ours will find a way, never you mind."

That forenoon many of the young men of the village, boys you would call them, laid plans to accomplish some great deed each of the two months mentioned in the king's proclamation. Such a chance as that was worth striving for: a course in the royal university, and then a life appointment in the king's service. It seemed almost too good to be true!

In but one small cottage that night was there disappointment. That was in the home of Fritz Bezac, a poor cottage nestling at the foot of an overhanging mountain, at the farthest end from the village.

"I'm afraid my chances for winning are gone already," said Fritz, gloomily, laying down beside the hearth an armful of logs for the evening fire. "I had to go and shovel out Granny Rolfin's paths, and then go to the forest to chop her some wood to keep her from freezing, and so I had no chance to do anything great. When I got her work done I was almost too tired to get home."

"Never mind, Fritz," replied his mother, encouragingly. "Perhaps the king didn't mean for the contest for the great things to be begun today. Tomorrow probably—"

"But all the other boys did something great today," interrupted Fritz, soberly, "all of them."

An expression of doubt on the mother's face quickly passed away. "I think the king will understand. He is very wise, they say."

From then on Fritz tried to do something great, and again and again he came home at night disappointed. Hardly a day passed but that some duty, trifling, many would call it, prevented him from accomplishing what he had planned to do.

"It's no use trying any longer," he finally concluded, when a work he had in mind had been done by Theobald Fosin. "Before I could do what I had hoped today one of the other boys did it," he said, laying his mittens on the hearth to dry.

"Granter Edmund wanted me to help him mend his sled so he could get to work tomorrow, and it took twice as long as we imagined."

"But you did a good deed, son, if it wasn't a great one," replied Fritz's mother, proudly.

"But I've so wished to attend the university," and there was in the boy's voice a tone of intense longing. "It's been the ambition of my life."

"The opportunity may yet come," said the mother, gently. "You are young yet, Fritz; there are long years before you. And who knows what blessings they hold for my boy!"

The days of the two months following the king's proclamation slipped rapidly by. And the excitement caused by the royal herald's appearance in the streets of Wortzford began to give way to eager expectancy.

"I wonder who will win?" was heard on every side.

"It will be Theobald!"

"I think Throda Woned stands the best chance!"

Every one of the simple villagers had his favorite, but no one thought to mention Fritz Bezac.

Finally the two months specified in the royal proclamation came to an end. One, two, three days came and yet no message was brought announcing the name of the fortunate winner. Expressions of doubt were heard by many of the citizens.

"I guess 'twas all a joke!" declared Theobald Fosin, dismally. "And I did so many splendid things! Now, I fear, the time I spent in doing them was wasted. I might rather have used it for my own pleasure."

"He was just fooling us," and Throda turned from the little group and walked disappointedly away. "That's all the good it does, trying to do things noble."

On the fifth day after the passing of the two months there appeared in Wortzford a stranger looking for work. He was poorly clad; yet in spite of his tatters and rags there was an air about him that caused the villagers to wonder.

In going from house to house he would linger for a chat with the good-natured inmates. In this way he became, it seemed, personally acquainted with every man, woman and child in the village.

A few odd jobs were given the stranger by the more well-to-do neighbors, and this out of pity for the man, rather than because they couldn't otherwise have the work done.

Finally, as quietly and as he had come, the queer-appearing stranger left the village. No one knew where he went, nor had any interest in inquiring.

Three days after his departure again the royal herald was announced to be nearing the village.

"He's coming to tell who won!" was heard on every side. There had never been such excitement in the peasant community.

The royal herald pursued his way, un-influenced by the crowds on either side of the street, until he reached the unassuming town hall. Here he halted his tired horse.

"Citizens," he said, "I come to bring the greetings of his majesty, and to announce who of your youth met the conditions of the proclamation I brought on my former visit. Fritz Bezac received the royal favor having more than accomplished a great deed each day of the past two months."

The silence was broken only by the low murmurs that went from mouth to mouth.

"Fritz Bezac! I never would have dreamed—"

"The stranger," continued the herald, "who came to your village but a few days since, was no other than the king himself. And he made personal note of the many deeds, humble, though great in the highest sense, unselfishly performed by the boy, Fritz Bezac. Among them I may mention shoveling the paths for Granny Rolfin and getting her wood to keep her from freezing; caring each night for a whole week for Edla Thorzin, who was so ill that he couldn't move from his bed; taking food to the Wolfwin orphan children; helping to mend the sled of Granther Edmund. These humble deeds the king regards as among the greatest things a man can do."

"To think I should be the winner of the royal bounty," exclaimed Fritz, when he once more returned to the humble cottage at the foot of the mountain. "I regarded those things that I did as simple duties."

"But what can be greater, Fritz," replied his mother, drawing her son toward her, "than to do each day, uncomplainingly, one's duty!"

"Nothing, I guess," returned Fritz. "But I never saw it in that light before."—Gertrude Hockridge in Congregationalist.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriages.

Tegg-Davis—At the home of the bride's parents on August 9, by Chaplain Daniel A. McNeill, U. S. A., Mr. John Buel Tegg, of Norfolk, Va., and Miss Grace Earnestine Davis, Shrewsbury Park, St. Louis Mo.

Deaths.

IN MEMORIAM.

R. H. Hayes.

The Presbyterian Church of Pittsboro as well as the entire community has been deeply saddened by the recent death of Hon. R. H. Hayes. After a long illness the end came on Sunday morning, July 27, at the Hygeia Hospital, at Richmond, Va. In behalf of the members of this church and the host of other friends of Mr. Hayes, we wish to extend our deepest sympathy to his bereaved loved ones.

Mr. Hayes was married in 1897 to Miss Nannie Roberts, of Mocksville, N. C., whom he leaves behind. We feel a deep sympathy for Mrs. Hayes, who has been a devoted companion and is left so alone.

Mr. Hayes was a Christian of high character and a church man of unusual activity. Few men will be so missed in their church as will Mr Hayes. He answered to its every call. He has been for a long time the leading elder of this church and the clerk of the session. He also served as a trustee of the church. When Fayetteville Presbytery met here he was elected Moderator of Presbytery and was later sent as a commissioner to the General Assembly. For several years he has been superintendent of the Sunday school and teacher of the Bible class. Mr. Hayes loved his church and amidst the many affairs that claimed his attention he never forgot and was never too busy to serve his church and his God. May not his example lead other of our busy laymen to lay hold of the work of the church.

He was laid to rest behind the little church that he loved and served for so long, Tuesday morning, July 29, 1919.

"Jerusalem my happy home,
My soul still pants for thee,
Then shall my labors have an end,
When I thy joys shall see."

R. M. Phillips.

Children's Department

RECITED THE CATECHISM.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl eleven years old. I go to Sunday school. My teacher's name is Mrs. Thompson. She takes your paper. I recited the Child's Catechism last fall. I recited the Shorter Catechism Tuesday to my teacher in sixteen minutes. We were going to have our Sunday school picnic last Tuesday but it rained so hard we couldn't have it. I will be in the sixth grade at school. There are eleven girls in my class at Sunday school. Our pastor's name is Rev. A. W. Shaw. I have a pair of skates. I have three brothers. I will close, as I want my letter to be printed.

Your friend,
Elizabeth Cheek.

Mebane, N. C.

MAKING MONEY.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl eight years old. I get ten cents a week for drying dishes. I go to Sunday school when I can. My Sunday school teacher is Mrs. Heath. This is my first letter. I am sick in bed. My brother has written to you.

Rose Goodwin.

Glenwood, N. C.

Lady Jane—Have you given the goldfish fresh water, Janet?

Janet—No, mum. They ain't finished the water I give 'em t'other day yet.—Edinburgh Scotsman.

"When will evil speakers refrain from talking? When listeners refrain from evil hearing."

THE OLD SELFISHNESS TREE.

Frances Margaret Fox, in Continent..

Donald's mother was ashamed of her boy because he didn't want to give away his old red sweater after his grandmother knit him a new gray one.

"It hasn't any holes in it yet," argued Donald, "and it is good and warm! I can wear it to school for two months yet! Maybe there'll be half a dozen sweaters for boys my size sent by other folks to the place where the clothes are going that you are all giving away!"

Donald's mother was so ashamed, especially as Donald took off the gray sweater and put on the red one before he reached for his skates, that she did just as she used to when he was a little boy.

"Will you please sit down, Donald?" she said, "I wish to tell you a story."

Donald had no time to listen to stories but he was polite, and besides that, he understood that a request from the queen is equal to a command, so down he sat on the edge of a chair and watched his pretty mother knit. This is the story he was obliged to hear:

"Once upon a time there was a tree in the forest much like our maple trees. One autumn its leaves were far more beautiful than usual when they changed from gold to crimson. Said the tree:

"I shall keep these leaves for another season. I may never have any as beautiful as these again. If I keep them for myself, my green leaves will look all the prettier another summer with these lovely colors fluttering beside them on the same stem!"

"Came the East Wind and the West Wind, and the North Wind and the South Wind and tried to shake the leaves from the gold and crimson tree.

"Why, tree!" said the West Wind, "something is wrong. I fear you will not be able to get rid of your old leaves; I've huffed and I've puffed but I cannot blow your leaves off!"

"I intend to save them!" answered the tree. "That is why you cannot blow them off! I shall keep my beautiful leaves!"

"The tree told the same thing to the East Wind and the North Wind and the South Wind. They told Mother Nature. Mother Nature sent the West Wind back with a message.

"Tell the tree that it shall have beautiful new leaves as usual when all the trees appear in their spring beauty; but now, let the tree remember that others need the old leaves that the tree is keeping for herself. Tell the tree of the violets and all the little wildwood flowers that should be covered with a blanket of old leaves under the snow. Tell the tree of the many little creatures that need her leaves for their winter beds. Tell her that the brown earth needs the leaves, and mayhap she will listen!"

"But the tree would not listen. She said she intended to save her leaves! She might need them sometime and wish she had not given them away!"

"At last, because she couldn't understand, Mother Nature herself visited the tree, but argued with her in vain; the tree would not consent to part with her leaves.

"They are mine," she insisted. "I unpacked and unfolded them carefully myself this spring. They have no holes in them and they are still too good to give away!"

"What is your name?" inquired

Mother Nature, who saw at once that the tree was no child of hers.

"They call me old Selfishness," was the answer, but Mother Nature had fled.

"In the springtime, all the trees of the forest unpacked and unfolded beautiful little new leaves; and when the South Wind came to flatter them, he saw that old Selfishness had no pretty new leaves, and no banners of crimson and gold. Only little dried-up old rags of leaves covered her as with a dingy, tattered garment. The South Wind was sorry, but down came the North Wind into the spring sunshine, frightening the trees with their little new leaves. But these he passed right by, and made straight for old Selfishness, howling as he came, "Her heart was bad all the time! Her heart was bad!" And without any huffing or puffing, he blew her right over.

"And in all the forests of all the world, the old Selfishness tree has never more been seen."

Mother was bending over her knitting when she finished, and she didn't see Donald slip off the red sweater. Neither did she see him put on the gray one, because, laughing as he spoke, he wrapped the old red sweater around his mother's head, face and all, as he said, "Take it, Ma, take it!" Then away he went, whistling.

When big sister Maud came in from skating she laughed as she said to her mother, "Donald owned up to us out on the ice that he gave you his sweater for our box. We asked him how he ever came to part with it and he said, trying to be funny, 'Forsooth, the maple tree giveth up her leaves in the autumn, and observing her manner of life, I be-thought me that it were wisdom to flutter off mine well beloved sweater, that, forsooth, it may keep some little kid warm because, while it hath no holes, it is whole!' Now, mother, own up! There is something back of all this nonsense. What is it?"

Answered the mother with shining eyes, "Of course there is something back of it! That something is Donald's kind heart!"

SLUMBER BOATS.

Into misty Dreamland,
When the day is done,
Far beyond the opal clouds
And the setting sun,
Slumber boats go drifting,
Count them, one by one,
Shaking out their silken sails—
For, oh, the day is done!

Out of misty Dreamland,
When the night is done,
Breaking through the golden East,
With the rising sun,
Slumber boats come sailing.
I see them! Every one
Rides proudly into Daybreak Port,
For, oh, the night is done!

—G. M. Bickford.

DID IT MATTER?

Ned was fifteen, and had just begun to work at a grocery store. Ned objected to work in general, and to his duties in the grocery store in particular. But, as his mother was a widow, with three younger children, he had to do something to help. A well-to-do uncle had offered to pay as much as it was likely Ned could earn, while the boy completed his high school course. But Ned had flunked three examinations, and brought home a very poor report. So the offer was withdrawn, and Ned sent to Mr. Bennett's store.

He took parcels to homes within an easy distance, and often made mistakes in names or numbers, or said he "couldn't find them." He answered the telephone, and misunderstood what the people said, or else forgot to give the message. In short, he was not a success.

"I want five cents' worth of your best coffee, please."

Ned looked at the speaker, a bright little boy of seven. It was quite early in the morning, before custom had fairly wakened up, and Ned was in charge.

"Five cents' worth?" said Ned, contemptuously.

"Yes, and it's got to be the best," answered the little boy. "My mother's just out of it."

"Not even a regular customer," thought Ned, and he weighed out a little of the very poorest coffee in the store.

"Quite good enough for five cents, too," he told himself.

But, late in the afternoon, Mr. Bennett called him, rather sharply, to come up to the desk.

"What coffee did you sell the Browns this morning?" he inquired.

"That one, at the end," replied Ned.

"That's the cheapest grade, and Mrs. Brown says her little boy asked for the best."

"He only asked for five cents' worth," muttered Ned.

"You've lost me a coffee customer," his employer said gravely. "For a long time, the Browns have bought their coffee where they can get coupons. But Mrs. Brown had decided to give my coffee a trial—and gave it, this morning. She also gave my service a trial, Ned. She told me she couldn't trade where her little boy wasn't treated just as she'd be treated herself. I think you must tell your mother you needn't come next Monday."

Ned felt very much ashamed. But there was nothing to be done. He was a failure at school, and a failure at his first job!

"I—I wish you'd give me another week, sir," he begged. "I'll try to do better."

"But don't you see you're losing me customers?" Mr. Bennett was a kind-hearted man, and realized that this was Ned's first job.

"I won't lose any more, sir. I promise you."

Ned spoke more earnestly than before, for he dreaded telling his mother he had lost his job.

"Well, see what you can do to get back the one you have lost," Mr. Bennett decided. "Take a sample of our best coffee to Mrs. Brown and see what she says."

This was about the hardest thing Ned had ever faced. Even when he had packed the sample and started out, he felt as if he must turn back. But the thought of his mother, and of all the trouble he had already given her, spurred him on, and up the steps he went.

"I'm sorry, tell Mr. Bennett," said Mrs. Brown, "I've already ordered ten pounds of coffee. Mr. Brown was quite provoked at what we had for breakfast."

"But when that is gone, ma'am, won't you give us a trial?" pleaded Ned. "It was all my fault. And won't you try this sample tonight? It's fine coffee."

Mrs. Brown, too, had a kind heart, and was inclined to help a boy making a start.

"Well, I'll use this tonight," she agreed. "And when we have finished the ten pounds, I'll see. But I shan't want more coffee for a long time."

So Ned could not quite undo all the mischief his carelessness had done! But Mr. Bennett saw that he was really bent on turning a new leaf, and gave him another trial.

"And I'll try to win another customer for Mr. Bennett," thought Ned. He was at the store bright and early on Monday morning, with such a smiling face that he had won two new customers before night. And, before long, when a child was told to go to the store, that child usually said:

"I want to go to Bennett's, 'so Ned can wait on me!"—Frances Harmer, in Zion's Herald.

THE BY-AND-BY BOY.

He lives in the house of things-never-done,

The by-and-by boy I know—
The lights of the windows are broken and out,
And they let in the rain and snow.

In-a-minute's the schedule he works on,
you see,

And duty waits on a side track;
His intentions are good—there's no fault found with them—
The doing's the thing that they lack!

"And-what happens," you say, "to the by-and-by boy?"

Let anyone answer who can—
Unless he soon changes his name, he becomes,

'Tis certain, a Too-Late Man!
—Adelbert F. Caldwell, in Child's Gem.

'Tis looking downward makes us
dizzy.—Browning.

APPARELING MARY.

Did you ever hear of a sewing machine giving a little girl an education? Then you will be especially interested in the case of Mary, a Serbian girl who lives in Belgrade, for she was sent to school by a sewing machine. Sounds incredible, does it not?

Mary was an orphan and had been running about the streets for months with many other children who had no homes. The war had deprived them of fathers, mothers, homes and friends. But one day the worker of the A. R. C. saw Mary crying, alone, and quite forlorn in her tattered old dress and uncombed hair. A bit of friendly sympathy and Mary told the worker all about her hard lot in life. They then traveled hand in hand to the sewing school which the A. R. C. had established in Belgrade and there Mary was measured for a dress—a real dress with blue flowers splashed all over it! From the minute that Mary set eyes on the cloth, she was a changed girl. No more tears, no more woes. And when the dress was finally finished, she was the very happiest girl in the country of Serbia, she felt quite certain of that. She was then taken to the orphanage and left there to study all her forgotten lessons once more, and met anew her old-time chum, a girl who had lived next door to her when they both had homes and people all their own. If the sewing machine had not sewed the dress, Mary could not have been sent to school. Therefore, we claim that it was the sewing machine that really gave Mary her education.

GROVE INSTITUTE

(Formerly James Sprunt Institute)

KENANSVILLE

NORTH CAROLINA

A Preparatory School for Girls. High Grade, Thoroughly Christian. Very Moderate Cost. Students receive Close, Personal Attention in a Home-Like Atmosphere.
NEXT SESSION BEGINS SEPTEMBER 10th.

For Catalog and Particulars, address REV. W. F. HOLLINGSWORTH, Pres.

Chicora College for Women

THE PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE OF SOUTH CAROLINA

A Standard College of Distinction and Character

Religion and Philosophy

Letters and Science

Home Economics

The Fine Arts

(Music, Art and Expression)

For Catalogue and Information, address

Pres. S. G. BYRD, D.D., Columbia, S. C.

An Attractive Offer of 200 Acres of Land at Black Mountain, N. C.

I offer 100 acres of beautiful mountain land with fine spring and running stream of water, worth $10,000.00 to such Religious, Musical, Educational, Military or National Organization or Society of similar character and organized standing, to be used exclusively by the white race for an Assembly Ground, School or Hotel Resort, solely for the consideration that a satisfactory guarantee to invest as much as $25,000.00 in the construction of a building or buildings and permanent improvements within two years, and that satisfactory references be given as to the standing of the organization accepting the proposition and its objects. Said investment to be made within two years from October 1, 1919.

The interests of 15,000,000 people center at Black Mountain.

The Presbyterians at Montreat $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant; Ridgecrest $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles; the Y. W. C. A. and Y. M. C. A., Students Volunteer Movements at the Blue Ridge, 3 miles.

Buildings and improvements alone at Blue Ridge cost approximately $300,000.00, situated 16 miles East of Asheville, on the main line of the Southern Railway, under the very dome of Mt. Mitchell, with an elevation of 6,711 feet, the highest point East of the Rocky Mountains, connected by a narrow gauge Railroad, which has its junction here.

It is estimated that more than 40,000 people have visited Black Mountain this season, and several thousand have been turned away by reason of lack of accommodations.

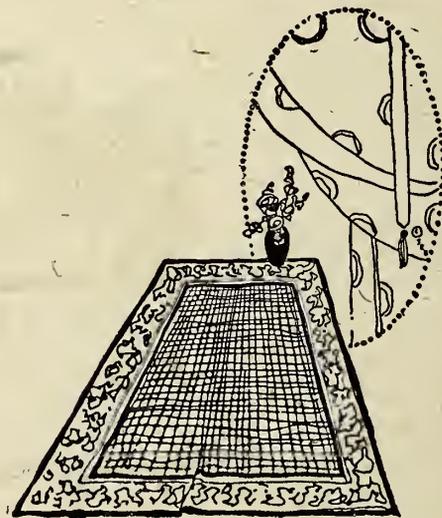

Answers to this proposition will be considered in the order in which they are received.

References:

Judge J. D. Eckles, Black Mountain, N. C.

Commonwealth Bank, Black Mountain, N. C.

J. S. Kuykendall, Winston-Salem, N. C.

W. T. McCoy & Company

Announce the opening of their Fall showing of Wilton, Axminster, Velvet, Tapestry and Wool Fibre Rugs. A cordial invitation is extended the public to call and inspect this extra fine display of beautiful rugs.

FIRST THREE DRY WEEKS.

The benefits from war prohibition were not long in being seen. During the first three dry weeks: Many hundreds of saloons have closed in the large wet cities. Six hundred of the 3,500 saloons in New York have shut their doors; the others are trying to keep open for the sale of beer, but the trade is very light.

There has been a marked decrease in crime due to the less consumption of alcohol.

The prohibition sentiment of the people has been definitely established. Even in the wettest centers they have frowned on the law-breaking saloons which are still selling beer.

Already the savings banks and financial interests are showing a marked access of strength and business is better than it has been before in many months.

TREMENDOUS VALUE FOR 15c.

Washington, D. C. (Special).—An unusual offer is being made by the editor of the Pathfinder, to send the paper to new readers 13 weeks for 15 cents. This well known national weekly magazine contains all the worth while news of the world, illustrated and presented in a most entertaining manner. It is clean, sincere, non-partisan, reliable—well printed in large type. It puts everything clearly, fairly and briefly.

Washington, the home of the Pathfinder, is the nerve-center of civilization, history is being made at this world capitol. The Pathfinder's illustrated weekly review gives you a clear, impartial and correct diagnosis of public affairs during these strenuous, epoch-making days. It is the only big weekly magazine at the seat of government. Send 15 cents for 13 weeks trial subscription to the Pathfinder, 111 Douglas St., Washington, D. C. The 15 cents does not repay the editor but he is glad to invest in new friends.

TWO TERRIBLE JOKES OF THE FROLICSOME "DUD."

A "dud," if you don't know it, is an enemy shell that, through some defect in the fuse or the bursting-charge, fails to explode. Instead of scattering death and destruction, it harms only the object with which it comes in contact.

A captain of artillery tells, in a recent Y. M. C. A. Bulletin, of two experiences that his men have had with the frolicsome "dud."

"Not long ago," said the captain, inhaling a puff from his first cigarette in several days, "one of my men heard a 'whizbang' coming. He darted head first into a dugout like a jack-rabbit. At the same moment, the shell entered and lodged right alongside him in the soft earth. For a fraction of a second the soldier thought that he was going to be an unusually complete casualty, but the shell just stayed there, rested quietly and didn't explode. That soldier is now firmly convinced that he was born to be hanged.

"Another time, one of the men in the battery was in a deep dugout when one of the big German shells came through the roof and lodged right at his feet. It was a huge shell and it looked as big around as a washtub to him. He fainted dead away when he saw it, for in a flash he figured that it had one of those delayed action-fuses and was all ready to blow up. When he came to, and they told him that he had been scared into insensibility by a 'dud,' he was the maddest man you ever saw. He seemed to take it as a personal insult that the shell hadn't exploded and scattered him over five acres of France."

There is no true and constant gentleness without humility. Let us often think of our own infirmities, and we shall become indulgent towards those of others.

Half a loaf is sometimes better than an unpaid board bill.

FOR SALE—Hook and Hastings pipe organ. Two manual, pedal bass. Light oak case, gold display pipes. Reason for selling, new church required larger organ. Good as new. Call or write Mr. A. T. McLean, Lumberton, N. C. A real bargain.

Aberdeen & Rockfish Railroad

Between Aberdeen and Fayetteville
Eastbound		Westbound
Daily Ex. Sunday	Mixed	Daily Ex. Sunday	Mixed
No. 22	No. 38	No. 41	No. 21
7 30 am	9 10 am	Lv. Aberdeen Ar.	6 41 pm 5 00 pm
ar 8 35 am	10 00 am	Rae ford	lv 3 50 pm
lv 2 10 pm		Ar. Fayetteville Lv.	5 55 pm ar 2 50 pm
4 00 pm	11 20 am		4 50 pm 1 00 pm

WAGRAM BRANCH
Southbound		Northbound
Daily Ex. Sun.	Mixed	Daily Ex. Sun.	Mixed
No. 11		No. 12
Lv. 10 30 am		Rae ford	Ar. 12 40 pm
Ar. 11 15 am		Wagram	Lv. 12 00 noon

W. A. BLUE, General Supt.,
Aberdeen, N. C.

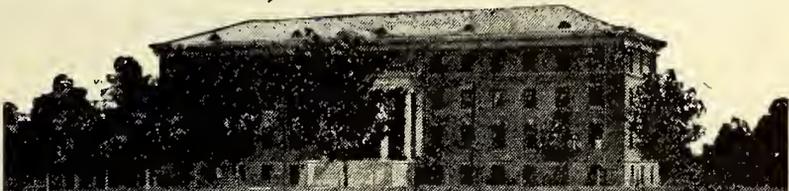

NORTH CAROLINA COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

Offers thorough instruction and excellent advantages in the training of young women for the mastery of courses fitting themselves to become self-supporting. There are courses leading to the degrees of Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science and Bachelor of Music. Total number registered last year, 1299. Free tuition to those students who agree to teach in the schools of North Carolina after leaving the college. Excellent equipment, expenses moderate. For catalogue and other information, address J. I. FOUST, President, Greensboro, N. C.

OAK RIDGE INSTITUTE
OAK RIDGE, N. C.

Prepares for bigger accomplishments in college, business and life. A very high standard of scholarship is maintained. Thorough courses are given in literature, science, book-keeping, shorthand and music. Athletics encouraged. Buildings modern; steam heat and showers. Cost reasonable—$350 per year. Fall session opens September 9, 1919. For illustrated catalog and fuller information, write

T. E. WHITAKER, PRESIDENT.

THE School for Your Boy

Nothing is so effective in the training of the youth—in guarding his morals, his physique—as a military training. All young men should begin with a military training. The training of is conducive of culture, refinement, thorough literary foundation and a gentlemanly bearing. Thorough academic, preparatory and commercial courses. Excellently equipped modern buildings. Gymnasium, Infirmary and 40 new rooms now under construction. Two U. S. Army officers in charge of the R. O. T. C. Trained nurse in charge of Infirmary. For literature, write,

BLACKSTONE MILITARY ACADEMY

COL. E. S. LIGON, President, Blackstone Military Academy, Box R. Blackstone, Va.

COLUMBIA COLLEGE

COLUMBIA, S. C.

A College for Women ranked in Class "A" by Board of Education, M. E. Church, South. Recognized for its high type of Christian culture.

Unusually complete educational facilities, strong university-trained faculty, thorough equipment, ideal location.

Handsone fire-proof buildings, elegantly fitted with every convenience for health, comfort and safety. Beautiful 20-acre campus, affording ample opportunity for outdoor games.

Library of upwards of 5,000 volumes in large, well-lighted quarters. Fine collection of magazines.

Thorough courses leading to degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science.

Conservatory of Music under direction of skilled instructors.

Thorough courses in Art, Expression, Business, and Home Economics.

1919 session begins September 17th. For descriptive catalogue, address

G. T. PUGH, Ph. D., President, Columbia, S. C.

THE OPAL.

Why is the opal considered unlucky? It is the jeweller who is to blame for the superstition.

Anyone who has handled an opal knows of the brilliant colors that can be seen as the stone is turned round. These prismatic effects are produced by myriads of tiny cracks, which reflect the light from different angles. But it stands to reason that a stone that is cracked here, there, and everywhere is extremely likely to break or split under the process of grinding, polishing, and setting, and it is the ill luck jewellers have with these stones that accounts for the superstition attached to them.

When an opal is exposed even to the slight heat of an open fire some feet away, it is likely to be destroyed. It is mainly composed of silica, and contains, as a rule, from five to thirteen per cent water.

Nearly all other stones are practically indestructible. An old magazine states: "There are gems adorning tiaras at Victoria's Court which sparkled in the head-dresses of beauties in the days of the Queen of Sheba; and what tales they could tell could they but speak!"

Yet what record is there of an opal surviving through the ages to come to rest eventually in a royal crown? And what great opal has been found to compare with the Koh-i-noor diamond, or, indeed, with any large ruby, emerald, or other of the more valuable stones?

THE FARMER A CHEMIST.

Chemistry plays an important part in farming. Every farmer should be a chemist. Certain fundamental laws relating to soils and plant life are in evidence every day and the wide-awake farmer is the one who understands from a commercial point of view the chemical reactions that concern his own farm.

In the case of sour land, for instance, few farmers realize that much of the soil has a bountiful supply of plant food (nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash), and that only the acidity of the soil prevents the plant food being of use. Sour land will not produce. That is known, but why? Because the nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash in abundant supply in our lands is locked up in such insoluble form that it is not available for the plant. Chemistry shows that the principal solvent for such conditions is lime carbonate. It neutralizes the acid, sweetens the land, frees the plant foods and increases the yield.

Most farmers discover that their land is sour by bitter experience. Nothing but a crop failure will convince them. While experience is a good teacher it is too expensive. Every farmer should test his soil. Dampen the soil and insert a strip of litmus paper. If the litmus paper turns pink, the soil is sour and it is a waste of time, labor and money to cultivate it until the trouble is remedied.

As lime carbonate is the acknowledged remedy for sour land, RelcoMarl which contains over 90 per cent lime carbonate should be applied. About two tons to the acre will sweeten the average land. Unlike ground limestone it is immediately effective and it builds up the soil and increases the yield for over five years. Fortunately, it is very inexpensive. It is also easy to handle.

We advise every farmer to make a test of his soil. Write the Roanoke Lime Co., Dept. 8H, Roanoke, Va., for a free supply of litmus papers for testing the soil and literature and prices on RelcoMarl.

Incidentally, RelcoMarl when placed on the stable floor under a blanket of leaves, straw, sawdust, etc., acts as the very best absorbent. It holds the ammonia in the manure that otherwise would be lost, particularly the liquid manure and will make each head of stock save over $20.00 per year in your ammonia bill. At the same time it improves the mechanical condition of the stable manure and acts as a deodorizer.

DAVIS-WAGNER NEW BUILDING, ACCOMMODATING 500 STUDENTS.

Business College

POSITIONS FOR GRADUATES. 306 East Freemason St. CATALOGUE FREE. NORFOLK, VA.

BOOKKEEPING AND SHORTHAND

thoroughly taught. Enroll any time. Address Greensboro Commercial School, Greensboro, N. C., for Catalogue. Special Summer Rates now on.

A COLLEGE THAT IS BETTER THAN ITS CATALOG GREENVILLE WOMANS COLLEGE

GREENVILLE, S. C. 1854-1919

COURSES:—Standard courses, requiring 14 units entrance, and 64 hours work for B.A. and B.S. degrees; degree M.A. conferred. Actual practice teaching under supervision required in Education for all. Courses in Kindergarten Normal Training Department, Commercial Department, Domestic Science; Conservatory of Music; piano, voice, organ, violin, other stringed and brass instruments, theory, public school music, sight-singing, Glee Club, choral work; degree B. Mus. awarded. Diplomas in Expression, Art, Physical Culture.

EQUIPMENT:—Modern classrooms, laboratories, domestic science equipment. Handsome library, reading rooms, literary society halls. Beautiful halls and parlors, given over to student activities. Complete and modern dormitories; all rooms furnished with single beds, mission furniture, running water. Large attractive dining-room; other culinary departments complete in appointments.

HEALTH:—Of prime consideration; physician, nurse, athletic director in charge, physical culture compulsory; wide campus, athletic fields, large swimming pool. Pure bracing mountain air. Perfect climate the year around.

MANAGEMENT:—One of the strongest student government organizations ever worked out; Administration, Dean, and faculty in close personal supervision, Democratic atmosphere, happy social and home life.

Accessory Advantages:—In the great City of the Piedmont, the best lecturers, musicians, etc., under various auspices appear before students. Greenville is center of meetings of various organizations, bring talent from all parts of United States.

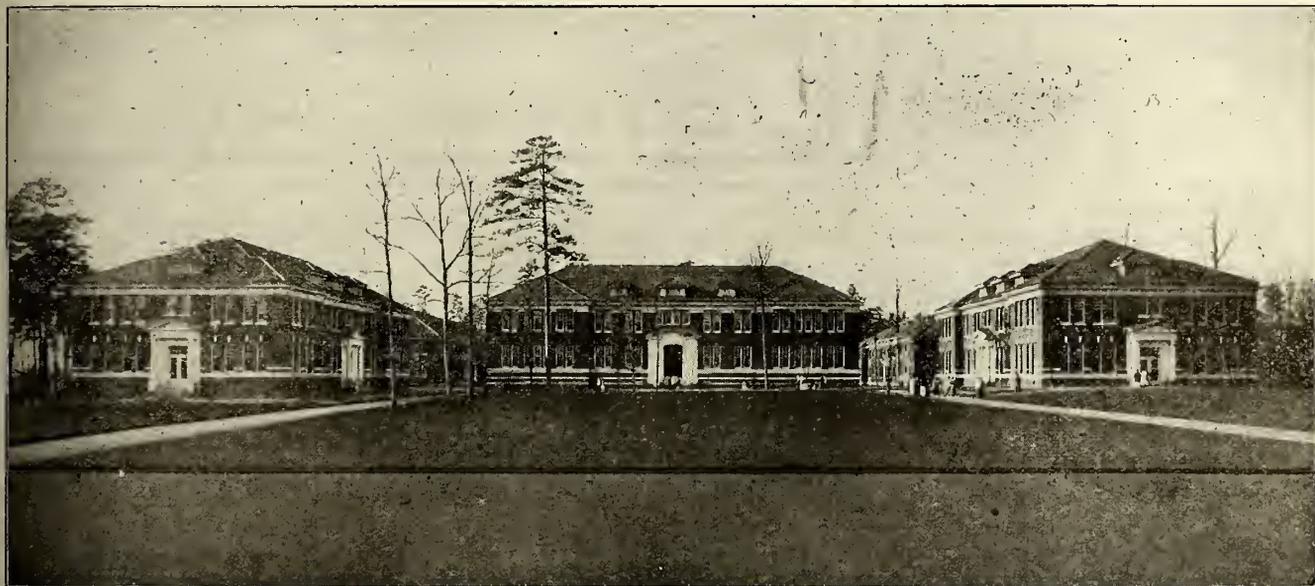

A Christian College; in precept and example instills a deep religious consciousness. In addition to the required Bible Study, there were during the past session classes in mission study and Christian Culture, enrolling all the students; Sunday School Pedagogy required of all. Social service work.

Correspondence invited; for catalog and information, address

President DAVID M. RAMSAY, D. D., Greenville, S. C., or ROSA PASCHAL, Dean.

Queens College for Women

Charlotte, North Carolina

Established More Than Sixty Years Ago as "Charlotte Female Institute"

It is Now Recognized as the Best Equipped College for Women in the Entire South

We have five new two-story brick buildings with modern fire extinguishers, designed and erected solely for convenience, comfort, efficiency and safety. These buildings are located in the beautiful suburb of Myers Park, three and one-half miles from the center of the city.

We have a splendid wooded campus of 25 acres.

15 units required for entrance. Graduates from recognized State High Schools admitted on certificate.

This College is built on a firm belief in the inspiration of the Bible. Thorough Bible courses provided.

Standard college course leading to B. A. degree. Most complete equipment for thorough education.

Physical, Chemical and Biological Laboratories; Library, Gymnasium, Preparatory department. Able faculty. Dormitories divided into units of two rooms and connecting with bath, accommodating four students. Large, well-ventilated rooms, big closets. Buildings as near fire-proof as possible. Water, gas, electricity. Convenient street car service.

School of Music, Expression and Art offers superior opportunities. Music building has twenty-six rooms equipped exclusively for this department. Complete, thorough course leading to diploma. Post graduate course in music offered.

Our Motto: "Christian Women for Christian Homes"

Necessary expenses very moderate, about $325.00 for the regular literary course, including board. FALL TERM begins September 10, 1919.

For further information send for catalogue or write

WM. ANDERSON, Registrar, Box 300, Charlotte, N. C.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Spring,
Box 4-B, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

Name
Address
Shipping Point

"Life is a bridge; pass over it, but do not try to build upon it."

"In the A. E. F. With an Artist"

The sketch book and diary of
Lieut. J. B. Mallard. Send
$1.00 for your copy to

J. B. MALLARD

Box 625 CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The Cumberland General Hospital, of Fayetteville

N. C., offers to young ladies between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five the following courses of training for nurses: Three years practical and theoretical work which prepares for State Board Examinations. Fall classes being formed now. Apply at once to Supt. of Nurses.

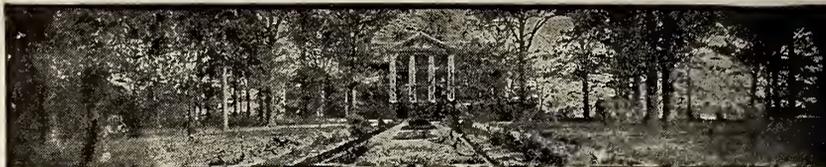

MARY BALDWIN SEMINARY For Young Ladies

Established 1842. Term begins Sept. 12th. In the beautiful and historic Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. Unsurpassed climate, modern equipment. Students from 31 states. Courses: Collegiate, 3 years; Preparatory, 4 years. Music, Art and Domestic Science. Catalog. STAUNTON, VIRGINIA

EXPERT KODAK FINISHING

Developing and printing done by artists. Most beautiful work guaranteed at all times. Satisfaction or no charge. Developing, 10c. per film. Printing, 2-1-4 x 3-1-4, 3c.; 2-1-4 x 4-1-4, 4c.; 3-1-4 x 5-1-2, 5c. Quick delivery. Send one film to test our service.

Ligon Drug Co., Spartanburg, S. C.

PEACE INSTITUTE

RALEIGH, NORTH CAROLINA

For Young Women. Established 1857

College Courses. Preparatory Courses for Standard College Requirements. Special Diplomas, Piano, Voice, Art, Expression and Home Economics. Commercial Course. Teacher Training Course. Specialists in all departments.

LULA B. WYNNE HALL, Home School For Girls.

MISS MARY OWEN GRAHAM, Pres.

STATEMENT
NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF THE U. S. A.
CHICAGO, ILL.

Condition December 31, 1918, as Shown by Statement Filed.

Amount of Capital paid up in cash.....	$ 500,000.00
Amount of Ledger Assets Dec. 31 of previous year.....	14,792,780.33
Income—From Policyholders, $1,474,181.03; Miscellaneous, $63,662.76; Total	1,537,853.79
Disbursements—To Policyholders, $520,484.10; Miscellaneous, $1,003,504.72; Total	1,523,988.82

ASSETS.

Value of Bonds and Stocks.....	$ 1,900.00
Cash in Company's Office	375.00
Interest and Rents due and accrued.....	20.14
Premiums in course of Collection.....	7,940.55
Bills Receivable	1,653.11
	16,042,491.00
All other Assets, as detailed in statement.....	713,104.42

Total	$16,784,001.72
Less Assets not admitted	148,044.41

Total admitted Assets$16,635,957.31

LIABILITIES.

Unpaid Claims	$ 43,753.66
Unearned Premiums	40,801.02
Commission, Brokerage and other charges due.....	2,690.24
Estimated amount for Federal, State, County, and Municipal Taxes	24,831.94
Reinsurance.	1,834.63
Advance Premiums	1,446.79
All other Liabilities as detailed in Life Statment	15,856,282.15

Total amount of all Liabilities except Capital.....$15,971,640.43

Capital actually paid up in Cash.....	500,000.00
Surplus over all Liabilities	164,316.88

Total Liabilities$16,635,957.31

BUSINESS IN NORTH CAROLINA DURING 1918.

	Premiums Received.	Losses Paid.
Accident	$11,377.66	$4,560.96

President, A. M. Johnson; Secretary, R. D. Lay; Treasurer, R. D. Lay; Home Office, Chicago, Ill.; Attorney for service, Jas. R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, Raleigh, N. C.; Manager for North Carolina, Home Office.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,
INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

Raleigh, April 19, 1919.

I, James R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct abstract of the statement of the National Life Insurance Company, of U. S. A., Chicago, Ill., filed with this Department, showing the condition of said Company on the 31st day of December, 1918.

Witness my hand and official seal the day and date above written.

JAMES R. YOUNG,
Insurance Commissioner.

The College of William and Mary

1693—1919

FOR MEN AND WOMEN

Thorough academic courses leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., and M. A.; well equipped laboratories and excellent library; unexcelled health conditions, historic environment and intimate contact with the best ideals of VIRGINIA.

WILLIAM and MARY is also the STATE TEACHERS' COLLEGE FOR MEN AND WOMEN.

Special Teacher's Training Courses.

Course in Home Economics under the Smith-Hughes Act, Pre-Medical courses, Pre-Electrical and Pre-Chemical Engineering courses. Courses in business administration and commerce. Courses for commercial teachers.

State scholarships for those preparing to be teachers and superintendents.

Loan fund for Virginia students.

Next session begins September 18th, 1919.

For particulars address

J. A. C. CHANDLER, Pres.,
Williamsburg, Va.

VIRGINIA, Danville

Randolph-Macon Institute FOR GIRLS
Limited to 100

College preparatory and special course for those not wishing to go to college. Vocal and instrumental Music, Art, and Expression. Attractive home life. Gymnasium. Branch of the Randolph-Macon System. Rates $425. Catalogue. Address Chas. G. Evans, A. M., Principal, Box C.

ELIZABETH COLLEGE, SALEM, VIRGINIA

A College for Young Women, Under Positive Christian Influence

Handsome new building, with dormitories arranged in suites. Unexcelled views. A competent faculty. Courses: Literary, leading to the A. B. degree; Art, Expression, Home Economics, Piano, Voice, Stenography and Typewriting. Outdoor sports: Basket Ball, Hockey and Tennis. For catalogue, write to PAUL SEIG, Acting President.

Blue Ridge School for Boys

Hendersonville, N. C.

A select home school, on accredited list, offering to a limited number of boys, from 9 to 20 years old, a more intensive system of training than public schools can give.

Ideally located in healthful, invigorating climate, conducive to study. Each boy's personality carefully studied and directed by efficient teaching staff composed of virile, patriotic men with successful teaching careers.

A teacher for every seven or eight boys insures individual attention in studies. Boys taught HOW TO STUDY.

MILITARY DRILL, BOY SCOUT activities, and all branches of athletics directed and supervised by able instructors.

High moral tone; cultured, home-like environment; parental discipline.

Total charge for session, September 17 to June 4, $480. Summer term, July and August.

For catalog, address

J. R. Sandifer, Headmaster, Hendersonville, N. C.

Union Theological Seminary

RICHMOND, VA.

W. W. Moore, D. D., LL.D.

C. C. Hersman, D. D., LL.D.

T. C. Johnson, D. D., LL.D.

T. H. Rice, D. D., LL.D.

W. L. Lingle, D. D.

E. C. Caldwell, D. D.

Edward Mack, D. D.

George Sleeth

Biblical Literature

Greek Language

Systematic Theology

English Bible and Pastoral Theology

Church History, Missions and Sunday School

New Testament Exegesis

Hebrew Language and Exegesis

Public Speaking

Session begins October 1, 1919

For catalogue, apply to

REV. W. W. MOORE, President

DAVIDSON COLLEGE

"The greatest single institution, in point of service, controlled by the Southern Presbyterian Church."

THORNTON WHALING, President.

Columbia Theological Seminary.

COURSES OF STUDY: Literary, Scientific, Classical preparing for ministry, medicine, law, engineering, business, teaching.

FACULTY experienced and University trained.

COLLEGE SPIRIT: The boys work in season and out for a "Bigger and Better Davidson." The typical Davidson student, or alumnus, is loyal, enthusiastic, and successful in whatever he undertakes.

Y. M. C. A. SECRETARY will be continued next year. Rev. R. W. Miles, General Secretary, will be a big factor in the boys' college life.

LITERARY SOCIETIES at Davidson have a rightful place on the campus. Davidson has contested 20 inter-collegiate debates and has won 14, or 70%. The student gets a fine parliamentary training.

IN ATHLETICS Davidson has football, baseball, tennis, track, golf outdoor gymnasium, large new gymnasium. R. O. T. C.

MUSICAL TALENT has expression and development through the Glee Club and Orchestra, an enthusiastic organization that furnishes music for public functions at the college, and gives concerts each year in other towns and colleges.

Students find the climate bracing and beneficial and the social atmosphere friendly and congenial.

Expenses exceptionally reasonable.

Old Students have already registered for next term from the following States: North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Mississippi, Maryland, Alabama, Tennessee, Texas, Arkansas, Georgia, West Virginia, District of Columbia, Louisiana, China, Japan.

New Students from the following: North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Missouri, District of Columbia, Colorado, Kentucky, Indiana, Japan.

Register early; make sure of room.

Illustrated folder and other literature will be sent immediately upon receipt of your request.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE

:

Davidson, N. C.

FOOT TROUBLES

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.

Birdseye View OIL MAP OF KENTUCKY Free

Also sample copy FREE of the KENTUCKY OIL JOURNAL. Fully illustrated; thirty-two pages; seventy-five thousand readers. Address EKENTUCKY OIL JOURNAL No. 21 INTER-SOUTHERN BLDG., LOUISVILLE, KY.

Many Young Men and Women

Have doubled and trebled their salary after taking a course with Draughon. Do you want to earn more money? If so, let us teach you how to do it. More calls for help than we can supply. Write us at once.

DRAUGHON'S BUSINESS COLLEGE Knoxville, Tenn. Jacksonville, Fla.

NEW SONG BOOKS

For Your Church

8c

A wonderful value; 83 familiar songs of the Gospel, words and music. Used all over the world. Only $8 per hundred for No. 1 or 2, round or shaped notes, and $15 for No. 1 and 2 combined, round notes only. Send 30c for samples. Money back if not pleased.

E. A. K. HACKETT, Dept. No. 56, FT. WAYNE, IND.

YOUR FACE?

Is the Complexion Muddy, Tanned, Freckled?

If troubled with skin eruptions, sunburn, pimples, try

PALMER'S SKIN-SUCCESS SOAP

It cleanses, softens and clears the skin and tends to remove sunburn, tan, freckles, blackheads, pimples and eczema.

Thoroughly antiseptic. Ask your druggist, or write for free samples to

THE MORGAN DRUG CO.,

1521 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Medical College of Virginia

(State Institution—Co-Educational)

STUART MCGUIRE, M.D., LL.D., Pres.

MEDICINE DENTISTRY
PHARMACY NURSING

New buildings, completely equipped. Laboratories under full time instructors. Unusual clinical facilities offered in three hospitals owned by the college, also in city hospitals and institutions.

81st session begins September 17, 1919. For catalogue, address

J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary

1121 East Clay Street RICHMOND, VA.

THE BAYLOR SCHOOL FOR BOYS A THOROUGH EDUCATION Castle on the Tennessee

1. Thorough Scholastic Training. Small Classes. Experienced Teachers.
2. Religious Influences through School Y. M. C. A. and daily Chapel Exercises.
3. Compulsory Public Speaking, Writing, and Spelling for every student.
4. Six fine brick buildings, new equipment, 40-acre campus in mountains.
5. Splendid Library, Laboratory, and large Gymnasium.
6. Athletic Fields, Track, Tennis Courts, Swimming and Boating.
7. Beautiful Scenery and Historic Surroundings. Ideal Location.
8. The Honor System. 9. Compulsory Exercise. 10. Same Headmaster for 25 years.
11. Military Training in the Essentials, not in the Spectacular, under officers of the A. E. F.

Baylor School is an accredited school of Southern Association of Schools and Colleges. For particulars, address J. R. BAYLOR, BAYLOR SCHOOL, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Albemarle Normal and Industrial Institute

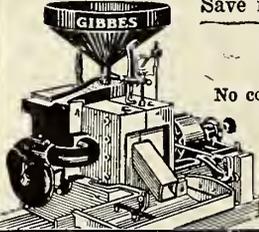

(Founded by Miss F. E. Ufford in 1893)

UNDER AUSPICES OF MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY

Christian School with home atmosphere. Beautiful and healthful location. Course of study from fifth through eleventh grade. Excellent musical advantages. Special classes in Bible, Sewing, Cooking and Home Nursing. Pupils prepared for college, for teaching, and for duties of home. Experienced and capable teachers. Terms very reasonable. For catalogue and information, write (MRS.) ELVA C. HARRIS, Superintendent, ALBEMARLE, N. C.

Grind Your Corn the Simple Way

Delicate, Complicated Machinery is neither necessary nor economical. Save money in grinding your grain with—

The Gibbs Corn Mill

Simple—Fast—Economical—Durable

No complicated parts, whole machine easily handled. With ball-bearing system it is light running and rapid, requiring very little power. Little wear, smooth running, seldom a part to replace. Made of the best of materials. Absolutely guaranteed. For illustrated literature and prices address—

GIBBES MACHINERY CO., Dept. A-2, Columbia, S. C.

LINWOOD COLLEGE GASTONIA, N.C.

For Young Women

Exceptional educational opportunities at moderate cost. Located at All Healing Springs, easily accessible. Finest water; health conditions of the very best. Unexcelled health record.

Modern Dormitories. Able, conscientious faculty. Small classes permit the utmost personal attention and instruction. School conducted as a well-ordered Christian home; discipline and influences that bring out the highest in character. Non-sectarian. Thorough courses in Languages, History, Mathematics, Sciences, Bible, Piano, Voice, Expression, Art, leading to degrees of A. B., B. L., and B. S. Board and tuition, $175 per year. Next session opens Sept. 17, 1919. For catalog, address,

REV. A. T. LINDSAY, President, Gastonia, N. C.

CHARLOTTE MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS

MEMORIALS OF QUALITY

"WE LEAD"

Quality First
Prices Right
Workmanship
Unsurpassed

Memorials in Silver Georgia Marble are unsurpassed in beauty and durability.

CHARLOTTE MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS
WEST 7th ST. AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY
Cemetery Gate Phone 281-CHARLOTTE, N.C.

OLD SORES SHOULD NOT RUN FOREVER

While it may not look dangerous and may not rapidly grow larger, its progress may fool you. Dirt and millions of germs will attack it every day. Blood poison is likely to set in at any time. Buy a box of Gray's Ointment. It immediately soothes the pain, cleanses the wound, kills the germs and begins healing. It is immediately effective with sores, boils, cuts, stings, burns, bruises, eczema and the many similar forms of skin eruption. If your druggist cannot supply you send his name to W. F. Gray & Co., 843 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., and a liberal sample will be sent you free.—Adv.

One who loves God truly asks no other compensation than God Himself.

Personal Instruction
 is the prime secret of a thorough education. An excellent standard and high curriculum maintained for one hundred and thirty-four years and an intentionally limited enrollment insure a most thorough-going literary training at the

COLLEGE OF CHARLESTON
 Excellent equipment. Climate unsurpassed. Expenses moderate. CO-EDUCATIONAL. For catalogue and illustrated booklet address Harrison Randolph, Pres., Charleston, S. C.

Oglethorpe University
 1913

A Southern Presbyterian University, owned and controlled by a Board of Representative Presbyterians from every Southern State.

THE SCHOOLS
 Of Liberal Arts, Science, Literature and Journalism, and Commerce are open all the year and students may enter at the beginning of any one of the four terms as follow: Sept. 24, Jan. 2, Apr. 1 and July 6.

A beautiful Book of Views, illustrating Student Life at the University, will be sent free, with catalogue, on application. Address

Oglethorpe University
 Oglethorpe University, Ga.
 (Suburb of Atlanta)

DR. J. M. BELK, MONROE, N. C.

W. H. BELK, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Belk Bros. Dept. Stores
CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA
19 STORES

Send us your orders for Bibles, Testaments, Confession of Faith, or Book of Church Order, for quick delivery. 10 percent discount for Sunday Schools, Societies, or Churches, Preachers or Teachers—and in dozens we will give you wholesale price.

WHY NOT HAVE A BIBLE OR TESTAMENT IN EVERY SUNDAY SCHOOL SCHOLAR'S HANDS EVERY SUNDAY? WE WILL HELP DO THIS. WRITE TO US FOR THE PLAN.
NELSON'S BIBLES

1184—Sunday School Scholar's Bible. Practical Helps for Young People. How to study the Bible. How to study the lesson. Bible questions and answers all in this Bible. Good black type, red edges, leatheroid binding. Size 5½x4x1. Special.....98c

Same Bible, gilt edge, better leather binding, illustrated ..$1.25 and $1.50

12—Linen Card Back Bible. Good big print. Fine for the Sunday School classes, about 6x5x1.....75c

1148—Sunday School Bible. Linen board backs, black type, 5x4x1...59c
 7764—Teacher's Bible, $5.00.

India Linen Paper, self pronouncing Bible Dictionary, Combined Concordance, 12 Colored Maps, Morocco Binding, Silk Sewed, good print. Size 7¾x5½x1¼$5.00

6512—Teacher's Edition Bible—New and instructive maps, 14 maps, placed throughout the Bible, illustrating the Scripture, 20 beautifully colored pictures, complete Bible Dictionary, new Concordance and Helps. Leather binding, strongly made. Black face type. Size 7x5x1½$2.50
 6512—Teacher's Bible, $3.95.

Linen Paper, thumb index, illustrated colored pictures, 12 new maps, Bible Dictionary, Morocco leather binding. Black face type, convenient size, 7x5-1¼. Special$3.95

1212—Illustrated Bible. 4,000 questions and answers, short history of each book of the Bible by A. T. Pierson, D.D. Harmony of the four Gospels. How to study the Bible. Colored maps. 7x5½x1½.....$2.00
 7764—Teacher's Bible, $5.95.

Self pronouncing Bible, new, improved maps, finely illustrated, combined Concordance, 12 colored maps, newest and most complete dictionary yet printed. Morocco binding, silk sewed, a beautiful Bible. 8x5½...$5.95
 Why not have a Confession of Faith in Every Home? We carry them in stock for your convenience—50c, 75c.

BOOK OF CHURCH ORDER.
 Every officer in the Presbyterian Church ought to have this Book and study it. We will mail you one for 25c.

NELSON'S TESTAMENTS

402—New Testament, 65c.
 Bound in leatheroid, large black face type. Size 6x5.

321—New Testament, 48c.
 Bound same as 402. Black type. Size 5x3½.

400—New Testament, 25c.

This is a special number. Large black type, cardboard back, clear white paper—the quality equals most 50c books. Special25c

29—New Testament. Vest pocket size, leatheroid binding, fine for the children25c

403—New Testament, 98c.
 This is leather bound. Large black type, gilt edge. Size 6x4½.

403P—New Testament and Psalms. Leather bound, gilt edge. Large print$1.19

SCHOFIELD BIBLES

We carry these in the newest Editions, bound in good, heavy Linen Cardboard backs, or can send you the finest Leather Bound. If you want a Bible to get "REAL HELP" right at home—the newest improved help—a Schofield Bible is the one to buy.

No 50—Linen Cardboard Backs. Good black type, with every help at home. Same helps as the highest price Bible. Size of Book 7x5-1¼.....$1.50

No. 70—Same as above, only larger size type and book, 8½x6½x1¼ $2.00

We carry Schofield Bibles in all kinds of Bindings—Morocco, Persian, Etc. Real Linen Paper, from $5.00 to $10. Let us send you one on approval.

We carry all kinds of New Testaments from 15c to $2.00.

NEW MONITOR SELF-HEATING IRON

AGENTS WANTED
 Send for Free Outfit Offer

$30 to $50 a week actually being made now by men and women. The original—the best—the lowest priced. Nickele plated—looks good—makes good—sells fast—guaranteed. No experience needed. Women do as well as men. Exclusive territory. Work all or spare time. Mrs. Nixon, Vt., sold 8 first half day. Evans, N. C. sold 2 doz. one Saturday. Liberal terms. Prompt Service. Write today.

MONITOR CAD IRON CO. 708 Orange St., Hickory, N. C.

It Will Pay

you to consult the house of Allan if interested in Diamonds, Watches, Jewelry or Silver-ware.

The most skilful artists and artisans produce their goods. The quality and price are guaranteed by this firm, whose sixty years of service prove that the past and present generations are well pleased.

A catalogue on request.

JAMES ALLAN & CO.,
 Department A,
 283 King Street,
 CHARLESTON, S. C.

THE HALLMARK STORE

Meredith College
 Raleigh No. Car.

For Young Women

Offers four years of genuine college work based upon 14 units of high school credit. Courses lead to A. B. and B. S. degrees. Diplomas in Art and Music after completing four years of work.

Location in center of the Capital City, gives unusual advantages.

Library facilities excellent. Attention to physical education. Charges moderate.

For catalogue or further information write

Chas. E. Brewer, Pres.,
 Raleigh, N. C.

STATEMENT NORTHWESTERN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Condition December 31, 1918, as Shown by Statement Filed.

Amount of Capital paid up in cash. $382,461,559.44

Income—From Policyholders, $57,261,501.38; Miscellaneous, $20,767,014.67; Total 78,028,516.05

Disbursements—To policyholders, $46,996,354.24; Miscellaneous, $10,792,914.00; Total 57,789,268.24

ASSETS.

Value of Real Estate (less amount of encumbrances)	$ 4,474,084.09
Mortgage Loans on Real estate.	210,450,715.93
Loans secured by pledge of Bonds, Stocks, or other collateral	6,235.52
Loans made to Policyholders on this Company's Policies assigned as collateral	58,167,946.80
Premium notes on Policies in force.	1,674,749.31
Value of Bonds and Stocks	125,793,895.26
Cash in Company's Office	4,914.42
Deposited in Trust Companies and Banks on interest.	2,107,953.11
Interest and Rents due and accrued	6,612,921.18
Premiums unpaid	5,029,810.61
All other Assets, as detailed in statement.	731,172.26

Total. $415,054,398.49

Less Assets not admitted. 216,926.75

Total admitted Assets $414,837,471.74

LIABILITIES.

Net Reserve, as computed	$366,258,457.00
Present value of amounts not yet due on Supplementary Contracts, etc.	7,413,711.00
Liability on Policies canceled and not included in "Net Reserve," etc.	9,891.41
Policy Claims	3,490,783.41
Due and unpaid on Supplementary Contracts.	45,028.63
Dividends left with Company at interest.	229,679.02
Premiums paid in advance, including Surrender Values so applied	24,786.78
Unearned Interest and Rent paid in advance.	481.53
Commissions due to Agents, etc.	58,326.37
Estimated Amount payable for Federal, State, and other Taxes	1,423,062.68
Dividends due Policyholders	15,043,268.24
Amounts set apart, apportioned, provisionally ascertained, calculated, awaiting apportionment, etc.	1,198,729.00
All other Liabilities, as detailed in statement.	142,489.84

Total amount of all Liabilities, except Capital. $395,338,694.91

Unassigned funds (surplus) 19,498,776.83

Total Liabilities $414,837,471.74

BUSINESS IN NORTH CAROLINA DURING 1918.

Policies on the lives of citizens of said State in force December 31 of previous year, No. 4,163; Amount.	$ 8,361,948.00
Policies on the lives of citizens of said State issued during year, No. 151; Amount	397,900.00

Total, No. 4,314; Amount 8,759,848.00

Deduct ceased to be in force during year, No. 191; Amount 463,092.00

Policies in force Dec. 31, 1918, No. 4,123; Amount. $ 8,296,756.00

Losses and Claims unpaid Dec. 31 of previous year, No. 6; Amount	10,330.00
Losses and Claims incurred during year, No. 88; Amount	233,926.00

Total, No. 94; Amount $ 244,256.00

Losses and Claims settled during year in cash, No. 82; Amount	$ 207,210.00
---	---------------

Losses and Claims unpaid Dec. 31, 1918, No. 52; Amount 37,046.00

Premiums collected or secured in Cash and Notes or Credits without any deduction for Losses, Dividends, Commissions, or other expenses 225,129.02

 President, G. C. Markham; Secretary, A. S. Hathaway; Actuary, P. H. Evans; Home Office, Milwaukee, Wis.; Attorney for service, Jas. R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, Raleigh, N. C.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,
 INSURANCE DEPARTMENT.

Raleigh, March 21, 1919.

I, James R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct abstract of the statement of the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Milwaukee, Wis., filed with this Department, showing the condition of said Company on the 31st day of December, 1918.

Witness my hand and official seal, the day and year above written.

JAMES R. YOUNG,
 Insurance Commissioner.

PREPARE FOR A LARGER SALARY

In times of Peace prepare for a better job at a larger salary. Modern business demands trained men and women experts. The better the training the larger your salary will be. Today our graduates are in the front ranks of modern business. Enroll with this well-equipped business college, and help to make your future success secure. Handsome catalogue mailed on request. You can enter any time. School open all summer.

Kings Business College

Raleigh, N. C. and Charlotte, N. C.

Clover--

In Your Cotton Alleys

Plant after last working of cotton crop. Ready when cotton is picked. For grazing, hay and soil building. Saves a season.

Vetch---

With Oats and Rye

Makes very best feed. Will double your yield and build your soil. Vetch stubble turned under is equal to 700 lbs. of good grade fertilizer per acre.

Alfalfa--

The Best Paying Crop

4 or 5 crops per year without cultivation. Grows several years without re-seeding. Wonderful land builder.

Inoculate the Seed With

NitRA-Germ

and be Sure of a Good Stand

It enables you to grow these crops where you failed before. Improves your crop and land. Costs $2.00 per acre delivered.

Write for FREE book No. 6-G Address NitRA-Germ, Savannah, Ga.

CHURCH ENVELOPES. Double and single envelope systems. Samples and prices sent upon request.
 Double Envelope Corporation, Roanoke, Va.

Nadine Face Powder

(In Green Boxes Only)

Keeps The Complexion Beautiful

Soft and velvety. Money back if not entirely pleased. Nadine is pure and harmless. Adheres until washed off. Prevents sunburn and return of discolorations. A million delighted users prove its value. Tints: Flesh, Pink, Brunette, White. By Leading Toilet Counters or Mail, Dept. R P. National Toilet Company Paris, Tenn.

The McCallie School

A Home School for Boys

On historic and beautiful Missionary Ridge. 1000 feet above sea level. Sound preparation for college and technical schools. Boys live in Christian homes. Our Honor System is conspicuously successful. Student self-government. Large and competent corps of teachers with small classes. Boys are taught how to study. Boys engage in all athletic sports in both indoor and outdoor gymnasiums, or on one of the best Athletic Fields in the South. Diving tower, swimming, rowing at McCallie Lake. Military Drill. Send for well illustrated catalogue.

Headmasters } S. J. McCallie, M. A.
 } J. P. McCallie, M. A., Ph. D.
 Chattanooga, Tennessee

United States Railroad Administration

DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS

Seaboard Air Line Railroad

Reduced Summer Excursion Round-Trip Tickets on sale May 15th to September 30th, final limit October 31st, 1919, to the following points:

Alta Pass, N. C.	$ 7.14	Pensacola, N. C.	$ 9.06
Hickory, N. C.	3.30	Rutherfordton, N. C.	4.32
Johnson City, Tenn.	10.80	Shelby, N. C.	2.88
Lenoir, N. C.	4.50	Switzerland, N. C.	6.96
Norfolk, Va.	17.46	Virginia Beach, Va.	18.26
Old Point, Va.	18.06	Wrightsville Beach, N. C.	10.66

The above rates do not include war tax. Also attractive rates to other resorts.

For particulars as to fares, trains, schedules, etc., apply to any Railroad Ticket Agent.

E. W. LONG, P. S. A.,
 CHARLOTTE, N. C.

JOHN T. WEST, D. P. A.,
 RALEIGH, N. C.

Sparkles

Not Modernized.

"The medical ignorance of some people is staggering," said Dr. Simon Flexner, at a dinner. "I know an X-ray specialist who got a letter from a Middle Western farmer the other day. The farmer wrote:

"Dear Sir: I have had a nail in my thorax for seventeen years. I am too busy to come to New York, but want you to come down here to Paris Corners with your rays, as my case will be worth your while. If you do not find time to come, send down a dozen rays boxed, by express, with instruction card, and I will try to work same myself."

"The X-ray specialist wrote back to the farmer of Paris Corners:

"Dear Friend: I regret to say that business engagements prevent a trip to Paris Corners and I am unfortunately out of rays just now. If you cannot come to New York, send me your thorax by parcel post, and we will see what can be done."—New York Globe.

"Your honor," said the lawyer, "I submit that my client did not break into the house at all. He found the parlor window open, inserted his right arm, and removed a few trifling articles. Now, my client's arm is not himself, and I fail to see how you can punish him for an offense committed only by one of his limbs." "That argument," said the judge, "is very well put. Following it logically, I sentence the prisoner's arm to one year's imprisonment. He can accompany it or not, just as he chooses." The prisoner calmly unscrewed his cork arm and, leaving it in the dock, walked out.

According to Circumstances.

"Any rags? Any old iron?" chanted the dealer, as he knocked at the suburban villa. The man of the house himself opened the door.

"No, go away," he snapped, irritably. "There's nothing for you. My wife is away."

The itinerant merchant hesitated a moment, and then inquired: "Any old bottles?"

Father a Lap Ahead.

Father ruefully gazed at his last dollar. "Money has wings and house rent makes it fly," he said.

"Yes," said his 15-year-old son, "and some houses have wings, for I've seen many a house fly."

"You're smarter than your old dad, maybe, my son, but I always thought that no part of a house except the chimney flue!"—Ex.

She—Would you leave your home for me?" He—"I'd leave a baseball game in the ninth inning with the score a tie."—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

THE WESTMINSTER SCHOOL

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Operated by Kings Mountain Presbytery
$300.00 Per Year

Write for Catalogue to

Rev. T. E. P. Woods, Box 6, Rutherfordton, N. C.

4 Per Cent

Time Certificates of Deposit

They are Interest Bearing. They are Payable on Demand. They Afford a Good Income for Funds Awaiting Permanent Investment

GET ONE

AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY

Charlotte

::

North Carolina

YES,

Preachers and Teachers Are Human

They should have no discount and no cheaper railroad fares than you and I. They should be paid for services rendered—amply paid. If he can't earn enough for family use and the nest egg for the future, he made a sad mistake as to family, else he should change his calling instanter.

The Mutual Building & Loan

Will save a man and his family if they're worth saving, but they must help. It furnishes the "sure cure," but boasts no regrets at the demise of a feller who deliberately refuses to take the medicine.

E. L. KEESLER, Sec. & Treas., 25 S. Tryon St., CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Charlotte National Bank Resources $4,000,000.00

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

PAYS FOUR PER CENT.

On Either Time Certificates of Deposit or Savings Accounts

MAIL ORDER Business Solicited and PROMPT ATTENTION Given

JOHN M. SCOTT	-	President
W. J. CHAMBERS	-	Vice-President
J. F. ROBERTSON	-	Vice-President
W. H. TWITTY	-	Cashier
C. W. BUTT	-	Assistant Cashier

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

REV. J. R. BRIDGES, D. D.

EDITORS

REV. R. C. REED, D. D.

VOL. LX.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., AUGUST 27, 1919.

No. 34.

“Fear Not, Little Flock.”

(Luke 12:32).

They were tired when they reached the fold at night,
The weary sheep;
The day was over, the sun had gone,
It was time to sleep.

The Shepherd had marked, as they journeyed on,
A stone—a fall:
Now, at the top of the hill called Home,
He remembered all.

And so, as they neared the end of the climb,
The Figure tall
Bent, and lifted them up in His arms,
The old and the small.

“The way has been far, the road has been hard,”
He murmured low.
They nestled close in the Shepherd’s arms,
They trusted Him so.

They were tired when they reached the fold at night,
The weary sheep;
And glad, so glad, as they felt His touch,
It was time to sleep!

—The Christian.

Editorial

Paul and Luther.

THESE two men were very unlike in temperament and disposition. One was Jew to the core and the other was German all the way through. But they both strikingly illustrate the relation of religious experience to doctrinal belief. The outstanding feature of Luther's experience was his painful conviction of sin. He was burdened with a sense of guilt almost to the verge of despair. This made a monk of him. Probably he would have been a lawyer as his father wished him to be, but his distress over sin drove him into an Augustinian monastery. His primary aim was to secure peace of conscience, to make his calling and election sure. He believed, according to the received teaching, that the way to do this was to give himself unreservedly to the practice of all the ascetic exercises prescribed for the monastic life. He chose the Augustinian order because its rules were the most stringent. He did not spare himself. He endured long seasons of fasting, and engaged in long periods of devotion, even going beyond the requirements of the order in these respects. He patiently permitted the lazy monks to impose on him the meanest occupations. He served as door-keeper, sexton and menial servant of the cloister. When these routine duties were through then it was "cum sacco per circuitam"—away with your bread-bag to the city. He wandered through the streets of the city begging from house to house to secure food for himself and fellow monks. The worse he fared the better for his purpose. The more miserable he made himself the more surely would he win the compassion of God. His experience was like that of the invalid of the gospel who spent all she had on doctors, and was nothing better, but rather grew worse. Then it was that an old monk, made divinely wise despite the darkness in which he had been reared, pointed Luther to Christ as the sinner's substitute, and exhorted him to cease his self-mortifications and cast himself into the arms of a gracious Redeemer. The light of truth gradually broke through the dismal fog of error, and soon Luther was rejoicing in a full and free salvation offered by Christ and received by faith alone. From that day till his death justification by faith alone was his joy and song. The greatest service which he rendered to the world was in lifting this long forgotten doctrine to a position of commanding prominence.

Paul was a Pharisee of the "most straitest sect." He made it his chief business to work out a personal righteousness, to commend himself to the favor of God by the works of the law. The law to which the Pharisees devoted themselves most assiduously was the ceremonial law. "I fast twice a week, I give tithes of all that I possess," was his exultant boast. Herein the Pharisee differed from Luther. Whereas Luther was sensible of miserable failure in quest of personal righteousness, the Pharisee gloried in his success. Paul was no exception. "Touching the righteousness which is in the law blameless."

But Paul had something yet to learn. His lesson came to him differently from the way Luther's came. It came directly from the sky. The searchlight of heaven flashed on his soul and made a most astounding revelation. Instead of "doing God's service," as he supposed, Paul found that he was actually persecuting God's Son. Instead of being a child of God, he was murdering God's children. How could such enormous sins be forgiven? Paul could never forgive himself. He walked softly before God all his days because he had once persecuted the Church of God.

Incredible as it seemed that God could freely pardon such a gross offender, Paul received the assurance that God had "put away his iniquity as far from him as the east is from the west and that He would remember his transgressions against him no more forever." From that day till his death salvation by grace was his joy and his song. Had he known the hymns which we use in our worship today, doubtless his favorite would have been,

"Amazing grace! how sweet the sound,
That saved a wretch like me!"

Of course, Paul and Luther are in perfect accord, for Luther was echoing Paul. Paul expressly identifies justification by faith and salvation by grace, "It is of faith," he says, "that it might be by grace." Luther was magnifying the office of faith, and Paul was magnifying the grace that enriches faith.

The Churches and the Laboring Man.

When our Lord uttered that invitation, "Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest," He taught what should be the attitude of the Church to all in need. Since then, with but few exceptions, the Church has been the true friend of the laboring man. There may have been occasions where unworthy pastors have yielded to the pressure of the rich, but in the main we believe that the Church has measured up to its obligations. The enemies of religion have tried to create the impression that the rich control the pulpit, and in that way they have frequently stirred up antagonism between the Church and the laboring man.

We know no men who have suffered more from bad leadership than the laboring men. The history of strikes is a sad one, and no one can measure the sufferings entailed upon the women and children. Whatever has been gained by strikes has been at a fearful cost, though it may be that it could have been gained by no other way. We are not referring so much to strikes as to deeds of violence that so often accompany them, due as we must believe to the advice of bad leaders, because we cannot conceive that men who in ordinary life are kind should so suddenly be lost to all sense of right and wrong.

At present there seems to be a wave of unrest moving over the country, and employes that have been living in peace with their employers suddenly find themselves questioning their motives, and under the leadership of some strange emissary, they are ready to declare war against their friends. In this State the relations existing between employer and employe has hitherto been exceedingly happy. Recently, however, there have been signs of unrest. Not only have we had strikes, but the State Federation of Labor at its recent session appointed a committee to investigate "the autocratic rule of some of the Churches of North Carolina."

They charge that the rich men refuse to let Churches teach the brotherhood of man, and that when a preacher has insisted upon teaching such a doctrine, he has been driven from his field. These charges scarcely deserve a notice, so absurd are they, yet because there may be some who will listen to them we hasten to say that after an intimate acquaintance with the ministry running back about forty years, we have scarcely known one who ever considered his Church supporters when taking any position. For the most part they endeavor to remain neutral, feeling confident that they can serve the oppressed better by being so, than by arousing antagonism. Those who claim to have lost their positions because they expounded the cause of the laboring man will be found, if investigated, to have been stripped for general inefficiency.

Two Great Bible Teachers at Montreat.

During the closing month of the season Montreat has been specially favored in having two of the best Bible teachers in this country to occupy its Bible hour. Dr. White, of the New York Bible School, that most orthodox school, where we can send our young men and women in full confidence, spent the first week of August with us. Dr. White's style is that of the class room, and his method is not that of the old style, where memory was the principal requisite, but of the modern teacher where suggestions are thrown out and the pupil does the work.

As he unfolded the Gospel of John it revealed new truths to many, and we are confident that during the coming winter many a young pastor is going to give himself anew to the study of the fourth Gospel. Our only criticism, if such it can be called, is that he attempted too much in the short time allotted him, with the result that he left the majority of his audience with a more or less confused idea of that Gospel. If he had been teaching a class of preachers such would not have been the case, but the preachers were in the minority and the average hearer predominated.

Dr. Robertson, of the Baptist Seminary at Louisville, followed Dr. White. It would be difficult to find any two teachers more unlike. Dr. White is all nerves, solemn and rather vociferative in his delivery, while Dr. Robertson is self-possessed, bubbling over with fun and quiet in delivery. One analyzes the Scripture passage and links the distant parts together, while the other analyzes one section, such as the Sermon on the Mount, and then delivers a running commentary on it, pausing now and then to fit the cap on the heads of the deserving. He delivers his thrusts with a rapier so keen that the pierced one actually smiles over the neatness of the job.

We have heard of some who objected to this humor in a Bible class, but to our mind it is the greatest chance of the teacher. We pity those who have no sense of humor, for they miss much that makes life endurable. Elijah had humor, when he called upon the priests of Baal, and suggested that their God could not hear them, because he peradventure was asleep or had gone on a journey, and even our Lord who was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, actually drew a humorous picture of a man straining out a gnat, and then swallowing a camel.

Some of the greatest preachers have been men who mingled humor with their preaching. The great Spurgeon was one who never hesitated to invoke the aid of humor, and John McNeill, whose evangelistic work has been blessed on both sides of the water, bubbles over with humor. In passing we venture to say that we have heard sermons from some most excellent brethren that would have been improved by an occasional gleam of fun. For fear of being personal, we do not extend our remarks to the religious press.

One of the Evils of War.

It is still a disputed question whether the great war has been in any way a moral force. While it was going on, we heard a great deal about its transforming power in the soldier's life and many were the predictions that the churches would have to change their methods, and the old leaders would have to give way to new leaders. The soldiers have returned but we have seen no great change in their ways or ideas. The good are what they were when they left, and the bad are probably worse—and the church has in no wise found it necessary to make any great change in methods.

If we look at the country at large, we find that the effect of the war has been demoralizing along many lines. The greatest evil is seen in the scramble for money. The Apostle said that the love of money is a root of all evil, but if he had lived in our days and traced the different evils back to their root, he would have found that the mistranslation, the root of all evil was, after all, about the correct one.

During the war when the fate of the world seemed to hang upon the speed with which our government could get ready to enter the war, workmen on ships and munition plants did not seem to hesitate to hold up the work and thus jeopardize success in order to increase their pay, and what was true of them was true also of others in other lines of work. Recently we read that when the forest fires were sweeping over the mountains in the Northwest along the Pacific coast, the forest fighters, indifferent to the loss of life or property, refused to work unless they received an increase of pay. When one reads of such acts he almost loses faith in human nature, and agrees with Sydney Smith who once said that there was this difference between the men of his day and the Israelites at the foot of Sinai. The Israelites worshipped the golden calf while the men of his day worshipped the gold of the calf.

The Cloud in the Sky.

There are enough real troubles and dangers in this old world of ours to give us anxious thought, without being scared by every cry of wolf that may be raised by some watchman upon the world. Now and then, however, we hear a cry that has enough probability in it to make us listen and take counsel of our fears. Dr. G. W. McPherson, who is superintendent of the tent evangelistic committee of New York, recently addressed the Southern Baptist Convention, and warned them that the proposed Inter-Church Movement had in it dangerous possibilities. He charged that "a combination of rich men who control $22,500,000,000," most of whom are New Yorkers, are seeking to bring the Protestant churches together, first under a federation and then into organic union, to "make themselves the religious masters of Protestantism."

According to him these men propose to use the pulpit of America "to protect political and social schemes." These men are all exponents of the new theology, and a part of their scheme is to extend "German Kultur." This Church trust is the movement to provide one budget for all Protestant Church bodies, and through this financial pressure upon the pulpit they think that they can control its utterances.

The schools and colleges also come under its control. By giving money to the needy, and in an educational sense all are needy, they will settle the modern thought and introduce text books written by such men in all of our schools, and thus insure the spread of their peculiar ideas.

There may be nothing worthy of fear in this proposed movement, but in these days anything novel seems to appeal to our people, and therefore we fear lest the idea of a full purse may make judgment flee to brutish beasts. This is the period of unrest in Church and State, and no man can predict what the future has in store for us.

Our Church has held with remarkable tenacity to the old truths and followed the old ways. A new generation has arisen that has been too busy with the problems of the present to study the history of the past, and for that reason they may be blind to the dangers of these new movements.

It has been charged that our old teachers were men who lived in the past and did not realize that there were any problems of the present. That may be partly true, but we believe that it would help the teachers of this day to live in the past for a time, in order to warn men of the tendencies that sometimes wreck churches and retard the coming of the King. Let us "fear the Greeks, even bearing gifts."

Contributed

How One Presbytery Solved Its Home Mission Problem

By Rev. Chas. M. Boyd.

THE most important missionary work in the home land today probably rests with the Presbyterian Missions Committees. This work is also in some ways the most difficult of all, and it is therefore generally the most inefficiently done. Through a development covering a period of several years a plan has come to completion in the Tuscaloosa Presbytery, which is believed, after some two years' trial, to be about the best yet found for the doing of this all important work. The plan may be of interest to others outside the Presbytery of Tuscaloosa.

A few years ago there were some forty churches receiving aid from the Tuscaloosa Presbytery. These churches were badly grouped. Except at intervals many of them had no preaching. Some of them had had no preaching at all for several years. On the motion of the committee, Presbytery took some very decided steps. One of these steps was to urge the churches involved to allow regrouping by the committee. Another of these steps was to ask these churches to receive for one year whomsoever the committee might send as stated supply, the understanding being that, if at the end of a year's trial, the supply was found unsatisfactory, he would be removed by the committee, with no embarrassment whatever to the churches. If the churches and the supply were found to be mutually satisfied, the arrangement would be continued, or the churches, of course, could call. On the other hand, if the supply was found efficient and the churches did not respond, the committee was pledged to care as best it could for the supply.

It so happened that about the time the new method got under way all of the forty churches receiving help from the Presbytery were found vacant. The committee was not disturbed but rather helped by such a condition. It very soon became apparent that the one thing needful in the scheme of organization was a "Presbyterial Expert" or field secretary, who could devote his whole time to the work. This need was discovered by and presented to the Presbytery by one of our devoted and consecrated elders, P. T. Shanks, of the First Church, Selma. Mr. Shanks was a member of the committee. The Presbytery directed the committee to find such a man, trusting and believing that under the new plan his salary would be forthcoming. After nearly a year's search the right man was found in the person of Rev. A. G. Irons, formerly pastor of the church at Fort Valley, Ga. The work under the new plan had been carried on with encouraging success by the committee for a year previous to the coming of the field secretary. Mr. Irons has been in the field now nearly a year. His work is not chiefly that of an evangelist, as that term is commonly understood, though he does hold evangelistic meetings. His work primarily is or was to survey the field, recommend groupings, go to the group under the direction of the committee, get the people together, make every member canvasses, thereby getting the churches to raise as much as possible for self-support, and in every way to prepare for the coming of the supply.

Some of the results of the plan are these. Whereas a little while ago we had forty vacant churches in the Presbytery we have today only one group of four churches without a pastor. That group will shortly be supplied. Some cases are very interesting. In a certain general community there are five churches. A few years ago these five churches were being supplied by three men, all of whom were receiving supplements from Presbytery. None of these men were adequately supported, and none of them lived in the community of their churches. These five churches were grouped. A man was called on a salary of $1,500 and manse, with no supplement from Presbytery. Then we had thirty-five churches to care for instead of forty. The work in that group, of course, went forward as never before. Another case is to the point. A group of four churches was formed. A supply was sent. In a little while they called the supply as pastor. No supplement was asked. The committee then had thirty-one churches under its care instead of forty. And here is still another case. A group of four churches had always been helped by Presbytery. The group like those already mentioned was worked before the coming of the field secretary. Nine hundred dollars and house was raised as support. The supply was put in the field, a supplement of $100 being added to his salary. After a few months the field secretary visited the churches of the group. The churches raised the salary to $1,200. The supplement of $100 was discontinued. Then the committee had twenty-seven churches to aid instead of forty. And yet again. Two churches had been forming a pastorate. The salary was most meager. The case was taken up. One of these churches decided to take a man for full time. A salary of $1,500 was provided with no difficulty at all. The other church was left to fill out another group where it was needed. And yet there is one more case in point. In a certain section we had six churches and preaching points. These were only at intervals supplied with preaching. They never seemed able to agree on a man. That case was taken up. The six raised a salary of $1,200 and house. The man was sent, and from all accounts is doing fine work. No supplement was asked. And now the committee has twenty-one churches to aid instead of forty.

Some other results of the plan are that the salaries of the men have been put at a minimum of $1,200 and manse. Many old troubles and dissensions between congregations, through regroupings or by the appointments of the committee, has disappeared. One new church has been organized. Only one, and possibly two, of the men appointed to the groups has been found unsatisfactory. The committee has yet to hear of a church or supply who is dissatisfied with the plan or with the working of the plan.

It may be worth while here to sum up what is regarded as the essential features of the whole scheme. And we do believe it a real scheme, every part of it being essential to the success of the whole. First of all, there must be a forward look on the part of Presbytery. There must be a live and capable committee. Presbytery must give to the committee the authority to regroup, wherever needed, and Presbytery must urge upon the churches the necessity of submission to the judgment of the committee. Presbytery must give to the committee the power of the appointment of stated supplies to the group, without a visit from the prospective supply, the understanding being that, if at the end of the year or other suitable time the appointee is found unsatisfactory to the churches and they make known the fact to the committee, the supply will be removed with no embarrassment to the churches. A strong and wise field man who will go into the wilderness, not to hold evangelistic meetings merely, but to prepare the way for the coming of the supply is essential. And last of all, the churches, the supplies, the field man, and the committee must remember that Presbytery is supreme in all matters of polity and government.

We need to remember the voluntary character of Christ's death, that He pleased to die, that in all things He might be made like unto His brethren, that for our sakes He would also taste of death, that in nothing might He differ from us, but might undergo every experience of man, and so be a merciful and faithful High Priest, able to succor to the uttermost those who came to Him; that even in that dark valley through which we each must go alone, we might still have the consolation of His presence; and hear His comforting word to cheer us, and to strengthen us when all alone in that last moment of life.—H. Lilienthal.

Sunday School Methods That Work Elsewhere.

An Open Letter to the Educational Campaign Headquarters.

By Rev. Edgar Tufts.

Instead of lecturing the pupils for being late, let a neat card at the entrance to the school announce "You are late" to those who come after the school has opened.

Sundays slip around as fast as Wednesdays do. The teacher who keeps in close touch with her class must not allow Saturday evening to come before she begins to inquire why Mary Smith was not out last Sunday.

Schools which for many years have followed the practice of having pupils memorize Scripture find many evidences that the practice is well worth while.

Mission facts served appetizingly every week in fifty words may make more impression than a half hour's talk once a month.

Factory managers keep constant watch on their labor "turnover." How many superintendents know how many different individuals have been on the roll of the school during the past year, even though the total enrollment is the same?

Does your superintendent open the school with an undertoned query of the pianist: "What number shall we sing this morning?"

Visitors to many schools say that those schools in which the superintendent briskly steps to the front of the platform and announces each part of the service as though it had been planned and rehearsed for many weeks have the best order and attention. Children "catch on" faster than grown-ups, and attention to detail in conducting the school goes a long way toward having a good school. This idea of attention to nice points also applies to the teachers.

Did your local newspaper have something about your school at the time of the last special exercise you held? Why not? Perhaps it was your fault! Every time a paper carries into a home a favorable item of news about your Sunday School it becomes that far an active agent urging those who don't attend to come and join our ranks. Better plan to let the editor have items of interest as they develop.

The Chamber of Commerce of Fort Worth, Texas, announces that the 30,000 pupils in its Sunday Schools represent 80 per cent of the children of the city between 6 and 18. What are the facts about your town?

Those Special Days.

When editors plan for special numbers of their periodicals they often note on small slips of paper any ideas concerning the various issues that may occur in their reading or study. These are sorted under the several heads and all the ideas digested. Out of these many others may come. Why cannot the Sunday School superintendent follow the same plan? Let him think for five minutes every week, in connection with his preparation for the next Sunday, on the coming special day, Children's day, Rally day, or Christmas. Put down every plan that comes to mind for better observance of the day. File them in a convenient place, and then two or three months before the day let him assemble all the ideas and in consultation with his assistants and heads of departments lay definite plans.

Are You Talking Over Their Heads?

Teachers and superintendents of departments should be careful not to use as illustrations things which are unknown to the pupils. One teacher used the map of Italy to give point to one lesson. But Italy had not yet been reached in the geography study of her boys and the illustrations meant little. Conference with public school authorities will help in this matter.

Establish Self-Government.

The wise teacher of a group of ten teen boys after having them elect officers for the class brought them to the point where they told her that the class did not behave as it should. She had asked them at a class meeting if the class was all that they thought it ought to be. The boys then drew up twelve rules for the guidance of the members, beginning with "No chewing gum allowed." The boys had become their own police officers.

I have been reading with much interest of the great campaign that is now on to raise one million dollars for the Presbyterian schools in the Synod of North Carolina. Ever since I first heard of the campaign I have been wondering if we couldn't get a part of the funds that you all are raising for the "North Carolina Building" that we are planning to erect at Banner Elk for the Lees-MacRae Institute. I am sending a picture of this building together with a few words of explanation as to our plans for permanent buildings. I ask for your consideration of this request on the following grounds:

First: The Lees-MacRae Institute is in the State of North Carolina and about 80 per cent of the children whom we are educating are from North Carolina.

Second: This work was begun by the Synod of North Carolina and it is the oldest and largest school in the mountains under the control of our Church.

Third: Owing to our peculiar relation to the Synod of Appalachia, we cannot expect any great help from this Synod for the "North Carolina Building." The "Tennessee Building" will naturally appeal to the people of Tennessee. The "Virginia Building" will for the same reason appeal to the people of Virginia. In the same way the "North Carolina Building" ought to appeal to the people of North Carolina. But the trouble is, we have no North Carolina territory within the bounds of the Appalachian Synod to draw from, except the four counties of Watauga, Avery, Mitchell and Yancey, all of which is mission field. It is true that Asheville Presbytery is in the bounds of the Appalachian Synod, but they have all the schools that they can support within their own bounds. The consequence is that if the "North Carolina Building" is put up by North Carolinians, which we confidently expect, it will have to be done by people in the bounds of the North Carolina Synod. It will therefore be better and more in keeping with the spirit of the campaign for the committee to give us a slice of what they raise than for us to make an independent drive at the same time.

Fourth: The "North Carolina Building" is, in our plans, the central building, the first one needed, the most important and the most expensive. The blueprints for this building are now in hand, and several hundreds of tons of stone and sand have been hauled to the spot. Also nearly three thousand dollars for this building have already been raised from the people in North Carolina.

Fifth: Many of our dearest and most liberal supporters and eight members of our faculty in the school and Orphans' Home are from North Carolina. We have every reason to believe that the work at Banner Elk is as dear to the good people of North Carolina Synod as any work within the ecclesiastical bounds and that they would be glad for a part of what they give to be used on the "North Carolina Building."

Sixth: Practically every girl who has gone from Banner Elk to college, and there have been a good many, has gone to one of the North Carolina colleges. In this way our school has been a feeder to other institutions in the State and it will continue to be as long as any other institution in the State is engaged in this kind of work.

For these reasons we respectfully ask that you give us a portion of the funds that you are raising, the same to be used in helping to erect the "North Carolina Building."

The Christian life must be in its own degree something like the Master's own life, luminous with His hope, and surrounded by a bracing atmosphere which uplifts all who even touch its outer fringe.—Hugh Black.

Few Christians have any idea how great is the multitude of God's mercies until something arouses them to count up their causes for thanksgiving. Count your mercies. It will do you good to count up your thanksgiving column.

The Blight of Mohammedanism

By R. E. Magill, Secretary.

IT is a fact in every land where Mohammedanism is the predominant religion the result is a retarded material development, a dwarfed intellectual life, an unjust social order, a debased and dishonored womanhood, a neglected childhood, corrupt political methods and a notable lack of initiative and enterprise on the part of the individual.

Travelers in the orient have always been impressed with these facts, but one who journeys through sections where Mohammedanism thrives following the great world war, is profoundly impressed with the failure of the Moslem world to live up to the war standards of civilized nations and of the utter helplessness of the Moslem people in the face of the great reconstruction problems which face the world.

The basis of a right thinking and right acting civilization is a home where womanhood is honored, childhood protected and all the virtues are taught and observed.

At this critical point Mohammedanism fails lamentably, and until there is a radical reform this religion must continue a debasing rather than an uplifting force. Plural marriages are permitted and a man may have four legal wives and as many concubines as he can support.

Naturally the place of a woman in such a home is that of a slave to a man of the lowest ideals, and intrigues for the place of favorite constitute their chief employment. Into such an atmosphere children are born and under such environment their education goes on.

Divorce is as easy as the morals of the people are lax, and their repetitions of the formula "Woman thou art divorced" is all that is necessary to sever the matrimonial bond.

The children go automatically to the father and their future training, such as it is, falls to a slave who was probably insanely jealous of the mother of the unfortunate children. Children are valued in the Moslem home according to their ability to work, and responsibility for the care of younger brothers and sisters is shouldered at an age and in a way that makes a normal play life impossible. Knowledge of health conditions and modern sanitary regulations have no place in the scheme of life of the average Moslem family, with the result that the death rate is appallingly high and about 70 per cent of the babies die under the age of one year. Babies are not washed until they are 40 days old, and the appearance of the people indicates that the use of water is a lost art.

Education in the western sense is discouraged, if not forbidden, by the rulers who have both civil and ecclesiastical standing. Only three women out of 1000 among the average Moslems can read and only three men out of 100 can read the simplest literature.

In such ignorance the wildest superstitions and the lowest forms of vice find a fertile field and the people are grossly immoral, universally untruthful, unscrupulous in their relations with each other, and rank pirates if they have business with other people.

Form, ceremony, and ritual constitute the essential features of a Mohammedan's religion, and if a regular observance of stated times for prayers and fasting is to be credited as a vital feature of a religious experience, the Moslem is a very righteous man.

Their religion, however, seems to have no connection with, or control over, conduct and they will follow a fast with a feast in which every appetite is indulged to excess, and they will cut an Infidel's throat or stab him in the back with the keenest zest ten minutes after finishing a most exacting prayer ritual in the Mosque.

All official positions are held by Moslems, and as their religion imposes no hampering restrictions on personal conduct it is easy to understand why public office is regarded as a "private snap," to use a good American definition.

A considerable number of the ruling class have traveled in Europe and a few have studied in French and German Universities. Through such travel and study they have added to the shocking Moslem sins the more refined but corrupt European vices with the result that the Moslem rulers go to the limit of official corruption and personal immorality.

The masses are regarded as subjects to be exploited and not as citizens to be served, and it is a misnomer to call the taxation system a revenue measure, for it is plain robbery under the guise of law. The masses realize they are being oppressed and denied practically every right, but so dense is their ignorance and so strong is the tradition of caste and the divine right of rulers that a rebellion against local authority is very rare. On the contrary a rebellion against the rule of the nation that is exercising a mandatory or a protectorate is easily stirred up by the combined appeal to patriotism and fanatical hatred for the "Infidel Dogs."

The attempt of the German Emperor to enlist the Mohammedans in a holy war against the Allies in furtherance of his nefarious plans was the most adroit and dangerous move made by this unscrupulous schemer, and had he succeeded the horrors through which the world passed would have paled into insignificance compared with the saturnalia of blood and massacre that would have followed.

The plan failed not through a lack of fanatical hatred of Christian civilization, but through certain racial divisions of the Moslems which made it impossible to unite them under one leadership. It will be remembered that the Mohammedan religion is the faith of the Egyptians, the Arabs and the Turks as well as countless smaller units and when counted as a whole they number over three hundred million, thus vastly outnumbering the Christians in the world.

The Sultan of Turkey has, in the past, been recognized as the titular head of the Mohammedans, although the religious capital is at Mecca in Arabia.

The Hejaz of Arabia with headquarters at Mecca has been growing in influence as a religious leader of the Moslem faith, and the Khedive of Egypt has been stressing the religious phase of his office and the three leaders were quite human and orientally selfish, therefore, when the Kaiser ordered his puppet, the Sultan of Turkey, to declare a holy war against the Allies he was amazed to find that his machinery would not work.

Some far-seeing statesmen in England had foreseen such a contingency as a holy war and had employed the entire Arabian Army to defend the Suez Canal and to aid in the campaign against the Turks in Palestine and Syria.

This service cost England $2,500,000 per month but it was a good investment as it assured the loyalty of the Arabs, at least through the war.

The Egyptians were used in a similar way, but they furnished a much smaller force than did the Arabs and frequent outbreaks against British rule occurred during the war.

The net result of this wise tactical move of the British was to array Mohammedan troops from Arabia and Egypt against their fellow-religionists from Turkey, and when the Kaiser called for a "Holy War" his game had been blocked.

The danger of such a war to the peace of the world cannot be overestimated, and if the forces of Mohammedanism become unified under a strong leadership, as now seems probable, this menace will continue with increasing gravity. The demand of the Arabs that they be given a separate National existence with their capital at Mecca and the present Hejaz as their supreme ruler has not attracted much attention outside of the Peace Conference, but students of Near East problems see in this demand far-reaching possibilities.

The present Hejaz of Arabia is an old man and not especially brilliant, but it is probable he will succeed the Sultan of Turkey as the head of Mohammedanism.

This will probably be determined by the devout pilgrims when they make their next annual journey to Mecca, as the faithful have a voice in naming the head official of their faith.

The attendance during the war has been quite small, but the next pilgrimage will doubtless carry a great multitude to Mecca prompted both by a desire to see the old shrine again

(Continued on page 9)

Water Baptism

By Rev. J. W. Moseley, Jr.

JUST NOW throughout the church, in the Sunday Schools, its ordinances are under discussion. The eternal question in the provincial parish is water-baptism. Its emphasis as a doctrine of separation will not down, so it behooves those who are responsible for the instruction of the youth of the church to clear up the obscurities that becloud the question. There are three questions to be answered in a full consideration of baptism: the meaning, the mode and the subjects of water-baptism. It is the purpose of this paper to discuss cautiously and in the spirit of conciliation the meaning or significance of water-baptism. I am constrained to believe that the settlement of its significance or symbolic purport will speedily settle the other questions.

All Christians that practice water-baptism are either affusionists or immersionists. The affusionist pours the water upon the subject. The immersionist dips the subject in the water. The difference in mode is a consequence of a difference in conception of the significance of water-baptism. This is right, for the mode must be regulated by the symbolism of the sacrament. The affusionists have consistently found authority for pouring not in traditions, not in definitions, but in the significance of water-baptism.

What does water-baptism as a sacrament of the church signify? The settlement of this issue of sorrow and separation is a work of supreme importance. Two answers are given to this question. The affusionist says that it signifies or symbolizes the cleansing work of the Holy Spirit in His application of Christ's atonement in blood to the unregenerate. The immersionist says that water-baptism symbolizes the death, burial and resurrection of Christ.

Affusionists deny the death, burial and resurrection interpretation for the following reasons: (1) In analogy the sign and the thing signified must have striking resemblance. Water-baptism, whatever the mode, has no resemblance in fact to the death, burial and resurrection of Christ. Christ was not let down into the grave but lifted up to a niche in the wall of a new cut sepulcher. (2) In the baptismal formula it is clearly taught that the thing signified in water-baptism includes more than the death, burial and resurrection of Christ, as the baptism is into the name (work) of the Holy Spirit as well as into the name (work) of the Son. (3) It is logical suicide to say that the sign antedates the thing signified. That is as a symbol of a something that does not exist and is not even thought of as existing or likely to exist. The baptism of John the Baptist was symbolic of a reality and not of the un happened or unexpected death, burial and resurrection of Christ. (4) The church has a sacramental sign or symbol for the death, burial and resurrection of Christ in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. It is an impeachment of divine wisdom to have two signs for the same substance. (5) The Bible is silent. There is no specific text for the position of the immersionist. Erroneous exegesis brings water-baptism into Romans 6:4 and Colossians 2:12. Competent and credible commentators find only the baptism of the Holy Spirit in these proof-texts of the immersionist. (6) The Ante-Nicene Fathers, so far as their writings indicate, had never heard of this theory. (7) The theory that water-baptism signifies the death, burial and resurrection of Christ is so modern that it was not known even to the early Protestants.

Affusionists affirm the cleansing work of the Holy Spirit interpretation for the following reasons: (1) There is such a work in redemption as the cleansing work of the Holy Spirit. Paul tells us in Titus 3:5, "He (God) saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit." Again in I Corinthians 6:11, "Ye are washed by the Spirit," is the thing signified in water-baptism. This washing of the sinner, at the instance of God the Father, in the cleansing blood of the crucified Christ by the Holy Spirit is the substance of salvation. It includes the purpose of the Father, the sacrifice of the Son and the office work of the Spirit. (2) Circumcision, the identical sign of the old covenant in Abraham with water-baptism of the new covenant in Christ, symbolized the cleansing work of the Holy Spirit. The sinner of all dispensations is washed in the blood of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. (3) John the Baptist baptized with water not to effectuate, but to symbolize the remission of sins. John's baptism signified the cleansing work of the Holy Spirit. (4) The analogy between water-baptism and cleansing is perfect. Baptism is a washing with water that symbolizes the washing of the Spirit. (5) The Bible is specific. See Acts 22:16. In the statement "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins" is the Bible interpretation of the symbolism of water-baptism. Note the perfect connection between the sign and the thing signified. Water-baptism is the sign and the work of the Holy Spirit is the thing signified. It is not the water that cleanses but the blood of Jesus as applied by the Holy Spirit. The beloved apostle tells us in 1 John 1:7 that "The blood of Jesus, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin." (6) Finally the primitive church, unless all the Ante-Nicene Fathers are mistaken, believed that water-baptism symbolized the cleansing work of the Holy Spirit. Practically the whole church today, Protestant and Catholic, maintains this position. If this interpretation is correct then the application of water in baptism in any quantity is symbolic of the cleansing work, for the essence of the ordinance is not found in the volume but in the analogy of the water.

Lawton, Okla.

Preaching Christ in Yiddish and Hebrew.

Open air Gospel meetings were held for two weeks, every night, at Wiccacoe Square, South Fourth and Queen streets, Philadelphia, Pa.

These meetings were conducted in Yiddish and Hebrew by the evangelist, Philip Sidersky, of Baltimore, Md., from an automobile truck. He was assisted in this series of meetings by Abraham Kominsky, a young and talented cornetist, recently from Russia, who is a war orphan, as his father lost his life in the recent war, who played several Gospel solos.

The automobile truck was very kindly provided for these meetings by Joseph Kilburn, a prominent Christian business man of Philadelphia.

Wiccacoe Square, although having an historical Indian name, is now completely surrounded by Yiddish speaking Jews from Russia and other European countries, and the population is so congested in that community that it is not difficult to get a crowd together.

At the close of these meetings Gospel tracts in Yiddish and Hebrew, as well as New Testaments in Yiddish and Hebrew, were circulated among those who became interested at these meetings.

The consciousness of sin is far more than the admission of a fact; it is a cry of sorrow, more or less poignant. Even at its faintest it tells of grief, though it may have a large element of fear, nevertheless always at the bottom speaks of love. God may be little known and vaguely realized. His name may be hardly more than a symbol for the spiritual and the unseen, for what is permanent and perfect. But none the less He is desirable, not for His gifts or favors but for Himself. The psalmist's cry, "My soul is athirst for God, yea, for the living God," may be, at this first stage, far beyond the power of the awakened sinner. But at least it is no longer alien to him. It has become intelligent and congenial. God is the true end; godness the true life; and sin has come to block the way and cheat him of the prize.—Bishop Rhinelander.

I will place no value on anything I have or may possess except in relation to the kingdom of Christ.—David Livingstone.

Miss Selina on Use of the Survey in Missionary Programs

By Mary Callum Wiley.

"REALLY, I must be going. Here I've been talking to you upon every subject in the world. What! I haven't touched upon the one topic you're most interested in, Missionary Programs? You say you've just been appointed chairman of your Circle and you're as interested in having a wide-awake, up-to-date Circle? Well, I think you are wise, my dear, in looking to your program, for the secret of a successful Circle meeting is serving the very best intellectual, spiritual food in the most tempting manner.

"You want me to tell you how we do in our Circle meetings? You know, in our local auxiliary we have a big inspirational meeting of all the circles on the first Monday of each month and at these meetings we alternate in our programs on Home and Foreign Missions. Not that we differentiate between Home and Foreign Missions. We have found that we can make our meetings more inspirational, more worth while, if we specialize as it were; instead of scattering our energies telling a little about Africa, touching upon Ministerial Relief, making a plea for Orphans' Homes, we concentrate upon one general topic at a time. In this way we have during the year Home Missions, with all its sub-divisions, Church Extension, Sabbath Schools, Orphanages and so forth, and in the other six meetings we get a splendid world-view of Foreign Missions.

"Oh, yes, we tried having something of everything at each meeting, but it didn't work. To hold people you have got to give them something. You wouldn't think of setting people down to your table with only a taste of this and that. You would give them bread enough to satisfy them, a substantial helping of meat and potatoes. And yet you invite people to an intellectual, spiritual feast and give them scanty helpings so that they go away unsatisfied and dissatisfied: they do not get enough of any one missionary topic to desire more. Knowledge creates interest: a taste for Missions must be acquired by forceful, tactful, inspiring presentation of missionary facts.

"And so, I say, we present Foreign Missions at one meeting of our Auxiliary and Home at the next and then in the meanwhile, we study the whole field at our individual Circle meetings. For our Circle meetings, you know, are more or less informal and at them we feel like one big family sitting around the table discussing the various things that interest us as a family. We bring our Surveys to Circle meeting and after our devotions we use them as the basis of our discussions of the general topics of the month.

"We have found, thanks to our wide-awake Program Committee, many ways of using our Surveys. Haven't you heard women say, 'Oh, don't give us anything out of the Survey at your missionary meeting; we've already read it.' Well, what would you think if you heard some one say: 'Oh, we're so glad you are going to let us use our Surveys; we've read them from cover to cover and want to discuss things we've read.' That's the way our Circle feels about it.

"No good English teacher would think of studying with her class a piece of literature, a poem or a story, without first having her pupils read it rapidly at home for a birdseye view of the selection as a whole or giving it to them at one sitting or two: then when they knew it as a whole, she would discuss it with them in detail. Don't you know how it is with Bible study? The more we read our Bible by books the more we get out of individual verses. You know how people love to read over and over their favorite poems; they love, too, to read the poems they are familiar with. So we have found in our Circle meetings that we can use our Surveys to great advantage.

"How do we do it, you ask. Why, never in the same way exactly. Variety is the spice not only of life but of missionary programs as well.

"At the January meeting, for instance, the Program Committee handed me a memorandum, 'Ask each member to read her February Survey before coming to meeting and mark the first article she considers the best and second the one she thinks second best, and be prepared to tell why she marked each article.' You may be sure we had an interested set of women at our next meeting.

"At another time, we were notified that the next meeting (and mark you how the announcements are given out in time for us all to get ready) would be in the nature of a conference between the different heads of our church departments, Miss A representing Home Missions, Mrs. B the Juniors, Miss C Foreign Missions, Miss D the Woman's Auxiliary, Mrs. E Christian Education and Ministerial Relief and Mrs. F. Publication and Sunday School Extension, each head being given five minutes in which to present her cause as given in a certain number of the Survey.

"An assignment for another meeting was to read our magazines with pencil in hand, marking every item that referred in any way to woman or woman's work. What a wonderful time we did have discussing these markings; what an eye-opener that meeting was in regard to woman's work.

"Adapting Miss Berry's suggestion in the June, 1919, Survey each member of our Circle personified at one meeting an author in the current number of the Survey and in one minute spoke on her subject.

"Then, again, our meeting was designated as a spice box meeting, each one of us answering one question from the spice box (Home Missions) and from hidden treasures (Foreign Missions).

"Moving pictures interested us one cold, rainy afternoon. Having been asked to cut out all the pictures from a certain Survey we brought them to meeting and sitting around a big table we exhibited them one by one, telling about them. At another moving picture meeting different ladies gave the different articles in the Survey and at the conclusion of each story we had great fun in seeing who could place on the table first the illustration for that story. This may seem childish to you, but to change the old rhyme:

Facts embellished with some fun

Are enjoyed by every one.

"'Who Said It and Why?' That was all our Program Committee gave us one afternoon. But what a fine meeting we had giving quotations from our Survey and telling why such a statement was made by such and such a writer. 'Watchman, What of the Night?' gave us another interesting program. Seven 'Watchmen' gave reports from the May Survey covering the year's work in our foreign fields and seven others told of our missions among foreign speaking people at home.

"And so you see how we make use of our Survey. Why, you are certainly welcome! I'm always so glad to help if I can. Good-bye. I do hope you will have a fine time working with your Circle this winter. I think it's a great thing to get our younger women interested as leaders. Good-bye. Come around and talk with me whenever you feel like it."

Our Father, many little things will crowd this day. May we not miss the one big thing. Grant us help to rescue some moments from the grasp or sordidness and self and devote them to communion with Thee. Thus shall all moments and tasks be sacred, and we shall learn to love all work, knowing that Thou hast hallowed it. Thus shall we come to feel that our daily tasks are not ends, but steps by which to climb to heavenly mansions. Thus, also, shall we love all men—wicked, weak, erring—knowing that they are very dear to Thee. Then, when the twilight and evening star come, and the thrush pours his plaintive melody into the ear of eve may we hear the voice of the gentle Christ, "Come unto me and I will give you rest." Grant us, Father, such a day, for His Name's sake. Amen.—Oliver W. Hutchinson.

No great deed is done by falterers who ask for certainty.—Eliot.

Conference on Home Missions.

By Mamie Bays.

The Conference on Home Missions held at Montreat this summer was designated by Rev. S. L. Morris, D.D., secretary of the Executive Committee of Home Missions, who was the presiding officer of the conference, to have been the most successful conference yet held at Montreat in the interest of this cause of the church. In addition to the program of interest and helpfulness arranged for this conference, almost half a hundred of the home missionaries of the church were in attendance and their presence gave the personal touch of Home Missions to the conference and their messages presented the work and its needs in a manner that cannot be presented so clearly through any channel that is farther removed from the work than is the man and the women actively engaged in the same.

Rev. Wilbert W. White, D.D., of New York City, conducted the Bible hour with which each morning session of the conference began, and during this service each day the keynote of singleness of purpose and unselfish service for others was dominant and the spirit thus expressed was outstanding in every session of the conference.

The morning sessions of the conference were occupied with messages from the Home Mission fields of the church, delivered by the women who are engaged in this work, and these messages constituted a most interesting and helpful feature of the conference, these women being able to give clear insight to some of the phases of this work not to be gained in other ways. This is true especially of the home life of the people among whom they labor, their knowledge of the need of the women and children in these homes being more accurate than that of men engaged in Home Mission work, due to the fact of their more intimate association with the homes of the people among whom they work.

During the evening sessions of the conference addresses were delivered by men who are home missionaries. Their addresses were filled with graphic pictures from their experience which emphasized most forcibly the importance of this work in its mission at home and in its larger mission to the world, especially at this crisis in the history of the world and when such large emphasis is being placed upon the thought expressed in these words by Rev. Homer McMillan, D.D., field secretary of the Executive Committee of Home Missions: "It is given to America not to influence, but to determine the destiny of the human race."

These men from the Home Mission fields made earnest pleas in behalf of the full recognition of the greatness of the Home Mission task by the entire church and for support sufficient to enable workers in this cause to meet the needs of the task. One of the missionaries among the mountain people emphasized this responsibility of the church in the following words: "So long as the church gives its old clothes to Home Missions and its money to other causes, so long will Home Missions be found without the type of workers found in the other departments of the work of the church. The greatest problem facing the church today is the program of Home Missions."

Every phase of the Home Mission work of the church was ably presented during this conference. During the time devoted to the consideration of the work among the negroes, reports of marked encouragement regarding the progress being made at Stillman Institute and the influence of this school among the negroes were presented in the message of Rev. R. K. Timmons, principal, and in that of Rev. W. A. Young, one of the best known of the colored men identified with the work of colored evangelization in the Southern Presbyterian Church. Speaking especially of the importance of this special phase of Home Mission work, Dr. Morris emphasized its importance in these words: "Nothing but the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ will ever solve the race problem."

Two sermons were preached on the Sunday which marked the close of this conference, that in the morning being delivered by Rev. R. H. McCaslin, D.D., of Montgomery, Ala., and that in the evening by Rev. Trigg A. M. Thomas,

D.D., one of the Assembly's general evangelists. These sermons constituted a fitting climax to the conference and the forceful truths presented by both speakers were heard by large audiences.

It was a source of distinct regret to many of the conference that Dr. McMillan could not be present. The conflict in dates between this conference and that in session at Kerrville, Texas, and that he was one of the speakers at the latter conference was the cause of his absence from Montreat at this time.

The Blight of Mohammedanism.

(Continued from page 6)

and a wish to share in electing the high potentate of their faith.

The eldest son of the Hejaz of Arabia is Prince Feisel, Governor of Damascus, and commander in chief of the Arabian Army.

He spent some weeks in Paris urging the claims of the Arabs for recognition as a Republic. He is a man of great ability and is the idol of his people. He is classed as a conservative in the East and is highly regarded by the British and by the Missionaries with whom he has come in contact. On his return from Paris he was accorded a welcome in the cities of Beirut, Damascus, Aleppo and Arabian centers such as has never been given a visitor not even excepting the Kaiser on his famous visit to this district twenty years ago.

We were in Damascus during the week given to the festivities there and 300,000 people are said to have taken part in the celebration. The excitement ran so high that the British Army officials forbid our leaving our hotel for 24 hours and only officers on duty ventured on the street. A frenzied mob paraded the streets night and day for about a week and a spark would have set off this powder magazine with results that would have shocked a war sickened world.

The Prince counselled moderation and showed a fine spirit, but there was no mistaking the temper of his followers as they marched by our hotel armed with ugly swords, shouting the old desert war cries, "Mohammedanism is the religion of force; up lions of the desert and slay the Christians," and the more sinister cry, "Why did the Infidel Dogs go to war? Up and slay them."

The British soldiers were very patient and tactful, but they had to arrest a number of the fanatical leaders to forestall possible trouble.

I photographed the mobs during some of their most frenzied moments and the pictures show forces that will be difficult to handle if they ever get out of hand.

At present the situation seems peaceful, but the Prince Feisel has it in his power to start a war that will be as far-reaching in consequence and as costly in blood and treasure as the world war precipitated by the "Beast of Berlin."

Let us hope and pray that he may be influenced by humane and enlightened principles and not by oriental selfishness and fanaticism.

It seems probable that the United States will not have to become responsible for maintaining order in this tempestuous corner of the earth, but to quote a noted Missionary leader, Dr. Watson, "the United States must become a Religious and Educational Mandatory in the Near East if not a political director."

Constantinople, Turkey, May 23, 1919.

It is true that the mightiest successes that come to God's cause are created and carried on by prayer. God's day of power; the angelic days of activity and power are when God's Church comes into its mightiest inheritance of mightiest faith and mightiest prayer. God's conquering days are when the saints have given themselves to mightiest prayer; when God's house on earth is a house of prayer, then God's house in heaven is busy and all potent in its plans and movements, then His earthly armies are clothed with the triumphs and spoils of victory and His enemies defeated on every hand.—E. M. Bounds, in "Purpose in Prayer."

News of the Week

The all-absorbing question of the hour is the high cost of living and how to lower it. The figures gathered by Government experts show that since 1914, it has increased 80 per cent. Despite all present efforts prices still remain high, though the Government is confiscating hoardings of food by the million dollars worth.

Former Attorney General Wickersham, Republican, urges the ratification of the treaty. He advises that we let the document take the course of the United States Constitution, to be amended later.

Facts given show that Germany is preparing to capture the chemical trade of the world. It is now known that her technical staff were left unimpaired by the war.

The Prince of Wales, who is on a visit to this country, has reached Halifax and has been honored by a reception.

In New York the vast subway and elevated system of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company was completely tied up by a strike on Sunday, August 17.

The State Association of Postmasters convened at Wrightsville Beach, N. C., last Monday. J. H. Weddington, of Charlotte, N. C., made an address.

An effort is being made to confine the packing industry to packing meats, and prevent them from dealing in by-products.

Secretary of War Baker, before the sub-committee of the Senate, insisted upon his program for an army of 576,000 men and universal military training.

The street railway strike in New York has been called off. A compromise offered at a conference of city and State has been accepted.

The receivers of the Pittsburg Railway Company have brought a suit for $900,000 damages against the local division of the Amalgamated Association of the Street and Electric Railway Employes.

In a recent good roads election, Gaston County, N. C., voted overwhelmingly for a bond issue of $500,000.

The bankers of the State met in Winston-Salem on Wednesday last. Carter Glass, Secretary of the Treasury, delivered an address.

On Tuesday last President Wilson met the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, the meeting taking place at the White House. He made clear that the treaty imposed no legal obligation for the use of our forces to protect the territory or independence of any other nation. He saw no reasonable objection to Senate reservations, though he thought it unwise to incorporate them in the ratification itself.

Lieutenants Paul H. Davis and Harold G. Peterson, aviators, were captured by Mexican bandits and held for $15,000 ransom. The United States Government, in order to save their lives, as the limit had been set, paid $8,500 and obtained their release. In the meantime the forces of our Government have crossed into Mexico and with swift cavalry equipped with machine guns and guided by airplanes, are scouring the country on the Mexican side of the river.

Wrightsville Beach, N. C., has extended its summer season till September 1.

Several diphtheria cases have appeared in the Rocky Mount section of the State.

The Japanese Government has granted home-rule to Korea, and reforms have been instituted to give a civil in place of a military government.

(Continued on Page 11)

Home Circle

STAY, STAY AT HOME, MY HEART, AND REST

Stay, stay at home, my heart, and rest;
Home-keeping hearts are happiest,
For those that wander they know not where
Are full of trouble and full of care;
To stay at home is best.

Weary and homesick and distressed,
They wander east, they wander west,
And are baffled and beaten and blown about
By the winds of the wilderness of doubt;
To stay at home is best.

Then stay at home, my heart, and rest:
The bird is safest in its nest;
O'er all that flutter their wings and fly,
A hawk is hovering in the sky:
To stay at home is best.

—Longfellow.

A MAN'S DUTY.

The woman who stands beside her man to urge him on to victory over self and over the enemy is heroic in his eyes, and the memory of her courage, of her understanding and sympathy, will go with him even unto death.

A woman can make or break the man who loves her, and women are doing it all the time.

The men they make are the men who are encouraged and helped to do their duty as they see it.

The men they break are the men whose right to fulfill their duty is denied them or interfered with.

Just as the greatest pleasure in life is the satisfaction in duty well done, so there is no greater joy possible to a woman than the knowledge that she has helped the man she loves, in the supreme test, not to falter but to do what he knows to be his duty.—Geo. E. Cook, in Mother's Magazine.

"THEY DON'T COUNT."

Such was the disgusted comment of a youngster when he was bidden to count his blessings. Evidently he had his eye focused for big things only—mountains of mercy, oceans of happiness. If somebody had presented him with a gold watch or a motorcycle he would have felt that he had occasion for thanksgiving, but not for bread and butter, and daily sunshine and a chance to go to school and a thousand other good things. Nothing that was not large seemed to count. Indeed, that is what he said of the days' common mercies! "They don't count." O, but they do. They make up the days; they form the background for special bounties. They are the solid fabric on which God sews the special jewels of His care. Life lacking the common mercies never could be redeemed by startling deliverances and staggering joys.

Minutes and mercies multiplied,
Have made up all this day.

—George Clarke Peck.

THE ROCK OF FAITH.

"My Ralph is absolutely the most credulous child I ever saw," laughed a young mother to a neighbor. "I suppose it's very wrong of us, but Arthur and I have told him some pretty tall stories, just to see how much he will believe. We haven't disturbed his faith yet."

"Don't disturb it," said the older woman earnestly. "That strong faith of his is a foundation rock of character, worthy building is impossible without it. Of course a child has to learn not to credit everything that every chance person tells him, but why should he need to doubt what his parents say?"

(Continued on page 11)

Christian Endeavor

By Rev. S. H. Hay.

- M., Sept. 1—Neighborly Kindness: Acts 28:1-6.
- T., Sept. 2—Forbearance: Gal. 6:1-5.
- W., Sept. 3—Helpfulness: Job 20:11-25.
- T., Sept. 4—Sympathy: John 11:17-37.
- F., Sept. 5—Hospitality: I Kings 17:8-16.
- S., Sept. 6—Compassion: Exod. 2:1-10.

* * *

Topic for Sunday, Sept. 7—Our Relation to Others. III. Toward Neighbors and Friends.—Phil. 2:1-11.

* * *

To be a good neighbor and friend is a real achievement. Not to be, is a serious shortcoming and disgrace. We have our colleges to train the mind, and our homes and churches to educate the heart. But both fail at a pivotal point if they do not make of us the right sort of neighbors and friends. Both schooling and religion should equip us for living; and this matter of our neighbors and friends is very near the heart of the business living.

* * *

The one sound basis of neighborliness and friendship is a loving heart. When by the grace of God we once get love into us, the details of right living may be worked out with comparative ease. Love suffereth long, and is kind; love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. All this is why love helps so much. They who have love, and only they, can be good neighbors and friends.

* * *

“Putting oneself in the other’s place” is a helpful device to carry along with us to show us how to apply the love on which friendship and neighborliness rest. Even love will blunder occasionally in the manner of its expression. Our kindest deeds sometimes hurt more than they heal, because we do them tactlessly. The loving heart which puts itself in the other’s place matches the action to the need.

* * *

What shall we do for neighbors and friends, when we love them and put ourselves in their place?

We shall be considerate of their feelings.

We shall act unselfishly.

We shall be forbearing in thought and speech.

We shall meet them more than half way.

We shall be thoughtful, studying their needs.

We shall put ourselves out to accommodate.

We shall not attempt to be patronizing.

We shall suffer and rejoice with them.

We shall pray for them always.

* * *

The model of friendship and neighborliness is Jesus. He loved us; and putting Himself in our place, He saw that we needed a friend. So He laid aside heaven and placed Himself on our level and befriended us. He saw we needed teaching, so He taught us. We needed a burden bearer, and He invited us to lay our loads on Him. We needed a ransom from sin, so He gave Himself, and dying became our Redeemer. He shared with us, thought for us, and wrought for us; and He tells us to do likewise as neighbors and friends.

* * *

Who is my neighbor? Answer with Bible story. Luke 10:29-37.

Name some things that work against neighborliness.

Name some that destroy friendship.

We may judge of whether we are going upward or not by the views we are getting. “Do your thoughts range widely from year to year, and is your life filled with more and higher interests?”—Selected.

The Prayer Meeting

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING AUG. 31, 1919:
OUR DUTY TO THE COLORED RACE—Acts 8:27;
Col. 3-11.

An unfortunate series of now historical events, together with the resulting racial and political antagonism, has turned the kindly interest of the white race in the South to indifference and latent hostility to the blacks. The black race is our Samaria. But we must ever remember that Jesus sat on Jacob’s well, exercised his holy ministry with regard to a Samaritan woman; and preached to Samaritans. “So when the Samaritans came unto him, they besought him to abide with them: and he abode there two days. And many more believed because of his word.” We must not forget that Jesus placed a Samaritan in the post of honor in the parable in which he taught the true character of Christian neighborliness. We must above all remember that Samaria and the

(Continued on page 12)

News of the Week.

(Continued from 10)

The conference between the President and the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate amounted to nothing more than a debate. The Democrats have since offered to compromise by accepting certain reservation, but apart from ratification.

The nomination of A. Mitchell Palmer as Attorney General has been confirmed by the Senate.

Home Circle.

(Continued from page 10)

A child recognizes in them his natural guides, so if they fail him, what is there to depend on?

“In a very real way we parents represent God to our children, and it is from implicit faith in us that they grow into a strong, implicit, and enduring faith in God. The credulity of a little child is nothing to be played with; it deserves the most solicitous, watchful care of both father and mother.

“There are natures to whom the whole universe becomes chaos when they discover that they cannot believe their own parents. And why shouldn’t it be so with these untried little explorers in our bewildering, contradictory world, where none of us could successfully meet life’s exigencies without something that we can absolutely rely upon? It is cruel, cruel to betray the faith of a little child.

“Don’t misunderstand my earnestness, dear,” she said, with a quick hand on her neighbor’s lap. “I know that you and your husband have the welfare of Ralph too closely at heart to knowingly endanger his trust in you. But this is something upon which I feel strongly because of the tragic effects to which betrayal of faith has led in a family of relatives.

“They have just learned, through the careful probings of a psychological expert, why their ten-year-old son is so cynical, morose, and self-repressed. On this man’s advice they have sent the boy for a long visit to a naturalist friend of unusual charm and wisdom. Meanwhile, they are agonizedly wondering if they will ever win their son back to the confidence and open-heartedness from which they see that themselves had cast him out by their flippant attitude toward his early questionings.”

“Thank you for telling me about them,” said the young mother softly. “I’m sure that Arthur and I love Ralph enough to put ourselves in his place awhile and to profit by those other people’s mistake.”—Faith Robinson, in The Presbyterian.

Sunday School

By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.

TEMPERANCE.

Golden Text—I Cor. 9-25, "Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things."

Daniel and his three friends, Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah, were Hebrew youths of royal lineage, carried to Babylon, and put in training for serving the King of Babylon. They all showed remarkable piety and courage, amid the surroundings of a heathen court. Daniel was especially eminent for wisdom, godliness, fidelity and capacity for business. In the lesson now studied, he showed conscientious decision of character, united with great courtesy and prudence. It is termed a Temperance lesson, because it presents Daniel as manifesting self-control over bodily appetites and passions in obedience to the demands of conscience and the revealed will of God. We will consider The Difficulties of Daniel and Melzar, the Test Proposed, the Result of the Experiment, and the Development of Daniel and His Friends.

I. The difficulties of Daniel and Melzar.

Daniel and Melzar, or the steward, having charge of him and his friends, were both confronted with perplexing questions. Daniel and his associates were required to eat of the meat and to drink the wine that came from the King's table. This was deemed needful in order that they might secure the best physical growth. Daniel probably did not think the rich and varied food from the King's table as best adapted for securing the end in view, and thought his bodily development would be better promoted by plainer food. But his chief objection was of a moral and religious nature. He desired to observe God's law as to meats and drinks, given to Israel by Moses, and by eating and drinking what came from the King's table, he would sometimes be made to violate that law. Besides, the King's food was offered to idol gods and Daniel did not wish in any way to countenance idolatry. Therefore he purposed in his heart "not thus to defile himself." But he was courteous and prudent in acting upon his scruples. "Therefore he respectfully asked the Prince of the Eunuchs that he might not defile himself." His character and conduct under the providence of God had given Daniel great favor in the eyes of the Prince of the Eunuchs, and he was disposed to oblige him. But the Prince of the Eunuchs had been placed in charge of Daniel and his friends by the King and Commander to give them the food from his table. If he changed their diet, without orders, and evil consequences followed, he might forfeit his life. He would be deemed an unfaithful and disobedient servant and might be visited with the penalty of death by Nebuchadnezzar. This was his difficulty in complying with Daniel's request.

II. The Test Proposed.

To remove their difficulties, and to solve the perplexing question, Daniel proposed to the steward that he take away the King's meat and substitute for it "pulse," or simple vegetable food for ten days. That at the end of that time, he compare the physical condition of himself and his friends with that of those youths that ate of the King's food; and then act accordingly. The proposition was sensible, the time was limited, no great damage could be done in ten days, and the time was sufficiently long to show the good results if any were wrought. Besides in their change of diet Daniel appeals to the Providence of God, and no servant desiring to "honor Him, appeals in vain.

III. The Result of the Experiment.

God answered Daniel in the effects wrought. He has settled the question for others beside Daniel and his friends as to whether the bodily welfare of the young is better promoted by plain, wholesome food or by luxurious living. It was found at the end of ten days that Daniel and his friends were healthier, "fairer and fatter in flesh" than any of the youths that ate of the King's meat. The very object of their dieting was to secure vigorous physical development and attractive appearance, and as these were manifestly produced by Daniel's plan, difficulties as to adopting it vanished.

IV. The Spiritual Development of Daniel and His Friends.

The King required in his service not only men of bodily soundness, but wise and intelligent persons. Daniel and his companions attained mental and moral advancement. As a person, by maintaining self-control and using proper food, may under the Divine blessing secure physical vigor and bodily comeliness, so by self-mastery and employing wise means he may make progress in intellectual power and moral excellence. Daniel and his companions when brought before the King and examined manifested a wisdom and a knowledge superior to that possessed by the wisest magicians of the land. Daniel, too, showed discernment and wisdom in interpreting "dreams and visions" and in spiritual as well as temporal affairs. Of course, these Hebrew youths had the best advantages for education, but it was not the possession of opportunities that rendered them intelligent and wise, but the diligent application of their own faculties. Nor did they forget to seek the co-operation of Jehovah, the Author of spiritual gifts.

Prayer Meeting.

(Continued from page 11)

whole world are specifically mentioned in the great commission. The need of every Christian is a deep and abiding sympathy with the Christ in his yearning love for the souls of men. Then the matters of race, of color, of political and social differentiation, will be not lost sight of, but disregarded so far as to offer no impediment to the performance of our duty as followers of Jesus Christ. Jesus knew the passionate hostilities and differences of belief between Jew and Samaritan, but note that it is the woman who emphasizes these differences and hostilities. Jesus avoids them, and leads the woman to a well of living waters. So we ought to act with regard to the negroes, and being followers of Jesus, we ought to teach them the blessed way of life. Much might be said of the possibilities for good or evil of the negro race in the South. Considerations, weighty in character, might be adduced which call loudly, imperatively, for wise and radical action along this line. There are swarming millions of them: they are a part of us—socially, economically, politically: as cooks and nurses their influence is to be reckoned with; as workmen and workwomen their place is of the first consequence: as citizens they constitute either a potential menace or otherwise. These considerations strongly appeal to thoughtful citizens and business men and housekeepers and parents. But above all, this is our privilege and duty as followers of Jesus. Here our duty is clear; and privilege is unmistakable. That we have not measured up to our privilege and duty is indisputable. But that should only bring shame to us for the past, and renewed prayer and well laid and executed plans for the future. It is sympathy with and obedience to Christ which is alone needed. Are we willing to see with His eyes; hear with His ears? Are we ready to submerge prejudice? Or will we continue to interpose race pride and race selfishness? Will we continue to ignore facts and Christ?

Some of our best men have given themselves to this work, for instance, at Tuscaloosa; only to find the burden insupportable—the obstacles persistent and apparently stable. Only the Spirit of Jesus can make these obstacles to this work fluid, and build upon enduring and efficient foundations. So that this is a matter for prayerful consideration on the part of all of our folks. The ministers, the elders, the deacons—the whole personnel of our churches must settle this question at the place of prayer. Jesus will give the vision needed; the sympathy that is essential; the grace necessary; and thus and only thus will the work be adequately manned, and planned, and executed.

Presbyterian Standard

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE.
REV. W. L. BOGGS, Circulation Manager.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.
ESTABLISHED JANUARY 1, 1858.

Entered at the Post Office at Charlotte, N. C., as second class matter.

A Religious Newspaper for the Family, Devoted to the Interest of Christ's Kingdom as Represented by the Southern Presbyterian Church.

CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE

Paul and Luther	2
The Churches and the Laboring Man.....	2
Two Great Bible Teachers at Montreat.....	3
One of the Evils of War.....	3
The Cloud in the Sky	3
CONTRIBUTED—
How One Presbytery Solved Its Home Mission Problem—By Rev. Chas. M. Boyd.....	4
Sunday School Methods That Work Elsewhere..	5
An Open Letter to the Educational Campaign Headquarters—By Rev. Edgar Tufts.....	5
The Blight of Mohammedanism—By R. E. Magill.	6-9
Water Baptism—By Rev. J. W. Moseley, Jr....	7
Preaching Christ in Yiddish and Hebrew.....	7
Miss Selina on the Use of the Survey in Missionary Programs—By Mary Callum Wiley.....	8
Conference on Home Missions—By Miss Mamie Bays.	9
DEPARTMENTS—
News of the Week	10
Home Circle	10
Christian Endeavor—By Rev. S. H. Hay	11
Prayer Meeting—By Rev. C. D. Waller	11
Sunday School—By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.	12

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription is paid.

When change of address is desired, give both the old and the new address.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the last subscription paid.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South.

TREASURERS OF BENEVOLENT CAUSES.

- Foreign Missions—Edwin F. Willis, 154 Fifth Ave., N., Nashville, Tenn.
- Home Missions—A. N. Sharp, 1522 Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga.
- Christian Education and Ministerial Relief—John Stites, Fifth and Market Streets, Louisville, Ky.
- Publication and Sabbath School Work—R. E. Magill, 8 N. Sixth Street, Richmond, Va.
- Bible Cause—Wm. Foulke, Bible House, New York.

Church News

Collections—August is not assigned to any one of our Church causes, but in many of the Synods and Presbyteries it is assigned to Synodical, Presbyterial, or congregational home missions. Pastors and churches can obtain information from the chairman of the committee of their own Presbytery.

AN IMPORTANT MATTER.

This has been the greatest season Montreat has enjoyed. The members of Synod's committee who are present have been more impressed than ever with the value of these conferences to the church and the importance of making it possible for larger numbers of our workers to attend them. So impressed are they that they have enthusiastically determined, under the action of Synod appointing them, to raise at once a sum sufficient to increase the capacity of the "Religious Workers' Home" to one hundred persons not so painfully crowded as are the twenty-odd now housed in it. Friends of the enterprise on the ground have given us such a start on the necessary fund that we are convinced it can be raised without interfering with any of the church's benevolent work. One of our busiest and most successful pastors, Rev. Donald McIver, has been so impressed with the potentialities for good in this home that he has agreed, at much personal sacrifice, to undertake raising the money within the Synod, if his session will agree to let him off for the necessary time. This Synod's committee earnestly hopes they will do so, and believing that they certainly will, we take this immediate occasion of commending him, as the representative of this important work, to all the Presbyterians of North Carolina.

We would like our people to recognize that this is no endeavor to provide means and a place for men and women to enjoy a vacation, but to make it possible for our preachers, Sunday school teachers, Home Mission, and other religious workers of small salaries or of limited means, to come to these conferences for their own pleasure and benefit it is true, but far more for the benefit their coming will prove to their individual churches and to the Kingdom.

Having attended the conferences and experienced their inspiration and educational value to ourselves, and having carefully observed their effects on others besides ourselves, we are persuaded that the provision of means for our workers to attend them is one of the most important and promising pieces of Home Mission work that our people have the opportunity to do just now. We are assured that our men and women of means will feel it a privilege to provide the comparatively small amount of money that will be necessary to accomplish it.

C. M. Richards,
For Synod's Committee.

ATTENTION, PASTORS AND CLERKS.

In seeking to raise our quota for the benevolent causes of the Church, it is vital that Presbytery furnish each Church with an estimate of what proportion of the whole would constitute that Church's fair share. This is called an apportionment and is intended to serve as a guide to duty and an incentive to zeal. At its last meeting Mecklenburg Presbytery adopted the following basis for making such apportionments:

One-third to be based on total membership; one-third on the average contributions to current expenses of the local Church and pastor's salary for the past three years; one-third on the average contributions to benevolences for the past three years. It is further provided that from the gifts to benevolences any large special gifts that cannot be counted on regularly shall first be deducted. And that from gifts to current expenses and pastor's salary relatively large payments of interest, of indebtedness, or for permanent improvements shall first be deducted.

In the interests of fairness and proper equalization, Presbytery's Committee of Systematic Beneficence is eager to obey this rule. The committee can easily secure information as to the average gifts and membership from the Assembly's statistical tables. But information concerning the amount, if any, of special gifts and unusual expenses to be deducted must be furnished by the local Church. As these apportionments must be figured out in time to report to the fall meeting of Presbytery and printed in the minutes, this information should be sent to the undersigned at once. Please be sure to send in this information promptly in the interests of your Church and the work, or else in the interests of fair play "henceforth hereafter forever hold your peace" concerning the equity of apportionments.

Counting on your co-operation,
G. F. Bell, Chairman,
10 Travis Ave., Charlotte.

PERSONAL.

Rev. S. H. Williamson's address is changed from Carbon-ton, N. C., to Booneville, Miss.

Rev. H. F. Beaty, of Concord, N. C., has accepted a call to the church at Atkinson, N. C., and will enter upon his new work September 1.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The Presbytery of Pee Dee will meet in the Kentyre Church, near Hamer, S. C., on October 7, 1919, at 11:30 a. m.
A. H. McArn, S. C.

Belton—Rev. B. E. Wallace, of Paris, Texas, recently conducted a meeting at this church with a result that three were added on profession, and the church greatly revived. A liberal offering was made to the visiting brother.

Ebenezer—An evangelistic meeting lasting ten days was conducted by the pastor, Rev. John C. Bailey, assisted by Mr. E. M. Dickson, as singer, and resulted in twelve additions by profession and two by letter.

Society Hill—Our entire town and surrounding community have been greatly edified and strengthened in the faith by the meeting which was conducted by Rev. J. P. Marion, of Sumter, who came to us on July 28 and preached the Word with great power for ten days. The immediate visible results were the reconsecration of a large part of the membership of the local church, the open confession of Christ by two boys of the Sunday School, and the addition to the church of several on re-statement of faith and by letter. Others had given expression of deep interest and the session hopes to welcome them into the church real soon.
A. L. D.

Honea Path—On Tuesday morning of last week all kinds of good things to eat began to pour into the kitchen of the Presbyterian manse. These gifts were so numerous that the pastor will be relieved of the expense of buying groceries for quite a while. The church here is already experiencing the blessing of God as a result of its faithfulness. Five members have been added to the roll within the last month, three by letter and two on profession of faith. At a congregational meeting of the membership of the church Sunday morning, August 3, the following officers were elected: Elders, Messrs. W. A. Erwin, T. H. Brock, J. W. Brock and H. A. Wiles; deacons, Messrs. A. A. Atkins, M. J. Shirley, W. A. Harper and J. W. Clatworthy. Arrangements are being made to install these men into office at once.

Latta—At our services on Sunday morning we received our nineteenth member of the church since April 1, and we are very grateful for the growth, and also for the general interest of our people in the church. Recently we have organized a Christian Endeavor Society and, in addition to the few helpful weekly prayer meetings, we have held on Sunday evenings, we have had our first monthly business and social meeting, which was quite a delightful affair.

Our pastor, Rev. Andrew J. Howell, also preaches at the Dunbarton Presbyterian Church two afternoons a month. There is always a large and interested congregation there, and five members have been received during the past few months.
Cor.

Greenville, Second Church—Rev. E. P. Davis has returned to his work in the Second Church, Greenville, after a delightful vacation. In his absence, the pulpit was supplied by Rev. L. Ross Lynn, D.D., of Clinton, S. C.; Rev. J. S. Moffatt, D.D., presided of Due West Male College, and Rev. J. F. Brown, of Monaghan. The people have added $600 to his salary, making it $2,400 and a manse, and also provided a Chevrolet car to assist him in his extending pastoral work. Twenty-one new members have been added to the register of communicants since April 1, 1919. There have been no special services. The house of worship is well located and all the material property is out of debt. The plant is modern and up-to-date.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Fayetteville Presbytery meets at Jackson Springs, N. C., September 30, 1919, at 8 o'clock p. m.
E. L. Siler, S. C.

Mallard Creek—On August 17 at a congregational meeting presided over by Rev. C. G. Lynch, of Charlotte, the Mallard Creek church extended a hearty and unanimous call to Rev. J. C. Brown, of Brim, N. C., to become their pastor. Mr. Brown has the call under consideration.

Tenth Avenue, Charlotte—On Sunday, August 31, Rev. A. R. Shaw, D.D., who is supplying this church for the months of August and September, will preach a sermon to the old people of the church and community. Special music and other features have been arranged and an effort will be made to make this a very happy occasion.

Winston-Salem, First Church—For three Sundays during the absence of Dr. Lilly on vacation, our pulpit has been supplied in spite of the fact that an unusually large number of our church people have been out of town this summer. Our congregations, morning and evening, have been good. Rev. Anton Ver Hulst, of Montreat, and Dr. Walter Lingle preached for us, and we were delighted to have them. We hope that they will visit us again.

White Hill Church, Fayetteville Presbytery—Our Presbyterial evangelist, Rev. L. Smith, has just spent six days preaching for us at this church. Twice daily he preached with earnestness and clearness, presenting his message pointedly and effectively. The attendance was good. We think there were more than a dozen professions. Seven of these have already joined this church and we are expecting others to join later. The meeting was blessed of God and was a distinct spiritual uplift, and a very helpful meeting to church and pastor.
M. D. McNeill.

Bethel Church—On Sunday, August 17, at the communion service conducted by Rev. M. E. Sentelle, D.D., of Davidson College, twenty-nine new members were welcomed into the fellowship of the church, twenty-six of these on profession of faith and three by letter. There are still others to be received. Seven children have also been dedicated to God in baptism during the month of August. Bethel has a bright future with her large congregation of young people.
R. C. C.

Hickory—Rev. E. M. Craig, D.D., of Macon Presbytery was received by Concord Presbytery on August 9 and installed as pastor of First church, Hickory, on the 10th.
(Continued on Page 16)

OBEY THAT IMPULSE

You have felt moved to join the secret order of THE PRAYING BAND

If this Campaign for a Million for Christian Education in North Carolina succeeds, it will be because of the united prayer of our people.

You have been reading these calls to prayer. You have intended to let us know you could be counted on. Why not cut out the attached form and send it TODAY?

You will want a part in this—the greatest effort of our Church in this great Synod. The best thing you can do is to join us in earnest prayer.

In answer to prayer one friend has offered $100,000 on condition that a Million be raised

We need a few more like him: and some for $50,000, and some for $25,000, and some for $10,000, and a host for smaller sums. Prayer will open the door.

AIMS

1. To help North Carolina Presbyterians, 50,000 strong, to appreciate the fundamental place of the Christian college in training effective Christian leaders.
2. To visit practically every member in every church in the Synod of North Carolina; to discover and enlist many friends able to give largely; large numbers able to give in small sums; hosts willing to pray and work.
3. To reach the minimum goal of One Million Dollars within the time limits.

PRAY

1. That God may be honored in all the methods, efforts and spirit of the Campaign.
2. That the money secured may be so given as to bless the givers as well as the colleges.
3. That many young men and women may be inspired to enter one of these Christian colleges for better preparation for their life's work, and that through these colleges many may find God's plan for themselves.
4. That the men directing the Campaign—the committee: Mr. A. M. Scales, of Greensboro, chairman; M. E. Melvin, the manager, and all the men who work in the field—may have God's blessing upon them and His direct leadership in this great effort; that they may be wise, patient, tactful and victorious—and helpful.
5. That the Campaign may kindle many fires among the Presbyterians of North Carolina that shall light up the darkest parts of the earth.

PRAYER PLEDGE

Believing in the fundamental importance of Christian Education; interested in the success of the Million Dollar Campaign for our schools in North Carolina; with faith in God and the power of prayer, I covenant to pray daily, or as near thereto as possible, for the success of this effort.

Name _____

Address _____

Date _____

(This pledge will be kept in confidence and not used publicly)

Will you not sign the attached pledge and mail to Headquarters? You can pray as well without signing it, but we can work better and harder if we know you are praying.

Campaign Headquarters
Presbyterian Schools
Greensboro, N. C.

Church News.

(Continued from Page 14)

Rev. A. A. McLean preached the sermon, Rev. J. M. Clark, D.D., presided and delivered the charge to the pastor and Rev. W. T. Walker delivered the charge to the congregation. The pastor has received a hearty and enthusiastic welcome and is assured of a hearty co-operation. The attendance at the services has steadily increased. The prayer meetings number about one-third the membership. Twenty-three members have been received since June.

Wilson—At a recent called meeting of Albemarle Presbytery, the pastoral relation between Rev. J. B. Massey and the Wilson Church was dissolved in order that Mr. Massey might accept a call to the chair of Bible and Philosophy at Hampden-Sidney College.

Mt. Pisgah—On Sunday night, August 17, a revival meeting of eight days closed in this church. Rev. D. K. Walthall, D.D., of Waynesboro, Va., did the preaching, assisted in the services by the pastor, Rev. J. A. Caligan.

There were thirteen public professions of faith. Nine of these joined Mt. Pisgah church, while four expressed a desire to join elsewhere.

Dr. Walthall's lovable personality, the earnest spirituality of his sermons, and his attractive methods of presenting the vital truths of the gospel, greatly inspired and encouraged our people.

Thyatira—We have just closed a meeting of four days at this church in which God's people were quickened and strengthened in the faith, and souls were saved. There was a large crowd present for the sacramental service on Sunday, and six who had been received on profession of faith partook for the first time.

We have recently had the pleasure at this church and at Back Creek of hearing Rev. W. M. Hunter, one of the members of the Assembly's team in the campaign for a million dollars for schools and colleges in North Carolina. The writer does not hesitate to say that it was the very best address he has ever heard on Christian Education and wishes that every one of our churches in the Synod might hear it.

E. D. B.

Members of Mecklenburg Presbyterial Auxiliary—Dear Friends: At the time of our last report, our gifts to "Mission Court" (the home for missionaries on furlough) totalled $357.21. Since that time I have received gifts as follows: Forward, $357.21; Miriams, First Church, $25.00; A Friend, Robinson, 50 cents; Interest to July 1, $3.47; total, $386.18.

I forwarded this amount to the general treasurer in Richmond, telling her that we were going to keep on working, and hoped to send more later. In acknowledging my check she said:

"Am delighted that you will continue this splendid work. Here we see our missionaries on furlough, weary and worn, after being knocked about from place to place for a year, instead of being rested and refreshed—and some with little children, not knowing where to go. It makes your heart sick. We must bestir ourselves and build the home. We hope to begin the building next month. Not that we have all the money, but it is coming in, and our advisory board tells us not to wait longer. We must just work harder, and I know your societies will do their part."

What is our part? Are we doing it? Some have, but alas, some have not. If all had done so, the check I sent would have been for $1,600 instead of for $386.18.

Look into the matter at once, and if your society has not contributed $1.00 per member to date, take it upon yourself to stir up your members. I believe that there is not one woman in Mecklenburg who does not want to do even more than her part in this cause, for it appeals to the hearts of all. Then let me have your $1.00 per member at an early date.

Sincerely yours,

Madeline Orr,

Sec. for Mission Court, Mecklenburg Presbyterial Auxiliary.

Program Elders and Deacons Convention—Mecklenburg Presbytery, Unionville Church, in Union County, September 4, 1919:

10 A. M.—Devotional Exercises, 15 minutes, by Rev. B. B. Shankle, Pastor.

Organization.

Address of Welcome, 10 minutes, Dr. Whitley.

Response, 10 minutes, Hon. F. R. McNinch.

Song Service, 20 minutes.

Presbyterianism and the Needs of the Times, 30 minutes, Rev. J. W. Orr.

Song Service, 10 minutes.

The Church's Need of Ministers and the Kind, 30 minutes, Prof. R. N. Nesbit.

Song Service, 10 minutes.

The Church's Need of Elders and the Kind, 30 minutes, Rev. A. S. Johnston, D.D.

Music.

Recess until 2:30 P. M.

AFTERNOON.

Song Service, 10 minutes.

Round Table on the Tithe, 30 minutes, led by Rev. G. F. Bell.

The Importance of the Sunday School in Any Community, 20 minutes, Dr. R. H. Lafferty.

Discussion on Sunday School Work.

Virtue of Punctuality, Hunter Marshall.

Variety in the Sunday School Program, W. E. Price.

Importance of Teacher Preparing the Lesson, J. D. Woodside.

Importance of Memorizing Scripture and the Catechism, Z. V. Roberson.

Impressions of the Convention.

Adjournment.

Music will be an important feature of the Convention, in charge of Mr. R. C. Freeman. The Steele Creek, Sugar Creek, Newells, Second Church, Sharon, Carmel, and other choirs of the county are asked to join in making this a memorable day in the history of Presbyterianism in Union County. Unionville Church is one of our newly developed Home Mission Churches in Union County.

APPALACHIA.

The Presbytery of Asheville will meet in the Hendersonville Church, in Hendersonville, N. C., on the 23rd day of September, 1919, at 8 o'clock p. m. Dr. Edward Mack will give a series of lectures during this meeting of Presbytery, beginning September 21st, through the 28th.

The Hendersonville church extends hospitality to all ministers, elders, deacons and Sunday school teachers; a feast of good things, both spiritual and temporal, awaits you.

R. J. Hunter, Stated Clerk.

West Asheville Church, N. C.—Recently this church had a most gracious "season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Rev. J. Frank Ligon, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Hendersonville, N. C., preached to us. His splendid sermons were helpful to all the people. A number of men and women made a profession of their faith in Christ, the family altar was established in several homes and seed were sown which will bring forth an abundant harvest in after days.

Banner Elk, N. C.—The speakers at the Bible Conference, July 30-August 3, were Dr. Homer McMillan, secretary of Home Missions; Dr. W. W. Moore, president of Union Theological Seminary; Dr. C. G. Vardell, president of Flora Macdonald College; Dr. W. D. Reynolds, of Korea; Dr. James I. Vance, of Nashville, and Dr. R. F. Campbell, of Asheville. Rev. Edgar Tufts was general director.

The exercises in the beautiful stone church were attended by the whole body of students and teachers in Lees-McRae Institute, and the children of the Grandfather Orphanage, and by large numbers from the community and surrounding country.

On Sunday morning Mr. Tufts had the pleasure of receiving ten girls into the membership of the church. Miss Ora Glenn, a member of this church, who is soon to sail for Brazil, was presented to the congregation with words of warm commendation by the pastor. Mr. James C. Clarke, also a member of this church, is to enter Union Theological Seminary in October. Thus the work at this educational center in the mountains continues to bear fruit in the training of Christian workers. Let our people remember it in their prayers and their gifts.

FLORIDA.

St. Petersburg—The Rev. G. E. Moorehouse, Ph.D., of Lumberton, N. C., a former pastor of this church, conducted the morning service on August 17, in the absence of Rev. W. J. Garrison, who is taking a month's vacation. Dr. Moorehouse is spending a few days in our city, and was heartily greeted after the service by his many friends in this congregation. The pastor is expected for the first Sunday in September.

E. J. Young.

DeFundak Springs—Four new members have been recently received into this church by letter and are cordially welcomed.

The pastor, Rev. Daniel J. Currie, after a vacation of five weeks in Virginia, Tennessee, and North Carolina, was again in his pulpit on August 17 and was greeted by a good congregation, despite the fact that several of the families are still out of town. With a few sad exceptions, the people of this congregation are unusually faithful to the service of the sanctuary, which is a great comfort and encouragement to the pastor.

The fall meeting of the Presbytery of Florida will be held in the Knox Church, of Pensacola, Fla., on November 11, at 11 a. m.

Daniel J. Currie, Stated Clerk.

GEORGIA.

Albany—Rev. LeRoy G. Henderson, D.D., has received a warm welcome as pastor of this important church. During the three years' pastorate of Rev. E. M. Craig, D.D., who lately moved to Hickory, N. C., a beautiful church was erected at a cost of $47,000. Eighty-nine persons were added to the church. The contribution amounted to $55,507, of which $39,102 was paid on the new church, $12,738 was given for current expenses and $3,667 for benevolences. The balance due on the church is practically provided for. Plans are now being perfected for a new manse. The Baraca class led by H. T. McIntosh has about 200 men and is doing great things. The future of the church is very bright.

E. M. Craig.

Atlanta Presbytery—We have just closed an interesting eight-day meeting at the Villa Rica Church. Brother Rauschenberg, pastor of Presbyterian Church at Hartwell, Ga., came to us on Sunday and preached the gospel in its simplicity and with power twice and sometimes three times every day. A street service held for people who never attend church and many of whom never heard a Presbyterian preacher, was attended by one hundred and seventy-five people and was interesting. Also the praise and testimony service, with which the meeting closed, was delightful and practically the entire membership of the Church reconsecrated themselves to God and His most reasonable service. Three professions of faith in Jesus Christ, one going to the Presbyterian Church, one to the Baptist and the other to the Methodist.

Four were added to the roll of the Presbyterian Church by letter. One adult and one infant were baptized.

L. D. K.

Decatur—The work of our church is progressing as usual in spite of vacations, hot weather and other summer hindrances. We have a very good attendance at Sunday school and on Wednesday evenings good meetings of our Workers' Council. This is composed of our Sunday school officers and teachers, who meet before prayer meeting for supper and conference concerning our work and problems. Captain Scott Candler has recently been elected superintendent of our Sunday school to take the place of Dr. J. R. McCain, who resigned on account of the pressure of his work in connection with the Agnes Scott College endowment campaign. Our pastor, Dr. D. P. McGeachy, is taking his vacation during August. He and his family are camped on Elk Ridge, above Banner Elk, N. C. In the pastor's absence, the pulpit has been filled every Sunday. The first Sunday in August, Dr. John Goff, the evangelist of our Presbytery, preached for us; the second, third and fourth Sundays, Dr. A. A. Little, of Meridian, Miss., and on the last Sunday we will have Dr. F. H. Gaines, of Agnes Scott College.

Marion C. Bucher, Church Secretary.

Menlo—The union evangelistic services of the Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches closed Sunday night, August 17, having been continued twice a day for two weeks.

Mr. George Freeman, a trained leader of music, from Chattanooga, made the congregational singing a vital force in the meeting. Rev. R. T. Gillespie, of the Maxwell Street Presbyterian Church, Lexington, Ky., has, through his powerful messages, uplifted the whole community.

During the services forty-three united with the church, thirty-seven by confession of faith and six by letter. Of these, eight united with the Methodist Church, thirteen with the Baptist and twenty-two with the Presbyterian. At the consecration meeting about three hundred church members reconsecrated their lives to Christ. At another time at least twenty heads of homes pledged to establish the family altar and about twenty more pledged themselves to keep the morning watch.

The congregations were always large. At the morning services the average attendance was around two hundred. At night the average was around six hundred. The last night the house was packed, some going away because there was no room.

We feel that the harvest of the meeting isn't all gathered yet; that the churches with their new life and enthusiasm will feel the continued blessings of the visit of Mr. Gillespie and of Mr. Freeman during the entire remainder of the year.

P. D. Patrick, Pastor.

TEXAS.

Kerrville—At a meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary Association of the Westminster Presbyterian Encampment, Kerrville, Texas, Mrs. Batte, the wife of the pastor of the Files Valley Church, made an earnest talk on the work and needs of the Southwestern Presbyterian Orphans' Home and School, located at Files Valley, Texas, which is under the care of the Synods of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. A very special need at this time is two auto transportation trucks costing about $800 each. These trucks will serve a two-fold purpose, that of transporting the children as well as supplies to and from the home.

Without these trucks the home is greatly handicapped, as the children are deprived of contact with the outside world, which is very essential to their mental and physical development. The appeal met hearty response and each promised to put it before his own church and auxiliary.

A committee was appointed to place the matter before the churches and auxiliaries at large through the medium of our church publications. It is the earnest desire of the committee to secure sufficient funds to present these trucks as a special thanksgiving offering and we ask your earnest prayers, as well as financial support. Remember the Master has said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me."—Matt. 25:40.

Please send all donations to Mrs. J. M. Batte, Grandview, Texas, Route No. 2.

Committee—Mrs. Chas. J. Rootes, Grandview; Mrs. Leta Vickrey, Kingsville; Mrs. W. E. Springall, San Antonio; Mrs. T. A. Wharton, Sherman; Mrs. F. E. Robbins, Beaumont; Mrs. J. M. Batte, Treasurer; Mrs. Geo. W. Sheffer, Dallas.

Rev. Tom Cunningham is doing splendid work at Throckmorton and Eliasville, his old home. Every one likes Tom. Our evangelist is to help him and the community in a tent meeting at Eliasville beginning August 24 and through to September 8. We ask the prayers of all for God's blessing. This section is getting to be quite an oil centre. Cor.

Fort Worth Presbytery—Rev. W. L. Newman, of the graduating class of Louisville Seminary, accepted the work at Stamford, Texas, and has been faithfully at work since the last of June. This country has been greatly blessed with fine rains and good crops and the work is growing.

They are all pleased with Mr. Newman and every one speaks well of him. We expect good things from them. He is to be ordained at the coming meeting of Fort Worth Presbytery at Throckmorton, September 9. Cor.

Brandon, Fort Worth Presbytery—We hear it said that a man cannot hold the second meeting in a church. This is true, but the Lord certainly can do so.

We have just had a great meeting at Brandon. Rev. Jno. E. McLean, evangelist of Fort Worth Presbytery, was with us for the fourth time. He stressed the necessity of leaning upon God and not on man. God was with us from the start, although the farmers were very busy threshing grain and with their crops. The attendance was good. There were fifty-seven to give their names as accepting Christ by profession or reclamation or by letter. It was a great day when we received them. There were twenty for the Presbyterians, eighteen for the Methodists, sixteen for the Baptists, two for Christian denomination, and only one who did not give his name for church membership. We thank God for his wonderful power and remarkable answers to prayer.

The sons of Rev. John E. McLean, Lieut. Jas. M. and John E., Jr., were both in the army, and when they returned decided to enlist in the Lord's army of Christian ministry. They have both been at work in Home Mission fields for the summer, Jas. at Gorman, Carbon and Moran, in the oil field. He has had three additions lately and expects many more soon, and has reorganized the Sunday school. This work is very promising.

Handlev, near Fort Worth, is supplied one-half time by John E. McLean, Jr. The Sunday school has more than doubled, the work with the boys started, and interest and attendance greatly increased. They have had several additions. He is supplying Godley and Aquilla once a month each. Cor.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville—Kentucky Theological Seminary. Recent benefactions to the seminary: Since the close of the session in May, the Kentucky Seminary has received several substantial benefactions in aid of its work. One is the gift of a scholarship of twenty-five hundred dollars from a donor who wishes the name withheld for the present. The scholarship is a memorial of the late Rev. Neander M. Woods, D.D., for many years pastor of leading churches in the Assembly, among them the Second Church of Louisville, chancellor of the Southwestern Presbyterian University, and moderator of the General Assembly in 1901. This brings the additions to scholarships to more than $15,000 within a little over a year. The other donations are in the form of bequests which are given to relatives for life, and then come to the seminary. These bequests will eventually increase the endowment of the institution by the amount of seventy-five to one hundred thousand dollars. In other respects also the financial prospects of the seminary are very encouraging.

The directors of the Seminary have not yet elected a professor in succession to the Rev. Robert A. Webb, D.D., whose death has been a calamity to the seminary and to the whole church. The executive committee is arranging for the instruction in theology and apologetics in the event a professor is not chosen before the opening of the session. Arrangements now in contemplation, give assurance to the students and to the church that the full curriculum of studies will be maintained at its present high standard. The next session begins on October 1.

VIRGINIA.

Tinkling Springs Church—This church recently extended a very hearty and unanimous call to Rev. Graham Gilmer to become their pastor. Mr. Gilmer has accepted the call.

Fairfield Church—This congregation has called Rev. J. McC. Sieg to become their pastor. Mr. Sieg has not given his decision yet.

Samuel Davies Church—Beulah congregation recently held a delightful Children's Day service. It was largely attended. A collection for Home and Foreign Missions amounting to $49.20 was received.

Staunton—The Second Church of this city has adopted a name for the organization, "The Homelike Church," which they are living up to in the feeling of co-operation and friendliness on the part of the members and the cordiality with which strangers are greeted. Rev. C. A. Lawrence is the pastor.

Berkeley Springs and Duckwall Churches—The pastor of these two churches, Rev. L. Cook Campbell, was assisted by Rev. George L. Cook, of Lost City, in conducting a successful protracted meeting in the mission church at New Hope. The preaching was done by Mr. Cook in an interesting and instructive manner. Good congregations attended. Several members were added to the Berkeley Springs Church as one of the good results. Mr. Cook's sermon to the town congregation on Sunday morning was especially appreciated. At this season visitors to the Springs add much to the home congregations. Including Mr. Cook and the pastor, there were six Presbyterian ministers present; also four wives of Presbyterian ministers, and some children and grandchildren of Presbyterian ministers. Rev. F. M. Woods, D.D., pastor of the Martinsburg Presbyterian Church, preached in Berkeley Springs Sunday morning, and in the Duckwall church at night. Rev. A. D. Sutherland, former Presbyterian pastor, is visiting Berkeley Springs, with his wife and children. He is now a chaplain in the U. S. Army and has recently returned from France. Mr. Sutherland is to deliver an address in the opera house, for the benefit of French orphans. His subject will be "My French Pals." One elder of the Duckwall Church is still with the army in France. Both of these churches are growing stronger under their present attractive pastor. The field itself is becoming more important.—Christian Observer.

East Hanover Presbytery Church Treasurers—Have you sent in your church's offering in behalf of the Presbyterian Home Missions? If you have overlooked it, will you kindly give it your earliest attention and mail in your money to Mr. Jas. W. Sinton, City and State National Bank, Richmond, Va.

We are having a splendid summer in our Home Mission work. Fruitful meetings have been held in all of the mission points. Our workers in all the fields are very much encouraged all along the line. Gregory mission, Prince George county, has had sixteen additions and are in real heart earnestness, talking of asking for a church to be organized at the court house. That is fine. Hopewell Church has had another number of applicants for membership, an things are getting to a satisfactory working basis at that point. An excellent meeting has recently been held with the Providence Church, a number were received into the membership and others will unite later. The same is true of the Genito Church. The new work out in Nottoway county is promising. Speaking of Providence Church, calls up the good news that they are taking steps toward buying a manse and locating a preacher in Powhatan county. Gentlemen of the finances, it is just good along the line. Let's keep making it better by having the Presbyterian treasury filled with a good supply of cash. Will you kindly remit to the above address.

L. W. Curtis, Supt.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond—It looks now as if there might be an overflow attendance at the Seminary this year. It was generally supposed that it would take the seminaries at least two or three years to recover their normal attendance after the depletion caused by the war, but, so far as Union is concerned, the large registration up to date seems to indicate that the decrease resulting from the war may be offset in a single session.

The term begins this year on October 1, and will be marked by a number of unusual features of interest and value, in addition to the regular courses. The first of these is the series of lectures on the James Sprunt Foundation by Dr. Campbell Morgan on the Ministry of the Word, which will be given in the Seminary chapel on ten successive mornings from November 4 to November 14. On the evenings of these ten days Dr. Morgan will preach to general audiences in the largest auditorium that can be secured in the city. Many of our ministers are planning to attend these lectures. It is expected that they will be published in book form immediately after their delivery. Dr. Morgan, who has just resigned the pastorate of the great Highbury Quadrant Church in London, in order to accept a number of engagements in this country, is preaching this month in Washington, D. C.

Hon. William J. Bryan has not yet been able to fix the exact date of the series of lectures which he has agreed to deliver at the Seminary on the same foundation, but it is hoped that he can give them at some time in the spring, toward the latter part of the session. When published they will be an invaluable contribution to present day apologetics. No man in the world is better qualified to render the church this particular service.

Other special features of value for the coming session are a series of four lectures on Church Music by Professor Hubert Poteat; a series of four lectures on the Pastor and His Work by Rev. W. M. Anderson, D.D.; two addresses by Bishop Collins Denny on practical phases of ministerial work; and three illustrated lectures by Secretary R. E. Magill, just back from the East, on General Allenby's Victorious campaign in Palestine, and the new future of the Holy Land.

The coming year, therefore, would be a notable one in the history of the Seminary and the church, even though there were no great building operations going on. But the thing which perhaps above everything else will make this a red letter year in the history of the institution is the erection and equipment of Schaffler Hall, the model Sunday School Building of the Seminary, for which a generous friend has made the princely gift of $135,000. Work on this great building has already begun and it will be steadily pushed to completion. The aim is to make it the last word in everything that pertains to the equipment, organization and conduct of Sunday schools, the exemplification of methods and the training of teachers. In short, as the president of the Seminary has put it, "our aim is to make this the greatest centre in America of expert training in everything that pertains to this fundamental department of the church's work. The fact that Richmond is the headquarters of the General Superintendent of Sunday schools and Young People's Work in our General Assembly, and also the headquarters of the Assembly's Publication Work, where all our Sunday school literature is published, makes it a pre-eminently suitable place for the establishment of the great Sunday school 'power house' of the church."

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. Jno. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

ORPHANS' DAY AT MONTREAT.

Three orphanages, Thornwell, Barium Springs and Asheville gave wonderful, live demonstrations of the kind of children they made of these orphans, for they brought their samples with them; girls and boys who sang songs and played games and laughed and whistled and looked, oh! so happy just to be alive. And the business side of this, no matter what the trip cost these three institutions, it was the best advertising money they ever spent. Every eye-witness at Montreat would have to make a superhuman effort to get those children out of his heart or memory.

The Asheville orphans came over in an auto, eight of them, plus two tambourines, and they brought a good time with them and shared it with the audience.

And the other programs were as follows:

Barium Springs Orphanage.

1. Good Morning Song, Class.
2. Dolls Lullaby, Primary Girls.
3. Animal Song, Primary Girls and Jerome Nowlan.
4. Sacred Solo, Edna McMillan.
5. Playmates, Mildred Milec, Walter Beattie.
6. Pinafore Drills, Intermediate Girls.
7. Shaking Quakers, Primary Girls and Carl Bolden.
8. Chorus, Barium Home, Class.

Thornwell Orphanage.

Recitation.

Whistling.

Cock Robin Drill.

Duet, We Will Outshine the Sun.

The Fat Doctor.

The Orchestra, Makebelieve.

Two Nations Talking, A Pantomime.

A Lonesome Little Boy, Recitation.

Ra-Ra for Thornwell.

All honor to the faithful, loving teachers who had trained these children so splendidly.

Miss Carrie Lee Campbell (By Permission).

The delegates to Synod's Conference for Young People, June 2-9, 1919, voted to aid Miss Nealy Ford, of our Barium Home, in attaining a college education. She wishes to enter college in September and we are urging all societies to send in a contribution ($2.00) to this fund at once. She will also borrow one hundred dollars on the scholarship in the student loan fund erected by the young people's societies of the Synodical Auxiliary of North Carolina. When all contributions are in, the money will be sent to Dr. Henry H. Sweets, Louisville, Ky., executive secretary of Christian Education, and sent by him to Miss Ford as needed.

Mamie McElwee,

Synodical Auxiliary Secretary of Young People's Work.

Mrs. W. E. White, of Graham, has been unanimously elected by the executive committee of the North Carolina Synodical as secretary of Assembly's Home Missions for the Synodical, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mrs. R. N. Page, who has filled this office most acceptably but resigned in May on being elected president of Mecklenburg Presbyterian.

I wish to express to the Presbyterian Secretaries of North Carolina my appreciation of their promptness in sending in reports, and believing that a sincere and deserved bit of praise is always welcome, I want to compliment them most highly on the efficiency and accuracy of their work. These women who have served so faithfully and well the past year are Albemarle Presbyterian, Mrs. B. R. Lacy, Raleigh; Wilmington, Mrs. J. O. Carr, Wilmington; Concord, Mrs. E. B. Watts, Statesville; Orange, Mrs. Lynn Williamson, Graham; Fayetteville, Mrs. C. C. McAlister, Fayetteville; Mecklenburg, Mrs. Pat Williams, Charlotte; Kings Mountain, Miss Ethel Stone, Belmont.

Mrs. S. A. Robinson,

Secretary North Carolina Synodical Auxiliary.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriages.

Walton-McDowell—In Greenville, S. C., August 16, 1919, by Rev. E. P. Davis, Mr. J. C. Walton, of Gray Court, S. C., and Miss Minnie Lee McDowell, of Fountain Inn, S. C.

Ballard-Lock—At the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wash Lock, Leslie, S. C., on June 18, 1919, by Rev. John C. Bailey, Mr. Ernest J. Ballard, of Rock Hill, S. C., and Miss Elizabeth Bea Lock.

Worthington-Moore—At the residence of the bride's brother-in-law, Mr. Lindsey Caldwell, Ebenezer, S. C., by Rev. John C. Bailey, on August 10, 1919, Mr. Max S. Worthington and Miss Sue J. Moore, both of Charlotte, N. C.

Halter-Huff—In Greenville, S. C. August 17, 1919, by Rev. E. P. Davis, Mr. Vincent Frank Halter, of Baltimore, Md., and Miss Louise Frances Huff, of Piedmont, S. C.

Deaths.

Underwood—At the home of his son-in-law, Mr. Frank Shillinglaw, near Leslie, S. C., on June 22, 1919, Mr. Jeden R. Underwood, aged 74 years.

Rawls—At her home near Leslie, S. C., on July 4, 1919, Miss Lillian Rawls, daughter of Mrs. M. M. Rawls, after an illness of two weeks.

Silliman—Alta, daughter of Mr. John D. Silliman, of Rowan County, N. C., died after an operation in Statesville, August 14, 1919, in her twentieth year.

A zealous and dependable member of Thyatira Church from childhood, always cheerful and helpful, a devoted daughter and sister, she will be sadly missed in the home, church and community.

Hearn—On July 13, 1919, Charles, Jr., only child of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Hearn, died at Teachey's, N. C. Charles, Jr., was a bright and attractive child and was loved by all who knew him. His father had been home from France only two and one-half months and he says that was the happiest time of his life.

He was two years and eight months old and his life, though short, was a bright and shining light to all who knew him.

He will be missed so much by the loved ones he has left, but we commend them to the One who doeth all things well.

IN MEMORIAM.

Emma Lillian Donnell.

Emma Lillian Donnell died June 24, 1919, at her home seven miles east of Greensboro. She was born October 23, 1869, and when a young girl joined the Midway Presbyterian Church, of which she was a member at her death.

Being the oldest of a large family of children, and having lost her mother many years ago, she has borne the responsibility of a mother toward her brothers and sisters and the responsibility of the home for her father with a faithfulness and devotion that have been exceptional indeed. The funeral service was conducted in the Midway church on June 25 by her pastor, Rev. E. Frank

Lee, who was assisted by Rev. C. E. Hodgkin. The deceased is survived by her father, William H. Donnell, and by five brothers and three sisters: R. H., S. B., C. L., William H., Jr., all of Guilford county, and Watson Donnell, of Spencer, and Mrs. W. A. Aydlette and Misses Lena M. and Pearl Donnell of near Greensboro. The blessings of peace from the God of love be upon all the family. E. Frank Lee, Pastor.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Mrs. Sarah Smith.

Whereas, God has in His infinite wisdom removed from our midst our beloved sister and co-worker, Mrs. Sarah Smith, who was a faithful member of our Woman's Auxiliary and church.

Whereas, she was a fond and devoted mother, and a good, kind neighbor.

Therefore, be it resolved, that we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father.

That her death makes a vacancy in our church and community.

That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, assuring them of our prayers, that our Father may comfort them in their irreparable loss.

That a page in our minute book be inscribed to her memory, a copy be sent to the Presbyterian Standard, and a copy be sent to the family of the deceased.

Respectfully submitted,
Mrs. P. McK. Williams,
Mrs. David Gaster,
Miss Ella Carver.

Woman's Auxiliary Sherwood Presbyterian Church, Fayetteville, N. C.

Children's Department

HAD WHOOPING COUGH.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl five years old. My birthday was July 4. We take your paper and I enjoy hearing my Daddy read the little letters. I have had whooping cough this summer and have missed going to Sunday school, but am well now and have started back again. I hope my letter won't reach the waste basket, as this is my first and I want to surprise my Dad.

Your little friend,
Sarah Patterson Brison.

Clover, S. C.

A HAPPY SUMMER.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old. I go to the Presbyterian church. I have recited the Child's Catechism. I am trying to recite the Shorter Catechism by September. I am staying with my uncle. I go to school at Stony Point. I am promoted to the fourth grade. I have three sisters and two brothers. All of them are older than I. My sister from Virginia came to see me and we went to see my other sister at Linwood. We had a nice time. Hope this won't reach the waste basket, as I want to surprise my uncle.

Your friend,
Stony Point, N. C. Emily Mellon.

The life Christ bestoweth is sweetest to live,

The joy that he giveth no other can give,

All, all shall be yours, if in Him you believe—

He's the very best Friend you have.

MY NEST.

Some nights, when I lie down to rest
I think about the bluebird's nest
That just outside my window-pane
Is tossing in the wind and rain.

And then I cuddle snug and warm
To shut away the night and storm,
And make believe I'm in a nest
Against the mother bluebird's breast.

And presently, beneath her wing,
Into the dark I seem to swing
Far to and fro, until it seems
I swing into the land of dreams.
—Albert Bigelow Paine, in June St. Nicholas.

Not by what we know, but by what we desire, is our destiny determined.

DICK'S INVENTION FOR HAWKS.

"Shoo!" cried Dick, aiming a stone. "Scat!" But it was no use. The sparrow-hawk flew slowly along the eaves of the barn, reached into a nest and pulled out a young swallow. Then the hawk flew away.

"If only," yelled Dick, indignantly, after him, "I'd been near enough to scare you off, you robber!"

It was late in May that the swallows came. Dick watched for them impatiently. At last one night after school, something darted and swooped high overhead.

"Swallows!" he cried. "They've come!"

No mistaking those swift circlings and wheelings, and such long, slender wings and forked tails only barn swallows had! Soon came shorter-tailed eaves swallows. The barn swallows carried mouthfuls of mud inside the barn, and high up among the rafters carefully plastered the mud into nests like the skillful little masons they were. Eaves swallows brought clay in their bills, too. But while they shaped the mud into nests under the overhanging eaves, they hadn't anything to stand on. So Dick saw them bend their stiff tails and prop themselves against the wall with their short, strong feathers as they plastered.

There were only five barn swallows' nests, each with its setting of little brown-spotted eggs. Dick climbed up into the rafters to look at them one day. But the eaves swallows had stretched a hundred gray nests side by side the whole length of the barn.

"Each nest means two old birds, beside all the little ones to be fed," calculated Dick.

"How many harmful insects," said father, "those hundreds of swallows destroy for us!" And Dick looked with respect at the swift, graceful birds, now skimming along the ground for flies and mosquitoes and the little white millers of the hay field, now soaring to great heights after some strong-winged insect.

Eaves swallows have only a short, chattering cry, so when they began to scream wildly, Dick knew it meant the hawk again. The barn swallows left the tops of their nests open because the roof sheltered them; but the eaves swallows built a clay cover over theirs to keep out rain and cold, and made an opening in the side. It couldn't save them from the hawk though. The hawk flew silently down the long row of nests among the frightened, screaming swallows, seized a fledging through its open door and carried it to the woods.

"Father says the sparrow-hawks are friends to farmers, but this one isn't! I'll stop it some way," said Dick.

"I'll teach that robber to keep to bugs," and Dick hurried into the house. He came out carrying a great green watermelon. He fastened it to a fish line and tied it to a nail just inside the barn door.

"What's that for?" demanded Marian.

"For the hawk," Dick told her, watching the woods.

"Hurry, Dick," excitedly called Marian, bleaching linen on the grass.

The hawk was coming.

Dick dropped his hoe, ran to the barn and snatched the great green watermelon off the nail. It was as big as the biggest melon he ever saw, bright green with dark stripes down its smooth sides. He tossed it into the air at the end of the fish line. It floated lightly. The melon was a balloon that he bought when they went to the circus parade in town.

"Oh!" Marian breathed. "Don't you hope it'll scare him!" The hawk came straight on. Dick let out the line, and the watermelon rose half way to the eaves.

There a current of air caught the balloon and it shot swiftly up.

It was none too soon. The hawk was already flapping by the nests. The great green watermelon rose noiselessly beside him. Dick held his breath. Would it frighten the hawk? The melon swayed, dipping endwise close to the hawk. The startled bird swerved, stopped and then stretching his wings wide, flew back to the woods.

"He's gone!" cried Marian jubilantly.

Dick kept sharp watch to see if the hawk came back. When he went to supper, he tethered the balloon to a nail, leaving the watermelon floating high above the eaves. But the hawk never robbed the swallows' nests again.

"It was a funny scarecrow," laughed Dick, "but it worked!"—Alice M. Farrington, in the Sunday School Times.

$1,000 WILL BE PAID FOR A SINGLE WORD.

San Francisco—Can you create the one word which will best denote the United States and all parts of Britannia? If so, you will be paid at the rate of $1,000 a word. The World Trade Club of San Francisco has offered $1,000 to the person who suggests the word which, in the judgment of the club's Metric Campaign committee, is best adapted to world-wide use.

The competition is open to all humankind. The money will be paid to the winner at noon on May 15, 1920, by a committee appointed by President W. H. Hammer, of the World Trade Club.

"Brit-Am," "Ambria," "Ambrittica," "Br-Am," "Sam-Bull" are some words thus far suggested. New names are constantly coming. The World Trade Club is offering this award because in carrying on its present campaign for the adoption of metric units by all English-speaking people—the United States, the British Isles, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, United South Africa and so on—it was hampered by the lack of a single short word which would express all these.

The metric units of weight and measure are now used by all the world except "Brit-Am" or "Ambrittica" or "Sam-Bull."

BIRDS' BANQUET FOR BENNY.

Benny Bruce was always kind to every living thing; He liked to feed the pretty birds that gathered round to sing. Now, one fine day the little birds, and larger birds as well, Resolved to spread a banquet on the moss in Fairy Dell.

The Kingfisher went fishing with his brand new rod and reel, Till he caught a string of speckled trout sufficient for a meal; And the Cuckoo cooked them well till they were brown within the pan, While Mistress Magpie made a pie as only Magpies can.

The Wren ran for the rennet, and she made a custard fine; "A dish of junket's good dessert," she said, "for folks that dine." Quoth the Guinea Hen: "A guinea will be just the proper fee For all excepting Benny Bruce; he'll be invited free."

You should have seen that jolly crowd around their mossy table! Benny Bruce ate quite as much as ever he was able, Yet the Swallow swallowed even more than Benny, so they say; And Mrs. Duck just ducked her head when good things came her way. Said Benny (to himself), as he was finishing his plateful, "I've learned one thing: that even birds can prove that they are grateful!" —Our Boys and Girls.

WHEN THE FROGS "KER CHUG."

"Ker chug! ker chug! ker chug!"

Don't you hear the frogs
Down in the meadow
Fiddling on the logs?
All in new spring jackets,
Green to match the grass,
Leaping in the water,
If you chance to pass.

"Ker chug! ker chug! ker chug!"

Every fiddler knows
That the spring is coming;
How—do you suppose?
In his muddy chamber
'Mid the ooze and slime,
Who is there to tell him
It is fiddling time?

"Ker chug! ker chug! ker chug!"

How the chorus swells
All along the marshes
Where this frog band dwells!
And all sleeping creatures
In earth chambers snug,
Know it's time to waken
When the frogs "ker chug."

THE Y. M. C. A. GIVES ACCOUNT OF STEWARDSHIP.

Between April 26, 1917, and March 31, 1919, the total expenditures of the Y. M. C. A. in connection with its war work were $97,817,005, leaving a balance of $27,465,854 which will carry on the work until next December. More than half of this sum—$43,000,000—was expended abroad, and the broad range of activities is shown by the fact that eighty per cent of the funds, contributed by the American public, went to the purchase, transportation and distribution of canteen supplies, and into entertainment, education and the support of athletics. Only a relatively small sum went to what might be called distinctly religious work. The figures, therefore, make it clear that the Y. M. C. A., during the war, became overseas practically an adjunct of the United States government, and was thus utilized because it was in better shape than any other going organization to meet at once the various exigencies arising from the massing of so many soldiers. The financial statement, recently issued, goes into great detail and bears the indorsement of such capable financiers as George W. Perkins and Cleveland H. Dodge. It ought to reassure the public as to the value and reach of the far ramifying work. Faults and mistakes there were, but it can stand inspection as well as any other welfare organization which undertook to serve the soldiers. Now comes the difficult task of shrinking and adapting the work to post-war conditions, but we doubt not that Dr. Mott and his able staff have already thought the problem through.—Congregationalist.

GROVE INSTITUTE

(Formerly James Sprunt Institute)

KENANSVILLE : NORTH CAROLINA

A Preparatory School for Girls. High Grade, Thoroughly Christian. Very Moderate Cost. Students receive Close, Personal Attention in a Home-Like Atmosphere.

NEXT SESSION BEGINS SEPTEMBER 10th.

For Catalog and Particulars, address REV. W. F. HOLLINGSWORTH, Pres.

Chicora College for Women

THE PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE OF SOUTH CAROLINA

A Standard College of Distinction and Character

Religion and Philosophy Letters and Science

Home Economics

The Fine Arts

(Music, Art and Expression)

For Catalogue and Information, address

Pres. S. G. BYRD, D.D., Columbia, S. C.

200 Beautifully Situated Building Lots at Black Mountain, N. C.

I offer for sale 200 beautiful building lots on 40 foot streets—already cut out, sized not less than 50x130, some larger, at $200.00 each, payable $25.00 with order and the balance $10.00 per month without interest, or 7 per cent discount will be allowed if the whole amount is paid in full.

You May Be One to Get a Lot Free For a Little Work

If you or any church, Sunday School or Church Society or organization will sell ten (10) of these lots at the above price on the terms stated, accompanying order with the required amount I will give you a free deed to one of these beautiful lots and agree, in the event you are not satisfied with your lot in twelve months to pay you in cash $200.00 for the same.

As only 20 of these lots will be given away at this time and as this advertisement appears in five standard papers with a circulation of more than 86,000 readers, you can readily see that it is absolutely necessary for you to act promptly. If you will notify me by wire or letter of your desire to enter the contest, such notice will be recognized in order in which it is received.

We have sold over 300 of these lots, some of which have changed hands at as much as $300.00 each.

Lots two miles further distant, not half so well located, without any road or street to them, have sold for $200.00 three years ago.

For description of Black Mountain property, see my ad. in last week's issue.

References:

Judge J. D. Eckles, Black Mountain, N. C.

Commonwealth Bank, Black Mountain, N. C.

J. S. Kuykendall, Winston-Salem, N. C.

W. T. McCoy & Company

Announce the opening of their Fall showing of Wilton, Axminster, Velvet, Tapestry and Wool Fibre Rugs. A cordial invitation is extended the public to call and inspect this extra fine display of beautiful rugs.

EARLY CAUSES FOR DRUNKENNESS.

The Methodist Board of Temperance gives a statement well worth remembering in their clip sheet: "Not one case of drunkenness due to whiskey or spirits occurred in the world previous to 1106 A. D. Noah did not get drunk on whiskey, he got drunk on wine. The Egyptians got drunk on wine and beer. Alexander died drunk and he never heard of whiskey. Egypt and Rome went to the dogs on wine and beer, not whiskey. Every denunciation of drunkenness to be found in the Bible and case of drunkenness told of in the history, refers to wine and beer drunkenness."

FOR SALE—Hook and Hastings pipe organ. Two manual, pedal bass. Light oak case, gold display pipes. Reason for selling, new church required larger organ. Good as new. Call or write Mr. A. T. McLean, Lumberton, N. C. A real bargain.

Aberdeen & Rockfish Railroad

Between Aberdeen and Fayetteville

Eastbound		Westbound
Daily Ex. Sunday		Daily Ex. Sunday
Mixed	Pass.	Pass.	Mixed
STATIONS
No. 22	No. 33	No. 41	No. 21
7 30 am	9 10 am	Lv. Aberdeen Ar. 6 41 pm	5 00 pm
8 35 am	10 00 am	Raeform	lv 3 50 pm
lv 2 10 pm		Ar. Fayetteville Lv. 4 50 pm	2 50 pm
4 00 pm	11 20 am		1 00 pm

WAGRAM BRANCH

Southbound		Northbound
Daily Ex. Sun.		Daily Ex. Sun.
Mixed		Mixed
STATIONS
No. 11		No. 12
Lv. 10 30 am		Raeform	Ar. 12 40 pm
Ar. 11 15 am		Wagram	Lv. 12 00 noon

W. A. BLUE, General Supt.,
Aberdeen, N. C.

Only so far as a man believes strongly can he act cheerfully, or do anything that is worth doing.—Robertson.

The greatest hindrances to the evangelization of the world are those within the Church.—John R. Mott.

NORTH CAROLINA COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

Offers thorough instruction and excellent advantages in the training of young women for the mastery of courses fitting themselves to become self supporting. There are courses leading to the degrees of Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science and Bachelor of Music. Total number registered last year, 1299. Free tuition to those students who agree to teach in the schools of North Carolina after leaving the college. Excellent equipment, expenses moderate. For catalogue and other information, address J. I. FOUST, President, Greensboro, N. C.

COLUMBIA COLLEGE

COLUMBIA, S. C.

A College for Women ranked in Class "A" by Board of Education, M. E. Church, South. Recognized for its high type of Christian culture.

Unusually complete educational facilities, strong university-trained faculty, thorough equipment, ideal location.

Handsome fire-proof buildings, elegantly fitted with every convenience for health, comfort and safety. Beautiful 20-acre campus, affording ample opportunity for outdoor games.

Library of upwards of 5,000 volumes in large, well-lighted quarters. Fine collection of magazines.

Thorough courses leading to degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science.

Conservatory of Music under direction of skilled instructors.

Thorough courses in Art, Expression, Business, and Home Economics.

1919 session begins September 17th. For descriptive catalogue, address

G. T. PUGH, Ph. D., President, Columbia, S. C.

The United States Railroad Administration
Announces

The following changes in schedules of trains between Greensboro, N. C. and Goldsboro, N. C.

EFFECTIVE SUNDAY, AUGUST 24, 1919

- Train 108 now leaving Greensboro 6:00 A. M. will leave 7:25 A. M. Arrive Goldsboro 12:40 P. M.
- Train 144 now leaving Greensboro 8:10 A. M. will leave 9:20 A. M. Arrive Goldsboro 2:40 P. M.

No Change in Schedules of Trains 22 and 112, Eastbound.
No Change in Schedules of Trains Westbound.

For detail information apply to Consolidated or Depot Ticket Office.
Phone Number 20.

United States Railroad Administration

DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS

Seaboard Air Line Railroad

Reduced Summer Excursion Round-Trip Tickets on sale May 15th to September 30th, final limit October 31st, 1919, to the following points:

Alta Pass, N. C.	$ 7.14	Pensacola, N. C.	$ 9.06
Hickory, N. C.	3.30	Rutherfordton, N. C.	4.32
Johnson City, Tenn.	10.80	Shelby, N. C.	2.88
Lenoir, N. C.	4.50	Switzerland, N. C.	6.96
Norfolk, Va.	17.46	Virginia Beach, Va.	18.26
Old Point, Va.	18.06	Wrightsville Beach, N. C.	10.66

The above rates do not include war tax. Also attractive rates to other resorts.

For particulars as to fares, trains, schedules, etc., apply to any Railroad Ticket Agent.

E. W. LONG, P. S. A.,
CHARLOTTE, N. C.

JOHN T. WEST, D. P. A.,
RALEIGH, N. C.

YOU WILL WRITE A LETTER LIKE THIS.

I wish I knew which one of the thousands of letters I receive would have the most weight with you, my friend. I can't quote all of them here, but I am going to ask you to read these carefully and then give me a chance to renew your health and make you write me one very much like them:

Barnard St., Savannah, Ga.
Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.

