Why Not Christians?

NO teacher has equaled Jesus in fertility of imagination. Wherever His eye rested, objects shaped themselves into illustrations. He spoke in pictures. He taught by parables. He made the people see as well as hear the truth.

One of His most striking pictures answers the question why are men not Christians. A king made a marriage feast for his son. He sent to call the guests and they would not come. Strange behaviour surely for subjects honored by this king with an invitation to the marriage of his son. It seems incredible. There must be some mistake. The king treats the matter as a mistake, or misunderstanding. He does not upbraid or censure. But he sends forth other servants with a more urgent message. The invited guests behave worse than before. Some treat the message lightly and hurry away to their business. Others become angry, mistreat and slay the servants.

Never since the world began has such a thing happened. Subjects have disliked their king, and risen in revolt against him. But these subjects are not revolting. They are merely using the occasion when the king does them an honor to fling a gratuitous insult in his face.

This is parable, not history. No such history was ever written. No earthly king was ever treated after this fashion. But the kingdom of heaven is like this. The Divine King has been treated after this fashion. He prepared a marriage feast for His Son. He sent forth His invitations and had them rejected. He sent forth other servants to urge the invited guests to come, and they have made light of the invitation, and in some cases killed the servants. All of the Apostles but one suffered violent deaths. Thousands of God's messengers since that day have suffered martyrdom for no other crime than that of pleading with men to be reconciled to God.

No reason is assigned in the parable for the rejection of the invitation. It is not necessary to assign a reason. The only conceivable reason is on the face of the story. They did not go to the wedding because they did not want to go. And they did not want to go because they did not love the king. They were not willing to come into fellowship with him, and play the part that a friendly relation demanded.

Many reasons are given why men are not Christians, why the majority of men in these United States are not Christians. One popular and much vaunted reason is the sad defection of the Church. Some prominent Christian writers concede the force of this reason. They reproach the Church, and excuse those who refuse its ministrations.

We are not concerned to defend the Church. It needs no defense in this matter. It is made up of sinners. God intended it for sinners. He does not expect it to be perfect. If men wish to find fault, there will always be faults for them to find. But their fault-finding is merely a pretext.

The reason men are not Christians is because they do not love God. This is the one sole reason. They do not want to come into fellowship with God, and live up to the demands which that fellowship would make on them. It is an awful state of things, a distressing state of things, but it is the real state of things,—men do not love God. The language of their heart is: "Depart from us, O God, for we desire not a knowledge of Thy ways."

Men do not love anything closely associated with God. They do not love anything with God's label on it. They do not love God's day. They will not remember the Sabbath to keep it holy, but they ruthlessly destroy its sanctity. They do not love God's Word. They will not read it, nor be guided by its precepts, and are perfectly willing that its authority should be undermined. They do not love God's house. They may enter it, if there is the promise of being entertained by eloquence or music, but for the purpose of worship, never.

The friends of the Church may well lament its defects and should strive unremittingly to remedy them. But they should never parade the Church's shortcomings, and encourage sinners to screen themselves behind these. The best way to show a Christian interest in the sinner who is rejecting Christ is to make him face that fact that the one only reason for his doing this is that he does not love God. "He that despiseth me despiseth Him that sent me."

Death of Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D. D.

We doubt whether any minister of any denomination was more widely known all over the world than Dr. Chapman, so that when the wires carried to every country that this beloved brother was no more, the joys of Christmastide were saddened by sorrow for this man who had meant so much to men of every country.

On December 25 Dr. Chapman died at a sanitarium in New York City, following an operation on Monday for gallstones, being the third for the same trouble in the last two years. Mrs. Chapman was at his bedside when the end came.

Dr. Chapman was born in Richmond, Ind., June 17, 1859, the son of Alexander Hamilton and Lorinda McWhinney Chapman, and was graduated with the A.B. degree from Lake Forest (Ill.) University in 1879, and the Lane Theological Seminary in 1882. In the same year he was ordained in the Presbyterian ministry.

Dr. Chapman made one tour of the world and later, on a second trip, spent considerable time in Australia and Japan. In 1917 Dr. Chapman was elected moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, and held the post until May of the present year.

About three years ago he conducted a revival service in this city, which lasted many weeks, and whose influence reached to the surrounding country and towns, and whose lasting effects as shown in renewed lives still testify to the excellence of his work.

As an evangelist he stood in a class to himself. Gifted with a voice of marvelous penetration and sweetness, he could reach every ear in any auditorium without any apparent effort. His soft eyes and sweet smile, reinforced by his appealing voice, swayed audiences at his will, and touched hearts that were hardened by sin and encased in doubts.

There was nothing spectacular about his preaching. As oratory is generally understood, he was no orator. His style was by no means ornate, but it was a style that carried his meaning on the face of the words.

Out of a wide experience in both continents he proved what the Gospel could do, and as men heard, they took heart and turned to Christ.

Though a member of the Northern Church, he loved the Southern Church and was in full sympathy with our views as to the spiritual mission of the Church, and throughout the South hearts are sad as they realize that our friend is no more.

Thousands in our own land and abroad owe their conversion, humanly speaking, to him, because he earnestly preached the tremendous truths of the Gospel with the tremendous force of a godly life.

The President and the Pope.

It has been reported in the secular press more than once that President Wilson intends to pay a visit to the Pope when he goes to Italy.

Experience should have warned our brethren of the religious press that every wandering rumor in the daily papers must not be taken at its face value, and experience should also teach these same editors, since the rumor has proved to be true, that our President, when he once makes up his mind to take a step, does not confer with flesh and blood, but does what he thinks advisable and right.

However, our brethren are working up themselves over this supposed step, and are in a measure undermining the confidence of the people in the President, at a time when he needs the loyal support of his friends in view of the fierce attacks made upon him by his enemies.

If we had the decision of this question we would advise strongly against it, but as we have not, nor are we or any of our brethren likely to have, we propose to look at it calmly and without prejudice.

In the first place, we should remember that the President possesses knowledge of facts requiring some action on his part, which if we knew, would make us commend rather than condemn his course.

Again, let us remember that the Pope claims temporal as well as spiritual power, and that such claims are recognized by thousands of his adherents over the world.

In this country, for example, the Roman Catholics constitute a large part of our citizenship. They own allegiance to the Pope, yet that allegiance did not keep them from following America into the war, though their spiritual ruler inclined to the German side of the struggle.

Mr. Wilson may reason that if these people fought for the Government and poured out their money in its support and also for the comfort of our boys at the front, then he ought to show some recognition of it by honoring their spiritual head.

Our boys at the front who have been for months on the firing line and who have lived face to face with death, amid the mangled and dying, tell us that at such times Jew and Gentile, Romanist and Protestant, unite in serving them without regard to religious differences.

If such be the case, may not Mr. Wilson's visit to the Pope be more an expression of his appreciation of their sacrifices and services in the war than any recognition of the Pope's supremacy as a Civil Ruler? The more we study the effects of the war, the more are we convinced that we must change our viewpoint.

We have never accepted the wild talk about the radical changes in the views of our men when they come home, but we are convinced that you will never persuade these men to regard Romanism as they once did, especially if Rome through her children has cared for them on the field of battle, ministered to their wants in the hospital and helped them to banish homesickness in the Knights of Columbus huts.

Let us be careful lest in insisting upon the old-time view, we may alienate them from our church.

Christianity Then and Now.

(Toledo Blade)

When the crusaders under Godfrey de Bouillon stormed Jerusalem they beheaded numbers of Saracens, forced others to jump from towers, tortured and slowly burned many more. Piles of heads, hands and feet littered the streets. In the temple of Solomon the knights of the cross rode up to their horses' knees in blood.

The judgment of their time pronounced the deliverers of the Holy Sepulchre to be "perfect Christian gentlemen."

General Allenby, representing the Christianity of 800 years later, enters Jerusalem on foot, places a guard to protect the mosque of Omar from damage and feeds the starving population as his most important task after securing the fruits of victory. Only by looking down a long perspective of years can the world's moral growth be appreciated.

The foregoing is offered to those who are always sighing for the "good old times," and also to a certain class of pessimists who find comfort in their belief that the world is on the down grade. "The darkest hour is just before dawn," and they think conditions are already bad enough to presage the near approach of the millennium.

Relief in the Near East.

The pen pictures of human sufferings have been so many and so vivid that we have in a measure become hardened to them. Not only do they come from the field of battle, but from Belgium and France, and from Armenia and other places where the devil has had full sway.

Now the danger is that we exhaust our sympathies in words and fail to act. The American Committee for Relief in the Near East will during the week January 12 to 19, begin a campaign to raise $30,000,000. There are 3,950,000 destitute refugees, mainly in exile, and if we are to save them from death we must act at once. They must be brought back and re-established in homes, and supplied with food and clothing till they can become self-supporting.

The people of this country have always responded to these calls, and we believe that they will do so in this case, but if we are to sustain our reputation, we must not depend upon our neighbor acting, but begin in our own home. One of the blessings of the awful war through which the world has just passed has been to make men realize that no man liveth to himself and no man dieth to himself, but that whatever touched the interests of men in one country also affected the interests of those in other countries. We vainly imagined that being so far from the scene of battle, we could live in selfish isolation, but gradually the truth dawned upon us. We found that our prices of food varied with the prices over there, and also that our supply of food was also affected. Then we found ourselves pouring out our money in behalf of men over there, and soon after we had to give our loved ones to be offered upon the altar of battle.

Now that the war is over, we must remember that this same community of interests still obtains, and that we cannot live to ourselves.

Those starving women and children look to us, and unless we are false to our profession of the brotherhood of man, we are going to help them.

The desire to erect monuments to our dead is natural, but at the Great Assize we do not wish to face those of the far East who starved to death, and hear them say, "We asked you for bread, and you gave others stones."

The Death of Hugh Miley.

The many friends of Dr. W. H. Miley, of Davidson, N. C., and General Assembly Evangelist, will learn with deep sympathy of the death of his oldest son, who was killed in a railway wreck in France, about ten days after his arrival overseas. He was about 24 years of age, and had been trained in camp near Louisville, Ky.

To give up our sons in battle has been the compensation that they died for their country, and to die on the way to the front in a railway wreck is as much an offering of one's life for his country, as if shot down at the front.

What makes this blow peculiarly sad is the fact that it occurred a couple of weeks before the end of the war.

Those of us who for nearly a year have lived expecting the same tidings can sympathize with our brother as few can.

Church and Y. M. C. A.

By Rev. L. T. Wilds, Jr.

THE writer is a minister in the Presbyterian Church, who has been engaged in Army Y. M. C. A. work for some months. In this camp three-fourths of the religious secretaries are Presbyterian ministers.

There are some ministers in our Church who have had no experience in Army Y. M. C. A. work who have been inclined to an antagonistic spirit towards this work. There is no ground for such a spirit, for the Army Y. M. C. A. has manifested a spirit of loyalty to the Church in many ways.

It has sought, not only to bring men to a decision for Christ, but also to a decision for the Church. Thousands of men will return home communicating members who were not such when they came into the army—this through the endeavors of the Army Y. M. C. A. to this end.

It will bind the returning soldier to the church as never before if he is properly informed of the fact that the church gave him the Army Y. M. C. A., the men and the money—that it has ministered to him while in the army through the Y. M. C. A., that it has been the arms of the church about him. The Y. M. C. A. has a powerful hold upon the men in the camps. As to criticisms of the Army Y. M. C. A. service, we offer only one answer—Ask the men! Now this hold of the Y. M. C. A. can be transferred to the church if the returning soldier is informed that the Y. M. C. A. is the gift of the church. But he must be so informed, for he will not think of it himself. It is for the ministers yet in the service so to inform him, and some of them are doing it. And the minister back home must so inform him when he returns.

It is making an earnest effort to recruit for the ministry of the church, Foreign Missions included, from among the thousands of men who are confronted with the question, What shall I do when I return to civil life? Conferences of secretaries are being held throughout the camps of the country with this specific purpose of recruiting for the ministry, and literature is being distributed which presents to the men the claims of the Gospel ministry. But the minister at home must make his earnest effort to enlist the returning men in the Gospel ministry, and he should be encouraged to do so by the fact that many of the men are giving it serious consideration.

A Happy New Year to You.

New mercies, new blessings, new light on thy way,
New courage, new hope, and new strength for each day;
New notes of thanksgiving, new chords of delight;
New praises in the morning, new songs in the night;
New wine in thy chalice, new altars to raise;
New fruits for thy Master, new garments of praise;
New gifts from His treasures, new smiles from His face;
New streams from the fountains of infinite grace.
New stars for the crown, and new tokens of love;
New gleams of the glory that awaits thee above;
New light of His countenance, full and unpriced—
All these be the joy of the new life in Christ.

—Frances Ridley Havergale.

“To live well in the quiet routine of life; to fill a little space because God wills it; to go on cheerfully with a petty round of little duties, little avocations; to smile for the joys of others when the heart is aching—who does this, his works will follow him. He may not be a hero to the world; but he is one of God’s heroes.”

A New Year's Greeting

By Rev. W. H. Miley, D.D.

To our Ministers and Church we are offering this New Year's greeting, with gratitude for God's blessing on the efforts of our Evangelists, Pastors and Churches, in the field of Evangelism the past year. The interest manifested and the large accessions on faith were cheering beyond measure. May a similar interest and increase mark this year.

Certain things seem clear to us as we think of the work before us. The message suggested by last year's experience is that of:

First. The value of Evangelistic Conferences for information, inspiration, systematizing of effort, and larger effectiveness in winning men to Christ.

Second. The duty and privilege of evangelistic preaching, especially by the pastor in his own pulpit, and the value of simultaneous meetings for cities and communities, when rightly organized and led, has been freely proven.

Third. The value of personal evangelism by pastor and laymen man to man, woman to woman, in personal effort to lead them to Christ.

Fourth. Parental evangelism. The supreme privilege and duty of parents by example, precept and prayer, to lead their children to Christ.

Fifth. The Sunday School as a field of special opportunities for evangelism. In every Sunday School two things are possible and essential, an interest in the spiritual life, and an opportunity to express that interest.

Sixth. The need of our non-productive fields. Many of these have not reported a convert in several years. A special effort will transfer many to the list of productive churches before the close of this fiscal year.

Seventh. Careful conservation of forces by persistent effort to locate and put into active service every non-resident member. Here is a tremendous leakage that should be checked.

Please accept as a part of our message the sincere and prayerful wish for yourself and the work committed to your care, that this year may be one of unusual fruitfulness.

“Little Whiteface and His Brownie Friends.”

I appreciate the kind notice of the little “Whiteface” book that appeared in a recent issue of the Standard, but please correct a mistake in it, due to my not making the following explanation sooner:

Our baby was not the first baby born at Luebo. A number of years before we reached there, Dr. and Mrs. Synder's little girl was born there. However, our baby was the first one seen by many of the natives.

Although some of the photographs are personal to those who know us, of course (because it was impossible to secure others suitable for illustrating the little book without great expense and delay) “Little Whiteface” was only written to show forth the good accomplished by every little missionary baby born on the field (as well as primarily to interest our young folks in mission work).

The pen pictures were centered around our little boy because we realize that a child—any little child, can perhaps better than others, lead one's interest to far-away subjects (which need a very live connecting link). This was the reason, rather than any other (as the appeal is made primarily to other “Little Whitefaces”) for the selection of the very impersonal title for the booklet, and not because the name “Little Whiteface” is the one usually applied to foreign children by our Congo natives. “B. Martin.”

Making Morale

By Rev. F. M. Hawley, S.T.D.

MILITARY leaders seem confidently to expect at least a ten per cent increase in fighting power among soldiers who have come under the influence of morale-making institutions. It has been estimated, by one of the greatest leaders among the Allies, that among the forces making for victory only one-fourth is material, the other three-fourths being spiritual. A wonderful argument, in support of the church, may be based on these opinions and estimates.

Dr. John R. Mott frankly argues that popular and adequate support of morale-making agencies is a benefit to the people at home as well as to the men in the army and navy. It deepens interest in the cause for which the men are fighting; unites folks in a common cause; generates an atmosphere of co-operation; promotes solidarity in bringing out the good in all; cultivates the spirit of fraternity and brotherhood, in leading to the aid of Allies in the same cause. We might add that it has a helpful influence on those who are in the ranks of the enemy, in that it tends to manifest the righteousness of the cause being fought for, especially when an opportunity is given for these agencies to minister to the needs of enemies. In all this we have a beautiful illustration of the real spirit and life of Christianity. In its manifestation America has been the world's leader and teacher.

Home Missions Such an Agency.

The wonderful things prophesied for and expected of our country can never be realized without the spirit, work, life and influence of Christianity. Our national ideals, as stated to all the world, are those growing out of an experimental knowledge of the Christ-life. Our purposes, as published forth far and near, are those suggested by the "golden rule." Our motives, as set forth before all beholders, are those which find their source in the law of love and service. Our gifts, as freely offered to the needy and oppressed of many lands, are made in the spirit of the "good samaritan." We dare not fail in these splendid matters. We must not slacken our pace in perfecting these worthy undertakings. We are called upon, by every human need and every possibility of righteous life, to lead out from these to the bigger services for mankind. If America is to do her full stint of work in securing liberty for all peoples, she must use her powers in an earnest endeavor to introduce them to that "liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free," since such alone is perfect freedom. This, beyond question, is the work of the church. But we will not be in very good position to give to others unless we possess the thing we offer to give. Just here Home Missions must be recognized, for we have more than 20,000,000 people in America outside the church. It is the duty and privilege of the church to make America solidly and really Christian, in order that the mission of the nation to the world may be possible, certain, speedy.

Support Merited.

Home Missions should receive such a boost as has been given, on more than one occasion, the War Work Agencies of Morale for our soldiers and sailors. The cause merits such support. This must be admitted when it is recalled that one-third of the additions to the membership of our branch of the church on profession of faith can be traced to Assembly's Home Missions. To this number add the number of additions coming through the Home Mission work of Synod and Presbytery throughout the church, and you thus account for by far the great majority of members added on profession of faith. Tack on to this purely evangelistic work the magnificent results in the seven other departments of Home Missions, and it begins to dawn upon us that the cause is big enough and compelling enough and important enough to be considered a man's job and, as such, should be supported and furnished equipment in keeping with its legitimate demands. To render the homeland strong in the qualities we hope to see developed in all peoples to whom we may minister in the name of the Master, our institutions must be the champions of Home Missions, our money must be given for support. In fact, can you think of a single good reason for not giving this cause even greater support than it has ever had?

Evangelism the Means.

To a large extent the work of Home Missions assumes the form of evangelistic effort: Strengthening the brethren; building up the waste places; going out into the byways and hedges and compelling the wayward to come to the Gospel feast of good things. Self-supporting churches and fields owe much to Home Mission committees in this matter. They do not hesitate to call for evangelists supported wholly or in part by these committees; while several evangelists, under the direction of one or another Home Mission committee, rarely, if ever, go to churches or fields which are not self-supporting. This is perfectly satisfactory, as matters now stand; it is mentioned merely to indicate how much the stronger churches and fields are indebted to Home Missions.

The most efficient use of all evangelistic forces is of paramount importance, beyond question. It goes without argument that every church court, every organization, every minister, every other officer, every member of every church should be evangelistic in spirit and practice. Were this the case, even in a limited way, self-supporting churches and fields would not have to call so often for workers, employed by Home Mission committees, to arouse interest within their bounds; but these workers could give their entire time, so far as required, to the opening of new fields, nurturing weak flocks, stimulating effort and increasing support in the places of indifference, doubt, ignorance, and recognized need of any sort. The very lack of this ideal condition is another point in the argument for the debt to Home Missions.

Presbyterial Illustration.

There is one Presbytery in the Assembly whose every active pastor has two or more churches. If the church of which the minister is pastor is able to have him for all time, as more than a half-dozen of the churches are, why the preacher is stated supply of some weak church or ministers to the people of some mission point. I do not know that the arrangement is the result of Home Mission plans; but if it turns out to be a "happen so," then it would be a glad day for the entire church to note a like "happen so" in every pastorate.

It is interesting to note that in that Presbytery the additions to the church, on profession of faith, were about ten for every active pastor last year; and this has been about the average for several years. It is also interesting to note that every field in that Presbytery, supplied at present, pays above the average salary paid our ministers, more than half the fields paying quite a little above $1,000 and manse. A half-dozen individual churches in that Presbytery pay salaries ranging from $900 to $2,200; yet every active pastor has more than one preaching point, and receives additional salary for this additional point. It may be well to note also that there would be a greater number of vacant churches than of churches regularly supplied, in that Presbytery, if it were not for the Home Mission work of the regular pastors. It pays in more ways than one to practice as well as preach Home Missions.

The growth of Home Missions, its opportunities and responsibilities as well as its inspiring results, are splendidly set forth in "The Task That Challenges," by Dr. S. L. Morris.

Memphis, Mo.

"Humility is the lowly and true estimate of self; it is acceptance of the place appointed by God, whether it be in the front or the rear; it is simple acquiescence in God's order to suffer or to act without thought of rights or of reputation. It is the emptiness of self which God fills."—Canon Barnett.

An Overseas Letter of Interest

By Maj. John W. MacConnell, M. C. U. S. A.

(We are indebted to Dr. C. R. Harding for the following letter from Dr. MacConnell, of the Davidson Faculty. Although the "war is over," people are intensely interested in what has and is still transpiring "over there," and this particular letter is so full of interesting incidents that we publish it gladly.—Ed.)

IT occurred to me that it is about time to write a Thank-giving letter to you and the other members of the faculty, for this should reach you about the time you are enjoying your turkey.

I received a New York Times today of September 10, the first American paper I've seen since August 20. In it I noticed the account of the torpedoing of the Mt. Vernon, and since that is published I may say I saw the good ship and the wounded taken from her, and further that I also saw my first action while at sea, three fights with subs, and really the naval gun fire was as pretty and exciting as one could wish for; no fear, for you felt that the destroyers and the cruiser as well as your own gunners could handle the situation, and the depth bombs made fine geysers on a smooth sea. The two torpedoes of the Hun failed to find a mark and our convoy was credited with sinking one of the bush-whackers. There were 70,000 landed the same day with us, and I never expect to see a grander sight than that big convoy of transports, flanked by destroyers, with a captive balloon up, and as we neared coast, hydroplanes circling about. To make it even finer, one clear evening at sunset we met another large convoy with as many ships as ours steaming to Gibraltar. "Could you beat it? Old Britain has her head up when it comes to shipping, and Uncle Sam is a good son following in her path.

"Rest camp" meant a long climb of three miles up a rocky slope with a heavy pack on my back and a week in a tent—rain every day, mud to your shoe tops, spent in the court yard of some barracks built by Louis XIV and Napoleon. There was no rest to it—all in quarantine on account of "flu." Then all the way across France from its extreme western tip to where the Hun stands in the east. The men traveled side door Pullman style, "40 hommes or 12 chevaux," on straw. We officers fared a bit better, being six in a small compartment together with your luggage.

Then to a big hospital center of 13,000 beds in the Valley of the Meuse. The Hopkins unit was there, also the unit from U. of Md., and I met several friends, among them Charlie Watt and C. C. Kelly, old Davidson men. That is still my station, although I am temporarily detached just now. There we could hear the guns in the Verdun sector and see the flashes on the sky at night, although we were many miles away. The Boche would send over a plane or two at night and everything was kept dark. That is one of the biggest nuisances of the whole war, this getting about in the dark. It rains a good deal, the roads will be slippery and these big heavy trucks thunder along with only a tiny blue light over one wheel. Just try to drive up to Statesville some dark rainy night without lights and take those turns on Keesler's hill this side of the town, and you will get the proper thrill, having a dozen trucks meet you on the curves.

At that station I saw my first large numbers of wounded, both ours and wounded Boche prisoners. We wait on our own men first, but give the Boche as much attention as we can later. Some are young, some middle aged, many big huskies in their little round caps and heavy boots, well fed and well clothed; don't let anyone mislead you about that—they have plenty of food and clothing and beaucoup machine guns. By the way, that word "beaucoup" will be anglicized soon sure—every private uses it. Ask him "How are you faring?" "Fine, beaucoup eats." "How is it at the front?" "Hell, beaucoup machine guns," and I am sure the word will continue to be used in the U. S. Most Germans seem glad to be captured and out of it. Of course the heavily wounded are apathetic and dull; some few are cocky, not many. When I asked one young German aviator if he had bombed any hospitals, he cried about it and said he hadn't. As a matter of fact they do—do it intentionally. No bombs have been dropped near me, but I've heard the planes go over at night and drop them further on. Let me say right here that all you have heard about the brutality of the German is not exaggerated—he is a cruel beast beyond comprehension, but the fear of God will be put into him by men like the Australians and our doughboys. This thing of shooting your men down with a machine gun as you advance and just when you rush him, saying Kamerad—is trying to one's temper. As Todd told me one of his negro sergeants said, "Lieutenant, that's a mean man."

As we were acting as an evacuating hospital, all of our surgery was done rapidly for we had to handle large numbers and get them back to permanent bases. I did general surgery there—regular line of work, amputations, debridement of these big lacerated wounds and compound fractures. We worked in teams, sometimes all night, having a midnight lunch and then carrying on, for you have to keep right at it until you clear up the convoy, as you do not know when another train comes in. You may have several trains a day; maybe none for two or three days.

I ran across Todd, of Laurens, S. C., as he was coming out of the hospital last week. He is in the 371st negro regiment who have been with the French for several months, and he has had hard service. Roddey was with them, as you know, and was wounded, as well as Potts, from Fort Mill, who is a corporal in the same regiment. Potts has been wounded several times and by chance last week I saw him as I passed the Cafe de la Paix in Paris and had a fine chat with him. He was out of the hospital for his first stroll. Funny incidents will creep into a man's thoughts in all of it, and Todd and Potts told me some good negro stories—as good as Irving Cobb's, and in fact Cobb has visited their regiment and wrote an account of it in the Saturday Evening Post.

You know I am mighty proud of those Davidson men—the whole bunch of them. They will stick in action and I would rather have a company of them than any set of men I know.

Paris is a show—you do not need to travel further to see the world. You can sit down in the sidewalk cafes and watch the world go by. Algerians, Servians, Russians, Belgians, Australians, New Zealand Maoris, Senegalese, Cochin Chinese, Canadians, Highlanders, Portugese, etc.; certainly the Central Empires undertook to whip the world. Business is brisk in Paris; it is dark at night; the bombardment seems to have done little damage. Food is about like New York in prices; sugar a bit scarce and you use bread tickets. You cannot stay in the city over 24 hours unless your orders read to that effect, and your orders are scrutinized by American M. P.'s at frequent intervals.

I am at present at Royat, in the province of Puy de Dome, and as I am not in the advanced zone I can tell where I am. I've been sent down here to assist in the influenza and pneumonia epidemic, as they were short handed and so many complications arise in disease of the upper respiratory tracts. I journeyed south through the Loire valley. My, I wish you could see this beautiful country. I can understand why the French are slow to emigrate. I've traveled now enough to see the real "La Belle France." This is a summer resort in the Auvergne mountains, the main peak Puy de Dome being in view from my window, six miles away, crowned at one point with an old temple of Mercury and at another with an observatory. The hotels here are much like those of Saratoga Springs or Atlantic City. We have eight of them leased for hospitals, big palatial places, fine gardens and fountains, marble stairways, electric elevators, fine baths, etc., places just about as expensive as Marlborough-Blenheim at Atlantic City. Quite a contrast to

The Future of Our War Work

By Rev. Jas. I. Vance, D.D.

MANY inquiries have come, since the signing of the Armistice and the commencement of demobilization, asking, "What further need has the War Work Council for funds? Is not the ending of the war the termination of the work our Church was doing for the soldiers? If so, then it is not necessary to collect the subscriptions already made to War Work or to attempt to carry on to successful completion the campaign for $100,000 so disastrously interrupted by the influenza epidemic."

Numerous letters to this effect have reached me during recent weeks, to none of which I have been able to give a satisfactory reply, because I was myself somewhat uncertain as to what course our work should take. Now, however, I am ready to reply with definite information and tell the Church "What is to be the future of our War Work."

Before outlining specifically our program, let me say that the period of readjustment in America and of reconstruction in Europe for which we as a denomination must cheerfully and promptly assume our share, instead of calling for $100,000, is likely to need thrice that sum.

The program before us is as follows:

1. Work in the Army Camps That Are to Be Maintained.

Among these which so far promise to be permanent, and where we need to maintain Camp Pastors, are Newport News; Norfolk; Camp Lee, at Petersburg; Camp Jackson, at Columbia; Camp Sevier, at Greenville; Camp McClellan, at Anniston; Fort Sill; the large military establishment at San Antonio, besides a number of forts, some aviation fields, and small encampments.

2. The Gathering of the War Statistics of the Churches.

It is exceedingly important that we treasure this valuable information. Our office is sending out to all the churches a questionnaire to be filled in by pastors and sessions and returned. These questionnaires we propose to have bound, a volume to a Synod. The information thus preserved will be invaluable for future reference.

3. Chaplain Equipment.

Our Church at present has forty-four of her ministers commissioned as chaplains. Nearly all of these have been given the initial equipment, and so long as they remain actively in the service, must be backed up in a practical way by the Church.

4. Readjustment at Home.

This work already presents two phases. There is first the strengthening of weak churches in war industrial centers. While this would naturally fall to the Home Mission Committee, there are features which properly belong to us, and which in a small way we have already been doing. We see, however, much more that we should do, provided the Church supplies us with the funds.

The other work is that of conservation. Our soldiers are coming home in a few months from France. Some of them have already returned. They are coming home with an experience of service which should make Christ's call to the work of His Kingdom more welcome. Some of these men can never again be satisfied with a career that is self-centered. May not many of them find in the Gospel ministry a calling that will satisfy? And should not all of them find in Christian service the challenge to a life of quiet heroism? Our Council is not unmindful of this opportunity, and is already planning to do something to meet it.

We estimate that to take care of the four items thus far enumerated will require all of the $100,000 asked for by the last Assembly. The chief item of our future program, however, remains to be mentioned.

5. Reconstruction of the Protestant Churches in Europe.

The very life of these churches is threatened in many of the war-torn lands of Europe. The Federal Council of Churches is undertaking to raise a fund of $3,000,000 for their relief. An immediate sum of $300,000 has been called for and a large part has been paid in. Of the initial $300,000, the Southern Presbyterian Church has been assigned $10,000. We must send this at the earliest moment possible, but we cannot do so unless the churches respond. On this basis of $10,000 out of the first $300,000, the apportionment of our Church for the full $3,000,000 will be $100,000.

This then is the situation as approved at the meeting of the Executive Committee of our War Work Council on December 23, 1918. We urgently need $200,000, of which $100,000 is for work at home, and $100,000 is for work in Europe. The latter item, of course, has not yet been approved by the General Assembly, but it will be when the Assembly has a chance. Besides, the churches in Europe cannot wait for the Assembly to meet. Rescue work is now or never.

In view of all this, the Council requests the Key Men originally appointed in all the Synods and Presbyteries, to get active at once and see to it that, in every church that has not already taken an adequate offering, the cause be presented. Perhaps the interference of the influenza epidemic may turn out not to be altogether disastrous, if we are able to get the larger aspects of our work before the churches, and speedily stretch out a helping hand to our stricken Protestant brethren in Europe.

the shack I've been living in in the Z. of A., but the same old company, sick and wounded, and old Reaper Death as busy as ever. I am quartered in the "Villa de Flore," have a room and bath, good table, French maid, etc. My wards are in the Palace Royat and Metropole, where King Edward VII and King Leopold used to stay. I had tonight 179 patients, half wounded, half sick, the only medical officer for that number. You probably wonder why I write such a long letter; well I've just come in from my rounds and thought maybe I could sit down and chat awhile before turning in. This is no bed of roses so far as work is concerned, though roses are blooming in my garden here. I spent last winter in a severe epidemic of meningitis at Jackson, now I am beginning the winter in France in an epidemic equally severe of a different type—influenza and pneumonia.

This unit is from the U. of California, very capable men, all university fellows, which makes work very efficient. So far I've not seen one of the enlisted men who was not a college man, many of them graduate students in law or philosophy. They have a fine orchestra, rented the instruments here, and all in all it is a fine lot. I would like to stay with them.

I used a little Greek today. I wanted to tell the French maid to brush down some cobwebs in my room, and I concluded that as "Arachnes" is the word for "spider," it would probably be the same in French. So I said "Foil d'arraignee sur le mur," and got away with it, for she understood, though this Auvernese patois is different from any I've heard. I would give a thousand dollars to be able to speak French, for it would increase my usefulness so much.

Another Check From the White House.

From "The Pinnacles," the paper published at Banner Elk, N. C., we take the following interesting item:

A few days before President and Mrs. Woodrow Wilson left the United States for France, Mrs. Wilson sent the Orphans' Home and School a check for $25,000 which has been applied on the Liberty Bonds that we agreed to purchase. For five consecutive years a check for this amount has come from the White House. Each time there has come with the check an encouraging note from the ones who have sent them, and one time with the personal signature of the President himself."

An Appeal to the American Child

Dear Little American Child:

I am a little Armenian boy. Last year I was very little and thin, for I had had no good food to make me grow. I had no mother, and no home. I was always cold and hungry and frightened. I had wandered, even in the dark night, with some other children because I was afraid to be alone. We went on, and on, looking always for something to eat.

One cold day, we saw some houses, far off. It was the town of Bethlehem. We were afraid to go too near, but a woman came down the road to meet us. She took me up in her arms. I found a place on her shoulder for my head and went to sleep. When I woke up, we were all in a warm stable. There were no horses or cows there, because it had been made into a place for children like me. Everywhere there were little white beds. The woman held me close to her while I drank all the warm milk there was in a big bowl. Then she wanted to put me into one of the little white beds. I cried, and would not take my arms from around her neck, so she put a warm blanket around me and rocked me. She sang and talked softly to me.

"Long, long ago," she said, "another little boy came to Bethlehem, and this is His birthday. It was crowded that night, as it is now and a woman held him in her arms, in a stable, as I am holding you. His name was Jesus. The children in America know about Jesus, and for His sake they have sent these beds, and this warm milk, and me, to find you and hold you close. It is their birthday present to Jesus."

Thank you, little American. Your present has lasted all the year. I have good things to eat every day, and I never feel afraid. See my picture! I am a big, well boy. My eyes are sorry, because I know that a great many children are still walking, walking, frightened and cold, looking for their mothers.

Will you send presents to them, this year? You will, because you love the baby Jesus.

ARMENIA

By G. E. WOODBERRY

O fair Lord Christ, when yet thy face was young
In heaven, and thy witnesses were few,
Humble thy Kingdom here, nor yet grace drew Emperors to the breast where Lazarus clung—
When round a dying world thy arms were flung—
Armenia first unto thy mercies flew,
To the pure gospel through all ages true,
And Him, whose sorrows on the world's cross hung,

She, who beheld the glorious covenant,
When o'er the Flood, at the Creative Word,
Bright above Ararat sprang the bow in heaven—
What to her agony will thy pity grant?
For unto her through faith in thee, O Lord,
The thorny crown of Christendom is given.

Bring all ye nations, myrrh and frankincense,
As when, with gold and many an orient gem,
About the cradled child of Bethlehem
Like heaven the holy stable glittered, whence Issued salvation: pour the providence
Of earthly kingdoms at the feet of them,
Who would a world-wide flood of sorrow stem
And, Christ-like, feed the multitude immense!

Nor think Armenia only bears the Cross
Through deserts wild and up her mountain-chain:
But every nation climbs its calvary,
And hath its consecration; earthly loss
Thousands on thousands find is heavenly gain:
So the world-soul renews humanity.

Who art Thou, Lord? What shall I do, Lord?—Acts 22:8, 10.

A NEW day dawned for Saul of Tarsus when he met Jesus of Nazareth on the Damascus highway. He was following the ordinary road in the light of the common day and a surpassing light shone round about him. He found himself in the presence of a new master and the question of the text sprang to his lips, "Who art Thou, Lord? What shall I do, Lord?" These two questions are always pertinent. They arise with firm insistency at the threshold of a new day and a new year. Who is my Lord and what is my duty? I can think of no greater question unless it be, What is my hope? These are the three great questions of life and therefore of religion. My Lord, my duty and my destiny.

The new year comes with all its promise and with all its hopes but thick veils cover the coming days. The hidden things and the things which are certain are closely knit together. Each individual has to decide who shall be his Lord and what path of duty he will take. Many uncertainties disappear when we affirm with confidence Jesus is Lord. When we meet Him upon life's highway and accept Him as our Master, then His principles become our principles and His life become the rule and controlling power in our lives. These years of war and destruction through which we have just passed have reaffirmed the great teachings of Christ. Self-sacrifice and generosity and the spirit of brotherly kindness have received a new baptism on the battlefields of Europe and in the lands from which the warriors came. We enter another year with an understanding of the teachings which Christ brought to this world which we have never had before.

And now we enter the most fateful days of the world's history. Not even the war, with all its tragedy and destruction, was so freighted with possibilities of good or evil as the peace council which is about to assemble. It is for that council to determine the issues of the war. The hopes of unborn generations are in its hands.

That council is both judiciary and legislative. It has first of all to pass judgment on the vanquished foe. It is committed to mete out justice with no unsteady hand. The stern duty rests upon it to exact retribution, and the temper of the nations will expect nothing less than the uttermost.

But that is not all. New national boundaries are to be set up and new bonds are to be welded between the nations. Men are hopeful of a new and better day. An untold price has been paid that the world might be set free.

We are expecting a peace of democracy and a peace which will render war not only unnecessary but impossible. We must not close our eyes or deafen our ears to the fact that new social conditions are clamoring to be born.

It is not a time for bickering; to allow jealousies to raise their heads would be an eternal shame. It is a time for profound humility and a prayer of faith. As Christians our great concern is this:

What place is Jesus Christ to have at the peace conference—Jesus of Nazareth, the man of compassionate heart; Jesus of the cross, who came not to be served but to serve?

Are the principles of the Son of Man to become the cornerstones of an abiding peace? Personally, I should like to see the Sermon on the Mount, surmounted by the cross, in the center of the peace table.

In the new day the ancient question still will be insistent: "Who is my Lord and what is my duty?" The consciousness of a new liberty swells in the hearts of men. This world, watered with tears and consecrated by the best blood of the best nations, has a sanctity which cries out against brutality and wrong.

Duty demands that we shall keep sacredly that which has been bought at so great a price. It can be kept if to Jesus Christ is given His rightful place as Lord.—James Palmer, Associate Pastor Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, in New York Herald.

A Note of Appreciation.

By Rev. R. Murphy Williams.

It has been my privilege to be the Associate War Work Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Columbia, S. C., for the last three months, and as I am now returning to my work as pastor of the Presbyterian Church of the Covenant, of Greensboro, N. C. (the church that loaned me to the War Work Council of our Church and supported me in this work), I wish to bear testimony to the service that has been rendered to the soldiers by Dr. Andrew W. Blackwood and his church.

The ladies of the congregation have mothered a Y. M. C. A. building in the camp, and have visited the Base Hospital with flowers, magazines and books. Many of the homes have been open to the soldiers. A writing room is always open at the manse for the boys. A reception is given every Saturday evening in the Sunday School building, and the boys have shown their appreciation by attending in large numbers.

Dr. Blackwood's preaching is of a high order, and from the large number of soldiers who have attended his services it is apparent that his preaching is most acceptable and helpful. The men often seek interviews with him for counsel and advice. The whole Church is indebted to Dr. Blackwood and his church for what they have done and are doing for the men who have been in the service of their country.

Mr. J. B. Spillman, of Arsenal Hill Church, one of our most worthy elders, has also rendered a most useful service as chairman of the Religious Department of the War Work Community Service. He has been untiring in his efforts to see that everything was done for the soldiers that his committee could do.

I also wish to say that Columbia Theological Seminary has rendered a most helpful service. The doors of that institution have been open to the boys, and many of them have enjoyed its hospitality and the delightful influences that flow from such an institution. The writer roomed and boarded in the Seminary, and knows that the helpfulness given by the faculty and students was great. In a somewhat different fashion the Chicora College for Women has rendered a large and beautiful service, under the leadership of Dr. and Mrs. S. C. Byrd.

The Rev. T. M. Bulla.

"The Bravest Man I Saw."

The extract given below is from a letter written by a private in the hospital corps of 116th Infantry, of which Rev. T. M. Bulla was chaplain. The writer of the letter had been in the base hospital and absent from his command for six weeks. He seems not to have heard of the death of his loved chaplain. The letter was written in the Y. M. C. A. hut and this part of it, the last page, while the opening exercises were going on.

"There is a meeting tonight after all. They are singing 'When the roll is called up yonder.' It always reminds me of our own last meeting in the woods before we went into action in the Argonne. Chaplain Bulla conducted the meeting and it was certainly impressive. The last ones before action always are, I guess. They are now singing 'God will take care of you.' This was another one sung that evening. The chaplain was the bravest man I saw. He was utterly indifferent to shells or machine-gun bullets. And he was everywhere, and was on the go day and night. I got about three hours' sleep in the first three days 'over,' but I don't think he slept that much in the first four days. He looked Praise For Our War Worker.

Rev. R. Murphy Williams, pastor of the Church of the Covenant, Greensboro, N. C., has spent the past three months in Camp Jackson, working under the auspices of the War Work Council of the Southern Presbyterian Church. He has greatly endeared himself to all of us in Columbia, and he has highly commended himself by his conduct of the work in Camp Jackson. In these days of transition a man of less tact might soon have been excluded from the religious work of the camp, but Brother Williams has grown in favor both with the military authorities and the religious workers.

Camp Jackson has had many strong and godly religious workers representing the various denominations, but we confidently believe that no one of them has rendered a more beautiful and helpful service, especially in that most difficult task of bringing the soldiers in active membership in their home churches. This achievement on the part of Brother Williams has been all the more notable because of the quarantine and the other handicaps under which he has labored.

We regret that he must leave us, and we pray that he may have increasing success and joy in the home parish.

We are likewise conscious of our debt to the Church of the Covenant, which has graciously released Brother Wil-liams from the work where he has been sorely needed, and which has continued his salary. We appreciate the untiring labors of Dr. J. I. Vance and all the other aid which has come to us through the War Work Council. In a recent report of a mission in China, a traveler is quoted who comments on the striking change in the faces of the Chinese converts. The Chinese face is frequently dull, apathetic, uninteresting, hopeless. Topic for Sunday, Jan. 19—Our Relation to God. I. Repenting: Mark 1:14-20.

To be sorry for our sins because they have brought us into trouble is not enough. Every convicted criminal goes that far. To be conscience-stricken and disgusted with oneself is not enough. Judas Iscariot was all of that. To resolve to break with the past and do better for the sake of prudence, or decency, or one's own character, is not enough. Thousands of wholly Godless people do that with a degree of success. Christian repentance turns to God when it turns away from sin—and that is the very pith and point of it. There is no spiritual value whatever in any sort of repentance but that which turns to God saying: "Against Thee have I sinned, and for Thee will I try to do better henceforth."

Paul was going one day to Damascus bent on mischief. He was deliberately wrecking the church because he believed it to be more harmful than helpful. Wherever he found a real follower of the humble and peaceable Jesus, he declared war against him and hounded him to ruin and death. Paul was sinning desperately. Looking back later over his behaviour, he said himself that he was the chief of sinners. Judas himself delivered no more deadly blow at Christianity than Paul did over and over again as frequently as his wicked energy, his high standing, and his influence would allow.

Christ appeared to Paul and astounded him. He was smitten with sorrow for his past, and he then and there turned himself over to Christ for whatever help Christ would give him toward a better life and for whatever service he could render to Christ. Leaving his sin would have been of small use to him but for the fact that when he left his sin he also deliberately gave himself up to Christ.

David was once guilty of plain adultery. That is one sin which God will not tolerate. There is perhaps more said in the Bible to condemn this sin than any other. David added murder, hoping to cover up his crime. One sin was leading to another, and David was swamped. God left him. Everything went wrong inside of his heart and around him in his affairs. Then bitter repentance overtook him. It was the one way out of his troubles and his sins. He did not waste time in Godless remorse, but turning at once to the Lord he confessed to Him and begged for His Spirit to help him to do better. If you can turn to the fifty-first Psalm, and make David's words your words, you may be sure your repentance is real.

When the young man that we call the Prodigal Son awoke to a sense of his wretched condition, he tried no longer to pull himself up again by his own bootstraps to a decent life. He went instead to his Father for his Father's uplifting help. To seek this is an essential part of the act of true repentance.

For thought and for the program:

Does repentance atone for sins already committed? How then are past sins atoned for?

After Peter denied Christ and repented for it, whose power in Peter's heart kept him from committing that same sort of sin again?

The Prayer Meeting

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING JANUARY 12:
 CHRIST AND THE SWORD—Matt. 10:34; 24:6-7.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

"See that ye be not troubled." Can we write these words on our memories? Can we mount into, and abide in, the untroubled atmosphere of cloudless trust? Perhaps—when the turmoil of war is at a distance. Yes, also when the sword is flashing in our very faces. "These things must needs come to pass." Then, let these words: "See that ye be not troubled," sound and resound, from the Master's lips, in our ears. "I come not to send peace, but a sword." Not long since I heard a minister preach at a union service on this text. It was a fearful and disgraceful sermon. He made of the Lamb of God a war lord. He had no just and true conception either of these tragic words, or of the character of our Lord. It was into a world of darkness that He, the Light of the World, came. But the darkness fights desperately, doggedly, perpetually to maintain and to extend

MOSES THE LEADER OF ISRAEL.

Golden Text—Heb. 3:5: "Moses was faithful in all his house."

Exodus 3:1-12.

January 12, 1919.

By Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.

Moses was trained 40 years in Egypt and 40 years in Midian for his 40 years of work in the wilderness to prepare Israel for their promised heritage. He had not only a long preparation but very varied training. He had religious training in a pious home, intellectual training in the schools of Egypt, social training in the court of Pharaoh, domestic training in the family of Jethro, and practical training as the shepherd of his father-in-law. He had ample opportunity too in the solitudes of Midian for communion with himself, with nature, and with Jehovah. When the Lord deemed him fit for his task, He calls him to deliver Israel from bondage, to train them to worship and serve Him, and to lead them to their promised inheritance. Our lesson deals with this call.

I. The Burning Bush on Horeb.

Watching his flock, Moses beholds on the mountain a wondrous sight. It is not a majestic tree, but an insignificant bush. But the impressive thing about it was that the bush was on fire and yet was not consumed. Moses draws near to see this wonderful thing. The bush living in the flame served to attract Moses' attention to it and whatever instructions might proceed from it. But it might suggest more. It might be a symbol of God's chosen people, Israel, deemed degraded and enslaved by the Egyptians and yet not destroyed by all the oppressions to which they were subjected. The fires of affliction did not consume them but they lived and flourished amid them all. This same burning bush might also have represented the Church of the living God, persecuted by the Devil and his agents in all ages, and yet not consumed but developed. In her history Jehovah has verified His words, "God is in the midst of her, she shall not be moved, God shall help her and that right early."

II. Jehovah Revealed in the Bush.

As Moses draws near the Lord says, "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." The presence of Jehovah hallowed the place and the most exalted of mortals must show due reverence. Jehovah then declares "Himself the God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Jacob," and therefore the God of an unfulfilling covenant. He also affirms that He knew Israel's sorrows and oppressions, that He had heard their cry because of their taskmasters, and that He had come down to deliver them. He furthermore avows His purpose to rescue them from Egypt and to bring them into the land of the Canaanitish nations, "a good land and a large land flowing with milk and honey." The very way in which Jehovah revealed Himself to Moses in the burning bush that He prevented from being consumed by fire, was an intimation of His almighty power to do what He proposed and promised.

III. Moses Commissioned to Deliver Israel.

Having revealed Himself and His purposes, He proceeds to authorize Moses to undertake the enterprise. He says, "Come now and I will send thee to Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring my people out of Egypt." It was a stupendous task to enfranchise a degraded people from bondage to a warlike nation, and to train them to become a free and godly nationality. It was not surprising that Moses shrank from the work assigned. It was an enterprise in which no unaided man could succeed. Hence he says, "Who am I that I should go unto Pharaoh and that I should bring forth the Children of Israel out of Egypt?" He has an humble opinion of his own ability. Communion with Jehovah in the wilderness has fostered great humility of mind that he did not have when he came to Midian. It was needful that he should be emptied of self that he might be filled with the power of Jehovah. "God resisteth the proud but giveth grace unto the humble."

IV. Moses' Objections Removed.

Moses has numerous difficulties in the way of his attempting the deliverance of Israel. The first is his personal inability. But the Lord promises, "Surely I will be with thee," and his own lack of power was to be supplemented by Jehovah's omnipotence. Then he says, "He was not eloquent either before or after the Lord had spoken to him." He was a "man slow of speech and of a slow tongue." For lack of speech he could not persuade Pharaoh. He was provided with a spokesman in Aaron, his brother, "who could speak well," but he was to discover that not human eloquence but the stern voice of Jehovah's judgments was to move the king of Egypt. He then desires to know who he should say had sent him when he appears before the elders of Israel. The Lord replies, "Say that 'I am' hath sent you." When he inquires what signs of his Divine commission he should give to the elders of Israel and also to Pharaoh, the Lord works for him the miracles of the leprous hand and of the rod converted into a serpent, and then changed again into a rod and tells him to reproduce these miracles before them and assures him that they will convince them that the Almighty sent him. Thus accredited, Moses consents to go to Egypt, and is told that he and Israel should worship on that mountain.

her reign over our world. The sword then is inevitable, the conflict unavoidable unless light should retire and darkness fill the void and overwhelm the world with despair.

It was into a world of sinners that He came; a world where moral and spiritual sovereignty, yea, exercising tyranny over men, and holding them slaves; and hence the conflict was as sure as the facts—God the Saviour, and sin the destroyer.

In our simplicity we call the recent war "The World War," with the emphasis on the first two words. Jesus knew better. He knew that the sword had been drawn at His coming—drawn with more terrible energy, daring, and vigilance; and that it would never be sheathed till the last enemy was vanquished.

This sword flashes in the church, in the homes of the people, in the breasts of men and women. The arena is both external and internal. The wounds and diseases and deaths of this warfare are incalculable.

Jesus erected a cross, and made it the rallying point, and the banner of His cause; and the sword flashed in the hand of Doubt, and Dissent, and Pride,—and still flashes. Jesus was a miracle, and He wrought miracles; and the sword flashed again; and men hurled His own moral and physical order against the battalions of the faithful. To get rid of miracles they would fain banish God and Christ from His throne; or encircle that throne with the cords of marrowless and loveless law, which ensnares and enslaves the Lawgiver himself, and man by consequence. And so God must fight for His own, and men fight for what Satan has usurped.

The inevitable result of the Christ's teachings and life is to raise higher, and yet higher, and yet higher the ideals of believers—yet of unbelievers too. But the conflict waxes as the ideal is raised, and many who are influenced by His example and precepts, fight against His person and deny His authority, while they disown and disdain His grace.

But amidst the apparent disorder there is progress. The night perpetually flees before—but yet perpetually follows the progress of the sun: but the Sun of righteousness will extend His sway from land to land until eventually He shall conquer all—and then deliver up the Kingdom to His Father.

DOING THE IMPOSSIBLE.

"The things which are impossible with men are possible with God."—Luke 28:27.

We have not to travel far before we meet the impossible. We soon reach the end of the short road of "the possible," and then the impossible looms before us. It is possible to restrain a man from crime; it is impossible to restrain him from sin. We can compel a man to pay his income tax; it is impossible to compel him to be generous. We can readjust a man's circumstances; we cannot renew a man's heart. We can educate; we cannot regenerate. We can refurnish a man's mind; we cannot give him the mind of Christ. We can give him courtesy; we cannot endow him with grace. We may give him good manners; we cannot make him a good man. We may save him from worldly excesses; we cannot make him immune from the contagion of the world. We may "patch up a bad job," but we have no power of new creation.

And so we touch our "impossible" almost at a stride. The "impossible" stare upon us on every side. How then? It is only in God and in the power of His holy grace that the impossible thing can be realized. In the Lord Jesus miracles may happen every day; they are happening every day. But in our pathetic folly we go on trying to mend the broken earthenware, when the mighty God would re-create the vessel. We rely upon the ministry of good fellowship when we can do nothing without the communion of the Holy Ghost. We use social cosmetics upon a withered and wizened society, and the holy Lord is waiting with the unspeakable quickening of the new birth. We use rouge when we really need the blood of the Lamb.

The world is always arrested when it sees impossibles being accomplished. In God the impossible becomes possible.

Though earth and hell the Word gainsay,
The Word of God can never fail;
The Lamb shall take my sins away,
'Tis certain, though impossible.
The thing impossible shall be,
All things are possible to me.

—John H. Jowett, D.D.

FAITH CASTS OUT DOUBT.

There was a good man and his wife who had kept a lighthouse for years. A visitor who came to see the lighthouse, looking out from the window over the waste of water, asked the good woman: "Are you not afraid of a night when the storm is on, and the big waves dash right over the lantern? Do you not fear that the lighthouse and all that is in it will be carried away?" The woman remarked that the idea never occurred to her now. She had lived there so long that she felt as safe on the lone rock as ever she did when she lived on the mainland. As for her husband, when asked if he did not feel anxious when the wind blew a hurricane, he answered: "Yes, I feel anxious to keep the lamps well trimmed, and the light burning, lest any vessel should be wrecked." As to anxiety about the safety of the lighthouse, or his own personal security in it, he had outlived all that.

Even so it is with me. "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him against the day." From henceforth let no man trouble me with doubts and questionings; I bear in my soul the proofs of the Spirit's truth and power, and I will not have any of your artful reasonings. The Gospel to me is truth: I am content to perish if it be not true. I risk my soul's eternal fate upon the truth of the Gospel, and I know no risk in it. My one concern is to keep the lamps burning, that I may thereby enlighten others.—Spurgeon.

A BEAUTIFUL YEAR.

A girl was tacking up a new wall calendar, bearing the unfamiliar figures of the New Year just about to open.

"It is going to be a beautiful year," she said, with a prophetic tone of assurance.

Some one who heard the girl's prediction, curious to know what was in her mind, asked, "How do you know it is going to be a beautiful year? A year is a long time."

"Well," she answered, "a day isn't a long time, and I know because I'm going to take a day at a time and make it so. Years are only days when you come right down to it, and I'm going to see that every single one of these 365 days gets some one beautiful thing in it."

"Then it will be a beautiful year," the friend answered. "You've got hold of a wonderful secret."

"So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. And let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us."—The Evangelical.

THE HABIT OF DOING RIGHT.

There is virtue in acquiring the habit of doing the right thing for no other reason than that it is the right thing. A curious story runs to the effect that a man asked God to reveal to him the hour of his death. He heard the words "After six," and immediately concluded that he was to be summoned "after six" the next morning. The night was spent in the most solemn preparation. But "after six" he was still alive. His next conclusion pointed to "six" days, during which time he observed studiously fixed hours of devotion. Six days went over, and he still lived. Then he was sure the revelation meant six weeks, during which time he maintained the habits of devotion formed during the six days of his imagined probation. But the six weeks were accomplished and death still delayed. And now the man was sure that the oracle meant six months. During this period he still observed with the utmost regularity the round of devotion he had fixed for himself when he thought death imminent, and before the end of his self-imposed term he had not only acquired a devout habit but a relish for devotion.

Going to church, daily prayer, the daily reading of the Bible as a veritable word from God—these are things concerning the value of which there is no dispute. Get the habit of doing them, and even when they have become only a habit they serve as a restraint from sin. But seek earnestly to prevent the habit from becoming "only a habit" by remembering them as actual approaches to the presence and the majesty of God.—Ex.

WASTEFUL WAYS OF WORKING.

In a dressmaking establishment a while ago a waiting customer was idly observing the swift fingers of the apprentices and sewing women who were making haste to finish her gown up to the trying-on point in order to save another visit.

"That girl works like chain lightning, doesn't she?" she remarked in a low voice to the forewoman who stood near her.

"M—m! Tolerably swift with her needle. But that girl next her makes one motion do the work of three of hers. Half of her quickness is clear wiggle."

It was a droll characterization, but exactly descriptive. We must look out that our energy is not dissipated in busy flutter and bustle. Achievement is the aim, and not a mere show of working. If we were to take any ordinary day and analyze it, we should probably find that leisure has been lost, not mainly in profitable work, but in wasteful ways of working. There is a "trick" to learn in making every motion "tell."—The Wellspring.

Collections—January is one of the months unassigned by the Assembly. In many of the Synods the collections go to Synodical and Presbyterian causes. In the Synod of North Carolina, by order of the Synod, they are for Synodical Home Missions. The treasurer of this cause is Rev. A. W. Crawford, 320 S. Mendenhall St., Greensboro, N. C.

The Synod's Home Mission Work and the Sunday Schools.

Do you know what our Sunday School work owes to Synodical Home Missions? 186 Sunday Schools have been organized in the Synod's mission work, more than one-third of the total number now in the Synod (485).

Synod directs that a collection be taken in each Sunday School in its bounds, in January, for this work. What about your school? Will you do it?

SOME FACTS FOR THE YEAR CLOSING OCTOBER 1st

38 men were engaged. They reported 693 additions to the Presbyterian Church on profession, being nearly one-third of the total number in all of the churches of the Synod. 12 Sunday Schools and 3 churches were organized.

A much enlarged work this year.

PERSONAL.

During the past year the student members of the Missionary Union of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago contributed $3,205 for Foreign and Home Missions. Of this amount $2,960 was divided equally among 37 different mission boards—$80 to each.

Some months ago Mr. M. L. Swinehart, of our Korean Mission, enlisted in the military service of the Government and was commissioned as Captain of Engineers. He completed the course of training at Camp Humphreys, Va., and on the proclamation of the armistice was discharged into the Reserve Corps. We are very much gratified that it will now be possible for Captain Swinehart to carry out at least in part the itinerary among our churches that was planned for him before he entered the Government service.

Rev. A. H. McArn, of Cheraw, S. C., who has been so sorely bereaved in the death of his wife, writes:

"I think one of God's sweetest ways of comforting His children is the gift of kind and thoughtful friends. The many messages of sympathy and regard which have recently come to me have cheered and comforted me more than I can express. My own dear people in Cheraw have ever been most thoughtful and kind. Two years ago when I was seriously ill they met all the expenses of hospital attention and a month's visit to Florida. A year ago they substantially increased my salary, and in my recent bereavement they stood every test of loyalty and regard, meeting every financial obligation, and expressing the beautiful things that were in their hearts by the beautiful things they said and did. And now they have started the new year by a twenty-five per cent increase in salary. I again claim that I have the dearest and most thoughtful people in the world."

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rev. W. S. Hamiter, of Blackstock, S. C., has accepted a call to the Dallas group of churches, in Kings Mountain Presbytery.

Wilmington—St. Andrews—This church, under the efficient leadership of Dr. A. D. McClure, has closed a successful year. At the last communion six new members were added. The Sabbath School is larger than for some time, and all departments of church work are active and earnest.

Gastonia—Sunday, December 8, the pulpit of the Gastonia Church was filled by Rev. Homer McMillan, D.D., who preached a very strong sermon to a large congregation. Dr. McMillan's visit made a deep impression.

Nineteen members have recently been received into this church, eleven on profession of faith and eight by letter.

Lexington—The pastor and his wife are the grateful recipients of a bountiful pounding of good things to eat from the faithful members of Thomasville Presbyterian Church. Each article is the reminder of the loving thoughtfulness of a true people for their pastor.

May the Master reward each one. We thank God for this people and take courage. J. H. Smith, Pastor.

Rev. William Black, General Evangelist of the Synod, closed a meeting at Mt. Pisgah Church, in Fayetteville Presbytery, Sunday night, December 22, assisting the pastor, Rev. J. A. Calligan. The difficulties were many—influenza and the rain—but considerable interest was shown.

Three persons promised to establish family worship, about 150 to read the Bible and pray daily; 12 persons were added to the church upon profession of faith, and a number of others expressed their acceptance of Christ; $63.10 was contributed for the Synod's mission work. A. W. C.

The Thomasville Church has had much added to its appearance by a new carpet, the loving gift of Mrs. M. McIntyre and her daughter, Mrs. Z. B. Crutchfield.

At a meeting of the session the second Sunday in November two were received into the church on profession of their faith.

This church is a very small congregation composed of some very earnest workers. Our greatest burden at present is a debt of about $1,200 against the church. This we hope to diminish or pay off entirely by a "drive" in the near future. Any one wishing to have a share in releasing the church of this burden may do so by sending the pastor a free-will offering for this cause. J. H. Smith, Pastor.

Lexington, N. C.

Help Them!—Help whom and why? Rev. C. E. Clark, Kenly, N. C., and Rev. A. T. Lassiter, Benson, N. C. Mr. Clark is striving to build a church which is much needed at Center Ridge, one of the new organizations in Johnston County, and Mr. Lassiter is building a tabernacle at an important point in the same county. The people at these two points are giving their timber and labor, and now money is needed to help complete the work. If you have a dollar or more to spare them, help them at once. Send a contribution to Clark and Lassiter or to Rev. J. J. Hill, treasurer, Red Springs, N. C., and state that it is for the church at Center Ridge or for A. T. Lassiter's tabernacle. Help speedily, and thus help twice this part of Christ's kingdom.

L. Smith, Supt, Etc.

The Presbytery of Kings Mountain was called to meet in the Gastonia Church on Monday, December 23. Rev. J. E. Berryhill was dismissed to Bethel Presbytery, in order that he may accept the pastorate of the church at Clover, S. C. Mr. Berryhill has been pastor of Kings Mountain, Long Creek and Bessemer City Churches and has done a good work there.

Rev. J. C. Grier was received from Bethel Presbytery and arrangements were made for his installation as pastor of the Rutherfordton Church, as follows: To preside and charge the pastor, Rev. W. S. Wilson, D.D.; to charge the people, Rev. T. E. P. Woods; alternate to either, Rev. W. A. Murray; Ruling Elder Long, of Britain Church, was added to the committee, and Dr. J. M. Grier, of Concord, father of Mr. Grier, was requested to preach the sermon. The time to be fixed later.

Charlotte—First Church—The editor was an invited guest at the supper given to the officers and teachers of the First Church Sabbath School.

Though the rain was pouring in abundance, a goodly company assembled, the ladies predominating, and the excellent supper was enjoyed.

Mr. Hunter Marshall, the superintendent, outlined some of his plans for the year, and then Mr. Morgan Spier spoke on the relation of the Sabbath School to the Church. The address was fine.

This church has a model Sabbath School building, and the school seems well organized.

After the supper and Mr. Spier's address, the editor conducted the Teacher's Training Class, a privilege he enjoys regularly each week.

Washington—Our Sunday School carried out the Christmas program prepared by our Assembly's Committee of Christian Education, and called God's Service Star. The exercises were very attractive, edifying and inspiring; and a substantial offering was received for Ministerial Relief. By common consent it was the best and most appropriate program our school has ever enjoyed at this season.

Rev. J. B. Massey, of Wilson, N. C., is with us this week, preaching a series of sermons in connection with the Week of Prayer our congregation is observing preparatory to our January communion. His preaching is practical, experiential, and inspiring, and is being greatly enjoyed by our people. Believers are being benefited, and we are trusting that sinners will be converted and added to the church.

H. B. Searight.

Robinson Church—On the day before Thanksgiving the members of this church and other friends "pounded" the pastor. It was so different from poundings he used to get when a boy. They sent quite a variety of supplies of good things for the pantry and after they were unloaded, he was invited to go up into the business part of the city, where he was presented with a suit of real nice clothes. Also a member of that congregation recently presented the pastor with a nice new overcoat.

On behalf of himself and family the pastor extends to all the donors the deepest gratitude of our hearts. Such tokens of appreciation and expressions of kindly interest have helped us and cheered us on our way. We desire to more faithfully minister to them in spiritual things.

Robinson Church is about eleven miles northeast from Charlotte and its members constitute a part of the best people in the world.

Charlotte—St. Paul—The good people of this congregation were unusually good to their pastor Christmas. The pastor was away Sunday morning, and Mr. Clyde Walsh, a member of the Senior class of Union Theological Seminary, and a son of this church, filled the pulpit very acceptably. The members of the congregation took advantage of the pastor's absence to plan a surprise for him and his family. The prayer meeting is not usually very well attended, but when we arrived at the church last Wednesday night, the Sunday School room was packed full of children, with a few of the parents. But we were not so much surprised as we would have been if some one had not told us that the children were to be there for their usual Christmas treat. We had a short service; it had to be short, for the children would not wait. There were about twice as many children as we have on our Sunday School roll, but this was anticipated and there was a bag for all. We thought that was all, but the superintendent said there was more to follow. At this point, three men came forward with all they could carry of good things to eat and laid them at our feet. It was a complete "pounding" and we greatly appreciate what they have done for us.

They have made our hearts glad and we pray for God's richest blessing upon them.
Pastor.

Hoke County Churches—Fayetteville Presbytery—Since Rev. Eugene Alexander became chaplain of the Seventy-first Infantry, at Camp Meade, Md., his churches have been supplied by neighboring ministers: Rev. J. W. Goodman preaching at Dundarrach, Rev. W. C. Brown at Bethel, and Rev. V. R. Gaston at Shiloh.

Chaplain Alexander spent part of his Christmas vacation here, and preached at Bethel the fifth Sunday in December. He expects to return to this field as soon as he is released from the army.

Sandy Grove and Longstreet Churches are within the proposed boundary line of Camp Bragg and will have to be discontinued if the camp is permanent.

The Antioch Church is growing in grace and good works under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. J. W. Goodman. The congregation has recently expressed its appreciation of Mr. Goodman's faithful labors by increasing his salary from $1,200 to $1,500 and a manse.

Philippi is grouped with churches in Cumberland County. Rev. L. D. Jones, of Hope Mills, who is serving this group, is to be installed pastor at Philippi the second Sabbath in February.
W. C. B.

Albemarle—Rev. Geo. W. Cheek, pastor. The present pastorate, which began a little more than one year ago, enters the New Year under very encouraging circumstances. There has been a consistent growth both in membership and efficiency during the past year, the membership having increased about 35 per cent. The bond of fellowship existing between the occupants of the manse and the congregation is being strengthened constantly; the latter never losing an opportunity to commend and encourage us in our labors, both by word and deed; all of which makes us humble in spirit and more faithful in service. The day before Thanksgiving, the pastor was notified by the Fuel Company that the men of the church had ordered several tons of coal sent out for the furnace with which the beautiful and commodious manse is equipped. At the Christmas exercises both pastor and wife were taken by surprise, when one of the officers arose and presented each with a beautiful gold coin of substantial value, as Christmas gifts from the church. Just recently the officers of the church offered the pastor leave of absence for several weeks and entire expenses to attend the Billy Sunday meetings in Richmond, Va. This privilege was reluctantly declined, on account of the immediate needs of the work here, and other matters of a pressing nature. In truth, our lot has been cast among an appreciative people, with whom it is an ever increasing joy to live and labor.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rev. W. H. Johnson, who was ordained at the recent called meeting of Pee Dee Presbytery, has accepted a call to Hopewell Church, one of the historic landmarks of Presbyterianism in the Pee Dee section. Mr. Johnson is a young man of manifest ability and the congregation is delighted at his acceptance.

Columbia—Dr. J. O. Reavis has been asked by the Y. M. C. A. at Camp Jackson to make a round of the various buildings in January, presenting the claims of the foreign field as the most attractive life work for brave young men. The claims of the ministry in the homeland and the claims of the other callings will be presented by experts, and we Presbyterians in Columbia are proud of our representative.

Columbia—Without ceremony of any sort, a mural tablet to the memory of Rev. George A. Blackburn, D.D., for 31 years pastor of the Arsenal Hill Presbyterian Church, was unveiled last Sabbath morning at the conclusion of the morning services at the church, which services were conducted by Rev. E. C. Bailey, of Edgefield.

The tablet, which is set in the wall to the left of the pulpit, bears the following inscription:

In Memoriam
George A. Blackburn, D.D.
Born October '16, 1861.
Died May 5, 1918.
Pastor of this church 31 years.

"Wherefore take unto yourselves the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand."

McClellanville and Mt. Pleasant—Christmas has been a happy season in McClellanville and Mt. Pisgah. We have rejoiced in many things—the closing of the war, the fact that as far as we know, up to this time, none of our boys "over there" have been killed or wounded in the service; the expectation of their speedy return; and the presence of the college boys and girls home for the holidays, have all combined to make our people happy, and give them cause for special rejoicing at this season when all the world is called on to remember with gratitude the gift of Christ to the world.

At McClellanville the manse was delightfully invaded one night by a large representation of the congregation who came bearing gifts of all sorts of good things to fill the pantry and furnish supplies for some time to come. It was a happy surprise, and the pastor and his wife are rejoicing over the loving thoughtfulness of their people and of their continued tokens of appreciation and good will.

It is with no less gratitude that the pastor acknowledges the exceedingly generous gift this Christmas season, of the members of the Mt. Pleasant Church.

He begins this New Year with renewed gratitude to God for these very substantial material blessings from Him through His people.

ALABAMA.

Birmingham—Rev. W. S. Jacobs, D.D., has declined the call of the South Highlands Church to its pastorate.

Columbia—Rev. C. U. Leach has resigned his pastorate of this group, and accepted a call to Sylvester, Ga. He expects to begin his new work the first of January.

The Presbytery of East Alabama has lost thirteen ministers since the spring meeting of Presbytery, either by death or by removal. Some of the most important churches in the Presbytery are now vacant.

Presbytery of East Alabama—The constitutional requirements having been complied with, I hereby call the Presbytery of East Alabama to meet in the office of the First Presbyterian Church of Montgomery, January 2, to dissolve the pastoral relations existing between Rev. C. U. Leach and the Columbia, Hartford and Elba Churches, and if the way be clear to dismiss Mr. Leach to Macon Presbytery.
W. A. Bellingrath, Moderator.

Montgomery—The First Church observed the fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Dr. Robert H. McCaslin on a recent Sabbath. At the instance of the session, Elder John W. Durr read to the church a report of the pastor's work during this time: Sermons preached, 591; prayer meetings conducted, 630; funerals, 101; marriages, 176; baptisms, 145; pastoral calls, 6,963; new members received, 1,026. The membership has increased from 613 in 1912 to 1,261 in 1918, and the contributions from $10,292 in 1912 to $21,493 in 1918.

FLORIDA.

Chipley—On Christmas Eve the children of the Sunday School enjoyed a Christmas tree at the church. There was a program rendered consisting of the reading of the Christmas message by the pastor, followed by songs and recitations by the pupils. As Santa Claus was too busy on Christmas Eve to be present, the teachers took his place and distributed the gifts from the shining tree. We were glad to have so many of the parents and friends there to share with us the joys of the Christmas season. W. W.

The Winter School of Missions at DeLand—The sixth annual meeting of the DeLand School of Missions will commence February 1, 1919, and last for a week.

Mrs. Henry W. Peabody will teach the Junior Study books, Mrs. Helen Garrett Montgomery the adult books, both Home and Foreign, and Mrs. E. C. Cronk will have the methods hour.

These leaders of national reputation insure the best of programs, while the climate of DeLand in February has a charm most alluring.

There should be a large attendance of all interested in the great cause of missions.

For programs and further information, address Mrs. J. W. Smock, DeLand, Fla.

DeFuniak Springs—The congregation has been exceedingly kind to the manse folk during Christmas and Thanksgiving. Besides many other good things, no fewer than four turkeys were sent to the manse, and checks and cash kept coming until the pastor found himself in possession of $179 as a Christmas gift from the men of the church. The pastor had heard of linen showers, miscellaneous showers and so forth, but a check shower was something new—but by no means unpleasant. The men of DeFuniak Springs have no copyright on the scheme and other men of other congregations are at full liberty to use it with their pastor. We doubt, however, if any set of men can work the plan more nicely than did the DeFuniak men.

One new member has been recently received and one little one baptized.

The Christmas exercises, a Star Service, were held in the Palmer College chapel and passed off very nicely. The music was furnished by the young people of the Sunday School and by the church choir. The Christ Story was told by the superintendent of the Sunday School, Judge A. G. Campbell, and a beautiful selection was well recited by one of the young people. Simple presents were given to the pupils in the primary department and fruit to all present.

GEORGIA.

Atlanta—Rev. Trigg A. M. Thomas, D.D., has accepted the call of the Assembly's Home Mission Committee to become Assembly's Evangelist.

Commerce—At a recent meeting of the session of our church, presided over by our new pastor, Rev. John A. Simpson, the Sunday School officers and teachers were elected, with George T. Rice and W. B. Burns, superintendent and assistant superintendent, and an able corps of teachers. We have three "organized" classes in our Sunday School, as follows: Bible Class No. 1, known as the "Mary R. Fleming Bible Class;" Class No. 2, known as the "Henry F. Hoyt Bible Class," and Class No. 3, and the members of these classes have the privilege of electing their own teachers, which teachers, thus elected by these classes, were as follows: Teacher for Bible Class No. 1, Col. R. L. J. Smith; teacher for Bible Class No. 2, Mr. Claud Little; and teacher for Class No. 3, Mrs. Dora Deadwyler. Miss Emma Stapler, who has served our church for several years most efficiently as organist, was unanimously re-elected by our session to that position for 1919.

Our Sunday School, as a whole, has been contributing a sufficient amount annually to support and educate an orphan at the Thornwell Orphanage, and now the members of the "Mary R. Fleming Bible Class" have determined to raise a sufficient sum from the members of that class alone, with which to support an orphan at Thornwell Orphanage, thereby giving our Sunday School the honor of supporting two orphans there in the future.

Under the personal leadership of our splendid superintendent, Mr. Geo. T. Rice, the neat sum of $56.62 was raised by contributions from our Sunday School Sunday morning for the relief of the starving Armenians.

The attendance upon our Sunday School has been averaging about 50 the year round, but since the arrival of our new pastor and his excellent wife and family, and as a result of their efforts, our Sunday School has experienced quite a decided increase in interest and membership, and we expect a much larger attendance during the coming year.

OKLAHOMA.

Oklahoma City—People's Presbyterian Church—A small revival broke out on the last Sunday night of 1918. In response to the invitation, nearly all the members of the church who were present, reconsecrated themselves for new endeavors in 1919, and the Holy Spirit's presence and power were manifested also in conversions. Almost a whole family, the father and mother of which had been church members years ago in Tennessee, were received into the church, the parents on a reaffirmation of their faith and a renewal of their vows, and two girls of nine and twelve on confession of their faith in the Christ. In addition, another mother was reclaimed, and four of her daughters, two young ladies and two girls, wept as they acknowledged sin and prayed for forgiveness.

The Sunday School Christmas entertainment was simple, a modification of "Lighting the Christmas Tree," suggested in the Earnest Worker, with some other short recitations—but our Lord Jesus was exalted, not Santa Claus. One little seven-year-old girl recited a beautiful poem in which all were urged to make Christmas (birthday) gifts to the Saviour.

Presbytery of Memphis—At adjourned sessions of the Presbytery of Memphis held in the Second Presbyterian Church, Memphis, Tenn., on December 16 and 23, Rev. J. D. Fleming was received from the Presbytery of Arkansas. He is supplying Marl Bluff, Saltville and Shady Grove Churches. The pastoral relation between the Dyersburg Church and Rev. W. W. Powell, who is doing Y. M. C. A. War Work in France, was dissolved. The pastoral relation between Rev. R. E. Carroll and Lamar Heights, Memphis, was dissolved. Mr. Carroll has been in the Marine service. That church is now supplied.

Rev. H. B. Wade, who has just returned from an officers' training camp, received and accepted calls for his pastoral services from Edmondson and White Haven Churches, and a commission was appointed to install him in both churches on December 29.

Rev. J. V. Currie resigned as pastor of Atoka Church, which he had been serving for one-third of his time, and this relation was dissolved.

Rosemark was permitted to modify its call for the pastoral services of Rev. J. V. Currie by taking the whole instead of one-third of his time. This is a great stride in advance for that church, and shows a remarkable growth in home mission work.

The Idlewild Church, Memphis, was permitted to change its salary to its pastor, Rev. Wm. Crowe, D.D., from $3,000 to $5,000 per year, besides free use of manse, thus showing not only appreciation of its pastor, but also great financial growth.

VIRGINIA.

Richmond—First Church—The annual Christmas celebration of the Sunday School was held on the Sunday before Christmas. "God's Service Star" was the program used. The offerings from the Sunday School were generous and will supply the necessities for those in need for the rest of the winter. One of the interesting parts of the service was the reading of the names of those who have been members of this church and were or are ministers of the Gospel, and $4.73 FOR MISSIONS.

HOW many more Sundays are there in this month, Judith?"

"Two—no, only one," replied Judith brightly from behind the shining new percolator. "Why, Morris?"

"Nothing, only I came very near forgetting that missionary offering. I must announce today that it will be taken next Sunday." Rev. Morris Goodwin wrote a line in a small black notebook before he sweetened a cup of excellent coffee.

"And, oh, Morris, be sure to emphasize the announcement of the sale Mrs. Harding will give you," added Judith. "You know the ladies' aid has promised me 15 per cent of the proceeds for my primary corner. I want curtains and pictures and dozens of things, Morris!"

also the reading of the names of those who have been soldiers of their country. Thirty-three ministers of the Southern Church have been members of this church. Seventeen are now living, the dean of them being Rev. Dr. P. P. Flournoy, of Bethesda, Md. Sixty-six have been engaged in the service of their country in the present war.

Lexington—Our Sunday School Christmas celebration was held Monday night, December 23, conducted by the superintendent, Dr. E. F. Shannon. The opening prayer was made by Rev. L. W. Irwin, of Princeton, W. Va. After appropriate exercises in which the young folks took part, came the most interesting and heart-warming feature of the evening, as class after class brought to the platform its basket of gifts for the needy, and it was a blessed sight to see the heaped-up offerings thus made to be distributed the next day or two by willing hands and loving hearts. A collection was taken up for the Lynchburg Orphanage, and something over $90 was given. The benediction was pronounced by Rev. Mr. Bowman.

Sunday morning, December 29, the session received on profession a mother and daughter, part of the ingathering from the services our pastor held at Beechenbrook recently. They were baptized when they made their public profession at the morning service.

At night Rev. John A. Bowman preached his second sermon to our congregation. A. H.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Montgomery—The Ladies' Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church held their semi-annual opening of the mite boxes at the manse, on Thursday evening, December 12.

Each year shows a generous advance in the amounts collected by the mite boxes distributed among the membership and friends of the society, the total this time running up to within a fraction of one hundred dollars. Light refreshments were served, after which the meeting adjourned, with an added and enthusiastic purpose and zeal to keep up to the fine record already made.

Synod of West Virginia—A called meeting of this Synod was held, December 21, at the First Presbyterian Church, in Charleston, W. Va., with Rev. Ernest Thompson as moderator, for considering the acceptance of a farm of 600 acres in Greenbrier County, W. Va., and $50,000 for the care, education, industrial training, and maintenance of white dependent girls and boys. The proposition was made to the Synod by Mr. and Mrs. Geo. N. Davis, and was explained by Dr. J. L. Mauze as a purpose long cherished in their hearts for the higher development of such a class of persons to a higher progress in moral and spiritual training, and as interested therein he had fostered and developed such a plan so as to become feasible.

Morris Goodwin cordially invited every member of the congregation to remain for the Sunday School which would meet immediately after the morning service and urged a good attendance in the evening at the young people's meeting. To Mrs. Harding's unimaginative notice of the sale he added several effective words of his own which brought the light of anticipation into the eyes of the sixty-seven people present. "Oh!" The young pastor checked himself from uttering the exclamation aloud as he glanced at his open notebook and hastened to announce that on the following Sunday a contribution would be taken for the work of the missionary society which it had been the custom of that church to remember during the month of August.

The sale was a decided success. With the promise of $10 at the very least Judith went home tired but triumphant. "I never worked so hard for anything before in my life," she declared, "but oh, how happy the children will be when they have a beautiful corner of their very own!"

Three conditions were involved: First, that the Synod shall raise $50,000 in addition thereto towards the endowment of such a school; second, that the school shall be known as the Davis-Stuart School as a memorial of the parents of Mr. G. N. Davis; third, that the school shall be established on the Davis farm, in Greenbrier County, W. Va., known as Snow Hill, and shall be a perpetual institution for the care, education and maintenance of dependent white girls and boys.

Some $30,000 were raised at once toward the $50,000 required of the Synod, with the balance to be raised in a few days, while plans were laid to raise an additional $50,000 towards a fuller endowment of the school in the Synod. As such an institution is greatly needed and the hearts of the people are open to it, the plan is expected to be put into speedy and successful operation. One condition of the endowment is that the Synod will commence work in connection with the buildings, etc., by March 1, 1919.

Seven trustees were elected to carry out the proposed plans, viz: Mr. and Mrs. G. N. Davis; Fred C. Prichard, of Huntington; Jno. L. Dickinson and A. A. Prichard, of Charleston; F. L. Baumgardner, of Beckley, together with a trustee chosen by Mr. and Mrs. Davis.

A committee of three was chosen with Rev. S. M. Glasgow, chairman, to notify Mr. and Mrs. Davis of the acceptance by Synod of their generous proposition. An advisory committee was also elected, one from each of the three Presbyteries of the Synod to act in conjunction with the trustees, viz: Rev. J. L. Mauze, of Kanawha; Rev. J. L. Lineweaver, of Greenbrier, and Rev. F. H. Barron, of Tygart's Valley Presbytery.

Much interest and enthusiasm were manifested in the consideration of the above proposal and the plans for carrying out of the same which will tend to the benefit of a large number of our boys and girls and for the welfare of the Church and State.

Malden and Dana—Rev. Harvey H. Orr was received by Kanawha Presbytery from the Presbytery of Arkansas and on December 29 was duly installed as pastor of the Malden and Dana Churches by a large and interested congregation who were greatly pleased to have a pastor again settled among them. Rev. J. W. Carpenter, their former pastor, and Rev. Jno. K. Hitner conducted the services at the installation.

Kenava Church—Mr. M. C. Bowling, a licentiate of Atlanta Presbytery, was lately elected unanimously as pastor of the Kenava Church and a called meeting of Kanawha Presbytery will give permission to this church to prosecute the call before the Presbytery of Atlanta. This church has been for several months without a pastor, since the resignation of Rev. J. B. Waller, who served the church for over ten years.

After the usual announcements on the Sunday following the sale the pastor stated in general terms the work of one of the six missionary societies to which Fairview contributed annually and requested that a generous offering be made. After the plates were passed he preached an acceptable sermon on "The Wisdom of Solomon."

"I have been wondering about that offering," said Judith as she dropped the dinner silver into a pan of hot, sudsy water. "I wish we had thought to inquire about it."

Morris was polishing a tumbler with interest but he stepped to the telephone. "$4.73," he reported three minutes later. "About what I expected."

"$4.73!" echoed Judith. "Are you sure that he said $4.73?" It was the first missionary offering that had been taken since she came as a bride to Fairview.

"Yes, $4.73. Deacon Tompkins looked it up and found it was only 25 cents less than the amount contributed last year," replied Morris as if apologizing for the church he had served for sixteen months. "He says the foreign work is all that people feel like giving much for now; they have an idea it is connected with the war in some way. You know nearly all my parishioners here are farmers."

"Yes, I know," returned Judith, her blue eyes deeply puzzled, "but they look like prosperous farmers—Rose Harding's hat is prettier even than mine. And it was such a good cause!"

The minister dried a hand-painted salad dish vigorously. "But think of all the good causes that are presented from this pulpit within a year," he protested. "I once heard Mrs. Riggs say it was 'give, give, give!'"

"And Mrs. Riggs told me Wednesday night that her family had saved $3 to spend on the sale," laughed Judith. "She said our advertising during the last three weeks in the Fairview items of The Northville News was what had 'got her' and when her children saw the postor in the Hilltop office they were wild to go too. So they emptied their good-time bank and hitched up and drove three miles and she didn't begrudge what they had spent, not a cent. None of the Riggsses were at church last Sunday or the Sunday before. They couldn't have known about that collection."

"But they wouldn't have given much if they had known."

"It would all have helped, though," continued Judith. "$4.73." She was saying the figures as if to herself. "$4.73! Several of my friends back home take the missionary papers and they will find out that my husband is the pastor of a—a $4.73 church."

Morris wasn't quite sure whether he was supposed to laugh or not. He decided he had better not. "I wish the contributions were larger, dear," he confessed earnestly, "but we can hardly force people to empty their pocketbooks into the plates."

"Well, we didn't force them to buy quantities of home-made candy and ice cream and all those tickets for the entertainment Wednesday night," Judith insisted.

"No," agreed Morris, "but the ladies' aid had advertised the sale so widely and had put so much work into it that—Judith, I can see by your eyes that you have an idea! So have I—dozens of them. I have been blind. Absolutely blind!"

It was Sunday morning, almost a year from the day that Rev. Morris Goodwin and his wife had spent in the study of the Fairview manse working out the ideas that came thronging to the missionary departments of their brains when they flung wide open the doors. Some they discarded as too visionary for a rural church; others they tried and found wanting; the rest they accepted and adopted.

"I wish it were as easy to prepare my everyday sermons as those for these missionary Sundays," observed Morris as he ate his breakfast toast. "I am as excited as a 10-year-old boy this morning. We ought to have a good crowd at church."

"I am sure of one," announced Judith gayly. "Didn't I spend an hour preparing that notice for the papers? And those posters! I never dreamed Edna Holmes would make three of them. Isn't her drawing of the missionary baby the dearest thing? And her lettering is exquisite! Of course I could have pasted pictures from a missionary magazine on a sheet of cardboard and written a few well chosen words of advertising the service today, but it wouldn't have had the same effect upon any one with an artistic eye."

"Especially upon Edna," added Morris quickly. "She promised Mrs. Taylor she would return to her Sunday School class today. Oh, Judith, I do hope little Tommy Riggs will come this morning. I can preach better with his shining black eyes looking up into my face, waiting breathlessly for the next thrill. I shall tell that story of the missionary who forded the river after an April freshet particularly for him."

"Oh, that story I cut from our church paper for the scrap box!" cried Judith. "And we thought at first that one box would do for all six societies! The six boxes will be overflowing before we know it. The church papers are full of information when once you begin to look for it and the societies are so good about sending material. But the greatest help, I think, comes from the letters you receive direct from the missionaries and workers. I hope none of the children will forget their barrels today. I know Tommy won't, for his mother drove six miles to buy him a new pair of shoes to wear to the 'miss'nary sermon.' He said he wasn't going to give his money to God 'with shoes with holes in.'"

From the pulpit of the Fairview Church Rev. Morris Goodwin viewed with satisfaction the congregation that had assembled that morning. The two front rows were alive with joyous-faced children impatiently waiting for the sermon they knew would be preached "spressly" for them. Morris descended the platform and stood where they could look into his face with less straining of the little necks. At once he wafted his pulsing audience into the fairyland of missions, flashing before it in the simplest, most compelling language deeds of love, deeds of heroism—true stories to which the young minds responded and thrilled to the exclusion of all childish thoughts of self. At the close of the ten-minute period the children sang a hymn of service they had learned in Sunday School, deposited their barrel banks upon the platform, and marched quietly back to the family pews. The sermon for the older members of his congregation was so spiritual, so educational, so interesting, that time and Sunday dinner were forgotten. The society represented that day became a vital issue that demanded and received financial support of every man and woman present.

After the Sunday School session Judith counted the pennies and nickels and occasional dimes that rolled merrily from the small wooden barrels while Morris and the treasurer bent over the silver and bills in the plates.

"$7.15!" announced Judith triumphantly.

"$32.58," added her husband a minute later. "About what I expected."

"$39.73," proclaimed Deacon Tompkins in an awe-struck voice. "And here's a dollar bill in my pocket the Lowrys sent by mail yesterday. They knew they might as well or you'd be after it. That makes $40.73! Lemme see, it's an average of considerably less than 40 cents apiece. I guess that won't hurt any of them. About ten times what we got last year or the year before and as far back as I can remember! Well, I never!"

As the young people left the church they heard the good deacon ejaculating, "Right here in Fairview! Well, I never!"

"I am glad Mrs. Allen reports our missionary Sundays so effectively," said Judith as they hurried homeward. "I must run in and tell her the amount of the offering. Won't the children be pleased when they get the paper Thursday and find they contributed over $7? $40.73! Doesn't it seem the simplest thing in the world?"

"The very simplest," agreed Morris heartily. "Any reasonably prosperous country church could do it. But don't stop at the Allens more than three minutes, Judith. I never was so hungry in my life."—Mary Sherburne Warren, in The Continent.

IN MEMORIAM.

Rev H. J. Mills.

The churches of Ashpole and Rowland, and the entire community, suffered a great loss in the death of our beloved pastor, Rev. H. J. Mills. He was installed pastor of Ashpole and Rowland Churches in August, 1913. Under his wise and efficient leadership, there has been a marked increase in the number added on profession of faith in Christ, and a decided increase in the contributions to all of the benevolent causes.

Mr. Mills was an able and efficient preacher of the Bible. In our Sunday Schools, as the teacher of the Men's Bible classes, he made a lasting impression on the hearts of the pupils. Mr. Mills not only preached the Gospel of Christ from the pulpit, but in his daily work he lived the Gospel of Christ. He proved himself to be the crowning work of God's creation, a "man." He was a man among men and a man whom men delighted to follow.

To all good causes he gave liberally of his money, his time and his talent. At the time of his death he was serving as the chairman of the Committee of Rowland Township for the Liberty

Bond Loan. He also gave much and valued work in filling out the questionnaires; here he made a lasting impression on all the colored people who came to him and he was admired and loved by the colored people also. On the day of his death all the flags on the public square floated at half mast in honor and respect for him. He will be greatly missed by the entire community.

In the church court he was an able and efficient Presbyter, wise in counsel and abundant in work.

He put the Lord's work above all other things and by example and by precept was ever busy in the Master's vineyard. Only time and eternity will reveal the results of all his labors.

In this hour of sorrow we extend to the devoted wife and children our heartfelt sympathy, and we pray for them the comfort of the Gospel of Christ.

Our hearts are saddened, and our heads are bowed with grief because of the loss to our session, the loss to our churches and the loss to the entire community, in the death of this great man of God. While we mourn, we rejoice to know that he has heard from his Master, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

MRS. NEILL A. MCKAY.

Union Presbyterian Church loses a most faithful and devoted member in the death of Mrs. Neill A. McKay.

Mrs. McKay, nee Mattie Janet Blue, the daughter of Capt. E. McN. Blue and Martha N. McNeill, was born, near Union Church, July 11, 1861, and died October 30, 1918; being in her fifty-seventh year.

On September 12, 1878, she was united in marriage to Mr. Neill McKay, of Harnett County. To this union were born nine children, two of whom have preceded their mother to the better land.

In early girlhood she gave her heart to her Saviour and united with the Union Presbyterian Church, and was a faithful member to the time of her death. She was gifted with leadership, which together with her consecration to the service of God, won for her a unique place in the work of her church.

For years, until failing health compelled her to lay down the work, she was the president of the Ladies' Auxiliary of Union Church, the activities of which society in every good work revealed in her a leadership of rare Christian worth.

Faithfulness to the services of her church, and loyalty to every cause of Christ was the dominating purpose of her life as was seen by all who knew her.

Her Christian character was revealed in her conduct as a neighbor and her helpfulness where there was need, in suffering and sickness in the community. The poor found in her a helper, the troubled, a comforter, and the distressed a wise counsellor.

An insight into her Christian character can be seen in her favorite song, "Take Time To Be Holy," which she tried faithfully to do in her daily life.

During the last few months of her life she was a great sufferer; but through it all her Christian faith was shown in her sweet resignation and uncomplaining patience in greatest pain.

As a mother she was devoted to her husband and children. She gave the best of her life in rearing her children for the noblest things in life. It was in her home life that her Christian character reflected the clearest the faith of Christ in her heart. May the Christ whom she loved and served so well, keep in everlasting peace the bereaved husband and children until the happy hour of reunion in glory.

Indeed, a mother in the home; a mother in Israel has fallen on sleep—"From whence none ever wakes to weep."

A Friend.

IN MEMORIAM.

Miss Belle Alford.

This faithful, devoted member of the old Ashpole Church, in Robeson County, N. C., was called to her rest and reward on the 8th of September, 1918, in the seventy-third year of her age; born May 27, 1846. Her years were lived out in the old home community and church where her people for generations back were known and honored and loved. Energetic, capable, looking well to the affairs of home and property, the kindest of friends, the best of neighbors, devoted to her church and its work, her's was a well spent life.

God gave her her own very distinctive place in home and community and church and in the hearts of her many friends. She filled it well and leaving at His call leaves an empty place and aching hearts.

For a little while: then the old associations will be renewed and our reunited lives go on forever in his presence and service.

NEW YEAR'S GREETING.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy six years old. I attend the First Presbyterian Sunday School. Rev. Dr. G. E. Moorehouse is our pastor and Elder M. G. McKenzie is our superintendent. I have recited the Child's Catechism to my Sunday School teacher, Mrs. John D. McAlister. This is my first letter to you and I hope it will be published. With very best wishes for the Presbyterian Standard and its readers for the New Year.

Your little friend,

TWO BROTHERS IN SERVICE.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nine years old. I go to school at Boggy Branch. My teacher is Miss Mary McCoy. I like her very much. I have two brothers in the service, one in the Thirtieth Division, one in the Marines. We have heard from one of them since the 11th of November; have had no news from the other since October 2nd; he was wounded. Please publish my letter.

Your little friend,

PAUL'S GOAT TEAM.

Paul Gophet went to bed nine years old, and when he awoke he was ten. But he wished he was not as old, when his three brothers gave him each ten slaps to begin the day with.

"Love pats don't hurt," said his sister Sallie, and she gave him ten kisses to make up.

Birthdays came so frequently in the Gophet family that they were not celebrated.

"We would never do anything else but celebrate," said jolly Mother Gophet, "if we kept all the birthdays and holidays in the year."

But Mother and Father Gophet had always some nice surprise in store. Paul came right in the middle of a long flight of steps, from Tom, who was very proud of his neckties and downy upper lip, down to Baby Bunting, whose one-act performance of putting his chubby toe into his mouth delighted the whole tribe, and convulsed them with laughter.

"Does any one know of a birthday?" asked Father Gophet, solemnly, at the breakfast table.

"I've got one!" cried Paul eagerly.

"Now that is strange," said his father. "There was something out in the barn for a boy with a birthday. Are you sure you are the one?"

Yes, Paul was sure, there was no other Gophet birthday in that month; which was a mercy, as Mother Gophet said, for Christmas came in that month, too, and New Year's followed close behind, and what would she do with any more "remembering days?"

Off to the barn flew the whole lot, Tom's long legs leading the mob, while Sallie brought up the rear, with Baby Bunting's head bobbing over her shoulder.

That big old barn! There never was another such place! No cows or horses were there, or had been for years. It was as sweet and fragrant as could be, with its big mows chock-full of hay. There was a real floor to the second story, that lifted up in the middle when the hay was put in, just like the draw to the bridge that spanned the broad river a mile away. There were real stairs leading to the upper story, not a ladder like those in the other barns in the neighborhood. Way up in the "cock-loft" were Tom's pigeons, and the pretty "pouters" and "fantails" were so tame that the children could catch them and hold and pet them to their heart's content.

Down in the basement were guinea pigs, rabbits and cages of white mice, besides toads and other reptiles and cats—cats everywhere, of all sizes and colors. For the Gophets were all enthusiastic lovers of any and every living thing.

In the stalls were four goats. Lily was a snow-white African goat with long black horns. Nannie was a common gray goat, with a wonderful appetite for all sorts of indigestible things, from the children's dresses to nails and old tin cans. But the prettiest sight of all was the twins, Lily's kids, Jettie and Gypsy, who belonged to Paul. They were so exactly alike that no one but he could tell them apart. They were black and white, and spotted beautifully.

But we shall never get to the birthday surprise if we try to describe all the barn pets, so I will tell you now what it was. There in the middle of the floor stood Jettie and Gypsy harnessed to the prettiest little wagon! The goats tossed their heads, and rattled their shining harness as if they were proud enough of it all. The old barn rang with the shouts of delight and surprise, as the tribe crowded around the little turnout. But Paul still stood in the doorway, staring with eyes and mouth wide open, but never uttering a sound.

"Go see your birthday present," said Sallie, giving him a little push.

"Is that mine?" gasped Paul, drawing a long breath.

"Read the placard," said Sallie, pointing to a big card that was fastened on the harness. And Paul read, "For little old Faithful."

"Is that me?" he gasped again.

"Who else can it be?" asked Sallie.

"Who gets the kindlings every night? Who runs the errands when all the rest shirk out? Who does all the chores when the other boys play hooky?"

"And who cuts wood for poor Ma'am Gallop?" cried Tom.

"And who always gives up the biggest piece, and gives me the biggest bite of his apple?" chimed in little Claire, whose heart lay very near her mouth.

"And who does the work the unfaithful boy leaves undone?" finished Sallie severely, and looking straight at Teddy, who turned very red and looked crest-fallen.

"I don't care!" he muttered, tossing his head. "You quit preaching, Sallie Gophet. You're always nagging a fellow."

But Sallie did like to "preach," and she held forth on the merits and rewards of good boys, and punishment of the bad ones, until there would have been an open fight between her and Teddy, but for Paul.

"O, hush up!" he cried. "I never did nothing" (for his feelings always affected his grammar). "I loved to do things. I never did nothing—never!"

But Paul's joy was unbounded when he at last realized that the whole outfit was his own. He had trained the goats to work in harness from the time they were tiny kids; though his harness was made from bits of string, and his wagon from a soap box, ingeniously combined with the wheels of a cast-off baby carriage. But this harness was a "sure enough" one, of shining red leather, all studded with brass. And this wagon was a miniature express, strongly made, and gay with bright paint. Was there ever such a lucky boy!

"O, my — O, my!" screamed Paul, his blue eyes shining with delight. "It's—it's—it's just—goluptious!" and that to Paul expressed the height of appreciation.

Paul never was happy unless he could share his pleasures, so Elsie and little Claire were politely assisted into the back seat of the wagon, and Teddy and Paul took the front, and off they went for a ride.

Paul's goat team became a feature in Goshen, the town where the Gophets lived, and a pretty picture it made with its load of happy young faces. Paul had other uses for it, however, and many an errand he went on for his parents or the neighbors. He made a "heater," or snow-plow, and with his goats attached, he cleared the paths for all the yards in the neighborhood. And wherever there was a lonely old lady, Master Paul could always be reckoned on, to clear paths, do errands, or bring wood with his team, and his bright, cheery face did the lonely old hearts as much good as did his ministrations.

But Paul had one grief: Sallie could never be persuaded to ride in his wagon.

Educational

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, RICHMOND, VA.

Rev. J. E. Walker, advance agent of the Billy Sunday campaign, spoke earnestly and helpfully to the students at the morning chapel service concerning the union evangelistic meetings which are to begin in Richmond on January 12. He expressed his gratification at the spirit of hearty co-operation pervading the student body.

The Ginter Park Church enjoyed a rare double privilege in hearing on a single Sunday two such men as Rev. Dr. C. Anderson Scott, Professor of New Testament Interpretation in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Cambridge, England, and Rev. Dr. Henry M. Woods, of Tsing-Kiang-Pu, China. The seminary at Cambridge is closed this year on account of the war, and Dr. Scott is lecturing in America during the winter. He preached on the losing and saving of one's life. Dr. Woods is an alumnus of Union Seminary (1882), is well known as one of our veteran missionaries, reviser of the Mandarin version of the New Testament and author of the Christian Commentary on the Chinese classics, and is always a welcome visitor to his alma mater. He preached nobly on the glorious gospel of the blessed God as contrasted with the religions of China.

On the evening of January 1, Dr. T. C. Johnson gave an elaborate and deeply interesting review of the notable events of the wonderful year which has just closed, showing the hand of God in contemporary history.

On New Year's day Professor Sleeth resumed his course in public speaking, with all his old-time force and fire.

For the half year just closed there were enrolled at the seminary 64 students, distributed as follows: Seniors, 20; Middlers, 18; Juniors, 20; Fellow, 1; Postgraduates, 4; Special, 1. This does not include the 23 ministers who have enrolled for the special mid-winter course, nor the 19 ministers who are pursuing the special degree course by correspondence, but only the 58 undergraduates and the 6 postgraduates and specials. The states and countries having the largest representation are North Carolina, 18; Virginia, 11; Georgia, 7; Tennessee, 5; South Carolina, 4; Japan, 4, and West Virginia, 3. Arkansas has 2, Florida 2, and Alabama, Iowa, Kentucky, Korea, Mississippi, Ohio, Oklahoma and Texas 1 each. This total of 64 is much larger than was expected in this war year, as many of the students have been in the army and navy. There will be some increase in the second half year, and there are indications that by the opening of the next session in October the attendance will be as large as before the war and probably larger.

She felt it beneath the dignity of her fifteen years, for she was now "putting away childish things," though at heart she was just as much a child as ever. One day she was walking in the woods when Paul overtook her with his team.

"O, Sallie!" he cried, reining up the goats in good style beside her. "Come ride, now do! just a little way."

Sallie refused at first, but who could resist Paul's pleading? At last she consented, just to please him; and stipulating that the ride should not extend beyond the woods, and must be kept a solemn secret. Paul agreed, and jumped out to help her in, pushing the front seat well back to allow room for Sallie's long legs.

When she was nicely seated, and he was about to spring in, his hat blew off. He dropped the reins and ran to catch it, but a gust of wind flung it right into the goats' face. They shied, then started off in a panic. Madly they tore down the road, Sallie clinging to the seat, helpless to stop them, for the reins were dragging on the ground. She shouted to the goats, but that only made them run the faster. They were hungry and impatient to get home, for they had been all the forenoon on the road.

Down through the main street they flew, past stores and houses, bearing the mortified and angry girl. Her hat blew off, and her long hair streamed in the wind, but all she could do was to hold on for dear life, though the tears blinded her eyes. The goats never slackened their speed until they reached the barn and halted in their stalls. Far, far behind ran Paul, puffing and blowing, and gasping, at the top of his voice, "Whoa—whoa—stop—Sallie—stop! Bring back my team!"

Sallie scrambled out of the wagon as soon as it stopped, and rushed to the house in a passion of tears.

"O, I'll never—never see anybody again!" she wailed, as her mother tried in vain to comfort her. "I can never look people in the face! What will they think of me, to ride through the town like a great tomboy? O dear me! What shall I do?"

Paul reached the barn full ten minutes afterwards, and as soon as he found that his beloved team was safe and unhurt, he rushed to the house.

"What made you run off with my goat team?" he demanded of Sallie, who stared at him for a moment breathless at this unmerited accusation.

"Run off with your team?" she cried, in utter bewilderment. "Why, what do you mean? It was your old team that ran off with me!"

"I'll never ask you to ride again," sputtered Paul.

"And I never want you to!" declared Sallie.

"Children, children!" warned Mother Gopet, as Sallie's black eyes blazed and Paul's little fists doubled up.

But Sallie's rage ended, as all her furies generally did, in a hearty burst of laughter, as the comical side of the affair struck her; and Paul, seeing that no blame was attached to his beloved goats, joined in, so the trouble was over. But Sallie never forgot her ride, which became a by-word of the family.—Sarah Endicott, in Congregationalist.

The Little New Year.

Oh, I am the little New Year, oh, oh!
Here I come tripping over the snow,
Shaking my bells with a merry din;
So open your doors and let me in!

"He cannot fail who works with God."

REVIEWING THE YEAR.

Looking back on the year that has gone, the things that bring us the greatest satisfaction are not any personal successes we may have had, or any pleasures we may have enjoyed, but the efforts we have made to improve the conditions of others and our own progress in moral character. Nothing bears reviewing better than acts of self-sacrifice, and nothing brings greater reward. While, therefore, we must not allow ourselves to be unduly depressed by a review of the past, we must allow it to have a salutary influence upon us, and resolve with the lesser opportunities the coming time may present to us to make the most and the best of them. Much is still possible to every man who redeems his time, and who consecrates himself wholeheartedly to the service of God and man.—Ex.

In a locality where only three deaths resulted from 400 cases of influenza, it is learned that in each case the fatality was "alcoholic pneumonia." The patient had been told that whiskey was a good remedy. In one case the dying man said that he had followed an advertisement which said that liquor was being used in treating the influenza. News comes from other places that the liquor traffic, having lost so many friends and the war having robbed it of many customers, was willing to resort to murder to save its own life—for it is nothing short of murder to advise a person suffering from such a disease to weaken his system by alcoholic indulgence.—N. Y. Advocate.

Our boat is small and His sea large, yet not so large as His love.—Dr. W. L. Watkins.

Miscellaneous

BY A HAIR.

Some thirty-five years ago, at a public dinner, General Von Manteuffel, the German military governor of Alsace, got into a dispute with a French diplomat over the question of the superiority of French workmen over the artisans of other nations. As General Von Manteuffel hated the French and everything that savored of that nation, the dispute assumed the proportions almost of a quarrel. Finally the French diplomat, with a smile, remarked that nothing existed that was so ugly that a French expert could not make it into a thing of beauty.

Pulling a hair from his bristly gray mustache, Von Manteuffel said: "All right, then, take that, send it to your French artisan, and let me see if he can make a thing of beauty out of it."

The diplomat took the hair, sent it to a well-known Parisian jeweler, with a letter explaining the circumstances, appealing to his patriotic pride, and telling him to spare no expenses in making that hair "a thing of beauty;" and then he assured the German General that if he would have patience he should see the result of real French skill.

In the course of a week the general received a neat parcel from the jeweler. It was a beautiful scarf pin in the form of a Prussian eagle; in the talons of the bird was the hair, at each end of which was a little gold ball. On one of the balls was inscribed "Alsace" and on the other "Lorraine," while on the eagle's perch were the words: "You hold them, but by a hair only."

Needless to say the general had very little to say after that against French workmanship.—Young People.

ROCKABY, BABY.

There are few children in this country who have not heard the nursery rhyme sung by the mother:

"Rockaby, baby, in the treetop;
When the wind blows, the cradle will rock;
When the bough breaks, the cradle will fall,
And down will come cradle, baby, and all."

But how many know the origin of these lines? Shortly after our forefathers landed at Plymouth, Mass., a party was out in the field, where the Indian women were picking strawberries. Seven of these women, or squaws, as they are called, had papooses—that is, babies, and having no cradles, they had tied them up in Indian fashion, hung from the limbs of the surrounding trees. When the wind blew, these cradles would rock. A young woman of the party, observing this, peeled off a piece of bark and wrote the above lines which, it is believed, was the first poetry written in America.—Girls' Companion.

MORTALITY IN CANTONMENTS.

A communication from Washington, D. C., says that about 10,000 members of the United States army died of influenza in the military stations of this country during the epidemic this year. This number of deaths occurred out of a total of 338,257 cases. Due to the fact that the deaths from influenza and pneumonia in the military camps were not grouped separately, only approximate estimates can be made of the death toll of the epidemic.

Since September 13, the day of the outbreak of the epidemic, to December 1, there were 19,094 deaths from all causes in the military stations of this country. The death toll of the epidemic is obtained by subtracting approximately 2,000 deaths from causes other than influenza and pneumonia from the total deaths from all causes. These figures are based on death rate last year, the announcement of the war department said. The greatest number of cases of influenza from a single camp was reported from Camp Funston, Kansas, where a total of 13,631 developed during the epidemic. Camp Funston had 2,394 cases of pneumonia and 920 deaths from all causes during this period, which was below the rate of the other camps, however. The greatest number of deaths during the epidemic was at Camp Grant, Illinois, where there were 1,091 deaths. There were 10,790 cases of influenza and 2,363 of pneumonia.—Banner.

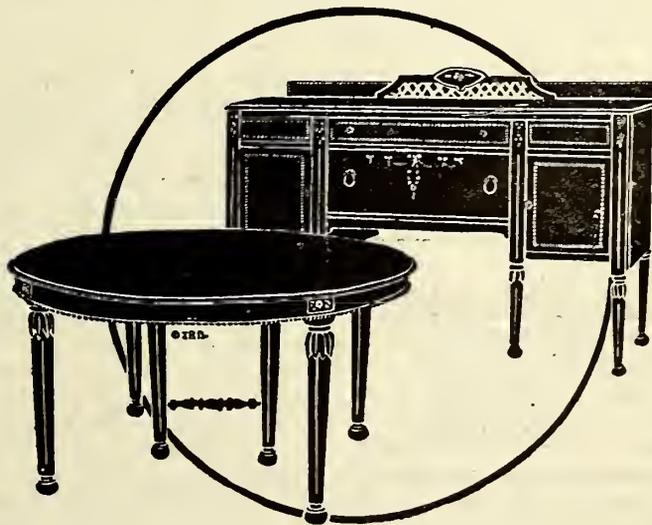

SAVE PIANO MONEY.

The saving in the price of your piano or player piano, if you purchase it through the Presbyterian Standard Piano Club, is sufficient to pay for two years of instructions under a good music teacher. Or, to illustrate the saving in another way, if you should purchase a similar piano on payments covering three years the Club would save you approximately one year's payments. But the saving in price is only one of the many advantages offered you by the Club. It gives you absolute protection as to the quality and durability of your instrument. It provides the most convenient and the fairest terms of payment.

You cannot afford to overlook the economies and conveniences incident to ordering your piano or piano player through the Club. You have everything to gain, nothing to lose, by clubbing your order with ninety-nine other Club members in a wholesale order for eight carloads of instruments. You are responsible only for your own purchase, the Club attends to the rest. Write for your copy of the handsomely illustrated Club catalogue today. BIARIUM ROCK WATER RELIEVES WEAK AND NERVOUS PEOPLE.

Barium Rock Water is being prescribed by many physicians in the treatment of nervous debility and as a tonic and flesh-builder. They also recommend it in cases of indigestion, dyspepsia, rheumatism, gout, eczema and diseases arising from uric acid poisoning and for disorders of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

Mr. J. W. McCoy, of Charlotte, N. C., writes: "I had a violent case of typhoid fever and for three years was a nervous wreck. I was totally unfit for any kind of business. I suffered continually from my stomach. My improvement began with the use of Barium Rock Water and I was entirely cured."

If you are weak and nervous, if you suffer from melancholia, hysteria or are afflicted with any of the above diseases, send $2.00 for ten gallons. If it fails to relieve your case, we will refund your $2.00. It is understood that the empty demijohns are to be returned prepaid. Address Barium Springs Co., Box E-21, Barium Springs, N. C.

THE DOMESTIC PROBLEM.

The domestic problem is assuming large proportions in England. A writer in the London Daily Mail says: "I find a sign of the times in an advertisement today seeking the services of 'three ladies' to do the entire work of a small house. It is quite possible that the lady domestic will be far from a rarity after the war. The inevitable improvement in the status of the servant will make her possible. Only, of course, we shall not call her a 'servant.' That is a word which seems likely to disappear.

"In the meantime the thing itself, as I mentioned in a previous letter, has to all intents and purposes disappeared. The competition for domestic help of all sorts is frantic—there is no other word for it. Women with large homes invade the registry offices prepared to take entirely untrained women and to pay them handsomely. But the servants are very critical of mistresses nowadays. Conscious of their own shortcomings, the latter frequently take the war knitting or sewing to the registry office with them, so that they may profitably employ the long period of waiting until they find a maid who approves of them sufficiently to enter their service. This is not exaggeration; it is hard fact.

"One day last week a well-known humorist, who is not very robust, shamefacedly let me into the secret of a recent improvement in his health. 'Between ourselves,' he said, 'the only thing to which I can attribute it is the fact that I now do most of the housework. Both our maids have gone into a munition factory. Sweeping I find to be a most admirable exercise.'

"On the same day a city man told me that his doctor had ordered him an immediate short change. 'I'm completely "gone in,"' he said. 'My city responsibilities, as you know, are very great, but I could have kept going for some time longer if for the last month it hadn't been necessary for me to do two hours' housework every morning before leaving for town at 8 o'clock!'

"One more true story. A woman of my acquaintance has solved her domestic problem by getting in three separate charwomen each day. When one has finished her four hours' shift another comes in. Thus, one woman prepares breakfast, another luncheon, and the third dinner. 'Mummy,' said my friend's little girl of seven the other day, 'I do wish the Nannie who dresses us in the morning knew as many stories as the Nannie who puts us to bed!'"

Remember that the clouds which veil the light,
 The gloomy shadows which obscure the way,
 Come but to pass, and soon must take their flight,
 Before the radiance of th' advancing day.
 The night of weeping shall not long endure,
 The morn of joy is sure.

KILLS CATARRH GERMS

Famous Hyomei—Mr. Booth's Wonderful Discovery.

Some years ago, the noted Richard T. Booth, founder of the blue ribbon movement and temperance orator and leader of international fame who induced over a million men to sign the pledge, developed a very serious catarrhal trouble. Seeking to regain health, he went to inland Australia where he breathed day and night the antiseptic balsams as given off by the Eucalyptus forests.

This experience led Mr. Booth to the discovery of the most wonderful catarrhal treatment known to medical science—Hyomei, which is formed from the purest oil of Eucalyptus combined with other healing and antiseptic ingredients. Hyomei is a germ killing vapor, absolutely harmless but wonderfully effective in the treatment of Catarrh and colds of the head, Catarrhal Coughs, Bronchial Catarrh, Spasmodic Croup, Catarrhal Laryngitis or Hay Fever.

The treatment is simple but most scientific. You breathe Hyomei. It is pronounced the only method of treatment that sends by direct inhalation to the most remote part of the air passages, a balsamic air that destroys germs and bacilli of bronchial catarrh in the breathing organs, soothes and allays irritation and enriches and purifies the blood. All druggists. Booth's Hyomei Co., Ithaca, N. Y.

Wash the Poisons of RHEUMATISM

SCIATICA, NEURALGIA AND URIC ACID

Out of Your System With Shivar Spring Mineral Water.

SHIVAR SPRING AS NATURE MADE IT. NOW PROTECTED BY SANITARY SPRING HOUSE.

The Guarantee.

Think of it! A mineral water of such wonderful blood-cleansing power that it is actually shipped to every state in the Union and even to foreign lands under a positive guarantee that the price will be refunded, should the user report no benefit.

Shivar Mineral Water is unquestionably the greatest of all American mineral spring waters and there are thousands who contend that it is the best mineral water in all the world.

In Rheumatism and in other forms of auto-intoxication such as Sciatica, Neuralgia, Chronic Headache and Uric Acid Diathesis, Shivar Mineral Water has succeeded where every known medicine had failed. Physicians attribute this to its peculiar power of dissolving and completely washing out of the system the leucomaines, or body poisons that cause these diseases.

Delightful to drink, wonderful in its blood-cleansing power, Shivar Spring Water may be shipped any distance, at any season, without losing its virtues in the slightest.

Though a thousand miles away, you may use it in your home with identically the same results, as if you drank it at the Spring.

The Results.

Read the following letters which are fair samples of tens of thousands that are received at the Spring, then accept Mr. Shivar's guarantee offer. It gives you the equivalent of a three-week's visit to his celebrated Spring, with no charge for the water should you report no benefit. Sign your acceptance on the coupon below.

WOMEN AS Y. M. C. A. WAR SECRETARIES.

Can men's places be filled successfully by women? The experiment is being tried in a few instances and a private letter received from Miss Grace Leigh Duncan promises well for its success. She is a daughter of the late Dr. William A. Duncan, for many years Field Secretary of the Sunday School and Publishing Society. Last spring she went to France as a canteen worker. After several weeks' service she was placed in charge of a Y. M. C. A. "hut" which she thus describes:

"The 'hut' is one of the most attractive in France, a remodeled barn with tile floors, cement walls and heavy beam ceilings. We have a large general room, a reading and writing room, and a canteen at the rear, a small area which I am fitting up as an overflow for warm evenings. I practically make it my home, bring my sewing and knitting and writing over here and am at home to the boys and the officers whenever they have time to drop in for a talk, and there is very little time during the day when I am alone. In the evenings, when there is no entertainment, I play checkers, etc., with the men, or we gather around the piano and sing, or some of the boys who have been to the front tell of their experiences.

"I am just the happiest woman in France. It surely is good to see their faces light up, and to feel the grip of their hands, when one happens to run across lads who have not talked with an American woman since they left home, and to have them tell how good it is to hear a woman talking 'the real stuff.' They are fine lads, for the most part, and it is good to be able to help tide over some of the rough places. Last night we had a bunch of about three hundred landed here for the night in transit toward the front and our hut was full to overflowing, but our hearts opened wide to take them all in, and give them the pleasantest evening since they left the States; for these were some of the men who had just landed.

"Right here I want to say that if any one tells you that our boys are getting drunk and that they are going to the bad morally, you deny it in very emphatic language. There are a few cases, but the percentage is very small and the boys for the most part are clean and wholesome.

"Another thing in connection with the men. If you hear that many of them don't know what we are fighting for, don't believe it. I haven't come across a single man yet who didn't know why Uncle Sam threw down the gauntlet and who wasn't ready to back him up to the limit. They all want to get up to the front and have a personal tussle with the Huns. Some of the men who are in positions which may hold them at the rear for the duration of the war are moving heaven and earth to get transfer.

"We have a fine lot of officers here and a splendid bunch of men, picked out of the various organizations and sent here to train for hospital and ambulance work. Do you wonder that I would rather be here than any place in the world?

"Last night one of the boys, a lad with whom I had not talked at all, as he passed me said, with a smile, in broken English, 'Oh, how it make my heart swell to see an American lady.' And it isn't the boys only but the officers who are almost as homesick sometimes as the privates. I've decided that all the wives and sweethearts in America must be just my build, for I couldn't count the number of times I have been told that a particular woman was just my height and weighed just about as much. It simply shows how an American woman over here stands as representative of all that is dear to them in the womankind of America, for it isn't only the younger women I represent, but more than once I've been told, with an apologetic hope that I didn't mind, that my gray hair made them think of mother."—Congregationalist.

THE KAISER AND HIS GOD.

It was characteristic of the tribe of Hohenzollerns that they were anxious always to claim God as their side partner in Prussian development and conquest. In fact they made for themselves a god in their own image. Up to the last the late Emperor William kept on assuring the world that he held a monopoly of the Divine favor and assistance. What in his retirement in Holland he thinks of the side partner who deserted him in his hour of need, no recorded utterance of his has revealed.

The world recognized that the Kaiser had mistaken a divinity of his own creation for the Lord of Hosts and the King of Righteousness. That mistaken confidence was nevertheless an unquestionable element of strength for him in his domination of the trained and docile German people. Here, in his own words, is the character of his authority as he understood it:

Each of the Hohenzollern princes was from the outset of his career conscious that he was only God's vice-regent upon earth, that he would have to render an account of his work to a higher King and Master, and that he must faithfully perform the work appointed him by the Almighty to do. As I look upon myself as an instrument of the Lord, I am indifferent to the point of view of the present day.

And here is the lesson which he drew for himself from that conviction of his divine authority:

There is only one master in this country; I am he, and I will tolerate no other. There is only one law—my law; the law which I myself lay down.—Congregationalist.

One of the good stories with which Prof. Harry Fosdick, of Union Seminary, is punctuating the splendid addresses he is delivering here and there, advocating the League to Enforce Peace, illustrates the fact that many of the boys now coming back have had to be content with manual work behind the lines. He came across one boy in France who described in semi-pathetic, semi-humorous fashion how his lot, for all the months he had been overseas, had been to peel potatoes and wash dishes. Then the youth added, "I guess I'm pretty well fitted now to become the wife of some good girl back home." An incident like this suggests that we must not expect the narration of too many hairbreadth, personal escapes on the part of our returning boys, and we must not reserve our admiration exclusively for those who went over the top. Fidelity in the back lines, even though one did nothing but pare potatoes or shovel coal, entitles any soldier to the grateful praise of his countrymen.—Congregationalist.

"With God over the sea; without Him not over the threshold."

160 HENS—1,500 EGGS.

Mrs. H. M. Patton, Waverly, Mo., writes: "I fed two boxes of 'More Eggs' to my hens and broke the egg record. I got 1,500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly 21 days." You can do as well. In fact, any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs" and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs, so if you wish to try this great profit maker write E. J. Reefer, poultry man, 6251 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1.00 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be refunded on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. Send a dollar today or ask Mr. Reefer for his free poultry book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.—Adv.

"St. John the Baptist did no miracles." And he died, apparently midway in his work. He died in prison. Murdered! A failure! No, as God lives, no! For what says the Master above that butchered corpse? "Verily, I say unto you, among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist." And why, O Lord? "Because fidelity is success! Fidelity is success."

"GOD'S SERVICE STAR"

Letters are coming from all quarters of the Church stating that on account of quarantine regulations the service prepared for the Sunday nearest Christmas could not be held.

Select a Later Day

All the material in "God's Service Star" is suitable for any other time. The great appeal is for the lives of the boys and girls for the ministry and mission service. Make use of it at some other season.

Conduct It With Faith and Hope

There is a great call today for Christian leaders. Your Church and Sunday School should furnish its quota. God knows the need. He is calling those whom He would make ministers and missionaries. The Holy Spirit works through human means. Help them hear the call!

Help Others Prepare

Scores of boys and girls of approved ability, from poor homes, want to complete their college training for Christian service. They need aid. The Church, through this Committee, is aiding them, by loans, to be repaid either in money or in service to the Church. We greatly need more funds for this. One hundred dollars will keep a boy or a girl in a Presbyterian College, a Bible Training School or a Theological Seminary.

Remember the Veterans

The closing of the churches and the innumerable interruptions of the winter have stopped some of the usual flow of money to our treasury for the faithful ministers, who on account of sickness or old age, have been forced to retire both from labor and from income, and for the needy widows and orphans of our deceased ministers.

Times of Strain and Stress

The absence from home of fathers and brothers who have been the bread winners, the unusual prevalence of sickness and the large increase in the cost of living, have added to the burdens and increased the needs of the faithful and uncomplaining servants of the Church and of those who are now preparing for places of leadership.

FOR ALL OCCASIONS.

The parrot-like way in which our school children are taught was illustrated in a school where each morning the teacher asked the children:

"Children, what would you do if fire were to break out in this building?"

The children would then repeat in chorus:

"We would rise in our places, step into the aisle and march quietly out of the building."

One morning a distinguished visitor came to the school, and was sitting quietly on the platform when the teacher stepped before the pupils and, instead of asking the usual fire drill question, said:

"Children, what would you say if I were to tell you that Dr. Smith is to speak to you this morning?"

The children promptly replied in chorus:

"We would rise in our places, step into the aisle, and march quietly out of the building."

Two great hindrances to usefulness in those who think they wish to be useful, yet have never really tried to be, are pusillanimousness and ambition. They are twin sisters. To put it otherwise, there is the fault of not thinking it worth while to do a little because it is little, and of not caring to do something because it may not lead to much—Bishop Thorold.

After coming in from a twenty-mile "hike" the officer in command of a negro company said, before dismissing them, "I want all the men who are too tired to take another hike to take two paces forward."

All stepped forward except one big husky six-footer. Noticing him, the officer said: "Well Johnson, ready for twenty miles more?"

"No, sah," replied Johnson, "Ah'm too tired to even take dem two steps."—Everybody's.

A teacher was taking a class in the infants' Sabbath school room, and the scholars had to finish each sentence to show that they understood her.

"The idol had eyes," the teacher said, "but it couldn't—"

"See," cried the children.

"It had ears, but it could not—"

"Hear," was the answer.

"It had lips," she said, "but it couldn't—"

"Speak," once more replied the class.

"It had a nose, but it couldn't—"

"Wipe it," shouted the children, and the lesson had to stop.

Immanuel---God With Us.

God is always, always with me,
Though I cannot see His face,
Yet His love is round about me,
Goes with me from place to place.
If I live in His dear presence,
As the Master did of old,
I shall prove the sure protection
Which both me and mine enfold.

God is always, always with me,
Though I seem to stand alone,
He is ever in the shadow,
Keeping watch above His own,
Keeping watch though others fail me,
Watching, through the nights and days,
Till my heart rests in His keeping,
And my life is filled with praise.

—Elizabeth J. Woods, in The Churchman.

Editorial

An Earnest Request.

Gentle Reader, if you have not time to read all we offer this week, don't fail to read our appeal for Christ's starving little ones. Do not be dismayed by its length. You cannot put your time to better account than in considering your duty to these people.

The "Unspeakable Turk."

THIS was Mr. Gladstone's word. It was in 1895 and 1896 when Turkey was indulging in one of her many massacres of her Christian subjects. The bitter wail of the stricken people sounded around the world. It was then that Mr. Gladstone, nearing the end of his long and illustrious career, came forth from his retirement to voice the resentment of an indignant and horrified Christendom. He taxed the resources of his copious, rich and varied vocabulary in his effort to properly characterize those who were murdering their own innocent and defenceless subjects. He found all words inadequate, and could only designate them as the "Unspeakable Turk."

Of all people subjugated by Turkey the Armenians have been the greatest sufferers. The prime reason is because they have been the most intelligent, thrifty, enterprising and aggressive. These are valuable traits. If the Turks had been a normal people, they would have prized such citizens as their most valuable asset. But the Turks are not a normal people. Their only use for conquered nations is to rob them and enslave them. They feared the growing power and influence of the Armenians. They feared if they let them alone, they would grow to such a position in numbers, wealth and power as to be a menace. Their attitude toward these progressive citizens was precisely that of the Egyptians towards the Israelites who were settled in the fat land of Goshen. The Egyptians were alarmed at the growing numbers and prosperity of the Israelites. And the king said: "Come on, and let us deal wisely with them; lest they multiply, and it come to pass that when war falleth out they join our enemies and fight against us, and so get them out of our land." What he meant by dealing wisely with them was to devise methods for their destruction. He first tried hard labor, and that failing, he resorted to the murder of the male children. The Turk has resorted to the same wise method, the method of destruction.

Until this present war the utmost he could do was to drum up a pretext now and then for a local massacre, in which some forty or fifty thousand would be put out of the way. Beyond this the surrounding Christian nations would not permit the bloody work to proceed. Shame on the Christian nations for playing hands off to this extent. The only reason was that they knew no other way to preserve the "balance of power," that stereotyped and highly prized method of conserving the peace of Europe. Russia would long since have wiped the dirty Turk from the map of Europe; but the result would have been to give Constantinople into the hands of Russia, and it would never do for so strong a nation to occupy a position of such strategic importance. Since 1699, Turkey has been called the "sick man of Europe," and just because he was the "sick man" he was permitted to keep possession of his strong hold. Rather than see him ousted, the strong nations, jealous of each other, looked on while he indulged himself in an occasional orgy of blood.

This war freed the hands of Turkey for a time. When the Gallipoli campaign failed, the Turks claimed the credit of the failure. They thought they had won a decisive victory and ensured that the war would end in their favor. They now counted that they could do as they would with their own, with none to molest or make them afraid. No longer should it be merely a local massacre, no matter on how large a scale. Now it must be the extermination of the whole race of Armenians living within the borders of the Turkish Empire.

Not even the "Unspeakable Turk" could perpetrate so colossal a crime without the use of some camouflage. Hence they proceeded gradually. They disarmed the doomed people. Then they sent soldiers to the towns and cities to gather the leading men into groups, march them off to solitary places and shoot them to death. Having rendered their victims helpless, they now resorted to deportations. Avowedly this meant merely a change of home, but it really meant driving the people into the deserts of Arabia and Mesopotamia to die.

To exterminate a whole race of human beings is no small crime, no matter what method is used, were it done by the shortest, quickest and most decent method. But the Turks added greatly to the enormity of the crime by exterminating these people by the most cruel, brutal and indecent methods that they could devise. They gathered women and children into large wooden sheds and burnt them, catching little children by the legs and throwing them into the flames. On some of their victims they used the most excruciating tortures, tearing out their finger nails by the roots, nailing horse-shoes on their feet and using other like devices. The so-called deportations were journeys of long drawn out horrors, trudging day after day under burning suns, through hot sands without a mouthful of food, or a drop of water. The wild, fierce mountain tribes would swoop down on the unprotected caravans, kill the old men and boys, outrage the women and carry off the young girls. Few ever reached their destination. For example, only 150 out of one convoy of 18,000 were alive at the end of their journey.

The war finds the remnant of these Christian people in strange lands, homeless and penniless. Four hundred thousand of them are orphans. Most of the others are women and old men. How are they to return home and live till they reach the point of self-support? The only answer is, we must help them. We owe it to them on the ground of a common humanity. Especially we owe it to them on the ground of loyalty to Christ. These are Christian people, and they are suffering for their religion. The mute appeal of their miseries brings us face to face with the judgment test: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto me."

The people of America are asked to raise this week, between Sunday, the 12th, and Sunday, the 19th, the sum of $30,000,000. How meagre this sum compared with the enormous sums freely given for the purpose of destroying human lives. Surely every reader of the Standard will esteem it a privilege to do his part.

The Educational Campaign.

Rev. M. E. Melvin, D.D., the Field Secretary of the Committee on Christian Education, has just closed a successful campaign in the interests of Westminster College, Fulton, Mo., in which was raised over one-half million dollars as an endowment for that institution, whereby they secured the $75,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation.

He has been sent to this Synod by the Assembly's Committee to canvass in the interests of Queens College in connection with Flora Macdonald College.

His headquarters will be in Charlotte, but the two campaings will go on at the same time, as he has an experienced corps of workers to help him.

A Bouquet For the Home Mission Committee.

Dr. Victor I. Masters, of the Home Mission Board of the Baptist Church, in describing the progress of the various denominations for the past ten years, pays a high compliment to the Southern Presbyterian Church in general, and to our Executive Committee of Home Missions in particular. We take pleasure in quoting his words:

"For the period between 1906 and 1916 white Methodists in the South made about the same percentage of growth as the white Baptists, the Baptist increase being 31 per cent and the Methodists' 28 per cent. Both of these bodies are well above the average in growth among the larger religious bodies of the entire country.

"Because the Southern Presbyterians have meant much for the religious life of the South, though their numbers are comparatively small, it gives me distinct pleasure to be able to say that they have, for ten years, overtopped both the denominations just named in the percentage of growth. They have increased from 266,300 to 357,500, or 34 per cent. I take off my hat to the thoroughly alive and competent Presbyterian Home Mission Board, located in Atlanta, to the work of which much of this growth is due. Some years ago, we challenged the Presbyterians to become evangelizers as well as religious educators. We promised, if they would, that Baptists would undertake to give more adequate attention to nurturing the great number of our untaught members. Apparently they have taken up the challenge."

Dr. Masters based his figures upon Government report from 1906 to 1916. If he had taken our official report to the General Assembly of the same years, he would have found that instead of a gain of 34 per cent we made a gain of 37.7 per cent.

The Old Year and the New.

It has been a short twelve months since Nineteen Hundred and Eighteen appeared on the scene, yet in that time the young year has become old, and those of us who so gladly greeted the new comer, are now ready to say, The King is dead, long live the King.

We have gathered from the old year all that it has to give, so, with that selfishness so natural to man, we are ready to turn to the new year with a lively expectation of favors yet to come. This may be fickleness, yet it is like human nature. We all tire of the old and long for the new. In fact, though men sing the praise of old age, the average man has very little use for those of us who have "passed the meridian of life and are going towards the confines of eternity," as our old chum used to express it. Old age may have the wisdom of experience and its grey hair may be a crown of glory, yet old age is not beautiful, according to the standard of beauty adopted among men.

This old year was not even beautiful when young. It appeared with the smoke of battle surrounding its head, and throughout its career there have been crowded into its days horrors beyond human conception, and although it closes with the signs of peace gathering around it, the clouds of war have scarcely had time to disappear and the sounds of battle are still in the air.

There are thousands who will look back in coming years and recall this year as a horrid nightmare. Widows will weep as they remember what it brought to them, and the blind and maimed, as the days creep by, will associate the old year with their crippled state.

All of us wish that we could forget its history, but its events are indelibly burnt into our memories.

The New Year enters under more auspicious circumstances with a promise of better times, so for that reason we are ready to give it a warmer welcome. It is a serious thought that wrapped up in every year there may be serious changes for some of us. It is well perhaps that we cannot know what it has in store for us. We can only leave that future to Him who has through many years gone before us and prepared us for the changes.

If there should come summons for any of us, may He greet us on the other shore with a welcome for our faithfulness: In this world we are like the man in that gradually closing room of the old story, who saw its walls each morning that much nearer together, and realized that in the end they would close in upon him. Job realized this when he said, "My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle." They pass swiftly by and bring with them changes sudden and great.

The past year death has reaped a harvest. Ere another twelve months passes, some of us may be called hence. Let us work while it is called today, for the night cometh when no man can work.

The Stewardship Campaign.

Last year the success of the Stewardship Campaign was so great that the Church has been encouraged to attempt even greater things.

Last year we raised for all causes $3,000,000, and now we are about to inaugurate a Progressive Campaign extending three years, each year realizing one-half million dollars more than the preceding year.

From April, 1919, to April, 1920, they propose to raise $3,500,000; April, 1920, to April, 1921, $4,000,000; and April, 1921, to April, 1922, $4,500,000, making $12,000,000 in three years. This seems an impossible undertaking, but it is not. The war's demands have taught us to think in large figures, and the very largeness of the enterprise will appeal to men of means. It looks as if the Church means real business and is not simply playing at supporting the Lord's work.

The great lesson to be taught is that we are all stewards of the Lord, and that what we have is simply held in trust, and that when the Lord demands His own we must be willing to lay it upon His altar. Giving money, however, is not the only aim of this campaign. It is designed to develop our people along every line, so that the Church will make a better showing in the eyes of the world. There are eight points that they wish to stress. They propose—

1. To intensify the spiritual life of the church membership.
2. A Church-wide Evangelism.
3. To enlarge the scope and improve the method of Missionary Education.
4. To extend and perfect the work of the Church and Christian Education.
5. The "Survey" and a Church paper in every home.
6. To secure adequate support for every Benevolent Cause of the Church.
7. To promote a thorough Every Member Canvass in every Church.
8. To provide a living salary for every pastor and missionary.

A careful study of these eight points will show that they cover nearly every phase of Christian activity.

The fifth aim "to put the 'Survey' and a Church paper into every home," may, like Bethlehem in the land, be the least among the princes of Juda, but, if rightly considered, it will do more to develop team work among the churches than anything that could be done, and then if these papers should be read by the family, the pastors would be surprised at the growth of interest among their flocks.

The Value of Prayer

As It Is Related to the Perspective, the Program, and the Power of the Church of Christ.

By Rev. Arthur G. Jones, D.D.

The New Challenge.

THE War has so broadened the scope of human interest and has so interwoven the destinies of the nations that there is in the heart of the world today a new consciousness of the unity of mankind. Not since the Apostles received the Lord's command to teach all nations has the whole world loomed so clearly in the horizon of the Church or the complex needs of all mankind so definitely appealed for the ministry and power of the Christian Gospel as now. The hand of God has been laid upon the nations and the citadels of despotism and the institutions of oppression are falling before the onward march of the hosts of freedom. This mighty crusade for human justice has given a new birth to the heroic spirit in the life of men. The hearts of the multitude have seen a new vision of the glory of the sacrificial elements in human destiny and have gone gladly to the altar. The people of the earth are beginning to gird themselves for new liberties and achievements. Old conditions are being fused and the thought and desire of the human race are fluid today and ready to be run into new molds. The days ahead are the most critical days in the history of mankind.

In all this there is a new challenge to the Church of God. Mighty guns and the enginery of destruction may break the chains of tyranny and make the peoples of the earth free but only the Spirit of Christ can win the battles for righteousness in the world's life. The goal of political freedom may be won by martial courage but only the incorporation of the ideals of God in the People's heart will make the victory secure. The light of God's face shining upon the dial of history today marks the era of the Church's unprecedented opportunity. The mind of the Church must begin to think great thoughts; the heart of the Church must begin anew to thrill with the very passion of Christ for humanity; the hands of the Church must engage valiantly in a battle-plan as complex and extensive as the life of all mankind. This challenge is immediate because the day of opportunity will not wait. Old schedules are out of date. Small campaigns are destined to failure. There is no call for a new Gospel or a new Church, but the times demand a new awakening of God's people to equip the Church for a new application of the old Gospel, and therewith to Christianize America and evangelize the world. The Church is not indifferent to this challenge. With zeal and courage it is planning larger activities. It is formulating a program of twelve millions for the next three years for the better capitalization of all phases of its work both at home and abroad. This program, be it emphasized, is not merely a drive for funds, but for a quickening of the people's heart for the Lord's work, a revival of piety, a new consciousness of that sacred stewardship of life which is the high calling of every Christian.

The Call to Prayer.

Amid all these appeals of the world's need and the stirring of the Church's heart to respond to them, the one indispensable factor of success is God. It is a subtle heresy of the age that with able men and adequate money and right methods any results can be attained, but it is not so in the Church's ministry to the world. Without God and the immediate power of His Spirit victory is impossible. As we gird ourselves for the battle we must remember that victory is with the Lord, and the supreme duty of the Church is prayer.

The Perspective of Prayer.

It is only by prayer that the Church can see the meaning and the magnitude of its ministry in a true perspective. Only as the windows of the soul are open toward God and we see the world in the light of His purpose can the Church understand the campaign to which she is called. Many are the oppressions which have held down the masses of humanity in misery and despair, but the great oppressor is sin. Many are the crusades for the deliverance of mankind from tyranny of every sort, but human life will not be really or safely free until it receives that liberty which Christ brings to the soul. There must be in the Church a new conviction of the reality of this moral and spiritual darkness which hangs like a pall over the life of mankind. The Church must have a clearer consciousness of this shadow of the world's despair as it is illumined by the light of the heart of God who so loves the world, He has given His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him shall not perish but have everlasting life. The heart of the Church must be purified of its worldliness and selfishness, its horizon cleared of all earthly fogs and confusion, until it shall rejoice with a new passion in the glory of the Lord's commission to go and teach all nations. There must be in the Lord's host a new confidence that this campaign is going forward until to Christ shall be given the nations for His inheritance and the uttermost part of the earth for His possession. The Church must have a new revelation of her mission as it stands forth in the light of God, and the one and only avenue to this light is prayer.

The Program of Prayer.

Human wisdom may formulate its programs for the Lord's work but there can be no assurance that the program will ever be either right or adequate except it be according to the pattern revealed upon the holy mount of prayer.

This is true of the program of our Church as a whole. We are a part of a mightier host. Organic divisions and denominational banners may be seen here and there but the great Christian army is one, and the battalions of the Lord, marshalled upon their far-flung battle line are advancing under the one banner of the Cross. There is unity of command, and the one Generalissimo of this mighty host as it is campaigning in all the earth, is the Lord Himself. Our Church is a divisional unit holding a sector in the campaign. Facing these facts, the first and supreme question is not "what may be our opinion of the duty of the Southern Presbyterian Church," but "what is the mind of Christ." What we may think are the proper objectives to be taken by our division in the great advance is beside the mark. What are the orders of the great Captain? What does He expect of us? Only as we come into vital communication with Him through triumphant prayer can we ever rightly appraise the measure of our duty as a Church. A clear vision of her proper part in a world campaign, a correct estimate of the necessary equipment for the winning of her Christ-given objectives, a true appraisal of the resources of the Church and their application to the task—all this must be seen in the light which comes from above. The one thing which is indispensable in determining the Church's program is prayer.

But after the general program has defined the objectives which are according to the mind of the great Captain, the loyalty of the unit in the ranks is essential to victory. The mass of the Christian army must see the light. The individual disciple can determine his personal objective only in the vision which comes by prayer. The question of personal duty to the advance of the Gospel is too much determined by caprice or impulse or in utterly casual fashion. The great need of the present crisis is that every Christian of every sort everywhere shall go to his closet, and shut the door upon all worldly distractions and ambitions, and open the windows of the soul toward heaven and pray with honest heart, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me do?" When the rank and file of

The Life of William Plumer Jacobs

By Rev. James I. Vance, D.D.

(The Life of William Plumer Jacobs, by Thornwell Jacobs, A.M., LL.D. Fleming H. Revell Company, Publishers. Price, $2 net).

HERE is the life story of a man who did his dream. It is a volume which should be placed on the library shelf side by side with George Muller's Life of Trust. It is the biography of a man who put his trust in God until the impossible became actual. It is the record of a career in which the Divine Spirit operated. It is the history of a great achievement wrought out by unseen forces. It is a demonstration of the fact that faith tops omnipotence.

It is a book to thrill and inspire you, to comfort and elate you, to summon and challenge you, to throw you back on God and then to throw you down into life. Its pages are a tonic to the soul. Its simple narrative written by the loving pen of a gifted son leads the reader into the presence of the things which make life great. As one turns the pages of this volume and sees from humble beginnings that procession of deeds which immortalize, he finds himself turning his face toward the infinite and reaching out a hand for the power that shapes events to great ends.

"Seekest thou great things for thyself, seek them not!" This was the life motto William Plumer Jacobs elected for himself back in his sixteenth year.

In his preface, the author sums up in a paragraph what he develops in a volume. "Now that it is all over, the secret of his life stands revealed." It is an old secret, and very wonderful. From the beginning of time that which felt its power has glowed with a brightness so strangely beautiful that even a Moses must turn aside to see. For the life of this man can be summed up, with all the Apostles among the dead, in a single word—God. With it was coupled unselfishness, and dreams, and common sense. When he was gone it was seen that a romantic halo had gathered about Riverside and the Enoree and the Orphanage and over the whole little town of Clinton as if the pillars of fire and cloud that had led him so long would remain yet a little while over the spot he loved so well. But after all, these—his orphans and college and village and river, his honors and family—all these were but incidental to the great purpose of his life which was to show that the Power is conscious of us and that we may be conscious of Him. This is the Great Discovery—it is the biggest fact in our universe. It is worth writing a book to illustrate it again."

The son begins the life-story of his hero-father by lifting "the veil of the past" and showing us a lad at sixteen years of age in a great city. The lad is not satisfied with his college reports averaging 89, and promises to do better next time. One day he writes of his mother: "While you were here, mother, I did not love you as I ought, but I love your memory and will ever love it." We feel that a life thus anchored cannot drift far.

On February 8, 1858, he writes: "Tonight I applied for admission to the church, and was received as a member. I applied the 26th of last October, but was received only as a seeker. Thank God I am enabled to receive Him to my heart! O, that Pressley would find the way I have! Father joined just at my age." One wonders if the session had any thought of what the future man was to be and do when the lad appeared before them.

In an absorbing way Dr. Thornwell Jacobs carries us along as he recounts how his father chose the goal. "I long to preach," he said. . . . "I do most ardently desire to become a minister and to labor to do God's service; but O, Lord, Thou knowest me that I am the most unworthy of all Thy servants." Then "The Way to Bethany," and "Putting on the Armour," and "The Upper Room," and "My Mary."

Dr. Jacobs was to be more than a preacher. He was to be a shepherd. He was to be the pastor of a church and the founder of a college, but he was to be more. He was to be a father to the fatherless. Thornwell Orphanage is his enduring memorial. On May 28, 1874, "the great day" dawned and the cornerstone was laid.

"At last," he writes, "the cornerstone of the orphanage was laid. Today, the 28th of May, saw a great day in our town. At an early time the town was filled with carriages, buggies and people. The good Templars were out in force. The Masonic fraternity, presided over by Colonel Ball, numbered over a hundred. The ceremonies occupied but a short time. Then the stone was put in place. Among other things is contained my photograph. Then came the dinner. It was much more successful than I had anticipated. The proceeds (gross) will amount to at least $300—about $30 more received from kind friends on the grounds. One thing only makes me sad, and that is that this good cause had opponents and enemies that did all they could, but how ineffectually, to injure our good name and our receipts. And members of my own church, one or two only, but among these some that I loved, were of this opposition. I feel sorry that one of my friends was in it, but on the other hand how many showed true colors today! God bless and reward them!"

He had entered upon a life work that was to be a new demonstration to the world of what simple trust in God can do. Obstacles were surmounted, opposition was overcome, enemies were changed to friends. The work widened out, money came from the strangest sources and in the most unexpected ways. It was the work of prayer. This wonderful man seemed to reach a point where his supplications commanded the throne. He had the humility of a child but the courage of a saint. "On June 14 I prayed for $1,000 from

Dr. McPheeters on Assembly's Telegram to the President

By Rev. A. M. Fraser, D.D.

THE Presbyterian Standard of Nov. 20 contained a criticism by Rev. W. M. McPheeters, D.D., of the telegram sent to the President of the United States by the Durant Assembly. I was a member of the committee appointed by the Assembly to prepare that telegram. While I did not write it, I took part in the minute study and discussion and amending of it, by which it was brought to its final form, and voted for it in that form. I hold Dr. McPheeters' judgment in such matters in the very highest estimation and always challenge my own opinions if they differ from his. I have carefully reviewed the telegram in the light of his discussion and cannot but feel that his strictures upon it are forced and undeserved.

It may seem positively humorous to say it, but it is a fact, that the very things which Dr. McPheeters discovers as so objectionable in the telegram, are the very things the committee labored to keep out of it, and they spent several hours upon that task. I confess that after all our work upon it, I felt apprehensive lest the telegram might be misinterpreted and wrongly used, but I am breathing more freely since I have read Dr. McPheeters' article. For I am sure he has said the worst about it that can be said, and, in my judgment, it has passed the ordeal in safety.

I am in perfect accord and most ardent sympathy with all he says as to the purely ministerial and spiritual function of Church courts, and as to the impropriety—even sinfulness—of a Church court's making any pronouncement upon questions of State, even those that are most patently moral. But I differ with him as to the application of all that to the telegram in question. If he proves to me that it does apply, then no one will join with him more heartily than I in an effort to have the next Assembly do what it can to set our Church right again. As the matter lay in my mind then (and still lies there undisturbed) it was merely a case of praying for our Chief Magistrate, of telling him that we were praying for him, and why.

Surely no one in the face of First Timothy 2:1-2 can deny that it is our duty to pray for our rulers. Merely praying for them does not constitute an approval of their State policy, for Paul gave that injunction under Nero's reign. And if it be our duty to pray for the President, it cannot be wrong to tell him so. This seems to be one of Dr. McPheeters' cardinal objections to the telegram, that it was addressed to the President. If we must pray for him, why is it so wrong to tell him that we are praying for him? It was almost if not quite that very thing which Paul himself did when he said to Agrippa, "I would to God that thou wert altogether such as I am, except these bonds." And then, we tell the President why we are praying for him. We tell him we appreciate the tremendous burdens that oppress him, the immense tasks that lie before him, the frightful responsibilities with which he is charged. We tell him that we sympathize with him and pray for him, to the end that he may be led and may lead to "a righteous consummation." There is no suggestion as to what we think that "righteous consummation" would be. There is no expression of approval of anything he has done or may do. Only by importing into it something that the language itself does not express can any clause in the telegram be made to bear such an interpretation.

Dr. McPheeters places side by side the Spring Resolutions of 1861 and the Durant Assembly telegram of 1918 for comparison, and declares that the latter is in some respects worse than the former. I must demur to this charge. The Spring Resolutions expressly and particularly defined and approved a political dogma. The Durant telegram does not do this, nor can its expressions be construed into an approval of anything political, except by strained processes of inference. It is true that the Durant telegram is addressed to the President, while the Spring Resolutions were addressed to the Constituency of the Assembly, but as I have shown, it was a message which it was proper for the Church to address to the head of the State—an assurance of our sympathy and our prayers.

And now may I place in another column, parallel with the Spring Resolutions and the Durant Telegram, another telegram, the one addressed to the President by the Atlanta Assembly in 1913? It reads as follows: "The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, in session at Atlanta, Ga., sends greetings to President Woodrow Wilson, and would record its appreciation of his action in securing a better observance of the Sabbath as a day of rest, by closing the White House to pleasure seekers and discouraging social and State functions on the Lord's Day."

That telegram is open to the same criticisms that Dr. McPheeters brings against the Durant Assembly telegram. It is addressed to the President in his official capacity as President, and it passes judgment on an official act of the President. It approves that act, not by inference, but in express terms. Dr. McPheeters was a member of that Assembly and so was I. I did not vote for that telegram. I am morally certain he did not vote for it either. He must have been out of the house when the telegram was adopted, for he did not speak against it. I can bear witness that no fear even of rude treatment by an audience, will deter him from bearing testimony to what he believes is right. But then he did not subsequently enter any protest against it. After the Assembly adjourned Dr. McPheeters arraigned it for a number of things it had done, but if that telegram to the President was one of the specifications of his indictment, I do not recall it. But I haven't his paper before me. In his recent article, however, he makes no allusion to that Atlanta telegram, nor does he make any allowance for the Durant Assembly's having followed a precedent instead of setting one, if indeed it did either of these offensive things. It seems that according to his standards a failure to speak out against a thing is a tacit approval of it. Did he then approve that telegram of 1913 by allowing it to pass unchallenged? May not even the excellent Homer sometimes nod?

Rev. Trigg A. M. Thomas, Assembly Evangelist.

By Rev. R. F. Kirkpatrick, D.D., Chairman Sub-Committee on Evangelism.

Dr. Trigg A. M. Thomas, formerly Superintendent of Home Missions for the Synod of Missouri, has signified his acceptance of the call recently extended to him by the Executive Committee of Home Missions to become an Assembly Evangelist, and expects to take up this new work at an early date. For the past year Dr. Thomas has been acting pastor of the Beal Heights Presbyterian Church, at Lawton, Okla., in connection with his duties as Camp Pastor for our Church at Camp Doniphan, Okla. In this position he has been able to do a remarkable work for the soldiers, and has greatly endeared himself to all with whom he came in contact.

The Committee takes great pleasure in announcing to the Church that Dr. Thomas is to be associated with us as one of the representatives of the Assembly's evangelistic force. He has had a large experience in the evangelistic field. His work as Superintendent and Evangelist in the Synod of Missouri was unusually successful, and he has been in great demand for special meetings, not only in Missouri, but throughout our Assembly.

The Executive Committee most cordially commends Dr. Thomas to any church or community desiring a series of special services, as a thoroughly safe, sane and sensible evangelist. His permanent address is 3203 Morrell Avenue, Kansas City, Mo., and all communications sent to him at this place will reach him.

The Call From the East

By J. S. Chadwick.

THE American people are asked to give $30,000,000 for the relief of destitute people in the near East, the money to be pledged during the week of January 12-19. Of this sum, which represents the minimum amount needed, Dr. James L. Barton says: "In making the estimate we have fixed the smallest sum that can be considered as approximately sufficient to keep the breath of life in the bodies of these homeless, helpless, starving masses. We place this amount at $5 a month, 17 cents a day for each person."

The number of refugees, according to the latest report of the relief agents in the different fields, is given as follows: In Asia Minor: Armenians, 350,000; Greeks, 800,000. In the Caucasus, 300,000. In Syria: Syrians, 1,250,000; Armenians, 50,000. In Damascus, Palestine, Egypt, and Persia, 1,200,000. Of this total of 3,950,000, practically one million are now within reach of the distributing forces of the American Committee. Of the number immediately accessible 400,000 are orphaned children, and these must have help not merely for their present necessities but the money is needed to provide orphan homes at certain centers.

America, of all the world nations, is best able to give of the money needed for the saving of these destitute peoples, and if the American people fail them they will die by hundreds of thousands.

The American Committee says:

"In the near East today it is estimated that 3,950,000 Christian people—Armenians, Syrians and Greeks—are perishing from hunger and disease while the big nations of the world rejoice in victory. It would seem that peace has come at last to all but those who deserve it most, the harried peoples of the Ottoman Empire. France and Belgium, England and America, all hold hearts seared by the loss of loved ones, but the cross of heroism helps to sooth their pain.

"The charred ruins and barren fields of France are horrible indeed, but she knows the glory of the victory won. Vast sums of money, and millions of willing hands are already at work repairing the ravages of war on all the battle fronts of Europe.

"Shall the little peoples of Asia Minor, these wretched victims of torture and deportation, be allowed to starve on the day of victory? The land is scourged by famine and no government is available. In 1915, when the barbarous massacres and deportations threatened to wipe out the entire Christian population of the near East, America came forward and her dollars saved these martyrs of faith from complete annihilation."

"The surrender of Turkey now opens the way for the permanent emancipation of the little nations and the big hearts of America are ready to do their part."

We must not fail in this day of our great opportunity for service. The Church in America has made generous responses to the calls that have come in the past, and it is to the Church that these Christian peoples of Bible lands now look for the saving of their lives. During the week of the nation-wide campaign—January 12-19—let us give our hearty co-operation as Churches and as individuals to this great Christian enterprise. The call came as the message of One who found His chief joy in giving Himself that others might live. Let us prove ourselves worthy to bear His name.

The Prize Contest.

Several weeks ago the Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief were enabled, through the liberality of friends, to offer $50 in prizes for programs prepared by the members of the Southern Presbyterian Church on the work of this department of the Church. A prize of $20 was offered for the best program submitted, $15 was offered for the one receiving the next highest award, $10 for the next, and $5 for the next.

On account of the great delay in printing and the confusion incident to the war, the armistice, and the spread of the influenza, it has been decided to postpone the close of the contest to March 1, 1919.

Contestants are permitted to prepare a program on the entire work of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief or any one of the several departments. We are especially anxious to have some good programs for young people's societies on Recruiting for the Ministry and Mission Service.

All manuscripts must be in the hands of the Committee by March 1, 1919, must be written on one side of the paper only, either with typewriter or in a clear, legible hand. The programs should be complete, with suggested hymns, scripture reading, and with suggestions for the development of the theme.

The various departments are: Recruiting for the Ministry and Mission Service, Education for the Ministry and Mission Service, Presbyterian Educational Institutions or Christian Education, The Student Loan Fund, Ministerial Relief, and the Endowment Fund of Ministerial Relief. All of these departments are included in the Three Year Program outlined for the work of C. E. and M. R. by the General Assembly. Those who desire may submit manuscripts on all of these various themes.

During the past fifteen years a large number of leaflets and programs have been prepared and printed by the Committee. Samples of all of these will be sent to those who desire to enter the contest. Contestants are at liberty to quote from any of these or to refer to them in the program.

For further information or for this large sample package of leaflets, address the Secretary, Henry H. Sweets, 122 S. Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

The Freedman's Board.

It is really but a short space of years since the Civil War and Emancipation set four millions free, but without a dollar or a home or a foot of ground. It would amaze the older citizens of that time to be informed that in so few years branches of the Young Women's Christian Association would be established in Southern cities and towns. Here is what the wife of President McCrorey, of Biddle University, says of this movement, being part of it, as she is president of the Charlotte, N. C., Y. W. C. A. for colored people:

"The Y. W. C. A. for the colored girls of the South is a brand new thing. The one in Richmond, Va., is the largest and best established. In connection with it is a training school for Y. W. C. A. workers. Columbia, S. C., Atlanta and Augusta, Ga., are the latest Associations organized. Charlotte, N. C., was organized nearly two years ago. All of the colored Associations under the National Association are called branch Associations. All branches come into existence at a call to the National for such from the Central Association, which is the white Association already existing in that town, thus making the colored branches a real part of the Central Association. An affiliating committee composed of three women from the Central and three from the branch makes the relation between the two real and active. The branch at Charlotte is the first under this provision. Charlotte is favored in being the home of the white woman who has taken the initiative, ably and fearlessly, in placing some responsibility upon the more able and intelligent women of the white race in the effort to have the Association reach the colored women who have less money and fewer trained workers to do the Christian work for their women. Mrs. Elizabeth Preston Allan is the name of this white woman, and she is the very salt of the earth."—S. J. Fisher, D.D., in Presbyterian Banner.

some source for this cause. On July 14 I received it! Well, God is good, and this is a wonderful way that He has. Of course it was all 'accident.' Bosh! How can so many accidents happen? I have had thousands of these accidents in my experience. Somehow or other, they make me very happy. When I think about them, I think of the almighty love that grants our accidents. . . . On the morning of the 19th I earnestly prayed God to send me through Mrs. McCormick $500 more for the Gordon Cottage. At the same hour she mailed a check to me for $500 for that purpose. I had not written to her for a month. I wonder if it would be possible for the dear Lord to give me $1,800 this month?"

And so the story goes of a man who walked with God. Then came a day when God took him. "Seekest thou great things for thyself?" He had not sought them. Because he had not, he had them, and has them forevermore. Here is a book for our young ministers to read. It will clear the way for them to the seat of power. It will reveal to them the road to glory. This wonderful servant of God has lived and wrought among us. He is a product of our beloved Church. His ministry is a triumph of the Gospel in the heart of a man. Who that reads of him but will turn with kindling faith to humble service, certain of finding there the secret of the King's Presence?

The Beneficence Drive.

By Rev. Robert P. Walker.

From this movement, growing greater each year, the Church is learning how to care for the causes.

The offering is becoming more and more a part of public worship. In the Old Testament, tithes, offerings and sacrifices were a part of worship, as was also the giving to God of their substance on the first day of the week, in the New Testament Church.

It is passing strange that in the face of these facts for so long a time giving has been severed from our public worship.

Thanks be to the Duplex Envelope, lazy deacons and the Systematic Beneficence Movement, we are coming more and more to worship God with our substance.

We are learning that our offering must be sacrificial. The Old Testament sacrifice was an offering. In it, as in other offerings and tithes, the people were taught that every man shall give as he is able. Mary, because she was poor, could bring acceptably a pair of doves or two young pigeons; but Solomon, in his wealth, must needs offer as a sacrifice 22,000 oxen and 120,000 sheep.

The tithe is the minimum, the debt, but in order that the offering may be sacrificial more is required of those who have riches.

From the war work we are learning how to give greatly. With the tithe as a minimum, it will be easy to raise in three years $12,000,000 for Beneficence.

Assembly's Evangelistic Notes.

By Rev. R. F. Kirkpatrick, D.D., Chairman Sub-Committee.

The epidemic of influenza that has prevailed the past few months in so many sections of the country, resulting in closing so many of our churches, has seriously interrupted the Assembly's evangelistic program. Many churches that had planned for evangelistic meetings during the fall have been obliged to postpone them until a later date.

Three-fourths of the present Church year have passed. It is certain that a special evangelistic effort will be necessary during the next three months if our Church is able to report to the next Assembly the usual increase upon profession of faith. The Committee would like to remind the Church that the Assembly's evangelists are available for meetings; also that a large number of our leading pastors have volunteered their services for special evangelistic work.

The Committee would be glad to co-operate with any church desiring a meeting, in securing a competent man to conduct it.

The Value of Prayer.

our division in Christ's army get that spirit and begin to determine their individual duty in the light of Christ's will, then there will be good hope that the Church's program will be what it ought to be. There is no other way. The only peace where the objective for the Church or for any individual soldier of Christ can be determined is the altar of prayer.

Power of Prayer.

Ever and anon men deceive themselves into thinking they can take this or that feature of the program of Christianity and carry it to success and get the blessing of it, without humbling the heart before God and laying hold of His power. But the program of the Gospel, even though it be according to the truth which is from above, is impotent if linked with only human resources. "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." When Christ says, "Without me ye can do nothing," He states a literal and permanent fact. The ultimate need of the Church is not program but power, and she has access to a power which is adequate for the world-wide triumph of her great mission.

There are two subtle paths of temptation along which her campaign will fail for lack of this divine power. In the pride of her own wisdom and the glory of her own strength, the Church may depend upon men and money and methods, and forget the words of the Lord Jesus, "Without me ye can do nothing." Or in the pessimism of unbelief, the Church may falter because of the difficulties which oppose her progress—evil so deeply entrenched, the spiritual perversity so invincible, the power of Satan so rampant—until in the face of these things she may weakly attempt no great things for God and thus fail to challenge His conquering power by the heroism of her faith. Between these two paths of defeat lies the path to victory. It is the path of prayer which is the path to power. Christ says today, as He did yonder at the beginning, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." In that power alone is the possibility of the Church's victory. Men using only worldly resources may experiment with the Gospel program and find only disappointment and defeat. It has often been so, both out of the Church and in the Church. But it is the high and holy responsibility of the Church to get the power. If there is any distinctive and peculiar function of the Christian Church it is this sacred stewardship of the power of God. For the Church to fail in this is her supreme shame. Fail she will without a clear vision of the primacy of prayer in all the propaganda of the Gospel. There is no lack of power with the Almighty—power to overturn the strongholds of Satan, power to lead the Church in splendid triumph to the liberation of the souls of all peoples. The heart of God is not indifferent to the glory of His Son. Victory is waiting for the power of God and the power of God is waiting for the Church with her whole heart to call upon him. "The Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save; neither His ear heavy that it cannot hear."

