DIED

McDuffie—Murdock McDuffie, a loyal member of Raeford Presbyterian Church, passed to his eternal reward on June 10, 1923, being in his 64th year. His widow, one son and many other relatives and friends mourn their loss.

He loved his family, his church and his God and was not afraid to die.

Gordon—The body of Mr. W. S. Gordon, who died suddenly at his home in Tirzah, York County, on October 10th, was laid to rest in Pleasant Grove cemetery, Sunday evening, October 21st. Mr. Gordon was born and reared within a mile of this church. He lived here for several years, but later moved with parents and brothers to Tirzah, York County, where he lived until his death. He was a ruling elder in the Presbyterian Church at Tirzah. Members of his Sunday School class acted as pall bearers. The sympathy of this church and community are heartily extended to his bereaved brothers and sisters.

MRS. J. C. NISBET

Mrs. Mary Alice (Woods) Nisbet, wife of Mr. J. C. Nisbet, of Raeford, N. C., died at Highsmith's hospital, in Fayetteville, N. C., May 25, 1923, aged 44 years, one month and 20 days.

She was a faithful member of Raeford Presbyterian Church and was highly respected and loved as a Christian woman, wife and mother.

During the last three years she had suffered much, having spent several weeks in four different hospitals, but in all her sufferings she was brave and she did not doubt the goodness of God.

She leaves her husband, two sons, two daughters, her mother, Mrs. W. A. Woods, of Mint Hill, N. C., three sisters and two brothers, besides other relations and many friends to mourn their loss.

To her loved ones she leaves a good name and the memory of a life well spent.

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord.

MRS. C. L. IVES

Between these two dates was spent a life of one of God's rare souls. Mrs. Ives was one of those richly endowed natures, that in a quiet way, and with an unassuming manner, become the center of a large circle. Where she sat was the head of the table, the center of the room. Instinctive was the deference always accorded to her. Informed, exact, thorough, from her view of a question gently expressed in choice words, there was no appeal.

Her knowledge was wide, and often along unusual lines. She was a constant reader,—and she loved art and music, birds and flowers. She had a vein of true poetic talent, and while hers was not a prolific pen, her poems were accorded a high place from their deep spiritual insight, easy expression, and rhythmical verse. For years she was poet of the North Carolina Federation of Woman's Clubs.

Mrs. Ives' gifts were early brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ, to whom she was loyal throughout her whole life. The privileges of God's house were very precious to her,—and frequently and for years the service of song in the church was enriched by her selections and her training of the choir. She was a Presbyterian by conviction, as well as through early environment, and her influence will long bear fruit.

Mrs. Ives was a daughter of George and Leah Allen, so long prominent in New Bern, and in the Synod of North Carolina. For years she bore the handicap of ill health, but she suffered her enforced inactivity and pain with Christian fortitude and patience—often expressing a longing to go and be at rest in her heavenly home. Her passing was from Black Mountain, N. C., on August 22d. She was buried from the New Bern Presbyterian Church, amid familiar scenes she loved so well. A large number of friends attested the love in which she was held. And rarely, if ever, in our town have been seen more elegant floral tokens and in greater profusion.

The inner circle of bereaved ones are husband, a daughter, two sons, a brother and a sister,—all mourn as Christians sorrow—in assurance of her perfect peace, and hope of heavenly reunion.

JOSEPH SIDNEY WINGET, JR.

"The still affection of the heart

Became an outward breathing type,
That into stillness passed again,

Few deaths have caused a more widespread or profound grief than that of Joe Winget, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. S. K. Winget. He was known and loved by so many kinsfolks and friends, he was so bright and attractive and lovable, he made his way so quickly into the hearts of those who knew him and laid such strong hold upon their deepest affections, that everywhere there was concern and sorrow when it was known that "little Joe" was sick. Every hour and minute through a notably protracted siege of desperate illness he was tenderly watched and nursed by devoted physicians, parents, trained nurses, and kinsfolk and friends. All day and far into the night anxious inquiries in multitudes hoped for some word of encouragement, while a constant stream of prayer flowed forth to God for his recovery if it might be the Father's will. Through it all, behind and beyond the tender care of human hearts and hands, he was always in the unseen but never tiring arms of infinite and covenant keeping Love; the love of the Good Shepherd who said: "See that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." And now little Joe is not dead. Taken from the home, he abides in the hearts of his parents and all those who knew and loved him, a beautiful and ever living memory; while he himself is in the heavenly shepherding of the One who said, "It is not the will of your Father in heaven that one of these little ones should perish."

"The streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof." In the streets of the city where he is now there is nothing to harm or defile or to make afraid. He will be safe till the day of reunion comes. The Good Shepherd knew it is never safe here. We do not understand the Divine purpose even as we cannot foresee future dangers and sorrows. But we do know Him, and that although—

"God's ways seem dark, yet soon or late

They touch the shining hills of day."

"The baby wept;

The mother took it from the nurse's arms

And hushed its fears and soothed its vain alarms,

And baby slept.

"Again it weeps;

And God doth take it from the mother's arms,

From present griefs and future unknown harms,

And baby sleeps."

Gastonia, N. C.

Your children's food

The foods your children eat today, determine their strength and health in later years.

Remember this; they must have well balanced meals. Their food should contain the right amount of mineral salts. These salts act as bone building material. They furnish the different fluids and juices that help keep the tissues young—the body strong and active.

Bakings that are made of good plain white flour and baking powder contain a large amount of mineral salts. Allow your children to eat hardy of these bakings together with fruits and dairy products. This forms an ideal food balance.

When making quick rising breads and pastries such as: biscuits, muffins, cakes, waffles, etc., don't fail to use Calumet—the economy Baking Powder. It contains more than the ordinary leavening strength—it's the purest and surest leavener made. That's why it helps make your flour foods light and easily digested.

Millions of mothers use Calumet daily because they are interested in their children's welfare—their present and future health.

BURSTING SHELLS

Uncle Jack's visit to his sister's summer cottage at the lake had been spoiled by just two things—the rain and Robert. The rain you could at least partially protect yourself from. But Robert! You always got the full force of Robert. Nearly six feet of energetic boy grown absolutely unmanageable.

"Sweet way to be thinking of one's nephew," thought the disgruntled uncle as he hurried home through the pelting sheets of rain. Carrying his streaming umbrella into the little kitchen, he immediately wished he was a million miles away. Out of the flood he had come safely, but alas no dove of peace was in sight. Far from it.

"Robert," his sister's voice was speaking in that exasperated but hopeless tone she had come to use for her oldest boy. "Robert, you know you ate those peaches—six of them, I'd depended on them for supper—why do you deny it? Donald and Elsie were with me; you were the only one home."

"Circumstantial evidence," growled Robert. "Takes a mother to believe that. I may have taken a peach or two, possibly three, but the whole caboodle! That's ridiculous. I'd have known when I reached the bottom of the basket, wouldn't I? Honest though, mother, you couldn't blame a fellow for doing anything such weather as this."

The rain continued its violent assault on the sketchy built little cottage, searching out every tiny leak in the inadequate roof. Drip, drip, it fell in the dishpans and kettles scattered here and there on the floor. In the semi-gloom of the flaring gaslight they sat down to supper—supper minus the intended dessert of cut-up peaches. Supper, punctuated and distressingly enlivened by Robert's remarks.

"Mother," cried the young tyrant, "do look at Donald. Are we raising pigs in this shanty? Watch that carload of potato go down the chute. Honest, the way that kid eats makes me sick."

Throwing his legs out under the table, inadvertently kicking his uncle's instep in the process, the abused boy folded his arms and waited hopefully for Donald to be reprovved.

"I do wish you'd leave Donald alone; you only make him worse," came the weary response from his mother.

"Certainly." Exaggeratedly polite was Robert. "But what will Uncle Jack think?" Then propping up the Popular Mechanics which he had been dipping into between bites, he ostentatiously shut out the offending sight of his young brother.

One other remark only did Robert add to the general conversation during the meal. It was short, but brought results.

"Elsie, you haven't eaten your carrots."

Uncle Jack had also noticed this and had been hoping against hope. But no; the usual why's and wherefore's must be gone through again. The doctor had said that Elsie must be made to eat vegetables; and she detested most of them—especially carrots. She had a conscientious mother; and the result was that Elsie finally ate the carrots, then retired immediately to her room.

Dreading the evening, shut in closely about the poor light, Uncle Jack dried the dishes for his sister, helped spasmodically by Robert, who returned however to the sitting room in plenty of time to capture the only really comfortable rocker in the house. Deep in his Popular Mechanics, he seemed utterly unaware of the arrival of his elders. All the other chairs simply got his goat anyhow, hit him in the wrong place every time.

The rain kept on beating its dismal tune on the roof. More pans had to be dragged out. But not by Robert—he would have lost his chair. Sprawled out comfortably in its roomy depths, he appeared to be reading, a thin but piercing whistle coming from between his teeth. One foot tapped gently against the leg of Donald's chair.

"Mother," Donald had wailed a dozen times, "he's doing it again."

"I don't know when I'm doing it, I tell you. Anyhow I can't stay still as old King Tut for a million years."

"Move your chair."

"I can't. I wouldn't get the light."

"Oh, Robert, stop that dreadful whistle anyhow; my head's splitting."

"I'm sorry, mother, but honestly I do it without thinking." Virtuously he stopped—only to begin again very shortly.

The rain ceased just in the nick of time to save Robert's uncle from saying something he'd be sorry for. Robert slipped away, followed by repeated admonitions to return by 10 o'clock.

Peace, blessed peace reigned in the little cottage. Donald with only a faint protest went up to bed. Elsie came down penitently to say good-night—promising that she'd eat vegetables and even oatmeal next day to make up for her cross fit tonight. "I was going to eat those horrid carrots; I was just leavin' 'em to the last," she sobbed. "But Bob spoiled everything. He loves to see me eat things I don't like. He grins horribly."

The children in bed, the grown folks discussed story writing, the short story in particular. Uncle Jack was a rather successful writer, and his sister had once been fortunate enough to have a story published.

They were hot at it when the clock struck 10. Uncasiness, anxious glances at the window, worried expeditions to the door on the part of Robert's mother. Eleven o'clock—no Robert.

"Something may have happened to him." The mother's eyes were apprehensive, miserable.

The minutes dragged by; Robert came cheerfully in with the usual excuses and tumbled into bed. His exhausted uncle and mother retired also.

"Another day," groaned Uncle Jack when he awoke. "But thanks be, it's my last day." This in a more cheerful tone. "And positively the sun is shining!"

After breakfast—a thoroughly Robertized breakfast—Uncle Jack invited his nephew to take a walk.

The Southern Railway System banks in the South.

Transportation receipts from day to day throughout the System are deposited in Southern banks. The total amount of these deposits in the twelve months ending June 30, 1923, was $251,491,035.

This was an average of $150,503 for each banking hour.

These deposits are drawn against to pay wages, taxes, interest and dividends, and to meet our bills for coal, materials and other expenses of operation. Our total expenditures in the South in 1922 were $20,000,000 in excess of our receipts from the South.

The SOUTHERN SERVES THE SOUTH

"I know what's coming," announced Master Robert with a knowing grin; "every kith and kinster that's visited at the shack this summer has devoted the last morning to me. Get it off your chest, Uncle Jack, and then we'll go for a swim. I know I'm all kinds of a rotter, and I'm ashamed of myself. Try to do better, but always break out in some new place. Heredity, fore-ordination or somethin' like that. Say, Uncle, I've got a problem here, a regular puzzler. Found it in the Popular Mechanics. You see—"

"Wait a minute," put in his uncle, "I have a more important problem to solve."