Dear Sir: I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft boiled eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water, which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantity as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

A. L. R. AVANT, M. D.
Leeds, S. C.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time it will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

C. A. CROSBY, M. D.

These are not selected cases nor are the results unusual. I receive thousands like them from physicians, ministers, lawyers, merchants, farmers, manufacturers and every conceivable profession. I want the satisfaction of receiving such a letter from you. No matter what your complaint may be, dyspepsia, indigestion, nervous headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, or any curable ailment that has not responded to drugs. I invite you to match your faith in the Spring against my pocketbook. If the water fails to benefit you simply say so, return the empty demijohns and I will promptly and willingly refund your money—every cent. Sign below:

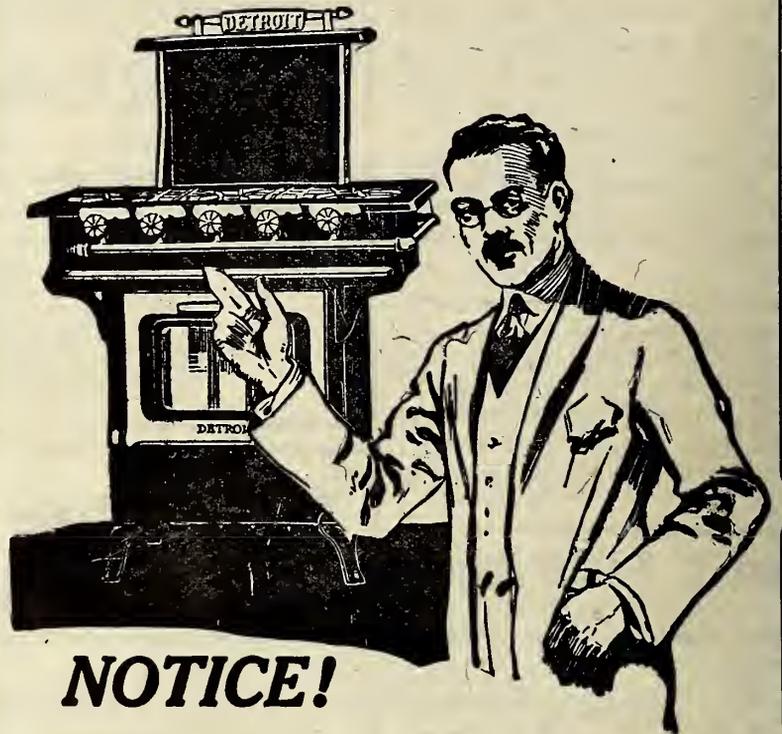

Shivar Spring,
Box 4-C, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

Name
Address
Shipping Point

Village Constable (to villager who has been knocked down by passing motorist): "You didn't see the number, but could you swear to the man?" Villager: "I did, but I don't think 'e cared me."—Galveston News.

NOTICE!

With A Detroit Vapor Oil Stove
In the Home

One can have all the advantages of a gas range, for the scientific arrangement of the Detroit Oil Vapor Stove is such that it lights instantly, requires no wicks and will last a lifetime with a little care. It is cheap to operate and yet will cook anything from the most delicious pasteries to a big roast or a turkey.

The word "wickless" is used because the stove is wickless. The kerosene is vaporized and it will light instantly and cooking can begin immediately.

When one is in a hurry: wants a kettle of hot water in a few minutes, or must prepare a meal in a short time, the full advantages of the Detroit Vapor Oil Stove are seen and appreciated.

The burners save a quarter of the fuel. One burner will operate at full power from 18 to 20 hours on one gallon of fuel.

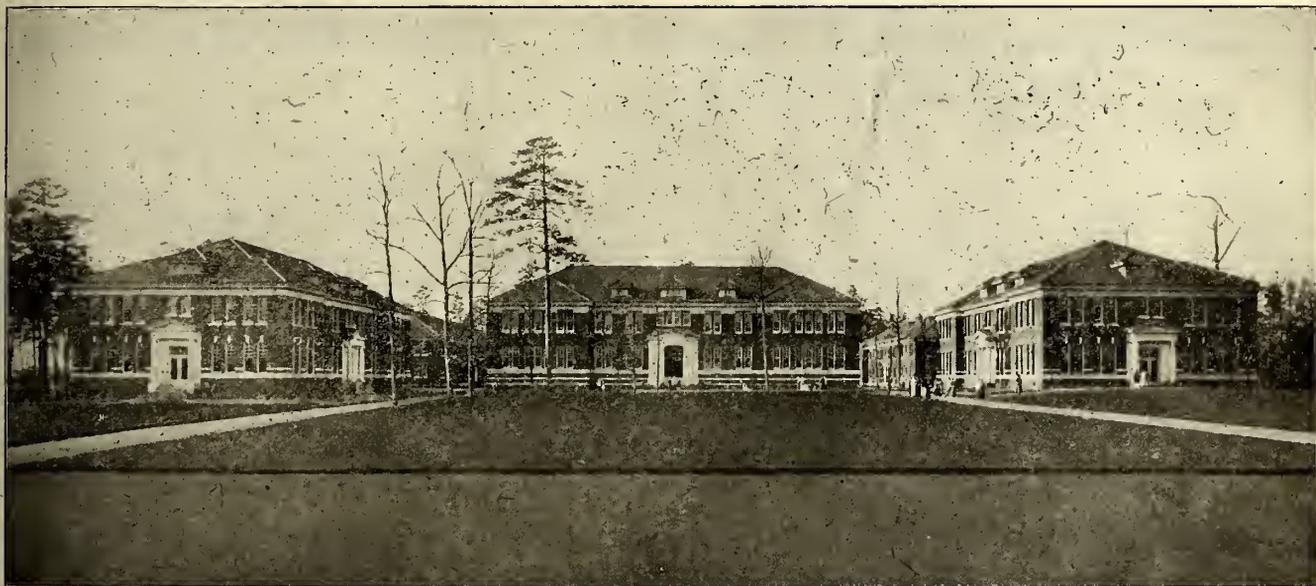

CHARLOTTE DISTRIBUTORS

Erskine R. Smith, Inc.

Charlotte, N. C.

Queens College for Women

Charlotte, North Carolina

Established More Than Sixty Years Ago as "Charlotte Female Institute"

It is Now Recognized as the Best Equipped College for Women in the Entire South

We have five new two-story brick buildings with modern fire extinguishers, designed and erected solely for convenience, comfort, efficiency and safety. These buildings are located in the beautiful suburb of Myers Park, three and one-half miles from the center of the city.

We have a splendid wooded campus of 25 acres.

15 units required for entrance. Graduates from recognized State High Schools admitted on certificate.

This College is built on a firm belief in the inspiration of the Bible. Thorough Bible courses provided.

Standard college course leading to B. A. degree. Most complete equipment for thorough education.

Physical, Chemical and Biological Laboratories; Library, Gymnasium, Preparatory department. Able faculty. Dormitories divided into units of two rooms and connecting with bath, accommodating four students. Large, well-ventilated rooms, big closets. Buildings as near fire-proof as possible. Water, gas, electricity. Convenient street car service.

School of Music, Expression and Art offers superior opportunities. Music building has twenty-six rooms equipped exclusively for this department. Complete, thorough course leading to diploma. Post graduate course in music offered.

Our Motto: "Christian Women for Christian Homes"

Necessary expenses very moderate, about $325.00 for the regular literary course, including board. FALL TERM begins September 10, 1919.

For further information send for catalogue or write

WM. ANDERSON, Registrar, Box 300, Charlotte, N. C.

The "Home Service" of the American Red Cross assisted 392,789 families of soldiers and sailors during the month of May, according to reports made public here today from about half of the 3,628 home service sections throughout the country. Complete reports would increase the total to more than 500,000, it was stated.

The service consisted in dealing with allotments, allowances, insurance and compensations; in combatting anxiety, safeguarding health, giving legal protection, promoting education, assisting in getting employment for returned soldiers, taking care of their families until they found jobs—in short, being on the job "when a feller needs a friend."

Engaged in the work were 40,000 Red Cross workers, mostly volunteers. Chapter funds were used when necessary to extend relief to families. In May $544,285 was thus expended, bringing the total since February, 1918, to $7,381,045.

"In the A. E. F. With an Artist"

The sketch book and diary of
Lieut. J. B. Mallard. Send
$1.00 for your copy to

J. B. MALLARD

Box 625

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The Cumberland General Hospital, of Fayetteville N. C., offers to young ladies between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five the following courses of training for nurses: Three years practical and theoretical work which prepares for State Board Examinations. Fall classes being formed now. Apply at once to Supt. of Nurses.

MARY BALDWIN SEMINARY For Young Ladies

Established 1842. Term begins Sept. 12th. In the beautiful and historic Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. Unsurpassed climate, modern equipment. Students from 31 states. Courses: Collegiate, 3 years; Preparatory, 4 years. Music, Art and Domestic Science. Catalog.

STAUNTON, VIRGINIA

EXPERT KODAK FINISHING

Developing and printing done by artists. Most beautiful work guaranteed at all times. Satisfaction or no charge. Developing, 10c. per film. Printing: 2 1/4 x 3 1/4, 3c.; 2 1/4 x 4 1/4, 4c.; 3 1/4 x 5 1/2, 5c. Quick delivery. Send one film to test our service.

Ligon Drug Co., Spartanburg, S. C.

BLACKSTONE MILITARY ACADEMY

Safeguards the morals and develops the physique, culture, refinement, education and gentlemanly bearing of your boy. A thoroughly capable school based on honest principles and experience in the study of boy life. Thorough Academic, Preparatory and Commercial Courses. Excellently equipped modern buildings. Gymnasium, Infirmary and 40 new rooms now under construction. Two U. S. Army officers in charge of R. O. T. C. Trained nurse in charge of Infirmary. For literature, write.

COL. E. S. LIGON, President, Blackstone Military Academy, Box R, Blackstone, Va.

The University of South Carolina

1801

1919

The University offers courses leading to the following degrees:

1. School of Arts and Science, A. B. and B. S.
2. School of Education, A. B.
3. Graduate School, A. M.
4. School of Engineering, C. E.
5. School of Law, LL. B.
6. Military Science and Tactics compulsory for Freshmen and Sophomores. Reserve Officers Training Corps.

For students of Education, Law, Engineering and those pursuing higher graduate work, the University offers exceptional advantages.

Next session begins September 17, 1919. For information, write

W. S. CURRELL, President, COLUMBIA, S. C.

North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering

WEST RALEIGH

A Land Grant College founded under an act of Congress by the State Legislature of North Carolina in March, 1887. Splendidly equipped for the education of the sons of the State in the technical and industrial arts.

Four year courses in Agriculture, in Agricultural Chemistry, and in Civil, Electrical, Mechanical, Chemical and Textile Engineering. New departments in Agricultural Engineering and Highway Engineering.

Numerous short courses.

Unit of Reserve Officers Training Corps. Seniors and Juniors receive pay amounting to $118 annually. All students receive free uniforms amounting in four years to $164.

Strong athletic teams.

$40,000 Y. M. C. A. building. Regular paid secretary.

Two hundred and forty free scholarships.

Requirement for admission: eleven units—practically equivalent to the completion of tenth grade work.

Board $16.00 per month. Tuition $45.00 per year. Room rent, heat and light $30.00 per year.

Enrollment last session 1,020, exclusive of all summer students.

Fall term begins September 3.

For catalogue, illustrated circular or entrance blanks, write

E. B. OWEN, Registrar

PEACE INSTITUTE, Raleigh, N. C.

For Young Women

Established 1857

- I College Courses.
 - II Courses preparatory to Standard Colleges.
 - III Four years Preparatory School.
- Special diplomas awarded in Piano, Voice, Art, Expression and Home Economics. Secretarial and Commercial Courses.

LULA B. WYNNE HALL,
Home School for Girls

Situation: Location in capital city gives special opportunities. Delightful social advantages. Climate permits out-door life all Winter. Athletics: Supervised indoors and outdoors by Athletic Director. Special attention individual development. Cheerful home-like surroundings. A good school that students really enjoy attending. For room reservation, catalogue or further information, write at once to

Miss Mary Owen Graham, Pres.

The following conversation is reported in the Tatler:

Mrs. Green: "I'm armenic, Mrs. Harris."

Mrs. Harris: "My word, Mrs. Green, I thought you was British."

Mrs. Green: "Ah, yer don't understand, deary; it means I ain't got no blood in me."

Kentucky Theological Seminary
Louisville, Kentucky

Able faculty. Course of study comprehensive and adapted to the times. High standards. Practical training. Excellent library facilities. Splendid buildings, with comfortable dormitories. Expenses moderate. Session begins October 1, 1919.

For further information write the President.

Charles R. Hemphill

Evangelistic Singer

desires engagement in October or November with Evangelist or Pastor.

H. C. Diehl, Greenville, Ill.

You never tasted such biscuits

"How fine and brown—how soft and light—how perfectly cooked!" That's what every member of the family will say when your OCCO-NEE-CHEE biscuits come piping hot to the table.

OCCO-NEE-CHEE
Self-Rising Flour

Takes the Guess out of Baking and Saves you Money

The baking powder, soda and salt are in the flour in the exact proportions that assure perfect baking results. And the fact that you do not have to buy these things means a considerable saving every time you bake muffins, biscuits, waffles or cakes.

Your grocer has Occo-Nee-Chee Self-Rising Flour. Ask for it and to make sure, look for the Indian head on the bag.

When you buy plain flour, ask for Peerless, the best.

AUSTIN-HEATON CO., Durham, N. C.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE

"The greatest single institution, in point of service, controlled by the Southern Presbyterian Church."

THORNTON WHALING, President.
 Columbia Theological Seminary.

COURSES OF STUDY: Literary, Scientific, Classical preparing for ministry, medicine, law, engineering, business, teaching.

FACULTY experienced and University trained.

COLLEGE SPIRIT: The boys work in season and out for a "Bigger and Better Davidson." The typical Davidson student, or alumnus, is loyal, enthusiastic, and successful in whatever he undertakes.

Y. M. C. A. SECRETARY will be continued next year. Rev. R. W. Miles. General Secretary, will be a big factor in the boys' college life.

LITERARY SOCIETIES at Davidson have a rightful place on the campus. Davidson has contested 20 inter-collegiate debates and has won 14, or 70%. The student gets a fine parliamentary training.

IN ATHLETICS Davidson has football, baseball, tennis, track, golf outdoor gymnasium, large new gymnasium. R. O. T. C.

MUSICAL TALENT has expression and development through the Glee Club and Orchestra, an enthusiastic organization that furnishes music for public functions at the college, and gives concerts each year in other towns and colleges.

Students find the climate bracing and beneficial and the social atmosphere friendly and congenial.

Expenses exceptionally reasonable.

Old Students have already registered for next term from the following States: North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Mississippi, Maryland, Alabama, Tennessee, Texas, Arkansas, Georgia, West Virginia, District of Columbia, Louisiana, China, Japan.

New Students from the following: North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Missouri, District of Columbia, Colorado, Kentucky, Indiana, Japan.

Register early; make sure of room.

Illustrated folder and other literature will be sent immediately upon receipt of your request.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE : Davidson, N. C.

THE ROMANTIC STORY OF SOUTHLAND'S FAVORITE
SHOE, EZWEAR.

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities, may have a copy of his money-saving shoe book for the asking.

Birdseye View OIL MAP OF KENTUCKY Free

Also sample copy FREE of the KENTUCKY OIL JOURNAL. Fully illustrated; thirty-two pages; seventy-five thousand readers. Address
EKNTUCKY OIL JOURNAL
No. 21 INTER-SOUTHERN BLDG., LOUISVILLE, KY.

NEW SONG BOOKS
For Your Church 8c

A wonderful value; 83 familiar songs of the Gospel, words and music. Used all over the world. Only $3 per hundred for No. 1 or 2, round or shaped notes, and $15 for No. 1 and 2, combined, round notes only. Send 30c for samples. Money back if not pleased.
E. A. K. HACKETT, Dept. No. 56, FT. WAYNE, IND.

YOUR FACE?
Is the Complexion Muddy, Tanned, Freckled?
If troubled with skin eruptions, sunburn, pimples, try
PALMER'S SKIN SUCCESS SOAP
It cleanses, softens and clears the skin and tends to remove sunburn, tan, freckles, blackheads, pimples and eczema.
Thoroughly antiseptic. Ask your druggist, or write for free samples to
THE MORGAN DRUG CO.,
1521 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Medical College of Virginia
(State Institution—Co-Educational)
STUART MCGUIRE, M.D., LL.D., Pres.
MEDICINE DENTISTRY
PHARMACY NURSING
New buildings, completely equipped. Laboratories under full time instructors. Unusual clinical facilities offered in three hospitals owned by the college, also in city hospitals and institutions.
81st session begins September 17, 1919.
For catalogue, address
J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary
1121 East Clay Street RICHMOND, VA.

In Your Cotton Alleys
Clover--
Vetch---
Alfalfa--
Plant after last working of cotton crop. Ready when cotton is picked. For grazing, hay and soil building. Saves a season.
With Oats and Rye
Makes very best feed. Will double your yield and build your soil. Vetch stubble turned under is equal to 700 lbs. of good grade fertilizer per acre.
The Best Paying Crop
4 or 5 crops per year without cultivation. Grows several years without re-seeding. Wonderful land builder.
Inoculate the Seed With NITRA-GERM and be Sure of a Good Stand
It enables you to grow these crops where you failed before. Improves your crop and land. Costs $2.00 per acre delivered.
Write for FREE book No. 6-G Address NITRA-Germ, Savannah, Ga.

Grind Your Corn the Simple Way
Delicate, Complicated Machinery is neither necessary nor economical. Save money in grinding your grain with—
The Gibbes Corn Mill
Simple—Fast—Economical—Durable
No complicated parts, whole machine easily handled. With ball-bearing system it is light running and rapid, requiring very little power. Little wear, smooth running, seldom a part to replace. Made of the best of materials. Absolutely guaranteed. For illustrated literature and prices address—
GIBBES MACHINERY CO., Dept. A-2, Columbia, S. C.

COLLEGE OF William & Mary
1693 Historic in Association; Modern in Equipment; 1919 Progressive in Spirit;
William and Mary offers every advantage of a modern, liberal education in a cultured and historic community. Chartered by King William and Queen Mary, developed by such officials as Jefferson, Washington and John Tyler, it has for 226 years served the cause of American education. It educated John Marshal, James Monroe, Winfield Scott, George Wythe, Peyton Randolph, Jefferson and Tyler; its recent students are leaders in Virginia today.
Full Collegiate courses leading to the A. B., B. S., and M. A. degrees. Large, efficient faculty. High entrance and academic standards. Excellent laboratory facilities for the study of the natural sciences, drawing and manual arts. 12 buildings with modern equipment; heating and power plant; large shaded campus; 25 acre athletic grounds.
The College of William and Mary is the Teachers' College of Virginia; special two-year course, based on high school graduation, for the teachers' diploma. 132 scholarships for men and women training to be teachers. Free tuition to ministerial students. Special pre-medical course. Pre-electrical and chemical engineering. Courses in business administration and commerce. Courses for commercial teachers. All courses open to men and women.
The honor-system of student government had its origin at William and Mary. Pure religious and social surroundings; student life free from harmful and costly habits; low expenses made possible through state aid and situation in an inexpensive community.
THE COLLEGE OF WILLIAM AND MARY
J. A. C. CHANDLER, President. For catalogue and information, address, THE PRESIDENT, College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va.

SOUTH CAROLINA HONORS NEGRO SOLDIERS.

Columbia, S. C., like a number of other Southern cities, gave its returning negro soldiers a public welcome. They had a home-coming parade, and were reviewed and addressed by the mayor of the city and the Governor of the State. But white citizens felt that a permanent recognition should be made of the worth of South Carolina's colored troops. The State Legislature accordingly appropriated $100,000 for a memorial of the colored soldiers who offered their lives in the great war for the defense of American liberty. The Governor has appointed a committee of seven to determining the form of the memorial, one member being a negro. The plan to be adopted will be one meeting the approval of the negroes of the State.

Personal Instruction

is the prime secret of a thorough education. An excellent standard and high curriculum maintained for one hundred and thirty-four years and an intentionally limited enrollment insure a most thorough-going literary training at the

COLLEGE OF CHARLESTON

Excellent equipment. Climate unsurpassed. Expenses moderate. CO-EDUCATIONAL. For catalogue and illustrated booklet address Harrison Randolph, Pres., Charleston, S. C.

A Southern Presbyterian University, owned and controlled by a Board of Representative Presbyterians from every Southern State.

THE SCHOOLS

Of Liberal Arts, Science, Literature and Journalism, and Commerce are open all the year and students may enter at the beginning of any one of the four terms as follow: Sept. 24, Jan. 2, Apr. 1 and July 6.

A beautiful Book of Views, illustrating Student Life at the University, will be sent free, with catalogue, on application. Address

Oglethorpe University

Oglethorpe University, Ga.
(Suburb of Atlanta)

DR. J. M. BELK, MONROE, N. C.

W. H. BELK, CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Belk Bros. Dept. Stores

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA
19 STORES

Send us your orders for Bibles, Testaments, Confession of Faith, or Book of Church Order, for quick delivery. 10 percent discount for Sunday Schools, Societies, or Churches, Preachers or Teachers—and in dozens we will give you wholesale price.

WHY NOT HAVE A BIBLE OR TESTAMENT IN EVERY SUNDAY SCHOOL SCHOLAR'S HANDS EVERY SUNDAY? WE WILL HELP DO THIS. WRITE TO US FOR THE PLAN.
NELSON'S BIBLES

1184—Sunday School Scholar's Bible. Practical Helps for Young People. How to study the Bible. How to study the lesson. Bible questions and answers all in this Bible. Good black type, red edges, leatheroid binding. Size 5½x4x1. Special.....98c

Same Bible, gilt edge, better leather binding, illustrated ..$1.25 and $1.50

12—Linen Card Back Bible. Good big print. Fine for the Sunday School classes, about 6x5x1.....75c

1148—Sunday School Bible. Linen board backs, black type, 5x4x1...59c
7764—Teacher's Bible, $5.00.

India Linen Paper, self pronouncing Bible Dictionary, Combined Concordance, 12 Colored Maps, Morocco Binding, Silk Sewed, good print. Size 7¾x5½x1¼$5.00

6512—Teacher's Edition Bible—New and instructive maps, 14 maps, placed throughout the Bible, illustrating the Scripture, 20 beautifully colored pictures, complete Bible Dictionary, new Concordance and Helps. Leather binding, strongly made. Black face type. Size 7x5x1½$2.50
6512—Teacher's Bible, $3.95.

Linen Paper, thumb index, illustrated colored pictures, 12 new maps, Bible Dictionary, Morocco leather binding. Black face type, convenient size, 7x5-1¼. Special$3.95

1212—Illustrated Bible. 4,000 questions and answers, short history of each book of the Bible by A. T. Pier-son, D.D. Harmony of the four Gos-pels. How to study the Bible. Col-ored maps. 7x5½x1½.....$2.00
7764—Teacher's Bible, $5.95.

Self pronouncing Bible, new, improved maps, finely illustrated, combined Con-cordance, 12 colored maps, newest and most complete dictionary yet printed. Morocco binding, silk sew-ed, a beautiful Bible. 8x5½...$5.95
Why not have a Confession of Faith in Every Home? We carry them in stock for your convenience—50c, 75c.

BOOK OF CHURCH ORDER.
Every officer in the Presbyterian Church ought to have this Book and study it. We will mail you one for 25c.

NELSON'S TESTAMENTS

402—New Testament, 65c.
Bound in leatheroid, large black face type. Size 6x5.

321—New Testament, 48c.
Bound same as 402. Black type. Size 5x3½.

400—New Testament, 25c.
This is a special number. Large black type, cardboard back, clear white pa-per—the quality equals most 50c books. Special25c

29—New Testament. Vest pocket size, leatheroid binding, fine for the chil-dren25c
403—New Testament, 98c.

This is leather bound. Large black type, gilt edge. Size 6x4½.

403P—New Testament and Psalms. Leather bound, gilt edge. Large print$1.19

SCHOFIELD BIBLES

We carry these in the newest Edi-tions, bound in good, heavy Linen Card-board backs, or can send you the finest Leather Bound. If you want a Bible to get "REAL HELP" right at home—the newest improved help—a Schofield Bible is the one to buy.

No 50—Linen Cardboard Backs. Good black type, with every help at home. Same helps as the highest price Bible. Size of Book 7x5-1¼.....$1.50

No. 70—Same as above, only larger size type and book, 8½x6½x1¼ $2.00

We carry Schofield Bibles in all kinds of Bindings—Morocco, Persian, Etc. Real Linen Paper, from $5.00 to $10. Let us send you one on approval.

We carry all kinds of New Testa-ments from 15c to $2.00.

THE BOY IN BURLAP.

"What is the matter with this youngster?" asked the visitor, as he gazed at a boy in the corner, barely recognizable as human excepting for the little cropped head protruding from the end of a burlap sack, peering at us like a turtle that is especially curious about his surroundings.

"Nuthin' ails me," the boy stated in a sturdy tone of voice. "I haven't any clothes so I stay here."

The child was in Montenegro in the hallway of an old building that was being used as a hospital. Here he was, a bright little boy unable to trot about in the sunshine, unable to go to school, liable to catch almost any disease from the patients that sometimes threw him bread as they passed on their way to the clinic in an upper room. The Red Cross man picked up the little bundle of rags and had him clothed at the warehouse, but that hardly relieves the situation for hundreds of cases of boys and girls in these mountain districts who are without the very necessities of life. To them is due a chance such as any Bobbie or Mary in America has to grow into sturdy citizens through play, education and care. It is toward such children as this one that the interests of the Juniors of the A. R. C. are directed in their desire that everyone may enjoy life fully as much as they do.

"Do you take exercise after your bath in the morning?" asked Perkins. Jerkins: "Yes; I generally step on the soap as I get out."—Nebraska Awgwan.

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERSISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

450 Revival Sermons and 1000 Religious Anecdotes at Once and 25 to 150 Sermons Each Month for a year, including 150 funeral, and sermons for all special occasions, all for $1.50. Money back if not pleased. The Co-operative Publishing Co., Kirkwood, Mo.

"THE SANITARY" Individual Communion CUPS List of thousands of churches using our cups and FREE CATALOG with quotations sent upon request. Sanitary Communion Outfit Co., 71st St., Rochester, N. Y.

Individual Cups Every church should use. Clean and sanitary. Send for catalog and special offer. Trial free. Thomas Communion Service Co. Box 310 Lima, Ohio

The McCALLIESCHOOL A HOME SCHOOL FOR BOYS Able men train boys for college. Individual attention. 1,000 feet elevation. Big athletic field. All sports. Swimming. Boating. Military drill. Honor System. Boys live in Masters' homes, under their personal guidance. Address Headmasters: S. J. & J. P. McCallie Missionary Ridge, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Cancer Treated Successfully at the Kellam Hospital

The record of Kellam Hospital is without parallel in history, having restored, without the use of the Knife, Acids, X-Ray or Radium, over ninety per cent. of the many hundreds of sufferers from cancer which it has treated during the past twenty-two years. We want every man and woman in the United States to know what we are doing.

KELLAM HOSPITAL, 1617 W. Main St., Richmond, Va.

LINWOOD COLLEGE For Young Ladies Only Established 1883. Offers exceptional educational opportunities to young women. Located at foot of beautiful Crowders Mountain, in the healthy Piedmont section. Water supply from the famous All-Healing Springs. Excellent board. Healthful record unsurpassed. Able faculty. thorough courses, leading to degrees of A. B., B. L., and B. S. Modern buildings, Christian influences. Board and tuition, $175 per year. Next session opens Sept. 17, 1919. For catalog address REV. A. T. LINDSAY, Pres., Gastonia, N. C.

OAK RIDGE INSTITUTE OAK RIDGE, N. C. T. E. WHITAKER, PRESIDENT An old-fashioned Southern school dating from 1852. In its long history it has enrolled thousands from the Carolinas and adjoining states. Preparation that opens the way to bigger accomplishments in college, business, and life. 350 acres in campus, athletic grounds, orchards and farms. Modern school buildings. Steam heat and showers. Library. Military training. Healthful, accessible location near Greensboro. More than a thousand feet above sea level. Sane, moral influences. Courses thoroughly covering literature, science, teaching, bookkeeping, shorthand and music. Athletics encouraged. All male teachers. Discipline mild but firm. Costs reasonable, $350 for the year. Fall session opens September 9, 1919. Write for illustrated catalogue. Address Oak Ridge Institute, Oak Ridge, N. C.

Old Garments Made to Last Another Season. One-half the clothes discarded each season are merely soiled, stained or out of shape. This clothing can be made to last another season and to look as good as new by our Faultless Dry Cleaning Process. All spots and stains are removed. All dirt is extracted from the fibre of the fabric, and the lustre and perfect shape of the new garment is restored without the slightest injury to the most delicate fabrics or shades of color. It Saves Money. You can effect a very great saving by having your clothes cleaned and renewed by our faultless dry cleaning process. The more the price of clothing advances, the more money you will save, and you will have the advantage of always looking neat. Prompt Service by Parcel Post. All mail orders are handled promptly. You will be surprised to learn how quickly your clothes will be returned. We pay return postage. Guarantee of Satisfaction. Your money is promptly refunded if you are not delighted with the results of our cleaning process. Send your garments or write for prices and learn how cheaply we make old clothes look like new.

F A U L T L E S S D R Y C L E A N I N G

The Charlotte Laundry, Charlotte, N. C.

The Winnipeg Telegram tells a his brethren, suddenly decorated his story of prime interest to the harassed window with a gorgeous new blind. financial secretaries of social agencies: "Nice blind of yours, Isaac," quoth his A small storekeeper, to the surprise of neighbor. "Yes, Aaron." "Who paid for it, Isaac?" "The customers paid, Aaron." "What! The customers paid for it, Isaac?" "Yes, Aaron, I put a leedle box on my counter, 'For the blind.' And they paid for it."

This cozy home may be - Your Home.

An attractive, snug, convenient, roomy little bungalow;

Graceful lines, embodying the most modern of architectural ideas; securely, substantially built to make it lasting and comfortable in the most severe weather. Built with a view to convenient arrangement. While small in appearance, its rooms are in reality of ample size for every comfort.

QUICKBILT BUNGALOW NO. 44

while beautiful, convenient, roomy and thoroughly substantial, is built at a tremendously reduced cost, due to the immense savings in quantity production. From the flooring to the roof, from the siding to the interior finish, it is already prepared for erection and partially built. In buying a QUICKBILT Bungalow you

SAVE

WASTE-All the material is already prepared and the large waste piles of scrap lumber are thus eliminated. Every foot of lumber is used. You buy no surplus material.

TIME-Every piece of material has its own place. Everything is numbered and systematized. The instructions to the carpenter are complete and the order of erection simple. No time is lost in looking for material. The time ordinarily required in preliminary cutting and trimming is saved. Furthermore, as a large portion of the house is already built in panels, just that much time and cost is eliminated in construction.

LABOR-With the entire process of erection systematized and instructions complete and the great building "bugaboo"—preliminary preparations—eliminated, the labor in the erection of a QUICKBILT Bungalow is reduced to a minimum, and therefore, of minor consideration. A carpenter of average speed and experience with two laborers, can erect the house in 8 days. The ordinary house will take almost as many weeks.

MONEY-A saving in waste of material, time and labor, is a saving in money. With a QUICKBILT Bungalow the expense of erection is cut in half, but that is not all. You need not pay a contractor's fee. The erection is so simple and systematic that any carpenter of average intelligence can erect it with ease. Many owners build them themselves. You pay no architect's fee. The complete plans with all specifications and instructions are furnished FREE. And yet, the plans are made after careful study by the best and most experienced of architects, with a view to eliminating waste and gaining the greatest possible convenience, economy and strength. The cost of the material is further reduced by the fact that you buy it from the mill, manufacturer and forest in one. Our complete plants cover the entire process, from the tree to the completed house. You pay no middle-man a profit. You buy direct from the source of material. In our complete plants in which hundreds of houses are built simultaneously, every short cut to perfection is used and every waste avoided. As the houses are made in great quantities you gain the advantage of the low cost of quantity production.

PRICE $952 less 10 per cent. $856
for cash. Net price

F. O. B. Charleston. The price includes all necessary material, except the brick work and plumbing. Size over all, 21-ft. 5-in. x 30-ft. 6½-in. There are two large bedrooms, one 9-ft. x 12-ft., the other 12-ft. x 12-ft., one spacious living room 12-ft. x 18-ft., a kitchen 9-ft. x 12-ft., a bath room 9-ft. x 6-ft., and an attractive front porch 12-ft. x 6-ft. The house is well lighted, spacious, well ventilated and convenient. The construction is largely of North Carolina pine—"the Wood Universal," thoroughly kiln dried. Excellent flooring and ceiling. Walls built in panels of siding, lined with heavy builders' paper to insure warmth. Durable, fire-resisting, standard asphalt strip shingles with slate green or red finish. Artistic paneled inside finish. Excellent doors and sash. All necessary nails and hardware furnished. House comes with exterior walls stained any one of a number of standard colors or painted one heavy coat of priming paint. Exterior trim and inside finish painted with one heavy coat of priming paint.

WRITE TODAY

for further information and a copy of our attractive, illustrated book, "QUICKBILT Bungalows" No. A-9. It will explain all about No. 44 and many other attractive QUICKBILT Bungalows. It is FREE for the asking. Merely fill out the coupon below and mail it. Better still, if Bungalow No. 44 fills your needs, tell us the color desired and instruct us to ship immediately.

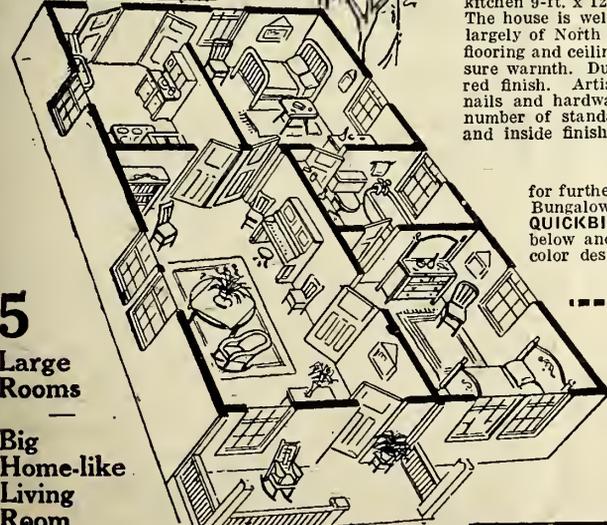

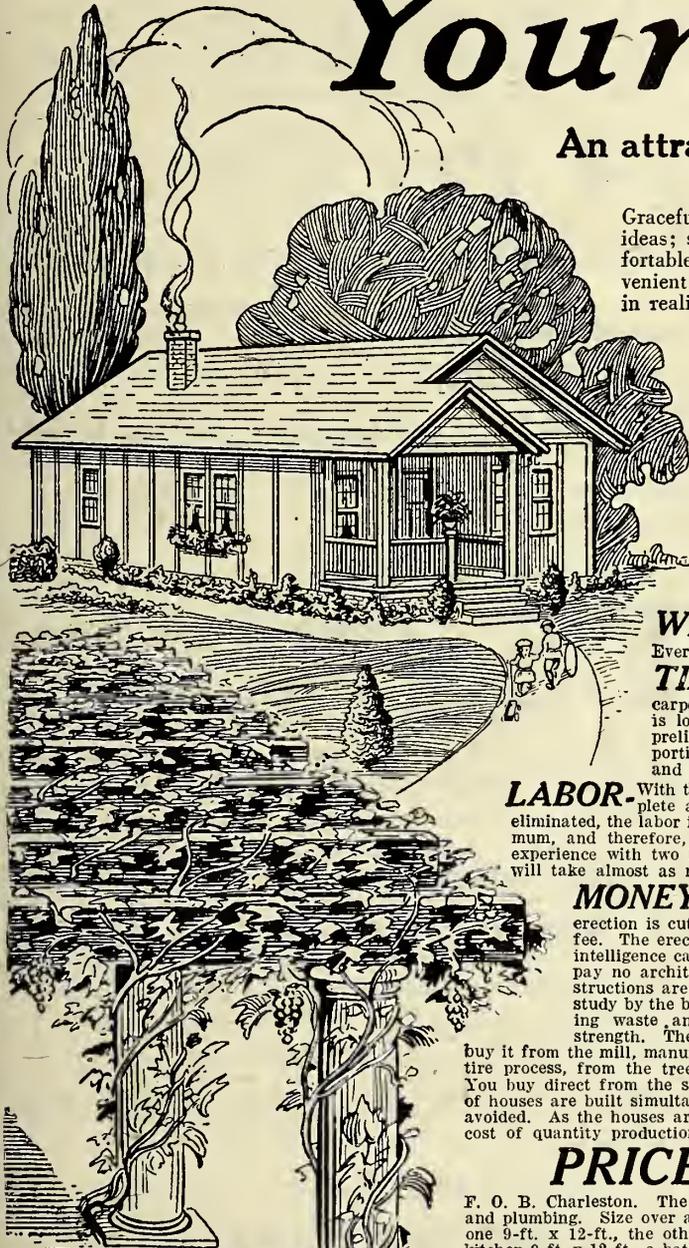

COUPON—CLIP HERE AND MAIL TO-DAY

QUICKBILT Bungalow Dept.,
A. C. Tuxbury Lumber Co., Charleston, S. C.

Please send me your book "QUICKBILT Bungalows" No. A-9. Am especially interested in a room house.

NAME

ADDRESS

5
Large Rooms

Big Home-like Living Room

Sparkles

AN ODE TO SARDINES.

I'm crazy for foods that are flavory,
 And partial to any old sweet,
 While victuals referred to as savory,
 Like chowder or cabbage or meat,
 Agree with me fine . . . ; this chop suey
 stuff,
 Spaghetti, or even a dish
 Of ice-cream, molasses, or gooey stuff
 Is splendid—but nix on the fish!

There's only one fish
 That's a regular dish—
 The equal of peppers and beans;
 And that is a plate
 Of litle (but great!)
 Delicious, nutritious sardines.

I hate more than Laura Jean Libby an Oyster or flounder or trout.
 Go, keep your confounded amphibian—
 I'll hurdle the cosmos without
 Your crabmeat or lobster or tunny fish,
 And other things yanked from the sea—
 The scaley and boney and funny fish—
 For none of the lot is for me.

There's only one fish
 That's a regular fish—
 The equal of peppers and beans,
 And that is a plate
 Of litle (but great!)
 Delicious, nutritious sardines.
 —Howard Dietz, in Judge.

Hawaiian servants are among the most faithful in the world, says a woman of experience whose story appears in Harper's Magazine, but they are strangely unsophisticated. They have an overwhelming desire to call you by your first name. Our man servant was always saying to my husband, "Yes, Frank," or "All right, Frank;" and to me, "To be sure, Mabel," and "I'm going out, Mabel." Finally it got on my nerves to such an extent that I discharged him, and when the new cook appeared I told my husband not to mention my first name in his presence; then perhaps he would call me Mrs. So Frank was always very careful and always addressed me as "deary" or "sweetheart;" but the new cook, a prudent fellow, gave me no title.

One night we gave a dinner to a large party of friends. I was telling them how I had successfully overcome, in my new cook's case, the native servant's abuse of their employers' Christian names. I could depend, at least, on this servant's not addressing me as "Mabel." At the moment the new cook entered the room, bowed to me respectfully and said:

"Sweetheart, dinner is served."

"What?" I stammered.

"Dinner is served, deary," he answered, with another bow.—Girls' World.

THE WESTMINSTER SCHOOL

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Operated by Kings Mountain Presbytery
$300.00 Per Year

Write for Catalogue to

Rev. T. E. P. Woods, Box 6, Rutherfordton, N. C.

4 Per Cent

Time Certificates of Deposit

They are Interest Bearing. They are Payable on Demand. They Afford a Good Income for Funds Awaiting Permanent Investment

GET ONE

AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY

Charlotte

::

North Carolina

YES, Preachers and Teachers Are Human

They should have no discount and no cheaper railroad fares than you and I. They should be paid for services rendered—amply paid. If he can't earn enough for family use and the nest egg for the future, he made a sad mistake as to family, else he should change his calling instanter.

The Mutual Building & Loan

Will save a man and his family if they're worth saving, but they must help. It furnishes the "sure cure," but boasts no regrets at the demise of a feller who deliberately refuses to take the medicine.

E. L. KEESLER, Sec. & Treas., 25 S. Tryon St., CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Charlotte National Bank Resources $4,000,000.00

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

PAYS FOUR PER CENT.

On Either Time Certificates of Deposit or Savings Accounts

MAIL ORDER Business Solicited and PROMPT ATTENTION Given

JOHN M. SCOTT	-	-	-	-	-	President
W. J. CHAMBERS	-	-	-	-	-	Vice-President
J. F. ROBERTSON	-	-	-	-	-	Vice-President
W. H. TWITTY	-	-	-	-	-	Cashier
C. W. BUTT	-	-	-	-	-	Assistant Cashier

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

REV. J. R. BRIDGES, D. D.

EDITORS

REV. R. C. REED, D. D.

VOL. LX.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., SEPTEMBER 3, 1919.

No. 35.

By and By.

What will it matter by and by
Whether my path below was bright,
Whether it wound through dark or light,
Under a gray or golden sky,
When I look back on it, by and by?

What will it matter by and by
Whether, unhelped, I toiled alone,
Dashing my foot against a stone,
Missing the charge of the angel nigh,
Bidding me think of the by and by?

What will it matter? Naught, if I
Only am sure the way I've trod,
Gloomy or gladdened, leads to God,
Questioning not the how, or why.
If I but reach him by and by.

What will I care for the unshared sigh,
If in my fear of lapse or fall,
Close I have clung to Christ through all,
Mindless how rough the road might lie,
Sure he will smooth it by and by.

What will it matter by and by?
Nothing but this: that joy or pain
Lifted me skyward—helped me to gain,
Whether through rack, or smile, or sigh,
Heaven, home, all in all by and by.

—Margaret J. Preston.

Editorial

Rome, Ga.

(Editorial Correspondence).

ROME is situated in that part of East Tennessee which extends down into Georgia. Consequently it enjoys in rich abundance an extension of those beautiful hills and mountains which have given East Tennessee the right to be called the "Switzerland of America."

The hills are made more attractive by the beautiful homes that cap their summits, and ornament their slopes. Some of these homes might be described as almost palatial—large brick buildings with lofty, colonial pillars supporting massive roofs with highly ornamental finish. In the midst of an elegant setting of smooth lawns and majestic trees, these homes might fittingly house the nabobs of wealth, or princes of the blood. Many other homes less pretentious, but not less suggestive of refinement and comfort, give Rome a high rank among the smaller cities of the South.

The public buildings do equal credit to the city. Both the High School and the Grammar School, situated on the most commanding sites, sweeping extensive views of the surrounding country, are built of brick, three stories high, impressive, in their proportions, and surmounted by lofty towers. The court house is a brick structure of like magnitude and very imposing in appearance. The city hall is a recent structure and suggests, by its more elaborate and ornate design, the growing prosperity of the city, and its increasing demands in the matter of taste. It contains an auditorium with seats for two thousand persons, the equal of which could hardly be found in any southern city of equal size.

The Carnegie Library is also worthy of mention. It is a gem of a little building, large enough, however, to answer its purpose for many years to come. As yet its shelves are not overladen with choice books, but the collection is growing. In the meanwhile, the tables are well supplied with the best current literature of the day.

Rome is not behind in its churches. All the leading denominations have strong organizations and their buildings are seemly—not so costly as to suggest ecclesiastical pride, nor so plain as to suggest undue parsimony.

The Presbyterians have an old-fashioned building, of conventional type, after all the most dignified and appropriate type. Connected with it is a somewhat modern Sunday School building, commodious and comfortable. The two together constitute a plant fully adequate to all the needs of a growing, active, aggressive church.

The Presbyterians are now mourning the loss of Dr. G. G. Sydnor, who for eighteen years ministered to them as pastor and preacher after such a whole-hearted and efficient manner as to win a place in their affections so tender and warm as to make his going a painful bereavement. They are finding much comfort in the fact that Dr. E. L. Leyburn, of Durham, N. C., will soon be with them, and it is confidently expected that he will prove a worthy successor. Dr. Leyburn can look forward to the privilege of working with a generous and appreciative people, with whom it has become a habit to love and follow the leadership of their pastor.

The Methodists and Baptists, as usual, are in the lead in point of numbers. And judging by a few samples the quality is not bad. They seem to differ little if any from Presbyterians except the labels. They relish the same kind of preaching, and it is possible they are Presbyterians and don't know it. This is the only rational way to account for so many Methodists and Baptists when they had the opportunity to be Presbyterians. They got the wrong label on them through a misapprehension. They thought they were getting the best, and missed it just by a shade.

One cannot stop in Rome long enough to brush the dust of travel off of him without hearing of the Berry School. This is one of the city's most prized assets. The school is some three or four miles from the city limits, and at this time spreads out over a considerable area of lawn and woodland. Only twenty years ago, it was limited to one small log cabin. That was the mustard seed out of which has grown a great tree. The reason for this growth is Miss Martha Berry. She has put into the school from that day of its small beginning to this day of its widespread prosperity an intelligent and unflagging enthusiasm and a remarkable talent for administrative detail. When she gathered a few neglected children into a Sunday school in the little log cabin, she had a vision of a possible future. That vision warmed her heart and took shape in a noble purpose. She would open doors of opportunity to hundreds and thousands of boys and girls whose lives were cramped, starved and confined by untoward circumstances. To the carrying out of this purpose she consecrated her rare gifts of head and heart. To her has been given in large measure the joy of seeing the achievement of her beneficent design. The log cabin has been superseded by a score or more of commodious houses, graceful in architecture, where approximately four hundred boys and girls find comfortable quarters, and in front of whom swing wide the doors that open out into varied spheres of intellectual enlargement. Shops for developing mechanical skill, extensive farming lands and several forms of domestic industry furnish the means of self-help. A more earnest and purposeful body of pupils could not be found. Miss Berry is increasingly realizing her splendid ideal.

The North Carolina Home.

In a recent issue Dr. Richards had an earnest appeal in behalf of this home which we wish to commend to those who have money that belongs to the Lord and who wish to know where it will do the most good. Several years ago, Mr. Williamson, of Darlington, S. C., the originator of the "Williamson Plan" for raising corn, seeing, in his visits to Montreat, the great benefits accruing to the tired preacher by reason of a rest in the charming climate and the spiritual value of the men who were cut off from the intellectual forces of the cities, conceived the idea of a home where they could obtain lodging free.

The home has been a great blessing to the pastors of that Synod. This year it has entertained, we hear, 50 men. Getting his meals at the cafeteria at nominal cost, many a preacher who otherwise would be buried at home, has been enabled to get the benefit of this strength giving climate and to enjoy the stimulating lectures. Substantially the same plan is proposed for this Synod. When we remember what small salaries many of our best workers are receiving, scarcely enough to keep the wolf from the door, we may imagine what a blessing it would be to them to come into touch with the spiritual and intellectual life of this mountain retreat.

Judging from the many articles in support of the tithe, those who practice tithing are numerous, and therefore the Lord must have some money awaiting a chance for investment. Place it here, and it will bring in a large dividend.

Bible Study at Montreat.

Many years ago Voltaire predicted that the time would come when the Bible would be almost an unknown book, and even in our own day Ingersoll also prophesied that it was fast dying out, and that the time would soon be when men would lose interest in Bible study. At that time Ingersoll's works were read by men in city and country, in cowboy camp and in the study of scholars.

Now we would have difficulty in finding a copy of his writings, while the works of Voltaire are read more in the study of the language than in attacking religion. The Old Book is still here, and wherever men preach it, their sermons attract, and whenever there arises a man who knows how to teach it, he never lacks an audience.

For many years we have been a Montreat visitor, and while we have failed to attend many of the conferences, we have never failed to attend the Bible hour. We have heard many expounders of the Book, and we have had a variety of methods of finding what is meant. Some have been rather perfunctory teachers and others have been bright and suggestive; but whether dry or stimulating, the audiences at the Bible hour have always been the best of the day meetings. The people have always been hungry for the Word and no matter how it was given to them, their desire never ceased. This year they have had in June and July noted teachers, but as we only heard the lectures in August, we can only speak of them.

Ordinarily the Bible hour is followed by some conference, and it is not exactly inspiring to those who take part in this conference, to see the scattering of the audience. This August, instead of one Bible hour, we had two—one conducted by Rev. Dr. A. T. Robertson, of the Baptist Seminary, Louisville, Ky., and the other by Dr. Campbell Morgan, of London, but at the present of New York. Of Dr. Robertson we have already written in a general way. We are, however, tempted to dwell more at length upon his exposition of the Sermon on the Mount in connection with the wonderful series of sermons by Dr. Morgan on Grace.

So great was the crowd to hear these two brethren that one-half hour before the time, the house would be nearly filled, and by the time the readings began, every seat would be occupied. There they would sit from 9:30 to 12:15 on seats that have been the equal in the minds of Montreat visitors to any instruments of torture devised by the Inquisition of Spain. Could there be any greater testimony to the drawing power of these brethren and to the unflinching attractiveness of fresh and original Bible exposition?

No two men could be more totally unlike. Dr. Robertson is a typical American, with an American sense of humor, rather broader than the average, open to criticism by the ultra fastidious and those whose bump of humor is an indentation in the head. He does not hesitate to use plain speech nor to indulge in fun, yet all the time he deals keen thrusts into the foibles of men and pulls from them their disguises.

Dr. Morgan, on the other hand, is a typical Englishman. His English training speaks in his accent, in his appearance, and in his manner of thinking. Beginning Monday evening and concluding Friday morning he preached twice each day to a packed auditorium. Such sermons have seldom been heard, not only here, but anywhere else. They were models of sermonic treatment, and those preachers who heard were almost disheartened in view of what they had been doing.

The editor has become reconciled to editing a Church paper rather than preaching to Church people, if he is to prepare sermons equal to those. We feel a deep sympathy for the preachers who had many of their congregation here, for they will have to meet a different standard of excellence. On the other hand, we congratulate the congregations whose preachers were here, for hereafter, even if they do not reach the standard, they will at least try to improve on what they have hitherto done.

Dr. Robertson's lectures were on the Sermon on the Mount as applied to modern life. It is always unjust to attempt to reproduce any sermon or lecture, because even if we could do so verbatim, we could never reproduce the manner, the tone and the atmosphere. We will, however, venture to give the titles of these lectures, as they may prove suggestive to some who were not here. He found in this sermon six heads, as follows:

1. The Beatitudes and manhood, or the might of right, 5:3-16. Here Christ challenges the world's standard of manhood.

2. Sinai and Christ, 5:17-48. Here Christ contrasts Himself with Moses and shows that He is superior to the Old Testament.

3. Perfunctory Piety, 6:1-18. Alms means righteousness, which is used in the sense of sanctification. The doing of this righteousness takes five forms, as follows: Doing righteousness on dress parade; helping the poor to the sound of a brass band; praying for popular praise; the model kind of praying; and fasting as a function.

4. Work and Worry, 6:19-34. Slaves of fashion and of the kitchen.

5. Carping Criticism, 7:1-12. (1) He does not mean that we must not form opinions, but that we must not be captious critics. (2) Get the stick out of your eye first. Here "brother" means a fellow critic. (3) Making the truth a diet for hogs and dogs, where under these figures mankind is meant. He refers to the cynical philosophy of that day, a philosophy called the philosophy of dogs. He means that we must not expose the gospel to ridicule. A case in point was the swine being sent into the sea when cast out of a man with the result that they asked Jesus to leave, thus preferring hogs to Christ. (4) Pointed Prayer, meaning prayer with a punch in it. He warns against praying according to fashion.

5. Knowing How to Give Gifts.

6. The Golden Way. (1) The broad way, meaning the wider going. Compare Ps. 1st: (2) Narrow gate, (3) acid test of life, which is to be the fruits of life. (4) The practice of preaching, or house on rock. (5) The peril of preaching, or house on the sand.

The effects of the sermon, "Not as the Scribes," Jesus no imitator, originality in preaching needed. This bare outline gives no conception of these lectures.

They opened up before the audience of preachers the possibility of a new kind of treatment of the Bible, which if rightly followed will do away with the cut and dried methods of many prayer meetings.

Dr. Morgan set a standard of sermonizing that will be the despair of many a preacher. If, however, it will make us realize that our past methods have been inadequate, it will not be in vain that we listened to him twice a day, one hour each time. His method is the expository in the best sense. He not only gathered up the context, but he brought out the delicate shades of meaning of the original, and then he dropped off all modifying clauses and presented the bare proposition which is in every text. Beyond comparison, he is the finest sermonizer of his day, and it was a rare privilege that we enjoyed of sitting for a week at the feet of such a Master. Dr. Lingle and his committee deserve extra thanks for the fine program given this season.

The season closed on the 24th of August but many still remain to enjoy the restful quiet of this spot, where the bracing air and sunlit days will build up the physical, and send back the wornout worker to his field ready for the winter's campaign.

Contributed

The Eldership and the Present Crisis

By D. McL. McDonald.

THE church stands today at the parting of the ways. She is faced with a world melted and made plastic by war and disease. This presents her opportunity. Her internal condition has been assailed by false teachers and leaders. This is her weakness and source of greatest danger. Men will not forsake the church. It is either the church or despair. The problem is whether the church will mould the living of the future or the living of the future mould the church. This presents two alternatives, one of which the church must choose.

First, a socialized church with humanity as its god. The current in that direction is strong. Enemies of the truth see in a socialized church their greatest opportunity to break the power of the church and render her impotent. A socialized church means a church spiritually dead. It will gather to itself vices far worse than any that cursed the medieval church.

Second. That of a strong spiritual church with Jesus as its Lord and King and His will as its purpose. Only as such can the church be the channel of salvation and comfort. There is no way of salvation except through Christ. There is no way for men to know of Christ except through a church obedient to His will and maintaining in their purity the truths of the word.

The church has not maintained her pristine purity and loyalty but has taken unto herself many of the ways of the world and become enamoured of the favor and flattery of men. She must cast away her impurities and return to her first-love if she would be His bride and accomplish His purpose.

There can be no return to a strong spiritual life in the church unless there be a strong spiritual leadership. It is not any new or different machinery in church government or administration that is needed. The present form of government is scriptural and ideal. The question of concern for the church now is her leadership and life.

Whence must come this spiritual leadership? The ministry should always be vigorous in spiritual leadership. Unfortunately it is not always such. Even if it were it would be inadequate. There must be a large leadership and one which comes from the pew. The scripture and consequently the Presbyterian Church has provided for such in the eldership. From the eldership the church has a right to expect her largest leadership.

God ordained the eldership that it might guard and keep pure the doctrine and worship of the church and foster in the church a vigorous obedience and consecration to the Master's will, and a consciousness of our union with Christ and dependence on His Spirit. For the accomplishment of this purpose, certain duties are set forth. Of these it may be well to note a few.

First: Example, 1 Pet. 5:1-3, "The elders therefore among you I exhort . . . , tend the flock of God which is among you . . . , making yourselves ensamples to the flock. I Tim. 4:12, "Be thou an ensample to them that believe, in word, in manner of life, in love, in faith, in purity." Titus 2:7, "In all things showing thyself an ensample of good works; in thy doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sound speech that cannot be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of us." The power of good example may be seen from (1), "They most clearly express to us the nature of our duties in their subjects and sensible effects. (2) Precepts instruct us in what things are our duty, but examples assure us that they are possible. (3) Examples, by secret and timely incentive urge us to imitation." "Man is notoriously an imitative creature." A godly example does more to demonstrate the power of the gospel, and to draw men to Christ than all the logic and precept in the world. How vitally necessary that the elders be examples to the flock!

Second: To guard the doctrine and morals. I Tim. 4:16, "Take heed to thyself and thy teaching, continue in these things; for in doing this thou shalt save both thyself and them that hear thee." Titus 2:1, "But speak thou the things which befit sound doctrine."

"Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." These words express a universal truth. A man's actions in every sphere are streams that have their source in his beliefs. That which is true of the natural is doubly true of the spiritual. The man who holds to sound doctrine in spiritual things finds in his life, not only obedience to the psychological law but the power of the Holy Spirit using his life to judge the world and to strengthen and propagate the truth. But more, "He that overcometh, I will make him a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go out thence no more: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, the new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and mine own new name."

Satan's purpose is not to destroy the church organization but to corrupt her doctrine. Satan can make the church his most effective agent if he can but fill her with corrupt doctrine. His plan is to corrupt "here a little and there a little"—"the little things that don't matter." The germ is microscopic but left unchecked it will destroy the giant. The need to guard against and combat false doctrine is imperative. To the elders God has committed the chief responsibility for guarding the doctrine. It is not only a responsibility but a privilege committed to them as stewards of the Most High God. That which is true of doctrine is likewise true of the morals.

Third: Ministration, 1 Pet. 5:1-2, "The elders therefore among you I exhort . . . , tend the flock of God." The church is a unity, a flock, a family, a body of interdependent members. The interests of each should be the concern of all. If there is sickness, or sorrow, or trouble, the church should minister to such as a brother in Christ. Jesus taught the great lesson of Christian brotherhood and ministration. If the church fails in this she is ungrateful and disobedient to the Master's will. That which is the duty of the church as a whole is especially the duty of the elders. It is an official duty for which the elder is directly responsible to God. When the elders fulfill their duty as ministering servants the church will follow their example. Then shall men again say, "Behold, how these Christians love one another."

Fourth: To maintain stated public worship. Public worship is a necessary part of Christian service. No people can maintain a healthy spiritual condition without it. God demands it. It is not necessary to discuss the reasons for this; they are evident to any one who gives the matter any thought.

The Book of Church Order provides that in case there is no pastor the elders shall assemble the people for worship, read the Scriptures, conduct prayer and praise, and if convenient read a sermon or exposition of Scripture from some reputable minister. If elders were faithful in this the churches would not only hold their own but maintain a healthy growth even without a pastor.

Fifth: To order collections for pious purposes. I Cor. 16:2, "Upon the first day of the week let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper." Systematic giving is an essential part of worship. It is the counter-part of prayer. It is necessary because it is an expression of our dependence on God; it is an expression of our gratitude to

(Continued on page 8)

When Will the Final Anti-Christ Appear?

By Rev. A. W. Pitzer, D.D.

The rise and growth of Anti-Christianity is in the Bible termed the "Mystery of Iniquity."

The Apostle Paul wrote his second letter to the Thessalonians to counteract the error taught by Hymaneus and Philetus that the day of the Lord was now present, and that the resurrection was past.

He tells them plainly that the day of the Lord had not come, and that Jesus would not return until the "man of sin was revealed."

Then he proceeds to describe this man of sin: he is the son of Perdition, the lawless one; the enemy of Christ, a man to whom Satan gives power and signs and lying wonders, a man in visible Christendom with the wisdom and power and malignity of the Devil; the God of this world. He has not yet appeared, but He will be revealed at the appointed time, when the mystery of iniquity has culminated in this "superman" who claims to be God Himself and demands Divine worship.

The Anti-Christian spirit is a spirit of "lawlessness;" the final Anti-Christ is the "lawless one."

The world has never been willing to obey the law of the one true and living God. At no time, in no part of the earth, has the human race ever submitted to the law of God. In fact, the natural man hates that law.

At the end of this age, this enmity of man culminates in an era of universal lawlessness; and the world is thus prepared for the coming of the lawless Anti-Christ.

This son of Perdition offers himself to the world as God, and claims for himself worship and obedience. Something, we know not what, has hindered the revelation of this lawless one up to this day; but when this hindrance is taken out of the way, then the final Anti-Christ will come.

Today, lawlessness is rampant in all the earth; and in many places in all lands, there is no law of God or of man to arrest the tide of crime that is sweeping over the globe.

Certainly the world is getting ready for the coming of the lawless one, to whom Satan will give power to deceive the nations with "signs and wonders."

It requires no prophet to tell us how easy it will be for this "man of sin" to dominate the whole world; for even now as I write, three men in Paris are almost masters and lords of many of the nations and peoples of the earth. A remarkable fact is stated in the Literary Digest, May 22, 1919:

"An omission in the League of Nations: Nowhere in the proceedings is there any official or public recognition of the existence of a Supreme Being who rules the Destinies of Nations."

The lawless unrest of the whole world is a preparation for the coming of the final Anti-Christ.

It is certain that Jesus Christ will return to this earth in like manner as He went up into Heaven; and it is equally certain that Anti-Christ will precede His return.

The conflict of the ages for the lordship of this world will then be ended, when these two, the Christ of God and the Anti-Christ meet on this earth for the final battle.

Anti-Christ, empowered of the Devil, will lead the godless nations, and the Lord Jesus, in His glorious Parousia, will consume this lawless one; and Satan, the god of this world, will be bound with a great chain and cast into the abyss.

But when will these things be? It is not for us to know the times and seasons; God has His own exact order, and all things will come to pass, according to His will. He has not revealed the time of the advent of this Anti-Christ; and hence all speculation as to the "when" is vain. We do know that the Spirit of Anti-Christ is in all the earth; and the "Mystery of Iniquity" will sooner or later be consummated in a personal head.

'A Teaching Ministry'

By Rev. H. M. Pressly.

I wish to say amen to your article in the Standard of August 6, "A Teaching Ministry."

In the early days of my ministry an old minister, formerly my pastor, said to me: "You will be surprised to find many people so ignorant of the Bible." I have often thought of his words, for, as you say, "It is a rare experience to find either boy or girl without knowledge of the fundamental facts of the Bible" and an equally "rare experience" to find men or women who really know the Word.

An intelligent woman says: "I had been a church member 20 years before I knew the Bible teaching in regard to salvation. When John 5:24 and Eph. 2:8-10 were read, explained and impressed by my pastor recently I saw for the first time we are 'saved by grace.'" Another, aged 40, said: "I have always believed that in the Judgment day, if the records show that we have done more good than evil, we will go into heaven, and if the balance is on the other side we will go to hell." This person had grown up in the church, had committed the Catechism, made a "credible profession," "joined the church," lived a life of anxiety and suspense, lest Satan would get him at last. Why this gross ignorance of God's Truth? Why this darkness and doubt? Some one will say, "Like priest, like people." "If our ministers would first study and know the Truth, then realize that they are commissioned to teach God's Truth, not only read, but as in Nehemiah 8:5: "They read distinctly and gave the sense and caused them to understand the reading," thus help people to know the Word.

My old pastor aforesaid also remarked, "I did not preach the Gospel when I was your pastor. I did not know it. I preached what I had been taught, i. e., what men have said about the Bible rather than the Word itself."

Many a pastor could make a similar confession honestly. The old minister had passed through the deep waters of affliction and trial, and in God's school had studied the Word, and in his latter days preached the Word with sincerity and power. Infidels and skeptics and false prophets secure disciples among those who "know not the Truth." Any one who will read Tom Paine, Ingersoll or Mrs. Eddy will see that their stronghold is to garble and misquote Scripture and then denounce and demolish their own mis-statements and claim to have overthrown the Bible. But those who know the Truth are not misled by them. Their converts are from the ranks of ignorance. We rejoice to know that there is a greater interest in Bible study than ever before. Summer schools, conferences, institutes, as well as colleges and seminaries are giving the English Bible a place in their programs and in some places the Sunday schools include the whole church membership as well as their children. This is as it should be and more and more we believe our preachers are falling in line with the old-time definition of preaching, viz., "Reading, expounding and applying the Word of God."

"Suffering and success are intimately related. If we succeed without suffering it is because some one suffered before. If we suffer and do not succeed, it is that some one later on may succeed."—Dr. Edward Judson.

If you would advance in true holiness, you must aim steadily at perfection in little things.—Abbe Guilloire.

An Interesting Old Church

By Rev. J. W. Goodman.

DURING a brief visit recently to his old home, the writer had the privilege of preparing some notes for this article while seated in the old arm chair and at the desk of Rev. Samuel E. McCorkle, D.D., the first regular pastor of Thyatira Church. The old desk and arm chair are now in the home of Mr. J. S. McCorkle, a great-great-grandson of Dr. McCorkle and one of the present session in the old church. The original bill for the desk (and bookcase which has been detached) along with a great many other papers, all in a fairly good state of preservation, were shown to the writer, also the secret drawer in back of desk, which none but the initiated could possibly find. The account which was made out by one James Gheen charged Dr. McCorkle for the desk and bookcase 15 pounds, 12 shillings and 6 pence and credited him with cash 3 pounds, hinges 4 shillings, plank 10 shillings, an old account one shilling, this bill to be his receipt when balance was paid. The bill bore date November 3, 1794.

But the writer is not getting where he started to, and that was to write of the number of ministers this old church has furnished to the church at large. From Foote's sketches we find that about 1785 Dr. McCorkle established a classical school at his house which was near the meeting house, about nine miles from Salisbury. The first class ever graduated from the State University consisted of seven members and six of these had been pupils of Dr. McCorkle. Forty-five of his pupils became ministers of the gospel in addition to many others who filled useful positions in every walk of life from the Governor of the State on down. Two of his own sons entered the ministry. No doubt the reason for so large a number of his students entering the ministry is to be found in the unique plan by which he instructed and governed his people, young and old, in Bible knowledge. This plan is fully set forth in Foote's sketches and could be very profitably imitated today. But what impresses the writer most is that although perhaps very few in that congregation know of the efforts of Dr. McCorkle to train a generation to know the scriptures the influence of that early training is still perceptible in that church. They still study the scriptures in that old church, and they go to Sunday school prepared to discuss with the teacher the lesson, and they have not failed either to teach the lesson to their children. There are very few churches anywhere better governed in the Bible and Rev. E. D. Brown, the pastor, will bear testimony to the fact that he has to be very careful about his theology and church government and sacraments and so on, if for no other reason, lest he be brought to task by some of his flock.

This desire of the people to have their children properly trained intellectually as well as religiously led them to cooperate most heartily with their pastor, Rev. J. Alston Ramsay, at a later day, when he endeavored along about 1884 to re-establish a classical school for Thyatira. The people under his wise leadership erected a building and employed Mr. Jno. F. Correll, a young man from Prospect church, to conduct the school, which he did successfully for several years. Mr. Correll is now dead but his name ought to be commemorated in some adequate way and if possible or practicable, it ought to be in a repairing and remodeling of the old building now badly in need of repairs and a revival of the school, as the indications are that there are numbers still there who would gladly avail themselves of the privileges enjoyed by their parents, and as my article is already getting too long, let me write briefly in conclusion of the large numbers of young men and women who are now serving the church at large and who are glad to acknowledge their debt of gratitude to the old church, and most of them to the school, now gone down, for what both meant to them. I doubt if there are many churches in the Southern Assembly that are wielding a larger influence for good than is good old Thyatira. Among her living ministers are Rev. Walter Lee Lingle, D.D., of Richmond, Va., one of the leading ministers in the whole church, and his brother, Rev. T. W. Lingle, Ph.D., of Davidson College, and another brother, Rev. Will Lingle, who has long been a missionary of the Northern Presbyterian Church in China, and a niece (Miss Myrtle McCubbins before marriage), also a missionary in China; Rev. J. W. Goodman, pastor of Antioch Presbyterian Church, near Red Springs, N. C.; Rev. J. G. Varner, of Denton, Texas; J. F. Menius, of Crestmont, N. C.; Rev. D. T. Caldwell (an adopted son), pastor of Immanuel Church, Wilmington, and Rev. Frank Baker, who goes soon as a missionary to Brazil. Two others, Ernest Clay and John Caldwell, are in preparation for the ministry. In addition to Miss McCubbins, mentioned above, the church is represented by Miss Ella Graham, who is one of our most effective missionaries among the women of Korea, and Miss Bessie Corriher, a successful missionary nurse in a hospital in China. If space would allow, several impressions could be recorded, but one at least must be noted, and that is that these old country churches are very strategic centers and should be cared for as such, for from these centers, if properly looked after, will go forth still ever widening streams of usefulness. Rev. E. D. Brown, a country raised boy, is the beloved pastor of this church and he, together with his good wife, are wielding an influence for good that will be felt far and near, as still others shall go forth to proclaim the mighty gospel, the only remedy for this world of unrest, sin and sorrow.

Red Springs, N. C.

Home Missions in Florida Presbytery.

By Rev. W. E. McIlwaine, D.D.

This Presbytery covers the whole of West Florida and embraces seventeen counties of the State. To evangelize this large territory there are only fifteen ministers, not one man to each county. Much of this territory is so thinly settled and so inaccessible that the Presbytery does not know its real condition, but with the generous help of the General Assembly's Committee of Home Missions we are doing some aggressive work. Last week the Presbytery met at Gretna and received Licentiate D. A. Miller from Bethel Presbytery, ordained and installed him pastor over an important group of churches with a salary of $1,200 and manse. Rev. D. A. Miller is a graduate of Erskine College and a recent graduate of Columbia Seminary.

At this same meeting of Presbytery we received as a candidate for the ministry Mr. J. S. Robinson, who is in our employ as Sabbath school field worker. Mr. Robinson will for the present study privately while exploring our large territory and organizing Sabbath schools. Both these men are gifts to us from York County, S. C., for so long a great stronghold of Presbyterianism.

Our most promising mission field is composed of three towns on St. Andrew's Bay, St. Andrews, Panama City and Millville. These towns are not more than three or four miles apart and have a combined population of 6,000 or 8,000. There is no church in Millville, where there are large lumber mills and a ship-building plant with several thousand operatives. The churches at St. Andrew's and Panama City have less than forty members each and last year the former paid $121 on pastor's salary and the latter $185. But after a canvas by our evangelist, Rev. F. D. Hunt, St. Andrew's subscribed $350 and Panama City $800, a gain of more than $800 in pastoral support. Rev. J. P. Word, of Texas, has just taken charge of these two churches and has received a most hearty welcome. These churches own their houses of worship and are entirely free from debt.

In my work, as chairman of the Committee of Home Missions, I greatly miss the grand old country churches of Mecklenburg county which greet you every five miles in any way you travel. We have in West Florida one noted old country church formed originally by a Scotch colony from North Carolina. Of this historic church I will write later on.

Come On! For New Victories From Old Ideals

Message of the President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D., LL. D., at the International Christian Endeavor Conference, Buffalo, N. Y., August 5, 1919.

IT is four years since Christian Endeavor last met in international conference and convention. We face a different world from the world of 1915. Scores of emperors, czars, kings, and princes have been deposed within the last eight and forty months. Autocracy has received a death-blow. A dozen new nations are knocking at the doors of civilization. The maps of Europe and Africa have been redrawn. The old geographies are as out of date as a last year's bird's nest or a nineteenth-century almanac.

America has taken more advance steps than in a hundred years before the war. The shining seas on either side of her are no longer barriers but highways. The isolation of the golden days is forever ended. The air has become as familiar to us as to the birds. Birds of prey were those born of the war; doves of peace, carrier-pigeons of good will, are ready for the better days to come. Prohibition has virtually become nation-wide. The Endeavor slogan of 1911 has been realized. Woman-suffrage is no longer an iridescent dream. Woman has come into her own. Man has found his political as well as his social helpmeet. A League of Nations offers hope to a warcursed world.

Truly a momentous quartette of years have been these last four!

The church of God has not stood still. Mightier programmes for the new era have been planned than any Christian dared propose four years ago. Dollars are asked today instead of pennies and dimes. Millions are demanded where thousands were once timidly pleaded for. The world calamity has opened the world's heart and pocketbook. Exclusive sectarianism is staggering to its fall. A league of churches as well as a league of nations is a future outcome of the war. The Federal Council and the Interchurch World Movement are as inevitable as was an international army. A united church under the one Captain of our salvation has been proved essential to victory. The vast denominational plans and "drives" summon the different divisions of the one army to go "over the top."

What about Christian Endeavor? Hundreds of thousands of our members in all lands heeded their country's call. Thousands of them lie unforgotten in foreign graves. Our societies and unions were for a time stripped of their leaders.

But Christian Endeavor was not vanquished. It is stronger than it was four years ago. New plans, with God's blessing, have resulted in new victories. New leaders have come to the front. Our veterans, the Alumni, are no longer on the shelf of retirement. They will henceforth occupy the front seats of honor. They will give us not only counsel and moral support, but the sinews of war as well, for new Christian Endeavor victories.

What is true of American Endeavorers is true of most other countries. Great Britain has made notable advance in Christian Endeavor ideals and outreach. Continental Endeavorers have not been overwhelmed by war's horror. Australia and New Zealand Endeavorers, amid the greatest difficulties, have held their own. South America and Mexico have distinctly gone forward. China, Japan, and India have kept up their winning pace. Together they number their Societies by thousands. Their members in these three non-Christian lands approach the 100,000 mark.

Here is a phenomenon to account for. The world has marvellously changed within four years past. Its politics, its statecraft, its governments, its methods of offence and defence, its ideals, are not what they were, thank God! some of them are different!

But the church of God and its young auxiliary army have not changed their principals or purpose.

"Oh, where are kings and empires now,
Of old that went and came?"

But, Lord, Thy church is praying yet,
A thousand years the same.

"For not like kingdoms of this world,
Thy holy church, O God,
Though earthquake shocks are threatening her,
And tempests are abroad;

"Unshaken as eternal hills,
Immovable she stands;
A mountain that shall fill the earth,
A house not made with hands."

What is the reason for this stability amidst the awful havoc of these four years? It is this: The foundation principals of the church were laid by and in Him who is "the same yesterday and today and forever." Nations may welter in blood; politicians may scheme and fume and fail; the inventions of yesterday may be thrown on the scrap-heap today. Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure. Our Lord's summary of the Ten Commandments—love to God and our fellow men—changes not.

To train young people to keep this commandment is the task of Christian Endeavor. Our pledge is this commandment in action, "I will strive to do whatever He would like to have me do."

Think for a moment what are the world's great present problems, problems born of the war. Are they not these?

1. To find efficient, unselfish leaders for the world's business and statecraft.
2. To find work for the unemployed.
3. To unite the nations in lasting fellowship and peace.

Our tasks, too, are to raise and train competent leaders, to find and assign to every one tasks worthy of a Christian, to unite all in a fellowship of service; these are the great tasks of the church, and the tasks which Christian Endeavor is especially called to assume in these years of readjustment. Consider them one by one.

First, our task is to raise up and train new leaders for the church of God. To this duty Christian Endeavor has addressed itself for eight and thirty years; to it we will devote ourselves more earnestly in the years to come. "Show us your man," said Phillips Brooks in his great sermon in Westminster Abbey. "Show us your men, strong men, and women too, leaders of men and women," cries the church today.

Christian Endeavor is not ashamed of her product. It has been and is a school for leaders. We will, with God's help, increase the output. Let us face the facts. Thousands of churches are dying for lack of leadership. Their membership is depleted to the lowest point. Not one new member is added in half a decade. The old gibe has some truth in it: "At Pentecost one sermon converted three thousand. Now it takes three thousand sermons to convert one." "Thou hast a name to live (a name written in the denominational year-book), but art dead," is the verdict of the Spirit on other churches than Sardis. "Oh, for lay leaders, loyal and courageous," is the unspoken cry of such churches.

But, brethren of the ministry and laity, this call is not met by any patent or any wholesale method. We may call out, as many do, for leaders; but echo answers, "Where?" How is this call to be answered? Not by giving easy tasks, or no task at all, to our members. It is not answered by simply opening the door of our young people's society so wide that worldliness, indifference, and carelessness can enter the active membership. The door to leadership is not unlocked by the key of a dance-hall, a theatre, or even by a doughnut and a cup of coffee. The key to leadership is called "obligation, voluntarily assumed," in other words, a pledge to do "whatever He would like to have me do." He who adopts this covenant honestly, and lives up to it, and is endowed with ordinary tact and common sense, always becomes a leader.

(Continued on page 9)

Hampden-Sidney College and the Synod of Virginia

By Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D.D.

ONE of the most interesting events in the educational field of our Church occurred at the meeting of the board of trustees of Hampden-Sidney College in June, 1918, when a recommendation looking to closer relations between this old college and the Synod of Virginia was adopted. The Synod, at its meeting in Harrisonburg, December 3-6, 1918, by a unanimous and enthusiastic vote, accepted the proposal made that the college be transferred to a board of trustees directly elected by the Synod of Virginia. The necessary changes in the charter were authorized by the State Corporation Commission, February 14, 1919.

While some colleges are endeavoring to become more independent of the churches that gave them birth, and others are somewhat apologetic concerning their ecclesiastical relationships, it is a matter of great rejoicing to every Presbyterian in the South that Hampden-Sidney, the oldest of our church colleges, has taken this step.

The more one studies the educational situation the more he is firmly convinced that the church is the only body that can safely guarantee the Christian character of any school or college. In this connection it is interesting to note the movements that are on foot in all of the evangelical churches to tie up their institutions more closely to the church and to more fully equip and endow them.

Another forward step was taken by Hampden-Sidney when on December 19, 1918, Joseph D. Eggleston, LL.D., president of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, was unanimously elected to the presidency of the college. On the third of January, 1919, Dr. Eggleston gave out a statement signifying his acceptance in these words: "I have been drafted into the service of Hampden-Sidney College by its board of trustees, and will not plead exemption."

Dr. Eggleston is a native of Prince Edward county, his early home being almost under the shadow of the college itself. His father, Dr. Joseph D. Eggleston, a beloved Christian physician, was known throughout that entire region.

The new president graduated from Hampden-Sidney in 1866 with the A. B. degree. He began his career as a school teacher. He was soon made superintendent of schools for Prince Edward county, where his ability as an organizer and progressive leader was soon demonstrated. He was later in educational work in Missouri and then at Asheville, N. C. In 1905 he was made superintendent of public instruction for the State of Virginia and for seven years thereafter the history of the public school system in Virginia with its remarkable development is the history of Dr. Eggleston's career. In 1913 he was elected president of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, at Blacksburg. A hard task awaited him there but with a firm hand and with his characteristic energy and enthusiasm he set eagerly to work. In no respects did he disappoint the expectations of his friends and the hopes of the public at large. The six years of the V. P. I., under the leadership of President Eggleston, have been years of quiet progress and substantial growth.

Dr. Eggleston has been known in the Presbyterian church recently for the remarkable addresses he has made on Christian Stewardship. No messages in any of the conferences and conventions have left a more profound impression, or have awakened more men to assume the right attitude toward money.

Hampden-Sidney College has had a long and useful career, having been established in 1776. Under the leadership of such a man as President Eggleston we believe its best days are ahead.

Texas-Mexican Mission Notes.

By R. D. Campbell.

The last quarterly reports from the various workers of the Texas-Mexican Presbytery show the following points of interest: Number of sermons preached, 233; number of visits to outside places, 160; number of pastoral visits, 519; members received on examination, 48; received by letter, 22; infants baptized, 24; total contributions (incomplete), $91.

A carefully planned evangelistic campaign for all the fields to extend over several months was partially carried out during the first quarter. The numerical results were encouraging, but the general spirit of revival was best of all.

The annual Mexican camp meeting at San Marcos is always looked forward to by the workers as a period of fellowship, instruction and refreshment for their part, as well as of intense evangelistic effort and ingathering of members. The meeting held this year from August 2 to 10 was no exception. All the ministers of the Presbytery, with one exception, were present; also our licentiate, who is in charge of the Sunday School Extension Work and one of the candidates for the ministry.

We had the pleasure of receiving Rev. I. P. Balderas into the Presbytery and assigning him a field which means an extension of our work.

The expenses of the meeting were unusually great, being $250. Up to the last Sunday there was still a deficit of $58.18 which was causing considerable concern. So at the Sunday school hour the superintendent proposed that $40 of the amount be raised, nothing approaching this amount ever having been thought of for the Sunday school. The collection, however, amounted to $62.67. The pastor then announced that as everything was paid, there would be no more collections. But while he was detained from the afternoon service, by a prearranged plan, it was proposed that his people show their appreciation of his services by making up a little purse to help with his vacation expenses. Much to the surprise of the most optimistic, $34.14 was contributed, and this with the greatest promptness and cheerfulness.

By September 1 one of our licensed preachers who has been in Mexico for nearly two years is to locate in Bay City from where he is to extend the field to a number of new points. His employment has been made possible by a liberal appropriation from Brazos Presbytery, within whose bounds he will work.

Two of the Mexican brethren, Messrs. Acevedo and Trevino, have just made their first visit to the Kerrville encampment. They made a good impression both in their social conversation and through their public talks on Mexican evangelization.

The Eldership and the Present Crisis.

(Continued from Page 4)

God for His blessings; it signifies our surrender to God; it is returning to God the interest on the principle He has loaned to us; it is the means by which God has seen fit to support and extend His work in the world. If there is no giving there will be no receiving. In proportion as a people empty themselves in God's service will God fill them with His blessings. As God's official ministers it is the duty of the elders to encourage the spirit of giving liberally and regularly among the people.

God grant that our elders may see the glorious opportunities and grave dangers that lie ahead of us and rise to the full measure of the high office to which God has called them. Then shall return the glad day that the early church saw when it was filled with the spirit and power of God; when there was the strongest brotherly love and unity and thousands were being saved daily. "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me, and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him and will manifest myself unto him."

Come On! For New Victories From Old Ideals.

(Continued from page 7)

I could call a long roll of the most eminent lay leaders of the day, and a list of thousands of ministers and missionaries, who will tell you that their first essay in Christian leadership was when they signed the Endeavor pledge. O pastors, show your young people how simple, yet how vital, how reasonable and how necessary, is such a pledge of loyalty and service. Keep them up to it, and you will have no lack of successors in the pulpit and of active supporters in the pews.

Secondly, unemployment is the curse of the church today, as it is of the industrial world. "Give us a job!" is the cry of idle millions. "Give us a task" is the unuttered, perhaps unconscious, demand of more millions in our churches. These millions are to be trained for service only by serving, for leadership only by leading. We hear many glittering generalities in these days about the eagerness of young people in the churches for a big job. "Give them a man's job, and men will be found to do it," it is often said.

But these same people who so insistently utter this cry never point out the man's job, but sometimes content themselves by declaring that Christian Endeavor does not offer one to its members. I beg leave to differ. Christian Endeavor is and always has been an employment bureau for the church as well as a school for leaders. The big job always begins with the little job, faithfully, cheerfully, loyally, persistently performed.

Some people do not know a man's job when they see it. The young person who stands up for Jesus in the prayer meeting is doing a man's job. It is of the very same nature as that of the boys who stood up for their country and her flag at Chateau-Thierry and Soissons, and at first it takes no less courage. To serve faithfully on the lookout committee or any other; to win a companion to Christ; to show him how to serve; to help a little Junior through the wicket gate; to guard a high-school boy through the perils of adolescence—all these are men's jobs or women's jobs, for these two are but one. God hath joined them together in our society; let no man put them asunder by substituting classes of one sex for a united young people's society.

We rightly resent the implication that Christian Endeavor offers no worthy Christian tasks to young people. Yea, like Esaias the prophet, we would "be very bold and say" that it offers them the noblest, highest, hardest tasks.

To summarize—in the following ways our societies meet the peculiar demand of the church in the new era for leadership, for employment, and also for fellowship.

Our pledge summons young people to Christian leadership.

Our prayer meetings and our many committees train them for leadership by giving to every one his man's or woman's job.

And, thirdly, our union work—local, county-wide, State-wide, nation-wide, world-wide—gives the largest field and most abundant scope for fellowship, while maintaining our supreme loyalty to our own churches. "For Christ and comradeship over land and sea" was the noble motto of a British convention. It is one of Christian Endeavor's perpetual slogans.

That is what our societies are doing with ever greater success. They have already united young people of a hundred denominations in every land beneath the sun. The tie that binds is called a Christian Endeavor union, local, State, national, international. "Christ and comradeship" is the inner meaning of every Endeavor union from the Golden Gate to the Golden Horn and from the Golden Horn around to the Golden Gate again.

A conservative estimate of the union meeting tells us that many millions of young people during the past four years, while the nations have been rent apart and the earth has been dyed red in fratricidal blood, have tasted the joys, the inspiration, and the uplift of Christian fellowship. These millions of voices have joined in the triumphant marching-song of Christian unity,

"Like a mighty army
Moves the church of God.

We are not divided,
All one body we,
One in hope and doctrine,
One in charity."

If then Leadership, Employment for all, and Fellowship among all, are the great ends to which we should address ourselves, what should be our goals and the road to them during the next two years? We have fought many bloodless campaigns in the past, campaigns inaugurated at such conventions as this; campaigns for increase, for efficiency, for millions. We thank God for them. All have succeeded. All the experiences of the past give us courage for the future, as we seek in the name of the Master and for His sake for more societies, better societies.

We will challenge one another in this convention for these results, and thus provoke to love and good works. Two years from now we will celebrate the fortieth anniversary of Christian Endeavor. Thus far the Lord has led us on. That we may have during these two years simple, definite goals, by attaining which we may show our gratitude for the two-score years of divine favor, I suggest for your consideration these five:

1. A fifty-per-cent net gain in the membership of every society within two years.
2. A Christian Endeavor Society in every available church in every State, or, if not, we will know the reason why. . .
3. A definite goal in every State for denominational missionary gifts, especially in connection with the proposed denominational "drives" and inter-church movement.
4. A field-secretary for at least part time in every State and Province.
5. A Sustaining Alumni Association in every union.

Vigorous efforts to attain these goals will develop the leaders, will furnish the tasks, will promote the loyalty and the larger fellowship for which I plead.

To establish more firmly these essential, fundamental principles, I suggest that in every society and union we each year have one or more meetings or convention sessions devoted to the explanation, enforcement, and illustration of our pledge and our plans for religious activity and personal training for service and leadership.

A well-known missionary leader closed a ringing challenge to evangelize the world with two words, "Come on!" I too will adopt them. Come on for a great campaign of loyalty, loyalty to our churches and to these principles of Christian Endeavor; obligation, which is the heart of the pledge; unabashed, outspoken devotion, which is the heart of the prayer meeting; systematic service, which is the heart of our committees; united service, which is the heart of our unions.

For pledged service, come on; for outspoken service, come on; for systematic service, come on; for united service, come on. Thus will leaders be raised up, great tasks be found and undertaken, our Lord's last prayer fulfilled. Then come on.

For our motto and our slogan can we have a better than the familiar words of our pledge, "Whatever He would like to have me do?" "Whatever," a tremendous word! "Whatever," in speaking, doing, being, living, giving. "Whatever," O Endeavorers; realize its breadth and length and depth and height. "Whatever," in church, in Sunday school, and in Christian Endeavor. "Whatever," in home, in community, in country. "Whatever," in business and politics.

Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I will strive to do whatever He would like to have me do. This is our great, our blessed, our joyous task. I summon you to undertake it. Come on!

News of the Week

Senator Lodge, of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, offered an amendment to the peace treaty whereby the German rights in Shantung Province of China would go to China instead of Japan: The Democrats voted against it, but did not debate it, preferring to fight the amendment in open Senate.

In the mayoralty contest in Charleston, S. C., John R. Grace was given the seat over Tristram T. Hyde by a majority of 14 votes.

In the American attempt to rescue the two aviators, held for ransom by Mexican bandits, Beneleim, the leader, was killed by a shot from an American airplane. The United States troops have since been withdrawn from Mexico.

In the first outdoor international small bore rifle match ever held, the representatives of United States defeated those from England.

Secretary of War Baker upholds the present system of courts martial except in minor details.

Representative Byrnes, of South Carolina, urges stricter laws regulating the admission of printed matter to the mails. He declares that certain papers are encouraging an outbreak against the whites of the South.

In a riot resulting from the street car strike in Charlotte, N. C., three men were killed and six wounded last Monday, August 25. Troops from Statesville, Lincolnton, Winston-Salem and Hickory were sent for and helped to preserve order the next day. The police fired upon the mob.

The President of the Northern Pacific, testifying before the House Committee, declared that a 25 per cent increase in rates must follow the Government's release of the railroads.

The President has issued two statements on the wage increase question, one to the public and one to the railroad men. A postponement of settlement of wage demands has been postponed till normal economic conditions are restored.

The shortage of car and labor threatens to hinder coal production and thus cause another coal famine.

The Senate by an amendment to the Peace Treaty has ruled out provisions for American representation on a score of international commissions to carry out details of the peace settlement.

The President is expected soon to start his speaking tour of the West in the interests of the League of Nations.

The War Department is about to start a system through which household commodities and clothing will be available to consumers in fourteen zone supply centers.

According to a minority report of the Committee on Military law of the American Bar Association, the execution by the Germans of the English nurse, Edith Cavell, was in accordance with the laws of "civilized warfare."

According to provisions of the bill introduced by Chairman Kahn, of the Military Affairs Committee, the sum of $45,000 will be expended at Camp Bragg.

Senator Walsh, the Democratic colleague of Senator Lodge, spoke in Laurinburg to thousands. He declared for the Peace Treaty.

Attorney General Palmer predicts that the enactment of the amendment to the food control law will halt profiteering, and that high prices will soon begin to tumble.

Director General Hines has notified the railroad strikers in California, Arizona and Nevada that the railroad admin-

(Continued on page 11)

Home Circle

WHY MARY LOVES TO SEW.

Mrs. D. was always lamenting that her two daughters hated to sew, and she was always holding up to them the fact that a small neighbor near their age did most beautiful work. Mary T. had taken the prize at the county fair for her doll's dress, and also for a quilt made entirely by herself before she was ten years old. Mrs. D. belonged to the same club that Mary's mother belonged to, and when the mothers of the neighborhood met once in four weeks in social and literary session, they always took their needle work with them. As soon as the district school was dismissed the children stopped for their mothers and shared in the light refreshments served by the hostess, so that poor Mrs. D. was always wishing she could show the fine work done by her little girls at the club along with that of the other little girls whose proud mothers were members of the little organization, and who delighted to have their daughters' work praised.

"I can't understand it at all," lamented Mrs. D. to her sister who was a club guest one spring afternoon. "I make Ruth and Elsie sew every day at their quilt blocks, and they never will learn to like it. Did you see the beautiful work Mary T.'s mother showed this afternoon. I more than half believe she does most of it herself in order to boast, yet I've seen Mary do beautiful work right in the club in vacation time. She loves to sew, while my girls despise the very sight of a needle."

Whereupon the sister replied that if it would not offend Mrs. D. she could explain why Mary liked to sew. She was bidden to go ahead, regardless of feelings, and in less than two minutes the mystery was cleared up. "Mrs. T. started Mary on pretty things, and keeps her on them," said the sister. "Did you notice that dear little work bag she had this afternoon with her wee thimble and scissors and thread in it? That bag was made from the ends of a four-in-hand necktie that had seen its best days, yet it was a beautiful little receptacle for the tiny, dainty piece of work the child was making. All the things that Mrs. D. showed were bright, attractive and dainty, yet useful, and it is no wonder she was proud of them."

"I never thought of that," said Mrs. D. slowly. "I wonder if we couldn't do something like that for Ruth and Elsie."

Nothing was said to the little girls on the subject, but the mother shed tears as she looked over the sewing outfit and materials with which she had expected her little girls to turn out good work and learn to like sewing. Each one had a shoe box with bunches of drab and brown quilt blocks stuffed into them, no scissors, as they had to run to their mother whenever they wanted to borrow hers, big coarse needles and No. 12 thread, and thimbles so big that they had to wrap a bit of rag around the small finger before they could keep them on at all. Yet that mother had been scolding and coaxing and lamenting because they did not learn to sew and love the work.

But at the next meeting when the little girls came in from school Mrs. D. held up two gay little bags to her girls, and called them to come and begin sewing with her. The children were bright enough not to comment publicly about the gifts, but as they hunted about in the depths of the bright little bags and found tiny scissors, thimbles and needle books, they could hardly keep still. Then each took out a bit of gay silk patch work and went awkwardly to the task, but there was interest and something better than interest in their faces, as they strove to put in tiny even stitches.

"I know now why Mary loves to sew," said Mrs. D., bending to hide her tears, "and I feel quite sure that my little girls will be capable of taking prizes at the county fair with their work very soon. How short-sighted I was, but how glad I am that sister set me right."—Hilda Richmond.

Christian Endeavor

By Rev. S. H. Hay.

M., Sept. 8—The Great Condition: John 15:10-17.
 T., Sept. 9—How Enoch Walked: Heb. 11:5-6.
 W., Sept. 10—Walk in the Light: 1 John 1:1-10.
 T., Sept. 11—Secret Companionship: Rev. 3:20-22.
 F., Sept. 12—Seeking Him Unitedly: Matt. 18:19-20.
 S., Sept. 13—Jesus in the Midst: John 20:19-29.

* * *

Topic for Sunday, Sept. 14—The Great Companion:
 How to Live With Him.—Luke 24:13-32.

* * *

If we want Christ, the great Companion, to live with us, we must be concerned about His Kingdom. His Kingdom of love and relief for man is what He lives for and what He died for. No one who is forgetful of this Kingdom can ever be congenial company for Him. The disciples on the way to Emmaus were thinking, talking, and grieving about the Kingdom when He appeared and companied with them. Perhaps He would not have joined them if they had not been. He is always ready for fellowship with those that have a loving concern for His Kingdom.

* * *

To have the fellowship of the great Companion, we must keep His commandments. There is no way around this. Jesus in His companionship is never on equality with us. We are little children, and He is our great Saviour and Lord. He has commandments for us which are right and necessary to our welfare. When we break them we instantly disrupt the bond of fellowship. He loves us still, but there can be no further companionship until we leave the evil and begin again to do the right thing. John says, If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in His love.

* * *

To enjoy the company of Jesus we must keep His special religious ordinances. In our Bible lesson the disciples did not recognize Jesus as He walked along with them; but when He began to break bread and bless it the scene of the communion supper was brought to their memory, and at once they knew Him. The very suggestion of the ordinance of the Lord's supper aided them to realize His presence. So for us also such ordinances as the Lord's supper, family prayer, personal prayer, and other devotions are, if we do not neglect them, aids to fellowship with the invisible Jesus.

* * *

To company with Jesus we must walk in the light. If we say we have fellowship with Him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth. God is light, yes, Jesus is light, and there is no darkness in Him at all. The instant we enter the darkness of sin Jesus turns back and walks no more with us until we are ready to come again into the light. Many sacrifice the sweet fellowship of Jesus by insisting on retaining the things of darkness in their lives.

* * *

Faith is the great fundamental requisite for fellowship with Jesus. The Epistle to the Hebrews tells us that Enoch's faith enabled him to walk with God. And our faith enables us to walk with Jesus. The disciples on the road to Emmaus that day had Jesus with them, but through lack of faith they did not know Him. Often we also have Jesus with us but see Him not, because our faith is poor. Let us pray always for more faith.

* * *

Name some of the benefits that follow for us from walking with Jesus.

Suppose we feel no need of the companionship of Jesus—what does that prove about ourselves?

Name some experiences of life in which we specially need the companionship of Jesus.

The Prayer Meeting

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING SEPT. 7, 1919:
 "THE WORLD WIDE MACEDONIAN CALL."—
 Acts 16:9-15.

If Paul had been a different kind of man perhaps he would not have seen this "Man of Macedonia." Certainly if he had been of a different stamp the Macedonian cry for help would not have eventuated as it really did. That there is a world-wide Macedonian call is incontrovertible; but how shamefully few hear the call? In the New York Times this headline: "Men shun work, and women smoke, and all are on a spending debauch." In the United States Senate are men who in their desire to destroy President Wilson and to advance their own presidential ambitions, are deliberately sacrificing the hopeful labors of the first statesmen of the world to erect a banner to war and a safeguard of universal peace.

Men and women in the less conspicuous walks of life are thinking only of pleasure and fashion and money. Selfishness reigns. Disorder is almost universal. Where are those who should hear the universal Macedonian call? Is Isaiah's remnant still the hope of the world?

There is a remnant who hears and is obedient to the vision. And such a vision! The Macedonian today hails from Armenia, from the Balkan States, from China, from India—he is an universal man. The church that is like Paul true to her Lord—that church is the hope of the world. It is Jesus that needs to be obeyed, to be understood and obeyed in the capitals of the world. Statesmen should sit at his feet and learn of him. It is Jesus that the trades unions should know and they should be obedient to his teachings and spirit. It is Jesus that the church should understand, with whose aims and love she should sympathize; istration will undertake to restore full railroad service on August 30, and that all striking employes who do not return to work will find their places filled, and that any interference will be dealt with as an offence against the United States Government.

(Continued on page 12)

News of the Week.

(Continued from 10)

The American Cotton Association places the cotton crop as estimated for August at 58.2 per cent.

The steel workers have laid down the ultimatum that unless Mr. Gary, of the United States Steel Corporation, granted them an interview, they would strike.

The Executive Council of the Railway Shop Crafts have intimated that unless the Government succeeds in cutting down the cost of living in 90 days, there will be a strike of their craftsmen.

Senator Knox in his last speech demands the rejection of the Peace Treaty. He fears foreign entanglements.

President Wilson in his proposed speaking tour will be followed by Republican speakers.

Bryan is opposed to private ownership of railroads. He has a plan for State Federal rail control.

Senator Fletcher, of Florida, was injured by a street car in Washington, but is reported better.

The steel men have asked President Wilson to intervene in their dispute with the steel corporation as to wages.

The nomination of A. Mitchell Palmer as attorney general of United States has been confirmed.

Sunday School

By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

Golden Text—Matt. 6-33, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness."

Matt. 13:31-33; 44-50.

Sept. 7, 1919.

God may be said to have three Kingdoms, and a person may be in one and not in another. He has the Kingdom of Nature, embracing the universe and all beings and objects that He has made. All are in this Kingdom, and can not get out of it, yet some are hostile and rebels. But still Jehovah rules in heaven, earth and hell. The Lord has a Kingdom of Grace, including all unfallen beings and all regenerated human beings, and all sincere believers in Jesus Christ who are seeking holiness, but are conscious of defects. He also has a Kingdom of Glory, where dwells Jesus Christ and holy angels and the redeemed saints of humanity, who have been made perfect and have departed from earth. The Kingdom which we are urged to enter is that of Grace by accepting Gospel offers and obligations and Jesus as our Saviour. The visible church on earth, embracing all who profess to submit to Christ's authority, is usually regarded as His earthly Kingdom. But all nominal Christian nations are not real disciples of Jesus, nor are all who have professed Christianity and are within the pale of the church truly obedient to Christ's commands. In the lesson studied we have in parables different phases of the visible church of Christ's Kingdom on earth presented.

I. The Growth of the Kingdom.

The parable of the mustard seed describes this. It is the least of all seeds but grows to be a large tree in which the birds of the air lodge. Christ's Earthly Kingdom was very small in the beginning. It had 120 members in Jerusalem before Pentecost and scarcely more than 500 in all Palestine at the time of Christ's resurrection. During the first century after Christ's ascension to heaven, by the labors of the apostles and their helpers with the power of the Holy Ghost, it spread into every province of the Roman Empire and numbered thousands among Jews and Gentiles. The parable affirms that when "the mustard seed grew to be a great tree the birds of the air came and lodged in the branches thereof." Regarding the "birds of the air" as picturing elevated nationalities, or most useful institutions, this was strikingly true. When Christianity became strong, the most enlightened nations of the Roman realm united with it and the best institutions known to mankind still find protection under its shadows.

II. The Corruption of the Kingdom.

This is indicated by the parable of "The leaven hidden in three measures of meal." This is done by a woman, and a woman is employed in other Scriptures as in the parable of "the lost coin" and in the book of Revelations to represent the Church. Only three grand divisions of the world were known to the ancients and these may be pictured by the three measures of meal. To every one of these divisions was Christianity carried, and in all of them was moral corruption developed. Leaven in the Scriptures is always a symbol of decay and corruption. The bread offered to God was unleavened bread. Our Saviour warns His disciples "to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees," by which He meant their false doctrines and practices. The apostle urges believers "To keep the feast not with the leaven of malice or wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." Leaven acts slowly and quietly in imparting its properties to the meal in contact with it, and so does false doctrine and evil practices when introduced by Church rulers into the Church. During the apostolic age and afterwards till the time of Constantine about 325 A. D. the ungodly world antagonized and persecuted the Church. After that time the world entered into alliance with it, officers were put into authority in the Church that had no piety and these employed false teachings and usages that caused moral corruption. The Church in pious knowledge and spiritual power decayed. In the middle or dark ages the Bible was almost an unknown book even to the priesthood and true Christianity had little influence with the masses. To such an extent did corruption extend that in the sixteenth century the magnates of the hierarchy actually issued licenses to commit sin for money. This precipitated the reformation of that century under Martin Luther and others.

III. The Preciousness of the Kingdom.

This is presented by the parables of "The Hid Treasure" and "The Pearl of Price." In oriental lands treasure was often buried in a field for security. Gold, silver or jewels might be thus buried. One finding it without seeking would deem himself fortunate and joyfully sell all that he had and buy that field. The Kingdom of God including Gospel blessings is often hid treasure to many and undiscerned by them. But if one without thoughtful efforts of his own is brought to see and realize their value he will gladly part with everything needful for their possession. The pearl merchant was seeking after a gem of supreme excellence. When he had found one of surpassing value he sells all that he had and bought it. The Kingdom of Christ with its precious benefits is well represented by the pearl of price, excels all things earthly in value, and a man who is seeking after true riches may wisely part with all temporal things for its possession.

IV. The Mixed Character of the Kingdom.

This is described by the results of casting a net into the sea and it incloses divers kinds of fish, good and bad. So Gospel agencies employed in the world brings into the Church different kinds of people, regenerate and unregenerate persons. The same truth is taught in the parable of the "Wheat and the tares," with the addition that the presence of the tares is due to the enemy of Christ and man. Men for lack of knowledge and power can not wholly eradicate the tares or remove false members from the Church. But the time of separation shall come and the angels shall free the Kingdom from all things that offend.

Prayer Meeting.

(Continued from page 11)

whose great commission she should make the very breath of her life. Nobody but Jesus can bring order and peace and good fellowship to the world's distracted classes and masses; nothing but his teachings heartily embraced, loyally obeyed, can dislodge the fallacious theories which are tearing and destroying society. The great crime of the age is disloyalty to the Man of Galilee. The crying need of the world is obedience to the Christ. It is the divorce of religion from life which is causing the havoc and ruin. What God hath joined together let no man put asunder. The Macedonian call may be heard everywhere, but do we hear it? The Man of Macedonia is standing before us with appealing messages but he is unheeded because we must first have the vision of the Christ. The experience of the road to Damascus came before the vision at Troas. Even when this vision came, even when this appeal for help was heard, we may imagine a voice saying to Paul: "Is not Asia enough? Behold the millions here at home (Asia); why cross over to a new continent?" So men are over and over saying: "Let us attend to the folks at home; if we do that, it will suffice." But this is not the Christ voice. It is the voice of a subtle selfishness; it is the denial of Jesus.

We should spend a while at Troas with Paul. He will surely tell us about his Lord and ours. He will be talking about that marvelous love that brought our Lord into a strange country. He will show us that He—the Lord Jesus—first heard the world-wide Macedonian cry. Paul crossed to find a prison at Philippi—Jesus crossed to find a cross at Jerusalem. We may cross also if we will: in doing so we will be walking in His steps, to the praise of His glorious grace.

Presbyterian Standard

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE.
 REV. W. L. BOGGS, Circulation Manager.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.
 ESTABLISHED JANUARY 1, 1858.

Entered at the Post Office at Charlotte, N. C., as second class matter.

A Religious Newspaper for the Family, Devoted to the Interest of Christ's Kingdom as Represented by the Southern Presbyterian Church.

CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE

Rome, Ga. (Ed. Cor.)	2
The North Carolina Home	2
Bible Study at Montreat	3
CONTRIBUTED—
The Eldership and the Present Crisis—By D. McL. McDonald	4-8
When Will the Anti-Christ Appear?—By Rev. A. W. Pitzer, D.D.	5
"A Teaching Ministry"—By Rev. H. M. Pressly	5
An Interesting Old Church—By Rev. J. W. Goodman	6
Home Missions in Florida Presbytery—By Rev. W. E. McIlwaine, D. D.	6
Come On! For New Victories From Old Ideals. By Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., LL.D.	7-9
Hampden Sidney College and the Synod of Virginia—By Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D.D.	8
Texas-Mexican Mission Notes—By R. D. Campbell.	8
DEPARTMENTS—
News of the Week	10
Home Circle	10
Christian Endeavor—By Rev. S. H. Hay	11
Prayer Meeting—By Rev. C. D. Waller	11
Sunday School—By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.	12

ANNOUNCEMENT.

 The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription is paid.

When change of address is desired, give both the old and the new address.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the last subscription paid.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South.

TREASURERS OF BENEVOLENT CAUSES.

- Foreign Missions—Edwin F. Willis, 154 Fifth Ave., N., Nashville, Tenn.
- Home Missions—A. N. Sharp, 1522 Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga.
- Christian Education and Ministerial Relief—John Stites, Fifth and Market Streets, Louisville, Ky.
- Publication and Sabbath School Work—R. E. Magill, 6-8 N. Sixth Street, Richmond, Va.
- Bible Cause—Wm. Foulke, Bible House, New York.

Church News

Collections for September are for Bible Cause, Treasurer, William Foulke, Bible House, New York.

A RARE CASE OF BAPTISM.

Our old friend, Rev. Dr. J. H. Morrison, claims that he has broken all previous records as to the age of members baptized. Recently at Valley Grove Church, Arkansas, he baptized a man 104 years old. This was no doubt a case of infant baptism, as the old man had reached his second childhood.

Our Baptist friends, however, would not question this action, though in this as well as the case of an infant, faith was the condition sine qua non—the only difference being in the case of the second childhood it was the faith of the child, while in the first childhood it must always be the faith of the parent.

PERSONAL.

Rev. W. T. Wadley changes his address this week from Old Fort, N. C., to Edenton, N. C.

We enjoyed recently a visit from Rev. J. E. James, D. D., of Marlin, Texas. Dr. James, though far away, still has a warm place in his heart for the Carolinas.

Dr. W. R. Dobyns gave our Associate Reformed brethren at their recent conference at Linwood College a sample of "Old School" doctrine. He came back singing their praises.

Dr. J. H. Morrison, of Holly Grove, Ark., has been a visitor the past week. He is one of the numerous Morrisons of this State, which is all that is needed to prove his worth.

Rev. F. B. Rankin, who served for over a year as chaplain in the army, has accepted a call to the Unity group of churches in Lincoln and Gaston counties. His home address will be Mount Holly, N. C., R. F. D.

Rev. R. T. Chafer, of Greenville, S. C., has joined the extension department staff of teachers of the Moody Bible Institute. His new address is 287 Gordon Street, Atlanta, Ga.

Rev. S. Dwight Winn and Miss Emily Winn, of our Korean Mission, expect to return to their work at Chun Ju, Korea, sailing September 18 from Vancouver, B. C., on S. S. Empress of Japan. They will be accompanied by their father, Rev. Paul P. Winn, who will make his home with them in Chun Ju.

Dr. J. D. Eggleston, the new president of Hampden-Sidney College, in an article in this issue by Dr. Sweets, is made to graduate in 1866. In this we followed copy strictly and the correction came after that form had gone to press. In 1866 Dr. Eggleston was non-existent, as now he is only 51 years old. When the editor graduated, he was a mere boy at Hampden-Sidney, and every one knows that the editor is still in his youth.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Presbytery of Orange will meet in the North Wilkesboro Presbyterian Church on Tuesday, September 16, 1919, at 8 o'clock p. m.
 Stated Clerk.

The Synod of North Carolisa will meet in the First Presbyterian Church, Raleigh, N. C., on Tuesday, October 28, 1919, at 8 o'clock p. m.

D. I. Craig, Stated Clerk.

All ministers and Delegates who expect to attend Presbytery at Jackson Springs this fall are requested to send their names to W. L. Holliday, Jackson Springs, N. C., immediately, in order that homes may be ready for them on their arrival.

Notice to Commissioners to Mecklenburg Presbytery—We ask all those coming to Presbytery at Steele Creek September 16 to come in machines as far as possible. Those who cannot come this way will be met in Charlotte at First Church lawn on September 16, between 9:30 and 10 a. m. Those coming will please inform, immediately, either Mr. Plato Price, Charlotte, N. C., R. F. D. 4, or Rev. J. W. Orr, Charlotte, R. F. D. 3. The celebration of the semi-centennial will take place on Wednesday, September 17, 1919. We are expecting a great time. J. W. Orr.

Carmel—For eight days the last of July the pastor, Rev. C. H. Little, with the assistance of Rev. J. E. Wool, of Pegram Street Church, Charlotte, held a great meeting at Carmel Church. Mr. Wool preached the old-time religion and the people were charmed with his safe, orthodox and very attractive presentation of the gospel messages. There were no additions to the church because these churches do not wait on a revival for accessions, but add often, on ordinary occasions, from the Sabbath school, the children of the church and strangers that move within our bounds. The people were greatly strengthened and built up in a "most holy faith."

Amy—From Sunday, July 27, to August 3, Rev. C. H. Little preached the Word of truth. Friday night Rev. Mr. McLaughlin, of Philadelphia Church, preached two earnest and helpful sermons. It was a busy time for country people. Rain interfered and yet there was great cause to rejoice. The celebration of the Lord's Supper was observed and the newly elected elders and deacons were installed. The pastor was granted a lengthy vacation and given a handsome money gift with which to enjoy his stay at Estes Park, near Denver, Col.

Sharon—The newly elected elders and deacons of Sharon Church were duly installed on Sunday morning, August 3. The sixth year of this pastorate is drawing to a close. With the addition of these new officers we go forward greatly encouraged and strengthened for the task in front. The pastor and family were presented with a handsome purse to help them enjoy their summer vacation in Montana and California. Rev. C. H. Little will preach in the First Presbyterian Church, of Butte, Mont., August 17, and on Monday following will motor through Yellowstone Park on a five days' trip.

Charlotte—Rev. Walter Lingle, of the Union Seminary, filled the pulpit of the Second Church both morning and evening. In the evening we heard from him a most earnest sermon on the work of the Spirit.

In the morning at the First Church we had the pleasure of hearing Rev. J. G. Garth. His text was the first four verses of the first chapter of Hebrews. His crutches which he has to use indicate a weakness of his understanding, but his sermon proved that his head and heart are still in fine working order.

Rev. W. L. Boggs, our Circulation Manager, preached at West Avenue Church for Rev. C. C. Anderson, who was absent dedicating a church at Siler.

Charlotte—On last Sabbath morning Rev. A. R. Shaw, D.D., who is supplying the pulpit of the Tenth Avenue Church during the months of August and September, preached a special sermon to old people from the text, "At Evening Time It Shall Be Light." A special effort had been made to have many old people whose infirmities prevent their usual attendance on the church service, to attend this service, and consequently a large congregation filled the auditorium, conspicuous among them being a number of elderly people from the County Home, and the fast thinning line of our Confederate veterans who attended in a body. Dr. Shaw preached a splendid sermon, handling his subject in a helpful and sympathetic manner. The music added inspiration to the services. Led by Tenth Avenue's splendid choir, old and young joined in singing a number of the beautiful old hymns of the church. Dr. Shaw will continue to supply this church, his former charge, where he is greatly loved, until the arrival of the new pastor, Rev. Daniel Iverson.

Naomi Church, Wagram—The pastor of this church, Rev. Charles R. Bailey, was assisted in a week's meeting recently by the Rev. A. W. Crawford, Synodical Superintendent of Evangelism. The community surrounding the church is thinly settled but the people attended well considering the busy season and a deal of interest was manifested in the meeting. The preaching consisted in the plain expounding of the word of God in such a simple manner that the children could understand it. One event of the meeting rather out of the ordinary was the administration of the ordinance of baptism by the pastor to eight infants. The visible results of the meeting consisted in an increased interest and enthusiasm on the part of the members in the affairs of religion in which the community largely takes part and the profession of faith in Jesus Christ by twelve people. Ten of these united themselves with Naomi Church. It will be realized that this is a large ratio of increase when it is known that the church membership was just eighteen. The people expressed their thankfulness by a contribution of $27.38 to the cause of Synodical Home Missions. The members are already planning a larger degree of activity in their church work.

Third Creek Church had one of the best meetings in her long history recently. Rev. S. H. Hay, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Mooresville, was with us from August 10 through the 17th and preached twice each day to large congregations. Brother Hay preached the gospel with a simplicity of style that was delightful and in a manner that was convincing. Brother Hay impressed us as one whose motive is "The love of Christ constraineth me" and whose conviction is, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

The Holy Spirit blessed the word and thirty-two were added to the church roll, as follows: On profession of faith in Christ and by baptism, 22; on profession of faith, 7; by letter, 3. The entire membership of dear old Third Creek Church was edified and encouraged and the regions round about received an uplift. Expressions of appreciation are due a faithful band of workers in the church whose prayers and personal efforts were not in vain. Many of the old songs were sung and the congregations sang with grace in the heart to the Lord.

Not unto us but unto God be all the praise. The prayers of God's people are asked in behalf of meetings soon to be held in the Cleveland and Elmwood Presbyterian churches.
J. T. Hall.

Hemp—Elise High School—The fall term at Elise High School will open on the 3rd day of September and a full enrollment is expected. More applications for admission have already been received than for many years past and it is hoped that this will be the banner year of the school. A competent faculty has been secured and pupils are urged to enroll at the beginning of the year and thus receive the full benefits of the year's work.

On Tuesday, the 2nd of September, there will be a picnic on the campus and it is hoped that every former student of Elise will be on hand to enjoy the afternoon. A special program will be arranged for the afternoon entertainment and every one is urged to bring a well filled basket to help make the day a complete success. All members of the alumni are especially invited and urged to be present and enjoy the afternoon talking over the past and present and becoming acquainted with the new members of the school.

At 8 p. m. on Tuesday a reception for the new students will be held and all students are therefore urged to be on

(Continued on Page 16)

Ten Recent World Facts

(Taken From a Recent Book by Cornelius Patton)

-
1. THE AWAKENING OF ASIA. It has broken with its past and is demonstrating the essential unity of the race. China is the theater of the greatest movement now taking place on the globe.
 2. DECADENCE OF NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIONS. The religions that oppose Christianity are disintegrating under our eyes. Witness the failure of Mohammedanism recently.
 3. THE RAPID EXTENSION OF CHRISTIANITY. The problem of the missionary is not to make converts so much as to care for the mass of converts that are made. Christianity is on a pedestal today throughout the whole East.
 4. EAST AND WEST JOIN IN A COMMON CAUSE. The army in France was a "cross section of humanity." East Indian and American touched elbows and learned to know each other. The result is beyond computation.
 5. THE EAST LOOKS TO AMERICA FOR EXAMPLE AND HELP. The eyes of the eastern world, including Turkey, are strained and their hands outstretched towards America.
 6. AMERICA HAS BROKEN FROM HER ISOLATION. Prof. John B. Moore says in his recent book: "One of the most important events of all time was the advent of the United States into the family of nations."
 7. AMERICA AND GREAT BRITAIN JOIN IN A FELLOWSHIP OF SERVICE. Another authority says: "One of the most momentous facts of history is the reunion of the Anglo-American stock in a great fellowship of service."
 8. DEMOCRACY BECOMES THE ORGANIZING PRINCIPAL OF THE WORLD. We do not even dream of the tremendous significance of the rapid spread of democracy. The world made more progress in 1917-18 than in any century of its history towards human liberty.
 9. THE RISE OF THE NEW IDEALISM. The greatest romance of history is the espousal of the cause of the weaker nations on the part of the America. Charity and benevolence occupy the center of the stage. Where can we serve best? is the question of the day.
 10. THE CHURCH IS AWAKENING TO ITS OPPORTUNITY. There are signs everywhere that the Church is a wakening. This is its day of opportunity. Every one seems to feel it.

In View of These Facts Could North Carolina Presbyterians Do a Greater Service for the World Than to Put Their Own House in order by raising a MILLION DOLLARS AND MORE for an Education That Will Raise Up and Train WORLD LEADERSHIP

Campaign Headquarters --- Presbyterian Schools
Greensboro, North Carolina

Church News.

(Continued from Page 14)

hand, at least by Tuesday. The first meal will be served in the dining room at 12 noon on Tuesday.

The regular work will begin on Wednesday but all pupils are urged to come on Tuesday and be ready for the work on Wednesday.

If you have a son, daughter or friend who is not already in school, think the matter over and do your best to help them to decide to enter Elise where their training will be of the very best and under the guidance of Christian teachers and friends.
W. C. McColl.

ALABAMA.

Opelika—The Rev. C. K. Taffe has declined the call recently extended him by this church.

Woodland—Rev. Legh R. Scott, of Montgomery, has just concluded a most interesting and successful evangelistic meeting in this church.

Haynesville—The Lowndes County group of churches has called the Rev. T. C. Guy, of Kentucky. Mr. Guy has accepted the call and will begin work at once.

Greenville—Rev. J. McD. Lacy, the Assembly's evangelist, is holding a revival service in this church. Already there have been a number of additions to the church.

Dothan—This church, which has been vacant for several months, has called the Rev. R. T. Wallace, of Crozet, Va. Mr. Wallace will visit the church early in September.

Providence—The pastor, Rev. C. H. Rogers, has just closed a most interesting meeting in this church. The spirit was splendid, and there were seventeen additions to the church.

Mobile—The Government Street Church, which has been vacant since Dr. H. W. Dubose's resignation, has extended a hearty call to the Rev. W. T. Thompson, Jr., of Knoxville. Dr. Thompson preached here the 17th.

Troy—The Presbyterian Churches of Troy and Bethel have extended a hearty call to the Rev. Herman Jones, of Durant, Okla. Mr. Jones is now holding an evangelistic meeting in the Troy Church. He has not indicated his decision as to the calls, but it is hoped that he will accept.

Alexander City—The Rev. Mr. Boswell has declined the call to the pastorate of the churches in this group. Sunday, September 7, the Rev. Erwin Thompson, who has just been discharged from the army, will fill the pulpit of this church.

Birmingham—Rev. A. G. Harris, of the Second Church, is spending his vacation at Montreat. Since Mr. Harris returned to the church from the army, the church has begun a most active program of work in the city, with gratifying results.

Wetumpka—The Rev. J. McD. Lacy has held a very fine meeting in this church. It was one of the very best the church has ever enjoyed, great crowds attending the meeting, and a number of additions to the church are among the good results of the meeting.

GEORGIA.

Quitman—Rev. J. P. Word has accepted the call to the pastorate of the Panama City and Bay St. Andrew, Fla., churches. In 1887 Mr. Word came to Quitman as pastor of that and the Valdosta churches which he served for ten years. After a long absence in other pastorates he returned to Quitman several months ago to supply the pulpit during the absence in Y. M. C. A. work overseas of the regular pastor, Rev. C. A. Campbell. He is very much beloved in this field and on his leaving to take up his new pastoral work he was presented with a gold-headed cane as a mark of the esteem in which he is held.

Walnut Grove Church—Walnut Grove is one of our country churches which has a bright prospect of future growth. There are many young people in the community and the people are to a large extent a church-going people. Rev. P. D. Patrick, of Menlo, Ga., closed a very successful week's meeting on the night of the fourth Sunday in August, when he preached a very powerful and convincing sermon on "This Man Receiveth Sinners." Great interest was manifested and the visible results were four additions on profession of faith and two by letter from the Methodist church. Letters for two others have not yet arrived. Mrs. Patrick, an experienced young people's worker, joined Mr. Patrick on Thursday and held very successful meetings with the young people in the neighboring schoolhouse and in the church. Another very encouraging result of the meeting was an increase in the pastor's salary of one hundred dollars. Our people seem more encouraged to undertake the task before them in this field for fruitful growth.

H. M. Bailey, Supply.

TENNESSEE.

The Presbytery of Nashville will meet at Mt. Olivet church, near Watertown, Tenn., on the fourth Tuesday of September at 7:30 p. m. The standing order calls for an evangelistic conference on the day of the meeting.

W. C. Alexander, S. C.

VIRGINIA.

New Monmouth—Rev. I. J. Brooks, Jr., of Gorman, W. Va., has received a call to this church.

Mount Carmel—Rev. J. L. Fairley, pastor, has been in North Carolina for his vacation. In his absence, Rev. J. E. Purcell, of South Carolina, occupied his pulpit.

New Providence—Rev. R. L. Telford, of Richmond, Ky., has been conducting a series of services at this church.

Rev. Emmett W. McCorkle has been spending the summer at Northfield and on the Maine coast.

Union Theological Seminary—The September Collection. The attention of pastors and church officers is called to the September offering for Union Theological Seminary.

This offering is authorized and in some cases is emphasized by the controlling Synods.

We wish to lay special emphasis upon it this year and to urge that it be made in all the churches that have not already provided for the Seminary in their budget for the year.

There is special need at this time. The high cost of living affects the Seminary quite as disastrously as it does the whole population. Everything we have to buy is at an increased cost, and, of course, the interest rate on our endowment funds is not increased. We have had to do a great deal of repair work which had been deferred during the war in hopes of lower prices, and which could not be longer postponed.

But there is another thing ahead of us that we wish the churches especially to help on. For years the Seminary has provided board for the students at the refectory for the bare cost of the food alone. All expenses of supervision and cooking are met out of endowment funds. Until last year the cost to each student was $2.50 per week. Last year it was raised to $3.00 per week. This proved to be insufficient. (It did not pay the bills and there was no "riotous living"). It is evident that it will be less adequate the coming session. It is equally clear that the students cannot pay more. About all the average student has above the $100 loan made to him by the Executive Committee of Christian Education is what

(Continued on Page 17)

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. Jno. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

SENTENCES FROM A MONTREAT NOTEBOOK.

The greatest problem of the foreign field is the problem of the returned student who has been tainted by atheism in America.

The average American home is passing on to the school teacher the responsibility of training the children.

Pray for and write to those of your church who are in our colleges.

No matter what may be the chosen profession of your children, have them lay the foundation in the Christian college. Don't let them rush off and make tools of themselves before the great steel of character has been formed.

Texas will be Catholic if not made Protestant in the near future.

The one thing most longed for by the foreigner in America is friendship and fellowship and love. (Said by an Armenian).

What the white man is, that the negro tries to be and will be.

The negro is going to be the test of the white man's religion in the South.

In a certain neighborhood in North Carolina there lived a woman who had been of uncertain age for some time. At last it was rumored that she was soon to be married and an interested friend tactfully approached her and said: "I hear a rumor that you are soon to be married. Is it true?" "No," she answered, "it is not true, but I thank you for the rumor."

During the recent trouble in Korea a Japanese policeman came upon a little twelve-year-old girl giving vent to her patriotism in no uncertain tone. He promptly slapped the side of her face and she shouted in Korean, "Hurrah for Korea!" He slapped the other side of her face and again came the shout, "Hurrah for Korea!" This was repeated several times and the policeman asked: "Why do you say this every time I slap you?" "Well," she answered, "my head is so full of 'Hurrah for Korea!' that every time you slap me you slap one out."

Three questions confront our African missionaries. First: Shall we return to Africa, leaving our children in America? Second: Shall we remain in America with them? Third: Shall we carry them back to our unsanitary mud houses at the risk of losing them there? Nine little ones are already asleep under the African trees.

A missionary having preached in a certain town in Japan was returning home. When about half a mile distant from this town he heard his name being called and upon looking back, he saw a man running swiftly after him. As he drew near he shouted: "What you told us about this Jesus has greatly moved us, but one thing you forgot to tell us: When did this Jesus die for us? Was it this year or last year or when?"

Conversation between an old Korean man and one of our youngest Korean missionaries:

Korean—How old are you?

Missionary—How old do you think I am?

Korean (looking intently at her auburn hair and gold crowned tooth)—You are fifty or sixty.

Missionary—You are wrong. I am (and she gave her age which was far below his guess).

Korean—Do you tell me that a Jesus believing woman can tell lies like that? Anybody with white hair and a tooth dropped out is older than that.

Montreat is a real "treat" in more ways than one. It is a treat for the religious worker, a treat for the geologist, the biologist, the botanist, a treat for the artist and the musician, a treat for the athlete and the hiker, a treat for the weary and the rested, a treat for the rich and the poor, a treat for the young and the old.

To say to a child, "Do this or that or Old Satan will get you," is paganism. To say, "Do this or that because of what Jesus did for you is Christianity."

The reception of the life of God in the soul is the only thing that makes a man a member of the church.

The business of the church in the world is to reveal God to the world.

Read through John and make a note of all that happened on the Sabbath. Trace belief and unbelief through the book. Give a title to each chapter in the book.

The habit of sound thinking is worth more than a thousand thoughts.

We represent God to those around us.

"No" is just as much an answer to prayer as "Yes." Both are inspired by love.

God's grace is sufficient whether in sunshine or in mists.
D. P. McG.

MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERIAL.

That because of health failure, Miss Amanda Coffey cannot use the Mecklenburg scholarship, any young woman within its bounds who wishes to go to the Training School, Richmond, Va., write to Mrs. C. W. Robinson at once, Charlotte, N. C., Route 7., Secretary of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief. Mrs. C. W. Robinson.

Church News.

(Continued from Page 16)

he can save from his summer work in the Home Mission fields. As church officers you know about what salaries are paid for such work. By the time the students work four months, meet their living expenses for the summer, pay their railroad fare to and from the field, and buy a suit of clothes and a pair of shoes there is practically nothing left.

The Seminary funds will not bear such a deficit as will probably result.

This is an emergency. Will not each and every pastor take it up as an emergency call now? We will not send a letter by mail to each one this year. This public letter will reach all, and will save expense of postage.

Ordinarily, it is better to send money and let the matron buy what she needs, still, there may be some who prefer to send food supplies. For the past two years the brotherhood class of one of our leading country churches has sent a generous gift of 25 barrels of apples for the refectory to the great relief and delight of matron and students. Other supplies would be equally welcome.

We are happy to report that there will be a much larger student body this session than we have had for several years.

This is occasion for abundant thanksgiving. It is also occasion for more help from the churches.

Faternally yours,

The Trustees of Union Theological Seminary.

By William R. Miller, Sec. and Treas.

I suppose no truths can be dearer to a human than these two—the sympathy of the Son of Man in temptation; the victory of humanity in the Son of Man over evil.—Stafford Brooke.

Does not hypocrisy consist in caring little for the real goodness and usefulness of life, so long as an admirable, or at least representable, appearance can be maintained?—Fosdick.

If you want to be divine, keep hidden as God does.—Anon.

But what is your duty? What the day demands.—Goethe.

I see no business in life but the work of Christ.—Henry Martyn.

Time and Places of Meeting of Presbytery.

The following is Presbytery, Place of Meeting, Time and Stated Clerk, respectively:

Synod of Alabama.

Mobile—Government Street Church, Mobile, Tuesday, October 14, 7:30 p. m. A. D. Planck.

North Alabama—Second Church, Anniston, Tuesday, October 7, 7:30 p. m. W. C. Clark.

Tuscaloosa—New Hope Church, near Knoxville, Tuesday, October 14, 11 a. m. J. G. Praigg.

Synod of Appalachia.

Abingdon—Leyburn Church, Bland County, Tuesday, September 9, 8 p. m. J. M. Sedgwick.

Holston—Banner Elk, N. C., Tuesday, September 16, 7:30 p. m. Geo. B. Thompson.

Knoxville—Cleveland, Tenn., Tuesday, September 9, 8 p. m. J. C. Cowan.

Synod of Arkansas.

*Arkansas—First Church, Searcy, Tuesday, October 21, 8 p. m. J. N. McFarlane.

Ouachita—Mount Holly, Tuesday, October 7, 8:30 p. m. J. W. Marshall.

Pine Bluff—Carthage, Tuesday, October 14, 7:30 p. m. Wm. A. Rolle.

Washburn—Fayetteville, Tuesday, October 14, 8 p. m. Chas. H. Maury.

Synod of Florida.

Florida—Knox Church, Pensacola, Tuesday, November 11, 11 a. m. D. J. Currie.

*St. Johns—Inverness, Tuesday, October 21, 7:30 p. m. C. W. Latham.

Synod of Georgia.

Athens—Mt. Hermon Church, Ila, Tuesday, September 2, 8 p. m. S. J. Cartledge.

Atlanta—Roswell, Tuesday, September 23, 7:30 p. m. R. M. Stimson.

Augusta—Milledgeville, Tuesday, October 14, 7:30 p. m. E. P. Mickel.

Cherokee—Cartersville, Tuesday, September 9, 8 p. m. F. K. Sims.

Macon—Climax, Tuesday, October 21, 7:30 p. m. J. W. Stokes.

Savannah—Vidalia, Tuesday, October 14, 7:30 p. m. R. M. Mann.

Synod of Kentucky.

Ebenezer—Elizaville, Tuesday, September 16, 7:30 p. m. W. O. Cochrane.

Louisville—Bardstown, Tuesday, September 23, 7:30 p. m. W. H. Hopper.

Muhlenburg—Nelson Church, Muhlenburg County, Tuesday, September 9, 8 p. m. E. E. Smith.

Paducah—First Church, Morganfield, Tuesday, September 16, 7:30 p. m. D. B. Gregory.

Transylvania—Paint Lick, Tuesday, September 2, 7:30 p. m. E. M. Green.

Synod of Louisiana.

New Orleans—St. Charles Avenue, Branch Church, New Orleans, Tuesday, October 21, 8 p. m. Louis Voss.

Red River—Smyrna Church, Grand Cane, Tuesday, October 7, 7:30 p. m. H. M. McLain.

Synod of Mississippi.

Central Mississippi—Yazoo City, Tuesday, October 7, 7:30 p. m. E. W. Ford.

East Mississippi—First Church, Tupelo, Tuesday, October 7, 7:30 p. m. J. J. McInnis.

Meridian—Philadelphia Church, near Waynesboro, October 7, 7:30 p. m. H. M. Jenkins.

Mississippi—Tylertown, Tuesday, October 14, 7:30 p. m. S. C. Caldwell.

North Mississippi—Enid, Tuesday, October 7, 8 p. m. R. H. Latham.

Synod of Missouri.

*Lafayette—Range Line Church, Pettis County, Tuesday, September 9, 8 p. m. Jas. E. Green.

Missouri—Bethel, Tuesday, September 9, 8 p. m. W. W. Elwang.

Potosi—First Church, Jackson, Tuesday, September 16, 7:30 p. m. Geo. H. Harlan.

Palmyra—New Hope Church, near Paris, Tuesday, September 9, 8 p. m. J. T. McCutchan.

St. Louis—O'Fallon, Tuesday, September 16, 8 p. m. W. W. Langtry.

Upper Missouri—Walnut Grove Church, Tuesday, September 16, 8 p. m. C. R. Nisbet.

Synod of North Carolina.

Concord—Unity Church, Woodleaf, Tuesday, September 16, 11 a. m. E. D. Brown.

Fayetteville—Jackson Springs, Tuesday, September 30, 8 p. m. E. L. Siler.

Kings Mountain—Lowell, September 16, 8 p. m. F. A. Drennon.

Mecklenburg—Steele Creek Church, near Charlotte, Tuesday, September 16, 11 a. m. J. E. Wood.

Orange—North Wilkesboro, Tuesday, September 16, 8 p. m. D. I. Craig.

Synod of Oklahoma.

Durant—First Church, Durant, Tuesday, September 16, 8 p. m. E. Brantly.

Mangum—Central Church, Shawnee, Tuesday, September 16, 8 p. m. J. W. Moseley, Jr.

Synod of Snedecor Memorial.

Central Louisiana—Berean Church, New Orleans, Thursday, October 9, 7:30 p. m. J. W. Lee.

*N. & S. Carolina—Golden Hill Church, Dillon County, Friday, October 10, 10 a. m. G. S. Alford.

Synod of South Carolina.

Bethel—Liberty Hill, Tuesday, September 9, 8 p. m. F. H. Wardlaw.

Enoree—Greer, Tuesday, September 30, 7:30 p. m. E. P. Davis.

*Harmony—Central Church, Williamsburg County, Thursday, October 16, 12 m. W. H. Workman.

Piedmont—Broadway Church, Belton, Tuesday, October 7, 8:30 p. m. Robt. Adams.

South Carolina—Thornwell Mem., Clinton, Tuesday, October 7, 8 p. m. H. Waddell Pratt.

Synod of Tennessee.

Columbia—Betherei Church, near Lewisburg, Tuesday, September 9, 8:30 p. m. Clyde Johnson.

Memphis—Saltillo, Tuesday, September 16, 8 p. m. J. H. Lumpkin.

*Nashville—Mt. Olivet Church, near Watertown, Tuesday, September 23, 7:30 p. m. W. C. Alexander.

Synod of Texas.

Brazos—First Church, Houston, Tuesday, September 23, 8 p. m. E. L. Storey.

Brownwood—First Church, Bollinger, Tuesday, September 9, 8:30 p. m. Malcom Black.

Central Texas—First Church, Cameron, Tuesday, September 16, 8 p. m. M. C. Hutton.

Dallas—Central Church, Wichita Falls, Tuesday, September 9, 8 p. m. J. G. Varner.

Eastern Texas—First Church, Palestine, Tuesday, September 9, 8 p. m. E. P. Kennedy.

El Paso—First Church, Barstow, Wednesday, September 17, 8:30 p. m. Guy B. Duff.

Fort Worth—Throckmorton, Tuesday, September 9, 8:30 p. m. C. L. Altfather.

Paris—Waskom, Tuesday, September 16, 7:30 p. m. R. L. Owen.

Western Texas—Charco, Tuesday, September 16, 8:30 p. m. J. L. Green.

Synod of Virginia.

East Hanover—Bon Air, Tuesday, September 23, 8 p. m. Wm. S. Campbell.

Lexington—Windy Cove Church, Milboro Springs, Tuesday, September 9, 3 p. m. W. C. White.

Montgomery—Hoge's Chapel, Giles County, Tuesday, September 30, 8 p. m. L. W. Irwin.

Norfolk—Makamie Church, Accomac, Tuesday, September 23, 2 p. m. R. B. Grinnan.

Potomac—Warrenton, Va., Tuesday, October 7, 8 p. m. Wm. H. Woods.

Story and Incident

Father Brown's Vision.

HE was a blacksmith, and a most wretchedly wicked man. He knew everything that was blatant and blasphemous in infidelity. He hated everything that was good and loved everything that was bad. He studied to make himself an irritation to all who believed God, not even sparing his wife, who did the best she could in the patience and kingdom of Jesus. This man was given up as altogether beyond moral recovery, and so indeed he seemed. Prayer was made as though he had no existence; churches were opened and shut, but never with reference to him; the gospel was preached and mercy offered, but no one connected him with God's message to the world.

A few miles in the country from the blacksmith's town there lived an old couple, Father and Mother Brown. They were close to ninety years of age. Theirs had been lives of conscious acceptance with God, and of patient, unremitting devotedness to him! and they were waiting, without sorrow and without fear, for the promised home-going.

Very early one morning the old man awoke terribly agitated, and began to call his wife: "Get up, wife; get up!"

"Why, old man," she said, "what is the matter?"

He answered: "I can't tell you now what's the matter, for I must start a fire in the kitchen. I want you to get breakfast ready as soon as you can, for I've got to go to town this morning."

"You go to town this morning!" she exclaimed. "Why, you are out of your head? You can't go to town. You haven't got any way of going, and I know you can't walk."

"Don't tell me what I can't do," the old man persisted; "I tell you I've got to go to town. I had a dream last night; and, well—I'll go and make the fire, and then tell you about it."

His wife followed him, the breakfast was prepared, and when the meal was over the old man started for town. It was a long and weary way for an old man to walk, but some strange strength was supplied him and, without stopping to rest, he kept on. The village was reached. Through the main street he trudged, then into the narrow cross street, and made to the shop of "Devil John," the blacksmith.

"Father Brown!" he exclaimed in great amazement; "what are you doing here, and so soon in the morning?"

The old man answered: "That's just what I've come to tell you. Let's go inside where I can sit down, for I'm tired."

Together they went into the shop, and when seated, the old man said: "John, I had a dream last night and I have come to tell you about it. I dreamed that the hour I have thought about so much and tried to keep ready for so long was come. It was my time to die. And it was just like I thought it was going to be, for it was just like the Lord promised it should be. I wasn't the least bit afraid. How could I be? My room was full of angels, and they all spoke to me, and I loved them and knew they all loved me. Then some of them stooped and slipped their arms under me and away we went. Beyond the hills and beyond the clouds we mounted through the starry skies. Oh, how they sang! I never heard anything like it in all my life. On we swept, and on, till one of them said, 'Look yonder, now; there's heaven!'"

"Oh, John, I can't tell you how I felt when I was in sight of heaven; nor can I tell you what I saw when I looked. I don't believe any one could tell it. It was so peaceful, so beautiful, so pure, and so glorious! As we drew nearer I saw the gates swinging open and, with even faster wing than we had come, we swept through them into the city. Such a welcome from everybody; all so glad; every rill seemed robed with gladness; it was in the fragrance of the flowers, in the music of every harp, in the song of every tongue, in the grasp of every hand; gladness everywhere, because I had come. Why, they made over me like I was somebody, when I was only a poor sinner saved by Jesus' blood. I found all my children there—not one of them lost; my boy, that you used to be with and play with so much when you went to school together, was there; and your old mother, who was in my class when I went to school.

"And after a time, I don't know how long it was, I saw the same angels who brought me bringing another, and it was my dear, sweet wife. I loved her more than ever when they brought her to me there. She was fairer than the day we married. We sat under the trees of life all together, and walked by the river that flows from the throne of God. So happy! And I saw the angels bringing in others, others that I love and you love; and so the years of eternity rolled.

"Then, John, all at once it came to me that I hadn't seen you anywhere; I set out to look for you. I went into every street, looked everywhere, asked everybody, but I could get no trace of you—I was distressed more than you can know; and I went to the Lord, my precious Saviour, and asked Him where you were. And, oh John, that you could have seen how sorry he was when he told me that you hadn't come.

"'Not come?' I said; 'why didn't John come?'"

"And he wept, just as I supposed he often did when he was down here, and told me, 'Nobody ever asked John to come!' Oh, I fell at his feet, I bathed them with my tears, I laid my cheeks upon them and I cried, 'Blessed Lord, just let me out of here half an hour, and I'll go and ask him to come; I'll give him the invitation!' And right then and there I woke up. It was beginning to get light in the east and I was so glad I was alive, so I could come and ask you to go to heaven, and now here I am, and I have told you my dream, and I want you to go."

With other words the old man urged the royal invitation, but the blacksmith stood as one petrified. He could not speak nor move. Father Brown got up, and saying, "Good-bye, John; remember you've got the invitation; remember you are asked to come," took his staff and started home.

The blacksmith seemed to come to himself, and, as one recovering from a magician's charm, he set out to pursue the labors of the day. But everything went wrong—the bellows would not work right, the hammers would not strike right, the nails would not go in right, the horse would not stand right. "O God, be merciful to me, a sinner!" he began to sob at last, and, leaving the shop, went home.

He told his wife of Father Brown's visit. "Blessed be God!" she said; "we will send the horse and buggy and have him come back." "Yes," he added, "for I mean to accept the invitation and want him to pray God to keep me true and steadfast to the end."—Revivals of Religion.

Roanoke—Roanoke Church, Charlotte County, Tuesday, September 2, 8 p. m. J. M. W. Elder.

West Hanover—Centre Church, Cumberland Court House, Tuesday, September 9, 8 p. m. C. F. Rankin.

Winchester—Berkeley Springs, W. Va., Tuesday, September 2, 8 p. m. J. A. McMurray.

Synod of West Virginia.

Greenbrier, Gap Mills, Tuesday, August 26, 8:30 p. m. J. M. Sloan.

Kanawha—St. Albans, Tuesday, September 23, 8 p. m. J. B. Morton.

Tygarts Valley—Pickens, Tuesday, September 9, 8 p. m. J. S. Cook.

*North and South Carolina—Churches are requested to send up one-half of the presbyterial assessments to this meeting, also reports of state of religion.

*Harmony—Sessions will send narratives and records to the meeting.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriages.

Stewart-Severs—At the Pegram Street manse, Charlotte, N. C., August 5, 1919, by the Rev. John E. Wool, Mr. Robert Harold Stewart and Miss Ella Juanita Severs. Both of Charlotte.

Deaths.

Hogan—At the home of her son, Percy V. Hogan, Kingsport, Tenn., on July 18, 1919, Mrs. M. A. Hogan, widow of the late Dr. John R. Hogan, of Chapel Hill, N. C., in the seventy-ninth year of her age. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

Stewart—At the home of her son, near Wilkesboro, N. C., on August 1, Mrs. S. D. Stewart quietly entered into rest. On the following Sunday her remains were interred at Carmel Church, near Liberty, S. C., where she had been a lifelong member and devoted worker.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Jeannette Oldham Moore.

"Servant of God, well done,
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

There is no doubt in the writer's mind that some such sweet welcome from the blessed Lord greeted the pure spirit of the subject of this sketch, when after months of suffering, borne with such beautiful Christian patience and submission to the will of her Heavenly Father, she was ushered into His presence. Mrs. Moore, relict of the late Capt. M. W. Moore, was born in the Oaks section of Orange County, N. C., November 29, 1846, and died at the home of her eldest son, John A. Moore, in Richmond, Va., June 2, 1919, in the seventy-fourth year of her age. All her life, with the exception of the few months since the death of her husband, had been spent in the community where she was born and reared and she was easily the peer of any in a community notable for its high type of womanhood. Her name and character are well known by all, but best known by her more intimate friends and best of all by her immediate family, for she was indeed a most affectionate, tender and thoughtful wife and mother. In her life was manifested in a most striking way the sanctifying influence of mingled joys and sorrows. She was the happy mother of four sons, to all of whom she was passionately devoted, but two of whom, James, the first born, and Hubert, the youngest, she was called to give up, one in 1890, the other in 1916, both in the bloom of young manhood with bright futures before them. Added to these was the death of her husband last November, with whom she had lived so happily for more than fifty-three years. But in all these heart-breaking sorrows never a word of repining or complaining, because in her heart she was sustained by an unfaltering trust that He doeth all things well, for she was a devoted follower of Christ and a most consistent member of His church. In early life she had united with Bethlehem Presbyterian Church and for many years she had been intensely interested in the welfare of her church. She will be sorely missed in the church and in the community, for as a neighbor there is no one to take her place.

Her nearest remaining relatives are her two sons, Jno. A. Moore, of Richmond, Va., and Will M. Moore, of China, and their families, together with a brother, Thos. J. Oldham, who loved her with all of a brother's affection and a number of nephews and nieces and other near relatives who loved her as a mother.

The funeral services were conducted at noon on Tuesday, June 3, at the old Bethlehem church, in the presence of an overflowing assembly of friends from far and near, in which five of her dear friends of the ministry took part, and her body was tenderly borne to the grave by six of her nephews and laid to rest by the side of her husband and one of her sons under a canopy of the most beautiful flowers it seemed possible that loving hands could assemble.

Her body sleeps in the church yard but her memory will linger long in the hearts and lives of those who knew and loved her. For shall not the righteous be held in everlasting remembrance according to His Word?

J. W. Goodman, Former Pastor.

Children's Department

BIRTHDAY PARTY.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy six years old. On my birthday I had a lovely party. There were thirty-five children. We had a great time playing games and eating cream and cake. I have a cat whose name is Tabby. She has two little kittens. I hope this letter won't reach the waste basket, as I want to surprise my Daddy. Your little friend,

Frank Wardlaw, Jr.

Guthriesville, S. C.

TO HAVE CHILDREN'S DAY.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old. My father takes your paper. I like to read the little letters in it. We have a little puppy. His name is Dan. I go to Sunday school at Barbecue Church in the morning. Miss Mary Thomas is my teacher. I go to Big Branch Sunday school in the afternoon. Miss Bettie Graham is my teacher. We are going to have a Children's Day. Hope this will be printed, as I want to surprise my father.

Verna Cameron.

Jonesboro, N. C.

TWO SISTERS.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl ten years old. I go to the Presbyterian Church. My teacher is Mrs. M. B. Griffin. Our pastor is Rev. Mr. McIlwaine. I have two sisters. I will close. Your friend, Mary Virginia Mills.

BECKY AND THE CIRCUS.

"Hurry up, Becky, hurry!" called Bunny impatiently from under Becky's kitchen window. "Leave the baby and come on, or you'll miss it. Well, I'm not going to wait any longer!" And he turned away to join the eager crowd on their way to the parade.

Becky took a peep at baby, securely strapped in his carriage, fast asleep. If she only might leave him until Mother's return! But no, he had been entrusted to her care and what would forty circus parades amount to if anything should happen to little Bobby through her neglect?

She rushed to the front door and peered up the street toward Byer's market. Dear, dear, why didn't Mother come! She knew how Becky had been counting on seeing the parade, and how she and Bunny (Becky's best chum, whose real name was Bunnell) wanted to get pointers for their own circus, to be given in Bunny's back yard. Becky had never been to a really truly circus. Somehow Daddy never had the money to spare, although no boy in town, Bunny not excepted, cherished deeper yearnings to see a real clown perform and the animals do their marvelous tricks.

But there was Mother at last, coming from a house across the way.

"Run right along, dear," she cried, "Mrs. Dillon called me in—the baby's sick. I hope you won't miss any of the parade."

"Oh, I'll make it I guess if I go lickity," squealed back Becky, already on the run and half way to the corner.

She had nearly caught up with the tag end of the crowd, when—

Klippity-klop, klippity-klop — "Oooo, boo-hoo!"

Becky came to a quick standstill beside a girl of about her own age tugging along a little urchin who was wailing sadly in his frantic efforts to cover ground.

"Danny—he can't run fast, 'cause he goes out of his shoe ev'y time," explained the girl, "the button's lost off his strap an' I can't find a pin anywhere, an' he's dreadf'ly afraid it'll be all over 'fore he gets there." Danny gave out a yet more dismal howl by way of emphasis.

Becky wildly scanned the sidewalk—not a pin in sight; and poor little Danny, he hadn't even once seen a parade! Becky couldn't leave him in his sorry plight.

"Don't cry, Danny," she comforted, "I'll fix your strap," and she dashed up the steps of the nearest house.

A nice twinkly-eyed man came to the door.

"Please, will you give me a safety pin," panted Becky, "for Danny's sandal—so's he can get to the parade?"

"What? A safety pin?" the twinkly-eyed man looked puzzled. "I guess I'd better turn you over to my wife," he said. And in a moment, the desired article tightly clasped in her hand, Becky was being ushered to the door.

"But aren't you going to the parade yourself?" asked the twinkly-eyed man, as Becky turned to thank him again.

"Oh, yes, yes!—if I can only get there before it's all gone!" Becky's voice was very wistful.

Deft fingers made short work of mending the strap and Danny was off on a joyful trot!

The alluring strains of the calliope sounded nearer and nearer; Becky's feet seemed to have grown wings. She would be only a little late after all, she told herself.

Then suddenly came a sharp cry of dismay right at her elbow. "Ouche, oh me! And all me Sunday dinner!"

An old woman stood gazing wofully at a punctured paper bag and its contents strewn all over the pavement.

"And beans at siventeen the pound! and niver at all can I pick thim up for the rheumatiz!" She moaned pitifully in the attempt to bend her stiff knees.

For a moment, Becky tried to keep right on as if she didn't see or hear.

"Oh why, why," she groaned, "isn't there somebody around to do things besides me!" But no, the whole block was quite deserted; everybody else, she reflected bitterly, was watching the parade by this time. Becky's feet, however, positively refused to go on.

"I'll pick them up for you," she volunteered with a catch in her voice. What an endless task it seemed! If it had only been apples or potatoes—but beans!

The old woman's face lighted. "Shure and it's koind ye are to a poor body," she beamed, handing over her rusty bonnet to serve as a basket.

For ten long minutes Becky worked away, her own nimble little legs cramped with stooping and disappointment tugging at her heart.

"Well, I declare, I thought you were so anxious to get to the parade!"

Becky looked up. There, smiling down upon her, was the nice twinkly-eyed man again!

"Oh, you see,"—Becky's eyes threatened showers; then the sun came out. "You see, she couldn't pick them up herself, 'count of the rheumatism—and it was all her Sunday dinner!"

"I see, I see." The twinkly-eyed man dropped a shiny coin into the bonnet among the beans, and sent the old dame on her way calling down blessings upon her benefactors.

"Maybe you're expecting to go to the circus this afternoon?" he queried, turning back to Becky again. "No? What! you don't mean to say you've never been to a circus? Humph! Well now, I'll tell you," he chuckled softly, "I'd like first-rate to go to the circus myself, provided I can get somebody to go with me—especially somebody who has never been to a circus before! And if you think you'd like to go, my wife'll be glad to call around to get your mother's consent; and I'll stop for you at one-thirty sharp."

Would she like to go! All at once a fairy tale had come true.

Two hours later, a stylish electric drove up to Becky's little gray house.

"Gee, but you're a lucky one, Beck!" sighed Bunny as he escorted her to the curb. "I wouldn't have minded picking up a whole bushel of beans and missing the parade, for a chance at the circus! But," he added thoughtfully, "you didn't know you were coming in for the circus, though, when you gave up the parade, did you, and you ran a chance of missing the whole thing!"

"I'll tell you every bit about it," Becky called back as the auto started off. "And I'll save all my pop-corn and peanuts for our circus," she promised, holding up the two bulgy bags she found awaiting her on the seat.—Edna P. Brett, in Congregationalist.

THE FAMILY.

Two great, strong arms: a merry way;
A lot of business all the day;
And then an evening frolic gay—
That's Father.

A happy face and sunny hair;
The best and sweetest smiles to spare;
The one you know is always there—
That's Mother.

A bunch of lace and ruffy frocks;
A Teddy-bear, a rattle-box;
A squeal, some very wee pink socks—
That's Baby.

A lot of noise; a suit awry;
A wish for candy, cake, and pie;
My grammar may be wrong, but, my!
That's Me.

—B. E. W., in the Alabama Christian Advocate.

THE TOUR OF A SMILE.

My papa smiled this morning when
He came downstairs, you see,
At mamma, and when he smiled, then
She turned and smiled at me;
And when she smiled at me, I went
And smiled at Mary Ann
Out in the kitchen, and she lent
It to a hired man.

So then he smiled at someone whom
He saw when going by,
Who also smiled and ere he knew
Had twinkles in his eye;
So he went to his office then
And smiled right at his clerk,
Who put some more ink on the pen
And smiled back from his work.

So when his clerk went home, he Smiled
Right at his wife, and she Smiled over at their little child
As happy as could be;
And then their little child she took
The smile to school, and when
She smiled at teacher from her book
Teacher smiled back again.

And then the teacher passed on one
To little James McBride,
Who couldn't get his lesson done
No matter how he tried;
And Jamesy took it home and told
How teacher smiled at him,
When he was tired and didn't scold
But said, "Don't worry, Jim."

And when I happened to be there
That very night at play,
His mother had a smile to spare
Which came across my way;
And then I took it after a while Back home and mamma said:
"Here is that very self-same smile Come back with us to bed."

—Selected.

JOHNNY.

He can scamper a mile to the baseball field,
And he never feels the heat;
But, oh! it's so far to the corner store—
So far for his aching feet!

He can run to see the circus come in,
And stand and watch by the hour;
But the postoffice building is so far away,
And there might come up a shower!

He can get up at five on the Fourth o'
July—
It's really no trouble at all;
But eight is too early on all other days,
And his mother may call and call!

He can sit up all hours to frolic, and not Get sleepy or tired a bit;
But if there's a lesson, or problem to do,
He goes fast asleep over it!

O Johnny, dear Johnny, how funny you are!
And when will grown-ups understand
That hard things seem easy, and easy ones hard,
To youngsters all over the land?
—Exchange.

Miscellaneous

FOLLOW THE LEAD OF THE DOUGHBOY!

Wanted: An orphan. Must be a little girl about eight years old with red hair.

"Does that order suit you fellows? Do you consider it specific enough?" asked a doughboy who hailed from Kansas—and, according to the legendary idea concerning Kansas men, he was over six feet tall, had auburn hair, freckles, and smiling eyes.

"Exactly right, I can fairly picture her now—a dainty little French maiden with quaint clothes and a seriously droll expression, but when she smiles—she is the light of the earth!"

"Some poet you are getting to be, Pard."

The four companions of the West-erner assented to his order. It was during the big orphan drive in France during the fall of 1918, when soldiers individually and collectively became foster parents of many of the children there. This particular group of five men, belonging to one of our famous divisions, had pooled their contributions for the highly pleasing purpose of sharing an orphan between them.

The order was sent at once to the "Stars and Stripes," the official newspaper for the men of the A. E. F. in France, which in turn gave over all the funds to the A. R. C. for disbursement. This task involved finding orphans to fill orders, and finding orders to fit orphans.

Now the five men are home again, and though widely separated by distance, they find their common interest, little Renee Marquard, keeps them in close touch with each other. They have a treasurer and secretary, to whom letters are sent monthly by the A. R. C. concerning Renee's health, her progress at school, and the conditions prevailing in her home. They each possess her picture, and one of them even painted his copy in order to make the red hair more realistic. Best of all are the letters from Renee herself, which are laboriously written and are eagerly answered by every one of her five god-fathers. For Renee, of course, lives in France with her mother, and her small brother. She is learning to speak English, so she proudly reports.

Orphans are in great demand these days. To be up to the minute you must own one. And now the Juniors of the A. R. C. have absorbed this idea so thoroughly that they are adopting orphans by the orphanageful, from Palestine to Antwerp and from Le Havre to the Balkans.

All life is a great spiritual opportunity, and everything that emerges for us should be seized and the good of it appropriated; the joy of life as well as the sorrow has its own meaning.—Ex.

Land Sour?

Neutralize the acidity, sweeten and enrich the soil and increase your yield with

RELCO MARL

Effective, inexpensive, economical. Guaranteed 90 per cent. lime carbonate. For prices, free soil test papers and literature, write Dept. 8-A, Roanoke Lime Co., Inc., Roanoke, Va.

Nadine Face Powder

(In Green Boxes Only)

Keeps The Complexion Beautiful

Soft and velvety. Money back if not entirely pleased. Nadine is pure and harmless. Adheres until washed off. Prevents sunburn and return of discolorations. A million delighted users prove its value. Tints: Flesh, Pink, Brunette, White. By Leading Toilet Counters or Mail, Dept. R P. National Toilet Company Paris, Tenn.

450 Revival Sermons and 1000 Religious Anecdotes at Once and 25 to 150 Sermons Each Month for a year, including 150 funeral, and sermons for all special occasions, all for $1.50. Money back if not pleased. The Co-Operative Publishing Co., Kirkwood, Mo.

Prepare For a Larger Income

Modern business requires trained men and women. You can earn a much larger salary and be assured always of a good paying position if you take Draughon's standard business courses. Write today for full information.

Draughon's Practical Business College
Knoxville, Tennessee Jacksonville, Florida

FOUR BEARING APPLE ORCHARDS FOR SALE OR LEASE

Special Inducements to PRESBYTERIAN SETTLERS
IF INTERESTED, COME AT ONCE

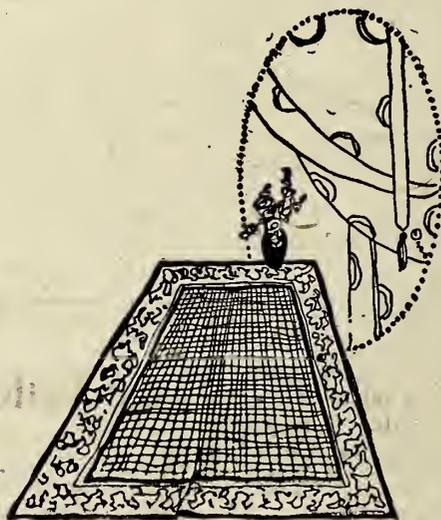

E. W. BARBER - SALUDA, N. C.

The Danville General Hospital

(REGISTERED)

Offers a three years' course in nursing. Surgical, medical, and obstetrical services. Graduates pass State Board examinations creditably, and are in demand in town and surrounding community. Address Superintendent,

Danville General Hospital, Danville, Va.

W. T. McCoy & Company

Announce the opening of their Fall showing of Wilton, Axminster, Velvet, Tapestry and Wool Fibre Rugs. A cordial invitation is extended the public to call and inspect this extra fine display of beautiful rugs.

WOMEN AND INDUSTRY.

In discussing the above theme in a recent address, Prof. G. H. Barnes, of the Carnegie Institute of Technology, said: "Girls are less desirable workers than men from an economic standpoint. Very nearly all of them in industry are casuals. They get into it, stay awhile, and then marry out of industry, going into their real business of life—the making of homes and rearing children. This brings a heavy turnover cost to the employer—80 per cent at least—and that does not count the minor turnovers the girls run up moving from job to job. The result may inevitably be lower wages for the same work. Girls are casuals, and they have to take what they can get. They are simply accidents, industrially speaking, human entities who have a few years on their hands that they must use for what they can get." Dr. Francis Tyson, professor of social economics in the school of economics, University of Pittsburgh, does not wholly agree with the contention of Prof. Barnes. Dr. Tyson is reported as follows: "Perhaps Mr. Barnes, who has been a historian, coming more recently into the more real and practical field of economics, does not realize that this problem is not at all new, since the census figures of 1910 show 8,077,000 women gainfully employed, and, with the war, this number has been tremendously increased, so that the 1920 census will, in my opinion, show more than 12,000,000 working women. Woman is a great economic and industrial asset, and it is no exaggeration to say that she made possible the winning of the war." Doubtless the vast majority of women workers desired at least to be only casuals, and were looking forward to that longed for heaven of every good woman heart, a home in which peace and gladness should be found. However, for whatever cause, even before the war, the army of women workers was rapidly increasing year by year, and the working woman is today undoubtedly a great economic and industrial asset. But if the major portion of them were Christian wives and mothers how immeasurably they would add to the moral and spiritual values of our community and national life. The supreme need of every land is more Christian homes. To have more Christian homes in America we must have more Christian men in America.—United Presbyterian.

FOR SALE—Hook and Hastings pipe organ. Two manual, pedal bass. Light oak case, gold display pipes. Reason for selling, new church required larger organ. Good as new. Call or write Mr. A. T. McLean, Lumberton, N. C. A real bargain.

VIRGINIA, Danville
Randolph-Macon Institute FOR GIRLS. Limited to 100
 College preparatory and special course for those not wishing to go to college. Vocal and instrumental Music, Art, and Expression. Attractive home life. Gymnasium. Branch of the Randolph-Macon System. Rates $425. Catalogue. Address Chas. G. Evans, A. M., Principal, Box C.

CHURCH ENVELOPES. Double and single envelope systems. Samples and prices sent upon request.
 Double Envelope Corporation, Roanoke, Va.

Aberdeen & Rockfish Railroad

Between Aberdeen and Fayetteville
Eastbound		Westbound
Daily Ex. Sunday	Mixed	Pass.	Pass. Mixed
No. 22	No. 38	No. 41	No. 21
7 30 am	9 10 am	Lv. Aberdeen Ar. 6 41 pm	5 00 pm
ar 8 35 am	10 00 am	Rae ford	5 55 pm
lv 2 10 pm		Ar. Fayetteville Lv. 4 50 pm	ar 2 50 pm
4 00 pm	11 20 am		1 00 pm

WAGRAM BRANCH

Southbound		Northbound
Daily Ex. Sun.	Mixed	Daily Ex. Sun.	Mixed
No. 11		No. 12
Lv. 10 30 am	Rae ford	Ar. 12 40 pm
Ar. 11 15 am	Wagram	Lv. 12 00 noon

W. A. BLUE, General Supt., Aberdeen, N. C.

Chicora College for Women

THE PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE OF SOUTH CAROLINA

A Standard College of Distinction and Character

Religion and Philosophy Letters and Science
Home Economics The Fine Arts
 (Music, Art and Expression)

For Catalogue and Information, address

Pres. S. G. BYRD, D.D., Columbia, S. C.

COLUMBIA COLLEGE

COLUMBIA, S. C.

A College for Women ranked in Class "A" by Board of Education, M. E. Church, South. Recognized for its high type of Christian culture.
 Unusually complete educational facilities, strong university-trained faculty, thorough equipment, ideal location.
 Handsome fire-proof buildings, elegantly fitted with every convenience for health, comfort and safety.
 Beautiful 20-acre campus, affording ample opportunity for outdoor games.
 Library of upwards of 5,000 volumes in large, well-lighted quarters. Fine collection of magazines.
 Thorough courses leading to degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science.
 Conservatory of Music under direction of skilled instructors.
 Thorough courses in Art, Expression, Business, and Home Economics.
 1919 session begins September 17th. For descriptive catalogue, address

G. T. PUGH, Ph. D., President, Columbia, S. C.

The United States Railroad Administration
Announces

The following changes in schedules of trains between Greensboro, N. C. and Goldsboro, N. C.

EFFECTIVE SUNDAY, AUGUST 24, 1919

Train 108 now leaving Greensboro 6:00 A. M. will leave 7:25 A. M. Arrive Goldsboro 12:40 P. M.

Train 144 now leaving Greensboro 8:10 A. M. will leave 9:20 A. M. Arrive Goldsboro 2:40 P. M.

No Change in Schedules of Trains 22 and 112, Eastbound.

No Change in Schedules of Trains Westbound.

For detail information apply to Consolidated or Depot Ticket Office.
 Phone Number 20.

Sweeten Your Land

Increase your yield and save on your fertilizer bill. Use

RELCO MARL

Costs little, means much. Guaranteed 90% Lime Carbonate. For prices, free soil test papers and literature, address

Dept. 8-B, Roanoke Lime Co., Inc., Roanoke, Va.

The headmaster of Eton College, England, contributes to the Nineteenth Century some good stories illustrative of "The Humor of Boyhood." Here is an example: "Trace the growth of the power of Parliament during the time of the Tudors." Answer: "In the reign of Elizabeth the Commons were always petitioning the Sovereign to marry; a thing they would not have dreamt of doing in the time of Henry the Eighth." —The Congregationalist and Advance

Each sorrow conquered is another key To break the bars of immortality; There were no finding without first a loss; No resurrection, had there been no cross.

Clover-Vetch-Alfalfa

CLOVER In Your Cotton Alleys

Plant after last working of cotton crop. Ready when cotton is picked. For grazing, hay and soil building. Saves a season.

VETCH With Oats and Rye

Makes very best feed. Will double your yield and builds your soil. Vetch stubble turned under is equal to 700 lbs. of good grade commercial fertilizer per acre.

ALFALFA The Best Paying Crop

4 or 5 crops per year without cultivation. Grows several years without re-seeding. Wonderful land builder.

These Crops

Produce Big Money Crops
Make the Best Feed Crops and Build Up Your Soil.

Inoculate Your Seed With

NitRA-germ

TRADE MARK

and Be Sure of a Good Stand

It Improves Your Crop and Land.

Read the Experiences of These Prominent Farmers

First Good Clover Crop

"I bought two acres of your bacteria for crimson clover last September and used the same according to instructions, and am pleased to state that I have received very satisfactory results therefrom. I beg also to state that I have on several previous occasions tried to grow clover, but have always failed until I used NitRA-germ. NitRA-germ has my highest recommendation for clover growing in the South.

In conclusion I beg to say that I never intend to try to grow clover without the use of NitRA-germ."

S. A. CARR, Farmville, N. C.

Best Stand

"I used NitRA-germ last year for twenty-five acres vetch and crimson clover and will say I am highly pleased with results. I secured a perfect stand and consider it all you claim for it, and take pleasure in recommending it for growing clovers and vetch. I expect to continue use of same. With best wishes."

CHAS. LUTZ, President, The Ky. Horse and Mule Co., Wayne Co., N. C.

A Perfect Stand

"I used NitRA-germ on clover and alfalfa and got a perfect stand. My neighbors planted without inoculating and got nothing."

W. H. McCULLERS, Johnston Co., N. C.

Sure NitRA-germ Will Grow It

"I purchased NitRA-germ for one acre alfalfa and four acres crimson clover last season. I wish to say my alfalfa is as near perfect as I could wish. I have already cut it three times and am sure of two more cuttings. I secured a good stand of clover and have corn planted on the land where the clover was sowed, and am certain I will make forty per cent. more corn on this land than I will on the land adjoining it, planted the same day where there was no clover. I am highly pleased with NitRA-germ for growing alfalfa and clover and expect to use more this season. I am sure that clover is the best and cheapest method of fertilizing land and I am equally sure that NitRA-germ will grow it."

MARION BRYANT, Wilson Co., N. C.

Every Farmer Should Try It

"I sowed four acres of crimson clover late in the fall, on which NitRA-germ was used. It was harrowed in after peas and it made fine results. I cut the clover the 15th of May and housed about 6 tons. The field was never sown in clover but once before, about three years ago, when it would come up and all would die. I have bought about $150 worth of clover seed in somewhere about five years, and this is the first clover I have ever made. NitRA-germ does what it is recommended to do. I think every farmer that hasn't used NitRA-germ ought to give it a fair test."

O. J. COPPEDGE, Spring Hope, N. C.

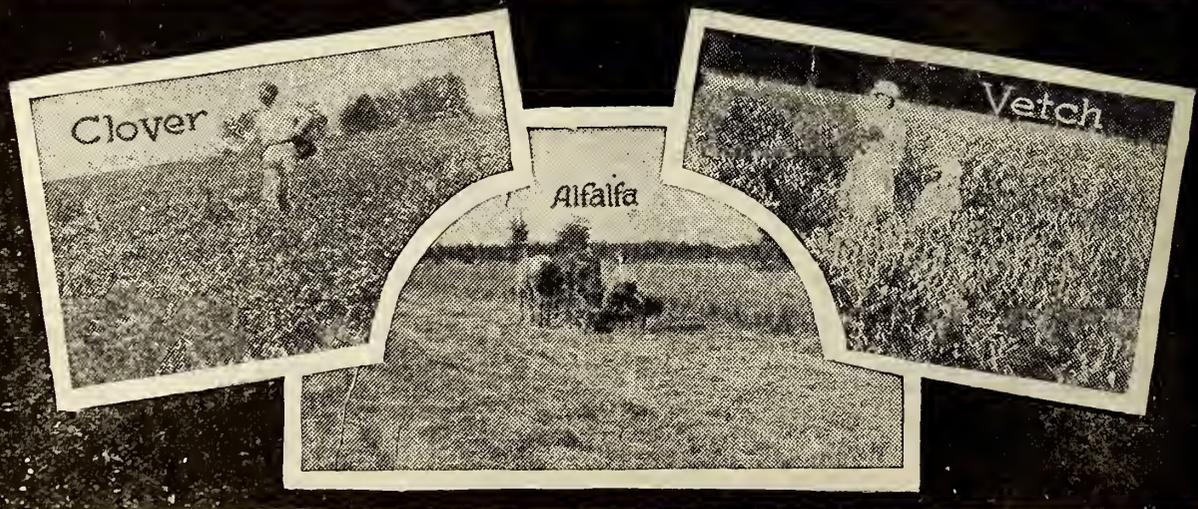

All Farmers Pleased

"I beg to advise that your NitRA-germ has proven very satisfactory to everyone who used same in my County. Especially do I refer you to Mr. C. L. Bevil, Fayetteville, N. C., for a statement recommending this material. He has a field of clover, hairy vetch and alfalfa near this city that is the best I ever saw, and I want to say that your NitRA-germ was used to inoculate those seed, and I can assure you that Mr. Bevil will be glad to give you a most excellent recommendation. He is highly pleased with your goods, as well as all the other farmers who used same in this County."

J. D. FLETCHER, Fayetteville, N. C. Dem. Agt. for Cumberland County.

Delivered Prices of NitRA-germ: 1 Acre $2; 5 Acres $9; 20 Acres $33; 50 Acres $75; 100 Acres $135.
Write for Free Book No. 6-H

NitRA-germ Sales Co., Inc., Savannah, Georgia.

Queens College for Women

Charlotte, North Carolina

Established More Than Sixty Years Ago as "Charlotte Female Institute"

It is Now Recognized as the Best Equipped College for Women in the Entire South

We have five new two-story brick buildings with modern fire extinguishers, designed and erected solely for convenience, comfort, efficiency and safety. These buildings are located in the beautiful suburb of Myers Park, three and one-half miles from the center of the city.

We have a splendid wooded campus of 25 acres.

15 units required for entrance. Graduates from recognized State High Schools admitted on certificate.

This College is built on a firm belief in the inspiration of the Bible. Thorough Bible courses provided.

Standard college course leading to B. A. degree. Most complete equipment for thorough education.

Physical, Chemical and Biological Laboratories; Library, Gymnasium, Preparatory department. Able faculty. Dormitories divided into units of two rooms and connecting with bath, accommodating four students. Large, well-ventilated rooms, big closets. Buildings as near fire-proof as possible. Water, gas, electricity. Convenient street car service.

School of Music, Expression and Art offers superior opportunities. Music building has twenty-six rooms equipped exclusively for this department. Complete, thorough course leading to diploma. Post graduate course in music offered.

Our Motto: "Christian Women for Christian Homes"

Necessary expenses very moderate, about $325.00 for the regular literary course, including board. FALL TERM begins September 10, 1919.

For further information send for catalogue or write

WM. ANDERSON, Registrar, Box 300, Charlotte, N. C.

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between indigestion and rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. All of these diseases are probably related and all are probably due in whole or in part to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection, Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder Troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time will give a permanent relief. It will purify the blood, Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant of Savannah writes:—"I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began to use Shivar Spring Water and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes of Virginia writes:—"Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes:—"The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam of South Carolina writes:—"My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter of Virginia writes:—"Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by Rheumatism, Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

If you suffer from Rheumatism, or from any curable disease accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the

Shivar Spring,
Box 4-D, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

Name
Address
Shipping Point

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERSISERS
PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

BOOKKEEPING AND SHORTHAND
thoroughly taught. Enroll any time. Address Greensboro Commercial School, Greensboro, N. C., for Catalogue. Special Summer Rates now on.

Test Your Soil
If it's sour, no plant food will help. Enrich and sweeten your soil with
RELCO MARL
Neutralizes acid, produces a big crop, lasts 5 years. Guaranteed 90% Lime Carbonate. For prices, free soil test papers and literature, address
Dept. 8-C, Roanoke Lime Co., Inc., Roanoke, Va.

STATEMENT
WARSAW FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY
KIEF, RUSSIA.

Condition December 31, 1918, as Shown by Statement Filed.

Amount of Ledger Assets December 31 of previous year . . .	$1,027,286.05
Income—From Policyholders, $869,572.17; Miscellaneous, $36,941.21; Total	906,513.38
Disbursements—To Policyholders, $540,937.66; Miscellaneous, $302,885.13; Total	843,822.79
ASSETS
Value of Bonds and Stocks	$1,050,590.84
Deposited in Trust Companies and Banks on interest	46,589.74
Agents' balances, representing business written subsequent to October 1, 1918	9,356.78
Agents' balances, representing business written prior to October 1, 1918	453.46
Interest and rents due and accrued	9,589.91
All other Assets, as detailed in statement	1,699.38
Total	$1,099,566.55
Less Assets not admitted	12,694.30
Total admitted Assets	$1,086,872.25
LIABILITIES
Net amount of unpaid losses and claims	$ 126,704.56
Unearned premiums	543,035.40
Salaries, rents, expenses, bills, accounts, fees, etc., due or accrued	6,500.00
Estimated amount payable for Federal, State, county, and municipal taxes due or accrued	7,500.00
Contingent commissions, or other charges due or accrued	3,000.00
Total amount of all Liabilities except Capital	$ 686,739.96
Surplus over all liabilities	$400,132.29
Surplus as regards Policyholders	400,132.29
Total Liabilities	$1,086,872.25
BUSINESS IN NORTH CAROLINA DURING 1918.
Fire Risks written, $471,405.00; Premiums received	$ 4,892.10
Losses incurred—Fire, $4,044.56; Paid	4,988.49
U. S. Managers, Fester & Folsom, Inc.; Home Office in U. S., New York City; Attorney for service, Jas. R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, Raleigh, N. C.
STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, INSURANCE DEPARTMENT, Raleigh, April 15, 1919.
I, James R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct abstract of the statement of the Warsaw Fire Insurance Company, of Kief, Russia, filed with this Department, showing the condition of said Company on the 31st day of December, 1918.
Witness my hand and official seal, the day and year above written.
JAMES R. YOUNG, Insurance Commissioner.

COUNTERACTING BOLSHEVISM AT THE ROOT.

The Moody Bible Institute, in co-operation with one of the largest religious organizations in the Middle West, is about to introduce a Russian course in its curriculum, designed to afford those who have accepted the Christian faith an opportunity to prepare themselves, free of charge, for Christian work among their own people wherever found. The proposed course will cover from two to three years and offers a thorough training in Elementary and Secondary English, Bible Study and Gospel Music, enabling such as complete the course to reach their fellow countrymen with intelligent effort.

Partial or entire self-support will be made possible for those who desire it.

Kentucky Theological Seminary
Louisville, Kentucky

Able faculty. Course of study comprehensive and adapted to the times. High standards. Practical training. Excellent library facilities. Splendid buildings, with comfortable dormitories. Expenses moderate. Session begins October 1, 1919. For further information write the President.

Charles R. Hemphill

POSITIONS

We want three young men and four young women (16 to 38), from each county, to train at home for office positions paying from $1,200 to $2,000 a year. For list of positions and other valuable information, address Draughon's College, Box G-210, Nashville, Tenn.

DAVIS-WAGNER NEW BUILDING, ACCOMMODATING 500 STUDENTS.
Business College
POSITIONS FOR GRADUATES. 306 East Freemason St.
CATALOGUE FREE. NORFOLK, VA.

North Carolina State College of Agriculture and Engineering
WEST RALEIGH

A Land Grant College founded under an act of Congress by the State Legislature of North Carolina in March, 1887. Splendidly equipped for the education of the sons of the State in the technical and industrial arts.

Four year courses in Agriculture, in Agricultural Chemistry, and in Civil, Electrical, Mechanical, Chemical and Textile Engineering. New departments in Agricultural Engineering and Highway Engineering.

Numerous short courses.

Unit of Reserve Officers Training Corps. Seniors and Juniors receive pay amounting to $118 annually. All students receive free uniforms amounting in four-years to $164.

Strong athletic teams.

$40,000 Y. M. C. A. building. Regular paid secretary.

Two hundred and forty free scholarships.

Requirement for admission: eleven units—practically equivalent to the completion of tenth grade work.

Board $16.00 per month. Tuition $45.00 per year. Room rent, heat and light $30.00 per year.

Enrollment last session 1,020, exclusive of all summer students.

Fall term begins September 3.

For catalogue, illustrated circular or entrance blanks, write

E. B. OWEN, Registrar

DAVIDSON COLLEGE

"The greatest single institution, in point of service, controlled by the Southern Presbyterian Church."

THORNTON WHALING, President.

Columbia Theological Seminary.

COURSES OF STUDY: Literary, Scientific, Classical preparing for ministry, medicine, law, engineering, business, teaching.

FACULTY experienced and University trained.

COLLEGE SPIRIT: The boys work in season and out for a "Bigger and Better Davidson." The typical Davidson student, or alumnus, is loyal, enthusiastic, and successful in whatever he undertakes.

Y. M. C. A. SECRETARY will be continued next year. Rev. R. W. Miles, General Secretary, will be a big factor in the boys' college life.

LITERARY SOCIETIES at Davidson have a rightful place on the campus. Davidson has contested 20 inter-collegiate debates and has won 14, or 70%. The student gets a fine parliamentary training.

IN ATHLETICS Davidson has football, baseball, tennis, track, golf outdoor gymnasium, large new gymnasium. R. O. T. C.

MUSICAL TALENT has expression and development through the Glee Club and Orchestra, an enthusiastic organization that furnishes music for public functions at the college, and gives concerts each year in other towns and colleges.

Students find the climate bracing and beneficial and the social atmosphere friendly and congenial.

Expenses exceptionally reasonable.

Old Students have already registered for next term from the following States: North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Mississippi, Maryland, Alabama, Tennessee, Texas, Arkansas, Georgia, West Virginia, District of Columbia, Louisiana, China, Japan.

New Students from the following: North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Missouri, District of Columbia, Colorado, Kentucky, Indiana, Japan.

Register early; make sure of room.

Illustrated folder and other literature will be sent immediately upon receipt of your request.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE : Davidson, N. C.

The home life of the institute will afford separation from former atheistic and undesirable influences and surround the students with all the helpful atmosphere of a Christian home.

The education of young Russians in our country is a subject of compelling interest to every Christian patriot. There are 30,000 Russians in Chicago alone. Fewer than 100 of these are known to have become Christians. Other cities and industrial centers hold large numbers of them.

These thousands of Russians may be a power for good here and in their own land, or they may become an increasing menace to us. Through them Bolshevism is being disseminated and many of the same causes of unrest and disorder prevailing in Russia are working in our country today. If the trend toward anarchy and infidelity is to be checked and their antagonistic attitude toward law and order is to be changed, definite efforts are called for. Such Christian educational centers as the Moody Bible Institute can help to meet this need.

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

Birdseye View OIL MAP OF KENTUCKY Free

Also sample copy FREE of the KENTUCKY OIL JOURNAL. Fully illustrated; thirty-two pages; seventy-five thousand readers. Address
EKENTUCKY OIL JOURNAL
 No. 21 INTER SOUTHERN BLDG., LOUISVILLE, KY.

NEW SONG BOOKS
 For Your Church 8c

A wonderful value; 83 familiar songs of the Gospel, words and music. Used all over the world. Only $8 per hundred for No. 1 or 2, round or shaped notes, and $15 for No. 1 and 2 combined, round notes only. Send 30c for samples. Money back if not pleased.
 E. A. K. HACKETT, Dept. No. 56, FT. WAYNE, IND.

YOUR FACE?
 Is the Complexion Muddy, Tanned, Freckled?
 If troubled with skin eruptions, sunburn, pimples, try
PALMER'S SKIN-SUCCESS SOAP
 It cleanses, softens and clears the skin and tends to remove sunburn, tan, freckles, blackheads, pimples and eczema.
 Thoroughly antiseptic. Ask your druggist, or write for free samples to
THE MORGAN DRUG CO.,
 1521 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Medical College of Virginia

(State Institution—Co-Educational)
 STUART MCGUIRE, M.D., LL.D., Pres.
MEDICINE DENTISTRY
PHARMACY NURSING
 New buildings, completely equipped. Laboratories under full time instructors. Unusual clinical facilities offered in three hospitals owned by the college, also in city hospitals and institutions.
 81st session begins September 17, 1919.
 For catalogue, address
J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary
 1121 East Clay Street RICHMOND, VA.

PREPARE FOR A LARGER SALARY
 In times of Peace prepare for a better job at a larger salary. Modern business demands trained men and women experts. The better the training the larger your salary will be. Today our graduates are in the front ranks of modern business. Enroll with this well-equipped business college, and help to make your future success secure. Handsome catalogue mailed on request. You can enter any time. School open all summer.
Kings Business College
 Raleigh, N. C. and Charlotte, N. C.

Union Theological Seminary
 RICHMOND, VA.
 W. W. Moore, D. D., LL.D.
 C. C. Hersman, D. D., LL.D.
 T. C. Johnson, D. D., LL.D.
 T. H. Rice, D. D., LL.D.
 W. L. Lingle, D. D.
 E. C. Caldwell, D. D.
 Edward Mack, D. D.
 George Sleeth
 Biblical Literature
 Greek Language
 Systematic Theology
 English Bible and Pastoral Theology
 Church History, Missions and Sunday School
 New Testament Exegesis
 Hebrew Language and Exegesis
 Public Speaking
 Session begins October 1, 1919 For catalogue, apply to
REV. W. W. MOORE, President

Grind Your Corn the Simple Way
 Delicate, Complicated Machinery is neither necessary nor economical. Save money in grinding your grain with—
The Gibbes Corn Mill
 Simple—Fast—Economical—Durable
 No complicated parts, whole machine easily handled. With ball-bearing system it is light running and rapid, requiring very little power. Little wear, smooth running, seldom a part to replace. Made of the best of materials. Absolutely guaranteed. For illustrated literature and prices address—
GIBBES MACHINERY CO., Dept. A-2, Columbia, S. C.

THE School for Your Boy
 Nothing is so effective in the training of the youth—in guarding his morals, his physique—as a military training. All young men should begin with a military training. The training of
BLACKSTONE MILITARY ACADEMY
 is conducive of culture, refinement, thorough literary foundation and a gentlemanly bearing. Thorough academic, preparatory and commercial courses. Excellently equipped modern buildings. Gymnasium, Infirmary and 40 new rooms now under construction. Two U. S. Army officers in charge of the B. O. T. C. Trained nurse in charge of Infirmary. For literature, write,
COL. E. S. LIGON, President, Blackstone Military Academy, Box R. Blackstone, Va.

PEACE INSTITUTE
 RALEIGH, NORTH CAROLINA
 For Young Women. Established 1857
 College Courses. Preparatory Courses for Standard College Requirements. Special Diplomas, Piano, Voice, Art, Expression and Home Economics. Commercial Course. Teacher Training Course. Specialists in all departments.
LULA B. WYNNE HALL, Home School For Girls.
MISS MARY OWEN GRAHAM, Pres.

ONE TOUCH OF NATURE.

Down the street came a wagon, loaded with meat and drawn by a well-rounded, well-fed little mare. Her steps became slower and slower, and finally, in the middle of the car tracks, she stopped.

"Git ap," said the driver, git ap, Jenny!"

But Jenny only turned appealing eyes toward the man on the seat. Behind him came the shouts and oaths of other drivers.

"Poor Jenny, poor little horse!" said the big, dirty man. "Is she all tired out?"

At the sound of his voice the little horse sighed a sigh of tired appreciation.

"Never mind," he went on soothingly, as he scrambled down off the seat and took her by the bridle. "We'll go right out to the side here and rest a bit." And he led her away from the crowd and stood patting her well-curried sides, while she rubbed her nose against his face.

The other drivers moved on, then turned and looked. Some of them smiled. Others replaced the whips which had been taken from their sockets to hurry their own horses after the delay.—New York Times.

RUGS CLEANED PERFECTLY.

Every house-keeper will be glad to learn that rugs as well as garments can be cleaned perfectly at a very low cost by our faultless cleaning process. This method of cleaning rugs and clothing restores the newness and freshness, and enables you to get better and longer service from your rugs and your clothing.

Send us a trial order. Parcel Post gives prompt and inexpensive delivery. Satisfaction is guaranteed. Charlotte Laundry, Charlotte, N. C.

Church Furniture
 WORK OF THE HIGHEST QUALITY
 AT REASONABLE PRICES
 Write for Catalogue
BUDDE & WEIS MFG. CO.
 JACKSON, TENNESSEE

"In the A. E. F. With an Artist"

The sketch book and diary of Lieut. J. B. Mallard. Send $1.00 for your copy to

J. B. MALLARD

Box 625

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The Cumberland General Hospital, of Fayetteville N. C., offers to young ladies between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five the following courses of training for nurses: Three years practical and theoretical work which prepares for State Board-Examinations. Fall classes being formed now. Apply at once to Supt. of Nurses.

EXPERT KODAK FINISHING

Developing and printing done by artists. Most beautiful work guaranteed at all times. Satisfaction or no charge. Developing, 10c, per film. Printing: 2 1/4 x 3 1/4, 3c.; 2 1/4 x 4 1/4, 4c.; 3 1/4 x 5 1/2, 5c. Quick delivery. Send one film to test our service.

Ligon Drug Co., Spartanburg, S. C.

New Bath Robe Blankets,
 pretty designs for the school boys and girls,
 $3.95 $4.95

New Line Cotton or Wool
 Blankets, plain or fancies,
 double or single, for the school or college or home

Belk Bros.

22--STORES--22

Carolinas' Progressive Leaders

Third Floor
 Specials

We devote one whole floor to Trunks, Suit Cases, Traveling Bags, Comforts, Blankets, Bath Robes, and so on. Buying for 22 stores, a carload of Trunks is nothing unusual for us. Same thing in many other lines. We give you better values---a stronger, better Trunk for your money. If this is what you want, look at our line.

LOT NO. 1—Canvas-covered Trunks, strongly built, good heavy linings, at $6.95, $7.50

LOT NO. 2—Canvas-covered Trunks, very strongly built, heavy locks, leather straps, $10 to $12.50 value. Extra special, at $8.95, $9.95

EXTRA SPECIAL IN FIBRE TRUNKS

This is a very strong line with us. We give you a much better Trunk in this line for your money. We buy them by the hundreds. You want a Trunk of "Quality and Durability." We can suit you. Browns and blacks, almost any size, 30 inch to 40, one or two trays—and for "Less Money," at . . . $9.95 to $17.50

TRAVELING BAGS

In this line, as in Suitcases, we give you a better bag for your money. It's easy for us to do this—we get better ones for our money—hence can give a better one. All kinds, sizes, shapes, and so on, at $1.98, $2.98, $4.95, $7.50, $8.95, $9.95, $12.95 and on up to the sporty kind at $37.50

HOW ABOUT A FINE WARDROBE TRUNK?

We have just a few $50.00 Wardrobe Trunks, 5 trays, hat tray, coat and skirt hangers, finely linen lined. Very strongly built and we are quite sure a $50.00 Trunk. Special at $39.95 and deep—a great, menacing sheet of dark water?

"It's about thirty feet wide," said the doctor. She might have been reading my thoughts. "It runs along at the foot of the hospital garden. We all love the Marne. It's more than a river to us."

I did not answer for a moment. I sat very still and watched the silver flicker of the stream that flowed so calmly beside our path, and as I watched I thought of the spirit of a race that could make an impenetrable barrier of such a slight thing. Suddenly I, too, loved the Marne.

"Yes, it's more than a river," I echoed. "It's a symbol!"

We drove the rest of the way to the hospital in silence.—Ex.

It is the most reasonable thing in the world to believe, that God, being what He is, will do as He promised to do.—Mary Hopkins.

The College of William and Mary
1693—1919
FOR MEN AND WOMEN

Thorough academic courses leading to the degrees of A. B., B. S., and M. A.; well equipped laboratories and excellent library; unexcelled health conditions, historic environment and intimate contact with the best ideals of VIRGINIA.