As the hour comes to prepare our beloved Church for a new advance in the service of Christ both in the homeland and abroad, the one thing which is indispensable is the preparation of prayer. Let all pastors appoint special and repeated seasons of public prayer by which the heart of the Church will be led to seek a new baptism of the power which is from above. Let the Lord's people be urged to private prayer for this specific need—a new personal consecration to the cause of Christ, and a new laying hold of the Saviour's power in which alone is the promise and pledge of victory.

The Church and the Returning Soldier

Important Conferences to be Conducted by the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

By Rev. Gilbert Glass, D.D., General Superintendent Sunday Schools and Young People's Work.

THE crisis of obligation and opportunity confronting the Church with the return home of our soldiers has been keenly recognized for some time by many of our people. There are so many angles to the situation and the various phases of it are so generally felt that it is futile and unnecessary to theorize about it.

The Laymen's Movement of the Church, under the leadership of Mr. Chas. A. Rowland, has acted with gratifying promptness and wisdom in securing the services of Capt. F. L. Slaymaker as secretary, with a view to rousing and guiding the churches to meet this real and urgent crisis. A series of conferences throughout the Church is being planned, and literature is being sent to Churches and Sunday Schools announcing programs and asking co-operation.

A gratifying feature of the plan advocated by Captain Slaymaker is the securing of permanence for the work done, by linking the special measures which are to meet the emergency with one of the most valuable and promising movements in modern church life; namely, the Organized Class for Men. The practical wisdom and insight shown by this plan speak well for the success of the new secretary in his important task.

Captain Slaymaker is peculiarly fitted for this special work by his experience in work with men's Bible classes both in his home church, the First Presbyterian of Alexandria, Va., and during his two years' service in religious work with men in the camps. He has been signally successful in both these spheres, and knows the problem from the viewpoint of the soldier and from the angle of the local church and Sunday School.

Captain Slaymaker has a message which our churches greatly need at this time, and every congregation should be well represented at the conference most convenient in location. Look for the announcement and get in touch with this live man and his message.

The Laymen's Movement has been fortunate, also, in securing the assistance of Mr. M. L. Swinehart, of Korea, in presenting this plan to the Church. Captain Slaymaker and Mr. Swinehart will collaborate in conducting conferences, reaching different sections of the Church.

It is hoped that many new men's classes will be organized in this campaign, in addition to those already formed and fitted, with adaptation, to take up the plan presented.

All such classes should be registered without delay on the cards furnished, with other organized class literature for these conferences, by the Department of Sunday Schools of the Committee of Publication, at Richmond, Va.

Systematic Beneficence.

The Bible teaches benevolence—wishing well, or love and kindness.

It also teaches beneficence—doing good, or service and active charity and altruistic missions.

It also teaches system. God carefully trained His ancient people Israel to observe an orderly system in their spiritual life. Witness the carefully prescribed sacrifices, the priests' courses, the set feasts, the placing of the tabernacle furniture, the order of encampment and of march, the Sabbath, and the tithe. Forms pass, but underlying principles remain. Since orderly system is essential to efficiency, surely God would have the spiritual Israel of today to be as systematic as of old.

Systematic Beneficence represents our Church's effort to apply to the support and propagation of the Gospel that cooperative and orderly system that is found so effective in the regulation of a household, in the conduct of a business, and in the training of an army.

The Every Member Canvass is the practical application of Systematic Beneficence to the local church. Obviously, the best way to raise money for current expenses (including pastor's salary) and benevolences (all the missionary and educational enterprises of the denomination) is to seek an offering from every member. The only way to count on such an offering and make plans accordingly is to get it pledged at the beginning of the church year. The easy way to pay a personal pledge is in small weekly or monthly installments. On the other hand, to depend on spasmodic appeals is to have the financing of the church and the Gospel seriously interfered with by the weather, by sickness, by absence from town, and by an already emptied purse.

Of the eighty-seven churches in Mecklenburg Presbytery, forty-seven made the Every Member Canvass last March; forty did not. Why should not all make the canvass this March? Not only the church of a thousand members, but also the church of five members, will be better financed and have a larger part in missions with the canvass than without.

The Every Member Canvass is practical anywhere. With a little forethought, careful preparation, and persistent effort it can be made a distinct success. Leaflet literature telling how to conduct the canvass will be gladly furnished free by the Assembly's Stewardship Committee, Montreat, N. C.

Service Niches in China.

The following letter from Miss Lee, of our China Mission, we are taking from the Calendar of January 5 of the First Church, Wilmington, N. C.:

"Two subjects seem to be uppermost in the minds of your Kiangyin friends these days, one of which is the severe epidemic of influenza raging here, and which the papers tell us is scourging the whole world. Natives and foreigners alike are afflicted, and while only one death has occurred among the Christians—that of a child—some have suffered greatly, and classes are depleted, and church attendance lowered.

"The other matter is the question of Mr. Allison's call to Hangchow College. We were much gratified last night when he announced his prayer-wrought decision to remain at the helm of James Sprunt Academy.

"Mr. Allison has just returned from 'viewing the landscape o'er' at Hangchow, and while not at all belittling their need at the college, he feels the stronger call to remain here. We all feel that teachers may be secured for the college, but one who can administer the affairs of this school where characters are in the more formative stage, one who can keep a firm and loving 'big brother' touch upon these boys is not easily found, and we would fain keep him when we have him.

"Permit me to say that, as teacher of English in the school, I am very frankly delighted that he will stay. Even in the short period of our acquaintance we have formed most congenial and happy relations. I feel well qualified to speak for my boys also, that their pleasure in Mr. Allison's decision will be no less than mine.

"Apropos of the school, if there are any of those who read this letter that find life flat, stale, and unprofitable at home, or whose "niches" elude them, allow me to suggest that there are niches at every turn in China, just yawning for occupants. These niches contain no halos, but O, they do hold that which is far better—the love and friendship of these dear, dark-eyed boys and girls, of these miserably poor, miserably ignorant, miserably superstitious women, who emerge but slowly from their darkness, but who do emerge nevertheless, with what clings of physical and spiritual hands to the rescuing missionary who comes with Gospel—and love-laden hearts.

"A Chinese man said one day, 'Why do the Americans not send out older women as missionaries? Our women respect age as they do not respect the young women.' Let my sisters at home whose hands may be left empty, take heart of grace from this remark as I did, and even though they may never conquer the Chinese language, the smile and loving look speak a universal language which few people in China can

All the good books ever written are helping you and me indirectly today, whether or not we have read them, or even heard of them. For we are beneficiaries of the civilization that they have helped to build. Many a Frenchman has never read Hugo's "Les Miserables," yet all France is a better place in which to live because of the influence of this book on the lives of those that have read it. Millions of people the world over have never heard either of Francis Bacon or his book called Novum Organum, but there is not a man, woman, or child in Christendom that is not enjoying some of the benefits which the author through this book has conferred upon civilization.

There are many men and women who care nothing for the Bible. They never open it. In fact, they thoroughly detest it. Many are busying themselves to discredit it. Just why is a mystery, unless the explanation be that the natural man is unconsciously at enmity with God and all His religious works. But the Bible is a blessing even to its enemies. They share along with the rest in the benefits which the Bible has brought to civilization. What is now Christendom would not be Christendom without the Bible. It leads all other books in giving help indirectly to you and me.

We ought not to be content with indirect help from books. We must not be satisfied merely to obtain the benefits passed to civilization by the reading that other people do. We must be among those that do the reading and obtain the benefits at first hand and pass them into society. We then become givers as well as receivers in this particular, and our worth and nobility of character are enhanced.

The most widely useful man that I know in intellectual and social matters is such simply because he has read more good books and thereby been enabled to lead others to read more good books than any one of my acquaintance. He has added to the sweetness and light of life as well as having himself enjoyed them. And the fact that he has known the great books well enough to give their benefits to others, has made himself to enjoy the books and their benefits more than others do.

Just as the Bible has conferred more benefits on you and me indirectly, so it will do more for us directly than any other book if we study it at first hand. Its words contain a life-giving quality possessed by no other book in the world. Andrew Jackson said the Bible is the rock on which our republic rests. We can obtain through the republic the social and political benefits of the Bible by letting others read it for us. But if we wish to receive the eternal life which its words introduce to, we must study these words for ourselves.

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING JAN. 19, 1919:
"THE COMING CITIZENSHIP OF BELIEVERS."

Eph. 2:11-22.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

In this passage the Apostle speaks of our present citizenship. "So then ye are no more strangers and sojourners, but ye are fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God, being built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone."

Here is emphatically no look forward; but a statement of a present glorious fact: viz: that the Ephesian believers, who were once "separate from Christ, alienated from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world," are now citizens—"fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God."

Now the "coming citizenship of believers" is this present Christian citizenship without the impedimenta of sin, and with the added privileges of heaven.

But in our passage Paul speaks not of the "Coming Citizenship," but of the citizenship of believers here and now.

CORONATION.

By Daniel A. Poling, Associate President the World's Christian Endeavor Union.

I saw her first in a great base hospital in the north of England. She was leaning over a bed that held a fearfully broken lad from London's great East Side. In half a dozen places the shrapnel had sought his vitals, and quite as many times the kindly cruel scalpel of the surgeon had searched out the creeping poison. When she touched the boy, he smiled. He could not see her—his eyes were covered—and he could not move his head. Even the smile must have caused him pain. But I never knew before that a man's mouth could be so beautiful. It was as if the lips had responded to something electric in that white-gowned woman's touch; it was as if her fingers had healing in them, as if her hands bore the same divine ministries that the hands of the Galilean carried to the halt and lame and blind, nineteen hundred years before. I found myself whispering, "And the child was cured from that very hour."

I saw her next in France, and not far behind the lines. I never learned her story. I prefer to remember her in the spirit of the words of one her hands were laid upon:

"I wonder what she did before she went to war—for she has gone to war as truly as any soldier. I am sure in the peaceful years she must have loved and been greatly loved. Perhaps he was killed out there. Now she is ivory-white with over-service, and all her days are spent in loving. Over dying men she stoops and is to them the incarnation of their mother, or of the woman, had they lived, they would have loved."

I shall not see that woman again. In the air above a red cross, a winged-monster paused and let loose his fury. She is not dead, but gone to her coronation, this woman with healing in her hands, this greatest mother in the world.

There are ferns in the garden of the soul as well as flowers. The flowers grow best in the sunshine; the ferns grow best in the shade. There is the fern of patience, and the fern of long-suffering, and the fern of meekness. And the great Gardener of the soul delights in the ferns, and purposes to save them from destruction by "the garish day." And so He takes us into the shade—the shade of disappointment, or the shade of sorrow, or the shade of seeming defeat. But it is a very blessed shadow, for it is "the shadow of the Almighty." And here the ferns flourish and the cloudy day makes the garden beautiful.—J. H. Jowett.

THE PASSOVER.

Exodus 12:1-14.

January 19, 1919:

Golden Text—I Cor. 5:7: "Christ Our Passover Is Sacrificed For Us."

The Passover is an ordinance instituted by Divine command and kept by the Israelites on the last night of their sojourn in Egypt. By God's direction it was annually observed by Israel throughout their generations. It was celebrated by Christ and His Apostles on the night of His betrayal and preceded the Lord's Supper, which is the Christian sacrament having in some respects a similar import. The truths taught and illustrated by the Passover are of profound importance, the the Paschal Lamb is a type of Christ, and the rescue of Israel by the slain lamb vividly represents the salvation of sinners by Jesus crucified. We may therefore study the Passover and its results with profit.

I. The Paschal Lamb.

As it was to be a type of Jesus it must be excellent. It must be in the prime of life, "a male of the first year without blemish." It must be taken from the family fold as Jesus was taken from "among His brethren." It was set apart for four days as Jesus was devoted to death by the high priest four days before He suffered. It was slain by the whole congregation, which could be saved only by its blood as Jesus was crucified by Jews and Gentiles who could be rescued only by the death of Jesus. The Paschal Lamb, when slain, was extended on spits forming a cross, and thus roasted with fire. It thus furnished a lively image of Jesus nailed to the cross and bearing for us vicariously the fires of Divine wrath against sin. The analogies between the type and Christ, as to character and treatment, are certainly impressive.

II. The Blood Applied.

It was not merely a lamb slain that saved Israel, neither is it Christ crucified that delivers sinners from Divine wrath. The blood of the lamb must be applied as Jehovah directed. The blood in a basin with a hyssop branch must be placed on the two side posts and the upper post or lintel of the door. Thus applied, the family within were rendered secure from the destroying angel who went through Egypt and slew the firstborn in every house where the atoning blood was not found. Nothing but blood saved, but blood did save. The Lord promised that He would pass over the door of every blood-sealed dwelling and prevent the destroying angel from entering. Faith in God's remedy and faith in God's word of promise caused the blood to be applied and made its effectual for deliverance. So now faith in an atoning Christ and in the Divine promise of pardon for Jesus' sake secures salvation from Divine wrath revealed against all unrighteousness. Jehovah takes under His protection all for whom Christ died, paying the penalty of the law and "His blood cleanseth from all sin."

III. The Flesh of the Lamb Eaten.

The Paschal Lamb was to do more than atone for sin and place under Divine protection. It was to enter into vital union with the Israelites and give them strength for the journey to the land of promise. Without a bone of it being broken they were all to eat of its flesh, and if any remained until morning, as a sacred thing it was to be burned with fire. They were to eat with bitter herbs and unleaven bread, symbolic of their long and bitter bondage. They were to eat it with their loins girded, shoes on their feet and their staff in their hand, ready for their march on the morrow. They were to eat it not as a nation of slaves, subjected to a galling bondage, but as Jehovah's freemen with glad hope bound for that heritage long promised to their fathers.

Had they continued to cherish the faith with which they left Egypt, in a few short months they might have entered and possessed Canaan. But alas, the generation that departed from Egypt "could not enter in because of unbelief." But two grown men when they left Egypt reached the land of promise, and the rest died in the wilderness. Faith in Jehovah is needed for obtaining pardon, securing Divine favor, attaining salvation and reaching heaven.

IV. The Significance of the Passover.

This feast of Israel was mainly designed to serve three purposes. First it was a memorial of a national deliverance. It marked the rescue of Israel from Egyptian bondage. They had been enslaved for many years and oppressed by grievous toils. But the Passover celebrated their emancipation and their entrance upon a new life as Jehovah's freemen. It would remind them too that their deliverance had been wrought not by their own wisdom and power but by the matchless judgments of their gracious God. But the Passover was also a means of personal rescue from death for sin committed. The Israelites were sinners as well as the Egyptians and would have perished but for the blood of the Paschal Lamb used as Jehovah directed. Finally the Passover was a Prophecy of Salvation from sin for mankind by Christ, "The Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." Its prophetic meaning is the grandest. It is a memorial, a means of rescue from death, and a prophecy of eternal salvation by Jesus.

1. He bids us "remember" the pre-citizenship period.

It is good to look backward as well as forward. If one will look back at the time before he found peace and rest in Christ Jesus; if one will do this honestly and without permitting self love to color the canvas, one will find much to promote true humility, and to quicken our recognition of our infinite indebtedness to our Lord and Saviour. We were "separate from Christ, alienated from the commonwealth of Israel, strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world." The way to appreciate this fearful picture is to "remember;" and this remembering will greatly enlarge our gratitude, our joy, our vigilance in the discharge of duty, and our loyalty to God.

2. Paul tells us that "He is our peace;" that He has "created in Himself of the twain one new man, so making peace." Jesus was indeed a New Man in this evil world; and His followers are a new race of men, at peace with God and man; with a citizenship, no matter where they dwell, that is identical. Whether Jew or Gentile, whether English, or French, or German, or Chinese, they rejoice in one allegiance and are blessed by one brotherhood. Alas, they sometimes are overborne by passion or race hatred; they sometimes transform the Prince of Peace into a War Lord, and then the peace is broken, and the citizenship degraded.

3. But He came to reconcile us to God through the cross—in one body—and through Him we have access in one Spirit unto the Father.

"In one body"—this was Paul's conception of the church—the members of which were reconciled to God through the cross and constantly enjoyed access to the Father in one Spirit. Sectarian animosities must have been monstrous to this apostle—akin to the other sins which so beset and degrade us. There is one body—so there is one citizenship. Paul would doubtless agree that denominations are useful; but sectarianism destructive and abhorrent to Christian principles and love. It destroys the peace that is embodied in Christ and that flows from Him.

4. How glorious then will the "coming citizenship of believers" be; when we shall see the King in His beauty, when we shall clasp hands again with those whom we have loved and lost awhile; when the impedimenta of sin shall have been left behind; when the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest; and when duty and desire shall perfectly accord in the service of the King.

THE SECRET OF YOUTH.

One of the good signs of the time is the fact that people no longer conceive of life as arbitrarily divided into periods of time. The women of forty today do not follow the habit of their ancestors, and put on caps and take to knitting, under the impression that henceforth for them there is laid up nothing but the profoundest respect which children ought to pay to advanced years, peace after toil, and the making of an endless series of small garments for newcomers. A recent writer in The Atlantic expressed the hope that some day the dear old lady of silvery hair and quiet gown and the ripening and mellow charm of advancing years will return to us. Something undoubtedly has been lost, but very much has been gained. The old-age limit was absurdly premature from Shakespeare's time to the time of our immediate ancestors. Emerson somewhere recalls the remark of an old gentleman who said that he had been born at a most unlucky time of transition; when he was a boy the greatest respect was paid to old age, and now that he was old the greatest respect was paid to children.

There has been a great extension of the time of activity for men and women since the middle of the last century. People are no longer ashamed to be about and doing their work at eighty. They no longer feel compelled to apologize to their young descendants for standing in the way. They have discovered that old age is a relative term, and that, unless serious physical disablements or crippling disease come, at eighty one may be active without being disrespectful to the younger generation or lacking in respect for one's own contemporaries. There was a great deal of truth in the statement of a French writer that the gods made us all immortal and that old age is a voluntary matter.

Age is largely a matter of habit; and most people who grow old, in the sense of losing their interest and their working power, fall insensibly into the slough of inactivity because they do not understand how to feed their spirit and nourish their bodies. Youth is not a matter of years; it is a matter of spiritual condition. It does not consist simply in young muscles and arteries that have not yet begun to harden; the root of it is freshness of feeling, vitality of interest, and joy in one's work. Men and women become old by involuntary mental process; by thinking themselves old. Disuse of muscle in any part of the body speedily means stagnation and hardening; giving up interest in life, going into voluntary retirement, coming to anchor with the intention of never putting to sea again, is insensibly followed by spiritual and physical acceptance of declining energy and fading interests. The mortal must be kept alive by the immortal; the body kept young by the mind; the mind fed by constant contact with fresh ideas. The conservatism of old age lies chiefly in closing the doors, shutting the windows and barring the house against the new ideas of a new time. It has come to be almost a tradition that old people are pessimists, bewailing the degeneracy of the later times, and holding constantly before the eyes of their younger contemporaries the charm and beauty of a past age. A little intimate knowledge of history speedily cures all this. If one is not willing to keep up his interest in acting history, if one has an open door only for old friends and never makes new ones, if one has no companionship with the later world and the rising ideas which are always coming into it, his house becomes desolate and he falls into melancholy. When the years begin to multiply, one must fasten back the shutters and leave the latch-string out; one must insist on his immortality. Elderly people must keep at the head of the procession in their hospitality to new ideas.

Variety and charm and interest lie in the preservation of freshness. Robert Louis Stevenson wrote: "Cling to your youth. It is the artist's stock in trade. Do not give up that you are aging, and you won't age." In this familiar and homely advice is hidden the secret of the artist's power and charm. He never grows old; things never become commonplace to him; the colors do not fade. As a matter of fact, they never fade; it is the perceptions which become duller, the interest which becomes less keen. A good many men and women have discovered that it is a good thing to associate intimately with persons younger than themselves. This is one refuge against old age, but the real refuge is within. It is the assertion of one's immortality, the consciousness day by day, in all relations and occupations, that one is going forward and not backward; that the world, which grows sadder because one's companions go out of it, is growing brighter because one is pushing toward the dawn and not toward the sunset. There is a great mass of misleading and cynical philosophy about old age. Poetry is full of images of disenchantment created for the greater part by disenchanted men. There was a profound truth in the old Greek picture of the spirit beginning its life in a strongly built house, protected from all the elements; finding presently that the house begins to be less secure; discovering at last that it begins to crumble, and at the end that it falls in ruins—only to leave the man free under the open sky.—Hamilton Wright Mabie, in "Fruits of the Spirit."

Devotional

SOME NEW YEAR RESOLUTIONS.

- That I will keep my good resolutions.
- That I will pray more, and more definitely.
- That I will read my Bible more, and more systematically.
- That I will love and revere old people and little children.
- That I will be an unafraid fighter for right and against wrong.
- That I will live more in the affirmative and less in the negative.
- That I will cultivate my confidences and discourage my doubts.
- That I will never again write—and mail—a letter when I am angry.
- That habitually I will be a graveyard for useless or hurtful gossip.
- That I will try to spend less than I earn, honestly earning all that I spend.
- That I will put right and duty above loyalty to friend or party or church.
- That I will practice the presence of the God of nature in His own out of doors.
- That I will accept any wayward weakness I meet as God's call to me to be strong and helpful.
- That I will vote as I pray, and both vote and pray for only righteous men and measures.
- That I will work enough and play adequately, and will neither work nor play half-heartedly.
- That I will not play the coward by silence when I ought to speak, nor the fool by speaking when I ought to be still.
- That I will believe terribly the few vital things of Christianity, allowing myself and my neighbors the utmost liberty regarding nonessentials.
- That I will worship at the shrine of neither the ancient nor novel, being as quick to reject old error as I am ready to accept demonstrated new truth.
- That I will estrange no more true friends, and will if possible win back all worthy ones lost, making a host of new ones if I can, so dire is my need of friendship, and so short is the life we live.
- That I will never be proud and boastful, especially concerning what I did not unaided achieve; and, before I grow arrogant about my successes, I shall subtract from them my failures, and thereby grow humble.
- That I will cultivate the habit of innocent mirth, and frown to death the heresy that there is any fun in dirt.
- That I will believe the best about people till the worst is verified; and even then will be charitable to the weakness, especially of those less favored by inheritance, associations and training than I have been.—Ira Landrith, in Continent.

The Synod's Home Mission Work and the Sunday Schools.

Do you know what our Sunday School work owes to Synodical Home Missions? 186 Sunday Schools have been organized in the Synod's mission work, more than one-third of the total number now in the Synod (485).

Synod directs that a collection be taken in each Sunday School in its bounds, in January, for this work.

What about your school? Will you do it?

SOME FACTS FOR THE YEAR CLOSING OCTOBER 1st

38 men were engaged. They reported 693 additions to the Presbyterian Church on profession, being nearly one-third of the total number in all of the churches of the Synod. 12 Sunday Schools and 3 churches were organized.

A much enlarged work this year.

NOTICE.

The Mid-winter meeting of the Assembly's Permanent Committee on Systematic Beneficence will be held in Atlanta, Ga., in the Piedmont Hotel, February 4, 1919, convening at 8 o'clock p. m.

Brethren having matters to submit to this committee should see that they are in my hands prior to February 1.

Charles R. Nisbet, Secretary.

Kansas City, Mo., Jan. 9, 1919.

DEATH OF REV. J. H. DIXON.

Death has again invaded the ranks of our ministers, this time removing our old friend and classmate, John Howie Dixon; who died suddenly on Sunday morning, January 12, soon after entering the door of Pegram Street Church, Charlotte, of which he was pastor.

He was 66 years of age, the son of Captain Dixon, of Mecklenburg County, well known to all Confederate Veterans of this section.

John Dixon attended the University of North Carolina, and then Union Theological Seminary as a candidate for the ministry. He graduated at the Seminary in the class of 1881; was licensed by Mecklenburg Presbytery, April 16, 1881; ordained December 4, 1884, by the Presbytery of Louisville. From 1881-1882 he was teacher and Stated Supply at Rutherfordton, N. C.; Stated Supply at Gaffney, S. C., 1882-1883; pastor at Munfordville, Ky., 1883-1885; Stated Supply at Carrollton, Mo., 1885-1886; pastor at Gainesville, Ga., 1886-1888; Stated Supply at Sparta, Ga., 1888; pastor at Florence, S. C., 1888; pastor at Laurel Hill; and pastor of Pegram Street Church, Charlotte, N. C., 1917-1919.

Mr. Dixon as a student was remarkable for his skill in weaving Scripture texts into the body of his sermons in such a way that few could see the dividing line, which made his preaching abound in heartsearching quality.

He was a modest, retiring man, whose name rarely ap-

CHANGE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisers who want their advertisements changed or want to insert new advertisements will please bring their copy to this office by Saturday. It is impossible for us to insert new advertisements or make changes for the current week at a later date.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South.

Collections—January is one of the months unassigned by the Assembly. In many of the Synods the collections go to Synodical and Presbyterian causes. In the Synod of North Carolina, by order of the Synod, they are for Synodical Home Missions. The treasurer of this cause is Rev. A. W. Crawford, 320 S. Mendenhall St., Greensboro, N. C.

peared in print, nor was his voice often heard in the streets, yet as a pastor his memory is dear to many scattered over the Church.

He was twice married, his last wife being Miss Loula Erwin, daughter of F. Lee Erwin, of Steele Creek. She was a model pastor's wife, and upheld his hands in every good work.

J. R. B.

PERSONAL.

The address of Rev. J. E. Berryhill is changed from Kings Mountain, N. C., to Clover, S. C., where he began his work as pastor the first of the year.

Corporal Prentiss G. Thompson, son of Rev. and Mrs. W. M. Thompson, our missionaries at Garanhuns, Brazil, died in France of pneumonia on December 3. Deep sympathy will be felt for the bereaved parents.

Rev. Wm. P. Chedester, who has been doing war work at the camp at Hattiesburg, Miss., has completed his work there and will return at an early date to Asheville, N. C., to take up pastoral work once more.

Rev. A. C. Ormond, formerly of Gulfport, Miss., has returned from overseas Y. M. C. A. work and is with his family at Davidson, N. C. Mr. Ormond will be glad to be called on by the churches for supply or pastoral work.

Mr. Francis Price, son of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Frank Price, of our mission at Nanking, China, recently arrived in this country from China on his way to France, where he is to do missionary work among the Chinese laborers employed there in army work and to be employed in reconstruction work.

Rev. T. C. Bales, who for several years has done a most successful work as pastor of the Mt. Airy, N. C., church, has entered already upon his new work as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Portsmouth. His address is changed accordingly from Mt. Airy to 32 Washington street, Portsmouth, Va.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Great Falls—The members of this congregation added much to the happiness of their pastor and family Christmas by presenting to them a beautiful parlor suit. These things are appreciated all the more because they came at this time of high prices.

W. L. L.

Columbia—Rev. Andrew W. Blackwood, pastor of the First Church, has announced a list of attractive topics in Old Testament biography for his evening services. His congregations hold up well and the tie between pastor and people seems ever to grow stronger. Mr. Blackwood is always alert to avail himself of every opening for promoting the Master's cause.

Walterboro—The Presbyterian Sunday School held a "White Gift" service on Sunday, December 29. We had music and some of the little children recited. Mr. E. T. H. Shaffer, our Bible class teacher, made a splendid talk to the children about the orphans. The collection was taken by classes, each member putting their gift in a little white bag, and the offering amounted to $12.50, which was sent to the Thornwell Orphanage, Clinton, S. C.

Columbia—Rev. W. H. Boggs, pastor-elect of the Arsenal Hill Church, filled the pulpit of this church for the first time last Sunday. The very unusual size of the congregation was a testimony to the interest felt in his coming. There was very general and very hearty expressions of approval. There is a spirit of great hopefulness in the church, and it is believed that under the able preaching and wise administration of Mr. Boggs this church is to enjoy a most prosperous future.

Latta—Rev. D. B. Green, who was pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Latta during the past two years, has resigned to accept the pastorate of the Cheraw Church. Mr. Green was active in building up the church here. Many additions were made to the membership and the church was otherwise materially improved. He was president of the Latta Library Association and Scoutmaster for the Boy Scouts of Latta, having organized the troop. He was especially a favorite among the boys and did much for them.

During Mr. Green's pastorate here he married Miss Ollie Byers, teacher in the Latta School. Mrs. Green was a teacher of the highest rating and was active in all community interests. She was president of the Parent-Teachers' Association of Latta, besides being an untiring worker in her church and other organizations.

Columbia—An incident in the White Gift service at the First Presbyterian Church the Sabbath before Christmas was the presentation to Thomas S. Bryan of a gold headed ebony walking cane by the Sabbath School, commemorating his fifty years of service in the school.

The exercises were nearly over when J. W. Simpson, the superintendent of the school, announced that there was one feature of the program which did not appear in the printed form. He asked Fritz Hugh McMaster, an elder of the church and a former superintendent of the Sabbath School, to tell the congregation what it was. Mr. McMaster went to the pulpit platform and asked Thomas S. Bryan to stand up so the congregation might see him.

Mr. McMaster then said: "This is Mr. Bryan's fiftieth Christmas anniversary. I am not referring to his age, but to his connection with the Sabbath School. His age must not be judged by his silver locks, nor by the simple childlike faith shown in his daily walk and conversation, but by the 'manhood's prime vigor' of his homage to God and his service to his fellow man.

"The Sabbath School presents to Mr. Bryan this staff not for his support for he hath a heavenly one stronger than any that might be devised by man, and an earthly one in the love and esteem of all who know him. But it is as a golden symbol of the golden deeds which adorn his life and as a baton of power in the years of service which we all hope are to come."

Mr. Bryan was much touched by the gift and contented himself by saying that he appreciated it more than he could express.

Columbia—Mr. Ernest Rhea Millard, a student of the Middle class in Columbia Seminary, died on Friday afternoon, at 3:30 o'clock, at the Baptist Hospital. He visited an uncle in Richmond, Va., for his Christmas vacation. On his way back he paid a call on his brother, who is pastor of the church at Littleton, N. C. The night after his return he was taken with the influenza. The next morning he was carried to the Baptist Hospital. Here he had constant attention by the physicians and nurses. Pneumonia developed and despite all that human aid could do he passed away just eight days from the time he was stricken.

Mr. Millard had carried on studies in the University of South Carolina since becoming a student in the Seminary, and was associated with many Christian activities in the city. In this way he had formed a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. His death has caused widespread sorrow.

He was in his 21st year, being the youngest man in the student body. By his cheery disposition, his genial, cordial manners he endeared himself greatly to the members of the faculty and to his fellow students.

Mr. Millard's simple, earnest, unaffected piety was most marked. He had a good mind, and an unusually attractive personality. He preached in the Seminary chapel a few weeks ago for the first time, and his sermon made a decided and most favorable impression. He gave promise of great usefulness, and his death blights many ardent hopes.

Profound and tender sympathy is felt for his parents, Rev. and Mrs. M. W. Millard, of Bethesda, Tenn. The distance was too great for them to come to the bedside of their dear boy. Wisely also they decided not to ship the precious remains to their home. So the body was laid to rest in the beautiful Elmwood cemetery in Columbia, the service being conducted by Dr. Thornton Whaling, president of the Seminary, and shared in by other members of the faculty.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Charlotte—The annual joint communion of the Presbyterian Churches of the city will be held in the First Church, February 2, at 4 p. m. The churches of the county are requested to join in this communion.

Attention Women of Fayetteville Presbyterial—February is the month for our Foreign Mission study. The text-book is "Women Workers of the Orient." Appoint your leader and organize your class now. The Week of Prayer and Self-denial for Foreign Missions is February 16-23, inclusive.

Mary F. Patterson, Secretary Foreign Missions.

Rev. W. S. Hamiter writes: "I reached Dallas on last Friday and found all things made ready for the pastor's family. Many packages of good things for the pantry, which was well filled. The church and community gave me a cordial welcome.

"My last work as pastor of Blackstock and Concord Churches was made very happy by six young people coming before the session and uniting with the church on a week day."

Orange Presbytery met in Greensboro, N. C., January 7, 1919, in a called meeting, with nine members present. The pastoral relation between Rev. T. C. Bales and the Mount Airy Church was dissolved, and Brother Bales was dismissed to unite with the Presbytery of Norfolk. He leaves Mount Airy deeply beloved by that church, and by the entire Presbytery of Orange, to become pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Portsmouth, Va.

At the adjourned meeting of the Presbytery, held at Synod in Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 12, 1918, the time and place for the spring meeting of Orange Presbytery was left in the hands of the stated clerk, and he would now announce that the Presbytery will meet in the Reidsville Presbyterian Church, Reidsville, N. C., on Tuesday, April 15, 1919, at 8 o'clock p. m.

D. I. Craig, S. C.

Wadesboro—Rev. and Mrs. John Jordan Douglas and family were most graciously and generously remembered Christmas both by the church here and by members of the church at Blenheim, S. C., of which Mr. Douglas was for many years the pastor. Among the gifts here were Christmas cards from two officers of the church containing $60. In addition to this the Ladies' Auxiliary installed a telephone in the manse for the pastor's use. And the pastor was presented a handsome suit of clothes by a prominent physician, a member of his church.

From members of the Blenheim Church, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas received among other gifts a set of silver knives and forks of unusual beauty of design.

These remembrances were deeply appreciated, but the love that prompted them was the most princely gift of all.

Charlotte—The Presbyterian Ministers' Association of Mecklenburg and adjoining counties was revived at a meeting held Monday at the First Church.

Rev. G. F. Bell was elected President, Rev. J. W. Orr, Vice-President, and Rev. C. W. McCulley, Secretary and Treasurer.

Dr. Sibley and Dr. Johnson were elected as a committee to prepare a constitution.

The Association will meet at 11 a. m. on Monday after the first and third Sabbaths of each month, and will be confined to one hour's time, twenty minutes for business, twenty minutes for the reading of a prepared paper, and twenty minutes for the discussion of the same.

Dr. J. L. Caldwell was asked to prepare a paper for the next meeting on any subject he thought best.

Dr. Johnson, Rev. J. R. Bridges and Rev. J. W. Orr were appointed a program committee to prepare subjects for the year.

The secretary was authorized to notify the members before each meeting, in order to insure full attendance.

Charlotte—Knox Church—Rev. G. F. Bell, pastor.—This church has been carrying a heavy debt amounting to nearly $22,000, about half of which is covered by Building and Loan stock maturing next fall. The untiring efforts of the chairman of the board of deacons, Mr. M. B. Query, and his faithful co-workers, and a most generous response on the part of the members and a few outside friends, have resulted in securing pledges to liquidate the other half. The church is consequently rejoicing at the prospect of being entirely free of debt within a year. Some time in 1920 plans will probably be matured for the erection of the main auditorium.

Ten new members were welcomed at the January communion. The pastor is deeply indebted to a generous people for a liberal check and other tokens of good will received at Christmas time.

Laurinburg—The installation of Rev. Carl B. Craig as pastor of the Laurinburg Presbyterian Church took place Sunday morning, December 1. The commission appointed by the Fayetteville Presbytery was composed of the following ministers: Chairman, Dr. Wm. E. Hill, of the Fayetteville First Church, who preached the sermon; Rev. J. W. Goodman, of Antioch, who charged the pastor, and Ruling Elder J. W. McLaughlin, of Raeford, who charged the people. Mr. Craig's father, Rev. Dr. D. I. Craig, present moderator of the Synod of North Carolina, stated clerk of the Synod and Orange Presbytery for many years, was present and made a short address. A remarkable coincidence is the fact that Dr. Craig himself was called to the pastorate of the church here thirty years ago and accepted the call, but the Presbytery refused to dissolve the pastoral relation at Reidsville. It is further observed that the senior Dr. Craig was called the same month—July—as his son, Rev. C. B. Craig, who came here in July to serve as stated supply, expecting at the time to go into the army, as he had volunteered in April of this year. For the past three years Mr. Craig has been co-pastor with his father at Reidsville.

To the Members of Mecklenburg Presbyterial Auxiliary—Dear Mecklenburgers: Since I last wrote you, I have received the following gifts for the Home for Missionaries on Furlough:

West Avenue	$ 5.00
Mt. Gilead	5.00
First (Charlotte) in addition to $76.00 previously reported	50.00
Pleasant Hill	14.00
Steele Creek	22.00
Bethel	9.50
	<hr/>
Previously reported	$105.50
Total to date	$262.40

We must hurry if we expect to have $1,600 by April 1. If you have a home of your own, send a contribution because you know how nice it is to have one, and want to help provide one for our workers.

If you haven't a home, you surely know what it is to want one, and will desire to help secure one for our workers.

Don't you think that the erection of this home would make a splendid "Thank offering" for peace?

KENTUCKY.

Lexington—The three Presbyterian churches of Lexington, the First, the Second, and Maxwell Street, united for a mid-day service in observing Week of Prayer. We were especially fortunate to have with us Dr. John Fox, secretary of the American Bible Society, who led the service on Foreign Missions. The Presbyterians of Lexington consider themselves fortunate to have Dr. J. Ernest Thacker spend the winter here in charge of the First Church. We trust his presence may stimulate a deep interest in evangelistic work among the churches.

OKLAHOMA.

Beal Heights Church, Lawton, was not permitted to carry out the program for the cause of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, planned for the Sunday School on Christmas night, because of the influenza epidemic in Lawton. However, Dr. Trigg A. M. Thomas, who is supplying the church in connection with his work as camp pastor, presented the cause to the church and Sunday School on Sabbath, December 29, and secured $70 for the Committee at Louisville. The church recently sent a liberal contribution to the treasurer of Assembly's Home Missions at Atlanta. About $200 has been raised in the congregation to pay for installing new heating arrangement and for repairs on the church buildings. Very few of the enlisted soldiers have been discharged from Camp Doniphan and Fort Sill. The work of camp pastor is as much needed now, if not more needed, than ever before. Nine big regular army artillery regiments, besides Post Field, the School of Fire, Battery Firing Center, One Brigade and other army departments are located here now. A large number of men will be retained here for some time to come.

VIRGINIA.

Synod of Virginia—The following committees are appointed for the work of the church in this Synod: Foreign Missions—The Presbyterial Chairmen, with Mr. Nathaniel Harrison as Synod's Chairman; Systematic Beneficence—Rev. J. H. Lacy, Chairman for the Synod, with Presbyterial Chairman; Rev. W. E. Hudson, Synodical Manager. Advisory Committee for the Synodical Auxiliary—Rev. D. K. Walthall, Rev. J. H. Lacy and Rev. James A. Armstrong; Sunday Schools—Rev. J. J. Fix, with Chairmen in Presbyteries. According to the former action of the Synod, the appointments of chairmen hold good for one year only

Emmett W. McCorkle,
Moderator Synod of Virginia.

Ronaoke—Belmont Church—The pastor, through the medium of the Church papers, wishes to express his appreciation to his congregation and friends for the splendid way they have remembered him and family from the beginning of his labors here, and especially during the last few months. As worthy of mention, we would speak of the pounding received by the pastor on Thanksgiving Day, which was so heavy he has not yet fully recovered from its effects. Also the handsome and very serviceable present received at Christmas. These tokens of good will go far toward strengthening the blessed "Tie that binds our hearts in Christian love," which grows stronger each day. Our orphans, at Lynchburg, were also remembered during the holidays. The Sabbath School "birthday box" was opened, for the second time during the year, and found to contain $12, which was sent to them as a Christmas present.

NORTH CAROLINA ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

The Tenth Biennial Convention of the State Anti-Saloon League will be held in Raleigh, January 16-17, 1919, beginning at 10 a. m. Thursday.

The Headquarters Committee, who have in charge the arranging of the program, are preparing a feast of oratory and other good things for the prohibitionists of the State. Among the out-of-State speakers are Dr. P. A. Baker, General Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America; Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the M. E. Church, South; the inimitable George R. Stewart, of Birmingham, Ala.; Hon. Wayne B. Wheeler, General Counsel of the Anti-Saloon League of America; and Hon. Wm. H. Anderson, of New York City.

Among prominent men of the State on the program are W. B. Cooper, State Senator from Wilmington; W. L. Poteat, LL.D., President of Wake Forest College; W. T. Shaw, manufacturer of Weldon; Hon. O. M. Mull, representative from Cleveland, and the law partner of Congressman E. Y. Webb; Wm. Allen Harper, LL.D., President of Elon College; Hon. W. O. Saunders, representative from Pasquotank; Hon. J. D. Eckles, of Buncombe; Judge John A. Oates, of Fayetteville; Rev. R. L. Davis, Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League; Rev. L. S. Massey, Editor of the Raleigh Christian Advocate, and Dr. W. S. Rankin, Secretary of State Board of Health.

This convention will no doubt get behind the Legislative program outlined by the board of trustees and lend a hand in passing further legislation to rid our State of blind tigers and blockade stills.

It is expected that many churches, Sunday Schools and other organizations will send delegates to this convention, and that hundreds of citizens throughout the State who want to break up the blind tiger and blockade business will attend. All who attend have the rights and privileges of the floor as well as those sent as delegates.

THE PASSING YEARS.

The days grow shorter, the nights grow longer,
The headstones thicken along the way;
And life grows sadder, but love grows stronger
For those who walk with us, day by day.
The tear comes quicker, the laugh comes slower,
The courage is lesser to do and dare;
And the tide of joy in the heart runs lower,
And seldom covers the reef of care.
But all true things in the world seem truer,
And the better things of the earth seem best;
And friends are dearer as friends are fewer,
And love is all as our sun dips west.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Story and Incident

Their Golden Day.

I DON'T know when I've seen a prettier day!" The dishcloth trailed from Abigail Weatherbee's fingers as her gaze traveled happily through the tiny window above the sink into the glowing autumn morning, "all trimmed with red and yellow, so. Look, Pa, don't it sort of carry you back to the times we used to go chestnutting in Tucker's Grove?"

Suspiciously her husband set down the cup he was wiping. "My, you're hinting! with the corn not more'n half shucked and all those Northern Spies to be picked over—"

But his tone was distinctly hopeful. Ma laughed gleefully, like a naughty child.

"And the butter to make," she nodded, soft-old cheeks excitement pink, "but I don't feel hardly as if I could keep my mind in a churn a day like this. Let's go nutting, Pa, you an' me!"

Abigail was sixty-seven, but the fine wrinkles that touched her plump face in its frame of thick white hair had not struck into her heart. It had never occurred to her to grow old. Her holiday spirit was continually leading Pa into gentle temptations, as now, and he—as now, continually yielding.

"Well, if you say so, Abbie." Joyfully, "I guess the corn can wait a spell longer and we can't be young folks but once!"

It was a favorite little joke of theirs. Ma, bustling about the sunny kitchen, setting the breakfast things away, laughed faithfully. "You get the chores out o' the way quick's you can, Abel," she directed, "an' I'll pack up some o' my crullers and what's left of that chocolate layer; oh, yes, and I'll boil some eggs. A picnic wouldn't be legal, though, without hard-boiled eggs in!"

A happy humming sound filled the little room as she made busy trips from the pantry to the kitchen table, filling the picnic basket with the skill of long practicing. "I'll skimp the sweeping just this once," she appeased the reproaches of conscience, "there's times when it's a downright sin to think about dust and duty, and today is one of them. It makes me feel just like a girl. I don't know but what maybe I shall skip crossing the meadow lot where the neighbors can't see!"

Emily's Letter.

On the porch sounded Pa's feet, returning. They seemed to drag a little, as though he were carrying something heavy. Ma could not guess that it was the burden of sixty-nine years, but his subdued face sent an odd cloud of apprehension across her holiday sky. Then she saw the letter in his hand.

"Pa! there's nothing the matter at Emily's? The children aren't sick?—tell me quick."

"No, no, Abbie, nobody's sick." Pa did not quite meet her eyes. "It's a real nice letter. Here, you read it aloud."

The sheets rustled crisply in Ma's fingers with the odd effect of a brisk voice speaking—Emily's brisk voice.

"Dear Old Folks at Home," the letter began, "this fall weather has set me worrying about you two blessed. It's not right for people of your age to live in a little draughty house in the country, quite a mile from the nearest neighbor. That was well enough when you were young, but old folks need comforts and coddling. Will and I have been talking it over and we've decided you simply must close up the house and come to us in the city, where we can take care of you. I've picked out your room already, one with a southern window, where Mother can sit with her knitting and a splendid big radiator for Father to toast his rheumatism at.

"You'll have to make a change soon, anyway, and the sooner the better. I'll run down the first of next week and help pack your things and close the house."

The sheets fluttered from Ma's fingers to the floor as her glance sought Pa's. An uneasy little silence fell over the room, broken by the bubbling of the eggs on the stove. Then—

"I suppose we have been a sort of putting off growing old," Ma smiled at last uncertainly. "We're dreadful putters-off, Pa, you and me." Her eyes wandered to the basket on the table. "What would Emily say to our picnicking! Maybe it isn't just the weather for us to go gallivanting around in the woods—"

Pa glanced out of the window. "It's blowing up colder, Abbie." He rubbed his shoulder reflectively. "I don't quite believe we'd better go out today. They's a kind o' a jumping in my arm. I wouldn't be surprised if Emily was right and I had got a touch of rheumatism."

"Set close up to the stove. I'll get the liniment and rub it."

Ma turned toward the pantry, hesitated and lifted the basket from the table. "I might as well set the crullers and things away, so they won't dry. You can cut up the eggs for the chickens."

They did not refer to the letter again, but that afternoon Ma solemnly got out her best silk dress and sewed fresh lace into the neck and sleeves. Overhead, as she worked, she could hear a subdued bumping sound that meant Pa, bringing the trunks down from the attic. If Emily said they were going they would go. They were both acquainted with Emily.

Moving.

With Monday of the next week she arrived, in a pleasant bustle of efficiency, and at once set to work reducing Ma's ordered little rooms to the chaos of moving. Under her vigorous hands they took on unfamiliarity, chairs stood uneasily askew, bright unfaded spots blossomed out on the wall paper where the pictures had been, and through the confusion Emily moved, capable, serene.

"There's not a thing for you two blessed to do!" she declared gaily. "I guess you've earned the right to sit down and fold your hands and watch some one else doing things for a while. That's what daughters are for."

"She treats the highboy and table and things as if they were furniture instead of folks," Ma lamented inwardly, watching. "But, there, I hadn't ought to find fault. Emily means real well."

On the last morning Ma slipped away, leaving Emily to finish packing. Around the curve of the lane she broke into a little eager run, cheeks excitement pink, like those of a girl going to a tryst. The crisp autumn wind tugged at her scant skirts and blew strands of greying hair about her cheeks. In the orchard the leaves were fluttering from the gnarled old trees, but the necromancy of memory clothed them to Ma's wistful eyes in young tender green and pink and white apple blows.

For the space of many moments Abigail Weatherbee stood, a spare grey figure among the spare grey orchard trees, looking away across the withered fields, to where a slender steeple lifted itself among the trees. Forty-nine years ago she had stood in the same spot, looking at that steeple for the first time.

Steps hesitated in the lane behind her, but Ma did not hear. She was back in that first radiant bride morning, with the sweetness of the apple blossoms all around. The kiss, awkward as a boy's on her cheek, now seemed a part of the day dream. Then she looked up and saw Pa's gentle, seamed old face, and the dream fell away.

"I was round kind o' saying good-by to the old place," Pa explained, embarrassedly.

"So was I," Ma nodded. A little silence hovered over them, full of the sound of unsaid things. Then Pa made a brisk effort at commonplaceness.

"I expect we're going to find the city terrible interesting," he said, cheerily, "with so many folks to watch and all. And winter'll be coming on soon. Look how the leaves are most all gone."

Ma shivered. "I hadn't noticed, but 'tis blowing up real chilly," she answered. "Come on, Pa, maybe we'd better be going in."

And, hand in hand, like two children keeping up each other's courage, they went back to the dismantled house and Emily.

Through the first few weeks of city sights and sounds they moved bewilderedly, like travelers in a foreign land. The elevator that shot them at breathless speed up to Emily's fifth floor apartment, the dizzy webs of fire escapes clambering by the windows, the shrill buzz of the dumb waiter, bringing up the morning's groceries—all these things vaguely distressed them. In her secret soul Ma fretted over the lack of an upstairs.

"It don't seem hardly decent going to bed right next the dining room," she thought, distressfully. "Living in layers this way you know whenever the upstairs man quarrels with his wife and what the downstairs folks are going to have for dinner—gives a body a dretful looking-through-the-key-hole sort of feeling somehow!"

The front windows of the apartment, looking out into the busy street offered the promise of entertainment, but after a day or so Emily put her foot down. "There's a terrible draught around those north windows," she worried, "and it's so bad for people of your age to sit in draughts. You're not as young as you used to be, you know—that's why I picked out the nice sunny south room for you."

The single window of their bedroom looked out over a dreary vista of square boxlike back yards and drying clothes endlessly flapping on endless clothes lines, but Ma and Pa accepted their "view" as unquestionably as they accepted the strange new notion of old age, the folding beds and mail chutes—the children—Emily's children—puzzled them. Allison, at ten, was already powdering her small nose and talking self-consciously of the "boys," while seven-year-old Bradley read the sporting pages of the newspapers and pratted with a worldly wise air of the latest screen stars.

"I don't believe they ever was real circus 'n' Santa Claus young," Pa confided to Ma in the privacy of their room. "They're older'n you and me this living minute!"

Ma laid down her knitting, the gleam of pleasant planning in her eyes. "Speaking of circuses," she said, slowly, "let's us go to Zoo this afternoon, Pa, you and me, and feed the animals. Em'ly and the children are shopping and the maid's out. There isn't a thing to hinder, not a thing."

In the end, as usual, she had her way, and through a golden afternoon the two old truants wandered happily, hand-in-hand, feeding the elephants with peanuts to their hearts' content and eating pink sugared popcorn out of a striped paper bag. But at the door of the apartment retribution met them.

"I've been worried to death about you," Emily wailed. "With all this glare of ice on the ground it would have been the most natural thing in the world for one of you to have slipped and broken a hip or something. Old bones are so brittle. Promise me you won't stir out of the house again unless Will or I go along to hold onto your arms."

After this Ma and Pa made no more adventurous forays from the little rear room. As the weeks slipped by it seemed to Abigail Weatherbee, watching anxiously over her knitting, that Pa was growing old under her very eyes. He sat laxly in the big arm chair, white head nodding over the newspaper in his listless fingers, while Emily bustled about with unflagging footstools and hot-water bottles.

"Father's failing fast," she said now and again with a kind of sad triumph. "It was high time you came!"

Only the click-click of knitting needles answered. In the last few months Ma had become very silent. Pa, watching with secret unease, wondered whether it could be that Abbie was really growing old.

"She don't act the way she used to—interested and like that," he thought sadly. "I haven't heard her laugh out since I don't know when."

And so, with knitting and newspapers and hot-water bottles, the slow months passed and quite suddenly one afternoon it was spring. In the dingy little backyards the winter quarreling of the sparrows was changed to sweet shrill mating songs and Pa, drowsing in the big arm chair, sat up suddenly with an odd new eagerness.

The Call of Blooming Trees.

"I smell apple blows, Ma," he cried homesickly. "Plain as plain, like the ones on the Northern Spy back of the barn at home."

The knitting fell from Ma's quivering fingers. She bent forward, sniffing. "I smell 'em, too, Pa," she nodded. "O, it's May and spring's going on in our orchard and we ain't there to see!"

The listlessness fell from Abel Weatherbee's shoulders like a garment. He caught up the newspaper and scanned the date line. It was a boy's face he turned to her, tender, quivering.

"Ma, it's May ninth!" he said. "Tomorrow—do you know what day tomorrow'll be?"

Ma drew a slow breath. "Not—our Golden Day?"

Pa spoke shyly, awkward in the grip of unwonted sentiment. "Fifty years ago we saw that orchard for the first time, Abbie, all pink and white, 'twas like a big bookay—"

"I wore a white muslin with flounces," Ma remembered, breathlessly. "We come straight across the fields from the parsonage and you said"—soft color swept to the grey line of her hair—"you said I was like a posy myself—oh, Pa!"

"We was always kind o' easy going, both of us." Pa chuckled. "Your father was a black Methodist and mine a hard-shell Baptist, and they wouldn't hear of us marrying. They never dreamed we'd have spunk enough to up'n run away!"

Abigail Weatherbee interrupted with a little wordless cry. Into her eyes had crept the old joyous gleam of happy planning. "Pa," she spoke a trifle breathlessly, "Pa, we eloped once. Let's elope again—now!"

He stared at her, piteously. "But we're old folks, Abbie." The words trailed. With that clear girl pink in her cheeks, that eager light in her eyes, Ma was almost young!

"Nonsense!" Ma said in scorn. "I could churn a batch o' butter this living minute; you could do a day's plowing. We weren't old, either of us, till Em'ly began looking after us, making us old!"

Pa straightened his old back splendidly. "I aimed to lay the south field to oats this year—"

"We'd ought to get back home as soon as we can," Ma said, decisively. "I can't hardly wait to get holt of a broom! I guess we can look out for ourselves a spell longer, Pa, and then in twelve, fifteen years, say, when we're beginning to feel a mite old we can get some nice young couple to stay with us and help with the chores."

Still Pa was doubtful. "But Em'ly—what'll Em'ly say?"

"We'll leave a letter explaining," Ma laughed gleefully. "The way elopers always do. I'd ought to know. I've had a good deal of experience eloping, Pa!"

It was this letter Emily found pinned to the pin cushion when she came in the next morning to call them to breakfast:

"Dear Daughter," it ran, in Ma's prim script, "you've been dretful good to us and we're grateful, but we've decided to stay young a spell longer. It's our golden wedding today and we've eloped, like we did fifty years ago. We want you and the children should plan to come home for a nice long visit, say in raspberry time—"

A tear splashed down on the page. Emily gave a little laugh that was own cousin to a sob. "I didn't understand," she said, remorsefully. "The two old dears! No, no—the two young dears."

In the red plush seat of the day coach Pa and Ma, hand in hand, peered out into the flying landscape, making little joyous discoveries. That side pasture, now, didn't that remind you for all the world of the one at home? And there was a red-painted barn and a pump and a Gurnsey cow—"

"Aren't they the dearest?" whispered the pretty girl across the aisle to her boy husband. "Do you suppose we'll be as happy as they are, Harry, when we get old?"

A soft warm wind was stirring all the new green grasses as Abel Weatherbee and his wife came across the meadow a little later. Behind them the slender church spire rose

A dutiful daughter, devoted wife and mother, a faithful friend, a true and beautiful Christian, and a loyal member of the Presbyterian Church. "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

IN MEMORIAM.

Rev. Henry Junius Mills was called on the 24th day of October, 1918, in the midst of active usefulness by the Great Head of the Church, to lay aside his ministry in the Church Militant to enter into his reward in the Church Triumphant.

He was born August 23, 1876, of pious parents, Mr. and Mrs. Leighton C. Mills. His father and his two grandfathers, maternal and paternal, were all ruling elders in the Salem (B. R.) Church in Harmony Presbytery. From such ancestry and the training it secured to him he united in his youth with the Church of Salem (B. R.) and dedicated his life to the ministry.

He graduated at Davidson College in the class of 1897. Licensed by the Harmony Presbytery, April, 1901, one year later was called to the pastorate of the churches of Aimwell and Longtown, in the Bethel Presbytery (now in Congaree Presbytery); here he served with great acceptability for nearly six years, resigning this pastorate, to become pastor of Clover and Beersheba Churches, of the same Presbytery, subsequently uniting in this pastorate the church of Bowling Green. In this field he served for about five years and a half. From it he was called by the Churches of Ashpole and Rowland, in the Synod of North Carolina, and he served with great acceptance until the summons came, after a brief illness from influenza (the epidemic) contracted by the exposure incident to his faithfulness in visiting the sick.

Thus there has passed from the service of the earthly tabernacle into the heavenly, a minister who was truly consecrated to his calling, an able minister, endowed by nature and by grace with gifts earnestly cultivated. In manner he was humble, gentle and courteous, endeavoring himself to all his brethren in the ministry, as well as others, who came in contact with him. He was married to Miss Hannah Fraser McCutchen, of the upper Salem section of Sumter County, S. C., on June 11, 1902, whom he leaves to mourn his loss, together with three daughters: Irene, Fraser and Mary, and also a sister, Mrs. George McCutchen, with a host of friends who deeply mourn his loss.

IN MEMORIAM.

John A. Blue.

Whereas, our heavenly Father in His infinite wisdom and mercy has called from time to eternity our elder and brother, John A. Blue.

Whereas, we, the members of the session of Eureka Presbyterian Church, wishing to express the high esteem in which we held our fellow elder and brother, adopt the following resolutions:

Whereas, we sincerely sorrow over the death of our brother; yet we humbly submit to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we record our high estimation of his Christian character, and our appreciation of his services in the church and community.

2. That we commend to the people of our church his faithfulness in service and his loyalty to God and his country.

3. That we tender to his family our sincere sympathy and commend them to the love of the Father who beareth all our griefs.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy inscribed on the sessional records, and a copy sent to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

THE QUEEN'S CHOICE.

In one of the small kingdoms lived a good Queen. She was lonely, because there were no children in the palace. So one day she sent her Herald to the school with a message.

There was great excitement in the school at the sight of the Herald, and the little people were just a trifle frightened. They sat very still with their hands clasped, and listened.

"The Queen is looking for the kindest child in the kingdom to bring up as a Princess in the palace," said the Herald. "You are to be put on trial for a month, and at the end of that time Her Majesty will make a choice."

After he had gone, everybody talked at once, and the teacher had to call for order.

Little Berenice could think of nothing else all day. Wouldn't it be wonderful if she was chosen to be a Princess! She would try very hard. Indeed, she would begin that day by running errands for old Granny Lindey, who was a cripple.

She hurried home from school and flung her books on a chair. Her mother was rocking a sick baby, and she pointed to the dishes on the table. Berenice's heart sank. Those horrid old dishes had to be washed, and how she hated to do them! But the kettle was singing on the stove, and perhaps if she hurried, there would still be time to run errands for Granny Lindey. So she dumped them into a pan and poured the hot water over them. Soon they were done, and she put them on the shelf which served as a cupboard. Hastily she tied on her bonnet and darted out of the door.

It was still light, and perhaps she would be in time. As she ran along, she thought about being a Princess. She would save all the pennies the Queen gave her and buy her mother a silk dress; and the baby should have a toy, and—Here she was at Granny Lindey's!

The old cripple woman said that nearly all the children in the village had been to see her, and there wasn't a thing left for Berenice to do.

The little girl walked home so slowly that it was quite dark when she got there. Her mother was busy preparing supper, so Berenice set the table rather sorrowfully. A whole day had been lost, and the other children would be way ahead of her. In the evening she would have to help her little brother get his lessons. Oh dear, it was very hard to give up wanting to be a Princess!

The next day at recess the children talked about the fine things they had done.

"I sharpened a pencil for teacher," said one boy, proudly displaying his knife.

"I carried wood for Uncle Cole," said another.

"I took Granny Lindey a jar of preserves," said a girl.

"And I gave my little brother two marbles," chimed in a boy.

Poor little Berenice had no great deeds to tell and it was hard to keep back the tears. Perhaps tomorrow! But tomorrow was very much like today. The same dishes had to be washed, the floor scrubbed, little brother's lessons—it was just useless trying to do big things, so the little girl went on doing the little things.

Then one day at recess the children talked differently. Instead of recounting their fine tasks, they began to complain.

"A month's a long time to be good," said one.

"I've run so many errands for folks that I haven't time to play ball anymore. I'm going to quit the errands," said another.

"I told my brother he could keep my marbles for a month, but I guess two weeks is long enough."

A little girl giggled as she said: "The last jar of jam I took to Granny Lindey's I ate most of it myself."

Berenice thought real hard. Perhaps she could find time to do something for somebody else.

Then one day when everything seemed to go wrong, a man knocked at the door of Berenice's home. The little girl was rocking the baby. She was alone, for her mother had gone for a doctor. She called out: "Come in."

A big man entered, the very biggest man Berenice had ever seen. He took up the whole doorway. If the baby hadn't been so sick, he would have been frightened. But she thought he must be the doctor. So she held out the baby to him.

"Are you alone?" he asked, holding the child rather gingerly.

"Yes, sir, please sit down and give the baby some medicine."

"I am not the doctor, but I think that you make a very nice little nurse."

After that they talked like old friends, and it was not until the mother came with the doctor that the big man went away.

When the month was up, the Queen gave a big celebration in the palace grounds, and all the village children were there with their parents. They played games and had lots of good things to eat.

Then, as a grand climax, the Queen's Herald sounded on his bugle, and the people gathered before him in front of the palace. Little Berenice was among them, and when a big man stepped to the side of the Herald, she cried:

"That's the man who came to see us, mother. Oh, I would love to have him talk to us."

She saw the big man speak to the Herald, and then the people quieted down. The Herald advanced a step and said:

"Friends, many children started out well in doing kind acts, but many tired before the month was up. There is one little girl in this village who has been her mother's constant help. She is Berenice, and to her belongs the honor of being brought up in the Queen's palace. All hail the Princess Berenice!"—Maud Wilcox, in Presbyterian.

THE LITTLE WHEEL.

"Tick-tock, tick-tock," away the old clock worked just as hard as it could, and all at once, what do you think happened? It stopped!

Grandmother said: "My, the clock has stopped. That will never do."

So she wound it, and wound it, but it would not run even a little bit. Then she shook it, really hard, but not a tick would it make. She got tired of worrying with such a contrary old clock, so she put it back on the mantel and left it.

Now what do you suppose made it stop running? Well, I will tell you; a tiny wheel inside said to himself:

"Pshaw, what is the use of just turning all the time? I'm tired." Now it happened that one of the springs heard the little wheel complaining and it said:

"Shame on you, Little Wheel, to think of stopping your work. Don't you know all of us will have to stop too?"

"Oh, well, I don't care. I'm tired," said Little Wheel.

Just then a big wheel spoke up and said:

"Look here, Little Wheel, what makes you so lazy? We don't want to stop work."

"Can't help it," said Little Wheel. "I'm going to stop now."

About that time a little screw called up to the little wheel and said:

"I'm heap smaller than you, Little Wheel, and I'm not tired. Move on."

Then a pinion nudged Little Wheel in the back, and that gave him such a shock he had to run a few minutes longer. Then he grew very angry and said:

"Just for spite I'm going to take a nap."

So sure enough, he lay right down and began to snore. That was when the clock really stopped.

Well, about this time the Face was wondering what had happened, and the Minute Hand yelled up to the Hour Hand to know what the trouble was.

"Can't tell you," said the Hour Hand, "I just know that I can't move."

"How terrible," said the Minute

Hand, "when every one who comes into the room looks at us the first thing and blames us for not working."

Finally a wee voice in the back of the clock called to the hands and said:

"Little Wheel has gotten contrary and gone to sleep."

This made the Hands very angry and they told all the Wheels, Screws, Springs and Pinions to make as much noise as they could, and wake up Little Wheel. They danced, yelled and poked Little Wheel in the ribs, and after pulling him around a little they managed to get his eyes open. He pretended to be awfully sick, but they all knew that Little Wheel was "playin' possum." So they continued to poke him and tickle him, and one big wheel actually sat on his head. Still Little Wheel would not promise to do any work.

Well, the next day the Wheels, Screws, Springs, Pinions and Hands were in a fever of excitement, for Grandfather had put the clock in his automobile and the next thing these funny little things knew they were speeding down town.

"Little Wheel is running now whether he wants to or not," laughed one of the Springs.

The auto stopped in front of a big jewelry store and Grandfather left the clock with a stern-looking man and told him to fix it.

This man took the clock all to pieces, and I'll tell you, Little Wheel was scared almost to death. When the man looked at all the springs and things he said:

"Oh, yes. The trouble is with this Little Wheel. I'll just give it a big dose of oil."

Little Wheel made an awful face and the other Wheels and Springs giggled and some of them crooked their fingers at Little Wheel when the man had his back turned.

After the man gave Little Wheel the dose of oil he put the clock back together and you should have seen how Little Wheel did work. And when Grandfather took the clock home and put it on the mantel Little Wheel said: "How good it is to be at home again, and ugh, how bad that oil tasted!"—A. H. Howard, in Intelligencer.

WONDERFUL EGG PRODUCER.

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs" and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs, so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 9251 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1.00 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. Send a dollar today or ask Mr. Reefer for his free poultry book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.—Adv.

Thousands of our returning boys will spend many weeks, perhaps months, in camp before they are returned to their homes. It will interest the mothers and fathers to learn that these boys have had the first pangs of homesickness alleviated by the sight of the hostess in the Hostess House who was the last to whom they waved good bye when they left. "Felt tough to think I couldn't go on home," said one boy, "but this place comes so near to it, I'm not kicking. Looks just like it did when we went away, and you don't look a day older." The hostess laughed; she was receiving many of such compliments, and she knew what they meant. So much had been crowded into the boys' lives since they left that they fully expected every one they met on returning to look years and years older.

Their Golden Day.

among the tree tops, ahead the orchard bloomed with white and rosy fragrance, like a bride's bouquet. Under the blossomed branches they kissed solemnly like lovers. Then, with a little laugh, Ma veered away from the dangerous edge of sentiment.

"It's real lucky we brought all those things from the village," she cried joyously. "You kindle up a fire and I'll hard-boil some of the eggs and make us a batch of sandwiches. It's the prettiest kind of a day for a picnic, Pa!"—Dorothy Donnell Calhoun, in N. Y. Advocate.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond.

The January meeting of the Society of Missionary Inquiry was addressed by Rev. W. D. Reynolds, D.D., of Korea, a graduate of the Seminary in 1892, and since well known as a missionary in the far East and one of the translators of the Scriptures into the Korean language. He is always a welcome visitor to the Seminary.

The highest distinction within the gift of the Seminary to an undergraduate is the appointment to the Moses D. Hoge Fellowship of Post-Graduate Study which is awarded annually to some member of the Senior Class on the ground of pre-eminent merit and which secures for him the privilege of a fourth year of special study on salary. This honor has been won this year by Mr. James English Cousar, Jr., of Bishopville, S. C. This is the third time that the Fellowship has been won by South Carolina men. The first was Rev. W. T. Thompson, Jr., of Charleston, S. C., now pastor of the First Church, Knoxville, Tenn. The second was Rev. R. K. Timmons, of Columbia, S. C., now superintendent of Tuscaloosa Institute, Ala. Mr. Cousar continues the fine record of a good State.

The Seminary, as already announced, has made arrangements by which students who were prevented by war service from entering the institution in the Fall, can enter now and bring up the back work and go on with the regular classes, and four or five of the men from the army and from the Students' Army Training Corps have already come in since demobilization began.

THE CENTENNIAL OF A GREAT HYMN.

Stille Nacht! Heilige Nacht!

Translated from the German by Rev. F. E. Emrich, D.D.

It was Christmas Eve, 1818. Over the Bavarian highlands the last ray of day was fading in red glow, while deep shadows were over the valley. Up high on a narrow footpath, which wound its way out of a rocky chasm, a wanderer was seen. He was the assistant pastor of Oberdorf near Arnsdorf, Joseph Mohr.

The lonely walk upon the mountain heights was at this time especially agreeable to him, for in his soul there was the song and melody of Christmas joy and Christmas peace. Therefore, he did not hasten, but descended slowly to the valley while night was ever more spreading and now covered even the high, white mountain tops. In the darkening sky one star after another was ascending until the entire host together was in twinkling glory.

The turn of the way brought the traveler to a cliff of rock. There he stopped and sat down upon the stump of a tree. At his feet there stretched a level pasture. Below glowed the lights of Arnsdorf, and still farther away of Oberdorf. Far off gentle tones of the bells came through the air, and now behind the black fir forest came up the new moon, shining as silver, and reflected in the little dark lake at the lower cliff.

Mohr sat for a long time and gazed over the wide landscape; but his thoughts were elsewhere, and that which he saw in his spirit formed itself into a picture before his eyes. Below, where the lights of Arnsdorf, lay Bethlehem; that little hut on one side with the flaring little flame was the stable where Mary and Joseph, full of thankfulness and joy, were watching with the child Jesus. Nearer by in the depth of the valley, in the open pasture were the shepherds with their flocks, their hearts full of longing for the promised Son of David, and their looks directed to the wonderful star.

Joseph Mohr also looked upward with ardent longing, yet he felt as if he saw heaven opening and hosts of angels descending in heavenly glory to announce to poor Earth the one great joy which has come to all peoples. He folded his hands in prayer; then he arose from the quiet place and descended into the valley—since he was expected in the schoolhouse at Arnsdorf.

His friend the organist, Franz Gruber, met him at the door and said, "Welcome! We are waiting for you at the Christmas celebration."

Joyously Mohr greeted the two Strasser brothers and two Strasser sisters from Zittertal, whose singing had often gladdened him.

"How good it is that you are here," said he, "now we can sing and play to the honor of the Christmas child."

While Gruber had yet many things to arrange for the festal preparations, Mohr withdrew into an adjoining room, and when soon thereafter his friend called him in to the presentation of the Christmas gifts, he put a little paper into his hand and said: "This is my Christmas present for you, dear friend. I have no other. You know I am not rich in this world's goods."

A Christmas Present.

Gruber went with the paper to the cross of wax lights which had been built under the branches of the fir tree. Joyously he cried out, "But in the goods of heaven you are the richer. Listen, dear friends, what he has given us all as a Christmas present." With a fervent intonation he read:

Holy night! peaceful night!
All is dark, save the light
Yonder where they sweet vigils keep O'er the Babe who in silent sleep

Rests in heavenly peace,
Rests in heavenly peace.

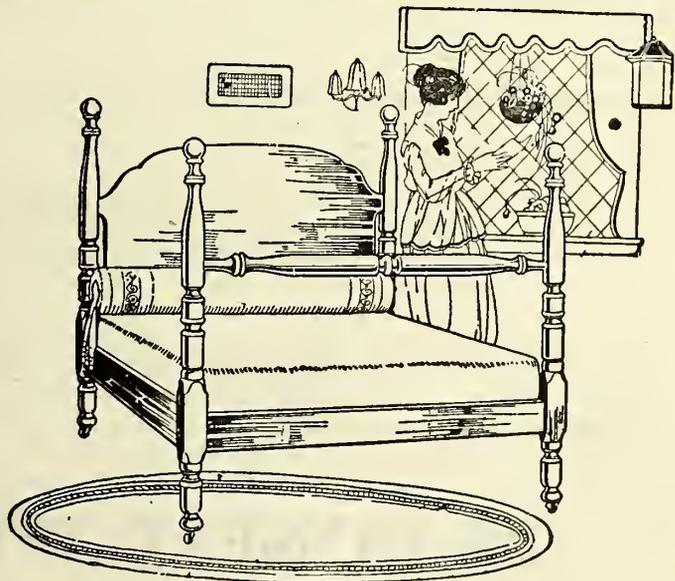

Holy night! peaceful night!
Only for shepherds' sight
Came blest visions of angel throngs,
With their loud alleluia songs,
Saying, Christ is come,
Saying, Christ is come.

Holy night! peaceful night!
Child of heaven, O how bright
Thou didst smile on us when Thou wast born!
Blest indeed was that happy morn;
Full of heavenly joy,
Full of heavenly joy.

All pressed the hands of the clergyman with glad gratitude.
"Its only a simple little song," said he, "which this evening has just come into my heart; but you can sometime sing it, for with you everything, everything at once turns into music. But

JESUS WAS TEMPTED

On the Money Question

Three Temptations in the Wilderness: {
Desire of the Flesh
Desire of Popular Approval
Desire for Property

“The devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain and sheweth him all the the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; and saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me.”

The Boy faces this temptation as he plays marbles for keeps.

The Young Man faces this temptation as he gambles for unearned money.

The Thief faces this temptation, falls into it, is caught with stolen goods.

The Captain of Industry faces this temptation, is caught robbing the people of an entire land.

The Clerk faces this temptation, is caught knocking down money from the cash drawer.

The Employer of Labor faces this temptation, and is found robbing the workman of their well-earned wages.

The Merchant faces this temptation, is caught profiteering.

The Covetous man's soul shrinks within himself as he feeds on desire.

It is written of Israel “God gave them their request but sent leanness into their souls.”

Warn men of this universal temptation.

Paul says it is the “root of all kinds of evil.”

Is this true?

The only cure is for man First to acknowledge God's ownership. Second, set aside that part which the scripture and his own conscience dictates.

now I must go to the Christmas mass in the church; afterwards we can be together a little longer and sing."

Late at night the friends separated after they had sung many a beautiful song. Mohr went to his bedroom, but he could not at once go to rest. Through his heart went all the songs they had sung, and they moved him. He stepped to the window and once again he looked out into the quiet, festive night. So still and solemn it also was in his soul full of praise and gratitude, "for the Christ the Saviour is here," he repeated again and again.

Then suddenly there came soft, lovely sounds to his ear. Was not that his own song? As if borne by shepherd flutes the melody moved in a rhythm, sung by four wonderful voices. Stille Nacht! Heilige Nacht!

With deep emotion Mohr listened until the last sound had died away. Then he hastened out to thank his friends.

"Indeed has not the song become a beautiful tune!" Gruber cried out to him: "One cannot do anything else but at once sing your beautiful song. Therefore the sound at once came to me, and while you were gone I played it to my friends, the Straussers, and we together have composed it."

At the Christmas festival of the following year, 1819, the Strasser brothers and sisters came to Leipzig and sang the song to the renowned Cantor Ascher. Thereafter they sang it in the early mass of Christmas Day. Friese in Essen had it copied accurately after these nature singers, and so by degrees it found its way into the most remote circles.

By many thousand children in all Christendom it is sung yearly, and when it is sung it transfers us to the holy fields of Bethlehem where the glory of heaven and the song of angels surround us, and with joyous hearts we join in the children's choir.—Congregationalist.

BANISH CATARRH

Hyomei Will Relieve You or Nothing to Pay.

When you make up your mind to get rid of disgusting Catarrh, follow this advice:

Go to your druggist; ask him for a HYOMEI Outfit (pronounce it High-o-me). This outfit consists of a bottle of HYOMEI (liquid), a hard rubber pocket inhaler, a medicine dropper, and full instructions for use. Pour a few drops into the inhaler, and breath it a few minutes each day, according to directions.

HYOMEI relieves Catarrh because it reaches every nook, corner, and crevice of the membrane of the nose, throat, and bronchial tubes. Stomach dosing, sprays, douches, and ointments don't kill the germs because they don't get where the germs are. As the publisher of this paper knows, if you are not satisfied with Hyomei in cases of Catarrh and colds of the head, Catarrhal Coughs, Bronchial Catarrh, Spasmodic Croup, Catarrhal Laryngitis or Hay Fever your money will be cheerfully refunded. Refuse substitutes. If your druggist does not sell it, we will send you a complete outfit, charges prepaid, for $1.15. Address, Booth's HYOMEI CO., Ithaca, N. Y.

HATH GOD SAID:

"The silver and gold are mine."

Surely He hath said and He will most certainly require an accounting from each one of us.

Will He Excuse Me if I Say:

I did not know that China, Japan, Korea, Africa, Brazil, Mexico, Cuba are in need of money for native missionary schools, hospitals, equipments for carrying on the work of our Lord Jesus. Or

I did not know that there are great wide areas in Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico, the mountains of Virginia, North and South Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, and Alabama where the Gospel of Jesus is not taught and men do not know the way of life and that those who labor are too few and poorly paid. Or

I did not know that our Schools and Colleges are inadequately equipped; Our teachers are poorly paid, and that our aged ministers, who have served God so faithfully, are not adequately cared for. Or

I did not know that there are Three Million children who do not attend Sabbath Schools in the South; and I did not know that there is need of teachers and superintendents. Or I did not know anything about the Home Mission work in our Presbytery; or if the Committee needs men or money to carry it on. Or

I did not know that there are so many children who have no father or mother, and that the Orphanages need more money now to run them?

Will Jesus excuse ME—because I failed to give where money is needed. Or

If I fail to tell others of the need when I know of it. Or If I fail to give of my time to see that every member of my church is visited that they may have an opportunity to give to these needs. Or

If I fail to organize my church for this Three and a Half Million Dollar Campaign?

Will Jesus excuse ME if I am unfaithful, untrue?

LET'S HAVE A SINGING CHURCH.

Can you imagine the management of a live business, or manufacturing enterprise, maintaining an attitude of indifference toward that which is essential to its vitality? Yet we have the spectacle of the greatest enterprise in the world, the Church of our Lord, maintaining an attitude of indifference toward that which God has honored as one of the two supreme exercises of the soul, and which we recognize as one of the three essentials of divine service—common praise—with the result that it is experiencing a distinct loss in spiritual life and vigor. Some pastors have not been fitted by education or experience to use the hymn, intelligently, in praise. The organists who can play the hymn with spiritual power are not many. The musical part of the service is open to be exploited by the spirit of commercialism, and too often the main purpose of this part is to entertain.

All down through the ages man has voiced his varying spiritual and emotional moods through song, and the Scriptures place a great emphasis on praise. Of a truth "the children of this world are, in their generation, wiser than the children of light," for we find that one of the reasons for the spirit of unity of the German people is the persistent cultivation of national song. Our Army leaders are awaking to the importance of singing, the chairman of the Committee on Training Camp Activities saying that "mass singing in camps is a tremendous factor in the elevation of the spirit of the men, a singing army is irresistible, and we are sending a singing army to France." And consider the spread of "community singing."

Oh, for men of vision in pulpit, editorial sanctum, and seminary to lead waiting multitudes in praise.

"Let the people praise thee, O God, let all the people praise thee."—Chas. F. Jones, in Congregationalist.

WHO'S WHO AT THE PEACE TABLE?

When Florence was deliberating about the choice of an ambassador to Rome, Dante playfully, yet still arrogantly, exclaimed: "If I remain behind, who goes? and if I go who remains behind?" This from Dr. John Lord's lecture on "Rise of Modern Poetry," is very suggestive now.

The honor of moulding a world is surely to be coveted, especially when the Creator says, "If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not." May God's dear Son be honored and His kingdom extended whoever represents the United States.—Intelligencer.

A NEW CALVARY.

The lust for killing Germans would never take a man out of his dug-out; but the love of his country and the resolve to do his duty will take him out and lead him over the top. It is what he volunteered for, but it goes hard when the time comes for all that. Life is sweet at nineteen or one-and-twenty. It pleads to be spared a little longer. A lad does not want to die; and as he goes over the parapet he is thinking less of taking German lives than of losing his own. A short while ago, our boys had no idea of becoming soldiers. They were the light of a home and the stay of a business. With that they were content. But the challenge came; and they went out to defend the right against the wrong—the true against the false. They toiled up a new Calvary “with the cross that turns not back,” and now they lie buried in a strange land. They have lost all for themselves, but they have gained all for us, and for those who will come after us. Yet although they saved others, themselves they could not save.—From “The Soul of a Soldier,” by Thomas Tiplady, C. F.

If we cannot find God in your house and mine, upon the roadside or the margin of the sea; in the bursting seed or opening flower; in the day duty or the night musing—I do not think we should discern Him any more upon the grass of Eden, or beneath the moonlight of Gethsemane.—J. Martineau.

THE demand for really good editions of authorized versions of the HOLY BIBLE and NEW TESTAMENT has increased lately by leaps and bounds. This state of affairs being due largely to the present war conditions existing throughout the world. It has been determined as a fact that war is a great influence for broader and better religious thought, not only to the man serving on the firing line, but to the loved ones left at the home fireside.

To meet as far as possible this call for Bibles and Testaments, we have ordered and have in stock a most complete and comprehensive collection of the Word to be found anywhere, and we submit here for your selection some of the best of this stock.

In ordering any of the articles advertised here you may address your communications to our Mail Order Department with a feeling of assurance that such orders will receive prompt and careful attention.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate lining of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Spring, Box 4B, Shelton, S. C. Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

STANDARD PIANO CLUB

BEGINS ANOTHER YEAR

The Advertising Manager of the Presbyterian Standard takes special pleasure in announcing that owing to the wonderful popularity and success of the Club during the past twelve months, and in view of the enthusiastic praise and gratitude which have been expressed by those who placed their orders through the Club, we have effected arrangements with the Managers, Messrs. Ludden & Bates, to continue the attractive prices, terms, guarantees and privileges which the Club has afforded its members during the past year.

Everybody was delighted. Music Teachers, Farmers, Preachers, Lawyers, Doctors, Merchants, Mechanics, Bankers, Manufacturers, Professors, Clerks, Stenographers—members of every conceivable occupation expressed their appreciation and unqualified approval in the strongest possible terms. There was not a single discordant note in the great chorus of praise of the Club and its superb instruments.

Why?—Read the answer in the following letters, selected at random from the Club's correspondence.

From a Music Teacher.

"I have had my Ludden & Bates piano since last September and would not part with it for anything like the amount I paid for it, unless I could get another one exactly like it."

From a Minister.

"The piano arrived in good time and in first class condition and we find that it measures up in every particular to what you claimed for it. We are delighted with it and take pride in showing it. The first comment after a test is, 'Oh, hasn't it a sweet tone,' and the next is, 'What did it cost?' and then 'Where did you get it?'"

"The wonder is how a piano of its appearance and tone can be sold on the terms on which you offer it. The Club plan is a blessing to the poor man who must buy and would not otherwise be able."

On receipt of our letter thanking him for his endorsement this minister replied as follows—"You are certainly welcome to my testimonial, but if it had not been true you could not have pumped it out of me with a high-power engine."

From a Merchant.

"After carefully investigating the catalogues of other music houses I am of the opinion that the Club plan has given us a much better piano than I could have bought elsewhere for the same money. We are very much pleased with the self-player piano."

From a Farmer and His Wife.

"We have had the Ludden & Bates piano almost a year and would not take twice the amount of money that we paid for it. If we were to want to buy a dozen more we would buy a Ludden & Bates piano every time."

From a Physician.

"The Ludden & Bates Cabinet Grand Upright piano which I bought through the Club more than six months ago has been a source of great pleasure to my whole family. I am well pleased with the Club plan and think that the tone and workmanship of this piano cannot be surpassed. I was in touch with several piano concerns before buying and decided to join the Club. I shall never regret it. I congratulate you upon being able to sell so fine an instrument on such reasonable terms."

From a School Teacher.

"I have received the piano and am well pleased with it. Everyone that sees it says it is a beauty. The Club plan is fine."

From a Little Girl.

"I have had my piano nearly a year and I have learned to play. It has a very sweet tone and is admired by all. I think every girl who wants a piano can join the Club and make the payments and never miss it. I appreciate what you have done for me and hope that 1919 will be a prosperous year for you."

From a College Professor.

"It is a pleasure for me to state that the beautiful Ludden & Bates Upright piano has, after a thorough test, proved more than satisfactory. The beauty both in design and finish can only be surpassed by its pure, rich tone. It is a piano for the best and most discriminating musicians."

From a Church Official.

"I will say that the Church is pleased with the Club plan. The piano is first class in material, workmanship and construction—fine tone, clear, soft and musical. It is an extra fine instrument for the price."

The Attractive Features of the Club

1. The great saving in price which results from the big factory order for one hundred instruments.
2. The guarantee of perfect satisfaction which is accomplished by having each Club member try the piano or player piano in his own home before assuming any expense or obligation to keep it.
3. A lifetime guarantee of the quality and durability of your instrument by one of the oldest, largest and most responsible music houses in the country. This gives you absolute protection against all defects in workmanship and material, and if such should ever arise Ludden & Bates agree to make it good or replace with another instrument.
4. An easy payment system based on the lowest net cash price. This represents a tremendous saving as compared with the customary installment prices, which are usually 20 per cent. higher than the cash prices.
5. Protection to his family in the event of the death of a Club member before the instrument is fully paid for. If the regulations of the Club have been complied with the unpaid balance is cancelled and the family is given a receipt in full.
6. The privilege of trading in your old piano or organ at its real valuation, for a new piano or player piano.

YOU ARE CORDIALLY INVITED

To join us and be one of a hundred members who will make up the next Club and who will benefit by the big wholesale transaction. The Club has been organized in such a manner as to absolutely insure the best in quality, the lowest possible price, terms to suit your convenience and perfect protection against every possibility of dissatisfaction. After 30 days free trial each Club member judges the quality, prices and terms for himself and if he is not pleased he simply returns the piano to the Club and no questions are asked. As the Club pays the freight both ways each member is perfectly free to judge the merits of the Club. Write for your copy of the Club's Catalogue today. Address the Managers.

Among the many beautiful styles and designs you will find a piano or self-player piano to suit your taste and pocket-book

Sparkles

1919.

"Ah!" sighed the World, as he turned in bed
With a pillow of cloud for his poor old head,
And lowered the roller-shade of Night,
And blew out a star that shone too bright—
"The Year is gone with his toil and strife,
The storm and surge of the tide of life,
The crazy brawl of the human breed,
And I'll rest at last—for it's rest I need!"

Down came an elf through the moonlight pale
From the Milky Way on a comet's tail;
His traveling-bag, in letters clean,
Was marked, "A. D. Nineteen-Nineteen."
He turned up the lamps that were burning low
And prodded the World with a small pink toe.
"Get up!" he cried, like a saucy shrew,
"There's a heap of things for a World to do!

"There are wounds to bind, there's a map to fix,
There's a beautiful tangle of politics,
There are towns to build, there are wheels to start,
There's a load of crowns for the junk-man's cart,
There's an ancient fraud in a brand-new dress,
There are lovely riddles for men to guess,
There are dreams to dream, there are heights to climb,
And you can't lie there and waste my time!"

So the World rose up with a plaintive groan,
Stubbing his toe on a tumbled throne,
To round the Sun on his wonted track—
The deep-grooved Trail of the Zodiac,
That way of sorrows and joys and aches,
Of noble efforts and fool mistakes.
But it's good for the poor old World,
at that;
For a drowsy Planet gets much too fat.

The Maker of Dolls

The German doll, with its flaxen hair,
Its eyes of blue and its color rare,
Its smiling lips and its form so round,
Was the prettiest doll that could be found.
But that was all before the war—
No German makes dolls any more.

He had just come home from a Belgian town,
The war was done and he settled down
In his little shop to make once more
The dolls that he made before the war.

He worked away with the same old tools;
He scraped and shaped by the same old rules
But somehow, try as he would that day,
His skill all seemed to have flown away.

The doll looked dull—no longer bright;
Its hair had lost its yellow light—
Had taken on a sea-green hue
As the braids of little drowned things do.

The color faded from its cheek—
The doll looked thin and pale and weak.
A hand broke off—he thought he saw
The arm with the bleeding flesh all raw.

Its staring eyes were full of fear—
A look of horror would appear;
He laid it down—the weights of lead
Refused to work—the doll looked dead.

That night they found him a huddled heap—
In the German way—in his last long sleep.
And none of the makers of dolls, they say,
Can make the dolls of yesterday.

Editorial

“Towards Christian Unity.”

BY courtesy of Rev. Peter Ainsley we have been permitted to read a pamphlet bearing the above title.

In the language of the author, “this little book is an earnest and fearless appeal for Christian unity, and pleads for a united Church as the greatest need of these times and the only condition that will satisfy the genius and purpose of Christianity.”

It will be noticed that if the writer does not use the terms “Christian unity” and “united church” as synonymous, he assumes that Christian unity can be secured only by means of a united church. Furthermore, he means by a “united church,” a church which shall embrace all Christians in one visible organization. What he is laboring for is the blotting out of all denominational lines. He interprets Christ’s prayer for the unity of His disciples as a prayer for the organic union of all present day denominations.

The spirit of the pamphlet is fine. The author seems to be moved by a broad catholicity of sentiment and by a genuine love for all who bear the Christian name. Very much that he says must awaken a cordial response in the hearts of all who love a common Lord. But from our viewpoint one radical error vitiates all of his reasoning. The Presbyterian Church does not recognize a divided church. Note the language of our Standards: “The Church which the Lord Jesus Christ has erected in this world for the gathering and perfecting of the saints, is His visible kingdom of Grace and is one and the same in all ages.” Christ has only one in the world, only one visible church. Is this one church the Presbyterian Church? By no means. “This Scriptural doctrine of Presbytery is necessary to the perfection of the order of the visible church, but is not essential to its existence.” But do we not see the visible church of Christ divided into almost innumerable denominations? Yes, but “the visible unity of the body of Christ, though obscured, is not destroyed by its division into different denominations of professing Christians; but all of these which maintain the word and sacraments in their fundamental integrity are to be recognized as true branches of the Church of Jesus Christ.” The visible unity of a tree is not divided because it has a number of branches. The visible unity of the human body is not destroyed because it has a number of members. The visible unity of an army is not destroyed because it consists of a number of regiments.

The trouble with Brother Ainsley and others who disquiet themselves so much over a divided Christendom is that they do not have a sufficiently broad conception of the church. “The members of this visible church catholic are all those persons in every nation, together with their children, who make profession of the holy religion of Christ and of submission to His laws.” You see how this conception sweeps into one and the same visible church all the Lutherans, Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists, and all others who wear denominational names as well as those who like Dr. Ainsley refuse to wear a denominational title.

We are in hearty sympathy with Dr. Ainsley’s effort to promote Christian Unity in the true sense of our Lord’s prayer—“that they all may be one: as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.” Obviously the unity here prayed for is a spiritual unity, not oneness of external organization. It is the same unity that Paul exhorts to in the 4th chapter of Ephesians, “unity of the Spirit,” the unity of which the Holy Spirit is the author; it is the same unity into which the church is to be brought by the ministry of apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers, “the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God.” Such unity cannot be brought about by simply herding all Christians in one spacious organization.

Dr. Ainsley belongs to the denomination organized by Alexander Campbell, and which we prefer to designate by the name of its founder. We mean no discourtesy when we designate the members of that church Campbellites. We cheerfully concede that they are Christians, but we are not willing to use that title to discriminate them from ourselves and others. We are willing to call our neighbor a gentleman, provided he does not demand that we shall call him that to discriminate him from us.

We learn from this pamphlet that the Campbellites have a permanent organization called the “Association for the Promotion of Christian Unity;” and that the Episcopalians have a like organization called the “Christian Unity Foundation.” Through these organizations both of these churches are working steadily not only for Christian unity, but also for uniformity of church organization. It is rather strange that these churches should be so forward in this work when they lag somewhat behind in the exercise of Christian liberality. We could not enter one of these churches without renouncing our baptism, and we could not enter the ministry of the other without renouncing our ordination. One knows only baptism by immersion, and the other knows only ordination by the imposition of episcopal hands. We shall rejoice if they shall develop the same broad, catholic conception of the church and its ordinances as that to which the Presbyterian Church has fallen heir.

Hampden-Sidney College.

The Synod of North Carolina has Davidson College, and the Synod of South Carolina has the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, while the Synod of Virginia has Hampden-Sidney College.

Each of these institutions stands for the higher Christian education of young men, and from their ranks have come for years past a fine array of godly ministers.

Hampden-Sidney for many years back has been independent of the Synod, though against the protest of some of the ablest men of that Synod. Recently it has placed itself again in connection with the Synod, and is once more enrolled among our denominational schools.

Since the resignation of Dr. Tucker Graham the college has been under the presidency pro-tem of Dr. Ashton McWhorter, who in addition to his arduous duties as a professor, has managed its interests with consummate success.

In the meantime the Trustees have been looking for a suitable man. They have been long at the work, but their delay is fully justified by their success. They have succeeded in securing the services of Dr. J. D. Eggleston, the president of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, of Blacksburg, Va. Dr. Eggleston announced his decision to accept the presidency of Hampden-Sidney College in these words:

“I have been drafted for service by the Board of Trustees of Hampden-Sidney College, and I believe it my duty to accept the call, and will not plead exemption.”

His acceptance was a surprise to his friends everywhere, for in the estimation of many it was a sacrifice upon his part. A Richmond paper said:

“Since the announcement on December 20 of Dr. Eggleston’s election, letters and telegrams have poured in from the alumni of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute and prominent people of the State urging him to remain in his present position, and from the friends of Hampden-Sidney urging him to accept. Practically all of the Virginia Tech alumni chapters throughout the country held call meetings and wired or wrote the president urging him to remain."

The writer, as an alumnus of Hampden-Sidney, has always been proud of her record, dating back to 1776, with Patrick Henry and James Madison as members of its first Board of Trustees, so that whatever touches her interest touches him. He has known Dr. Eggleston since his college days, and has watched with pride, though with no surprise, his rapid advancement in the estimation of his State. Before he became president of the Polytechnic Institute he was State Superintendent of Education in Virginia, and wherever he has been, he has more than filled the position. We predict great things for the old college, and to the new president we send our hearty "God speed."

Dr. Chapman and Billy Sunday.

Dr. Chapman was a world-wide evangelist, and in his tour around the world he left converts from every station in life. When he lays down his sheaves on the great day of accounts, there will be few who can compare with him.

He was Billy Sunday's first spiritual guide, and he often referred to that fact with pride. Standing on the same platform with Mr. Sunday not long ago, he said: "I knew Billy before he knew how to pray. I gave him his first sermon, and it was a fatal thing to do, because I could never use it again. I tried to use it once and a man accused me of stealing Billy's stuff. I perhaps am more responsible than anyone else for Billy's becoming a preacher, and I consider it the greatest thing God ever permitted me to do. I know him better probably than anyone else except his wife, and I know how honest, how sincere and how great he really is."

Upon the death of Dr. Chapman, Mr. Sunday sent the following message to be read at the funeral services:

"Words fail to express my sorrow. I am grieved that I cannot be present. Doctor was my truest friend. Next to the members of my own family I loved him more than anyone else. He started me in my life's work and encouraged me when the battle was hard. His love was like a mother's love. I wish I could have seen the welcome the angels gave him when he burst through the gates into the city. The memory of all this will be an inspiration until my time comes to drift out with the tide."

No two men could have been more unlike in methods, yet their message was the same—the old-time Gospel of salvation by blood, which is the only preaching that will answer the cry of the convicted sinner, What must I do to be saved?

The Cost of Dying.

Hamlet's question, To be or not to be? has become a pressing one with men of this age, because as high as the cost of living is, the cost of dying is rapidly becoming greater.

We bring no railing accusations against any one as we do not know where the fault lies, but we do know that the cost of a burial is rapidly becoming a serious question, so much so that if a man could control the decision, he would live as a mere matter of economy.

We have Building and Loan Associations that help a man to build a home for this life, and it would seem only reasonable that some means should be found to assist him in securing for his worn out body a home for the other life.

Our Episcopal friends in Boston seem to have inaugurated a guild that guarantees a respectable burial for $50.00. It would be wise for other churches to follow the same plan. They would certainly add to the peace of mind of many of their members, who as they grow old, are asking, not what shall we eat or what shall we drink, but wherewithal shall we be buried?

The Y. M. C. A. Under Fire.

Mr. Edwin L. James in a recent issue of the New York Times has a very calm discussion of the work of the Y. M. C. A., which is apt to lessen the high regard which the people of this country have for that organization.

We have received at times articles attacking the Association's work in the camps, and we have heard severe criticism of its personnel and methods by those who are supposed to know whereof they speak.

Then on the other hand we have had testimony in its favor, and that too from soldiers at the front who were enthusiastic over the help they gave.

Mr. James sums up their errors under three heads—their management of the canteens, their unwise selection of workers, and their overmuch care for the moral welfare of the soldiers.

It seems that in the canteen work they charge the soldiers very high prices and are not as accommodating as they should be, and at times they assume a patronizing air that offends the soldiers.

It seems also that in their personnel there have been some misfits, which will no doubt explain why the running of the canteens has not been very wisely done.

We have read Mr. James' article, and the impression made upon us is that it is an ex parte presentation. He simply collects everything that is against the Association and upon the strength of that presentation he arraigns the work as a whole, and creates the impression that it does not deserve the support hitherto given it.

That the instances of abuses in charges in the canteens are true, we believe, yet one swallow does not make a summer, and there is no fallacy more common than arguing the whole from a part.

Everything human is imperfect, and the Y. M. C. A. is not free from the imperfections of human judgment.

Many of its workers were unwisely chosen, and their conduct has reflected no credit upon the organization, and we do not wonder that the soldiers are prejudiced against the Association, if they have been thus treated.

The same argument, however, would prove that the Government hospital system is defective. Soldier after soldier will relate instances of young doctors in the hospitals being indifferent to the wants of the sick, though we know that these cases are exceptions, and that the care of the sick has been one of the wonders of the war.

Mr. James' testimony as to the overmuch care for the moral welfare of the soldiers would indicate that he is not a capable judge of work of a Christian Association. It is rather amusing to note that the ministers at Montreat criticised the Association because it seemed to make the spiritual part of its work subordinate to the physical, while Mr. James brings an indictment against it because it gives the boys too much religion. We hold no brief for the Association, and up to the time of the great war we really took no active interest in it. Since we have followed its war work and heard through those dear to us what the Association has been to them, and also what they have seen of the Association's work along the battle front, we have learned to admire them and to believe that their war work justifies their claim to be a Christian Association.

What the Christian people need to do is not to proclaim their faults from the housetops, but to get behind those who lead, and influence them to reform their methods.

The fact that three out of 6,000 workers have proved dishonest is to the credit of the Association, especially when you remember that in France the Association in six months handled $40,000,000.

A careful search would no doubt reveal many dead flies in the ointment, but it would at the same time reveal much of which we could be proud.

An Old Boy

By the Country Parson.

I AM more and more convinced that the ministry has its problems at both ends—at the start and at the finish. The problem at the start is to get men into the ministry, suitable men, strong men, sound in body and mind; consecrated men, lovers of our Lord Jesus Christ and of their fellow men. The problem at the other end is to care for the old preacher, to deliver him from that worst of earthly experiences, genteel poverty, in a lonely, unappreciated, destitute old age.

With the first of these problems this article has nothing to do, except to recognize its vital importance. We join in prayer, however, with all who love the Lord's work, that the Lord of the harvest would "thrust forth" (such, they tell us, is the real meaning of the word used) the laborers into His harvest field. And we would press the claims of the ministry upon all our young men, who are considering their life work, and honestly asking, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

But it is the old preacher that claims our special attention just now; and we have a somewhat singular remedy to suggest in his case. It is one that applies to the preacher himself, rather than to the provision which the church should make for him. It is a kind of insurance with which he should provide himself early in his ministry, and increase his premiums every year that he lives. And these premiums have to be paid, not in dollars and cents, but in a resolute purpose and the determined carrying out of the same.

We would call this insurance, the art of never growing old—or the secret of perpetual freshness and vigor.

In a previous article (The Country Parson's Big Idea, Presbyterian Standard, January 9, 1918) there have already been given some suggestions along this line; but the subject is not exhausted, and these ideas need to be hammered in, by "iteration and reiteration."

The Country Parson's idea is summed up in these precepts: "Stay young, young man; old man, renew, or rather, retain your youth."

"Easier said than done," do you answer? Yes, as already stated, this means a resolute purpose and persistent effort—things which not every man is capable of. But if you deny the possibility of bringing forth fruit, and being fat and flourishing (See Ps. 92:14) in old age, I confront you, not only with a divine promise, but with indubitable human experience. "What man has done, man can do;" if other men have retained their vigor and ever increased their usefulness with increasing years, it is possible for you to do the same. "You can, if you will." Indeed the vigorous and fruitful old age of many is a challenge to all.

Of course there are certain things that a man cannot avoid, as he passes from the spring and summer into the autumn of life. The bloom of youth will fade from his cheek, his hair will whiten and grow thin, years and cares will mark their furrows on his brow. But his step need not lose its spring, his shoulders may be square and not stooped, his eye may still glow with thought and feeling, and his capacity for long and efficient labor may continue with undiminished energy.

In proof of this, note one of the outstanding facts in the current history of the world. The immediate future of mankind is in the hands of a group of men now gathering at Paris, to decide on the present and future peace of the world. Not one of these men, we venture to assert, is under fifty years of age, most of them are over sixty. Woodrow Wilson, who goes into the peace conference with the weight of America behind him, as well as the force of his commanding personality, is in his sixty-third year.

Marshal Foch, whose leadership of the Allied armies from July 8 to November 11, has raised him to a place in the temple of military fame beside the names of Washington and Wellington, was sixty-seven on his last birthday.

But do I hear some sad-faced brother say: "These men of whom you speak are leaders in secular affairs; an evil custom decrees that a preacher's usefulness ends when he crosses 'the dead line' at fifty years of age?"

I have heard a good deal of that "dead line;" I am disposed to think that it is a somewhat mythical thing even in the ministry, where it no more exists than in war or business or law or politics. For example, the presidents of our two most important theological institutions are each a little past sixty years of age; the pastors of two of the most influential churches in the largest Synod of our Assembly are—one, sixty-five, the other, sixty-two years old (or rather, young)! In this same Synod is a pastor in charge of a large church in an influential educational center, who if he lives till next February, will be seventy-nine years old, who is still a most active pastor and acceptable preacher. And the Synod in which the Presbyterian Standard is published shows one example of a most active and fruitful old age, more remarkable still—an active pastor, a writer of comments on the Sunday School Lesson, a director in the Theological Seminary, who is eighty-seven or thereabouts. (Oh, dead line, where art thou?)

But not to multiply instances, in conclusion, I ask your readers' attention to the following, which was clipped from a recent issue of The Continent:

"My attention has been arrested by an article in the issue of September 19, entitled 'The Minister Over 45,' and signed by 'Candidate.' It may be comforting to a man without a field of service to attribute that fact to his age or gray hair, but is it not often the case that this is not the real reason? If you will excuse me, I will give a little personal experience, without giving name or place of residence. I am a young fellow in my eightieth year. Am pastor of a church in a city of over 500,000, which I have served since being unanimously called nearly five years. When I was called, I had served the church a month, and every one knew I was at that time 74 years old, as I had told my age intentionally in the pulpit, so there should be no misunderstanding. The church was in a fine location, and with a church property worth $50,000, but the church was out of repair, and had no manse. It had come to be a downtown church, and for that reason, like all the neighboring churches, was on the decline as to membership and congregations. There was also a debt from current expenses and the purchase of a piano of $600. The real local membership was only a hundred, though more names were still upon the books. In these less than five years, the old debt has been paid, a manse has been erected, the church building thoroughly repaired, an expense of nearly $1,000 met in providing for an invalid and esteemed elder, and his widow after his death, thus in all more than $6,000 have been raised above current expenses, and for the first time since the organization of the church fifty years before, there is not a dollar of debt upon the church edifice or for current expenses.

"The church from which I came to this was erected and paid for at an expense of $13,000, during my pastorate, and only this day have I received a letter asking if I would be willing to return to that church. Since I became 70 years of age, I have received calls to five churches, two of which I accepted. Counting the rental value of my manse, I am in receipt of an income of $2,200, but I started here with a salary of $1,200, from which I paid rent, leaving me less than $900 income. I am but an ordinary man in every way, with no especial gifts. But I have aimed to keep young and sweet, as the years have gone by, nor allowed myself to become jealous of younger and more acceptable men. I read at the age of 50, that while the memory was retained, other mental faculties would abide. Hence I said, I will retain

Cosmopolitan Shanghai

And Some Things Worth While.

By Miss Mildred C. Watkins.

WHAT a delight it is to get the Presbyterian Standard with its news about Davidson and the other schools known to me; also about the churches where my old girls live! Instead of a formal article, I am going to write a letter which you can cull for any news from China worth while.

First of all I enclose a letter written by a boy who was at our Kashing High School, and for lack of means to go on, left at the end of his third year. The English has not been touched by me, for I want you to see what our school is accomplishing there in its teaching of English. Do you know any third year high school boy or girl in America who unassisted could write an equally good French letter? Of course, however, it is not for the English I am sending it, but for the spirit it breathes of a desire to bring the Gospel to his fellow countrymen, and this not in a candidate for the ministry; he was not one of our student volunteers, but a business young man. He comes from a Christian family, and in his first letter to me said: "Pray for me, for I am away from the influences of my Christian home, and I must not get away from my God." He was one of my favorites in the school, and a most delightful pupil, yet I feared for him, as he did not rank as one of the especially zealous Christian workers, that his ambition would be too strong for his spirituality. Our mission schools are worth while, aren't they?

This school for the children of missionaries is worth while, too; with the war over, how I hope the church will give it a home instead of paying rent on eight scattered dwelling houses, in which there is much loss of space and other inevitable and expensive inconveniences; for there can be no furnace, for instance, and not one but many fires must be lighted daily, or as at night, much cold be endured.

We have seventeen from our own missions, about a fifth of our boarders, so our church has reason to be interested.

Our American colony is very much in evidence these days of the celebration of the great victory, Shanghai having given itself up to three days of international holiday with a succession of parades of all kinds, and most gorgeous decorations and illuminations. They say our three floats yesterday were most beautiful and appropriate. The night of the good news there was a spontaneous service of thanksgiving held by our near-by community in a mission church in our midst, and last Sunday (November 17) we had a thank service at our American song service—it is a regular afternoon Sunday service in one of our big hotels; the keynote struck in every hymn, prayer and address was of devout gratitude to "the God of Battles" to whom the victory was due.

Just think how close our English cousins feel to us when they give us their cathedral to celebrate Thanksgiving Day, the purely American anniversary, for we had a like English festival in our Union church weeks ago on their "Harvest Home" occasion.

Shanghai is most cosmopolitan; in the civic automobile parade yesterday no nationality except the conquered nations were unrepresented—many Germans and Austrians live here—but of course China and Japan, in spite of their bunting and other displays, cannot feel as do the nations that have suffered so grievously as we Allies. In fact not a paper but hints at such doubts, particularly our American paper, which is strikingly anti-Japanese, I think, and not at all credulous of China's love for the Allies, though admitting the younger generation is probably different. Why should the Orient be otherwise with the desperate struggle for just bread, and with troubles enough at home to occupy all their attention, at least certainly in brigand-cursed, greedy-for-filthy-lucre-official cursed China!

Nevertheless, as that significant final remark in my China boy's letter hints, the victory will perhaps open China's eyes to the necessity of setting her house in order and falling into line, and, judging from her generosity in contributing lately to the War Fund Drive and her shrewdness in investing in Liberty Bonds, as well as from her exuberance in falling into the procession with waving of her flags these commemoration days, she is getting awake.

Our Chinese Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. are very active here, and contribute money as well as have many forms of uplift, social, philanthropic, educational, and religious, with a good deal of Christian literature, Speer's books, for instance, being translated in their entirety, I think. Nor is this all: a Southern Presbyterian Y. W. C. A. Secretary tells me that so many Chinese girls devour English books, sometimes not the best class of fiction, that there is an effort here to have a well selected, pure, wholesome library in our language for such. What an impact God has made with the Anglo-Saxon race on the world! May we not fail Him and the world.

Letter From Chinese Student.

My Dear Teacher: Many thanks to you for your letter which reached me some time ago. Being busy with the monthly final accounts of our company, I was not able to answer it before this time. Upon your kind inquiry, I am to inform you that there is not any Sunday School in the Zakhov Church because it has so few members. However, a meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society takes place here every Sunday. As the members know little of the Truth, I now and then attend it to help them to sing hymns and to read the Bible.

Last Sunday morning instead of going to Mr. Chen's church in the city, I went to this C. E. S. meeting and made a speech there; as I was used to do it with Mr. David Hudson every Sunday in the Kashing Hospital last Spring when I was in Kashing.

At present I have much chance to preach the Gospel to those who have never heard of it because nearly every one of the Chinese staff of our Company is an outside man. I have been telling them some thing about God, and by His help I do believe that they are somewhat convinced by me; as they themselves have said to one another that Christianity is good indeed. Moreover, they have also told me that by considering my conduct they learned some difference between believers and unbelievers; but I do not think that they will become Christians rightaway because they still do not believe much of the everlasting life. I will try to be more careful in what I am doing, as the proverb goes, "To say well is good, but to do well is better." My hope to make my comrades know God by means of my speeches is not so much as by means of my conduct and my prayers; because having been required by one Mr. Tsu, our cashier, to preach to himself the other day, I felt ashamed that it seemed too much for me to preach to the learned man who knows science well. Most of our staff are college graduates.

Yesterday one of them asked me why God does not destroy Satan rightaway on account of its doing the world so much harm. Although I did my best for him, and found him interested with my answer of "choice," yet I do not believe that it was a very clear-cut and definite statement. I shall be much obliged to you if you will show me what it really is.

The war news is very good now. A telegram was received here yesterday telling that the peace had been signed. Are you Americans not glad that your country has in the most part hastened the end of the war? I am very glad indeed. On the other hand, being struck at heart, I am sorry for our civil war between North and South China. I expect that those who insist on fighting will be wakened up by the stop of the European Great War, so that our country may not be seized by any other countries.

With my best wishes to you,

Your affectionate pupil,

Zhi S—ao.

A Holiday Church Campaign

By Rev. A. G. Irons.

A VERY remarkable campaign for funds to build a new church and Sunday School building for the First Presbyterian Church of Tuscaloosa, Ala., has just closed. While the movement for a new church had begun some four years ago and gone so far as to secure plans for the building to be erected, the outbreak of the war in Europe made further progress impractical and had halted the making of further plans. By common consent it was decided to await the close of the war and a more propitious time.

On the fourth Sunday in December, Rev. Charles M. Boyd, the pastor, spoke to his people about the new church and suggested that they take up again the movement that had been postponed because of the war. The congregation voted unanimously to set a moderate goal of $1,000 a month for 1919, with the hope that by covering a period of several years, a considerable sum would be gathered into the treasury when the time should come to set a final goal.

A campaign committee of twelve men was selected from the congregation. When this committee met a few days later they set the goal for 1919 at $25,000, towards a church and Sunday School building that should not cost less than $50,000. This campaign committee elected an executive committee of three of their number to organize the campaign and carry out the policy outlined.

Rev. A. G. Irons, "Presbyterial Expert" of the Tuscaloosa Presbytery, whose home is in Tuscaloosa, and who was at home for the holidays, was asked to act as director of the campaign. Headquarters in a downtown office, accessible and convenient to all the workers, opened. Two weeks was taken up with the work of enlisting thirty-five men to make the campaign on Sunday, January 5, in thoroughly acquainting the membership with the goal to be reached, and the necessity of every member giving his best gift in service or money, or both. This was done by the pastor from his pulpit, by newspaper articles and by personal letters to every prospective subscriber from both the pastor and the executive committee.

A Magnificent Gift.

While this work of preparation was in progress a splendid gift was made that stirred the enthusiasm of the congregation to the highest point and aroused the interest of the whole city in the movement. Mrs. James Spence, a devoted member of the church, a very close friend of Mr. Boyd, the pastor, and a mother to him through the years, after consulting with her financial manager, sent for her pastor one afternoon to talk to him in a heart to heart way about the best interests of the church. The result of the confidence was a magnificent gift by Mrs. Spence of $25,000 for the Sunday School building, with the single condition that the church should raise an equal amount for the church building. The best of it all was that this generous gift was made without any hesitation or reluctance but in the spirit of rendering a joyous Christian service. When the gift was announced to the congregation on the following Sunday morning, it was at once agreed to raise the goal to $50,000. As a mark of appreciation the congregation voted unanimously to name the Sunday School building the Spence Memorial, in honor of Mrs. Spence and her late husband, Maj. James Spence. After adjustments had been made to the new goal, the setting up campaign proceeded another week. On Friday night, the coldest of the winter, some thirty leading business and professional men sat at a luncheon and conference to perfect plans and get final instructions. On Sunday we were treated to an inspiring sight. Though the cold had not abated and the ground was still covered with snow, thirty-six of the strongest business and professional men of the city assembled in the lecture room, wrote out their own liberal subscriptions, then went over the top to reach the objective, $50,000. At 6:00 p. m. it was a joyous group of men that stood around a warm fire and heard the pastor announce that the goal had been passed, and a grand total of $55,000 for the new church had been reached.

A Successful Pastorate.

Rev. Chas. M. Boyd entered upon his work as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Tuscaloosa, July 1, 1910. He was called from the pastorate of the A. R. P. Church at Anderson, S. C., where he had labored for a number of years with marked success. At this point he had organized the A. R. P. Church, built both a church and a manse, leaving both without debt. His ministry in Tuscaloosa has been wonderfully blessed by the large increase in membership, in Sunday school enrollment, Christian Endeavor activities and local Home Mission work. Within the eight years of his pastorate the membership has increased from 313 to 674, and the Sunday School enrollment from 262 to 770. Active Christian Endeavor societies are maintained not only in the First Church, but at the three mission points. The First Church also maintains a foreign pastor, Rev. James R. Graham, Tsing-Kiang-Pu, China. Preaching services, Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies are maintained at three local mission points.

The pastor's ceaseless activity, unchanging zeal, and splendid vision, manifested among his people through these eight years of unselfish service, has made possible this enthusiastic and determined movement for a church and equipment in keeping with the present growth and promise of our church in Tuscaloosa.

Among the members of this church are to be found leaders in almost every business in the city and leaders as well in every profession. Men who think and plan and do large things in business and professional life every day, and this splendid body of men are catching the vision of their pastor and are going to provide a church and Sunday School building that will help them to make their strongest appeal to those outside the church to join them in their service for the Master, while those within will be strengthened to do still larger things than they have yet undertaken.

Goal Is Raised Again.

The success of the campaign has so stirred the enthusiasm of the congregation and so lifted their vision of things that can be done by faith and unity of effort, that they have by common consent raised the goal again, and are now saying that nothing less than a church that will cost $75,000 or possibly $80,000 will be sufficient for the First Presbyterian Church in Tuscaloosa.

Foreign Missions and the Three Million Drive of March, 1918

By Edwin F. Willis, Treasurer.

To apply on the regular work for the year we had received to December 31, 1918, $388,237.99, which is $100,905.35 more than we had received to the same date last year. Of this increase $88,202.32 or about 87 per cent is credited to churches, and 75 of our 87 Presbyteries show an increase over last year. Few church treasurers have offered any explanation, but some have referred to the Drive of last March. It is my opinion that the larger part of this increase is due to the work done by the Assembly's Stewardship Committee for Assembly's Benevolences. If a campaign, which did not reach all the churches, produced the result apparent this year, surely a church-wide campaign in which all are interested will in time reach the goal sought in the Assembly's Progressive Campaign during the next three years. This campaign ought to have the loyal and enthusiastic support of every member of every congregation.

"O prophet souls, who with bruised feet have trod
The heaven-lit heights and thence to us have brought Your wider vision, your higher-hearted faith,
Your hope for man, your larger thought of God—
We wear your edelweiss: life's common lot
Even to your high service witnesseth!"

And Jesus Said

IF ye shall ask anything of the Father in my name, He will give it you."

For nineteen centuries this glorious promise has been a source of comfort and of strength to countless millions of the oppressed, the sick, the suffering, the troubled, and the grievously burdened. These burning words have been a pillar of fire by night and a pillar of cloud by day to the heavily laden and the sore distressed and to those multitudes who have passed through the Valley of the Shadow of affliction or death. And now in this latter day—nay, at this very hour—millions of women and children in and near those lands, those hills and rivers made holy by the sacred memories of our Lord, are claiming this promise and are crying out to Him in an agony of spirit and body beseeching Him that He will save them from starvation, from death, and from horrors worse than death.

Four million Armenians, Syrians, and other war-sufferers in western Asia are practically without food, clothing, or shelter, the vast majority helpless women and children. More than a million and a half have been deported. Nearly a million have been brutally murdered and massacred. Four hundred thousand children are orphaned. It can be said that there are practically no more children left under the age of five, all having perished from exposure and disease. For every hundred births there are from two to three hundred deaths. The newly born children die almost immediately, their mothers having nothing to give them but tears. Deaths from dysentery, typhus, tuberculosis, and famine are increasing from day to day with appalling rapidity. The homeless—a pitiful stream of women and children—wander aimlessly through the streets of their wrecked villages. If you stop a child toward evening and ask him where he is going he will tell you, "I am searching for a place to sleep."

All winter long they have slept in nooks and corners, in alleys and by the roadsides, with no blankets, no covering whatever, their clothing the merest rags. The women clasp their wan-faced children to their breasts and on their faces is written the pitiful story of their utter despair.

The scenes in these lands of grief and suffering are beyond the power of imagination to conceive or of words to describe. Throughout the length and breadth of these countries there is no food save bread, the dry crusts of bread that they receive at the hands of charity. No meats, no soups, no vegetables, no sugar, less than a pound of bread daily, and even this poor morsel has often to be shared with others. "A poor old woman faint with hunger said to me today," writes one of the devoted workers, "Sahib, the bread won't go down. I soak it in water, but it sticks in my throat."

"Wheresoever I go," a missionary reports, "I see men or women fallen on the street dead or dying, and little emaciated children stretching out their wasted hands 'for just one shahie for bread,' tears running down their cheeks, and still more awful are the little ones sitting propped against a wall, listless and torpid, indifferent even to food, waiting quietly for death."

"Just now," says another worker, "I have been interrupted in my writing. A Jewess has come to tell me of a woman who staggered to her door begging late last evening. She was allowed to spend the night in a corner of the house and this morning she was dead. 'Won't you please send some one to bury her,' implored my caller."

Such pleas are frequent now. There are more dead than buried in Armenia. Men and women once in good circumstances and self-respecting, now hungry, helpless, friendless, crawl away, like animals, out of sight, die unseen, and lie unburied.

There is no joy of victory in these distraught lands; but only the cries of an agonized people to whom peace has brought neither benediction nor blessing; neither rest nor respite; lands where the war has left an awful human wreckage in its wake; a great Kingdom of Grief filled with the cries of mothers and orphans, a distressed people prostrate with desolation, numbered with suffering, having no partnership in the great joy of a liberated world.

No sons, no fathers, no brothers are returning victorious to their homes in Armenia or Syria, for their villages and their cities have been razed and ruined and lie in dust and ashes, and the men by the thousands and hundreds of thousands have been pitilessly murdered or barbarously deported.

Deported? Yes, but what a euphemism for the most heartless and relentless cruelty. Deportation means the loss of home, business property, and every personal possession. It means being driven into desert places, forced to march at the point of the bayonet until strength is exhausted; it means being refused shelter, food, drink; it means being subjected to outrage and calculated cruelty.

Many such scenes of terrible and tragic suffering are in the very lands where Jesus walked with His disciples; where He had compassion on the needy multitudes, and fed them and healed them and comforted them. Many of these awful sights are even in the very shadow of the Mount of Olives, where Christ said: "Suffer the little children and forbid them not to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Millions of "the least of these my brethren" are hungry and naked and sick and in terrible prisons without walls. In them and through them the King of Pity and of Love is calling to you to minister to them just as you would do if you saw Him lying at your feet.

You, to whom the Christmas just past has meant a time of reunion, a time of feasting and happiness; you, whose homes are warm and whose children are well fed, think now of these your brothers and sisters who are perishing. The cries of these children must reach your ears. The prayers of these mothers must touch your hearts. These homeless and starving millions are dependent on charity—your charity—for Turkish charity provides for no one—it begins and ends at home.

It is America's God-given privilege to feed the hungry from her great bounty and from her unlimited stores. It is her blessed duty to lift the head of fallen Armenia and put the cup of cold water to her lips and the morsel of bread in her hands, and so prove herself indeed the protector and liberator of the oppressed and subject races.

We have presented the needs of the Armenians twice before to our Literary Digest readers, and they have responded largely, liberally, most generously. But now the period of rehabilitation in the Near East is at hand. Vastly larger sums will be required to restore the refugees to their homes than were required merely to sustain life in their desert exile. The American Committee for Relief in the Near East, under the able leadership of Cleveland H. Dodge, is appealing for a minimum of thirty million dollars "with which," say the committee, "we can, humanly speaking, save every life."

We feel this cause to be so worthy, this need to be so desperately urgent, that even though we made a liberal contribution less than a year ago, we are now subscribing five thousand dollars to this new drive. We are doing this after having convinced ourselves by a careful investigation extending over a number of days that these funds will be wisely administered, that this work is in most capable hands, and that every dollar given will go for relief without the deduction of one cent for organization expenses. Send your own contribution quickly, and so bring new life and a new hope to some weary, broken body in the Near East.

Now is our opportunity to show these lands made luminous by the footprints of Christ and the Apostles what our Christianity of the West means today. Now is the time when these places of sacred history should receive a new sanctification by the service of God's children in the twentieth century. With a Christlike healing of the sick and feeding the hungry, we will make a royal highway for our Lord into the grateful hearts of these people, along which the King of Glory may come with his message of love and light.—Literary Digest for January 18, 1919.

A Timely Sermon.

By Addison Hogue.

HERE has been printed for free distribution a sermon preached last summer by Rev. Dr. Fraser, of Staunton, Va., discussing the question of having the national flag displayed in churches. Emanating from the source it does, it goes without saying that the sermon presents its teachings with calmness, clearness and force; that it contends earnestly for the separation of Church and State; that it rings true to the historic and scriptural basis on which our Southern Presbyterian Church was founded; and that the whole discussion is characterized by dignity as well as by the utmost Christian courtesy towards those who hold a different view.

Dr. Fraser also voices his objection to calling the service flag of the church an "Honor Roll," preferring to call it a "List for Prayer," that it may be a constant reminder of the spiritual needs of those who are specially in our hearts and sympathies. But calling it an "Honor Roll" to be hung up in a building set apart for the honor and glory of God is an idea utterly repugnant to the principles for which Christ's Church stands—or ought to stand.

I remember the shock I felt the first time I heard of such an "Honor Roll." It contained the name of a man I knew well. He was a nominal member of that church, but he rarely set his foot in it. He worked steadily on his job nearly all day Sunday; and if the church or its activities interested him at all, he seemed to keep it a profound secret. But because he enlisted in the service of the United States his name was put on the honor roll and hung up conspicuously, which, being interpreted, says:

"Although this church was organized for the glory of God and for the praise and honor of our Saviour; and though we recognize that its proper mission is the ingathering and upbuilding of Christ's elect, we nevertheless publish to the world that we put on its Honor Roll the names of men who have enlisted as soldiers of the United States, without the slightest regard to their conduct as loyal members of this church. Loyalty to the Government is sufficient. Faithful workers in the Sunday School or in other lines of Christian work need not expect any such recognition. As far as this Honor Roll is concerned, we hereby declare: 'We have no king but Caesar.'"

That was as deplorable as the old-time custom of using funeral sermons to laud as types of uprightness men whose business acquaintances knew that Christ's ambassadors were praising and commending men whose character did not measure up even to the world's standard of integrity, much less to the standard of godliness which the Church is supposed to uphold.

"O how narrow all this is!" some may exclaim. Yes, thank God, it is "narrow," and so is the way that leads unto life; and so was St. Paul when he determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ and Him crucified.

In our Lexington Presbyterian Church we have had no flag, and on the day of our Sunday School rally our superintendent omitted the objectionable features embodied in the program sent out to the churches.

Will a time ever come when Christ's Church can truthfully say: "We have no King but Christ?"

my memory. Since then I have committed many chapters and psalms in the Bible, and also many hymns. Much of the time I repeat my Scripture lesson, instead of reading it, so that I am sure my memory has not failed. I take as much exercise as in my earlier years, and do so with ease.

"An Old Boy."

Welcome These Men.

By William Ray Dobyns.

THE recent campaign in Missouri for Westminster College equipment and endowment was one of the most remarkable ever made in the State. Commencing back last spring, and conducted through the year amidst the universal and omnipresent "drives" for bonds, war work, and such like, it was carried steadily to a glorious consummation December 31, realizing not only the $500,000 goal, but a splendid margin beside. This, in turn, secures $75,000 from the Educational Board, totalling $600,000 for the college.

How was it done? That is the interesting feature. Dr. M. E. Melvin, Field Secretary of the Assembly's Committee on Education and Relief, directed the campaign, and was most admirably assisted by a corps of as fine Christian workers as ever lined up for any enterprise. These men were out to secure this money, but not as collectors—they went among the people as God's workmen, bent on accomplishing a great task for His glory, and they accomplished it. They did this work not only to their own credit, but to the pleasure and benefit of the people they visited.

The whole campaign was so free from anything like the ordinary "high pressure" method, and the too frequent forcing of contributions, that I feel moved to bear this testimony as an introduction to these men, wherever they may go.

After the ground had been covered, and the goal was yet distant, they were able to go back to any man they had solicited, and were received always most cordially. Even in these days of constant demands they were able to increase hundreds of subscriptions, and always left the subscribers glad they had come.

During the last week, when we were all keyed high for the finish, Mr. R. F. Axson and Rev. A. Y. Beatie were in the congregation, to the joy of the people. One man said: "It is a joy to meet such men, and after their plain, earnest presentation, so free from any attempt at force, it is a pleasure to give."

It is my judgment that no providence of God could be clearer, than in the raising up of these superb men for the imperative work of Christian Education.

Welcome these men, co-operate with them, and your church and your own heart will receive a blessing.

The Beacon of the Soul.

By John Jordan Douglass.

(Dedicated to all whose hearts are shadowed by sorrow.)

There is a light that does not fail.

Although the night be long:

Its bright beams mock the moaning gale,

And shine out clear and strong.

It is the light that brightens death

When life ebbs cold and gray:

The still small hope that whispermeth,

"Lo, God is love alway."

Yea, God is love e'en at the grave

Of dreams that fade and fail;

Dear heart, march on; 'tis to the brave

God gives His Holy Grail.

And every tear shall gleam with light

When death shall waste no more;

And grief shall wash its garments white

Beyond the soundless shore.

This light ne'er shone on land or sea,

Where sin's black breakers roll;

It is the light of Victory—

The beacon of the soul.

Sunshine and Shadows at Nacoochee

By Annie Creelman.

THERE is snow on Mount Yonah but the air is full of sunshine and balmy as a Spring day this eleventh of January nineteen-nineteen. It is only a few days since we were shivering round the stove or perhaps crowding round the register in the girls' dormitory. There was a hustling to get wood those cold days and the bad roads caused a scarcity of kerosene and gasolene, as well as a threatened famine of supplies.

We are looking eagerly forward to the time when we shall have electric lights. We began our "drive" in the early Fall and students and teachers had almost reached the $500 mark they had set for themselves in order to procure funds for the new lights, when the "flu" attacked us. It was "some attack," too. We discovered it in our midst October 29. School closed promptly and presto! teachers were suddenly transformed into nurses, matrons, kitchen help—in fact any thing to be of help. Our pretty sitting room became an infirmary, but that did not accommodate nearly all as there were over eighty cases on the place.

Mr. Coit, our superintendent, developed a bad case at the beginning; Mrs. Coit tarried by the stuff, preparing suitable food and dainties for the sick and convalescent. Miss Lea, our secretary and general helper-at-large—"the lady with the lantern"—peeped in at the door of dormitory, home and cottage when night was coming on, to see if all was well and leave a word of cheer with the sick ones.

The Red Cross Society of Atlanta furnished a doctor and three nurses at different times, for which we are deeply thankful. In the twelve years' history of our school there has been no death. Never before has there been such serious illness in our midst, though there are often times when we feel that a small hospital is one of our most pressing needs.

Christmas time approaches and our number is much diminished, as nearly all the teachers have gone home and only about twenty boarding students are left. The little girls are busy fashioning gifts from scraps of silk, ribbon and lace.

We celebrate Christmas in the orthodox way, having a beautiful Christmas tree of cedar loaded with gifts and fruit, and then a good dinner for all the girls in the dormitory, where the tables were prettily decorated with red and green. At night the tree is used again for White Gifts for the King, as we close the day with a short and simple religious service.

Nacoochee is deeply grateful for the Christmas help that came from many friends.

School opens again December 30, and it warms the cockles of the heart to see teachers and students back again after the long vacation. The "flu" germ tries to get busy again but is not successful, and there seems little danger at present of a second attack among us.

So we pick up the broken threads of our work and "carry on," thankful that things are no worse than they are.

The boys have moved to their new home on the farm, recently purchased through the generosity of friends of the school. The smaller children have moved to Hodgson Hall, and we feel that this new arrangement will be more conducive to the cultivation of a proper home spirit and a better social life.

While we rejoice in the privilege of being a helper in the work, we cannot but long for more and better equipment. A new school house is an immediate need. We also need a new dictionary, atlases and up-to-date works on history and science in our library, and we need, oh! how we need a new set of hymn books in the chapel.

Nacoochee Institute is many sided in its ministrations. There are many opportunities for community service. Some of these we are not able to fully make use of because we have not the proper facilities. Boxes of clothing are sent to us and sold at a nominal price to the people in the mountains near by, who bring produce and sometimes cash in return. We need a building where this trading can be done and where people who come a long distance can be made comfortable, and where by the spoken word or printed page, we may be able to give a new impulse, new courage and strength for their daily tasks. Mrs. Coit has already a small sum for this building and is praying that more may be added to it in order that a place may be built where we can do good social service. We have worked at a disadvantage, waiting patiently during the days of the war, while other calls were being sounded in loud tones; now we are hoping to get a hearing so we may have wherewith to increase our facilities for doing efficient service.

The Nacoochee Valley, with its Indian relics and legends, is full of interest to the sentimentalist and archeologist—the Christian idealist of these modern days senses the elements of a nobler and loftier romance as he sees love and faith and courage and endurance working together in the effort to instill into right minds of the boys and girls of this mountain country, the finest ideals of Christian manhood and womanhood.

There are over seventy stars on our service flag; there is no visible reminder of the number of our students who have enlisted in the service of the King of kings, but names are written in the hearts of those who have worked and prayed for them in the past.

There are days of trial and disappointment over seeming failures, but the success attending our efforts yield an abundant reward.

This week our girls are voluntarily going supperless to bed in order that they may be able to contribute for the suffering Armenians. The whole school is showing an interest in helping these unfortunate people.

Systematic Beneficence--Assembly's Progressive Program

$3,500,000 for Benevolences, 1919-1920

OUR General Assembly has set $3,500,000 as our goal for benevolences the next church year—the sum we ought to invest in Gospel extension enterprises in order to enter loyally all the doors of opportunity God has set before us.

Of this amount $2,100,000 will go to the support of Assembly causes, $1,400,000 to the support of Synodical and Presbyterian causes.

North Carolina Synod's share is $375,000; Mecklenburg Presbytery's $114,810—$68,887 for Assembly causes, $45,923 for Synodical and Presbyterian causes. Of this $114,810, $7,320 is assigned to miscellaneous benevolences, leaving $107,490 for the regular causes.

Last year Mecklenburg gave to these regular causes $35,-

968. So the progressive program calls for a practical trebling of our gifts!

"We can do it if we will."

Let the forty churches that didn't make the canvass last year put on the Every Member Canvass and stress the benevolence side of it.

Let some of the stronger churches plan to exceed their apportionment. Let all who possibly can meet their apportionment.

Let all make a distinct and self-sacrificing advance.

The world of today needs the Gospel more urgently than ever. Witness its suffering, its unrest, its hunger for a true idealism to guide it and a true and stable fraternity to heal it.

The church has before it the inspiring example and help-

Topic for Sunday, Feb. 2—The Best Things in Christian Endeavor: Titus 2:11-14; 3:8. (Christian Endeavor Day).

Repeated effort in Christian Endeavor creates the habit of devotion. In our habits is our strength or our weakness. If our habits are wrong we have little power of defense or offense. If they are right we are invested with a safe protection and a conquering force. Without right habits there can be no cogency of character to hold our energies to a focus till success can crown them.

No one ever won a marathon race until he had established the habit of holding the will and muscles to unrelaxing tension. To run a marathon with success one must have built up already a habit of running marathons. So it is in the worship of God. If we would worship Him successfully we must form a habit of devotion. Toward this the Christian Endeavor helps us.

Christian Endeavor brings us to a knowledge of God. This knowledge of Him is the principal aim we should have in life. But we can never know Him unless we cultivate Him; and we cannot cultivate Him with unsteady effort; and we cannot make sustained effort except by habit. God does not yield the knowledge of Himself to fitful seeking. Here again the devotional habit developed in Christian Endeavor comes to our aid in our quest for the knowledge of God.

Christian Endeavor equips for service. One cannot perform service unless one has learned how. Here again the thought swings back to the formation of habit as the secret of service. Christian Endeavor provides the practice by which we perfect the power of speaking in public. We become able after repeated effort to lead aloud in prayer. We fit ourselves for skilfully directing the movements and thoughts of an assembly of people. We learn by repeated experience to be expert in the great business of making our way right to the foot of the Throne, there to be anointed with power for such service as God wills we shall perform.

Christian Endeavor work is itself service. Its prayer, its singing, its contribution in zeal, knowledge, and money to the work of the Kingdom at home and in other lands—all these are items of real and valuable service to Christ the Head of the Kingdom. It really does not matter if we fail to accumulate property here on earth, or if we do not occupy a high place in the social order, or if we are forgotten within a month after we have died. The thing for which we were made is the glory of our God. And His glory is not made up of the big worldly deeds we do. Nor is our reward gaged by them. Both His glory and our best interests lie in the Christ-like qualities that we develop and in the loving devotion of the service that we render.

Read to the society the C. E. pledge. Say a few words about God's approval of those that keep a pledge to the best of their power. Say something about God's wanting us to make pledges.

Add to the items mentioned above all the other benefits of C. E. service.

 THE MASTER OF ALL STORMS.

Mark 4:35-41; 6:47-52; Lu. 8:22-25.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

(Note—Last week the topic should have been "The Common Citizenship of Believers," instead of that printed: "The Coming Citizenship," etc. This week the reference in Luke is incorrect. See List of Topics.)

"Why are ye fearful? Have ye not yet faith?" How often has Jesus spoken thus to His disciples. How frequently do we need to have him rebuke us for our failure of confidence in the midst of the storms and stresses of our lives. The storms will come: and sometimes Jesus, though never asleep now that the period of His earthly life is past, yet sometimes He seems to us to sleep long and soundly in the midst of the tempest. But it is our faith failure, our heart failure, that produces our fears and our agony. He is indeed the Master of all storms. He walks quietly and masterfully upon the raging waters. His eye is ever upon the

THE NAME THAT IS ABOVE EVERY NAME.

A Jew Who Founded no House,
 Ruled no Empire,
 Led no Army,
 Commanded no Fleet,
 Discovered no Continent,
 Wrote no Book,
 Sang no Song,
 Invented no Machine,
 Sat in no Council,
 Settled no Controversy,
 United with no Party,
 Joined no Society,

He did none of these things that make men famous, and yet His Name is more widely known and revered than the name of any mortal who has ever lived; and today there are millions of men, women and children who not only love, but if need be, would gladly die for Him. How do you account for these amazing facts? The Roman Centurion who commanded at His execution and saw Him die said: Truly this man was a Son of God.

This Jew was born nineteen hundred years ago, in a little town in Judea, a conquered Province of the Roman Empire. He traced back His pedigree, through pure Jewish blood, to David, and on to Abraham the Great Progenitor of the Race.

His Name is Jesus the Christ; and the old Hebrew Prophets say that it will endure forever.

THE PRAYER YOU PRAYED FOR LONG.

Come, put away your service pin,
 That tiny star in blue;
 Unfurl the flag you bravely hung,
 For a soldier lad, so true.

For Peace has come, at last—at last,
 The prayer you prayed for long;
 May God, in pity, comfort those,
 To whom the gold belongs!

ISRAEL CROSSING THE RED SEA.

Ex. 14:21-31, 15:1-2.

January 26, 1919.

Golden Text: "The Lord saved Israel that day out of the hand of the Egyptians."—Ex. 14:30.

After their deliverance from the destruction of the first born by means of the Paschal Lamb, Israel departed from Egypt with glad hearts and lofty hopes for the future. But they soon encountered trouble. Encamped by the Red Sea by Divine direction, they are pursued by the armed hosts of Egypt, who, forgetful of Divine judgments, desire to bring them again into bondage. For the time the lust of power and the greed of gain mastered their fears of Jehovah's wrath. The Israelites are terrified, regret that they had left Egyptian bondage, and appeal to Moses and Jehovah. Their condition was appalling. A disorganized band of freed slaves, unprepared for war, they have mountains on either side of them, a flowing sea in front and a fierce, well armed enemy in the rear ready to attack. No human help seemed possible. But with "The Angel of the Covenant" Jehovah leading and defending them their salvation is assured. With God all right things are possible.

I. Israel Crosses the Sea on Dry Land.

Without the use of visible means, by the simple fiat of His will the Almighty could have given them a dry path through the sea. But He chose to show His power over natural elements and caused a strong east wind to blow all that night to divide and heap up the waters of the sea, to keep them piled up on either side and to dry the ground between. Thus He prepared a solid way for Israel through the sea. But He did more and wrought another miracle for His people's comfort and safety. That they might be protected from their enemies and have clear vision and ample time for their passage, "The cloudy pillar that usually went before them was placed in the rear, between them and their foes, and became all night a pillar of darkness to the Egyptians and a pillar of fire to Israel. Thus Divinely aided with a plain way, abundant light, protection from assault, and ample time, the Israelites crossed the sea without the loss of a man.

II. The Fate of the Pursuing Egyptians.

The Egyptians doubtless thought that if Israel could pass through the sea so could they. But whether we can do what others do depends upon whether their help is ours. The Egyptians were to find by a bitter experience that Jehovah was against them, and this fact caused failure and destruction instead of success and salvation. Every man, if he would know his fate, should ascertain whether the Almighty is for him or against him. When the pursuing Egyptians had entered the bed of the sea, by Divine command Moses stretched forth the rod, the sea returned to its strength and overwhelmed the Egyptians. Even before the waters surrounded them Jehovah looked upon them from the cloud and troubled them. He took off their chariot wheels so that they made slow progress. They became alarmed and said, "Let us flee, for Jehovah fighteth for Israel." But it was too late. Before they could reach solid land, the floods swallowed them up, and not one escaped this terrible retribution. Two Divine miracles saved Israel at the Red Sea, and two acts of Jehovah visited upon their foes remediless destruction. "Who hath hardened himself against God and hath prospered?" "He that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed and that without remedy." The Red Sea has sung the dirge of Pharaoh's hosts for centuries, and emphasized the above words.

III. The Effects of Their Rescue Upon Israel.

Their signal deliverance caused the Israelites at the time to reverence Jehovah, to believe in Him, to have faith in His Word and to trust His servant Moses. It is written, "And Israel saw that great work which the Lord had done upon the Egyptians, and the people feared the Lord, and believed the Lord and His servant Moses." Divine mercies and Jehovah's judgments are designed to produce such results, but it is surprising how transient are the impressions caused by such agencies, upon Israel and mankind. Miracles do not convert people. They did not in Moses' day, neither did they during Christ's public ministry. Nothing but the regenerating power of the Holy Ghost will make depraved man "a new creature in Christ Jesus."

IV. Israel's Song of Triumph.

When Israel saw their enemies "dead upon the seashore," from glad and grateful hearts they uttered their song of thanksgiving. They ascribed their deliverance not to their own wisdom or might but to the matchless power of Jehovah. They cry, "I will sing unto the Lord for He hath triumphed gloriously the horse and his rider hath He thrown into the sea." Moses and all Israel join in this anthem of praise and the women led by Miriam swell the song of thanksgiving. They not only praise the Lord for the salvation just realized but promise to deem Him their strength and to exalt Him in the future.

Prayer Meeting.

storm-tossed vessel that bears His beloved. The distressing fact is that we do not believe this, and hence our hearts are full of forebodings and doubts. We make the perils our own, forgetting that He is coming over the waves. Our hearts are hardened: we "understand not concerning the loaves," that He who could feed the multitude could also, and will also, protect His own.

"He is able:" "And we know that to them that love God All Things work together for good."

As we read these graphic lake experiences, we are sensible of the power of the narratives. These scenes and experiences made indelible impressions upon the disciples: yet in the storms that afterwards broke upon them they again and again suffered an eclipse of faith. In the greatest of all, when the Master was led as a lamb to the slaughter, they lost heart and hope, and their faith was crucified with Jesus. So when this world war broke upon the world in 1914 how many millions of believers thought that surely God must be asleep; or that He had sent out upon the treacherous sea both world and church to be entombed forever. But it was a case of colossal hardening of hearts: because men "understood not concerning the loaves." Instead of eating the bread that was broken by His hands and given for our life, men began by analyzing the bread; and then they rejected it; and then they rejected Him that gave it. They must needs venture upon the storm-tossed sea for bread not of His giving—that His hands had not broken, or His mouth blessed. They would be masters. And so the storm broke with unprecedented fury and wickedness. But the Master walked that sea. He sent men and women to defend, to heal, to nurse, to feed the starving, to shelter the shelterless. He stooped down and whispered: "It is I—be not afraid," in the ears of countless multitudes on the stricken field, or in the hospitals, or where the wretched were driven forth like vermin to perish on the via dolorosa of the Armenian tragedy. Jesus is Master of all storms; and we were well to take this to heart while the Peace Conference meets at Versailles. After the storm, after He said, "Peace, be still," we read that there was a great calm. "A great calm" is the blessing He has in store for us if we are able to receive it. If we have seen enough of man's brutal selfishness; if we have learned anew that the love of money is a root of every evil; if we are really followers of the Master of all storms—the Prince of peace, then for us and for our world there can and will be "a great calm." It is not enough that He walks the waves: we must take Him into the boat. Then shall the tempests cease; and we shall be amazed at ourselves that we understood not of the loaves: and of the love and grace of Him who feedeth and blesseth all.

CAN WE PAY GOD?

If a man will sit down and count over the blessings with which God has blessed him, there will arise in his heart an emotion not of appreciation and gratitude alone, but of obligation—a desire to make some return to God for all His goodness.

But what can a man give to God?

His are the cattle on a thousand hills. His the gold of the mountains. His already is the substance that I call mine.

How can a mere man bring satisfaction to the heart of the great God, how compensate the Creator for His unnumbered benefits?

A Psalmist felt that problem long ago, and found its answer. "What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward me?" he asks, and replies to his own question, "I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."

We can not pay God back in kind.

The only way we can pay Him at all is to take all that He gives.

To accept His salvation is payment for all his other gifts.

To let Him forgive and heal and inwardly furnish our souls and fashion us in the likeness of His Son is all the pay He desires, as it is also all the pay we can give.

This is the paradox of thanksgiving—that we can discharge our obligation to God only by increasing it!—Christian Century.

PERSEVERANCE IN PRAYER.

The fact that answer to a prayer is not always immediate is attested both by the Bible and by experience.

The danger often is that a mere delay in answer may be thought to be a denial or total disregard of the request.

Reasons for a delayed answer may be in the one who prays, or in the nature of the prayer offered, or in the complex system of which we are a part.

The blessing attending a prayer, the answer to which is delayed, may be very great. It may include the discovery of new riches in the Bible, which is the prayer manual of the Christian; it may also give one a new knowledge of one's self, which should result in the removal of any discovered hindrances to the answer not yet received, and thus the delay may result in large spiritual growth. Close fellowship with God is worth all that it costs.—The Bible Record.

LIFE.

Were we asked to name the three greatest words in Holy Writ, we would probably say they are Love, Light, Life. Love is the great law of human conduct, light is the great revealer of truth, and life is conduct and creed in character. There was wonderful harmony in our Lord's teachings. He was far removed from fanaticism, which arises from placing a wrong emphasis upon doctrine. When undue emphasis is placed on conduct, the result is materialism; when placed on belief, or creed, fanaticism ensues; and here is the essence of ritualism. Christ teaches us that out of conduct and creed will spring inevitably the abiding element which we call character. And so conduct and belief find their value in character.—Bishop Thomson.

To fill a little space because God wills it; to go on cheerfully with a petty round of little duties, little avocations; to smile for the joys of others when the heart is aching; to banish all ambition, all pride, and all restlessness, in a single regard to our Saviour's work; he who does this for one hour is a greater hero than he who for one hour storms a breach, or for one day rushes forward undaunted in the flaming front of shot and shell.—F. W. Farrar.

THE PRODIGAL SON WHO REMAINED AT HOME.

A man need not travel into a far country to become a prodigal. Prodigality is not a question of distance or place—it is a question of attitude. We would expect the elder prodigal in the parable of Jesus to share the joy of his father at the return of the younger son, but instead he gets angry and refuses to join in the feast of merriment. His speech shows that, though he never traveled into a far country, he had been a prodigal at heart all the while.

The younger prodigal had gone away in person, the elder prodigal had gone away in heart. The younger prodigal went into a far country to make merry with his friends, the elder prodigal stayed at home, but now finds fault with his father, that he had never been given a kid to make merry with his friends.

It takes some people a long time to discover themselves. It was the pinch of want that brought the younger son to himself. When he came to himself he found that he was hungry, destitute, debauched, far away and in the very depths of sin. He also realized that his father had plenty and to spare.

When the elder son came to himself he found himself self-righteous, angry, envious, deaf to his father's entreaties, and too mean and stubborn to go in to the feast.

Our conduct under a test will show the depth of our religion. Sometimes we go for a long time, the track perfectly clear, everything going just exactly to suit our taste, nothing to cross our path or disturb us in the sweet revelry of having our own way, but suddenly we come face to face with a crisis.

The prodigal who stayed at home was very little better than the one who ran away. Anger, prejudice, jealousy are just as bad as the open vice of the younger son. The elder son would have prevented the return of his brother if there had been an opportunity to do so. How much difference is there between the man who is down and out, and the man who keeps him there?

Prodigality, then, is a question of attitude. The man in the front pew may be a prodigal as much as the man in the gutter. The heart determines.—Evangelical Messenger.

THE DANGER OF SIGHS.

"How you make me sigh for great wealth!" said a woman with the intention of complimenting a speaker at the close of an address. "Then I have utterly failed in accomplishing my purpose," answered the speaker.

The Lord wants not sighs for the dollars we have not, but consecration of the dimes that we have.

A little boy was walking along the street by his mother's side. He thus voiced his lofty missionary aspirations:

"When I get to be a man and have lots of money, I am going to support a missionary. I think I'll build a hospital and a mission school, too."

"Are you sure you will still feel that way when you get the money?" queried his mother.

"Oh, I know I will," answered the boy confidently. "If I had the money now I'd give it, but you know I haven't any money."

Just then he spied a shining round dime on the sidewalk. Before his mother had a chance to say missionary, mission school or hospital, he shot into a nearby candy store, where the sum total of his newly-acquired wealth was hurried across the counter in exchange for his favorite candy. Perfectly willing he was to consecrate the dollars he was going to have, while he spent for himself the dime that he had.

We are in great danger of exhausting our generous impulses on sighs for wealth to consecrate; and of encouraging in our own lives and the lives of others the deferring of actual giving until we acquire large sums.—Missionary Review of the World.

CHANGE OF ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisers who want their advertisements changed or want to insert new advertisements will please bring their copy to this office by Saturday. It is impossible for us to insert new advertisements or make changes for the current week at a later date.

No charge is made for the insertion of marriage and obituary notices of fifty words or less. For all over fifty words remit at the rate of one cent a word. Correspondents are requested to give the post office address of married couples when marriage notices are sent.

Advertising rates furnished on application. The size and character of this paper indicate the size and character of its constituency. For reputable advertising there is no better medium for North Carolina and the most prosperous section of the South.

Collections—January is one of the months unassigned by the Assembly. In many of the Synods the collections go to Synodical and Presbyterian causes. In the Synod of North Carolina, by order of the Synod, they are for Synodical Home Missions. The treasurer of this cause is Rev. A. W. Crawford, 320 S. Mendenhall St., Greensboro, N. C.

Church News

The Synod's Home Mission Work and the Sunday Schools.

Do you know what our Sunday School work owes to Synodical Home Missions? 186 Sunday Schools have been organized in the Synod's mission work, more than one-third of the total number now in the Synod (485).

Synod directs that a collection be taken in each Sunday School in its bounds, in January, for this work.

What about your school? Will you do it?

SOME FACTS FOR THE YEAR CLOSING OCTOBER 1st

38 men were engaged. They reported 693 additions to the Presbyterian Church on profession, being nearly one-third of the total number in all of the churches of the Synod. 12 Sunday Schools and 3 churches were organized.

A much enlarged work this year.

PERSONAL.

Rev. D. B. Green has accepted a call to Kershaw, S. C. In our last issue we stated that Mr. Green was called to Cheraw. This was an error which we hasten to correct.

Rev. B. H. Dupuy, of Leesburg, Fla., has been notified of the death and burial of his son, Paul Bartholomew, in France, in October. He will have the sympathy of many friends throughout the church in this sad bereavement.

Rev. Dr. James I. Vance, pastor of the First Church, Nashville, Tenn., and chairman of the war work for the Southern Presbyterian Church, left Nashville on December 7 for an extended mission in Europe in connection with the Army Y. M. C. A.

The many friends of Rev. W. B. Arrowood in Virginia, North and South Carolina will learn with sincere sorrow that he died on January 19, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Plaxico, in Sharon, S. C. There will be a more extended notice next week.

Rev. Harold Shields, of Townsville, N. C., has the sympathies of the church in the loss of his wife, at the home of her father, in Atlanta, Ga., January 16. She died from pneumonia following an attack of Spanish influenza. They had been married only eighteen months. She was lovely in person and character, and a great help in church work.

Rev. J. Sprole Lyons, Jr., who has served since the entrance of the United States into the war as chaplain in the army, first in a camp in this country and later in France, has returned to this country. Mr. Lyons is recuperating from injuries received last September, having been both gassed and injured in a motor truck smash-up a short distance behind the lines, at which time his jaw was fractured and two ribs broken. He has been for many weeks in a hospital in England.

The Central Presbyterian Church, of Atlanta, Ga., has extended a unanimous call to Rev. B. R. Lacy, of Raleigh, N. C., to become their pastor, the church having been vacant since Rev. Dunbar H. Ogden, D.D., accepted the call to the Second Church, Louisville, Ky., in July of last year. Mr. Lacy has for the past year been engaged in war work, being a chaplain in the army. He has made for himself an enviable reputation for bravery on the battlefields of France, and he is held in the highest estimation by the soldiers to whom he has ministered.

RETURNING SOLDIERS.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement will hold a conference in the First Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, Tuesday night, January 28, and in the morning and afternoon of the 29th, on the subject of "The Church and the Returning Soldiers." The Tuesday night service will be a popular meeting to which the public is invited. The Wednesday meetings will consist of informal conferences. Ministers and officers from over the Presbytery have been invited.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Orange Presbytery—The constitutional requirements having been complied with, I hereby call a meeting of Orange Presbytery to meet in the First Presbyterian Church, Greensboro, N. C., January 28, 1919, at 1:30 p. m., to transact the following business:

To act on the resignation of Rev. E. C. Murray, D.D., as pastor of Alamance Church, and on a call for his pastoral services from the St. Paul's Church, Fayetteville Presbytery, and all matters growing out of the same.

Barium Springs, N. C. C. W. Erwin, Moderator.

Charlotte—The pulpit of the Tenth Avenue Church was occupied last Sabbath evening by Rev. Dr. Homer McMillan, of Atlanta, Ga. Dr. McMillan preached an excellent sermon in which he showed conclusively the relation that Home Missions bear to the world. No one knows this great subject better than does Dr. McMillan, who has studied it for years at first hand, and few speakers can present it more interestingly than he.

At the morning service in this church, the pastor, Dr. Sibley, presented the cause of Relief in the Near East, for which a liberal contribution was made by the congregation.

Jackson Springs—The new pastor, Rev. W. L. Wilson, moved here from Hemp on November 12, 1918. Since then two efforts have been made to install him, but both times this was prevented by an epidemic of influenza. Just before Thanksgiving the members of this church gave their pastor a generous pounding at his home, and at Christmas the Elise Church loaded his car with good things.

This field now consists of Jackson Springs, Mt. Hermon, Culdee, Pinehurst, Bensalem, Eagle Springs and Elise.

Owing to the influenza epidemic, the churches have been closed a great deal during the Fall, but we are hopeful that the worst is over, and that work can begin in earnest.

Mt. Pisgah—On December 22 we closed an eight-day meeting at this church. Rev. Wm. Black, Synodical Evangelist, and his singing leader, Mr. Burr, were with us. Brother Black, who is always highly interesting in his preaching, seemed to be at his best in each of the services, and there was marked evidence of the Spirit's gracious presence throughout the meeting. There were about 200 reconsecrations, 150 promised to read the Bible and pray daily, and twelve joined the church on profession of faith.

It was a common remark among the people who attended these services that they had never heard the Gospel preached with such wonderful power and effect, and with such good sense in its application to the labor and problems involved in the advancement of the church.

J. A. C.

Concord Presbytery—The constitutional requirements having been complied with, I hereby call a meeting of Concord Presbytery in the Second Church in Mooresville, January 31, 1919, at 1 p. m., for the transaction of the following business, if the way be clear, viz:

1. To act on the resignation of Rev. F. A. Barnes as pastor of Mooresville Second and Shearer Churches.

2. To act on a call from Burton Memorial Church, Presbytery of Roanoke, for the pastoral services of Rev. F. A. Barnes.

3. To dismiss Rev. F. A. Barnes to the Presbytery of Roanoke.

4. To act on a request of the Trustees of Mitchell for permission to put on a campaign for funds for the college.

5. To change the place of the Spring meeting of Presbytery.

J. M. Clark, Moderator.

Antioch—The church and manse and high school here have recently been the recipients of $500 from Mrs. Sallie McPhaul's estate to install a lighting system. A Delco system is now being put in. The school received another $1,000 to pay off an old debt, and Flora Macdonald and Barium Springs will each receive something over $4,000. This will leave a balance of $8,000 to be pro-rated to other causes. Mrs. McPhaul took great pleasure in giving liberally while living to all good causes and before she died she instructed her only sister and near relative to dispose of one of her farms and give the money where in her judgment it would do most good locally and in the church at large. The farm recently was sold for $18,180, and the amount is being apportioned in such a way that there shall not only be a continual memorial of her, but also a never-ending stream of blessing to others as long as church and schools exist.

J. W. Goodman.

Pinetops Presbyterian Church, organized about eight years ago, now has a membership of seventy-one.

This church usually has a Christmas tree for the Sunday School, but this year we decided to have a "White Christmas," using the attractive Christmas program, "God's Service Star," recommended and furnished by the Committee on Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, with the mite boxes for that cause.

On account of the influenza and the inclement weather our attendance has been small; however, a splendid audience met on Sunday night after Christmas for the exercises.

The church had been beautifully and tastefully decorated by the social committee of our Christian Endeavor; the program was well rendered from beginning to end; $30 was the contribution for Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, and a splendid offering of "White Gifts" was sent to the Orphans' Home at Barium Springs. N. N., Jr.

Mecklenburg Presbytery—The constitutional requirements having been complied with, the moderator, Rev. C. G. Lynch, has called Mecklenburg Presbytery to meet in the Charlotte First Church, Monday, January 27, 1919, at 2 p. m., to transact the following items of business, if the way be clear:

1. To consider the campaign for Queens College, and take whatever action may be found necessary, and hear Dr. M. E. Melvin, who is to have charge of the campaign.

2. The request of Rev. H. M. Pressly for permission to labor outside our bounds.

3. The request of Rev. W. H. Adams for a certificate of dismission to the Presbytery of Lafayette.

4. The request of Rev. W. C. Wauchope for a certificate of dismission to Concord Presbytery.

Derita, N. C., January 15, 1919.

Albemarle—The banquet given on the evening of January 14 at the Presbyterian Church by the ladies, in honor of the men of the church and a few friends, was a most complete success in every way. At 6:30 o'clock the guests were seated around the great table which was formed in the shape of the capital letter "T." Rev. Geo. W. Cheek, pastor of the church, acted as toastmaster, sitting at the top of the "T" with Capt. W. P. Thompson, the first speaker, at the end of the right wing; A. C. Huneycutt, Esq., the second speaker, at the end of the left wing, and Rev. Q. C. Davis, the last speaker, at the end of the table facing the toastmaster. After a number of courses, tempting to the palate, had been served by the ladies, with excellent music rendered by Misses Mary McDonald and Bert Shermon, Rev. Mr. Cheek arose and presented Captain Thompson, who made a most interesting and helpful address on the subject, "Regularity and Punctuality in Church Attendance." The toastmaster then introduced A. C. Huneycutt, Esq., who proceeded in his usual free-lance manner to talk on the subject of "The Outlook," and closing with a beautiful toast "To the Albemarle Presbyterian Church of the Future." Mr. Huneycutt was followed by Rev. Q. C. Davis, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Albemarle, who spoke on the subject of "The Social Advantages of Church Fellowship." He developed his address in a most interesting manner, paying a high tribute to Presbyterianism, and especially for its stand in the past and its present attitude towards educating the masses. He said the Presbyterians were the best people in the world except the Baptists, and that they were almost as good as the Baptists, that in fact Presbyterians were just highland Baptists, anyhow.

After the regular program the toastmaster turned the chair over to Wilcox Brightwell, president of the Brotherhood Bible class, who stated that the election of officers for the class for the coming year was in order, and the members present proceeded to elect the following gentlemen: W. J. Cotton, president; L. A. Barrier, vice-president; F. E. Starnes, treasurer; D. R. Morrow, secretary, and A. C. Huneycutt, teacher.

After a toast to the ladies, a rising vote of thanks was taken by all present, the guests cheering heartily as they arose.

The Albemarle Presbyterian Church is in the midst of the biggest boom, under the enthusiastic pastorship of Rev. Mr. Cheek, ever experienced before in its history. Cor.

Adjourned Meeting Fayetteville Presbytery—Fayetteville Presbytery met according to adjournment in the First Church, Fayetteville, January 14, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon, with an attendance of seventeen ministers and fourteen ruling elders. Called to order by the moderator, Rev. J. K. Hall.

Revs. D. McIntyre, of the Presbytery of Oakes (U. S. A.) and A. C. Bridgman, of the Presbytery of Orange, were introduced and asked to sit as corresponding members.

A call from St. Paul's Church for the pastoral services of Rev. E. C. Murray, D.D., of the Presbytery of Orange, was found in order and a committee of two ruling elders of St. Paul's Church was authorized to prosecute said call before Orange Presbytery.

Rev. D. McIntyre, Ph.D., who is supplying Laurel Hill and Smyrna Churches, while their pastor, Dr. Hellier, is overseas in Y. M. C. A. work, presented a certificate of dismission from the Presbytery of Oakes (U. S. A.), to this Presbytery, and, after a satisfactory examination, and signing the obligations required of ministers, was received as a member of this Presbytery and his name enrolled.

The Summerville and Flat Branch Churches, in Rev. G. F. Kirkpatrick's field, were granted permission to increase the pastor's salary from $225 to $300 and from $225 to $290 per annum respectively.

The commission appointed for the purpose, reported the organization of a church at Bunnlevel, with ten members, on January 5, 1919. One elder and one deacon were elected and the Presbyterial tax fixed at $1.50.

By increased contributions from the churches towards pastors' salaries and by increased appropriations from Home Mission Funds, on recommendation of the Superintendent of Home Missions, Rev. L. Smith, the salaries of the following groups of churches were increased to $1,500 and a manse: The group served by Rev. D. L. Jones, consisting of Philippi, Hope Mills, Big Rockfish, Sherwood and Sunnyside; Rev. C. E. Clark's field, consisting of Kenly, Oak Grove, Mizpah, Centre Ridge and Spring Hill; Rev. D. M. McGeachy's field, consisting of Oakland and Spence. The salary of the Chatham County field, which is now seeking a minister, was raised by appropriation, to $1,450 and a manse. This field has called Rev. R. M. Phillips, who has accepted the call.

Two hundred dollars was appropriated to the field of Rev. J. A. Caligan, and the Committee of Home Missions was directed to endeavor to bring the salary of this field up to the minimum adopted by our Presbytery of $1,500 and a manse.

Superintendent Rev. L. Smith was authorized to make an effort to bring the salary of Rev. E. E. Washburn's field up to the minimum, if possible.

Action in regard to an increase of salary in Rev. C. L. Wicker's field was postponed until the Spring meeting of Presbytery, as no definite report had been received from the field.

Nothing will be done as to the Smithfield group until a suitable man can be found to supply the field.

Calls from Sherwood and Big Rockfish Churches for the pastoral services of Rev. D. L. Jones, were found in order, placed in his hands, accepted by him and the following orders taken for his installation: At Sherwood, third Sunday in February, at 11 a. m.: Rev. J. A. McMurray to preside and preach, Rev. E. E. Washburn to charge the pastor, and Rev. L. Smith to charge the people, with Ruling Elder A. D. McGill. At Big Rockfish, on the fourth Sabbath of February, at 3:30 p. m.: Rev. W. E. Hill to preside and preach, Rev. J. K. Hall to charge the pastor, and Rev. G. F. Kirkpatrick to charge the people, with Ruling Elder Dr. J. W. McNeill, of Fayetteville.