They were resting on a fallen tree trunk at the back of a farmhouse. Through the wire fence, fluffy, yellow chickens could be seen running about in the sunshine. Here's the problem: "How does a chicken get out of his shell? Does he take that sharp little beak of his and peck his way out?"

"A weighty question," answered Robert; "if you ask me I'd say he just naturally grows till he breaks the shell and bursts out into the world."

"Ah," said Uncle Robert thoughtfully, "my lecture is now ready. If you'll take the position of alert listener, I'll begin."

"Bursting Shells" is my subject—bursting shells by growing too big for them, not by pecking at them. A chicken comes out of his shell very early in life. But a human being often stays in his many years, sometimes all his life. Pecks at the shell, perhaps, but never really comes out of it. Your great-grandfather, however, must have come out of his at a very early age. I was reading some old yellow diaries of his mother's. When Robert was only six appears an entry something like this: Robert went to visit his aunt today, and already I miss the little tike terribly. He takes delight in surprising me, a bunch of wild flowers set in a vase on the dining room table, a new peg ingeniously whittled for my towel rack, stealing out in the wet garden to pick the beans because he's afraid I'll get my feet wet and not be able to sing in the choir. 'Mother,' he said to me one day, 'when you sing in the choir I'm so proud I want every one to know you're my mother.'

"This is only one of the many entries in those old diaries. For more than 60 years she kept them. And the name of Robert and the interest and pride he always had in his mother reaches up through the years like a ladder for her to climb on. She did climb on it, too. She became a concert singer and was busy and active to the day of her death."

"Not only in his mother's life, but in many other lives did he become an inspiring influence. Broadening his own life by filling it with the interests of his friends. Everything he learned or read fitted in somewhere to help some one. Why, only the other day a man said to me: 'I can't think of your grandfather as dead; he was always so alive with eager interest and pride in his friends. I haven't a doubt that he is an inspiration in many a life to this day.'"

The lecture seemed to be ended. "Some great-grandfather I had," remarked Robert with enthusiasm. "Now, let's go for that swim." Later, as they were sunning themselves after their swim, he said: "His mother was a singer, and mine is a writer. Gee, but I'd like to see her a successful one! Say, uncle, I've got an awful tough shell, but if you should hear an explosion way off in Chicago some time in the next hundred years, you'll know what's happened."

"I sure will," smiled Uncle Jack. "Now, we'd better hurry and dress or we'll be late for lunch."—Allan Burdock, in The Continent.

GUEST ROOM IN WINTER

"Why, is this the same room I occupied when I was here last summer?" exclaimed a week-end guest, as she was ushered into a warm, brightly decorated chamber. "It looks so different somehow. I remember that it was the coolest-looking guest room I ever slept in, when I was here in August. Now it looks like the warmest, coziest one ever."

"Yes, it is the same room, but it has been turned wrong-side out for winter," laughed the hostess. And then, at her guest's puzzled look of inquiry, she went on:

"You see, I realized when we selected the cool sage-green and lilac of its summer hangings, that it was going to look cold in winter where it merely looked cool in summer. The sun comes in for only a short while late in the afternoon, and the whole effect was going to be chilly, I was sure. So I made everything two-sided. The window draperies are soft green and lavender on one side and glowing red, orange, blue, yellow and violet on a gackground on the other side. One side is cooling, the other side warming."

"The big wing chairs at each window are covered with the cool chintz in summer, but when winter comes I put these gorgeous colorful covers on. I suppose I'm the only woman in the world who puts winter covers on her chairs instead of summer covers. The down coverlet at the foot of the bed I made look warm as well as feel warm, and the shades on the electric lights on each side of the bed, which have pale yellow shades in summer, have black paper shades now decorated with the brightest, warmest colors paint can produce."

"I keep a thick, woolly negligee here for my guests and a pair of fur-lined, wool-lined slippers. These are things too bulky for the week-end suitcase, and no matter how warm one keeps the house, the bedrooms are cold in the morning, with windows flung wide all night.

"When you come back next summer, my guest room will be turned the other side out, and look as cool as ever."—The Herald and Presbyterian.

"THE DAYSPRING FROM ON HIGH"

This is the title of a Vocational Exercise to be used in the Presbyterian Sundays Schools and Churches for the Christmas season 1923.

It carries a direct message to the hearts of youth.

It calls for dedication of self and service and substance to Christ.

It may be used at any time and in any Church however small or large.

It can be adapted for a longer or shorter period of time.

A sufficient number for the use of those who are to take part will be sent free of cost for use in the Presbyterian Church in the United States. The cost to others will be three dollars a hundred. One of the most complete books of helpful spiritual "Christmas Carols" ever published will be furnished at 25c a copy or $2.50 a dozen.

Samples of the Exercise and of the Book, "Christmas Carols" are being sent to each Superintendent throughout the General Assembly.

If We Grow We Must Build

The lack of an adequate fund for helping weak churches to build is the chief obstacle to the growth of our Church.

There never were so many challenging openings for new and promising church projects as we face today in the Sub-Divisions and on the Avenues and Boulevards in the growing centers of the South and Southwest.

But the Presbyterian Church cannot build a shack on a side street and expect a new Home Mission enterprise to prosper when other denominations are erecting modern plants on main thoroughfares.

The Home Mission Council, at Montreat, N. C., August 8, 1923, passed the following resolution: "The time has come when it is imperatively necessary that we make some large and adequate provision for church erection beyond anything our church has previously known."

The Assembly's Equipment Fund to be raised December 2d contemplates a large number of most needy enterprises. Read the list of needs in this paper each week.

Attractive Literature is going out this week to all pastors, officers, and congregational secretaries of stewardship. Make preparation for a real campaign in your church for this Fund. A Speaker's Hand-Book sets forth for four-minute-speakers all the salient facts about this Fund.

AGE OF CONVERSION

Secretary Robinson, of the Board of Publication and Sabbath School work, on behalf of the Board, has been engaged recently with the representatives of similar boards of other churches in the study of the age of joining the church. The names, dates of birth, and dates of joining church of 6,194 persons in 43 different states were secured and all carefully verified. Of this number 1,183 were Presbyterians. The general results are most interesting and instructive. It is discovered that the age at which the largest number of persons join church is between 13 and 14 years. In our Presbyterian Church, it is between 12 and 13 years. This is a very important discovery. Through statistics gathered in 1900, and given circulation largely by Professor Coe in his book, "The Spiritual Life," the peak was fixed between 16 and 17 years. It is seen by these statistics that we make a great mistake not to

Co-Operation Brings Results
CIRCULATION CAMPAIGN IS GETTING CO-OPERATION AND RESULTS

From an Editorial in a Home Mission Paper
 "Opportunity might push your door bell but she will never push your door down to enrich you. Here is an opportunity to get some real gold for yourself or your society. The PRESBYTERIAN STANDARD has launched a campaign . . . Write at once and get the material you need in order to bring home the bacon. The STANDARD is the best religious weekly published in the South and it ought to be in every Presbyterian Home in . . . Presbytery."

From a Minister Who is Starting a New Plan
 "I am in hearty accord with your plan. I intend to put THE STANDARD on my church budget for next year. My first check received today will put the paper in four families and expect more by November. THE PLAN—This minister is securing the co-operation of the MILL OFFICIALS in a MILL TOWN who are making it possible for their operatives to receive THE STANDARD."

From a Circle Chairman in a Church
 "Interest is growing. See our church bulletin. Advertising spaced placed at our disposal is bringing results. Refusals have been few. Results so far have been splendid. Our sister churches in the adjoining territory are all at work."

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

If you suffer from Rheumatism, Indigestion, or from any curable disease accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to Shivar Springs,

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIANS

(Installment No. 3 of the History of the Presbyterian Church, U. S.)

THE numerical strength of our Church when first organized was 10 Synods, 47 Presbyteries, 700 ministers, 1,000 congregations, and 65,000 white communicants. These 10 Synods covered all the States that seceded from the Union. A great state paper, written by Dr. J. H. Thornwell, was adopted by the first Assembly, and sent forth to all the Churches of Jesus Christ throughout the earth, explaining the reason for separation from the mother church. This able document will always constitute an important part of our history. It is too long for our present use, but a brief extract may be given which embodies a most significant principle. In referring to the action of the Old School Assembly of 1861, it says: "A political theory was to all intents and purposes propounded, which made secession a crime, the seceding States rebellious, and the citizens who obeyed them traitors. We say nothing here as to the righteousness or unrighteousness of these decrees. What we maintain is that whether right or wrong, the Church had no right to make them—she transcended her sphere, and usurped the duties of the State." This is the same doctrine set forth in the opening sermon by Dr. Palmer, the doctrine that the church in its corporate capacity has no commission from its Divine Head to give its support to any form of political action, whether that political action be right or wrong. Our church by adopting Thornwell's paper espoused this doctrine, and is pledged to its maintenance to this day.

The growth of our Church in its early history was largely by union with, and absorption of, other smaller bodies. In 1863, a handful of Presbyterians, consisting of about a dozen congregations on the border territory of the two Carolinas, joined our Assembly. These congregations had followed the lead of William C. Davis, a gifted but erratic man, and had formed a distinct sect with the title of the Independent Presbyterian Church. In 1864, a union was formed with the "United Synod of the South," which had seceded from the New School Assembly in 1858, because of the strong anti-slavery sentiment which had developed in that body, and which found more and more violent and offensive expression at each succeeding meeting of the Assembly. The Presbytery of Patapsco, Maryland, cut loose from the Northern Assembly in 1867, and joined our Assembly. The Synod of Kentucky did likewise the following year. During the war this Synod continued in relation with the Northern Assembly, but its position was by no means a happy one. It criticised the war deliverances of that Assembly, and this brought on a conflict that waxed increasingly bitter as the war proceeded. In 1865, the Northern Assembly declared that all who approved of slavery and abetted the rebellion were guilty of heresy and treason, and enjoined the lower courts under its jurisdiction to admit none to their fellowship who were guilty of these sins except on evidence of sincere repentance. The response to this from Louisville Presbytery was a paper which became notable as "The Declaration and Testimony." The paper was a protest against the "erroneous and heretical doctrines and practices which had obtained and been propagated in the Presbyterian Church in the United States during the last five years." This brought matters to an acute crisis. One of the first things to engage the attention of the next Assembly, meeting in St. Louis in 1866, was the "Declaration and Testimony." The result of a long and heated discussion was the adoption of a series of vigorous resolutions, citing the signers of the "Declaration and Testimony" before the next Assembly, and forbidding them to sit as members of any church court higher than the session. It further resolved that if any Presbytery should refuse obedience to this action of the Assembly, such disobedience would ipso facto dissolve the Presbytery. The Synods were required to be guided by this action of the Assembly in making up their rolls at their next stated meeting. The Synod of Kentucky refused to be guided by the action at its next meeting, and this led to a division. Dr. R. J. Breckenridge withdrew, taking with him 31 other ministers and 28 ruling elders, representing eighteen hundred communicants. This left the Synod with 108 ministers, representing 9,800 communicants. Regarding itself as virtually excluded from membership in the Northern Church, it united with our Church in 1868. The Synod of Missouri had among its members some who had signed the "Declaration and Testimony." It refused to discipline them as required by the Northern Assembly, and the consequence was that the Assembly cut it off. After some years of independence a large part of the Synod united with us in 1874.

Two Presbyteries of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church came to us, one in 1867, and the other in 1868. It was stipulated that they should continue to enjoy the privilege of singing exclusively Rouse's version of the Psalms.