WILLIAM and MARY is also the STATE TEACHERS' COLLEGE FOR MEN AND WOMEN.

Special Teacher's Training Courses. Course in Home Economics under the Smith-Hughes Act, Pre-Medical courses, Pre-Electrical and Pre-Chemical Engineering courses. Courses in business administration and commerce. Courses for commercial teachers.

State scholarships for those preparing to be teachers and superintendents.

Loan fund for Virginia students.

Next session begins September 18th, 1919.

For particulars address
J. A. C. CHANDLER, Pres.,
Williamsburg, Va.

10 Cents a Day Pays for This Symphonola

Plays all records, Victor, Columbia, Edison, Pathe, Little Wonder, Emerson. Take a year to pay, after 30 days' trial. Compare its tone for clearness, volume, with more costly instruments. Return at our expense if it fails to make good. Ask today for the

Beautifully Illustrated Symphonala Book FREE

Shows this and other Symphonola styles, sold on easy payments.

Symphonala Records Get our list of the latest popular song and other clear sounding, full toned disc records. Playable on any phonograph.

Larkin Co. Desk JL919 Buffalo, N. Y.

There's Quality

In Old Clothes

Many of the old suits of last year's purchase, tho soiled have more real good in them than suits of much higher price of today. While prices have increased quality has decreased.

Let Ledbetter's Bring it Out.

Our prices will make the old clothes new again. Get them out and mail it today.

Fancy Dyers and Dry Cleaners of
Suits, Dresses, Sport Coats, Silks, Furs, Gloves, Velvets, Feathers, Ribbons, Portiers, Rugs, Carpets, Blankets. Hats cleaned and blocked. Address,
Ledbetter's, Rocky Mount, N. C.

CHARLOTTE MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS

MEMORIALS OF QUALITY

"WE LEAD"

Quality First

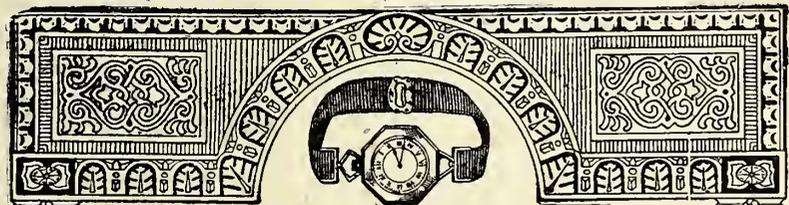

Prices Right

Workmanship

Unsurpassed

Memorials in Silver Georgia Marble are unsurpassed in beauty and durability.

CHARLOTTE MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS
WEST 7th ST. and SOUTHERN RAILWAY
"Cemetery Gate" Phone 281-CHARLOTTE, N.C.

64 Years in the
JEWELRY BUSINESS
have given us an enviable reputation to sustain.

If interested in Diamonds, Watches, Jewelry or Silverware, it will be to your interest to consult us.

We are pleased to answer your inquiries.

JAMES ALLAN & CO.
289 King Street, Charleston, S. C.
The Hallmark Jewelers. Catalog on Request

Sparkles

Doctor—Did that cure for deafness really help your brother?

Pat—Sure enough; he hadn't heard a sound for years, and the day after he took that medicine he heard from a friend in America.

"I hear, doctor, that my friend Brown, whom you have been treating so long for liver trouble, has died of stomach trouble," said one of the physician's patients.

"Don't believe all you hear," replied the doctor. "When I treat a man for liver trouble he dies of liver trouble."

The child who frequently repeated the hymn in which occur the lines, "Satan trembles when he sees

The weakest saint upon his knees," asked the following question of its nurse: "But what was the little saint doing on Satan's knees?"—Spectator.

Ethel's mother was trying to spray her throat with the atomizer, but met with considerable opposition from the small victim. "I wouldn't mind it so much," said Ethel, "if you would let me honk it myself."—Chicago Tribune.

"You simply cannot trust anybody. Every one seems so dishonest nowadays," declared the woman. "My maid, in whom I had the utmost confidence, left me suddenly yesterday and took with her my beautiful pearl brooch." "That is too bad," sympathized the friend. "Which one was it?" "That very pretty one I smuggled through last spring."—Wall Street Journal.

Wings for Mrs. Vanderbilt.

Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt tells this story on herself.

She was doing canteen work in France during the recent misunderstanding in that vicinity, and devoted considerable time to entertaining American soldiers in one of the hostess houses. Being a capable dancer and attractive, she was in much demand among the boys. One evening she danced several times with a tall, tow-haired doughboy who showed symptoms of great loneliness and talked volubly about things back in Michigan.

When the evening ended, the tow-headed one came over to Mrs. Vanderbilt.

"I've had a bully time," he said, "and I want to keep track of you. We're moving out of here tomorrow for the front. But if we get back, I'd like to look you up over in the States. My name is Albert Bridgeman, from Grand Rapids. What's yours?"

"I'm Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt," she replied.

The doughboy scanned her from head to foot.

"That's right, chicken," he said, "fly high!"—Cartoons Magazine.

THE WESTMINSTER SCHOOL

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL
FOR BOYS

Operated by Kings Mountain Presbytery
$300.00 Per Year

Write for Catalogue to

Rev. T. E. P. Woods, Box 6, Rutherfordton, N. C.

4 Per Cent

Time Certificates of Deposit

They are Interest Bearing. They are Payable on Demand. They Afford a Good Income for Funds Awaiting Permanent Investment

GET ONE

AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY

Charlotte

::

North Carolina

YES, Preachers and Teachers Are Human

They should have no discount and no cheaper railroad fares than you and I. They should be paid for services rendered—amply paid. If he can't earn enough for family use and the nest egg for the future, he made a sad mistake as to family, else he should change his calling instanter.

The Mutual Building & Loan

Will save a man and his family if they're worth saving, but they must help. It furnishes the "sure cure," but boasts no regrets at the demise of a feller who deliberately refuses to take the medicine.

E. L. KEESLER, Sec. & Treas., 25 S. Tryon St., CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Charlotte National Bank Resources $4,000,000.00

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

PAYS FOUR PER CENT.

On Either Time Certificates of Deposit or Savings Accounts

MAIL ORDER Business Solicited and PROMPT ATTENTION Given

JOHN M. SCOTT	President
W. J. CHAMBERS	Vice-President
J. F. ROBERTSON	Vice-President
W. H. TWITTY	Cashier
C. W. BUTT	Assistant Cashier

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

REV. J. R. BRIDGES, D. D.

EDITORS

REV. R. C. REED, D. D.

VOL. LX.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., SEPTEMBER 17, 1919.

No. 37.

A Woman's Prayer.

O Lord, who knowest every need of mine,
Help me to bear each cross, and not repine;
Grant me fresh courage every day,
Help me to do my work alway
Without complaint!

O Lord, thou knowest well how dark the way,
Guide thou my footsteps, lest they stray;
Give me fresh faith for every hour,
Lest I should ever doubt thy power,
And make complaint!

Give me a heart, O Lord, strong to endure,
Help me to keep it simple, pure;
Make me unselfish, helpful, true
In every act, whate'er I do,
And keep content!

Help me to do my woman's share,
Make me courageous, strong to bear
Sunshine or shadow in my life;
Sustain me in the daily strife
To keep content!

—Ladies' Home Journal.

Editorial

The Abuse of Scripture.

IT is bad enough when the novice does it. The young preacher is inexcusable for inadvertently, recklessly or ruthlessly pretending to extract from a text what he is really extracting from his scantily furnished and poorly disciplined mind. But this is a mere peccadillo compared to the crime of the veteran leaders of the Church who commend the wholesale abuse of the Scriptures through the International Sunday School lessons. For example, the title of the lesson for August 24 is "Social Responsibility." By this is manifestly meant the Responsibility of the Church to Society, the obligation to seek social regeneration as opposed to individual regeneration, the duty of the Church to serve the community en masse. According to current usage the "social gospel" means the gospel of social uplift, of better wages for labor, better housings for the poor, of more physical and material comforts, not for this, or that individual, but for all the less favored of fortune.

The Scripture from which the Church's social responsibility is drawn is the parable of the good Samaritan. It might just as well have been drawn from the story of the Samaritan woman. She gave a drink of water to the tired and thirsty Christ. In either case it was one individual serving another individual's needs. It is a far cry from such service as that to the responsibility resting on the Church to undertake social and industrial reforms for removing all the "inequalities and injustices which poison the relations of men in business and society."

Worse still is the abuse in the lesson for August 31. The theme of this lesson is "Temperance," not merely, if at all, in the sense of self-restraint, but in the sense of abstinence from intoxicants. The Scripture from which the theme is drawn is the account of Daniel "purposing in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the King's meat, nor with the wine which he drank."

By no fair means can this Scripture be made to teach temperance in the ordinary sense of this term. The real theme is loyalty to religious principle. Such loyalty may require total abstinence from intoxicants, or it may not. Here it did require abstention not only from wine but equally from meat. Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the "portion of the King's meat." Would any one argue from this that total abstinence from meat is a universal and perpetual obligation? No more can one argue from this incident that total abstinence from wine is a perpetual and universal obligation. Whatever motive prompted Daniel to abstain from the meat presumably prompted him to abstain from the wine. In neither case was it the conviction of the inherent sinfulness of eating meat or drinking wine. It was the conviction that both the meat and the wine from the King's table had probably, or at any rate possibly, been used in connection with idolatrous worship.

Is there any Scripture which teaches the duty of total abstinence from intoxicants? If so, then we should use such Scriptures, and not press into service other Scriptures which were not designed to teach it. It is a sin against any author to represent him as teaching what a careful and candid examination of his writings will show that he really does not teach. The sin is far more serious when the author is one whom we allow to be inspired of God. In such case we misrepresent the teaching of God.

Daniel may have been a total abstainer. He had a personal right to be. But we are not authorized by this incident to say that he was, any more than we are authorized to say that he was a total abstainer from meat.

No book has been abused like the Bible. Texts are torn from their context and made to teach exactly the opposite of what the author intended. Among no class has the sin been more common or more aggravated than among temperance reformers. Many of them have suffered zeal to run away with discretion, and have gone so far as to twist and distort texts of Scripture to serve their purpose. How often have they quoted Col. 2:21, "Touch not, taste not, handle not," as a divine prohibition against the use of intoxicants. The slightest examination of the contest shows that Paul was protesting against the observance of such ordinances as though they were of divine authority.

It is to be regretted that those in charge of our Sunday School lessons and literature should set the example of such careless and harmful use of Scripture. It is the duty of those who teach the Bible to draw from each passage just as nearly as possible the very thought and the very shade of thought that was in the minds of the writer. He has no right to use a passage to teach a truth which it was not designed to teach even though that truth is taught in other passages of the Bible. To do so is to handle the word of God deceitfully. When our leaders know how shamefully unfair and unjust is the treatment accorded the Bible by the well-meaning but ignorant and unskillful interpreters, they should feel the more sensibly the obligation to "rightly divide the word of truth."

A Worthy Object.

The zealous stewards of the Lord's money need to look carefully into the various schemes of benevolence that are constantly proposed, else they will find that they have wasted the Lord's money in ways that are not wise. There is no scarcity of causes that appeal to us, but it requires discriminating judgment to choose the right one. We must remember that giving is not solely a matter in which we follow our hearts, because the heart of man is not only "deceitful above all things and desperately wicked," as the Good Book says, but in the average man and woman it makes us do many silly and ill-advised things.

We need judgment in giving, cold, calculating judgment, such as we exercise when we invest our own money. The good women of our Church are always awake to the welfare of our missionaries who, like other preachers, cannot speak for themselves. Those in Africa, for example, are not only exposed to the African fever, but they are compelled to live in the houses common to that land. These houses are built of poles and mud and covered with grass. If the missionary could be the sole occupant of this house, he could stand much of the discomfort; but Africa is a land of snakes and scorpions, of insects and vermin, and these houses soon become infested with a variety of these plagues, that render life miserable for the missionary and his wife.

It is proposed to raise a fund with which to build solid brick houses for our African missionaries, in order that their health may be conserved and their nerves spared. It is understood that whatever is offered must not be taken from our regular offering to Foreign Missions. That cause needs every cent that can be raised. This offering must be extra. Mrs. Bryan, as the treasurer of the ladies, engaged in this commendable enterprise, has in this issue an appeal which we would urge all to read. May every reader catch the vision that she presents, and then, like Paul, be not disobedient unto the vision.

A New Crusade.

We are accustomed to crusades originating in the North, because for some reason unknown to us, the people of that section, especially New England, either have more time on their hands than other sections, or else the climate disposes them to regulating the world, so that they have for years been proposing every kind of civil and moral reform, such as inserting the name of God into the Constitution; assuring the negro in his social and political rights, or forbidding the use by the Southern people of the phrases, "You uns" and "You all." When these moral campaigns reach us fully matured and in active exercise of their functions, they are necessarily under the disadvantage that always attends the appearance of an alien, and for that reason they lose much of their moral force.

Experience seems to have taught them wisdom, with the result that the latest reform comes to us with a reputed Southern parentage. It has made its first appearance in the staid city of Raleigh, a city whose only known weakness thus far has been a native craving for holding office and feeding at the public crib. This new crusade not only begins in Raleigh, which is rather remarkable, but it has also begun among those conservative Church people, the Baptists, who are also noted for their exclusive adherence to their own business. They have their own mode of baptism, and recognize no other, ignoring even the old Jesuit doctrine of "intentions," and they have their own Lord's table with a fence about it. In fact in many ways they say to men, if you will attend to your business, we will attend to ours. We have no fault to find with this position. We only mention it in order to emphasize our surprise that this proposed crusade should have begun in the Baptist Church of Raleigh.

On Sunday, August 24, at the Tabernacle Baptist Church of Raleigh, an evangelist from New York City, Rev. Oscar Haywood by name, preached to an audience that packed the big auditorium, a sermon advocating the abolition of capital punishment in this State. A collection was taken to finance the proposed campaign to create public sentiment that will necessitate the abolition of the death penalty in this State. Several attempts have been made before this toward the same end, but the sober, good sense of the people has always defeated them. When, however, a great Church espouses the cause, it is time that those who hold to the Bible and believe that it ought to be obeyed, should be prepared to defend their position.

Viewed from the sentimental standpoint the abolition of the death penalty is much to be desired, because no one likes to contemplate suffering, and the taking of one life does not bring back the other. Those who favor the abolition of capital punishment look at the question in this light. There is, however, another view of it, which no Christian can refuse to take. We must remember that as Christians we owe obedience to God, and that he has clearly commanded that when man takes a life, his life must also be taken.

Early in the history of our race, before the moral law had been given on Sinai, and before the ceremonial law also had been given, when Noah came from the ark and a new race of men began, the first law given was this: Gen. 9:6, Who-so sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made He man.

From that time on this law has been enforced, and whenever any people have set it aside, murder has increased, and in the end they have been forced to infer that God knew better than man. We have great confidence in the reverence for law on the part of this State and especially on the part of this great Church, and for that reason we are giving ourselves no real concern. The Baptist Church is a Bible Church; and they will be the last people to set aside any one of the Bible commands.

The Proposed Ministerial Union.

Every city and town where there are churches have their Ministerial Unions, where matters religious are discussed and inaugurated, and they serve a most excellent purpose. We, however, are not referring to this common and orthodox institution, because it is no novelty, and therefore does not deserve a separate mention. We are referring to a proposed union of ministers, similar to the labor unions, where united demands can be enforced, when separate demands would be ignored.

When we realize what advances in wages and hours the laboring men of the country have made in recent years, because they have presented a united front, we can easily see that if the preachers would organize and set forth their demand for a living wage and reasonable hours, their lot would soon show a like improvement. As things now are, the condition of the average preacher is a sad one. With the cost of living advanced nearly double, with the wages of the commonest laborer from three to five dollars a day, there are educated men in charge of churches who are actually in want of nourishing food.

Recently we talked with a city pastor who numbers among his members several of the wealthy business men of the city, and whose church has increased its contributions to the benevolent causes over fifty per cent, yet this man is drawing a salary fixed several years ago, and in order to live decently he has to use up the savings of his early ministry. He can plead from the pulpit for an increase in giving to the benevolent causes but with regard to his own need he has to be as dumb as an oyster, and no man cares for his condition. The business men have voluntarily increased the wages of their employees, but it has never entered their minds that in the manse there is going on economies that are pitiful.

Again, the need of union can be seen in the case of those without charge—those old men who have been laid aside because of that strange fancy for young men that has taken hold of our churches, whereby a deadline is drawn when a preacher is sought. You find these men in our cities or in small towns. They are generally dependent for food and clothes upon some relative. But there are other things they need, and they also find the bread of a dependent not very sweet. Vacant pulpits depend upon them for an occasional supply, and the opportunity is eagerly embraced by them, because it gives them a chance to preach again and also some cash to help preserve their self-respect.

But have you ever realized what creatures of circumstances they are? When the invitation comes, it comes without any promise. Like Abraham, they go out, not knowing whither they go, nor what they are to receive. They must raise the cash for their fare and sometimes they have to go to a hotel, and then return home, to wait for whatever compensation may be given them. No one calculates what they have spent, and sometimes the remuneration is less than their outlay. We recall the experience of one of the ablest men of our Church who had passed the deadline as drawn by the Church committees. One of the strong churches asked him to fill its pulpit for one Sunday. He had to have his suit pressed, to pay his own fare to the place, his hotel bill while there, and received the large sum of ten dollars for his services, though the Church was accustomed to pay its pastor at the rate of $50.00 a Sunday.

A Ministerial Union is needed in order to secure a living salary for the permanent pastors and proper compensation for the supply man.

Contributed

A Modern Champion of An Ancient Church

By Rev. Andrew R. Bird.

THE General Assembly at New Orleans last May had the opportunity of hearing Signor Ernesto Giampiccoli, Moderator of the Waldensian Church of Italy. The meeting between this distinguished foreigner and our Assembly was so sudden and so brief that it would seem neither party was able to form a true estimate of the other. This is at least suggested by the following facts:

Surely we commissioners would have been more intensely interested in the tall, dark stranger with black eyes and pointed beard had we been aware of his dramatic and pathetic career.

Signor Giampiccoli was born of Roman Catholic parents in 1869, in the Venetian province, Fonzaso, which till lately was in the invaded provinces. When fifteen years old, he became a member of the Waldensian Church by the simple reading of the Gospel. He had a very brilliant career as a university student in Florence, and later in Geneva and Edinburgh, but chose the humble career of a Waldensian pastor rather than the high government position his father had planned for him. He began his ministry in Sicily, and later was four years in Rome, and then for sixteen years he was pastor of the largest Waldensian Church in Italy, the membership in Turin being 1,000 persons. He was appointed Moderator of the Waldensian Church in 1913, and since then has been unanimously re-elected each year. He is highly gifted, being both a musician and a poet, and has enriched the hymnal with many of the most beautiful hymns sung in their churches.

Greatly tried of late by the death of his eldest son in the war, and by that of his wife, it was hard for him to leave his motherless children to come to America, but it was necessary for him to do so to plead the cause of the Church in Italy, that it might meet its obligations and take advantage of the wonderful opportunities opening on all sides.

That Signor Giampiccoli could not truly estimate the heart of the Southern Presbyterian Church is not surprising, when it is remembered that his few hours in New Orleans were contemporaneous with one of the busy sessions of the Assembly. That he did not truly estimate us is evident from the fact that this devoted Christian man who had sacrificed his own early prospects to Protestant Christianity, who had given his oldest son to die for his country, who had left his motherless children to plead for children rendered fatherless and homeless by the war—that he, with his noble heart on fire with the needs of his people, repressed his feelings and only spoke by way of pleasant greeting.

Surely this talented and much tried and Christ-like brother of ours misjudged us if he thought us too busy to listen to such a tale as his. Since the truth that he withheld has providentially come to light, are there not those who will count it a privilege to have a part in this sacrificial service which he came across the sea to champion?

All Protestant Christianity owes a debt to the Waldensians for their brave adherence to the simple Gospel through the centuries. They kept the light burning, often at the price of their lives. The spirit of Signor Giampiccoli is in harmony with the history of his Church. Shall it not find an echo in our hearts today? Shall we not send him the gift he came to get but failed to ask for.

Funds may be sent to A. N. Sharp, Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga., for the War Work Council of our Church. They will reach Italy promptly, and will be used for rebuilding Waldensian churches and for the erection of orphanages where the little ones without homes can be given shelter and a Christian education.

The Turn of the Year.

By John Jordan Douglass.

A hint of autumn in the fading leaf;
The old, old sadness in the mockbirds' call;
A glint of gold amid the gathered sheaf;
And purple twilight brooding over all.

A plaintive sigh; midsummer's mystic hush;
And Pan a-pipe upon a sylvan reed,
Beside a fountain, lilies white and lush;
And herd-bells tinkling in a verdant mead.

Softly the leaf-fall, like a rain of gold;
The wild birds' vesper, liquid, clear and sweet;
The straggling sunbeams herded in night's fold;
And all the earth at heaven's mercy seat.

A flame of russet in the woodland wall;
A cry of wild geese down the dizzy height;
One by one the tears of twilight fall
And starry jewels blaze the brow of night.
Wadesboro, N. C.

Varied Visions.

"Hadst thou stayed I must have fled,

That is what the vision said."

Another vision is speaking to us today, and bidding us take heed.

The vision is of the little mud palaces in the Congo with poisonous insects and reptiles infecting them because there is no way to exclude them from these abodes which your missionary and mine must live in. The vision includes the worn and weary worker as he waits for the church to come to his relief.

It fades and another takes its place. The mud hovels have been all replaced by comfortable brick houses which look like homes. I see the tired worker still but there is a new light in his eye, and it is with a quicker, firmer step that he enters this, his home. He is convinced at last that the home Church is co-operating with him in his work. He knows that no sea can sever the tie that makes us all one in Christ Jesus. And there's a new song in his heart as he tells again and again the old, old story of Christ's undying love for a world.

When may it be realized? Just as soon as you make it possible.

Send all funds to Mrs. T. S. Bryan, Financial Secretary, Columbia, S. C.

There is no work that has ever been accomplished, that proved of lasting worth, which has not been built on the foundation of certainty in the existence of and trust in God. All work, if it is to be of worth, must come from and be built on this foundation of certainty in God. Guide yourselves so you will hope and trust in Him, and in that hope and trust, you will find the goal of eternal life.—Bishop Howden.

Blossomed in God ere time began to be.
The rose whose beauty glads thine eye to see —Angelus Silesius.

One Misapprehension Which Keeps People Out of the Kingdom

By Rev. W. Hooper Adams.

A sermon preached at the conclusion of a series of revival services conducted in the Tabernacle Presbyterian Church, Springfield, Mo., by Rev. John E. Abbott, D. D.

Text—In thy presence is fulness of joy, at thy right hand are pleasures forevermore.—Psalm 16:11.

AFTER a series of revival services during which the Gospel has been presented both strongly and persuasively—the question naturally arises, “Why do not all people accept.” The reasons for rejection are to be found in human imperfection and are too numerous to mention at present. But I wish to mention one cause of rejection this morning and briefly to deal with it. It is to be found continually on the lips of the man on the street.

This cause of rejection may be thus stated: Many people decline to be Christians because they fear that they will forfeit all pleasure in life. They picture the typical Christian as withered and sapless; perpetually mourning over his own sins and those of others. Rather than come to that in any degree they prefer to remain out of the church and to avoid an open declaration for Christ.

Now the demand for pleasure is human and legitimate. Our whole beings crave pleasure. A desire for it has been inwrought into our constitution by the Creator Himself. One form which this love of pleasure takes is play, in grown people and children alike. A writer in Boston, at once an eminent surgeon and a popular author, Dr. Richard Cabot, has enumerated four activities that are essential to a well-rounded and complete life—work, love, play and worship. And under the title of “Play” he makes the assertion: “It is as bad to be dried up as to be burned up, but worse still is it to live in perpetual winter because we were born withered.” We endorse the assertion. The character that has lost all desire for pleasure or play resembles a rocky coast in mid-winter, desolate and forbidding. The president of my University in New York State, a Presbyterian minister, has stated that he would not give much for that student who has not at least a streak of the sport within him.

Certainly every man has a right to pleasure. “Life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness” are among the inalienable rights of mankind. And God makes abundant provision for the gratification of this inborn craving in religion. That is my testimony this morning—that if a person surrenders for Christ’s sake a certain form of pleasure he gains a far more satisfying pleasure in religion. The exchange far more than compensates. If by accepting Christ I lose one form of pleasure I gain another, more lasting and one which reaches deeper into the inner recesses of my being. It is not a pale pleasure of sickly hue. It is strong, exhilarating, satisfying.

Years ago I attended revival services in a tent in Boston. One night a young attorney, who had recently graduated from Harvard, was converted. Deep seemed to answer to deep within his soul. His inner being was flooded with joy. He was not naturally sentimental or emotional. But his new found joy must express itself. He spoke for Christ and he spoke with rapture, as one almost inspired. “If we show enthusiasm for our college on the side-lines during a football or baseball game, why should we not show at least as much enthusiasm for Christ and the church?” asked this young lawyer. Of course we should. In His presence and service there is fullness of joy. At His right hand there are pleasures forevermore. Allusion was made recently in this building to the conversion of my instructor and friend, Prof. Edward Everett Hale. When Dr. Hale found Christ he found that the pleasure he took in literature and other intellectual subjects was insipid as compared with his new-found pleasure in religion.

Jonathan Edwards, that master mind among New England thinkers of the Eighteenth Century, testified in a passage that has become classic that he found after conversion a new and exquisite joy in nature which he had not possessed before. As he walked abroad in his father’s pasture the very skies gave him a pleasurable sense of the majesty of his God. “There seemed to be, as it were, a calm, sweet cast, or appearance, of divine glory in almost everything. God’s excellency, His wisdom, His purity and love, seemed to appear in everything, in the sun, moon, and stars, in the clouds and blue sky, in the grass, flowers, trees, in the water and all nature. And scarce anything among all the works of nature was so sweet to me as thunder and lightning; formerly nothing had been so terrible to me. Before I used to be uncommonly terrified with thunder and to be struck with terror when I saw a thunder storm rising, but now, on the contrary, it rejoiced me. I felt God, if I may so speak, at the first appearance of a thunder storm, and used to take the opportunity at such times to fix myself in order to view the clouds and see the lightnings play and hear the majestic and awful voice of God’s thunder, which oftentimes was exceedingly entertaining, leading me to sweet contemplations of my great and glorious God. While thus engaged, it always seemed natural for me to sing or chant forth my meditation; or to speak my thoughts in soliloquy with a singing voice.”

Depending upon the temperament of the person in question, this joy in the spiritual life appears as serene and contemplative or else as exuberant or passionate. At all events, it fills the heart to the full and leaves no desire for return to the joys of the worldly life, for these meanwhile have become “stale, flat and insipid.” With Zinzendorf, the Moravian leader, the joy was a passion: “I have one passion; it is Christ.” And if we go back to the Holy Book we find much, very much, about the joy of religion. Someone has counted eight hundred “rejoicing texts” in the Bible, showing that the inspired view of religion is not that it is sombre, but bright and pleasurable. The Psalm that we have read this morning is but one of the views given of religion as the supreme joy in life. The writer, probably King David, expresses his strong, red-blooded joy in God’s presence. He has placed the Lord at his right hand in life; walks with him, obeys Him, finds delight in His companionship and so the vision of immortal joys breaks upon his view. Because God lives, he who finds delight in His presence shall live also throughout eternity. He shall live at the right hand of God and know the pleasures that are forevermore. Throughout the generations of the people of Israel we hear them singing songs of joy because of deliverance at the hand of the Almighty. And after the exile we hear Nehemiah, the governor of the returned Jews, saying to those weary men who faced a giant task; the joy of the Lord is your strength, and Christians in every generation have found this joy a dynamic for work, which proves superior to all obstacles.

The New Testament tells likewise of joy, and we hear Paul and Silas singing even in the murky darkness of the prison at Philippi with their feet fast in the stocks. “The saints are to sing Psalms and hymns and spiritual songs. (Col. 3:16). And one of the earliest writers, Hermas, in his “Shepherd,” speaks of the Holy Spirit as a glad spirit. Now the word which both he and the Church-Father Augustine applied to the Spirit is the Greek word from which we derive the English “hilarious,” indicating that the Christian’s pleasures are not pale, thin washedout joys but satisfying and red-blooded. “Happiness,” said Dr. Chapman once in my hearing, “is the word of the world, but joy is the Christian’s.”

Let no one distrust the Heavenly Father, therefore He does not defraud. To every human being who turns his back upon sinful pleasures, or even upon worldly pleasures—

(Continued on page 9)

The Presbyterian Educational Conference

By Rev. D. S. Gage, D.D., Secretary.

THE Presbyterian Educational Association of the South, and the General Assembly's Permanent Advisory Educational Committee, met in joint session at Montreat, August 5-6, 1919. The attendance was excellent, and the discussions were characterized by the same informality and freedom which has given these meetings much of their best value.

Three discussions of somewhat more prepared type were given at the request of the chairman, by Dr. Vardell, on "The Christian Atmosphere of a Church College;" by Dr. Martin on "The Place and Influence of the Chapel Service in College Life," and by Dr. Gage on "Bible Teaching in Church Colleges."

Careful consideration of our present system of Church education and scheme of organization, by able committees, appointed to report any changes which seemed desirable, showed general satisfaction with the present arrangements and only very minor alterations were suggested.

The fact that the Southern Presbyterian church has in its present educational "machinery" of the Assembly and Synods, the best, most efficient, result-producing of any denomination, grows on those who are acquainted with the inside facts as to development in influence, equipment and standards of our Church schools. Our present "Field Campaign Committee," under the able leadership of Dr. Henry H. Sweets, in the office, and Dr. M. E. Melvin, with his carefully selected helpers in the field, is doing more to meet the needs of our schools than the work of any similar organization. The rapid rise in standards of efficiency and equipment is due largely to the adoption of our present systems.

That education is to share in the powerfully strengthened work of the whole Church, which the war and other awakening influences have aroused us to undertake, should not be for a moment doubtful. The progressive program of the Church, the inter-church world movement, the every-member canvass, and other skillfully wrought out plans, all give education a leading place. All these movements were discussed at Montreat. "Standards" aroused some alarm at times. When set by those hostile, they ought to be watched.

But when they mean a mark to which we should press to do work sufficiently valuable to justify the expense to which the Church has gone in establishing any undertaking, they are simply, and really, powerful aids for making sure of success, for avoiding half-way attainments. It was definitely decided that the educational standards of our Church, as adopted by the General Assembly, ought to be applied to our schools, in the next report of the executive committee to the Assembly, and the executive committee was asked to classify all our schools by them by that time.

It has been of such great profit to the schools and the educators who have been represented at these conferences that it was unanimously moved that all our schools be asked to send their president, principal, or a member of the faculty and a member of the board to the annual meeting and pay their expenses. Even the remoter schools will find that in the end it will be worth their while to definitely adopt this policy regularly. The closer touch with the deep currents and movements of religious education, the strengthening of sympathy in their respective Synods, not to mention other important gains, are well worth the comparatively small cost.

Evangelistic meetings for the students—the value of close contact with the local Church—and other helpful suggestions for the religious life of the students were discussed.

The financial side of education necessarily had considerable attention. It is to be carefully noted that all civilized peoples have awakened as never before to the wisdom of liberally pouring out all that is wisely possible in the preparation of our children for their tremendous responsibilities. Nothing can exceed the importance of this task. School education is not all of this work by any means, but it is a vitally important, an absolutely essential factor, and there is no economy in stinting its equipment. It aids all other lines of effort by training those who carry out these other enterprises. To adequately equip all our Church schools now established should require $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 more than they now have, and from $9,000,000 to $10,000,000 should be secured in the next few years.

An Opportunity of Critical Importance

An Appeal From the Moderator of the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, Rev. A. M. Fraser, D.D., of Staunton, Va.

THE Christian missionaries in China are preparing a Biblical Encyclopedia for the use of Chinese ministers and of workers of all denominations. The Bible Dictionary now in general use in this field is impregnated with destructive higher criticism, which represents some portions of the Bible as being myths and other portions as forgeries. Thus Chinese Christianity is threatened with poisoning at its fountain head. Inasmuch as Christianity now promises to be the constructive force in the reconstruction of China, it is of more than usual importance that the Chinese type of Christianity be kept pure. The new Encyclopedia is based on the International Standard Bible Encyclopedia, of which Dr. James Orr, of Glasgow, was the controlling genius. The professors of our own Seminaries have given testimonials warmly approving this work of the missionaries in China. This monumental work will be ready for publishing before long; what is needed is the money. It will cost about twenty thousand dollars to issue it from the press. Our own missionary, Dr. Henry M. Woods, is one of those engaged in the preparation of it. He had hoped that during his furlough in this country he might secure the money for the publishing of the work. He has often made statements with regard to this subject in the missionary addresses and sermons which he has delivered. But up to the present time only two thousand dollars have been subscribed for it; and furlough will expire in October, when he will return to his mission labors.

One would have expected an eager response to such an appeal. When the subject was before my own church a visitor in the congregation from another State and from another denomination gave me a contribution, remarking that he had seen such ruinous effects of higher criticism among young ministers that he never lost an opportunity to do what he could to defeat it. When Dr. Woods was presenting the cause in one of our churches, a gentleman present who had decided to give twenty thousand dollars to some missionary object, would have selected this one at once, if he had not already committed himself to another worthy one.

Will the church allow Dr. Woods to go back to his colleagues with such a disappointment, bringing only two thousand dollars when he had hoped for the whole amount? Surely the threatened failure has come only from the fact that the attention of the church has not been as yet arrested by this splendid opportunity. In this time of giving, unprecedented among us, is there not some one else who may have eighteen thousand dollars to devote to some enduring beneficence, who would be rejoiced to put it into this work for mighty China and for the establishment of the Kingdom of God? Or are there not a great many throughout our church who might be equally delighted to contribute smaller sums which taken together would amount to enough? Many churches are getting from the every-member canvass sums in excess of their apportionments. Might not many of these appropriate something substantial from such surplus? Can we afford to let the cause fail or even falter?

(Signed) A. M. Fraser.

G. Campbell Morgan Moves to the United States

England's Loss and America's Gain.

By Herbert Atchinson Jump.

IN a recent number of the "Congregationalist," there was a readable article on G. Campbell Morgan, from which we copy a few extracts:

Dr. Morgan first came to America in 1896. He had been invited to speak at Ocean Grove, and having completed his service there at the camp meeting he ran up to East Northfield to look in as a spectator at a Moody conference. That little trip was fraught with unexpectedly momentous consequences. Dwight Moody, hearing that an English preacher was on the grounds, called upon him one evening to offer prayer. When Dr. Morgan at the end of the meeting was saying his farewells to the burly evangelist and announcing his departure on an early train the next day, Mr. Moody retorted: "You're not going to take a train tomorrow morning. You are to preach here at ten o'clock. I have already announced you."

From that day the name of Morgan has been indissolubly tied up with Northfield. Summer after summer he was a fixture on the conference program. After the death of Mr. Moody he lived for four years at East Northfield, going out for sermons and addresses, and assisting to establish the conferences on a permanent basis. Then England demanded him back.

Westminster Chapel.

Near Buckingham Palace in the heart of London stood Westminster Chapel, with seating capacity for twenty-five hundred, a morning congregation of about thirty and an evening congregation not very much larger. It was hardly more than an architectural possibility for a spiritual opportunity. To this uninviting field Dr. Morgan came and for a full dozen years poured his soul into the enterprise. When he resigned there was a membership of nearly a thousand. Two congregations each Sunday aggregated four thousand persons. Fifty or more members of Parliament were regular attendants. And when Dr. J. H. Jowett, urged by a letter from Lloyd George and other considerations, left the Fifth Ave. Church of New York, he came to London to be Dr. Morgan's successor. "Westminster is my real life work," says Dr. Morgan, and seldom has a life work been more splendidly creditable. Incidentally during these years of able and devoted preaching he earned for himself an acknowledged primacy as the world's best-known Biblical preacher.

But under the strain of this stupendous piece of creative work his health broke and he was forced to seek less taxing responsibility. During the last year he supplied Highbury Quadrant pulpit, London, on Sundays, and conducted Bible Institutes through England during the week. And now, along with Dr. John Kelman of Edinburgh, he has been captured for the United States.

Extensive and affectionate farewells were tendered him by British admirers during June. After a succession of sailing disappointments the chief of the British ministry of shipping came to his rescue and assigned him passage on a troop-carrying vessel and he reached New York Aug. 8. His work will be in connection with the extension department of Wilbert White's Bible Teacher's Training College, and he will tour the country conducting Bible Institutes. His immediate engagements include preaching during August at the First Congregational Church, Washington, D. C., and lecturing at Northfield, Montreat and Winona. Under the new mood of religious unity fostered by the war it would seem as though many communities might federate their church interests sufficiently to secure a week of Bible addresses by this available expert.

Morgan The Man.

G. Campbell Morgan stalks along the deck like a tall pine tree. Whenever he passed my steamer chair I thought of the Scripture verse, "I see men as trees walking." Calm as summer twilight in his moments of quiescence he rouses to a challenge, whether in the pulpit or in conversation, with an intensity that enralls, an earnestness that dominates, an eye and voice and countenance that suggest nothing so much as an ancient Hebrew seer. "We are tired of stale dope from the pulpit," said a soldier in France not long ago. No one ever charges Dr. Morgan with serving up that sort of futile article in his preaching. In the pulpit he is conviction aflame, honesty incandescent with high purpose, and always his vehicle is the word of Scripture. For three years of Sunday mornings he preached seriatim from the gospel of Matthew. Even those whose theology moves along more radical lines find in him stimulus, comfort and religious dynamic.

Deeply is he stirred by the social unrest of the times. "I talked lately with a prominent official in the British government." He told me, he said, "Every morning I find telegrams on my desk reporting a new strike somewhere in the United Kingdom.' And another man of high political place made a significant confession in conversation with me the other day. 'We may as well accustom ourselves to a succession of industrial troubles in England. They are bound to come. We are but reaping the harvest of what we ourselves have sown; for there is no gainsaying the fact that the wealth of England has been built upon a long-drawn-out exploiting of the working classes.'"

Uses of the Old Testament.

"For myself in these perplexing days," Dr. Morgan continued, "I find it most useful to study the Old Testament prophets. They marvelously give guidance to my hope and substantiate my optimism. I've read them more since the war began than ever before. Some of the chapters sound almost as though they had been written last week, they are so pertinent to our problems today." And when I asked him concerning Lloyd George, whom some of us regard enthusiastically as a fairly successful contemporaneous Amos, but whom many preachers since his organization of the Coalition Government have mourned as a "lost leader," he replied with a vigor almost Welch in its abandon, "I believe in Lloyd George! I believe in him with every bone of my body! No one else could have saved England and the world."

Speaking of Hebrew prophecy and modern problems, large interest is being excited in England by H. G. Wells' latest literary experiment, his modernizing of the Hebrew epic of Job into a modern novel, "The Undying Fire." The problem of suffering is poignant in the hearts of the world's mothers and fathers these days. Dr. Morgan will find ample opportunity to offer a ministry of solace as he explicates for contemporary faith in America the Scripture teaching with reference to this ever-haunting question in the experience of the ancient chosen people.

The Second Advent.

"Has the war stimulated interest in the doctrine of the Second Coming of Christ?" I inquired. "Yes," he answered promptly, "Christians in England are thinking about this matter as never before. But many are going to impossible extremes in their premillenarianism. I have had to part company with some of my friends in whose fellowship I was glad to walk a while ago. They are grossly overconfident in their chronology. They are so sure that the parousia is right near by. I am not. Detailed fulfilments of prophesy they find in connection with Scripture passages where I cannot find them at all. I am confident Jesus expected to return in physical presence to the earth. When those who espouse the higher criticism suggest that probably Jesus was mistaken, that solution to me is no solution at all. Christ had a real humanity, but it was not such a humanity as permitted him to be in error on a subject like this. I accept the Virgin Birth, the miracles and the infallibility of Jesus. What my Christ teaches, I am under dire compulsion to believe."

(Continued on page 9)

The Revised Standard of Efficiency For Sunday Schools

By Rev. Gilbert Glass, D.D., General Superintendent.

WE are sending to every Sunday School superintendent a revised Standard of Efficiency wall chart in the same tube that carries the Rally Day poster. The Standard of Efficiency was revised according to the instructions of the General Assembly. Under Section IX, "Full Denominational Requirements," we have added a fifth requirement as follows: ("E) Church Catechisms Taught." This has always been emphasized in our little "Manual of Graded Course of Instruction." It is now an integral part of the Standard of Efficiency. Sunday schools that have already received credit for 100 per cent efficiency will please take notice that according to the action of the General Assembly they must meet this additional requirement before October 30 in order to retain their place on the honor roll of Gold Seal schools. It is probable that most, if not all, of them are already meeting this requirement. Special communication will be sent the superintendents of these schools regarding the matter.

There is a marked fitness in the sending of these two charts—the Rally Day poster and the Standard of Efficiency—under the same cover to all of our schools. These two charts represent extension and efficiency, and should go side by side, not only in the Sunday school auditorium but in the minds and hearts of Sunday school workers. They represent a bigger school and a better school. They represent a larger constituency and a more effective service for those who are already being reached.

Shall we not, as Southern Presbyterian Sunday school workers and pupils, respond to the inspiration and guidance of both of these charts? May the Earnest Worker honor roll of Gold Seal Sunday schools have a large and healthy growth during the next twelve months.

STANDARD OF EFFICIENCY ADOPTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY FOR PRESBYTERIAN SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

I CRAOLE ROLL & HOME DEPARTMENT (5) (5) Fully organized and equipped in active operation, and reporting regularly to main school.	VI TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION (5) (5) (A) Study of quarterly temperance lessons with (B) application to personal life and local conditions.
II ORGANIZED CLASS IN BOTH SECONDARY and ADULT DIVISIONS (5) (5) At least two officers and three committees and definite work outside of class sessions.	VII DEFINITE DECISION FOR CHRIST URGED (5) (5) (A) Evangelistic policy and methods in general exercises and class sessions and (B) personal efforts to lead pupils to Christ, using communion seasons as appropriate Decision Day periods.
III TEACHER TRAINING CLASS (5) (5) Study of our own or some other approved course by both (A) present and (B) prospective teachers.	VIII WORKERS CONFERENCE REGULARLY HELD (5) (5) Weekly or monthly meetings for study of teaching and administrative problems, survey of conditions, and plans for increase and efficiency. MEETINGS LESS FREQUENT THAN MONTHLY COUNT ONLY FIVE.
IV GRADED ORGANIZATION & INSTRUCTION (2) (2) (2) (2) (2) Beginners 4-5, Primary 6-8, Junior 9-11, Secondary (Intermediate, Senior and Young Peoples Departments) 12-23, Adult 24 and over. PROPER LITERATURE AND METHODS FOR EACH DEPARTMENT.	IX FULL DENOMINATIONAL REQUIREMENTS (2) (2) (2) (2) (2) (A) Under Control of Session. (B) Assembly's Special days observed. (C) Offerings for all Assembly's Causes. (D) Use of our own literature. (E) Church Catechisms taught.
V MISSIONARY INSTRUCTION & OFFERING (5) (5) (A) Faithful presentation, before the School or in class study, of the Missionary and Benevolent Causes of the Church with (B) offerings.	X FULL SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION REQUIREMENTS (3) (4) (3) (A) Report to interdenominational organization. (B) Representation at conventions. (C) Offering for interdenominational work.

STANDARDIZE YOUR SCHOOL

WRITE US FOR FREE LEAFLETS ON EVERY PHASE OF SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK AND FOR SEALS TO ATTACH TO YOUR CHART AS YOU PROGRESS TOWARD THE PERFECT STANDARD.

COLORS AS FOLLOWS:

BLUE for small Circles, representing Items under each Heading, RED for Ten-point seals, GOLD for perfect Standard seal.

PRESBYTERIAN COMMITTEE OF PUBLICATION,
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Public School Positions.

By Rev. Willis Thompson.

Opportunity has been given me on several occasions of recommending Presbyterian college men to fill vacancies in the public schools. Those colleges of ours, to which I wrote, could not give the name of a single man who would certainly take a school position. Applications to Methodist or Baptist institutions for men have been hastily answered by the deans of the nearest schools. Such was their alacrity that at various times positions in the town from which I write were filled within a fortnight after inquiries were made.

Such efficiency is commendable, if for no other reason than that of the college's interest in its children. But the interest of the denomination demands it. To the town church, the presence of a school superintendent, principal or teacher pledges a series of interesting certainties and several probabilities. He is an intelligent worshipper, welcome in the fellowship because of the spirit he adds to the church. He is certainly—all public school men are urged by state authorities to be—a good Sunday school man. He will doubtless teach a senior class or superintend a department. Being a man of intellectual initiative, he leads in prayer, conducts prayer meeting, and doubtless can join in congregational singing with a concern born of his information on the worth of community singing in all social activities. These considerations will appeal to one who has worked in towns, whence come the majority of young men to denominational colleges.

But, the interest of a college in itself demands attention to placing its men in the positions they may take in public schools. Men in such positions are in constant touch with high school students. The very fact that a principal comes from such and such a college, where his athletics, spirit and personality have been developed, speaks for the college to that sense of loyalty which is strong in the youth who have him as their head.

Again, a pastor cannot sway his own boys so vigorously as a principal who frequently speaks with them in connection with the very question of a calling and education, while the pastor's infrequent talk must take the line of a lecture, most of which is forgotten.

Now, a further fact to be noted in judging a principal's worth to his college is his pressure on boys who are not in touch with the church at all, either personally, or through parents, and who are embarrassed by a talk with even the most companionable minister. Such boys avoid a minister carefully, and suspect what he tells them. They have the principal as their one possible influence in deciding on a school.

A further reason for the principal's value to his college is that boys of other denominations will have their attention called by him to the undoubted superiority of many of our schools—a fact they are carefully kept from discovering if left to the active field work of colleges in denominations which take a less lofty stand than the Presbyterian and do not wait to be hunted up because of unique traditions.

The rapid rise in the wage scale and prestige of public school offices lifts them from the place where they are and appeal only to men of humble aspirations.

One Misapprehension Which Keeps People Out of the Kingdom.

(Continued from page 5)

that are of neutral tint, God gives joys that are infinitely superior in exquisiteness and abidingness. No one can take these from us. To the one whose fortunes or hopes are in ashes He gives the beauty of a spiritual character, the oil of joy for mourning, and a garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.

Sometimes to acquire these highest pleasures one is brought to the parting of the ways. On one occasion somewhat late in her life, Jenny Lind, the gifted singer whom our fathers named "The Swedish Nightingale," was found by a friend in the twilight on a rock by a lonely shore reading her Bible. The friend ventured to ask the master of coloratura why she had left the stage at the very height of her power and popularity. She replied that the evening sunset was casting less of a divine halo over her soul and the Bible was losing its sacred charm. So to recover these she gladly surrendered her public career. God returned to her a hundred fold for what she surrendered, and He will do the same for all who put first the joys of the Kingdom.

A Great Religious Plant.

"The Union Theological Seminary, Ginter Park, Richmond, the largest of our schools for the training of ministers, is becoming a unique institution. It is already one of the most comprehensive plants and centers of Christian influence in the world. Every facility for training preachers possessed by other schools is to be found here, and a further step is being taken in advance of other schools in the construction of a model Sabbath School building by use of which the young men attending the Seminary are to be trained in progressive Sabbath School work. The building will be used by the Ginter Park Sabbath School, and will be attended by the students of the Seminary. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars have been contributed for the construction and equipping of the building, and a fund for maintenance has been provided.

"Other auxiliary institutions to be grouped about the Seminary and on the Seminary grounds and virtually forming a part of it are the Assembly's Training School for Lay Workers and 'Mission Court,' which the women of the Southern Church are preparing to build as a home for missionaries on their year's vacation. Contract for its construction will soon be let, if the plans of the women do not miscarry. They are deeply interested in this enterprise. They found by sending a questionnaire that they by a large majority preferred to have this home in Richmond near the Seminary, so that they might place their children in good schools, and in cases where the children are to be left in this country, securing good boarding houses and proper care for them; while they themselves would have the benefit of the library, the lectures, and the associations of the Seminary while on their vacation. The building will have apartments for families, and eventually be made large enough to accommodate all who wish to make their temporary home in 'Mission Court.'

Bulletin of First Presbyterian Church, Staunton, Va.

G. Campbell Morgan Moves to the United States.

(Continued from page 7)

If the drift of current theological thought at least in American Congregationalism runs somewhat counter to this simple and straight-forward creed of the English expositor, at least it must be admitted that in Dr. Morgan the traditional evangelical position finds a very winsome and gracious interpreter. His refusal of all controversy, moreover, in which method he differs radically from Billy Sunday and Dr. R. E. Torrey, commends him to both liberal and conservative camps. In these days of growing tolerance it ought to be possible for men who prefer wheat bread and those who prefer graham bread to eat at the same table.

The first thing a man must do if he desires to be used in the Lord's work is to make an unconditional surrender of himself to God. He must consecrate and then concentrate. A man who does not put his whole life into one channel does not count for much, and the man who only goes into work with half a heart does not amount to much. We are living in an intense age, and if a man is to succeed he must set himself apart for the work and throw all his energy into it.—D. L. Moody.

News of the Week

General Pershing, on the 8th of September reached this country after being in command for two years of our army in France. He has been received with wild enthusiasm wherever he has appeared. Congress has voted $10,000 for the purchase of a sword for him.

President Wilson is still on his Western trip. Several Republican Senators, such as Johnson, of California, and Borah, are in his wake.

The forecast of the spring and winter wheat crop, owing to blight, rust and grasshoppers, now estimates it at 923,000,000 bushels, which is less by 300,000,000 bushels than was forecasted in June.

The story that the French charged rent for land used at the front trenches has been authoritatively denied by Colonel Blanton Winship, judge advocate general, when testifying before a Congressional Committee.

John Mitchell, former president of the United Mine Workers of America and one of the most widely known labor leaders in the United States, died at 5 o'clock on September 10 at the Post Graduate Hospital, New York. Mr. Mitchell was only 49 years old.

On September 8, the Peace Treaty was sent to the Senate by the Foreign Relations Committee. The general debate will be under way this week.

Announcement has been made of the sale of the Manchester Cotton Mill at Rock Hill, S. C., to A. C. Barrow, of the Jobbers' Overall Company, of Lynchburg, Va. The purchase price was said to be $750,000, the transfer to be made in January.

Postmaster Burleson denies that he has at any time sought improperly to control postoffice appointments by the Civil Service Commission as charged by former Civil Service Commissioner Galloway.

Converse & Co., New York Commission Merchants, have sought controlling interest in Ella Manufacturing Company, a local 10,000 spindle mill, of which John R. Dover is secretary and treasurer.

In the revenue levy the South pays more than 7 per cent, and North Carolina pays the heaviest, leading with $101,278,152, stepping ahead of Virginia.

The recent storm which swept over the extreme South last week recorded the highest gulf tide near Tampa since 1844. The hurricane struck the schooner Mystery J. and the report is that sixteen perished.

The Atlantic Coast Line will probably make improvements in the neighborhood of Fayetteville.

Mrs. Wm. A. Graham, the wife of N. C. Commissioner of Agriculture, has served notice that he will be required to answer complaints in divorce proceedings to show cause why he should not pay alimony.

The Boston police have been on a strike and many lives have been lost. Gompers has at last called a halt.

The Food Control Act has been passed. For monopolizing or hoarding necessities there is a fine of $5,000 and two years in prison.

The Charlotte Chamber of Commerce has been reorganized. Robert Lassiter is president and T. T. Allison is business manager.

The Census Bureau announces that during August fewer bales of cotton were consumed than in August of last year.

The Government has decided to cut off parcel post sales of food to the public after September 25 because the public response has been so poor. Not more than 10 per cent of the supplies have been taken.

The paymaster of the town of Murphy, N. C., was held up by a lone bandit on Saturday and robbed of $1,200.

Surgeon General Blue predicts the recurrence of the "Flu" this winter, though in milder form.

The Brotherhood of Railway Shop Laborers, in session at Detroit, have the prospect of a fight over the admission of negroes, when the convention is held this week.

The women of the South contributed approximately 25 per cent of the total value of Red Cross work.

The tropical storm which swept over the South last week struck Galvston, with high tides flooding the streets. Part of the causeway and railroad bridge between the city and mainland washed out. No lives were lost.

Governor Bickett, who went to High Point to settle the struggle among the laborers, succeeded in bringing about an agreement. The "open shop" principle was agreed to by both sides.

A Misleading Book Notice.

PROF. KEMPER FULLERTON'S recent book, "Prophecy and Authority," was commended in a recent issue of the Standard. I have gone through this book with care, so as to write an estimate of it for the Union Seminary Review, and I fear that it is one of the strongest and subtlest recent attacks on the orthodox faith.

For example, Prof. Fullerton strives to do away altogether with the predictive element in prophecy, that is, with Christ in the Old Testament. This is only one of the author's "scientific principles of interpretation of Scripture," because of which you say that this scholarly work "has claims upon the attention of every studious pastor."

Permit me to suggest that every book ought to be read with care before it is commended, and that every book notice ought to be signed. Andrew W. Blackwood.

We have no desire to enter into controversy with Dr. Blackwood, for whose opinion we have great respect. We have carefully read over again the obnoxious comment, which seems to us decidedly harmless. We give it in full.

"This is a study in the history of the doctrine of interpretation of Scripture and as such it has claims upon the attention of every studious pastor. Protestantism recognizes the Bible as the only authority demanding obedience, and in that respect it is the opposite of Catholicism which recognizes the Church through its head, the Pope. He lays down certain scientific principles of interpretation of Scripture, recognized by the Reformers, which he claims are bound to lead to the abandonment of the millennialist theory."

If we analyze this mild statement, it will be forced to have three claims to our attention, but not our commendation.

1. That this book is a study of the history of the doc-

(Continued on page 11)

Christian Endeavor

By Rev. S. H. Hay.

M., Sept. 22—Training in Self-Denial: Matt. 16:21-27.
 T., Sept. 23—Fighting the Flesh: Col. 3:5-8.
 W., Sept. 24—Resisting the Devil: Jas. 4:1-10.
 T., Sept. 25—Training in Right Thinking: Phil. 4:8-9.
 F., Sept. 26—In Self-Control: Prov. 16:32.
 S., Sept. 27—In humility: Luke 9:51-56.

* * *

Topic for Sunday, Sept. 28—The Christian Athlete and His Training.—1 Cor. 9:19-27.

* * *

One would like to know where Paul was and what he was doing when he first thought of the Christian's life being like the racer in his course. Maybe Paul was on the side lines watching a race when the great idea first came to him, or perhaps he was writing at his desk. The figure is apt and complete. The Christian's life is like the race in swiftness, and in the need of strength, concentration, training, endurance, and in the fact that the Christian, too, is hastening toward a goal. To reach the Christian goal one must be a Christian athlete.

* * *

The Christian athlete must live simply. One preparing for the race denies himself many of the luxuries of life, knowing that nature's way to strength leads away from complexity and luxury of life.

He must be self-controlled. He must not yield to his natural desires for forbidden foods and pleasures. He knows how not to slacken when the muscles ache. He never idles when his spirits flag. Only when he is master of all his appetites, moods, and muscles can he hope to win.

The Christian racer must be constantly under the direction of his Trainer. Jesus is the master-coach of the Christian athlete, and His counsels and commands are law.

The athlete uses all the apparatus of his gymnasium for development. There he finds for his use all manner of weights and clubs and rings and bars. This is the training house. The Christian's house of training is his church, and if he plans to run his best he must make full use of it.

Above all the racer must practice running. To learn to swim one must go into the water and strike away. Books and lessons on the subject are worthless without this actual practice. There is no way to be a runner but by running. And the one invariable means of becoming a Christian athlete is the practice of the virtues of Christ in the common things of life.

The true athlete loves his art and prize. The race is a joy in itself. He is never so happy as when sprinting along the course. His heart bounds and the blood leaps with glory through his veins, and he forgets himself in the sheer joy of motion. And when he receives the prize, he glories in it because of what it stands for. In Paul's day this prize was just a wreath of leaves, but it signified the glory of a victorious race. Some old miser looking on might have thought the leaves a sorry prize to win, but the athlete counted it worthy because he loved the race.

We Christians must love our calling and its prize. Being a Christian is its own reward. And when we reach the goal of our life we shall find the goal to be a perfect Christian character. And the crown that shall be given us is a "crown of righteousness"—a crown which consists of righteousness, and fadeth not away.

* * *

Tell why we try to be Christians.

Tell how we know we are going forward in our Christian race.

Name some things injurious to the Christian athlete.

How can we help others to run well.

Religion is the binding back of human life in God.—Robert E. Speer.

The Prayer Meeting

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

LIFTING UP A STANDARD FOR THE PEOPLE.
 Isaiah 62:10-12.

This magnificent prophecy is vitalized by the promise of the Spirit. This is my covenant with them, saith the Lord: My Spirit that is upon thee, and My words that I have put in thy mouth shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seeds' seed, saith the Lord from henceforth and forever." Then the illative particle—"Therefore:" "Therefore arise and shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." Jesus said: "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." The way of the Lord has thus been prepared; the gates stand open: it is for us to cast up the highway, and to see to its maintainance. It is for us to lift up the standard under which the militant hosts will march, and battle and conquer. Upon this banner is inscribed the glorious words: "Thy Salvation is Come. Glory to Him Who Was Dead and is Alive Again and Who Liveth Forevermore."

It is a banner which proclaims an accomplished fact. It once proclaimed the promise of the Deliverer: but it is now the assurance of an historic fact.

The shame of the church in the past has been that too few hands grasped and held aloft this banner.

The hands that grasped and carried the banner have for long centuries, with some distinguished exceptions, been the preachers. Too often these have said that the banner was too heavy; or that it belonged only to circumscribed and limited areas. They did not heed the great commission; did not seem to know that Jesus had spoken it; or they were wiser than their Lord. But this banner needs to be sustained and carried aloft by every believer in the reigning trine of interpretation of Scripture and as such has claims upon the attention of every studious pastor. We recommend it to the attention of every studious pastor, which is far different from recommending it to his acceptance. Unless we wish to confine our pastors to reading books of one side entirely, this cannot be condemned.

(Continued on page 12)

A Misleading Book Notice.

(Continued from page 10)

2. Protestantism makes the Bible the only authority demanding obedience, while Catholicism makes the Church. No one can question that saying.

3. He lays down certain scientific principles of interpretation of Scripture, recognized by the Reformers. When we remember how the Reformers differed among themselves, we can understand that not all principles recognized by them are true. If the mere statement of a fact be dangerous, then we must rule out much of Church history.

On the whole, we think that our brother confused the mild review with the contents of the book after he had read it and hastily wrote the above. It is well to have a keen nose for heresy, but its use needs to be guarded.

J. R. B.

Today's darkness blots not out yesterday's light, and in the depth of winter it is oftentimes pleasant to remember the summer glory; and so the uses of darkness are sometimes to make men value the light.—G. Dawson.

Often reflect upon thyself, and observe what company is with thy heart. We may know by the noise in the school that the master is not there; much of the misrule in our bosom arises from the neglect of visiting our hearts.—Gurnall.

Believing right has everything to do with feeling right.

Sunday School

By Rev. H. G. Hill, D. D.

SEPTEMBER 21, 1919

The Holy Scriptures

Printed Text: Psalm 19:7-14; 2 Tim. 3:14-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."—Psalm 119:105.

Ps. 19:7 The law of the LORD is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the LORD is sure, making wise the simple:

8 The statutes of the LORD are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the LORD is pure, enlightening the eyes:

9 The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring for ever: the judgments of the LORD are true and righteous altogether.

10 More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb.

11 Moreover, by them is thy servant warned: and in keeping of them there is great reward.

12 Who can understand his errors? cleanse thou me from secret faults.

13 Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me: then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from the great transgression.

14 Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O LORD, my strength and my redeemer.

2 Tim. 3:14 But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them:

15 And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

16 All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness;

17 That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

The nineteenth Psalm presents God as revealed in His works and as described in His word. A number of terms are employed to designate the Inspired Scriptures, such as Law, Commandment, Testimony, etc. The effects produced upon the human heart and conduct by the Holy Scriptures are also indicated. We may consider our lesson under the following heads: The Effects of the Scriptures, the Preciousness and Delight of the Scriptures, the Petitions. They Prompt and Their Inspiration and Benefits.

I. The Effects of the Scriptures.

To produce these results they must have certain moral qualities. They are described as perfect, free from all error or defect. As Divine Testimony, they are sure, exempt from fault and absolutely certain. As statutes or precepts, they are right, or accord with rectitude. As commandments, coming from the Holy God, they are pure, free from falsehood and obscurity. As inspiring reverential fear of the Lord, they are morally clean, incline to purity, and are enduring forever. As Jehovah's judgments, expressed in words and acts, they are "true and righteous altogether." Having such characteristics, it is not surprising that the Sacred Scriptures shall produce marked and salutary results upon human character and conduct. They, applied by the Holy Ghost, convert the soul, "turning the spiritual nature" from darkness to light and sin and Satan unto God." They "make wise the simple," the humble and candid unto salvation. "They rejoice the heart," filling the emotional nature with gladsome affections. They enlighten the eyes of the understanding and purify the soul and life. They lead to a clean heart and a righteous, beneficent career. As they are "true and entirely righteous, "they conduct to the highest manhood and to the loftiest destiny for man." God ever honors His word as His chosen agency for the uplift of humanity.

II. The Preciousness and Delight of the Scriptures.

"More to be desired are they than gold, yea than much fine gold." They are compared to gold the most valuable of metals, and one which men have made the standard for measuring the worth of the most desirable things. They are declared to be more valuable than gold, yea than a quantity of the finest gold. Gold may enrich a man's body and estate for time. But the Sacred Scriptures understood and obeyed can enrich and beautify his whole nature for eternal ages. But the Divine Word is not only precious and enriching but is also a source of delight. "It is sweeter than honey" and the best of the honey "the droppings of the comb." Its revelations proves salvation hopes, consolations and assured exaltation and blessedness, impart "joy unspeakable and full of glory."

III. The Petitions the Scriptures Prompt.

Contemplating the Word of God as the rule of duty the Psalmist is convinced of sin. He says "By them is thy servant warned and in the keeping of them there is great reward." But he has not fully kept them. Hence he affirms "Who can understand his errors?" He prays "Cleanse Thou me from secret faults." He entreats blood cleansing from faults that may be concealed from himself and others. He also prays "Keep back thy servant from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me, then shall I be upright and I shall be innocent from the great transgression. Presumptuous sins are not only peculiarly heinous and atrocious but such as presume upon God's mercy and forbearance. "The great transgression" may mean "Much transgression" or the "Unpardonable sin" of grieving away the Holy Ghost.

The Psalmist finally prays that his words and thoughts may be acceptable with God. If men would attend more constantly to the Scriptures they would pray more frequently and fervently.

IV. The Inspiration and Benefits of the Scriptures.

The chief value of the Bible is to be found in its inspiration. It contains priceless history, sublime poetry, the most graphic delineations of varied character, the noblest ideals of manhood, the finest types of female character, the grandest morality known on earth, a salvation from sin, claiming Divine origin, and a predicted exaltation for redeemed humanity, beyond the wildest dreams of mortals. But all this would be unreliable and unsatisfying unless inspiration is behind them and you can say of these things, "Thus saith the Lord." The Scriptures claim to be inspired and nothing believed by man is better attested than the Divine origin and authority of the Bible. The internal and external evidence is convincing and overwhelming. The nature and harmony of the truths revealed, the evidence from fulfilled prophecy, the human and Divine character of Jesus Christ, as recorded in the Gospels and the beneficent transforming effects of Christianity wherever carried, all bear witness to the inspiration of the Scriptures and the Divine origin of its teachings. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, and the man of God may be perfect thoroughly furnished with all good works."

Prayer Meeting.

(Continued from page 11)

and saving Christ: then will—and then only will the hosts of God go forward. Only then will the prophecy be fulfilled: "Behold the Lord hath proclaimed unto the end of the earth—thy salvation cometh, his reward is with Him, his recompense before Him."

It is simply impossible to accomplish the task set by her Lord for the Church if the standard bearers are only ministers. What would be thought of an army with no personnel except officers. Such an army would be a sham—a mere skeleton without power or victory.

The call of the day is for the rank and file of church members to arise and shine: to hold aloft the banner of the Christ. Only thus will the shameful weakness and inefficiency of the church be remedied.

To carry this banner only a few simple essentials:

1. Loyalty to the King.
2. Heartfelt faith in the power and grace of the Saviour.
3. Believing prayer.
4. The expression of these in service.

Until these characterize the ministers and laymen Jesus will of necessity be saying: "O faithless generation, how long?"—Mark 9:19. "All things are possible to him that believeth"—this is the word that men and women need to take to heart. If men will only earnestly desire the coming of the Kingdom, and have faith in the King and Saviour, the banner will be gloriously exalted in the presence of all the people, and the world will see the glory of God.

Devotional

SALVATION THROUGH BLOOD.

Dr. Cuyler once said: "If I were a member of a church looking for a pastor, my first question with reference to a man's qualifications would be, 'Does he make foremost the atoning blood of Jesus Christ?'" So, if I were a pastor looking for a suitable helper for my meeting, my first inquiry would be, "Does he make foremost—does he emphasize the atoning, the cleansing blood of Jesus Christ?" I care not what other qualifications a man might have, he could not assist me unless he emphasized this fundamental doctrine. Martin Luther preached this doctrine of atoning blood to slumbering Europe and Europe awoke from the dead. Amid all his defenses of the divine sovereignty, Calvin never ignored or belittled the atonement. Cowper sang of it among the water lilies of the Ouse. Spurgeon thundered this glorious doctrine of Christ crucified into the ears of peer and peasant with a voice like the sound of many waters. John Bunyan made the cross the starting point to the celestial city. Moody's bells all chimed to the keynote of Calvary. Gipsy Smith strings all his pearls on the red cord of atonement. Billy Sunday, who thunders his anathemas against sin in high places, takes his stand beside the cross where Christ died to condemn all sin and to save the sinner. No man can expect evangelistic success who does not preach redemption through the blood.—Selected.

THE PITY OF GOD.

Behold, God is mighty, and despiseth not any: He is mighty in strength and wisdom. Consider here the relation of terms; mighty, yet not contemptuous. God is might yet descending; God could crush us, yet he spares our life: because he is supremely mighty he is compassionate. Half power is dangerous; almost mighty, tempts the half developed giant to tyrannous uses of his strength; but whole power, almightiness, omnipotence, by its very perfectness, can speak compassionately. Thus justice becomes mercy; thus righteousness and peace have kissed each other; thought to be strangers, they have hailed one another as friends and brethren. Then the very omnipotence of God may be regarded as a gospel feature and a gospel support. If he were less powerful he would be less pitiful: "Behold I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in." So says He who by a breath could obliterate the universe. He will rule by love. He will abide in the broken heart.—Joseph Parker.

COMMUNION WITH GOD.

Little by little, when a man prays, he ceases to make supplication alone. He prays because it is a comfort to pray. I go to see my friends, not because I have anything to ask of them. I do not want their bread; I do not want their silver and gold; I do not want their things; I want them. It is a joyful experience to be in their company. And prayer has pre-eminently that element in it. It is communion with God. It is being in his conscious presence. It is keeping company that is good for anybody to keep. It is interchange of thought. It is pouring out our souls before God. It takes us out of our narrow, selfish petitions, and brings us into the companionship of God which we seek because it is sweet and blessed.—H. W. Beecher.

A German physician says: "Precipitate men should accustom themselves to write and walk slowly. The irresolute should endeavor to perform their acts with rapidity. The gloomy, romantic dreamer should be trained to walk with head erect, to look others straight in the face, to speak in a loud; distinct tone of voice." And there is a real place for such training in the spiritual life.

Home Circle

FATHER'S BOY.

Did you ever notice how people referred to boys in the service as a mother's son? Somehow they seemed to forget the father's interest in the boy. When we heard that another of our friends had gone to take his place in the great throng of khaki-clad fellows, we immediately thought of the mother who gave this son to the country; all of our sympathy was with the mother. Naturally she felt it the most keenly. It was the mother who usually packed up the few things the boy took with him; it was the mother who put away the things he left behind, who set his room in order, and put out the service flag. She cried over his departure, and we all shared her sorrow.

But with the man it's different. He must show no sign of grief over the absence of his son. Tears would not be tolerated, and until a few years ago I felt the same way. But I've changed my mind. The son is just as dear to the heart of his father as to his mother. Though the man must keep a cheerful face and calm voice, it didn't lessen the fact that was silently grieving for that boy who had gone to serve his country—at least, there is one father who feels that way, for I happened to be near him one day when an army of American soldiers, who were en route from some Southern contention to a Northern base, were making a tour of a small southern city while waiting for train connections.

O, how proud I was of their erect bodies! How musical was the tramp of their heavy boots to my ears as they went marching by! But, in spite of myself, a lump arose in my throat as a mental picture of what might be the fate of that splendid group of men passed through my brain.

"They're a fine set," I heard one man say to another; and I turned around to see that it was an elderly man speaking.

"Pretty decent lot," the companion answered; "and you know the closer we're drawn into this thing, the more readily we recognize the timber they represent."

"You have a son in the service?" the listener enquired.

"A son?" the speaker repeated. "Why, man, I've had four sons in the army."

And somehow it appeared to me that he laid a deal of stress on the four. I edged over a little nearer; and when I got a chance to speak, I asked if all his sons were commissioned men.

"No," he said. "One is a captain, one is on a machine gun, one is with the marines, and my—my—my baby son"

The speaker paused; and thinking perhaps I could guess it, I said: "Private, of course."

"No," the man answered in an unsteady tone; "he was a private—but I'm sure he's a colonel now—for—for—for—he was among the braves who went—west—in the battle of the Marne."

I tried to say a comforting word, but it was a hard thing to do; so we stood in silence until the last soldier had passed from view, then the old man at my side held out his hand. "You've been so kind," he said hoarsely, "to listen. You see, a man is not supposed to grieve for the son that goes and never comes back. That's the mother's privilege, and we must submit to it." And unashamed he wiped the tears from his eyes.

Without another word, I watched him vanish through the crowd; but I came away myself with a new version of the silent suffering a father must endure, while the mother openly mourns her son. And from now on I have made up my mind to remember my sympathy in the future will be equally divided between the parents, for I am convinced that it is no harder for the woman to give up "mother's son" than it is for the man to keep silent over father's boy.—By Fanselley, in Christian Advocate.

Presbyterian Standard

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE.
REV. W. L. BOGGS, Circulation Manager.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.
ESTABLISHED JANUARY 1, 1858.

Entered at the Post Office at Charlotte, N. C., as second class matter.

CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE

The Abuse of Scripture	2
A Worthy Object	2
A New Crusade	3
The Proposed Ministerial Union	3
CONTRIBUTED—
A Modern Champion of an Ancient Church—By Rev. Andrew W. Bird.....	4
The Turn of the Year—By John Jordan Douglass	4
Varied Visions	4
One Misapprehension Which Keeps People Out of the Kingdom—By Rev. W. Hooper Adams.....	5-9
The Presbyterian Educational Conference—By Rev. D. S. Gage, D.D.....	6
An Opportunity of Critical Importance—By Rev. A. M. Fraser, D.D.....	6
G. Campbell Morgan Moves to the United States. By Herbert Atchinson Jump	7-9
The Revised Standard of Efficiency for Sunday Schools—By Rev. Gilbert Glass, D.D.....	8
Public School Positions—By Rev. Willis Thompson	9
A Great Religious Plant	9
Report of Committee on Work in France and Belgium.....	22
A Misleading Book Notice	10
DEPARTMENTS—
News of the Week	10
Home Circle	10
Christian Endeavor—By Rev. S. H. Hay	11
Prayer Meeting—By Rev. C. D. Waller	11
Sunday School—By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.	12
Home Circle and Devotional	13

ANNOUNCEMENT.

 The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription is paid.

When change of address is desired, give both the old and the new address.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the last subscription paid.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

TREASURERS OF BENEVOLENT CAUSES.

Foreign Missions—Edwin F. Willis, 154 Fifth Ave., N., Nashville, Tenn.

Home Missions—A. N. Sharp, 1522 Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Christian Education and Ministerial Relief—John Stites, Fifth and Market Streets, Louisville, Ky.

Publication and Sabbath School Work—R. E. Magill, 6-8 N. Sixth Street, Richmond, Va.

Bible Cause—Wm. Foulke, Bible House, New York.

Church News

Collections for September are for Bible Cause, Treasurer, William Foulke, Bible House, New York.

PERSONAL.

Rev. G. W. Belk and family have moved to Montreat, N. C. Please note change of address.

Rev. Dr. Bridges filled morning and evening the pulpit of the Westminster Church last Sunday. Rev. J. G. Garth will occupy it next Sunday.

The congregation of the First Church had the pleasure Sunday morning of hearing Rev. Bob Jones, the Methodist evangelist who has been drawing crowds at the City Auditorium for the past week.

The Presbyterian Ministers' Union has strongly commended Mr. Jones, and it is our earnest prayer that his work here may be blessed.

Lex Klutz, the Chester, S. C., Endeavorer who has done such fine work among the Endeavorers of Great Britain and among the soldiers in the camps where he has served as one of Uncle Sam's men, has sent to friends in South Carolina copies of the program of the Twenty-Seventh British National Christian Endeavor Convention, at which gathering Mr. Klutz was himself a speaker. Mr. Klutz reports that the convention was a splendid success. His subject when he spoke to this great assemblage was "Christian Endeavor in Dixie."

NORTH CAROLINA.

Williams Memorial—Rev. C. C. Anderson, assisted by Rev. C. G. Lynch, held a meeting recently at this church. There were six additions.

Baden—Two infant children were baptized and five were added to the membership of this church last Sunday, a family of four by letter and one lady by a restatement of her faith in Jesus Christ. This church is now in the best condition of its history.

Palestine—The writer has just closed a meeting of five days with this church. A fine attendance was had and considerable interest manifested. One husband and wife joined this church by statement and their son by profession of his faith in Christ. We will give the glory to God.

T. G. Tate

Seversville—This church has called Rev. Donald A. McNeill at a salary of $1,500 for all of his time. This may seem a small event for notice, but it speaks volumes for this little flock. Since its organization it has been one of a group paying $860 to its pastor. Now it branches out alone and will give $1,500 for his full time. Of this eight men pay each $100. When it is known that the entire membership is only 90, it speaks well for the future.

Cook's Memorial—Rev. Leonard Gill assisted the pastor, Rev. C. H. Rowan, in a ten day's meeting at this church, at which there were 20 additions, leaving in the congregation only five souls making no profession. Paw Creek and this church are the banner churches of Presbytery, their present condition being largely the excellent work of their former pastor, Rev. C. G. Lynch, which has been energetically seconded by their present pastor, Rev. C. H. Rowan, who has fitted so admirably into his place.

Allen's—The meetings at Allen's closed last Tuesday. There were added to the church twenty, and between ten and fifteen sent to other denominations and some few re-

(Continued on Page 16)

The Urgent Voice of Our Assembly

Calls First For the Support of Our Educational Institutions as Our Most Pressing Duty at This Time

The Systematic Beneficence Committee of the Assembly, 1917,

Charged with a careful survey of all the needs of the field, says:

"It is our deliberate judgment that the equipment and endowment of our Educational Institutions is the most important need of the Church at this hour."

The Assembly of 1917 Said This:

"Our Schools and Colleges are practically without exception face to face with the most serious crisis in their history."

The time has come when all our Educational Institutions are forced to conform in curriculum, equipment and teaching force to the standards recommended by various agencies, and generally accepted by all classes alike as right and proper. They must conform to these standards or else find themselves discredited before the public and left destitute of students.

"Practically all of the great evangelical churches of this country show their understanding of the unusual crisis which faces these institutions by seeking to add from $1,000,000 to $36,000,000 to their respective assets for education."

The Assembly of 1917 Again:

"urgently lays upon the Synods the imperatively pressing needs of our Educational Institutions, and earnestly entreats them to persevere in measures to provide for these necessities, where measures have been taken, and where not, to inaugurate them with the least possible delay."

The Assembly's Executive Committee of Education:

"The Home Mission Agencies cry: 'America for Christ.' The Foreign Mission Agencies cry: 'Christ for the World.' Their whole appeal must ultimately come to the Christian College."

The Plea of Your Campaign Committee in North Carolina

In view of the fact that we have been charged with the task of raising ONE MILLION DOLLARS for our schools in this Synod, we earnestly ask:

Every pastor to keep the needs of Christian Education before his people at this time, and every interested member to pray for our success

(One pastor where we have canvassed has done this for two months, Sunday morning and at prayer meeting, never failing to mention this task in his public prayers. The result was that his people were eager to do their full part. Suppose every pastor in the Synod would get this task on his heart in this way? We could NOT fail)

The Million Dollar Campaign Committee

A. M. SCALES, Chairman

R. G. VAUGHN, Treasurer

C. M. RICHARDS, Secretary

Greensboro, North Carolina

Church News.

(Continued from Page 14)

claimed. It proved a good meeting and all seemed to enjoy it very much. Rev. Mr. Hardin, the pastor, is very much loved by all in the church, and out. The congregations were large and a good interest. We organized a ladies aid and hope to organize a C. E. next Sunday. There were over three hundred present Sunday afternoon and evening. A great many reconsecrated their lives to the Master.

Rev. D. B. McLaughlin of Philadelphia Church assisted the pastor in the meetings.

Synodical Home Missions—Receipts for August 1919—Albermarle Presbytery:—New Bern, $57.00; Raleigh First, $82.41; Rocky Mount, $13.00; Total, $152.41.

Concord Presbytery:—Mooresville Second, $9.53; Shiloh, $2.80; Total, $12.33.

Fayetteville Presbytery:—Aberdeen, $25.00; Bluff, $7.00; Broadway (Rev. D. McIver), $22.57; Buies Creek, $5.00; Eureka, $1.70; Godwin, $18.00; Highland, $24.07; Jackson Springs, $11.80; McMillan, $5.00; Mt. Pisgah (Rev. D. K. W.), $41.26; Naomi (Rev. A. W. C.), $27.88; Oakland, $12.50; Oakland (Rev. O. G. J.), $5.00; Total, $206.78.

Mecklenburg Presbytery:—Charlotte First, $100.00; Cooks Mem., $5.00; Mulberry, $5.00; Newell, $5.00; Paw Creek, $25.00; Sugar Creek, $31.00; Tenth Avenue, $24.00; Wadeville, $3.00; Total, $199.10.

Orange Presbytery:—Alamance (Rev. O. G. J.) $60.35; Bethlehem W. Aux. Alb. Supt., $3; Buffalo W. Aux., $14.00; Cross Roads W. Aux., $6.33; Dan River, $3.68; Elmira, $1.22; Greensboro First, $58.19; Greensboro First, W. Aux. Alb. Supt., $10.00; Griens, $8.00; Winston First, W. Aux., $6.00; Yanceyville, $9.00; Yanceyville, W. Aux. Alb. Supt., $2.00; Cross Roads (Rev. A. W. C.), $44.61; Total, $226.38.

Wilmington Presbytery:—Beth Car W. Aux. Alb. Supt., $8.00; Calypso (Rev. D.K.W.), $75.00; Graves Mem. L. Aid Alb. Supt., $5.00; Stanford, $2.28; Wilmington First $50.00; Total, $140.28.

Total for August, $937.28.

Previously reported, $20,815.27.

Total Synod to September 1, $21,752.55.

A. W. C.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Charleston Presbytery will meet in Harmony Church, Hampton County, S. C., October 13, 1919, at 11 a. m. Alexander Sprunt, S. C.

Wedgfield Church—The pulpit of this church has been acceptably supplied through July and August by Rev. S. C. Byrd, D.D., president of Chicora College. The church building has been recovered and repainted. It is now one of our neatest and most beautiful country churches.

Mt. Pleasant Church—From August 27 to 31 the pastor of this church, Rev. J. B. Swann, was assisted in a series of meetings by Rev. F. H. Wardlaw, of Guthriesville, as a result of which five members were received into the church, three of them on profession of their faith.

Pleasant Grove—This church has had the pleasure, the last week in August, of a series of services in which the pastor was assisted by Revs. J. E. Coker, of Blackstock, and W. L. Latham, of Great Falls. The people attended well and were greatly profited by the earnest preaching.

Enoree Church, Sedalia—By appointment of the Home Mission Committee of Enoree Presbytery, Rev. C. O'N. Martindale, of Reidville, S. C., came to this church August 31-September 5 and preached twelve times to growing audiences, to the strengthening of the church and the renewing of the Sunday school, three joining the church and two promising to come in. The church and other denominations greatly appreciated the earnest and instructive and spiritual work done by God's servant, and showed it by the good purse made up for the preacher at the close of the meeting. The lives of Christians were much toned up. Praise the Lord! A minister is needed for all his time. Mr. J. E. Minter is clerk.

Anderson—Dr. John S. Foster, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of this city, has been called to the First Presbyterian Church of Savannah, Ga. Two sessions of the church were held last Sunday and the call was unanimous. Dr. Foster had preached at the two services in the Savannah church on Sunday. He has not accepted the call yet.

Dr. Foster has served the Anderson church most acceptably for the past two years, having entered upon this work after a successful pastorate in Birmingham, Ala.

Pee Dee Presbytery meets at Kentyre, Tuesday, October 7, 11:30 a. m. Will all ministers and representatives expecting to attend please notify me at once at Dillon, S. C.? Those coming by rail will be met at Hamer, at 10:30. All who can come in automobiles please do so.

J. A. McQueen, Pastor Kentyre.

Mt. Zion, Harmony Presbytery—During the absence of the pastor in September, Rev. R. C. Reed will supply the church, as also the church at Lynchburg, which the pastor of this church supplies. Dr. Reed is a favorite with our people and we are glad to know that there will be regular services conducted by him. Our young people are getting off to college with the opening of the fall. We have about fifteen who will be in different colleges this fall; some at Davidson, some at Clinton, while the young women will be at Chicora and Coker. The church people recently gave at the home of Mr. G. H. McCutchen a reception to our young men who have returned from war service; to which were invited all the soldiers of the county. Six of our young men served with the colors, four of them seeing service in France. Our people are grateful that all have returned, no one even being wounded.

Glenn Springs—From August 17 to 22, the Rev. C. O'N. Martindale, of Reidville, S. C., aided Rev. T. A. Bickett, Jr., in a series of evangelistic meetings at this point, the night services being largely attended by the people of the community and summer boarders. Mr. Martindale's messages proved interesting and quickening under the blessing of God. "Feeling and Religion," "Getting the Most Out of Our Bibles," "The Prayer That Works," "Ways of Life-Winning," "The Faith That Saves the Family," "Spiritual Churchmanship," "Why Girls and Boys Should Come to Christ and Come Into the Church," "The Seriousness of Sin," "The Meaning of Salvation," "The Repentance That's Genuine," "Business and Religion," "What It Means to Be a Christian," and "The Second Coming of Christ." There were five decisions. The pastor is an untiring worker and faithful follower of Christ, and is leading his people in the ways of the Lord, and greatly beloved by his people.

Columbia—The Rev. William T. Riviere, who was last week elected to the chair of Bible and also to be chaplain of the University of South Carolina, is in Columbia for a few days making arrangements to move here.

Mr. Riviere is already well known in Columbia. He was graduated from the Columbia Theological Seminary, class of 1917, and during his three years here as a student made a wide circle of friends. Concurrent with his work at the seminary, Mr. Riviere took his master's degree from the University of South Carolina. Prior to this he had been graduated from Washington and Lee University.

When the United States entered the war Mr. Riviere went to the first officer's training camp at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., winning a commission as second lieutenant of infantry and was assigned to the Eighty-first Division. Consequently Mr. Riviere returned to Columbia and was stationed at Camp Jackson until the infantry of the division was moved to Greenville. He served in the line through the war, returning only recently from 11 months service overseas.

APPALACHIA.

Covenanters, Dillingham, N. C.—Beginning Monday, August 25, Rev. T. A. Beckett, of Glenn Springs, S. C., preached to the congregation of Covenanters Church for seven days. Mr. Beckett's sermons were full of the fundamental doctrines of the Bible and were preached in a clear, forceful style. The services were well attended and interest increased until the last. The church was greatly revived. One member was received upon confession of faith.

Rev. W. P. Chedester, of the Ora Street Church, Asheville, N. C., a former pastor, visited us during the meeting and aided in the services.

The church is now without regular preaching, Mr. W. J. Huneycutt, who faithfully supplied during the summer, having returned to his work at the Columbia Theological Seminary. There are some good Christian workers at Dillingham who maintain a flourishing Sunday school, yet there is a great need for regular preaching.

ARKANSAS.

El Dorado—The congregation of this church has extended a unanimous call to Rev. W. P. McElroy, of Columbus, Ga., to become its pastor.

FLORIDA.

St. Petersburg—Rev. W. J. Garrison returned from his vacation and occupied the pulpit August 31. On September 6 he announced the reception of four members by certificate and baptized a child. He is hopeful of securing Rev. Dr. Campbell Morgan for a series of Bible expositions in our church during the coming winter or spring. The men of the congregation have formed a brotherhood and expect to make it a power for good during the season. It is expected that there will be a larger crowd of tourists this year than ever before. Rev. Jacob Webber, a retired minister, and wife, of Yonkers, N. Y., highly esteemed and old-time winter visitors, have arrived, to the great pleasure of the congregation, among whom they are most helpful workers.

E. J. Young.

GEORGIA.

Maysville—Rev. E. M. Monroe, of Gainesville, while this church is without a pastor, preaches here one Sunday evening a month.

Center—Under the ministry of Rev. George Telford, this church has made marked improvement in Sabbath school, in church attendance, and in benevolences. On the fifth Sunday the pulpit was supplied by Mr. W. T. Riviere, who as licentiate preached here monthly during his last year in the Seminary.

Siloam—This church has recently enjoyed a series of services conducted by Rev. M. McG. Shields, superintendent of Synodical Home Missions, in which there were four persons added to the Presbyterian Church on profession of faith. Mr. Shields presented the Gospel message with earnestness and clearness and the entire community received a blessing from the meeting.

Nacoochee Institute, Nacoochee—On faculty Sunday, September 7, Rev. William Riviere, professor of Bible in the University of South Carolina, preached in the morning and Rev. Mr. Cherry, Methodist pastor, at night. On Tuesday, September 9, at the opening exercises, addresses will be made by Elder H. H. Dean and Rev. E. M. Monroe, both of Gainesville. Prospects are encouraging for a useful year in the school. One alumnus, Rev. A. Hoyt Miller, is about to sail for Africa, and his younger brother, Dwight, has just been received under care of Athens Presbytery.

Cuthbert—Rev. A. H. Atkins, pastor of the church at Cuthbert, Ga., began a meeting at Mt. Tabor church, Macon Presbytery, on the second Sabbath of August. While there was rain each day most of the week, the congregations were usually large. The meeting closed Friday morning after services—preaching twice each day. While there were apparently no conversions, much good was done. God's people were very much revived and the unconverted were aroused to a deep sense of their danger and responsibility. Many of the young people and others promised to read the word of God (a chapter at least each day).

Ila—Mt. Hermon church entertained Athens Presbytery September 2 and 3. Sermons were preached by Col. R. L. J. Smith, of Commerce, retiring moderator; by Rev. Fritz Rouchenberg, of the Hartwell group, moderator, and by Rev. William T. Riviere, former supply of this church, just back from two years' service as a machine gun officer. Presbytery was also addressed by Rev. C. M. Chumbley, the new Home Mission superintendent of Athens and Augusta Presbyteries, and by Rev. Arthur Bishop, D.D., of Portland, Oregon, who, with Chaplain Kelling, has also seen front line service in France.

Rev. John A. Simpson, of Commerce, preaches at Mt. Hermon two afternoons a month at present. One head of a family has just joined the church on profession.

Pryor Street, Atlanta—Large congregations greeted the pastor upon his return in both services Sunday, September 7. This marked the beginning of the sixth year of Mr. Hemphill's pastorate. During the five years 443 members have been received; 225 on profession of faith and baptism and 218 by letter. The membership has increased from 246 to 554, including non-residents. The net increase in membership for the five years is 308. Six young men of the church have offered their lives for the Gospel ministry, four of whom are now in preparation, and six of the young women have volunteered for Foreign Mission work or other active Christian service. During the five years the church has contributed $36,194, a large proportion of which has been used in missionary and other benevolent work. God is still giving us some additions to the church practically every Sabbath, and both pastor and people have entered upon their new year's work in expectation of more efficient service for the Masters' glory.

Cor.

LOUISIANA.

New Orleans—Dr. Cornelison, of the First Church, at the earnest request of his people, will continue his vacation throughout the month of September in the hope that he may be further benefited by the additional month of rest. Rev. R. Excell Fry, of Columbus, Miss., is supplying the pulpit of the First Church for the month.

TEXAS.

Texas-Mexican Mission Notes—Kingsville—This church has entered upon a new era of progress in many lines under the leadership of the new pastor, Rev. I. P. Balderas. A lot centrally located has been bought, the chapel moved from the edge of the city and a manse made by remodelling and enlarging a house already located on the new lot. The congregations are increasing in number and liberality while the Sunday school is making rapid progress. Mr. Balderas has begun work on a nearby ranch with good attendance and intense interest, and some twenty persons seeking membership in the church.

Rio Grande Valley—Rev. Guillermo Walls, our Sunday school missionary, is organizing two new schools in addition to his work of developing the one already organized. He is much encouraged in this work.

Mariana—Rev. Elias Trevino recently helped the evangelist of this field in a meeting at this place, at which time six members were received on profession of faith and two by letter. The six represent three new families.

San Marcos—This church has received recently twelve members on profession of faith, while some twenty more presented themselves as candidates for membership. Eight infants were also baptized.

The "missionary boxes" which have not been coming for two years to some of our families are again looked forward to with hopefulness toward solving the H. C. L. problem. We need quite a number of them. I shall be glad to give names, addresses, number in family and any other useful information to societies wishing to help in this most worthy undertaking. All help will be appreciated, but those that come early doubly so.

R. D. Campbell.

VIRGINIA.

South Boston—Rev. G. W. Belk begins his meeting at South Boston, Va., on next Sunday, the 14th. The choir will be led by J. Blanton Belk.

Mt. Carmel—During the first year of the pastorate of Rev. Jno. L. Fairly with this church, fifty-four members have been received on profession and fifteen by certificate.

Program for Conference on Evangelism in East Hanover Presbytery, September 24, conducted by Rev. L. W. Curis:

The Meeting Itself: Preparation, the Week Before, the Week of, Following Up the Week After, Rev. H. J. Williams; The Importance and Benefit to the Church and Pastor, Rev. F. T. McFadden conducting same; Evangelistic Meetings With Mission Points—Do They Pay? Are They Practical? Rev. Dan Graham; round table on above subjects. Closed by Rev. D. P. Rogers.

Samuel Davies Church—Salem congregation recently enjoyed a very helpful meeting. Quite a number were added to the communion on profession of faith and others will unite later.

The Salem congregation recently had their Children's Day at which they raised $17 for Home and Foreign Missions. The superintendent of this school is in his eighty-second year but he puts the snap and drive of a man of 30 into its program.

The Bethlehem congregation of this church with the help of Salem are taking steps to thoroughly overhaul their manse.

Beulah congregation of this church is remodeling and enlarging their building.

Providence Church, Powhatan county, has bought a manse property, which lies adjoining that of the church. A located pastor will be next in order.

The Presbytery of Winchester met on Tuesday, September 2, 1919, in the attractive town of Berkeley Springs, W. Va., and received most hospitable entertainment at the hands of the Rev. L. Cook Campbell and his church people. The Rev. A. N. Perryman, retiring moderator, preached the opening sermon. The enrollment—27 ministers and 14 elders—was the largest at any fall meeting in the last seventeen years.

Mr. C. G. Crawford and Mr. W. B. O'Neal, faithful and highly esteemed elders, were elected moderator and temporary clerk, respectively.

The Rev. Drs. G. G. Sydnor and J. B. Bittinger were received into the Presbytery, and arrangements were made for their early installation, Dr. Sydnor at Charles Town and Dr. Bittinger at Gerrardstown, Bunker Hill and Clearbrook.

The first semi-annual report of Rev. Charles D. Gilkeson, treasurer of benevolences, was very gratifying, both in the amount received and in the promptness of remittance on the part of church treasurers. Mr. Gilkeson is also superintendent of Home Missions and Sunday school work. His plan for holding Sunday school conferences in individual churches was approved, and the churches were asked to give him their hearty co-operation. The Home Mission fields are all supplied and their work is encouraging. Three new manses will be completed during the year. The Home Mission churches were commended for increase in contributions to the benevolences, and urged to give like diligence in contributions to pastoral support, especially in view of the fact that they gave in the past four months more to benevolences than to pastoral support.

The amendments to the Book of Church Order proposed by the General Assembly were referred to a special committee to report at the spring meeting, and pastors were directed to call the attention of their sessions to the proposed changes.

The organization of two new churches was reported, viz.: Shanghai and Tabler, both of them in the field of Rev. J. L. Rogers, who was recently installed at Tuscarora, the only other church of this group. Arrangements were made for his installation in the new churches.

The Presbytery overtured the Assembly to instruct its Systematic Benevolence and Stewardship Committee to raise the percentage of the benevolent fund for the cause of Foreign Missions, and make such adjustment among the other causes as seems wise to them.

Mr. P. T. Atkinson was heard in behalf of Hampden-Sidney College, and a resolution of appreciation and support was adopted.

The pastoral relations existing between Rev. J. F. Leeper and the Strasburg church were dissolved.

Rev. J. C. Siler is appointed to preach the doctrinal sermon at the spring meeting on "The Mission of the Church."

The spring meeting will be held in Charlestown, W. Va., on Tuesday, April 20, 1920, at 8 p. m.

Presbytery adjourned to meet at the call of the moderator during the sessions of Synod at Charlottesville, Va.

J. A. McM., S. C.

WEST VIRGINIA.

The Synod of West Virginia will meet in the First Presbyterian Church in Charlestown, W. Va., on Tuesday, October 14, at 8 p. m.

J. M. Sloan, S. C.

Lewisburg—Members of the Old Stone Church and some outsiders have recently presented Rev. and Mrs. W. H. DuBose with an Oakland Six five-passenger automobile. As this church numbers among its membership a number of families living in the country, this generous gift will prove of great aid to the pastor in his pastoral work as well as a pleasure to his entire family.

Evangelistic Notes—The Executive Committee of Assembly's Home Missions is pleased to announce to the Church that Rev. R. M. Hall, D. D., Synodical Superintendent of Home Missions in West Virginia, has accepted the Committee's call to become Regional Evangelist, and expects to enter upon his duties as such the first of October, having been assigned to the region embraced in the Synod of Texas. Dr. Hall was for many years the popular and successful pastor of the First Church, Galveston, Texas., and widely beloved in the Synod of Texas where many friends will be glad to welcome him back. He has also done very effective work in the evangelistic field, and the Committee commends him with all confidence to the churches in the region he is to serve.

Dr. R. A. Brown has recently held a very successful meeting at Somerville, Tenn.

Rev. J. Ernest Thacker, D. D., has concluded his engagement with the First Church, Lexington, Ky., which he has been supplying for some months past, and will resume his evangelistic work with the Committee, beginning at Fort Smith, Ark., in October.

Dr. Thacker has been fortunate in securing Mr. and Mrs. Harry Armstrong to take charge of the music and to assist in other ways in his evangelistic services. Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong are highly recommended and will no doubt add to the efficiency of Dr. Thacker's work.

During the latter part of July Rev. Trigg A. M. Thomas held a very effective meeting in Tippah County, Miss., in which there were 64 additions to the Presbyterian Church on profession of faith, 48 of whom also received the sacrament of baptism. There were ten additions by letter. A liberal offering was made for the expenses of the meeting; and in addition to this, a contribution was made to Dr. Thomas for his services.

Rev. J. McD. Lacy is conducting a very successful evangelistic campaign in East Alabama Presbytery, where his meetings have been greatly blessed in reviving the churches and reaching the unsaved.

Every Presbytery in the Assembly has been asked through the Chairman of its Home Mission Committee to approve at its meeting this fall, a campaign of Presbyterian Evangelism, and to take all necessary steps to prosecute it with vigor to complete success.

R. F. Kirkpatrick,
Chairman, Sub-Committee on Evangelism.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. Jno. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

Meeting of Synodical Auxiliary—The N. C. Synodical Auxiliary will meet in Durham, November 4 and 5. The executive committee will meet Tuesday, November 4, at 9:30 a. m. The opening session of the Synodical will be held at 8 o'clock the evening of November 4.

Mrs. S. A. Robinson,
Sec'y. N. C. Synodical Auxiliary.

Stanley and Union Counties—The annual meeting of the Young People's Society of Stanly and Union Counties was held at Siler Church Thursday, August 28. The following program was carried out:

10 A. M.—Devotional exercises conducted by Carr Price and Rev. B. B. Shankle.

Song—"Come Thou Almighty King," by the congregation.

Address of Welcome by Mr. J. N. Price.

Response by Wm. McDonald, of Waxhaw, N. C.

Report of Synod's Young People's Conference at Queens College by Ollie Alexander, Monroe, N. C.

11 A. M.—Address by Rev. C. C. Anderson, Charlotte, N. C.

12 M.—Recess for dinner.

1:30 P. M.—Report of Montreat Conference by Mrs. Wm. Steele, Waxhaw, N. C.

Solo—"He Will Not Leave Thee Alone," by Rev. B. B. Shankle.

Reports of delegates from the various Young People's Societies of Union and Stanly Counties, interspersed with music.

3 P. M.—Address on "Missions," by Rev. Mr. White, Marshville, N. C.

Address—"Student Loan Fund," by Miss Mamie McElwee, Statesville, N. C.

Duet—"Others," by Rev. and Mrs. B. B. Shankle.

Short talks on the different phases of Christian Endeavor Work, by Rev. B. B. Shankle and Miss McElwee.

Song—"God Be With You Till We Meet Again," by congregation.

Benediction by Mr. White.

About one hundred and fifty people were present. The following churches: Siler, Waxhaw, Monroe, Indian Trail, Marshville, and Peachland, were represented.

A motion was made and carried to ask Presbytery to allow the Young People's Societies to form groups with a president and secretary for each group.

The people of Siler, in their beautiful new church, the best in Union County outside of Monroe, proved themselves ideal hostesses in every way. A splendid dinner was served, picnic style, on the church ground.

Ollie Alexander, Secretary.

Mecklenburg—The second annual rally meeting of the Young People's Societies of Mecklenburg County was held at Providence Church, Tuesday, August 26.

The meeting was opened at 11 o'clock with devotional exercises conducted by Rev. Chas. Kingsley, pastor of Providence Church, who also extended a very cordial address of welcome. Miss Nettie Allison, of Charlotte, responded.

A most inspiring address was then given by Dr. G. F. Bell, of Knox Church, Charlotte. After singing "Take My Life," the meeting adjourned for dinner, which was served bountifully in the church grove. At 1:30 the afternoon exercises were opened by singing "Onward Christian Soldiers," followed with prayer by Mr. Tom Alexander, of Providence. Miss Sarah Dunlap, of Westminster Church, Charlotte, gave a most interesting report of Synod's Conference for young people held at Queens College. Reports were then heard from the six local societies that were represented, after which a solo, "Just for Today," was beautifully given by Miss Nettie Allison, of the Second Church, Charlotte. Miss Maria Rose, of the First Church, gave an interesting talk with helpful suggestions on "Methods of Work in Young People's Societies," studied under Mrs. E. C. Cronk at Blue Ridge Missionary Conference.

Miss Mamie McElyee, synodical secretary of young people's work, spoke on "Student Loan Fund."

A splendid report of the Missionary Conference at Montreat was given by Miss Bessie Blakeney, of Providence, after a beautiful solo, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go," sung by Mrs. Sam Hatchell, of Providence. The meeting was dismissed with prayer by Rev. Mr. Kingsley.

Louise Parks, Secretary.

Montgomery, Anderson and Richmond—The Young People's Rally meeting of Montgomery, Anderson and Richmond Counties was held at Mt. Gilead Presbyterian church on Friday, August 29, 1919.

Devotional exercises were conducted by Mr. Rae McRae. Prayer by Rev. W. E. Furr.

Miss Grace McRae gave the welcome address, which was followed by a report of the work of the societies and a talk by Miss McElwee, synodical secretary of young people's work.

A motion was made that a request be made to Presbytery that the societies in this group be allowed to organize into a union with a president and secretary in order to carry on the work of the societies and rally meetings. This motion was carried by a vote of the majority of the members present.

A Christian Endeavor Society was organized for the young people of Mt. Gilead Church and the following officers were elected: President, Mr. Rae McRae; vice-president, Mr. R. E. Hamlett; recording secretary, Miss Robbie McAulay; corresponding secretary, Miss Ella Parker; treasurer, Mr. Ralph Misenheimer.

Reports were given from the delegates of societies. Reports of Synod's Young People's Conference at Queens College was given by Miss Mildred McAulay.

The meeting was dismissed by prayer by Rev. Mr. Furr, pastor of the Mt. Gilead Church, after which dinner was served on the grounds.

Ruth McRae, Secretary.

Attention, Secretaries of Assembly's Home Missions in the Presbyterian and Local Auxiliaries in North Carolina:

The vacation season is over and once more we have come to the time of preparation for our period of mission study which reaches from the first of October until the Home Mission week of prayer the last of November.

Now is the time to organize your classes and order text books.

There are two books offered for our enjoyment and instruction. The first, Christianizing Christendom, by Dr. Morris, a masterful presentation of our National Responsibility and showing the necessity for Home Missions.

The second, "In Black and White," by Mrs. J. D. Hammond, a Southern woman, is concerned with one of the burning questions of today—the discussion of the negro problem.

Both of these books may be ordered from the Presbyterian Committee of Publication at Richmond Va., or from the Home Mission Committee in Atlanta, Ga.

The books are forty cents in paper binding and the helps are five cents extra.

(Continued on page 22)

Children's Department

PET CHICKENS.

Dear Standard:

I am a girl ten years old. My mother takes your nice paper and I enjoy reading the letters very much. I go to the Presbyterian church. Our pastor is Rev. Byron Clark. Miss Jennie Brown is my Sunday school teacher. I am in the fifth grade at school. I have two little bantam chickens. They are the only little pets I have. They will eat out of my hand. Hope this will be printed, as I want to surprise my grandmother.

Your little friend,
Elizabeth Morrison.

Salisbury, N. C.

FOURTEEN LITTLE RABBITS.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl twelve years old. I am in the seventh grade at school. We have fourteen little rabbits. I go to the Presbyterian church. Mrs. Brawley is my teacher. Our pastor is Dr. H. M. Parker. My grandmother takes your paper and I enjoy reading the letters and stories very much. Hope this will be printed, as I want to surprise my grandmother.

Your little friend,
Margaret Morrison.

Statesville, N. C.

THE WASTE BASKET FULL.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy seven years old. I memorized the Child's Catechism last year and recited it to my pastor, Rev. W. H. Hamilton, and won the nice Testament.

I go to Sunday school at Walhalla. We have a good Sunday school and a beautiful church.

I have a pet horse named Prince that I can ride.

I hope to see my letter published, as I have waited a long time, hoping the waste basket would be filled and my letter would not reach it.

Billy Doyle Reeder.

West Union, S. C.

AN AUGUST CHRISTMAS.

It was August. It was August weather, oh, very hot! But Janey Holley and Pickle Brown and Sandy and Andy McKaig and Renie Applegate and Mary Dexter and the others did not mind the heat so much. What they minded was that they had dressed up, they had endured an extra face washing apiece, they had set their mouths for a good time, and then that good time had, as Pickle said, "gone to squish."

"It will be next Friday," said cheerful Andy.

"We'll be glad then it wasn't today, because—"

Janey's fierce glance nipped off the sentence. Who cared for being glad a week off? There was a dismal silence.

It was broken by the opening of doors all along Duck lane, and the voices of mothers calling their sons and daughters to come and take off their best clothes.

When the postman came to Duck lane, he brought mail addressed to Adams street. That proves Duck lane was not a real name. Neither was Pickle. Still, for ordinary purposes, both answered very well.

Soon the crowd had collected again in everyday attire, the afternoon on their hands. Everybody looked to Janey for suggestions. But Janey's mouth was shut so tight it looked as if it had been backstitched.

"Janey," ventured Andy, mildly, "tell us about going to the Christmas tree in the city. It would sound kinda cooling."

The backstitched mouth turned down alarmingly at the corners before it opened to demand, "What's the use? You've heard it a hundred times."

Pickle spoke out, "Janey is grumpy!" "Who wouldn't be?" snapped Janey, "with him talking baby talk about what sounds cool, weather like this?" Janey's face was getting red, and there is no saying what sort of explosion might have come had not Mary Dexter interrupted.

Mary had not lived long in Duck lane. She was a shabby, pale little girl who walked with a crutch. "She ain't a figger," Pickle had said after her first week in Duck lane, "nor a quitter," he had added after the second.

"Let's," interrupted Mary, "play Christmas tree."

Sandy, Andy, Renie, Pickle and the others looked at Janey, who looked stonily at nothing in particular.

"Tain't the right time of year," objected Renie.

"Not for the tree," said Mary, "but for Christmas it is. It's always the right time for that."

"That's news," said Pickle. "I thought Christmas struck a regular day in December every year."

Mary laughed contentedly. "I used to think the same way. But a lady told me different, and it was so plain it was funny I hadn't seen it sooner."

Janey detached her gaze from nowhere and fixed it on Mary.

"The lady said," continued Mary, "that the first Christmas was just out of kindness and love. And ever since wherever any one tries to pattern after the first one, whenever anybody is kind, out of memory of it, Christmas is right there and then. Don't you see?"

Nobody answered.

Mary smiled straight into Janey's eyes before Janey could look away. "Last Sunday," she said, "when your father coaxed Al Bowles out of church and on home, when his mother was ashamed and afraid of him, I know it was Christmas in Duck lane, he was so kind."

Was quiet Mary diplomatic? Pickle wondered. "If you won't fight," he meditated, "nor you won't quit, there's got to be some skin-out-of-it to you, I guess. Mary remembers all Janey Holley is soft on is her father. He's bow-legged. He's not smart nor pretty. But Janey likes him. See her now!"

"So if," Mary was saying "we play Christmas tree, the tree is all we have to pretend. The presents can be real."

"We'll begin at the beginning," Mary pointed to the corner. "There ain't many corners on this street—we can give presents in each. First there's the Greens. Their baby's sick, but his mother's too busy to push him any place that's cooler."

"I wouldn't mind doing it," volunteered Renie, "if the rest do something too."

"The Shaws live next," said Pickle. "Old Grandy Shaw is back from the hospital. All the pleasure he gets is telling about his operation. I'll be in the game by listening to him."

"Then comes our house," said Billy Law, a funny little boy, red-haired and higgledy-piggledy. "Ma sent me after soap, and I'd better take it to her."

Billy started toward the corner store.

"Mrs. Law's getting her dress ready to go hear Billy speak his piece at the entertainment. She's going to surprise Billy," said Sandy.

"Oh, she mustn't!" cried Renie. "Billy can't speak a piece. He never gets past the middle. He don't care, and none of us do. But his mother would."

"He'll get past the middle this time," said Sandy. "When his mother told me, I made up my mind Billy had got to learn every word if I had to sit up nights with him. But I mean to make his mother proud of him."

"That's the nicest present we could think of for the Laws!" cried Mary.

"Dad can't get off Tuesday," Janey blurted out suddenly in a voice she tried to make sharp enough so it would not be husky. "He means to go to see his brother. Uncle James can't walk a step. They're taking him to a cure, and he's going to stop twenty miles down the line Tuesday to rest. Dad counted on visiting with him all day."

There was silence. The boys and girls of Duck lane were sorry good little bandy-legged Mr. Holley should have such a disappointment.

"Why can't he get off?" demanded Andy.

"Other man's sick."

Andy straightened himself up from his round-shouldered huddle on the curb. He was 14, and large for his age. "What's the matter with me clerking at Wiley's for a day?" he remarked. "I'll ask about it."

Andy disappeared. Pickle pretended not to see Janey's head on her knees. "Andy can talk Christmas spirit into old Wiley in five minutes," he said.

Everybody understood. Since the day Andy had seized the Wiley baby out of its scared sister's arms and run with it to the doctor's just in time for the doctor to save it—everybody knew what the Wileys thought of Andy.

"If," chuckled Pickle, "he sells needles for pencils, it will be Andy, so never mind."

He stopped, for Janey had lifted her head.

With Janey in the game, a great many Christmas presents could be found for Duck lane in August. There were washes to take home, there were errands to run, and more babies besides the Green baby to "keep." By the middle of the afternoon the street had put on a festal air.

"You can almost smell the Christmas greens," said Pickle. "Everybody laughed at first, but they liked it. It's been Merry Christmas for about every one."

"Not for Mrs. Plympton," said Billy Law. "She looks as if she had buried half her folks yesterday and was going to the funeral of the rest tomorrow."

"Ain't that so?" inquired Pickle. "If we asked her to enjoy herself it would hurt her feelings. She's been a groaner far back as I remember her."

Perhaps it was because Mary could not remember her very far back that Mrs. Plympton made her so sorry. But it did seem as though the boys were right, and that no neighborliness would be acceptable to the sad-faced woman.

At last the day was ending. Only a red rim of it was left around the sky. A breeze had sprung up.

"It's nice this evening," said Renie, "and it's been fun this afternoon."

"We didn't hardly miss the excursion," supplemented Sandy.

They were resting after their labors, and talking. The tide of conversation ebbed at the appearance of a stranger.

"What's that?" muttered Pickle. "Looks as if he had run off from a wild west show!"

The man made an inquiry of some children, then walked through the street and out at the other end. He had hardly gone when Janey said, "He dropped something!" and ran to pick it up. "It's nothing," she reported, "just an old letter." She was about to throw it away when Mary caught it from her.

"Sometimes letters are a lot," said Mary.

She looked after the man, who dragged his feet as if he were tired. Mary knew how it felt to be tired. Suppose he had to come back to look?

"He came on our street," she said, "and he ought to have some Christmas, too. I'll take his letter to him."

Mary, swinging over the ground with her crutch, soon overtook the stranger. He showed small interest in the letter. He might have thanked her, Mary thought. Then something in the eyes looking down at her stirred her to quick compassion.

She was only a little 12-year-old girl, while he was a tall, broad man. But he appealed to Mary's sympathy as if he were little and she were big.

"I've been hunting since morning," he said. "I can't find Adams street."

"Why, yes, you can," cried Mary. "It's right where this letter was!"

He went white under his sunburn. "Sure?" he asked. The children told me it was Goose street, or something like that."

"Duck lane," corrected Mary. "It's real name is Adams street."

He took a step toward her. "Do you know if a Mrs. Plympton lives there?"

"Yes," said Mary. "Did you want to see her?"

"Want to see her?" he laughed shakily. "I haven't wanted anything else for ten years."

Mary led the way. "Mrs. Plympton has wanted you, too," she said. "Come!"

The others stared at Mary limping past with "Wild West," and waited, wondering. Presently she came back, her eyes shining. She began to call out the happy news before they could hear her.

"Mrs. Plympton's son, did you say?" asked Janey. "Didn't know she had one."

"She wasn't sure herself, it had been so long since she had heard from him," said Mary. "She opened the door and saw him! And you ought to have seen her. She got young!"

"Huh," sniffed Billy, "she's a thousand!"

Mary shook her head. "You'll see. I do hope after this they'll keep the real Christmases together. They were so glad!"

She sank down on Billy Law's stoop and dropped her head to her knees. And since no one in Duck lane had ever seen Mary cry, there was an impressive pause. But it was over in a minute, and they all talked until their mothers, up and down the street, began calling them home to bed.

"It's been a lovely Christmas," said Renie. "And who'd have thought we could find presents for everybody? Money isn't everything."

"Maybe Christmas is, if you stay on it steady," said Janey thoughtfully, "like Dad and Mary."—Sally Campbell, in The Continent.

THE DOCTOR'S DAUGHTER.

When Daddy signs his name
He always writes M. D.,
That's so the people all will know
That he belongs to me.

For M. D. means My Daddy,
Or something just the same,
And that is why he always
Puts these letters on his name.

Some letters in his name are small,
But these are not, you see.
He always make them big like that Because he's proud of me.

—Leo S. Robinson.

A NEW GAME.

It was Maida's turn to invent a new game, an exchange tells us. She looked at Mother Floss and smiled at the three darling kittens.

"I know," she cried, and ran out to the kitchen. "Father," she asked eagerly, "may I take one of your woolen mittens?"

The mitten was a blue one. Maida slipped it on Walter's hand and tied a silk handkerchief over his eyes.

"You must stand in the middle of the ring," she said, "and turn about three times. The children may change places while you twirl, but when you stop, no one must move."

Walter whirled about like a top. The children quickly changed places with each other, until Maida raised her hand.

"Now," she prompted, "hold up the mitten and walk toward somebody and say, 'What naughty kitten has lost his mitten?' Then slip it on his hand and say, 'Was it you, sir?' And the child must answer, 'Not I, sir.' If you can guess who it is, he must take your place in the middle of the ring, but if not, you must take the mitten back and try again."

Walter laughed and said that was easy, but he put the mitten on three times before he guessed the right child. Can you do better than that?

THE HAPPY GRAY CATBIRD.

In a bush by the fence there's a catbird gray,
And he's singing a song so gleeful and gay;
He whistles, he warbles, he mimics, he trills,
Whatever he wishes comes out as he wills.

He's the happiest, noisiest, merriest bird
With the jumbled-est, tumbled-est song ever heard.

And why all this music, this jubilant song,

That he pours forth so freely the whole day long?

Little boy, little girl, can it be you've not guessed

It is all on account of a snug, pretty nest

That's built out of grass and paper and twigs

And hid in the lilac's three branching sprigs.

But that is not all! Come close while I tell!

There are three deep blue eggs in that nest as well.

Oh, hush! it's a secret among us alone
Which we never must tell till the young birds have flown,

So be cautious, be wise when you have to go near,

Lest a blue jay, or cat, or bad boy appear

To steal the blue eggs of the catbird so gay

And take all the lilt from his sweet roundelay.

—Ruth Alexander.

Report of Committee on Work in France and Belgium.

THE Protestant Churches of France and Belgium have had much in common with the Churches of America, in origin, history, faith and sentiment. The Huguenots of France, largely through earlier persecution, have been distinguished among the planters of Protestant religion in both Europe and America and in other parts of the world.

These Churches in France and Belgium, in addition to this kinship in origin and heritage, are related still more intimately by historical ties and by forms of faith and order, with the Presbyterians, Reformed, Luthern, Baptist, and Methodist Episcopal Churches in America.

These relations and sympathies have normally and naturally deepened as we have witnessed the brave sacrifices of these fellow-Christians and still more as we have in some measure entered into their suffering. It was in the ordinary course of nature that they should, in 1915, in their dire need, look across the sea to their brothers and sisters in faith for financial and moral support. Consequency, messengers have passed back and forth from the Church of one country to another, we have received their messengers with sympathy and have made response to the needs they set forth to us, though in a measure which has been thus far too meagre.

The Protestant Churches of France and Belgium now face the great tasks and opportunities of reconstruction. They do it with diminished ranks and resources, but with the same courage and resolution that they displayed in maintaining their life and in giving heart and soul to their nation during the war.

A great portion of the people of France have no personal relations with religious institutions. It is not that they are irreligious. They have borne witness to their splendid ideals during these five momentous years. But, whatever may be the cause or causes, organized religion as ecclesiastically constituted has failed to reach them. To these millions of unattached men and women the Protestant Faith of France is making its appeal. For them it has a message, a message which the Protestant Churches of France have a right to speak and an appeal which the people of France have a right to hear, if they choose to listen to it.

Our brethren across the sea, however, while their faith and spiritual power have been deepened, are depleted in their personal and physical resources, their Churches are destroyed, their institutions are impaired, and their workers have been laid low on the field of conflict. The Protestant Churches of America have here a great obligation and opportunity which to ignore would be a sin against humanity and against God. These needs are, first of all, the rebuilding and strengthening of Churches, Manses, Hospitals, and institutions of Christian teaching. But they are more than this, they include the great task of social reconstruction.

In this service with a view of strengthening and supplementing the forces already in those countries, the American denominations having work or related work in France and Belgium propose to participate; namely, the Presbyterian, Reformed, Methodist Episcopal, and Baptist, with such other denominations as may desire to unite in this duty and privilege.

In order that this great ecumenical undertaking may be broadly Christian, The Federal Council has appointed a "Commission on Relations with France and Belgium" in which all participating denominations may have a common interest, work in consultation and cooperation, and insure results effective to the highest degree.

This Commission seeks no controversy, enters no debate, regarding other forms of religion in these nations. Their people will choose for themselves the expressions of their religious faith. The Commission and its constituent denominations enter upon their task, not destructively, but frankly, openly and constructively.

In neither France nor Belgium has the State decreed forms or institutions of religion for the people and the religious faith of men and women is not to be determined by numerical proportions or by majority vote.

In these nations the Church of Rome has a large body of faithful and devout adherents, whose devotion we respect and whose good works we esteem. We view with cheerful goodwill the efforts of Churches of that faith in America which seek to do for their brethren and sisters what we do for ours. They too will make their religious appeal to the great multitude in France who are without the Church. We do not assume to determine the course which such churches shall take, nor do we on the other hand admit the validity of their objection to our own cooperation with our spiritual brethren of France and Belgium, or to our purpose and plan to take to the multitude in these lands the message of the gospel which they have either never heard or but dimly understand.

In this spirit of goodwill towards all good men and all good works and institutions, the Protestant Evangelical Churches of America desire to do their part in the moral, social and religious reconstruction of these countries, which, by their devotion to ideals and by the valor of their spirits have saved us from the greatest moral and spiritual disaster that ever threatened the civilized world.

THE BIBLE IN THE HOME.

The test of the nations is their loyalty to God's Word. The nations which have honored God's Word, and which are honoring God's Word, are the nations which have His blessing.

The state will never be guided into ways of constructive peace and permanent development through society's aim and desire to better mankind. Reform movements, no matter how strong and efficient they may be, can never reform the state or the nation until that reform begins at the fireside. There is no chance for men to do, in their interests and desires for others, what God has said the father and the mother, the husband and the wife, the brother and the sister, must do.

The Bible is the one great power which God has given to us, to instruct us how to lead our children and build our homes aright; and without the Word of God there is no dictionary to give to us the words and comprehensions which constitute the vocabulary of the literature of Christianity; there is no other book which gives to us a relationship to the great natural world in which we live, a knowledge of individual life that we may relate our lives to the individual life aright, and a constructive, earnest purpose to follow the principles which are incarnate in Christ's teachings.

What the Bible wants is a chance to speak for itself. What God's Word wants is a chance to show us our littleness, and the goodness of God. The trouble is we talk too much about what other people have to say about the Word of God, and do not take time enough ourselves, as Christian workers and leaders, to let the Word of God talk to us. We go to a newsstand and buy a recent novel. Why do we do it? We say, "I am tired, and I need the recreation of this novel." What do we do? We read it through, frequently at a sitting, and there may be three hundred and fifty pages in it. We say, "I cannot give but this afternoon to it;" and we read it through. How many books of God's Word do we, as Christian workers, read through at a sitting?—John Timothy Stone, D.D.

Woman's Auxiliary.

(Continued from page 19)

For the week of prayer in November the slogan is "The Soul of Democracy. Christian Service, Personal and Social."

The program can be ordered from the Home Mission Committee in Atlanta and will be ready by October 10.

The offering this year will be used for the founding of the much needed Industrial School for Negro Girls.

Counting on your co-operation in making this season of study and prayer one of unprecedented success, I am.

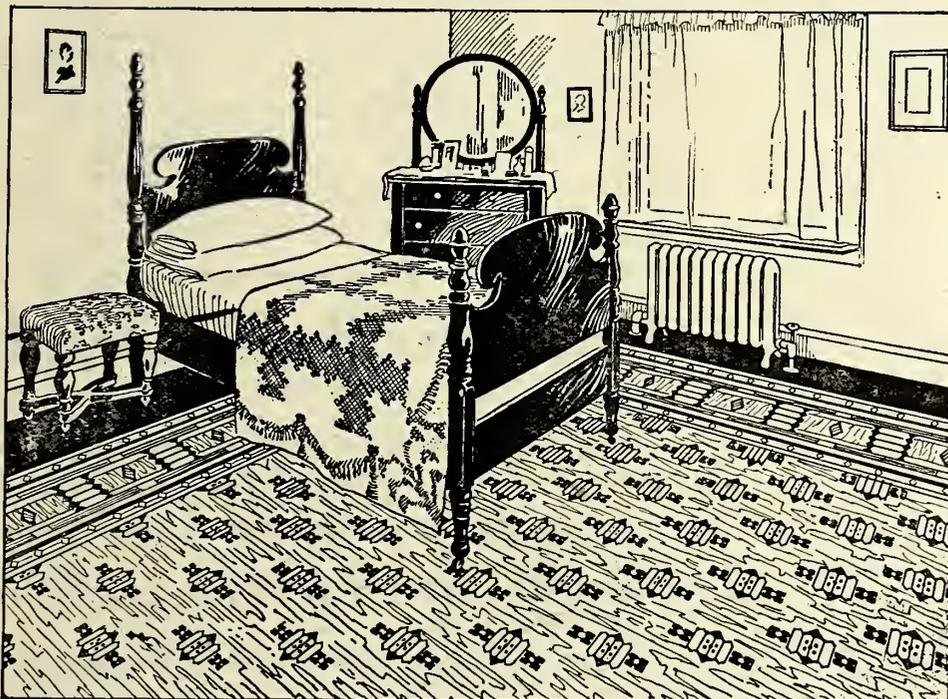

Yours in the Work,

Mrs. Wm. E. White,
Secretary Assembly's Home Missions, the Woman's Synodical Auxiliary of North Carolina.

A GREAT 10-DAY SALE

CONGOLEUM FLOOR COVERINGS

These wonderful, nationally advertised floor coverings are now used for every room in the house. The designs are all most beautiful. The quality of Congoleum products have been proven the best by years of test. In fact, it is the only floor covering that is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction or your money will be refunded. (Backed by a company worth over $10,000,000.00)

	Nationally Advertised Price	Our Sale Price
18 in. x 108 in.	$2.25	$1.35
3 ft. x 9 ft.	3.75	2.48
6 ft. x 9 ft.	8.75	6.95
7 1-2 ft. x 9 ft.	10.60	8.98
9 ft. x 10 1-2 ft.	14 85	10.95
9 ft. x 12 ft.	17.00	12.95

MAIL ALL ORDERS TO DEPT. A

This Seal is the sign of quality in floor coverings

Schewell Furniture Company

Lynchburg - Virginia

"Home Furnishings For a Quarter of a Century"

Miscellaneous

CARNEGIE'S CONFESSION OF DEBT.

Andrew Carnegie "died disgraced" if his own famous remark of years ago should be applied literally to himself now that he has gone from this world leaving behind him a fortune which no one estimates at less than $300,000,000. But it is plain that the American people have not held the old ironmaster to a rigid accounting by the standard which he himself set up; there is obvious leniency—indeed, positive good will—in the universal popular comment following his death. Even those who were bitter against him in the height of his commercial career speak of him now with respectful appreciation. And this is not solely or principally because he did give away to public and social uses in his lifetime considerably larger sums than he was possessed of when he died. His vast benefactions, reaching to hundreds of communities and thousands of lives, will for generations remain an honorable memorial of his personality and character. But they do not represent the greatest or most useful significance of his life. The best thing that he did for his time and for times to come was the emphasis which he gave to the social responsibility of success and accumulation.

He was the first business leader of America to teach openly that a man who made much money out of the opportunities of civilization became thereby a great debtor to society. Hosts of men before him had made money lavishly and then given it away opulently. But they almost invariably gave—or permitted the public to understand they were giving—as a matter of unrequired generosity on their own part, the exhibit of a merit of liberality in themselves. Andrew Carnegie in contrast always said he was just giving the people what he owed them—paying a debt. And while some quarreled with his theory and more complained of the way he carried it out, everybody acknowledged that he proved his own honest belief in the principals he voiced. And what is more, he stuck to his doctrine till he made it a commonplace among successful Americans today. Now it has some to pass that there is not a decent rich man in the United States who does not confess the truth of the Carnegian application of the Pauline doctrine: "I am debtor." And more and more of them are living up to it.

That is the great result of Andrew Carnegie's life. Sorry it is indeed that in making himself an apostle of this important item in the gospel Mr. Carnegie did not hold by the church better than he did. But on the other hand it is happy that he could not entirely get away from the church. It was undoubtedly his heritage of Scotch Presbyterian conscience which taught him what he taught his time.—Continent.

SUMMER FURS.

Most impressive on a super-heated subway, elevated or surface car in New York is not the perspiring humanity nor the close quarters that never seem more close, nor the exhibitions of good or bad temper—as the case may be—but the fact that every other woman you see swelters in furs. Now, summer furs have their uses; they are not the anomaly they seem. In a flying motor car in the warmest weather they are indispensable, and no other wrap quite takes their place. But in the subway, with the mercury way above normal! The only way to keep cool in spite of the sight of these is to recall that these same women now swathed in dead animals' skins are those who, in the dead of winter, delight to protect arms and chest with georgette crepe and to expose their necks to arctic breezes.—Exchange.

A CENTURY OF SERVICE.

In 1820 a good old-fashioned doctor in North Carolina prepared an ointment for skin eruptions. It met the needs of his patients, and has likewise met the needs of millions of other doctors' patients. Grey's Ointment, the compound he prepared, is now rounding its hundredth year of honest, good old-fashioned service and value. It is very effective for sores, boils, cuts, bruises, burns, stings, eczema and the many similar forms of skin eruption. It soothes the pain, cleanses the wound, kills the germs and begins healing. If your druggist can not supply you, send his name to W. F. Gray & Co., 843 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., and a liberal sample will be sent you.

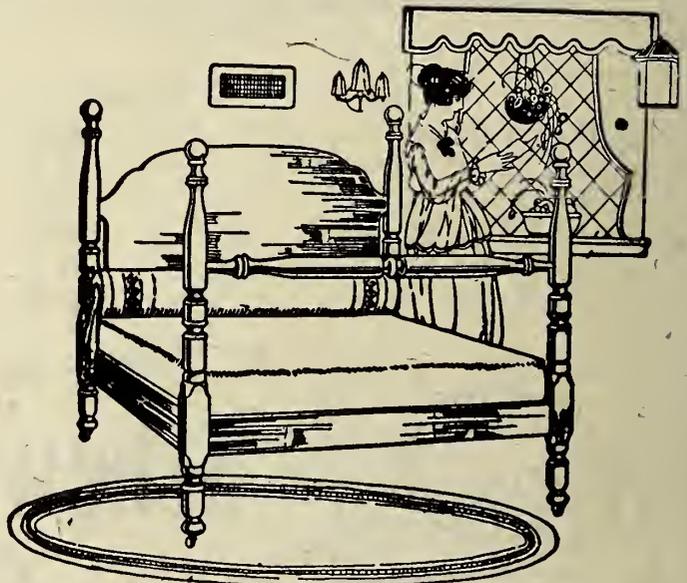

FOR SALE—Hook and Hastings pipe organ. Two manual, pedal bass. Light oak case, gold display pipes. Reason for selling, new church required larger organ. Good as new. Call or write Mr. A. T. McLean, Lumberton, N. C. A real bargain.

The Danville General Hospital

(REGISTERED)

Offers a three years' course in nursing. Surgical, medical, and obstetrical services. Graduates pass State Board examinations creditably, and are in demand in town and surrounding community. Address Superintendent,

Danville General Hospital, Danville, Va.

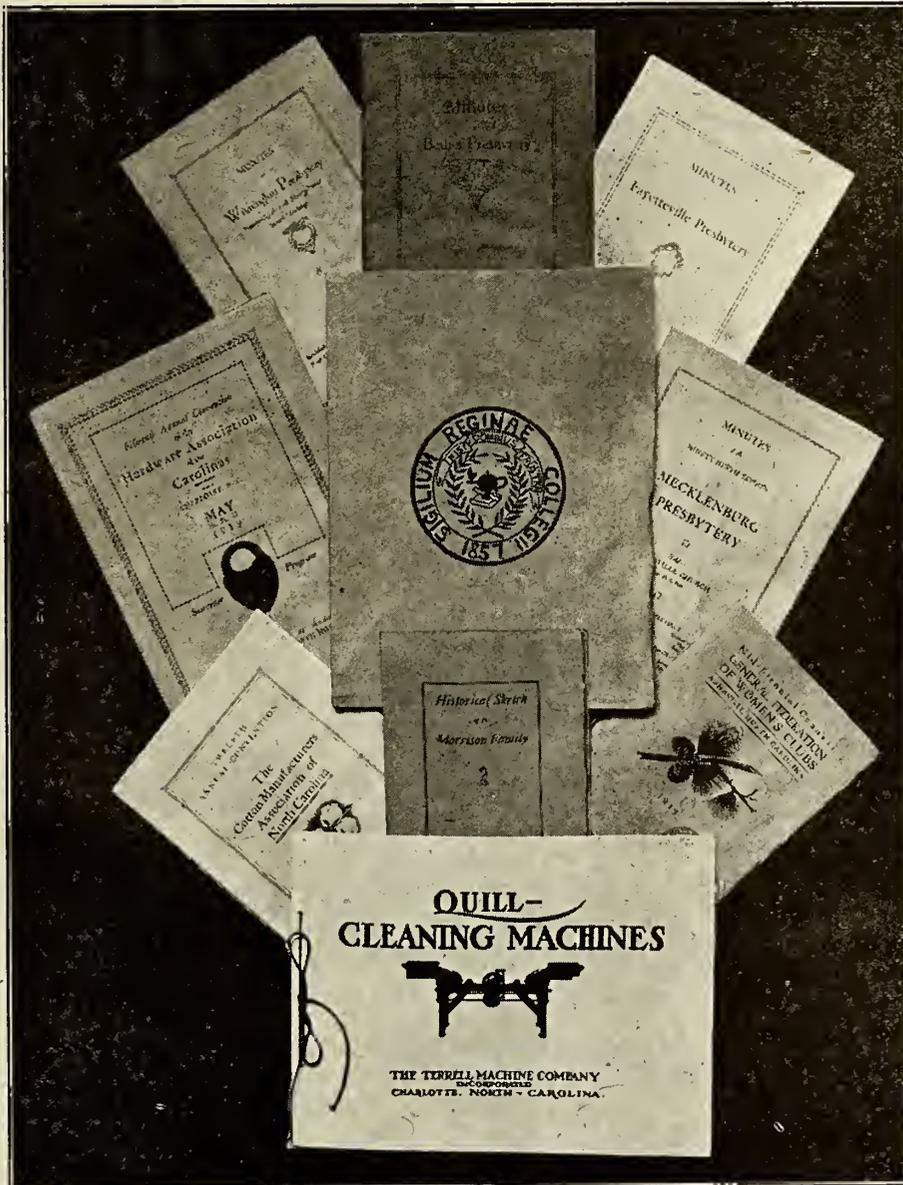

Another Car of That Beautiful Bedroom Furniture Has Just Arrived

In this line are some exquisite suits with Vanity Dresser in Old Ivory, American Walnut and English Brown Mahogany. Let us show you some elegant bedroom furniture at moderate cost.

W. T. McCoy & Company
Popular Furniture--Popular Prices
CHARLOTTE, N. C.

OUR PRINTING DEPARTMENT

Is equipped to produce anything you may need in Printing, and do it to your entire satisfaction. We show below a photograph of a few of the Catalogues we have produced this season, as an evidence of the broad patronage we are receiving. The illustration does not do justice to the work; but if you are interested we will gladly furnish samples of any or all of them. We are prepared to handle this class of work promptly.

The lot includes four sets of Minutes of Proceedings of Wilmington, Bethel, Fayetteville and Mecklenburg Presbyteries; a 2-color Catalogue for the Hardware Association of the Carolinas; Queens College Annual; Convention Proceedings of the Cotton Manufacturers' Association of N. C.; a Historical Sketch of the Morrison Family; Program of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and a Machinery Catalogue for Terrell Machine Co., of Charlotte.

We have received words of commendation, and letters expressing thorough satisfaction, from all of these customers. If you use anything printed, get in touch with us, no matter where you live. WE ARE PRINTING FOR CONCERNS IN SEVEN STATES NOW.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD PUBLISHING CO.

216 NORTH TRYON ST.

Phone 643

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

SHALL MARRIED WOMEN TEACH IN OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS?

Shall married women be barred from appointment as teachers in our public schools? The Pittsburgh Board of Public Education has answered the question in the affirmative by a vote of 7 to 3 and commencing with the 1919-1920 school term, September 2, married women will be barred from regular positions in the Pittsburgh schools. This is one of those questions of public policy in which a very keen interest is manifested by all classes of citizens. It is a question which seriously divides public opinion. It has occasioned many flaming editorials, and has caused the usual number of heated citizens to arise and indignantly inquire as to the why and wherefore of certain high-handed and outrageous proceedings. Those who are in favor of employing married women as teachers claim that when a woman is a mother she will be a better teacher because of a livelier sympathy with children and a more intimate understanding of child nature and of the natural procession by which the most satisfactory cultural results may be obtained. Those who are opposed to their employment as teachers contend that the place of a married woman is in her home and that her chief business is to make a good home for her husband and children. They contend that a woman cannot at the same time make a success of both a school and a home. They object also because motherhood means the absention of the teacher for long periods from the school room and thereby the efficiency of the school is 450 Revival Sermons and 1000 Religious Anecdotes at Once and 25 to 150 Sermons Each Month for a year, including 15⁰ funeral, and sermons for all special occasions, all for $1.50. Money back if not pleased. The Co-Operative Publishing Co., Kirkwood, Mo.

Kentucky Theological Seminary
Louisville, Kentucky

Able faculty. Course of study comprehensive and adapted to the times. High standards. Practical training. Excellent library facilities. Splendid buildings, with comfortable dormitories. Expenses moderate. Session begins October 1, 1919. For further information write the President.

Charles R. Hemphill

Nadine Face Powder

(In Green Boxes Only)

Keeps The Complexion Beautiful

Soft and velvety. Money back if not entirely pleased. Nadine is pure and harmless. Adheres until washed off. Prevents sunburn and return of discolorations. A million delighted users prove its value. Tints: Flesh, Pink, Brunette, White. By Leading Toilet Counters or Mail, Dept. R P. National Toilet Company Paris, Tenn.

STATEMENT
SECURITY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

Condition December 31, 1918, as Shown by Statement Filed.

Amount of Ledger Assets December 31 of previous year	$8,337,177.75
Income—From Policyholders, $1,929,791.39; Miscellaneous, $454,338.39; Total	2,384,129.78
Disbursements—To Policyholders, $1,121,092.04; Miscellaneous, $648,878.78; Total	1,769,970.82

ASSETS

Value of Real Estate (less amount of encumbrance)	$ 862,000.00
Mortgage Loans on Real Estate	2,920,875.00
Loans secured by pledge of Bonds, Stocks, or other collateral	139.81
Loans made to Policyholders on this Company's Policies assigned as collateral	1,610,587.45
Premium notes on Policies in force	62,349.33
Value of Bonds and Stocks	3,329,378.24
Cash in Company's Office	12,506.28
Deposited in Trust Companies and Banks not on interest	55,358.72
Deposited in Trust Companies and Banks on interest	187,017.55
Interest and Rents due and accrued	164,487.20
Premiums unpaid	217,054.17
All other Assets, as detailed in statement	37,174.74

Total	$9,459,228.49
Less Assets not admitted	65,775.45

Total-admitted Assets $9,393,453.04

LIABILITIES

Net Reserve, as computed	$8,759,356.00
Present value of amounts not yet due on Supplementary Contracts, etc.	33,859.67
Liability on Policies canceled and not included in "Net Reserve," etc.	25,551.09
Policy Claims	180,285.16
Dividends left with Company at interest	37,279.72
Premiums paid in advance, including Surrender Values so applied	8,907.85
Unearned Interest and Rent paid in advance	19,570.08
Commissions due to Agents, etc.	15,047.37
Estimated Amount payable for Federal, State, and other taxes	40,000.00
Dividends due Policyholders	19,205.02
Amounts set apart, apportioned, provisionally ascertained, calculated, awaiting apportionment, etc.	70,414.46
All other Liabilities, as detailed in statement	23,254.72

Total amount of all Liabilities, except Capital	$9,232,531.14
Unassigned funds (surplus)	160,921.90

Total Liabilities $9,393,453.04

BUSINESS IN NORTH CAROLINA DURING 1918.

Policies on the lives of citizens of said State in force December 31 of previous year, No. 980; Amount	$1,398,940.01
Policies on the lives of citizens of said State issued during year, No. 161; Amount	252,335.00

Total, No. 1,141; Amount	$1,651,275.01
Deduct ceased to be in force during year, No. 113; Amount	152,171.00

Policies in force December 31, 1918, No. 1,028; Amount	$1,499,104.01
--	----------------

Losses and Claims unpaid December 31 of previous year, No. 1; Amount	$ 1,000.00
Losses and Claims incurred during year, No. 8; Amount	11,500.00

Total, No. 9; Amount $ 12,500.00

Losses and Claims settled during year in cash, No. 6; Amount	$ 9,000.00
--	-------------

Losses and Claims unpaid December 31, 1918, No. 3; Amount	$ 3,500.00
---	-------------

President, D. S. Dickenson; Secretary, Chas. A. LaDue; Treasurer, Jas. W. Manieer; Home Office, Binghamton, N. Y.; Attorney for service,

J. R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, Raleigh, N. C.; Manager for North Carolina, Home Office.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,
INSURANCE DEPARTMENT,
Raleigh, March 22, 1919.

I, James R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct abstract of the statement of the Security Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Binghamton, N. Y., filed with this Department, showing the condition of said Company on the 31st day of December, 1918.

Witness my hand and official seal, the day and year above written.

JAMES R. YOUNG,
Insurance Commissioner.

THE School for Your Boy

Nothing is so effective in the training of the youth—in guarding his morals, his physique—as a military training. All young men should begin with a military training. The training of

BLACKSTONE MILITARY ACADEMY

is conducive of culture, refinement, thorough literary foundation and a gentlemanly bearing. Thorough academic, preparatory and commercial courses. Excellently equipped modern buildings. Gymnasium, Infirmary and 40 new rooms now under construction. Two U. S. Army officers in charge of the R. O. T. C. Trained nurse in charge of Infirmary. For literature, write,

COL. E. S. LIGON, President, Blackstone Military Academy, Box R. Blackstone, Va.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE of South Carolina

One of the most modern and best equipped colleges for men under the control of the Presbyterian Church. Beautiful buildings, strong faculty, high standard of work, broad course, attractive student body, best moral influences, Reserve Officers' Training Corps and strong athletic team.

For Catalogue and information apply to

President Davison M. Douglas, Clinton, S. C.

The United States Railroad Administration Announces

The following changes in schedules of trains between Greensboro, N. C. and Goldsboro, N. C.

EFFECTIVE SUNDAY, AUGUST 24, 1919

Train 108 now leaving Greensboro 6:00 A. M. will leave 7:25 A. M. Arrive Goldsboro 12:40 P. M.

Train 144 now leaving Greensboro 8:10 A. M. will leave 9:20 A. M. Arrive Goldsboro 2:40 P. M.

No Change in Schedules of Trains 22 and 112, Eastbound.

No Change in Schedules of Trains Westbound.

For detail information, apply to Consolidated or Depot Ticket Office.

Phone Number 20.

impaired. They aver, moreover, that a woman has no business getting married unless her husband is able to support her, and unless her love for her man and her desire to live with him in a home far surpasses her desire to teach in the school. To all of which there is a chorus of indignant questioners and those who protest by the beards of their ancestors and the traditions of the fathers that this denial of privilege for married women to teach in our schools is an invasion of constitutional rights and an offense against the law of truth and nature. Thus the battle ebbs and flows and contentions and clamor increase. With true Scotch caution we observe that this is one of the questions which it is well to leave to the woman themselves, and to the providences of tomorrow.—United Presbyterian.

FOR SOUR LAND.

Sour land is frequently the cause of crop failure, though other causes get the blame. Most lands have a goodly supply of plant foods (nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash), but when the soil is in a soured condition the food elements, even though abundant, are not available. They are insoluble and of no value to the plant.

To avail oneself of these plant foods one must necessarily sweeten the soil by neutralizing the acidity; must decompose the soil and set the plant foods free.

It is not always easy to tell when land is sour. Frequently many crops are ruined and much labor, money and time lost before the real cause of the trouble is found. It is unwise to try to raise a crop on sour land. Every farmer should keep a record of the acidity of his soil at all times. It will save in the long run.

The method is simple. Litmus paper is manufactured for the purpose. It would be simple work to obtain some litmus paper and test samples of the various types of soil taken from various sections of the farm. Dampen the soil a bit and apply one end of the litmus paper strip. If the dampened end remains blue the soil is not sour. If it turns pink the soil is sour and needs attention.

Sour soil is not such a very serious problem, though it is one that is frequently overlooked. Lime carbonate will quickly neutralize the acids, release the bountiful supply of plant foods and sweeten the soil. Tests throughout the country have proven its worth. Relco-Marl which contains over 90 per cent lime carbonate when applied to the land at any time will affect the very next crop and its effect will last for over five years. Two tons to the acre is enough for the average land. The yield is immediately increased and as it is a natural soil builder the land will improve from year to year. It is inexpensive and easily handled. Free litmus papers for testing your soil, literature and prices may be had by addressing Dept.

8-G, Roanoke Lime Co., Roanoke, Va. Incidentally, RelcoMarl when placed in the stable floor under a blanket of leaves, sawdust, etc., acts as the very best absorbent. It holds the ammonia in the manure that otherwise would be lost, particularly the liquid manure and will make each head of stock save over $20.00 per year in your ammonia bill. At the same time it improves the mechanical condition of the stable manure and acts as a deodorizer.

Letters From Rheumatics

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter, but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of Rheumatism you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking the Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring. This water overcomes many diseases, including Indigestion, Gout, Uric Acid Poisoning and Liver and Kidney diseases, but no patrons of the Springs are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their Rheumatism. Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the Management:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver and Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant of Savannah writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of Stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began using Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time I was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes of Virginia writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The Water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam of South Carolina writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter of Virginia writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints on her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

If you suffer from Rheumatism or any curable disease accept the guarantee offered below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the

Shivar Spring,
Box 4-F, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

Name
Address
Shipping Point

MASCULINE WOMEN.

Next to a womanish man the most exasperating freak of nature is a masculine woman. Unfortunately, the conditions of the war have done much to promote the latter condition. Dr. Frederick Lynch thus describes conditions in London in a letter to The Christian Work: "In any London restaurant fully half the women are smoking cigarettes. But this same habit is growing almost as rapidly in New York. The most immediate cause of it has been the assumption of men's work and men's apparel during the war. Thousands of girls went into munition factories and other work. They bobbed their hair—every third girl on the streets of London has her hair Dutch cut. As they did men's work, so they acquired men's habits. Thousands of girls have on khaki and caps—they smoke cigarettes as freely as do the soldiers. The strain of war, of course, was a prime cause. Smoking, they said, was a great sedative and helped to pass anxious and empty hours. It was a universal habit in the trenches, and it has become a very common habit with the girls of England as well as with the young men."

Your Fall Suit

is at Berry's. For 40 years we've been selling the leading North Carolina families men's and boys' clothing. We know your wants and your tastes.

☞ Samples Upon Request.

O. H. Berry & Co.
ESTABLISHED 1879

MAIN AT ELEVENTH RICHMOND, VA.

YOUR FACE?

Is the Complexion Muddy, Tanned, Freckled?
If troubled with skin eruptions, sunburn, pimples, try

PALMER'S SKIN-SUCCESS SOAP

It cleanses, softens and clears the skin and tends to remove sunburn, tan, freckles, blackheads, pimples and eczema.
Thoroughly antiseptic. Ask your druggist, or write for free samples to

THE MORGAN DRUG CO.,
1521 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

PREPARE FOR A LARGER SALARY

In times of Peace prepare for a better job at a larger salary. Modern business demands trained men and women experts. The better the training the larger your salary will be. Today our graduates are in the front ranks of modern business. Enroll with this well-equipped business college, and help to make your future success secure. Handsome catalogue mailed on request. You can enter any time. School open all summer.

Kings Business College

Raleigh, N. C. and Charlotte, N. C.

Rocky River Springs School

For Boys

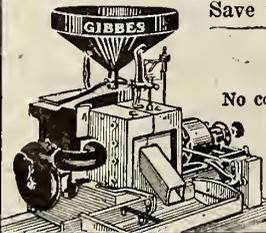

Thoroughly Christian. A Preparatory School for Boys. Moderate Cost: Fall term opens Sept. 23. Endorsed by Mecklenburg Presbytery.

For Announcement and Information, address

PROF. C. E. WELLS, Principal, AQUADALE, N. C.

Grind Your Corn the Simple Way

Delicate, Complicated Machinery is neither necessary nor economical. Save money in grinding your grain with—

The Gibbes Corn Mill

Simple—Fast—Economical—Durable

No complicated parts, whole machine easily handled. With ball-bearing system it is light running and rapid, requiring very little power. Little wear, smooth running, seldom a part to replace. Made of the best of materials. Absolutely guaranteed. For illustrated literature and prices address—

GIBBES MACHINERY CO., Dept. A-2, Columbia, S. C.

A BILLY SUNDAY SAYING.

The impression seems to have gotten abroad that the new birth is the Adam life worked up by culture and philanthropy, and all of that. Hence, we've been going daffy on social service. Social service is all right; I believe in it—but don't substitute it for salvation. That's all! I'll go with you in all that, providing you'll put Jesus where he belongs. I don't knock it; I knock anything where you attempt to make it a substitute. I don't care whether it's your culture, or whatever it may be—these things are all right in their place, but they're all wrong if you make them take the place of Jesus.

BIG SAVING IN YOUR CLOTHING BILL

While the present prices of clothing are two and three times higher than pre-war prices and these prices are still advancing, it is more important than ever before that you get the maximum service from the garments you now have. Your clothing will last another season and look as good as new if cleaned by our Faultless Dry Cleaning Process. We remove all spots, stains, and dirt, and guarantee absolute satisfaction. Prompt service by Parcel Post. Charlotte Laundry, Charlotte, N. C.

A man only understands what is akin to something already existing in himself.—Amiel.

Medical College of Virginia

(State Institution—Co-Educational)
 STUART McGUIRE, M.D., LL.D., Pres.
MEDICINE DENTISTRY
PHARMACY NURSING
 New buildings, completely equipped. Laboratories under full time instructors. Unusual clinical facilities offered in three hospitals owned by the college, also in city hospitals and institutions.
 81st session begins September 17, 1919.
 For catalogue, address
 J. R. McCAULEY, Secretary
 1121 East Clay Street RICHMOND, VA.

In the A. E. F. With an Artist

The sketch book and diary of Lieut. J. B. Mallard. Send $1.00 for your copy to
J. B. MALLARD
 Box 625 CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The Cumberland General Hospital, of Fayetteville

N. C., offers to young ladies between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five the following courses of training for nurses: Three years practical and theoretical work which prepares for State Board Examinations. Fall classes being formed now. Apply at once to Supt. of Nurses.

DAVIS-WAGNER NEW BUILDING, ACCOMMODATING 500 STUDENTS.
Business College
 POSITIONS FOR GRADUATES. 306 East Freemason St. CATALOGUE FREE. NORFOLK, VA.

New Bath Robe Blankets,
 pretty designs for the school boys and girls,
 $3.95 $4.95

New Line Cotton or Wool
 Blankets, plain or fancies,
 double or single, for the school or college or home

Belk Bros.

22--STORES--22

Carolinas' Progressive Leaders

Third Floor Specials

We devote one whole floor to Trunks, Suit Cases, Traveling Bags, Comforts, Blankets, Bath Robes, and so on. Buying for 22 stores, a carload of Trunks is nothing unusual for us. Same thing in many other lines. We give you better values---a stronger, better Trunk for your money. If this is what you want, look at our line.

LOT NO. 1—Canvas-covered Trunks, strongly built, good heavy linings, at $6.95, $7.50

LOT NO. 2—Canvas-covered Trunks, very strongly built, heavy locks, leather straps, $10 to $12.50 value. Extra special, at $8.95, $9.95

EXTRA SPECIAL IN FIBRE TRUNKS

This is a very strong line with us. We give you a much better Trunk in this line for your money. We buy them by the hundreds. You want a Trunk of "Quality and Durability." We can suit you. Browns and blacks, almost any size, 30 inch to 40, one or two trays—and for "Less Money," at $9.95 to $17.50

TRAVELING BAGS

In this line, as in Suitcases, we give you a better bag for your money. It's easy for us to do this—we get better ones for our money—hence can give a better one. All kinds, sizes, shapes, and so on, at $1.98, $2.98, $4.95, $7.50, $8.95, $9.95, $12.95 and on up to the sporty kind at $37.50

HOW ABOUT A FINE WARDROBE TRUNK?

We have just a few $50.00 Wardrobe Trunks, 5 trays, hat tray, coat and skirt hangers, finely linen lined. Very strongly built and we are quite sure a $50.00 Trunk. Special at $39.95

A PERNICIOUS HABIT.

Now that the war is over, it may be possible to say something about the pernicious cigarette habit among boys and youths without being accused of lacking either in patriotism or in sympathy for the soldiers.

Everything possible has been done to make the habit attractive, to throw about it a glamour associated with deeds of heroism and manhood.

It is to be regretted that journals, some of them pretending to a religious character, and having large circulation, are lending themselves to the propaganda in behalf of cigarette-smoking.

A bitter fight, extending over many years, was waged against cigarette-smoking by boys and youths. Many of the leading commercial concerns of the country have absolutely refused to employ boys and young men who are given over to the habit.

TEACHER WANTED for two children. Must teach Music, English, Languages and Higher Mathematics.

CHURCH ENVELOPES. Double and single envelope systems. Samples and prices sent up on request.

Aberdeen & Rockfish Railroad

Table with columns for Eastbound, Westbound, and Mixed services, listing stations like Aberdeen, Raeford, Fayetteville and times.

Table for WAGRAM BRANCH with columns for Southbound and Northbound services, listing stations like Raeford, Wagram and times.

Order a Hygienic Bed

26-lb., $10.20; 31-lb., $11.20; 36 lb., $12.10; 41-lb., $12.60; Pair 5-lb. Pillows, $1.80; 7-lb., $2.40; NEW FEATHERS—Best tick. We have $500 deposited in bank to guarantee satisfaction or money back.

HYGIENIC BED CO., Dept. 16, Charlotte, N. C.

Prepare For a Larger Income

Modern business requires trained men and women. You can earn a much larger salary and be assured always of a good paying position if you take Draughon's standard business courses.

Draughon's Practical Business College

Knoxville, Tennessee

Jacksonville, Florida

BOOKKEEPING AND SHORTHAND

thoroughly taught. Enroll any time. Address Greensboro Commercial School, Greensboro, N. C., for Catalogue. Special Summer Rates now on.

NEW SONG BOOKS

For Your Church

8c

A wonderful value; 83 familiar songs of the Gospel, words and music. Used all over the world. Only $8 per hundred for No. 1 or 2, round or shaped notes, and $15 for No. 1 and 2, combined, round notes only.

E. A. K. HACKETT, Dept. No. 56, FT. WAYNE, IND.

STATEMENT

SVEA FIRE AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY GOTHENBURG, SWEDEN.

Condition December 31, 1918, as Shown by Statement Filed.

Table of financial figures: Amount of Capital Deposit $200,000.00; Amount of Ledger Assets Dec. 31 of previous year 2,307,007.20; Income—From Policyholders, $543,134.43; Miscellaneous, $74,775.70; Total 1,617,910.13; Disbursements—To Policyholders, $695,883.76; Miscellaneous, $645,211.47; Total 1,341,095.23

ASSETS

Table of assets: Value of Bonds and Stocks $1,920,810.75; Cash in Company's Office 200.00; Deposited in Trust Companies and Banks not on interest 2,790.38; Deposited in Trust Companies and Banks on interest 189,728.27; Agents' balances, representing business written subsequent to October 1, 1918 356,786.64; Agents' balances, representing business written prior to October 1, 1918 8,286.77; Bills receivable, taken for fire risks 101,883.71; Interest and Rents due and accrued 27,667.21; All other Assets, as detailed in statement 3,335.58

Summary of assets: Total $2,611,489.31; Less Assets not admitted 110,085.69

Total admitted Assets $2,501,403.62

LIABILITIES

Table of liabilities: Net amount of unpaid losses and claims $125,108.09; Unearned premiums 1,321,702.20; Salaries, rents, expenses, bills, accounts, fees, etc., due or accrued 2,000.00; Estimated amount payable for Federal, State, county, and municipal taxes due or accrued 28,000.00; Contingent commissions, or other charges due or accrued 3,500.00

Summary of liabilities: Total amount of all Liabilities except Capital $1,480,310.29; Capital actually paid up in cash $200,000.00; Surplus over all liabilities 821,093.33; Surplus as regards Policyholders 1,021,093.33

Total Liabilities $2,501,403.62

BUSINESS IN NORTH CAROLINA DURING 1918.

Table of business in North Carolina: Fire Risks written, $1,593,570; Premiums received $19,381.25; Losses incurred—Fire, $10,310.44; Paid 8,237.38

U. S. Manager, J. M. Winstrom; Home Office in U. S., New York City; Attorney for service, Jas. R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, Raleigh, N. C.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, INSURANCE DEPARTMENT,

Raleigh, April 10, 1919.

I, James R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct abstract of the statement of the Svea Fire and Life Insurance Company, of Gothenburg, Sweden, filed with this Department, showing the condition of said Company on the 31st day of December, 1918.

Witness my hand and official seal, the day and year above written.

JAMES R. YOUNG, Insurance Commissioner.

immature the cigarette has been well described as a coffin-nail.

Instructors of youth cannot afford to be silent upon this question. They must point out the dangers lurking in the habit. This is not so easy to do now as it was before the war, because advantage has been taken of that struggle to rehabilitate the cigarette in public esteem. It must be done, nevertheless, in the interest of the health and the morals of youth.—Zion's Herald.

Dr. Karl Muck, former leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who had been interned as an alien enemy, sailed for Copenhagen last week on the Scandinavian liner Frederick VIII.

Upon sailing Dr. Muck said he "left this country of mob rule with no regrets." But whether he regretted or not was unimportant. He was put on the steamer by an armed secret service man, who then guarded the gang plank to see that he didn't leave the ship before it sailed.—Herald and Presbyter.

No man can produce great things who is not thoroughly sincere in dealing with himself.—Lowell.

Freedom is not the right to do as you please, but the liberty to do as you ought.—George Eliot.

There's Quality

In Old Clothes

Many of the old suits of last year's purchase, tho soiled have more real good in them than suits of much higher price of today. While prices have increased quality has decreased.

Let Ledbetter's Bring it Out.

Our prices will make the old clothes new again. Get them out and mail it today.

Fancy Dyers and Dry Cleaners of Suits, Dresses, Sport Coats, Silks, Furs, Gloves, Velvets, Feathers, Ribbons, Portiers, Rugs, Carpets, Blankets. Hats cleaned and blocked. Address, Ledbetter's, Rocky Mount, N. C.

CHARLOTTE MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS

MEMORIALS OF QUALITY

"WE LEAD"

Quality First

Prices Right

Workmanship

Unsurpassed

Memorials in Silver Georgia Marble are unsurpassed in beauty and durability.

CHARLOTTE MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS
WEST 7th ST. and SOUTHERN RAILWAY
"Cemetery Gate" Phone 281-CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Plant Your

Cotton Alleys

Make them produce a profit as well as the rows. Plant

Clover

in your cotton alleys and take advantage of the large profits on hay, now selling around $60 per ton. It will save a season, double the yield of the crop following and build up your soil.

Inoculate your seed with NitrA-germ and be sure of a good profit.

READ THIS RECORD

"I purchased NitrA-germ for one acre alfalfa and four acres crimson clover last season. I wish to say my alfalfa is as near perfect as I could wish. I have already cut it three times and am sure of two more cuttings. I secured a good stand of clover and have com planted on the land where the clover was sowed, and am certain I will make forty per cent. more corn on this land than I will on the land adjoining it, planted the same day where there was no clover. I am highly pleased with NitrA-germ for growing alfalfa and clover and expect to use more this season. I am sure that clover is the best and cheapest method of fertilizing and I am equally sure that NitrA-germ will grow it."

MARIO BRYANT, Wilson Co., N. C.

NitrA-germ costs $2 Per acre delivered.

Write FREE Book No. J- 6.

NitrA-Germ, Savannah, Ga.

64 Years in the JEWELRY BUSINESS

have given us an enviable reputation to sustain.

If interested in Diamonds, Watches, Jewelry or Silverware, it will be to your interest to consult us.

We are pleased to answer your inquiries.

JAMES ALLAN & CO.
289 King Street, Charleston, S. C.
The Hallmark Jewelers. Catalog on Request

Sparkles

Picture Play Poems.

Under a spreading chestnut tree
The village blacksmith stands!
His picture soon the folks will see
In many foreign lands!

Listen, my children!
There will appear
A photoplay
Of Paul Revere!

Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
The children go off to the movies
And have a good time for an hour!

The boy stood on the burning deck,
Whence all but him had fled!
"A splendid bit of work, by heck!",
A great director said.

A soldier of the Legion
Lay dying in Algiers!
The audience in silence shed
Most sympathetic tears!
—Harold Seton, in Film Fun.

His Qualifications.

An American girl once withered the former Crown Prince. She met him in Berlin before the war. He was making his usual bid for a pretty girl's favor. "I suppose it is difficult for you as an American to realize," said the Prince, "that I can trace my ancestry back twenty-seven generations." "Is that so?" said the girl. "What else can you do?"—Paterson Press Guardian.

An old negro preacher was introducing a white preacher. The white preacher had offered to preach a sermon for the colored brother, and, in introducing the white preacher, the old negro could not find enough adjectives with which to praise the visitor. "Dis noted preacher," said the old negro to his flock, "is one of de greatest preachers of de age. He knows de unknowable, he kin do de undoable and he can onscrew de onscrutable!"

The Doughty Fisherman.

"I suppose the big fish got away," sneered the indolent acquaintance. "Of course," rejoined the true fisherman. "They have learned to know me. Any full-grown fish around here hides as soon as I step into a boat."—Washington Star.

As a pleasant-faced woman passed the corner, Jones touched his hat to her, and remarked feelingly to his companion, "Ah, my boy, I owe a great deal to that woman."

"Your mother?" was the query.
"No, my landlady."

"What's the best thing to induce chest expansion?" "Medals."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

THE WESTMINSTER SCHOOL

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Operated by Kings Mountain Presbytery
$300.00 Per Year

Write for Catalogue to

Rev. T. E. P. Woods, Box 6, Rutherfordton, N. C.

4 Per Cent

Time Certificates of Deposit

They are Interest Bearing. They are Payable on Demand. They Afford a Good Income for Funds Awaiting Permanent Investment

GET ONE

AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY

Charlotte

::

North Carolina

YES, Preachers and Teachers Are Human

They should have no discount and no cheaper railroad fares than you and I. They should be paid for services rendered—amply paid. If he can't earn enough for family use and the nest egg for the future, he made a sad mistake as to family, else he should change his calling instanter.

The Mutual Building & Loan

Will save a man and his family if they're worth saving, but they must help. It furnishes the "sure cure," but boasts no regrets at the demise of a feller who deliberately refuses to take the medicine.

E. L. KEESLER, Sec. & Treas., 25 S. Tryon St., CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Charlotte National Bank Resources $4,000,000.00

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

PAYS FOUR PER CENT.

On Either Time Certificates of Deposit or Savings Accounts

MAIL ORDER Business Solicited and PROMPT ATTENTION given

JOHN M. SCOTT	President
W. J. CHAMBERS	Vice-President
J. F. ROBERTSON	Vice-President
W. H. TWITTY	Cashier
C. W. BUTT	Assistant Cashier

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

REV. J. R. BRIDGES, D. D.

EDITORS

REV. R. C. REED, D. D.

VOL. LX.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., SEPTEMBER 24, 1919.

No. 38.

The Burden Bearer.

By Margaret E. Sangster.

"I'll lay my burden at his feet
And bear a song away."

Over the narrow pathway
That led from my lonely door,
I went with a thought of the Master
As oft I had walked before;
But my heart was heavily laden,
And with tears my eyes were dim,
But I knew I should lose the burden
Could I get a glimpse of him.

O, friend! if the greater burdens
His love can make so light,
Why should his wonderful goodness
Our halting credence slight?
The little, sharp vexations,
The briers that catch and fret—
Shall we not take them to the Helper
Who never failed us yet?

Tell him about the heartache,
And tell him the longings, too,
Tell him the baffled purpose,
When we scarce know what to do;
Then leaving all our weakness
With the one divinely strong,
Forget that we bore the burden
And carry away the song.

Editorial

The Devil and the Dance.

IF the devil has not had his own way with the dance he is hard to please. It seems, however, that he has outdone himself. He has overshot the mark. In his enthusiasm he cast discretion to the wind, and shocked his own votaries. True, he had to cast discretion quite far to the wind and exercise no little ingenuity to produce this shock. But he has succeeded. The Association of Dancing Masters, at a recent meeting in New York, decided that a halt must be called—not merely a halt but actually a retreat. They agreed that a reform must come if the people wish the popularity of the dance to continue.

We should like to know how the devil feels under a rebuff like this. Having got by with the "turkey trot" and the "buzzard wabble," he evidently thought that the way was clear for the worst that he could devise. So he handed out the "shimmy," and a few others, suggestive of the high cost of clothing. After giving them a fair trial, the dancing masters frankly tell his satanic majesty that he has gone too far.

These reformers are terribly in earnest. They are not trusting to moral suasion. They know the preachers have tried this, and utterly failed. Consequently they invoke the strong arm of the law. "We intend," they say, "to put a professional ban on objectionable forms of ball-room dancing. These reforms will not take place through dance hall proprietors, but through officers of the law into whose hands the affair has been put already in many cities. Laws covering every branch of social dancing will be passed, but the people look to the dancing teacher to bring about the real reform." Now, Mr. Devil, we hope you will be good. You see the very people who have been handling your goods have turned against you. You cannot complain that they have been too exacting in their demands, too nice and prudish. On the contrary, they have really been considerate and easy to please, ready to accept and try out any styles offered however outre, risqué, or openly salacious. But they have discovered that there is some sense of shame left, and that consequently there is a limit beyond which even fashionable society will not go. And so, Mr. Devil, your patrons have called a halt; and they say if nothing else will halt you the strong hand of the law will be applied. "Safety first." While their conscience is not pained, their business is endangered.

The Association of Dancing Masters, having proclaimed their purpose to reform the dance, have made overture to the Methodist Church, with a view to converting it from an enemy into a friend. They modestly ask the church to remove its ban on dancing inasmuch as they propose to purify it from abuses. This is flattering to the church. It assumes that the ban has really been effective. Some of us had become doubtful. The Methodist Church is not the only one that has put a ban on dancing. All the great denominations have iterated and reiterated their denunciation of the dance. Judging from the way the members of the Presbyterian Church treat it we had supposed that it was, after all, a mere brutum fulmen. It is possible to find officers in the Presbyterian Church who chaperon dances, and give dances in their homes. The children of Presbyterian preachers dance, and it is noised abroad that some Presbyterian preachers send their children to dancing schools. Perhaps the Methodist Church speaks with greater authority. We sincerely hope so. The overture of the dancing masters to that Church would indicate either that, or ignorance on the part of the dancing masters. If they knew the state of the case, we hardly think they would take the trouble to ask the Presbyterian Church to lift its ban.

It is conjectured that the Methodist Church will not yield to the voice of the charmer and remove its ban on dancing. But this conjecture must overlook the sweeping character of the reforms. Consider this list: The "Shimmy," "Tight Holding," "The Wriggle," "The Wiggle," "The Squirm," and "Exaggerated Jazz." They are paring the thing down till there is hardly enough left to take the chill off of a social gathering. Nothing is to be left except "The One Step," "The Fox Trot, with a simple tango step added," and "The Waltz." Furthermore, it is strictly enjoined that the "position" of both partners is to be radically different. "The lady's arm will no more curve closely around the man's collar; and the gentleman's hand must rest without weight against her back, just below the shoulder blades—it must not slip down to her waist." Then to insure perfect freedom from even temptation to wickedness, "the man and the woman must stay apart while dancing. There must be at least two inches between them." Is it conceivable that any church could object to such Puritanical pastime as this! Think of this frigid isolation of the sexes—two inches apart!

The Temperance Movement in England.

We have always had a great admiration for England, and in no result of the great war have we rejoiced more than in the drawing together of the two great English speaking nations. We admire them for their civilization, for their bulldog courage, for their ability to colonize and to raise to higher grades of civilization the lower races that have come under their sway. This great admiration makes our admiration (using "admiration" in its strict etymological sense) all the greater when we see their dullness of moral sense in regard to the sale of liquor.

In this country we have awakened to the evils of drink and steadily we have advanced the prohibition States till now this country by law is free from the sale of liquor. In other respects England has always kept step with us and sometimes ahead, but in this movement she has been woefully lacking. Those who have studied conditions there can easily understand this strange apathy. It seems that much of the income of their paid clergy comes from property that is invested in the liquor business, either in breweries or in houses used as saloons. Whenever the question has come before the bishops, they have voted against it, though be it said to their credit that many of them voted the other way.

It seems that when a man looks at any question, even a moral one, through the medium of a silver dollar, he can never see it in the right proportion. Demetrius was not the only one who was ready to defend the craft by which he got his gain.

The Church Times is the leading organ of the great Church of England, whose influence is very great. This great paper in speaking of national prohibition in the United States says that it is "an access of folly." When you remember that the Church of England is England itself, and that when this paper speaks, it is the Church speaking, you no longer wonder that drunkenness is the great sin of the British people.

The Semi-Centennial of Mecklenburg Presbytery.

According to prepared plans, Mecklenburg Presbytery devoted one entire day to celebrating the fact that she was 50 years old. Ordinarily, if she were a woman, this fact would not have been advertised, but Presbyteries like wine, improve with age, so she was anxious to call attention to the improvement. During the fifty years of her existence she has sent off two daughters, Asheville and Kings Mountain Presbyteries, to begin housekeeping on their own account, so like a good mother she spread the feast and then invited her daughters to gather about the board and enjoy the good things.

Both Asheville and Kings Mountain Presbyteries responded, and sent their representatives in the persons of Dr. R. F. Campbell and Dr. R. P. Smith, Rev. G. A. Sparrow, Rev. J. T. Dendy and Ruling Elder A. Nixon, of Lincolnton, N. C. Concord Presbytery, from whose bounds Mecklenburg went out 50 years ago, was not forgotten. She was represented on this occasion by Dr. John Grier, of Concord, and Rev. E. D. Brown, of Thyatira and Back Creek Churches, one of the Steele Creek boys who has reflected credit upon his training. These brethren were in fine fettle, and brought filial and maternal greetings, breathing forth love and loyalty.

Dr. Wm. E. McIlwain, of Pensacola, Fla., at present, but for many years a member of Mecklenburg Presbytery, even at its birth, delivered the historical address, which was a masterpiece of its kind and such as few men are capable of preparing. For one hour and a half he carried his immense audience over the course of 50 years, from the time when this Presbytery was organized in the parlor of Robert C. Pierson, of Morganton, N. C. It was not a dry recital of facts, but it was made palatable by a wise mixture of humor and personal anecdote. Under his magic touch these old men were made to pass before us, and we realized as never before that they were of the stuff of which heroes are made.

The plan of the celebration was evident. It was to emphasize the progress of 50 years. The ear had its part in the address while the eye had its part in the figured fact, 1869-1919, in large golden figures upon a background of black hanging over the pulpit and fronting the congregation. Then on either side, on the wall, were two large maps, one giving the Presbytery of 1869, comprising 19 counties and 38 churches, while on the other map were the three Presbyteries covering the same 19 counties with five other counties added, and instead of 38 churches there were 159 churches. If any of these growlers over the non-progressiveness of Presbyterianism will study the figures and facts of these 50 years, beginning when there was only one church in Charlotte with 260 members and compare it with Charlotte of today with churches all over the city, numbering its members by the thousands, they will see that if Presbyterianism has been at a standstill, somebody bearing that name has been moving. Words fail us to describe the crowd that gathered on Wednesday. They seemed to come from everywhere. The Steele Creek folks of course were out in full force; for they were to be the host of the day—and they were determined to live up to their reputation. Then Charlotte sent a large delegation, not only of preachers and elders, but of the membership in general, both male and female, all in their best bib and tucker, and all with an appetite keenly whetted for the occasion. It was estimated that at least 1,000 people were present. When the dinner hour arrived, they poured from the church and covered the grounds. They sat under the trees and basked in the pleasant sunshine. When we looked at the crowd, and counted mouths, not noses, we wondered where in these days of the high cost of living, there would be found enough to feed them all. The long tables were spread under the trees and upon these tables the famous Steele Creek housewives unloaded their capacious baskets. No words can paint the scene. There was everything to tickle the palate—fried chicken in abundance, beef, ham, such as Armour could not equal, bread of snowy whiteness and biscuits, pies of every kind, kivered and unkivered, cakes from pound to jelly, pickles and tomatoes—and each man had the portion that Joseph gave to Benjamin. Even in the dinner the idea of 50 years' progress was not lost sight of. Fifty years ago, and even later, we with one hand full of chicken and the other full of bread, with one eye upon what we were eating and the other eye upon what we had left on the table and hoped to eat, stood in anxious expectancy. But now we were presented with papier mache plates, upon which we placed selected portions of the food display, so that at our leisure we could eat, and not a wave of trouble roll across our peaceful breast. Then at the water stand we found evidence of the same hygienic progress. Instead of the mutual dipper of olden times, often reeking with germs, each one, if so disposed, could have a paper cup for this sole use.

Our Northern papers in recent years have written more than once, the obituary of the country church. We would like to show them our country churches. Here, for example, is a country church that dates back as far as 1767, with a present membership of 724, 12 elders and 15 deacons and 693 in the Sabbath school, and able to feed a congregation of 1,000 hungry people, with fragments that remain to be taken up. In point of intelligence it will compare favorably with any city church, and in its godly homes you will find educated men and women of the highest refinement. In other sections of our land they may be ready to celebrate the obsequies of the country church, but in this Presbytery where we have more than two score of such churches, that day is far distant.

In addition to Dr. McIlwain's address each of the Presbyterial representatives made addresses, and they were followed by Dr. Walter Moore, Dr. George Summey and Dr. J. H. Morrison, the two last named having been members of the Presbytery in early days. We wish that we could give even a synopsis of their addresses. They were mainly reminiscent, and in that particular line of talk they were given a free field, and they evidently enjoyed their privilege.

One of the pleasures to the speakers on such occasions is that no account is taken of the age of a joke, all pass muster, and they come as if endowed with the freshness of immortal youth. Old men love to dwell upon the past, and it adds to their happiness to have interested listeners, but they find it hard to secure an audience, and still harder to hold one, even when secured. But here was an audience, so grateful for the generous dinner that they sat from 3 to 6 o'clock listening to garrulous old age—doing its best to make them believe that the old days were better than the present.

It was an opportunity that rarely comes to the old, and they fully enjoyed it. The editor, who is no spring chicken, felt the reminiscent spirit swelling within him, but no such good fortune was his, hence these invidious remarks. He, however, comforts himself with the assurance that when he gets to be as old as Dr. Summey, Dr. Moore and Dr. Morrison, or even as old as the white haired presiding officer, Dr. McGeachy, he will probably have his chance to tell what he remembers and when that auspicious day shall arrive he proposes to reminisce "from the egg to the apple." Like the ancient mariner, he saw "water, water, everywhere, nor any drop to drink."

Contributed

Dr. Green and Fundamental Principles

By Rev. W. L. Lingle, D. D.

DR. E. M. GREEN, of Danville, Ky., takes me to task in the Church papers for saying in the July issue of the Union Seminary Review that I am not able to see any great principle of the Gospel or of Presbyterianism separating the Presbyterian Churches of America. There are thirteen different kinds of Presbyterians in America, including the two large Reformed Churches. I was thinking of the whole Presbyterian group when I made that statement as the context shows. I had just spoken of the possible solution of closer relations being found in the Provincial Assembly idea. Dr. Green says that I am referring especially to the Southern and Northern Presbyterian Churches. As the greater includes the less it is a fair inference that these two Churches are included in my statement.

The question at issue is, are there any great principles of the gospel or of Presbyterianism now separating the Presbyterian Churches of America and especially the Southern and Northern Presbyterian Churches. In using the word great I really mean great. That word has become so commonplace that it may be well to look it up again in the Century or Webster's International. I mean great in the sense of fundamental.

One difference between Dr. Green's position and mine is that he is talking about the past and I am talking about the present. His article deals entirely with the period between 1861 and 1870. He says that if there are no great separating principles now, it then follows that there were no great separating principles at the beginning and that our fathers were not justified in organizing the Presbyterian Church in the Confederate States of America. To my mind that does not follow, but I will speak of that a little later.

Dr. Green refers me to what happened in his own Synod of Kentucky in 1867 to show the great principles which separate the Presbyterian Churches now. May I say just here that my chief work in life is to teach Church History and that I go over all of this ground once each year and that I try once each year to read the leading documents connected with all of this period of history. I know about "The Declaration and Testimony" and the heroic stand which the fathers took. I always read that document with great sympathy and great admiration. I believe that our Synod of Kentucky did the right thing. I also know about the notorious Gurley Resolutions. Dr. Green could have gone on and told me that practically the same tragedy was enacted in Missouri between 1865 and 1870. But let us remember that all of this took place between fifty and sixty years ago. A great many things have happened, and happened in our Church, in the last fifty years. Nowhere have more remarkable developments taken place than in the Synods of Kentucky and Missouri.

Let us look at the Synods of Kentucky and Missouri today. At this moment there is a splendid theological seminary in the Synod of Kentucky which is jointly owned and controlled by the Southern Presbyterian Synods of Kentucky and Missouri and the Northern Presbyterian Synods of Kentucky and Missouri. It is controlled by a board composed of both Northern and Southern Presbyterians and the teaching in the Seminary is done by a faculty composed of both Northern and Southern Presbyterians. Many young men are educated for the Southern Presbyterian ministry in this Theological Seminary of Kentucky. Each year the Southern Presbyterian Synod of Kentucky and Missouri approve of this Seminary. Surely the brethren in Kentucky and Missouri could not approve of such an arrangement if they believed that there are any fundamental principles of the Gospel or of Presbyterianism separating these two great Churches at the present moment. Not only so but the General Assembly gave its consent to this arrangement in Kentucky and approves of it once each year. I hope that nobody will suppose for a moment that I am finding fault with a sister Seminary. Not in the least. I am simply writing down some present day Church history in Kentucky to show that the situation has changed slightly since 1867, and to show that there must be a number of people in that part of the country who probably sympathize with my statement. Dr. Green seems to think that I am the only man in the Church, certainly the only man in one of our Theological Seminaries, who is unable to see any great principles of the Gospel or of Presbyterianism now separating the Presbyterian Churches of America. I believe that there are others and not a few of them.

Let us look at some more present day history. On the most of our foreign mission fields all the Presbyterians are united in one Church. The Church of Christ in Japan includes all branches of the Presbyterian Church united in one Assembly. The Southern and Northern Presbyterian Churches and several other kinds of Presbyterians in China have all been united into one General Assembly during the past year. All of this has been done with the approval of our General Assembly. Surely we could not consent to this organic union on foreign fields if we believed that there are fundamental principles of the Gospel or of Presbyterianism separating these Presbyterian Churches. If the Southern Presbyterian Church at large feels that there are any fundamental, separating principles we have certainly not been acting like it in the directing of our foreign mission work.

Dr. Green refers me to the "Address" issued by the "General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the Confederate States of America to all the Churches of Jesus Christ throughout the earth," in 1861. This is probably the most important historical document in the history of our Church. It is a remarkable document any way you take it. It sets forth clearly the reasons our fathers had for organizing a separate Church. Those reasons are stated with great clearness and force. They were compelling reasons. When one reads that address he feels that there was no other course of action open to our fathers in those days. But nearly sixty years have passed and they have brought many changes.

Let us look at the reasons assigned in this "Address" for seceding and organizing a separate Church. It assigns four reasons. I will not mention them in the order in which they are found in the address because I want to spend a little more time on one of these reasons than on the others and will put that last.

One reason given is that a new nation had been formed and that it is best for a Church to observe national lines. "That the division into national Churches, that is, Churches bounded by national lines, is, in the present condition of human nature, a benefit, seems too obvious for proof." This reason, or separating principle, no longer exists.

Another reason given is that the two sections held different views concerning slavery and it would not be for the peace of the Church for the two to remain together. Slavery is a dead issue and that principle does not seem to stand in the way any longer. I might go farther and suggest that it is doubtful whether the majority of our ministers today hold just the view of slavery that the majority of our ministers held in 1861.

Another reason given in the "Address" for our separate existence was the objection to church boards and our resolve to do the work of our Church through executive committees. That was a strong reason in 1861 and for many years prior to that. But the years have gone by. All of our executive committees have all been incorporated and have become more like the boards and the boards have been readjusted and have become more like our committees. It would

(Continued on page 8)

Instantaneous Delivery From Perverted Appetite

By Rev. Edward J. Young.

THERE is much encouragement for victims of perverted appetite in the remarkable experience of Bishop H. C. Morrison, as described in his interesting "Autobiography" (M. E. Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.) The Bishop had contracted the tobacco habit in his early ministry through the influence of another minister. For seven years he writhed under this bondage. Realizing the power of this filthy appetite, he tried in his own strength to break its chains. He went to God in prayer, believing that Divine grace would enable him to gradually free himself from this slavery. He promised many times on his knees to give up the habit but invariably failed. He would throw away his cigars and resolve that he would pass at least one night without a smoke, but at midnight the insatiable craving would overcome the weakened will-power and he would search the lumber room for the tobacco leaves which had been placed in clothing to protect against moths. These he would roll into cigars and smoke. The sequel he thus describes:

"After fighting and failing and failing until I was unwilling and ashamed to go back to God with my worthless vows, I finally surrendered to what I believed to be my unalterable fate. I gave up the struggle and resigned myself to my doom—a tobacco slave. I had then a temporary rest—such, I presume, as comes to the impenitent after long suffering under conviction, when the conscience becomes seared and the soul past feeling. But in the good providence of God I was not to remain in this state.

"Not long after my 'surrender' a friend sent me a small tract entitled, 'The Wonders of Grace in the Instantaneous Deliverance From the Whiskey, Opium and Tobacco Habits.' This was to me an entirely new thought. The 'instantaneous' deliverance! I had prayed and hoped for gradual relief, but the idea of being delivered instantly had never entered my mind.

"The first thought was: 'This is fanaticism.' However, I sat down to reason the matter out with myself. I had at that moment a half-consumed cigar in my fingers, and no less than ten or fifteen cigars per day would satisfy my craving. I asked myself: Do I believe what I preach? I do. Do I not preach to the sinner that God will take away the sins of a whole lifetime in an instant if he will ask and believe? I do, and I know by experience that this is true. Then if God can and will take away the sins of a lifetime in an instant, can He not in an instant and will He not take away an appetite which I have been only seven years in forming? Again: Do I not preach that 'whatsoever ye ask, that is consistent with His will, and believe that ye receive it, ye shall have it?' I do believe and preach all this. Then is it not consistent with the Divine will that I should be free from this merciless appetite that is injuring me? Yes, I believe God is willing. Then came the hard question, Am I willing? If God can and will take away this appetite, am I willing that He should do it? I had suffered so much that my whole being, soul and body, murmured, 'Yes, yes.' Instantly I found it according to my faith. The chain broke, and deliverance came. The cigar passed out of my fingers and the craving out of my life. I was consciously free. There were no discomforts from the sudden ending of the indulgence, no stupor, no craving, no nervous unrest, no disquiet whatever. I was as a little child who had never known the use of a narcotic.

"More than forty years have passed since then, and there has never been from that time the faintest desire for tobacco in any form.

"I write the above as a debtor to grace, that it may be helpful to some poor soul who is in bondage and who longs for freedom." (pp. 50-51).

Now, if God can and will and does thus deliver from the tobacco bondage, there is great encouragement for all slaves of a perverted appetite. The drunkard, the dope fiend and other servants of sin who are bound in galling fetters can find the same instantaneous deliverance from their degrading and destroying appetites by a believing appropriation of God's promise: "All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."—Matt. 21:22.

St. Petersburg, Fla.

How to Treat Your Missionary.

By Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D.D.

So many of our missionaries are now supported in whole or in part by churches and societies that I think it well to publish the following statement which recently came to my hands of how one society treats its missionary representative on the field. It beautifully expresses that loving sympathy and helpfulness which so brightens the missionary's life and makes the tie between the missionary family and the home supporters so close and dear. The statement is as follows:

For years we have had a prayer band, meeting every Monday, before other church meetings. At this time every one present joins in a circle prayer for Mr. and family, his work, native helpers, etc. Often they have honored us by asking prayers for something specific which they are praying for.

Every month some one is appointed to write him a letter (I know he gets some funny ones) not for him to answer, of course, but it stimulates interest at this end of the line, and gives him the names of his members, if nothing more. When sending his reports, he simply mentions having received letters from so and so.

We send them three of the best magazines and have lately added one for their little daughter.

Often small boxes are sent with dolls, paper dolls, scraps of silk and ribbon, favors from luncheons—anything a child would like—with a little piece of fancy work for the house.

Then a friend, finding above all in missionaries' hearts is the desire for education for their children, is sending the Calvert course, which Mrs. praises highly. We recommend that course to any person, with little money and big wish, to cover the needs, in an educational way, with side reading, etc., up to the teen age.

We have recently sent a personal gift, in money, to Mr. as an expression of sympathy for the tedious days in Hospital, in lieu of the soup and eggs we would have sent in had he been nearer.

This certainly does seem little, compared to what he does for us, for we deem it a great privilege to have such a representative.

"Too Mild and Harmless."

I have no desire to enter into controversy with Dr. Bridges, for whose opinion I have the highest respect, but if he will read with care Dr. Fullerton's able work, "Prophecy and Authority," he will understand why any "mild" and "harmless" review must be "misleading" and even "obnoxious."

1. The review was misleading. It was not a fair statement of the facts. It did not even suggest the author's design, namely, to undermine the Protestant belief in the Bible.

2. The review was too mild. Poison ought to be labeled. As a rule the Standard is able to distinguish poison from soothing syrup, and to apply the proper label. Alas, when even the Standard makes light of "a keen nose for heresy!"

3. The review was not harmless. It might have led "every studious pastor" to buy the book, expecting to get his money's worth. What else are book reviews for?

4. The review was obnoxious to me, as Dr. Bridges points out, because I had read the book! Why was it not obnoxious to the reviewer?

Andrew W. Blackwood.

Religious Work of the Army Y. M. C. A.

By John S. Chadwick.

PERHAPS there are yet many ministers and active lay members of the churches in this country who believe that the program of the Young Men's Christian Association in the Army and Navy was largely a recreational one—that the "Y" was there to entertain and to help in the making of a better fighting machine. Our big purpose of the Army Y. M. C. A. was to help win the war and to make of the boys better fighting men, and every service rendered had in mind that purpose as well as the welfare of the men as individuals.

There are hundreds of officers, from General Pershing on down the line, who bear witness to the fact that the "Y" did in no small measure help to bring victory—and many real Americans were, in good faith and through ignorance, used to aid enemy propaganda in attacks on an organization that, with its many acknowledged mistakes, was telling as one of the great agencies in maintaining the fighting spirit of the men. It was not protests against mistakes that were back of every attack on the "Y"—it was its successes that were responsible for attacks from many quarters. And those under cover oftentimes used honest and patriotic American citizens in working their destructive purposes.

But even many who defended the "Y" were concerned at what appeared to be an over emphasis on sports and amusements and a lack of emphasis on religious work. This was not really the case. Had you thought that in the daily papers of the country sports and amusements have a larger place than does the regular work of the churches. This does not mean that the churches have gone out of business, or even that the newspaper men are not friendly to the church. Whatever we may think about it the fact is that the newspaper man believes that there is more of news value in a baseball game, a boxing bout or a golf tournament than there is in a prayer meeting or an ordinary church service.

Now in the newspaper publicity given the Army Y. M. C. A., it was to be expected that sports and amusements be given the larger place—it was just as was being done at home when the news copy was being prepared; sports and amusements were given larger space and bigger head lines than the items concerning church work.

The average religious work secretary, with a job at least as big as any he had ever had, with a larger number of religious services than he had in the pastorate and with more men being won for the Christian life than ever before he had been able to reach, just took it for granted that the people back home knew that the religious work was being done. Almost too late he awoke to the fact that many of those back home did not know these things and that there were serious doubts and questionings.

Before me is the report of the Army and Navy Y. M. C. A. for the Southeastern Department for the two years from July 1, 1917, to July 1, 1919. This report covers the activities of the "Y" in the camps in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee; hence it will be seen that it includes only a part of the army trained for service overseas.