Increased apportionments in accordance with the Assembly's Progressive Program to raise $12,000,000 in three years, were adopted. The churches will be informed of the amounts by the group of managers in the campaign.

The appointment, by the Board of Trustees of Flora MacDonald College, of Mr. W. J. Johnston to fill out the unexpired term of Rev. H. J. Mills, deceased, was confirmed by Presbytery.

Rev. J. K. Hall was appointed to fill out the unexpired term of Rev. H. J. Mills, as chairman of the Foreign Mission Committee.

The committee appointed to regroup Galatia and the Church of the Covenant was discharged, and the Home Mission Committee was asked to act with these churches in the effort to secure a pastor.

Adjourned, with prayer, to meet at Ashpole Church in regular Spring session, Tuesday, April 22, 1919, at an hour to be fixed by the stated clerk and the pastor of the church.

E. L. Siler, S. C.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Piedmont Presbyterian Church is still doing things in the way of improvement. Both the church edifice and manse have recently been repaired and beautifully lighted with electricity. The annual report of the board of deacons shows the church out of debt and growing in the grace of giving.

Albert E. Wallace, Pastor.

Clinton—On December 17 Rev. L. Ross Lynn was installed pastor of the Thornwell Memorial Church, the following commission having charge of the service: Dr. J. B. Green, who presided and preached the sermon; Rev. W. D. Ratchford, who charged the pastor, and Rev. C. T. Squires, who charged the congregation. Mr. Lynn will have the pastoral work of this church in connection with the leadership at the Thornwell Orphanage.

Columbia—President Thornton Whaling, of the Theological Seminary, is teaching a class of Sabbath School workers every Tuesday evening in the Y. M. C. A., basing his instruction upon the International Lessons. Representatives of the various denominations attend the class, and all unite in heartiest praise for the instruction given. Dr. Whaling often suggests several ways in which the lesson might be presented to classes of various sorts, and at the same time he shows the underlying theological teaching of the different passages now being studied.

Columbia—The officers and teachers of the First Presbyterian Sabbath School were delightfully entertained on Thursday evening, January 16, by Dr. and Mrs. Byrd, in the parlors of Chicora College. Delicious refreshments were served by Miss Swygert, head of the domestic science department, assisted by four of her students. Mrs. Byrd is the teacher of the Ladies' Bible Class, which meets in two sections, one held on Sabbath morning and the other on Wednesday afternoon. This organization is the most active of its sort in Columbia, and is one of the most helpful religious organizations.

A. W. B.

Lancaster—The Aid and Missionary Society and the Mamie Frasier Society presented the church with a service flag. The thirty-two stars are a very touching reminder of our brave soldiers who went from our church, and the one gold star tells of the supreme sacrifice of one of our members. Mrs. Leroy Springs also gave a beautiful honor roll on which is inscribed the names, rank and service of each of our soldiers. The first Sunday of the new year we had our regular mid-winter communion, and our pastor, Rev. H. R. Murchison, preached. Several members were given a warm welcome. The sermon was a most helpful one on the New Year. The evening service was a special one, the subject, "Beginning Life Again." A special word was addressed to our returned soldiers, telling of the grand Christian work to be done by them in this, the crucial year.—Christian Observer.

Marion—At a recent meeting of the congregation of this church it was decided to install a pipe organ and the deacons were authorized to contract for an organ costing $2,100. This contract has been signed and the organ is to be installed by April 1.

Pee Dee Presbytery will hold its Spring meeting in this church (D. V.) April 15.

The Ladies' Aid Society is arranging to paint the manse at an early date. Monday before Christmas the members of the church sent a truck load of groceries, fruit, etc., to the manse, giving a genuine surprise to the occupants, and greatly appreciated by the pastor and his family. A son of the manse, twice wounded in France, returned from Europe in time for a full gathering of the family on New Year's Day. The pastor of this church, Rev. J. M. Holladay, D.D., has much to be grateful for.

Kingstree—Rev. J. G. Herndon, of LaGrange, Ga., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church here and will remove here with his family in a short while. Mr. Herndon preached for the congregation several weeks ago and made a fine impression on his hearers. He is an excellent preacher and possessed with a pleasing personality. The church has been without a pastor for over a year, when Rev. P. S. McChesney gave up the pastorate to accept a call to Anderson.

Rev. Hugh R. Murchison, of Lancaster, spoke here Sunday night, January 12, in behalf of the Near East sufferers and the campaign which started that day in all parts of the country. He spoke to a union gathering in the Presbyterian Church and the sum of $650 was raised at the conclusion of his remarks. That morning at the regular service of the Baptist congregation $150 was raised.

Fort Mill—At a congregational meeting held in the Fort Mill Presbyterian Church, Sunday morning, December 12, a unanimous call was extended to Rev. L. B. McCord, pastor of the Manning (S. C.) church. The meeting was moderated by Rev. Thornton Whaling, D.D., who conducted the morning service. This church has been without a pastor since last July, when Rev. R. K. Timmons resigned to accept the presidency of Stillman Institute, at Tuscaloosa, Ala. The pulpit has been filled, however, almost every Sunday since the departure of Mr. Timmons.

An address was made in the interest of the campaign for funds for relief work in the near east Sunday afternoon by Rev. Thornton Whaling, D.D., of Columbia Theological Seminary. The meeting was not a large one, but those present started the fund with contributions of $160.

C. S. Link, Cor.

Greenville—A class in the catechisms is graduated each year in the Sabbath School of the Second Church, Greenville, S. C., with appropriate religious exercises. "Train up" (catechise, in the margin) "a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." (Proverbs 22:6.) Master James Kirksey Sadler recited the Shorter Catechism, and Misses Margaret Norris and Katherine Garlington and Master Ephraim Payson Mallard the Introduction to the Shorter Catechism. In his learned work on the Westminster Assembly, Dr. A. F. Mitchell, of St. Mary's College, St. Andrews, says: "I regard the Shorter Catechism, as in several respects, the most remarkable of their symbolical books, the matured fruit of all their consultations and debates, the quintessence of that system of truth in which they desired to train English-speaking youth, and faithful training in which, I believe, has done more to keep alive on both sides of the Atlantic reverence for the old theology than all other human instrumentalities whatever." And Carlyle says: "The older I grow—and I now stand upon the brink of eternity—the more comes back to me the first sentence in the catechism which I learned when a child, and the fuller and deeper its meaning becomes: What is the chief end of man? To glorify God and enjoy Him forever." Pages 418 and 453.

Piedmont Presbytery—At a called meeting of Piedmont Presbytery, held on Friday, January 3, at Seneca, S. C., the pastoral relations between Rev. J. C. Bailey and the churches of Liberty, Carmel, Central, and Pickens, were dissolved, and Mr. Bailey was dismissed to Bethel Presbytery, in order that he might accept the pastorate of the church near Rock Hill, S. C., known to very many as "The Ebenezer Church." Mr. Bailey had served this pastorate in Piedmont Presbytery about twelve years, and both the Presbytery and the people of his former churches part from him with the keenest regret. So sincerely does the Presbytery feel his removal, that it adopted the resolution here given, and ordered this resolution to be sent to the stated clerk of Bethel Presbytery, and to the Church papers:

"In dismissing our brother, Rev. J. C. Bailey, to another Presbytery, where God in His providence has called him in the labor of His kingdom, we desire to express and record our grateful appreciation of the more than ten years of faithful and efficient service, as a pastor, preacher, and presbyter within our bounds. As a preacher of the Word, he has obeyed the injunction of the great Apostle, to be instant in season and out of season. Not only in the churches entrusted to his particular care has he been diligent, able and earnest in declaring the Gospel with power, but in other churches of the Presbytery, especially in the weak churches and mission stations has his voice been heard frequently and helpfully. As a presbyter, and conspicuously as the chairman of the Home Missions Committee, his energies have been freely expended, his counsel has been wise, and his administration able.

"We give him up with many regrets—his presence and his help will be missed, but we follow him with our prayers, and our best wishes for even wider and higher usefulness in his new field of labor."
W. H. Mills, S. C.

APPALACHIA.

Sinking Spring Church—Abingdon, Va.—The pastor of this church, Rev. Wesley Baker, writes that during the recent epidemic of influenza, when his church was closed, he found "Uncle Sam's" mail a very useful agency in keeping him in touch with the members of his congregation. On December 10, during the second visit of the influenza, he sent a pastoral letter to 124 families of his congregation, and he says: "A pastor has to use a pastoral letter but once in order to realize its value as a wonderfully potent agency in extending the Kingdom of God." This letter, which is full of sweet comfort and cheer, closes with these verses and message:

"Look up, take hope, the sun still shines,
Though clouds at times obscure it;
The man who cries, and mopes, and pines,
Will add to woe, not cure it.

"Look up, God lives, God loves, God reigns,
Take heart, nor brood on sorrow;
A bit of courage often gives
The strength to meet tomorrow."

"A refreshing meal from the Book, seasoned with prayer, will help us to do this. Allow me to most heartily commend this to you as your daily menu."—Christian Observer.

ARKANSAS.

El Dorado—Rev. Jno. Stanly Thomas has resigned the pastorate of this church to accept a call to the Scotland Church, near Junction City, Ark.

Story and Incident

The Pink Geranium.

IT stood in the florist's window, a paragon of rose-colored splendor, the sinecure of all eyes and the coveted treasure of Martha Lee's heart as she passed to and from her work. Several times she had ventured within the shop and timidly inquired the cost of this queen of rose-colored beauties, but each time found the price prohibitive. The florist called it his "best bloomer." It belonged to a family of "best bloomers," but this particular member had outstripped all former records, and stood a bewildering dash of brilliant color, casting its lovely roseate tints in a halo over the pure white lilies and cream-tinted roses blooming by its side.

All the way from the dingy suburb, where Martha Lee lived, to the big department store where she sold hosiery at a salary of five dollars a week, the transcendent beauty of this pink geranium haunted her vision. Over and over she counted the meager contents of her purse and numerous expenses for which it was destined, hoping by some unaccountable good fortune there would be two dollars more than was needed—but all in vain.

Martha Lee was a rare little blossom of her own human species. She was dainty and trim in person, accommodating and gracious in manner, and the one great trial of her sixteen years was the necessity of foregoing all that makes life lovely and worth while to a devotee of the beautiful in every form.

She lived with her mother and two little sisters in a poor section of the city, and all she made, added to her mother's limited income from sewing, scarcely provided the household necessities, with vague uncertainties for clothing. Therefore, the possession of a two-dollar pink geranium seemed to Martha only the dream of a disordered mind.

Holly Grove Church—Pine Bluff Presbytery—The pastor gratefully acknowledges the generous kindness of the officers and members of this church in raising his salary from $750 to $1,000 per annum. In addition to this he was the recipient of a handsome suit of clothes, fit for a bishop. In addition to this, cash gifts more than paid for a pair of ponies, a buggy and a barn to keep them in and feed them.

God bless my people, for they thus have equipped me to preach at Holly Grove, at Valley Grove, and Poplar Grove, at Marvell and at Postelle, and in the eighty-five miles twice a month to do much pastoral work. God bless my people. Together, we will rejoice in Harvest Time.

Forty-five members added to the baby church of the Presbytery since March 21, 1918.

GEORGIA.

College Park Church—Rev. Samuel S. Doughtry, pastor of this church for the past two years, has resigned this charge to accept a call to the Presbyterian Church at Frankfort, Ky. Mr. Doughtry has conducted the work at College Park most successfully and his congregation give him up with regret. He takes up his new work February 1.

Savannah—With the coming of the new year our pastor, Rev. W. Moore Scott, enters upon his twelfth year as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Savannah, Ga. During these eleven years 691 members have been received into our church, practically half of them on profession and from other denominations. The resident membership has increased over 250 per cent. Reports were made by the benevolent and current expense treasurers on the first Sunday, which showed the church in splendid condition. They both stated that in spite of the long and serious interruption of the "flu" ban covering most of the Fall the church was in the best financial condition in its history. The year was closed with all current expense obligations paid and a nice large balance in bank, while the benevolence report stated that during these first nine months of the church year already more had been contributed to the benevolences than during any entire year in the history of the church, and at the present rate the benevolent quota will be fully reached and this year's contributions alone will exceed the five years preceding the present pastorate. The annual union communion of the Hull Memorial, Independent and First Churches was held in the last named on the evening of the First Sunday administered by the three pastors and sessions, and the offering was given to Presbyterial Home Missions.

FLORIDA.

St. Petersburg—On January 12, at the quarterly communion, the pastor, Rev. W. J. Garrison, announced the reception of sixteen members, five on profession and eleven by letter, since the last communion. A new departure has been adopted in having a percenter to lead the singing at all church services. Mr. Thos. G. Makin, of Livingston, Ala., a naturalized Englishman, and formerly a music teacher, conducts the song service, assisted by the choir, with a view of introducing congregational singing in this church. This congregation has recently set a good example to others, and shown its appreciation of its faithful and efficient pastor by increasing his salary thirty per cent. E. J. Young.

TEXAS.

Crockett—This church in the Christmas holidays remembered the pastor with many tokens of kindness, and through the efforts of the deacons have paid up the salary and added one hundred dollars extra. This pastorate has extended through forty-eight years.

Austin—First Southern Church—This church as a thank offering for peace, and at the same time as its Christmas offering unto God, raised in December the outstanding indebtedness on the new Sunday School rooms, and the manse, amounting to $8,100.

A monthly Sunday School Workers' lunch and conference throughout 1918 proved a pleasant and profitable adventure. A systematic and sustained service was rendered last year to the 5,000 soldiers in and near the city. This included inviting to dinner every soldier who came to our Sunday morning service. The church adopted definite and somewhat detailed goals last September for the six months ending March 31, 1919. In striving to attain these goals, January and February are being used chiefly in a regular-service evangelistic campaign, or as it is called, an enlistment campaign. In these two months, every organization of the church in every service will combine and specialize in an effort to reach the unconverted, and also the unattached Presbyterian residents of our city. "Brethren pray for us" in this endeavor.

VIRGINIA.

Lexington—Sunday morning, December 5, the session received on profession of faith a young married woman and five girls. All but one of these were baptized at the morning service. The next Sunday, December 12, a mature man made his public profession, and was received into full membership.

The deacons' quarterly report for October, November and December was in the pews December 12, showing contributions of $1,487 for our own expenses, and $1,510 for benevolences, not including the Sunday School Christmas offering of nearly $95 for the Lynchburg Orphanage.

The settlement home was not a great distance from the Lee cottage, and as Martha passed late one evening she saw through the lighted window a class of girls engaged in all sorts of fancy work. An idea that appealed to her practical little brain took such forceful possession of her as to set her heart in a joyful flutter, and every nerve a-tingle with eagerness. Her tired feet took wings, and she burst in upon her mother like an ecstatic breeze.

"Oh, mother, mother, I have such a splendid idea!" she cried, throwing her arms about Mrs. Lee and kissing her on both cheeks. "Only promise me, mother mine, that I may carry it out and I'll tell you what it is."

"If it is right, dear, I don't suppose I'll care, but I won't promise until I know."

"It's this, mother: You remember I was telling you about that lovely pink geranium at Scherer's, and how very much I wanted it? Well, if you'll let me, I'll go to the settlement night school where they teach fancy work, and in that way I can earn the money to buy my flower."

"Make the money to buy your flower?" repeated Mrs. Lee, unable to follow Martha's rapid reasoning.

"Yes, mother; I can learn to do tatting and embroidery and make things to sell; and then, mother dear, that money will be all my very own; now won't it?"

"Of course it will, girlie," her mother quickly assured her; "but I'm afraid it will be too great a tax on your strength." After more coaxing, however, and assurance of watchful care of her health, Martha set off to the settlement school immediately after supper, and the result of her training was five yards of dainty lace-like tatting, made in two shades, pink and white, which her deft fingers had completed in an incredibly short time, and for which on the morrow she was to receive the munificent sum of $3.75. At last the impossible was merging into the possible, with a good bonus for further possibilities, which were racing through Martha's head as rapidly as her brain could divide $3.75 into integral parts.

"Now, let me see," was her mental note, "two dollars for the flower. Glory! It will be mine at last. Then one dollar will buy the white dotted curtain and seventy-five cents the white table cover to set the pot on in front of the window."

With this picture in mind, Martha stopped again on her way home at the florist's window to enjoy the subconscious exaltation that precedes possession of a coveted prize.

"Oh, you beauty! You splendid beauty!" she whispered to the gorgeous plant. "Tomorrow you're going home with Martha Lee."

The tatting was all but finished, only a few stitches to take, and Martha was to deliver it the next morning to her customer and receive her pay. When she entered the kitchen she found Mrs. Lee sitting by the table with her face buried in her arms, sobbing.

"Mother! Mother! What can be the matter?" cried Martha, rushing to Mrs. Lee's side and throwing her arms around her.

"I don't know how I can tell you, girlie," her mother said, raising her head and pressing the young face to her own. "It seems to me I just can't tell you."

"But you must, mother, I want to know. You must tell me," insisted Martha, with womanly firmness.

"Well, it's this: Your Uncle Jim's lost his job, his health is bad, too bad for him to work for a long time, and he and your Aunt Myra will have to come and live with us, for awhile at least. That back shed room will have to be fixed up and papered, and where the money's to come from I can't see unless we use the money from your tatting. I haven't a dollar in the house and they are coming in two or three days."

The color faded from Martha's cheeks, the sparkle from her eye, and in the tense lines of disappointment and care that followed she and her mother were strikingly alike. Her uncle's wife, Aunt Myra, was the terror of Martha's short life. Even from her childhood she had shrunk from her unsparing tongue as if it were one of the plagues of Egypt. And now she was to become a part of her family life, with her incessant fault-finding, scathing criticism and unforgiving nature. In exchange was the renunciation of the pink geranium and the dainty accessories she had planned to buy. Tears sprang at once to her eyes, but one look at her mother's careworn face made her blink them back with heroic determination.

"Mother, if it were anybody but Aunt Myra it would not be so hard," Martha finally said, trying to steady her voice and not to display her overwhelming disappointment. "She has always been the very limit of meanness with me; and to think of having to live with her nagging tongue day in and day out is like being caged with the seven plagues, leaving out the question of giving up my beautiful flower. Oh, I can't! I just can't!" she sobbed, overcome at last by the disappointment in store.

"You shan't do it, then, dearie, if it hurts so much," soothed Mrs. Lee, patting Martha's brown curls. "We'll manage some way so you can buy your flower. You shan't give it up."

In spite of her mother's reassuring words, an uncomfortable spirit of selfishness dogged Martha's footsteps. Somehow her Bible reading and her prayers failed to soothe and cheer her, as usual. She sensed a hesitancy in repeating the words in the Lord's Prayer, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." On opening her Bible her eyes fell on the sentence, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink; for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head." Turning quickly on she again read, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you."

"I'm like Jonah," sighed Martha, "there's no use trying to evade the Lord."

Just as she dropped to sleep her heart's petition was, "Dear Lord, help me to do what is right."

A new little girl faced her mother the next morning at the breakfast table. A new spirit born of sacrifice and renunciation shone in Martha's face, and when she kissed her mother goodbye her parting words were:

"I'll get the paper for Aunt Myra's room myself today, mother, so don't you worry, and we'll fix it up cosy and homelike for her."

Martha's Sunday School teacher, coming in a little later, heard the whole story from Mrs. Lee.

On Martha's return home that evening she and her mother worked until almost midnight papering Aunt Myra's room and hanging the dainty curtains which Martha had planned earlier for her own room, but not a word of regret escaped her lips.

The day of Uncle Jim and Aunt Myra's arrival Martha passed the florist's window to take a parting look at the pink geranium, but regretted that it was missing from its accustomed place.

"It's better not to see it, anyhow," she comforted herself. "I'd want it just as bad as ever if it had been there, so now it's sold I'll have to stop thinking about it."

When Martha reached home her aunt, who had come that day, kissed her warmly and said, "You're a good girl, Martha Lee. Your mother told me how you fixed up my room and how you gave up your pretty flower to use the money for Jim and me. We'll not forget it soon, either, you may be sure. You're a genuine comfort to your mother, too."

These were rare words from Aunt Myra's lips, who did not believe in spoiling people with praise. However, it was not so much her aunt's words as a more gentle and kindly manner that made Martha's spirits rise, and she hoped that after all her aunt would not be so difficult to live with.

Supper was on the table and Martha hurried to her room to remove her hat and smooth her hair. She stood on the threshold in amazement. Her own room had been transformed. In the place of the little set of rickety furniture stood her aunt's best bedroom set, which had been given her as a bridal present. It was newly polished and cleaned and shone like new. In the center of the room was a lovely hand-carved table covered with a snowy linen cloth, which she also recognized as belonging to her aunt; but the cur-

Mrs. Rebecca Scott Powell.

On June 25, 1896, there was born to Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Scott, Jr., of Graham, N. C., a daughter, Rebecca. As she grew into maidenhood, like Rebecca of old, "the damsel was very fair to look upon." When only about nine years old she was received into the full communion of the Presbyterian Church and her bright and lovable disposition helped to sweeten the bitter waters of earth. On the 29th of December, 1917, she became the wife of Mr. Edward Farrior Powell, a prominent and popular citizen of Whiteville, N. C. In her new home she soon won a warm place in the hearts of all. But the life so full of happiness and promise was not to reach its climax in this world. While visiting her parents she was stricken with influenza and pneumonia, and in a few days, on November 24, 1918, in her twenty-third year, "fell asleep," and with her infant daughter rests under her new-made mound in peaceful Linwood. God has called her. Why? It is not for us to question. The mysteries of His ways still remain unsolved, but some time we shall understand. Only the Gospel of Christ, "bringing life and immortality to light," can illumine the cloud of mystery shadowing that grave. Our grief is alleviated by the sweet thought that the flower of her young womanhood was not killed by an untimely frost, but "Our Beloved went down into His garden to gather lilies," and transplanted this lovely one that it might bloom with fairer beauty and sweet fragrance in a purer clime. REV. R. L. WALKUP.

At a meeting of the Assembly's Stewardship Committee, held in the office of the late Secretary, at Montreat, N. C., the following resolutions on the death of the beloved Secretary, Rev. Robert Lee Walkup, who was called to his eternal reward on November 26, 1918, were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased our loving Heavenly Father, in His mysterious providence, to remove from his life and work on earth to a more blessed habitation, with Him throughout eternity, our beloved brother and co-laborer, Rev. Robert Lee Walkup.

Resolved:

1. That in the death of Mr. Walkup, the Presbyterian Church in the United States has lost a most faithful and earnest servant, the Assembly's Stewardship Committee a most efficient leader in the benevolent work of the Church, and we, its members, personally, a dear and valued friend.

2. That we recognize the fact that Mr. Walkup has in the short time allotted to him for his life-work done a very valuable piece of constructive work in causing the Every Member Canvass to be introduced in so many of our churches and in teaching to so many of our people the real meaning of Stewardship.

3. That while we endeavor, sorrowing, to carry on to its successful completion the work so dear to his heart, we realize that we are enabled to do so because of the sound foundation which has been laid by his constant and arduous efforts.

4. That we desire to express to his bereaved wife and children our deep sympathy for them in their afflictions and we do earnestly pray that the God of all comfort may bless and guide and keep them to the end.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Mrs. Walkup and to the Missionary Survey and the Church papers for publication.

James Edwin Scott.

James Edwin Scott, son of R. W. Scott, prominent citizen and farmer, and Lizzie Hughes Scott, of sainted memory, was born on the Melville farm, near Haw River, N. C., in the bounds of historic old Hawfields, on February 15, 1889, and died of Spanish influenza at Camp Humphrey, Va., October 8, 1918, in the thirtieth year of his age.

"Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends." No one of the thousands of young men who have made the supreme sacrifice for their country and for humanity did it more unselfishly or willingly than did young Scott. He could have easily secured deferred classification on the grounds of being his father's main dependence on their large livestock, grain and fruit farm, but he could not bear the idea of his brothers and other young men going and his staying at home, no matter how imperative it seemed, and when his name was called, he waived aside all pleas for exemption and said, "Here am I, send me." His battle was soon fought, his sacrifice was soon made, but none the less nobly and heroically than by those who died on the bloody fields of France.

The writer has never known any young man of more unselfish disposition, of finer religious convictions and sensibilities, or of a more consecrated devotion to duty to his God, his church, his family and his community. He was trustworthy, faithful and true in every relation in life. Of none such can it be said they have died in vain, or before their time, for to such death is but the gateway to the more abundant life hid with Christ in God. "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life," has no doubt been realized by our departed friend and brother.

Tribute by a Former Pastor.

JOHN A. BLUE.

In the death of Mr. John A. Blue, Eureka Presbyterian Church lost its first, as well as one of its oldest and most beloved members, since the organization of the church.

Mr. Blue was typical of all that is noble in the character of the Scotch. A lover of the truth, his speech, though not given to many words, was plain, to the point, and always upheld the integrity of his heart.

Above all things the life he lived before his fellow man revealed the Christian character of one who had simple faith and trust in his Lord and Master.

As a citizen he was a leader, in his quiet, unassuming way, of every movement for the betterment of the community, and for the progress and development of the county.

As a father and husband he was faithful, by precept and example, in and rearing and training a large family; and his sons and daughters now in the noble and worthy lives they are living, are rising up to "call him blessed."

In early life he made a profession of faith in Christ; and was faithful to every duty in a long and blessed life. By the worthiness of his Christian character he was made elder in Union Presbyterian Church; and discharged the duties of this office faithfully and with zeal for the peace and purity of the church.

When the Eureka Church was organized he felt that it was his duty to cast his lot with the new organization in his town community; and was thereby a charter member and elder in the Eureka Church.

For several years before his death he was a "shut-in" by ill health; and it was during the time of his suffering the beauty of his Christian faith shown so brightly. He never murmured nor complained, but gave God the glory in his pain and affliction.

His beloved wife and devoted children are commended to his Lord and Master whom he loved and served so well. A Friend.

Strong are the mountains, Lord, but stronger Thou!

Where beats the tempest on the hither side,

Beneath their shelter bloom the vine and rose;

So do Thy chosen ones in Thee abide.

BIRTHDAY ALMOST ON CHRISTMAS.

Dear Standard:

I will write my first letter. My aunt takes your nice paper and I enjoy reading the nice stories in it. We have sixteen little red pigs, and I have a little pet chicken; we have nine little white chickens. I have one brother and one sister. My birthday was the 23d of December. I was thirteen. We have prayer meeting every Wednesday night and Sunday School and Christian Endeavor every Sunday night, and preaching every second and fourth Sunday. Our pastor is Rev. J. E. L. Winecoff, and I like him fine. My Sunday School teacher is Mrs. W. E. Boze. I like her fine. I have an uncle in France and one in the Home Guards. I hope that my letter will not reach the waste basket, as I want to surprise my grandmother and grandfather.

Your little unknown friend,
Lauradell Priest.

HOW EVA EARNED THE MONEY.

Eva and her mother were watching the men in khaki march by. Mamma's eyes filled with sudden tears as the boys, catching sight of the big flag floating from the house, saluted as they passed. They were on their way to the camp, some miles away. It was a familiar sight, but one that never palled. Eva looked at them till they vanished around a corner, and then knit on a little faster. She felt a great respect and admiration for the soldiers. She wanted to do all she could to help, for she understood a good deal about what was necessary to "win the war."

Presently her mother went into the house, and Eva was left alone on the porch. Her face looked troubled. "It's too bad," she said to herself, "when I want to help so much that I can't do anything but knit—and it's such slow work—I can't go fast. If I only had money I'd buy lots of wool for other people to knit, but I haven't, and I can't get any. Oh, I wish I was big enough to teach school, or earn money some way—I'd do anything!" Then Maggie came out to tell her that dinner was ready. She was absent-minded today at the table, once passing the salt when her mother asked for butter, and starting to put vinegar on her strawberries. She was thinking of what some little girls had told her that morning. Ruth Blake had said that Mrs. Crane wanted to get some one to come and read to her for an hour or two every afternoon until her eyes got stronger. The doctor had said she must not use them for a while. And Mrs. Crane would pay twenty cents an hour!

"My! I wish I was a better reader,"

Amy Adams had said, "I'd go there and read to her all day."

"Well, I wouldn't—not if I was the best reader in the world!" Ruth had rejoined, with a toss of her head. "You couldn't get me to, not if she paid me a dollar an hour. Cross old thing! And nobody'd suit her anyway. Doro!y went there and tried it, and so did Mary Cole—but she wouldn't have 'em."

"They aren't very good readers," Amy said impartially.

Mrs. Crane had come from town a few months before to the beautiful stone house a little way from Eva's home. But Mrs. Crane had not made a very favorable impression upon the children of the neighborhood. They said she was cross as a bear, and she scowled at them when she saw them on the street.

But the thought of twenty cents an hour was very tempting to Eva, and she left the table, still thinking of it. Suppose Mrs. Crane had her come for two hours a day for three days a week. In two weeks she would have money enough to get wool for one sweater, and if she wanted her every day all summer—Eva had to get a pencil to figure up, and the result almost staggered her. "I don't know any other way to earn so much money," she murmured, "and I've got to have it. I'll go this afternoon and see her if Mother says I can," and she went slowly into the house. So that afternoon Eva walked through the big stone gateway as calmly as her fast-beating heart would permit, and up onto the wide veranda? Reaching up to the iron knocker she beat a gentle tattoo—so gentle that it was unheeded inside. But a more vigorous appeal sounded so loud that her heart sank. "Oh, I hope it won't make her mad. I!"—and then the door opened, and a tall colored woman appeared. Colored women were rare in that locality, and Eva stared involuntarily at the turbaned head. But the broad smile that overspread the ebony face was so reassuring that Eva's heart slowed down somewhat, allowing her to tell her errand. Mandy disappeared, but was soon back. "Come right in to Miss 'Liza, honey," and Eva followed her dusky guide through the broad hall into a sunny living room, where Mrs. Crane sat, her eyes covered with a green shade. She did not look as sunny as the room, as she pushed the shade up a little, and surveyed Eva from head to foot. "You look pretty young," she said, in such a severe voice that Eva felt apologetic. "Let me hear you read," and she handed her an open book. Eva was an unusually good little reader, but it was hard, in that stern presence, to read paragraph after paragraph of the long words, and she felt that she was just stumbling along—and her voice did not sound natural to herself.

"Now read this," handing her a newspaper. Patiently and painstakingly Eva read the long article, though she had to spell out some of the hard names in the one about Russia.

"Well, I guess you'll do—you can come," Mrs. Crane presently announced, without giving Eva a chance to express her opinion, but it did not make any difference. Her mind had already been made up.

"You'll have to be here just the time I tell you, and you mustn't ever disappoint me. I can't bear any shilly-shally work. I expect people, young or old, always to keep to their agreements, just as I do to mine. Be on hand tomorrow afternoon, at 2 o'clock, sharp." Then, as if a thought struck her for the first time, she added, as she readjusted her shade, "That is, if you want to come. If not, say so."

And Eva thanked her, and said she wanted to come.

The next afternoon she was in Mrs. Crane's hall as the grandfather's clock pointed to ten minutes to two. "She'll see I'm prompt," she thought with satisfaction.

"You're ten minutes ahead of time," Mrs. Crane said in such a great, big bear's voice that it made Eva quake. Mrs. Crane, seeing that the intended compliment was misunderstood, added, this time in a middle-sized bear's voice: "That's right! Better be ten minutes ahead than one minute behind. Here, drink this lemonade, then we'll find something to read."

Mrs. Crane was not lacking in a sense of humor. The readings weren't all given over to political and Russian articles; she would occasionally point out to be read some funny column over which her deep laugh would be so contagious that Eva would giggle with her. Once she suddenly interrupted a lengthy editorial. "Now let's have some foolishness," and handed Eva a beautifully illustrated book of fairy tales, with Eva's name on the fly leaf. After she had gone Mandy said tenderly to her long-time mistress, "She sho'ly do look lak yo' baby chile, Miss 'Liza, jes' lak yo' said."

Through the long summer Eva "kept to her agreement," cheered by visions of sweaters and helmets that would help keep the soldiers warm when winter came. Even when the mercury soared, or some little picnic was given up, she kept happy, and grew more and more at home in the pretty living room.

And wonder of wonders! One day as she was putting on her hat to go Mrs. Crane suddenly threw her arms around her and kissed her. And Eva wondered for a long time why her eyes were so full of tears.

When the last reading was over Eva almost cried on her way home and that evening she said to her mother as they sat on the porch: "Of course she doesn't

Educational

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, RICHMOND.

The midwinter ministers' course on modern isms, modern methods of church work, pulpit delivery and the like has begun with a large attendance, about twenty-five of our ministers and missionaries being already on the ground.

Young men from the army and navy continue to drop in for the regular undergraduate course. One of these is Maj. Walter G. Somerville, a member of the middle class; and one of the picturesque sights on the campus every afternoon is the long lines of students in open formation going through the vigorous setting up exercises of the army under Major Somerville's direction. The blue Covenant flag, with its great white cross, fluttering from the tower of Watts Hall, seems to signalize the return of these young soldiers from the national army and the resumption of their special preparation for their duties as leaders in the army of Christ.

In order that all the students may have full opportunity to attend the Billy Sunday meetings in the City Auditorium and to study the methods of this electrifying preacher and to give their assistance in personal work, the faculty has made a large reduction in the hours of the regular daily schedule for classes.

In the three services on the opening day of the meetings Mr. Sunday preached to 15,000 people, and thousands of others were turned away from the doors because there was no more room. The force of policemen about the building have all they can do to handle the crush of people at the entrances.

On Monday night ex-Secretary of State Wm. J. Bryan gave his address on "Back to God," in the auditorium. He was introduced by Mr. Sunday.

FLORA MACDONALD COLLEGE.

The November number of the National Geographic Magazine, in an article entitled "The Spirit of the Geographic," has this to say: "At the opening of the Autumn term of Flora Macdonald College, Red Springs, N. C., the president wrote to the society saying that the faculty and student body had read with deep interest Carol Corey's article, 'A Day in the Geographic Wards,' and that they would like to support a bed in one of them. He added that the young lady students, instead of taking the amount from their allowance, proposed to earn the money by doing the work around the college which housemaids had been doing, and thus show the real spirit of their purpose. In response to a letter heartily approving of the plan, their remittances have been coming regularly on the first of each month, and over one of the beds in the Geographic wards in the American Military Hospital No. 1, at Neuilly, a suburb of Paris, there is framed today a neatly printed legend, reading: Bed Maintained by Flora Macdonald College."

So far as we know this is the only college in the United States which has this privilege. Before applying to the National Geographic Society for a bed in their wards, permission was asked of the United States Government to endow a bed at Neuilly, which was refused, with the explanation that this could not be allowed to an individual nor private institution. The Major Vardell Chapter, U. D. C., also contributed to the endowment of the first ward established overseas by the North Carolina Division.

Miss Alla Wright, of Louisville, Ky., who spent the holidays here with her sister, Miss Mabel Wright, who is the violin teacher in the college, gave a very delightful piano recital while in Red Springs. Miss Wright not only teaches in Louisville, but also lectures to the other music teachers there and has standardized music in that city.

Miss Elizabeth Vardell has gone to Crossnore, N. C., where she will have work in Dr. Mary Martin Sloop's school.

The Pink Geranium.

tains, sofa pillows and other dainty articles prepared by Aunt Myra's housewifely fingers were unseen, for in the center of the table stood the long-coveted pink geranium, exquisite in tint, and voluptuous in bloom, to which a card was attached bearing these words:

"To Martha Lee, from her Sunday School teacher, in recognition of her splendid sacrifice.

"He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."—Lull Martin, in Presbyterian Advance.

A SOLDIER'S STOCKING.

Rosabel had knit almost around before she discovered it; then her brow puckered into an impatient frown. What was one dropped stitch, anyhow? She kept right on knitting stubbornly. Isabel's stocking was an inch longer than hers already. She couldn't afford to ravel any out. One little stitch way up in the leg wouldn't matter much; no one could see it.

Perhaps it wouldn't matter at first, but Rosabel knew that it would matter a very great deal after awhile, when the stocking was being worn—that the tiny hole would eat its way clear to the top.

But click, click, click her needles went on, keeping time with Isabel's, and every moment it seemed harder to ravel back to the dropped stitch.

The twins were each knitting a pair of stockings for the soldiers. Grandmother, who had come to visit them, was showing them how. They were very proud of being able to do something to help their country in time of need. Already they had finished one stocking and were well started upon the second. They knit an hour each day and it was surprising how fast the stockings grew, but the longer they got the more miserable Rosabel became.

"Won't the soldier who gets these be glad? Won't his toes be nice and warm? I wonder if it is very cold in the trenches?" Isabel said. They had been chatting merrily, but now Rosabel was strangely silent.

"I'm going to write my name on a little slip of paper and put it in the toe of mine," Isabel said proudly. "Isabel Blair, age, twelve years." Don't you think the soldiers would like to know who made them? I'll be so proud of mine."

Rosabel hung her head miserably. Pride in her work was marred by the knowledge of the dropped stitch. When they were finished she pinned her pair together, so the dropped stitch would not be discovered, and went away where she could not hear grandmother's praises. It seemed almost like telling a lie to accept praise when she knew she did not deserve it.

That night father read to them about the sufferings of the soldiers, of the cold, wet trenches and of the long, frozen marches when their feet left bloody stains upon the snow.

After they had gone to bed Rosabel lay and thought and thought until she could stand it no longer. She got up and went into the sewing room and found her stocking, then she sat down and unravelled it round by round till she came to the dropped stitch, then, after she had knit a little, just to know that she had started right, she went back to bed and went to sleep.

When grandmother knew, she said that that stocking was worth more to Rosabel than it would be to the soldier who was to wear it, for it gave her the opportunity to prove that she had the courage to acknowledge her mistakes and to rectify them, too.—The Child's Gem.

THE PRESIDENT'S WELCOME ABROAD.

Every American, whatever his political affiliations, should be proud of the way in which Mr. Wilson has thus far carried himself in Europe and of the depth and genuineness of the popular demonstrations in his honor. His speeches, pertinent to the various occasions on which they were delivered, have not only been phrased in the faultless English of which he is a master, but they have throbbled with genuine appreciation of the warmth of feeling felt for America by those who greeted him. They have rung true to the great ideals which he had already set forth in the state papers that had prepared the way for his coming.

It is worth something at this juncture in human affairs to have the head of the most powerful nation on earth going from land to land and speaking words such as these: "There is only one thing that can bind peoples together and that is common devotion to the right." "Back of us is that imperative yearning of the world to have all disturbing questions quieted, to have all threats against peace silenced, to have just men come together everywhere for a common object." "Friendship is not a mere sentiment. Patriotism is not a mere sentiment. It is based upon a principle, upon the principle that leads a man to give more than he demands." "I believe as this war has drawn nations temporarily together in a combination of physical force, we shall now be drawn together in a combination of moral force that is irresistible. It is moral force as much as physical force that has defeated the effort to subdue the world. Words have cut as deep as swords."

The soil of both America and Europe is fallow for the dropping of seedlike thoughts like these. The man who sows them may come short of applying perfectly the principles involved to all the problems, domestic and foreign, with which he has to do. He may not always act with absolute consistency. But the world respects and honors a man who sets forth in intelligible and appealing language the great new objectives toward which the nations must move if our civilization is ever to become really Christian. That is why the throngs acclaim Mr. Wilson as he passes up the Champs Elysees and along Pall Mall and through the streets of Manchester and Carlisle. They see in him something more than a graceful and polished orator, an eminent scholar and teacher, and a keen, alert American; they see in Mr. Wilson a man who was able to bring Americans of varying shades of opinion into the war practically as one mighty unit. They see also in him one whose eyes were never so fixed upon the absolute necessity of a conclusive victory that he could not see and consecrate himself and his fellow countrymen to the tasks of reconstruction.

It looks now as if his Scotch shrewdness had served Mr. Wilson well in going first to France and then to England. Had he gone first to the latter country and perfected his understanding with Lloyd George, he might have been accused of trying to overweight the conference with English and American influence, whereas by going first to the Continent, he has shown an equal readiness to hear what the leaders of French and Italian opinion have to say on the mooted question. It is from them rather than from Lloyd George that opposition is likely to come to Mr. Wilson's belief that all nations should be included in the league and that the formation of such a league should be one of the early and major concerns of the peace conference.

But we do not expect to see dissension at the peace table over the essential items in Mr. Wilson's program. He, as well as others, must be conciliatory and open-minded. The plain people in the lands which the commissioners represent desire not only the consummation of a just and enduring peace, but the substitution of a new international order for the old-time balance of power.

We expect such an outcome from the Paris conference and when it comes, we trust that the reactionary elements in the American Senate will find it prudent to fall in with the desires of forward-looking people the world over. It was the Senate of the United States which, by rejecting the treaties which John Hay so carefully formulated, sent one of the noblest Secretaries of State which America has ever had into his later years with a disappointed and sorrowing heart. We do not believe any such fate is in store for President Wilson.—Congregationalist.

PHYSICIAN SUCCESSFULLY TREATS PELLAGRA WITH BARIUM ROCK WATER.

Dr. Chas. E. Walker, a Charlotte, N. C., physician, says: "I have used Barium Rock Springs water in a case of pellagra with very beneficial results. The skin eruption was entirely relieved after using fifteen gallons of the water and condition of the stomach and bowels so improved that the patient could eat and digest anything desired."

Barium Rock Water is recommended for use only in such cases as reliable testimony has proven that it will give relief. If you are a sufferer from indigestion, dyspepsia, rheumatism, gout or diseases arising from disorders of the stomach, kidneys, liver or bowels, if you are in a nervous, run-down condition, give this guaranteed water a trial. Ten gallons only $2.00. If it fails to benefit your case, tell us so and we will promptly refund your $2.00. It is understood that the empty demijohns are to be returned to us prepaid. Address Barium Springs Co., Box A-21, Barium Springs, N. C.

TO INSURE A SAFE DEMOCRACY.

The very diplomatists who talk so much about the points of the peace settlement are as silent as the grave upon the matter which is as vital to the safety and permanence of democracy as any one of the "fourteen" or "twenty-one" capitulations. We hear much about the freedom of the seas, and the interpretation which this statesman or the other puts upon that high-sounding phrase. But why does no statesman mention freedom of worship, as an indispensable feature in any settlement which is to be worthy of the occasion which calls the nations to the council board? America counts Religious Liberty among her chief blessings, and is sensitive, exceedingly sensitive, toward any influence which menaces it. England gained it long ago, and has taught her children in all lands to prize it, and if need be to die for it. France and Italy have not known it so long as to have forgotten what it means to live where it does not rule. Austria-Hungary has never known it. Under the royal and imperial government which has just been overthrown public worship could not be carried on except in accordance with the customs of one favored Church. In that very city of Trieste, which Italy has redeemed, Methodist preachers have been thrown into prison for conducting public religious services. In several of the Balkan States where the Greek Orthodox Church is by law established the same medieval intolerance still holds sway. Its projection into the new era will threaten the permanence of any free institutions which may be set up. Is it not incumbent upon America and Great Britain, which have profited longest and most from this fundamental principle of democracy, to raise their united voice at the peace table in favor of religious liberty throughout all the lands affected by the treaties of peace?—N. Y. Advocate.

THE INDIVIDUAL CAN DO MUCH TO AVOID INFLUENZA.

There is no magic cure or prevention for influenza, but the individual may do much to fortify himself against the disease by observing a few simple precautions that all physicians and health officers have admitted to be effective in guarding the individual against the disease. The North Carolina Board of Health is offering to the public a few simple rules of personal hygiene which, if they are heeded, will be of value in not only preventing influenza, but in lessening its severity in case it is not prevented. The rules in brief are:

Keep your body in good general condition. This is not only the best preventive, but determines largely your ability to pull through in case you get the disease.

Avoid excesses that weaken the body and lower resistance, such as overwork, overeating and overdrinking.

Get plenty of rest in bed, adequate sleep, fresh air day and night, and nourishing food. Avoid constipation.

Keep the hands clean at all times, particularly at meals. Keep them away from the nose and mouth.

Direct contact is a great source of infection. Avoid crowds and close contact with masses of people.

Avoid people who cough and sneeze without the use of a handkerchief.

Last and always, keep away from all cases of influenza and colds.

Preach Money

God's Money

We Are But Stewards of It

Only a few years ago a man could be a respected member of the church and indulge his appetite for strong drink. He could serve wine to his friends—take a drink when he pleased. Such a man is not counted as a Christian these days—he is a backslider if his name is on the church roll,—he seldom comes to church and should have the prayers of Christians.

Another sin has taken the place of this old sin,—that sin is desire for money, greed, covetousness. This sinner is not classed as a backslider, he is respected in the community, he comes to church regularly and often is found taking up the collection. He contributes largely to the pastor's salary and often dictates the policy of the church. He is the man that says "Our preacher preaches too much about money. When I go to church I want to hear the Gospel,—not everlasting money."

Yet that same man is engrossed six if not seven days in the week with every energy in his being centered on money making.

He hasn't time or inclination to go out on a church canvass for funds to send the Gospel to the Heathen; he hasn't a moment in the week that his pastor can command to do a bit of church work; he is too tired or uninterested to think of going to prayer meeting; he is the fellow that needs just one or two or ten or a hundred thousand more than he has,—then he is going to have more time to give to such things, or maybe he is the fellow who wants just that ten or twenty or a hundred acres tract adjoining his land—when he gets that he will be satisfied.

Maybe he is the man who rides in a Two Thousand Dollar car and gives the Lord a Hundred Dollars a year—a much respected man.

Maybe he is the man who is stinting himself, working sixteen hours a day and saving every cent he can, building a fortune, ambitious, respected, the pride of the community.

These men need to realize that the money they are bending every energy to earn, possess as the chief good in life, is dwarfing their very souls, is stunting their growth. They are bound with shackles, so that unless these shackles are broken and they can realize that the Gold and Silver is the Lord's, that the cattle upon a thousand hills is His, they are hopeless. Greed, covetousness, desire for pleasure, has made of life a dismal failure—children of such parents are started out on life with false ideas.

Preacher:—"If thou dost not speak to warn the wicked man from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand."

LUTHER'S ESTIMATE OF GERMANY.

Martin Luther knew Germany well; this is what he said of it: "The Lord God does with nations as I do with an old rotten hedge: I pluck it up and plant another in its place. In former times it stood well with Germany; but now her people are fallen from virtue, and are become rude and proud, and insolent. Germany is like a brave and gallant horse, highly fed, but without a good rider. Germany is a rich, powerful, and brave country, but she is in sore need of a good head and governor. I often reflect with sorrow how utterly Germany rejects all good counsel in this respect." We wonder what Martin Luther would say of Germany today.—Presbyterian Witness.

160 HENS—1,500 EGGS.

Mrs. H. M. Patton, Waverly, Mo., writes: "I fed two boxes of 'More Eggs' to my hens and broke the egg record. I got 1,500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly 21 days." You can do as well. In fact, any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs" and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs, so if you wish to try this great profit maker write E. J. Reefer, poultry man, 6251 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1.00 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be refunded on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. MADE OVER IN FRANCE.

I have never seen the hero of this little story. I do not even know his name. The first I heard of him was months ago in America, when I read something of his career. It was inspiring enough then to hear of that career at a distance; it was far more inspiring to hear of it from the lips of one who knew the man and who is perfectly familiar with his life in France. I pass on to you a little of the story as it came to me.

This man of whom I speak was a New York millionaire. When the war came he felt a desire to have a share in the great struggle. He tried to enlist in the army in one capacity or another, but was refused everywhere on account of his age. At last he tried the Young Men's Christian Association, and, strange to say, the Personnel Board, impressed by his manner, took a chance on him and sent him to France.

When he appeared at Paris headquarters he was closely questioned as to what he could do and as to his life and qualifications.

"Can you run a moving-picture machine?" he was asked.

"No," was the reply.

"Can you use a typewriter?"

"No; my secretary does all my writing for me."

"Can you entertain a crowd in any way—do you speak in public, sing, or play any musical instrument?"

"No."

"Do you drink?"

"Yes."

"Do you swear?"

"Yes."

"Do you gamble?"

"Yes."

"What can you do?"

"I can drive an automobile."

And he was sent to the front as a truck driver—a swearing, drinking, gambling millionaire in the uniform of a Christian institution driving a truck at the front.

He made good from the start. No labor was too arduous, no weather too cold or damp, no danger too great for this erstwhile idler of New York City. Where there were things to be done or dangers to be faced—there he was found, tireless, cheerful, smiling. And he faced it all because he wanted to help.

One cold day he came into headquarters from one of the bleakest, dreariest, shell-swept regions of France. This is what he said:

"In all my life I never was so cold and so tired and so hungry; and in all my life I never was so happy. Here in France I have been remade—here in France I have found God."

Remade by the things he had suffered for others. Does that not recall the great word spoken of Jesus Christ, "He was made perfect through suffering?" Thousands have had a like experience in France. They came to this land of sorrow—selfish and profane and skeptical of things holy and good; they threw everything—life and all—into the conflict—threw it in just to help, just to serve; and in doing this they found God and a new life. God is ever close to him who does an unselfish deed. God speaks to the man whose life is offered up as a sacrifice for others. The way of self-renunciation is the way to God.—Rev. S. P. Pryor, in Advance.

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. All of these diseases are probably due in whole or in part to imperfect digestion or imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection, Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder Troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, will give a permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began to use Shivar Spring Water and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement."

If you suffer from Rheumatism, or from any curable disease, accept the guaranteed offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the Shivar Spring.

Box 4D, Shelton, S. C.

WHAT WON THE WAR?

Many things were mentioned as the great power to win the war. Among them were bread, fat, oil, coal, powder, etc. A recent writer says it was the pestilence that won the war. The German troops were so depleted and so weakened they could not meet their foe. The truth is, all of these won the war, and none of them won it. As a means, they were all used and effective. But the power which alone worked through the means was God, and Him alone. Our cause was right and just, and God is with the right. The true answer then always is, "God won the war." Give Him the glory.

"Who won this war?"

Our tanks, our cannon, and our swords, Say not it was our iron and steel, These could not hold the hordes— 'Twas God!"

What He Wanted.

General Biddle said at a London garden party:

"The doughboy in France has a lot of trouble with the French language. A doughboy sat on a bench in the Tuileries Gardens one day and thumbed a French phrase-book discontentedly.

"'This here book,' he growled, 'don't tell you what you want to say at all. It tells you how to say the uncle of your mother is sixty-five years old, or the sister of your wife has bought a cow, or the umbrella of your neighbor is in the attic, but I don't want to say nothing of that kind.

"'What I'm after,' said the doughboy, 'is a book that tells you how to say: 'Your face is familiar—ain't we met before?' or 'Gee, them eyes!' or 'Little girl, you sure do look out o' sight in that swimmin' suit!'" —Dallas News.

Noblesse Oblige.

The fire-eating colonel had received a letter which consumed him with rage, but this was his noble reply:

"Sir: My stenographer, being a lady, cannot transcribe what I think of you. I, being a gentleman, cannot think it. But you, being neither, will understand what I mean."—Life.

Sergeant (drilling awkward squad)—"Company! Attention company, lift up your left leg and hold it straight out in front of you!" One of the squad held up his right leg by mistake. This brought his right-hand companion's left leg and his own right leg close together. The officer, seeing this, exclaimed angrily, "And who is that fellow over there holding up both legs?"—Chicago News.

Edward, aged six, was sent to a barber's shop to get his hair cut. The assistant who attended to him had red hair.

"Would you like to have your hair cut like mine?" asked the barber, with a kindly smile.

"No, sir," answered Edward; "cut it some other color, please."—Philadelphia Ledger.

The train was pulling into the station, and as the passengers crowded to get off, the hotel man walked up and down, calling: "King George?" Coming up to an old gentleman from the country, he said, while stooping for the man's bag, "King George, sir?"

"No, sir," replied the old man, "you're mistaken. I'm just plain Abraham McCCarthy."—Harper's.

"There we stood, the tiger and myself, in the thick of the jungle, face to face!" "O Major, how perfectly frightful it must have been for both of you!" —Passing Show.

"As One Whom His Mother Comforteth"

I'll work and sing and pray and trust,
And then I'll fail, if fail I must,
But God will lift me from the dust
As mothers lift a stumbling child.

Life's lessons may be hard to learn,
His truths I slowly may discern,
But Love each page will slowly turn
As mothers teach the dullest child.

When restless, troubled, fretful, weak,
The comfortings of prayer I'll seek.
Low, tender words I know He'll speak,
As mothers soothe a fevered child.

Though tempted, sore, by grief oppressed,
I'll sink at last upon His breast
And He will lay me down to rest
As mothers lay a weary child.

And when from balmy sleep I rise,
Some sweet, dear friend beyond His skies
Will kiss my brow and lips and eyes
As mothers kiss a waking child.

Interchurch World Movement of North America.

THIS is the day of great things. A war of worldwide dimensions made extraordinary demands. Thinking and planning, aims and efforts had to be on a like gigantic scale. Armies were reckoned by millions, money by billions, supplies and munitions in figures correspondingly large. Our minds have become somewhat accustomed to dealing with these large measurements. In our mental processes we handle millions and billions with the same easy familiarity with which we were accustomed to handle hundreds and thousands. The result is that we are not willing to shrink back into our former smallness. We are disposed to insist that the pursuits of peace must furnish scope for the same kind of large thinking and planning, large aims and efforts, with which the war has made us acquainted.

Look at the title, Interchurch World Movement of North America. This means a movement worldwide in its aims, and a movement backed by the combined energies and resources of all the churches of North America. The movement has not been launched as yet, but it is on the way. The keel has been laid, and the whole movement is taking shape.

It originated on the 17th of last month when one hundred and thirty-five representatives of the Home and Foreign Mission Boards and allied agencies met in conference in New York City at the call of the Foreign Board of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. The entire day was spent in considering the matter, and a unanimous conclusion was reached that the time was ripe for inaugurating such a movement. A committee of twenty was appointed to outline a plan to be submitted to the Foreign Mission Conference of North America, the Home Mission Council, the Council of Church Boards of Education, the Sunday School Council, the Federation of Women's Boards of Foreign Missions and the Council of Women for Home Missions.

This committee made its report at a meeting of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, held January 14-17 at New Haven, Conn. The report has been published and enables us to see just what is proposed. We learn that the purpose of the movement is to unify the Protestant Churches of North America in the performance of their common task, "thus making available the values of spiritual power which come from unity and co-ordinated Christian effort and meeting the unique opportunities of the new era." While the movement is primarily in the interest of Home and Foreign Missions, it is proposed to broaden it so as to cover all agencies related to the missionary enterprise.

The organization of the movement is to include a General Committee of approximately one hundred, an Executive Committee not to exceed fifteen, a Canadian Council, and State and Local Committees. A thorough survey is to be made for the purpose of finding out accurately the needs in all mission fields, at home and abroad, and what the churches should do to meet the needs of the hour and of at least the next five years. This is to be followed by a campaign of publicity and of education for the purpose of arousing the church to the urgency of the needs of the community, the nation and the world, and of inspiring and organizing the Christian forces to undertake an adequate world program.

When there has been thorough preparation for it a financial campaign will be launched to secure the funds needed to carry out the world program on an efficient basis. It is expected that this campaign will be launched in the Spring of 1920.

Such in brief is the movement now in its incipiency, awaiting the sanction of the participating bodies. Presumably it will be presented to our next Assembly for its approval.

Certainly it is a bold movement, a long step in the direction of denominational unity. If all the churches of North America can be organized for a united campaign in behalf of common objectives, if they can be induced to pool their contributions, and to agree on the percentage of distribution, it will prove that the denominational lines are fading, and that the day of complete Protestant unification is not far distant.

It is interesting to note that the initiative in this movement was taken by our own Executive Committee of Foreign Missions. Our Church has hitherto had the reputation of extreme conservatism. Its role has been that of bringing up the rear. This looks as if we had suddenly shifted to the front and were leading the van. Possibly the time has come for "the last to be first, and the first last."

The Pooling of Ministerial Assets.

This is undoubtedly the age of specialization—though we do not carry it to the same extreme as the professor who regretted upon his death-bed that he had wasted his life by devoting his time to the study of the Greek prepositions instead of confining his attention to one of them.

The work of a large city church has become so complicated that one man is unable to do it all.

In New York the old First, Madison Square, and University Place Churches have united to form an immense organization to be known as the First Presbyterian Church of New York. They have called to the pastorate two men, Dr. Fosdick, a professor in Union Seminary, as the preacher, and Dr. George Alexander as pastor. Each of these gentlemen is a specialist in his line, so it is expected that their combined efforts will build up a church that shall be a specimen of a model church.

Of course this is not practicable except in a large city, where a demonization is strong; but where it is, it would seem to be a sensible plan. It gives to men an opening for the exercise of their peculiar talent.

There are some men who ought to be kept in the pulpit, because they shine only there. Outside of it they are like a bull in a china shop. Then there are others who excel in pastoral work, but they are misfits in the pulpit. You rarely find the combination.

As the weaker churches in the small towns cannot afford the luxury of a combination parson, they will have to get along in the old way, which is not such a bad way after all, if we may judge it by the product it turns out.

In this great church in New York there will be not only a union of preacher and pastor, but also of Baptist and Presbyterian, which, if successful, will go to prove that under certain circumstances oil and water will mix.

The Assembly's Training School for Lay Workers.

We publish in another column a very interesting article about the Assembly's Training School, which we hope all will read. This is a very young child of the church, as far as years go, but few children have grown faster, or have given more promise of future usefulness.

A faculty of sixteen able teachers, serving without one cent of pay, and a large class of students, more than the Junior class any Seminary has had for the past five years, make up this school, whose object is to train young men and women not to be preachers, but to be missionaries, Bible teachers in our Schools and Colleges, pastor's assistants, settlement workers, Sunday School workers and Home Mission workers of all kinds.

Dr. Lingle has been acting as president, but though he can come nearer doing several men's work than any man we know, even to his strength there is a limit. He needs relief, and the school needs as president one of our ablest men, who can devote his entire time to building it up and making it the ideal of its founders. In order to do this, they need an endowment of $60,000, and they are waiting in prayerful expectation for some man whose wealth has been consecrated to the Lord's work, to come to their help.

Such a school in its far-reaching effects is equal to a Seminary, and we are praying that this one may grow to its full proportions.

Time Limit in the Ministry.

A short time ago we were asked by a thoughtful friend why we did not advocate a time limit in the ministry, as our present system was crippling more than one church. We agreed with her that our system was attended with many bad effects, yet just at that time we were not ready to overturn the Presbyterian system of government. We suggested that she put her argument into shape. Recently we received the following brief note, which we present as seed thoughts:

"This Time Limit would lengthen the life of many a minister. It would prize him out of his discouragements and disappointments, and would put him into a new field of hardness and hope and opportunity. He would leave his old field to a man to whom it would be a new field, full of possibilities. Thank the Lord, some of them are learning to shorten their pastorates."

Without proposing a remedy, we are convinced that the writer is correct in her contention that many of our churches are suffering from too long pastorates.

It is true that the session can terminate a pastorate by judicious advice, but few sessions care to incur the odium of the first move, which must be followed by strained relations with the pastor. Then many a pastor knows that he ought to move on, but like Noah's dove, he can find no rest for the sole of his foot, so he has to remain by the bedside of the dying church, though he feels humiliated by the feeling that he is an unwelcome occupant of the pulpit.

We are not proposing any revolutionary move, but we are persuaded that some method should be devised whereby churches and pastors can be fitted to each other, and square pegs put into square holes.

Rev. W. B. Arrowood, D. D.

In the death of Dr. Arrowood, which took place at Sharon, S. C., January 18, the Synod of South Carolina has lost one of its most useful men.

His life may be summed up as follows: Born in Gaston County, N. C., April 1, 1850; A.B. of Davidson College; licensed by Mecklenburg Presbytery, April, 1878; ordained by Montgomery Presbytery, October, 1879; pastor of Walker's Creek Pearisburg and Hoge's Chapel, 1879-1881; evangelist of Concord Presbytery, in Stanley County, N. C., 1882-1888; pastor of Philadelphia and Matthews Churches, Mecklenburg County, N. C., 1888-1890; pastor of Matthews and Sharon, Mecklenburg County, N. C., 1890-1892; pastor of Laurinburg Church, 1892-1899; pastor of Bethel Church, S. C., and also Sharon, S. C., where he was pastor when he died.

Dr. Arrowood was a typical Presbyterian pastor, instructive as a preacher and faithful as a pastor. Possessed of good judgment, a strong mind, and a tender heart, by hard study he became a workman who had no cause to be ashamed. His preaching was always instructive and under his ministrations churches grew in knowledge and grace. Such men form the bone and sinew of our ministry, and give to the ministry a high standing in the estimation of the world.

The funeral services at Sharon, Monday, January 20, were attended by a large concourse of people, including fifteen ministers of all denominations.

Dr. E. E. Gillespie presided, and beautiful testimonials were given by those who knew him best and had labored with him. We know nothing in this life surpassing the life of this country pastor. There, in a quiet way, he labored to bring souls to Christ and to lift his people to a higher plane of spiritual life, so that at his death there were hundreds, over two Synods, who could claim him as their spiritual father.

Though he is now in another world, his influence still lingers and is perpetuated in the life of his son, who is preaching the same Gospel that his father preached, while transformed lives through two States bear witness to the purity of his life and the earnestness of his labors.

The Church Paper Coming Into Its Own.

According to the prophets of the present day, this war is going to turn the church upside down, give us a new brand of religion, and make the mossbacks in theology take a back seat.

Out of the wrecks of the past and the creations of the present, we hope that the Church papers may secure more recognition than pastors seem disposed to give them. We have never been able to follow the line of reasoning that prompts a congregation to organize its membership into classes for the study of missions, both home and foreign, and tax themselves to support a preacher who is to teach them the Bible and train them in building up the church, yet at the same time they neglect the Church paper that combines all of these various kinds of work, and that follows the members into their homes and speaks to them at all times. One would suppose that this important ally would be welcomed and used to the fullest extent. On the contrary, among the stereotyped beliefs of the past is the one that a Church paper is a luxury in a home, and not a necessity, and that even if you do take it, you need not read it. Of course the Church paper is largely to be blamed for this view, because the Church paper of the past was dry reading, and even now there are some that are "nearest of kin" to those of the past. We claim, however, that the modern Church paper is by no means as dry as its ancestors, but on the contrary, some of them will compare in ability and brightness with the best of the secular papers.

We are glad to learn that in the $3,500,000 drive for benevolences the Stewardship Committee recognized what few pastors do, that a Church paper in every home would be a fine piece of constructive work, and that it would do much to establish on a firm foundation their work.

The Third Presbyterian Church of Fort Wayne, Indiana, has gone even further than our committee. They have decided to put the Church paper into every home in the church, and have made provision in their annual budget to pay for the same. We do not believe that we are oversanguine when we predict that such will, in time, be the policy of every wide-awake church.

"God's Plan for Financing His Kingdom."

Doctrinal Sermon Preached Before the Presbytery of Atlanta, at the Fall Meeting, October 9, 1918, by Rev. Robert Ivey, Ph.D., and Published by Request of the Presbytery.

Lev. 27:30: "All the tithe is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord."

IN all things pertaining to religion, the matter of any regulation, in the giving of money, is the hardest matter to bring, with any convincing words, to the generality of folks! In the arguments presented for "systematic giving," one finds that the majority of professing Christians, or, at least, a large minority, will say: "Well, even if the Jews tithed by law, why, we are not under law now, but under grace, and we are to give, each, as the "Lord hath prospered us." That is quoting Scripture, but whether correctly, or not, we will try and answer in our study.

Men are fairly easily reached intellectually—the mind: easier reached emotionally—the heart: but are difficult to reach movingly—the will, when it comes to the feet used, in going to church, and especially, the hands, in opening the pocketbook, and handing out money for the Lord's work! In this latter connection, it is well for us all to consider seriously, that startling Scripture, "Money answereth all things;" and applying that to the exercise of giving, it means, for some Christians, that, the small amount of money given to the Lord's work, shows a decided lack of spirituality!

It is a common statement, that the religion of God is the most practical thing in the whole world. And why not, since it is given to regulate life here, for man's best to self, to neighbor, to God; and to prepare man for the life of eternity?

God, in His mighty, sensible wisdom, knew, that regarding the "giving of money," so-called, some people, but not many, at times, needed to be restrained. (II Cor. 8:3-4): but God knew also, that more people needed to be urged in giving!

Under emotional stress, there are people, who, in that stress, would give too much; but, also, in a dry dust lack of heart, there are many, who must be shown clearly, duty and necessity! Hence, God did not leave men to their own choice, in this "grace of giving," any more than in any other grace, but God has marked out His "Law of Giving," showing the minimum, and allowing any maximum, but providing, that the money be separated beforehand, to avoid any excessive, emotional giving!

God has a plan for financing His Kingdom. He did not leave people in the dark regarding this matter! And this plan, of our God, is one of the most vital, in the whole work, of the redemption of the world. And no one, not an unreasoning optimist, believes, that with our self-constituted (on the part of the majority of Christians), method of finance for the Kingdom, that it is possible that the world shall be Christianized for many weary decades yet:—and no one, not even an unreasoning pessimist, but believes, that if all Christians practiced God's plan, and method of finance, for His Kingdom, the world could not be brought to a knowledge of the Christ, within, but a very few decades! The above two facts must be conceded by any careful thinking person.

The world sneers at the profession, of church members in common, of their love for Christ, and of their desire to see His Kingdom established throughout the world: and the world has a right to criticize not a few Christians in this regard. Those who pray, "Thy Kingdom come," but do not adequately provide for its coming, in God's appointed way, are open to just criticism by the world!

And in this respect, both our heavenly Father and the world occupy the same standpoint of judgment! No matter what one's profession of religion may be, both God, and the world measure one's real interest in this, as in all other subjects, by what one does for it, and one's doing, here, is measured largely, of necessity, by one's contribution of money!

I am not speaking, at all, by way of criticism of any Christian. It is not mine to do that, but the Lord's. And criticism would not be just, at least of many Christians, for there is an excuse for those, that they have either been wrongly, or insufficiently taught regarding this very vital subject of "God's Plan of Financing His Kingdom."

There has been all too little "Thus saith the Lord" about the subject. Most teaching, from the pulpit and elsewhere, has been on the line of "Give, Give," and very little teaching of definite "Payment,"—note what we say, "Definite payment of what we owe."

Free-will offerings must commence after our debt has been paid! And people have been continuously and persistently taught, that they can give money to God! But God says, "The silver and gold are mine." (Hag. 2:8).

And people have been exhorted, and even urged, to be systematically benevolent, in the matter of gifts to God! Think of it! "Systematic benevolence," applied to God Almighty, whose is "the earth, and the fulness thereof." (Ps. 50:12).

The system of thinking, and teaching, so common, has been based on "giving"—everlastingly "giving," and if this thinking and teaching is right, why, the Christian can justly claim the right to give what he pleases, and as he pleases!

Gifts and payment occupy very different standpoints! If one owe a debt, it is a definite amount, and he must pay it when it is due, or be branded as a defaulter; but no man, strictly speaking, owes a gift!

In connection with the above, let us, very seriously note this, that while this is a "giving" age, as never before in the history of the world, yet the Church of God is not getting its rights! Christians are "giving" largely, but not (in largeness) to church work, nor through church channels! We do not criticize the gifts to other objects, for they are most worthy, but it must not be forgotten, that the church is the body of Christ, God's own body, and to God, in Christ, is to be paid that which He directs, in His plan of financing His Kingdom, and that God comes first, and before all else!

Note it carefully, that God's plan of financing His Kingdom is carried out, by the payment of what He demands, and that is the payment of a debt; then, after that, one can give to benevolent objects as he wishes.

We need to stress that, because so many Christians make the plea, that they cannot "give" to the church, because they are giving elsewhere so largely! They are all wrong, soul destroying wrong! God is first, and His demand is for the payment of a debt to Him, and gifts elsewhere come second.

Hence, as we come immediately to our theme, "God's Plan for Financing His Kingdom," we find that it is carried out by the payment of a minimum of one-tenth of our income, to God; and that we may increase to any maximum, to which we in loving, longing desire, may desire to come.

In our study, we find—

First: That the tithe is a universal principle, and not, as many would have it, a Levitical institution. This hardly needs any argument, but one has only to make some research, and he finds that, no matter how old civilization may be, there is always abundant evidence of proportionate giving to God, or to the gods—and almost invariably the tenth.

Away back there in the early dawn of history, we see the tithe, in germ, at least, in the offerings of Cain and Abel. The Council of Seville, we read, viewed Cain's sin, as one of covetousness, in withholding a portion of that which God required. The readings of Gen. 4:7, and of Heb. 11:4, point to this view.

In Gen. 14:20, we read that Abram, returning from vic-

The Message From Flanders Field

IT is a far cry from a battlefield in Flanders to the Southern Division office of the American Red Cross, but it is an even farther one from the pre-war period in a typical English country home to the tempestuous times of bloodshed and disaster and mud-encrusted months of waiting in a front line trench. Yet all of these vastly different scenes flashed before the mind's eye during a recent interview held with Captain Pickard-Cambridge, M. C. Suffolk Regiment, by a representative of the Southern Division of the Red Cross. Each period of time seemed close at hand as each one was reviewed in clear-cut, incisive and vivid words by Captain Cambridge as he talked quite naturally, perfectly simply, and yet with that indescribable atmosphere which the intense experiences of his life unconsciously created about him.

Captain Cambridge was one of the men selected by the National Publicity Department of the Red Cross at Washington to tour the five States of the Southern Division for the Christmas Roll Call. It was no idle selection, either, for there are few persons more able to convey fittingly the message of Red Cross service than was Captain Cambridge; to him each separate experience of the war was almost a revelation and each one was received in its true spirit of importance, while the philosophy of fighting, the ultimate results which he felt must come to the Allies, and the awful individual experiences which he underwent all combined to create a message whose import he was eager to express.

First of all Captain Cambridge wanted to tell, not his own part in the struggle, but the part of those men who labored not with the incentive and excitement of battle, but in the humbler but equally necessary field of the Red Cross helper. The stretcher bearers who faced enemy shell fire without flinching and who bent beneath the burden of wounded men did not even hasten slow and careful steps for fear of jolting the wounded even though a minute's haste might mean the saving of their own lives. "Not one of these men did I see," exclaimed Captain Cambridge, "but hundreds, all working with the utmost caution for their burdens and the utmost recklessness for their own safety; long lines of them stepping carefully over shell torn roads, and often falling beneath the furious rain of iron which seemed directed upon each one. You've read of the immortal 'Charge of the Light Brigade' at Balaklava? Well, picture the charge of those noble six hundred rained on with shot and shell of which the poet tells us but unable to fight 'nobly and well,' and forced merely to endure and be patient. Such were the Red Cross stretcher bearers; and such, too, were the ambulance drivers. I couple both in mind, somehow, for both faced every danger that was forced upon a soldier and both were denied that immemorial privilege of fighting back again."

"Was the fighting back again any compensation?" was one question asked of Captain Cambridge. "Yes and no," was the reply, "at least to be able to fight back relieved a man's natural instinct at self protection and also satisfied his rage for vengeance, but some sorts of fighting did not suit me." Here the speaker paused, and the pause was pregnant with meaning. A glance at the ribbon of the military cross up on Captain Cambridge's breast told its story so well that it was felt useless to ask further questions, but after a time he spoke again. "I was thinking of the bayoneting," he said, and there came a shadow over the fine young face—"That I could not bear; once only I used the bayonet, and I will never forget the time; the memory of it sickens me as did the act itself; and I vowed to myself that I would fall myself upon a German bayonet rather than use it again upon a German foe—and I don't mean I would let that foe escape, but while my pistol was always ready I dislodged my bayonet from my gun and never used it but that once—it was too awful, too savage, too inhuman, and my traditions and training forbade my indulging in this method of killing. The "Tommy," though, seemed almost to enjoy it, and this was one thing I could never understand."

Captain Cambridge was wounded badly; thirty pieces of shrapnel tore his body in as many different places and his account of that happening was characteristically simple. "Yes," he replied in answer to the question regarding the manner of his wound, "a shell exploded not ten feet away from me; I was dazed for a time—how long I do not know, but when I regained command of myself I found that first of all my canteen had been struck with a piece of the shell, and I had no water—for many hours of a blistering July day I lay on the field; apparently left for dead, and just having reasoning power enough to remain still, but suffering untold agony of thirst; worse than all the wounds put together—do you wonder I welcomed the Red Cross stretcher bearer who came at nightfall and who gave me water?"

"I suppose you wonder why I was not killed by that close range shell"—and here the voice of the speaker paused and hesitated; then took up its story bravely. "I, too, wondered that for a while and then I remembered; a fellow officer had been beside me when the shell burst; its force was almost spent on him—it blew his body into tiny bits—so small in fact that for a time I did not understand what the many particles of flesh were that covered my own body—then I knew—it was part of my brave comrade's body" "Did such a passing bring you any sense of sorrow or shock, or did you get accustomed to it, as human nerves will get accustomed to so much?" "I did get accustomed to it," said Captain Cambridge, "but—and here is one of the wonderful facts that the war actually created; it robbed us of the terror of death; it made every thinking man who fought for his country absolutely sure that no bullet ever fired by a German or any other foe, no shell, however huge, and no machine gun, however powerful, had power to do ought but destroy a man's body; that imperishable "something" that was the man himself, never was and never could be destroyed. This was almost a miracle for some of us to feel; I cannot explain or describe it, but it was overwhelming; I know as no other earthly experience could ever teach me, that the spirit of man is indestructible and imperishable and this knowledge is the very cornerstone of the victory which is ours. The spirit of man, typified in the stretcher bearer, the ambulance driver, the Red Cross worker, the officer at the head of his men or the humblest private in the ranks, was the spirit that lead to victory and which could not be destroyed."

And this, after all was the message from Flanders Fields to the people of America and of the world—the Red Cross would pass on the message to the people of the whole world if it could—one gallant English officer has expressed it all in that simple sentence—they could not destroy him—the immortal, the imperishable, the dauntless "Spirit" of man.

Arise and Shine.

By Frances R. Jenkins.

"Arise and shine, for thy light is come,
And the glory of the Lord is risen on thee."
America, hold thou on high
The sacred fire that sets men free.

A world woe-laden looks to thee,
Nor looks in vain, dear country mine.
Soon wilt thou compass land and sea,
With torches lit at truth's white shrine.

Then woe to them that build their thrones
On weeping Rachels comfortless,
On stainless womanhood defamed
And pleading childhood's dire distress.

For to a fierce consuming heat
This heavenly light of thine will turn,
And princes in their pride may find
How light scorned yet hath power to burn.

But to those brave unswerving souls
That strike in the dark for God—and pray,
Thou comest as dawn on the mountain tops,
That ushers in His glorious day.

Opening of Davidson College

Y. M. C. A. Secretary--The Chair of English to Be Filled.

DAVIDSON College opened after the Christmas recess with a far larger number of students than was expected after the War Department demobilized the Students' Army Training Corps. Two hundred and eighty have reported so far and there will probably be a few who will come in yet. The old lines of college life, so rudely disturbed by war conditions, have been rapidly and happily relaid, and the student body has quickly readjusted itself to the regular class room work and the free comradeship of the college campus.

The R. O. T. C. has not yet got under way, due to the lack of an army officer, but it is expected that we shall have this officer in a few days and uniforms and guns soon after.

The Y. M. C. A. holds a much larger place in college life than usual. For the first time we have a real Y. M. C. A. college secretary, furnished at no cost to the college by the War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., with the hope and expectation that it will induce the college to continue the secretaryship when after this term the War Work Council ceases to provide the means. We are fortunate in having as this secretary one of our old students, Rev. Robert W. Miles, of Richmond, Va., who spent several months in France with the army. He has quickly found a warm place in the affection of the students and is doing a splendid work among and for them. It is most earnestly hoped we can retain him for the future, or at least keep a regular secretary for this work. It would assure this if some one would assume the salary. For the sake of the splendid work that such a man can do among these students it does seem that in the Providence of God some person would agree to make the continuance of this work possible.

The president of the college and the executive committee are quietly searching for the right man to take the Chair of English now vacant in the college. A number of names have been suggested but no decision has been reached. At the proper time the names and testimonials will be submitted to the board of trustees and a selection will be made. Suggestions of good men for this position will be gladly received by President Martin. The organic law of the college requires that all permanent professors shall be members in good standing of some Presbyterian Church. The spirit and genius of the college calls for a man of robust Christian life, not passive but active in Christian service. Of course, he must be a man of high intellectual attainments and broad scholarship and it is desired that he shall have won his doctorate as evidence of his scholarship. He must have had sufficient teaching experience and have proven by such service that he is a success as a teacher and knows how to work successfully with students.

Why Say "Local Causes"

- By Rev. W. C. Clark, D.D.

THERE was general rejoicing when the Assembly discarded the expression "Local Home" Missions and divided all Home Missions into four classes, viz: Congregational, that done within the bounds of the single church; Presbyterial, that done by the united effort of all the churches within the bounds of a given Presbytery; Synodical, that done by the Presbyteries of a Synod in their united capacity as a Synod; and General Assembly's Home Missions, that done by all of our churches through the Executive Committee of Home Missions at Atlanta. Why not loyally conform to this plan and use their terminology?

Instead, in the literature, with which our churches are being flooded, there is still constant use of the terms "Local Home Missions," the "Local Causes," etc.

The great objection to such language is that it is ambiguous and unauthorized. It may mean the mission work done by the single church, by the Presbytery or by the Synod, or by all of these combined, or it may include all the benevolent contributions of either church, Presbytery, or Synod, to any and all causes except the Assembly's causes, or it may mean all the benevolent work (whether for missions, colleges, orphanages or the poor) of the single church.

The writer was recently called to explain this subject to an intelligent body of ladies, and when he gave the classification authorized by the Assembly and told them there was no such thing as "Local Home Missions," he was told that it was "Local Causes" on their chart and was asked under what head contributions for the poor were to be placed, and was told that the full percentage of each of the Assembly's Causes must be sent out of each dollar, leaving nothing for Presbyterial Home Missions unless it had been taken out beforehand, which may have been done in this case.

There is not only confusion but a belittling of the work done by congregation, Presbytery and Synod by lumping all causes of all of these bodies under one head of "Local Causes" and assigning to them all 40 per cent of the total of benevolent funds. The only fair way is to divide each dollar, not expressly designated, between all the Benevolent Causes. This is what is being done by many churches, but many other churches and individuals are being confused by the use of language not authorized by the Assembly. It is hoped that those issuing the literature may conform to the action of the Assembly and thus avoid confusion in the minds of those who love the church and desire to have all of the Benevolent Causes clearly presented to our people and given their percentage of benevolent contributions.

The General Assembly's Training School, Richmond, Va.

SEVEN new students have applied for admission into the Training School since Christmas. Four of these are on the ground and at work. The other three expect to arrive in a few days. This makes thirty-three new students for the year who are taking full courses of study. It will probably interest the readers of the Standard to know that nine of these new students are from North Carolina and that North Carolina has a larger number of students in the Training School than any other State. The thirty-three new students represent eleven States and one foreign country. Besides the regular students there are quite a number of students who are taking special courses. There are ten members of the Senior class who will be ready to take positions at the close of the Training School on May 8.

A number of young men who are now in the army but hope to be mustered out soon have written saying that they expect to give their lives to definite Christian service and wish to know if they can find courses in the Training School that will fit them for such service. We are happy to say that there are just such courses and that the Training School is prepared to meet the needs of young men who wish to give their lives to definite Christian service as lay workers. It can also be of service to those young men who are mustered out too late to enter a theological seminary and who do not feel quite prepared to enter a seminary, by preparing them to enter a seminary in the Fall. There are excellent courses in the Bible, Personal Work, Sunday School Work, Missions, Social Work, and Christian Doctrine.

Onward or Under.

By Rev. H. B. Searight.

IT is universally agreed by leaders of religious life and thoughts that we are entering a new age. The problems of re-adjustment and reconstruction call for as much, if not more, wisdom and consecration than winning the war. Stupendous opportunities and responsibilities confront the Church of God.

All of the great evangelical denominations are preparing for the new era that lies ahead of us by adopting large and aggressive programs. The Baptists are engaged in a great campaign for Christian Education; the Methodists are raising millions for missions at home and abroad; the Disciples of Christ are in the midst of their Men and Million Drive; and the Northern Presbyterian Church has adopted a progressive program known as the "New Era Movement."

What do we Southern Presbyterians propose to do? Are we preparing in any way to meet the demands of the new age?

The forward-looking men of our last General Assembly, fully realizing the unprecedented opportunities and responsibilities of the times, adopted a $12,000,000 budget for benevolences for the next three years. The churches are called upon to raise $3,500,000 for benevolent causes in 1919, $4,000,000 in 1920 and $4,500,000 in 1921. This is not an unreasonable or impossible program and we must "put it over." We cannot afford to mark time. Only a live, generous, consecrated, sacrificial church is fit for the tremendous tasks of the hour, and without these manly and Christlike qualities will forfeit the respect of the world and fail to hold the men returning from the front.

In one of the dark crises of the war, when England was called upon to gird herself for greater efforts and sacrifices, Lloyd George, her daring and indomitable leader, made use of this memorable expression, "We must either go on or go under."

This declaration is true of our own beloved church. Other denominations are going forward. Unless we bestir ourselves we shall be left behind, hopelessly outclassed and outdistanced in the laudable contest for the Christian conquest of America and of the world.

What Southern Presbyterian can contemplate such a result with complacency?

The suggestion is intolerable. Our proper place, as an educated, evangelical and liberal church is in the van and not in the rear. We must see to it that our church marches at the head of the column.

There is a rising tide in the religious life of America. The Christian virtues of courage and self-sacrifice have been put into the forefront by the stern demands of the war. Millions have responded to the call of duty, and hazarded their all for the sake of freedom and humanity.

In this sacrifice they have found a strange and Christian joy. The people have been educated to give in a large and lavish way. It is easier to raise money now than at any time in the memory of man. The people will respond to a large appeal and rally to a heroic cause. Let us avail ourselves of the conditions.

"There is a tide in the affairs of men, which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune; Omitted, all the voyage of their life is bound in shallows and in miseries."

"And let it be, when thou hearest the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou shalt bestir thyself." (II Samuel 5:24).

Washington, N. C.

Dear Lord, let me follow in Thy footsteps here that at length I may see Thee face to face at the journey's end. May my work be so faithfully done and my loving faith so steadfastly stand that no pain may be hard to bear, no misunderstanding resented, since they prove me Thy servant. And as I look up to Thee for guidance, let some ray of light shine out from the eternal heaven that I may know my toil shall not be in vain. For Christ's sake. Amen.—Dr. Floyd Tompkins.

Behind the Clouds.

By Kathleen Hay.

"Like a river glorious is God's perfect peace,
Over all victorious in its bright increase;
Perfect, yet it floweth fuller every day,— Perfect, yet it groweth, deeper all the way."

The war is over, and November the Eleventh will long be remembered by the world as "Peace Day." For thousands it stands apart as the happiest day in their lives, and for thousands the saddest. Around the latter beat hearts aglow with hope and love—their service pins, in blue, are still theirs, and will never, now, be replaced with the gold. The clouds have lifted for them, and the silver lining gleams through. Out from the terrible battlefield, their loved ones will come home to them! "Over there," old women, and men, and tiny children, thread their way, through the ruins, but with joy in their shining eyes—they are traveling home; or to that devastated spot, that memory holds most dear.

Soldiers wave to them; cheer after cheer fills the air, and music, the expression of glad and thankful hearts, peals forth—for Peace has come at last. But to hundreds and hundreds of others, that gladness and joy is missing. Their hearts are bleeding with wounds that cannot be healed. For out there, in the turmoil, amidst the cannon's roar, their loved ones have laid down their lives. The cross on Calvary seems not so dim to them today—nor that scene in the garden of Gethsemane so far away.

Yes, a great earthly peace has come, and "over there," the songs of the birds mingle no longer with the awful roar of war. "Over there," above the wooden crosses, the poppies wave above those who kept the faith so well. And, what of that peace that has come to them, on another, and happier shore?

"Onward, Christian soldiers!

Marching as to war,
With the cross of Jesus
Going on before."

Think of the joy, then, for the Christian soldier, where from the midst of that battle-scarred field of pain, he was called to answer the last great command to go up higher—

"We would see Jesus—this is all we're needing,
Strength, joy and willingness come with the sight;
We would see Jesus, dying, risen, pleading;
Then welcome, day! and farewell, mortal night!"

In this, then, there will come comfort to those who are so sad.

A little while, after their earthly, starless night—goes by, they, too, will lay down the cross, and join their Christian soldier, who has marched on home to God, to answer the greatest of all roll calls! He has found a peace that can never pass away; not temporary, but eternal.

So, out of the darkness, and beyond the starless night, and the mist-clouds, the golden stars are gleaming. . . . And a peace, that for a time, is veiled, awaits the dawn . . . of which the glory, and the beauty of that sunrise, shall be too great for words!

tory over four kings, met Melchisedek, king of Salem, and priest of the Most High God, and that Melchisedek blessed Abram, who in turn recognized Melchisedek as priest before God, and gave him tithes.

Jacob, at Bethel (Gen. 28:22) vowed a vow to God: "I will surely give a tithe unto Thee."

And a thing to note is, that these incidents are all pre-Levitical!

History shows us that earliest Egypt gave a tithe of the spoil to the gods, as the price of the god's help, toward victory.

The ancient Chaldeans, also, sought to reward the gods in the same manner.

Of China, we find in their ancient literature the same thing.

And ancient Babylonia, from her tablets shows the giving of tithes for her temple worship.

From these bits of history, which are only a portion of what could be shown, we see that the tithe has been a universal principle among the nations, for carrying on the worship of God, or the gods!

Worship was by sacrifice. We do not know the origin of this sacrifice, but we know that Cain and Abel sacrificed, and from the book of Hebrews we infer that the tithe was used to provide for the sacrifice. We know that sacrifice became a universal thing, and we find, also, that in all nations, the tithe was used to provide for that sacrifice. We do not know the origin of either sacrifice, or tithe, (the worship of God, or means for that worship), but both must have been instituted away back there, by revelation of God; and with sacrifice, went the means for it, the tithe—(both going abroad over the face of the earth, and both surviving, even though the origin of either were forgotten!)

Second: In our study we find that this universal principle became incorporated into, and was made a basis, of the Mosaic system of tithes!

In Leviticus, Numbers and Deuteronomy we find the law of tithes. How long the Jews carried out the Mosaic order, we do not know. As far as we can judge, the sacred use of the tithes was early perverted under the kings, and we know that religion then languished, and nearly died out among the Jews. All along, the prophets cried out against the greed and dishonesty of the people, but in vain. Even the captivity did not burn the sin out of the nation.

The people had been taught to "Honor the Lord with thy substance," but they did not. Malachi declared the people to be "robbing God," but fickle Jewry denied the charge. What Malachi denounced, Nehemiah rectified, for the time, by one bold stroke, restoring the old order. (Neh. 13:12).

The tithe had its ups and its downs, until we come to the New Testament times, when we find the tithe principle religiously observed by the majority of the people, but in a perfunctory way.

Third: In our study we arrive at this conclusion, that the tithe, being a universal principle (though incorporated into the Jewish economy) is not to be counted as abrogated, when the Old Testament economy ended, unless it is so stated, or is implied.

Nowhere is it stated in the New Testament, that the tithe is no longer the Lord's.

Nor can it be shown by any fair inference that the tithe is no longer "Holy unto the Lord."

It is true, that Jesus Christ rebuked the Pharisees, who were tithers, and in connection with the tithe; but it is also true that the Lord did the same thing in connection with prayer!

But tithing was not condemned, any more than prayer. It was the manner, in both, and not the principle!

If Jesus Christ had wanted to do away with the tithe, He certainly could have done so, as He did in other matters, such as divorce!

But our Lord never offered any substitute for the universal standard, even as He often spoke of money, and of covetousness. And He said, "I came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill."

Fourth: In our study, we come to this truth, that the tithe, not being abrogated when the Old Testament economy ended, it is universally binding in the New Testament economy!

Hence, we have, now, in the tithe, "God's plan for Financing His Kingdom," as the Jews formerly had the same plan, under God.

The voluntary tithe was recognized, and urged on all Christians, until the sixth century, so early writers show us. Then came the general confusion of Church and State, and the evils that followed that monstrous duality, and gradually the tithe lost its voluntary character, and became a sort of enforced tribute. In that, the beautiful thought of voluntary paying unto God, and giving for God, was lost sight of. One of our missionaries tells of a native, a Christian, and a believer in tithing, who went to a friend and tried to persuade him to tithe also. He failed to convince by words, and proceeded to enforce the principle of tithing by brawn, giving the other a beating. That was "zeal without knowledge." One cannot any more make a man tithe than he can make him pray. One might force a man to repeat words, but that is not prayer, neither is enforced payment of one-tenth of one's income tithing, as God means it. Tithing must be voluntary, and from the heart.

And we need to note again, that the payment of money for God's work is not left to the emotions of men, but God has a measure. Here we are led to answer the misrepresentations of some, who claim that Christians ought to pay to God, even their all. And they point to the communism of the early church. True, the early Christians had "all things in common." This was allowed of God, as some other things were allowed. But it certainly was not practical. It did not work. It was voluntary, as the story of Ananias shows us. But difficulties soon arose, and we find neglect of the poor, and collections asked for in Jerusalem by Paul. Hence we judge that this voluntary communism was only a thing allowed, not ordered of God. It proved a failure, and died, while God's appointed method of financing His work stayed.

Now again, a question confronts us, and note it carefully, "Why does not the New Testament say more about the tithe, if it be still the universal obligation?" This question is often pressed.

An answer given, is the answer so often given to the question about Infant Baptism, that all the people to whom the apostles wrote and preached had been accustomed to pay the tithe, and hence there was no particular need to lay emphasis upon what was a universal practice! Such answer would be sufficient, were it not that it seemed to assume that the New Testament is silent on this great question of the tithe. It is not silent. In the seventh chapter of Hebrews, we find one of our most convincing statements. The writer of Hebrews was convincing the people of the incomparable superiority of the priesthood of Jesus Christ to that to which they were so attached.

The Mosaic law gave the Jewish priests the tithe for the support of religion. But the founder of the Jews paid tithes to Melchizedek, and Melchizedek was greater than the priesthood of the Levites, because, in the loins of their father, Abram, the Levites paid tithes to Melchizedek. And Jesus Christ is declared to be a priest "forever," "after the order of Melchizedek," hence Jesus Christ is superior to the order of the Levites.

Melchizedek is represented as "not dying," which betokens that his office as a priest is perpetual. The tribute to the Levitical priesthood was only a temporary thing. They, as a type, were to die. But Jesus Christ, having as His type one that "liveth," lives forever. He is the fulfillment of the type. And, in dealing with that which "has no end," we find the tithes included. Any claim that the Levitical priests had, was only for a time; any claim that Jesus Christ has is perpetual.

Now note it! Our Christ, as a High Priest, forever, is a "Minister of the Sanctuary," is a minister of the "True Tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man," the church.

And note it (Hebrews 8:3): "Every high priest is ordained to offer gifts, and sacrifices"—(and the tithes made it possible for the Levitical priesthood to do that—"wherefore it is of necessity that This Man (Christ) have somewhat to offer!")

How would He get it?

Remember, He is the Head of the church, always! Then, to carry out His work, He must have the "somewhat" to work with, and that is provided in God's appointed way! It is true that Jesus Christ made the supreme offering of Himself "once for all" for redemption. It is also true that Jesus Christ is the "Head of the Church" and in the work of the church, the support of it, He must have the means!

So we have "God's Plan for Financing His Kingdom!"

And let us remember, the plan makes a minimum, "one-tenth" of one's income. That is an obligation. Also, God provides, in His plan, for a maximum, which is "according to ability," and that is privilege.

To fall below the minimum is to be delinquent, and loses the joy of the true Christian service. It may be ignorance causes this delinquency on the part of many! They may not have been taught correctly. It may be something else. But they lack the joy of life.

Joy ariseth in the awakening of life to the obligation of the minimum, God's minimum! But no person goes into ecstasy in minimum giving, or rather paying! The payment of the minimum is the "must" of life! In Lev. 27:10, God says of His Law of Giving, "Ye shall not alter or change it." But as one reads further, one finds something else shown. "If he change it, it—(the increase) shall be holy." So, a Christian can go from the minimum, of obligation, to the maximum of privilege. The person of wealth, and able to go on to the maximum, is expected of God, as he "freely has received, he shall freely give."

These are days, in which we, as citizens of this commonwealth, have, in loyalty to our country, upheld every vital need: and shall we not, as citizens of the commonwealth of Israel, in loyalty to our country, uphold every vital need? Are we as loyal to our eternal interests as we are loyal to our temporal interests? Does the Kingdom of God engage our heart's loyalty, as the Republic of our present abode? Wise to think it over! Wise to engage as "co-workers with God"—to be fair, and true, and loyal. "If ye know these things, happy are ye, if ye do them."

The Blue Bird.

By John Jordan Douglass.

O little bird with dress so blue,
I somehow fall in love with you;
You are the merriest thing a wing,
Sweet harbinger of Spring!

When all the other birds are dumb;
Ere yet the mocking bird has come,
You charm me with your matin lay,
Blue minstrel of the April day.

Your spirit, sweet bird, isn't blue;
You let the merriest songs flow through;
And so, wee warbler, I insist
You are no doleful pessimist!

Evening.

I know the night is near at hand,
The mists lie low on hill and bay,
The Autumn leaves are drifting by,
But I have had the day.

Yes, I have had, dear Lord, the day,
When at Thy call I have the night,
Brief be the twilight as I pass

From light to dark, from dark to light.

Mrs. Bickett Before the Y. W. C. A. in Asheville.

By Mary Jasper Willis.

It is seldom that an audience has the pleasure of hearing the kind of program that was offered on January 16 by the Asheville Y. W. C. A., under the direction of the president, Mrs. Whitefoord Smith, and her able corps of assistants. The reports given furnished proof of the fine quality of the work and the pressing need for additional funds.

The main feature of the evening, however, was the address of the wife of our governor, Mrs. T. W. Bickett, regarding her recent visit as a Y. W. C. A. worker to our army in France. Few war addresses have been more touching than this narrative that came straight from the heart of an American mother. No mother of a son "over there" could help hoping that her son had felt the pressure of the hand of Mrs. Bickett and heard the loving tones of her voice.

One striking feature of this address was Mrs. Bickett's utter refusal to display herself in a heroic role. She told of her taking the wrong boat at the beginning of her journey, of her sleeping through an air raid which she had greatly desired to witness and of her trip to Chaumont without catching a glimpse of General Pershing. She positively declined to step out into the limelight of her own achievements. The high-water mark of her experience seemed to be an occasion when some officer came to her, saying: "These boys have come back from a charge; very soon they are going out again. Would you like to speak to them?" In her account of how she met these boys and spoke to hundreds of them, some of whom were going to certain death, she seemed to try to sink her own personality in the greatness of her opportunity and her intense longing to put her arms around each one and give him a mother's blessing before he went to the charge. If there were any dry eyes in the assembly, mine were in no condition to take cognizance of their state of moisture!

In listening to Mrs. Bickett, a student of literature was forcibly reminded of some of the great examples of eloquence in the range of English, examples devoid of attempts at oratory or display, powerful with the beauty of yearning love and simple pathos. Two of these that came to mind were the speech of Judah in behalf of his brother Benjamin to Joseph, his unknown brother, and the notable appeal of Jeanie Deans to the queen when pleading for the life of her erring sister, as given by Walter Scott in the Heart of Midlothian. In these as in the addresses of Mrs. Bickett, there were no flights of fancy, no sparkling imagery, no striving for effect, but the power of a loving heart as it lays bare its own throbbing.

The closing appeal to us as Y. W. C. A. workers, following some account of the achievement of the organization that had come under her observation, was that we should rise to our opportunities as our boys had done; that we should send along the chords of our various activities the saving, helping love of womanhood and that we should safeguard the moral character of our young heroes as they come marching back into the every-day vocations of life. This appeal formed a fitting close to an address that had taken us out of ourselves and had brought us into contact with the courage of our boys under suffering and death.

A Correction.

Mr. Magill, in announcing the "Banner Winning Sunday Schools," makes special mention of Bethel and Ginter Park, in Virginia, and Greenwood, in S. C., as having "led the entire Assembly in the offering for Sunday School Extension." As the contest was based on the per capita offering, is his statement not liable to be misunderstood? If Bethel, for example, had given in proportion to the enrollment as Stamps, Ark., did, her offering would have been $1,987.38 instead of $520. With an enrollment equal to about one-eighth of that of Bethel's enrollment, Stamps gave over one-half as much—a per capita of $3.66.

The Gospel to the Jews.

Rev. Norman H. Camp, the Lawyer-Evangelist and Bible Teacher of Chicago, has recently accepted the invitation of the Chicago Hebrew Mission to become its superintendent. This mission has been faithfully laboring among the Jewish people for the past thirty-one years in its endeavor to give them the Gospel. Most of the work has been done under the efficient supervision of Mrs. T. C. Rounde. She will remain active in the work as honorary superintendent, treasurer and editor of the Jewish Era, but Mr. Camp will have charge of the activities of the mission in its five centers with its corps of twenty or more workers.

In addition to the preaching of the Gospel in its mission halls, night classes are held for the teaching of English; meetings are conducted for mothers and for boys and girls, and in the summer time open-air services are held from the Gospel automobile in the different Jewish sections of Chicago.

Through the distribution of Bibles, Testaments and tracts in Yiddish and English, the mission is ministering to the Jews throughout the world, but especially to those in the United States and Canada. A number of Bible conferences will be conducted by Mr. Camp and his associates this year in Chicago and other cities in the interest of the Jewish people.

Any interested persons desiring literature for distribution can obtain it by writing the Chicago Hebrew Mission, 1505 S. Sawyer Ave., Chicago. "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem. They shall prosper that love thee."

Topic for Sunday, Feb. 9—"I Will"—What Will I? Heb. 10:5-9, 19-25. Consecration Meeting.

Jesus kept uppermost and fresh in His mind the purpose to do the Father's will. Lo, I come to do Thy will, He says. The demands might seem to be hard and mysterious, but Jesus would carry them through. He knew that righteousness and final glory lay only in that direction. When the hour arrived for Him to make His body and blood a sin offering for men, He seems almost to have shaken in His purpose as the billows of God rolled over His soul. He staggered in tears and bloody sweat, then steadied Himself and cried, "Thy will be done!" Wonderful Jesus! If only we could be more like Thee, and do the Father's will as Thou didst it!

What shall I do?

I will love Thee, Lord, with all my heart. I will seek to learn to love Thee, and I will continue to seek until I find.

I will trust Thee. I will depend on Thee to be my Saviour, in this poor life and in the untried world beyond. I will make no other provision, and think of no other, but Thy promises and Thy righteousness and Thyself.

I will surrender my will to Thy will. I will seek to know Thy plan for me—all that I must bear and do—and I will carry it through to completion.

I will hold and affirm that Thou art good, good and wise and just, in spite of all that might ever be argued from my trials or by demons to rebut it.

What shall I do?

I will love all my fellow men. If some make themselves my enemies I will persistently ignore it. No ugly traits of human nature shall extinguish or even discourage my love. Jesus knew what is in men, but He loved them enough to die for them while they were yet His enemies; and I too will love them tenaciously.

I will forgive men inexhaustibly. Hatred shall not germinate in my heart. Even injuries unconfessed and unrepented for I will forgive, for Christianity cannot live in the atmosphere that I help to make if unforgiveness rankles in my heart.

I will be humble, helpful, self-restrained, and meek. I will be dependable in action, courageous in thought, pure in heart, and true in speech. I will be generous and noble, at whatever cost; and I will rejoice in nobility as an achievement, though none may know of it but God. I will live my whole life for Christ and for Duty.

What is consecration? Illustrate from the lives of Old and New Testament saints, such as Elijah and Daniel, and Paul and Stephen.

Why ought we to be consecrated? Give three reasons.

How may consecration be achieved? Ask your pastor to help you to prepare an answer to this.

God reasons with man—that is the first article of religion according to Isaiah. Revelation is not magical but rational and moral. Religion is reasonable intercourse between one intelligent being and another. God works upon man first through conscience.—Geo. Adam Smith, D.D.

The Prayer Meeting

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING FEB. 2, 1919:
PRESBYTERIAL HOME MISSIONS—Acts 1:8.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

The problems of home mission tasks are ever with us. They are new tasks, old tasks: tasks neglected, tasks attempted half-heartedly, tasks despised, tasks firmly grappled and in the way of being achieved. The desideratum is the Holy Spirit: His power in us to see that these are in fact our tasks, and to set about their doing with calmness, faith and confidence in the adequacy of the appointed means. We need to be convinced that the Gospel is the Power of God unto salvation. Men are trying to thrust a thousand things into the business of saving souls to take the place of the Gospel.

"THE COMING OF PEACE."

By Elizabeth MacPherson.

Peace comes by way of the battle front;
Covered with blood are her garments white,
And long, long lines of khaki-clad men
Bare their heads to the triumph of right.
She speaks not a word as she gives them her hand,
They have grown to be men—they can understand.

The greedy machine guns' rat-tat-tat,
The hungry cannons' angry roar,
And the murderous threats of the shells all hide
In sullen silence—War is o'er.
To Flanders poppies, with blood-drenched root,
Peace whispers low, "You are bearing fruit."

Crossing the ocean, her luminous eyes
Grow dark with pain as she hears the waves
Trying to sing a cradle song
To the innocent tots in ocean's caves.
She half-turns back—No—that would be sin;
God will settle accounts with the Beast of Berlin.

In the wonderful land of the Western Sun,
Where brass bands and trumpets fill the streets,
Peace speaks as to a little child,
"Would not your music be just as sweet,
If you used the soft pedal, the minor chord,
For the comrades who'll never return from abroad?"

PRESBYTERIAN WOMEN AND THE NEGRO.

The Southern Presbyterian Women's Home Mission Board has for several years held an annual institute for colored women in Tuscaloosa, Ala., to train leaders in Christian and social work. Some of the courses—in the Bible, sanitation, home management, community work, etc.—are given by prominent white women from various States, some by trained colored women.

The attendance this Fall was from eleven States. So successful has the institute been that the church women are hoping for a wider educational work, and land for it has already been offered at several points. Their Sunday School work is also spreading. They have long led the white women of the South in teaching classes in colored Sunday Schools—a form of Christian work in which the first Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, a Presbyterian girl, engaged during the years preceding her marriage.

THE GIVING OF THE MANNA.

Exodus 16:11-18, 31-35.

February 2, 1919.

Golden Text—Matt. 6:11: "Give Us This Day Our Daily Bread."

Israel, when rescued at the Red Sea, and when they saw their enemies dead upon the seashore, sang a song of thanksgiving and praise. We are told that "They feared the Lord and believed the Lord and His servant Moses." But their goodness was like the morning cloud and early dew, it passed away. Three days later when their supplies were exhausted and they were pressed by hunger they begin to murmur and complain, and to regret that they had left Egypt. In answer to their complaints the Lord promised to provide them with bread in the morning and to satisfy them with flesh in the evening. The manna was given six days in the week for forty years and in the evening the quails were brought round about the camp. Many instructive lessons are found in connection with the giving the manna. The Israelites did not know what it was, and when they saw it said "manna," which means "What is it?"

I. Consider the Nature of the Manna.

They knew it was food provided of God, and that it would sustain their bodies. How it was produced and the processes by which it upheld their physical frames, they did not know any more than man now knows how God makes food from the earth, and the processes by which it nourishes the material body. Jehovah can produce food from the air as well as from the earth, and the processes of nutrition He keeps under His own control. From the Scriptures we learn that the manna fell with the dew and was a small, white, round grain, like coriander seed and pearl, that when ground in mills and baked in cakes "it tasted like wafers made with honey." If left in the sun it melted, and if kept over night ordinarily it bred worms and became offensive. To indicate its excellence it is called "the bread of heaven" and "angel's food." That it was well adapted to Israel's needs is proved by the facts that the nation lived on it forty years, and that the generation reared on it in the wilderness was as vigorous as any in the nation's history. But the scriptural significance of the manna is more interesting than its physical characteristics.

II. The Manna Was a Type of Christ.

Jesus teaches this when He says, "Your fathers did eat manna in the desert and are dead." "I am that bread of life. For the Bread of God is He that came down from heaven and giveth life unto the world." There are many analogies making the manna a vivid type of Christ. Both came from heaven and are unknown to the receivers. "Christ came unto His own and His own received Him not." The manna was given to the Israelites when they were without food and in great extremity. Jesus was sent to mankind when without a Saviour and in great danger of perishing. The manna was suited to all classes and conditions in Israel and Christ is adapted to all ranks and races of mankind. The manna was the only bread of the wilderness, and Jesus is the only Saviour provided of God for the human race. Christ said to the Jews, "If ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins." Again it is written, "There is no other name given under heaven or among men whereby ye must be saved." The manna was free and accessible to all classes in Israel, and Christ and His salvation can be obtained by all mankind without money and without price.

III. Human Effort Was Needful to Render the Manna Available for Food.

It must be sought daily by each man for himself. It must be pounded in a mortar or ground in mills and baked in cakes to render it fit for food. We can make no alteration in Christ or in the terms and blessings of His salvation to make it suitable to meet the needs of mankind. But human labors have had much to do in preparing the Saviour for men in informing them as to His character and functions and in publishing to the world His great salvation and urging its acceptance upon every branch of the race and every rational soul. Patriarch and prophet all taught of Him and all the inspired writers from Moses down the ages had for their theme "Jesus and His Salvation." "The testimony of Jesus was the spirit of prophecy." So now the teachers and preachers of Christianity throughout the world are trying to feed a starving world with "Jesus, the Bread of Life." "He that eateth of this Bread shall live forever."

IV. Some Despised and Rejected the Manna and Perished.

They said, "There is no bread and our souls loath this light bread." "And the Lord sent burning fiery serpents and they bit the people so much people of Israel died." If they would not live by God's bread they might die by the serpent's bite. They perished under the judgment of heaven. But if they rejected the manna they would have died slowly anyhow, for there was no other bread provided. The same is true of Christ. If men reject Him, they may die of heaven's signal stroke or by a slow process of decay.

But we may never expect the power to do our work except where the Holy Ghost is come upon us. He takes "the things of Jesus and shows them unto us." That is the channel of power. The church is always being seduced to and some other name under heaven whereby men may be saved. Nothing can suffice except an overpowering sense of the present Personality of Jesus; His grace, his abiding, active, all-embracing interest in sinners. We know then that we have power for our work, that we have the Spirit upon us, when the gracious, saving Personality of our Lord is leading, inspiring and compensating us.

Now there are tasks in our home mission enterprises which do not in any way appeal to the flesh. The work is in fact repulsive to him who has not the mind of the Lord, the heart of the Jesus of the cross—Jesus had the spirit of the cross, the self-immolation of the cross, long before the cross appeared; and He has the same spirit now. He does not, and cannot change. But thanks be to God, we can change: and there is the hope. We need not go on living at this poor dying rate: We need not continually cherish class ignorance and prejudice. We may grow larger with the process of the suns. We may become more tender hearted, more genuinely interested in others, more imbued with the spirit of brotherhood.

We may come to see that we are debtors to people out of our class, out of our color, out of our congregation: that Christ has sheep not of this fold: and it is our business to place at His disposal every possible means to bring these sheep into the fold. Every prejudice conquered, every interest widened and intensified, every power placed by us in Christ's hand, will bring new rewards and blessings, both to us and to others.

Now, finally: every Presbytery has its machinery for Home Mission work. Do you know this machinery? Do you know the chairman of your Presbytery's Committee of Home Missions? Have you asked him to come and have a heart to heart talk with you—with your church, your society? Do you realize that this will help both him and your church or society and—you.

Perhaps you are not a member of any society whose object it is to advance home missions in your Presbytery. If there is one near you, why not join it and do all you can to infuse new energy into it. If none exists in your church, why not at once see to it that one is organized; and then by prayer and faithful, energetic, tactful work, make it an instrument of power for evangelizing purpose in your Presbytery.

"GO TO CHURCH OR GET DINNER?"

Ask nine out of every ten women who do not attend Sunday School or Sunday morning service to come to church and help along by their presence, and they will say promptly: "I'd be glad to come. I wish I could, but it's impossible. You see, we don't keep help, and I have to get the dinner." Or, if they keep help, they must make concessions and let the maid have time off on Sunday, so the answer is practically the same.

That vexing Sunday dinner! It has wrought more havoc during the past generation than downright and open opposition to church services. Always it seems so virtuous to give up the privilege of attending divine worship to sacrifice for the family, and always the women have been willing martyrs, for one reason and another.

Now, one does not have to be an advocate of the "bread and butter and a spread" Sunday dinner, to get to the morning service and to Sunday School, but one does have to have enough religion and common sense to do a little planning and to call things by their right names. Also, one must rise early on Sunday morning. It is hard to convince the woman who rises early on Sunday morning for the sake of getting three or four children ready for Sunday School, getting breakfast and washing the dishes, beginning the dinner and getting herself ready with such help, in all her tasks, as her husband can give her—hard to convince her that it really is necessary to stay at home on Sunday morning for the sake of the dinner.

Only a few Sundays ago a teacher in the Bible school, calling attention to the hardships and sufferings endured by the Apostle Paul, remarked that he always wondered what people did when they read that part of the Bible, after saying that it was impossible to get out to morning services. Yet his own wife, with no children to get ready, blandly said it was impossible for her to desert the dinner in favor of the church on Sunday morning.

Some weeks ago a woman who sends four little children to Sunday School—rather, goes with them and her husband, then stays for the morning service—was telling at a little social gathering how she managed the matter of her Sunday dinner. "I always bank the fire so that it will cook slowly," she said, "and I am not afraid to leave the roast, which I have put in the oven early in the morning. Then I put the potatoes to bake at the last minute and never worry about the dinner a bit.

"I have a dessert of cake and fruit or ice cream, made and packed the day before, and it takes me about fifteen minutes to make the gravy and dish up the dinner. The other vegetable I cook early in the morning and warm it over; and I usually have such little things as a salad, gelatine, fruits, nuts, celery and other things, in reason, prepared on Saturday." Whereupon a woman said at once that her family never would be satisfied with warmed over things. They must have everything fresh and wholesome.

As a matter of fact, the Sunday dinner can be good enough for the king and yet not keep the housewife at home to prepare it. Of course, the growing children and the man of the house like to see a beautifully spread table with a dinner a little nicer than on weekdays, but it is not necessary to take all Sunday morning to get it ready. Even a chicken dinner—that idol before which so many women fall prostrate—can be got ready without all the fuss and stew that some people think necessary.

In many families the chicken is started in the early morning and allowed to look after itself over a safe fire until the family gets home, while in others young chicken is cooked after the family returns. Very frequently I have cooked young chicken in forty minutes after coming from church service, but everything was at hand and ready to put on the stove. If a late breakfast is served the family can wait a few minutes for its dinner. We all help with the dinner in various ways and enjoy being together.

There are women who will do without the comfort and help and inspiration of the morning services rather than go home and change clothes, but there are others who know that dinner an hour late hurts no one and that changing one's frock on getting home is at least not to be compared with the sufferings people endured to make morning services possible for the present generation.

No, the Sunday dinner need not be a vexing problem if all the ladies will go at it in a common sense way. It can be as elaborate as the purse will allow and the ability of the cook permit, but it need not take up an entire morning to prepare it.—Hilda Richmond, in The Continent.

FAITH'S FUNCTION.

Faith's function is to believe that God is good. We know of a certainty from nature that declares His glory and from His plain historical providences that He is great and glorious. But it is faith that must hold that He is good,—good, yes, to you, in spite of how things seem. This is the very pith and marrow of faith. Let us never doubt God's love. In other words, let our faith never die. Let us be sure that the more grievously He tries us the more greatly He is honoring us to verify His faith in us that we can stand where He knows others would break. Do we think enough about God's faith in us? Stand, dear sorrowing one, beside Abraham and Job, and ring it clear that though He slay you yet will you trust Him and believe that He is good, and that He will show it in the end. This is faith's function, beloved. If faith fails in this it fails in all. If it does this, it does everything—it is victorious.—Bulletin of First Church, Mooresville, N. C.

SECLUSION.

"Enter into thy closet and when thou hast shut thy door, pray." If it is a small door to a small closet for a small man the operation may be easy. To find privacy for a small man with few interruptions involves no great forethought. For a person of ability, however, the problem is intricate. Office hours for patients, calling hours for those who must be visited in their homes, demands of a growing family and pressing public service now—how these exhaust the calendar of a month and make the schedule of a day as complicated as a suburban timetable. "Oh, shut thy door" is not as easy as it looks. The crowd of cares and the careworn must not monopolize the minutes for devotion. It is not waste of time to replenish a storage battery. It is not waste of time to eat a meal leisurely that the doctor himself may be at his best. It is not waste of time to spend a period with God, whose "reward thee openly" means spiritual compensation in power to do, to bear, to achieve in the realm of spirit. "Shut thy door," for no persons can do it for you. It is like your mouth, much at your own disposal. John Mott says: "An alarming weakness among Christians is that we are producing Christian activities faster than we are producing Christian experience and Christian faith."—Christian Intelligencer.

REAL RELIGION.

If our religion is clothed in terms of clouds and thick darkness, if it makes us sad and dyspeptic, I beg leave to remind you that we have not yet found real religion. If the minister of a church leaves a wake of sadness behind him, he has not yet been entirely converted to the religion of his Master. Phillips Brooks had a note of joy in his life, as he had in his sermons. During his lifetime this sentence was published in a Boston newspaper: 'Phillips Brooks passed through Pie Alley today, and the place was bathed in sunshine for half an hour.'—From "The Joy Maker," by A. Eugene Bartlett, D.D.

PERSONAL.

Rev. R. T. Chafer has been granted a two months' furlough from the Army Y. M. C. A. work in which he is engaged. During this time he may be addressed at Crescent City, Fla.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rock Hill—Ebenezer Church—Rev. J. C. Bailey, of Liberty, S. C., who was recently called to the pastorate of this church and who accepted the call, has already entered upon his work here.

Charleston—Knox Church—A beautiful Christmas service was held in the Sunday School. Instead of having our usual Christmas tree and receiving presents we had the “White Gift” service. An interesting program was carried out. The gifts of the children and friends amounted in value to about $50, which was sent on the following day to Thornwell Orphanage. The children seemed to realize as never before that “it is more blessed to give than to receive.” The enrollment of our school as revised is 125. Knox Church also has a good Christian Endeavor Society and a well organized and working Woman's Auxiliary. We are putting on an evangelistic program which will culminate in the coming of Rev. W. H. Miley, D.D., in April. At the quarterly communion the first Sabbath of January three names were read by the pastor as recent additions.—Christian Observer.

St. Matthews—Rev. Daniel Iverson resumed his pastorate here January 1. The church kindly gave him leave of absence for the period of the war to do work among the soldiers. Mr. Iverson first served as Presbyterian camp pastor and later accepted the position of camp religious director for the Y. M. C. A. at Camp Greene, N. C., which position he held for the rest of his stay in war work.

During the pastor's absence, Rev. J. R. McGregor, a Senior of Columbia Theological Seminary, supplied the pulpit most acceptably.

It was a very happy crowd that pounded the manse here on New Year's night. Shortly after dusk, quite a large crowd gathered and showered us with many things. Almost all the families of the church were represented in the gathering. All sorts of games were played after the shower and in spite of the fact that many were mature in years, they were all young people in spirit. One of the features of the evening was an impromptu spelling bee.

After the evening of games and fun, short talks were made by different members of the congregation appropriate to the occasion. At the request of the party, the pastor then gave

The Synod's Home Mission Work and the Sunday Schools.

Do you know what our Sunday School work owes to Synodical Home Missions? 186 Sunday Schools have been organized in the Synod's mission work, more than one-third of the total number now in the Synod (485).

Synod directs that a collection be taken in each Sunday School in its bounds, in January, for this work.

What about your school? Will you do it?

38 men were engaged. They reported 693 additions to the Presbyterian Church on profession, being nearly one-third of the total number in all of the churches of the Synod. 12 Sunday Schools and 3 churches were organized.

A much enlarged work this year.

CALLED MEETING—MECKLENBURG PRESBYTERY.

Mecklenburg Presbytery in called meeting on Monday, January 27, with an unusually large attendance, empowered the Board of Trustees of Queens College to raise, in the Presbytery outside of Charlotte, the sum of $50,000 as a minimum, with the understanding that a supplemental canvass will be made in Charlotte.

This amount is to equip Queens College for its work.

Dr. Melvin, with his three associates, Messrs. Beattie, Hunter and Axson, will conduct this canvass. These brethren come with the highest endorsement from those among whom they have labored. Their business address while in Charlotte will be 1218 Realty Bldg.

We trust that they will receive every assistance from pastors and that the church will liberally respond.

some of his experiences in camp. Light refreshments were served by Mrs. Iverson.

We appreciate the many good things given us by the members of the church at this pounding, and also the practical and valuable gifts of the Yuletide season. But more than the gifts, we appreciate the beautiful spirit and love that prompted these gifts. It is a privilege and a pleasure to serve such a congregation as that of the church here.

D. Iverson.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Kings Mountain—This church on January 19 voted to call a pastor for his full time. Heretofore it has been grouped with Bessemer City and Long Creek Churches.

Henderson—The pastor, Rev. R. A. White, is at present delivering a series of lectures, to continue for several Sabbaths, on Church Government. These lectures are primarily for the Men's Bible Class, but the ladies' class and all the officers of the church are attending and getting the benefit of these informing addresses.

Union Mills—Mr. R. F. Tate was ordained and installed elder here on the second Sunday of January, 1919.

This little one-fourth time church continues zealous for the work though, on account of storms and the influenza, deprived of preaching services for six months. They have raised the support of their minister from $140 to $200 and added a generous pounding. Two family heads have recently united with this church.

Winston-Salem—During the absence of the pastor, Dr. Lilly, for the past two months, during which time he was ill with influenza-pneumonia and later recuperating in Florida, the pulpit of the First Church was filled by Rev. T. M. McConnell, D.D., of Greensboro, N. C. On the 12th of January Dr. Lilly was able to be back again in his own pulpit. He was greeted by a large congregation.

Rev. E. J. Hertwig, of the Waughtown Church, has also been ill with pneumonia following influenza, and is slowly recovering.

Shelby—On Sunday, January 19, Rev. W. A. Murray was installed pastor of this church by a commission of Kings Mountain Presbytery. Rev. W. S. Wilson, D.D., of Lincolnton, preached the sermon, propounded the constitutional questions and charged the pastor, while Rev. T. E. P. Woods charged the people.

In the evening Mr. Woods preached. In the afternoon Mr. Murray was installed as pastor at Grover, where he preaches once a month. Rev. Dr. Henderlite took the place of Dr. Wilson.

Dr. J. R. Bridges, who was to have preached the sermon at the morning service, by special invitation, was unable to be present.

Davidson—Dr. Richards gave notice Sunday that he would begin with the Wednesday evening prayer meeting of this week the study for some time to come of the Book of Revelation.

In his introductory lecture last Wednesday evening, which was well attended, he gave an outline of a number of views in the interpretation of the difficult book, selecting as the one that seemed to him the most satisfactory, that of the Preterists, who find in the opening verse a key to their interpretation—"things which must shortly come to pass," and who believe that the prophecies were to find at least their first fulfillment in the 240 years immediately following. As no one has ever said the final word of interpretation and there is much to interest and instruct in any of the views set forth, it is felt that Dr. Richards' study with his congregation will give a new meaning to most of us for this last part of the inspired Scriptures.

For several years past Dr. Richards has conducted a course in the college open to Juniors and Seniors, on Church History and Government. Hereafter this course will alternate with a similar one in character on Christian Evidences.

To Mecklenburg Presbyterial—At the Synodical, Mecklenburg was the only Presbyterial that didn't report an increase over last year's gifts—instead we had a decrease of $2,208. With a membership numbering 1,663, we contributed $390 to Assembly's Home Missions, an average of 23½ cents per member.

I know the influenza situation interfered with study classes, but I hope our women studied their text-books at home. If you studied "The Task that Challenges," you will never again be satisfied with giving so little to the most important, the biggest cause there is—Christianizing America! "Why save America from the Kaiser, for the Devil?" We are proud of our country, thankful that God used her, in bringing victory, thus making us more responsible, more necessary than ever before, for the spiritual destiny of the world—the spreading of our Lord's Kingdom. This is the task that challenges all Christians, the accomplishment of which is the only reason for our being on earth.

Biscoe, N. C.

Mrs. Robert N. Page,

Secretary Assembly's Home Missions.

The Synod's Evangelistic Work—Rev. C. Conner Brown, our newly elected third evangelist, closed his first meeting as Synod's Evangelist on Tuesday, the 22nd of January, preaching ten consecutive days at the McNair Memorial Church, at Elrod, in Fayetteville Presbytery.

We wanted him to begin his work in one of our large, prominent churches, in town or country. Perhaps it was pride on the superintendent's part. The Lord did not want it that way. The larger places were all closed to us on account of the influenza. The little church at Elrod was the place of the Master's choice. It is dear to the superintendent because organized through his instrumentality some years ago. The ten days' labor brought under God a genuine revolution to the little church. The membership was about doubled. Sixteen were added, six of them by letter, with some more letters to come. A Sunday School of thirty-five and a Christian Endeavor of twenty-five were organized. The double budget system of finance was introduced and an every member canvass of the little congregation was made. As a result subscription to the pastor's salary was doubled and a liberal provision made for other current expenses and the benevolences. Besides this fine work for themselves, they made the liberal contribution of $81.76 for the Synod's mission work, to help carry on the same good work somewhere else.

We are grateful to God for the seal of His blessing upon this first work of His servant for the Synod, and our prayer is that he may be used for a rich blessing in all our bounds. All North Carolina Synod welcomes him to the work among us.

At the time of this issue Mr. Brown is assisting Rev. R. A. Lapsley, Jr., of Tarboro, at the Runnymede Mills there.

ARKANSAS.

The Stamps and Lewisville congregations were very kind to us Christmas, their gifts in monetary value aggregating near $200.

The annual Every Member Canvass was made in both congregations in December. In the Lewisville canvass effort was made to determine her ability and willingness to attempt to stand alone in the matter of pastor's support. The effort was successful, and now Lewisville, for many years dependent on Stamps, has an ambition to have a resident minister and preaching for three-fourths instead of one-half time. Financially strong, the church is well able to care for herself; but until recently her grace of liberality did not begin to be cultivated and developed.

GEORGIA.

Lagrange—Rev. J. G. Herndon, who has been pastor of this church for the past eighteen years, has asked the church to concur with him in a request to dissolve the pastoral relation. Mr. Herndon's leaving Lagrange will be a great loss not only to the church of which he is pastor, but to the community in general.

Waycross—On January 5 the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church held a meeting to consider and act upon the request of their pastor, Rev. R. A. Brown, that they concur with him in his request to Presbytery that the pastoral relation be dissolved. This the congregation declined to do. Mr. Brown has served this congregation as pastor for nearly twenty-three years and was resigning the work in order to accept work for the General Assembly.

Atlanta—North Avenue Presbyterian Church—On last Sabbath the pulpit of this church was occupied by visitors at both services. In the morning Staff Captain Halpin, of the Salvation Army, who was attending a convention in the city, spoke regarding the work. Captain Halpin was one of the pioneers in the trench work of the Salvation Army, and has served eighteen months abroad. Dr. John H. Elliott spoke to an interested audience on "Subterfuges" in the evening.

The ladies of the congregation continue to serve hot supper every Sunday afternoon to 75 to 100 soldiers. The afternoon is spent in song and fellowship and after supper an evening evangelistic service is held in the church auditorium. The soldiers seem intensely interested in these services, and many are accepting Christ and uniting with this church, and then having their letters transferred to their home church.

Cuthbert — Rev. A. H. Atkins, pastor. The pastor preached to a larger congregation last Sabbath than he has for some time. There are two reasons for this: first, several who were sick for some time were there; secondly, some who perhaps were prevented from going to God's house by something else were there. Having a good congregation, the pastor, whether he preached a better sermon or not than he usually does, certainly preached with more fervor and freedom than usually. If people knew how much they help ministers by coming to God's house, they would make a greater effort to get there. But they should go there mainly for their own sake. If they wish a blessing they should put themselves in the way of a blessing. Many who go to God's house in the morning keep their easy and comfortable chairs in the evening. Why is this? They need the evening service as much as the morning service. The preacher needs you more than in the morning, for so many people stay in their homes at night for fear the night air will hurt them. The writer has never yet heard of night air hurting any one. It will help you. Now what will be said next, will not be personal. The thing is not confined to one or two individuals, or to Cuthbert. So many young ladies stay at their homes Sunday evening to entertain young men. When the writer was a young man the custom was for young men to take young ladies to church. But you seldom see young men in the church with young ladies now. My friends, you do yourself, the young men, the people who go to church in the evening, the preacher, and God, a great injustice when you entertain him in your home instead of attending upon the services of God's house with him.

The pastor preached five minutes to the children last Sunday before the usual services and organized a society for children and young people in the afternoon. They seemed to be greatly interested. Some of them promised that they would read the Bible through during this year and that they would attend the morning services. It is a great pity that so few children attend the preaching services. The children of the writer were taken to God's house as soon as they were strong enough to hold up their heads, and were always after that seen in the pew with their mother. But things have unfortunately changed. Why should not children attend upon the services of God's house? Some say that they become weary and that they are done more harm than good.

We do not agree with you. Children as a general thing listen to the sermon more attentively than many grown people. They will become impatient if the sermon is fifty minutes long, but where is the grown person who will not do the same thing. Any child, if it has had any home training, and if it has any intelligence at all, will listen attentively to a thirty-minute sermon, provided it is interesting. God bless all of the children and young people, for they are the hope of the Church of God, and of the State. The preachers are among the best friends the young have. They are better friends to them than the parents of some of them. For such parents do not set them a godly example, and they do not care whether they do right or not. But preachers do set them a godly example and they are anxious for them to do right. Every time they kneel in prayer they pray for the children and young people. Never say anything against a godly minister, for ministers watch for your souls as those who must give account to God. Pastor.

MISSOURI.

Memphis—The influenza epidemic interfered with all departments of church work during the Fall and up to the Sabbath before Christmas. The ban was raised for a few days the middle of November, so the Sabbath School took advantage of the opportunity and held the Rally Day exercises. Though the attendance was scarcely half of what would have been expected, under usual conditions, the offering amounted to $20. The Christmas exercises, however, had to be given up for the time being. It is hoped that "God's Service Star" may be used in a special service later.

On the last night of the old year a congregational social gathering, in the annex, was enjoyed by almost a hundred people. The attendance was possibly cut in half and the plans for the evening were broken into by a snowstorm which covered the deep snow of the week before with several inches more. There were several present who had not attended our gatherings or services before.

Our service flag has thirty stars on it, only one being a gold star. This number, together with those who entered the army training schools and others who went away in the Fall for regular collegiate work, almost robbed our congregation of young men.

Recently a mid-week prayer service was in the hands of the Ladies' Missionary Society. Their regular program, educational on this occasion, was carried out except that the leader called on men to lead in prayer, and on the pastor, Dr. F. M. Hawley, to make a plea for the Survey. Not long since a Sabbath night service was conducted by the Brotherhood. Both services were largely attended and thoroughly enjoyed.

TENNESSEE.

Murfreesboro—The First Church of this city, Rev. J. Addison Smith, D.D., pastor, welcomed thirteen new members at her January communion, all but two on profession of faith. Cor.

Nashville—On January 19 the pulpit of the First Church was supplied by Rev. W. M. Anderson, Jr., co-pastor with his father of the First Presbyterian Church, Dallas, Texas. Mr. Anderson's father was pastor for many years of this church and his son was given a warm welcome by the congregation, not only on his own account but for the love that they had for his father.

VIRGINIA.

Lexington—Near the close of the Sunday School, Sunday morning, January 19, a Bible was presented to each of two little brothers for perfect recitation of the Shorter Catechism. What made it especially interesting was the fact that the presentation was made by their father, Elder Frank Moore, assistant superintendent of the Sunday School. A. H.

Story and Incident

Zero at Eleven.

By Private Peat, in "Association Men."

THERE was a haze of blue smoke in the Y. M. C. A. hut. We were back of the line in France, and it was Sunday. Drill was over. Fatigue for the day was finished. A damp, drizzly fog had turned to a sheer steep of rain. It had stopped our football game, and we had wandered aimlessly back from the field. The Red Triangle hut was lighted inside, though the lanterns were the merest glimmer through the smoke.

We turned in, Bill and I, and found a seat at a bench along the wall.

"I'd better write home," said I, as I accepted Bill's offer of a fag.

"Double blast," said Bill, "not a bloomin' match which isn't damp as —"

"Never moind, myties, 'ave a loight fr' maoine,"—a Cockney—reached over the glowing butt of his fag.

"There's h'agoin' to be a service," he added, but we scarcely heard him. I had swiped some paper from the bundle with the Red Triangle heading, which a husky fellow sitting on my left had spread out on the bench beside him.

There was the murmur of hoarse voices. Now and again a rumbling laugh would echo up to the corrugated iron roof as some one told some joke.

There was a steamy mist rising from drying clothes on warm, wet bodies. We sprawled in ungainly poses over benches and across tables.

Jack Jameson, Alf Sims, Davie Rorke and two others were grouped about the dominoes. A quartette of Scotties were solemnly cogitating in silence over a game of checkers. Davies and McClellan had a chess board between them, and a couple of others had balanced another checker-board on their knees. The table was over-crowded.

Some few were reading. Half a hundred men were drinking cocoa or coffee, and all were smoking.

There was a fellow rattling out "Home Fires" on the piano as a ragtime, and another chap turned "I lo' a lassie" on the gramophone.

An officer walked up the middle passageway. A few of the fellows looked up, but none of the bedlam of noise stopped. No one ceased his amusement of the moment, the piano and the gramophone struggled for mastery of sound.

"Lads, what do you say to a service?"

It was the padre, the officer who had entered so quietly and so without fuss.

"Aye, a service wudna be bad," the Scotties unceremoniously heaped the checkers.

"Been at one Church parade to-dye, blimey if h'l want anuvver," the Cockney protested, but stood at quick attention when the padre sang out—"Any favorite hymn, boys?"

"A psawlm wudna be bad to my way o' thinkin'." Scottie Jameson reared his red hielan' head above the crowd. "What about the twenty-thurrd, sir?"

"Aye, Jameson—The Lord's my Shepherd—"

How did the padre manage never to forget a man's name? The piano player rustled the leaves of a hymn book, but failed in his search. He looked appeal to the padre, and the officer slid on to the rickety music stool.

"The Lord's my Shepherd, I shall not want—"

Weak at first, but how the voices pealed out in the second verse as memory came back and the old words sang of themselves.

"I reckon I koind o' fawncy. 'There's a Green 'ill'," Cockney spoke. We sang it.

"Home, Sweet Home," called out the man from the Worcesters half way through the haze. Not in the hymnal nor yet in the psalter, but deep in the heart.

"Let's pray," said the padre, and he knelt down by the crippled piano. I don't know what he said. "Home, sweet, sweet home—God keep the folks safe!" That is what we prayed.

"Abide with me, sir." It was Cockney again, and he covered his request with a half shamed apologetic cough.

And we sang it.

The padre strolled down the passageway.

"How's the rubber goin', Jameson?"

"Fine, sir!"

"Any progress with the chess, McClellan? Why, man, you'll lose your queen if you don't look out."

"Lend us a mawtch, for the luv o' Mike," Cockney leaned over to me. I had got some matches from the canteen. "This blarsted, bloody smoke gets in me heyes and mykes a fellow do a blinkin' weap!"

Smoke, Cockney? What of the hymn of your choice, old sport? "Abide with me"—what of that?

This is only a picture in rough outline; only a sketch of any Sunday in any month in any year back of the line in France in the Great War.

"Zero at eleven, lads."

We ran a calloused finger down to the bayonet point. We slanted a half fearful eye at our wrist watch.

"Yes, sir—"

Yes, zero was how we expressed the time set for a charge, for a raid, or for the advance of a bombing party.

"Sye, mytes—my Marierann's burfday comes night after Noo Year's. Mebbe me Blichty'll get me 'ome fer Marierann's burfday." Cockney whistled softly and ran his bayonet across his coat sleeve.

"Zero, there's the whistle lads!"

Softly over—swiftly, picking steps through cut wire—dodging shell holes—dropping to cover as a flare goes up. A five-minute rest lying face flat to the earth. There were ion service held at this churchon January 19, seven new members were received. Dr. McFaden was assisted in the service by Rev. J. M. Sedgwick, of Marion, Va., who is at the Union Seminary taking the course under Professor Sleeth and enjoying the "Billy" Sunday meetings.

Union Theological Seminary—Richmond—The Billy Sunday meetings continue to be attended by enormous crowds and no class of listeners are more interested in this phenomenal preacher than the students in the Seminary and the thirty ministers and missionaries who are here for the Seminary's mid-winter course on modern isms and practical methods.

One of the visiting ministers, who has twice before attended this course, says that the instructor in public speaking is doing better work this year than ever before and that he has enjoyed Professor Sleeth even more than Mr. Sunday. That is high praise, as he went on to say that he has never heard a more effective public speaker than Mr. Sunday. Certain it is that Professor Sleeth's work of individual training in the development and use of the voice in the reading of Scripture and the delivery of sermons is of the greatest value not only to candidates for the ministry, but to those who are already in the pastorate, and one of these veterans remarked that, after hearing Professor Sleeth bring out the meaning of a passage, he had resolved never to attempt to read a selection of Scripture in his pulpit again without careful and prolonged study of its meaning beforehand and of the manner and tones by which he could most effectually convey that meaning to the hearers.

The Hon. William J. Bryan's lecture on Back to God, given in the City Auditorium last week to a packed house, was in every sense of the word a great address, perhaps the noblest oration ever heard in this city. The students are deeply interested in the study of these notable speakers and the secrets of their power.

ten of us: the raid to take a machine gun position. Cockney lay next and touching me.

There came a movement ahead. The lieutenant was up and signalling the "come on." We rushed the trench. Plunge—zuck—plunge—zuck! In and out the bayonets flashed, bloody and sharp. Bulky bodies fell on bulk. Groans and shrieks and moanings. The machine gun was ours. We rounded a traverse and Cockney rushed ahead. A shattering "tick-tack-tick" rang out. He splayed his arms, reeled, clutched, fell. A second gun had been concealed in a dug-out entrance.

Cockney reared himself on one arm. A hulking German rushed him, but Cockney got in first, wounded though he was. "Tyke that, an' that, an' that!" he yelled. "Condemn ye—blarst ye—" His voice trailed away into silence.

We got the second gun. It was only a matter of minutes. We gathered up Cockney. His little blue eyes opened as we reached our trench—. "Sye, I got a Blighty fer the Noo Year—Marierann—blarst the bleedin' scoundrels!"

Another silence.

"Sye, Marierann'll be three come dye after Noo Year. She's got the dinkiest wee 'ands—wouldn't like ter 'ave Marierann ter 'ave 'er 'ands cut off syne as little Susette back in Chaunay. Sye, mebbe I'd 'ave a burfdays wiv Marierann.

"Sye,—Marierann—Noo Year—blarst—aw, abide—abide wiv—Marierann!"

The dug-out was very quiet. Scottie spread a sand-bag over Cockney's face.

Marierann would spend a third and many "burfdays" without her Dad. But her Dad had saved her from mutilation by Germans.

Only another picture, folk. Only a sketch in outline as it was of any day, in any week, in any month, in any year, front of the line in France.

"It is more blessed to give—" Whether the soldier of the Great War gave willingly or unwillingly, whether he were drafted, or where, in the countries where there was no draft law, he enlisted, for fun, for experience, for a trip to Europe, for King, for Country, for Flag, for Mother, or Home—it matters not. The soldier gave his all an offering for the safety of others. Individually we each fought for one particular person, for one thing which embodied a common ideal.

Before we went abroad, take us Canadians as a fair example, we soldiers had no idea for what the fight was. Liberty was nothing to us, because we always have had Liberty. Freedom—freedom was our birthright, we knew nothing else. Love, Right, Justice—all these things were ours by right of the inheritance of our Empire. And then we learned, we knew once and forever why our sacrifice was asked, we knew why we MUST be there and there at once, or be forever outlawed and shamed before men.

We saw the ruined homes of Belgium, the tortured, writhing, naked soul of France. We saw mutilated children, ravished girls, murdered women—we saw a vision. It was to keep such things as these from our homeland that we were there—armed men to kill yet other armed men. It was to shield our mothers, our sisters, our wives from a fate such as this; it was to offer our physical bodies a human sacrifice for right.

With that realization in heart and soul we girded on our weapons and went into the outer darkness.

Earthen trenches, water thickened with mud and blood and ice, rats, lice, vermin unspeakable. Dead men's bones, skulls, skeletons, we lived and ate and moved and slept for weeks and months and years in That.

We became rough—yes, we could eat with the aid of a jackknife, our fingers and the cover of our dixie, or mess kit. We saw neither table cloth nor table napkin. We could go for weeks and forget the sensation of a bath other than a dip in some overflowing shell-hole. We slept on floors, in barns, in stables with a ground-sheet and a blanket. A pillow—pouf! An eiderdown—pouf again. Such things were not.

We swore. Yes; day after day, hour after hour. We swore when we marched, when we saw a comrade killed, when our breakfast dixie was overturned by a ricocheting piece of shell, when we were wounded, when we were dying.

Are we less refined now than when we went? Are we coarsened, are we unfit to mingle with those who stayed behind? Are we, who offered our lives for their safety—not from egoism, not from a desire for unwarranted honor—are we unfit to touch the hem of the garment of her whom we worshipped from the hell of France's battlefields, as we would worship a saint in Heaven?

Do you know why we have been rough? Do you realize why our speech has been coarse. It is but the armour of our mentality, the veneer which could be scored and scarred and lacerated, and torn by the sights and sounds of diabolicism, and yet leave the clean sweetness of our God-given souls as God would have them, as God Himself, and not His deputies, will judge them.

I say it in no boasting spirit. I have no thought of self—take off the veneer, peel away the tough hide which has been as a mantle over the mentality of your soldier—you will find a spirit cleared, brightened, purified, cleansed, by the fires of patriotism, of honor, of sacrifice, of love. You will find a heart beating high to the realization of all these things for which we fought and won.

THE LONG AGO.

Oh! a wonderful stream is the river Time,
As it runs through the realms of tears,
With a faultless rythm and a musical rhyme,
And a broader sweep and a surge sublime,
And blends with the Ocean of Years.

How the winters are drifting like flakes of snow
And the summers like buds between,
And the year in the sheaf—so they come and they go
On the river's breast, with its ebb and flow,
As it glides in the shadow and sheen.

There is a magical isle up the river Time,
Where the softest of airs are playing;
There's a cloudless sky and a tropical clime,
And a song as sweet as a vesper chime,
And the Junes with the roses are saying.

And the name of the isle is the Long Ago,
And we bury our treasures there:
There are brows of beauty and bosoms of snow—
There are heaps of dust, but we loved them so!
There are trinkets and tresses of hair.

There are fragments of song that nobody sings,
And a part of an infant's prayer:
There's a lute unswept, and a harp without strings,
There are broken vows, and pieces of rings,
And the garments that she used to wear.

There are hands that are waved when the fairy shore
By the mirage is lifted in air;
And we sometimes hear, through the turbulent roar,
Sweet voices we heard in the days gone before,
When the wind down the river is fair.

Oh! remembered for aye be the blessed isle,
All the day of life till night—
When the evening comes with its beautiful smile,
And our eyes are closing to slumber awhile,
May that greenwood of soul be in sight.

(We publish this beautiful old poem by request of one of our readers.—Ed.)

Are you where God would have you be? If not, come out, and at once, for you certainly ought not to be there. If you are, then be afraid to complain of circumstances which God has ordained on purpose to work out in you the very image and likeness of His Son.—Mark Guy Pearce.

DAVIDSON.

Rev. Dr. Richards preached an unusually fine sermon Sunday morning from the text: "The Word of God is quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword." He drew striking illustrations of its power in the training and in the lifework of President Woodrow Wilson, tracing its influence from the mother who as a child was taught in the old church, Carlisle, England.

The sermon closed with a strong and telling appeal to the young men of the college to make themselves effective units in life by going forth armed with and heralds of this Word of God.

The college has begun the new term under most pleasing and promising conditions. The enrollment to date for the Spring term is about 275, a number in excess of what was expected as most likely in view of the upturn wrought by war conditions and the abrupt in-coming of peace. Quite a large number of the members of the various classes, especially those who had secured commissions as lieutenants and had been assigned to duty at other institutions, have returned to Davidson and quite a number of enlisted men.

The organization of the R. O. T. C. is not yet effected, but it is confidently expected that the personnel of the officers in charge will soon be announced and enrollment of members rapidly carried to a finish.

The ladies of the Civic League were privileged to hear an interesting address this week from Rev. A. C. Ormond, recently returned from Y. M. C. A. work in France and who addressed the club by special invitation. It is hoped that the students will be privileged to hear him in the near future.

Miss Margaret Douglas, of the Brazil Mission, spending the winter here as the guest of relatives, has told interestingly of the work, speaking before the Ladies' and Girls' Missionary Societies of the Davidson Church.

J. P. Price is president-elect of the Freshman class; George Cornelson, Jr., vice-president; McDowell Richards, secretary and treasurer. Joseph Miller, of Rock Hill, has been elected president of the student body.

One of the features of commencement will be a memorial service in honor of Davidson men who gave their lives in the service of their country during the late war.

PRESBYTERIAN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY OF KENTUCKY, LOUISVILLE.

The work of the first semester is now drawing to a close. While the first part of this work was interrupted by the epidemic of influenza, both faculty and students have put on a full head of steam and have nearly made up the lost time. The enrollment, cut down by the war service of a number of the regular and prospective students, has been increasing since hostilities ended. Among students enrolled in recent weeks are Messrs. W. A. Alexander, of Hendersonville, N. C., who had just been ordered to report to the Officers' Training School at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville; V. A. Anderson, in the S. A. T. C. of the University of Louisville; J. W. Jackson, of Mountain City, Tenn., candidate in the Officers' Training School at Camp Zachary Taylor, and R. L. St. Clair, of Louisville, for some months one of the secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. at Camp Taylor. Other students returning from army service are expected with the opening of the second semester on January 15, special provision having been made by which the work of the semester now closing may be covered.

A number of the students have been organized under Mr. R. R. Murphy, of the Seminary, for special work at Camp Taylor in the line of Bible study. The students report a fine reception on the part of the soldiers, many of whom have just returned from overseas.

The students are having, on successive Tuesday evenings, a fine list of speakers taking up related topics. The most recent speaker was President Hemphill, who spoke on the subject of "Ministerial Etiquette."

The news that Westminster College, Missouri, has gone over the top in its campaign for $500,000, for additional endowment, and that the General Education Board of New York had added $75,000 to that amount, brought enthusiastic satisfaction to the Seminary. The relations of the two institutions have always been of the closest; a number of Westminster alumni are on the roll of the Seminary; and three of the Seminary students gave last Summer to work in Westminster's financial campaign, Messrs. W. A. Alexander, C. E. Guice and B. M. Larson, each of whom did splendid work.

The New Year reception at the Seminary, held in the social room on the evening of the 3rd, was a fine success.

Prof. Henry E. Dosker, of the faculty, is hard at work on the series of lectures he is to deliver at Princeton Theological Seminary at an early date.

Not only the Seminary community, but the whole city of Louisville, is looking forward with great pleasure to the coming in February of Rev. Francis Lindley Patton, D.D., LL.D., former president of Princeton College and later of Princeton Theological Seminary, to deliver his famous series of lectures on the work of the church in the present situation. The lectures, which will be delivered under the auspices of the New Era Movement of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., are scheduled for February 11 to 15 inclusive.

News has been received at the Seminary of the marriage, on December 18, of Dr. Robert A. Webb, and Miss May Barrow, of Birmingham, England. The marriage took place in that city. Dr. Webb, who is the son of Prof. R. A. Webb, of the Seminary faculty, graduated at Johns Hopkins Medical School in April, 1917, and immediately sailed with the Harvard Unit. He was stationed for a number of months in charge of the convalescent hospital at Birmingham, England, but has been for some time past in France.

A. N. I. I. NOTES.

The Albemarle Normal and Industrial Institute passed through the fall without a single case of influenza or indeed of any sickness, but on the return of the pupils after the Christmas holidays there was a sudden outbreak of the epidemic.

There were thirty in bed at one time. Undoubtedly owing to close watchfulness and strict care there was not a single serious case and no complications at all.

The people of the town came to the help of the stricken school so that the work required of those remaining well was reduced to a minimum. Daily food prepared for the sick and well was sent in in rich abundance; and a generous check of $50 from the Red Cross went far towards meeting the extra expenses of trained nurse and a practical nurse for several days and the frequent visits of the physician.

We certainly learned, as never before, the blessedness of having friends, and we thank God for them.

FLORA MACDONALD COLLEGE.

Since the beginning of the spring term, Flora Macdonald College has had thirteen case of influenza in her household of 275. Of this number not one case was in any way serious, all have now recovered, and the infirmary is empty. While we are very thankful that the disease has been of a mild character among the boarding students, we mourn the death of one of our day pupils, Janie Smith, of Red Springs, who succumbed to influenza-pneumonia after a week's illness. She was a member of the Junior class and college orchestra, a consistent member of the Baptist Church, organist and teacher in the Sunday School of her church; a young lady of great poise and amiability, a faithful student, and the only child

IN MEMORIAM.

Miss Ola May Alexander.

In the early morning hours of the 9th of January an angel entered the room of Miss Ola Alexander and two passed out to the shining portals of heaven. They went and we called that "death."

There is no death; an angel form
Walks o'er the earth with silent tread,
And bears our best-loved things away,
And then we call them—"dead."

One that stood by her bedside only a few days before she passed away could but be impressed with the deep, unbounded gratitude she expressed to those that had done little acts of kindness for her. We can but wonder what it will be when she meets her Saviour face to face and knows that she is free from sin, and that suffering she bore so patiently for many months here below. We feel constrained to think that she is saying: Eternity will be too short to sing His praises.

Comfort the soldier brother across the sea for whom she was longing for his home-coming, but now, father, mother, brothers, and sisters, she will be watching for your coming on the other shore.

"Sister, thou wast mild and lovely,
Pleasant as the summer breeze,
Gentle as the air of evening,
As it floats among the trees."
Charlotte, N. C.

IN MEMORIAM.

Capt. James M. B. Hunt.

The lamented subject of this tribute was born on May 6, 1842, at the family residence, near the present railroad station of Stovall. Died on November 27, 1918, near Townsville.

At an early age he was left an orphan, when he together with his sister, the late Mrs. Joseph R. Alston, was adopted into the luxurious home of his maternal uncle, the late James Madison Bullock, whose name he bore. As a boy he was possessed of great physical beauty, of compact body and symmetrical limbs, and soon endeared himself to his childless uncle and aunt, so that his uncle in the overflow of affection called him "Roly Boly Boy." This name followed him through life from that time; he was known only as Boly Hunt, and later with prefix of his official rank as Capt. Boly Hunt. This is mentioned from the fact that it is doubtful if a very large proportion of those he came in contact with had any other knowledge of the true initial letters of his name.

After attending the neighborhood schools he was sent to Oxford to classical high school which was presided over by the late Jas. H. Horner. It was here that he was prepared for entrance into the University of North Carolina, at the term beginning July, 1857. With the coming of the eventful Spring of 1861, when in a few months of completing his four years' course, the tocsin of war sounded, and he left the classic shades of the University and hastened to the defense of his beloved Southland. He enlisted in a local organization which in the course of time became a unit in the Second Army Corps, under the immortal Stonewall Jackson, and which was part and parcel the command of the peerless R. E. Lee. He enlisted as a private, was appointed a non-commissioned officer of the company, and at the close of the war had risen to captain. He was wounded at Malvern Hill, July 1, 1862, at the battle of Gettysburg, July 1, 1863, wounded again, and on the 12th of May, 1864, at the battle of Spotsylvania Court House, he received a very dangerous wound, a minnie ball piercing his right cheek and passing under his ear out of the back of his neck, barely missing the jugular vein. This wound handicapped him for life in that it almost destroyed entirely his sense of hearing. To give in detail his experience of four years would extend this paper to too great a length. On the 19th of October, 1864, at the battle of Fishers' Hill or Cedar Creek, in the valley of Virginia, he was made a prisoner of war and held at Fort Delaware until June 19, 1865. Few men who have been so little in public life were more favorably or extensively known, so that this notice will be read with grief by many, very many, who will concur in the sentiment above expressed, that one of the best and most useful men has fallen.

Captain Hunt was a man of strong cultivated mind, clear in judgment and charitable in feeling, honest in principle and upright in life. As a citizen, neighbor, friend, parent and husband he was a model in all that was excellent, lovely and of good report, but his greatest excellence consisted in his pure exalted Christian character. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and for forty years a ruling elder in the Nutbush Church. It would be an endless task to follow his career of usefulness and honor through such a period of years.

He married while a soldier (in 1863) Miss Sarah Ellen Lewis; two sons survived their mother: Joseph E. and Phil L. The latter part of her life made it necessary for Miss Sue Hunt Lewis, on whom devolved the duty of helping her sister to rear the boys; subsequently she became the wife of Captain Hunt. His married life was that of a courtier and his wife the queen, which could not but be attended by other than the most beautiful and far-reaching life of happiness. His wife and her brother, Edward A. Lewis, and the two boys, survive him.

His unostentatious charities which he carefully concealed, well afford a reason for his failure to accumulate a large fortune from his very successful farming attended by fine results. Liberal to a fault, no one, however humble or lofty, was turned away from his charming, hospitable home, which had a widespread celebrity. The mysterious ways of a Divine Providence are past finding out when we seek to unveil the causes and effects to the world of the loss of such an intense lover of his fellow man, for his presence was a grateful addition to any assemblage, great or small. And now after a well spent life in which his happiness was to afford comfort and joy to all within the radius of his circle, his splendid career here is ended only to be transplanted in that sphere above to rest upon the bosom of his Father and his God. For this warrior, accomplished gentleman and friend of humanity, had an unbounded faith in his Redeemer, to whom and through whom he ever appealed for Divine Grace.

"Servant of God well done;
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle is fought, the victory won—
Enter thy Master's joy."

On the evening of November 28, we sadly laid him to rest under the shadow of the old church where his sainted mother and a long list of loved ones who have gone before, have for more than a century assembled for the worship of Him who has loved us and washed from our sins—in his own blood, and opened up the new and living way whereby we may become heirs together with Him to that crown which is to endure through eternity.

JOHN J. LEWIS.

Inasmuch as it has pleased the Lord to remove from earth to heaven our beloved friend and fellow officer, John J. Lewis, on November 14, 1918; therefore be it resolved:

1. That we, the session of Belmont Presbyterian Church, of Belmont, N. C., meekly bow to the will of Him who loved us, and gave Himself for us.

2. That we express our high esteem

BELONGS TO RED CROSS.

Dear Standard:

I'm a little boy eleven years old. I am in the fifth grade at school. My teacher's name is Miss Sallie MacBryde. I like her fine and I think the rest do too. There are seventeen in our grade. I have three Thrift Stamps, and I'm going to get another. I have joined the 1919 Red Cross. I have two sisters, Martha and Virginia. I will close by asking, Who was the most patient man in the world.

A FORD-FULL.

Dear Standard:

I am nine years old and in the third grade at school. I have to walk two miles to school. On bad days papa takes us out in his Ford, and sometimes before we get to the school house we have as many as fifteen children in the car. We have three teachers—Miss Hix Murden, Miss Estha and Miss Lancaster. I have one brother twelve years old and we go hunting and fishing in Black River, which is in sight of our house.

A RIDDLE TO SOLVE.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl fourteen years old. I go to school and am in the eighth grade. Our school has been closed for some time on account of the "flu," but has started again now. My teacher's name is Miss Bryant. I like her fine. I go to Sunday School every Sunday that I can. My father is the superintendent of the Sunday School. I have two brothers and two sisters. One of my sisters is married. The "flu" is breaking out here again, but I hope it will not be as bad as it was before. I take music from Miss Meta Johnson. I like her fine. I will close as I want to surprise my friends. Some one please answer this riddle: Where did Noah hit the first nail in the ark?

Your friend,
Flora McCormic.

BROTHER HOME FROM FRANCE.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl thirteen years old. I am in the seventh grade. My teacher is Miss Mary Bryant. I have two sisters and three brothers. I have one brother that just came from France, and he got his discharge about a week ago. I go to Sunday School every Sunday I can. My teacher is Miss Veta Alford. Our pastor died with the influenza. I take music and I like it fine. I will have to close as I want to surprise my mother.

OLD SANTA WAS GOOD.

Dear Standard:

I see so many nice letters from little boys and girls I want to write too. I am a little girl eleven years old and in the sixth grade at school. My teacher's name is Miss Marell, and I like her fine. I have a little pet cat; his name is "Tab." I have one sister and three brothers. Our little baby brother has just begun to walk and is awfully cute. "Old Santa" brought me a sewing box, a story book, some handkerchiefs, a pretty little picture, and plenty of fruit. I go to Sunday School almost every Sunday. I received my beautiful "cross and crown" pin for not missing Sunday School last year. I am certainly proud of it. My father is our pastor and preaches here every Sunday. I will ask the children a question: What great man of God, in Bible times, made the mistake of getting drunk? I hope my letter is not too long to print.

Your little friend,
Evangeline Carr.

THE REAL PRINCESS.

Once upon a time, in the kingdom of Far Away, there lived a king and a queen who were very sad because they had no child. At last, however, they decided that, if they could find a little maid who could prove that she would make a real princess, they would adopt her as their daughter.

So word was published throughout the kingdom that at three o'clock on every Monday throughout the year their majesties would receive before them any child who believed that she could be a real princess.

And what lovely children came! Some were short, some were tall; some dark, others fair. Week after week they appeared at the palace gate and were admitted by the gatekeeper to the presence of the king and the queen; and week after week, as they went away, their majesties sadly shook their heads, for they were learning that it is a difficult matter to find a real princess.

But one Monday there appeared at the usual time a little girl of wondrous beauty. When the queen saw her, her heart was glad. "For here," she thought, "must be a real princess. Such a face must indicate a lovely heart."

"Do you think, my child, that you could become a real princess?" asked the queen.

The little maid courtesied and replied: "Yes, Your Majesty."

"And why do you think so?" again asked the queen.

The child smiled until she showed her dimples and snowy white teeth. Then she answered:

"Because, Your Majesty, I like only the best of everything. I must wear silk hose and dainty gowns or I am most unhappy."

The queen's face was now quite sober, as she inquired:

"And how does your father furnish you with such fineries?"

"I have no father," replied the child, with a toss of golden curls and a rustle of silken skirts, "but my mother is the washerwoman for the duchess and so earns much gold."

Then the queen shook her head sadly, and the king signed for the child to be led away, for again they were deeply disappointed.

So it went, until the year was nearly gone. Just as their majesties thought they had found one who would be a real princess, it was discovered that she would not do at all. On the last Monday of the year, greatly discouraged, the king and queen sat as usual in the great reception hall. Although it was long past the hour, no child had come, and they were about to retire when a page rushed forward.

"Your Majesties," he said, "there stands without a child named Wanda who seeks audience with you. But she is ragged and unkempt, and I dare not let her enter."

But the king and queen, unwilling to pass by a single child, bade him admit her. So before them presently appeared the little girl. Her dress was torn and her hands and face were scratched and soiled. Moreover, of all who had come, she seemed most lacking in beauty. But she courtesied low as she entered the great hall and knelt before their majesties.

"I ask pardon," she said sweetly; and they marveled at her voice, which was like the sound of running water. "I should not have been late. But I heard only yesterday of the audience that you have been holding; and my home is far beyond the great forest. But as I hurried through the great woods I found a rabbit caught in the bushes and stopped to free him; and a little farther on I passed the cottage of one who was old and ill, and I could not leave her without help; and then I stopped to help an old man who was gathering fagots for his fire. So at last, after many delays, I reached the palace gates."

She paused an instant, and the queen asked the usual question:

"And why, my child, do you believe that you could become a real princess?"

At this the little maid smiled and the queen caught her breath. Nowhere, she thought, had she seen such beauty. And yet this was the same child, ragged, dirty, plain.

"I do not think so, Your Majesties," she responded. "But I come to tell you of one who would. She is poor, but very beautiful, and all that a princess should be. To see her is to love her. And though 'twill break my heart to part from her, I would that she might be your choice."

"But who is she?" asked the queen, "And why came she not here to plead her own cause?"

"She is my sister," replied the little maid, "and as she is very lame she could not walk so far. She would not have me come; but I slipped away unnoticed. Oh, Your Majesties, she would indeed make a real princess!"

Then the king and queen bade her rise and approach them. And the queen took her hand and drew her to herself.

"My dear," she said, "we have already found the real princess. She is sweet of voice, and so kind of heart that the love shines through and lights her eyes. She has thought for all in need, which is as it should be with a princess; and she is of a rare unselfishness. But she may have a sister—a little lame girl, who has perhaps some of the princess' lovely qualities.

"So come you to the palace, little princess, and we will send for your sister, for there is room in our hearts for two."

So to the palace and to the hearts of the king and the queen came Wanda and her sister and filled their lives with sunshine and happiness. For their majesties had made no mistake. They had indeed found the real princess.—By Irene S. Woodcock, in Youth's Companion.

ANY WAY YOU PLEASE.

"Mamma, I wish you'd call the baby in; he's so cross we can't play!" cried Robert one day as he was playing in the yard with his sister and the baby.

"I don't think he would be cross if you were not cross to him," said mamma, coming out. "He does just as he sees you do. Just try him and see. Put your hat on one side of your head."

Robert did so, and presently the baby pushed his straw hat over on one side of his head, just as Robbie had done.

"Whistle," said mamma.

Robbie did, and the baby began to whistle, too.

"Stop mocking me!" said Robbie, giving the baby a push. Baby screamed and pushed Robbie back.

"There, you see," said his mother, "the baby does just as you do. Kiss him now, and you will see how quickly he will follow your example."

Robbie did not feel exactly like doing this, but he did, and baby hugged and kissed him back very warmly.

"Now, you see," said his mother, "you can make a cross or a good boy of your little brother, just as you choose. But you must teach him yourself."—Jewels.

of her widowed mother. Beautiful floral designs were sent to her funeral by the orchestra, the Zetesian Society, and the student body.

Influenza has been epidemic in the town of Red Springs, but we are glad to say that the situation now seems to be improving. The local chapter of the Red Cross has rendered splendid service in preparing and serving meals to the sufferers, especially at the mill village, and in supplying other comforts to the sick. The college girls sent a contribution of $36 in money and some articles of clothing. Through the sweet generosity of little William McLean, son of Mr. J. Dixon McLean, fruit was sent to the children at the cotton mill. William earned the money himself by selling tea cakes and other toothsome dainties to the school girls.

COLUMBIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

The first term examinations at Columbia Seminary begin on January 29 and continue for ten days. The second term begins February 11.

Shortly after the opening of the second term, Rev. W. H. Mills, of Clemson College, will give his lectures on Rural Sociology. Mr. Mills is a specialist in this field and these lectures are not only invaluable to the men of the Seminary, but they will attract general interest. The Seminary is most fortunate to secure one of such attainments to present this important subject.

Professor Fulbright, who for some years has been teacher of Elocution in the Seminary, and who has lately been serving the Army Y. M. C. A., will also return to Columbia some time in the Spring and resume his work in the Seminary.

Dr. Thornton Whaling, president of Columbia Seminary, attended a meeting of the executive committee of Davidson College held in Charlotte last week. Dr. Whaling is a member of a number of bodies of such importance as this.

Dr. J. O. Neavis left the city Friday to supply Dr. Vance's pulpit, in Nashville, while the latter is absent on other important work.

Within the past two weeks the students of Columbia Seminary have been deeply saddened by the death of two of their number. There has been a siege of influenza among the men; however, all the sick are quite well again and have resumed their class work.