Union with all these various bodies brought in about 282 ministers, 490 churches, and 35,000 communicants. It may be well to note that in none of these unions was there any doctrinal compromise. Those who joined us did so without any modification of our doctrinal standards and with the clear understanding that they interpreted these standards in the same sense that we did. Consequently we have today a church which is remarkably homogeneous in its doctrinal beliefs and teachings. It bears a united testimony to a certain system of doctrine which it declares to be taught in the Bible. We stress the importance of this harmony of belief. It ministers to the peace of the church. Presbyterians cannot live happily together unless they hold substantially the same doctrinal views. In fact the only justification of denominationalism is that those who think alike on the great things of the Bible can enjoy sweeter fellowship, and do more effective service by getting together in a separate body. Creeds are the fences that separate denominations, and fences contribute to the peace of neighbors. If they are to serve this purpose continuously they must be kept up.

When all these unions had been consummated the Church had 12 Synods, 64 Presbyteries, 1,056 ministers, 1,764 churches, and about 106,000 communicants. Since that date the Church's growth has been mostly by individual accessions from the world. The 12 Synods have come to be 17, the Presbyteries 88, ministers 2,092, churches 3,519, and communicants 428,292. It will be noticed that during this half century the ministers and the churches have doubled, while the communicants have multiplied fourfold. Our Church has doubled its membership in the last 25 years. Should our growth continue at this rate, at the end of the next 25 years we will have nearly 1,000,000 communicants. As the spirit of evangelism is becoming more earnest and is spreading to our laymen, there is a bright promise of an even more rapid growth in the future than in the past.

RESOLUTIONS VERSUS ACTIONS

At every meeting of N. C. Synod the pastors vote most flattering resolutions about the Standard. It has generally stopped there.

One of the churches in the Synod has recently put resolutions into actions, as will be seen from the following item from the Church Bulletin:

"Circle No. 10 has five teams at work visiting every home in our congregation in the interest of our church paper, 'The Presbyterian Standard.' The results have been splendid. They have not only aroused enthusiasm for our religious publications, but have quickened the Christian zeal in our church activities; they have brought new members into the Sunday School, Bible Classes, Auxiliary, Cradle Roll and Home Department. We are certainly grateful to these women for the systematic and consecrated way in which they are accomplishing this invaluable work."

THE LIBERALISM OF THE COLORED BROTHER

Those of us who have known the weakness and strength of the colored race have always held that though the younger generation might produce its share of the flappers among the girls and dudes among the young men, we could always depend upon the old for the safety of conservatism.

The proceedings of the last General Assembly of the Northern Presbyterian Church proved that we do not know everything about the negro, even if we have played with him in boyhood.

In the adoption of new machinery in the field, the negro laborer is an intense conservative, and the negro cook carefully eschews all modern conveniences.

All of this makes it more surprising that the negroes in theology should be among the Liberals, when the test came in the last Assembly.

It seems that the vote of the colored commissioners on the Philadelphia Presbytery overture was practically unanimous on the liberal side. Attention having been called to this fact, and surprise, if not disgust, having been expressed by the conservatives of the Northern Church, several reasons have been given for this unanimity.

Some claim that the colored people are conservative, but that the liberal element managed to be sent as commissioners. Others say that it proves that the colored man is an independent thinker and follows no man.

All of these reasons may be true, but we believe that there is another and more probable reason, founded upon a well-known weakness of the colored race, the reverence they have for learning. This is a natural weakness. In their progress upward from slavery, they saw that the white race by reason of their learning exercised a great influence in the affairs of the world, and that even in the social life of the community in which they lived, the man of education was the influential man.

In the Assembly debates they heard those opposing the Philadelphia Presbytery's overture claim intellectual superiority over the conservatives, and therefore the colored brother decided to line up with the intellectuals.

If our conservative brethren wish the aid of the colored commissioners, they must lay aside their modest demeanor and blow their own horn more loudly.

"THE LORD'S DAY ALLIANCE"

This cause ought to be dear to the heart of every Presbyterian, because if there be one truth that they have upheld in all ages, it is that we must remember the Sabbath Day. Without drawing invidious comparison, we may say their zeal with reference to this day finds expression in the "Presbyterian Sabbath," when men wish to draw attention to the strict observance of the Sabbath day. That we have fallen from the high ideals of our fathers we must confess. "The Presbyterian Sabbath" is as much of a curiosity as the Dodo would be, if we could find one.

Our people are fast following the example of the world in the use of Sunday trains, the reading of Sunday papers and the use of the day for pleasure rather than worship.

The Government of the United States too often encroaches upon the sanctity of the day, and would do more to break down its observance if there were no organization to call attention to its violations.

The Lord's Day Alliance is an organization whose special duty it is to guard the Sabbath against the encroachments of the civil power. At the spring meeting of Mecklenburg Presbytery it was proposed to put this cause on the budget of the churches, but Presbytery voted it down, and ordered that a "special offering" for the cause be taken on the "second Sabbath of November or as near thereto as possible."

We would call the attention of the churches and sessions to this action, and would earnestly urge that they try to make this offering the object of special effort.

Funds should be sent to W. E. Price, Treasurer, 36 W. Fifth Street, Charlotte, N. C.

A QUESTION OF DENOMINATIONAL THIRST

All doctrines of the churches have the reputation of being exceedingly dry, yet why the doctrines of the Catholic Church should be dryer than those of the Presbyterian Church is beyond our ken. According to the Herald and Presbyter, that has been examining statistics, each Catholic priest in Pennsylvania drew out for sacramental purposes, during the year, about 30 gallons of fermented wine.

When we remember that in dispensing the elements in the communion, the wine is only drunk by the priests, this seems to prove that the love of drink which tradition has always attributed to the priest, is a weakness of the cloth.

The Catholic Telegram, one of their leading organs, claims that this is a slander on the "Fathers," and that one-half of that amount is all that they took, each one drawing an average of 15 gallons. The same table of statistics makes the Presbyterian ministers of Pennsylvania use only four gallons for the entire body.

According to a contemporary, the Presbyterian preachers of all Presbyterian bodies of Pennsylvania equal in number the Catholic priests. It is a simple problem to work out, to find the part of four gallons that each preacher drew, and then compare it with the 1' gallons that each priest drew.

The contrast would be startling. In justice, however, to the thirsty Fathers, let us remember that many Presbyterian churches use grape juice, unfermented, while the Catholic Church, as far as we know, uses only fermented wine. Even allowing for this difference, it would seem that either these Fathers are high livers, or else that the Catholic doctrine is very dry.

THE MEMORIAL CHURCH AT COMPIEGNE

Ever since the close of the war our Church has been interested in the erection of a church building at Compiègne, France, as a memorial of our Presbyterian boys who laid down their lives that the world might be saved.

Dr. James I. Vance, who has given so much time and labor to this effort, has received from Dr. Charles Merle D'Aubigny the following cablegram: "Dedication at Compiègne, November 1st."

This means the formal dedication of the $25,000 memorial church in France.

Through coming years, after we have passed to our reward, it will stand as a reminder that our boys who fell were held in grateful remembrance by those who remained at home. It will also prove that though republics may be ungrateful, the rank and file of our Church, from whom this sum came, are not unmindful of the services of our dead.

WHAT EVOLUTION IS

In these days when evolution is upon every tongue, and even the newsboys are discussing it, we would do well to refresh our memories as to what is meant by the term. In every discussion, no progress is ever made till our terms are defined, and we know just what we are discussing. The charge made against us is that we speak unadvisedly with lips.

We give, for the benefit of the simple folks, the definition of Evolution by Herbert Spencer, who was the great apostle of the doctrine. According to Herbert Spencer "Evolution is an integration of matter, and concomitant dissipation of motion, during which the matter passes from an indefinite, incoherent homogeneity to a definite, coherent heterogeneity, and during which the retained motion undergoes a parallel transformation." We are very grateful to the English mathematician Kirkman for this lucid paraphrase of Mr. Spencer's definition: "Evolution is a change from a nohowish, untalkaboutable, all alikeness to a somehowish and in-general-talkaboutable, not-at-all alikeness, by continuous something-elseifications and sticktogetherations."

After reading and digesting this definition, if any of our readers do not know what this theory is, then there is something wrong in the mental make-up.

BEFORE THE GATES

Psalm 118:19—In the Tate Art Gallery in London is a painting called "The Girl at the Gate." The scene is laid in the Highlands of Scotland. The farther background of the picture reveals the rocky cliff and the jagged scaur. In the foreground is a rude highland cabin whose tiny yard is surrounded by a rickety picket fence. In front of the little home, the aged father is spading the ground. The mother, bedecked in an apron, stands akimbo feeding her chickens. At the front gate, about which daisies are blooming and a sparse vine clambers, stands a fair blue-eyed lassie, dressed in the native plaid. Her hand rests upon the gate post. She is merely a peasant girl in form and surroundings, but with an expression of unutterable yearning after some great ideal. Her face is sweetly sad and beautiful. Her fine dreamy eyes—they form the center and point of the picture. What a study! Those fine eyes are looking across the hazy distances. She seems to have visions of a larger, fuller life. Her soul, imprisoned and uncultured, appears to be striving for liberty, noble activity, and lofty service. Those who look upon this picture are attracted to it with awakened sympathy and tenderness. This picture reminds us of hundreds and thousands of girls who are held back within the barriers of circumstances and narrow environment. There is no nobler task entrusted to men and women than that of giving "the girl at the gate" a chance in life.—Ex.

GOOD NATURE

God bless the good-natured, for they bless everybody else. He whose disposition is cheerful, imaginative, and humorous has a summer of the soul, and in that summer atmosphere reason will act more clearly, conscience will be sounder, fidelity will act better than if they are exercised in a frigid zone or in the chills and peltings of a morose disposition. Wherever you go, if God gave you gayety and cheer of spirits, shine and sing.—Henry Ward Beecher.

THE JUDGMENT

However diversified our paths, they all converge toward a common center. The young, with their elastic tread, are striding to the judgment; the old, with their tottering limbs, are creeping to the judgment; the rich, in their splendid equipage, are driving to the judgment; the poor, in rags and barefooted, are walking to the judgment. The Christian making God's statutes his song, is a pilgrim to the judgment; the sinner, treading upon the mercy of Jesus and trampling upon His blood, is hastening to the judgment. "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ."—Richard Fuller.

LOOKING ON THE RIGHT SIDE

The hymn, "Count Your Blessings," has not much poetry in its words, and the tune is the merest jingle, but it emphasizes a most important duty. Perhaps our blessings are of the common ordinary variety that are so easily overlooked. An old man celebrated his one hundredth birthday not long ago, and many friends called on him. A newspaper reporter asked him, among other questions, if he had always enjoyed good digestion. The centenarian replied that he had "never noticed." A good deal of the pleasure of life comes from blessings that we never notice. The most unfortunate among us will find, when he comes to catalogue his mercies, that he has quite enough to make him thankful and happy. Sydney Smith once said: "I thank God who has made me poor that he has made me merry."

In all probability more real happiness springs from a "merry heart" than from a full purse, and it is something we may cultivate.—Ex.

It is not so much what you say
As the manner in which you say it;
It is not so much the language you use
As the tones you use to convey it.
For words come from the mind,
And grow by study and art;
But tones leap forth from the inner self
And reveal the state of the heart.

It is not the things that we do not believe, but the things that we do believe, that make us worth while religiously.

It is well in all the trials of life to hope for the best, but to be prepared for the worst.

JESUS AT THE LORD'S SUPPER

A Communion Sermon

By Rev. W. R. Minter, D.D.

In the Lord's Supper, the supreme person is the Lord. Our supreme duty is to see the Lord. As we see Him, we best see ourselves. What He is and does in this supper reveals what we are and should do. His approach to us shows what should be our response to Him. As we scan the incidents that crowd themselves into that evening service, may we in our meditations remember that in no essential is the Christ of this supper in the upper room in Jerusalem, different from the Christ of this supper we celebrate today in the upper room in Austin.