During those two years the aggregate attendance at "Y" buildings was 82,349,775; these men used, free of charge, more than 230,000,000 sheets of paper and envelopes and the "Y" workers handled for them more than 67,000,000 pieces of mail. The number of men attending lectures reached a total of 2,738,103; the number of books circulated 1,436,534; the number in attendance on entertainments 8,046,483; on motion picture shows 10,651,489; and the number participating in physical activities 10,962,612.

Now, much of this would not be counted religious work, and the "Y" workers did not regard it, but all was done by an organization that served the men of the army in the name of Christ. And incidentally, I would call to your attention the fact that all of this service mentioned, was without one penny of cost to the men of the Army and Navy, and these figures represent some of the activities of but one section of the Army Y. M. C. A.—just one military department in the homeland. When you hear the question asked, "What did they do with all the money we gave?" make some estimate of what all this service cost.

But of the work strictly religious: In the camps of the Southeastern Department during the two years, July 1, 1917, to July 1, 1919, there were held 34,657 religious services and in addition to this number of public services there were 31,933 sessions of Bible classes, either in regular sessions of Sunday schools or week-day Bible study. The total attendance on religious services was 6,930,184, and on Bible classes 777,510, a grand total of 7,707,694.

It will be noted that this total is but little short of the total attendance on entertainments and practically seventy-five per cent of the number attending free motion picture shows—and the movies were on several nights of each week. Could we make as good showing in our home communities, where church work is well organized and church attendance is drawn from all ages of men, women, and children? That alone should answer the critics of the religious work of the Army Y. M. C. A.

But there are some other figures. Of the "Y" men two hundred were ministers, representing practically all of the Protestant churches of the country. Not all of these were religious work secretaries, but that number represents the ministerial force in the Southeastern Department. These men together with the lay workers reported 485,150 visits to the sick, 637,717 copies of the Scriptures given to the soldiers and sailors, 361,331 personal Christian interviews, 131,011 signers of the war roll and 84,091 Christian decisions.

There were many active Christian laymen in the "Y" work who had a large part in securing the results named, just as there are active laymen in the churches at home. But as we do at home, let us figure results on the basis of the number of ministers at work. Two hundred ministers, 84,000 conversions within two years. Does that compare favorably with the work at home?

The writer knows that overseas there were not so many favorable opportunities for public religious services as in the home camps. The men were busier with the duties incident to intensive military training, they were more often on the move, and the conditions at the front were such that the man who was there to serve their religious needs found his chief opportunity in personal interviews and in ministry to the physical needs of the men.

Whatever the critics may say about the "Y" men not being at the front, the fact is that nearly a score were killed, more than one hundred and twenty wounded, and many others came back broken in health. And keep in mind, too, that these were men who were not under compulsion to go into the army. After the first few months of war no man was accepted for "Y" service who was subject to draft.

And it must also be taken into account that the religious work overseas was done in an atmosphere not always friendly to Protestantism. And the forces working against Protestant organization were both in the army and out of it. Men had to move cautiously and sometimes perhaps there was over-caution in the matter of emphasis of truths for which Protestantism stands.

All of us today can see how the work might have been better done, but all cannot yet see how well that work was done when we take into account the difficulties and the enemy influences at work in our army and here at home.

Mistakes were magnified, every complaint was given publicity, and the men were encouraged to tell their grievances. Many honest men of the army were used, unwittingly sometimes, to repeat what they had heard concerning the mistakes and failures of the "Y." The writer has been out of the "Y" service for more than seven months; he never had the chance to go overseas and all of his work was here at home. But he still knows that no like period of his min-

What the Church at Large Owes the Country and Village Church.

By Wm. Laurie Hill.

When we look over the roll of churches and visit our church courts, "A shut in," like the writer, begins to think and calls on memory to tell him where the large majority of our ministers come from.

Is it from the large towns and cities, or is it from the rural districts? Examine the roll of your Seminary students and you will find out.

Union Seminary, which stands first in our splendid schools for training preachers, has at its head a man reared in a country church, one of its professors is from a country church in North Carolina which has sent into the field five preachers—old Thyatira.

As a city church, the Second Presbyterian Church of Richmond, Va., has a remarkably good record. Many years ago the writer was superintendent of that Sunday school and recalls from the roll of that school the following preachers: Rev. Herbert H. Hawes, Rev. Frank Brooks, Rev. J. R. Bridges, Rev. Joseph R. Rennie, Rev. J. G. Herndon. Since I left Richmond there may have been others to add to this noble roll. If all our city churches could do as well, we would soon have no lack of efficient men. The country church is a great feeder not only to the ministry but to the city churches. Not long ago a member of Congress was a visitor at old Centre Church, in Robeson county, and was delighted with the service and surroundings, exclaiming, "It is good to be here; I hear the birds singing as well as the people." While the automobile is sometimes a Sabbath breaker, I hope it is going to help build up the country church, for it is a strong spoke in the wheel of church progress.

Reunion of Flora Macdonald Girls at Montreat.

Among the many things that Montreat is good for—and they are legion—is reunions. Reunions big and little, reunions planned and unplanned.

Perhaps no reunion in the history of Montreat has been more thoroughly a happy one than was the reunion there in August of a large number of Flora Macdonald College girls. At 4:30 the assembly hall of the Girls' Building, which had been transformed into a bower of mountain flowers, was buzzing with the happy voices of girls who had come in response to an invitation from Dr. Vardell.

Standing with him and helping to receive was his mother, lovingly called by the girls "Danny Vardell." More than eighty years of age, yet as young in spirit as the youngest.

More than thirty girls were present, representing many of the classes from 1902 to 1919. Old memories were revived, old friendships renewed, and new friendships formed. And made stronger than ever, the bond of love and fellowship existing between Dr. Vardell and his girls.

Cake and cream were served, after which a photograph of the group was taken to make more vivid the happy memory of a happy day.

D. P. M.

Just whistle a bit if the day be dark

And the sky be overcast:

If mute be the voice of the piping lark,

Why, pipe your own small blast.

And it's wonderful how o'er the gray sky-track,

The truant warbler comes stealing back.

But why need he come? for your soul's at rest,

And the song in the heart—ah, that is best.

—Paul Laurence Dunbar.

Some Problems in Arithmetic.

NO, NO, I haven't any grouch; my liver is in prime condition and I was born an optimist. It is just because my husband is making a change in pastorate, and as I sit at the kitchen sink peeling the potatoes for our family of seven (not counting the dog) on the last day before our flitting, my mind reverts to some of the complicated problems in addition, subtraction and division over which I have spent endless hours—only to face defeat in the solution of them.

True, I should be feeling lumps in my throat because I am leaving forever, perhaps, many friends who have through sickness and through health been as my own family to me. There's the friend who always showed tears of joy in her eyes when some unusual blessing came to me; the friend who has donated many an hour of mending when my sewing had piled up beyond my ability to conquer; the friend of exceptional intellectual caliber who has at all times been to me a mental tonic; my well-to-do friend; my friend in poverty—between these and the family in the parsonage has always existed a camaraderie not so very common in pastorates.

And yet there is no lump in my throat. My mind seems to sense but one thing—the stupendous fact that the new church pays $200 more per year and promises to pay the salary on time! Oh, do you get that? It pledges to pay the salary in full every week. The fact of inadequate salary always has been hard to live down; but since prices have doubled or trebled, the church has laid on us an extra share of its Liberty Bond and Red Cross donations, the salary has not increased one cent, and we are really paying out double what we were two years ago. In my husband's Sunday school class of high school boys, most of them receive wages equal to or larger than his, and the finance committee asks very little of their money. My brother-in-law's office boy has a much larger income—and he pays not one cent to any church. A little way down the street lives Mr. Papendinski with a family the size of ours. All that Mr. P. had to do in order to prepare for his present job in the factory was to pack his little bundle of cheap clothing in his old country and pay his passage to this. He draws $54 a week and it is paid every Saturday night. My husband spent four years in college, three in the theological seminary and one in graduate work in order to fit himself for his job, and he draws $20 a week—paid when the church gets good and ready. Mr. P. does not hand back to his boss one cent of his wage. My husband pledges one-tenth as a starter and then is pried loose from several other tenths. Mr. P. is ahead, too, in that no high standard of living is demanded of his family. In fact, no one cares how he lives. He never wore a laundered collar, never saw a tailor's bill for a pulpit suit or baptismal robe—all expensive extras—and Mrs. P. goes barefoot for eight months of the year. My husband's parishioners expect him to keep me shod.

The problem of insufficient salary as a means of graying the pastor's wife's hair is hardly to be mentioned in a class with the custom of paying the salary by fits and starts, so that for weeks at a stretch we are without one penny of money. This is always true in August—so much so that my husband's vacation month is but a nightmare to us. He is officially granted "one month's vacation with full salary," but the officials do not say, and very likely most of them do not know, that the "full salary" will not roll in before October. Always we have guests in August, always there are the children's school supplies to be purchased before September 1, but no longer do I covet any cheap little outings for them or a real vacation trip for my husband. Once our church friends scattered to California, New Mexico, the Dells of Wisconsin, a cool spot in Michigan, to country homes, and not one of the lot but remembered the pastor's family with letters and postcards. Did we reply? For six weeks that summer we had not the price of a postage stamp! Our grocery and meat bills could wait until the fall roundup when vacationers return and remember their church pledges. Our electric light and telephone folks are not so istry of twenty-five years has counted more for the Kingdom and for the faith of Protestantism than those months in army "Y" service. He never had a better chance for distinctively religious work.

(Continued on page 9)

Dr. Green and Fundamental Principles.

(Continued from Page 4)

probably take an expert today to tell the practical difference. I do not think that you will be able to discover a fundamental, separating principle here.

The one other reason given in the address for the separation is the Gardiner Spring Resolution and all that it involved. This resolution was passed by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia in May, 1861. It called upon all Presbyterians to support the constitution of the United States and the Federal Government. Dr. Charles Hodge of Princeton and fifty-seven others entered a vigorous protest declaring that the Assembly had no right to pass upon this political question and to decide where the allegiance of Presbyterians belonged. I subscribe heartily to the Hodge protest.

But there are several things to be said in reference to the Gardiner Spring Resolution. First of all, there has never been anything else exactly like it in the history of the Church. It dealt with a very peculiar situation. Our Assembly in 1876 stated the peculiar situation clearly in the following statement: "The sole question was between rival authorities, which had come, in a very peculiar and complicated form of government, into competition—the elder and purer State authority, and the newer and derived Federal authority. Which was right, the Church, as an organized body, had no right to decide; it was one belonging to the citizen in his civil and political relations." A situation just like that will probably never arise again. Of course a principle remains.

Another thing to be said about the Gardiner Spring Resolution is that it is simply a deliverance of an Assembly and did not become a part of the law of the Church. Let me illustrate. In 1914 our Assembly passed a resolution calling upon all ministers, officers, candidates, and teachers in Sunday Schools to discourage the use of tobacco. That resolution did not become a law of the Church or even a principle of the Church. So far as I can see the people to whom it was addressed have paid very little attention to it.

History compels us to say another thing and that is that our own Assembly has from time to time made what are called political deliverances. Quite a number of these were made between 1861 and 1875. To be sure our Assembly appointed a committee in 1875 to collect all such deliverances, and the Assembly of 1876 explained them and disavowed anything in them that was contrary to its historical principles. Some of the explanations make very interesting reading. There is something splendid in this disavowal, but it does not alter the historical fact that these deliverances were made and that more of them have been made since. To illustrate, the Presbytery of North Alabama in 1909 passed a resolution endorsing a prohibition amendment to the state constitution. The matter was brought before our Assembly in 1910 by way of complaint, but the Assembly declined to sustain the complaint against the North Alabama Presbytery. In 1914 our Assembly passed a resolution endorsing a prohibition amendment to the national constitution. I am not now discussing the merits or demerits of these actions of the Assembly; I am only narrating historical facts.

I know that the Northern Assembly has done more of this sort of thing than the Southern Assembly and that they do not look at it in exactly the same way. But where is the fundamental, separating principle? Shall we say that the principle is that they do it very frequently and that we do it only occasionally?

There is still one other thing to say on this point of the Gardiner Spring Resolution. It is said by the fathers in the address of 1861: "We frankly admit that the mere unconstitutionality of the proceedings of the last Assembly (in Philadelphia) is not, in itself, considered a sufficient ground for separation." I know this statement has a context but it does not substantially alter its meaning.

So when we look at the Gardiner Spring Resolution and the principle involved we see that it dealt with a unique situation, it was only the deliverance of an Assembly and did not become a part of the Church law, our first Assembly said that it was not, in itself, considered a sufficient cause for separation, and we find that our Assembly from time to time makes or concurs in what are called political deliverances. Do not suppose that I agree for a moment with the Gardiner Spring Resolution. It was all wrong. I am only inquiring as to whether the Gardiner Spring Resolution constitutes a fundamental, separating principle between the Northern and Southern Presbyterian Churches today.

After all the place to look for fundamental principles of a Church is in its doctrinal standards and not in its occasional deliverances. The doctrinal standards of the Northern and Southern Presbyterian Churches are practically the same. They have the same larger and shorter catechism and have practically the same confessions. The Northern Church revised its confession in 1903 but the revisions are slight and very few Southern Presbyterians would have any difficulty in accepting these revisions. So stalwart and conservative a theologian as Dr. Warfield of Princeton affirms that the revision did not affect the Calvinism of the confession. There are some differences in the Books of Church Order but I have never heard of one that was fundamental. After examining these doctrinal standards from year to year I have not been able to find any considerable difference between them and certainly no fundamental difference. I do not believe that any one can find a fundamental difference.

But it may be argued that the Northern Church is more liberal in its interpretation of its standards than the Southern Church. That is probably true in spots, but the rank and file of the Northern Church are still conservative. The Northern Church has never stated that it is one of its principles to give a loose interpretation of the standards. I have no doubt that their Assembly would repudiate such a statement. Is it correct to call the matter of loose interpretation a principle if it has never been stated as a principle? Would it not be more accurate to call it a tendency?

I know that there are differences between the Northern and Southern Presbyterian Churches, and that we do not see all things from precisely the same point of view, but I am not talking about differences. I am talking about fundamental principles which would justify the two Churches in remaining apart for all the days to come. I hope that nobody will suppose that I am arguing for immediate organic union. The time has not yet come for that and may never come. The two Churches are not homogeneous, we have not come to such a spirit of unity as would justify organic union, and there are many problems in the way. But I still say that I do not see any fundamental principle of the Gospel or of Presbyterianism separating the Presbyterian Churches of America, and that it is a part of our Christian duty to pray and work for unity among all branches of the Presbyterian Church, unity in thought, word, deed and spirit. Dr. Green and I may not have the same conception of that word unity. I mean that oneness for which our Lord prayed so fervently. If we can have that sort of unity, union will take care of itself.

If this article should evoke a reply from any source let me suggest that we leave out personalities. They are not for edification.

September Twilight.

By John Jordan Douglass.

The flash of leaves within the withering wold;
A weird witch moon among the darkling trees;
The west flamboyant like a sea of gold,
And old, old memories whispering in the breeze.

A stain of scarlet where the wild grapes grow;
A hint of autumn in the glowing dusk;
A plaintive sigh in every waterflow,
And twilight scented with the smell of musk,

Of rare mossroses and the balm of thyme;
A mock-bird's vesper tuned to lyric rhyme;
A twinkling star a gleam within the west—
A shining solitaire in night's dusky breast.
Wadesboro, N. C.

Some Problems in Arithmetic.

(Continued from page 7)

quick to shut off service in vacation time, so we could float along. But do you think that the five little folk in the parsonage might have had one ice cream cone apiece or one 15-cent ride to the woods? Well, they couldn't—not on my arithmetic.

At another time (not in August), after one of those long-drawn-out salary drouths, the church was owing the pastor over $120 and I was desperate—yes desperate! As we walked to church on Sunday (it had taken me an hour to get the trace of copious tears covered with powder, for just as I got my trouble hidden it would burst out again and I had the powdering to do all over again), I said to him, "If you don't get a check today I must give up absolutely. You must get $25 at least." He didn't expect any, as Wednesday was usually his pay day. But it was handed to him and, oh, members of Baptist churches, can you believe it? It was for $11! My husband, wishing to hearten me, whispered the glorious news during the interim between Sunday school and church. It did not hearten me. It made me sick. He had to support me to a bench and a fit of uncontrollable weeping and vomiting seized me. I was in bed, under the doctor's care for a week. Another minister who heard of this said he would not allow himself to be a joke at the bank. He would have returned the check. Did my husband suffer? Oh, yes, but he just turned the other cheek and let the members solicit sixteen of those eleven dollars away from him before he left the building. Oh, my arithmetic! I cannot solve it!

I know that this church is not the only guilty one. Many wives of pastors have talked this matter over with me, and I know I do not suffer alone. Only one has ever offered a solution. She said, "We must just pray like the Master, 'Father, forgive them for they know not what they do.'" Perhaps this is the secret of it: they know not what they do.

A specific arithmetical problem is confronting me today, and I see no solution for all my sleepless nights I have given to it. That is the high cost of attendance at all church functions. I figure in the expensive supper I buy on my way home after spending the whole afternoon at a mission circle or ladies' aid, when if I had been at home I might have managed a much cheaper one; but this year's Sunday school picnic being still unpaid for in full, I call on you, readers, to figure it out for me. My doctor had ordered me to remain in bed for two weeks. I was sick, but I could not obey that order, and was dragging about my washing, ironing, cooking, sweeping, mending and countless other tasks. When it was noised abroad that I meant to miss that picnic, the Baptists rose in masse to protest. You see a near neighbor is a Baptist and squealed on me for being on my feet and about my house work and then daring to dodge such a momentous thing as a church picnic. My gentle little Methodist neighbor on the other side would never have reported me. Everyone telephoned me (how I'd like to choke the inventor of the telephone!) to hire the hard work for a week and go to the picnic. My reply, "No funds," was just a joke to them. Where, indeed, could have that $15 paid three weeks ago have gone? Even the children were assaulted and battered (verbally speaking), and my eldest son (precious chum of my worried years) came home and said, "Mother, if you don't go to that picnic, the whole kingdom of heaven is going to bust." I went. Here is my tangled problem resulting, and I can't work it:

Car fare, $1.08; picnic food, $1.40 (I blushed over my cheap dinner); cleaning of skirt, 85 cents (accident of course); washing for week, $5.25 (couldn't get a woman so had to send it to the Chinaman); ironing, $1.25 (sent only a few pieces); sweeping, $3.00; delivery of wash, 50 cents; total, $13.33. Now on the other side write, "husband's check for that week, $10." Can you balance it?

And would you believe it? At the picnic my husband found me alone on the bank of the shady stream, sat down by me, kissed my tired hands, hugged me up close to him and said he loved me so much he felt despondent—that he couldn't make life a little less hard for me. I might have been tender in return (once I was), but the high cost of loving a preacher has broken me down that I could only answer his caressing with tears. I've too many of them always on tap, I fear.

There is a great deal of talk about the dreach of new recruits for the ministry. I know that my husband longs and prays that at least one of our four sons may take up that work. The very thought of it freezes my blood! I should not so much mind what my son might encounter unless the minister's wage is placed upon a new basis, but I seem constantly to vision some sweet-faced, eager-eyed, whole-souled girl who will place her hand in his, consecrate herself joyously to share his work, and then be hopelessly broken in the struggle to maintain a good home without a salary large enough.

For many years I managed fairly well by superhuman effort (yes I do, I mean just that, superhuman effort), but the high war prices with the still higher peace prices have utterly swamped me. My husband has had to hunt another job or place me in a sanitarium. I hate to leave these friends. I dread the readjustment in a new field, but it has to be. My sister will pay our moving expense. My brother will donate enough to pay off all bills. My aunt will furnish me a new dress, shoes and hat (oh, joy!) that I may appear decently clad when we arrive at the new church. A friend wants me to go to a sanitarium for a two weeks' rest at her expense. I loathe charity, but I must accept it or go under. I'd rather spend the money hiring the hard work done and remain at home with my children, but "beggars may not be choosers," so I bow to the inevitable.

Thus upon the eve of closing this ten years' pastorate I should be filled with grief over the parting with friends—dear friends they are. But the scars on my soul are all too fresh for that, and I can realize only one great fact—the salary will be paid every week, and there is a wee little dab more of it!—A Preacher's Wife, in The Baptist Standard.

An Evangelistic Forward Movement.

By Rev. R. F. Kirkpatrick, D.D., Chairman Sub-Committee on Evangelism.

The Assembly's Committee on Systematic Beneficence and Stewardship, at a recent meeting held in Chattanooga, adopted a goal of at least 5,000 additions to the Church on profession of faith during the present ecclesiastical year, and a further goal of additions from all sources sufficient to bring the total membership of the Assembly on April 1, 1920, to at least 400,000; and the task of leading the Church in the achievement of these goals was laid upon the department of evangelism of the executive committee of Home Missions.

This department had already addressed a letter to the chairman of Presbyterian Home Missions in each of our Presbyteries, asking them to endeavor to enlist their respective Presbyteries in a church-wide campaign of evangelism.

This proposed campaign involves far more than merely a provision for evangelistic meetings in the various Home Mission churches of the Presbyteries, for it proposes that all our churches shall definitely face their evangelistic responsibility, making a survey of the unsaved for whom they are each immediately responsible, and then formulating adequate plans to reach these unsaved with the gospel. It is a call to a great forward movement in soul winning, and it is earnestly hoped that the response will be hearty and unanimous.

There has never been such an opportunity for an extensive evangelistic campaign as that which confronts us now, and we can not afford to neglect it.

Atlanta, Ga.

He whose love-song is the eternal inspiration and solace of our race was the Man of Sorrows, and His life was a song in the night.—C. S. Horne.

Educational

Columbia Theological Seminary—The ninety-second session of Columbia Theological Seminary was opened September 18 at 5 o'clock p. m., with what President Whaling described as an able and eloquent expository sermon by Rev. Henry Alexander White, D.D., professor of Greek and New Testament exegesis. Dr. White prefaced his sermon by a word of greeting to the new and the old students.

Following Dr. White's sermon, the president, Rev. Thornton Whaling, said in part: "As president, I welcome you in the name of the faculty, the board of directors and the student body. I welcome you to the privileges and services of the Seminary; to its associations, for here still abides the influence of such men of God as Thornwell, Horne, J. Leighton Wilson, Palmer and Girardeau; finally to its work and spiritual fellowship." Concluding his remarks, Dr. Whaling said it was his wish that the words of Paul to the Corinthians might be a motto on the wall of every room: "Let all that you do be done in love."

The Seminary grounds and buildings are in excellent condition, the rooms having been thoroughly renovated, the walls kalsomined and the floors painted. New and old men continue to come in and the prospects for a successful year are the brightest.

The Presbyterian College of South Carolina opened September 9. The enrollment was 140 at the close of its first week, approximately 95 old students and 45 new ones. A few additional students are expected. Judging from past year's experience the total enrollment will be between 150 and 160. The standard has been raised and far greater care is exercised in admitting new students than formerly as the college is very anxious to co-operate with the high school of the State, as well as to maintain its standards. This has curtailed the number of new students.

The college feels that it is beginning one of the most successful years in its history. It has an unusually fine set of students; the work is well organized; there is a full professor to every 15 students, which enables the college to handle its students in small classes where the best individual attention can be given. The two new professors, Dr. W. E. Hoy in Biology, and Prof. H. E. Sturgeon in Chemistry, have made a most favorable impression upon both faculty and students. They promise to be a great addition to the teaching force of the college.

The Synod of South Carolina is arranging to put on a campaign this fall for $1,000,000 for its educational institutions. Half of this amount is to go to the Presbyterian College of South Carolina; this will enable it to become one of the very best equipped colleges under the control of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

Arkansas College has had a fine opening. There are more students in the College Department than for a number of years and several others will enter within a few days. The two new dormitories are almost filled to capacity. The canvassing during the summer was very limited and, therefore, the increase in the size of the student body is more gratifying.

Mr. R. C. Summerville, who is widely known as one of the leading educators of the Southern Presbyterian Church, has been added to the faculty and he began his work at the opening of the session. Prof. W. C. Munn began his duties as Professor of Natural Science. Miss Varina K. Sarrazin has been added to the Piano Department. Miss Kittie R. Sanderson has charge of the Commercial Department and is Secretary. The College authorities have sought the very best talent and are to be congratulated in the selection of the new teachers. With larger and finer equipment, larger faculty and growing student body, the future of this worthy institution seems increasingly bright.

News of the Week

In Albemarle, N. C., about 150 striking mill operatives attempted to stop non-union workers from entering Wiscasset Mill. In the effort to preserve order Sheriff Blalock and Dee Porter, a striking mill operative, were wounded. Troops were summoned and many of the strikers lodged in jail. Twenty of them are now held under the rebellion law.

On Sunday, September 14, a terrific storm swept over Corpus Christi, Texas. The list of known dead now has reached 300. The food situation is serious, as thousands of refugees, are coming in from the storm-swept districts.

President Wilson has named 22 men to represent the general public in the National Conference, to be held in Washington on October 6, to consider plans for a new relationship between employer and employe. Bernard Baruch and Dr. Charles W. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard, are among those named.

Frank Page, N. C. Chairman of the State Highway Commission, denies that the Government is going to recall the trucks and other machinery sent to this State for roadbuilding. This State has received eighty-five trucks. Roadbuilding machinery to the value of $1,500,000 has been apportioned to this State.

The Alabama Legislature, by a vote of 60 to 31, has rejected the woman's suffrage amendment.

Owing to a six weeks' drought Asheville, N. C., is suffering for water. The people are being rationed. The French Broad river is one-half of a foot below zero.

Alexander Sprunt & Sons are going to erect in Wilmington, N. C., a large office building, at a cost of $100,000.

President Wilson's party, last Monday, 15th, were in an automobile smash-up. Two newspaper correspondents were killed.

The proposition to present General Pershing with a $10,000 sword has been blocked by Congress by Representative Kitchin, of North Carolina.

Governor Bickett, in his Chapel Hill address, declared that public welfare rested on the faithful fulfillment of the revaluation act.

On September 16 one hundred good roads enthusiasts, at a banquet in Charlotte, N. C., decided to appeal to the next General Assembly to incorporate the body and name a commission to have charge of construction.

The British have made changes in cotton rulings, by removing prohibition on the export of American cotton.

Grove Institute, formerly James Sprunt Institute, opened on the 10th with the largest enrollment ever in its history. For some time before the registrations showed there was going to be an overflow, all active efforts to get pupils stopped, and ways and means sought to care for as many as possible. Some garret rooms are being used for students that were never used before. The class rooms, study hall and dining room are taxed to their capacity and all dormitory rooms are as full as comfort and safety will allow. There are more in daily attendance now than were enrolled the whole of last year, and last year was a record breaker in point of attendance.

The crowded condition of the school argues eloquently the need of larger and better equipment. We are confidently looking forward to the educational campaign in our part

(Continued on page 22)

Christian Endeavor

By Rev. S. H. Hay.

M., Sept. 29—One Origin for all: Acts 17:22-31.
 T., Sept. 30—World-sin: Rom. 3:9-19.
 W., Oct. 1—World-penitence: Rev. 1:7; 21:21-27.
 T., Oct. 2—World-peace: Isa. 11:1-9.
 F., Oct. 3—Brotherhood in Christ: Gal. 3:22-29.
 S., Oct. 4—The Spirit of Jesus: Eph. 2:11-22.

* * *

Topic for Sunday, Oct. 5—Our Relation to Others—
 Toward World-Brotherhood—Luke 10:25-37. (Consecration meeting.)

* * *

The lawyer of our Bible lesson asked Jesus, "Who is my neighbor?" To which Jesus answered, "Whoever you can reach that needs you." This is the answer of the story of the good Samaritan.

Fortunately modern transportation has put within our reach all men that are on the earth. And we need all and they need us. No man liveth unto himself. All have a neighbor's claim upon us.

But we are much more than neighbors; we are brothers. Sprung from the same first parents, guided by the same human instincts, moved by the same passions, harried by the same sins and Satan, redeemed by the same Jesus, we must be and are a band of brothers always. Wherever the human being has a need, his claim upon the rest of us is a brother's claim, and it must not be denied. When we stand in the presence of men in need, we can know no "Border nor Breed, nor Birth, though they come from the ends of the earth."

* * *

It is less difficult now than formerly to feel the fact of our brotherhood to all, for we are nearer together in space and time than we were. New York is nearer to Liverpool now than Charlotte was to Columbia a century ago. And India is nearer Philadelphia today than Charleston was when Washington made his farewell address. Men are no longer isolated from one another. The whole race is now huddled together by the elimination of space. God's providence has opened the way for us all to realize the benefits of a common brotherhood. And the race is, under these circumstances, responding—all too slowly, yet responding—to the teaching of Christ on brotherhood. May God hasten the day when the response shall be complete.

* * *

Our brotherhood to all men demands that we shall share with them whatever we have that they really need. We are to bear one another's burdens, mutually supplying deficiencies. The injured man on the Jericho road received from the Samaritan a part of all that the Samaritan had that the man needed. He needed strength; and the Samaritan shared his with him. He needed money for various calls; and the Samaritan shared his with him. He needed a friend, and he found him in the Samaritan. Whatever blessings we as individuals or as a nation enjoy, we must share with other men or nations near or far that need them. The love of Christ and the fact of brotherhood constrain us.

The one great need common to all men of every color and clime is Christ the Saviour. Those that have Him need more of Him, and we should help each other to a progressive knowledge of Him. Alas, for any Christian that makes it harder for his brother Christian to see and know the Lord. And as long as there is a brother of ours on this planet who does not know the Lord, we can give ourselves no rest until we take the Saviour to him.

* * *

Tell whether you think our brotherhood applies to the

The Prayer Meeting

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING SEPT. 28, 1919:
 HOW TO USE THE BIBLE—Ps. 19:7-14; Acts
 8:26-35.

The Eunuch evidently was a good Bible student. Phiny, the elder, used to utilize his time during his various journeys over Italy in reading and dictating to his amanuensis. The treasurer of Candace was similarly industrious. Evidently a busy man, he yet made opportunities for reading the Bible. This is the most important step in the use of the holy volume. We must read it. Nothing will take the place of reading this book. It is good to hear the lesson explained in Sunday school; to hear the Scriptures read and expounded in church services; to listen carefully at family prayers. But these must not supplant the reading of the divine revelation. In order to get a well rounded conception of the books, it is good quite often to read a book at a sitting—say Genesis, or Isaiah, or Job. Then one may profitably take the great passages for particular study. The Eunuch had evidently done so, and God sent the evangelist to aid him.

Then one should seek the guidance of the best minds available in the understanding of the volume. "How can I understand except some one should guide me? The Holy Spirit is the best—the always available interpreter. Then, too, one may easily buy a good commentary and a few monographs. However, one may have a library of such helps, but if the intelligent, constant reading is neglected, these helps will avail little or nothing.

The Bible should be read not only intelligently but prayerfully. There should be an eager desire to get into the heart, the divine purpose of the writings; and nothing will here take the place of prayer. In prayer one communes with the Author of the Bible: an admirable method of mastering the meaning and the glory of the sacred page.

After reading one should obey the teachings of the Bible. "Philip opened his mouth, and beginning from this Scripture preached unto him Jesus—and the Eunuch saith, Behold here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?" No procrastination here—no ifs and ands, but obedience and faith and action. If only it were so with all who read and hear the gospel! "He went on his way rejoicing." The joy of the Book is a never failing fountain. It is inexhaustible; but only for those who read and obey like this man of great authority under the queen of the Ethiopians. Was this man a slave? a negro? a Jew? It matters not: he was a Christian. He carried with him a volume which made the darkness light, which caused the desert to blossom with rose and lily; which opened up wells of living water in dry places (Ps. 19:10).

There remains yet another indispensable use of the Bible. When one has read it, when one has feasted upon it and been enriched by it, one must bear its message to others. Living epistles. The gospel message should emanate and radiate from our hearts and minds and lives. Salt and light, Jesus says we are, and He knows. Many who have Bibles need to have the Book translated, though it be printed in their mother tongue. This is a supreme use of the Bible—to so live and talk that others may be induced to read and to believe and rejoice.

colored people. Why? How can we show them a brotherly spirit?

Would a more real spirit of brotherhood help to prevent or settle strikes? How?

Did you ever hear one brother in a family slander another? Tell how a more real sense of brotherhood would end gossip.

Sunday School

By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.

REVIEW.

From Acts 2:37-47, I Thess. 5:11-15, to Psalm 19:7-17,
II Tim. 3:14-17.

SEPTEMBER 28, 1919

Review: Jesus Our Saviour and King

Selection for Reading: Matt. 21:1-9, 15, 16

GOLDEN TEXT—"Hosanna to the son of David; Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest."—Matt. 21:9.

1 And when they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethpage, unto the mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples,

2 Saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them, and bring them unto me.

3 And if any man say ought unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them; and straightway he will send them.

4 All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying,

5 Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass.

6 And the disciples went, and did as Jesus commanded them.

7 And brought the ass, and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they set him thereon.

8 And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and strewed them in the way.

9 And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the son of David! Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord: Hosanna in the highest!

15 And when the chief priests and scribes saw the wonderful things that he did, and the children crying in the temple, and saying Hosanna to the son of David! they were sore displeased.

16 And said unto him, Hearst thou what these say? And Jesus saith unto them, Yea: have ye never read, Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?

I. Acts 2:37-47; I Thess. 5:11-15—July 6, 1919—The Church, Its Life and Work—Golden Text: Eph. 5-25, "Christ also loved the Church and gave Himself for it." Time: May 28, A. D. 30. Persons: Apostles, Believers, Converts. Place: Jerusalem. Topics: (1) The First Apostolic Converts; (2) The Word Received; (3) The Conditions Under Which the Church Grew; (4) The Duties of believers to Each Other.

II. Matt. 28:18-20; Acts 8:34-40—July 13, 1919—Baptism—Golden Text: Gal. 3-27, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Time: May 30 A. D. Persons: Christ, Apostles, Philip, Eunuch. Places: Galilee, Desert. Topics: (1) The Gospel Commission; (2) The Conversion of the Eunuch; (3) The Eunuch Baptized; (4) The Effects of Receiving Christ.

III. Matt. 26:26-30; I Cor. 11:23-26—July 21, 1919—The Lord's Supper—Golden Text: I Cor. 11-26, "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye do show the Lord's death till He come." Time: Tuesday, April 4, 30 A. D. Place: Jerusalem, Upper Room. Persons: Christ, Disciples. Topics: (1) The Preparation for the Supper; (2) The Celebration of the Supper; (3) The Purposes It Served; (4) Some Truths It Enforces.

IV. Phil. 4:10-20—July 27, 1919.—Phil. 4:10-20—Christian Fellowship—Golden Text: I John 4-7, "If we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." Time: 64 A. D. Place: Rome. Persons: Paul, Philippians. Topics: (1) The Lesson of Contentment; (2) The Peculiar Privilege of the Corinthian Church; (3) Their Gifts to Paul; (4) The Chief Source of Supply.

V. John 4:1-10, 19-24—Aug. 3, 1919—Christian Worship. Golden Text: John 4-24, "God is a Spirit and they that worship Him must worship Him in Spirit and in truth." Time: A. D. 27. Place: Sychar. Persons: Christ, Disciples, Samaritans. Topics: (1) Christ and Woman at the Well; (2) He Describes Living Water; (3) He Reveals Himself and Her Need; (4) He Expounds True Worship.

VI. Acts 16:9-15; Jas. 5:19-20—Aug. 10, 1919—Winning Others to Christ—Golden Text: Acts 1-8, "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in Judea and in Samaria and unto the uttermost part of the earth." Time: 52 A. D. Places: Troas, Philippi. Persons: Paul, Lydia. Topics: (1) Paul Obedient to Vision; (2) Paul's First Sabbath in Philippi; (3) Lydia's Conversion; (4) The Results of Conversion.

VII. Acts 1:8-14, 8-20—Aug. 17, 1919—Christian Missions—Golden Text: Mark 16-15, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." Place: Lystra. Time: A. D. 46. Paul, Barnabas, the Cripple. Topics: (1) The Baptism of the Holy Ghost Gave Power; (2) The Cripple at Lystra Healed; (3) The Evangelists Proclaim Important Truths; (4) The Fickleness of Human Favor.

VIII. Luke 10:25-37—Aug. 24, 1919—Social Responsibility—Golden Text: Gal. 6:10, "As we have opportunity let us do good to all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Time: A. D. 29. Place: Perea. Persons: Christ, Scribe, Samaritan. Topics: (1) Salvation by Works; (2) The Victim of Thieves; (3) The Neglectors of Sufferers; (4) The Samaritan's Help.

IX. Daniel 1:8-20—Aug. 31, 1919—Temperance—Golden Text: I Cor. 9-25, "Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things." Time: 606 B. C. Place: Babylon. Persons: Daniel, His Friends, Melzar. Topics: (1) The Difficulties of Daniel and Melzar; (2) The Test Proposed; (3) The Result of the Experiment; (4) The Spiritual Development of Daniel and His Friends.

X. Matt. 13:31-33, 44-50—Sept. 7, 1919—The Kingdom of God. Golden Text: Matt. 1-33, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness." Time: A. D. 28. Place: Sea of Galilee. Persons: Christ, Disciples. Topics: (1) The Growth of the Kingdom; (2) The Corruption of the Kingdom; (3) The Preciousness of the Kingdom; (4) The Mixed Character of the Kingdom.

XI. Matt. 25:31-46—Sept. 14, 1919—The Future Life—Golden Text: Rom. 14-10, "For we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ." Time: A. D. 30. Place: Jerusalem, Mt. of Olives. Persons: Christ, Disciples. Topics: (1) The Final Separation; (2) The Righteous Justified; (3) The Wicked Condemned; (4) Eternal Blessedness and Punishment.

XII. Psalm 19:7-17; II Tim. 3:14-17—Sept. 21, 1919—The Holy Scriptures—Golden Text: Psalm, 119-105, "Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Time: 1000 B. C., B. C. 66. Places: Jerusalem, Rome. Persons: David, Paul, Timothy. Topics: (1) The Effects of the Scriptures; (2) The Preciousness and Delights of the Scriptures; (3) The Petitions They Prompt; (4) Their Inspiration and Benefits.

MORE SECRETARIES NEEDED.

The growth of the Young Men's Christian Association in the South is creating a pressing need for more secretaries and, especially, for more thorough training.

Recognizing this need, the Southern Association College has been established. The college will run twelve months in the year in order to save the time of the students. The fall, winter and spring quarters will be held in Nashville, Tenn., where the college will be in close co-operation with George Peabody College for Teachers, Vanderbilt University, and other educational institutions. This will permit the Association College to use many of the professors in these colleges and save cost of operation. The summer period will be run at Blue Ridge, where large teaching facilities are brought together. Dr. W. D. Weatherford, whose outstanding ability as an association leader and teacher is well known, has been selected as president of the college and an efficient corps of teachers will be associated with him.

The association movement presents a large opportunity for a worth while life-work and is calling for young men with leadership qualities to prepare themselves to fill important positions in this service. G. C. Huntington, State Secretary of Young Men's Christian Association, Charlotte, N. C., will be glad to give further information or application. The college opens October 1.

Devotional

RELAXATION.

In these days of intensive living, of physical and mental stress and strain, science proclaims "relaxation" as the great reconstructive agency for relief and up-building.

Physical relaxation, as when one sags down into the depths of some-enfolding chair or lies at full length and imagines himself to be slowly sinking lower, and lower still, until all sense of muscular exertion and nerve-tension is forgotten, to rouse therefrom refreshed and invigorated and fitted for new demands upon his strength; mental relaxation, as when one's mind lazily muses and drifts hither and yon with little or no consciousness of effort—"day-dreaming," we say—to be recalled as from a refreshing sleep, quickened and alert for new tasks of mental activity.

The soul of man needs its seasons of relaxation and consequent refreshment, as well as does his physical and mental self and so God's word with its "Be still and know that I am God" comes as a loving reminder of this need and with implied provision for its satisfaction. When one learns the secret of resting in the Lord, he finds that "they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint."—strengthened with might in the inner man.

"REST IN THE LORD AND WAIT PATIENTLY FOR HIM."

GOD BACK OF ALL.

However distasteful a service may be, or however disagreeable the person to whom it must be rendered, God is back of it all, and loved that person well enough to give his Son to die for him. Dr. Guthrie was walking along the streets of Edinburgh, when he overtook a little girl carrying a child much too heavy for her. In a very gentle way Dr. Guthrie said: "My child, the baby is too heavy for you, isn't he?" With a shining face, she made quick response: "No, sir; he's my brother." It makes a difference that one for whom I must toil and wait, whose burden I must bear, was one for whom Jesus died, and thus is bound to me with the cord of divine love.—J. Wilbur Chapman.

STRENGTH IN PROPORTION TO OUR WEAKNESS.

Christ gives us strength in proportion to our weakness. Those who are weak and not those who are strong get the most of it. "Power is made perfect in weakness." Paul got special strength from Christ because he had a thorn and had to bear it. Human love does the same with weakness. If there is a blind child in a home, that is the one who gets the most thought, care, sympathy and help from all the family. If it is harder for us to live than it is for others, if our burden is heavier, if our suffering is greater, if we have fewer to care for us and help us, then we are the very ones to whom Christ gives most of his strength, whom he holds nearest to his heart.—Selected.

ENOCH WALKED WITH GOD.

Enoch was a man with like passions to us. He was a family man, a man who lived in an age of extraordinary wickedness, but he walked with God. Egypt had its Joseph, and Babylon its Daniel. To walk with God is to be in harmony with God. There can be no harmony of life while there is contriety of nature. "Ye must be born again." To walk with God is to love the things that God loves and to hate the things that God hates. Enoch was not enamored of the things that God hates. To the people of his day he probably seemed straight-laced and narrow-minded, but we speak of him as "the man who walked with God." To walk with God means to keep step with Him. We cannot walk with God if we lag behind in timid or surly disobedience. We cannot walk with God if, through lack of faith, we run ahead to reconnoiter. To walk with God is to be conscious, however rough and rugged the way, that heaven lies at the end of the journey. "Enoch" means dedicated, initiated, disciplined. We can never come to the fulness of God's ideal for us except through the process of discipline, for "discipline" is but another word for discipling."—Exchange.

Home Circle

FATHERS, MAKE COMPANIONS OF YOUR BOYS.

One of the best men I ever knew gave to this country three splendid sons, loyal, capable and conscientious. I once asked him how he managed to do it. He said: "I have always made my boys my companions." In the intimate comradeship of father and son there arose the occasion to teach the boys what it is to be a really fine American and a Christian gentleman. The fathers wise procedure made three eminent citizens of his sons.

The strength of a nation lies in its spiritual forces, not in its material gains, and the great agencies that conserve spiritual ideals are the home, the church and the school. Unfortunately the home, where most of this should be done, really does the least. All parents holding love for children and country will endeavor to perform their most important duty of maintaining and imparting high ideals, for in the coming days as never before we must give intelligent guidance to our children.

My own father, after church, on Sunday afternoon, often accompanied his three boys to the mountain or forests. There in the cool and silence he gave us many suggestions that have ripened into inestimable good in the years that have come and gone that he can no longer walk with us. We do not see him, but we do feel his presence and gratefully follow his fine teachings.

I urge all fathers to have personal and intimate converse with their sons, and this can be done from the time they are tiny fellows. Impress lefty ideals of duty to God and country. Teach the values of the great cardinal virtues of courtesy, reliability and humility, without which life is a mockery.—Bureau of Education.

IN THE LOOKING-GLASS.

This world is like a looking glass,
And if you want to see
People frown at you as you pass,
And use you slightly;
If you want quarrels, snubs and foes,
Put on a fretful face;
Scowl at the world—you'll find it shows
The very same grimace.

The world is like a looking-glass,
And if you wish to be
On pleasant terms with all who pass,
Smile on them pleasantly;
Be helpful, generous and true,
And very soon you'll find
Each face reflecting back to you
An image bright and kind.
—Priscilla Leonard

Time occupied in worrying about opportunities, openings and starts is time wasted, because to every capable man a start and an opportunity are always furnished by the necessities of all other men.—Anon.

Whatever we do, whatever we give, whatever we are, there is more we ought to do, more we ought to give, and more we ought to be.—Canon Barnett.

Presbyterian Standard

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE.
REV. W. L. BOGGS, Circulation Manager.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.
ESTABLISHED JANUARY 1, 1858.

Entered at the Post Office at Charlotte, N. C., as second class matter.

CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE

The Devil and the Dance	2
The Temperance Movement in England.....	2
The Semi-Centennial of Mecklenburg Presbytery	3
CONTRIBUTED—
Dr. Green and Fundamental Principles—By Rev. W. L. Lingle, D.D.....	4-8
Instantaneous Delivery From Perverted ⁿ Appetite. By Rev. Edward J. Young.....	5
How to Treat Your Missionary—By Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D.D.....	5
“Too Mild and Harmless”—By Rev. Andrew W. Blackwood, D.D.....	5
Religious Work of the Army Y. M. C. A.—By John S. Chadwick	6
What the Church at Large Owes the Country and Village Church—By Wm. Laurie Hill.....	7
Reunion of Flora Macdonald Girls at Montreat. By D. P. M.	7
Some Problems in Arithmetic	7-9
September Twilight—By John Jordan Douglass	8
DEPARTMENTS—
News of the Week	10
Christian Endeavor—By Rev. S. H. Hay	11
Prayer Meeting—By Rev. C. D. Waller	11
Sunday School—By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.	12
Home Circle and Devotional	13

ANNOUNCEMENT.

 The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription is paid.

When change of address is desired, give both the old and the new address.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the last subscription paid.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

TREASURERS OF BENEVOLENT CAUSES.

Foreign Missions—Edwin F. Willis, 154 Fifth Ave., N., Nashville, Tenn.

Home Missions—A. N. Sharp, 1522 Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Christian Education and Ministerial Relief—John Stites, Fifth and Market Streets, Louisville, Ky.

Publication and Sabbath School Work—R. E. Magill, 6-8 N. Sixth Street, Richmond, Va.

Bible Cause—Wm. Foulke, Bible House, New York.

Collections for September are for Bible Cause, Treasurer, William Foulke, Bible House, New York.

Church News

COMMITTEE ON WORK IN FRANCE AND BELGIUM.

As one of the editors of the Standard is a member of this committee, it is proper that we call special attention to a report of this committee which we published in our last issue.

The Roman Catholic Hierarchy has charged the Protestant Churches of this country with taking advantage of the dire necessities of the French people to prosecute a proselytizing campaign, sending large sums of money to the Protestants of France avowedly to help them in reconstruction work, but with the further view of buying over Roman Catholics to the Protestant faith. The response which this report makes in behalf of American Protestantism is interesting and satisfactory.

MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY ADJOURNED MEETING.

Owing to the press of business, Mecklenburg Presbytery was unable to finish its work last week. It adjourned to meet at the First Church, Charlotte, October 2, 10 a. m. It has much important business requiring attention. We note the following among other items:

1. To adopt the report of the Nominating Committee, which includes among other matters the names of trustees for Queens College.
2. To adopt the Manual of Presbytery.
3. To devise means to meet the assessments due the Assembly, Synod and Presbytery.
4. Report on the Minutes of the Assembly.
5. Various others matters.

Rev. William Black as Moderator filled the chair most acceptably, and it was through his management that the left over docket is as short as it is.

PERSONAL.

The address of Rev. W. P. McCorkle is 220 East Morehead Street, Charlotte, N. C.

The address of Rev. J. G. Walker is changed from Greensboro, N. C., to Greenville, S. C., where he has entered upon his new field of labor with the Third Presbyterian Church of that city.

Rev. J. C. Brown, of Brim, N. C., has accepted the call recently extended him by the Mallard Creek congregation of Mecklenburg Presbytery to become their pastor. Mr. Brown will enter upon his work in this field October 1.

Rev. Isaac Yonan, formerly of Urumia, Persia, has removed with his family to Charlotte, N. C., where he will spend the winter. Mr. Yonan is a field representative of the Armenian and Syrian Relief Committee of New York City, and will visit many portions of the country to tell the awful story of the persecutions and afflictions that came upon the Armenians during the war.

The largest gift ever made to Arkansas College was provided in his will by the late Dr. L. E. Willis, an elder in the Church of Newport, Ark. After a useful and successful life, he makes provision for his widow and certain bequests to others and devises a gift of $5,000 for the Newport Church, and then bequeaths the residue of his estate to Arkansas College. It is not known accurately what this will be, but it will certainly not be less than $60,000. Such a benefaction will do untold good for all the future in the Christian education of the brightest and choicest of our young people, and the friends of the college are very thankful that God put it into the heart of this elder to make such a gift.

(Continued on Page 16)

MEN and SHEEP---Which are Worth the MOST?

"Of how much more value then is a man than a sheep."---Our Lord.

HERE IN NORTH CAROLINA WE COULD WELL ASK WHICH IS WORTH THE MOST---

? Cotton or Children : Spindles or Students ?
Looms or Lives : Manufactories or Men ?

What Are These SEVENTEEN HUNDRED STUDENTS in Our Presbyterian Schools in North Carolina Worth to the Church and the Nation? Is an Investment in them and For Them Worth While?

SESSION 1919-20

DAVIDSON	- - -	420---	"By far largest registration in history---necessary to refuse more."
PEACE	- - -	201---	"Could have filled another dormitory."
FLORA MACDONALD	265---		"Turned away 175---students all over town."
MITCHELL	- - -	176---	"Filled to capacity."
QUEENS	- - -	215---	"60 turned away for lack of room."
ALBEMARLE	- - -	97---	"Renting rooms from neighbors to keep from turning out deserving girls. Have refused twelve."
GROVE	- - -	100---	"All rooms overtaxed---largest number ever had."
WESTMINSTER	- - -	98---	"Our largest attendance."
GLADE VALLEY	- - -	60---	"Coming in every day. Looking for best we ever had."
ELISE	- - -	80---	"Best prospect in years. Can accommodate more."
Total	- - -	1712

Union Seminary opens October 1st. We have turned away 187 from our schools in North Carolina. Could have filled two more dormitories.

H A V E Y O U W A K E D U P

To Realize That a NEW DAY HAS DAWNED in Education ?
 The children of North Carolina are going to school in the future. Is the Presbyterian Church going to take advantage of this OPPORTUNITY to train them for Christ?

Shall We Continue to Put Looms Before Lives?

Which Will Be Worth the Most 100 Years From Now?

There is Now an Impelling Reason Why We Must Raise A MILLION DOLLARS For Christian Education AT ONCE

The Million Dollar Campaign Committee

A. M. SCALES, Chairman

R. G. VAUGHN, Treasurer

C. M. RICHARDS, Secretary

Greensboro, North Carolina

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Wedgefeld—This church is still without a pastor. Mr. J. O. Van Meter, a student of Columbia Seminary, preached for them last Sunday.

Columbia, Woodrow Memorial—Dr. Henry Alexander White preached to the congregation of Woodrow Memorial last Sunday. The pastor, Dr. Thornton Whaling, was absent, preaching in Jacksonville, Fla.

Christian Endeavor Convention—On the 12th of September, the first convention of the Greenville District Christian Endeavor Union was held in the Second Presbyterian Church in Greenville, S. C., and after a banquet given by the Women's Auxiliary of the church, a constitution was adopted and officers elected for the coming year. The district embraces Greenville, Anderson, Pickens and Oconee counties. Sixty-five young people were present. A good program was prepared and was well rendered. Rev. G. A. Nickles, assistant pastor of the First Church; Rev. J. G. Walker, pastor-elect of the Third Church, and Rev. J. C. Rowan, pastor of the Fourth Church, were present and assisted in the organization. The Christian Endeavor Societies of the Second Church were the hosts. The convention is inter-denominational and has planned aggressive work for the winter.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Beneficent Committee of Fayetteville Presbytery, of which Rev. W. E. Hill, D. D., is chairman, met in Fayetteville last Friday, assumed the $120,000 allotted the Presbytery and gave 60 per cent of it to Assembly's objects and 40 per cent to local causes, apportioning to its churches according to ability.

Wildwood—The regular series of meetings was held here from August 28 to September 3. Rev. W. M. Baker assisted the pastor. He preached simple gospel sermons with power and effectiveness. Not only was the church built up numerically but spiritually. There was a good attendance at all the services.
J. R. P.

Pollockville—Rev. W. M. Baker assisted the pastor in a series of meetings, closing September 14. Mr. Baker preached with force the old gospel message. All who heard him spoke highly of the simple way he presented the message. He has endeared himself to all the people here.
J. R. P.

Albemarle Presbytery will meet Tuesday, September 30, at Bethlehem Church, near Rocky Mount. Presbyters will come to Rocky Mount and by auto be transferred to their places of entertainment. All who expect to attend as delegates will please send their names to the undersigned.
H. N. McDiarmid, Rocky Mount, N. C.

The Harnett-Johnston Field—Rev. J. Floyd Menius has been secured to take part of the Harnett-Johnston field, which A. T. Lassiter, evangelist, has at present. Mr. Menius will take charge October 1, 1919. A house has been secured at Buies Creek and he expects to move in the first day of October. The people are making preparations and looking forward to his arrival.

Tabernacle at Byrd Schoolhouse—Rev. C. E. Clarke assisted the evangelist in a series of meetings at this mission point August 26-September 3. The preaching was of a high order—plain, simple and very forceful. Good attendance right from the start and much interest shown. There were eleven professions, five of which united with the church. Others to come in later. This little band, ten in all, are asking the Presbytery that they be organized into a church.
A. T. Lassiter.

Rockingham—The congregation of the Rockingham Church is now rejoicing in that it has been freed from the fetters of an unfinished building and a building debt. The church building was completed some time ago, but the funds necessary for the work had to be borrowed. On Friday night, September 12, the ladies of the church served an elegant supper to the men of the church. After the supper the men were asked to pledge enough money, payable by the end of the church year, to wipe out completely all indebtedness on the building. The necessary amount—in the neighborhood of $1,000—was soon pledged. It was then decided to invite the Presbytery of Mecklenburg to hold its spring meeting here, and dedicate the building at that time. Since then the pastor attended the fall meeting of Presbytery and extended the invitation, which was unanimously accepted.

"The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad."
Z. V. Roberson.

Unity Church—This old church has recently had the greatest experience in its long history. On September 7, Rev. William Black, Synodical evangelist, began a meeting with us that lasted through September 14. In these services we had a real season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. There were sixty-five conversions, four accessions on restatement, reconsecration by the church members of the entire community, pledges for ten new family altars, reconciliation and burial of old grudges, decision to build a new house of worship, an increase of the pastor's salary of nearly fifty per cent, and a gift to Synod's Home Mission work of over one hundred and fifty-seven dollars. The religious life of the whole community has felt the quickening impulse brought by this man of God.

Then on Tuesday, September 16, Concord Presbytery met with us in stated fall meeting, and the ministers and elders thus visiting in our midst continued the good work begun by Brother Black.

Elmwood—A splendid meeting was concluded in the Elmwood Presbyterian Church, September 14. Rev. J. C. Story, of Marion, was with us from the 8th through the 14th and preached the blessed gospel with great plainness and power twice each day. His earnest appeals to the Christians at the first had good effect, as was evidenced by the personal work done by the members during the meeting. While it may not be possible to fabulate on paper all the good accomplished, we are grateful to report additions as follows: On profession of faith and by baptism, three; on profession of faith, five; by statement, four; by letter, four.

The entire community received a great spiritual uplift from the meeting. Brother Story seemed to have given the best in his barrel and his good sermons were gladly received. Other good fruits will be realized for the promise is true (Is. 55:11). The singing was good, even though no experienced song leader was present. Great credit is due the small band of members for their self-denying efforts in painting their church inside, putting in neat, comfortable hand-made pews and otherwise beautifying the Lord's house. These improvements were made possible through the kind financial aid of some nearby churches. "They had a mind to work." The Elmwood Church will be represented at Union Seminary and the Assembly Training School in Mr. John Fleming and his sister, Miss Lillie, who will prepare herself for missionary service.
J. T. Hall.

Workers Wanted for Mission Fields in Concord Presbytery—The superintendent of Home Missions in Concord Presbytery desires to secure suitable persons for the following described fields, viz:

1. Burkemont Mission, in Burke County, about ten miles from Morganton, the county seat. This is an entirely new work designed to supply, through our church, religious and educational opportunities for the people of a large and destitute mountain section in that county. A minister with a small family (without children preferable), who can do evangelistic work, conduct Sunday school work and teach a day school. Salary $1,200 and home. If the day school requires it, an additional teacher will be supplied.

2. Two men, with evangelistic qualifications, to be located as county evangelists in two counties in which our church is weak, to preach and organize Sunday schools and churches in such places as may be considered suitable prospects for successful work. Salary for each, $1,200 and house rent.

Any brethren desiring to consider such work will write to Rev. J. M. Clark, Superintendent and Evangelist, Statesville, N. C.

Concord—Cannonville Presbyterian Church, Rev. W. C. Wauchope, pastor. Union revival services conducted by Dr. O. G. Jones were held under a tent nearly midway between the two churches, Bayless Memorial and Cannonville, uniting in the services, beginning Sabbath morning, August 31, and closing Wednesday night, September 10. The weather was ideal, the attendance very large and great interest was manifested. Besides preaching two sermons a day, Dr. Jones sang solos in a rich baritone voice with much expression. He also organized and led a "junior choir" of fifty voices, their chorus singing being a delightful feature of the services. Between fifty and sixty persons professed faith in Christ; a large number of Christians rededicated their lives to God's service, and much good was done through the preaching of the Word, and the personal work of God's servants in this corner of His vineyard. On the last night of the services, Rev. R. O. Lucke, pastor of the Bayless Memorial Church, expressed the gratitude and appreciation of the pastors whose churches united in the joint meeting, for the hearty support of their own congregations and the kind co-operation of the ministerial brethren of other denominations who helped by their presence and efforts to make the meeting a success. Mr. Lucke also expressed the sincere thanks of both churches to the First Church of Gastonia, who so very kindly loaned the tent for the revival services. Dr. Jones made many warm friends during his stay in Concord, who will follow him with their earnest prayers for God's richest blessing on him and his work.

A large offering was taken for the support of Synodical Home Missions.

B. B.

St. Paul, Charlotte—It has been quite a while since you heard from us. We have been too busy doing things to talk about it, but if you will lend us your ears for a little while, we will endeavor to tell you some things we have done in the last few months. And, that you may be able to appreciate this report all the more, it should be remembered that this is one of the mission churches, whose membership consists of laboring people—there are no rich among us. But there are some consecrated men and women among us, as you will see. Perhaps the thing of most importance to this people just now is the prospect of a new church building. The first step towards a new building was taken some years ago, when the congregation purchased a beautiful lot in a more desirable locality. The second step in this direction was taken a few weeks ago when the old property was sold. The new lot is paid for and the money for the old property ($3,000) is in the bank. These good people are also showing a fine spirit of liberality. Only a short time ago, at the morning service, the congregation voted to pay off a $200 note. The entire amount was raised in less than fifteen minutes. Last week another note of $135 was lifted without a special call for the money. In the absence of the pastor, one of our missionaries from Korea filled the pulpit. The treasurer of the church paid him ten dollars for the service, the next day one of our good elders gave him a personal check for fifty dollars. This is the way he expresses his appreciation for the missionary work. When the Church and Manse Erection League cause was presented, thirty-nine members were secured, who subscribed sixty-five dollars per call. So far as we know no other church in the Presbytery has as many members, or as large a subscription to this worthy cause. Just before the pastor left on his vacation in August, ten were received into the church on profession of their faith in Christ. The officers, feeling that the congregation was doing its best, and realizing the pastor's needs, agreed among themselves to give him one hundred dollars more per year. And they were not content to vote him a month's vacation, for when they learned that he desired to attend the International C. E. Convention, held in Buffalo, they gave him money to pay his way. And now what shall we say? Mere words cannot express our gratitude to them. We can only ask Him, who is rich in all good things, who has seen it all, that He will richly reward them.

C. G. L.

Concord Presbytery met in regular fall session in Unity Church, Woodleaf, N. C., September 16, 1919. Present 28 ministers and 33 ruling elders.

Organization: Rev. R. W. Culbertson, moderator, and Rev. T. H. Spence and Elder W. L. Morris, temporary clerks.

Received: Rev. T. F. Haney from the Presbytery of Pee Dee. Arrangements were made for his installation as pastor of the Second Church, Mooresville.

Transferred: Rev. H. F. Beaty, who has been pastor of the McKinnon Church, was transferred to the Presbytery of Wilmington.

Candidates: Mr. F. E. Manning, a member of the Davidson Church, was received under the care of Concord Presbytery; two others were examined and their examinations certified to their respective Presbyteries.

Increased salaries: The following churches have increased their pastor's salaries: Bayless Memorial from $400 to $800; Unity from $550 to $800; Cooleemee from $200 to $300; Kannapolis from $1,200 to $1,500; Centre from $400 to $600; Statesville First from $2,200 to $2,500.

The name of Cannonville Church was changed to Concord Second, Patterson Mill to Patterson.

Candidate T. M. Stevenson, after a very creditable examination, was licensed to preach the gospel as a probationer.

There were interesting reports on Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Christian Education, Ophans' Home, Bible Cause and Evangelism, which were emphasized in brief addresses by various members of the Presbytery.

Amendments sent down by the Assembly:

1. To complete the enactment touching candidate for the ministry. Approved.

2. "Touching the licensure and ordination of ministers:" (a) Par. 118, declined; (b) Par. 129-I, approved.

3. "Concerning the election of elders and deacons for a limited term." Declined by a large majority.

4. "Touching basis of representation in the Assembly." Approved.

A strong paper with reference to the evils of the dance was adopted by a unanimous rising vote, which we hope to give to the church papers at an early date.

An adjourned meeting will be held in the First Church, Statesville, at 11 a. m., September 29, 1919.

E. D. Brown, S. C.

ALABAMA.

Coalfire—For the first time in the history of Pickens county a special train was run last Sunday for a regular preaching service. The place was Coalfire, and the occasion was the monthly afternoon service conducted here by Rev. C. H. Nabers, pastor of the Carrollton Presbyterian church. Rev. Mr. Nabers preaches here on every first Sunday afternoon; and last Sunday Mr. Curtis ran a special train that the men away up in the woods at the logging camps might attend the service. So well did the people respond that the school house was crowded to capacity, and Mr. Curtis, manager of the Deal-Curtis Lumber Company, announced that this train would be run for each service conducted by Rev. Mr. Nabers.—From Pickens County Herald.

Bethesda—This old church has just closed one of the most helpful and best attended meetings in its entire history. The preaching was done by Rev. C. H. Nabers, of Carrollton. There were about 70 reconsecrations, five members received upon profession of faith, and a number of baptisms. With a loyal, faithful and united congregation, the church is making rapid strides forward. The Sunday school, under the superintendency of Mr. E. O. Graham, is doing especially effective work in the community.

GEORGIA.

Atlanta Presbytery, Austell—We have closed an interesting meeting at Austell. Rev. W. E. Dozier, of Lagrange, preached the gospel fearlessly and faithfully twice every day. Elder Ulla Wilson, of the Villa Rica Church, helped us in the services. Rev. J. Edwin Hemphill, of the Pryor Street Church, Atlanta, and his choir came and conducted our prayer and song service one evening, which was appreciated by our congregation. The visible results of the meeting were eight additions to our church by letter and six additions upon profession of faith. Four adults and seven infants were baptized. Approximately fifty reconsecrated themselves to God and his most reasonable service.

L. D. K.

Atlanta, North Avenue Church—Dr. Richard Orme Flinn, the beloved pastor of this church, has returned after an absence of six months overseas work with the Y. M. C. A. He has received a most loyal and hearty welcome from his people. Most gratifying to them are the reports that come to Dr. Flinn's effective work with the men, and the results that followed his delivery of the message of the love of Jesus Christ. Since his return he has taken up the work with the same vigor and earnestness that characterizes his work.

On last Tuesday evening the Woman's Society gave a reception in honor of Dr. and Mrs. Flinn at the home of Mrs. J. M. High on Peachtree street. A large number of the congregation called during the evening to greet Dr. Flinn.

Dr. Wm. H. Shepperd, a colored worker, formerly missionary to Africa and now connected with the colored work in Louisville, Ky., lectured before a large audience on last Sunday evening regarding his work in Africa.

The first fall meeting of the various committees of the Woman's Society, which is a general meeting, was held at the church-house Monday afternoon. There was an unusually good attendance. Dr. Flinn spoke about his experiences with the Y. M. C. A. and the work ahead of the society for the coming year.

The North Ave. Presbyterian Church day school opened September 11 with an enrollment for the first day of 227. This is the largest in the history of the school. Last year the opening day showed 194 with the number running before the year ended to 260. This year, it seems, will tax the capacity of the school. A waiting list is already existing in some of the grades.

G. Titman,

Church Secretary.

KENTUCKY.

The Presbytery of Transylvania met at Paint Lick Church, Ky., September 2, and was opened with a sermon by the retiring moderator, Rev. C. A. Ray.

Moderator—Ruling Elder Chas. G. Crooks, LL.D., was elected moderator.

Memorials of Rev. W. M. Eldridge, late pastor of the Paint Lick Church, and of Rev. Clyde Sheltman, both of whom lost their lives in an automobile accident in May last, were read by Rev. Dr. Telford.

Licentiate A. E. Dallas was dismissed to the care of the Presbytery of Indiana, U. S. A.

Order was taken for the installation of Rev. J. J. Rice as pastor of the Harrodsburg United Church.

The report of the committee on the Minutes of the General Assembly was received and its consideration postponed until the spring meeting of Presbytery.

Special Sermon—By appointment of Presbytery, a sermon was preached by Rev. J. J. Rice on "Family Religion," which was followed by an open conference on Sabbath Observance and Family Worship.

Rev. P. L. Bruce was appointed to preach at the spring meeting of Presbytery on a subject to be chosen by himself.

Foreign Missions—The following recommendations of the Foreign Missions Committee were adopted:

1. That classes be formed in the churches for the study of the book by Dr. Woodbridge, "Fifty Years in China;" and that men's classes be formed to study "Money, the Acid Test."

2. That our Sabbath schools be asked to co-operate in the Korean campaign this year.

3. That our churches be urged to special prayer for the work of Foreign Missions in view of its many difficulties at this time, and that through sacrifice they endeavor to reach the full amount asked by the Progressive Campaign Managers.

Rev. J. J. Rice was made chairman of the Stewardship Campaign Committee for the year.

The committee of elders appointed to visit the churches with a view to increasing the salaries of pastors was continued.

The spring meeting of Presbytery will be held in Springfield on the Second Tuesday of April, 1920.

E. M. Green, S. C.

TENNESSEE.

Purdy School—Dr. Curry, Dr. Crowe, Rev. Geo. L. Kerns, Rev. Chas. N. Ralston and others drove from Saltillo Presbytery, 26 miles across Hardin and McNairy counties, to inspect the Purdy School, recently taken over by Memphis Presbytery. Addresses were made by these brethren and a Memphis elder, Mr. Russell G. Smith, of Westminster Church.

Prizes for memory work in the hymns, Bible and Catechisms were offered by Mr. Sommerville, of Memphis, also encouragement in memorizing patriotic songs and the Declaration of Independence.

Eight thousand dollars are to be raised for dormitories; $4,000 in money and material are available when Presbytery raises the other $4,000. This is to be done at once.

About $750 have already been expended for repairs to the original brick college building erected years ago by the Northern Methodists. Mrs. Ruleman has bought this property and donated it to Memphis Presbytery.

VIRGINIA.

Charlottesville—Paul G. McIntyre, of New York and Virginia, who has made his native city many gifts—a public library, monuments of Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson, Confederate chieftains, and of Rogers and Clark, explorers—has presented to the Home Mission Committee of West Hanover Presbytery a mission home, which is to be occupied by the superintendent of Home Missions. A part of the home is to be reserved for the use of mountain missionaries while on a vacation any time during the year. The home is located on High street in Charlottesville.—Christian Observer.

Lexington—Sunday morning, September 14, the session received one man on profession of faith and two others by letter. Since July nine have been added to this church on examination and seven by letters of dismissal from other churches.

The church building has been painted and renovated during the summer and the Sunday school building is now getting its face washed.

At the regular monthly meeting, held Tuesday night, September 16, Elder Edgar F. Shannon resigned as superintendent of the Sunday school, in order to take up Bible class work among the students of Washington and Lee University. Elder Frank Moore was elected superintendent, with Elder Wm. M. McElwee as his assistant.

A. H.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. Jno. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

Attention, Auxiliaries of Fayetteville Presbyterian—Now is the time to organize your Home Mission study class. Overcome any difficulty in order to do this. It is most important to know our Home Mission work. The text books offered are: First, Christianizing Christendom, Dr. Morris' latest book, paper, 40 cents; Suggestions for Leaders, five cents. Second, Black and White, by Mrs. L. H. Hammond, paper 50 cents, especially interesting to those who are concerned with our negro problem of today. The Junior Home Mission Text Book is the call to the colors by M. Van Matter, paper 35 cents.

All books and suggestions may be ordered from the Committee of Publication, Box 1176, Richmond, Va., or from the Home Mission Committee in Atlanta.

Mrs. J. McR. Bracy,
Sec. A. H. M.

A MISSIONARY STORY FROM THE "ASHEVILLE CITIZEN."

A blonde of blondes, fair-haired, blue eyed, little Martha Reid Bedinger, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. R. D. Bedinger, is strikingly Caucasian, yet she was born in the heart of Equatorial Africa, where white people are rare, and the two and a half years of her life have been spent among the Congo blacks whose language she absorbed from babyhood so that she speaks it far more readily than English. It is curious to hear this pretty little daughter of the white race prattling in the many-voweled, soft-intoned patois of extreme negroids.

Alert and quick to learn, Miss Martha is adapting herself to the local language, but she is slightly disturbed by the difference between French, which she encountered while in Paris en route here, and English. She understands there is a difference between Baluba and English because white people speak one and a dark-skinned people the other, but why did the white people in Paris not speak English also?

It was a remote place the little girl was born, remote from everywhere it must seem to one living at the village of Lusambo in the Congo Belgian district of Africa. Far up on the headwaters of the great Congo in darkest Africa, is this village where Mr. and Mrs. Bedinger went as missionaries of the Southern Presbyterian Church, more than four years ago. This was soon after the marriage of Miss Julia Smith to Mr. Bedinger. It was here that Martha was born, and here she grew accustomed to seeing few white persons but many blacks and hearing their language instead of the speech of her parents who cultivated the Baluba in order to better carry on their missionary work among the natives.

Five months ago came the change to new conditions. Mr. and Mrs. Bedinger started for this country and with many changes of ships finally reached Bordeaux, then Paris and then Brussels where Mr. Bedinger had a mission to the government. It was a new world which the little girl saw, a world of many white people and few black people, something which seemed very perplexing. And, instead of the huts and cattle drawn teams of Lusambo she saw the great city of Paris with its palaces and electric trains and automobiles, brilliant with light at night instead of dark as at her native village.

The little girl observed the change thoughtfully and remarked with an air of conviction, "Mamma, this is a large musoka (village)." She promptly set out to learn the speech of the large musoka and collected quite a few words of French which she sprinkles with her English and Baluba in very entertaining fashion.

Then a journey was made to London where another curious condition was encountered. The people did not speak French nor yet Baluba, and the English they spoke was intoned somewhat differently from that of her parents. A very perplexing world surely.

Then came another trip by sea. The only ship Mr. and Mrs. Bedinger could get without waiting untold months was one sailing from London to Jamaica, stopping for coal at Norfolk where Mr. and Mrs. Bedinger hoped to disembark. But the captain said this was against the traffic rules of Great Britain and the United States and they must go on to Jamaica and take a ship from there back to this country, that is, they were not allowed to walk twenty feet of gang-plank and be on their native soil but must go on nearly fifteen hundred miles and then come back and walk down another gang-plank.

Mr. Bedinger sent a wireless to Dr. Bernard R. Smith, at Asheville, and kindly influences set at work arranged that no objection would be made in this country to their landing, immigration rules being waived. But the captain held to red-tape methods, he was very kind, but orders were orders, and the three passengers must stay on the ship. The captain of the port of Norfolk made a swift decision which removed all responsibility from the captain. He said in effect, all right, they will stay on the ship but so long as they stay on the ship it stays here, declining to give clearance papers so long as they remained on board. The stay on the ship was very brief after that.

The little girl, who with her parents, is at the home of Dr. and Mrs. R. P. Smith, finds some unsolved problems here. There is English and Baluba and French, and when is it proper to use each? Very brightly she reached a sure method, use all three! When she wished some butter on her bread she held out a slice. Mantaka is Baluba for butter, and the English is butter, so she asks for "butter mantaka."

And the little girl is perplexed by the difference between the dark skinned people here and those "at home." There the Baluba speaking persons wear abbreviated bathing suits on all occasions while here they wear plenty of clothes, and when Martha saw a dark skinned woman here she took hold of the latter's clothes and looked inquiringly at her mother. She does not understand about cold, Baluba is six degrees south of the equator, but its altitude is about 2,500 feet so that while the days are hot the nights are cool, but there is never any frost there. As Mr. and Mrs. Bedinger will be here until snow flies, then the little girl has still another perplexity to face.

This clipping from "The Asheville Citizen" will be eagerly read and enjoyed by those of our readers who have seen the article, "The Inspiration of Montreat," by Mrs. T. S. Bryan, in the "Standard" of September 10.

Surely her plea for better homes for our missionaries in Africa has so touched many a woman's heart that those six dwellings that are needed now will soon be built.

Little Martha Reid Bedinger belongs in a peculiar sense to North Carolina, as it is among our own splendid mountain folk that her grandfather, Dr. R. P. Smith, has done such a wonderfully successful work.

When we think of this little one, and of the little Kings and Clevelands and Steggalls that many of us met at Montreat, it is not possible that we, the women of the Southern Presbyterian Church, are going to allow their parents either to leave these children in America, or to take them back to the Congo, to live, did we say? No, more probably to die, in mud huts that cannot be screened from poisonous insects?

It is not only for these babies that sanitary homes are a necessity, but for the health and efficiency of our missionaries as well.

God says, "Go to sin sick Africa," and His faithful servants are heeding His call. What about those of us who stay? Is there nothing that we can do?

Character requires shaping and refining as well as strengthening; and this is one of the uses to which affliction is put.

The time to begin is now—today.

Life may be a grind, but grinding sharpens things.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriages.

Bryant-Cameron—At the residence of the bride's parents, Greenville, S. C., September 10, 1919, by Rev. E. P. Davis, Mr. James Bryant, of Florence, S. C., and Miss Lillian Cameron.

Bonesteel-Kelly—At the residence of the bride's parents, in Greenville, S. C., September 7, 1919, by Rev. E. P. Davis, Mr. C. E. Bonesteel, of Franklin, N. C., and Miss May Kelly.

Bowles-Hunter—In Richmond, Va., August 2, 1919, by Dr. F. T. McFaden, Shields K. Bowles, of Goochland County, Va., and Mabel Hunter, of Richmond, Va.

Northern-Riggs—In Richmond, Va., August 15, 1919, by Dr. F. T. Mc-

Faden, Blair Harrison Northern, of Richmond, Va., and Frances Bigstaff Riggs, of Richmond, Va.

Gentry-Eanes—In Richmond, Va., September 13, 1919, by Dr. F. T. McFaden, Walter C. Gentry and Inez Eanes, both of Richmond, Va.

Driskill-Eckels—In Richmond, Va., September 15, 1919, by Dr. F. T. McFaden, William L. Driskill and Virginia Eckels, both of Richmond, Va.

Davis-Warren—In Richmond, Va., July 31, 1919, by Dr. F. T. McFaden, Edward W. Davis, of Richmond, Va., and Ollie E. Warren, of Knoxville, Tenn.

Farland-Buchanan—In Richmond, Va., September 16, 1919, by Dr. F. T. McFaden, William Nicholas Farland, Jr., and Flossie May Buchanan, both of Richmond, Va.

Callahan-Fullerton—In Richmond, Va., September 16, 1919, by Dr. F. T. McFaden, Edwin F. Callahan, of Red Springs, N. C., and Mary E. Fullerton, of Orange, Va.

Blanton-Wicker—In the First Presbyterian Church, Lockport, N. Y., by Dr. D. Hobson Lewis, September 2, 1919, Dr. H. Wallace Blanton, of Richmond, Va., and Miss Janet Wicker, of Lockport, N. Y.

Holland-Smith—At the First Presbyterian Church, Murfreesboro, Tenn., September 10, by Rev. J. Addison Smith, D.D., Rev. Charles D. Holland, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Culpeper, Va., and Miss Rhoda Early Smith, the daughter of the officiating minister.

Children's Department

A LOVELY STORY.

Dear Standard:

This is my first letter to the Standard, so please print it. I am seven years old. I cannot read yet but Mama has just finished reading "Little Lord Fauntleroy" to me. I sure did enjoy it. I have some kittens but haven't named them yet. I have a dear little baby brother one year old. His name is David Fairley. I go to Sunday school every Sunday at Galatia.

Best wishes for the Standard.

Your friend,

Neill Alexander Lindsay, Jr.
Hope Mills, N. C., R. F. D. No. 1.

BROTHER HOME SAFE.

Dear Standard:

I am staying at my uncle and aunt's in the country. Our school was out May 25, 1919. My mother died January 15, 1919. I am going to the Presbyterian Church at Steele Creek now. My teacher is Mrs. Arthur Byrum. I like her very much. My brother has been to France, and I am glad he went and came back safe. He landed February 28, 1919. And he came home in March. Please don't let this letter get to the waste basket, because I want to surprise my aunt.

Your little friend,

Gertrude Elizabeth Merritt.

A LITTLE FARMER.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy five years old and live on a farm. I have ten red pigs and one cow. We all love to go to Sunday school at Galatia. I go every Sunday. My teacher is Miss Katie Blue. I love her very much. We have a beautiful new manse. Our pastor, Mr. R. A. McLeod, has his study there.

I hope this letter won't be sent to the waste basket, as I want to surprise Papa.

Your little friend,

John Harmon Lindsay.

Hope Mills, N. C., R. F. D. No. 1.

A NICE CLASS.

Dear Standard:

I am twelve years of age and I am in the seventh grade at school. Our school started the 8th of September.

I go to Sunday school every Sunday. We have a class of eleven girls and our teacher. We have a mighty sweet teacher. Her name is Mrs. Thompson. We try to have a meeting of the class each month. Our class has recited the child's catechism and five have recited the shorter catechism. We hope soon that all of us will recite the shorter catechism.

I will close. I hope this will escape the waste basket.

Your unknown friend,

Elizabeth Grant.

Mebane, N. C.

Distracted Brother (left in charge of the baby): "Aw! They ought to send a book of instructions with these things."—Life.

God is the only refuge, whether we live or die, and the post of duty is the safest place of all.—Isaac Ogden Rankin.

THE BRIDE DOLL.

"If I could only see the bride doll once," said Eleanor, "I should be willing never to own another doll so long as I live!"

It really seemed to Eleanor that everyday dolls did not count for much in a family that had once had the honor of owning, even for a short time, a French doll with a trousseau. The story of the bride doll was grandmother's story, just as the doll was to have been grandmother's doll if things had turned out right; she knew, too, that but for an accident the wonderful doll would have been hers now.

Nearly half a century before, Eleanor's grandmother, then a ten-year-old girl named Nelly Cranston, began to watch the post eagerly for a package; her aunt in Paris had written that an interesting present would shortly start on its long journey to Nelly—a doll in bridal clothes, with a trousseau packed in a trunk.

But weeks passed, and every morning the postman shook his head at a disappointed little girl. Instead of a neat package with a foreign stamp he brought newspapers that told of strange events across the sea. France and Germany were at war, the papers said, and everything in that part of the world was greatly upset. Nelly began to despair of ever seeing her present. Later on her aunt wrote briefly that she had left Paris; the city was in a state of siege. She said nothing whatever about the doll or the trousseau trunk.

About that time Nelly's father, who was a clergyman, decided to go to China as a missionary and take his family with him. Nelly did not want to go. "If I do, I shall never, never see my doll," she said.

But her father promised that they would leave her address with the man who was going to buy the house.

"Then if the package comes," he said, "it will be forwarded to you, and in time will reach you."

But nothing further was heard of the bride doll. Soon after the Cranstons reached China, the siege of Paris came to an end—the Germans had conquered France and taken from it the two provinces, Alsace and Lorraine. Aunt Miriam wrote that she had returned to the sad city, but that all was in confusion and she could find no trace of the doll. When the doll was bought, the letter said, she had herself seen it wrapped and addressed to Nelly, but further than that she knew nothing. So Nelly gave up hope, although she could not forget.

Years went by, and the little girl grew to womanhood and married before she returned to the United States. She told her children the story of the lost doll, and they in turn told it to their children. Eleanor, who was the eldest granddaughter, never tired of hearing it, for she knew that the doll would have been hers.

"Maybe I shall have her some day, after all," she would often say.

The spring when Eleanor was ten years old, her grandmother suddenly made up her mind to visit her old home, which all the long years on the other side of the world had not made her forget. "I'm bound to go back," she said.

"Take me with you," Eleanor begged.

So one bright April day the woman who used to be Nelly Cranston and her granddaughter pushed open the broken gate and walked slowly up to the door of the old Cranston home. Neighbors had told them that the house had been vacant and closed for many years, but grandmother had found a key somewhere.

Eleanor's blue eyes grew big as she stepped across the threshold; so this was the place where a little girl used to listen for the postman's step fifty years ago! It seemed very strange.

They went into the silent, musty parlor and grandmother stood by the window looking down into the little garden, while Eleanor eagerly explored the room.

Over in one corner was a tall, dusty chest of drawers as high as her head. A strip of paper was pasted across the front of the highest drawer, and Eleanor had to stand tiptoe to see the writing on it. In the dim light she could scarcely read the scribbled sentence, but presently she made it out:

"Belonging to Nelly Cranston," were the words.

Before she thought, Eleanor had jerked the drawer wide open. Tiptoeing higher than ever, she peeped over the edge, and in spite of the dim light she saw plainly what the drawer held. "O grandmother!" she cried, her heart jumping into her throat. "Do come here quick! It's the bride doll—the bride doll at last!"

Grandmother came hurrying across the room and could hardly believe her eyes. They lifted the doll out very carefully, with all her tiny belongings. She was quite unharmed, lovely and proud in a blue satin "going-away" gown and a soft gray shawl instead of a cloak. The little trunk was full of small belongings—shoes, hat boxes, a fringed parasol and other pretty things. Eleanor touched them with reverent fingers.

Grandmother was busy reading a note that she had found tied to the trunk. The note explained that the package containing the doll had arrived in a damaged condition, and that the first family that bought the house had moved away without leaving Nelly's foreign address; so the doll could not be forwarded. The message bore a date of many, many years back.

Evidently the doll had not been shipped from Paris until long after the war; it was plain, too, that for many years more she had lain patiently in the drawer, shut away from the world. Grandmother folded up the musty little letter and polished her spectacles.

"Well, well!" she said, with a misty smile. "Here's Nelly Cranston an elderly lady with a granddaughter, and Paris is peaceful after another war, and France will have Alsace and Lorraine once more. How things do change!"

"But the bride doll has not changed," said Eleanor.

They stood looking down at the little figure in silence.

She stood very straight and solemn on the table, held up by her funny big bustle and her huge stiff skirts. And as they looked, Eleanor was almost sure that she saw the glimmer of a faint, far-away smile on the bride doll's rosy face.—Effie Searchrest, in Youth's Companion.

THE GRASSHOPPER'S CROQUET.

Four little grasshoppers, one fine day,
Hopped on the lawn to play croquet.

"We can't use mallets and balls," one said,

"But we'll play a game of our own instead;

We'll hop through the wickets ourselves and see

Whether I beat you or you beat me."

So hippety-hop they went around

Through all the wickets upon the ground,

Till the one who was leading made a jump

And hit the home stake—bumpety bump!

Then out came Johnny and Bess to play,

And four little grasshoppers hopped away.

—Ex.

QUESTION AND ANSWER.

Esther and Kitty were dressing their dolls in one corner of the room.

"She has red hair," Kitty was saying, as she tied her doll's sash, "and a temper to match."

"Who has?" asked grandmother, putting down the newspaper and looking at the little girl over her spectacles.

The answer came rather slowly: "Lucy French; you don't know her, grandmother."

"Hasn't she anything but red hair and a temper?" said grandmother, putting up the paper again.

Grandmother had such a queer way of asking a question and then not waiting for anybody to answer it.

The next day was Sunday. Esther and Kitty and Lucy were in the same Bible school class together. This afternoon the superintendent put a new scholar in with them.

"We are so many," thought Kitty. "She makes us sit so crowded. I wish she hadn't come."

Kitty was by no means the only one that wished it. After Bible school all the other girls hurried on in a friendly bunch, leaving the new scholar behind—all but Lucy. She waited, and those in front heard her say politely:

"Don't you think our teacher is lovely?"

"Can't you just see grandmother's eyes twinkle at us?" whispered Esther to Kitty. "She would say that Lucy has been the most real lady in the class."

"The only real one, I guess," said Esther, meekly. "The way we behave doesn't look much like studying things out of the Bible. Does it, Kitty?"

On Tuesday, at school, Miss Young began to give out pieces of poetry to be learned for Exhibition Day. One of these was shorter than the others, and nobody thought that it was pretty.

"I am sorry," said Miss Young, "that you don't like it. Who will be unselfish and offer to take it?"

There was a little silence, and then Lucy French said, "I'll take it."

Kitty was at one end of the bench and Esther was in the middle. They leaned forward and looked at each other, and their eyes twinkled.

After school Miss Young said, "Lucy, will you put a letter in the postoffice for me before a quarter of an hour has passed?"

"Yes'm," said Lucy, smiling. She liked to do errands for Miss Young.

Miss Young smiled back at her. "Lucy never forgets to keep her promises," she said.

"Esther," said Kitty, "by Saurday we will have a whole lot of things to tell grandmother."

They did. And grandmother was very much pleased to hear them. She laid one soft, wrinkled hand on each brown head and said, "My little granddaughters must try to remember that God loves to see what is good in all of us, and loves us to see the good in one another."—Susan Berry.

Story and Incident

A Song in France.

ZENITH McQUEEN stood looking down into the dismal depths of the river that flowed beneath the window, then away into the gathering darkness.

"Twenty-three," she murmured, half unconsciously.

"Beg pardon?" said the young officer who was sitting in the rattan chair near her.

"O!" she smiled. "I was just thinking of the weather. It has rained twenty-three days, and the sun hasn't shone once. I wonder if it's always that way in France?"

"I guess the winters are all about like that," smiled the officer. "But don't forget we're to have the party tonight. That will be great! And it's so bright in here with all the windows camouflaged, it quite keeps out the thought of night and rain. Things get real cheerful. You won't miss it will you? O, by jove! Of course you won't, for it's being given in your honor."

Zenith blushed a bit and smiled her thanks. Then she walked away to another part of the room, and the officer turned again to his magazine.

Once she had seated herself and tried to forget the rain, the passing months came trooping back to depress her. It has been a hard day. Hospitals were always hardest of all for her. She had sung in the hospital in the forenoon, and had shaken hands with every soldier afterward and added a cheerful word for good measure; then she had been rushed off to the "woods camp" to sing for the boys at mess hour. The roads were half muddy and half frozen. The crazy old car, which had once been run into a tree and had its steering gear bent, had shot from one side of the road to the other, and had threatened to turn driver and passengers into the ditch. The drizzle of rain had reached the stanch hearts of the soldiers, and they had not responded to the appeal of her songs, as soldiers had been wont to do. And now her mind went back to the months of dreary traveling from post to post. Sleeping on hard beds, traveling in unheated, unlighted cars, often eating what poor hotels and cafes had to offer, she had lived "a hard life." She had come to France to do her bit for the soldiers, but she felt that her courage was slipping from her; that soon she would be obliged to ask the Association to send her back to America. The soldiers had called her the "American nightingale in France," but what use is the nightingale if the song is gone from the heart?

And then came to her for the thousandth time the thought of that bitterest disappointment of all: Her brother, Tom, her only brother, must be over here somewhere, and she had so hoped to find him. He had run away four years before; lured away by the call of the wild. He was sixteen then, now he was twenty. He had never written home; perhaps he was ashamed. Who could tell?

And where else would he be but in France? Brave, fearless, headstrong, loyal Tom would be nowhere, if not in the army at a time like this. Her father was dead now, and her mother was heart broken with neither husband nor son. She had thought she must find him. First, she had sung in the camps eagerly expectant. He would be stepping forth after the concert to greet her some of these times. But now she had given up hope. She had sung in almost every camp in France.

She buried her chin in her hands and gazed once more into the dark depth of the river. But someone was speaking to her.

"Beg pardon," said a gruff young voice, "but are you Miss McQueen?"

A young soldier stood at attention. She arose and smiled faintly as she nodded assent. For the moment her heart was cold. Probably wants you to sing somewhere tonight and miss the party, something was saying to her, don't you go!

The soldier's garments were dripping. His shoes were gray and soggy with mud; his captain's hat drooped like the feathers of a bird in the rain.

"Thanks," he said awkwardly. "Doc Riddle said you was in here. He said he thought you'd go."

Zenith shivered. The voice inside of her was right. He wanted her to go somewhere, and she was so tired! She wanted so much to spend a cozy evening where the cold and the darkness and damp were all shut out!

"Go? Where to?" She smiled in spite of herself at the soldier's simple ways.

"Why, you know—you know—" the boy stammered. "You know we thought mebbe you'd go out and give us a concert. You see," he ran on eagerly, "you see we've been in France five months and we haven't had a concert in all that time. Engineers, you know, keep moving around all the time and there hain't many of us. Just one company, and we hain't had a movie or anything, and most of the boys hain't seen an American lady in all that time. And they thought they'd like to, if mebbe you'd go out and sing for them. We're movin' again in a day or two, and our things are all gone on the trucks, but there's an empty barracks out there and we've sort of rigged out a stage out of some sections of flooring and there ain't any lights to speak of, but one of the boys rigged out a spot light out of an old truck lamp, and mebbe it won't matter much if you can't see us, just so we can see you, will it?" The boy paused breathless, looking his concern.

"I don't know as it will." The girl smiled frankly now. The boy was so young and so eager! "But how am I to go? Will you take me out?"

Educational.

(Continued from page 10)

of the State to raise our proportion of the million dollars for our schools and colleges.

Davidson—The first issue of the 'Davidsonian' for the session of 1919-20 is easily the largest and most ambitious ever attempted in its history and is in itself a speaking evidence of a greater Davidson. It carries ten pages of large size filled full with news items covering many fields and with big advertisements that indicate excellent business talent in the management. The issue for this week will be two thousand papers.

Dr. John Wilson McConnell accompanied by Mrs. McConnell has returned to Davidson again from Camp McHenry on a thirty days furlough. He is greatly improved in health, but it is not at all likely that he will be discharged from the service in time to take up his work in the College this fall. Meanwhile the administration has engaged Dr. Murray H. Hunt, of Springfield, Mass., to teach biology this fall and until Dr. McConnell can resume his professional duties.

President Martin, after the strenuous work of the opening of the session, is spending this week at Montreat and Black Mountain, taking a few days of needed rest. He and Professor Currie made a week-end motor trip to the mountains, going from Morganton to Marion via the head waters of the great Bridge Water Dam.

For the first time in its history, and that too in President Martin's administration, Davidson is forced to decline further application for admission during the present term. The enrollment something like 425 taxes the plant to its utmost in every way in its effort to provide proper dormitories, class rooms and boarding houses.

Professor Overcash who has had charge of the classes in Biology for the past few weeks, while the services of a new man were being secured, returns in a few days to resume his professorial duties in Palmer College, a previous engagement in which institution prevented his remaining at Davidson through the session. His work here has proven most acceptable.

The boy grinned oddly, then looked down at his shoes. "I walked. But its only about ten miles, and Doc Riddle, I guess that's what they called him, said he'd bring you out."

"Doc Riddle!" The girl gasped. Doc Riddle, as the boys fondly called him, was a young clergyman who had left his wife and children and a devoted parish to come to France to serve the boys for the Association, and because he was an expert at driving "lame duck" cars, he had been driving them sixteen hours a day, and only a half hour ago she had left him eating his supper. He had had no dinner and had been going since dawn. And still he had said he would go out in the rain again!

"If Mr. Riddle will take me, I'll go," she said straightening up and drawing a resolute breath.

"O Miss McQueen," said a voice at her elbow, "you're not going to miss our party tonight, are you? The fellows would be awfully disappointed." It was the young officer she had spoken to a few moments before.

For a moment her purpose swerved. Before her flashed the glowing lights and all the gay merriment of a settled camp. But again she saw the boy before her, dripping still with the cold rain, his shoes standing in puddles on the floor, and she saw, too, in a vision the unfurnished barracks and the eager faces of men in dull brown khaki—the men who had not had a concert for five months and were always moving, moving. Moving! Did she not know what that meant?

"I'm afraid I'll have to," she said apologetically. "You see," she smiled, it's one of the 'ten lost tribes,' I guess; anyway, they're engineers and haven't had even a movie for five months."

The young officer showed his disappointment, but like a good soldier, he saluted and stood at attention as she passed him and went on her way to prepare for the journey.

The ride to the engineer's camp was all that it promised to be. The car skidded from side to side of the road, while the girl on the springless side-seat gripped the side for support till her muscles ached. Twice the hobnails, lost from soldier's shoes in the road, pierced the tire casing and a tire squashed out, allowing the car to skid about worse than before. These times were followed by work in the dark by "Doc" Riddle and the young soldier. But at last, the car stopped before something that loomed in the dark, and "Doc" Riddle, in a cheerful voice, said, "Here we are!"

A moment later Zenith plunged one foot deep in a half frozen mud-hole and felt the mud ooze in over the tops of her shoes. She gave a little cry of consternation, and sprang to one side only to bury the other foot in a deeper puddle. "Could anything be worse!" she thought to herself. But she had determined to bring a cheerful message to the boys out there by the side of the road, so she made the best of her way to the barracks.

The place, which was not large, was crowded with dusky forms. These moved to one side as they were told that the entertainer had arrived, and the girl passed through their midst toward the improvised platform. Here in one corner she removed her dripping raincoat and smoothed her hair as best she could. Then there was a flash of light from the improvised spot light, and in another moment she stood before them. There was a moment's hesitation, then the silence of expectancy was rent by the loud cheering of the boys. But before the cheering there had come a gasp from one corner of the room. Only a few heard it. None could locate it in the darkness.

After the cheering there followed a moment so silent that the drip, drip of the rain might be heard. Then, in her rich, clear voice, the girl began to sing:

"O, my laddie!"

The boys crowded close and hung on every word. They had not heard a woman of their own land speak, nor seen her smile for a long five months, and here was one of their very best. They applauded again and again as she sang. They shouted in boyish glee:

"Give us another, Miss! Another! Another!"

But there was one boy who stood a little behind the rest, and if one had had the light to see, he might have caught a tear trickling down his cheek. And at last the moment came. She was singing, "Mother of Mine."

Clear and strong her voice came out, "Mother of mine, Mother of mine." And in it there seemed a note of tenderness such as there had not been in the other songs. The boys were strangely still as she sang. But suddenly, from one corner of the room, a clear, strong tenor voice joined in: "Mother of mine, Mother of mine."

For a moment the girl's voice wavered. It seemed to those who stood close that she swayed, turned white, and was about to faint, but instantly her voice rang out again clear and strong:

"Mother of mine, Mother of mine!"

Once she had regained her poise there was a wonderful transformation in the face of the girl. Wearied and a bit heart sick had seemed that face of hers, in spite of all her effort to conceal her feelings. But now as she sang on, with the strong young tenor voice joining her in perfect time, her face was lighted with a joy no roughest soldier could fail to detect, and in her voice there was a note of peace and joy such as had never before been heard on land or sea.

And if the boys had but known it, she was far, far from them, thousands of miles over the sea, in a little vine-clad cottage where a brook bubbled as it ran on its way and where the great pines murmured unceasingly. There where they had been happy, just four, father, mother, daughter, and son.

But suddenly the song ceased. The boyish tenor voice had wavered at the end, and the song closed with something very like a sob. Then the girl stood there all silent and expectant, and yet with a look half of fear and doubt in her face, as if dreading that the dream might not come true. She might have judged the tenor voice wrongly; there might be a tenor like it somewhere in the world.

But now her eager face lighted, her lips trembled. Someone was crowding his way through the close-packed mass of soldiers. But perhaps, after all, it was just the singer, some singer who was making so bold as to come forward and offer to sing with her. They often did that and they had been welcome, too. But this singer? O, how wonderfully, wonderfully welcome he would be, if only—

But here he was standing up before her. A tall, sturdy, clean-faced, splendid soldier with the insignia of a sergeant on his sleeve. Ah, yes, he had changed, but yes it was Tom! And in an instant she found herself in his arms crying softly:

"O Tom! Tom! Tom!"

And the soldiers? They did not know what kind of a pantomime was being played before them, but they were willing to step aside and see. And when the boy mounted the platform, the boy, their beloved singer Tom, and took the girl in his arms, they still did not understand, but they cheered till it seemed the rough covering would be lifted from over their heads, and they would be left to the mercies of the storm.

At last the singer stood before them and told in a simple way that this, their comrade, was her brother whom she had been seeking all over France; how they had sung that song many and many a time together,

"And," she finished with almost a sob, "if I hadn't come!"

"Sing it again! Sing it again!" A dozen voices shouted. So, standing there in the spot light, with the dusky forms gathered around them, the re-united brother and sister sang it all over again:

"Mother of mine, Mother of mine!"

Then they sang other old-time songs that the boys love best of all, till at last they remembered that the hour was late and they were keeping the gallant driver from his sleep.

"I'll come back tomorrow," the girl sang cheerfully, as she threw them all a kiss for good-night.

She did come back. Then when the company moved, Tom was allowed to go on an eight-day leave with her to Aix-les-Bains, the beautiful summer resort that had been made into a rest camp for our boys over there.

As they sped along toward that coveted goal, Zenith rested back on the wonderful cushions of the first-class coach, and half-closing her eyes said again, "If I hadn't gone!"—Roy J. Snell, in N. W. Christian Advocate.

Miscellaneous

AFTER THE GRIPPE.

The recent epidemic of influenza differed in several respects from the one that visited us nearly thirty years ago. At that time, for example, many of the persons attacked were left with irreparable injury to the heart, and others, whose hearts escaped, were afflicted with profound mental depression that led in many cases to self-destruction. In this epidemic we have been mercifully spared in great measure those particular after-effects of the poison, but in exchange for them there has been a tendency to pneumonia that has been the cause of many deaths.

The two epidemics resemble each other, however, closely in respect to the constitutional depression that follows an attack. The majority of influenza patients who escape pneumonia, and who observe the precaution to keep to the bed and to the house during the period of convalescence, regain their normal health and strength in a week or two weeks after recovery; but not a few are left in a weakened condition, depressed in mind and body and ready to contract any other infectious disease to which they may be exposed. A person in that state is not ill enough to be confined to the house, yet he is not well enough to resume his daily work; and if he does undertake his usual duties, he discharges them in a half-hearted way despite all his efforts to "brace up."

Such a person should continue under his physician's care, and do what he is told until he is thoroughly well. He needs tonics, good food, regular exercise in the open air—a brisk walk is the very best kind of exercise—fresh air in the bedroom, relaxation outside business hours, freedom from worry, and so on. He should avoid crowded conveyances—an additional argument in favor of walking. Four or five miles a day is none too much for the average man or woman, and if time permits ten miles daily, gradually worked up to, will do many anaemic and dyspeptic victims of the grippe a great deal of good. The patient's clothing should be as light as possible, yet sufficient to protect him from feeling chilly. Finally, he should get seven or eight hours of sleep every night. If he conscientiously follows that regimen, and perhaps at the beginning of his convalescence uses a tonic that his physician prescribes, the after effects of the influenza attack will soon wear off.—Ex.

NOT TO BE READ IN HAY-FEVER TIME.

"Art. II. Between Austria-Hungary, on the one hand, and the Ukrainian Peoples' Republic on the other hand, as far as these two powers border one another, those frontiers will exist which existed before the outbreak of the late war between the Austro-Hungarian monarchy and Russia. Further north, the frontier of the republic, beginning at Tarnegrad, will in general follow the line of Bilgerey to Sroezberzszyn, Krasnostau Pugaszce, Radzyn, Meshir-etschei, Sarnaki, Selnik, Wysekelitowsk, Kamietslitowsk, Prushany, and to Wydozowskyesee."—New York Evening Post.

Never in the world's history have Christian men and women had so glorious a vision of the priceless worth and marvelous power of the Scriptures as will be revealed to them in their observance of

Universal Bible Sunday on November 30th, 1919

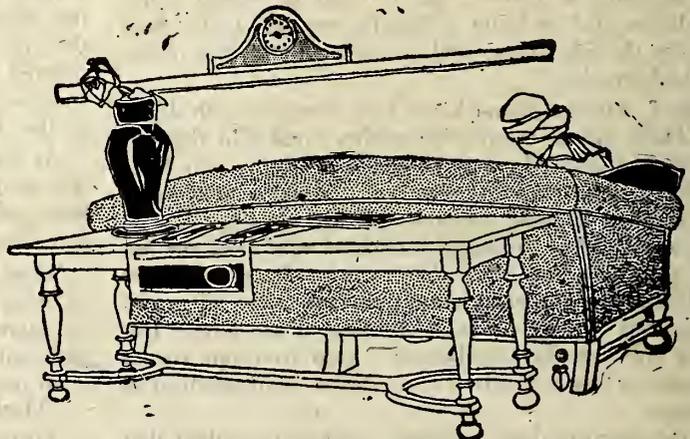

To Pastors, Officers, Teachers

There are yet nearly three months before the coming of this red letter day for the Book of Books. The American Bible Society will send you on request a living message with inspiration, facts and figures—not dry statistics—together with an exceedingly interesting church or Sunday school program for Universal Bible Sunday.

Address the Secretaries, 280 Bible House, New York

THURSDAY THE 25TH

Is Charlotte's Semi-Annual Trade Festival—DOLLAR DAY

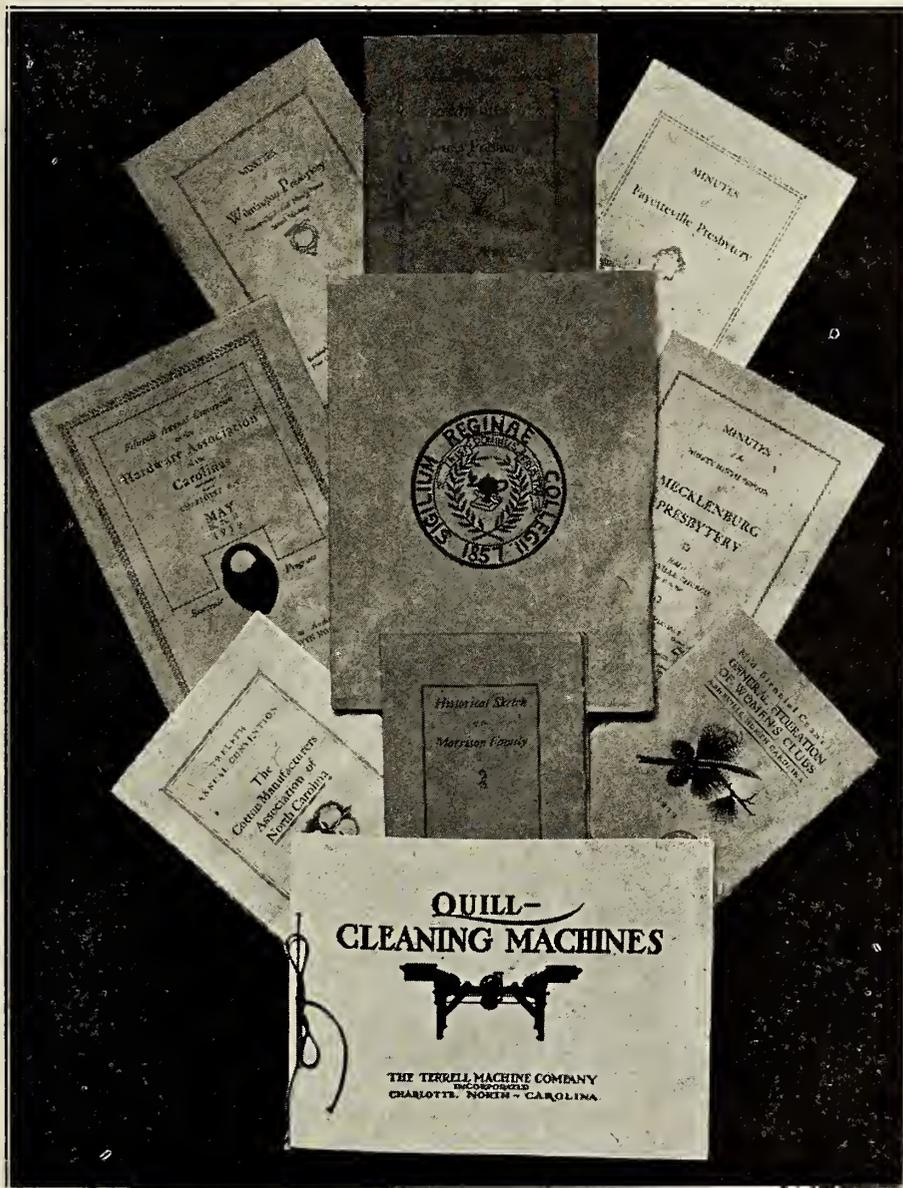

We will adhere to the custom we established of allowing an extra cash discount of 10 per cent. on that day. This means a saving of many dollars to the furniture buyers. Come to see us.

W. T. McCoy & Company
Popular Furniture--Popular Prices
CHARLOTTE, N. C.

OUR PRINTING DEPARTMENT

Is equipped to produce anything you may need in Printing, and do it to your entire satisfaction. We show below a photograph of a few of the Catalogues we have produced this season, as an evidence of the broad patronage we are receiving. The illustration does not do justice to the work; but if you are interested we will gladly furnish samples of any or all of them. We are prepared to handle this class of work promptly.

The lot includes four sets of Minutes of Proceedings of Wilmington, Bethel, Fayetteville and Mecklenburg Presbyteries; a 2-color Catalogue for the Hardware Association of the Carolinas; Queens College Annual; Convention Proceedings of the Cotton Manufacturers' Association of N. C.; a Historical Sketch of the Morrison Family; Program of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and a Machinery Catalogue for Terrell Machine Co., of Charlotte.

We have received words of commendation, and letters expressing thorough satisfaction, from all of these customers. If you use anything printed, get in touch with us, no matter where you live. WE ARE PRINTING FOR CONCERNS IN SEVEN STATES NOW.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD PUBLISHING CO.

216 NORTH TRYON ST.

Phone 643

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

SAVING SOCIETY.

The sooner the Church of Christ recognizes her true place in the winning of the world to Christ, the sooner will the world be saved. The opposite is true, too, for the longer we give heed to such erroneous teaching, the longer shall we be in seeing the lost find Christ. No such thing is known in human history as a real case of the wholesale saving of society, save as that society may be brought to Christ, one by one, and in Christ's way. Perhaps you may think that a few editors are unnecessarily alarmed. No, we are not needlessly alarmed. There is cause for alarm! There are many ministers of the Gospel who are going around talking of saving society as a body. That can be done only when the individual members of that society shall first come to Christ.

It is the Gospel that saves the individual, one by one, and nothing else will, or can do it, and all this talk of salvation for the community in any other way is mere talk. Can any man point to a single instance where society has been saved in a wholesale way as a community nay—the plea is a false Gospel—let us not give heed to it.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

FOR SALE—Hook and Hastings pipe organ. Two manual, pedal bass. Light oak case, gold display pipes. Reason for selling, new church required larger organ. Good as new. Call or write Mr. A. T. McLean, Lumberton, N. C. A real bargain.

"THE SANITARY" Individual Communion CUPS
 List of thousands of churches using our cups and FREE CATALOG with quotations sent upon request.
 Sanitary Communion Outfit Co., 71st St., Rochester, N. Y.

THOMAS Individual Cups
 Used by over 35,000 churches. Clean and Sanitary. Send for catalog and special offer. Trial free.
 Thomas Communion Service Co. Box 11 Lima, Ohio

20 POT BULBS, 20c.

6 New Purity Freesias, 1 Babiana, 1 Bloemeria, 4 Star Bethlehem, 1 Double Rosebud, 3 Buttercup, and 4 Grand Duchess Oxalis, and pkt. of New Winter blooming Spencer Sweet Peas and Carnations (will all bloom this winter)—Catalog and growing instructions.

ALL MILED FOR 20 CENTS

Big Catalog, free, of Hyacinths, Tulips, Narcissus, Peonies, Lillies, Iris, Phloxes, Hardy Plants, Shrubs, Vines, Berries in great variety. Also splendid window plants for winter. Seeds, etc.
 John Lewis Childs, Inc., Floral Park, N. Y.

Kentucky Theological Seminary
 Louisville, Kentucky

Able faculty. Course of study comprehensive and adapted to the times. High standards. Practical training. Excellent library facilities. Splendid buildings, with comfortable dormitories. Expenses moderate. Session begins October 1, 1919. For further information write the President.

Charles R. Hemphill

STATEMENT
 SECURITY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
 BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

Condition December 31, 1918, as Shown by Statement Filed.

Amount of Ledger Assets December 31 of previous year	$8,337,177.75
Income—From Policyholders, $1,929,791.39; Miscellaneous, $454,338.39; Total	2,384,129.78
Disbursements—To Policyholders, $1,121,092.04; Miscellaneous, $648,878.78; Total	1,769,970.82

ASSETS

Value of Real Estate (less amount of encumbrance)	$ 862,000.00
Mortgage Loans on Real Estate	2,920,875.00
Loans secured by pledge of Bonds, Stocks, or other collateral	139.81
Loans made to Policyholders on this Company's Policies assigned as collateral	1,610,587.45
Premium notes on Policies in force	62,349.33
Value of Bonds and Stocks	3,329,378.24
Cash in Company's Office	12,506.28
Deposited in Trust Companies and Banks not on interest	55,358.72
Deposited in Trust Companies and Banks on interest	187,017.55
Interest and Rents due and accrued	164,487.20
Premiums unpaid	217,054.17
All other Assets, as detailed in statement	37,174.74
Total	$9,459,228.49
Less Assets not admitted	65,775.45

Total admitted Assets $9,393,453.04

LIABILITIES

Net Reserve, as computed	$8,759,356.00
Present value of amounts not yet due on Supplementary Contracts, etc.	33,859.67
Liability on Policies canceled and not included in "Net Reserve," etc.	25,551.09
Policy Claims	180,285.16
Dividends left with Company at interest	37,279.72
Premiums paid in advance, including Surrender Values so applied	8,907.85
Unearned Interest and Rent paid in advance	19,570.08
Commissions due to Agents, etc.	15,047.37
Estimated Amount payable for Federal, State, and other taxes	40,000.00
Dividends due Policyholders	19,205.02
Amounts set apart, apportioned, provisionally ascertained, calculated, awaiting apportionment, etc.	70,414.46
All other Liabilities, as detailed in statement	23,254.72
Total amount of all Liabilities, except Capital	$9,232,531.14
Unassigned funds (surplus)	160,921.90

Total Liabilities $9,393,453.04

BUSINESS IN NORTH CAROLINA DURING 1918.

Policies on the lives of citizens of said State in force December 31 of previous year, No. 980; Amount	$1,398,940.01
Policies on the lives of citizens of said State issued during year, No. 161; Amount	252,335.00
Total, No. 1,141; Amount	$1,651,275.01
Deduct ceased to be in force during year, No. 113; Amount	152,171.00
Policies in force December 31, 1918, No. 1,028; Amount	$1,499,104.01

Losses and Claims unpaid December 31 of previous year, No. 1; Amount	$ 1,000.00
Losses and Claims incurred during year, No. 8; Amount	11,500.00
Total, No. 9; Amount	$ 12,500.00
Losses and Claims settled during year in cash, No. 6; Amount	$ 9,000.00
Losses and Claims unpaid December 31, 1918, No. 3; Amount	$ 3,500.00

President, D. S. Dickenson; Secretary, Chas. A. LaDue; Treasurer, Jas. W. Manieer; Home Office, Binghamton, N. Y.; Attorney for service,

J. R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, Raleigh, N. C.; Manager for North Carolina, Home Office.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,
INSURANCE DEPARTMENT,
Raleigh, March 22, 1919.

I, James R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct abstract of the statement of the Security Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Binghamton, N. Y., filed with this Department, showing the condition of said Company on the 31st day of December, 1918.

Witness my hand and official seal, the day and year above written.

JAMES R. YOUNG,
Insurance Commissioner.

You can bake perfect biscuits

It doesn't matter whether you have been cooking for years or are just beginning, you can bake light fluffy biscuits or muffins, golden-brown waffles or hot cakes more easily, more economically and with absolute assurance that the baking will be perfect, if you use

OCCO-NEE-CHEE Self-Rising Flour

Takes the Guess out of Baking and Saves you Money

You don't have to buy baking powder, soda or salt. You don't have to guess how much to use. These things are ready mixed into the flour in the proportions that make the baking results certain. It will pay you to lay in a good supply of this remarkable flour. Your grocer has it. You can tell it by the Indian head on the bag.

When you need plain flour, be sure to get Peerless. It will delight you.

AUSTIN-HEATON CO. Durham, N. C.

The United States Railroad Administration Announces

The following changes in schedules of trains between Greensboro, N. C. and Goldsboro, N. C.

EFFECTIVE SUNDAY, AUGUST 24, 1919

Train 108 now leaving Greensboro 6:00 A. M. will leave 7:25 A. M. Arrive Goldsboro 12:40 P. M.

Train 144 now leaving Greensboro 8:10 A. M. will leave 9:20 A. M. Arrive Goldsboro 2:40 P. M.

No Change in Schedules of Trains 22 and 112, Eastbound.
No Change in Schedules of Trains Westbound.

For detail information apply to Consolidated or Depot Ticket Office.
Phone Number 20.

BALANCING MISFORTUNES.

A young woman in Colorado had been a cripple, one leg being shorter than the other. That was a misfortune.

An automobile ran over her and broke her leg in four places. That was another misfortune.

But it was the longer leg that was broken, and the process of healing shortened it to the length of the other leg, so that the young woman now walks like others, and is no longer a cripple. Thus the two misfortunes balanced and made good fortune.

The wise man can always work out this kind of arithmetic with his trials.

For instance, he is poor, he is timid. His poverty forces him to overcome his timidity, his timidity becomes a pleasing modesty, and he rises to great success. Never give up to your difficulties. Make them conquer one another.—C. E. World.

Back to Health by Nature's Route

This is the title of a most interesting booklet issued by the Celebrated Shivar Mineral Spring. The booklet contains the strongest letters of testimonial from men eminent in the professions of medicine, law and theology, from bankers, merchants, manufacturers and others, telling how this remarkable water has relieved them of dyspepsia, and indigestion, nervous headache, rheumatism, kidney and liver diseases, uric acid poisoning and other ailments due to impure blood. Sign and mail the following letter and you will have no cause to regret it.

Shivar Spring,

Box 4-G, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demi-johns which I agree to return within a month.

Name
Address
Shipping Point

If you wish to be divine keep hidden—as God does.—Anon.

The McCALLIESCHOOL

A HOME SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Able men train boys for college. Individual attention. 1,000 feet elevation. Big athletic field. All sports. Swimming. Boating. Military drill. Honor System. Boys live in Masters' homes, under their personal guidance. Address

Headmasters: S. J. & J. P. McCallie
Missionary Ridge, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Cancer Treated Successfully at the Kellam Hospital

The record of Kellam Hospital is without parallel in history, having restored, without the use of the Knife, Acids, X-Ray or Radium, over ninety per cent. of the many hundreds of sufferers from cancer which it has treated during the past twenty-two years. We want every man and woman in the United States to know what we are doing.

KELLAM HOSPITAL, 1617 W. Main St., Richmond, Va.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Cherry Pie.

Two kinds of women are in the world. And besides these two there is Keturah. The one kind maketh a Cherry Pie and taketh out none of the Stones. The other kind taketh out all of the Stones save one.

Now I climbed the Cherry Tree, I and the Robins, and the Robins climbed higher than I, and got at it earlier and stayed at it later, and I was hard put to it to get any of the Cherries. But some of them I gathered, and I brought them in a Basket, and Keturah put the Kettle on, and certain of them she did Can. But some of them she took, and she made thereof a Cherry Pie.

And the Crust thereof was made so that it did melt in my mouth, and the Cherries were rich with their own juice and with sugar. And there were plenty of them between the Crusts; for after this manner doth Keturah make Cherry Pie.

And in all the Pie there was not one Cherry Stone. And I knew that it would be so, for Keturah made it.

Now there be women who make Cherry Pies for their husbands, and they say unto them, Behold, here is a Cherry Pie with the Stones in it; thou

Plant Your

Cotton Alleys

Make them produce a profit as well as the rows. Plant

Clover

in your cotton alleys and take advantage of the large profits on hay, now selling around $60 per ton. It will save a season, double the yield of the crop following and build up your soil.

Inoculate your seed with NitrA-germ and be sure of a good profit.

READ THIS RECORD

"I purchased NitrA-germ for one acre alfalfa and four acres crimson clover last season. I wish to say my alfalfa is as near perfect as I could wish. I have already cut it three times and am sure of two more cuttings. I secured a good stand of clover and have corn planted on the land where the clover was sowed, and am certain I will make forty per cent. more corn on this land than I will on the land adjoining it, planted the same day where there was no clover. I am highly pleased with NitrA-germ for growing alfalfa and clover and expect to use more this season. I am sure that clover is the best and cheapest method of fertilizing land and I am equally sure that NitrA-germ will grow it."

MARION BRYANT, Wilson Co., N. C.

NitrA-germ costs $2 Per acre delivered.

Write for FREE Book No. J- 6.

NitrA-Germ, Savannah, Ga.

Rocky River Springs School

For Boys

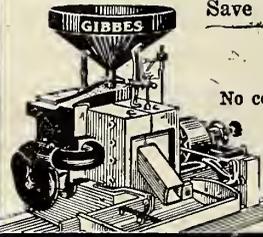

Thoroughly Christian. A Preparatory School for Boys. Moderate Cost: Fall term opens Sept. 23. Endorsed by Mecklenburg Presbytery.

For Announcement and Information, address

PROF. C. E. WELLS, Principal, AQUADALE, N. C.

Grind Your Corn the Simple Way

Delicate, Complicated Machinery is neither necessary nor economical. Save money in grinding your grain with—

The Gibbes Corn Mill

Simple—Fast—Economical—Durable

No complicated parts, whole machine easily handled. With ball-bearing system it is light running and rapid, requiring very little power. Little wear, smooth running, seldom a part to replace. Made of the best of materials. Absolutely guaranteed. For illustrated literature and prices address—

GIBBES MACHINERY CO., Dept. A-2, Columbia, S. C.

Good as New

Last week just an old, worn, dirty, last year's suit, but today as brilliant, as clean and as attractive as if it were new. It is difficult to estimate the life that is in a suit of clothes until you see the result of our dry cleaning process. For less than ten per cent. of the price of a new suit the old one can be made to serve the purpose excellently.

Your clothing will give you satisfaction for another season and possibly more if cleaned and renewed by our

FAULTLESS DRY CLEANING PROCESS

We remove the spots and stains, extract the dirt from the fibre of the fabric and give new lustre and perfect shape to the garment.

Your money will be cheerfully refunded if you are not delighted with the results. Mail orders receive prompt attention. We pay the return postage.

Bundle up your garments and send them to us and you will be delighted when our work is done.

THE CHARLOTTE
LAUNDRY
Charlotte, N. C.

OLDEST LARGEST BEST

hast more time to Pluck them out than I have; and it is lucky for thee that thou get a Cherry Pie, even with the Stones in; and if thou likest it not, thou canst leave it.

And the other kind say, Behold here is a Cherry Pie, and the Stones thereof have I taken out. But presently her husband biteth hard upon a Stone, and breaketh a Tooth, or crowdeth out a Filling so that it costeth him Four Dollars to Replace it. And when he chideth his wife, she breaketh into tears, and she saith, Thou art a Cruel Man. For thou givest me no credit for the Stones which I took out, and thou blamest me for the one Stone which I overlooked.

Now the Lord hath mercifully spared me that I married neither of those women, but if I had to choose between them, I would take the woman who removeth no Stones from the Cherries, and biddeth her husband to beware, rather than her who professeth to have removed them all, but who leaveth one Stone to insure his weeping and gnashing of teeth.

And the same is true of life, that men can meet bravely many trials when they have reason to expect them, but he is no friend who promiseth Security when there is one hard Bump that a man must come up against, and be unprepared for it.

But take it from me, when Keturah maketh a Cherry Pie, it is come Pie.—Congregationalist.

A word is an idea on wings. It goes somewhere. Jesus is God's Word. God's idea is love. Jesus is the expression of God's love. God's love with wings.—W. R. Ridgway.

"In the A. E. F. With an Artist"

The sketch book and diary of Lieut. J. B. Mallard. Send $1.00 for your copy to

J. B. MALLARD

Box 625 CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The Cumberland General Hospital, of Fayetteville N. C., offers to young ladies between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five the following courses of training for nurses: Three years practical and theoretical work which prepares for State Board Examinations. Fall classes being formed now. Apply at once to Supt. of Nurses.

YOUR FACE?
Is the Complexion Muddy, Tanned, Freckled?
If troubled with skin eruptions, sunburn, pimples, try
PALMER'S SKIN SUCCESS SOAP
It cleanses, softens and clears the skin and tends to remove sunburn, tan, freckles, blackheads, pimples and eczema.
Thoroughly antiseptic. Ask your druggist, or write for free samples to
THE MORGAN DRUG CO.,
1521 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

J. M. BELK, Monroe, N. C.

W. H. BELK, Charlotte, N. C.

BELK BROS.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

CAROLINA'S LEADING DEPARTMENT STORE

Our Stocks Now Complete With the New Fall Goods

We solicit your inquiries as to prices, styles, etc. Better still, we give you a most cordial invitation to visit our Big Department Store in Charlotte. We have 10 Big Floors loaded with High Class Merchandise—Dry Goods, Clothing, Shoes, Ready-to-Wear, Men's Furnishings, Household Goods, Trunks, Suit Cases,

Wholesale or Retail

We are now buying for 23 Stores in North and South Carolina. Our purchasing power certainly enables us to give you BETTER VALUES than ever. Helps us to give you very much better goods for your money. This is our ideal.

Our Stock of New Wool Dress Goods

Include Serges, Tricotines, Tricolette, Jerseys, Broadcloths, Velours, Plaid Skirtings, all size Checks, very popular and serviceable. Prices range, 36-in. goods, 50c, 75c, 98c; 52-in. goods, all wool, $1.50. The Novelties run from $2.98 to $4.95. New Silks, New Velvets, Velours, etc.

New Fall and Winter Blankets

Both Plain and Pretty Plaids, all sizes, single beds and double beds, ranging in prices, $2.98 for the double cotton to $15.00 pair, fine wool.

Men's Clothing

Schloss Bros., Hamberger, Belk Specials, in Serges, Worsted, Flannels. Prices not any higher than last year—$16.50, $19.50, $22.50, $25.00, $29.50 to $39.50. These come in sizes up to 44. Can give you up to 54 for the very large men.

Write us or see us about the School Boys' Suits. We have a Juvenile Department. We pay especial attention to Suits for all ages. Boys' sizes, 7 to 18 years, pure Worsted Suits, all new, $4.95, $6.95, $7.95, $8.95, $9.95; sizes 3 to 8—$2.98, $3.75, $4.95, $5.95, $6.95. Your money back for any Suit ordered from us that is not cheaper and better than you can buy.

Shoes for Men

Ralston, Health, Reynolds and Belk Special, "Queen Quality" and "Belk's Special Line" for Women, School Shoes for the Boys and Girls.

"Krieder's Pollyanna" Line for school wear, Goodyear Welts, all sizes, all leathers, made for looks and service, $3.50 to $6.00.

"Godman Line" for Boys and Girls, none better, all sizes, $2.50 to $4.00.

We devote our second floor to Ready-to-Wear. Our stocks are now ready. Come and see us. Always glad to show you. Our lines are correctly bought as to style and quality and our prices are less.

We send your money back promptly for any purchase from us not entirely satisfactory

WE HAVE THE NEW PICTORIAL PATTERNS
SEND US YOUR ORDERS

THE VALUE OF A TOAD.

Some people seem to think that every creature in the world should be useful to man, and they are perplexed by such things as poisonous snakes and parasites, midges and flies.

There are many things these ungrateful people forget—that, for instance, the realm of living creatures is such a vast system that it would not continue as a well-balanced concern if everything conspired to man's advantage. Another fact is that the occasionally troublesome abundance of certain kinds of creatures such as house-flies—which could soon smother a city if they were not checked!—is due to man's interference with the balance of Nature, or to his careless ways of dealing with refuse. Often, however, the querulous "What is the use of that?" is the outcome of ignorance. Take the toad.

The American toad, which is closely like the British species, plays an important part in checking injurious insects. An American naturalist has collected records of the number of insects eaten by a toad at one meal or found in its stomach at one time. Here are the figures: 90 rose-beetles, 55 army worms, 24 gypsy-moth caterpillars, 86 house-flies. The moths and caterpillars were all snapped up in ten minutes! Some estimate the value of a toad's work at $5 for a season, others at four times as much. Well may it be praised!

God has given us tongues that we may say something pleasant to our fellowman.—Heine.

God rewards the victorious by calls to new battles; the faithful by fresh trials of fidelity.—Anon.

It is easier to criticise the greatest things superbly, than to do even small things fairly well.—Dr. Stalker.

WANTED: Young Men and Women

Let us train you for a good office position. We are placing Bookkeepers, Stenographers and office-trained graduates all over the country. We can place you, as we are in close touch with the business interests of this entire section. Write today.

CECIL'S BUSINESS COLLEGE, Dept. R. P., SPARTANBURG, S. C.

STATEMENT
SVEA FIRE AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
GOTHENBURG, SWEDEN.

Condition December 31, 1918, as Shown by Statement Filed.

Amount of Capital Deposit	$ 200,000.00
Amount of Ledger Assets Dec. 31 of previous year.....	2,307,007.20
Income—From Policyholders, $543,134.43; Miscellaneous, $74,775.70; Total	1,617,910.13
Disbursements—To Policyholders, $695,883.76; Miscellane- ous, $645,211.47; Total	1,341,095.23

ASSETS

Value of Bonds and Stocks	$1,920,810.75
Cash in Company's Office	200.00
Deposited in Trust Companies and Banks not on interest..	2,790.38
Deposited in Trust Companies and Banks on interest.....	189,728.27
Agents' balances, representing business written subsequent to October 1, 1918	356,786.64
Agents' balances, representing business written prior to Oc- tober 1, 1918	8,286.77
Bills receivable, taken for fire risks.....	101,883.71
Interest and Rents due and accrued	27,667.21
All other Assets, as detailed in statement.....	3,335.58

Total	$2,611,489.31
Less Assets not admitted	110,085.69

Total admitted Assets

LIABILITIES

Net amount of unpaid losses and claims.....	$ 125,108.09
Unearned premiums	1,321,702.20
Salaries, rents, expenses, bills, accounts, fees, etc., due or accrued.	2,000.00
Estimated amount payable for Federal, State, county, and municipal taxes due or accrued	28,000.00
Contingent commissions, or other charges due or accrued..	3,500.00

Total amount of all Liabilities except Capital.....	$1,480,310.29
Capital actually paid up in cash.....	$200,000.00
Surplus over all liabilities	821,093.33
Surplus as regards Policyholders	1,021,093.33

Total Liabilities

BUSINESS IN NORTH CAROLINA DURING 1918.

Fire Risks written, $1,593,570; Premiums received.....	$ 19,381.25
Losses incurred—Fire, $10,310.44; Paid	8,237.38

U. S. Manager, J. M. Winstrom; Home Office in U. S., New York City; Attorney for service, Jas. R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, Raleigh, N. C.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA,
INSURANCE DEPARTMENT,
Raleigh, April 10, 1919.

I, James R. Young, Insurance Commissioner, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct abstract of the statement of the Svea Fire and Life Insurance Company, of Gothenburg, Sweden, filed with this Department, showing the condition of said Company on the 31st day of December, 1918.

Witness my hand and official seal, the day and year above written.
JAMES R. YOUNG,
Insurance Commissioner.

Order a Hygienic Bed

26-lb., $10.20; 31-lb., $11.20; 36-lb., $12.10; 41-lb., $12.60; Pair 5-lb. Pillows, $1.80; 7-lb., $2.60; NEW FEATHERS—Best tick. We have $500 deposited in bank to guarantee satisfaction or money back. Order or write for catalogue today.

HYGIENIC BED CO., Dept. 16, Charlotte, N. C.

TEACHER WANTED for two children. Must teach Music, English, Languages and Higher Mathematics. Comfortable home, board, lodging and laundry furnished with salary. References exchanged. W. K. McCoy, Gum Springs, Va.

NEW SONG BOOKS

For Your Church

8c

A wonderful value: 83 familiar songs of the Gospel, words and music. Used all over the world. Only 8c per hundred for No. 1 or 2, round or shaped notes, and $15 for No. 1 and 2, combined, round notes only. Send 30c for samples. Money back if not pleased.

E. A. K. MACKETT, Dept. No. 56, FT. WAYNE, IND.

Aberdeen & Rockfish Railroad

Between Aberdeen and Fayetteville

Eastbound		Westbound
Daily Ex. Sunday	Mixed Pass.	Daily Ex. Sunday	Mixed Pass.
No. 22	No. 38	No. 41	No. 21
7 30 am	9 10 am	Lv. Aberdeen Ar.	6 41 pm 5 00 pm
ar 8 55 am	10 00 am	Rae ford	5 55 pm lv 3 50 pm
lv 2 10 pm		Ar. Fayetteville Lv.	4 50 pm ar 2 50 pm
4 00 pm	11 20 am		1 00 pm

WAGRAM BRANCH

Southbound		Northbound
Daily Ex. Sun.	Mixed	Daily Ex. Sun.	Mixed
No. 11		No. 12
Lv. 10 30 am	Rae ford	Ar. 12 40 pm
Ar. 11 15 am	Wagram	Lv. 12 00 noon

W. A. BLUE, General Supt.,
Aberdeen, N. C.

Planning a Profiteer's Home.

Architect—"Have you any suggestion for decorating the study, Mr. Quickrich?"

Mr. Quickrich (war profiteer)—

"Only that it must be brown. Great thinkers, I believe, are generally found in a brown study."—Boston Globe.

Come, Go, Pray, Give—these words tell our privileges in regard to missions.

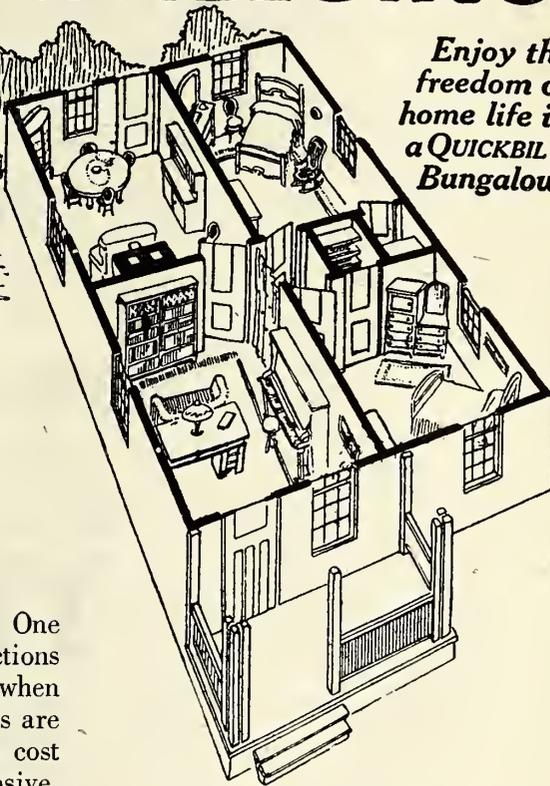

Christ did kind things so kindly,

It seemed his heart's delight

To make poor people happy

From morning until night.

Own Your Own Home

Enjoy the freedom of home life in a QUICKBILT Bungalow.

Life Isn't Life

in a rented house, a boarding house or a crowded flat. One is too cramped, formalities too burdensome and restrictions too numerous. It is a useless nuisance. Especially when it is so easy to own your own home. Building materials are high, but modern methods of manufacture reduce the cost and place a home within your reach. Labor is expensive, but systematic construction makes possible the erection in only a few days. Build Today—Stop Paying Rents.

QUICKBILT BUNGALOW NO. 42

An attractive, snug, convenient, roomy little bungalow with graceful lines embodying the most modern of architectural ideas. Securely and substantially built to make it lasting and comfortable in the most severe weather. Especially built for convenience. While small in appearance, and snug its rooms are in reality of ample size for every comfort. Built at a tremendously reduced cost, due to the immense savings in quantity production. From the flooring to the roof; from the siding to the interior finish, it is already prepared for erection and partially built. In buying a QUICKBILT Bungalow, you

SAVE

WASTE—All the material is already prepared and the large waste piles of scrap lumber are thus eliminated. Every foot of lumber is used. You buy no surplus material.

TIME—Every piece of material has its own place. Everything is numbered and systematized. The instructions to the carpenter are complete and the order of erection simple. No time is lost in looking for material. The time ordinarily required in preliminary cutting and trimming is saved. As a large portion of the house is already built in panels, just that much time and cost is eliminated in construction.

LABOR—With the entire process of erection systematized and complete, the great building "bugaboo"—preliminary preparation—eliminated, the labor in the erection of a QUICKBILT Bungalow is reduced to a minimum, and therefore, of minor consideration. A carpenter of average speed and experience with two laborers, can erect the house in 7 days. The ordinary house will take almost as many weeks.

MONEY—A saving in waste of material, time and labor, is a saving in money. With a QUICKBILT Bungalow the expense of erection is cut in half, but that is not all. You need not pay a contractor's fee. The erection is so simple and systematic that any carpenter of average intelligence can erect it with ease. Many owners build them themselves. You pay no architect's fee. The complete plans with all specifications and instructions are furnished FREE. And yet, the plans are made after careful study by the best and most experienced of architects, with a view to eliminating waste and gaining the greatest possible convenience, economy and strength. The cost of the material is further reduced by the fact that you buy it from the mill, manufacturer and forest in one. Our complete plants cover the entire process, from the tree to the completed house. You pay no middle-man a profit. You buy direct from the source of material. In our complete plants in which hundreds of houses are built simultaneously, every short cut to perfection is used and every waste avoided. As the houses are made in great quantities you gain the advantage of the low cost or quantity production.

A CONVENIENTLY PLANNED HOME

The house is shipped F. O. B. Charleston, complete with all necessary material except the brick work. Size over all, 33-ft. x 21-ft. There are two large bed rooms, size 9-ft. x 12-ft., with closets, one spacious living room 12-ft. x 15-ft., kitchen 12-ft. x 12-ft. and an attractive front porch 12-ft. x 6-ft. The house is well lighted, spacious, well ventilated and convenient. The construction is largely of North Carolina Pine, "The Wood Universal," thoroughly kiln dried. Excellent flooring and ceiling. Walls built in panels of siding lined with heavy builders' paper to insure warmth. Durable, fire-resisting, standard asphalt strip shingles with slate green or red finish. Artistic paneled inside finish. Excellent doors and sash. All necessary nails and hardware furnished. House comes with exterior walls stained any one of a number of standard colors or painted with one heavy coat of priming paint. Exterior trim and inside finish painted with one heavy coat of priming paint.

WRITE TO-DAY

for further information and a copy of our complete and attractive, illustrated book, "QUICKBILT Bungalows" No. B-9. It will explain all about No. 42 and many other attractive QUICKBILT Bungalows. It is FREE for the asking. Merely fill out the coupon below and mail it. Better still, if Bungalow No. 42 fills your needs, tell us the color desired and instruct us to ship immediately.

COUPON—Clip Here and Mail To-Day.

Please send me your book, "QUICKBILT Bungalows" No. B-9. Am especially interested in a room house.

NAME

ADDRESS

QUICKBILT Bungalow Dept., A. C. Tuxbury Lumber Co., Charleston, S. C.

Sparkles

Longing.

(The wail of the European exile.)
 I want to go home; I am tired of staying
 Where people don't savvy my tongue.
 Where I cannot tell what the waiters are saying
 Nor know just how much I am stung.
 I want to go back where I needn't climb stairways
 Or grope to my room in the gloam.
 Or shiver in chambers like chill glacial airways.
 I gaze on the track to,
 I long to go back to
 That better-and-greater place, swift-elevator place,
 Hot-radiator place,
 Home!
 I want to go home; I am tired of getting
 This fancy but camouflaged food,
 Pale substitute eats in a Frenchified setting—
 My tastes grow voracious and crude.
 I'm dreaming of meals without food-
 card restrictions,
 With much more of body, less foam.
 Where sugar and pastry meet no inter-dictions.
 I dream of and yearn to,
 I pant to return to
 That thrilling-to-utter land, makes-my-heart-flutter land,
 Milk-fat-and-butter land,
 Home!
 —Berton Braley, in Life.

During an epidemic in a small Southern town every infected house was put under quarantine. After the disease had been checked, an old negress protested vigorously when the health officers started to take down the sign on her house.

"Why, Auntie," exclaimed the officer, "why don't you want me to take it down?"

"Well, sah," she answered, "dey ain' be'n a bill collectah neah dis house sence dat sign went up. You-all let it alone!"
 —Harper's.

A New Yorker tells of his sojourn at a certain hotel in the Carolina mountains. At about eight in the morning he was aroused from a sound slumber by a knocking on his door. "What is it?" he shouted. "Telegram fo' you, boss," replied the darky n the other side of the door. "Will you open the door?" The New Yorker was angered by this. "I will not!" he yelled back. "Can't you slip it under the door?" "No, boss," was the response; "it's on a tray."—Lippincott's.

The minister was filling in the marriage certificate. "Let me see," he murmured to the bride, as he came to the date, "this is the 4th, isn't it?" "It is not!" the bride answered indignantly.
 "This is only the third!"

THE WESTMINSTER SCHOOL

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Operated by Kings Mountain Presbytery
 $300.00 Per Year

Write for Catalogue to
Rev. T. E. P. Woods, Box 6, Rutherfordton, N. C.

4 Per Cent

Time Certificates of Deposit

They are Interest Bearing. They are Payable on Demand. They Afford a Good Income for Funds Awaiting Permanent Investment

GET ONE AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY

Charlotte :: North Carolina

YES, Preachers and Teachers Are Human

They should have no discount and no cheaper railroad fares than you and I. They should be paid for services rendered—amply paid. If he can't earn enough for family use and the nest egg for the future, he made a sad mistake as to family, else he should change his calling instanter.

The Mutual Building & Loan

Will save a man and his family if they're worth saving, but they must help. It furnishes the "sure cure," but boasts no regrets at the demise of a feller who deliberately refuses to take the medicine.

E. L. KEESLER, Sec. & Treas., 25 S. Tryon St., CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Charlotte National Bank Resources $4,000,000.00

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

PAYS FOUR PER CENT.

On Either Time Certificates of Deposit or Savings Accounts

MAIL ORDER Business Solicited and PROMPT ATTENTION Given

JOHN M. SCOTT	President
W. J. CHAMBERS	Vice-President
J. F. ROBERTSON	Vice-President
W. H. TWITTY	Cashier
C. W. BUTT	Assistant Cashier

1919

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

N C Library Dept

REV. J. R. BRIDGES, D. D.

EDITORS

REV. R. C. REED, D. D.

VOL. LX.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., OCTOBER 1, 1919.

No. 39

Open Thou Our Eyes.

Luke 24:15.

And He drew near and talked with them,
But they perceived Him not,
And mourned, unconscious of that light,
The gloom, the darkness, and the night
That wrapt His burial spot.

Wearied with doubt, perplexed and sad,
They knew nor help nor guide;
While He who bore the secret key
To open every mystery,
Unknown was by their side.

Thus often when we feel alone,
Nor help nor comfort near,
'Tis only that our eyes are dim,
Doubting and sad we see not Him,
Who waiteth still to hear.

In all our daily joys and griefs,
In daily work and rest,
To those who seek Him Christ is near,
Our bliss to calm, to soothe our care,
In leaning on His breast.

Open our eyes, O Lord, we pray,
To see our way, our Guide;
That by the path that here we tread,
We, following on, may still be led
In Thy light to abide.

—Selected.

Editorial

Our Overseas Kin.

THESE are distributed among several Presbyterian Churches in Scotland, Ireland, England, Australia and New Zealand. Reports from these churches have lately come to hand through the Quarterly Register. A few facts about our distant kindred may be of interest to our readers.

The greatest interest centers about the two great Churches of Scotland. These meet annually at the same time, and in the same city of Edinburg. The matter uppermost in the minds of both is the effort to heal the division, so that they may meet as one church. They have stood apart since 1843, and in other years the feeling between them was anything but seraphic in its sweetness. And this, backed by the proverbial obstinacy of the Scotch disposition, offered slight hope that the breach would ever be closed. But the fever for union has invaded Scotland, and it now looks as if the impossible were going to happen.

It is gratifying to note that notwithstanding the fearful drain which the war made on the finances of the country, most of the churches report an increase in contributions. The National Church does not have as much to its credit as some of the others. Its churches being endowed, the members have not had the opportunity to acquire the giving habit. The Germans having been driven out of Africa, the Scotch churches have fallen heir to the German missions in East Africa. In this connection, we are told that Dr. Ogilvie, chairman of the Foreign Mission Committee of the National Church, appealed for $50,000 in five years, bringing up the mission offerings to $175,000 per annum. This seems a poor showing for a membership of over 700,000. Yet fear was expressed that they would not be able to reach so large a figure. Do we not see herein the vicious influence of church endowments?

The Assembly of the National Church was enlivened by the presence and speeches of some distinguished visitors. The Archbishop of Canterbury spoke to the Assembly on the League of Nations. He is a Scotchman, and his grandfather was pastor of the church in which the Assembly was meeting. Another visitor awakened even yet more lively emotions. This was none other than Sir Douglas Haig. He was accompanied by Sir Henry Horne, and we are told that the house never witnessed such an ovation as was given to these two famous Generals when they appeared on the floor of the body.

The United Free Church shows not only an increase in its financial income but also in its membership. Its financial showing is in most favorable contrast with that of the National Church. With a smaller membership by some 200,000 it gives vastly larger sums to Christian benevolences. Against the $175,000 of the National Church it gives $706,000 to Foreign Missions. Surely this is a most valuable lesson on the art of Christian giving. The United Free Church, having no endowments, is constrained to support its ministry and home institutions. In doing this it learns how to give, and the result is shown in this contrast between their gifts to their mission boards.

In addition to these two large churches of Scotland there are three smaller ones—the Free Church, the Reformed Presbyterian Synod, and the Original Secession Synod. We take it upon ourselves to offer a year's subscription to the Standard to any reader who can give the origin of these two latter churches without looking in a book. The size of these small churches may be judged from the fact that it takes two of them to support our Foreign Mission station.

Special interest attaches to the Presbyterian Church of Ireland, from the fact that our American Presbyterian Church, in its infancy and early youth, drew most of its nourishment from this source. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Ireland had the distinction this year of being presided over by a Major General. Notwithstanding this military title, he was a preacher and was by no means destitute of other titles. He was the Rev. John M. Simms, C. B. C. M. G. D. D., K. H. C., Principal Chaplain of the British Armies in France.

The Churches of Scotland and Ireland have their Committees on Temperance and are making some progress. They do not seem, however, to have reached the 20th century as yet. For example, an overture was brought forward in the Irish Assembly to exclude from fellowship any one voluntarily engaged in the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors as beverages, or who holds any investment in a company established especially for that purpose, or who receives rents from property so used. The overture was declined by a vote of 235 to 101.

It is gratifying to note a growing friendliness between the Protestant denominations of Ireland. The Bishop of the Diocese of Down and Connor, in which Belfast is situated, appeared before the Assembly and made a very conciliatory address. He has sanctioned an interchange of pulpits within his diocese between his clergy and the ministers of the Presbyterian Church. When all the Bishops of the Episcopal Church lay aside their preposterous pretensions to Apostolic succession and follow the example of this Irish Bishop, they can talk with more effect about the great crime of a divided Christendom.

The Synod of the Presbyterian Church of England took steps at its last meeting for the training of Deaconesses and Church sisters. It also proposed by a large majority to enter upon the proposed Federation of English Free Churches. Another important action was the launching of a great "Thanksgiving Fund" of $500,000, the object of which is to provide a minimum salary for its ministers of $1,500. It may be noted that all the British Churches are endeavoring to increase the salaries of their preachers so as to relieve the distress caused by the increased cost of living.

Perhaps the most absorbing question before the Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of New Zealand was that of uniting with the Methodist and Congregational Churches. Progress is being made in this direction. We wonder whereunto this matter of Church union will lead and when the agitation will end.

Concord Presbytery and the Dance.

In another column will be found some resolutions passed by Concord Presbytery. They are very timely, but we are afraid that they will fall on dull ears. It seems that in this age of obedient parents and foolish mothers that the young people have their own way, with the result that even the children of officers patronize the dance. The dance itself has "outheroded Herod." As shown in another article, it has degenerated into performances that have shocked even the most hardened.

In this city the abolition of the public dance hall has become a burning question, and sundry wise men have been giving their endorsement of them through the press. It seems to be another case of fools rushing in where angels fear to tread. We are glad that Concord Presbytery has sounded the warning, even though it be "as useless as singing Psalms to a dead mule."

"Why We Fought."

The League of Nations is not a political question, over which men can divide. It is a moral question that comes home to every soul in this country. It is very easy to forget, and familiarity breeds contempt, so that the long discussion of this subject, and the narrow partisan feeling aroused are apt to make us lose sight of the awful horrors that it proposes to end.

"Why We Fought" is the title of a little book, which consists of addresses, made by Captain Thomas G. Chamberlain, of California, before various bodies in behalf of "The League." He saw service in France, and as an eye witness and a sharer in the dangers of the front, he speaks with authority. The book can be obtained for 25 cents, sent to 130 West Forty-second Street, New York. It also gives a clear analysis of the League. As great as the crisis in our history was, when the great war was going on, it was not to be compared with the crisis that faces us today. Then political parties forgot their differences and vied with each in patriotic acts of self-denial.

Now that the apparent danger has passed, the narrowness of politics has come to the front, and every move made is more to advance the fortunes of party than of the common good. We need not only a broader political outlook, but a calm and careful study of the provisions of the League, looking at it, not as a means of advancing the fortunes of either party, but of mankind everywhere. We need to remember that we are no longer isolated from the world at large, but that modern inventions and the progress of science have combined to make "of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth," and what affects one, affects all. No nation liveth to itself, and no nation dieth to itself.

We need to guard against a one-sided view of any question, and above all we need to remember that our President who took part in the wording of the League should reasonably know more as to its meaning than any private citizen. Then again we should remember in all disputed questions, there are generally two sides, and that it is the part of wisdom to consider both sides before we form our judgment.

For example, in the Shantung case, there are two sides, yet many can see only one. They dwelt upon the injustice of allowing Japan to take the territory of the weaker nation, and they also insist that it violates that point of the self-determination of every nation, that each country should have the right to choose under what government it shall be. These points would be well taken, if there were not another side of the question, which is that France and England in the hour of their peril, in order to get the help of Japan made a promise to give that country the rights that Germany had acquired in Shantung.

When we remember that England entered the war because Germany considered a treaty a mere scrap of paper, it would not be consistent for England to take that position with reference to her treaty with Japan. Then we must also remember that Japan has agreed to return Shantung in time. We have no right to assume that she will not. Look all about these questions.

The Home Mission Campaign.

Brother Crawford, of our Synodical Home Missions, proposes to make a vigorous campaign in every Presbytery, but like a wise man, he is going to work on the pay-as-you-go principle. He is going to incur no debts, but will keep within financial bounds. He earnestly asks that you send him before Synod one-half of your April apportionment.

We hope that the pastors will respond loyally to this call, and that with a full purse he may be able to put forward the work within our bounds.

The Case of the Returned Soldier.

The returned soldiers in Canada are demanding better treatment than they are receiving, and there seems to be justice in their demands. At present they are receiving $600, paid in six months, but they are asking for a cash gratuity of $2,000 for each soldier who was on the battle front. They base their claim upon the fact that those who saw service made sacrifices far beyond those made by the men who remained at home, and moreover of those who stayed at home some heaped up immense fortunes by war profiteering, while others received wages far beyond what was paid to the soldier in service.

Now that they have come home, they find these slackers occupying the most desirable places, while the returned soldier is out of a job in many instances, and even if he has a job, he has lost several years of his life, and, in many cases, his health. "The name being changed, the fable is related of thee," to quote from an old writer. In every community we see the same condition of affairs.

The student who has returned from war finds that he has lost two years of most valuable time in his training. The young lawyer who at the call of his country returns to find his classmates established in practice and already settled for life, while he has to begin at the foot of the ladder and climb anew. The business man who left his business and spent two years on the front returns to find that business gone, while his competitor who shirked or else swore falsely as to the claims upon him, is now on the top wave of prosperity. Then the young men who gave up positions to enter the army and return to find that the promises of employment amount to nothing, and that slackers are given preference while the soldier boys tramp the street in a vain search for employment.

Since the people have forgotten their promises, it is time that the Government should help, especially in view of the fact that while the private in the filth and mud of the trenches was paid $30 a month, the mechanics at the home camps were receiving from $6 to $7 per day.

A Wise Move in Church Work.

A good friend recently intimated that the Standard dwelt too much upon the virtues of the past. Perhaps that charge has some truth in it, because there is much in the present upon which we do not like to dwell. We try to keep our eyes open to the good of the present, because we not only rejoice in the good of the present but we welcome it, because we have to live in the present. Some of the present day Church methods are not to our liking, we confess, but recently we read of one that commends itself to our good opinion.

Dr. B. R. Lacy, Jr., of the Central Church, Atlanta, believes that the theory of Presbyterian Church government can be made practical. He has organized his elders and deacons into visiting committees, and then he has divided the city into three sections, and these committees in this way visit every family in the Church. The unusualness of this proceeding may at first shock the people, as was the case once in Virginia when the elders of a certain church inaugurated a series of elder-visiting. One old lady who had a son in the far West, saw them coming, and as her only experience with elders as visitors had been when death had come to her home, she at once concluded that her son was dead, and therefore she greeted them at the door with weeping eyes.

However, the people will soon get accustomed to it, and it will do much to emphasize the idea that the Church of God is a family, bound together by mutual love. It is a great improvement on that perfunctory hand-shaking that prevails in some churches.

Contributed

The Approaching Synods and Union

An Open Letter to Laymen.

By Rev. Dunbar H. Ogden, D. D.

SOMETIME ago I received a letter from an intelligent layman asking certain questions, and suggesting that the information he desired be given through our papers to the church at large.

He wished to know just what basis of reunion had been proposed by the Northern committee in 1918, in other words what the Northern Church, through its committee, had said that it was willing to do. He said that he and the great body of members of the church did not have easy access to the minutes of the Assembly where doubtless this proposed basis of union would be found.

In view of the fact that the question of union is to come before our Synods this fall, it seems to me an opportune time to accede to his request, and also to answer a few kindred questions which just now are vital.

What Has the Northern Church Offered?

It is well known that the U. S. A. Church desires organic union rather than federation. The overlapping of congregations, presbyteries and synods, and the loss of efficiency through the division of forces, can scarcely be remedied through federation.

The State of South Carolina would not have political efficiency if all the blondes, all the brunettes, all the negroes, and all the foreigners, though occupying a common territory, were in separate systems of government, each with its own officials, courts, etc., united merely by a federation.

I do not understand that the U. S. A. Church insists upon simple organic union or consolidation, without any change in the number or the power of the church court. On the contrary, I am informed by representative men in that church that such is not the case.

In its base of union the U. S. A. committee definitely proposed to give larger powers to the Synods. "Art. 5. The Synods: The powers of Synods shall be so defined and exercised, and Synods may be so combined geographically as to secure the largest possible degree of constitutional, local self-government."

On every hand earnest men in the church and out of it are asking why the Presbyterian family does not get together. Federation would seem the proper bond for the great sister denominations, but something closer is appropriate for those who are members of the same household of faith. If we judge by the discussion on the floor of the Assembly and in the church papers, there are only two barriers to the union of the U. S. A. and the U. S. Churches. 1. The attitude of the Northern Church toward doctrinal unsoundness. 2. The position of that Assembly concerning the separation of Church and State.

It is important to know just what the U. S. A. committee said on these two points.

"Art. 2. The reunion shall be effected on the doctrinal and ecclesiastical basis of the Standards of the two Churches, and the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments shall be acknowledged to be the inspired Word of God, and the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and the Confession of Faith shall continue to be sincerely received and adopted as containing the system of doctrine taught in the Holy Scriptures."

"Art. 3. Subscription to the Standards. All candidates for ordination to the ministry must subscribe to the Westminster Standards as containing the System of Doctrine taught in the Holy Scriptures, which are still the terms of subscription as required by the Standards prior to 1861, and which were judiciously interpreted by the Assembly of 1910 as including acceptance of the Confessional Doctrines of the inspiration and inerrancy of the Scriptures, the Virgin birth, the Miracles, the atoning work and bodily resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, a deliverance which was reaffirmed by the Assembly of 1916."

"Art. 8. Church and State. While commending to all its members devoted loyalty to the nation and maintaining its duty of moral leadership, the reunited Church will continue to recognize the principals of the separation of Church and State, as first announced by the General Synod of the Presbyterian Church in 1729, and should maintain the spiritual character of the Church as separated from the kingdoms of this world, and having no other head than the Lord Jesus Christ."

With such statements made by the representative men who constitute the U. S. A. conference committee, it is difficult for some of us to understand why our committee deemed it proper to absolutely reject their proposals, and report to our Assembly that nothing could be done.

To offset these statements, some of our men are, at this time, using all diligence to discover the individual heretics of the Northern Assembly, and in our Church papers to exploit them. Thus far these heresy hunters have not bagged much game. Before passing judgment upon the alleged heretic, it would be well for us to be very sure that we know what he really believes. Dislocated sentences and hearsay testimony should not be tolerated.

What Plans Are in the Minds of Our Men?

Three general ideas have been discussed. (1), Federal Union; (2), Simple Organic Union; (3), Organic Union with the safeguarding of local self-government through a provincial Assembly, or by giving larger powers to the Synods.

Our recent committee of conference worked out a Federal scheme, which was presented to the Assembly in New Orleans and by a large majority rejected. Manifestly the plan was unworkable; it was organic union in everything except the one place where the shoe pinches—at that point no relief was given. Thus the friends of a Federal scheme have had their inning, and have failed to work out a plan which commends itself to the Church.

There are, I think, few who desire simple organic union. In a Church covering so vast a territory, with peculiar conditions to be met and peculiar problems to be solved in its various sections, there is need of a more flexible system, a system in which there would be very large authority over local matters given to courts lower than the General Assembly.

The great majority of the advocates of organic union favor the provincial Assembly or the Synodical plan. These plans agree in placing all the purely local affairs under the control of a court lower than the General Assembly. They stand for a real union of Presbyterian forces that will do away with overlapping and will bring a united power to bear upon our common tasks. At the same time, they safeguard the idea of local self-government in each section of the re-united Church.

Is There Danger of Dividing Our Church?

Numbers of men have said to me, "I am in favor of union, but I fear the disruption of our own Church." They fear what the other fellow will do.

In recent years we made a most conservative constitutional provision for the union of our Church with any other. The very men who are now warning us against division, were the ones who led in making this provision so conservative that in entering into any union, well nigh a unanimous vote is required.

Two Assemblies and three-fourths of our Presbyteries must approve a union before it becomes effective. Surely we are safe-guarded against division.

(Continued on page 8)

Korea and the Sunday Schools

OCTOBER 26, 1919.

Jno. I. Armstrong, Educational Secretary.

THE last Sunday in October is Foreign Mission Day, and every Sunday School should observe it in some way

Some schools observed May 25th or another convenient Sunday, using one or both of the programs prepared for that date. Some schools have used one or more of the three lessons on Korea prepared by Rev. P. B. Hill, formerly a missionary to Korea, and now pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Ky. Some schools have unveiled one or both of the pictures of Rev. W. M. Junkin and Dr. W. H. Forsythe, using effectively the interesting biographical sketches which accompany these pictures. Some schools have made good use of the unique map of Korea, showing our work there in detail, prepared by our missionary, Mr. Talmage. Some schools have made special use of the posters prepared by Mrs. Frances Heddleston Crane, of our Korea Mission. Some schools have made their own programs, based in part on the literature sent out from Nashville.

The schools that cannot conveniently use additional literature on October 26, might well have a period of special prayer for Korea, on that date. Never did the people of any land have more need for the prayers of our Sunday Schools. A year ago many of our own schools were closed for weeks on account of the influenza. Today in Korea many Sunday Schools are closed for reasons growing out of the disturbed condition of the country. Surely we can understand and sympathize with those whose Sunday Schools are closed. Let us not sin against God in failing or ceasing to pray for the Sunday Schools of Korea.

We can still supply copies of the programs that were prepared for May 25th, and will be glad to do so on request. Also stiff mite boxes and collection envelopes. We still have a few sets of the Korea posters and copies of the Korea map which we will be glad to send on request while the supply lasts.

The pictures of Mr. Junkin and Dr. Forsythe are 25 cents each post paid, and ought to be unveiled in every Sunday School.

Miss Eva M. Cavers, of California, Mo., has prepared for us a new program for October 26th called, "A Visit to Korea," and we are hoping that this program will be largely used.

A very interesting leaflet called, "The Women of Korea," written by the late Paul S. Crane, has just been published, and will be sent free on request, and a booklet of questions and answers on Korea are being put through the press, and will be sent on request without charge.

Many letters have been received expressing approval of the Korea literature. The following quotations will illustrate:

"I want to congratulate you on your program this year. We used it in connection with a talk by my brother, assisted by two young ladies in Korean costume, and numbers of people said it was the best celebration the school has ever attempted." B. B. Reynolds, Sup't Second Presbyterian Sunday School, Norfolk, Va.

"The Sunday School lessons on Korea prepared by Rev. P. B. Hill are a wonder. I am so pleased with them, for they contain one of the best written statements I have ever read, so true to life, and so interestingly written. Accept my congratulations. I have already extended them to Mr. Hill." Mr. M. L. Swinehart, Missionary, Kwanju, Korea.

Sunday Schools are taking more interest in Korea than they have taken in any other country since the Seven Year Plan was begun. On August 31st the receipts from Sunday Schools for Foreign Missions were $7,000.00 ahead of receipts on the same date last year, an increase of 50 per cent, and Korea literature has been used more extensively than any other literature we have issued. We have never before had such attractive posters as those by Mrs. Crane, and the other literature is more attractive than anything we have had also. A large number of Korea missionaries were at home on furlough during the first half of 1919, and many Sunday Schools had the privilege of visits from one or more of these missionaries. The efforts of the Koreans to secure their independence, and their treatment by the Japanese Government in Korea, have kept Korea in the public eye. All of these causes, and the growing influence of the Seven Year Plan have contributed to the general result.

It is earnestly hoped that no Sunday School will allow itself to miss the good it will get from observing October 26th, or allow Korea to suffer the loss she will sustain if any one of our Sunday Schools fail her in this hour of need. In God's plan every one of our Sunday Schools has something to do for Korea this year, something that will not be done if any school fails.

We have just received 100 copies of a new book, "The Korean Situation," giving authentic accounts of recent events by eye witnesses, which we can furnish postpaid, in in paper binding at 25 cents a copy.

Write at once to Jno. I. Armstrong, Educational Secretary, P. O. Box 330, Nashville, Tennessee, for information or literature.

"Christianizing Christendom."

By Rev. S. L. Morris, D.D.

This new book from this talented pen fails utterly to lower one whit the standard set in his peerless Home Mission treatise, "The Task That Challenges." This book is most timely and it immediately evinces its opportuneness by its succinct and thoughtful treatment of the thoughts that surge through every serious mind in these eventful days. It so often speaks our own conscious findings in terms more clear and forceful than we ourselves could frame. The boldness and daring of this book charms and amazes and sets one to lines of thought that lead if honestly followed to our definitely facing many neglected elements of personal duty. All the great demanding issues that we feel in this era of reconstruction are with marked saneness, force and clearness, frankly faced; and stern, real suggestions are offered for their solution. Many avoided and covered topics are thoroughly aired and given a healthful and helpful treatment. I have found few books of such sterling value and importance of content so irresistibly compelling in their sustained interest.

Samuel M. Glasgow.

Charleston, W. Va.

Dr. Campbell Morgan at Union Seminary.

Many inquiries continue to come in from ministers of our church as to the time of Dr. Morgan's James Sprunt lectures on "The Ministry of the Word," and in answer to these inquiries I would like to state again that they will be given in the Seminary Chapel on ten successive mornings at 11 a. m., beginning November 4, and that on the evenings of those days he will preach in some larger auditorium in the city. Inquiries have been made also as to the possibility of securing rooms and board on the Seminary campus during that period. Heretofore we have always had some rooms that we could offer ministers wishing to attend the Sprunt lectures, but our enrollment this year bids fair to be so large that we fear these accommodations cannot be had for any considerable number of visiting ministers. It may, however, be possible for us to accommodate a few; we cannot make any definite promise about it till our session opens on October 1. If there should then be any space left not occupied by our regular students, we shall be delighted to have as many of our ministers as possible with us during Dr. Morgan's lectures. We will publish an additional statement about it later.

W. W. Moore.

Four Million Campaign Managers' Conference

BY invitation of the Assembly's Systematic Beneficence and Stewardship Committee, charged with the execution of the Assembly's Four Million Campaign for Benevolence in 1920-1921, the Synodical Managers of the past year met in Chattanooga, Tenn., in the evening of September 16 and remained in conference until late in the afternoon of September 17.

Fourteen of the Synods were represented, only North Carolina, Snedecor Memorial, and West Virginia being unrepresented. Eleven members of the Assembly's Systematic Beneficence and Stewardship Committee were present. Rev. Dr. A. D. P. Gilmour, of South Carolina, was chairman and Rev. Dr. Fred Galbraith, of Texas, secretary. The first day's meeting was held in the sun-parlor of the Park Hotel, and the second day's meetings in the lecture-room of the First Presbyterian Church, where the pastor, Dr. J. W. Bachman, gave a hearty and hospitable welcome.

The conference was in no sense an executive or administrative body. Its findings were all in the nature of recommendations to the Assembly's Committee, and were discussions and comparisons of methods of work. Its great objective was the success of the coming campaign and the suggestion, from the experiences of its members, of plans and means by which to make that success. A docket prepared by a special committee of the Assembly's Committee guided the Conference. The range of discussion was far narrower than that of last year's similar Conference, at Morristown, the narrowing coming not from lessened interest or thought but from the experiences of a year in the objectives and operation of such campaign.

It was recommended that the title "Presbyterian Progressive Program" be given the campaign and that it be constantly used and emphasized. The special objectives agreed upon were the same as those of last year, and especially emphasizing the spiritual aspects and foundation of the work, and stressing its missionary, evangelistic, and educational outlook. To these ends special provision was made for the literature of the campaign and the widest possible distribution and use of such literature during the present autumn.

The Layman's Movement, represented by its secretary, Captain F. L. Slaymaker, presented a tentatively proposed program, with a view to holding a series of conventions, in six Synods. The idea was commended to all the Synods, through the Synodical Managers, and the whole matter was referred to the Campaign Committee.

Mrs. W. C. Winsborough, Superintendent of the Woman's Auxiliary, offered the fullest co-operation of that Auxiliary, for which a vote of thanks was given, with an earnest request that she see that provision is made for the full presentation of this work in the campaign at the fall meetings of the Synodical Auxiliaries.

The Conference heartily recommended to the Assembly's Committee the apportionment of $4,000,000 to the Synods, Presbyteries, and churches as proposed by the General Assembly at its last meeting, with an urgent request to the Presbyteries that in any changes or adjustments they may make in specific cases they see to it carefully that each Presbytery's quota be made fully equal to total apportioned to it. The Conference also voted that the Assembly's plan of distribution, in percentages, be followed by the Managers and Campaign Committees of all Synods, this distribution including the setting apart of sixty per cent for the general causes of the church and forty per cent for local benevolences of Synods, Presbyteries, and churches, the sixty per cent to be divided in the percentages indicated by the assembly.

It was recommended that when missionaries on furlough visit any church, Presbytery or Synod, to present the cause of foreign missions, they should not conclude their addresses without endeavoring to show that the best thing the church can do for the cause of foreign missions or other causes is to follow and emphasize the Presbyterian Progressive Program. It was recommended that the ideal way is for the church to support the Sabbath School financially, and that all offerings in the Sabbath School be distributed among the benevolences of the church; that written pledges made by elders and deacons of a church be accepted where it is inadvisable to make an Every Member Canvass; that Synods and Presbyteries be earnestly asked to place on their dockets, wherever practicable, conferences on Systematic Beneficence and Stewardship, and the Campaign Committee was asked to prepare programs for such conferences, and that the secretary be instructed to forward suggestive programs to the Stated Clerk of each Synod; that the Assembly's Committee accept the invitation of the Montreat Program Committee and provide a Presbyterian Progressive Program for July 24 to 31, 1920; and that the Manager's Conference be held at Montreat the same week.

Full attention was paid to such matters as the literature for the campaign, general and local advertising, and provision for campaign expenses. Special provision was made for Snedecor Memorial Synod. It was recommended that local newspaper advertising be left in the hands of local managers, but it was deemed inadvisable to make large use of space advertisements in local papers so far as Synodical Managers are concerned.

Every church was asked to devote three Sundays preceding the Every Member Canvass to the featuring and preparation for the campaign, that managers endeavor to have every church supplied in some way on those Sundays, and that in the campaign for 1920-21 all reports from the Presbyterial Managers be expected to be in the hands of the Synodical Manager by 8 p. m., April 6, and the reports of Synodical Managers be expected to be in the hands of the secretary of the Systematic Beneficence and Stewardship Committee by 10 p. m. of the same date.

An automobile ride to Signal Mountain and along Walden's Ridge, tendered by the Men's Club of the First Presbyterian Church, Chattanooga, was greatly enjoyed by the members of the Conference and Committee in the closing hours of the second day.

The Silver on the Iron Cross.

By Jas. I. Vance, D. D. Revell; 122 pages, 75c.

By Rev. A. S. Johnson, D.D.

"The American woman makes a fatal blunder who suffers her ideals to sag, as the boys come home; who imagines that the way to please the man who has been in France is to do as the French do. The American soldier may tolerate cigarette smoking in a Mademoiselle, but he looks for something different in the girl back home. He has seen the world and he returns to America with a discovery. He returns with an enthusiasm for the purity of American womanhood, and the sanctity of American family life. Woe to the woman who thinks to win him by cheapening herself."

This is one of the challenging paragraphs from the best book in the estimation of the writer that has come from the gifted pen of Dr. Vance. When Dr. Vance went overseas we expected a record of his stewardship but he has surpassed himself, he has crystalized in small compass the finest sentiments of the blood sodden fields of Europe and with a matchless art of painting pictures with words, he has glorified the commonplace with his rhetoric and with a fine sense of proportion the principals of the gospel are woven in, in such a way that the sheen of silver does actually shine out from the somber iron of war. The author never loses sight of his ministry and where he touches the realm of religion it is the "old gospel" with none of its saving power decreased because of the ravages of war. However, he has written in these chapters of other things, accurately, forcefully and always delightfully, in the same simple style that has character-

An Appeal to the Christian World

(Translation)

We, the undersigned pastors and elders, representing the half-million Christians in Korea, who are being persecuted by the cruel Japanese Government, hereby appeal to our fellow Christians of all lands.

Korea existed as an independent nation for more than four thousand years, with a distinct language, culture and civilization, until the year 1910, when she was annexed to Japan at the point of the sword, contrary to the will and desire of the Korean people. Ever since the annexation, we, the Christians of Korea, have been the principal sufferers. As is already known to the world, the work of the Christian Church in Korea was progressing with a remarkable degree of success, but since the annexation, the work of the Church has been interfered with in every possible way by the Japanese, and the Christians have been subjected to constant persecutions. The notorious "Conspiracy Case" of 1912 is an outstanding example of the legalized persecution of the Church. The Christian leaders have been tortured, imprisoned and murdered. Bibles and other Christian literature have been burned and destroyed, and our children in the Mission Schools have been subjected to insults and mockery by the invaders.

In order to check the advance of Christianity, the Japanese authorities have given encouragement to the activities of various heathen cults in Korea, and have even introduced a spurious Christian organization that does not believe or practice true Christian principals. While they encourage the building of temples for Buddhist and Shintoists, they are burning down Christian Churches whenever and wherever they can.

In spite of all these persecutions, the Korean Christians energetically continued to build up "The Kingdom of God" in Korea. They trained workers, built churches, and sent missionaries to China, Japan, Siberia and neighboring countries. The stronger the Church grows the fiercer the opposition on the part of Japan.

The Japanese Government has been telling the world that the Koreans are satisfied and prospering under the Japanese rule and cleverly and cunningly hid the truth of Korean martyrdom from the outside world. During all these years of bondage they have never lost their ardent love for their country and their faith in Christ.

During the four years of the World War the Koreans heard with joy the echo of the guns of the Allied Powers, which they believed were for the rights and liberty of all nations. They passionately believe in the great principle of self-determination as advocated by President Wilson. Therefore, when the great war ended, with victory for the democratic nations, we believed that the time had come when the Koreans would receive their share of justice from the hands of the victorious Christian nations.

On March 1, 1919, our entire nation declared its independence from the Japanese rule. It was the united voice of 20,000,000 people. They did no violence to the Japanese, nor did they break any laws. We purposely held ourselves free from the charge of using physical force. We simply organized a pacific demonstration, shouting "Mansei" for the independence of Korea.

For this reason the Japanese have massacred and tortured our people in a most ruthless manner. From the Governor-General down to the lowest officials, the Japanese have determined to crush out this independence movement by force ized all of his work, true, honest and unvarnished. Two chapters of the book should have made it worth while—viz, "A Soldier's Grave" and "Holy Communion in Wildcat Hut," but why differentiate? It has fewer "cuss words" than any book the writer has seen that tries to portray the "dough-boy" not as he ought to be but as he is, and withal "The Silver on the Iron Cross" is far and away the best book of its kind that we have seen come out of this world struggle.

of arms. They have brought two more divisions and six battalions of troops, and four hundred gendarmes into Korea, in addition to the former garrison of four divisions, in order to subdue the unarmed Koreans. The Japanese soldiers are committing all sorts of barbarous acts which have been partly reported to the Mission Boards and to the State Department in Washington.

We, the Christians, are the principal victims. The barbarous soldiers are plundering the Christians' homes, beating old women and insulting young girls of tender years. They have dragged the girls from the Mission Schools through the streets, after stripping them of their clothing before the crowd. Many of the churches have been burned and most of the Mission Schools have been closed. In some places, the Bibles have been taken from the Christian homes and burned. Most of the leading pastors and elders have been either imprisoned or killed.

God knows all this and the foreign missionaries are eye-witnesses. The Korean Church is passing through the most critical period of its history. We sincerely need your prayers and your support. Will you help us?

Yours in Christ,

Son Chung Do, Kim Byung Cho, Ahn Syung Won, Chang Dug No, Lee Won Ik, Kim Syung Man, Cho Sang Sup, Pai Byung Seh, Cho Bo Kyun, Chang Poong, Kim Se Hyuk. Pastors and Elders.

In Memory of Rev. T. M. Hawes, D. D.

By Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D.D., Secretary.

With deep appreciation of its serious loss, the Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief sorrowfully records the death of Rev. T. M. Hawes, D.D., who, since the consolidation of the work of education for the ministry and ministerial relief in 1904, has been a faithful, efficient and devoted member of this committee.

Although Dr. Hawes was professor of oratory in the Baptist Theological Seminary, and held the same chair in the Kentucky Presbyterian Theological Seminary, and was pastor of the largest Presbyterian Church in the Synod of Kentucky, he found time to attend the meetings of the committee and took a most active interest in all matters referred to it by the General Assembly.

The following resolutions were adopted at the meeting of the executive committee on September 22, 1919, at the office in Louisville, Ky.:

1. That in the death of Dr. Hawes the executive committee has lost one of its most faithful and helpful members.

2. That the tender appeals so often heard on the floor of the committee by Dr. Hawes that more even justice be given to our faithful ministers, and the needy widows and orphans of our deceased ministers, should stir the hearts of the committee and of the Church to greater efforts in their behalf.

3. That the committee feels its deep loss in this wise counsellor, faithful friend, diligent worker and happy encourager.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his wife, who for more than forty years has labored so faithfully by his side, published in the Church papers, and spread on the minutes of the executive committee.

(Signed) W. H. Hopper, C. F. Huhlein, Brainard Lemon, W. J. Rubel, A. J. A. Alexander, Wade Sheltman, W. Y. Davis, Dunbar H. Ogden, G. H. Mourning, John Stites.

So long as our scheme of life makes self first in the hunt, so long is peace impossible.

"Christianizing Christianity."

By Rev. R. F. Kirkpatrick, D. D.

THIS is the third book on Home Missions from the facile pen of our gifted executive secretary of Assembly's Home Missions, Rev. S. L. Morris, D.D., LL.D., and in many respects it is the best of them all. It differs materially from those that have preceded it, and shows that Dr. Morris, in the development of our Assembly's Home Mission policy, is fully abreast of the marked changes that have been taking place within the past decade or two.

The author notes out that with these changes there has actually taken place a change in our Home Mission task. It is no longer a matter of pioneering, carrying the gospel to the frontier along with the rapidly advancing tide of civilization as it spreads over the continent, but it is now very largely the problem of consolidating the positions already won through the heroic efforts of our devoted self-sacrificing Home Missionaries. America has been practically evangelized, but there remains if possible the even larger undertaking of Christianizing it. How great is the need of Christianizing Christendom Dr. Morris points out in a very convincing and impressive manner in his first chapter.

Chapter 2, Christianity and Co-operation, presents just the information about the aggressive work of our Church as it is being carried on through the various agencies of our Assembly that our people need to have, and yet that is nowhere else as easily available as here.

In Chapter 5, the author presents a very sane and timely discussion of Christianity and Unity, in which he lays down principals that ought to be very helpful as our Church approaches the consideration of the question of some closer relation with other Presbyterian bodies in this country.

Particular attention should be called to Chapter 6 and 7. In Chapter 6, the author takes up the question of Christianity and Over-Churching, and in dealing with this present day problem he presents a wealth of facts and statistics that will be welcomed by all who have been troubled by the charge of over-churching. It shows conclusively that after all there has been very little over-churching, but on the contrary a vast amount of "over-looking." This chapter ought to be read by everyone who would be intelligent about one of the real problems of modern Home Mission work.

Chapter 7 deals with the race problem, and is a very helpful, sane, frank discussion of the whole question of aliens in our midst, and particularly the relationship of the white and negro races.

But you must get the book and read it for yourself if you would have any just appreciation of its timeliness and the value of the information that it presents. This book is sure to be widely used in Home Mission study classes during this fall and winter, ought to be read in every Presbyterian home in our Assembly. It is a volume of 204 pages, neatly bound, and published by the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va., and can be had for 40 cents paper bound, cloth 60 cents.

Atlanta, Ga.

The Approaching Synods and Union.

(Continued from Page 4)

More important than ecclesiastical law is the spirit in which we discuss and decide the issue. Cutting words should have no place. It is a blessed fact that in our Southern Church such words invariably act as a boomerang, destroying the one who uses them.

And yet it is true of men as of boys, that the fellow who is losing the fight gets mad. We shall therefore have to expect and be prepared to overlook sharp words now and then.

What is the Issue Before Our Synods?

The Assembly authorized the appointment by the Moderator of a committee of conference, one of whose members was to be chosen by each of our Synods. Thus the question of union has been made a living one for our Synods this fall.

It is a test of attitude rather than of judgement as to

The Name of Our Church.

The first General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church met in Augusta, Georgia, Dec. 4th, 1861, and one of its first acts was to adopt a resolution offered by Dr. Thornwell, "That the Style and Title of this Church shall be, The Presbyterian Church in the Confederate States of America." Under this name four meetings of the General Assembly were held. Owing to the condition of the country at the disastrous end of the war, the Assembly could not meet in the Spring of 1865. During the fall of that year Dr. Flinn Dickson of Orangeburg, S. C., who had just returned from a visit in the North, came to Columbia, which at that time was one of the head-centers of the Church, and brought a message to us from brethren whom he named, at Princeton, Brooklyn and vicinity. The message was to this effect, that beginning with the action of their Assembly of 1861, which caused the withdrawal of the Southern members, the Church had gone so far astray along political lines in violation of the Constitution (Confession of Faith, Chapter XXXI), that they felt they no longer had a Church. They declared that their sympathies were wholly with the Southern Church, its doctrines and its principals; that it alone offered them a congenial Church home, and that nothing was left them but to cast in their lot with us. Inasmuch, therefore, as the name of the Church must necessarily be changed, the Confederate States having no longer an existence, they requested that no local or provincial name be chosen, but one under which it might extend North, and include them and others of like mind with themselves.

The Assembly met soon afterwards in Macon, Georgia, (Dec. 14th., 1865) and was made acquainted with these facts. Largely, if not wholly, out of respect to these brethren of the North, and in deference to their wishes, the name was given which the Church still bears, The Presbyterian Church in the United States.

For years we waited for these brethren to fulfill the expectation which they had created by taking some step towards union with us, but we waited in vain. We heard nothing more from them. Their Church continued to make political deliverances, as it does to this day; but they probably found it easier to submit and silently acquiesce in what they could not help, than to break off existing relations and form another which would not have been popular in those days. But we have friends in the North who approve of the stand which our Church has taken for a strict construction of the constitution, the spirituality of the Church, and the crown rights of Jesus Christ, and who agree with us that our Church's testimony can be made most effective by maintaining the separate position in which it has been placed by Divine providence.

Danville, Ky.

E. M. G.

specific plans.

If our Synods are willing frankly to face the great question of relationship between the Presbyterian Churches with the desire that some safe and definite plan of practical co-operation or of union be worked out, they will place on the committee strong, forward-looking men. By all means there should be on the committee, a number of able, progressive Elders.

If the Synods feel that nothing can be done or should be done, if they are unwilling to face the issue, they will probably indicate that attitude by electing to membership on this committee, men who, so far as this matter is concerned, have closed minds.

For the first time our Assembly has authorized the appointment of a committee to confer with a similar committee of the U. S. A. Church upon the entire subject of closer relations, including all possible forms of union.

It seems to have been the desire of the Assembly to face frankly the whole problem, and if possible to solve it. In this action the Assembly was but giving voice to the sentiment which for years has been growing stronger in the heart of our Church.

Louisville, Ky.

Story and Incident

Millinery, P. G.

GOOD POINTS, BAD POINTS, AND GETTING ON WITH FOLKS.

"BETCHER life, I won't find any boss harder to please than Miss Durland!"

Her own name, floating up from the street, caught the ear of Emily Durland as she sat wearily at her desk. In the street below rioted a group of her own pupils. One of them held in his hand a newly granted work-certificate, around which the crowd scuffled. Fragments of conversation drifting up sent the color flaming into her face.

"I ain't comin' back next year, neither. Can't stand her any longer!"

"Never can suit her. If your spellin' 's all right, then the writin' 's wrong. If the writin' 's good, then she makes an everlastin' fuss 'cause you left out a comma. I'm sick of it."

"I can get a job drivin' a wagon. I'd sooner have that than try to suit her. No kickin' mule can beat her when it comes to layin' you out."

"I'm goin' to try for messenger in the brewery. Uncle Tim's there, and he thinks he's got enough pull to get me in."

Indignant tears stung the young teacher's eyes. "It's not my fault," she told herself. "I'm not driving them from school."

Another group of pupils came up the street, halted to examine the work-certificate. Again voices floated up, voices that she did not recognize.

"I'm not going to work. Dad wanted me to, but Miss Sally went to see him, and begged him to let me go on into the high school."

"Me too. I didn't get very good marks, but I passed. Miss Sally says she knows I won't shame her in the high school; and I promised her I wouldn't. So you see I've got to make good, 'cause I gave my word."

"I'm going to be a civil engineer, and Miss Sally says they have a slick course in mechanical drawing in the high school."

Here heavy footsteps in the hall sent the teacher back to her work. The door was opened by a woman whom Emily recognized as the mother of one of her pupils. Her visitor came straight to the point. "Why'd you flunk my Millie?"

Miss Durland raised her level eyebrows slightly. "Because she only made seventy. Seventy-five is passing-mark."

"Well, what of that?" persisted Mrs. Cosgrove.

"Don't you understand, Mrs. Cosgrove," monotoned Emily, "that seventy-five is the passing-mark, and that Mildred made only seventy? She will have to take the grade over next year, when she will, I trust, be much better prepared to enter the high school."

"Well, what did you give her seventy for? That's what I come to find out. Couldn't you 'a' give her more if you'd 'a' wanted to? Tim Morris is in Miss Sally Carpenter's room and she gave him passin'-mark, and ain't half as smart as Millie; and now he can go up to the high school, and he says he's goin' to be a lawyer; and my Millie didn't pass!" Mrs. Cosgrove dropped down into the seat in front of the teacher's desk, while her tears began to flow. "You're only a bit of a girl yourself; so I couldn't expect you to understand. Millie said it 'u'd be no use to come. But I thought you might be different and have a heart, and that you'd understand and change her mark when I told you about what a good girl Millie was, and how hard she'd studied, and how she'd made me go to bed while she set up nights when the baby was sick last week durin' examination, and jest worried with him most all night. I thought you'd understand and change her mark."

"I'm very sorry, my good woman," recited Emily calmly. "But although this was very hard for Mildred, and I'm exceedingly sorry for her, yet I don't see how I could change her marks for any such reasons as you've given. Grades are given according to the knowlege of the pupils as shown by examination. It really doesn't matter why Mildred failed; she did fail, as her marks show."

"Doesn't matter about Millie failin'!" cried Mrs. Cosgrove despairingly. As she turned to leave the room, she said with real dignity: "I've washed and scrubbed to keep Millie in school because I wanted her to have a better chance than I've had. And I'd go on doin' it gladly. I'd work my fingers to the bone for her, but now it's no good." Mrs. Cosgrove was crying audibly now. "She'll never set foot in school again. She's goin' to work. She's old enough, and she got her work-certificate this week. And she's got a job in the World millinery-store."

There was nothing for Emily to say. "I'm sorry, Mrs. Cosgrove," would have fallen on deaf ears. It was a passing-grade, not sympathy, that Mrs. Cosgrove wanted. So Emily saw her rise disconsolately and leave the room without another word; heard the heavy feet pass up the hall and down the stairs, and even sat and watched her drag slowly up the street. Then she drew out Mildred's examination-papers, and went over them once more; but she was a careful, painstaking grader; so in no way could she stretch her conscience to feel that the papers deserved more than seventy-three at the very most.

"I'll not do it," she declared to herself. "I've made a reputation for good work, and I'll not let down my standards to squeeze into the high school a girl who would bring me discredit."

Thoughtfully she turned over the leaves of her records. "So few of my class going into the high school!" she mused. "I wonder why. Sally Carpenter says that most of her class will go in. Mine that go are fine, well-prepared pupils, an ornament to any school. But Sally Carpenter's! Such an ill prepared mob as they must be!"

Soberly Emily went down the street. The words heard still lingered in her ears, and visions of Mildred rose before her. With but a half-formed purpose in her mind she turned into the World millinery-store, and asked to see the girl.

"She's attending the school for apprentices. There's a lecture on salesmanship this afternoon," the floor-walker told her. "This is a new plan we're trying out. Our people are being taught how to sell goods. Mr. Monroe, who gives this course, is a crackerjack. The lectures cost a good deal, but we find that the increase in the sales by our people more than repays the expenses of the lectures. Go up. I think you'll be interested."

Emily found the room well filled with clerks listening intently to a young man who was saying with great earnestness: "Suppose your job 's to sell hats. To do so, you must have your customers in a good temper. That's the first thing. No woman looks well in a hat, or anything else, if she doesn't feel pleasant; so you keep her pleasant. Be pleasant yourself. Smile. Don't grin; smile. Be interested in your customers, not critical of them. See their best points. When a woman comes in, give her one good look. Never mind her bad features. Your job 's to find her best ones and through the right hat to bring them out—for all you're worth. Don't let her put a hat on her head that she won't look well in. It may be good for her soul to know how little there is in her face that she can be proud of; but you're not here to teach humanity to people, but to sell hats. You want to see to it that you keep every hat in the store that would be unbecoming to her off her head; so that even if you fail to sell her one, she will say to her friends, 'What a becoming lot of hats they have in the World millinery-store!' And then if she can also say, 'And the most obliging, pleasant clerks I ever saw,' she is likely to come back the next day and buy the hat you nearly sold her before. Like as not she'll bring a friend with her, who'll also buy a hat. I tell you, people," he cried with rising enthusiasm, "there's nothing like a millinery clerk's job to make pleasant people. If you're not pleasant and helpful, you can't sell hats; and if you can't sell hats

(Continued on Page 24)

News of the Week

Wm. C. Bullitt having stated before the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate that Secretary Lansing had said in Paris that if the American people knew what was in the treaty, they would defeat it, the Secretary himself has this to say. "The treaty should be ratified without delay and without change."