Dr. Whaling will preach at Woodrow Memorial Church, Columbia, Sunday evening on "The Signs of the Times." Those who know Dr. Whaling's ability as a speaker and his wide information, expect a sermon of unusual power and interest.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

The Presbyterian College of South Carolina opened for the second term January 3. When the S. A. T. C. was demobilized in December there were 148 students in college. The enrollment since Christmas is 113. There will likely be a few additional students coming in later, bringing the enrollment up to 118 or 120.

The college feels greatly encouraged in its opening. It has an excellent class of students. The Senior class, on account of the war, is small. The losses for next year will not be great, so the enrollment next Fall will probably run from 160 to 175.

THE MONTREAT NORMAL SCHOOL.

The Montreat Normal School has had an unusually fine record during the school term, now drawing to its close. Only two weeks were lost on account of the influenza epidemic. The nine cases were very light and were followed by no serious results.

As the number of students is all the time increasing, it is becoming evident that parents are beginning to find out the excellent advantages afforded by this school and the very low rate of charges made. The enrollment now consists of students from five of our Southern States and one distant northwestern State. It is only a matter of time, and that not a long time, until this school, founded by the General Assembly and fostered by nine of our Synods, will become a distinct factor in the educational work of the South.

The three courses, normal training, domestic science and junior-college work are ably maintained. The courses in mathematics are in charge of Miss Anne Webb, of Louisville, daughter of Dr. Webb, of our Theological Seminary in that city.

Basketball and tennis, along with mountain hikes, give ample opportunity for the development of the athletic side of the student body.

ROBERT ALEXANDER CHANDLER.

Robert Alexander Chandler, of Mayesville, S. C., was born June 16, 1880, and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus on Sunday afternoon, October 20, 1918, after a brief illness of influenza followed by pneumonia.

He came of pious lineage. His father, R. A. Chandler, was an earnest Christian, and for many years a deacon and the treasurer of the Mayesville Presbyterian Church. His mother, who survives him, was before marriage Miss Minnie Steele, of York, S. C. The atmosphere of this home was permeated by religion. Here the Bible was the First Book, the Incomparable Book, and from infancy he was instructed in the Holy Scriptures and the catechisms of the Church.

It is not strange then that early in life he gave himself to Christ, and united with the Mayesville Presbyterian Church, of which he remained a loyal and faithful member until God called him home. He attended the school in his home town and also at York, S. C. Having completed their courses, he entered the University of South Carolina, from which institution he graduated in 1901.

On August 5, 1908, he was married to Miss Jessie Wallace, of Society Hill, S. C. To them were born four children. Shortly after the death of his father in 1908 he was chosen a deacon and made treasurer of the Mayesville Presbyterian Church, succeeding his father. He retained this position until his death and this church has had but two treasurers, father and son.

Both as a deacon and treasurer he performed his duties conscientiously and well. He was very painstaking and his accounts were neatly and accurately kept, the last entries being made the day he was forced to take his bed. He loved his church and was always in his place on Sunday.

At the death of his father heavy responsibilities fell upon him, the management of a large store and the running of an extensive farm, besides the care of a widowed mother and a younger sister and brother. So capable was his management that he became one of the largest merchants and planters of the community. He was public spirited and took a deep interest in everything that looked to the building up of the community.

Assisted by his talented, Christian wife, he made his home a model one, and here his virtues shone to best advantage. Kind and gentle yet firm in discipline, he reared his children in the nurture and fear of the Lord. As a true servant of God he was given to hospitality, and delighted in entertaining his friends, especially ministers.

In disposition he was modest and retiring, neither seeking nor craving honors, always ready for every good work, but willing for others to have the glory. It seemed fitting that this servant of Christ should fall asleep on a quiet Sabbath afternoon.

Besides his wife and four small children, he leaves his mother, one sister, Fannie, wife of Rev. F. R. Riddle, of Lowryville, S. C., and one brother, Rev. W. B. Chandler, of Dillon, S. C., to mourn his loss and cherish his memory.

Servant of God, well done.

Rest from thy loved employ;

The battle fought, the victory won,

Enter thy Master's joy.

Pastor.

JOHN BAXTER ROSS.

The undersigned committee, deacons of Banks Presbyterian Church, do hereby place on record our unbounded admiration and most affectionate regard for our late friend and brother deacon, John Baxter Ross, whom God called to a higher service October 20, 1918.

As one who magnified his office, our brother was faithful to his trust, measuring up to its demands with smiling face and genial manner. This with his promptness and efficiency was one of his valuable assets. He will therefore be greatly missed by his fellow officers, the church, the community and most of all by his family and other loved ones. His memory will long linger with us as an inspiration to greater fidelity in our calling as office bearers now deeply sensible of our great loss. Therefore we resolve:

1. To follow in his footsteps as he followed Christ.

2. To extend our heartfelt sympathy to the wife, children and relatives of our brother and commend them to the grace of God and the comfort of the Holy Ghost, praying that from the heart they may say, "Thy will, O God, not mine, be done."

3. To ask for a page in our sessional record that shall be devoted to his memory.

4. To ask the session to record these resolutions, send a copy to the family and also to our Church papers for publication.

(Signed) J. S. Howie,

Committee.

MRS. NEILL McKAY.

Since in His infinite wisdom it has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from us our dear friend and co-laborer, Mrs. Neill McKay, we, the members of the Katherine McQueen Missionary Society of Union Presbyterian Church, desire to express our love for her, and our great loss in the death of her, who has been for years our leader in the Master's work.

Therefore be it resolved:

First. That we thank God for the gift of such a beautiful life, and bow in reverence and submission to the will of Him whom she served so well, realizing that our loss is her eternal gain.

Second. That while we will miss her in all our undertakings, we rejoice in the heritage of her unwavering faith, and in the examples she set in her church life and in the community where she spent most of her married years.

Third. That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to her bereaved husband, son, daughters, and sisters, and commend them to Him who said: "My grace is sufficient for thee." And that a copy of these resolutions be sent to them, and also that a copy be sent to the Presbyterian Standard and to the Moore County News for publication, and that we will try to be zealous and active ourselves in the work we feel she so much loved.

(Signed)

Miss Margaret McLean, Pres.

Miss Lettie Rowan.

Miss Margaret McLaughlin.

MRS. HATTIE McINTYRE IZARD.

Mrs. Hattie McIntyre Izard, wife of Mr. Walter Izard, died at her home in Durham, N. C., on December 24, 1918, after a brief illness from influenza-pneumonia. She was buried at her husband's old home, in Bedford, Va.

Mrs. Izard was the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. D. McIntyre, of Henderson, N. C. She came here when but a young girl, with her parents, and this was her home until her marriage in 1913. After completing her education she taught in the city schools and proved herself very capable.

Early in life she united with the Presbyterian Church and was an active worker in it. She was a teacher in the Sabbath School and had a lively interest in all the church activities.

Her married life was a very happy one. In it she showed unusual care and faithfulness in the religious training of her children.

Besides her husband she leaves two little girls about three and five years old. Also her parents and two sisters and two brothers, all of whom live in Henderson except one.

KILLED IN ACTION.

His story was told me by the one who knew him best, his own mother. She told it bravely, proudly, simply, tenderly, just like a mother proud of her boy; commanding herself to the end when the gush of tears would be no longer restrained. I had never seen the boy or his mother till the message came; but I knew the sisters—shy, modest, fine girls. A friend told me and I went to the house, for I had boys of my own in the army.

They had been so happy just before. The armistice had been signed. The war that had been so cruel was over. The boys would soon be home. Father came home with a smile, bringing a paper with the news. The children laughed and romped. They were all so glad in that home.

When but sixteen years of age he had come home from the city one night much excited. The country was calling for soldiers, soldiers for the expedition into Mexico. Posters and signs were everywhere, calling on men to enlist for the United States army. Many were enlisting. Could he go? "Please, mother, may I enlist?" But she said: "No, you are too young, they would not take you." And he said: "But I must go. I want to enlist. I want to be a soldier." Finally the mother said: "Well, if you must join the army, do not go to the city. They are taking soldiers here. If you go at all go from your home town," thinking to herself, "Our old doctor will examine him. He knows him well and he knows he has a tender eye from a hurt. He will not pass. He is so young." So he went off glad and proud of the chance to be a soldier. In a few hours he returned running and waving a paper and crying, "I'm accepted. I'm going to be a soldier." So father and mother gave consent and he went away, so brave and fine in his new uniform, to a far southern camp, his first time away from home, and they did not see him again for six months.

Then he returned and almost with the first greeting after kissing his mother the great purpose came out. "They're declared war against Germany. I'm going to France to fight the Huns." "No," said mother, "your father and I will never consent for you to make that dreadful trip, so young." "But, mother," said the boy, "I have sisters. They'll never treat them like they do the girls in Belgium and France while I can fight," and so off again without further word to enlist for France. "I can see him now," she said, "rushing when his father came home to throw his arms about his neck and plead for consent to go for the Huns, for sisters and mother and country." So again they sent him to fight for country and mother and sisters.

He went with the machine guns because he liked horses and mules. He was so kind to animals. No dog in the street but would follow him. Everybody's friend. Only nineteen, six feet two in his stocking feet. "The courage of the whole company," his chums wrote. A beautiful home awaiting after the long battle. Father, mother and sisters waiting proudly for the soldier boy's return. Then eight days after the armistice was signed the message came:

"We deeply regret to inform you that Private Harold Barringer was officially reported killed in action October 12.

"Harris, Adj't Gen."

I saw in his picture, newly made, the manly, beautiful, boyish face above the soldier uniform and I thought: It is the spirit of the American soldier boy. They are so much like that (so young, so brave, with the bravery of youth that reck not the cost) driven not by rigid discipline and force, but by an inward spirit of love and liberty and righteousness. No wonder that German soon learned to fear and dread the American soldier; and also, I thought, one secret of his courage lies in the spirit of the brave Christian mother.—United Presbyterian.

RED CROSS EAR OF CORN.

Marshall County, Iowa, has gone over the top in every Red Cross drive, and now gives evidence of the spirit indignant to the soil through a Red Cross ear of corn grown on the farm of C. A. Miller, eight miles west of Marshalltown. This freak of nature is an ear of what is known as calico corn, most of the kernels being white mottled with spots of red. In the center of the ear, however, there are two rows of deep red kernels, containing twelve kernels each, while midway alongside of these rows are four deep red kernels, making a perfect cross. By holding the ear of corn a few feet distant from the eye, the red cross stands out as prominently as though painted upon the white cap of a nurse's uniform.

The ear of corn has been presented to F. C. Letts, director of the Department of Supplies at American Red Cross National Headquarters.—Red Cross Bulletin.

NEGRO TROOPS' CONTRIBUTION TO DEMOCRACY.

In his report to the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches at Atlantic City, as Vice-Chairman of the Committee on the Welfare of Negro Troops, Prof. J. R. Hawkins outlined the work of the committee from the time of the passage of the first draft act to the present time. The importance of the work of this committee can be judged from the fact, brought out by Mr. Hawkins, that up to the time of the signing of the armistice over 400,000 negro soldiers had been inducted into the military service of the United States, and more than 130,000 had been sent overseas and had played a conspicuous part in the achievements of the American Expeditionary Forces. And not only the American, but the African negroes contributed patriotically to the fight for world-democracy. The French African colonies had sent about 700,000 soldiers and 300,000 workers into this struggle. These, together with the British negro subjects and the contingent of negro troops from America, made a total of more than 2,000,000 soldiers of African descent who had offered their lives in the cause of freedom and justice for all peoples.

Nor, said Mr. Hawkins, was there any evidence of the slacker spirit in their ranks. In the first draft 36 per cent of the negro draftees were accepted, as against 24 per cent of the white draftees. And among the fighting units at the front there was exhibited the greatest valor and heroism.

In closing his report, Professor Hawkins assured the Executive Committee that the negroes were particularly interested in the work of reconstruction both at home and abroad. He recommended that there be a strong protest at the Peace Conference against allowing the former German colonies in Africa to go back to German control. He recommended rather that they be internationalized and placed under the direction of a strong protectorate, as a means of advancing, not only the welfare of the negro, but the welfare of humanity in general.

GET OFF THE LID.

George III, of England, sat on the lid, and we had the American revolution.

Louis XVI, of France, sat on the lid, and the French revolution followed.

Czar Nicholas II, of Russia, sat on the lid, and Bolshevism was the result.

Kaiser William II, of Germany, sat on the lid, and his dynasty crumbles.

We may sit on the lid until the voiceless masses that dig underneath and lay the foundations of our industrial edifice shake themselves in their ignorance and wrath, and bring down the house with its inmates upon themselves, as did blind Samson of old and the Bolsheviki of today.

President Wilson says: "We want always to hold the force of America to fight—for what? Not merely for the rights of property or of national ambition, but for the rights of mankind."

Translate that sentiment from the political into the industrial world and make it operative, and we shall have industrial peace with righteousness.—C. E. World.

WONDERFUL EGG PRODUCER.

Any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs" and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs, so if you wish to try this great profit maker, write E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 9251 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1.00 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be returned on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. Send a dollar today or ask Mr. Reefer for his free poultry book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.—Adv.

FOOT TROUBLES

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, J. R. Simon of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.

MONEY BACK CATARRH TREATMENT

If Hyomei Does Not Relieve, Your Money Will Be Refunded.

Catarrh is caused by germs.

The way to cure catarrh is to kill the germs; no one will deny that.

Stomach dosing, sprays and douches won't kill catarrh germs; they don't get where the germs are.

But Hyomei, the pleasant antiseptic air from the Eucalyptus forests of Australia, when breathed over the germ infested membrane, relieves catarrh. If it doesn't, you can have your money back.

A complete Hyomei outfit, including hard rubber inhaler, at any druggist's for $1.15; or direct, all charges prepaid, from Booth's Hyomei Co., Ithaca, N. Y.

Hyomei relieves Catarrh and colds of the head, Catarrhal Coughs, Bronchial Catarrh, Spasmodic Croup, Catarrhal Laryngitis or Hay Fever.

"And Many That Were Rich Cast in Much"

We think that because a man gives a Thousand or a Million out of his great wealth he is greatly to be commended and and held in esteem among men!

DOES JESUS?

"What hast thou that thou didst not receive?"

"If I was hungry, I would not tell thee."

"When ye shall have done all of these things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants."

The longer a man hoards or withholds his wealth from God, the poorer he becomes.

THERE IS NO BLESSING IN HAVING—
THERE IS BLESSING ONLY IN GIVING.

God's arithmetic and ours are different.

We look on what a man gives.

God looks on what he has left after the gift.

Therefore, He said, "This poor widow hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Collection of Geniuses.

There came to our city a Woman who called often at the house where we abide, and she counted herself a friend of Keturah. And I asked of Keturah, saying, Is this Susie person married or single?

And Keturah answered, Both.

And I said, It is just about what I should have expected.

And Keturah said, She hath many of the marks of Genius, and she knoweth many persons who are Geniuses. Yea, and she hath invited us to spend an evening with her and meet a Group of her Friends, all of whom are Geniuses in their way.

So we went, I and Keturah, and we spent an evening in the Flat of Susie. And she trotted out her Geniuses.

And there was a Poetess who wrote Vers Libre so wonderful that it could not be told from Prose. And there was a Musician who played his Violin after a new theory which maintained that Music should have neither Melody nor Harmony nor Key nor Time, but reach the Higher Levels of the Soul through Free Interpretation. And there was an Author, who had writ a Great Book, so profound that no Publisher could understand it or see the need of publishing it. And there was a woman who had a New Teory of Thought-Transmission, and another who would Revolutionize Education by Interpreting Morals in terms of Music, and Music in terms of Color.

And Susie introduced them to us, one by one, and I and Keturah were about the only people there who were not Geniuses. So they began every man and woman of them to tell us their Theories.

And when we came away, we were that weary, we walked not, but ordered a Taxi.

And Keturah said, It was a Great Social Triumph for Susie.

And I answered, Yea.

And Keturah said, And I was Bored.

And I said, So was I, unless there be in the Dictionary some word which meaneth the same and then some.

And I said, Keturah, Thou art no Genius, neither am I. But thou art mighty Good and Wondrous Sensible, and I am a Philosopher, which is, being interpreted, a man with Good Ordinary Common Sense.

And Keturah said, An evening with a Choice Assortment of Geniuses is like unto a Feast in a Pickle Factory.

And I said unto her, God hath need of mighty few Geniuses; and as for a job lot like that we have met, it is of the Lord's mercies that they are not consumed. Let us be thankful that in this world are so large a number of Commonplace Sensible Folk.—Congregationalist.

LETTERS FROM RHEUMATICS

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter, but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of Rheumatism you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring. This water overcomes many diseases, including Indigestion, Gout, Uric Acid Poisoning and Liver and Kidney diseases, but no patrons of the Springs are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their Rheumatism. Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the Management:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver and Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of Stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began using Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time I was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The Water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints on her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

If you suffer from Rheumatism or any curable disease, accept the guarantee offered below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the Shivar Spring, Box 4F, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen: I accept your offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

NOTE—"I have had the pleasure of serving the little church at Shivar Spring as Pastor for years, and am therefore well acquainted with Mr. Shivar and his associates, whom I gladly commend as honorable business men and worthy of the confidence of the public. I have personally derived great benefit from the use of Shivar Mineral Water and have knowledge of its beneficial effects in a great number and variety of cases."—Rev. A. McA. Pittman

"FLU" HIT AMERICA HARD-EST.

There have been at least 350,000 deaths from influenza in this country, according to conservative estimates by the public health service. Dr. Woods Hutchison, just returned from Europe, says there were only 600 deaths from the disease in Spain and about 2,000 each in England and France. There were 280,000 cases among the Germans on the western front in February, and it is asserted that the raging of this epidemic delayed the drive of the Hun. Many parts of the United States, over which the epidemic swept a month ago, report a recurrence of the same disease in milder form. Serum developed by Dr. E. C. Rosenow, of the Mayo clinic, is said to have protected a high percentage of those who were vaccinated. The Public Health Association meeting in Chicago this week is studying methods of handling this epidemic.—Continent.

160 HENS—1,500 EGGS.

Mrs. H. M. Patton, Waverly, Mo., writes: "I fed two boxes of 'More Eggs' to my hens and broke the egg record. I got 1,500 eggs from 160 hens in exactly 21 days." You can do as well. In fact, any poultry raiser can easily double his profits by doubling the egg production of his hens. A scientific tonic has been discovered that revitalizes the flock and makes hens work all the time. The tonic is called "More Eggs." Give your hens a few cents' worth of "More Eggs" and you will be amazed and delighted with results. A dollar's worth of "More Eggs" will double this year's production of eggs, so if you wish to try this great profit maker write E. J. Reefer, poultry man, 6251 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., who will send you a season's supply of "More Eggs" Tonic for $1.00 (prepaid). So confident is Mr. Reefer of the results that a million dollar bank guarantees if you are not absolutely satisfied, your dollar will be refunded on request and the "More Eggs" costs you nothing. Send a dollar today or ask Mr. Reefer for his free poultry book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.—Adv.

COMBINING RIGOR AND SYMPATHY.

It is a good sign of a good spirit in the American people that there has been virtually no protest against the engagement of the United States to feed the German people this winter. Mr. Hoover, who from this war will go down in history as the world's greatest caterer to the hunger of mankind, has gone abroad with the intent of meeting the food needs of America's foes with just the same impartial hand that he has hitherto been dispensing meat and drink to America's friends. Here and there a few voices have complained that this was being too kind to the Hun, but those voices have died away without any popular echo. The significance of this is deeply Christian. It demonstrates that on the side of human sympathy the American heart remains most generously open—under the dominion of a genuinely humane good will. The nation at heart wishes to do good and not ill to its enemies—a very practical fulfillment of the duty to "love one's enemies" which the Sermon on the Mount inculcates.

In this goodly fact Christian Americans can take double satisfaction. It not only proves the absence of rancor and hatred, but it also vindicates America's severity towards Germany in political matters as an honest sense of justice and not an impulse to revenge. To feed Germany in order to save it from starvation, and at the same time to punish it rigidly in order to make sure that it will not be tempted again to violate the rights of neighboring nations, are not incompatible policies. They are, instead, the essential combination of mercy and rigor on which the future peace of the world depends. It is something to thank God for that in this trying time He has enabled America to hold fast to so much of the steadfast and impartial spirit which saves life at one and the same time from weak sentimentality and from embittered vengeance.—Continent.

50 EGGS A DAY.

"Since using 'More Eggs' I get 40 to 50 eggs a day instead of 8 or 9," writes A. P. Woodard, of St. Cloud, Fla. This scientific tonic has made big egg profits for thousands of poultry raisers all over the United States. Get ready now and make big profits out of your hens this winter. A $1.00 package will double the egg production and a million dollar bank guarantees to refund your money if you are not entirely satisfied. Send $1.000 now to E. J. Reefer, the poultry expert, 5251 Reefer Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., or send $2.25 and get 3 regular $1.00 packages on special discount for a full season's supply. Or write for his valuable free book that tells the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.—Adv.

AN ACT OF GOD.

It was snowing and blowing and bitterly cold. Only those who had urgent business were out that day. A horse hitched to a delivery wagon stood shivering in front of a house. A car line ran on the block and early in the afternoon a motorman saw the horse waiting there and pitied him. An hour later he made his next trip and the horse was still there. On his return he slowed down his car a little, and peered about for the driver but could see no one.

On the five-thirty trip the motorman was late; for the car was crowded at that hour and there had been many stops. Besides the tracks were covered with the snow. Every man, woman and child in that car was tired, many of them were cross and all of them were cold.

The car turned into the block where the horse had stood all afternoon. There he was, head down, right in the face of the storm! The motorman slowed down his car and in the middle of the block he stopped it. The group of tired, cold humanity inside scarcely stirred. It was only something else to delay them!

But there was one who looking out saw an act of God that day!

She saw the motorman get down out of his car and go to the horse's head and pet him. She saw the poor beast nuzzle his head against the man's shoulder. Then the man stepped back to the wagon and began a hurried search for something. In a moment, to his evident relief, he found a blanket. Quickly he put it over the animal and carefully tucked it under the harness. Then with a farewell pat he ran back to his car.

"Don't care if I am late," she heard him say, "I couldn't let you stand there like that any longer."

And that one who saw went home and telephoned for help for the horse and she got it; and she telephoned the street car company for the name of that motorman and she got that, too. And then she sat down and wrote a story about it and gave his name and praised him. And it was published in the city papers and that man got some of his flowers before he died.—Our Dumb Animals.

BASEBALL AND DEMOCRACY.

One of the great movements with which the statesmen will have to reckon now that the war is over is the democratic drift of the Orient. The American policy in the Philippines, followed by the proclamation of allied principles to fight for the protection of weak nations, has stimulated the imaginations and ambitions of the Asiatic races mightily.

Not long ago a delegation of Dutch officials visited the Philippines. They were lavishly entertained, and one day went to see that great American institution, a baseball game. The contestants were some American soldiers and a nine drawn from the native constabulary. It happened that the latter won, whereupon the soldiers gave the Filipinos a cheer.

"Do Americans take off their hats to Filipinos and cheer them?" asked the astonished visitors.

"Certainly, when they win; why not?" was the reply.

Shortly after that, the Dutch government made an additional appropriation of five million dollars for popular education in Java.—From "Missions and World Democracy," by Tyler Dennett, in "Asia" magazine for January.

We are carrying in another column the advertising of the F. S. Royster Guano Company and our readers will be interested to know that in 1886 Mr. F. S. Royster started this business and still retains the ownership and control of it, although it has grown to such proportions that it takes 13 large factories to supply the present demand for the Royster Brands. It is rare that such a business is built up by individual effort and the results speak well for the ability and integrity of the manufacturer and for the unvarying merit of the goods. The record of the past is the best guarantee of future results and the success of the Royster goods has always been built upon the success of its users.

"A History of the Christian Church"

Williston Walker.

This is the latest and most satisfactory one-volume history of the Christian Church. Beginning with the great pagan thinkers who prepared the way for Christianity, Dr. Walker traces the growth and development of the Christian Church down to the various sects and leaders of today. Accurate, comprehensive, and unbiased, the book will appeal alike to the general reader and the scholar.

THE SIGN OF UNIVERSAL MERCY.

I said that the Russian women were all meek in appearance. There was one exception. A woman of sharp, eager face, as of a zealot, with a gray shawl over her head, seeing me standing near the door, approached me and said in rather sharp voice, speaking in French, "Quelle Croix?" What cross? I did not at first understand the import of her inquiry, though I realized that she was putting to me an all-important question. "Quelle Croix?" "Grecque ou Latine?" (What cross to you make, that of the Greek Church or of the Latin Church?; that is, from left to right or from right to left?) My answer was "La Croix Rouge," the Red Cross. And that is the answer which the Croix Rouge, the Red Cross, is to make to people of every race and sect. It is the sign of mercy universal, the sign not of Christian faith, but of human brotherhood. America has given the Red Cross its widest scope and meaning and illustration. And here in Palestine, of all lands in the world, where religious partisanship is most bitter, where the world's alms have been asked for the sake of Christ, Mohammed and Abraham—here above all places is the Red Cross needed to help unite all and to illustrate the best methods of this universal mercy.—From "The Red Cross in Palestine," by John Finley, in "Asia" magazine for January.

Sparkles

For Dog Lovers.

"Well, here is a dog story that can't be beat: My friend Smith had a most intelligent retriever. One night Smith's house caught fire. All was instant confusion. Old Smith and wife flew for the children and bundled out with them in quick order. Alas, one of them had been left behind! But up jumped the dog, rushed into the house and soon reappeared with the missing child. Every one was saved, but Rover dashed through the flames again. What did the dog want? No one knew. Presently the noble animal reappeared, scorched and burned, with—what do you think?"

"Give it up," cried the eager listeners.

"With the fire insurance policy, wrapped in a damp towel, gentlemen!"

In The Army.

General Leonard Wood tells the story of a captain to whom was assigned a new orderly, a fresh recruit.

"Your work will be to clean my boots, buttons, belt, and so forth, shave me, see to my horse, which you must groom thoroughly, and clean the equipment. After that you go to your hut, help to serve the breakfast, and after breakfast lend a hand washing up. At 8 o'clock you go on parade and drill till 12 o'clock—"

"Excuse me, sir," broke in the recruit, "is there anyone else in the army besides me?"—Christian Register.

The Irish drill sergeant was putting a squad of green recruits through the different movements. He gave them "right dress." Try as he would, he couldn't get a straight line. Finally in exasperation he shouted: "What's the mather wid yez? Can't ye line up? That line's as crooked as a corkscrew. All of yez fall out and take a look at it."

The Shadow of the Cross.

By Rev. L. T. Newland.

When shepherds wond'ring stood
Around that manger bed,
And poured the oil of praise
Upon His sacred head;
Fair Mary's heart was sad.
So soon she felt her loss,
And bowed her head beneath
The shadow of the cross.

The crowd adoring came
To crown Immanuel King.
All praise to David's Son
We glad hosannas bring.
His road was flower strewn;
Full well He weighed the cost,
Yet hastened on to know
The shadow of the cross.

They smote Him with a reed,
And mocked His gentleness;
They spat upon His face.
In purple robes did dress
And led Him forth to die—
O, Jew, bewail your loss,
For on your nation rests
The shadow of the cross.

Editorial

The Synod of Georgia.

(Editorial Correspondence)

ONE year ago, the Synod appointed its next meeting for November 12, 1918, at Albany, Ga., not knowing what may happen on the morrow. When the time arrived, "the pestilence that walketh in darkness" had already entered and taken possession of Albany. The date was changed to December 3. When this date arrived the enemy was still in control. Then the moderator yielded the point as to place, and appointed the meeting for January 28, in the Central Church, Atlanta. Pursuant to this appointment the meeting was held. The docket was abridged, and only matters of pressing importance were considered. An excellent opening sermon was preached by Rev. E. M. Monroe, Jr. He is the son of Rev. E. M. Monroe, Sr., with whom it was our privilege to enjoy fellowship in the Seminary several moons ago. Not meaning to reflect on our quondam school-mate, we may say that this is a case where the stream is threatening to rise higher than the fountain. Monroe, Jr., is at present bishop of the church at Gainesville, Ga. He preached the sermon at the request of his elder, H. H. Dean, the retiring moderator. The Central Church, in which the Synod met, is one of the most elegant and commodious of all our church edifices. One can easily get lost in the maze of its Sunday School rooms. These are all needed, however, as the school, under the efficient leadership of Mr. J. J. Eagan, requires accommodation for nearly a thousand pupils.

The congregation of the Central Church has just called to its pastorate Rev. B. R. Lacy, an army chaplain, now in France. It was a long distance call by cable, but it is expected to be an effectual call. Mr. Lacy is quite a young man, but has given ample proof of the metal of which he is made. He took a Rhodes scholarship and studied at Oxford. At Union Seminary he took the Hoge scholarship, and pursued post-graduate study. Notwithstanding all this he has proven himself a good preacher as co-pastor with Dr. White, at Raleigh, N. C. Rumor has it that he has arranged to maintain permanently quite close relations with Dr. White.

The Central Church, one of the largest and most important of all our churches, has come to believe in the competency of young preachers. This is the third in succession—Theron H. Rice, Dunbar H. Ogden, B. R. Lacy—all young fledglings but recently from the nest. So far the judgment and faith of the church have been amply justified. Rice and Ogden did more than hold the church at the high level already attained, they carried it up to higher activities and developed larger fruitfulness. No fear is felt respecting the prospective pastorate of young Lacy. He has shown that he can be counted on to measure up to the demands of the occasion.

We are not saying much about the Synod. The reason is there is not much to say. The emergency business with which it dealt was merely cut and dried routine work. It did not even give time to hear the eloquent voice of Dr. Jacobs extolling the merits of Oglethorpe. Judge from that the speed-madness which characterized its proceedings. Yet it did give time to one speaker not on the program. It found that it was about to conclude its business before the hour when the good ladies were to spread a generous and toothsome lunch in the basement. Consequently it was very willing to be detained for a bit. The speaker introduced at the opportune moment was Mrs. Shepherd. She was primarily from Tennessee, immediately from Utah, and generally from all over the wild and woolly West. She was in her element. She had spoken to Synods before. She had helped to put prohibition over in the Western States, she had something to do with swinging Utah to Wilson, and had made her power very distinctly felt in certain other directions. She is now after Mormon scalps, and the way she goes for them is interesting to behold. When she was putting prohibition on the statute books of the Western States, she was working for the Mormons. She discovered that while they were lifting her to the skies in their beautiful eulogies to her face, they were making faces at her behind her back. This seems to have convinced her that the Mormons were a national peril, and so having finished her other job, she turned her batteries on the Mormons. The German 43 millimeters and the French 75s are nothing more than toy pistols. She learned that there were four thousand Mormons in Georgia. She is after them. Her purpose is not to put a momentary quietus on them, but to exterminate them, and she is going to remain till she does it if it takes her six weeks. What she does not know about the Mormons cannot be found in their most secret archives. We heard her for fifteen minutes and learned more than we could tell in an hour. We left her speaking, and have not heard whether the Synod of Georgia has yet adjourned, or whether the good ladies had to hold their lunch over for another day. We should feel sorry for the Mormons if they deserved any sympathy. But they are a filthy, pestilential lot and we do not care how soon Mrs. Shepherd wipes them from the map of the United States. We cheerfully leave them to her mercy.

Dr. Craig renewed his invitation to the Synod to hold its next meeting in his beautiful new church at Albany. The Synod thankfully and unanimously accepted the invitation. The Synod suffered one serious disaster—its faithful and efficient stated clerk, Rev. J. G. Herndon, resigned the office. He leaves the Synod to accept the pastorate of the Kingstree Church, Harmony Presbytery, S. C.

"The Survey" and a Church Paper in Every Home.

The Assembly's Stewardship Committee in their effort to develop the Church in the grace of liberality, has very wisely decided to seek to put a copy of our excellent missionary journal, "The Survey," in every home, and also one of our three Church papers.

The purpose of this canvass is not to develop spasmodic giving, but to make permanent and intelligent givers of our people.

Through the Survey and our Church papers information as to the progress of the Kingdom, both at home and abroad, is regularly set before our people, with the result that they will know what the needs are and where help is most needed.

The placing of these papers in every home is not going to be an easy task, but will require persistent effort. Its success will lie largely in the hands of the pastors, who will find that any exertion on their part will be repaid in the awakened intelligence of their people.

In order to stimulate this effort, we offer to donate to the benevolent causes one-half of all cash from subscriptions to this paper.

The Church will then receive a twofold benefit from this canvass. The people will be enlightened and developed in intelligent giving, and at the same time the benevolent causes will be benefited by receiving large contributions.

The Mistakes of the Y. M. C. A.

That the Y. M. C. A. has been without faults, its most ardent defenders would not claim.

We are not to be classed with the ardent defender class, but only with those who see the good amid some bad, and are willing to accept one and try to overlook the other. We are aware that there are those who condemn the Y. M. C. A. not in toto but only for certain practices, who differ from us only in emphasizing the evils, while we prefer to emphasize the good. We do not, however, wish to be understood as condoning the evil, or even minimizing it, for such is not our position. We see what is wrong and deeply regret it. Yet we contend that the good done far exceeds the evil.

The fairest test to apply would be to imagine what our boys "over there" would have suffered if there had been no Y. M. C. A. If there had been no Y. M. C. A. there would probably have been no K. of C., for one sprang out of the existence of the other.

With no "Y" huts there would have been no wholesome recreation, no place for quiet writing, no refuge from homesickness, and on the battlefield there would have been no one to soothe the dying and at times rescue the wounded.

"But they made mistakes." Of course they did. Even we editors do that, without one-half of the excuse they had. A great war was on. Time was the most important factor, and prevented a careful choice of men, with the result that many wolves arrayed themselves in sheep's clothing. They sold cigarettes and other articles, because the Government requested it, and if they sold at too high a price, it was because the transportation charges were so high. If they sinned in furnishing the boys with cigarettes, so did the Red Cross, and even the good women at home who packed the boxes for the boys in camp were not without sin.

Put down the bad and then the good they have done, and you will find that the good will overbalance the bad.

Instead of picking flaws let the good people get behind this institution and remedy the evils, and make it in peace the power for good that it has shown itself to be in war.

The French Church.

One of the effects of the war has been to arouse Christian sympathy among the Protestant Churches for the weaker churches on the continent. Protestantism in France, though it dates far back in history, has never flourished among the people, but has confined itself to the higher classes. In consequence you will find many of the officials Protestants as well as the scholars in the schools, but among the rank and file Catholicism alone flourishes.

It is now proposed that the British and American Churches unite in an effort to make the French Church more democratic, and persuade them to go after the people.

They were at one time an exclusive sect, something like some Presbyterian Churches we have known, who prided themselves on their exclusiveness, and were unwilling to go after the common people. These French Protestants would receive those who come, but they were unwilling to go out and compel them to come in. The plan now is to hold revival services among the masses, to let dignity go by the board, and to make the people realize that the business of the church is to make disciples of all nations.

If the French Protestants will show the same unconquerable spirit and dash that the French soldier has shown, the Church will soon spread over France, and that it will do so we are confident.

The idea used to be that the French were good only on the offensive, but this war has shown that they can endure as well as charge.

For years Protestantism in France has been content to defend itself, but now a new day has dawned, and henceforth they are going to carry on an offensive warfare and once more make Protestantism a mighty power in the Republic.

Cleaning Up America.

The war has been a scourge to the world, and figures fail to represent its losses, as words do to picture the ruin wrought. That it has had its compensations, however, we should also remember. It has shaken up society, and revealed to us many of our weaknesses.

For years we were conscious of the prevalence of a disease that was sapping our strength as a people, and planting disease of the most loathsome character in every community. A false modesty closed our mouths, and if we mentioned it, it was in a whisper or behind closed doors.

In the meantime an awful inheritance was handed down to wives and children, followed by blindness, scrofula and oftentimes lunacy.

When the war came on and the Government began to publish the results of the physical examination of recruits, the revelations staggered the country. It was shown that vast numbers of men were afflicted with venereal diseases, far beyond any expectation.

The Government is now trying to remedy this evil, and thus to develop a sound generation for the future. The United States Health service has now a Division of Venereal Diseases, under Gen. Rupert Blue, of the Army, who calls upon the press of the country to help in this campaign.

It is proposed to link the State and National agencies in fighting this great evil.

Silence on this subject has been tried long enough, and the time has come when plainness of speech must be used.

This movement is spreading fast, and the time will soon come when the standing of a city will be measured by what it is doing along this line.

Omaha, Nebraska, has undertaken not only to control the women, but it has a law to curb the disease among men. Houston, Texas, is proudly pointing to its record. It has turned over the municipal farm for a detention home for fallen women, where these unfortunates are treated, and then sent back to their homes. This city has also, with the aid of the Federal health authorities, provided a comfortable home where girls and women go while temporarily detained, other cities are joining in the work, while the Government by its five-mile zone law is protecting the soldiers.

This reform can be helped also by judicious teaching in the home. Laying aside all prudery, parents should inform their children of the possible dangers in life, and the awful consequences attending the violation of nature's laws. Concealing danger has never yet eliminated it, but experience shows that it is always better to face it.

Survey of Home Mission Needs.

Our Home Mission Committee in Atlanta is trying to make an accurate survey of its responsibility in the Home Mission field, so as to be able to estimate the funds needed to finance this work all over the Church. To that end they are sending out a questionnaire to each Home Mission Chairman, including Presbytery, Synod and Assembly.

We know from experience the difficulty of getting such blanks filled out and returned. These brethren are apt to lay this appeal aside intending to answer, but it soon escapes their mind.

We trust that all will act at once, and give the required information. If they will do so in a thorough manner we shall have a very valuable statement of our needs, as these questions are wide in their scope, and cover every department.

Union By Federation

By Thornton Whaling, D.D., LL.D., President Columbia Seminary, Columbia, S. C.

MY hand happened to pen the resolution adopted by the Birmingham Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church in 1917 recommending this policy to all the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches of America and I also was appointed by the partiality of the moderator on the committee, which has been conferring on this subject for more than a year. I may confess that, for a quarter of a century, I have been studying this subject with some degree of care as the possible solution of the final union of all the branches of the Presbyterian and even of the Reformed Churches.

I. Reasons for Desiring Unity.

There are many reasons for the growing desire for union, which is a marked characteristic of all branches of the church of our day.

The first reason is the growing consciousness of the spiritual oneness of the church as the one body of Christ.

Second: The movements which have resulted in the splendid unity of our country, have their analogue in the church. The demonstration that the world itself is one, made on the blackboard of history by Providence, from 1914 to 1919, heightens this consciousness of spiritual union.

II. Visible Expression of Unity.

This spiritual unity ought to have visible expression. The spectacle of the church "by heresies divided and schisms rent asunder" is not a pleasing one to the eye of faith and love. There ought to be a physical and material embodiment of the unity of the church.

The body of Christ is not a purely immaterial and invisible affair: the visible body ought to utter forth in terms which cannot be gainsaid, the essential oneness of those who are one with the Lord Jesus Christ. You cannot satisfy the heart of the Lord by a divided Kingdom convulsed and torn into warring sects somewhat like the world into numerous and hostile nations.

III. The Two Methods.

There are two methods by which visible unity can be realized, first, by Consolidation, and second, by Federal Union.

1. Consolidation.

First, it is impracticable. It requires identity of type, doctrinal, administrative, disciplinary, and ecclesiastical, of every kind. There can be no such absolute identity with the millions and millions of people constituted as the members of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches are. The Presbyterians are not all alike. They cannot be made alike, and if they were forced by omnipotence into the same mold, everything valuable in them would be destroyed. Second, this is a low and vicious kind of unity. The mollusk is exactly alike in all its cells, but it is a low grade organism. It can neither walk, nor swim, nor fly, nor breathe; it has no heart; it does nothing worth while. It is the sport of every wind and wave. Third, it requires impossible surrenders. The psalm-singing brethren must learn hymns. The anti-instrumental folk must have organs. Believers in the spirituality of the church must become subordinate to an Assembly, which decided political issues with a swift assurance betraying the profundity of the ecclesiastical nescience on which it is based. According to them woman suffrage must be had. Prohibition is to be divinely enforced and they can tell you where the allegiance of the citizen is due, even though a Supreme Court were in doubt. The greatest disaster to the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches would be the carnival of hypocrisy, which would be necessary to consummate such a union.

2. Federation as an Alternative.

Federation proposes union upon the basis of such agreement as marks the various churches in doctrine, ecclesiastical government, administration and discipline. Our differences are many; agreements are numerous too. The Federal principle allows for these differences and provides for union in the realm of our agreements. First, such Federation is practicable. The psalm-singing brethren may still sing psalms; the anti-instrumental music folk may do without wind or string instruments, and believers in the spirituality of the church may have a Provincial Assembly which has no entangling or political alliances. All the conscientious differences which divide the Presbyterians and Reformed Churches may be just as conscientiously cherished and maintained after Federation as before. Second, this is the highest kind of unity. A supreme illustration is found historically in Federal Empires and especially Federal Republics; the providential divine parable which expounds the method is these United States. Third, it demands no surrenders of the principles of any of the churches. It consists with perfect loyalty at once to the Federal Assembly, which expresses the unity of the whole church and with similar perfect loyalty to the Provincial Assembly which represents the cherished convictions of a particular body.

Conclusion.

Our church is wise in pressing upon the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches of our country, the issue of Federal Union. We know that consolidation is impracticable, hurtful and prejudicial to the highest interests of the Kingdom and to insist upon consolidation as the only method of visible unity is crass obscurantism in which the blind are trying to lead the blind and both fall into the ditch. There ought to be wisdom, grace and love enough in the ecclesiastical statesmanship of our great historic churches to find the way to union in visible and evident forms and that road must lead along the Federal principle illustrated in our great country with its Federal Republic and waiting for application to our long divided, too long sundered churches.

General Pershing Visits Nurses' Hut.

Miss Willie R. Young, Y. W. C. A. Secretary, who is now doing after-war work at a nurses' hut in France, writes of a visit which General Pershing made to the base hospital.

"The commander-in-chief of the A. E. F. came to see us the other afternoon and stood before our fire and talked and joked with the group as though it were his custom to drop in every afternoon. He invited us to his chateau afterwards, where we had a delightful time. He is truly one of the most simple and sincere and gracious men I have ever met, and an ideal host."

"Since the armistice has been signed we have been the channel through which nurses and doctors for the front have come on their way back to the port of embarkation. Every hour of the day or night, little groups sit around the room comparing their experiences and wondering what was going to happen to them. Streams of blue-clad figures with heavy boots and still heavier packs—always hungry and cold—have followed in. Our new fireplace has been a God-send to dozens of men and women and has called out such remarks as: "This is the first time I have been really warm since I came to France," or, "This is the first home-like spot we have struck in months."

"The Young Women's Christian Association was never so greatly needed as during this trying period. It is seldom that the Association has a chance to complete a piece of work. It is splendid to think that her sticking powers are going to hold."

(It will be of interest to our readers to know that the Miss Young of this little sketch is a Southerner, her home being in Charlotte, N. C., and her father a Presbyterian elder in that city.—Ed.)

How Belgium Faces the Future

Her Courage and Hope as Interpreted by Chaplain Major Blommaert.

By Jasper T. Moses.

CHARGED with a message from Albert, King of the Belgians, to the Christian people of the United States, Maj. Pierre Blommaert, Chief of the Protestant Chaplains' Corps of the Belgian Army, has just concluded a five weeks' speaking tour of our leading cities.

It is noteworthy that Belgium, a nation whose historic faith has been that of the Church of Rome, in her renaissance of liberty, political and intellectual, has sent as her ambassador of gratitude to America a young Protestant Army Chaplain, hero of four years of service to his nation's and humanity's cause, himself embodying in high degree the Belgian spirit of courage and determination, so aptly typified in the lion on the Belgian coat of arms.

tions that a major general might well envy. Like a true soldier, the chaplain does not care to talk about the medals and crosses that hang below his service bar whose impressive length tells of his four years of hardships with the brave Belgian army. Of one, however, he was ready enough to speak. It was a silver Maltese cross hanging from a red ribbon and bearing in relief on one side an open Bible and on the other the Belgian escutcheon and motto, "L'Union fait la Force." This is his badge of office with a plain cross of similar design embroidered in silver thread on the coat collar, the insignia of a Protestant chaplain, while his Catholic colleagues wear the Latin cross in gold.

Regarding his other decorations Chaplain Blommaert refused absolutely to speak. He would not even wear them in sitting for his photograph. But some of them are accounted for by an entry from the Belgian military field orders that came with his credentials to the Federal Council of Churches which translated, read as follows:

"August 4, 1917.

"No. 4711. Divisional Chaplain Blommaert, Chief of the Protestant Chaplain's Corps, has been appointed Chevalier de L'Order de Leopold with the privilege of wearing the Palm and the Croix de Guerre, in recognition of the great devotion he has shown in his work both at the front and in the rear, and of his courage and self-denial on the field of combat since the outbreak of hostilities."

The Chaplain's Military Career.

The story of how the young pastor fresh from his theological studies in Switzerland, for which he had given up a promising career in civil engineering, had been mustered into the Belgian army in August, 1914, first as a stretcher bearer, "a Red Cross soldier," as he proudly proclaimed himself, led to the point where he saw the need of his Protestant fellow soldiers for pastoral oversight. Such a thing as a Protestant chaplain had never been dreamed of in the Belgian army until the young theologian made his request to the military authorities.

At first they were not at all inclined to grant so unheard of a thing. "But," said Major Blommaert, illustrating his remark with sledgehammer blows from his clenched fist, "I knocked, and knocked, and kept on knocking. I told the officers that if the request were not granted, I would appeal to the king, and so they consented."

Major Blommaert was given the modest title of "Voluntary Chaplain," but the principle of a Protestant chaplaincy was admitted and the day was won. Now by dint of heroic service and of much constant "knocking" at official doors, he is a Divisional Chaplain with the rank of major and has twelve brother chaplains serving under his direction ministering to the more than 4,000 Protestant soldiers of the Belgian army.

War a Democratic Force in Belgium.

The war, Major Blommaert maintains, has democratized Belgium. In this, America played a leading part, first through her relief work. "When we saw how America gave to us, we were amazed. We did not understand it. She asked us no questions as to our politics or our faith. But because we were starving she gave us bread, and she clothed our freezing little ones. The war broke up old class distinctions. It made people think who had never before been jarred out of the narrow grove of their daily round.

"Pious Catholics learned to their intense astonishment that Free Masons did not have horns, after all. And some free-thinkers and socialists discovered that there were real men among the clergy—ah, Cardinal Mercier, he is a true man and a lover of his people!

"Ignorance is the great fool," said the chaplain, in his broken English, speaking perhaps more forcibly and truly than he realized. "Now that we know each other, now that we know France and England and America, it can never again be with us as it was before. In our fellowship, we have recognized no creed, no class, but we have all been brothers. This gain of the war, for which we paid so cruel a price, must remain for peace. No one shall take it from us.

"And so because of the war and because of the help you Americans gave us, our religion will be more human. While the war has knocked the Wotan-like German 'Gott' off his old pedestal, it has enthroned the God of the merciful, pitying Christ in the hearts of our Belgian people.

What a Church Paper Can Do for Me

By Rev. Walter L. Lingle, D.D.

THE editor has suggested that I write out of my own experience. This will keep this article from being purely theoretical but at the risk of a too frequent use of the first personal pronoun.

I have been trying to imagine what a home would be like without a church paper, and I have not been able to do it, for a church paper has been a part of the very warp and woof of my home life ever since I was a child.

The part of the paper which first interested me was that part which contained

The Letters of the Children and the Annual "Honor Roll" for reciting the Catechisms. This part may seem childish enough to grown-ups, but it has real interest and real inspiration for children. It is worth a good deal to a child to make little friends all over the country, even if they are "unknown friends." It enlarges his world and his interests. It might be well for grown people to keep on reading these little letters. They would help them to know and understand children.

One day as Spurgeon was driving through London he observed a building which had this sign on it: "Home for Incurable Children." He remarked: "That is where I belong." The fact that Spurgeon was incurably a child accounts for his Christ-like character and for his ability to do such a great work among children and young people.

The next department that interested me was the department which carried Stories for Children.

These stories I read eagerly and they generally had a real inspirational value and left me with a desire to be better and to do better.

The next department that gripped me was the excellent

Summary of Current Events

each week. Some people may not consider this a proper part of a religious paper, but I have always had a great deal of sympathy with the view of Arnold, of Rugby, when he said that he read the papers to see what God was doing in His world. Current history is only the unfolding of God's plan for His world. The church paper by seizing upon the salient topics in current events and writing them up in succinct form gave me my first love for current history and history of all kinds. There are certain church papers which to this day give me the best view of current events as related to the Kingdom of God on earth.

The next department that interested me was

The Religious News.

That is the one department which most interests me now. Here I learned to know by name many of the ministers of our Church and something of what the Lord was doing through them. In this way I learned to know many ministers whom I have since met and many whom I hope to meet in the Father's House. These ministers have meant much to me in the passing years. I feel sure that this association with ministers in the church papers had much to do with turning my own thoughts towards the ministry.

This religious news department helped me to obey more effectually the command of our Lord to lift up our eyes and look on the field, which is the world. It showed me the church at work all over the home land and all over the foreign field. This is a liberal education in itself and brings a great deal of encouragement and inspiration to the individual. When Elijah thought he was working alone he threw himself under the juniper tree and prayed that he might die. One of the first things the Lord did was to assure him that there were seven thousand others who had not bowed the knee to Baal. I have always felt that if Elijah had only had some effective mode of communication with these seven thousand he would never have made his despondent prayer.

The Contributed Articles and Editorials began to interest me and kept me informed as to the great questions which were before our church for discussion and solution, and thus the church paper taught me to do some thinking on these questions for myself.

Perhaps the first of these great questions which interested me was the prolonged controversy over Evolution. I was a boy of fourteen or fifteen when this controversy began and had a very vague idea what it was all about, but I followed the discussions with interest as they were reported in the church papers. In the same way I followed in a general way the discussions of many questions. All of this was a real preparation for my life work. It is well for a boy to keep informed on the great movements in the church and the Kingdom even if he does not fully understand them at the time.

I can now in my own home see the church papers doing for my children what they have done for me. Five church papers come into my home each week. I am trying now to make up my mind to discontinue one of these, but I do not see how I am going to do it. Each one means so much to us. I do not know what the children and their mother would do on Sunday afternoons without the church papers and the Shorter Catechism.

The conclusion of the whole matter is that there ought to be

A Church Paper in Every Christian Home.

You cannot afford to be without it, and it is not fair to your children to let them grow up without it.—Christian Observer.

The Answer.

When you billet is a barnyard and your bed is crawling hay,
When it's raining and you're out of luck and (likely) out of pay,

When the only girl you want to see's a million miles away—
What's the answer, kid?

The answer is the old Y. M. C. A.!

Now don't lose any sleep about our funking any scrap!

For your wise old Uncle Sammy knows the way to treat a chap,

When he's half-the-world from homeland, is to dot the muddy map

With snappy Red Triangles where the U. S. A.'s on tap.

They treat you like you'd ought to be, they treat you like a man;

They don't make no distinctions, and they don't put any ban
On a guy who's never signed his name to no Salvation Plan—
You're good enough for them if you're a good American.
But, believe me, kid, there's times—well, take my case the other day,

When a whiz-bang kind of shook me up and made me wonder—say,

When you have to talk to some one, and you don't know how to pray—

What's the answer, kid?

The answer is the old Y. M. C. A.!

Peace On Earth.

Except the Lord send peace on earth,
Like that proclaimed at Jesus' birth,
In vain shall nations peace decree,
Since Christ was born, eyes looked to see
A nation rise, with will to peace,
But born to war, that wars may cease,
Endowed with wisdom from on high,
To see with others, eye to eye,
Happy people; that wills to try.

The Set-Up of Beneficence Drive--A Challenge

By Rev. Robert Hill, D.D.

THE Assembly has set the goal for benevolences for the year 1919-20 at three million five hundred thousand dollars. It is a large sum of money, not too large for the varied needs of evangelism, and yet large enough to constitute a worthy challenge to people who for years have been thinking and dealing, not in millions, but in billions. When the armistice was signed the war was costing the United States alone five million dollars a day. So we are asked to give for the preservation of the peace of the world for one year seven-tenths as much as we were spending in war, in one day.

The enormous sums of money called for because of the war were in every instance largely oversubscribed. The people gave; they gave largely; they gave willingly; they hastened to give, because their hearts were in it, and they believed the ideals at stake were important enough for men to make supreme sacrifices for. They gave because they were informed upon the issues involved; and because they were kept informed upon the progress of the gigantic struggle. They gave because they were made to see the devastated territory of Belgium and France; because they were made to behold the appalling outrages of the Unspeakable Turk upon the helpless Armenians, Syrians, and Greeks; because they saw the young men shot in droves, the old men slain with the club and axe, the women passing through the things from which the very soul shrinks to think, the poor babes dying in misery and want. They gave because all that was good in them rose in fierce rebellion against the horrible blasphemy which made the aider and abettor of these outrages claim to be in league with God.

It is always easy to get money from an enlightened Christian people when their sympathies and consciences are aroused, so there is more in the Set-Up of Beneficence Drive than simply raising money. The very first named object of the drive is "To intensify the spiritual life of the church membership," and the second is "Church-wide Evangelism." That is to say, the effort to raise so large a sum is to be accompanied by such a propaganda as will touch the sympathies and consciences of our people. The other objects of the drive, apart from those concerned with money, concern themselves with education, without which no sympathy can be aroused, or conscience touched.

We have need of a sanctified imagination to picture to ourselves the possibilities of world-service lying easily within our power, wanting only consecration to go to it. We have the money, we have the men and the women, we have the machinery, or can easily find it; we need the vision and the consecration. Those in charge of the drive will help us get the vision; and God will give us the consecration.

The Church of Christ never faced so great a day as this day. The world is being remade. Old things have passed away. All things are being made new. Civilization has just passed through the crucible which has found it wanting in one supreme essential. The material, and the intellectual elements of civilization were present in abundance; but that which gives coherence, meaning, life to them had been neglected. The religious element in civilization had been overlooked indeed, in large measure, deliberately discarded, and a false philosophy substituted. And there never has been, and from the very nature of the case, there never can be an enduring civilization which does not deliberately, and of set purpose acknowledge the overlordship of Jesus Christ. In Him is life, not for individuals only; but also for nations as such, for churches, and society also.

Through the medium of this drive we will find a way to do our share toward the making of wars impossible in the future; and a way to enter more largely and efficiently into the widening field of world evangelism. I believe we have come to the kingdom for just such a time as this; and if we fail now, we may lose our chance forever. God will raise up some other to do what we should have done, and we will lose our crown. But we will not fail. Men and churches sometimes fail in a work because it was too small to be entitled to win out; it did not furnish incentive enough to call out all that was in them. This time we have a call big enough to succeed.

Two Chinese Christians

By Rev. W. H. Miley, D.D.

THE Church is today studying the subject of missions in China, and some Christians are still prone to ask, "Does the Gospel really mean much to the foreigner? Even when he has professed faith in Christ, does he become a real Christian?" In view of these facts, the following incident will be of interest. It was told by Rev. W. E. Cave, D.D., for eighteen years pastor of the First Church, Paducah, Ky., and I give the incident in his own words, as I remember them: "Two Chinese brothers opened a laundry in Paducah, and some of my members got them into our mission Sunday School. They soon became interested in the Christian religion, and after a time made a profession of faith and were received into the communion of the church. They at once became regular attendants upon the services, gave liberally of their means for the support of the Gospel, and lost no opportunity to speak a word for the Master. In short, they were recognized as among our most faithful members. After about three years, they came to my office one morning, and spoke very tenderly of their love for the Saviour, and of their pleasant associations with the Christians of Paducah. Then, with tears in eye and voice, they said, 'We are going back to China to make our home there,' and handing me their pictures, said, 'Please accept these, we want you to remember us when we are gone, and we would like to have your picture to take with us. And we want to take our church letter with us, and put it in the church when we get there.' Then, handing me an envelope, they said:

'Here is the rest of our subscriptions for the year, and by that time we hope to be in the church in China.'"

What a beautiful example of Christianity! And what a rebuke to many of our American Christians who wander from place to place, never thinking of a church letter, or of doing anything for the Master!

But the incident teaches us another lesson. There are vast throngs of foreigners at our doors, and the story of these Chinamen ought to be a strong appeal for the evangelization of these multitudes. Then, too, before the outbreak of the recent war, it was estimated that 300,000 of these foreigners returned every year to make their home in their native land. If we could lead one-tenth of these to Christ, it would mean that we were sending each year 30,000 native Christians, who, like these two Chinamen, would live and tell the story of the Cross to their own people. Could any investment of men and money bring larger returns?

Davidson, N. C.

"The more thoroughly the Old Testament is studied, the greater is the respect of the student for it. . . . Interpreted historically, in full sympathy with the conditions which influenced it, it is increasingly to the faithful student a revelation of the very heart of God and of His gracious purpose to promote the task of proclaiming His goodness and love to the world until all mankind shall bow at His feet.—Rev. F. K. Sanders.

How Belgium Faces the Future.

ica. We are like two lovers who marry at first sight and then get to know each other afterwards. We have idealized you Americans. We see your statue of Liberty and we think of all as enlightened by her torch. And yet it is hard to realize how other people live. When I see your libraries and clubs, I say to myself with surprise, 'Why, they are reading books and discussing the same problems in which we are interested!' In your public schools and your teaching profession you are fifty years ahead of us.

"But the war has opened Belgium's door of opportunity. We shall be a stronger people after the war than before. Oh yes, we have lost our thousands of men and our country is laid waste; but the greatness of a nation is not in these material things; it is in its spirit. And the Belgian spirit has never been conquered. Already we have fully organized and all plans are perfected for the restoration of our industries, our commerce and our banking. We shall soon remove all traces of the war, and resume our place as the fifth commercial nation of the world.

Attitude Toward the Germans.

"Strange as it may sound, we find very little hatred in our land toward Germany. We merely dispise the German: He is not worthy of our hatred. They were in Belgium by the thousands before the war, our honored guests. And how did they return our confiding hospitality? Like the treacherous visitor who makes a wax imprint of his host's keyhole so that he may return later to rob and plunder the home that sheltered him. Oh, no, we do not hate the Germans, but they fully realize that for fifty years it will be well that no German shows his face in Belgium.

"Of the many Americans who helped our nation in its hour of calamity, Mr. Brand Whitlock stands foremost in the hearts of Belgians. He is a big, highstanding man who did more for Belgium than any other man could do."

"And my king"—the glow of affectionate pride in the chaplain's voice was deeper tribute even than his words—"my king is a man of the people. He is loved by all who know him, not just by those far away, but by his close associates and by the soldiers who have suffered with him these four bitter years. He and the leaders about him are truly religious, men of high spiritual ideals. When I last saw our commander-in-chief, General Gillain, I dared to speak to him of our sympathy for him in his problems and that we were in prayer for him. 'That is right,' he said, 'Say in prayer, for we need prayer.' And that is the spirit of Belgium's real leaders."

King Albert's Gratitude to America.

King Albert's words of greeting, given to Chaplain Blommaert, in a special interview just before he sailed for America, were:

"To the Christian people of America I express my deep gratitude for all that you have done for my people, for the sympathy you have shown us in the relief of our dire distress and the material assistance you have rendered. But I am especially desirous that you feel my sincere appreciation of the great moral influences that have come from your association with us and the spiritual inspiration which you have given us."

In the execution of his mission to interpret Belgium to the United States, Major Blommaert has concluded a five weeks' speaking tour of our cities from the Lakes to the Atlantic coast. As he left New York on the Baltic, December 30, he took with him a message of love and gratitude to the Belgium Churches from American Christianity as represented by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. The message in part was as follows:

Message to Belgian Protestants From Federal Council.

"Your brave nation had held 'the frontier of freedom.' We pay tribute to your soldiers, who for years were subjected to the keenest of suffering. We pay tribute to the plain, home-loving men and women who have been so true to the best in them.

"We could not enter fully into the fellowship of your sufferings, for we have been spared the outrages perpetrated on your soil, but we have esteemed it a privilege to enter into the fellowship of your determination and your triumph and now to join most heartily and unitedly with all your people in gratitude to our God and Father for the ending of the war and the coming of peace.

"Our words cannot exaggerate your deeds nor the debt we owe to the Belgian Christians for the spiritual vision and their steadfast endurance, honorable in the sight of God and man. It is now our great joy to congratulate you upon the triumph of your years of struggle and the vindication of your deepest convictions.

"That the spirit of Christ may guide the great Peace Council to form such a Fellowship of Nations as will secure to the smaller and weaker peoples the first consideration in the time of need is our earnest prayer. This will but fulfill the Master's command that the strong bear the burdens of the weak.

"We were rejoiced to receive your stirring message by the hand of Chaplain Blommaert, and we now commission him to carry to you this expression of our faith, our hope and our love in which we are sure our churches join as one.

Systematic Beneficence--Synod of N. C.

By R. A. Lapsley, Jr., Synodical Manager for N. C.

By no means the least important matter before our Synod at this time is the Campaign for Beneficence. The campaign is well under way in most of the Presbyteries of our Synod. It was impossible to get this matter before the Synod as a whole, but the Synodical Committee of Systematic Beneficence had a meeting in September and carefully considered the whole progressive program. The committee heartily and earnestly endorsed the Assembly's program and accepted the goal of $3,500,000 for the year 1919-1920.

Of this $3,500,000, $2,100,000 is for the Assembly's causes, and every dollar of this amount is needed to enter the many open doors of opportunity. Both at home and abroad, the church is facing the most critical hour of her history, and the world is open to the Gospel as never before. North Carolina's share of this $3,500,000 is $625,000. Three-fifths of this, or $375,000, will go to the Assembly causes, the remaining two-fifths, or $250,000, will go for our Synodical and Presbyterian causes. There are special needs in our Synodical Home Mission work, in our Schools and Colleges, and at the Orphanage, which call for largely increased gifts.

Six hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars seems like a large amount for our Synod, but it only means a little more than $12 per member per year. Surely our great Synod ought to give as much as one postage stamp per member per day to carry out the last command of our Master and to give the Gospel to those who know Him not.

In the War Savings Campaign in our State, the Government asked for an average of $25 from each person, that the world might be made safe for Democracy. This request was not thought unreasonable. Surely we should be willing to give one-half as much to win the world for Jesus Christ.

A call comes to every loyal member of our church to do his part in this campaign. It will not be successful unless we put forth a united effort. As a State, we have given proof beyond any question of our loyalty to our Government. Shall we not now give equal proof as a church of our loyalty to the Kingdom of Heaven?

The Men From German Prison Camps Know.

Five months in a German prison camp was the ill fortune of Corporal R. Feeney, Fourth Canadian Rifles, a native of Johnston, Pa. His experience at Rastatt confirmed a conviction which explains why he crossed over to Canada and enlisted long before the United States entered the war. Corporal Feeney sat up in bed in one of the big, airy dormitories at Eagle Hut, in London, enjoying a fine cup of coffee that a Y. M. C. A. waitress had brought him with a stack of cakes like those which pleased King George so much when he visited Eagle Hut recently. He drew a long, contented sigh of relief and stretched a bit. As he did so, his shirt-sleeve dropped back, revealing to the "Y" girl some ugly-looking scars. As she shrank from the sight, the corporal said:

"That's what you get when those brutes of Prussian officers are put over the prisoners of war. If ever I meet another Hun I'll fix him properly—war or no war. Hundreds of our boys died of starvation and neglect, and more would have gone the same way if it hadn't been for the Home Relief Committee and the American Y. M. C. A., which did wonderful work in providing food and clothing. Any one who doesn't appreciate the Y. M. C. A., it's safe to say, has never been in a German prison camp."

"America needed no propaganda in Germany during the war. The American prisoners were propagandists enough. They won and held the esteem of their guards and all of the German people with whom they came in contact."

That was the statement of Wayne J. Colahan, 63d Company, 6th Marines, whose home is at 217 Havard street, S. E., Minneapolis, to a delegation of Y. M. C. A. workers who met the prisoners at the Swiss border. They were released from Rastatt prison, Baden, Germany. Colahan was captured in Belleau Wood on June 6.

"We hate you but cannot despise you, was the way one German guard expressed it to me," continued Colahan. The American prisoners throughout were treated better than those of other countries. One reason was that we had a Y. M. C. A. cabinet in each prison which kept us informed of our rights, kept us interested, and secured for us many concessions.

"Virtually all the American prisoners except officers, non-coms and sick, and wounded were put out to work on Kommando—that is, on farms and in factories. At first our men were eager to work out, for the Germans nearly starved us, and we hoped to get better food on the farms. But even the farmers had very little to eat. After the Red Cross rations began arriving we prisoners were much better fed than the majority of the people around us.

"Through the Y. M. C. A. we secured a library, books for study classes, footballs and all sorts of athletic equipment, checkers and similar indoor games and instruments for a twenty-piece band, an eight-piece orchestra and a bugle corps. We had our own newspaper, the Barbed Wireless. The band kept things lively. Every night we had a concert in one of the 'blocks,' as we called the prison barracks."

Rondeau of Any Soldier.

When I come home from Flanders field,
I'll know the taste of every day
The little things we do and say,
The joys an even life can yield;
What potent peace a day can wield,
For I have dreamed on Flanders field
Of grace-notes in Life's scale to play
When I come home.

I've seen the thrush grow mute and sealed
On Flanders field, on Flanders field,
For War does smaller things dismay;
I want to live Life's common way,
I'll know the secret War revealed
When I come home.

Book Notices.

"The Battleship Boys on Sky Patrol"—By Frank Gee Patchin.

"The Little Wise Chicken That Knew It All."—50 cents.

These two books are from the Publishing House of Altamus Company, Philadelphia, Pa., a house that devotes itself largely to books for the young.

The first is for young boys, and it gives the life of a young officer on a sky patrol, where above the clouds they fought the Huns. Two young men enter a training camp in order to be fitted as fliers in the navy. It is a book that boys will enjoy.

The second named book is for wee folks, and is such a book as children between three and five years old will enjoy hearing read. It is remarkable how soon they learn to recite them from memory.

"Day After Day"—35 cents net.

"Praise and Service"—10 cents net.

These two books are from the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia, Pa.

The first is a Manual of Devotions for individual and family use, and the second is a collection of hymns for use in the home, Sunday School and Church Services.

The book of prayers will be found very useful to those who are not accustomed to public praying.

Forward March—By Angela Morgan, author of "The Hour Has Struck," "Utterances," etc. John Lane Company, Publishers, New York.

Miss Morgan comes to us with the spirit of the new age, breathing in her verse great and tender love for humanity and a strong and earnest plea for justice and righteousness. She has written some very fine things along these lines, as the public knows, as well as a beautiful loyalty to the men who won freedom for the world.

A few lines speak for themselves:

O heroes, streaming up the sky,
Shedding your clay upon the sod,
My soul is richer as you die
And I am closer still to God.

Miss Morgan's style is new, original and stirring. She hopes to see a love for higher beauty and a nobler humanity brought forth out of the terrible war and its sacrifices and sufferings.

A Visit to Union Theological Seminary.

By Rev. James Russell.

It was my privilege to spend ten days in this school of the prophets. When walking through these beautiful grounds and beholding the elegant buildings provided for these young servants of God, David's song of praise came to me: "How pleasant, how divinely fair, Oh, Lord of Hosts, Thy dwellings are." They are away from the noise and confusion of city life, and when I visited the class rooms I found the reason of their success. Dr. Lingle's class room was filled, and they brought in five chairs to accommodate the class. Such men as Dr. W. W. Moore, Rev. C. C. Hersman and others give this school of the prophets a high standing in the land. Their model Sabbath School is truly a fine work for Christ; 220 children, a collection of $147 for help in the East. The Bible class talks I heard were worth all my travel to Richmond and back.

I attended the Billy Sunday meetings, but I will say nothing about them as they are well spoken of. I enjoyed the meetings. He uses plain language that all can understand.

My prayer is, May the spirit of Elijah rest on the young men of Union Seminary.

As God desired to gather Jerusalem under the wings of His brooding love long, long ago, so now He desires to gather all the nations of the world as a hen gathers her chickens for nourishing warmth and protection.—Bishop J. W. Diggie.

News of the Week

The Peace Conference has adopted a plan for the League of Nations in accord with the views of President Wilson.

A delegation representing the Working Women of France called upon Mr. Wilson, urging him to advocate the granting of suffrage to women as among other measures of the Peace Conference. He very wisely told them that such was a domestic question and that the conference had no power to dictate to the several States what their internal policy should be.

A reduction of 75 per cent in Trans-Atlantic freight rates on cotton carried in American bottoms, effective immediately, have been announced by the Shipping Board Division of Operations.

With but 31 working days left Congress has not completed a single appropriation bill. The Senate has not passed one of the 14 large supply measures. Leaders of the House and Senate admit now that it will be impossible to put through all of the appropriation bills, and believe that an extraordinary session of the 66th Congress will be necessary before the end of the present fiscal year, June 30.

A basis for complete agreement on the war revenue bill was reached late Monday, January 27, by the Senate and House conferees. Senator Simmons, chairman of the Senate managers, announced that virtually all important questions remaining in dispute, including the war excess profits rates, had been agreed upon, and that all possibility of a deadlock and failure of the bill had passed.

SIN AND DEATH.

IN a recent article in his "Correspondence" column of the British Weekly, Prof. David Smith throws light upon the question of the relation of sin to physical death. A correspondent wrote Dr. Smith: "I have often wondered why contact with a corpse should render a person ceremoniously unclean (cf. Num. 6:6). In our own day our dead are regarded with particular tenderness." Dr. Smith's reply is as follows:

The reason is that the Jews regarded death as the consequence and penalty of sin. And this is indeed the doctrine of Scripture (cf. Gen. 2:17); but the Jews misconstrued it. They understood "death" as physical dissolution and supposed that, if man had never sinned, he would never have died. And this notion established itself in Christian theology. It was accounted a heresy by St. Augustine and St. Jerome when Pelagius denied it and maintained that Adam was created mortal and would have died though he had never sinned. Nevertheless it is an untenable notion. Death is no curse entailed by sin, but, as the Stoic philosophers recognized, an ordinance of nature. It is a natural law, and its operation is universal. The leaves and flowers, the birds and beasts, no less than sinful man, obey it. And it is a beneficent ordinance. "Death," says St. Bernard, "is the door of life." It is not destruction but transition into a larger, richer and nobler condition, as our Lord taught when He said: "Except a grain of wheat fall into the earth and die, it abideth by itself alone." (St. John 12:24). This is the Christian conception. It may seem indeed as though St. Paul contradicted it when, in a much debated passage (Rom. v. 12), he affirms that "through one man sin entered into the world and death through sin," and again (I Cor 15:22): "As in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive;" but what does "death" here signify? If it be merely the dissolution of the body, then his argument breaks down. For Christ does not exempt His people from death in this sense. All still die, believers and unbelievers alike. But in his magnificent argument on the Resurrection of the Body the Apostle affirms the necessity of the dissolution of the physical organism in order to attain to the fuller life which is the goal of redemption (cf. I Cor. 15:36-44); and hence

The Prayer Meeting

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING FEBRUARY 9:
THE RETURN TO GOD—Is. 2:1-5, 22.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

Our prophet was an idealist. He had derived from nature a wonderful endowment, and he had "in the year that Uzziah died seen the Lord sitting upon a throne high and lifted up, his train filling the temple."

He had seen the Lord Jehovah: he also saw men and women enervated by the luxury that had come to Jerusalem during, and as a result of the prosperous reigns, and the conquering arms of Uzziah and Jotham. This luxury and effeminacy had been magnified under the hand of Ahaz, who stepped from the harem to the throne in 735 B. C., a petulant and spoiled child, with the mind of an intriguing and superstitious woman. "O my people they which lead thee cause thee to err, and destroy the way of thy paths." "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils: for wherein is he to be accounted of?"

The accession of such a king, and the prevalence of national follies and sins were a sure invitation to Jerusalem's enemies to attack her, and the assurance of their success in doing so.

Jerusalem was Isaiah's world. It was more than Athens to Pericles, Rome to Seneca, or Florence to Dante. Not only human history, but the divine activity centered in the holy city. But while Isaiah saw the shame of her people and the doom of the city herself, he also saw that their doom could be averted by returning to Jehovah. Not only so, but it is evident that it is not this necessary and beneficent process that he means when he says that "through sin death entered into the world." He means not the physical process but its distressing concomitants. And these have resulted from sin; they are the curse which it has entailed. "This death," says the Puritan theologian William Ames, "the punishment inflicted on man for sin, is the miserable privation of life." And thus the Apostle's meaning is not that if man had never sinned he would have continued for ever on the earth, but that his dissolution would have been, according to the Creator's design, a natural and easy transition, without grief or apprehension, from the lower condition to the higher, like the passage from childhood to manhood or the bursting of the bud into the flower. That this is indeed the Christian conception is attested by the teaching of our Lord. He never spoke of His people's "death." For them there is no "miserable privation of life." He has abolished this (cf. II Tim. 1:10); yet the natural process of dissolution remains, and they must sustain it in order that they may attain the full and perfect life. And this transition He always designated "falling asleep" (cf. St. John 11:11-18). Thus in Christian phraseology "death" never signifies the mere dissolution of the physical organism, but the gloom and terror where-with sin has invested that natural, necessary, and truly beneficent process. It is in this sense that the Apostle employs the term which he affirms that "through sin death entered into the world;" and when he says that "our Saviour Christ Jesus hath abolished death," he means that the natural process has, in the believer's thought, been divested of its alien associations and reconstituted what it was in the Creator's purpose—the perfecting and consummation of life. The process remains, but the terror is gone. In truth our Lord's dealing with death is but an instance of His redemptive ministry, His undoing of the work of sin. Sin creates nothing; it only mars God's creation. Thus, the Scriptures represent work no less than death as a curse which sin has entailed on the race (cf. Gen. 3:19). And Christ removes the curse, not by absolving us from work, but by restoring its primal and proper idea.

And so He has removed the curse of dissolution also—not Topic for Sunday, Feb. 16—Our Relation to God. II. Trusting. Ps. 90:1-16.

Every human father worthy of the name wants his child to trust him. He wants his child to be confident that his father can provide for and protect him, and that he will be faithful and good and wise. The father wants to know that down in the child's heart there is calmness and fearlessness, because his father is living. No worthy father can be quite happy when his child has lost this trust.

God craves such trust from His children. When we do not trust Him we wound His father heart and rob Him of a thing in which He glories. We know that God was gratified when Job said, "Blessed be the name of the Lord. Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him." We are sure the angels applauded, happy that God's heart had been made to rejoice. God would never fail to bring Job through when he had such a trust as that.

He wants us to trust that He has justified us. He wants us to feel sure that at the great judgment we shall be discharged for the sake of Christ who bore the penalty for us. We must have our plans made and must keep them fresh in mind to tell the great Judge we are relying on His mercy which He promised for Jesus' sake. Our minds should be free from dread, on the ground that He has justified us in accordance with His covenant with Christ.

God wants us to trust that He has adopted us. We are to rest our minds in the belief that we have been made His children by reason of our brotherhood to His Son Jesus who became man in order to secure for us this privilege. Being now God's children, we are as safe as Jesus was. If we get hungry, it will not hurt us, for at the right time He will feed us. If we are poor, it need not distress us, for He will see to it that poverty shall hurt us no more than it did Christ. If we are friendless, or persecuted, or sorrowful, or even slain by an evil world—what does it matter in the long run? Did not our Brother, the Lord Jesus, suffer all these things and find that God worked through them for His good? We must trust that God will do for us as He did for Jesus through whom we have the adoption.

We must trust that God will make us holy. Paul was more concerned about being sinful than he was about poverty or peril. But he trusted that God by His Spirit would work in his heart like leaven to eliminate sin and build up a positive righteousness. If we trust God, we too shall grow in Christ's likeness, which is the goal to which our lives are directed.

How may our trust be made stronger? Ask your pastor. Tell of an incident in the life of Jesus, showing His trust in the Father.

Make a list of the words in English (synonyms) that mean practically the same as trust.

JETHRO'S COUNSEL.

Exodus 18:12-26.

February 9, 1919.

Golden Text—Gal. 6:2: "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

When Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, heard that the Lord had delivered Israel from the Egyptians, he came to visit them in the wilderness, and brought with him Moses' wife and his two sons. Jethro's name signifies excellence, and it seems to have been well applied, for he manifested many admirable qualities. He was the Prince and Priest of Midian, and his gifts appear to accord with his station. Sometimes when men attain exalted position by heredity or popular vote or unrighteous means, their endowments are not in harmony with their station. But it was otherwise with Jethro, and he revealed a wisdom that qualified for service in elevated position. He saw Moses instructing the people, settling questions and administering justice from morning till evening. He remonstrates with him and gives him some excellent advice.

I. Mark Jethro's Counsel.

He advises him to divide the burden of instructing, judging and administering justice among the people. He tells him to appoint others who may share the work with himself, settle minor causes, while the more important matters might be brought to him. He specifies the class of men that should be appointed, both as to intellectual capacity and moral qualities. He affirms that men for these positions should have "ability and should be men fearing God, loving truth and hating covetousness." He suggests to him to invest them with authority within certain limits, and to appoint them "rulers over tens, fifties, hundreds and thousands." He declares that by pursuing this plan he would relieve himself, be longer spared to Israel, and promote the welfare of the nation. Jethro's counsel was obviously wise, and if we had no other evidence, his advice to Moses would prove him a man of rare wisdom.

II. It Was Wise Because the Plan Would Relieve Moses.

Moses' leadership was too valuable to Israel to be needlessly sacrificed on the altar of duty. There were other men in Israel who could share his burdens and lessen his labors. There was no necessity for him to wear himself out prematurely by excessive toil. His assistants could do some things as well as himself and leave him more time for communing with Jehovah and ascertaining His will. Jethro's plan carried into practical effect would moderate his toils, permit him to seek to know Jehovah's will and to do what he could do best.

III. This Counsel Was Wise Because It Promoted a Better Organization of the People.

Israel leaving Egypt was an enfranchised mob recognizing no civil leader but Moses. To appoint rulers of distinct divisions who could settle questions in dispute among its members, promote law, order, justice and obedience among the people. It would habituate them to obedience to properly constituted authority, settle disputes in many cases more promptly than if they had to apply to only one tribunal and accustom many of the people to apply for themselves in individual cases, the principles of truth and justice learned from Moses and derived from Jehovah. Organizing and appointing agents for administering law, settling controversies and securing justice would also tend to combined effort under wise leadership in all industrial pursuits and thus promote a thoroughly organized nationality.

IV. Jethro's Counsel Was Wise Because it Developed and Utilized Talent Among the People.

Talent for leadership, for judging and for achievement is confined to no one class of society, but is widely diffused among the common people. The nation that recognizes that fact and takes steps to develop and use that talent will be best served and best qualified for achieving national greatness. Jethro's plan therefore of seeking among the people, men of ability and moral excellence and qualities for leadership and giving them definite authority over certain divisions of their fellow citizens, was eminently sagacious and beneficial. It indicated who was to perform certain duties, selected the best qualified and by exercise perfected soundness of judgment. Whether, therefore, we consider the relief afforded Moses, or the benefits of thorough organization, or the advantages of developing and using all national talent, Jethro's counsel is to be commended.

V. Moses' Greatness Shown in Adopting This Counsel.

Some men are too conceited to learn and too narrow to admit good ideas from all sources. They are like streams of confined beds that will not receive many tributaries. Continental rivers like the Mississippi or the Amazon admit large contributions from every direction. Thus men of large capacity receive wise counsel from a variety of sources, and employ it for useful purposes. Moses was a man of extraordinary capacity, and manifested his ability by his reception of Divine revelations, by his teachings and his achievements. But he certainly evinced his superior endowments by accepting and acting on Jethro's counsel.

he saw that this would be so: "It shall come to pass in the latter days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills: and all nations shall flow unto it." The idealist has been the butt of ridicule in every age; but Isaiah's idealism is not only beautiful; it springs from a sense of the plentitude of God's grace and power. Hence it is imperishable—it is true.

People will not always turn a deaf ear to the cry: "Come ye, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob." They will be aroused by the colossal wickedness and moral stupidity of men, by their selfishness and pride. The love and the wisdom and the grace of Jehovah shall lead them to His courts.

Nor will their coming be vain; for "He will teach us of His ways." "Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of Jehovah from Jerusalem."

All true knowledge is useful and valuable. Chemistry, geography, physics—useful knowledge is found in a thousand converging paths that find their center and true glory in the personal knowledge of the true and living God. "Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord." It is His will to teach us, to reveal His glory to our eyes and hearts: and thus to draw us closer to Himself. When Isaiah looked about him, he was conscious of his beloved Jerusalem; but when he fixed his eyes upon God, he felt that his mission was to the whole world. But the cure of souls was, and is, and ever must be a return from sin to God; a renunciation of self and unbelief for a living faith in the saving Jehovah.

And the result of this true faith, of this return to God is seen immediately in a fundamental change in our attitude to one another; in the broadening of our human interests and in unselfish desires for the good of all peoples.

The world is looking on even now with breathless interest while Christian men are trying to fulfill this prophecy; applying to world relations the precepts of the Gospel; seeking to avoid another world agony of blood and tears; and to bring in a blessed era when "He shall judge between the nations, and shall reprove many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

Devotional

BE YE HOLY.

Remember that God sees through shams, remember that God does not care for anything except the heart. He will not in the least value you for your professions or for your observances: "As he who hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation." If you want to make religion lovable, you must make it lovely; if you want men to accept your opinions, enable them, if you can, to respect your character; let men see in you a purer standard than their own, a loftier stature, a kindlier sympathy. The centuries do homage to real goodness; it is fairer than the morning or the evening star; it is the reflection of the life of Christ; it is as "a city on the hill;" it is as a pillar of fire moving over a wilderness of graves.—Canon Farrar.

USELESS WORRY.

What a vast proportion of our lives is spent in anxious and useless forebodings concerning the future—either our own or those of our dear ones. Present joys, present blessings, slip by, and we miss half their sweet flavor, and all for want of faith in Him who provides for the tiniest insect in the sunbeam. Oh, when shall we learn the sweet trust in God that our little children teach us every day by their confiding faith in us? We, who are so mutable; and He, who is so watchful, so pitiful, so loving, so forgiving? Why can not we, slipping our hand into His each day, walk trustingly over that day's appointed path, thorny or flowery, crooked or straight, knowing that evening will bring us sleep, peace and home?—Phillips Brooks.

ABIDE IN HIM.

Let your will be done with His will, and be glad to be disposed of by Him. He will order all things for you. What can cross your will, when it is one with His will, on which all creation hangs, round which all things revolve? Keep your hearts clear of evil thoughts; for as evil choices estrange the will from His will, so evil thoughts cloud the soul, and hide Him from us. Whatever sets us in opposition to Him makes our will an intolerable torment. So long as we will one thing and He another, we go on piercing ourselves through and through with a perpetual wound; and His will advances moving on in sanctity and majesty, crushing ours into the dust.—H. E. Manning.

LOVE'S SECRET.

Sighing for the opportunities of other men has a tendency to make us blind to our own. A truly Christlike spirit discovers opportunities in discouragement, and hope in what looks unpromising. When men do anything for the advancement of God's work, even the very least thing, they never know where it will end, nor what influences it will set in motion. Love's secret, therefore, is to be always doing things, and looking for things to do, and not to mind because they are little. When God touches them, they immediately become great.—Ex.

I AM HATH SENT ME.

The Lord said to Moses, "Say unto them, 'I Am hath sent me.'" Some one has said that God gave him a blank check and all he had to do was to fill it out from that time on. When he wanted to bring water out of the rock all he had to do was to fill out the check; it was the same when he wanted bread; he had a rich banker. God had taken him into partnership with Himself.—D. L. Moody.

A GOLDEN WEDDING

"Dear Love," he said, that morning long ago,
 "Where Life may lead the wisest cannot know,
 Or through what changing weather.
 If I could choose, no cloud should dim the sky."
 She smiled. "What matter where the road may lie,
 So we two walk together?"

"Dear Heart," he said, when they had journeyed far,
 And the calm radiance of the evening star
 Above the hills was shining,
 "The road was rough, and Life, the master, taught
 Lessons with bitter wisdom sometimes fraught,
 Beyond our hearts' divining.

"Yet good has sometimes come from seeming ill,
 And Love unchanging led us safely still Through storms and sunny weather."
 She smiled. "What matter though the road were rough
 The lessons bitter? This was joy enough,
 That we have walked together."

—Emily Huntington Miller, in The Outlook.

A MOTHER'S INFLUENCE.

A mother on the green hills of Vermont was holding by the right hand a son, sixteen years old, mad with the love of the sea. And as she stood by the garden gate one morning she said: "Edward, they tell me, for I never saw the ocean, that the great temptation of a seaman's life is drink. Promise me, before you quit your mother's hand, that you will never drink liquor."

"And," said he, for he told the story, "I gave the promise, and I went the globe over, to Calcutta and the Mediterranean, San Francisco and the Cape of Good Hope, the North and South poles; I saw them all in forty years, and I never saw a glass filled with sparkling liquor that my mother's form at the gate did not rise up before my eyes, and today I am innocent of the taste of liquor."

Was that not sweet evidence of the power of a single word? Yet that is not half; "for," still continued he, "yesterday there came into my counting room a man of forty years. 'Do you know me?' 'No,' I replied. 'Well,' said he, 'I was brought drunk in your presence on shipboard. You were a passenger. They kicked me aside; you took me to your berth and kept me there till I had slept off the intoxication. You then asked me if I had a mother. I said I had never heard a word from her lips. You told me of yours at the garden gate, and today I am master of one of the finest ships in New York harbor, and I come to ask you to come and see me,'"

How far the little candle throws its beam! The mother's words on the green hills of Vermont! God be thanked for the mighty power of a single word!—Wendell Phillips.

HOME RELIGION.

We have known people who had every other kind of religion but home religion. They were good at looking after other people's children, but failed in caring for their own. They were capable in business, helpful in the church, ornamental in society, but failures in the home, and the real reason seemed to be that it required a good deal more grace to be Christian at home than it did to be Christian elsewhere. And yet Christianity was meant to make home happy, and so happy that for all time to come it would remain the earthly type of the heaven which lies beyond the veil.—Christian Guardian.

A Special Offer to the Churches.

During the canvass for the Spring Campaign for Benevolences, under the direction of the Stewardship Committee of the Assembly, it is proposed to put one of our Church papers into every family of each church. In order to encourage this effort, the three papers have agreed to give one-half of every dollar collected from new subscribers to Benevolences.

This will be an opportunity for churches to meet their proportionate part and at the same time to place an assistant pastor in every home.

(*This item is of especial interest, the money having been given by four children, Mary Smith, age 12; Eugene, age 9; Anniebelle, age 8; Sidney, age 3, who earned it themselves on their little cotton patch. The dire needs of the little ones in the near East appealed to these children so strongly that the tithe of their cotton money was cheerfully given for its relief.—Ed.)

FOR THE SUFFERING ARMENIANS.

Miss Rebecca Caldwell, a member of Sugar Creek Church, and a former pupil of the editor, was teaching school at Kings Mountain, N. C., when the Lord promoted her to other work in another world.

Her month's salary of $50.00 was sent to her father, who could think of no use that would meet her wishes better than to give it to the suffering Armenians.

We will send it on its blessed mission with the happy assurance that if the redeemed are cognizant of what is done on earth, there will be joy in heaven.

SYRIAN-ARMENIAN RELIEF.

Dr. J. Y. Joyner has named February 22, Washington's birthday, as the time to launch the campaign in North Carolina for raising $200,000 as the part allotted to this State for the Relief of the suffering Syrian and Armenian children. There are four million people in these stricken countries, a majority of whom are women and children, who will starve to death unless aid is sent them from other countries. A benevolent society is undertaking to raise $30,000,000, two million of which is to be raised in this country, and $200,000 is the amount apportioned this State.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee, of which Dr. Joyner is chairman, I was asked to act as representative of the several denominations in the State. I hope that every Sunday School and every church, if possible, will take a collection for this most worthy object Sunday, February 23. All contributions should be sent to Mr. Joseph G. Brown, Raleigh, who is treasurer of the fund, and who has arranged to transmit all funds by wire, so that they may be immediately available. We trust all our Sunday Schools, and, so far as it can be done, our churches, will heed this call, and help these starving people.

PERSONALS.

The church at Forney, Tex., formerly connected with our Assembly, has united with the Northern Presbyterian Church of that town.

Rev. R. C. Long, who has been serving as a chaplain in the Army, and stationed at Camp Jackson, S. C., has changed his address to Richwood, W. Va.

Rev. Dr. A. D. P. Gilmour, of Spartanburg, S. C., has been called to the pastorate of the First Church, Danville, Va. He has given no decision, but has the call under consideration.

The many friends of our faithful evangelist, Rev. Letcher Smith, will learn with deep sympathy that his wife, Mrs. Mamie Campbell Smith, died at their home in Fayetteville, N. C., Friday, January 24, of influenza.

Rev. W. W. Arrowood, of the Synod of Appalachia, has been called by the church at Sharon, S. C., to succeed his father, the late Dr. W. B. Arrowood. This is a specimen of apostolic succession that speaks highly for the son.

Rev. U. D. Mooney, D.D., pastor of the Napoleon Avenue Church, New Orleans, will have the sympathy of the church in the death of his wife, which occurred January 17, death being due to pneumonia, following influenza.

The Committee on Home Missions for the Synod of Missouri has elected Rev. W. R. Dobyms, D.D., of St. Joseph, Mo., to succeed Rev. Trigg A. M. Thomas, D.D., as Superintendent of Home Missions and Evangelism for the Synod. Dr. Dobyms has the call under consideration but has not as yet announced his decision in the matter.

Lieut. S. M. Gattis, Jr., in the Raleigh News and Observer, tells how Chaplain B. R. Lacy won the title "Fighting Parson:" "Ben Lacy has been dubbed 'The Fighting Parson.' The other day when Fritz's batteries were extremely naughty he took a reel of wire, a telephone and a telescope and crawled out to a high hill between the lines and from there directed the fire of our batteries. He did this for three days hand running and we demolished several enemy batteries, put their roads practically out of commission and every time a Boche came into view Parson Lacy poured it into them. One particular instance is worth mentioning. He caught sight of a building that looked like a barracks way back of the line. He telephoned back its exact position, being one of the most skilled artillery officers in the outfit, and ordered concentrated fire on it, all guns firing at the same time. When the twelve guns spoke, the building collapsed. Then the parson scattered his fire and took them from all sides as they poured out of the building."

NORTH CAROLINA.

Greensboro—Rev. E. C. Murray, D.D., pastor of Alliance Church, has accepted a call to St. Paul's, N. C., and will move about February 5. Church treasurers will please note that Rev. C. E. Hodgkin, Greensboro, N. C., has been elected to succeed Dr. Murray as treasurer of Orange Presbytery.

Candor Field—Owing to the prevailing epidemic services and work generally have suffered in this field, but conditions are now improving. Rev. Robert S. Arrowood, Jr., son of the pastor here, who has been a chaplain for Camp Lee, has been appointed to Transport Service, and sent to Hoboken. Lieut. John B. Arrowood is still on duty in France, with his squadron.

The church at West End, though suffering from recent losses in its membership, is still encouraging in the faithfulness and activity of the members.

Charlotte—Pegram Street—On Sunday morning, February 2, a memorial service in honor of their late pastor, Rev. J. H. Dixon, was held in this church. Rev. W. S. Boyce, of the A. R. Presbyterian Church, a personal friend and a neighboring pastor, presided.

Charlotte Second—Rev. Dr. McGeachy, the beloved pastor of this church, has just been presented by the officers of the church, the congregation, and the Men's Benevolent Association, with a handsome Buick automobile. His former car had, from much usage, reached the condition of the "Deacon's One Horse Shay."

Mebane—Owing to the influenza the churches have been closed since last September, except three Sundays in November. On Sunday, January 19, the ban was lifted by the Health Board and the congregation rejoiced to worship again in the church.

Our Rally Day exercises had to be postponed from October 6 until November, and only a part of the original program could be carried out; however, one of the interesting features was the presenting by the pastor of one Bible and sixteen Testaments for reciting the Catechisms. We were delighted to receive notice from the committee that our school won the banner for Orange Presbytery.

Taylorsville—Rev. H. S. Allyn, M.D., Presbyterian missionary in Brazil for twenty-three years, who has been supplying the Taylorsville group of churches during the past year in the absence of their pastor, Dr. L. L. Moore, expects to sail from New York for Brazil about the first of March. Dr. Allyn has been making his home in Statesville for the past several months. His family will leave here Monday for a week's visit to Taylorsville, after which they will go to Richmond, Va., to await the sailing of their steamer, the Uberaba. Dr. Allyn will make farewell visits to his churches on the following dates: Shiloh on the first, Taylorsville on the second and New Salem on the third Sabbaths in February. After his return to Brazil Dr. Allyn's address will be Recife, E. de Pernambuco, care of the American College.—Statesville Landmark.

Concord Presbytery met in Mooresville in called session, January 31, 1919. Present, eight ministers and six ruling elders.

Rev. F. A. Barnes tendered his resignation as pastor of the Mooresville Second and Shearer Churches, and requested a letter of dismissal to the Presbytery of Roanoke. After hearing from the churches, stating that they reluctantly concurred, also numerous expressions of regret from members of Presbytery, his request was granted. Mr. Barnes goes to the Burton Memorial Church, in Danville, Va.

The place of the stated Spring meeting was changed from Concord First to Morganton.

The trustees of Mitchell College were given permission to put on a canvass for $50,000 for the college.

E. D. Brown, S. C.

The Synod's Evangelistic Work—Influenza has had almost complete sway and a large part of our churches have been closed, and where we could work it was much interfered with. Rev. William Black, under these adverse circumstances, conducted two meetings in January.

At LaGrange, where they have no pastor, thirty persons indicated their acceptance of Christ. Only two of these united with the Presbyterian Church, but they were men of influence and usefulness. Three promised to hold family worship and about 200 to read the Bible and pray daily. $84.15 was contributed for the Synod's work.

At Southport, Rev. J. W. Young, pastor, under the same adverse circumstances, about forty indicated their acceptance of Christ, of whom seventeen united with the Presbyterian Church. One came by letter. One person promised to hold family worship and about sixty to read the Bible and pray daily. $32.50 was contributed for the Synod's Mission Work.

A. W. C.

Deacons' Convention of Kings Mountain Presbytery—The Semi-Annual Convention of the Deacons of this Presbytery is to meet in the First Church of Gastonia, February 11, 12.

There are special reasons why this meeting will be of paramount importance, and it may be made of the very greatest value and benefit to the work of the Presbytery. Every one of our churches should be represented. Let them begin now to look forward to this and see that they have a representative on hand. A strong program is being prepared.

Brethren of the Presbytery, take notice in time. All will be entertained by the Gastonia Church.—Church Bulletin.

Charlotte—The annual joint communion of the Presbyterian Churches of Charlotte was held in the First Church, Sunday afternoon, February 2. The spacious building was well filled, and the services were solemn and impressive.

Rev. Dr. McGeachy presided, and spoke earnestly upon the subject of not resting upon what we have done, but that we should strive to advance to greater things.

Rev. John E. Wool, Rev. C. G. Lynch, Rev. W. R. McCalla, Rev. J. W. Orr, Rev. J. R. Bridges and Rev. Dr. A. S. Johnson took part in the services.

The coming together of such a large body of elders from city and county was a proof of the power of Presbyterianism in this section.

Orange Presbytery met in the First Presbyterian Church, Greensboro, N. C., January 28, 1919, in a called meeting, to consider the dissolution of the pastoral relation between Rev. E. C. Murray, D.D., and the Alamance Church, in view of his acceptance of a call from the St. Paul's Church, in Fayetteville Presbytery.

The following ministers and elders were present: E. C. Murray, D. I. Craig, C. E. Hodgin, S. M. Rankin, H. S. Bradshaw, O. G. Jones, E. F. Lee, G. W. Lee, R. M. Williams, C. P. Coble, T. M. McConnell, C. F. Myers, A. W. Crawford, and Wm. C. Rankin representing the Alamance Church, J. L. Sparks and A. T. Whitsett.

After hearing Dr. Murray at length in regard to the matter, and after hearing Mr. Rankin and a strong paper adopted by the church, most regretfully concurring in the request of their pastor, the Presbytery did dissolve the pastoral relation and granted Dr. Murray a certificate of dismission to Fayetteville Presbytery. Nearly all of the members present made tender and feeling remarks at the prospect of Dr. Murray's departure from us, and the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved: That in dissolving the pastoral relation between Dr. E. C. Murray and the Alamance Church, and in dismissing him to the Fayetteville Presbytery, we do so only because of his earnest request, concurred in by his church, and with the profoundest regret. Dr. Murray has been for many years one of the most useful and valuable members of Orange Presbytery, not only for his wise counsel, his sound judgment, his progressive Christian spirit and his kindly manners, but for his careful, painstaking and most efficient work as treasurer of the Presbytery and other important trusts. He has won the love and esteem of us all. We will greatly miss him. We pray God's richest blessing upon him and upon his family and upon his work as he goes from us and abides in his new field of labor.

Rev. C. E. Hodgin, Greensboro, N. C., was requested to act as treasurer of the Presbytery until the regular meeting of Presbytery in Reidsville, April 15, 1919. Therefore all monies from the churches and all matters concerning the finances should be sent to Rev. C. E. Hodgin.

Stated Clerk.

Charlotte—An elaborate program of church activities during the continuation of the "religious and social emergency" growing out of the demobilization of the American armies was developed for the Presbyterian Churches of Charlotte during the two sessions of the second and last day of conferences on this problem, held here last week. Capt. M. L. Swinehart, furloughed Presbyterian missionary to Korea, and Capt. F. L. Slaymaker, secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement of the Presbyterian Church, South, conducted the conferences, which were of a series being conducted for the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

Among the efforts discussed and approved as essential for the welfare of the church and the returned soldiers were the organization of Bible classes, the organization of a church club to remain open throughout the week to the members and their friends; personal individual conferences between the pastor and each soldier as the veteran returns to his home for the mutual understanding of each; and the manner in which the worship in the church should be conducted. Regarding the latter topic, it was declared as of the utmost importance that the sermons be plainly spoken and virile, and evangelistic in nature. The value of congregational singing was stressed, in view of the attention given community singing in army camps. The organization of soldiers' choruses by the various churches was urged.

Regarding employment it was the decision of the conference that the pastor and church officers should exercise themselves in the interest of the war veterans. The more thorough organization of work among boys and the training of men to lead this work was declared of urgent importance. In view of the after-war conditions in foreign missionary fields, especially in the near East, extended discussion was given to the matter of urging returned medical officers to join the ranks of the medical missionaries of the church, in addition to increasing whenever possible the number of religious missionaries and teachers.

Other religious efforts the continuation of which was considered vitally necessary were the group prayer meetings and family worship. Consideration also was given to a plan of co-operation between the white and negro churches.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Enoree Presbytery—By authority of paragraph 55 of the Form of Church Government, Enoree Presbytery is called to meet in the Second Church, Greenville, S. C., on April 8, at 7:30 p. m.

Columbia—Under the leadership of Mr. John W. Simpson the Sabbath School of the First Presbyterian Church is continuing to prosper. The Ladies' Bible Class raised among their own members in the two sections over $130 for Armenian and Syrian relief, and inspired by this liberality the Sabbath School was asked to give $250, but when the offering was received it amounted to over $300. The total offering of the congregation for this purpose was $650, and this amount was raised without any pressure and without any sermon on the subject.

Columbia—The Laymen's Missionary Movement will hold a conference in the First Presbyterian Church, Columbia, on Tuesday, February 25, to foster in every congregation in Congaree Presbytery a movement to enlist the interest of returning soldiers in Christian service, and in every other way to conserve the spiritual results of the war.

Capt. F. L. Slaymaker and Captain Swinehart, both of whom were actively engaged in Christian work before they entered the army, will lead in the discussion. The sessions will be held on February 25, at 10:30, at 4, and at 7:30.

Every congregation in the Presbytery should plan at once to be represented by the pastor, by some of the elders and deacons, and by representative laymen. Fuller details will be given in the local press.

Greenville—The annual report of the Second Church, Greenville, for the year ending December 31, 1918, showed a successful year's work despite war conditions. All the organizations of the church have been maintained. Two additional ruling elders, eight additional deacons and three additional trustees have been elected and thirty-five new members have been added to the roll. Ten others have united with the church since the first of this year. The church has ten elders, fifteen deacons and 400 members. For the nine months of the church year ending December 31, 1918, the Sunday School contributed $1,383.30 to all causes, being $504.12 more than was given last year during this period. The deacons of the church made the every members canvass last March and the people subscribed larger amounts for local causes and benevolences than in any previous year. The people presented the pastor with an automobile for a Christmas present. The annual union communion service of the four Presbyterian Churches in Greenville and the Monaghan Church was observed in the Second Church and was largely attended. The Ladies' Working Society, Ladies' Missionary Society and the Young People's Societies have done good work and the outlook for the church and all its organizations for the coming year is promising.

The Andrews and Georgetown Churches, which have so long been grouped together, have been divided, and the Home Mission Committee of the Presbytery of Harmony is putting a man at each place both to work that place and to develop the surrounding country as far as there is opportunity. Rev. H. A. Knox remains at Georgetown while Rev. D. M. Clark gives up the churches of Bethel and Beulah of this Presbytery to take the work at Andrews. He expects to take up the work the first of February. The town of Andrews is a growing town in this part of the State, and it is believed that a resident pastor there with time to devote to the work can accomplish much more. Mr. Clark's churches gave him up for this work with much regret, and only when Mr. Clark and the Presbytery felt that it was the best course to take.

The Easley Presbyterian Sunday School had its first Christmas tree and celebration that our children have ever enjoyed. Instead of making it altogether a receiving tree, it was also a giving one, as the price of admission was one or more oranges, which were later shipped to the Thornwell Orphanage in Clinton. When packed it was found that there were two and one-half boxes, of which our Sunday School is very proud. Preceding the distribution of gifts on the tree, the children from the Primary and Junior departments rendered a most attractive and entertaining little program consisting of drills, songs and recitations. The remembrances were numerous and valuable for each one. Even the Cradle Roll members were provided with big picture books, while the larger children each received, besides personal gifts, a bag of fruit and candy. With the coming of the new year there have also come new Sunday School and church duties. At last all the departments are organized for business and social work from the Willing Workers to the Teachers Study Class. The former provides for the little ones in the Primary and Junior departments, while the Intermediate composes our Christian Endeavor Society. The Study Class meets two nights each month, and on one night we have a social feature, serving light refreshments. So altogether we now feel that we are enjoying a good beginning to a better ending. The opportunity for work is very great.—Christian Observer.

ARKANSAS.

Tates Bluff—The new church building at Tates Bluff, Ark., was dedicated by the pastor, Rev. E. M. Munroe, at his last appointment there on the third Sabbath of January. The debt that had been on the church ever since it was built was paid off recently by some of the members who planted a cotton patch and gave the proceeds for that purpose.

E. M. M.

FLORIDA.

DeFuniak Springs—On January 12 we had our communion service for the first quarter of the new year. A large congregation was present and two members were received, one by letter and one on profession of faith.

On January 19 one of the deacons elected some months ago was duly ordained and installed, Col. W. W. Flournoy. This church now has an exceptionally fine set of men as elders and deacons.

With some splendid new material recently come into our midst, the outlook for growth and development in the church is now most promising. Daniel J. Currie, Pastor.

GEORGIA.

Griffin—Rev. J. Marion Stafford, of Florence, Ala., has accepted a call to this church, to succeed Rev. W. A. Murray, now of Shelby, N. C. Mr. Stafford has since the entrance of the United States into the war been in the service of his country, being at present director of Army Y. M. C. A. work at a camp near Sardis, Miss. He expects to begin his work at Griffin this month.

Commerce—At the recent special session of the Athens Presbytery, Rev. Jno. A. Simpson, formerly of the Augusta Presbytery, became a member of the Athens Presbytery, after standing the usual examination. One of the oldest ministerial members at this meeting, after Mr. Simpson had successfully passed his examination, declared that it was the most thorough and entirely satisfactory one that he had ever heard in all his ministerial experience. After this examination was concluded, the commission from the Commerce Presbyterian Church, consisting of Cols. Geo. L. Carson and R. L. J. Smith, placed the unanimous call of the Commerce Church in the hands of Mr. Simpson, who accepted same, and thereupon the following commission was appointed to install him as pastor of the Commerce Church: Rev. Sam'l. J. Cartledge, of the Central Church, Athens, Ga., to preside, preach the sermon and propound the usual constitutional questions; Rev. Isaac W. Waddell, D.D., of Marietta, Ga., to charge the pastor, and Ruling Elder Charles Newton, of Athens, to charge the people.

The installation services will take place next Sunday night, at the Presbyterian Church in Commerce, and invitations have been given to the members and pastors of all the sister churches in Commerce, as well as the public generally, to attend same, and a large attendance is confidently expected.

Mr. Simpson comes to the Commerce Church in the prime of life, with a splendid record of the success which he has previously had in winning souls to Christ, and all our people have given him a most cordial and Christian welcome to Commerce.

KENTUCKY.

Covington—Madison Avenue Church—The congregation of this church, of which Dr. I. Cochrane Hunt is the pastor, has recently elected to the board of deacons three splendid men: Messrs. W. S. Gray, Joseph H. Walker and H. C. Lilly, all of whom accepted and were regularly ordained and installed in a very impressive service on last Sunday. The church now has six elders and twelve deacons.

An opportunity, given last Sunday to aid the starving Armenian and Syrian children, met with an instant response of approximately $200 from the Sunday School, societies and church at large.

At the evening service last Sunday a packed house had the privilege of hearing Madame Angelini of the Waldensian Church of Rome, Italy deliver a most eloquent and inspiring address on the "Part of Italy in the World War, with especial reference to the reconstruction of Italy and the opportunity of the Waldensian Church in this connection."

The congregations are normal again after the influenza epidemic and the church is busily planning a year of constructive development. An unusually large percentage of the young people of the church is attending the evening service each Sabbath.

Cor.

Louisville—Berry Boulevard Church—Rev. William T. McElroy was installed pastor of this church by a commission of Louisville Presbytery on Sunday, January 26, at 3 p. m. Dr. David M. Sweets presided and propounded the constitutional questions; Dr. T. M. Hawes preached a most appropriate sermon from the text, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world;" Rev. W. H. Hopper delivered the charge to the pastor, and Rev. Alfred A. Higgins the charge to the people. Instead of the usual "charge," Mr. Higgins gave the congregation "credit" for many things. The church has a Sunday School enrollment larger than the church membership; it "went over the top" in "the $3,000,000 Drive" last year; attendance on church services is more than fifty per cent of membership; the men of the church always form a large part of the congregation; the men have recently made needed repairs on the building, doing the actual work with their own hands; the building itself was erected by voluntary labor of its members, even the women assisting in carrying the material to the workmen. As chairman of the home mission committee Mr. Higgins announced that 100 handsome new opera chairs had been ordered by the committee to replace chairs that were badly worn and out of repair through many years' use. Plans are under way to secure special contributions from a few Bible classes to meet the cost of the chairs. Mr. McElroy has served the church as supply since May 1, 1918, in connection with his work as pastor of the Harvey Browne Memorial Church at St. Matthews, and will continue to devote one-half his time to each of the two churches.

Heidelberg—The work at Beechwood Seminary, the "Christian Endeavor School," is very gratifying. We have better attendance and more hearty co-operation on the part of the parent but there are so many worthy ones who must go neglected because there is no provision for them. In our boarding department we meet the expenses by the money obtained from those who stay at the dormitory, but there are scores of children who will never be able to attend unless parents of other sections who have been blessed more abundantly with this world's goods are willing to give that these might grow. Here is one of many letters coming to us: "Mr. McDuffey:

"Dear Sir: I thought I would write to you about my son going to school down there. Could you furnish work for him to help pay for his schooling? We are not able to pay for all his schooling. We haft to buy our corn. We all got down with the measles last spring and didn't get to make much corn. You have been reckedminded to be a good man by my mother and other friends. Do the best you can for him and we will prais you for it. Yours truly."

This is the kind of appeals we have to turn away. The mountain boys fought alongside yours. Perhaps some of them fell beside yours. If you want to erect a memorial or give a thanks offering, why not establish a scholarship or give toward a much needed school building for the brothers of the lads who fought so nobly with your sons.

LOUISIANA.

Presbytery of New Orleans—Upon a constitutional request I hereby call a special meeting of the Presbytery of New Orleans to be held on Tuesday, February 11, 1919, at 11:30 a. m., in the First Presbyterian Church, New Orleans, for the transaction of the following business:

1. To release Rev. C. O'N. Martindale from his work as evangelist of the Upper Tangipahoa Parish field, to take effect March 1.
2. To grant him a certificate of dismissal to the Presbytery of Enoree, Synod of South Carolina.
3. To transact any other business made necessary by the above action.

J. S. Land, Moderator.

Attest: Louis Voss, Stated Clerk.

MISSISSIPPI.

McComb—Rev. Fred C. Brown, of Tampa, Fla., accepted a call to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church here.

Meridian—Rev. A. A. Little, D.D., formerly of Atlanta, Ga., has entered upon his work in this city as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. He preached on January 16 his first sermon as pastor and was heard by large congregations.

VIRGINIA.

Lexington—In the absence of the pastor, Rev. Thos. Key Young, who was preaching at Hampden-Sidney, his pulpit was occupied at both services, Sunday, January 26, by Rev. Dr. J. R. Howerton. Before the morning service Dr. Howerton moderated a meeting of the session at which we received on profession of faith a young man who is a member of the Bible class taught by Elder H. C. Wise. The public profession was made at the morning service, and Dr. Howerton baptized the new church members. —A. H.

Olivet Presbyterian Church—Notwithstanding the prevalence of influenza among so many families in our congregation during the month of January, the doors of the church have been kept open and the attendance on both the Sunday School and preaching service has been fairly good.

On January 12 our pastor, Rev. W. W. Sprouse, stated to the congregation that the quota assigned Olivet to be raised for the Armenian Relief Fund was $50, and he made a stirring appeal in behalf of the starving people. His hearers responded with an offering in cash that has amounted up to date to $164.34.

Staunton Third—Our church membership has only thirty-one names enrolled, but our Sunday School is in a flourishing condition and all church services are well attended.

On January 12 our pastor, Rev. W. W. Sprouse, stated that though we were few in number, he wished us to have a part in the great work of aiding the starving Armenians, and hoped that we would be able to raise the $25 at least that had been assigned us as our portion. Offerings from the congregation and Sunday School, including $5 from the C. E. Society of the church, totalled in cash $110.

On January 18 a congregational meeting was held for the election of an additional deacon. Mr. E. H. Gough was nominated and unanimously elected. —Cor.

Richmond First—An informal social reception was given to the Presbyterian Missionaries and their families now in Richmond at the First Presbyterian Church last week. Quite a number spend part of their furlough here. The influenza has cut short for the present their itinerary, and they have taken advantage of taking a course at the Seminary.

The Woman's Auxiliary discovered that there were about twenty in the city, and so proceeded to get busy. Five were present from Japan, seven from China, and eight from Korea. Twenty minutes were given to each country to illustrate the life of the missionary, which was done with much interest and profit to the large congregation present, the missionaries illustrating their work in their native costumes. Refreshments were served and an evening of getting acquainted with the workers was delightfully enjoyed. A large box had been prepared in which valuable presents had been placed for the missionaries.

Dr. Henry M. Woods recently preached at the First Church and quietly told of some Bible dictionary work that he was doing in Chinese. He was at the meeting presented with a check for $500 to help in his work, the presentation speech being made by Rev. Dr. James P. Smith. Dr. McFaden, the pastor, presided. The members of the Training School were present in full force and added much to the enjoyment of the evening.

There were present from Japan: Rev. Dr. Wm. Buchanan, Daniel Buchanan, Wm. McIlwaine, Miss Annie McAlpine, and Miss Jean McAlpine.

From China: Dr. H. M. Woods, Miss Lilly Woods, Dr. J. B. Woods, Mrs. J. B. Woods, James Woods, Jr., Wm. Woods, and Miss Elizabeth Woods.

From Korea: Dr. W. D. Reynolds, Mrs. Patsy Bolling Reynolds, Miss Carey Reynolds, Miss Ella Reynolds, Rev. S. D. Winn, Miss Emily Winn, Rev. S. K. Dodson, and Rev. P. S. Crane.

Story and Incident

Mallock, the Atheist.

I HAVE had a sad case this afternoon," said Dr. Ross, as he came into his dining room and threw himself into his easy chair. "Just give me a cup of tea quickly, my dear, I have a consultation at five."

Mrs. Ross put down her knitting. "Have you, John; who is it?"

The doctor lay back in his chair. "You heard of Mallock, the atheist," he said. "Well, he has one daughter, about nine; this afternoon she fell downstairs backwards, injuring her spine very seriously indeed, I am afraid, but I have telegraphed to Sir Spencer Blake, so we shall see what he says about it."

"Poor child!" said Mrs. Ross. "Is she in much pain?"

"No, very little," said the doctor. "And that, to my mind, is one of the worst symptoms. It is pitiable to see her father's distress; it is very evident they are all in all to each other."

"What sort of a man is he?" asked Mrs. Ross. "Of course I have often heard him spoken of. He is a very bad man, is he not?"

"Of course I know very little of him, but his face interests me somehow. He looks like a man who has suffered. I wonder how he came to be an atheist! I must go now. I will tell you about him when I come back."

An hour later he came in again, looking very grave. "Mary, I have come to take you to my little patient. Yes!" as she looked amazed, "poor Mallock's child. It is a case for womanly help and sympathy, if ever there was one. Blake's opinion is that the child probably will not last till morning. I have just told Mallock, and he is in dreadful grief. I told him I should bring you."

Mrs. Ross felt decidedly nervous as they approached the house; she had made a mental picture of "Mallock, the atheist," and the prospect of so soon seeing him was not reassuring. The doctor took her straight upstairs, bade her lay aside her bonnet and mantle in the little dressing room, and then opened the bedroom door. "Well, Mr. Mallock," he said, quietly, "I have brought my wife."

"It is very kind of you and of her," a grave but not unpleasant voice replied, and Mrs. Ross found herself face to face with "Mallock, the atheist." Her first thought was how unlike he was to the idea she had formed of him; he was, as she saw, a dark, grave man, but looking young for his thirty-five years. Her next was how sad and grief-stricken he seemed; Mrs. Ross' kind heart went out to him at once.

"How is my little patient?" she said, clasping his hand. His voice trembled as he tried to answer her, and she turned to the bed where the little fair-haired girl lay.

Mrs. Ross noticed an open book on the bed, and, to her amazement, saw it was a Testament. Involuntarily she glanced at Mr. Mallock.

He answered her look. "It is years since I opened that book, Mrs. Ross, but tonight Daisy asked me to read it to her, and I could not refuse one of her last requests."

"Then she is not—" and Mrs. Ross paused.

"When her mother died she made me promise her that Daisy should have liberty to read if she wished."

Then Daisy's voice broke in. "Will you go on reading, daddy?"

He bent over her tenderly. "I think this lady will read it to you now, Daisy, and I will hold you in my arms again; then, perhaps, you will feel easier."

Daisy gave a contented sigh as she nestled down. "That is nice, daddy." Then, as Mrs. Ross took the book, she said, "About the Good Shepherd, please," adding courteously, "It is very kind of you to read to me."

Mrs. Ross read the parable and another chapter. When she stopped Daisy said: "I like that about the Good Shepherd carrying the little tired lambs best. It is like you holding me, is it not, daddy? It rests me so."

"Does your back hurt you now, my darling?"

"No, daddy, dear, only I am so tired."

A happy thought came to Mrs. Ross. "Would you like me to sing to you, dear?" she asked; "then perhaps you would get to sleep."

"Oh, please do," Daisy said.

Mrs. Ross began in her sweet voice, a little tremulous now, "Loving Shepherd of Thy Sheep."

"Again, please," the little tired voice said, drowsily, when she had finished. Mrs. Ross sang it once more, and then saw that Daisy had fallen asleep. A few minutes more and the doctor came in. He looked at the child, and then sat down opposite his wife.

"Any better?" she queried, softly.

He shook his head and rose as Daisy moved.

"My darling," her father said, tenderly.

At last, toward morning, it was evident the end was near. "Daddy, dear," she murmured, "I think the Good Shepherd will soon come for me, don't you?"

Her father steadied his voice to answer: "I think your pain will soon be over, darling."

She seemed restless. "Sing, please." And once more the old hymn sounded in the sick room; there was a minute's silence, and then Daisy said in a clear voice: "The Good Shepherd will come for you, too, daddy."

They were her last words; a deep-drawn breath told Dr. Ross that Daisy was indeed safe, folded in the arms of the Good Shepherd. Very gently the doctor took her from her father's arms and laid her on the bed, then signed to his wife to leave the room.

A few days later, when little Daisy had been laid to rest beside her mother, her father came to say good-bye to Mrs. Ross.

"How can I ever thank you," he said, brokenly, "for your kindness to my child?"

Mrs. Ross put out her hands to him, and there were tears in her eyes.

"I shall be far more than repaid for anything I may have done," she said, "if you will make me one promise."

"Anything in the world, dear Mrs. Ross."

"Then will you promise me once more to read the Bible, and at least see if it is not possible for you, too, to enter into the fold of the Good Shepherd?"

He walked away and looked through the window a minute. When he returned, he said, abruptly:

"That is a hard thing, Mrs. Ross. How can I believe in the Good Shepherd? Would such a one have taken my child from me?"

"Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," said Mrs. Ross, softly. Then, as he held out his hand to her, "I claim your promise, Mr. Mallock."

"For your sake and little Daisy's, you have it," he replied. "Good-bye, dear Mrs. Ross; never shall I forget your kindness."

"Good-bye and God bless you, Mr. Mallock, and may he bring you to the knowledge of His truth."

The tears were in Mrs. Ross' eyes as she saw him leave the house, and she knelt down and prayed for him that he might, indeed, enter into the fold and become one of the flock of the Good Shepherd.

For a long time it seemed as if her prayer was not to be answered, and then, when hope was almost dead, she had a note. Just the words:

"I have kept my promise, dear friend, and He has opened my eyes. Yours ever grateful. Hugh Mallock."

Two more years passed and then Mrs. Ross heard from him again. This time it was to tell her that, having no kindred or ties in England, he felt himself specially marked out for his Master's service in the mission field, and to ask for her prayers on his behalf.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriages.

Miller-Boney—At the residence of Mrs. Ellen Boney, Wallace, N. C., January 7, 1919, Sergeant Clarence Mason Miller, of Rock Hill, S. C., and Miss Margret Ellen Boney, of Wallace, N. C., Rev. W. P. M. Currie, officiating.

Finlay-Merritt—At the manse, Piedmont, S. C., Christmas day, by Rev. Albert E. Wallace, Mr. Lloyd Isaac Finlay and Miss Mary Magdalene Merritt, both of Piedmont, S. C.

Harp-Jones—In Archer, Fla., on December 23, 1918, by Rev. T. Peyton Walton, Mr. Joel Walker Harp and Miss Bertha Jones, both of Archer, Fla.

Hurst-Welsh—At the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. Lula Shannon, in Monroe, N. C., on Thursday evening, September 26, 1918, by Dr. H. E. Gurney, pastor of the Monroe Presbyterian Church, Mr. Roy LeGrand Hurst and Miss Violet Beatrice Welsh, both of Chesterfield, S. C.

Deaths.

Goldsmith—Private John N. Goldsmith died at Camp Hancock, November 29, 1918. He was 24 years old and leaves a wife, father, mother, two brothers, two sisters, to mourn his loss. He was a true soldier and died in the faith. A Christian since childhood.

Albert E. Wallace, Pastor.

Boggs—Charles Jackson Boggs, born at Liberty, S. C., January 7, 1862, died at Pendleton, S. C., January 17, 1919, leaving a widow, one son and two daughters. He was an elder in the Pendleton Church twenty-five years, a man of earnest piety, always interested in religious matters.

Sherrill—William, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Sherrill, Mt. Ulla, N. C., was taken to the Saviour's bosom on Christmas Eve. He was 19 months old. May the Covenant God comfort the bereaved parents. "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Neil—Thomas Watson Neil, son of the late Capt. A. G. Neil, of Steele Creek, died in Cisco, Texas, January 3, 1919, following a paralytic stroke on November 28, from which he never regained consciousness. Mr. Neil was born August 8, 1847. During the Civil War he fought in the Confederate Army, being a member of Company F, 49th North Carolina Regiment. Thirty-three years ago he removed from North Carolina to Texas, making his home during this time at Cisco. Surviving Mr. Neil are his widow, formerly Miss Emma Watson, of York County, S. C., and two sons.

Smith—Mrs. Mamie Campbell Smith, the beloved wife of Rev. Letcher Smith, fell asleep at their home, Fayetteville, N. C., Friday morning, January 24, after an illness of about two weeks of influenza, followed by pneumonia. A devoted wife, a beautiful, unselfish Christian life has gone from us to receive the everlasting reward from her Lord whom she loved and served.

V. G. Smth.

George—Died at his home in Morriston, Fla., on January 9, 1919, Barnett George, an old and highly respected citizen. He was born in the old Fantville neighborhood, in October, 1866, and was married to Miss Florence McBride, February 3, 1901. For thirty years he was connected with the Seaboard Railroad, of which he was a faithful and trusted employee. For several years he was a great sufferer. His wife and three brothers are left behind and mourn his loss.

REV. JOHN H. DIXON.

The following resolutions were passed by the Pegram Street Presbyterian Church with reference to the death of their pastor, Rev. John H. Dixon:

Whereas, it hath pleased our Heavenly Father to call so suddenly our beloved pastor, Rev. J. H. Dixon, to lay aside his ministry in the church on earth to enter into his reward in the Church Triumphant; and whereas, we, the congregation of Pegram Street Church, deplore the great loss to our church and community, and whereas, we desire to give some expressions to our love and esteem for him and to our sense of loss, and knowing the great loss our community suffers in his death, we desire to put on record the following resolutions:

1st. That in the death of our pastor we lose a great leader, a loyal and zealous pastor, a firm and strong defender of the faith, one who yearned for the salvation of souls.

2nd. Although feeble in health, he was found active in the Master's cause until the summons came so suddenly and his work was ended in our house of worship in the presence of his congregation.

3rd. The children of our community, with whom he loved to play and to whom he loved to preach, will miss him greatly. His genial spirit always attracted the children and they all loved him.

4th. In his death we recognize the hand of God and bow in humble submission to his will.

5th. That we extend to his bereaved wife our deep sympathy and commend her to the tender compassion of our Lord and Saviour.

6th. That a copy of these resolutions be placed on our Church records, that a copy be sent to the bereaved wife and a copy to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

A TRIBUTE.

Rev. Jno. H. Dixon.

The session and members of the Villa Heights A. R. P. Church, of Charlotte, N. C., touched with the deep sorrow which has come upon our community by reason of the death of Rev. John H. Dixon, who for the period of two years ministered as pastor of our neighboring church, Pegram Street Presbyterian Church, deem it fitting to record this memorial of its appreciation:

(1) Rev. Mr. Dixon, during the short period of his ministry, endeared himself, not only to his own congregation, but to the entire community of which we as a congregation form a part.

(2) As a brother minister and pastor he was of that splendid co-operative type and through this method of work as it was conducted by the respective pastors of these two sister denominations the Christian spirit of brotherly kindness was developed and used as a means of grace to the community.

(3) As a minister of the Gospel he was a firm defender of the faith and a faithful advocate of the great cardinal doctrines of salvation. His genial spirit made of him an optimistic herald of the Truth.

(4) As a man among men, a citizen of the community, and a neighbor and friend he was held in the highest esteem.

(5) In his death we recognize the hand of God and bow in humble submission to His unerring will.

(6) As a congregation, pastor and people, we wish to extend our heartfelt sympathy to the stricken wife in her hour of sorrow and loneliness and to the congregation in the great loss it has sustained.

We commend the bereaved wife and the shepherdless congregation to the love of God the Father, the tender compassion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ and to the comfort of the Holy Spirit who has been sent into the world to "give beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

(7) We request that a minute of this be placed upon the records of our session book and that a copy of the same be placed in the hands of the bereaved wife and the sorrowing congregation.

PRESBYTERY IN APRIL.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl eight years old. I go to school and am in the third grade. Miss Josie McNeill is my teacher. I have a pet kitten and its name is Mabel. This is my second letter to you. I go to Sunday School at Ashpole. My mamma is my teacher. My papa takes your paper and I like to read the stories and letters. Presbytery is going to meet at our church in April. I will close.

Your little friend,

Mary Louise McCormac.

Rowland, N. C.

LIKES HER TEACHER.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl six years old. I am in the first grade at school. Miss McColeman is my teacher. I like her fine. Santa Claus brought me a doll and some tinker toys. I go to Sunday School at Ashpole. Mrs. A. L. Bullock is my teacher. I will close hoping my letter will not reach the waste basket.

Your little friend,

Mildred Treva McCormac.

A DEAR BABY SISTER.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl eight years old and am in the third grade. My teacher is Miss Vivian Misenheimer and I like her fine. I have three brothers and one dear little baby sister. Rev. E. D. Brown is our pastor and we love him very much. I go to Sunday School every Sunday I can. I like to read the little letters in the Standard. Why was Moses not allowed to go to the promised land?

Your little friend,

MARY JANE'S BIT.

The hair of Mary Jane, who was Elizabeth's favorite doll, was falling out at an alarming rate. Elizabeth brushed it, shampooed it, and even used father's hair tonic on it. Yet the little ivory brush collected more and more glistening threads of gold and the head of poor Mary Jane became more and more bald. Elizabeth asked her mother whether it would be wise to buy a new wig for her cherished Mary Jane—a wig of real hair; a wig that would curl naturally and that should be brown instead of yellow.

Mother agreed that it would give Mary Jane just the added touch that she most sadly needed in order to become a truly delightful dolly.

But mother also said that, charming as that touch would be, it was an expensive one in time of war. Elizabeth herself must give it to her almost bald-headed darling, war time or not. Elizabeth could do errands and perform certain new duties that in time would earn enough money to buy the longed-for wig.

So, early and late, Elizabeth worked for her Mary Jane. No matter how tired she was, she always roused herself to go in search of mother's spectacles; no matter how interesting the game, she hunted for the lost needle or pin.

The cents began to rattle in her little bank. When she shook it wildly to and fro, a joyous clatter rang through the house. Whenever Elizabeth was discouraged, whenever errands seemed many and the pay small, the family were awakened by a sudden cickety-click, cickety-clank! At a sound so pleasant sorrows flew away not only from the breast of Elizabeth, but from all those who dwelt within the house; for, after all, there is nothing that swallows up troubles or worries much quicker than glad sounds. Sometimes the sound is a bird; sometimes a brook; sometimes a crackling fire; at times it is music. And sometimes it is only a happy voice. Just try it and see!

Well, the money in the bank grew and grew. The beautiful brown wig, the naturally curly, brown wig, that Elizabeth had already priced, could now be bought. Elizabeth skipped to school with her money tied neatly in a fresh handkerchief to show the girls and boys. Well she knew that when afternoon came the wig would rest for all time on the head of her Mary Jane.

But when the morning exercises were over, a lady rose beside the principal and said: "Children, I have come over here to tell you about your little sisters and brothers in Belgium. I have come to let you know how hungry they are—lost not only from mothers and fathers, but from homes and from all that they once held dear. They were exactly as you are—happy, contented girls and boys. They had comforts and pleasures just as you have. But now—they have nothing and—"

Before the lady could finish Elizabeth rose from her seat, rushed to the platform, and, sobbing, thrust all her money into the hands of the lady and said:

"Oh, give them this!"

The lady's voice sounded queer as she said to Elizabeth: "Will your mother let you give all this money away without asking her permission?"

Not a sound could be heard, except the voice of Elizabeth:

"It's mine! You see, I earned it myself to buy a naturally curly, brown wig for Mary Jane. She's waited all these weeks for it, but I guess she can keep on waiting a little longer!"

Then a strange thing happened. Right there in the school chapel people began to clap their hands. People began to laugh, and some even stamped their feet.

But the best part of all was the next day, when every little boy and every little girl went into the school room with his or her own separate offering for the Belgian children. Some brought ten cents, some brought five, some only a cent. But it was Elizabeth's generous act that started the gifts.

The lady sent Elizabeth a beautiful ribbon, woven of the national colors of Belgium—a ribbon to tie Mary Jane's few remaining golden wisps of hair. Elizabeth has decided to let the ribbon take the place of the once-longed-for wig. For Mary Jane has now taken on a new and altogether distinctive air: a certain added dignity, as if she, too, had done her bit.—Ex.

MARJORIE'S ALMANAC.

Robins in the treetops,
Blossoms in the grass,
Green thing a-growing
Everywhere you pass.
Sudden little breezes,
Showers of silvery dew,
Black bough and bent twig
Budding out anew.
Pine tree and willow tree,
Fringed elm and larch—
Don't you think that May time's
Pleasanter than March?

Apples in the orchard
Mellowing one by one,
Strawberries upturning
Soft cheeks to the sun.
Roses faint with sweetness,
Lilies fair of face,
Drowsy scents and murmurs
Haunting every place,
Lengths of golden sunshine,
Moonlight bright as day—
Don't you think that summer's Pleasanter than May?

Roger in the corn patch
Whistling Negro songs,
Pussy by the hearthside,
Romping with the tongs.
Chestnuts in the ashes
Bursting through the rind,
Red leaf and gold leaf
Rustling down the wind,
Mother doin' peaches
All the afternoon—
Don't you think that autumn's
Pleasanter than June?

Little fairy snowflakes
Dancing down the flue—
Old Mr. Santa Claus,
What is keeping you?
Twilight and firelight,
Shadows come and go,
Merry chimes of sleigh bells
Tinkling through the snow,
Mother knitting stockings,
Pussy's got the ball—
Don't you think that winter's
Pleasanter than all?

Educational

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond.

Dr. Campbell Morgan, of London, will be the James Sprunt Lecturer at the Seminary next Fall. His subject will be, "The Ministry of the Word," a subject which he has made peculiarly his own. He will treat it in ten lectures, beginning November 4 and ending November 14.

Dr. Morgan had agreed to deliver these lectures at Union Seminary in 1915 but when the war broke out he asked a postponement, as he felt that he could not leave his people in the time of their distress, and not until now has he been able to fix another date. While pastor of Westminster Chapel, in London, his health began to give down so seriously that he was constrained to give up that onerous charge and rest a while. He was succeeded there by Dr. Jowett, for some years pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. When Dr. Morgan's health was restored he became pastor of the famous Highbury Quadrant Church, London, his present charge. Many of our ministers who have waited long for the announcement of the time when the great preacher would give these lectures at the Seminary will wish to arrange their other engagements so as to be in Richmond at that time, November 4-14, 1919.

Dr. C. Alphonso Smith, whose James Sprunt Lectures drew such large crowds and excited such widespread interest, has been prevented from putting the finishing touches on his lectures for publication by pressure of work incident to his removal from the University of Virginia to the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, but he writes the Seminary that they are at last finished and going through the press. They will appear under the title of Key Note Studies in Key Note Books, and will undoubtedly have a very wide circulation. No series of lectures yet given on this famous foundation have been more interesting and stimulating than these illuminating studies of Scriptural books by a layman and literary expert. The James Sprunt Lectureship is creating year by year a very valuable Christian literature.

On the last Sunday in January our foreign mission fields were unusually well represented at both services in the Seminary Chapel, Mr. William A. McIlwaine, of Kochi, Japan, a member of the Senior class, being the preacher at the morning service, and five of our missionaries in Korea being present at the evening service, when Dr. W. D. Reynolds gave his interesting stereopticon lecture on Korea.

There are between thirty and forty of our ministers and missionaries attending the mid-winter ministers' course at the Seminary. They are enthusiastic in regard to the work, and many of them have already expressed the intention to return next winter for the special courses on modern isms, modern methods of church work, pulpit delivery, and the like.

Mallock, the Atheist.

He went to the west coast of Africa, and there through his instrumentality many were added to the faith which once he denied, and there in time he sealed his faith with his blood, being cruelly tortured and then put to death by the native chiefs in one of their numerous attacks on the mission station. No stone marks the spot in that far-off land where he who was once Mallock, the atheist, lies, but his memory lives in many a convert's heart, and beneath the palm trees he lies and there, "after life's fitful fever, he sleeps well."—Anne Haynes, in London Sunday School Times.

The World Unsafe.

IN a train running down to a sea beach near one of our Southern cantonments, last Summer, I was crowded into a vestibule end of the car, where a stand of candy, chewing gum and soft drinks further impeded the congested traffic.

The enterprising huckster of these wares was turning—and overturning—the honest penny up and down the aisles with his raucous "ice-cold coco-cola, ten cents a bottle," while the stand was left in charge of a little girl, perhaps seven years old. A slim little maid she was, with that eager, anxious look peculiar to those who share the burdens of bread winning early.

Trade was brisk; it was a hot day and many picnic parties were headed for the beach, interspersed with furloughed soldiers from the camp. Up and down the aisles they moved in their lazy slouch, joking the passengers and one another about the slowness of the trip, and the inexplicable delays.

"Say, Jud, I been on here long enough to need another shave," chuckled a smooth faced chap.

"Jud" looked at his wrist watch; "it's near about time to start back, as per schedule."

One lad was deaf—or pretending to be—and causing great merriment among his comrades by his answers to their shouted questions.

"Say—Eddie—you goin' in bathin'?"

"Huh? wadin'? sure I'm going in wadin'."

"Hey, Eddie, you like swimming?"

"Like wimmen? You're dead right, I do!" etc., etc.

Many of them stopped beside the little vender of soft drinks, and in gentle, jovial sort of way, "had fun with her" over her prices and her wares.

"How about excess profits, sister?" from one brown faced fellow. "If you make so much off of us, you'll get in bad with your Uncle Sam."

"How much those drinking cups? Fifteen cents? Six of us'll buy one and you can c'llect two and a half cents from each one of us—how's that?" said another.

But the little maid was left smiling when the group surged back into the aisle and wedged themselves into odd spaces.

Shrill voiced youngsters had bought all the cherry colas from her, and the chewing gum market was cornered, when I looked up again, to see a slightly different sort of passenger standing over the tray of articles. He was a sallow, sharp-eyed chap, of uncertain nationality, and still more uncertain morality—and he was bullying and bluffing the small girl by turns.

"Aw—yer dippy to ask ten cents for that junk—five's a plenty. See here, I'll give thirty for six of those boxes and those fifteen cent packages—I'll pay a quarter for two."

"No," answered the child, timidly, "my father, he tells me what to charge—no, you can't take 'em for that."

The undesirable citizen lowered his voice, but persisted in his attempt to browbeat the child, whose father was in another car by that time.

I did not hear much of the conversation, but I could see the distress and apprehension on her face, and I was conscious of the usual virtuous indignation at such behaviour.

The young man scooped up a handful of trifles, dumped down a small amount of money, and disregarding her bewildered appeal, turned to go—when he found himself face to face with a silent group of khaki clad boys who had mustered with one impulse in the aisle!

"I guess your arithmetic's rusty," said the foremost, laying a particularly firm hand on the sharper's shoulder, "just shell out the right amount to 'sister' here, or return the goods."

"What you buttin' in for?" demanded the delinquent, red and ruffled.

"I guess its our business to make the world unsafe for scoundrels," drawled a long, loosely knit fellow further back.

"Get busy!" came the preemptory order from the spokesman, and to my unutterable satisfaction, I saw that shabby trickster compelled to return every bit of unlawful property.

The whistle blew for the beach station, and I watched the young defenders of the nation crowd out, laughing and waving their hands to 'sister.' And I thought gratefully how safe are our destinies in the hands of these great-hearted, quick-handed fellows, who propose to make the world unsafe for scoundrels!—Janet E. Bryan, in Presbyterian.

On January 18, 1919, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, Miss Rebecca Neal Caldwell

"Saw a hand we did not see,
That beckoned her away;
She heard a voice we did not hear,
That would not let her stay."

Rejoicing she went to meet her Saviour, and on Sabbath afternoon, in the Sugar Creek cemetery, in the beautiful sunshine, a large crowd of sorrowing friends stood by her grave and sang the sweet songs of Zion; her beloved pastor read from Revelation: "He showed me a pure river of water clear as crystal proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb," and we felt that at that hour she was walking by the river basking in the sunshine of His love. We laid her to rest by the side of her precious mother (who left her in her school days), and in a long row of Caldwelles, who for five generations had been faithful to Sugar Creek.

Her grave was covered with beautiful flowers, a tribute of love from friends and kindred to whom she was always so loyal; her school children found in her love and faithfulness and grieved at the passing away of their teacher.

She was a granddaughter of J. Milton Caldwell, and in the last months of his life, when so feeble, she ministered so kindly to him.

May her broken-hearted loved ones be able to say:

Darling, we would not call thee back to earth,
Tho' flower and bird and star of hope thou wert;
Nor take from thee thy glorious spirit-birth,
To still the yearnings of a human heart.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Inasmuch as God in His infinite wisdom has removed by death our friend and fellow deacon, Clifton C. Hayes, we, the deacons of the Second Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, N. C., have adopted the following resolutions:

First. That we bow in this, as in all things, to the will of the Most High and remember with gratitude the assurance of His Word, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints."

Second. That we recall with affectionate interest his fellowship in the Gospel and his victory over sin through the grace of Christ.

Third. That we shall cherish his memory and hold in enduring esteem the godly widow and children he has left behind him to carry on his name and his work for the Master.

Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minute book and another copy furnished his family, and be published in the Presbyterian Standard.

Respectfully submitted,
H. J. Allison,
A. E. McCausland,
John W. Sheppard,
Committee.

IN MEMORIAM.

*Murdock Gilchrist McRae.
Ernest Lathrop Austin.
Arthur James Medlin.*

Whereas, Murdock Gilchrist McRae, born January 26, 1897; Ernest Lathrop Austin, born April 24, 1881, and Arthur James Medlin, born November 1, 1892, three beloved members of Class No. 2 of Maxton Presbyterian Sunday School, who had gladly responded to the need of their country in the great world conflict recently terminated, and while engaged in the service of their county, the first two being in preparation for overseas service and the last named at the front in France, were called to the great Beyond in the providence of the God of Battles, who bringeth glory to Himself and to His kingdom as well through the death of one of His servants as through the life of another, who hath said that no man liveth to himself and no man dieth to himself, whose ways are past finding out, but who doeth all things well, and in whom we live and move and have our being, whose we are and whom we should serve.

Now, therefore, be it resolved by the Maxton Presbyterian Sunday School, assembled on the 29th day of December, 1918, as follows:

That in the passing of these three young soldiers of freedom on October 3, 1918; October 4, 1918, and November 4, 1918, respectively, America has lost three of its worthy sons—soldiers stalwart, brave and true, patriots whose love of country was first and foremost when her honor was assailed, who waited not "to reason why" but went forth to "do or die."

That the town of Maxton has lost three of its highly respected, useful and justly popular citizens.

That the congregation of the Maxton Presbyterian Church notes with deep sadness the vacancies in their accustomed pews and now regards with sorrowful but proud hearts the golden stars adorning its service emblem in memory of these who were shrouded in the folds of its noble counterpart.

That from our Sunday School there have been taken three well loved attendants whose presence is sadly missed, and from Class No. 2 have gone in person but not from memory three whose smiling faces and generous natures were a joy and a help to others.

But be it further resolved, that while we contemplate with profound sorrow these sacrifices upon their country's altar, we yet recognize how great was the cause in which they died, how high and noble its purposes, and while we cannot always understand God's plans and purposes in the deaths of our friends and loved ones, we yet bow in humble submission to the Divine Will, recognizing our dependence upon Him and His loving kindness toward all His creatures.

Be it further resolved, that these resolutions be spread upon the minute book of our Sunday School and that copies be sent to the Presbyterian Standard and to the Scottish Chief for publication, and that copies be furnished to the respective families of the departed.

G. B. Patterson,
H. C. MacNair,
S. B. McLean,
Committee.

IN MEMORIAM.

"And I heard a voice from heaven saying, blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth; yea saith the Spirit that they may rest from their labors: and their works do follow them." Rev. 14:13.

Whereas, it hath pleased our Heavenly Father to remove Brother C. C. Nesbitt from his earthly citizenship to his heavenly.

Therefore be it resolved:

1st. That in his death the church has lost its senior elder and one of its most valuable members.

2nd. That the community has lost a loyal citizen, the family a faithful and devoted husband and father, a man strong in the faith.

3rd. As a churchman, citizen, friend, we will miss his wise counsel and advice and the inspiration of his consecrated life for the Master's cause.

4th. In this great hour of sorrow we commend his family to the same source from which he derived strength for every need.

5th. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of the Piedmont Presbyterian Church, as a memorial, and a copy be sent to the family and that copies also be sent to the Church papers for publication.

"Servant of God, well done,
Rest from thy loved employ,
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

Adopted by the officers of Piedmont Presbyterian Church, on December 17, 1918.

WHERE POPPIES GROW IN FLANDERS FIELD

I have often been asked whether it is true that poppies grow where brave men lie sleeping the long sleep in Flanders and in France. Yes, it is true. How wonderful it was to go across a battlefield, say the Somme, all scarred and torn, and see the poppies blooming over the graves of the soldiers, little rows by the roadside, graves in front of shattered and rusty tanks. Some folk talk about restoration of this devastated region. Perhaps. Others think of the buried, unexploded shells and of the sacrilege of driving plows over God's acre of heroes. I have heard it urged that the land be given over to forestation, so that tall and stately trees mark the saddest spot on earth.

But often when my fancy is wayward I picture the battlefields turned into a garden of the brave. I would have sunshine and brightness over the fields where lie the men who did their duty. In my mind's eye I see the flowers of America blossoming and flourishing where the Yankee boys rest. I picture the blooms of Belgium where the Belgians sleep. I see a great stretch of golden fleur-de-lys to mark where Frenchmen died so valiantly. There will be the gorgeousness of the maple where the Canadians lie and the luxuriance of the wattle where the Australians are shoulder to shoulder. I think I see a carpet of vivid green, a mantle of Shamrock over the Irish. And blessed and tearful to my Highland eyes will be the stretches of purple heather, for I know that as I stand among it and the wind plays, I will hear the wail of the pipes which are always to be heard softly over the graves of Scotch soldiers. And I see banks of roses, red and white, a sweet scented monument over the tomb of five hundred thousand Englishmen in France. I know there can be no garden of the brave such as I fancy. Yet I often wish it were so.—Sir John Foster Fraser, in Harper's Magazine.

HATCHED 175 CHICKS.

G. W. Miller, of Pittsburg, Okla., writes: "I used Reefer's Ready Relief and out of 175 chicks hatched didn't lose one." Mrs. T. E. Murphy, of Hughesville, Mo., writes: "Have been using Ready Relief for White Diarrhoea and only lost one chick out of 140."

You can do as well. Reefer's Ready Relief in your baby chicks' first drinking water will save them from dying off with that dreadful White Diarrhoea plague. This remedy is the discovery of a famous scientist. Send $1 today to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 9252 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package that will save 500 baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth five for a cent? You take no risk. Mr. Reefer will refund every cent of your money if you are not entirely satisfied and a million dollar bank backs up this statement. Send for a $1 package today, or better still, send $2.35 on special discount for three regular $1 packages and insure every hatch you get. If you don't want to try this bank guaranteed chick saver, at least write today for Mr. Reefer's free valuable poultry book that gives the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.—Adv.

"THE HOME OF GOOD FURNITURE"

Renew Your Health At Nature's Fountain

Without the Expense and Loss of Time
Necessary for a Visit to the Spring

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about as much harm as good for their systems rebel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. I do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases, they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read my answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for, to it I owe my Restoration to Health and probably my Life. It has made me tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces I have never seen. Yet I count them my friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to me by lasting gratitude.

I ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which I publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health, do not hesitate to accept my offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon. If you could read the letters that come to me daily, numbering about ten thousand a year, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that I make this offer displaying my absolute confidence in the restorative power of Shivar Mineral Water.

INDIGESTION

I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

A. L. R. AVANT, M. D., Savannah, Ga.

I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcement of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dyspepsia. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this water to anyone with stomach trouble. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fall in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

C. V. TRUITT, La Grange, Ga.,
President Unity Cotton Mills.

DYSPEPSIA

I have suffered for many years from gastric troubles, stomach puffed and food sour. I have tried many remedies and a good many waters. Some have helped, but none have given me such relief as your Spring Water. I use it and recommend it to my patients.

W. D. GRIGGSBY, M. D., Blaney, S. C.

For many years I suffered with stomach trouble as a direct result of asthma. I consulted the very best specialist in this country, and spent quite a large sum of money in my endeavor to get relief. However, I had about come to the conclusion that my case was hopeless, but by accident I happened to get hold of one of your booklets, and decided to try Shivar Spring Water. After drinking the water for about three weeks I was entirely relieved, and since that time have suffered but little inconvenience from my trouble. I cheerfully recommend the use of your Water to any one that may be suffering from stomach trouble.

RHEUMATISM

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

C. A. CROSBY, M. D., Leeds, S. C.

Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement.

WM. C. CARTER, Fredericksburg, Va.

I am anxious to get more of the Water. It has done me more good than anything I have ever tried for rheumatism.

MRS. H. C. EDWARDS, Roper, N. C.

BILIOUSNESS

For over two years following a nervous breakdown, I have suffered with a liver so torpid that ordinary remedies were absolutely powerless. Under such circumstances, I came to Shivar Spring, and began drinking the Water. Upon advice, however, the first night I took a laxative; the second night a milder one. Since then I have taken none at all. The effect of the water has been remarkable—its action on my liver most marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. I am satisfied that the laxative, followed by the Water, was the proper treatment in my case. My condition is now perfect.

S. A. DERIEUX, Greenville, S. C.

LIVER AND KIDNEY

I feel that it is due you that I should give my testimony, unsolicited, as to the benefits derived from the use of your Shivar Springs Water. I was unable to do my work, and had been under the treatment of physicians for six months for kidney and liver troubles when I decided to try your Spring Water, and now after using it for about thirty days I am able to do my work, feel good, and have gained about twenty pounds. I most heartily recommend its use to all who suffer from disorder of the liver and kidneys.

M. L. STEPHENS, Ochopee, Ga.

It is fine for liver troubles, also for constipation. I cheerfully give you this information as to beneficial results in my case.

REV. A. McA. PITTMAN, Carlisle, S. C.

RENAL AND CYSTIC

I suffered for eight years with kidney trouble and inflammation of the bladder to the extent that I would have to get up during the night some five or six times. After using this water only a few days, I am entirely relieved and suffer no more effect of the trouble whatever.

J. P. D., Columbia, S. C.

Your Water has done me more good than anything I ever tried for bladder trouble.

A. R. F., Virgilina, Va.

I had been down with bladder trouble Couldn't stand on my feet three minutes at a time. In three days after I commenced drinking your Mineral Water my pain was all gone, could walk where I pleased, and felt like a new man.

S. B. D., Wesley, Ga.

URIC ACID

I have been for many years affected with uric acid and kidney trouble, and the Mineral Water has helped me more than anything I have ever done for them, and therefore heartily recommend same to all who need a speedy relief.

W. F. MATHENY, M. D., Chancellor, Ala.

I can recommend your Mineral Water for disorders caused by uric poison. I suffered and have been relieved. It affords me pleasure to recommend this Water to all sufferers.

The Romantic Story of South-land's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1539 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities, may have a copy of his money-saving shoe book for the asking.

With countless of soldiers and sailors in Pittsburg, much confusion is experi-enced by the various stripes worn by the men on the sleeves of their coats. The stripes and why they are worn are as follows:

- Gold on right arm: Wounded over-seas.
 - Gold on left arm: More than six months' active service in Europe.
 - Silver on left arm: More than six months of home service.
 - Blue on left arm: Overseas service, but less than six months.
 - Red on left arm: Signifies honorable discharge.
- Members of the Pennsylvania regi-ments wear a red keystone on left shoulder.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Have You Robbed the Poor of His Blessing?

You Elders, you Deacons, who have been making the Every Member Canvass and failing to call on that poor widow or that poor man with a large family

You, yes you, are robbing that poor person of a personal blessing.

Every one has a God-given right to show the love he has for our loving, Heavenly Father by sacrificially giving back to the Giver part of His gift.

If there is no desire to give, there is no love.

How can God bless if there is no Love, no Sacrificing Spirit?

Is God unwilling to give to the poor?

Rather is it that the poor have failed to recognize that every good and perfect gift comes from above.

Do they not need to be taught that blessings come with obedience?

May it not be that God has withheld His blessing because there has been no asking?

No fulfillment of the condition that brings the blessing of plenty.

The Prophet Malachi told the Jews they had not because they had failed in fulfilling the condition of blessing.

Obedience to God is the first condition of blessing.

Nowhere in God's word is there a less proportion taught than the tithe.

Surely we cannot set a standard of obedience lower than one-tenth.

You Sunday School Teachers, Ruling Elders, and Deacons, teach your people obedience to God.

That is the basis of all prosperity and of all happiness.

KINGS WHO CONTINUE.

Not all the kings of the earth are to go. Albert, of Belgium, is already venerated as the great national hero, and Victor Emmanuel, of Italy, has fought with his people, suffered with his people, and wept with his people. He is secure in their hearts. George, of Great Britain, has shown himself a patriot and an Englishman and his crown is secure. The Queen of Holland, the kings of Denmark, Norway and Sweden seem untouched by the anti-monarchical upheaval. Alfonso, of Spain, appears as secure on his tipsy throne as he ever has been.—Detroit Free Press.

THE OBJECTS OF THE PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD PIANO CLUB

Briefly stated, the object of the Club is to knock the bottom out of piano prices without knocking the Quality out of the Pianos. Cheap instruments, as ordinarily marketed, are unfortunately cheap in Quality as well as in Price. The difficult problem which confronted the founders of the Club was "How can we supply 'Quality' Pianos to our Club members at 'Cheap' Prices?" The problem would have staggered the average piano dealer who sells pianos in the same old way that his father and grandfather sold them.

The Club has proven a tremendous success because its organizers had faith in the power of the principle of co-operation, intelligently and honorably conducted. They knew that quite a large part of the money paid for pianos represented waste, pure and simple. They therefore, built their plans with a view to cutting out the waste in marketing pianos, for they knew that the piano-buyer was paying for that waste.

If your home needs a good Piano or Player-Piano you can make a tremendous saving by clubbing your order with those of ninety-nine other members in a big wholesale factory transaction which will give you the lowest price and the most convenient terms that are possible under any considerations. Write for your copy of the Club's catalogue, which contains full particulars, descriptions of the numerous styles of instruments and letters of commendation from those who have secured their instruments through the Club in former years. Address the Managers, Ludden & Bates, Presbyterian Standard Piano Club Dept., Atlanta, Ga.

NOTE—In addition to the numerous styles of new Pianos and Player-Pianos, we are now able to offer Club members some rare bargains in used instruments which have been thoroughly renewed in our Atlanta Repair Factory. Write for special descriptive price list if interested. —Adv.

Hyomei THE BREATH of the FOREST THAT KILLS CATARRH GERMS. While lecturing in London, the noted Richard T. Booth, founder of the blue ribbon movement, and temperance orator and leader of international fame, who induced over a million men to sign the pledge, developed a very serious catarrhal trouble. He went to inland Australia, where he breathed day and night the antiseptic balsams as given off by the forests, especially the Eucalyptus trees. This experience led Mr. Booth to the discovery of the most wonderful catarrhal treatment,—Hyomei. Hyomei is a germ killing vapor treatment formed from the purest oil of Eucalyptus combined with other healing and antiseptic ingredients. This medicated air is especially effective in treating Catarrh and colds of the head, Catarrhal Coughs, Bronchial Catarrh, Spasmodic Croup, Catarrhal Laryngitis or Hay Fever. It destroys the catarrhal germs and restores health. Sold on a positive guarantee of satisfactory results or money refunded. Complete outfit $1.15; extra bottle inhalant 60c. At druggists or by mail, if your druggist cannot supply it. Booth's Hyomei Co., Ithaca, N. Y.

THE SPARTACANS.

The German Reds, the radical, terrorist Reds, represent a violent minority, which has no scruples. The essential principle of such a violent minority is to impose itself by force upon the majority. It believes in the machine gun as an argument, believes in it fully as much as any autocracy ever believed in it.

Frequently the violent minorities are better organized than the majorities upon which they seek to impose. Their success, at the outset, frequently depends upon this fact. Majorities frequently are inert, unreceptive, acceptive, slow to move, hard to organize. They subscribe to rules of life which have been automatic. They do not need organization behind these rules because the rules have asserted themselves. They will in the end assert themselves, but in the meanwhile, as in Berlin, terrorists, in the minority, but well organized, many fill streets with machine gun bullets, may seize banks and newspapers, government offices and private property, destroy foundations of social security, and butcher citizens.—Chicago Tribune.

Every man must have to do with death; and in presence of it every man feels his helplessness. . . . Surely we also may say, with Himself, we are glad that He was not with Lazarus in his sickness, that we might have this proof that not even death carries the friends of Christ beyond His reach and power.—Dr. Dod.

A REAL GODSEND.

F. M. Hammonds, Shamrock, Tex., writes: "I used Ready Relief. Had 104 chicks hatched and not one has died." Thos. A. White, of White Pigeon, Mich., writes: "I have not lost a chick. They are fine and grow fast. Ready Relief is a godsend."

You can have the same success. Reefer's Ready Relief in your baby chicks' first drinking water will help save them from the White Diarrhoea that kills off more than half the chicks that are hatched. Reefer's Ready Relief is the discovery of a famous scientist. Send $1 today to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 3252 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package of Ready Relief that will positively help you save your baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth saving? You take no risk. Mr. Reefer guarantees to refund every cent of your money if you are not entirely satisfied and a million dollar bank backs up this statement. Send for a $1 package today, or better still, send $2.35 on special discount for three regular $1 packages and insure every hatch you get. Aren't your baby chicks worth five for a penny? That's about the cost of Reefer's Ready Relief. A GREAT TRUTH.

A very clever epigram is that which appears in the Liberty Loan circular of the Fifty-Third National Bank of Cincinnati, namely: "This war will demonstrate to the Kaiser that the Ten Commandments were originally engraved on stone and cannot be torn up like a 'scrap of paper.'" This is a great truth very tersely put.—American Israelite.

BARIUM ROCK WATER RELIEVES WEAK AND NERVOUS PEOPLE.

Barium Rock Water is being prescribed by many physicians in the treatment of nervous debility and as a tonic and flesh-builder. They also recommend it in cases of indigestion, dyspepsia, rheumatism, gout, eczema and diseases arising from uric acid poisoning and for disorders of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

Mr. J. W. McCoy, of Charlotte, N. C., writes: "I had a violent case of typhoid fever and for three years was a nervous wreck. I was totally unfit for any kind of business. I suffered continually from my stomach. My improvement began with the use of Barium Rock Water and I was entirely cured."

If you are weak and nervous, if you suffer from melancholia, hysteria or are afflicted with any of the above diseases, send $2.00 for ten gallons. If it fails to relieve your case, we will refund your

$2.00. It is understood that the empty demijohns are to be returned prepaid. Address Barium Springs Co., Box E-21, Barium Springs, N. C.

At the Peace Table

Who shall sit at the table, when the terms of peace are made —
The wisest men of the troubled lands in their silver and gold brocade?
Yes, they shall gather in solemn state to speak for each living race.
But who shall speak for the unseen dead that shall come to the council place?

Though you see them not and you hear them not, they shall sit at the table, too;
They shall throng the room where the peace is made and know what it is you do;
The innocent dead from the sea shall rise to stand at the wise man's side,
And over his shoulder a boy shall look—a boy they crucified.

You may guard the doors of that council hall with barriers strong and stout,
But the dead unbidden shall enter there, and never you'll shut them out.
And the man that died in the open boat, and the babe that suffered worse,
Shall sit at the table when peace is made by the side of a martyred nurse.

You may see them not, but they'll all be there: when they speak you may fail to hear;
You may think that you're making your pacts alone, but their spirits will hover near.
And whatever the terms of peace you make with the tyrant whose hands are red,
You must please not only the living there, but must satisfy the dead.

—Edgar A. Guest.

Editorial

"The Trenches Against the Church."

THE Literary Digest of February 1 gives us a combination of rhapsody and diatribe from Dr. Henry Emerson Fosdick, a rhapsody on our Expeditionary Army, and a diatribe against the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ. He considers it a "glorious, ominous fact" that some millions of our soldiers are returning with no great love for that conventional religion in their hearts which is commonly practiced in America today. Had Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick but known it he might have rejoiced in that "glorious, ominous fact" before these millions of soldiers were sent to France. They were not hurt with any great love for that conventional religion while as yet they were not wearing their country's uniform. It did not require the experience which they have gained from standing in the muddy trenches, or fighting the murderous Huns to enable them to see that the religion current in American churches was not to their taste. A very large proportion of them remained away from the churches, and treated the ordinances of worship with supreme indifference.

The war, however, has not been without its effect—it has "widened the gulf between man and the church," according to Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, and this not because "war is brutalizing," but because the soldier has grown more "impatient of sham, intolerant of ineffective words, sick of narrowness and bigotry and of pretensions that are full of wind." Especially has the soldier been rendered invulnerable to all appeals of the Gospel that terminate on him, that voice any concern about his personal welfare either for time or eternity. He has been ennobled by sacrificial service. His sympathies have been enlisted in behalf of others, and his heart has thrilled with lofty altruistic ideals. He can never more have any tolerance for a preachment that warns of hell, or lures to heaven. It is this individualistic narrowness, this everlasting insistence that every sinner's first business is to look out for himself that has completely disgusted the soldier. "How intolerable to those who have caught the devotion of the Army is a certain habitual selfishness in the church's appeal to men!" Thus exclaims Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick. And to make perfectly clear what he means, he cites the pernicious example of Jonathan Edwards who said: "I make seeking my salvation the main business of my life."

Now just wouldn't it be an awful disaster, presaging the ruin of our country if our returning soldiers should all become infatuated with what Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick deprecates as "Jonathan Edwards' dominant ideal." Think to what a miserable end Jonathan Edwards was brought by that dominant ideal! Poor fellow, he wasted his splendid talents. He droned along for about twenty years preaching to a small company of villagers, and then they rose up and drove him out. There was no place open to him but the wigwams of the poor benighted redmen. So he spent the brief remainder of his life among them, with the exception of about six months. His misdirected, self-centered life was terminated rather prematurely by smallpox. But what a striking illustration we have here of the truth that "base things of the world, and things that are despised hath God chosen, yea and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are." God chose Jonathan Edwards to be the chief instrument in the greatest religious movement, the mightiest in its transforming power, that belongs to the history of our country. Then somehow or other many men of great distinction have taken it on themselves to put a halo of unusual brightness on the brow of this self-seeker whom Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick would now point us to as a warning. In walking through the Hall of Fame connected with the University of New York, one of the first names to greet my eyes was the name of Jonathan Edwards. A committee of one hundred men, selected for their broad and liberal culture, had chosen the name of Jonathan Edwards to shine among the stars of the first magnitude. What is more significant, his name led all the rest. He received eighty-two out of the ninety-seven ballots cast, Henry Ward Beecher coming next with sixty-four. Wonderful is it not that this man, so intent on his own salvation, coming out of the shadows of a far distant past, in the race for enduring fame outstrips the great metropolitan orator, the mighty apostle of freedom and loyalty, even while the latter's voice was lingering like sweet music in the chambers of the mind. Yet another wonderful thing, Jonathan Edwards, while making it the main business of his life to seek the salvation of his soul, wrote books that found their way over the Atlantic ocean, and the great Thomas Chalmers, whose voice startled Scotland out of the apathy of moderatism, said that Edwards' Freedom of the Will had helped him more than any book, excepting the Bible. And the eminent Robert Hall, a predecessor of Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick in the Baptist ministry, said: "I consider Jonathan Edwards the greatest of the sons of men, not excluding any country or any age since the Apostolic."