He Comes

"And in the evening he cometh with the twelve" (Mark 14:17). He comes. He always comes to the communion. The manner of His coming may be different but the fact of His coming is the same. He was there; He is here.

"I see thee not, I hear thee not,
Yet art thou oft with me;
And earth hath ne'er so dear a spot,
As where I meet with thee."

He Yearns

"With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer" (Luke 22:15). He yearns to come and to eat. "This has been as it were a goal of my heart," we hear Him say. "With deep desire I have looked to this hour. Now that it is here, my heart is glad." And still He yearns. Still He finds satisfaction in His supper with His own. Shall He alone yearn today? Or shall there be within us burning hearts in answer to His?

He Rebukes

"And also there was a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest." And in inimitable rebuke He said unto them, "The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them . . . but ye shall not be so; but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief as he that doth serve" (Luke 22:24-26). As many as I love, I rebuke. His rebuke of love is a blessed element of this communion. Looking into His face as we do, all sordid, crass motives stand exposed and indicted. "No, no, my child," He seems to say, "you do not understand. This is the way the Gentiles do, but ye shall not be so."

He Serves

"He riseth from supper and laid aside his garments and took a towel and girded himself . . . and began to wash the disciples' feet" (John 13:4-5). "Having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them to the end" (vs. 1). The ministry of love and humility! He comes down anew to us in His supper, serving us in love and condescension.

He Searches

"And as they did eat, he said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me" (Matt. 26:21). "Verily I say unto thee that this night before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice" (26:34). Of all places in the world, the Lord's table is the last place, to cover up or to dissemble. Today as then those all-seeing eyes search us through. As a flame of fire, they light up the depths of the heart, they burn away all coverings, they leave no hiding-places. He searches.

He Gives

"Jesus took bread and blessed it and brake it and gave it to the disciples . . . And he took the cup and gave thanks and gave it to them" (Matt. 26:26-27). Gave—this is the heart-word and act of that last supper. He gave—bread, cup, His body, His blood—Himself. Their's was the receiving, but His was the giving. This unchanging Christ still in this supper gives to His own. This giver and His gift demand a receiver. To as many as will receive, He gives—Himself.

He Prophecies

"I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom" (Matt. 26:29). At the end of the way, in the Father's house, the marriage supper of the Lamb! The fact that we eat and drink today tells us we shall eat and drink tomorrow—God's tomorrow—past every fear and danger and sorrow.

He Comforts

"Let not your heart be troubled . . . Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you . . . Ye are my friends. . . Be of good cheer. I have overcome the world . . . I pray for them." These words from John 14:17 (Christ's supreme post-communion talk and prayer) came to the disciples, as they have to countless other perturbed hearts, and as they do to us, as a silver trumpet, soothing and comforting. These words instruct, encourage, inspire. Through them He still comes to souls in perplexity and in peril, and comforts them.

He Sings

"And when they had sung a hymn, they went out into the Mount of Olives" (Matt. 26:29). Jesus sings at the last supper! Singing with the disciples, but Himself singing. His voice and heart were joined with their's in that song. And, in our great hallelujah today, I like to think that He in heart if not in voice, sings with us, as truly as He did with them. Aye, and that He leads here, as in every part of His holy supper. He sings!

With our eyes today, seeing Him who is invisible to the world but manifest to His followers, so let us eat of that bread and drink of that cup.

QUIET TALKS ON THE SIMPLE ESSENTIALS

By Mr. S. D. Gordon, Bijou Theatre, Boardwalk, Atlantic City, N. J., Auspices Atlantic City Council of Churches

No. 19—Bodily Healing

The race is sick, bodily sick. O, there is more health than disease, more strength than weakness, more life than death. Yet it is true that the world is sick.

There is a science of healing today. There are poor preachers and poor lawyers, and poor physicians. A vast amount of medical practice is confessedly experimental, and very costly in suffering and in life. And there is an increased tendency toward commercialization in all these noble callings.

Yet there is a real science of bodily relief and healing. Countless hosts have been benefited by its gracious ministrations and the world made a vastly better place. The debt to medical science can never be paid. Still, it remains true that the race is in bad shape physically.

Christ healed men's bodies when He was here. The twenty-four instances given, out of possibly some few thousands summarized, are nearly all incurable. He healed, instantly, perfectly and permanently.

Does Christ heal men's bodies today? Let the abrupt brevity of the answer make the emphasis greater—yes. It is His first will that we should be pure in heart, true in life, poised in judgment, and strong and well in body. The teaching of the book here is full and clear.

But—softly—the Church of Christ has not been true to the full Gospel of Christ, with exceptions. I say that with pain in my heart as a lover and member of the Church.

And so false systems of healing have sprung up. There is one that holds the center of the stage today. I do not need to name it, it is so well known. It uses Christ's name freely, and quotes, or more accurately, misquotes the old Book of God.

And the striking thing to mark is that some are healed through its ministrations. Within certain sharp limitations healing does go on. But it should be carefully noted just how this is so.

There are five ways in which healing may come to one's body. There is a natural healing, without human co-operation. If you cut your finger, instantly there is a power within that begins to staunch the flow of blood and knit up the wound. The Creator has put a healing power in every man's body.

There is this natural healing, with human understanding and co-operation. The mental attitude has an incalculable influence in swinging nature's healing power into action. There is natural healing, assisted by expert human knowledge and skill. Here is the wise physician's place. "Man tends; God mends," is thoughtfully displayed over a large Eastern hospital.

Then, very thoughtfully, there is Satanic healing. "Ridiculous! Satan heal?" you say. "He is bad. And healing is good." Yes, a bad Satan will do a good thing for a bad purpose, to get and to tighten hold on the unsuspecting.

A mongrel cur in the back alley disturbs your night. You throw out a piece of good meat with some bad poison. The dog has no discernment between the good and the bad. He eats the good meat and gets the bad poison. The garbage cart has a job. And your sleep is unbroken now.

The false healing spoken of combines two of these ways, the natural healing with an instructed co-operation, and the Satanic. There can be no question of the Satanic healing in this connection. And most folks could claim unwilling kinship with that back-alley mongrel, so far as spirit discernment is concerned. We haven't been taught.

There is a fifth way in which healing comes, through our Lord Jesus; three natural ways, two supernatural.

But how shall we untaught folks know what teaching and what healing to accept? And the answer is quick and clear. It is never right or wise to accept any supernatural healing except where the deity and the blood of Christ are emphasized.

True supernatural healing is only through the God-Man who died. There is no red tinge in the false teaching named. And any supernatural healing, otherwise than through Christ's blood, brings a bondage of mind and of life that can be broken only through Christ, and often only through protracted spirit struggle.

There are conditions attached to healing by Christ. Of course, there are always conditions, whether it's banking, or cooking, or motoring, or what not. These are so simple as to be almost laughable.

Trust Christ as a Saviour. Yield to Him as a Master. In a sane, wholesome way make it your passion to please Him. Then when the need comes go to Him at once, direct. Ask for what you need. It is His first will to heal the body as to forgive the sins.

But what about the use of means? Ask Him? He'll tell you. You may be ignorantly abusing your body, or depriving it of something vitally necessary. You may need an expert to help you. Modern cookery and commercialism have robbed our foodstuffs of much nourishment put into them by a thoughtful Creator.

The thing to mark is this: Christ heals today, sometimes through means and skill, sometimes directly without either. Sometimes when the physician frankly confesses that it's beyond him.

And it should be keenly noted that there may be a waiting time. The Book of Job fits in here. The healing Christ is concerned for our spirit health as well as the body. Some of us need discipline. There is a distinctly disciplinary use in much bodily suffering.

Some bodily healing is delayed until we intelligently bring our stubborn wills into strong touch with His wise loving will. God has a hard time with some really saintly folks to get them to go His way.

But the outstanding thing to mark is that Christ hasn't changed. He heals today. It is His first will that we should be strong and healthy in spirit and life and body.

No. 20—The New World Order

OPPORTUNITIES IN TEXAS

By Rev. Brooks, I. Dickey, D.D.

At the last meeting of the Committee on Home Missions of the Synod of Texas, the Superintendent of Home Missions for the Synod, Rev. Brooks I. Dickey, D.D., was directed to make his office a clearing house in the matter of vacancy and supply.

This brings up one of the most perplexing questions before us today in the work in Texas.

One Presbytery alone has listed five churches, each of which will pay $1,800 and a house. There are probably 25 or 30 vacancies in the Synod today, which offer a support. On the other hand, there are practically no names on file of men who may be available to fill these places.

What shall we do? First, we can pray—pray the Lord of the harvest. Then if any one has knowledge of any man who may be available for the work in Texas, he can send the name and address to Dr. Dickey, 904 Kirby Building, Dallas, Texas.

Only men are needed who are active, aggressive, and willing to work hard and make sacrifices; men who want to have a part in a real constructive program; men who will identify themselves with the work of Synod and Presbytery. There is no place in the Home Mission field for the pessimist. It calls for faith, courage, grit and perseverance. It demands men of good sense, grace and consecration. It appeals to men of vision.

All such correspondence will be held strictly confidential if so desired.

There has never been a time when so many opportunities present themselves. The spirit of optimism and aggressiveness is more evident than ever before.

Hillsboro—Sunday, October 7th, Rev. J. D. Leslie, D.D., Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, preached for the First Presbyterian Church and moderated a congregational meeting at which a call was extended to Rev. Henry Austin, of Lawton, Oklahoma, to become pastor of the church.

In the afternoon of the same day, Dr. Leslie drove to Cleburne and assisted in conducting the funeral service of Prof. Peyton Irving, one of the elders in the church at that place, and one of the oldest and best-known educators in Texas.

Mexia—Sunday, October 21st, Rev. Brooks I. Dickey, D.D., Superintendent of Home Missions, preached for the First Presbyterian Church of Mexia. After the morning service five members were received, four by letter and one upon profession of faith. At the close of the evening service Dr. Dickey moderated a meeting of the congregation, at which time a unanimous call was extended to Rev. Edward H. Hudson, of Beeville, Texas, to become pastor.

Though without a pastor for some time, prayer meeting and Sunday School have been kept up, and the outlook is encouraging.

A. & M. College—Rev. D. C. Butler entered upon his duties as student pastor with the beginning of the fall term at the college. Dr. Brooks I. Dickey, Superintendent of Home Missions for the Synod, visited the college recently and conferred with the officers of the church there. He found the work there in excellent condition. Mr. Butler is taking hold splendidly. Steps have been taken to secure a very desirable site for a building. More than 275 students have registered as either members or adherents of the Presbyterian Church.

Rev. W. H. Matthews, formerly Presbyterian student pastor, is the very efficient secretary of the college Y. M. C. A.

It will greatly help the work there if pastors and parents will write the student pastor and tell him of the men whom he should know. Address Rev. D. C. Butler, College Station, Texas.

REPORT OF AD INTERIM COMMITTEE ON RE-ADJUSTMENT OF PRESBYTERIAL LINES WITHIN THE SYNOD OF NORTH CAROLINA

I am enclosing you the full action of Synod in erecting new Presbyteries and changing the boundaries of some of the old ones. So many ministers and churches are concerned in this action, I suggest that you publish it in full as soon as possible—next week if at all practicable—so that the information may be before the whole Synod. According to a subsequent action of Synod, this action does not go into effect, as far as financial matters are concerned, until January 1, 1924; but otherwise it is in effect now and has been ever since the report of the committee was adopted.

E. L. SILER, Recording Clerk.

Recommendations

I. That a new Presbytery be set off in the northwestern part of the state to embrace the following counties: Ashe, Alleghany, Wilkes, Surry, Stokes, Forsyth and Davidson from Orange Presbytery, with Davie and Yadkin from Concord Presbytery.