The ex-Kaiser's kitchen outfit which followed him over the front has been shipped to the Smithsonian Institute.

The convention of United Mine Workers of America in convention recently developed its plan for the nationalization of coal mines, which includes purchase by the Federal Government of all private mines at their actual value as determined by Federal appraisers and operations by the Federal Government, with equal miner representation upon the bodies administering the industry and fixing wages and conditions of employment.

Eleven survivors of the sunken steamer Bayronto were rescued and brought to Tampa after drifting six days in an open boat.

Steady increase in the market value of Liberty bonds and the maintenance of an interest rate not greater than $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent on future issues of Government certificates are expected in treasury circles to result from the excellent conditions of the Government's fiscal program.

General Pershing and Secretary of War Baker have been invited to attend the reunion of the Thirtieth Division, but both have been compelled by other duties to decline.

The recent terrible storm that swept over Corpus Christi, Texas, seems to have been a catastrophe of great magnitude. The property damage was more than $20,000,000, with the death list growing.

Marvin Ritch, an attorney of Charlotte, N. C., and J. A. Graham, textile organizer of Concord, were tried at Albemarle upon the charge of inciting riot, and bound over to the November term of Stanley County Superior Court.

Congress intervened in the great steel strike by directing the Senate labor committee to institute an immediate investigation to ascertain "if the situation can in any way be relieved by Federal action."

Director General Hines warns shippers that a serious car shortage is imminent, unless every effort is made to expedite the movement of equipment.

Though the steel workers' strike is spreading over the country, the mills at Birmingham, Ala., are still operating on full time.

Postmaster General Burleson, in a letter to Speaker Gillett, denies that he influenced the Civil Service Commission in the rating of eligible appointees for postmasters of first, second and third class offices.

A Republican from Iowa has offered a resolution asking the State Department to furnish a list of all presents tendered the President from King, Prince or foreign States.

According to those attending the anniversary meeting of the Wilmington-Charlotte-Asheville Highway, the dream of a hard-surface highway will become a reality. Judge Pritchard delivered the address.

President Wilson has been compelled by impaired health to cancel all engagements and return to Washington. The strain under which he has been since the opening of the peace negotiations has affected his digestion and his physician has ordered a rest.

Dunn, N. C., is to have a modern hotel costing $125,000. This will be glad news to the travelling men.

Major General J. F. O'Ryan, who commanded the Twenty-seventh division, will attend and make a speech at the reunion of the Thirtieth Division at Greenville, S. C.

Educational

The Albemarle Normal and Industrial Institute opened its twenty-fourth session September 11, under very auspicious circumstances.

The buildings had been made ship-shape under the supervision of Mrs. Elva Harris, Superintendent, Miss Milton, Matron, and Mrs. Hinton, Nurse. Several girls had arrived before the opening day for the purpose of working to help meet their expenses.

The enrollment was so large that it was necessary to rent all available rooms from neighbors, and to crowd the sleeping rooms beyond the point of comfort. The three sleeping porches helped out, but still Mrs. Harris was obliged to refuse many who sought entrance, placing them on a waiting list. With dormitory accommodations for fifty, it will be readily realized what crowding it took, when there are eighty-two and room at neighboring homes for twenty.

The dining room is equally crowded; it is necessary for some to eat at a second table, thus delaying the domestic work, which is all done by pupils.

With the teaching force necessary to handle the nine grades represented, more pupils could easily be accommodated in the classes if there were space to board and lodge them.

May the educational Campaign soon make it possible to take all who want to come and who need the uplifting influence of the school and the educational advantages it gives.

Davidson—"A Greater and a Better Davidson," the slogan of the Greater Davidson club, seems to be in evidence everywhere on the campus and outside thereof. Not only

(Continued on page 23)

"Abuse of Scripture."

By W. K. McCoy, M. D.

In your leading editorial in the recent issue of the Standard, under the title "Abuse of Scripture," you have said exactly what I have wished to express and you have done it far better than I could have done.

An eminent minister used to say "It is a fearful thing to preach nonsense in the name of the Lord." It is a more fearful thing to teach lies in the name of the Lord, and that is, in plain terms, just what the editors of our Sabbath School literature are guilty of when they wrest the plain meaning of Scripture by their perverse and exparte interpretations.

Is there no way to censor these publications within our own Church? And is there no means by which these perverse exegetes may be called to account. I am superintending a small school, and sometimes the duty of instructing the Bible class falls on me. In the case of the lesson for Aug. 31, I cut the Gordian knot by suspending the school for that day; not wishing to stand alone and denounce the dishonesty of the lesson-comment, as I should have been bound in all conscience to do had the classes been allowed to assemble.

Unless the lessons of the Sabbath School conform to truth the schools will certainly become agencies of destruction, which the head of the Church will destroy with the breath of His mouth.

Marvin Ritch, who has obtained much gratuitous advertising by reason of his connection with the strike at Albemarle and his recent trial, proposes to capitalize that fame by running for Congress.

It is reported that Japan is planning officially to invite China to confer on the Shantung situation after Japan has ratified the Peace Treaty.

The Prayer Meeting

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

FOREIGN MISSIONS—Rom. 10:14-15.

The problems of missions have been the same from the beginning. God through our Lord Jesus had made every provision for the salvation of the world, so that "whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." Jesus had laid the Great Commission upon the heart and conscience and loyalty of the Church: and at once the problems and the difficulties emerged. "How shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent?"

These are the burning words which emerge continually from every mission center—from every devoted committee, from every missionary, from the lips of Jesus. The astonishing thing is that these words have for centuries evoked comparatively little response. The story of the young man who presented himself before a Scotch Presbytery begging to be sent as a missionary, only to be ordered by the moderator to sit down, with the comforting assurance that when the Lord wanted the heathen saved He would save them "without your help or mine," is typical of the lethargic response of the Church to the missionary heart and marching orders of her Lord.

There is one particularly noticeable thing: the men have been ready before the money was offered. The Church has offered its life sooner than its money. This should fill the thousands at home with shame. The cry—the appeal is always for money. Our committee is always in debt though our people have an abundance, and spend on trifles a hundred times what they contribute to send the missionaries to the ends of the earth. The New Testament idea and obligation is that we lay by at the first of the week as the Lord has prospered us. If in our loyalty and love to Jesus we would only do this, not only our present, but a very much larger mission force could be sent out and maintained on the field, and every mission activity also would be amply furnished.

Then they could hear the gospel, then they could believe, then they could call on him on whom they have believed, then they would find salvation.

The astonishing and the sad fact is that out of their abounding resources the Lord's people have not been willing to furnish the money for this great enterprise.

But there is back of this fact another fact yet more startling and alarming. That fact is that the Great Commission has fallen upon deaf ears and unresponsive hearts.

How can one account for this? Perhaps several causes might truthfully be mentioned. One is an intellectual failure to grasp the necessity of the enterprise and the glory of it.

Another reason is the potency of prejudice and racial antipathy.

Another reason is the engrossment of the average man in the daily round, and the consequent myopia.

What is imperatively needed is vision, sympathy with Christ, a new apprehension of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Then indeed would the parting words of Christ linger with authority and power in our hearts; our young people would offer themselves gladly for this great work, and our people would fill the coffers of our Nashville committee. "How beautiful are the feet of them that bring glad tidings of good things!" and this beauty would rejoice both those who give and those who receive.

Christian Endeavor

By Rev. S. H. Hay.

M., Oct. 6—Civic Justice: Prov. 24:23-26.
T., Oct. 7—Honest Labor: Prov. 24:27-34.
W., Oct. 8—Paying Our Share: Matt. 17:24-27.
T., Oct. 9—Supporting Authority: Rom. 13:1-7.
F., Oct. 10—Training in Restraint: Tit. 3:1-8.
S., Oct. 11—Pray Even For Sodom: Gen. 18:20-33.

* * *

Topic for Sunday, Oct. 12—Training in Citizenship—
1 Pet. 2:11-20. (Citizenship Day.)

* * *

Good citizenship is made up of proper behavior in all the departments of life. It is what the scientists call a "synthesis," which means a throwing together of parts into a whole. A good citizen lives right in the home, in his business, in his outings, in his personal habits, and in his church life. If he is defective in any of these he is a defective citizen. He may be very valuable in spite of his defectiveness, but he is not as valuable as he could be. In order therefore to be trained in citizenship we must be trained in the respective departments of life. We cannot sweep a house except by sweeping the rooms and halls that make up the house, can we?

We must learn, first, to do our full part in the home. This is the foundation stone upon which the rest of our citizenship reposes. Almost everybody has a home of some sort, particularly in childhood. Unless we learn dutifulness, obedience to authority, unselfishness, fairness, and clean-heartedness in the home, the probability is our citizenship will come down with a crash that ends in useless vagabondage or the penitentiary. And let us never suppose that tramps are the only useless vagabonds, or that jailbirds are the only criminals. So called respectable society is full of them. And we may ourselves be found such some day, if we do not learn in the home the first principals of good citizenship.

We learn citizenship by our studies and our experiences at school. And we ought not to forget that we learn more of the particular business of citizenship by our experiences—such as obeying authorities, "giving and taking" in personal associations, exhibiting a loyal school spirit, and so forth—than we do from the actual books themselves. There is no place better than the school for learning not to be a crank and not to be unfair and snobbish. The yellow streak will show at school if we have it in us. If we learn to allow ourselves to be yellow there, we shall never recover from the disease—it will crop out and brand us when we are grown.

We must not overlook our church and Sunday School as agencies to fit us for good citizenship. While these agencies are giving us the larger benefits of a savior and a hope of heaven for the world to come, they also help us forward to a better life all along the line right here in this world. The church and Sunday School are the true teachers of the Bible, from which all our great ideas of righteousness are drawn, and the church has the Holy Spirit to give us power to put the moral code into action. If the church were to disappear, nine-tenths of all good citizenship would also disappear over night, and civilization would settle back into the miserable thing the world was full of before our Savior came. Let us all who love good citizenship stand by the church.

* * *

Tell what qualities you think made Jesus a good citizen.

Tell why a good citizen of our own country should be considerate of the interests of other countries also. What is world citizenship?

We govern ourselves by the ballot. Tell why we should not neglect or handle it thoughtlessly.

Sunday School

By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.

OCTOBER 5, 1919

Peter and John Become Disciples of Christ

Lesson John 1:29-42

GOLDEN TEXT—"Jesus . . . saith unto him, Follow me"—John 1:43

29 The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith

Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.

30 This is he of whom I said, After me cometh a man which is preferred before me: for he was before me.

31 And I knew him not: but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water.

32 And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him.

33 And I knew him not, but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost.

34 And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God.

35 Again the next day after John stood, and two of his disciples:

36 And looking upon Jesus as he walked, he saith, Behold the Lamb of God!

37 And the two disciples heard him speak, and they follow

Jesus.

38 Then Jesus turned and saw them following, and saith unto them, What seek ye? They said unto him, Rabbi, (which is to say being interpreted, Master,) where dwellest thou?

39 He saith unto them, Come and see. They came and saw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day: for it was about the tenth hour.

40 One of the two which heard John speak, and followed him, was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother.

41 He first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith unto him,

We have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ.

42 And he brought him to Jesus. And when Jesus beheld him, he said, Thou art Simon the Son of Jona; thou shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, A stone.

Men are influenced as to their choice and conduct by many agencies. Sometimes it is by the command of one having authority. As the parent controls the child or the master the servant. At times it is by persuasion as the statesman wins men to his opinion by an appeal to their reason and emotions. Frequently human beings are led to conviction and action by testimony. The jury is caused to convict a criminal by the testimony of two or more competent witnesses. In our present lesson we have several examples of the power of testimony to influence human conduct in matters of religion. In considering this passage, we may contemplate, John the Baptist's Testimony to Christ, His Two Disciples Led to Jesus, Coming Near Christ, Convincing of His Claims, and Peter Brought to Jesus.

I. John the Baptist's Testimony to Christ.

John was the predicted Herald of Messiah and fully competent to declare his essential attributes and functions. He affirms that He is God's atoning sacrifice. "The Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." He attests His character as a sacrificial sufferer and the efficacy of His atonement for removing guilt. He asserts His superiority to himself because "He was before him." He declares that he came baptizing with water "to manifest Him to Israel." He testifies that "He Who sent him to baptize with water" affirmed that Messiah shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost, the outward sign being a dove resting upon Him, and that He shall baptize others with the Holy Spirit. Finally John bears witness to Jesus as the Son of God. He says "I saw and bear record that this is the Son of God." John's testimony reaches from the cross to the throne. He presents Jesus as "The Lamb of God" atoning for sin, as the Messiah of prophecy, as the Baptizer with the Holy Ghost and as a Divine Person. He describes Jesus as God, incarnate, coming down from the throne to the cross to save humanity from sin and to give it a Divine exaltation.

II. John the Baptist's Two Disciples Led to Christ.

One of these was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, and the other was probably John the Apostle, the author of this gospel. They were primarily induced to seek Christ by John the Baptist's testimony to Christ as "The Lamb of God." John had introduced Him to Israel as the Messiah. If he was as John affirmed, "The Lamb of God," He could make a complete atonement for sin and meet a felt want of their nature. As they looked on Jesus in accord with John's direction, they timidly ask the question, "Master, where dwellest Thou?" They would fain know His abode and become better acquainted with Him. They receive a gracious and most encouraging answer, "Come and see." When did Jesus ever fail to encourage an earnest inquirer? Does He not always verify His promise "If any man will do His will He shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself?" Jesus not only invites but He says to these two disciples, "Ye shall see." He fulfilled His promise and gave them not only physical vision of His abode, but spiritual discernment of His character and functions. After abiding with Him two hours, from the tenth to the twelfth hour, they are fully satisfied that He is the Messiah, able to meet all their moral needs.

III. Coming Near to Jesus Convinces of His Claims.

Jesus makes exalted claims. He claims to be a perfect man, truly God, Immanuel, the Messiah, the only Saviour of humanity. These two disciples of John the Baptist were not fully satisfied as to Jesus' character by the testimony of their Master. But when they had drawn near and communed with Jesus, themselves, they were completely convinced. It is so now. If men are earnest inquirers as to whether Jesus is the Saviour of the world, let them draw near to Him in pondering His word, in the sanctuary, and in sincere prayer and they shall realize in a precious personal experience that He is the Divine Saviour, who has saved me from the love and willing practice of sin. Like the Samaritans, brought to Christ by the testimony of the woman at the well, they can say, "We have heard Him ourselves and know that this indeed is the Christ, the Saviour of the world."

IV. Peter Brought to Jesus.

The agent was his brother Andrew. Convinced that Jesus was the Christ, one of the first things He did was to seek his brother Peter and say, "We have found the Messiah." By His testimony, his example, and perhaps by persuasion "He brought him to Jesus." It was perhaps the most important work ever done by Andrew. He was not very conspicuous among the apostles, for talent or service. But, Peter was a noted leader among his brethren during Christ's public ministry, at Pentecost, and in planting the Church among Jews and Gentiles. When brought to Him the Lord confers on Simon, the name of Peter or Cephas, meaning stone, and expressing that steadfastness he was to attain by Divine Grace.

Concord Presbytery on the Dance.

The following was unanimously adopted by a rising vote and ordered to be read in all the churches as an expression of the moral judgment of the Presbytery of Concord, in session at Unity Church, September 17, 1919:

The Presbytery affirms its condemnation of the dance of today as a moral and spiritual evil void of extenuating elements. The formal and timely stand of the faculty of Davidson College and the board of trustees of Mitchell College during the past school year for the effectual prohibition of this sin among students of these colleges is worthy of all praise. The example of these institutions is commended to the churches, all of which ought to have inner moral strength sufficient for like effective action where needed. There seems to be a disposition among church people in some quarters to acquiesce in the invasion of the church by this sin. The Presbytery goes on record as wholly declining to acquiesce in this matter. We deem "lascivious" and in definite violation of the spirit of the seventh commandment all dances wherein there is great physical intimacy and in particular where the arms of the dancers partly or wholly encircle persons of opposite sex, unless such intimacy be morally permissible by reason only of some natural bond of near relationship. The Presbytery furthermore urges upon the sessions of all churches within its bounds the utmost endeavor, where needed, to repel the dance from the practice of church members.

Home Circle

HOW WE HAVE SOLVED THE SUNDAY AFTER-NOON PROBLEM.

Since my youngest child is with the Rainbow Division in Camp Upton I write of what we did, instead of "What We Do." First, we always tried to have an extra good dinner, but one so easily served, that no one need stay from church to prepare it. Ice cream was "taboo" because that meant extra work; we had that other days. Fricassed chicken could be cooked the day before; so could a pot roast or even breaded veal, and reheated in a few moments. Vegetables were made ready the day before, sometimes even cooked, and our dessert was often assorted fruits and cake, or nuts, raisins and cake, things to cause delight to children and we lingered happily over dessert. Dinner over, the box of playthings kept especially for Sunday and as different from the everyday ones as possible, was set out for the wee ones and all gathered around mother for reading. I always read a Bible chapter first and sometimes two, three or five if, as they frequently did, the children asked for them. Children love the stately language of the old King James Version if the reader is appreciative. Then we recited the chapter, which we were committing to memory and added one new verse. Then we turned to our Sunday school papers and books and read and read. My children never wearied of reading and we didn't read anything and everything either. There are plenty of interesting, yes, fascinating, books which stimulate the noble living, and literature of the "funny paper" variety had no place in our Sunday reading. When we knew little bodies needed exercise, in winter we used to bundle them up and send them three times around the house for a "Sabbath day's journey," or with pack on their backs they played Pilgrim's Progress up the long front stairs, which was the "Hill Difficulty."

In summer we all went out into the yard and watched the funny antics of Ned's rabbits or the children would bring their books and beg for more reading while we sat on the grass.

Sunday games were hard to find; I had to use my ingenuity. I sent to the soda people for two sets of birds like the ones found in soda packages and by laying aside one card we played with them as with the old game of "Old Maid," and learned to know some of our beautiful birds. We also used to play "I am thinking of some one whose name begins with A," or B, or J., using only Bible characters.

Supper was a merry time, perhaps making toast by the open grate and often the surprise of the afternoon or evening was a bag of candy. At bedtime after each child had knelt and prayed and climbed into bed we sang hymns for awhile, and then said "Good night" after a happy day.—A Mother of Nine, in The Congregationalist.

WHAT LOVE CAN DO.

Little Robert had been visiting a family of cousins; and though he had been away from home some weeks, he was not anxious to leave the spot where he had been so happy. "I liked to stay there," he told sister Alice, "they have such a beautiful home."

Alice was five years older than Robert, and she did not always pay much attention to what he said, but this remark seemed so odd that she closed her book and stared at him. "Did you that that Aunt Emma had a beautiful home. Rob Ryerson? What a funny idea. It's just a plain little cottage."

Rob looked puzzled and did not reply.

But his sister continued: "And their furniture is really old, and some of the carpets are 'most worn out, and they haven't nice pictures like ours. What makes you think her house is so beautiful?"

Rob thought a minute before he answered: "I guess it must be because everybody is no nice to everybody else, and nobody scolds or teases."

At first the older sister smiled, and, then the color rose in her cheeks. She saw that her brother was nearer right than herself. A fine house and expensive furniture and pictures on the walls are not the things most important. Love and courtesy and kindness can make the plainest, poorest home beautiful, and the lack of them will spoil a palace.—Afton Free Press.

Devotional

A MAN'S OWN CHOICE.

The moment that Moses came to years of discretion we read that he "refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter." Take that as the starting point of the life of service. If your circumstances are making it impossible for you to carry out what would otherwise be the will of God, then drop your circumstances as Moses did; it rests with you to do it. Refuse any longer to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter. You have been in the courts of men; you may have stood high in the favor of the people of this world, and your heirship may look exceedingly brilliant. You must choose whether you will take the heavenly inheritance or the earthly. There comes a point in every man's history when, if he wishes to be a sanctified vessel, meet for the Master's use, he must decide to drop everything that prevents a holy career and a life of perfect service among the people of the Lord. Would the devil be what he is if he did not gild his bullets, and if he did not find something to boast of to offset the glorious attractions of heaven? Of course, Pharaoh's court, with all its grandeur, its learning, its talent, its science, its magnificent prospects and possibilities and power, attracts men, and they are drawn into its snare. Moses, the servant of God, calculated well, and he concluded that it would be better to endure the reproach of Christ than to have all the treasures of Egypt. Put the two side by side, the things of the world in one scale-pan, and the things of God in the other, and see which kicks the beam. Make your calculation, and say deliberately, "I esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of the world."—H. W. Webb-Peploe.

UNDER THE DOME.

It is said that, if one stands under the dome of the Taj-Mahal, and sings a few phrases ever so brokenly, the melody which comes back is wondrously different. The harshness of the singer's voice seems to have been spirited away, and sweetness put in its place. Anybody who can carry a tune can sing under such conditions; and the least trained vocalist may be surprised at his own achievement. I cannot vouch for the truth of the story; but I know that just such surprises come to us in everyday life. In the Temple of our Father, harshness loses itself; and even broken cadences are rounded out. Under the dome of His House anybody can make music whether with voice or hand or spirit. God does not expect perfect gifts from us; He accepts the imperfect and sets it in the light of His smile.—Peck.

THINGS BEAUTIFUL.

One cold morning in February we stood looking out upon a world encased in an icy armor which sparkled with unrivaled beauty in the sunshine. "Beautiful!" said one. "Yes, it is very beautiful, but it will all be gone before noon." The little restless maiden, quiet for once as she gazed upon the glory, looked up and brightly said: "Never mind. There'll be something else beautiful tomorrow." The Lord, who hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad, is doing, and will continue to do, great things for us, whereof we shall be glad. "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and today, yea, and forever."—Anna L. Scott.

Presbyterian Standard

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE.
REV. W. L. BOGGS, Circulation Manager.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.
ESTABLISHED JANUARY 1, 1858.

Entered at the Post Office at Charlotte, N. C., as second class matter.

CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE

Our Overseas Kin	2
Concord Presbytery and the Dance.....	2
"Why We Fought"	3
The Home Mission Campaign	3
The Case of the Returned Soldier.....	3
A Wise Move in Church Work.....	3
CONTRIBUTED—
The Approaching Synods and Union—By Rev. Dunbar H. Ogden, D. D.....	4-8
Korea and the Sunday Schools—By John I. Armstrong.	5
"Christianizing Christendom"—By Samuel M. Glasgow.	5
Dr. Campbell Morgan at Union Seminary—By Rev. W. W. Moore, D. D.....	5
Four Million Campaign Managers' Conference..	6
"The Silver on the Iron Cross"—By Rev. A. S. Johnson, D. D.	6
An Appeal to the Christian World.....	7
In Memory of Rev. T. M. Hawes, D. D.—By Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D. D.....	7
"Christianizing Christendom"—By Rev. R. F. Kirkpatrick, D. D.	8
The Name of Our Church—By E. M. G.....	8
"Abuse of Scripture"—By W. K. McCoy, M. D.	10
DEPARTMENTS—
News of the Week	10
Christian Endeavor—By Rev. S. H. Hay	11
Prayer Meeting—By Rev. C. D. Waller	11
Sunday School—By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.	12
Home Circle and Devotional	13

ANNOUNCEMENT.

 The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription is paid.

When change of address is desired, give both the old and the new address.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the last subscription paid.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

"CHRISTIANIZING CHRISTENDOM."

On page 8 of this issue we have an excellent review by Dr. R. F. Kirkpatrick of Dr. Morris' book, "Christianizing Christendom." We find that we have allowed the wrong caption to appear with this review and so we take this occasion not only to give the book's correct title, but to again commend it to our readers.

Church News

Ten days from this issue our books close for Synod. We are asking at least one-half of the April to April apportionment of the churches now before Synod.

On the basis of your response all our work for the coming year from Synod must be planned.

We are hoping to go forward to a largely increased work in the supreme effort to enter every open door in the State. So much depends on what is done in these few days before Synod. Shall we go forward? Let us know your will by your remittance.

A. W. Crawford,
Supt. and Treas., 320 S. Mendenhall,
Greensboro. N. C.

SUNDAY SCHOOL RALLY DAY.

The Sunday School is the feeder of the Church, and without a growing Sunday School any Church must be short-lived. Some of our best Churches began in a Sunday School, and one of the most successful methods of home mission work is to plant a Sunday School in some destitute region, and, with that as a foundation, a Church in time appears. October 5 is the day selected by Dr. Glass as our rally day for the Sunday School work, when its importance is to be emphasized. He has prepared an interesting program together with a supplementary one, with which he will furnish all Churches upon application.

CARD FROM PROF. AND MRS. C. E. WELLS, LATELY OF HIGHLAND.

We wish to say to the many friends who have rendered us such loyal support at the Highland School, Guerrant, Ky., that we have found it necessary to change all previous plans and on account of a nervous breakdown of Mr. Wells, we have given up our work at Highland, and come to North Carolina.

After ten years' strenuous labor at Highland, we have a large and prosperous school plant and organization. Under many difficulties we had succeeded in building up an accredited high school and graduated fifteen in the last two years. Of these, several have entered college and are doing good work.

Rev. W. B. Guerrant has been placed in general charge of this work. We ask those who have so loyally stood by Highland in the past years to stand by those who must now take the responsibility that the school may not only continue its efficiency but also have a much more enlarged sphere of usefulness.

We have come to assist Mr. C. G. McKarher in his school for boys at Aquadale, N. C. We find that there is an ideal building and location for a boys' school. The equipment is excellent and the Christian atmosphere delightful.

The prime object of the school is to educate into Christian manhood boys who do not have an opportunity to attend more expensive schools, raise the standard of education in this section, and most of all, to build up the Church.

We wish to assure prospective patrons that all the work of the school will be standardized and the high school work made to conform to the uniform entrance requirements. Boys will be received at any time, and we invite correspondence from parents.

(Mrs.) Rose M. Wells,
Aquadale, N. C.

(Continued on Page 16)

How Many Brick Would Fifty Thousand Dollars Buy?

If you were putting up a cotton mill
how far would $50,000 go?

How many brick, how many looms, how many spindles would it get?

Then where would the product of that investment be in FIVE YEARS?

Most likely rags or worn out garments in an old attic.

Make the cotton mill spin
for God and immortality

Let us show what $50,000 earned in looms and spindles will do.

$50,000 Will Endow a Chair at Davidson College Or Erect and Endow for Maintenance a Y. M. C. A. and Social Building

THE COLLEGE NEEDS NOW

The Woodrow Wilson Chair of History, $50,000. An English Bible Chair, $50,000.
The Y. M. C. A. and Social Building, $50,000.

A gift of this kind may be made as a memorial. It may be offered on condition that we raise the entire million dollars for all our schools, including such gift.

WHAT IT WILL DO: It will train Immortal Youth for all time. It will help furnish our Lord world leadership. It will increase in geometrical ratio each year. It will indirectly influence thousands of lives. It will give a leverage to help raise a million. Could a cotton mill be run for any higher or surer purpose?

Think it over, pray it through. We must have some men of vision and faith and large hearts to put this campaign for One Million Dollars over

DR. J. CAMPBELL WHITE, Missionary and Educator, said: "If by investing in colleges that are positively and frankly and completely Christian, the Church can produce competent leaders in adequate numbers, it is doubtful whether HUMAN INGENUITY HAS EVER DEvised A MORE SUCCESSFUL METHOD OF INFLUENCING THE THOUGHT AND LIFE OF THE WORLD."

We are positively counting on a few big men to help in a large way

The Million Dollar Campaign Committee

A. M. SCALES, Chairman

R. G. VAUGHN, Treasurer

C. M. RICHARDS, Secretary

Greensboro, North Carolina

PERSONAL.

Rev. Jno. A. MacLean, Jr., formerly chaplain of the 315th Field Artillery, A. E. F., has accepted a call to Morganton, N. C., and will begin his work there at once.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Carthage—The Carthage Presbyterian church, at a congregational meeting, increased the salary of their pastor, Rev. J. K. Roberts, by the additional sum of $450.

Parkton—The Parkton Church has recently received fifteen members on profession of faith, the results of a union meeting conducted by Rev. J. W. Ham, of Atlanta, Ga.

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg stands adjourned to meet in the Charlotte First Church on Thursday, October 2, 1919, at 10 a. m. Important business was sent over from the meeting at Steele Creek. John E. Wool, S. C.

Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D., writes: "I go Saturday, the 27th inst., to an annual reunion of several churches which are colonies of Old Bluff Church, in Cumberland county, some 12 miles from Fayetteville. This church is one of the oldest in our Presbytery, having a history of 150 years. During my ministry in Fayetteville of 18 years, I preached there many times for Rev. D. D. McBryde."

Statesville—At the morning service at the First Presbyterian Church Sunday, the pastor, Dr. C. E. Raynal, expressed to the congregation his appreciation of a gift of money to pay off a college debt that had been hanging over him for some years. Dr. Raynal stated that some had proposed giving him an automobile but he feared that would be misunderstood and complicate matters and the money to eliminate the pastor's college debt was decided upon instead.—Landmark.

Mallard Creek—This church is looking forward with pleasure to the coming of its new pastor, Rev. J. C. Brown, early in October.

During the summer while without a pastor the pulpit has been most acceptably supplied by visiting ministers, not a Sabbath having passed without preaching. On last Sabbath Rev. J. Thompson Pharr, only recently out of the service of his country, filled the pulpit, preaching a very excellent sermon, to the pleasure of the congregation. Mr. Pharr is a grandson of Rev. W. W. Pharr, a former beloved pastor of the church, and it was with peculiar interest that the Mallard Creek people heard his very able sermon.

Gilwood Church—The evangelistic services at Gilwood began on Sunday, September 7, and closed on Sunday, September 14.

Rev. J. Andrew Smith, of Statesville, did the preaching with his usual intense earnestness and power.

The Christian character of our people was greatly strengthened and built up. Many lives were reconsecrated to the service of the Master.

The burden of the services was to revive the study of Bible and stimulate the prayer life as well as secure the salvation of the unsaved.

Mr. Smith has marked ability in presenting gospel truth with energetic force in humble, reliance upon God.

Gilwood will drink with continual profit and delight from the wells of truth he opened up for us. C. H. H.

Greensboro, Midway—Revival services were conducted at the Midway Church from the fifth Sunday of August through the first Sunday in September. The pastor, Rev. E. Frank Lee, was assisted by Rev. Geo. W. Lee, of Winston-Salem, who arrived on Monday, the meeting having already begun with the preaching of the pastor. There was deep interest in the services almost from the beginning. Brother Lee preaches the simple gospel in a most earnest way and his sermons take hold of the heart, because they are out of life's experience. A goodly number of young people and some older ones came forward for reconsecration of themselves to God and nine confessed Jesus as their Saviour, and on the second Sunday in September they were received into the church. It is believed by several to have been the best revival service, in some respects, ever held in the church. Brother Lee is a wonder with boys. We give God all the glory and thank Him for sending His servant to us.

The Pastor.

West End Church, Fayetteville Presbytery, was fortunate in having the services of Rev. J. A. Caligan, of Mt. Pisgah Church, for their protracted meeting. The meeting was held in the M. E. Church, the Methodist brethren uniting with the Presbyterians, both pastors, Rev. Mr. Hall and Rev. R. S. Arrowood, assisting, but the preaching was done entirely by Mr. Caligan, and the congregation showed their interest and appreciation by the large audiences. Mr. Caligan is one of the best sermonizers of his Presbytery, and much esteemed by his people as a faithful and devoted worker.

Macedonia Church during August had the pleasure of hearing Rev. C. F. Arrowood, pastor of Central Park Church, Houston Texas. Mr. Arrowood was here on a visit to his parents during his vacation and has now in addition to his pastoral work, resumed his post-graduate work at Rice University, where he is also an instructor. He hopes to receive his A. M. degree next June. L.

Wilmington, St. Andrew's—I returned from my vacation the first week in September and began our fall work with a good attendance at the prayer meeting. The first Sabbath the following four new elders were ordained and installed: Messrs. George S. Boylan, Dr. W. C. Mebane, O. J. Mullinex and B. Frank Yandell. The following eight new deacons were ordained and installed: William H. Badon, S. Kyle Bannerman, D. D. Boylan, J. G. Carroll, William Grant, Thomas Hill, D. O. Westbrook and William A. Wylie. Two more deacons, C. H. Clark and Eugene Johnson, who could not be present, will be ordained and installed the first Sabbath in October. At the fall communion, the third Sabbath, nine new members were welcomed to the communion. Two who were elected as deacons declined to accept the office. There is a spirit of earnestness and effort to press the work of the church in all departments. The joint services of the congregation and Christian Endeavor Societies at the night hour of the Sabbath have been well attended since the first of July. The regular preaching service at night following prayer meetings by the Christian Endeavor Societies will be resumed the first Sabbath night in October.

A. D. McClure.

Rocky Mount—Rev. C. Connor Brown, Synodical evangelist, and Rev. C. O. Pardo, evangelistic singer, in a meeting September 7-18, assisted the local evangelist in charge of the work in Edgecombe county where Tillery Church has been organized. Here we have no church building and a depleted set of officers. This is one of the prosperous sections of the county, where the people are intensely interested in material things, but when it comes to the spiritual and salvation you will find three-fourths of the people of church age out of the church. There prevails in the community to a telling degree, parental indifference, wanting to experience peculiar feelings, waiting for visions and dreams, a scornful attitude, and many other things of no better character that the devil has perpetrated for hindering the work of God. But when these conditions are met squarely, with earnestness and courage and with the power of the gospel that was exemplified in Mr. Brown's preaching, God always crowns such efforts with substantial success. This fact was demonstrated in this meeting in that there were nineteen confessions of faith, some of these leaders in their community, and a rededication of practically every professing Christian in the organization. Fifteen of those making confessions expressed preference for the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Brown is an evangelist of marked power and splendid judgment. His clear and forceful preaching has left a vital influence in this congregation. Mr. Pardo is a singer of rare ability and his gospel singing did much to bring the lost to Christ. Miss Ivy Modlin, at the piano, rendered efficient and faithful service. We are grateful that God sent these servants to labor among us.

Albemarle—The session of this church is sending out the following very timely pastoral letter to each member:
Dear Fellow Members:

Please bear with the pastor and elders of our church, while they by means of this letter to all the members, relieve themselves of an obligation which has burdened their hearts for sometime. We claim the right to warn with tenderness, yet firmness, our people against an evident violation of God's most fundamental law—the desecration of the Sabbath day. The divine command is, Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Any works on this day except those of necessity and mercy; or any pleasure seeking, except that which would prove to be mental and spiritual recreation, are in direct violation of this law.

This law is one of the cornerstones of the great Presbyterian faith, and it is very evident that disrespect for it has not only pre-empted our churches on the Sabbath day, but has perhaps been one reason for so much lust for wealth and craze for pleasure. These sins have been the forerunners of God's righteous judgment upon the nations of the world in the past, who have fallen from a state of glory to that of shame and suffering. He plainly tells us in His Word that the wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God (Ps. 9:17). As a fulfillment of this threat, we would point our nation to atheistic France, "bled white;" to wicked Belgium, torn into smithereens; and to blasphemous Germany, revolution ridden, whose people with gnashing of teeth, are grasping at each others' throats. These suffering peoples are now crying out unto God, but only after such bitter despair. Revolution and bloodshed are staring us in the face—even right in our very midst. The coming months hold the promise of that dread scourge—influenza, which sent us to the grave last winter with so many of our friends and relatives. In the face of these impending disasters, will you join us in hallowing God's holy day; will you help us to fill God's house with devout and humble worshippers?

Yours, in the faith of the fathers,

J. M. Harris, E. H. Cotton, J. A. Little, J. M. Morrow,
J. W. Lyerly, Wilcox Brightwell, Geo. W. Cheek.

Mecklenburg Presbytery—The one hundredth session of Mecklenburg Presbytery was held in the Steele Creek Presbyterian Church, beginning Tuesday, September 16, 1919, at 11 a. m., and was opened with a sermon by the retiring moderator, Rev. W. R. Coppedge, of Rockingham, N. C., from Romans 8:28. There were 34 ministers and 39 elders present, with 21 corresponding members. The Rev. Wm. Black, one of Synod's evangelists, was elected moderator. In connection with the Foreign Mission report, the Rev. John McEachern, one of our missionaries in Korea, made a very fine address. Dr. S. L. Morris ably represented the Assembly's Home Missions, as did the Rev. A. W. Crawford, Synod's Home Missions, and the Rev. W. T. Walker, the Barium Springs Orphanage.

The Badin Church presented a call for the services of Rev. T. G. Tate. He was permitted to hold it till the adjourned meeting.

Mr. Guy E. Weeks, a member of the Charlotte Second Church, was taken under the care of Presbytery as a candidate for the ministry. He is at Davidson College.

The overtures as to candidates, licensure and ordination, also election of elders and deacons for a limited period, and the basis of representation in the Assembly, sent down by the last Assembly, were docketed till the spring meeting.

A sermon on "Soul Winning" by the Rev. Bob Jones, who is holding a revival in Charlotte, was heard with pleasure on Wednesday morning and another by the Rev.

George Summey, of New Orleans, La., on Tuesday night.

The next stated meeting will be held at Rockingham, N. C., April 13, 1920.

The most important part of the Presbytery was the semi-centennial celebration of its organization. It was this that drew such a crowd that the church could not begin to hold it. The Rev. Dr. W. E. McIlwaine, of Pensacola, Fla., read the historical address, after which the representatives of Concord (the mother Presbytery), Asheville and Kings Mountain Presbyteries were heard. The Rev. J. M. Grier, D.D., and Rev. E. D. Brown bore the greeting of Concord; Rev. R. F. Campbell, D.D., and Rev. R. P. Smith, D.D., those of Asheville; Rev. J. T. Dendy, Rev. G. A. Sparrow and Elder A. Nixon, those of Kings Mountain, after which three distinguished sons of Mecklenburg made interesting addresses, namely, Rev. W. W. Moore, D.D., of Richmond, Va.; Rev. George Summey, D.D., of New Orleans, La., and Rev. J. H. Morrison, of Pine Bluff, Ark.

Dinner and supper were served on the grounds both days, and the abundance was equal to the great crowd. Every one present will long remember this meeting at Steele Creek Church. At a late hour on Wednesday night adjournment was taken to meet in the Charlotte First Church on Thursday, October 2, 1919, at 10 a. m.

A hearty vote of thanks was given the pastor and good people of Steele Creek Church for their abundant hospitality.
John E. Wool, S. C.

Orange Presbytery met in the North Wilkesboro Presbyterian Church, September 16, 1919, and was opened with a sermon by the retiring moderator, Dr. E. R. Leyburn, on the text, I Chronicles 12:32.

The Rev. T. M. McConnell, D.D., was elected moderator and Rev. C. D. Whiteley, temporary clerk.

The Rev. Jno. R. Herndon, of Suwanee Presbytery, and Rev. E. W. Thompson, of Mecklenburg Presbytery, were received.

A call from the Waughton Church was accepted by Mr. Herndon and arrangements made for his installation.

Mr. Thompson will do evangelistic work in Ashe county.

Mr. Hugh Hamilton, of the High Point Church, who is now a senior at Davidson, and Mr. A. V. Gibson, of the Hampfields Church, were received as candidates for the ministry under our care.

The Rev. E. R. Leyburn, D.D., tendered his resignation of the pastoral charge of the First Presbyterian Church, Durham, N. C., and asked for the dissolution of the pastoral relation and dismissal to Cherokee Presbytery, that he might accept a call from the First Church, Rome, Ga. The Durham Church was heard through her representative, Mr. J. R. Patton, and a strong paper adopted by the church, regretfully acceding to the request. Two commissioners from the First Church, Rome, Ga., Messrs. Hughes and Hull, were also heard, and after considerable discussion, the relation was dissolved and Dr. Leyburn was dismissed to Cherokee Presbytery, and the following paper, offered by Dr. D. I. Craig, was adopted by a rising vote:

"In dismissing Rev. E. R. Leyburn, D.D., from our bounds we desire to express and place upon the records of this Presbytery our sincere regret at the departure of this beloved brother. Dr. Leyburn has been a tower of strength, not only in our Presbytery, but in the Synod of North Carolina and the General Assembly of the Church; for his soundness in doctrine, his judicial mind, his wise counsel, his noble Christian character, his sweet Christian spirit, and faithful work among us as a pastor, a Presbyter and a faithful friend. He goes from us with our earnest prayers for the happiness and abundant success of him and his family. In his new field of labor may the Lord give him an abundant harvest. May God bless him is our prayer."

The Presbytery voted "No" on the amendments to the Book of Church Order, sent down by the Assembly in regard to licensure and the rotation of elders and deacons.

The nomination of commissioners to the Assembly was deferred until next spring. The time and place for the next meeting was deferred until an adjourned meeting. A great amount of routine business was accomplished. It was a busy and delightful meeting. The hospitality of the people was cordial, abundant, and delightful. The church knows how to take care of her faithful and beloved pastor, Rev. C. W. Robinson, and through him to make everybody feel at home. The Presbytery adjourned to meet in the First Church, Greensboro, on Tuesday, September 30, 1919, at 2 p. m.

D. I. Craig, Stated Clerk.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Charleston Presbytery will hold its fall meeting October 14 instead of October 13, as announced in our last issue.

Congaree Presbytery—Delegates to Congaree Presbytery, which meets at Edgefield October 6 at 8 p. m., will notify Rev. E. C. Bailey at once. Those coming from Columbia will arrive in Edgefield about dinner time if the train is not late.

E. C. B.

Representatives to Harmony Presbytery, which meets at Central Church, Tuesday, October 14, are requested to send their names to Mr. W. A. McCrea, Kingstree, S. C., R. F. D. No. 1, and if they expect to come by railway, please so state, as the church is eight and one-half miles from the railway station.

W. I. Sinnott, Pastor.

Cedar Shoals—Rev. R. Roy Brown assisted the pastor in a few services preparatory to the fall communion recently. Seven united with the church on profession of faith, four by letter, and one other expects to do so later. This makes a total of 14 additions to the church this year, which is an increase of nearly 25 per cent.

W. L. Latham.

Anderson—The Rev. John S. Foster, D.D., pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, who had such a flattering call to the First Presbyterian Church of Savannah, has decided to stay here. He made this announcement Sunday morning and his congregation was greatly relieved. Although Dr. Foster has not been here very long he has endeared himself to his people. He came here from Birmingham about two years ago and was not seeking new fields when he went to preach in Savannah, the call coming to him without any solicitation. He says he likes Anderson and loves his people and is not willing to leave.

York—Deep interest is being manifested in the union meeting now in progress at the First Presbyterian church. The preaching is by the Rev. W. H. Miley, D.D., evangelist for the Synod of South Carolina. Dr. Miley is an able, effective preacher and his sermons have profoundly impressed all who have heard them. Large congregations attend both the morning and afternoon services, the merchants closing their stores in order that their employees may be present at the former. The Rev. F. H. Wardlaw, of Guthrieville, is directing the singing.

Pendleton—When the pastor and his wife returned recently from a vacation of two weeks, spent in the Georgia mountains, they were informed by a neighbor that it would not be wise for them to lay in much of a stock of groceries. This sounded ominous, as if they might expect orders to leave. But the secret was revealed the next day, when a load of good things to eat was sent them from the people of the church. One day while away, the pastor was telling some friends what kind and thoughtful people he has the honor to serve. Some little bird must have been eavesdropping, and told them about it, and so they must have been led to make his words doubly true.

Robert Adams.

Central Church—Anderson—Rev. P. S. McChesney, pastor. Since paying off all indebtedness last spring, our church has raised the pastor's salary $300 and purchased a large and beautiful house on North Fant Street, which is henceforth to be the manse. The house has ten rooms and the lot contains exactly one acre. The church has probably gotten a bargain in this property at $9,500. The pastor and his family will move into the new manse about October 1.

The Synod meets with us November 4, and we are looking forward with great interest and pleasure to having the brethren with us. The Rev. W. H. Miley, D.D., Synodical evangelist, will begin a series of meetings for us immediately after the adjournment of Synod.

Great Falls—Under the ministry of our pastor, Rev. W. L. Latham, the Great Falls Church has grown rapidly in every respect, the membership having been more than doubled.

Great Falls has been grouped with Cedar Shoals and Fort Lawn; and the pastor has supplied the Richburg Church for a year. Each of these churches have had rich blessings upon them, and have increased greatly in membership as well as in religious interest.

But the Great Falls Church has called Rev. W. L. Latham for full time, to take effect just so soon as a pastor or supply can be obtained for the other churches, which we hope will be right away. The town of Great Falls has grown rapidly, the population having increased nearly 1,000 in the past year, so that the full time services of her ministers is really needed now.

Cor.

Florence—The pastor, Dr. H. Tucker Graham, spent his vacation largely in Virginia, preaching on three Sundays in Norfolk and one in Lynchburg. Part of the intervening period was given to a delightful sea trip, and the rest was spent in visiting friends, chiefly at Winchester and Hampden Sidney.

In his absence the pulpit was filled most acceptably by Dr. J. M. Holloday, of Marion, S. C., and Rev. W. E. Davis, of Clemson College, S. C.

Candidate Jas. Thornwell Gillespie, of Columbia Seminary, a son of this church and a brother of the former beloved pastor, preached here on a recent Sunday evening, to the pleasure of his many friends.

Chaplain Henry Graybill Bedinger has just returned from France, and may be addressed at 208 South Dargan Street, Florence, S. C.

KENTUCKY.

The Presbytery of Louisville held its fall meeting, September 23 at the Bardstown Presbyterian Church, Bardstown, Ky. The opening sermon was preached by the retiring moderator, Rev. W. B. Lile.

There were present 26 ministers and 15 ruling elders. Rev. Eugene Bell, a missionary to Korea, who is at home on furlough, was elected moderator and Rev. W. R. Anderson, temporary clerk.

Rev. P. B. Hill, pastor-elect of the First Presbyterian Church, Louisville, was invited to sit as a corresponding member.

Rev. J. R. Cunningham was dismissed to the Presbytery of North Mississippi to become pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Grenada, Miss.

The overtures sent down from the General Assembly touching the licensure and ordination of candidates for the ministry, and touching the rotary system of elders and deacons, were answered in the affirmative and the one touching the basis of representation in the General Assembly was answered in the negative.

Commissions reported that Rev. Thomas Brewster had been ordained and installed pastor of the Munfordville and Glasgow churches, that Rev. J. J. Martin had been ordained and installed pastor of the Bloomfield and Big Spring churches, that Rev. E. W. Newland had been ordained and installed pastor of the Carrollton Church, and that Rev. F. A. Clark had been installed pastor of the Anchorage Church.

The chairman of the committee of Home Missions reported every church supplied with preaching and the general condition of all the churches under its care is good. The Flora Heights Church has just closed a meeting with 28 additions when Rev. F. A. Fincher, D.D., was the preacher. Berry Boulevard has had a meeting with 15 additions. All the churches save one have contributed to this cause the sum of $2,547.59. On account of the increasing scope and work of this committee articles in incorporation are being filed. Large plans for more extensive Home Mission work in the Sunday schools and more aggressive evangelistic work were approved by the Presbytery.

The report of the Foreign Mission Committee showed total receipts of $11,514, which is an increase of 26 per cent over last year. Addresses were made on this subject by Rev. N. G. Stevens, Rev. P. B. Hill and by the moderator, Rev. Eugene Bell, all of whom have spent years of service in the foreign field. The Presbytery expects to make a large increase of gifts for the coming year.

The Committee of Sabbath Observance and Family Religion was instructed to prepare a program for a full discussion of these subjects at the next meeting of the Presbytery.

The Presbytery called for more men to enter the gospel ministry to fill vacancies made by many who have been engaged in war work.

The Committee on Systematic Beneficence called for $87,670 for benevolences for the coming year and the Presbytery accepted the quota. Rev. A. A. Higgins, D.D., of Louisville, was elected manager of the campaign to raise this sum. Addresses were made on the subject of Stewardship and Tithing by Rev. W. R. Anderson and Rev. D. M. Sweets, D. D.

Rev. S. S. Daughtry, of Frankfort, was appointed to preach the next Presbyterial sermon on the subject, "Foreordination."

Memorials were read in memory of Rev. R. A. Webb, D.D., Rev. C. N. Wharton and Rev. T. M. Hawes, D.D., who had died since the last meeting. Tributes of admiration and affection for these beloved brethren were expressed by Rev. D. H. Ogden, D.D., Rev. A. A. Higgins, D.D., Rev. L. O. Spencer, Rev. W. Y. Davis, Rev. W. H. Hopper, D.D., Rev. E. W. Newland, Rev. J. W. Clotfelter and others.

The next meeting will be held at the Portland Avenue Church, Louisville, Monday, April 12, 1920.

The Presbytery expressed by a rising vote its appreciation of the generous and abounding hospitality of the pastor and people of Bardstown.

The Presbytery adjourned to meet at the call of the moderator during the meeting of Synod at Nicholasville, Ky.

W. H. Hopper, Stated Clerk.

LOUISIANA.

Colfax—Rev. B. C. Bell, evangelist for Red River Presbytery in Louisiana, is holding a meeting in Colfax for the benefit of the scattered flock of Presbyterians in this vicinity. Fifteen Presbyterians from North Carolina, Virginia, Kentucky and elsewhere have petitioned Presbytery to organize a church that in their new home they may worship as in the communities from which they moved. Arrangements have been made with Rev. H. J. McGeehee, of Natchitoches, to serve as pastor.

R. L. Sloan.

MISSOURI.

Presbytery of Upper Missouri met in the Walnut Grove Presbyterian Church September 16, 1919, at 8 o'clock p. m. Eleven ministers present; twelve churches represented. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. E. C. Hunt, the last moderator present.

Division of Churches—Upon petition from the Morton-Hardin Presbyterian Church, this church was divided into two organizations, the Morton Presbyterian Church and the Hardin Presbyterian Church.

Installations—Reports were made of the installation of Rev. E. M. Nesbitt as pastor of the Southeast Presbyterian Church, Kansas City, and Rev. John P. Davis as pastor of the Northeast Presbyterian Church, Kansas City.

Amendments to Form of Government—Presbytery approved all of the amendments sent down by the General Assembly, with the exception of the proposed change touching the basis of representation in the Assembly; in response to this proposed change the Presbytery voted "No."

Local Home Missions—Presbytery voted to place a pastor-at-large in the field to take oversight of the vacant churches and assist them in the calling of pastors or supplies. Rev. C. C. Partridge, of Excelsior Springs, Mo., was appointed chairman of the local Home Missions Committee, vice W. R. Dobyns, resigned.

Evangelism—A new permanent committee on evangelism was created, consisting of Rev. E. C. Hunt, chairman; Revs. R. C. Lippard, C. G. Partridge, John P. Davis and E. M. Nesbitt. This committee was instructed to prepare a program of evangelism calling for a special series of evangelistic services in every church in the Presbytery and assigning to each church some ministerial member of the Presbytery, this assignment having the force of a Presbyterial appointment.

Foreign Missions—Foreign Missions report from April 1 to August 31 showed total amount paid $4,169.87, this being slightly over 29 per cent of the gifts to this cause last year; eight churches to date have given nothing. The total gifts last year were $2,000 over that of the year previous, and Presbytery will strive earnestly to even exceed this amount during the present year.

Candidates—Candidate J. G. W. Kirschner made statement to Presbytery relative to the prosecution of his studies for the gospel ministry and also relative to his conviction of duty. Mr. Kirschner was continued as a candidate for the ministry, and the following committee was appointed to counsel with him and direct him in a course of study: Revs. H. L. Saunders, E. C. Hunt and R. C. Lippard.

Assembly's Home Missions—Presbytery's contributions to Assembly's Home Missions year ending March 31, 1917, $864; year ending March 31, 1918, $5,110; year ending March 31, 1919, $3,479.

Place and Time of Next Meeting—Barbee Memorial Presbyterian Church, Excelsior Springs, Mo., was selected for the next stated meeting, date to be Tuesday, April 13, 1920, at 8 o'clock p. m.

Moderator—Rev. W. P. Neilson, D.D., was elected moderator for the ensuing six months.

Systematic Beneficence—Rev. C. G. Partridge presented the apportionments upon the churches in this Presbytery by Assembly's committee, and urged the churches to more aggressive prosecution of the progressive campaign.

Chairmen of Permanent Committees—Foreign Missions, Rev. H. L. Saunders; Assembly's Home Missions, Rev. J. M. Campbell; Publication and Sabbath School Work, Rev. I. B. Bisceglia; Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, Rev. John P. Davis; Local Home Missions, Rev. C. G. Partridge; Evangelism, Rev. E. C. Hunt; Narrative, Rev. W. P. Neilson; Sabbath, Rev. E. C. Hunt; Systematic Beneficence, Rev. C. G. Partridge; Bible, Rev. Johnston Robertson.

Season of Prayer—Presbytery closed with a most profitable season of intercessory prayer.

Chas. R. Nisbet, Stated Clerk.

TENNESSEE.

The Synod of Tennessee will meet at Brownsville, Tenn., October 14, 1919, 8 p. m. J. H. Lumpkin, S. C.

The Presbytery of Memphis held its regular fall meeting in the Presbyterian Church, Saulto, Tenn., September 16-17, with 21 ministers and 17 ruling elders present. This was rather a small attendance due possibly to the fact that the place of meeting was far from railroad and difficult to reach.

At the request of the moderator, Ruling Elder E. B. LeMaster, the opening sermon was preached by Rev. J. E. Hixson.

Rev. J. G. Johnson was elected moderator and Rev. W. E. Powell temporary clerk.

Rev. W. W. Powell, at his request, was dismissed to Norfolk Presbytery with a view of accepting a pastorate in that Presbytery.

Installations reported: Rev. George L. Kerns at Dyersburg, Tenn., and Rev. J. B. Butler at Bethel Springs.

(Continued on Page 22)

Marriages and Deaths

IN MEMORIAM.

Lunsford Richardson.

Rarely has the First Presbyterian Church of Greensboro, N. C., in its long history of ninety-five years, suffered a greater loss than in the death, at the age of sixty-four years and eight months, of Lunsford Richardson, for twenty-seven years a faithful and beloved ruling elder.

Traveling for business and recreation in the West with his oldest son, he was taken sick in San Francisco, where he was speedily joined by his wife and other members of the family. An apparently malarial attack developed pneumonia symptoms, complications ensued, and despite all that the best medical skill and hospital care could accomplish, through eight weeks he grew gradually weaker, though with occasional rallies of strength. Foreseeing the end, he spoke to his loved ones of "the glorious meeting hereafter;" and on August 21, in the still first hour of the new day, "He passed through Glory's Morning Gate,

And walked in Paradise."

He was born and reared in Johnston county, North Carolina, in a Christian home of true culture and refinement, of which the only member surviving him is his sister, Mrs. J. W. Vick, of Rock Hill, S. C.

After studying at Horner and Grave's School, he went to Davidson College, where he completed the course in three years, graduating at the age of twenty-one with high distinction, and winning the Latin, Greek, and debater's medals, though his health was probably weakened by the overwork of these college years.

After four years of teaching, he began his business life in Selma, the county seat of Johnston county, where from the first he gave not only his Sundays but a generous part of his week days to distinctively Christian service, much of it in association with Henry Louis Vick, then teaching in Selma.

On August 28, 1884, he was married to Mary Lynn, oldest daughter of Dr. Henry Smith, pastor for thirty-eight years of the First Presbyterian Church of Greensboro. This singularly happy union of two lives which were united not only in true affection but in perfect congeniality of spiritual aims and of social and literary tastes, was blessed with two sons and three daughters, all of them consistent members of the Church of Christ: I. Henry Smith Richardson, Mrs. C. I. Carlson, Mrs. W. Y. Preyer, Lunsford Richardson, and Janet Lynn Richardson.

In 1891 he moved to Greensboro, becoming especially in the last twelve years as organizer and head of the Vick

Chemical Company, one of the leading business men of the city and state.

In Greensboro, as in Selma, he threw himself whole-heartedly into the service of the Master Whom he loved, being never absent from His house on Sundays or Wednesday nights, and laboring in the Sabbath school both as teacher and superintendent. A ruling elder since 1892, he was active in all the duties of this high office, punctual at all session meetings, and particularly and unwearyingly faithful in visiting the poor, the old, the sick, and the afflicted of the congregation.

Community efforts for the relief of want and suffering and the betterment of the public health and morals, found in him a wise counsellor and a liberal supporter. The responsibility of Christian stewardship he deeply felt.

A constant and ardent friend of foreign missions, his annual gifts thereto running into the thousands, he was also the organizer and superintendent of a colored Sunday school in a disreputable quarter of his own city, which for many years and up to the time of his death he conducted at his own expense, going there in person, with what helpers he could gather, every Sunday afternoon through summer's heat and winter's cold, to teach, and, what is infinitely more important, to exemplify in himself to this most needy part of the city's population, the seeking love of Christ.

His genuine concern for the welfare of the scores of employes in his great business won him their confidence and affection, and this relationship, founded on mutual trust and regard, no strikes or threat of strikes ever disturbed.

How many people in trouble he aided by wise counsel or brotherly help, or both, will never be known on this side the Father's house. On the day before the funeral, while floral tributes were being sent to the home, there came one, an exquisite and costly one, brought in person by a Greek hat-cleaner, whose English was almost unintelligible, but whose flowing tears as he stood by the casket and looked into the peaceful face, spoke more eloquently than the flowers of some word or act of love that had won his heart.

Letters have been coming in, often from unknown writers, full of gratitude for kindness, or for inspiration to nobler living, received from him. Says a business man writing from another state: "His personal letters to me I shall always treasure and continue to receive help from during the remainder of my life. Such lives never really die, but continue on as an example and inspiration to other lives whose good fortune it has been to meet him along life's highway."

Among the many appreciations of his life and character, from various individuals and organizations, appearing in the daily papers, no truer sentence-picture of him was drawn than that with which a noted colored educator of the city closed a letter describing his habit of unostentatious benevolence: "I pay this tribute of respect to one that loved his fellowmen without regard to race or color."

His religion had no taint of Pharisaism or sanctimoniousness. It was genuine, joyous, cordial, the outshining of an indwelling peace. His home-coming was always preannounced by a cheery whistle. He loved music and had a good ear and voice. Genial, sympathetic, humorous, hopeful, with a contagious laugh and a ready fund of anecdote and reminiscence, he carried with him an atmosphere of sunny good-fellowship. His later years were marked by an ever-deepening sense of God's goodness to him as shown in the character and happy marriages of his children and the growing success of his business. Reverses and disappointments came to him as to others, but they wrought in him no impatience or irascibility. Alike through life's shadows and sunshine he bore himself as a good soldier of Jesus Christ, with a cheerfulness unailing and unconquerable, fed from deeper springs than earthly changes could affect.

When the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Association recently asked of him an address on how to attain success, as suggested by his own experience, his modesty prompted an immediate negative. But when his hesitation was overborne by the argument of the good he might do to the many young men in the association, he sent a paper to be read, as he could not be present in person, telling how on leaving college he had begun life not only without a home, his parents being dead, but without a dollar, and by what steps and methods he had reached his present position. In closing, he said: "I have given these details not in pride, but to point this moral of success in any work or profession, namely, I have done my work in the spirit of prayer, with God as my Senior Partner, and giving my time, ability, and money to building up His Kingdom in home and foreign fields. Young men, put God first in your life and make money your servant, if happiness is your goal."

The great outpouring of people of all grades and classes that on a busy week-day gathered at his funeral and completely filled the spacious auditorium, many of them in tears, gave token of the universal esteem and affection in which he was held. The services were conducted by his pastor, Dr. C. F. Myers, assisted by Dr. Melton Clark, of Charleston, S. C., and Dr. Alexander Martin, of Rock Hill, S. C. In

Children's Department

BROTHER AND SISTER AWAY.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl seven years old and live on a big farm. I am in the first grade. Rev. Mr. Currie is helping our preacher, Rev. P. L. Clark, this week in a meeting at our church (Hopewell). I have a pet calf. I have a little sister and brother but they are gone, so I hope you will print this, as I want to surprise them.

Your little friend,
Burgaw, N. C. Lucile Mallard.

CHILDREN'S DAY.

Dear Standard:

This is my second letter. My father still takes your paper and I enjoy reading the letters and stories.

My brother lives at Penniman, Va.

attendance were many relatives and friends from a distance.

In the beautiful Greensboro cemetery, toward the close of an exquisite day, in nature's hushed and tenderest hour, he was laid to rest, while the choir sang "How Firm a Foundation," and there echoed in our ears a favorite hymn of his sung as we left the church, "There's a Land That is Fairer Than Day." As the glory deepened in the western sky, the streets of gold seemed to come into view and the pearly gates to be visible opening, through which one day we, too, shall pass to join our loved ones in the better land.

"Oh, these parting scenes will end,

Some sweet day, by and by;

We shall gather friend with friend,

Some sweet day, by and by;

There before our Father's throne,

When the mists and clouds have flown,

We shall greet our loved ones gone,

Some sweet day, by and by."

E. W. S.

IN MEMORIAM.

Claudius York.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. York, of Newell, N. C., had the shadow of death pass over it on the evening of August 29, when Claudius, their eight-year-old son, was instantly killed while at innocent play. He was a member of the Busy Bee Society of Newell Presbyterian Sunday school and was loved by his class mates and honored by his teacher.

May these parents and loved ones see this sad dispensation only as a "shadow of death." Little Claudius still lives.

"We shall go to him but he shall not return to us."

Mrs. Fred Stewart.

Miss Florence Helms.

His name is Gordon Watson Cameron.

We are going to have a Children's Day at Big Branch school house the first Sunday in October.

Hope to see my letter in print, as I want to surprise my brothers and sisters.

Your unknown friend,
Marguerite Cameron.

AN AFTERNOON IN THE WOODS.

It was a very hot afternoon. All lesson books were put away at Fir Tree Farm for a half-holiday had been announced, and the children were told they might do whatever they pleased.

"I'm going out into the woods," called Tom, dragging a cap over his auburn curls.

"Let me go with you," cried Betty.

"And me," chimed Bobby.

"No, thanks," answered Tom. "I want to be alone this afternoon," and off he ran.

How hot it was! Even in the woods, where only tiny sunbeams strayed, it seemed too hot to walk. Tom lay down on a mossy mound, beneath a tall fir tree.

How busy the bees were! How the beetles hummed! "Coo, coo," lulled the wood pigeons. Something stirred by Tom's side and two sharp ears cocked up. Presently, a little white tail disappeared into a hole by the tree. Of course, it was a rabbit. Tom lay very still, so still that mother would have been surprised if she had been there. "Take two cows, Taffy!" "Take two," sang the wood pigeons, "A little piece of bread and no cheese," called the yellow-hammer; and the bees went busily humming. Crackle, crackle; it was the rabbit again, and this time he had two children with him, that is to say, two rabbits much smaller than himself.

"This way," said the big brother rabbit, "let's play with the cones," and they scrambled about, just where Tom was lying.

"What's that?" asked the tiniest rabbit, catching sight of Tom's bright curls.

"That is the little boy from the farm," answered Big Brother; "shall we take him home?"

"Oh, yes," cried both the children, flapping their whiskers with delight; "do let's take him home."

"You can't," said Tom, laughing. "I'm much too big."

"We'll soon see," answered Big Brother, and they all came round him and pushed him with their noses; and, to Tom's surprise, he went rolling down the mossy mound into the hole where he had seen the white tail of the rabbit disappear.

"You see; you were not so very big, after all," said Big Brother, flicking a piece of moss from his nose. "How do you like our home?"

"There isn't much room," said Tom; and then, to his dismay, he got smaller and smaller, until the tiniest rabbit looked quite big.

"I'm like Alice in Wonderland," he said to himself. "Do you know Alice?" he asked Big Brother. "Do you remember if she ever grew big again?" But Big Brother was thinking of something else.

"This," he said, pointing with his left-hand whiskers, "is a subterranean passage. I daresay you have learned in your lesson books that that long word means 'under the earth.' Come along and we will show you our dining room and the larder, and all the other rooms. Come, children," he said kindly to the little ones, and Tom, who felt quite a little boy by this time, jumped on Big Brother's back.

What a ride it was! In and out they went from one room to another, until at last the larder, stored with all kinds of nuts and leaves from the woods, was reached.

"Help yourself," said Big Brother, sitting on his hind legs and letting Tom slide gently to the ground. There were cob nuts and hazel nuts, and Tom took a big cob nut and cracked it.

"Will it make me grow big again?" he asked, thinking of Alice and the cake she ate.

"You musn't grow too big for your home," answered Big Brother; "that is a most uncomfortable thing to do," and Big Brother laughed as if it amused him very much. Tom had never seen a rabbit laugh before. Big Brother stood up like a squirrel, threw back his ears, shut both his eyes, opened his mouth wide and made a noise like a coffee-grinder when you turn the handle. Tom had to laugh, too; the baby rabbits joined in, and then a strange thing happened: the roof of the larder opened wide, and Tom could see the sun shining, the tall fir trees standing up, and felt the warm air on his face.

"Whatever has happened?" asked Tom, recovering from his surprise. But there was no answer from Big Brother or the little rabbits.

"Take two cows, Taffy," Tom heard the pigeons call—"take two"—"A little bit of bread and no cheese," sang the yellow-hammer.

Tom rubbed his eyes. He was lying under the fir tree and he wasn't in the hole at all!

"I must have been dreaming," he said to himself; he felt himself all over, to make quite sure, picked up his cap, which had fallen to the ground, and got up. Just then a rabbit scurried past.

"Big Brother," called Tom, but the rabbit only hurried into the hole by the tree.

"It was only a dream," Tom sighed,

Church News.

(Continued from page 19)

We have only three candidates for the ministry, the lowest number carried on our roll for several years.

Presbytery is in line with Assembly's plans for benevolences.

Evangelism: This Presbytery seeks to do its evangelistic work chiefly through its own ministers and the plan works well. During the past summer 38 special meetings were held, resulting in 217 additions to our churches. With few exceptions these meetings were conducted by the ministers of the Presbytery. At this meeting this cause was fully considered and the evangelistic spirit fostered.

Presbyterial Home Missions is in good condition, though we still need two or three more good men. Special attention is being given just now to Purdy School. Presbytery has put this, its only educational institution, under the supervision of the Home Missions committee. Rev. C. N. Ralston, the principal, reports encouraging prospects for the present opening. Much needed repairs on building have been made and plans are being formed to raise $5,000 by January 1, 1920, for dormitory. All funds for Purdy should be sent to J. H. Lumpkin, Memphis, Tenn., and when remittances are made the specific purpose for which they are made should be clearly and fully designated.

Adjourned meeting to be held on call of moderator at Brownsville, Tenn., during the sessions of the Synod of Tennessee there, which is to convene at Brownsville, October 14, 1919.

J. H. Lumpkin, S. C.

TEXAS.

Presbytery of Central Texas met in the Presbyterian Church of Cameron, September 15, was opened with a sermon, by request of the moderator, by Rev. J. J. Grier from Mark 11:24-26. There were present in all eighteen ministers and thirteen ruling elders.

Officers—Rev. H. L. Paisley, moderator; clerks, Rev. L. E. Selfridge and Rev. E. S. Sansom.

Received—Rev. Julius Caesar Byars from the Dallas Presbytery, U. S. A. Mr. George H. Hurst, a member of Clifton Church, was received according to the latest action of the General Assembly as a candidate for the gospel ministry.

Corresponding Members—Revs. B. M. Slatter, of the African Mission, and W. E. Copeland, of Austin Presbytery, U. S. A.

East Austin Church was dissolved and, together with its property, the members were transferred to the First Southern Church of Austin.

A call for the pastoral services of Rev. J. C. Byars was received from Belton Church, accepted, and the following commission appointed to conduct the installation: Rev. L. E. Selfridge to preside, preach the sermon and propound the constitutional questions; Rev. C. W. Peyton to charge the pastor and Elder Edmund Heinsohn to charge the people. Time left to the commission.

Dismissed—Rev. W. A. McLeod to the Presbytery of Western Texas and Licentiate C. E. Newton to the care of Brazos Presbytery.

The Presbyterial sermon was preached by Rev. W. R. Minter. Subject, "Jesus Christ, the Citizen in the Affairs of His Home Town." A singular subject, but well handled under four heads; as a business man, society, government and religion. The next sermon is to be preached by Rev. C. T. Caldwell and Rev. T. W. Currie as alternate. Subject, "The Historic Faith Sufficient for and Adapted to All Changes of Time and Condition."

The executive committee of the Assembly is asked to furnish a Sunday school missionary for the Presbytery.

A Mexican church was reported organized at Mart with twenty-seven members, two elders and two deacons, and enrolled.

The report of the committee on Minutes of the Assembly was docketed for the spring meeting.

Overture to the Synod of Texas—"To appoint another commission to review the records of the various boards of its educational institutions and of the Executive Committee of Schools and Colleges of the Synod, and devise a plan for their regulation co-ordinating with one another and with its four committees of schools and colleges. And that money be provided for the expenses of the members of the commission."

The report of the Committee on Home Missions was encouraging. Several members, by appointment, spoke on the different phases of the subject. Special mention was made of the Maysfield church, for a long time one of the Home Mission churches. Now they propose to call a minister for all his time at a salary and manse of $1,500. As the Methodist and Presbyterian churches have for a long time worked harmonious on alternate Sabbaths, this arrangement is to continue, and the other half of the pastor's time is offered freely to the Home Mission committee for its work.

Temple was chosen as the place of the spring meeting next year, time Thursday, April 15, at 8 p. m.

M. C. Hutton, S. C.

with satisfaction. "I think I'll go home and see what Betty and Bobby are doing," and he hurried through the woods toward home.

When he got to the farm gates he saw a big motor car standing there, and Betty, with a veil over her face, standing on the seat. Suddenly she clapped her hands. "Here's Tom," she cried. "Hurry, Tom, you're just in time for a lovely treat," and Tom found that Uncle Dick had called to take them all for a drive to the Manor Farm, ten miles away.

"Yes, you're just in time," said mother, coming out of the house with Bobby; "where have you been, darling?"

"I went by myself into the woods," answered Tom, hanging his head.

Mother said nothing but patted his bright curls.

Toot! toot! Uncle Dick was ready, and in a little while they were spinning through the lanes toward the Downs. Once a rabbit scurried into a hole. "There goes Big Brother," laughed

Tom, pointing to a little white tail disappearing into a hole by the roadside, but nobody heard what he said.

That night, however, when they were all at home again, and Betty and Bobby were in bed, Tom sat on mother's knee, just as he used to when he was tiny, and told her all about Big Brother, and the little rabbits that he had dreamt about under the fir tree in the woods; how they made a very little boy of him, and how Big Brother had laughed and said, "You mustn't grow too big for your home."

"Well," said mother, at the finish, "we need never feel too big to be kind," and she kissed him good-night.

If there is a Big Brother rabbit in the woods, and I am sure there is, he must often see Tom playing with his little brother and sister in the woods, and sometimes he must see them sitting under the fir tree, for his home is very near.—The Springfield Republican.

11 Eggs a Day From 17 Young Pullets

Mrs. Niles Started Her Pullets Laying at 6-months Old. Tells How.

"Early in November, I bought a package of Don Sung and started giving it to 17 May pullets. In the first 30 days, they laid 138 lovely eggs, and I got 5 cents apiece for them. All through December, I got 11 to 13 eggs a day."—Mrs. E. S. Niles, R. F. D. 2, Lucerne, Ind.

Mrs. Niles, like thousands of others, has found how to start young pullets laying and keep them laying all winter. The same method gets the eggs from moulting hens. Whether or not this seems possible to you, try this plan at our risk.

Give your hens Don Sung and watch results for one month. If you don't find that it pays for itself and pays you a good profit besides, simply tell us and your money will be promptly refunded.

Don Sung (Chinese for egg-laying) works directly on the egg-laying organs, and is also a splendid tonic. It is easily given in the feed, improves the hen's health, makes her stronger and more active in any weather, helps her through the moult, and starts her laying.

Try Don Sung for 30 days and if it doesn't get you the eggs, no matter how cold or wet the weather, your money will be refunded by return mail. Get Don Sung from your druggist or poultry remedy dealer or send 50 cents for a package by mail prepaid. Burrell-Dugger Co., Columbia Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind. 466 are there some 435 matriculates and the College refusing to enroll more men, one of these matriculates being an attractive young Chinaman, Paul C. Meng, nineteen years of age, who enters the Junior class from Tsing Hua College, Peking, but everything seems to be on an enlarging scale. One may begin in such an enumeration of greater things with the pastor, Rev. Dr. Richards, who has begun the year with some very fine sermons. Many thought he reached a high water mark on Sunday when commenting on superficiality as a characteristic of this age.

Educational.

(Continued from page 10)

Heretofore the campus has been fairly content with a good orchestra and glee club, but Colonel Mueller backed by professorial and student sentiment is persuaded that Davidson must have a first class band of some 25 or 30 pieces and he is moving in such a way that the several hundred dollars necessary for the purchase of the instruments are likely to be in sight pretty soon. One scheme that will be inaugurated in part tomorrow is to give the classes one day off and allow the men to go into the near by cotton fields. Four hundred men in one day, or rather in four divisions on successive days properly distributed can gather in a great deal of seed cotton and make many a dollar that will sound loud and musical when changed into brass instruments—clanging slymbal and its fellows.

A Y. M. C. A. secretary devoting all of his time to the work is another mark of a greater college, and Mr. Robert Miles (and he has a most useful help-meet in his wife) has taken hold of the 'Y' and the students themselves in a manner very gratifying to those who have insisted that a secretary was an imperative need here.

The local Christian Endeavor society had a visit and inspiring lecture from the field secretary, Mr. Carl Lehman, of Chattanooga, yesterday afternoon. His address on the four square member, optimistic, consecrated, enthusiastic, and ready for and active in service, was well worth while and tonic in its effect upon all who heard it.

In the absence of Dr. Richards on Sunday, Rev. G. F. Bell, of Charlotte, will fill the pulpit here. His visit is anticipated with keen interest as Mr. Bell is known here only by reputation, which certainly is of a kind to make students and town folks alike pleased to hear him.

Agnes Scott College—After nearly two months preparatory work, the directors of the Agnes Scott $500,000 endowment campaign announce that the campaign proper will be formally opened on October 14. Taking into account all the promising indications, they are very hopeful that the drive will be an enthusiastic, whirlwind affair. All plans are nearly completed. The committees in the 37 districts of Georgia have been appointed and are ready to begin their work when the campaign opens. Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Tennessee and Virginia have been divided into districts, and committees are rapidly being formed. In all these states the Alumnae are working enthusiastically, while in North and South Carolina they will have almost entire charge of the campaign.

Mr. J. K. Orr, of Atlanta, chairman of the General Campaign Committee, has expressed his extreme gratification at the progress made.

Agnes Scott opened Sept. 17, with the largest enrollment it has ever had; 435 students, taxing the college to its limit, while over two hundred have been turned away. The student body represents over 34 states and several foreign countries.

The launching of this campaign is the result of the offer made by the General Educational Board of New York last June to give Agnes Scott $175,000 provided it would raise $325,000. This is a signal honor to be paid to the college, as the Board offers to help only institutions, which through investigation it has found to be doing the very finest work.

Agnes Scott has been classed with the twelve best colleges of the United States, according to the bulletin published by Southern Association of College Women. But its present endowment is the very lowest of them all.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. Jno. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

A CALL TO PRAYER.

Dear Women of the N. C. Synodical Auxiliary:

Five weeks from today the Synodical Auxiliary will be in session at Durham. We are asking nearly one hundred women to leave their homes to come together for prayer and conference that we may be better prepared for the leadership in the work that is ours to do for the kingdom.

A program has been prepared that promises to be a great help and inspiration to all who attend.

This will be a meeting of unusual importance because of the rapid development of our organization and the special problems that are to come before us this fall.

We covet the spirit's manifest presence and blessing, and we ask that every member in the Synodical will remember the Durham meeting in special prayer at the October monthly meetings.

Will not every woman who belongs to the Synodical, and there are 8393 of us, respond to this call to prayer that God will bless those who attend and all that is done at the Durham meeting, Nov. 4 and 5?

Yours faithfully

Mrs. W. B. Ramsay,
President N. C. Synodical Auxiliary.

Attention Moore County Auxiliaries of Fayetteville Presbyterial—The Moore County Presbyterial Rally will be held in the auditorium of Elsie High School, on Friday, October 17, 11 a. m. to 4 p. m. Every member is urged to be present, and to bring a basket lunch for a picnic dinner. A good program has been arranged. Among the speakers will be Mrs. R. N. Page, Mrs. J. M. McIver, Mrs. J. R. Page, and a returned missionary of the M. E. Church, Mr. Geo. O. Holbrook, of Vikarabad, Deccan, India.

As this is a good opportunity to see our own Presbyterial High School, we cordially invite our friends to meet with us. Remember the date, Friday, October 17:

Mrs. W. L. Wilson,
County Visitor for Moore County.

Concord Presbyterial Temple Blocks—According to the instruction of Concord Presbyterial Auxiliary held at Marion a set of the Temple Blocks have been made and are ready for distribution. In fact, the blocks have made already six visits and they have two engagements for October.

This notice is to say that any auxiliary wishing to use them for the monthly meeting is requested to file the application for same with Mrs. W. B. Ramsay, Hickory, N. C.

The Women of Pee Dee Presbyterial Auxiliary are most cordially invited to join in a Day of Prayer for the great causes of the church to be held by the women of the Latta and Dunbarton Churches in the Latta Church on Friday, October 10, at 10:30 a. m.

It is planned to have the morning session occupied with reports from the Presbyterial officers, and to have an address by Mrs. M. S. McKinnon, of Hartsville, S. C., President of the Presbyterial Auxiliary. In the afternoon there will probably be addresses by a foreign missionary and a representative of the Home Missions work of the church.

Next week's papers will carry the detailed program.

There never was a greater need for fervent and united prayer, if we would evangelize the world in this generation. So please set aside Friday, October 10, for this good purpose.

Write Mrs. L. L. Watson, Latta, S. C., on what train you will arrive.

Millinery, P. G.

(Continued from Page 9)

in this store, you'll get your time sooner or later. If the men knew as much as I know about the hat business, they'd go to the head of the millinery department and ask for an introduction to the girl that sells the most hats, because they'd know she was the most livable and lovable girl in the store. It beats all the college diplomas in the country. I know of a woman who drove a milliner's clerk nearly to distraction by spending an hour trying on hats, saying of each one, 'I don't look well in it.' At last the clerk said, 'Madam, if the truth were told, you wouldn't look well in any hat.' You girls laugh at that, as though you wanted to say the same thing to some of your customers, but it wasn't a smart speech. It was a stupid speech. It sold no hat; you can bet on that. It showed that the girl was a perfect failure as a millinery-clerk. She ought to have gone to teaching school. It's the school-teacher's or government inspector's job to criticise. If a girl comes to me, and says 'Mr. Monroe, what would you advise me to be? I want to be the sort of girl that some day, when a man as nice as my daddy comes along, he'll want to marry. Shall I become a nurse, or a stenographer, or what would you advise?' I'd say right off the bat: 'Be a milliner's clerk, child, and sell hats. And bless your sweet heart, the whole world's at your feet.'

The roomful of girls surged past Emily as they filed out. Last of all came Mildred, with averted, half-sullen face; and not till Emily laid her hand on the girl's shoulder did she even turn in Emily's direction.

"Mildred, your mother came to see me today. You ought to have told me the reason why you failed in your final examination."

"What good would it have done?" returned the girl dully. "If I'd 'a' known, I'd 'a' known, I recon. I s'pose I only knew seventy."

"Yes, I suppose so," assented Emily, as Mildred, less embarrassed than she, walked out of the room.

When Emily reached the door of her home, her young sister with dishevelled hair burst into the hall from another door, laughing boisterously. Emily looked her over judiciously. "Julia, how can you be so noisy? I hope you haven't been on the street with hair looking like that. I heard some girls on the street say, 'Did you hear what Julia Durland did this afternoon?' You distress me greatly, Julia, by being so noisy, so lacking in neatness; and now to make yourself so conspicuous, whatever it is you've been doing, that your name should be bandied about on the street."

With fifteen-year-old vehemence Julia snorted: "Well, Emily Durland, you needn't think you have any right to criticise me just because you are my sister. I'm glad you're nothing but my sister, and not my teacher, too. I guess Miss Sally walked home with me too, and she didn't say one word about my hair. She'd led the cheering at the gym this afternoon when I made two baskets handrunning—and that's most likely the awful thing you heard about me on the street; for the kids were wild about it; for it gave us the game. I think you are perfectly horrid, going around measuring us up all the time to see if we are all just perfection according to your notions. I wouldn't trade my nice Miss Sally off for your kind of a teacher even if I flunked."

Julia fired this shot as she stormed out of the room.

A month later Emily Durland applied to be taken on the force of the World millinery-store. "School-teaching is telling on me; so I want to spend a year here," Emily explained to the puzzled manager of the store.

At first Mildred Cosgrove avoided her, refusing all overtures of friendliness; but before she knew it she found herself planning to sit near Emily during lunch-hour and then waiting to walk home with her. Emily waited till the friendship had progressed so far that Mildred had shyly given her a bunch of flowers before she ventured to suggest that Mildred should review with her help the studies in which she had failed in the spring. The offer was made so cordially that Mildred eagerly accepted. Day by day they studied: Mildred, history and mathematics; Emily, tenderness, gentleness, forbearance, and love, while they worked with ribbons and feathers, shapes and hat-linings.

One day Mildred whispered to Emily with one of her adoring smiles, "My, but the girls all love you!"

Emily fairly sprang upon her, giving her arm a little squeeze. "Love me! Why? Are you sure, Mildred?"

"Because you're just so dear and pleasant to everybody; how could any one help but love you?"

"I'm gaining my master's degree, that post-graduate degree in livableness that I came to the millinery-store to win," she said to herself that night. "I feel like a swindler, taking my pay-envelope when I'm getting so much out of my course. I ought to be paying for it instead of being paid."

About this time a close intimacy sprang up between Emily and Sally Carpenter. It began over the purchase of a hat, but ripened with great rapidity. As the friendship deepened, Emily felt the loving charm of the girl of whose teaching-methods she had once been so intolerant.

The friendship of these two dissimilar girls thrived wonderfully, to their mutual advantage. It grew stronger after Emily told Sally in confidence that she had deliberately gone into the millinery-store to learn to be pleasant to people. "You see, Sally," she declared, "you have always had a bevy of adoring pupils hanging around your desk. So you can't understand how my pupils dislike me."

"You were such a splendid teacher," insisted Sally, "that I'm sure you're wrong and that your children really adored you."

"They hated me, and I knew it. All my determination to compel them to learn their lessons made them hate me worse, till I was living in an atmosphere of hatred. I was growing hateful, not only to my pupils but to everybody, including myself. Really, I was having a hard time living with myself. Just think of living with a hateful woman for twenty-four hours a day seven days a week. I shiver to think of what I was becoming. Now it's my business to be pleasant. When I go back to teaching, I'm going to be so pleasant that I'll have the pupils lined up three deep around my desk."

Their interview was interrupted by a tired-looking, middle-aged woman, gaunt and homely, for whom Emily was obliged to fit a hat. When at last one had been found that tamed down the poor woman's facial eccentricities, she turned to Emily to say as she left the department: "I've always dreaded this thing of buying a hat. I know I'm ugly, and the clerks' most always make me feel a lot uglier before I leave the store than I thought I was when I went in. So I hate the job. But you've been so nice and pleasant that I haven't minded it a bit today, and you've made me feel sort of nice in my new hat."

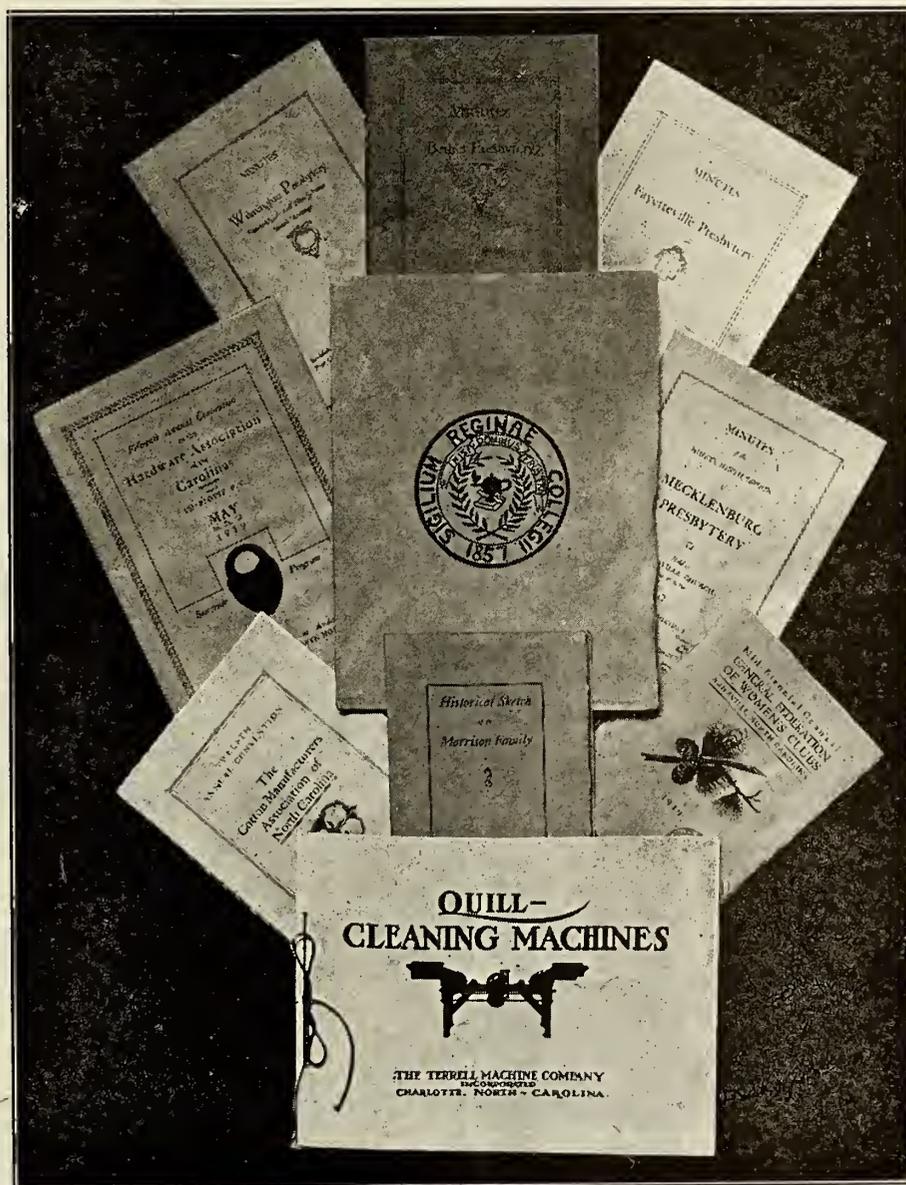

"Thank you," said Emily with wistful earnestness. "Your hat is suitable, and you look well in it. Be sure you put it on far to the front."

"So nice and pleasant," quoted Sally. "A speech like that one certainly ought to entitle you to about one-hundred-per-cent grade."

"Sally Carpenter," protested Emily sternly, "haven't I told you how scandalously easy you were in making up your grades? Give me about eighty-five per cent on that interview, and I'll be satisfied. For any higher grades that are due me, wait till next year, when I mean to hold in school every child I can get my hands on. I'll make them love to study. You see if I don't! Maybe they'll not learn quite so perfectly, though I'm not even sure of that; but just you wait and see how they'll love it. Sally," she sparkled, "Mildred Cosgrove is going back with me to school this year. You ought to have seen her beautiful eyes shine when she told me she was really going to finish high school and go to college, if she had to scrub floors to make her way. She says she's going to be a school-teacher. And O Sally," she added shyly, "she says she wants to be one just like me. Think of it! It humbles me. A teacher like me."—Mrs. Wm. F. Gibbons, in Christian Endeavor World.

OUR PRINTING DEPARTMENT

Is equipped to produce anything you may need in Printing, and do it to your entire satisfaction. We show below a photograph of a few of the Catalogues we have produced this season, as an evidence of the broad patronage we are receiving. The illustration does not do justice to the work; but if you are interested we will gladly furnish samples of any or all of them. We are prepared to handle this class of work promptly.

The lot includes four sets of Minutes of Proceedings of Wilmington, Bethel, Fayetteville and Mecklenburg Presbyteries; a 2-color Catalogue for the Hardware Association of the Carolinas; Queens College Annual; Convention Proceedings of the Cotton Manufacturers' Association of N. C.; a Historical Sketch of the Morrison Family; Program of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and a Machinery Catalogue for Terrell Machine Co., of Charlotte.

We have received words of commendation, and letters expressing thorough satisfaction, from all of these customers. If you use anything printed, get in touch with us, no matter where you live. WE ARE PRINTING FOR CONCERNS IN SEVEN STATES NOW.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD PUBLISHING CO.

216 NORTH TRYON ST.

Phone 643

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Miscellaneous

OUR ALL THE YEAR ROUND GARDEN.

The best behaved fall garden child I know is Daffodil, and next to her, her little brother Jonquil. Sometimes great big fat Hyacinth behaves, but small, brown-coated, smooth-looking, long-nosed Daffodil is quite the nicest. So buy a few daffodil and jonquil bulbs and get acquainted with these two good children.

Notice particularly how similar little jonquil's coat and nose are to his sister's.

I would let our new friends stay on the table for several days before I planted them, so that we might get to know them by sight and by name, as we learn to know real flesh-and-blood children. But I would be very careful to place these little comrades so that the rounded part or base was down and the pointed face up, and I would never squeeze their noses!

By and by the day will come when Jonquil and Daffodil must be planted. There are several ways of doing this. Suppose we use a glass jar first. It may be a little fern bowl, like the one in which partridge berries are sometimes planted. We fill the bowl almost full of fine white sand and if we have no sand we take some baskets or our little carts and go to a house that is being built and ask the builder if he will give us a little sand for our garden. Into this bowl full of sand we plant our Daffodil or Jonquil bulbs. They must nestle down so that only a little bit of their noses stick out. Two bulbs must never touch each other. They would not be comfortable that way. Two little girls would not like to sit so close to each other at the breakfast table that neither one could move.

Next, give the bulbs a big enough drink to soak the sand thoroughly, but not enough to have water standing on the surface. Now put the bowl away in the dark. The place need not be cool, but every little while the sand should be moistened.

In about ten days or two weeks, lo and behold, you will notice long white roots struggling all around and through the sand close to the glass where you can see them, and the noses have put forth some leaflike shoots. It is now time to bring our little garden to the light. Then in just a few days a miracle takes place. The roots have shot back into the sand; they do not like the light, and want always to remain cool and covered. The noses have turned green. And within about three weeks Daffodil and Jonquil blossom!

Sometimes instead of using the sand, place some small stones in a low, pretty bowl and arrange the bulbs on top of them. This bowl should be put away in the dark for about ten days or two weeks and then brought out into the light. There should always be enough water to touch the base of the bulbs, but never to come around them. This, you see, is just the way we start Chinese lily bulbs, but Daffodil behaves better than Chinese lilies because her blossoms rarely blast.

If you like, Daffodil and Jonquil may also be planted in a pot of soil. Even so, leave their noses sticking out and you must put them in a dark, cool place for five or six weeks. It is better, I think, to use the sand or the stones with Daffodil and Jonquil because then you don't have to wait so long for them.

After you have planted your first two or three daffodils and find out just how long it takes in your home for them to blossom, you could start some for father's birthday, timing them just right. Of course, it is understood that father will be kind enough to have a birthday this fall. If he will not, then Mother or Grandmother or Baby surely will. I cannot imagine a family without at least one birthday in the fall or early winter.

To the parents: Just what does a child get out of this little garden? One lesson is a lesson of observation, and another is of care; careful watering. The greatest lesson is the lesson of life: how out of something apparently lifeless there springs into being something living, beautiful and sweet. It is a great revelation to anyone, young or old, to handle life and be able to produce something living, to care for it, and to make it comfortable and happy. And then, you can have such fun planting bulbs. Make a ceremony over it. Fuss about it a little. Make a picture of the ugly little brown bulb and, later, and are gone for good when Gray's Ointment is applied. It enters the pores of the skin, cleanses the wound, soothes the pain, kills the germs and immediately begins healing. The blood is permanently relieved of the disease. Just so with sores, bruises, cuts, burns, stings, eczema and the many similar forms of skin eruptions. Its constant use for a century has made it a family word in every household. You should have it on your medicine shelf for emergencies. Phone your druggist. If he cannot supply you send his name to W. F. Gray & Co., 843 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., and a liberal sample will be sent you free.

BOILS VANISH

You are invited to call and see our fall offerings in "Queen Anne," "William and Mary," "Louis VI," "Italian Renaissance," "Colonial," and "Artcraft" Dining Room Suits in the three most popular woods---American Walnut, Fumed Oak and Mahogany

W. T. McCOY & CO.
CHARLOTTE, N. C.

another of the child which comes from it.

Of course, there are other bulks one may plant, but I am choosing two perfectly satisfactory, absolutely responsible ones. I believe that in work with children one should rarely choose what may be a failure. So, in our all-the-year-round garden we pick out successes. Do not forget the names of our fall children, Daffodil and her little brother, Jonquil.—Ellen Eddy Shaw, Brooklyn Botanic Garden.

DON'T GET THE CRITICISM HABIT.

It is as easy to fall into the habit of criticising other people as to tumble into the water when the bridge you are on gives way.

Yet it is a habit that has practically nothing to recommend it. The critical girl is choosing the safe and sure way of alienating friend after friend and of building up a little isolation camp, where she will be the sole living creature.

No one can find everything in the world to his liking, and the ways and means of other people are often absurd or disagreeable in our eyes. But what

WANTED—Young man as book-keeper, with knowledge of music and public singing. Address X, Care Presbyterian Standard.

TEACHERS: Can place you now $60 to $150. Fifty to hundred urgent calls daily, best schools and colleges. Special enrollment. Three offices: Columbia, Chattanooga, Richmond. Write today.
SOUTHERN TEACHERS' AGENCY, Columbia, S. C.

BOOKKEEPING AND SHORTHAND thoroughly taught. Enroll any time. Address Greensboro Commercial School, Greensboro, N. C., for Catalogue. Special Summer Rates now on.

Prepare For a Larger Income

Modern business requires trained men and women. You can earn a much larger salary and be assured always of a good paying position if you take Draughon's standard business courses. Write today for full information.

Draughon's Practical Business College
Knoxville, Tennessee Jacksonville, Florida

CHURCH ENVELOPES. Double and single envelope systems. Samples and prices sent upon request.
Double Envelope Corporation, Roanoke, Va.

Ladies, Attention! Here is an offer that will bring joy to the hearts of the Crochet and Tatting workers. Complete Crochet Library; just think of 1354 Standard Original Designs, all illustrated by actual photographs with complete directions for working.
No. 9 Yokes, Corset Covers and Nightgowns 16 cents
" 11 Tatting, Waists, etc. - - - 16 cents
" 13 Towels, Slips, Sheets - - - 16 cents
" 12 Patchwork for Quilts, etc. - - 28 cents
contents, 29 designs for Quilts. Send stamps.
LACLEDE BOOK CO. 816 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

AVOID INFLUENZA and its dreaded ally, Pneumonia, by using GOWAN'S Rub-It-On 25c. 50c. $1.00 FOR COLDS, GROUP, PNEUMONIA.
The original excellent external remedy. Keep the organs in good condition, using GOWAN'S LAXATIVE KIDNEY PILLS—25c. Satisfaction guaranteed if directions are followed. Gowan's reduces fevers and helps the heart. Send for sample. Gowan Medical Co., Concord, N. C.

of that? Are we sure we are not ourselves a cause for offense to those about us in a hundred unsuspecting items? You can go along seeing the things you don't like all around you, or you can fix your attention on what pleases you. If you choose the latter course your life will be very likely to hold an immense amount of pleasure, of love and good will, of enduring friendship. It seems worth giving up the joy of being critical to get these gifts in return!

Life is spoiled by constant carping and criticism. You soon surround yourself with an atmosphere of fault-finding as damp and depressing as a fog. No one enjoys being told he is in the wrong all the time. He may believe it, but he would rather think that you didn't. Just keep your critical faculty for yourself; it will have all the exercise it needs.—Jessie Roberts, in the Kansas City "Times."

GOOD NEWS FOR HOUSEKEEPERS

The Charlotte Laundry, Charlotte, N. C., offers a splendid service by Parcel Post on Faultless Dry Cleaning. Rugs, portieres, velvets, suits, dresses, silks, furs, gloves, cloth shoes, ribbons, etc., are cleaned and renewed and made to give longer and better wear by this famous method of dry cleaning. Satisfaction is guaranteed. Send us a trial order and you will be delighted with results.

Where Drugs Fail

Many Chronic diseases fail to respond to drug treatment, even in the hands of the best physicians, whereas acute diseases usually respond readily. When a disease has become chronic, drugs often seem to do as much harm as they do good, for the system rebels against them. It is just this class of cases which derive the greatest benefit from Shivar Mineral Water. If you suffer from chronic dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric acid poisoning or other curable conditions due to impure blood do not hesitate to accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer as printed below. His records show that only two in a hundred on the average, have reported "no beneficial results." This is a wonderful record from a truly wonderful spring. Simply sign the following letter:

Shivar Spring,
Box 4-H, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

Name
Address
Shipping Point

Church Furniture
WORK OF THE HIGHEST QUALITY
AT REASONABLE PRICES.
Write for Catalogue
BUDDE & WEIS MFG. CO.
JACKSON, TENNESSEE

Land Sour?

Neutralize the acidity, sweeten and enrich the soil and increase your yield with

RELCOMARL

Effective, inexpensive, economical. Guaranteed 90 per cent. lime carbonate. For prices, free soil test papers and literature, write Dept. 8-A, Roanoke Lime Co., Inc., Roanoke, Va.

DAVIS-WAGNER NEW BUILDING, ACCOMMODATING 500 STUDENTS.
Business College
POSITIONS FOR GRADUATES. 306 East Freemason St. CATALOGUE FREE. NORFOLK, VA.

Kentucky Theological Seminary
Louisville, Kentucky

Able faculty. Course of study comprehensive and adapted to the times. High standards. Practical training. Excellent library facilities. Splendid buildings, with comfortable dormitories. Expenses moderate. Session begins October 1, 1919. For further information write the President.
Charles R. Hemphill

The Most Wonderful Half Price Feast

in the 40 years' history of the Christian Herald 20 scintillating crisp Stories human interest
20 pages of Studies
world news
50 inspirational Feature Articles
educational 70 wonderful Editorials
interpretative
70 helpful daily, Meditations
devotional
10 short, pithy, Sermons worth while 200 or more black Pictures and white
10 beautiful covers Colors usually in several hundreds of other features, all available at half price to a million new (trial) subscribers in the next

10 big satisfying weekly issues for 25c

The Christian Herald is one of America's really great religious and social institutions. It is the best loved and most widely read inter denominational family magazine in the world. It has been the means of relieving more distress, feeding more hungry, clothing more naked than all other periodicals combined. It is dedicated to the service of humanity. It is at the forefront in the effort to make of every church a community center for social and religious uplift. It tells the important news of every denomination, but it is the organ of none. You and your family need the vision of world service the Christian Herald gives. A million new short term subscribers before 1920 is the Christian Herald's goal. Its ten weeks half price offer is made without profit to the Christian Herald. 25 cents in coin or stamps sent now (at the Christian Herald risk) is guaranteed to give you more and better literature than you ever could imagine possible. Address The Christian Herald, 416 Bible House, New York.

SMILING OR SNARLING.

A man forty years of age, writing in the American Magazine, says that if he had his life to live over again he would strive to cultivate the habit of smiling rather than the habit of snarling, in which he had become sadly adept.

Here is a pointer for every boy who wishes to make the most of himself and to get the most out of life. There are a great many disagreeable situations to be faced by every one. The attitude which we assume when confronted by that which we do not like, however, is within our own power. A boy may train himself to see the humorous side of every difficulty, and face it with a smile, or he may allow himself to meet difficulties with a sour look and a snarling voice.

The boy who smiles in the face of that which is hard and disagreeable is a victor, but he who snarles is vanquished. Boys who allow themselves to snarl are on the way to lives of failure and disappointment; boys who are learning to smile are on the way to lives of success and joy.

One hundred years ago there were practically no missionaries in foreign lands. There are now 22,000, working in almost every country of the globe.

Plant Your Cotton Alleys
Make them produce a profit as well as the rows. Plant Clover in your cotton alleys and take advantage of the large profits on hay, now selling around $60 per ton. It will save a season, double the yield of the crop following and build up your soil.

Inoculate your seed with NitrA-germ and be sure of a good profit.

READ THIS RECORD

"I purchased NitrA-germ for one acre alfalfa and four acres crimson clover last season. I wish to say my alfalfa is as near perfect as I could wish. I have already cut it three times and am sure of two more cuttings. I secured a good stand of clover and have corn planted on the land where the clover was sowed, and am certain I will make forty per cent. more corn on this land than I will on the land adjoining it, planted the same day where there was no clover. I am highly pleased with NitrA-germ for growing alfalfa and clover and expect to use more this season. I am sure that clover is the best and cheapest method of fertilizing land and I am equally sure that NitrA-germ will grow it."

MARION BRYANT, Wilson Co., N. C.

NitrA-germ costs $2 Per acre delivered.

Write for FREE Book No. J- 6.

NitrA-Germ, Savannah, Ga.

Your Fall Suit

is at Berry's. For 40 years we've been selling the leading North Carolina families men's and boys' clothing. We know your wants and your tastes.

Samples Upon Request.

O. H. Berry & Co.
 ESTABLISHED 1879

MAIN AT ELEVENTH RICHMOND, VA.

AGENTS $6 a Day

Should be easily made selling our Concentrated Non-Alcoholic Food Flavors, Soaps, Perfumes and Toilet Preparations. Over 100 kinds, put up in collapsible tubes. Ten times the strength of bottle extracts. Every home in city or country is a possible customer. Entirely new. Quick sellers. Good repeaters. Not sold in stores. No competition. 100 per cent. profit to agents. Little or no capital required. Elegant sample case for workers. Start now while it's new. Write today—a post card will do—FREE for full particulars

AMERICAN PRODUCTS CO., 1533 American Bldg., Cincinnati, O.

PREPARE FOR A LARGER SALARY

In times of Peace prepare for a better job at a larger salary. Modern business demands trained men and women experts. The better the training the larger your salary will be. Today our graduates are in the front ranks of modern business. Enroll with this well-equipped business college, and help to make your future success secure. Handsome catalogue mailed on request. You can enter any time. School open all summer.

Kings Business College

Raleigh, N. C. and Charlotte, N. C.

Rocky River Springs School
For Boys

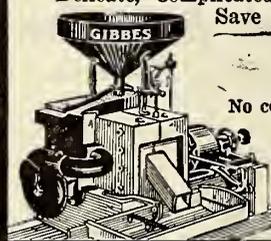

Thoroughly Christian. A Preparatory School for Boys. Moderate Cost: Fall term opens Sept. 23. Endorsed by Mecklenburg Presbytery.

For Announcement and Information, address

PROF. C. E. WELLS, Principal, AQUADALE, N. C.

Grind Your Corn the Simple Way

Delicate, Complicated Machinery is neither necessary nor economical. Save money in grinding your grain with—

The Gibbes Corn Mill

Simple—Fast—Economic—Durable

No complicated parts, whole machine easily handled. With ball-bearing system it is light running and rapid, requiring very little power. Little wear, smooth running, seldom a part to replace. Made of the best of materials. Absolutely guaranteed. For illustrated literature and prices address—

GIBBES MACHINERY CO., Dept. A-2, Columbia, S. C.

SAVE YOUR BODY

Conserve Your Health and Efficiency First

"I Would Not Part With It for $10,000"

So writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer. "Worth more than a farm," says another. In like manner testify over 100,000 people who have worn it.

THE NATURAL BODY BRACE

Overcomes WEAKNESS and ORGANIC AILMENTS of WOMEN and MEN. Develops erect, graceful figure. Brings restful relief, comfort, ability to do things, health and strength.

Wear It 30 Days Free At Our Expense

Does away with the strain and pain of standing and walking; replaces and supports misplaced internal organs; reduces enlarged abdomen; straightens and strengthens the back; corrects stooping shoulders; develops lungs, chest and bust; relieves backache, curvatures, nervousness, ruptures, constipation. Comfortable and easy to wear.

Keep Yourself Fit

Write today for illustrated booklet, measurement blank, etc., and read our very liberal proposition.

Howard C. Rash

Pres. Natural Body Brace Co.

289 Rash Bldg., Salina, Kansas

For Boys and Girls Also

Then the Bible had been translated into 65 languages and dialects. Now into more than 500. Then but a few thousand dollars were contributed annually for foreign missions, now $25,000,000. Then there was no need for ministers. There are now 93,000 pastors and evangelists. Then there were no single women missionaries; now 6,000. Then there were but a few missionary schools. There are now 30,000 Protestant schools and colleges. Then there were no mission presses. Now there are 160 publishing houses.—United Presbyterian.

WONDERFUL EGG PRODUCER.

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs, so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 3257 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1.00 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the tonic costs you nothing. Send a dollar today. Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

"In the A. E. F. With an Artist"

The sketch book and diary of Lieut. J. B. Mallard. Send $1.00 for your copy to

J. B. MALLARD

Box 625 CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Sweeten Your Land

Increase your yield and save on your fertilizer bill. Use

RELCO MARL

Costs little, means much. Guaranteed 90% Lime Carbonate. For prices, free soil test papers and literature, address Dept. 8-B, Roanoke Lime Co., Inc., Roanoke, Va.

YOUR FACE?
Is the Complexion Muddy, Tanned, Freckled?
If troubled with skin eruptions, sunburn, pimples, try
PALMER'S SKIN-SUCCESS SOAP
It cleanses, softens and clears the skin and tends to remove sunburn, tan, freckles, blackheads, pimples and eczema.
Thoroughly antiseptic. Ask your druggist, or write for free samples to
THE MORGAN DRUG CO.,
1521 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

J. M. BELK, Monroe, N. C.

W. H. BELK, Charlotte, N. C.

BELK BROS.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

CAROLINA'S LEADING DEPARTMENT STORE

Our Stocks Now Complete With the New Fall Goods

We solicit your inquiries as to prices, styles, etc. Better still, we give you a most cordial invitation to visit our Big Department Store in Charlotte. We have 10 Big Floors loaded with High Class Merchandise—Dry Goods, Clothing, Shoes, Ready-to-Wear, Men's Furnishings, Household Goods, Trunks, Suit Cases,

Wholesale or Retail

We are now buying for 23 Stores in North and South Carolina. Our purchasing power certainly enables us to give you BETTER VALUES than ever. Helps us to give you very much better goods for your money. This is our ideal.

Our Stock of New Wool Dress Goods

Include Serges, Tricotines, Tricolette, Jerseys, Broadcloths, Velours, Plaid Skirtings, all size Checks, very popular and serviceable. Prices range, 36-in. goods, 50c, 75c, 98c; 52-in. goods, all wool, $1.50. The Novelties run from $2.98 to $4.95. New Silks, New Velvets, Velours, etc.

New Fall and Winter Blankets

Both Plain and Pretty Plaids, all sizes, single beds and double beds, ranging in prices, $2.98 for the double cotton to $15.00 pair, fine wool.

Men's Clothing

Schloss Bros., Hamberger, Belk Specials, in Serges, Worsteds, Flannels. Prices not any higher than last year—$16.50, $19.50, $22.50, $25.00, $29.50 to $39.50. These come in sizes up to 44. Can give you up to 54 for the very large men.

Write us or see us about the School Boys' Suits. We have a Juvenile Department. We pay especial attention to Suits for all ages. Boys' sizes, 7 to 18 years, pure Worsted Suits, all new, $4.95, $6.95, $7.95, $8.95, $9.95; sizes 3 to 8—$2.98, $3.75, $4.95, $5.95, $6.95. Your money back for any Suit ordered from us that is not cheaper and better than you can buy.

Shoes for Men

Ralston, Health, Reynolds and Belk Special, "Queen Quality" and "Belk's Special Line" for Women, School Shoes for the Boys and Girls.

"Krieder's Pollyanna" Line for school wear, Goodyear Welts, all sizes, all leathers, made for looks and service, $3.50 to $6.00.

"Godman Line" for Boys and Girls, none better, all sizes, $2.50 to $4.00.

We devote our second floor to Ready-to-Wear. Our stocks are now ready. Come and see us. Always glad to show you. Our lines are correctly bought as to style and quality and our prices are less.

We send your money back promptly for any purchase from us not entirely satisfactory

WE HAVE THE NEW PICTORIAL PATTERNS
SEND US YOUR ORDERS

160 HENS—1500 EGGS.

Mrs. H. M. Patton, Waverly, Mo., writes: "I fed 2 boxes of 'More Eggs' and got 1500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly 21 days." This scientific tonic has made big egg profits for thousands of poultry raisers all over the U. S. It revitalizes the hens, tones them up and makes them lay all the time. Get ready now and make big profits out of your hens this winter. A $1.00 package will double the egg production and a million dollar bank guarantees to refund your money if you are not entirely satisfied. Send $1.00 now to E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, 3257 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., and get a season's supply of "More Eggs." Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

The world says a man is a fool for praying to God Who cannot be seen. But are not all the mightiest forces of this world unseen? The electric current is unseen; But do we tear down our telegraph wires or pull our trolley lines from their poles, or the telephone connections from the walls. Like a lot of "fools" we go on paying our nickels and being transported from one place to another or sending our messages as before. The wind that fills the fisherman's sails, or fans the tourist's cheeks is unseen; but for all that the modern apostles of the reel and the rod do not tie up their boats to the shore until they see the power that is felt all about them. Love is not seen by the naked eye. We can see the effect of it, we can see the evidence of it, but love itself is as invisible as God; yet the average agnostic will keep on courting notwithstanding, with a firm faith in something which he cannot see.—United Presbyterian.

Order a Hygienic Bed

26-lb., $10.20; 31-lb., $11.20; 36-lb., $12.10; 41-lb., $12.60; Pair 5-lb. Pillows, $1.80; 7-lb., $2.60; NEW FEATHERS—Best tick. We have $500 deposited in bank to guarantee satisfaction or money back. Order or write for catalogue today.

HYGIENIC BED CO., Dept. 16, Charlotte, N. C.

NEW SONG BOOKS
For Your Church

A wonderful value; 83 familiar songs of the Gospel, words and music. Used all over the world. Only $8 per hundred for No. 1 or 2, round or shaped notes, and $15 for No. 1 and 2, combined, round notes only. Send 30c for samples. Money back if not pleased.

E. A. K. HACKETT, Dept. No. 56, FT. WAYNE, IND.

Aberdeen & Rockfish Railroad

Between Aberdeen and Fayetteville

Eastbound		Westbound
Daily Ex. Sunday	Mixed	Daily Ex. Sunday	Mixed
No. 22	No. 38	No. 41	No. 21
7 30 am	9 10 am	Lv. Aberdeen Ar.	6 41 pm 5 00 pm
ar 8 35 am	10 00 am	Rae ford	5 55 pm ar 3 50 pm
lv 2 10 pm		Ar. Fayetteville Lv.	4 50 pm 1 00 pm
4 00 pm	11 20 am

WAGRAM BRANCH

Southbound		Northbound
Daily Ex. Sun.	Mixed	Daily Ex. Sun.	Mixed
No. 11		No. 12
Lv. 10 30 am	Rae ford	Ar. 12 40 pm
Ar. 11 15 am	Wagram	Lv. 12 00 noon

W. A. BLUE, General Supt.,
Aberdeen, N. C.

There's Quality

In Old Clothes

Many of the old suits of last year's purchase, tho soiled have more real good in them than suits of much higher price of today. While prices have increased quality has decreased.

Let Ledbetter's Bring it Out.

Our prices will make the old clothes new again. Get them out and mail it today.

Fancy Dyers and Dry Cleaners of

Suits, Dresses, Sport Coats, Silks, Furs, Gloves, Velvets, Feathers, Ribbons, Portiers, Rugs, Carpets, Blankets. Hats cleaned and blocked. Address,

Ledbetter's, Rocky Mount, N. C.

CHARLOTTE MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS

MEMORIALS OF QUALITY

"WE LEAD"

Quality First

Prices Right

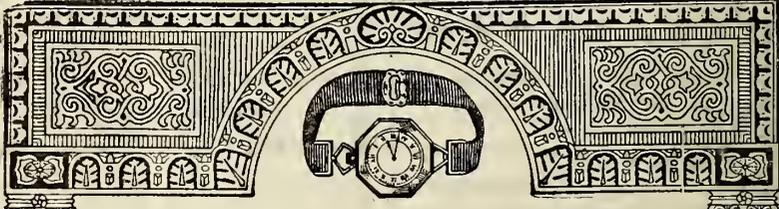

Workmanship

Unsurpassed

Memorials in Silver Georgia Marble are unsurpassed in beauty and durability.

CHARLOTTE MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS
WEST 7th ST. AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY
Cemetery Gate Phone 281 CHARLOTTE, N.C.

64 Years in the
JEWELRY BUSINESS
have given us an enviable reputation
to sustain.
If interested in Diamonds, Watches,
Jewelry or Silverware, it will be to your interest to consult us.
We are pleased to answer your inquiries.

JAMES ALLAN & CO.
289 King Street, Charleston, S. C.
The Hallmark Jewelers. Catalog on Request

Save $41.00 to $71.00 By Ordering Through The Club

The Ludden & Bates Cabinet Grand Phonograph is the finest companion you or your children could have. It amuses. It teaches. It keeps the children in good humor. It makes you forget business worries. If it accomplishes no more than this it would be worth many times its price, so can't you see that you owe it to your family, and yourself, to immediately install a Ludden & Bates in your home.

The investment is so small compared to the wonderful results obtained, no household today should be without a Phonograph. In fact, to be a little more explicit, none should be without a Ludden & Bates.

Plays All Makes of Records

The Ludden & Bates is the master product of a score of Master Designers—embodying all major improvements that have been brought out in all other Talking Machines, together with some important ones distinctly its own. The tone is as clear and full as science has yet made possible. No Metallic sounds; the volume is under instant control, you've no disconnection to make in changing from one type of record to another.

And to the Club belongs the credit of bringing the cost of good music down to where you've wanted to see it. You save over one-third the price, amounting to from $41.00 to $71.00 on the different outfits, by buying through the Presbyterian Standard Phonograph Club.

Write today for illustrated catalogue and liberal terms.

This Style—

No. 21,

$89.50

With 10 Records.

Other Styles from $77.00 to $127.00.

Ludden & Bates Standard Phonograph Club Department Atlanta, Ga.

Sparkles

A Painless Dentistry.

"What are you making such a noise for?" the dentist demanded. "Don't you know I'm a painless dentist?"

"Well, sah," retorted Dinah, "mebbe yo' is painless, but Ah isn't."—Ex.

"I heard your bridge club had a very exciting session this afternoon." "Yes. We played for each other's cooks."—Town Topics.

"You've got no kick about my extravagance. You were crazy to marry me."

"I realize that now," said he.—Watchman-Examiner.

The Modern Child.

The children's hour had come, and Father, seated in the glow of a floor-lamp, which once sold for thirty dollars but was now valued at eighty, was fairly smothered by the little bodies which clambered into his lap and planted their feet on his vest.

"Tell us a fairy story, Papa," demanded little Edwin, tugging briskly at Father's watch-chain. "Tell us a wonderful fairy story with lots of exciting things in it!"

"A fairy story! A fairy story!" echoed little Alfreda and little Gloria, stamping on Father's lap in the keenness of their interest.

"Once upon a time," began Father obediently, clearing his throat and removing the frill of Alfreda's frock from his mouth, "once upon a time, in the days when gasoline was eleven cents a gallon—"

"Oh, Papa!" interrupted little Edwin reproachfully, "please don't tell such awful fibs at the very beginning of the story. Everybody knows that there were fairies once, but you don't expect us to believe that gasoline ever sold for eleven cents! You spoil everything."

Father sighed, and made a new start. "Once upon a time," said he, "when strikes occurred only about once in every seven years, and a family of five people could live comfortably on twenty-five dollars a week—"

Little Alfreda kicked Father briskly in the change-pocket of his vest. "Oh! Oh! Oh!" she cried. "What a terrible story! Such things never happened! We want to hear real true fairy stories, and not a lot of awful whackers!"

In another moment Father found himself deserted; and Mother, holding little Edwin and little Alfreda and little Gloria in her lap, was telling them the tame, undisturbing, entirely believable fairy story about the handsome prince that was changed into a guinea pig by the wicked witch and finally rescued by the fairy princess who would never look a day older than twenty-two even though she lived to be a thousand.—Life.

THE WESTMINSTER SCHOOL

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Operated by Kings Mountain Presbytery
$300.00 Per Year

Write for Catalogue to
Rev. T. E. P. Woods, Box 6, Rutherfordton, N. C.

4 Per Cent

Time Certificates of Deposit

They are Interest Bearing. They are Payable on Demand. They Afford a Good Income for Funds Awaiting Permanent Investment

GET ONE AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY

Charlotte :: North Carolina

YES, Preachers and Teachers Are Human

They should have no discount and no cheaper railroad fares than you and I. They should be paid for services rendered—amply paid. If he can't earn enough for family use and the nest egg for the future, he made a sad mistake as to family, else he should change his calling instanter.

The Mutual Building & Loan

Will save a man and his family if they're worth saving, but they must help. It furnishes the "sure cure," but boasts no regrets at the demise of a feller who deliberately refuses to take the medicine.

E. L. KEESLER, Sec. & Treas., 25 S. Tryon St., CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Charlotte National Bank Resources $4,000,000.00

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

PAYS FOUR PER CENT.

On Either Time Certificates of Deposit or Savings Accounts

MAIL ORDER Business Solicited and PROMPT ATTENTION Given

JOHN M. SCOTT	President
W. J. CHAMBERS	Vice-President
J. F. ROBERTSON	Vice-President
W. H. TWITTY	Cashier
C. W. BUTT	Assistant Cashier

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

REV. J. R. BRIDGES, D. D.

EDITORS

REV. R. C. REED, D. D.

VOL. LX.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., OCTOBER 8, 1919.

No. 40

The Winds of Chance.

The Winds of Chance; each day they flow,
Now fierce and loud, now soft and low,
Now warm as Summer's first caress,
Now cold with Arctic iciness.
They send us smoothly on our course,
Then hurl us headlong with their force;
They buffet us, they twist and turn,
Until at last the truth we learn:
There is no fate, no accident,
The Winds of Chance are by God sent,
His purpose holds by all their strife,
To drive us into fuller life.

—Mary Wright Moore, in Congregationalist and Advance.

And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose.

Editorial

Dress and Decency.

IS there any connection between these two? If so how much dress is essential to decency? For all practical purposes these are questions which must be addressed to the feminine mind. The masculine attire is such as to raise no question. Men are so modest that they cover their whole person from the throat down. They will not appear in company without hiding their anatomy under at least two thicknesses. And when attending high social functions, they must envelope the upper part of their bodies under four layers of clothing. They expose only their faces and their hands, and on occasions even the latter must be covered. Let the weather be ever so hot, men consider that a proper regard for the proprieties requires that they shall wear a nether and an upper garment. Indeed it is only in the privacy of the home or the office that they feel at liberty to peel down to two layers. When a gentleman is caught in this condition he blushes and says, "Excuse me, Madam," and hastens to slip on his coat.

From all of which it is evident that if dress is essential to decency, men are far within the limits of safety. They have a most delicate regard for the eyes of the gentler sex. They had rather broil in an August sun than to appear in public in low neck and short sleeves.

The fair daughters of Eve are the ones who raise the question as to the relation of dress to decency. They heard the poet say: "Beauty unadorned is adorned the most," and it would seem that they took him in dead earnest. They make no allowance for poetic license. Assuming that the poet meant what he said, and that he said what was true, they act accordingly. And knowing that men admire beauty, they propose to be generous in gratifying this esthetic taste.

Far be it from us to say that their generosity in displaying their beauty trespasses on the rights of decency. We only say that it raises the question as to the relation of dress to decency. Is there any such relation? If so, how much dress is required? For some while there has been both an upward and downward tendency in female apparel. The tendency is upward at the bottom and downward at the top. The tendency is to "make both ends meet." If there be any relation between dress and decency, the question is how far can this tendency go? What is the minimum of dress permissible? Have we reached that limit yet? Is there still some beauty that needs to be unadorned that it may be adorned the most? The exposed area is very extensive, and it may well be that the tendency has about exhausted itself.

As respects men, it appears that religious sentiment has had something to do in determining the manner of their dress. We remember to have heard an address from a missionary who had spent forty years among the tribes of East Africa. He found the men living in a state of nudity. A large supply of clothing was sent to him. He mentioned it as an interesting fact that a sure symptom of a man's conversion was his desire for a shirt, and said the happiest moments of his life were those spent in putting shirts on those converted savages.

We have been led to question whether religious sentiment produces the same result in the case of women. In a recent issue of one of our popular magazines there was an illustrated article on the Samoan Islands in the South Pacific. A picture of the native women showed them dressed in costumes strikingly like those worn by our women on what are called "full dress" occasions. Their skirts fell a little below the knee and extended a little above the waist. The most noticeable difference was that the Samoan belles seemed not to need a ribbon across the shoulders to hold their skirts up. As to the extent of unadorned beauty, the difference was negligible.

From this we conclude that in the case of females, dress is no criterion by which to judge whether one is heathen or Christian. Evidently clothes constitute no part of a woman's religion. But after all we have not found an answer to the questions with which we started. Is there any connection between dress and decency? If so, how much dress is essential to decency? With the present high cost of living these are practical questions. When there is so much of beauty unadorned, it should not cost much to cover the slight remainder.

Independence in Journalism.

There is a great difference between an editor running his paper as an Ishmaelite, his hand against every one, and every one against him, and the editor who carefully takes this position after thorough examination of a subject, and holds it without regard to its effect upon his own personal popularity or subscription list. In one case the paper represented the individual with his petty likes and dislikes, while in the other it represents a principle which is far above the individual.

Then there is the editor who conducts his paper with a strict regard to his subscription list. He takes no position that will affect that and with him dollars stand higher than principles. It is clear to all that the only paper worthy of respect, or that can exercise any lasting influence, is the paper that hews to the line, letting the chips fall where they may. The average reader is bound to have a contempt for the man who shifts his policy according to popular demand.

Of course there are secular papers that are guilty of this policy, though they are fewer in number than is supposed. We have no railing accusation to bring against any of our religious contemporaries. We simply wish it to be known that when we accepted the editorship and management of this paper, it was with the distinct understanding that we would conduct the paper with no reference whatever to the subscription list. We claim the right to our opinion and we have never refused space to any one taking sides against us. We have assurances constantly given us that whether men agree with us or not, they at least respect us.

The lack of this spirit of independence on the part of the secular press will explain in a large part why the press of our land no longer wields the influence over public opinion that it once did. At the present time capital and labor are arrayed against each other, and lawlessness is sweeping over our land. Then the high cost of living is beyond all excuse, no matter where the fault lies. This would seem to be the time, if ever, when the influence of the press should be on the side of law and order, yet seldom do we find any clear expression of opinion by the press. In one city the leading paper refuses to publish the price list drawn up by the committee for fixing prices, and where men have been in open rebellion against the authority of the city, the papers have been trying to straddle and express no opinion, lest they lose subscribers or advertisements.

Between capital and labor we are on neither side. We have no capital worth mentioning, and we cannot claim to belong to those who labor eight hours a day, because we labor at least twelve hours. We hear of many instances where capital cruelly oppresses labor, yet we see many instances, especially in this section, where capital looks carefully after labor's welfare. Then on the side of labor we see men working hard and accumulating little, so that our sympathies go out to them in their hard lives. When they band themselves together and refuse to work, they are only exercising the rights that every man has in this free country. When, however, they refuse to let others work, and resort to violence to prevent them, then they deserve to fare as any others who take the law into their own hands. The law must be upheld, no matter who may be guilty of violating it, because no man can be secure where there is no law.

Such is the position of this paper, and such should be the position of every paper, whether it loses a subscriber or an advertiser.

The Death of R. H. Fleming, D. D.

Of late years we have been called upon to mourn the loss of one after another of dear friends in the ministry whose lives have been entwined with ours, but rarely have we been called upon to mourn the death of one so dear as R. H. Fleming. For seven years we were intimately associated in Montgomery Presbytery, not only as co-Presbyters, but as warm personal friends, who thought alike on nearly every subject, and as the years have passed since then, this love has deepened, and now that he has been taken, we realize that no words can express to others the loss that we feel.

He belonged to a type that is passing away. He was a thorough Calvinist, a strict constructionist, a lover of the things that our fathers held sacred, and a man who was loyal to all the traditions of the Southern Church. While many high in our ranks were busy explaining away points of differences and thus unintentionally casting reflections upon the fathers of the Church and undermining the faith of our people, he was faithful to the past, and did no discredit to the training he received under Dabney and Peck.

Though he was steadfast in faith and ready to die for his beliefs, he was tender-hearted and affectionate. He was born October 12, 1846, and graduated at Washington and Lee University, and while a mere youth he served in the Confederate Navy. He was licensed by Lexington Presbytery, April 11, 1874, and ordained October 3, 1874. He was pastor of the following churches: Pendleton, 1874-76; Woodstock, 1876; stated supply Gurley church, Washington, D. C., 1886-87; Second Church, Lynchburg, Va., 1887-1907, and of the Dicky Memorial Church, Hillsdale, Md., 1907-1919.

He was a member of the Victoria Institute, London, and a Doctor of Divinity, made by Washington and Lee University. The General Assembly and Church of the first born which are written in heaven, have received a kindred spirit and are thereby enriched; but we who are left shall miss his affectionate greetings and his sweet sympathy.

Home-Coming Day at Buffalo.

Among the old churches of this section, so rich in old churches, the church of Buffalo occupies no mean place. Its history begins far back in 1764, and it has ever since been woven into the history of Presbyterianism in the South. The good people of that community, in view of the fact that the sons and daughters of this historic church have scattered far and wide, propose to bring together on October 19, as many as possible, in order that the old ties may be strengthened and new ties formed.

Dr. Melton Clark, of Charleston, S. C., will preach in the morning and in the afternoon he will preside when several addresses will be made. Hon. A. M. Scales, of Greensboro, will deliver an address on the Life of David Caldwell. Among the many attractions will be a dinner on the grounds given by the ladies of the church. A large crowd will be present.

An Important Meeting of the Synods.

The Synod has always enjoyed the contemptuous charge of being a fifth wheel in our Church machinery, and according to popular belief, it is simply a meeting place for the exchange of ministerial greetings. There are signs at present that it is going to take its place as an active member of the Church courts, and thus bring our practice into harmony with our theory of government. The Presbytery of Lafayette has asked the Synod of Missouri to overture the next General Assembly to order such changes in our system of representation, as to make the membership of Synod to be elected by the Presbyteries and the membership of the Assembly to be elected by the Synods.

Hitherto the sessions have elected the ruling elders to Presbyteries, while teaching elders, ex-officio, are members. The Presbyteries in turn have elected the members of the Assembly, while the Synods have been wholly ignored. The proposed overture, if it has the sanction of the Presbyteries, will give to the Synod more dignity and authority. Another sign of the growing importance of Synod is to be seen in the action of the last Assembly, in leaving to the various Synods the appointment of the ad interim committee on federation and union with other churches.

Up to this time our practice has been for the Moderator to appoint such committees, which he has to do without time for careful consideration. Then another objection is that it lays the Moderator open to the charge of packing these committees. Of course when we remember the character of the men who have filled the Moderator's chair, we know that such charges are foolish. However, they have been made on more than one occasion, and no matter how much the Moderator may be conscious of the falsity of the charge, it places him on the defensive.

Now, the responsibility is placed upon the Synods, and when, as in the case of organic union, there is a division of views in the Church, it is fairer to let each member of that committee be elected by his Synod, for in that way he will truly represent the views of the majority of his Synod. To illustrate what we mean, take the committee on federation appointed by the Moderator of the Durant Assembly. Dr. Vance on the spur of the moment had to appoint a representative of each Synod. Those of us who know and love Dr. Vance know that he always works in the open and would never use his position to help his own side, yet that hurriedly appointed committee, though voting 16 to 1 in favor of union, had its recommendations repudiated by the Assembly when the vote was taken.

Again, whatever may be the views of other Synods on union, all of us know that the Synods of Virginia and North Carolina are opposed to it, yet the two elders appointed to represent these Synods voted for union. We are not bringing up this past history to reopen a closed question, but to show the absurdity of expecting a busy Moderator to appoint a committee to represent the views of Synods. Now the committee is to be appointed by the Synods themselves, and the members of each Synod will have an opportunity to elect a man who will really represent not himself, but the views of the majority, whatever those views may be.

No more important duty has ever devolved upon a Synod than the selection of a proper man to represent it upon this committee. Let the majority rule, and if the Synod is in favor of union, then let it elect a union man, and the contrary is also true. We are anxious that our Church remain where she is, but that in our eyes is not the most important part of the Synodical action. It is that the will of the majority be expressed, and if the majority be against us, then let that majority rule. We want no divisions.

Contributed

The Problem of Relation of White and Colored Races

By Rev. J. Sprole Lyons, D.D.

SEPTEMBER 14 to 21 will long be remembered by the Presbyterians of Atlanta as a time devoted to prayer for God's guidance in an earnest effort to bring the power of practical Christianity to bear upon the great problem of the relation of the white and colored races.

So far as I know it is the first time that all the churches of one of the leading denominations in any of our large cities have devoted themselves to a week of counsel and prayer upon this one theme. Every evening during the week, and at morning, afternoon and evening services of the Sabbaths, September 14 and 21, Drs. John Little and William H. Shepherd, of Louisville spoke to interested congregations, making the round of our churches.

An all-day conference was held on Wednesday at the First Church, with lunch served by the Woman's Society of the church. Hundreds of deeply interested men and women attended. The program provided for a few addresses upon vital features of the general subject, with such leaders as Drs. Little and Shepherd, and Dr. Plato Durham, of the Emory University, and Dr. Ashby Jones, pastor of the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist Church.

These searching, candid, stimulating addresses inspired free and earnest discussion, with an interest that deepened as the day advanced. Late in the afternoon the fruit of the conference was gathered during a period of very marked devotional summing up of the impressions and convictions of the day, and expressed in a set of resolutions as follows:

The members of the conference of representatives of the Presbyterian Churches in Atlanta, gathered to consider the Christian duty of the white people of our community towards our colored people, make record of

1. Our gratitude to God for moving us to the contemplation of our responsibility before Him for the welfare of this needy race which is so intimately associated with the physical and spiritual welfare of the white race.

2. We recognize that the sore and perplexing problem known as the negro, or race problem, can be effectively solved only by the power and principle of the religion of Jesus Christ applied with practical and persistent earnestness in Christlike service rendered by white people.

3. We rejoice in the leading of Providence in the splendid work which has been wrought by the Presbyterian people of Louisville, Kentucky, through twenty-five years of sacrifice and success, in which the controlling principles have been: (a) Evangelism through Sunday School initiative; (b) Industrial and social training and culture; (c) Promotion of housing and health welfare, by invoking aid of very best experts in medical and other lines; (d) All teaching and leadership done by chosen and consecrated white people.

4. We heartily commend the adoption of the Louisville plan in the local work for colored people now being established in Atlanta; and recommend it as a suitable and tested basis for such work in other cities and towns.

5. We gratefully acknowledge our indebtedness to Drs. Little and Shepherd, of Louisville, and Drs. Ashby Jones and Plato Durham, of Atlanta, for their inspiring addresses.

6. We are grateful to God for His goodness in moving Christian friends in the Decatur church to provide a memorial fund of $500, a first-fruit of helpful gifts to our work, in recognition of the devoted loyalty of Charlotte Vaughn, a colored woman who tenderly nursed three generations in one family, whose noble character and loving care are held in affectionate remembrance.

7. We will urge upon the congregations which we represent a full and hearty enlistment in this Christlike work, and we pledge our prayers and support to Rev. Graham F. Campbell in the labors and trials which he assumes in his leadership in our effort to do for our colored people in Atlanta what will most benefit them, and most honor and please Christ our Saviour, and theirs.

At the close of this day it was perfectly apparent that there could be no doubt about the successful launching of a mission for colored people, under the leadership of Mr. Graham F. Campbell, a recent graduate of Union Seminary, Richmond, Va., and who had enjoyed special service with Dr. Little in Louisville. Mr. Campbell had been in Atlanta for two months getting a hold on the situation, under the efficient leadership of a special committee of Atlanta Presbytery, whose chairman, Rev. J. Edwin Hemphill, had so much to do with the success of the effort. The Central Presbyterian Church gave the building, and the Assembly and Presbyterial Mission committees gave substantial aid. A budget of $4,300 was easily provided by the congregations, and the building was formally opened last Sunday afternoon, at which time a commission of Atlanta Presbytery ordained Mr. Campbell to the gospel ministry in the presence of a large congregation of colored people, and a number of white friends.

Permit me to say that I would not have written a single word of the above merely to furnish a news item, neither would I write it to get credit to the Presbyterians of Atlanta. I am writing with the hope—

1. That our church at large will recognize that God has been working out a demonstration of how to do effective work for colored people, in the great mission in Louisville, Kentucky, where for twenty-five years white Christians have been rendering a unique and Christlike work for colored people.

2. That it is a plan which can readily be adapted to any community.

3. That Dr. Little is always available for counsel, and if need be for conference similar to our eight-day program in Atlanta.

4. That no community can count itself free from guilt before God and man, in the day when their streets may run red, if at least the Christian people of that community have never spent so much as a whole day in prayer and conference upon this supremely important subject.

5. That politics, education, social service, have utterly failed to solve the race problem, leaving it more acute, and that the only adequate power to deal with it is practical Christianity.

6. That it is impossible to find a subject for a conference that is as thrillingly personal, practical and profitable as "What is Our Christian Duty Just Now to the Negro?" What city or town will be next?

He Died For All.

By Ada C. Henderlite.

He died for you, upon the cross,
In dreadful agony;
He suffered thus, that you might be
From all your sin set free.

He died for me! Oh blessed thought!
The greatest joy I know,
Is trying in my daily life,
My love for Him to show.

He died for all, Oh when we think
How that precious blood was spilled
On Calvary, so long ago,
Our hearts with love are filled.

Then let us give our best to Him,
Ever heed His loving call,
Remembering from day to day
He gave His life for all.

The Assembly's Committee on Church Union

By Rev. Willis Thompson.

IN view of the rising importance of all matters touching church union, the ad interim committee called for by the Assembly to deal with the "whole question of closer relations" is one to be viewed with concern.

That committee is to be composed of men, each one of whom will be nominated to his post by his Synod—an arrangement chosen to yield a committee representing the church's view fairly. There is but one way to make it representative; that is, to have each committeeman instructed by his Synod as to how he is to vote in working out a plan of relation between the churches. The several possibilities have been enough defined to allow the Synod to commit itself to a plan.

This course is fair to the committeeman. Nothing but this is fair to the Synod, the Assembly or the church. The committee will represent opinion in an unprecedented way.

An ambassador is invariably instructed by his government as to the ends he must gain—the enactments he must procure—in the court to which he is accredited. The general policy of the body he represents is made so clear to him that he cannot fail to relate each happening under his surveillance to that policy. All that is left to his initiative is the matter of tact and the recognition of events in their bearing on his instructions. A moderate acquaintance with state papers shows this to be the case.

It may be said, as Presbyterian government in the church is usually compared to republican government in the state, that this procedure with the committeeman elected by the Synod would not be republican; for republican government elects men to office and then allows them to take their own course in the body to which they are elected.

The answer might be that the ad interim committee is no governing body, but a mere instrument of advice for the true governing body of the church. The fact remains, however, the one way to make the committee represent the view of the church is for each committeeman to be instructed by his Synod when elected. He will thus be the voice and vote of the men he represents, on the major question that will be under consideration in his committee. Yet now these committeemen are not Assemblymen, this committee may justly be viewed as an arm of government, under the Assembly. Its constitution is therefore to be tested standards of republican government. When a man is elected to a true governing body, he is watchful of his electors' views, striving to follow them because he will come up for re-election. This committee will not come up for re-election. Its work done, it dissolves. It will be impossible for the Synod to mend that work by the ordinary recourse of republican governments, for there is to be no re-election with its implied approval or censure. The Synod must therefore take, ahead of time, the measures that will give it a check on those whom it appoints. It must vote on the issue which its nominee is elected to work out. It must instruct him.

Let us view our system of church courts for a moment. The Presbyterian system of electing a man, to whom is committed a free course in choosing his line of conduct, is frequently not republican. A man who is elected to Presbyterian courts has to do no more than report back to his electors; an elder has not even this to do. It is practically out of the question to censure such an officer; it is altogether out of the question to undo what he does, by direct pressure from his electors. He has not to answer to them in the impressive manner of republican governments.

The Presbyterian system, as theorized and practiced by our branch of the church, is usually a clean-cut slice from that form of government that Macaulay characterizes as follows (Essays on Mitford's "Greece"), "If there by any form of government in all ages and nations which has always been and must always be pernicious, it is pure oligarchy," the form in which one is set to legislate without the check of popular vote; irretrievably entrusted with the choice of his own aims, unhampered by the possibilities of the next elections. It is a form that is always favored by those who are in office.

Presbyterians elect a man to office. Thenceforth, for a while, he is a peer; he belongs to the house of lords; no one calls him to account for the deeds done in office. The method of ridding ourselves of an undesirable officer in some courts is an act that corresponds to violence in the secular sphere—dismissal. This is so with the sessions; but even this recourse is out of reach with higher courts. In other words, our officers cannot be swayed by the people who elect him. He must be either tolerated, or put out of office—a dilemma that is often productive of evil, owing to the fact that the process of dismissal is of such an extraordinary nature as to be dreaded. What is so of appointees to ordinary courts, is so of these committeemen.

It is advisable for us then to chose between instructing the Synod's nominee on the committee, or giving him his head, trusting his honor to represent his electors, if he knows certainly what their views are. With the honor of our men we usually feel safe. With the judgment of our best friends if it is to gauge the attitude of a Synod in the pressure of committee work, we feel quite different. If the Synod votes on the matter which the committeeman is to deal, his judgment cannot err; his obligation will be unmistakable.

It so happens that the sole work set by our national constitution that is strictly analogous to that of the committee, is embodied in the provision for electing the chief executives. That provision is so little known by the people as to be unmentioned and unconsidered in presidential elections. It is an illustration par excellence of make-up of the Assembly's ad interim committee for considering church union. In the day when the constitution lay before the people, for acceptance or rejection, it was pointed out as the most republican and promising article in our constitutional arrangements. It was viewed so favorably that the very enemies of the constitution mentioned it with praise. (Federalist, Es. LXVII.)

By that provision, a body of men called an electoral college are to be chosen by the people for naming the president and vice-president. Into this electoral college, no officer or employee of the government can be admitted. Once the college meets and performs its specified act, its work is done; it dissolves. The members of the group are not answerable to the people as other officers become answerable in their re-election.

What was the outcome of this ideal theory of doctrinaire republicans? A complete reversal of its avowed object; complete disuse. Practice proved it dangerous, non-representative, un-republican and at one time, almost disastrous. The college still meets at each election and each member votes; but he no more follows his own will than do sheriffs in serving warrants. He votes only as he is elected to vote, for the nominee of his party. Legally free to cast his vote for whatever candidate he wishes, or to suggest a new candidate, no man votes except on the platform of the party that elected him. So the theory of representatives who are not accountable to the citizens who elect them, has proved itself to be impossible and deceptive. The theory of men who are elected to perfect freedom in choosing their ends, which ends are still to be regarded as the choice of the people, is one of the refinements of logic that is humanly useless or worse. So electors to the presidential electoral college are rigidly instructed as to the candidate they vote for, ere they enter their session.

It may be said that the method of instructing committeemen is slavish. To whom? It does enslave the committeeman, but it frees the people who sent him to his post. They have him in the capacity he is supposed to take—as the servant of their wishes. If slavish, it remains the one workable course for obtaining a committee that will represent the Synods. Probably it is too true that elections to Presbyte-

"Another View of the Washington Riots"

(The following letter from one of our ministers was sent to "The Outlook." We gladly give space to it.—Editor).

THERE was in a recent issue of the Outlook an article under the caption, "Another View of the Washington Riots," by J. E. McCulloch, General Sec'y. Southern Sociological Congress, in which he takes one of the Outlook's correspondents to task, charging him with violating the policy of the "square deal." We judge from the internal evidence of the article that the author is a Southerner. We base our conclusion upon a certain sentence in the body of the article, which article every Southerner—especially every Southern minister, must recognize—I speak kindly, but frankly, as the very quintessence of the proverbial "square deal"—minus the square. The sentence of the article upon which we base our conclusion that the writer is a Southerner is: "Some of us Southerners are perfectly willing ourselves to drink the bitter cup of the mob and be lynched if thereby we could remove the race hatred from the hearts of white and negro alike."

The author, who, we think, would be very loath to admit that he himself is ever guilty of violating the policy of the "square deal" uses these words—and by his own words we must judge him, and by his own words he must stand or fall in our judgment: "The Christian ministry of America is under indictment for the crimes of race riots, for the unspeakable burden of fear that the negroes carry in their hearts day and night, for the shameful injustice perpetrated by white employers and landlords, for the blight of race hatred that tarnishes the soul of every white child born on this continent. The race problem will be solved in America on the day that the Christian ministry ceases preaching racehood and begins preaching in reality brotherhood."

I wonder if J. E. McCulloch recognizes the import of his own statements. Let us put two of them side by side. He says: "Some of us Southerners are perfectly willing to be lynched if thereby we could remove the race hatred from the hearts of white and negro alike." Again he says: "The blight of race hatred that tarnishes the soul of every white child born on this continent." Can it be that the soul of the General Secretary of the Southern Sociological Congress is tarnished—his statement includes himself, if words mean anything, with the blight of race hatred, produced according to his dictum by the Christian ministry of America? Can it be that he thinks Lyman Abbott, John Timothy Stone and other Christian ministers of the North, and Harris E. Kirk, J. H. Taylor and other Christian ministers of the South have been guilty of preaching racehood and have failed to preach brotherhood? Can it be that he has heard any white minister of the North, or any white minister of the South preaching racehood? If so, why not charge the guilty with their crime, if he believes in justice and the policy of the "square deal?" Why, in the name of justice, bring the whole Christian ministry of America under indictment? If he would only state facts he would accomplish far more and create a better impression in all sections—certainly in the section from which he says he is, than he can possibly create by affirming—no matter how sincere his affirmation may be, that he is perfectly willing to offer his rian courts are made by us more to honor a man than to pursue a policy.

Any committee nominated by the Synods for Assembly work will become a tool of even more precision and reach, than ad interim committees have been in the past. Such a committee is a tool that must be used with pains if it is not to be dangerous. Having the moral authority of the Synod's wholly democratic voice, unless it has also the Synod's mind, it will do the irreparable injury of misrepresentation by its accredited vote. High moral authority is inseparable from a committee elected as this on church union.

life a vicarious sacrifice to "save his people from their sins."

I have been unable to find any Southern gentleman—the General Secretary of the Southern Sociological Congress excepted, who is ready or willing to admit that "the blight of race hatred tarnishes the soul of every white child born on this continent." I have been unable to find any Southern gentleman—the General Secretary of the Southern Sociological Congress excepted, who is willing to admit that he has heard any white minister in America preach in private conversations much less behind "sacred desks" racehood. Can it be that the General Secretary is chafing under the burden of a supposed lack of sympathy and co-operation with him in his work on the part of the ministry of this great country? If so, let him remember for the sake of the work which he is trying to promote that those who are not against the work must be for it; if so, let him know that such articles as the one which appeared in the Outlook are not calculated to create either, for—I mean the words to carry pathos and not sarcasm, I read the article to three Southern gentlemen, and each one of them made the same remark: "That man must be a negro."

If the General Secretary hopes to advance the interests of the negroes and eradicate from their hearts race hatred, if such exists to any great extent, how can he hope to do so by affirming—which affirmation to the best of my knowledge and belief, is not correct, that "the blight of race hatred tarnishes the soul of every white child born on this continent" and by affirming that the Christian ministers of America, whom the negroes, I venture to say, recognize as not less than their best friends, are responsible for that blight? I must confess that I, for one, cannot understand the heart or mind of the General Secretary or how such an article could have come from the pen of any Southern man, for every man born and reared in the South must know that the blight of race hatred does not tarnish the souls of us all and that the negroes of this section do not carry any "unspeakable burden of fear in their hearts day and night."

Jesse C. Rowan,
Southern Presbyterian Minister.

Greenville, S. C.

Assembly's Training School, Richmond.

The General Assembly's Training School for Lay Workers, Richmond, Va., began its sixth annual session on September 24. The Rev. Prof. M. R. Turnbull made an exceedingly helpful opening address on "The Preparation of Moses for His Life-Work."

All the members of the senior class except three answered the roll call at the opening. They are expected within a week. The majority of the senior class have been doing some form of Christian work during the summer and splendid reports come to us concerning their work.

A large junior class was matriculated. Thirty-six new students have been enrolled and there are several still to come. These new students represent all parts of the South and two foreign countries. Readers of the Standard will be interested to know that six of them are from North Carolina, and that there are two more expected from there in a few days. Four new ones are from far away Texas, making a total of seven students in the school from Texas.

It is taxing the Training School to the limit to house all of these students. We are using three buildings which were formerly residences and which have been fitted up as dormitories. They do not provide adequate room and are temporary at best. The great need of the school is for a dormitory which will hold one hundred students. It will be filled to overflowing within a year after it is erected, by a choice lot of students from all over the South who wish to give their lives to definite Christian service at home and in the foreign field.

Miss Selina Speaks Her Mind

By Mary Callum Wiley.

“YES, if I do say it, we have the very best circle in the Auxiliary—not that I take any of the credit of it to myself, for I’m just the leader. It’s the program committee that makes things go in our circle.

“You want a recipe for interesting programs, you say? Why, my dear, the idea of coming to me. It’s the chairman of the program committee you should consult. You have seen her, you say? And she sent you to me?”

“Well, I suppose there is some truth in what she says: no matter how good the program they will fail in their purpose if bungled in the carrying out. As leader, I always try to get into the spirit of the program, I study over each one carefully days before it is to be carried out, and pray over it and try to get a warm, personal touch into it.

“Naturally, I look at everything from a teacher’s viewpoint. You know I’m used to studying personalities, trying to get a point of contact, as we say in school circles, in dealing with each individual, and so as I look over the program for each meeting, I try to fit the different assignments to the right people. For instance, I would never think of asking worldly little Mrs. Gay to take a leading part on the program, for while I realize she is beginning to get interested in our meetings I have to deal very tactfully with her lest she be frightened away. On the other hand, I have to use great tact in keeping Molly Mitchell from talking too much, for if I give her a minute she’ll take an hour. Then, there’s harmum-scarum Sally Lindsay, who means so well but never can remember what her assignment is; and Bessie Boger, who always has an excuse for not doing what she ought to do.

“Then as to the topics. I would never ask Mrs. Archer Brown to discuss Roman Catholicism, for I happen to know that her dear old foster-parents are still in the thralls of that religion and while she is a devoted Christian herself and sees the evils of Catholicism, it’s too personal a matter for her ever to talk about in public.

“Yes, my dear, if you wish to be a successful missionary leader you must know the personnel of your circle. You must know which of your members can sing or play the piano; which ones are artistic that you may use them in preparing posters, place-cards for social gatherings and in making maps. You must find out who are your writers, your best readers, your leaders in discussions. You must know which of your members are deeply spiritual, which ones need encouragement in the Christian life; which show possibilities of growth.

“Had I known the importance of this character study I would have been spared many blunders in my work in the Auxiliary. I would have known the personnel of my members so well that I never could have offended Mrs. Davis by imitating the mountain people, ‘mountain whites,’ as I called them, when she was just from the mountains herself. Nor would I have embarrassed pretty little Mrs. Grayson by giving her a difficult article to read, had I known that her education had ended with the third grade at school. I found out, too late, alas, that Jean Diever stammers dreadfully. I surprised her with a question one day and she opened her mouth and shut it and gasped and swallowed till the rest of us were in agony for fear we would laugh. Then, another time, I just happened to touch upon post-millennialism, not dreaming that Mrs. Kyle was such an ardent premillenarian, and it was but as a signal for battle; for three-quarters of an hour she held forth. You know Mrs. Kyle—there’s no stopping of her when she once begins.

“Yes, carrying out a program isn’t such a simple matter as it seems to be. Why, even in the devotionals, a leader must be sure of her helpers. There are some women, and mighty good women, too, who would go all to pieces if called upon unexpectedly to lead in prayer; there are others who have to be cautioned beforehand not to cover the earth in their petitions; there are others, like dear Mother Earby, who can always be depended upon with their simple, earnest prayers.

“So, I say, if you would have a recipe for success in leading your circle meetings, it is this: Select your program committee with care, that is, with prayerful consideration; then choose a leader to carry out the programs submitted who is willing to make a study not only of the subject-matter to be presented but of the women who are to present that matter. Leadership is a gift; but it can be cultivated. As some one has said, John Eliot, I think it was, ‘Prayer and pains through Jesus Christ will accomplish anything.’”

Federation Idea Was Quashed.

Extract of an Editorial in “The Continent” of September 25, 1919.

YOU can be sure a man is on the wrong side of the question he is arguing when you can find him dodging facts. The man on the right side can take full account of even adverse facts and still go forward, but the man on the wrong side always has to dodge artfully or the facts will floor him. Application of this test is instructive relative to a current discussion in Southern Presbyterian circles over their last Assembly’s action on union with the U. S. A. Church. In the Union Seminary Review, Professor Lingle, the editor, alluded to the “defeat of federal union” by that Assembly. Dr. Thornton Whaling retorts that federal union was not defeated—that that plan is “more vital and aggressive than ever.” The facts in the matter are entirely plain, and it is not doubtful who is trying to evade them. Dr. Whaling is well aware that the U. S. A. Assembly sent a definite notice to the U. S. Assembly that it was prepared to discuss with its church nothing short of organic union—that since federal union already exists, there is no profit in continuing to haggle with additional plans of the same nature. And with that notice before it, the U. S. Assembly voted to go on with negotiations. When the vote was taken, everybody understood its significance. Why should there be an effort to becloud its meaning now?

Federal Idea Was Not Quashed.

By Thornton Whaling, D.D., President, Columbia Theological Seminary, Columbia, S. C.

The Continent of September 25 contains an article on, “Federation Idea Was Quashed,” in which the statement is made that Dr. Whaling dodges and evades certain facts. I trust The Continent will do me the courtesy to allow me to make these facts, as I understand them; if I am mistaken, I shall be glad to be corrected.

First, two facts as to the U. S. A. Assembly:

1. That Assembly, in these negotiations, has always expressed its desire for Organic Union, but has never slammed the door in the face of any other propositions made by other Assemblies or Synods.

2. The St. Louis Assembly did not say, “that since federal union already exists, there is no profit in continuing to haggle with additional plans of the same nature.” Nor did it pass any resolution that seems to me to justify, in any way, such statement.

Second, two facts as to the U. S. Assembly:

1. That Assembly did decline to discuss the plan of Federal Union as presented by the joint Committee of the two Assemblies.

2. But, the U. S. Assembly did refer that plan of Federal Union to the new Committee to be appointed by the seventeen (17) Synods of the Southern Church, and also referred to that Committee all other plans of future relations with the U. S. A. Church, including Organic Union. If these are not the facts, many of us would be greatly indebted to The Continent if its able and courteous editor would state for us what the facts are.

Assembly's Committee on Systematic Beneficence and Stewardship

By Wm. Fred Galbraith, Secretary.

THE September meeting of the Assembly's Committee on Systematic Beneficence and Stewardship, Chattanooga, Tenn., was attended by representatives from fourteen Synods, and the four Executive Committees, making an exceptionally well attended meeting of seventeen out of twenty members present.

A digest of the Assembly's action from the inauguration of the Systematic Beneficence Committee was prepared by Rev. Chas. R. Nisbet, and similar report was given by Rev. Jno. I. Armstrong on the work of the Stewardship Committee. These are valuable, historical reports, setting forth the functions and powers of each former Committee, separately, and are now assigned to the consolidated Committee of Systematic Beneficence and Stewardship.

This Committee earnestly favors the presentation of all Assembly Causes at the various Synods this fall by one of the Executive Secretaries, or his representative, thus presenting the united Presbyterian Progressive Program, making no appeal for any one department, and giving each of the eight objectives its proper emphasis.

Interchurch World Movement.

Rev. Chas. H. Platt, D.D., was heard in behalf of our relation to the Interchurch Movement, and as the Assembly has assigned the details of our Church's participation in same, the Committee adopted the following:

1. We will be glad to co-operate in the plan of the Movement upon the following conditions:

Provided First. "That in so doing we desire to allow nothing to interfere with the prosecution of our Progressive policy and program for raising $12,000,000 for Benevolences.

Provided Second. That the Committee in each state, which shall handle the entire work of the Interchurch World Movement be named by the authority of the respective denominations in each state.

We will nominate members for each Synod to serve until the meeting of Synods, when they shall name others, if they so desire. We hereby appoint the Synodical Campaign Manager of Synod to serve until each Synod shall appoint his successor.

Provided Third. That the budget of the financial drive be the combined budgets of the several Boards of the Evangelical Churches co-operating in the Movement, and no other organization.

2. The following were named as our representatives on the General Committee: Rev. A. D. P. Gilmour, D. D., Mr. J. B. Spillman, Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D. D., Mr. R. E. Magill, Rev. Chas. H. Pratt, and Rev. Homer McMillan, D. D.

3. The Campaign Manager, Rev. Homer McMillan, D. D., the Chairman, Rev. A. D. P. Gilmour, D. D., and the Secretary of the Committee on Systematic Beneficence and Stewardship were appointed to represent this Committee at the Church Campaign Conference, New York City, September 19."

The Special Committee, consisting of Rev. Jno. I. Armstrong, D. D., Mr. R. E. Magill, Rev. U. D. Mooney, D. D., and Rev. L. R. Walker, D. D., on a chronological schedule, definite requests and goals for each co-operating agency in the Progressive Program, suggested the following, all of which come under the eight objectives approved by the General Assembly. This report was adopted, and is as follows:

1. Time Schedule.

1. September 28 used as a day for the organization and training of visitors to invite attendance on Rally Day, October 5.

2. October: Rally Day: Have Sunday Schools adopt as goals 40,000 new scholars and 15,000 new church members from the Sunday Schools by March 31; Home Mission Study Classes organized; Evangelism; Visitation of church members by Sessions to promote church loyalty, especially expressed in attendance on church services, and to work toward the goal of having a family altar in every home, suggesting the use of the Prayer Calendar.

3. November: Home Mission Study Classes and Evangelism continued, with the adopting of 60,000 new church members by March 31, as a goal; Home Mission Week; Thanksgiving offering for Orphanages.

4. December: The dedication of life promoted through the Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies, with definite goals to be suggested by the Louisville Committee, under whose general direction this part of the program is to be advanced.

5. January: Foreign Mission Study classes organized; classes organized for study of Stewardship and Proportionate Giving, using "Money, the Acid Test," or some other text book; Stewardship Enrollment Day; a living salary for every Christian worker.

6. February: Foreign Mission Study Classes continued; Week and Day of prayer for youth in Schools and Colleges; general campaign of education covering the needs of the Assembly's Committees, and the various agencies in Synods and Presbyteries; a month of intercession.

7. March: General campaign of education covering needs of all branches of the work; Stewardship of means in connection with these needs; a general campaign to secure the goal of having the Survey and a church paper in every home; the Every Member Canvass; Assembly's Home Mission Day in the Sunday Schools.

8. April: Full and final reports of the Every Member Canvass by first Tuesday in April.

2. Definite Requests and Goals.

We think the Assembly's Committee on Systematic Beneficences and Stewardship should count on every agency of the church for the fullest co-operation in reaching the objectives of the Progressive Campaign. But we recommend that the following agencies be asked for special help as indicated:

1. Woman's Auxiliary: The organization and promotion of Home and Foreign Mission Study Classes in October and November, and in January and February respectively; the promotion and observance of February as a special month of intercession; responsibility for the special campaign in March to put the Survey and a church paper in every home.

2. Layman's Missionary Movement: The holding of Conventions in Synods to promote the objectives of the Progressive Campaign, in co-operating with the Synodical Managers.

3. Sunday Schools: The adoption of the following goals; 40,000 new scholars and 15,000 new church members from the Sunday Schools by March 31; a definite pledge for Benevolences and gifts for all the Causes of Benevolences.

4. Young People's Societies: Adopting the following goals: 10,000 new members by March 31; a definite pledge for Benevolences and gifts to all causes.

5. The Assembly's Committee on the Sabbath and Family Religion; definite promotion of the movement to secure a family altar in every home.

6. Brotherhood and Men's Bible Classes; the study of Stewardship and the assuming of responsibility for securing adequate increase in pastors' salaries.

7. The Assembly's Home Mission Committee; New Emphasis on Evangelism with definite plans to secure at least 30,000 new members by March 31; the promotion and observance of Home Mission Week in November, and the organization and promotion of study classes; general cam-

Representation in Church Courts

By Rev. E. C. Gordon, D.D.

THE Presbytery of Lafayette, at its recent stated meeting, after due consideration, adopted the following overture:

The Presbytery of Lafayette respectfully overtures the Synod of Missouri to overture the next General Assembly of our Church as follows:

The Synod of Missouri respectfully overtures the General Assembly to meet in Charlotte, N. C., May 20, 1920, to appoint a committee ad interim to consider and report to the General Assembly to meet in 1921, such changes in our form of government as will make the Synods composed of commissioners elected by the Presbyteries.

The purpose of this overture is threefold:

1. To give the Synod its logical place in our system of government; and to make the basis of representation uniform, depending on the number of ministers and of church courts.

2. To reduce within reasonable bounds the membership of Synods; and to secure a better distribution among the Presbyteries of ministers and ruling elders attending the meetings of the Synods than is attainable under the present rule.

3. To diminish somewhat the size of the General Assembly, if this should be deemed desirable.

The General Assembly is requested to instruct the ad interim committee asked for to bear these considerations in mind in formulating its report.

It is well known that we now have a twofold basis of representation in our Church courts above the session. The size of Presbyteries and Synods is determined by the number of ministers and churches on their rolls. The size of the General Assembly is determined by the number of communicants in each Presbytery. The overture now pending, and likely to be adopted, is an improvement on the present rule; but it continues the twofold basis of representation, and fails to specify whether the communicants are to be "resident" or the total number.

The overture offered by Lafayette Presbytery asks that the basis of representation in all the courts above that of the session be uniform, and be estimated according to the number of ministers and of courts. It proposes also to bring the Synod to its logical position in our ascending series of courts, and to take away the stigma that it is a "fifth wheel" in our system of church government.

Another purpose of the overture is perhaps even more important. Generally in the meetings of the Synods there is nothing like a full representation of the sessions by ruling elders. Sessions under the jurisdiction of the Presbytery within the bounds of which the Synod meets have a fairly good representation. The remote sessions usually are very poorly represented. I have not the figures except for the Synod of Missouri, which I suppose furnishes a fair example. This Synod may now be composed of 97 ministers and 141 ruling elders. At its meeting last year the attendance was but little over that of a quorum, due to the prevalence of influenza. In 1917 the meeting was in Fulton, a central town where the Synod has two educational institutions. The attendance was 53 ministers and 35 ruling elders. In 1916 it met at the School of the Ozarks, in the southwestern corner of its territory. The attendance was 38 ministers and 15 ruling elders. In 1915 it met in St. Louis. The attendance was 55 ministers and 31 ruling elders, 11 of whom were from the 20 churches of St. Louis Presbytery.

The figures are the more glaring when it is remembered that in our church the proportion of churches to ministers is about nine to five, yet the attendance of ministers at the meetings of the Synods is usually much larger than that of ruling elders. In other words, most of the sessions are not represented by ruling elders. Lafayette Presbytery's overture proposes to remedy this as far as it is practicable to do so. It leaves the constitution of Presbyteries as it now is. It leaves the question open as to whether or not Synods should be composed of an equal number of ministers and of ruling elders, as the General Assembly now is, and still may be if the proposed overture and its implications should be adopted.

A careful study of the questions involved will show that perfect fairness, in the sense of equal representation according to numbers in every case, is impracticable. The reason is that fractions of numbers, even major fractions, are introduced into the calculations; and these major fractions occur more frequently, and may be smaller or larger, in one Presbytery than in another. If the change in representation now pending is adopted, the Presbytery of Winchester, for example, having 4,455 resident members and ministers, can elect only two commissioners to the General Assembly. If it had 46 more communicants it could send four to the Assembly. Another Presbytery having 3,500 ministers and communicants would have to get 1,001 more to entitle it to two additional commissioners. To some extent the proposed overture will reduce excessive grant of power to very small minorities of communicants and ministers.

The overture, if adopted, may result in a reduction of the size of the Synods, which in most cases is very much to be desired, and will equitably distribute the representation of Presbyteries to Synods according to their size as far as it is practicable to do so. Under the supposition that the number of elders in a Synod is to be to the number of ministers as nine to five; and supposing that each Presbytery will be allowed a minimum number of nine elders and five ministers, with an additional of two elders for every additional nine churches or major fraction thereof, and one minister paign of education in February and March, covering the needs of the Committee.

(Continued on Page 24)

8. Foreign Mission Committee: Organization and promotion of Foreign Mission Study Classes; general campaign of education in February and March, covering the needs of the Committee.

9. Committee of Publication and Sabbath School Work; General promotion of the work assigned to Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies, as already outlined; general campaign of education in February and March, covering the needs of the Committee.

10. Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief; Promotion of the plans for the dedication of life through Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies in December, and for the observance of the week and day of prayer for youth in the Schools and Colleges in February; general campaign of education in February and March, covering the needs of the Committee.

Your Committee would further recommend that every one of the agencies be required in promoting all their regular work, to keep clearly before the people that what they are doing is a definite part of the Progressive Program, over which the Assembly has asked the Committee on Systematic Beneficences and Stewardship to assume general supervision."

Respectfully submitted,

Jno. I. Armstrong

R. E. Magill

L. R. Walker

U. D. Mooney

The sympathy of this Committee was expressed to the family and congregation of the late T. M. Hawes, member of the Committee, by a Committee consisting of Henry H. Sweets and W. H. Hopper.

News of the Week

President Wilson's nervous breakdown was quite a serious one. On Thursday he was confined to his bed and three specialists were called in, but the last of the week found him better. His physician, Dr. Grayson, announced his condition as satisfactory.

The labor troubles in Albemarle, N. C., have been settled and the mills there have resumed work.

The United States will keep eight German ships, which will be used for passenger and freight service.

In Winston-Salem, N. C., in one week, over one million dollars were paid out for tobacco.

The War Department will permit Maj. Charles M. Hulvey to remain as commandant of the North Carolina College of Agriculture and Engineering, at Raleigh. A promise to that effect was made to Senator Simmons.

The railway shopmen have been placed on brotherhood footing, whereby they work eight hours and get an increase of four cents an hour.

Chester, S. C., has sold street bonds to the amount of $140,000, 39 years serial bonds, bearing 5 per cent interest. The bid was by the Trust Company of Georgia. Terms were par, accrued interest and a premium of $36.

P. H. Stoll, an attorney of Kingstree, S. C., has been declared the nominee of the Democratic party for Congress, Sixth District. His majority was 26 votes.

The soldiers of the Thirtieth Division had their first reunion at Greenville, S. C., on September 29-30. More than 3,500 were present. The 1920 meeting will be in Asheville.

The telephone officials of North Carolina have asked for a continuance of the Government rates, claiming that this rate is absolutely necessary for the present, anyway.

The Journal of Commerce gives the deterioration of cotton at 56.8, the greatest in ten years. Yield is forecasted at 10,940,000, which means a price much higher than ever before.

We have exported more wheat than during the war period. Between July 1 and September 19, we sent overseas 35,597,000 bushels.

Utah has ratified the woman's suffrage amendment.

Governor Bickett and the Superintendent of Education of North Carolina, in conference with leading negroes of the State, have agreed on a basis of co-operation that is expected to prevent misunderstandings and friction between the races.

The entire federal employment service will be discontinued after October 10, by reason of the lack of congressional appropriation.

In a riot in Arkansas, between negroes and whites, two white men and seven negroes were killed at Elaine. A reign of terror prevails.

At Ardmore, Okla., United States Senator Reed, of Missouri, Democrat, was egged from start to finish by the audience, when he attempted to speak against the League of Nations. As Senator Reed came on the stage all light wires to the building were cut. Pandemonium broke loose and cries of derision howled him down, while the audience surged upon the stage. Reed attempted to hold the floor for a few minutes but was forced to make his exit without beginning his speech.

The 125th session of the N. C. State University opened on October 2, with the largest attendance in its history. Nearly 1,100 students have matriculated.

The King of Belgium with his Queen and Crown Prince have arrived in this country. Owing to the illness of the President, he will be unable to receive the royal visitors at present, but will do so later.

The joint trial of four sophomores of the V. P. I. charged with hazing a freshman last year is now in progress at Christiansburg, Va. The hazing resulted in what appears to be a serious injury to the spine.

James Iredell Johnson, for many years the Mayor of Raleigh, N. C., died at Hot Springs, Va., last Friday night.

MEETINGS OF SYNODS.

The following is the name of Synod, place of meeting, time, and stated clerk, respectively:

Alabama—Trinity Church, Montgomery, Tuesday, November 11, 7:30 p. m. R. H. McCaslin.

Appalachia—Asheville, N. C., Tuesday, October 14, 7:30 p. m. G. O. Bachman.

Arkansas—Pine Bluff, Tuesday, November 11, 7:30 p. m. W. S. Rogers.

Florida—Orlando, Tuesday, November 11, 7:30 p. m. W. B. Y. Wilkie.

Georgia—Albany, Tuesday, November 11, 7:30 p. m. J. W. Stokes.

Kentucky—Nicholasville, Tuesday, October 7, 7:30 p. m. E. E. Smith.

Louisiana—Baton Rouge, Tuesday, November 18, 7:30 p. m. Louis Voss.

Mississippi—Columbus, Tuesday, November 18. S. C. Caldwell.

Missouri—Mexico, Tuesday, October 28, 8 p. m. Franc Mitchell.

North Carolina—Raleigh, Tuesday, October 28, 8 p. m. D. I. Craig.

Oklahoma—Antlers, Tuesday, October 28, 7:30 p. m. E. H. Moseley.

Snedecor Memorial—Tuscaloosa, Ala., May, 1920. A. J. McQueen.

South Carolina—Central Church, Anderson. Tuesday, November 4, 7:30 p. m. Thos. H. Law.

Tennessee—Brownsville, Tuesday, October 14, 7:30 p. m. J. H. Lumpkin.

Texas—Commerce, Tuesday, October 14, 8 p. m. J. D. Leslie.

Virginia—Charlottesville, Tuesday, November 11, 8 p. m. J. P. Smith.

West Virginia—Charleston, Tuesday, October 14, 8 p. m. J. M. Sloan.

The egotist, in proportion to his egotism, strips his neighbor's feelings and desires and plans of their reality.—Nash.

There ought to be something in every Christian which unconsciously and unceasingly commends to the world the beauty of a life of holiness.—Collier.

Christian Endeavor

By Rev. S. H. Hay.

- M., Oct. 13—The Word of a King: I Kings 1:23-30.
- T., Oct. 14—Through Christ's Power: 2 Cor. 12:9.
- W., Oct. 15—Take Pledges Seriously: Deut. 23:21-23.
- T., Oct. 16—Through the Spirit: Rom. 8:1-9.
- F., Oct. 17—Zealous and Faithful: Acts 18:24-28.
- S., Oct. 18—Praying Through: Acts 1:12-14.

* * *

Topic for Sunday, Oct. 19—Our Pledge and How to Keep It.—Exod. 19:1-8.

* * *

This is our Christian Endeavor pledge for active members:

* * *

"Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise Him that I will strive to do whatever He would have me do. I will make it the rule of my life to pray and read the Bible, to support the work and worship of my church, and to take part in the meetings and other activities of this society. These things I will do unless hindered by conscientious reasons, and in them all I will seek the Saviour's guidance.

* * *

This pledge is a covenant we have made with God. And let it be understood, we did right in making it. God desires that we pledge ourselves to Him. He called upon His people over and over again in Bible times to stand and declare their renewed purpose to serve Him. And pledge-making to God has proved its helpfulness to us in our Christian life. When we join the church we covenant solemnly to walk as He would have us do. Throughout life all true Christians are constantly recalling this obligation which they so solemnly assumed; and they never get away from its wholesome restraint. The world is better today than it would be if these great vows had never been taken.

Our Christian Endeavor pledge adds nothing to the pledge we made when we joined the church. It simply reaffirms what we have already promised God, and refreshes the mind on the subject. The pity is that all church members do not have some such device as the Christian Endeavor pledge to keep their solemn vows before the mind.

* * *

Pledge-making is not only right; it is a human necessity. There is something about a pledge that provides a needed binding power. A soldier pledges himself when he enlists; a judge, governor, or president kisses the Bible at the time of his inauguration and pledges himself to duty; when you and I borrow money we pledge ourselves with a signed note to pay; when nations make the peace that ends a war, they covenant together in written treaty about after-war behavior; when we marry, we make our solemn promises; and so on through many of the important relations and transactions of life. The whole fabric of society would ravel and go to pieces if not held together by pact and pledge. And shall we not also solemnly pledge ourselves to God? Do we not need the aid of a binding covenant with Him as with others less than He?

* * *

In what manner shall we keep our pledges made to God? We must keep them to the letter. The words mean what they say. All contracts, treaties, notes, and other binding pledges are to be kept according to the words in which they are written. But we must keep our vows also in the spirit, which is even more important than the letter.

But by what means shall we be enabled to keep our pledges?

By refreshing our minds about them, by renewing our purpose each time that we lapse, by keeping before us the moral stain of a failure and the anger of the Lord against

The Prayer Meeting

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING OCT. 12, 1919.

VALUE OF THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY.—I Cor. IV:1-2.

"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, Thy God Reigneth."

The value of the Christian ministry in the estimation of men depends upon other views held by them. One body holds that there can be no true church where there is no forgiveness of sins and no sacraments; and there can be no true forgiveness of sins and no sacraments where there are on true ministers to administer them, and there are no true ministers save those who can trace their orders to the apostles.

Another body holds a theory diametrically opposite to this, that any member of the church may serve as a minister, without even the support of the church in temporal matters.

Our people, however, will be disposed to accept Christ's evaluation of the ministry; and we will think assuredly that Paul has properly interpreted for us his Lord's estimation of his ministers.

The fact that our Lord spent many months of labor and infinite patience and consummate skill in training men for this work will of itself impress upon us the great value of the minister's office and work and influence. It is inconceivable that Jesus should have chosen the twelve, and trained them, unless he placed the highest estimate upon their services. He came preaching; He made them preachers, and sent them out to preach everywhere. He taught them that they might teach. He prayed for them, that they might pray with and for others.

The highest qualification of ministers is not eloquence, or learning, or doctorates, or man-made dignities, but faithfulness.

What a school would be without teachers, that a church would be without ministers. The gospel is to be preached promise-breakers. and by trustful and unceasing prayer to God to help us.
(Continued on page 12)

* * *

Tell the society about some covenant-breaking you have known of, and point out the moral ugliness of it.

Which is worse—to break a pledge to God or to a bank? Why?

Give a strong Bible passage about paying vows. Eccles. 5:4.

I do not see the cathedral as yet when I go into the confused quarry yard and see there the half-wrought stones, the clumsy blocks that are by and by to be decorated capitals. But when at last they are finished in form and brought together, the mighty building rises in the air, an ever-enduring psalm in rock. I do not see the picture yet when I look upon the palette, with its blotches and stains and lumps of color. By and by, when the skillful brush of the painter has distributed those colors, I see the radiant beauty of the Madonna, the pathos of the Magdalene, I see the beauty of the landscape spread out upon the canvas, with meadow and hill and winding stream and the splendors if the sunset crowning the whole. I do not see yet the perfect Kingdom of God upon earth, but I see the colors which are to blend in it. I see the already half-chiseled rock out of which it shall be wrought, and I am not going to despond now when so much already has been accomplished.—R. S. Storrs, D.D.

Sunday School

By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.

OCTOBER 12, 1919

Fishers of Men
Lesson Mark 1:14-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men."—Mark 1:17.

AUTHORIZED VERSION

14 Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God.

15 And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.

16 Now as he walked by the sea of Galilee, he saw Simon, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers.

17 And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men.

18 And straightway they forsook their nets, and followed him.

19 And when he had gone a little farther thence, he saw James, the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, who also were in the ship mending their nets.

20 And straightway he called them: and they left their father Zebedee in the ship with the hired servants, and went after him.

John the Baptist's work had been accomplished. He had pointed the Jewish people to Jesus, as the long promised Messiah had prepared his people by preaching repentance to receive Him in His true character and had consecrated Him to His Redeeming work by water baptism, symbolizing and attended by the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Because of his reproof of Herod Antipas, who had married his brother Philip's wife, he had incurred the enmity of the latter, and at her instigation had been cast into prison where by her influence he was subsequently beheaded. After John's imprisonment Jesus went to Galilee and moved from Nazareth to Capernaum. Here was the scene of our present lesson and its teachings may be contemplated as follows: The Preaching of Jesus, His Call of Four Disciples, The Prompt Obedience of the Called, and Secular Calling Preparing for Higher Functions.

I. The Preaching of Jesus.

The themes He treated must have been of the highest importance and furnished subjects for other preachers who represent Him. He preached "The Kingdom of God is at hand." He declared that the Kingdom of God's grace was about to be established in the hearts of men and in the world. He affirmed that some men were about to enthrone Him in their hearts and lives, as King, and that His visible Kingdom in the organized Church consisting of His avowed followers was about to appear. He preached "The Gospel of the Kingdom." This included His claims as Redeemer, the terms of entrance, the doctrines to be believed, the duties to be performed, and the blessings to be enjoyed. The Gospel preacher need never be at a loss for a theme. Christ preached "Repentance" as did the Hebrew prophets and John the Baptist. As Christ's salvation is one from sin, it is needless for a man to try to get into God's Kingdom of Grace while clinging to any form of sin. "The wicked must forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts," if he expects God to have mercy upon him and to bestow pardon. Christ also preached "faith" or practical belief of the Gospel. It is vain for men to hear the Gospel without obeying it. It is not food in sight but food eaten that saves from starvation. It is not water contemplated but water quaffed that quenches thirst.

II. Jesus Calls Four Disciples.

These were Simon and Andrew and James and John, the sons of Zebedee. They were already disciples, having become such in Judea. But they are now called to forsake secular employments and to attend constantly our Saviour's public ministry and teachings. Subsequently all these men are called and ordained to be apostles. But to be prepared for such an office and functions they must be taught and trained under the eye of the Master Himself. These men were busy in their lawful secular employment when summoned to Christ. Jesus now calls men busy in worldly occupations to the Gospel ministry. Doctors, lawyers, mechanics, teachers, and men of varied pursuits are often led to publish Gospel tidings. The busier they are and the more efficient in secular employments, the more apt they are to be called and the better prepared for higher service.

III. The Prompt Obedience of the Called.

These men immediately obeyed Christ's summons. They left their employment as fishers. They forsook their nets and boats, their worldly property and its gains. James and John separated from their father and hired servants. They broke domestic and business ties. This unhesitating obedience to Christ's call required decision of character. A man will not do what Christ directs unless he has power to decide quickly what he will do. Complying with Christ's call demands self-sacrifice. Whether the call is to discipleship or to the ministry, this is needful. These men had to give up secular employment, worldly business and gains and domestic and social relations, in order to comply with Jesus' commands. But they were called to higher functions and grander results. They were to cease to be fishers for perishable fish and to "Catch men who shall live forever."

IV. Secular Calling Preparing for Higher Functions.

Their business as fishers had in some measure fitted them to become fishers of men. The qualities demanded for success in the one calling were also needful in the higher occupation. If knowledge, toil, wisdom, skill, patience and persistence were essential to catching fish, much more were such qualities needful for winning souls that were to live forever. It is oftentimes the case that information, habits of thought, modes of expression, and illustrations gained in a secular business, have qualified a man to become a most efficient preacher when he entered the ministry of the Gospel. The writer knew an English sea captain who had sailed all seas, whose knowledge of the Bible and wealth of original illustrations, when he became a herald of the cross, made him the peer of any man he ever heard preach.

Prayer Meeting.

(Continued from page 11)

throughout the whole world. Is this possible without a faithful ministry? Local churches without ministers would be as sheep having no shepherd, and that too in lands where wolf and lion are ready to spring upon the sheep. Then, too, the work of the church is so specialized, so vast, so absorbing that men and women not trained for this special work, not devoting themselves to it exclusively would, because also of other absorbing cares and pursuits, be incapable of directing and executing it.

Our ministers find their hours too few, their strength too limited to overtake their work. Many churches must have either associate pastors or trained helpers. So great is this need, so increasingly evident is it, that the Assembly has planted a school in Richmond to train helpers for ministers.

It is simply impossible to over-estimate the importance of the Christian minister; and yet there are many members of our churches who lightly esteem this work and this office.

Then there are others who can not endure the minister who feels in his soul that "It is a very small thing that I should be judged of man's judgment." Such men must expect to be criticised and misjudged by those in his congregation who object to the minister thinking for himself and being faithful always to his Lord. They demand a boot-licker—not a minister. Hence they are ever ready to make trouble for the minister and for the church because they have a false or a mean conception of the ministerial office.

Christianity is not a new luxury for the well-to-do; and Christian ministers are not the lackeys of the rich. Christ did not minister to men that they who are surrounded by material luxuries may be comfortable in spirit and free from all anxieties and duties: but He came to teach that they have no true life who have not learned to serve—to live for others. The life, the service, the self-sacrifice of our Lord—these teach us the true conception and value of the minister, and also of the layman.

Devotional

NO RELAPSE.

"Take up thy bed." Why was he to take up the bed? Because, some one has beautifully said, there is to be no provision made for a relapse. Oh, how many of us have made that provision in the past! Yes, we will get up, but we will have the bed ready for a relapse. So far as you are able, make it impossible, by the absoluteness of your surrender and consecration, ever to get back. Step clean out upon God.—Rev. G. Campbell Morgan.

VICTORY!

Victory! There is something beautiful in that word. The death of Sir John Moore, in the Peninsular war, was very touching; he fell in the arms of triumph; and sad as was his fate, I doubt not that his eye was lit up with lustre by the shout of victory. So also, I suppose that Wolfe spoke a truth when he said at Quebec, "I die happy," having just heard the shout, "The run, they run." I know victory even in that bad sense—for I look not upon earthly victories as of any value—must have cheered the warrior.

But oh! how cheered the saint when he knows that victory is his! I shall fight during all my life, but I shall write vici on my shield. I shall be "more than conqueror through Him that loved me." Each feeble saint shall win the day; each man upon his crutches; each lame one; each one full of infirmity, sorrow, sickness and weakness, shall gain the victory. "They shall come with singing unto Zion; as well the blind, and halt, and the women with the child together." So saith the Scripture.—C. H. Spurgeon.

ALL ARE PILGRIMS.

The Christian theory pictures the whole race of man as pilgrims together, marching toward an undiscovered country. One, perchance, has a more capacious wallet, stouter shoes, a cunning carved walking stick, a fuller outfit, daintier rations than another; but the gospel takes no distinction of these artificial distinctions. It represents men as bound for eternity, and the vital question is, how will these wayfarers look upon this thing called life? Will they tarry in the inns and temporary shelters they reach on the road, or will they use the world as not abusing it, clothing and housing themselves with such materials as they find, constantly moving on toward a house not made with hands?—J. Sparhawk Jones.

"LORD, HELP ME!"

"Lord, help me" (Matt. 25:25). There is a chain of but three links in this prayer of the poor woman of Canaan, but it reaches a long way. Some of the most beautiful prayers ever uttered are very short prayers. This is a very short prayer—any child can say it. There are three links in the chain, mark mark you. One link is on the throne of God; it is "Lord." The other link is down here; it is "me," and there is a great link between that and this; it is "help." "Lord, help me." And the greater your need, the more that middle link in the chain will express.—Marcus Rainsford.

THE GOOD PHYSICIAN.

I do not know that I have ever been so moved by any picture as I was by one which hung on the walls of the Academy three years ago, Mr. John Collier's picture of "The Death Sentence." A young fellow is sitting facing the light in the consulting-room of a doctor. The kindly man has evidently been breaking the news to him of the disease which has gripped him so tightly that human skill cannot disengage its grip. And as I looked at it, the thing that struck me most was not the look of despair upon the wasted face of the young man upon whom the world was slowly closing its gates; but it was just the look upon the face of the surgeon, the look of impotent pity on the countenance of the man who knew what was wrong but had not the power to deal with it. But, blessed be Christ's name forever, I have never seen that look on His face. I have never seen the risen Lord for one moment at a loss to know what to do with a man who accepts His diagnosis of his disease and puts himself into His hands.—C. E. World.

Home Circle

NOT A SMALL MATTER.

It seems a small matter for a man to whistle up a newsboy and pay him a few cents for a paper on Sabbath morning, but there are tens of thousands of newsboys—to each of whom that small matter is as important a business transaction as a real-estate deal would be to his patron—and it becomes evident that a whole generation of youth are thus being educated for larger forms of Sunday business further on. I, for one, would rather forego the reading of the news for twenty-four hours in every week than lend myself in this manner to the training of the rising generation in the violation of the Sabbath law.—Rev. David James Burrell, D. D.

SECRETS OF HOSPITALITY.

True hospitality does not lie in great display or in lavish expenses. There are magnificent houses thrown open wide at stated times to a great array of guests; but the guests arrive uneasily, and depart as soon as courtesy permits. There are royal banquets, where every delicacy is lavished; but there is no cordiality in either giver or receiver, and the banqueters are sated before they sit down. And the owners of those houses and the framers of those feasts wonder why men and women go with such eagerness to quiet homes and simple tables, where there is no luxury whatever.

One secret lies in entertaining your friends as nearly as possible after the fashion in which you live yourself. People worth inviting come, not to see your house, but to see you. For set occasions some little preparation may be necessary, but even that little is often too much. What every visitor appreciates most is seeing the family as nearly as possible as it lives, and being made a part of it. The houses that open in that way, as it were by the touch of a spring, are the houses that are loved and frequented. The guest who is most enjoyed and enjoys himself, is the guest who comes unexpectedly; and the great hosts of the world are never found unready for one more. There was always an extra place in Lady Holland's full dining room, and you could not disturb the hostess' contentment, although you might that of her guests. "Luttrell, make the room," she said on one occasion. "It must be made," Luttrell murmured, "for it does not exist." And Robert Tooms, when his table was overcrowded, remarked: "I do not object to having more friends than room. It is usually the other way in this world."

But another secret lies even deeper. It consists in always wanting to see your friends. Most of us have our hours of being social, but when we are busy, or weary, or dull, we ask to be alone. And no disguise of courtesy, however creditable, will altogether conceal our reluctance. Your truly hospitable heart desires always to see those it loves, is ready even to go out in sympathy to those it does not love. You may say that that is a gift inborn; but, like many other apparently inborn gifts, some degree of it can be acquired.

There was a lady once who said: "I believe I should like to talk to every one in the world." And the same lady said again: "I do not think I ever saw any one coming to my house whom I was not glad to see." No doubt this lady exaggerated, but, none the less, she represented the hospitable spirit in its most genuine form.—Unidentified.

Presbyterian Standard

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE.
REV. W. L. BOGGS, Circulation Manager.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.
ESTABLISHED JANUARY 1, 1858.

Entered at the Post Office at Charlotte, N. C., as second class matter.

CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE

Dress and Decency	2
Independence in Journalism	2
The Death of R. H. Fleming, D.D.....	3
Home-Coming Day at Buffalo.....	3
An Important Meeting of the Synods.....	3
CONTRIBUTED—
The Problem of Relation of White and Colored Races—By Rev. J. Sprole Lyons, D.D.....	4
He Died For All—By Ada C. Henderlite.....	4
The Assembly's Committee on Church Union—By Rev. Willis Thompson	5
"Another View of the Washington Riots"—By Rev. Jesse C. Rowan	6
The Assembly's Training School	6
Miss Selina Speaks Her Mind—By Mary Callum Wiley.	7
Federation Idea Was Quashed	7
Federation Idea Was Not Quashed—By Rev. Thornton Whaling, D. D.	7
Assembly's Committee on Systematic Benevolence and Stewardship—By Wm. Fred Galbraith... ..	8-9
Representation in Church Courts—By Rev. E. C. Gordon, D. D.	9-24
Mission Talks From a Layman—By M. M. Inabinet.	24
"Will Pastors Help in the Search?"—By Egbert W. Smith	24
DEPARTMENTS—
News of the Week	10
Christian Endeavor—By Rev. S. H. Hay	11
Prayer Meeting—By Rev. C. D. Waller	11
Sunday School—By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.	12
Home Circle and Devotional	13

Church News

Collections for October are for Foreign Missions. Treasurer, E. F. Willis, 216 Union Street, Nashville, Tenn.