Would it not be too terrible to contemplate for two millions of our returning soldiers to take Jonathan Edwards as an example, and to set about making it the main business of their lives to seek the salvation of their souls. Picture them bemoaning their sins and calling on God for mercy. Follow them in thought while like Edwards they rest their hopes on Jesus Christ and then with happy, chastened spirits, living in an atmosphere of prayer, dwelling in the secret place of the Most High and abiding under the shadow of the Almighty, they give themselves daily, in imitation of their Master, to ministering to the needy.

To think that such a reputable journal as the Literary Digest should print stuff like this of Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick under the head of religion! It is certainly not the Christian religion. It is not respectable Paganism. Worse still to think that a church calling itself the First Presbyterian Church of New York should call to its pulpit a Baptist preacher after this order.

The Morrison Family.

"Historical Sketch of the Morrison Family"—By Lauri Morrison Brown. Printed by Presbyterian Standard Publishing Company, Charlotte, N. C.

Among the old families of North Carolina none stands higher in past achievements than the family of Rev. Dr. Robert Hall Morrison, and for that reason, if for no other, it was proper that his daughter, Mrs. Laura Morrison Brown, should leave to his descendants a record of what he did for the Church and State.

This modest little volume of 51 pages, written in a most pleasing style, begins with the ancestors of Dr. Robert Hall Morrison, who came to North Carolina from Pennsylvania, having descended from ancestors who came from the Isle of Lewis, is Scotland, settling in Cabarrus County, N. C., owning a farm and mill.

Dr. Robert Hall Morrison was one of the great men of North Carolina, not only in Church but in the State. He founded Davidson College, which has meant so much to the Church and has been a great help to the State.

Mrs. Brown faithfully traces his descendants and the collateral branches of the family, showing what a power they have been for good wherever found.

One of the greatest incentives to a young man to live right is the consciousness that he inherits a good name and must keep it good, or, as the French express it, "Noblesse oblige."

One of the Fruits of War.

War has always been fascinating to those of the human race who view it from afar. The blare of trumpets, the waving of banner, the courage and daring of men appeal to us, and we forget the other side of it.

Here in America we comfort ourselves for the suspense we have been in, these many months, by having our sons on the firing line by dwelling upon the benefits they will receive from foreign travel, from the unselfish service they are rendering and the physical benefits from camp life.

All this is a ground of comfort, but now and then comes to the surface some symptom that causes us anxious thought lest war may have had a brutalizing effect upon our young men.

Recently there appeared in one of our papers an account of a seventeen-year-old boy who left the High School and entered the army. He received the highest honors that the French Government can bestow and also Red Cross Honors—a most remarkable record for one so young.

If this were all we would feel that war is a great developer of what is best in man, but lower down in the article where he is describing a charge in face of machine gun fire, this young man says:

"The general order had gone forth to take no prisoners. In front of the woods there were several hay stacks. Just as we were about to go past these stacks two Germans stepped out from each side of the stacks with hands up, and saying 'Kamerad.' I happened to be right in front of one and I struck him through with my bayonet. Another man got the other."

Orders or no orders, when a man stands with uplifted hands crying "Kamerad," to run such a man through with a bayonet is murder, and is following in the footsteps of those we call Huns.

If such is to be the effect of war upon our young men, then we are almost as bad as the Germans. We believe, however, that such cases are exceptional, and that the rank and file of our boys are true to their Christian training.

The Divinity School of the Southwestern Presbyterian University.

As our readers well know, this school has been suspended for some time, owing to lack of funds, and a committee, of which Dr. W. McF. Alexander was chairman, was appointed a year ago to recommend a course of action for the four supporting Synods—Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Tennessee.

This committee in its report recommends that the four Synods decline to accept any one of the propositions from any one of the other Seminaries within our bounds to unite with that Seminary, and that each Synod and its Presbyteries be free to decide where to send their candidates, during the interregnum.

This refusal to unite was based upon the ground that sooner or later, these Synods would require a Seminary within their own bounds.

We have read the address that Dr. Whaling, President of the Columbia Seminary, would have delivered to the Synod of Mississippi of Louisiana, and of Tennessee, had the question come up for consideration.

Believing as we do that it would be better for the training of our young preachers if we could consolidate resources by lessening the numbers of schools and concentrating our efforts in a few, we regret that the Synods concerned did not hear his address, as we do not see how they could have resisted the argument.

He offered, in the name of his Board, the four Synods controlling the Divinity School at Clarksville a major share in the ownership and control of Columbia Seminary, and as reasons for this generous offer he gave the following:

1. There is a solidarity between the Presbyterians of Tennessee and Carolina and the Presbyterians of Mississippi and Georgia.

2. While the financial resources of Columbia Seminary may not be so large as that of other Seminaries, they are in a satisfactory and stable condition.

3. The history of the origin of our Church is peculiarly associated with Columbia Seminary.

4. It is the kind of institution that the Clarksville School really wants, as is shown by the fact that these Synods once voted to consolidate with Columbia Seminary.

5. Columbia is splendidly equipped for service with a full corps of professors, who are specialists in their respective fields.

6. Columbia is nearer Clarksville, both spatially and geographically.

We have given a meagre outline of a strong address.

Pounding the Preacher.

The Church News Column of all the religious papers of our Assembly have been crowded since Christmas with accounts of preachers being pounded by their congregations. These poundings have taken different forms. Some have come in the shape of checks, always a welcome visitor; some in the shape of a suit of clothes, which always are acceptable; and some in the shape of pantry supplies, with turkeys as the center piece. Leaving out of view the real help these donations are to a family, trying to eke out a living on a salary meagre at best, but especially so in these days of high cost of living, we know no act of a people that brings more genuine joy to a pastor than such a visitation.

The question that gives anxious thought to every preacher is whether he has succeeded in gaining the love of his people. He has no way of finding out, and if he be of a sensitive nature he finds enough to arouse his suspicions. When, however, they come, en masse, and give him these extra proofs of their interest in him, it gives him fresh courage to take up his work afresh.

In old times, in certain sections, donation parties were given as a part payment on the salary, and often consisted of useless articles, and as such they carried consternation into the manse, and made the heart of many an overworked wife sink within her.

These are not donations in that sense. They are not intended to take the place of the salary. They are free-will offerings, and as such they bring joy.

Looking back over a ministry of nearly forty years, we can recall many happy experiences in the pastorate, but among the pictures of the past none stand out clearer and bring back happier recollections than the donation parties when love and good will shone in every face.

We hope that the war, which is expected to revolutionize everything connected with the church, will at least leave this custom untouched, in order that coming generations of the children of the manse may have a pleasant childhood to remember in after life, and also in order that future Christians may have frequent opportunities to make easy the burden of the pastor, and to enable him to solve what, at times, is most perplexing of all problems, What shall I eat, and what shall I drink, and wherewithal shall I be clothed?

Stewardship

By Rev. Henry E. Gurney, D.D.

THE object of this communication is to set forth two fundamental principles of stewardship:

1. God is the owner of all things.
2. God is the disposer of all things.

The claims of God are by no means rightfully acknowledged in this fallen world. Men, even among those who profess and call themselves Christians, imagine themselves, if not in theory yet in practice, to be the sole proprietors of all they can acquire in the way of worldly possessions. The silver and the gold are appropriated by them without any apparent appreciations of responsibility to God, who, seemingly, "is not in all their thoughts." Whatever is given by them for benevolence is considered a gift made to God, rather than an obligation met. A right conception of the absolute ownership of God would preclude the idea that man gives to God what is his, instead of what is His.

If upon hearing the gospel of the grace of God unsaved man should ask "What must I do to be saved?" upon hearing the truth of the ownership of God, saved man should ask, What must I do to be saved from unfaithfulness in stewardship. "The true light now shineth," however, in many hearts, and men are coming to a knowledge of the truth concerning the two principles of stewardship above stated.

"Order is heaven's first law." These words are not inspired, but they are instructive. Without the application of this law of order in the material world mankind would "Beg in harvest, and have nothing." May it not be that because of the failure of the church to "Let all things be done . . . in order" in matters relating to finance it has had to "beg," and really "have nothing," compared with what it might have had through applying the orderly principles of stewardship. Giving today is more the result of Importunity than Opportunity, of Feeling than Fidelity, of Convenience than Conviction, of Respectability than Responsibility. Such methods are better than none, but withal disorderly.

A full recognition of God's Ownership of all that we have, which is the first principle of stewardship, will put our giving in the orderly place of a sacred obligation, which it is not only our duty, but our blessed privilege to perform. A duty born of obligation, becoming a privilege, merging into worship, for we "worship God with our substance."

"Property is a crime." These are the words of a modern Socialist. False and fallacious as these words are when uttered by those who make war on property rights; and who, for selfish ends seek to overthrow "the powers that be," yet there is a sense in which this maxim is indisputable by a servant of God, for while such an one has property rights that relate to men, he has none whatever that relate to God, except as a steward. Viewed in the light of divine truth no man can say "That aught of the things which he possesseth is his own." "It is written . . . The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof." In the matter of possessions the Christian's relation to his God is always, and only, that of steward. Of the land of Canaan God said, "Ye shall have it for a possession." He also said, "The land shall not be sold forever, it is Mine." "Every beast of the forest is Mine, and the cattle on a thousand hills." "The silver and the gold are Mine saith the Lord of Hosts." Surely these words denote God's ownership.

In the New Testament the same truth prevails. Whose were the talents? "His goods." To whom were they given? "His servants." For what purpose? To be faithfully used. Did the "goods" pass from his ownership while traveling in the far country? No, he must receive his own with increase. The same responsibility was put upon all the servants, whether they received one, or five, viz: Faithfulness in using another's goods.

It is said that General Foch substituted the word "Renounce" for "Abandon" in one of the terms of the armistice, the same being a much stronger word. In calling His disciples Jesus used a still stronger word, "Except a man Forsake all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." A man's all is equally precious to him, be it little or much.

Let us beware lest we fail to heed the warning given to ancient Israel, and say, "My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth," a thought too often indulged in this day. Let us not bound our vision with this unscriptural view. Let us not contract our thoughts within second causes, but rather look to the Great First Cause, whose the earth is, and the fullness thereof.

The second principle of stewardship, viz: God is the disposer of all things, being a logical sequence of the first principle, needs no lengthy discussion. God being the owner of all things according to the Scriptures, it follows that He is the rightful disposer of all things. "May I not do with mine own what I will?" In this brief passage there is implied both ownership, and the right to dispose of that which is owned. In fact without this right ownership becomes an unreality. That God has never relinquished His sovereign right as Disposer, lies in the fact that there is not a single gift of God to man that He cannot, and may not, withdraw at His pleasure, and that His active or permissive providence has to do with every event of life. There are no happenings with God! The Old Testament history of God's dealing with the race is wonderfully corroborative of this most blessed truth.

The two principles of stewardship herein set forth should constantly remind us that God is Sovereign and man is Subject. That God is Owner and man is Steward. "Moreover it is required of stewards that a man be found faithful." Monroe, N. C.

God's Call to Christian Service

By Rev. W. L. Latham.

IN all Bible history there are many examples of men and women whom God called to special service. Abraham was called from a heathen country (the land of his father) to inhabit the Promised Land. By faith he responded to the call and God blessed him wonderfully.

Moses was called to deliver Israel from Egypt and to lead them through the wilderness to Mt. Sinai, where the Law of God was given to them by Moses as an instrument and Aaron as his mouthpiece.

Joshua was called to lead Israel into Palestine, to get them settled in their God-given home, and to lead them to serving only the true and living Jehovah, who was their guide and defender and who most graciously provided for all their returning wants.

Esther was called to be queen of the Persian Empire in order that she might be the efficient intercessor for her people the Jews—for at her request the order for all the Jews to be slain (which decree the wicked Haman had passed) was evoked by another decree of the king for all of the Jews to be protected and to even slay their enemies. In God's providence Esther thus saved her people and the nation which was chosen of God for service in the world.

Nehemiah and Ezra were called of God to lead captive Israel back to their fatherland, to rebuild the walls of

Hospital Work For the Children of France

Extracts From a Letter From Maj. J. W. MacConnell to Friends in Davidson, N. C. and Published by Permission.

I HAVE had recently an interesting trip from my station, Royat-Palace Hotel, to Chavignae. I arranged to go there to operate on some French children who were being cared for by the LaFayette Memorial Fund. It is 82 kilometres from my station, up in the mountains, though it is southeast in direction. I had a nice closed car, a Dodge; took my nurse, Miss Breen, from San Francisco; and a dentist, Lieutenant Giles, to give my ether. We had a beautiful day for the trip—do not think I could ever expect a finer day in January anywhere—the air was cool and it was clear, there was snow on the distant mountains, but none on the road. We reached the Lafayette chateau at 2 p. m.

The drive up there is one of unusual interest, for you pass a number of fortified castles overlooking the river, some of them in good repair, others in ruins, but there is hardly an eminence that is not crowned with an old fortress. Some of these towers are Roman. We passed the Plateau of Vorcingerotix, which I have mentioned before, which has a monument to the old Gaul. We passed also some Roman baths and one fine old Roman bridge, with an excellent arch still in use, built some time B. C. When you see the number of these old castles and the positions they occupy, you have a new idea of the old mediaeval period, when the men were all warriors. Each castle is surrounded by a village which clusters around for protection, and these castles are not built high-piggley, they are each in a commanding position, overlooking a pass or a ford on the river. Today I climbed in an old tower upon a hill by the road, while the driver was mending a puncture, and I looked out from one of the embrasures and was struck with the position—it was one you would select today to command the valley, and the old steps cut in the rock showed how they had had to work to build such a place. . . .

The children were from four to fourteen years old, and mostly boys. All of them had lost their fathers in the war and some of them their mothers also. They were refugees from the devastated districts and some from Paris. One little fellow had refugeeed to Paris after his father had been taken prisoner and his home destroyed, when along comes one of the long range shells from Big Bertha, as they call the long range cannon, and killed his mother and mangled his hand. I took his tonsils and adenoids out, and he was bright as a cricket today when I left. All of them would come and hop up on the table with a smile or a "Merci, monsieur," and take ether better than any lot I ever saw, probably because they had seen so much that they were astonished at nothing. It is hard to realize that many of them had been under active bombardment for a number of times. One of them I remember had been brought out of Amiens in the midst of the active air raid on that city, by an ambulance driver who picked him up and they knew nothing about his people.

This ambulance driver, by the way, deserves a fuller mention. She is a Miss Perry, from Boston, a small woman . . . but with an attractive face, big smiling mouth, is an artist and sculptor, has traveled in Spain and the Balkans and is an interesting woman. She enlisted as a volunteer ambulance driver in the French army, and drove an ambulance along the front for over a year. Think of the energy it must have taken. She had never driven a car, but went to the shops and studied the cars, volunteered, wore the horizon blue uniform of a poilu (wore skirts of course) and drove around Amiens, Arras, and other places with the French and British army. She came down last spring with a double pleurisy and is now really on sick leave from the French army, but is working with these children at Chateau Lafayette. I will "hand it to her," she has the nerve and the energy, and she is not a mannish woman either. She says she was uniformly treated with courtesy by the French soldiers during her stay with them.

The woman in charge of the place is a French woman from Paris, Mmes. LeVerrier, wife of the president of one of the colleges in Paris. . . . Her accounts of the bombardments of Paris are interesting, and now since the censorship is raised I may tell you some things of interest. The Germans were firing from a distance of about 65 miles and had three guns trained on Paris from three angles. The first shot fell short a few miles, the second went over the city, the third hit in the city, and then they planted them at intervals, searching for the railroad stations, with only a lateral deviation of a few hundred yards. They never succeeded in hitting any of the stations fairly, but landed several in front of the Gare de l'Est, blowing to pieces a lot of the women who sell papers in the little kiosks in front of the station and killing a number of people who were passing in the street cars. One, as you know, hit the church of St. Gervais on Good Friday and killed over 100, mostly women and children; another hit a maternity hospital and killed several young infants and their mothers.

Of course the people thought it was an air raid at first, and when they were told it was a gun 75 miles away refused to believe it, thinking the Germans were about 20 miles from the city and that the officials did not wish to tell them the truth.

The French aviators destroyed one of these guns in three days, another later, but never succeeded in destroying the third. The Boche had several dummy guns which would fire a blank charge at the same time the others fired to deceive the airmen, and I think they deserve great credit for their work. Three of the shots fell in the Seine near the bridge of Boulevard St. Michel.

A Dr. Brown is the only person I have seen who actually saw one of the people intentionally mutilated by the Germans. She dressed this girl's arm, which had been cut off by a German soldier with a scythe blade, below the elbow. . . . One soldier has told me that he saw with his own eyes several French soldiers who had had their heads blown off by a rifle held close to their heads, when they were lying wounded on the ground. This was on an advance, and from the nature of the wounds could not have occurred otherwise. Toward the end the German became much more docile—some of the Americans threw a little "rough stuff" into him, and he quit it.

I occupied the room in which LaFayette was born during my stay at the chateau—it is a tower room, fine view from the window—a circular room with a hardwood floor laid in a big star shape—the design I mean. I had a comfortable, modern bed . . . these French beds are fine—feathers and a down comfort over you. It was not very cold, but we had a big snow night before last up there; snowed over a foot, and up the mountain a little ways about 18 inches. I had my arctics and a pair of good leggings and got along all right. We drove to Le Puy, the radiator pushing the snow out of the way, and it was slow work—about 22 miles. I drove back in a Ford, and I never had a prettier drive. The road winds all around like a snake, the fir trees were loaded with snow, and it was moonlight, and it could not have been more beautiful. . . .

The history of LaFayette is quite interesting and you all may know it, but there are one or two things I will mention. He married at 17 a girl of 14; they raised three children, one boy, George Washington LaFayette, and two girls. He was a hustling fellow—sold off a good big part of his place to finance his trip to America; was 19 at the time—landed at Georgetown, S. C., as you know—was wounded at Brandywine and conducted himself quite well. When he came back he introduced improved stock into this section, and improved farming conditions. He spent five years in prison during the French Revolution, having the misfortune to be rich and a noble, which was about then as now in Russia with the Bolshevik. To interest hunters I will say he was somewhat of a noted hunter in these parts, killing wild boar and wolves in these mountains—quite a man of spirit.

Some Benefits of the Every Member Canvass

By Rev. I. S. McElroy, D.D.

IT was only a few days before his lamented death that I promised our beloved Secretary of the Assembly's Stewardship Committee, Rev. R. L. Walkup, that I would some day in January send him a short article to help forward the great cause he loved so devotedly and served so efficiently. To be helpful even in a small measure to a cause of so great importance and especially under present conditions is a privilege to be held in honor. It will be noted that I was not asked to write about all but only about some of the benefits of the Every Member Canvass, and to do this in a limited space.

The Every Member Canvass has grown in favor in all the churches except perhaps a very few where those in charge failed to prepare for the canvass by instructing the people and calling them to prayer. The unsatisfactory results in these exceptional cases were due, of course, not to the plan but to the failure of the pastor to put it into proper operation. Where the instructions of our General Assembly shall be followed with reasonable care we may confidently count on the following among other benefits:

1. The Every Member Canvass educates the people in the fundamental doctrine of Stewardship. No part of the education of the church is more important than this relation of the believer to our Lord as the Lord's steward holding all that he is and all that he calls his own in trust for the advancement of the Kingdom of Heaven on earth. More sermons are preached on this subject, more explanations are made, more conversations are held, more prayers are offered during the time set apart for the Every Member Canvass than were formerly scattered through a series of years. The subject is brought before every member personally, not only by the pastor and the church papers, but also by fellow members of the same church who ask for offerings for the Lord's work on the basis of the stewardship of His people.

2. It furnishes the people with important and needed information touching the different departments of our church work at home and abroad. They have this information brought before them in attractive and impressive forms. It is often repeated and in so many different ways that even the most indifferent cannot fail to get some idea of the nature and needs of these great causes that represent the aggressive works of the church. This information received during the Every Member Canvass tends to create an appetite in that direction so that the people become a more intelligent congregation as to the church and its work. Church papers get new subscribers.

3. It stirs the people with the vision of a great task. It brings before them in one large vision the large claims of all the causes included in the program of the church. They see not one small segment but the vast reaches of the whole circle of the mission of the church. They hear the call not for a few hundreds or thousands of dollars but for hundreds of thousands and for millions of dollars. Their souls are stirred by the bigness of the task. Their faith feels the tug of a heroic call and responds with sacrificial liberality. The biggest and best men in the church conducting an Every Member Canvass gives emphasis to the bigness of the task, the heroism of the call, and the reality of the challenge Christ is now making to the love and loyalty of His people. This in itself is a forceful sermon.

4. It arouses the enthusiasm of the people by the contagion of concert in action. The fellowship of a goodly company makes it much easier to do a large, a liberal, and a heroic thing. This is true on the athletic field, in the army, in business circles, and in all the relations of life. When the people understand that all the members of all the churches are listening to these same calls and responding to these same appeals their interest takes on something of the enthusiasm of the soldier when he sees his whole command moving forward in a charge.

5. It exerts a reflex influence on the spiritual life of the church that cannot be easily estimated and yet is of very great value. Indeed this alone would make the Every Member Canvass worth all the time and trouble involved to say nothing of the increase in the offerings of the people. It strengthens the ties that bind in the fellowship of service. It stimulates the feelings of brotherhood in the members of the family of God. It enlarges the outlook on life and broadens the sympathies of a heart in love with Christ. It awakens an interest in all men of all lands and in all the activities of the church through which Christ is rescuing a lost world. It brings the soul into fuller sympathy with Christ as Lord and Saviour and deals a deadly blow to that selfishness which is the tap root of all sin. It makes our religion a reality, the Gospel of Christ a glorious experience and prayer a power when we can pray with the heart and the understanding, "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as in heaven."

The Pastor's Unincreased Salary

THE Presbytery appointed a committee to see about increasing the salaries of insufficiently paid pastors. Let us imagine this committee approaching a farmer and merchant, called here, Far-Mer, and laying the matter before him.

Committee: Good morning, Mr. Far-mer. I've come to see if your church will not increase its pastor's salary.

Far-Mer: Good morning, Mr. Committee. I'm glad to see you, but assure you that you are on a wild goose chase this time.

Committee: I hope not. But why call it a wild goose chase?

Far-Mer: Well, for the simple reason that we pay him promptly in advance every cent promised in the call which was made and accepted ten years ago.

Committee: Then I suppose you sell him his provisions and clothing, furniture, etc., at the prices at which you sold them ten years ago.

Far-Mer: By no means. We get 70 cents for butter now. Used to get 15 and 20 cents. We sell eggs at 60 and 70 cents, which we used to sell at 10 and 15 cents. Breakfast bacon is 65 cents now, and I've sold many a pound at 11 cents. Everything is high. Prices have advanced from 50 to 75 per cent, 100 per cent, 150 per cent, and even more than that for some commodities. We can't afford to sell at the old prices.

Committee: How do you suppose he can live free from debt or worldly cares and avocations, and pay these prices?

Far-Mer: Well, I don't know. I haven't thought much about it.

Committee: Do you pay your clerks and farm hands the wages of ten years ago and sell them goods at the old prices?

Far-Mer: Why, no. We pay our clerks and farm hands a great deal more than ever before. We have to in simple fairness because things to eat and to wear cost so much more than ever.

Committee: Yet, Mr. Far-Mer, you make your pastor pay these high prices on the old salary, which has never been any too much. How do you reconcile that with simple justice? You virtually confess it would be unjust to clerk and farm hand to have them pay the high prices on the old salary. Not only this, continued Committee, but have you noticed your pastor's Sunday suit—how slick it is. Do you ever give him anything outside of the salary?

Far-Mer: No. O well, the women do send in a little milk or butter sometimes and fresh meat when they kill hogs.

Consistency

By Rev. A. Walker White.

O H consistency, thou art a jewel."

All students who took the course of Church History under Dr. Thos. E. Peck, will remember with what pathos he uttered these words, from time to time, in the course of his lectures.

Some things, in the work of our church during the past twelve months, have made us feel very much as Dr. Peck must have felt when he used this language.

You take the effort made last year to raise three million dollars for the benevolent work of the church. The committee in charge urged us to instruct our people in God's plan for financing His work. That was the right thing to do beyond all question. Then, as some of us see it, they went right on and undid this foundation work, by giving us a mere man-made plan.

How is that? Why, they said to our congregations, you give so many dollars and so many cents and you will go "over the top." I would ask, What top? For the amount apportioned to some congregations, by this scheme, was not more than some individual members of these congregations would have turned into the Lord's treasury, if they had acted in accordance with God's plan. For God says: "Honor the Lord with thy substance (all of it) and the first fruits of all thine increase." He further says, let every one do this "as God hath prospered him."

The committee's plan of apportionment, as I see it, was not in line with teaching of the Word of God.

Another thing that was done, some of us regard as out of line with God's plan. Every Presbytery was instructed to display at its regular Spring meeting a great chart saying that it was the judgment of the committees that every church that met this man-made apportionment "went over the top," and should be congratulated on her wonderful achievement, when probably she had not begun to honor God with her substance.

Has not this an appeal to a low motive?

What was the result? Failure to reach the goal. You will remember these committees planned for a great blowing of trumpets by the whole church on a certain Lord's Day in celebration of the fact that we had gone "over the top."

Somehow that day with its blowing of trumpets did not materialize.

Now, for one, I would plead that, in the coming Every Member Canvass, we stick to God's plan all the way through. When we do this, then we can pray with some assurance that God will so move upon the minds and hearts of the people, that not three and a half millions, not five millions, not twelve millions, but funds commensurate with the needs of the work in this great warfare with the power of darkness throughout the world will be hilariously turned into the Lord's treasury, that His name may be glorified in the giving of the Gospel to the whole world in this our own day.

For our church to ask for just twelve millions in three years impresses me as saying: We have not learned some of the great lessons that this awful war should have taught us.

You may ask, What did your church do in the Every Member Canvass last March? That is a fair question, and I would answer: I am here in a Home Mission work, by choice. I could have gone to self-sustaining fields. The needs and the possibilities of this work have constrained me to labor here for twelve years. The Jefferson Church not only increased the pastor's salary, but she made an increase of 50 per cent in her contributions to the benevolent causes. If the church as a whole had averaged that well, we would have had our three millions for benevolence; and in doing this we simply followed God's plan.

The Educational Program Overseas

DETAILS of the educational program for the A. E. F. designed to teach the fighters to be anything from architect to bandmaster, together with the division of the work, have been made public following the conference of 200 Y. M. C. A. educational workers in Paris. E. C. Carter, chief secretary in charge of overseas work, outlined the work which the Y. M. C. A. must do for the American forces. He divided the fields in which the work will be done into several classes. The Army of Occupation in Germany has first claim, he said, emphasizing the fact that the Y. M. C. A. must send its best workers to the men on the Rhine. Another important area was the training section, where for the next three months at least conditions should be fairly well settled and where it will be possible to do more intensive work. In the leave areas he said the welfare of soldiers on furlough would be of great importance and the Y. M. C. A. would be called upon to serve many thousands of men.

The great ports of Brest, St. Masaire and Bordeaux are important educational centers, and auditoriums are being erected where from 1,500 to 3,000 men can be gathered at one time. These men are in the ports anywhere from a few hours to a few weeks, but they are to be started homeward with recollections of splendid educational and religious lectures fresh in their minds.

The fifth area would be on the transports going back home, where the soldiers would be well taken care of during their trips, lasting from seven to fifteen days, and where the "Y" must excel in the service given the soldiers.

Mr. Carter emphasized that the last area to be considered was in foreign countries where the work so well begun among foreign soldiers in France must be continued. The Y. M. C. A. has been serving Russians and Poles and British, and this work must go on. "Y" secretaries have already been sent into Portugal with the troops returning to that country. Mr. Carter said it was generally known that China had sent more than 100,000 laborers to France, but not so well known that about forty Christian Chinese had been serving these men as Y. M. C. A. workers in the great labor camps. India also had furnished the British with two million soldiers and the great work among these men must be continued.

The educational work now rests with the personnel of the Y. M. C. A. Text-books have been prepared in special editions at low price, and the American Library Association is arranging to put a carefully chosen list of reference books into 1,500 "Y" huts.

The schools in the huts are to correspond to the school systems at home. The War Department has prepared a list of over 45,000 possible teachers who are already in the army.

The French and British universities have been most cordial in opening their doors to men in the American army who are fitted to take up their studies in the colleges, and part of the work of the Y. M. C. A. will be to look into the credentials of the soldiers and select those advanced enough to enter the big schools of these countries. It may be necessary to put American instructors into the French universities to teach the Americans how to speak French.

Dr. Moore's Booklet on the Value of the Church.

In answer to inquiries as to where Dr. W. W. Moore's pamphlet on "The Value of the Church," which was published primarily by the National War Council for circulation among the soldiers, can be procured and at what price, we take pleasure in stating that they can be had from Mr. A. R. Howland, Book Agent of Union Seminary, Richmond, Va., at the New York rate, 10 cents a copy, 80 cents a dozen. It has had a very large circulation, the present edition being the 150th thousand.

A Statement

Issued by William H. Anderson, State Supt. Anti-Saloon League of New York.

THE charge now made, in an effort to obscure the real issues, that I criticised Cardinal Gibbons because he opposed prohibition is utterly untrue. For seven years I served as Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League in Maryland constantly up against both the outspoken and the secret pro-liquor influences of Cardinal Gibbons without ever uttering a word of criticism. So long as the question had not been decided I considered that the American right of free speech permitted the Cardinal to say almost anything he wanted to against prohibition. But when he falsely attacked it after prohibition became the law of the land in a manner likely to arouse a spirit of defiance and nullification, it became necessary to expose the falsity of his premises as published, in order to prevent his utterances from breeding less discreetly phrased statements which attack the sovereignty of the American people.

If Cardinal Gibbons or any other churchman expects to be regarded as upon a pedestal he must stay there himself. Only the truth is sacred. The pretense that religious liberty has been invaded is no defense unless the facts bear out the claim, which in this case they do not.

I have been very bitterly criticised for suggesting that the Cardinal's utterances were apt to incite lawlessness. Yet at the very hour that I was uttering this warning first in the city of Baltimore and next day in New York, there was being circulated in a prominent Catholic parish, in the magazine published by the church, the utterances of the priest, the Reverend Father John L. Belford, Rector of the Church of the Nativity, Brooklyn, which has been reprinted in the Brooklyn Eagle and numerous other New York City papers. This article says among other incendiary things, about the prohibition amendment:

"It is an unjust law. No one is bound to obey it. No one should have the least scruple about evading it, breaking it or defying it."

This utterance, if repeated after the amendment becomes operative, might not only bring the reverend gentleman into intimate touch with the Federal Criminal Court, but would

God's Call to Christian Service.

Jerusalem, and to proclaim anew to all Israel the Word of God.

Coming to New Testament times, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John were called to write the Record of Christ's life and work here on earth; and John to act as God's scribe in giving to the world the wonderful book of Revelation.

Saul of Tarsus was called to become Paul the Apostle, and become the first world missionary, and to write some of the most inspiring Epistles of all the New Testament.

Later, Martin Luther was called to spread the flames of the Reformation in Germany; Zwingli and Calvin, for southern Europe; John Knox, for Scotland; and Wesley, for England.

Francis McKemie was called to be the "Father of Presbyterianism" in America; and he traversed the country from Massachusetts to South Carolina, striving to supply the people with the Gospel as he believed it.

The Wesleys planted the seeds of Methodism in the United States, and then Francis Asbury was called to the oversight of that great church then in its infancy in this hemisphere.

Time and space does not permit a longer list of examples of God's call to service, and to Christian service. But let the above list suffice to prove that He has called in the past and still does call individuals and nations to service.

And never before has a clearer call come to us of America than that which is extended now, in God's providence, by the present world-wide opportunity for the propagation of the Gospel.

First comes the call for the life service of consecrated young men and women, to preach and teach the Glad Tidings of Great Joy to all mankind. This call comes clearly from all foreign lands for more missionaries of the cross. And it comes with equal clearness for husky, big-hearted, clear-minded, and able-bodied home mission workers in the mountains and among the foreigners all over the Union; and also for workers among the increasing numbers of textile employes, especially in the East here. And, beyond all question of doubt, the momentous problems of the reconstruction period which we are now facing, call for the strongest talent of our land to enter the pulpit and pastoral work. God is calling to you, young man, and to you, young woman; and especially to you who are being favored with and who have had the privilege of a college education. Will you answer: "Here am I, send me."

And God is calling all His people to service of more liberal giving to all causes in His Kingdom. The call comes, in concrete terms, for the money needed to adequately support all the noble, self-denying, diligent and faithful workers in His harvest field. They must be supported or retreat or halt in their labors. And fresh recruits are very much needed.

We have given our billions for the war work in Europe (and we did right). This fact has turned the eyes of the world toward America for gold, for food, and for religion. Thus opening the greatest opportunity for religious service the American people could ever have dreamed of. And to meet this opportunity successfully, all the churches of America must each raise millions of dollars for benevolences and many thousands more than ever before for a more adequate support of the local ministry. And in addition to all the above comes the heart-rending appeal for giving to the support of the increasing hordes of orphans in all our land and throughout the world. It is God's call to you, men of wealth and stewards in His vineyard; it is God's call to all of us, the "sheep of His pasture," to give Him His tenth or more. And we have His promise of blessing upon all who worship Him faithfully with their substance. Can you justly claim that promise? What is your answer to His call?

The time is now here for you to decide how much you will subscribe for all causes of His church and your church during the next ecclesiastical year. Ask Him to show you how much to give. Then turn and behold the needs which His providence presents to you and which call for all we possibly can give. Then give "until it hurts," and God will bless you and prosper you.

Another call to service comes to parents and Sunday School teachers to take their children and to encourage them to go to the church service every Sunday. This is one of the greatest needs of our day—to get children and young people to go to the church service. For, the future church depends upon the interest which the present generation has in it. This call comes both to parents and Sunday School workers, including every superintendent of Sunday Schools.

Finally comes the call to prayer: "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth laborers into the harvest field." And pray for these laborers. Pray for their support. Pray for all causes of His Kingdom. And, while praying, make a special petition for relief from suffering from the influenza epidemic; and pray for control of and the banishment of the disease from the world; and that it may never return. We prayed for victory in the war and victory surely came in answer to a united prayer of a nation of people. Now let us pray for relief from the present world-wide epidemic or plague of influenza. Peradventure, God will hear and answer our prayer.

A Statement.

put his people outside the pale of the law in case they followed his advice.

This is the very sort of thing which might naturally have been expected to grow out of the Cardinal's utterances and against which we protested. The Cardinal's statement was more adroitly and temperately phrased but it had in it the seed of disturbance which bore quick fruit in the utterance of this particular priest.

Father Belford also said:

"They (the Prohibitionists) hired hundreds of spies, detectives and investigators, put them on the track of every legislator who would not support their iniquitous measure, then when they had crawled through the sewers and strained the cesspools for scandal they produced their vile evidence and bade the victim deliver his vote or accept the infamy of exposure."

The above is an infamous accusation that a large proportion if not the majority of the members of both houses of the New York Legislature are either criminals or horribly immoral, that they are not only susceptible of blackmail but have submitted to blackmail; that they ought to be in the penitentiary or driven in disgrace from public life. This attack is calculated of course further to encourage defiance of law by bringing into contempt those who pass the law and the motive which actuated them. The whole Legislature of New York is slandered by this priest in a manner which if his target was a single individual would expose the Reverend Father to the civil and criminal penalties of the State, and all because the legislators have dared to represent their people and the moral conviction of the State in helping destroy a traffic which is the worst enemy of true Christianity and every clean, honest church.

We now respectfully but insistently call upon Cardinal Gibbons to produce the proof of the charges which he made against the Prohibition Amendment, or admit that he spoke without knowledge, or say that he was misquoted and tell what he actually did say.

This is not and I have never made or contemplated any attack upon the Catholic Church. I know that a large and increasing number of its priests and members are opposed to the liquor traffic and deplore Cardinal Gibbons' attitude which has seemed to line the church up with the liquor traffic. I believe that the great body of the Catholic Church will fall loyally into line and acquiesce in the amendment and that the majority of those who opposed it, when they find that their fears and misgivings were groundless, will in due time frankly say so.

The Pastor's Unincreased Salary.

Committee: How much does it amount to in the year?

Far-Mer: Not a great deal, I imagine.

Committee: Yet you love your pastor? And consider him a good preacher, and treat him with far less consideration than you do your clerks and farm hands. Is not your pastor really worth far more to you in your church and community than can be reckoned in dollars and cents; more than your salary amounts to?

Far-Mer: I've no doubt he is. In fact we can't measure it by dollars and cents.

Committee: Then you acknowledge that he is worth more than you are paying him?

Far-Mer: Yes, I am forced to confess it.

Committee: Then you are getting something for nothing. Is that honest?

Far-Mer: It is not altogether right.

Committee: Here is the situation: To keep your clerks and farm hands from worry and embarrassment, you have greatly increased their salaries; thus, you are kinder to them than to your pastor, whom you profess to love. On top of this you are getting something for nothing. Is it fair? Is it honest?

Far-Mer: It is neither. I'll double my subscription and take this up with the church next Sunday. I was mistaken. You did not come on a wild goose chase.

"X-RAY."

The Sunday Newspaper---An Inquiry.

Dear Editor:

Having been an interested reader of your valuable paper for many years and greatly profited thereby, believing in the sound doctrine and clear reasoning of the editor and hoping to hear his opinion freely expressed; also that of other leaders (ministers and elders) of our church, I have a question to ask, viz: Why is it a work of necessity to publish seven editions weekly of a daily paper? Why do those who work in printing offices not need one day in seven to rest as well as those that follow other vocations?

I was reared in a good old Scotch-Irish home where it was believed that nothing should be done on the Sabbath except works of necessity and mercy.

Believing it to be wrong to publish a Sunday paper, we do not take it.

Now I am well aware that the Sunday edition is the best. The most interesting articles, most important advertisements, etc., appear in this issue.

Yesterday my little daughter, with a dissatisfied look on her face, said to me: "I wish we took the Sunday paper."

I know that many of our preachers and officers in the church wouldn't think of doing without the Sunday issue, thereby encouraging its publication. Of course they do not think it wrong to publish it or they would not allow it to come into their homes. Am I righteous overmuch? Is there nothing wrong about having seven issues a week, thus allowing the employes no day of rest?

I should be glad to hear the above fully discussed.

If my reasoning has been wrong, then my family and I should be delighted to get the benefit of the Sabbath edition.

An Enquirer.

(The question put by our good friend is one that perplexes many. There is no need of a Sunday edition of a daily paper, and for many years in the past it was never tried.)

We are living in a fast age, and men refuse to wait one day to hear what is going on in the world, so the newspaper publishers, finding the desire for a Sunday edition, satisfied it with profit to themselves and with great detriment to the cause of religion.

There are many Christians who refuse to take the Sunday paper, and there are also others who lay it aside unread till Monday—and then there are others who take it and read it as on other days.

These are questions of casuistry that each one must solve for himself—each man being fully persuaded in his own mind.

"Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? To his own Master he standeth or falleth."—Editor.)

Pray. Yes, go to the God whom you but dimly see, and pray to Him in the darkness, where He seems to sit. Ask Him, as if He were, that He will give you that which, if He is, must come from Him, can come from Him alone. Pray anxiously. Pray passionately, in the simplest of all words, with the simplest of all thoughts. Pray, the manliest thing that a man can do, the fastening of his life to the eternal, the drinking of his thirsty soul out of the great fountain of life. And pray distinctly. Pray upon your knees. One grows tired sometimes of the free thought, which is yet perfectly true, that a man can pray anywhere and anyhow. But men have found it good to make the whole system pray. Kneel down, and the very bending of those obstinate and unused knees of yours will make the soul kneel down in the humility in which it can be exalted in the sight of God.—Phillips Brooks.

News of the Week

The War Trade Board has reached an agreement to return to Holland the eighty-seven vessels that were requisitioned by the American Government during the war, as rapidly as they return to American ports. By agreement vessels destroyed have to be replaced either by money or by ships, at the option of the Dutch owners. Liberal rates were to be allowed for their use.

The most sweeping removal of restrictions upon the exportation of foodstuffs made since the signing of the armistice has been announced by the war trade board. Commodities removed from the export conservation list were barley, corn and rye, including flour and meal made from these grains, oats and oat products, brewers' grains, bran and middlings, beans, dried and split peas, sugar and hydrogenated cottonseed oil.

Attention is called to the fact that wheat and wheat flour alone are left on the restricted list.

The House and Senate of the United States have agreed on the oil leasing bill by which 50,000,000 acres of Government owned oil gas coal, phosphate and sodium land will be opened for development.

The Senate of North Carolina tabled by a vote of 19 to 11 a resolution declaring in favor of the Government returning to private ownership the railroads of the country.

Dr. Kemp Plummer Battle, ex-president of the University of North Carolina, professor emeritus of history since 1907, a member of one of the most distinguished families of the State and loved and esteemed by three generations of university students, died at his home at Chapel Hill, N. C., at 5:15 o'clock. He had been confined to his room for the past month, but with the indomitable resolution and pluck characteristic of his whole life he refused to remain in bed until Saturday, when his condition became critical. Heart trouble brought the end. He celebrated his eighty-seventh birthday in December.

Connecticut enjoys the reputation of being the only State up to this time that has failed to ratify the federal prohibition amendment. Forty-four States through their Legislatures have voted for ratification.

Simonds, the celebrated war critic, writing from Paris, says that President Wilson has more power at Paris than Bismark had at the Berlin Congress.

The House bill by Saunders, of Pasquotank, for the abolition of capital punishment, that the House had passed with amendment that it abolish only the death sentence in cases of arson and burglary went down in defeat February 4 by a vote of 27 to 17 in the Senate before an onslaught of Senators, who believed that this is no time for letting up on the safeguards for the homes in North Carolina.

The next day in the House the Mull bill for a State marshal to enforce prohibition laws in the State, was killed by the House vote of 45 to 68, after two hours' debate, during which Mull and other advocates declared North Carolina has more illicit distillers than all the other States in the Union. The State Anti-Saloon League was advocating the bill.

With reference to the price of wheat Congress has taken the following action. While the farmer will be paid the $2.26 Government guarantee for the 1919 wheat crop, the wheat will be sold to the consumer at a price to be dictated by the law of supply and demand under legislation approved by the House agriculture committee. The Government will lose the difference between the purchase and sale prices.

The bill approved by the committee is a substitute for that presented by the Food Administration and Department of Agriculture. It gives the President discretionary powers to continue the present agency for handling the wheat crop or creates a new one and appropriates $1,000,000,000 as a revolving fund to carry out the guarantee.

The Civil Service Commission announced that all Civil Service employes who gave up their positions to enter the Army or Navy would be reinstated upon being discharged.

The proposal to erect at Bakers, near Monroe, N. C., the world's largest wireless station, seems to be hopeless, according to recent action of the House.

The House passed without a dissenting vote the McCain bill to remove all State convicts from central prison at Raleigh to the State farm and convert the $1,500,000 central prison into a hospital to provide quarters for 1,000 insane patients from central hospital.

Educational

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, RICHMOND.

Distressing news has been received concerning Rev. Isaac E. Yohannan, of Urumiah, Persia, a graduate of the Seminary in the class of 1901. Mr. Isaac Yonan, writing from Hamadan last September to a friend in Charlotte, N. C., gives a heart-rending account of the flight of a hundred thousand people from Urumiah before the invading Turks and Kurds. One-third of the number perished on the twenty-five days' march to Hamadan, where the survivors were at last cared for by the English. Speaking of certain individuals who were well known in this country, the writer says:

"You may remember Dr. Theodore Mar Yoseph, a Davidson College boy. He died on the road. He, his mother and child all died of starvation and fatigue. You may also know Rev. Isaac Yohannan, a graduate of Union Seminary, his son a graduate of Davidson, now a doctor in the U. S. A., died on the road. His wife, a baby, and the whole family perished. Dr. W. A. Shedd, the American missionary and consul, who fled with us, died on the road from cholera. We buried him on a mountain side."

Mr. Yohannan was an earnest and devoted Christian and was most highly esteemed in the Seminary.

The presence of eighteen of our friends from foreign fields at the reception given last week to our missionaries and members of their families at the First Presbyterian Church has a significance that our people should not fail to see. The fact that so many of them should be here without any preconcerted arrangement shows that Richmond, the seat of Union Seminary and the Assembly's Training School for Lay Workers, is a natural rendezvous for them, and furnishes additional proof of the need for the Home for Missionaries on furlough which the good women of our Synodicals have planned to establish here. This is a thing that has long been sorely needed in our church. No other one thing we can do would give to our faithful missionaries so much relief of mind and rest of body and renewed efficiency. All our people ought to come to the help of the Synodicals in this good work - Contribu-

Japan has in eastern Asia about the relative importance that the United States has in the Americas. "Alone thus far of the Asiatic nations she has proven capable of actually mastering and absorbing the principles of efficiency and progress which lie back of the modern world." She has in the far East a priority so pronounced that she is declaring a sort of Monroe doctrine of the East as the United States has for the West.

Will Japan's influence be for good, or for evil? That depends on whether Japan is willing to become Christian as vigorously as she became civilized. The future security of our planet is bound up with the answer to this question.

There are difficulties in the way of missionary work in Japan, greater perhaps than in any other pagan country.

Japan is educated and successful and therefore not as receptive as she might be of the help of Christianity. Ninety-eight per cent of the children are in school, which is a record our own country has not equaled.

Perhaps the heart of the difficulty lies in the fact Japan has already shown her capacity to adopt our civilization without accepting Christianity. Many even of the moral principles of the West seem to have been absorbed, without the acceptance of Christ. In obtaining one good part of what we have to give them, the Japanese seem to be hardened against accepting the other better part, which is the Christian religion.

In spite of all difficulties, Christianity has secured a firm footing in Japan. Hundreds of missionaries are laboring there. The Southern Presbyterian Church has forty-three Americans, and 116 native workers. A great national united evangelistic campaign has just been finished, during which 800,000 people were reached and 27,000 professed converts gained. A number of strong evangelists have developed, chief among whom is the great Kanamori, who goes from city to city preaching his one sermon on the fundamentals of Christianity. It is a two hours' discourse and never fails to register hundreds of decisions for Christ and His service.

* * *

Thoughtful people are wondering what can be done to override difficulties and assure us of success in Japan. The answer seems twofold. Surely one of the necessities is a sufficiency of workers and equipment to man every Japanese town and country district. The other necessity is surely a praying Christendom, a Christendom praying earnestly to God that He will melt the barriers of religious indifference and self-sufficiency in Japan that now impede the spread of Christianity.

The Prayer Meeting

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING FEB. 16, 1919:
 THE DUTY OF BIBLICAL INSTRUCTION.

Deut. 6:6, 7; II Tim. 3:14-15.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

Our age is one of a thousand interests. There are a thousand pulls upon our time. In the confusion which results, the Bible is often lost sight of.

Then the average man and woman has come to relegate calmly all study of the Bible to "the parson." It's his business. Ours is to listen decently to the best results of his study on Sunday morning, and then dismiss the whole matter for a week.

The duty of Bible study is, however, universal. The age needs to have its thought and its conscience revolutionized on this subject. It was to all Israel that God is speaking in Deut., sixth chapter. He first says: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." This is not spoken to Parson Moses; but to all the people. Then next follows this: "And these words which I command thee this day shall be upon thy heart." Ah, here is the secret of the whole matter. If we would only take a heart interest in the Bible, we would read the volume daily, and we would then naturally "bind them for a sign upon our hands, and they would be for frontlets between our eyes. And we would write them upon the door posts of our houses, and upon our gates."

Not literally; but actually. Pershing had done this, and his men knew it. Stonewall Jackson's men knew it also of their general. The children know it of such a father and mother; the people know it of such a pastor. And why Interest in the Billy Sunday meetings continues without abatement. Mr. Pitzer, leader of the men's meetings, addressed the students of the Seminary Saturday on Personal Work. Mr. Rodeheaver, the singer, is also an occasional visitor. Miss Kinney and Miss Saxe, leaders of the work among women, have several times spoken to the young ladies of the Training School.

DAVIDSON.

The current issue of The Davidsonian is a memorial number in honor of the Davidson men who made the supreme sacrifice in the world war. There are seventeen names in the list of brief biographical sketches are given of each man. The list includes those who in camp, whether in this country or overseas, died of disease. The list is as follows:

- J. S. Bachman, '18, died of pneumonia, Norfolk, Va.
- P. R. Brown, ex-'06, died in France.
- T. M. Bulla, '07, chaplain, killed by shrapnel in France.
- R. D. Cranford, ex-'19, killed in France.
- J. M. Douglas, '10, victim of pneumonia, El Paso, Tex.
- S. C. Hart, '12, killed in action.
- S. R. Keesler, Jr., '17, aviator, wounded in action and died in German prison.
- C. D. Montgomery, '09, killed in action.
- T. N. Morton, '18, died of disease after being wounded.
- D. M. Orgain, '18, died of influenza in Norfolk, Va.
- J. C. Paisley, '17, killed in action, while leading his company.
- R. D. Poole, ex-'19, died of meningitis, Camp Jackson.
- E. D. Shaw, '15, aviator in British Air Service, shot down.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

Exodus 20:1-17.

February 16, 1919.

Golden Text—Luke 10:27: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy strength and with all thy mind: and thy neighbor as thyself."

The Ten Commandments or the Moral Law is the best summary of human duty to God and man to be found on earth. It presents first our duty to Jehovah as the only God as to His mode of worship, as to reverence for His name, and as to what part of our time is to be kept holy to Himself. It next states man's duty to his fellows in social life. It mentions where proper submission to righteous authority should be taught and enforced. It safeguards the four principal interests of society, life, purity, property and truth. It forbids covetousness as the fountain head of all wrongdoing. Jehovah introduces the commandments by affirming that Israel owed their freedom from Egyptian bondage to His interposition in their behalf.

I. Our Duty to Jehovah.

He is our Maker, Preserver and Deliverer.

1st. He commands us to have no other God before Him. He alone is to be regarded and served as God. It forbids all idolatry, whether material or spiritual. In our hearts and lives we are not to put ourselves or any created being or object before the Most High. To worship and serve the creature rather than the Creator has been the tendency of fallen man in all ages.

2nd. We are to offer God a Spiritual Worship. "He is a spirit and must be worshipped in spirit and in truth." It forbids worshipping God by pictures or images, or any material representations. The history of idolatry shows that worshipping a spiritual deity by material means ends in worshipping the images.

3rd. We are commanded to Hallow God's Name. His name or names stand for His personality. His person, however presented or expressed, must be treated with reverence. Hence all words that dishonor the Holy Ghost is a violation of this commandment. Conversational swearing, or false swearing, or the light and frivolous use of Divine names in ordinary speech may be deemed profanity, and "God will not hold him guiltless who taketh His name in vain."

4th. We are to keep one-seventh of our time holy unto the Lord. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." All connected with us or dependent upon us must do the same. Keeping it holy demands cessation from regular toil or unnecessary work. It does not allow mere idleness or pleasure seeking. It requires worshipping God in the closet, in the home, in the sanctuary, by reading the Scriptures, prayer, praise and attending upon Divine ordinances. The Jewish Sabbath, the seventh day of the week, and the Christian Sabbath, the first day of the week, alike recognize that one-seventh of our time is to be kept holy unto the Lord.

II. Man's Duty to His Fellow.

This grows out of his relations in society. These relations begin in the family. Where society exists there must be righteous authority to enforce law and punish wrongdoing. Hence the Lord places just authority in the family in the hands of parents to train children to submit to righteous laws, and to correct all violations thereof. He requires parents to exercise this authority, and children to "obey their parents in the Lord." He enjoins, "Honor thy father and thy mother," and enforces the command by promised blessings and cogent considerations.

1st. The First Duty of Man in Social Relations is Obedience to Rightful Authority. As man's social relations begin in the home, and the family is the unit of society, obedience to righteous laws must be enforced there if ever properly learned. The child who is not taught to obey his parents will have to learn to obey the civil magistrate by a bitter experience. I have myself known children who did not obey their parents and who got into the penitentiary before they were taught that rightful authority must be obeyed.

2nd. The next four commandments prescribing man's duty to his fellow, safeguard four important interests of society. The first of these is Life. There can be no safe society where life is not deemed sacred and adequately protected. Hence it is written, "Thou shalt do no murder," "Thou shalt not kill." The killing here forbidden is from evil passion or malice. God Himself commands killing as the penalty for murder, saying, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed." Yet some men claiming to be wiser and more pitiful than their Maker, would abolish capital punishment.

The second interest of society guarded is Purity in the family. Hence the command, "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Where there is want of fidelity to the marriage relation, society becomes corrupt and may reach the condition of Sodom which Jehovah destroyed with fire and brimstone.

The third interest safeguarded is Property. Therefore God says, "Thou shalt not steal." Violations of this command causes theft, robbery, fraud and gigantic wars of aggression. A fourth social interest protected is Truth. It is enjoined, "Thou shalt not bear false witness." Adherence to truth is the cement of society.

3rd. Covetousness is forbidden as the fountain head of all wrongdoing.

Prayer Meeting.

should not the greatest of books be a matter of heartfelt interest? Sir Walter Scott asked Mr. Travellian just before his death to bring him the Book. Mr. Travellian asked, "What book?" and the dying novelist replied: "There is but one book—the Bible."

From the standpoint of literature our King James version is, and has been, the mightiest factor in the development of our language. From the standpoint of morals, it has proven a mighty influence for good. From the standpoint of religion it is unrivaled. No other book even approaches it. It contains the actual words and messages of God to His chosen people; it contains mighty prophecies; it contains the memorabilia of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and the Son of Mary; and the instructions of chosen men of many ages who spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit.

So that it is God's book; but it is man's Book too. It is man's book, because it is God's book. It is the product of God's heart first of all; but also of His wisdom. It is divinely fitted to teach us how to live, what to believe, how to regulate our whole lives socially, financially, towards God, and towards our neighbor.

Of course then "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and thou shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house," etc. What finer thing could I do for my boy?

In the very nature of the case it is our duty to study the Bible, and to instruct others concerning it. Is not this duty the urgent, compelling thing for us all today? Is not the Bible school crying out agonizingly for teachers who know and love their Bibles? Are not men's lives cheated, and men's hearts a great desert place, because the Bible has been left out of the schedule?

It is a duty writ large: but it is a privilege writ large. If we will interrogate the lives of great men, Gladstone, Lee, Wilson, they would say so. If we would ask the lonely widow who has found God's secret, she would tell us what a privilege it is to read—to study, and to teach this unique Book. In our schools, our universities, our colleges, our homes, it is the call of God and of the age to teach wisely and diligently this Word of God that men may know the Living God and Jesus Christ our Saviour; and imbibe the principles and spirit of right living.

THE GUIDE OF THE NIGHT.

While traveling in Canada I had occasion one evening to call on a physician for a friend of mine who was ill. I found the doctor most congenial and companionable, and when he learned that I was from "the States," he insisted on a prolonged conversation.

The route from the home of my friend to that of the doctor was somewhat zigzag, which I had no difficulty in finding in the lingering twilight of that beautiful Canadian evening. But when I emerged from the doctor's office a dense darkness had settled down upon the little hillside village, and I soon became confused and lost. Wandering about for a time, amid hope and fear, I concluded to return to the doctor's office—if I could. After more groping in the darkness I succeeded and asked my new-made friend to give me further direction. But he said: "No; I will do better than that. I will accompany you back to your home." Then he and I went out into the night together and my fears were clean gone. I had no further concern about either the winding pathway or the uncertain footing. We walked happily together until we reached a little hillock, when, pointing directly in front of me, he said: "Do you see that light in the window? Make straight for that. That is your home. Good night!"

I have never seen that friend of the night from that day to this. But I have a Friend who has walked with me in all the dark places of life's uncertain pathway, and often when the twilight had faded, and feelings of fear overtook me, and I felt myself hemmed in by the dense darkness of the night, I found walking by my side this one precious and abiding Friend, and I was comforted and calmed, not only in the consciousness of His mute presence, but stayed and steadied in my onward course to my mansion home beyond by His assuring direction: "Do you see that light in the window? Make straight for that. That is your home!" Thank God for the Guide and thank God for the light in the window!—Rev. J. H. Shirey.

LOVE AND OBEDIENCE.

Conscience points out as duty, and bids us do, a great many things, which are hard and difficult—a real cross. Consequently, we may not want to do them—do them for love's sweet sake.

A father once asked his little boy if he didn't want to go and put some wood under the woodshed for him. The little fellow frankly shook his head. "Don't want to put in the wood for father?" asked the parent, in surprise, for little D— was a mighty helpful little boy. And the little fellow answered: "I don't want to do it, but I'll do it." He had no desire to do what his father asked of him, but he loved his father, and so he said he would do it anyhow—even though he didn't want to.

That is the sort of service and obedience the Master desires from us—to do what He asks us, whether we want to or not. And if we love Him as we ought, we will. He says: "If ye love me, keep my commandments." In the face of every duty, however hard or unpleasant, may we, too, be able to say: "The love of Christ constraineth us."—Presbyterian Witness.

Like the lawyer to whom Jesus told the Parable of the Good Samaritan, we also need the Christ. We need Him on life's high road. We need Him whether we travel up hill or down dale. But, like the priest and the Levite, we sometimes miss Him because we keep to our own side of the road. If we would find Him, as it were by chance, we must look for those who are down on their luck, who are in trouble; we must cross over to them, and there, amid those whom He would save, we shall find Him who alone can save us."—From "Two Ancient Red Cross Tales," by P. W. Wilson.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Lost Affections.

Now there came unto me a Middle Aged Woman; and she said, Hast thou a Philosopher's Stone wherein thou dost look, and tell Unhappy People what to do?

And I told her that I had.

And she seated herself before me, and I looked at the Rings on her left hand and I looked also into the Philosopher's Stone, and I said, Thou art Married.

And she answered and said, I am.

And I looked again, and I said, Thou art unhappy.

And she said, O Safed, thou art indeed a man of Great Discernment.

And I said, Thy husband, who once was most fond, now Tendeth to his Business, and seemeth to thee to be Inconsiderate.

And she gently Sobbed her Assent.

And she said, O Safed, I simply must tell some one! And I have come to thee, for thou art Wise and Sympathetic. My husband once loved me Devotedly; it was Just Too Sweet for Anything, the Way he Loved me. But now I am Losing his Affections.

And she said, O Safed, dost thou not know some Philter, which I may cunningly concoct and give to him, that he may Partake Thereof and Love me Like he Used to?

And I answered, I know a Potent Love Potion, and I can impart it to thee.

And she said, O Safed, Deceive me not, neither keep me Waiting!

And I said, This is the Potion. Go thou to the Market, and there get thee a Beefsteak An Inch Thick, and be sure that it is Tender. Rub it gently with an Onion, and put it in the Broiler, and be sure that the Broiler is Hot. Place it over an Hot Fire and Cook it upon the one side: then turn thou it and Cook it upon the Other Side. And be sure thou cook it Quickly that thou cook the Juice into it and not out.

And she said, I will tell the Maid to do it so.

And I said, Nay, but do it with thine own hands.

And she said, Is that all?

And I said, Sprinkle it lightly with salt, and yet more lightly with Pepper; and place on the top thereof a Good Big Lump of Butter. Then take thou a Great Potato, and Bake it with the Cover on; and when it is baked, open it upon the Top Side, and put therein a Lump of Butter, and some Salt, and sprinkle the edges with Red Paprika. And have on thy Good Dress, which thou mayest cover with a Big Gingham Apron; and when thou seest thy husband coming, slip off thine Apron, and come to table in thy Best Bib and Tucker, and Smile at him while he eateth thy Magic Potion.

And she said, Will that assuredly give me back my husband's affections?

And I said, It is warranted never to fail.

And she said, But what about the High Cost of Living?

And I said, The High Cost of Living is justified by the High Cost of Loving. Beefsteak and Baked Potatoes, though they come high, are cheaper than Divorce and Alimony. Yea, and they yield their Peaceable Fruits.

And she went and concocted the Magic Potion even as I told her. And she administered it to her husband Many Times.

And they lived together Happily Ever After.—Congregationalist.

Our ideals are our visions. Let us idealize our lives and actualize our ideals. The heavenly vision comes in very humble and everyday forms, not in visits of angels of light flashing down from the skies. It comes in the simple guise of duty; the thing which you ought to do today, and which you know that you ought to do. That is the heavenly vision of the moment.—J. G. Greenbough.

REV. W. W. DAVIDSON.

Rev. W. W. Davidson, a member of Wilmington Presbytery, died of paralysis in Greensboro, N. C., on February 4, 1919, at the age of 61 years. He gave up the active ministry two years ago, because of failing health. Since that time he has preached occasionally, but could not assume the responsibilities of a pastorate.

He was exceptionally fine in scholarship, having graduated at Yale University with the degree of Ph.D. It was most instructive to hear him discuss the different branches of philosophy and the biographies of the various philosophers.

After completing his course at Yale, he served pastorates in Massachusetts and Indiana before returning to his native State. He taught school in Charlotte for two years. His last active ministerial work was at Elizabethtown, in Wilmington Presbytery.

Staunton Invites the General Assembly to Meet There in 1920.

At a congregational meeting in the First Presbyterian Church, of Staunton, Va., held February 2nd, it was unanimously resolved to invite the General Assembly to hold its 1920 meeting in that church. The church building has been recently renovated and the congregation have erected a new Sabbath School building of the most modern pattern; so this church is prepared to furnish unusual conveniences for the holding of the meeting of the Assembly.

PERSONAL.

The many friends of Dr. M. E. Melvin, who is conducting the campaign here in behalf of Queens College, will learn with regret that he is seriously ill with pneumonia, following "flu," at the Charlotte Sanatorium. The prayers of God's people will go up in his behalf, that his life so important to the church at large may be spared.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Reidville Group—Rev. C. O'N. Martindale, of Amite, La., has been called to the Reidville group of churches, in Enoree Presbytery, lately vacated by Rev. J. F. Ligon, and is expected to enter this new field at an early day.

Chester—Our pastor, Rev. J. E. Purcell, Jr., has been indisposed for several days. Rev. Jas. Russell filled his pulpit for him January 25. We are real glad to state that he is very much improved. Friday night, January 31, Dr. D. G. Phillips, of the A. R. P. Church of this city, preached to our congregation, a preparatory sermon, for the coming Sunday, this being the occasion of our mid-winter communion service. There was a large attendance out for this service. Several additions to the membership were read out to the congregation at this time.

Spartanburg—We quote from the Spartanburg Herald, an editorial note about Dr. Gilmour's call to Danville, Va.: "While the people of his own church, the First Presbyterian, will be particularly relieved and delighted to learn that Dr. A. D. P. Gilmour declines the call to go elsewhere, the whole community of Spartanburg will feel like congratulating itself. Dr. Gilmour has been in the city comparatively a brief time, but this period has been sufficient for Spartanburg to learn that in him she has a most valuable citizen, filled with the spirit of service to his fellowmen and gifted with the ability to serve well in manifold ways. An influence like his can ill be spared and The Herald heartily congratulates the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church and the city of Spartanburg upon the decision of Dr. Gilmour to remain in this field of work."

Upon his return from Danville an immense congregation greeted him, and twenty-seven new members were received, four on profession.

Columbia—Men and women who are interested in the religious welfare of our returning soldiers and sailors and in the religious reconstruction of the world after the war, are invited to attend the conference to be held in the First Presbyterian Church, on February 25, with sessions at 10:30, at 4, and at 8.

This conference will be led by Capt. M. L. Swineheart and Capt. F. L. Slaymaker, both of whom have rendered distinguished services in the army, and have now returned to religious work in which they were actively engaged before the war. These men have made a broad and deep study of the new problems confronting the church, and they will bring to Columbia many new ideas.

Similar conferences are being held under the leadership of Captain Slaymaker and Captain Swineheart in all of the larger cities in the South. They have aroused a new interest in the spiritual welfare of returning soldiers and sailors.

Among the topics to be discussed at the conference are the following: Bible Classes for Men, A Church Club to be Kept Open Throughout the Week, Individual Conferences with Returning Soldiers and Sailors, Changes in Public Worship to Meet Their New Needs, Larger Emphasis Upon Congregational Singing, Organization of Soldiers' Chorus, More Emphasis Upon Work Among Boys, Group Prayer Meetings—Such as Men Have had in Camp, Relations Between White and Negro Churches, and Practical Measures to Insure Employment to All Returning Soldiers and Sailors.

Delegates to this conference are to be elected by the various congregations of Congaree Presbytery. In addition to the delegates from the local congregations it is hoped that large numbers of other members will attend. A cordial invitation is also extended to officers and members from other denominations in Columbia, especially to Men's Bible Classes, for before the war Captain Slaymaker had large experience in religious work among men, especially in conducting Men's Bible Classes.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Morganton—Concord Presbytery at a called meeting in Mooresville, January 31, changed the place of its Spring meeting from Concord, First Church, to Morganton, at the invitation of the Morganton Church.

Charlotte—McGee—Rev. Wm. Black held a meeting at this church during the week of February 2-9. Owing to the sickness of Mr. Black and the weather conditions there were no immediate results.

Charlotte—First Church—In order to aid those whose hearing is defective, the First Church has installed acousticons in a great many of the pews, which will be appreciated by those who have had difficulty in hearing the sermon.

Badin—Rev. T. J. Tate, who has been engaged the past year in Army Y. M. C. A. work, has accepted the call to the church at Badin, N. C., and has begun his work there, under the most encouraging prospects.

Charlotte—Seversville—Rev. T. B. Anderson, former pastor of this church, held a meeting for his old flock last week, much to their pleasure. Mr. Anderson is now at St. Albans, W. Va., where he is most pleasantly situated. West Virginia is a progressive State, and the church will soon catch the same spirit.

Charlotte—The women of this city and community enjoyed a great privilege on last Monday in having Mrs. W.

C. Winsborough, Superintendent of Women's Work for the General Assembly, conduct a conference. All the city churches and many of the ones in the county were represented at this conference, one result of which was the organization of the missionary societies of these churches into a union to be known as the Mecklenburg County Union. In the afternoon Mrs. Winsborough addressed a large audience of women, in the auditorium of the First Church, where the sessions of the conference were held, on Stewardship and the tasks that the church must face in our own country and abroad. It was an informing and at the same time an inspirational address and the appeal to the women present to do their part both in individual and organized effort will no doubt result in much good.

Charlotte—Some time ago we carried in our columns a very interesting article on the Alexander Home of this city in which was shown the splendid work that this institution has done and is still doing for homeless children. It was also shown that the Home is dependent upon voluntary contributions for its support. The past week the hearts of the Board of Managers were gladdened by the gift of $1,000, an endowment fund presented to the Home by Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wearn, of Charlotte, the former an elder in the Second Presbyterian Church, in memory of their son, Donald Wearn, who died in France, October last, in the service of his country. The young soldier, hardly more than a lad himself, had a great love for children, and it was to perpetuate this love that the parents decided on this particular form of memorial to his memory.

No doubt very many handsome monuments will be erected in memory of the splendid young men who made the great sacrifice for world freedom overseas, but we doubt if any take a fairer or more enduring form than this one to be invested in the lives and happiness of the little helpless children that this Home rescues and mothers.

Montreat—The war period was especially trying for institutions of the nature of Montreat because of the high price of living, scarcity of labor, and restrictions placed by the Government upon building. It is most encouraging that notwithstanding these adverse conditions Montreat has done well during the war period. It may be of interest to the many friends of the institution, and the thousands who enjoy the advantages afforded by Montreat during the summer season, to know that special preparations will be made this year to provide for the largest attendance in the history of the institution. The last year building was restricted for the above mentioned reasons, and consequently the increasing numbers who come to Montreat annually must be cared for in the boarding houses and hotels. Already arrangements are being made for the better entertainment of the larger numbers who will probably attend the meetings. Considerable improvements will be made on the hotels and a number of attractive improvements have been made on the grounds and parks. Through the generosity of one of our Montreat friends a number of chairs and attractive benches have been provided for the hotel lobbies and verandas.

We have secured a man of fine experience to conduct the store, and we believe the service in this department will be far better this Summer than ever before. The program committee have a larger appropriation allotted to them this year than any previous one, and it is hoped this will secure even a larger and better program than we have had in previous years.

Some of those who have contemplated building on their lots and have postponed doing so on account of the war, would do well to take this matter up now with the contractors, as we believe conditions are more favorable than they have been for several years, and building would not prove unduly expensive at this time.

Rutherfordton—Rev. F. B. Rankin, who has been at Camp Jackson, in the Y. M. C. A. work, has changed his address to Rutherfordton, N. C. He is now District Director of "After War Work" with returned soldiers, sailors and marines, under the auspices of the State Committee of Y. M. C. A. He is stationed at Winston-Salem, N. C.

A Card of Thanks—I desire through this medium to express in some sort my gratitude to my brethren and friends for the letters of love and sympathy which they have sent to me in my late great bereavement in the loss of my wife. I regret that I cannot reply to every individual letter, but there is in my heart the appreciation for all that came through those kind messages. With a heart of love and gratitude to these and all who have helped me.

Fayetteville, N. C.

Winston-Salem—First Church—At a recent meeting of the officers and teachers of the Sunday School it was decided to devote to Christian Education the $500 Liberty Bond raised by the school in memory of one of its soldier-scholars, Grant Rector, who died in France in July. The fund is to be used as a perpetual memorial in the education of candidates for the ministry, and is to be turned over at once to our Committee in Louisville.

As an example of "hilarious giving" the $200 contributed by the school for the starving Armenians is to be cited. The tiny tots in the Beginners' department brought more than $20 and the other classes gave in like generous proportion.

Laurinburg—Two weeks after the recent installation of Rev. C. B. Craig as pastor, the church elected three additional elders and five deacons, giving us a total number of eighteen officers. The selection of these men met with universal favor and we are expecting great things from them.

We have received a number of new members in the past few weeks and are now most earnestly and prayerfully looking forward to the first week in March, when Rev. Wm. Black and Mr. Burr will conduct a meeting here.

Rev. C. E. Clark, of Kenly, N. C., visited us recently and presented the needs of Johnson County Mission Work in a most interesting manner. Some years ago the Laurinburg Church built a tabernacle at a preaching point from which a good church has sprung. After hearing Brother Clark the membership subscribed $460 for the erection of a needed church building in Johnson County.

We have recently increased our budget 40 per cent to meet the increased apportionment for benevolent causes.

Kenly—On the invitation of the Laurinburg and Laurel Hill Churches, the writer canvassed the two congregations for funds to erect a church building at Center Ridge, a mission point near Kenly, in a thickly populated community in Johnston County, where we have an organization of twenty-seven members.

The writer is not a very good solicitor, and naturally recoils from such a task. But in this case it was a real pleasure, the people being very enthusiastic and liberal. The contributions far exceeded our fondest hopes, the Laurinburg congregation contributing $482, and the Laurel Hill congregation $36.50. Only those present at the Laurel Hill Church were solicited, and no house-to-house canvass was made as in Laurinburg.

Mr. E. F. Murray, of the Milton Church, also sent a nice check. We now have $825 in bank.

We do not know how to thank the good people of these two congregations for their very liberal subscription to this needy and worthy cause. Words fail us. Especially do we wish to thank Mr. W. DeB. McEachin, through whose instrumentality the invitation was extended.

The Presbytery of Mecklenburg met in called session in the Charlotte, N. C., First Church, Monday, January 27, 1919, at 2 p. m.

There were twenty-three members in attendance.

Corresponding members: Rev. Dr. M. E. Melvin, of Mississippi; Rev. W. M. Hunter, of Atlanta; Rev. A. C. Ormond, of Meridian; Rev. E. E. Hendrix, of Potosi; Rev. Dr. J. H. Henderlite, and Rev. Mr. Gillespie, of Kings Mountain, Presbyteries. Rev. A. Y. Beatie, of Sedolia Presbytery, U. S. A. Mr. R. K. Axson, a ruling elder of Savannah, Ga., was introduced to Presbytery.

Rev. H. M. Pressly was granted permission to labor outside our bounds till the Spring meeting. He will spend the winter preaching in Florida.

Rev. W. H. Adams was dismissed to the Presbytery of Lafayette. He has taken charge of the work at Springfield, Missouri.

Rev. W. C. Wauchope was dismissed to Concord Presbytery, where he goes to become pastor of the Cannonville and Patterson Mills Churches, at Concord, N. C.

The principle business of the meeting was arranging for the campaign in the interest of Queens College. Rev. Dr. M. E. Melvin, the Assembly's field secretary, and his helpers, were heard with pleasure, after which Presbytery pledged its hearty support to the movement, and adopted the following paper:

"Resolved, That the Board of Trustees of Queens College be authorized to secure at least $50,000 to complete payment for the present equipment of the college, said subscriptions payable provided the minimum sum of $50,000 be raised."

Charlotte—Westminster—In spite of the flu epidemic the Westminster Church, of which Rev. Bunyan McLeod, Ph.D., is pastor, is making a good record. The congregations are large and the regular activities have been vigorously promoted. Twenty-one new members were received into the church. An intensive campaign for the Every Member Canvass is being planned; also an evangelistic meeting will be held the last of March conducted by Rev. Dr. Frank Arnold, of Kansas City, Mo., and Prof. C. L. Brooks, of Chicago.

Mooresville—A called meeting of Concord Presbytery was held January 31 at the Second Presbyterian Church here, at which time the resignation of Rev. F. A. Barnes, pastor of the church, was accepted, so that he might accept a call to the Burton Memorial Church at Schoolfield, Va. Commissions from the congregation of the Second Church and many members of Presbytery, especially the pastor of Mooresville First Church, expressed regret at Mr. Barnes' leaving Mooresville and Concord Presbytery. Many fine tributes were paid to him as a minister and a citizen.—Landmark.

Statesville—The Iredell County Board of Education paid the following deserved honor to Prof. J. H. Hill, of the Presbyterian Church of Statesville:

The board adopted the following resolution, ordering that a copy be placed on the minutes and a copy sent to Professor Hill today:

"The Board of Education of Iredell County extends its heartiest congratulations and best wishes to Prof. J. H. Hill on his eighty-seventh birthday. Always a man of clear vision and far-seeing mind, we feel that you have been a powerful factor in the progress of Iredell County. At this time we esteem it an especial privilege to assure you of our love and deepest respect. With the heartiest wishes that you may enjoy many returns of this occasion, we are very cordially yours."

SYNOD OF APPALACHIA.

Knoxville—First Church—The work of this church, which became somewhat disorganized during the pastor's absence in the Army Y. M. C. A. work, has been taken up with a new spirit since the first of the year, and the outlook seems bright for a splendid year of service.

The first Sunday in January was Rally Day. The officers of the church had called on the church members the Sunday before, giving them an invitation to the Sunday services, so that on January 5, the attendance at all the services was large and there was a spirit of real interest. Since then the attendance at the morning church service has grown each Sunday till every available space for chairs is taken, and at the night service there is a large audience. Four hundred and thirty-six partook of the communion at the communion service in January.

The Sunday School too has been booming. A steady increase has been shown each Sunday and the average for the month of January was 100 more than the same month last year.

The prayer meeting service shows a marked increase in attendance and enthusiasm. Beginning with seventy-five the first week in January, there has been a gain of a few each week till almost 125 are attending now. The pastor is teaching the Gospel of Mark, and the people are vitally interested.

At a banquet in January a Men's Club was started and already over 100 membership tickets have been taken. The men are responding in a fine way, and plans are being laid to make it a vital force in the life of our church.

Last week 200 of our women met to consider the reorganization of the Woman's Work. Dr. Flinn, of Atlanta, addressed the meeting, telling of the organization of the women in his church. A constitution was adopted, officers elected, and an organization born which will include every woman in the church in its working and give each woman a chance to use her talents.

On Friday, the 31st, the ladies of the church "pounded" the pastor and his wife at their home, to splendid effect. Each woman brought a glass of jelly or a jar of fruit, so that nearly 300 jars of sweets line the shelves at the manse.

GEORGIA.

Blakely and Arlington Churches have received additions that will greatly strengthen them in courage to endeavor. Arlington is preparing to possess its own place of worship. It has also increased substantially its contribution to the pastor's salary and to benevolences.

Attapulcus was visited recently by influenza, but not fatally. The church services were not materially interfered with. Four-fifths of its school membership organized themselves into a school on Amsterdam. This almost broke up our school, but a determined few continues here. We hope for increased interest on the part of our members to grow thereby.

Donalsonville Church and School are progressing splendidly, both in work and in worship. Two splendid young men made profession of faith the last preaching day of last year. More recently two men and their wives came by letter, which puts our membership up into the eighties.

Rev. J. W. Stokes has declined calls elsewhere recently given him. The work here is important, the people are loyal and active and generous. Constantly is the manse visited by members and others, leaving substantial tokens of esteem. The work in outlying districts is responding to the preaching give in the afternoons of Sabbaths.

TENNESSEE.

Synod of Tennessee—A special meeting of the Synod of Tennessee convened in the First Presbyterian Church, Nashville, at 10 a. m., and a quorum being present, was opened with a brief sermon by the retiring moderator, Rev. E. D. McDougall, D.D.

Rev. Chas. E. Diehl, D.D., was elected moderator, and Rev. Joseph H. Lumpkin, D.D., temporary clerk.

At this meeting, made necessary by the failure of the Synod to hold its regular session in Brownsville in October, only the business necessary to carrying on the Synod's work was transacted.

Dr. E. D. McDougall was appointed the Synod's manager of the General Assembly's $3,000,000 campaign for benevolences.

Maj. G. W. McCrea, of Memphis, was reappointed as Synod's Trustee for the Southwestern Presbyterian University.

A committee consisting of the moderator, the stated clerk and Rev. C. V. Crabbe, of Brownsville, was appointed to arrange for the regular meeting of the Synod next Fall.

VIRGINIA.

Staunton First—The congregation of the First Church, Staunton, on last Sabbath elected as elders of the church Mr. Francis H. Bear, Dr. Kenneth Bradford, Dr. George H. Thomas and the Hon. H. B. Sproul.

This church has invited the General Assembly of 1920 to meet with them. We feel sure that the invitation will be accepted.

Martinsville—Anderson Memorial Church—Rev. Wm. P. McCorkle, who is closing his twelfth year with this church, announced some weeks ago his purpose to resign at an early date, his resignation to take effect not later than the middle of May. Should he remain that long, he will have completed twelve years. Under his administration the church building has been renovated, and the membership is much stronger, both numerically and financially, than it was twelve years ago. Every child of Presbyterian parents in Martinsville who is old enough to be a member of the church is now a communicant. There are few adults among the Presbyterian element in the community who have not been brought into the fold.

Story and Incident

Why the United States Navy is Dry.

Address by the Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy

BISHOP McDOWELL, introducing Secretary Josephus Daniels at the annual meeting of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals, in Washington, a few days since, said: "He has done the most extraordinary thing in the world, namely, made a dry navy!" The secretary had come before the gathering to tell the story of the navy's going dry. He did it with that off-hand, easy style which gives his oratory such a hold upon his hearers.

Secretary Daniel's Address.

"I was asked to come this morning to explain the reason why the so-called 'dry order' in the navy was issued.

"There were many reasons given for it at the time and the latest reason was suggested about two months ago in a paper in Paris. A friend of mine who was working in a Y. M. C. A. in France sent me a magazine, which purported to give the reason why the dry order was issued. It said that some one asked the Secretary of the Navy why he had issued it, and he replied: 'Well, you know, when I was a young man I was a great soak!' And that I knew the evils of drink from experience! And that therefore I had issued the order to save men from my own fate! And in a footnote there was appended the French for 'wine-bibber,' 'guzzler and drunkard.' I am not able to read French myself, so when the paper came I was not able to understand anything about what they were saying of me, so I sent the magazine to my son, who is at the university and who is studying French and greatly interested in it, and I said, 'Here's an article written by somebody in France about your father. I can't read it. I wish you would translate it and send it to me.' He did so, but wrote a very indignant letter and was greatly incensed that the people of France should be made to believe that his father was a 'guzzler,' and accompanied his letter by a demand on me that I should write to the editor of that paper and threaten him with a libel suit unless he retracted his statement! And I wrote back to the boy and told him that many worse things had been said about me, and some of them true, and as long as the criticisms were as false as that we might let them go to the ground, but in order to please the boy I sent his letter, with a copy of the magazine, to our ambassador in Paris, Mr. Sharp, who had served in Congress and who was an old friend of mine, and told him that, as he knew very well I never replied to any criticism, that I always took the view that a public officer must meet criticism by results or he could not meet it at all, but that since the boy was very much upset about the matter I was transmitting the paper and my son's letter to him for his information, and that if he thought it worth while he might call the matter to the attention of the editor in Paris, which he did, and the editor wrote me a very handsome letter and said that in the next issue he would explain that I was not as great a 'soak' as I was supposed to be!

"Well, of course, the explanation of why the order was issued, is of course, solely because temperance is the only sure method to efficiency. And my ambition was that the navy, whether it be large or whether it be small, no matter what its size, should be the most efficient and most powerful navy that should float!

"But the moving cause of it—I might not have issued it at that time, although I had thought of it ever since I came into the Cabinet, and I had been studying conditions—was the following incident:

"One day there came into my office a splendid gentleman, and he said: 'I want to talk to you about my nephew. You have expelled him from the navy in disgrace and I wish to appeal to you to reinstate him.' His nephew had been drunk on board ship. He had gone ashore to a dinner and made an exhibition of himself and brought disgrace on the service.

He had been tried by court-martial and convicted and sentenced to dishonorable dismissal from the navy. And I said to the gentleman, 'I cannot change the order. I cannot permit men to disgrace the service that way and remain in it.' And then this man, an old Quaker, said to me: 'Sir, this boy is a product of the navy and you have made him what he is, and now you throw him out in disgrace!' And he gave a very deserved and severe lecture upon a service that would make it possible and easy for young men to go into temptation and into drink, and then, when they have fallen, disgrace them for life. It impressed me very much. He explained: 'When this boy's father died he came into my family to live as my own son. We never had a drop of wine, even, on our table. We are strictly temperate in our home, and the boy never tasted a drink until he went to Annapolis, nor until after he graduated, and then he went aboard ship and every dinner there was the wine mess and there was a feeling in the navy that if a man did not take his glass he was not exactly a good fellow, and they nearly all did it, and this boy, following the custom, learned the taste of it, and he liked it; and now he's ruined, and the navy,' said he, 'is responsible for the ruin of that boy, and I charge it to you!'

"And I thought it was a just indictment, and I made up my mind at once that I would issue the order. And that's the reason why the order went through!

"Now, I had no illusions about the order when I signed it. I never dreamed it would be popular in certain circles. I knew, in the first place, that many excellent men, many sober men, many men in the navy who had never in their lives taken more than a glass of wine, and who had never neglected their duties, would resent the order as telling to the world that it was necessary for an order to be issued to make them sober and efficient, and I had respect for their opinions, and when they criticised it and said, 'We don't care anything about it except that it puts a bad impression in the public mind about us,' I could see their point of view.

"But I reflected that there were coming into the service thousands of men, young men, who had not the stamina to resist, and my obligation and duty was to them; and, moreover, there was already in existence in the navy an order that if an enlisted man should so much as bring a bottle of beer on board ship and drink it he was put in the brig, and yet these men under these rules served the drinks to the officers! But I am an old-fashioned sort of an American, who believes that what's good enough for an officer is good enough for the enlisted man! And my observation has been that whiskey and all other alcoholic drinks will make a senator or an admiral just as drunk as they will make a brick mason or an enlisted man.

A Democratic Order.

"So that the order had not only efficiency, which was the primal thing, but it had also democracy behind it, because I would not be secretary of a navy that would say to a young man who was scrubbing the decks, 'If you take a glass of wine you go to the brig,' when he saw the wine being carried to the officers' quarters and heard the drink-inspired sounds of jollity that issued from those quarters. The old method wasn't democracy and it wasn't Americanism.

"Not long after that order was issued you know what happened. I have a rather good collection of the cartoons that followed! And they interested me very much. But the storm was not as great as I expected. I thought that when Congress met some distinguished member would rise in that body and offer a resolution to the effect that I had exceeded my powers in putting prohibition in effect over the vast majority of the world without legislative sanction, because, you know, the water is a much greater part of the world than the land! And I, by one order, had put in effect, so far as America was concerned, prohibition over the greater part of the world! But by the time Congress assembled, instead of the resolution being offered I think even to those who did not approve of prohibition in general it was apparent that the navy had become so efficient that they had no argument against it. And there never was any question raised in Congress about the authority to issue the order, and I think now there is no question anywhere about the wisdom of it.

"Not long ago I was talking with one of the very best admirals in the navy, a brave and courageous and splendid man, and he said: 'You know I must tell you something about that order. My ship was in New York at the time the order was issued and I was going up to Boston to spend a week or two. I had been entertained in Boston by many people, and so I told the steward to stock up my larder, and I had put in the wine and the champagne and the other things along with the food, not because I drink myself; I rarely taste it; a glass of wine at a meal is all I ever take, but when I had guests on the ship I always entertained them as they did me. And so I had spent considerable money for the entertainment and when the order came I distinctly resented it. I felt that you had put upon my liberties and my rights something that was almost an affront, but,' he added, 'I am what they call in the navy a "captain's man." I give orders and expect them to be obeyed, and when the order came from the Secretary of the Navy I obeyed. I said nothing to anybody. I sent for the steward and I said: "Take it all out." I went ahead and have never spoken of the incident to this day, but,' he said, 'I am speaking of it now to you because since then I have come to a higher position in the navy and have had opportunities to observe its operations, and I do not believe there are five per cent of the officers of the navy who would permit liquor to come back if they had the chance!'

For Universal Practice.

"So that order, simply relating to a small portion of our population, has come to be a part of our own navy, and I think the day will come when it will be adopted by all the navies in the world.

"I had this suggestion made from many quarters that there ought to be an exception to the order; that it was all right and proper, that it should apply without any exceptions to Americans in American ports, but when our ships went abroad and all the officers entertained the captains and admirals of other navies, of course it would not be courteous and proper to people who are accustomed to that kind of entertainment not to entertain them exactly as they entertained us. And on one occasion, when we had a distinguished party from abroad in Washington, who were to be entertained on the Mayflower, the suggestion was made that we ought to relax the rule. In China, they said, it would not be popular. Well, I replied that the order had been issued with no exceptions and that I knew enough of the spirit of the people abroad to be certain that they would respect the navy a great deal more if it believed in this principle if it practiced it all over the world than if it observed the rule only at home.

"So that is the simple story of what caused at one time a storm! But I always knew that the great heart of the American people and I always knew that the great Church to which I belonged, which is a temperance Church and a prohibition Church, were behind it, and that I was but doing in my place what you and millions of other Americans were doing in their places, putting the stamp of condemnation on the liquor traffic and upon the evil of drinking wherever we could.

"We are now coming to a day when I trust and believe this evil will be put under ban by law. This is the first war in the history of the world when any nation, as a nation, through government officials, has taken the stand that our government has taken with reference to drink and immorality and when zones were established around all encampments and around all training stations, to protect young men from the temptations that assail them, so that as we end the war and contrast it with all former wars, we find that, compared to those other wars, very few men have been incapacitated by drink, and we have found in war as in peace that efficiency is promoted by temperance, and that you cannot have a strong army unless you have a sober army."—Christian Advocate.

A campaign is being made this week on the campus for funds for the support of William P. Parker, the Davidson College missionary to Pyengyang, Korea, whose support the students of the college undertook several years ago; rather they made themselves responsible for $600 towards his support.

The sympathies of the community go out to the family of Mr. M. W. Cranford in the news that has just come this week confirming their fears that the youngest son, Reid D. Cranford, who was wounded in France in July, had died from his wounds on the same day. Ever since the official telegram received last July telling of his hurt, the family has tried in vain till now to get further news, but every effort proved fruitless. The news of his death now hardly causes surprise, but is a painful confirmation of fears. The young fellow was the idol of his home, a boy of many fine qualities and of earnest Christian character. He was a musician of talent and was always heard as a singer in the choir of Sunday School and church with great pleasure.

Marshals-elect in the Phi Society are: O. P. Hart, T. C. Stone, D. W. Roberts, L. B. McKeithen.

The honor roll for the Fall term has just been announced.

Class 1922: J. P. Price, 95.94; J. M. Richards, 95.44.

Class 1921: W. P. Cumming, 95.86.

Class 1920: A. L. Foscutt, 95.80.

Fraternity averages for the year 1917-18: S. A. E., 83.56; Beta Theta Pi, 82.61; K. A., 81.05; K. S., 77.48; T. K. A., 75.83. It is thus seen that the S. A. E. fraternity has won for the preceding year 1917-18 the Pan-Hellenic Belk Fraternity Cup, that goes to the fraternity reaching the highest grade for the year concerned.

The small number of men attaining the coveted grade of at least 95 (honor roll) this past term of course is explained in the fact that most of the students were in the S. A. T. C.

MITCHELL COLLEGE.

The Trustees of Mitchell College, through Dr. C. M. Richards as spokesman, applied to the Presbytery for permission to launch a campaign for $50,000 for the college. The request was granted without a dissenting vote or a word of opposition. The campaign work will be done by Dr. Melvin and his corps of workers, who are directed by the Assembly's Committee on Christian Education, headquarters at Louisville, Ky.—Statesville Landmark.

FLORA MACDONALD COLLEGE.

Dr. Frederick Henry Koch, professor of dramatic literature at the University of North Carolina, gave a charming lecture at Flora Macdonald College on Monday evening, January 27, his subject being Shakespeare and the People, with special reference to Shakespeare's comedy. Professor Koch delighted and held the close attention of his audience throughout the hour and a half devoted to the discussion, and he proved his dramatic instinct and ability to interpret and impersonate in the two scenes given from The Taming of a Shrew.

We are glad to say that Dr. Koch will come to us again in a few weeks to give an illustrated lecture on "Playmakers of the People," which is preliminary to a statewide movement for the organization and formation of a league of Carolina Playmakers, whose prime purpose will be the production of plays dealing with North Carolina life and people and the promotion of such playmaking in North Carolina—a state more richly endowed with folk-lore, of abundance and variety, declares Professor Koch, than any other in the range of his knowledge. He was delighted to find at Red Springs material of promise in the story of Flora Macdonald and the History of the Lowrie Gang.

Marriages and Deaths

Marriages.

Priest-Waddell—At the Chetwynd Hotel, Laurinburg, N. C., on January 13, 1919, Mr. Wm. Priest and Mrs. Emily Waddell, both of Chesterfield County, S. C.

Deaths.

Walters—Mrs. Gola Stanley Walters, aged 26 years, died at Laurinburg, N. C., February 3, 1919. She was a faithful member of the Baptist Church. Surviving her are her husband, child, parents, four brothers and four sisters.

Cheek—On December 26, 1918, at her home in Mebane, N. C., Mrs. Elizabeth Phillips Cheek died after a year of declining health in her seventy-ninth year. She was a charter member of Mebane Church and reflected the glory of her Saviour by her consecrated life.

Boggs—Resolutions of Session of the Pendleton Presbyterian Church: Ruling Elder Charles Jackson Boggs having departed this life, be it resolved:

1. That we place on record our high estimate of his character, his earnest piety and his abiding interest in the work of the church.

2. That a page of our records be dedicated to his memory.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the family, with the expressed sympathy of the session, and that they be published in the Presbyterian Standard.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Mary Mebane Lasley.

We, the ladies of the Burlington Presbyterian Church, have met today to honor the memory of our departed friend and co-worker, Mrs. Mary Mebane Lasley, who fell asleep at her home Thursday morning, January 16, 1919. It seems fitting that we should at least give some small expression of our deep sorrow at her death, and our high appreciation of her life. In 1881 she was married to Mr. William Winslow Lasley and had lived all their married life in this town. To their happy union were born four sons. She was quiet and retiring by nature, intellectually strong, a great reader, possessed a retentive memory. Religiously she was a thorough Presbyterian; she knew her Bible and the system of doctrine taught in the Confession of Faith and Catechism. She had served as secretary and treasurer of the Woman's Auxiliary for many years and admirably filled the position. She was always present when health permitted and her supreme aim in her life was loyalty to her Master and to her home. She was an unwavering friend and we loved her dearly and will ever miss her interest and her prayers. Yet we thank our Heavenly Father she is free from weakness and suffering.

She was one of the charter members of the Helping Hand Circle of the Kings Daughters and always manifested the true spirit of love and helpfulness. Well it may be said of her, "She wears it not in well-doing." Let us ever treasure her precept and her example. Her sweet memory will remain with us a benediction and an incentive to our work. Only eternity can reveal the good accomplished by her life. We mourn her loss and do hereby tender to the bereaved husband and devoted sons our tender sympathy and commend them to God, who alone can soothe the wound and add the balm of consolation. She was laid to rest in Pine Hill cemetery, where her eldest son, who preceded her to the grave two years ago, sleeps. With her grave covered with the most beautiful flowers, there to await the Resurrection Morn, she rests.

Be it Resolved:

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, the Presbyterian Standard, and a copy be placed on the minutes of the society.

Mrs. Lula M. White.
Mrs. Fannie C. Sellars.

IN MEMORIAM.

Miss Belle Alford.

Whereas, God, in His divine providence, has been pleased to take to Himself, Miss Belle Alford, on September 8, 1918, we, the members of the Auxiliary of Ashpole Church hereby express our heartfelt sorrow at our loss in the following resolutions:

1st. That in her death our society has lost a loyal and faithful member, and Ashpole Church sustained the loss of one of her most zealous workers, one faithful in attendance unless providentially hindered and one who delighted in the service of God.

2nd. That while we acknowledge in her death the great loss to our church and our society, we feel grateful for the long example of her loyalty and unselfishness.

3rd. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one to the Presbyterian Standard and a page in the minute book be devoted to the memory of this faithful member.

IN MEMORIAM.

Little Wharton Medearis, the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. I. Medearis, was born April 30, 1911, and died on Tuesday afternoon, January 21, at his home, 657 Chestnut street, of pneumonia following a severe attack of influenza. This sad death came as a great shock to the family and to their many friends who are deeply touched and grieved with them in their sorrow. On January 22, the funeral services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. E. Frank Lee, assisted by Dr. O. G. Jones. Interment took place in Green Hill cemetery. Surviving the deceased are his father and mother and his little brother, John William, younger than himself.

The sunshine of his smile will no more gladden others here,
But the gates of Paradise have opened wide

To give welcome and a place to the lad of the manly, cherub face.

Long time ago it was said, 'Suffer them to come unto Me,'

And on his childhood's head the Saviour's hand hath rested.

And the place prepared for him was made ready—

The place of life, of smiles, and of never-ending play.

The God of all comfort comfort the hearts of the bereaved and cause them to trust in the covert of His wings.

E. Frank Lee, Pastor.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Nancy Blue Mercer.

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom has called to her reward, on November 3, 1918, Mrs. Nancy Mercer; therefore, we, the members of the Woman's Auxiliary of Ashpole Presbyterian Church do hereby adopt the following resolutions:

1st. That in her death our Auxiliary has sustained the loss of one whose quiet Christian life has ever been an example of faith and devotion to His cause.

2nd. That we extend our deepest sympathy to her loved ones and commend them to Him who is the Great Comforter.

3rd. That a copy of these resolutions be recorded in our minutes, be published in the Presbyterian Standard and sent to the family.

A "TWIN" LETTER.

Dear Standard:

As all the rest of the little girls and boys are writing, we thought we would write too. We go to school at Laurel Hill; our teacher is Miss Thelma E. Williams. We like her fine. We go to Sunday School every Sunday; our teacher is Mrs. Stokes Williams. We like her. We have a pet dog; his name is Roseland King. We have two brothers and two sisters; one is teaching school at Spray Institute. She spent a week with us Christmas. We live with our uncle. We will be thirteen years old tomorrow. We are twins. This is our first letter to the Standard. We hope it won't reach the waste basket as we want to surprise our uncle.

Your little friends,
Sallie and J. Repton Murphy.
Wallace, N. C.

GETTING IT BACK ON FATHER

Dear Standard:

I am six years old this very day and I am having such a happy birthday with lots of nice presents. Don't you think, I had to go to the hospital a week before Christmas and have my tonsils taken out and I couldn't speak for three days, but I have talked enough to make up for lost time. My uncle, Dr. Campbell, came down from Newton to see the job well done, and he says I was a very brave girl, but then he thinks lots of me anyway. I enjoyed reading my father's sermon in the Standard some time ago, so I thought he might like to read something from me. I hope this won't be very long coming out, 'cause it's so hard to keep a secret, and I do want to surprise father and grandmama. I received a prize for not missing Sunday School all last year. I lost two teeth not long ago and now I have two nice new ones. With best wishes.

Your little friend,
Janie Campbell Lapsley.

HUNTS "BRER FOX."

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl ten years old. I go to school at Laurel Hill. I am in the fifth grade. My teacher is Cousin Thelma E. Williams. I have forty little pigs. My father is a fox hunter; he has six dogs. My uncle takes your nice paper and I go to his home and read the little letters and stories in it. I enjoy reading them. Santa brought me a box of stationery and lots of other tricks. I hope my letter won't reach the waste basket as I want to surprise my papa and mamma.

Your little friend,
Serene E. Williams.

JILL'S DISPOSITION BAD.

Dear Standard:

I am a boy five years old but I will soon be six. I have been going to school some this winter. Mrs. Winecoff is my teacher. She is fine and she has such a pretty little girl named Mary Draughan. We learned the 23rd Psalm and some other verses at school. I have two pretty cats, one named Blacky and one named Jill. Jill catches the most mice, but I like Blacky better because he is more gentle than Jill. I like our pastor, Mr. Goodman, so much. I hope his little baby girl will soon get big enough to play. She is not much good now for she is so little. I wonder if Janie Campbell Lapsley will see my letter.

HELP FOR ARMENIA.

Dear Standard:

We four members of the Junior class in the Church of the Covenant Sunday School write to thank you for all you have told us of the little homeless, starving children of Armenia and to enclose a check for $16.00. Five dollars and eleven cents were collected in our Sunday School and we collected or made the rest. Camp Bragg is very near us and some of the soldiers contributed. A great many of them attend our Christian Endeavor meetings. We have no regular church services, as our pastor, Rev. R. A. McLeod, joined the army last Spring as chaplain. Eight of our boys are in the army in France, or in training camps.

Sincerely your little friends,
Ruth Lamb.

THE HIDDEN NEST.

Cuddledown was a beautiful cat. She had a cold little nose and a warm little tongue and the softest, silkiest fur. When she was cross—and that never happened unless she was teased—she said, "Meow!" very sharply, and she scratched "Meow!" too with her sharp little claws. But when she was happy—and that was nearly always—she sang, "Purr, purr," in the coziest way, as she cuddled down to sleep. So the children called her Cuddledown.

Now Rob and Jenny were very fond of Cuddledown. If they wanted to romp, she was ready for a game with a ball or a string. How she did run and jump! She could out-bounce the ball any time. And no string could twist itself into as many knots as she could make. Besides she could untwist herself, while the string couldn't! And if Rob and Jenny preferred to curl upon the window seat with a book, Cuddledown was perfectly happy to curl down between them for a nap.

But of late something had come over Cuddledown. She said, "Purr," as prettily as ever, to be sure, and she ate her food with remarkable relish, being careful to wash her paws and her face afterwards, and to scrub well behind her ears. Oh, Cuddledown was nothing if not thorough! But when Rob and Jenny spoke to her, she seemed to be thinking about something else. And she was much too busy to play! For hours at a time she disappeared, and no calling through the house, or hunting about the grounds could find where she was hidden.

One morning the children were gathering eggs. They visited all the nests, and were coming back past the barn, when they saw a hen hop off the ladder that led to the loft.

"Do you suppose she's made a nest in the hay?" asked Rob.

"We'd better see," said Jenny.

So the children set down their basket and climbed to the hay-mow. It was quiet and sweet-smelling there, and through the high windows the light shone dimly. Rob and Jenny crawled over the hay, looking for a nest. And they found it too!

"What's that funny squeaking?" Jenny asked.

"Perhaps it's a mouse," returned Rob.

The squeaking rose suddenly in a clamor of tiny sounds. And the next minute the children were down on their knees by a cozy hollow filled with four tiny, furry, talkative kittens.

"So that's the secret Cuddledown has been keeping from us," laughed Rob.

"Oh, the cunning, darling things," cried Jenny.

The babies seemed glad to be found. They allowed themselves to be picked up and admired. They even purred a little inside their wee little throats. And how funny it sounded!

"But I don't see why Cuddledown hid them," said Jenny. "She ought to be proud. I should think she'd want to show them to everybody."

The babies squeaked again excitedly. There was a soft rustle in the straw, and Cuddledown appeared. She arched her back, and rubbed her head against Rob and Jenny, and purred so loudly that it was almost like real talking.

"Of course I want people to see them," she probably said. "I was waiting till they were old enough. Aren't they beautiful children?"

To make them even more beautiful, she began scrubbing the babies with her pink tongue. It made a pretty rough wash cloth, but the babies enjoyed it—all but the ears. For Cuddledown was nothing if not thorough.

"We don't blame you for not wanting to play with an old string," said Rob.

"You must let us help play with your babies," added Jenny.

Cuddledown looked at Rob and Jenny, and purred more loudly than ever.

"That will be delightful," she seemed to say. "You are right about my babies making beautiful playthings. Come as often as you like."

The playthings didn't say anything. You see they were busy falling asleep. But they stayed awake long enough to wink at Rob and Jenny. It's fun having your playthings wink at you!

"That's the nicest nest we ever found," said Rob and Jenny.—Abigail Burton, in The Presbyterian.

A PROVIDENTIAL DELAY.

"How long do we stop here, conductor?"

"About an hour, I am afraid, sir; the freight ahead is pretty badly wrecked, and it will take some time to clear the tracks."

The passengers grumbled, as delayed passengers mostly do, but John Pendleton thought it was fun to stay out in the deep woods for an hour. John, being a city boy, thought the woods a fine place.

"Please let me go out, father," said John; "I want to play wild Indian a while."

"Don't get out of the sound of my war whoop, then," said his father; "mind now, keep close to the car."

It was more fun because it was getting dark rapidly, and it was easier to pretend that Indians were hidden behind the trees and panthers and wolves lurking in the shadows. But in a few minutes John was back at the car window.

"Father," he said, "I see a little cabin through the trees; they have just lighted a lamp in it; may I run over to it? I want to see who lives there."

His father consulted his watch. "I can give you thirty minutes," he said; "here, take my watch along, and don't be a minute later than half an hour in getting back."

John dropped the watch into his pocket and sped away through the trees. When he reached the door of the log cabin he stopped for a minute. What excuse had he for knocking at the door?

"I'm real, sure enough thirsty," said the breathless runner. "I'll ask for a drink of water." He rapped loudly.

"Come in," said a voice in tones of surprise, and he opened the door. There was only one person in the cabin, a black boy about John's size, and he was laid up in bed.

It did not take our young traveler long to get his drink, nor to find out that the boy's name was "Jake," that his father was a wood chopper, and that he himself had had his leg broken by a falling tree some weeks before.

"Daddy generally gits home by this time," said Jake, "but I reckon he's gone to de sto' to git some victuals. Mammy she cooks for de Harrison's, 'bout mile from here, and she don't git home till arter supper."

"You must be lonely," said John. "I don't mind it so much in day time," said Jake, "but that one hour arter it gits dark is wus 'an all de rest."

John felt his heart swell with pity for the poor, bedridden boy. What could he do for him? He had only a few minutes to spend; he had no money in his pocket, but he took out a handsome knife and his silk pocket handkerchief.

"Here, Jake," he said, "keep these to remember me by."

As he passed them over to the bed, the shadow from the little lamp Jake had lighted threw a great picture of his hand on the wall.

"Oh, look here!" cried John, "do you know how to make a wolf's head? Put your two hands together, so, thumbs up; now curl the three first fingers of your left hand a little, only a little, and stretch your fourth finger wide; now, move it up and down—see?"

The lame boy burst into a merry laugh, as the shadow of a wolf's head, with moving jaw, fell upon the white wall.

"Here's another," said John, eagerly, "but it is harder to do. Put your right hand over the left, leaving the first and fourth fingers bent this way for a snout; two fingers of left hand for lower jaw, thumb and other fingers for legs—there!"

Another peal of laughter greeted the shadow of a pig sitting upright.

"Now I must run," said John. "I wish I had some money to give you."

Jake's father came in just then, and looked ready to cry with pleasure; and as John bounded away, he left the lame boy eagerly showing him his new amusement.

"I envy you the chance, my boy," said John's father, as the train moved on, "of lightening that poor creature's weary load."

"Father," said John softly, "maybe that is what God stopped the train for."

"It would be just like Him," answered his father in the same tone.—Parish Visitor.

WASHING DISHES.

When Dolly washes dishes,
She's almost sure to fret.
She splashes water everywhere,
And gets her apron wet.

"Oh, dear!" she says, with clash and pout,
"If I could have my wish,
I'd have a house my every own,
Without a single dish!"

When Betty washes dishes,
A smile is on her lips.
She calls the soapsuds fairy seas,
The dishes, little ships.

"Ah, me!" she says, "if fairy folk
Could give us all our wishes,
What lovely journeys we should make—
I and my pretty dishes!"

—The Mayflower.

Several hundred German boys and girls recently paraded the streets of Berlin and finally massed around the Reichstag building, demanding of the government the abolition of corporal punishment and the right of children to participate in the administration of the government and the schools. A lad of 17 spoke for them, threatening "terrible consequences" if the government did not grant their demands. They demanded the removal of Premier Ebert and Philip Scheidemann. We suppose this will be followed by similar action on the part of those under school age, who will renounce parental authority and demand the right to throw their toys around the floor or keep the parents awake all night, or they may call for government control of the candy factories in order to secure an increased output at nominal prices, or they may call for a pie administration to see that everyone gets the third piece. We may smile at their actions, but we weep over the spirit that produced it.—United Presbyterian.

Deaths.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. A. H. McArn.

In the death of Mrs. A. H. McArn, wife of our beloved pastor, on December 15, 1918, the Junior Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church, Cheraw, S. C., lost not only one of its most loved members, but one of its most zealous and devoted members.

Therefore be it resolved:

That though we sadly miss her, and shall feel our loss keenly in the society and church, yet we know that it is her eternal gain.

That the memory of her love, zeal and faithfulness to the work of our Lord and Master will always be an inspiration to us.

That our loving sympathy be extended to our pastor, the two sons who are serving their country, and the young daughter, in their bereavement.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, the Church papers, and also be recorded in the minutes of our society.

Mrs. E. C. Matheson,
Mrs. W. M. McCreight,
Mrs. Robert Chapman,
Committee.

Cheraw, S. C.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. J. R. Whitley.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father in His infinite wisdom has called from us our beloved friend and co-worker, Mrs. J. R. Whitley, whose spirit took its flight on December 24, 1918.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That in her death the Woman's Auxiliary of Elmira Presbyterian Church has lost one of its most faithful members, whose presence will be greatly missed.

2. That though we are deeply grieved by our loss we how in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well.

3. That we extend to her bereaved family our sincere and heartfelt sympathy, commending them to Him who hath said, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

4. That a page of our minutes be set apart for these resolutions. That a copy be sent to her bereaved family and a copy be sent to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

Mrs. C. A. Donnell,
Mrs. J. T. Miller,
Miss Lowney Durham,
Committee.

CYRUS D. NESBITT.

Cyrus D. Nesbitt was born April 20, 1834, in Greenville County, S. C., and died near Piedmont, S. C., December 16, 1918, at the advanced age of eighty-four.

He was a Confederate Veteran and lieutenant in Company E, Hampton Legion, with the Army of Virginia, in the hardest fighting of the Civil War.

On July 27, 1865, he married Miss Sue Blackely, who survives him, together with the only son and grandson.

He was a successful business man and a progressive farmer.

He was also deeply interested in the church, having served as a deacon in Fairview Presbyterian Church a number of years; later he was an officer in Piedmont Presbyterian Church, first as a deacon and then an elder, from day of organization until the day of his death.

In the removal of Brother Nesbitt's citizenship from earth to heaven, the church has lost a valuable member, the community a loyal citizen, his family a heart as brave and true as love could inspire.

We thank God upon every remembrance of his life and do this day record our deepest appreciation of his good confession, loyal service, royal friendship.

So passed a Christian gentleman, of the old Southern type, courteous, warm-hearted, affectionate, leaving a memory dear to his relatives and friends and a cherished legacy to his descendants.

"Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season."

Albert E. Wallace, Pastor.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Rebecca Scott Powell.

Since God, in His divine providence, has taken to His Heavenly Home our beloved sister and co-worker, Mrs. Rebecca Scott Powell, we, the members of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Whiteville Presbyterian Church, wish herein to express our deepest sorrow at her going and though we have suffered a great loss, we bow in submission to the will of our all-wise Father and thank Him for her short stay among us, which was filled with Christian activity and endeavor.

Hers was a life in which the sun shone all the way through, radiating happiness and love, warming and blessing the hearts of all with whom she came in contact.

The memory of her rare and beautiful spirit will ever inspire us to greater service to our King.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we commend to the people of the church her faithfulness in service, and her loyalty to God and to her country.

2. That we extend to her loved ones our heartfelt sympathy and commend them to the love of our Father, who beareth all our griefs.

3. That these resolutions be inscribed in the minutes of the Auxiliary and a copy be sent to her husband and to her parents.

Mrs. A. S. Chadbourn,
Mrs. H. H. Horton,
Committee.

KAISER'S ILLNESS
AGGRAVATED BY WORRY

Through the medium of the Associated Press we are informed that William Hohenzollern's illness, which manifests itself principally in the form of chills, is being aggravated by his constant worry, the effects of which are plainly visible in his features and his general physical conditions. The former German emperor looks to be perhaps 15 years older than when he crossed the frontier of Holland. Although he is only about to complete his sixtieth year, his birthday coming at the end of the present month, his appearance suggests a man of 70. He wears a short grayish beard and a drooping mustache, and his hitherto firm flesh is now sagging. The ex-emperor, who had always been accustomed to smoke a considerable of cigars daily, now has become a greater consumer of tobacco than ever. As soon as one cigaret is finished he starts another, his smoking continuing virtually from the moment he arises until he retires. Is there any one thing possible for the Kaiser to do that might start in the heart of life one genuine thrill of compassion for this miserable despairing man? Yes, there is one thing. If the world were to see him truly penitent at Christ's feet crying, "I have sinned; Jesus, Thou Son of David, have mercy on me," then and only then would every Christian man in the world feel the angel of mercy unfold her wings within him. There is just one way in which a Christian can pray for the Kaiser now and that is a prayer that he may be brought to kneel with him who said: "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief."—United Presbyterian.

DO THE STARS SHINE ON YOUR SERVICE FLAG

"Wouldn't it be a good idea for the churches and business houses and homes to put up new service flags or clean the old ones?" queries Maj. John T. Axton, Chaplain of the Port of Debarcation at New York. "Thousands of the men who are coming back home never have seen the stars which stand for them and they will be looking for them. Yet I see hundreds of service flags that are dingy and soiled, especially those out-of-doors." Polish up! The boys are coming home!

The Young Women's Christian Association meets a different problem in every locality. In the large cities, and in the factory districts, it is the problem of the foreign born woman. In the South, it is the problem of the girl in industry, for she has been some years later in arriving than her Northern sister, and conditions have not been quite adjusted. Then, too, in the South, there is the colored girl. She is making good in factory and office, with every tradition demanding that she work, like her forbears, in the cotton field.

THE PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION

The following proclamation on the death of Theodore Roosevelt was cabled from Paris by President Wilson and issued at the State Department:

"A proclamation to the people of the United States:

"It becomes my sad duty to announce officially the death of Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States from Sept. 14, 1901, to March 4, 1909, which occurred at his home at Sagamore Hill, Oyster Bay, New York, at 4:15 o'clock in the morning of January 6, 1919. In his death the United States has lost one of its most distinguished and patriotic citizens, who had endeared himself to the people by his strenuous devotion to their interests and to the public interests of his country.

"As president of the Police Board of his native city, as member of the legislature and Governor of His State, as Civil Service Commissioner, as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, as Vice-President, and as President of the United States, he displayed administrative powers of a signal order and conducted the affairs of these various offices with a concentration of effort and a watchful care which permitted no divergence from the line of duty he had definitely set for himself.

"In the war with Spain he displayed singular initiative and energy and distinguished himself among the commanders of the army in the field. As President he awoke the nation to the dangers of private control which lurked in our financial and industrial systems. It was by thus arresting the attention and stimulating the purpose of the country that he opened the way for subsequent necessary and beneficent reforms.

"His private life was characterized by a simplicity, a virtue and an affection worthy of all admiration and emulation by the people of America.

"In testimony of the respect in which his memory is held by the government and people of the United States, I do hereby direct that the flags of the White House and the several departmental buildings be displayed at half-staff for a period of thirty days, and that suitable military and naval honors under orders of the Secretaries of War and the Navy be rendered on the day of the funeral.

"Done this seventh day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and nineteen, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third.

"Woodrow Wilson."

NAVY SECRETARY THREATENS MARTIAL LAW IN PHILADELPHIA BECAUSE OF VICE CONDITIONS.

Secretary Daniels has informed Mayor Smith, of Philadelphia, that unless the municipal authorities immediately improved vice conditions in Philadelphia steps will be taken by the Government to "give the needed protection to the thousands of young men in uniform who must either visit Philadelphia or be denied the liberty which ought to be given them."

Mr. Daniels' action was taken after a conference with Secretary Baker, at which was considered a report from Lieut.-Col. Charles B. Hatch, the navy representative at Philadelphia, showing that vice conditions are as bad now as they were last spring, when Mayor Smith began a crusade at the request of the Naval Secretary.

After referring to the previous correspondence Secretary Daniels' letter said:

"I am now informed that conditions in Philadelphia have reverted, so far as the protection to soldiers and sailors is concerned, to the old conditions which prevailed prior to my communication to you last spring, and that the change of your policy was made in violation of the promise which you made to me and the representatives of the Navy Department."

HATCHED 175 CHICKS.

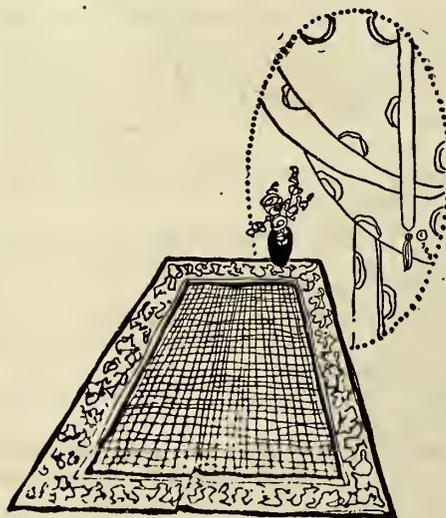

G. W. Miller, of Pittsburg, Okla., writes: "I used Reefer's Ready Relief and out of 175 chicks hatched didn't lose one." Mrs. T. E. Murphy, of Hughesville, Mo., writes: "Have been using Ready Relief for White Diarrhoea and only lost one chick out of 140."

You can do as well. Reefer's Ready Relief in your baby chicks' first drinking water will save them from dying off with that dreadful White Diarrhoea plague. This remedy is the discovery of a famous scientist. Send $1 today to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 9252 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package that will save 500 baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth five for a cent? You take no risk. Mr. Reefer will refund every cent of your money if you are not entirely satisfied and a million dollar bank backs up this statement. Send for a $1 package today, or better still, send $2.35 on special discount for three regular $1 packages and insure every hatch you get. If you don't want to try this bank guaranteed chick saver, at least write today for Mr. Reefer's free valuable poultry book that gives the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.—Adv.

THE HOME OF GOOD RUGS

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate lining of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Spring,
Box 4B, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

I have personally derived great benefit from the use of Shivar Mineral Water and have knowledge of its beneficial effects in a great number and variety of cases."—Rev. A. McA. Pittman

HUSEIN BEN ALI.

The recent death of Husein Ben Ali hardly received the attention it deserves. Husein Ben Ali was the Grand Shereef of Mecca and the King of the Hejaz. A descendant of Mohammed, and the rich man of Mecca, he was opposed to the Turks, repudiated their control, and declared himself King of Arabia. He was promptly recognized by the Allies and rendered valuable service. He helped prevent the German advance in Palestine and Mesopotamia. He helped kill the "holy war" that was proclaimed against all Christians by the Sultan in Constantinople at the command of the German government. He saw that the proclamation was "made in Germany," and himself claimed to be the head of the Mohammedan religion. He possessed sufficient ability to unite the warring tribes of Arabia, which collectively had long been opposed to the rule of the Turks. He was an Arab who understood much of modern culture and life. His services were mainly in the influence he exerted among the Mohammedans, although his military assistance to the British in the desert countries was of value. He was a good king. He shielded the Mohammedan pilgrims to the cities of Medina and Mecca from the old Turkish extortions. He enforced strict military measures for the first time, and thus eradicated disease, and prevented the spread of plagues and cholera to Europe. He was well informed as to what sanitary measures are. He leaves three sons, all of whom were in sympathy with him and active assistants. To the oldest descends the crown; and he announces that he will vigorously support the cause which his father defended. A firmly-established government at Mecca may mean the return of the Caliphate to the birthplace of Mohammed, and the passing of Constantinople as the religious center of Mohammedanism.—Journal and Messenger.

THE DAY BEFORE.

General Foch, it is reported, very frequently says: "The battle is won the day before." By this he means that the condition of the soldiers the day before will decide how they will fight on the day of the battle. The Government and the Y. M. C. A. and other organizations are doing fine work in making and keeping our soldiers fit the "day before," and it is for this reason largely that our men are proving to be such splendid soldiers. This "day before" preparation is just what is needed here at home. In the home, the church, the Sabbath School, the day school, the college, wherever the young are trained, there is opportunity to do fine work in fitting them for the battles of life. It will depend largely upon the physical, mental and spiritual training which they receive whether they shall be victorious or go down in defeat. Parents, pastors, teachers and friends of today will largely be responsible for the results of the battles of tomorrow.—Presbyterian.

One can lead another into all sorts of scrapes by his personal influence. But he can also use personal influence in another way; he can lead toward right and toward God, if he chooses.

Mrs. Dan Holycross, Silverwood, Ind., writes: "Reefer's Ready Relief is all it is said to be. I have not lost one of my last incubator hatch and they are now four weeks old." And G. W. Miller, of Pittsburg, Okla., writes: "Hatched 175 chicks and haven't lost one."

You can have the same success. Ready Relief in your baby chicks' first drinking water will save them from dying off with that dreadful plague, White Diarrhoea. Reefer's Ready Relief is the invention of a famous scientist. Send $1 today to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 5252 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package that will positively help your baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth saving? You take no risk. Mr. Reefer will refund every cent of your money if you are not entirely satisfied, and a million dollar bank guarantees he will do it. send for a $1 package today, or better still, send $2.35 on special discount for three regular $1 packages and insure every hatch you get. Aren't your baby chicks worth five for a penny? That's about the cost of Reefer's Ready Relief. If you don't want to try this bank guaranteed chick saver at least write today for Mr. Reefer's free valuable poultry book that gives the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry. —Adv.

THE PROGRESSIVE PROGRAM

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH in the UNITED STATES

THE WORK OF THE DEACON

The Adequate Financing of the Entire Work of the Church of Jesus

By Personal Practice
By Personal Prayer
By Personal Teaching
By Personal Visiting
By Personal Solicitation

The office of the Deacon is in no sense secondary to the office of the Elder.

The stamp of God's approval was placed upon the office of Deacon, when Stephen was put to death as the first martyr.

All honor to the Deacon; the advancement of the cause of Christ is dependent upon his efficiency.

The personal practice of the Deacon in his contribution to the cause of Christ must be such as every member of the congregation can and should emulate.

The personal prayer life of the Deacon should be an example to the people—his dependence upon God, his interceding for the people should bring him in close touch with the suffering.

The personal teaching of the Deacon should be with the forcefulness of a Stephen. Great boldness is necessary in his office. Meeting with the sin of covetousness, his teaching of the care

God exercises over His children, providing for all their needs, should be clear.

The personal visiting of those in need should show tender sympathy and love for God's suffering ones. The supplying of all their needs should be as unto Christ.

The personal soliciting should be from such firm convictions of man's responsibility and duty to God as His Steward, His Administrator, as to convince men of the duty God requires of them, and bring men to view their possessions from the Scripture standpoint of holding in trust possessions which belong to God.

EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT.

Eighteen amendments to the Constitution of the United States have been ratified by the States as follows: First ten amendments, known as the "bill of rights," provided guarantees such as free speech; ratified in nine months. Eleventh amendment established sovereignty of States; ratified in four years. Twelfth amendment, changed method of presidential elections; ratified in one year. Thirteenth amendment, prohibited slavery, ratified in slightly less than a year. Fourteenth amendment, made Negroes citizens; ratified in two years. Fifteenth amendment, enfranchised Negroes, on the same basis as white persons; ratified in one year. Sixteenth amendment, allowed Congress to levy income tax; ratified in three and one-half years. Seventeenth amendment, provided for popular election of Senators; ratified in slightly less than a year. Eighteenth amendment, makes country dry; ratified in two years, four weeks and one day.

The two most important were the 13th, prohibiting slavery, and the 18th, prohibiting the manufacture of intoxicants. Good men had long recognized two giant evils protected by the nation, slavery and drunkard-making. Both are gone.

The adoption of the Prohibition amendment means that one year after the Secretary of State issues a proclamation setting forth that the legislatures of 36 States have ratified it and it has become Article 18 of the Constitution of the United States, "the manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is prohibited."

This ends the liquor traffic absolutely, so far as it has lawfully existed. John Barleycorn has no show whatever under that concise provision. Some years ago an amendment was laid before Congress which simply prohibited the manufacture of intoxicants "for sale," and bibulous persons prepared to study the arts of distilling and brewing, "solely for their own personal use," but there is no such loophole in this amendment.—Presbyterian Banner.

JUNIOR RED CROSS.

Junior Red Cross members are to aid in Anti-Tuberculosis Campaign. The prevention of tuberculosis is being actively urged by the National Tuberculosis Association at this time and this organization has enlisted the aid of the Junior Red Cross members for this work.

In order to present and discuss the situation in detail a meeting was recently held in the office of F. M. Darnall, Director of Junior Membership in the Southern Division, and the following representatives of the Tuberculosis Associations of the respective States: Mr. J. P. Kranz, of Tennessee; Miss Katherine Henrickle, of Florida; Miss Blackburn, of South Carolina; Mr. Snow, representing Mr. McBrayer, secretary of the Tuberculosis Association of North Carolina, and Miss Chloe Jackson, of Georgia, representing the Raoul Foundation of that State. In addition Miss Lowe and Miss Dickinson, of the Atlanta organization, and Mr. J. P. Faulkner, of the National Tuberculosis Association, were present.

All of those present urged the co-operation between the teachers and superintendents of the public schools of the division with the Junior Red Cross auxiliaries in the schools and a plan was proposed and accepted by which the Junior Red Cross members should be encouraged to observe health laws which tend to prevent the spread of tuberculosis. This plan comprised an attractive idea in which the competitive feature was emphasized and it was arranged to supply all Junior Auxiliaries with the needed supplies for the campaign if application is made to the Anti-Saloon Secretaries of the different States.

The plan is termed a "Modern Health Crusade" and it should result in forming health habits in the younger generation which will bear the much needed fruit of universally improved health conditions of the generation of the future. Education in health methods

Save A Hundred Dollars on a High Grade Piano

You are cordially invited to take advantage of the great money saving opportunity which is presented to all the readers of this paper by the Presbyterian Standard Piano Club. If your home needs a good piano or player-piano, or if you would like to exchange your old instrument for a new one, we invite you to write for a catalogue and full information.

By clubbing your order with the orders of ninety-nine other Club members in a great factory order for one hundred instruments (eight carloads) you receive your part of the tremendous saving in cost, amounting to about one-third the price of your instrument and totaling a hundred dollars or more on a high-grade piano or player-piano.

Convenient Terms-Strongest Guarantees

The Club is organized for the economy, convenience and protection of piano buyers. It insures the lowest possible prices, the most convenient terms of payment, and gives you the strongest guarantees of the quality and durability of your instrument. It assures you of present and future satisfaction and protects you against defects of workmanship and materials.

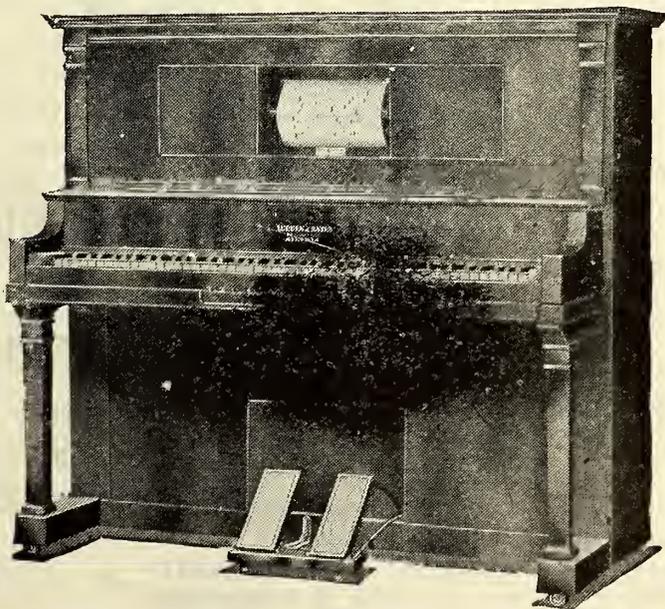

An Old Reliable House

The house of Ludden & Bates, under whose management the Club is directed, was established in 1870. It is known and honored wherever good musical instruments are appreciated. For nearly half a century it has enjoyed the largest patronage throughout the South. Under its administration the Club has served many readers of this paper and in each case has made an appreciative and enthusiastic friend.

Let Us Serve You

We most cordially invite you to investigate the many attractive money-saving features of the Club. Let us send you a copy of the handsomely illustrated catalogue describing the new and beautiful styles of pianos and player-pianos, with full information as to the saving in price, convenient terms and the guarantees of quality and durability.

Sparkles

The Doctor.

We're wounded doughboys just returned
 From fighting oversea,
 And mighty glad to see once more
 The land of Liberty,
 And while we're talking of the war
 We want to say we owe
 A debt too big to reckon to
 The good old medico.

O gee! those doctors at the front
 Were just chock full of sand,
 They juggled ether, bandages
 And splints to beat the band.
 When bleeding blesses filled the wards,
 Though shells began to spout
 And bombs to fall, red-soaked and grim,
 Those M.D.'s stuck it out.

My leg was shot to carpet rags,
 My ribs were all stove in,
 I had a bullet in my chest,
 Another in my chin,
 But gosh! the doctor stitched me up
 And fixed me over new;
 There wasn't anything on earth
 That sawbones couldn't do.

The nurses nobly did their part
 To ease our bitter pain,
 But 'twas the doctor made us whole
 And fine as silk again.
 I'm ready any time to put
 My Sunday shirt in hock,
 To start a little fund to buy
 A laurel wreath for doc.

Former President Taft, in his younger days, when he was a law reporter, had been studying a case in Somerville, O., and found he couldn't get back to the office that night unless he managed to stop a through express. So he wired to headquarters, "Will you stop the through express at Somerville to take on large party?" The answer came back, "Yes." The express was duly stopped at Somerville. The young law reporter got aboard with his copy, and the conductor said, "Where's that large party I was to take on?"

"I'm it," was the chuckling answer. "That's all."

Cardinal Gibbons and Prohibition.

THE Venerable Cardinal has sprung a great surprise on the general public by fiercely denouncing prohibition because it deprives the priest of wine for celebrating mass. The Cardinal denounces this deprivation as "striking at the very fundamentals of the Christian religion." It can surprise no one acquainted with the doctrines of the Catholic Church to find the sacrament of the mass referred to as a fundamental of the Christian religion. Jesus said, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink His blood ye have no life in you." According to Roman Catholic doctrine, in the sacrament of the mass the communicant fulfills this condition on which his spiritual life depends—he eats the flesh of the Son of Man and drinks His blood. Only in this sacrament can he fulfill this essential condition. Deprive a devout Roman Catholic of the mass and you deprive him of the nourishment on which his soul depends. Not only so, but you deprive him of a sacrifice which expiates his sins, and which can also be used in behalf of his friends and relatives in purgatory. It is, therefore, easily understood that Cardinal Gibbons would feel deeply aggrieved if he believes that prohibition interferes with the celebration of the mass.

The real ground for surprise is that Cardinal Gibbons should believe that the celebration of mass is to be interfered with. The amendment to the Constitution of the United States against which the Cardinal hurls his thunderbolt prohibits the manufacture, sale and transportation of intoxicating liquor "for beverage purposes." This is the full extent of prohibition. What is not expressly forbidden is allowed. Consequently prohibition does not prevent Catholic priests from getting all the wine they want for sacramental purposes. But suppose it did, suppose the Catholic priests could not get one slightest drop of wine, why should they not still be able to celebrate the sacrament of the mass? After consecrating the wine, they never give the laity a taste. How then can it be necessary. If the laity can get the full benefit of the sacrament by simply eating the wafer, why should not the priest be able to get along with the wafer alone? As a matter of fact he is deprived of the cup unless he is one of the celebrants. The "holy mother church declares that although our Redeemer, in the last supper, instituted and delivered to the apostles this sacrament in two species, yet it is to be acknowledged that Christ whole and entire and a true sacrament is received under either species alone; and that therefore as regards the fruit thereof they who receive one species alone are not defrauded of any grace necessary to salvation." After proclaiming this dogma, the august council of Trent proceeds to say: "If any saith that the holy Catholic Church was not induced by just cause and reasons to communicate, under the species of bread only, laymen and also clerics when not consecrating, let him be anathema." In the light of this anathema, how does Cardinal Gibbons dare to say that wine is essential in the celebration of the mass? The holy Catholic Church itself prohibits the wine to all laymen and to all clerics who are not at the time engaged in consecrating the elements. Only the priests who consecrate the bread and the wine are permitted to take the wine. A curse is invoked on all those who say that the wine is necessary to laymen and non-consecrating clerics. Is it essential to the priests who are consecrating the elements? It is not so stated, and there is no conceivable reason why it should be if the dogma is true that Christ whole and entire and a true sacrament is received under the species of bread alone. This is the ground on which the cup is withheld from laymen. In receiving the wafer they receive Christ whole and entire, and in eating the wafer they eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood.

Of all Christians under the sun, except the Quakers, the Roman Catholics should be the last to complain, supposing wine to be prohibited. The Quakers discard the use of both bread and wine, and the Roman Catholics discard the use of wine except for the consecrating priest. Cardinal Gibbons had better fall back on "personal liberty." That is the one outstanding and easily understood argument against prohibition. In this day when so much is being said and done for the liberty of weak peoples, this argument should have considerable weight in behalf of weak minorities.

Union Seminary Review.

We have often called attention to this most excellent magazine, published by the professors and students of the Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.

The January number which we have received is one of unusual merit, and we wish very much that it could be read by our ministers in general and also by their people.

It has a series of articles dealing with the changed conditions arising out of the war, and these articles show more thought than the generality of magazine articles do.

The opening article, by Dr. Edward Mack, is rightly placed at the front, for we have rarely read anything more illuminating or that gives a finer bird's-eye view of the political and religious conditions of Europe, resulting from the war. This article alone is worth the price of the book.

Rev. W. T. Thompson, Jr., has a paper on "Religion for Men"—which is written in the same simple and earnest style with which he preaches. As one who has labored among young men in a college town, besides serving six months in two camps, he speaks from experience, and his conclusions deserve earnest attention. Mr. Thompson's rise in the ministry has been remarkable, yet it has not been from force of circumstances, but it has been fully deserved. He is dead in earnest and he knows how to reach men, and in this sentence you have the secret of his success. In his article in the Review he is merely putting in words his own methods of work.

Dr. E. R. Leyburn is another of our young ministers who has been studying men in the camp, having spent six months in war work. He writes on "The Church and Reconstruction," in which he clearly sets forth the changes produced by the war, the dangers threatening the church, and the means by which we are to meet them. This is also an article worth studying, and concerns every pastor in the land.

Dr. Chester, one of our Foreign Mission Secretaries, knows the mission field as few men do, and out of his knowledge of world conditions he sets before us the effect of the war on missions. It is written in his pleasant style, which it is always a pleasure to read after, and by means of it we can see what the church is expected to do to meet these changed conditions.

Rev. S. J. Cartledge writes on what is becoming a familiar theme, "The Second Coming of Christ." As one who has never been able to accept either the Pre- or Post-millennarian doctrine in its entirety, but who has been sitting on the fence these many years, we are ready to move down a bit and give Brother Cartledge sitting room, though he goes toward the Pre view further than we can. We advise the reading of this paper to those who may be interested in a calm and conservative discussion of this much mooted question.

As usual the book reviews are excellent.

The Grace of Economy.

It was characteristic of the Old South to sneer at petty economy and to imagine that wastefulness was a proof of a generous spirit. This spirit was fostered by the natural conditions of Southern life, such as slavery, a fertile soil and absence from the world of business competition.

The New Englander, on the other hand, was by his natural conditions forced to struggle for existence, and to eke out a living from a poor soil and a harsh climate. He was compelled to practice economies of every kind and degree, upon which his Southern neighbor looked with some little contempt.

The Civil War, however, changed these conditions, to some extent, and compelled the Southerner to struggle for a living.

That he has learned well these lessons of adversity and has abandoned some of his false ideas of liberality is shown by the recent report of the War Loan Organization.

According to this report, in the thirteen Southern States the average per capita savings of 1918 showed $26.73, the per capita war savings being $6.14.

Since 1914, the total per capita savings in the South increased approximately 45 per cent, while in New England the increase was only 20.3 per cent; in the Eastern States 10.7 per cent, and in the Middle West 39.3 per cent. West Virginia leads the Southern States with a per capita savings of $68.92, and with a war savings per capita of $10.25. Its increase since 1914 has been 32.3 per cent. Of the other Southern States Virginia: total per capita savings $44.89; increase since 1914, 41.1 per cent; per capita war savings, $5.18. North Carolina: total per capita savings, $24.24; increase, 40.9 per cent; per capita war savings, $6.61. South Carolina: total per capita, $33.49; increase since 1914, 57.7 per cent; per capita war savings, $3.78.

These figures are very significant, and they give great encouragement for the future. When we consider the climate and other natural advantages, there is every promise that the South will come to the front in material prosperity.

In view of these facts, it is incumbent upon the Church "to lengthen her cords and strengthen her stakes," lest the god of this world blind, not only the minds of them which believe not, but also the minds of those who have been enlightened.

There is nothing more deadening to spiritual life than material prosperity, and there is no better antidote for those who are afflicted by it than to give till they feel it, and then give more.

Human Nature and the Peace Conference.

Human nature is very persistent, and no matter how fair men and nations may profess to be, when their interests are involved, human selfishness will manifest itself. "When self the wavering balance shake, 'tis rarely right adjusted."

At present the Entente Allies are engaged in a love feast, and from the pre-conference professions, one would have looked for harmony and strict justice. At times the Peace Conference seems about to change its name. One is reminded of the old Latin expression, "Lucus a non lucendo." Around this Peace Table are conflicting interests, each member intent on securing for his country all he can.

Our President and his associates are the only ones free from any motives of self interest. Italy and Serbia each wishes to control the eastern Adriatic ports; the Czechs and Poles claim Silesia; Montenegro is resisting inclusion in the proposed Jugo-Slav nation; Rumania is claiming Transylvania; China and Japan are at loggerheads over secret treaties; while France is justly claiming her stolen provinces.

This country through her distinguished representatives occupies a very exalted position, with the consequent responsibility, and is being rapidly drawn away from her position of exclusion, and made to shoulder much of the responsibility of the world's welfare. However much we may prefer our old attitude, it would seem that Providence has a hand in this state of affairs, so it becomes our duty to seek to know the Lord's will, and then to do it.

Legislative Doings---Wise and Otherwise.

One has only to read the acts of our Legislature, to say nothing about the editorials of our Church papers, to learn that high position by no means carries with it a monopoly of wisdom.

The critical reader will find both in the proceedings of the Legislature as well as in the Standard's editorial column, a combination of ideas, wise and otherwise, that call for charitable judgment and commendation.

The present legislative body at Raleigh seems to be above par, when compared with some in the past, and while in some things attempted they have not shown the wisdom that Solomon should show, on the whole they have thus far done remarkably well. As the good far overbalances the evil, they deserve the thanks of the people.

They have dealt wisely with the question of education, and they appear to favor aid to public institutions for the youth of the State and those afflicted. They recognize the value of good roads and propose to make those who use them most and wear them most bear the expense of their upkeep.

There is one act against which every lover of law and order should protest. We refer to the act passed at the instance of Mr. Stubbs, of Martin, who seems to be the spokesman for the liquor men. Two years ago a law was passed making distilling a felony with a minimum penalty of not less than one year in the penitentiary—a law that was the terror of makers of moonshine whiskey. This Legislature has so far modified that law as to make the first offense a misdemeanor.

Another dangerous change in law was fortunately defeated in the Senate. In this State, arson, burglary, murder in the first degree and rape are hanging offenses. It was proposed to abolish capital punishment, but it was amended by excepting certain offenses—burglary, arson and train-wrecking. When it reached the Senate it was defeated, and the law stands as before.

There are many in this State who are opposed to capital punishment for any offense, and by appealing to those who are swayed by the heart rather than the head, it would seem now and then that the law will be abolished. In the end, however, the sober second thought comes to the front, and men decide that our modern ideas are not as safe as those that have stood the test of time.

We may be wiser than our forefathers, and we may be actuated by more humanitarian motives, but we are not wiser than He who said in the early days of our race, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed."

It is astonishing to hear educated men, even editors, say that capital punishment is "a legal inheritance from the dark ages," and that being one of the Mosaic laws it is no more binding than his law against eating swine flesh. We would remind these brethren that the law prescribing the death penalty for murder was given long before Moses, and therefore has nothing to do with the ceremonial law, which was temporary. When the Lord cleansed the earth with a flood, and started His Church anew under Noah, He said, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," and He gave as a reason "for in the image of God made He man." The reason given was a permanent one, and it can never be brushed aside.

Remember God's ways are not as our ways, neither are His thoughts as ours.

Contributed

China and America

By Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D.D.

AT the Mission Station and city where I happened to be when the thrilling news of the armistice and allied victory was flashed around the world, the city officials, obeying orders from above, made a ceremonious visit of congratulation to our missionaries, myself included, at which tea was drunk, speeches made, and a formal paper of felicitations and good wishes on the successful close of the war was read to us by the secretary of the city's official board. I doubt not that something similar occurred in most of the towns throughout China where missionaries of the allied nations are located. Of the celebrations in the great cities like Peking, Canton, Shanghai, you have no doubt seen notices in the papers.

The popularity of America and especially of our great President is one of the outstanding features of the present situation in China. The feeling among China's missionary friends and most intelligent native patriots regarding her political condition and outlook is almost one of despair. Torn between two rival factions; preyed upon by self-seeking rulers in high office and organized robber bands throughout the country; kept divided, as it is here believed, by the intrigues, corrupted by the funds, and menaced by the power, of a neighbor nation; China is looking to America and President Wilson as her chief hope.

I trust she will not look in vain. From one of our missionaries I learn that when President Wilson's personal representative, Mr. Chas. R. Crane, was in China a few weeks ago, he made it very plain that at the Peace Conference the President wishes China to state her just demands without fear, and that he intends to do his utmost to see that China's past wrongs are righted. I am hoping and praying that America will exemplify in her international relations, as well as carry through at the Peace Conference, those principles of justice to weak and strong alike whose repeated enunciation by President Wilson has so captured the hearts and kindled the hopes of Chinese patriots the nation over.

At the first of our Stations that I visited in China, in a city of 125,000, a formal request was sent in to me that I address in our church building students of the government and military schools. I spoke through an interpreter, of course, to an audience of 500 young men that completely filled the floor of the church. I took as my theme the secret of America's prosperity and happiness, showing that our civilization is Bible-based, that all our great leaders today are disciples of Christ, illustrating especially from Woodrow Wilson's home training and habits of prayer and trust in God, and showing that the personal character from lack of which China is suffering in high places and low is the creation of Christ alone.

I never spoke to a more attentive, interested audience, nor one I believe in which I noted a greater number of serious, earnest faces, some of them vivid with intelligence. My address was followed by half a dozen speeches from the officers and teachers of the schools, all of them appreciative in the highest degree and warmly endorsing my message. Most of this, of course, was mere Chinese politeness, but the missionaries told me that such an invitation to me and such speeches from them would a few years ago have appeared a thing unthinkable.

A few nights later in a little country village on a Tuesday night I preached to an audience that filled the building and doors and windows. At the close of the service after the benediction not a person in the audience moved from his seat. After waiting a while my missionary friend said they evidently wanted more. So I preached them another sermon on China's need of Christ, illustrating from America somewhat as above described. This concluded, they still remained.

An opportunity was then given for any one to ask a question. A leading man of the village of strikingly attractive appearance, not a professed Christian, rose and thanked me most warmly for my visit to China. The audience then slowly withdrew, many coming forward to express their appreciation.

At the next Station I was again invited by the Government School to address their students. After ceremonious tea drinking with the officers and teachers of the school, I did my best to show those young men that Christ was the chief need of themselves and of their country, illustrating again from America, and President Wilson, a channel through which at the present moment the truth seems to reach them with a peculiar effectiveness.

At another Station, after preaching in the morning, notice was given that that afternoon my theme would be the secret of America's greatness. At the appointed hour the house was crowded, several dozen standing throughout the whole service.

In a most peculiar and unprecedented way God has given to the United States the ear and heart of China. It is an opportunity and a responsibility without parallel in the history of missions.

Answering Inquiries.

By Rev. R. P. Smith, D.D.

By courtesy of the Presbyterian Standard we take this method of answering numerous inquiries that have come to us regarding the condition of the orphan children under our care. The newspapers in this section published recently some information about the influenza scourge that has visited the Mountain Orphanage at Balfour, and the Maxwell Orphanage, at Franklin. These pathetic articles stirred the hearts of the people, hence these letters of inquiry.

In all we have had sixty cases of influenza, some of them quite serious, but had only one death. Nora Johnson, eleven years old, died of pneumonia following the treacherous disease. She was from Avery County, and one among the most promising children at Balfour. Thankful to report that most of the stricken ones are well again, and the rest are convalescent. The prospects are favorable for conditions to become normal very soon.

At Balfour there were thirty-six cases in bed at one time. While so many were lying helpless, friends came to the rescue. Some gave personal service, some brought prepared food, while others sent money to help pay the extra bills. We have never seen a greater exhibition of genuine sympathy and kindness. We hereby sincerely thank all who are helping us to provide a home and Christian training for these needy "children of the hills."

Faith.

If on this night of still white cold,
I can remember May,
New green of tree and underbrush,
A hillside orchard's mounting flush,
The scent of earth and noon's blue hush,
A robin's jaunty way.

If on this bitter night of frost,
I know such things can be,
That lovely May is true—Ah! well,
I shall believe the tales men tell,
Wonders of bliss and asphodel
And immortality.

The Interchurch World Movement

By James B. Spillman.

THIS movement, which has been characterized by John R. Mott as "the greatest structure that Protestantism has ever erected," should be of unusual interest to every member of the Southern Presbyterian Church, for it had its origin in the mind of one of our own leaders, Chas. H. Pratt, formerly missionary to Korea, now one of our secretaries of Foreign Missions.

At a meeting of the Foreign Missionary Board, it was Mr. Pratt who suggested the idea and by resolution, a letter was addressed to the various Foreign Mission Boards of all the Protestant Churches of America, asking that an effort be made to co-ordinate the work of Foreign Missions.

The response was instant and unanimous. A meeting was held in New York, December 17, 1918, for the purpose of considering the entire subject. The Foreign Mission Boards of all denominations were represented. Dr. Jas. I. Vance presided and a committee of twenty was appointed to formulate an adequate and workable plan to present to the Foreign Mission Conference, the Home Mission Conference, the Educational Conference, and the Sunday School Conference.

At the meeting of these conferences, January 17, the recommendations were unanimously adopted and a committee of one hundred was formed to inaugurate the Interchurch World Movement.

This committee met at Yonkers, N. Y., on February 5 and 6, in Wallace Lodge, a beautiful building overlooking the Hudson, which was presented to the Northern Methodist Church as a convention hotel.

After hours of prayerful consideration, the nominating committee named as chairman of the general committee, Cyrus H. McCormick, of Chicago; as vice-chairman, N. W. Ayer, of Philadelphia, and as second vice-chairman, Mr. Fred B. Smith.

An executive committee of fifteen was named of which Dr. John R. Mott is the chairman; this committee is empowered to name seven other members.

The executive committee nominated Dr. S. Earle Taylor as general secretary of the Interchurch World Movement. Dr. Taylor is the executive secretary of the Northern Methodist Centenary Movement; his nomination was adopted by a rising vote and the hearty handclapping which greeted his nomination showed instantly and without question the warm personal regard which the members of the general committee felt for him and the confidence which they had in his ability to lead the movement and in his devotion to the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ.

With S. Earle Taylor in the executive chair, with Cyrus McCormick as chairman of the general committee, with John R. Mott as chairman of the executive committee, we can feel that assurance and confidence which comes with the realization of the personal love and fidelity that these men have for the cause of our Lord.

This movement, first of all, is a church movement, a movement started by church men—men who believe that the commission of carrying the Gospel to the world was given by our Lord to the Church. It has no connection, whatever, with any movement which tends toward church union or church federation, and it is composed of the strongest men of the various churches of North America. Charles H. Pratt is on the executive committee, and when all the names are published, it will be seen that many large boards are represented.

The purpose of this movement as set forth is as follows:

"To present a unified program of Christian service and to unite the Protestant Churches of North America in the performance of their common task, thus making available the values of spiritual power which come from unity and co-ordinated Christian effort and meeting the unique opportunities of the new era."

All the interests of the church are to be included: Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Education, Equipment, Maintenance and Endowment of Schools, Colleges, Seminaries and Orphanages, Sabbath School Extension, Ministerial Relief and Endowment—Endowment will be handled by putting a certain per cent of the total into the budget each year until the entire Endowment is raised.

This movement is a world movement, a full survey of the 3,000 counties and 250 large cities of America will be made, giving every detail and showing the need in men and in money of every city and of every county to make Christ known to America. A survey of the unoccupied and the occupied territory in the foreign field will be made also that the "totality of the task" may be known—when this data is complete, these facts will be given to the Christian people of America and an appeal to supply the needed men and money will be made.

This movement is characterized by a deep and fervent love for Jesus Christ and a sincere desire to accomplish His will in the world. This is so marked that it may be said to be a passion with the leaders of this movement.

This movement has been undergirded with prayer and so sure are the leaders, that this meeting at Wallace Lodge will hold a great place in the history of Protestantism that early in the proceedings, stenographic notes of all speeches were ordered to be made in order that men might be able to read every word that was uttered and that they might know the inmost mind of the representatives.

There are now four great church movements: The Northern Methodist Centenary Movement, the Southern Methodist Centenary Movement, the New Era Movement of the Northern Presbyterian Church and the Progressive Program of our own Church. These four denominations have on a financial campaign for $38,500,000, for this year. The Northern Methodist Church and the New Era Movement have already expressed their willingness to merge their movement into this larger movement.

No one single thing could give more courage and faith to this movement than the raising of the $3,000,000, set as our goal for the year ending March 31, 1919. The writer is confidently expecting that when all reports are in from the various committees that we shall reach this desired amount.

Daddy's Comin' Hame.

Noo, Jessie, lay your knittin' doon an' dress your hair sae fine,
An' Rabbie, polish up your shoon an' mak' the buckle shine,
An' get ye in your tartan dressed that bears the Stuart name;
Today my bairns maun look their best, for Daddy's comin' hame.

Wet was his een an' sair his heart when last he kissed us all,
Fu' lang he lingered, loth tae part, yet proudly marched awa';

For wi' the Hielan' laddies true when first the war ca' came.
Thank God, your feyther went an' noo thank God he's comin' hame!

The music o' his merry voice, the magic o' his smile,
That used tae mak' us a' rejoice we've missed a dark lang while;

But we yince mair the bonnie bliss o' voice and smile shall claim,

Ah! ne'er was day sae great as this, for Daddy's comin' hame!

But, bairns, we maun' no greet or grieve if he is changed a wee,

His coat may hae an empty sleeve, his broo may bandaged be;
His step may lack its spring o' yore, but aye his heart's the same,

An' a' his wounds for us he bore, for Scotland, God, an' hame!

Our Church Honored

AMONG the countless calls made upon our generosity by the helpless sufferers in the war-devastated regions of Europe and Asia none has moved the heart more profoundly than the call from our Christian brethren, the Armenians and Syrians of Asia Minor and Palestine.

The reports show that four million Armenians and Syrians were driven from their homes by the barbarous Turkish army and that over one million of them were butchered by the unspeakable Turks or have died of starvation and exposure during the three years in which they have been exiles from their homes. Today there are more than a million and a half of whom 400,000 are orphans, who are still wanderers in deserts and mountains and unless speedily helped they will die of starvation.

An American Committee was organized three years ago to raise a relief fund and provide help for these desperately needy people and although laboring under great handicaps a splendid work has been done.

The Sunday Schools of America were asked to give one million dollars to this relief fund in 1917 and they went well "over the top." In 1918 conditions were growing steadily worse and the Sunday Schools were asked to raise two million dollars. The second goal has been met and passed and the schools of the Southern Presbyterian Church have had a splendid part in raising this great relief fund.

The Sunday School Committee at Richmond through its secretary and superintendent have been tireless in their effort to bring this worthy cause before our schools. The National Relief Committee at New York has shown their appreciation by asking the executive secretary of our committee, Mr. R. E. Magill, to go to Western Asia as a member of a commission of ten to report upon the methods of administering the relief fund and as to the need of continued help from the famine scourged people of these old Bible lands. Only nine churches in the United States and one in Canada were asked to send representatives, so the honor conferred upon our Church is all the more notable.

The commission is expected to sail about March 15 and will be taken by a Government transport to England. The English Government will furnish transportation to Cairo, Egypt, where the commission will begin its work of investigation.

The itinerary will carry them to Port Said, on the Suez Canal, where the first concentration camp of expatriated Armenians has been established. The portion of Palestine and Syria lying between the Suez Canal and Jerusalem will be carefully gone over and it is expected that Easter week will be spent in Jerusalem observing the interesting services with which three types of faith always observe this period. A number of relief stations have already been established in and near Jerusalem and they will be visited in turn, the route taking the party through Damascus and Beirut and through northern Palestine and into Asia Minor. At Aleppo the junction point of the Berlin and Bagdad Railway, where a branch turns south into the holy land, a very large relief work is being done. It is planned to establish relief centers throughout the whole of Asia Minor, and Syria, and about two hundred doctors, nurses, teachers and relief workers are already on the way to these plague stricken countries. Three cargo ships, furnished by the United States Government, have been dispatched with foodstuff, clothing and medical supplies, and others will follow as rapidly as possible. Millions of dollars have been cabled to U. S. Consular agents to meet urgent needs for relief and the American Committee is doing everything within its power to meet the desperate situation.

In Asia Minor the itinerary will carry the commission over the territory covered by Paul in his missionary journeys and the cities of Tarsus, Konia, Adana, will be visited with Constantinople as the final objective. The few railroads of the country were badly wrecked by the contending armies, and the commission will be furnished with Ford cars for a good portion of the 2,000 mile overland trip and the British and French army of occupation will furnish a military escort where needed. If time permits a few members of the commission will visit the relief stations along the coast of the Black Sea and extend the itinerary as far as the city of Dan, in the Caucasian region.

The war has wrought some strange transformations and maps of the old world will have to be made anew, but the sending of commissions to aid in beginning the reconstruction of a Christian civilization in these ancient lands is indeed a fact of striking significance. Two blessings at least will emerge from this world war, and that is that this generation will see the end of the Turkish nation as a governmental enemy and never again will the fanatical Mohammedans have power to persecute and massacre Christian races.

The task of Christian America is to bring the remnant of these homeless and plague tortured people back to their wrecked villages and plundered homes and supply them with food, clothing and seed and farming implements until they can begin anew their old life of industry and frugality.

Schools and orphanages must be provided for the homeless and helpless children which will furnish mental, religious and vocational training, and hospitals and institutions must be prepared to minister to the multitudes who have been physically and mentally wrecked by the sufferings of the past few years. The Secretary of Publication counts it a high privilege to have even a small part in this mission of mercy, and he hopes to aid in putting before the churches of America a vision that will move them to provide permanently for the needs of these sorely oppressed people as they begin life anew in the historic lands hallowed by the life, words and works of the great Healer and Saviour of suffering humanity.

A Correction.

In the Presbyterian of the South of February 5 appears an article from the Chairman of the Permanent Committee of the Assembly on the Bible and Family Religion, in which he says, "The following Presbyteries (giving their names, nineteen in all) sent no narratives to the Assembly last spring, or, if they did, they failed to arrive." In this appears that of Central Texas Presbytery. So far as this Presbytery is concerned the statement is incorrect. There was a circumstance in connection with preparing the narrative that impressed itself upon my memory. Mrs. Hutton, also, who assists in preparing the Presbyterial reports to the Assembly, distinctly remembers that the narrative was included. These reports are carefully counted as they are being placed in the envelope, and the letter is registered. In this case the registry receipt was received, and soon after a letter came from Dr. Lav, the stated clerk of the Assembly, saying "reports received."

Knowing the author of this article as I do, and being a friend, I'm sure he is incapable of intentionally misstating anything. But before publishing this statement, which is by implication a censure of the stated clerks of these Presbyteries, he should have corresponded with them to ascertain whether his supposition was correct. It is not pleasant for stated clerks, all of whom take pride in correctly reporting their respective Presbyteries to the Assembly, to be publicly and unjustly charged by implication with being negligent. It is hardly probable that nineteen should all have made the identical mistake in sending up their reports to the Assembly. It is far more probable that the Assembly's standing committee in handling so many reports would lose one or more, than that all these Presbyteries should have omitted them. I always bind together all sessional records of the same kind before placing them in the hands of the several committees. If this is done with reports before presenting them to the Assembly it would relieve this condition.

Of course Presbyteries have nothing more to do with reports after they have been received by the stated clerk of the Assembly.

To Managers in Stewardship Campaign

YOUR Committee, called by the Church, to review and advance the work of her executive agencies, to stimulate her benevolent activities, and to recommend means to secure these ends finds a condition of unprecedented encouragement and critical seriousness.

We have heard the united testimony of all your secretaries as to the unusual needs and possibilities of their respective works. We have too, their concurrent testimony as to the large results of the Stewardship Campaign by which the year of world war, famine and pestilence has been made the year of the church's largest gifts.

We are persuaded that through the Stewardship Campaign, in which God has placed upon you the responsibility and privilege of leadership, the church is to find the way to answer the challenge of her opportunities and to provide the means, not only of holding her lines, but of making a great and necessary offensive. We feel constrained to second the efforts you are making and crave the privilege of aiding you in gaining a clearer vision of your task of transmitting that vision to the entire church.

May we note some of the things to give heart and courage in this campaign on which rests both the interests and honor of His Kingdom.

The destructive forces of militarism have cleared the world for the work of the constructive forces of the Gospel. The men who have answered the call to heroic sacrifice for the liberty of the world are open to the appeal to undertake heroic things to give life to the world. Those who have done large things for their country may be enlisted to do large things for Christ.

America is the heart of world life. This heart must be taken for Christ if you would give Him to the world. The feeling of brotherhood for America felt by the dependent peoples of earth open their ears to you to hear the story of your Christ.

Christ left out of the teachings and ideals of school life caused the world war; by putting Him and His teachings into the schools we may make peace permanent.

The training of our people to think in large terms and to act in sacrificial ways for their country will help them to give like thought and service to the church. Their willingness thus to do is evidenced by the responses they have already made, in this year of world stress and trial, increasing their gifts: To Foreign Missions, $114,000; to Assembly's Home Missions, $49,000; to Christian Education, $20,000; to S. S. Extension, $20,000. The prosperity of our people is without a parallel. But this prosperity has arisen from the gift of blood and should be used for the saving and betterment of the lives of men.

This letter would be incomplete did we not direct your attention to this condition as both critical and serious.

It is God's providence which has made the open door of the world for the constructive work of the Gospel, the men of heroic mold and sacrificial spirit and the prosperity of the people to meet. By this conjunction He is saying to the church, "Today, if ye will—hear my voice!" Tomorrow will be too late.

Not only are there opportunities which will not wait but the cost of present opportunities is unprecedented. In Foreign Missions alone, the price of silver in China and other Oriental exchange charges, furlough travel expenses, increase in missionaries' salaries and added cost of African missions made necessary by war conditions, have added $212,000 to this year's apportionment. The demands for the home missionaries are of a like nature.

It is better for all these causes to meet these urgent demands on the basis of the stewardship of life and substance, rather than by expedients, which from their very nature must be temporary.

The Master has placed your campaign in the advance line. As you lead His cause will advance.

Utilizing the Power of Momentum

By Rev. S. H. Hay.

WHEN the three million dollar campaign was launched last spring we came very near deciding against a full use of its machinery in the annual March canvass of our local church. We planned to take an eclectic attitude toward the general campaign, selecting such of its features as seemed adaptable to our local needs and utilizing such momentum as we could get from it for putting through an independent minor campaign of our own.

Among the features that we planned to modify radically was the aim at an increase of 50 per cent. It seemed best to adhere to our own plan, which had been taking form in my mind for some months, to try for an advance of 25 per cent. I confess I felt rather bold in setting as high a goal as that for a congregation that had been thoroughly worked for a decade past, for of course 25 per cent is a good gain ordinarily.

We did enter fully into the general campaign, however, although we had not expected to do it. The campaign leader of our Presbytery pleaded with me so earnestly for co-operation that I could not well withhold it. I must say, I felt at the time that the principal help that could be given him was to comfort him by sharing his defeat.

The results of the campaign in our group were to me amazing. Every one of the six churches of our unit went comfortably over the goal. It is significant too that in this campaign group were churches of almost every sort, college, country, and town, pecunious and impecunious. The campaign set them all a full step forward in benevolences, although some of them were already among the best givers in the Assembly.

I am saying nothing here of benefits derived other than financial. They were numerous and valuable, however, and our gratitude for them is as definite as for the other.

It does seem that there is no end of power exerted by God through the agency of judicious general movements and campaigns in the church. After all, does not the main weakness of our denomination lie in the difficulty we have in getting general movements under way? Our individualism is strength and glory to us in many respects, but maybe it stands a little in our way sometimes when a need arises for uniform adoption of a movement and its details by the whole church. Such times as that do come now and then, though ordinarily it is better for each one of us to do his work in his own way. As I understand you and the church reports, the Assembly is calling for a progressive campaign now, one item being an effort toward a goal of $12,000,000 for benevolences in three years, $3,500,000 of this amount to be pledged this March for the church year 1919-20. I learned quite a lesson from the rebuke administered to the poverty of my faith last spring and I am ready to do what I can to persuade our local organization to utilize again this year as fully as possible the momentum offered by a general movement throughout the church.

Suggestio Falsi, Suppressio Veri or--the Tithe as Law

By Rev. Chas. E. Raynal, D.D.
(Dr. H. M. Parker, Collaborating).

IT has been a matter of surprise and regret to conservative and orthodox members of the Church that the Presbyterian Standard has lately lent itself to the spread of some such gravely heretical ideas. Several very important departures from our historic positions might be instanced among its recently published articles, but I leave these to those seraphic Doctors whose learning the better fits them as guardians of the weightier matters of the law, and choose one of the lesser offences as more conformable to my station and degree—The Tithe as Law.

I am the more inclined to protest against this particular heresy because our commonwealth and Church have lately been deluged with literature—falsely so-called—upon this subject. Writings of many kinds have been sent abroad, not only through the Church papers, but also through overcrowded freight, express and mail. Various conventions have been appointed with the express purpose of inculcating this idea, and attendance upon these meetings has been made compulsory for most of the ministers of the Synod since most of the ministers have been enjoined to entertain conventions, so many having been appointed. Beyond all this is the even more serious situation we face in the fact that this vast work of propaganda—through Church papers, pamphlets, mails, freights and conventions—is being done by a committee which boldly claims the authority of the General Assembly.

I.