That another new Presbytery be set off to the east of Orange Presbytery, embracing Person and Durham counties from Orange, along with Granville, Warren, Vance, Halifax, Northampton, Franklin, Nash (excepting Rocky Mount and the church closely affiliated with it) and Wake from Albemarle, and Johnson county north of a line from the southwest corner of the county to Middle Creek at its nearest point, and running with Middle Creek and the Neuse River to the eastern border, from Fayetteville Presbytery.

That Orange Presbytery include the counties of Rockingham, Guilford, Randolph, Caswell, Alamance, Orange, Chatham and Lee, the last two from Fayetteville Presbytery.

II. That Cabarrus county be transferred from Concord Presbytery to the Presbytery of Mecklenburg.

III. That the part of Sampson county west of a line drawn from the eastern extremity of Cumberland county northeastward to the point where the line between Johnston and Harnett counties meet the Sampson county line, be transferred from Wilmington Presbytery to the Presbytery of Fayetteville.

IV. That Synod appoint Rev. J. S. Foster, D.D., to call the Presbytery to the west and Rev. W. McC. White, D.D., to call the Presbytery to the east of Orange Presbytery to meet at some early convenient time, within the next 60 days, for the purpose of organization.

V. That Synod recommend that as soon as the two New Presbyteries are organized, that Rev. A. W. Crawford, Superintendent of Synodical Home Missions, shall call the chairmen and superintendents of Home Missions in the two new Presbyteries and in all the other Presbyteries of the Synod to meet at some convenient place, to work out a just and reasonable arrangement for mutual assistance in Home Mission endeavor, in order that the readjustment of Presbyterial lines may not interrupt the progress of this important part of our work in the Synod and in each of the Presbyteries.

C. M. Richards, Chairman.

Adopted by Synod at Graham, N. C., October 11, 1923.

E. L. Siler, Recording Clerk.

AN IDOL'S WEALTH

By Rev. G. W. Taylor

It is difficult to understand how civilized people can worship idols made of wood and clay. Although probably many of the educated people of Brazil have ceased to believe in idol worship, and really do not enter into such worship, yet Brazil continues to be an idolatrous country and the religion of the great majority of people is idolatrous and superstitious.

Practically every family has its own household image, and often, in the case of the image in the home of Gideon, the private god becomes the god of the village. Churches or chapels are built for these idols and the people worship them both by praying to them and by offering them presents. Most of these idols are said to have miraculous powers, and promises are made to them, which usually means that, if the idol will cure the person of a certain ailment, such and such a present will be given to it. It happens that many a time the person will get well of the malady, and so presents the idol with a wooden, clay or wax model of the afflicted part. In the chapels of these idols are side rooms in which are kept these "relics," consisting of piles of wooden legs, arms, heads, feet, breasts, babies, etc., representing the part which the image is thought to have cured.

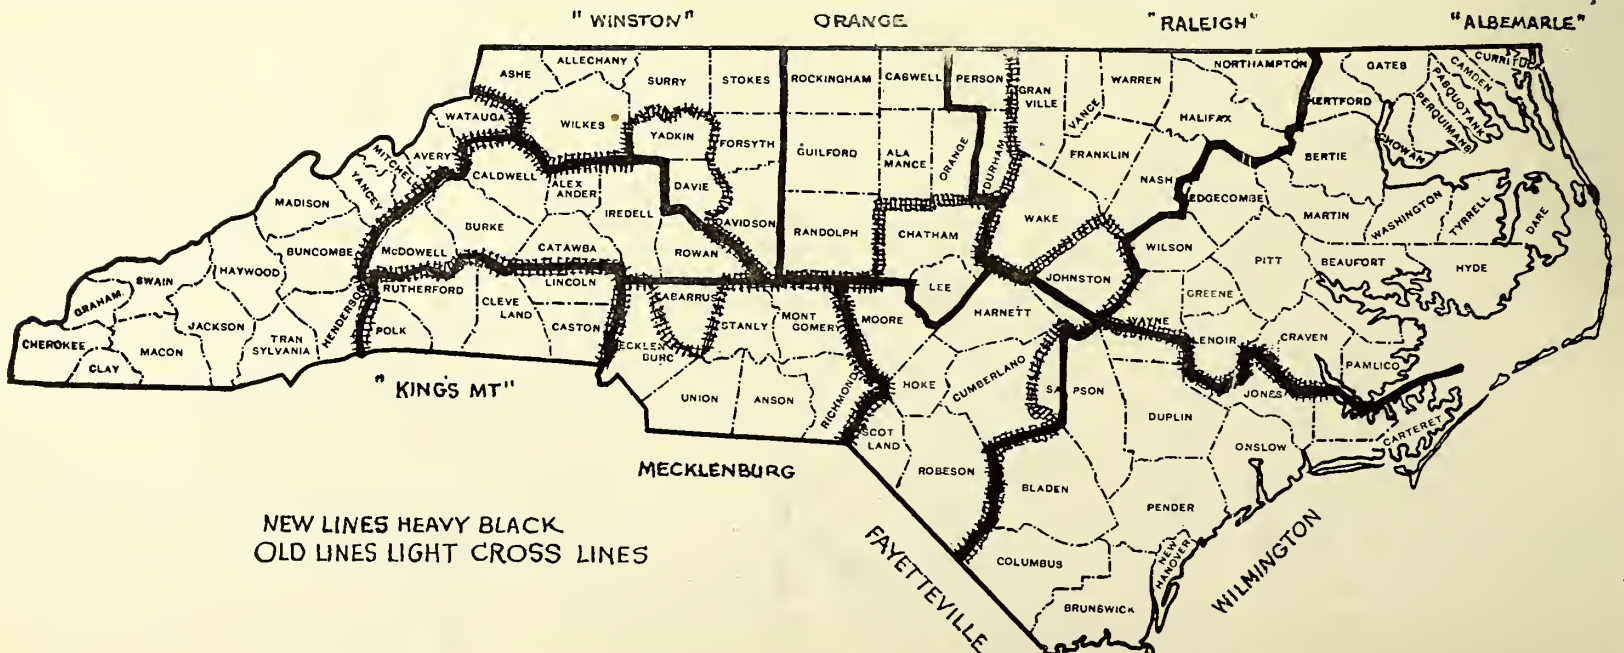

A few miles from Garanhuns there is a little village in which one of the citizens has a private idol which he claims has miraculous powers, and so do the people of the whole country round about believe. This idol has been the source of a lucrative income for years for its owner. The man built as a part of his home, a chapel for the idol, and in it, as I have seen, there are about two wagon-fuls of wooden and clay "relics" piled in a side room of the chapel, while on the walls are framed testimonials to the wonderful cures which this idol, Santa Quiteria, has performed. By means of the offerings brought by the people to this idol, it has become really wealthy and owns large farms, with herds of cattle and other stock, all in its own name.

The Catholic priests have many times tried to get hold of this idol and chapel, because of the wealth it would bring them, but the owner refuses to give them up, and for more than a generation the family has lived on the income from this idol worship. The man and his idol have been thrown out of the Catholic Church, not because of the idolatry, but because the revenue does not go into the right pockets, and if the priests could get their hands on the idol, it would be moved to some regular church, and would continue to provide the income, not for the present owner, but for the priest.

There is another case which comes nearer home and which has created much interest among the believers. The local pastor of our church has a number of out-stations under his care in the surrounding country, which he visits regularly. A short time ago he was advised both by enemies and friends not to go to the town of Bom Conselho, one of his out-stations, as there had begun severe persecution of the believers there, the political leader declaring that they were not wanted any longer in the town.

It seems that one of the citizens of a village beyond the town of Bom Conselho, had a private image, similar to Santa Quiteria, which he worshiped and to which he made his promises. One of the promises which this man made to his idol was that, if some prayer was answered, he would present the idol with a young heifer. True to his word, when the prayer was supposedly answered, the heifer was given as a present to the image, remaining, of course, in the possession of the owner of both idol and heifer.

In time the heifer grew to be a cow and had a calf, and then several others after that, all of which remained in the possession of the man, but were considered property of the image. At times the offsprings of the cow were sold and the proceeds used in holding celebrations for the image or for the benefit of the owner of the idol and his family. This is considered entirely permissible and everything went along in peace and prosperity.

Then, and this was recently, there came a change. The owner of the idol heard the Gospel preached and became a Christian. Before he could be accepted into the church he must give up his idolatry and destroy his idol, which he gladly did. Breaking into pieces the image, the remains were taken into a nearby field and buried, probably with a little too much glee and publicity in the rite. A woman in a neighboring house happened to be looking from a window and observed the ceremony which she afterwards reported to the priest. This gave the priest a good opportunity to stir up trouble for the believers, and he did not delay in prosecuting his case.

Under the leadership of the priest the people of the village became enraged, and going to the field where the idol was buried, they disinterred the remains, declared them to be holy, erected a cross on the spot and held a series of services for a week in honor of the martyred saint. A chapel is to be erected where the remains were disinterred, and another chapter in Brazilian idolatry has been begun.

On investigation it was found that the owner of the demolished idol in abandoning his idolatry, and also disposed of the remaining cattle belonging to his image, selling them and spending the money upon his own interests, just as he had been accustomed to do when he was a Catholic, when nothing was thought of the act. Now the priest declared that the cows and calves that were sold were the property of the idol and begins the prosecution of the man in court for having stolen and sold property that did not belong to him. The local judge sustained the justice of the priest's claim, so the man fled from the community. The pastor of our church in Maceio, the capital of the adjoining state, under whose ministry the man was converted and who advised the destruction of the idol, has also been summoned to appear before the civil court. It is said that the court will clear the two men, but that it will be necessary for them to stand the trial. The man has lost considerable property as a result of the persecution, but declares that he does not regret losing it all for the sake of Christ.

Of course, accompanying all this demonstration over the lamented saint, there was persecution of the believers, and all of them had to flee from the community. This bitterness spread to the town of Bom Conselho, with the result, above mentioned, that the pastor of our church here in Garahun was prevented from visiting our young congregation at that point.

Can anybody say that Brazil does not need the Gospel? Garahun, Brazil.

SOME SUNDAYS IN THE OLD WORLD

By Barbara E. Lambdin

II. Jerusalem—Joppa—Rome

Jerusalem! How our hearts thrilled when we first saw at a distance, and then when our feet actually stood within the gates of the Holy City! Memorable indeed, with the luxury of sleeping and dining car was the ride from Cairo on the Nile to the City of the King; passing in quick succession over part of the desert trodden by the Patriarchs and journeying Israel, and by every great nation of antiquity, touching the Maritime Plain, Philistine territory, mountain, valley, fertile field—all rich in Bible associations. And the country was "as the garden of the Lord," for it was early springtime, and the land was green, sprinkled with gay flowers of every hue.

Two and a half days in the Holy City, marking well her "bulwarks," visiting some of the sacred places; in trips to the Jordan and the Dead Sea; to Bethlehem, Hebron and Beersheba, made Sunday doubly welcome.

Through some misunderstanding, we reached Christ Episcopal Church, near our hotel, as the service was nearing its close. But we breathed gratefully the Sabbath air, the spirit of devotion, and had our first introduction to Syrian "war orphans," for this church and its devoted rector are doing a far-reaching work, and we joined in the last song and received the pastoral benediction.

In the afternoon we made our way to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. Down dark David's street, with its Jewish and Mohammedan bazaars wide open and doing a thriving business; and then two chivalric young British "Tommyes" conducted us the rest of the way, through other dark crowded streets, to the venerable edifice. The church is shared, and fought over, by the Roman Catholic, Greek and Russian Orthodox, the Armenian and the Coptic Churches. If its claims are valid, "Saint Sepulchre" covers the most sacred spot in all the world; but what an accumulation of uncertainty, tradition, and superstition.