A PREACHER-POET.

Rev. John Jordan Douglass, pastor of our church at Wadesboro, is a poet of no mean reputation. His verses, appearing in the secular press from time to time, have always been recognized as possessing real merit. In these days of jingling rhyme, it is a rare treat to find verses expressing delicate thoughts.

Mr. Douglass has in press a holiday edition of his poems that will be welcomed by all lovers of true verse. It will be an appropriate present for the Christmas season. The title is "The Bells." It will be published by the Presbyterian Standard Publishing Company, and will be ready for delivery before the holidays. We hope that our readers will procure a copy and thus encourage home talent, which in this instance is equal to the best that comes from the outside.

PERSONAL.

The address of Rev. R. M. Hall, D.D., is changed from Clarksburg, W. Va., to 2909 Crawford Street, Houston, Texas.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Ware Shoals—The Ware Shoals Memorial Church has experienced an outpouring of the Spirit of God during the last three months, eleven members having been added to her roll since July 1. This church recently organized a Christian Endeavor Society which is proving to be a great blessing to the church. At a congregational meeting Sunday morning, September 28, the following officers were elected: Elders, Messrs. R. E. Ferguson and C. B. Alexander. Deacon, Mr. Youngblood. Providence permitting, these officers will be installed October 12, 1919. A. H. K.

Rev. John McSween, an alumni of the Columbia Theological Seminary and of the University of South Carolina, was Tuesday elected chaplain of the Thirtieth Division Association, according to advices from Greenville. Mr. McSween was known in France as the "fighting parson," and men of the division testify to the esteem in which he was held by all the soldiers who knew him. Chaplain McSween is considered almost a Columbian among his friends here. He is a native of Timmonsville, his father, John McSween, Sr., being a prominent business man of that town. Chaplain McSween is now pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Rowland, N. C.—Columbia State.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Mission Work of the Synod—Just after this issue the books close for Synod. Applications coming in from the Presbyteries are largely increased over former years.

One Presbytery alone asks for more than was spent in the whole Synod five years ago.

We do not want to turn any down. Just how far we can go will depend on receipts now coming in. This year's receipts are the basis of next year's appropriations. Many churches are responding finely. Some not yet. Some—a few—of the strongest churches do not seem to see the obligation.

One-half of your April to April apportionment now before Synod is what we plead for.

Have arranged with the auditor so that he will include in his statement amounts sent as late as Monday, the 13th.

A. W. Crawford, Supt. and Treas.,
320 S. Mendenhall, Greensboro, N. C.

Greensboro, Buffalo—Revival services were conducted at the Buffalo Church from the third Sunday through the fourth Sunday of September. The pastor, Rev. E. Frank Lee, was assisted by Rev. Leonard Gill, of Charlotte. The preaching of Mr. Gill is strong and forceful, his earnestness and the effective use he makes of illustration being the particularly strong features of his sermons.

The attendance was perhaps the largest ever witnessed at the church, and the interest was good and deepened with the progress of the services. The membership was greatly revived, and on Sunday after the sermon on "The Christian Home" a number of families promised to erect the family altar. At the morning service an offering was taken for Synodical Missions, and the amount raised was $163.

On the last day of the meeting the pastor received 22 into the church and on last Sunday, October 5, eight others were received, the greater part of the 30 coming on profession of their faith.

We thank God for the good that was done and take courage and pray His blessing upon His servant.

E. Frank Lee, Pastor.

WANTED

Three Men---or Women---of Faith,
Vision and Courage
To Give $50,000.00 Each

On the Following Conditions:

1. To endow Chair of History,
Davidson College - $50,000.00
2. To endow Bible Chair, Davidson College - - $50,000.00
3. To erect and endow Social Building--Y. M. C. A., Davidson College - - $50,000.00
4. Offered on condition that One Million
Dollars be raised.
5. That the gift may constitute a memorial if desired.

One Friend Has Offered $100,000 on Condition That

One Million Be Raised
For Christian Education
For All Our Institutions

Where Could You Invest $50,000 With More SAFETY and ASSURANCE?

We Are Looking With Confidence For These Three. Will You

Let Us Talk It Over With YOU? No Obligation

Will Be Incurred On Your Part

The Million Dollar Campaign Committee

A. M. SCALES, Chairman

R. G. VAUGHN, Treasurer

C. M. RICHARDS, Secretary

Greensboro, North Carolina

Church News.

(Continued from Page 14)

Roberdel and Cameronia—Rev. W. R. Coppedge has returned to the pastorate of Roberdel and Pee Dee Presbyterian churches, after a lapse of several years.

He was pastor of Cameronia from 1895 to 1907 and of Roberdel from 1895 to 1912.

He was continued to serve Mark's Creek Church and will also serve Brainerd Church at Roberdel No. 2.

Charlotte—A woman who has endeared herself to all Baracas and Philatheas in North Carolina is Mrs. N. Buckner, of Asheville, general secretary of the state union of these organized classes. The past week she has been a Charlotte visitor, attending the meeting of Baraca-Philathea classes of the Baptist churches of the city. On last Sabbath night she spoke briefly to the Baracas and Philatheas of the First A. R. P. Church at the close of the evening sermon. Mrs. Buckner's message to the young people is inspiring, and the delightful way in which she delivers it adds greatly to its force.

Charlotte, Tenth Avenue—On last Sunday Rally Day exercises were carried out most interestingly by the Sunday School of this church. Special features of the program were a violin solo by Miss Ella Mosely and a vocal solo by Miss Essie Stokes, the latter using the beautiful hymn, "The Light of the World is Jesus" as bearing on the Rally Day theme for this year, "Lighting Our Southland." A special five-piece orchestra also added very much to the musical part of the program. The Rally Day address was delivered by Rev. G. F. Bell, of Knox Church, and carried a helpful message for both children and grown-ups in the audience. The attendance for the day registered 232, with a collection of $51.

Charlotte—Knox Church, Rev. G. F. Bell, pastor. Last Sabbath was a very interesting day at this church. At the morning hour the communion service was observed and a public welcome extended to twenty-nine new members, ten of these being on profession of their faith. The service flag was demobilized also and a special prayer of thanksgiving offered for the safe return of every person represented on it.

At the Sabbath School hour rally day was observed and a very interesting program was carried out. There were about 270 in attendance at this service.

On Friday night, September 26, Dr. Thornton Whaling was the guest of honor at a meeting of the Men's Club of the church, at which time he delivered his very fine address on "The Making of Woodrow Wilson," which was very much enjoyed by all present.

Nahala Church, Albemarle Presbytery—This church has had quite "a time of refreshing from the Lord," under the very effective preaching of Rev. J. M. Millard, of Littleton.

Brother Millard came to us September 8 and preached a week. There was an overflowing attendance and deep and widespread interest. There were five additions to the church. A collection of forty-two dollars was taken; and as the further result of this brother's services we go to Presbytery with brighter and better prospects for the furtherance of the Kingdom in this part of the Master's vineyard. Two other members came to us as a result of the meeting with the Methodists which followed the Nahala meeting.

The Pastor.

Union Church—Rev. O. G. Jones, D.D., Synodical evangelist, has just held a splendid meeting in this church beginning the services Sunday, September 21, and concluding Saturday, September 27. The attendance was good, the interest great, and the preaching of a very high order, scriptural, spiritual and without any of the high pressure methods that sometimes characterize evangelistic meetings. To say that the church received a blessing is putting it mildly. It were nearer the truth to say a great blessing. Eleven persons were received into the church, eight on profession of faith and three by statement from other churches. A contribution of something over $100 was made to Synodical Home Missions. Dr. Jones leaves a church in fine condition, and not only the church but the whole community has felt the influence of the meeting.

Geo. A. Sparrow.

Fall and Winter Evangelistic Campaign, Fayetteville Presbytery—Buckhorn, J. J. Hill; Summerville, J. W. Goodman; Cameron, C. C. Brown; Manly, A. T. Lassiter; Gibson, Wm. Black; Cypress, J. K. Roberts, Galatia, A. T. Lassiter; Sherwood, W. C. Brown; Mills Tabernacle, J. J. Murray; Smithfield, E. C. Murray; Buies Creek, R. A. McLeod; Cumnock, L. Smith; Hillside, L. Smith; St. Andrew's, C. E. Clarke; Pine Grove, L. Smith; Elrod, J. A. McMurray; Buffalo, John McSween; Dunndarrach, A. W. Crawford; Godwin, G. F. Kirkpatrick; Selma, G. F. Kirkpatrick; Lumber Bridge, J. W. Goodman; Lillington, J. A. Caligan; Vass, A. R. McQueen; Aberdeen Church, A. W. Crawford; Eureka, L. A. McLaurin; Church of Covenant, W. E. Hill; Philippi, Chas. R. Bailey; Progressive, J. J. Murray; Jones, J. J. Murray; Rex, A. R. McQueen; Raeford Tabernacle, A. W. Crawford; Mt. Holly, L. Smith; Elise, Eugene Alexander; Pembroke, E. C. Murray; Jonesboro, Wm. Black; Midway, Wm. Black; Salem, J. A. Caligan; Bluff, E. C. Murray; Westminster, A. T. Lassiter; Kenly, W. S. Golden.

Winston-Salem—A committee of Orange Presbytery, Sunday, September 28, installed Rev. John R. Herndon, formerly of Ocala, Fla., pastor of the Waughtown Presbyterian church. Rev. D. Clay Lilly, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, presided, propounded the customary questions, and delivered a charge to the pastor, Rev. T. W. Simpson, pastor of the Reynolda Presbyterian Church, preached the sermon of the occasion, Titus 2:10, last clause, and Rev. George W. Lee, pastor of the North Presbyterian Church, delivered a charge to the people. Ruling Elder, Charles M. Norfleet, of the First Church, the remaining member of the committee, led the congregation in prayer at the conclusion of the service. It was an impressive service. The church is beginning to take on new life. The Sunday school is actively endeavoring to increase the attendance upon its sessions. An earnest Senior Christian Endeavor Society is greatly aiding in the work of the church, and a live Junior Society is training the children. The Woman's Auxiliary is doing good work. This church is in the midst of a large population and the community does not seem to be over-churched. The greatest problem we have is to get the public to attend the worship of the sanctuary and to apply themselves to the study of the Bible in the Sabbath school. The church has recently had a visit from Miss E. V. Lee, of Mexico, which was greatly enjoyed. Plans are maturing for making the church serve the community in a larger way.

Rockfish—It was on our annual vacation in August that my family and myself spent the time very pleasantly with our people and friends near Fayetteville, Godwin and Wallace, N. C.

At the request of Brother W. P. M. Currie, my home pastor, I preached for a week at Old Rockfish Church, one of the oldest and strongest Presbyterian churches in Wilmington Presbytery, closing the services on the fourth Sunday in August.

It was a real spiritual feast to my own soul to be thrown in company with my many friends and good people of Rockfish Church, and especially those godly, pious men, Rev. W. P. M. Currie and Elder James Henry Moore, of Burgaw, N. C.

In spite of the very busy season of the year, the revival was well attended. To a very large extent, all denominations joined in with us in the services. There must have been about three hundred people present at the close of the revival.

I take this occasion to thank Brother Currie and the congregation for the splendid contribution and for their kindness shown to me as a token of their appreciation. I thank the organist and the singers for their splendid music. Let me thank that godly, pious, spiritually minded old man, Elder James Henry Moore, for his presence in the meeting, and for his prayers, and for his spiritual uplift. Let me thank the community and the entire congregation for their many words of encouragement and expressions of kindness shown me in the revival. But above all, let us thank God for the revival.

There were added to the church thirteen on a profession of faith and four infants were dedicated to the Lord by baptism. May the Lord bless Brother Currie and his good people.

E. B. Carr,

Pastor McDowell, Lanes and Brewington Presbyterian Churches.

Mecklenburg Presbytery met in adjourned session on Thursday, October 2, 1919, at 10 a. m., in the Charlotte First Church. There were 25 members present.

The Rev. H. M. Pressly, now preaching at Elizabeth City, N. C.; Rev. K. L. Whittington, now preaching at Forest City, N. C., and Rev. A. R. Shaw, D.D., who goes this month to occupy the chair of Theology at Louisville Seminary, were all permitted to labor outside our bounds till the next stated meeting.

The reports from all the colleges and schools were gratifying. Capt. Wm. Anderson represented Queens College and President W. J. Martin, Davidson, who not only made a fine report for Davidson, but made a strong plea for the Christian education of our boys and girls. Both of these schools have had to turn away pupils, as has the Albemarle Normal and Industrial Institute, for lack of room.

The revised manuel of standing rules was adopted. The following paper on the present unrest in our country was presented by the Rev. Dr. Shaw and adopted by Presbytery:

Whereas, in the present crisis of our history when a weary world is confronted with reconstruction problems of appalling magnitude, and,

Whereas, a spirit of unrest and of antagonism to existing economic conditions is so widely prevalent, and,

Whereas, remedial measures are vainly sought through force and violence, at times resulting in the wanton destruction of property and life, and,

Whereas, our own country is confronted with serious race problems which threaten the peace and prosperity of the land, be it resolved:

1. That the Presbytery of Mecklenburg earnestly request its ministers, at their earliest convenience, to preach on the following, or kindred passages of scripture:

Phil. 2-4, "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others."

I Thess. 4:11, "And that ye study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you."

Rom. 13:11, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."

Matt. 22:21, "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's."

Luke 6:31, "And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."

Rom. 13:1, "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers."

2. That in view of the world-wide unrest and the extreme gravity of the situation, our ministers urge their congregations not only to the exercise of discretion and sound judgment, to moderation in speech and action, but also to earnest importunate prayer to Almighty God imploring His intervention and blessing; and exhorting the people to prompt compliance with the conditions set forth in II Chron. 7:14, "If my people which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land."

3. That we record our emphatic disapproval of all influences and measures that result in racial antipathy and estrangement, and call upon our people to use all legitimate means to allay race friction and to promote harmonious relationships, assuring the negro of our just and kindly consideration and of our abiding interest in his temporal and spiritual welfare.

The Rev. T. G. Tate accepted the call from the Badin, N. C., church. The following commission was appointed to install him there on Sunday, October 19, at 11 a. m.: Rev. Leonard Gill to preside, Rev. G. W. Cheek and Elder J. M. Harris.

The Synod of North Carolina was overtured to take steps toward the appointment of a field secretary of Foreign Missions for the Synod.

A short, but edifying conference on the state of religion within our bounds was held closing with a season of prayer.

Presbytery adjourned to meet in the Charlotte First Church on Monday, November 3, at 2 p. m.

John E. Wool, S. C.

Fayetteville Presbytery met in its two hundred and thirtieth stated session at Jackson Springs, N. C., September 30, 1919, with an attendance of 40 ministers and 65 elders. Rev. J. J. Murray was elected Moderator and Rev. R. A. McLeod, temporary clerk. Opening sermon was preached by Rev. J. J. Hill, D.D., the retiring moderator.

Rev. John McSween, of Pee Dee Presbytery, and Rev. J. F. Menius, of Holston Presbytery, were received as members of this Presbytery. Rev. D. McIntyre was dismissed to Pee Dee Presbytery and Rev. S. H. Williamson was dismissed to East Mississippi Presbytery.

Dundaroch, Bethel, Shiloh, Carthage, Eureka, Union, White Hill, Manly, and Sanford churches were granted permission to increase the salaries of their pastors, and the churches were commended for this act.

The pastoral relation was dissolved between Rev. G. F. Kirkpatrick and Cape Fear Church, at the mutual request of pastor and church.

Alaska Church, at Alaska school house, was organized, with ten members, on May 11, 1919.

Evangelistic powers were granted Rev. Messrs. R. M. Phillips and J. F. Menius in their fields.

The Presbyterial sermon was preached by Rev. J. A. McMurray from the text: Rom. 12:2. The Presbyterial communion service was held at the close of this sermon.

The afternoon of the second day Presbytery accepted an invitation to visit the Elise High School, and a large part of the Presbytery motored over to Elise, where a short session of the Presbytery was held, and, after supper, the return trip to Jackson Springs was made in time for the evening service.

All churches were urged to meet their full apportionments to Foreign Missions and pastors were urged to preach on this subject.

Our Presbytery was apportioned $8,000 for the Orphans' Home and the total amount contributed during the year was $9,949.31.

Commissions have been appointed to organize churches, if the way be clear, at Cumnock, Horse Shoe, Byrd's school house and Sorrell school house. The whole work of Home Missions within our bounds is in the most flourishing condition of its history.

Rev. Messrs. M. E. Melvin, superintendent of the million dollar campaign for education; J. M. Clark, of the Presbytery of Concord; W. R. Coppedge and W. E. Furr, of Mecklenburg Presbytery, were introduced and asked to sit as corresponding members. Rev. Mr. Melvin gave us an encouraging and inspiring address on the subject of Christian education. Rev. Mr. Clark, a son of the Jackson Springs Church, took part in the centennial celebration of the organization of the church, which was held on the afternoon of the third day, and will remain over Sabbath and preach for the local congregation. Brother Coppedge also spoke on the centennial program.

Rev. Messrs. J. W. Goodman and John McSween were added to the committee on publication and Sunday School work, and Rev. Messrs. W. S. Golden and J. J. Murray were added to the committee on Assembly's Home Missions.

Rev. A. R. McQueen was re-elected trustee of Davidson College.

Rev. C. B. Craig, W. G. Carter and Dr. Gilbert Mc-

Leod were elected trustees of Elise High School for a term of three years.

Rev. E. L. Siler was added to the historical committee and made its chairman.

Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D., with Rev. E. L. Siler, alternate, was appointed to preach the Presbyterian sermon next spring on "The Providence of God."

The following was adopted touching Sabbath observance: "Your committee having carefully considered all the papers submitted in the matter of the communication from Rev. Robert Hill, D.D., begs to report:

1. The report of the committee on the Sabbath adopted by the Presbytery in adjourned meeting at Fayetteville on June 3, 1919, has as recommendation "2" the following: "That this Presbytery records its objection to the suggestion of the Assembly's committee that even any part of the Sabbath day be used for worldly amusements and outdoor recreation, as driving, automobiling, boating, etc., in hours other than the hours of public worship."

2. We believe that this recommendation was erroneous in the following particulars, and in so far should be reconsidered and modified:

(a) The Assembly's committee did not make any positive suggestion that all kinds of outdoor recreations, such as driving, automobiling and boating could be indulged in at any time on the Sabbath not used for public worship; but we believe that their words were susceptible to an inference that outdoor recreations such as those mentioned were countenanced by the Assembly at such hours on the Sabbath. The persons most guilty of violating the Sabbath are the ones most likely to read in just such an inference.

(b) The Assembly's committee did not use the words "worldly amusements" at all in the paragraph of their report referred to, and it is incorrect for the Presbytery's resolution to criticize them for words which they did not use, and whose meaning is very different from "outdoor recreation." It is also unwarrantable in the Presbytery's resolution to add an "etc.," making the Assembly's committee's report appear to include more than it evidently intended to include.

3. We recommend that the Presbytery send up the following overture to the Assembly at its next meeting: "The Presbytery of Fayetteville overtures the General Assembly to reconsider the third recommendation of the report of its committee on the Sabbath, adopted at the New Orleans Assembly. The language seems very likely to lead many to the inference that the Assembly lends some degree of countenance to outdoor recreations as boating, automobiling and driving, during hours not occupied by public worship. We therefore further overture the Assembly to reconsider the above named recommendation, and positively affirm anew our strict adherence to the standards prescribed for Sabbath observance in the Westminster Confession of Faith."

Calls from Ashpole and Rowland churches were placed in the hands of Rev. John McSween and a committee consisting of Rev. Messrs. J. K. Hall, I. N. Clegg and C. G. Vardell was appointed to install him as pastor on Sunday, November 2, 1919.

Calls from the Smithfield group of churches were placed in the hands of Rev. J. J. Murray and he was permitted to hold these calls until next meeting of Presbytery. In the meantime he is permitted to serve this group as stated supply.

Presbytery approved the proposed amendments, sent down by the Assembly, as to candidates for the ministry, and that providing for the omission of trials for ordination in the same Presbytery in which the candidate was licensed. It rejected the amendment providing for the omission of licensure when Presbytery is satisfied that the candidate is prepared for ordination. Presbytery approves of the spirit of this amendment but declines to adopt it in its present obscure and indefinite form. It declined to approve the amendment changing the basis of representation in the Assembly, and placed on the docket for consideration at the spring meeting the amendment concerning the election of elders and deacons for a limited term.

Attention was called to the alarming decrease in the number of candidates for the ministry, and the chairman of the committee on ministerial education was directed to address a letter to the young men of our churches on this subject, and all ministers were directed to read the letter from their pulpits.

Maxton was chosen as the next place of meeting. The time will be Tuesday, April 20, 1920, at 8 o'clock p. m.

After adopting a hearty vote of thanks for the hospitality of the Jackson Springs Church and community, Presbytery adjourned to meet on the call of the Moderator during the sessions of Synod at Raleigh.

E. L. Siler, Stated Clerk.

ALABAMA.

Mobile—Rev. Dr. W. T. Thompson, Jr., of Knoxville, Tenn., has accepted the call recently extended him by the Government Street Church of this city. He will begin his work in Mobile at an early date.

Mt. Olivet—The entire community was blessed by a gracious season of revival in this church during the first week of October. There were many reconsecrations and several accessions. The services were conducted by Rev. Chas. H. Nabers.

Carrollton—The revival meeting this year in the Carrollton Church was conducted by the pastor, Rev. Chas. H. Nabers. The crowds which attended the services taxed the seating capacity of the church to utmost. In the afternoons the pastor lectured on the Messages of the Early Hebrew Prophets. At the closing service of the meeting the subject of the address was the Presbyterian Church in Faith and Practice. Six new members were received upon profession of faith and two by letter.

The congregations in the Carrollton group and friends in the county have recently presented Rev. C. H. Nabers with a new automobile. This is but one of the many wonderful manifestations of love and kindness shown to him during the three years of his pastorate in this field.

GEORGIA.

Americus—Rev. Frank P. Anderson, of Greenville, S. C., has accepted a call to the church at this place and will begin his work here late in October.

LaGrange—The Presbyterians of LaGrange are planning for a new church home. They have decided to sell the present church property and to build in a more desirable place and they have had offered to them as a gift a most desirable lot. The fact that a more commodious house of worship is needed is proof that Presbyterianism is growing and developing in this city.

TENNESSEE.

The Presbytery of Nashville met in the Mount Olivet Church, near Watertown, Tenn., on September 23 and was opened with an address by the retiring moderator, L. J. McQueen.

Organization—Rev. Francis Tappey, D.D., was chosen moderator and Rev. A. S. Allen, clerk.

Attendance—Smaller than usual, with 13 ministers and 17 ruling elders present.

Transfer of Minister—Rev. R. L. Bern to Macon Presbytery.

Pastorate Resumed—That at Gallatin by Rev. C. C. McNeill after two years in army.

Minister Called—Rev. Geo. E. Eubanks to Cottage Church, Nashville, and installation set for October 5.

Home Missions—Encouraging prospect with Rev. W. H. Richardson, D.D., as Presbyterian evangelist.

Foreign Missions—Attention called to October in interest of this cause and ministers requested to preach on it their congregations, preferably on third Sabbath, and exchange of pulpits suggested.

Narrative indicates that "the churches are affected by the unrest of the times but dominant note that of encouragement.

Weather beautiful, hospitality bountiful, preaching helpful and fellowship delightful.

Place of next spring meeting, Glen Leven Church, Nashville.

Adjourned to meet at Synod at Brownsville.

W. C. Alexander, Stated Clerk.

TEXAS.

Eliasville—The tent meeting held by Superintendent of Home Missions and Evangelist John E. McLean, for which prayer was asked, closed September 7. People came almost every night for a distance of 20 miles and seven joined our Presbyterian church from this distance.

There were 36 reached altogether by profession, reclamation and letter. Twenty-six new members joined the last day, 19 of these Presbyterians.

Two oil wells blew in during the meeting and the people were all very busy. We are glad to report several of the oil people were reached and joined and more will follow, as we understand.

Rev. Tom Cunningham, the pastor, did the singing, and is doing a splendid work here and at Throckmorton.

Cor.

VIRGINIA.

Lexington—On each of the last two Sundays, September 21 and September 28, two persons were received into the membership of this church by letters from other churches.

Monday, September 30, our pastor, Rev. Dr. Thos. Kay Young, left for Clifton Forge, Va., to conduct a ten days' "meeting" at that place.

We are soon to lose the services of Rev. J. C. Bowman, assistant to the pastor. Mr. Bowman has accepted a call to a church in Roanoke, Va. At all of the outlying points near Lexington where he has ministered his work has been very acceptable and these different congregations part from him with regret.

A. H.

West Hanover Presbytery—Rev. Clyde J. Walsh was installed pastor at the Elon and Pedlar Mills Presbyterian churches, Sunday, September 21. The committee was composed of Rev. J. A. Thomas, Rev. W. G. Wood and Mr. S. N. Summerville. Dr. Jas. D. Paxton, of the First Presbyterian church of Lynchburg, Va., preached the installation sermon at Elon and Rev. J. A. Thomas at Pedlar Mills. The sum of $1,350 was raised toward the manse among the congregation of the Elon Church and the delegation from the First Presbyterian church of Lynchburg; also $300 was raised by the congregations of Elon and Pedlar Mills for a car for this field.

South Boston—Our church and community had the good fortune to secure the Rev. G. W. Belk to assist in an evangelistic meeting of two weeks in September. The daily Bible readings were edifying in a marked degree, and the evening sermons were logical, convincing and highly instructive. His themes were the great doctrines of the Bible and were received with deep interest. They were the "beaten oil of the sanctuary." One was reminded of the prophecy of the sainted Dr. Ben Smith, who remarked as his criticism of Brother Belk's sermon when he had preached before the faculty in the seminary chapel: "A good many flowers. We hope they will bear fruit some day." His sermons now are ripe fruit and there are still sprays of lovely flowers to grace the table.

His son, J. B. Belk, recently of the A. E. F., now theological student, added much to the meeting by conducting the singing. Brother Belk uses no high pressure methods and is tinged with no German theories of Bible interpretation but preaches straight Bible truth.

There were only a few who made profession during the meeting, but there are others coming and the good seed will continue to bear fruit. Our church—the largest in town—was sometimes filled to overflowing. The people showed their appreciation by giving a free will offering for the expenses of the meeting of over five hundred dollars.

C. W. M.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. Jno. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

The names of the delegates to the Synodical from Concord Presbyterial are: Miss Mary Dickson, Morganton; Mrs. G. A. Banner, Marion, N. C.

OFFICERS OF MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERIAL, N. C. SYNOD, 1919-1920.

At the request of the president of the Presbyterial, Mrs. R. N. Page, we give below names and addresses of officers of Mecklenburg Presbyterial Auxiliary, Synod of North Carolina.

Mrs. Page asks also that we announce that Miss A. B. Nicholson, 305 West Fourth Street, Charlotte, N. C., is the appointee of the Mecklenburg scholarship to Assembly's Training School, Richmond, Va.

Honorary president, Mrs. C. K. Cumming, Japan; president, Mrs. Robert N. Page, Biscoe, N. C.; first vice-president, Mrs. J. M. Dunlap, Ansonville, N. C.; second vice-president, Miss Maude Rea, Route 2, Charlotte, N. C.; third vice-president, Mrs. W. A. Henderson, Monroe, N. C.; fourth vice-president, Mrs. W. E. Milton, Albemarle, N. C.; fifth vice-president, Miss Ruth McRae, Mt. Gilead, N. C.; sixth vice-president, Miss Nancy Little, Mangum, N. C.; recording secretary, Mrs. C. B. Choate, Route 3, Charlotte, N. C.; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Pat H. Williams, Charlotte, N. C.; treasurer, Mrs. J. H. Howell, 2071 East Seventh street, Charlotte, N. C.; historian, Mrs. J. R. Irwin, Charlotte, N. C.; secretary Foreign Missions, Mrs. R. S. Burwell, Route 20, Huntersville, N. C.; secretary Home Missions, Mrs. Cleo P. Allen, Wadesboro, N. C.; secretary Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, Mrs. C. W. Robinson, Route 7, Charlotte, N. C.; secretary Young People's Work, Miss Louise Parks, 1705 South Boulevard, Charlotte, N. C.; assistant secretary, Y. P. Work, Miss Sudie Wilson, 207 East Park avenue, Charlotte, N. C.; secretary Orphanage Work, Mrs. N. S. Alexander, Route 9, Charlotte, N. C.; secretary Literature, Mrs. C. H. Little, Route 2, Charlotte, N. C.; secretary S. P. C. Home Missions, Mrs. A. T. Graham, West Fifth street, Charlotte, N. C.

(Republished by Request.)

Attention, Secretaries of Assembly's Home Missions in the Presbyterial and Local Auxiliaries in North Carolina:

The vacation season is over and once more we have come to the time of preparation for our period of mission study which reaches from the first of October until the Home Mission week of prayer the last of November.

Now is the time to organize your classes and order text books.

There are two books offered for our enjoyment and instruction. The first, Christianizing Christendom, by Dr. Morris, a masterful presentation of our National Responsibility and showing the necessity for Home Missions.

The second, "In Black and White," by Mrs. J. D. Hammond, a Southern woman, is concerned with one of the burning questions of today—the discussion of the negro problem.

Both of these books may be ordered from the Presbyterian Committee of Publication at Richmond, Va., or from the Home Mission Committee in Atlanta, Ga.

The books are forty cents in paper binding and the helps are five cents extra.

(Continued on page 22)

Marriages and Deaths

Marriages.

Jacques-Nowlin—At the First Presbyterian Church, Georgetown, Texas, September 4, 1919, by Rev. M. C. Hutton, D.D., Mr. Raymond S. Jacques, of Dalhart, Texas, and Miss Mary Bernice Nowlin, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Bethel Nowlin, of Georgetown, Texas.

Harber-Reavis—At the residence of the officiating minister, Rev. M. C. Hutton, D.D., Georgetown, Texas, September 21, 1919, Mr. Dewitt Harber, of Fort Worth, Texas, and Miss Merle Reavis, of Florence, Texas.

Walsh-Hendley—At the residence of Judge Thos. J. Shaw, at Greensboro, N. C., by Dr. Chas. F. Myers, on Wednesday, October 1, 1919, Rev. Clyde J. Walsh and Miss Alma Hendley, the former of Charlotte, N. C., and the latter of Greensboro, N. C.

Lyerly-Cline—At the residence of the bride's brother-in-law, Mr. Manley T. Morris, Kings Mountain, N. C., on September 23, 1919, by Rev. C. T. Squires, of Laurens, S. C., the Rev. Samuel B. Lyerly, of Willow Springs, N. C., and Miss Beulah Marie Cline, of Lenoir, N. C.

Smith-Dorroh—At the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. W. T. Dorroh, August 30, 1919, by the Rev. C. T. Squires, Lieut. Joe Franklin Smith and Miss Laura Roberta Dorroh, all of Laurens, S. C.

Deaths.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. J. P. Hunter.

"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

How precious must have been the above thought to the loved ones left behind, when on the morning of March 7, 1919, Mrs. J. P. Hunter fell asleep in Jesus.

Mrs. Hunter was a daughter of Newell and Mary Laura Ross, of Providence. She was born October 19, 1854. Her early girlhood days were spent in Providence, but losing both her parents when only between 12 and 15 years of age, she went to Huntersville to make her home with relatives. She first joined Huntersville Presbyterian Church. After her marriage she moved her membership to Mallard Creek, and some years later to Sugar Creek, where it remained until her death.

She was married to John Porter Hunter on September 23, 1874. To them were born twelve children, ten of whom reached maturity, and with the exception of the oldest daughter, who preceded her mother to the heavenly home, all are men and women of true worth. She was a devoted wife and mother. "The heart of her husband did safely trust in her, and her children rise up and call her blessed."

Being of a modest and retiring disposition, those who knew her best loved her most. She was tenderly cared for by loved ones for a period of several years of feeble health.

The church and Missionary Society have lost a faithful member, who was interested in every good work.

Our loss is her gain.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

Women's Missionary Societies of Sugar Creek.

IN MEMORIAM.

Daniel Watson and James McBryde,
Elders of Centre Church.

ADOPTED BY SESSION.

Daniel Watson was born July 14, 1838. He joined Centre Church upon a certificate from Lebanon Church, October 20, 1861. He was installed an elder of Centre Church in October, 1869. He was made clerk of the session in 1879 and held that office until April, 1919, a period of forty years. He was ever punctual in attending public worship and in discharging the duties of his offices. He often represented the church at Presbytery and Synod, and though not a man of many words, was habitually found upon the side of truth and righteousness. He never married, but for more than twenty years had a married nephew and his family to live with him and performed for them a father's functions. He left his property to this nephew, his wife and children. During his later life, he was for nearly two and a half years somewhat infirm and spent his time quietly at home. On April 29, 1919, in the eighty-first year of his age, he passed peacefully away, esteemed and honored by all who knew him. A large concourse of relatives and friends attended his funeral at the family burying ground.

James McBryde was born at Pate, N. C., August 28, 1842. He united with Centre Church on certificate from Antioch in September, 1873, and was installed as an elder of Centre in November, 1887. He died after a brief illness in the hospital in Fayetteville, N. C., September 3, 1919. For about 32 years he served faithfully as an elder in this church and was ever alive to its best material and spiritual interests. He frequently represented his church in the higher courts and was generous with his means in sustaining public worship and advancing the Redeemer's Kingdom. He remained unmarried, but had his widowed sister, Mrs. White, and her children to live with him a number of years, and he discharged a father's duty towards these children, giving them all a competent support and a liberal education. At one time on account of befriending others; Mr. McBryde was burdened with debt. But by his own industry and the aid of friends he was relieved of financial obligations and retained his worldly affairs, several years ago dividing his estate among his married nieces and a nephew and retaining for himself only an annuity. During the civil war he was a brave and gallant soldier, and while health permitted he habitually attended the reunions of the old veterans. His funeral services were attended at Centre Church by a large assembly, and his memory will be cherished by many in the community where he lived and served.

As expressing their appreciation of these brethren, the session would adopt the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That in the departure of these elders the state has lost esteemed and valued citizens.

2. That in their removal, a large circle of relatives and friends have been deprived of efficient helpers and co-workers.

3. That the church has lost earnest workers, and that while mourning our separation from them, we are assured of their present well-being and future felicity.

4. That we humbly bow to the Divine will that has determined their translation and thank God for their lives and labors.

5. Resolved, That this memorial be spread on the minutes and published in the Scottish Chief and Presbyterian Standard and copies sent to the respective families.

Session of Centre Church.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Mrs. David W. Oates.

The Women's Foreign Missionary Society has again been called upon to mourn another of its charter members, Mrs. David W. Oates, therefore be it resolved:

1. That we recognize our great loss and bow in humble submission to God's will, realizing that He has the sovereign right to use His own for His glory.

2. That our society has lost a most efficient and consecrated member—one who was ever ready to serve, and though in the providence of God she was often kept from our meetings by suffering, her spirit was always with us

Children's Department

IN QUARANTINE.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl seven years old, and I have a sweet little sister one year old, and a pet dog named Don. I started to school the first of this month, but got sick with diphtheria and had to stop. I am well now but am still in quarantine. My Grandma reads to me the children's letters in your paper and I enjoy them very much. I go to Sunday school every Sunday when I am well. I want to ask a question, What is the Golden Rule? Please print my letter. I want to surprise my mother and father.

Your little friend,

Florence Hill Baumann.

Raleigh, N. C.

A LITTLE FIRELESS COOKER.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl four years old. My name is Lois Neal Hamilton. I don't go to day school but I go to Sunday school. I like to roll my doll in her carriage and I like to make mud pies. I will watch for my letter.

Your little friend,

Lois Neal Hamilton.

Davidson, N. C.

THE BEST TEACHER.

Dear Standard:

After reading the other little girls' letters in your paper I want to tell you about my Sunday school, too. I belong to a class of eleven little girls with the best teacher in the world—Mrs. Thompson. All of us have finished the Child's Catechism and five have recited the Shorter Catechism and gotten our Bibles. Mr. Brown, the evangelist, begins a meeting tomorrow. Most of our class are already church members and I hope that when the meeting is over more will join.

Your little friend,

Marion White.

Mebane, N. C.

Have a heart that never hardens, and a temper that never tires, and a touch that never hurts.—Dickens.

and her words of wisdom will remain with us "till time shall be no more."

3. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family and pray that God will abide with and comfort them in this, their irreparable loss.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, spread upon the minutes of the society and sent to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

Mrs. C. W. Tillett,
Mrs. R. L. Erwin.

Charlotte, N. C.

"AUTUMN'S PARTY."

By Anne B. Payne.

Old Mrs. Oak Tree had so many children that she could not count them all. Of course, the old woman who lived in a shoe had a very large family, but even she had only half as many as Mrs. Oak Tree. All the little Tree children were dressed alike, in green. Their mother was very strict with them, so they were good and well trained. Though they danced and rustled all they wished to, they were never allowed to leave their home.

At first, when they were quite young they did not mind this. It was nice just to be alive, and swing in the breeze, and feel the cool rain, the warm sunshine and the soft, silvery moonlight. But after they grew larger they began to tire of such pleasures, and longed to run away with the wind and see something of the world. Mrs. Oak Tree felt that they were growing restless, so she sang to them about many things, and told them stories of the time when she was a baby acorn.

Then one lovely day in early fall, a mischievous little wind came whistling and hurrying by. He saw a pretty leaf riding on the very tip end of one of Mrs. Oak Tree's longest limbs. He stopped long enough to whisper something to her. The little leaf was so excited over what he told her that she danced up and down as hard as she could.

The secret was too good to keep. She told a big sister leaf next to her and soon all of the leaves knew about it. Mrs. Autumn was going to give a party for her two oldest daughters, October and November, and every leaf was invited.

The Tree children were very happy at the thought of a party. None of them had ever attended one. For a while, they were afraid to tell their mother. She had never wanted them to go anywhere. Finally, a big leaf up at the top of the tree leaned over and told Mrs. Oak Tree all about it and begged her to let them go. She sighed sadly and said:

"My children, I have been expecting this. Of course, I hate to have you leave me, but you are quite grown now and I cannot keep you always. You may do as you wish. But what will you wear and who will take you to the party?"

When the leaves looked at their old, faded, green dresses they hung their heads. They could never go to a party in such clothes. Their kind old mother, seeing their trouble, tried to cheer them.

"Never mind, dears," she said. "I will talk to some of my friends and perhaps they can tell us what to do."

So Mrs. Oak Tree stopped the winds, the rain, and the sunbeams and asked their advice. Then one day she said to her leaves:

"It will be all right, my children. You may all go to the party. The Northwest Wind will take you and he knows a Mr. Frost who will make your new dresses."

The Oak Tree children were so full of joy they could not keep still. They jumped and danced and rustled all day long. But their mother looked sorrowful.

The night before the party, the young leaves went to bed uneasy and worried because their new dresses had not come. Before they went to sleep it turned so cold that they shivered and trembled in their thin old dresses and huddled together to keep warm.

But the next morning how surprised they were. All the green dresses were gone, and each leaf had a gay and beautiful new one. Some were golden like the sun, some red like fire, some the color of oranges, others were brown like chestnuts, and still others were all of these colors mixed together. They were so proud of their new dresses, they had to show them to each other and to their dear old mother.

Then they kissed Mrs. Oak Tree good-bye, stood up very straight, and waited for the Northwest Wind to come for them. Soon they heard a great, rustling noise and they leaned over to look. There he was hurrying along rapidly. He snatched them up rather roughly, and off they flew with him. Old Mother Tree stretched out her arms hungrily to keep them with her. Some of the smallest leaves hated to leave her and were so shy and timid that they would not let go, but clung tightly to her. So the Northwest Wind left them behind. All the other leaves looked back and waved as they danced away to the party. Then Mrs. Oak Tree was so happy to have some of her children left that she drew them closer to her and rocked them to sleep.

Raleigh, N. C.

ITALIAN KING GIVES WEALTH TO POOR.

King Victor Emanuel of Italy has announced that practically all his crown lands are to become the property of the peasants who fought in the war and that most of his palaces and castles are to be used for other philanthropic purposes. The crown properties of Italy are larger than any other country, because the ruling house of Italy inherited all the royal properties of the rulers of the eleven states that united to form the present Italian kingdom. During the war King Emmanuel gave the use of several of his finest palaces to his soldiers.—Continent.

Educational

Davidson—The congregation of the Presbyterian church was privileged to hear two excellent sermons last Sunday from Rev. G. F. Bell, of Charlotte. In the morning his theme was "Pure Religion" defined to be an experience of God, fellowship with God and a resulting service for God. Each point was elaborated at some length and discussed in a most instructive and engaging way.

At night Mr. Bell's subject was "The Minister the Helper of Your Joy." The sermon set forth how the minister as the bearer of good news and a teacher of the blessed and comforting doctrines of Christianity is naturally a joy bringer to men in all the relations of life. This was Mr. Bell's first visit to Davidson. His fine sermons, far above the ordinary in thought, expression and manner of delivery, will make his coming to Davidson for another visit an event to be anticipated with keen relish and pleasure.

The students have made excellent headway this past week in their work in the cotton field toward securing a neat sum for the proposed student band, several hundred dollars. Each class up through the Juniors thus far has taken a day off and the result has netted several hundred dollars or an approach thereto.

Announcement is made that the Redpath Chautauqua will furnish a lyceum course of five numbers this present year, the management promising high-grade selections.

The Blue Pencil (Literary) Club has had its initial meeting this year and starts out enthusiastically in its work. A medal is promised for the most approved contributions in support of the College Magazine during the current year. Mr. O. P. Hart has been elected editor-in-chief of the Magazine.

The special feature of the "Y" service Sunday evening will be a talk by the student from China, Paul C. Ming, who has entered the junior class at Davidson.

The Westminster School—While I was in Dayton, Ohio, for my summer vacation, a friend said to me one day, "Where is the Westminster School? How large is it? How is it maintained? What is taught there?" Accordingly I told him as best I could what he wanted to know. To me, the interesting fact was, that this friend was not a member of the Presbyterian Church. "If," I said to myself, "those that are not connected with our church are so interested in the educational work of our denomination, surely the Presbyterians themselves would like to know something about that work." It is with this thought in mind that I wish to bring to the readers of this paper some facts about the Westminster School.

Westminster School, Rutherfordton, N. C., held its opening exercises on Wednesday morning, September 3, at 9 o'clock, in the chapel. A larger number gathered for these exercises than has gathered in any previous year. Other students have been coming in since the opening, so that we now have an enrollment of 95 (ninety-five). Forty-nine of these are boarding students, while the remainder are day students from the surrounding country.

The boys came to us this year in better spirits than ever before. They have undertaken their work with more enthusiasm than usual. There is every indication that the school is to have one of the best, if not the best, year in its history.

After a month of work with the present student body, we find the whole machinery of the school running more smoothly than in previous years. This is due to several causes. Our boys range in age from 9 years to 26. The older boys are working with the younger boys in their sports and in their study. Then, too, we have a more systematic arrangement of the day's program than formerly. This program will appear in a subsequent article.

We have two literary societies, the Dialectic and the Philanthropic. This year Mr. William Kincaid was elected as the president of the former, and Mr. Joseph Craig was chosen to lead the other for the first presidential term. These societies meet every Saturday night and render a miscellaneous program. From time to time the two organizations meet and give a public entertainment consisting of a miscellaneous program and debate.

In our athletic association, J. A. Black, of Shelby, N. C., is president. Of three baseball games our team played this fall, our boys won two. They are now turning their attention to football.

We have a Y. M. C. A., which meets every Sunday evening. The boys themselves lead these meetings, and bring to their fellow-students many a helpful and suggestive message. The president, Mr. Clonnie Medlin, has plans for a big year's work.

The faculty this year is made up of four teachers for the preparatory department, and one for the primary grades. Rev. T. E. P. Woods, principal; Mr. Robert L. Johnson, assistant principal and treasurer; Mr. W. E. Hentz and Rev. Joseph Bartlett, associate teachers; Mrs. Robert L. Johnson, teacher of the primary department.

Joseph Bartlett.

Woman's Auxiliary.

(Continued from page 19)

For the week of prayer in November the slogan is "The Soul of Democracy, Christian Service, Personal and Social."

The program can be ordered from the Home Mission Committee in Atlanta and will be ready by October 10.

The offering this year will be used for the founding of the much needed Industrial School for Negro Girls.

Counting on your co-operation in making this season of study and prayer one of unprecedented success, I am,

Yours in the Work,

Mrs. Wm. E. White,

Secretary Assembly's Home Missions, the Woman's Synodical Auxiliary of North Carolina.

Permanent Committees of Synodical Auxiliary for 1918-1919:

Committee on Organization—Mrs. Chas. Rankin. Mrs. E. C. Murray, Mrs. C. C. McAlister.

Committee on Y. P.'s Work—Mrs. J. M. McIver, Mrs. G. V. Patterson, Mrs. O. G. Jones.

Committee on Finance—Mrs. B. R. Lacy, Mrs. E. F. Reid, Miss Mary Owen Graham.

Ad Interim Nominating Committee—Mrs. W. T. Bannerman, Mrs. Geo. Oldham, Mrs. F. P. Hall.

Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Kentucky—The Seminary began a new session of work with opening exercises held in the Harbison Memorial chapel of the Seminary on Wednesday morning, October 1, President Charles R. Hemphill presiding. In his introductory statement Dr. Hemphill spoke with emotion of the two great losses sustained by the Seminary during the vacation in the death of Dr. Robert A. Webb, professor of Systematic Theology, in May, and in the death of Dr. T. M. Hawes, professor of public speaking, in August. He spoke of the marked differences in the men, in traditions, training, temperament and gifts, and of the grace that made them equally devoted to the service of the Master. He mentioned the striking coincidence that they were born in the same year, died in the same year and died of the same malady, angina pectoris. He referred touchingly to the pulpit and the two chairs draped in mourning and praised the goodness of God in giving to the Seminary the services of two men who "were lovely and pleasant in their lives and in death were not far divided." A special memorial service will be held later in the month. Announcement was made that Rev. A. R. Shaw, D.D., for a number of years professor of Systematic Theology in the Divinity School of the Southwestern Presbyterian University, Clarksville, Tenn., had been engaged to take Dr. Webb's work in Theology, and Dr. Dunbar H. Ogden, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Louisville, the course in Apologetics. Dr. J. Gray McAllister, of the faculty, is teaching for the time the course in Public Speaking, and the full work of the Seminary goes forward. The opening address, which was to have been delivered by Dr. Hawes, was delivered by Dr. Samuel Callen, the new pastor of the Warren Memorial Church. It was a masterly presentation of "Henry Ward Beecher as a Preacher." Owing to the fact that the Seminary graduated last May the largest class in its history, the student enrollment will be somewhat smaller than that of last year. The entering class, however, is twice as large as last year and the men come finely equipped. Texas sends an unusually good delegation.

Story and Incident.

WHEN WOODROW WILSON WAS AT WESLEYAN.

Selections from Carl F. Price's Article in the N. Y. Christian Advocate.

THREE decades before Fiume loomed large as an Italian problem, President Wilson once faced a different kind of an Italian problem, involving a monkey, a hand-organ player and the dignity of his classroom at Wesleyan University, in Middletown, Conn.

One of the members of his history class, Waters B. Day, now the dignified president of a New Jersey trust company, was then manager of The Wesleyan Argus, the college weekly newspaper; and his duties in getting out the paper on Wednesday afternoons always made him a half hour late at the history class, for which he had secured the proper standing excuse. One Wednesday on his way up the college hill to Professor Wilson's classroom, late as usual, he passed an Italian organ-grinder leading a monkey on a string; and the brilliant idea occurred to him that Professor Wilson's class ought to be serenaded. The Italian's eyes fairly bulged when Day handed him a shining twenty-five cent piece and told him to wait for five minutes and then play a tune under yonder window and make the monkey climb up to the room on the vines outside.

Full of glee over the fun in store for everybody, Day marched into the classroom rather jauntily. But before he had taken his seat the whole class was in an uproar of laughter. He turned around to see what had happened; and there—just inside the door, near the professor's desk—stood Italian, monkey and organ, on which the tousled artist began to grind forth one of the popular ditties of the day. The poor, old Italian had not understood a word of Day's instructions, except that he was to play a tune for the benefit of the classroom. Of course, the class howled at this. But Professor Wilson tried his best to look stern, and in stentorian tones exclaimed: "Day, take that fellow out of here at once!" The senior obeyed meekly and took him by the arm to push him out. But the Italian's feelings were wounded, and he turned on Day: "You give me quarter and tell me play. I play!" And once more he whirled the handle of the organ for a few more wheezing measures. Finally Day managed with a show of indignation to get the fellow out and to close the door, and he scampered back to his seat about as confusedly as possible. All through the recitation he was on pins and needles; for, to make matters worse, he had not prepared his recitation that day, and throughout the rest of the hour he was afraid that the professor would call on him to recite and make a monkey out of him. But Wilson was generous and saved the culprit further embarrassment just then. At the close of the class-hour, Day realized that he must do something to set matters right with Professor Wilson. So he conjured forth from his brain some imagined perplexity about a point in the history lesson. After the class had left the room he went up to the professor's desk and asked him some diverting questions. Wilson looked at him quizzically for a moment, and with a twinkle in his eyes said to him:

"Day, why this sudden interest in the subject of history? I strongly suspect if that Italian had not marched in here with his organ and monkey, you wouldn't have asked that question. But, if this prank has served to increase your interest in the work of my classroom and the subject of history in general, I shall be greatly delighted, and we'll call our account square."

Many a professor would have insisted on a man being disciplined for such a prank, but Wilson treated his students like men, and gained all the more respect from them on that account. One of his Wesleyan students once put it this way: "Every man in his class felt inspired to do his very best, not because of any exhortation or threat, or even suggestion, from Wilson himself, but from the very atmosphere of his personality; not a feeling of fear of consequences was present, but a feeling that you were ashamed if you were not at your best."

The two college years at Middletown, Conn., when he was professor of History and Political Economy at Wesleyan University, marked a period in his life of great literary activity and mental development. But the restraints of later dignities had not yet been laid upon him, and in some of his enthusiasms he was still thoroughly youthful. At one of the Varsity football games on the Wesleyan campus last fall a prominent graduate of twenty-six years ago was recalling memories of his old professor and expressed himself in this way: "My most vivid recollection of Woodrow Wilson was a tall, thin man running up and down these very side-lines during the afternoon's football practice, waving his closed umbrella in the air and cheering encouragement at the top of his lungs to the team on almost every play!"

The Wit of the Classroom.

In the classroom, however, there was nothing boyish about this enthusiastic new member of the faculty. Professor Wilson was a man among men. He never treated his students like school boys. Without losing his sense of humor, he had a happy fashion of dealing with them always as men, and insisting that they must always act as such.

Withal he was not averse to introducing a sparkling humor into his lectures or into the recitation hours. He rarely told a funny story, but spontaneous, witty remarks were not the exception. Perhaps this explains why the college annual, Olla Podrida, '91, contained in its department "As in a Looking-Glass" this thinly veiled allusion to him:

Prof. W-i-n.

Within the limit of becoming mirth

I never spent an hour's talk withal.

Once when the class was discussing the "persistence of the Ego" and one Junior was on his feet, reciting, Wilson naively asked him:

"Now, Mr. Abbott, are you not the same man you were last year—only with a few modern improvements?"

The whole class, professor, too, enjoyed a roar of laughter at this sally.

Once the laugh was at Wilson's expense; and it came at the very first recitation of one of his classes, when he was making up the roll of the class. There was a man in the class by the name of Noe (pronounced as two syllables); and when the professor came to his name, he pronounced it with only one syllable. The possessor of the name arose and courteously corrected him, giving it with two syllables, No-e. With some embarrassment because of the mistake, Professor Wilson proceeded with the roll until he came to the name Roe. Not wishing to be caught this time, he pronounced it Ro-e, with two syllables. The laughter was so violent this time that it was a half minute before Roe could explain to the blushing professor that he belonged to the one-syllable category.

One morning, not many months after the birth of their daughter, Eleanor (now Mrs. McAdoo), Professor Wilson entered the history class with a sleepy look on his face and prefaced his lecture with this remark:

"Gentlemen, if I do not lecture with my wonted brilliancy today, it will be because since three o'clock this morning I have been walking the floor with my baby."

And now that he is walking the floor with the many problems that have been born since he became President, one wonders that he is able now and then to lecture with his "wonted brilliancy."

Representation in Church Courts.

(Continued from page 9)

for every addition of five ministers or major fraction thereof, the figures for the Synod of Alabama would be as follows:

The Presbytery of East Alabama would send 7 ministers, 21 elders; the Presbytery of Mobile would send 6 ministers, 13 elders; the Presbytery of North Alabama would send 13 ministers, 25 elders; the Presbytery of Tuscaloosa would send 9 ministers, 21 elders; and Synod would be composed 35 ministers, 80 elders, instead of, as now, a possible 93 ministers, 219 elders. Omitting details, the Synod of Missouri would have 43 ministers, 76 elders, instead of, as now, a possible 97 ministers, 141 elders. The Synod of South Carolina would have 66 ministers, 120 elders, instead of, as now, a possible 165 ministers, 291 elders.

These cases will serve as illustrations even though the basic figures five to nine and the major fractions should not be adopted even if the overture should be.

Under the proposed overture the size of the General Assembly need not be very much changed, though it may be increased or diminished as an ad interim committee, after full consideration, may determine. Giving to every Synod at least seven commissioners of each class, and one additional commissioner of each class for every two Presbyteries above three, the General Assembly would consist of 260 commissioners. If eight of each class were allotted to every Presbytery, with the same additions as just stated, the Assembly would number 294 commissioners.

It should be noted that if it should be preferred to have Synods composed of an equal number of ministers and ruling elders as the case now is with the General Assembly; then, on the ratio of five ministers to nine sessions, each Presbytery would be allowed a minimum number of five ministers and five elders, and one of each class in addition for every additional five ministers and nine elders. On this supposition the Synod of Alabama would have 35 ministers and 42 elders; the Synod of Missouri would have 43 ministers and 40 elders; the difference being due to the fact that in neither case is the ratio of ministers to sessions precisely five to nine.

A final reason for a decrease in the number of members composing the Synods and the General Assembly may be found in the decrease in the cost of travel and entertainment. This is well worthy of consideration when a decrease in cost will promote increase of efficiency. What is needed just now is less money spent on machinery and more on direct aggressive work; less friction and more steam.

St. Louis, Mo.

Mountain Places of Prayer.

Both in the life of Moses and in the life of Christ, mountains were the scene of many of the most signal events of their histories. Like two rivers, the secrets of their power are up among the silent hills. Horeb, with its flaming bush, Sinai's rugged peaks, invested with dark clouds of the divine glory, Pisgah, commanding the extended landscape of Canaan's fertile valleys and fruitful slopes, and Nebo, where he went up to die, are mountains that correspond in the life of Moses to Hattin and Hermon, the lowly Calvary and beautiful Olivet, in the life of Christ. It was on these meeting places of earth and heaven far above all noise and din of men, that Moses so often spoke with God, and received strength for his arduous mission, and it was in the solitude of the hills—not rugged, fire-colored, beetling cliffs like those of the desert, but hills mantled with foliage, around whose breast the vine threw her tendrils, and on whose brow the olive and the pine held the harp of their branches to the winds—it was in the solitude of such hills that the Son of Man wrestled in his nightly prayer, and held those deep communings with his Father which renewed his strength. God has dignified those grand temples, eloquent in silence, with events far more sublime than their own majesty, and far more awe-inspiring than their own stupendous forms.—James Hastings, D.D.

Mission Talk From a Layman.

By M. M. Inabinet.

OF all the things our church is playing with is Foreign Missions and Home Missions also for that matter. Now, we are writing not to disparage our intensive campaign nor belittle our work in this particular, but what we are wanting to emphasize is, what we are not doing.

When we look at the work we are not doing for Foreign Missions from a comparative standpoint, then we can see that we are doing barely anything. We are making much more headway than did our forefathers, for many of them lived and died and never had an opportunity to contribute to Foreign Missions, but when we take into consideration the vastly increased wealth of our own Southland and the first-hand information we can get from our Foreign workers we see that our efforts are as nothing almost. When we put on a campaign for funds to increase our work we are willing to increase without any inconvenience to us, but is that doing from the heart what we ought for our Lord in His work. With all the wealth of our church and its membership interested and consecrated, we could have a missionary supported from almost every one of our churches. Some will say that times may change but if we will trust the Lord with our substance in this way we need not fear that we won't have to give what we promised to his cause and more left for ourselves. The one great reason why we are not interested more is that we won't inform ourselves in this important work just because we won't take the time. We have many good and up-to-date books on mission work and then, too, we have the exceedingly good magazine, the Missionary Survey, to read, and if we will read only the magazine we will be bound to get interested. Of all the important work for us not to neglect is this matter of Foreign and Home missions, as it makes the world safe for people to live in, breaks down error of all kinds and sets our own consciences free as a living and dying proposition.

The question will naturally arise, what are we living for anyway? Well, we will say that it is not intended that we live for self alone and our immediate families but to glorify God also, and do you know any better way than to get enough of Him in you to make you trust him with many dollars of your money and much of your time in prayer for yourself and others. As seen always as we begin to pray for our missionaries the Spirit will suggest to us to pray first for ourself and then go on out to the ends of the world. We men and women should beware of building new barns when our old ones would do and let this overflow go to the Lord's work which would help to extend His kingdom and would win many stars in our crown for having been instruments in converting souls to Him. Ours not to go is the lighter task, are we willing to take it up when others are out taking the burden and the heat of the day. May the Lord's Spirit work in our hearts that we may do His will in this matter as in all others.

McColl, S. C.

"Will Pastors Help in the Search?"

There is a desperate call from our mission stations abroad for several doctors, preachers and teachers to fill vacancies.

We earnestly beg our pastors to sound out this call from their pulpits in the hope that some competent and consecrated young doctor or teacher in the audience may hear and respond.

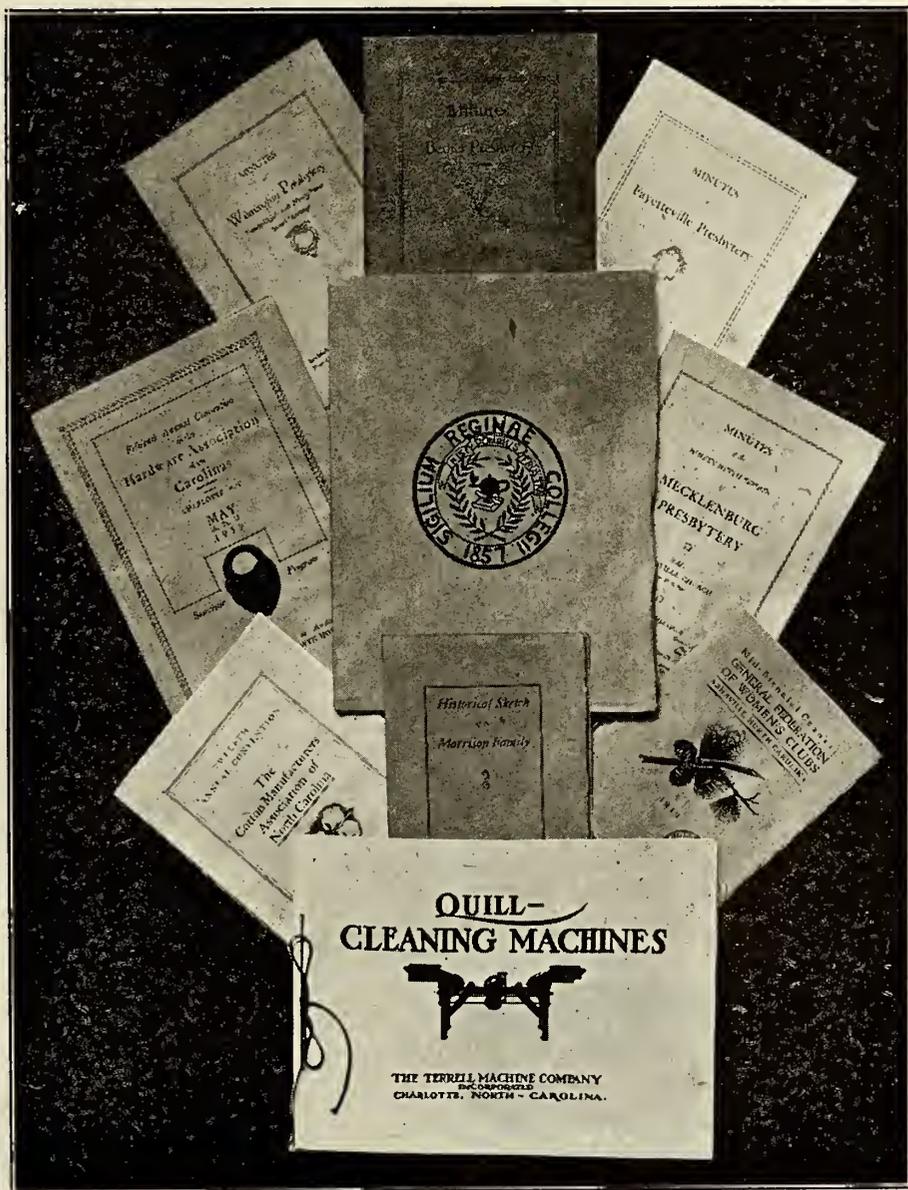

To the capable young minister himself we suggest the question, "Lord, is it I?" Egbert W. Smith.

Find your purpose and fling your life out to it; and the loftier your purpose is, the more sure you will be to make the world richer with every enrichment of yourself.—Phillips Brooks.

The answer to prayer may be, as it was to Paul, not the removal of the thorn, but, instead, a growing insight into its meaning and value.—J. F. Clarke.

OUR PRINTING DEPARTMENT

Is equipped to produce anything you may need in Printing, and do it to your entire satisfaction. We show below a photograph of a few of the Catalogues we have produced this season, as an evidence of the broad patronage we are receiving. The illustration does not do justice to the work; but if you are interested we will gladly furnish samples of any or all of them. We are prepared to handle this class of work promptly.

The lot includes four sets of Minutes of Proceedings of Wilmington, Bethel, Fayetteville and Mecklenburg Presbyteries; a 2-color Catalogue for the Hardware Association of the Carolinas; Queens College Annual; Convention Proceedings of the Cotton Manufacturers' Association of N. C.; a Historical Sketch of the Morrison Family; Program of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, and a Machinery Catalogue for Terrell Machine Co., of Charlotte.

We have received words of commendation, and letters expressing thorough satisfaction, from all of these customers. If you use anything printed, get in touch with us, no matter where you live. WE ARE PRINTING FOR CONCERNS IN SEVEN STATES NOW.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD PUBLISHING CO.

216 NORTH TRYON ST.

Phone 643

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Miscellaneous

SAMUEL GOMPERS.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, is given by many journals a place second only to that of President Wilson in the influence he wields over American affairs. The Literary Digest has gathered some very interesting material concerning this remarkable man and his rise to a place of extraordinary power. We quote from its columns as follows: "Beginning with the beginning, the Boston Post, on January 27 of this year, presented this piquant contrast: Sixty years ago today, Queen Victoria received word that she was a grandmother, and that the baby has been named Wilhelm. And sixty-nine years ago today, a poor woman in London, Gompers by name, had a baby boy, and she named him Samuel. What insane treason Queen Victoria would have considered it if somebody had predicted, sixty years ago, that the year 1919 would find her grandson a trembling outcast with none so poor to do him reverence; while that other child (so poor at the age of ten that he was put to work in a factory) would sit in council with the rulers of nations, deciding the fate of empires." He came to America when he was thirteen years old. He recently revisited the White chapel district of London where he was born and bred. He also did a few other things. He shook hands with kings in their palaces and relieved the worries of prime ministers. The English government gave him a dinner with Lloyd George present to pay tribute. That's Sam Gompers—a Jew, born of a people who have no home country on the face of the globe, but who through a life of devotion, culminating in the International Labor Commission, has been a benefactor to all nations by bettering the working conditions of that great spread of humanity that comes closest to the fundamentals of life. All his life a student and active worker for social betterment, he has persistently fought against Socialism and for trade-unionism on this principle; trade-unionism means, he believes, rational progress and development of society, that does not come by leaps and bounds. The Socialists, on the other hand, would have everything at once, a grab rather than a work for principle; and that kind of progress, Mr. Gompers says, brings rebounds and reactions." Will P. Kennedy, whom we have quoted above, says the American Federation of Labor stands as a monument to Gompers' single purpose. "There has been with Gompers no dissipation of forces, nothing but the intense concentration of this strong mind and indomitable will upon a living, growing movement that, well managed, could improve the world, but allowed to go rampant would cause untold suffering through the ages." Mr. Gompers states his position in McClure's Magazine in these words: "I stand in so far as I can and dare—and I dare much—for the principles of natural and rational development and growth. I am opposed, as is organized labor of America, to any destructive policy. There is nothing worth while maintaining that I would aid or abet in destroying. Our policy, our work, our method, our ideas and our ideals are to build, to construct, to grow, to help in the development of the highest and best in the human family; to make today a better day than yesterday, to make tomorrow a better day than today. That evolutionary process of progress and improvement is the basis for the opportunity for freedom, justice and democracy." Mr. Gompers threw the weight of his influence against prohibition, but we hope that the actual blessings derived from prohibition by all classes, shall work an entire change in the stand and opinion of Mr. Gompers. His leadership of the labor forces has been in the main of a sane and able character. His services during the late war were undoubtedly of incalculable benefit to this government and to the allied powers. In crucial times he occupies a position of tremendous potentialities for either good or evil. Let us pray for him that God may speak through him.—United Presbyterian.

THE THING TO DO.

They were watching beside the bedside of their only child—a beautiful young girl whom the parents idolized—who had been very ill and who was now failing rapidly. The doctor believed that the end was near and his significant glance acquainted the father with this fact. Quietly leading the mother to the adjoining room, the father expressed his fears to her. At first she was rebellious saying, "I will not give her up! She must not die!" "But," says the husband, "we are Christians, we believe God gave us the child. Can we not leave her in His care and trust Him to do what is best?" After a moment or two of hesitation, the mother became quiet and said, "Yes, that is the thing to do."

They knelt in prayer and, feeling that God had given them the child and had a right to take her to Himself if He thought best, commended her and themselves to His wisdom and love and thus found the rest of faith that quieted

You are invited to call and see our fall offerings in "Queen Anne," "William and Mary," "Louis VI," "Italian Renaissance," "Colonial," and "Artcraft" Dining Room Suits in the three most popular woods—American Walnut, Fumed Oak and Mahogany

W. T. McCOY & CO.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

their fears and comforted their hearts. Just then the physician opened the door and motioned them to come, saying that, although the chill of death had seemed to be upon the child, she had suddenly given indications of a change for the better and there was hope of her recovery.

The parents had not prayed for her recovery; they had prayed that they themselves might find strength and grace for whatever God in His love saw was best for them and for the child and had unreservedly given her into His hand. Was not the recovery of the child God's acceptance of their sincere act of consecration, seeing they could now be trusted to more fully realize that she was His gift to them and was to be trained by them for His glory? May it not be that the loving Father sometimes takes the young children to Himself again lest the parents in their idolizing love might fail to properly train them for Him? If children are dedicated to Him in true consecration and confidence, He can be trusted to do only that which is best, for His wisdom is infinite and His love unchanging.—
Presbyterian Witness.

THE VICTIM OF MISCELLANY

I am at present unable to trace the phrase, but I am almost sure it was used by Emerson about himself: "a victim of miscellany, miscellany of design and vast debility." Men are not always at their best in their own self-judgments, and it may be that Emerson was not deserving of this severe verdict which he passed upon himself. But the phrase suggests a very grave peril into which countless thousands have fallen. Their life has been swayed by no sovereign purpose, no lofty dominating control. It has been fragmentary and discordant, like an orchestra where every instrument plays a separate piece. The victim of miscellany is one who has many fires lit but not one is blazing. He has multiplicity of interests but no commanding enthusiasm. He toys with a thousand opinions, but he has no supreme conviction. He has a throng of flirtations, but he is not taken captive by any overwhelming affection. There is no great white throne, no supreme sovereignty that brings everything under the rule of one sceptre. Instead of being the strong and fascinated captive of a great quest he is the weak victim of miscellany.

Now in the religious life there are souls whose devotion is distributed thinly over many things. If we inspect any side of their spiritual service we find the liberated energy about the same as it is on any other side. There is no force in it, no drive, no tremendous power of "getting there." Everything is slightly aired, but nothing burns. There is not heat enough to burn a trail through intricate forests of difficulty. It is as though the contents of a smoldering fire had been distributed, one ember here and another there, but nothing giving enough heat to kindle an irresistible blaze. It is the want of a supreme passion that makes everything dull and dim. The soul must be possessed of some one overwhelming devotion if its life is to be safe and progressive. And in the Christian life this overwhelming devotion is love for the Lord Jesus Christ. It is only when we are truly captivated that we are really captured, and it is only when we are captured that we can go forth into the highways and byways and bring in the passing pilgrims into the Lover's feast. It is only when we are "all captive" to the Saviour that we find the secret of freedom that we are able to render glorious service. The victim of miscellany is distinguished by vast debility, while the captive of the Lord can do all things in Him who strengthened him.

The victim of miscellany never reaches the deepest springs of joy. All his waters are surface pools. They are not the everlasting fountains gushing from the everlasting hills. In any realm of life it is only a supreme passion that finds the deepest wells of joy. It is so in music. It is so in art. It is so in religion. The great lovers of the Lord find the secret place, and with joy they draw out of the wells of salvation. "Thou, O Christ, art all I want!" When that great word of Charles Wesley expresses the single passion of the heart a man is traveling on the highway of the Lord, and he will not waste his treasure in scattered indolence. He will go from grace to grace, from strength to strength, and from glory to glory.—

John H. Jowett, D.D., in the British Weekly.

WANTED—Young man as book-keeper, with knowledge of music and public singing. Address X, Care Presbyterian Standard.

"THE SANITARY" Individual Communion CUPS
List of thousands of churches using our cups and FREE CATALOG with quotations sent upon request.
Sanitary Communion Outfit Co., 71st St., Rochester, N. Y.

TEACHERS: Can place you now $60 to $150. Fifty to hundred urgent calls daily, best schools and colleges. Special enrollment. Three offices: Columbia, Chattanooga, Richmond. Write today.
SOUTHERN TEACHERS' AGENCY, Columbia, S. C.

The McCallie School
A HOME SCHOOL FOR BOYS
Able men train boys for college. Individual attention 1,000 feet elevation. Big athletic field. All sports. Swimming. Boating. Military drill. Honor System. Boys live in Masters' homes, under their personal guidance. Ad'ress
Headmasters: S. J. & J. P. McCallie
Missionary Ridge, Chattanooga, Tenn.

Cancer Treated Successfully at the Kellam Hospital

The record of Kellam Hospital is without parallel in history, having restored, without the use of the Knife, Acids, X-Ray or Radium, over ninety per cent. of the many hundreds of sufferers from cancer which it has treated during the past twenty-two years. We want every man and woman in the United States to know what we are doing.

KELLAM HOSPITAL, 1617 W. Main St., Richmond, Va.

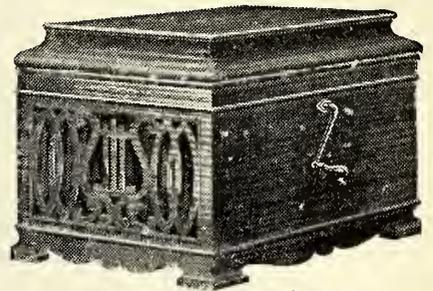

Ladies, Attention! Here is an offer that will bring joy to the hearts of the Crochet and Tatting workers. Complete Crochet Library; just think of 1354 Standard Original Designs, all illustrated by actual photographs with complete directions for working.
No. 9 Yokes, Corset Covers and Nightgowns 16 cents
" 11 Tatting, Waists, etc. - - - 16 cents
" 13 Towels, Slips, Sheets - - - 16 cents
" 12 Patchwork for Quilts, etc. - - - 28 cents
contents, 29 designs for Quilts. Send stamps.
LACLEDE BOOK CO. 816 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

Kentucky Theological Seminary
Louisville, Kentucky

Able faculty. Course of study comprehensive and adapted to the times. High standards. Practical training. Excellent library facilities. Splendid buildings, with comfortable dormitories. Expenses moderate. Session begins October 1, 1919. For further information write the President.

Charles R. Hemphill

THOMAS Individual Cups
Used by over 35,000 churches. Clean and Sanitary. Send for catalog and special offer. Trial free.
Thomas Communion Service Co. Box 111 Lima, Ohio

10 Cents a Day Pays for This Symphonola

Plays all records, Victor, Columbia, Edison, Pathe, Little Wonder, Emerson. Take a year to pay, after 30 days' trial. Compare its tone for clearness, volume, with more costly instruments. Return at our expense if it fails to make good. Ask today for the
Beautifully Illustrated Symphonola Book FREE
Shows this and other Symphonola styles, sold on easy payments.
Symphonola Records Get our list of the latest popular song and other clear sounding, full toned disc records. Playable on any phonograph.
Carkia Co. Desk JPS-1019, Buffalo, N. Y.

You can now obtain direct by parcel post our famous

Caricol Tea

Millions of pounds of this famous Martindale blend have been sold to the discriminating Philadelphia trade. A blend of several selected growths, it has its own distinctive flavor that is delightful in the cup, hot or when iced. A wonderful tea value that gives you satisfaction and saves money.

Send for a trial package with which we will enclose a list of other Martindale specialties that you can order by parcel post.

Parcel post cost prepaid by us to any point within the fourth zone (from Savannah northward).

1 lb. 55c. 5 lbs. $2.35

THOMAS MARTINDALE & CO.
10th & Market Sts. - Philadelphia, Pa.

EAT SLOWLY, DR. RUCKER WARNS.

Girls eat irregularly, too fast and without the proper regard to the rules of diet. Such is the pronouncement of Dr. Augusta Rucker, director of the division of health of the social education department, Young Women's Christian Association.

Next to faulty eating, lack of proper exercise plays the most havoc with girls' health nowadays, says Dr. Rucker. Her plan is to establish Health Centers all over the country, where girls and business women can be examined and advised in health matters and where they may, if they wish, inroll in classes for gymnasium work which will be given with a special thought toward corrective exercises. The purpose of the center is "To keep women well."

A model Health Center has been opened in New York City. Examinations are made from 12 until 10 p. m. daily in order to accommodate business women. No fees are charged. Any woman may go in to be examined. Dr. Florence Meredith, who has recently made medical examinations at Wellesley College and at a Boston factory where 3,500 women were employed, is directing the center.

"There is a vital need for educating women to a proper valuation of their health," Dr. Rucker says. "In examining women of the National Board of the Young Women's Christian Association I have found that out of 414 women not one measured up to normal. These are intelligent women who are supposed to be fairly representative of health ideals.

"It is important for the industrial girl to be able to say not only what she can do today, but with a fair degree of certainty what she will be able to do one year or two years from today. If she comes to us comparatively well, and follows our instructions, she will be able to keep her health and to improve it. For that reason industrial girls will be the first consideration at the Health Center.

"In examining factory girls and college girls, I have found that there is no great difference in their conditions. It is true that one has been under a mental strain and the other under a physical strain, but I have found that the girl who is delicately brought up has not the chances of one who has had to rough it. The main thing that is wrong with both classes of girls is their faulty eating.

THE 103-YEAR-OLD SON OF PRESIDENT MONROE.

The fifth President of the United States, James Monroe, had a son, Mjr. Edward James Monroe, who is still living and whose home is in Jacksonville, Fla. He is 103 years old. A recent issue of the American Magazine tells some interesting things about his life.

When war was declared on Germany he volunteered his services, but because of his advanced age was not accepted. Refused by the army, he made an effort to get in the shipbuilding forces of the United States when Hurley called for recruits for the shipyards. The story in the American continues in this manner:

"You boys don't think I can work. Just watch me pass rivets to that guy on the other side of the boat," said the major to me the other day. I watched him, and in spite of his years he showed that his eye was clear and his brain active, insuring unerring aim to the rivet catcher. All the children down by the river know and love the major, as do the grown-ups, too. Whenever there is sickness or distress in the neighborhood, the major is always there with a comforting smile and a story of how he keeps happy. The major made his livelihood, prior to entering the shipyards, by doing odd jobs for the residents of his section of the city; he also receives a small pension from the State in honor of his services during the Civil War.

His story of how he stays happy and care-free after losing three wives and eleven children, and the enjoyment he finds in consoling others, is always an encouragement to his hearers. Major Monroe says: "If you want to be happy, stay healthy by eating good food, and, above all, don't worry. Worry is the greatest killer of happiness there is. When trouble overtakes you, struggle hard to remember that others are in a worse fix than you—and smile and keep digging." Visitors are always welcome at his little hut, which is covered with vines and surrounded with a garden of flowers.—The Standard.

Plant Your Cotton Alleys

Make them produce
a profit as well as the rows. Plant
Clover

in your cotton alleys and take advantage of the large profits on hay, now selling around $60 per ton. It will save a season, double the yield of the crop following and build up your soil.

Inoculate your seed with NitrA-germ and be sure of a good profit.

READ THIS RECORD

"I purchased NitrA-germ for one acre alfalfa and four acres crimson clover last season. I wish to say my alfalfa is as near perfect as I could wish. I have already cut it three times and am sure of two more cuttings. I secured a good stand of clover and have corn planted on the land where the clover was sowed, and am certain I will make forty per cent. more corn on this land than I will on the land adjoining it, planted the same day where there was no clover. I am highly pleased with NitrA-germ for growing alfalfa and clover and expect to use more this season. I am sure that clover is the best and cheapest method of fertilizing land and I am equally sure that NitrA-germ will grow it."

MARION BRYANT, Wilson Co., N. C.

NitrA-germ costs $2 Per acre delivered.

Write for FREE Book No. J-6.

NitrA-Germ, Savannah, Ga.

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERSISERS
PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

WANTED: Young Men and Women

Let us train you for a good office position. We are placing Bookkeepers, Stenographers and office-trained graduates all over the country. We can place you, as we are in close touch with the business interests of this entire section. Write today.

Cecil's Business College

CECIL'S BUSINESS COLLEGE, Dept. R. P., SPARTANBURG, S. C.

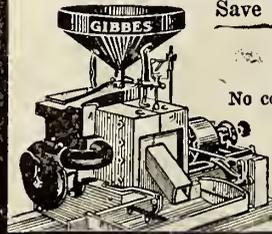

Rocky River Springs School For Boys

Thoroughly Christian. A Preparatory School for Boys. Moderate Cost: Fall term opens Sept. 23. Endorsed by Mecklenburg Presbytery.

For Announcement and Information, address
PROF. C. E. WELLS, Principal, AQUADALE, N. C.

Grind Your Corn the Simple Way

Delicate, Complicated Machinery is neither necessary nor economical. Save money in grinding your grain with—

The Gibbes Corn Mill

Simple—Fast—Economical—Durable

No complicated parts, whole machine easily handled. With ball-bearing system it is light running and rapid, requiring very little power. Little wear, smooth running, seldom a part to replace. Made of the best of materials. Absolutely guaranteed. For illustrated literature and prices address—

GIBBES MACHINERY CO., Dept. A-2, Columbia, S. C.

TO AVOID THE "FLU."

With physicians differing as to the probability of a recurrence of the influenza epidemic this year, the following suggestions sent out by the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, may well be followed by all:

- Avoid crowds.
- Stay away from anyone with a cough or cold.
- Drink plenty of fresh water.
- Sleep with the windows open.
- Stay in the open air and walk to your work.
- Eat three uniform meals a day and avoid a breakfast of mere coffee.
- Bathe frequently.
- Above all things keep cheerful.

What failure is like that of those who have been chastened and yet never softened; who have gone through the fire without learning the lesson; who have tasted the sorrow without the sympathy; who have borne the cross without the love?—Hugh Black.

WONDERFUL EGG PRODUCER.

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs, so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 3257 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1.00 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the tonic costs you nothing. Send a dollar today. Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

"In the A. E. F. With an Artist"

The sketch book and diary of Lieut. J. B. Mallard. Send $1.00 for your copy to

J. B. MALLARD

Box 625

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

YOUR FACE?
Is the Complexion Muddy, Tanned, Freckled?
If troubled with skin eruptions, sunburn, pimples, try
PALMER'S SKIN SUCCESS SOAP
It cleanses, softens and clears the skin and tends to remove sunburn, tan, freckles, blackheads, pimples and eczema.
Thoroughly antiseptic. Ask your druggist, or write for free samples to
THE MORGAN DRUG CO.,
1521 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

J. M. BELK, Monroe, N. C.

W. H. BELK, Charlotte, N. C.

BELK BROS.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

CAROLINA'S LEADING DEPARTMENT STORE

Our Stocks Now Complete With the New Fall Goods

We solicit your inquiries as to prices, styles, etc. Better still, we give you a most cordial invitation to visit our Big Department Store in Charlotte. We have 10 Big Floors loaded with High Class Merchandise—Dry Goods, Clothing, Shoes, Ready-to-Wear, Men's Furnishings, Household Goods, Trunks, Suit Cases,

Wholesale or Retail

We are now buying for 23 Stores in North and South Carolina. Our purchasing power certainly enables us to give you BETTER VALUES than ever. Helps us to give you very much better goods for your money. This is our ideal.

Our Stock of New Wool Dress Goods

Include Serges, Tricotines, Tricolette, Jerseys, Broadcloths, Velours, Plaid Skirtings, all size Checks, very popular and serviceable. Prices range, 36-in. goods, 50c, 75c, 98c; 52-in. goods, all wool, $1.50. The Novelties run from $2.98 to $4.95: New Silks, New Velvets, Velours, etc.

New Fall and Winter Blankets

Both Plain and Pretty Plaids, all sizes, single beds and double beds, ranging in prices, $2.98 for the double cotton to $15.00 pair, fine wool.

Men's Clothing

Schloss Bros., Hamberger, Belk Specials, in Serges, Worsteds, Flannels. Prices not any higher than last year—$16.50, $19.50, $22.50, $25.00, $29.50 to $39.50. These come in sizes up to 44. Can give you up to 54 for the very large men.

Write us or see us about the School Boys' Suits. We have a Juvenile Department. We pay especial attention to Suits for all ages. Boys' sizes, 7 to 18 years, pure Worsteds Suits, all new, $4.95, $6.95, $7.95, $8.95, $9.95; sizes 3 to 8—$2.98, $3.75, $4.95, $5.95, $6.95. Your money back for any Suit ordered from us that is not cheaper and better than you can buy.

Shoes for Men

Ralston, Health, Reynolds and Belk Special, "Queen Quality" and "Belk's Special Line" for Women, School Shoes for the Boys and Girls.

"Krieder's Pollyanna" Line for school wear, Goodyear Welts, all sizes, all leathers, made for looks and service, $3.50 to $6.00.

"Godman Line" for Boys and Girls, none better, all sizes, $2.50 to $4.00.

We devote our second floor to Ready-to-Wear. Our stocks are now ready. Come and see us. Always glad to show you. Our lines are correctly bought as to style and quality and our prices are less.

We send your money back promptly for any purchase from us not entirely satisfactory

WE HAVE THE NEW PICTORIAL PATTERNS
SEND US YOUR ORDERS

UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION

Announces Reduced Fares Via NORFOLK SOUTHERN RAILROAD to Atlanta, Ga., account United Confederate Veterans Reunion, October 7-10, 1919.

Tickets on sale daily, October 4 to 8, inclusive, final limit midnight October 31, 1919.

Stop-overs and side trips will be permitted within final limit of tickets under Tariff Regulations.

Inquire of or write to your nearest Ticket Agent.

Loyalty is of value to him to whom it is given, but far more valuable to him who gives it.

160 HENS—1500 EGGS.

Mrs. H. M. Patton, Waverly, Mo., writes: "I fed 2 boxes of 'More Eggs' and got 1500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly 21 days." This scientific tonic has made big egg profits for thousands of poultry raisers all over the U. S. It revitalizes the hens, tones them up and makes them lay all the time. Get ready now and make big profits out of your hens this winter. A $1.00 package will double the egg production and a million dollar bank guarantees to refund your money if you are not entirely satisfied. Send $1.00 now to E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, 3257 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., and get a season's supply of "More Eggs." Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

The resources of prayer have never been thoroughly tested.

Order a Hygienic Bed

26-lb., $10.20; 31-lb., $11.20; 36-lb., $12.10; 41-lb., $12.60; Pair 5-lb. Pillows, $1.80; 7-lb., $2.60; NEW FEATHERS—Best tick. We have $5.00 deposited in bank to guarantee satisfaction or money back. Order or write for catalogue today.

HYGIENIC BED CO., Dept. 16, Charlotte, N. C.

NEW SONG BOOKS

For Your Church

8c

A wonderful value; 83 familiar songs of the Gospel, words and music. Used all over the world. Only $8 per hundred for No. 1 or 2, round or shaped notes, and $15 for No. 1 and 2 combined, round notes only. Send 30c for samples. Money back if not pleased.

E. A. K. HACKETT, Dept. No. 56, FT. WAYNE, IND.

Aberdeen & Rockfish Railroad

Between Aberdeen and Fayetteville

Table with columns for Eastbound and Westbound services, including stations like Aberdeen, Raeford, and Fayetteville, and train numbers 22, 38, 41, 21.

WAGRAM BRANCH

Table for Wagram Branch with columns for Southbound and Northbound services, including stations Raeford and Wagram, and train numbers 11 and 12.

W. A. BLUE, General Supt., Aberdeen, N. C.

HOW TO KILL A MINISTER.

Tell others that you don't like him, but never tell him why. If you told him why you don't like him, he might show you wherein you were mistaken; then you would need to apologize to him for talking behind his back.

Criticise his sermons. Say he's too old-fashioned in his theology, or he's too liberal; his sermons are too long; he is too closely confined to his notes; he's tiresome, stupid, and monotonous. Never tell him his sermon helped you; that might make him puffed up.

Complain because he doesn't call as often as you think he ought to. Forget that he has several hundred other people to call upon, that he must prepare two sermons each week, must marry the living and bury the dead, and be all things to all men on all occasions, that he may win some.

Criticise his family, especially his wife. Say: "She takes up too much of his time, she tries to run the church, she is not in sympathy with his work, she has too many hats, she dresses too well, or not well enough."

Go to some other church because you don't like your own minister, and because the other minister is more sensational, more dramatic, more educated, more orthodox, more heterodox, more social, and more anything else that suits your fancy.

Always look for your minister's weakest points, never look for his strongest qualities. To look for his strongest qualities might mean to be convinced that with all his failings he has consecrated himself to the high calling of God for your salvation, that he has sacrificed a larger income for a mere living wage, and that he has cast in his life with the people of God to the end that men may come to a saving knowledge of the truth.

There is nothing else.—Newell Carroll Maynard, in Congregationalist and Advance.

WHAT 15 CENTS WILL DO It Brings You 13 Big Issues of Leading Illustrated Weekly Magazine of Nation's Capital.

Washington, D. C., Special—Profiteering has no place in the dealings of the Pathfinder with the American reading public. Its red-blooded editor produces a wonderful weekly magazine that already has more than a million readers, and in spite of the increased cost of paper, postage, labor and the advice of his friends, he refuses to withdraw his amazing offer to send the next 13 big weekly issues for 15 cents. He says it pays to invest in new friends.

The Pathfinder is indispensable, because it prints the news of the whole world and every issue is packed with uplift, inspiration, intimate American intertations of world events and entertainment. Fifteen cents mailed to the Pathfinder, 135 Douglass Street, Washington, D. C., will secure the next 13 big issues.

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

Spend a few minutes a day with Dr. Gray and get a new grip on your Bible

Let this man of God, with his keen insight, his ripe scholarship and his sure knowledge, reveal to you the mysteries of Prophecy, the wonders of Fulfillment, the vital relation of to-day's world events with the Divine plan for humanity. Let him, with the other distinguished members of the Moody Bible Institute faculty take you through a simple course of Bible study—by correspondence—specially prepared for Christian Herald readers. A few minutes a day of prayerful, thoughtful study will give you a new, a clearer, conception of the Will of the Ages; you will marvel at the ignorance which has blinded the eyes of the world to the Divine love and providence for restless, turbulent, unsatisfied humanity. Dr. James M. Gray and his associates of the Moody Bible Institute (Dr. Ralston, Prof. Fitzwater, Prof. Gosnell and Prof. Page) are to give the world, through the Christian Herald, a series of masterpieces of thoughtful, helpful, inspiring studies in the Book of Books.

How to join Dr. Gray's Bible Study Course

The Christian Herald has secured this correspondence course of twenty-four Bible Studies—prepared by Dr. James M. Gray, Dean of the Moody Bible Institute, and his associates. This course is priceless, but the Christian Herald, through the courtesy and with the co-operation of the Moody Bible Institute and its Faculty, is making it available for 500,000 earnest Christians, and offers the entire course, four studies each month for six months at the nominal price of one dollar to any new trial subscriber to the Christian Herald at one dollar for 6 months, (26 big issues) or two dollars in all.

The Christian Herald is the world's most widely read and loved religious family magazine. Beautifully illustrated in color, its 32 or more large pages are filled with the choicest, most inspiring, instructive and entertaining literature anywhere available for Christian people. The Christian Herald has been the means of sending millions upon millions of money, shiploads of food and clothing to starving and distressed humanity and is one of America's great institutions for service. A million and a quarter readers eagerly welcome its coming each week. A subscription to the Christian Herald is the greatest investment any Christian family can make in these days of doubtful and dangerous periodical literature. Fill out the coupon; all remittances, whether in $1 or $2 bills, checks or money orders at the Christian Herald's risk.

IMPORTANT—During the 26 weeks for $1.00 period, Grace Livingstone Hill's new and best serial story "Betty Hope" will appear complete in the Christian Herald in advance of its publication as a $1.50 book. This will be followed by another of those wonderful Courtenay Savage serials, entitled "Morning," also to appear as a $1.50 volume after Christian Herald subscribers have read it. This will give Christian Herald readers two gripping, wholesome stories without extra charge.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD 453 Bible House, New York

I wish to join the Christian Herald's correspondence course—twenty-four Bible studies—and to have my name entered as a six months' subscriber to the Christian Herald. I enclose $2.00 in full payment. ($1.00 for the correspondence course and $1.00 for this special six months' trial subscription.)

Name

Address

THE HOPELESS PUPIL.

A Sabbath-school teacher spoke to her pastor of one boy as hopeless. He said: "Wait and be patient." Sometimes it happens that pupils who were antagonistic or indifferent to all-teaching blossoms out in later years and gives credit to the teacher who was faithful when every effort seemed wasted. A discouraged country teacher who felt that her work was almost a failure was humiliated, encouraged and strengthened, all at once, when the very worst boy she had ever labored with suddenly turned from the error of his ways and announced that he meant to be a missionary in Africa. He only lived a few years in that dark country, but if he accomplished little there—looking at it from a human standpoint—he did great things for the little home Sabbath school that had once considered his case hopeless.—Ex.

EXCHANGE YOUR OLD BODY FOR A NEW ONE.

You can do it in three weeks and thereby renew your health. This article is written by a physician who has seen it demonstrated in numerous cases and explains how it is done.

Listen: If your weight is one hundred and thirty-three pounds your body contains eighty pounds of water, for according to standard medical books, the human body contains sixty-seven and a-half per cent of water. Now disease is invariably caused by impurities which we call poisons, and these are readily dissolved by the right kind of natural mineral water. Drink ten gallons (eighty pounds) of Shivar mineral water (use no other water for twenty-one days), and you will have exchanged your old body for a new one, so far as the soluble part of it is concerned. The impurities will be dissolved and pass away. If you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache, rheumatism, kidney or liver disease, uric acid poisoning, or other curable conditions due to impure blood, accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer which appears below. Read the following letter carefully; then sign and mail it:

Shivar Spring, Box 4-J, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month. Name Address Shipping Point

The Cross is a challenge to us all. It revolutionizes our view of things.—R. F. Horton.

FORTIFIED.

"Were you 'fortified' with liquor when you made that fight single-handed against the German machine-gun nests?" was the question put to Sergeant Alvin C. York, of Pall Mall, Tenn., when he visited the Centenary Celebration at Columbus.

"I was perfectly sober," said the giant Tennessean, "as I have been for years. I don't touch a drop, and haven't had a drop for five years. Liquor is no good."

On the same day and at the same place Lieutenant-Commander Albert C. Read, of the Navy, who commanded the N-C 4 in the pioneer flight across the Atlantic Ocean, was interviewed on the same subject. He had been describing the thoroughness with which preparations were made. No detail was overlooked which might contribute to success. Whatever seemed essential to the perfect working of the engine and the highest efficiency of the crew was provided, without considering expense. But alcohol was not included. He said that there had been no drinking of liquor by himself or any member of the crew while preparing for the flight or during its progress. On the contrary, as he dryly said, "Everything was done to make the flight a success."

This may seem like a belated delivery of ammunition for prohibition speeches. But the wise will stow it in their pouches. There is too much profit in the liquor business for the profiteers to abandon hope until the last nail is driven in the Barleycorn coffin. The heroes of the army and navy have furnished two serviceable nails!—N. Y. Advocate.

AVOID INFLUENZA AND PNEUMONIA By Using THE ORIGINAL GOWANS Rub-It-On 25c 50c $1.00 Especially good for Inflammation and Congestions. Reduces Fever, Helps the Heart. Send for Sample. Satisfaction guaranteed. Gowan Medical Company, Concord, N. C.

Old Garments Made to Last Another Season. One-half the clothes discarded each season are merely soiled, stained or out of shape. This clothing can be made to last another season and to look as good as new by our Faultless Dry Cleaning Process. All spots and stains are removed. All dirt is extracted from the fibre of the fabric, and the lustre and perfect shape of the new garment is restored without the slightest injury to the most delicate fabrics or shades of color.

It Saves Money. You can effect a very great saving by having your clothes cleaned and renewed by our faultless dry cleaning process. The more the price of clothing advances, the more money you will save, and you will have the advantage of always looking neat. Prompt Service by Parcel Post. All mail orders are handled promptly. You will be surprised to learn how quickly your clothes will be returned. We pay return postage. Guarantee of Satisfaction. Your money is promptly refunded if you are not delighted with the results of our cleaning process. Send your garments or write for prices and learn how cheaply we make old clothes look like new.

The Charlotte Laundry, Charlotte, N. C. OLDEST LARGEST BEST

F A U L T L E S S D R Y C L E A N I N G

Sparkles

The lads in the primary class had just been given a little talk on architecture. When the teacher had finished she asked:

"Is there any one in the class who can tell me what a buttress is?"

Whereupon one boy arose and answered eagerly, "Yes, Miss Jones, I can. A buttress is a nanny goat."—Harper's.

Guest: "How much did you get out of your car?" Owner: "Well, I think seven times in one mile is my record."—Milestones.

Otherwise Correct.

A man who was visiting in a down-east town was charged by rumor with dragging his wife from a certain meeting and compelling her to return home with him. The man let the story travel until he had a fair opportunity to give it a broadside, and then he replied in the local paper, as follows:

"In the first place, I never attempted to influence my wife in her views nor her choice of a meeting.

"Second, my wife did not attend the meeting in question.

"In the third place, I did not attend the meeting myself.

"To conclude, neither my wife nor myself had any inclination to go to the meeting.

"Finally, I never had a wife."—Selected.

First Student—"The idea; my napkin is damp!" Second Student—"Perhaps, because there is so much due out of it."

Order of Hymnic Red

Heydon the six-year-old son of Heydon W. Buchanan, accompanied his mother to the office of Dr. (Capt.) S. O. Leak, recently discharged from military service. Observing the doctor re-enter his private office after giving counsel, the boy inquired: "Mother, why do you call him 'captain?' Don't you see, it says 'private' on the door?"—Indianapolis News.

An attorney was examining a witness to ask him about the case, to which the witness replied:

"He was a man without blame, beloved and respected by all, pure in all his thoughts, and—"

"How did you learn that?" demanded the judge.

"I read it on his tombstone," was the disconcerting reply. — Los Angeles Times.

"What's that unearthly noise upstairs?"

"Dr. Binks, the painless dentist, has the salesman who sold him that fake oil stock in his chair, and is doing some real drilling."—Life.

THE WESTMINSTER SCHOOL

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Operated by Kings Mountain Presbytery $300.00 Per Year

Write for Catalogue to

Rev. T. E. P. Woods, Box 6, Rutherfordton, N. C.

4 Per Cent

Time Certificates of Deposit

They are Interest Bearing. They are Payable on Demand. They Afford a Good Income for Funds Awaiting Permanent Investment

GET ONE

AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY

Charlotte

::

North Carolina

YES, Preachers and Teachers Are Human

They should have no discount and no cheaper railroad fares than you and I. They should be paid for services rendered—amply paid. If he can't earn enough for family use and the nest egg for the future, he made a sad mistake as to family, else he should change his calling instanter.

The Mutual Building & Loan

Will save a man and his family if they're worth saving, but they must help. It furnishes the "sure cure," but boasts no regrets at the demise of a feller who deliberately refuses to take the medicine.

E. L. KEESLER, Sec. & Treas., 25 S. Tryon St., CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Charlotte National Bank Resources $4,000,000.00

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

PAYS FOUR PER CENT.

On Either Time Certificates of Deposit or Savings Accounts

MAIL ORDER Business Solicited and PROMPT ATTENTION Given

- | | |
|-----------------|-------------------|
| JOHN M. SCOTT | President |
| W. J. CHAMBERS | Vice-President |
| J. F. ROBERTSON | Vice-President |
| W. H. TWITTY | Cashier |
| C. W. BUTT | Assistant Cashier |

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

REV. J. R. BRIDGES, D. D.

EDITORS

REV. R. C. REED, D. D.

VOL. LX.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., OCTOBER 15, 1919.

No. 41

Rally Day Echoes

Reports indicate the Sunday Schools made a splendid response to the challenge to "Light the Southland," and we believe the final advices will show

$40,000 contributed by Sunday Schools
350,000 enrolled in our schools

We want at once for inviting fields

Twelve Sunday School Workers

Living salaries provided and unlimited opportunity for service Capable laymen and efficient women are sought for this work.

GILBERT GLASS

SUPERINTENDENT SUNDAY SCHOOL EXTENSION DEPARTMENT

Box 1176, RICHMOND, VA.

Editorial

Guiding the Synods.

SO humble is our opinion of ourselves that we should have thought it a little assumptious in us to attempt to guide the Synods in the selection of men to constitute the Committee on Union. But dear Brother Ogden has volunteered for this task, and from this we conclude that it would not be assumptious. We know him to be a modest and unassuming man, and what he does others may do without danger of censure.

Brother Ogden does not wish Federal union; nor does he wish "Simon pure" organic union. He wishes a tertium quid—a something a little closer than Federation and not quite so close as "Simon pure" organic union. If constrained to name the object of his desire, we suppose he would call it organic union that is not "Simon pure." If he could secure the appointment of a committee in sympathy with his views, its work would be cut out for it, namely, to define very distinctly what is meant by "Simon pure" and then seek a union with that obnoxious quality eliminated.

What is the issue before the Synods? Dr. Ogden suggests that it is the question of union. Unquestionably, but this is not a new issue. Precisely the same issue has been before the Church from time to time these many years. He apprehends that some Synods may not be willing to face the issue, and predicts that in such a case the Synod will "indicate that attitude by electing to membership on the committee men who, so far as this matter is concerned, have closed minds."

We do not think there is any ground for such apprehension as is here expressed. Our Church has never shown an unwillingness to face the issue. In the distant past, when fraternal relations was the question at issue our Church took the initiative. It proposed a most kindly and Christian basis on which the two Churches could come together. Our sister Church, in the very act of accepting the basis, gave us a slap in the face by attacking a qualification, known as the Herrick Johnson Rider. From that day forward, we have responded promptly and fraternally to every overture made to us. In efforts to arrange modes of comity and cooperation, our Church has met its big sister more than half way. And in all attempts to form closer relations we have shown a gracious readiness to do our part.

To cite recent instances, when the Rochester Assembly proposed a conference to adjust difficulties which had arisen on the overlapping border, our Church entered the conference in a spirit of genuine conciliation. The two committees in conference smoothed out the difficulties, and united in a joint report to their respective Assemblies. When the report was presented to the Assembly of our sister Church it was altered by an "explanation" which emasculated it, and as a result the friction on the border has not been removed.

In response to a telegram from the Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. our Assembly in Birmingham appointed a committee of conference on union. When the committees met for conference, there was a full and frank discussion of union, both organic and federal. It was made perfectly clear to both committees that the Assemblies could not unite on either plan. They agreed therefore in a spirit of perfect fairness to report both plans, and let the Assemblies voice their judgments with the plans before them. This the Assemblies did. Negotiations might very properly have ended here. But the Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. asked for their continuance. Our Assembly, with the same Christian courtesy that it has ever shown, readily granted the request. Further conference resulted in an agreement of the committees on a plan of federal union. They parted with the distinct and explicit understanding that each committee would recommend the plan to its Assembly and urge its acceptance. Our committee carried out this agreement. The committee of the other Church reported to its Assembly recommending an entirely different action. On this recommendation the Assembly, summarily brushing aside the work of the committees of conference, asked our Assembly to continue negotiations with a view to arranging a more satisfactory plan of union. Surely our Assembly would have been excusable for declining this request. But with its accustomed patience and forbearance and a Christian courtesy that knows no limits it agreed to take up once again the apparently hopeless task.

Any survey that does justice to our history will show that since 1870, when the first overtures were made to us by our sister Church, we have never hesitated to face fairly and squarely the issue of union. We have always dealt frankly and honestly with our brethren. When they have disappointed our reasonable expectations, and have shown us scant courtesy, we have persisted in going the full length of what is required by a genuine Christian spirit.

It is suggested that the Synods should put "strong, forward looking men" on the proposed committee of conference. A very eminent statesman once said, at a critical period of our political history: "I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience. I know of no way of judging the future but by the past." It may be the part of wisdom for our Synods to put on the committee some backward looking men. In some quarters it is believed that "hindsight is better than foresight."

A Willing Apology.

In our issue of September 10, we had an editorial dealing with the appointment to a chair in the McCormick Seminary of Rev. Dr. John H. Boyd, at one time pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of this city. The editorial was based upon an article in the Philadelphia Presbyterian, which quoted a letter from a McCormick alumnus who in turn quoted from the bulletin of the church of which Dr. Boyd was pastor. The writer also quoted from Dr. Boyd's farewell sermon on July 13, when he resigned to accept his present position. These quotations proved beyond any shadow of doubt that his views were far removed from our standard of orthodoxy.

We took no pleasure in thus giving circulation to these charges, for Dr. Boyd has many friends here who loved him, but we were influenced by the conviction that, in these times when the younger men in our Church are being swept away by the statement that doctrinally there is no difference between the Northern and Southern Church, we should lay before them every instance where this difference is pronounced.

We learn from a private letter of Dr. Boyd to a friend that the words quoted were not his, and that he never saw them until they appeared in the Presbyterian of Philadelphia. We, in common with his friends here, rejoice that they do not express his views, and to quote his own words in the letter, "They express an idea alien to my life-long message." Comparing the words of Dr. Boyd with those of the alumnus of McCormick, it is evident that "some one has blundered." However, it will give pleasure to his many admirers here to know that he still holds to the old faith.

A Lesson From Other Churches.

We have our Saviour's word for it that the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light, which is only another way of saying that the children of light can learn much from the children of the world. While this is true, it is also worthy of belief that the children of light can sometimes learn from each other, because some are wiser in their generation than others. The Presbyterians have been described as "the Lord's foolish people," therefore they should not be offended if we assure them that they can learn some things from our Methodist and Baptist brethren, who, however short they may be, the one on the doctrine of grace and the other on the mode of baptism, are certainly long on worldly wisdom and the art of reaching all of their people. Each of these great churches is just now engaged in raising a sum of money that reminds one of the modest requests of the Government during the war days, when men thought and spoke in millions and billions. They wisely reasoned that the only hope of success lay in their ability to reach each family in the Church and enlist their interest.

The pulpit would not do, because the pulpit could only reach the churchgoers, and the church papers would not answer because the church papers, as they were, only reached a limited number. They needed a messenger who would enter every home and who would constantly press this great cause upon them. Their final plan was to get the pastors to place the church papers in every home, not by weak and half hearted appeals, but by personal visits by committees, by insistant following up, with the result that the papers of these two great denominations are building up their subscription lists, while the cause presented is getting hold of the people in a way never dreamed of.

On October 26, which is Good Literature Day, the Methodists of the North propose to turn it into "Advocate Day," when they will launch a canvass for new subscribers. The pastors will be required to see that every home has a paper, and where the members are unable to subscribe, the paper will be given them by the Centenary Committee. We believe that if our own committees would use a part of their funds to place one of the three church papers in every home, and then use the papers for making their appeal, the outlay would be justified by the increased giving, and each pastor would see the effect in the renewed interest among his people.

Unjust Criticism.

In reading and listening to the criticisms of the League of Nations and the Versailles Conference, we have been forcibly impressed by the spirit of unfairness in these criticisms. It would seem that the critics are only anxious to find something bad and not the good; and in more than one instance they have demanded the impossible as well as the unreasonable. It is the right of every citizen to scrutinize this League and to point out its weak spots, if he can find them. He should, however, do so with an open mind as well as an open eye and he should demand of those taking part nothing except what is reasonable.

There are many who, like Jehu of old, are anxious for men to see their zeal for the Lord, so they will have nothing to do with the League because heathen Japan participated in it, and also because at the peace table there was no recognition of God. These critics actually lifted up their hands in holy horror and with unctuous piety they have drawn their skirts about them.

This country in the past has made more than one treaty with heathen Japan as well as heathen China, yet these same critics never protested. When these representatives of the great powers of the world conferred together in order to insure the peace of the world, some representing the evangelical religion of England and America, some the belief or rather unbelief of skeptical France, or the distorted truths of Romanism, or the heathenism of Japan, it would not have been wise or reasonable to introduce any more disturbing elements than were already there.

While there was, it is true, no formal recognition of God at the conference, yet it is undeniably true that the spirit of the gospel was manifested, at least in the part that America played. President Wilson was too wise to thrust such a question to the front, but he quietly laid down in his fourteen points the very essence of the gospel.

Union, But Not Unity.

Many years ago a beloved fellow minister, a member of the Episcopal ministry, in describing the difference between the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches, said that the Presbyterian door was so narrow that no man who thought for himself could squeeze through, while the Episcopal door was broad enough to give entrance to any one. Our reply was that when the man did squeeze through the Presbyterian door into our ministry he was ushered into a wide room where he had more liberty than in any other church. He could wear what clothes he preferred, he could read for his Scripture lesson any part of the Bible he chose; he could invite any evangelical minister to occupy his pulpit; and he could invite to the Lord's table any one who loved the Lord, without reference to the bishop's hands or the mode of baptism.

On the contrary the wide door of which he boasted opened into a narrow, straight jacket of a room, where he was the slave of canons, canon to right of him, canon to left of him, volleyed and thundered. This wide door of which our friend was so proud makes strange bed-fellows, and often brings about unpleasant situations. In the Philippines since Bishop Brent resigned to enter army work, Bishop Graves of China has been acting as bishop of the Philippines.

He found that the appointee of Bishop Brent in his work among the Igorrotes had been teaching Romish doctrines, such as the adoration of Mary, the reservation of the sacrament for worship with a light burning before it, and the singing of "Hail Mary." He questioned these innovations, but Bishop Brent has assumed all responsibility for what has been taught and asks to be tried in place of his appointees. One of these appointees in a letter insists that these practices are in accord with the past practices of the Episcopal Church, and that there can be no progress unless one of the two parties yield.

He claims that these objectionable doctrines have transformed men who not many years ago were naked, head-hunting savages into civilized Christians. He concludes his letter with these words: "Many and all the saints are on our side, praying with us and for us." Between the earnest, evangelical low churchmen, such as are found in Virginia and these imitators of Rome, there is a great difference, and it is remarkable that the Church sheltered two such opposite schools these many years.

Reformation Day---October 26.

By action of our General Assembly, our pastors will observe October 26 as "Reformation Day" and will have as their subject "The Edict of Nantes." The offerings of that day are to be for the benefit of the French and Belgian Relief for War Work.

It is proposed that the Presbyterians of this country raise $3,000,000, of which our share will be $100,000. In addition to this we are asked to give $25,000 for war work. These contributions are to be sent to Mr. A. N. Sharp, 1522 Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga., with a statement of the object for which the money is given. Dr. James I. Vance is chairman of the War Work Council.

Contributed

Why Aren't the Young Men at Church?

By Rev. Andrew J. Howell.

I have just read an article under this heading in the October number of a very popular journal, and am reminded of the fact that, within the past two or three years, I have read quite a number of articles with similar titles and similar meanings. Whatever the titles may have been, the authors seemed to say that the churches and ministers of the day are archaic and stubbornly set to certain ways, so that they are not at all interesting young men, and our heroes of the war must turn away from them because they get nothing to stimulate their manly hearts.

The writer of the article expresses great disappointment in his attendance upon his first morning and evening services in his home church after coming out of the army. In the morning the minister preached on Jesus's trust in God, by which he overcame difficulties, the sermon being concluded by an appeal for his hearers to approximate Christ's certainty of God's Fatherhood. In the evening he preached on the "Gospel of God, the Gospel of Grace, the Gospel of Christ." Among the points which stuck in the young man's memory were: "A man is not saved by works, but by the grace of God." And, "I wonder if we are going to be ashamed of God now in times of peace, after having been so dependent upon Him in time of war." At night there were four young men besides himself in attendance, and they were with girls, and the remainder of the audience was made up of old men and women. I wonder if, in thus giving his inventory of the congregation, he did not overlook some persons in age between the girls and boys and the old folks. There are generally a few of such persons, at least, in a congregation.

The young man complained that the diet he received in church was of a "mush-and-milk" variety, which did not satisfy the "grit" in his system. "I find myself," he says, "restless and ready for anything which holds the smack of adventure in it. I recognize that Christ lived a life saturated with thrills, and yet the interpretations I hear are that Christ's life was full of disappointments." He looks in vain, also, to the church for practical suggestions as to the workings of the "New Democracy," and finds it silent as to great questions of social unrest. The central arraignment is, "The church seems to take the position that its job is to make the world reverberate with the universal truth contained within the pages of its Gospel, and by successive reverberation of these truths to so fill the world that men will unconsciously find solutions for their problems in the saturated atmosphere."

The fact is, from my observation, that this young man's views, and the views of others who have written in similar strain, do not at all reflect the mental attitude of the average young man who has been in the army and who has returned to his home and church. For six or seven months I was in an army camp in the Y. M. C. A. service, and found that our young men training for service and returning from service abroad were the same men they were before, except that they had passed through an experience which had left its indelible mark upon them. If anything, the boys from overseas thought more highly than ever of the church and religion they left to go to war for their country. They had a great desire to go back to them. The hardships of army life and the shock of battle did not drive this away from them. Of course, there were men, and plenty of them, who did not care for anything religious, apparently, but would gladly attend a Sunday morning service introduced by a lively band concert and followed by another concert, especially if the chaplain's sermon in between was short, and his words beautiful and sentiments fine. This made up some "thrills," which probably old men and old women would not have enjoyed, but which might satisfy young men who do not go to church.

I fear the influence of such an article as I have quoted from has had an unconscious effect upon many of us, especially upon us ministers. We have been trained to "preach the Word," to hold up "Jesus Christ and Him crucified," and to touch the heart and mind by the deeper appeals of the Gospel. And, as we read the Bible, we are impressed more and more with the spiritual aspect of our work and messages, and as to this a large part of our congregations agree with us. Yet, we are told that we must change our methods of thinking and preaching so as to meet new demands made upon us by the change in the times.

How to bring about such a revolution without doing violence to our understanding of our work, and without ignoring the interpretation of our duty, gotten from the Bible, to preach faith in Christ and Christian character as the basis of all proper relationships, is a problem that is hard to solve. And should we want to do it? As for myself, I am quite sure that the demands which some persons make of the pulpit, that it become "modernized" and "more practical" and instructive as to political and social questions, would soon weaken its influence and shear it of its power to save souls. But so often this idea of a new adjustment of our preaching is thrown at us! Are not the spiritual messages of the Gospel its highest messages, and, if these are delivered in the spirit of Christ, will not the lesser matters take care of themselves, so far as ministers and churches are concerned.

Now, "Why aren't the young men at church?" If they are not at church, I am persuaded that it is their fault and not the fault of the church, that they are blinded to their own spiritual needs and to the true mission of the Christian church. And, even if a majority of the young men of our day are (which I seriously doubt), like the one who wrote the article, not satisfied with anything but "thrills" and current questions in church, I think sober thought will convince many of them that a quiet Gospel which inspired in their fathers a Christian character and gave them a hope of eternal life should be quite sufficient for their sons.

I am quite certain, however, that the young man does not really reflect the views of very many of his age, and that he does an injustice to them. And I am equally certain that there is no minister who would not appreciate the good will of the young men about him and their opinion that he is trying his best to do his duty in preaching the Gospel as he thinks it ought to be preached.

It would we well for our Christian people to give little heed to such articles as I have referred to. And it would be well for them to unite in prayer that God would revive a spirit of true religion among His people which would be of special blessing and help to our young men, whose strength should be given to the upbuilding of the church.

Latta, S. C.

At the Cross Roads.

By Grace Hazard Conkling.

He was a little Belgian lad
Whom war had somehow failed to mar.
Almost a baby face he had,
Bewildered now and vaguely sad.
"Where are you going in the wind
And rain? And must you travel far?"
He said, "I've started out to find
The country where the mothers are."

—Selected.

Dr. Lingle on Fundamental Principles

By Rev. Jno. M. Wells, D.D.

I HAVE read with a great deal of interest Dr. Walter L. Lingle's article in the Standard, published on the 24th, but just seen by me.

I always enjoy what the Doctor writes. His style is so clear and straightforward. His discussion of a thing is apt to be vigorous and illuminating. He speaks from Union Seminary (in Virginia, not in New York), name trusted and honored. And he tries so very hard to be fair and without prepossessions in everything he writes. These and many other things make his articles very interesting. So I read his article and I enjoyed his article. It even made me forget certain pains that were making life a burden at that time.

And I found when I got to the closing part of the article that the distinguished professor is not so far from my own way of thinking.

I agree heartily with him that "there are differences between the Northern and Southern Presbyterian Churches."

I agree that "the time has not come for immediate organic union and may never come."

I, too, recognize that the two churches "are not homogeneous."

When he says, "We have not yet come to such a spirit of unity as would justify union," if he means organic union, my study of the church leads me to believe that he is clearly correct. But if he will by the term union mean federal union, and widen its scope to take in all the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, I believe we have already the spirit of unity that would justify that form of union.

So I rejoiced to find at the close of the article such eminently safe and sane and wise conclusions.

But though his conclusions were good there were at least two things in the body of the article that surprised me. I am only a busy pastor, and have not the cloistered seclusion and academic ease that would permit the reading and re-reading of the original documents on which our early history is based. So I will voice my surprise not in arguments but in questions. I am sure the answer to these questions will give me the light that I am seeking.

1. The professor says:

"After all, the place to look for the fundamental principles of a Church is in its doctrinal standards and not in its occasional deliverances." But are the fundamental principles of a Church in its written doctrinal standards alone? Are they not often in the individual interpretations of these standards?

For instance: If I am correctly informed the Protestant Episcopal Church still holds the thirty-nine articles as a part of its "Doctrinal Standards." The seventeenth article is as clear in its Calvinism as the corresponding passages in our own confession. And yet nine out of every ten of their ministers are, I think, Arminians. The fundamental principles in the standards of the two Churches here are the same. The fundamental principles held by the ministers of the Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches are "fundamentally" different. Here we find out the "fundamental principles" through the individual deliverances of their ministers, and not from the standards.

Now I take it that the distinguished professor, from his position, recognizes the tremendous importance of sound teaching to Seminary students. He himself rings as clear as a bell doctrinally. If I told him that there were professors in the seminaries of a Church that held higher criticism in its most dangerously destructive form; that denied absolutely the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures; and that were teaching the future minister of that Church to hold such views, would he regard it as "fundamental" to that Church?

If I told him that there were professors in the Seminaries of a Church who held to a very attenuated moral theory of the atonement, and taught the future ministers of that church to absolutely reject any vicarious or substitutionary theory of that supreme fact, would he regard this as "fundamental?"

In short, must we not know the way in which a Church is teaching its doctrines and holding its doctrines, and not merely printing its doctrines in standards, to know what the "fundamental principles" of a Church are?

2. My second surprise was in regard to "the Gardiner Spring Resolution."

Dr. Lingle says:

"First of all, there has never been anything else exactly like the Gardiner Spring Resolution." Literally this is of course correct. No two noses in all the world are said to be exactly alike. But does he mean that the Assemblies of 1862, 1863, 1864, and possibly other years, did not make similar deliverances? And does he mean that the New School Assemblies of 1861, 1862, 1863, 1864 and 1865 did not make similar deliverances? And does he recall the telegram from the Moderator of the Northern Assembly in 1882, specifically exempting "actions of preceding Assemblies concerning loyalty and rebellion" from the withdrawal of offensive expressions?

Does not the Northern Presbyterian Church still claim the right "to decide where the allegiance of Presbyterians belongs?"

And if in the coming days there should be here in our land two de facto governments, one labor and the other capital (God forbid the possibility), what is to prevent a Church holding to such a claim, from touching the match of a political deliverance to the magazine, and blowing the Church again into fragments?

Dr. Lingle adds further that "the Gardiner Spring Resolution was simply a deliverance of an Assembly, and did not become a law of the Church."

Does he mean this? As to the exact words of those resolutions he is probably correct. But does he mean that the principle of deciding for Presbyterians where their political allegiance belonged that is the heart of the Spring resolutions, did not become law at that time? Let us see. How may or does an in these deliverance become law? If I understand our system it is when a theoretical opinion comes before a court of our Church as a concrete case for decision. When such a case is decided, what was before merely opinion becomes a law. It is then binding upon the Church.

Our law says: "Every decision which is made by any church court except the highest, is subject to the review of a superior court, and may be brought before it by general review and control, reference, appeal or complaint."

Does Dr. Lingle mean to say that there are no judicial decisions covering the questions at issue in the Spring Resolutions?

How about the action of the General Assembly of 1865? The minutes of the Synod of Kentucky were before the Assembly for judicial review, and this exception was taken:

"That the Synod has wholly failed to make any deliverance during the past year calculated to sustain and encourage our government in its efforts to suppress a most extensive, wanton and wicked rebellion, aiming at nothing short of the life of the nation."

Here is a whole Synod receiving the Assembly's reprimand for not passing resolutions against rebellion. Here your theory passes into law. Does the Doctor recall the censure that was passed upon the Synod of Missouri for protesting against the Spring resolutions? Here again the theory passes into law.

Does the Doctor recall the case of the complaint of Rev. A. M. Cowan against the Presbytery of Sydney when that Presbytery had refused to enroll him because he has signed the "Declaration and Testimony" and refused to sign the declaration prescribed by the Assembly of 1867 making loyalty a test of membership? Here again by refusing to sus-

(Continued on page 8)

In Memoriam

LIEUT. LEE CAMPBELL TAIT was born on September 29, 1892, at Cotton Hill, in Fayette County, West Virginia, the son of Mr. John J. and Mrs. Elizabeth Tait.

He came to Alderson, W. Va., when about twelve years old and attended the Allegheny Collegiate Institute, to prepare himself for college. He also went one year to Woodbury Forest Academy in Virginia. He then entered Hampden Sidney College in Virginia, where he graduated with the degree of A. B.

LIEUT. LEE C. TAIT

He taught one year in the McCallie School at Chattanooga, Tenn. He then entered Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va., to prepare himself for the ministry.

He volunteered and entered the military training camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, where he was commissioned as first lieutenant.

He was married December 4, 1918, to Miss Ruth Sloan, and in May following he went to France, where he won for himself distinction and the devotion of his command in service and in battle. He was wounded on November 2 and died November 12, 1918.

The following is the testimony of his commander-in-chief:

"In Memory of Lee C. Tait, First Lieutenant, 354th Infantry, Who Died November 12, 1918."

"He bravely laid down his life for the cause of his country. His name will ever remain fresh in the hearts of his friends and comrades. The record of his honorable service will be preserved in the archives of the American Expeditionary Forces.

(Signed) "John J. Pershing, Commander-in-Chief."

In awarding diplomas to the graduating class at Union Seminary, Dr. Moore, the president of the Seminary, said: "There is another member of this class, who, if he had lived, would have reached his diploma and degree today along with his classmates, but who has already finished his earthly ministry and received his heavenly crown: Lee Campbell Tait, of Alderson, W. Va.

The audience will rise.

Four Men Needed for Industrial Work in Our African Mission.

At the meeting of the Executive Committee in September the African Mission was requested to submit a building program for the mission, including missionary residences, school buildings, hospitals and buildings for industrial work. The mission was also requested to indicate the order in which the buildings should be erected and to present an estimate of the cost of each building.

Following this action it was also resolved that a call should be issued for four industrial men to go to Africa for a term of years, to train the natives and direct the construction of houses in accordance with the building program after it has been submitted and approved.

We would be glad to correspond with any young men

To the memory of Lieutenant Lee Campbell Tait, A.B., graduate of Hampden-Sidney College, student in Union Theological Seminary of the class of 1919, soldier of his country, Company 8, West Virginia Infantry, and Soldier of the Cross, who was mortally wounded by shrapnel on the last day of the war and who died on the following day, November 12, 1918, with a smile on his face, we pay this tribute of admiration and love.

The military funeral was held for him on November 13 in the little American hospital cemetery just outside of the city of Nantes, which the French women keep bright and gay with flowers from their own gardens as a tribute to the men who have given their lives on French soil for the common cause, and as an expression of their sympathy for the American wives and mothers at home who cannot perform this last service of love themselves. The grave is marked by a plain white cross bearing his name. The liberty of the world was won in part with his blood, and future generations will owe to him a measure of all that life holds of good for them.

The soul of believers are at their death made perfect in holiness and do immediately pass into glory, and their bodies still being united to Christ do rest in their graves till the resurrection.

"Soldier of Christ; well done,
Praise be thy new employ,
And while eternal ages run,
Rest in thy Saviour's joy."

He leaves a wife and a son, born January 29, 1919, a father, mother and sister, with a host of friends to mourn his departure from the walks of life.

REV. W. H. ROWE

Rev. W. H. Rowe, of the Presbytery of Mobile, while heroically engaged in Y. M. C. A. work with the United States army in France, died from pneumonia over there, January 12, 1919. Mr. Rowe was a graduate of Beloit College and of the Yale Seminary. He was pastor of the church at Citronelle, Ala., for nine years.

qualified for this kind of work and who would be willing to undertake it in a true missionary spirit.

S. H. Chester, Secretary,
P. O. Box 330, Nashville, Tenn.

"O prophet souls, who with bruised feet have trod
The heaven-lit heights and thence to us have brought
Your wider vision, your higher-hearted faith,
Your hope for man, your larger thought of God—
We wear your edelweiss: life's common lot
Ever to your high service witnesseth!"

The mental faculties cannot do the work that belongs to the spiritual, and therefore, we cannot think our way into faith.

The doubt that is an interrogation may be a blessing, but if it is a determination, it is a curse.—E. J. Brown.

Our Brethren in France and Belgium

By James I. Good.

HAVING just returned from France and Belgium, we are compelled to say of those lands as did the Queen of Sheba: "The half hath not been told," only it is not the half of glory as was Solomon's, but the half of the wretchedness and desolation of France and Belgium. The destruction is greater than can be described. The war zone extends over 300 miles from Ostend on the North Sea to the Swiss border and varies in width from ten to fifty or more miles. All that great stretch of country covering more than 10,000 square miles in area is largely a desolation. Its fields have been ploughed up or pockmarked by shells or burst open by explosions or dug up in trenches. Hundreds of thousands of feet of barbed wire of No Man's Land still lie in the fields to annoy the farmer. Much of the land has been rendered useless by the kind of gases or shells used, "sown in salt," as was the city of Jericho of old. Much of it can for many years be used only as pasture land, although the diligent French peasants are already ploughing and sowing some of it. And the cities and towns, what shall we say of them? The destruction in them is simply appalling. In some places whole towns and cities as Dixmude and Ypres are not merely destroyed, but they are pulverized—reduced to dust—not a house left standing only a wall or two. At other places, as at Lens, the great coal city which the Germans so maliciously destroyed, there is not a house standing in that city of 30,000. We stood on the hillock composed of what was once the splendid Catholic Church there, and saw for several miles around us, nothing but a forest of upturned joists and broken roofs—everything so utterly destroyed that they could not at first find even the street where the Presbyterian Church was, as the streets had been filled up with the rubbish from the houses. But at other places there is less destruction though hundreds of houses are more or less destroyed. Rheims was under bombardment for four years and its beautiful cathedral is a mere shadow of its former self. The same is true of Verdun, St. Quentin and many other places. The whole war zone is, to use an old Scripture expression, an "abomination of desolation." And yet there are people living there, thousands of them. Some have been living there through all the bombardments. Thousands more of refugees have come back and are still coming back home, even if there is not a home to come back to. We saw them living in stables in Belgium and in cellars in Lens, for they had nowhere else to go. In summer it may be possible for them to live thus, but what they will do next winter in the terrible rains and awful cold is a grave question. Doubtless thousands of them will die of disease because of insufficient housing. Switzerland is gathering old clothing to send to them for the winter. We are probably too far away to do that, but we can send money. The great generous heart of America has always been touched by the wants of other nations and we believe they will be moved by the story of this distress. For these war devastated regions and peoples will need help for some years to come.

We must also speak of the Protestants of those lands, almost all of whom belong to the Presbyterian family. They, like their land, are in great need. About seventy-five church buildings in France have been either totally or partially destroyed and a half a dozen more in Belgium. Their property loss in churches, asylums, manses, etc., was set last winter at three millions of dollars. But since then more ruined churches have been found so that the cost of rebuilding will be greater. Yet in all their trials these brethren worshipped, sometimes in cellars as at Rheims. Of the 900 Protestant pastors in France, half of them went into the army in 1914. Their departure left many congregations pastorless, except as their wives sometimes held services. Twenty-five Reformed ministers and evangelists have been killed, as have been 26 theological students—a terrible loss to a ministry already so depleted. Many of the ministers have come back in very bad health. About twenty-five ministers lost everything they had in the destruction of their manses. As their salary is not more than $750, they are now in deep poverty. One of them, Rev. Mr. Frater, of Courtrai, Belgium, told me that when he went back to Courtrai, he found the Germans had carted everything out of his manse to Germany. He said: "I am an old man over seventy and poor in my old age." He was deeply touched by the twenty dollars sent him by American Christians and was very thankful. Only fifteen hundred dollars will repair his church (a bomb knocked a hole in one side of it) and his manse, but till this is done he has no home. As he is an old Scotch clergyman, his case appeals especially to Presbyterians. He has a congregation of 60 Flemish converts from Catholicism, very active and earnest. He has just written to me: "The Catholics are getting help to repair their churches but I get nothing." Many other illustrations could be given were there time. But what we have said is enough. Shall we not aid these suffering brethren of our own faith,

Before closing may we especially recommend to the Southern Presbyterian Church a city and congregation that came especially under our notice—the Presbyterian Church at St. Quentin. St. Quentin was a city of about 70,000 before the war; now it is largely in ruins. It stood right in the centre of the war zone and suffered terribly. Many houses are utterly destroyed, though many are still standing but uninhabitable. The Protestant congregation there was a strong and very active one. It was very evangelistic. When the McAll Mission some years ago was compelled to give up two of its halls at St. Quentin, this congregation took charge of them and successfully carried on their work. But alas, their church is now so injured that it cannot be used and the halls are destroyed. We worshipped with them in the Sunday school room next door to the church, but it was too small for the congregation. When all the refugees come back it will be entirely too small. To rebuild that church will cost about $25,000, the halls will cost $13,000 and the manse $4,000. Would it be suggesting too much to the Southern Presbyterian church to take this live active congregation under its care and put it on its feet? Its future is assured, for it is surrounded by a number of country congregations which will continually feed it. It has an active Sunday school and a fine body of boy scouts. It is a very important Protestant centre, right in the middle of the war zone. When we were there, the mayor of the city said to us: "But for the help of the American Relief Commission, under Mr. Hoover, half of the people of our city would have starved." We gave them food for their bodies. Shall we now refuse to give them food for their souls.

We rejoice that the Southern Presbyterian Church will try to raise $100,000 for France and Belgium on the last Sunday in October. May the Lord greatly bless you in doing so. And may you find that the blessing that you are thus giving to France and Belgium is coming back to you in ten-fold measure.

An Autumn Fantasy.

By John Jordan Douglass.

The emerald leaves ere long shall gleam with gold;
The wild geese soon will seek the Southern seas;
The treasures of the woodland are unrolled
When winter whispers in the autumn breeze.

Each shining stream bears autumn's argosy
Out to the deep with spread of purple sail;
And summer seeks to set her spirits free,
Ere her last rose is scattered by the gale.

So with our life when winter's sheeted ghost
Creeps like a guest that enters in too soon;
Hope sets her sails toward some dim distant coast—
While autumn's fingers sweep the harp of June.
Wadesboro, N. C.

Is There No Difference?

WHEN public sentiment is divided on any great question the best of friends sometimes find themselves on opposite sides. But the fact that they are friends gives assurance that they will discuss the matters at issue on their merits, with candor and good feeling. It was a surprise and disappointment to me to find that on the vital question of Church union there was a wide difference of view between my brother, Dr. Lingle, and myself. In these times of confusion and unrest, of loose thought and loose morals, it is necessary to take a firm stand for principle and truth; and when one who occupies a prominent position in the Church makes the public declaration that he can see no great principle of the gospel or of Presbyterianism separating the Presbyterian Church of America, the statement cannot pass unchallenged.

In replying to some mild criticisms of his views, Dr. Lingle undertakes to draw a distinction between "great fundamental principles" and those that are otherwise. His distinction does not hold, for principles are in their very nature fundamental, and in meddling with principles one is meddling with fundamental things.

The difference between us, he says, is that he is talking about the present, and I about the past—the period between 1861 and 1870. I might be pardoned for speaking about that period, having been an active participator in the affairs of that time—a time when principles were thought to be worth contending for. But I was speaking of a much earlier period, that when the Great Lawgiver himself was on earth, and said "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's." In these divine words there was a great fundamental principle which was meant to separate forever in His Church, things secular and things sacred. Caesar is dead, and his empire, like the Southern Confederacy, has ceased to exist, but principles never die.

The Springs resolutions, for which my brother apologizes, were, he says, simply a deliverance of an Assembly. They were more than that—they were an express violation of the principle our Lord has so forcibly laid down; a violation of a law of the Confession of Faith founded on it; and one that was serious enough to disrupt the Church, which it did. It was a very peculiar situation, he says, and one that would probably never arise again. But if there have not been similar peculiar situations, there has been a Gardiner Spring in every Assembly since that day, and if any Charles Hodge to protest he has not spoken.

I will not tax the patience of the reader by following Dr. Lingle through all the windings of his argument, in which he brings in many things that have no direct bearing on the point at issue between us, which is that there are no great principles of the Gospel or of Presbyterianism separating the Presbyterian Churches, North and South. Let me only emphasize what I have already said.

Dr. Lingle knows the disastrous results of the plan of union between the Presbyterian and the Congregational Churches which introduced gross and fundamental errors into the United Church and which led to endless strife and to violent disruption in 1838. He knows that the doctrines and principles of the new school body which was expelled, were diametrically opposed to the orthodox teachings of the Westminster standards in their historic interpretation, and yet that body was received on their own terms by the Presbyterian Church U. S. A. and the two were consolidated into one Church with widely divergent views as to the interpretation of the standards. When Dr. VanDyke brought overtures of union to us in 1870 he said frankly that he did not urge reunion—that was impossible for the Church from which we had withdrawn at the beginning of the war was non-existent, having been merged with another into a new and different Church.

Dr. Lingle knows also how widely apart are the Westminster standards and those of the Cumberland Church which, while maintaining her distinctive principles and doctrines, was merged into the same Church. Here then is a great and influential Church which has practically eliminated the article in the Confession of Faith which declares for the spirituality of the Church, and put the seal of its approval on widely divergent interpretations of her standards.

I leave it to Dr. Lingle's genius to explain how this can be, and yet there be no great principle of the gospel or of Presbyterianism separating the Presbyterian Churches, North and South.

E. M. G.

Danville, Ky.

Some Lamentable Facts.

There are in the Presbyterian Church in the United States, according to the statistical reports of Presbyteries, found in the most recent minutes of the General Assembly, 340,344 communicants. Of this number 46,128 are reported by the churches as non-resident communicants. Just think of it!

The Presbyterian Church in the United States is made up of sixteen Synods, and the largest Synod in the whole Church, except the Synods of North Carolina and Virginia, is the Synod of Non-Resident Communicants—if we may designate them in that way.

Every single Synod in the Southern Presbyterian Church except the Synod of Louisiana has within its bounds a Presbytery of Non-Resident Communicants, if we may use that expression, larger than some other Presbytery within its bounds, and the Presbytery of Non-Resident Communicants in the Synod of Louisiana needs only four hundred and thirteen more to make it as large as the next smallest Presbytery.

What are the causes of this lamentable state of affairs? What can we do to change it? What will we do to change it? The Church should face this situation at once. We know the rule laid down in the Book of Church Order—but how many observe it? Recently a young minister said to a young couple: "May I write for your Church letters?" The young lady replied: "Doctor _____ advised us not to move our letters for a little while." The young minister replied: "Well, all I can say is this: the Doctor gave you poor advice."

Dr. Lingle on Fundamental Principles.

(Continued from page 5)

tain the complaint, the theory of the Spring resolutions was crystallized into law.

And if I had my library at hand (I am writing from the hospital), I think I could call his attention to a number of other cases in which the theory passed into law.

So when we look at the Spring resolutions and the principle involved, we see that it did not deal with a unique situation, but with one that may arise again. We see that it was not only the deliverance of an Assembly, and did become a part of the Church law of the Northern Church.

We see that while as an in thesi deliverance it was not itself a sufficient cause for separation as our first Assembly said; as soon as it became the law of that Church it was a sufficient ground for separation.

The lapses of our Church from this great principle have been wrong. And there is no nobler sphere of duty for a great professor of church history and polity than to instill in our young ministers that truth that the Spring resolutions and all political deliverances are wrong, dangerous and destructive.

Let us have spiritual unity. I believe a federal union is coming. But let us hold fast to that autonomy that will permit us to protect our doctrinal standards, that will enable us to keep a firm grasp upon the teaching in our theological seminaries, that is so vital to the life of our church, and that will allow us to keep clear of dangerous political alliances.

Union Seminary Opening, Richmond, Va.

THE one hundred and eighth session of the Seminary began October 1 with a large attendance. The feature of the occasion was the greatly increased number of matriculates. The attendance during the two preceding years had been considerably reduced by the war, but the new class this session is the largest that has been matriculated in many years. The enrollment thus far is seventy-one undergraduates and five post-graduates. Others are still to come in.

The Union Seminary Post of the American Legion, consisting of the students who were in the army during the war, has just been organized with twenty-four members.

The audience which gathered for the opening exercises filled the area of Watts Chapel and overflowed into the galleries. Besides residents of the community, it included the students of the Assembly's Training School, more than fifty in number, the ministers of the city, and a number of our foreign missionaries who are here for the purpose of pursuing certain special studies. It was gratifying to see all the seven professors present and in good health. With them on the platform were Mr. Wm. R. Miller, the secretary of the Board of Trustees, and Rev. Dr. Frank J. Brooke, of Romney, who offered the invocation. The faculty address was delivered by Dr. W. W. Moore, the president of the Seminary, who, after welcoming the students in cordial terms, spoke to them earnestly on "The Education of a Minister."

Buildings Provided.

The work on the Seminary's great Sunday school laboratory building, Schaufler Hall, was begun some weeks ago, and a portion of our beautiful campus is disfigured for the time being by these extensive building operations, but they are of course in order to still greater beauty and a still more perfect equipment in the near future. When this work is completed the institution will have on its campus a group of eleven handsome and substantial buildings which have probably never been surpassed in their adaptation to the uses of a working seminary. These buildings have been given to the institution by various benevolent people. And so the problem of an outfit for our oldest and largest seminary has been satisfactorily solved.

Support Funds Needed.

The question of equipment therefore is no longer an urgent question. But the question of maintenance is. The matter of gravest concern to the trustees is the support fund for the payment of current expenses. This has always been inadequate even in the days of relatively small attendance and low cost of living. With our greatly increased attendance and the present high cost of living the problem has become acute. The attention of our people is most earnestly called to this need. The seminary is in distress for lack of funds to meet its running expenses. The health and efficiency of our professors and students is involved. The professors cannot live on the salaries paid them. They have to supplement their salaries by doing other kinds of work. The students, too, have to be boarded at modest rates. How can they be properly nourished at the prices which they have heretofore paid when the cost of all supplies has so greatly increased? Is the church willing to have this state of things continue at the institution which furnishes so large a proportion of its ministers and missionaries?

Surely our people at large do not realize that the seminary is in straits. Some congregations and individuals do realize it and they give us generous and steady help. For instance, the Ladies' Society of one of our churches in the Synod of Virginia sends us $300 every year. Other churches and individuals also have given liberally for the relief of our distress. But most of our people have not yet realized that the most important agency of our church is handicapped by lack of funds, that some of our candidates for the ministry who ought to be in the seminary are engaged in other lines of work trying to make money to defray their seminary expenses, and that those who are in the seminary can not be kept there in reasonable health and comfort unless there is a prompt and substantial increase in our support fund. Remembering what the seminary means to every part of the church's work, will not all our congregations come to its help in this time of need? And will not individual stewards of God send contributions in cash or Liberty Bonds, or supplies for the boarding department, to enable the seminary to do its work this year without a deficit?

There is special need of a large increase in the permanent scholarship funds, the proceeds of which are used to enable the students to meet living expenses. Several of our friends are building up such memorial scholarships gradually by contributing $100 each year, hoping eventually to accumulate $1,000 for each of these scholarships, the interest to be used in helping worthy students. We trust that many other Christian people, who may not heretofore have known how great the need is, will adopt the same plan and thus free the seminary permanently from the embarrassments which so grievously hamper its work. One of our kind friends who helped a student through the three years' course has just written us a letter in which he says: "I have always felt that this has been my most successful investment both in the results and in the satisfaction it has given me." The writer then offers to make the same provision for some other student.

Finally, we beg leave to say that this appeal is made at this time at the request of one of our Christian women, in a distant town, who happened to hear that the seminary was insufficiently financed for the current year, and who says: "It would do the church good to feel this need and minister to it. We do not hear enough about the seminary. We need to be informed. When I think of what the nation did for our soldiers—the meatless and wheatless days the people endured because they understood—I am persuaded the church will do no less for its soldiers when it understands."

A Card From Mr. Garth.

Dear Standard:

As I near restoration of the limb which was broken on December 7 while in Y. M. C. A. war service at Camp Greene, I desire to express some sentiments, if you will give me space. First, I am grateful to God for His tender mercies, and His wonderful providence over me and mine during this severe period. I am more than grateful; I am amazed. Next, I wish to speak of the excellence of the services received at the Presbyterian Hospital from the management and the nurses, accompanied as it was with tokens of real sympathy and friendship during the whole of the five and a half months spent there. Again, and possibly, I may be excused if I speak with much feeling, I wish to refer with gratitude to the two remarkable operations performed under the skill and guidance of Dr. R. L. Gibbon, the first, the plating of the bones so as to avoid a serious shortening of the leg, the second, the grafting of the leg by means of a six-inch piece of bone, of a finger's breadth, taken from the right tibia and placed in the broken femur of the left, a wonderfully delicate and successful operation. In this Dr. Gibbon was assisted in a masterful way by Dr. W. S. Scruggs, a surgeon who was with the forces overseas in France, and had an extensive experience in bonegrafting. Dr. Scruggs is now located in Charlotte.

In addition to these things, I would like all my friends who have shown their sympathy and concern to know of my appreciation, and for my brethren in the ministry to know it is my hope and purpose to now take up renewed service in the kingdom as God shall lead.

Cordially,

Charlotte, Oct. 10.

J. G. Garth.

News of the Week

The Council of National Defense, seeking to find the cause of the high cost of living, attributes it largely to under production. It advises closer co-operation and elimination of profiteering.

The British railway strike, which brought the country almost to the brink of revolution, suddenly ended through a compromise.

The big conference in which labor, capital and the public met in Washington last week, some progress has been made, but it is yet too early to pass judgment upon its results.

At Washington, Ga., last week a mob killed one negro and whipped two. The cause of the riot was the killing of the deputy sheriff by a negro.

The Massachusetts Republicans endorse Lodge, but rebuked his fight on the Treaty.

Senator Walsh, of Massachusetts, Democrat, about whose position was doubt, has come out against the Treaty. This can be explained by the fact that the Irish are Democrats, and this is a bid for their vote.

In Phillips County, Arkansas, there has been revealed a horrible plot on the part of negroes to wipe out the white population. An extensive courier system to sound call to arms has been discovered. In one negro school at Pine Bluff 50,000 rounds of ammunition was discovered.

The Annual Confederate Reunion took place at Atlanta last week. About 8,000 veterans were in line. Among the resolutions passed was one asking for pensions from the Government.

In the recent threatened negro uprising in Arkansas it has been found that a clever negro organized a union to start insurrection. He reaped a big harvest.

Southern Congressmen claim that the negro riots over the South are caused by I. W. W. money.

East Chicago has also suffered from mob law, and was placed under martial law.

The Republicans in Congress having asked what presents Mr. and Mrs. Wilson received while in Europe, a list has been handed in by the President's Secretary. Nothing has shown more thoroughly the littleness of the majority in Congress than this, as the list showed that all were of a trifling money value.

A jury in the Montgomery County Circuit Court, Va., after deliberating an hour and 15 minutes, brought in a verdict of guilty against the former sophomores at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, charged with assault in connection with the alleged hazing last spring of John Fox, a former freshman.

Winston-Salem, N. C., has set an example to the other cities of the State in voting for a bond issue of $800,000 for the enlargement of the public school facilities, and $85,000 for a new municipal building.

The Confederate Veterans, in session in Atlanta, begged the Senate to ratify the Treaty without change.

A delegation of foreign and New England cotton manufacturers and spinners spent last Thursday in Charlotte, N. C., on the way to the World's Cotton Conference. They received a taste of Southern hospitality.

In the trans-continental reliability race Lieutenant B. W. Maynard, of Wake Forest, N. C., was far ahead of the other competitors.

The President's condition is still favorable, though his progress to recovery is necessarily slow. It will be some time before he can resume work.

A Prayer for Mothers of Men.

She saw the gleam of white starlight, she felt the rush of wings;

Through the little door, the humble door, came simple folk and kings,

And some knelt down with gifts and praise, and some with tears and prayers—

And suddenly the little Christ seemed less of hers than theirs.

Scarce one white hour she knew her joy before the world came in

And claimed Him at her very heart, the heart that knew no sin.

O Mary, not a mother born but knows your grief one day, Since soon or late the world comes in and takes a child away.

For some have gone for war and faith—for gain, or gold, or love;

And some have followed daring dreams the lesser paths above;

And some are lured of sadder things. Oh, many roads there are

That lead away the child we knew—so far and overfar!

Now on this night when Mary felt the rapture and the dread,

O mothers of all wanderers, may you be comforted,

And feel again within your hearts the peace that mother knew

Before her humble door stood wide to let the world come through.

God grant this night that Mary's Son bring back your sons to you.

—Theodosia Garrison, in the December Good Housekeeping.

The World's Verdict.

One sent out his ships to earth's farthest shores,
And brought to his coffers the Orient's stores;

The wild desert sands
Became gold in his hands.

And the world called him Genius—and wondered.

One sought out the secrets of planet and star;
He reveled in problems of granite and spar;

He hungered to know
All the earth could bestow;

And the world called him Scholar—and praised him.

One looked on a suffering, down-trodden race;
He wept as he gazed upon each troubled face;

He heeded their plea,
And he set their hands free.

And the world called him Brother—and loved him.

—Thomas Curtis Clark.

Christian Endeavor

By Rev. S. H. Hay.

M., Oct. 20—Health from God: Ps. 41:1-13.
 T., Oct. 21—Sin and Sickness: Exod. 15:23-26.
 W., Oct. 22—Healing for Nations: Rev. 22:1-7.
 T., Oct. 23—Healing Righteousness: Mal. 4:1-6.
 F., Oct. 24—The Christ That Heals: Mark 16:15-20.
 S., Oct. 25—Gratitude for Healing: Ps. 103:1-13.

* * *

Topic for Sunday, October 26—Christianity and the Health of China. Luke 4:16-31. (Missionary meeting.)

* * *

Why are the Christian missionary forces concerned about the bodily health of the heathen?

For the same reasons, in part, that Jesus felt for and healed the sick in Palestine. They needed Him. And the heathen sick need our missionary doctors and hospitals. We have help that we can give their afflicted bodies, and since we have it, we must not withhold it. "Whoso hath the world's goods, and beholdeth his brother in need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how doth the love of God abide in him?"

We send our missionary doctors to heathendom for the reason also that the medical work makes a way for the spoken word into the lives of the people. Prejudice melts, and hearts and homes fly open to the message of those that bring relief from pain.

* * *

What are the Christian forces doing for the health of China? Almost nothing so far, as compared with the need. Authorities tell us there are about 1,600 hospitals of all Christian denominations in China. This seems a fairly handsome figure until we consider that in the one American city of Brooklyn there are doctors enough to replace all those in China and leave 600 still for Brooklyn's use.

But the little force of medical workers that we have in China are doing a vast deal of noble work. In the one matter of sicknesses of the eye, ten thousand blind Chinese each year have their sight restored by missionary doctors. The story is told by good authority that a single Chinaman, himself cured of blindness, brought five blind men at one time, one holding to the other, to the hospital. What a pitiful and eloquent picture the story paints for us!

* * *

Our own Southern Presbyterian Church has in China 146 missionaries, all told, of which eighteen are doctors. Of these eighteen four are women. We have also a number of trained nurses. One of these, Miss Elizabeth Corriher, of Kashing, was terribly burned with gasoline over a year ago, but is now much better, though she will never be as strong as she was. Our eighteen doctors are distributed in ten cities, not more than two being in any one town. The most important as well as the most satisfactory of our medical centers is Soochow, the seat of our great Elizabeth Blake Hospital, where Dr. J. R. Wilkinson has done such long and noble service.

* * *

Our medical work is not the only agency by which we have helped to better the health of China. The gospel message in general as sent by us makes cleaner hearts and more intelligent minds, and therefore makes for cleaner homes and persons. Many spots in China have felt this uplift, and are in better health accordingly. And the general health of China was definitely advanced through the expulsion by Christian forces of the desolating traffic in opium.

* * *

From the back of the Missionary Survey, compile and read to the society the names of our eighteen medical missionaries to China.

Show by a map (a rough one can be drawn if necessary from a geography) the cities in which these workers are laboring.

The Prayer Meeting

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING OCT. 19, 1919:
 BEARING THE INFIRMITIES OF THE WEAK.
 Rom. XV:1-7.

Our epistle has been replete with the fact of Jesus Christ our Lord and Savior: His atoning work, His resurrection, His second coming; but now for the first time we have explicit reference to His example. Of course the whole epistle, and especially the twelfth chapter, has the example of Christ as a divine background, but here explicit mention is for the first time made of the example of Christ.

Christian liberty is the general theme. Already Paul has spoken much of Christian liberty: now he must bring it home to the hearts of his correspondents in intimate reference to the Lord's example.

The congregation at Rome was composed of ex-pagans of various nationalities, and of Jewish converts. Of some of these latter, Paul afterwards said (Phil. 1:15) that they "preached Christ of envy and strife." Here was then a majority inclined to lord it over the minority. The "strong" had little sympathy or patience with the "weak." These Roman Christians exhibited the same pride of opinion, the same scorn, the same bitterness and hostility that in every age or country has characterized the "strong" majority in its treatment of the "weak" minority. As for their opinions, the apostle seems to have shared these with the "strong" party; but he strongly condemns the spirit and attitude of these men. They were acting in the name of Christian liberty: but their course was one of license and selfish intolerance.

The honor of Christ, the peace of the church, the progress and glory of religion called therefore for our passage. And let us not fail to note how skilfully the apostle meets the situation. He is bold, yet kind; faithful in rebuke and instruction, yet he leaves no sting.

The passage opens with the statement of a grand and noble principle: a principle poles apart from the dominating attitude of "the strong" in the common walks of life. For ages in France the people were groaning under the tyranny of the "strong"—the idle nobility and clergy: then came the revolution when the under dog got on top, and the guillotine was overworked night and day. Our own day sees a Senator attempting to speak upon an unpopular theme; the lights are extinguished and the stage is battered with eggs.

This is a principle with a thousand applications. "Now

(Continued on page 12)

A HIGH AMBITION.

A dear companion of mine, for three years a true yoke-fellow in evangelistic work, one extremely cold winter evening, as he joined me in a railway train to take his last journey on earth in the service of his Master, said pleasantly: "I got a good illustration from the man at the gate as I came on to the train. It is very cold, and every one was grumbling, and some abusing him as he made them all get their tickets out and show them before they could get past. I said to him, 'You don't seem to be very popular around here.' 'If I am popular with the man that put me here it is all that I want,' was his reply. Ah," said this dear friend, "if we could go through this world keeping the same thought toward Christ, what a straight path we should make!" May this be our ambition, the only ambition the gospel enjoins. "Wherefore also we are ambitious, whether at home or absent, to be well pleasing unto him."—D. W. Whittle.

Sunday School

By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.

OCTOBER 19, 1919

Mark 1:29-39.

Jesus in Peter's Home

GOLDEN TEXT—"Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come to this house."—Luke 19:9.

AUTHORIZED VERSION

29 And forthwith, when they were come out of the synagogue, they entered into the house of Simon and Andrew, with James and John.

30 But Simon's wife's mother lay sick of a fever; and anon they tell him of her.

31 And he came and took her by the hand, and lifted her up; and immediately the fever left her, and she ministered unto them.

32 And at even, when the sun did set, they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils.

33 And all the city was gathered together at the door.

34 And he healed many that were sick of divers diseases, and cast out many devils; and suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him.

35 And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed.

36 And Simon, and they that were with him, followed after him.

37 And when they had found him, they said unto him, All men seek for thee.

38 And he said unto them, Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also: for therefore came I forth.

39 And he preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee, and cast out devils.

Jesus removed from Nazareth to Capernaum not only on account of the unbelief and hostility of those among whom He had been reared, but because Capernaum was a larger commercial place on the Sea of Galilee, where He had better opportunities for reaching the multitudes. Here Peter and Andrew had a dwelling, and in it Christ seems to have had a home when in Capernaum. On the Sabbath day, in the Synagogue, Jesus had cast out an unclean spirit and going from thence He entered Peter's house. The teachings of this passage will be contemplated under these heads: Jesus in the Home, Christ's gracious Healing in Capernaum, Jesus' Private Devotion, the Lord's Labors in Galilee.

I. Jesus in the Home.

While on earth the Lord had no home of His own. But like any other human being, He needed the quiet, rest and comfort of a dwelling. It was well, therefore, for His called disciples to share with Him their home. But it was far more important for the inmates of the home than for Christ Himself that He should be their guest. He imparted far more than He received. His coming brought comfort, help and healing. He found "Peter's wife's mother sick of a fever." They tell Him of her. "He came and took her by the hand and lifted her up, and immediately the fever left her and she rose and ministered unto them." The cure was instantaneous and complete, and manifested by the service rendered. It was accomplished by no other agency than Jesus' presence, will and power. Sometimes the Lord works by means. At others He achieves His designs by the potent fiat of His will. All homes should desire and invite Jesus' presence, for He radiates blessings as the sun does light and warmth. "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man will open the door I will come in and sup with him and he with Me."

II. Christ's Gracious Healing in Capernaum.

The good news as to healing became widely diffused in the city. "And at even when the sun did set, they brought unto Him all that were diseased, and those that were possessed with devils. And all the city was gathered at the door. And He healed many that were sick of divers diseases and cast out many devils and suffered not the devils to speak because they knew Him." The Lord did not say that this was too large a demand upon His time and patience and power. He did not find any disease beyond His ability to heal. He did show that no manifestation of demoniac power was above His control, but revealed His complete dominion over the kingdom of darkness. How greatly blest was Capernaum, when all its sick were healed and all its demoniacs emancipated? How encouraged should Christ's disciples be in having such an Almighty Helper and Healer always at hand. If God be for us who can be against us? with any hope of success.

III. Jesus' Private Devotion.

As a Human Being, Jesus needed prayer. He must commune with His Divine Father. He found delight in so doing. He thus obtained comfort. He thus secured strength and co-operation. By this means He attained guidance and clearer views of His mission and its grand results. By praying He not only gained such things for Himself but set an example for His disciples and emphasized for them the necessity for prayer. With such incentives, is it surprising that we are told, "And in the morning rising up a great while before day, He went out and departed into a solitary place and there prayed." He could not be always in the family circle, or always in a crowd, or always in life's active toils. He must at times be alone with God and have needful communion. The same is true of ourselves. Christ too exemplifies and exalts closest prayer for this lies at the foundation of all habits of prayer, and of the most consistent Christian living. That man is best qualified to meet his fellows and the responsibilities of daily life who daily in private seeks his God. Nehemiah and other heroes of the faith who achieved great tasks in their generation were noted for secret prayer.

IV. The Lord's Labors in Galilee.

When Peter and others sought and found Jesus in His retirement and said, "All men seek for Thee," He replied, "Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also, for therefore came I forth." He preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee and cast out devils. He published Gospel tidings in the synagogues for there the people gathered for worship and there gathered the most hopeful class of hearers. All men not only sought Him, but needed Him, and the truths He proclaimed and the help He could render. The healing He gave in Capernaum was in request elsewhere. The doctrines He taught in this city were adapted to the needs of men in many places. The Divine power He exerted in conquering sin, mastering evil spirits and winning the human heart is the great need of humanity in all ages and in all lands.

Prayer Meeting.

(Continued from page 11)

we that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves." What may seem to the "strong" to be infirmities may have quite another quality in the eyes of the "weak."

In our treatment of others our prime motive, our dominating impulse, should not be "to please ourselves: but let each one of us please his neighbor for that which is good, unto edifying."

In order to be faithful to our deepest convictions, we do not find ourselves under the compulsion of insulting them who differ with us. Nay, rather let us please them, if possible, "unto edifying." Let us give to them the credit of being as honest as ourselves. Let us remember that if we are Christ's people, so are they. The neglect of this rule often causes bitterness and wounds that heal not through long years. Things were said in the sixties of the past century which leave irritations to this day, and keep asunder brethren of the same faith and order. Our Lord is held before us as our example: He pleased not Himself. He subjected Himself to inexpressible agonies in order to fulfill the plans of his Father and to accomplish his work. If we will saturate our minds and hearts with the Scriptures, we will be enabled to do even as He did: to have the same mind "one with another." The principle taught here by the apostle we may apply for ourselves, if we only have the mind and heart of the Master. We will find that every day will call for its application: we will find also that skillfully and sympathetically applied, it will prove a powerful means of advancing the Kingdom of God, and of conserving the peace and happiness and welfare of every one concerned.

Devotional

WAIT COURAGEOUSLY.

Psalm 27:4: Wait for the Lord: be strong, and let thy heart take courage: yea, wait thou for the Lord.

Give me the man who waits for the Lord. How are we to meet these present extraordinary emergencies. What shall we do? There is only one thing to do. What is that? Wait on the Lord. Physicians tell us that very few people use the full expanse of their lung power. All runners, however, know that after running a few minutes they get their "second wind," then they can run without any further trouble as long as their legs will carry them. The "second wind" is merely the calling into play of all the lung space. There is a great similarity between this and what the student of the mind calls the "subconscious state." Most of us, it seems, very seldom call into use our full mental or moral powers. The best reservoir of our life lies beneath our superficial existence, untouched, unused, seldom drawn upon. It is upon this you draw when you capably go on when you have felt you could not go a step further. Hereby you are kept steady in time of crisis. You are equal to any emergency and surprise everybody by not going to pieces. You were able to draw freely from the deep hidden wells of your moral and spiritual life. These wells may be inherited, developed or acquired. Many a non-Christian in crucial times draws generously on the stored up spirituality of godly forbears and knows not from whence cometh this strength.

The Psalmist in our text is calling by faith and determination upon all the resources of his being. Thrown back upon himself and facing the discords and discouragements of life, he needs must rally all his forces or else perish. What a splendid rally he makes. He will be resolute, courageous, strong. But how? By a supreme effort. But wherein shall this effort terminate? In himself only? Then ultimately he will return to where he was before the effort was made? No, no. He is wiser than all that. He will be strong and of good courage to wait for the Lord.

Wait for the Lord. It is a glorious thing to be driven to fall into the hands of God and find that underneath us and around and about us are the everlasting arms. We are constantly asking you to work for the Lord. Try waiting for Him and the working will follow as the night with day. How can you work unless you first wait? Yes, waiting comes first and it is harder than working. Did you ever see an army standing at attention? Waiting! They are trained men. They can drill ten hours a day. If needs be, they can march and carry eight pounds and fight for twenty-four hours at a stretch, aye for twice that and even triple that in a serious combat. How long can they wait at attention? Try them for an hour and see how many will fall out and even faint after the first few moments. It takes training and strength to pose as an artist's model. One of our artist friends picked up an Italian boy, "an ideal gamin" on the street and took him to his studio. He gave the boy the easiest pose possible and then worked desperately for three minutes and then looked up only in time to see the lad "white as death" ready to collapse. Waiting on the Lord is not easy. Try it. But it is profitable. It takes resolution to wait. It takes strength to wait. It takes courage to wait. Wait for the Lord and soon our heart cries out, "How long, O Lord, how long?" We must call on all our resources to be able to wait. But our resources are not merely in ourselves, but in the Lord. We get our resources that enable us to wait from the same God upon whom we are waiting. He is our reserve and our reservoir. We call upon our soul and all that is within us. Surely this we must do. But we do this to enlarge our intake from Him. He is our all sufficiency. He answers, "My grace is sufficient for thee." Wait thou for the Lord.—Rev. Robert Watson, D.D.

Home Circle

LITTLE THINGS.

It takes a little muscle,
And it takes a little grit,
A little true ambition
With a little bit of wit.
It's not the "biggest" things that count
And make the "biggest" show;
It's the little things that people do,
That makes the old world go.

A little bit of smiling
And a little sunny chat,
A little bit of courage
To a comrade slipping back.
It's not the "biggest" things that count
And make the "biggest" show;
It's the little things that people do
That makes this old world go.

It takes a kindly action
And it takes a word of cheer
To fill a life with sunshine
And to drive away a tear.
Great things are not the "biggest" things
That make the "biggest" show;
It's the little things that we may do
That makes this old world go.

—Edw. H. McClure, in Saint Louis Christian Advocate.

WHAT DOES YOUR MONEY COST YOU?

Emerson said: "The worst thing about money is that it so often costs so much." If we would take this truth seriously to heart, we would not worry so much over the lack of money. Nor would we envy those who seem to have so much of it. It is not really difficult to see just how much their money has cost them. In many cases it has cost the loss of the sense of honor and self-respect; it has cost the loss of health; it has cost the loss of esteem of their neighbors; it has cost the sacrifice of their children by giving them over to worldly pleasures; it has cost their former interest in the work of the Lord and in the assembly of the saints; it has cost their neglect of the poor and the orphans; in brief, it has cost them their souls! And sometimes it does not take a great fortune to go to one's head at the expense of his heart. Money can make a fool of a man, changing the humble, self-sacrificing follower of the Lord Jesus Christ into a self-conceited snob, forgetful of the highest interests of his family and friends. It can give him a feeling of superiority over his poor neighbors and blind his eyes to the fact that he has really lost the place of confidence he once enjoyed in their hearts. Money is either a power for good in a man's life and in the lives of others or a deceiver who will cheat him out of his best possessions. What is the meaning of your money? Have you taken the time to watch its effects upon your own heart, upon the other members of your family, upon the church and the community? Is your money lifting you and others up to heaven, or is it dragging you down to hell while you, blind to the truth of the Scriptures and deaf to the entreaties of your brothers, are going on with your selfish enjoyment of it? If you have any money to speak of, take an inventory this very day. Said Dr. Lorimer: "It's good to have money and the things that money can buy; but it's good, too, to check up once in a while and make sure that you haven't lost the things that money won't buy."—The Gospel Advocate.

Presbyterian Standard

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE.
REV. W. L. BOGGS, Circulation Manager.

A Religious Newspaper for the Family, Devoted to the Interest of Christ's Kingdom as Represented by the Southern Presbyterian Church.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.
ESTABLISHED JANUARY 1, 1858.

Entered at the Post Office at Charlotte, N. C., as second class matter.

CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE

Guiding the Synods	2
A Willing Apology	2
A Lesson From Other Churches.....	3
Unjust Criticism	3
Union, But Not Unity	3
Reformation Day—October 26	3
CONTRIBUTED—
Why Aren't the Young Men at Church?—By Rev. Andrew J. Howell	4
At the Cross Roads—By Grace Hazard Conkling	4
Dr. Lingle on Fundamental Principles—By Rev. Jno. M. Wells, D.D.....	5-8
In Memoriam	6
Four Men Needed for Industrial Work in Our African Mission—By S. H. Chester.....	6
Our Brethren in France and Belgium—By James I. Good	7
An Autumn Fantasy—By John Jordan Douglass	7
Is There No Difference.—By E. M. G.....	8
Some Lamentable Facts	8
Union Seminary Opening	9
A Card From Mr. Garth.....	9
DEPARTMENTS—
News of the Week	10
Christian Endeavor—By Rev. S. H. Hay	11
Prayer Meeting—By Rev. C. D. Waller	11
Sunday School—By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.	12
Home Circle and Devotional	13

ANNOUNCEMENT.

 The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription is paid.

When change of address is desired, give both the old and the new address.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the last subscription paid.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

TREASURERS OF BENEVOLENT CAUSES.

Foreign Missions—Edwin F. Willis, 154 Fifth Ave., N., Nashville, Tenn.

Home Missions—A. N. Sharp, 1522 Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Christian Education and Ministerial Relief—John Stites, Fifth and Market Streets, Louisville, Ky.

Publication and Sabbath School Work—R. E. Magill, 6-8 N. Sixth Street, Richmond, Va.

Bible Cause—Wm. Foulke, Bible House, New York.

Church News

Collections for October are for Foreign Missions. Treasurer, E. F. Willis, 216 Union Street, Nashville, Tenn.

DEATH OF MRS. H. M. PRESSLY.

The many friends of Rev. H. M. Pressly, for many years the beloved pastor of West Avenue Church, Charlotte, and other churches in Mecklenburg Presbytery, will learn with deep sympathy the death of his devoted wife, which occurred at Elizabeth City, N. C., last week. Mrs. Pressly for years has been an invalid, but with surprising fortitude she made a brave fight for life, and through it all she was ever a true helpmeet to her husband.

PERSONAL.

In our recent notice of Home-Coming Day at Buffalo Church we stated that this church was organized in 1764, when it should have been 1756.

We would call the attention of the request of the First Church, Raleigh, who is to be the host of Synod, that they be notified at once whether you will attend Synod. This is an important request, in order to help them in their efforts to entertain. In these days of limited house room, scarcity of help, and high price of living, we should omit nothing to make the task easier. Let the members notify the committee at once, let the Synod expedite business so that their stay may be short, and let the wives stay by the stuff at home.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Woman's Auxiliary Department this week carries a list of the delegates to Synodical to meet at Durham.

The Synod: Circular letters are being mailed out to ascertain names of delegates to Synod. Will brethren be good enough to reply promptly. If for any reason any one fails to receive a letter and intends coming to Synod, please write at once to John G. Allen, Raleigh, N. C., notifying him. Unless this is done, it will be very difficult to find a place to stay in Raleigh at that time. The housing problem is as acute here as it is everywhere.

W. McC. White.

Rev. C. H. Little has returned to his work in the Sharon, Carmel and Amity group of churches, after a delightful vacation spent in the west. Upon his arrival home he found the pantry well filled with many good things to eat, the outward expression of a hearty welcome home from the congregation of Carmel Church. The first service was a story of his trip from his own viewpoint of the social, industrial, political and religious condition of our country—a somewhat dark picture of the unrest or American crisis.

The remedy prescribed was a change of thought. That the trail of hate brought about by this cruel war and now so affecting our own beloved country might soon be blotted out and all the nations and peoples be brought together again into the sweet bonds of Christian brotherhood. Think peace instead of war. Think love instead of hatred.

Prayer, the dynamic force that won the war, will cure the ills of our country. Labor and capital praying together cannot strike nor oppress.

The recognition of the hand of an all wise God in the solution of the problem of unrest and of the present American near-crisis.

The Cleveland Church has experienced a great spiritual uplift in the earnest and faithful preaching of Rev. O. G. Jones, D.D., Synodical evangelist, who preached twice each day from September 8 through October 4. All of the ser-

(Continued on Page 16)

THE THINNESS OF OUR BUTTER

Presbyterians are the best Butter Spreaders in the World.

They Butter Every Slice of Bread Presented to Them.

No Worthy Cause Ever Escapes Them.

Mr. Moody's familiar statement about getting 75 per cent of any Fund from Presbyterians is still true.

Our Glory is that we are Broad.

OUR GLORY AND OUR SHAME

Our shame is that we Spread our Butter too Thinly on our Own.

There are at present many good causes before our people in this Synod.

Shall we spread our Butter out until our Own Institutions Suffer?

THE BETTER WAY

Not long ago a Baptist family in Eastern North Carolina endowed a chair at Wake Forest for $50,000 in memory of their father. We have scores of families in North Carolina just as able as this one to do a big thing like this.

In the recent drive of the Methodists for $35,000,000, one layman gave ONE MILLION.

In the present drive of the Baptists one layman has offered ONE MILLION.

Each Denomination can do more effective work for the Kingdom by working full capacity along its own organized lines.

OUR SITUATION

We are making a desperate effort to raise ONE MILLION Dollars for our 11 Schools, including Union Seminary. Very little of what we are getting will be binding unless we secure the total. We have 1,817 students enrolled in the 11 schools. We turned away more than 250. Each institution is crowded. Moreover, every other institution in the state is crowded.

There is no need in our Church today that outweighs this.

Take Davidson College: Its endowment is pitifully small. Its opportunity is incomparable. One dormitory, to cost $75,000 is absolutely necessary. Six chairs must be endowed at $50,000 each. What shall be said of the Girls' Schools? Our wonderful opportunity to train the mothers and teachers of the State—and our butter!— Why, you can hardly see it.

WHAT WILL PRESBYTERIANS DO?

Our Chairman, Mr. A. M. Scales, recently said:

"It is about time our own people were beginning to support our own institutions."

We must find some Big Givers to save this Campaign. We have $400,000 pledged and we cannot get $600,000 more in small gifts. Presbyterians might as well face this NOW.

THIS IS OUR BREAD. LET US MAKE OUR BUTTER A LITTLE THICKER.

The first offer of a large amount will give us the boost we now need. Think it over. Suppose YOU make it. Where could you better spread your butter?

The Million Dollar Campaign Committee

A. M. SCALES, Chairman

R. G. VAUGHN, Treasurer

C. M. RICHARDS, Secretary

Greensboro, North Carolina

mons were of a very high order, and greatly enjoyed by the large audiences. Dr. Jones also captivated every one with his well rendered solos. The meeting was greatly helped by the faithful co-operation of all the churches represented in the community and by the daily prayer meetings of the good ladies of the village. The stores closed their doors for the services and everybody did their bit for the success of the meeting.

Dr. Jones was not able to remain until the meeting closed on account of sickness, but God blessed the seed sown. Three were added to the church by letter, four on profession of faith and two by baptism. A very substantial offering was made for Synodical Home Missions.

The following new officers were ordained and installed recently: Mr. W. W. Roseman to the eldership, Mr. Robert Foard and Dr. G. M. Fleming to the diaconate.

Our three churches—Cleveland, Third Creek and Elmwood—have been greatly strengthened and revived by the recent meetings, and face the fall and winter campaign with renewed courage.

The good people of this parish are lowering the H. C. L. of their pastor in helping on the Ford, placing wood on the ground for the winter, and in other ways are making life pleasant for the occupants of the manse.

J. T. Hall.

The Presbytery of Wilmington met in regular fall session in Chinquapin Church, Chinquapin, N. C., October 7, 1919, at 11 a. m., and in the absence of Rev. W. F. Hollingsworth, the retiring moderator, the opening sermon was preached by Rev. J. W. Purcell, D.D., from Matt. 26:73. Present, nineteen ministers and twenty-three ruling elders.

Organization—Rev. J. R. Phipps, moderator, and Rev. L. E. Wells and Ruling Elder H. L. Hunt, temporary clerks.

Received—Rev. H. F. Beaty was received from Concord Presbytery. Arrangements were made for his installation as pastor of Harmony and Black River churches.

Transferred—Rev. H. W. Koelling to the Presbytery of Athens; Candidate William C. Rourk to Holston Presbytery.

Overtures from the Assembly—The proposed amendments to the Book of Church Order sent down by the General Assembly were referred to a special committee with instruction to consider and report at the spring meeting.

Popular Meeting—A popular meeting was held in the interest of Sabbath School Extension and addresses were made as follows: Rev. D. T. Caldwell, "The Teen-Age Boy and the Sabbath School;" Rev. P. L. Clark, "Sabbath School Extension;" Rev. H. L. Sneed, "Teacher Efficiency;" Rev. W. H. Goodman, "Forward for Our Presbytery."

Commission—A commission was appointed to organize a church at Tabor, N. C., on the first Sabbath in November, if the way be clear.

Addresses—Rev. M. E. Melvin, D.D., field secretary of Christian education, was present and spoke in the interest of the million dollar campaign, and Rev. A. W. Crawford, superintendent of Synod's Home Missions, spoke in the interest of that cause. Each of these brethren made a strong and hopeful appeal for the cause he represents.

Sermon—By appointment, Rev. J. O. Mann preached a sermon at 11 a. m. Wednesday from John 12:32, after which the Lord's Supper was administered by Rev. A. D. McClure, D.D., Rev. P. L. Clark and Ruling Elders John Hall, H. E. Faison, J. E. Farrow, C. T. McKeithen, W. M. Beaty and L. Smith.

Dissolution of Pastorate—The pastoral relation between Rev. H. L. Sneed and Whiteville Church was dissolved.

Schools and Colleges—The reports from the trustees of our schools and colleges were most encouraging. Each one of these institutions seems to have all the students it can take care of and each one appears to be doing the best work in its history with even brighter prospects for the future.

Foreign Missions—Rev. A. D. McClure, D.D., presented the report on Foreign Missions, this report containing some things that were very encouraging but it emphasized the fact that the churches of our own Presbytery had not increased their gifts to this cause in proportion to the increased expense of the missionaries. In connection with this report Rev. L. C. Vass, who was present, spoke of the growth of our mission work in Africa with which he himself was once connected.

Systematic Beneficence—The Presbytery accepted its apportionment for benevolences for the year 1920-1921 as our goal.

Home Missions—Rev. W. M. Baker made the report on Home Missions. The reports from the summer evangelistic campaign were encouraging as compared with last year's work. Plans were presented and adopted by Presbytery for enlarged and more aggressive work along Home Mission lines during the coming year.

Spring Meeting—Mt. Olive, Tuesday, April 6, 1920, at 11 a. m. W. P. M. Currie, S. C.

Second Church, Salisbury—For eight days beginning with Sunday, September 21, and ending with September 28, 1919, Rev. William Black, D.D., Synodical evangelist, and his noted singer, Mr. Andrew Burr, held a series of evangelistic services in the Second Church. The attendance was good and much interest was manifested. Both preacher and singer did earnest and faithful service and the meeting was productive of good to the church and to the community.

Fifty persons signed cards. Of these, five expressed a preference for the Lutheran church, six gave no preference, three for the Methodist church, one for the Reformed, two for the First Presbyterian Church of Salisbury and two for the Presbyterian Church of Spencer. Thirty-one expressed a preference for the Second Presbyterian Church. Of these, nine were received on Sunday, September 28, by profession of faith, five of them receiving baptism, two being heads of families. Eight more were received on Sunday, October 5, three of whom received baptism. One more will be received by statement in the near future, thus adding eighteen members as a result of the meeting.

Two persons who had signified their desire to unite with the church about one month previous to the meeting, but have been absent from home, will be received on profession of faith on Sunday, October 12. On that date also eight persons will be received by letter. Three persons had been received by profession of faith and seven by letter previous to the meeting. Altogether, an addition of thirty-eight to the membership has been made since April 1, 1919. To God be all the praise.

A contribution for the Synod's Mission work was made amounting to $90.28. This was a liberal offering for a congregation poor in this world's goods. Presbyter.

Glade Valley—Rev. T. M. McConnell, D.D., writes: "I am just home from Glade Valley, where I held a series of evangelistic services by appointment of Orange Presbytery. I was there just a week. The weather was ideal, the congregations filled the church at every service and about thirty people, from fifteen to forty-five years of age, came out on the Lord's side and took a definite stand for Christ and His cause. The day services were held in the chapel of the school and the night services in the church. On Sabbath two elders and two deacons were ordained. The church now has good officers and a resident pastor, Rev. C. W. Erwin. One of the elders installed is Mr. E. B. Eldridge, the principal of the school. He is a mountain boy educated at Glade Valley and at the A. & E. College at Raleigh. The school under his management is in a flourishing condition and doing a fine work in a section of country where its influence is much needed. This is, as you know, one of our mountain schools. It has an ideal location, a large campus filled with native trees, and surrounded by towering mountains, which are especially attractive at this season of the year, when sourwood and gum, hickory and chestnut have donned their robes of crimson and gold, and the whole landscape is crowned with kaleidoscopic beauty. The water is clear and cold, the air pure and invigorating. In fact, God has done all that could be asked, but there are many things that man might do to make the school more attractive and the equipment more complete. If our Christian people who have money could only realize that schools are more important than stocks, boys worth more than bonds, and girls far more valuable than gold, surely they would invest more wisely than many of them do. Glade Valley, like many other schools, needs better equipment. It has done a grand work, but might do far better if some of its friends would give it the financial help it needs. A few books for young people, magazines and papers from some of our overstuffed libraries, would meet a real need. The possibilities of the school for good are measureless."

Charlotte, Tenth Avenue—This church has been most fortunate during the period between pastorates to have had as pulpit supply Dr. A. R. Shaw, who for eight years served the church as pastor. On last Sabbath Dr. Shaw preached his farewell sermon before going to Louisville to enter upon his work as professor in the Kentucky Theological Seminary.

At the morning service the communion of the Lord's Supper was administered and thirteen new members were welcomed into the church at this time. At the evening service the service flag was demobilized and a prayer of gratitude offered for the safe return of the men and women represented thereon.

At the Sabbath school service new officers were elected, Mr. A. M. Gray being the new superintendent. The school is growing in numbers and interest. It considers itself most fortunate in having secured the services of Dr. J. R. Bridges, possibly the best Bible teacher in the city, to teach the teachers each week.

The pastor-elect, Rev. Daniel Iverson, will begin his work here December 1.

Buffalo—Realizing that the present church is inadequate for the rapidly growing needs of the Buffalo Presbyterian congregation, the members of that body have agreed upon definite plans for the material enlargement of the physical plant of the institution. The present structure is to be remodeled and improved, while an additional building will also be erected, the latter to serve as a home for the Sunday school.

These building plans will involve the expenditure of approximately $20,000. Tentative plans and specifications have been submitted by Harry Barton, and that architect has been commissioned to proceed with the full plans. The work will begin in the early future and will be pressed to a successful conclusion. When completed this will be one of the handsomest churches in the county.

Buffalo Presbyterian Church, of which Rev. E. Frank Lee is pastor, has had a most rapid growth in recent years. In view of the expansion of the church, including the ambitious building program just projected, a bit of the history of Buffalo, which is said to be the oldest church in Guilford county, should prove of interest.

Buffalo church is located a little more than two miles north of the corporate limits of Greensboro upon an elevated spot upon which is a large oak grove. The church, as an organization, was founded in 1756 by the Presbytery of Hanover, Va. The present building is the third house of worship erected on the grounds. The first was a rude log structure; the second a frame building, was more comfortable, while the present building is a large and substantial brick structure. Its construction was started in 1826 and completed in 1827. The bricks were made and laid by a member of the congregation, Jacob Albright, at a contract price of $2,400.

In its history of 163 years the church has had only nine pastors. The first pastor was Rev. David Caldwell, D.D., a distinguished man in religion, education and patriotic service. According to his biographer, Dr. E. W. Caruthers, Dr. Caldwell was born in Lancaster county, Penn., in March, 1725, and died in August, 1824, at his home near Greensboro, in his 100th year. These dates are also on his slab in the Buffalo cemetery.

Dr. Caldwell became pastor of Buffalo and Alamance churches in 1768 and continued in that relation until 1819, when, on account of the infirmities of advanced age, it was considered wise for him to retire. Besides preaching it had been necessary for Dr. Caldwell to farm and teach to secure the necessary comforts of life for his family, as his salary was very meager. His school was located at his home, about three and a half miles west of Greensboro, on the road to Guilford College. That school is described as "an academy, college and theological seminary all in one." Five of his pupils became governors of states and others physicians and lawyers. When he became pastor there was no reputable physician near the church, and he studied and practiced medicine until his fourth son could enter the medical profession. The first presidency of the University of North Carolina was offered to Dr. Caldwell in 1795, but he declined it. He was very active in defense of political and religious freedom and took a notable part in the battle of Guilford Courthouse in 1781. Dr. C. Alphonso Smith declares: "There is no difficulty in selecting our first most representative figure, for when the Synod of North Carolina was formed a hundred years ago the most famous character in the South was David Caldwell."

The immediate successor of Dr. Caldwell in the pastorate of Buffalo and Alamance churches was Rev. E. W. Caruthers, D.D., who became pastor in 1821. Within a few years after his coming the congregation erected the present building, and for 92 years it has served. His services as pastor of Buffalo terminated in 1846, but he continued as pastor of Alamance until 1861.

Cyrus K. Caldwell, grandson of Dr. David Caldwell, was the third pastor of Buffalo church, serving for twelve years as pastor of Buffalo and Bethel churches. The fourth pastor was James C. Alexander, who served the churches of Buffalo and Bethel from 1861 to 1886. During his pastorate 149 members were added, the total membership August 1, 1886, being 137, a new high record at that time.

R. W. Culbertson was the fifth pastor and he served Buffalo and Bethel from 1887 to 1892. During his pastorate Midway church was organized and a manse was built, which was later sold. The sixth pastor was Rev. Josiah McLeod Seabrook, whose services began in 1892 and continued twelve years. During the first nine years of his pastorate 63 persons were added to the membership. The seventh pastor was Rev. J. W. Goodman, who was installed in 1905 and continued in that capacity until December, 1911. The eighth pastor was Rev. George W. Oldham, who served from the summer of 1912 until July, 1913.

The present pastor, Rev. E. Frank Lee, came to the church as pastor November 1, 1913. During his pastorate of six years 166 members have been received into the Buffalo church, and of that number the greater part were admitted upon profession of faith. Five years ago a comfortable and attractive manse was built on Cypress avenue in Greensboro by Buffalo and Midway. The membership of the church and Sunday school has steadily grown and the pastor has derived great inspiration from the loyalty and support of the congregation.

About two years ago the men of the Sunday school organized the David Caldwell Bible class, which has been a noteworthy success from its inception. It grew to such proportions that the church building could no longer accommodate the Sunday school. A year ago a temporary structure was built and this has been in use regularly since that time. Now the plans for building a portico in front of the present church and for erection of a modern Sunday school building adjacent to the church, are being developed.

Sunday, October 19, will be "Home-Coming Day," at which time the pastor and members desire to have present all former members and close friends of the church. On that day Rev. Melton Clark, D.D., of Charleston, S. C., and formerly of Greensboro, will preach. Basket dinner on the grounds will be an interesting feature. In the afternoon Dr. Clark will preside and a number of prominent men will deliver addresses. A. M. Scales, of Greensboro, will speak of the life of Dr. David Caldwell; Col. Fred A. Olds, of Raleigh, of the North Carolina Historical Commission, will be present at Buffalo Church Sunday morning and will address the David Caldwell Bible Class at 10 o'clock that morning.

In 1910 there was raised to the honor of Dr. Caldwell a monument at Guilford Battleground with the following inscribed upon its four sides: "Preacher," "Physician," "Teacher," "Patriot." Now the Sunday school building is to perpetuate the name and memory of Dr. Caldwell.—Greensboro Daily News.

Granville County Group—This group of country churches, consisting of Oak Hill, Hebron, Geneva and Grassy Creek, have extended a unanimous call to Rev. A. M. Earle, of Capon Bridge, W. Va., and it is earnestly hoped that he will accept the call. These churches have been without a pastor for the past year.

Hebron Church, Granville County—On Sunday afternoon, September 28, communion services were held in this church by Rev. Stuart Oglesby, pastor of the Oxford Presbyterian Church. Elders from all four of the churches in the group and from the Oxford Church were present and took part in the service. This was the first communion service held in this church since the day of organization.

Cameron Hill—Rev. W. S. Golden conducted a six days series of meetings here, holding the last service on September 19. The preaching was earnest, convincing and inspiring. Although this church is very small in numbers, the meeting resulted in nineteen additions to the membership, many reconsecrations, and it is believed that we have had a true revival.

S. F. C.

Leaflet—A six days series of meetings closed at this church on September 12. Rev. G. F. Kirkpatrick preached in a manner which was deeply scriptural, edifying and interesting. There were thirteen additions to the church and a number of reconsecrations, while several expressed intentions of joining later. During the last three services all available room in the church was filled by the congregation, and there was evidence of great and sincere interest.

S. F. C.

Oxford—At the communion services on October 5, fifteen new members were received into the church, seven of these being by letter and eight by profession of faith. During the last three months, thirty-two new members have been received, eleven of these being from the Masonic Orphanage, located in this city. No special evangelistic services have been held. Recently three new elders and two new deacons have been elected, ordained and installed. Messrs. R. P. Taylor, John R. Hall and John B. Booth are the new elders and Messrs. Marion Taylor and E. H. Crenshaw the new deacons. Mr. Crenshaw was elected treasurer of the church, succeeding John R. Hall, who has very efficiently served in that capacity for the past eight years.

Back Creek, Concord Presbytery—We have recently had a series of services in this church in which the pastor was assisted by Rev. S. L. Cathey, of Loray. His strong gospel sermons, presenting in a simple, attractive way some of the fundamental truths of God's Word, were heard with great pleasure and profit. God's people were quickened and strengthened, and souls were saved. The congregation at the communion service on Sunday was the largest since the present pastorate began. Four young people were received on profession of their faith.

The two churches in this country pastorate (Back Creek and Thyatira) have recently subscribed $5,000 in the campaign for schools and colleges.

Graham—This church was without a pastor all last winter but in the spring Rev. Dr. Shaw filled the pulpit as supply for about two months and greatly endeared himself to our people. In June, Rev. E. M. Caldwell, then assistant pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Nashville, Tenn., accepted the call of our church, and since his coming new life and enthusiasm have been infused into the church, and its spiritual condition greatly strengthened. A large number of new members have been enrolled, sixteen members—thirteen on profession of faith and three by letter—having joined on last communion Sunday, October 5. Under the inspiring leadership of our zealous young pastor, a fund of about $25,000 has been raised on subscription this fall for Sunday school, church and manse improvements, and the work is now under way, which, when completed, will show this to be one of the best equipped churches in the State.

On Sunday morning, September 21, a special service was held for the purpose of taking down the church service flag; and on the evening following a most impressive twilight service was held on the church lawn, in memory of John Snyder, the only member of the church who died in service, and at the close of the service a tree was planted in his memory.

The Woman's Auxiliary has recently been reorganized on the new "circle" plan, and more interest is being shown in this department of the church than ever before.

Cor.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

McCull—At a congregational meeting held after the services at the Presbyterian Church yesterday, the salary of the much beloved pastor was raised three hundred dollars. This makes the second raise within the last two years.

A Member.

Congaree Presbytery—At the meeting of Congaree Presbytery at Edgefield, the Rev. Daniel Iverson, pastor-elect of Tenth Avenue Church in Charlotte, was unanimously elected moderator. He preached the sacramental sermon, which moved and blessed every hearer. Brother Iverson has done a splendid work with us, and we greatly regret his leaving.

A. W. B.

Bethel Presbytery met in the church at Liberty Hill on September 9. The moderator being absent, at his request the opening sermon was preached by Rev. J. E. Berryhill, pastor of the church at Clover. His text was Luke 11:13.

Presbytery was called to order by Rev. F. H. Wardlaw, the last moderator present. Rev. J. L. Yandell was elected moderator and Rev. W. L. Latham assistant clerk.