Now the burdens of all these writings is one burden. When one is read, all are comprehended, however diverse their form of statement or mode of dissemination, they all proceed to their predestined conclusion with one argument. First: The tithe is a universal principle coeval in its promulgation with the creation of man. Second: This universal law was recognized by Moses and incorporated in the Levitic system. Third: This law, being universal, was not abrogated when the Old Testament economy ended. Fourth: Being universal and not abrogated in the New Testament dispensations, it is universally binding still.

It is clear that this argument begins with the claim of universality and proceeds to the claim of eternity—unless abrogated. The Tithe is therefore raised to a position equal to that of the Decalogue and must be regarded as co-ordinate with or a part of the moral Law. A sort of first or eleventh commandment.

II.

Against these very gratuitous assumptions, it might be sufficient to oppose the words of Dr. Bridges, of the Westminster Assembly of Divines: "We deny the major and reject the ergo." However, in order that a fair statement of the faith of the Church may be made, the following well known and undisputed facts may be presented:

First: The great majority of the doctors and ministers of the Presbyterian Church, and of all other evangelical bodies, have never believed and do not now believe the tithe to be as above contended—a universal and eternal law.

Second: The General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, in answer to questions, overtures, and appeals, all and several, has steadfastly represented this great majority opinion in refusing to declare the tithe of binding obligation for the Christian Church. In the year A.D. 1889 the General Assembly submitted the question of the tithe to the Presbyteries with the result that fifty-one, out of sixty-eight reporting, expressed the opinion that the tithe is not binding under the New Testament dispensation, ten regarded it as binding, six declined to express an opinion, and one was on the fence. Repeated subsequent questions and overtures have evoked the same or like result, until in the year 1909 the Assembly handed down an opinion which I shall presently quote.

Third: The New Testament, very clearly does not enjoin the tithe. There are but four direct references to the tithe in all the New Testament if Young's Concordance be correct. The first of these is in Matthew 23:23, and is found in part as follows: "Woe unto you scribes, Pharisees, hypocrits! for ye tithe." Of mint, anise and cummin they faithfully gave a tenth, but they had "left undone the weightier matters of the law, justice, mercy and faith." The second reference is Luke's record of the same or like words and is found in the 11th chapter and 42nd verse of his Gospel. The third reference is in Luke 18:12, and presents the Pharisee's boastful prayer: "I give tithes of all I get." The fourth reference is in Hebrews the 7th chapter, where record is made of Abraham's gift of a tithe to Melchizedek. It may be noted that Abraham did not give a tithe of his income to Melchizedek. The transaction did not involve Abraham's income at all. A tithe of the spoils of war was paid to Melchizedek, not out of Abraham's share, for Abraham refused any share of the spoils. That tithe came out of the king of Sodom's goods which the young men had taken in war.

These points are capable of considerable expansion and are worthy of even the Standard's valuable space, but, as Dr. Bridges holds brevity to be not only the soul of wit but the chief end of man, they are contracted here to suit his literary canons.

III.

I add several observations of greater or minor importance.

The rite of circumcision has as well founded claim, not only to pre-Mosaic but to pre-Abrahamic universality as the tithe. It is a matter of record that neither was universal, but both were observed among the Arabians, Phoenicians, Carthaginians, Egyptians and others. Like the tithe, circumcision was practiced in the early Christian Church and no objection arose to the Jewish Christian's continuance of the custom until they tried to enjoin it upon the Gentiles. Then Paul opposed Peter to his face for Peter was wrong. Paul's great argument settled forever that controversy. He showed that those who were circumcised were debtors to keep the whole law. The term "falling from grace" had its origin not in any commission of sins against the law, but in Paul's condemnation of those who were returning to the works of the law. Now when these circumcised Judaizing tithers observe the law for themselves we raise no objections whatsoever. Our protest comes only when they would reimpose the works of the law upon a free church. Then with Paul we say to the people: "For freedom did Christ set us free: Stand fast therefore" and "though we or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you let him be anathema."

Another observation: What we need today above all things is the preaching of fundamental truth. A return by our ministers to the greater doctrines of the Gospel faith is of vastly greater importance than the cheap shibboleths of our time. The one point at which the church can now best serve is not in the endless repetition of the street cries and campaign watchwords of the day—though they be our own—but in the preaching and practice of those high calls of faith which are beyond and above even the most important of our present achievements. A glance at all this vast pother about money, tithing and stewardship reveals how wrongly the emphasis is placed. Leave it—let it alone—hush it up—stop! Let the high sanctions of the Gospel and the great calls of love toward and faith in God be preached. The outpouring of money would follow in due course as one of the many minor results of this greater preaching of duty and service.

Still another observation: The General Assembly while refusing to enforce the tithe, commended the practice of the giving of some definite proportion and pointed out that one-fourth or one-half might just as well be the proportion as one-tenth. But at the same time the Assembly handed down what I conceive to be the best extra-Biblical deliverance upon this subject ever presented to the church, and I quote this as the fittest possible close to any paper dealing with the title: "But the Assembly, while encouraging, and even enjoining the personal adoption of some definite proportion as a minimum, does not feel authorized to fix that proportion, which, under the Gospel, has been left to the enlightened conscience of the individual, in the exercise of the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free. The Mosaic law prescribed rules; the Gospel promulgates principles, rules are for childhood, principles are for maturity; and the Assembly cannot bring unto bondage to the letter those who, having received the spirit of adoption, are no longer under tutors and governors."

In this brief statement of the undeniable position of our church upon this subject I have passed over many relevant matters, such, for instance, as the fact that there were two tithes that the Judaizers must enforce if they would be consistent—there is even a third tithe, but this tithe of the third year was probably a duplicate of one of the others. It might also be shown that those ecclesiastical communions and national parliaments that have bound the tithe upon the people have not realized the remarkable results which our Judaizers promise. The Catholic Church is the most notable example of the former and the English Establishment the outstanding example of the latter. It is also worthy of consideration that Christ's condemnation of the Pharisees was not based upon their observance of law, for in the law they were eminently correct, but upon their elevation of minor observances to the importance of first principles. This spirit of Pharisaism was the very antithesis of the spirit of Christ. Another practical observation might be found in the fact that the money spent in operating printing presses, buying postage stamps, filling waste baskets, and holding conventions in this vast campaign of propaganda would support several mission stations in China or Kamchatka.

IV.

And now while the Standard cannot be enjoined to stop this broadcast sewing of tares among the corn—for we are under grace, not under law—I earnestly appeal that the Standard safeguard the faith of which it has always been our appointed guardian and which it so completely represents in its editorial utterances. This could be done so efficaciously that all error would be rendered innocuous if Brother Bridges would subtend to the offending articles one of those charming little notes of his which say: "Space is given the above contribution but the editors desire to state that the views therein expressed do not represent the opinion of the Standard."

Statesville, N. C.

(We wish it to be clearly understood that the Standard is an open forum for the discussion of all questions concerning the Church, and that the publication of the views of others by no means implies our endorsement of them. The views of these two charming collaborators happen to coincide with our own, which of course closes the case. Whether our readers agree with them or not, they will enjoy the wit of the article, though it is not the kind of wit of which brevity is said to be the soul.—Editor.)

Systematic Beneficence--Personal Pledges.

Some good churchmen refuse to make personal pledges for the support of the church and the extension of the Gospel on the ground that they can not tell in advance what their income will be. Perhaps farmers have the most plausible excuse for taking this position, though such ignorance of future income is true of many business and of many mechanical trades. Some salaried men refuse to pledge, lest their circumstances change and they prove unable to keep the promise.

Happily such objectors are in a great minority among the loyal supporters of the church and its divinely ordered enterprises. Otherwise it would be impracticable for a church to promise a pastor a stipulated salary, to negotiate a needed loan, to rent a piece of property, or to project any definite plan for missionary or educational work.

As a matter of fact, very few can know certainly what their resources will be for a year ahead. Crops, markets, prices, customers, positions, and health are all subject to unforeseen fluctuations. Yet very few indeed do not know what they may reasonably count upon as a highly probable minimum of income. Men live by the law of probabilities and make all sorts of personal plans and promises based on reasonable expectations only, not on certainties.

Consequently all of us pledge money in advance to secure various ends that seem worth while. We secure the use of a storeroom or a piece of land and promise to pay the rent. We borrow money and sign up for the interest. We buy goods on credit. We carry life insurance. We enter children in college. We join lodges. We are assessed for taxes.

Is not the support and propagation of our Lord's Gospel as primary an obligation as any of these? Or is it worthy only of the drippings?

If God prospers us beyond our expectations, we are perfectly free to give more than we have pledged; no church treasurer will object.

If unforeseen calamity overtakes us and seriously alters our income, we are equally free to decrease, or cancel our pledge, giving the treasurer notice. Permission to do so is frequently printed on the pledge card. This reasonable privilege is always understood to be a personal right, even when not formally expressed.

"Why a Church Paper in Every Home."

(The following letters explain themselves. While they were not sent us by our good reader for publication, we feel that they are too good and bear too strongly on the subject that is being discussed just now so widely in our Church as to the need of a Church paper in every home, for us to withhold them. Surely what this paper has done for this particular family, one of our three Church papers could do for every family in our Church.—Ed.)

THE 1919 LETTER.

Editor Presbyterian Standard, Charlotte, N. C.

Dear Sir: In looking over an old file I find a letter that I wrote you more than a year ago and which had been laid aside to be "touched up" before mailing. I have decided to send it along, however, just as it was written, in spite of the fact that I could write a stronger one now, as the "Standard" is better than ever. My attachment to it could be explained in part by the fact that it, and its predecessor, "The North Carolina Presbyterian," have instructed, comforted and entertained me ever since I can remember, but my wife's unwillingness to give it up cannot be explained solely on sentimental grounds, for she is not a "native born" Presbyterian, having moved her membership from the Lutheran Church after we were married. She discovered, however, that she had to a great extent been a Presbyterian in spirit all her life which is not hard to understand when it is stated that her father's people were originally members of the German Reformed Church.

With very best wishes,

THE 1917 LETTER.

Editor Presbyterian Standard, Charlotte, N. C.

My Dear Sir: Your reference in a recent number of the Standard to the Church officer into whose family several secular newspapers and periodicals were coming and yet who expressed himself as not being able to afford the Church paper reminded me that you might be cheered by the knowledge that there are some who feel they cannot afford to be without your paper. My wife and I have found it a source of great comfort through the past few years which have been ones of great financial stress. We have stopped one paper and periodical after another, and when our subscription to the Standard became so much in arrears that we felt something must be done we looked at each other with the question in our eyes, "What shall we do about it?" My wife settled the question by saying, "That devotional column has meant so much to me the past year or so. We can't give it up." So we didn't, and God helping us, we wont.

With our very best wishes,

News of the Week

On February 6, at Durham, N. C., Joe H. King, one of the best known editorial paragraphers in the South, died at his home, of pneumonia. He was in the editorial chair nearly thirty years.

In a fire in Spartanburg, S. C., February 9, Perry Burnett and daughter, Lila, were burned to death.

A broken steel brake beam catching in guard rails of the Piedmont & Northern Railway trestle near Chick Springs, S. C., was the cause of the wreck recently, Frank W. Shealy, chairman of the State Railroad Commission, announced in a special report on the investigation of the wreck. The wreck, states the report, was not caused by defective roadway or speeding the train. Four persons were killed and a half dozen injured, some of whom may die.

The Boone Highway is to be extended from Reading, Pa., to New York City. J. H. Rich, of Winston-Salem, N. C., chairman of the association, which is operating with federal authority, stated that the western leg of the highway, from the Pacific to Boone's birthplace, already was on the way to completion and that steps would be taken shortly for construction necessary to link it with the Atlantic Coast section.

Though urged by leading men of the State and by the President himself to vote for the Woman's Suffrage Amendment, both Senators Simmons and Overman stood by their guns and refused to yield their convictions, for which all men, without regard to their own views, will honor them.

A temporary establishment of 27,559 officers and 509,909 enlisted men is provided for in the annual army appropriation bill reported to the House by the military committee. The measure carries a total of $1,117,289,400. The committee said an army of the size recommended would be necessary "during the period of demobilization." Legislation affecting the National Guard is among the features of the bill. A national guard organization of 106,200 men is contemplated. Equipment and supplies would be provided without charge by the War Department from the war stores. The total appropriations for the guard aggregate $10,173,000. When this measure came up in the House opposition was expressed to a standing army of more than 175,000 men.

At a meeting of the Food Administration representatives recently held in Washington, the cotton oil men asked protection by having an embargo on Oriental edible oils.

In the North Carolina Legislature a new tax bill has been presented. Among other provisions it increases the State tax for schools from 20 cents to 32 cents on the hundred dollars valuation and cuts the regular State tax levy from 23 2-3 cents to 11 2-3 cents; however, five per cent of the 23 2-3 cents levy heretofore has been set aside as a State equalization fund. The tax rates on inheritance are not changed but these taxes are placed more completely in the hands of the State Tax Commission.

In the South Carolina Senate a bill has been introduced providing that heads of farming enterprises in the State be required to file, before June 1, a sworn statement of the number of acres of land under cultivation, the number of animals employed on farms and the division of acreage between cotton and other crops. The bill provides that a tax of $25 an acre shall be imposed on all lands planted in cotton in excess of ten acres for each animal used.

The War Revenue Bill has been adopted and now needs only the signature of the President. It levies $6,000,000,000 in taxes this year, and $4,000,000,000 yearly thereafter until revised.

The North Carolina Conference for Social Service elected Dr. W. L. Poteat, President. The conference adopted resolutions that endorse the Connor-Saunders child labor bill in the Legislature and the other child welfare and health measures that have been introduced; declared for a general betterment campaign for all the people, normal population as well as the defectives, and endorsed the Lever health bill in Congress.

The conference of cotton growers of North Carolina adopted a resolution declaring for an iron clad 33 1-3 per cent cut in cotton acreage and corresponding attention to reduced fertilizer application; another calling on the Legislature to enact a standard cotton warehousing act that will help in holding cotton and to change the tax billing season as to cotton on hand by growers from May 1 to June 1; and provided for a committee of seven to direct a statewide campaign in cooperation with other cotton states.

In Congress the House has approved the new three-year building program, which declares for a policy of naval expansion unless limitation of world armament be agreed upon at the Peace Conference.

Secretary Glass has asked Congress to give him authority to make the next issue of Liberty bonds more attractive by fixing interest rates and determining exemptions from taxation, according to financial conditions existing when the loan is floated.

Just three months after the armistice, the German National Assembly elected Friedrich Ebert President of the German Republic by a vote of 277 out of 379 votes—a majority of 102. Herr Ebert accepted the election. Count von Posadowsky-Wehner received 49 votes.

The Burgeois proposition for an inter-allied military force to enforce peace was defeated by an overwhelming vote at the meeting of the Society of Nations Commission. The French and Czecho-Slovaks were the only representatives in the affirmative. The draft of the society of nations plans was then unanimously adopted as a whole. The final draft consists of 26 articles.

"Ye are my friends, if ye do the things which I command you."

Friendship with Jesus is not the same as other friendships. It is not a friendship between equals. Jesus is God at the same time that He is man, and when we become His friends it is right and necessary that we should do His will in everything. In human friendships we concede to each other on a plan of give and take. But in our friendship with Jesus, He is so much wiser and better than we and has such full authority over us, that we must always do His way. Jesus cannot do our way, for often ours is wrong, and He would rather allow the friendship to lapse than to go with us into sin or folly. If our friendship with Jesus is to abide, we must follow His wise and good desires.

We ought to make more than we do of the friendship of Jesus. One of the strong young men of the Carolinas told an associate that he never entered fully into the benefits and joy of religion until He got a practical hold on the great idea that he and Jesus were friends. "Jesus is my friend," he said, "and now that I have learned to keep that before my mind, doing His wishes is pleasant and easy."

Our friendships are always a hoist or a drag for our souls. And the friendship with Jesus is the perfect friendship, the most helpful of all, because He is so true and strong. But we must remember to do His will always, or the friendship will dissolve. He may still love us and watch to see what He can do to help us, but he cannot be in fellowship with us if we break the law of His wishes.

* * *

Jesus loves His friends so much that when they break loose from Him and do their own sinful way He sends such blows of trouble upon them that they come willingly back to the safety of His fellowship, to do His will again. One of the best and brightest women in the whole country once said: "I know God loves me. I have no doubt in the world about that. But I have learned that I must not go against His will—I must not disobey. When I do I invariably suffer for it. He seems inexorable about that. And I am sure it is best that He is. I know now that when I sin, the sooner I get back to Him, and the closer I stay to Him, the better it is for my happiness." Was this not merely a fine way of saying that Jesus loved her so much, and was so bent on saving her from what she would get into without His saving friendship, that He compelled her to come back to His friendship whenever she broke away? "Apart from me ye can do nothing."

* * *

Give three reasons why we should obey God.

How can we know what God wants done.

Give a Bible illustration of how God punishes disobedience.

Folks that get weary in well-doing generally haven't done much at it, when you come to hunt-up their records. The weariness is usually at the beginning, and sorts out the workers from the quitters.—Anon.

 OUR EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS AND STUDENTS—Prov. 8:32-36.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

Presbyterians believe in education. Therefore many of them send their sons and daughters to distinctively Presbyterian schools; and many of them send their children to other schools. The former, because either they are satisfied with the qualifications of our denominational schools, or they are so loyal as to send them thither regardless of their faculties and equipment. The latter, because they prefer—whether rightly or wrongly as to the qualification of our schools—they prefer a well equipped "non-sectarian" school to a denominational school not well equipped.

"FREELY YE HAVE RECEIVED, FREELY GIVE."

By Rev. John Van Lear, D.D.

This is one of many principles laid down by Christ of Christian Stewardship. They form concentric things of which this is the central. Christ deals always with fundamentals. He establishes a starting point for our thinking. This principle declares the very nature of His Kingdom of Grace. It is derived from a beneficent God. God is the Great Giver. He never kept anything. He gave His power and wisdom unlimited in creation. He gives His care unstinted in His providence. He gave His only begotten and well-beloved Son in redemption.

It is God-like to give. Miserliness is ungodliness. To withhold and keep for selfish, personal use life or possessions is to sin against the plainest requirement of the Gospel. God enriches Himself by giving. So does every giver. Impoverishment comes to those who keep. "There is that scattereth and tendeth to increase. There is that withholdeth and tendeth to poverty." Free giving can come only from a free spirit. "Freely ye have received, freely give."

Redemption furnishes the motive of giving. The inspiration of giving is within. The true Christian does not need to be coaxed into giving. He does not measure his liabilities by others' gifts. His measure is the freeness with which he has received. All things are yours because you are Christ's and Christ is God's. But yours to distribute, yours to share, yours to reckon with and account for. As a good steward of Jesus Christ from whom you have freely received all things.

The Kingdom furnishes the objects for giving. The church sets forth constructive work in her Educational and Missionary program. She asks the transmutation of gold into character—building for service and into soul-saving in the whitened harvest fields at home and overseas. This program of the Kingdom has first and paramount claim upon Christians and the Lord's money is their Stewardship.

Many sprouts of social service speaking as if the old tree, the church, was dead and passed away, but the church lives, its roots are healthy and flourishing; these very sprouts come from the eternal life of the undying tree and without it would never have been. The surest way to kill the sprouts is to neglect the tree. The Kingdom of God vitalizes all social service. The Lord's money should first go for the spreading of that Tree whose leaves are for the healing of the Nations.

The Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ alone has promise of social reconstruction and hope of permanent betterment.

The war has left the world as it found it with the age-long problem of sin and men crying with a deeper hunger for God. The church must meet that Cry for Bread not with the stone of man's program, but with the Gospel sufficient for every need. The church has in its purse a large portion of the Three Hundred Billions of American wealth and can amply meet the call next March for $3,500,000 for her benevolent activities at home and overseas. In the freedom with which we have received let us freely give.

MOSES PRAYING FOR ISRAEL.

Golden Text—Jas. 5:16: "The Effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

Exodus 32:7-14.

February 23, 1919.

Prayer in its most comprehensive sense is an address to Deity, and embraces many forms of expression. It includes adoration, praise, thanksgiving, confession, petition, pleas and intercession. We may pray for ourselves or others. Our present lesson deals with intercessory prayer. Israel had committed a great sin and were in danger of destruction, and Moses intercedes for them. The lesson emphasizes the heinousness of sin, the displeasure it kindles in the Almighty, and the value of intercessory prayer.

I. The Sin of Israel.

Moses had been in the mount about forty days and nights communing with Jehovah. During his absence the people declare that "they do not know what has become of him," and urge Aaron to make them gods. They give him their jewels and when he has fashioned a golden calf they fall down and worship it. Aaron proclaims a feast unto Jehovah, but the people pay homage to the calf, which has neither life, motion nor power. They publish what they knew was a lie, "These be thy gods O Israel that brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt." Their sin was apostasy from Jehovah, to worship the work of their own hands. It was the grossest idolatry, substituting a material image for the living God. It was not only apostasy and debasing idolatry, but a sin of shameful ingratitude. Jehovah had only a few weeks before given them a great deliverance in Egypt by marvelous acts of Divine power. At the Red Sea He had displayed His tender mercy and matchless might, and had caused them to triumph over their enemies. More recently He had fed them with meat in the evening and sent them bread from heaven each morning. Within a few days they had witnessed the clouds and darkness, thunders and lightning that proclaimed the presence of Jehovah on Mount Sinai, and had heard the tremendous voice of Jehovah utter the Ten Commandments from the burning mount. Yet despite these manifestations of His existence and majesty they forsook His worship for that of a god of gold. Was ever a people guilty of more flagrant idolatry?

II. Jehovah's Wrath and Threatening.

It was not surprising that the holy God, "Who will not give His glory to another or His praise to graven images," should manifest righteous indignation towards these bold and ungrateful idolaters. As they have forsaken Him He disowns them and tells Moses "to get down from the mount, for thy people that thou brought out of Egypt, have corrupted themselves and made a molten calf and worshipped it and have done sacrifice unto it and said these be thy gods O Israel that brought thee out of Egypt." God says to Moses, "Let me alone, don't intercede for them that I may consume them in a moment and I will make of thee a great nation." He declares of Israel that "It is a stiff-necked people, let me alone that my wrath may wax hot against them" for their complete destruction. If Moses had been selfishly ambitious and disposed to exalt himself and his posterity at the expense of ruined Israel, he had only to keep silence. The Almighty had ample justification for destroying Israel and was perfectly able to fulfill His offer to Moses. But Israel's noble leader prefers to intercede for his imperiled people.

III. Moses' Prayer and Pleas.

He affirms that Israel was Jehovah's people and that they had been brought out of Egypt not by himself or by human power, but by Divine might. They were the Lord's by choice and by deliverance, and therefore "His anger should not wax hot against them," notwithstanding their waywardness. He declares that if the Lord destroyed them, it would give occasion for the Egyptians to asperse His name and to say that they perished in the wilderness because Jehovah was not able to put them in possession of the land of Canaan. He pleads God's promises confirmed by an oath to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob as to having a numerous seed, who should inherit the land of Canaan. For these cogent reasons he entreats Jehovah that He would "Turn from His fierce wrath and repent of this evil against Thy people."

IV. The Effects of Intercessory Prayer.

Moses' prayer did not change the Lord's purpose, for this is unchangeably the same. It did change the manifestation of His purpose and His dealings with Israel. God's purpose embraced Moses' intercession and a favorable response thereto, but the Lord acted just as men do when they repent or change their mind. Hence it is said, "Jehovah repented of the evil which He thought to do unto His people." Moses' intercession averted Israel's destruction. It secured their pardon, but it did not prevent their chastisement. The nation was chastised for this and other sins. Neither did Moses' prayer save those who despite reproof and warning, persisted in idolatrous and immoral practices. Thousands perished by the sword that very day. Intercessory prayer procures benefits, but there is a limit to its efficacy.

Prayer Meeting.

The lesson: as a denomination, we must see to it that our schools are thoroughly equipped, both in men and material, for their work.

Here—precisely here—we have fallen short of our duty. Our institutions are financially poor. The professors are too few in number and are poorly paid. I know one college which has done fine work, raised its standards, half paid its noble band of teachers; and is running deeper and deeper in debt because of the failure of the church to appreciate its worth and to support it financially.

It deserves support of all kinds; but especially support in students and money.

"He that sinneth against me wrongeth his own soul." It is not only the idle, careless student to whom these words apply; but they ring out a warning to the church. We sin against Wisdom when we selfishly withhold from our schools and colleges that which might make them adequate for their appointed tasks. These institutions should be so manned and equipped that Presbyterians will not only be persuaded that they can patronize them without detriment to the educational interests of their children, but that they possess advantages nowhere else to be obtained.

Is this impractical? Not at all. Our people have the money in plenty to place our schools and colleges out of the ranks of beggars and incompetents. Our institutions have moral and spiritual qualities which should command respect, and secure willing money and patronage. They have these inestimable advantages: but they are miserably poor. They must have money, and plenty of it, to enable them to fulfill their high functions in the life of our people. It belongs to the genius of Presbyterianism to be liberal where the interests of education are concerned; but some fatal blindness has overtaken us. We have been niggardly where we should have gladly and freely given. Our schools and colleges appeal to deaf ears and to prejudiced hearts.

The result is not only that they are poor, but that others out of the church educate our sons and daughters.

Wonderful has been the devotion, the self-sacrifices and the labors of our devoted men and women in our schools and colleges. It is time for our people to realize this, to appreciate these people at their true value, and to give their money liberally to make these institutions abreast of the times in buildings and equipment and resources.

Then will we count it a privilege indeed to send our sons and daughters to these schools to be trained for their life work.

"HE'S NA FAILED ME NOO."

Up on the lone hillside in the Highlands of Scotland, far removed from any other dwelling, there lived, about the middle of the past century, a poor lone widow, who for many a long year had learned to rest, in every difficulty and in all her need, upon Him who has said: "Let thy widows trust in me." It was the depth of winter, and the poor woman's stock, never very abundant, was reduced to its lowest by the difficulty of finding any employment at that season of the year. Unlike the widow in the Hebrew story, she actually found her barrel of meal to fail, and when she had finished the last handful she went to bed, with the hope, no doubt, that she might be more fortunate in earning a few pence on the morrow.

But when the morrow came a terrible snow storm swept over the land, and the lane leading to her little cot was almost blocked with snow. It was quite beyond her slender power to battle with the raging storm, and make her way to some neighbor's house, where at least she would be made welcome to a dish of porridge. There was one Friend only to whom she could apply, and in Him she had the most perfect confidence.

Accordingly she filled her pan with water, and put it on the fire, and put the salt in the water. "Noo," she said to herself, "I'll just gang ben, and ask the Lord for the meal." So she retired into her inner chamber, and there "With praise and thanksgiving she made her wants known unto the Lord." She hadn't been long on her knees when there came a loud knock at the door. "Na, na, Lord!" she exclaimed, "Thou cans' na hae sent the answer sae soon!"

But the knocking continued, and, on her opening the door, a buxom farmer's lass, who lived some little distance off, flung down a sack of meal on the floor, exclaiming: "Father sent ye that; and I think ye may be very grateful to me for bringing it here through all this terrible storm. Whatever possessed my father I don't know, but all the morning he has been dinning into me about that sack of meal, and, snow or no snow, I must be sure and fetch it up to you; but it's been a pretty hard job getting through the storm, I can tell you."

So she was rattling on, when a glance at the old woman fairly overawed and silenced her. There she stood with uplifted hands and eyes bedimmed with tears of grateful praise, as she exclaimed: "He's aye the same, Jeanie! He's aye the same! Many a lang year hae I trusted Him, and I ne'er found Him fail; and He's na failed me noo. Look at you pot on the fire, Jeanie. I put on the water, and I put in the salt, and ne'er a grain o' meal had I in the hoose. Sae I was jist asking the Lord to send me the meal, when I heard ye knock at the door, and noo here comes the meal, jist while I was asking for it."—Ex.

"It doth not yet appear what we shall be." The august spirit of man, proud of his achievements, in the past, is finding new wonders in the world every day. He is doing impossible things all the time. We knew it was impossible to drive a machine in the sky that was heavier than air. We knew it was impossible to send messages through the air without wires. Every age is showing how weak was the reason of the age preceding. These wonders are here and it doth not yet appear what the morrow will bring forth. Our God is a wonder-working God. And this is a prophecy of spiritual wonders. God has wrought wonders in the souls of men, in the great past. They have reached dizzy heights of spiritual exaltation, but there are greater things ahead. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be," however wondrous we are now. We cannot conceive it, but the end is where we shall become perfect in the likeness of Christ, for "when He shall appear we shall be like Him" in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. Why should you be ashamed of Jesus?—The Methodist Protestant.

DON'T HURRY.

The ancients affirmed that Minerva, the goddess of wisdom, sprang full-armed from the forehead of Jove. Not so came Jesus to His mighty work. Behold Him wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger! He grows "in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and men." For twelve long years He is "subject unto His parents." He carries the water pitcher to the village well. In the rabbinical school He learns His alphabet and memorizes the acrostic psalms.

Meanwhile the world lies in sin and sorrow. While men are dying without a helper, the Boy of Nazareth calmly awaits His hour, with the shadow of the cross over Him. He knows Himself and He knows His mission; and His omniscience holds Him true to the path marked out for Him.

Is there no lesson here for young people who are preparing for life! "He that believeth shall not make haste." I know of a boy who, fifty years ago, presented himself for admission at college, and was informed that he must take two additional years of preliminary study; and when he cried impatiently, "I can't wait," the answer was: "If you go cross-lots to meet the business of life, you will always regret it." That was wise counsel. Waiting is not loss. Haste makes waste. The rider who cannot pause long enough to tighten the buckle of his surcingle may be unhorsed in battle. He who believes in God and in himself will go deliberately to meet the responsibilities awaiting him.

I remember that after the Chicago fire, when the vaults of banks and business houses were still red-hot, there were some who, in their anxiety to know whether they were solvent or not, pried open their vaults too soon. There was a puff of flame and their wealth vanished into thin air! This is a parable of life. Take time to look before you leap. Fabius is a better soldier than Harry Hotspur. The maxim, "Get rich quick," has landed many a young Napoleon of finance behind the bars of a prison. It is harder to walk than to run; but the tortoise outspeeds the hare before the going down of the sun.—Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., in The Presbyterian.

A PEACEMAKER.

A story has been told of a little girl who said to her mother one evening, "I was a peacemaker today."

"How was that?" asked her mother.

"I knew something that I didn't tell," was the unexpected reply.

Do we not all of us have frequent opportunities to make peace in this way? Perhaps we have thought of the work of the peacemakers as the stopping of quarrels rather than their prevention, but comparatively few of us will have occasion actively to separate those who are quarreling and induce them to be friends, and how much better that they should not quarrel at all!

Let no one think that the negative virtue of a discreet silence is an easy matter. The bit of gossip that would fill an awkward pause in the conversation is on the tip of the tongue—the secret weighs heavily on our minds, and it would be a relief to talk it over with someone—but is it going to make trouble for anybody?

Is it possible that the words that we speak could be misunderstood and distorted and repeated where they would rankle? "Blessed are the peacemakers," even those peacemakers who work only by refraining from doing harm with their tongues.

And what is this blessing that the peace-makers receive? "They shall be called sons of God."—Ex.

My spiritual ends have no independent existence as "mine;" in fact, I only attain them in so far as God is sustaining His ends at the same time.—E. A. Burroughs.

Collections—The month of February, as a whole, is not assigned to any one cause, but in many of the Synods and Presbyteries it is assigned to Synodical, Presbyterian or Congregational Home Missions. Pastors and churches can obtain information from the chairman of the committee of their own Presbytery. February 16 to 23 is Self-Denial Week. The Assembly appointed this week as a season of special prayer, preaching and self-denial in the interest of our Foreign Mission Work.

CALL FOR THE WAR STATISTICS OF OUR CHURCH.

In order to gather the war statistics of the churches in our Assembly, the War Work Council sent out, early in January, questionnaires which were to be filled out and returned to the office of the Council. So far, only three hundred and fifty out of our more than three thousand churches have complied with this request. The object of this questionnaire, which is prepared by the War-Time Commission of the Churches, is to make a permanent record of the work of all the denominations during the war. This record will be valuable both historically and as a basis for further service.

We do not want our church to fail in this matter and it is important that the records reach our office as soon as possible as the War-Time Commission is already calling for a report.

The questionnaires went to all pastors, and to sessions where there was no pastor or where one man served several churches. At the same time, we asked for a list of all in the service from every church. This latter is very important, as the council is planning to send out a volume of welcome to all our returning soldiers and a form of memorial to the families of those who have lost their lives in the service, and this work will be based on these lists of names from our churches.

If your questionnaire did not reach you or has been misplaced, write our office and another will be sent you. If you failed to send your list of names with your questionnaire and it is now available, mail it to us and it will be recorded.

Address all communications to War Work Council, 154 Fifth Avenue, North, Nashville, Tenn.

James I. Vance, Chairman.

PERSONAL.

The many friends of Dr. M. E. Melvin, who has been critically ill at the Charlotte Sanitorium with pneumonia, following influenza, will be glad to learn that the crisis has been passed, and that he is out of immediate danger.

The address of Rev. F. A. Barnes is changed from Mooresville, N. C., to Schoolfield, Va., Box 279. Mr. Barnes, after a very successful pastorate with the Second Church, Mooresville, has entered upon a new field of labor as pastor of the Burton Memorial Church, Schoolfield.

Rev. Thos. W. Lingle, of the faculty of Davidson College, who has been engaged in Y. M. C. A. work in France, has landed in New York, after a stay overseas of well over a year. Dr. Lingle was among the first of the ministers of our church to volunteer for this important work after the entrance of the United States into the war, his thorough knowledge of the language especially fitting him for the work in France.

Rev. Sol. C. Dickey, D.D., General Secretary of Winona Assembly and Bible Conference, Winona Lake, Ind., has announced two Bible Conferences to be held in Florida soon. The first is to be held in St. Augustine under dates February 23 to March 9. The Billy Sunday evangelistic party will be at the conference for the last five days and conduct the services. The music will be under the direction of Homer Rodeheaver. Nearly all the other members of the party, including Mrs. Sunday, will be present. The second conference will be held at Tampa, March 2 to 16. The Sunday party will be present during the last five days of this conference also, and conduct the services. The schedule of speakers includes Dr. John McNeill, William Jennings Bryan, Camden M. Coburn, Frank N. Palmer, A. T. Robertson, James M. Gray, Mabel Stevens and others. Dr. Dickey is acting pastor of Flagler Memorial Presbyterian Church, St. Augustine, for a period of six months during the absence of the regular pastor of the church.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Charlotte—West Avenue—At a congregational meeting, held February 16, this church made out a call for the pastoral services of Rev. C. C. Anderson, of Hugo, Oklahoma. It is hoped that he will accept, and that he will prove a worthy successor of Rev. H. M. Pressley, who did such excellent work in this church.

Statesville—A group managers' conference, bringing together the managers of the church groups in Concord Presbytery, was held at the First Presbyterian Church Wednesday. About twenty men were present. Rev. R. A. Lapsley, of Tarboro, was present and made interesting talks. The meeting was declared a highly beneficial one.

Charlotte—Rev. William Duncan, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Covington, Ga., R. F. D., who was recently granted a leave of absence by his congregation in order that he might regain his strength after a serious illness, has been spending the time in Charlotte with relatives. Mr. Duncan will return to his charge at an early date greatly benefited by the rest.

Charlotte—Systematic Beneficence—As a preliminary to the Every Member Canvass in March, a conference will be held in the First Church next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. All elders, deacons, and canvassers in our eleven Charlotte churches are invited and earnestly urged to attend. This is one of fifteen group conferences held throughout the Presbytery, the object being to enlist new churches in the Every Member Canvass plan and to stimulate all to determine to bring Mecklenburg up to the mark in the Assembly's Progressive Campaign for $3,500,000 for benevolences for the church year 1919-1920.

St. Pauls—Dr. E. C. Murray and family moved here February 7. The Alamance congregation showed them many touching evidences of their affection and regard at parting, and were very kind in moving all the furniture and loading the car. The St. Pauls people too have been lavish in their welcome and entertainment. The manse has been beautifully renovated and the pantry provisioned, and they have done everything possible for the comfort of the pastor's family. The first Sunday evening's service was unique and impressive. As all the town pastors were new men, the three congregations arranged a general welcome service in the Baptist Church. A union choir furnished inspiring music, a layman from each congregation gave an address of welcome, the pastors responded, and Dr. Murray preached an appropriate sermon.

E. C. M.

Davidson—"The Davidsonian" of February 12 says:

"Dr. Myers, of Greensboro, has consented to hold a series of meetings on the hill under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., giving as his preferable dates the 24th, 25th and 26th. Mr. Miles has written him that these dates will be satisfactory. Although he has not received a reply from Dr. Myers as yet, it is more than probable that he will be on the hill on these days.

"Dr. Myers is a very forceful speaker who has something to say and says it. Those who have heard him will not miss hearing him, and those who have not should not miss hearing him. He will bring with him a quartet composed of two ladies and two gentlemen. Those who have heard the quartet can testify that it will be an additional influence for the success of the meeting."

The Evangelistic Work of the Synod of North Carolina—The Runnymede Mills, at Tarboro—Rev. C. Connor Brown, Evangelist of the Synod, was with Rev. R. A. Lapsley, of Tarboro, at the Runnymede Mills, preaching twice daily for twelve days, January 22-February 5. Mr. Lapsley writes: The meeting from first to last was splendid. Mr. Brown's preaching was clear and forceful. He preaches Christ and His crucifixion—the old Gospel of our fathers. The meeting was felt throughout the whole mill community, and a great deal of good was done. The visible results were thirty-two professions of faith, of whom twenty-eight united with the Presbyterian Church. A contribution of $30 was made for Synodical Home Missions. This was really a remarkable offering. Ten dollars is the largest offering I have ever known them to make for any cause before. They are all mill people and very poor. It was a signal proof of genuineness of feeling and appreciation.

Immediately upon the close of the Runnymede meeting Mr. Brown began work at another point in Mr. Lapsley's field, where he is engaged at the time of this writing. Already tidings are beginning to come of a similar blessing of God there. Account of the work there will be given later.

Charlotte—Seversville Church—On Tuesday evening of February 4 a series of services was begun by Rev. Theodore B. Anderson, of St. Albans, W. Va., in the church at Seversville, which lasted over one week. Mr. Anderson formerly preached at Seversville and Hopewell, but two years and a half ago he received a call to his present pastorate. During his four years of service at Seversville he earned the love of his congregation, old and young alike. The parting scene was an effecting one. During his absence he has had the continued love and prayers of his people here. His return therefore was the signal for a demonstration of affection that has, perhaps, never been equalled anywhere. One vied with another in the effort to do him honor, and the whole church was vibrant and pulsing with the magnetism of love. It was a beautiful sight to watch, from the side, the face of each arrival become illumined with a joyous light as hand met hand and heart spoke to heart as in the days bygone. The hearts of many were too full for utterance and so their tears spoke their welcome. The preaching of Mr. Anderson was received with the greatest attention. His style seemed just at little subdued but his sermons seemed to have struck a deeper note even than formerly. The practical side of religion was always dominant in his previous efforts and now all were glad to observe that this was still their prominent feature, linked with a sincere desire to draw men away from sin to God. His sermons on Noah, Joseph and Leah were truly masterpieces, bringing out many new or little known characteristics of the different personages. On Sunday night he preached what was, without doubt, the most prenominal of all his sermons, his subject being "From Whence Cometh Democracy." This is a striking interpretation of the woman clothed with the sun, etc., as recorded in the 12th chapter of the Book of Revelation. The findings are entirely distinct from any yet recorded and are well substantiated by undeniable truths. This sermon is being prepared for publication.

in pamphlet form and will be given to the public as soon as it is copyrighted and printed. A deep and sincere religious feeling pervaded each service. Though there were but few conversions, the spiritual life of the church was deepened and intensified to a remarkable degree. The young people were continually around Mr. Anderson and tender and true were the words of advice and counsel he addressed to them. They showed their appreciation by leading the singing in a manner that was responsive, absorbing and truly soul inspiring. It would be hard to decide which of the two, minister or people, received the greater happiness and blessing. The pain of parting was somewhat lessened by Mr. Anderson's declared intention, God willing, of returning in a year and delivering a series of ten sermons on the visions of Daniel and John showing their relation and fulfillment. The writer of this has seen these and can promise a surprise to Biblical scholars. They are the result of much prayer and study and show decidedly the guiding of the Holy Spirit. The love of former days, between pastor and people, was cemented by this meeting beyond all danger of oblivion or neglect. The meeting was a great one in every way for everyone and of a surety blessings in variety will be the result. R. L.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Enoree Presbytery will meet in the Second Church, Greenville, S. C., April 8, 1919, at 8 p. m. E. P. Davis, S. C.

Columbia—For unavoidable reasons the conference on work for returning soldiers which was to have been held in the First Church on February 25 has been cancelled by the local workers. Delegates and others in Congaree Presbytery will kindly take notice.

Hodges and Ninety-Six—Rev. J. W. Weathers was installed pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Hodges Sunday morning, February 9, and at Ninety-Six that evening. At Hodges Dr. D. M. Douglas, president of the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, preached the sermon; Rev. J. M. Dallas propounded the constitutional questions and charged the pastor, and Mr. S. C. Hodges, an elder in the Greenwood Church, charged the people. At Ninety-Six, Dr. Douglas preached the sermon and charged the people; Rev. J. M. Dallas propounded the constitutional questions and charged the pastor.

Columbia—At the congregational meeting of the First Presbyterian Church on February 12 the following were elected ruling elders: David Cardwell, S. B. McMaster, J. W. Simpson and J. A. Stoddard; and the following as deacons: William Banks, E. S. Cardwell, S. L. Latimer, Jr., George McCutchen, W. S. Neil, Guy M. Tarrant, and W. A. Taylor. Messrs. Simpson and Stoddard have served as elders elsewhere. Messrs. Cardwell and McMaster have served in the First Church as deacons. Four of the new deacons are young men, and two of them have been soldiers. Mr. Latimer is still in France.

Only two of these men, Messrs. McMaster and E. S. Cardwell, are sons of the First Church. The list includes one railroad official, one merchant, two educators, one office manager, three newspaper men, and three bank men. These men will be ordained and installed at the morning services next Sabbath, and on the following Wednesday after divine worship in the church they will be tendered a reception by the congregation in the Smith Memorial Chapel.

APPALACHIA.

Abingdon—Over One Hundred Thousand Dollars Subscribed for Stonewall Jackson College—The Board of Trustees of Stonewall Jackson College announce that $101,114.49 have been subscribed for buildings and equipment and that $61,477.43 of this amount have been paid. The crowded condition of the present buildings and the prospects for larger attendance call loudly for more room and increased facilities. It is earnestly hoped that all unpaid subscriptions may soon be forwarded, as the college needs funds to meet the pressing demands for further equipment. The board desires to tender its sincere thanks for the generous support these subscribers have given this important work. J. R. D.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville—Rev. L. E. McNair, of Jacksonville, has been elected chairman of Home Missions in the Presbytery of Suwanee, in the place of Rev. W. H. Dodge, deceased. All communications should be addressed to him.

Jacksonville—On request of the many who knew and esteemed the late Rev. Dr. William Henry Dodge, the following memorial resolution, passed at the meeting of the city council, is presented in full:

"Jacksonville owes a debt of gratitude to the memory of distinguished men whose lives have graced its memory. To one of these the city wishes to pay its tribute of appreciation and affection. On January 20, 1919, Rev. William Henry Dodge, D.D., a loved and venerated citizen, passed on. He ever gave his best to his people, serving in season and out of season with a zeal born of love for the higher and better things. During the dark days of the yellow fever epidemic in 1888, as well as after the fire of 1901, he labored without thought of himself in Christian activities. He gave much, as he loved much. He was ever considerate, gentle and kindly, going quietly about his Master's business. We loved him for what he was and what he gave. He shed his benevolent presence upon a community thereby enriched. His life inspired by love, lived in unselfishness and crowned by active services for others, will ever be an example and a sweet and fragrant memory.

"Therefore, be it resolved:

"1. That the city of Jacksonville mourns the loss of a most distinguished and beloved citizen and leader.

"2. That there be extended to the family of Dr. Dodge heartfelt sympathy in this hour of their great personal bereavement.

"3. That a page of the minutes of this council be dedicated to Dr. Dodge's memory and these resolutions inscribed thereon; and a copy thereof be sent to Mrs. Dodge."

The resolution was prepared by Councilmen John B. Calahan, W. H. Baker and J. A. Craig.

St. Petersburg—February 9 was a banner day in the attendance at this church. The winter tourist season is nearly at its height, and with the 25,000 visitors now in town, and hundreds arriving daily, the churches are well attended. At the First Presbyterian Church, the pastor, Rev. W. J. Garrison, was greeted by a packed house at the morning service and with a full house in the evening. The church auditorium seats 1,500, and every seat was taken in the morning, with many standing on the lower floor and in the galleries. In addition, chairs placed on the large porch outside were all filled, the occupants not being able to see the minister, but could hear the sermon through the open windows. Dozens left the building because they could find no seats. Such a congregation must inspire any minister, and the pastor rose to the occasion by preaching a masterful sermon, which was eulogized by the hearers on their way homeward. Mr. Arthur Ranous, of Chicago, a famous singer, was present morning and evening and assisted in the musical service.

The prayer meetings are chiefly in the hands of the people. On February 5 the deacons had charge, and on the 12th the elders, with all visiting elders, will conduct the meeting. Later on the superintendents and Sunday School officers and teachers will take charge of the Wednesday evening service. The prayer meetings in this church are very interesting and helpful, with the manifest presence of the Holy Spirit.

Brother Garrison is doing a fine work in this important field, and his people are most loyal and nobly second his efforts. As the result of a stirring address and earnest appeal by the pastor, with an allegorical pageant to emphasize the urgent need, the collection for the Syrian and Armenian Relief Fund amounted to $840 from this congregation, which, I understand, is far ahead of any other church in town. Edward J. Young.

GEORGIA.

The Synod of Georgia has elected Rev. J. W. Stokes, of Donalsonville, stated clerk and treasurer to succeed Rev. J. G. Herndon, who has removed to South Carolina.

Augusta—Rev. Marvin M. McFerrin has been granted by the Green Street Presbyterian Church, which he serves as pastor, a leave of absence to be spent in Y. M. C. A. work overseas. His permanent address during this time will be 12 Rue d'Aguessear, Paris, France, Y. M. C. A., A. E. F.

Atlanta—North Avenue—Dr. Richard Orme Flinn, pastor of this church, who has been granted a six months' leave of absence to go on a special evangelistic mission for the Y. M. C. A. overseas, has received order to report to New York preparatory to sailing. However, due to pressing matters here, he will be detained until about the first of March, when he expects to sail.

A most interesting regional conference was held in Atlanta February 10-12 on Church Federation and After-the-War Problems, at which representative men from all over the Southeastern division gathered to discuss these vital questions. Mr. Fred B. Smith, of New York City, and Col. Raymond Robins were interesting speakers on the program. This is one of a number of conferences planned for at the convention in Atlantic City in December.

Committees from the five men's Bible classes of the church held two enthusiastic meetings during the last week, and are now organizing an Interlocking Club to promote mutual fellowship, personal interest in the church and those outside the church as well. It is believed that this club will be of great assistance in the church's work.

Dr. Flinn recently returned from Knoxville, Tenn., where he went to aid the Woman's Society of the First Presbyterian Church in the re-organization of their work.

The Missionary Committee of the Woman's Society was in charge of a most interesting all-day missionary meeting, February 17, at which time a new book on Foreign Missions was taken up and discussed.

Grace Titman,
Church Secretary.

Atlanta—Evangelistic Notes—Rev. R. F. Kirkpatrick, D.D., Chairman Sub-Committee on Evangelism. "Rev. Trigg A. M. Thomas, D.D., has just closed a remarkable meeting at Hannibal, Mo. The large auditorium was utterly unable to accommodate the crowds that came, and there were more than 200 conversions. Dr. Thomas has been overwhelmed with invitations to hold meetings, and churches desiring his services should correspond with him at once. His permanent address is 3203 Morrell Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

"Rev. W. H. Miley, D.D., one of the Assembly's Regional Evangelists, is now engaged in an extended campaign in Norfolk Presbytery.

"Rev. R. A. Brown, of Waycross, Ga., has accepted the committee's call to be a Regional Evangelist, and expects to enter upon his duties the first of April. He will labor in Arkansas and Oklahoma. Mr. Brown has had a large and successful pastorate in Waycross, and his people part with him with the greatest reluctance that he may enter this larger field of service.

"The Executive Committee at its February meeting heartily approved the recommendation of the Assembly's Stewardship Committee that the last weeks in March, following the financial drive, be devoted to a special evangelistic effort throughout the church, and ordered that a letter be sent to pastors and sessions urging them to plan for such a campaign in their respective churches. It was suggested that as far as practicable pastors arrange to hold their own meetings, but the committee invites correspondence with those who may desire the services of an evangelist. We have a splendid staff of three general, one regional, and more than eighty volunteer evangelists, and we shall be pleased to assist any church, however limited may be its resources, in securing the services of a suitable evangelist."

KENTUCKY.

Louisville—At a congregational meeting at the close of the morning service on February 2 the congregation of the Highland Presbyterian Church granted their pastor, Rev. T. M. Hawes, D.D., a year's leave of absence, six months or more to be taken beginning March 1, and the remainder a year or two hence. The first part of the leave is to be spent as follows: The month of March in Florida resting, April and May in New York attending lectures at Columbia University and the Bible Teachers' Training School, and the next three months in travel. The second period will cover a long planned trip to the Holy Land. The love and esteem in which Dr. Hawes is held by the people he serves was clearly shown on this occasion by the addresses of appreciation made by a number of the members.

The Presbytery of Louisville held an adjourned meeting February 10 at the Second Presbyterian Church, Louisville.

Rev. John R. Benika and Rev. S. S. Daughtry were received from the Presbyteries of Paducah and Atlanta.

Mr. Benika accepted the call extended him by the South Louisville Presbyterian Church and a commission consisting of Rev. D. M. Sweets, D.D., to preside; Rev. W. Y. Davis to preach the sermon; Rev. A. A. Higgins to charge the people, and Rev. C. H. Prather to charge the pastor, and Ruling Elder Bushrod Taylor was appointed to install him, Sunday, February 23, at 3 p. m.

Mr. Daughtry accepted the call of the Frankfort Presbyterian Church, and he will be installed at an early date by the following commission appointed by the Presbytery: Rev. Dunbar H. Ogden, D.D., to preside and preach the sermon; Rev. W. R. Anderson to charge the pastor; Rev. H. H. Sweets, D.D., to charge the people, and Ruling Elder D. A. McAfee.

At his request, Licentiate Joseph Bartlett was dismissed to the Presbytery of Kings Mountain.

The Anchorage Church was given permission to prosecute a call for pastoral services of Rev. F. A. Clark, of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.

In response to a request of certain members of the First Presbyterian Church, Louisville, for the reorganization of the Westminster Presbyterian Church, and to a request from the congregation of the First Church to be dismissed to the Presbytery of Louisville, U. S. A., the following resolutions were adopted by the Presbytery:

Whereas, The Presbytery of Louisville, U. S., has received a request from forty-four persons, the majority being members of the First Presbyterian Church, for the reorganization of the Westminster Church; and Whereas, the Presbytery has received a request from the First Presbyterian Church for dismission to the Presbytery of Louisville, U. S. A., in order to unite with the Warren Memorial Presbyterian Church: Be it Resolved:

(1) That in dealing with this question the Presbytery desires it to be fully understood that the difference in Assembly connection of the First and the Warren Memorial Churches is considered an incidental circumstance and is by no means to be allowed to determine the decision.

(2) That the Presbytery does not feel that it has sufficient information to decide this matter at this time.

(3) That a commission be appointed to confer and advise with the First Presbyterian Church concerning the above matters and to report its findings with recommendations to this Presbytery as promptly as possible.

The following commission was appointed: Rev. A. A. Higgins, chairman; Rev. C. N. Wharton, Rev. C. H. Prather, Rev. W. R. Anderson, Ruling Elder J. J. Davis.

Mr. Thomas Brewster, a member of the Second Church, Louisville, and a student of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Kentucky, was received under the care of the Presbytery as a candidate for the Gospel ministry.

The Presbytery adjourned to meet at the call of the moderator.

PEACE INSTITUTE, RALEIGH, N. C.

Peace Institute is continuing thus far in the session (mid-year ends February 16) the best year in the history of the school. The year has been a record breaker in attendance, in health, in college spirit, in class work.

As a result of the Christmas vacation Peace suffered an epidemic of grip or influenza. Our patients were taken sick January 6, and by January 17 our infirmary was empty with the exception of our only pneumonia case, detained longer through abundance of caution. There have been no patients of any kind in the infirmary since the last date. During the epidemic period we had fifty-seven patients. Of this number forty-five had influenza. A report was mailed every night to each parent with information of the daughter's condition. Sufficient help was obtained so that neither faculty nor students had to assist with the nursing. Students did assist in carrying trays.

A Students' Hand-book to be presented to each student by the Student Government Association and the Young Women's Christian Association is now in the press. The Student Government Association is the organization of all the students to develop an efficient system of student government among the students, to preserve the students' honor, and to enforce all the rules of the institute that do not fall within the province of the authorities of the college. An advisory board appointed by the president of the college, consisting of the dean and three other members of the faculty, with the president as chairman, has submitted to it all matters coming up before the council and must approve before action is taken by the council. The executive body of the association is the student council, and is composed of the following officers: President, Miss Mary Steele, Mt. Olive, N. C.; Senior Class President, Miss Lenoir Mercer, Elm City, N. C.; Senior Class Member, Miss Mary Reed Buchanan, Lexington, N. C.; Junior Class President, Miss Margaret Moore, Smitheld, N. C.; Student Representative, Miss Nellie Burgess, Old Trap, N. C. These compose the Executive Committee. Other Council members are the following: President Sophomore Class, Miss Laura Belle French, Statesville, N. C.; President Freshman Class, Miss Fannie Louise Murray, Durham, N. C.; President Specials, Miss Dorothy Aldermas, Wagram, N. C.; President Business Class, Miss Elizabeth Elliott, Thornwall, N. C.; Town Student Club, Miss Isabel Bowen, Raleigh, N. C.; President Y. W. C. A., Miss Isabel Faison, Goldsboro, N. C.; President Athletic Association, Miss Bennie Lee Upchurch, Raeford, N. C.; President Red Cross, Miss Grace McNinch, Charlotte, N. C.

The Seniors attended two weeks ago the Monday reception at the Governor's Mansion given by Mrs. Bickett in honor of the wives of the Legislators. The Juniors attended the next week the Monday reception at the Mansion. Members of Mrs. B. H. Griffin's Sunday School class were her guests Wednesday afternoon at a reception given to the wives of the Legislators and their friends at the Yarbrough Hotel.

A number of students have attended the afternoon sessions of the Legislature this week. They heard the discussions on the Educational bill.

Dr. Florence Meredith, Boston, Mass., delivered last week two lectures on Social Hygiene. She was a guest of the house two evenings for dinner.

A few weeks ago the students had a delightful and instructive Monday afternoon with Col. Fred Olds. They visited a number of the State buildings and also paid a visit to Governor Bickett.

Miss Graham was able to secure Billy Sunday's consent to speak to several women's colleges in Raleigh before he spoke in the Auditorium. Meredith College, St. Mary's School, the Third School and Peace Institute students filled the main auditorium and Sunday School room of the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Sunday spoke of the inspiration he received from his audience. He in turn inspired his hearers.

This coming week mid-term examinations will be held. All will be relieved when this season has passed.

DAVIDSON.

Junior speaking, supposedly scheduled always for February 22, but usually held at a somewhat later date, will take place March 7 and 8. The class is expected to speak in three sections, with about forty names on the entire program, Friday night, Saturday afternoon and Saturday night. The occasion is expected to be featured as usual by the presence of a goodly number of young ladies and other guests for whose entertainment there will be provided in addition to Junior oratory a concert by the Orchestra and Glee Club and a game of basketball.

It is agreeable news to all here—the announcement that Rev. Dr. Charles Myers, of Greensboro, has accepted an invitation to conduct a series of evangelistic services for the Y. M. C. A. next month. It is expected that Dr. Myers will be here for the 24th, 25th and 26th of March. He has spoken at Davidson several times, including the occasion of his baccalaureate last May, and has always more than pleased his audience.

Announcement is made that Dr. H. M. Marvin, class of '14, a prominent and honor student while here, and making a fine record at Harvard, during his medical course, has an appointment to go to Armenia for service in the medical relief work. He goes at once in company with another physician to take charge of a hospital with 100 beds.

The delay in getting the R. O. T. C. under way here this term has been so long that many on the campus were beginning to wonder if it would materialize at all as an institution, but it seems that in the immediate future the officer in charge will report and start things in motion.

President Martin and Dr. Arbuckle attended the Atlanta meeting of the first of the week that was concerned with the Inter-Church World Movement of North America. They are very much impressed with what they saw and heard and apparently believe that the churches are soon to enter upon a new era of activity and successful evangelism with social uplift and betterment an accompanying feature.

The baseball men are highly pleased with the outlook for a good team, with nine letter men on the campus as a nucleus for an interesting squad. Practice from now on depends simply on the weather as the time for it was called this week.

PRESBYTERIAN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY OF KENTUCKY, LOUISVILLE.

The week beginning February 9 was a very rich one for the faculty and students of the Seminary, as indeed for the Christian people of Louisville. On Tuesday and Wednesday, the 11th and 12th, Dr. Robert E. Speer, of New York, gave three lectures on the Gay Foundation at the Southern Baptist Seminary, the faculty and students of the Presbyterian Seminary, on courteous invitation of the Baptist Seminary, attending in a body. In his first address Dr. Speer spoke on "Our Debt to the Missionary Founders;" in his second, on "The Missionary Motive and Message for Today;" in the third, on "War Aims and Foreign Missions." It goes without saying that all three were masterly addresses.

On Wednesday afternoon, in the Second Presbyterian Church, one block from the Presbyterian Seminary, Capt. F. L. Slaymaker, of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, held a conference for men, and that evening delivered a popular lecture at a union prayer meeting on the general theme: "The Returning Soldiers and Their Training for Christian Service." Both meetings were deeply impressive.

On Thursday, with a noon fellowship luncheon in the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, the conferences of the

Story and Incident

The Perversity of Inanimate Things.

MARION MORTON turned sleepily in bed, half opened her eyes and looked at the clock. Then she was out with a spring.

"However could I have done it?" she exclaimed. "Quarter past eight! Three-quarters of an hour to dress and eat and get to Mrs. Barlow's. No time for a bath this morning. I'll get scolded as it is for being late; she's so particular. Oh dear, I hate to hurry."

She lighted the gas stove in her sitting room and put the water and the coffee on to boil while she dressed.

"I never overslept like that before," she said nervously, searching for more hairpins. "I suppose I did read too late last night, but how could I stop an exciting book like that till I finished it? Oh, I know I have more hairpins somewhere, but these will have to do."

She finished her hair and snatched up her dress. It caught on something on the chair and Marion gave it an impatient pull. It came that time—with a long tear down the side.

"How stupid!" she fretted. "It's the best-looking one I have, and a badly dressed dressmaker isn't a good advertisement."

She threw another dress quickly over her head as she went to see if the coffee was boiling. Two hooks caught her hair and pulled out a long lock.

Marion set her teeth as she repaired the damage to her hair and buttoned her dress. The water was boiling for her egg—there was only one in the cupboard—and she reached for it hastily. Through her fingers it slipped and smashed on the floor.

"The perversity of inanimate things!" she muttered as she mussily gathered up the broken egg. "There isn't another and I've no time for toast. And if I haven't buttoned up my dress wrong from top to bottom!"

She made that right and drank her coffee standing, with a piece of dry bread to accompany it. It was quarter of nine by this time, and the car-ride to Mrs. Barlow's house took quite fifteen minutes.

"I can't make my bed or tidy up," she thought, as she jabbed in her hatpins and threw her thimble, scissors, needles and thread into her bag. "It's a horrid way to leave an apartment, but it can't be helped this time. How I do hate to hurry!"

With a pucker between her eyes she closed her door, remembered she had no carfare, unlocked and closed it again and ran downstairs, her usual happy temper quite on edge. When she reached the street corner her car was gliding out of sight. There would not be another for half an hour.

"There's nothing for it but to walk," she said doggedly, "and it's hot enough to bake a goose as she goes."

It was quarter past nine when Marion rang Mrs. Barlow's door-bell. Mrs. Barlow was in the hall.

"Good morning, Miss Morton," she said; "I'd begun to fear you were going to fail me. I have an appointment at ten, so I will come right upstairs and let you fit me; you'll have to hurry a little, for I must dress afterward."

Marion pulled off her gloves and took out her hatpins and made ready to pin the waist lining on Mrs. Barlow. Her unsteady hands snipped the lady's neck with the scissors, stuck pins into her arms, and did not bring the lining anywhere near a fit.

"Could you hurry a little?" Mrs. Barlow urged.

Marion hurried and spoiled the lining entirely. Mrs. Barlow, annoyed, went off to dress, leaving her seamstress almost in tears. She had no stories this morning for little Irma Barlow, who was one of her most faithful hangers-on. The child forsook her soon, and Marion was left alone with her work.

At 12 o'clock Mrs. Barlow rushed into the room. "Did I leave my diamond ring here?" she exclaimed. "I know I had it on when I came in to be fitted."

Marion dropped her work and began to search, but no ring was forthcoming. Mrs. Barlow went to her room to look and came back without it.

"It must be here somewhere," she insisted, "for I missed the ring the minute I set foot in the automobile and I'd put my gloves on in my room, so it couldn't have dropped in the street. It's a very valuable stone; I must find it."

She fussed and rummaged in an aimless search until luncheon was announced. Marion's lunch was brought to her. She was faint from her slight breakfast and flurried morning and was glad to see something to eat.

"Sure, Mrs. Barlow's in a great taking," said the maid that set down the tray. "I'm sorry for you, Miss Morton. I'm glad it wasn't in my room that the ring was lost."

"What do you mean?" Marion demanded.

"When a lady loses anything she does not blame her own carelessness; she's always ready enough to lay it on any maid or seamstress that's about."

"She'd suspect them of stealing?" asked Marion, wide-eyed.

"Well, now, a three-hundred-dollar ring might be a temptation, and she doesn't stop to think our morals may be as good as hers."

The maid went downstairs again and Marion, unmindful of her lunch, began a feverish search through the room.

"It's cruel," she said. "If Mrs. Barlow should think I took her ring she could ruin my trade. It's a horrible day. Everything has gone wrong, and this is tragedy. Whatever can I do?"

She came back exhausted to her chair. As she sat down

New Era Movement began, the sessions running through Friday. The moderator of the Northern General Assembly, Dr. J. Frank Smith, of Dallas, Texas, and a number of other speakers of nationwide fame, were heard with keenest interest and delight.

Prof. Henry E. Dosker, of the Seminary faculty, is just finishing his six lectures to be delivered at Princeton Theological Seminary, on the Stone Foundation, March 10 to 15. The general subject will be "The Anabaptists."

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, RICHMOND.

In his address to the students in the Seminary Chapel, Billy Sunday spoke like a machine gun. He is the fastest talker ever heard in Richmond. Going at his high speed he covered in forty-five minutes a great number of topics, such as texts and subjects of sermons, methods of preparation, cultivation of a popular vocabulary, the preacher's religious experience, the necessity of prayer, and the like, giving the men much shrewd counsel. There was nothing really new to them in what he said, but he said it as only Billy Sunday can. The body of the meal was staple food, but it was seasoned to the nth degree with tobasco sauce. The students were delighted with him and he with them. He commented with enthusiasm also on the beautiful chapel and the perfect acoustics. The great auditorium in which he speaks daily is a very trying one. He has not a good voice, and though he manages to make himself heard there, it is only by great effort. Overflowing crowds continue to attend the services. So great is the interest that it has been decided to extend the meetings a week beyond the period at first fixed, and they will continue until March 2. At the meeting in the Seminary chapel Mr. Rodeheaver also spoke, telling the men of his work among the soldiers in France, and singing two solos. He is frequently on the Seminary campus and is a general favorite.

Marriages and Deaths

Deaths.

Abernethy—At her home in Mecklenburg County, January 14, 1919, Mrs. Ola Beaty, wife of Dr. Walker I. Abernethy. She was buried at Hopewell, and with her the infant. This was a very young life and it was a very short period of happy and auspicious married life, and a few months as a member of Hopewell Church, but long enough to make all who knew her and her home, to hope that so useful and cheerful a woman might long be spared to exercise a good and helpful influence in the church and community.

Abernethy—At the Presbyterian Hospital, Charlotte, N. C., February 1, 1919, Margaret Caldwell, daughter of Dr. J. S. and Mrs. Hattie Caldwell Abernethy, age eleven years. She was the joy and hope of the home and an unusually intelligent and ambitious child. She gave her heart to Christ and she loved His service. The memory of her sayings and acts interpret the brief life and tell us that she was only lent to earth and the jewel will be safe and shine still brighter in the keeping of Him whose home is not made with hands and is eternal.

IN MEMORIAM.

Rev. Thomas Luther Haman, D.D.

The home of Stratford and Mary Elizabeth Haman was near Lebanon Church, Hinds County, Mississippi.

On December 7, 1846, A. D., there came into this home a new immortality, which new-born child was to bear the name of Thomas Luther. On that glad day in the country cottage the lines of Sir Wm. Jones might well have been spoken in prophetic voice to the infant son:

"When thou wast born, a naked, helpless child,
Thou only wept while all around thee smiled.
So live, that sinking in thy last long sleep,
Calm thou may'st smile when all around thee weep."

The years of this boyhood were spent on his father's farm in one of the best country communities of the county and State, a community peopled by the Scotch-Irish who had worked their way westward from the Carolinas.

This being long before the day that the public school had appeared in the land, the subject of this sketch took his grammar school studies in a private school near his father's home.

By the time he had reached the age of early adolescence the convulsive shock, known in history as the Civil War, had come and rent the new Republic of the West in twain. A boy of fourteen, his heart was fired with burning patriotism, when he saw his invaded land gloriously triumphing in the deadly and unequal contest. Before he was sixteen he quietly left his home, fearing that he might not have the privilege of being a volunteer, and joined "Harvey's Scouts," whose virtue and valor were even then lending luster to our historic annals. He was only a child in years and small for his age, yet he measured up to the full stature of that superb manhood which has and ever must make the name "Confederate Soldier" the synonym of patriotism, courage and devotion to duty. The "Baby" Scout, as he was fondly called, won the trust and love of commander and comrade alike and he carried with him their confidence and affection all the days of his life.

When the star of the Confederacy had sunk into eternal night and the flag he loved was furled forever he found his way back through the confusion and desolation of his beloved land to the old home. The farm was destitute of laborers, the father had no hand to help. Yet he promised his son if he would help make the crop to meet the necessities of life that then he should have not only his permission but help to go to college. The son having had the fiber of his manhood toughened and the powers of his soul tested in the school of war, turned from the experiences of the field of battle to seek learning in the schools.

In the fall of 1866 he entered the University of Mississippi at Oxford, and maintained himself there in large measure through his own efforts. The same integrity of character, devotion to duty, fidelity in service which had marked him as a soldier characterized him as a student.

Having successfully completed the course, he graduated from the University in 1870, in a class that was destined to fill a large place in the life of the State and the Church. Among the members of this class were Hon. W. C. Wells, Dr. C. W. Grafton and Bishop Charles B. Galloway. All these were close and lifelong friends, Dr. Haman being the best man at the marriage of Bishop Galloway.

Dr. Haman took his theological course at Columbia Seminary, graduating therefrom in May, 1873.

He accepted a call to the little home mission church at Greenwood, Miss., which was then a very small Delta town. He was ordained by Central Mississippi Presbytery and installed pastor of the Greenwood Church in October, 1873. From 1875 to 1877 he served the Yazoo City Church, resigning from this charge on account of failing health.

After a short rest he accepted a unanimous call to the Shangalo, Hopewell and Salem Churches, and here for well nigh forty-one years, in his quiet, unobtrusive way, he wrought, as preacher, pastor, citizen and friend, the life work, until Saturday evening, November 2, 1918. It was then, while arranging, as was his custom, for the Sabbath morning worship, that he was suddenly and violently stricken. After a few hours of intense suffering, having called the members of his family that were at home about his bedside, and having spoken to them a few broken words, the Master called him. In the early morning of November 3, 1918, he slipped away into the Sabbath of rest that remaineth for the people of God, leaving the legacy of a spotless name to his family, his church and his friends.

On the Tuesday following, when all the children had gathered around the mother, they followed the silent form down from the manse to the old church to which they had together gone so often in other days. When the church had been reached and I looked from the pulpit where he had been wont to stand all these years and saw the great concourse of young and old, every heart subdued with the hallowed associations of the past and tender offices of the hour, I thought it might be said of him, as Motley said of William the Silent:

"As long as he lived he was the guiding star of a whole brave people, and when he died the little children cried in the streets." From the church they carried him to the hill which overlooks the village and tenderly laid him to rest in the midst of the people who loved him, to await the resurrection of the just. Then the company silently wended their way back to their homes, mourning most of all that they would see the face of the soldier, citizen, prosbyter, preacher, friend no more.

While a short biographical sketch cannot be an adequate memorial of one so worthy, yet a word of commendation or expression of appreciation or the making known the sense of loss we feel may accentuate the worth of the life which was given to his generation in the name of his Master, prolong the savor of his influence and inspire some one to emulate that trust, humility, conviction, devotion and sacrifice. This much at least we owe—

To his family, "sweet solace of his latter days."

To the congregations, which for two-score years were blessed by him as pastor, and which ever honored, trusted and loved him.

To the Home Mission Cause, in which he yielded up his life, as director and servant, often in pain and weariness of body, but ever in joyous and efficient devotion.

To the French Camp Schools, of which he was a founder, and to which he was a wise counsellor and sacrificial friend.

THE "FLU" IS BAD.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl ten years old and am in the fourth grade at school. My teacher's name is Miss Williamson and I like her fine. I go to Sunday School every Sunday I can, and have recited the Child's Catechism. I have not had the "flu" yet and hope I won't, as it seems to hurt the folks that have had it around here real bad. For my pets I have a pigeon named "Polly," a dog named "Tim" and about ten guineas. As my letter is getting rather long, guess I had better close for this time. Please print my letter as I want to surprise my mother and father.

Your little friend,

ANSWERS THE QUESTIONS.

Dear Standard:

There were some questions in last week's paper. I want to try to answer them. No. 1, Who was the most patient man? Answer: Job. No. 2, Where did Noah hit the first nail in the ark? Answer: On the head. No. 3, What great man of God in Bible times made a mistake of getting drunk? Answer: Noah. Santa Claus brought me a doll, two story books, two handkerchiefs and several other things. Love to all the little Standard readers.

HER FIRST LETTER.

Dear Standard:

I will write my first letter. We take your nice paper. I enjoy reading the nice stories in it. I am eleven years old. I am in the sixth grade. Miss Audrey is my teacher till dinner, then I have Miss Temptent. I like them fine. I go to Sunday School every Sunday I can. I haven't been in two Sundays because we have the "flu" here. I hope my letter will not reach the waste can as I

HE HIT THE NAIL.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy twelve years old. I go to the Elmira Presbyterian Church. My teacher died with the "flu," so our class hasn't any one yet. I haven't any pets but I've a wheel, and papa has a long sword that my great grandpa used in the Civil War. I hope this wont reach the waste basket. I will close by answering Flora McCormic's riddle: Where did Noah hit the first nail in the ark? He hit it on the head.

SURPRISE FOR GRANDDADDY.

Dear Standard:

I am a little Kenly girl. We have a new brick church. Rev. C. E. Clark is our pastor; everybody likes him. I am in the fourth grade at school; Miss Eunice Jerome is my teacher; I think she is fine. I want to surprise my granddaddy.

Your little friend,

"BUTTER-BALL."

Dear Standard:

I have a cat and dog; my cat's name is Butter-Ball and my dog's name is Don. I had a merry Christmas and Santa Claus brought me a wheel and brought George, my brother, a toy train and candy and nuts. I hope this letter wont go to the trash barrel.

Some men yearn for rest who have never been tired. Heaven will be no resting place for the man who has been a slacker in the vineyard of the Lord.

helpmeet whom God gave him and who has walked hand and hand with him down the way of the years, enriching his heart with the wealth of her affection, her home with gentleness and love and the church with her abounding sympathy and faith. She yet abides as a benediction to her home and the church.

THE RED-HEADED BOY.

"There's that awful red-headed boy in a fight!" The sharp voice belonged to the sharp-faced teacher of the fifth grade, who happened to be on duty at the noon recess. She hurried to the struggling boys, and with the assistance of another teacher managed to pull them apart.

"Young man," she addressed the owner of the red hair, "this is not the first fight you've had on these grounds, but I certainly hope it will be the last." She marched the panting boys to the principal's office.

In the meantime, a red head had appeared at an upstairs window; one glance from a pair of intelligent brown eyes took in the situation, and the head disappeared.

"Yes, I saw him, with my own eyes, rush at the other boy, grab him by the collar and fling him down!" The sharp voice was pitched so as to enter the principal's ear, and penetrate to his rather kind heart, arousing it to execute a righteous judgment on the red-headed culprit.

"Be seated, boys. What grade are you in?" The red-headed boy looked up.

"Indeed, I'm sorry to say he is still in mine!" The sharp voice had emphasized "still."

"Did you attack this boy first?"

"With my hands, yes, sir."

"Why do you say 'with your hands'?"

"Because he attacked me first, with his tongue."

The principal looked at the other boy, who grinned and flushed.

There was a tap on the door. "Come in!" called the principal; and a tall young woman with red hair and brown eyes entered. She looked sympathetically into the eyes of both boys, causing them both to blush with shame.

The red-headed boy blushed, because he remembered the fight he had the previous year; and how this red-headed teacher from another grade had walked all the way home with him; and how she had told him that God had made both their heads red; how he had numbered each of those red hairs; how that it did not first happen to be red, but that God had permitted it to be that color; and that it was wrong to fight about it, because it was like reproaching his heavenly Father for making it red.

Dr. Haman's name is a household word in all the churches of the Presbytery. He was the oldest member of the Presbytery in years of service. All his brethren delighted to do him honor. There was none among us more beloved.

The feelings of the writer for him was something more than admiration or esteem. He has long trusted his judgment and confided in his friendship. To have known him was a privilege, to have him regard you as a friend was an honor.

"Have a seat, Miss McClain; I'm glad you have come. Now," to the black drooping head, "how did you attack him first with your tongue?"

Both boys' faces got redder. After an embarrassing silence, the red head was thrown back, and a pair of honest blue eyes looked at the principal.

"He don't want to tell you, because Miss McClain is here. Please, Miss McClain, go out! then you can come back when we holler 'Come.'"

The blue eyes looked beseechingly into the brown ones. The principal raised his eyebrows; the thin lips of the sharp-faced teacher curled contemptuously; Miss McClain laughed merrily.

"Excuse me, professor; but perhaps you don't understand. Why, it's something about red heads. You see Pat is so sensitive on the subject, that he can't realize that I'm not at all so. Don't mind me, Ernest, just speak the truth," but the boy only looked more ashamed of himself.

Miss McClain smiled knowingly at the principal. "He called him a red-headed, freckled-faced Irishman, I expect. Was that it, Pat?"

"Ask him." Pat nodded his red head toward Ernest's black one.

Ernest raised his black eyes, full of tears of shame, to his teacher's intellectual face; and the look in her eyes brought him to his feet.

"Professor," he stammered. "I—that's exactly what I said, only—that wasn't all. I said that his mother nearly whipped him last night because she saw a light through the transom and thought he was still reading after she had told him to put out his light and go to bed, but she found it was only the light from his head. I—I didn't know how low down it was, until—until Miss McClain came in."

Miss McClain's eyes rewarded him. She was proud of her pupil.

Pat was on his feet before Ernest had finished.

"It was my fault! I promised Miss McClain last year that I would stop and spell 'God made it red,' before I fought about it; and I forgot today; but it is the first red-headed fight I've had since I promised her," and they all believed it.

The principal rose and shook hands with the boys.

"Now shake hands with each other!—that's right. Pat, my boy, I believe this is to be your last fight on account of your hair. Now, I want you to study your hardest, so I can promote you to Miss McClain's room. I think there you would soon learn to appreciate red hair."

Pat Dillon was promoted at Christmas, and from the day he entered Miss McClain's room—and looked into her eyes—he became a different boy. He was from the beginning her messenger, because, when she looked up to select some one, a pair of eager blue eyes begged to be of service.

The principal watched with interest the developing of the red-headed boy, by the tactful, intelligent, red-headed teacher.

"Miss McClain has the best-behaved grade in school. I've taught it twice," declared one senior to another whom she her elbow struck the work basket set too near the edge of the table and sent its contents rolling over the floor.

"That's the last straw," she said in despair. "I might just as well give up and go home, for everything's bound to go wrong today. I can't go, though, till Mrs. Barlow finds her ring, for she'll think I'm going off with it. O dear! Oh dear! It's a labyrinth that I can't get out of. I'm so upset that I shall simply scream if I have to get down and grovel round for all those spools. If I never before believed in the perversity of inanimate things, I'm convinced now."

She looked resentfully for a moment at the scattered spools and tapes and buttons, and then she slid reluctantly to her knees to collect them.

On her knees she paused. "I haven't been here before today," she thought with a little laugh. "I was too late to pray this morning or to look into my Bible. Maybe that's why things have gone wrong. And I needn't have been late if I hadn't read so long last night. I suppose it's intemperate for a working girl to read till one o'clock; it's turning a legitimate pleasure and recreation into a vice. Maybe it isn't too late to do a little praying now."

She leaned her head against the table and the room for a few moments was very quiet. Then, laughing again, she began to pick up buttons.

"The idea of a girl brought up by my mother believing that 'inanimate things' can make inharmony! Don't I know as well as Saint Paul did that the things that are seen are temporal and the unseen are eternal? And the eternal things are the spiritual ones that belong in the kingdom of heaven. When I stay there I always find harmony. It's only when I let hurry and fretfulness into my thoughts that these 'inanimate things' can pester me. 'The law of the Lord is perfect,' and I've been silly enough to believe all this morning in a law of evil, when I know as well as I know my own name that evil is always overcome by good. There is a way out of this mess. That 'law of the Lord' can take care even of things like the ring."

She put the articles into the basket and sat down contentedly to her lunch. Now that the worryment was gone from her mind she tried to ponder connectedly as to the whereabouts of the ring.

"It almost seems as if I'd seen it somewhere," she thought.

Irma, straight from her lunch, pattered upstairs again and peeped in at Marion.

"Can you tell me a story now?" she asked.

"Now I can," laughed Marion. "Was I cross before? Wait till I find my thimble. I haven't had it all the morning; I've been sewing with one from the basket."

"Yours is pretty with green stones in it," Irma said. "I know where it is. I played with it and hung it on a hatpin that stuck in the cushion in the basket."

"Is isn't there now," answered Marion, "for I tipped over the basket and everything fell out. The thimble must have rolled away."

"I'll find it," offered Irma, throwing herself on the floor.

"Irma, what are you doing?" demanded her mother from the doorway. "You'll ruin your frock. Get up."

"I'm finding Miss Morton's thimble. I see it—over under that bureau."

The thimble was back against the wall. Irma could reach it only by stretching her utmost.

"Here it is!" she cried, coming to her feet. "It's got a collar on!"

She laid the thimble in Marion's hand, and without a word Marion stretched it out to Mrs. Barlow. The lost ring was slipped over the thimble as firmly as if it were on a finger.

Mrs. Barlow, with a sheepish smile, took her ring. "I remember now," she said. "The ring is loose for me, and when I came in to be fitted I saw the thimble hanging on a hatpin in the basket and I slipped the ring over it. I never should have thought of it again."

"I'm glad it's found," said Marion.

"So am I," and moved by an impulse toward apology she would not have liked to confess to Marion, she suddenly kissed her. "You don't look quite up to mark today, Miss Morton. Suppose we don't sew any more. I'm going out into the country in the car and perhaps you'd like to come with me for the ride. I'll leave you at your home afterward."

"Oh, how lovely!" Marion said gratefully. What a beautiful day it was turning out!

She smiled at herself in the mirror as she put in carefully the hatpins she had rammed into place in the morning.

"Perhaps now, Marion Morton," she thought, "you are convinced forever that the 'law of the Lord is perfect,' and that if there is any law of perversity it isn't in inanimate things, but in our own fretful minds when we wander out of the kingdom of heaven."—Helen Ward Banks, in Christian Union Herald.

met in the hall, on her way to fill Miss McClain's vacant seat.

"I'm certainly glad to hear it, for I'm awfully nervous about teaching boys and girls of from ten to thirteen; they are simply at an abominable age! I'm not surprised that she has these violent headaches to come on suddenly."

"Don't you worry. If you want any information, just ask that red-headed boy; he's a treasure."

The nervous senior found the report to be true, and everything had gone on smoothly until the arithmetic class was called, and eight pupils were at the board, when suddenly the fire alarm rang.

"The fire drill!" exclaimed the senior, excitedly.

"Fire, fire, fire!" shouted a voice in the street below.

The senior sprang from her seat and rushed from the platform. Pat raced down the aisle, caught her in his arms, and hurried her back to Miss McClain's desk.

Interest in Pat's maneuvers had saved the grade from panic.

Holding the struggling, half-hysterical senior, Pat gave the necessary number of sharp, commanding taps. The grade responded mechanically; but when the little girl who led the line looked into the smoky hall, and saw white-faced teachers struggling desperately to control themselves, and the crooked lines of crying girls and excited boys, she hesitated.

"Ernest, lead the line!" commanded Pat, "and every one hold on to the one in front!"

From the foot of the stairs the principal saw Miss McClain's grade holding their lawful place next the wall. A line too compact to be broken, they came on past him, and in their rear came a red-headed boy, dragging an unconscious senior.

In the morning paper was the principal's account of how Pat Dillon, in the absence of his teacher, had preserved the honor of the sixth grade. Miss McClain read it, and was proud of her red-headed boy.—Christian Instructor.

LINCOLN'S STRONGEST ATTRIBUTE.

The strongest attribute of Lincoln was his power of self-control. When jealousies in the army bred a popular clamor against Grant, while the latter was winning famous victories in the Southwest, Lincoln listened to no word of scandal and, by his silence, rebuked the defamers of the general who afterwards became the admiration of the world. When, in the fevered tumult of passion, an angry North seemed to voice a general demand for the infliction of the death penalty upon Jefferson Davis, Lincoln listened in silence and waited for reason to resume its sway. He was always looking over the heads of the crowd; he was always listening to the still small voice that echoed in the distance, far away from the roar of vehement denunciation.—Ex.

The Young Women's Christian Association is augmenting its activities in housing girls who are engaged in government work in Washington. Hundreds of these girls were victims of the flu. They were taken to hospitals, and when the day of their discharge came there was no place for them to go, except the uncomfortable little room in a boarding house, shared, perhaps, with several other girls. The Young Women's Christian Association came to their rescue by adding a Convalescents' Ward to its Home at Rockville, thirteen miles out from the city. Here the girl is taken and nursed back to health, the only expense being the cost of her meals. As she is paying for a room in the city, it would be too great a tax for her to pay for a room in the Home, too, and this is given her. The Home is located ideally for this purpose, and girls, under the care given them, make a quick recovery.

THE SIN OF IMPURITY.

When God created man in His own image He gave him powers in a finite measure which He Himself possessed in an infinite degree. Among those most sacred was the power to be united with him in calling into existence immortal beings, souls which would never cease to exist. With this gift He associated the greatest honor and the greatest joy and the greatest purity. The desecration of this power He has followed with the most terrible earthly punishment ever visited upon any sin. In the Ten Commandments He makes special provision to forbid it. Throughout the Scriptures it is painted in the most horrible and ugly colors. God has also planted in man a measure of instinct which tends to warn and protect him from it. Notwithstanding all this, sin of impurity has dogged the human race through all its history. Beside being the cause of untold and indescribable and unmentionable misery, it is the sin which has eventually overthrown empires and civilizations. From all other sins there is hope of a nation's, a people's recovery. But when a people or a civilization passes a certain point in this sin, there is no salvation for them; they must go down and out like the Antediluvians, the people of Sodom and Gomorrah, the Greeks and Romans. This sin and crime reaches its most terrible developments among the civilized rather than the savage. Savages are rarely destroyed by it. The civilized perish often.

The events of the recent war revealed the fact that this sin had reached an alarming extent and that the safety of our civilization was threatened. The necessary tests and requirements for the soldier's life revealed the extent to which the evil had gone. During the war the Government used every precaution to check the evil. The tempters were punished and prohibited from proximity to all places where soldiers were located. Violation of the law was severely punished. Since the war, the Federal Government has maintained its diligence. Every means has been used to arouse the people to a due sense of the peril. Every patriot should help obliterate this foul crime, and use every means to oppose and destroy it. When prohibition is secured, this is the next evil to be destroyed, and the attack should be united, vigorous and wise. One of the strongest defenses against this sin is the modesty with which God endued man. When modesty is destroyed, the floodgates of this evil fly open. It cannot therefore be handled promiscuously. Great evil has been done by putting it into the hands of immature or indiscrete persons. In spasms of virtue it has been committed into the care of youth, with great mischief. The proper parties to deal with it are parents, physicians, courts, and other civil and police officers, backed up by public opinion.—Presbyterian.

WHAT WAS HE?

The old caretaker of an Episcopal church sat on a tomb in the cemetery and dismissed as trivial certain changes in the ritual.

"The good old creed keeps the same for all," said he. "Look at me here. I used to be the janitor. The new parson called me the sextant. Dr. Thirdly gave me the name of virgin. And the young man we've got now says I'm the sacrifice."—Ex.

The Master's rule;
I can not always do the tasks he gives
In life's hard school;

'Thy will be done.'

Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, J. R. Simon of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. All of these diseases are probably due in whole or in part to imperfect digestion or imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection, Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder Troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, will give a permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began to use Shivar Spring Water and in a short time was entirely relieved.

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement."

If you suffer from Rheumatism, or from any curable disease, accept the guaranteed offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the GOVERNMENT DENOUNCES CASHING IN WAR SAVINGS STAMPS.

The Government is denouncing the practice of cashing in War Savings Stamps when there is not the utmost need. If this is to continue, says the official bulletin of the Government, it will not only make poor people poorer but will defeat the purpose of the Government in its efforts to raise the war debt of the nation without further taxing the people.

Unfortunate for North Carolina, many of her citizens have been reported as cashing in their stamps when, according to their word, they did not need the money for the necessities of life. One North Carolina postmaster writes: "Men who are able to hold them come and demand a redemption of their stamps, four and five hundred dollars' worth at a time. One man who pledged to buy twenty stamps bought ten dollars' worth a few days ago and immediately gave notice for their redemption ten days later. As soon as I paid him he then bought ten dollars' worth of stamps more and immediately demanded his pledge card claiming that he had redeemed his pledge."

The Government is advising the owners of stamps to hold on to their securities to the date of their maturity. It urges that they save and economize to meet the needs of the day in order that their stamps may draw their full rate of interest and that the Government may use this money in meeting the heavy debts incurred by the war.

Everything that the Young Women's Christian Association is doing for white women, it is also doing for colored women. It is among the first of all organizations to recognize the valuable contributions the colored race made toward winning the war, and is making in time of peace to industry.

THE HALLMARK STORE

THE LAST DISHONOR.

Britain hated the U-boats, which were simply pirates; but there was one of the German submarines, the U-9, which, so far as known, was not a pirate. This boat had sunk three British cruisers, but it had done so in fair fight with ships of war, and when the list of U-boats to be surrendered to Britain was made out this U-boat was exempted. As a tribute to the valor of a brave foe Admiral Beatty agreed that Germany should retain this boat. But when the long line of U-boats surrendered to the British fleet the U-9 was amongst the number. The German Government had agreed to give the crew of each U-boat $125 if they delivered their boats safely to Britain, and the crew of U-9 insisted on earning their $125, and so the U-9 hauled down its flag, not because Britain demanded it, but that its crew might pocket a beggarly $125. The Cologne "Volks Zeitung" tells the amazing story and says: "Can it really be true? Many a tear would flow in the German Fatherland. So everything is lost, including honor. We could not then sink lower in the estimation of the world. It is impossible." And yet this is the nation which only four short years ago determined to conquer the world, and which not twelve months ago proudly boasted that they would defend the Fatherland "to the last man." "How are the mighty fallen!"—Christian Guardian.

THE PROGRESSIVE PROGRAM

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH in the UNITED STATES

“Neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own.”---Acts 4:32.

The FIRST LESSON the Early Church Learned

Was that what they had---their possessions---must be consecrated to God

Jesus commended only one person about money and that was the widow who gave all.

Jesus told the rich young ruler that the one thing he lacked was to give all---consecrate his wealth.

Jesus taught by the parable of the talents that all is the Lord's, and that He would require an accounting of every penny when He comes to judge.

Jesus taught by the parable of the pounds that we are the possessors of nothing, that whatever we have is God's and that He gives to whom He will.

The Lord called for all these early Christians had, they heard the call,—and gave freely, gladly, sacrificially.

The Lord is calling for a great deal more of our money than we are giving.

Will we hear the call as did those early Christians?

THE MOTHERLESS CHILD.

We have just received a folder from the Economy Home, for the motherless child, Kings Creek, S. C., setting forth the plans of a campaign to raise $25,000 for the purpose of enlarging the Home. The Home was chartered last fall by the State of South Carolina as an eleemosynary institution, the trustees having purchased the Piedmont Springs property, not far southwest of Kings Mountain Battle Ground, N. C., two miles east of Kings Creek, S. C. They secured Rev. J. H. Spaulding as general manager.

Mr. Spaulding has been conducting a private home of this kind at Patterson Springs, N. C. He claims the distinction of being the first man in the Carolinas to start a home for the motherless child.

We all agree with him in saying that such a home is greatly needed just now. He says that he has applications from West Virginia to Georgia, and that his greatest need is more room. They have their own electric light plant, but only six cottages.

Mr. Spaulding asked us to say to our readers that already eleven banks together with a number of good business men are co-operating in this campaign. It will be appreciated by the trustees and friends of the home if some of our readers will assist in this great work.

There are one thousand women in Washington who live in other women's homes. Some are forced to live, six or seven, in one room. The Young Women's Christian Association is furnishing homes for hundreds of these girls at a nominal price.

BARIUM ROCK WATER RELIEVES WEAK AND NERVOUS PEOPLE.

Barium Rock Water is being prescribed by many physicians in the treatment of nervous debility and as a tonic and flesh-builder. They also recommend it in cases of indigestion, dyspepsia, rheumatism, gout, eczema and diseases arising from uric acid poisoning and for disorders of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

Mr. J. W. McCoy, of Charlotte, N. C., writes: "I had a violent case of typhoid fever and for three years was a nervous wreck. I was totally unfit for any kind of business. I suffered continually from my stomach. My improvement began with the use of Barium Rock Water and I was entirely cured."

If you are weak and nervous, if you suffer from melancholia, hysteria or are afflicted with any of the above diseases, send $2.00 for ten gallons. If it fails to relieve your case, we will refund your $2.00. It is understood that the empty demijohns are to be returned prepaid. Address Barium Springs Co., Box E-21, Barium Springs, N. C.

HOW THE BIBLE MADE AMERICA.

When Hamilton Wright Mabie lectured to the Japanese on American Ideals, he gave his non-Christian hearers this missionary message concerning the secret of American national character as its foundations were laid in the seventeenth century. Of the founders of New England he said:

"Separated as they were from Europe in one of its most brilliant periods of literary expression, they brought with them a heritage of great memories, of heroic histories, of those creations of the imagination which reveal the genius of a race; they were inspired by religious or political convictions deep and vital enough to send them in voluntary exile; or they were driven by the love of adventure to brave all manner of perils on an unexplored continent. They were not, therefore, a company of materialists bent on trade or plunder, who found in trade or conquest an adequate expression of this spirit. For most part they were men and women of exceptional energy, and the spiritual qualities they brought with them had already found expression in literature as well as in action.

"Moreover, they had one classic of the greatest vitalizing power with them. The sixty-six books of history, prophecy, lyric poetry, symbolic fiction, narrative and biography which are bound together in the English Bible had been translated with wonderful skill at the very moment when the English language was a fountain of fresh and vital speech, and had passed into the hands of the English people. Published four years after the founding of Jamestown, this body of literature, which English-speaking peoples call 'The Book,' passed into the hands of people to whom no other book had reached, became so embodied in the English language that it seems an integral part of that language, and was so thoroughly absorbed by the people as a whole that it has largely shaped ethical, political, and social organizations and life wherever the English language is spoken."

IN THE DARNING BASKET.

Mothers who have a family to mend for will find this a very useful hint. Buy a length of fine black and also some white net. Keep it in the workbasket for mending large holes. A big darn in a stocking or in a little pair of woollen combinations is unsightly, but not if done as directed. Cut a piece of net, black net for dark-colored materials and black stockings, white for light-colored garments. The piece should be bigger than the hole to be covered—that is, overlapping it about an inch all round. Tack it in position, then darn in and out of the meshes of the net. You will now have a neat darn which looks almost as if woven. Another advantage is that these net darns last longer than do those minus the net foundation.—Alton (Canada) Free Press.

IT WAS LINCOLN.

In the autumn of 1830 a traveling book peddler, who afterward became a successful publisher and the head of a firm whose name is well known in the United States, came to the door of a log cabin on a farm in eastern Illinois, and asked for the courtesy of a night's lodging. There was no inn near. The good wife was hospitable but perplexed, "For," said she, "we can feed your beast, but we can't lodge you, unless you are willing to sleep with the hired man."

"Let's have a look at him first," said the peddler.

The woman pointed to the side of the house, where a lank, six-foot man, in ragged but clean clothes, was stretched on the grass, reading a book.

"He'll do," said the stranger. "A man who reads a book as hard as that fellow seems to, has got too much else to think of besides my watch or small change."

The hired man was Abraham Lincoln; and when he was President the two men met in Washington and laughed together over the story of their earlier rencontre. — Northwestern Christian Advocate.

SHE SAVED 200 CHICKS.

Mrs. G. Hancock, Sturgis, Ky., writes: "I hatched 200 chicks and didn't lose a single one with White Diarrhoea. I give Ready Relief the praise." Mrs. H. L. Sutton, of Ramona, Kas., writes: "My chicks were dying 20 and 30 a day. I got two packages of Ready Relief and now I don't lose any."

You can get the same wonderful results. Reefer's Ready Relief put in your baby chicks' first drinking water will help save them from the dreadful White Diarrhoea plague. This remedy is the discovery of a famous scientist. Send $1 today to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 6252 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package that will certainly help you save your baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth saving? You take no risk. Mr. Reefer will refund every cent of your money if you are not entirely satisfied and a million dollar bank backs up this statement. Send for a $1 package today, or better still, send $2.35 on special discount for three regular $1 packages and insure every hatch you get. Aren't your baby chicks worth five for a cent? That's about the cost of Reefer's Ready Relief. If you don't want to try this bank guaranteed chick saver at least write today for Mr. Reefer's valuable free poultry book that gives the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry. —Adv.

WHAT PROHIBITION WILL DO

National Prohibition will reduce poverty by at least 25 per cent; prostitution, in greater proportion; crime, in still greater.

It will wipe out the most corrupting influence in city politics, and the most poisonous in business relations. It will break down some of the most serious hindrances to a common national loyalty. It will lift one of the heaviest handicaps to progress from our immigrant groups.

The labor problem will be cleared of one of its most baffling complications, and responsible working-class movements will develop unprecedented intelligence and power.

It will release vast productive energies in a people capable of securing a more equitable distribution of the increased national output.

No such charter of freedom and fulfillment to women and children has ever been written. Taken with all that it implies and promises, we should recognize it as one of the very greatest and most inspiring events in history, and one that may well mark the beginning of a new order of accelerated spiritual evolution.—Written for "The Congregationalist" by Robert A. Woods.

Duty, be it in a small matter or a great, is duty still, the command of heaven, the eldest voice of God. And it is only they who are faithful in a few things, who will be faithful over many things.—Charles Kingsley.

Daddy was confined to the house with Spanish influenza, and mother was busy sterilizing the dishes which had come from the sick-room.

"Why do you do that?" asked four-year-old Donald.

"Because, dear, poor Daddy has germs, and the germs get on the dishes, so then I boil them, and that kills the horrid germs."

Donald turned this over in his little mind for several minutes. Then:

"Mother, why don't you boil daddy?"

Protestants in France and Belgium.

A CALL is sounding forth to the Protestant Churches of America to aid their brethren in France and Belgium to repair the ravages of war. A large and influential committee in New York City is voicing the call, and organizing the effort to secure a proper response. The committee announces that the purpose is "to conserve and develop the Evangelical Churches, institutions and missions of France and Belgium."

The appeal is to all the Evangelical Churches of the United States, regardless of denominational distinctions. The work of reparation and reconstruction is big enough to tax the liberality and resources of all our churches, and it is hoped that denominationalism will in no case draw the purse strings. "Whoso being a Presbyterian and hath this world's goods, and seeth his Methodist, or Baptist brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" The same obligation cannot be less when the Methodist or Baptist has the full purse, and the Presbyterian is poverty-stricken.

Protestantism has had a hard time in both France and Belgium. It is just three hundred and sixty-four years since the first Protestant church was organized in France. It was in a private home where a few Protestants had met for worship under cover of darkness. A father and mother wanted an infant baptized. No Protestant preacher was in reach, and so this little company selected a young man who was present, and who had been educated in Geneva under John Calvin. They also elected elders and deacons and thus formed a complete church. Four years from that date there were 2,000 Reformed Churches in France, representing a Reformed membership of about 400,000. Shortly after this a storm of persecution broke forth, civil wars followed, interspersed with massacres, the most noted of which is familiar to all who know anything of history, the massacre of St. Bartholomew. After thirty years of strife, in which the soil of France was wet with the blood of her own children, shed by the hands of her own children, and in which there was widespread ruin of property, of schools and churches, the Protestants were granted their civil and religious rights in the Edict of Nantes. But these rights were soon ignored, and by and by the edict was revoked, and a persistent effort, accompanied by all manner of cruelty, was put forth to exterminate the Protestants. Those who could, fled, and thousands found their way to our young colonies. Those who could not flee, continued to suffer till the French Revolution set them free by overturning the government. By that time they were reduced to a small remnant. But they have illustrated the perseverance of the saints.

When this present war began the Old Huguenot Church had considerable strength, something near a hundred thousand members. Its strength was largely in northern France, in the territory invaded by the Germans. Here were its largest and wealthiest churches. Hence the war has dealt it a peculiarly heavy blow. Not only has it been greatly reduced in membership, but the bulk of its property has been destroyed.

Of all the countries of Europe Belgium has been the most exclusively and most intensely Roman Catholic. In the days of Philip II of Spain, when it separated from the seven northern provinces of the Netherlands, it weeded out all Protestants, and erected a strong legal barrier to keep them out. Not till far along in the Nineteenth Century could enough Protestants be found in Belgium to organize a church. But once organized it began to grow and by the outbreak of the war, the Protestants numbered about 11,000.

The war opened wide doors of opportunity for Protestantism in both France and Belgium. The soldiers of all faiths and no faiths were ready to give a hospitable reception to the Bible, and Protestantism is the religion of the Bible. These Protestant Churches scattered Bibles far and wide among their fellow countrymen, and then gave themselves to commending its simple worship and saving truths. Consequently these churches occupy a coign of advantage. If only the Protestant Churches of America will stretch forth a generous and sympathetic hand to them, a splendid future is before them.

This New York Committee is asking for $3,000,000 from all the churches of the United States. All the great churches of this country are represented in France—Lutherans, Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists.

Our Southern Presbyterian Church is asked for $100,000. The War Work Council has added this to its budget, and no doubt the General Assembly will sanction it. Let no one shut up his bowels of compassion when this great and urgent need is presented.

Liberality Toward Secular Causes.

The great war has taught men to deal in large ideas and in their giving to give large sums. We have become accustomed to the word billion, though few ever realize its immensity. However, we have floated loans of billions and still are more to follow.

The response of the people to the Government appeals has been wonderful, but that had its compensating features in the shape of money saved and frugal habits formed.

The charitable appeals from the Red Cross, the Men and Women's Christian Associations were different. There was no appeal to selfishness in them and what was given was literally bread cast upon the water with no string attached.

When you add to the sums contributed to these causes the vast amounts given to Belgium, Armenia and Syria, there is nothing in the annals of giving comparable to what has been done.

Such has been the generous eagerness of the people to respond to those frequent appeals that unprincipled men and women have taken advantage of their generosity and with fake enterprises of relief have swindled the public out of many millions.

One of the Government officials has been investigating war charity scandals and has looked into 534 organizations; 384 of these were put out of business.

Between three and four billions were raised for war benefit purposes, of which more than fifty millions were misappropriated. This abuse of the generosity of the American people was only possible because they were eager to help and careless as to the manner in which they helped.

The children of this world may be in their generation wiser than the children of light; but there is no reason why they should be more generous.

The Church today has pitched her demands upon the same large scale, and she is calling, not upon individual churches, but upon individual members to come to her aid and fully equip her for service.

When the world has responded so generously to the appeals, shall the Church fall short?

A Question of Murder.

Recently, in commenting upon the story of a young soldier who said that, in a charge when the command had been given that no prisoners should be taken, he had driven his bayonet through a German who came from behind a hay stack, holding up his hands and crying "Kamarad," we said that this was murder.

An esteemed brother writes us saying that we spoke "unadvisedly with our lips," and that we owe the young man an apology, because it was his duty to obey orders, and that the charge of murder, if any, should have been brought against the officer giving the command.

Our readers will testify that whatever be the faults of this paper, unwillingness to apologize is not one of them; so for this reason we have carefully considered this question of casuistry, lest we should be "an accuser of the brethren."

The premise laid down, "a soldier must obey orders," would seem to clear the young man of the charge of murder, provided that he had received special orders to take no prisoners, the truth of which is by no means established, for often soldiers make orders for themselves and pass them to their fellows as coming from headquarters.

Supposing, however, that there was such a general order, bearing the stamp of authority, the question is, Have I a right to plunge my bayonet into an unresisting man, whose hands are up in the air and who is crying out Kamarad? The best authorities on moral subjects teach us that the voice of conscience must be obeyed above the voice of man, and that if those in authority command us to do an immoral act, it is our duty to disobey such commands, but at the same time to submit to such punishment as our superiors may deem right.

If we grant the premise laid down by our good brother, the captain who sank the Lusitania with the women and babies, was innocent, because he was acting under orders, and those who now propose to punish men in authority among the Germans who committed crimes that cry to heaven, should pass by all except the Kaiser as head of the Government, because all were acting under his orders.

On the whole then, looking at the question from every side, we still think that to plunge a bayonet into an unresisting man offering to surrender by word and by act, was murder, and that no apology is due.

The Second Coming---Pre? or Post?

We have before us two books on this subject, one by Dr. William H. Sunday, better known in the vernacular as "Billy" Sunday, and the other by Dr. James H. Snowden, Professor of Systematic Theology in Western Theological Seminary, Pittsburg, Pa.

One deals with the subject from the premillenarian point of view, while the other is avowedly post-millenarian. One is known all over this country, while the other is scarcely known beyond the confines of his own Church.

One is considered the most popular preacher in America, who by words and antics amuses as well as instructs, and the other is a Seminary professor who is probably more acceptable to an audience of scholars than to a popular audience.

While they differ thus widely in the points indicated, they are both earnest Christian men, thoroughly loyal to the truth, and are honored by their brethren everywhere. Mr. Sunday writes in a style entirely different from that in which he preaches, and while it is entertaining and grips the reader by its intense earnestness, he does not impress one with his powers as an exegete, but leaves the impression that he would shine brighter in the pulpit than on the forum.

Dr. Snowden gives us the most comprehensive and scholarly treatment of Postmillenarianism since the days of Dr. David Brown, who wrote seventy years ago. He presents us with a broad study of the literature of the subject, giving a list of 120 authors consulted. He writes with an evident desire to learn the truth, and in no instance does he dodge difficulties. The discussion is conducted in a spirit of brotherly kindness and courtesy, so that Premillenarians can read this book without feeling that they have been misrepresented.

It is a book of 279 pages, published by the MacMillan Company, New York, and is priced at $1.75. No matter what your views are, you should have this book for consultation and study.

A Word For the Occasional Supply.

Scattered over our Church there can be found in nearly every community ministers without charges. Some are teaching, some are editing and some are taking their "ease with dignity." Some, for domestic reasons, cannot accept permanent work, some have passed the dead line, and are "persona non grata" to churches, and others feel called to the teaching or newspaper profession.

They serve a very useful purpose when a vacancy is to be supplied.

Like "imperious Caesar, dead and turned to clay, and used to stop a hole, to keep the wind away," they are often the sole dependence when the pulpit committee is at its wit's end to find a supply.

These brethren are at the mercy of those inviting them, as it is contrary to ministerial etiquette to set a price upon one's services, yet oftentimes they are imposed upon. If so disposed we "could a tale unfold, whose lightest word would harrow up the soul." We could tell the story of a poor man paying his own expenses to a place, leaving his wife alone to look after the furnace, coming back to his home after two days' absence, and receiving only thanks. We could tell about a preacher whose pulpit was supplied by one of these brethren while he preached elsewhere. He received a stipend where he preached, and also his regular salary, while he paid his supply nothing, which goes to prove that dog will sometimes eat dog, the old saying to the contrary notwithstanding.

These brethren should be paid liberally and promptly, and some one should be appointed to see that it is done. Let the committee calculate the expense of the trip and make the usual stipend that much extra.

The editor, although an occasional supply himself, is not speaking for himself. He has always been paid far beyond his deserts, and if at times the honorarium has been poor, the preaching has been equally so, and for that reason he has no complaint. He is only speaking for the downtrodden and the oppressed.

Home Missions in the Sabbath Schools.

March 30 is Home Mission Day in the Sabbath Schools, and Dr. Morris has made special preparations for this day. Such as programs, pageants and lessons for different classes have been prepared. In this way superintendents will be furnished with all the help they need to make the occasion one of great interest to the young. Superintendents would do well to write to the Home Mission Office, Atlanta, Ga., Dr. S. L. Morris, and get a supply of "Our Open Gates," with supplements of Lessons on Foreigners and collection envelopes. These will all be furnished free.

The Hero of the Foreign Mission Field

By Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D.D.

I TAKE my hat off to the country evangelist. Indispensable as are the missionary teacher, doctor, city evangelist, yet these are the first to admit that the missionary who in point of cheerfully borne privations, hardships, and dangers, carries forward most nobly the tradition of Pauline heroism, is the man or woman who serves as country evangelist, especially in those regions where railroads are unknown.

As in recent months I have been travelling about with our country evangelists in every imaginable form of conveyance by land or water except pullmans and battleships, and as I have listened to their modest and humorous recital of experiences, I have been continually reminded of Paul's "in journeyings often, in perils of rivers, in perils of robbers, in perils in the wilderness, in labor and travail, in cold and nakedness. Besides those things that are without, there is that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches."

The duty of shepherding, with the slowest and most primitive methods of travel, from fifteen to fifty little groups of believers scattered through a wide and often robber-infested territory, each one surrounded by a dense and dominating heathenism and dependent for comfort and guidance chiefly upon the missionary, is a duty that often drives him forth against the counsels of a prudent self-regard. One of our country evangelists told me he had often been in sound of where the robbers were plundering. They have a pleasant way, you know, of kidnapping a person, and sending a chopped-off finger or two to his friends and kindred, as a gentle reminder to hurry up with the ransom. I believe, though, I would trust our country evangelists, with their physical courage and coolness, their faith in God, their command of the language, and the respect they almost everywhere inspire, to come off scott free even from an encounter with robbers.

Paul doesn't mention "cooties." Our soldiers in France and most certainly our country evangelists of both sexes would never be guilty of such an omission. Oriental inns and homes and boats are usually infested. So numerous and rapacious are they, it is impossible to keep them off. So that the first thing the missionary does on his return from a circuit of his country villages is to boil himself and his clothes.

Neither does Paul mention the total lack of privacy that is one of the hardest things to endure on a country trip. Of course Paul in the Roman Empire was not the object of curiosity that the white foreigner is in a country village in the Orient. The intentness and persistence of the scrutiny focused upon him it is impossible to imagine till one has experienced it. In numerous little villages where the missionary and I stopped to take a meal, at the streetside or in an inn, hundreds gathered about us, the number continually growing, till we were so closely encircled and pressed upon by a dense mass of peering inquisitive faces, that hardly any light or air could get to us. Every bite, every drink, every movement of hand or foot or mouth or knife or fork or handkerchief, was the object of this steadfast and absorbed inspection. It was not in the least hostile or ill-natured. But its intentness and tirelessness I have not words to describe.

Recently, after spending the night in a village, the next morning, while the final arrangements were making for resuming our journey, I thought I would take a few turns in the little courtyard for exercise. In a few minutes I was walking up and down before a swiftly growing crowd of children and grown people, who so gravely scrutinized every movement of my feet, every turn of my head, that I was irresistibly reminded of how we boys at the circus used to watch the elephant. Every swing of his trunk, every switch of his tail, gave us a thrill. And when I remembered the passionate eagerness with which we saw him pass hay into his mouth with his trunk, I no longer wondered at the emotion with which they watched us strange creatures devouring our strange food with the aid of curiously shaped swords and spears.

Last week, in the tiny room of a village inn, with its dirt floor, its paper-covered window, pierced with various holes, and its framework of four planks to sleep on, as I was preparing for bed by the light of a burning wick in a metal pan of a pattern that has served the Chinese nation for 4,000 years, I was somewhat startled on glancing toward the window to find that through every one of its numerous punctures a bright black eye was gazing fixedly at me.

This relentless and unescapable scrutiny of alien eyes, through the one, two, three, or more, weeks of a country trip, is apt to prove a wearing, nerve-trying experience, especially to missionary men and women of sensitive temperament.

Paul's "perils by rivers" I was sadly reminded of a few weeks ago when a fine young American Baptist missionary, known to and beloved by many of our North Kiangsu men, while endeavoring to cross a river by night in a little boat, was drowned.

Of the "cold" which Paul mentions I also can speak feelingly. Wednesday, the first day of the new year, I celebrated by a wheelbarrow trip of thirty miles, the last half in the face of a violent freezing headwind that searched my very marrow. As I had taken an unaccustomed walk in front of the barrow that morning of ten miles at a swift pace, I could not tell which I enjoyed most in the afternoon, sitting on a barrow and freezing, or limping along in front to keep the blood circulating.

When after such a day's travel the missionary reaches the village he is bound for, does he thaw out before a good fire? Nay, verily! He does not thaw out. There is no fire. Instead of heating their homes or inns or churches, the Chinese simply wear more clothes. The missionary stays cold. Two days ago, travelling with a country evangelist in the unheated room of a canal boat, in order to keep warm I went to bed, getting under the blanket with my coat, shoes, and trousers on, and propping my back against the wall to write a letter. A heavy woolen glove was on my left hand, while I wrote with my right till my fingers got too numb to hold the pen. Then I would put them in my pocket till they thawed out enough to resume writing. Week before last I received from a country evangelist out on a three weeks' trip a letter beginning, "I am writing in a cold room, on a cold table, with cold hands (and feet); so please excuse."

But with his hardships and privations the country evangelist has also his rich rewards. He knows that in the evangelization of a nation his is the absolutely fundamental work. He knows that the human material on which he is privileged to work in the villages and towns that dot his great field is, as a rule, the most sturdy, open-minded, responsive, and promising material that the nation holds, from which will come in the main the future leadership of the native church. It is no accident, nor due to any racial peculiarity, that the vast majority of the Christian ministers of America are drawn, not from cities, but from our rural, town, and village churches.

One week night a few weeks ago I preached in a village to a packed and most attentive congregation which the country evangelist had built up in twelve years from a membership of two to ninety, and which in the last three years has sent fifteen young men to our Boys' Boarding School at the central station, from which they will almost certainly graduate to become ministerial or lay leaders of the native church of the future.

The next morning I took the picture of a woman member

Union a la Uncle Sam

By Rev. Dunbar H. Ogden, D.D.

MY distinguished friend and former professor, Dr. Thornton Whaling, in his recent article entitled "Union by Federation," says that the road to the union of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches leads "along the federal principle illustrated in our great country with its federal republic and waiting for application to our long divided, too long sundered Churches": again he writes "the providential, divine parable which expounds the method is these United States." He is pleading for a Federative Union of all the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches as against an Organic Union of the U. S. A. and U. S. Assemblies.

In considering Dr. Whaling's suggestion we must bear in mind that if the example of Uncle Sam be followed the proposed Federal Assembly must have real authority, and that if it is to be effective it must have very large authority.

Furthermore, this Federal Assembly must have the final word in all decisions as to the sphere of authority, even as the United States Supreme Court decides its own jurisdiction. Of course it would be guided by the written constitution, but the difficult task of interpretation and application would belong to it.

If we plead for this kind of Federal Union as against Organic Union, we are simply confusing our thought, for it is a form of Organic Union.

In reference to this Organic Union proposed by Dr. Whaling I submit two considerations: (1) It would be very difficult to secure. (2) It would not meet our deepest and most immediate need.

Read the list of the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, meditate upon their characteristics as history reveals them. Do you think it an easy task or a possible achievement to secure from these Assemblies the surrender of their absolute autonomy? They would easily enter a non-authoritative council, they have already done so. But if we are to have a "Union a la Uncle Sam," the Federal Assembly must have real authority and not merely advisory powers.

Our deepest and most immediate need is to bring into practical oneness in life and service the kindred Christians in the local communities rather than the maintenance of a truce of God among warring members of the same great family. Our problem is not so much in the Synod of Virginia and the Carolinas, as in Texas, Missouri and Kentucky. Only by the use of the largest authority could the proposed Federal Assembly meet this need, and then only in part.

The practical issue before the Southern Church is our relationship to the U. S. A. Assembly. Geographically and historically we have a peculiar relationship to that body of Christians. We scarcely touch the other Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, but in almost every Synod we are in direct competition with the U. S. A. Church. Historically we are second cousin to the Dutch Reformed folks, first cousin to the U. P.s, but the sister of the U. S. A.s.

I agree most heartily with Dr. Whaling in the opinion that Uncle Sam affords us a shining example that may well be followed in the union of the Presbyterian Churches. I differ with him in the application of the principles illustrated by the United States.

I also agree with him that simon pure Organic Union (I presume that is what he means by consolidation) is undesirable. In the first place it would split our own Church. We are seeking union and not a new division. In addition it would not afford a sound basis of government. In a Church so numerous in membership, so far-reaching in territory, and so diverse in local interest as would result from a reunion of the U. S. A. and U. S. Assemblies, sound principles of government demand that there be provision for local self-direction in its various sections.

If our people can be brought to see that union is not inconsistent with the fullest authority of each Synod over its local affairs, I believe that nine-tenths of the opposition to it will pass away.

What are the barriers between us? Our last Assembly considered the report of the committee on conference. The U. S. A. committee presented a clear-cut, forward-looking basis for definite conference on union, while our own committee took as its task the digging up and magnifying of every possible objection to union.

When in the debate the whole matter was boiled down, this is all that remained:

Our Assembly fears the lenient attitude of the U. S. A. Church toward its relatively few ministers of questionable views. Even Dr. Fraser stated, in his judgment 95 per cent of the Northern ministers are as sound as those of our own Assembly.

Again the U. S. A. Assembly from time to time makes deliverances, not mandatory but advisory, on public and political questions such as prohibition and woman's suffrage.

(By the way, the boundary line of political deliverances seems a wee bit uncertain. Recently Dr. McPheeters has attacked a deliverance of our last Assembly as more political and vicious than the Spring resolutions. Forthwith Dr. Fraser rises to say that he spent many hours over that very paper to keep it clean of such contagion. Verily some of us must turn our faces while we smile.)

Over against these two objections I would suggest two considerations:

(1) Every barrier (and they have in past years been listed by our Assembly to the number of five) has been removed, save these two. Shall we not be encouraged to attempt the removal of these?

(2) The basis of discussion proposed by the U. S. A. committee specifically includes doctrinal soundness and the spirituality of the Church. Is it not the part of wisdom to enter into definite conference on union with the U. S. A. Assembly to ascertain if that great Church will stand by its committee's statement?

Some of us plead for this at the last Assembly. While the vote was about two to one against us, it is rather significant that one out of every three commissioners voted for a definite step toward Organic Union, and that the vote for the enlargement of our conference committee was two to one.

I believe that the Synod is the key to our problem. At present our system is illogical. We jump in our series of representative courts from the Presbytery to the Assembly. The Synod is a sort of useless appendage.

May I illustrate the proposed plan, using the State of Kentucky as an example, in order that the presentation may be concrete, but asking the reader to bear in mind that the same process would be followed in all the States, the same advantages experienced by every border Synod and the same safeguards enjoyed by all our central and eastern Synods.

In Kentucky there are two Synods (U. S. A. and U. S.) of about equal strength. (Incidentally I may remark that competition does not seem here to be the life of trade, for neither of these Synods is doing more than holding its own—woeful words.) The union that some of us advocate would bring into one Synod all the Northern and Southern Presbyterian Churches of Kentucky, and this Synod would be given the largest constitutional authority over its local affairs. A similar union of the U. S. and U. S. A. Presbyterians would be accomplished in every State and similar authority over its local affairs would be given to each Synod.

In every section of the Church the Synod would be lifted into its rightful place of power and efficiency. A new and brighter day would dawn for the border Synods. The Synods at the heart of our Church would remain undisturbed. All of their interests would be safeguarded. Each Synod would have the fullest authority over its local affairs.

The very small Synods, of which we have only a few, could be combined with others in such a way that every Synod would be large enough to meet the new responsibilities laid upon it.

The Spirit of Stewardship--How to Promote It

By Rev. A. M. Fraser, D.D.

THE spirit of our offerings for religion counts for more than the amount of the offering does. "If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath and not according to that he hath not." "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." The proper spirit makes the offering a greater blessing to the giver. It makes it more pleasing to God. It makes it do more good. Christ taught very plainly that the widow's two mites had more purchasing power than all the large gifts of the wealthy. In these days the widow's two mites could buy a tract, which might bring many souls to Christ, and in each of these souls, it might multiply itself a hundredfold, because each soul might bring other souls and gifts to Christ. On the other hand, we can think of many ways in which a very large sum given from an improper motive might be side-tracked and never get anywhere or do any good.

It often happens that a busy, prosperous, public-spirited man, with strong altruistic impulses, will give freely and generously to every cause properly presented to him, but he waits to be approached and then gives almost without thinking of it, either before or after giving. He only asks whether it be a worthy cause and how much he is expected to give. That is not at all a bad thing, but it is far from being the best thing. It is so much better to give some thought to the cause, to think about it till it has taken hold of the judgment and heart and conscience, to pray over it and then to give deliberately, intelligently, out of love for humanity and especially as an act of worship toward God. Happy is the man who can say, "I give this to Jesus Christ as a token of my devotion to Him, to whom I owe all things, and I give it to this particular object, because I believe it will please and glorify him more if I do so."

Now how can one best promote that spirit in his heart? In addition to other means of grace, he can promote this spirit by deciding to adopt "a sliding scale" of offerings, instead of giving a fixed sum every time or every year. Let that sliding scale be regulated by the sliding scale God uses with us. In nearly all cases, God does use a sliding scale with us. He does not adopt a hard and fast rule to give us the same amount of blessing every year. Would it not be a good plan for a man to let his offerings to God expand or contract in proportion as God's gifts to him expand or contract? That would help to keep him reminded that his means of living come directly from God. If he makes little this year, it may be a hardship to give the fixed sum. If he makes a large amount the next year, and still gives the same fixed sum, he does it so easily that it does not arrest attention and there is nothing in it to compel him to think of the Divine Giver of it all. But if he gives back to God in proportion as God gives to him, the very amount he gives necessarily leads him to think of God as his preserver and benefactor.

All this suggests that we should adopt a definite percentage of our annual income as our minimum of offerings to the Lord. We should resolve never to let our offerings fall below that minimum. We may give more than that, just as much more as our hearts prompt us to give and the needs require, but not less. Thus that minimum will rise and fall as our own income rises and falls, or it will remain stationary if our income is stationary. To do this, we must keep account of what we receive at the hands of a gracious Providence and of what we give back to Him, in order that we may make sure of not falling below our minimum.

In this way, our offerings keep ever fresh before us the fact that all we receive we get from God. So it expresses our devotion and our worship. It always keeps alive our relationship to God and imparts to our offerings that proper spirit which is so large a part of their value.

God once gave to the Israelites a plan that embodied just that advantage. It was the tithing system. The Israelite was required to give to the worship of God one-tenth of his income. Indeed, if God ever approved of our giving less than a tenth, He has not said so in His Word. Statistics compiled by the United States Government show that, if all the members of the Southern Presbyterian Church were to tithe, we would get over $14,000,000 a year for religious uses.

Systematic Beneficence---Temporal Expenditures Vs. Spiritual Investments.

Rev. Geo. W. Cheek, of Albemarle, whose church trebled its contributions last year, presents to his people the possibilities that lie in small weekly gifts*after this fashion:

WHAT WE PROBABLY DO:

	Per Week	Per Year		Per Year
1 Child spends for candy or soft drinks	5c	$ 2.60	50 Children	$ 130.00
1 Girl spends for various pleasures	10c	5.20	20 Girls	104.00
1 Boy spends for cigarettes	20c	10.40	20 Boys	208.00
1 Woman spends for picture shows	30c	15.60	20 Women	312.00
1 Man spends for tobacco (5c per day)	35c	18.20	20 Men	364.00
1 Man spends for cigars (15c per day)	$1.05	54.60	20 Men	1,092.00
6 People spend	$2.05	$106.60	150 People	-2,210.00

WHAT WE PROBABLY COULD DO:

	Per Week	Per Year		Per Year
1 Child could give to Benevolences	1c	$ 0.52	15 Children	$ 7.80
1 Child could give to Benevolences	5c	2.60	15 Children	39.00
1 Boy or Girl could give to Benevolences	10c	5.20	10 Boys or Girls	78.00
1 Boy or Girl could give to Benevolences	15c	7.80	25 Boys or Girls	130.00
1 Man or Woman could give to Benevolences	20c	10.40	20 Men or Women	208.00
1 Man or Woman could give to Benevolences	25c	13.00	50 Men or Women	650.00
1 Man or Woman could give to Benevolences	50c	26.00	15 Men or Women	390.00
7 People could give	$1.26	$65.52	150 People	$1,502.80

We spend our money in small installments; why not give it the same way? We promise ourselves the pleasures of these indulgences in advance; why not pledge our Lord the glory of these offerings in advance and for the advantage and advancement of His Gospel and Kingdom.

PRESBYTERY'S COMMITTEE.

The Anti-Tithe Collaborators Called to Account.

By Rev. A. A. McGeachy, D.D.

MR. EDITOR: I rise to remark that Collaborators Raynal and Parker might have put in their time to better account than in persuading people who already have no inclination to do their duty that they are likewise under no obligation to do it.

They might, for instance, have granted that the tithe is a just and equitable measure of Christian liberality and that we ought to give it even though we may not be bound to. They might have allowed that a rule which governed the giving of God's people through some thousands of years was not to be sneezed at by their spiritual descendants. They might even have contended that a Christian now should be ashamed to give less than an old Jew three thousand years ago. But they didn't. They demolished the case of the tithe as law and quit. They rooted out and pulled down and destroyed and threw down, but did not build and plant.

As touching the law their argument was not blameless. The tithe was once law and Christ declared that no law was out of force until it was fulfilled. Some laws like the law of sacrifices, fulfilled in the Great Sacrifice, have passed away. Others can never be fulfilled. We shall never be holy enough to dispense with the Sabbath nor smart enough to run the church without money. Nor can we safely trust untutored impulses.

The collaborators argue the tithe on the plane of circumcision. The reasoning which knocks down one knocks down the other. They feel the same obligation to both forms of sacrifice. Very well, if it pleases the gentlemen. And since the Editor shares their views, the same remark applies to him. It is not for me to abridge the rights or liberties of anybody. Personally I should prefer to give the tithe.

The real trouble with the collaborators is that they don't agree to anything definite, not a tenth, nor a quarter, nor a half. That obliges the church to claim the whole. But the church has been starving on the whole for years, and has been obliged to discount the theory of total consecration to get a little ready money to pay her bills.

It wont work, gentlemen. You've preached us a fine sermon about accentuating the fundamentals, but left off the application. Your whip has no cracker and your oxen wont hear you. You've kicked over the waste basket and scattered the stewardship literature every way for Sunday, but left the litter lying on the floor.

Here, gather up this mess that you've made and tell us what to do. But tell us definitely, not generally. And since you wont allow us to be under law give us at least the recommendations of grace.

Then when we have read the pleasant little formula which the Editor keeps in type we'll shuffle the deck and cut for a new deal.

God's Way.

Just to be tender, just to be true;
 Just to be glad the whole day through;
 Just to be merciful, just to be mild;
 Just to be trustful as a child;
 Just to be gentle, and kind, and sweet;
 Just to be helpful with willing feet;
 Just to be cheery when things go wrong;
 Just to drive sadness away with a song;
 Whether the hour is dark or bright,
 Just to be loyal to God and right;
 Just to believe that God knows best,
 Just in His promises ever to rest;
 Just to let love be our daily key—
 This is God's will for you and me.

"He That Goeth Forth and Weepeth Bearing Precious Seed."

A Message of Encouragement to the Missionary and Aid Society.

By Mrs. J. R. Simpson.

(The Woman's Missionary Union of the Presbyterian Church met Monday, and were much encouraged and given new incentive to work by receiving the following letter from a member who cannot attend meetings. It is a wonderful encouragement to know that while we meet together, she is praying for us, and for the success of our work. The society wishes to share with others this beautiful thought, believing that it is a seed of influence which will grow in the hearts of all who read the letter of this consecrated Christian woman. Secretary.)

Monroe, N. C.

AS Paul sent salutations unto his friends and co-laborers, I send my salutations to the Ladies' Missionary and Aid Society.

"Grace be unto you, and peace from God the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ." My heart and my prayers are with you today. I wish to send you this simple message pertaining to your work. The greatest service Christian people can be interested in, is missions. Whether they be home or foreign—for the missions started at home pave the way for work in the foreign field. It matters not where the Word of Christ is carried, plain, or hill or mountain, the result is the same. As Tennyson has beautifully expressed it, "What the sun is to the flowers, Jesus Christ is to me. He is the sun of my soul." All over our country and from lands across the sea, we hear the cry, "Come over and help us." India, Armenia, China, Korea, and other foreign countries, and even Mexico here next to us, are in need.

Literally, these people are physically and spiritually hungry. The world needs money for bread, and witnesses for God. Who can tell what He has done for their souls, and what His Word does for all hungry souls? This multitude of people need our prayers, our missionaries, and ourselves.

We cannot do great things, but we can do our part—a little leaven leavens the whole lump. How fitly this is illustrated in the work of home and foreign missionaries. Their spirit of service, and teachings of Christ's Word, gives the hearer a desire to be physically and spiritually clean, broadens their views of life and lifts their hearts to God. "Behold I have set before thee an open door." The open door represents opportunity—opportunity spells duty—and duty, as Christ in His divine conception said—"I must be about my Father's business." Don't be discouraged, give of your best, great, or small; and as the seed sown in good ground, it will bring forth much fruit. The poor widow dropped her coin in the box; to onlookers it was only a mite, but the Lord looked upon the heart and saw gold in the gift.

"A song my heart has been singing,
 Has been singing the whole day thru;
 'Give to the world the best you have,
 And the best will come back to you.'

"Give with no thought of receiving,
 Save joy that the giver knows;
 Joy at soothing a sorrow,
 Or sharing another's woes.

"Somewhere along life's pathway
 Each kind act has its mate;
 Some turn of the road you'll find it,
 Some time, be it soon or late.

But should it hide in the shadow,
 The best of the best will be,
 To have the Saviour whisper,
 "You did it unto me."

A Fruitful Ministry

By Rev. T. H. Law, D.D.

ABOUT fifty-five years ago a young man completed his course in the Theological Seminary and entered upon his life work in the Gospel ministry. He was small of stature, frail of body, and defective both in sight and hearing. But he had a quick and vigorous mind, was ambitious of learning, and, his father being a minister and professional teacher, he had enjoyed superior advantages of education, graduating with distinction at college, and finishing with success the full course of the seminary.

Immediately upon his graduation he received and accepted a call to a little home mission church, and was ordained and installed the same month as its pastor. He thus began what was to be a long ministry, with hearty consecration to the work, with humble reliance upon Divine grace, and with a burning desire and a determined purpose make himself an efficient and useful pastor.

But the circumstances were very unpropitious and the outlook far from encouraging. It was about the darkest period of the Civil War, when business in the South was sadly broken up, living was hard, and the Confederate cause was manifestly waning. The location of the young minister's church was in a little village, a station on a little run-down one-horse railroad, a most disreputable place, noted for its grogeries, drunkenness and fighting. The Presbyterian Church, the only one in the village, had but a handful of members, untrained in religious work and liberality, and promising the young pastor only a pittance of a salary, which was very irregularly paid. And with the close of the war, followed by the horrible Reconstruction period, lasting ten years, conditions grew worse and worse. Society was unsettled, business was unsuccessful, murders were common, and mobs occurred in this very village, so that the young men and other citizens were driven away, and the prospects grew darker rather than promising. Nevertheless, the young pastor, feeling that the Lord had sent him there, stood his ground, preached faithfully, visited diligently, and tried to do everything in his power against impending discouragements. And during these dark days he began to dream. When I first knew him, while he was but a lad, and used to see him strolling the streets of the city where he resided, I got the impression that he was a dreamer. And so he proved in later life. But he had the marvellous faculty of working out his dreams and making them actual. And so, in these dark days of his early ministry, he dreamed of a large, efficient and influential church, with a handsome and commodious building, in this place; of a public library where his people might have good books to read and improve themselves; of an orphanage to provide for the care and training of the many fatherless little children, so many of whom were left poor and needy as a result of the war; of a college for the proper education of our Presbyterian boys; and of a town, purged of its dens of vice and purified and elevated in its morality and religion, which would be a suitable community for these institutions and an attraction throughout the surrounding territory. And audacious as the project might appear in the circumstances, he actually began to talk and to work for all these things. It was indeed a bold undertaking, and the obstacles were numerous and great. He had no property of his own, and his little, uncertain salary was not sufficient to support him and his family adequately; and his people were mostly poor and unused to liberality, while friends threw cold water on his schemes, and others ridiculed his purposes and condemned his efforts. But with humble faith in God and earnest prayer, persistent planning and laboring, things soon began to take shape and the pastor's dreams to realise. His church grew and doubled again and again in membership, efficiency and contributions. An orphanage was planted, which expanded and expanded until it furnished year by year a happy, Christian home and school to three hundred fatherless children and poured forth a mighty stream of educated boys and girls to fill useful places in life. A college was founded, and with a beautiful campus studded with elegant buildings, a worthy faculty and numerous students, was filling its noble mission. And the town developed along all proper lines, with railroads, cotton mills, stores, banks, and churches of other denominations.

After fifty-three years of arduous, consecrated, faithful labor in the Master's service, this minister, now become aged, decrepit, blind and deaf, but still full of zeal and energy, after a Sabbath full of work, was suddenly summoned to enter into the joy of his Lord.

And what did he leave behind as the fruits of his life of devoted service? The church of his early love, which he had served as pastor for forty-seven years, housed in an elegant granite structure, with nearly four hundred communicants, a younger pastor and an efficient organization; another church of nearly the same membership composed chiefly of the orphanage inmates, and another church in the country which he had planted and cultivated many years; an orphanage with some 300 inmates, covering 500 acres of land, on which stand about 40 buildings, mostly of granite and cement; the largest Presbyterian orphanage in this country, whose fame has spread all over our land; a college organized and equipped, rendering excellent service to hundreds of young men; a monthly magazine edited by himself and published for many years in the orphanage, with 5,000 subscribers; and a beautiful, prosperous little city, their home, which now carries a fair and honored name all over the State.

Such in brief is the story of the wonderfully fruitful ministry of Dr. William P. Jacobs, of Clinton, S. C., as tenderly, beautifully and impressively related in his Memoir, written by his youngest son, Dr. Thornwell Jacobs, of Oglethorpe University, and published by Revell. And if any one would have his own pious soul stirred within him, or his indolence rebuked, or his faith increased, or his zeal inspired, let him read this book. I have found it more thrilling than a novel and most stimulating in the Lord's work. It is the very book for the laborious home missionary, the struggling and discouraged pastor, the kind-hearted and sympathetic philanthropist, the energetic educator, the public-spirited citizen, and for any young minister who would worthily fulfill his high calling in Christ Jesus.

Union a la Uncle Sam.

Over these Synods there would be a great National Assembly composed of commissioners from the Synods.

The authority of this Assembly and of its constituent Synods would be clearly defined; the peculiar responsibility of the Assembly being the general work of the Church, such as the Assembly causes with which we are now familiar, while each Synod would control its own local affairs.

This it seems to me would be Union a la Uncle Sam.

I wonder if our brethren in the heart of the Church realize the problem that exists on the border. Shall we work out this problem along the "sloughing off" line in which there is so much of difficulty and heart burning, or shall we as an Assembly face it and solve it now?

I feel sure that the coming years will prove that we who plead for this are not as Dr. Whaling writes, "the blind trying to lead the blind and both falling into the ditch."

Many of the most loyal sons of the Southern Church earnestly hope that our next Assembly will appoint a committee of conference with a similar committee from the U. S. A. Church to work out if possible a basis of union in which the Synod, or perhaps the provincial Assembly (favored by many of our brethren) will conserve local self-government, and in which at the same time there will be real and effective oneness.

The Secret of Universal Success in a Benevolent Campaign.

By Rev. H. Waddell Pratt.

FUNDAMENTALLY and before, behind and under everything else, prayer is the secret. Believing prayer will overcome more blunders, secure more results, and the results will be more permanent than any other force. This we think the primary cause of any success. There are secondary causes, and we believe from the success of the last campaign in South Carolina Presbytery, which was one of the Presbyteries that subscribed and as the records to date show is paying what she subscribed, that we can point out the secret of our success, and provided prayer has prevailed in any other Presbytery, will secure success in any Presbytery.

The secret is simply this, a fair apportionment to the congregation. And by "fair," we mean not only what those who judge the matter from without think to be fair, but it must appear so to the people of the church as well as to their officers. If they are satisfied it is just in view of the total object to be attained, they will sacrifice to give. If it is unjust, if it is manifestly unfair, prayer can overcome the blunder, and prayer will overcome the blunder before the Lord's work is allowed to suffer, but prayer ought not to overcome a blunder that ought never to be made.

The success of the campaign in South Carolina Presbytery last year was due primarily to a fair apportionment to every church. How was this made? It was made by the concerted action of men in the Presbytery who knew intimately the condition of every church, giving their Presbyterial Manager their advice, and that advice being heeded. There is no other just way to do it. The size of the church, the amounts previously given, the amount paid to pastor's salary, these have their weight. But, if these are used as the basis, hundreds of thousands of dollars will be lost to the benevolent causes through the resulting blunders of unfair apportionment.

The Presbyterian system lends itself remarkably to a great campaign. The General Assembly's Committees can set the goal for the whole church. The treasurers of the four great committees with their intimate knowledge of the Synods as a whole can say what is fair for each Synod. The Synod's Executive Committees of Home Missions, Schools and Colleges and any others that handle gifts from all the churches in the Synod acting in connection with their Committees on Systematic Beneficence can apportion to the Presbyteries. Then comes the real crux of the whole affair, the fair apportionment to a congregation. The manner of accomplishing this is indicated above. This plan has succeeded. It is not any longer experimental. It will succeed anywhere it is tried, because it is thoroughly Presbyterian and because it is common sense.

of that little church, with a rarely intelligent, strong and beaming face, the only Christian in her village, who, on her poor little bound feet, had limped seven miles to attend the service. Women like this, sought out and won by the untiring zeal of the country evangelist, in the places where they were dropping and dying in the dark, are the predestined mothers of the prophets and apostles of the new day that is brightening over these far eastern lands.

A Plea For Plain Business in Church Finance.

By Rev. Samuel M. Glasgow.

THE Financial Strength of a church is not what its members Own but what they will Give. We speak of many churches as Rich Churches. A church is as Rich as its members are Rich Towards God. There is accordingly a growing desire on the part of our membership to know their Money-Duty; how much they ought to set as a minimum obligation to the church, its support and expansion. When the ministry clearly teach, and carefully practice Proportionate Giving, with the Scriptural Tithe as a minimum basis, a great forward step will be accomplished and order will begin to take shape from financial chaos in our Church's life. As a matter of fact, most thoughtful, practical, Christian, business men want to know How Much Money Obligation they owe. The Tithe Scripturally presented and clearly explained standardizes our giving and steadies our entire church work.

The Invincible Alliance.

As an illustration of the Invincible Alliance of Regular and Proportionate Giving, the Tithe paid through the weekly envelope; I recently heard of a church, composed almost exclusively of members of very moderate means, which on the first Sunday after a six week's suspension, due to the influenza epidemic, received as its Sunday offering $652 instead of the usual sum of $120 more or less. No frenzied financial gatherings were necessary in that church to meet an utterly unprecedented experience. The Invincible Alliance, faithfully functioning under all conditions, adequately met their needs.

Let God's Money Work for God.

There's a parable with a very solemn warning about a servant that misused His Lord's Money. When once the Tithing system has been adopted in a man's heart he views a Tenth of his Income as Belonging to God in a real and practical sense. He is ready therefore to put it into God's work as it is needed. "Bring ye the Whole Tithe into the Storehouse, that there may be food in My house, saith Jehovah." Let God's Money Work for God. He has entrusted me with His Money to dispense it in His Work. Day and night, at home and abroad, wherever God's children stretch out their hands and cry to Him for His Promised Help, Let God's Money Speed away on Work for God.

One may and will understand more about human nature by the study of Christ; but one cannot understand Christ by the study of human nature. Christ is more than man, more than human, more than the theories and thoughts about men and events. We can only understand Christ by and through the exercise of faith. And unless we accept Him in faith we never come to understand Him.—Christian Sun.

A Korean Sunset.

By Rev. L. T. Newland.

All nature hushed and silent lies,
The little noises die away
To watch the Artist tint the skies
With colors of a parting day.
In warmest hues of red and gold
The unseen Artist paints a view,
That waiting stars joy to behold—
Tho daily seen, 'tis ever new.

The mountain's fading outlines throw
An inky shadow on the sky,
While bathed in heaven's reflected glow
The westward looking hillsides lie.
The sighing trees the curfew knell,
The nightingale sweet vesper sings;
While darkness weaves her witching spell
The day flies out on rosy wings.

News of the Week

At the recent Republican Convention held in Greensboro, a demand was made that election reforms be instituted in North Carolina.

By wireless President Wilson nominated Hugh C. Wallace to succeed William Graves Sharp as ambassador to France.

The amount of Federal aid allotted to the State of North Carolina for road building is $374,000.

War time regulation of coal will end March 1 if the present mild weather continues.

Bishop E. E. Hoss, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had a stroke of paralysis in Oklahoma, February 15.

American and Allied troops operating in north Russia will be withdrawn "at the earliest possible moment that weather conditions in the spring will permit." To facilitate this movement, and to improve lines of communications for the supplying of the forces that have penetrated into the country, President Wilson has approved the sending of two additional-companies of American railway troops to Archangel.

The armistice granted the Germans which expired February 17, has been extended, but under new conditions. While the terms have not been published, it is understood that they provide for continued blockade, and require that all offensive movements against the Poles must stop.

The executive committee of the South Carolina Cotton Association has named February 28 as "cotton acreage reduction pledge day," and announced that Governor Cooper will issue a proclamation making it a general holiday in South Carolina.

After an investigation ordered by Secretary Daniels, arrests have been made on charges of bribery and graft in the personnel of the Third Naval District.

The final armistice conditions which the supreme council is considering will be made public before the end of the month, according to various newspapers, and they will include among the naval conditions the demolition of the forts on Helgoland the Kiel canal, the surrender for purposes of destruction of the German warships now interned, and the opening of the Kiel canal for civil transports. It is stated that Germany will be left with a fleet large enough for defensive purposes.

At the new Orleans meeting, among other steps taken in behalf of holding up the price of cotton, the following were two of the most important: A program for the reduction of the 1919 acreage planted to cotton and the holding of the present crop for higher prices was embodied in resolutions unanimously passed at the closing session of the conference of growers, bankers, merchants and farmers from all of the cotton producing states. The salient features of the resolutions are:

1. Reduction of the 1919 cotton acreage by one-third as compared with 1918.

2. A pledge not to sell any part of the present crop for other than remunerative prices, and to hold this crop until the demand calls for it at such prices.

Without a record vote, the Senate passed the annual rivers and harbors bill, carrying appropriations of $33,000,000, or $6,000,000,000 more than the original house measure. The bill now goes to conference.

President Wilson has returned to this country after an extended visit to Europe. While abroad he was the recipient of every honor the countries visited could offer.

The Tri-State Medical Association, comprising Virginia, North and South Carolina, at this recent meeting in Richmond, Va., elected Dr. Robt. C. Bryan, of Richmond, President, and Dr. A. J. Crowell, of Charlotte, N. C., Vice-President for North Carolina, and Dr. A. R. Taft, of Charleston, S. C., Vice-President for South Carolina, with Dr. Ralph E. Hughes, of Laurens, S. C., Secretary and Treasurer.

The next Victory Loan is limited to seven billions, and Secretary Glass is authorized to fix the rates of interest.

Fifteen of those charged with rioting at Winston-Salem, N. C., November 17, 1918, and attempting to lynch a negro, were tried and convicted. Only one was acquitted. Their sentences ranged from 14 months to six years on the county roads.

A maximum sentence of twenty years in Leavenworth prison was imposed by Federal Judge Landis today on Congressman-elect Victor L. Berger, of Milwaukee, and four other socialist leaders.

On February 20 Premier Clemenceau was shot by a young anarchist. Three of seven shots struck him. His lungs were penetrated, but the latest news is that he is recovering.

On the 21st of February Eisner, Premier of Bavaria, and Auer, Minister of Interior, were both shot. Eisner was killed.

If We But Knew.

If we but knew that through the closing door
Some one we love would enter nevermore,
Would we not hasten with our richest store?
If we but knew!

If we but knew that from the market-place,
Soon we should miss some kind, familiar face,
Would our cold greetings not be touched with grace?
If we but knew!

Dear Jesus, patient, understanding, kind,
We are Thy lost sheep in a winter wind,
Forgive us that we are so wilful, blind!
Teach us to know!

—Annie S. Swan, in British Weekly.

Three things are involved in looking to Jesus according to the apostolic injunction—namely: To believe what he hath said, to do what he hath enjoined, and to take what He offereth to give. All this is in the present tense; today is the day of this salvation. Everyone who tests the power of the Gospel can say with the apostle of heroic and loving spirit: "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." The loving witnesses are many. Now is the accepted time.—Selected.

"This is the thing which I know, and which, if you labor faithfully, you shall know also—that in Reverence is the chief power and joy of life; Reverence for what is pure and bright in your own youth; for what is true and tried in the age of others; for all that is gracious among the living, great among the dead, and marvelous in the Powers that cannot die."—Ruskin.

Topic for Sunday, March 9—Lost by Looking: Prov. 23:29-35. (Temperance Meeting).

The national Congress and the State Legislatures have voted an amendment to the Federal Constitution, providing for nation-wide prohibition. This is a very great victory for the temperance forces, but it does not end the fight. Thousands will yet be destroyed by drink in the United States. The main significance of the legislative victory is to hearten us for a continuance of the fight until the will for drink shall be demolished. From now on the fight will be waged for making prohibition effective by convincing the whole mass of the people that drinking is personally and socially harmful and a sinful breach of the spirit of the nation's law.

Even when at some future day a full end shall have been made to drunkenness, the noble strife for temperance will not necessarily be ended. For there are other intemperate acts and habits besides that of drinking.

Intemperate speech is every whit as sinful as drunkenness, when that speech takes the form of vulgarity, lying, or profanity. We shall one day stand before the great God for judgment; and He has put us on notice fairly that we shall have to answer then for our words. He particularly warns us that He will not hold him guiltless that taketh His name in vain.

Unbridled lust for money is sinful intemperance. When we give ourselves up to a hot-hearted greed we sell ourselves to the devil for his uses. Once the money lust gains control of us, whether we are poor or rich, we are at the mercy of the devil, who plays maliciously with us as a tiger toys with his victim. Our end is then certain, unless a miraculous deliverance comes from God.

Unrestrained indulgence in pleasure is grave intemperance. A wise old man said five years ago that the principal menace to the characters and careers of our young people was the rage for pleasure. The war came and changed all of that, and the lives of our young people were called back to deeper emotions and purposes. But the war is over now, and the lure of empty pleasures will be calling again to our youth. Happy in later years will be the youth of today who holds himself down to moderate and safe enjoyment, and who hears above the laughter of his pleasures the calls of duty and of Christ.

* * *

The foundation of a temperate life is a temperate heart. Out of the heart are the issues of life. To keep the heart pure and strong we must keep all the gates well guarded. Especially must eye-gate and ear-gate be held, for these are the main entrance for agents that stir the lusts. A glance at the sparkling cup, attention to a story of forbidden things, a look at an unclean picture—then a horrid outbreak of intemperance that scars and shakes a life.

* * *

What is the Tenth Commandment? Tell how it aims at preventing sins by checking them at the first stage, which is desire.

How does the Holy Spirit help us to be temperate?
 How can we help others to be temperate?

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING MARCH 2, 1919:
 SABBATH SCHOOL EXTENSION AND PUBLICATION—Luke 18:16.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

On the famous field of Crecy the Black Prince overcame the King of Bohemia and appropriated his three ostrich feathers encircled by a coronet, and tied together by a ribbon, bearing the motto "Ich dien," "I serve." Since that time this has been the motto of the Princes of Wales.

It would not be an inappropriate motto for our Committee of Publication.

To most of us this publication enterprise of the Church is simply a "concern"—a book house and a publishing house.

But it is this—and much more. It serves; and one line of its service is in Sabbath School Extension.

Our Scripture lesson presents to us one of the greatest canvases that adorn the walls of history, Jesus and the little babes. "And they brought unto Him their babes that He should touch them." We see the indignant disciples rebuking these mothers; and they are turning away in sadness when Jesus calls them unto Him, saying, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

"I serve" was written upon this as upon every action of Jesus. He it was who taught the world the dignity and glory of babyhood and childhood.

AT THE DOOR.

Lord of this earthly scene,
 I who am parting
 Gladly thy guest have been,
 And wistful starting,
 Give thee my thanks; for though
 The rest were blindness,
 Into the dark I go
 Singing thy kindness.

I sing earth's common things
 Thou'st lordly granted—
 Sunset, and shy wood-springs,
 And dim, foam-haunted
 In-flowing moon-litten tides,
 The Spring's green laughter,
 And lost Love's smile that bides
 All life long after;

Amber of morning walls,
 Dew, and child-fingers
 Whose touch a rose-leaf falls,
 A rose-breath lingers,
 Sidling swift rains of June,
 And strange, far-crying
 Birds in the dark o' the moon
 With summer flying.

Great gifts in grander hymn
 Be others' showing—
 I, in the twilight dim,
 Trembling and going,
 Give thee good-night, good Lord,
 And still thanksgiving
 For all one heart has stored,
 Looking and living.

THE REPORT OF THE SPIES.

Golden Text—I John 5:4: "This is the victory that overcometh the world even our faith."

Num. 14:1-10.

March 2, 1919.

When they reached Kadesh Barnea, near the border of the land of Canaan, Moses sent twelve men, one from each tribe, to examine the land and report. They spent forty days in searching the land, considering its character, its products, its woods, the inhabitants, its cities and the mode in which they lived. They brought with them upon their return specimens of the fruits of the land. There was a majority report by ten and a minority report by two. These reports and their results claim our attention.

I. The Majority Report.

Ten men made a false report, inconsistent with itself and dictated not by facts but by their fears and unbelief. They admitted that the "land flowed with milk and honey," but at the same time declared that "it was a land that ate up the inhabitants thereof." They affirmed that the people "lived in cities walled up to heaven," that they saw giants, that the inhabitants were great and stronger than themselves and that in comparison with them "they were as grasshoppers." They asserted that they were utterly unable to take possession of the land and refused to make the effort. They forgot that they were allied to Almighty power and that the unfailing promises of Jehovah guaranteed the exercise thereof. Majorities are not always right, and believing a lie always leads to sorrow and distress.

II. Caleb and Joshua's Report.

These men representing Judah and Ephraim were full of faith and truth and manifest a courage and steadfastness that habitually are produced by these graces. They will not "follow a multitude to do evil" nor misrepresent facts at the dictates of craven fear and blind unbelief. They will not dishonor the power and promises of Jehovah. They boldly maintain that it is a "good land, flowing with milk and honey," and their words are attested by the products presented. They declare that "if the Lord delight in them they are well able to take possession of the land." They affirm that "they need not fear the Canaanites, that their defense has departed from them and they would only be bread for them. They urge their brethren to trust Jehovah and not to rebel against Him." Sublime in their trust, heroic in courage and faithful in testimony, Caleb and Joshua secured fitting reward.

III. The Effects of the Reports.

These were marked and varied, on the people, the devout in Israel, and Jehovah. The people were distressed and wept. They believed a lie and thought that they and their children were about to become the prey of their enemies. They were rebellious against Jehovah's commands and the authority of Moses. They proposed to "make them a captain and return to Egypt." They rejected Caleb and Joshua's report and advised that they be stoned to death. Moses and Aaron and the devout in Israel fell on their faces, dreading the displeasure of the Almighty. The Lord Himself had His fierce wrath kindled by the unbelief, disobedience and rebellion of the people, and threatened to destroy them, and to make of Moses a nation greater and mightier than they. Through the intercession of Moses, as on a former occasion, Israel was spared and pardoned. But they were not exempted from the temporal consequences of their conduct. Men may be pardoned as to the eternal penalty of sin or have its infliction delayed and yet have in time the chastisement due to their sin. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." "Sow falsehood and you will reap falsehood," "Sow truth and you will reap truth," "Sow impurity and you will reap defilement."

IV. Jehovah's Judgments as to These Reports.

We have plainly recorded what the Lord decided as to these reports and their effects. He condemned the ten false witnesses who had discouraged and led astray their brethren, to instant death. "They died by the plague before the Lord." He commended the conduct of Caleb and Joshua, and declared that they only of all the adults that come out of Egypt should enter and enjoy the land of promise. He granted to Caleb, who wholly followed the Lord, not only to enter Canaan but to have as heritage Hebron, the home of his ancestors. He sentenced the unbelieving people not to see or enter the promised land. When against His prohibition some of them attempted to conquer Canaan, He permitted their enemies to triumph over them. He remanded them to the wilderness for forty years, a year for each day they had searched the land, and declared that their carcasses should perish in the wilderness. He affirmed that He would cause their little ones whom they said "would be a prey" to be trained to inherit the land. "They could not enter in because of unbelief," and many for the same reasons can't enter heaven.

Prayer Meeting.

Matthew has preserved that other picture when Jesus calls a child to Him, and sets the child before His disciples, saying, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven." We can not read these things without seeing how Jesus loved children. "What then shall this child be?" all who love Jesus should be asking this concerning the thousands of children who are growing—growing, but not in the knowledge of Jesus, not in the knowledge of God, not in the knowledge of God's Book.

They are growing—thousands of them, without help from the church, without love from any of Christ's disciples.

Our Sabbath School Extension is the church reaching out a helping, a loving, and guiding hand to these neglected thousands. It is a great work that should make a powerful appeal to every follower of Jesus. The committee has done the best they could with the paltry sums we have entrusted them with for the work. If I mistake not, the profits of the book "concern" yonder in Richmond also are used to supplement our gifts to send men to the neglected children to teach them of Jesus. If the committee has not done all that it might have done, if it has not had the best men and women for this work, it has not been their fault, but ours. As we think of these thousands of unfortunate children, we think of Jesus, His love for them, his yearning for their love; and we ask of each of them: "What shall this child be?" The answer to that question depends largely upon us.

Alas they have no Zacharias and Elizabeth to train them, to read to them the sacred story, to teach them the sacred story, to teach them the ways and words of God.

The writer speaks advisedly when he says that great numbers even of the children of well-to-do people are growing to manhood with no working knowledge of the Bible. No human agency can take the honored place of the Christian home in the proper and adequate instruction of children in God's Word; but the Sunday School is the next best thing; and can be made, with the right kind of teachers, a splendid instrument of Christian enlightenment. "What then shall this child be?" That child away off in the mountains; away off from the railway; or in the crowded sections of our cities? One thing is certain: Christ Jesus does not want them to swell the lawless class; the unbelieving class; the large class of merely worldlings. Their greatest need is—Jesus; and every Southern Presbyterian can pray for these boys and girls, these ignorant men and women; every one of us can love them, as Christ Jesus loves them; and then the committee will overtake its task.

Devotional

THE UNEXHAUSTED GOD.

Unwearied and unspent, God remains the constant factor in the life of the world. The nations of Europe, prostrated by a long war, are like a sick man whose fever has turned, but who has yet to regain the full measure of his strength. America, with its human and material resources far less exhausted, shares, nevertheless, the general unrest of the times.

Civilization is menaced by the revolutionary forces let loose during the last four years. Certain capitalists hail the return of peace chiefly because they think it ushers in unparalleled opportunities for building up personal fortunes. Many working people in all lands are the prey of demagogues, and are being led by them into an attitude of envy, hate and unreasonable antipathy to honest and productive toil. Problems relating to the very basis of popular government, the production and distribution of the goods of life, the orderly conducting of public business, the adjustment of class and race to race, challenge the statesmen of all lands.

Amid all these disturbances and upheavals, God remains calm, adequate, purposeful. He was not a mere spectator of the just ended war; He furnished the impulse for every deed of valor and self-sacrifice. The war with Him at its heart could not end otherwise than it did end. And He alone emerges unexhausted and inexhaustible. "Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard? the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary."

The God who sustained and guided us through the war, will make His power and wisdom known in the deliberations, the decisions and the deeds of the days just before us. His interest is not in world affairs only, but in the slightest concern of every child of His.

If bereavement has narrowed the household circle, if the struggle to live decently and honorably is harder than ever it was, if we are the prey of doubt and fear, our God is rich and resourceful. We can have all we want of His strength and serenity. We do not lose Him overnight. "When I awake I am still with Thee." He never fades away into thin air. "Thou compasseth my paths and my lying down."

All the power we can exercise is derived power. "Apart from me, ye can do nothing." We have only a few fleeting earthly years, a limited measure of physical nervous vitality. We easily come to our "wit's end," but that sense of inadequacy is the indispensable condition of realizing the wealth of unseen resources. "I was brought low and He helped me." "When I am weak, then am I strong." All our public problems will resolve themselves aright when kings and presidents, ambassadors and labor leaders seek to know the mind of Christ, the will of God, and then set themselves resolutely to the embodiment of that will in laws and institutions.

Our personal lives can never become thin or weak or dull when we open them from day to day to God's infilling. Nineteen hundred and nineteen, and the years that follow, have in store for us rich surprises. Wonderful things our God will yet bring to pass. He is the first, the last and the constant factor in human life, and He who spared not His own Son, but freely gave Him up for us all, will, with Him, freely give us all things.—Congregationalist and Advance.

FORGIVENESS AND FEAR.

There is forgiveness with God, that He may be feared. Fear in the Bible is not terror. He whose sins are forgiven is not afraid of God, and has no reason to be. Perfect love casteth out such fear. Christian fear is reverence and consecration. David prayed, "Stablish thy word into thy servant who is devoted to thy fear." With him the word meant service or obedience. The forgiveness of sins should be the beginning of a life devoted to the service of God. It will be so with those who appreciate His mercy. They will make known His goodness, that others may unite with them in praising His name.—Sermons for Silent Sabbaths.

TEACHING CHILDREN THE MEANING OF MONEY.

"I want my child to begin so early to lay aside a tenth of his money that when he gets to be a man he will never remember not having done it."

If the teachings of Christian Stewardship had been wisely worked into the Sunday School lessons of a generation ago, there would not today be an army of adult Christians trying to answer the question of whether or not one can dare to be systematic enough and trustful enough to lay the tenth of the income upon God's altar.

So important is this matter that I asked the friend who made the remark at the head of this article to tell me of his method.

"Each week," he replied, "I make to each child an allowance equaling the number of cents that he is years old. From this allowance he is obliged to give one-tenth to the church, or Sunday School, and in addition, all other money which comes into his hands must be also tithed. While he is under ten years old, I give an additional cent, so that he may always have as a minimum a penny for the Sunday School collection from his own funds.

"The principle which I have in mind, in the use of this method, is that he may practice tithing from the very beginning. It will be as natural for him to think of tithing all that he has as it is for him to eat his breakfast in the morning.

"A further principle which I am seeking to inculcate is the habit of saving. For instance, if a child wishes a certain thing, as a watch or a gun, I say, 'Very well, how much money can you pay toward it?' If I think the child's request should be granted, I offer to supplement his savings with an amount which still leaves him somewhat short of the amount necessary to make his purchase. This requires that he continue saving for some period of time. As an incentive to keep my son from spending all his personal funds, I have offered to increase by an equal amount all that he will save for his college education. This he is now investing in War Savings Stamps from time to time."—Men and Money.

USES OF OUR PAST.

We should remember our past lost condition to keep us humble and faithful. We should remember past failures and mistakes, that we may not repeat them. We should remember past mercies, that we may have confidence in new needs or trials in the future. We should remember past comforts, that there may be stars in our sky when night comes again. But while there are these true uses of memory, we should guard against living in the past. We should draw our life's inspiration not from memory, but from hope; not from what is gone, but from what is yet to come. Forgetting the things which are behind, we should reach forward unto those things which are before.—J. R. Miller.

SELF-CONTROL.

No man is at his best when he has lost control of himself, and the time of all times when a man needs to be at his best is when he is being attacked. Yet how many men deceive themselves into thinking that they actually gain in force and effectiveness by letting go of themselves—"getting mad" and showing it—under provocation! To do so is both to weaken oneself and to uncover that weakness to others. The man who can continue to smile, inside and out, no matter what the provocation to do otherwise, has a weapon that makes him hopelessly invincible to his enemies. The man who "gets mad" hands over his best weapon to the opposition.—Mazzini.

Collections—The month of February, as a whole, is not assigned to any one cause, but in many of the Synods and Presbyteries it is assigned to Synodical, Presbyterian or Congregational Home Missions. Pastors and churches can obtain information from the chairman of the committee of their own Presbytery. February 16 to 23 is Self-Denial Week. The Assembly appointed this week as a season of special prayer, preaching and self-denial in the interest of our Foreign Mission Work.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

To the Presbyterian Stated Clerks:

Our next General Assembly meets May 15 in Napoleon Avogue Church, New Orleans. And as so much of the convenience and success of its work depends upon the accuracy and promptness of the Stated Clerks of the 87 Presbyteries, I would take occasion at this early date to say a few words to you whose service is most important.

1. As there have been an unusual number of changes in the clerkships this year, I would ask those who have come into office since the last Assembly please to notify me at once so that I may know with whom to communicate.
2. Be sure to procure a new set of blanks for reports this year. The Assembly orders changes nearly every year, so that it is never safe to use old blanks.
3. Take special care to fill out all these blanks according to the directions printed on them, and add up all the columns, using the adding machine if practicable.
4. Mail to me all these reports, and any other documents for the Assembly, as early as possible—at the latest by May 1—so that I may put the printers to work on the statistical tables, and tabulate other reports for the Assembly.
5. See that the Assembly assessment on your Presbytery, as appears on page 269, Minutes of 1918, is paid before the Assembly lest your commissioners be embarrassed about their expenses.
6. A number of clerks have been saving labor for themselves and expense to their Presbyteries by having their statistical tables for their Spring Minutes printed from the Assembly's copy. Any who desire this should inform me when they send their tables, which I will have Band & White, Printers, Spartanburg, S. C., who have the job of the Assembly Minutes this year, to set up promptly, and strike off for you from the Assembly's plates as many copies as you may order, and mail them to you, charging only for the extra work. Thus, you need prepare but one copy, and will not have to pay for the typesetting.