We chanced upon a gorgeous service, just beginning in the "Chapel of Mary Magdalene." Mass was sung by Franciscan monks, one of whom had a marvelous tenor voice, and a very young "brother," a rare musician, was at the organ. The place was dark except for the lighted tapers held by the monks, the nuns, "Sisters of Zion," and the orphan children with them, and the tourists. We, too, joined the chanting pilgrimage, visiting, as we were informed by our guide next day, "the pillar of scourging," the "chapel of the centurion," the "place of the casting of lots," to the "chapel of St. Helena, where 'the true cross' was found," to the "place of the crown of thorns," then "Calvary," to the "stone of unction," and on into the central "sepulchre" of precious metals and stones, with its many swinging censers, that is regarded with such superstitious veneration as it is claimed to be the tomb of our Lord.

It was a wierd, never-to-be-forgotten sight—the great church with its richly decorated dome and walls, the gloom, the monks, the nuns, the gray-clad children, the lighted candles, the mellow organ strains, the singing at each "station," the elevation of the "host," the mystery of it all, the superstition, the sincere feeling of many, but it was not "worship in spirit and in truth," and "with the understanding."

Joppa—Our next Sunday was spent in Joppa. Saturday afternoon we visited the "upper room," the scene, it is claimed, of Peter's vision, now a Mohammedan mosque, as are so many of the "sacred places" of the East. At least, from the low housetop, we looked out upon the same scene—the wild, rocky shore, and the beckoning "Great Sea," with the Gentile nations beyond waiting for the message from Christ's disciples.

Here also, the mixed population does not make for Sabbath observance, or at least our Sunday. Again we attended service at the Anglican Church, where the old rector was as much edified as the congregation by the fervent sermon on "What Lack I Yet?" in somewhat broken English, of the young Syrian minister whom he had probably trained. Here also there were little children, either war orphans or from a mission school, being educated and trained to share in making the land of our Lord a Christian land.

Naples—The second Sunday before Easter saw us in Naples. Not until later did we know that there is a Presbyterian Church in this interesting city. Special services were held in the Catholic churches, and we dropped into several. But we were not particularly edified, even in St. Januarius, where the saint's blood now, to accommodate the crowds that come to witness the "miracle," and incidentally to bring much money to the city, most obligingly liquifies twice a year, instead of only once as formerly—but this did not happen to be the occasion, though we were shown the congealed blood in a tube. The attendance was small in most of the churches, and generally composed almost entirely of the old, the poor, who have no other hope, and children, many of them in charge of nuns. We found this to be the case generally, except on great occasions.

Rome—A few days later we were nearing the city "to which all roads lead," the "Eternal City" of the Caesars and the popes, of kings and liberators! Our first view we had at dusk, the lights twinkling across the low campagna; then following the long lines of Roman aqueduct ruins, at last Roma!

How full the days—the churches with their treasures of art and antiquity, here too the superstition—St. Peters, the seat of the pope; majestic, perfect in its proportions, with a wealth of beauty and grandeur. The Church of Rome is not losing the opportunity afforded by the thousands visiting the city. Many of the special services, I imagine, are in part propaganda, aimed largely at rich Protestant Americans, and they think all Americans are "rich." The "audiences" of the pope, too, I believe have a double purpose. It is easy to procure invitations—we were offered them, but it ill consorts with the convictions of Protestant Christians to place themselves in a position where they will be compelled to kneel to the Roman pontiff. The guides, too, seem Vatican-trained. One of them pointed out to us, in the Vatican gallery, a very realistic painting purporting to represent the martyrdom of a faithful Catholic at the hands of the cruel Protestants. But, even there, this could not pass quite unchallenged!

To St. Peters' we came for the 9:00 o'clock mass, Palm Sunday morning, the celebrant Cardinal Merry del Val, pope in all but the name. The service was conducted at the great central high altar, before the imposing "chair of St. Peter." It was a striking scene—the magnificent vestments of the cardinal and higher clergy and their attendants, the clouds of incense, the rich setting of the walls and pillars, the intoning, and the exquisite unaccompanied singing of the Vatican choir!

The crowd was large, larger than one realized at the time, in that vast building, and it seemed to be composed mostly of tourists. At least two other services, but minus the pomp, and conducted by priests, were going on at the same time in chapels off the nave, but with a decidedly slim attendance of Italians.

From this colorful spectacle at St. Peters it was not hard to run away to the place of real worship for that day.

At the Chiesa Valdese di Roma how different! Its dignified and simple exterior testifies to the simplicity and sincerity of its faith. The congregation of about 400 to 500 quite filled the building; an intelligent and devout body of men and women. The minister, in Geneva gown, had a sensitive, refined face.

The first hymn, to the tune of "Softly Now the Light of Day," was sung in Italian. What an experience to join in with the familiar English words, alongside a young Protestant Frenchman, who may have voiced his praise in his own native tongue. The second hymn was a chant, probably one of the mountain hymns of this valiant people, a small pipe organ adding to the volume of the voices, for they sang with evident appreciation of the words.

The text I do not know, but from the repetition of Jer-u-sa-lem, the rhythm and gestures of the preacher, and a faint remembrance of school-girl Latin, I could almost follow his reference to Christ's lament over Jerusalem, and admonition to higher living, the keeping of the faith in the present-day laxity, and challenge to a witnessing Christianity. The closing hymn, "Room for Jesus," was sung with deep feeling, and a seeming expression of expectation of the imminent coming of our Lord.

Across the Tibur, on the Piazza Cavour, is the handsome church generously given to the Waldensians by Mrs. Kennedy, of New York, sister-in-law of the late Dr. Schaufler, to whom Union Seminary is indebted for its splendid new Sunday School building.

This church is built in the ancient basilica form, decorated in Byzantine mosaic effect, and with windows of stained glass. Above the dome in Italian appears, "Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty; Heaven and Earth are Full of Thy Glory;" and below this, "We Praise Christ crucified, the Power and Wisdom of God."

The night congregation practically filled the large building, a flattering evening attendance for an American church. The text was from Luke 23:9-10. The sermon was most earnest, the pastor with eloquent words and rapid gestures frequently pointing to the Bible. He might have been the young deacon Athanasius contending for the purity of "the faith once for all delivered to the saints."

Outside were men and women of the Salvation Army preparing perhaps for an evangelistic appeal in the plaza opposite, then filled with people, many families, enjoying in this way their Sunday rest.

"BEING A PREACHER"

By Rev. Henry H. Sweets, D.D., Secretary

Through the liberality of friends the Executive Committee of Christian Education was enabled to send a copy of the Sprunt Lectures, given at Union Seminary, by Rev. James I. Vance, D.D., "Being a Preacher," to all the ministers of our General Assembly and to the candidates for the ministry who were in college or the theological seminary.

The secretary received a letter from one of our faithful and distinguished ministers who gave 51 years of his best service to the Southern Presbyterian Church, from which we quote the following paragraphs:

"I want to thank you not only for the check which reached me on my seventy-fourth birthday, but for the book you sent me some time ago, by Dr. Vance. If I could have had that book 50 years ago, how much more I could have accomplished for the Master's cause. We spend, however, all our years in learning how to do things.

"Experience is a thorough teacher, but sometimes a slow one. I read the book and am passing it on to some men much younger than I am, with the hope that it will help them as I know it would have helped me."

HILLS AND STRENGTH

By Mary Joan Wheeler

I sought to have an easy track
To greet me as I went along,
But now I find as I look back
It was those hills that made me strong.

I sought to pass those hills that rose
Before my path from day to day,
But now I find that at the close
It had been best to pass that way.

That easy road without one loss,
Without one tear, without one cross,
Could never make my heart more strong,
And so I passed the hills along.

And as I passed each hill that rose,
I found them easier toward the close,
Ah, they grew easier all along,
For then my heart had been made strong.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. J. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

Charleston Presbyterial will hold a series of Institutes during the month of November as follows:

November 6th, at Beaufort, Mrs. J. C. Lemack, chairman.

November 7th, Blackville, Mrs. W. E. Prothro, chairman.

November 8th, John's Island, Mrs. J. E. Andell, chairman.

November 13th, McClellanville, Miss Margaret Sheppard, chairman.

Bethlehem Church (N. C.)—On October 7th it was my privilege to attend morning service at Bethlehem Church, of which Mr. Carmichael is the pastor. With the support of Mrs. W. P. Ashcraft. The Woman's Auxiliary, of Bethlehem Church was organized immediately after service. Eighteen names were enrolled as charter members, and we are expecting great things from this body of fine women and girls.

Mrs. J. C. Williams.

Philadelphia Auxiliary.

Wilmington Presbyterial (N. C.) has just concluded a series of six Day-of-Prayer group conferences. "Day-of-Prayer!" "Day-of-Prayer!" Truly that was what they were. A suggestive program was sent to each district chairman, and about the only alteration which any chairman made was to add more prayers to those suggested.

The meeting lasted from 10 a. m. to about 3:30 p. m., except in Pollockville, which preferred an afternoon and a night session, and where they listened with breathless interest to Miss Martin's fine word pictures of Brazil. The dates were from October 7-12 inclusive, at the following places: Pollockville, Mrs. Herman Parker, chairman; St. Andrews, Wilmington, Mrs. J. M. Taylor, chairman; Atkinson, Miss Frances Robinson, chairman; Bolton, Mrs. R. W. Scott, Jr., chairman; Teachey's, Mrs. R. D. Usher, chairman; Warsaw, Mrs. G. W. Oldham, chairman.

There were in attendance about five hundred people, which is a really large number when one knows that four out of six of the meetings were held in towns of from 200 to 500 inhabitants. At Teachey's, for instance, there are not more than half a dozen resident members of the local Auxiliary, and yet, there were nearly a hundred women present from all around the country near-by.

The program stressed all the causes of the church, the Standard of Excellence was explained, the mission study books presented, reports were heard from the Summer School of Missions, the young people's conferences and the colored women's conference. There was a valuable period of Bible study and stirring missionary addresses.

The local pastor was always present except in one or two instances when he had gone to Synod, and at Atkinson, where they have no pastor, but where their elder, Mr. Moore, opened the program with a spiritual devotional. Among the women present there was the mother of the dear young May Johnson, in whose memory the May Johnston Loan Fund was raised. At St. Andrews, there seemed to be added to those visible, the spirit of that just man, made perfect on High, Dr. McClure, of sainted memory. At Warsaw, in the beautifully and lavishly flower-decked church, we were honored by the presence of more than one pastor.

Each day there was also presented to us that which can well be expressed by the paraphrase, "the table of the loving hands." Those delicious meals spoke so eloquently of the old-time Southern hospitality which changing conditions seem to be forcing out of the life of today; and the spirit of kindly ministrations was as gratefully received as were the meals themselves. We should like to commend to others the fashion in which Bolton prepared its splendid lunch. All boxes and baskets were brought to the church, the women came in to the meeting, and, upon the noon adjournment, hostesses and guests laid the cloths upon the outdoor tables, opened the boxes, spread the meal, and there you were! The coffee appeared by magic. Perhaps the next-door-neighbor might explain that.

Miss Martin and the Presbyterial president attended all six of the meetings; all of the secretaries of causes but three spoke at one or more meetings; the Bible study was conducted by Mrs. Jackson Johnson and Miss Mabel Briggs; the mission study books were presented by Mrs. George Matthis and Mrs. Andrew Howell; the Standard of Excellence was explained by Mrs. Howell and Miss Mary Cumming.