After the prescribed examinations, Mr. H. M. Wilson and Mr. D. H. Dulin, both of Bowling Green Church, were received as candidates for the ministry.

Rev. J. T. Coker was received from Charleston Presbytery.

The Presbyterial sermon was preached by Rev. A. E. Spencer. Text, I Cor. 12:13. Subject, "Baptism."

An invitation for the next regular meeting was accepted from Kershaw Church.

The Home Mission Committee reported that every charge in the Presbytery was supplied except one group, and they have the prospect of an early supply.

The resolutions of thanks were unusually hearty.

Presbytery adjourned to meet at Synod.

F. H. Wardlaw, S. C.

The Presbytery of Piedmont met in the Broadway Church, Belton, S. C., October 7. The opening sermon was by Dr. J. S. Foster, retiring moderator. There were present fourteen ministers and twenty-two elders, an unusually large attendance for the fall meeting.

Officers—Rev. S. W. DuBose, moderator, and Elder M. E. Bradley, temporary clerk.

Ordained—A. H. Key received as a licentiate from Athens Presbytery. He is to be installed pastor of Honea Path Church November 2.

Pastoral relations dissolved between Rev. W. T. Hollingsworth and Townville, Roberts and Fair Play churches; and between Rev. A. E. Wallace and Broadway and Piedmont churches.

Dismissed—Rev. W. T. Hollingsworth to East Alabama Presbytery and Rev. A. E. Wallace to Paris Presbytery.

Candidate Received—M. B. Prince, Jr., a member of Mt. Pleasant Church.

Corresponding Member—Rev. Dr. D. M. Douglas, president of the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, who was heard in the interest of that college and of the proposed million dollar campaign for education in South Carolina. The Presbytery expressed itself as favoring this campaign.

Systematic Beneficence—The permanent committee recommended apportionments for the churches for next year, which were approved. Rev. H. A. Knox was elected campaign manager for raising the Presbytery's quota of $4,000,000.

Ebenezer Church—A commission appointed to dissolve, dispose of the property and dismiss the members.

Manual—A resolution of thanks to the Young Men's Bible Class of the Easley Church for printing the revised manual and presenting 300 copies to the Presbytery was adopted.

Home Missions—Rev. W. H. Mills, D.D., Clemson College, was made chairman of the executive committee and Rev. H. A. Knox, Liberty, secretary.

Proposed Amendments—All postponed for consideration at spring meeting.

Adjourned Meeting—During the sessions of Synod.

Next Stated Meeting—At Liberty, April 13, 1920.

Robert Adams, Stated Clerk.

GEORGIA.

Waycross, First Church—At the communion service on the first Sabbath of this month, Dr. J. S. Sibley announced the names of nineteen new members received during the past two months.

The Synod of Georgia meets in Albany, Tuesday evening, November 11. Dr. L. G. Henderson is pastor of the Albany Church. The opening sermon will be preached by Dr. F. K. Sims, of Dalton. Rev. S. L. McCarty, of Augusta, is chairman of the committee of arrangements of the Synod.

J. W. Stokes, Stated Clerk.

The Presbytery of Macon meets at Climax, Ga., October 21. The opening sermon will be delivered by Rev. T. K. Currie. Dr. J. G. Patton will preach the doctrinal sermon on "Discipline." Rev. J. A. Warren is the new pastor of Climax Church. Mr. Jos. Curry is the clerk of session. Ministers and elders will courteously notify Mr. Curry whether they will attend and when they will arrive. Sessional records not at spring meeting of Presbytery are required to be at this for review.

J. W. Stokes,
Stated Clerk.

Morven—We have just closed a successful meeting here. Rev. F. D. Hunt, superintendent of Home Missions and Evangelism for Macon Presbytery, was with us for eight days, preaching strong expository sermons twice each day. The people were greatly instructed and strengthened. There were fifteen conversions and about fifty reconsecrations. Six of those converted united with this church. The others will join the Methodist and Baptist churches. An effort was made to get a church paper in every home and a movement was set on foot to organize a Sunday school in the near future. We are grateful to God for sending Mr. Hunt to us and so richly blessing his labors among us.

VIRGINIA.

Burton Memorial, Schoolfield—This church has been cooperating with the Methodist, Baptist and Dunkard churches in an evangelistic campaign. All the churches had preaching every night at the same hour for two weeks. A number of noon meetings were held in the Dan River Cotton Mills. The Y. M. C. A. and Welfare Workers gave the churches absolute right of way during the two weeks. Dr. H. W. DuBose, of the First Church, Danville, preached for the Presbyterians. The attendance was better than usual here and ten persons confessed Christ and joined this church. Four were received by letter.

F. A. Barnes, Pastor.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. Jno. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

HOME MISSION STUDY.

Mrs. Wm. E. White, secretary Assembly Home Missions, Synodical Auxiliary of North Carolina, in a timely article in this column of September 17, reminds us of the fact that the period for Home Mission Study begins the first of October.

Those of us who studied "The Task That Challenges," by Dr. Morris, will doubtless select for our study this year the new book, "Christianizing Christendom," by the same author. All phases of Home Mission Work are emphasized in this book, the keynote of which may be said to be in these words of Dr. Morris' "Christianity is the spirit of Christ in action."

These are some of the facts brought out in the book: "In a population of more than 100,000,000 in America today, 65,000,000 adults are not connected with any church, and of 42,000,000 recognized as members of the church, 15,000,000 are Roman Catholics, 2,000,000 are Jews, and of other than Protestant beliefs, leaving only 25,000,000 Protestants in America. Another fact of striking importance shows that the church membership is increasing at a rate of only 600,000 a year, while the population is increasing at the rate of 1,620,000 in the same length of time." Is there a need for Christianizing Christendom?

If we give the twelve hours a year for the Missionary Society and still have a balance on hand of 8,736 hours, can we not give six additional hours, one each for six weeks, to the study of a book that reveals such appalling conditions? And shall we not most earnestly pray that God will use this message of Dr. Morris in bringing to us a consciousness of our personal responsibility for doing all in our power to remedy these conditions?

DELEGATES TO THE SYNODICAL, DURHAM, NOVEMBER 4-5.

The following is a complete list of the representatives to the Synodical Auxiliary which meets in Durham, November
(Continued on page 22)

Buena Vista—Yesterday I attended the Rally Day exercises at Buena Vista Sunday School, Buena Vista, Va. The program was gotten out by the Presbyterian Committee of Publication. It was captivating and inspiring. After having witnessed this splendid program, I had a great longing to see it carried out in every Sunday School within the bounds of our Assembly. "Most people are willing to do Christian work if they are told just what to do, how to do it, and when to do it."

This program, whose theme is Lighting Our Southland, is one of the best our committee has gotten out, and I feel sure that our Sunday Schools will be deprived of a great treat if it is not rendered by them this fall. It will be perfectly all right to have this program two or three weeks late, I would, therefore, most strongly urge every Sunday School to write for this program and carry it out in detail if possible.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Marlington—Rally day in the Sunday School Sunday morning, October 5, was observed with unusual success. The program throughout abounded with thrills of interest. So impressive was the service that the large congregation present was held spell bound throughout the whole hour's exercise. The exercises of the primary department brought forth applause after applause. The Lightning Up the Southland, an exercise prepared by the Committee of Publication, formed a very interesting and instructive part of the program. The attendance for the day was 246; the offering for Sunday School Extension, $100.
J. M. W.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriages.

McKeown-McCormick—At the residence of bride's father, June 24, 1919, by Rev. Carl B. Craig, Mr. Jas. M. McKeown and Miss Inez McCormick, of Laurinburg, N. C.

Hall-Phillips—At manse, Laurinburg, N. C., October 3, 1919, by Rev. Carl B. Craig, Mr. J. H. Hall, of Hamlet, and Miss Mary B. Phillips, of Rockingham, N. C.

Deaths.

IN MEMORIAM.

Z. A. Hovis.

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom removed from our midst our beloved elder, Zenas A. Hovis, in McGee Presbyterian Church.

Whereas, he was a faithful and loyal officer and Sunday school teacher of the men's class,

Therefore, be it resolved that we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father. That his death makes a vacancy in our church and community. That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, assuring them of our prayers that our Father may comfort them in their irreparable loss. That these resolutions be inscribed to his memory in our session book, a copy be sent to the church papers and a copy be sent to the family of the deceased.

Respectfully submitted,

S. M. Alexander,
E. M. McGee.

IN MEMORIAM.

Stephen Malone Richards.

Among the splendid young men who answered our country's call to arms in the spring of 1917, there could scarcely have been one of sweeter, gentler, braver spirit than Stephen Malone Richards, son of Maj. Jno. G. and Mrs. Bettie Workman Richards, of Liberty Hill, S. C. The only son in a large family, he grew up among his sisters as gentle and, seemingly, as pure-hearted as a girl, but with a thorough-going manliness that quickly won the friendship and admiration of men. He was a Christian from early childhood and a member of the Presbyterian church from his fourteenth year.

In 1915, when he was near his majority, he graduated from Clemson College with the rank of cadet captain and immediately returned to the home of his parents to engage in agriculture while he sought to fill the place of male head of the family to his younger sisters in the almost constant necessary absence of his father. The two years so spent before the fateful spring of 1917 were very full to his loved ones of evidences of his all but matchless unselfishness and consideration of others as well as filled with promises of abundantly full and useful future.

The first day after our country declared war Stephen volunteered for service, and in the month of August was ordered to report at Oglethorpe, whence he was commissioned first lieutenant and stationed at Camp Gordon with the 320th Machine Gun Company and later with the Depot Brigade. In July, 1918, he was transferred to Camp, whence, after qualifying as sharpshooter, he was assigned to the Eighty-seventh Infantry at Camp Dodge. There, on October 9, 1918, he fell a victim of pneumonia following an attack of Spanish influenza. His commission as captain had been confirmed and he would have received this earned promotion in the army of his country the very week in which he was called by the Captain of his salvation to a higher place in another and a better service.

It is the testimony of those who knew him in the camps that he there displayed the same qualities of cheerfulness, unselfishness and Christian manliness that had marked his home and school life. At one of these camps he had much to do with companies of ignorant troops and one who had opportunity to observe was greatly impressed with Lieutenant Richards' kindness to them and the interest and care he took when one of them had died to send all of his little belongings back to the family from which he had come. True, this was a part of the duty of his office, but he made it something more than mere duty—even a service of love for the lowly, such as only spirits like his, touched into a likeness to the great Friend of the friendless, ever render.

Brought back to the home of his childhood, he sleeps among his kindred with the flag of his country wrapped proudly about him—a patriot, a warrior, and a Christian.

"Wrapped in the flag of his country,
Asleep 'neath his own native sod,
He's answered the call of his nation,
He's answered the call of his God.

"Detailed for duty in Heaven,
Promoted to wait on his King,
Marching with saints now victorious,
Learning the songs that they sing.

"They tell me: 'he died for his country,
How noble! How brave! and how true!
But the fact that his Captain was Jesus,
Is the comfort for me and for you.

"Let us stand at "attention" and listen

To the voice of the Comforting One:

'Come to Me with your heart-breaking sorrow—

Just for you I have given My Son.

"Thank God for the Home that awaits us,

Thank God there is room for us all.

Thank God we shall meet him with Jesus,

When we, too, shall have answered the call."

IN MEMORIAM.

Miss Sallie McLean.

Miss Sallie McLean died at the home of her sister, Mrs. R. D. Phillips at 7 o'clock on the morning of September 26, 1919, in the seventy-second year of her age. Two brothers, Hector McLean, of Laurinburg, and John Allan McLean, of Maxton, and one sister, Mrs. R. D. Phillips, of Laurinburg, survive.

She was the eldest daughter of the late Dr. Angus D. McLean and his first wife, who was Mary Jane McEachin. At the early age of fourteen, she was bereft of a loving mother—left at such a tender age the caretaker of the household and the solace and comfort of five brothers and her father, two brothers, older than herself, J. Dickson McLean and A. A. McLean, and three younger ranging in years from eleven down to the little baby brother of four. The latter three were her especial care.

When but a girl, she gave her heart to God and joined Centre Church, later moving her membership to Laurinburg, and still later to Ida Mills. Reared in a Christian home by parents, loyal and true to every cry of distress or want, she exemplified their teaching throughout her long life, always ready to do her share in aiding every good cause.

Hers was a mind well trained in the best schools of her day—old Floral College, which she attended, being then in its prime.

Her father was taken from her soon after she reached young womanhood, and for several years she made her home with her uncle, the late Allan McLean, up to the time of his death, doing all a devoted daughter could have done for him. Upon his death, she removed to Laurinburg, making her home alternately with her brother, Hector McLean, and her only surviving sister, Mrs. R. D. Phillips.

One by one, her loved ones have passed over the river—each sorrow left its impress upon her, still she retained much of her vigor and strength, until two months ago when she suffered a stroke of paralysis. Though at the time of her death she had recovered from

Children's Department

WHAT LETHA LEARNED.

The house seemed very large and very gloomy. Grandfather had a pain in his left knee and did not look at all "grandfatherly" as he sat nursing it in the corner by the fireplace; mother was in bed with a headache, and Aunt Katherine had what Letha called "the grumps," although her aunt did not call it by that name at all. At any rate the house did not seem a very cheery place to linger in, so Letha stole quietly out the back door, her very round, rosy little face as solemn as an owl. She ran out through the back gate into the pasture lot and sat down beneath a weeping willow tree.

"I never saw such a horrid, gloomy house," Letha confided to its graceful branches. "It's just a shame! It isn't right!"

"Well, what are you going to do about it?" a sudden voice demanded.

The weeping willow moved its branches teasingly across her face but did not answer. There was no reply even when Letha repeated the question.

"Well, what can I do?" Letha argued. "If I were bigger and people paid any attention to me I might make them be better natured. But I'm so little—what can I do?"

"You are bigger than I am," said a brave little voice.

Letha jumped, for the voice seemed to come from directly underneath where she was sitting. But there was nothing in the grass but a blue violet—such a blue violet—which was nodding this stroke, the machinery of life seemed to be breaking up, and human means gave no relief. Quietly, while loved ones waited beside her bed, the Spirit left to cross over the river to those "loved and lost awhile," and to her loving Saviour and Heavenly Father.

At noon on Friday a large circle of friends and relatives gathered in the beautiful "God's Acre" at Maxton, where so many of her loved ones sleep. Tenderly, her loving nephews "laid her down to sleep" with their own hands, covered her up, and loving nieces decked the bed with flowers.

"They spoke sweet words above her bier,

Of some all-happy shore,
Where no pain comes to cause a tear,
Ever and ever more;

"They made a garden of her grave,
Where many a fair vine creeps,
And of her tomb, this comfort gave:
She is not dead, she sleeps.

And all the suns dawn for her,
"Who is not dead; but sleeps."

A Loved One.

its dainty head in the breeze. Letha stared at the violet.

"Did you say that?" she demanded. The little head nodded again.

"I didn't know violets could talk," Letha said doubtfully. "Of course I am bigger than you are—but what has that to do with it?"

"I'm small," the tiny voice said, "but I wear my cleanest dress and I smell as sweet as the fairies' perfume."

Letha glanced down hastily at her soiled and crumpled dress and at her grimy face and hands. Mother had asked her to try and "clean up" but with every one so "grumpy" she didn't feel exactly like it.

"Well, I know I am not very clean," Letha admitted, "but that hasn't anything to do with the people at the house being cross. I can't do anything to help that."

"You can do as I do," a new voice said in a caressing murmur.

Letha started up, looking down at the little clear water stream that bubbled over the rocks at her feet. "I believe that was the brook," she remarked. "Why—what can you do, brook?"

"I can laugh all day," the brook answered, "and my voice is soft and soothing."

Letha flushed. She could not remember that she had laughed all day and as for her voice being soft and soothing—how many times had Aunt Katherine told her not to whine?

"I can't laugh," she said, "when every one else is so cross."

"Then why don't you imitate me?" a new voice up in the weeping willow branches said.

"That must be the wind," Letha decided. "How could I imitate you?" she demanded. "What do you do?"

"I sing all day in the treetops," the wind said softly, "and hum through the tall meadow grasses. My song is never still."

"I cannot sing," Letha said shortly, "when every one is grumpy. You would not feel like singing either if you lived at our house."

"And what would you feel like doing if you lived up alone in the sky as I do?" asked another voice, so cheery and bright that Letha knew at once it was the voice of the sunbeam that rested upon her cheek.

"You don't ask me what I do," the sunbeam said reproachfully, "because you know I am always shining, shining like a golden thought. I never stop because the clouds beneath the earth and sky are black and glowering but keep shining down on the dark vapors until they float away. I would even shine into your gloomy house if some one would open up the shutters."

Letha sprang to her feet. "I will open up the shutters," she said.

"Good-by," murmured the brook.

"Good luck," murmured the breeze.

"Take me, take me," nodded the violet.

Letha bent and picked the blue violet and was surprised to find that there were a dozen and a half more in the grass. She picked them all.

When she reached home she slipped into her room and changed her dress to one that was crisp and sweet and clean. She washed her face and hands and carefully tied a lavender ribbon upon her light brown hair. Then she put the violets into a tiny green jar and knocked upon her mother's door.

"Oh, how sweet!" her mother cried out as Letha placed the jar beside the bed. "And how sweet you look! Just sweet enough to kiss! I think I'll be well enough to come down pretty soon now."

Letha kissed her and then closing the door carefully behind her ran down the stairs. And as she ran she remembered what the wind had said and commenced to sing a little song, a merry little song.

Grandfather, beside the fireplace, lifted his head and the dark shadow commenced to drift from his face. "That's the first cheerful sound I've heard today," he remarked. "Come over here."

"Just a minute, granddaddy," Letha smiled. "Just as soon as I throw back the shutters and let the sunshine in, as I promised."

When she turned around Aunt Katherine was standing in the doorway and she was smiling! "That's better!" she said. "I thought I must be dreaming when I heard some one really laugh. And you look fresh and sweet as a violet."

"And I sing like the breeze," Letha laughed, "and laugh like the brook."

"And shine like a sunbeam," grandfather said.

"Why—you know!" Letha cried. But grandfather insisted that he did not, so Letha told them all about it.

"Didn't you fall asleep under the weeping willow?" Aunt Katherine asked.

Letha drooped disappointedly. "Perhaps I did," she admitted. "I remember I did feel pretty drowsy. Oh, do you suppose I dreamed it all?"

"I don't care if you did," grandfather asserted stoutly. "You learned a secret from the brook and the breeze and the flower and the sunbeam, anyway."

"That's so—I did," laughed Letha. —Faye N. Merriman, in Zion's Herald.

Sancho Is Right Again.

He holds much who holds his tongue.
—Sancho Panza.

Woman's Auxiliary.

(Continued from page 19)

4-5. This list includes the Synodical officers, the Presbyterial officers, the delegates-at-large elected from each Presbyterial, and the members of the permanent committees of the Synodical.

All who expect to attend the Synodical meeting are asked to notify at once Mrs. E. G. McIver, West Durham, giving day and hour of arrival.

Through a mistake a partial list of delegates was published last week.

Yours,

Mrs. S. A. Robinson,

Secretary N. C. Synodical Auxiliary.

From Wilmington Presbyterial Auxiliary—Mrs. Jackson Johnson, Winnabow; Mrs. J. A. Brown, Chadburn; Mrs. J. T. French, Wilmington; Mrs. W. M. Baker, Mt. Olive; Mrs. A. W. Southerland, Mt. Olive; Mrs. J. O. Carr, Wilmington; Mrs. J. R. Phipps, Pollocksville; Mrs. W. O. Singletary, Warsaw; Mrs. A. D. Trust, East Arcadia; Miss Alice Berhends, Wilmington; Mrs. D. B. Herring, Rose Hill; Mrs. D. T. Caldwell, Wilmington; Mrs. W. T. Bannerman, Wilmington; Mrs. J. T. Borden, Wilmington; Mrs. Eugene Johnson, Wilmington.

From Fayetteville Presbyterial Auxiliary—Mrs. A. G. Carter, Sanford; Mrs. E. C. Murray, St. Pauls; Mrs. W. S. Lacy, Gulf; Mrs. W. A. West, Fayetteville; Miss Della McGougan, St. Pauls; Mrs. C. C. McAlister, Fayetteville; Miss Sara Williams, Fayetteville; Miss Mary Patterson, R. F. D., Laurinburg; Mrs. J. McR. Bracey, Rowland; Mrs. Z. E. Matthew, Laurinburg; Mrs. Lula McG. Muse, Cameron; Mrs. D. H. Shaw, R. F. D., Laurinburg; Mrs. J. T. Johnson, Aberdeen; Mrs. J. R. Page, Aberdeen; Mrs. W. L. Wilson, Jackson Springs; Mrs. C. D. Smith, Rowland; Mrs. J. M. McIver, Gulf; Mrs. Chas. Rankin, Fayetteville.

From Orange Presbyterial Auxiliary—Mrs. W. E. White, Graham; Mrs. George Oldham, Yanceyville; Mrs. W. H. Osborne, Greensboro; Mrs. Lynn B. Williamson, Graham; Mrs. F. D. Fanning, Durham; Mrs. R. Murphy

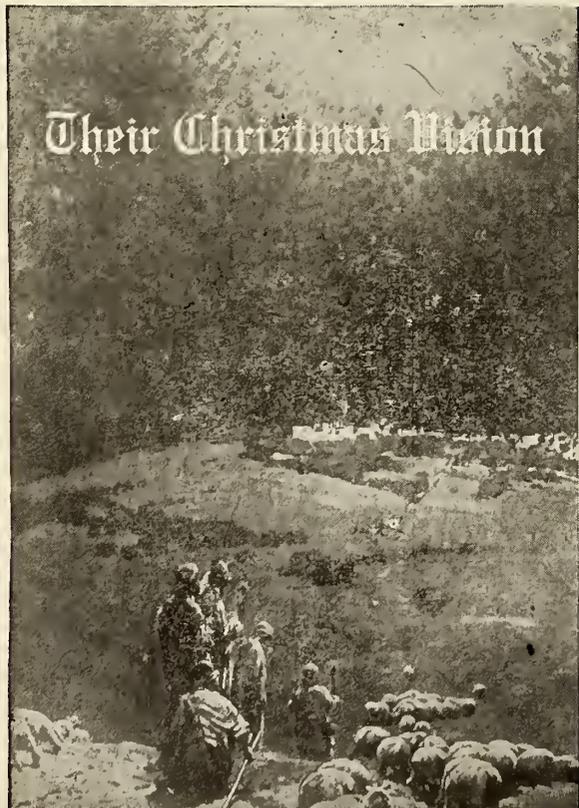

Williams, Greensboro; Miss Virginia Padgette, Pelham; Mrs. R. C. Bernau, Greensboro; Mrs. L. T. Wilds, Lexington; Mrs. Geo. T. Wynne, Durham; Mrs. A. W. McAlister, Greensboro; Mrs. J. L. Brockman, Greensboro; Mrs. Shepherd Strudwick, Hillsboro; Mrs. O. G. Jones, Greensboro.

From Albemarle Presbyterial Auxiliary—Mrs. George Howard, Tarboro; Mrs. R. B. Lacy, Raleigh; Mrs. J. M. Baker, Tarboro; Miss Mary Owen Graham, Raleigh; Mrs. S. K. Phillips, Greenville; Mrs. J. H. Harrison, Roanoke Rapids; Mrs. J. F. Beckwith, Roanoke Rapids; Miss Mary Dodson, Kinston; Mrs. J. W. Thackston, Raleigh; Mrs. C. E. Brown, Oxford; Mrs. J. A. Green, Wilson; Mrs. W. T. Clark, Wilson.

From Mecklenburg Presbyterial Auxiliary—Mrs. R. N. Page, Biscoe; Mrs. C. B. Choate, R. 3, Charlotte; Mrs. Pat H. Williams, Charlotte; Mrs. J. H. Howell, Charlotte; Mrs. R. S. Burwell, Huntersville; Mrs. Cleo P. Allen, Wadesboro; Miss Kate Neal, R. 8, Charlotte; Miss Louise Parks, Charlotte; Mrs. N. S. Alexander, R. 9, Charlotte; Mrs. C. H. Little, R. 2, Charlotte; Mrs. A. T. Graham, Charlotte; Mrs. J. R. Irwin, Charlotte; Mrs. F. S. Neal, R. 8, Charlotte.

From Concord Presbyterial Auxiliary—Mrs. W. B. Ramsay, Hickory; Miss Mamie McElwee, Statesville; Mrs. W. R. Grey, Davidson; Mrs. E. D. Brown, R. 1, China Grove; Mrs. R. W. Orr, Statesville; Mrs. E. B. Watts, Statesville; Mrs. C. Watkins, Statesville; Mrs. J. C. Black, Davidson; Mrs. A. Currie, Davidson; Mrs. C. M. Richards, Davidson; Mrs. Frank R. Brown, Salisbury; Miss Johnnie Coit, Salisbury; Mrs. De Long Little, Lenoir; Mrs. George Banner, Marion; Miss Mary Dickson, Morganton; Mrs. E. F. Reid, Lenoir.

From Kings Mountain Presbyterial Auxiliary—Mrs. S. A. Robinson, Gastonia; Miss Corinne Puett, Dallas; Mrs. R. M. Reid, Gastonia; Mrs. P. P. Murphy, Lowell; Mrs. J. Frank Jenkins, Shelby; Miss Ruby Costner, Dallas; Miss Edith Hambright, Grover; Mrs. L. M. Hull, Shelby; Mrs. R. S. Reinhardt, Lincolnton; Mrs. H. M. Eddleman, Gastonia; Miss Mary Ragan, Gastonia; Mrs. F. P. Hall, Belmont; Mrs. R. S. Abernethy, Lincolnton; Mrs. G. V. Patterson, Lowell.

"Their Christmas Vision"

This is the title of a program prepared by the Executive Committee for use in the churches and Sunday Schools of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

It is attractive in appearance. Interesting and instructive in material. Makes a strong appeal for the dedication of life to the service of Christ and His Church.

Its use will help carry out the Presbyterian Progressive Program.

It will be sent in sufficient quantities for use in any of the Presbyterian churches and Sunday Schools, free of cost.

Order now. Begin to prepare for the service, December 21, 1919—the day appointed by the General Assembly.

Order from the Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, Henry H. Sweets, Secretary, 410 Urban Building, Louisville, Ky.

Miscellaneous

WHAT THEY SAY.

In one paper we read there's a great wave of public sentiment for the league sweeping over the land, and in another that an equal wave is setting in against it. Mr. Wilson's trip is expected to settle the problem what are the wild waves saying.—Philadelphia North American.

WONDERFUL EGG PRODUCER.

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs, so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 3257 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1.00 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the tonic costs you nothing. Send a dollar today. Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

WORK AND SAFETY.

The New York papers of last week told of how one man had been murdered by a gang of laborers who attacked him because he was at work while they were on strike, and from various parts of the country come reports of riots and bloodshed and the killing of men who have dared to assert their right to work, untrammelled by union labor regulations.

Many persons freely and justly denounce lynching, even when it is for the blackest crime on earth, but how many denounce with equal energy the crime of murdering and lynching a man merely because he wishes to work without being a member of a union?

One community lynches a fiend, the vilest on earth, and the pulpit and the press ring with denunciations of the whole community and the state itself. In another community a wholly innocent man is coldly murdered by a diabolical gang of cutthroats simply because he works while they strike, and the pulpit and the press are as silent as the grave!

Do they lack the moral courage to denounce the criminals in labor unions who murder men for no crime whatever while denouncing the criminals who murder a fiend by lynching him for the most fearful crime known to humanity? —Manufacturers' Record.

WANTED

A capable and consecrated man to be treasurer and business manager of our Congo Mission in Africa. A rare opportunity of Christian service. Write to the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, box 330, Nashville, Tenn.

You are invited to call and see our fall offerings in "Queen Anne," "William and Mary," "Louis VI," "Italian Renaissance," "Colonial," and "Artcraft" Dining Room Suits in the three most popular woods—American Walnut, Fumed Oak and Mahogany

W. T. McCOY & CO.
CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Join THE Presbyterian Standard Piano Club

SEE ANNOUNCEMENT ON PAGE 31

A Healing Spring at Your Door

Here is a very unusual and peculiar offer—one that you rarely meet with. It evidences the greatest faith on the part of its maker and inspires confidence. It is made by an earnest and enthusiastic man who not only thinks but knows from personal experience that he is right. He proposes to give you the equivalent of a three weeks' visit to a mineral Spring of most remarkable restorative powers and make no charge if you are not benefited. His offer has been accepted by over a hundred thousand sufferers in all parts of the United States and his records show that only two in a hundred, on the average report no benefit.

If you suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, kidney, bladder or liver disease, uric acid poisoning, or other condition caused by impure blood, take Mr. Shivar at his word and sign and mail the following letter:

Shivar Spring,
Box 4-K, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial in accordance with instructions contained in booklet, you will send and if it fails to benefit my case you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

Name
Address
Shipping Point

RUGS CLEANED PERFECTLY.

Every house-keeper will be glad to learn that rugs as well as garments can be cleaned perfectly at a very low cost by our faultless cleaning process. This method of cleaning rugs and clothing restores the newness and freshness, and enables you to get better and longer service from your rugs and your clothing.

Send us a trial order. Parcel Post gives prompt and inexpensive delivery. Satisfaction is guaranteed. Charlotte Laundry, Charlotte, N. C.

AGENTS, PREACHERS, GOOD MEN AND WOMEN WANTED

at once for "AMERICA'S PART IN THE WORLD WAR" with introduction by Gen. Pershing. Fastest selling book ever published: 600 pages, over 100 full page engravings and colored plates. Authentic. Complete outfit mailed free. Best terms. Freight paid. Credit given. Send 10 cents for large illustrated catalog of 400 books and Bibles, retailing at 50 cents to $28.00, with terms to agents. Make from $5.00 to $50.00 a day. Now is the time to get holiday business. Make money and do good by distributing our most valuable and salable books and Bibles. F. W. Mead Publishing Co., Dept. 10, Masonic Temple, Middletown, N. Y.

GUARDS FUTURE WITH LIBERTY BONDS.

"In this age of unrest, it is good business policy to safeguard our future responsibilities with government securities." That represents the attitude of the Order of Maintenance Employees, an organization of railway men, expressed through its president, W. V. Stafford.

The stand taken by the order was expressed in a communication from Mr. Stafford to the savings division of the Treasury Department announcing that the organization had purchased $10,000 in Liberty Bonds in the open market. These purchases were not isolated investments but followed the general financial policy of the railway employees. Mr. Stafford declared Liberty Bonds would be sound as long as anything is sound, and that if the majority of Americans hold these securities, they necessarily must be interested in the stability of the government.

In his letter, Mr. Stafford said in part: "We do not wait for conventions, but from time to time invest our money in accordance with the recommendation of the officers and, to be brief, since the United States first issued a call for loans from its people, we have put every cent of our surplus into United States war securities. Since the closing of the Victory Loan we have purchased $10,000 in the open market.

"We shall follow this policy because we believe that in this age of unrest it is a good business policy to safeguard our future responsibilities with government securities. They will be sound as long as anything is sound.

"We also believe it is patriotic to encourage the citizen to invest in government securities directly or indirectly. If the majority of our people hold government bonds, then the majority certainly are interested in the stability of the government.

"In our small way we shall be not only glad, but proud of the opportunity to aid, so far as possible, in carrying out the government's plans as outlined by the Treasury Department."

160 HENS—1500 EGGS.

Mrs. H. M. Patton, Waverly, Mo., writes: "I fed 2 boxes of 'More Eggs' and got 1500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly 21 days." This scientific tonic has made big egg profits for thousands of poultry raisers all over the U. S. It revitalizes the hens, tones them up and makes them lay all the time. Get ready now and make big profits out of your hens this winter. A $1.00 package will double the egg production and a million dollar bank guarantees to refund your money if you are not entirely satisfied. Send $1.00 now to E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, 3257 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., and get a season's supply of "More Eggs." Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

No heart has had a thorough education which has not passed through the school of grief.—Mellor.

Faith sees the future as present.—Maclaren.

419 Eggs From 20 Hens in 30 Days

Mr. Dougherty Got This Result in October. Plan is Easily Tried.

"I tried Don Sung and the results were far past any expectations. I got 419 eggs in 30 days from 20 hens while moulting. I think this is wonderful, as they hardly laid at all before while moulting."—Frank Dougherty, 5940 E. 11th St., Indianapolis.

Mr. Dougherty bought $1 worth of Don Sung tablets in October and wrote the above letter in November. Figure his profit on 35 dozen eggs from hens that formerly laid little or nothing.

This may sound too good to be true, but it costs nothing to find out. We'll make you the same offer we made him.

Give your hens Don Sung and watch results for one month. If you don't find that it pays for itself and pays you a good profit besides, simply tell us and your money will be promptly refunded.

Don Sung (Chinese for egg-laying) works directly on the egg-laying organs, and is also a splendid tonic. It is easily given in the feed, improves the hen's health, makes her stronger and more active in any weather, and starts her laying.

Try Don Sung for 30 days and if it doesn't get you the eggs, no matter how cold or wet the weather, your money will be refunded by return mail. Get Don Sung from your druggist or poultry remedy dealer or send 50 cents for a package by mail prepaid. Burrell-Dugger Co., Columbia Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind. 466

Plant Your

Cotton Alleys

Make them produce a profit as well as the rows. Plant

Clover

in your cotton alleys and take advantage of the large profits on hay, now selling around $60 per ton. It will save a season, double the yield of the crop following and build up your soil.

Inoculate your seed with NitrA-germ and be sure of a good profit.

READ THIS RECORD

"I purchased NitrA-germ for one acre alfalfa and four acres crimson clover last season. I wish to say my alfalfa is as near perfect as I could wish. I have already cut it three times and am sure of two more cuttings. I secured a good stand of clover and have corn planted on the land where the clover was sowed, and am certain I will make forty per cent. more corn on this land than I will on the land adjoining it, planted the same day where there was no clover. I am highly pleased with NitrA-germ for growing alfalfa and clover and expect to use more this season. I am sure that clover is the best and cheapest method of fertilizing land and I am equally sure that NitrA-germ will grow it."

MARION BRYANT, Wilson Co., N. C.

NitrA-germ costs $2 Per acre delivered.

Write for FREE Book No. J-6.

NitrA-Germ, Savannah, Ga.

They Kept the Faith-- Shall We Forget?

$100,000 on October 26
From Southern Presbyterians

To aid the Protestants of France and Belgium rebuild their ruined churches, and keep alive
the faith once delivered to the saints.

$25,000 on Same Sunday
For Our Soldiers

See That the Cause is Presented in Your Church on Reformation Sunday

Let YOUR GIFT Speak For You

FOR SOUR LAND.

Sour land is frequently the cause of crop failure, though other causes get the blame. Most lands have a goodly supply of plant foods (nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash), but when the soil is in a soured condition the food elements, even though abundant, are not available. They are insoluble and of no value to the plant.

To avail oneself of these plant foods one must necessarily sweeten the soil by neutralizing the acidity; must decompose the soil and set the plant foods free.

It is not always easy to tell when land is sour. Frequently many crops are ruined and much labor, money and time lost before the real cause of the trouble is found. It is unwise to try to raise a crop on sour land. Every farmer should keep a record of the acidity of his soil at all times. It will save in the long run.

The method is simple. Litmus paper is manufactured for the purpose. It would be simple work to obtain some litmus paper and test samples of the various types of soil taken from various sections of the farm. Dampen the soil a bit and apply one end of the litmus paper strip. If the dampened end remains blue the soil is not sour. If it turns pink the soil is sour and needs attention.

Sour soil is not such a very serious problem, though it is one that is frequently overlooked. Lime carbonate will quickly neutralize the acids, release the bountiful supply of plant foods and sweeten the soil. Tests throughout the country have proven its worth. Relco-Marl which contains over 90 per cent lime carbonate when applied to the land at any time will affect the very next crop and its effect will last for over five years. Two tons to the acre is enough for the average land. The yield is immediately increased and as it is a natural soil builder the land will improve from year to year. It is inexpensive and easily handled. Free litmus papers for testing your soil, literature and prices may be had by addressing Dept. 8-G. Roanoke Lime Co., Roanoke, Va.

Incidentally, Relco-Marl when placed in the stable floor under a blanket of leaves, sawdust, etc., acts as the very best absorbent. It holds the ammonia in the manure that otherwise would be lost particularly the liquid manure and will make each head of stock save over $20.00 per year in your ammonia bill. At the same time it improves the mechanical condition of the stable manure and acts as a deodorizer.

Because we love God, we must love man, who is His temple, wherein He abides.—Bossuet.

TWO KINDS OF FOOLS.

As a man may be rich and not know it, so also a man may be a fool and not realize it. There are two kinds of fools. There is the intellectual fool, often known as the lunatic or imbecile, or the man who is half witted. We look at him in pity and say: "He is not all there." This is an intellectual fool. But there are moral fools, men who are intellectually bright, sometimes even brilliant, and who nevertheless are fools. They are fools because they do foolish things. They throw away their most valuable possessions. Was not Robert Burns a fool? His intellect was fine. His intelligence was large. His brain structure was remarkable. His genius was great, and yet he was a fool. When he became famous as a poet he spent his evenings at banquets and guzzled wine. "What," asks Carlyle, "had he to do at such banquets, blending the thick smoke of intoxication with the fire that had been lent him from heaven?" A man who is dowered with the finest gifts and who burns himself up in alcohol and lust is most assuredly a fool.—Charles E. Jefferson.

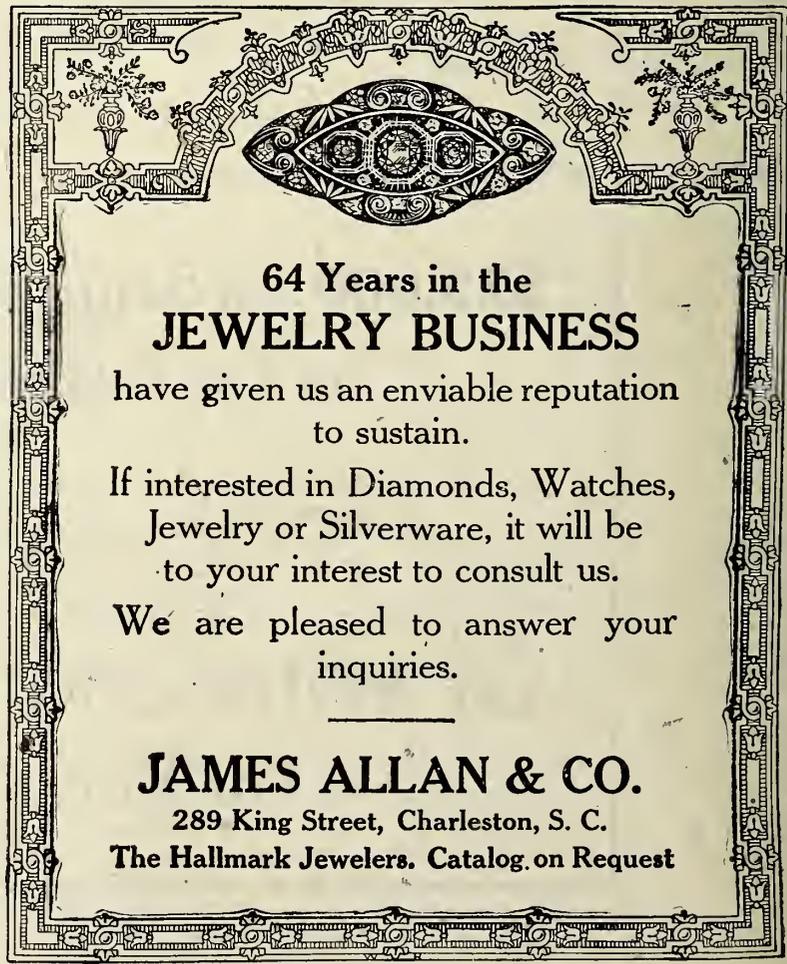

"I will wait on Thy name." This is the attitude of the greatest saint and of the highest angel.

The Most Wonderful
Half Price Feast
in the 40 years' history of the Christian Herald
20 scintillating crisp human interest. Stories
20 pages of world news Studies
50 inspirational educational Feature Articles
70 wonderful interpretative Editorials
70 helpful daily, devotional Meditations
10 short, pithy, worth while Sermons
200 or more black and white Pictures

10 beautiful covers usually in several Colors
hundreds of other features, all available at half price to a million new (trial) subscribers in the next

10 big satisfy- ing weekly 25c issues for

The Christian Herald is one of America's really great religious and social institutions. It is the best loved and most widely read inter denominational family magazine in the world. It has been the means of relieving more distress, feeding more hungry, clothing more naked than all other periodicals combined. It is dedicated to the service of humanity. It is at the forefront in the effort to make of every church a community center for social and religious uplift. It tells the important news of every denomination, but it is the organ of none. You and your family need the stimulus, the inspiration, the vision of world service the Christian Herald gives. A million new short term subscribers before 1920 is the Christian Herald's goal. Its ten weeks half price offer is made without profit to the Christian Herald. 25 cents in coin or stamps sent now (at the Christian Herald's risk) is guaranteed to give you more and better literature than you ever could imagine possible. Address: The Christian Herald, 416 Bible House, New York.

64 Years in the
JEWELRY BUSINESS

have given us an enviable reputation
to sustain.

If interested in Diamonds, Watches,
Jewelry or Silverware, it will be
to your interest to consult us.

We are pleased to answer your inquiries.

JAMES ALLAN & CO.
289 King Street, Charleston, S. C.
The Hallmark Jewelers. Catalog on Request

Join THE Presbyterian Standard Piano Club

SEE ANNOUNCEMENT ON PAGE 31

BELK BROS.

Carolina's Largest Distributors
of Merchandise

BELK BROS.

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA

Belk Suits—one of the lines which has made our Clothing Department famous all over the State—made especially for us.

The fabrics are all Wool Worsteds, Serges and Cashmeres—made in men's and young men's models—Regulars, Longs, Stouts, English, Skirt with Belt, Long Stouts, Extra Sizes and Stubs. Priced in the usual Belk way—$16.50, $18.50, $19.95, $22.50, $25.00, $29.50, $35.00 and $39.50.

BLUE SERGES—SPECIAL $39.50

We place on sale this week 200 Men's all wool, fine weave 16 and 18 ounce Blue Serge Suits made with good Serge lining. Sizes 34 to 48. Regulars, English, Longs and Stouts. Special $39.50

Schloss, Hamberger and Styleplus Tailored Suits—conservative and young men's models, including the new skirt models with belt. This season's newest Shades, priced $25.00, $29.50, $30.00, $35.00, $39.50, $45.00 and $49.50.

SHOES

SHOES

$100,000.00 worth of Men's, Women's and Children's Shoes bought six to eight months ago on sale at less than manufacturer's price today.

Men's Dress Shoes in Belk, Ralston and Reynolds makes, $3.50, $4, $5.00, $6.50, $7.50, $9.50, $10.00 and $12.50.

Men's Work Shoes for hard wear, $2.00, $2.50, $3.00, $3.50, $4.00, $5.00 and up to $7.50.

Women's Dress Shoes, brands as follows: Belk, Godman and Queen Quality, $2.00 to $14.00.

Women's solid leather coarse shoes in button and lace, $5.00 values, our leader $4.00

HATS HATS HATS

We have them in new shapes and colors, snappy styles for the college chaps. Neat shapes for dad that will make him look younger.

Stetson's, Vanity, No-Name and Belk at $7.50, $7.00, $6.00, $5.00, $4.00, and $3.00.

Overcoats for men and young men, snappy skirt and conservative models. Ranging in price from $8.95 to $39.50.

Men's Dress - Pants. Sizes from 29 to 54 waist, 29 to 37 long. Priced at $2.98, $3.50, $5.00, $6.95, $7.95 and up to $12.50.

LADIES SUITS and DRESSES

Our new buyers are constantly in touch with the best and most reliable manufacturers in Ladies' Cloths, hence we give you the Latest Styles, Models and materials. Buying for 22 stores gives us Better Values. We give Better Values. Serges, Velours, Velvets, Tricotine, etc., all regular sizes, also large sizes, 34s to 46s. $19.95, $24.95, $29.95, $39.95, and up to $100.00.

SEPARATE SKIRTS

Regular or extra sizes. Plain Serges, Tricotines, etc., Blacks and Blues and quite a range of patterns. In Plaids or Stripes, all the new things $2.95, $4.95, $5.95, $6.95, $7.95 on up. Table Oil Cloths.....25c 45-inch 50c values Table Oil Cloth...25c 10,000 yards Curtain Goods in all kinds of materials, 36-inch wide, plains or borders.....12 1/2c, 15c, 18c, 19c, 25c

READY-TO-WEAR DEPARTMENT

We have the largest and most complete Ready-to-Wear Department in North or South Carolina.

HOSIERY DEPARTMENT

Buster Brown Hosiery for Women and Children, Lisle thread, colors Black, Brown and White, all sizes, 39c, 48c, and 50c.

Burson Hosiery for Women, Blacks, Cordovans and Whites, none better than Burson's. Regular and out sizes. 25c, 35c, 39c, 48c, 50c, 69c.

SILK HOSE.

We carry several standard makes, Kay-sers, Phoenix, Gordon's, Merrill's, G. & A. Wise. All colors and sizes. Extra sizes. Thousands of dollars in Silk Hosiery—Real Silk, $1.39, $1.49, 1.98, $2.25, $2.50, $2.95.

Silk Hose and Boot Silk at 69c, 89c, 98c, $1.19, $1.35, $1.49.

All colors, all sizes.

LADIES' AND MISSES COATS

We carry in stock all kinds of Coats, all sizes from 3 years old up.

"LOOK AT MY WHEAT FIELD."

The Rev. C. E. Parker, a missionary in Vikarabad, India, now in this country, tells this story of the religious awakening in India:

"After a long journey I was sitting under a tree, resting, waiting for breakfast, when a high-caste man came toward me. I asked him his name and he said that I knew it.

"I do not recall your name, but I recall your face," I replied. And I said that it does not make any difference about our name; the main thing is about our relationship to Jesus Christ.

"What do you worship?"

"He immediately answered, 'Jesus Christ.'

"I said, 'No, you do not; you say that to please me.'

"He replied, 'I do; I think of Him when I lie down, when I get up and when I go to work.'

"Who taught you of this Christ?"

"He answered, 'You taught me in this village three years ago. You taught me to pray, "Jesus Christ, have favor on me and forgive my sins."'

"Yes, that is right, but you cannot do that and worship idols.'

"You told me that three years ago and I have not worshipped an idol since. You also told me to teach everyone else that prayer, which I have done.'

"He called another man coming across a field and asked him to repeat the prayer, which he did immediately. He called some other men and they were all able to repeat the prayer.

"Then I asked him, 'Has Jesus heard it?'

"He said, 'Look at my wheat field.'

"I answered, 'What about your wheat field?'

"He responded, 'There was one spot where nothing would grow, and you said that if you worship Jesus Christ and cease worshiping idols Jesus Christ will not only forgive your sins, but He

CUTS AND BRUISES,

burns, stings, sores, boils and the numerous other mishaps amount to little. If left alone, however, and if aided by the careless touch of a dirty hand an ugly sore will result and frequently blood poison. It is dangerous. Don't trifle. Apply Gray's Ointment immediately. It will instantly soothe the wound, cleanse the sore, kill the germs and put it on a steady road to recovery. Keep it on your shelf for every emergency. Its constant use for a hundred years has made it a family word in every household. Ask your druggist. If he can't supply you send his name to W. F. Gray & Co., 843 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., and you will receive a liberal sample free.—Adv.

"In the A. E. F. With an Artist"

The sketch book and diary of Lieut. J. B. Mallard. Send $1.00 for your copy to

J. B. MALLARD

Box 625

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

YOUR FACE?
Is the Complexion Muddy, Tanned, Freckled?
If troubled with skin eruptions, sunburn, pimples, try
PALMER'S SKIN SUCCESS SOAP
It cleanses, softens and clears the skin and tends to remove sunburn, tan, freckles, blackheads, pimples and eczema.
Thoroughly antiseptic. Ask your druggist, or write for free samples to
THE MORGAN DRUG CO.,
1521 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

AVOID INFLUENZA
and its dreaded ally, Pneumonia, by using
GOWAN'S Rub-It-On 25c. 50c. $1.00
FOR COLOUS GROUP, PNEUMONIA
The original excellent external remedy. Keep the organs in good condition, using GOWAN'S LAXATIVE KIDNEY PILLS—25c. Satisfaction guaranteed if directions are followed. Gowan's reduces fevers and helps the heart. Send for sample. Gowan Medical Co., Concord, N. C.

Your Fall Suit

is at Berry's. For 40 years we've been selling the leading North Carolina families men's and boys' clothing. We know your wants and your tastes.

☞ Samples Upon Request.

O. H. Berry & Co.
ESTABLISHED 1879

MAIN AT ELEVENTH RICHMOND, VA.

Rocky River Springs School

For Boys

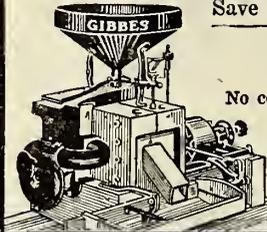

Thoroughly Christian. A Preparatory School for Boys. Moderate Cost: Fall term opens Sept. 23. Endorsed by Mecklenburg Presbytery.

For Announcement and Information, address

PROF. C. E. WELLS, Principal, AQUADALE, N. C.

Grind Your Corn the Simple Way

Delicate, Complicated Machinery is neither necessary nor economical. Save money in grinding your grain with—

The Gibbes Corn Mill

Simple—Fast—Economical—Durable

No complicated parts, whole machine easily handled. With ball-bearing system it is light running and rapid, requiring very little power. Little wear, smooth running, seldom a part to replace. Made of the best of materials. Absolutely guaranteed. For illustrated literature and prices address—

GIBBES MACHINERY CO., Dept. A-2, Columbia, S. C.

CHARLOTTE MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS

MEMORIALS OF QUALITY

"WE LEAD"

Quality First

Prices Right

Workmanship

Unsurpassed

Memorials in Silver Georgia Marble are unsurpassed in beauty and durability.

CHARLOTTE MARBLE & GRANITE WORKS

WEST 7th ST. AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY Cemetery Gate Phone 281-CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Join THE Presbyterian Standard Piano Club

SEE ANNOUNCEMENT ON PAGE 31

will make everything better, and He has done so. The dry spot in my field bears abundantly.'

"'You have done very well' was my comment, 'but there is one other step. Will you receive baptism in Christ's name?'"

"'I know that,' he replied, 'but I cannot be baptized now. These men in this village, in my village, and in two other nearby villages could be baptized now, but that would spoil everything. We have taught them and we are teaching others, and when all believe in Christ we will come together and be baptized.'"

The Centenary will enable these converts and thousands more to be baptized and brought into the Church.

CHURCH ENVELOPES. Double and single envelope systems. Samples and prices sent upon request.
Double Envelope Corporation, Roanoke, Va.

Cancer Treated Successfully at the Kellam Hospital

The record of Kellam Hospital is without parallel in history, having restored, without the use of the Knife, Acids, X-Ray or Radium, over ninety per cent. of the many hundreds of sufferers from cancer which it has treated during the past twenty-two years. We want every man and woman in the United States to know what we are doing.

KELLAM HOSPITAL, 1617 W. Main St., Richmond, Va.

TEACHERS: Can place you now $60 to $150. Fifty to hundred urgent calls daily, best schools and colleges. Special enrollment. Three offices: Columbia, Chattanooga, Richmond. Write today.
SOUTHERN TEACHERS' AGENCY, Columbia, S. C.

Ladies, Attention! Here is an offer that will bring joy to the hearts of the Crochet and Tatting workers. Complete Crochet Library; just think of 1354 Standard Original Designs, all illustrated by actual photographs with complete directions for working.
No. 9 Yokes, Corset Covers and Nightgowns 16 cents
" 11 Tatting, Waists, etc. - - - 16 cents
" 13 Towels, Slips, Sheets - - - 16 cents
" 12 Patchwork for Quilts, etc. - - - 25 cents
contents, 29 designs for Quilts. Send stamps.
LACLEDE BOOK CO. 816 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

PREPARE FOR A LARGER SALARY

In times of Peace prepare for a better job at a larger salary. Modern business demands trained men and women experts. The better the training the larger your salary will be. Today our graduates are in the front ranks of modern business. Enroll with this well-equipped business college, and help to make your future success secure. Handsome catalogue mailed on request. You can enter any time. School open all summer.

Kings Business College
Raleigh, N. C. and Charlotte, N. C.

There's Quality
In Old Clothes

Many of the old suits of last year's purchase, tho soiled have more real good in them than suits of much higher price of today. While prices have increased quality has decreased.

Let Ledbetter's Bring it Out.

Our prices will make the old clothes new again. Get them out and mail it today.

Fancy Dyers and Dry Cleaners of Suits, Dresses, Sport Coats, Silks, Furs, Gloves, Velvets, Feathers, Ribbons, Portiers, Rugs, Carpets, Blankets. Hats cleaned and blocked. Address, Ledbetter's, Rocky Mount, N. C.

Kentucky Theological Seminary
Louisville, Kentucky

Able faculty. Course of study comprehensive and adapted to the times. High standards. Practical training. Excellent library facilities. Splendid buildings, with comfortable dormitories. Expenses moderate. Session begins October 1, 1919. For further information write the President.

Charles R. Hemphill

You can now obtain direct by parcel post our famous

Caricol Tea

Millions of pounds of this famous Martindale blend have been sold to the discriminating Philadelphia trade. A blend of several selected growths, it has its own distinctive flavor that is delightful in the cup, hot or when iced. A wonderful tea value that gives you satisfaction and saves money.

Send for a trial package with which we will enclose a list of other Martindale specialties that you can order by parcel post.

Parcel post cost prepaid by us to any point within the fourth zone (from Savannah northward).

1 lb. 55c. 5 lbs. $2.35

THOMAS MARTINDALE & CO.
10th & Market Sts. - Philadelphia, Pa.

*The Classic
6 Rooms & Bath*

Save
On Your New Home

If you contemplate building, our new catalogue will be invaluable to you. It is the Book de Luxe, one of the most elaborate books ever issued. Select your home. From the modest cottage to the imposing mansion—all beautifully displayed. It is the work of some of the leading architects in the country.

Sterling System Homes

are absolutely perfect in every detail. Ready to erect—every part cut to exactness. Nothing for your carpenter to do but put the parts together. All waste of time and material eliminated. This means a tremendous saving to every home builder.

New 1920 Sterling System Book

Don't decide on your home until you have seen it. Valuable building information on every page. An endless variety of plans to choose from. It means a big saving in time and money. Send 10c and coupon below.

Send This Coupon

and 10c and we will send you our De Luxe Book of Sterling Homes. This is one of the most beautiful books ever published. Every prospective home builder should have a copy for the valuable building information it contains.

International Mill & Timber Co., Dept. 1167, Bay City, Mich.
Enclosed find 10c for your 1920 DeLuxe Book of Sterling System Homes.

Name.....
Address.....
City..... State.....

Rather grim facts these which the teachers and preachers have to face in the commonest kinds of unskilled manual labor receiving more than the average teacher to whom we intrust the minds of our children and more than the average preacher who ministers to the soul. The reflection is upon the materialism which will "pay the price" for digging ditches and carrying bricks, but begrudges a fair support for the brain-worker. In one district in Indiana a paroled convict working as a railway section hand receives more than any preacher on the district except four. Half the pastors on that district get less than half the convict's wage. The district superintendent says, "Our preachers are not complaining, but a number are discouraged." Do you blame them? —New York Advocate.

Human nature craves to be both religious and rational; and the life which is not both is neither.—Rev. Aubrey Moore.

WANTED — COMPOSERS of VERSE or MUSIC to write me at once. Brilliant opportunity for good talent. Address, Burrell Van Buren, Suite 2, Grand Opera House, Chicago.

BOOKKEEPING AND SHORTHAND thoroughly taught. Enroll any time. Address Greensboro Commercial School, Greensboro, N. C., for Catalogue. Special Summer Rates now on.

Prepare For a Larger Income

Modern business requires trained men and women. You can earn a much larger salary and be assured always of a good paying position if you take Draughon's standard business courses. Write today for full information.

Draughon's Practical Business College
Knoxville, Tennessee Jacksonville, Florida

NEW SONG BOOKS
For Your Church 8c
A wonderful value; 83 familiar songs of the Gospel, words and music. Used all over the world. Only 83 per hundred for No. 1 or 2, round or shaped notes, and $15 for No. 1 and 2, combined, round notes only. Send 30c for samples. Money back if not pleased.
E. A. K. HACKETT, Dept. No. 56, FT. WAYNE, IND.

Aberdeen & Rockfish Railroad

Between Aberdeen and Fayetteville

Eastbound		Westbound
Daily Ex. Sunday	Mixed Pass.	Daily Ex. Sunday	Mixed Pass.
No. 22	No. 38	No. 41	No. 21
7 30 am	9 10 am	6 41 pm	5 00 pm
ar 8 55 am	10 00 am	Rae ford	lv 3 50 pm
lv 2 10 pm		5 55 pm	ar 2 50 pm
4 00 pm	11 20 am	Ar. Fayetteville Lv.	4 50 pm 1 00 pm

WAGRAM BRANCH

Southbound		Northbound
Daily Ex. Sun.	Mixed	Daily Ex. Sun.	Mixed
No. 11		No. 12
Lv. 10 30 am	Rae ford	Ar. 12 40 pm
Ar. 11 15 am	Wagram	Lv. 12 00 noon

W. A. BLUE, General Supt., Aberdeen, N. C.

Church Furniture
WORK OF THE HIGHEST QUALITY
AT REASONABLE PRICES
Write for Catalogue
BUDDE & WEIS MFG. CO.
JACKSON, TENNESSEE

DAVIS-WAGNER NEW BUILDING, ACCOMMODATING 500 STUDENTS.
Business College
POSITIONS FOR GRADUATES. 306 East Freemason St.
CATALOGUE FREE. NORFOLK, VA.

Announcement....

WE are pleased to announce that, in addition to our already modern facilities, we have secured the services of a Commercial Artist in the person of Mr. J. B. Mallard, and are prepared to furnish promptly original sketches and designs for all classes of commercial work, such as trade marks, monograms, book covers, signatures, etc. Designs in one or more colors.

Inquiries solicited and prompt attention guaranteed.

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD PUBLISHING CO.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

216 N. TRYON ST.

PHONE 643

Get Your Piano Through The Standard Piano Club And Save One-Third The Cost

No matter where you live, nor what style of piano or player-piano you want the Club will save you at least one-third the cost. By "bunching" our orders in a club of one hundred buyers, each gets the rock bottom factory price and saves from one to two hundred dollars according to the style of instrument selected.

But the big saving in price is only one, and by no means the most important, of the many attractive features of the Club. Read the following brief outline, then write for catalogue giving full explanation and particulars.

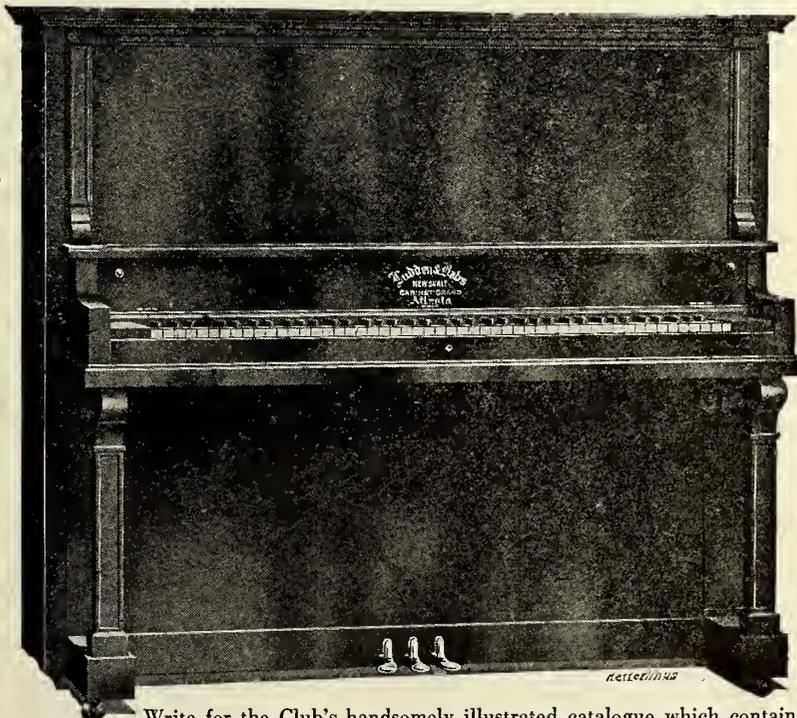

FEATURES OF THE CLUB

1. A clear saving of one-third the cost.
2. Nothing to pay unless, after a thorough trial of the instrument in your own home, you find it perfectly satisfactory and decide to keep it.
3. If, after the free trial, you are delighted with the superior quality of the instrument, the attractive price, the liberal and convenient terms, the protective guarantees and the Club as a whole, then you accept it. But if for any reason, you are not pleased, you simply notify the Club and upon receipt of their shipping instructions return the instrument, freight collect. The trial costs you nothing, puts you under no obligations and is the only perfect protection against every possibility of dissatisfaction.
4. Freight prepaid, safe delivery guaranteed.
5. Easy and convenient terms of payment and a clear receipt to your family in the event of your death before the instrument is fully paid for, provided, of course, you have complied with the printed regulations of the Club.
6. Every instrument is fully guaranteed against all imperfections of workmanship and materials.
7. Liberal allowances for old pianos and organs in exchange for new pianos and new player-pianos.
8. Each purchaser is responsible only for his own order and yet benefits by the combined action of the one hundred buyers.
9. You have a complete line of the best pianos and player-pianos to select from and will find no difficulty in getting an instrument that suits you exactly.
10. Even a child who knows nothing about business is perfectly safe in purchasing through the Club, for there are no tricks, no misrepresentations, no exaggerations, no falsifying, no special prices to special buyers, no imposition, no annoyance by insulting letters, no begging you to keep the instrument, etc., etc.
11. You get an instrument of the highest quality, of the sweetest tone, of rare artistic beauty, of the greatest durability, of the strongest endorsement, and of the most approved reputation and standing.
12. You deal with people of the highest standing, of unquestioned reliability, of greatest experience and efficiency, of clean and honorable reputation, people who would not cheat you if they had the opportunity.
13. Every statement and representation made by the Club is guaranteed both by the Advertising Manager of the Presbyterian Standard and by Ludden & Bates, one of the oldest, largest and most responsible piano firms in America.

Absolutely No Risk in Purchasing Through The Club

The Club assumes all of the responsibility of proving to your entire satisfaction that you are getting an instrument of the highest quality at the lowest possible price. You are the judge and the Club leaves the decision entirely to you. When you have tried the piano or the player-piano we know what your decision will be, for we know what hundreds of other people think of the instruments and the prices. If you would like to see the letters of those who have purchased through the Club we will gladly send you a booklet containing them.

If you would like to save a hundred dollars or more on your instrument and be absolutely sure of perfect and lasting satisfaction, write for your copy of the Club catalogue today. Address

Write for the Club's handsomely illustrated catalogue which contains full description and photo-engravings of the latest art designs in pianos and player-pianos.

Ludden & Bates Standard Piano Club Department Atlanta, Ga.

Sparkles

"What's good for a black eye, Bill?"
"Oh, a small piece of raw beefsteak."
"Yes, but supposin' yer ain't no bloomin' millionaire?"—San Francisco Chronicle.

Hides and Shoes.

An Illinois farmer sold the hide of a calf for $6, then went to town and paid $8 for a pair of shoes. Now he knows what a skin game is.—Los Angeles Times.

"I Remember, I Remember."

I remember, I remember
The house where I was born;
The rent was thirty-two a month,
Which made my father mourn.
He said he could remember when
His father paid the rent;
And when a man's expenses did
Not take his every cent.

I remember, I remember
My mother told my cousin
That eggs had gone to twenty-six
Or seven cents a dozen;
And how she told my father that
She didn't like to speak
Of things like that, but Bridget now
Demanded four a week.

I remember, I remember—
And with a mirthless laugh—
My weekly board at college took
A jump to three and a half.
I bought an eighteen-dollar suit,
And father told me, "Sonny,
I'll pay the bill this time, but, Oh,
I am not made of money!"

I remember, I remember,
When I was young and brave
And I declared, "Well, Birdie, we Shall now begin to save."
It was a childish ignorance,
But now 'tis little joy
To know I'm farther off from wealth
Than when I was a boy.

—New York Tribune.

Jack was looking over the dictionary and once he laughed aloud.
"Why are you laughing," asked Dot.
"Is your book interesting?"
"No, not interesting," answered
Jack, "but amusing. It spells words so different from the way I spell them."
—Sacramento Union.

Ah, the Chestnuts!

"What is an idle jest, Pa?"
"There are no idle jests, my son;
they are working all the time."—Life.

Wise Doctor.

Mrs. Knagg: Did the doctor ask to see your tongue?
Husband: No; I told him about yours and he ordered me away for a rest.—Boston Transcript.

THE WESTMINSTER SCHOOL

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Operated by Kings Mountain Presbytery
$300.00 Per Year

Write for Catalogue to

Rev. T. E. P. Woods, Box 6, Rutherfordton, N. C.

4 Per Cent

Time Certificates of Deposit

They are Interest Bearing. They are Payable on Demand. They Afford a Good Income for Funds Awaiting Permanent Investment

GET ONE

AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY

Charlotte

::

North Carolina

YES, Preachers and Teachers Are Human

They should have no discount and no cheaper railroad fares than you and I. They should be paid for services rendered—amply paid. If he can't earn enough for family use and the nest egg for the future, he made a sad mistake as to family, else he should change his calling instanter.

The Mutual Building & Loan

Will save a man and his family if they're worth saving, but they must help. It furnishes the "sure cure," but boasts no regrets at the demise of a feller who deliberately refuses to take the medicine.

E. L. KEESLER, Sec. & Treas., 25 S. Tryon St., CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Charlotte National Bank

Resources $4,000,000.00

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

PAYS FOUR PER CENT.

On Either Time Certificates of Deposit or Savings Accounts

MAIL ORDER Business Solicited and PROMPT ATTENTION Given

JOHN M. SCOTT	President
W. J. CHAMBERS	Vice-President
J. F. ROBERTSON	Vice-President
W. H. TWITTY	Cashier
C. W. BUTT	Assistant Cashier

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

REV. J. R. BRIDGES, D. D.

EDITORS

REV. R. C. REED, D. D.

VOL. LX.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., OCTOBER 22, 1919.

NO. 42.

OCTOBER AT MONTREAT.

In the Land of the Sky.

By G. W. Belk.

The burrs are brown on the chestnut trees,
And the nuts are falling, one by one;
The ripples of laughter regale the breeze,
The children are having a world of fun.

Up from the south came the storm, last night,
And shook up the woods with a roaring sound;
But morning is dawning, clear and bright,
With chestnuts scattered all over the ground.

With fluttering feet, how they flit away,
And bright, eager eyes flashing here and there,
The children are having a holiday,
And joy and gladness are everywhere.

The hills are dappled with colors rare;
Oh, these are the grandest days of all!
The Spring may boast of her blossoms fair,
But we gather fruit in the golden Fall.

The shy chipmunks, with their bulging jaws,
Are busily culling their Winter store;
Wisely conforming to nature's laws,
And teaching a lesson that some ignore.

But, hark, the children are coming now,
With pockets and buckets just brimming o'er,
And shouting, as ecstasy beams from each brow:
"Oh, we never had so much fun before!"

Editorial

"Phonograph Pastors."

IT IS stated that the Presbyterian New Era Conference proposes to install 3,000 phonograph pastors in as many pastorless churches. This sounds like a joke, but appears in the Literary Digest, and is not in the joke column. So much emphasis is placed on the New Era, and the changed world, and the necessity for new adjustments and adaptations that the installation of phonograph pastors may be a serious proposition. We are afraid to laugh at it lest we should be considered behind the times. Supposing this to be a serious proposition, it merits consideration.

We venture to suggest that the name is not well chosen. A pastor as such does not preach. In our day he flies around in an automobile, hops out and makes a pop call, enters a sick room and ministers spiritual comfort, rushes to a committee meeting and apologizes for being late, takes a spin to the golf links for a little healthful exercise, and is home again at an early hour to receive a delegation from the ladies' society. We can hardly hope that the phonograph will ever acquire sufficient versatility to accomplish a daily round like this.

Manifestly what is contemplated is the use of the phonograph as pulpit supply. Such use is by no means beyond the range of possibility. Indeed, Pastor Russell long ago made it do service in this capacity. He exhibited a series of pictures throughout the country, called a "Panorama of Creation." While these pictures were on the screen, a phonograph behind the curtain, in the deep, rich, sanctimonious tones of Pastor Russell, poured forth learned and elaborate explanations. Presumably that venerable old fraud kept a supply of vocal utterances in cold storage, and could send them out in various directions at the same time, and thus multiply himself manifold.

It is not, therefore, an untried experiment on which our Presbyterian brethren of the New Era are venturing. And restricting our view of the phonograph to its employment as a means of pulpit supply, we may find some things in its favor. Obviously it offers a way to secure cheaply a high order of preaching talent for the feeble churches. It ought not to be difficult to induce a city minister of ten thousand dollar calibre to preach a year's supply of sermons into a phonograph. It would pay him handsomely as he could syndicate the records and supply in this way a number of churches. He could afford to sell at a very moderate price. It seems altogether feasible in this way for an impecunious congregation to have the services of a star performer, with the five or six hundred dollars which they have been paying to a mediocre to supply their pulpit twice a month, they could purchase sufficient records to have preaching every Sunday.

Another advantage, provision could easily be made for endless variety. Neighboring churches could exchange records and each have the pleasure of hearing the other's preacher. A number of churches could pool their resources, and have a supply of circulating records. Then each congregation could have a continuous succession of distinguished preachers.

With a phonograph to do the preaching, the everlasting fitness of things would require that a victrola should furnish the music. This would obviate the danger which always threatens the peace of churches through the sensitiveness of choirs. Neither the phonograph nor the victrola would get peevish, no matter what criticisms were made on their performances.

Just to think of sitting in a little, humble country church and listening Sabbath after Sabbath to a great metropolitan pulpit celebrity, and to music rendered by the world's most famous singers. We shall wait with some impatience the further developments of the Presbyterian New Era Conference.

The Church Paper Coming Into Its Own

No one can read the different denominational papers without being impressed by the fact that a new day has come. The papers are coming into clearer recognition as being a valuable adjunct of church work, whether of the individual pastor or the executive committee.

Recently in Chicago the representatives of the Methodist Church papers and the representatives of their Centenary Committee conferred as to the best means of publicity in their great campaign. They finally agreed that they would employ the church papers as the sole organ of reaching the people, and that in order to make this publicity more effective, they would endeavor to increase the circulation of their papers.

We can recall the history of the church papers in the past. The road behind us, for many years, is strewn with newspaper wrecks, because the church paper was run for the benefit of the church at large and not for the personal support of the owners. Each week the work of the various executive committees was presented to the readers, and the schools and colleges were written up whenever requested, but it rarely occurred to these good people that the editor had to pay for the paper, the ink, and the labor. It is true that some of them were subscribers, but what were a few subscriptions among so many?

The debt piled up, the editor half starved, and in the end he saw the end of his money and the end of his paper. Now there has been a change. The committees for the most part pay for some of the space we give, and the time is rapidly coming when the schools, colleges and summer resorts, even when run in the interest of the church, will have to pay for space. Among other denominations this blessed result is drawing near, but among our own people we believe that it is nearer than among any.

A Commendable Irregularity.

We noted for approval that when the present young pastor of the Central Church of Atlanta was installed, an elder, Professor McCain, of Agnes Scott, gave the charge to the pastor. This was directly in the face of our Book of Church Order. Nevertheless, as much as we prize obedience to law, we not only condone, but heartily approve this irregularity.

When the amendment was before the church, giving the ruling elder the right to deliver the charge to the people, we argued for giving him the further right to deliver the charge to the pastor. Furthermore, we insisted that if he were to be made eligible to deliver the charge to only one of the parties, that one should be the pastor. We argued and insisted in vain. The amendment restricts the privilege of the ruling elder to the function of delivering the charge to the people.

We were pleased that Atlanta Presbytery, the Presbytery to which we belong, disregarded the letter of the law, and acted according to what the law ought to have been.

Our judicious elders should have the opportunity occasionally to tell us preachers what kind of preaching the pew thinks would be good for the people, and how the preacher should dispose of his time so as to best serve the interests of those to whom he is pledging his time and talents.

A Real Crisis.

We do not mean to be an alarmist, but when danger is approaching, the fear of being called one should not make us keep silent. He is a poor student of history who cannot discern in the disorders and strikes of the present day signs of a serious outbreak in time that will equal in horrors any that has prevailed in Europe. It is part of wisdom to recognize this danger, to seek its causes, and, if possible, to seek means of averting it.

Modern inventions have made all the world neighbors, and emphasized the Scripture truth that no man can live to himself or die to himself. There is a community of interests that makes us kin, so that what touches one country also touches the others. The shot that rang out at Sarajevo in Serbia, June 28, 1914, affected the world, and in the year 1919 brought about riots and strikes in our own land, thus teaching that evil influence never dies.

If this war has revealed any one thing, it is that man, however civilized, is after all still a veneered savage, and that Russia is not the only nation whom if you scratch you will find to be a Tartar.

This section has been hitherto wonderfully exempt from industrial disturbances; but they have come to us as the aftermath of war, so that unless something soon is done, labor and capital will be in deadly array. Such a danger is real; but we hope that good sense and patience will in the end make each side realize that it must give as well as take.

To our mind, however, a greater danger lies in the race problem, which though greater, is yet more capable of control, provided that we approach it in the right spirit. One encouraging feature is that the better class of negroes are law-abiding and out of sympathy with the turbulent element, just as the better class of whites have for the negro only the kindest feelings. Unfortunately, this good element has to contend with a bad element. There are bad negroes who are little removed from brutes, and there are bad whites who in point of morals are no better than the low negro. This low order of whites hates the negro as a race, and is ready to seize upon an excuse to justify a killing. The low negro on the other hand is little removed from the animal, and to gratify his passions, he never thinks of the future.

In consequence of this state of affairs the South has made an unenviable reputation. In 30 years there have been 3,224 lynchings, and of these the South furnished 87.9 per cent. There has been of late years some decrease of lynchings, but the decrease in the South the last ten years has been only 52 per cent, while in the North and West it has been 84 per cent.

We cannot defend ourselves by claiming that the South had more cases of rape to deal with, because the records show that from two-thirds to three-fourths of the persons put to death by mobs were not charged with rape. Of the persons put to death by mobs in 1918 only 25 per cent were charged with rape.

Two causes make the situation in the South greater. The first is the unwise attempt, to call it by no other term, to encourage the negro to nurse his grievances, made by pretended friends in the North, through dangerous literature. The second is the returned soldier. That dangerous literature has been scattered among the negroes of the South needs no proof. The recent riots in Arkansas were traced to this cause, and in other portions of the South it is now being collected.

The returned soldier is even a more fruitful cause of trouble. He has been received in France on terms of social equality, and when he returns, the failure to receive it here is naturally a cause of discontent. Then he has stood in the battlefront with his white associates, and now that he has come back, he cannot understand why there should be a difference between them here. He has also realized that he can fight, and he is not averse to trying his powers here.

We must face these facts and try to find a remedy. The remedy is a simple one, if we only are willing to try it. All of us are children of a common Father, and no man has anything that he did not receive, and therefore "Thou shouldst not glory as if thou hast not received it."

We have been blessed by being born amid surroundings that developed in us civilization, while their ancestors were reared amid the wilds of Africa. Let us deal justly and kindly with them, emphasizing their cheerfulness and faithfulness and forgetting their weakness.

Separation to a certain extent is necessary, and it is safer for both races. By separation we mean that while apart they should receive equal advantages. The much despised "Jim Crow car" ought to be one equal in cleanliness and comfort to the one given the whites, and in the courts the black man should receive equal justice with his white brother. Then let us remember that they must not be judged by the same standard that we apply to our white brother. If we claim to be superior, we ought to expect a higher standard by which we are to be judged. The black man rarely cherishes malice, and readily responds to kindness. Try it on him, and you will solve the negro problem.

Theological Unrest.

While the war was going on we imagined that peace would bring peace, and that if we could once stop the fighting all would be well. However it may be in Europe, where the sufferings from the war were naturally more direct, in this country the aftermath of war has been worse than the war itself.

In every department of business there is unrest and uncertainty. Strikes are tying up the business of the country. Labor is making demands that will make matters worse, and the cost of living is getting beyond man's imagination.

This same spirit of unrest is abroad in church circles. Men are being swept from their old beliefs and seem intent upon something new.

Our Methodist brethren are noted for their orthodoxy. Beginning with their great founder, John Wesley, they have ever preached a Gospel of evangelism. Even that church has not escaped the general tendency to novelty of doctrine. They have a commission to prepare a course of study for their preachers, local preachers, class leaders and deaconesses. This course is so filled with radical theology that Conferences over the country, in the Northern Methodist Church, are vigorously protesting against the course of study. Some are willing to let it stand, provided that the commission allow the conservative side to be presented alongside of the radical. It seems that the commission would not agree to this, so that there is rebellion against its autocratic decision.

The Northern Presbyterian Church is sound at the core, but it has a number of men who have brought suspicion upon its orthodoxy by loud talking and indiscreet teaching.

Our own church has long stood as the champion of orthodoxy, and at times we have boasted too much about our soundness, yet those who mingle with our ministers often find that some of them have caught the fever of progressiveness and have been swept away from the old doctrines—though it be said in extenuation that often their sin is that of ignorance.

Amid it all, let us remember that the church is founded upon a rock and that it is in the Lord's keeping.

Contributed

Side Lights On the Colored Woman's Conference at Tuscaloosa

By Mrs. W. C. Winsborough.

ONE can scarcely imagine a more ideal place for holding a conference than Stillman Institute, so far as the natural surroundings are concerned. This year the weather was perfect, the grass green on the spreading campus, while the magnificent trees towered in their beauty high above dormitory and residences. The dormitory has been thoroughly overhauled since last year, new furniture installed, and was much more attractive and sanitary than ever before. Double-decked iron beds have been installed in many of the rooms, with fresh clean mattresses and new pillows. Our delight in the possession of this new furniture, however, received a rude shock when, on the opening night of the conference, we were compelled to purchase one hundred and fifty-six dollars' worth of new sheets and pillow cases for the beds. The students at the institute are required to bring their own bedding, but, of course, the delegates to the conference do not. The Home Mission Committee and the Auxiliary decided to unite in purchasing the bed linen and table linen to be used by the two conferences, the one for colored ministers in the spring and the one for colored women in the fall, so we shall not have to incur this expense again, but it was certainly quite a shock to be called upon suddenly to spend such an amount of money for bed linen.

The delegates began arriving early as usual. Indeed, one had mistaken the date of the conference almost a week, but decided to stay on and wait until the conference should arrive, being able to secure work in the Institute to pay for her expenses. Children were also in evidence as has been in the past, three being in attendance with their mothers. One baby of possibly seven or eight months, the child of the wife of one of our colored ministers, served the very useful purpose of becoming an object lesson in the nurse's hands as she demonstrated to the delegates the proper way to bath and dress an infant. The baby seemed to enjoy the demonstration as much as the onlookers, which was saying quite a good deal.

The delegates had their meals at long tables stretched in the dining room. These tables are attractively covered with tablecloths donated by the women of Salem Church, Tuscaloosa, and every meal saw the tables with bouquets of fresh flowers and laden with wholesome, plain and appetizing food. The meals were served by the delegates themselves, the cooking being done by experienced hands in the kitchen. The bedrooms were also kept in order by the delegates, as well as the auditorium swept and dusted and put in order by various committees appointed for this purpose by the conference. Willingness to serve was shown on every hand, chairs were carried back and forth when necessary by the delegates, and the machinery of the conference ran smoothly because of the combined efforts of all.

At the "get acquainted" meeting on the opening night, refreshments are usually served by the women of Salem Church. Too much cannot be said in praise of this faithful band of women belonging to the colored church in Tuscaloosa. The church membership is small, and less than a dozen of the women are to be depended upon for any especial service to the conference. These, however, are faithful, hard working and interested, and the amount of work they do for the conference is most commendable. They see that the dormitory is cleaned and in order, bring flowering plants for the living rooms and tables, decorate the church in which the night services are held, and this year, they paid fourteen dollars for the use of the auto truck on one day to bring any visitors back and forth from Tuscaloosa to Stillman during the day, free of charge.

An interesting social event in the conference was an automobile ride given by the colored women's clubs of Tuscaloosa to the delegates, which was followed by a party at the home of the colored physician of Tuscaloosa.

The pageant written by Miss Carrie Lee Campbell for the occasion was one of the most enjoyable numbers of the entire program. The copy for the pageant was put into the hands of Alice Lufburrow, the organist of Salem Church, Tuscaloosa, and one of the teachers in the colored school. She had but little time to devote to it, and was not able to have a complete rehearsal until the night of the entertainment, yet the presentation was a very creditable and enjoyable one. It was given on the campus of Stillman at night, under the trees, with electric lights placed here and there. The central figure representing Christianity was mounted upon a nicely camouflaged kitchen table, draped with white sheets, while her throne, a kitchen chair, bore the same unique drapery. On one side of her was a figure representing wealth, and on the other one representing pleasure. Various groups of women came first to one and then the other asking for help. The parts were well taken, were given with understanding and feeling, and the pageant would compare very favorably with those which we give at our own Presbyterials. The delegates were enthusiastic about the entertainment, and on all sides came requests for copies of it. It is probable we shall have to print the pageant in order to supply the demands from the delegates.

The two sewing classes were very popular. Miss Edith Gramig, of Louisville, a devoted and charming young lady teacher in Dr. John Little's school, had charge of this department. Mrs. W. H. Sheppard, of Louisville, was her assistant in the beginning class. Those who had taken the beginning last year were allowed to enter the machine class, and were able in the five days they were there, most of them, to complete three muslin garments according to the specifications required. These lessons, both in the beginning and advanced class, were given, of course, with the idea of teaching these women how to teach a sewing school on their return home.

Mrs. W. A. Ross, our missionary from Mexico, gave a much appreciated address to the conference at one of the night sessions. Her theme was the condition and needs of the Mexican women; the audience listened with eager interest as Mrs. Ross depicted the ignorance and superstition poverty and lack of opportunity of the Mexican women. After the meeting, one delegate was heard to say to another, "I thought we colored people had a hard time, but we are not in it with a Mexican woman, are we?" The leader of the Junior Band of seven members in Salem Church, children ranging from seven to ten years old, said that as the result of the talk given on Korea by Miss Emily Wynn last year, the Junior Band had sent five dollars to Korea. She added that this year, doubtless, the Junior Band would do as well for Mexico as the result of Mrs. Ross' talk.

Dr. R. K. Timmons, President of Stillman Institute, was in attendance throughout the sessions of the conference, aiding and assisting the leaders in every way possible, and by his kindly advice and wisest counsel, proved himself invaluable.

The opening sermon, by Rev. Paul Moore, was on the subject, "Going the Second Mile." It made a deep impression on the delegates, and frequently during the following week, the sermon was alluded to in the conversation in the sewing room or elsewhere on the campus.

The Bible Studies given by Mrs. W. E. Hinds, of Auburn, Ala., were gems. She pictured in vivid and impressive words various homes described in the Bible, and from the pictures of these homes, drew lessons about the homes of

(Continued on page 9)

A Pilgrimage in Search of Faith

By Eva Ryerson Ludgate.

MR. H. G. WELLS recently said: "While we have been talking of the decline of faith, faith has so grown as to burst all its ancient formulas; while we have talked of decadence and materialism, a new spirit has been born under our very eyes."

While we in America have been trembling because we have failed to see the hand of God in the great war, and have feared less we should lose our faith, the Protestants in the devastated north of France and in Belgium have come out of this war that has caused them the loss of their sons, the destruction of their homes and unspeakable physical anguish, with a faith in God that is so bright that it makes our faith look like a little candle shining in the light of the noon-day sun.

One day last January a friend of mine who is the editor of one of our largest magazines, called me into her office. Pointing to a huge pile of letters, she said: "These letters are from men and women who during this war have lost their faith in God. Some of them have lost their sons, others have heard that their boys are desperately wounded, and instead of turning to their pastors they have turned to me, the editor of a secular magazine, for help. I understand that you are going to visit the devastated homes in the north of France. Will you find out for me what the effect of the war has been upon the faith of those who have suffered most?"

I was fortunate in having as my friend and traveling companion Mrs. H. Roswell Bates, of New York City. We agreed from the start that we would not consider this a sight-seeing trip, but that rather we would always bear in mind that we were going on a pilgrimage in search of faith. I remember on one occasion, when we became intensely interested in visiting the battlefields of France, Mrs. Bates said, "We must be careful that we do not forget our special mission."

When we arrived in Paris we presented our letters of introduction from Dr. Macfarland, General Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, to Dr. Monod, who is the General Secretary of the French and Belgian Protestant Relief Work. We also called upon the French High Commission, and it was through the courtesy of the French Government that we were able to travel in a French military car through the north of France.

When we arrived in Lille we found the roads black with refugees who were returning to their homes. Not only were the men and women bent under burdens which it seemed must be impossible for them to carry, but the little children, some of them not more than four years of age, had bundles tied to their backs and their arms were filled with pathetic little treasures.

I found to my surprise that the Protestant Church in Lille would seat over one thousand people. The pastor, Rev. Pierre Bosc, assured me that before the war it was always filled. "During the war," he said, "the Germans occupied Lille for four years, and as they were most of them Lutherans, they worshipped in our church. After the Germans had held their service we were permitted to hold ours. It was a great cross to have to worship after them, as they were far from clean. He showed me the pipe organ, which had been the pride of his congregation. The Germans had taken the pipes and melted them to make bullets. After using the organ for four years, when the Germans were forced to leave Lille an officer ordered a soldier to put the organ out of commission, which was done with German thoroughness.

When in 1914 the Protestant people of Lille heard that the Germans were coming they ran to the church with their silver and copper and placed them inside of the pews, which were built in box shape. The Germans made a very thorough search for the silver and copper and at last had to give up. "Imagine our delight," said Pastor Bosc, "as we thought of them worshipping in our church and sitting on the very pews which held the treasure which, they so much desired."

"The darkest day in all the war," continued Pastor Bosc, "was the day when all the girls over fourteen years of age were deported from Lille. Never shall I forget my anguish of heart as I saw girls of my own Sunday School who were all of gentle breeding being driven down the road like cattle. I thought I should go mad. I implored the military authorities to stop it, but I could do nothing."

Pastor Bosc has written a remarkable story of the German invasion of Lille. He kept two copies of his manuscript. One was hidden in the organ in his house, the other was hidden in the canopy which hung over his pulpit. The Germans found out he was writing this book and for four hours they searched his house. "During this time," said Pastor Bosc, "I calmly walked up and down the floor, watching them and knowing that if they found it, I would be shot. But," he said with a laugh, "my death would not have hindered the publication of my story of the wrongs of Lille, for my faithful sexton knew where the second manuscript was hidden, and had agreed to have it published if I were killed."

As I looked at the strong, calm face of Pastor Bosc I did not wonder that with such a courageous pastor the Protestants of Lille had not lost their courage. When I asked him how the war had affected the faith of his people, he said: "The allied victory is the vindication of our faith. We never lost hope for one moment, because we knew that God was on our side, that right must triumph. Why," he said, "it was our faith that kept us alive. It was our faith which kept us from losing our reason, and," he added, "our faith in God is today stronger than ever. His mercy never fails."

We were very tired of body and sad of heart when we arrived at St. Quentin. All day long we had driven along the western front, crossing the Hindenburg line. We had seen the battlefields as they were left when the armistice was signed. As far as the eye could reach were trenches, barbed wire, miles of munitions, broken aeroplanes, tanks, and thousands of German and English helmets. The only living creatures which we passed were the Manchurian coolies who were beginning to clean up the debris. These men, most of them over six feet tall, crowded around our car whenever we stopped and would burst out into the wildest laughter as they commented on our clothes. It was evident that they had not seen white women in that region before. As we drove on the air was filled with the weird sound of their singing. It seemed to me that I must be living in a terrible nightmare, that these strange scenes and sounds could not possibly be real.

As we entered St. Quentin, Mr. Monod said, "We will spend the night and tomorrow in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Larcher." Mr. Larcher is one of St. Quentin's most distinguished citizens. Before the war he was town councilman. He is an elder in the Reformed Church. He was a man of wealth, his home was one of the most beautiful in the city. Today he is penniless and the home that was once so beautiful is almost in ruins.

As we got out of the automobile the door opened and Mr. and Mrs. Larcher came out to greet us. "You are very welcome," said Madame Larcher, "to such as we have. It is not much, as the Germans have taken everything, but what is lacking in the house furnishings we will endeavor to make up by the warmth of our hospitality."

Someone has said that a house, after it has been lived in for years by people who have loved it, becomes a living thing. I have never felt this so strongly as I felt it the day I entered this poor, devastated house in St. Quentin. The walls which had once been hung with costly tapestries and beautiful paintings were bare, save for the penciled scribbles of telephone numbers and orders in German. The floors which had once been luxuriously carpeted were bare. In some places sections of the flooring had been torn up for firewood. The beautiful carved furniture was all gone, and the chairs

(Continued on page 8)

The Minister and His Work

By Rev. Edward R. Leyburn, D.D.

(First sermon preached after taking charge of his new work as pastor of the First Church, Rome, Ga.)

Acts 10:29: I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me.

YOU will recognize this at once as the question which the Apostle Peter asked of Cornelius and his household. I am impressed with the close parallel, the striking analogy between the situation of Peter and the household of Cornelius, and our own situation today. Cornelius, in answer to his earnest prayers, had been directed by God to send to Joppa, and request Simon Peter to come to Caesarea to become his religious leader and teacher, declaring to him more fully and perfectly the will of God, and leading him into larger and more intelligent and more fruitful service. Peter, at the same time, in answer to his own prayers, had been divinely directed to heed the call of Cornelius, and go to Caesarea as God's representative and spokesman.

Now, the same God who heard and who answered the prayers of Peter and of Cornelius, and who by His own planning and in His own way brought them together, still hears and answers prayer, and it is by His planning and ordering that we are here together today. If I did not believe this fully and with all my heart I would be of all men most miserable. If we were simply guided by our own reason, and following our own judgment or our inclinations, we would be sure to go wrong and make grievous mistakes and fatal blunders. But blessed be God, we are not left to our own wisdom and our own judgment and our own inclinations. "Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in Him, and He shall bring it to pass." "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths." I believe that both you and I have committed ourselves fully to God, and that He has directed our paths, and that we are here together today by His planning and ordering and with His approval. And now we are all here before God to hear all that He would say to us. "I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me."

What Is the Minister's Work.

In this, our first Sunday together as pastor and people, we should try to get better acquainted, and we should try, as far as possible, to learn just what each may expect of the other.

What am I here for? Why have I come here? What is my mission here? What do you expect of me? What does God expect of me? "I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me."

I do not believe you have sent for me to tell you how you ought to run your town or manage your business affairs. Certainly I have not come with any intention or expectation of doing anything of the sort. The minister is a man and a citizen, and as such, he has all the civic rights and duties and obligations which other men have. I do not endorse or approve of the division which someone has made of all mankind into three classes—men, women and preachers. The preacher is a man. Otherwise, he is not a true follower and representative of Jesus Christ, who was the manliest man who ever walked this earth. Our citizenship is in heaven, but that doesn't mean that we are to live with our heads in the clouds. This earth is our present abiding place, and God has placed us here and keeps us here for our discipline and development and our training for our heavenly citizenship, and that in the meantime we may use our influence and our efforts to advance his kingdom and make this earth a better and more decent and comfortable and happy place in which to live and labor. The minister, because of the fact that he is God's representative and spokesman and the leader of God's people, ought to be an example and pattern of good citizenship, taking a deep and intelligent and active interest in everything which affects the welfare of his community and the state and nation. I have therefore been an active member of the Chamber of Commerce, the Civic League and similar organizations where I have lived, and have taken an active part in every movement which I thought was for the good of the community, and I have not hesitated to speak out clearly and emphatically, and to use all my influence against movements which I thought were injurious or wrong. But I have never thought that I had any right to use God's house and this sacred desk as a forum and platform from which to discuss local and national issues, or to deal with political questions, or to instruct people how they should vote. I shall not hesitate to speak out plainly and emphatically about things which I think affect the moral and spiritual welfare of our people, and I shall certainly try, both by precept and example, to promote good citizenship, and to encourage the highest devotion to the city, the state and the nation. But if you expect me to deal in the pulpit with local and national issues, you will be disappointed.

Not to Teach Literature, Art and Science.

Neither am I here to discuss with you the latest novels, or to read you essays on the most notable discoveries of science. The minister ought of course to be a student and a thinker, and he ought, as far as possible, to keep abreast of the world's progress in literature and art and science, and he ought, both by his preaching and his personal influence to stimulate and encourage the intellectual life of his people. (But if he is getting his sermons from the daily newspapers and from current literature, he is feeding his people upon a pabulum upon which they will perish, and he is forgetting his high calling as God's ambassador and a preacher of the glorious Gospel of God's grace. The minister should be a student of many books, but he should strive, by God's grace, to be a master of one, and in proportion as his preaching is permeated and pervaded and saturated with the spirit of this book, and only as it presents its precious truths to men will it glorify God or enrich and bless and save the lives of men. "I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me.")

I believe that you have sent for me for the same reason that Cornelius sent for Peter, that I may be God's ambassador to you, God's messenger, declaring to you more perfectly the will of God as revealed in his word, and helping and encouraging you to realize and to attain to God's plan and purpose for your life.

The Minister a Pastor.

The minister's work has many phases and departments, all of great importance and responsibility. There is the pastoral side of his work, which no true minister will neglect or slight. Pastor means shepherd, and if we get the Bible's own conception of the shepherd and his work; if we get the conception which David gives us in the twenty-third Psalm of the Lord, Jehovah, the great Creator and Governor of the universe as our Shepherd, our Leader, our Defender, the Supplier of all our needs; if we can get our Savior's conception of the shepherd as he speaks in the tenth chapter of the Gospel of John of himself as the great and good Shepherd, who gives his own life for the sheep, we begin to understand something of the importance and responsibility of the minister's work as the pastor, the shepherd of God's people.

" 'Tis not a cause of small import
The pastor's care demands,
But what might fill an angel's heart,
And filled a Savior's hands.

"They watch for souls, for which the Lord
Did heavenly bliss forego;
For souls which must forever live
In rapture or in woe."

With humble reliance upon the Great Shepherd for wisdom and grace and strength, I shall try to be a true pastor to this people, a true shepherd to this flock. I shall hope to come to know you all as promptly and as intimately as possible, that I may understand your individual and personal needs, and that I may enter fully into your joys and sorrows and that I may help you to solve your problems and bear your burdens. I shall hope especially to know the children and young people of the congregation and become their friend and helper, that I may lead them to know the great and good Shepherd, that even in the days of their youth they may become active in his happy and blessed service. I shall hope and expect to be a friend and brother and helper to those who are in the midst of life's busy struggle, bearing the heat and burden of the day, and often oppressed and overloaded, and feeling wearied and discouraged with the stress and strain. I shall hope especially to minister to the aged and infirm, the sick, the sorrowing and the suffering and the needy, bringing them help and hope and strength by pointing them to the Great Shepherd, and reminding them of His love and care.

One of the greatest and best things ever said about our Saviour is the simple statement: "He went about doing good." The one ambition of my life, the one longing of my heart is that I may in some measure, at least, walk in His footsteps, and show His spirit. To this end I ask your earnest prayers and your constant co-operation. What the pastor is depends largely upon what his people are, and what they want him to be. I can't be a much better pastor than you want me to be and help me to be. You can discourage my efforts and freeze my enthusiasm by your attitude of indifference and coldness, or you can multiply many fold the fruits of my labors by your interest and your encouragement and your co-operation. "I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me." I know you are going to encourage and help me in every way to be the kind of pastor to you that I long to be.

The Organizer and Leader of Activities.

But the minister is not only the pastor, the shepherd of the flock, but he must be the organizer and leader and inspirer of all the activities of the church. This is a day of organization, and every business, every industry, every trade is thoroughly organized and systematized, and its work thoroughly planned, down to the minutest detail, and definite responsibility is placed upon each individual for his place in the program, and his part in the work. This spirit of organization, of planning every detail of the work, of fixing definite responsibility, has been carried into the church, and I believe it is well that it is so. We spoke a while ago of the church as a flock to be led and fed and nurtured and cared for, and of the minister as the pastor, the shepherd, to lead and feed and care for them, and this is an apt and appropriate representation of the pastoral side of the minister's work. But the church is not only a flock to be fed, but a force to be led and developed and trained and used in God's service. An army to be organized and trained and inspired for the conquest of the world for Christ.

Christ's church is represented as His body, of which He is the head, and each member of the church a member of that body, each with his particular place to fill and his particular work to do. A body is for manifestation and for service. You and I are immortal spirits, and we have a mortal body to manifest the life of our spirit, and to do its work. Christ's church is His body, to manifest His life and do His work. The world is getting its impression of Him by what it sees of Him in us, and He is carrying on His work in the world through us. The only hands by which He is ministering to the needs of men today are human hands. The only feet by which He is running on errands of love and mercy to men today are our feet. And I'm glad that in our day we are awakening more and more to the conception of the church as an organized working force, in which every member has a very definite part and place and responsibility.

Of course we need to guard carefully against the danger of over organization, of depending upon the form and the perfection of the organization, and forgetting the motive power. Machinery is not power. It is simply a means of utilizing and transmitting power. And it is possible to have so much and such complicated machinery that all the energy is exhausted in running the machinery and keeping it in proper condition. But sane and sensible organization means efficiency, and it means it just as much in the church as it does in any business enterprise. The difference between a mob and an army is organization and equipment. But remember that while the army must be thoroughly organized and equipped to be effective, it doesn't depend upon its organization and its equipment for victory, but upon its morale, its spirit. No matter how perfectly and completely the church may be organized and equipped, it is as useless and as helpless and as fruitless as a dead engine on the track unless the fires are kept burning by the Spirit of God; unless the Spirit of God is filling and inspiring and energizing each part of the machinery, every detail and department of the organization. Let us be active by all means, and methodically and systematically active, but let us be sure that it is activity begotten and maintained by God's Holy Spirit, and used in God's service, and for God's glory.

The minister, of course, is at the head of the church organization, and he, with the session, is chiefly responsible for the working of every department and detail of the whole system. But if he is to succeed even measurably in the responsible and difficult position, it must be through the loyal support and the hearty co-operation not only of all the heads of the different departments, but of every man, woman and child in the entire organization. "I ask therefore for what intent ye have sent for me." Is it that you may stand by and see how well I can manage, and how hard I can work, and how much I can accomplish? Is it that you may hitch me up to the load, and see how much I can pull? Or is it that you may take your part and place beside me, and see how well we can all work together, and how much by our united efforts we can do to meet the great opportunities and to do the great work which God has placed before us here as a church? I have no fear or anxiety on this score, for I know that you are ready and eager to take your place and do your part in all the work of the church.

The Minister a Preacher.

But after all and above all, the minister is a preacher of the Word. This is his supreme business, and this is his highest glory: declaring to men the whole counsel of God, and leading them into the unsearchable riches of Jesus Christ. I have come to you, beloved, with no new Gospel, but with the old, old story of a Divine human Saviour, Son of God and Son of Man, suffering and dying for our sins according to the Scriptures, rising again for our justification, living at God's right hand as our mediator and advocate, coming again in glory to reign with and over His people.

"I love to tell the story of unseen things above,
Of Jesus and His glory, of Jesus and His love;
I love to tell the story because I know it's true;
It satisfies my longing as nothing else could do."

The statue of Phillips Brooks, in Copley Square, Boston, represents the great preacher with the open Bible before him in the attitude of speaking to the people, while back of him and above him stands the Master himself, with hand outstretched in benediction upon both preacher and people. I hope always to be able to preach with the realization that He is above me and beside me, and with the constant prayer that my message may be His own message to you.

"He held the lamp of truth that day
So low that none could miss the way;
And yet so high, to bring in sight
That picture fair—the world's great Light—
That gazing up, the lamp between,
The hand that held it scarce was seen."

I ask nothing higher and better than that this may always be a true characterization of me and of my work among you.

A Pilgrimage in Search of Faith.

(Continued from page 5)

and the table which remained had evidently come from the servant's quarters.

Our evening meal consisted of bread and cocoa, with some canned meat which we had brought with us from Paris. After supper we sat as close as we could to the little stove trying to keep warm as we listened to the story which Mr. Larcher had to tell.

"When the Germans came to St. Quentin, I was asked to furnish 60 thousand dollars in gold; this I was unable to do. I offered my securities but they replied that no one could tell what they would be worth after the war, and they must have gold. When I was unable to furnish this I was sent to jail for fifty-five days. During this time fourteen of my fellow prisoners were taken out and shot, one of them a boy of nineteen with the Red Cross emblem on his arm. We called the prison," he said with a laugh, "the hotel of Three Balls, which as you know is the sign of the pawn shop. We felt that we were in pawn because we could not furnish the money to redeem ourselves.

"Madame Larcher," he said, "had her jewels, which were family heirlooms, taken from her. She went to the Prince and asked him if he would not see that her jewels were returned. He said, 'I have sent them to the Princess in Berlin. Perhaps she will return them after the war.'"

The following morning Mr. Larcher asked us to go out to the cemetery with him. Mr. Larcher wore a long flowing cape and a broad-brimmed hat, which made him look like a sixteenth century burgomaster. On our way to the cemetery we passed small groups of refugees who had that day arrived. Out of the fifty-five thousand people who had been driven out of St. Quentin, only three thousand had at that time returned. As we passed each group of people Mr. Larcher would stop and say, with radiantly cheerful smile, "We must have courage, mes enfants, we must have courage."

As we entered the cemetery Mr. Larcher said, "I want you to remember that not one shot was fired in this cemetery. The desecration which you see was systematically done." When we came to his family vault he said, "Look," and peering down, we saw an open vault from which every casket had been removed. "Hundreds of graves were opened," said our guide, "and the coffins stolen to make leaden bullets; they also robbed our dead of the jewels which were buried with them."

As we stood beside this open vault, Mr. Larcher said with trembling lips, "I thought I had suffered all I could, when I returned and found that my beautiful home had been stripped of everything which adorned it and when they took all my money and securities and left me penniless in my old age; but it seemed as though my cup of sorrow was overflowing when I found they had robbed me of even the bodies of my parents and my children."

From the cemetery we visited the prison, and I stood in the cell where Mr. Larcher had been imprisoned for fifty-five days. On the door was still the name of the last prisoner written in German script.

Upon our return to Mr. Larcher's home I was so depressed I could not talk. The horror of the war was sweeping over me with such force that it seemed to me my heart would break as I thought about it.

"At last," I said, "Mr. Larcher, I want to put a question to you; it is a question which I am almost afraid to ask you: Have you any faith in God left? I am afraid if I had gone through what you have, I would not."

The old man quietly smiled as he said, "I am afraid you have not seen the motto on the wall," and pointing to a motto which was the only decoration which that room afforded, he read in French, "My soul doth rejoice in the Eternal."

"Would I not have been foolish," he said, "if, when the Germans had taken all my earthly possessions, I had allowed them to take my faith also?"

"Were you never afraid you would be shot?" I next inquired. "You said fourteen of your fellow prisoners were shot."

Never to my dying day can I forget the look on his face as he replied, "Does not the Christian religion teach us how to die? I was not afraid to die, but I lived in constant fear of one thing, I was afraid I might not be able to forgive my enemies, and I knew that the moment I ceased forgiving my enemies, that moment I ceased being a Christian."

Space will not permit me to tell further of my adventures in the search of faith. Suffice it to say, that I found living in the hearts of these dear people the faith of the Christians of the first century, the faith of the martyrs, and when those "who have come up through great tribulations" shall pass before the throne of God, among them will surely be found these saints of the twentieth century, who through the darkness of this awful war have kept shining the light of their radiant faith.

Mid-China Mission Meeting.

By Rev. W. H. Hudson.

Only thirteen voting members present, furloughs and sickness reduced the attendance. The war or other causes made a smaller increase of new Chinese converts than last year. Our institutions are calling for the best men we have on the field—Dr. Leighton Stuart to Peking Union University, Dr. Shields to Tsinan Medical College, Dr. Hutcheson to Nanking Union Hospital, Dr. Venable to Kuling Hospital, Mr. Allison to Hangchow Christian College, Miss Florence Nickles to Union Bible School at Nanking, Rev. M. A. Hopkins to Chinking Academy, Miss Lois Young to Hsuechowfu Girls' School. Our thin line stretching from Peking to Hanchow is almost at a breaking point. Nearly every man and woman missionary are doing double duty. The most hopeful feature of our work is the increase in Chinese leadership. At least four well trained Chinese workers can be put to work after the expense of training for the cost of a missionary from home. One missionary working with from five to ten Chinese helpers is a good program. We are hoping that many young men returning from the big enterprise in Europe will volunteer to come out for the big job in China.

The missionary forces are more and more planning union efforts, denominational lines and even matters of church polity are fading away. It is giving some anxious thought for those missionaries who are concerned about sound doctrine. Social service ideas are prevailing in some quarters over what we are accustomed to call individual conversion efforts.

The Chinese, seeing our trained lady workers, see no reason for not licensing them to preach. Once shaken loose from old customs, the Chinese may take up any sort of proposal in politics or religion. Anything that helps the Chinese materially or mentally is applauded, soul-saving questioned, tolerated-appreciated.

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan's Lectures On the Sprunt Foundation.

In view of the many inquiries received from various quarters concerning the possibility of obtaining rooms at Union Seminary during the lectures of Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, D.D., from November 4 to November 14, we beg to state that, on account of the increased number of the student body this season, we have but a limited amount of space left over.

After providing accommodations for those who have written directly to us we find that there will be space to provide for six additional persons only. We regret that we can not issue a general invitation to all who would like to come. These six beds will be allotted in the order that applications are received. The cost will be $1.00 per week for a room and $5.00 per week for board, with slightly larger charges for shorter periods. Please address all communications to William R. Miller, Treasurer, Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.

Organic Union

1. Eldership, Christian Unity, Efficiency, Economy.

By a Pastor.

IT may help the reader to appreciate my discussion of this subject if I state succinctly at the beginning just what my attitude toward it is. I am not an advocate of union, though I am not an uncompromising opponent of it. I do not think union is necessary or desirable. I do not believe it is required by that sort of Christian unity which the Bible enjoins nor by considerations of either brotherly love or efficiency. But while I do not believe that union is either necessary or desirable, nevertheless, if a majority of my brethren decide to consolidate with the U. S. A. Church, I would gladly acquiesce, provided the very grave difficulties which now exist can be removed.

It is sometimes remarked that the ministers of our Church are acting as an obstruction to union, and that if the question could be left to the elders or the private members, a decision would be very quickly rendered in favor of union. As the matter lies before the Church just now, it is possibly true that a majority of the elders and of the members would vote for union, but the explanation is obvious. With notable exceptions the eldership and membership of our churches have not had occasion or opportunity to go into the merits of the case and inform themselves thoroughly on the subject. Ministers have done little, if any, preaching on union, and the Church papers have not discussed the real issues involved, except in a limited way. All that the rank and file of the membership know about the subject is that the Church was divided about a half century ago, and that in some way the division was connected with the war. They think of the division as the result of war passions and naturally regard union merely as an expression of returning brotherly love, and a willingness to eliminate war animosities. Taking this superficial view of it they are ready for union. It is to the credit of their religion that they feel as they do under the circumstances. It is also to the credit of the ministry that they have not put this subject forward in their preaching, but have been attending to weightier matters, trusting that they could make the case of union plain should there be an occasion for doing so. If it were only a question of a proper expression of brotherly love, we ought to wish for union. I would advocate it myself with all my might, if that were all. But it is because that is not all that I oppose it. There are intelligent and conscientious reasons against union. When our elders and members come to deal with those reasons, I have no fear that any large proportion of them will disagree with the position I hold.

Biblical unity does not require Organic Union. It is not necessary to have all Christians organized into a single, visible, corporate, organic body in order to realize the Scripture idea of Christian unity. The true Scriptural unity is the "unity of the Spirit," the "unity of the Faith," the unity of "one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all and through all and in you all." We are sometimes challenged to explain what we mean by "spiritual unity" as distinguished from Organic Union. Whatever the Bible means by the expressions just quoted is what we mean by "spiritual unity." More than once I have heard Rev. Dr. W. H. Roberts emphasize this distinction, in public, and declare that the Christian unity enjoined in the Bible is something that we already have. I was glad to have this confirmation of my views from one whom we will all agree in accepting as an authority on this point. If the unity of one organic body is the unity commanded in the Bible, then we should not confine the union to the U. S. A. Church, or to certain selected bodies of Christians, nor confine it to our own national boundaries. We should extend the Organic Union to all Christians throughout the world, including Greek and Roman Catholics. If that is the proper conception of Scriptural unity, then those brethren are right who look forward to embracing Greek and Roman Catholics in a general consolidation of all Christendom. In that case, "Catholicism," in the historic sense, is the correct conception of church unity. Has not the Church had enough of Catholicism with all its corollaries—not its Creed alone, but its organization, animus, ambitions, intrigues and tyrannies?

In the next place, I contend that Organic Union is not necessary for the sake of efficiency or economy in church work. My observation leads me to believe that a smaller, more compact and more homogeneous body is more efficient. Of course there are natural limits to the application of this rule, but it is a rule. In the smaller body the local needs are better understood and a sense of responsibility is better developed. When the proposition was first made some years ago to cut off a part of the Presbytery of Mecklenburg and make of it a new Presbytery of Asheville, it was thought by many to be a risky venture, but when the division was today. The women took notes about her talks very carefully and expressed the deepest appreciation of them.

(Continued on Page 24)

Side Lights On the Colored Woman's Conference at Tuscaloosa.

(Continued from Page 4)

Mrs. D. D. Little, of Columbia, Pa., gave a very helpful series of talks on women's opportunities today.

Tuskegee contributed nobly to the conference program by sending Dr. Imes, dean of the Bible School department of Tuskegee; Mrs. M. A. Bright, head nurse of the Hospital department, and Mrs. Roberts, head of the Playground and Recreation department, to assist in the program. All of these teachers gave freely of their time and ability, and their contributions were sane, practical and helpful. Dr. E. R. Moton, successor to Booker Washington at Tuskegee Institute, wired his congratulations to the conference, and an invitation to the delegates to be the guests of Tuskegee over Sunday on their return home. About one dozen of the delegates accepted the invitation. Dr. Moton has promised to be with the conference next year. Greetings and congratulations were also received by telegram from Mrs. Booker Washington, who expressed her regret that, on account of illness, she was not able to be with the meeting.

The address by Rev. R. H. McCaslin and stereopticon lecture by Rev. Jno. Little were helpful and inspiring.

Altogether, the conference seemed very well worth while. The fourteen ministers' wives who were present were given some especial class instruction in regard to the work of the church, and through conference and personal interviews, other constructive work was accomplished. The delegates numbered seventy-four from a distance while the local attendance was large. These seventy-four delegates came from fifty-nine towns in eleven different states. They represented seven denominations. Of the seventy-four, forty-five were Presbyterians.

The closing message was given by Rev. Henry H. Proctor, pastor of the colored Congregational Church of Atlanta. It was an able address filled with wit and humor, pathos and sage common sense. He brought out especially five admonitions to the colored people: first, save your money; second, educate your mind and hands; third, build homes; fourth, make friends of the best people; fifth, honor God.

The music under the direction of Prof. B. H. Barnes was inspiring and drew a large number of white people at each meeting to hear the plantation songs. If the delegates carry away to their various communities even a part of the enthusiasm, spiritual uplift and practical betterment plans which they received at the conference, the gathering will certainly be worth while.

Educational

Columbia Seminary has opened the session of 1919-20 with the brightest prospects of some years past. Although the student body is still comparatively small, it is composed of men who are unusually impressed with the high calling of the Gospel ministry and who have entered seriously upon preparation for the calling.

During the Summer the buildings were renovated throughout and necessary repairs and additions made in the interior. The grounds and buildings are under the efficient care of Rev. W. S. Epperson as intendant and a number of improvements have been made at his direction. A maid is employed to look after the rooms in each dormitory, and these buildings are cleaned thoroughly every day.

In the refectory, with Miss Mary Mazee as matron, the service is by students who in this way earn their board, and an excellent quality of food is furnished to the men at cost.

All the members of the faculty are in their usual chairs and this year there will be offered the courses of Professor Fulbright in expression and Rev. W. H. Mills in rural sociology, which were last season interrupted by the war.

Several old men who were in the service of the United States have returned to complete their courses. Among these are R. S. Woodson, J. S. Lack and S. H. Bird, of the Navy; J. D. Gillespie, of the Army Y. M. C. A., and J. T. Gillespie and J. B. Belk, of the Army. The latter served eighteen months in France.

The President of the Seminary is doing everything possible for the comfort and happiness of the students. Among other things he has provided an apartment house for the use of married student, who may there secure rooms at a nominal cost.

Below is given a partial list of new men who have entered the Junior Class: Philip Alexander Mickel, Union Point, Ga.; James Verner Capp, Weir, Miss.; Henry B. Dendy, Hartwell, Ga.; Ernest Lowry Barber, York, S. C.; Frank Bigham Estes, Salem, S. C.; James William Miller, Sherrill's Ford, N. C.; Cecil DuBose Brearley, St. Charles, S. C.; J. S. Davis, Waynesboro, Miss.; Edward Stephen Campbell, Biloxi, Miss.; Ludwig Armstrong Beckman, Jr., McClellanville, S. C.

Queens College has had the finest opening in its history. The two dormitories are full to capacity and we have sought other ways and means to care for as many girls as possible. The residence (for the President) on the campus, is full, two of our teachers and Dr. Ninniss and family are moving into the music building, and two other teachers in the science building. We feel especially gratified with our large number, as the canvassing during the Summer was very limited. A great many of the new ones have been brought by last year's girls, their work being most commendable. We have 219 enrolled, 140 of this number being boarding students. Several new members have been added to our faculty. The college authorities have sought for the best talent, and are to be congratulated on their selections. With our beautiful location, splendid equipment, larger faculty and growing student body, representing the best homes in North Carolina and many other States, we feel that surely "the sun has risen" on Queens, with the promise of increasing brightness in the future for this worthy institution.

The students are now regular attendants at the downtown Sunday Schools, being divided equally between the First and the Second Churches, where they have been given a cordial welcome. The First Church recently tendered the young ladies a delightful reception and the Second Church has announced one for the near future. These courtesies are very much appreciated by the students.

The students have been very much interested in the series of concerts under the auspices of the Alumnae Association which are to bring to the city a number of famous stars, and most of them took advantage of the opportunity to hear Galli-Curci during the past week.

The above is a picture of the Davidson College Senior Class, who were in the cotton fields picking cotton for the purpose of purchasing instruments for the College Band. They picked an average of 95 pounds each.

Bottom row (sitting) left to right: T. H. Wilson, H. R. McConnell, L. L. Wilson, A. L. Foscue, T. W. Hawkins, R. E. McClure, R. R. Craig, T. H. Spence.

Second row (kneeling): M. A. Siske, C. J. Matthews, E. R. Boney, J. G. Richards, H. Smith, C. Hunter, J. P. Taylor, D. M. Chalmers.

Back row (standing): Lt. Col. A. H. Mueller (Commandant of Davidson R. O. T. C.), E. R. Boney, R. T. Allison, W. M. Hall, G. D. Sample, S. H. Askew, A. G. Robinson, L. G. Calhoun, P. B. Carwile, J. E. Sanders, F. A. Thomas, M. A. Tremain, O. P. Hart, F. P. Hall, L. P. Good, J. M. Jamison, R. T. Liston.

Christian Endeavor

By Rev. S. H. Hay.

- M., Oct. 27—Heroes; Daniel: Dan. 6:10-24.
- T., Oct. 28—Paul: 2 Tim. 4:9-18.
- W., Oct. 29—Christ: John 18:28-40.
- T., Oct. 30—The Dauntless Three: Dan. 3:8-25.
- F., Oct. 31—Amos; Amos 7:10-17.
- S., Nov. 1—Stephen: Acts 6:8-15; 7:54-60.

* * *

Topic for Sunday, Nov. 2—Standing For God and Right.
—1 Kings 18:17-24. (Consecration meeting.)

* * *

We should not forget that a fight is going on between God and the devil in the world. We know this because we can see with our own eyes that it is so, and also because Christ and other spokesmen of the Bible have told us of it. Christ said, I am not come to bring peace, but a sword. Even before He was ever born, as far back as the beginning of history, in the days of Adam, prophesy foretold that there would be a fight. God said to the serpent, I will put enmity between thy seed and seed of the woman, and he shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise his heel. God and the devil ever since that time have been enlisting recruits, and the fight will continue through human history until it comes to a head at the end of the great battle of Armageddon of which the sixteenth chapter of Revelation tells.

* * *

The question which we all face is, for whom will I stand, and with whom will I fight? With God? Or with the devil? There is no neutral ground. There are only two great leaders and we must stand with one or the other of them. Jesus says, he that is not with me is against me. Trying to be neutral and keep out of the fight means standing with the devil. "He that gathereth not with Me scattereth abroad." Are you really standing with God? Or with Satan?

* * *

What do we mean by "standing with God?" We mean taking His part in the fight and showing a personal loyalty to Him, of course. One essential way to show this is by joining the church. That is the formal enlistment. But a further necessary and even more significant way to stand by Him is to do right and fight evil in the world with all our might. We cannot see God, but we can see the side of right, and we can identify ourselves with it and fight evil with our speech and our conduct. It is a great compliment to God to think of Him and righteousness in the same thought, and to feel that when we stand for righteousness we are standing for God. But personal loyalty and a stand for righteousness are not all. We must urge the Cross upon all, and must send and take it to all land to which it has not gone. The Cross is the battering ram that breaks down the city walls of heathendom and sin, and wins the fight for God.

* * *

We must expect a heavy cost to ourselves if we really stand for God. The world is the devil's friend, and it opens fire on all true fighters for God. But aren't we as devoted and willing to pay the cost of standing for God as our soldiers in France were to face hardships and danger for our country?

* * *

Make and read a list of things that we should do that would aid the side of God in the fight.

* * *

Prepare a parallel list of things that we might do if we wished to aid the devil's side.

The Prayer Meeting

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING OCT. 26, 1919:
CRUSADING AGAINST INTEMPERANCE.
Eph. VI:10-20.

The word "intemperance" is not found in Young's Analytical Concordance. The word "temperance" occurs only in the New Testament, and is used once each by Luke and Peter, and four times by Paul; in Titus 2:2 it means "prudent;" elsewhere it signifies "self-restraint" or "self-control."

In our day, on account of the fearful ravages and the universal peril of alcohol and drugs, intemperance has come to have the specialized meaning of being addicted to the use of intoxicants. This was probably the topic in this specialized sense, assigned for this prayer service. However, we should not permit the word to be limited in this manner.

The pulpit should hold aloft the beauty and the power and the nobility of self-mastery along with the dedication of all our powers to the service of God: the wretchedness, and weakness, and wreckage of an unmastered spirit. Men to whom alcohol has never been a temptation have utterly failed in temperance of spirit and character. Their tongues have indulged in orgies of lying and slander and vituperation. Their inordinate vanity and self-adulation has been a source of shame and misery. Or they have been mastered by the love of money. That self-devotion to Christ, that quiet power and force of character, growing out of true temperance (self-control) is for them impossible. This phase of this question is of the greatest importance, and the universality, and peril, and shame, and loss of the use of alcohol and drugs, should not cause us to forget the Bible use of the word.

As for the "Crusade Against Intemperance" in the special sense of fighting alcohol and drugs, the war has scored remarkable victories in the last few years. We owe a great debt of gratitude to the Anti-Saloon League and to the woman's organizations that have worked so untiringly for the utter destruction of the liquor trade. The work of the Church, however, for this end should not be misunderstood or underestimated. From her has gone forth the mighty influence that has impelled and sustained these extra-church organizations. Her members have prayed and labored and given for this great consummation. The fight is now to be carried into Europe. As far as its legal aspects are concerned, the battle seems practically won in this country. But there are yet billions of money and unsurpassed legal talent which will be used to frustrate the progress of the battle against alcohol. It is a mighty gain that the ban of the law has branded this traffic as illegal. A still greater gain that public sentiment has branded it as infamous. Yet constant prayer and vigilance are necessary if our sons and daughters are to be protected against this merciless plague. And above all, faithful and intelligent instruction in the home, in the pulpit, and in the school, are essential. The Scriptural doctrine of self-control and self-dedication to God are above all things necessary if we would truly win. The grand object is for more than the suppression of the liquor trade—it is the building of character in the image of our Lord. Those who fail to grasp and to embrace this aspect of the crusade fall far short of the mark. The saloon may go, only to open new dangers to the interest of the home and to the Kingdom of God. We must not be complacent over negative results. This way lies defeat: Our grand object is the building of Christian men and women, the flowering into spiritual beauty of our sons and daughters.

Sunday School

By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.

OCTOBER 26, 1919

A Lesson in Trust
Lesson Matt. 14:22-33.

GOLDEN TEXT—"I believe; help thou mine unbelief."—Mark 9:24.

AUTHORIZED VERSION

22 And straightway Jesus constrained his disciples to get into a ship, and to go before him unto the other side, while he sent the multitudes away.

23 And when he had sent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain apart to pray: and when the evening was come, he was there alone.

24 And the ship was now in the midst of the sea, tossed with waves: for the wind was contrary.

25 And in the fourth watch of the night Jesus went unto them, walking on the sea.

26 And when the disciples saw him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit; and they cried out for fear.

27. But straightway Jesus spake unto them, saying, Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid.

28 And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water.

29 And he said, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ship, he walked on the water, to go to Jesus.

30 But when he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me.

31 And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him, and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?

32 And when they were come into the ship, the wind ceased.

33 Then they that were in the ship came and worshipped him, saying, Of a truth thou art the Son of God.

Many incidents recorded in the Gospels embody important religious principles. They also explain and illustrate Divine dealings with Christ's principles and mankind. They furthermore show how Jesus treats His own followers, and the results they may expect from His wise and sovereign control of agencies and events. This is true of the narrative now considered. We may ponder its teachings under the captions mentioned, Christ's Separation from His Disciples and the Multitude, Jesus Seeking His Disciples in Distress, Peter's Faith and Unbelief, The Results of Christ's Dealing With His Disciples.

I. Jesus' Separation From His Disciples and the Multitude.

He sends His disciples away in a boat to the other side. They do not go willingly. "He constrains them" by authority or persuasion. He sends them out into an impending storm, which would cause toil, and test faith, courage and endurance. They were accustomed to battle with storms, and had doubtless much confidence in their own ability to struggle with them successfully. But this was a tempest of unusual violence and brought them into sore distress and danger. Why did Jesus thus separate from His followers, deprive them of company for a time and expose them to the fierce winds and raging billows? Does not the story show that it was to make them realize their own weakness and dependence on Him, and when He appeared for their help to confirm their faith in Him and His sovereign power? But why did Christ send the multitude away? They had been with Him several days and He had healed and taught and fed them. But they could not be always receivers. They must be givers if they would prosper. They had faculties to exert and duties to perform and must learn to serve as well as to be served. There were reasons also connected with Christ Himself for sending them away. He was a human being, subject to fatigue. He could not be always healing and teaching and ministering to the wants of others. He needed rest and quietness for mind and body. He was a moral and spiritual being also and He required time for meditation and prayer which a concourse did not permit. Besides the multitude desired to "take Him by force and make Him a temporal king," but this design did not accord with His purpose or with the Gospel plan of salvation.

II. Jesus Seeking His Disciples in Distress.

He sent them into the storm to test their faith and develop their graces. But when from the mountain height He saw the wind contrary, the rowing toilsome, the danger extreme, and their minds distressed, He hastened to their relief. Nor was He deterred by obstacles, by the want of a boat, or by agitated waters. With Divine majesty He walked the tossing billows like the solid land. He appeared to the alarmed disciples as an apparition, as He often manifests Himself in inscrutable ways to His troubled saints. But He calmed their fears and cheered their hearts with the inspiring words, "It is I, be not afraid." Jesus will seek His followers in trouble and no hindrances will daunt or prevent Him. His coming when realized will afford comfort, relief and rescue. The Divine promise to the righteous man has ever been fulfilled, "He shall call upon me and I will answer Him. I will be with him in trouble, with long life will I satisfy him and show him my salvation."

III. Peter's Faith and Unbelief.

The imperfect, undeveloped believer is a singular mixture of confidence and doubt, of trust and unbelief. On this occasion Peter shows both. He had faith in Jesus or he would not have proposed as a test of His presence that He bid him come to Him on the water. He trusted the Lord or he would not have left the boat at His command and attempted to walk to Him on the water. He did walk for a short distance on the water, but when he ceased to look to Jesus, and fixed his attention on the boisterous wind, his faith yielded to fear. Unbelief made him weak, he begins to sink and cries for salvation. He does the wisest thing in his circumstances and prays "Lord, save me." Jesus immediately stretched out His hand, caught him, and he is saved. Gently He rebukes him, saying, "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" Divine power in miracles is only exerted for the trusting.

IV. The Results of Christ's Dealings With His Disciples.

He assures them, "All things are yours." All events, whether seemingly prosperous or adverse, are overruled for your good. The Psalmist affirms, "All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth to such as keep His covenants and His testimonies." This narrative illustrates these truths. The disciples knew themselves better and Jesus far more thoroughly from entering the storm. Jesus sending away the multitude advanced His redeeming work and prevented them from interfering with His plans for human welfare. Jesus drawing near in distress despite all obstacles, brings relief, comfort and salvation. Jesus is honored by all. His dealings with His disciples and perfect faith in Immanuel or God with us, will bring calm to the troubled billows and safety and peace to the trembling soul.

A CORRECTION.

Owing to a typographical or clerical error in the report of the last meeting of the Assembly's Committee on Systematic Beneficence and Stewardship the number of additions to the church this year as our goal appeared in one page as 30,000 and in another as 60,000.

The goal officially fixed is 50,000 new members added to the Church during the current year.

The Executive Committee of Home Missions, as well as all other agencies of the Church, is co-operating in all its efforts to reach this aim in the progressive program.

Wm. Fred Galbraith, Secretary.

CONDEMN SIN.

We should all condemn sin, as God condemns it, the moment we see it. It is in ourselves, though sometimes it is hid from us. It may be some hidden sin that keeps God from using us more. Let us be honest with God. Let David's prayer be ours: "Search me, O God"—not my neighbors, nor any other people, but "Search me!"—D. L. Moody.

Home Circle

GRANDMA'S SECOND FAMILY.

"Mebbe if you'd write a piece for the paper and say something about how hard it is for a woman past 60 to take care of little children it would help some," said my elderly visitor, a shabby little woman nearer 70 than 60. "My son and his wife saw a good chance to take jobs in the city, so they sent their two children to me without even asking whether or not I would take them. My daughter-in-law always put the children onto me whenever she could, but this is the worst. I've had them for six months now and their parents never sent a penny for their keep or their clothes. I tell you it's pretty hard for a woman who has raised her own family—I've had ten children—to start in on a new family."

Now I haven't the slightest idea that people as selfish as the son and daughter-in-law in this case would ever be helped by reading a "piece" in the paper, but perhaps there are other young parents who might turn over a new leaf, if their attention were called to the injustice of loading upon grandma the burden of lively youngsters. I am quite aware that young people say complacently and truly: "Grandma just loves the children." But that does not mean that grandma is not worried by their noise and worn out when they visit her for any length of time. An old lady, whom I know, gathered up courage to tell her daughter that she could not possibly stand a visit from the three lively grandchildren whom she loved dearly, and the young mother was sorry and ashamed that she had not discovered the fact before being told of it. "Mother," she said, "I wish you would feel as free to speak to me of my faults now as you did when I was little, I cannot know how it feels to be 60 unless you tell me." And that young woman not only took care of her own children, but spread the news about among the other children that a little less company for grandma would be very acceptable. Often a gentle reminder will do a world of good.

An elderly couple, near 70 each, had two lively granddaughters sent to them for an entire winter on the plea that grandma and grandpa were lonely and needed company. The girls' mother had charged them to "help grandma," but they rose at 8 in the morning making an extra breakfast necessary, and certainly did little to help with the housework. Indeed the old lady found it easier to do the work herself than wait until they got ready to take up the tasks. Three or four times during the winter their young friends came to visit them and the grandmother had them to entertain and cook for. Elderly people need quiet and calm, not the entertainment furnished by lively young folks, particularly when the entertainment is long continued.

Some time ago a women's magazine ran an article telling how one woman lived comfortably all summer without a vacation in her city home, and also how her husband enjoyed the time because of her provision for his comfort. Almost the first paragraph of the article said: "First I got the three children off to their dotting grandparents on the farm," and then she went on to tell of the calm and quiet of the city house. It would be interesting to know what the grandmother could have written about that summer, as she washed and mended for three lively children under 10, to say nothing of cooking and washing dishes and all the other tasks.

During the war a pretty young woman whose husband was at the front took a position in a store, and everyone said how brave and sensible she was to keep herself occupied and to take a man's place instead of lamenting that her home was broken up temporarily. All that sounded very well to outsiders, but those who knew how gladly the young woman turned over her children to her mother, who was in poor health, and then proceeded to forget them to all intents, felt that brave was not the word to use. That young woman never contributed a cent to the support of the children, but used her own money and allowance on clothes and entertainments. In beautiful clothes, high heeled shoes and picture hats she attracted considerable attention, but the mother wrestling at home with the spoiled infants, on a small house-keeping allowance, could have told a different story.

Devotional

SALVATION IN EXTREMITY.

"Yea, from the horns of the wild oxen Thou hast answered me."—Psalm XXII:21.

Here is a man proclaiming that he has found deliverance from the very jaws of death. He has been saved in the extreme limit of peril when salvation seemed humanly impossible. The wild oxen were out. They had overtaken him, and he was just about to be impaled. The breath of death was upon him. And when no earthly ministry could intervene between him and destruction he was rescued by the merciful providence of the Lord. "Yes, from the horns of the wild oxen Thou hast answered me."

Is this salvation, even in the very hour of death, a vital part of the evangel of our way? How far do we go in our proclamation of the saving grace of God? Are we telling every body that God can deliver from the horns of the wild oxen? Or is there something lame in our assurance, and does evangel consequently stammer in hesitancy and reserve? Unless we can speak of salvation in uttermost extremity with a confident tone that will arrest and startle the world, we have really nothing worth saying at all. What can be done for men and women when the wild oxen are upon them? This is the crux and test of our religion. When a herd of wild passions are goring some poor soul to death, has our gospel any invincible means of deliverance? When a life is all broken to pieces, and is registered in the lists of human judgement as absolutely hopeless, do we know a secret that can stagger and beat the wild oxen, not only setting the victim free, but restoring him to health and wholeness again? Are there any circumstances where the wild oxen are most assuredly the lords of the field?

It has been the glory of all great preaching that its evangel has covered the most awful perils in human necessity. It has proclaimed its good news to men and women who were in the murderous grip of apparently certain destruction. It has sung of dawn at the midnight. It has sung its songs at the very mouth of hell. I delight to turn over the pages of John Wesley's "Journal" and note with what untrembling confidence he brings his gospel to the field where the wild oxen are goring their victims to death. "This morning I went and offered free salvation to four condemned felons in Newgate Gaol!" There are hundreds of entries just like that. They are the words of a herald who had invincible faith in the power of redeeming grace. Let the wild oxen be foaming and tearing up the ground in their rage, here is the assured secret of salvation!

Are we saying these things as they ought to be said today? Or are we afraid of seeming too dogmatic? Have we the notes of certainty that cuts through hesitations and ambiguities as the clarion notes of a bugle ring through the confused murmurs of a market place? Do you believe that our Lord can save even unto the uttermost? Is His grace all-sufficient? Can His blood make the foulest clean? This would surely be news, and it is the news which, more than anything else, the world is waiting to hear today. Our Lord can answer from the horns of the wild oxen! Such is the power of redeeming grace.—J. H. Jowett, in British Weekly.

"Killed by her grandchildren" might be written on the tombstone of many an exhausted woman, yet the children are not to blame. They are lively healthy young animals, as God intended them to be, and they could not keep quiet if they wanted to. Daughters and daughters-in-law should know better than to saddle their own cares off on the elderly grandmothers even though the grandmothers love the children devotedly. I don't think this "piece" will help my poor little shabby visitor who inspired it, but if it sets any careless son or daughter to thinking of the rights of the woman who has brought up her own family years back and deserves a rest now it will not have been written in vain.—Hilda Richmond, in The Continent.

Presbyterian Standard

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE.
REV. W. L. BOGGS, Circulation Manager.

A Religious Newspaper for the Family, Devoted to the Interest of Christ's Kingdom as Represented by the Southern Presbyterian Church.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.
ESTABLISHED JANUARY 1, 1858.

Entered at the Post Office at Charlotte, N. C., as second class matter.

CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE

"Phonograph Pastors"	2
The Church Paper Coming Into Its Own	2
A Commendable Irregularity	2
A Real Crisis	3
Theological Unrest	3
CONTRIBUTED—
Side Lights on the Colored Woman's Conference at Tuscaloosa—By Mrs. W. C. Winsborough ..	4-9
A Pilgrimage in Search of Faith—By Eva Ryerson Ludgate	5-8
The Minister and His Work—By Rev. Edward R. Leyburn, D.D.	6-7
Mid-China Mission Meeting—By Rev. W. H. Hudson	8
Dr. G. Campbell Morgan's Lectures on the Sprunt Foundation	8
Organic Union—By a Pastor	9-24
A Correction—By Wm. Fred Galbraith	12
DEPARTMENTS—
News of the Week	10
Christian Endeavor—By Rev. S. H. Hay	11
Prayer Meeting—By Rev. C. D. Waller	11
Sunday School—By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.	12
Home Circle and Devotional	13

ANNOUNCEMENT.

 The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription is paid.

When change of address is desired, give both the old and the new address.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the last subscription paid.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South.

TREASURERS OF BENEVOLENT CAUSES.

Foreign Missions—Edwin F. Willis, 154 Fifth Ave., N., Nashville, Tenn.

Home Missions—A. N. Sharp, 1522 Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Christian Education and Ministerial Relief—John Stites, Fifth and Market Streets, Louisville, Ky.

Publication and Sabbath School Work—R. E. Magill, 6-8 N. Sixth Street, Richmond, Va.

Bible Cause—Wm. Foulke, Bible House, New York.

Church News

Collections for October are for Foreign Missions. Treasurer, E. F. Willis, 216 Union Street, Nashville, Tenn.

A CORRECTION OF FIGURES.

In our issue of September 24 we had an article by Dr. R. F. Kirkpatrick, Chairman Sub-Committee on Evangelism, in which he was made to say that the recent meeting in Chattanooga had adopted a goal of at least 5,000 additions to the Church. It should have been 50,000 instead of 5,000. We do not say who was responsible for this error, but we do say that the rule in this office is always to follow copy, and in this instance we observed the rule.

PERSONALS.

The address of Rev. R. A. McLead is changed from Rockfish, N. C., to Manchester, N. C.

Rev. J. S. Lyons, D.D., of Atlanta, Ga., will have the sincere sympathy of his friends throughout the Church in the death of his wife, which occurred October 8, at the home of her sister, where she was visiting, in Lawrenceburg, Ky.

The Synod of North Carolina meets next Tuesday in Raleigh. In these days of high cost of living and absence of domestic help, it requires much Christian effort to entertain a Synod. The good people of the First Church deserve our thanks and consideration: Let only members attend, and let them remember under the peculiar conditions prevailing now, that "the King's business requireth haste."

Rev. Dr. Egbert Smith, Secretary of the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, occupied the pulpit of the First Church Sunday morning and evening. He charmed the large audiences with his account of his trip to our mission fields in Japan, China and Korea. Dr. Smith has shattered the popular conception of a missionary address as a collection of desiccated facts. He combines facts and humor with the same discriminating skill that a French chef does his seasonings.

Mrs. Wm. C. Buchanan, who has been sick for months past in Japan, has recently arrived in this country. She was ordered home by physicians in Japan, who advised her to go to Mayo Brothers, Rochester, Minn. Following that advice she went direct to their clinic for a thorough examination as to her trouble, and with the approval of Mayo Clinic has come on to Richmond, Va., for the operation that they regard as her only hope. The physicians are by no means certain that even a drastic operation will eradicate the trouble with which she is afflicted. The prayers of God's people are earnestly sought on her behalf. Through the columns of the religious press Mr. and Mrs. Buchanan desire to thank many friends for their sympathetic inquiries.

Dr. D. B. Towner, the last but one of the great Gospel singers intimately associated with D. L. Moody—P. P. Bliss, Ira D. Sankey, Jas. H. McGranahan, D. B. Towner and George C. Stebbins—died suddenly on October 3, at Longwood, Mo., where he was conducting evangelistic meetings. Dr. Towner was born in Rome, Pa., in 1850. His first association with Mr. Moody was in Cincinnati, where, in 1883, he conducted a chorus of 1,000 voices for the evangelist's meetings. Thereafter he was associated with Mr. Moody until the latter's death. For 26 years Dr. Towner was director of the Music Course of the Moody Bible Institute and was also for many years chorister of the Moody Church. He composed more than 2,000 Gospel songs and edited twenty-three hymnals. The best known of his songs include "Trust and Obey," "Anywhere With Jesus," "Only a Sinner Saved by Grace," "Come Home," "My Anchor Holds" and a score of others which are known wherever Gospel music is sung.

The Tobacco Crop and Education

---In North Carolina

September Sales of the Leaf Were Over 79 Million Pounds.

Its Value Was Over Thirty-Two Million Dollars.

THE TOTAL CROP FOR THE YEAR IS VALUED AT ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY MILLION DOLLARS.

Add the Value of the Cotton Crop---
And the Profits of Cotton Mills---
Then Our Lumber and By-Products

North Carolina will close up 1919 with Undreamed-of Wealth---and DON'T FORGET

Presbyterians Have as Usual Their Share of It

This Wealth Will Curse Unless It Can Be Transformed Into Character

The greatest problem before this nation is not the League of Nations or that of Industrial Unrest, but that of TRAINING A GENERATION OF CITIZENS, of the right sort of character, to take the place of this generation

Our Schools Then Become Our Great TRANSFORMERS of Energy

Much of the wealth of North Carolina must be invested in Education—
OR IT WILL CURSE OUR COMMONWEALTH.

That Education MUST BE CHRISTIAN—Godless Education is MORE THAN A WASTE

The Presbyterians of North Carolina have

11 Educational Institutions, All Christian
1817 Students enrolled and others begging to enter
A Force of Underpaid Teachers serving heroically
Their Greatest Opportunity to Transform Wealth into Character

We Are Making a TREMENDOUS Effort to Raise ONE MILLION DOLLARS
For Our Own Schools---For an Education That is POSITIVELY CHRISTIAN

We Are Needing Six Chairs at Davidson Endowed at $50,000 Each
One Y. M. C. A and Social Building to cost 50,000
One New Dormitory to Care for the Overflow, to cost 75,000
The Girls' Colleges Need More Equipment and Endowment Badly

Why Not Transform Some of That Tobacco or Cotton or Lumber Money Into Immortal Character? YOU WILL NEVER HAVE A BETTER CHANCE

The Million Dollar Campaign Committee

A. M. SCALES, Chairman

R. G. VAUGHN, Treasurer

C. M. RICHARDS, Secretary

Greensboro, North Carolina

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rev. W. S. Porter, the pastor of the Fairforest, Pacolet, Lockhart and Mt. Tabor group of churches, has been granted a month's leave of absence on account of ill health. He will spend the time visiting his old home in Florida. The churches that he serves are not only continuing his salary while he is away from them, but they are defraying the expenses of his trip, a kindness that he greatly appreciates.

The Synod of South Carolina stands adjourned to meet in the Central Church, Anderson, Tuesday, Nov. 4, 7:30 p. m. The clerks will be at the Church in the afternoon to enroll the members in advance, and all are required to report there as promptly as convenient upon arrival in Anderson.

Thos. H. Law,
Stated Clerk.

Bethesda Church—In the last days of July and the first days of August, a meeting was conducted here by Rev. R. G. McLees, of Chatham, Va. From the very first the attendance was large and continued so through the meeting. Mr. McLees preached with earnestness and power the old-time gospel. The whole community was mightily stirred, and besides a number of reconsecrations, thirty-nine were received into the church on profession of faith.

Third Church, Greenville—Rally Day was observed in this church October 5 with much success. There were 115 present at Sunday School and an offering of $40.50 for Sunday School extension. The school presented our committee's program before an interested audience that filled the Sunday School auditorium during the evening hour.

A special consecration service was held during the morning church hour when eight infants were presented by their parents and dedicated to God in baptism. October 12 was communion day. Seven united with the church by letter, and twelve others, young people from the Sunday School, united by profession.

Rev. J. G. Walker, the pastor-elect, formerly of Greensboro, N. C., began his work here September 1. Enoree Presbytery has appointed a commission from the local Greenville churches to install him October 26, at 8 p. m.

Workmen are busy on the interior of the church auditorium, and we hope soon to be able to use every part of our beautiful new building.

Enoree Presbytery met at Greer, S. C., September 30, 1919; and, in the absence of the retiring moderator, was opened with an able sermon by Rev. C. O'N. Martindale on the subject of "What We Believe." It was the Presbyterial sermon. At the last stated meeting, Brother Martindale was appointed to preach it. Nineteen ministers and nineteen ruling elders were present.

Organization—Rev. C. O'N. Martindale was elected moderator and Rev. F. P. Anderson, temporary clerk.

Receptions—Rev. J. W. McClure, Rev. G. A. Nickles and Rev. J. G. Walker were received from West Lexington, Asheville and Orange Presbyteries, respectively.

Courtesies—Rev. D. M. Douglas, D.D., and Rev. W. J. Roach, of Bethel and Kings Mountain Presbyteries, respectively, were invited to sit as corresponding members.

Amendments—Consideration of the amendments to the form of government sent down by the Assembly was postponed until the spring meeting.

Educational Institutions—Presbytery heard with pleasure and profit the address of Rev. D. M. Douglas, D.D., in the interest of the Presbyterian College of South Carolina. It endorsed the proposed campaign for $1,000,000 for the four educational institutions in the Synod. It suggested that summer conferences be held annually at Clinton or elsewhere, during which all the interests of our Synod shall be considered. The Synod was overtured to this effect. Special prayer was offered for an increase in the number of candidates for the ministry.

Calls—Calls for the pastoral services of Rev. J. G. Walker from the Third Church, Greenville, from the Second Church, Spartanburg, for the pastoral services of Rev. J. W. McClure, and from Campobello and Landrum churches for the services of Rev. T. P. Burgess, as pastor, were received and placed in their hands, being accepted by them. Arrangements were made for their installation.

Sermon—Rev. Dr. A. D. P. Gilmour preached an excellent sermon on "The Importance of Leadership in the Church."

Adjourned Meeting—Presbytery decided to hold an adjourned meeting during the sessions of Synod at the call of the moderator.

Dismissals—Rev. R. T. Chafer and Rev. F. P. Anderson were dismissed, at their own requests, to Atlanta and Macon Presbyteries, respectively.

Local Home Missions—The committee reported that all the churches were supplied except one group and those churches were corresponding with a minister. Several protracted meetings have recently been held by different ministers in the Presbytery with good results. Rev. W. S. Porter, Jonesville, S. C., is the treasurer of the committee.

Commissioners—Rev. T. W. Sloan, D.D., Rev. W. A. Hafner and Messrs. H. E. Ravenel and L. L. Barr made reports to Presbytery of the work of the Assembly and their diligence was commended.

Presbyterial Sermon—Rev. J. F. Matheson was appointed to preach the sermon at the next stated meeting on the subject of "Worldly Conformity," and Rev. T. W. Sloan, D.D., alternate.

Next Meeting—Reedy River was chosen as the place and Tuesday preceding the second Sabbath in April, 1920, at 8 p. m., as the time of the next stated meeting.

Systematic Beneficence—Presbytery heartily endorsed the report of the committee to make $55,927 the goal for the year 1920-1921.

Special Days—Presbytery urged all its churches to observe Home Mission Week, November 23-30, and also the last Sabbath in February and the week preceding as the time for prayer for schools and colleges.

Vote of Thanks—Presbytery, by a rising vote, tendered its thanks to the pastor, Rev. A. G. Wardlaw, D.D., and his people, and others in the community, for their cordial and abundant hospitality during its sessions. An excellent spirit prevailed and it was the best fall meeting the Presbytery has had for a long time.

Pee Dee Presbytery met in the Kentyre Church on October 7 with 19 ministers and 14 elders present. Rev. J. S. Garner was elected moderator and Elder L. W. Dick, temporary clerk. At the request of Rev. J. A. McQueen, the retiring moderator, the opening sermon was preached by Rev. D. M. Fulton, D. D. The following ministers were invited to sit as corresponding members, Rev. Dr. S. C. Bird, Rev. H. G. Bedinger, Rev. John McSween and Rev. H. C. Carmichael—the last two being sons of Pee Dee Presbytery. Rev. S. C. Bird, D. D., spoke in behalf of the campaign for endowment of the Educational Institutions. The plan was unanimously endorsed.

Interesting conferences were held on Foreign Missions and Assembly's Home Missions. The pastoral relation between Rev. A. W. White and the Churches of Jefferson and Rocky Creek was dissolved in order that Rrother White may devote his time to the Churches of McBee and Patrick.

Rev. D. McIntyre, D. D., was received from Fayetteville Presbytery. Brother McIntyre is the pastor elect of Blenheim, Dunbar and Reedy Creek Churches. A native Scot, he will be at home among those Scotch people. Presbytery accepted its quota of the Every-Member Canvass.

The Hartsville Church was granted permission to prosecute a call for the pastoral services of Rev. H. G. Bedinger before the Asheville Presbytery.

Presbytery assented to all the overtures sent down from the Assembly. The proposed change in regard to the election of Elders for a limited term provoked warm discussion and finally prevailed by a vote of 13 to 10. Dr. A. G. Buckner announced that each minister of Presbytery would receive the Biblical Review for one year—the gift of himself and Mrs. Buckner. Presbytery tendered a vote of thanks to the donors for their generous gift. The Spring meeting will be held in Latta.

A. H. McArn, S. C.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Charlotte—Pegram Street—On communion Sunday, October 12; the pastor, Rev. John E. Wool, announced that fifteen had been received into the church since the July communion, eleven by certificate and four by confession. Four adults and six infants were baptized.

Henderson—Rev. R. A. White, pastor. Last Sunday was communion Sunday in this church. It was an interesting day. Three persons were received into the church, two on profession and one by letter. One infant was baptized. There has been recently organized a Y. P. S. C. E. for the younger set. It is making a good start and promises well.

The Synod of North Carolina will convene in the First Presbyterian Church, Raleigh, N. C., in its 106th session, on Tuesday, the 28th of October, at 7:30 o'clock p. m. This will be the ninth time within a hundred years that the Synod has met in Raleigh. In 1819 the Synod met in Raleigh, and Rev. Jonathan Ottis Freeman, D.D., was the moderator.

The Stated Clerk will meet all members of Synod, for enrollment, in the church on Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

All papers and reports for Synod should be in the hands of the stated clerk before the Synod meets.

The treasurers of Presbyteries who have not paid their assessment will please do so at once and oblige.

D. I. Craig, Stated Clerk.

The Home Mission Work of the Synod—Reports not quite all in yet, but over eleven hundred additions on profession of faith to our North Carolina churches, besides hundreds added to the churches of other denominations, and $17,626.81 cost of the work for the Synod's year; $28,358.89 contributed for the regular work, leaving a good margin for the large extension the coming year which we hope to inaugurate at Synod; $10,320.68 increase over last year, or 57 per cent.

This good report in results and in income notwithstanding our churches were closed by the influenza, our evangelists were practically idle, and so many of our local fields were vacant on account of absence of men in war work, in the early months of the Synod's year. A. W. C.

Concord—Second Church—Rally day was observed by this church on the day appointed with a large congregation present and a Sunday School attendance of 146. The entire morning service was given over to the exercises of the Sunday School. The offering amounted to $44.76.

The following Sunday, October 11, the regular quarterly communion service was held. Eleven persons were admitted into the membership of the church, five on profession of faith and six by letter. This makes a total of 21 members added to the roll since the present pastor took up the work here last January.

After an address on "The Ideal Elder" by the pastor, at the morning service, October 19, 1919, two new elders were elected, Mr. Grover Creech and Mr. A. M. Turner. The ordination and installation of these men into the eldership will take place next Sunday, October 26. B. B.

Spring Hill Church—Fayetteville Presbytery—This church has recently enjoyed a great season of refreshing both in building up and strengthening the Christian people and in the wonderful power of the Gospel wrought in the hearts of the non-Christians.

Rev. A. S. Anderson, of Fayetteville, did the preaching, and although we know him to be a man of power, his preaching far surpassed anything we ever heard from him. From September 8-18 he preached the Gospel plainly and with unusual power, having a capacity house from the very first. There were quite a number of reconsecrations; 20 professions; 22 additions to the church, 20 on profession and two by letter.

We announced that the offering for Presbyterian Home Missions would be used to complete the new church building, and when the offering was taken we had $100.85. The building will soon be completed. We now have 58 active members at this church also a flourishing Sunday School of 75 or 80 members.

Winston-Salem—The Foreign Mission Campaign in the First Church, which began Sunday afternoon, October 5, has been a great success. It insures a total contribution for the Church's foreign work this year of $13,000.

The canvass of Sunday, October 5, was the annual canvass by the men, which resulted in contributions of $4,300. Later subscriptions will increase this to at least $5,000.

The women of the church have added to their appropriation the sum of $1,200, making a total for them of $2,400.

Individual contributions, in addition to the above, will increase the sum total by about $600, making a grand total of $8,000.

These figures, however, do not give the whole record of the remarkably successful campaign that this church has carried out. A special subscription of $5,000 has been made in the current year for the Hanchow College, in China, a feature of the work that the Southern Presbyterian Church has undertaken in that country.

Adding this $5,000 to the $8,000 given for general foreign missionary work, the total is $13,000.—Twin City Sentinel.

The Presbytery of Kings Mountain met in Lowell, N. C., September 18, and opened with a sermon by the retiring moderator, Rev. J. T. Dendy, from Joshua 24:15. There were present sixteen ministers and nineteen elders.

Organization: Rev. W. S. Wilson, D.D., was elected moderator, and Rev. W. A. Murray, temporary clerk.

Dr. M. E. Melvin delivered an instructive address on Christian Education, and Dr. A. W. Crawford was heard in the interest of Synodical Home Missions.

The Presbyterian Sermon was preached by Rev. W. A. Murray on "The Sabbath As a Sign," from Exodus 31:13. A conference on "The Family Altar" was led by Rev. W. S. Hamiter.

Calls from the Unity and Macpelah Churches were accepted by Rev. F. B. Rankin. He was given permission to hold the call of the Castanea Church till the Spring meeting of Presbytery.

Amendment: Presbytery approved all of the amendments sent down by the General Assembly.

Installation: A commission reported that Rev. F. J. Hay had been ordained and installed pastor of the Kings Mountain Church.

Evangelism: A permanent committee on Evangelism was created, consisting of Rev. W. A. Murray, chairman; Rev. F. J. Hay and Mr. F. O. Gee.

Spring Meeting: Rutherfordton, Tuesday, April 13, at 8 p. m.

Presbytery by a rising vote expressed its appreciation of the hospitality of the Lowell Church.

F. A. Drennan, S. C.

Steele Creek—The golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Freeman was fittingly celebrated at their home in Steele Creek on Tuesday, October 7. The celebration came as a surprise to the bride and groom of fifty years ago, and was participated in by their children, relatives and friends, from far and near, more than 200 guests being present.

Mr. and Mrs. Freeman were married October 7, 1869. Prior to her marriage Mrs. Freeman was Miss Levicey Brown, a daughter of the late Col. B. F. Brown, of Steele Creek. Mr. Freeman was also reared in Steele Creek. Since their marriage they have resided in Steele Creek. Of the children born to this union the following are living and were present at the celebration: Lemuel B. Freeman, of Gastonia; Miss Etta Freeman, of Charlotte; Gilmer P. Freeman, of Steele Creek; Miss Clara Freeman, of Steele Creek.

A bountiful picnic dinner was served on the lawn, and music was rendered during the day by the Steele Creek band, of which Mr. Freeman was a member for a number of years. In the afternoon a short address was delivered by Rev. J. W. Orr, pastor of Steele Creek Church. An original poem was read by Mr. W. Morgan Brown, a brother of Mrs. Freeman.

These two good people have passed many happy and useful years in their community, and it is the wish of their friends that their declining years may be as calm and happy. Both are unusually active for persons of their years. Especially is this true of Mrs. Freeman, who retains to a marked degree her vivacity, her sparkling humor and wit of younger days.

Albemarle Presbytery—The following appointments were made to hold evangelistic meetings before the next regular session of Presbytery: Rev. R. A. Lapsley, Jr., Falkland; Rev. H. N. McDiarmid, Young Memorial; Rev. Peter McIntyre, Bethlehem; Rev. R. A. White, Brookston; Rev. W. McC. White, Wake county; Rev. Stanley White, Enfield; Rev. Stewart R. Oglesby, Granville county; Rev. C. O. Pardo, Smithville.

It was recommended that each pastor and session in the Presbytery in whose church no evangelistic meeting has been held since the spring meeting, arrange, if deemed wise, to hold such a meeting within the next six months; and that they urge upon their people earnest prayer and personal work for souls.

Albemarle Presbytery met at Bethlehem Church, near Rocky Mount, on September 30, at 8 p. m. Rev. Peter McIntyre preached the opening sermon. Luke 1:6 was the text. Unanimous request for publication indicates the Presbytery's estimate of it. Rev. J. M. Millard was elected moderator and Rev. E. S. Currie recording clerk.

Four ministers were received from four different states: Rev. James Lapsley from Florida; Rev. W. T. Wadley, Concord Presbytery; Rev. E. L. Flannagan, from Norfolk; Rev. C. Connor Brown, from Louisville.

Revs. A. W. Crawford and M. E. Melvin were introduced and added to the inspiration of our meeting by addresses on their departments of church work.

Order was taken for the installation of Mr. Flannagan as pastor at Wilson, on the third Sabbath of October.

Mr. L. D. Utts was received as a candidate for the ministry. He enters Columbia this fall.

The stated clerk was instructed to have the printed minutes of Presbytery for 25 years bound as Vol. I.

Reports most satisfactory were given concerning Davidson College and Peace Institute.

Falkland was chosen as the place for the spring meeting.

Rev. H. B. Searight was re-elected trustee of Davidson College. Rev. E. L. Flannagan was elected the other trustee.

Rev. R. A. White was made commissioner to prosecute calls from the four churches composing the "Granville group," for the pastoral services of Rev. A. M. Earle before Winchester Presbytery.

The Presbyterial sermon next spring is to be preached by Dr. Summerell.

On Wednesday night Rev. R. A. White preached the Presbyterial sermon from I Cor. 13:12. The Reality of the Future Life.

A popular meeting was held on Foreign Missions. Rev. G. B. Hanrahan, the chairman, made a full report. Messrs. H. B. Searight and R. A. White made carefully considered addresses.

Rev. E. S. Currie was endorsed by the Presbytery for the foreign field.

Presbytery adjourned to meet in Raleigh during Synod.

S. C.

Notes on the meeting of Albemarle Presbytery:

The dinner served under the trees to the Presbytery by the ladies was greatly enjoyed.

The smiling unanimity with which one brother was excused for absence can only be explained by the fact that his excuse was so Scriptural (see Luke 14:20).

Bethlehem Church is one of the four churches that Dr. Morton built up around Rocky Mount, and which are now served by Rev. H. N. McDiarmid.

Though the Rocky Mount Fair was going on, the Presbytery found genuine interest manifested by numbers who attended the sessions.

The new method of receiving candidates as prescribed by the Assembly was used for the first time with Mr. L. D. Utts.

It is noticed in the religious press that one of the Presbyteries of our Synod has a number of "Browns" on its roll. Albemarle has not reached such a sear condition. But there are three "Whites," a color that is much esteemed in ecclesiastical conditions.

Synodical Home Missions—Receipts from September 1 to October 15, 1919:

Albemarle Presbytery: Atkinson Mem., $10; Bethlehem, $11; Calvary, $5.49; Fellowship, $5; Fountain, $27; Greenville, $43; Henderson, $72; Littleton, $23; Morton, $5; Morton (Rev. C. C. Brown), $12; Nut Bush, $24; Olivet, $34; Oxford, $52; Pinetops, $26; Raleigh 1st, $51.38; Roanoke Rapids, $74; Rocky Mount, $72; Tillery (Rev. C. C. R.), $18.82; Weldon, $1. Total, $567.19.

Concord Presbytery: Back Creek, $11.74; Barium Springs, $25.00; Bayless Mem. (Rev. O. G. J.), $36.81; Bethany, $5; Bethpage, $8.50; Cannonville (Rev. O. G. J.), $36.80; Center, $17; Cleveland (Rev. O. G. J.), $50; Clio, $5; Concord, $118.50; Concord (Iredell), $18; Elmwood, $2; Franklin, $8; Gilwood, $10; Glen Alpine, $2; Hickory W. Aux., $10; Kannapolis, $20; Lenoir, $132; Mocksville, $26.01; Mooresville 1st (S. S. $5.81), $81.79; Mooresville 2nd, $13.77; Patterson Mill, $11; Poplar Tent, $7; Prospect, $14; Rocky River, $50; Salisbury 1st, $100; Salisbury 2nd (Rev. Wm. B.), $90.28; Sherrill's Ford, $7; Shiloh, $3.60; Statesville 1st, $50; Stony Point, $4; Taylorsville, $19.50; Third Creek, $2.60; Thyatira (W. Aux. $2.40), $20.90; Unity (Rev. Wm. B.), $157.27; Waldensian, $11; Yadkinsville, $2. Total, $1,188.07.

Fayetteville Presbytery: Antioch (W. Aux. $5), $19; Bethel, $20; Broadway, $6.47; Buffalo, $10; Bunnlevel, $1; Carthage, S. S., $11.95; Centre, $31.54; Cypress, $6; Ephesus, $3; Elise, $10; Elise, $5; Elrod, $7; Euphronia, $5; Eureka, $25; Fayetteville 1st, $125; Ida Mills, $25; Iona, $15; Jonesboro, $7.49; Laurel Hill, $35; Lumburg, $250; Lillington, $9; Lumber Bridge (L. M. S. $6), $47.80; Lumberton, $5; Maxton, $39.03; Midway, $20; Milton, $13.30; Mispah, $5; McPherson, $11.50; Mt. Vernon, Springs, $10; Oak Grove, $1.07; Pembroke, $5; Philadelphia, $100; Philippi, $3.50; Pittboro, $2.50; Pocket, $3.20; Raeford, $69.97; Red Springs, $67.10; Red Springs L. M. S., $14.90; Rennert, $5; Rev. $2.50; Salem, $6; Sanford, $24.74; Sardis (L. A. & M. Soc. $5), $15; Selma, $10; Shiloh, $7.50; Smithfield, $37.80; Smyrna (L. M. S. $15), $65; St. Pauls (W. Aux. Alb. Supt. $4.50), $66.90; Sunnyside, $4; White Hill, $4.62. Total, $1,289.38.

Kings Mountain Presbytery: Belmont, $73; Bostic, $3; Dallas, $25; Forest City, $5; High Shoals, $3; Ironton, $3.50; Lincolnton, $50; Lowell, $19; Mt. Holly (S. S. $5.41), $33.41; Rutherfordton, $30; Saluda, $10; Shelby, $15; Stanley Creek, $11; Union (Rev. O. G. J.), $103.30. Total, $384.21.

Mecklenburg Presbytery: Albemarle, $8; Banks, $15; Central Steele Creek, $25; Charlotte 1st, $337.50; Charlotte 2nd, $150; Cooks Mem., $12.50; Ellerbe Springs, $10; Hopewell, $40; Huntersville, $90; Knox, $10.37; Marks Creek, $10; Marshville, $11; Monroe, $50; Mt. Gilead, $9.50; Mulberry, $19.76; Paw Creek, $25; Pee Dee (Richmond Co.), $3.21; Robinson, $16.00; Rockingham, $10; Sharon, $10; Steele Creek, $75; Sugar Creek, $25.15; West Avenue, $35; Williams Mem., $22.50. Total, $1,020.49.

Orange Presbytery: Alamance (W. Aux. Alb. Supt.,

$5), $86.12; Bethel, $16.45; Bethlehem W. Aux., $10; Buffalo (Rev. Leonard Gill), $163.33; Buffalo W. Aux., $7; Chapel Hill, $29.50; Ch. of Cov., $50; Dan River, $7.95; Durham 1st, $72; Edgemont, $22.50; Elkin 1st, $6; Elkin 2nd, $6; Gilead, $4; Glade Valley, $1.70; Glenwood, $3.75; Greensboro 1st, $182.70; Griens W. Aux. $4, Alb. Supt. $1, $5; Hawfields, $15; High Point, $125; Hillsboro, $5.60; Lexington, $50; Mebane (Rev. Conner Brown), $184.84; Midway, $20; Piedmont, $3; Pleasant Garden, $3; Reidsville, $48; Reynolda, $22.50; Shiloh, $1; Speedwell, $1.17; Stony Creek, $6; Westminster, $27; Wilkesboro, $1; Winston 1st (W. Aux. $17.32, W. Aux. Alb. Supt. $25), $42.32; Graham, $90. Total, $1,313.43.

Wilmington Presbytery: Bladenboro, $6; Bowden, $14; Brown Marsh, $11.50; Burgaw, $15; Clarkton, $17.55; Currie, $3; Faison, $33; Faison (W. Aux. $7, W. Aux. Alb. Supt. $3), $10; Graves Mem., $44; Grove (W. Aux. Alb. Supt. $3), $23; Holly Grove, $13; Hopewell, $5; Immanuel W. Aux. Alb. Supt., $3; Keith, $3; Mt. Horeb, $10; Mt. Olive S. S., $5.75; Mt. Williams, $3; Mt. Zion (W. Aux. Alb. Supt. $3), $44; New Hope, $11.84; Oak Plains, $25; Polockville, $8; Rockfish, $24.75; St. Andrews, $221.18; South River (W. Aux. Alb. Supt. $3), $18; Wallace (Jones' Chapel), $3; Wallace W. Aux. Alb. Supt. $5; Whiteville, $33; Wildwood, $5; Wilmington 1st, $170; Winter Park, $5; Teachey's, $15. Total, $808.57.

Personal: W. S. Clary, $25; Dr. F. P. Venable, $10. Total, $35.

Total September 1 to October 15, $6,606.34.

Previously reported, $21,752.55.

Total General Support Fund, October 17, 1918-October 15, 1919, $28,358.89.

Received, previously reported, legacy Mrs. H. N. Reading, $4,249.03; interest, $249.17; Investment Fund, $4,498.20.

Total Receipts, Synodical Home Missions, for Synod's year, October, 1918, to October, 1919, $32,857.09.

A. W. C. Supt.

ARKANSAS.

Blytheville First—This church has presented the pastor, Rev. J. Walter Cobb, with an automobile to be used in his work. It is a new model Ford, equipped with a self-starter.

Seven members have been welcomed into the church during the last quarter, three by letter and four on profession of faith.

The Business Men's Bible Class, C. H. Windt, President, and the Women's Bible Class, Mrs. R. G. Craig, President, are doing good work. Since organization about two months ago, the enrollment in each has doubled. The Men's Class has purchased a Dietz all-metal bulletin board, which has been put up in front of the church. On a recent Sunday night the evening service was turned over to this class. The subject was "The Lost Boy." Addresses were made on the Southern Mountaineer—his parentage, how he got lost, and why he is worth finding. This service was preliminary to Rally day, which was observed on October 5. Notwithstanding a downpour of rain on that day a record attendance was made, and the offering was $200 for Sunday School Extension, the Women's Bible Class giving one-half of this amount, and beating the other classes with a per capita of the class enrollment of $3.44.

This church is looking forward to the coming on the 24th of this month of Rev. W. Moore Scott, D.D., State Superintendent of Missions and Evangelism, for a series of evangelistic meetings.

Blytheville has the distinction of being about the fastest growing town in the country, her percentage of growth the last decade being greater, it is claimed, than any town in the United States. The growth continues. It is a city of about seven thousand now, and bids fair soon to have a population of ten or fifteen thousand. The streets are being paved. A new system of sewers is being installed. Many large business houses and residences are under construction. Among the new-comers who are flocking in from many quarters there are some Presbyterians, and the church is having its share of the growth.

FLORIDA.

St. Petersburg—At the quarterly communion service, October 5, the pastor, Rev. W. J. Garrison, announced the names of ten members received by certificate since the last communion. Two infants were baptized during this period. Members who have been spending the summer elsewhere are returning, and some winter visitors have already arrived and identified themselves with the congregation. The newly-formed Brotherhood is getting into active service.

E. J. Young.

GEORGIA.

Carrollton—Rally day was observed by our Sunday School with a great deal of interest and enthusiasm. We had a much larger attendance than usual. Various and appropriate exercises by the little ones were splendidly rendered. The offering amounted to $225. Our church is now getting ready for a special series of services under the leadership of our Assembly Evangelist, Dr. J. Ernest Thacker, to begin October 28.

Columbus—First Church—There was a large attendance of communicants at our Fall communion, October 12. Our pastor, Dr. I. S. McElroy, read the names of eighteen members recently received. We are glad to have back with us for our pastor's assistant Rev. W. B. Clemmons, who has been absent for fifteen months with the Army Y. M. C. A. as Divisional Secretary for the Thirty-third Division, A. E. F. Troop No. 2 Boy Scouts, of which he was scoutmaster, gave him a royal welcome home. This troop, under his leadership, won the President's flag for selling more Liberty bonds than any other troop in the State of Georgia. Cor.

Atlanta—West End Presbyterian Church—The Sabbath School of the West End Presbyterian Church observed Rally day, October 25, with fine enthusiasm. The Sunday School room was most beautifully decorated with a wealth of Autumn flowers, and a specially prepared program, based on that sent out by the Assembly's Committee on Sabbath School, was carried out very successfully. There was an attendance of 384, breaking all previous records in the Sunday School, and the offering amounted to $103.10.

All departments of the church have entered upon the Fall work with renewed enthusiasm, and there is every prospect of a fruitful season.

KENTUCKY.

The Fifth Annual Evangelistic Conference of the West Lexington Presbytery was held Tuesday, September 30, at Pisgah Church, our annual meeting place. These conferences have grown in interest each year and this was doubtless the most successful yet held. It was a great inspiration and none who attended would attempt to deny it. The weather was ideal and old Pisgah Church, beautifully situated, which had recently undergone some repairs, never looked more inviting. The theme for discussion was "Bible Evangelism." In the morning we discussed the great evangelistic work and in the afternoon the great personal worker.

Rev. William Cumming, D.D., Chairman, Winchester, Ky., had prepared a most unusual program, which was carried out in every particular. Five ruling elders and a number of our pastors took part. The evangelistic spirit in our Presbytery was aroused to a high state of enthusiasm. Mr. Thomas B. Talbot, our Home Mission Superintendent, presided at the morning session, and Dr. Cumming at the afternoon session. Rev. E. L. Wilson, Home Mission Superintendent of Ebenezer Presbytery, was present and made a short talk. The ladies of Pisgah Church gave us a delightful dinner out on the lawn at 12:30.

These annual meetings have proven a great inspiration to our ministers and laymen each year, and our Presbytery is feeling tremendously the thrill of the evangelistic spirit. Rev. G. M. Telford is our pastor at Pisgah. T.

Marriages and Deaths

Deaths.

Talley — Joseph William, born December 4, 1863, Statesville, Tenn., married November 4, 1891, Miss Annie Evans, Eufaula, Alabama; died, Blakey, Georgia, July 4, 1919, a devoted elder of Arlington Church.

Bishop—Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Bishop passed away in the early morning of September 8, at the home of her nephew Mr. Duncan McNeill near Broadway, N. C. Mrs. Bishop had reached the advanced age of eighty-five. She was the widow of the late Mr. Archie Bishop and was Miss Patterson before her marriage. In her fourteenth year she united with Mt. Pisgah Church during the pastorate of Rev. Archibald Smith. All who knew her can testify to her devoted christian life, and her friends and relatives mourn her death as the departure of one who knew the Lord.

S. F. G.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. H. M. Pressly.

Mrs. H. M. Pressly died very suddenly at her home in Elizabeth City, N. C., Friday morning, October 10, of heart failure. She is survived by her husband, Rev. H. M. Pressly, and one daughter. The family came to this city from Florida a few months ago and have made many friends here who sympathize deeply with the bereaved ones in their great sorrow.

Mrs. Katherine Hood Pressly was born at Chester, S. C., on February 8, 1845. When she was a little child her family removed to Randolph County, Illinois, where her early life was spent. Hers was a family of teachers in which noble work she spent several years.

She was married to Rev. H. M. Pressly on August 29, 1878. Through the forty-one years that have passed she has been a faithful and efficient partner in the Lord's work.

Though handicapped by delicate health she has been "instant in season and out of season" in Christian service. She walked with the Lord all the way, assured of her acceptance in Christ. She suffered a severe attack of acute indigestion on October 9 and on the 10th the dear brave heart ceased to beat and she fell asleep in Jesus. And now the weary frame, the shattered nerves, the aching head, the anxious heart are all at rest and the purified spirit bows humbly and reverently in the presence of Him whom it loved and served here, while she waits the coming of her husband, and their daughter, Miss Mary P. Pressly, "absent from the body, at home with the Lord."

The funeral of Mrs. Pressly was conducted at Cann Memorial Presbyterian Church, Saturday afternoon at 5 o'clock by Rev. A. J. Crane, of Tarboro. The pall-bearers were: Prof. S. L. Sheep, Mr. A. B. Houtz, Dr. S. W. Gregory, Messrs. W. L. Cohoon, C. E. Thompson and C. W. Melick. The members of the Ministerial Association acted as honorary pall-bearers. The funeral service was simple and impressive. Interment was made in Hollywood cemetery.

IN MEMORIAM.

Miss Sallie McLean.

Resolutions adopted by the Ladies' Aid Society of Ida Mill Presbyterian Church, Laurel Hill, N. C., October 8, 1919.

Whereas, God in His goodness has translated His servant, Miss Sallie McLean, from the church militant to the church triumphant.

And, whereas, Though often hindered by infirmities, she was a faithful and devoted member of the church and society;

Therefore be it resolved:

First. That we bow submissively to the will of our Heavenly Father.

Second. That while we mourn her loss from our midst, we thank God for her beautiful womanhood and noble example.

Third. That we extend to the bereaved relatives our sincere sympathy.

Fourth. That these resolutions be spread upon our minutes and copies sent to the Standard and Christian Observer for publication.

Mrs. Ralph Morrison.

Mrs. C. R. Bailey.

Mrs. J. T. Flythe.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Bettie Pope McConnel.

When the sweet spirit of Mrs. Bettie Pope McConnel entered heaven, we know the angels rejoiced.

Near the close of the Sabbath, August 3, at the Charlotte Sanatorium, she breathed her last after long months of suffering borne so patiently.

Our church, community, Missionary Societies and Sabbath School feel keenly the loss of a member who was consecrated, devoted, kind, loving, cheerful and sympathetic. 'Twas always with a warm handclasp and sunny smile she greeted her friends, and a little while with her smoothed the rough places, gave us new courage and made us ashamed to complain.

For three years almost sightless she scarce could see the flowers that grew near her path, but rejoiced that their fragrance was hers. Refined, cultured, talented, she reflects these qualities in two splendid girls who have reached the years when, humanly speaking, mother is needed most, and to whom she leaves the beautiful legacy of a true, Christian example.

She was a daughter of John and Elizabeth Christine Pope and was nearly fifty-three years of age when she died. She was one of ten children and grew to young womanhood near Huntersville, uniting with the Presbyterian Church of that place at the age of seventeen.

Surviving her are a husband and two daughters, Pauline and Christine, who mourn the loss of a precious wife and mother.

In her young life she was fitted for a teacher and gave several years of her talent to the children of Mecklenburg. In the schoolroom her magnetism won the children just as she has won friends since.

She was married to Mr. W. J. McConnel, November 30, 1877, and united soon after with the Sugar Creek Presbyterian Church.

She was a devoted wife and truly a devoted helpmeet—always able to see "a silver lining to the dark cloud."

As a Missionary Society, we are sad over the loss of a faithful and loyal member, and pray that her influence will live on and may we cherish her memory and strive hard to emulate her faith in God and His dealings with His children.

To her sorrowing husband and children we tender our sympathy and may they look through their tears to Jesus for His precious sympathy and comfort, enabling them to say:

"God's will is our will."

Mrs. G. L. Hoover,

Mrs. J. H. Robinson,

Committee.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Mrs. H. C. Morris.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father has seen fit in His all-wise providence to take unto Himself our beloved sister, Mrs. H. C. Morris, who passed to her eternal reward on Saturday, July 19, 1919:

Resolved, That in the death of our sister the Frances E. Ufford Circle of the Pastor's Aid and Missionary Union has lost one of its most loyal members and our church has lost a most lovable Christian character and her presence will be greatly missed in all of our circle meetings.

Resolved, That we humbly submit to the will of Him who doeth all things well. We will cherish her memory as the years go by.

Resolved, That we commend to all the members of our circle and church which she loved so well her life of marked devotion and self-sacrifice to

Children's Department

THE BED NEXT DOOR.

It was so close to Rosie's that she could almost have reached out and touched the patient in it, if there had been a patient. But the bed "next door" was empty—lonesomely empty, Rosie thought. She waked up every morning wishing that when she opened her eyes there would be somebody there. She expressed her disappointment one morning to a sweet-faced nurse who bent over her.

"Why—why, Rosie! The idea of wanting anybody to be sick! Isn't that being unkind, dear?"

"Yessum—oh, yessum," the child answered, slowly, "only if somebody is sick I wish they'd put her in that bed next to me. I'm lonesome." And, queerly enough, the very next day that is what "they" did. Rosie, worn and tired after a painful night, drifted toward morning into a kind of little sleep. When she drifted out again low voices were in her ear. They were "live" voices, not dream ones, and one of them was a "patient" voice! There was some one at last in the bed next door.

They lay and looked at each other in silence till the gentle nurse went away to attend to some one else. Then it was the little stranger that spoke.

"Bet you don't ache much as me!"

"Bet I do!"

"I'm broken—what's the matter with you?"

"Oh," Rosie sighed, "I was broken, but now I'm knittin'." It takes a great while." She laughed out softly at the funny thing she was going to say next. "I'm a pretty poor knitter," she said.

The new patient in the next-door bed was a little, dark creature, with curls tumbling all over the pillow. To pale-haired, plain Rosie she was very beautiful, and a pang of envy crept in among the old pangs of "knitting." Perhaps it was that that started the Plan—perhaps it never would have begun at all if the next-door patient had been homely, with pale, straight hair straggling across her pillow in a thin little braid.

the cause of Christ, and that we will endeavor to emulate her example of faithful, conscientious service and seek to catch inspiration from her life.

Resolved, That we extend to her bereaved husband and children our deepest sympathy in this sad hour and commend them to God, the giver of all good gifts.

Be it further resolved, that we spread these Resolutions on the minutes of our Union, send a copy to the bereaved family and also to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

Mrs. T. E. Wyche,

Mrs. A. C. Huneycutt,

Committee.

Rosie, in her hard little vigil that first night with a next-door neighbor, lay and planned; it helped out the long night. In the morning she was ready.

"You awake?" she called softly. The next-door neighbor, in spite of being broken, had slept much better than Rosie.

"Yes. You? What'd you want to know for?"

"Oh—oh I was just lonesome for somebody. I was missin' havin' my mother come an' kiss me up in the mornin'. Did yours kiss you up?"

"No-o, she never." The dark face set in the halo of curls lifted a very little, curiously, from the pillow, but dropped back quickly, while something like a soft moan issued from the bed next door.

"I guess I'd better lie still."

"Yes, you better. I know, because I've moved an' 'lid' both. Catch me movin' round again! But when I'm through knitin'—mercy me, don't seem as if I could wait to get home! Where—where there's lace curtains an' m'nce pie an'—an' inches o' cream on the milk. Did you have inches on yours?"

"No-o, not inches."

The curious expression on the dark little face deepened.

"Then I don't s'pose you miss hearin' your mother—or your father—say: 'Have another mugful, darlin'—have every mite you want'—mercy me how I miss! An' bein' took ridin' every day in the autymobeel—does seem as if I couldn't knit quick enough when I think o' that! Is yours a double one or just a single? Or perhaps you don't keep a autymobeel?"

"No—no, we never."

The little dialogue continued with frequent interruptions all day, Rosie doing most of the talking and the next-door patient merely interspersing "no-o's." They were always "no's." None of the luxuries, the beautiful sumptuous things that Rosie talked of with such careless familiarity appeared to have "happened" to the occupant of the bed next door. She lay and meekly listened.

Once during the day a disturbing thing transpired, but Rosie reasoned the disturbance away. Of course, the velvet woman had just been "visiting the ward," as lots of velvet and woolen and cotton women did. Rosie had dozed off into one of her rare and merciful little naps, and on waking had seen the velvet woman going down the aisle of little beds to the door. Just for one minute it had seemed as if she went away from the bed next door. "But, of course," reasoned Rosie, "she never. Not a velvet one!"

It seemed a good opportunity to begin the dialogue again.

"Did that woman goin' out remind you of anybody—that velvet one?" She waited, but getting no reply, went on. "Not of your mother? Well, she reminded me, specially the velvet. Does yours wear hers every day, too?"

The doctor coming through the ward interrupted the "dialogue" here. He stopped at both little white beds, but longest at Rosie's. His smooth, kind face looked down tenderly at the frail, homely mite.

"Well, how are we knitting today? Dropped any stitches?" He made his examination with gentle hands, but his eyes grew serious at what he found, though he smiled with his lips into the wan child's face. He had found, indeed, dropped stitches in Rosie's knitting. There seemed no hope of ever picking them up. He saw with sorrowful, tender eyes only a crippled life ahead. He had feared it all along.

Rosie lying with closed eyes because it was easier being handled if her eyes were shut, caught a low word to the nurse. It sent a pang of horror through her little, broken frame. She knew what it meant—she knew, she knew! It meant she was never going to knit, never! And if she never—

For long after doctor and nurse had gone the child lay with shut eyes, hearing that low and awful word. It shut out everything else. She forgot the bed next door; she forgot the little bad Plan she had planned in order to "get even" with the next-door child for being beautiful. Only one thing kept on and on in her mind. Unconsciously she groaned.

"What is it? Oh, I'm sorry!" a soft voice said.

Then Rosie's eyes flew open and a torrent of fierce words came out of her lips.

"I'm not ever goin' to finish knittin'—not ever in the world! That's what he meant an' that's why his eyes were sorry an' the nurse's eyes. I'm not ever goin' to, I tell you! S'posin' you wasn't! S'posin' you'd always be broken 's long's you breathed an' lived!"

"Oh, I'm sorry—I'm sorry!" For there seemed nothing else to say. The next-door child was conscious of being ashamed of her own healthy little bones. She felt a wild wish to "divide them even" with this poor little neighbor who would never finish her knitting.

Gradually Rosie calmed. She even went back to the bad little Plan.

"If my mother was here"—she began, but got no further. How could she go on with bad, wicked make-believes now? The courage went out of her and in its place a little shame crept in, and a little sorriness, and both of them grew every minute bigger in the soul of Rosie. She was ashamed because she had made believe all those luxury things—in her heart she knew it had been worse than

News of the Week

Cotton valued at $100,000 in a cotton warehouse owned by the John B. Roddy Company was destroyed by fire in Rock Hill, S. C., on October 12.

President Wilson's condition still gives anxiety. His physician insists that he must have a prolonged rest. There are various rumors, many started by his enemies, but even his friends realize that it will take time to bring him back to his usual health.

The longshoremen of New York are on a strike and have virtually tied up traffic and caused some doubt as to the feeding of New York. The union chiefs tried to control them, but were hissed.

The Supreme Court has agreed to expedite consideration of appeals from Federal Court decrees in North Carolina, which declared unconstitutional the provisions in the 1919 war revenue tax imposing an excise tax upon the products of child labor.

The Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate has agreed by a vote of 14 to 1 to include in the Bill for Permanent Railway Government Fund disbursement a rule that will penalize the striking of railway employees.

Lieut. B. W. Maynard, who won the cross-the-continent race in a flying machine, is a North Carolina Baptist preacher.

In the Triennial General Convention of the Episcopal Church, in session at Detroit, Bishop McKim, of Tokio, Japan, declared that Japan will keep her word and return Shantung to China, because Japan always keeps her word.

Secretary Wilson has invited John L. Lewis, President of the United Mine Workers of America, and John L. Brewster, representing the operators, to meet him in order to avert the strike of bituminous coal mine workers, which Lewis has called to take place November 1.

There is going on a wordy battle between two delegations from Asheville, N. C., before Sec'y Glass, trying to decide whether the Government shall use Kenilworth Inn as a hospital for tubercular soldiers. Ex-Governor Craig represents those who favor, while Mayor Roberts represents the opposers.

The Evening Dispatch, of Wilmington, N. C., has been sold to R. S. Carver, of Augusta, Ga.

The Episcopalians in the General Conference insist that the Church must take a definite stand on the Peace Treaty. Resolutions in favor of a Covenant of Nations was characterized as a "spineless plan."

The Southern Wholesale Grocers Association stated that the railroads have discriminated against them and favored the packers.

At the World Conference of Cotton Growers spinners were urged to buy direct and cut out the middlemen.

The Senate by a vote of 35 to 55 defeated the Shantung amendment. Fourteen Republicans voted with the Democrats, while three Democrats: Reed, Gore and Walsh, voted with the Republicans.

Steel mill officials at Gary, Ind., have expressed the opinion that the strike was virtually ended, and made preparations for building up a new organization. They declared there was a surplus of labor in some departments. Union leaders disputed the accuracy of the claims made by the steel officials. They also began an effort to establish the independence of the union forces from the radicals.

The Episcopal Biennial Convention has refused to change the laws of divorce. The marriage of the innocent party is still permitted.

The two amendments introduced by Senator Fall, Republican, New Mexico, and having as their common purpose curtailment of the power of the American representative on the Reparations Commission, an international body set up by the treaty to fix and collect Germany's reparation bill, have been thrown out by the Senate.

make believe; she had lied them. Oh, she was sorry now!

"My mother won't ever be here!" she burst out. "My father won't ever! There weren't any lace curtains ever, nor cream any thick at all! Nor velvet clothes every day, nor—nor mince pie. I lied 'em all! I wish I hadn't! You had curls an' was lovely—an' I wanted to have something! But every minute that I was talkin' I wasn't anything but an orphan that fell out of a 'sylum window and broke. That's what I am now, this minute, an'—an' I'm never goin' to knit!"

"Yes, I know," the pitying voice said. Rosie turned a wan, wild, little face in surprise.

"I've always known. The nurse said you fell out of—of that kind of window."

"An' you let me go right on a-talkin' lies!"

"She told me the other, too—that prob'ly you never'd knit. They were afraid so."

"Oh! It was explanation enough. Pity had sealed the lips of the next-door patient. A beautiful pity that crept now across the little space between and comforted Rosie's sore and shamed soul. Silence settled over the two little beds.

The next day the Velvet Woman came again and sat down beside the bed next door. She belonged beside! And the Next-door Child had never boasted of her mother or of the velvetness! She had pitied too much to boast.

The days went and gradually the Next-door Child finished her knitting. But there seemed no picking up of Rosie's dropped stitches. She grew a little stronger and suffered a little less, but it had to go at that. It would always have to go. But something beautiful, in spite of unknit bones, had happened to Rosie. She had found a friend.

The Velvet Woman sat between the little beds on the last day of the Next-door Child's stay in the hospital. She had often sat between before. This time she had a beautiful thing to say.

"Rosie, how would you like to live in the country? On a farm, dear?"

"Because you're going to!" broke in the other child. "Mother said I might tell some of it! On our summer farm, where I'll be every summer! The farmer's wife's going to take care o' you and you'll get strong as I am maybe. We'll have times, Rosie!"

The beautiful, dark face glowed with happiness; the velvet face smiled tenderly. Rosie's sad little world grew suddenly a beautiful place to live in, even on crutches.

"And—and, Rosie, you'll grow fat, that's what you'll grow! You never saw such cream to eat, inches th—" but the Next-door Child caught herself up just in time. For no reminding words must spoil the moment of Rosie's happiness.—Annie Hamilton Donnell, in Congregationalist.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. Jno. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

To the Young People of Fayetteville Presbytery—One year ago today Chaplain Thomas McNeill Bulla laid down his life in the service of his country. He fought a good fight, he kept the faith and has received his reward.