Spartanburg, S. C. Thos. H. Law, Stated Clerk.

PERSONALS.

The pulpit of the West Avenue Church, Charlotte, was filled Sunday morning by Rev. J. R. Bridges.

Rev. Edgar Tufts, in whose work at Banner Elk the entire Church is interested, has been quite sick for some time. A recent note from him brings the pleasing news that he is now sitting up.

In the absence of Dr. Sibley the pulpit of the Tenth Avenue Church was filled in the morning by Rev. E. N. Orr, D.D., Religious Director at Camp Greene, and Rev. J. E. Wool at the evening service.

The War Department has approved the application for the establishment of a Reserved Officers' Training Corps in the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, Clinton, S. C. Maj. Frederick J. Derohan has been detailed as Professor of Military Science and Tactics. He will arrive in a few days, and the unit will be established at once.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Columbia—Rev. W. H. Boggs, pastor of Arsenal Hill Church, is drawing fine congregations morning and night. The spirit of the church is growingly hopeful, and there is every prospect of a splendid future.

Anderson—Central Church—P. S. McChesney, pastor. The members of this church are rejoicing over the paying off last week of all indebtedness on the church. The debt had grown through the years until the total amount was $2,750. The full amount was quickly raised, the people apparently finding great pleasure in wiping it out. We are planning to dedicate in the near future.

Chester—Purity Church—The congregation of this church last Sabbath elected the following gentlemen to serve as additional members to the session of this church: Messrs. J. E. Craig, J. H. McLure, A. M. Aiken, R. L. Douglas. Instead of nominations for this office by the session, the congregation did the nominating, thus relieving the responsibility of the session in this matter.

Clinton—Thornwell Orphanage has had several cases of small-pox, which has interrupted its work. From "Our Monthly" we clip the following:

"The small-pox situation is both encouraging and discouraging. It is encouraging in that the sick have gotten on finely. The two bad cases have come round all right. The most of the other dozen or so cases have been mild. The discouraging feature is that we have had new cases developing within the last few days. We are tightening down on the quarantine; we hope within a short time to overcome the malady. School was suspended on January 5 on account of the epidemic, but we have been able to resume the work."

The extra expense incurred should open the hearts and purses of its friends to come to its help at this time.

Dr. Lynn and his associates have the sympathy of all.

Columbia—The Presbyterians of Columbia and vicinity held a Sunday School Institute Friday, February 21, with sessions morning, afternoon and evening.

The morning program was as follows: Opening exercises by Rev. W. H. Boggs; Graded Sunday School and Literature, by Rev. W. S. Harden; "The Church's Training School," Rev. A. W. Blackwood; "Sunday School Program," Rev. Daniel Iverson.

The program for the afternoon session was as follows: Opening exercises by Rev. M. F. Daniels; "Stopping the Leak," by Rev. W. H. Boggs; "Sunday School Methods," by Rev. Daniel Iverson; Discussion, led by Rev. W. S. Harden.

The evening session began at 7:30 with opening exercises by M. M. Freeman; "Grownups in Sunday School," by F. F. Whilden; "Sunday School and Missions," by Rev. J. O. Reavis, D.D.; "Measuring up Sunday School by Efficiency Charts," by Rev. W. S. Harden.

This institute was arranged by Rev. Daniel Iverson, of St. Matthews, chairman of the Sunday School work of Congaree Presbytery.

Great Falls—The Great Falls Church is now closing one of the most active year's work in all the history of the church. The present pastor entered the work here last May with great enthusiasm and untiring efforts. The membership of the church has increased nearly fifty per cent and progress has been made along all lines of the church work.

The church has recently made an increase of $300 in the pastor's salary, which is a very substantial expression of love and care for the pastor and his family. The church also expects to give considerably more next year to benevolences than ever before.

NORTH CAROLINA.

To the Societies of Concord Presbyterian Auxiliary—The Presbyterian contingent fee of 15 cents per member is now due, and all societies are requested to send this to Mrs. E. B. Watts, Statesville, N. C., as early as possible.

The Gilwood Bible Study Class gave their pastor, for a Christmas present, an elegant Bible, which was very much appreciated. This class meets from house to house, every Wednesday night, for the study of the Sunday School lesson. The meetings have been very much interfered with recently by the prevalence of the "flu."

Poplar Tent—The ladies of the Poplar Tent congregation, with some assistance from the men, put a new floor in one room of the manse, adding much to its comfort. They contemplate further repairs as the season opens. Also certain members of the congregation presented the pastor and his wife with a splendid pair of Elkin blankets, that they might be warmed, and a pair of pigs, that in due time they might be fed.

Pittsboro—The Presbyterian Church at Pittsboro has extended a call to Rev. R. M. Phillips, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, of Summerville, S. C. The Record states that Mr. Phillips preached a very impressive sermon at Pittsboro on the second Sunday in December and that it is hoped that he will accept the call extended to him. Mr. Phillips' parents live near Sanford, N. C.

The Evangelistic Work of the Synod—McGee-Hoskins—Charlotte—Rev. L. W. Brown, pastor. The meeting here was under many difficulties. Mr. Black was shut out of another point by the influenza. He arranged with the pastor here at the last moment and began at once. Mr. Black was unable to hold some of the services, suffered from an attack of muscular rheumatism throughout, and preached under much difficulty. The last and most important day of the meeting for ingathering it snowed all day. Notwithstanding the difficulties, Mr. Black reports about twenty who indicated their acceptance of Christ. Three united with the Presbyterian Church. Three promised to establish family worship. A contribution of $40 was made for the mission work of the Synod.

At this writing Mr. Black is at Elizabethtown, in Wilmington Presbytery.

A. W. C.

Pineville—The Presbyterian congregation at Pineville, Rev. Geo. F. Robertson, pastor, worshipped Sunday, February 16, for the first time in their thoroughly renovated and greatly improved auditorium. The church has heavily paneled ceiling, painted cream tint with walls light blue; wainscoting all around and window frames oaken color to correspond with the new oak pews and pulpit. The art windows are of a very simple design, but all the prettier for that. The two old entrance doors have been turned into windows and the double window in the center was turned into a double door, facing the one broad aisle which succeeds the two narrow ones. The new electric lighting of the church is plain and simple, but adds to the beauty of the interior and makes the church light as day.

The pastor begins a meeting Wednesday, February 26th inst., to conclude the Sunday following with the Lord's Supper at the morning service.

This congregation invites all former pastors and members, far and near, to a "Home Coming" the first Sunday in April. There will be at least three services during the day and evening, with dinner on the grounds. Notify the pastor, or Mr. W. A. Barnett, clerk of session, of your coming without fail. Remember the date—April 6.

*Durham—First Church—*Next Thursday, February 20, will mark the seventeenth anniversary of the arrival of our pastor, Dr. Leyburn, and his family, in Durham. These seventeen years have been years of great blessing and growth for our church. A total of 1,029 members have been received during that time, 558 on confession of faith and 471 by letter. From one Presbyterian Church in Durham, with a membership of 429 in 1902, there are now four Presbyterian churches with a combined membership of 970. Although the First Church has lost heavily by deaths and removals, there being only 60 members here now who were members of this church at the beginning of the present pastorate, and although it has set off three colonies into organized churches, it now has 560 resident members and ranked second among the 488 churches of our Synod last year in its gifts to systematic beneficence, and third in the number of new members received during the year. While this is a splendid record, both our pastor and the church are to be congratulated upon the fact that at the end of this period we find our church making greater progress than at any other period of its history, with the future holding out promise for even better results in all departments of our church life.

*Davidson—*Pleasing to Davidsonians is the news coming from Richmond that Rev. Charles King, who graduated here a few years ago and is now taking graduate studies at Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, as the holder of the Moses D. Hoge fellowship, has been called to the pastorate of the Grace Street Presbyterian Church, Richmond. The honor is the more striking in the fact that Mr. King finished the regular seminary course only a year ago. He will have as his running mate and co-pastor another Davidson man, Marion Boggs, who completes his seminary course this spring. Still another Davidson man, Maj. W. G. Sommerville, ex-'16, since the close of the war re-entering the seminary, is in charge of work among the soldiers that is conducted by this church.

The Student Y. M. C. A. anticipates with keen interest the coming next week of Rev. Dr. Chas. F. Myers, of Greensboro, to conduct a series of services in the Association. He will be here from Monday, the 24th inst., through Wednesday. Dr. Myers will be accompanied by Mrs. Myers and with them come a quartet of his church, two ladies and two gentlemen, a group of singers whose reputation has far outgrown the bounds of their own congregation.

Lieutenant Colonel Mueller, recently stationed at Camp Beauregard, accompanied by Mrs. Mueller, has arrived at Davidson and is taking charge of the R. O. T. C., to be formally established in a day or two.

APPALACHIA.

*Notes From Banner Elk—*Owing to a protracted illness that has now extended over a period of nine weeks, Mr. Tufts has declined to accept the offer to become Superintendent of Home Missions for the Appalachian Synod, extended to him by the Synod's Committee. The people with whom and for whom he has labored for over twenty years have been so concerned and so kind during his illness that he feels that it is his duty as well as pleasure to remain at Banner Elk.

The prospects for a large and useful session of the Lees-McRae Institute at Banner Elk were never brighter. The session will begin on April 10 and close on December 2. Mrs. Jennie P. Lyons, of Rogersville, Tenn., will be principal of the Graded School and Miss Estelle McIver principal of the High School.

The Grandfather Orphanage, under the efficient management of Mr. J. W. Holcomb, who is now filling the place of treasurer as well as superintendent, is in fine shape and growing all the time. There are forty-three children in the two dormitories and others waiting to come.

The Sunday School, under the faithful oversight of Mr. T. H. Stinson, has not failed to meet during the winter, although there has been no preaching in the church since the third Sunday in December. When the Armenian drive was on this Sunday School raised $67 for this cause.

ARKANSAS.

*Stamps-Lewisville—*After a pastorate of two years I am leaving for Blytheville, Arkansas. During this time forty-six members were added to the church rolls, including a mission church in the country. The most marked development was along the line of Christian liberality. After a year's extensive preparation and a week's intensive preparation, the Assembly's plan of finance was introduced and put into operation. This resulted in bringing the churches from indifferent givers to be among the first in Ouachita Presbytery. Stamps the first year reached the four-dollar standard for foreign missions, and the reports this year will be better still. Another result of the introduction of the E. M. C. was the preparation for a regrouping of the churches, Lewisville and Stamps each to be grouped with weaker churches and have resident pastors and services three-fourths time instead of half time. Pledges were secured for about $4,000, sufficient to pay a pastor a salary of $1,500 and furnish a manse in each field. Whether the proposed new grouping becomes effective or not will depend on the zeal of the leaders to overcome the reluctance on the part of Stamps and Lewisville to dissolve a most pleasant partnership which has existed for many years. Lewisville has by making her pledges on that basis indicated her desire for the new arrangement; Stamps has indicated her willingness; the pledges have been made; and Presbytery has approved the plan.

We are leaving the field with much reluctance. Stamps declined to join in a request for a dissolution of the pastoral relation. On our departure the congregation and individuals presented us with a purse of $240. Fortunate is the preacher whose lot is cast with so kind a people.

J. Walter Cobb.

GEORGIA.

The Presbytery of Macon met in the Central Presbyterian Church of Atlanta on January 29, 1919. Rev. J. E. Wallace was elected moderator. The report of the committee on Systematic Beneficence was adopted. This report recommended the adoption of $41,990 as Presbytery's share in the Assembly's Progressive Campaign and the apportioning of this sum among the churches. The following per cents were adopted: Foreign Missions, 37 per cent; Assembly Home Missions, 18 per cent; Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, 7 per cent; S. S. Extension, 2 per cent; Bible Cause, 1 per cent; Synod's Home Missions, 5 per cent; Presbytery's Home Missions, 18 per cent; Congregational Home Missions, 3 per cent; Columbia Seminary, 1 per cent; Davidson College, 1 per cent; Nacoochee Institute, 4 per cent; Orphan Homes, 3 per cent.

Dr. E. M. Craig was elected manager of the Presbytery for the campaign for one year.

Resolutions were adopted commending the work of Rev. L. W. Curtis, formerly Superintendent of Home Missions.

Rev. Frank D. Hunt was elected Superintendent and Evangelist of the Presbytery.

Thomasville, Ga., was chosen as the place of the next stated meeting. Presbytery adjourned to meet Tuesday after the third Sabbath of April (22nd), 1919, at 7:30 p. m.

TENNESSEE.

Murfreesboro—Following the request of the Y. M. C. A., the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Murfreesboro, had "Father and Boy" day on February 16, the pastor preaching a special sermons to fathers. The ushers and those who took the offering were boys from the Sunday School. At night we had a special service for the returning soldiers. Mr. Blake Carlton, the leader of our large vested choir, spent a year with the soldiers teaching them to sing, and so he delivered the first address on "The Inspiration Music is to Soldiers." Mr. Marshall, of Tennessee College, who spent a year in Y. M. C. A. work, spoke on that subject. Lieut. Howard Hooper, of Murfreesboro, who did such effective work in France, was to have spoken on "How a Soldier Feels When Going Into Battle," but as he was providentially absent Capt. Richard Beard, with four years' experience in the Civil War, spoke on that subject. Corp. Leon Riley, the son of Captain Riley, of Confederate fame, gave us "Some of His Experiences in Camp Life," while Mr. Aaron Weise, a Jew of our city, in the Aviation Corps, gave us a wonderful address. The large congregation was so interested with the services that many came forward at the close to congratulate the speakers. The annual banquet of the Business Men's Bible Class takes place tonight. Mr. James Clayton is the president of the class. Dr. Alvin Lewis, of Tennessee College, formerly an elder in the Presbyterian Church, Bowling Green, Ky., Ph.D. of John's Hopkins, Baltimore, is the teacher. More than one hundred have accepted an invitation to be present. Wish the genial editors of the Presbyterian Standard could be on hand, for they would find the ladies of our church past-masters or past-mistresses in arranging for the "department of the interior."

TEXAS.

Big Springs—Rev. J. W. Harrison has accepted a call to this church and will begin his work at once. Mr. Harrison has been religious work secretary at the Base Hospital Y. M. C. A. at Fort Bliss, Tex., for some time.

McAllen—This church has the distinction of being the first self-supporting church to grow out of the Home Mission work done by the Presbytery of Western Texas in the Lower Rio Grande valley. It has recently called to be its pastor Rev. E. B. Paisley, who was religious work director for the Y. M. C. A. at Kelly Field and later a chaplain. Mr. Paisley has entered upon his work here and has been given a most cordial reception.

Laredo—Rev. L. H. Wharton has entered anew upon his work as pastor here, after many months spent in war work in this country and later in work among the soldiers overseas. His congregation was most happy when he returned to take up the work again and are equally happy over his ministry to the men in the army.

VIRGINIA.

Lynchburg—Stewardship Conference—There will be a Laymen's Convention at Lynchburg, Va., at the First Presbyterian Church, March 4 and 5, beginning at 2:30 p. m., Tuesday, and continuing through Wednesday and Wednesday night. Notable men and great platform speakers with deeply spiritual messages have been secured for the occasion. The convention will be for all of Virginia and North Carolina men in preparation for the spring campaign to raise $3,500,000 for Benevolences for all the great causes of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

It is earnestly hoped that every campaign manager of Synod, and Presbytery, and groups of churches, and all congregational managers from Virginia and North Carolina will make a special and determined effort to be present at the Lynchburg Convention, March 4-5.

Lexington—At the morning service, Sunday, February 16, four persons were received on profession and three by letter.

At a joint meeting of elders and deacons held after the service it was unanimously resolved to accept the sum of $9,600 apportioned to us as our share to be given to benevolences for the coming fiscal year, and to make on earnest effort to reach that figure, although it exceeds by $1,100 our allotment for the year just closing.

A. H.

Richmond—Covenant Church—This congregation has extended a hearty call to Rev. Charles L. King to become pastor and to Rev. Marion A. Boggs to become associate pastor of the church. This is the largest Presbyterian church in Richmond.

This call of two men is an unusual action for a church, and what makes it more remarkable is the youthfulness and unusual promise of the two men called.

Mr. King is a Georgian by birth and a graduate of Davidson College and Union Seminary, and at the last named institution he received the Moses D. Hoge Fellowship of post-graduate study, which is the highest honor the Seminary can bestow.

Mr. Boggs is a native of Liberty, S. C., and is a member of the family of that name which has for many generations produced such a large number of able and influential preachers in the Presbyterian Church. He, too, is a graduate of Davidson College.

Dr. Walter Moore and Dr. Walter Lingle gave these young men the highest endorsement.

Rev. J. Calvin Stewart, D.D., was for thirty years the successful pastor, and is now the pastor emeritus, having resigned from the active pastorate about a year ago on account of declining health. He was present at the meeting, giving his approval and benediction to the new plans. He will continue to serve the church by his counsel and in every way that his health will permit.

A SLOGAN FOR THE MARCH DRIVE.

By Rev. R. F. Campbell, D.D.

In the college regattas one of the slogans for the crews used to be "A long pull,

A strong pull,
And a pull all together!"

This is what we need in the Drive the Church is to make in March to raise $3,500,000 during the next ecclesiastical year for the beneficent causes.

It must be a long pull. Don't splash the water or "catch a crab," but give the oar full sweep at every pull.

It must be a strong pull. Faint heart never won a race. It is "the laboring oar" that drives the boat forward to its goal.

It must be "a pull all together." One slacker in a crew will bring defeat.

Let us "push off,
And sitting well in order, smite
The sounding furrows."

Let every oarsman do his duty. And, finally, in it all, let us seek God's help.

"For oars alone can ne'er prevail
To reach the wished-for coast;
The breath of Heaven must swell the sail,
Or all our toil is lost!"

Story and Incident

The Entertaining of Tall Pine

A GREAT many years ago, about the time when our great-grandmothers were little girls, a family named Brown lived in a one-story log house in a clearing in the forest about fifty miles from where Toronto was built. The family was composed of Father Brown, Mother Brown and their three children, Betty, Sally and William John, aged eight, five and three years respectively.

Though consisting of only one room, the little house was as cozy and dainty as Mother Brown's skillful hands could arrange it. Pretty hangings, brought from the old country, covered the home-made beds and table; the rough chairs and floor were scoured till they attained a purity of color rivaling old ivory; while dainty, white curtains peeped through the tiny window at the green old forest trees which kept guard about the little cot.

Father Brown, too, had more than done his part, as was evinced by the steadily growing cleared space, and by the stable which sheltered the beginning of his "herd." Altogether the Browns were a very happy family, and they felt they had a great deal for which to be thankful, especially upon this Christmas Eve about which I am going to tell you.

Father had left early the previous morning for the village, fifteen miles distant. It was an open secret that his errand was to purchase Christmas gifts, and also to pick up all the gossip and news possible, the relating of which would while away many of the long evenings ahead.

Mr. Brown had calculated to be home at noon on the day of Christmas Eve, but a storm had arisen during the night of his absence, which circumstance made fast traveling difficult. No uneasiness, therefore, was felt by the family when they gathered together in the house at dusk after the chores and small tasks of the evening were finished and father had not returned.

For economical reasons, and also because the children loved to frolic in the twilight, the hearth shed the only light in the room. Mrs. Brown stirred meditatively at the savory stew in the big kettle swung over the fire, her eyes gazing into the flames, seeing, perhaps, other Christmases long ago in England, when she walked to the chapel between her father and her mother, her young heart beating fast in response to the sweet chimes ringing on the crisp air; or perhaps she was living again the happy hour when the united family gathered about the long table in the dining room to share Christmas joys again. As their mother dreamed in the firelight, Betty and Sally, with baby William John, played quietly among the shadows, keeping in mind mother's conditional promise that she would tell them a long story about when she was a little girl if they behaved themselves now. So you can fancy the homely little room, with its pioneer furnishings, the quaint becurled and pantletted little girls and their tiny brother with the dignified name, the pretty young mother apparently tending the preparation of her stew, and the warm flames casting their ruddy glow over all, mellowing with rich light all darkish nooks and fairly showering with fragrance the tiny Christmas tree, with its gay decorations brought from over the sea. Then a strange thing happened, for the door slowly opened, and the three children who were playing in front of it gazed, mouth agape and eyes wide at the big, dark man who slipped noiselessly in.

With a sense of dead silence suddenly upon her, Mrs. Brown turned quickly about and found herself facing the largest, and no doubt the thinnest, Indian she had ever laid eyes upon. For perhaps a second the little woman stared at her unwelcome visitor, feeling as if each separate hair was standing upright on her head, and as if all the ice she had seen since she came to Canada were packed about her heart.

Only for a second did she pause; then the game little soul bravely stepped forward, offered her hand white-man fashion, and motioned her guest to be seated. Quietly and in the most matter-of-fact manner, the Indian sat down, his rapidly traveling eyes taking in the glorious little tree, the table set for supper, and the little woman trying to appear brave and dignified in spite of the three babies clinging about her knees. I think his gaze paused longest when it reached the pot containing the savory supper, for he said, "Tall Pine much hungry; three suns and Tall Pine see no meat; much empty."

Mother Brown later said that she thought her latent sense of hospitality saved her then, for she disengaged the little clinging hands from her skirts, and, placing her children on the accustomed bench at the table, poured into a big blue bowl the stew which had been meant for Father Brown; then, with greatest courtesy, she invited the big, gaunt Indian to the table.

Then, seating herself, Mrs. Brown raised her hand, and in a clear voice asked a blessing upon the food they were about to receive, also sending up a silent prayer for protection from this strange intruder, and for wisdom to guide her to act wisely. She motioned for Tall Pine to help himself first, which he did with an almost wolfish eagerness that he tried to conceal with a pathetic sort of dignity.

As she watched the big fellow apply himself to the venison and potatoes before him, eating ravenously, Mrs. Brown's fears began to leave her, for she now realized that the half starved creature had been driven to enter her house by pangs of hunger, and not by some bloodthirsty motive, as she first imagined.

Years later, when Betty was an old lady and she was relating the story of that strange Christmas Eve to a circle of her own grandchildren, she said: "I only wish I had been older, to appreciate that wonderful play of real manners taking place before me. Mother ministered as kindly to the wants of the old Indian as to us. With charming hospitality she placed her best food before him, cordially pressing him to eat. Old Tall Pine sat upright, bearing himself with wonderful dignity, meeting kindness with quiet courtesy, and urging with a fine relaxing of his usual stoical countenance."

When the meal was finally ended Mrs. Brown bade her visitor rest, but Tall Pine was anxious to be on his way; so, going to her Christmas tree, she detached a large handkerchief of flaming red and presented it to the Indian with a few words of Christmas cheer. Then Tall Pine departed as silently as he had come, uttering no word of thanks, but his whole bearing indicating the deepest gratitude and respect.

It was a short time later that Mr. Brown himself returned, to be met with acclamations of delight and incoherent statements concerning their late guest. When the hungry man was finally seated and was consuming what remained of the reheated supper, mother told the whole story, while Betty and Sally surreptitiously examined and felt sundry provoking and knobby parcels without exciting reproof. Father congratulated Mother Brown very warmly on the wise course she had chosen; then, for the time being, the subject became secondary in the pleasures and surprises of Christmas Day.

A few days later, however, as the family sat at dinner, Mr. Brown, raising his eyes to the window, perceived a strange procession coming up his path. It was four Indians, each bearing a small pack. Mr. Brown admitted the odd company, and they filed in, each in turn laying his pack ceremoniously at the feet of the astonished mistress of the house. The man who seemed to be the leader knelt and unfastened each one, then, rising to his feet, addressed Mrs. Brown: "Big Chief Tall Pine gives to little squaw with the quick hands and good heart. Give big chief heap food." And while their hostess was trying to form some words of thanks they filed out again and down the path into the forest, where they were immediately lost to sight.

The packs were quickly examined, and were found to contain the most wonderful furs it had ever been their for-

Educational

PEACE INSTITUTE.

At Peace Institute the mid-year examinations are over and the second half year of work well begun. A number of new students were registered at the beginning of the second semester and the student body, as a whole, shows a fine spirit in meeting its duties and opportunities at this busiest time of the year.

The Lotus must be in the press soon. This annual is published by the Pi Theta Mu and Sigma Phi Kappa Literary Societies. The editorial staff for the present year is: Mary Reid Buchanan, Mary Steele, editors-in-chief; Elizabeth Anderson, business manager; Margaret Moore, Esther Pate, literary editors; Lucille Buchanan, Lenoir Mercer, Elizabeth Elliott, Lucille Belk, associate editors; Quintyne Johnston, Agnes Foy, art editors; Lena Lineberger, Hattie Mae Morisy, advertising editors.

St. Valentine's Day was celebrated by a dinner to which the guests came masked. Mrs. Dewey, of Charlotte, and Mrs. William Grimes were among the guests on this occasion.

Reed Miller gave the first recital of the Peace-St. Mary's Concert Series on Thursday, February 13.

There has also been an interesting series of lectures during the last term.

Dr. George J. Ramsey spoke most helpfully to the students on Success. Dr. J. H. Highsmith spoke on Britain's Part in the War. Mrs. Bickett made a strong and human appeal in her talk to the Y. W. C. A. on her Experiences in France.

Captain and Mrs. Swinehart, of the Korean Mission, visited Peace and won the hearts of everybody by their talks on the work in the East.

The students have also had the privilege of hearing two noteworthy addresses at the Raleigh Auditorium. Major DuPont, of the French Mission to the United States, spoke on Devastated France, and Dr. Henry Morganthau in behalf of the Armenians.

The Hon. A. M. Scales, Senator from Guilford, will speak to the Y. W. C. A. at an early date.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

The Week of Prayer was observed at the Presbyterian College of South Carolina, Clinton, S. C. Dr. Henry H. Sweets preached four times for us on Sunday, February 16. He preached in the morning and evening at the First Prestute to see. Perfect black and grey fox pelts, ermine, wolf and a huge bearskin for a bed comfort. Furs, which even then brought big prices, had been selected by the old chief to repay the little woman.

Some time afterward the Browns learned that Tall Pine had been to a distant fort for trading purposes, and while returning had had the misfortune to have his mount break its leg. As he had only a small amount of ammunition from the fort, he was without means of supplying himself with provisions very soon, and still had many miles to go when he was caught in the storm. When he came in sight of the Brown home he was well-nigh famished, so Tall Pine felt that he owed a great deal to Mrs. Brown for her kind treatment, and I think I hardly need say that a very warm friendship soon existed between Mr. and Mrs. Brown and their dusky friends.

Nowadays it is with the greatest pride that Mrs. Brown's granddaughters point out their handsome fur rugs and tell their story to strangers, while their own small girls roll with delight on the big bearskin before the fire.—The Christian Guardian.

byterian Church, where the students attended, addressed the Y. M. C. A. in the afternoon, after which he preached at the Thornwell Orphanage. His sermons made a profound impression upon the students and were enjoyed by everyone who heard them.

Rev. C. T. Squires, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Laurens, conducted services during the week in the college chapel. Mr. Squires has a striking way of presenting his message; he easily got hold of the students and held their attention through the entire services. His preaching was greatly enjoyed by the faculty and students. Practically every student in the college is a professing Christian.

HAMPDEN-SIDNEY.

A long felt need has been partially filled here recently. The students have never had anything that resembled a Y. M. C. A. building or a college center. They have never had a place where they could entertain their families or friends, the visiting teams, or the alumni. The students have been entirely dependent on the faculty in this respect, and they have very naturally felt it. There has been no place for a new student to go, unless taken under the wing of a friend until he could locate himself. But at last there has been a change.

Through the kindness of Mr. Nat Harrison sufficient money was obtained to equip partially the best building on the campus for the use of the students. This building is now known as the Annex. It is the old alumni building, to which a splendid gymnasium has been added.

The building was opened on the evening of the 13th of February with an informal reception. From that time it has been constantly occupied, and it is more and more becoming the center of college activities. The appreciation of the men is evident and sincere.

A very earnest effort has been made to increase the force of the Christian life among the students. The fruits of the effort are not wanting. The strongest men in college are now actively connected with the Y. M. C. A., and a number of them are doing their part to put this phase of college life where it ought to be. Splendid meetings are being held each week revealing the best attendance and interest in some years.

It is easy to feel the effect of the recent acts of the board. Things are looking up. With the Synod of Virginia behind us and with Dr. Eggleston to lead, there is every reason to feel the greatest encouragement about the future. It is this feeling which prevails.

FROM MY WINDOW.

By Anna B. Payne.

I sleep by the open window,
Where the friendly stars I see;
Where the wind in the trees sings softly
And God looks in on me.

I like to feel He is watching,
In the silent, sweet night air;
With the wind, the trees, and I and mine,
All in His loving care.

And then when the dawn is waking,
So dimly I can not see;
Till it glows with the brightening beauty,
Of the day God sends to me.

This gift of His kind bestowing,
If it bring me joy or care:
May I find the song in its discords,
And strive to keep it fair.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

L. L. Hutchison.

Whereas, it has pleased God to take to Himself the soul of our departed brother, Leonard L. Hutchison, we his fellow deacons, have resolved:

First. That we and the entire church, which he served so well, have sustained a grievous loss.

Second. That he was taken away from us in the prime of his usefulness and from the promise of still greater usefulness in the years to come.

Third. That he was faithful to his obligations, instant in discharging his responsibilities, and loyal always to his Divine Master and ours.

Fourth. That we shall mourn for him and miss him and always cherish his memory in affectionate regard.

Fifth. That we submit humbly to the will of our God in this, as in all things, and commend his wife and little children to His tender mercy and comforting grace.

H. J. Allison,
A. E. McCausland,
John W. Sheppard,
Committee.

The Ushers of the Second Presbyterian Church who were closely associated with Leonard L. Hutchison wish to express their sorrow at his loss, and their sympathy for his family. His death has removed from us, a man, at all times ready to serve his Church and his friends, and whose religious duties gave him genuine pleasure. We who really knew him loved him, and the life he lived should be an inspiration to all of us.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Agnes Jane Cameron.

Mrs. Agnes Jane Cameron, aged 77 years, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. T. E. Funderburk, Lancaster, S. C., Saturday, February 1. The remains were brought to Laurinburg, Sunday, February 2, and taken to the home of her son, Mr. Mac Cameron, where funeral services were held Monday morning, Rev. Carl B. Craig, officiating. Mrs. Cameron came to Laurinburg from Rockingham as a young woman and with the exception of the last two years, spent practically her whole life here. She was for thirty-eight years a member of the Laurinburg Presbyterian Church and was faithful and consistent in her church life, a true Christian, a devoted mother and friend of all who knew her. Mrs. Cameron was the widow of the late Archie Cameron, who died in 1912. She is survived by two sons and a daughter—Mr. Mac Cameron, Laurinburg; Mr. Jno. D. Cameron, Rockingham; and Mrs. T. E. Funderburk, Lancaster, S. C.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. D. C. Page.

On January 16, in Wilmington, N. C., Mrs. D. C. Page fell asleep in Jesus. Annie Wright Register was born on December 9, 1893, in Sampson County, N. C.

Sprung from a line of Christian ancestors and reared in a godly home, hers was a beautiful character from childhood.

As a girl she accepted Christ at a meeting held by Rev. William Black, at Immanuel, and united with the Graves Memorial Church, at Clinton, N. C.

On October 10 she was married to Mr. D. C. Page, of Wilmington, N. C., where she and Mr. Page united with the First Presbyterian Church of that city.

Recently they removed to Newport News, Va., and joined the First Presbyterian Church of that city.

On a visit to Wilmington she developed that dread malady the influenza; and in spite of the watchful care of loved ones rapidly became worse. Her immediate family were with her when the end came.

And so ended on earth to begin in heaven a beautiful young life.

The funeral services were held in Clinton, N. C., and were conducted by Rev. George Matthis.

"Not now, but in the coming years,

It may be, in the better land,
We'll read the meaning of our tears,
And there, sometime, we'll understand."

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Amanda Currie.

Since in His infinite wisdom it has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from us our dear friend and co-laborer, Mrs. Amanda Currie, we, the members of Circle No. 3 of the Auxiliary of the Clarkton Presbyterian Church, desire to express our love for her, and our great loss in the death of her, who has been for years a faithful worker in our church though she was a consistent member of the Methodist Church.

Therefore be it resolved:

First. That we thank God for the gift of such a beautiful life, and bow in reverence and submission to the will of Him whom she served so well, realizing that our loss is her eternal gain.

Second. That while we miss her in our undertakings we rejoice in the heritage of her unwavering faith, and the examples she set in her church life and in the community where she spent her entire married life.

Third. That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to her sons, sisters and brothers, and commend them to Him who said: "My grace is sufficient for thee."

Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, also to the Presbyterian Standard and to the Bladen Journal, for publication.

(Signed) Mrs. O. L. Clark, Chm.
Mrs. D. M. Smith.
Mrs. E. C. Clark.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Vermelle McCutchen Lapsley.

One does not often see a community so rich in all that is most characteristic of the Presbyterian faith as that country neighborhood whose social and religious center is old Mount Zion Church, in Harmony Presbytery, in South Carolina. Mrs. Vermelle McCutchen Lapsley was from Mount Zion and was typical of its best. She was a daughter of George McCutchen and Hannah Atkinson Fraser, his wife. A strong natural intellect, a predilection for literary culture, decided tastes, industry, efficiency, a clear sense of right, a passion for kindness, all subdued by divine grace and fashioned in its molds—such was her church, such pre-eminently was her home, and such was she.

She was born April 28, 1868. At the age of twelve years she made a public profession of faith and joined Mount Zion Church. She was graduated from the Sumter Institute in Sumter, S. C., in June, 1885.

Soon after graduation she took up teaching as a life calling and achieved a rare success in it, and continued to teach until her marriage. Wherever she taught the impress of her character and her instruction abides in the lives and homes of her pupils. As she held the best of everything to be the Master's portion, so her best work was in her Sabbath School classes, formerly in Mount Zion Church and more recently in Lebanon Church, near her home in Virginia. Her class of boys in the Leb-

TAKES LITTLE SISTER TO RIDE.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl nearly six years old. I never have been to school, so my mother will write for me. I go to Sunday School every Sunday I can. Miss May Stuart is my teacher. We have a picture roll in our class room. I have a little wagon and can pull my little sister, Grace, in it; she can talk some. Will close as this is my first letter, and my sister Katharine is writing too.

Your little friend,

RECEIVED HER TESTAMENT.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl eight years old. I am in the third grade at school. My teacher's name is Miss May Stuart. I like her fine. I recited the Child's Catechism last September to my Sunday School teacher, Miss Nellie Graves and received my Testament. On last Sunday my teacher gave me a certificate framed, from the Christian Observer. I was very proud to get both. I have two sisters, Alice May and Grace McNeill. I have been out of school for three weeks on account of the flu. I am taking music and like it fine. My music teacher is Miss Bertie May. Will close by answering Evangeline Carr's question: Noah is the first case of drunkenness on record.

Your little friend,
Katharine Blue.

A FRENCH POODLE.

Dear Standard:

I am going to write my first letter to you. My mother takes your nice paper and I enjoy reading the letters in it. I have a little French poodle; his name is Frenchie, and everywhere I go he will try to follow me. Our pastor is Rev. W. C. Brown and I like him fine. My Sunday School teacher is Mrs. Clyde Upchurch and I like her fine. I hope my letter will not reach the waste basket.

THE SNOW.

By Cornelia Lafferty.

'Twas winter—

The snow lay on the ground
All was white for miles around.
The cedars were a pretty sight,
The snow had covered them during the night.

The branches and boughs of the pines also
Were covered with the beautiful snow.

The pines and cedars were evergreens,
Which made them such beautiful, vivid,
eye-pleasing scenes.

And we too can be as white as snow
If we but bathe in that precious flow
Which Jesus gave us long ago.

Brandon, Miss.

(We are sure our little readers will be interested in this pretty poem which was written by a little girl nine years of age, who lives down in sunny Mississippi. Now the children there rarely see a deep snow and when this winter there was a beautiful one seven inches deep, it impressed Cornelia so much that she wrote the poem about it. Older readers will be interested to know that the little girl is a daughter of Rev. J. W. Lafferty, formerly of the Carolinas, now of Mississippi.—Ed.)

"BOBBY'S FAMILY."

By Anna B. Payne.

It was such a beautiful, shiny day that Mrs. Worth decided to take her little son Bobby shopping with her. As they lived three miles in the country, this was quite an adventure for him. Especially so, as there was a new half-dollar in his pocket as beautiful and shining as the day. This was the most money that Bobby had ever earned and he was to spend it for anything he wanted.

When they reached town, and Mrs. Worth was busy with her shopping, Bobby was allowed to go alone to do his spending. My, it was fine to be free and have so much money! The little boy walked slowly down the street looking in all the store windows. Finally a window full of knives lured him in a hardware store. There were so many wonderful things to buy and so much that he wanted, but if he had a knife he could whittle and make boats and do lots of things he liked. The clerk was kind, and showed him many kinds of knives till his little brain was muddled, wondering which to buy.

About this time his attention was caught by a milk bottle sitting on the counter. Of course he had seen milk bottles, but never before had he seen one dressed up in red, white and blue paper. So he forgot the knives long enough to ask about it. The man explained that it was for kind-hearted customers to drop money in and that this same money was to go to France, to buy milk for the starving French children.

Bobby listened carefully, decided he would not buy a knife this time, and went back to his mother.

After they reached home, and dinner was over, Bobby ran out to his favorite spot back of the barn, where he could see all the lovely trees and blue sky, and watch the little clouds chasing each other around.

He lay on his back and shut his eyes. The sun was so warm and he was so very comfortable. All of a sudden, he heard a funny little noise and opened his eyes. Sitting in a circle all around him were a number of little girls and boys, with thin pale faces and dirty, ragged clothes. Bobby was so surprised that he could only look at them.

"Why, who are you," he said at last. "And where did you come from. You weren't here a minute ago."

"We came from France," said one little girl.

"Well, where are your mothers and fathers?" said Bobby. "And why are you so thin and pale and ragged, and why don't you smile and look happy?"

"O," said a little boy just Bobby's size, "all our fathers and mothers were killed in the war. We can't smile because we are so cold and hungry, and these are all the clothes we have."

Bobby looked at them till he felt like he wanted to cry. All the sad little eyes seemed to be begging him for help. If only his mother was there she would tell him what to do. He was thinking hard when he put his hand in his pocket and felt his new half-dollar.

He pulled it out and looked at it and then at the children. And his face got so bright and happy that all the children smiled.

"O," said Bobby, "I'll tell you what. You haven't any fathers and mothers, so I'll just adopt you and you'll be my family. See how much money I have, and I'm going to make lots more every week, bringing in wood. It shall all belong to you."

As Bobby stopped talking, something nice happened. The smiles that made him feel so happy, grew and grew till they became laughs and the pale little faces became soft and pink. Bobby felt like he was about to burst with joy.

But before he could say anything else, he felt something warm and sticky on his face. He opened his eyes again and all the little children were gone, and there was his collie, Laddie, licking his face.

He lay still for a while, thinking; then jumped up whistling and started for the wood-pile. If he had a family to support, he couldn't be idle any more.

That night Bobby was such a tired little boy that he had to share his secret with his mother. She was very much pleased and most as glad about it as Bobby. She dressed up a milk bottle for him like the one he had seen in the store, and put it on a table in his own room. It was all ready to take care of his money, till he could send it away to his little girls and boys.

When Mrs. Worth tucked Bobby in bed, he whispered to her sleepily, "Mother dear, I'd rather have a family all my own than that biggest knife with five blades."

A CONDESCENSION.

Gwendolen Jones was chubby and sweet
And her age was half past three;
And she lived in a house on Wellington
Street,
In the yard with the walnut tree.

Harold Percival Marmaduke Smith
Was almost half past four;
And he said, when they gave him a baseball and bat,
That he'd "play with the girls no more."

Gwendolen Jones she gazed through the fence;
At an end were all life's joys,
As she saw the friend of her youth depart
"To play with the great big boys."

Harold Percival Marmaduke Smith
Up to the field marched he;
But his eye was blacked and his head was whacked,

And his ball no more did he see.

And the boys called him "baby" because he cried,
Did Teddy and Willie and Tim;
And they chased him away when he threatened to tell,
And said they'd "no use for him."

Gwendolen Jones came down to the fence,
And her face wore a joyful smile,
When Harold Percival Marmaduke said
He'd play with her "once in a while."

anon Sabbath School was a marked feature of the work in that church.

April 26, 1905, she was married to Rev. R. A. Lapsley, D.D., editor of the Sabbath School Literature of the Southern Presbyterian Church. She was a devoted wife and mother and a valuable counsellor and co-laborer in editorial work, for which her literary taste, her knowledge of the Bible and her spiritual intuitions eminently fitted her.

Her cheerful, brave endurance for years, of almost constant discomfort, and often of intense suffering, was a marvel to all who knew the facts. Five months before her death, when the physicians could no longer hope against the ravages of disease, they told her frankly that she could not live. "There was never a more serene facing of eternity, 'strong in faith, giving glory to God' than was hers." Nor did that faith waver, nor did she abate in the least her unselfish thoughtfulness of others, through those five months of severe suffering, until the end came, November 8, 1918.

Strength and honor were her clothing. She opened her mouth with wisdom and in her tongue was the law of kindness. Her children arise up and call her blessed, her husband also and he praiseth her. A. M. F.

IN MEMORIAM.

J. H. Walker.

Mr. J. H. Walker died at his home, near Union Ridge, N. C., December 28, 1918. He was born in this same community in February, 1852, and had always been a loyal and zealous friend of the community and its interests. He joined the Methodist Church early in life and served as a steward for several years. About fifteen years ago he moved his membership to Stony Creek Presbyterian Church, where his entire family were members. He is survived by his wife and five children.

He was for some time a faithful and efficient superintendent of the Sunday School at Stony Creek. He was elected ruling elder and served his church and its interests in this capacity until his death.

Whereas, God has removed him from our midst, bringing sadness to the church and community and grief to his family. Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, knowing that each sorrow has its purpose—and whatever is—is best.

2. That we, fellow members of the session, will miss his wise counsel, faithful services and loyalty to both the duties of the session and the church.

3. That we will miss him in the church. His life of purity, usefulness and love for his fellowmen being shown in his life in church and community activities.

4. That we sorrow in the parting and feel keenly drawn in sympathy towards his immediate family in these sad days and commend them to a loving Heavenly Father who has given no sorrow that heaven cannot heal.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be recorded in the minutes of the session, a copy sent to the family and a copy to the Presbyterian Standard and the Burlington News for publication.

Adopted by the session, February 2, 1919.

POPPIES IN THE BARBED WIRE.

Albert E. Legg, Chaplain 116th U. S. Engineers, contributed this article to the "Pick and Shovel," the regimental paper which he edits:

They grow luxuriously, these poppies do, in northern France. Every soldier must have noticed them as he passed the fields. A chaplain tells us of seeing their bright hues in the cemeteries, amid the white crosses. He tells us of the millions of yards of barbed wire that had been twisted into an impassable network of spikes for the second line of defense, but which had become a mass of green and scarlet, as if the grass and poppies, growing unchecked, were seeking to hide this ugly and threatening sign of war. This was not camouflage, but nature's genuine attempt to beautify and transform the planting made necessary by the hatred and enmities of men.

The poppy typifies forgetfulness. It is the flower of sleep and pleasant dreamings. As such it may be suggestive of this Christmas time as it comes after the slaughter of years, and wings its message over ruined and devastated acres. Some things can never be forgotten, nor should they. The results that follow untamed ambition and lust must ever be held in the memory of men as a warning, and to those who are guilty must be meted out a punishment to chasten and refine, but the vision of a new future can be made equally if not even more prominent. To plan now for peace and an enduring peace seems possible. This crusade for righteousness and liberty stirs the imagination of the construction builders of good will. The union of the varied peoples, the commingling of society, the comradeship of the individual army and of the armies of the nations, give foundation for the age purpose interpreted by Jesus, "Peace on earth, good will among men."

Other flowers have grown in these days. About the tomb of Lafayette the forget-me-nots have bloomed in a strength hardly expected of this tiny plant. Amid the poppies, though other flowers shall be cultivated, we shall not forget our buried laddies, nor their sacrifice at the "barbed wire." Some remembrance will ever abide with us. It is for us to determine that in their name and in the name of Christ, who led them "west," we shall plant the flowers that have in them joy and healing for the nations. Our task shall be to make the rose of Sharon blossom even in the desert. Yes, the barbed wire is there! It is worse than foolishness to deny the evil intent and act that made it necessary. The earth is scarred by the deep trenches and open craters of the conflict; humanity must ever bear the marks of the wounds, but the poppies will grow, the forget-me-nots bloom in beauty and the rose can, with care, be perfected. This is the faith of the Christmas season. The hideousness of the present can be covered by the future.

THAT FLU STUFF.

- If you have a tummy-ache,
It's the Flu!
 - If you're weary when you wake,
It's the Flu!
 - Is your memory off the track?
Is your liver out of whack?
Are there pimples on your back?
It's the Flu!
 - Are there spots before your eyes?
It's the Flu!
 - Are you fatter than some guys?
It's the Flu!
 - Do your teeth hurt when you bite?
Do you ever have a fright?
Do you want to sleep at night?
It's the Flu!
 - Are you thirsty when you eat?
It's the Flu!
 - Are you shaky on your feet?
It's the Flu!
 - If you feel a little ill,
Send right off for Dr. Pill,
He will say, despite his skill:
"It's the Flu!"
 - He won't wait to diagnose,
It's the Flu!
 - Hasn't time to change his clothes,
It's the Flu!
 - For two weeks he's had no rest,
Has no time to make a test,
So he'll class you with the rest—

HATCHED 175 CHICKS.

G. W. Miller, of Pittsburg, Okla., writes: "I used Reefer's Ready Relief and out of 175 chicks hatched didn't lose one." Mrs. T. E. Murphy, of Hughesville, Mo., writes: "Have been using Ready Relief for White Diarrhoea and only lost one chick out of 140."

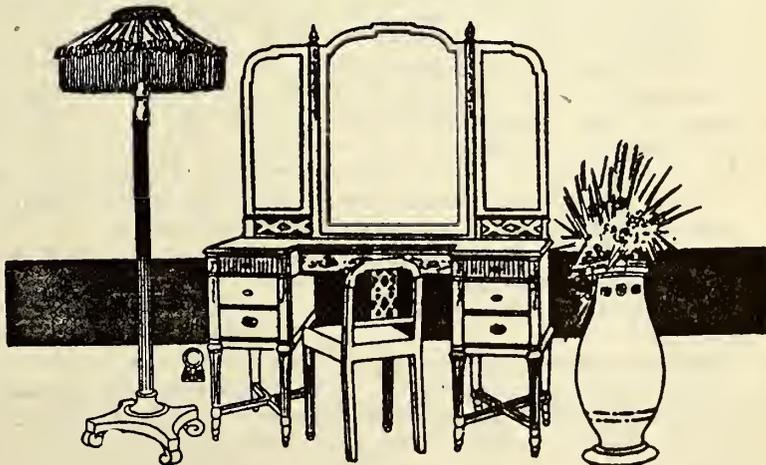

You can do as well. Reefer's Ready Relief in your baby chicks' first drinking water will save them from dying off with that dreadful White Diarrhoea plague. This remedy is the discovery of a famous scientist. Send $1 today to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 9252 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package that will save 500 baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth five for a cent? You take no risk. Mr. Reefer will refund every cent of your money if you are not entirely satisfied and a million dollar bank backs up this statement. Send for a $1 package today, or better still, send $2.35 on special discount for three regular $1 packages and insure every hatch you get. If you don't want to try this bank guaranteed chick saver, at least write today for Mr. Reefer's free valuable poultry book that gives the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.—Adv.

LETTERS FROM RHEUMATICS

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter, but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of Rheumatism you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring. This water overcomes many diseases, including Indigestion, Gout, Uric Acid Poisoning and Liver and Kidney diseases, but no patrons of the Springs are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their Rheumatism. Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the Management:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will give permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver and Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of Stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began using Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time I was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The Water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints on her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

If you suffer from Rheumatism or any curable disease, accept the guarantee offered below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the Shivar Spring,

Box 4F, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

NOTE—"I have had the pleasure of serving the little church at Shivar Spring as Pastor for years, and am therefore well acquainted with Mr. Shivar and his associates, whom I gladly commend as honorable business men and worthy of the confidence of the public. I have personally derived great benefit from the use of Shivar Mineral Water and have knowledge of its beneficial effects in a great number and variety of cases."—Rev. A. McA. Pittman

TARBORO HAS PASTURIZATION PLANT.

Tarboro has the distinction of having the only pasteurization plant in North Carolina. Through the efforts of Dr. K. E. Miller, P. A. Surgeon of the United States Public Health Service, and health officer of Edgecombe County, the citizens of Tarboro are enjoying safe and pasteurized milk, delivered at 17 cents per quart, while other towns in that vicinity are using raw milk at 18 or 20 cents per quart.

While the pasteurizing plant is something new in North Carolina, the benefits to be derived from pasteurized milk are already well known, especially where health education has reached. Its value as a means of saving babies and preventing milk borne infections, such as tuberculosis, scarlet fever and septic sore throat, is coming to be more widely appreciated.

According to Dr. Miller, the process of obtaining pasteurized milk is adaptable to any town. The cost of installing and operating a plant is not a prohibitive feature. The installation, equipment and delivery facilities of the Tarboro plant, with a capacity for handling 450 quarts per day, cost $1,500, with the operating expenses less than $150 per month. Two men are employed to operate the plant, one as operator and manager, and the other deliveryman. Milk is purchased at 12 cents and delivered, pasteurized, at 17 cents a quart. At present the plant is handling 175 quarts a day and is self-sustaining. By increasing the supply of milk, the plant could be made a source of revenue for the town.

IMMIGRATION.

The United States has not yet digested all that it swallowed. It is a marvel that it has digested as well as it has. It took a chance of nationalistic cramps and convulsions.

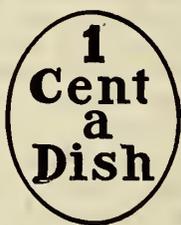

It took the Assyrians, the Germans, some Chinese, the Scandinavians, a few Turks, a great many Irish, both north and south, some Armenians and Persians, a great mass of Slavs, Jugo Slavs and Slovenes, some Laplanders and a number of Finns, Magyars, Poles, a dash of French, many Canadians and a few English and Scotch, etc., and has fairly well succeeded in shaking them up in the mixer and pouring out Americans.

It has been a real work. Opportunity is lessening in the United States. Adventure is going. We are getting down to established order. The Burnett bill, prohibiting immigration for four years, has been reported to the House of Representatives. It would protect the digestive apparatus of this nation at a time when there may be a gorging of our national stomach.

We believe wise American nationalism would put up the bars.—Chicago Tribune.

A PARODY.

Apologies to Old Mother Hubbard.

Old Father Scorner went to the corner
To get him a bottle of beer,
But when he got there the shelves were all bare—

Alas! Prohibition had come.

He went to the shop for a bottle of gin,
But when he got there he couldn't get in.

He ordered some whiskey—for use scientific!

They sent him wood spirits; the smell was terrific.

He went to a vet, to prescribe for a calf;
Some brandy would — say a pint and a half.

He found on return the vet, played him false;

The bottle contained only water and salts.

He went to the doctor for rum for a boil,

But Doc. prescribed sulphur and sweet castor oil.

He went to a druggist without a prescription,

So he couldn't get liquor of any description.

He sought a blind pig as his only resort;
But when it was raided he landed in court.

He went to the farm out at Guelph for a rest;

He thought, when released, Prohibition was best.

He's glad to be freed from King Alcohol's power,

So now he goes thirsty or drinks lemon sour. —Ex.

The Prize Contest Prolonged

Through the liberality of friends the Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief was enabled to offer $50 in prizes for the best programs prepared on the work of this Department of the Church.

On account of the great delay in printing and the interruptions of the war, the armistice, and the spread of the influenza, it has been decided to postpone the close of the contest until March 31, 1919.

1. Each contestant may prepare any number of programs.
2. The programs may be prepared on (1) the entire work of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief; (2) Recruiting for the Ministry and Mission Service; (3) Education for the Ministry and Mission Service; (4) Our Schools, Colleges and Theological Seminaries, and Training Schools; (5) The Student Loan Fund; (6) Ministerial Relief; (7) The Endowment Fund of Ministerial Relief; or (8) "The Three Year Program of the Church for C. E. & M. R."
3. Programs may be prepared for use in Church, Sunday School, Woman's Auxiliaries, or Young People's Societies.
4. The Executive Committee will make use of all suitable programs.
5. Copy must be written on one side of paper only, either with typewriter or in a clear, legible hand.
6. The Programs should be complete—suggesting hymns, scripture reading and methods of developing the theme.
7. Programs should not be too long as only from twenty minutes to an hour are usually given to a meeting.
8. A prize of $20 is offered for the best program submitted, $15 for the one receiving the next highest award, $10 for the next and $5 for the next.
9. A large box of sample leaflets and programs will be sent, free of cost, to any one who desires to enter the contest. Reference may be made to any of these or quotations therefrom may be incorporated into the programs prepared.
10. Address all requests for this literature and for further information to Henry H. Sweets, Secretary of the Presbyterian Church in the United States for Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, 122 South Fourth Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

BANISH CATARRH

Breathe Hyomei for Two Minutes and Relieve Stuffed Up Head.

If you want to get relief from catarrh, cold in the head or from an irritating cough in the shortest time breathe Hyomei.

It should clean out your head in two minutes and allow you to breathe freely.

Hyomei often ends a cold in one day, it will relieve you of disgusting snuffles, hawking, spitting and offensive breath in a week.

Hyomei is made chiefly from a soothing, healing, antiseptic, that comes from the eucalyptus forests of inland Australia where catarrh, asthma and consumption were never known to exist.

Hyomei is pleasant and easy to breathe. Just pour a few drops into the hard rubber inhaler, use as directed and relief is almost certain.

A complete Hyomei outfit, including inhaler and one bottle of Hyomei, costs but little at druggists everywhere. If you already own an inhaler you can get an extra bottle of Hyomei at druggists.

THOROUGH PREPARATION.

Good order in the Sunday School is more likely to be secured when the superintendent has prepared all necessary details in advance. If he fidgets his song-book for a number or asks the chorister to do it for him while the school waits, he need not be surprised if some enterprising boys use the interval for pinching or punching each other. But if he has his songs selected, his lesson leaf or Bible correctly indicated for the day, and his announcements noted on a slip of paper, he is master of the situation and keeps every moment occupied. It is well to have all these items written out by Saturday night, because Sunday morning might witness a strained scene in the home and the nervousness might be carried over into the public service. Go into the Sunday School with the consciousness of being thoroughly prepared, and God will recognize such diligence with a blessing.—Western Christian Advocate.

The word "blighty," which means home to the British soldiers, and which is a word which has been frequently used during the war, is said to come from the word "Belatti," a Hindoo word, signifying the seat of government. It may or may not be the real origin. It matters little what it comes from. But down deep in the hearts of the soldiers is a great and consuming desire to get back home.—The Herald and Presbyter.

The Romantic Story of Southland's Favorite Shoe, EzWear.

Some five years ago, a prominent citizen of South Carolina, visiting New York on important business, chanced to meet the maker of a shoe built on new and unusual lines; an enthusiastic admirer of its most distinctive features, ease and comfort, had suggested the name EzWear; it was promptly adopted. The business man from the South, knowing how welcome such a shoe would be in his part of the country, urged that its remarkable qualities, including not only comfort, but style, durability and economy, be made known there. That this has been effectively done is proven by the enormous demand that has sprung up in the South for EzWear shoes. It is said that its sale there during the last twelve months has increased fully three hundred per cent. The distributor, Mr. J. R. Simon, of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., says that all who wish to know about a shoe that combines all worth-while shoe qualities, may have a copy of his money-saving shoe book for the asking.

The Money You Save---YOU LOSE

The Money You Spend---YOU ENJOY

The Money You Give --- YOU SAVE

"But lay up for yourselves treasures in Heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."

The Money You Save

There are men that cramp and save, and hoard. Fear is upon them that they will not be able to meet the pressing financial needs of a growing business. They must increase, multiply, save, in order to have. Have in order to meet growing competition in business, maintain their prestige, keep some competitor from forging ahead. "This night thy soul shall be required of thee, and then whose shall those things be? All lost, or the lawyers."

The Money You Spend

There is enjoyment in the lavish expenditure of money, vying with your neighbors in the extent of your travels, in the fineness of your home, in the magnificence of your wardrobe, in the style in which you are able to maintain your family, in the elegance of your office, in the extent of your business connection. But this enjoyment is Vanity—an empty show.

The Money You Give

A seed is planted in China, a dollar from this, and that one, has enabled some one to carry the message of Jesus to a soul. That soul is brought to life—and brings another, and that one another and another. Seed time and harvest continue.

A Dollar or so is used to educate a boy, he is brought to life, he brings another to life, and another and another: Seed time and harvest continue.

A Dollar or so is used to plant a church in a neglected field, one and then another and another is brought to the light of God: Seed time and harvest continue year after year.

That which you gave you have saved and you have it, doubled and trebled, again and again.

"ADVANCED" CHILDREN.

It is matter for regret and genuine alarm that a very large element of the children of this country are too far advanced for their years—not in useful knowledge, but in things which they will necessarily come to know of in later years and should not know of in childhood or even youth. To one who mingles much with children who are habitually on the streets there comes a shock at the very apparent fact that they are by no means guileless or unsophisticated. They are very "knowing," and take good care to impress their elders with their knowingness.

There are scores of boys in Fayetteville, some of them not in their teens, who not only are versed in a good many of the vices of men, but who practice these vices, and are drifting, drifting far from the port of safety and fast being carried on the current which flows to the port of dissipated, corrupt manhood. There are scores of girls in Fayetteville who are advanced beyond their years in woman's ways, and, it is sad to say, in ways which are not admirable and are tending to rob them of the sweet and modest graces of maidenhood that develop into true womanhood.

This subject of "advanced" children is a big one, covering a great deal of ground, and we shall not attempt to treat it. However, we are constrained to say that we believe much of the "advance" (in the wrong direction) of our boys and girls is chargeable to their parents. The parents do not look after them as they should, they give them too much rein. Often they really push them out in the world at a tender age, when they should be shielded from the world. It is to be feared that some of the children are too "advanced" solely because their parents do not care to be "bothered" with them and so turn them loose to get rid of them.

It is contended by those versed in the proper rearing of children that boys and girls under 16 years of age should not be allowed away from home at night unless under the charge of grown persons, and that they (the boys and girls) should have impressed upon them the duty of avoiding (in the day time) strange companions and strange places. Many boys and girls too young to be unattended, nightly roam our streets without guardians or chaperones.

It requires care and trouble to "train up a child in the way he should go," but it is the duty of the parent to so train him, and failure to fulfill this duty will, in later years, almost invariably bring a far heavier burden of care and trouble to the parent while the risk of a worse than misspent life by the child, grown to maturity, is certain.—Fayetteville Observer.

It is not so much the work we are called to do, as the way we do it, that will make our lives worthy of emulation by those who come after us.

FORTUNES IN OLD CONFEDERATE ENVELOPES

They may be worth a lot of money. Among the old letters of many Southern folks there are thousands of very rare envelopes and stamps. Many have been found and sold for fortunes. Some as high as $300. Many have brought upwards of $50.00. It sounds "fishy," but its true. They are valuable because they are rare. They are rare, not because there are only a few, for there are many of them, but simply because most of them are stored away and forgotten in old attics.

Look among your old war letters. You are likely to find a fortune. If you find some old Confederate envelopes or stamps bearing the year 1861 and dated or cancelled some time during the spring, summer or early fall of 1861, send them to Mr. Harold C. Brooks, Marshall, Michigan, and he will immediately write you, stating whether they are of value, and if so, will offer you full value for them. He is a private collector of rare stamps and envelopes, and will give you full value for them if they are of value. Send only the complete envelopes and stamps.

The advertising manager of the Presbyterian Standard has known Mr. Brooks for years and you may place full confidence in his integrity. He will advise you frankly and is willing to pay the highest prices for the higher priced ones are the rarest stamps, and he wishes the rarest ones.

In 1861, just after the war was declared and before the Confederacy had time to make their regular issues of stamps, many local post offices were allowed to make provisional issues. These stamps and envelopes were issued in 1861 by the postmasters of different cities. In marking the envelopes the cancelling stamps of the post office were frequently employed. It is often difficult to determine whether such a mark was used provisionally or merely indicates postage paid at the time the letter was deposited in the post office. Occasionally, the same mark was used for both purposes. These stamps are the ones that are valuable. The regular issues of the Confederacy are not rare. Look for the local issues. You can identify them. They are known to have been issued by the following towns:

Aberdeen, Miss.; Albany, Ga.; Athens, Ga.; Atlanta, Ga.; Augusta, Ga.; Autaugaville, Ala.; Baton Rouge, La.; Beaumont, Tex.; Bridgeville, Ala.; Charleston, S. C.; Columbia, S. C.; Columbus, Ga.; Danville, Va.; Emory, Va.; Franklin, N. C.; Fredericksburg, Va.; Galatin, Tenn.; Goliad, Tex.; Gonzales, Tex.; Greensboro, Ala.; Greenville, Ala.; Greenwood, Va.; Grove Hill, Ala.; Hallettsville, Tex.; Helen, Tex.; Independence, Tex.; Jetersville, Va.; Jonesboro, Tenn.; Kingston, Tenn.; Knoxville, Tenn.; Le-noir, N. C.; Lexington, Miss.; Livingston, Ala.; Lynchburg, Va.; Macon, Ga.; Marion, Va.; Memphis, Tenn.;

Milledgeville, Ga.; Mobile, Ala.; Montgomery, Ala.; Mt. Lebanon, Tenn.; Nashville, Tenn.; New Orleans, La.; New Smyrna, Fla.; Petersburg, Va.; Pittsylvania C. H., Va.; Pleasant Shade, Va.; Raleigh, N. C.; Rheatown, Tenn.; Richmond, Tex.; Ringgold, Ga.; Salem, N. C.; Salem, Va.; Salisbury, N. C.; Statesville, N. C.; Tellico Plains, Tenn.; Thomasville, Ga.; Tuscumbia, Ala.; Tuscaloosa, Ala.; Uniontown, Ala.; Victoria, Tex.

Possibly other towns had provisional local stamp issues. But the above are all that are known to collectors. Should you find any of these rare local issues, send them to Mr. Brooks. He will offer what he regards them as worth to him, and in case the offer is not satisfactory, will return the envelopes and stamps to the sender. Don't deface nor detach the stamps, but send the complete envelopes. Your search may be a very profitable one for you and a greatly welcomed one for Mr. Brooks.

Most of these were probably what you might call franked envelopes instead of adhesive stamps. Still, there are both envelopes and stamps in this class of postage. The probability is that they were issued at the time the war began to take the place of the Federal issues and before the Confederate Government had time to prepare regular national stamps.

The first regular issue of the Confederate stamps was late in 1861, so that these issues put out by the various cities were in use from the beginning of the war until late in 1861, and consequently, all would bear the postmark date of the year 1861.

Address Mr. Harold C. Brooks, Marshall, Mich. Adv.

OCTOBER HAS LARGEST DEATH RATE.

That influenza is on the decrease in the State, despite the fact that outbreaks continue to occur in different localities, is seen from a recent report of the Vital Statistics Department of the North Carolina State Board of Health. According to this report, there were 3,923 deaths less in November than in October, and 533 deaths less in December than in November. In other words, the number of deaths decreased from 6,056 in October to 2,133 in November, and to about 1,600 in December. This steady decline is thought to be due partly to the fact that people are becoming more informed as to the ways and means by which the disease is spread, and are perhaps more careful in their practices of personal hygiene which, after all, is a great factor in preventing the disease.

The report issued by the Vital Statistics Department indicates one particular fact in regard to this disease, namely, crowding. Counties and localities having populations closely settled show a greater number of deaths, while counties having populations sparsely settled show a smaller number of deaths. For instance, only four deaths have been reported from Alleghany County, five from Alexander, six from Camden, nine from Polk, twelve from Clay, twelve

FRESH AIR GOOD FOR FACE.

Farm and Fireside, the national farm paper, says:

"It is a mistaken idea that bundling up to the eyes and covering the face with thick veils protects the skin in the winter. The more the face is exposed to the fresh air the better it will be for the complexion, and there is nothing more invigorating and beneficial than a brisk walk during a snow flurry. Never carry an umbrella when it is snowing. The best kind of water to wash your face in is soft rain water, and as snow is only frozen rain water there is surely no reason why it should be injurious to the skin.

"Do not wash your face before going out into the open air, but if cleansing is necessary, apply cold cream and rub it well into the pores, afterward wiping the face with a soft towel. Cleanse the face with cold cream and a good massage cream at least once a week, and apply a lotion to the face, hands, and lips every night before retiring. The lips are more susceptible to cold and chapped more easily than any other part of the face."

SHE SAVED 200 CHICKS.

Mrs. G. Hancock, Sturgis, Ky., writes: "I hatched 200 chicks and didn't lose a single one with White Diarrhoea. I give Ready Relief the praise." Mrs. H. L. Sutton, of Ramona, Kas., writes: "My chicks were dying 20 and 30 a day. I got two packages of Ready Relief and now I don't lose any."

You can get the same wonderful results. Reefer's Ready Relief put in your baby chicks' first drinking water will help save them from the dreadful White Diarrhoea plague. This remedy is the discovery of a famous scientist. Send $1 today to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 6252 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package that will certainly help you save your baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth saving? You take no risk. Mr. Reefer will refund every cent of your money if you are not entirely satisfied and a million dollar bank backs up this statement. Send for a $1 package today, or better still, send $2.35 on special discount for three regular $1 packages and insure every hatch you get. Aren't your baby chicks worth five for a cent? That's about the cost of Reefer's Ready Relief. If you don't want to try this bank guaranteed chick saver at least write today for Mr. Reefer's valuable free poultry book that gives the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.

OUT OF THEIR OWN MOUTHS

Voltaire is credited with the prayer, "Make our enemies loquacious." He probably stole the idea from Job, who prayed, "Oh, that mine adversary would write a book!" The extracts and quotations from German books, speeches and sermons proclaiming the superiority of the German race and its divine call to rule and Germanize the world, with which we are being flooded these days, would indicate that the Allies had been a very prayerful people. If ever there was a people condemned out of their own mouths, it is the Germans.—United Presbyterian.

As I stand by the cross on the lone mountain's crest,
Looking over the ultimate sea,
In the gloom of the mountain a ship lies at rest,
And one sails away from the lea:
One spreads its white wings on a far-reaching track,
With pennant and sheet flowing free;

One hides in the shadow with sails laid aback—

The ship that is waiting for me!

The Universal Desire.

"Elmer 'pears to like it pretty well," said the fond mother in the midst of her perusal of a letter from her son at a cantonment. "He says he gets good food and plenty of it, but still he'd like to set down at the table here at home with a thick, juicy steak before him, with cream gravy, well-browned fried potatoes and a lot of other things, and wind up with lemon pie with inch-thick frosting on it."

"Good Scott!" ejaculated her husband in a strangely hushed voice. "So would I!"—Glove and Anchor.

The Pastor's Assistant

The Church at last is beginning to realize that a Church Paper in every home is the best Assistant a pastor can have.

Each week, the work of the Church, at home and abroad, is brought before the people; and thus they are trained in intelligent membership.

The Stewardship Committee of the General Assembly has made as one of the objectives aimed at, the placing of a Church paper in every home.

In order to make this a success, and at the same time to aid the effort to raise $3,500,000, the Standard will donate one-half of every cash subscription to be credited to any of the Benevolent Causes of the Church, by the subscriber.

This is a rare opportunity for a church or society to increase their gifts to the Benevolent Causes, and at the same time add to the efficiency of their pastor.

THE PLAN OF WORK

For every cash subscriber, you send $1.25 with the name of the subscriber to us, and then apply the other one-half to any one of the Benevolent Causes. Renewals of old subscriptions do not come under this offer.

To work this plan, send out couples to canvass your congregation, having a list of members of the church.

Ask the pastor to urge the importance of a paper in every home.

Determine to do this work systematically and thoroughly, giving one or two days to it.

Take copies of the Standard with you, and call attention to its snappy editorials, its readable contributions, its inspiring devotional page, its interesting stories for children, and its "Sparkles" on the last page.

Editorial

Justification.

HOW can a sinner be justified in the sight of God? We could never answer this question without a revelation. God alone knows how to set things right between Him and those who have cast off His authority and set up an independent government with their own will as law. The rebels do not feel that they have done anything very wrong. They have so little regard for God, and so much regard for themselves that it requires no little effort to convince them that they need justification. Indeed, God must intervene, and turn on the light before they can be made to see that their hearts are "deceitful above all things and desperately wicked."

How does God say that a sinner may be justified? What door has He opened through which the guilty criminal may escape? Has He specified any one thing which those who have lost His favor must do in order to regain that favor? What must they do that they may work the works of God, works acceptable and well-pleasing to God? "This is the work of God that they believe on Him whom God hath sent." Trusting in Christ is the one thing, and the only thing which God demands as a condition of restoration to favor. "Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law." This was Paul's conclusion, and he was an inspired reasoner. Obedience to the law, to God's law, cannot set matters right between the sinner and God. Good works not only cannot justify the sinner, but they cannot contribute anything to his justification, cannot help faith to justify him.

The trouble is that until justified by faith, the sinner cannot do any good works. The tree must first be good, and then the fruit will be good; but as long as the tree is corrupt, the fruit will be corrupt. It may look very beautiful, but it is rotten at the heart. "Though I give all my goods to feed the poor and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing." He who has no love to God can never do a good deed, a deed that will have the quality of virtue in God's sight. Our supreme obligation to God is to love Him. Till we have met this obligation in some measure we can do nothing that will please Him.

One cannot love God unless he loves Christ, for Christ is God. "I and my Father are one. He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." The only God we know is the God who was manifested in Christ. If we love that God, we love Jesus Christ. "Every one that loveth him that begat him loveth him also that is begotten of him." In order to know our real attitude toward the invisible God, we have but to consider our attitude toward the visible Christ. If we are not His disciples, not members of his church, not testifying our loyalty to Him before an evil and gainsaying people, not helping Him to win the victory, not wearing His name and confessing Him before men, there is every reason to believe that our hearts are not right toward God. While we are at cross purposes with the Father about His only begotten and well-beloved Son, we cannot commend ourselves to His favor by the most splendid service to our sinful fellowmen; or by the most daring acts of heroism in behalf of our country. We cannot atone for living in rejection of Christ by dying as a patriot in the trenches. We cannot make amends for trampling under foot the blood of the Son of God by shedding our own blood in a worthy cause.

"Therefore by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified in His sight." We must have faith, a loving penitent, trust in Christ as our personal Saviour in order to be set right with God. Such a faith identifies us with Christ, so that His sacrificial death expiates our sins, and His righteousness becomes our righteousness. Faith makes us one with Christ in such sense that all that He suffered we are counted as suffering, we died with Him, and all that He deserves in the way of reward we are counted as deserving. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus."

Justification by faith alone was a true doctrine in Paul's day, and in Augustine's day, and in Luther's and Calvin's day. It was true before the great war, and doubtless it is just as true since the war in what some are pleased to call the "new era." All must be justified the same way. One grateful father testifies that his noble boy did not have the faith of his childhood shaken by his experiences over sea, that he still "understands that the salvation even of a soldier depends not upon his self-sacrifice, but upon the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus."

The Romanist "Bugaboo."

We have never been able to understand that dread of Romanism that seems to hang as a pall over men. It is equal to a pestilence that walketh in darkness and to the destruction that wasteth at noonday. They live like men who through fear of death are all their life-time in bondage.

They paint our future in lurid colors. Rome like an octopus lays its tentacles upon our Government, controlling the education of our young, or with inquisition powers she lays her hand upon our religious life, and re-enacts the horrors of the middle ages.

They claim that we do not realize the danger, and demand that we be more anti-Romanist than we are.

The United States Census is an important judge, and from it we gather figures that ought to quiet the minds of these perturbed brethren, and lay low the nightmare that disturbs their sleep.

According to these figures in the past decade the Romanists made the smallest percentage gain, less than 11 per cent.

The Baptists head the list with .28 per cent; the Disciples or Christians follow with 25 per cent; the Methodists and Episcopalians come next with 24 per cent; and the Presbyterians with 23 per cent.

In estimating these gains we should remember that they represent actual membership enrolled. The Romanist figures on the other hand embrace the entire family, without regard to enrolled membership.

When we remember that the Romanists comprise vast numbers of our immigrants, it would seem that not only is Rome not making any inroads upon Protestantism, but actually she is not even holding her own.

In view of these facts let us possess our souls with patience, and instead of fighting error, let us quietly promulgate the truth.

Given a fair field and sufficient time, truth always wins.

That Rome would like to seize the hands of government and give the Pope some control over our politics, we have no doubt, and that such is the aim of their leaders, but that there is any danger of their realizing their hopes we have no fear.

We do not mean that we should grow careless, but we mean that men are losing too much sleep over a remote possibility, and are not getting as much pleasure out of living as they should.

There is no more probability of Rome controlling this country than there is of the Kaiser again governing Germany.

The "Progressive Program."

We have good authority for giving to the children of this world credit for superior wisdom when compared with the children of light. This, however, applies only to the affairs of this world.

In these days, however, we find that the children of light are being aroused and are adopting some of the methods of the children of this world. Instead of the haphazard ways of our forefathers, they are trying to run the affairs of the church by business methods, with the result that the church is responding with wonderful enthusiasm.

Last year to our surprise we oversubscribed the amount asked for, and now they have advanced the total to $3,500,000 and the church is going to reach it.

Four times the Government called upon its loyal citizens to give in the billions, an amount scarcely grasped by any of us, yet each time the country oversubscribed.

We cannot believe that the church members will be less loyal to their church than the citizens of the world.

Not only are we encouraged by these evidences of growing wisdom shown in raising money, but we are also encouraged when we study the eight causes emphasized.

The time was when the Church paper was regarded as a necessary nuisance, to be taken if agreeable and read when there was nothing else to do. Now the Church paper is placed alongside of Home and Foreign Missions, and it is recognized as a valuable factor in family training and mission work—and when the canvass begins, those soliciting will try to place a Church paper in every home.

The leaders are beginning to realize that in the Church paper they have a valuable helper that they have heretofore ignored, and that if they can get each family to take and read the Church paper, every other cause will feel the benefit.

The societies of the church will find their members abreast of the times in regard to church work; the pastor will see in the faces of his audience an intelligent response so often lacking; and when he appeals for the different causes, he will have no need to explain, because all being readers of the Church papers, know full well the progress made and the great importance of the cause.

This month the canvass will begin. Every congregation will be thoroughly worked over, and every effort made to reach the goal. Let each one resolve to give, not what was given last year, but more than that amount if possible. Persuade your friends to take an advance step, not only in giving, but in taking a Church paper, and reading it when they do take it. Form the Church paper habit, and it will soon become second nature.

We must compliment the managers of this campaign upon their business methods and thorough system as evidenced in their letters of instructions to the various chairmen. The average preacher may be a poor business man by reason of lack of opportunity. The Secretaries have the opportunity and they are measuring up to it fully.

The Need of Forbearingness.

Paul in writing to the Philippians urges them to let their moderation be known unto all men, because the time is at hand. The word moderation literally means forbearingness, or the bearing with one another in the spirit of Christian love.

Each day we are the more impressed with the fact that the new conditions arising out of the war will make heavy demands upon the Christian forbearance of the people, else the last state of some men will be worse than the first.

We recently read an extract from a letter written by a negro soldier to a prominent negro in this country, in which the writer dwelt upon the record that the negro soldiers had made in France, and he closed by saying that they had proved their manhood on the field of battle and had done their part to make the world safe, and that when they returned, they were going to claim rights that had been denied them. Here we have a possible cause of future trouble.

That the negro soldiers have proved their manhood on the field of battle we know, if we can believe testimony, and we also know that nothing would be more natural than for them to feel that they should be treated as men.

That they should have their rights we believe, yet there is a danger when men become conscious of power, and at the same time feel that they have hitherto been defrauded of what was due them, they are apt to magnify their wrongs and to insist upon their rights in a spirit that will provoke bitterness.

The wise men of the negro race see the danger, and they are appealing to the better class of whites to unite with them in securing a better understanding between the races.

This is very necessary, because there are always a certain class of men of both colors who are only happy when they can raise a row.

We shall need to bear and forbear, to join with the better negroes to prevent any clash, and above all we should see that justice is done to the negro in our courts and that his life shall not be exposed to the insane fury of a mob.

The Stewardship Campaign and the Tithe Law.

Two weeks ago we had a contributed article on the Tithe with which the editor expressed sympathy.

This article aroused more than one of our brethren, and caused them to express the fear that the people, being only too glad of an excuse to hold on to their money, would welcome the contention that the tithe of the Old Testament was not obligatory upon those living under the new dispensation.

We would greatly regret it if such should be the case, and nothing we are sure could be farther from the intentions of those expressing these views.

What the writers of the article in question were trying to do, was to protest against the teaching that the old tithe law was equally binding as the Sabbath law and therefore that those who refused to be bound by it were guilty of a violation of one of the moral laws.

It is the duty of the Church in its efforts to develop the believer, to develop him in the grace of giving, but not at the expense of truth.

Let us remember that the tithe was given when men lived under the bondage of the law, while we live under the covenant of grace where all that pertains to worship should be spontaneous.

We have no wish to abrogate the tithe as a measure of giving. If any one wishes to make that the measure of his liberality, then let him adopt it and be assured that it is the measure that God once gave men. The only thing we protest against is that we must adopt it, or else be guilty of violating an express command of God.

Our idea is that the tithe as a matter of convenience should be the minimum, for no one would like to think that a Jew could outgive him. The New Testament rule is to give as the Lord has prospered you, laying by in store.

In the two Epistles to the Corinthians, chapters 16 and 9, Paul lays down the principles of giving, such as giving according to the degree with which God has prospered you; giving bountifully in order to reap bountifully; giving liberally, every man according as he has purpose in his heart; and finally, giving cheerfully for God loveth a cheerful giver.

Follow these New Testament requirements in their spirit, and if you will do so, we need not bother about the tithe, because the people will bring in their offerings till there shall not be room enough to receive them.

The Tithe

By Rev. G. F. Bell.

LAST week's anti-tithe article was sponsored first and last by three distinguished and respected names. Nevertheless, one who is helping to sow tithing literature broadcast and freely expects to continue the horrid practice, as occasion offers, convinced in his own mind that he is rendering God service, would like to say a few words in reply.

If it be true that "circumcision has as well-founded a claim to be pre-Mosaic as the tithe," it is equally true that there is as good New Testament evidence for the abrogation of the Sabbath law as for the abrogation of the tithe law.

On the other hand, Jacob seems to have been instinctively taught by the Spirit, when converted, that he who trusts God is also God's trustee, saying: "If God will be with me, and will keep me . . . then . . . I will surely give the tenth unto thee." Other converted men, seeking light and a standard, have reached the same general conclusion not only but also the same specific acknowledgement and expression of trusteeship and tenancy.

The only time Jesus spoke of the tithe, it was at once to condemn it as a substitute for personal integrity and to commend it as good and right per se, the unquoted portion of Mt. 23:23 being: "These ye ought to have done, and not to have left the other undone."

In I Cor. 16:2, "Let each one of you lay by him in store, as he may prosper," Paul taught Christians to practice a definite setting aside of money for the Lord's work in proportion to income. Some sort of ratio between income and offering is implied. Since the new dispensation grew out of the old, the tithe as a minimum would appeal to Paul and his readers as naturally as to Jacob.

It is true that the New Testament doesn't press the tithe upon us as a legal claim. Neither does it so press the Sabbath upon us. But we accept the Sabbath as a moral principle of perpetual value and of perpetual force until the ends it was designed to serve have been fulfilled. And, with Robt. E. Speer, we so accept and proclaim the tithe—a rapidly increasing multitude of us.

Circumcision was both a sanitary measure and a symbol of separation, its effects terminating on the individual. The New Testament deems baptism a sufficient symbol to displace, in a freer age, all the old Old Testament symbols of the perpetual principle of moral separation. Circumcision's sanitary value remains and commends itself to multitudes.

The tithe was both a financial measure and a definite expression of stewardship and service, its effects terminating on the preservation and propagation of truth. The need for symbols diminishes with increasing and clearer revelations of truth. But the need for financial measures to assure truth's preservation and propagation is multiplied. So the tithe's value both as a financial measure and a definite expression of personal consecration remains and commends itself to many earnest Christian hearts.

Let the Christian who believes that he is bought with a price, that it is his chief end to glorify God, and that his whole life should be a living sacrifice, take the vow of poverty, if he will, and dedicate to God all his income over and above life's grimmest necessities.

If he doesn't do that, let him beware lest singing "Were the whole realm of nature mine, That were a present far too small; Love so amazing, so divine, Demands my life, my soul, my all," brand him as a hypocrite. Human nature's selfishness needs a safeguard as much today as of old. An awakened conscience demands a standard to guide it. The triumph of truth in the earth needs as full and as definite a support as ever. And personal consecration and a sense of God's ownership and primary claim should have as real and definite an expression. General assent is easy; concrete responses reveal our sincerity or the lack of it. An invitation to come and dine sometime may be readily and even gushingly accepted. An invitation to dine tomorrow at twelve discovers whether or not we are in earnest about our professed friendliness. The Christian who heartily echoes Paul's "whom I am, whom also I serve," will not err if he adopts a system to make sure that he is doing at least as much for the fully revealed Gospel amid multiplied modern opportunities as the ancient Jew did to preserve and propagate the Gospel's foreshadowing. God taught His ancient people to be systematic in order to be efficient. Surely He would have His maturer children of today just as efficient and, consequently, just as systematic.

Whether the tithe be a law still in force or not, it has unrepealed scriptural sanction as an effective system and a right principle. Is it not still both a privilege and a standard of minimum financial duty?

As for several tithes, there is another interpretation. See Davis' Bible Dictionary, for example.

As for the Assembly, it has repeatedly recommended most heartily the work of the Stewardship Committee, a vital part of whose propaganda last week's collaborators would now fain hush up. It is to be noted that it also said in 1909: "The General Assembly would by no means discourage the giving of one-tenth of their income by individuals who may conscientiously fix upon this proportion for themselves. Any definite system of giving is vastly better than the far too common haphazard habit of giving." The design of the present propaganda is merely to encourage individual Christians to adopt a definite system of giving and, if they will, to fix upon one-tenth conscientiously as the minimum proportion for themselves. Moreover, the Assembly of 1916 requested the addition of seven new questions to the blank presented to sessions for answer. The seventh question is: "How many tithers in your congregation?" As an affirmative or positive answer to the other questions would be considered a favorable answer, the presumption is that the same is true of this question. Who can doubt that the intended effect was and that the actual effect will be to increase tithing as a conscientious personal practice throughout our church?

That $3,500,000 for Benevolences.

By Rev. J. C. Shive.

Oh brethren! Is the task too big? Let the greatness of Christ's sacrifice for us, and the greatness of God's grace to forgive sin, and the millions of wealth He has poured into our hands be the answer! And let the tremendous needs and ever growing opportunities and demands upon our beloved Church be the answer. If our people will quit talking about "heavy burdens," and quit complaining of the "many calls," and let the tithe be the minimum of their gifts, the $3,500,000 goal will be reached beyond a doubt, and all the causes will be provided for, and no "special appeals" will ever be necessary.

The spring campaign for benevolences will soon be on. It is to be a simultaneous campaign in all the churches throughout the Southern Presbyterian Church. It is a big movement all together to accomplish a great task. Let every leader get his shoulder to the wheel, and let every campaign manager of every congregation do his utmost and be faithful, and the task will be easily accomplished.

There's Another Man

By Rev. W. L. Caldwell, D.D.

OFF the coast of Spain a British rescue vessel came upon a dismasted merchantman drifting before the winds. Drawing up alongside, the rescue party came aboard and after diligent search found a poor fellow wrapped in a blanket and almost frozen. As he was revived from the death stupor, he opened his eyes upon his rescuers, his lips moved, and they heard him faintly say, "There's another man."

It was the first utterance of the saved man. This is the sign of the new birth. The first thought of the regenerate soul is the other man. When Andrew found his Saviour, he first sought out Simon and brought him to Jesus, and Philip in the joy of his new discovery went to look for Nathaniel. This is the spirit of the new life in Christ. It is the law of Christ, written indeed in the Old Testament but so deeply buried under ecclesiastical rubbish and Jewish tradition in Jesus' day that he had to dig it up and call it a "new commandment." "Again a new commandment I give unto you that ye love one another." "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

If some quibbler shall ask, "Who is my neighbor?" Jesus will answer him in that beautiful story of the Good Samaritan. My neighbor is my fellow man, whose life in any possible way touches mine. He is the one who may come in the circle of my influence, whether he be across the street or across the sea. Jesus not only taught this, He acted it. He is Himself the Good Samaritan, who seeing His fellowmen bruised and bleeding by life's way, threw himself into the breach, laying down His life for others. He said that He came not to be ministered unto but to minister, and fitting the actions to the words, He took a towel and girded Himself, and with a basin in His hands He washed the disciples' feet.

This is the spirit that is destined to revolutionize the world. It has lit the lamp of the scholar, fired the zeal of the reformer, enabled men to brave the dangers of the deep, the wilds of the forest, the blood-thirst of cannibals, and endure the loathsome diseases, the sin and the shame of heathenism. The pages of history glow with the records of men and women who counted not their lives dear unto themselves that they might reach and save the other man. It is to our shame that so many of us have not followed their noble examples, else long ago the last man would have heard this gospel of the kingdom. We have listened to the siren voices about us and the seducer of spirits has led us into selfish ways and we have not cared for the afflictions of Joseph.

In the days of our peace and prosperity we have waxed callous to the noble ideals of our holy religion. But in these recent days we have gone again to Calvary, and re-learned its sublime lesson of sacrifice for the sake of others. In the stupendous sacrifice that we have been called upon to make in blood and treasure to save the things that we call dear, we have heard again the call of the other man. Much of the dross of our selfishness has been burned out in the heat of war. Our chastened spirits have ~~risen~~ risen to nobler ideals; America has become glorious in the eyes of the world, as with noble aim and lavish hand she reaches out to save the other man. The distress signals from the millions of Europe, broken, bleeding, starving, have enlarged our hearts and again we are revealing the spirit of the Good Samaritan.

But what shall it profit if we save them from starvation, and offer them not the Bread of Life? Will America save them from the first death, and the church let them die the second death? The church's hour has struck, the supreme opportunity of all time is upon us. Will she take advantage of the tide, or will she be taken in the ebb, left high and dry to rot and die? God is calling His church to capitalize this splendid spirit of unselfishness and deepen it into a vital spiritual power for the saving of the world.

Let us wipe the slate and forget the small achievements of the past, they are not worthy to be compared with the things which are in store for us in this new era, if we be men of vision and of faith. The day of small things is past. God has broadened our horizon. If we have thought in tens, we must think in hundreds, if we have thought in hundreds, we must think in thousands. Money saved is not money earned, if men are saved by money spent. We gave our money to help make the world free, now we will give it to make heaven rejoice. Every Christian community must be permeated with the lofty ideals of Christian altruism. The schools and colleges of our land must be delivered from the baleful influences that have crept in unawares, and the training of our youth must be bounded on four sides and shot through with religion. Leaves of healing must go out from our presses to open the blind eyes and enlarge the vision that we may see the fields white unto the harvest. The Word of God must be placed in every home and an altar reared there to Him who "keepeth Israel." Nor must we be deaf to the S. O. S. cries from afar. The light that shines brightest at home will shine farthest out to the lands beyond the sea.

To do all this there must be a united pull. You may call it a "Drive," if by that you mean to drive out the old spirit of selfishness, but it is rather a "get together and Pull" of all our forces. Our leader is the Prince with the pierced hand, the Lord of Calvary. He has shown us how to make sacrifice, and He beckons the church to follow Him in sacrificial giving, both of life-blood and treasure, on to glorious victory. Our church can give three and a half millions to save the other man and we will. The joy and the thrill of it will be a real revival of religion, giving will become to us a sacrament, the "other man" will be saved, and the name of the Lord and Saviour exalted.

A Right Attitude Toward the Budget.

By Rev. R. T. Gillespie, D.D.

There are many elements which enter into a successful every member canvass. Experience has proved that a right attitude toward the budget is one of the most important. At least two things are necessary to produce this. First: The budget must be prepared and placed in the hands of the congregation as one of the first things necessary in their preparation for the canvass. Second: The congregation, as well as the officers, must be led to fully appreciate the necessity of each item. Too much emphasis cannot be laid upon the value of publicity in connection with the church budget.

Take first the budget for current expense, the congregation should be informed of every contemplated expense connected with the administration of the church, and these items should be so carefully considered that every item can be defended by the manager and officers of the congregation against any possible objection that may arise. Thus the expense budget is established on the basis of necessity.

The benevolent budget should receive the same consideration. The congregation should be trained to look upon this as of equal necessity. The authority of the higher courts to plan the benevolent work, and to assign to each congregation its just proportion for the support of this work should at all times be maintained. There may be mistakes. Some apportionments may be too high, but others may be too low. Readjustments can best be made through the experience gained from year to year. Another point to be emphasized is that the success of the big drive is conditioned upon the success of the individual church.

No church, therefore, should say "impossible" till every effort has been made and every resource exhausted to cover the entire budget. The right attitude is the basis of morale, and morale is essential to success.

The Bible in France

By Pastor Emmanuel Chastand.

WHOEVER truly loves his country must begin now to think about what has been called here in France "l' apres-guerre,"—the after-war conditions of life. What will happen when the land, satiated with blood, shall see her men return to their peaceful occupations? What will be the new order of things? How will social life be affected. What will the soul of tomorrow be like?

For my part, when I reflect upon the future of my country, these words of Christ ring incessantly in my ears: "Seek ye the Kingdom of God and His justice, and all things will be given you."

Ah yes, my land of France is a beautiful land. France is admirable and she is universally admired. But I am forced with pain to admit that she lacks one thing—God—God by whom men and nations are rendered just and morally healthy.

Yet has not France been called in history "the elder daughter of the Roman Church?" Yes, but that title means scarcely more than a state of passive submission to the will of a pontiff rather than a real faithfulness to God.

What then is the religious position of France? For centuries past she has been dominated by the Roman clergy together with the aristocracy. The church has ever used her influence in the service of princes, and princes have ever drawn the sword in the service of the church to stifle every effort toward intellectual emancipation, religious or political.

The French people, by nature religious, have for centuries regarded the clergy with an equal degree of fear and contempt. And each time the people have been in power they have given free rein to their anger. The Revolution was directed against the king and the clergy. The separation of the Church and State was the scisson with a church that was anti-democratic.

"In days past the rites of religion were observed without faith," said Mgr. d'Hulst. The king went to mass; all France attended mass; princes to please the king; the knights to please princes; peasants to please their lords. But from the day that it was permissible to be unbelieving without being burnt alive, unbelief dared show itself openly.

Voltaire, Diderot, Montalembert held up religious things to ridicule to the sound of applause of the republican people. But unbelief was ripe long before their time. It was not possible that the people of France should see the clergy of a church give centuries of proof of an incomparable zeal for hanging, burning, imprisoning or exiling thousands of good Frenchmen whose only crime was that they read the Bible, without their feeling deeply shocked. This fermentation of unbelief is still active for though the Roman Church has no longer the power of open and violent persecution, her tyranny is exercised in the shade, and she seeks by every possible means to dominate men's minds and consciences in the hope of regaining her ancient sovereignty.

At this very time, in this twentieth century, even as the Kaiser, the Pope of Rome represents that old spirit of anti-evangelic and anti-democratic authority, which the war must destroy if we would achieve the emancipation of nations. It is because both are actuated by the same ideas and motives, that in spite of their opposing religions the Kaiser and the Pope have such unlimited indulgence for each other. That is why the Pope is silent in regard to the crimes committed by Germans against the Belgians; why the nobility and the clergy of Spain have leanings toward Germany; why even Canada sent only 35,000 Catholic volunteers while sending forth 400,000 Protestants to defend civilization in its hour of danger.

Yes, this war is the war of the principle of democracy in opposition to the archaic principle of autocracy. Such is the conviction of all the combatants. That is why the Pope is condemned to silence, leaving your President in undisputed possession of the pulpit from which his voice rings out to listening humanity.

That we may be quite sure that we do not exaggerate, let us read over again together some of the clauses of the bull "Quanta Cura," and of the "Syllabus," promulgated by Pope Pius IX:

"Anathema upon whosoever says that every man has the right to liberty of conscience and worship, and that citizens have full right to manifest and declare aloud and in public their beliefs unrestrained by any ecclesiastical or civil authority.

"Anathema upon whosoever maintains that the church has not the right to exercise coercion by temporal punishment upon those who violate her laws.

"Anathema upon whosoever shall affirm that the Pontiff can and ought to be reconciled to and take part with the progress, the liberalism, and the civilization of modern times."

These are the monstrous principles of popery and these principles proclaimed ex-cathedra by Pius IX in 1864, can be revoked by no Pope without attacking the dogma of papal infallibility.

The figure of the Pope, therefore, looms before us rather as a vision of the middle ages, than a present-day personality, a vision that retreats and fades in the shade of the past, before the powerful resounding voice of the Protestant Wilson. As has been well said in France, "The Pope speaks like a politician, the politician like a prophet."

Since the outbreak of hostilities, the Roman Church has attempted once again to work harm to Protestantism by declaring that this war was the war of Luther against Joan of Arc, of Protestantism against Catholicism. Fain would they have brought against us the odious charge of treason. But at once Protestant England joined us; then the United States, the land of the Bible, took her stand at the side of the Allies. Today the majority of the people ranged against Germany are Protestant.

And now we hope indeed, with your help and your sympathy, that we shall work to win France not merely to a religion, but to Christ, Himself, by means of Protestantism, the only religion consistent with democracy. For let us remember that in France the Roman Church is anti-republican. The French aristocracy, who still dream of a king, and regret the days of Louis XIV, have constantly obtained from Rome the right of persecution directed against republican priests such as the Deputy Abbe Lemire, and have stifled all movements of democratic tendency such as the Sillon.

A few weeks ago a councillor-general assured me: "The church cannot accept democracy." "Her future depends on its acceptance," I replied. "Your church will be democratic or she will cease to exist."

The people of France are by nature intensely democratic. They turn more and more from a clergy whom they see ceaselessly barring before them the road to freedom. Here are some lines of a popular song which describes exactly their state of mind:

"What does a good Republican desire?

To live and die far from the tonsured sire!"

The French people, the vast majority of them ignorant of the Protestant religion, and therefore misinterpreting the Gospel, have insulted even our Saviour Christ. Thousands of workmen have sung:

"Put the Virgin in the stable,
Turn the Christ into the street."

And those masses of workmen and women who more than any other class have need of the great hope, are thrown into irreligion, encouraged by numerous politicians, enemies of the Roman Church. This triumph of irreligion appeared so suddenly at one time that one of our parliamentary ministers was led to make this declaration: "We have extinguished the lights of heaven."

But at that time a sensation of uneasiness weighed heavily upon France. And after the war it will weight yet more heavily upon my country—grown more serious, more thoughtful after passing through so great trials. For France feels that she lacks something. What? She cannot exactly say. But I answer boldly for her: The Gospel of Christ.

My nation is like the multitudes on whom Jesus had compassion for they are without a shepherd. Up to the present time all her shepherds have become her tyrants. The people distrust all who would guide them. But show them Christ—the Christ of history—the Saviour, and France, I feel certain, will take her stand beneath the banner of Him who gives the freedom which alone is true liberty.

More than a century ago Benjamin Franklin was ambassador of the United States in Paris. One evening he received a visit from several politicians and abbots of the court. Conversation turned upon the Bible, and several of these men mocked at that "pious book" of which Voltaire had predicted the approaching disappearance. Franklin got up, took from the shelves of his library a big volume and said: "I have here a selection of the most celebrated thinkers and prophets of the East. Will you let me read you a chapter?" When he had finished, his listeners expressed their admiration. Imagine their astonishment when Franklin told them that he had been reading an extract from the Bible.

The same ignorance prevails today. Rome prevents the Bible from becoming the book of the people. When a Catholic speaks of the Bible he jeers at it as "the Protestant book." I may add that in many places priests have had burnt the Bibles given by our evangelists. If a copy is asked for at a booksellers, the most frequent answer will be that "we don't know what it is;" or they may perhaps say, "We don't sell bad books."

Now the question of the Bible is a question of life and death for the French democracy. Long ago our great national poet Victor Hugo said: "There ought to be a Bible in every cottage."

It is acknowledged today that French Protestantism constitutes a body of elite in my country. Despite its small numbers, its reduced resources, it has held high, as high as possible, the banner of the Gospel. In moral questions it is Protestantism that has undertaken the campaign against alcoholism and immorality. In the domain of religion, unknown to the majority of people (for it is only forty-five years since the right of propaganda has been conceded to us) Protestantism has endeavored to spread broadcast the Word of God, and has had the joy of enlightening numbers of souls. An engineer said to me: "I am happy now for I have found the secret of life. Rome had scandalized me by her errors, and her tyranny. Materialism had failed to nourish my soul. I have found, thanks to Protestantism, the Christ my heart needed." This man symbolizes the French people. My nation is weary of cracked cisterns. Her soul is hungry and thirsty. May it be granted us to carry out the Saviour's command: "Ye yourselves, give them food."

A young Catholic priest told me a little while ago how deeply distressed he felt at the attitude of the Pope in the great war. I begged him to trust in Christ alone. He wrote to me from the trenches: "I have received your Testament. What pleasure it gives me! It shall never quit me! May peace, when it comes, give us opportunity for devoting ourselves more than ever before to the cause of Christ and of the nations." This young priest had never before seen a New Testament! Does not this single fact suffice to proclaim the urgent need of evangelising not only atheistic and materialistic France, but Catholic France, for whom the fact of Christ is veiled.

Help us to make France a strong democracy and a Christian people. Your grand democracy still lives by the force of the impulsion and the inspiration of those heroic Puritans who conceived and drew up that sublime Bill of Rights which Lafayette bore to my country. The Puritans among us were the Huguenots, decimated by several centuries of persecution. Yet there remain still seven thousand who have not bowed the knee to Baal, and who bear witness to the divine light of the Gospel.

Join your strength and your means to their efforts. Help us to give this war its most marvelous crown of triumph by making the light of truth to shine. Acting thus you will be working not for France alone, but for the whole world.

The Sunday Newspaper

By Rev. R. E. Henderlite.

DEAR EDITOR: I have been thinking a good deal since reading your answer to the query concerning the Sunday newspaper. I do not think your answer was the right one. It seems to me to leave room for our own pleasure when God has been right explicit concerning what His holy pleasure is in the matter. So if you can kindly find room in your good paper for my remarks on this difference of opinion, here they are:

1. God has set the Sabbath and the family, as Dr. Thomas Peck used to say, "the bulwarks of the church," and no church nor nation has prospered who tampered with them. But it is a notorious fact that America is not living right in regard to either of them. Now you bring the Sunday edition of the paper into your home (and the funny paper for the children comes on that day) and (right from Satan) and (as some one has said) "who is in any frame of mind for church when they are through with it?" And when the Christian reads it his influence is soon lost on the sinner who watches us closely—and his own soul waxes lean.

2. The Sabbath is given, God tells the children of Israel, to be a sign between Him and them. A sign of what? That He is the one true and living God; that He is the Creator, that thus "He makes all things in six days and all very good, and rested the Sabbath day and sanctified it." See fourth commandment. The Sunday edition of the daily paper (or any other secular literature read regularly on the Lord's day) makes a man forget all about God and His covenant, and that He has "a special propriety in the Sabbath day." As some one again has said, the best advertisements are in it—I suspect the most sensational news. It soon destroys the spirit of prayer. But "My house shall be called a house of prayer for all nations."

3. Surely no one, as we have just argued, will call the Sunday edition a religious paper. We know it is secular to the core. Now God has given us a rule in the 58th chapter of Isaiah, which should settle this, and all other questions of like import. This chapter does not deal with the ceremonial law, but is full of those great spiritual truths which are taught in God's Word; and which feed His people. In concluding the chapter see what He says concerning the Sabbath: "If thou withdraw thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor Him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words; then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride on the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken." (s. 58:13-14).

Now I submit to any prayerful man that this text and the Sunday newspaper do not go together.

Seventy years of captivity was the result of breaking God's holy day—"Till the land enjoyed her Sabbaths." For God said, "Ye have polluted my Sabbaths."

If the Sunday edition of the newspaper and the "funny paper" for the children does not come close to making the family pollute it in this day—why, then I have written in vain.

An Intensive Study Class

By Mrs. Mary Cheney.

CAN much be gained by big effort crowded into one day? Ask any one of the eighty-five ladies who met together Monday, January 27, for her opinion on the subject. Now that the wisdom of the wisest is being given to the solution of the problem "How to make the world a safe place to dwell in?" we women wish to learn our share of the work, and, to do this best, we must first know the needs of those less favored than we. In accordance with this idea, and also because all the world finds so much to claim the hours of these busy days, the Missionary Societies of Central Church, St. Louis, Mo., decided to try the intensive day, which should be given to a consideration of the Foreign Mission Study Book "Women Workers of the Orient." Ladies known to be gifted with ability to seize leading points were asked to take certain chapters and to give them to us in synopsis. The result was the following program:

Upon arriving at the church, we were met by a hostess dressed in Japanese costume, who asked that each one register—six denominations were in attendance. We were then ushered into a large room prettily decorated with Japanese and Chinese banners and curios. The devotional was conducted by our president, Mrs. Ferguson, but it was made our service by her request that all should unite in the 23rd Psalm, and in our Lord's own prayer. Then followed a brief, but tender talk on importunate, believing prayer.

The study of the book began with "Women of the Home," presented by Mrs. Wear. We went with her to the harems of Moslem lands, saw the toilers of Persia, India, China, and Japan, and realized, as never before, the barrenness of life that knows nothing of the Gospel.

Next came "The Orient, old and the Orient, awake," by Mrs. Wm. Clagett, who gave us a magnificent showing of an Orient which accorded to woman no brain, no virtue, no merit of any kind, no hope for the future, and the same lands today asking for Christian training for their children; Christian mothers for their homes.

The third chapter was taught by Mrs. Waggoner, who sketched the lives of people—Pundita Ramabi, of India, and her efforts for the child widows, and Miss Sing, a girl found and educated by Miss Isabel Thoburn, and who became president of the first woman's college in China.

Lunch followed, served by members of the Young Women's Missionary Society, dressed as Japanese girls. The tables bore blooming plants, and beautiful Japanese place cards marked the speakers' table. A delightful social hour followed, after which refreshed bodies and rested minds were ready for the exercises of the afternoon. This was opened by a debate—"Resolved, That medical work is a greater factor in the mission field than is the educational." (Affirmative, Mrs. Jno. F. Green; Negative, Mrs. Lindsay). Wit and wisdom; Biblical authority and man's experience played important parts in the interesting arguments of each speaker.

The last chapter of the book, "Women Awake and Working Together," was given by Miss Boulware. The aroused woman; her demands; the results and possibility for the future.

The end of the day came with an address by our own Mrs. Winsborough, who summed up the lessons we had learned by the personal question, "What are we doing to meet all these problems; why have we done our work inadequately, with small enthusiasm and with insufficient workers, insufficiently equipped?" The recent World's War met no failure of response in the calls of the Y. M. C. A.; the Y. W. C. A.; the Red Cross or the Canteen Service. Why does the Lord's work lag? We need a common purpose; a call united, enthusiastic, and a propaganda such as the War Cry gave! This must be a personal call as was that! Here she gave us what we trust may be the jubilee note for the future of the church, by telling of a recent meeting of interdenominational church leaders, held in New York City; the decision reached by this body was: "All hands to the work; a mighty united force of God's people with the determination to provide equipment, workers, all necessary adjuncts for successful accomplishment of our missionary task." To us comes the call, "To your tents O Israel!" Let each one sing—not with lips alone—"I'll do what you want me to do, dear Lord."

Was our day a success? Assuredly yes! A glorious one, enjoyed while it lasted and to bear fruit hereafter, for surely a people whom our Lord has so honored as to make His messengers, the custodians of His work, must hear and heed His call and cannot refuse His great commission, "Feed My Sheep."

Stewardship

By Rev. A. D. McClure, D.D.

THERE can be but one correct opinion concerning the temporal possessions in the hands of the children of God, and that is that they are the property of God, Who is the rightful owner and Who has entrusted them to His children that they may have what is best for them, and those dependent upon them and contribute to the support of the cause of Christ and to relieve the wants of the really needy in their day and opportunity. In his prayer for his son Solomon and his gratitude to God for the liberality of the people in their offerings to build the temple, David, the king, as we read in I Chronicles 29:16, put the truth into the words, "O Lord our God, all this store that we have prepared to build Thee an house for Thine holy name cometh of Thine hand, and is all Thine own." Only as we acknowledge this and consider ourselves entirely dependent on God for what we are, and have, and as we recognize that God has exalted Christ to His own right hand and given Him all authority in all things, can we do our duty as stewards, and measure up to the claims of Christ upon us in all things. That is the principle that underlies the proper practice of setting apart of one-tenth of our income for Christ and the church. The whole belongs to God and the tenth is a part of that whole for the specific service of Christ. The nine-tenths may not in such view be used selfishly, or for anything that is not in the service of Christ in business, and the supply of our own real needs and the needs of those dependent upon us. This principle puts a new view of our possessions to very many. It puts a new emphasis on our duty to consider every request for aid and every occasion to take part in the support of every worthy cause. It puts every man, woman and child in a new relation to God and vests the title of all our possessions in God, and makes our possession of anything a sacred trust. If we have little of this world's goods the duty to use this is as great as if we had much. If we have much, the responsibility is only larger, but not more binding. It rather adds to the privilege of having more to use in the service of our Lord and Master. This is no new truth. It is the teaching of God's Word. It is the right way of service in the much, or the little that is entrusted to us. It puts God in His rightful relation to us in what we have. It gives Him the right to say by His prophet Malachi, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse." It exalts our rank from mere bond servants, driven by mere command to dole out a pittance to those things which we cannot escape, to that of being entrusted with riches to be used for our Lord. The proper discharge of this trust in the proper spirit puts us as trustees into the confidence of our Lord Whom we may freely consult and seek to obey in love and trust. It always

The Tithe as a Practice

By R. A. Lapsley, Jr.

(S. K. Phillips and T. P. Allen, Collaborating).

WE have read with genuine regret the article on The Tithe from the pen of Dr. Raynal, of Statesville, Dr. Parker collaborating. It seems to us that coming at this time, at the most critical point in our Benevolent Campaign, such an article will do a great deal of harm. There are many who are all too ready to hide their stinginess behind his arguments.

In his treatment of the tithe, Dr. Raynal is unfair. He gives only one side of the question. To cite a single instance in quoting Matthew 23:23, he is very careful to omit that part of the verse in which the Master commends the Pharisees for their tithing. Jesus said of the tithe which they paid, "These ought ye to have done and not to leave the other undone."

All of Dr. Raynal's arguments are directed against the tithe as a law and not as a practice. We believe that every Christian ought to give not less than one-tenth of his income to the Lord, not as a matter of law but as a matter of loyalty to Jesus Christ. We have therefore taken as one motto of our campaign, "At Least a Tithe for the Lord."

There are two unanswerable arguments for the practice of the tithe.

I.

The first argument is a purely academic one. It deals with the principles of giving. It may be stated in this way.

1. Every Christian should give something to God. Giving is the expression of our love and loyalty to those whom we love. If we really love God, we will want to give Him something. Even Pagans bring their gifts to their shrines and temples. The idea of our giving to God is thoroughly Scriptural—being found in both Old and New Testament. The Macedonian Christians "first gave their own selves unto the Lord" (II Cor. 8:5). The Master Himself said: "Freely ye have received, freely give." (Matt. 10:8).

2. Every Christian should give God some of his money. There are other things that we ought to give Him. We should give Him our love, our faith, our loyalty, our time. But we ought also to give Him definitely and directly some of our money. All of it should be used in a way that will honor Him, but some should be dedicated exclusively to His service. It is indeed a very blessed thing that we can give our money to the God to whom belong "the beasts of the forest and the cattle upon a thousand hills." We should be thankful that God can use the money which we give Him in carrying out His plans for the world and in establishing His Kingdom among men. He could have chosen to do these things without money. He has chosen to do them with it. We are to furnish it, and the Scripture commands us "To honor the Lord with our substance." (Prov. 3:9). And Jesus commended highly a woman who gave her money to the Lord. (Luke 21:4).

3. Every Christian should give God a definite proportion of his income. A Christian whose salary is two thousand dollars a year should not give as much to the Lord as one whose salary is five. The widow who dropped her mite into the treasury was not expected or required to give as much as the rich young ruler. Our giving should be thus in proportion to our means. We may give more than this set proportion should our hearts so prompt us—we ought not to give less. This is clearly taught by the Apostle when he said, "Let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him." (I Cor. 16:2).

4. Every Christian should give God not less than one-tenth of his income. I believe that every person would agree to the first three principles. The fourth follows inevitably. Should we give God a definite proportion of our income?

Then what should this proportion be? We must answer, not less than the tenth. The proportion will not be the same for all persons. Some can afford to give a larger part than others. We know of some laymen who give to the Lord their whole incomes apart from a small sum set apart for their personal necessities. Every person must face this question for himself, but it seems to us that no person under grace dare offer the Lord less than one-tenth, the proportion that was given by the Jew in the Old Testament. Under the law with its meagre light and with its rigorous requirements, the ancient worshipper of Jehovah cheerfully brought his tithe. Under the Gospel with its fuller light and with its inestimable blessings and privileges, how can we fail to bring to our Saviour less? The Jew brought his tithe to keep up his own forms of worship toward God. We bring our gifts not that we alone may worship Him, but for the most glorious enterprise the world has ever known, for the carrying of His blessed Gospel into all the world.

For these reasons it seems to us that every Christian should gladly and cheerfully bring to Christ not less than one-tenth of his income.

II.

The second argument is a practical one. It is the same kind of argument that Philip used so successfully on Nathaniel when he said, "Come and see." Christ has said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." God has set His seal to the practice of tithing in a most remarkable way.

1. Experience shows that persons who tithe are blessed in it. Tithing almost always brings a temporal blessing. The Laymen Company, of Chicago, has sent questionnaires far and wide, and has only found in rare instances a case of a consistent tither who was not blessed in his business. Out of many letters written to the Sunday School Times on the results of tithing, only one man reported an adverse experience. It is the universal testimony of those who have most carefully observed that tithing as a rule brings a marked blessing upon the business of the man who practices it. And what is yet more important, tithing always brings a spiritual blessing. Tithers are without exception persons of real consecration, of intense loyalty to Christ, and of a truly evangelistic spirit. And they testify that their tithing has drawn them into closer communion with God, and brought to them a joy and satisfaction that they would not be without. These are fruits, the character of which cannot be denied. They are the fruits of grace, and by them God has set His seal to this practice in a way that cannot be ignored.

2. Experience shows that a man who tithes seldom goes back to any other plan of giving. We have known personally many tithers, we have never known one who has done this. There is something about the practice that not only makes converts, but holds them. The teacher of a large men's Bible class in this state, himself an earnest advocate of the tithe, once made this proposition to the members of his class: He said that if any man would try the tithe honestly for a year, and at the end of that time was dissatisfied for any reason with what he had done, that he himself would refund the money which had been given. There was one man in the class who was sceptical, who stated that he intended to take up the proposition, and not only collect his money at the end of the year, but also "show him up." When the year ended he admitted of his own accord, that he would like to receives a blessing both temporal and spiritual. It is according to the Parable of the Pounds spoken by our Lord as we find it in the eighteenth chapter of the Gospel of Luke. When all the children of God, as the disciples of His Son and the loyal subjects of our Lord Jesus Christ, come to see this, and put it into practice, there will be the beginning of better things for Christ and the church, and the breaking forth of streams of blessing which will bless most of all those who hold everything in trust for God, and seek to use all their powers and possessions for God's glory and the needs of men.

News of the Week

President Wilson reached home from France on February 23, landing in Boston harbor. After making an address on Monday, he proceeded to Washington, where he immediately plunged into work, remaining at his desk till a late hour. On Wednesday he gave a dinner to the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, at which he explained and defended the League of Nations. He failed, however, to change the views of his Republican critics.

Since his arrival the "League" has been assailed in the Senate by the Republican members, backed by such hybrid Democrats as Reed, of Missouri; Hardwick, of Georgia, and Vardaman, of Mississippi.

The President will leave for return trip on March 5, and will remain in Europe till about first of June.

The N. C. Senate voted February 27, 35 to 12, for the bill to give the women of the State the suffrage in municipal elections and the bill goes to the House, where the indications are that it will have at least rough sailing. An amendment by Senator Scales was adopted to prescribe the same qualifications for voting except payment of poll tax.

The administration bill appropriating $1,000,000,000 to fulfill the government's guarantee of wheat prices to the farmers for the 1919 crop was passed by the Senate, without material amendment, and now goes to conference.

Representative Frederick H. Gillett, of Massachusetts, was nominated on the first ballot by the Republican caucus tonight as the party candidate for speaker in the next House of Representatives. As Republicans will have a majority in the next House, nomination was regarded by them as equivalent to election.

President Wilson has announced that he will appoint Representative Yates Webb as Federal Judge for North Carolina. It is believed that he will accept after adjournment of Congress.

The Legislature of North Carolina has practically decided to assess all real estate at full market value during this year, and to have a special session of the Legislature in May, 1920, to reduce the tax rate.

Homer S. Cummins, of Connecticut, has been elected chairman of the Democratic National Committee. It was also voted to have a complete reorganization for an aggressive campaign in 1920.

General Faison, brother of Dr. I. W. Faison, of Charlotte, N. C., writes that less than ten per cent of the Thirtieth Division were killed, a remarkable low record, when their fighting experience is considered.

President Wilson told Senators and Representatives from cotton growing States it would be impossible to lift European embargoes on cotton until after the formal declaration of peace. The President told the cotton Representatives and Senators that, under the terms of the Armistice, Germany's status quo must be maintained, which was a further discouraging indication for the cotton situation. Unless an agreement is reached by the European Allies to remove the embargoes, nothing could be done.

Director General Hines, after conferring with the President, has announced that the Government will not turn the roads back to private management until Congress had more opportunity to consider a permanent program of legislation. This was generally interpreted as meaning that the railroads would be under Government management for at least another year, and probably longer.

Arrest of two additional naval reservists in connection with the investigation of charges of bribery in the Third Naval District was announced by Secretary Daniels. This makes a total of five men now held. They are: Lieutenants Benjamin S. Davis and Benoit James Ellert, Ensign Paul Beck and Chief Boatswains Lloyd G. Casey and Frederick A. Jones.

The Senate has confirmed the nomination of Hugh C. Wallace to be Ambassador to France.

The Senate also adopted the Conference report, authorizing men discharged from the military service to retain their uniforms and allowing them five cents a mile for travel to their homes from places of discharge. The house is expected to take similar action within a few days.

Burglars entered the vault in the office of P. B. Spigner, treasurer for Richland County, S. C., sometime between February 22 and 24 and stole between $18,000 and $30,000, practically all of which, it is reported, was in currency. About $500 in currency and silver and a number of checks were left in the vault.

A resolution presented by Cardinal Gibbons for the Peace Congress to apply to Ireland the doctrine of national self-determination, and that a declaration of principles demanding that if any League of Nations be created, all features which may infringe on the traditional American policy, including the Monroe doctrine, shall be eliminated, were adopted unanimously at the closing session of the convention of the Irish race in America.

Count Arco Valley, the young student who shot to death the Bavarian Premier Eisner, was lynched by an angry crowd.

Tambourines and free-will offering boxes which for more than thirty-five years have been used by the Salvation Army in gathering funds, are to be abandoned, according to a statement issued by Commander Evangeline Booth in announcing plans for a "drive" for $10,000,000 next May.

collect the money, but could not do so honestly because a year's practice of the tithe had not only convinced him of its value, but had made him an enthusiastic convert to its practice. Such is the way that those who practice the tithe feel about it, and such is the testimony that they bear.

3. Experience shows that the general practice of tithing would solve all of the financial difficulties in the way of the progress of the Kingdom. Every denomination would have an income which would more than cover local needs and worldwide missionary opportunities. This has been the experience of certain churches that have made tithing one of their fundamental principles. Such a church is the Wesley Chapel, of Cincinnati; the Geneva Methodist Church, of New York; the Englewood Christian Church, of Chicago. These churches came up by tithing in a few years from threatened ruin to a sound and solid financial basis, and to largely increased missionary activities. If every member of the Southern Presbyterian Church would give at least a tenth to the Lord, the income of our church would be on the most conservative estimate not less than fourteen million dollars. This would enable us to pay off the dishonoring debts that rest on so many of our committees and to enter all the doors of opportunity that God has opened before us.

For these practical reasons, we believe that every Christian should give to the Lord not less than one-tenth of his income.

Not only does Dr. Raynal in his article do harm by his attitude toward the tithe, but also by the slur which he casts on the Stewardship Campaign and the Assembly's Progressive Program. Though he mentions neither by name, his meaning is all too clear. We are sure that no minister in our Synod is more heartily in sympathy with the ends aimed at in this campaign. The thing that he objects to is not the objects in view but the means employed. But these means which are in themselves, proper and scriptural, are the only means by which these objects may be obtained. The "outpouring of money" of which he speaks has not as a matter of Topic for Sunday, March 16—Envy and Covetousness: Luke 12:13-21.

Envy is begrudging good fortune to another because you do not enjoy the good fortune yourself. It is an inexcusable, dark, and detestable trait. It is a quality so universally despised that few ever acknowledge themselves guilty of it. It is definite rebellion against God for His distribution of benefits, plus foul malice towards fellow man by reason of his enjoyment of God's favor. It is a sentiment to be gotten rid of the moment you detect its appearance in your heart.

* * *

Simple covetousness is something less than envy. It is at bottom the inordinate longing for more than one has. It is stirred and held at a high pitch of intensity by the sight of others enjoying what we want. It may not be so degraded a sin as envy, but it is every bit as dangerous, as it tends to run into envy and a score of other mortal sins. Paul tells us that the love of money is a root of all evil. Stop!—says the book—Don't let covetousness get a foothold in your life. Thou shalt not covet. Later it will kill the soul as typhus germs kill the body. It is a moral disease, and it must be allowed no headway whatever, not even a start.

Covetousness is folly. It does not reach exclusively after the things worth while. It yearns mainly for material possessions, while the Lord says the life of a man consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesses. No, the life of a man consists in the good he does, the love he feels, the enjoyment he has in the things of the Spirit, the growth achieved in him by the work of the Spirit toward the likeness of Jesus, and the knowledge and experience he has of God and Christ. This is life eternal, to know God and His Son Jesus Christ whom He sent into the world. Covetousness is folly, because it absorbs our interest and energies in things of temporary and lesser worth, in things which the man's real self cannot permanently use and which he must leave behind him as useless lumber when he issues forth from this life into the next. God calls the covetous man of our Bible lesson simply "Fool!"

* * *

There was a man in the South some years ago who lived only for money. Money was his god, and he worshipped it and those that possessed it. A moneyless man was despised in his eyes. When he became old and neared the end a strange sleeplessness and foreboding overtook him. Night and day he walked the floor. The scene became ghastly beyond description. Finally the sleepless old man died. He never found God. The faculties of his soul seemed palsied, and he would not or could not seek Him. His covetous soul had reached the inevitable stage where it was without God and without hope in the world.

The Prayer Meeting

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING MARCH 9: THE NEED FOR IMPORTUNATE PRAYER.

Lu. 11:5-13, Lu. 18:1-8.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

Once upon a time His disciples said to Jesus, after He had been praying: "Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples." It would be interesting to know exactly what John taught about prayer; but the disciples felt, as we feel, that their Lord's teaching would be incomparably more illuminating and satisfying. Of course they asked and received.

After giving to them in a concrete way the principles of prayer, He spoke our parable of importunacy in prayer; as if to say: "You will find many discouragements and doubts, arising from various causes, that will dampen your ardor, that may even take the heart out of prayer, or cause you to cease to pray altogether.

But behold, how importunacy overcomes even selfishness, hardheartedness, wickedness, and contempt for public opinion and wretchedness. The selfish, sleepy neighbor at length rises and hands out the bread, because otherwise there would be no sleep. The wicked judge at last takes up the cause of the poor widow to be rid of her.

"And shall not God avenge His own elect which cry day and night unto Him, though He bear long with them?"

How much more shall God, our Father in heaven, hearken to our prayers than the selfish neighbor or the wicked judge! This is a perfectly convincing and reassuring argument to all who believe in the God and Father revealed to us by our Lord.

Yet it may be said with sad truth that real prayer is almost a lost art or a lost faith in the cases of thousands of church members.

One reason is the course of nature, so regular, so compelling, so obvious. No matter how loving and good and solicitous and gracious God may be—such is the perhaps subconscious thought of our age—yet nature pursues her inevitable course. Causes, many evident, some inscrutable, inexorably produce effects. The reign of law is all embracing, pitiless, yet on the whole beneficial. Heartless, yet intelligent. So, why pray? Really God has ordained the course of nature, and He will not interfere no matter who cries or

TEXAS PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE.

This school has been classed "A Plus" by the Executive Committee of the College Section of the State Teachers' Association. One member of the committee has written the president of the college congratulating the school upon the splendid showing it made in its application. The work of this college has been the very best for many years, but it has this present year completed the requirements in library, physical science equipment and endowment demanded by the senior college grade.

Besides the above equipment, the school has the best equipped domestic economy department in the Southwest. It is entirely electrical and is as complete as could be desired. The college department and academy are entirely separated and under different faculties. The whole school is under student government, which is working to the satisfaction of all concerned. The present school year has been quite satisfactory in spirit and work.

The present campaign for the colleges of this Synod is expected to bring new buildings and increased endowment to T. P. C., and her friends are entering the campaign with earnestness and enthusiasm.

JOSHUA PATRIOT AND LEADER.

Golden Text—Jos. 1:9: "Be Strong and of Good Courage."

Joshua 1:1-9.

March 9, 1919.

Joshua is called a patriot because he did love his country and his people. He loved the land which God had promised to Israel, and in possession of which he was to place them. He loved his countrymen and manifested his affection by many sacrifices, severe trials and vigorous efforts in their behalf. But he was more than a patriot. He was a leader and possessed many qualities essential to leadership among men. He was an independent thinker and did not take his opinions from others. He had a robust will and was capable of moulding others to that will. He was able to stand alone in the path of duty and if needful to be in the minority of one with God. He was courageous when confronted by enemies and dangers and was daunted by no obstacles that stood in the path appointed of God. He had a sublime trust in Jehovah and could ask Him to stay the sun in his course that he might do his duty. Our lesson marks the time when he must enter upon his functions.

I. Jehovah's Commands and Promises to Joshua.

He commands him and Israel to cross the Jordan that the Lord may give them possession of the land of Canaan. He tells him that He will verify His promise to the fathers and to Moses and cause them to inherit the land held by the nations of Canaan. He mentions the boundaries of their heritage extending from Lebanon on the north to the wilderness on the south, and from the great river Euphrates on the east to the Mediterranean Sea on the west. With commands Jehovah gives him encouraging promises. He promises that "No man shall be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life." He engages to be with him whithersoever he went, as He was with Moses. He declares that He would never "fail him nor forsake him. By such assurances does the Lord stimulate Joshua to obey His commands.

II. The Moral Qualities Joshua is Urged to Cherish.

In a leader these are fully as much needed as physical or mental gifts. He is exhorted to be strong in will, in purpose and in action. He is to be strong in the face of hindrances, obstacles and dangers. He is to be strong "in the Lord and in the power of His might." He is to remember that Omnipotence goes with him in accomplishing Jehovah's purposes. No matter if Jordan is at flood, it can be crossed when the Almighty prepares the way. Jericho's walls may be lofty and strong, but they fall without human hands when God is obeyed and His ordered blast is heard. Joshua is urged not only to be strong as a weak leader can't conquer Canaan, but to be "very courageous." He must have a courage that can surmount difficulties and face dangers, and conquer enemies. He must have a courage born of righteous causes, aiming at a God-approved end and conscious of a Divine co-operation. Victory ever perches on the banner of a leader that has the strength and courage of Joshua. The moral excellencies of the leader and the army has more to do with success than physical force or intellectual power.

III. Joshua's Directions as to the Divine Law.

The successful leader of men and important enterprises should not only heed Divine commands and be nerved by Jehovah's promises; he must not only foster essential moral qualities, but he must comply with the conditions upon which the Lord promises His aid and co-working. Hence Jehovah tells Joshua what he must do as to His law if he would make his way prosperous. He says, "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth." You must speak of it and teach it as the rule of duty. "Thou shalt meditate therein day and night." That it may be understood and remembered it must engage your thoughts continually. You are to observe and do according to all that is written therein. Upon those three things respecting the law of God depend abiding prosperity and success. These directions concerning the Divine law might be well pondered by all leaders in every sphere of Church and State. No satisfying success or prosperity can long exist if it contravenes Jehovah's law.

IV. Joshua Training for Office.

He entered upon his office as successor of Moses at the time of our lesson. No man can fill a lofty and important position without adequate training. Joshua was in training for his responsible office for forty years. Usually a man occupies a subordinate position to fit him for one higher. He learns to serve before he is qualified to rule. Thus Elisha was the servant of Elijah before he became the prophet of Israel. Joshua was the minister of Moses for forty years before he was called to be leader of his people. His intercourse with Moses and the instructions and example of his master constitute part of his training for his functions. He was trained too by varied experiences in the wilderness, prosperity and adversity, peace and war, judgment and mercy. Above all he was trained by revelations of Jehovah's perfections.

Prayer Meeting.

prays. This thought exercises a wide and determining influence, even upon many who make no pretence to philosophy. But it is not so profound as some think: and in many everyday matters men act as if they are indeed the masters and not the slaves of the order of nature. The orchardist finds his trees threatened by many insect and fungus diseases. Does he say this is the "order of nature," and let them die? The wise orchardist emphatically does not. A child in the home is attacked by disease. Do the parents sit with idle and helpless hands? No, they call in all the skill of experiment and science to combat the disease.

Have we a will power and a resourcefulness that God has not!

We ourselves are constantly transmuted spiritual power into physical force, using our bodies, tongues, arms, legs: Has God not this same power to transmute His will into the realm of the physical? Our power here is limited by our strength; God's power is only limited by His moral purposes. We ourselves also control the laws of nature and make them our servitors. Hence the aeroplane or the balloon rises far into the sky, and the submerged ship rises at the captain's will. We are masters of the law of gravitation. Has man here a resource of power denied to God?

God does not depart from His "plan" to answer prayer. His plan is formed with the prayers of his children as very important and determinative elements.

If God does not answer some prayers or delays the answers to others, perhaps we might well doubt the quality of the prayers rather than the love of God: There are unholy, selfish, unwise, insincere prayers. Again, we ask for things, which require years of training, of service, of suffering, before we may receive them. A boy, hearing his father conversing with an Italian gentleman, asked that he be given the power to do likewise. The answer is obvious: Yes: but years of hard study must intervene: and if he will succeed at last, the first simple request of the child must have the quality of importunity—expressed in years of study.

Let us be both believing and reasonable. Character, like a fruit tree, has roots, body, leaves, flower, fruit. Like the fruit tree, it has many enemies. If we are rooted and grounded in God, the growth will eventuate in fruit—provided we fight the good fight of faith. The fruit tree is always uttering its mute, importunate prayer; and God answers through the carbon-laden air and sunshine. Does He care more for the fruit trees than for us?

ABRAHAM LINCOLN AT PRAYER.

Abraham Lincoln learned to pray where most men learn to pray, at his mother's knees. Long after her death, speaking of his mother, he said, "I remember her prayers, and they have always followed me, and they've clung to me all my life."

On that rainy February afternoon when he left his home in Springfield with a task greater than that which rested upon Washington, he said to his neighbors, "Without the assistance of that Divine Being who ever attends me I cannot succeed; with that assistance I cannot fail. Trusting in Him who can go with me and remain with you and be everywhere for good, let us confidently hope that all will yet be well. To His care commending you, as I hope in your prayers you will commend me, I beg you an affectionate farewell."

His wife said that after he had carefully read his first inaugural address to his family he went off by himself and spent a long time in prayer.

Lincoln himself told General Sickles just before the battle of Gettysburg, when everybody seemed panic stricken, "I went to my room one day. I locked the door and got down on my knees before Almighty God and prayed to Him that this was His war, our cause was His cause, but we could not stand another Fredericksburg or Chancellorsville. I then and there made a solemn vow to Almighty God that, if He would stand behind our boys at Gettysburg, I would stand by Him." Not only did he pray himself continually and ask the prayers of others for himself and the cause, but he made this request, that "prayer be made for Divine protection to our soldiers and their leaders in the field who have so often and so gallantly periled their lives in battling with the enemy and for the blessings and comforts from the Father of mercies to the sick, wounded and prisoners and the orphans and widows of those who have fallen in the service of their country."

He confessed that in all the great emergencies in the White House he had prayed. "I have been driven many times upon my knees by the overwhelming conviction that I had nobody else to go to. My own wisdom and that of all about me seemed insufficient for that day."—From "Young Men and Prayer," by Thomas C. Richards, The Pilgrim Press.

GOD'S LOVING KINDNESS.

The thing that lasts in the universe is God's kindness, which continues "from everlasting to everlasting." What a revelation of God! Oh, dear friends, if only our hearts could open to the full acceptance of that thought, sorrow and care and anxiety, and every other form of trouble would fade away, and we should be at rest. The infinite, undying, imperishable love of God is mine. Older than the mountains, deeper than their roots, wider than the heavens, and stronger than all my sin, is the love that grasps me and keeps me and will not let me go, and lavishes its tenderness upon me, and beseeches me, and pleads with me, and woos me, and rebukes me, and corrects me when I need, and sent His Son to die for me.—Alexander Maclaren.

A TENEMENT.

John Quincy Adams, at the age of eighty, met a friend upon a Boston street. "Good morning," said the friend, "and how is John Quincy Adams today?" "Thank you," was the ex-President's reply, "John Quincy Adams himself is well, quite well; I thank you. But the house in which he lives at present is becoming dilapidated. It is tottering upon its foundations. Time and seasons have nearly destroyed it. Its roof its pretty well worn out. Its walls are shattered and it trembles with every wind. The old tenement is becoming almost uninhabitable and I think John Quincy Adams will have to move out of it soon. But he himself is quite well, quite well." May God give us such a faith.—Fosdick's "Man and the Master."

MUSIC IN THE HOME.

How rich an influence music in the home—the spontaneous singing and playing together in which every grownup and every child takes his part—may be made during the formative period those know best in whose lives it has been a factor. That it has an added and greater value beyond its educational uses and beyond pure pleasure in rhythm and melody is one of the true things made plain in Hamlin Garland's autobiographical "A Son of the Middle Border," in which he recalls the farm home of his childhood and, with the help of his gift of remembering himself the child, places himself and the reader at the child's viewpoint and interprets many aspects of a wholesome home life.

"Our home," he writes, "was a place of song, notwithstanding the severe toil which was demanded of every hand." The pictures of musical evenings around the blazing hearth fire make vivid and real the child's sense of warm companionship, his pleasure in the revelation of a side of adult character hidden during the working day, and the stirring of imagination and a dimly felt emotional life that vibrated to folk song or simple melody of the past. The memory of such an evening, when many of the family were gathered together, has a special charm.

"As the women came in, my father called out, 'Come, Belle, sing "Over the Hills in Legions, Boys!" Dave, get out your fiddle and tune us all up.'

"David tuned up his fiddle, and while he twanged on the strings, mother lifted up her voice in our fine old marching song,

'Cheer up, brothers, as we go,
O'er the mountains, westward ho—' and we all joined in the jubilant chorus. . . .

"My father's face shone with the light of the explorer, the pioneer. The words of this song appealed to him as the truest poetry. It meant all that was vital and hopeful and buoyant in American life to him—but on my mother's sweet face a wistful expression deepened and in her eyes a reflective shadow lay. . . . To all the pioneer wives of the past that song had meant deprivation, suffering, loneliness, heart-ache.

"From this they passed to another of my father's favorite songs, and it is highly significant to note that even in this choice of songs he generally had his way. . . . They sang 'Minnie Minturn' at his request, and the refrain,

'I have heard the angels' warning,
I have seen the golden shore—' meant much to me. So did the line,

'But I only hear the drummers
As the armies march away.'

"Aunt Deb was also a soul of decision. She called out, 'No more of these sad tunes,' and struck up 'The Year of Jubilo,' and we all shouted till the walls shook with the exultant words.

"At this point the fire suggested an old English ballad which I loved, and so I piped up, 'Mother, sing "Pile the Wood on Higher!"' and she complied with pleasure, for this was a song of home, of the unbroken fireside circle. . . . We children joined in the chorus:

And we'll pile the wood on higher,
'Then we'll gather round the fire
Let the song and jest go round;
What care we for the storm,
When the fireside is so warm
And pleasure here is found?'

"Never before did this song mean so much to me as at this moment when the winds were actually howling outdoors, and Uncle Frank was in very truth piling the logs higher. It seemed as though my stuffed bosom could hold nothing deeper and finer."—The Continent.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery—The regular meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery will be held at Aquadale, N. C., April 8, at 3 p. m. Jno. E. Wool, S. C.

Marshville—Rev. C. E. White, of Roxboro, N. C., has accepted a call to the church at Morven, N. C., and will begin his work there at an early date.

Charlotte—The pulpit of Pegram Street Church was filled by Rev. J. E. Wool, of Mallard Creek Church last Sabbath. Rev. Leonard Gill preached for the West Avenue Church.

Orange Presbytery will meet in its 298th sessions in the Reidsville Presbyterian Church, Reidsville, N. C., on Tuesday, April 15, 1919, at 8 o'clock p. m. All reports and papers intended for the Presbytery should be in the hands of the stated clerk before the day of meeting. D. I. Craig, S. C.

Burlington—First Church—The following officers have been recently ordained and installed in this church: Elders, R. E. L. Holt, L. B. Whitted, D. H. White; Deacons, W. A. Mebane, Mitchell Clark, G. W. Fogleman, W. L. Burke, J. J. White and J. D. Whitted. The Orange Presbyterial Auxiliary will meet in this church in April.

Notice—To the Presbyteries Comprising the Synod of North Carolina and the Treasurers—The Synod by its action in Raleigh last fall directed that each Presbytery pay one-half of its assessment to the Synod's expense fund, in April, and the other half in October. It is hoped this action will be strictly complied with, as there is no money in the treasury. D. I. Craig, Treas.

To the Women's Auxiliaries of Fayetteville Presbyterial—Unfortunately the supply of mission study books, "Women Workers of the Orient," has been exhausted. I wish to recommend to the societies that have not succeeded in getting these books, to study "Ancient Peoples at New Tasks," by Collections for March are for Sabbath School Extension and Publication. Treasurer is R. E. Magill, Richmond, Va.

Willard Price. Order these (with leaders' helps) from the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va., or from Dr. Jno. I. Armstrong, Box 158, Nashville, Tenn.

Mary F. Patterson, Sec. For. Mis.

Charlotte—Second Church—One of the enjoyable affairs of the past week was the dinner which the superintendent of Sabbath School, Dr. R. H. Lafferty, gave to the boys and younger men of the church. It proved a genuine "get together" occasion, where plans to use the Sabbath School for the boys and the boys for the Sabbath School were laid and methods discussed.

Charlotte—Rev. C. C. Anderson, of Hugo, Okla., who recently received a unanimous call to the pastorate of the West Avenue Church of this city, has accepted the call, and will begin his work about April 1.

This church has kept together remarkably well during the vacancy, and has had services twice every Sabbath. They are greatly pleased over the prospect of having a pastor.

Waynesville—In spite of the many interruptions to the work of the church during the past winter the Christian Endeavor Society has kept active all the year in the interest of the soldiers at the U. S. General Hospital No. 18, which is located just a mile from the church. A number of the men attend the services of the church and the Sunday School and one young man from the hospital united with the church on profession of faith. Mrs. Jno. Tull, a member of this church who died in December, remembered the church in her will with a gift of $75, and the pastor, Rev. W. M. Sikes, with a personal gift of $25.

Dallas and Hepzibah Churches—Rev. W. S. Hamiter was installed pastor of Dallas Church on Sunday morning, February 16, by a commission appointed by Kings Mountain Presbytery as follows: Rev. J. T. Dendy, to preach; Rev. J. H. Henderlite, D.D., to charge the pastor; and Dr. C. E. Adams, of the Gastonia Church, to charge the people. On the afternoon of the same day Mr. Hamiter was installed at Hepzibah Church by the same commission, Dr. Henderlite preaching the sermon, Mr. Dendy charging the pastor, and Dr. Adams charging the people. Mr. Hamiter will also serve the church at High Shoals. He is receiving a cordial welcome.

Deacons' Convention—The deacons of Kings Mountain Presbytery held their fourteenth semi-annual convention in the First Church, Gastonia, February 11, 12. It was well attended and quite successful. Dr. E. E. Gillespie, of York, S. C., was present and made a very strong address on the Assembly's campaign for the next Church year, and plans were made for the carrying forward of this campaign in the Presbytery. The members of the convention were earnest in their expressions of interest in this work and pledged full co-operation. Excellent addresses were made by Rev. F. A. Drennan, Mr. J. Lee Robinson, of the Gastonia board of deacons, and others. The next meeting of the convention will be held in Olney Church, August 12, 13.

Wallace—Fortunate indeed is the man who has the privilege of ministering to a grateful people. The truthfulness of this fact has been emphasized in the experience of the pastor of the Wallace group of churches as he approaches the end of the fifteenth year of his present pastorate. Only recently the congregation of the Wallace church presented him with an L. C. Smith & Bros' typewriter as an expression of their appreciation, and now the Rockfish congregation has just expressed themselves in the form of a generous pounding consisting of a great variety of things for the pantry. Besides the pastor and his family have received many other tokens of kindness from individuals in the several congregations of the group. For all these things we thank you not only for the intrinsic value of the things presented, but especially for the spirit that prompted the giving. May the Master's richest blessing abide upon each of you.

W. P. M. Currie.

Statesville—Rev. J. M. Clark, D.D., left last week for Black Mountain to attend a meeting of Y. M. C. A. men. Dr. Clark went as representative of the Ministerial Association of Statesville. Army Y. M. C. A. Secretaries, who have seen service in France will attend the meeting and give an account of their various experiences in France.

Dr. J. M. Clark assisted Sunday in the services incident upon the installation of Rev. A. A. MacLean as pastor of the Lenoir Presbyterian Church.

The ladies of the First Presbyterian Church are observing the Week of Prayer for Foreign Missions this week. Prayer meetings will be held at the church each afternoon this week at 4 o'clock and the missions in different countries are being studied.

Gastonia—The seventh annual supper of the Men's Bible class of the First Church, Gastonia, was given Tuesday night, February 11, and proved a most happy and successful occasion. There were nearly two hundred present, including some fifteen or twenty members of the Kings Mountain Deacons' Convention. A number of good speeches were made and a most pleasant evening was spent. This Bible class, taught by Dr. Henderlite, is growing in interest and good work. The attendance has been brought up to over a hundred, and gives promise of continuing to grow. Rev. R. A. Lapsley, D.D., of Richmond, Va., editor-in-chief of the Sabbath School Literature of our Church, filled the pulpit of the Gastonia Church Sunday morning, February 16, and visited a number of mission points among the cotton mills of the town, supported by the Gastonia Church. This work is being vigorously conducted by Rev. George R. Gillespie.

Wilmington—St. Andrews—Dear Standard: Please thank Dr. McGeachy for the wise remarks on what seems a grave mistake of objecting to people paying a tithe of their income to the church and the cause of Christ as a privilege and not a legal requirement, as our brothers in Statesville are opposing. You will be pleased to know that Rev. L. T. Newland and Mrs. Newland, missionaries supported by our church in Korea, have given much pleasure to our people in separate visits and that our people are increasing gifts from the women and Sabbath School classes and the young people's societies to pay the expenses of additional native helpers and scholars in their schools and to give a motorcycle to Mr. Newland for his wide field and many outstations. Our church has lost by death our sexton, James H. Johnson, sexton and trusted friend of the whole church and city for forty years. Our prayer meetings have large increase in attendance and interest these days.

A. D. McC.

Members of Mecklenburg Presbyterial Auxiliary—Dear Friends: My last report to you showed our total collections for the Home for Missionaries on Furlough, $262.40. Since that report, I have received $3 from Tenth Avenue, $20 from Westminster, $10 from two friends in the Pineville Church, and $12.60 from the John Moore and Ella Houston Societies at Hopewell. These amounts, with $2.09 interest, make our bank account stand at $310.09. In addition to this amount, I received $20 in War Savings Stamps from a member of the First Church.

Remember our Mecklenburg standard for this cause—$1.00 per member—and if your church has not sent in $1.00 for each woman member, let us have some hard work done between now and March 31, so that we may not fall short of our goal.

Yours cordially,

Madeline Orr,

Sec'y of Mission Court Meck. Presby'l Aux.

Rockingham—The pastor of this church, Rev. Z. V. Roberson, returned to Rockingham February 1, after an absence of a little more than four months. During that time he has been in the Army Y. M. C. A. service at Camp Sevier and Camp Jackson.

On the night of February 14 the Woman's Auxiliary of the church gave a reception to all the members of the town and their congregations. A rather unique feature of the reception was the presence in the receiving line of three resident pastors in the uniform of the Y. M. C. A.—the pastor of the Baptist Church, who has just returned from France, and the pastors of the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches, who have been doing work on this side.

The men of the church, on Sunday, February 23, met and organized a Bible class along the lines of standard organized Bible classes and so will try to enlist the men of the town in the work of the Sunday School and in other definite Christian service.

Dr. Wm. J. Martin, of Davidson College, and Mr. N. C. White, of Charlotte, will be the principal speakers in this church, March 2, at a group conference on the Assembly's Progressive Campaign for Benevolences. The group is composed of the churches of Hamlet, Mark's Creek, Roberdel, Cameronian, Brainard and Rockingham.

Winston-Salem—For some time the missionary societies of North Winston Presbyterian Church had been planning a birthday surprise for their pastor, Rev. Geo. W. Lee. On last Tuesday evening, February 18, Mr. Lee was invited out to dinner, and while he was being royally entertained, the ladies and young people of the societies gathered at the church and made ready for the occasion. At the appointed time one of the elders called Mr. Lee over the 'phone, requesting him to meet him at the church on very important business.

All was dark in the church when the pastor arrived, but as he was about to enter the large upper room the lights were turned on and he was greeted by a happy company of more than one hundred and fifty people with their good wishes and gifts. A large birthday cake glowed with candles, the light of which were dim compared to the happy glow in the pastor's face.

After recitations and songs by the children and young people and a solo by Mrs. Thomas Maslin, Dr. D. Clay Lilly made a most pleasing and witty talk.

Delicious ices and cakes were served and a happy social hour followed, at which time Mr. Lee cut the wonderful birthday cake. At the close of the evening Mr. Lee made a splendid talk, expressing his deep appreciation of the love and esteem shown him by his people.

Out of town guests were Mr. Lee's sister, Mrs. Carroll, and daughter, of Salisbury.

Davidson—The outstanding events of interest this week have been of a religious character. Beginning Monday evening and continuing through Wednesday evening the series of services in the Y. M. C. A. attracted to Shearer Hall practically all of the students of the college. The three brief addresses by Rev. Dr. Charles F. Myers, of Greensboro, who spoke on the following subjects—the Fatality of a Wrong Choice, as illustrated in the life of Lot; the Sin of Indifference, and the Jesus' Message to the Backslider—Tell My Disciples and—Peter, were well received by the students and made a telling impression upon them. The singing by the quartet that Dr. Myers brought from his home church was unusually fine and was enjoyed no doubt as much as his own fine sermonic work. In recognition of the fact that the services were not in the church proper, the singers at their pastor's invitation enlivened the first minutes of the hour's service with a number of beautiful and touching negro plantation or camp meeting songs and melodies that evoked loud applause from the students.

Sunday morning the Presbyterian congregation was privileged to hear a very excellent and striking address by Captain Slaymaker, Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, in which he instituted a most unique comparison between the church "moving like a mighty army" and the Army of the United States in the late World War, a comparison in which unmistakably the church militant suffers. It is to be hoped that for their excitation and awakening the greater effort and zeal, many, very many of the churches of the Assembly may hear this address. In the evening Captain Slaymaker spoke before the College Y. M. C. A., where he was heard with interest similar to that of the morning.

Rev. Dr. Richards, speaking at night to his people in recognition of the Day of Prayer for Schools and Colleges, urged that real earnest-hearted prayer for the youth of our church by Christian people must to be effective be accompanied by practical work and endeavor to make the schools and colleges such in quality and equipment that the physical, mental and spiritual well being of the young may all alike be properly and efficiently provided for. Prayer is not simply asking, it is seeking, i. e., planning, knocking, i. e., putting to the hands in work.

Charlotte—Report of Presbyterian Hospital for Year—It was one year ago last Wednesday, February 26, that the Presbyterian Hospital was remodeled and had its opening for inspection. On the following day the patients from the old hospital were moved out to their new quarters and a very eventful year started.

During the year from March 1, 1918, to March 1, 1919, 2,447 patients were furnished board and nursing in the institution, there were 154 births, 1,164 operations and 101 deaths. Fifty-eight of these deaths occurred in the months of October, November, and December, during the influenza epidemic. During the same months the operations and births were very much decreased in the hospital owing to the large number of influenza cases in the building.

Before the building was occupied many thought that it would be quite a number of years before the building would be filled to its capacity, but by June all of the private rooms in the hospital were occupied and there was a general average during the month of 77 patients per day. But not until the influenza epidemic did the citizens of Charlotte realize what a blessing it was that the building had been converted into a hospital.

During this epidemic it cared for as many as 123 patients at one time and still there was room for quite a number of those who were willing to go in wards or two in a room. Dr. Hudson, city health officer, said not a charity or semi-charity patient in the city of Charlotte who wanted hospital treatment failed to get it. The other hospitals co-operated with the city and Red Cross in caring for these patients, the city and Red Cross paying for one-half of the cost of caring for the charity patients and the hospitals bearing the other half of the cost.

The past year has been a very hard one on hospitals throughout the country, all hospital supplies having advanced to a great extent. The servant question has been a great problem. On account of a large number of nurses going into the Red Cross service, hospitals have been very short of nurses. Especially have the above facts been doubly hard on the Presbyterian Hospital on account of having moved to their new and larger quarters, the demand for nurses and servants having doubled.

The calls for charity have been much larger, but owing to the many calls upon the public for various war benevolences the donations for the charity work at the Presbyterian Hospital have been below the normal amount.

J. R. Alexander.

Wilmington Presbytery—The Beneficent Drive in Wilmington Presbytery is well under way. The Group Managers Conference was held at First Church, Wilmington, in January. Since that time a number of group conferences have been held in the Presbytery. On January 30 a conference was held at Southport for the group known as No. 14 in the campaign. Dr. McClure and Ruling Elder W. M. Cumming and Rev. J. W. Young made talks on the work before us and endeavored to impress upon the congregational managers and others that were present the duty of the church at this hour in the history of the world.

Group No. 13, of which Rev. H. L. Sneed is manager, is composed of four churches. The conference for the group was held at Whiteville, February 11. Dr. J. M. Wells and Rev. D. T. Caldwell, of Wilmington; Rev. W. H. Goodman, of Clarkton, were the speakers. "The Church and the Hour," a strong address by Dr. Wells, was a great feature in the conference. The tithe was presented by Rev. D. T. Caldwell, and this followed in much interest being shown by the men and women at the conference.

The following day, February 12, the same speakers journeyed to White Plains Church, which had been selected as the place for a joint group conference of groups Nos. 11 and 12. A good crowd had gathered for the conference and much interest was shown from the very beginning. The Every Member Canvass which had been in vogue only a short time in some of the churches in those groups, was praised to the sky. Everyone went home feeling that we owed to the Lord more than we had been returning to Him.

February 18 was the date set for the group conference of Group No. 2, of which Rev. J. W. Stork is manager. The day was ideal and the crowd that was waiting at the church showed that a live group manager is at work in that strong group. Rev. D. T. Caldwell was the only visiting speaker, but strong addresses were delivered by the pastors of the churches in the group, Rev. J. W. Stork and Rev. L. E. Wells. The charts showing what the churches did last year attracted no little interest. Dinner was served on the ground while we had recess between the two sessions of the conference.

We can truly say that the conferences so far have been a success and we believe that Wilmington Presbytery will meet her apportionment in the drive. The plans have been made and now the prayers of God's people ought to go up to the throne of grace more often and more earnestly than ever before asking Him to bless our efforts.

D. T. Caldwell, Pres. Manager.

Beulah—On the first Sabbath in February the Beulah Church building was discovered to be on fire, and in about an hour the splendid building was an ash heap with no insurance. While the flames were leaping high the devoted congregation, though heavy hearted, repaired to the school house a few yards away and engaged in their regular service. After this service the congregation named a committee to begin a movement looking towards replacing the building. Beulah has many friends scattered through the country who will hear of this calamity with regret, and doubtless will be eager to lend a helping hand in replacing the building. Any one so desirous will please communicate with Mr. J. P. Belk, of Monroe, N. C. Altogether we have much to encourage and look forward to the next year with hopeful anticipation.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Chester—Purity Church—Sunday, February 23, this church elected the following gentlemen to serve as additional deacons: Messrs. S. M. Jones, J. L. Williams, R. R. Hafner, J. E. Dunbar, G. R. Dawson, H. R. Woods, R. E. Abell, M.D., W. R. Wallace, M.D.

Chester—There was a pretty exercise at Eastside Presbyterian Church Sabbath, February 23, in commemoration of Mr. W. D. Knox's eighteenth anniversary as superintendent. During this long period, through summer's heat and winter's cold, this faithful servant has been absent from his post of duty only three times—a record for faithfulness and devotion that is rarely equalled.

As tokens of the school's appreciation of his consecration Mr. Knox was presented with a twenty dollar gold-piece and a handsome toilet set, the former being presented most appropriately by Rev. James Russell and the latter by Rev. J. E. Purcell. Mr. M. S. Lewis also spoke a few words in commendation of Mr. Knox's usefulness, his willingness to serve, and his spirit of self-sacrifice. Mr. Knox was deeply affected by the school's display of gratitude in return for his efforts, and in his reply told how pleasant the work had been to him.

Recitations and special music contributed to an interesting afternoon's program.

APPALACHIA.

Montreat—Rev. Anton Ver Hulst, who was recently called from the First Church of Jonesboro, Ark., to the church at Montreat, N. C., has entered upon his work there.

ALABAMA.

Rev. E. L. Renwick is serving Brighton and Fairview Churches, near Birmingham.

The Presbytery of North Alabama is to hold its spring meeting with the Vine Street Church, Birmingham, April 15, at 7:30 p. m.

A special meeting of the Presbytery of North Alabama is to be held March 3 to act on request of South Highlands Church to call Rev. B. J. Bush, of Lexington, Ky.

FLORIDA.

Florida Presbytery—The regular spring meeting of Florida Presbytery will be held in Panama City beginning Tuesday, April 15, at 7:30 p. m. Daniel J. Currie, S. C.

Havana—This church is to enjoy a series of meetings during the latter part of March to be conducted by Rev. F. D. Hunt, Superintendent of Home Missions for Florida Presbytery, and Rev. D. J. Blackwell, of Quincy.

St. Petersburg—Mrs. Swinehart, of our Korean Mission, has given our church and community some very interesting and helpful talks. On the night of the 13th she gave her first lecture. On Saturday night she delivered a lecture in costume to the guests of the Huntington Hotel, one of the largest hotels in town. Sabbath morning she talked to the children at Sabbath School, and in the afternoon held a meeting for the young people of the various churches. On Monday afternoon she addressed the monthly meeting of the Women's Missionary Society. Her winning personality and burning zeal for the work, with the startling facts presented, made a deep impression upon her hearers.

On February 14 Mrs. Steele, president of the Federation of Women's Missionary Societies of America, gave a splendid address. Rev. Dr. W. D. Reynolds, of Chunju, Korea, one of our earliest missionaries in that field, conducted the services February 23, and gave most interesting and remarkable incidents concerning demoniacal possessions among the Koreans. At night he delivered a stereopticon lecture, showing the beautiful scenery of Chosen.

An interdenominational Sunday School rally will be held in this church on Sunday afternoon, March 2, and the afternoon and evening following. All the Sunday Schools in the city will participate. Mr. A. M. Locker, superintendent of field organization for the International Sunday School Association, will be the chief speaker. Rev. Geo. T. Guille, of Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, will begin a Bible Study Conference in this church on March 2 and conduct it until March 9, when Rev. L. S. Chafer, the well known Bible teacher, lecturer and author, will continue it until March 16. There will be three sessions daily, and great good is expected to result from the light thrown upon Scripture by these specialists in the explanation of God's Word. Mr. Chafer was here last year, and the people are delighted at the prospect of his return.

Edward J. Young.

GEORGIA.

Atlanta—J. T. Lupton, of Chattanooga, first vice-president of the board of directors of Oglethorpe University, has donated $50,000 for a new building on the campus, President Thornwell Jacobs has announced. It is understood a library building will be erected as a memorial to Mr. Lupton's mother.

Atlanta—Central Church—Rev. Dr. T. M. McConnell has been engaged by the Central Church to supply their pulpit till their pastor arrives. Dr. McConnell expects to reach here in time to conduct our prayer service on Wednesday evening, March 5, and will fill our pulpit after that date. Dr. McConnell comes to us highly endorsed by his brother

QUEENS COLLEGE.

The students at Queens College are closing the second week's work after mid-year examinations. A number of new students were registered at the beginning of the spring term. Our student body is in fine spirits, ever willing and eagerly looking forward to the work ahead of them.

One of the most enjoyable and largely attended events of the season was a recital given by the expression students Monday evening in the college auditorium. The program was most delightful.

Those taking part were Misses Fay Kidd, Augusta Currie, Elizabeth Brown, Claire Reid, Sara Britton, Frances Pitts, Elizabeth Finley, Dorothy Powell, Lavinia Boyer and Minnie B. Doar. The program was closed by a thirty-minute play given under the direction of Miss Lavinia Boyer.

Miss M. Virginia Moss, head of this department, deserves great credit for the splendid work of the year.

ministers and is favorably known by many in our church and community—our people will give him a hearty welcome and support.

Atlanta—North Avenue Presbyterian Church—The pastor of this church, Dr. Richard Orme Flinn, will leave March 4 for New York to sail for overseas service with the Y. M. C. A. The church has been very fortunate in securing Dr. John H. Elliott, of the Northern Presbyterian Church, to be with them for three months.

On Monday night the men of the church were invited to a banquet at the church house to discuss the organization of an Interlocking Club. Something over 100 men were present, and the ideas of all were consulted regarding the work that is to be done. The purpose of this club is to promote fellowship among the men of the church, and as an organized body take part in church work and civic life. Great things are aimed at and hoped for this club.

Mrs. Lula V. Shepherd, of Salt Lake City, Utah, noted lecturer, has given two most interesting talks on the Menace of Mormonism to large audiences in this church. She has a most enlightening message.

Within the last month Misses Sarah Inman Bell, Miss Elizabeth Tuller, and Miss Sue Ray Symmes, have sailed for overseas service with the Y. M. C. A., and are now safely on the other side on their mission of cheer and service.

KENTUCKY.

Georgetown—This church has done itself honor by honoring its pastor with a substantial increase in salary. This is one of many marks of the esteem in which he is held by his congregation that have been bestowed upon him during the past winter.

TEXAS.

Throckmorton and Eliasville—Rev. Tom Cunningham will take charge of Throckmorton and Eliasville Churches March 1.

I have just returned from Eliasville. They have raised in all $406 for Syrian relief. The basket collection last Sunday was $193. We also had the communion service delayed by rain last month. It was very much enjoyed by all. We had four additions to the church, one by letter, three upon profession, one baptism.

There is a brighter outlook for this faithful church, as it lies right in the midst of the oil field that is being so wonderfully developed in this section. Several oil wells are in sight of the old town already and more are to be drilled soon.

I go Sunday to help Rev. Chas. Ramsey and his good peo-

We have with us, making quite an addition to our social life, Mrs. A. Y. Beatie, Mrs. R. K. Axon, and Miss Mary Magruder, with an occasional visit from Dr. and Mrs. M. E. Melvin, Rev. A. Y. Beatie and Mr. R. K. Axon. Dr. Melvin is the field secretary of the Assembly, and he, with his helpers, is engaged in a campaign for funds for Queens College. Mecklenburg Presbytery met and pledged its hearty support to the movement, and we, faculty and students, are earnestly wishing, and anxiously waiting, to hear of their complete success.

A very earnest effort is being made to increase the force of the Christian life among the students. The finest and strongest girls in our school are actively connected with the Y. W. C. A., and they do a great part in promoting interest among their comrades. Splendid meetings are held every Sunday evening, and a Bible study on Thursday evenings, each meeting revealing the best attendance and fine interest. The prospects of our school were never better, and there is room to feel encouragement about the future.

ple, at Somerville, Tex., in a meeting for the next fourteen days. We ask the prayers of all God's people for the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

John E. McLean, Supt. and Evangelist.

Presbytery of Fort Worth—The Presbytery of Fort Worth on February 18 held a called meeting in Broadway Presbyterian Church, Fort Worth. A communication was received from Rev. C. H. Smith, of our mission in Yencheng, China, calling attention to the omission of his name from the roll of the Presbytery ever since the consolidation of Cisco Presbytery with Fort Worth Presbytery. It was found that the omission was due to the fact that the roll of Cisco Presbytery at the time of the consolidation did not show his name. The omission was corrected. Presbytery received a petition and confession from W. J. Harsha, of Kremmling, Colo., deposed by this Presbytery in 1908, and letters and testimonials from a number of persons concerning his character and conduct for several years past. In view of all the facts brought before it, Presbytery, in accordance with the request of the petitioner, respectfully requested the Presbytery of Denver, U. S. A., to take up the case and issue it, and ordered all papers bearing on the case to be transmitted to the stated clerk of the Presbytery of Denver.

C. L. Altfather, S. C.

The Presbytery of Central Texas will meet in the Second Presbyterian Church, Waco, Tuesday, April 15, at 8 p. m. Blanks for sessional reports will be mailed to clerks of sessions early in March. All permanent committees are expected to make reports for the Assembly at the meeting in April.

M. C. Hutton, S. C.

The Presbytery of Central Texas had a called meeting in the First Southern Presbyterian Church, Austin, Tuesday, 18th inst., and transacted the following business:

Rev. Henry L. Paisley was received from the Presbytery of Western Texas after examination and signing the usual obligation. His field is Gatesville-Unity Churches. Rev. Renaldo Avila was granted permission to labor within our bounds until the spring meeting, in April. Rev. W. S. Scott was granted permission to labor outside our bounds until the spring meeting.

The following committee was appointed to prepare a memorial of Dr. Samuel A. King, deceased, to be submitted at the spring meeting: Rev. C. W. Peyton, Rev. C. T. Caldwell, Rev. Thos. W. Currie and Elder R. H. Rogers, of Waco.

The treasurer was directed to pay Rev. W. F. Galbraith $25 towards the expenses of the $3,500,000 campaign.

Story and Incident

The Waster.

Being the Story of a Man Who Had His Back to the Wall.

THE smithy stood at some distance outside the little border town of Exe, but that did not prevent it being the meeting place of the "heidmen" of the town, as they were known. It was, in fact, their parliament house. Regularly every Monday morning, between nine and ten, the "heidmen" took "a bit daunder," to have a crack with the smith.

On that particular Monday morning the little group comprised, besides the smith, Bailie Cross, the principal grocer and baker in the town; Mr. Jessop, the draper, a small, immaculately neat and very refined man who was generally spoken of as the Englisher; and Adam Grieg, a young farmer; the doctor also was present, but he was there on business, his mare having cast a shoe.

The previous day's sermons had been discussed, and they were in the thick of a political argument when Adam Grieg, who was leaning against the doorpost, said:

"Here comes the Waster, and not sober, though it is Monday morning."