The Foreign Mission addresses were made by Miss Edmonia Martin, of our Brazil mission, now on furlough in this country. The thanks of the whole Presbyterial are due Miss Martin for the many-sided and graphic picture which she gave us of Brazil, for example of her untiring interest in her work, for her yearning over the people of that vast country, and for her zeal and desire to make the people at the home base realize their responsibility for the foreign field. Miss Martin made nearly a dozen addresses during the week, and no two were alike.

Each chairman presided in her district, and did it well, keeping each item within the time limit, and yet, nothing seemed hurried. We are thankful to God for this great week of prayer.

Mrs. Andrew J. Howell,
Presbyterial President.

Excerpts from Letters of Readers of the History of Wilmington Presbyterial Auxiliary:

"Your History of Wilmington Presbyterial Auxiliary is beautifully written, and really a wonderful contribution to the history of Presbyterianism in Wilmington Presbyterial. Heartiest congratulations. We are proud and gratified that you have done this piece of work in such a decidedly worth-while way."

—Mrs. J. M. McIver, editor of the Woman's Auxiliary page in the Presbyterial Standard.

"Your history is splendid. I am so glad that I own a copy. —Mrs. S. C. Brawley, president of Orange Presbyterial.

"I have read this publication of yours with much interest and profit. I think you have done not only a very interesting but a very valuable piece of work. It we could secure such writing as this on the part of a much larger number of people and organizations it would greatly enrich our historical literature. I never expected to be particularly entertained about a woman's auxiliary society, but I am delighted to say that I read this with genuine interest. You have told an excellent story in an excellent way, and all of us who are interested in history are in your debt."

—Prof. W. C. Jackson, professor of history and vice-president of the North Carolina College for Women. "It is splendidly done, for it reads not like a chronicle of events but as a real, live, throbbing bit of life, and the pleasant touches of humor give it a very special charm. My husband did not put the book down until he had read it through." —Mrs. L. W. Curtis, Richmond, Va.

"This little history is an epic, Homeric in describing the struggles of an industrious group through valleys of darkness to the 'House Beautiful' in accomplishment of material things, and above all the moral and spiritual successes illuminating every page. There is behind all the written lines a sublimity of spiritual beauty simply irresistible. You have erected an enduring monument to the memory of consecrated pioneers. The Old North State owes you and them a lasting debt of gratitude." —Mr. James A. Warren, Raleigh, N. C.

Kentucky Synodical Auxiliary—The 11th annual session of the Synodical Auxiliary of Kentucky was held October 2d and 3d at Fourth Street Presbyterian Church, Owensboro. Twenty delegates from the churches of the state were present. Mrs. H. L. Cockerham, Synodical president presided.

At the morning and afternoon sessions reports were heard and proved very earnest work had been done with splendid results. The discussions were very helpful. In a brief, but exceedingly interesting way, Dr. Henry Swets spoke on Tuesday evening, telling of some things accomplished by the Woman's Auxiliary, deepening the conviction of all who heard him, of the magnitude and importance of the work.

Many of the officers for the coming year were elected.

The meeting closed on the evening of the 3d with the installation of officers and address by Rev. S. J. Venable, of Campbellsville.

Mrs. H. L. Cockerham, who was re-elected president, made a short talk following the installation exercises conducted by Rev. Mr. Venable.

This is the first annual meeting that has been held in Owensboro, and too much cannot be said in praise of the cordial hospitality and entertainment extended the visitors.

Paris will be the next meeting place.

St. Pauls, N. C.—Miss Lois Young, principal of the Hsu chou fu (pronounced Su chew too), Girls' School, China, and a missionary of the Southern Presbyterian Church, spoke in the Presbyterian church here, on last Sunday evening, giving an interesting account of her work.

Miss Young is one of a group of missionaries St. Pauls Church helps to support, so the congregation was doubly interested in her, and her work, as well.

On Monday afternoon she met with the Presbyterian Woman's Auxiliary, and there were present a goodly number of ladies from other churches, who greatly enjoyed a delightful continuation of Miss Young's Sunday evening address. She said the Chinese are very poor, and in the school they give the preference to the poor girls. They can only pay for board about $1.15 per month. Friends from the home-land send them gifts from time to time, but as the principal of self-help is rigorously taught, the girls are allowed to do certain work in the school, to pay for this help, as money is never turned over to them.

Some exquisite handwork done by the girls, and sold for their support, was shown to the ladies and girls present, also a number of curios.

After the meeting a delightful social hour was enjoyed by all, tea and sandwiches being served.

Miss Young was the guest of Mrs. E. C. Murray, and left Tuesday morning for Fayetteville. An itinerary has been arranged for her to visit a number of the churches in Fayetteville Presbyterial. She has been in China six years, this being her first furlough. She made a fine impression on her large audiences, both night and afternoon.

The above was taken from the St. Pauls Review. In addition to this notice, please remember that in December a collection will be taken in all the churches for "The Equipment Fund," so sadly needed on the foreign field. Some of the workers are living in rooms with dirt floors, where the water rises several inches, and the dampness seeps through the walls, when it rains. Do let us give liberally to this fund, out of our oft-times luxurious abundance.

When we think of hospital patients lying on the bare floor, of no lights but little kerosene lamps, no bathtubs but little tin basins, how can infection and colds be prevented, and how can conditions be kept sanitary?

Will you not take this up in all the auxiliaries and give as if it were your own loved ones, as indeed they are your own in many instances, who are suffering for the lack of this needed equipment?

Mrs. E. C. Murray,
F. M. Sec., Fayetteville Presbyterial.

Trenton, Tenn.—The Auxiliary of this church was held on October 24th to one of a series of group conferences, being held by the officers of Memphis Presbyterial. About 40 ladies were present and a helpful discussion of the various details of the Auxiliary system of woman's work was had, under the capable supervision of the president, Mrs. John S. Cooper. Lunch was served, at the noon hour, by the Trenton ladies in the dining quarters of the Methodist church, graciously offered for that purpose.

Robeson County, N. C.—A meeting of interest to the Presbyterians of Robeson County was the group conference which was held at Maxton, Tuesday, October 16th. Representatives of all the Woman's Auxiliaries of the various churches of the county were the guests of the Maxton Auxiliary. Rowland had the largest delegation present aside from the hostess church, with Red Springs coming second. There were about 160 ladies in attendance.

The devotional was conducted by Rev. E. L. Siler, pastor of the Maxton church.

Mrs. J. S. MacRae extended greetings from the hostess society and Mrs. E. C. Murray, of St. Pauls, responded.

Mrs. J. R. Poole, of Lumberton, the country chairman, presided. The purpose of the group conference was explained.

The Synodical Secretary of Foreign Missions, Mrs. W. L. Wilson, of Hemp, N. C., made a fine talk on the Family Altar, Stewardship and Bible Study.

The Young People's Work in Fayetteville Presbyterial is represented by Mrs. Suttentfield of Pine Bluff. She urged the necessity of an active secretary of this cause whose duty should be to superintend the young people's societies in an unassuming way, be on hand for the meeting, ready to instill new life and ideas if the work should begin to drag.

Mrs. Murray, of St. Paul's, the Presbyterial Secretary of Foreign Missions, gave figures showing the remarkable growth of the past ten years. She outlined a Foreign Mission serial which is being written which is called a sequel to the Book of the Acts of the Apostles. The author is the Southern Presbyterian Church inspired by the Church of the Living God. It is dedicated to our heroic missionaries.

The Secretary of Spiritual Resources, Miss Margaret McQueen, of Rowland, made an earnest talk on this subject. She reported that the St. Pauls schools had put the Bible in the curriculum of its schools, with the pastors as teachers.

As we are interested only in those things we know, Mrs. J. O. McClelland, of Maxton, Presbyterial Secretary of Literature, urged the use of the many sources at our command for informing ourselves. "More reading, more thinking, more doing" was her plea. The Child and America's Future, the mission study book, was especially recommended. Read this, said Mrs. McClelland, and study your responsibility.

Mrs. J. P. Wiggins, president of the Maxton Auxiliary, announced that Mrs. Margaret Russell, of the Assembly's Training School, in Richmond, has been secured for a Bible study course for the week beginning November 11th, and the visitors were invited.

At this time, the social hour was enjoyed on the church lawn, where lunch was served.

"What sculpture is to a block of marble, education is to the human soul," was the quotation used by Mrs. Poole in presenting Mrs. John Knox, of Lumberton, Presbyterial Secretary of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, who appealed for Christian A-grade colleges.

Mrs. Knox was followed on the program by representatives of various Christian institutions, under the care of the Presbyterial. Mrs. H. M. McAllister, also of Lumberton, a member of the Advisory Board of Flora Macdonald College told what that college lacked in being an A-grade college. If these requirements are met, and it is hoped that they may be, the class of 1924 will graduate from an A-grade college. Fayetteville Presbyterial, with the help of the Presbyteries of Orange and Wilmington, has determined to raise $150,000 which will make this possible as all except the monetary requirements are being cleared up.

Representatives of the Y. W. C. A. of Flora Macdonald College, Misses Flora McDonald and Madge Hardaway, made appealing requests that the women give their support in the coming drive.

Elise High School, the Christian preparatory school, her usefulness, her development and her needs, was presented by Mrs. A. M. Fairley, of Laurinburg, the Presbyterial Secretary of this cause. The new dormitory is nearing completion and the women of Fayetteville Presbyterial are called upon to furnish the 24 bed-rooms at a cost of $50 each, the living-room and the dining-room also in this building.

The missionary address of the day was given by Miss Edmonia Martin, missionary to Brazil. Miss Martin is the daughter of the late Rev. Roger Martin, and grew up in Robeson County. She spoke interestingly and appealingly of her work in Brazil, that wonderful country undeveloped save on the seacoast, and of the tremendous field for work.

Mrs. McQuire, of Laurinburg, Secretary of Barium Springs, stated that the greatest need of that institution at present is the support fund which is to be supplemented by the Thanksgiving offering.

The meeting closed by prayer by Mrs. E. L. Siler. Mrs. R. M. Williams at the organ, the solos of Mrs. A. B. Croom and Miss Lawrence, the latter of the faculty of Carolina College, and the quartette rendered by Messrs. Calhoun, McRae, Croom and Sullivan added greatly to the pleasure of the occasion.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT

W. ARNETT GAMBLE, JR., Editor

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO THE DEPARTMENT EDITOR, COLUMBIA SEMINARY, COLUMBIA, S. C.

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

We received the past week a copy of an unusual edition of a newspaper. The paper was printed in Ardmore, Oklahoma, and was a special Christian Endeavor edition of the local newspaper, advertising the convention of the Ardmore District of the State C. E. Union.

Mrs. Rockett, Assistant Junior C. E. Superintendent of the First Presbyterian Church of Ardmore, was chairman of the convention publicity committee and worked out the plans for the special convention edition. The issue contains cuts of the officers of the United Society of C. E.;

the convention Church, First Presbyterian; the presiding officer, Rev. D. D. Swinney, Director of Religious Education of the First Presbyterian Church; and other persons and views of interest.

The advertisers fell into line with a will. The advertisements contained the words "Christian Endeavor" or the C. E. monogram, with words of welcome. Four banks of the town ran a full-page greeting to the delegates. Greetings from various local pastors, and information about C. E. in general and the work of the district in particular, added to the attractiveness of the paper.

Any who are interested in newspaper publicity for Sunday School or young people's conventions can get some good ideas from the Ardmore effort. Mr. Madison Dawson was chairman of the convention committee, and he or the newspaper publishers will doubtless be glad to furnish copies of the C. E. edition.

What are you doing toward promoting the plans offered by the leaders of our progressive program? If you haven't full information, get in touch with Rev. R. C. Long, 410 Times Building, Chattanooga; then help our Church in its great work.