Rev. T. M. Bulla became a candidate for the ministry under the care of Fayetteville Presbytery. He graduated from Davidson College in 1907 and from Union Theological Seminary in 1911. June 21, 1911, he was licensed by Fayetteville Presbytery. He was the only minister from Fayetteville Presbytery to lose his life in the great war. When he entered the service he was pastor of a group of churches in the Presbytery of East Hanover.

A fellow chaplain wrote of him: "Chaplain Bulla was wounded severely in the service for the men of his regiment, the 116th Infantry, on the field of battle north of Verdun. He died after an operation October 17, 1918. He was God's nobleman, a faithful minister of Jesus Christ, brave and fearless, spiritually, morally and physically."

Let us, the young people of Fayetteville Presbytery, erect in his memory a scholarship ($400) in the Student Loan Fund, a permanent memorial which will fit other young boys and girls to take active parts in the work of the church and nation. This memorial will continue indefinitely, as soon as the money is repaid by one student it is at once loaned to another.

The world need today is Christian leadership. The Student Loan Fund encourages and assists the future leaders, and yields continual returns. Let us all join together in erecting this memorial, a scholarship in the Student Loan Fund, in memory of Rev. T. M. Bulla.

Send your contribution to me and I will forward to Dr. Sweets in $100 payments. Yours in His service,

(Mrs. D. H.) Eliza Patterson Shaw,

Sec. Y. P. Work, Fayetteville Presbyterial.

R. 2, Laurinburg, N. C.

Day of Prayer, Latta, S. C., Church, October 10—Would that all women of Pee Dee Presbyterial might have been with us at our Day of Prayer in the Latta Church, Friday, the 10th instant. It would have been a blessing to them and to their societies.

In the first place, all surrounding conditions were perfect, shaming our forebodings as to weather, enough dinner, a full attendance, etc. Some of the women of other denominations were good enough to lay aside their day's work and worship with us, joining in discussions and giving some illuminating counsel. A number of business men also were present. The presidents of the Methodist and Baptist Women's Missionary Societies, the Baptist pastor and several Presbyterian pastors of nearby towns offered prayers during the day. Indeed, we did not forget to commend our work to God at frequent intervals.

We had guests from perhaps a half-dozen other societies in the Presbyterial, and while some of the speakers were detained, those who were present more than made good any vacant places on the program. We felt honored by the presence of our Presbyterial President, Mrs. M. S. McKinnon, of Hartsville, S. C., whose charm of manner and earnestness of purpose enthused us all. The First Vice-President, also, Mrs. M. B. John, of Bennettsville, made the sacrifice of time and strength to come all those miles of dusty travel to add her prayers and consecrated counsel to the day's blessing. Rev. J. M. Holladay, D.D., of Marion, and Rev. J. S. Garner, of Mullins, each left a message with us of our duty to others which we would hardly be able to forget. The pastor of the Latta Church, Rev. Andrew J. Howell, had promised to "stand by," which he did faithfully in many ways, speaking particularly on Sunday School Extension and Young People's Work. The noon-time hour of relaxation under the trees, when the abundant luncheon was being served, was very delightful.

We believe that the Day of Prayer accomplished its purpose, and was, we trust, acceptable before the Throne of Grace.

The writer is a new-comer in Pee Deè Presbytery, and is glad to have an opportunity to bear witness to the earnest spirit of the women of the Latta Church. They work together so well, and they seem so desirous of the growth and well-being of their church, and so ready to uphold the hands of their pastor, that it is good for the soul to associate with them; and it is easy to prophesy a large membership in the not distant future.

The Wilmington District Presbyterial Auxiliary Day of Prayer will be held at Immanuel Church, in Wilmington, Tuesday, October 28. The district is composed of the following Church Auxiliaries: First Church, St. Andrew's, Covenant, Immanuel, Winter Park, Pearsall, Delgado, New Hope, Southport, Sweet Home and Topsail. A splendid program will be given, including addresses on the following subjects: "Value of Prayer Band to Local Auxiliary," Mrs. W. M. Cumming; "Mission Study Classes," Mrs. J. A. Brown; "Methods Through Auxiliary Plan," Mrs. J. C. Stewart; Bible Hour, by Mrs. Jackson Johnson, with seasons for prayer and discussion of problems. It is hoped that Mrs. Whalen, who is soon to sail as a missionary to China, will have a part on the program. Mrs. L. D. Latta is chairman of the group and will preside.

REPORT OF WOMAN'S MISSIONARY INSTITUTE AT SEDALIA, S. C., OCT. 3, 1919.

The tenth annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Institute convened at Sedalia, Friday, October, 1919, Mrs. Ida Perrin, of Union presiding. Interesting papers were read by delegates from the different localities embracing this organization.

Mrs. Irby, of Woodruff, offered suggestions on efficiency in missionary organization and urged its members to a deeper study of God's word.

Report from Union Church was read by Mrs. W. J. Haile, showing that this society is supporting a Home Mission worker in the mountains of Kentucky, besides being active in all church work; that it has a membership of 46.

In report read by Miss Anna Harnes, of Jonesville, attention was called to the noble work of one of their members, Miss Farr, who is stationed in the mountains of North Carolina.

Mrs. J. W. Cunningham, of Jonesville, gave excellent memorial sketches of the missionaries of our Southern Church who have gone to their reward since the last meeting of this Institute.

Mrs. C. F. Hart, of Union, offered some beautiful thoughts on Christian Fellowship.

A most timely and convincing paper on Sabbath Observance was read by Mrs. Alexander, of Jonesville.

A report on Young People's Work was given by Miss Floyd, of Woodruff, who plead for more zeal among the young people of our church.

Mrs. Irby presented a letter from Mrs. Bryan, of Columbia asking that efforts be made to improve the living conditions of our missionaries in the Congo.

A missionary society was organized at Sedalia with Mrs. Betsil as president and Mrs. J. E. Minter, secretary and treasurer.

The election of officers of the Institute for the ensuing year resulted as follows: Mrs. C. E. House, leader; Mrs. Ida Perrin, vice leader; Mrs. B. B. James, secretary; Mrs. Alexander, of Jonesville, treasurer; executive committee, chairman, Mrs. F. M. Farr.

Meeting to be held next year at Santuc, S. C.

Mrs. B. B. James, Sec.

Union, S. C.

Organic Union.

(Continued from page 9)

made, how splendidly the small new Presbytery responded to the challenge! The experiment was so successful that Mecklenburg was encouraged to colonize again, and sent forth the Presbytery of Kings Mountain, which has repeated the achievement of Asheville. In the Presbytery of Lexington, a few years ago, it was proposed to erect the West Virginia portion of its field into the separate Presbytery of Tygart's Valley. This was a far more dubious venture than the one of Asheville. There were only two or three self-supporting churches in the territory. There were only half a dozen ministers in the field. Ministers were moving in and out all the time. There was serious danger that at any time the field might be left without ministers enough to make a quorum of Presbytery. But thrown on their own resources, as they have been, they have been aroused to the highest pitch of self reliance and of effort, and have succeeded. The same story is repeated in the case of the new Synod of West Virginia. That portion of the old Synod of Virginia included within the new Synod of West Virginia has grown faster than it ever did before, since it has become a separate Synod. Then compare the U. S. A. and U. S. churches as to their efficiency now, and the comparison supports our contention. The U. S. A. Church is five times as large as ours, yet our percentage of increase in membership is larger than theirs and our gifts per capita to beneficences greater than theirs. We have a compact, well organized, homogeneous, efficient church, with a healthy, uniform growth, in numbers, evangelistic spirit, contributions, Christian character and commanding influence. We hold a unique place among the churches of the world and the blessing of God upon us has been most marked. Why jeopardize all this for advantages that are unproven, and that, for the present, exist only in the hope of the sanguine optimist. Why this mania for bigness? The church courts become unwieldy if the Church is very large. There are already nearly a thousand members in the U. S. A. Assembly. If we unite with them the total number will be not less than twelve hundred. Our Assembly with its two hundred and seventy-six members is already an unwieldy body. The Congress of the United States is not one-third larger than our Assembly, and it is no longer, strictly speaking, a forum for free discussion. Only those members are recognized by the speaker whose names are on lists furnished him by the chairmen of committees. It is said by those who have looked on at meetings of the U. S. A. Assembly that they have to resort to a somewhat similar arrangement, in order to get along with business at all. If efficiency is the object, would it not be better for us to divide our present Church than to seek union with another which is already so large as to be cumbersome to itself?

Again, if we consolidate with the U. S. A. Church it would mean the removal of the executive agencies so much farther off from us. The more remote the controlling agency the weaker the tie between it and the lower courts, the local churches, and the people. We personally know the secretaries of our committees and their agents. They come to the meetings of our Synods and Presbyteries and speak in our churches. We have fellowship with them in our homes. All this strengthens the personal ties and conduces to more intimate information concerning the work and to greater zeal in it. How would it be in this respect if the executive agencies were located in New York or Philadelphia? While our present beloved secretaries continued in connection with these agencies, the weakening effect would not be felt so much, but it would be felt as soon as they were replaced by others, as in the course of nature they must be, sooner or later.

Neither does the larger body give promise of much greater economy. If we consolidate with the U. S. A. Church, would we dismiss any of our present secretaries or ask the other Church to dismiss any of theirs? If not, would we consent to having our men get smaller salaries than those they are now getting? If they are retained, it surely must not only be at salaries equal to those they are now getting, but also equal to those much larger salaries now paid to secretaries by the U. S. A. Church. Where then is the economy?

What Will Presbyterians Do For Their Spiritual Kindred in France and Belgium?

By Rev. Jas. I. Vance, D.D.

A fund of three million dollars is being raised by the Protestants of North America to aid their fellow-religionists in France and Belgium in rebuilding and reopening their ruined churches, and keeping alive the proclamation of a true Gospel. Of this fund, Southern Presbyterians are obligated to raise one hundred thousand dollars. The General Assembly has set aside the fourth Sunday in October as the day on which the offering is to be taken in all our churches.

An advance payment of ten thousand dollars has already been made in the faith that Southern Presbyterians will not be behind the Christians of other denominations in America in extending a helping hand to their afflicted brethren across the seas.

Is there a minister in the Southern Presbyterian Church so indifferent to the heroic struggles of men and women who kept the faith when to do so cost them their lives, so uncaring for history, and so uninterested in those who are out in the storm today, that he needs to be argued with and urged to give his people a chance to show their sympathy for the descendants of the Huguenots? I should not want to believe there is.

Is there a church session so out of touch with world currents today that it feels no-pull from these little churches of our faith across the sea? Is there a single congregation of Presbyterians in the South that will let October 26 go by without a prayer and an offering for their Christian kin in Belgium and France?

This fourth Sunday in October is Reformation Sunday. The theme we are to discuss is "The Edict of Nantes." Around that theme it will be easy to stage the heroic struggles of people who died rather than surrender their faith. These are the people for whose descendants and to keep alive whose testimony to the truth we are asked to contribute.

Shall Protestantism perish out of the future of these lands. A new day of opportunity is opening to us there, but to seize it, a broken and destitute people must have a helping hand.

Southern Presbyterians have never been slack in their loyalty to the truth. They are neither unsympathetic nor ungenerous. They have a way of doing their full duty when they meet it face to face. If they understand the issue, I do not believe they will fail France and Belgium on October 26.

GETTING THE STRIDE.

Nearly always it takes a little time. Every lover of walking understands. He may start too fast or too slow—at such a pace as he cannot maintain for a long tramp or so lazy that he cannot cover the distance in the time allotted. But give him a little time to shake his muscles free and fill his lungs with ozone, and he normally drops into a swinging gait, especially if he has a good walking mate to help set the stride. I have watched such pedestrians, whose easy rhythmical movement, neither hurried nor leisurely, was a delight to watch and a challenge to emulation.

Which thing is a parable. No great campaign can be won in feverish haste. Still more certainly must it fail until we put swing and stride into it. We must time our step to the demands of a real endurance test. There's a long way to go before we reach the goal. Days of strain, such as the Church never called itself to before, are ahead. Prayer, patience, persistence, pluck—all this we shall need. 'Tis not a hectic campaign; 'tis a great drive, long prepared for. We must get the stride, all of us.—George Clarke Peck.

Miscellaneous

THE PRINCE OF WALES IN QUEBEC.

Some one during the war spoke of the Prince of Wales as looking "incredibly young." He is still just that. His slight, not tall figure, his rosy cheeks, his fair, straight hair, parted boyishly to one side, all makes him appear "in his teens" rather than the twenties he must be. Many a moving picture actor would both look and act the part more perfectly—more according to Hoyle. But he couldn't be half so appealing. The little Prince is the real thing. His candid, round eyes are those familiar to us in portraits of his father, grandfather, and great-grandmother. His shyness and simplicity of manner are charming—even his embarrassment, which showed in his looking at his finger nails, and then suddenly remembering not to do so; his twice running his forefinger absent-mindedly beneath his nose in a way that Queen Mary, we imagine, would have taken him very seriously to task for doing; his constant fingering at his collar. At the fifth—or maybe the sixth—fingering of the collar, the carefully selected essemblage, with all its loyal disposition to take the Prince very seriously indeed, gave a nervous little giggle. St picturesque a scene could not have been duplicated in any other quarter of the British Empire. "The Ancient Capital," as Quebec loves to call itself, in gala dress indoors and out; the French flag everywhere entwined with the English; the brilliant robes of the church dignitaries, including the scarlet kid gloves of Cardinal Bogin; the many uniforms, the handsome Duke and Duchess of Devonshire and their young daughters; Mlle. Hortense Cartier, a distinguished little old lady, lineal descendant of Jacques Cartier, discoverer of Quebec, who, after residing in France for forty-six years, has just returned to Canada in time to make a special visit to Quebec in honor of the Prince of Wales. All the speeches of welcome were in French, as were the Prince's replies. His voice is strong and resonant; his French much better than Canadian French, which almost has a brogue—like Irish-English. Most of the time the Prince appears somewhat dazed, as though wondering what it is all about. Some of us, in introspective moments, ponder upon the fact that we are but one of many; that there is nothing to make us distinctive—to lift us head and shoulders above the crowd. The little Prince has the air of wondering why he should be distinctive—of longing to come down from his lonely elevation to the common level where there is so much more freedom and where everybody seems to be having such a nice, easy time of it. Barring this wistfulness, his manner in its shyness and absence of pose and display of excellent common sense reminds one of Lieut.-Colonel Theodore Roosevelt.—Banner.

THE TONGUE TEST.

James takes about a fifth of his entire letter to write about a Christian's use of his tongue. He thinks the test of ability to control one's self shows up in his control of his speech. Such a man is "perfect." The size of the tongue is out of all proportion to its power both for good and for ill. It always has double possibilities. Its possible excellencies are indicated in verses 4, 17, 18; its possible defects in verses 6, 14-16. With it one may both bless God and man or curse them. After all, speech is affected by the heart. It is a reflection of our inner life. It should be as a fountain sending forth refreshing waters. If it is a difficult task to "tame our tongues" and govern our speech, it is not impossible. With the help of Christ these things can be done.—Charles E. White.

WONDERFUL EGG PRODUCER.

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs, so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 3257 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1.00 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the tonic costs you nothing. Send a dollar today. Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

"Their Christmas Vision"

This is the title of a program prepared by the Executive Committee for use in the churches and Sunday Schools of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

It is attractive in appearance. Interesting and instructive in material. Makes a strong appeal for the dedication of life to the service of Christ and His Church.

Its use will help carry out the Presbyterian Progressive Program.

It will be sent in sufficient quantities for use in any of the Presbyterian churches and Sunday Schools, free of cost.

Order now. Begin to prepare for the service, December 21, 1919—the day appointed by the General Assembly.

Order from the Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, Henry H. Sweets, Secretary, 410 Urban Building, Louisville, Ky.

THE COST OF STRIKES.

Stephen C. Mason, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, has declared in a public address that ten million dollars a day has been the cost to the United States of strikes and threatened strikes in the last eight months. Endless contentions between employers and employes may also cost America the possession of a great world trade. Never before in the history of the world has any nation been more favorably situated to seize and hold the bulk of the world's trade. We alone of all the great nations came out of the war with our man power practically unimpaired. We have the man power. We have the ships. We have the natural resources. We have the organization. We have the money. We have all the markets of the world open to us and clamoring for everything we have to sell or barter. The road to commercial and industrial supremacy is open before us. If we fail to seize this opportunity we shall in future days deserve the odium which falls upon sloth and criminal stupidity. It is part of Germany's plan to embroil us and England's population also in destructive internal strife that the German trader may again take from nerveless hands the golden scepter of a world supremacy in trade. Strikes are never to public advantage. Only bitterness and monstrous hate are engendered, and such methods of settling disputes are wasteful, wicked, insane. In friendly conversations and conferences let the appeal to reason and justice sway the hearts and minds of men, and our merchantment shall carry to the far seas not only the merchandise "made in America" but the spirit of God's new day.—United Presbyterian.

Whoever is conscious of a desire to live better than he has been living, to him Christ comes as truly as He ever came to men who were mending their nets beside the Galilean lake. We make a mistake when we wait for any other call than that.—George Hodges.

160 HENS—1500 EGGS.

Mrs. H. M. Patton, Waverly, Mo., writes:—"I fed 2 boxes of 'More Eggs' and got 1500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly 21 days." This scientific tonic has made big egg profits for thousands of poultry raisers all over the U. S. It revitalizes the hens, tones them up and makes them lay all the time. Get ready now and make big profits out of your hens this winter. A $1.00 package will double the egg production and a million dollar bank guarantees to refund your money if you are not entirely satisfied. Send $1.00 now to E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, 3257 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., and get a season's supply of "More Eggs." Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

HOOVER FOR LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

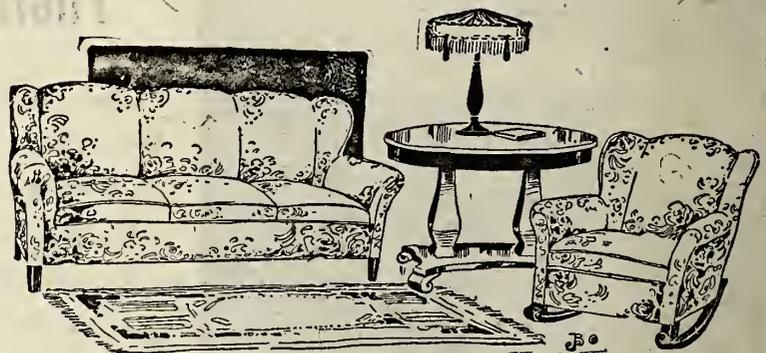

Herbert Hoover, former director general of allied relief, reaching New York Saturday after five years in Europe, made a statement announcing his stand for the league of nations covenant. If the covenant is not adopted, he said, the whole treaty would fall, and the covenant should be accepted "as it is, or nearly as it can be obtained." After an experience with all the peoples of Europe, during which he distributed more than 600 steamship cargoes of foodstuffs, 3,220,000 tons, Mr. Hoover asserted that the task of America in Europe now is greater than before the armistice. This task has to do with the restoration of trade and commerce, he said, and should be accomplished not by government action but by ample credits through normal commercial methods. The wave of European unrest, according to Mr. Hoover, has subsided. The danger of bolshevism, economically and politically, passed last February, he said, and as a philosophy it is rapidly disintegrating. As to profiteering and high prices, Mr. Hoover believes that prices will soon fall automatically because of economic conditions throughout the world.—Continued.

WANTED

A capable and consecrated man to be treasurer and business manager of our Congo Mission in Africa. A rare opportunity of Christian service. Write to the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, box 330, Nashville, Tenn.

Elegant in Appearance Luxuriously Comfortable

The popular antique cane-back Living-Room Suits that we have just received are beauties, and are moderate in price—$225 to $450.

And for absolute comfort, our luxurious, over-stuffed Tapestry Suits can't be beaten.

Let us show you some living-room suits that it is a pleasure to see.

W. T. McCoy & Company
Popular Furniture--Popular Prices
CHARLOTTE, N. C.

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

Study the Bible with Dr. Gray in Your Own Home

Get a New Vision of God's Dealings with Mankind.

Understand the Great World Movements of the Momentous Period in Which We Live.

The course of 24 studies under the personal direction of Dr. Gray and his associates of the Moody Bible Institute by correspondence has just begun. The Christian Herald has secured a rare, unprecedented privilege for its readers. Join now. Fee only one dollar to any old or new subscriber for six months or longer. Special introductory price to new six months' subscribers covering the full period of this remarkable Bible Study Course, one dollar (two dollars in all). 24 wonderful studies taught by that prince of Bible authorities, Dr. James M. Gray, Dean of the Moody Bible Institute, with its brilliant Faculty (Dr. Ralston and Professors Fitzwater, Page and Gosnell). Never before has such a course been available at this mere fraction of its real value. The Christian Herald's course covers a period of six months—24 inspiring, educational, helpful studies, a course that will clarify Bible truths, transform followers into leaders and spread an intimate knowledge of the Book of Books, such as has never been available to the thousands upon thousands who will welcome this intimate association with these men of God.

And then there's the Christian Herald itself at the reduced price for six months trial subscribers—(26 great big wonderful issues)—for one dollar, the biggest value in helpful, inspirational, devotional, entertaining, instructive, human interest periodical literature available to Christian America.

● The Christian Herald is one of America's really great religious and social institutions. It is the best loved and most widely read interdenominational weekly family magazine

IMPORTANT—During the 26 weeks for $1.00 period, Grace Livingstone Hill's new and best serial story "Betty Hope" will appear complete in the Christian Herald in advance of its publication as a $1.50 book. This will be followed by another of those wonderful Courtenay Savago serials, entitled "Morning," also to appear as a $1.50 volume after Christian Herald subscribers have read it. This will give Christian Herald readers two gripping, wholesome stories without extra charge.

in the world. It has been the means of relieving more distress, feeding more hungry, clothing more naked than all other periodicals combined. It is dedicated to the service of humanity. It is at the forefront in the effort to make of every church a community center or social and religious uplift. It tells the important news of every denomination, but is the organ of none. You and your family need the stimulus, the inspiration, the vision of world service the Christian Herald gives. A million new short term subscribers before 1920 is the Christian Herald's goal. The 6 months' reduced price offer is made without profit to the Christian Herald. One dollar in currency, check or money order sent now (at the Christian Herald's risk) is guaranteed to give you more and better literature than you could imagine possible. And remember—every subscriber for six months or more is entitled to enroll in the six months' course of Bible Study to be conducted by the Faculty of the Moody Bible Institute on payment of one dollar additional (two dollars in all). Use the coupon.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD 490 Bible House, New York

I wish to join the Christian Herald's correspondence course—twenty-four Bible studies—and to have my name entered as a six months' subscriber to the Christian Herald. I enclose $2.00 in full payment. ($1.00 for the correspondence course and $1.00 for this special six months' trial subscription.)

Name
Address

DEATH OF ADELINA PATTI.

It has been said that Adelina Patti, whose death occurred last week, had probably given more pleasure to more men and women than any other singer. She was seventy-seven years of age, and had sung everywhere around the globe, from the time she was seven years old, until the opening years of the world war—a period of at least seventy-one years. Her voice was a pure, golden soprano, reaching to the F above high C, and its strength was as remarkable as its range. Madame Sembrich, her nearest successor in point of time, said of her, "Patti? When you speak of Patti you speak of a thing that was but once;" and to the "nightingale" herself, Alexander Dumas the elder exclaimed: "Being a man and a Christian, I love to listen to your singing; but if I were a bird I would die of envy." It is estimated that her golden voice won her as a golden reward, more than five million dollars.

"THE SANITARY" Individual Communion CUPS

List of thousands of churches using our cups and FREE CATALOG with quotations sent upon request. Sanitary Communion Outfit Co., 71st St., Rochester, N. Y.

Ladies, Attention! Here is an offer that will bring joy to the hearts of the Crochet and Tatting workers. Complete Crochet Library; just think of 1354 Standard Original Designs, all illustrated by actual photographs with complete directions for working. No. 9 Yokes, Corset Covers and Nightgowns 16 cents " 11 Tatting, Waists, etc. - - - 16 cents " 13 Towels, Slips, Sheets - - - 16 cents " 12 Patchwork for Quilts, etc. - - - 28 cents contents, 29 designs for Quilts. Send stamps. LACLEDE BOOK CO. 815 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

Kentucky Theological Seminary Louisville, Kentucky

Able faculty. Course of study comprehensive and adapted to the times. High standards. Practical training. Excellent library facilities. Splendid buildings, with comfortable dormitories. Expenses moderate. Session begins October 1, 1919. For further information write the President.

Charles R. Hemphill

Clothes Cleaned Faultlessly

All Spots, Stains and Dirt Removed.

27 years of continuous service to the public, cleaning all kinds of garments, has built for us an unequalled reputation. Our method of cleaning is known as the—

Faultless Dry Cleaning Process.

This famous method of treating clothing restores newness and freshness to almost every article of wear without the slightest injury to the most delicate fabric. It not only cleans perfectly but brings back the original lustre and new "hang" of the garment, making it appear as good as when new.

Our Guarantee.

We guarantee all dry cleaning absolutely. If you are not delighted with the results, say so, and without a word of discussion BACK GOES YOUR MONEY. We know we can please you and hence are not afraid to guarantee satisfaction.

Read our guarantee and look through your clothing and send us a trial order. Parcel Post gives prompt and inexpensive delivery. We pay return postage.

The Charlotte Laundry, Charlotte, N. C.

INDIA AND HOME RULE.

While there is a growing sentiment among a large portion of the people of India in favor of Home Rule in India, there is also strong opposition to any movement in the direction of separation from the British empire. This opposition comes from two sources—first, the Moslems, and next the lower caste Hindus. A Moslem paper published in Calcutta remarks:

“A few of our Mohammedan brothers say: ‘If India gets self-government, then we shall not be able to cope with the Hindus.’ When we ask why, the invariable reply is, ‘The Hindus are more numerous than we are, they are better educated, and they are certainly more prosperous financially. We must never forget that these people are the same Hindus that banished the Buddhists from India and those Buddhists were their own kith and kin. The first chance they get they will do the same with us, for they bear a grudge against us, as we Moslems ruled over them for six centuries.’”

The argument of the lower caste Hindus is summarized thus: “The Pariahs of Madras assembled in convocation say: ‘The Brahmins, who have kept us—the Untouchables—mercilessly under their heels for ages, are not likely to be less tyrannical if the Hindus come into power. That we certainly do not want, and so we prefer British rule for generations to come.’”—The Presbyterian (Halifax) Witness.

TEACHERS: Can place you now $60 to $150. Fifty to hundred urgent calls daily, best schools and colleges, Special enrollment. Three offices: Columbia, Chattanooga, Richmond. Write today. SOUTHERN TEACHERS' AGENCY, Columbia, S. C.

The McCALLIE SCHOOL A HOME SCHOOL FOR BOYS Able men train boys for college. Individual attention. 1,000 feet elevation. Big athletic field. All sports. Swimming. Boating. Military drill. Honor System. Boys live in Masters' homes, under their personal guidance. Address Headmasters: S. J. & J. P. McCallie Missionary Ridge, Chattanooga, Tenn.

LETTERS THAT INSPIRE CONFIDENCE.

I wish very much that every reader of this paper could spend sufficient time in my office to read the thousands of letters which I have received from all parts of the country. I have printed several hundred of them in a booklet, but I wish you could see the originals, for I would like to have you realize the wonderful results which they report in the relief of dyspepsia, indigestion, persistent headache, rheumatism, kidney, bladder and liver diseases, uric acid poisoning and other curable conditions due to impure blood.

Before my own health was restored by Shivar Mineral Water and I purchased this Spring, and before I received all these letters from sufferers, I didn't take very much stock in advertisements like this. I therefore cannot blame you if you doubt, but, my friend, I am absolutely convinced that the Shivar Spring is the greatest restorative mineral spring ever discovered, not excepting the famous Spas of Europe. I have shipped this water to thousands of sufferers in all parts of the United States and they almost invariably report either permanent restoration or beneficial results. That is why I make the offer contained in the following letter. Sign it now and mail it.

Shivar Spring, Box 3L, Shelton, S. C. Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

Name Address Shipping Point (Please write distinctly)

YOUR FACE? Is the Complexion Muddy, Tanned, Freckled? It troubled with skin eruptions, sunburn, pimples, try PALMER'S SKIN-SUCCESS SOAP It cleanses, softens and clears the skin and tends to remove sunburn, tan, freckles, blackheads, pimples and eczema. Thoroughly antiseptic. Ask your druggist, or write for free samples to THE MORGAN DRUG CO., 1521 Atlantic Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

You can now obtain direct by parcel post our famous

Caricol Tea

Millions of pounds of this famous Martindale blend have been sold to the discriminating Philadelphia trade. A blend of several selected growths, it has its own distinctive flavor that is delightful in the cup, hot or when iced. A wonderful tea value that gives you satisfaction and saves money. Send for a trial package with which we will enclose a list of other Martindale specialties that you can order by parcel post. Parcel post cost prepaid by us to any point within the fourth zone (from Savannah northward).

1 lb. 55c. 5 lbs. $2.35

THOMAS MARTINDALE & CO. 10th & Market Sts. - Philadelphia, Pa.

“In the A. E. F. With an Artist”

The sketch book and diary of Lieut. J. B. Mallard. Send $1.00 for your copy to J. B. MALLARD

Box 625 CHARLOTTE, N. C.

THOMAS Individual Cups Used by over 35,000 churches. Clean and Sanitary. Send for catalog and special offer. Trial free. Thomas Communion Service Co. Box 113 Lima, Ohio

WANTED: Young Men and Women

Let us train you for a good office position. We are placing Bookkeepers, Stenographers and office-trained graduates all over the country. We can place you, as we are in close touch with the business interests of this entire section. Write today.

CECIL'S BUSINESS COLLEGE, Dept. R. P., SPARTANBURG, S. C.

Rocky River Springs School For Boys

Thoroughly Christian. A Preparatory School for Boys. Moderate Cost: Fall term opens Sept. 23. Endorsed by Mecklenburg Presbytery. For Announcement and Information, address PROF. C. E. WELLS, Principal, AQUADALE, N. C.

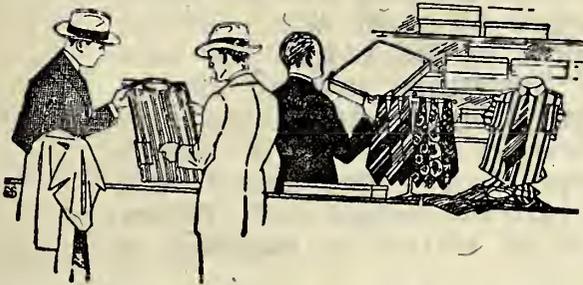

Grind Your Corn the Simple Way Delicate, Complicated Machinery is neither necessary nor economical. Save money in grinding your grain with— The Gibbes Corn Mill Simple—Fast—Economical—Durable No complicated parts, whole machine easily handled. With ball-bearing system it is light running and rapid, requiring very little power. Little wear, smooth running, seldom a part to replace. Made of the best of materials. Absolutely guaranteed. For illustrated literature and prices address— GIBBES MACHINERY CO., Dept. A-2, Columbia, S. C.

BELK BROS.

Carolina's Largest Distributors
of Merchandise

BELK BROS.

CHARLOTTE, NORTH CAROLINA

Belk Suits—one of the lines which has made our Clothing Department famous all over the State—made especially for us.

The fabrics are all Wool Worsteds, Serges and Cashmeres—made in men's and young men's models—Regulars, Longs, Stouts, English, Skirt with Belt, Long Stouts, Extra Sizes and Stubs. Priced in the usual Belk way—$16.50, $18.50, $19.95, $22.50, $25.00, $29.50, $35.00 and $39.50.

BLUE SERGES—SPECIAL $39.50

We place on sale this week 200 Men's all wool, fine weave 16 and 18 ounce Blue Serge Suits made with good Serge lining. Sizes 34 to 48. Regulars, English, Longs and Stouts. Special $39.50

Schloss, Hamberger and Styleplus Tailored Suits—conservative and young men's models, including the new skirt models with belt. This season's newest Shades, priced $25.00, $29.50, $30.00, $35.00, $39.50, $45.00 and $49.50.

SHOES

SHOES

$100,000.00 worth of Men's, Women's and Children's Shoes bought six to eight months ago on sale at less than manufacturer's price today.

Men's Dress Shoes in Belk, Ralston and Reynolds makes, $3.50, $4, $5.00, $6.50, $7.50, $9.50, $10.00 and $12.50.

Men's Work Shoes for hard wear, $2.00, $2.50, $3.00, $3.50, $4.00, $5.00 and up to $7.50.

Women's Dress Shoes, brands as follows: Belk, Godman and Queen Quality, $2.00 to $14.00.

Women's solid leather coarse shoes in button and lace, $5.00 values, our leader $4.00

HATS HATS HATS

We have them in new shapes and colors, snappy styles for the college chaps. Neat shapes for dad that will make him look younger.

Stetson's, Vanity, No-Name and Belk at $7.50, $7.00, $6.00, $5.00, $4.00, and $3.00.

Overcoats for men and young men, snappy skirt and conservative models. Ranging in price from $8.95 to $39.50.

Men's Dress Pants. Sizes from 29 to 54 waist, 29 to 37 long. Priced at $2.98, $3.50, $5.00, $6.95, $7.95 and up to $12.50.

READY-TO-WEAR DEPARTMENT

We have the largest and most complete Ready-to-Wear Department in North or South Carolina.

LADIES SUITS and DRESSES

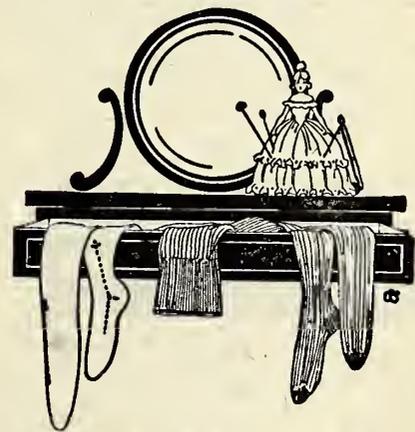

Our new buyers are constantly in touch with the best and most reliable manufacturers in Ladies' Cloths, hence we give you the Latest Styles, Models and materials. Buying for 22 stores gives us Better Values. We give Better Values. Serges, Velours, Velvets, Tricotine, etc., all regular sizes, also large sizes, 34s to 46s. $19.95, $24.95, $29.95, $39.95, and up to $100.00.

SEPARATE SKIRTS

Regular or extra sizes. Plain Serges, Tricotines, etc., Blacks and Blues and quite a range of patterns. In Plaids or Stripes, all the new things $2.95, $4.95, $5.95, $6.95, $7.95 on up.

Table Oil Cloths.....25c
45-inch 50c values Table Oil Cloth...25c
10,000 yards Curtain Goods in all kinds of materials, 36-inch wide, plains or borders.....12½c, 15c, 18c, 19c, 25c

HOSIERY DEPARTMENT

Buster Brown Hosiery for Women and Children, Lisle thread, colors Black, Brown and White, all sizes, 39c, 48c, and 50c.

Burson Hosiery for Women, Blacks, Cordovans and Whites, none better than Burson's. Regular and out sizes. 25c, 35c, 39c, 48c, 50c, 69c.

SILK HOSE.

We carry several standard makes, Kay-sers, Phoenix, Gordon's, Merrill's, G. & A. Wise. All colors and sizes. Extra sizes. Thousands of dollars in Silk Hosiery—Real Silk, $1.39, $1.49, 1.98, $2.25, $2.50, $2.95.

Silk Hose and Boot Silk at 69c, 89c, 98c, $1.19, $1.35, $1.49.

All colors, all sizes.

LADIES' AND MISSES COATS

We carry in stock all kinds of Coats, all sizes from 3 years old up.

THE STANDARD PIANO CLUB PREVENTS WASTE.

You will not find many men who would deliberately throw away one hundred dollars, and yet there are many who unintentionally waste that amount every year in one way or another. Careless buying is one way of wasting money. The founders of the Club had that fact in mind when they adopted the principle of cutting down the cost of pianos by cutting out the waste in marketing them. The Club claims to save its members one hundred dollars or more on their pianos and asks you to give it an opportunity to prove this fact to your entire satisfaction by thoroughly testing the piano in your own home before paying one cent or in any way obligating yourself to join the Club. It will cost you only a postal card to investigate, and if the testimony of Club members who have already joined it is to be relied upon you will undoubtedly save a hundred dollars or more on the price of your piano. We have a copy of the Club's catalogue for you. Write for it today before you waste that one hundred dollars through careless buying. Address the managers, Ludden & Bates, Standard Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.

COTTON SEED

FOUR BALES PER ACRE

The record for Vandiver's Heavy Fruiter Cotton. Forty bolls make pound. Forty-six per cent. lint; 11-8 inch staple. No boll weevils. Free from all disease. Resist droughts and winds. Earliest big boll. The cotton that beats the boll weevil. All seed ginned and culled on our private machinery. We originated this wonderful cotton. Write for facts and proofs from your own state. Special price on seed for early delivery.

VANDIVER SEED COMPANY
Lavonia, Ga.

We offer dependable men and women an exceptional opportunity to represent us selling Linro Famous Non-Alcoholic Flavorings, Toilet Preparations and Household Necessities. Well-established, high-grade line. Work intensely interesting and pleasant, with big profits for you. No investment necessary. Write today for illustrated catalog and particulars. The Linro Co., Dept. 164, St. Louis, Mo.

NEW SONG BOOKS
For Your Church

A wonderful value; 83 familiar songs of the Gospel, words and music. Used all over the world. Only $3 per hundred for No. 1 or 2, round or shaped notes, and $15 for No. 1 and 2, combined, round notes only. Send 30c for samples. Money back if not pleased.

E. A. K. HACKETT, Dept. No. 56, FT. WAYNE, IND.

Aberdeen & Rockfish Railroad

Between Aberdeen and Fayetteville

Eastbound		Westbound
Daily Ex.	Sunday	Daily Ex.	Sunday
Mixed	Pass.	Pass.	Mixed
No. 22	No. 38	No. 41	No. 21
7 30 am	9 10 am	Lv. Aberdeen Ar.	6 41 pm
ar 8 55 am	10 00 am	Rae ford	5 55 pm
lv 2 10 pm	11 20 am	Ar. Fayetteville Lv.	4 50 pm
4 00 pm			1 00 pm

WAGRAM BRANCH

Southbound		Northbound
Daily Ex.	Sun. Mixed	Daily Ex.	Sun. Mixed
No. 11		No. 12
Lv. 10 30 am		Ar. 12 40 pm
Ar. 11 15 am		Lv. 12 00 noon

W. A. BLUE, General Supt.,
Aberdeen, N. C.

AVOID INFLUENZA AND PNEUMONIA
By Using THE ORIGINAL
Especially good for Inflammation and Congestions. Reduces Fever, Helps the Heart. Send for Sample. Satisfaction guaranteed. Gowan Medical Company, Concord, N. C.

GOWANS Rub-It-On 25c-50c-$1.00
FOR COLDS, COUGHS, PNEUMONIA

How much of a place has the book of the ages in your life? What has become of the 134,151,630 volumes of Scripture issued by the American Bible Society since its foundation in 1816? How many lives have they regenerated and brought into the Kingdom? When Christendom unites in making of November 30th, 1919

a Universal Bible Sunday

What will be its effect on the non-Christian world?

To Pastors, Officers, Teachers

There are yet nearly two months before the coming of this red letter day for the Book of Books. The American Bible Society will send you on request a living message with inspiration, facts and figures—not dry statistics—together with an exceedingly interesting church or Sunday school program for Universal Bible Sunday.

Address the Secretaries, 28 O Bible House, New York

Takes the Guess Out of Baking and Saves You Money

Every time you add baking powder, soda and salt to your baking it's more or less a guess. Too much or too little spoils the whole batch. OCCO-NEE-CHEE Self-Rising Flour has mixed with it, in the exact proportions, the very best baking powder, soda and salt. It saves you money because you don't have to buy these things extra.

Figure what this cost would be on a barrel of flour.

OCCO-NEE-CHEE
Self-Rising Flour

Takes the Guess out of Baking and Saves you Money

makes the most delicious biscuits, waffles, muffins and cakes. Give the family a rare treat the next time you bake. Bake them some good things made from OCCO-NEE-CHEE Self-Rising Flour. Buy it today. Look for the Indian Head on the bag. At all grocers.

When you prefer to bake with plain flour buy Peerless—the best.

AUSTIN-HEATON CO. Durham, N. C.

What Will Southern Presbyterians Do For the War-Stricken Churches of France and Belgium on October 26th

Our Share is $100,000

An advance initial payment of $10,000 has been made in the faith that the churches will meet this call.

Our share is part of a fund of $3,000,000 being raised by the churches of North America for this cause.

1. REBUILDING OF DESTROYED CHURCH PROPERTY.

The war indemnity to be paid by the Central Powers for the restoring of the destroyed churches is both uncertain as to amount and indefinite as to time of payment. The need is immediate. A small portion of the money given will be used for these immediate needs. This is essential for the sake of conserving what is left of the life of the congregations.

2. EMPLOYMENT OF PASTORS AND LEADERS.

Almost one hundred Protestant pastors and theological students gave their lives for France and Belgium on the field of battle. Many of the others lost all their belongings in the war. Salaries were never very large; now the congregations are dismembered, scattered, and impoverished. There is no money with which to employ pastors and leaders. Part of the fund will be used for this purpose.

3. ORGANIZATION OF CONGREGATIONS.

Preliminary reorganization of congregations is needed in many instances where pastors can be secured immediately. Temporary arrangements must be made for setting up an organization of what is left of the congregations, looking toward their final and complete restoration.

4. FUTURE EVANGELIZATION.

France and Belgium are ripe for evangelization through Protestant agencies. The democracy for which these countries suffered so severely needs the inspiration of Protestant evangelization. Resources for this work are lacking. Part of the fund will be devoted to this important program of the renewed Protestant churches of these countries.

5. RELIEF OF REFUGEES.

The Protestants were relatively strong in the devastated regions. Their homes have been destroyed, their fields and gardens ravaged, and their trees cut down. Refugees are returning penniless. Part of the fund will be used for giving them a new start.

Committee of Brotherly Aid	$1,350,000
Restoration of Churches and Manses	300,000
Emergency Relief of Pastors	150,000
The Work of Foreign Missions	300,000
Home Missions	300,000
Asylums, Orphanages, and Re-Educational Work for Wounded Soldiers	200,000
Anna Hamilton Hospital	250,000
Educational and Social Work, Schools in Invaded Regions, Seminaries and Sunday Schools	200,000
Scholarships for French and Belgian Students in American Theological Seminaries	50,000
Special Support for Belgian Churches	100,000
Total	$3,200,000

The funds are disbursed by two committees representing all French and Belgian Protestant churches.

"The people will need not merely material assistance. Moral help will be required, for there is bound to be a tendency to let down morally in the face of such great losses and destruction."—MARSHALL JOFFRE.

"How shall we meet the call to repair breaches, restore ruins, rebuild churches and manses, assure the salaries of pastors, aid the mutilated, the widows and orphans; reorganize sacked homes, restore devastated fields to cultivation? We are sure that our brothers of America will by their strong aid make us capable of accomplishing all that we should do."—PASTOR WAGNER,

"We have a debt to those who rest today in Flanders fields:
Our debt is to the living in whose behalf they died"

"To you from falling hands we throw the torch—"

Sparkles

Data for Missionary Societies.

One of our ministers sends us the following story, his six-year-old son having been the innocent offender.

The Ladies' Missionary Society was meeting at the manse when the small son of the house broke into the meeting with, "Mother, may I play the phonograph for the ladies?"

"No, son," said his mother. "Run away now and don't disturb us."

"But, mother," very earnestly, "I know a record the ladies would be sure to like. It's 'Can You Tame Wild Women!'"

The Pastor—"So God has sent you two more little brothers, Dolly?"

Dolly (brightly)—"Yes, and He knows where the money's coming from. I heard daddy say so."—Tit-Bits.

Cholly—Is your sister in, Bobby?

Bobby—She's either in or indisposed, I can't remember which.—Boston Transcript.

Northerner—"What's that white fluffy stuff you are picking?"

"That, sah, will be wool when yo' wear it next winter in the No'th."—Life.

A certain editor and publisher of a country newspaper in Kansas was asked to leave the community, as the result of a typographical error in his report of the wedding of the mayor's daughter.

After exhausting his supply of large words about the "blushing bride," he said: "The large elaborate boquets were punk."

The mayor demanded a correction and apology in the next week's issue, all of which the editor was glad to promise.

The next issue contained: "We wish to apologize for the manner in which we disgraced the beautiful wedding last week. Through an error of the type-setter we were made to say, 'the roses were punk.' What we wanted to say was that 'the noses were pink.'"—Alfred A. Look, in "Pep."

All He Asked.

They were standing outside the front door for a final chat after his evening call.

He was leaning against the door post, talking in low, dulcet tones. She was listening and gazing up into his eyes.

Suddenly she turned around. The door had opened; and there just inside stood her father clad in a dressing gown.

"My dear father," she asked, "What is the matter?"

Her father ignored her question.

"John," he said, addressing the young man, "You know I've never complained about your staying late, and I'm not going to now; but for goodness sake, stop leaning against the bell-push. Other people want some sleep even if you don't."—London Tit-Bits.

THE WESTMINSTER SCHOOL

A PREPARATORY SCHOOL
FOR BOYS

Operated by Kings Mountain Presbytery

$300.00 Per Year

Write for Catalogue to

Rev. T. E. P. Woods, Box 6, Rutherfordton, N. C.

4 Per Cent

Time Certificates of Deposit

They are Interest Bearing. They are Payable on Demand. They Afford a Good Income for Funds Awaiting Permanent Investment

GET ONE

AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY

Charlotte

::

North Carolina

YES, Preachers and Teachers Are Human

They should have no discount and no cheaper railroad fares than you and I. They should be paid for services rendered—amply paid. If he can't earn enough for family use and the nest egg for the future, he made a sad mistake as to family, else he should change his calling instanter.

The Mutual Building & Loan

Will save a man and his family if they're worth saving, but they must help. It furnishes the "sure cure," but boasts no regrets at the demise of a feller who deliberately refuses to take the medicine.

E. L. KEESLER, Sec. & Treas., 25 S. Tryon St., CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Charlotte National Bank

Resources
$4,000,000.00

CHARLOTTE, N. C.

PAYS FOUR PER CENT.

On Either Time Certificates of Deposit or Savings Accounts

MAIL ORDER Business Solicited and PROMPT ATTENTION Given

JOHN M. SCOTT	President
W. J. CHAMBERS	Vice-President
J. F. ROBERTSON	Vice-President
W. H. TWITTY	Cashier
C. W. BUTT	Assistant Cashier

PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD

REV. J. R. BRIDGES, D. D.

EDITORS

REV. R. C. REED, D. D.

VOL. LX.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., OCTOBER 29, 1919.

NO. 43.

Satisfied.

The shadow falls, the path I can not trace;
Fear not, my heart, if only faith abide;
If faith abide, thou conquerest time and place:
Some day, somewhere; thou shalt behold His face;
O yearning heart, thou shalt be satisfied.

The shadow falls; the shadow can not stay;
Hope on, pray on, thou wilt not be denied:
Over the burnt-out embers of today
The golden morrow rises, and always
The promise stands—thou shalt be satisfied.

I can not say to what far land I go,
When I embark upon the foamless tide;
Or if I'll find the things I yearn for so,
Ever at all, O heart, I do not know:
I only know thou shalt be satisfied.

I follow, moving toward the deep and vast,
I follow hope, my star and faithful guide;
I shall rejoice in trials overpast,
And see that Face, O heart of mine, at last,
In whose dear look thou shalt be satisfied.

—Samuel V. Cole, in Congregationalist and Advance.

Editorial

The World in a Ferment.

THE greatest war in all history has left behind it the greatest unrest in all history. When the war was in progress the many nations concerned were held together by a common purpose. The belligerents were occupied with one thing. All subordinate interests were merged in one—the winning of the war. Political factions, class frictions, social grievances, racial distinctions, were all swallowed up, and for the time being forgotten. With the Central Powers, Turk and Teuton, Mohammedan and Christian, Roman Catholic and Protestant put aside their differences and became one in their effort to win out in the great struggle. On the other hand, the yellow men of Asia, the black men of Africa, and the white men of Europe and America, with all their diversities of religion and civilization, became brothers in a common cause. In the face of one supreme issue, in the desire for one supreme end, all differences of race, creed and color seemed paltry and negligible. There was but one line of separation running through the world, and that was the battle line. On either side of that line, the nations were cemented in the bonds of brotherhood.

This condition very naturally excited extravagant hopes. The belief was general that this drawing together of the incongruous peoples of the world would be permanent. It was expected, that when the Allies were victorious, the representatives of the various nations would sit down together at the peace table, as saints sit together at the communion table, and would proceed, in a spirit of perfect fraternity, to draw new national boundaries and re-establish relationships so as to secure permanent peace and universal contentment. The horrible war once over, it was supposed that the people would be so happy and grateful that the task of assigning them their place on the map would be an easy one. In the thick of the carnage, the fourteen points, furnished by our idealistic President, were readily accepted as a program which would make the "world safe for democracy." The weary and anguish-smitten peoples thought nothing could be more desirable than the opportunity to give practical effect to such a program.

To say the result has been disappointing is putting it mildly. When grim visaged war had "smoothed out its wrinkled front," and the danger of further disaster was over, the bond of unity at once began to give way. The currents of thought, of sentiment, of passion, began to seek their old channels. Concern for the general welfare of the world was speedily superceded by concern for local interests. The world vision narrowed to national dimensions. Each unit in the recently consolidated aggregate began to clamor for individual recognition. Each wanted all it could get, and, as a rule, more than it could get without conflicting with the claims of its neighbor. The peace conference, the prospective communion of the saints, was converted into a grab game. Old ambitions, aspirations, and animosities reassert themselves.

What a sad spectacle does the world present today. In Europe universal dissension, giving rise in many places to tumult and bloodshed. In this country, never was political rancor more bitter, labor more arrogant and imperative in its demands, the appetite for wealth more voracious, selfishness in all classes more greedy and grasping. Everywhere, at home and abroad, disintegrating forces are at work with unprecedented violence. All unity of sentiment and purpose is gone, all concern for the common weal has given place to the old doctrine of "every fellow for himself, and the devil take the hindmost."

We tried to persuade ourselves that our government went into the war with purely altruistic aims. Our soldiers were crusaders going to Europe to help the hard-pressed Allies save, not merely Christian civilization, but Christianity itself from destruction. This was pleaded as justification for projecting the pulpit and the Church with all its elements of influence into the great struggle. It was a holy war. Consequently the doctrine widely prevailed that all who gave their lives to make the Allies victorious would find the gates of Paradise open to them and would receive a crown of martyrdom. The Germans were the only real sinners left in the world. The rest of the world was making an effective atonement for its sins by fighting against them.

Not quite a twelve months have elapsed since the signing of the armistice. But this has been ample time to show how puerile was much of the flamboyant talk about the "new era" on which we have entered. It is already manifest that depraved human nature has brought into the new era all that made the old era objectionable. There was never any reasonable ground for expecting that we should emerge from the war with a higher estimate of spiritual values, or with the motives of the flesh weakened. Rather was the reverse to be expected. And the reverse is being realized. After all is said, the Church of Christ, with its old doctrine of atonement and regeneration, is the only hope of our lost race. Nothing can soothe the world's unrest but that which can save it from sin.

Preserve the Records.

The Historical Commission of North Carolina is complaining that there are many people in the State who are disposed to call the effort to preserve the State's record in the world war "an aftermath of glory."

We sympathize with the commission in the indignation felt over this shortsighted broadness of mind, because if such a feeling had been prevalent in the past, there could have been no history:

Today we read the history of the wars of the past, some of it in books and some in monuments, which extol the courage and steadfastness of the human race, so that the example serves as an incentive to those living in the present.

This same apathy, and in many cases lack of moral indignation, seems to actuate our own Church in preserving its records.

It is no light thing to introduce schism in the Church, and when any part of a Church secedes, it should have causes that can stand investigation, else that Church will stand condemned in the eyes of the religious world.

In 1861 the Southern section of the great Presbyterian Church of the United States of America cut asunder the ties that bound them to their brethren of the other portions of the Church, and organized a Church of their own, and in doing so they set forth their reasons in a declaration that bore the same relation to them that the Declaration of Independence did to the United Colonies.

That division still holds, and in the nearly sixty years of her history she has advanced wonderfully along every line. However, a new generation of ministers has arisen who know little of the past, and who are apt to be misled by the specious charge of the lack of Christian charity. They have no answer when the comparison is made between the Church and the soldiers of the Civil War, one apparently cherishing bitterness and the other exemplifying that charity that thinketh no evil.

As the years go by, the need of knowing our history will become more important. Years ago our Committee published a paper book called "The Distinctive Principles of the Presbyterian Church in the United States," in which could be found a full account of the causes leading to the separation, some of which would astonish the loyal men of the Church.

Strange to say, that book is out of print, and it is difficult to find a copy. Just now a reading of this book would do much to justify those of us who contend that there is still an essential difference between the two Churches and that as long as that difference obtains, there could be no real union between the Churches. Such a book ought to be in the library of every minister of the Church, not for the purpose of stirring up bitterness nor keeping alive the antagonisms of the past, but for the purpose of justifying our own position and of defending those godly men who brought about the division of 1861.

Let Good Enough Alone.

It would be well if the brethren who have been agitating the peace of the Church these past few years would give heed to the example of the great Apostle, who said that among the lessons he had learned in this life was in whatsoever state he was, therewith to be content.

Our answer to the brethren North who are so intent upon swallowing us up and cannot understand why we should object, is that we are doing the Lord's work as we are; that peace reigns within our borders; and that while we admire many of them and would enjoy fellowship with them, yet there are many whose company would not be congenial, especially when viewed doctrinally. A comparison of our progress with that of other churches will show that we not only have no reason to be ashamed, but we have reason to be proud of our record.

According to the official figures of the United States Government the percentage of increase of all denominations the past year was 19.9, while our percentage was nearly double those figures.

The Baptists claim to be growing faster than any other Church, so much so that one enthusiastic editor predicts that soon the other Churches will be not worth noticing. Yet last year the Baptists increased 31 per cent while we increased 34 per cent, according to the Government figures, but 37.7 per cent according to the figures given in our Assembly Minutes.

When a Church of less than sixty years of separate life is leading in growth all the denominations of this country, it is no time to think of giving up its identity and being swallowed up by a great Church that actually lost ground last year, when we consider the number added to its rolls.

Think a moment of what we have. Our Church is united and holds, without mental reservation or equivocation, the faith of our fathers; our seminaries are manned by teachers whose orthodoxy is like the virtue of Caesar's wife, without reproach; our Home Mission work last year exceeded our brightest anticipations, raising an excess of $69,396.24 over that of the previous year; our Foreign work is correspondingly bright, being an example and incentive to other Churches, both in money raised and souls won from darkness to light; at home we have forged to the front, so that in addition to our churches, our Church, though in point of numbers "the Bethlehem Ephratah, the least among the thousands of Judah," has surpassed all others in additions to membership, going ahead even of the great Baptist and Methodist Churches of the South.

In view of these facts, how foolish it would be to give up our name and be immersed into a great Church that is far from being harmonious either in doctrine or practise.

Bryan's Plea For the Bible.

Politically we have never been a follower nor admirer of Wm. Jennings Bryan, but morally we regard him as the foremost Christian statesman of the age. He has the courage of his convictions, and he has the ability to emphasize our spiritual needs as no other man has done.

In a recent address at Northfield he called upon the Christian world to insist that the Bible and the teaching of spiritual things should have a prominent place in our colleges.

Within the last few years there has been a revival of religious teachings in our colleges, which on its face is encouraging. On the contrary some of our supposed Christian college and State institutions have drifted with the current, and are either openly or secretly undermining the faith of our young.

Then the Bible teaching is too often merely "a tub thrown to the whale," a mere pretence to quiet criticism.

This is not true of all, for in such colleges as Davidson and others in this State, the Bible course is by no means the easy one.

If, however, we look closely into the question we shall find that in many colleges where the Bible is taught, it is done in a most superficial way, by no means what Mr. Bryan is pleading for.

The Bible course does not inspire the respect of the students. They detest the sham, and see that it is designed to silence criticism. The teacher is either not fully qualified or else does not magnify his office, with the result that the time is practically wasted.

What the schools and colleges are needing is the kind of Bible teaching that will develop the spiritual part of the student, and that will teach him the principles of theology, because no matter how men may decry theology, it is what will give moral backbone to men. For that reason men should be the Bible teachers in colleges, because men alone take the theological course.

Mr. Bryan's ideas may seem antiquated to some, but we are persuaded that the next generation will show a marked advance if we would only adopt them.

Some of Mr. Bryan's political theories, which at first were regarded as impracticable, have since been found workable. It may be that his views on religious education may prove acceptable also, and that we may yet see the chair of Bible taking the place of honor among the higher branches, such as its importance demands.

The Pope On the Outside.

Before the war closed it was generally predicted that when the terms of peace were framed that the Pope would have a great deal to do with them. It has been very noticeable that throughout the discussions there has been present no representative of Rome, and that His Holiness has been entirely on the outside. When we remember the power of Rome in the past, when treaties were made, it has been surprising that the Pope did not have a voice.

Now that the secret treaty between Italy and the Allies, made before America entered the war, has been made public, it appears that Italy secured the promise from the allied powers—France, England and Russia, that the Pope should have no voice in making the treaty. They no doubt knew that while the Pope's sympathies were with the Central Powers, upon the making of peace by the victorious Allies, he would at once try to exercise his authority and nullify what they had gained. No man is a hero to his valet, and those living nearest to His Eminence seem to know him best and fear his machinations. When viewed from America enchantment is lent by distance, and he seems far more attractive to Americans than to Italians or Frenchmen.

Contributed

The Steadfast Type of Christian Character and Work

By Rev. W. W. Moore, D.D.

Below we give a large portion of the sermon with which Dr. W. W. Moore will open the meeting of the Synod of North Carolina. We regret, more than we can express, that other articles that have right of way by reason of having been received first, will prevent the reading of the full sermon. We chose the part relating to Dr. D. H. Rolston because we love to honor him and because he was the moderator of the Synod at the time of his death.

ISAIAH 40:31. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk and not faint."

Two Classes of Christians.

It has been said that there are two classes of Christians—those who live chiefly by emotion and those who live chiefly by faith. The first class, those who live chiefly by emotion, remind one of ships that move by the outward impulse of winds operating upon sails. They are often in a dead calm, often out of their course, and sometimes driven back. And it is only when the winds are fair and powerful that they move onward with rapidity. The other class, those who live chiefly by faith, remind one of the mighty steamers which cross the Atlantic, which are moved by an interior and permanent force, and which, setting at defiance all ordinary obstacles, advance steadily and swiftly to their destination, through calm and storm, through cloud and sunshine. Those who depend for inspiration on the state of their own fluctuating feelings or on external conditions will be strenuous or slack in their work, according as the outlook is promising or unpromising, but those who wait upon the Lord, those who trust fully His unchanging wisdom, power and love, will work steadily on regardless alike of their feelings and their circumstances.

We have an English colloquialism to describe a thing that starts well and then fails. We say it peters out. Dr. Denison has suggested that the expression is derived from the name of that impulsive, boastful disciple who in his earlier career was always making such a brave start and then failing to make good. Peter did this so often that that sort of performance has come to be known by his name. We say of a man who acts that way that he peters out. He lacks constancy, steadfastness, persistence. Now, your ideal believer is not a quitter. He sticks to it. He sees the thing through. He works at it steadily. He bends all his powers to it as though the whole success of it depended on him. And yet he says, and says truly, that the whole success of it depends on God. Indeed he so magnifies the sovereignty of God in salvation and in all religious work, he so insists that Divine power alone can accomplish real results, that superficial observers sometimes accuse him of fatalism. They say, "You people stress the sovereignty of God so much that you destroy the sense of human responsibility, you cut the nerves of human effort, you say God does everything, then there is no occasion for man to do anything, you put a premium on sloth." Well, the answer to all this is historic fact. It is precisely the people who have so exalted the sovereignty of God that have uniformly done the most strenuous and persistent work for His Kingdom. And that is the teaching of our text. Wait upon the Lord, mount up with wings, run, walk. It is a trumpet call to faith in the sovereign power of God, who increaseth strength to them that have no might, and it is a trumpet call to the most intense and persistent self-exertion—flying, running, walking.

This great promise has been frequently fulfilled to us in individual men in this Synod, in the visions vouchsafed to them, in the movements they have launched, and in the persistence with which they have labored through years at their daily tasks and the details of organization and administration.

It was signally fulfilled in the short but abundantly fruitful ministry of the lamented servant of God who at the time of his death was the moderator of this body, having been called by you to the highest office within your gift at an exceptionally early age and after only six years of work within your bounds, and who as moderator was expected to preach this opening sermon, the wide-visioned, energetic and devoted leader to whom our thoughts inevitably turn with a feeling of wistful loneliness as we gather here tonight. As loyal servants of One whose wisdom never errs and whose love never fails, we do not murmur at the dispensation which has taken him from us—

"But oh for the touch of a vanished hand
And the sound of a voice that is still!"

A Man of Prayer.

David Hopkins Rolston was a man who waited upon the Lord. That was the secret of his power. He maintained a constant, deep and intimate communion with God. His heart was familiar with the throne of grace. Amid all the wealth of his gifts it was the reality and richness of his prayer life that most impressed all who knew him. The day after his death the Charlotte Observer in an editorial article said: "He did not seem to pray as ordinary men, but as if he had been transported into the very presence of the Almighty and were pleading with Him face to face." This witness is true. He knew God. He loved God. He talked with God as a man talketh with his friend. And the heart that lived with God in secret poured itself out to Him freely in public. There was no constraint. There was no feebleness of desire. There was no meagreness of request. There was no uncertainty of expression. But from an humble, yearning, trusting heart there flowed a full tide of adoration and confession and petition and intercession. In his public prayers there ran through his voice "a vibration as though the minister's heart was singing like an Aeolian harp as the breath of the Spirit of God blew through its strings." Who that heard the prayer he offered from the floor when called on at the centennial meeting of the Synod at Alamance Church can ever forget it? In his own congregation week after week he lifted sad and weary hearts to heaven on the wings of his supplications. His sermons were the sermons of a man of prayer. He preached with unction. Many a minister has intellectual force, ample learning, a correct taste, rhetorical skill, and animation of manner, who nevertheless falls short of that crowning quality of the true preacher, that union of gravity and warmth of tenderness, that suffusion of the soul with the grace of the Holy Spirit which we call unction. He always had it. It was a result of his constant communion with God, his habitual waiting upon the Lord.

Is it not a fitting time for those of us who are ministers to remind ourselves again that only an eminent Christian can be an eminent preacher, that before a man can shine he must burn? "The outer must be preceded by the inner; public life for God must be preceded by private life with God; unless God has spoken to a man, it is vain for a man to attempt to speak for God." His experience of God is the measure of his power with men. If he does not speak with enthusiasm—and let us remember in passing that the word enthusiasm, en theos, means etymologically "having God within"—if he does not speak with enthusiasm he does not speak with power.

The Old Testament prophet was the prototype of the New Testament preacher. Of the three Hebrew words which are translated by our word "prophet" two mean to

(Continued on page 8)

Organic Union

II. Relation to Brotherly Love.

By a Pastor.

IS Organic Union necessary as an expression of brotherly love? It is often said that sectional prejudice and war passions are all that keep the two churches apart. I protest most earnestly against this statement. I, personally, am not influenced by either sectional prejudice or war passions. I love the brethren of the U. S. A. Church. There must be something wrong with the man who cannot love such men as Drs. J. Wilbur Chapman, John Timothy Stone, C. R. Erdman, Wm. McKibben, B. B. Warfield and a host of others in that church, far too numerous to mention. Probably a large majority of their ministers are men of the same spirit and character. I cordially admire the great work of that Church in Home and Foreign Missions, education, evangelism and other large spheres of service. I also sincerely appreciate its contribution to orthodox theology. If I had no other reasons for opposing union than prejudice and passion, if I could sacrifice the honor of Christ, the interests of His Kingdom and the salvation of souls, for the sake of gratifying my own prejudices and passions, I would feel that I ought to get down in the dust before the throne of grace and remain there in penitence till God should take these wicked feelings out of my heart and make me willing for union. Yet, on the other hand, if a man is so afraid of being considered narrow and unloving and prejudiced that he is willing to sacrifice the cause of truth to keep people from thinking ill of him, that also is to be condemned. If one man should obstruct the development of the Church because he is blind and narrow and prejudiced, is he worse than the man who is willing to compromise the real interests of the Church, because he is afraid of being considered blind and narrow and prejudiced? Is not cowardice as bad as narrowness? I am resolved that, God helping me, I will not be driven from my loyalty to sane and modern and important tasks by misunderstanding or reproach.

Ministers who are opposed to organic union have no more prejudice against brother ministers from the North than ministers who are in favor of union. There are exceptions to this rule, but this is the rule. My Presbytery is opposed to union, but when a minister comes into it from the North he is received upon exactly the same conditions and in the same spirit that a minister from the South is received. We ask no questions as to his politics or his relations to the war. His father or himself may have been a Union soldier, a Kansas Jayhawker or one of Sherman's Raiders. Absolutely all we seek to know is whether he is a true man and will truly preach the saving truth of the Gospel. To represent us in any other way is to give an unfair and cruel misrepresentation of us. My personal relations with ministerial brethren from the North have been intimate and even tender. I am not implacable, I am not unforgiving, I am not sectional, I am not a moss-back. He is the true moss-back who refuses to see anything in this question of union except the sectional bitterness of fifty years ago. Why is it that advocates of union always spend their strength and time trying to prove that we ought to forgive and forget and be loyal? Let us get away from these antique aspects of the subject, and as "forward looking men," discuss the subject on the plane of present-day, vital issues.

In this connection we hear much of the migrations of church members back and forth, Northern members coming South and Southern members going North, members from the one side going into the churches of the other side. That is perfectly right. Our members go North and we encourage them to take their letters with them. We urge them to do so. Northern members come South and become identified with us. (This last statement is not universally true, however, for often Northern members coming South, if they come in sufficient numbers, set up rival organizations in connection with the U. S. A. Church). Ministers in the South have told me that more than half of their elders and in some instances even more than half of their private members are from the North. They say it is embarrassing when these members from the North ask what the difference is between the two Churches, and why the Churches do not unite. But why should it be embarrassing? If it is embarrassing at all it would seem that it ought to be more embarrassing in cases where there are only a few Northern members in the Southern Church, than when there are many. When there are many they keep each other company and can command greater respect for their feelings. Take my own church as an example. I have always had a few brethren from the North in my church, but if there has been any embarrassment I am not aware of it, and I have had many years' experience. I have never hesitated to state the position of the U. S. Church when any occasion for it arises, which is seldom, but I have never heard of anybody being offended. These brethren are held in high esteem and given every possible recognition and they are eligible to all church offices and honors among us. Why should we hesitate to speak the facts plainly, but in charity? They are not ashamed of their views, and we are not ashamed of ours. We differ on ecclesiastical and perhaps theological propositions. They take the affirmative and we the negative, or the reverse, that is all. There is no more to be ashamed of than there is in our dealings with our brethren in the Methodist or Baptist or any other Church. We discuss our differences with brethren of other denominations and do so with fraternal frankness and agree to differ, but to co-operate. The matters about which we differ are not the greatest matters, but they are great matters. They do not justify antagonism, but they do justify separate organization. Why not establish a similar fraternal modus vivendi with the U. S. A. Church and maintain it with mutual respect and charity? Isn't this enough so far as brotherly love is concerned?

Again, a great deal has been made of the alleged contrast between the spirit shown in the Church and that shown in politics and in business. It is said, "The country is united in politics and in business, why should a division be kept up in the Church?" To this I make two replies:

First. The two are not to be judged by the same rules, because they are not of the same nature. They do not pursue the same object nor use the same methods. Business and politics deal almost exclusively with mere policies. No body of saving truth is committed to them. Whereas the Church has such a body of truth solemnly confided to its custody and it has no authority to compromise that truth.

Second, so far as obliterating war passions is concerned, this has already been done more effectively in the Church than it has been in politics or religion. How long has it been since sectional rancour has broken out in a Presidential campaign? How long has it been since sectional prejudice has been appealed to because the majority of chairmanships in Congress were held by Southern men? They held these chairmanships, too, not from deliberate partiality, but merely by the mechanical working of a congressional rule, "the rule of seniority." This rule had not been previously challenged. So judicial an authority as "The New York Times" attributed the loss of Congress by the Democrats at the last election, in large measure, to this very sectional issue of the chairmanships. Is it correct than to say that sectional prejudice is dead in the State? As to business, one illustration will suffice. I know of a family that came from the Northwest to live in a Southern town. The first day their little son went to school he came home and reported to his parents that the boys had called him "Yankee," and he asked what it meant. He had never heard the word before. He did not know the meaning of it, but only felt

(Continued on page 9)

"The Abuse of Scripture"

The Editor the the Presbyterian Standard:

Ever since reading your editorial of the 17th on "The Abuse of Scripture," I have been wondering who it is that you are aiming at. Are you just throwing stones promiscuously, or did you propose to hit the editors of the Sunday School literature of our Church? Dr. McCoy's commendation of your editorial, however, does not leave this matter in doubt, when he says: "It is a fearful thing to preach nonsense in the name of the Lord. It is a more fearful thing to teach lies in the name of the Lord, and that is, in plain terms, just what the editors of our Sabbath School literature are guilty of when they wrest the plain meaning of Scripture by their perverse and exparte interpretations."

When I take up the issues of the Presbyterian Standard for August 24th and 31st, which contain the lessons that you criticise, I find that precisely the same lessons are used in your columns which are commented upon in the Earnest Worker, and in the Quarterlies—and throughout the whole Sunday School world for those two dates. In your secret heart, therefore, it must have grieved you deeply to see the Presbyterian Standard "handling the Word of God deceitfully;" worse still, "teaching lies in the name of the Lord." Is it not rather a dangerous business for a man to start throwing stones across the street when he has a large plate glass front to his own store?

So the joke is on the Presbyterian Standard, don't you think? But I do not propose to press the argumentum ad hominem, but to meet the issue fairly. It is my opinion that social responsibility may be properly taught from the parable of the Good Samaritan; and temperance principles, and even national prohibition, may be inferred from Daniel's purpose not to defile himself.

As to the parable of the Good Samaritan—it is an inspired illustration of the principle, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Now if that principle applies to my neighbor as an individual, it applies to the whole mass of human society, just as well. If it is my privilege and duty to minister to one man who falls among thieves, it is even more my duty and privilege to break up the gang of robbers who are committing wholesale depredations on society. Your editorial criticism strikes me as being only skin deep, you do not go down to the underlying principle, which is of the widest possible application.

By the way, where does your editorial exegete learn that "the Samaritan woman gave a drink of water to the tired and thirsty Christ?" The record in John's Gospel nowhere says so. Jesus asked her, "Give me to drink," and all the response which He got was a surly reply: "How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me which am a woman of Samaria?" This of course gave Him what He really was after, His opportunity to offer that sinful soul the water of life; but the inspired record nowhere says that our Lord ever got the water out of Jacob's well which He asked for. But this aside.

And as to Daniel and temperance, here again it seems to me that your editorial exegesis is superficial. "Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself," and this purpose of heart is a vital principle which should shape the life of every human being. And one of the plainest personal applications of this principle is never to touch anything "that makes drunk come." Any man who has ever seen a drunkard lying in the gutter, has seen an unanswerable argument for the young Daniels of our day—not to defile themselves with wine or strong drink.

So without protracting the argument, I do not believe that the venerable Dr. Hill, who expounds the Sunday School lessons in the Standard, nor the editorial staff of the Committee of Publication, who prepare the lesson helps for all our Sunday Schools, are in any wise guilty of "the abuse of Scripture" charged against them—at least not in the instances which furnished the ground for your editorial criticism.

"The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." You may not find in the letter of the parable of the Good Samaritan, social responsibility; but the spirit of that parable has done more for social uplift than any other influence under heaven. You may not find national prohibition in the language of Daniel's high resolve; but Daniel's spirit is still marching on, in the crusade against "whatsoever defileth or worketh abomination" in the man or the nation. At least this is the view of your friend,

The Editor of the Earnest Worker.

The Continued Attacks on Dr. Mott--A Telegram From Him

New York City, October 21.

G. C. Huntington, Charlotte, N. C.

Greatly surprised to learn that notwithstanding my previous statements on three important subjects, my attitude, belief and practice are still misunderstood. Request therefore you give widest immediate publicity following statement: First, today as always I believe in the providential character and mission of our Evangelical Christian denominations. Have never been identified with or countenanced an organization or movement which stands for breaking down denominations. On contrary, have devoted most of my thought and strength for over thirty years in seeking to raise up leaders for the different denominations in their work at home and abroad and in other ways to strengthen the hands of these denominations. I believe in co-operation and in the oneness for which Christ prayed, but this does not imply any weakening of denominational integrity, loyalty and efficiency. I have not worked in the dark; my public utterances in all parts of the world during all these years, largely on denominational platforms and in the councils of the trusted denominational leaders ought to make such misunderstanding impossible. Secondly, regarding camp pastors, let me state that as a member of the committee of six I opposed the proposed action regarding their withdrawal from the camps. The minutes of the committee and testimony of my colleagues corroborate this statement. When I learned that I was being quoted to the contrary, and this apparently with support of War Department, I called and entered protest in person to War Department and was exonerated. And, not only have I not opposed camp pastors, but on contrary have always instructed our Young Men's Christian Association war workers to give full support to all properly accredited camp pastors.

Thirdly, regarding the charge that the association minimized the religious side of its work, especially overseas, would state that our purpose, policy and effort were to secure the exact opposite result. And, notwithstanding shortcomings and weakness in this work, owing to inadequate leadership and other handicaps, this most vital part of the program became increasingly prominent and effective. A larger number of pastors were sent overseas than of any other profession, not excepting association secretaries. They numbered over fourteen hundred. They had a leading part in control of entire movement with results of which we are proud. The charge that we did not devote relatively sufficient money to religious work is absolutely false and misleading because this charge does not take account of the principal items named—those dealing with the large number of personnel engaged in this work. It is highly significant that the most severe criticism regarding Young Men's Christian Association war work overseas has come from writers, speakers and others who charge that our work was too religious and in particular too much in the hands of evangelical denominational leadership.

John R. Mott.

In Thesi Deliverances

By Rev. Walter L. Lingle, D.D.

I HAVE read Dr. Wells' recent article with a great deal of interest and pleasure. As he himself observes, our positions are not very far apart, though we may have arrived by different routes. Only I am not in favor of federal union, organic union, or any other kind of union until our Church is practically a unit on the subject. Unity is far more important than union. At the same time I believe in cultivating a spirit of unity with the other Presbyterian Churches and the spirit of love which is so wonderfully set forth in the thirteenth chapter of I Corinthians. I like Moffatt's translation: "Love is very patient, very kind. Love knows no jealousy; love makes no parade, gives itself no airs, is never rude, never selfish, never irritated, never resentful; love is never glad when others go wrong, love is gladdened by goodness, always slow to expose, always eager to believe the best, always hopeful, always patient." In quoting this I have no especial reference to Dr. Wells' article, but I am thinking of the kind of love which a great Church ought to cultivate. There are several sentences in this passage which we would do well to ponder in thinking of other men and other churches.

I was especially interested in that part of Dr. Wells' article which deals with in thesi deliverances. Dr. Wells asks: "How may or does an in thesi deliverance become law?" That is an exceedingly interesting and difficult question and it has been asked many times before. Dr. Wells proceeds to answer his question as follows: "If I understand our system it is when a theoretical opinion comes before a court of our Church as a concrete case for decision. When such a case is decided what was before merely an opinion becomes a law. It is then binding upon the Church. Our law says: 'Every decision which is made by any Church court, except the highest, is subject to the review of a superior court, and may be brought before it by general review and control, reference, appeal or complaint.'"

What Does the Church Want Done?

I WISH I had a pen of fire with which to write on the hearts of the men and women of our Church the story of the present situation in our foreign mission work.

Here in America the cost of living has doubled; in the far East it has trebled. In Korea sugar is 25 cents a pound. During the past five years rice has jumped from 16 to 50 cents, barley from 40 cents to $1.60; chickens from 20 to 80, butter from 70 to $1.10, condensed milk from 32 to 70.

On April 1, 1920, the duty on all articles imported into Korea will be advanced from 7 to 40 per cent.

A similar situation exists in China and Japan.

What are we to do? Shall we let our missionaries starve? They went out with the pledge that they would be given "a comfortable but economical support." They have never asked for more. Many of them even now suffer rather than complain. But it is evident that some relief must be given. From all these mission fields there come to the Nashville office the most distressing statements of the situation.

Our missionaries cannot live on their present salaries. But how are they to be increased? The Executive Committee cannot disburse what it does not possess and what it has no prospect of greeting. Our estimates for the current year amount to $826,000, exclusive of the debt of $216,000. In these estimates is an item of $200,000 to cover extraordinary appropriations which may arise during the year. Six months have gone by and all of this emergency fund of $200,000 has been exhausted.

If we increase the salaries of our missionaries, where is the money to come from? Our present obligations of $826,000 plus our debt of $216,000, amount to $1,042,000. If our most sanguine expectations are realized, the Progressive Campaign will bring us in $1,100,000. Our only hope is that this campaign will measure to the full and pass the goal. If the Church should fall down in this campaign, it

I do not believe that this is a satisfactory definition. Instead of arguing the matter let me make what seems to be a perfectly fair application of this law and one that is exactly parallel to the case of Rev. A. M. Cowan, which was cited by Dr. Wells.

In the Fall of 1909 the Presbytery of North Alabama passed a resolution strongly endorsing a prohibition amendment to the State constitution. This action of the Presbytery was brought before the General Assembly of 1910 by complaint. The Assembly declined to sustain the complaint and in so many words sustained the action of the North Alabama Presbytery. This was a judicial decision of the Assembly and was so pronounced by the Assembly of 1911. It was also pronounced final by the Assembly of 1911. According to Dr. Wells' definition that judicial decision of the General Assembly in sustaining the action of North Alabama Presbytery made the action of the North Alabama Presbytery a law of our Church. In other words, according to this definition since 1910 it has been a law of the Southern Presbyterian Church that its members must vote for a prohibition amendment to the State constitution when the opportunity presents itself or be liable to discipline. We do not believe that for a moment. I am not dealing in sophistry or mere catchwords. I am making what seems to me a perfectly fair and logical application of Dr. Wells' definition and one that is parallel to some of his own illustrations. The definition is not satisfying.

What is an in thesi deliverance? "How does an in thesi deliverance become a law?" What is the force of a deliverance of the General Assembly? I will be glad to publish several constructive, non-controversial articles of three or four thousand words on these questions in the Union Seminary Review and will be grateful to any one who will send me such an article. In the meantime I must not tax the patience of the editors and readers of the Church papers with any more articles from my pen at present.

looks as if we shall be compelled to reduce our missionary force.

We cannot make appropriations without an income. What will the Church say to the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions if we go up to the next Assembly with our already large debt largely increased?

Shall we say to our missionaries we promised you "a comfortable but economical support" when you went out, but we cannot keep our promise? Shall we call home some of our missionaries and abandon work that has been built up through long years by prayer and sacrifice until it approaches the point of fruition?

The dollar has lost its purchasing power. It brings in America only half what it did a few years ago; but our receipts have not doubled. It brings in the far East only a third of what it did; but our income has not trebled.

These are the questions we face in the administration of our foreign mission work. They need pitiless publicity throughout the Church.

We are spending money with a free hand on ourselves. Nothing can be manufactured fast enough for the market. Have our contributions to our Redeemer's cause increased proportionately? Editors and statesmen, as well as preachers, are saying today that "Religion is the only thing that will save society." The world is on fire with unrest. Shall the people who fight the fire be forgotten?

James I. Vance,
Chairman, Executive Com. Foreign Missions.

It is the earnest desire of the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions that the pastors read the above statement from their pulpits and remember this great cause in their public prayers.

Nashville, Tenn., Oct. 15.

The Steadfast Type of Christian Character and Work.

(Continued from Page 4)

see and the third means to speak—to speak out of the overflowing fullness of the heart. Here then are the essential ideas; spiritual insight and spontaneous, irrespressible, magnetic speech. Neither of these is possible to the preacher without much prayer, and both of these our brother had in large measure—the prophet's vision and the prophet's power of speech. We cannot too often remind ourselves that the preacher is not a mere messenger like a telegraph boy who carries a sealed letter without knowing its contents. The true preacher's message enters into him, transforms his nature, makes him what he is. Only as the truth has been vitalized in a man's own heart does it come with living power to other hearts. There was the hiding of Dr. Rolston's power—his heart knowledge of Divine truth and grace. Let us thank God for the gift of a man who made this so plain to us in our own time, a man who waited upon the Lord and thus renewed his strength, who drank deep of God's Spirit in prayer, who made his message a part of his very life, and who as God's minister spoke with power because he spoke from a profound experience of Divine grace in his own heart.

And so he mounted up with wings as eagles. He was a man of spiritual buoyancy. There was an aboveness about him, an unmistakable supernal quality. And as he soared high he saw far. It is the bird's-eye-view of God's work that shows things in their real scope and their true relations. His was no limited outlook. What large and splendid ideals he cherished!

A Man of Action.

Yet he was no mere mystic, no mere visionary. There was nothing unpractical about him. He could not only mount up with wings as eagles, he could also run and not be weary. Great crises he recognized as great opportunities and he flung himself into them with the brave abandon of faith. Was it some great foreign mission deficit? Was it some staggering home mission enterprise? Was it some city-wide evangelistic movement? Was it some sorely bestead college? Was it some vast work for our soldiers plumped down upon his community? Whatever it was, Rolston could always be counted on—a great heart in the front ranks, a human dynamo, an incarnation of splendid energy.

Three years ago, when the great flood swept North Carolina, carrying away all bridges, wrecking all railroads, and washing out miles of highways, Dr. Rolston had an engagement to preach on Sunday at one of the conferences at Montreat. Saturday found him miles away, with all communications destroyed and with the roads in such a condition that no vehicle could negotiate them, but when the hour for that service came Sunday morning he was there, having walked over the wrecked and muddy roads, wading at times in water up to his knees. He was a man who mastered crises large or small. He had the capacity for intense exertion. He could run and not be weary.

A Persevering Toiler.

Nor was that all. He stood also the final test. He could walk and not faint. In view of the apparent ease with which he preached, the full flow of his thought, the amazing fluency and flexibility of his language, the freedom, force and fervor of his delivery, an incautious hearer might easily have jumped to the conclusion that all this was the result simply of a natural gift for oratory and that he was exempt from the severe toil that other men have to undergo in order to become effective speakers. But that was not the case. He did indeed possess unusual natural gifts, including the oratorical temperament, but his readiness of speech never betrayed him into slackness as a student. There were times of course in his thronged life when he could not make as thorough preparation as he desired, but whenever it was possible he brought beaten oil into the sanctuary. And back of his facility and fullness as a preacher lay years of painstaking study and patient drudgery.

He was a hard student at college. Before I ever met him my friend Dr. White, who knew him well, had told me about his unusual talents and especially his gifts as a speaker, and when he came to the seminary, Dr. White, then pastor at Petersburg, engaged him to take charge of a mission work in that city and to preach there every Sunday. I heard of this with some misgivings, and, while not venturing to advise him not to undertake it, because I had confidence in Dr. White's judgment, I did venture to talk with him about it and to suggest that if, as he went on with his work there, he found that it was preventing his full attention to the seminary course, he should ask to be released from it. He assured me at once that he would do so, saying that he realized fully that the seminary course was the prospective minister's one golden opportunity to fix his habits of thorough study and to lay broad and deep foundation for all his future ministry. I soon found that my fears were groundless. I think he preached at Petersburg practically every Sunday throughout his three years at the seminary, and yet he mastered every part of the course of study, doing all the work in all the departments thoroughly, skimping nothing, ploughing deep, reading widely, and eventually adding to his labors the editorship of the Union Seminary Magazine. It was a unique achievement. For thirty-six years I have been a teacher in the seminary and have observed closely the work there of hundreds of the picked young men of the church. In all that time I have never seen a man put more hard work into three years than he did. He showed then, as he showed afterwards, that he could "toil terribly." He had an immense capacity for the kind of drudgery that is indispensable to sound scholarship. The habits then acquired remained with him throughout life.

An Expository Preacher.

Hence the instructiveness of his preaching. He never trifled with a text. He studied it thoroughly, using the best scholarly helps. He "always reached back and gave the full scope of the passage. When he was through with the text, you knew the connection and what was in the mind of the Spirit when He inspired men to write it." And so his people were fed on the pure Word. Dr. Bridges, in his address at Dr. Rolston's funeral, said that he heard him for the first time at the evening service on the day he began his ministry in Charlotte. The text was Heb. 11:1: "Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." Dr. Bridges says that "with the hand of a master, by a few skillful strokes, he made the whole epistle stand clearly before us. We saw the framework, the connecting links, why it was written, and the connection of the text with what had gone before."

This was his uniform habit. He used the telescopic method on the book from which the text was taken and the microscopic method on the text itself. By a broad survey of the prophecy or gospel or epistles he gave his hearers the setting of the text, then by careful study with grammar and lexicon he went to the bottom of the text itself, and then unfolded its meaning and enforced its lesson with argument, illustration and appeal. Moreover, he sought to acquire such a grasp of the entire content of Scriptural teaching as would enable him in the light of the whole to interpret aright every particular part, to avoid scarpiness and incoherence in his presentation of it, and to give to the mind of the hearer the satisfying feeling that every partial truth had the pressure of the whole truth behind it. It was a toilsome method, but he knew that it was the only permanently fruitful one for the preacher. He knew the truth of the maxim, "by hammer and hand all arts do stand."

A Master of Detail.

He was a patient student of the great masters of exegesis and preaching. A few years ago a sermon preached by one of his former professors at the seminary was published by request in the church papers. There was a detail of the interpretation of the text that interested Dr. Rolston and he wrote to the preacher in question calling his attention to the fact that Samuel Davies in handling that text had taken a different view of that particular point and had supported it with a number of strong considerations. The professor in his reply maintained his own view, but devoted most of his letter to an expression of the gratification he felt at discovering that in this hurried and feverish age there was at least one busy pastor who took the time to study carefully the sermons of a pulpit king like Samuel Davies.

In the articles that Dr. Rolston published in the church papers occasionally on such subjects as church finance I was always struck with the same thoroughness of investigation and mastery of detail.

The same admirable habit was seen in his pastoral work, and in his handling of the thousand and one things that claim the attention of the pastor of a great church. He was too wise to undervalue details and too conscientious to neglect them. No doubt he worked rapidly and with increasing facility through much practice, but the point I am making it that, with all his swiftness and apparent ease, he was in fact all the time a patient, steady worker at those commonplace retails without the mastery of which no man can achieve the best success. Persevering toil—"they that wait on the Lord shall walk and not faint."

Here then are the lessons of his life: He waited on the Lord. That was the key of everything. And waiting upon the Lord he renewed his strength, he mounted up with wings as eagles, he ran and was not weary, he walked and did not faint. May God give to us all that uplift of the soul, that readiness for His service, that patience in his work.

Organic Union.

(Continued from page 5)

that in some way it implied a reproach. The parents knew scarcely more than the child. They had never had a single relative in the war of the Confederacy. They themselves had grown up after the war, and had absolutely no connection with it. When at last the family moved to another place, they wrote back to their pastor that their only pleasant recollections of the town were their church relations. That pastor and the majority of the people in the church are opposed to organic union, yet they had made their Northern family feel at home in the church when they had not felt so in their business relations. I protest that the wounds of the war have been more effectually healed in the church than anywhere else, and the opposition to union has but a minimum relation to war passions and sectional prejudice.

To represent the U. S. A. Church as being the exponent of lovingness because they are continually pressing for union, and to represent ourselves as standing for unlovingness because we do not accede to their overtures, is a cruel injustice to us and ignores the facts of history. I do not know of a single instance in which we have organized a church on their side of the original line of division, though tens of thousands of our members are on their soil. They have quietly taken their places in the U. S. A. Church and are working there harmoniously and happily. On the other hand, the U. S. A. Church has not hesitated to organize their members on our territory into competing churches, Presbyteries and Synods. Now, which has displayed the greater Christian charity? They have poured hundreds of thousands of dollars into Home Mission work within our territory. If there had been no other field in which they could have expended that money with just as good results and without friction, there would have been a justification of their spending it in our field, because, frankly, we were not overtaking our work. But as a matter of fact, they had other fields more pressing and nearer to them. They have passed by these other inviting openings to do this work among us. The slums of the cities and the great Northwest present a home mission field which they can never overtake and yet they have persisted in putting large sums here where it causes unhappy friction. In view of this situation shall we tamely yield to them the palm of superior lovingness? Once more, in the territory where the churches overlap there have been cases of friction. When the two General Assemblies have

"Dr. Ogden and the Laymen."

By Thornton Whaling, D.D., President, Columbia Theological Seminary, Columbia, S. C.

DR. OGDEN writes in The Presbyterian Standard of October 1, in pleasing style, an interesting and self-revealing letter, addressed to what he calls "laymen." I do not pause to comment on the "caliber" of his Presbyterianism as shown in this word "laymen." He might reread his old text-book, Peck's "Church Polity," or consult his fellow-professor in the field of ecclesiastical government, as to the proper usage of the word. He makes a startling and inexplicable mistatement as follows, viz:

"For the first time our Assembly has authorized the appointment of a committee to confer with a similar committee of the U. S. A. Church upon the entire subject of closer relations, including all possible forms of union."

His competency as an instructor will be shown by the fact which he ignores, that our Assembly of 1917 (according to its minutes, pages 146-147) was requested by the U. S. A. Assembly, to enter into negotiations with a view to Organic Union, and in reply, adopted the following:

"While this Assembly does not regard organic union as practicable at this time, yet it hereby appoints the committee of conference on union asked for by the Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and recommends to the proposed conference the consideration of the federation of all the Presbyterian Churches of our country upon some practical and effective basis."

The meaning of this action is further interpreted by the resolution of this committee appointed by the 1917 Assembly, affirming that the entire field of relationship with the U. S. A. Church, including Organic Union and Federal Union, were both before the committee and that the committee was ready to hear and consider any statement or proposition by the committee of the U. S. A. Assembly. For two years this committee most carefully heard and considered all of the statements and propositions that the U. S. A. brethren were pleased to make.

A brother, who so easily mistakes fancies for facts, can scarcely realize his ambition to be the tutor and mentor of the entire Church.

Dr. Ogden, however, makes one good suggestion, namely, that the Synods ought to elect strong, progressive, forward-looking men. I trust he appreciates the significance of his suggestion. The Consolidationists wear their eyes in the back of their heads: they are looking backward to the period prior to 1861 and they are hankering after a national Church. The reason of this is that they are somewhat unconsciously perhaps, enamored of the obsolete and outworn union of the Church and State, when there really was such a thing as a national Church. It is an effete anachronism to speak of a national Church to enlightened Presbyterians in these United States.

(Continued on page 23)

appointed committees to settle such difficulties their Assembly has failed to carry out the awards of their own committee. Is that the model charity? Mark, I am not citing these things as an argument against organic union. I am perfectly willing to ignore them all in our negotiations for union. But I do protest against having that Church lauded as the model of charity and ours branded as lacking in charity, when the facts are the reverse. And I protest against the using of existing friction as a plea for union when we have no responsibility for that friction. It is placing our Church in a false attitude. I say, most cordially, to the credit of the U. S. A. Church, that this claim for greater lovingness has not come from them, it has come from members of our own communion. But this distortion of the facts clouds the issue. It puts a tremendous pressure on our people to go into union in order to purge themselves of the charge of uncharitableness, when as a matter of fact our peaceable temper has been conspicuous.

News of the Week

The trip of 5,400 miles across the continent was won by Maynard, the preacher student of Wake Forest College. From New York to San Francisco the route of the flight was dotted with disabled planes which were forced to land and quit the race or crashed to destruction from the air. Ten lives had been the toll to the time Lieutenant Maynard crossed the finish line. Seven had died actually in the contest and three in connection with it.

The first concrete passenger vessel built in America was launched at New Bern, N. C., last week, and the launching was witnessed by more than 1,000 people.

The Senate has received a petition signed by 14,000 clergymen in every State of the Union, representing virtually every section, and including Protestants, Catholics and Jews, urging the prompt ratification of the peace treaty.

The dread cotton boll weevil has reached New Hanover county, North Carolina, the pest having been discovered on two farms just on the edge of the city, according to an announcement made by E. S. Tucker, entomologist from the Department of Agriculture.

Viscount Astor, son of the founder of the Astor millions and reckoned one of the wealthiest Britons, died of heart disease October 18 in London.

The Conner brothers, two negroes charged with the murder of Deputy Sheriff Cloaninger, of Iredell County, have been sentenced to die.

The Senate Appropriation Committee has recommended $15,000,000 for the Army Air Service, and $17,000,000 for the completion of the Alaskan railroad.

The recall election in Charlotte brought out the greatest vote ever polled in the city. By a sweeping majority of 1,433 the administration was sustained.

The Thirtieth Annual Conference of the Southern Methodist Church, in session at Greensboro, by a rising vote passed a resolution endorsing the League of Nations.

Dr. Campbell Morgan's Lectures at the Seminary.

The first of Dr. Campbell Morgan's ten lectures on the James Sprunt foundation at Union Seminary will be given on November 4, at 11 a. m., in the Seminary chapel. The general subject of the lectures is "The Ministry of the Word." The prologue will deal with the title and setting of the phrase taken from the Acts of the Apostles: "We will continue steadfastly in prayer and in the ministry of the Word," and he will handle the subject under three general heads: The Fundamental Conception; the Primitive Ideal; the Modern Application.

Under the first of these heads he will deal with: (1) The Ministry; (2) The Word. Under the second head he will discuss: (3) The Word as the Truth of the Apostle; (4) The Word as the Burden of the Prophet; (5) The Word as the Gospel of the Evangelist; (6) The Word as the Wisdom of the Pastor and Teacher. Under the third head he will discuss: (7) The Changed Conditions; (8) The Unchanged Obligation; (9) The Preparation of the Ministry; (10) The Exercise of the Vocation; and the Timothy Shea, head of the firemen, has served notice that the Government must comply with the war-time agreement before returning to private ownership. They also demand an eight-hour day and time and a half for over-time, else they will strike.

The President is gradually though surely improving. He has been able to sign several bills. Among them was the Food Control Act.

The Industrial Conference has proven a failure. The labor delegates bolted the conference after losing the collective bargaining fight.

William O. Jenkins, American consular agent at Pueblo, Mexico, was kidnapped by three masked bandits last Friday at Pueblo and is being held for $150,000 ransom.

Increases in rail transportation rates to offset the increase in operating expenses during federal control, will be sought immediately from the interstate commerce commission by railroad corporations.

Robbers swooped down on High Point, N. C., last week, visited four business houses and carted away upwards of a thousand dollars worth of goods, according to a hurried examination of stocks.

Arthur J. Balfour, after 50 years' service in the British Cabinet, will retire. Such is the official announcement.

Owing to the unexpected defeat of the Government, Great Britain is facing a change in Government.

On the first of November half a million coal miners will quit work, even though it be the threshold of winter. President Wilson from a sick bed appealed to operators and strikers, but all in vain.

At the twenty-eighth annual meeting of the North Carolina Agricultural Society, Gen. Julian S. Carr, of Durham, was named to succeed Charlie W. Horne as president of the society and head of the great State fair.

series will conclude with an epilogue showing The First Responsibility to be Prayer.

The lectures are designed specially for students and ministers, and as the lecturer aims at conciseness as well as clarity he has written the lectures out and proposes to read them. This is contrary to his usual custom as he never uses a manuscript in speaking to the great crowds which attend his ministry, but he is, of course, right in proposing to use the manuscript throughout with the kind of audience he will have at the seminary. It is estimated that no one of the lectures will occupy more than forty minutes in delivery, and Dr. Morgan is willing to devote the remainder of each hour to answering questions that may be asked by the students.

The public must not infer from the statement above made that they will not be given full opportunity to hear Dr. Morgan during his stay in Richmond, for, while the lectures at the seminary every morning from November 4 to November 14 are intended specially for students and ministers, Dr. Morgan will address general audiences every night in the City Auditorium. This is the only building in Richmond that will accommodate such crowds as gathered to hear him when he visited the seminary and the city in 1914. He will also preach in one or two of the larger Presbyterian churches of Richmond on Sunday, November 9.

Christian Endeavor

By Rev. S. H. Hay.

* * *

- M., Nov. 3—Diligence Avoids Failure: Prov. 10:1-11.
- T., Nov. 4—Honesty: 2 Kings 12:4-15.
- W., Nov. 5—High Purpose: Phil. 3:7-14.
- T., Nov. 6—Endurance: Neh. 6:1-14.
- F., Nov. 7—True Religion: Col. 3:16-25.
- S., Nov. 8—Self-control: Rom. 6:11-23.

* * *

Topic for Sunday, November 9—How to Avoid Failure. Josh. 1:1-8.

* * *

Our Bible lesson tells of the Lord's counsel to Joshua at the outset of his campaign against Canaan. Leadership of this enterprise was a new business for Joshua, but it was to be the main work of his life. The counsel which God gave him is what He gives each one of us as we face life and duty. Ornamented copies of this great first chapter of Joshua might well be framed and hung in the homes of earnest and purposeful people as a guide and inspiration. There would be fewer failures in life if we would all take some such step to make this chapter ours.

* * *

Jehovah counseled Joshua first to know and follow the Bible. Or worse only a small part of the holy Book had then been written, but it was enough to make a strong man of Joshua. "Observe to do according to all that is written therein," said Jehovah. We have now a fuller and complete Bible. Jesus and the prophets and apostles have spoken since those days. If the mere "law" which Joshua had was to be of such help, of how much greater use is the complete Book which we have today! If we will make the Bible our guide there will be no such thing in our lives as failure.

* * *

God urged Joshua to concentrate his energies. "Turn not to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest have good success whithersoever thou goest." This counsel is as sound today as it was in Joshua's time. Many of our lives are frittered away on matters outside of the main current of our purpose. Our energies are limited, and we can not invest at the same time in many enterprises. We see so many things that might and ought to be done that we become bewildered at times and allow ourselves to be diverted from the main channel. When we do we invite failure. God warned Joshua that he must fasten his energies upon his one great task and hold them there until the finish.

* * *

The Lord exhorted Joshua to be fearless. "Be strong and of good courage; be not affrighted, neither be thou dismayed: for Jehovah thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest." And you notice that He names the ground of the confidence that Joshua is to feel. God is with you, He says. We have a mistaken way nowadays of urging confidence in oneself; but Jehovah urged confidence in God. Such was the confidence of David when he accepted the challenge of Goliath, "Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a javelin: but I come to thee in the name of Jehovah." That sort of courage and assurance is the right sort. It rests upon God, the real strength, and it brings sure success in every right purpose we attempt to execute.

* * *

Tell why and wherein Jesus was not a failure, although He was poor and despised.

Give reasons why Jesus' neighbors regarded Him no doubt as a failure.

Show by reading Luke 12:16-21 that money-making may not be a success.

The Prayer Meeting

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING NOV. 2, 1919.
CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.
II Tim. 1:7; Deut. 14:29.

(These Scripture references are of course the ones furnished with the subject: perhaps the reader may find the point of contact.)

Every one of us is vitally interested in this important matter of the true education of our young people. Not only the church, but every member of the community should realize the importance of the right kind of training for those who by and by will carry the burdens and the privileges of society.

There is only one kind of education that should satisfy us, viz., a true Christian education. There is not a shadow of doubt but that thousands of our boys and girls are growing to maturity with no working knowledge of the Bible. This is unquestionably the fact. In some strange way they have passed through the Christian (sic) home, and the Sunday School, and stand on the verge of manhood not knowing the A B C's of Bible truth. This fact should alarm us, and cause us to look sharply about us to see the why of this thing. In the public schools there is no opportunity for Christian teaching. In many of our academies and training schools the same is true. In our colleges and universities—with some splendid exceptions—the Bible is taboo. It is high time for our people to awaken to the facts, and to realize that an education with the Bible left out is not only undesirable, but exceedingly dangerous, not only to the person immediately concerned, but to both Church and State. A man graduated from one of our famous colleges testified the other day before a Senate committee that he was "against God, against property, and against government." One would venture to assert that Davidson College would never send that kind of man out from its campus.

The primary need is of course the proper training of our young people in the home. Parents have golden opportunity to teach the Bible to their children. Every mother who has tried it will testify that the story of the Bible is absorbingly interesting to children, and wisely and reverently used, permanent spiritual impressions can thus be made in the impressionable years of childhood. Then the Sunday School: what an opportunity is here if only it were properly used. But alas, too often teachers are conscienceless about the adequate preparation for their work, and concerning prayer for those who constitute their classes. In many schools teachers of any kind are hardly obtainable, and the classes are at the mercy of any one who happens to be present. After awhile, the boy or girl must be sent to college, and the parents, in many cases, utterly fail to recognize the importance of sending them to an institution in which the Bible is truly honored, and where the atmosphere is really and truly religious.

One thing seems certain—if our young people do not receive a truly Christian education, the fault will be mainly the fault of parents. So that the initial and fundamental need of the day is the christianizing of the home—or parents. If only our homes were truly Christian, children would be dedicated to God from their birth; they would be trained in the home to know the Holy Scriptures, and then in every stage of their education parents would see that the children were so placed that the early impressions would be deepened and matured.

If only the home could be truly christianized, many of the problems of the Church would be solved. Our young people would grow up offering fine material for officers and members of the churches; our young men and women would be supported in the years of their training for Christian work, and every committee would find its way cheered and gladdened in carrying on the Lord's work. Let us work and pray for a revival of the Christian home.

Sunday School

By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.

NOVEMBER 2, 1919

Temperance Lesson (World's Temperance Sunday)
Jeremiah 35:1-8, 12-14a, 18, 19.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."—I Cor. 10:31.

AUTHORIZED VERSION

1. The word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying,
2 Go unto the house of the Rechabites, and speak unto them, and bring them into the house of the LORD, into one of the chambers, and give them wine to drink.

3. Then I took Jaazaniah the son of Jeremiah, the son of Habaziniah, and his brethren, and all his sons, and the whole house of the Rechabites.

4. And I brought them into the house of the LORD, into the chamber of the sons of Hanan, the son of Igdaliah, a man of God, which was by the chamber of the princes, which was above the chamber of Maaseiah, the son of Shallum, the keeper of the door:

5. And I set before the sons of the house of the Rechabites pots full of wine, and cups and I said unto them, Drink ye wine.

6. But they said, We will drink no wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab, our father, commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye nor your sons for ever:

7. Neither shall ye build house, nor sow seed, nor plant vineyard, nor have any; but all your days ye shall dwell in tents; that ye may live many days in the land where ye be strangers.

8. Thus have ye obeyed the voice of Jonadab the son of Rechab, our father, in all that he hath charged us, to drink no wine all our days, we, our wives, our sons, nor our daughters;

12. Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,
13. Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Go and tell the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, Will ye not receive instruction to hearken to my words? saith the LORD.

14. The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons not to drink wine, are performed; for unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment:

18. And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, and kept all his precepts, and done according unto all that he hath commanded you;

19. Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before me for ever.

In popular speech temperance usually means abstinence from intoxicating drugs or liquors. But in the Scriptures temperance has a broader signification. It is mentioned as one of the graces of the Spirit, which we are to seek and cherish. It signifies moderation, self-control, the subjection of all the appetites and passions, to the dominion of reason, conscience and the law of God. For this reason we think "Daniel's abstinence from the meats and drinks that came from the king's table" was selected as a temperance lesson. Though it was due to his loyalty to the law of his God, yet it demonstrated his control of his appetites in obedience to that motive as well as the dictates of reason. For a similar reason the conduct of the Rechabites obeying Jonadab's commands as to wine, houses and agriculture has been chosen as a temperance lesson. We will consider the teachings of this passage as follows: Self-control, Self-control From Obedience to a Father's Command, This Obedience Approved of God, and If a Human Father Should Be Thus Obeyed Much More Should the Divine Father.

I. Self-Control.

Mastery of the natural appetites and passions should be sought by every human being. They should be put under the control of reason, conscience and the expressed will of God. If this is not the case they become excessive, tyrannical and a man is rendered the slave of his desires and passions. Relish for food becomes gluttony, fondness for drink produces drunkenness, desire for accumulation leads to avarice, love of social power becomes selfish ambition, and a liking for human approval is degraded into a passion for indiscriminate praise. Scriptural temperance or self-control may be fostered and exercised from a variety of motives. A man may be incited to practice it from a desire for his own welfare. If he does not wish to degrade his own nature, to become the slave of his own appetites and passions, he will strive for self-mastery. He will cultivate it, too, if he would have the esteem of his fellows for excellence of character and uprightness of life. He may be moved to self-control by deference to the revealed will of God and a desire for Divine approval.

II. Self-Control From Obedience to a Father's Command.

Jonadab had enjoined upon his descendants abstinence from wine, living in tents instead of houses, and refraining from sowing seed or engaging in agriculture. The first injunction was obviously to safeguard against drunkenness and to foster sobriety. The last two which were generally practiced by the patriarchs were probably intended to keep them reminded that they were pilgrims on the earth and that the present world was not their permanent home. The descendants of Jonadab obeyed their father's command and acquired a self-control that strengthened with passing years. It was proof against example and persuasion and would not yield, even when tempted and when indulgence could be perpetrated in the privacy of a chamber.

III. Rechabites' Obedience Approved of God.

The commands of Jonadab were given to conserve the highest interests of his posterity, God has enjoined obedience to parents. He says, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right." The first authority on earth He has committed to parents and those who do not learn to obey legitimate authority in the family are not apt to render obedience anywhere. The Lord has said, "Honor thy father and mother that it may be well with thee and that thou mayest live long in the land which God giveth thee." Long life and prosperity have usually attended those who have endeavored to obey this precept. This was eminently the case with the Rechabites. Jehovah not only approved their conduct but rewarded them in many ways. He enabled them to attain a degree of self-mastery and sobriety that was unique through many generations. He blessed them with length of days upon the earth. He held them up before Israel as an example of fidelity and obedience to a parent. He declared, "Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before me forever."

IV. If a Human Father Should be Thus Obeyed, Much More Should the Divine Father.

This is the grand lesson of the Scripture considered. Jonadab gave his descendants commands for their own good. They were strictly obeyed for generations. Their conduct met with Divine approbation and multiplied rewards. They were blest with Jehovah's favor, with prolonged life, with peculiar honor and with a promise that reacheth to eternity. God gives commands to His people for their good. He has supreme authority to issue them. They are always righteous, bring sure rewards and should be strictly obeyed.

An Appeal.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the following appeal. The need is great and our people will find this a good investment for some part of the Lord's money.

To Some Christian Friend.

Hendersonville, N. C., R. 5.

Wanted—A pony outfit to do Sunday school work in Henderson County, North Carolina.

Dear Friend: We have here in Henderson County so many boys and girls who should be in Sunday School, but are not: some come regular, some occasionally, and some not at all. We need a Sunday School visitor, but one cannot do the work and walk, so we are asking some one to give a pony outfit to the cause so that all these boys and girls may know we want them, for the visitor then can go into the homes at least once a month, and can keep up with them.

Is the price of an outfit too much to give to help save these boys and girls? God will bless the donor as no one else can, and he will have the undying gratitude of the writer.

Mrs. Minnie G. Miller.

(Reference :: Rev. R. P. Smith, Asheville, N. C.)

Devotional

APPRECIATING GOD'S MERCIES.

"Blessed are those who do thirst and hunger after righteousness: for they shall be filled." I wonder if more of us would not be "filled" if we were not so particular about the way our spiritual mercies were served to us. Now I would like a good glass of sweet, clear, sparkling water, served in a clean, delicate glass, to the music of a piece of tinkling ice. But the best drink of water I ever had was from a pool of muddy water, on the surface of which floated bugs, sticks, and other unpleasant things, and in the midst of which stood a dog that had just taken a bath in the same pool. But from the brim of my sombrero I drank what I shall always believe to be the best drink of water I ever tasted. I was thirsty from wandering over the alkali deserts of the West; my throat was dry and my tongue was parched. I might have perished with thirst ere water had been politely served to me. But I drank that water and was satisfied! John Wesley much rather would have found his spiritual satisfaction in the beautiful formalism of the Established Church; but in the little meeting house on Aldersgate Street he found a pool from which he drank and was satisfied. Since my experience in that Western desert I have prayed many, many times: "Lord, save me from making a choice as just how Thy mercies shall come to me. May I eat from the table Thou dost spread before me; may I drink from the pool that Thou dost form at my feet."—Fred W. Church.

In the first place, the wealth or poverty of our spiritual life is the fruit of our thoughts. No two men live in the same world. You can live in the city, or the same house—never in the same world. For always the secret intangible fingers of our thoughts are building for us the worlds we really live in; sometimes hovels, dugouts of the soul, sometimes palaces so beautiful that the dreams of Kubla Khan are mean in comparison. Put Philip the II of Spain in the most beautiful gardens that had ever been built on earth, and he remarks, "It gave me content for two minutes." Put Bunyan in Bedford Jail, and he lives in spiritual mansions, and sees the gleaming turrets of the Eternal City. For, the world you really live in is the world of your thought.—Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick.

When the snow melted away after the long winter a little plant was seen looking up into the warm sky . . . fresh, tender, and full of life . . . Under the great drifts it had hidden, cozy and warm, and was ready at the first coming of spring to burst into the full vigor of fragrant life. This is a picture of the way every Christian life should pass through the sorest winter of adversity. Then when it is past and the spring comes . . . you will emerge unharmed, with even richer life, tenderer beauty, and deeper joy. The secret of such victorious living is a trust in God that never fails.—Selected.

We may choose to look at the masses in the gross . . . There is One above who knows every thirst, and ache, and sorrow, the temptation of each slattern and gin drinker, and street boy. The day will come when He will require an account of these neglects of ours not in the gross.—Charles Kingsley.

It is the Dawn! The Dawn! The nations
From East to West have heard a cry—
Through all earth's blood-red generations
By hate and slaughter climbed thus high,
Here—on this height—still to aspire,
One only path remains untried,
One path of love and peace climbs higher,
Make straight that highway for our God.
—Alfred Noyes.

Home Circle

HONORING THE DEAD.

The people in the neighborhood were amazed, not to say shocked, when Mrs. J——, after the death of her only daughter gave away the young lady's clothes, books and other belongings, reserving a few for herself for keepsakes, and at once went back to her church work and regular round of duties. Mrs. J—— was a widow and the friends and relatives had supposed that her life was wrapped up in the life of the promising young college student, as indeed it was, so they could not understand how the bereaved woman could so soon resume the daily round of duties.

Even after they learned that it had been the wish of the dead girl that her mother should put on no mourning, and that she should endeavor to be cheerful and active and busy, many were still doubtful as to the wisdom of the plan. "It don't look like showing proper respect to the dead." said an old lady who still went in deep black after the lapse of ten years since the last death in her family. "I believe in honoring the memory of dead folks and not forgetting them right away. Of course I know we believe they're safe and happy, but it don't show respect to mingle with folks and dress in colors." And there were many to share her belief though they did not put it into words as the old lady did.

But when a young man died and they had to bear with the young man's mother in her idea of honoring the dead, then they began to see the wisdom of Mrs. J——'s course. Though there were other children in the family and children who very much needed the mother's care and sympathy, the poor woman shut herself into the darkened house and refused to live in normal fashion for months. Dressed in deep black with tears and sighs for each caller she went over and over the incidents of her son's last illness and all the details of his funeral until people fled from her in self defense. The long suffering members of the family could not flee all the time, though the sons began to frequent the pool rooms and more doubtful places, and the husband remained down town all he could decently while friends and relatives made only brief and formal calls. Every book, every small personal belonging had to remain as the young man had left them and every time she saw any of his possessions there was a prolonged burst of tears. Her religion apparently failed her at the critical time, for she refused to go to church and shut herself away from all the social affairs.

The best way to show respect for the dead is to try to be more gentle and considerate and happy toward those who are left. "So your little sister went away to Heaven, did she?" said a friend to a child who spoke of the death of a baby sister a few months before. "O, no, she isn't in Heaven," said the child. "Mamma cries all the time and won't do anything, so of course she isn't in Heaven. She'd be happy if little Ellen was in Heaven."

So don't be afraid of what the neighbors will say if you let your features relax into a smile and permit the children to romp through the open house with their childish fun. "Life for the living and rest for the dead," will keep morbid thoughts away if taken for a motto, and you will not be in danger of losing your health by staying in the gloom. Instead of weeping and imagining that you are showing great respect for the dead by hoarding things they would have discarded long ago, live a normal, healthy life and do not refuse the sunshine and good gifts of the all wise Father who directs all affairs, even the affairs of death and eternal life. By being brave and calm and hopeful you will win others to Christ who has promised comfort and sympathy to all who mourn the loss of loved ones.—Hilda Richmond.

Lest that thy steps unhailed should pass my gate,
Lest that my lamp untrimmed should fail and wane—
Thou, who hast bidden me watch and wait,
Watch in my heart, wait in my soul, remain!
Leave me not, or I shall watch in vain.

Presbyterian Standard

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.50 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE.
REV. W. L. BOGGS, Circulation Manager.

A Religious Newspaper for the Family, Devoted to the Interest of Christ's Kingdom as Represented by the Southern Presbyterian Church.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.
ESTABLISHED JANUARY 1, 1858.

Entered at the Post Office at Charlotte, N. C., as second class matter.

CONTENTS OF THIS ISSUE

The World in a Ferment	2
Preserve the Records	2
Let Good Enough Alone	3
Bryan's Plea for the Bible	3
The Pope on the Outside	3
CONTRIBUTED—
The Steadfast Type of Christian Character and Work—By Rev. W. W. Moore, D.D.	4-8
Organic Union—By a Pastor	5-9
"The Abuse of Scripture"	6
The Continued Attacks on Dr. Mott	6
"Dr. Ogden and the Laymen"—By Rev. Thornton Whaling, D.D.	9
Dr. Campbell Morgan's Lectures at the Seminary The Teacher Training Class in the Country Church—By Rev. R. W. Culbertson	10
Assembly's Home Missions—November Offering	23
DEPARTMENTS—
News of the Week	10
Christian Endeavor—By Rev. S. H. Hay	11
Prayer Meeting—By Rev. C. D. Waller	11
Sunday School—By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.	12
Home Circle and Devotional	13

ANNOUNCEMENT.

 The label on the paper gives the date to which subscription is paid.

When change of address is desired, give both the old and the new address.

When the date of the label is behind the date of this issue of the paper the label is a reminder that the subscription price is past due. When the date of the label is in advance of the date of this issue it is a receipt for the last subscription paid.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South.

TREASURERS OF BENEVOLENT CAUSES.

Foreign Missions—Edwin F. Willis, 154 Fifth Ave., N., Nashville, Tenn.

Home Missions—A. N. Sharp, 1522 Hurt Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Christian Education and Ministerial Relief—John Stites, Fifth and Market Streets, Louisville, Ky.

Publication and Sabbath School Work—R. E. Magill, 6-8 N. Sixth Street, Richmond, Va.

Bible Cause—Wm. Foulke, Bible House, New York.

Church News

Collections for October are for Foreign Missions. Treasurer, E. F. Willis, 216 Union Street, Nashville, Tenn.

PERSONAL.

Rev. A. E. Wallace, of Piedmont, S. C., has changed his address to Sulphur Springs, Tex., where he goes to become pastor of the First Church of that place.

The eight Presbyteries of South Carolina have met and practically unanimously endorsed a campaign for $1,000,000 for the educational institutions of the State. The work has already begun under the leadership of Dr. M. E. Melvin and promises to be a great success.

Rev. Donald A. McNeill has changed his address from Raeford, N. C. to Mangum, Okla. Mr. McNeill was a member of Savannah Presbytery when he entered the "Service," in September 1917, where he served as religious Secretary in the army "Y" for about a year. The next year he was chaplain with the infantry in the A. E. F. He is now pastor of the First Church, Mangum, Okla.

Rev. J. W. Vinson, of our China Mission, has been ordered home by his physician, the state of his health requiring treatment that he cannot get in China. He, with his family, will sail just as soon as passage can be procured. His coming home will leave the work in Haichow very much weakened and the prayers of the church are asked for both Mr. Vinson and the workers who are left in the field.

Mrs. Robert A. Chandler of Mayesville, S. C. has given $3,000 to the Presbyterian College of South Carolina to establish a scholarship in memory of her husband. Mr. Chandler was a college man himself, greatly interested in education, and frequently assisted young men and women through college. Mrs. Chandler felt there could be no more fitting memorial to her husband than a scholarship in the college where young men would be trained under the best moral and religious influences.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Wilson—This church, which has been vacant since the resignation of Rev. J. B. Massey, now of the faculty of Hampden-Sidney College, has called Rev. E. L. Flanigan to its pastorate and he has accepted and entered on his work here. Mr. Flanigan served during the war as chaplain in the army.

Mt. Airy—Owing to continued ill health, Rev. L. G. McMillan has resigned his pastorate of the Presbyterian churches here and at Flat Rock. Mr. McMillan served as chaplain during the world war and continues to suffer from the insidious after-effects of gases, having twice been gassed during his work in the trenches.

Charlotte—At the Second Church last Sabbath evening a brief but very interesting service was held before the sermon when the service flag was demobilized, and the handsome United States flag which has occupied the opposite wall was removed. The roll of honor, embracing the names of the soldiers and nurses who entered the service from this church, was read by Mr. H. N. Pharr. "America" was sung by the congregation and "The Star Spangled Banner" was sung with beautiful effect by Mrs. H. J. Knebel. The sermon by the pastor, Dr. McGeachy, was on "The Humor of the Bible."

Rev. J. M. Clark, D.D., Superintendent and Evangelist of Concord Presbytery has recently held two meetings with results as follows:

Poplar Tent Church, 8 days, 83 reconsecrations, 12 pro-
(Continued on Page 16)

Bird Dogs and Teachers

*There is a Man in This State Who is Paying $150 per Month
For a Man to Train His Bird Dogs, and His Children Go to a Teacher Who Gets $50 per Month*

Not a Word of Comment is Necessary

Salaries of the Teaching Profession Must Be Raised or the Future
Will Pay the Price With Mediocre Talent. The Big Universities and Colleges Realize This.
For Increasing Salaries of Teachers

Smith College is Asking For Four Million
Cornell is Asking For Five Million
Princeton is Asking For Fourteen Million
Harvard is Asking For Fifteen Million

PRESIDENT SCHURMAN, of Cornell, says: "It is impossible to exaggerate the gravity of the situation. But seriously as it concerns Cornell professors and instructors, that is only a small sample of the impending danger. The very life of higher education in the United States is menaced. Somehow or other the members of the present faculties in our colleges and universities will manage to eke out a living, even if they are compelled to use up their savings, or perhaps let their insurance policies go. They will endure privations and sacrifices but they will stick to their jobs either from choice or necessity. But where are their successors to come from? The teaching profession will be deserted by the forceful and aspiring youth of the nation, and become the monopoly of dull and unambitious mediocrity. The education of its youth—and especially the higher education—is the supreme interest of the republic."

Our Professors at Davidson Have Been Offered Larger Salaries

They remain out of loyalty and a sense of duty to the Church. Not excluding the Ministry, the teachers of our Church institutions are about the poorest paid for the service rendered the Church and the Nation of any class anywhere.

The Answer to This Problem is More Endowment. For This Purpose Presbyterians Are Trying to Raise One Million Dollars

God has blessed our people with great wealth. If we have any interest in the future of our Church and our State we must transform some of our wealth into Character through these Godly and self-sacrificing teachers in our schools.

You can Endow a Chair and Support a Teacher for All Time for $50,000

The Million Dollar Campaign Committee

A. M. SCALES, Chairman

R. G. VAUGHN, Treasurer

C. M. RICHARDS, Secretary

Greensboro, North Carolina

Church News.

(Continued from Page 14)

fessions, 13 additions to the church, 11 pledges to establish family altars, and an offering of $50.00 for Home Missions.

Tabor Church, 8 days, 59 reconsecrations, 11 professions, 8 additions to church, and an offering of $30.00 for Home Missions.

Tabor Church—The congregation and community of Tabor Church has just enjoyed a refreshing meeting, conducted by Dr. J. M. Clark, Evangelist of Concord Presbytery. Notwithstanding the unfavorable weather the attendance was good and the results gratifying.

There were eleven professions, fifty-nine reconsecrations, five infant and five adult baptisms. Six joined the Presbyterian Church on profession and two by letter. The collection for Home Missions amounted to $30.00. Dr. Clark preached the gospel with all his vigor and the people heard him gladly.

Wadesboro—The group of Churches, consisting of Wadesboro, Morven and Camden under the pastorate of Rev. J. J. Douglass has made great progress the past few months.

There are few Churches in Mecklenburg Presbytery that have done more.

At Wadesboro the salary of Mr. Douglass was substantially increased recently; this makes the second increase in a few months. They also presented him with a handsome purse two months ago.

Between 25 and 30 new members have been received this year, and now they are about to install a new pipe organ.

Affairs at Morven are also encouraging, while the same is true of Camden.

Congregations are encouragingly large and new members have been received.

St. Andrews, Wilmington—A large and deeply interested class of men and women in this church meets after prayer meeting Wednesday night to study the book of Dr. Morris' "Christianizing Christendom." On the fourth Sabbath of October the Sabbath School will have Rally Day and the Foreign Missions Program taking an offering for both these causes. The pastor will preach at the morning hour of that day observing Reformation Day and using the subject suggested by our Assembly's Committee: The Revocation of the Edict of Nantes.

The elders and deacons had supper in Memorial Hall served by the women of the Auxiliary Thursday, October 16, at 7:30 p. m. They held the regular Round Table Quarterly Joint meeting of Elders and Deacons, and discussed the needs and claims of the church and our duty to the community. Much good was accomplished.

Greensboro—On Sunday evening, October 19, in the Presbyterian Church of the Covenant, a handsome pipe organ, which is the gift of the Hon. A. M. Scales, who is an elder in the First Presbyterian Church, this city, was dedicated. Rev. Melton Clark, D.D., of Charleston, S. C., preached the sermon. This organ is a memorial gift in memory of Mrs. Bessie Taylor Scales. Dr. Clark was a great friend of Mrs. Scales, and it was specially fitting that he should preach the sermon dedicating this beautiful instrument to the memory of this splendid Christian woman.

The Church of the Covenant is but 13 years old, but it is one of the handsomest and best equipped churches in the State. Its growth has been of a steady and permanent nature. It is one of the few churches in our Assembly that has a regularly employed nurse to minister to the sick and suffering in the congregation and community. The church is finding that this is a most practical and helpful exercise. We commend it to other churches as one of the best methods of rendering a Christlike service.

White Oak Tabernacle—Fayetteville Presbytery. The writer has just closed a meeting at White Oak Tabernacle, a mission point, six miles east of Kenly, where we have had a most splendid Sunday School for about a year, conducted by some of the earnest Christians of Kenly Church.

This has been a very greatly neglected section of Johnston county, and of course we expect the growth to be more or less slow. The people must first be taught. There was quite a splendid spirit shown from the very first and a great deal of interest manifested.

We had five professions, all of which united with the Presbyterian Church, and they expect to petition Presbytery for an organization soon.

We now own a lot there on which we have a comfortable Tabernacle.

C. E. C.

Badin—Installation of Rev. T. G. Tate as pastor. The commission appointed by Presbytery met at the First Presbyterian Church at Badin, Sunday evening, October 19. Rev. Leonard Gill presided, propounded the constitutional questions and charged the pastor.

Rev. G. W. Cheek, of Albermarle, preached a very strong sermon which was greatly appreciated and Mr. J. M. Harris, of Albermarle, made a very impressive charge to the people.

These services occasioned a great deal of interest and were largely attended. This is a young church, organized about two years ago. Mr. Tate is their first pastor and under his leadership the membership has been greatly increased, until there are now 115 members.

A lot has been donated by the Tallahassee Power Company, and all plans are now complete to commence the erection of their new building and we feel that the church faces a great future, there is no work in Mecklenburg Presbytery that offers such opportunities and is so important at this time.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Andrews—Dr. W. H. Miley, evangelist for the Presbyterian Synod of South Carolina, will begin an eight-day meeting here in the school auditorium next Sunday morning. All the churches of the town will co-operate to make the meeting a success. Rev. J. T. Hooker, of Wofford College, will conduct the singing.

Clinton, First Church—Treasurers report. Woman's Auxiliary, Mrs. A. E. Spencer, Treasurer, From April 1 1919 to October 1, 1919. Total receipts, $523.59. Total disbursements, as follows: Foreign Missions $190.01, Assembly's Home Missions $79.16, Synod's Schools and Colleges $50.00, Presbyterian Home Missions $41.66, Thornwell Orphanage $60.00, Christian Education and Ministerial Relief $30.00, Publication and Sunday School Extension $12.50, Bible Cause $3.34; Miscellaneous $56.15, Cash on hand October 1, 1919 $77; Total, $523.59.

Columbia—A new Presbyterian Church has been established at Rose Hill, one of Columbia's residential suburbs. At a meeting of Congaree Presbytery on October 6 the church was accepted and Rev. M. F. Daniel, of Columbia, received as pastor of the new church. Mr. Daniel has been preaching at Rose Hill for some months, but not until the recent meeting of the Presbytery was the church formally accepted. Mr. Daniel also preaches in the Brookland Presbyterian Church.

The Rose Hill Presbyterian Church makes the seventh Presbyterian church for Columbia. It is already a flourishing institution. Mr. Daniel is doing a fine work and is liked by the members of his congregation.

Greenville—Rally Day was observed in the Sunday School of the Second Church, Greenville, S. C., on the second Sabbath in October. Two hundred and four persons were present and a collection of $89.42 was received. An interesting program on Sunday School Extension was carried out. The Sunday School devotes the first Sabbath in every month to an Assembly cause. Its contributions to all objects for the last six months amounted to $688.43.

Welcome Sunday was observed on the third Sabbath in October, under the direction of the Cradle Roll of the Sunday School. There was a large congregation present; 12 graduated from the Cradle Roll to the Primary department; the church was beautifully decorated and the order of exercises was well prepared. This annual service is one of the sweetest of the year and is held in the afternoon in the main auditorium of the church.

Broadway Presbyterian Church of Belton recently had the pleasure of entertaining the Presbytery of Piedmont. The meeting was helpful and inspiring from Alpha to Omega. Although it was our first experience, we trust that it will not be our last, to be the host of such a delightful body of God's prophets and elders.

This church observed October 5 as Children's Day and a large collection was taken for the cause, "Lighting Up Our Southland." The Sunday School also gave the earnings of Saturday, October 25, to Thornwell Orphanage.

October 19 closed the happy pastorate of Rev. Albert E. Wallace, who goes to a much larger and more needy field, and becomes pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Sulphur Springs, Tex. Cor.

McDowell and Lanes—We are glad to state that our Rally Day exercises of McDowell Presbyterian Church, and also of Lane's Presbyterian Church, Lane, was a success, and well attended. McDowell Church, Greelyville, contributed $140. Lane's Presbyterian Church contributed $151.

Brewington Presbyterian Church also made a contribution to Sabbath School Extension Work, but we have not heard exactly the amount. This group of three churches has contributed to Sabbath School Extension Work, for the past few weeks, something over $300.

The church building at McDowell is too small for our congregations and for the Sabbath School work. We are making a move for a new church building. We have over 130 members, and our little town is growing, and people are moving in town; we must have a new building. We are so glad to see manifested such a sweet spirit of liberality, among these good people, in worshipping God with their substance. We are not our own, we are bought with a price. E. B. Carr, Pastor.

Midway—On October 4 Rally Day was observed in the Midway Church, Harmony Presbytery. The children acquitted themselves well in the exercises. A contribution was made for Sunday School and Publication causes of the Assembly amounting to $9.37. The acting pastor, Rev. W. H. Workman, made a short address. Dinner was served on the grounds, after which Rev. R. L. Grier preached a very interesting sermon to an attentive congregation. The next day the communion service was held by the acting pastor or stated supply, W. H. Workman, a large congregation attending.

Four young people were received into the communion of the church on a profession of their faith. Four infants were baptized during these services.

This church is on the lookout for a pastor who is willing to endure hardships of a country pastor and willing to live about 20 miles from a railroad town.

On the fifth Sabbath in August last Rev. J. S. Garner preached to this congregation, as also to Bethel. He is a great-grandson of a former pastor, Rev. Phillip Pearson, who died in the pulpit of Bethel Church, during the service, while pastor of the church, so that the presence and visit of Mr. Garner was a matter of more than ordinary interest. W. H. W.

Harmony Presbytery met October 14-15 with the Central Church, Rev. W. I. Sinnott, pastor. The churches were well represented and only two ministers absent. Rev. R.

C. Morrison, retiring moderator, opened the Presbytery with an interesting sermon.

Organization: Rev. W. R. Pritchett was elected moderator, and Elder E. Alexander, temporary clerk.

Rev. L. Ross Lynn, president of Thornwell Orphanage, was present and gave an interesting address on that institution, which was heartily commended to the liberality of the churches.

Rev. F. M. Hawley was received by letter from Palmyra Presbytery, Synod of Missouri. Calls were placed in his hands from Bethel and Beulah Churches, which being accepted by him, the following committees were appointed to conduct the installation services: At Bethel, first Sabbath in November, at 3:30 p. m.: Rev. W. I. Sinnott and J. M. McCord, W. H. Workman alternates to either; Elder W. M. McElveen to charge the pastor. At Beulah, fourth Sabbath in November, 3:30 p. m.: J. G. Herndon, D. M. Clark, L. N. McCord alternate to either; Elder R. B. Smith to charge the people.

The amendments to the Book of Church Order sent down to the Presbyteries were docketed for the Spring meeting.

Election of Commissioners to the Assembly were held, and Rev. W. J. Mackay, D.D., alternate; Rev. W. I. Sinnott, and Elders Robt. Muldrow, of the Salem Church, and alternate Hugh Witherspoon, of Concord Church, were elected.

The meeting seemed to be of interest to the congregation, as is usually the case in the country districts, and was enjoyed by all. The congregation bountifully and generously entertained the Presbytery. Next meeting to be at New Harmony Church. W. H. Workman, S. C.

Presbytery of South Carolina met in the Thornwell Memorial Church, the church of the Thornwell Orphanage, with twenty ministers and thirty elders, the largest number in recent years.

Moderator: Rev. M. G. Woodworth, Professor in the Presbyterian College of South Carolina.

Local Home Missions: Every church in the Presbytery has regular preaching except Whitmire. Many evangelistic meetings were held during the summer with fine results, there being sixty-eight additions on profession of faith. In connection with the report a fine evangelistic conference was held. It was shown that all parts of the Presbytery are thoroughly evangelized except the mill villages. In many country communities there are less than five adults who are not professing Christians, and in one town of more than three thousand population, there were only sixty-five not members of some church. The only fields for evangelism appeared to be the mill villages and it was decided to secure at once a Sunday School worker as the most effective means of doing evangelistic work in the mills. Rev. D. J. Brimm was made secretary-treasurer of this work and contributions for the support of the worker are asked for from churches, Sunday Schools and individuals in the Presbytery, to be forwarded to Dr. Brimm, at Clinton.

A new committee on Evangelism was appointed with Rev. C. T. Squires, of Laurens, S. C., as chairman, to assist and follow up in this work.

Assembly's Home Missions: A full report was made of this work and careful consideration given to it in all its details.

One Million Dollar Campaign for the Educational Institutions of South Carolina: The Presbytery adopted unanimously by a rising vote the proposal to raise one million dollars to be divided between the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, the Chicora College for Women, the Columbia Theological Seminary and the Thornwell Orphanage. Addresses were made by Rev. D. M. Douglass, D.D., President of the Presbyterian College of South Carolina; Mr. C. M. Bailey and other business men of the Synod, and it was decided that now is the time to raise this fund.

It was shown that the only way to make the necessary increase in the professors' salaries at the various institutions was to increase the endowments at once. Hence a campaign for one million dollars was authorized. Chicora College for Women turned away one hundred applications for boarding pupils for lack of room and is now turning away day pupils for the same reason. Thornwell Orphanage has just completed and put in use a new dining room where all are fed at the same time. All the money necessary to pay for this hall is not yet in hand.

Four Million Dollar Campaign: Presbytery accepted its quota of $41,169 for the campaign next March and instructed its campaign committee to apportion this sum among its forty-one churches.

Overtures sent down by the General Assembly: Presbytery voted to approve the amendments to Chapter V, Section IV, Paragraph VI, to Paragraphs 118 and 129. Presbytery voted to disapprove the proposed change in the basis of representation, and the overtures relating to the limited term of service for elders and deacons was docketed till the Spring meeting.

Overture to the Assembly: Presbytery overtures the Assembly to secure a representative from each Synod a place on the platform committee of the Montreat Association and also on the board of managers of the association.

Increase of Salaries: The Greenville Church and the Abbeville Church were permitted to increase the salaries of their pastors $475 and $500 respectively.

Next Meeting: No invitations being received at the meeting for the next meeting, it was left to the stated clerk to receive and accept an invitation and fix the time of the next meeting.

The meeting was of special interest and pleasure because of the opportunity afforded to see the best conducted orphanage in our land. The members of Presbytery expressed their delight at what they witnessed, and went home determined to support the institution even more liberally than heretofore.

H. Waddell Pratt, S. C.

KENTUCKY.

Louisville—At a congregational meeting held at the Highland Presbyterian Church, Sunday morning, October 19, six additional elders were elected and by unanimous vote the name of the new Sunday School building was made the Hawes Memorial Sunday School building.

Louisville Presbytery—An adjourned meeting of Louisville Presbytery was held at Nicholasville, Ky., on October 7, during the meeting of Synod. Rev. P. B. Hill was received from the Presbytery of Montgomery. The call of the First Presbyterian Church, Louisville, was placed in his hands and accepted by him, and the following commission was appointed to install him as pastor at the evening service on October 19: Rev. Drs. W. H. Hopper, Charles R. Hemphill and Dunbar H. Ogden, with Ruling Elder R. H. Geiger, of the Third Church. The commission was authorized to invite Dr. J. Gray McAllister, of the Theological Seminary, to take part in the services. Mr. H. D. Potter, of the Highland Church, was made alternate to Mr. Geiger.

The moderator announced the following committee to arrange for a conference on the subject of "Non-Communicating Members" at the Spring meeting of Presbytery: Rev. J. W. Clotfelter, chairman, and Rev. P. B. Hill.

William T. McElroy.

Louisville—An impressive service in memory of Rev. T. M. Hawes, D.D., was held in the Highland Presbyterian Church on Sunday afternoon, October 19. Rev. Joseph Hopper, the acting pastor, presided and addresses were delivered by several other friends who had been intimately associated with Dr. Hawes. Mr. W. J. Rubel, from the eldership, spoke of Dr. Hawes as a pastor. Dr. J. Gray McAllister spoke of his work as a preacher. Rev. Robt. J. McMullen, the missionary pastor of the church and now on furlough from China, spoke of Dr. Hawes in relation to missions, home and foreign. Dr. E. Y. Mullins, president of the Southern Baptist Seminary, sketched the relation of Dr. Hawes to that institution, and President Charles R. Hemphill, his relation to the Presbyterian Seminary. Dr. Hawes taught public speaking in the Baptist Seminary for 35 years and in the Presbyterian Seminary for 25 years. He was also pastor of the Highland Presbyterian Church for 26 years, until his death on August 29. The Scripture for the service was read by Dr. David M. Sweets, and the prayer was offered by Dr. H. H. Sweets, both close friends of Dr. Hawes.

Lexington—Rally Day, October 5, was observed at Maxwell Street Church, Rev. R. T. Gillespie, pastor, in a very unusual way. The superintendent, with his assistants, had prepared a very unique program, which was carried out to the letter. The attendance was very large, about 300, and all entered into the service with great joy. Mr. C. M. Marshall, the superintendent, and Maj. W. S. Webb, his assistant, had worked earnestly for the success of this day, and were greatly rejoiced. The offering for Sunday School Extension was $50.

A class of four girls and one of five boys were given certificates of promotion from the Primary department to the Junior department, all the girls having attained a perfect mark in all requirements. A class of seven girls and one of five boys were promoted from the Junior department to the Intermediate department. Six young ladies were promoted from the Intermediate to the Senior department. The Primary and Junior grades gave splendid exercises in singing and catechism, but time was too limited to permit the Intermediates to render exercises, except for a few remarks by their superintendent, Mr. John Todd.

The house was filled, the officers and teachers occupying the first three rows in the building, and the elders of the Church sitting on the pulpit with the pastor. After a most earnest, inspirational address by the pastor, the Workers' Covenant was repeated, all workers joining, led by the pastor, closing with the consecration prayer by the Superintendent of Home Missions.

A Teacher Training Class of 14 members was the pronounced feature of the day.

It was a great day for Maxwell Street Church and a wonderful day for Presbyterianism in the Synod of Kentucky. This church is one of the best organized in our Assembly, and under the pastorate of Rev. R. T. Gillespie is accomplishing remarkable results. Thos. B. Talbot.

LOUISIANA.

New Orleans—All the pastors have returned to their work, after vacations of varying lengths. Dr. Cornelison, of the First Church, receives a specially warm welcome from everybody, not of his own congregation only but of all the churches, after his long absence seeking the health which has come to him. The Presbytery's Home Missions Committee is earnestly seeking several workers for vacant fields, one of the latter being in the city, others not far away. Dr. Mooney's Church, the Napoleon Avenue, where the Assembly met in May, received 22 new members last Sunday. The Prytania Street and Third Churches have increased their pastors' salaries. The Esplanade and Third Churches have been united, by the Presbytery's commission, all the officers of the two being made officers of the combined church, which takes the name of the Third and the site of the Esplanade. The church worships at present in the Esplanade theater, at the corner of North Broad street.

TENNESSEE.

Nashville—Cottage Church—Rev. George E. Eubank was installed pastor on October 5.

Nashville—West Side—Rev. D. K. Young, who has been supplying this church, has returned to his home in east Tennessee, and this church will be supplied by J. H. H. Berckman, a candidate for the ministry completing his course in Vanderbilt Divinity School.

Nashville—At the Glen Leven Church at the communion on October 5, three members were received, two on profession. Since the beginning of the last quarter sixteen have been received, nine of these being on profession. Rev. Wm. Black, of Charlotte, N. C., and his singer, Mr. Andrew Burr, will assist the pastor, Rev. W. C. Alexander, in special services in November.

Murfreesboro—The First Church, Dr. J. Addison Smith, pastor, welcomed thirteen members at the October communion.

Nashville—First Church—At the communion service on Sunday, October 12, seventeen new members were welcomed into the fellowship of the church.

VIRGINIA.

Richmond First—At the communion service last Sunday 11 new members were received into the church. The Rally Day Sunday School exercises were well attended and the offering amounted to $265.65.

South Boston—Several members of the church surprised the pastor, Rev. C. W. Maxwell, by a present of an up-to-date Ford, equipped with electric lights and starter, whereupon the officers voted him $300 for the upkeep of the machine.

The Moderator of the Synod of Virginia, Dr. E. W. McCorkle, has appointed the following committee to prepare a memorial of Rev. R. H. Fleming, D.D., of Baltimore: Rev. E. M. Woods, Rev. W. H. Woods, Rev. J. A. McMurray, Rev. M. A. Parker, Ruling Elders E. S. Hutton, Richard Hancock and Wm. Hughes.

Richmond—Ginter Park—The attendance at the Sunday School on Rally day was 350. The exercises, which were interesting throughout, with notably fine music, included an address by Mr. J. L. Fowle, the seminary student who during the vacation has done a good work in Piedmont Virginia as the representative of the Ginter Park Sunday School Extension Work. The collection amounted to $629.23, an increase of more than two hundred dollars over the amount given on Rally day last year.

Hat Creek Church—Roanoke Presbytery—October 19 was a red letter day in this old historic church. We gathered up the visible fruits of our recent protracted meeting, at least in part; there were added to the church three by letter, and seven by profession, one of these was an old Confederate veteran of 78 years of age. He received baptism, standing by the side of a full-blooded young man of 21 and a sweet girl of 14, who also were baptized. The other four had already been baptized. After the reception of these members, an infant, the child of believing parents, was baptized. We give God the thanks for these blessings of His grace!

J. A. S.

Richmond—Union Theological Seminary—Dr. R. E. McAlpin, for thirty-four years a missionary in Japan, was the speaker at the first public meeting of the Society of Missionary Inquiry, Sunday night, October 5. His address was a thoughtful and interesting presentation of the religious condition of the great Asiatic Empire which is now the dominant power in the far East.

Rev. W. A. Young, of Tuscaloosa, one of the Assembly's Evangelists, who has been conducting evangelistic services for ten days at the Seventeenth Street Mission for colored people, made an interesting talk at chapel Saturday morning to the students of the Seminary and the Training School.

Rev. A. Hoyt Miller, who graduated from the Seminary last May, sailed last week with his wife from New York for the Congo.

Norfolk—Lafayette Church—Rev. Harold Shields, pastor. October 15 marked the first six months of the present pastorate. It is very gratifying to those interested in this church that its work is going forward. The attendance on Rally day taxed the seating capacity of the building. The collection amounted to something over $38. The church has recently bought two lots adjoining the church property, with a view to enlarging the church when necessary. The ladies' work has been consolidated under the Ladies' Auxiliary, and seems to be working nicely. The Sunday School is increasing in membership. Up to the present time twenty-three new members have been received into the membership of the church. The pastor's father, Rev. M. McG. Shields, Superintendent of Home Missions for the State of Georgia, will hold a week's meeting in this church beginning October 26, 1919.

Roanoke Presbytery—The Systematic Beneficence Committee of Roanoke Presbytery met at the call of the chairman, Mr. R. F. Hutcheson, on October 10, and made arrangements for the Stewardship campaign for the next church year. It was decided to hold a conference at South Boston in January. Fifty thousand dollars asked for from the Presbytery was apportioned among the churches and the following percentages were suggested to the churches: Foreign Missions, 40; Assembly's Home Missions, 15; Synod's Home Missions, 6; Presbyterian Home Missions, 12 (Wm. M. Tredway, Jr., Chatham, Va., treasurer); Schools and Colleges: Presbyterian Schools, 4; Teachers' Training School, 3; Union Theological Seminary, 1; Hampden-Sidney College, 2; Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, 6; Orphanages, 4; Sunday School Extension, 4; Sunnyside Home for the Aged, 2 (Dr. W. S. Lovelace, Houston, Va., treasurer); Bible Cause, 1.

C. W. M.

Mr. McIntire Donates Home to West Hanover Presbytery—Mr. Paul G. McIntire's latest and largest gift to Home Missions in West Hanover Presbytery was the splendid old Colonial home on High street, Charlottesville, Va., which cost, with a modern system of heating to be installed, the sum of $8,000. This is to be the home of the Superintendent of Home Missions and also a resting-place for our faithful home missionaries.

West Hanover was the second Presbytery in the Southern Assembly to employ a superintendent, and we believe it is the first to own a home for the superintendent and its missionary workers. It has been suggested that the name given to the home be "Hanover." This will link it up with the historic "Hanover Presbytery," which existed long before there was any East or West, but just "Hanover Presbytery."

Extensive improvements and some additions are being made to "Hanover," and when these are completed it will be a comfortable and convenient and beautiful home, well located in the heart of beautiful and historic Charlottesville. May the richest blessings of our Lord rest upon the donor of this noble and much needed gift to the cause of Home Missions, which we believe will prove such a blessing to this Presbytery that other Presbyteries will be stimulated to follow the example.

Lexington—In the absence of the pastor, Rev. Thomas Kay Young, who is conducting a series of services at Clifton Forge, Va., the pulpit was occupied Sunday morning, October 5, by Rev. John A. Bowman, who soon leaves us to take charge of a very attractive field in Roanoke, Va. At night Rev. Dr. James R. Howerton preached for us.

Our Ladies' Missionary Society has undertaken to help in the great work, so imperatively needed, of raising money to build brick houses for our devoted missionaries in Africa, that these faithful laborers may have decent houses to live in. Almost at the start they have fifty dollars in hand, to which more is certain to be added. We hope this may "provoke" many others to love and good works.

Saturday afternoon, October 11, the service preparatory to the communion was held, in which the pastor was assisted by Rev. J. K. Parker, of Colliertown. The next morning the session received on examination two young children, a sister and brother, of godly parentage, and members of the Sunday School. At the communion service the pastor was assisted by Rev. Dr. Howerton.

The deacons' report was in the pews that morning, showing for the past quarter $1,290 given for our own uses, and $2,453 given for the various benevolences.

A. H.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriages.

Smith-Hartman—At the home of the bride, Norfolk, Va., by Rev. Harold Shields, September 27, 1919, Mr. J. Kauffman Smith, of Norfolk, Va., and Miss Ruth C. Hartman.

Cadell-McWhirter — At the Pe-gram Street Manse, Charlotte, N. C., by Rev. John E. Wool, October 7, 1919, Mr. James B. Cadell and Miss Tirzah L. McWhirter, both of Charlotte, N. C.

Steel-Wright — Married in Richmond, Va., October 7, 1919, by Dr. F. T. McFaden, Walter Newbill Street and Laura Mason Wright, both of Richmond, Va.

Bourne-Deane — Married in Richmond, Va., October 13, 1919, by Dr. F. T. McFaden, James Bryant Bourne and Sarah Scotten Deane, both formerly of Richmond, Va., but now of Washington, D. C.

Mallet-Whisler—Married in Richmond, Va., October 16, 1919, by Dr. F. T. McFaden, Arthur T. Mallett and Myrtle Whisler, both of Newport News, Va.

Nicholson-Kerl—Married in Richmond, Va., October 18, 1919, by Dr. F. T. McFaden, John T. Nicholson, of St. Louis, Mo., and Isabelle L. Kerl, of Richmond, Va.

Lewis-Watkins—Mr. C. A. Lewis and Mrs. Jennie Goode Watkins, at the home of the groom's sister, Mrs. M. L. Worthem, in Richmond, Va., on October 7, 1919. Rev. R. A. White, the groom's pastor, of Henderson, N. C., assisted by Rev. Russell Cecil, D.D., of Richmond, officiated.

Deaths.

Williams — Mrs. Fannie Fonville Williams, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. D. McIntyre, and wife of Mr. James W. Williams, died on October 11, 1919. She was at Henderson, N. C., at the time of her death, having returned there from her home in Alabama in declining health several months ago. She lived a beautiful life of faith and service and died in the hope of a blessed immortality. She leaves a husband and two children, besides father and mother, two brothers and a sister.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

George H. Campbell.

The session of Paw Creek Presbyterian Church wishes to record its appreciation and high esteem of our departed brother, George H. Campbell, who was called to his reward September 25, 1919. He served faithfully for ten years as a ruling elder of this church and for the past seven years as clerk of the session. He was beloved by all who knew him. He was interested and active in the interest of others, and will be missed in his community and church and especially in his home.

Therefore be it resolved: That there be dedicated to his memory a page in the minutes of this session. That our sympathies are extended to his bereaved family in this time of sorrow, and that we pray God's blessing upon them always.

That a copy of these minutes be sent to the family of this beloved brother by the clerk of the session and that a copy of same be sent to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

C. H. Rowan,
J. W. Davenport,
G. A. Todd,
Committee.

Children's Department

CAN'T GO TO FAIR.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old. I go to school and am in the sixth grade. I led the grade this month. I go to Sunday school and my teacher is Mrs. H. F. Green. I like her fine. Our pastor is Dr. Henderlite. I have the mumps and can not go to the fair. I hope my letter will escape the waste basket, as I want to surprise my daddy.

Your unknown friend,
Elizabeth McCombs.

Gastonia, N. C.

LOVELY TIME AT THE BEACH

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old; am in the third grade in school. Mrs. McKinnon is my teacher. I like her fine. I go to Sunday school every Sunday. Mrs. Watson is my teacher. We all like her so much. Dr. J. J. Hill is our pastor and I like him so much. He preached a special sermon for the little folks Sunday night and I enjoyed it very much. I went with mother and daddy, my grandmother and little sister to the beach and spent about two weeks this summer and had a grand time in the surf. I met lots of little girls while there. My music teacher is Miss Cornelia McMillan. I am very fond of her. Please don't let this enter the waste basket as I am anxious for my Uncle Harlestine to see a letter written and composed by myself.

Your little friend,
Gladys Clark.

Red Springs, N. C.

TO VISIT GRANDMA.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy six years old and will be in the second grade next year. I have two sisters, one is eight years and one is three years old. We are going to Clinton next week to visit our Grandma.

Your friend,
William Faison.

Faison, N. C.

A LOVELY VISIT.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl only six years old. I live up in Taylorsville and I am down at Sugar Creek visiting my Uncle Charlie and Aunt Alice, and uncle takes me to Charlotte in his car and sometimes to the "movies." I am having such a good time and Uncle Charlie is going to take me to the fair this week. Please publish my letter, for I want to surprise my daddy.

Your friend,

Mary Sue Sharpe.
Charlotte, N. C.

AT BEDTIME.

By Eleanor G. R. Goung.

When mother tucks me fast in bed,
Each evening when my prayers are said,
If I've been good and true all day,
I'm sure to hear my mother say:
"Good night, my precious little boy,
You've given mother so much joy."
But if I've let my temper show,
As little folks will do, you know,
Then, when the stars peep in at night,
My mother's voice don't sound just right:

"Dear little lad," she says to me,
"Try hard a better boy to be."
Perhaps if mother's lovely eyes
Were not so blue and soft and wise,
I'd not care even if I had
Been selfish all the day—and bad;
But when I go to sleep each night,
I want to leave her dear eyes bright.

—The Sunbeam.

THE REAL JACK O' LANTERN.

It was Hallowe'en night, the night of strange happenings, when ghosts and goblins prowled around over the country, and witches and black cats rode across the sky on broomsticks.

Billy knew all about this, and he stood by the window looking up at the big yellow moon hoping he might catch a glimpse of the old witch and her companion, the black cat, as they went riding across the star-sprinkled sky. He watched and waited until mother called and said it was time for her little Billy boy to be in bed. Then with a sigh he picked up his Jack o' Lantern and went up stairs to his little bedroom.

"Oh, mother! May I please sit up by the window a while? Maybe I can see the old witch if I watch a little longer."

"No, no, Sonny. You must not do that, you'll catch cold. I'll tuck you up cozily and push your cot over by the window. Then you can watch and be warm, too."

After mother had turned off the light and left him with his Jack o' Lantern blinking and grinning at him out of the darkness, he began to think he wouldn't want to see any goblins or witches at night; he would much rather see them in the day time.

So he cuddled down under the covers and shut his eyes tight and tried hard to sleep. But try as he might no sleep would come, and he lay still as a mouse, listening to every sound.

Suddenly he heard some one call him by name. He sat straight up in bed, and looked all about the room. Over in the corner on the chair sat his Jack o' Lantern where he had left it. But as he looked it seemed to be alive, and—yes, it had hands and feet, and talking, too!

"Say, Billy, what do you say? Let's go riding with old Mother Witch tonight."

"Wh—why, I didn't know Jack o' Lanterns could talk," gasped Billy. "I thought you were just a plain pumpkin."

"Ha, ha!" laughed Jack, "don't you know this is Hallowe'en and all sorts of things can happen? I'm just as much alive as you are, only it's just at this time you can see me as I really am. If you're going with me come on, 'cause I've got to go."

As if in a dream Billy climbed out of bed and followed him to the window. There on the roof was a real witch, with her cat, sitting on a large broom. She grinned at Billy and said, "Come, get on! We'll have to be going."

As quickly as you could say Jack Robinson, Billy found himself sailing along in the starlit sky. As they passed the moon, he winked and nodded at Billy. This tickled the boy so that he forgot himself and almost fell off the broom. Watchful Jack caught him just in time.

"Oh, gee! Isn't this jolly!" exclaimed Billy.

"Yes, but hold tight now—we're going to light," cautioned the witch.

Down they came in one big swoop, and lit right by the entrance to a cave.

"Here we are," said Jack, as he took Billy's hand and led him down a long flight of stone steps.

The sight which met Billy's eyes almost took away his breath. A great, wide room with a huge fireplace in one end was lit up by hundreds of Jack o' Lanterns. By the fire crouched another Witch stirring a big kettle of soup. All around the walls sat big goblins and little goblins, grinning and pointing long bony fingers at Billy.

Jack led him to a stool and then walked away. Billy sat for a long time watching the queer antics of the goblins, who were twisting their faces in hideous shapes. Then, getting rather frightened, he turned to see what had become of Jack. What he beheld at the other end of the room almost made him fall off the big stool on which he was perched.

Upon a high throne sat his own Jack o' Lantern, with a gold crown upon his head. At his feet and all about him sat other Jack o' Lanterns like him, but they did not have crowns on their heads, and Billy knew then that his Jack o' Lantern was the king. Presently the king rose and began to speak.

"Friends and comrades," he said, "we have assembled here tonight to discuss a very important subject. You all know that it is nearing Thanksgiving, and the housewives will need us for pumpkin pies. Last year I heard that some of the pumpkins escaped and took refuge here in the cave. I hope none of you present were among them. We are all put here on earth for a purpose, and we must not shirk our duty. Are you or are you not willing to go back tonight to your rightful places and wait patiently until your time comes for you to do your duty?"

The cave was filled with shouts and cheering, and the king knew their answer.

Billy sat dumbfounded. Wouldn't he have a lot to tell when he got back home?

Presently his thoughts were interrupted by Jack, who was calling him. He turned, and saw all the goblins, witches and Jack o' Lanterns seated around a long table which was covered with good things to eat. He was placed at one end of the table and Jack at the other. Then the feast began.

Every one was so noisy and was having such fun that no one thought of the time, until a little cuckoo popped his head out of his little house and cooed the hour of 3. Then Jack arose quickly and said, "Come, now, away to your rightful places before dawn approaches, for at daybreak the spell is broken, and we shall be only common pumpkins, not our true selves."

"Come, Billy," he said. "We must be getting back to our places, too." So saying, he took Billy's hand and led him up the stone stairway into the open air, to where the old witch sat waiting.

Up into the air they went again and glided swiftly across the heavens. The stars were very dim and the moon had gone to bed long ago, and Billy was puzzled to know how they were going to find his house. But by and by Jack gave a shrill whistle, and down they dropped and lit right on the roof. They bade a hasty goodnight to the old witch—Billy did not forget to thank her nicely—and climbed in through the window to their former places.

Next morning mother looked in and said, "Well, the goblins didn't carry off my little boy, I see."

"Oh, mother, where do you think I was?" cried Billy, and of course he told her all about it.

When he had finished she exclaimed, "My! what a big dream for such a little boy."

"But, mother, it wasn't a dream. It's every bit true."

Of course grown folks don't understand, but Billy did. He knew that it had all happened and that his pumpkin had been a really, truly, live Jack o' Lantern.—Wilma E. Martin, in Continent.

IDA'S HALLOWE'EN.

Ida's little face was very, very sober, as she seeded raisins for the cake Aunt Martha was making. It was Ida's birthday. She was just eight years old.

Ida was to have had a birthday party—her very first party, but the measles had come next door, and mamma had sent her out in the country to Aunt Martha's, so that she might not catch them instead.

She was trying hard to be brave about losing her birthday party, and not let kind Aunt Martha know how disappointed she was, because that would make her feel badly, but she just could—not smile.

"Why, if there isn't Willie Brown with a Jack o' Lantern," said Aunt Martha, as she glanced out of the window in front of which she was beating eggs. "It must be Hallowe'en."

"What is Hallowe'en?" asked Ida, in a voice she tried to make sound interested.

"Long ago witches were supposed to ride out on broomsticks with black cats on their shoulders, and all sorts of creepy, spooky things were thought to happen on the night of October 31," replied Aunt Martha. "Of course we know better now, but young people like the fun of having Hallowe'en parties and playing fortune telling games and relating ghost stories. How would you like to have one?"

"Oh, oh, I should love it," exclaimed Ida, her eyes shining.

The party, itself was not a large one. Willie and Susie and Alice Brown, who lived near, were invited. Of course Miss Warren, the school-teacher, who

(Continued on page 24)

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. Jno. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

To the Secretaries of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief—The Photogravures are now ready to be sent out. Will the local auxiliaries act promptly in placing them in the churches. We hope also that every secretary of this cause has signed and sent in to headquarters the "Prayer Pledge." These are the two ways suggested by our committee in which the women of our Church are asked to assist in our great Million Dollar Campaign. If we feel that this is not much to do, let us just give it a trial and see what earnest prayer and hearty co-operation with our committee will bring to pass.

Mrs. George Howard,
Secretary Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, North Carolina Synodical Auxiliary.

The Readers of the Woman's Column will be interested in the splendid report of the Tuscaloosa Conference given by the delegate of Fayetteville Presbyterian Auxiliary.

The members of the colored Presbyterian Church, Raleigh, sent their pastor's wife, the Woman's Auxiliary, First Church, paying her railroad fare.

Mrs. B. R. Lacy writes that this delegate is most enthusiastic over the conference. She is very proud of the fact that North Carolina had such a large number of delegates, and that some of them were put on important committees. She is already putting into practical use many of the things that she learned at the conference, and feels that the talks on recreation will be especially helpful to her in her work with the young people of the church. Most of all she enjoyed the lessons on "How to Study the Bible" and "Homes of the Bible." She is planning to have a meeting and have the delegates from Durham to come down and both will tell what they have gotten.

Next week we hope to have a report from one of the delegates of the First Church, York, S. C., and also some suggestions as to how we can best use these women by enabling them to pass on to their sisters the wonderful vision and practical help they have received at these conferences.

The Arkansas Synodical will meet in the First Church, Little Rock, Ark., on the 18-19-20 of November.

As a Delegate Saw the Tuscaloosa Conference—Dear Mrs. McIver: When I was notified by Mrs. J. T. Johnson, of this place, that I was your Presbyterian Delegate to the Fourth Annual Tuscaloosa Conference, I was surprised yet delighted, though I feared that I could not represent the Fayetteville Presbyterian as it deserved. I did not know what to do nor what was expected; however, I knew how to work, so I took courage and decided to go and do with my might "whatsoever my hands found to do." I arrived at Tuscaloosa Sunday morning at 2:30. I was very sorry to miss the "Get Acquainted Social," Saturday night, but I could not help it. I resolved, God willing, not to let anything else go by.

We had a lively Sunday School and an inspiring and informing sermon by Rev. Paul Moore, from Matt. 5:41. Our vesper services on Stillman lawn at 4 p. m. were conducted by that godly woman, Mrs. W. C. Winsborough, who took for her subject the book of Esther and extracted her golden points from Esther 4:13-14. Mrs. Winsborough encouraged us to continue to work and pray for our people, as did Esther, and believe as she did, and in God's own time and way the answer will come. At 8 o'clock p. m. we found ourselves again in Salem Church, where this morning we were instructed and energized. This last public service of the second day of the conference opened with an uplifting song service led by Prof. B. H. Barnes and closed with an address by Dean Imes, Bible Training Department, Tuskegee. The address was brimful of information about and praise and hope for the negro race. The speaker sketched our soldier boys from the time they were called to the signing of the armistice, and, according to the approved records of the United States for physical and mental strength, spiritual and moral life, and loyalty to the government, they were second to none. At the close of this Lord's day I just felt that if I got no more of the conference, I had enough inspiration for my God, my country, and humanity, with which to go through life.

Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday mornings, 9 o'clock found us in the class room ready for work. Devotional services and the preliminary remarks being over, we were taught one way to read the Bible by Mrs. Winsborough; and I venture to say that every member of the conference is more in love with the Bible and will hereafter gain more knowledge from its study.

The Practical Lessons in Nursing, taught by Mrs. M. H. Bright, of Tuskegee Institute, will be very helpful and beneficial to us. I am sure that should the Spanish influenza epidemic, or any other disease affecting the whole people, break out, it will be met by more efficient fighters from our race than before.

The talks by Mrs. D. D. Little, of Columbia, Tenn., were thoughtful. She pleaded with us as leaders of women to set the pace and others will follow.

Mrs. Wells Henderson, State Agent for Alabama, said make efforts to have better homes, better schools, better farms, and better everything, and so doing we will raise the tone of our people.

Mrs. W. E. Hinds, of Auburn, Ala., pictured to us very graphically some of the Bible homes: (1) The First Home, Genesis 1:27; (2) Home of Envy and Jealousy, Genesis 24:12-14; (3) Home of Companionship and Service, Luke 18:38-42; (4) A Home of Instruction, Acts 16:3; (5) A Home of Faith.

The sewing classes conducted by Miss Edith Graming, who was assisted by Mrs. W. H. Shepherd, both of Louisville, Ky., will be of practical benefit to us in our homes.

The playground demonstration, as conducted by Mrs. Roberts, of Tuskegee, were enjoyed not only by the children of the city but by the conference as a whole; many of them took part in the games.

Mrs. Winsborough, in her closing words, expressed her delight at such a full delegation of such representative women. She said that she was pleased with the women of the conference and she believed that with so many women working together for the uplift and betterment of the race that the Lord would surely answer the call and help the races to better understand each other. It was the consensus of opinion of those who were in position to know, that this fourth conference was the very best that had been held. There were 75 delegates from 11 States; 59 towns were represented and eight religious denominations. Alabama, the conference State, led the delegation with 16, and North Carolina, with two States between, followed with 12 delegates. Eleven members of the conference were wives of ministers, and three of them were from North Carolina.

I thank the Fayetteville Presbyterian for the honor it conferred upon me in making me a member of the Fourth Annual Tuscaloosa Conference, which with the previous conferences, has done so much for the uplift of my race; and whose future is bright for the continuance of the well begun work. Mrs. W. C. Winsborough says that we may expect at least two conferences next year: one at Tuscaloosa, Ala., and one at Christianburg, W. Va. The conference has informed me, inspired me, energized me, and better prepared me to work for my people—knowing (as I have believed and taught) that the good white women of the South are with us for the better things for which we are now pledged under their guidance, namely: better homes, better schools, better churches, justice in the courts, and fair play everywhere and in everything.

D. V.—I shall attempt to put in practice the teachings of the conference, and to organize a Negro Woman's Bible and Community Club.

Aberdeen, N. C.

Martha Rankin.

"Dr. Ogden and the Laymen."

(Continued from page 9)

On the other hand, Federation looks forward to the future, and ecclesiastical statesmen, for generations, have seen that the method of realizing the unity of the Church was through the Federal principle. Dr. Ogden himself, in advocating provincial Assemblies, is looking somewhat in this direction. Forward-looking men will not look back to consolidation, but forward to federation. In this respect they will agree with the greatest ecclesiastical statesmen of the past and present.

Our wise elders will study Calvin, Thornwell, Peck, Webb and Moore, the really enlightened leaders of the Church, who look forward to Union along the line of the Federal principle. They have all affirmed that there are only two methods of realizing ecclesiastical unity: the one through the papacy, the other through representation and federation.

The Teacher Training Class in the Country Church.

By Rev. R. W. Culbertson.

Until 10 or 12 years ago the writer had believed such a class to be impracticable in the country. But seeing the need and desirability of it for an efficient Sunday School, he decided to make the attempt. The result has been a success beyond all expectation. The plan we have adopted is this: Securing invitations from a number of families, we meet from house to house in private homes. This gives the advantage of greater hospitality, more sociability and less formality. Besides the Bible study there are devotional exercises and the pleasant social intermingling of young and old. Starting with the idea of teacher training, the meetings soon grew into a general Bible study, with the Sunday School lesson forming the basis. Lecturing upon the lesson is only practiced as a last resort. Questions are asked, and when one member has answered, passed on to another and another still, thus drawing out the ideas of different persons. If differences of opinion are expressed, so much the better, as that only arouses interest and leads to a more thorough study of the matter under discussion. But the method of supreme importance is for the leader not to ask the questions himself, but to get the members of the class to ask them. And the number and promptness and character of the questions put to him may be taken as a gauge of the success of the meeting. No questions except those of minor importance are answered at once by the leader. Every important question is passed on to various members of the class for their opinions, and then taken "in soak" till the next meeting, giving each one time and stimulus to study up and form a mature opinion upon the subject. At the next meeting these carried over questions are answered by the leader, and reasons given for the answer.

Many unexpected questions are sprung, and many new lines of thought are opened up in this way, and interest in the Sunday School lesson is stimulated. At the close, each member is called upon to give at least one practical lesson to be learned from the text.

Young and old attend, and not only present but prospective teachers are being trained.

At the close of the exercises a pleasant hour (or half-hour) of social intercourse follows, frequently spent in the singing of Sunday School songs. In the warm summer evenings, we sometimes hold our gatherings upon the veranda, thus making it really an out-of-doors meeting.

This is the most delightful and I sincerely believe the most fruitful work I have ever attempted in my ministry. And I wish heartily to commend the plan to other brethren who are laboring in country fields.

Assembly's Home Missions--the November Offering.

THE General Assembly in estimating the needs of the Executive Committees, placed the minimum requirements of its Home Mission work for the year 1919-1920 at $570,000.

Many churches endeavored to make provision for the Assembly's Home Missions in the Three and a Half Million Campaign, but in many instances the Assembly's schedule of percentages was not followed in the distribution of the funds, and the Home Mission Committee is not receiving its proportionate part of the amount subscribed in the Every Member Canvass.

Some churches did not make the canvass in March, and consequently will not have a share in this fundamental work unless an offering is made in November, the month assigned by the Assembly for contributions to this cause.

There was never a time in the history of our country when the work of Home Missions was so necessary and so compelling in its importance. Everywhere there is discord and discontent. Restlessness and lawlessness abound. The basic need is the religion of Jesus. Home Missions is simply the task of making and keeping America Christian, through the agency of the church, the school and the home. It is no small undertaking, though we have been working at it in a small way. We must now attempt it in a large way if we are to hold the line against the forces of evil and all that is false in our civilization.

We are living in a new day, and the Home Mission enterprise can no longer be maintained on the old standard. The cost of living has doubled in the past five years. While industrial worker are demanding and receiving wages commensurate with present prices, many of the Church's faithful servants are still laboring on the pre-war basis. This is an injustice which a grateful and generous church should remedy without delay.

Our missions must be equipped in keeping with the times in which we live. At many places larger and better buildings are imperative if our Church is to meet the needs of the communities in which they are placed.

At almost every meeting of the committee there are urgent appeals for appropriations for new work in growing centers where the opportunity, unless accepted now, will pass never to return.

A new hour has struck for the Church in America. It is given to our nation not only to influence, but largely to determine the destiny of the human race. It is the fixed judgment of mission leaders everywhere that the Church in America is the hope of the world, and that the Church can not project a program equal to the world's need unless the advance is sustained by an adequate home base.

The committee would appeal to our pastors and sessions, to the churches that have made the canvass, and to those that have not, to remember the needs of our Home Mission work and give an opportunity for a voluntary offering for this fundamental cause in November.

All contributions will be credited to the $570,000 apportioned to the Assembly's Home Missions this year in the Presbyterian Progressive Program.

Executive Committee of Home Missions,
A. N. Sharp, Treasurer.

1522 Hurt Bld., Atlanta, Ga.

Go through the world, try, prove, prefer, reject,
For so I live, you see;
Still struggling to effect
My warfare; happy that I can
Be crossed and thwarted as a man,
Not left in God's contempt apart,
With ghastly smooth life, dead at heart,
Thank God, no Paradise stands barred
To entry, and I find it hard
To be a Christian, as I said.

—Selected.

Educational

Elsie High School—We are enjoying one of the most prosperous years we have ever known and with the help of the Presbyterians all over Fayetteville Presbytery there is no reason why this shall not be the best school in the Presbytery. Even the pupils seem to have caught the spirit and their conduct in school and out is of the best and they appear to realize that NOW is the time to take advantage of their golden opportunities which once passed will never come again.

On Wednesday afternoon October 1, about 65 members of Fayetteville Presbytery who were holding the regular Fall meeting of Presbytery at Jackson Springs came over in cars to make us a visit. We appreciate the interest these men took in coming so far to visit our school and trust that their prayers and interest in our work may be strengthened and that they may go back to their Churches with renewed determination to present our cause to their people and soon have things in the very best condition here for us to do the work we are trying so hard to do.

We are planning several entertainments for the year the first of which will be given on Saturday night, October 11, by Miss McNemar of Keyser, W. Va. Miss McNemar comes well recommended and we are looking for an unusual treat. Other entertainments will be given in the near future.

In some manner our invitation to the ministers to come here at least once during the school year and give a lecture or sermon to the entire student body and community was overlooked. However, we feel that there is not a minister in Fayetteville Presbytery who will not consider it a pleasure as well as a duty to come here at least once during the school year and talk to the pupils. Please accept this as a personal invitation and write us immediately what date will be the best for you to come stating a second time in case there may be some other speaker here for that time. Your endeavors will be greatly appreciated.

W. C. McColl, Principal,
Hemp, N. C.

Davidson—Rev. A. C. Ormond, with Assembly's Committee in their work of raising endowment funds for Church colleges and schools in the Carolinas, and whose family resides at Davidson, though a frequent visitor to the college and often invited to preach here, has never occupied Dr. Richards' pulpit until the Sunday just passed. He preached Sunday morning an unusually fine sermon, delighting a very large congregation and causing the people, students and all, to hope that he will accept some more invitations while his family continues at Davidson.

As a matter of fact it may appear that this correspondent is given to the use of superlatives in telling of sermons preached by various ministers at Davidson, but it is to be noted that not many men who preach before four hundred students are likely to select any but their best sermons, and the Davidson congregation doubtless gets the cream of their sermonic work. If it does not, then the Presbyterian Church, South, has a great number of really fine preachers.

The Montreat Normal School—The Montreat Normal School, founded some years ago by order of the General Assembly, opened on September 10 with a large number of students. Among the student body are many whose attention has been first attracted to the school by the superb conditions of location and climate, circumstances which will be more and more apparent to fathers and mothers who must consider health of body as well as of mind.

The various departments, academic, junior college, pedagogical, and domestic science, are in the hands of a strong faculty and are being eagerly applied for.

Ideal conditions of climate and scenery and excellent educational advantages at a moderate cost are rapidly placing the Montreat Normal in a position of conspicuous usefulness and repute in the eyes of our Church.

Texas Presbyterian College, Milford, Texas.—This school opened September 24, with the largest enrollment since the beginning of the European war and pupils are still registering.

The school maintains an Academy and a standard College course. Over 50 per cent of the enrollment this year are in the college department. The Freshman class numbering nearly forty.

Twenty-five thousand dollars have been added to the endowment since the close of school last June and the school is expecting its quota from the million dollar drive now on in the Synod of Texas. This will be used in the erection of a modern school building and addition to the endowment.

The school has been classed a standard college by the State Department of Education and the State College Association and is under the direct control of the Synod of Texas which carefully supervises the character of its teachers and their teaching. In the midst of the infidelity taught in the schools not under Church control, the Board of Trustees of this school deems it the most essential fact of this school that its teaching is thoroughly scriptural and parents may feel confident that their daughters will receive a Christian education in T. P. C.

IDA'S HALLOWE'EN.

(Continued from page 21)

and Uncle John, and Cousin Jack, and herself.

When they sat down to supper there right in front of Ida's place at the table was the cake Aunt Martha had baked that morning, all frosted, and with eight tiny candles burning upon it.

"How did you know it was my birthday?" gasped Ida, her face all aglow with delightful surprise.

Later, when Ida had cut the cake, and Miss Warren, who sat beside her, had helped everyone to a generous piece, Ida was amazed to find a lovely gold ring, such as she had wanted for ever so long, and which fitted her perfectly, in her piece of cake. It seemed very strange things could happen on Hallowe'en.

Then Aunt Martha told them to each lift up the nearest shock of corn and take what was beneath it, which proved to be a large gilded English walnut shell, inside on a slip of paper was written a Hallowe'en fortune,—a good wish for every one.

After the fortunes had all been read, Uncle John took the pumpkin Jack o' Lantern, and set it before Ida, telling her to look inside and see what it contained.

Inside she found a box of paints, a pretty handkerchief and a bottle of perfume—all birthday gifts.

After that all the lights were put out except the candles in the Jack-o'-lanterns, and the older people told stories of Hallowe'en parties which they had attended when they were young, and the funny pranks they had played.

"I shall never forget that Hallowe'en comes the same day as my birthday," sighed Ida in happy content, when the birthday party was over.—Effie Stevens, in The Child's Hour.

NEW SONG BOOKS

Evangelists and Churches Attention.

A wonderful value; 83 familiar songs of the Gospel, words and music. Used all over the world. Only $8 per hundred, less quantities 10c each, for No. 1 or 2, round or shaped notes. No. 1 and 2 combined, round notes only, $15 per hundred, less quantities 18c each. Bound in cloth. Sample copy 75c. Money back if not pleased.

E. A. K. HACKETT, Dept. No. 2, FT. WAYNE, IND.

8c

Miscellaneous

THE PROSPEROUS LOOKING RANCHMAN.

Visitors at the Cheyenne "Frontier Days" last week were particularly struck with the fine appearance of a tall, broad-shouldered, splendidly-set-up man who was dressed in "chaps," a broad-brimmed Stetson, high-heeled boots and who otherwise looked the part of the wealthy cattleman down to the last details.

"There," remarked many an easterner, "is your typical western cowman—a fair sample of the 'old west' that is vanishing so fast. I'll bet he can write his check for at least a million dollars, and that he owns more cattle than Armour & Co. could slaughter in a whole day." The impressive stranger mingled ceaselessly with cowpunchers and ranchmen and everywhere he went was the object of admiring glances. His strong, heavily-tanned face attracted comment from both men and women.

On the last day of the show a prosperous looking man and his wife approached the stalwart person in the ranchman's garb and said:

"Excuse me, sir. I'm from New York. My wife and I have been admiring you for two days, and we just want to shake hands with a real cowboy—we believe you are the most typical westerner we have ever seen."

The man in the broad-brimmed hat and the "chaps" was courteous and affable.

"Where is your ranch?" inquired the New Yorker.

"Oh—down in Colorado," replied the other, casually, "down in Estes Park."

A few minutes later the New Yorker met a man who knew the tall stranger in the cowpuncher's garb. He inquired about the ranchman.

"Ranchman?" smiled the informer. "Well—he does own enough land to make a ranch. But it's mostly cottage sites down here adjoining the Rocky Mountain National Park. That's the Rev. John Timothy Stone, pastor of Fourth Presbyterian church of Chicago."

WONDERFUL EGG PRODUCER.

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs," and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs, so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 3257 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1.00 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the tonic costs you nothing. Send a dollar today. Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

Cancer Treated Successfully at the Kellam Hospital

The record of Kellam Hospital is without parallel in history, having restored, without the use of the Knife, Acids, X-Ray or Radium, over ninety per cent. of the many hundreds of sufferers from cancer which it has treated during the past twenty-two years. We want every man and woman in the United States to know what we are doing.

KELLAM HOSPITAL, 1617 W. Main St., Richmond, Va.

Prepare For a Larger Income

Modern business requires trained men and women. You can earn a much larger salary and be assured always of a good paying position if you take Draughton's standard business courses. Write today for full information.

Draughton's Practical Business College, Knoxville, Tenn. Jacksonville, Fla.

Soil Test Free

Litmus papers to show if land is sour will be mailed free. If land is sour, use

RELCO MARL

It sweetens the soil, frees the plant foods, increases the yield, costs little, lasts 5 years. Guaranteed 90% Lime Carbonate. For prices, free test papers and literature, address Dept. 8-E, Roanoke Lime Co., Inc., Roanoke, Va.

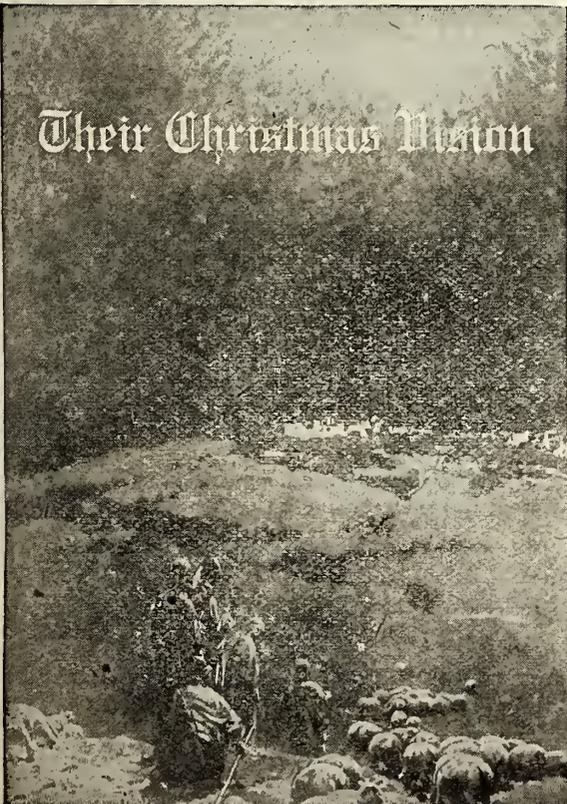

Your Fall Suit

is at Berry's. For 40 years we've been selling the leading North Carolina families men's and boys' clothing. We know your wants and your tastes.

☛ Samples Upon Request.

O. H. Berry & Co.
ESTABLISHED 1879

MAIN AT ELEVENTH RICHMOND, VA.

"Their Christmas Vision"

This is the title of a program prepared by the Executive Committee for use in the churches and Sunday Schools of the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

It is attractive in appearance. Interesting and instructive in material. Makes a strong appeal for the dedication of life to the service of Christ and His Church.

Its use will help carry out the Presbyterian Progressive Program.

It will be sent in sufficient quantities for use in any of the Presbyterian churches and Sunday Schools, free of cost.

Order now. Begin to prepare for the service, December 21, 1919—the day appointed by the General Assembly.

Order from the Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, Henry H. Sweets, Secretary, 410 Urban Building, Louisville, Ky.

WOMEN IN POLITICS.

What effect the entry of the political woman will have upon the legislatures themselves is not easy to say, because what we know of the female temperament does not necessarily apply to the political woman. The comic papers in England like to make jokes about female members of parliament, to print cartoons where they are shown doing fancy-work or powdering their noses during debates. I do not think that the women legislators will be as representative as all that, and I chronicle with regret the view that they will seldom powder their noses. No, the woman will not become a legislator unless she has some verile quality. She will approximate to man, but I think her influence in Congress will be rather different; she will probably impart, as did Miss Rankin, a certain emotional atmosphere, which I for one think valuable in assemblies always a little inhuman. As regards the question that interests the public more—namely, her influence on the moral tone of politics, this will depend upon the politics she finds herself in. The woman legislator will be influenced by the nature of her temptation, and I think she will best resist the temptation of money. The type of woman who is interested in politics does not, as a rule, care for money, either because she belongs to the laboring class and has few desires, or because she belongs to the rich class. In England we don't bribe people; we make them rich first, and, as Anatole France says, the rich exhibit over the poor this moral superiority, that they neither beg in the street nor steal bread.

But where her weakness may lie is probably in the direction of honors and of power. For thousands of years we have so much encouraged woman's vanity that self-exaltation has in many become a habit; I am credibly told that a large proportion of the titles which have showered from the Lloyd-George government as water from a leaky bath, have been accepted by men because their wives wanted to be Lady X. And, whereas, it is becoming an act of good form to refuse the Order of the British Empire, I hear of no woman who has declined to be made a Dame. As to power, I have, during this war, seen women in minor positions controlling nurses, directing wages, even running filing-rooms, and always filled with a bitter delight in controlling other women. From that point of view the woman legislator will be corruptible; she will expose you if you offer her a hundred thousand dollars, but if you offer her a sub-deputy-assistant-directorship, she may very well vote for you.—W. L. George, in Harper's Magazine.

Why should a Baptist take a Baptist paper? The Christian Index of Atlanta, Ga., offered a prize for best answer to this question given in twenty-five words. There were hundreds of answers. The following was adjudged the best:

"It dispenses kingdom news, broadens the vision, deepens one's spirituality, inspires for service, assists the pastor, kindles the missionary spirit, multiplies efficiency, and glorifies God."

These are reasons by no means limited to Baptists. They are excellent reasons to be used in connection with the campaign now in progress in the Methodist Episcopal Church to increase the circulation of the church press.—Zion's Herald.

SEVEN LANGUAGES.

The union committee at Pittsburgh sent out its call for the nationwide steel strike in seven languages. Independent steel companies in Youngstown used nine languages in calling upon their employes to remain at work.

This after years of talk about Americanization! Some among us are still talking about it. It seems barely possible that in this matter, as in many others, we have talked far too much and done far too little.

The polyglotism of the steel mill workers is more than a trifling inconvenience. Since the Tower of Babel it has been common knowledge that work can not go on successfully if the workers can not understand one another.—Christian World.

WHEN WRITING OUR ADVERTISERS
PLEASE MENTION THIS PUBLICATION

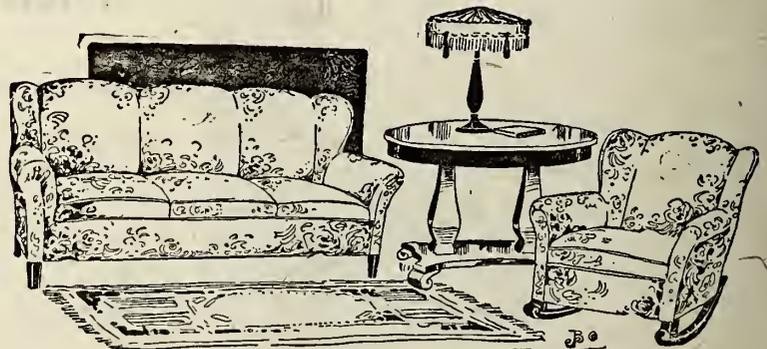

MOTHER'S ALLY.

There is always one good remedy on the family medicine shelf that mother can use in all accidents and mishaps to the members of the family. Burns, bruises, cuts, stings, boils, sores and various forms of skin eruption are quickly soothed and steadily healed with Gray's Ointment. Its constant use for a hundred years has made it a family word in every household. You should keep a box of it on your shelf for emergencies. If your druggist cannot supply you send his name to W. F. Gray & Co., 843 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn., and a liberal sample will be immediately sent you free.—Adv.

160 HENS—1500 EGGS.

Mrs. H. M. Patton, Waverly, Mo., writes: "I fed 2 boxes of 'More Eggs' and got 1500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly 21 days." This scientific tonic has made big egg profits for thousands of poultry raisers all over the U. S. It revitalizes the hens, tones them up and makes them lay all the time. Get ready now and make big profits out of your hens this winter. A $1.00 package will double the egg production and a million dollar bank guarantees to refund your money if you are not entirely satisfied. Send $1.00 now to E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, 3257 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., and get a season's supply of "More Eggs." Profit by the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

Elegant in Appearance Luxuriously Comfortable

The popular antique cane-back Living-Room Suits that we have just received are beauties, and are moderate in price—$225 to $450.

And for absolute comfort, our luxurious, over-stuffed Tapestry Suits can't be beaten.

Let us show you some living-room suits that it is a pleasure to see.

W. T. McCoy & Company
Popular Furniture—Popular Prices
CHARLOTTE, N. C.

HIS GREATEST YEAR'S WORK.

It had been a dull year in the church. The elders said to the old pastor: "We love you, pastor, but don't you think you had better resign? There hasn't been a convert this year." "Yes," he replied; "it has been a dull year—sadly dull to me. Yet I mind me that one did come, wee Bobby Moffat. But he is so wee a bairn that I suppose it is not right to count him." A few years later Bobby came to the pastor and said, "Pastor, do you think that I could ever learn to preach? I feel within here something that tells me that I ought to. If I could just lead souls to Christ, that would be happiness to me." The pastor answered, "Well, Bobby, you might; who knows? At least you can try!" He did try, and years later when Robert Moffat came back from his wonderful work in Africa, the King of England rose and uncovered in his presence, and the British Parliament stood as a mark of respect. The humble old preacher, who had but one convert, and who was so discouraged, is dead and forgotten, and yet that was the greatest year's work he ever did—and few have equaled it.—Young People's Weekly.

TOO MUCH FOR GOAT.

When the British were at Gallipoli, the Tommies objected strenuously to the odor of the horse meat brought by the Mohammedans and to the odor created by the goats that roam on the peninsula. They could stand for one odor, they told one of the commanders, but not for both. Which was to be abolished? Which odor was the worst?

So the commander ordered: "Bring me up a goat and some of the meat and I'll decide which is the worst."

A goat was brought up, and so great was the odor that the commander, strong as he was, promptly fainted.

Then they brought up a portion of the meat—and the goat fainted.

Gets 28 Eggs a Day Now, From 34 Hens

Chas. C. White, Well-Known Breeder, Tells How Costs Nothing to Try. "I gave Don Sung to 34 utility Buff Orpingtons and the egg yield increased from 7 to 28 a day. Don Sung is a wonder and I am now giving it to all my hens regularly."—Chas. C. White, Manager Cherry Hill Farm, Flackville, Ind.

Mr. White is the well known breeder and exhibitor. He wrote the above letter, in December after his test had shown a gain of 21 eggs a day from 34 hens. We will make you the same offer we made him. Here it is:

Give your hens Don Sung and watch results for one month. If you don't find that it pays for itself and pays you a good profit besides, simply tell us and your money will be refunded.