"Oh, he has probably not got over Sabbath night's debauch," said the doctor. "I was at his house on Saturday, his wife's just had another child; the misery of their cottage is indescribable—no fire, no food, the most pitiable bed you can imagine, dirt and want and misery everywhere."

The Waster, a man as tall as the huge smith, but thin and shrunken, and with dirty face and tangled hair and ragged, foul clothes, shambled into the smithy. He took no notice of the other men, but shuffled over to Bailie Cross, and without looking up, he said:

"Len's a saxpence, Bailie."

"What do you want with sixpence, Tammas?"

The Waster hesitated a moment, then said:

"For a dram, Bailie. I'm that dry, ma mooth's fair parched."

"I'll not lend you sixpence, Tammas, but I'll tell you what I will do; I'll give you half a sovereign at this time today fortnight if you will keep sober till then."

"You're a generous man, Bailie!" the doctor said sarcastically. "You know your money's safe; he couldn't keep sober, the drunken brute; there's not enough of the man in him."

The Waster stood quite still, looking at the ground for some minutes. Then he said, "I'll tak' your offer, Bailie. I'll be here at the appointed time. Mebbe I am a drunken brute, Doctor," he said, turning round and looking up for the first time, "but mebbe there's just a spark o' the man left in me for a' that."

He turned away with downcast look, and shuffled along the road in the direction of his home.

That night the doctor called at the Waster's home, and stared with astonishment when he opened the door. What a transformation had taken place. In the grate a huge fire blazed; he went over to the recess bed, and found his patient clean and tidy, and lying on white sheets, covered with warm blankets, instead of dirty straw and old coats upon which she had lain in the morning. In spite of her thin, careworn face she looked almost pretty.

"Whatever has happened, Mrs. Girder?" the doctor asked. "Have the brownies been visiting you?"

"Oh, sir," she said, "I don't know how it has all happened, but about 11 o'clock this morning parcels began to come to the house—groceries and bread, and coals and meat and milk, and bedding and blankets. Oh, it does feel so nice; I had nearly forgotten what a real clean bed feels like. Mrs. Bailie Cross and her lassie came; and they were so clever taking away the old bedding and making me comfortable. And— and Tammas has been at home all day; I don't know what it means, but, there, he's been in his workshop all day since 12 o'clock, hammering away."

"That's fine, Mrs. Girder; I am glad. You were just needing a change, and I am glad, too, that the friends have rallied round to help you. I should like to do something for you, too. I'll get my housekeeper to bring you down some port wine to get up your strength."

The poor woman sat up in her agitation, terror in her face, and cried, "Port wine! O, sir, for pity's sake not wine in this house!"

"Of course, I'm sorry; I didn't think. Don't get excited. Well, we'll find something else. Now you rest and keep quiet. The New Year will soon be here. Who knows? It may be a happy New Year for you yet."

A fortnight later, on Monday morning, the same little company, with the exception of the doctor, had foregathered in the smithy. Once again Adam Grieg broke in on the discussion that was going on, with:

"Here's the Waster again."

He came along the road with a somewhat firmer step than before. He was clean, the clothes he wore were right as to length, but hung loosely on him, as though they had been made for a man of better proportions than he.

Once more he stepped up to Bailie Cross.

"I've come for your half-sovereign, Bailie." He had dropped the Doric, as Scotsmen do on important occasions—when they speak in public or pray, or have something very serious to say.

Then Bailie looked at him long and earnestly, then took a half-sovereign from his pocket and handed it to him.

There was a tense silence in the smithy. The silence was broken by the smith, who said:

"I have been expecting you, Tammas."

Girder took the coin, handed it to the smith, and said:

"Just drive a bit hole through it, Sandy."

The smith did as he was asked, and handed it back to Girder, who threaded a piece of black cord through the hole and fastened the cord to his waistcoat buttonhole. Turning to Bailie Cross, and holding the coin between finger and thumb, he said:

"Bailie, you have bought me with this!" Then, turning to the others, he said:

"I don't know just who I have to thank for the good things that have filled our house for the last fortnight. You, Mr. Jessop, I know, sent the blankets. Well, they have done more than warm the good wife's body; they have warmed her heart. Thanks to you all, I believe she's a well woman this day. I'm not going to make any promises—I mistrust myself too much—but I trust one stronger and wiser than myself. Sandy," he said, turning to the smith, "last Wednesday night I thought I would go into the meeting. I was late, and I stood outside the door. I heard you praying, and I heard you pray for the man who'd got his back to the wall. Go on praying for him, Sandy; he'll need your prayers before he wins through. It's a terrible hard fight."

A sob strangled him; he turned away and fled.

They were strong, hard-headed, practical men who stood in the smithy that day, but there wasn't a dry eye among them as they watched him disappear along the road.

Mr. Jessop, the Englisher, was the only one who spoke:

"Twenty years ago," he said, "I was a drunkard; he's got a fight before him, I know."

* * *

That was a good many years ago. The little town of Exe has not changed much. Bailie Cross has been gathered to his fathers; the elders are there still. There is another Bailie, whose name is Girder. They say he is a wonderful and convincing speaker on the temperance platform and at P. S. A.'s. While he speaks he has a trick of fingering a little gold coin that hangs from his watch chain, and there is a certain phrase which always occurs in his prayers. It is: "Lord, help the men who have got their backs to the wall."—The Christian World.

Marriages and Deaths

Deaths.

Thompson-Rushing—At the manse, in Gurdon, Ark., February 26, 1919, by Rev. E. M. Munroe, D.D., Mr. W. R. Thompson, of Rayville, La., and Miss Margie Rushing, of Gurdon, Ark.

Marriages.

Coit—Mrs. A. M. Coit, aged 73 years, grand-daughter of Prof. Elisha Mitchell, daughter of Dr. J. J. Summerell, widow of Capt. W. H. Coit, peacefully slept January 18, in Statesville, N. C., to awake with the Lord. A Southern lady, a woman of unusual intellectual qualities and high educational attainments, an earnest Christian and Bible student, a faithful friend—her place cannot be filled. Interment in Salisbury.

RICHARD EDGAR WARWICK.

Richard Edgar Warwick was born February 2, 1854, died September 4, 1918.

The following resolutions were passed by the session and deacons of the Laurel Hill Presbyterian Church:

First. That whereas God in His infinite wisdom has removed by death our beloved brother from our midst, that we bow in this as in all things to His sovereign will and say with Abraham of old, "Will not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

Second. That while we deeply feel our sad and untimely loss, yet through our tears we would thank God for directing his footsteps to our community in January, 1890, and permitting him to carry worthily and well the burdens and responsibilities of deacon which were laid upon him since April, 1911.

Third. That we shall cherish his memory, and extend our prayers and sympathy to the bereaved widow and family he has left behind to help maintain the church he loved so well.

Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be inserted in our minutes and sent to the Presbyterian Standard.

Respectfully submitted,

Rev. D. McIntyre,
Clarence Lytch,

Committee.

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY.

Mrs. Job Taylor.

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom and mercy saw fit to remove from our midst our beloved friend and co-worker, Mrs. Job Taylor, therefore be it resolved:

First. That in the death of our friend the community and particularly her church has sustained an irreparable loss and though we sincerely deplore her death and shall miss her more and more as the days go by, we bow with submission and resignation to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

Second. We realize the omnipotence of God and His power to cut down such a noble woman in the flower of her life, and we trust we may glean inspiration from her gentleness and loveliness of character.

Third. That we extend to her sorely bereaved husband, father and sister and friends our heartfelt sympathy and prayers that God may sustain and comfort them in their sorrow.

Fourth. That these resolutions be sent to the broken-hearted husband, father and sister and a copy be made in the minutes of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Presbyterian Church of Roanoke Rapids, N. C., and a copy be sent to the Presbyterian Standard of Charlotte, N. C., for publication.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTION.

Mrs. Julia B. Wooten.

In the death of Mrs. Julia Brady Wooten, the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Presbyterian Church of Lumberton, N. C., lost an earnest laborer, one who was faithful in all things and most efficient in the benevolent work of the church.

Whereas, in the providence of God our friend and co-worker has been removed from us, we, the members of the Woman's Auxiliary realize our great loss in her passing and bow in humble submission to His will.

Therefore be it resolved:

First. That we thank our Heavenly Father for her life among us and record our appreciation of her services in the church and community.

Second. That we extend to her bereaved husband and other relatives our sincere sympathy in their great sorrow and commend them to the love of God the Father and to the tender compassion of our Lord and Saviour.

Third. That these resolutions be sent the family, a copy inscribed on the minutes of the Woman's Auxiliary and a copy be sent to the Presbyterian Standard for publication.

IN MEMORIAM.

Samuel Sloan Livingstone.

In the early morning hours of January 23 an angel entered the room at James Walker Hospital in which Master Samuel Sloan Livingstone lay and the two passed out to the shining portals of heaven. He was buried the following day at Bellevue cemetery.

Samuel Sloan was the son of Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Livingstone, 821 Castle St., Wilmington, N. C. His father and mother, three sisters, two brothers and a dear old grandmother are left to mourn his loss. "Dannie," as he was called by the family, was 12 years and 10 months old. He suffered only six days before the Master called him home to rest and be free from all suffering.

He was a bright and lovable child and earned for himself a warm place not only in the hearts of his loved ones, but in the hearts of all those who knew him. He attended Sunday School regularly and as a reward for the same wore on his coat a gold pin showing that he had been faithful as a young student of God's Word. Just a little while before leaving this world he said to his mother, "Let's go home."

May his loved ones find comfort and solace in the words of Jesus their Saviour, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." May they also have the courage of David and the faith that caused him to say of his child, "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." His 14-year-old sister has penned several verses. The thought in all of them is like this one:

Dearest "Dannie" thou hast left us,

Aud our loss we deeply feel,

But 'tis God who has bereft us,

He can all our sorrows heal.

IN MEMORIAM.

D. J. McNeill.

David J. McNeill died suddenly at his home, near St. Pauls, N. C., October 4, 1918. Mr. McNeill was born September 30, 1849; was married March 22, 1877, to Minerva McNeill, near Center Presbyterian Church, who with seven children, four boys and three girls, survives him:

No tender yet sad farewell,

From his grieving lips was heard,

So softly he crossed that quiet stream

That it was not by a ripple stirred.

He was spared the pain of parting tears,

He was spared all mortal strife.

'Twas scarcely dying, he only passed

In a moment to endless life.

Weep not for the swift release

From earthly pain and care;

Nor grieve that he reached his home and rest

'Ere he knew that he was there.

But think of the sweet surprise,

The sudden strange delight

He felt as he met his Saviour's smile

And walked with Him in light.

HAS THE GOLD BADGE.

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl eleven years old. I am in the sixth grade at school. My teacher's name is Miss Add Neill. We all like her fine. I have never written you before. I have three pet cats. I have two pigs and six little chickens. My papa takes your paper. I like to read the letters and stories. I go to Sunday School every Sunday I can. I have gone nearly two years. I have the gold badge. I want to get the wreath to go around it. Our pastor is Mr. Berryhill. We like him fine. I go to the Presbyterian Church. Mrs. C. H. Ferguson is my Sunday School teacher. I am studying the Shorter Catechism. I will close by asking a question: Where is the longest verse in the Bible found?

Your new friend,
Martha E. Jackson.

Clover, S. C.

NO PASTOR NOW.

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy nine years old. I go to school, I am in the fourth grade. My teacher is Miss Gertrude Finger. I go to Sunday School every time I can. My Sunday School teacher is Mr. McGee. We haven't any pastor now, but hope to have one soon. Mr. Garth was our pastor ten years. We miss him very much. I have a little sister seven years old. She is writing, too. I will close by asking: Who was the oldest man?

Your little friend,
Grady Byron Walsh.

FISHING IN THE WATER TROUGH.

Katie's mother had been very sick, so they moved into the country. Their house was an old farmhouse. Close to the barn stood a big wooden pump. A trough was half-full of water that had stood so long it was not fit to drink.

"Maybe there might be fish there," said Katie. So she fastened a crooked pin to a string, tied a nail on to sink it, and waited patiently for the fish to bite.

Brother Will had been to college and knew almost everything; so Katie felt sure he could help her find the fish, for there was water, and only yesterday mother declared that the pretty speckled trout they ate for breakfast lived in the water.

"Yes," said Brother Will, "that trough is brimful of fish, but they are so tiny you could never see them unless I should lend you my microscope. Get your tin pail, and we'll capture a few. What do you see?"

"Noting but some green, shiny stuff." Gazing through the microscope, she found that the green stuff was made up of thousands and thousands of little cells, each one was a fish curled up asleep.

Brother Will stirred the mass with a stick, and the busy creatures darted here, there and everywhere.

They were shaped like a pear and moved with the small end first. Two tiny threads came out of a little peak at the small end, and with these thrashed through the water just like a boy swimming.

"These are berry fish," said Brother Will. "They have a long Latin name, too."

Katie half filled her tin pail with the water that held these odd fish and carried it back to show mother, who set it on the low mantel to watch the changes that would be sure to take place. In a few days the whole inner part divided in two. Then each half divided again until the inside jelly was cut up into a great many parts. These grew round and made a cluster of berries. Now the outside shell grew very soft and melted away; and then, instead of one green mother fish, there was a whole flock of baby berries that scattered themselves and swam about merrily.

"There is a large family of these berry fish in Greenland," said Brother Will; and instead of living in water, they stay in the snow. They are of a bright red color, and people who have never heard of them say the snow is red."

"But we know better," said Katie, "and I shall always be glad that I went fishing in the old pump trough."—Zion's Herald..

A DEAR LITTLE GIRL.

Her name was Pauline, and she came to visit her Grandma Dexter by the latter's invitation.

"She'll be lonesome here, won't she?" inquired a dear old white-haired lady the day that Pauline arrived.

"No," was Grandma Dexter's smiling answer; "I don't think so. She isn't the kind that gets lonesome. She is different from a good many children."

Grandma Dexter's home was only a boarding house. The boarders, for the greater part, were elderly people, and there were no children. The only child in the house was the little daughter of the cook, and she never ventured farther from the kitchen than the back yard; in fact, none of the boarders knew there was such a child until after Pauline came.

Pauline's coming to the boarding house was like a ray of sunshine after a dark day. She seemed to fit in everywhere. She was hands and feet to her Grandma Dexter as long as she was there, which was a month. It seemed to Mrs. Dexter and to those who saw the child's devotion to her a wonder how she had ever done without her and how she would do without her after she had gone.

Mrs. Dexter was not old, only a little past fifty, but she was greatly afflicted. She could manage to get about a little with the aid of a chair and a cane, but most of her time was spent in her wheel chair. She could use her hands part of the time, but there were many weary days when they were so stiff and painful that they lay idle in her lap.

There was nothing like servitude in the little ministering things Pauline did for her grandmother. And her loving ministry was not entirely confined to Mrs. Dexter. It would be a difficult, if not impossible, task to enumerate the small, loving acts of just one of Pauline's days. They were such as these—the picking up of an old lady's handkerchief that had been accidentally dropped or the lifting up and gently wrapping about the shoulders of a light shawl that some feeble hands were trying in vain to arrange; the opening of a door for some afflicted one who wanted to pass out or the closing of it if a draft made some one shiver; the bringing of a glass of cool water to some one who needed it and was not able to get it; the unfolding of a paper for weak hands or the reading of items here and there if requested.

One day while Pauline was tossing her ball over the lawn it suddenly disappeared through a thick hedge which divided the front from the back yard. Pauline went in search of her ball. She found it and something else—a small, pale-faced girl leaning on crutches who looked at her wistfully. Pauline instantly lost all interest in her ball.

"I'm Pauline Dexter, who are you?" she said, by way of introduction.

"I'm Katie Runyon, the cook's daughter," was the timid response.

Presently they were talking together as if they had known each other for years, Pauline, naturally, taking the lead. They were sitting near together on an old settee. On the same settee were an old doll, with a broken nose and a torn picture book. Pauline, observing the doll and book, drew her own inferences and a great pity for the crippled child took possession of her.

"Oh," she said to herself, "I must do something for her—I must!" and then aloud to Katie, "Would you like to see my dollie?"

"Indeed I would," Katie said, eagerly.

"Then I'll get it right away," and Pauline disappeared. Presently she was back with a smile on her face and a doll in her arms. The latter she handed to Katie, who took it shyly and looked at it longingly.

"Oh," she cried, "isn't it beautiful?"

"Yes; I think it is. I love that doll."

"So do I," said Katie, gleefully, touching her pale lips to the doll's yellow hair. "She'd keep the pain away, wouldn't she?"

"What pain?"

"Oh," exclaimed Katie, "the pain that comes on in the night."

"Do you always have pain at night?" asked Pauline.

"Yes, always—in my leg. It hurts and hurts. Oh, how it hurts! And poor mamma has to get out of bed and rub it."

"Why do you say 'poor mamma?' Is she sick?"

"Oh, no; mamma isn't sick. But she has to work so hard she gets tired, and I hate to call her up in the night. That's why I said 'poor mamma.'"

"I'm sorry for you," Pauline said with ready sympathy. "I don't believe I could stand it if my leg should ache every night. You said you thought my dollie could keep the pain away, so she isn't my dollie any more—she's yours."

Katie looked at Pauline wonderingly. Then she held out the doll to her, but it was not taken. Pushing the hand that held it back with gentle insistence, Pauline said:

"It's yours, you know. I must go now, but I'll see you again tomorrow."

Pauline was as good as her word. Consequently, "tomorrow" found her there again. This time she found Katie with face alight sitting on the old settee with the beautiful doll in her arms.

"Oh!" Katie cried at sight of Pauline,

"she (patting the doll gently) slept with me all night. Oh, I love her so (holding the doll close), and I love you, too, for giving her to me. Mamma says you're a 'dear little girl,' and I think so, too."—Mrs. Helen Hall Farley, in Ex.

BARIUM ROCK WATER RELIEVES WEAK AND NERVOUS PEOPLE.

Barium Rock Water is being prescribed by many physicians in the treatment of nervous debility and as a tonic and flesh-builder. They also recommend it in cases of indigestion, dyspepsia, rheumatism, gout, eczema and diseases arising from uric acid poisoning and for disorders of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

Mr. J. W. McCoy, of Charlotte, N. C., writes: "I had a violent case of typhoid fever and for three years was a nervous wreck. I was totally unfit for any kind of business. I suffered continually from my stomach. My improvement began with the use of Barium Rock Water and I was entirely cured."

If you are weak and nervous, if you suffer from melancholia, hysteria or are afflicted with any of the above diseases, send $2.00 for ten gallons. If it fails to relieve your case, we will refund your $2.00. It is understood that the empty demijohns are to be returned prepaid. Address Barium Springs Co., Box E-21, Barium Springs, N. C.

experience followed from the preaching of "duty and service" alone.

It is said that comparisons are odious, but sometimes they tell the truth, and we cannot refrain after what has been written, from calling attention to these facts:

At a conference of group managers held in Statesville in February, a prominent layman of our Synod made a most impressive and eloquent plea for the practice of the tithe, while a pastor of the largest church in the same Presbytery raised his voice in protest. A study of the Assembly's minutes shows that the church of which this layman is a member gave last year to benevolence, $15.07 per resident member, while the church of which this minister is the leader, gave to benevolence $9.04.

There are two churches in our Synod widely separated in distance but very similar in the size and character of their membership. The pastor of the first does not believe in pressing on his people the tithe, and the principles of stewardship. No one who knows him would question for an instant that under his ministry "the high sanction of the Gospel and the great calls of love toward and faith in God" have been faithfully preached. The pastor of the second named not only preaches the same Gospel of love and redemption through Christ, but also presses upon his people the obligation of stewardship and the practice of the tithe. The first church gave last year to benevolence an average of $9.04 per member, the second gave an average of $34.40 per member.

There are six churches of our Synod represented by the five men who have been "collaborating" in this discussion of the tithe: Two of these men are known as leaders in our church, are men of experience and scholarship, but they do not believe in, nor preach the tithe. The other three are young men without pretensions towards scholarship or learning, but who believe in and teach the tithe and stewardship. The three churches served by the first two men gave last year to benevolence an average of $7.53 per member. The three churches served by the last named men gave an average of $15.16. The highest per capita gift to benevolence among the churches whose pastors preach the tithe was $22.95, the lowest was $12.39, while the highest per capita gift among the three churches whose pastors do not preach the tithe was $9.04.

We call the attention of everyone to this comparison between churches where tithing and stewardship are stressed, and churches where they are not. The comparison might have been continued at great length, and shows in every instance the same result. And in closing we call upon Brothers Raynal and Parker, whose judgment in other respects we admire, and both of whom we highly esteem, to come out and say definitely what proportion they give of their incomes to the Lord, and what proportion they think their people ought to give? We call upon them for some positive and constructive program, instead of the wholly negative and destructive attack which they have brought upon a movement which is stirring our Synod and our Church from one end to the other. We are not as familiar with the Latin as our brethren, but we think the argument is one that may be termed the "Argumentum ad hominem."

DR. JOWETT ON THE OUT-COME.

Of the many meetings held in London to commemorate the signing of the armistice, few were more impressive than the great gathering of Free Church members that filled big Albert Hall and that was honored by the presence of the King and Queen. It was not only a demonstration of the strength of Non-conformity in the nation's capital, but of the increasingly cordial relations between the Anglican Church and the Free Churches. Their spokesman was Dr. J. H. Jowett, who, by the way, represented Nonconformity at the state dinner in Buckingham Palace, given by the King to President and Mrs. Wilson. At Albert Hall Dr. Jowett made a noteworthy address from which we quote herewith. His comparison of the broken column to the polished shaft is one of his characteristic literary touches.

"We have tenderly remembered our gallant sons who have fallen in the fight. Their sacred dust makes every land in which it rests a Holy Land. Their blood has not been wasted like water spilt upon the desert sand. Their lives have not been broken in the midst of the years. Lives which are consummated in sacrifice can never find their fitting symbol in a broken column; but rather in a polished shaft crowned with fairest lily-work. A finished life is not reckoned by the number of its years, whether they be many or few, but by the accomplishment of its appointed task. Our sons, who have laid down their lives for the race, have finished their course, have passed through sacrifice into the exalted ministry of still larger service.

"We have reached the end of the fight, but we have not reached the goal of the entire campaign. One part of the pilgrimage is over, but we are not yet at the end of the way. And our purpose in this service today is not only to give thanks for the wonderful road we have traveled, but to hallow the next stage of the journey. For four years our people have kept together, and kept rank through conflict and sorrow and tears, and that disciplined moral unity which has been achieved by this prolonged comradeship in service and sorrow, must now be dedicated in still loftier fellowship. The moral strength which has overturned a universal menace must now be consecrated to even greater tasks. The fraternity of destructive warfare must be transformed into a fraternity of constructive peace. The sword must be beaten into a ploughshare, and the spear into the pruning hook, and the moral spirit of the nations must provide a moral climate in which every people will be able to mature its own genius and make its own contribution to the common treasure of the race. "For lo! the winter is past, the rain is over and gone, and surely the flowers must appear on the earth, and the time of the singing of birds is come."—Congregationalist.

DRY HOTEL BIG SUCCESS.

Probably next to the saloonkeepers and liquor manufacturers the interests that have shown the most concern regarding the financial effects of prohibition are the hotelkeepers in existing wet territory. They should be able to get some consolation from the experience of one of their fraternity whose name would be recognized by many western travelers. Before it seemed likely that a certain northwestern state would close the bars by popular vote he had organized a company to erect a large hotel in one of the leading cities of that section. Prohibition became effective just as the building was completed and ready for business. It seemed a death blow to his hopes of financial success. "The bar brings the profit" was the tradition that he had always accepted. On an eastern trip at this time he dolefully expressed his opinion that he was headed straight for disaster.

However, his dolefulness did not continue. From the day the hotel was opened its business was sufficient to be profitable and presently it became almost phenomenal. The condition has continued, and the man who placed his hope on liquor profits has become, it is asserted, a millionaire without the sale of an ounce of alcohol. Moreover, he himself has abandoned the idea that to be a successful "good fellow" it is necessary to join in the "social glass" and he is now a teetotaler and considers it a most happy change of habit.—Continued.

HATCHED 175 CHICKS.

G. W. Miller, of Pittsburg, Okla., writes: "I used Reefer's Ready Relief and out of 175 chicks hatched didn't lose one." Mrs. T. E. Murphy, of Hughesville, Mo., writes: "Have been using Ready Relief for White Diarrhoea and only lost one chick out of 140."

You can do as well. Reefer's Ready Relief in your baby chicks' first drinking water will save them from dying off with that dreadful White Diarrhoea plague. This remedy is the discovery of a famous scientist. Send $1 today to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 9253 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package that will save 500 baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth five for a cent? You take no risk. Mr. Reefer will refund every cent of your money if you are not entirely satisfied and a million dollar bank backs up this statement. Send for a $1 package today, or better still, send $2.35 on special discount for three regular $1 packages and insure every hatch you get. If you don't want to try this bank guaranteed chick saver, at least write today for Mr. Reefer's free valuable poultry book that gives the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.—Adv.

THE FOOD VALUE OF THE BANANA.

The banana is compared with the potato in its capacity to furnish energy. As a fruit it contains valuable "accessory food substances." Dr. Victor C. Myers and Dr. Anton R. Rose believe that this fruit may be used as a special diet in diseases of the kidneys.

Unfortunately, the banana as we know it is usually unripe, and therefore indigestible. Many people believe that when the skin of this fruit begins to discolor it is unfit for use. On the contrary, so long as the pulp inside shows no decay, the exterior discoloration does not affect the food quality. Practical tests have shown that ripe bananas cause no discomfort, even when eaten in large quantities.

Although the banana is not the perfect substitute for the potato, its value is practically the same. Furthermore, the banana offers larger quantities of sugar than can be given otherwise without producing troubles of indigestion.

For its high food value, therefore, and its use in dietetic treatment, the banana has been rightly named "the poor man's fruit."

SHALL I GO TO COLLEGE?

Every High School Senior should be settling this question now, and parents should stand ready to give every encouragement to securing an affirmative answer. Russia's state is woeful, and it grows largely out of the ignorance of its people. True Democracy will not persist aside from proper education.

What Kind of Education is Best For Me? Germany's state is no better than Russia's, and Germany is a nation of largely technically trained people, whose education is materialistic. The heart and core of the educational life of America and England is cultural—the education of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

Shall It Be Christian Education? By all means. Have we not learned from sad experience of late that education without Christianity is dangerous? Think it over.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE is a Christian College of Liberal Arts and Sciences of long established reputation for breadth and thoroughness of courses and development of character. The aim here is to develop the whole man. The R. O. T. C. and supervised athletics develop the body; the class-room work develops the mind; and a Christian faculty and fellowship goes far to develop the spiritual man.

HOW BIRDS HELP US.

Birds do an immense amount of drudgery for man, says the "Farm Journal," if they do now and then reward themselves by a dainty tidbit of ripening fruit. A pair of robins have been watched while they carried a thousand earthworms to their brood. Woodpeckers destroy eggs and larvæ which would develop millions of destructive creatures in forests and orchards; and one of the most inevitable foes of the canker worm is the beautiful oriole, were it but allowed to live and hang its swinging cradle to the elm.

TITHING.

Dr. Timothy Stone, writing to Mr. Thomas Kane, says: "Your great life-work in vitalizing and advancing the great principle of 'tithing' cannot be over-estimated. This fundamental law of God is the great foundation-stone of all true Christian benevolence. It is true in giving as in other things—

"Our little systems have their day, They have their day and cease to be, but the great fundamental system of God is based upon His law of tithing, and no man or organization which has followed definitely this system has failed in influence and prosperity."

We agree heartily with Dr. Stone and feel that Mr. Kane has been one of the most useful men in our Presbyterian Church.—Presbyterian Banner.

What Are You Going to Do With God's Gold, God's Silver, God's Cotton, God's Wheat, God's Cattle?

God is calling for some of this wealth now. You've been giving dimes when dollars were needed. You've been giving dollars when hundreds were needed. You've been giving hundreds where thousands and millions were needed.

"FREELY YE HAVE RECEIVED, FREELY GIVE"

China needs a Half Million Dollars now. If our fields were equipped in efficient manner we would spend much more than a Million a Year on Foreign Missions.

Our 540 Home Mission Workers are underpaid, actually living on starvation salaries, not getting enough to enable them to properly educate their children. We need to put Two Hundred Thousand Dollars a year more in salaries for our present force.

Our Schools and Colleges are poorly equipped—a careful survey shows that we could spend Eight Million Dollars wisely in equipping and endowing them. Many of our self-sacrificing professors are teaching in our schools and colleges at a thousand or so dollars a year less than the same work is being paid for in State Schools.

There are in the South over Three Million children that are not attending Sabbath Schools, who should be in Sabbath Schools. Thousands of Dollars more could be spent profitably in Sabbath School Work.

The Southern Presbyterian Church is neglecting some of the most promising rural fields in the South. City churches are built from country districts and if we neglect one country field, one city church will soon show a loss.

There are villages in Oklahoma and Texas, without a single Protestant Church that in time will be great cities. Churches should be built in these small towns now, and shall we not build them?

Pastors, Elders, Deacons, we call upon you to show cause why our Beneficent Work shall not be properly supported.

EVANGELISM THAT WINS AND BUILDS UP

The word of Emerson suggests the method and spirit of evangelism that wins and builds up: "Souls are not saved in bundles, but to every man the Spirit puts the question, 'How is it with thee?'" The wholesale method does not avail. Pastoral evangelism is not spectacular, but wins men one by one and holds them to the Church. The pastoral passion for souls sees the opportunity and seizes it day by day. And the chance is open in the home, the store, on the cars, along the way, anywhere. The personal message, tender with compassion, and winged by prayer, never brings rebuff. Above all, childhood is the fruitful field of evangelism. Jesus linked His Kingdom to a child. We

STUDIES OF THE SOUL

These four great books on the science of soul culture supply the minister and Christian worker with the very latest and most usable thinking on this vital subject. The inner mysteries of the human soul and its conversion are set forth in practical, applicable, everyday language. Invaluable tools for evangelistic work.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF THE CHRISTIAN SOUL Rev. G. Steven, M. A.

This book is the outgrowth of long experience with men and books. The academic and theoretical have been tested in life's laboratory and this masterly analysis of the human soul is the result. A book which should be in every Christian worker's library.

CHRISTIAN PSYCHOLOGY

Professor James Stalker, D. D.

Doctor Stalker has produced a volume of pre-eminent value in the field of psychology and religion. He successfully transmutes the technical and abstruse findings of the academical world into arguments and language that have practical value for the busy minister and evangelistic worker.

The short way to the millennium is through the heart of the child.—Bishop Wilbur P. Thirkield.

Sympathy is feeling with others, and is quite a distinct thing from feeling for them. The latter is more of a quick and evanescent sentiment, good as far as it goes, but not often going far; laudable as long as it lasts, but not always lasting over the hour. Sympathy is a habit, or temper of mind, which means prayer and effort and sacrifice, and a sense of the common lot, with firmness and discrimination, and, best of all, "the mind of Christ."—Bishop Thorold.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate lining of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable conditions due to impure blood, read the following letter then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Spring,
Box 4B, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

SHE SAVED 200 CHICKS.

Mrs. G. Hancock, Sturgis, Ky., writes: "I hatched 200 chicks and didn't lose a single one with White Diarrhoea. I give Ready Relief the praise." Mrs. H. L. Sutton, of Ramona, Kas., writes: "My chicks were dying 20 and 30 a day. I got two packages of Ready Relief and now I don't lose any."

You can get the same wonderful results. Reefer's Ready Relief put in your baby chicks' first drinking water will help save them from the dreadful White Diarrhoea plague. This remedy is the discovery of a famous scientist. Send $1 today to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 6253 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package that will certainly help you save your baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth saving? You take no risk. Mr. Reefer will refund every cent of your money if you are not entirely satisfied and a million dollar bank backs up this statement. Send for a $1 package today, or better still, send $2.35 on special discount for three regular $1 packages and insure every hatch you get. Aren't your baby chicks worth five for a cent? That's about the cost of Reefer's Ready Relief. If you don't want to try this bank guaranteed chick saver at least write today for Mr. Reefer's valuable free poultry book that gives the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry. —Adv.

Sparkles

The Retort Crisp.

After a grand review of German troops at Potsdam the Kaiser called out to the officer commanding the Prussian Guard, in a voice loud enough to be heard by all the distinguished guests who were grouped in front of the palace: "Pick me out a hundred men from the Prussian Guard!" Then, taking the arm of King Edward VII, who was there, he said, "Come with me." He escorted King Edward very delicately round the hundred men and then said banteringly, "Well, do you think you could find a hundred men in England to beat them?"

"I don't know so much about that," promptly replied the late king, "but I could easily find fifty who would try."

If I Should Die Tonight.

If I should die tonight,
My friends would look upon my quiet face,
Before they laid it in its resting place,
And deem that death had left it almost fair,
And laying snow-white flowers against my hair,
Would smooth it down with tearful tenderness,
And fold my hands with lingering caress,
Poor hands, so empty and so cold tonight.

If I should die tonight,
My friends would call to mind with loving thought,
Some kindly deed the icy hand had wrought,
Some gentle word the frozen lips had said,
Errands on which the willing feet had sped.
The memory of my selfishness and pride,
My hasty words, would all be set aside,
And I should be loved and mourned tonight.

If I should die tonight,
E'en hearts estranged would once more turn to me,
Recalling other days remorsefully;
The eyes that chill me with averted glance,
Would look upon me as of yore, perchance,
And soften in the old familiar way;
For who would war with dumb unconscious clay?
So I might rest forgiven of all tonight.

Oh, friends! I pray tonight,
Keep not your kisses for my dead, cold brow;
The way is lonely, let me feel them now;
Think gently of me, I am travel worn,
My faltering feet are pierced with many a thorn;
Forgive! ah, hearts estranged, I plead!
When dreamless rest is mine, I shall not need
The tenderness for which I long tonight.

—Henry Ward Beecher.

Editorial

The Western Section.

(Editorial Correspondence)

IT becomes our duty once a year to explain what the Western Section is. It is that part of the Alliance of Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian system which has its habitat in the Western Hemisphere. It is composed of representatives of all the Presbyterian Churches in North and South America. As a rule only representatives of the Churches in the United States and Canada attend.

The meeting was held this year in Chambersburg, Pa., the beautiful little city, which suffered in the days of the Civil War by the careless handling of fire by the Confederate troops. There are no scars remaining to this day, but everywhere are the evidences of a vigorous, healthful and prosperous life.

Chambersburg's greatest glory is Wilson College, over which Rev. Ethelbert D. Warfield, D.D., LL.D., presides with dignity and grace and whose affairs he guides with enlarging success. We have been acquainted with this great college for women for many years, but we knew it only at a distance. This is a case where distance does not lend enchantment to the view. The nearer you come, the greater the enchantment. When we approached near enough to behold the pile of splendid buildings, the enchantment was increased; and when we entered and renewed our fellowship with the genial president, and spent an hour in social contact with the accomplished teachers, and when we looked upon the fresh and beautiful young life as represented by more than two hundred pupils, our experience was like that of the Queen of Sheba in the Court of Solomon.

It was in the elegant and commodious chapel of Wilson College that the Executive Commission of the Western Section was called to order at 8 o'clock, Tuesday evening, February 25, with the President, Rev. G. W. Richards, D.D., in the chair. Dr. Warfield welcomed the delegates to the hospitality of the city and the college in words of cordial greeting. A graceful and fitting response was made by Dr. Richards. The sessions of the section occupied Tuesday evening, Wednesday morning, afternoon and evening. Reports were presented on Missions, Home and Foreign, on Education, on Church History, on Work on the European Continent, on Sabbath Schools and Young People's Work. These reports as usual were very able. The chairmen of the committees who drew them up gave much thought and labor to them, bringing together quite an amount of interesting and valuable information. The reports gave rise to considerable discussion in which there was no little display of extensive and expert knowledge of the various topics brought under survey. A glance at the themes handled so ably reveals the fact that they were great themes, the greatest with which the Church of Christ deals, themes world-wide in their scope, and embracing the highest interests of mankind. What became of these able reports on these all-important themes? They were printed in a blue book and circulated among the members of the body. Is that as far as they go? Yes, only those who heard them, ever have the privilege of reading them. Well then, what good do they do? This question is open for debate. Some of the reports have recommendations attached; these are adopted, but that ends the matter. There is no machinery for giving effect to the recommendations. Occasionally there is a recommendation to offer a suggestion to the supreme judicatories of the constituent bodies. Of course, in such a case, contact is formed with the outside world. But taken all in all, there is more earnest labor wasted; more virtuous energy dissipated; more able speeches blown into the circumambient atmosphere; and more valuable material relegated to innocuous desuetude, in the meetings of the Western Section than in any other assembly of like able men of which history gives us any information. We meet together, and wrestle manfully with the most prodigious problems of the Kingdom, formulate opinions, argue to conclusions, pass these opinions and conclusions in review with microscopic care, vote upon them and solemnly approve them, and then bury them in eternal silence, "unwept, unhonored and unsung."

If such be the ineffective character of its proceedings, is the Western Section worth while? In this pragmatic age can it justify its continued existence? Undoubtedly. Its prime function is to preserve the continuity of the life of the Pan Presbyterian Alliance. Without the annual meeting of the two sections, the Eastern and Western, during the four years of the interregnum, the Alliance would lead a very precarious life and probably come to a premature end. These annual meetings enlarge the acquaintance, deepen the fellowship and cement the friendship between all the churches represented. They prepare the program and make preparation for the meetings of the Alliance. These meetings of the Western Section do more than is done by any other agency perhaps to bring the Presbyterian Churches of this continent to a better understanding of each other and a more sympathetic estimate of each other's work for the Master. This end is promoted indeed by the able reports and discussions which never get beyond the walls within which the sessions are held.

When the Aberdeen Council adjourned in June, 1913, it was expected the next Council would be held in Pittsburgh in the early fall of 1917. But the next Council has not yet been held. The Aberdeen Council little dreamed that between its closing session and the date for the next Council lay four years of distress unparalleled in extent and intensity in the history of all past ages, involving the death on the battlefield of many millions of the choice young men of the great nations of the world, the crippling for life of other millions, the putting of countless homes under the shadow of abiding sorrow, and the smiting of myriads of hearts with anguish unspeakable. It has been necessary to postpone the assembling of the Council from year to year. It is now hoped that it may be held in the fall of 1920. The Western Section is going forward with preparations to that end.

The Good Name of Our State Vindicated.

When a band of lawless white men in Winston-Salem took the laws into their own hands and tried to lynch a negro charged with the nameless crime, the attempted lynching was heralded from one end of the country to the other, and among some of our Northern exchanges it furnished an opportunity to publish the lawlessness of the South and our blind hatred of the negro.

If we were to publish the resolutions passed and the protests made, it would fill many columns.

No mention was made of the brave defense put up by the officers of the law and the foiling of the attempt, which was one of the bravest efforts on record.

These would-be lynchers have just been tried and fourteen of them were convicted. The sentences imposed ranged from fourteen months to six years on the chaingang.

The encouraging feature of this affair is the approval expressed by the people of the State, which proves what we have always insisted upon, that these lynchings were not representative of the best people, but were the work of the lowest class.

The Rights of an Editor.

We are by no means the Nestor of the religious press, but we have been editing long enough to have accumulated a large and varied stock of experience, if not of wisdom. We have learned more of human nature during the years of our sojourn in the editor's chair than we had ever dreamed of in our philosophy.

Having had this long experience, we believe that we know our rights as an editor, and knowing, we dare maintain. One inalienable right that goes with the office is the right to decide what shall go into our columns. Some one must have the decision, and no one is better fitted than the editor.

On more than one occasion we have been sharply called to account by zealous advocates of a measure because we admitted articles contrary to what they believed, and it has been intimated that by so doing we have been injuring this cause or that cause.

The strange part of the story is that those holding the view contrary to what is held by our critics charged us with admitting the other view. Thus we are blanked if we do, and blanked if we don't.

We mention this disposition on the part of our brethren, not because it interferes with our peace of mind, or because it offends, but in order to make it clear to all that we propose to admit what our judgment thinks best, and also to give notice that our columns are open to all who wish to discuss church affairs, whether they agree with us or not.

We have a horror of monotony, especially in a church paper. Variety in views adds much to the entertainment of our readers, and we are too old to think that wisdom is going to die with us.

If the brethren feel inclined to pitch into the editor and make him point a moral or adorn a tale, we have no objection. We only ask that they do so in a witty manner. We also ask that they abstain from personalities, for in an argument such is a sign of weakness.

The Stewardship Campaign is of great importance, and everyone wishes it to succeed. Do your best in its behalf, and to the man who follows some other way than yours give credit for the same earnest desire that you claim.

While we assert our rights as an editor, we claim also to be impartial in the practise of those rights. We have given double space to those favoring what we oppose, and we also publish endorsements of the same opposite view.

We believe in the tithes as we do in perfect holiness, as a practice rather than a profession.

In conclusion we beg both sides to look at the question from every point of view, and keep in mind Theodore Tilton's witty distinction between orthodoxy and heterodoxy—"Orthodoxy is my doxy, while heterodoxy is your doxy."

"Billy Sunday" in Richmond.

In another column will be found an account of Billy Sunday's campaign in Richmond, written by Dr. Walter Lingle. Sometimes we publish articles that are so dry that we fear spontaneous combustion, but in laying this article before our readers we have no such fear. It is one of the most readable articles we have handled for a long time, and if our readers enjoy it as much as we have done, they have a treat awaiting them. It is written in that graphic and human style for which Dr. Lingle is famous. It is said at Montreat that Dr. Lingle's notices from the platform are as entertaining as some of the lectures. This was intended as a compliment, but the value of the compliment depends upon the particular lecture taken as a basis of comparison.

Brevity as Literary Capital.

The main object writers have in view in writing for the public is to secure a hearing, because unless you can secure a reading of what you write, you write in vain. Your ideas may be good and your reasoning clear and strong, yet they waste their sweetness on the desert air unless someone will read them.

The average reader of the Church paper takes his literary food in small doses, so that if you wish him to take what you have to say, you must present it in a form that will appeal to his eye. Of course after he begins to read, the merits of the article will do the rest and keep him at it to the end.

In olden times the editorials of the secular papers were long and dry, but men being accustomed to a life of leisure, would read them "from eggs to apples." Now we live in a busy age, and men regard life as too short to spend much of it on one article.

The secular papers that are popular are those in which you find the short editorials. The religious press is bound to follow their example, and many of our contemporaries are doing so.

We have tried, by line upon line, and precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little, to make our contributors realize that they will no more be heard for their much writing than the Pharisees for their much speaking. A few here and there have heeded our advice and have increased the number of their readers wonderfully by cultivating a habit of brevity.

While this is true of some, it is not true of the bulk of our contributors.

A much valued reader recently sent us a clipping, with the advice to publish it for the benefit of these loquacious brethren. We pass it on with the hope that it may do some good.

"Have you had a thought that's happy?

Boil it down.

Make it short and crisp and snappy—

Boil it down.

When your mind its gold has minted,

Down the page your pen has sprinted,

If you want your effort printed,

Boil it down."

Edward Kidder Graham.

The University of North Carolina Record for January, 1919, is devoted to a memorial of the late President Graham.

The memorial meeting was held December 8. Rev. W. D. Moss, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Chapel Hill, delivered the invocation, which is as touching as it is beautiful. Prof. H. H. Williams' subject was "President Graham as the University Knew Him." Here we have the wonderful impression that he made upon his associates, who at once realized that a new type of man had come to the front, who was to leave his impress upon the young men of the State. How President Graham's work impressed the State is set forth by R. D. W. Connor, President of the Alumni Association and Secretary of the Board of Trustees of the University. His work impressed the State as making the University the heart of the State, functioning in every vital phase of its life, so that each depended upon the other.

Dr. C. Alphonso Smith, head of the Department of English in the United States Naval Academy, was unable to be present, but his paper, "President Graham and the Nation," was read by Dr. J. G. deR. Hamilton.

Dr. Smith's "Appreciation," like all that comes from his pen, is a gem. He waves his wand over English words and at once they group themselves into flawless sentences, pulsating with life and rich in imagery.

As we read these addresses we realize that "a great man is fallen in Israel," and that the State has lost one who though young, had already laid the foundation of a work that was to place the University high among the schools of the land.

The Sunday Meetings in Richmond

By Rev. Walter L. Lingle, D.D.

FOR seven weeks Billy Sunday has been preaching from two to four times a day to great crowds in the City Auditorium. The Auditorium holds about 5,000 people, and it has been practically full at every service. Nearly every night hundreds have been turned away for lack of room. On last Sabbath Mr. Sunday preached five times in the Auditorium. After each service the Auditorium was completely cleared and a new crowd brought in, and still there were thousands turned away. At these services thousands have given Mr. Sunday their hands with a resolve to live a better Christian life, or to confess Christ for their first time. Whatever one may think of Mr. Sunday and his methods, he is bound to confess that all of this is very remarkable. It is not often that the city authorities find it necessary to detail a score of special policemen to direct and take care of the crowds who flock to hear a minister preach the old-time religion. It would seem worth while for other ministers to study this man, his message, and his methods. I have been trying to do this ever since Mr. Sunday came to Richmond. Some of my observations may be of interest to some of your readers.

First of all, Mr. Sunday is not an ignorant slang-slinger, who is always murdering the English language, as some people imagine. His illustrations show that he is widely read in history, biography, literature, and science. Slang is a small-part of his stock in store. Usually his language is as pure and chaste English as I ever hear. I have watched closely, but have never heard him make an error in grammar. Newspapers do not and cannot give anyone an adequate impression of Mr. Sunday. You have to hear him. He does use slang and at times he goes too far in this direction, but in doing this he is making an earnest effort to reach the man on the street, who never goes to a church. I heard him preach a great sermon on "Who Was Jesus?" which was absolutely free from slang.

The thing that impresses me most about Mr. Sunday is that he is putting all the energy of his being into his preaching. I have never before seen so much physical energy go into a sermon. He is a great actor and at the same time a nimble athlete. Perhaps he carries this too far at times, but it has a tremendous effect upon his audience. He also puts all his spiritual energy into his sermons. I have never before seen such intense earnestness. How he lives through it all, I cannot understand. Think of preaching five sermons, varying from forty minutes to an hour in length, in one day, to audiences of 5,000 people, and of throwing every ounce of every kind of energy you have into every service. If a minister feels that he is overworked he ought to listen to Mr. Sunday awhile. After listening to Mr. Sunday the minister has an intense desire to throw himself more completely into his sermons and his work than he has ever done before.

Mr. Sunday makes large use of striking illustrations. He knows how to tell a story with great effect. His illustrations are so clear and to the point that he spends very little time in making the application. He leaves the hearer to do that for himself. My observation is that the average minister spends too much time in explaining what he meant for his illustration to illustrate. We might leave a few things to the intelligence of our hearers. Here is a paragraph written in a letter by a boy of eleven and never intended for his father's eyes: "Billy Sunday is fine and very interesting to children because he uses so many illustrations so true to life and that bring out the point so well."

Mr. Sunday preaches a religion of joy and good cheer and illustrates it in his own life. He has no patience with a smile-if-you-dare type of religion. When he preaches his face is often radiant with a smile. This gives way at times to a look of fury as he pronounces some terrible invective against sin and exhausts his vocabulary of vituperation and then tears around on the platform in speechless rage. No one could imagine fiercer indignation against sin. But as a rule he carries a degree of cheerfulness into the pulpit which is unusual. It seems to me that the minister could learn a good lesson here. The chief criticism which Professor Sleeth, in the department of expression, makes of our seminary students is that they are too sad in the pulpit. He is forever urging them to be serious, but not so sad. On one occasion, a good many years ago, after one of the students had preached, a young lady remarked that she had expected him to close by saying, "These services will be concluded at the cemetery." Mr. Sunday would be a joy to Professor Sleeth's heart. Again it may be remarked that Mr. Sunday, at times, carries this cheerfulness too far and allows it to degenerate into what seems to be levity.

The singing is a great feature of the Sunday meetings. This has been true of nearly all great evangelistic meetings. John Wesley had his brother Charles, Moody had his Sankey, Chapman had his Alexander, and Sunday has Rodeheaver. Mr. Rodeheaver has a wonderfully sweet voice and he knows how to make a crowd sing. The choir was organized by inviting each church in the city to send a certain per cent of its membership to help sing. In this way each church furnished a group of its very best singers for the great choir. The whole congregation of 5,000 people also joined in the singing in a remarkable way. They seldom sang more than two verses of a hymn, but sang a great many hymns. It has occurred to me that ministers and churches and Sunday School superintendents might take notice of this point.

The meetings were informal, at times too informal, but this informality pleased and attracted many people. Is it not possible that our church services have grown too rigid, and formal and inflexible?

Everything in connection with the Sunday meetings was thoroughly organized. Before Mr. Sunday came the city was organized into interdenominational neighborhood prayer meetings. These prayer meetings had much to do with the success of the Sunday campaign. We believe in the power of prayer. In addition to this power, these prayer meetings advertised the meetings in the Auditorium, and put the people in a state of expectancy. They also brought about such a co-operation among denominations as nothing else could have done.

Mr. Sunday has a large group of splendid workers with him. These workers were busy every day in every part of the city, holding smaller meetings among all classes of society. Some were holding noonday meetings in the great industrial plants, some were speaking to high school girls, others were meeting with groups of the first families. I doubt whether the public realizes how much these staff workers contribute to the success of the Auditorium meetings.

Inside the Auditorium everything was thoroughly organized, musicians, ushers, secretaries, personal workers, and all. Think of taking up a collection in a congregation of 5,000 inside of two minutes. Only perfect organization made it possible. Surely the church does not need any further organization in the way of societies, but might it not be possible to organize the general work of the church in a much more effective way?

I could never quite reconcile myself to Mr. Sunday's prayers. They are not like any other prayers that I have ever heard. He strikes one as being too familiar with the Lord and as telling the Lord too much. But after one has given these prayers all the criticism they deserve he is bound to feel that Mr. Sunday is really talking to God. In his

"Boomerangs and By-Products"

By Rev. Ernest Thompson, D.D.

THE Church that is standing still is dead. Progress is the law of life. The best sort of progress is that which is made along the line of a well defined plan.

An Ambitious Goal and a Systematic Plan.

Our Church has set up an Ambitious Goal and is seeking to reach it by a systematic plan—$3,500,000 for benevolences in 1919. And it is trying to reach that goal along the rails of regular and systematic giving—every member of every church a contributor, regularly, systematically, cheerfully, and proportionally, liberally, in a word scripturally. Not less than a tithe some of these days from all God's people.

A Boomerang.

This beneficent drive is a boomerang to the pastor: the right sort of a boomerang. My little boy had a boomerang—he threw it and it landed in the top of a tree. He could not locate it because of the leaves; when the leaves had fallen, another boy got it and traded it to still another boy for an apple; this boy sailed it into the top of a still taller tree, where it lodged. The February winds began to blow and the other day my boy, standing beneath the tree, found the boomerang at his feet. After long absence and many vicissitudes, scarred and bereft of paint, the boomerang, according to its nature, had come home.

Brother Pastor, launch this drive and it will come back in blessing at your feet. I have known more than one pastor to have his own salary increased because, forgetting about his own salary, he gave himself to the church's larger program. But if not, there is still the sweet consciousness of the growth of the Master's kingdom.

But the raising of this amount of money in itself, though it resulted in enlarged equipment in Home and Foreign fields, and an adequate salary for every pastor and mission worker, would not be a great enough goal for our splendid Church.

"By-Products."

Just above us on the river is a salt furnace, which for many years made nothing but salt and was doing a profitable business in a small way. But in recent months they have come to find that what they had been discarding and throwing away was the most valuable part of salt making. In other words, the by-products of salt, calcium chloride and bromide, are of vastly more consequence than the salt itself.

So to the church that faithfully carries out this every member canvass, this beneficence drive, there will come by-products to which the mere amount of money is not to be compared.

Some of these by-products will be a larger vision of the church's responsibility, a better knowledge of its program, a study of the Scriptures to see if these things be so, a more regular attendance on the church services, a deepening of the spiritual life, and a growing spirit of evangelism.

More intelligent church members.

Larger visioned church members.

More scriptural church members.

More liberal church members.

More attending church members.

More spiritual church members.

More evangelistic church members.

Brother Pastor, isn't it worth while? Do not cheat yourself out of these by-products by failing to put yourself wholeheartedly into the plan.

Shall the Presbyterian Church Go Over the Top?

By Rev. D. F. Wilkinson.

THE Assembly has asked the Church for $3,500,000 for benevolence during the year ending April 1, 1920.

Can it be raised? Will it be done? It surely can be; and it surely will be if the Presbyterian people of the Southland are given a fair chance. Let them hear about the program. Let them see the need.

Never has there been a time when Christian people were so willing to do great and noble things for their Lord and their fellowmen as now. Never has there been a time when they recognized so fully as now the great truth of stewardship. Never have they felt so deeply as they do now the responsibility that rests upon them to give the Gospel of Christ to a bleeding, starving world.

Within the past few years many great benevolent and humanitarian enterprises for feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and ministering to the sick and wounded have been successfully carried out by Christian people. These schemes have required much labor, great sacrifices, enormous gifts of money, but it has all been done with wonderful cheerfulness.

Christian people are getting accustomed to doing large things. They love the sensation of "going over the top." They have successfully equipped and manned many of the benevolent and Christian enterprises in connection with the late war. They are now feeding several million hungry people. They have quit estimating money by the thousands, but rather, by the millions. And they meet the demands gladly. All they require is to be informed of the need.

Our Presbyterian people have had a large and conspicuous part in all this gigantic work and sacrificial giving. They have had fine schooling, and now they are ready to carry on the big things for Christ and His Kingdom. All they need are the facts and the chance to do their part.

All the large evangelical churches are planning to carry out a large program for the immediate future. Some of them are already hard at work. Shall the Presbyterian Church lag behind? Shall she fail while her sister churches succeed all about her? Surely not.

What is necessary for an easy and complete success? Give every member a chance. Tell about the program for the next year. Tell about the needs. Tell what others are doing. Tell him the Presbyterian Church is depending on him to do his fair share in carrying out the program. In nearly every case the response will be gratifying. Now it is a well known fact that the Assembly's Stewardship Committee cannot do this hand to hand work. Laymen's conventions will help, but these reach only a few. Presbyterian Conferences will help, but these do not touch the rank and file. Literature on the subject will help, but many will not read it. What is to be done, then? The pastors of churches can do it. He must do it if it is done. He must instruct his people on the subject. He must organize and supervise the drive in his congregation. If he will, he can. If any congregation with a pastor or stated supply fails to do its fair share in carrying out the present program, most of us will have our idea as to where the blame lies.

Zachary, La.

If the hill back of Nazareth could give forth its secret, if the lake of Galilee could tell what it witnessed, if the desert places around Jerusalem could tell their story, if the Mount of Olives could speak out and tell us what transpired there, they would all tell us more than anything else of the prayer-life of our Lord. They would reveal its intensity, its unselfishness, its constancy, its godly fear that made it irresistible.—John R. Mott.

Intensified Church Work

By Rev. J. Ernest Thacker, D.D.

WE began a campaign of intensified Evangelistic Church work in the First Church of Lexington, Ky., on January 5: The purpose is to deepen the spiritual life of church members and to bring the unsaved to Christ. The Sunday night service, each week, is a real decision service, and every person in the congregation is given the opportunity to express his earnest purpose to live a more consecrated, useful Christian life, or to unite with the church by letter, or to accept Jesus Christ as his Saviour. Each member is asked to be a real personal worker—a soul winner—and to keep a prayer list. The Sunday School teachers are asked to make a special effort to lead their scholars to Christ, and both teachers and scholars are asked to go out after others and bring them into their classes, and through the classes into the church.

The results have been a wonderful increase in the spiritual atmosphere of the church: new members have been received each Sunday; the proper meetings have become such a vital force that men are saying, "I used to go to prayer meeting because I thought I ought to go, now I go because I want to go;" the attendance at all services has been greatly increased and the warm, cordial welcome given to all who come is constantly drawing and holding new people.

This work is being done mostly by the people themselves, and not by the acting pastor, and could be done much better by a regular pastor leading his church into intensified, enthusiastic evangelistic work. We are hoping to have a series of special services in March, so that by April 1 we may be able to report the best Stewardship and Evangelistic Campaign in the history of the church.

Throughout the Assembly our churches have all been greatly hindered in their work by influenza, and by natural absorption in war work of one kind or another, and if our reports on April 1 are to show commendable results in our work for the Master, it will be necessary to intensify our work along all lines, and especially in Evangelism.

This personal testimony, which I'm sure the brethren will pardon—is written in order to suggest that all our pastors and churches make all their services during the next few weeks intensely evangelistic; that each member be asked and trained to become a real personal worker at once, winning souls for Christ; that each one have a personal prayer list; that the Sunday night service be made an enthusiastic evangelistic service and that each church, as far as possible, have a series of special meetings in March.

This would undoubtedly revitalize and spiritualize our forces, make our great Stewardship movement a real success, win many souls for Christ and bring us to the close of a church year of great blessing, which otherwise, because of so many hindrances, may prove a disappointment.

Do you feel this way about it? Then why not try it?

Are the Churches in the Synod of South Carolina Soul-Winning Institutions?

By Rev. E. P. Davis, D.D.

A STUDY of the Minutes of the Synod of South Carolina for the year 1918 reveals the facts that we have 293 churches with 30,083 members, and that there were 1,008 accessions by examination during the year. We have some of the best churches, all things considered, in the bounds of the General Assembly. But 98 churches in our Synod with a total membership of 4,789 did not report a single addition by profession of faith during the whole year. Thirteen of the 48 churches in Bethel Presbytery with a total membership of 573; 11 of the 26 churches in Charleston Presbytery with a total membership of 331; 13 of the 30 churches in Congaree Presbytery with a total membership of 470; 11 of the 40 churches in Enoree Presbytery with a total membership of 440; 13 of the 32 churches in Harmony Presbytery with a total membership of 685; 12 of the 37 churches in Pee Dee Presbytery with a total membership of 727; 10 of the 37 churches in Piedmont Presbytery with a total membership of 762, and 15 of the 43 churches in South Carolina Presbytery with a total membership of 801, did not report a single convert for twelve months. These are the facts as furnished by our official records for our information. We cannot know all the reasons for the facts. Some of the churches are small and others had no pastors; but they had ruling elders, deacons and members. Is it not well sometimes to re-state the twofold purpose of the existence and maintenance of the church as the preservation of the truth in its purity, totality and preciousness and the publication of the truth by which the Holy Spirit regenerates, convinces, converts, sanctifies and saves men? But many of these barren churches have more than a hundred members each; and one has 320 members, a pastor, seven elders and eight deacons. Another has 539 members, 10 elders and 19 deacons, and only two joined the church during the year by examination. Is the church measuring up to her high calling? It is true that it is the sovereign prerogative of the Holy Spirit to regenerate the soul. But He has appointed the means of grace to be diligently used by us and the meager results demonstrate the imperative need of importunate prayer, emphasis on the fundamental truths of the Gospel and personal effort in soul-winning. How much more important and honorable is the work of winning souls from the world than disturbing the church relations of members in other churches and denominations! We do not suppose that the Synod of South Carolina is more unfruitful than other Synods, and we are grateful to God for the great work the churches are doing in giving faithful testimony to the truth, in Christian education, in gifts to all the benevolent causes of the church and in their loyalty to Christ and Presbyterianism. May God graciously revive His work in all our hearts, homes and churches!

Dr. Hill's Views on the Tithe.

Anything from Dr. Hill's pen must carry weight. We give below his views as expressed in a note to the editor. They may not have been intended for publication, but we venture to publish them, wishing both sides of the question to have a fair hearing.

"I don't think that the recent article in the Standard on "The Tithe" does justice to the subject, nor destroys all influence of the tithe upon Christian giving. I never heard of any one maintaining that the tithe went back to creation. It started with Abram, the father of the chosen people, was practised by Jacob, and was incorporated by Moses as the law for Israel's giving. That it was not a ceremonial law, but had a moral quality.

"If God required the Jews to give one-tenth of their income to maintain His worship among themselves, it would be passing strange if He expected Christian people to give less than a tenth to maintain His worship at home and "preach the Gospel to every creature."

Has Christ Failed in His Mission to the World?

By Rev. A. W. Pitzer, D.D.

WE hear complaint on all sides that Christianity has failed to meet the needs of a perishing world; and that the Church of Christ is sadly behind this "New Era" in the world's history. Those complaints go back to Christ Himself; and it is well for us to know some of the things that He did not come to do.

He did not come on any indefinite and uncertain mission. He knew perfectly all that He had to do, and He gave His life to doing that. He tells us plainly some of the things He did not come to do. In John 6:38, He says: "I came not to do my own will; but the will of Him who sent me." He was no capricious arbitrary Autocrat to do as He pleased; but must speak and do according to the will of His Father, who had sent Him on this mission.

We are hearing now from many sources that, "if Christianity does not end wars, then the church is a failure." Let us turn to the words of Christ, Matt. 10:34: "Think not that I came to send peace on the earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword." Read the context, verses 34 to 40. As His Father sent Him, so He sends His disciples into the world; as He had no mission to put an end to wars; so His church has no such mission. There will be wars and rumors of wars until the end. This is what our Lord says, and we can depend on His word.

Another popular complaint is that the Church, or Christianity, or Christ Himself does not stop the great conflict, now general in all the earth, between labor and capital: "What a failure the Gospel is that it cannot put an end to strikes, lockouts, bombs, dynamites," etc., etc., etc. I fail to find anywhere in the Gospel that our Lord ever undertook to settle such questions: or that He ever sent out His Church on any such mission. He was asked by a citizen to speak to his brother and settle the question of property rights between these two brothers. Jesus refused to arbitrate and said (Luke 12:14): "Man, who made me a judge or divider over you: take heed and keep yourself from covetousness." And yet the "Federal Council" of the churches does not hesitate to appoint a commission to settle all such questions. No wonder that the Church fails, when it attempts to do what our Lord and Head never commanded her to do. Failures have marked the church in all the centuries, when she has tried to do the things which her Lord and Master never told her to do.

If the church of today in this land does not cease to heed and obey the calls and demands of this wicked and godless world; the Risen Lord God Almighty may remove the candle stand from many churches; as He has taken away the candle stand from the churches of Asia Minor; and from many regions in continental Europe. If anyone wishes to know how great is the darkness in lands in which the Light of the Gospel has been put out and the candle stand removed, let him go at once to Asia Minor, to Germany, to Russia; then he will know how great is the darkness, when the Light is lost.

I am now eighty-four years old, and have seen a number of "New Eras" (so-called), Reforms, and Reconstructions; and have listened to the wonderful promises and prophecies as to what the "New Era" would do for this old sinful world of ours. But all the essential elements of our estate have remained the same, unaltered since the introduction of sin by the Devil, who has been, and now is, the god of this world, the prince of the power of the air. He is busy by night and by day sowing tares; and the tares continue to grow, and will grow, side by side with the growing wheat, until the harvest at the end of age. The Angel of Christ will then gather them out for the burning.

World conditions today are horrible beyond expression; and if men do not believe in a place of torment hereafter, they must believe that there are many places of torment here and now. Jehovah told Jeremiah, His prophet, to take the cup of His wrath and make the nations of the earth drink: Thus saith Jehovah of Hosts, "Evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great tempest shall be raised up from the uttermost parts of the earth, and the slain of Jehovah shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth." (Jer. 25:32-33).

Whatchman, What of the Night?

I believe that Jesus will return to this earth in the same body that rose from the dead; that He will get the victory over Satan and all demons, evil, and over death itself; that He will gather the Jews into their own land given by Jehovah to the Patriarchs; that He will judge the godless and wicked nations; that He will purify this planet with fire; that He will raise the righteous dead and transfigure the living saints; that He will make all things new, even a new heaven and a new earth; and here will He dwell with His Redeemed People. I do not know the exact order of these great events, but I do know that every word of God will be fulfilled.

Come, Lord Jesus.

Attendance at Communion.

I have been interested in two reports from our leading congregations giving the number of members partaking of the Lord's Supper. The clerk of the session has been recording the number after each communion. Special attention might be paid to this matter at the spring communion, and your columns might be thrown open by invitation to brief reports giving the number of members of communicants, and of accessions. Such a list would require only one line for each congregation.

The last issue of the United Presbyterian gives such a report from the Bellevue Church, in one of the suburbs of Pittsburgh. Each communicant registered attendance by such a card as Dr. Ogden employs in Louisville. The membership in Bellevue is 554. Of these 310 received communion. This does not include visitors. The analysis of absentees was as follows: In the army, 35; at college, 14; sick, 40; waiting upon the sick, 16; aged, 10; detained by small children, 10; employed on Sabbath, 11; removed to other communities, 22; sorrow in the home, 12; away over Sabbath, 12; absentees unaccounted for, 63. The large number of persons sick is accounted for by the influenza epidemic.

A slight analysis of these figures shows that 65 per cent of the resident members partook of communion, and that only 13 per cent were absent without a reason known by the pastor. This attendance was not worked up for the occasion, and it was made known by the pastor only through the weekly bulletin. Such a percentage is by no means unusual in the United Presbyterian Church. In fact, I think that in normal times it would be counted rather low, at least in the better churches, such as Bellevue. In the spirit of Christian love it is fair to ask whether the percentage is higher or lower in our better Southern Presbyterian churches, and why?

The Day's Needs.

Each day I pray, God give me strength anew
To do the task I do not wish to do,
To yield obedience, not asking why,
To love and own the truth and scorn the lie,
To look a cold world bravely in the face,
To cheer for those that pass me in the race,
To bear my burdens gaily, unafraid,
To lend a hand to those that need my aid,
To measure what I am by what I give—
God give me strength that I may rightly live!

Ministerial Financial Compensation

By Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D.D., Secretary.

THE General Assembly in session at Durant, Okla., took the following action:

"Whereas, the salaries of our ministers are, as a rule, inadequate for their support, on account of the great increase in the costs of the necessaries of life, bringing on a condition which threatens the increased efficiency and future supply of ministers, we recommend:

"1. That all of the Presbyteries be directed to consider at once practical means of increasing the salaries of the ministers.

"2. That the Presbyterial Committees of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief arrange before the next meeting of Presbytery, if possible, for deputations of laymen to visit the churches in the Presbytery, and confer with, advise and assist the church officers in the matter of increase of salaries.

"3. That the Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, which has already done so much in this direction, be directed to supervise and further the adoption and putting into operation plans in all the Presbyteries, to remedy the acute situation facing the whole church relative to the adequate support of the ministry."

No clearer presentation of the importance of this subject has come to our attention than that written by Mr. H. P. Ford, Recording Secretary of the Board of Trustees of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., who writes as follows:

It is clear to every well-informed person that ministers, as a rule, are not receiving financial compensation in accordance with their necessities and in proportion to the service they are rendering. Some of the reasons why this important matter should receive the thoughtful consideration of every congregation follows:

1st. In intelligence, scholarship, influence and leadership, ministers compare favorably with men of other professions who receive much higher compensation.

2nd. Ministers are at the forefront in all things that make for the best in social, civil and religious circles. No one doubts that the finest things in life are inspired by the teachings of Christian churches and Christian ministers.

3rd. They must be dressed respectably, not only on the Sabbath, but on other days; their homes must be places of gentility and refinement; their children well dressed and educated; and they themselves must keep in touch with the best literature and in the front ranks of all forward movements. And this is demanded of men who in some cases are not paid as much as day laborers!

4th. Some of life's necessities have increased in price from 25 per cent to 200 per cent during the past few years. During that time many ministers have had no increase in their salaries. Recently the United States Government increased the wages of some two million railroad employees over 40 per cent.

5th. It is said that the average salary of ministers in ten leading denominations is less than $800 per annum. Surely if we expect young men to devote their lives to this high and noble calling it should be made more attractive from a financial point of view!

6th. In 1917, the Synod of Pennsylvania passed a resolution calling for an increase of at least 30 per cent in minister's salaries. The following year it passed a resolution urging a continuance of the effort "until a standard of decency and justice be attained, and our ministers made 'free from worldly cares and avocations' in accordance with the solemn obligations of the people in their call."

7th. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, South, took the following action in 1918: "Whereas, the salaries of our ministers are, as a rule, inadequate for their support, on account of the great increase in the cost of the necessities of life, bringing on a condition which threatens the increased efficiency and future supply of ministers, we recommend, That all the Presbyteries be directed at once to consider practical means of increasing the salaries of ministers; and that they be directed to supervise and further the adoption and putting into operation plans to remedy the acute situation facing the whole Church relative to the adequate support of the ministry."

A Word to the Sisters.

Most of us have seen in the daily press the notices of the drive in March to collect additional tons of clothing for the destitute millions of Europe. Some of us are wondering whether we have anything left worth giving. But there is a word I would like to say by way of suggestion. Even in my limited knowledge I could mention many homes with trunks of clothing laid away because of tender associations—it does not seem as if you could resolve to part with them, or have them put to use. Perhaps it was your soldier-boy who threw scornfully aside the civilian garb, to don his uniform. Few of these things will be wanted again; your boy has become a stalwart man, and outgrown them. Or perhaps he, in the great conflict has given his life, has laid aside all "these troublesome disguises which we wear," and these things seem doubly sacred to you.

Then there are homes from which mother, or father, or beloved child, are missing, and you have folded away each article of theirs as precious. But, dear friends, is it well? Is it as they would have it, who now walk in white, where no cold can chill, no want come? Or would they have you, for the sake of Him who has received them into heavenly mansions, add in their name these treasured garments to the offerings soon to be sent to the desolate of other lands? Soeur.

"Do not be content to move about in the mere shallows of Christianity. Plunge into its depths. A passion for true holiness is much needed today both by the clergy and the laity. To have as fully as is possible the mind that was in Christ Jesus should be the dominant ambition of every follower of our Lord."

The Sunday Meetings in Richmond.

prayer he reminds one of an excited boy who has a whole lot of interesting and exciting things to tell his father.

I have been speaking of the human side of these meetings, but it was manifest that the Spirit of God was present, too, and that He was working with power. It is too early to estimate what the permanent results of the Sunday meetings in Richmond will be, but the immediate results are very marked. Many have confessed Christ and the people of Richmond are talking religion in high places and in low places as they have probably never done before.

I could have devoted this paper so finding fault with Mr. Sunday's methods. They are open to criticism. But I cannot help remembering if Mr. Sunday were to conform to my ideals he would be just the kind of preacher that I am and that gives me pause. So I have preferred to dwell on those points which may be suggestive to other ministers. Do not understand that I would, for a moment advise any minister to imitate Mr. Sunday. That would be nothing short of a tragedy. I recall a paragraph in Phillips Brooks' Notes on Preaching, to the effect that if a minister wishes to imitate John the Baptist he might not have so much trouble in getting the camel's hair and locusts and honey. But the minister can learn much from Mr. Sunday without imitating him for a moment. He is preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ with power and the common people and all classes of people are hearing him gladly. God bless Mr. Sunday and all his workers.

A Supreme Example of Stewardship.

By Rev. Chas. E. Raynal, D.D.
(Entirely without collaboration).

Little Joe's Church, at Barium Springs, gave last year the sum of $1,022 to the benevolent causes.

This church is made up of the orphan children of the Synod of North Carolina. Its membership includes the teachers, matrons and president of the institution and a few friendly farmers. The wide demesne of our rich commonwealth holds no poorer or more humble community.

And yet with what proof of affection have they come with their abundance of joy and deep poverty to abound unto the riches of liberality. Considering the average income of these orphaned charges of the church and the salaries paid by the Synod to their monitors and guardians, have we not here a supreme example of stewardship? Of their own accord they have given according to their power—yea and beyond their power.

Before the liberality of the widow who cast into the treasury all her living when she paid to the Lord two mites, the world has stood for two thousand years with reverent and uncovered head. And is it not true that here again we have one of those sacred evidences of the courage of the poor? Put off the shoes from off thy feet as well as the hat from off thy head, for this is holy ground! The orphan and his destitute protector have cast into the treasury a thousand. The shorn lamb has leaped over a wall. The church mouse has triumphed gloriously.

The pastor of this church is a man so humble that he implicitly obeys his Lord's command not to let his left hand know what his right hand doeth. In sounding the trumpet before him in the synagogue I am quite conscious that I am committing sacrilege. In proclaiming his honor in the marketplace I know that I offend both him and the Lord who loves him. But may the wrath of the Lord rest only on me when all sounders of trumpets receive their reward, and may the Father who seeth in secret recompense him.

Dr. Ogden's Smile.

By Rev. A. M. Fraser, D.D.

The article by Rev. Dr. Dunbar H. Ogden in the "Presbyterian Standard" of February 26 entitled "Union a la Uncle Sam," has in it two references to myself by name. Each reference seems to contain an argument. So I think I may be permitted to reply:

1. He says, "Even Dr. Fraser stated that in his judgment 95 per cent of the Northern ministers are as sound as those of our own Assembly." In making the statement to which Dr. Ogden refers, I was merely quoting another and not speaking from personal knowledge. Dr. Chapman was my authority for that estimate, and I accepted him as good authority. But even so, Dr. Ogden's quotation of me was not complete, and a partial quotation may be as unfair as a misquotation. After quoting Dr. Chapman's estimate, I went on to make the claim that it is not the percentage of orthodoxy in a church that counts, but the relative influence of the two parties in the councils of the church. I expressed the opinion for myself that the treatment of unorthodoxy was radically different and characteristically different in the two churches.

2. He quotes me as saying that I had spent many hours over the paper sent by the last Assembly to the President. This is a misquotation. It was not intentional, of course, but nevertheless it produces a wrong impression. What I said was that the "committee" had spent several hours on that task. If the disposition of the case had been left to me individually, it would not have taken me many minutes to settle it in a way that Dr. McPheeters would not have objected to and that, doubtless, would have been satisfactory to a majority in our church. By the way, I did not say "many hours" but "several hours."

3. Touching the latter quotation (which shows that he had not read me carefully), he remarks: "Verily some of us must turn our faces while we smile." Now that "smile," at least, does not contain an argument. It does not prove anything whatever in the premises. For does not a smile, like a criticism, tell you as much about the author of it as the object of it? Does not Dr. Ogden's face wear a genial, sunshiny smile all the time? As the champion of brotherliness, of course he could not smile at his brethren any other than a respectful and kindly smile, even though he put the smile in a parenthesis and "turn his face" to smile it.

Federal Union.

By Rev. Thornton Whaling, D.D.

My honored friend and former student, Dr. Dunbar H. Ogden, has written an article admirable in its spirit and thought-provoking in its contents. He suggests, however, a plan which in all its essential features is naked consolidation or the vicious form of Organic Union. The objections to this plan in general are:

First, it is impracticable because the Church will divide before accepting it.

Second, it is a low kind of union, representing colloidal and molluscous combination.

Third, it would require surrenders which ought not to be made.

In addition, these further objections may be urged against Dr. Ogden's proposals:

First, it is provincial, confessedly written from the standpoint of Kentucky. Now, all Kentuckians are interesting, but some of them delightfully ignore the existence of the rest of the world; and though we love them yet we cannot accept their viewpoint as Catholic and Cosmical.

Second, the plan is confused and contradictory. It states that "each Synod would have the fullest authority over its local affairs." If this is meant, we would split the two Presbyterian Churches into fifty isolated fragments: if this is not meant we still have the supreme General Assembly, whose unlimited powers are not eagerly desired by our Church.

Third, his plan, while proposing "Union a la Uncle Sam," violates the analogy both historically and ecclesiastically. There can be no union like our National Union which does not involve the preceding existence of sovereign bodies, who freely decide to enter into a Federal Union by the creation of a Federal Congress or Assembly. The Synods were never sovereign any more than counties within states, and his plan, therefore, in no sense, fits "the providential, divine parable which expounds the method of union."

In closing I would say that brethren in the Church, both North and South, and in still other Churches, are beginning to see that the plan endorsed by two of our General Assemblies, means to create a Federal Assembly of large powers, doctrinal, legislative, administrative and judicial, and while an Assembly whose powers are limited in its constitution like that of the Federal Congress, still the grant of power sought is a large and generous one, the plan involves the union of all Presbyterian and Reformed Churches; the first step is the union of the U. S. and U. S. A. Churches, and it is hoped that a careful study of this plan now in preparation by committees of both the Northern and Southern Churches will lead both of those Churches to see that the proposed union is a real union, integrating into one body the too-long divided Churches.

Life calls us to a conflict in which all must engage. In this conflict the conditions of successful conquest are always easy. As some one has said: "We have but to toil awhile, endure awhile, believe always, and never turn back." If this is our attitude, and if our faith is fixed unflinchingly in Jesus Christ, we shall come off conquerors through Him that loved us and gave Himself for us.—Christian Observer.

News of the Week

Owing to absence of Democrats, Representative Weaver, of the Tenth District of North Carolina, was unseated, and J. P. Britt was given the seat in the House of Representatives.

The State of Kentucky is seeking to recover from the University of North Carolina something like $219,350 as an inheritance tax assessment against that portion of the Flagler estate that went to the University, though the law of Kentucky exempts educational institutions from liability for inheritance taxes.

A $30,000 fire occurred when the finishing and packing buildings and the office of the Lenoir (N. C.) Chair Manufacturing Company were destroyed. The buildings with their entire stock of 15 finished cars of chairs and $8,000 worth of leather were a complete loss.

A. W. McLean, Democratic National Committeeman from North Carolina, announces that he had recommended Miss Mary Owen Graham, formerly of Charlotte, now of Raleigh, for associate member of the committee from the Tar Heel State.

George H. Bellamy, the Duke of Brunswick, has been confirmed for marshal of the Eastern District. His nomination was sent in last week, rushed along, and put right through. He can now assume his new duties, and a fine marshal he will be.

The House passed the Price bill from the Senate for the establishment of a state system of cotton warehouses and the bill is awaiting third roll-call reading before being enrolled for ratification. It provides for a tax of 25 cents on every bale of cotton ginned in the state.

President Wilson told a delegation from the American Jewish Congress that he was persuaded that the Allied Nations, with the fullest concurrence of the American Government and people, were agreed that in Palestine should be laid the foundation of a Jewish commonwealth.

Secretary Lane's proposal to reclaim waste lands for the returning soldiers failed for lack of time in the Senate.

Congress adjourned, leaving many important bills in the air, owing to filibuster proceedings on the part of Republican Senators, who wished to force the President to call an extra session at once. The President remained firm and appealed to the people of the United States. He has gone to France and will not return till the Peace Conference is over. At the last minute the Senate weakened to the extent of passing the Liberty Loan measure.

COLUMBIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Rev. Thornton Whaling, D.D., president of Columbia Seminary, recently returned from a trip to Augusta, Atlanta and Cincinnati, O. In Augusta, Dr. Whaling addressed the soldiers at Camp Hancock. The following extracts from a letter of the camp religious work director to the religious work director of the Southeastern Department will illustrate Dr. Whaling's reception at the camp and the influence of his address: "President Whaling is the best speaker we have had in the camp since I have been here, and his lectures proved very effective. No one has reached the soldiers quite as effectively and intimately as he has."

In Atlanta, Dr. Whaling spoke to the Ministerial Union of that city and, from there went to Cincinnati to attend a conference on the matter of the federal union of the various

By a majority of 84 votes, Greensboro has decided to retain the commission form of government and rejected the managerial form. About 850 votes were cast. Men worked on both sides and not until the votes were counted could anyone be sure of the result. The regular city election will be held two months from now.

A detachment of 25 medical officers and 69 nurses who have served in base hospital No. 6, France, returned on the transport Abangarez. The detachment was commanded by Col. Addison Brenizer, of Charlotte, N. C., and was composed of men and women from Massachusetts and North Carolina.

The nomination of Thomas D. Warren for district attorney failed of confirmation. The President will give him recess appointment.

The House has adopted for North Carolina the Pharr-Matthews statewide road bill for securing the full federal aid in highway construction.

On the last Sunday in March clocks will be advanced one hour.

A tornado which struck Eufaula, Ala., late March 5 caused one known death and property damage estimated in first reports at a half million dollars. Nearly every residence in the city appears to have been damaged and a number of business houses were razed.

The Government has determined to retain control of the railroads, despite failure of Congress to provide funds for the railroad administration, and to have the roads finance themselves for the next few months through private loans on the open market or through advances by the war finance corporation.

Topic for Sunday, Mar. 23—The Art of Building Character: I Cor. 3:10-17.

What is the noblest art of all? Would you name some such art as painting or architecture? The noblest art is the building of character. It is supreme for great and definite reasons: the material is the human soul, the theme is likeness to the Divine Christ, and the finished work is designed for eternity. Statues and pictures will be annihilated by time; but the human character will last forever.

And the art of character building is within the reach of all. Every one of us should be absorbed in its mastery and application. Nothing on earth is more desirable than the power to be and do the things which make for character in the men we meet and touch. And how glorious is the faculty of drawing strength for ourselves from the opportunities and experiences of life! Every other art in comparison to this seems trivial unless it enjoys the right of making contribution to this.

We must build our character on the true foundation. Likewise, to apply our great art in the lives of others we must somehow induce them to build upon the same. Our Bible lesson tells us this foundation is Christ. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

The other day, as a pleasant surprise to that great old editor, Henry Watterson, the paper which he used to direct published a special edition in his honor. In this number many eminent men of the world, such as Lloyd George, Balfour, Pershing, Marshall, Daniels, and others paid their tribute to Mr. Watterson's greatness. It was greatness saluting greatness. At bottom it was a tribute to character.

The same week in which this surprise edition of Mr. Watterson's old paper greeted him in his mail in Florida, an article appeared from Mr. Watterson's pen in the Saturday Evening Post. In this Mr. Watterson stated what is really the secret of his powerful character. He made it plain he had long ago become rooted and grounded in Christ. He says: "I retain the spiritual essentials I learned then and there (a revival in the days of his boyhood). I never had a young man's period of disbelief. I found the Sermon on the Mount leading enough for my ethical guidance, in the life and death of the Man of Galilee inspiration enough to fulfill my heart's desire. I have found nothing in life to shake my childlike faith in the simple rescript of Christ and Him crucified."

To apply the art of character building in the lives of ourselves and others we must be watchful. A certain man in the South seems never to let an event or experience pass without scrutinizing it to see wherein it may be used to make him better. And he seems never to forget his mission and art in dealing with others. Year in and out, hour by hour, he speaks such words and makes such interpretations of life as will lead his associates into Christlike character. Is he not living a great life?

* * *

Why is good character so important?

How can we build on Christ?

What models are worth following?

The Prayer Meeting

TOPIC FOR WEEK BEGINNING MARCH 16:
THE WORD THAT STANDS FOREVER—Is. 40:1-8.

By Rev. C. D. Waller.

Is there anything more variant than words? A word may mean everything or nothing. Idle chatter, or falsehood, or the essence of truth. It depends upon who speaks the word. The prisoner listens with far different emotions to the idle vaporings of the thoughtless onlooker from the solemn words of jury or judge. Both speak words, but of infinitely differing significance and power.

For us, there is the greatest significance and interest in the fact that God has spoken words. God—the infinite Creator and Ruler and Judge. His character is the guarantee of the word He speaks. No fugitive word can He speak, no false word, no word of levity; else He would ipse facto cease to be God.

This Voice is heard in our passage: it speaks characteristic words which echo throughout the whole Bible, and whose tender and compelling accents men have and will hear in their hearts and consciences through the centuries.

First it is the voice of the lover wooing her whom he would persuade to be his bride. And this is a word which can never die, which pulses with the health of perpetual youth. It is the word of Jesus, who Himself is the word of God. "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, speak ye home to the heart of Jerusalem, and say to her that accomplished is her warfare, that forgiven is her iniquity; that she has received of Jehovah's hand double for all her sins."

This is the word of grace and love to God's people in captivity. Though they are far away, yet they are addressed

THE FURLOUGHED MISSIONARY.

Ah! the homeland fields are bonny, and the woodlands lush and green,

With the white birch and the fir-tree and the elm—they call their queen.

I love them all and know not which one I love the best,
For I'm at home on furlough and there's home within my breast!

I've longed to see the straight pine on the snowy mountain tops;

I've longed to see the canon, with its red and golden rocks:
But what I've wanted most of all was to see my mother's face,

And to sit with her at table in my old accustomed place.

And when I go to God's house and sit among the rest,
And sing, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee"—the tides surge in my breast.

For there's not a flag beneath the skies so glorious as our own;

There's not a country in the world like our dear, sweet home.

Ah, the Chinese streets are dirty, and the Chinese people queer;

But after all, they're just like us, and the Master holds them dear.

You ask if I am going back to face the guns again?
Like soldiers home on furlough, my only thought is when!

I'm going back to the trenches to get another shot.
I fight beside my Captain—if I fall it matters not.
So I'm going back to China, and over seas I'll fare,
My home is in the homeland, but my heart's out there.

THE CITIES OF REFUGE.

Golden Text—Matt. 5-7: "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy."

Joshua 20:1-9.

March 16, 1919.

The institutions of the Israelites were established under the Divine direction and were designed and adapted to promote their welfare. The separation of the tribe of Levi from their brethren, and the law of the tithe, were intended to provide ministers of religion and education for the nation and to make adequate provision for their support. The prohibited intercourse and intermarriage with the heathen were designed to shield them from idolatry and immoral practices. Their distinctions of meats to be eaten or shunned, while guarding them from the customs of idolaters, were in accord with sanitary laws and promotive of physical health. The appointment of cities of refuge in Canaan according to the command given to Moses, was a measure calculated to maintain social order and well-being.

I. The Persons These Cities Protected.

They did not shield from punishment all offenders or all manslayers. They were designed to protect all classes of citizens of Israel and all strangers sojourning with them. They did not protect the sinful murderer. If upon investigation it was found that a person had slain his neighbor deliberately from hatred or malice or any other evil motive, he was surrendered to the "avenger of blood" who was the nearest of kin, to pay the penalty of his crime. Thus life in society was protected from violence and murder. Thus God's law, "Whosoever sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," was upheld. But if upon examination it was found that a man had killed his fellow, unwittingly, unintentionally, by accident, and not from any evil motive, he was to be protected in the city of refuge, and not surrendered to death. The innocent manslayer was shielded from danger, the guilty murderer was consigned to death and society was delivered from needless bloodshed.

II. The Number and Location of These Cities.

To make them efficient for accomplishing the ends designed they must be sufficiently numerous and well placed. There were six of them, three on the east of Jordan and three on the west. Each of them was in the territory of a distinct tribe. West of Jordan, one was in Naphtali, one in Ephraim and one in Judah. East of the river, one was in Reuben, one in Gad and one in the half tribe of Manasseh. On both sides of the river there was one in the northern part of the land, one in the central and one in the south. This rendered them accessible to all the inhabitants. They had good roads leading to them and signboards pointing the way. They were all priestly and Levitical cities and therefore had intelligent elders, capable of knowing the law, doing justice and deciding doubtful cases. These arrangements were calculated to convict and punish the guilty, to safeguard the innocent, and to deliver social life from manifold evils inflicted by human passion.

III. The Sojourn of the Manslayer in the City.

It was an important practical question to a man and his family, if one had slain his fellow and had reached a city of refuge, how long should he stay there. This matter is not left in doubt. If when his case is submitted to the elders, he does not stay longer than is required to judge his offense; if it is decided that he is a murderer he is immediately given up to meet the award of his deed. If he is declared to be an innocent manslayer, he is not surrendered for punishment at all, but remains in the city in perfect safety. The avenger of blood can't reach him, and he is protected by Divine decree, power and providence. If it be asked how long he must abide in the refuge, separated from his home, family and friends, the Divine reply is, until "the death of the high priest." He has unintentionally inflicted sorrow and loss upon the slain man's house and aroused resentful feelings. Time must be given to heal sorrows, wounds, to quiet angry passions and to enable the slayer to consider the sacredness of human life and to be more cautious as to acts that may cause its loss. As the death of the high priest was determined by Jehovah, He alone fixed the time for the manslayer who was innocent to abide in the city.

IV. The Wisdom and Mercy of the Cities of Refuge.

The appointment of these cities and all the regulations connected with them manifest wisdom. It was wise to have righteous laws for securing justice, protecting the innocent, punishing the guilty, preventing bloodshed and maintaining social order. It revealed wisdom to have the agencies for dealing with different cases, securing delay and deliberation when evil passions had been excited, and for attaining a righteous verdict for every accused person. It showed wisdom so to select the cities of refuge as to make them easily accessible to all persons needing their provisions. Manifesting wisdom, the cities of refuge and the directions concerning them displayed mercy. It showed mercy to the guilty man to give him a fair trial and a deliberate, impartial verdict. It showed mercy to the innocent persons to vindicate his character and to assure him of safety and protection. The measures adopted bestowed mercy upon society by diminishing bloodshed and honoring law and order. Revealing Jehovah's wisdom and mercy, the cities of refuge fostered these in Israel.

Prayer Meeting.

as already in the holy city; the set period of exile is past; the fatal sins that excited the divine anger are forgiven; and now blessings are to be heaped upon her out of the infinite treasury of God's heart and hand. Now the fact of transcendent moment is this: this is "The Word That Stands Forever." It is a changeless God that speaks. This message issues from his heart and mouth today. It is a Gospel for a world of sinners. The first lesson of the captivity is that sin must and will be punished; but the next lesson is expressed in our passage—a Voice of grace and love. These two voices—one of the tragedy of sin, the other of the unchanging Heart—are the selfsame Voice, no contradiction.

But our passage has yet another unchanging Word.

Perhaps the exiles, like ourselves, are too ready to listen to the word of grace, to comfort our hearts, and to let things take their old course. But God's unchanging Word is more than a message of grace; it is word of preparedness, of ceaseless service, of unbroken devotion to the Lover and Benefactor. "Make straight in the desert a highway for our God." We must hear both voices; we must listen to the wooing voice, and we must obey the call to service. Thus the hidden relation of the soul with God is made fruitful, and our faith is vindicated as the glory of Jehovah is vindicated; for "all flesh together shall see it; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken."

The last four years have given us another modern proof. Men out of deep convictions appealed to the sword; and the most powerful and ruthless militarism known to history has been beaten and thwarted. But the exiles looked around in vain for a Moses to lead them back to Jerusalem. A voice said, "Cry." "What shall I cry?" "All flesh is grass, all its glory is like a field flower. The grass withers, the flower fades; because (or when) the breath of God blows upon it. Surely the people is grass. The grass withers, the flower fades, but the word of our God shall stand forever." It was this conviction that was the confidence and strength of Israel, that brought back the captivity, that gave hope and heart, that sustained them on the desert way to Zion; and this is also our inspiration and our assurance of hope. Heaven and earth shall pass, but the word of Jehovah endureth forever.

Devotional

INTERCESSION AN ELEMENT IN ALL TRUE PRAYER.

A Good Man's Prayer.

The relation between all men and God, as taught by our Lord, places intercession in the very heart of prayer. When the disciples asked Him how to pray He said: "When ye pray, say, Our Father." That is, make your prayer at the very outstart include all men and, by implication, all needs.

Thinking on these words, a certain good man went alone to pray. Conscious of many personal needs, he rejoiced that a moment of respite had come when he could talk to his Father, who had assured him that even the hairs of his head were numbered, and tell all his needs to God, who had promised to supply them all. He comforted himself that he, an individual unworthy as he knew himself to be, could come undaunted into the very audience chamber of God and tell Him even imperfectly all his wants. Having sympathy with all men, today he felt his own needs insistent, exclusive. He would pray for himself.

An Intrusion.

His lips framed the word, "Father," when he heard at his side a footfall, and, turning, saw kneeling beside him a soldier from the battlefield of France, wounded unto death, who said: "Take me into your prayer." Once more, with doubled meaning, he began, "Father," and once more interrupted. He heard, in a strange tongue, which, nevertheless he understood, the voice of a wretched man from darkest Africa, saying, "Take me in." And they kept coming from every continent, from the islands of the sea, from prisons and palaces, hospitals and asylums, all sorts and conditions of men, they came like doves to their windows, a great multitude whom no man could number, and they said, "Take me in." Then the good man heard again the words of Jesus, "When ye pray, say, Our Father," and knew that even as no man liveth or dieth to himself, so no man can pray for himself alone.

A Changed Prayer.

Once more he opened his lips to pray, but the words he had thought to utter strangely eluded him. A kind of aphasia laid hold upon him. Many of the needs which had seemed to him most insistent were lost, submerged in a new world consciousness and sense of human brotherhood. And, strangest of all, while part of his purposed prayer had sunk into oblivion, other parts stood out with distinct and startling clearness. He had not meant to be forgetful of others, but now he saw, as with new understanding he said "Our Father," that he had been thinking too much of himself alone, unmindful that many of his petitions had quietly assumed for himself a favored relation with God and could not be granted except through the deprivation or active suffering of others. Then he knew the meaning of the words, "Ye ask and receive not because ye ask amiss," and began to understand the brotherhood of man as he whispered "Our Father."

Jesus and Intercession.

The life and teachings of Jesus give intercession a central place. He is the great Intercessor, who gave His life for the world. He lived a crowded life. Few were the moments when He could be alone. If He sought respite from the crowds on the mountain side or in the desert the multitudes pursued Him even there. He could not escape from men because He is the Son of man—of the very substance of humanity, friend and brother of all men. How, then, can prayer in His name be narrow, merely personal, selfish, less than universal?

Prayers of Jesus.

The recorded prayers of Jesus are models of intercession. He prays for Himself, "Father, glorify thou me," but the glory which He asks is to be shared by those who are redeemed through Him. He and they are to be glorified together. Without them He asks nothing for Himself. The men about His cross spoke more truly than they knew when they said, "He saved others, Himself He cannot save." It was impossible for Him, being what He was, to save Himself alone. Therefore Gethsemane, Calvary and the tomb. The world was ever in His thought.—Rev. Chas. W. McCormick, in N. Y. Advocate.

THE PARABLES OF SAFED THE SAGE.

The Parable of the Doughnut.

Now I entered the Kitchen, and would have passed through. But Keturah was there; so I waited: and she cast Divers Things into a Great Bowl, and did stir them with a Great Spoon.

And I asked her, saying, What hast thou in the Bowl? And she said, Sugar and Spice, and all that's nice.

And I said, That is what God used when He made thee.

And she took the Dough out of the Bowl, when she had stirred it, and she rolled it with a Rolling-Pin; and she cut it into round cakes. And in the midst of every several cake was there an Hole. And a great Caldron hung above the Fire, and there was Fat therein and it boiled furiously.

And Keturah took the round Cakes of Dough, and cast them into the Caldron; and she poked them with a Fork, and she turned them, and when they came forth, behold I knew then what they were. And the smell of them was inviting, and the appearance of them was exceeding good. And Keturah gave me one of the Doughnuts, and Believe Me, they were Some Doughnuts.

And I said, To what purpose is the Hole? If the Doughnut be so good with a part Punched Out, how much better had it been if the Hole also had been Doughnut!

And Keturah answered and said, Thou speakest as a Foolish Man, who is never content with the goodness that is, but always complaineth against God for the lack of the Goodness which he thinketh is not. If there were no Hole in the Doughnut, then were it like unto Ephraim, a cake not turned. For, though the Cake were Fried till the Edges thereof were burnt and hard as thy Philosopher's Stone, yet would there be uncooked Dough in the middle. Yet, thou shouldst then break thy teeth on the outer rim of every Several Doughnut, and the middle part thereof would be Raw Dough.

And I meditated much on what Keturah had told me. And I considered the Empty Spaces in Human life; and the Desolation of its Vacancies; and how men's hearts break over its Blank Interstices. And I pondered in my soul whether God doth not know that save for these our lives would be like unto Ephraim.

And I spake of these things to Keturah, and she said, My lord, I know not the secret of these mysteries. Yet, mine own heart acheth over some of the Empty Places. But say to the sons of men that he who useth not the good things which he hath but complaineth against his God for those he lacketh, is like unto a man who rejecteth a Doughnut because he knoweth not the Mystery of the Hole.—Congregationalist.

So he died for his faith. That is fine—

More than most of us do.

But, stay! can you add to that line

That he lived for it too?

It is easy to die. Men have died

For a wish or a whim—

For bravado or passion or pride.

Was it harder for him?

But to live; every day to live out

All the truth that he dreamt,

While his friends met his conduct with doubt,

And the world with contempt—

Was it thus that he plodded ahead,

Never turning aside?

Then we'll talk of the life that he led—

Never mind how he died.

PERSONAL.

Rev. T. M. McConnell, D.D., has changed his address temporarily from Greensboro, N. C., to 45 Washington St., Atlanta, Ga. Dr. McConnell will supply the pulpit of Central Church until the return from France of its pastor-elect, Chaplain Ben R. Lacy.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The Presbytery of Pee Dee will meet in Marion, S. C., April 15, 1919, at 11 a. m. A. H. McArn, S. C.

Westminster Church, Charleston, is being supplied temporarily by Rev. C. R. Hyde, D.D., of Chattanooga, Tenn.

Andrews—The congregation of the Andrews Presbyterian Church gave a "pounding" Saturday evening to their new pastor, Rev. D. M. Clark. Mr. Clark has moved his family into the Avant house, near the church. There is no manse here, as this is the first time this church has had a resident pastor, but the congregation expects to build one in the near future.

Clinton—The executive committee of the Presbyterian College of South Carolina met Monday afternoon, March 3. President Douglas announced to the committee that the college had just received two substantial gifts, one of $10,000 from Mrs. John S. Kennedy, of New York, and one of $2,500 from Mrs. Cyrus H. McCormick, of Chicago.

President Douglas is trying to raise $150,000 for the college, and has in sight about $100,000. He has been asked by the National Y. M. C. A. committee to go overseas to engage in religious work, and has the matter under consideration.

Rock Hill—The following paper was adopted by Mr. S. R. Spence's class of 15-year-old boys in the Sabbath School of the Oakland Avenue Church of Rock Hill, S. C., about a year ago:

"We, the undersigned, hereby covenant and agree to contribute as a tithe one-tenth of our earnings and income to religious and benevolent causes. We are prompted to take this obligation because we believe this to be the practical Christian example as taught us in the Holy Scriptures.

"May the God of Heaven help us, and may the love of Jesus Christ sustain us and keep us steadfast in our purpose.

"Herbert Dunlap, Jr., Edward Fewell, Jr., William J. Cherry, Jr., Bob. Sapp, John Roddey, Jos. Chambers."

Charleston—Sunday, March 1, was a notable day in the North Charleston Sunday School, this being its fourth anniversary. This Sunday School was organized on March 1, 1915, by Robert C. Leiby, who was superintendent for over 10 years at the First Presbyterian Church Sunday School. Seeing that there was needed a Sunday School at North Charleston, he resigned and has given his whole time to the work at North Charleston. The work has been greatly blessed and the Sunday School has grown in numbers and influence. At the anniversary meeting a delightful program of recitations and music was carried out.

Charleston—After the morning service at the Second Presbyterian Church last Sunday morning Rev. Dr. Melton Clark asked the men of the congregation to remain for a few minutes as he had a matter to bring before them. Accordingly most of the men remained and began making preparations for the returning men from the army and navy, and for the work of the church. A committee was appointed to nominate officers. The members of the committee are Messrs. John W. Robson, Harry L. Thames, Sr., George A. Lunz and Dr. Melton Clark. There will be another meeting of the men of the church next Sunday morning after the morning service.

Columbia—At the March meeting of the Women's Auxiliary of the First Presbyterian Church the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. George A. Wauchope; first vice-president, Mrs. C. P. Robinson; second vice-president, Mrs. C. C. Wilson; third vice-president, Mrs. R. H. Macdonald; recording secretary, Mrs. R. A. Lancaster; corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. M. Rucker; treasurer, Mrs. J. H. Dudley. The chairmen of the six departments through which the auxiliary works were elected as follows: Mrs. B. M. English, Mrs. J. W. Simpson, Mrs. Hugh MacGlashan, Mrs. J. A. Wilson, Mrs. Henry E. Gooding and Mrs. George W. Waring. Four others are to be chosen from the congregation.

Under the leadership of Mrs. O. Y. Owings the Women's Auxiliary is completing a year of great usefulness, and the prospects for the coming year are even brighter. The Westminster Society, a kindred organization, has become affiliated with the Women's Auxiliary as a co-operating chapter.

Fort Hill Church—Clemson College—At a congregational meeting held February 9 the following additional officers were chosen: Mr. M. E. Bradley, elder; Mr. J. H. McHugh, Mr. L. I. McHugh and D. H. Henry, deacons. These brethren having accepted their respective offices, were duly ordained and installed March 2. There have been several names added to our membership roll during the past few months. There is a total of 130 Presbyterian young men in the college at present, all of whom except about 15 are communicants. The entire number with few exceptions are from the homes of this Synod, and most of them will return to build their own homes within the bounds of their respective State and aid the life of our church in their communities. These facts show the vital importance to our Synod of the work here, and we sincerely hope will bring a ready response to the appeal our church is sending out to remember the S.

C. Synod for aid in removing our heavy indebtedness, which was incurred through an effort by this church to provide space for seating the young men and for giving them an opportunity to worship in the church of their parents. A rule of the college requires attendance at worship every Sunday morning, but there is barely room for all who come.

W. E. D.

Monaghan Presbyterian Church—On March 2, 1919, at 4 p. m., Monaghan Presbyterian Church was opened to the public for worship. Monaghan is a prosperous mill village near Greenville, S. C. The day was inclement, but the house of worship was filled with people who remained through the services that lasted two hours. Mr. J. T. Woodside, of the First Presbyterian Church, Greenville; Mr. E. G. Mallard, Sr., of the Second; Mr. S. C. Templeton, of the Third; Mr. J. C. McCall, of the Fourth, and Mr. A. B. Reid, of Monaghan Church, constituted the building committee. The Victor-Monaghan Company donated the lot that is 80 feet front and 140 back, and subscribed $800 towards the erection of the house, that cost $3,350.97. There is a debt of $400 on the property. Representatives from all four of the churches in Greenville were present, and Rev. J. F. Brown, the minister, prepared an interesting program. A flourishing Sunday School has been maintained for years. Three new members were added by letter and five by profession of faith. The pastors of the Methodist and Baptist churches were present and took part in the services. The music was good and the platform was tastefully decorated. The house of worship has been completed despite war conditions, and is a credit to the Presbyterians and to the mill village. We are grateful to the Home Mission Committee of Enoree Presbytery and to the four churches of Greenville for their encouragement and contributions.

Charleston—"Friendship" was the subject of a splendid address delivered at the Artillery hall by Rev. Melton Clark, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, under the auspices of the War Camp Community Service Red Circle Club. This service was the initial service under the auspices of the Red Circle Club.

Before beginning his address Dr. Clark read a scripture from the Bible and offered a handsome pocket Testament to any member in the congregation who would tell from what book the scripture was taken. After a few minutes of thinking, a young sailor replied "St. John," which was correct and he received the Testament. The scripture read was from St. John, 15th chapter and 15th verse, "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you."

In his address, Dr. Clark spoke of the true and mutual friendship which existed among the many enlisted men and stated that a friend was a person who knew all about you and still liked you. Whenever a person knows all your faults, said the speaker, and still loves you, then he is a true friend and so it is with our Saviour who knows all about us and still loves us.

Greenville—First Church—T. W. Sloan, D.D., pastor. Despite the unfavorable conditions caused by the influenza epidemic and other obstacles, the work of the church has gone steadily forward, never probably in its history having been so well organized. There is a place in the Bible School for every member of the church, including organized Baraca, Philathea and Women's classes. The work of the young people is carried on effectively through the Senior, Intermediate and Junior Endeavor Societies, and the women's work through the Auxiliary and Pastor's Aid. The efficiency of much of this work has been increased by the effort of Mrs. E. L. Hughes, who has been serving as church secretary for the past year.

Recently the membership of the session has been increased with the election of three elders, Messrs. L. L. Barr, Avery Patton and Geo. T. Bryan. Five new members have been added to the deacons' board, namely, Messrs. H. T. Mills, F. K. Spratt, H. C. Mims, C. P. Campbell and W. K. Livingstone, giving the church a session of 18 members, and a deacons' board of 22.

A magnificent baptismal font has just been placed in the auditorium of the church. It is the gift of Mrs. J. E. Beattie, of this city, in memory of her aunt, Mrs. Mary Caroline Speer, who died in 1889. Mrs. Speer was one of the charter members of the First Church, and many of the older members now, remember her as a woman of exceptional piety, devotion and faithfulness.

For the past 18 months the work for the soldiers of Camp Sevier has been carried on uninterruptedly. Because of the location and equipment of this church, it has probably been used by the men more than any other place in Greenville. The camp pastor, Rev. J. R. Cunningham, has for the past year made our church the basis and channel of his activities in the city. Supper has been served the soldiers free of charge every Saturday and Sunday evening. This service is rendered by the different circles of the Auxiliary and the Pastor's Aid Societies. The young people of the church have been untiring in their efforts to make the Saturday evening socials happy and attractive occasions for the soldiers. Programs of readings, music and games are always planned and seem to be much enjoyed. Besides the large rest and writing room kept open all the time for the enlisted men, the front parlor of the church was equipped for the officers. Writing tables, stationery, newest magazines, piano and music and comfortable rockers made it attractive and serviceable.

The church is looking forward to and planning for the return of the 70 men it has sent into the service. Already a few of them are back, and others will be coming soon. The men's work is being organized with these returning soldiers in mind, and a strong effort will be made to enlist them in the activities of the church. A Member.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Presbytery of Wilmington will meet in regular stated session in the First Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, N. C., Tuesday, April 8, 1919, at 3 p. m.

W. P. M. Currie, S. C.

Charlotte—Rev. John E. Wool preached at Pegram Street Church, Charlotte, N. C., on Sunday, March 2, at which time four deacons were ordained and installed, namely: Messrs. A. T. Alexander, R. E. Williams, V. E. Threat and Audry Alexander.

Union—The many friends of Mrs. George A. Sparrow will be delighted to learn that she is steadily improving after a very severe and serious siege of pneumonia. Your assistant pastor considered it a very pleasant privilege to be able to supply the preparatory communion services for Mr. Sparrow, at the Union Church, the condition of Mrs. Sparrow demanding his constant attendance at the bedside.—"Our Church Record."

Lumber Bridge—A splendid meeting has just closed at Lumber Bridge Church, Rev. A. W. Crawford, Superintendent of Home Missions, doing all the preaching. There were 24 additions to the Presbyterian Church, 21 on profession, two on restatement of their faith in Christ, and one by letter. A collection of $77 was taken for Synodical Home Missions. One striking thing about the collection was the large number taking part, 104 envelopes having been returned. J. K. Hall.

Davidson—The students were privileged to hear a fine and stirring missionary address by Dr. Charles H. Pratt, formerly of the Korean mission and now connected with the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Among other interesting statements he told his young auditors that twenty thousand men of all professions were needed in foreign fields.

At night he spoke in behalf of the three and a half million drive for benevolences upon which the church will enter soon. This address of Dr. Pratt in the Davidson Church was the fifth talk of the day for him—another evidence of the fact of his abounding zeal in the work of the church.

Greenville—On March 2, at the Presbyterian Church, the Sunday School hour was given to a missionary program which consisted of a play, "The Chinese Hospital," presented by the Presbyterian girls who attend East Carolina Teachers' Training School. The purpose of this play was not for entertainment, but to show the necessity for American Christian workers in the foreign field. It was given in an impressive manner and the memory of the scenes will linger long in the minds of the people. Lillian Gardner.

Pageland Group—This group, consisting of Beulah, Salem and Pageland Churches, has recently purchased a commodious nine-room manse for $1,600, located in the town of Pageland, near the Presbyterian Church. This purchase insures the permanence of the group and makes it one of the most attractive fields in Union County Presbyterianism. Pageland is beautifully situated on an elevation in the deep white sand with good high schools and railroad facilities, making it an ideal place for the minister and his family to live. Rev. R. S. Latimer is the pastor of this group.

R. J. McIlwain.

Beulah—This congregation had the misfortune to lose its house of worship recently by fire. The building was erected some 25 years ago and was of the best material and workmanship. Fortunately, Mr. S. E. Belk, the senior elder and founder of the church, is still an active man, though a Civil War veteran, and he with other substantial members, make rebuilding a certainty. During the quarter century of the life of this church more than 100 persons have been received into its membership in purely virgin soil for our church. This congregation recently decided to put on the every member canvass, thus putting it in line with the Assembly's progressive plan. R. J. McIlwain.

Synodical Work—Rev. William Black, Evangelist of the Synod, closed a meeting at Elizabethtown, February 23. Twenty-five persons signified their acceptance of Christ. Two united with the church, one by letter. Six persons promised to establish family worship and about seventy-five to read the Bible and pray daily. $94.12 was contributed for the Synod's mission work.

This church has been without a pastor for more than a year. While the meeting was being held a congregational meeting was held and steps were taken to call a pastor.

At the time of this writing Mr. Black is at Laurinburg. A. W. C.

Mrs. S. A. Robinson, Gastonia.

Sec'y of Synodical Auxiliaries of N. C.

Concord Presbytery is hereby called to convene in special meeting in the Concord First Church, on Tuesday, March 18, at 1:30 p. m., for the transaction of the following business, if the way be clear, viz:

1. To accept the resignation of Rev. J. E. Robinson as pastor of the Bethpage Church in order that he may become evangelist of Yadkin County.

2. To receive Rev. W. C. Wauchope, and take such action as may be required in order to his becoming pastor of Cannonville and Patterson Mill churches.

J. M. Clark, Moderator.

Washington—Our church has sustained a great loss in the death of Ruling Elder C. M. Brown, which occurred March 3. For forty years he was a faithful and honored elder of this church, clerk of the session, and servant of the Presbytery and Synod. He was a member of the Home Mission Committee of Albemarle Presbytery, a trustee of Peace Institute, and of Union Seminary, and twice a commissioner to the General Assembly. He loved his church, was deeply interested in all that pertained to the prosperity of our Zion, and gladly gave his time, service and means to advance her interests. His place will be hard to fill.

We are expecting to have Rev. R. G. McLees, of Chatham, Va., with us in a ten days' meeting the last of this month, and are hoping and praying for a great spiritual blessing and a harvest of souls. H. B. S.

Wallace—An all-day group conference on Christian Stewardship was held in the Wallace Presbyterian Church, February 27. There were present five ministers and twenty-nine church officers representing nine churches. Rev. P. L. Clark presided and Rev. D. T. Caldwell, Presbyterian campaign manager, led the discussion. Addresses were made on the following subjects: The Assembly's Progressive Program, by Rev. D. T. Caldwell; The Duty of Regular, Systematic and Cheerful Giving, by Rev. W. M. Baker; The Obligation of Christian Stewardship, by Rev. L. E. Wells; The Church Paper in the Home, by Ruling Elder J. H. Moore; The Every Member Canvass, Why?, Hon. Geo. R. Ward. After these addresses there was a general and free discussion of the advantages and difficulties of the Every Member Canvass, followed by an exemplary canvass conducted by Messrs. Baker and Caldwell. The addresses were entertaining and instructive, but better than that, we believe they will move to action, for the people seemed to hear gladly and the speakers spoke with conviction.

Lumberton—For the last few months our church and Sunday School have been much disturbed by the "flu." On two occasions we have been quarantined. No services for weeks.

Now the boys are coming home we feel especially thankful, for out of the 27 young men that went in response to their country's call, not one from this church was killed though some of them were in the fiercest of the conflict.

Our pastor has been giving us some fine sermons recently. One from the "Five Wise and Five Foolish Virgins" and one from the use of the talents.

Our pastor, Dr. Moorehouse, received a severe "pounding" one night last week, but heavy as it was, his head and heart seem to be all right yet.

The progressive drive for larger benevolence, and a general awakening of the entire sleepy, indifferent church, will be started in this part of Fayetteville Presbytery next week. May the people throughout the entire Synod see that the causes get more of the money God has given us mortals.

M. G. McKenzie.

Lumberton—Dr. G. E. Morehouse, pastor. Congregational Visitation: I have read much and heard much about pastoral visitation and its helpfulness to pastor and people, but at this time I would like to say a word of the great good that may be accomplished by congregational visitation. We have enjoyed several such, and they have warmed our hearts and done us good, and at the same time have united the pastor and people. There are some compensations in the ministry which are of greater value, and overshadow all the things which depress. It is our good fortune to labor among a people who are constantly trying to fulfill that part of the covenant contained in the call to the minister: "Do you engage to continue to him, while he is your pastor, that competent worldly maintenance which you have promised, and to furnish him with whatever you may see needful for the honor of religion, and for his comfort among you." A large crowd of this congregation, which filled the manse, came in a body on a recent Thursday evening; all of them, old and young, heavy laden with good things such as cheer the heart and bring comfort to the home in these days of high prices. And not only did they bring good things for the pantry, but also certain engraved certificates which are exchangeable at banks and stores for things needful. And in addition to these things and of equal value and greater comfort they brought hearty good wishes, warm handclasps and words of cheer. It does a minister good when his people thus come to spend the evening and as they clasp his hand say: "We just wanted to come and tell you that we love you."

This congregation has done a splendid work during the present pastorate; there has been perfect harmony in the church, and the pastor and his family have received many kindnesses and marks of appreciation not only by such congregational visitations as mentioned, but from many of the individual members of the congregation, who have by their kindness cheered and helped all the occupants of the manse.

It is a great comfort to labor with such a loyal congregation. G. E. M.

Wilmington—First Church—From the First Church Bulletin we clip the following:

Last Sunday marked the completion of eighteen years of service by Dr. Wells as pastor of this church.

On February 23, 1901, he and his family arrived in Wilmington. On last Thursday evening the elders and deacons of the church joined with him in the celebration of the anniversary.

During the course of the evening a number of inspiring talks were made by some of the church officers. Mr. C. W. Worth spoke on "Looking Backward." Mr. W. M. Cumming spoke on "Our Duty to the World." Dr. J. G. Murphy discussed "Our Mission Duty at Home." Our Senior Elder, Mr. B. F. Hall, spoke on "Soul Winning." Col. Walker Taylor discussed "Our Duty to Newcomers to Our City." Mr. R. M. Sheppard, chairman of the board of deacons, spoke on "Our Coming Every Member Canvass." Mr. M. S. Willard, chairman of our music committee, had as his subject, "Our Ideals as to Music." Dr. J. I. Campbell discussed "Our Church Building."

These talks were all helpful and inspiring.

At the close Dr. Wells spoke on "Looking Forward," telling something of the things yet to be achieved.

It may be of interest to the congregation to give a review of something of what the church has accomplished during these eighteen years of the present pastorate.

The figures, as far as the last year is concerned, are in part approximate.

There have been 1331 additions to the church during that time.

From 360 members in this church and 59 members at Emmanuel, the work has grown until there are now 737 members in this church and about 750 in the churches that have grown out of the work of this church. In some of these, however, St. Andrews Church has done much toward their development.

The two Sunday Schools at the beginning of the pastorate reported 286 members. Last year the schools that have grown out of the work of this church reported 1,425 members.

The church during these eighteen years has given $205,545 to Foreign Missions. It has given $161,241 to Home Missions. It has given $78,000 to the educational work of the church. It has given $86,068 to other phases of the benevolences of the church. And it has spent $162,932 on its own local and congregational expenses.

It will thus be seen that it has given $529,950 to the benevolent work of the church, that is work for others, while spending only $162,932 on itself.

APPALACHIA.

Concord, Tenn.—Rev. G. W. Belk, of North Carolina, General Assembly Evangelist, is conducting a meeting this week at Cedar Springs Church, assisting the pastor, Rev. J. C. Cowan. The attendance is good and the interest growing.

The Presbytery of Asheville will meet in Montreat Church, in Montreat, N. C., on the 22nd day of April, 1919, at 8 p. m. Send Presbyterial reports to Canton, N. C., by April 1. R. J. Hunter, S. C.

 GEORGIA.

Moultrie—First Church—Rev. J. B. Meacham, pastor, has a Men's Bible Class taught by the pastor that is doing some practical social work. It was the first of the contributors to pay its subscription of $50 to the Moultrie Chamber of Commerce.

The monthly report of the class which was read Sunday morning showed some interesting figures. The total attendance for February was 182, or an average of 45 each Sunday during the month. The class has a membership of 83 and for several weeks has been growing at the rate of 10 a Sunday.

Every man in Moultrie and the surrounding country with no connection with other schools is being solicited for membership.

They further propose to bring together the man without a job and the job without a man.

 KENTUCKY.

Louisville—During the leave of absence that the congregation have granted their pastor, Dr. Hawes, the pulpit of the Highland Church will be supplied by Dr. J. Gray McAllister.

Louisville—The Stuart Robinson Memorial Church has suffered a great loss in the death of one of its elders and most loyal members, Gen. Bennett H. Young. For more than 50 years General Young was the superintendent of the afternoon Sunday School.

Bowling Green—First Presbyterian Church—Of the 58 boys whose names are on the service flag of the First Church, 18 have returned from the service and are at home again. The pastor of the church, Rev. R. L. Bell, D.D., invited these returned soldier boys, representing all forms of service, to the manse for dinner on Friday evening, and after a most delightful evening in which many amusing incidents and other experiences were told, the boys decided to organize a Soldier's and Sailors' Club, with club room in the church, and with a Bible class and entertainment features in connection with the club. Colonel McCormick (Dr. A. T. McCormick, of the State Board of Health), just honorably discharged and back from Panama, is very much interested in the boys, and has offered to help in every and any way. Judge McKensie Moss made a stirring speech. Robert E. Bell, the son of the pastor, formerly with 492d Aero Squadron, which spent 16 months in active service in France, was also with the boys, and told many incidents of his branch of service. The Soldiers' and Sailors' Club will welcome all other returning soldiers and tie them to the club and to the Sunday School and church also. The pastor was made happy and glad by this happy and splendid conclusion to a most delightful and enjoyable evening.—Christian Observer.

 LOUISIANA.

Pascagoula—Rev. W. P. Chalmers was recently installed as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of this city. Dr. Watt, of Moss Point, preached a most excellent sermon and delivered the charge to the pastor. Mr. McIntosh, of Moss Point, delivered the charge to the congregation. It was an interesting and instructive service. Special music was rendered. Our people are charmed with our new pastor, who is an ideal preacher in every sense of the word. He preaches the plain Gospel, telling the old, old story in a most attractive manner. There is no doubt that our church will prosper under the leadership of such a man. In fact, new life in the church is very evident already, and the attendance is increasing. We thank God and take courage. The manse has been overhauled and many other improvements made.—A Member, in Christian Observer.

 VIRGINIA.

Lexington—Beginning Sunday morning, February 23, and ending Thursday night, February 27, this church had 14 services, conducted by one of the most original and also one of the most consecrated men we had ever listened to—Rev. Dr. John Robertson, a native Scotchman who has spent many years in America. He has been the pastor of large churches in Glasgow and in London, his Glasgow church growing under his ministry in three years from 105 to 3,000. He has seen service at the hottest front of the British lines, where hundreds of men whom he had baptized or received into his church were killed. The originality of his reading the scripture and of his method of presenting the truth held the close and reverent attention of the large audiences that heard him. For the last four days he conducted a half-hour prayer meeting from 9:30 to 10; then at 4 p. m. he held a service lasting an hour; and a longer service at night. A striking feature was the emphasis he laid upon reading the Old Testament. He carried away with him the grateful appreciation of this church and community; and we hope he left a deep spiritual blessing in many hearts.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond—The announcement of the death of Rev. Dr. A. F. Schauffler, of New York, has brought to our community a sense of keen personal bereavement. On two occasions he had delivered series of special lectures in the seminary. No visitor to the institution ever more completely captivated our students and people. They not only delighted in him as a lecturer, but they loved him personally, and they adopted him as their own. In many of the homes about the campus he was like a member of the family. In recognition of his pre-eminence in the Sunday School world and the great impulse that he gave to this line of work in the seminary the board of trustees has given his name to the model Sunday School laboratory building soon to be erected on our campus—Schauffler Hall. Many of our people throughout the church who did not have the pleasure of hearing his James Sprunt lectures have learned to know him through the volume in which they were published, 'God's Book and God's Boy,' the last of a number of valuable works that he wrote on Bible Study and Sunday School Work. He was for many years a most active member of the International Lesson Committee and for a while its chairman. For 15 years he was superintendent of the New York City Mission and Tract Society and then for 16 years its president.

Dr. Schauffler was born in Constantinople, the son of a missionary. He was educated at Williams College and at Union and Andover Theological Seminaries. His first pastorate was at Brookfield, Mass., and his second at Olivet Chapel, New York City. From this charge he branched out into the large general activities in connection with which he became known throughout the Christian world.

Dr. Schauffler was 74 years old, but he was a man with whom we at the seminary could never associate the idea of old age. He was active to the last and died in the harness, doubtless according to his own wish. The call came to him on February 18. The funeral at Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church was attended by a vast congregation. We are thankful to have the name of such a servant of God forever associated with our seminary in connection with the special work for the young which he loved.

The truth which another man has won from nature or from life is not our truth until we have lived it. Only that becomes real or helpful to any man which has cost the sweat of his brow, the effort of his brain, or the anguish of his soul. He who would be wise must daily earn his wisdom.—David Starr Jordan.

We mourn under some appointment of life, thinking God is punishing us in it for our sins. As we pray to Him, we learn that we are not being punished, but chastened. We ask that God's anger may be taken away and we forgiven; we see that we are already forgiven, and that we thought was anger was only the fidelity of love.—MacKenna.

Story and Incident

The Story of a Cradle Roll.

THREE babies were born in the same town upon the same day, one in the big house on the avenue, one in the middle-sized house on a common street, and one in the hovel on the edge of a great forest.

Master Bob opened his eyes in a palace. There was a white-capped nurse in attendance. A little bed was ready, whose mattress was of softest down and whose quilts were of silk and blankets of finest wool. He and his mother had everything which money could buy, but money, alone, will not buy happiness.

All day the mother lay in the big bed in that upper room. She heard the tread of feet, and a man hurried in and past her bed to the crib.

She heard him talking in low tones to the nurse. He was leaving without even speaking to her. When she called, "David," he came and bent over the bed, but his breath reeked so of liquor that she turned her head away, murmuring, "Oh, David, you've been drinking again."

He banged the door and was gone, and then the poor little orphan society girl, who had flippantly declared that she did not need the church so long as she had money, buried her face in the pillow and wept. She was all alone in the world—father gone, mother gone, brother and sister. She thought of the sorrow and suffering through which she had passed. She wondered if she had brought the beautiful boy into the world to be what his father was. And when she thought she could not stand it a minute longer, a soft hand touched her forehead and a cheery voice called, "How are you, darling?"

A short little woman with a pug nose and shining hair and blue eyes stood before her in a tailored gown of blue. The little mother recognized her as Mrs. Thomas Booth, one of the most important women in the town. "I heard you had a lovely little boy, and I thought I'd run in and see you."

The little woman was so glad. And somehow it was not long before she had told Mrs. Booth all her joys and fears. Mrs. Booth nodded understandingly. "He's a lovely boy. I don't wonder that you wish to raise him right," she said. "May I come again, and shall I put his name on the Cradle Roll?"

"I'll be glad for you to come. My mother is dead and you may put his name on the Cradle Roll if you like. We're not church folks, but it won't do any harm."

Little Mrs. Booth smiled happily to herself when she went away. Her friends had laughed at the idea of going to these ungodly, wine-drinking people. Other church workers had applied in vain for admittance. She had gained entrance because of a little child.

A month later, she and the minister called at the house on the avenue. The young father felt so important that he promised to attend the men's club meeting, at which a prominent Senator was to speak. He went and was amazed that such a pleasant evening could be spent in innocent amusement, and when he woke next morning without the headache which usually followed nights of dissipation he avoided the sideboard which he patronized quite freely, and, patting his wife's cheek, he said, "I'll have to cut a little of that out if I'm going with church people."

He went to the church on Sabbath morning, and was delighted with the men he met there. And thus passed the year. When Cradle Roll Day drew near Mrs. Booth sent out her invitations, and about a week afterward she followed her visit with a call. She had just rung the bell at the big house on the avenue when the little mother came running to meet her.

"Oh, you blessed angel," she cried, "we're just the happiest folks and it's all because of you. When you came David was drinking, and I was almost wild, but he's been improving right along, and when the Cradle Roll invitation came, what do you think he said? He said, 'We'll go and we'll make the confession so as to be able to raise him right.' Oh, Mrs. Booth, I am so happy."

Mrs. Booth was happy, too. She followed the little mother into the room that she might see Baby Bob's clothes. The mother was saying, "I want him to be the prettiest baby there," but the Cradle Roll superintendent was thinking, "What if I had not called?"

She left after a while and walked down to the middle-sized house on a common street. A dumpy little brown-eyed woman saw her coming, and waved her flag of truce, a baby's white dress. "I am the happiest woman on earth," she said, when she was in Mrs. Booth's arms. "Bob has a better job, and he said he would join the church tomorrow. Oh, Mrs. Booth, I am so glad!"

Glad? Mrs. Booth could not speak, but after a while she took her basket and walked out of the city and out in the country road. She reached the hovel and saw a woman in a brown calico gown. Her face was brown and spotted as an autumn leaf.

"Are you ready for Cradle Roll Day?" cried Mrs. Booth.

The woman did not turn. "I was just a-thinkin'," she began, in a queer, strained tone, "of how things was when you come. I'd been sick, and I got out of bed and crawled out into the kitchen, and was just a-wonderin' how I'd get enough to cover one more body, even if it was a little one. And I seed you a-comin' in your fine duds. I never thought of you stoppin', but you did, and you asked to put Baby Bill's name on the Cradle Roll. It pleased me, but I made fun, and told you I'd ruther have a bread roll than a Cradle Roll, and you opened that very basket you're carryin' and give me food enough for us all. When you come back and brought that certificate all framed up nice and shiny, I hung it on the wall. Bill come home, and he was so pleased that he fixed some chairs that I'd begged him to for more'n a year, to have mended. He got a job on a farm that week. He commenced going to church, and he said we'd go to church tomorrow and make the confession, every one of us. Oh, Mrs. Booth, I never can thank you for what you did for we'uns."

All these things were to be accomplished on the morrow because of her work. Little Mrs. Booth took from the basket the little white things which she had prepared for Baby Bill.

She hurried away after a while through the velvet dusk which was perfumed with roses and variegated by stars. She reached the top of the hill and looked out across the fields at the big house on the avenue which was ablaze with light, at the middle-sized house on a common street which was lighted by a kerosene blaze, and finally out at the hovel on the edge of the forest where the tapers glittered like fireflies through the night. And as the greatness of the work came upon her, as she thought of the thousands of little ones coming up without Christ in the home or the church, she trembled like a storm-tossed ship upon a troubled sea.

She fell upon her knees to pray, and as she waited there, asking, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" a voice seemed to float up from the valley, saying:

"Hark, 'tis the Shepherd's voice I hear,
Out in the darkness cold and drear,
Calling the lambs lest they go astray
Far from the Shepherd's home away."

And with these words ringing in her ears, she rose from her knees, with a deeper determination than ever before to seek out the little ones and bring them safely into the heavenly fold.—Grace Boteler Sanders, in American Messenger.

"Oh, it seams the face and dries the brain
And strains the arm till one's friend is pain
In the fight for man and God.

"But it's great to be out where the fight is strong,
To be where the heaviest troops belong,
And to fight there for man and God."

IN MEMORIAM.

Miss Rebecca Neal Caldwell.

Our hearts are saddened by the death of a dearly loved member, Miss Rebecca Neal Caldwell, which occurred at Kings Mountain, where she was teaching, January 18, 1919.

She was the daughter of Mr. C. H. Caldwell and Mrs. Etta Neal Caldwell, her mother having passed away several years ago. She leaves a father, a step-mother, one sister, Esther, and many friends to mourn their loss, which is her eternal gain. She had been ill only a few days when she contracted pneumonia and peacefully passed to her heavenly home.

The Young Ladies' Missionary Society of Sugar Creek Church desire to express their love for one of its loyal and faithful charter members. She endeared herself to our hearts, and we never found her too tired or too busy to help anyone and we shall greatly miss her. This society having been organized by Rebecca's mother many years ago, known then as the Busy Bee Society. She had been a member of Sugar Creek Presbyterian Church since childhood; she was also a teacher in the Sabbath School.

We thank God for her beautiful life, which was so fully consecrated and devoted to our Master's work.

Mrs. Lynn Howland,
Miss Mary Hunter,
Miss Mary Orr,
Committee.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Maggie Kenley.

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom has called to her reward Mrs. Maggie Kenley, we, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of McGee Presbyterian Church, do hereby adopt the following resolutions:

1st. That in her death our society has lost one of its most loyal members. We humbly bow in submission, knowing that God doeth all things well.

2nd. That we extend our deepest sympathy to her loved ones and commend them to Him who is the great Comforter.

3rd. That a copy of these resolutions be recorded in our minutes, be published in the Presbyterian Standard and one sent to the family.

Mrs. Z. A. Hovis, President.
Mrs. E. M. McGee, Vice-Pres.
Mrs. J. L. Frazier, Secretary.

IN MEMORIAM.

At 11 o'clock on the 27th day of January, 1919, Mrs. J. A. Wooten's spirit took its flight from this world of toil and sorrow to that home of joy where the angels sing and dwell, where there is no more sickness, sorrow and death.

Mrs. Wooten had been violently ill for ten days from influenza. She leaves a devoted husband here, and a mother and several devoted brothers and sisters in Bladen County to mourn their loss.

Mrs. Wooten had lived for the past four years on a beautiful little farm near this place and we can conscientiously say that we never knew a more devoted, consecrated Christian worker in the church and Sabbath School and among her neighbors and friends. Ever alert to the cry of suffering and sorrow; in the church ever punctual and helpful; in the Sabbath School a ready teacher and trainer for a better and higher life.

In a mission school some two miles from her home she was ever present and especially helpful, and will be long remembered by members of that school.

She seemed to realize with the poet that "life is a span, a fleeting breath." and to try to do her part in life's little race today. It can be well said of her that no soldier ever gave his life with more devotion to his country than she did to the sick and suffering surrounding her home.

During her last illness she suffered much, but had some bright hours. After telling her husband how she wanted her property on earth placed, she told him of seeing through our eyes her blessed Saviour who was waiting to give her a hearty welcome to that bright, peaceful home over there.

As we looked for the last time on her smiling face, we could but think of that scripture, "How blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, Henceforth do they rest from their labors and their works do follow them."

May my last hours on earth be like hers.
Mack.

IN MEMORIAM.

Miss Mildred Moore.

Miss Mildred Moore died at her home in Atkinson, N. C., on February 11, from influenza-pneumonia. She was the daughter of Mr. Geo. J. Moore, a man prominent in the affairs of the county and church for many years.

Miss Moore was born June 20, 1893, and was therefore twenty-five years and eight months old when she died. She united with Caswell Presbyterian Church on July 30, 1905, at the age of twelve years, and from that time on till her death she took an active part in her church and all that concerned its welfare. Her loyalty to the church and its work was one of the prominent characteristics of her life.

She was educated at East Carolina Teachers' Training School, at Greenville, N. C. Since leaving school she had been engaged in teaching others and was a gifted and successful primary teacher. Seven years she had labored at her chosen profession, three years of which were spent in the Vanceboro Graded School. She was a teacher at the time of her death in the Graded School at Atkinson, her home town. Outside of her church and home her chief interest was in training the little ones, giving her a zest and enthusiasm in her work that will bear fruit in the lives of many of her pupils, whose affection and confidence she won in a great measure.

The burial was in the family burying ground at her father's old homestead, about four miles from Atkinson.

Miss Moore was widely known throughout this and other sections of North Carolina, and friends and relatives from far and near came to pay their last tribute of respect at the burial.

Her church being without a pastor, the funeral services were conducted by Rev. P. L. Clark, pastor of the Burgaw Presbyterian Church.

are her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. J. Moore; three brothers, Murphy, George and Charlie, of Wilmington, Newport News and Atkinson, respectively, and one sister, Miss Estelle Moore, a teacher this year in the Graded School at St. Paul, N. C.

The deceased was called early to her reward; but measured by what her life had wrought, by her beautiful Christian character and her amiable disposition, she was ready for her promotion to her "inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away."

ON A VISIT.

Dear Standard:

We are little girls five and three years old. We are visiting our grandparents this week while mother is visiting in Dillon. We are at Uncle Frank's house today, playing with our little cousin, Mary Douglass Bullock. She has a little sister named Ruth Alford. She is at her Grandfather Alford's. We have good times together, even though we disagree sometimes. We go to preaching and Sunday School at Ashpole. Our Sunday School teacher is Aunt Mary Bullock and we love her. We are going to have Presbytery at our church this spring. We want to surprise our mother and daddy, so please print this.

Your little friends,

Sara Lee and Margaret Bracey.

CLEAN HANDS.

Mother's checked kitchen apron reached from Phoebe's chin to her toes, and she stood on a wooden stool as she washed the dishes. But even though she was such a little girl, her hands worked so quickly in the warm suds, and the dishes were so clean as she placed them in the rinsing pan that anyone would have said: "Ah, this is not the first time that Phoebe has washed dishes for her mother. She has learned how by doing it very often." And as Phoebe worked she sang so merrily that anyone would say: "Phoebe certainly likes to help her mother."

"While she was still singing the door opened and her cousin Mabel peeped in.

"Oh, how can you sing when you wash those greasy pans? Ugh, the thought of how your hands must feel makes me creep. I don't wash dishes."

"But," said Phoebe, "today is Saturday and Nora can't do more than the baking. It is mother's busy day, and she needs help," and Phoebe polished until the pan shone.

"Well, I wouldn't do it," Mabel cried, and went away.

When the dishes were all put away on the pantry shelf the small hands did look a little red, but do you think Phoebe cared for that when mother called: "Thank you, dear. You have made the whole morning easier!"

She did not take the kitchen apron off, for she knew that mother was hurrying to find time to polish the silver. It was a slow, tedious task, but mother had said to Nora: "I must try to do it."

Phoebe knew why. Uncle Matthew was coming to spend a whole week with mother. Uncle Matthew was the brother mother loved so dearly and had not seen him since he went away to the far country to be a missionary. Phoebe could not remember the day at all, but mother often told her the story.

In a short time the silver knives and forks and spoons were spread on the kitchen table, and how they began to shine! First, a dab of powder on the soft chamois cloth, then round and round went Phoebe's fingers; not a dark stain escaped her notice.

Suddenly the door opened. "Look at your hands. They're as black as a piece of coal." Mabel had come in. As she spoke she rolled her own dimpled hands in her white apron.

"It'll all come off," laughed Phoebe.

"Well, I wouldn't do that for anyone. I thought you'd be ready to come out to play by this time."

It did take a good deal of scouring to take the stains away from the fingers when the bright silver was laid away in its place, but do you think Phoebe cared after she heard mother say to Nora,

"See what the child has done! She is a little treasure!"

The clock on the kitchen mantel warned Nora that dinner time was coming, and she cried: "What shall I do! The vegetables are not ready. The baking and the extra work have made me late."

"I'll peel the potatoes, Nora. Let me." It was Phoebe who spoke.

"You child! They'll stain your hands again."

"Oh, that stain will all come off." Soon Phoebe was seated on the low kitchen stool with a pan in her lap almost as big as herself peeling potatoes so that father's dinner should be ready on time.

Again Mabel popped her head through the kitchen doorway. "Well, you're the queerest girl!" she called.

"Queer girl, indeed!" snorted Nora. "Never a wee bit of help have ye given your mother and she as busy as Phoebe's. Ye ought to be full of shame when you look at your lazy, white hands."

Uncle Matthew came, and Phoebe soon found him to be as dear an uncle as mother had said. He had the strangest way of looking at one. Phoebe said to herself: "I believe he can almost see what I think" Of course this was not quite true, but certainly Uncle Matthew was very wise. He was so wise that it was not long before he understood just why Phoebe's mother was so gay and happy and rested, and why Mabel's mother sometimes seemed almost too tired to smile.

Both little cousins wondered when, the day before he went away, he caught their two small hands in his big one; side by side they rested; Mabel's soft, dimpled white one, and Phoebe's roughened and red, with here and there a stain. Slowly he said:

"Beautiful hands are those that do Work that is earnest, and brave, and true, Moment by moment the long day through."

"It's a big mistake that loving work makes them ugly, my dears."

The next day, when Uncle Matthew kissed Phoebe good-bye, he pinned a beautiful gold and pearl pin under her chin as he whispered, "A badge of honor for the little maiden whose hands and heart are pure and clean and good and beautiful, because they are ready to give loving service."—Ex.

THE CONVALESCENT.

The nicest thing 'bout bein' sick
Is when yer gettin' well,
Then yer mother and yer sisters
They treat you somethin' swell;
They bring you jams and custards
To "tempt yer appetite,"
Then play with you and read to you
From mornin' until night;
They wrap you up in blankets
And put pillows in a chair,
An' set you by the window
So you can get the air.
An' when yer wobblin' 'round a bit,
A-hangin' on to chairs,
They let you put your clothes on
An' help you down the stairs.
So somehow you feel sorry
When you hear your mother say:
"My son, I guess you're well enough
To go to school today."—Ex.

Wasted Patience.

He was a green Scottish lad and one of his duties was to answer the telephone. When first called on to do so, in reply to the usual query, "Are you there?" he nodded assent. Again the question came and again and yet again, and each time the boy gave the answering nod. When the question came for the fifth time, however, the boy, losing his temper, roared through the transmitter: "Man, are ye blin'? I've been noddin' ma heid off for the last half-oor."—Boston Transcript.

EATING OURSELVES TO DEATH.

That the average weight of a well-fed population is above the bodily weight best suited to health is distinctly borne out by the mortality investigations of the insurance companies. When men are divided into groups according to their weight the lowest mortality is not found in the groups of average weights but among those men who are from fifteen to thirty pounds underweight. This is not so apparent among young men, but after forty the difference becomes more marked and among men of fifty and upwards the death-rate is ten per cent higher for those of average weight than for those whose weights fall into the group which are fifteen to thirty pounds underweight.

The injury to health and vitality increases with the amount of excess weight carried. This increased mortality from overweight is greatest in the middle period of life. Men from forty to forty-five years of age who weigh sixty-five pounds to eighty pounds above the average have a mortality just about twice as great as men of the same age who are from fifteen to thirty pounds under the average weights—that is, whose bodily frame carries no accumulated fat.

Thus we see that on the average the well-fed American carries at least twenty per cent more avoirdupois than physical efficiency demands; and that an estimate of a ten per cent food waste from overeating is very conservative, indeed. The luxury of being well fed costs our nation more than a billion dollars a year in food waste, while its cost in lives cut short and in impaired working efficiency is a loss which if it could be measured in dollars would amount to several billions per annum.—From "Lose Ten Pounds for Liberty," by Milo Hastings, in Physical Culture.

What only seemed a barrier,
A stepping-stone shall be;
Our God is no long barrier,
A present help is He.
Our plans may be disjointed,
But we may calmly rest;
What God has once appointed
Is better than our best.

O Thou, who makest wars to cease,
In freedom, justice, mercy, peace,
Thy will in all the world be done,
Till earth and heaven at last are one.
In truth and righteousness the same
From age to age, Thy glorious Name,
O King of kings, our strength shall be,
Our joy and song, eternally!

When we go home at night from work for God too tired to pray, we have robbed God of that which He needed most to bring things to pass — W. E. Doughty.

Dedicate the morning's strength and God will be with you in the evening's weariness.

DRUGGISTS! VICK'S VAPORUB SHORTAGE OVERCOME AT LAST

The Deal Scheduled for Last November, Which Was Postponed on Account of the Influenza Epidemic, is Now Re-instated—Good During the Month of March.

OVER ONE MILLION JARS OF VAPORUB PRODUCED EACH WEEK.

It is with pride that we announce to the drug trade that the shortage of Vick's VapoRub, which has lasted since last October, is now overcome. Since January 1st, we have been running our laboratory twenty-three and a half hours out of every twenty-four. Last week we shipped the last of our back orders, and retail druggists, therefore, are no longer requested to order in small quantities only.

November Deal Re-Instated.

This deal, which we had expected to put on last November and which had to be postponed on account of the shortage of VapoRub, is re-instated for the month of March. This allows a discount of 10 per cent on shipments from jobbers' stock of quantities of from 1 to 4 gross. Five per cent of this discount is allowed by the jobber and five per cent by us.

We advise the retail druggists to place their orders immediately, so that the jobbers will be able to get prompt shipments to them.

Thanks of the Public Due the Drug Trade During the Influenza Epidemic.

The thanks of the American public are certainly due the entire drug trade—retail, wholesale and manufacturing—for what they accomplished during the recent influenza epidemic. The war caused a shortage of physicians—nurses were almost impossible to obtain—the demand on the drug trade was unexpected and overwhelming, and to this demand they responded nobly. Retail druggists kept open day and night and slept where they dropped behind the prescription counter. Wholesale druggists called their salesmen off the road to help fill orders—hundreds wired us to ship Vick's VapoRub by the quickest route, regardless of expense.

A Tremendous Job to Increase Our Production.

In this emergency we have tried to do our part. We scoured the country for raw materials—our traffic manager spent his days riding freight cars in—we shipped raw materials in carload lots by express and pleaded with manufacturers to increase their deliveries to us.

But it was a slow process. Some of our raw materials are produced only in Japan—supplies in this country were low and shipments required three months to come from the Far East. Then we had to recruit and train skilled labor. We brought our salesmen into the factory and trained them as foremen. We invented new machinery, and managed to install it on Christmas Day, so as not to interfere with our daily production.

143 Jars of VapoRub Every Minute, Day and Night.

By January 1st we had everything ready to put on our night shift, and since then our laboratory has been running day and night. To feed our automatic machines, which drop out one hundred and forty-three jars of VapoRub a minute or one million and eighty thousand weekly, has required a force of 500 people. Our Cafe Department, created for the benefit of these workers, served 7,000 meals during the month of January alone.

13 Million Jars of VapoRub Distributed Since October.

An idea of the work we have accomplished this Fall may be given by our production figures—13,028,976 jars of VapoRub manufactured and distributed since last October—one jar for every two families in the entire United States.

During the influenza epidemic, Vick's VapoRub was used as an external application in connection with the physician's treatment, and thousands of people, unable to obtain a doctor, relied on Vick's almost exclusively.

Literally, millions of families all over the country, from California to Maine, and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, have found Vick's VapoRub the ideal home remedy for croup and cold troubles.

GERMAN LOSSES.

It is perhaps a meaningless work to sum up the losses of Germany when she has practically lost everything. Yet facts and statistics are interesting in themselves and everyone wants to know just how hard the enemy was hit. First and foremost, by far the most important thing of all its that Germany lost the war utterly and completely, and beyond redemption. The next thing lost was the German fleet, battleships, cruisers, destroyers, submarines, all sailing forth from their ports and yielding themselves up to the British to never again hoist the German flag above their decks. The hundreds of millions of dollars spent by the terribly taxed subjects of the Kaiser in order, as he expressed it, to seize the trident of the sea in his mailed fist, have been spent only to add to Britain's already dominant might on the ocean. And Germany has lost men, men in millions. Up to the last of October, according to Berlin reports, 1,600,000 men had been killed, and the lists were even then not up to date. Four million had been wounded and 260,000 reported as missing, a number which can be justly added to the list of the dead, as they are so added in all other countries. Berlin also confesses to the loss of 490,000 prisoners, a confession which probably falls far short of the truth.

The total confessed casualties come to 6,320,000, with the probability that they were over seven millions. One in every seven of the able-bodied in the empire has served as a soldier. The German war debt amounts to 39 billions of dollars, owed almost entirely by the government to the people, and scarcely a dollar of which will ever be received by them. She has lost all her overseas trade, which amounted to three billion dollars before the war, a loss in the four years amounting to 12 or 13 billions. When the war began she owned over four million tons of shipping. Today she owns but half a million tons, and owns even these only on Allied suffrage. She has lost her colonies, which cover one million square miles of territory, in round numbers, and boast of a population of 15,000,000, these almost entirely going to Britain. She loses Alsace and Lorraine, she loses Schleswig, Posen and Silesia and the port of Danzig, and she loses the great iron mines of the two provinces she must return to France. Her figures of production have enormously fallen, and last but not least, she has lost her reputation, lost utterly the respect of the world which she has raided and outraged. Did ever a great nation lose so much in the world before? Surely vaulting ambition overleaped itself and fell on the other side in this case.—Acadian Recorder.

Brain service can be bought. Lip service can be hired. Physical service can be contracted for. But heart service is the kind you pay in the coin of appreciation, kindness and consideration.

NATIONAL PRE-EMINENCE.

The eyes of the world are upon this nation. From the ends of the earth men and nations call upon the United States. President Wilson as our representative is everywhere received with honor and confidence. The Arabs of Hedjas appeal to the American people, because they believe the American nation will be the chief factor in deciding their case. The Prince of these people, speaking in Paris, says: "Even in the furthest part of my country the word has spread that America is the friend of all oppressed and the enemy of all oppressors, that to her all oppressed may come, sure of finding patient ears to listen and strong arms to uphold the weak if the claims are found to be just."

The Bolsheviki of Russia in their extremity cry to President Wilson as their best friend. The Sinn Feiners of Ireland appeal their cause to him. Great Britain, France and Italy are our colleagues; Belgium, Serbia, the Jugoslavs, the Zecho-Slovaks, and the Poles want this nation's counsel and decision. China regards our President "as the greatest man in history, and his decisions are considered irrevocable." This is a position of responsibility and danger. It is God's good providence which has brought us here from the humble beginnings of our nation. It is a stewardship for which we are held responsible. It is an eminence from which the fall would be terrible. We need to remember the pronouncement of our Lord upon Capernaum: "And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell." Never was there a time when this nation and the church needed more to put the emphasis upon

A DRY PRESIDENT.

Of all the testimonials to total abstinence and prohibition perhaps none was more unexpected than this from the distinguished gentleman whom the Czecho-Slovaks have made the President of their new republic. His example and counsel will carry great weight in the formative days of the state. Writing to Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale University, just before his departure for Prague, he said:

"New York, 19 Nov., 1918.

"Prof. Irving Fisher, President, Committee of Sixty on National Prohibition, New Haven, Conn.

"Dear Professor Fisher: I am sailing tomorrow to Europe, and you can imagine that I am not prepared to write a long and elaborate thesis on prohibition; but you will allow me to send through you a short message to my Bohemian and Slovak countrymen, commending them to abstinence, I mean total abstinence. I myself used to drink; but my own experience prompted me to accept the principle of abstinence. I am healthier, I can do much more work and in short I enjoy and use life better than I did when drinking. I hope the War has strengthened the habit of not drinking. I may add that I do not believe in moderate drinking—that is a self deception and I do not believe in stopping drinking gradually—stop at once, that is the only way.

I wish our whole country would be dry! With hearty greetings and best wishes,

HATCHED 175 CHICKS.

G. W. Miller, of Pittsburg, Okla., writes: "I used Reefer's Ready Relief and out of 175 chicks hatched didn't lose one." Mrs. T. E. Murphy, of Hughesville, Mo., writes: "Have been using Ready Relief for White Diarrhea and only lost one chick out of 140."

You can do as well. Reefer's Ready Relief in your baby chicks' first drinking water will save them from dying off with that dreadful White Diarrhoea plague. This remedy is the discovery of a famous scientist. Send $1 today to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 9253 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package that will save 500 baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth five for a cent? You take no risk. Mr. Reefer will refund every cent of your money if you are not entirely satisfied and a million dollar bank backs up this statement. Send for a $1 package today, or better still, send $2.35 on special discount for three regular $1 packages and insure every hatch you get. If you don't want to try this bank guaranteed chick saver, at least write today for Mr. Reefer's free valuable poultry book that gives the experience of a man who has made a fortune out of poultry.—Adv.

ASHEVILLE SUMMER SCHOOL OF THE
NORMAL AND COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE
Six Weeks--June 17 to July 29, 1919

First Summer School Session was held in 1918 with 345 teachers in attendance, and 102 others who came for special lectures and courses in food conservation.

The second session will offer exceptional opportunities to those teachers who desire professional improvement.

There will be strong courses for all grades of both elementary and high school teachers.

The faculty will be composed of members of the Normal and Collegiate Institute faculty and of heads of departments in recognized colleges, normal schools, and universities.

Asheville's unexcelled climate and natural scenery provide ideal conditions for real summer study, rest and recreation.

Certificates granted upon completion of the six weeks course will be accepted in North Carolina as satisfying the State Board's requirements for professional study.

Tuition, $10 for the term.

Board and room in the dormitories, when two or more occupy the same room, $30 for six weeks.

For announcement, information and reservation, address President John E. Calfee, Director Normal and Collegiate Institute, Asheville, N. C.

SHALL I GO TO COLLEGE?

Every High School Senior should be settling this question now, and parents should stand ready to give every encouragement to securing an affirmative answer. Russia's state is woeful, and it grows largely out of the ignorance of its people. True Democracy will not persist aside from proper education.

What Kind of Education is Best For Me? Germany's state is no better than Russia's, and Germany is a nation of largely technically trained people, whose education is materialistic. The heart and core of the educational life of America and England is cultural—the education of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

Shall It Be Christian Education? By all means. Have we not learned from sad experience of late that education without Christianity is dangerous? Think it over.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE is a Christian College of Liberal Arts and Sciences of long established reputation for breadth and thoroughness of courses and development of character. The aim here is to develop the whole man. The R. O. T. C. and supervised athletics develop the body; the class-room work develops the mind; and a Christian faculty and fellowship goes far to develop the spiritual man.

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. All of these diseases are probably due in whole or in part to imperfect digestion or imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection, Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder Troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, will give a permanent relief. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began to use Shivar Spring Water and in a short time was entirely relieved."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were relieved of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done me more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely relieved of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement."

If you suffer from Rheumatism, or from any curable disease, accept the guaranteed offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the

THREE KINDS OF CHURCH MEMBERS.

Some one has remarked that there are three kinds of church members, besides the right kind. And he describes them as "the dead," "the injured" and the "missing." Every pastor finds among his membership all three kinds. The "dead" ones are just dead—that's all. Their names are on the roll—and they have a name to live—but they are dead. The problem of every conscientious pastor is what to do with them. Some of our churches have what they call "dropped lists" for the benefit of these cases of suspended animation. Whether this be the proper course or not, for the present we must leave their names in this ecclesiastical Limbo to wait identification in the case of the resurrection of the persons to whom they belong. They are "dead!"

Ordinarily the "injured" class is much larger than the "dead." In some way they have received a mortal wound. Something the pastor said "hurt" them; or they were not "made enough of" when they attended the meetings; or they have been "sighted" by some members of the Aid Society or the deacons "insulted" them by insisting that they contribute for the support of the church; or they suffered some sort of "undoing" in some one of the numerous "collisions" which seem to be unavoidable in church life. And so they stay away from all the services and spend all their time nursing their wounds—usually making them worse all the time by the wrong kind of treatment. They are a difficult class to "get at." Usually they hold the whole situation at arm's length, and positively refuse to have their "injuries" interfered with.

Then there is the "missing" class! How much perplexity and discouragement they cause the pastor! He goes over his church roll, and his heart leaps for joy and a smile comes upon his face, as he counts the names of the "faithful few." As for the "dead," he can do nothing more for them than pray; sympathetically he runs over the entire list of the "injured" ones, and resolves that he is going to do his utmost to heal every wound. But what can he do for the missing ones? He has every reason to believe they are alive and in the best of health. He knows they are capable and might be useful. But invariably when he counts on their presence and help they "turn up missing." May God save our churches, as much so as possible, from these three kinds of undesirables.—Baptist Witness.

We gain power out of every duty done. We miss power by every duty left undone. The faithful soul, by doing one duty after another, thus comes at length to have reserves of power that are simply inexplicable to the shirker, who has steadily lost power with every duty shirked.—Great Thoughts.

Truth must prevail over all other considerations.—Gioberti.

The Art of Preaching

A HISTORY OF PREACHING

Dargan, Edwin Charles, D.D., LL.D.

This monumental record of the great Christian preachers from the Apostolic Fathers down to the end of the 19th century is very much more than a history. The unusual value of the book is in the author's ability to fire the imagination of the minister who reads it, and to teach him how to employ in his work today the enthusiasms and methods of the master preachers of the ages. In two volumes.

FIRST AID FROM THE COOK BOOK.

Will the old-fashioned cook book pass out completely? They are making them card-index fashion now, and the old pantry drawer full of a tattered heap of these cyclopedias of good eating is giving way to a ready-reference file, tucked away in a corner of the Hoosier cabinet. It is comforting, therefore, to learn of a new use for cook books that has recently been discovered.

A story is told in an exchange of a man who had passed the crisis of a long illness, but could not be aroused to take an interest in life. Even the welfare of his family did not appeal to him as an incentive to make the effort for recovery. He lay passively on his pillow day after day indifferent to all the world's concerns and in danger of drifting back over the border, when some inspired person put a cook book into his hands.

He flipped its pages carelessly and with an expression of distaste; then his eye caught something familiar; he looked again, asked to be raised on his pillow, and was presently absorbed in the perusal of the manual. Next he began to select dishes described therein that he wanted to have prepared for him as soon as he should be able to eat them, and from that hour he began to improve, life seemed worth living again. In short, the dreams of stuffed tenderloin, boiled onions, hot waffles with sirup, hot doughnuts, and the like gave him the needed incentive.

This is an interesting demonstration of the charms of the cook book, and may have the effect of giving it a new value in the library. Nor need its use be confined to sick people. When love stories and detective mysteries pall on rainy evenings, when "solid" reading does not invite and poetry is a drug, the book of cookery recipes may have its place. Visions of the delicious cakes that mother used to make will come again and menus to be ordered in the future will bring peaceful thoughts. The cook book has unguessed possibilities of entertainment, and should take its place in the same class with the seedman's gorgeous catalogue.—Ex.

EVADING PASTORAL VISITS.

Stories of the work of Dr. Thomas Woodrow, grandfather of the President, have been current in the newspapers since the visit of Mr. Wilson to the early scenes of his ancestor's pastoral work in Carlisle, England. After the grandfather came to this country he was pastor of First Presbyterian Church, Chillicothe, Ohio, and covered a wide parish on horseback. An interesting story was recently related in The New York Times by an old resident of the neighborhood who remembers many incidents told him by those who participated in the earlier history of that part of Ohio.

This incident is attributed to Mrs. Dorothy R. Turney, of Circleville, who died at the age of 93 not many years ago: "We children always dreaded the pastoral visits of Dr. Thomas Woodrow. They usually came at a fixed day of the week and as our stone house on the hill has an outlook—is approached along the winding roadway—easily visible to some one of the boys who watched as sentinel, no sooner would Dr. Woodrow be sighted than over the hill and to the woods would all the boys quickly scramble, but we girls would have to confront the doctor in the house. He always lined us up for recital of the Shorter Catechism, and many were the stern censures we would get were we amiss in the loss of or misuse of clause, phrase or word. Those occasions were always accompanied with due solemnity and circumspection. We were tested in our knowledge and adhesion to the doctrines covering justification, adoption, sanctification, election, predestination or damnation. As many of the family as could be gathered together he would then assemble for religious worship. The program always covered the singing of a hymn, reading of the Scripture and all kneeling in prayer. From this all the boys would absent themselves, and if the season were right and the skating on the pond good, later, in teasing the girls, they would tell what a good time Dr. Woodrow's pastoral visit had given them."

FOOT TROUBLES

No Need of Them, Says Brooklyn Man, Who Has Evidently Solved a Big Problem.

According to the testimony of hundreds of people living in the southland and elsewhere, J. R. Simon of 1589 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y., has successfully developed a system of shoe building having for its prime object the conquering of foot and shoe troubles. It appears that Mr. Simon's establishment has become national headquarters for people whose feet require his remarkable comfort shoe, known as the EzWear, but obtainable only of the inventor. Mr. Simon's new catalogue shows several hundred shoes that combine comfort with style at amazingly low prices and is now ready for free distribution.

SHE SAVED 200 CHICKS.

Mrs. G. Hancock, Sturgis, Ky., writes: "I hatched 200 chicks and didn't lose a single one with White Diarrhoea. I give Ready Relief the praise." Mrs. H. L. Sutton, of Ramona, Kas., writes: "My chicks were dying 20 and 30 a day. I got two packages of Ready Relief and now I don't lose any."

You can get the same wonderful results. Reefer's Ready Relief put in your baby chicks' first drinking water will help save them from the dreadful White Diarrhoea plague. This remedy is the discovery of a famous scientist. Send $1 today to E. J. Reefer, poultry expert, 6253 Poultry Building, Kansas City, Mo., for a package that will certainly help you save your baby chicks. Aren't your delicate, downy baby chicks worth saving? Sparkles

The Outcast.

See the old wreck there in the gutter,
And those tattered clothes that flutter
As the wind blows.

Age and hard times tell their story;
Youth's bright threads of future glory
Gone: poor fellow.

And the friends once faithful whether
It was clear or stormy weather,
Time has thinned those.

Now, alone, a tattered cloak on:
Poor, dilapidated, broken—
Old umbrella.
—F. E. Sanford, in Wesleyan (University) Verse.

What Really Mattered.

He was a very small boy. Paddy was his dog, and Paddy was nearer to his heart than anything on earth. When Paddy met swift and hideous death on the turnpike road the boy's mother trembled to break the news. But it had to be, and when he came home from school she told him simply:

"Paddy has been run over and killed."

He took it very quietly. All day it was the same. But five minutes after he had gone to bed there echoed through the house a shrill and sudden lamentation. His mother rushed up-stairs with solicitude and pity.

"Nurse says," he sobbed, "that Paddy has been run over and killed."

"But, dear, I told you that at dinner, and you didn't seem to be troubled at all."

"No; but—but I didn't know you said Paddy. I—I thought you said daddy!"—Montreal Journal of Commerce.

Giving Them Rope.

While the Germans were marching through a Belgian province, one of them said sneeringly to a farmer sowing seed:

"You may sow, but we shall reap."

"Well, perhaps you may," was the reply: "I am sowing hemp."—Montreal Journal of Commerce.

Camouflage.

"Are you really looking for an honest man?" asked the suspicious citizen.

"S-sh!" replied Diogenes. "Confidentially, I am merely taking this method of letting my neighbors know what I think of them."—Minneapolis Tribune.

Medical Officer: "Have you any organic trouble?"

Recruit—"No, sir. I ain't a bit musical."—Tit-Bits.

Mrs. Hix—"I don't believe in these faith cures brought about by laying on of hands."

Mrs. Dix—"Well, I do. I cured my little boy of cigarette habit in that way."

A WEEKLY VISITOR

Every Christian should keep abreast of what his church is doing.

The Church paper is his only means of knowing how far the Church is obeying the Lord's commands.

Each week there is laid before the reader a pen picture of the Church at work. He learns what his former pastor is doing in his new field, what old friends have been made church officers, what new methods of church work have been inaugurated.

The entertaining of children on Sunday has always been a problem. The Church paper helps to solve it by giving stories and poetry, and letters from children.

During the month of March we divide the subscription rate of $2.50, one-half being sent to us and one-half given to one of the benevolent causes.

This is the reason the canvassers are trying to put a Church paper in every home.

Editorial

A Significant Amendment.

THE last Assembly sent down to the Presbyteries for their "advice and consent thereunto" a proposed amendment to our Constitution touching the reception of candidates for the ministry by the Presbytery and its supervision over them during the time of their preparation for preaching. The need of such an amendment is very manifest, as our Book of Church Order is absolutely silent on the subject. The Book knows nothing about candidates till they apply for licensure notwithstanding the fact that previous to making application for licensure most candidates have been the wards or proteges of the Presbyteries for several years. It is quite remarkable that the Church should have consented for so long a time to the existence of such a relation without a law to define its nature, its duties and obligations.

The proposed amendment now before the Presbyteries is the joint work of two committees. The Assembly of 1916 committed the task to a committee composed of all the Professors of Theology in our Seminaries. This committee drafted an amendment which they submitted in their report to the Assembly of 1917. This Assembly appointed another committee, composed of all the Professors of Church History and Polity in our Seminaries, and placed in the hands of this committee the work of the previous committee, in order that an amendment of such importance might receive a yet more thorough consideration. The new committee gave the subject the best thought of which they were capable, modifying in some measure the work of their predecessors.