SOME MISSIONARY TEACHINGS OF THE PSALMS
Psalms 47:1-9; 67:1-7; 100:1-5. (Print Psalm 67:1-7).

GOLDEN TEXT—"Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee."—Psalm 67:3.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

1 God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us. Selah.

2 That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations.

3 Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

4 O let the nations be glad, and sing for joy; for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon the earth. Selah.

5 Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

6 Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us.

7 God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear him.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 62. What are the reasons annexed to the fourth commandment?

A. The reasons annexed to the fourth commandment are: God's allowing us six days of the week for our own employments, His challenging a special propriety in the seventh, His own example, and His blessing the Sabbath day.

The Psalms are perhaps more often read than any other book in the Bible. They meet human needs in many directions. They not only inculcate doctrine and duty, but they furnish the language for expressing all kinds of emotion. Adoration, praise, gratitude, thanksgiving, despondency, joy and sorrow all find varied and forcible expression in the Psalms. Man is not only a material and intellectual, but an emotional being, and his emotions are often stirred and seek manifestation. Feeling has much to do with the propagation of the Gospel, and we should expect the Psalms to present missionary teachings. In expounding the Psalm of our lesson we will present Prayer for Personal Gifts; Prayer for God's Way and Salvation to be Known Among All Nations; Prayer for God's Praise and Sovereignty to be Realized by all Nations; A prediction that God will bless all the ends of the earth.

I. Prayer for Personal Gifts

The Psalmist prays for mercy. He asks for free and unmerited favor. All need this, for all are guilty before God. Hence he says, "God be merciful unto us." He prays, "Bless us." This is a very comprehensive petition, and urges that God would bestow what He knows will make us happy. He also says, "And cause His face to shine upon us." God is the source of light—"In His light only can we see light." All material brightness and all knowledge and joy come from Him. When Moses came down from the Mount of Communion with Him, his countenance dazzled Israel. When Stephen saw "Jesus at the right hand of the Father, his face shone as an angel's."

II. Prayer for God's Way and Salvation to be Known Among All Nations

Personal gifts of mercy, blessing and Divine light lead receivers to desire and pray for them to be extended to others. He who does not desire to give Gospel blessings to his fellow men may well doubt whether he has received them himself. The best laborers for missions at home and abroad are those who have in their own hearts the deepest sense of Gospel preciousness. Aware that God chooses to use human agency to give salvation to mankind, he will labor and give to publish God's way to the world and His salvation to the nations. Convinced that man's efforts are vain without Divine aid, he will pray that Pentecost may be repeated and that God will pour out His Spirit upon all flesh. In temporal and spiritual affairs we are to be co-laborers with God.

III. Prayer for God's Praise and Sovereignty to be Realized by All Nations

God does rule in heaven, earth and hell, but creatures do not realize it and try to thwart His plans. The Psalmist prays that God's praise may be willingly uttered and His sovereignty gladly acknowledged by all nations. He says, "Let the people praise thee, O God." He further affirms that this praise produces gladness in song. He declares, "O let the nations be glad and sing for joy." He also intimates that Jehovah's judging the people with justice or equity, and "governing the nations upon earth," adds to the gladness that results from praise. One reason for the unrest among nations and the miseries of earth is that Jehovah is not gladly enthroned among mankind, and the principles He inculcates are not obeyed.

IV. A Prediction That God Will Bless All the Ends of the Earth

In this part of the Psalm all people are exhorted to praise the Lord for "The increase of the earth" for physical abundance. The continuance of the fruits of the earth in rich measure is largely dependent upon our serving and praising God. Men forget their maker amidst His gifts and He has sometimes to send drought and famine to remind them of His existence and sovereignty. The Psalm closes with a prophecy that God will bless His people and that the ends of the earth shall reverence Him. "God will bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him." "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of God as the waters cover the deep."

MISSIONARY ADVANCE

M., Nov. 12—Advance by Prayer: Matt. 9:35-38.

T., Nov. 13—By Information: Acts 11:1-18.

W., Nov. 14—By Visitation: Acts 8:14-25.

T., Nov. 15—By Opening New Fields: II Cor. 10:13-18.

F., Nov. 16—By Personal Sacrifice: II Cor. 11:23-33.

S., Nov. 17—By Generous Giving: Phil. 4:10-19.

Sun., Nov. 18—Topic: How Obtain a Great Missionary Advance? Acts 13:1-12.

How may we get a vision of missionary possibilities? What proportion of a church budget should go to missions? Why?

How does missionary reading help missions?

Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus. The very best way to advance the cause of Christ in the world is to have the mind of Christ.

Go Ye Into All the World

What was the mind of Christ? In Matthew's Gospel we read that He went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospel of the Kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people. Some of us can follow Him in the work of teaching; others can go out as preachers; and still others may go as doctors and nurses to heal diseases. If we can not go we can look with compassion upon the multitudes because they faint and are scattered abroad as sheep having no shepherd.

The Student Volunteers

In all the church colleges and many state colleges there are bands of young people, men and women, who have definitely pledged to go as foreign missionaries. We call these young people Student Volunteers. This movement was organized in 1883, and quickly spread through the whole world. Over 9,000 missionaries, now on the field, were Student Volunteers. Every young Christian should consider whether Christ has a work for him to do in the mission field, and we should decide the question in the fear of God. Does Christ want me to go?

Pray for Missions

We can pray the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth laborers into His harvest and we can pray for those already on the field. Jesus tells us that "All things whatsoever ye shall ask, believing, ye shall receive," and we know His word is true. Dr. Campbell White says, "Prayer is the first and chief method of helping to solve the missionary problem. None is more practical or fruitful. By this simple method alone, the efficiency of the missionary force could probably be doubled without adding a single new worker." So let us pray very earnestly and let us study the field and the work that we may pray more intelligently. We can not all go, but we can all pray.

All Can Give to Missions

God has asked us to give Him the tithe of all our increase and He has promised to bless those who are not afraid to give their tithes. "Bring ye all the tithes into the store house, that there may be meat in mine house and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

The Assembly's Equipment Fund

In the Southern Presbyterian Church there is a drive on foot for $5,000,000 for the Assembly's Equipment Fund for the mission fields. We need this money to fit out the missionaries that are ready to go, to build homes for those on the field, to build chapels and churches, to build hospitals that are needed, and schools and dormitories. We cannot advance without this equipment. And you will have a great part in the great missionary advance if you give liberally and gladly to this fund.

"We give thee but thine own,

Whate'er the gift may be.

All that we have is Thine alone,

A trust, dear Lord, from thee."

"Christ has no hands but your hands to do His work today;

He has no feet but your feet to lead men in His way.

He has no tongue but your tongue to tell men how He died;

He has no help but your help to bring them to His side."

NORTH CAROLINA TRIUMPHANT

C. F. Evans, Southern Secretary, United Society of Christian Endeavor

In a calm and stately way, characteristic of her work, North Carolina swept past all previous Dixie Christian Endeavor records with 1,130 registered delegates for her "Quarter of a Century Jubilee" Convention, held at Greensboro, October 26-28, with almost 500 out-of-town registered delegates in attendance and almost 300 more who did not register.

The convention was held in the First Presbyterian Church, and in spite of a seating capacity of 800, scores of people were turned away from many services.

Assisting the state officers, pastors, and leaders in the convention, were Clarence Hamilton, National Field Secretary; Dr. A. E. Cory, formerly secretary of the Men and Millions Movement of the Disciples of Christ; Dr. J. M. Wells, President of the Theological Seminary, Columbia, S. C.; Rev. M. F. Daniels, Superintendent of Home Missions of Mecklenburg Presbytery, N. C.; Dr. Raymond Binford, President of Guilford College; Rev. Wade C. Smith, pastor of the Church-by-the-Side-of-the-Road; Rev. H. A. Fesperman, and Rev. N. M. Harrison, of the Convention City; Frank P. Wilson, Field Secretary for North Carolina and Virginia; Miss Mamie Gene Cole, All-South Junior Field Secretary; S. Wilkes Dendy and Lawrence Little, former Field Secretaries of the All-South Extension Committee; and Southern Secretary Evans.

Church News

DEATH OF MRS. KELLERSBERGER

By Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D.D.

It is with profound grief that we report the tragic death, on October 23d, of Mrs. Eugene R. Kellersberger, one of the loveliest and most consecrated of all the missionaries of our Church.

While she was on her father's great ranch near Kopperl, Texas, with her two little daughters, her father being absent on business, her stepmother, from whom her father had been separated for some time pending a complete divorce, and who had cherished a causeless hatred of Mrs. Kellersberger, went from Dallas to the ranch and shot Mrs. Kellersberger twice, death following almost instantly. The woman who committed the deed is in Bosque County jail, bail having been denied, awaiting trial for murder.

The father took the two little girls with the body of their mother to Concord, N. C., where lives his other daughter, Mrs. Earl Brown, member of the First Presbyterian Church, of Concord, where the funeral was held last Sunday afternoon at four o'clock.

An account of Mrs. Kellersberger's life and missionary service will appear later. The prayers of our whole Church are asked for the afflicted family, the two little girls, and especially for their father laboring for Christ in far away Congo. Let us pray that special grace may be given him to bear the heart-breaking news reaching him by cable.

It is comforting to know that in the home of their devoted aunt at Concord the little girls, seven and four, will find a suitable home.

THE ASSEMBLY MINUTES AND INCORPORATION OF CHURCHES

The article by Rev. W. L. Lingle, D.D., in a recent issue of the Presbyterian Standard, makes it necessary for me to make a brief statement.

I discovered shortly after Assembly adjourned the error in the minutes referred to in the article mentioned above. But I had no authority to change the record in the matter. The General Assembly has ruled that "When a court formally adopts the minutes of its proceedings they become the official minutes of that court." "Any error subsequently discovered by this court in its approved records may be corrected at its subsequent meeting, the correction appearing only in the minutes of that meet-

The State Banner, awarded for the best all-round society work, was won by the St. Andrew's Episcopal Society, Greensboro, which is the first Episcopal Society in Dixie to win a State Banner. This society is just a year old, but is doing splendid work.

The Second State Banner went to the West End Methodist Protestant Society, Greensboro.

The State Intermediate Shield was won by the Star, Union Society, Intermediates, while the State Junior Banner, was awarded to the Westminster Presbyterian Juniors, Greensboro.

The Lumber Bridge Juniors won the Missionary Banner and were awarded the beautiful silk, hand-made, Chinese Banner, which was awarded North Carolina for leading all of Dixie in the subscription contest for the Junior Christian Endeavor World, and will retain the banner for a year, when it will be awarded again. This society also won the regular State Missionary Pennant because of leading in the amount contributed to missions.

The Wallace Juniors were awarded the State Pennant for Junior Memory Work.

The Registration Banners went to the Southern, North and Northeastern Districts, in the order named.

North Carolina reported 102 new societies organized and one new alumni council. The work of the state has made splendid progress, the fellowship of the state officers is excellent, and the work of Field Secretary Wilson is everywhere evident in the strength and growth of society and district work. It will be remembered that North Carolina won first place in the Dixie States in the Christian Endeavor World and Junior Christian Endeavor World contests last year, and also holds the Dixie Junior Banner as the best all-round Junior State in Dixie.

The convention voted unanimously to hold its next State Convention at Richmond, Va., next July, in connection with the Fifth All-South Convention, that all Tar Heel Endeavorers might attend both conventions.

The following officers were elected: President, Paul W. Rawlins, Greensboro; vice-president, R. H. Gunn, Elon College; secretary, Miss Eunice Long, Greensboro; treasurer, J. O. Corbitt, Graham; field secretary, Frank P. Wilson.

Department Superintendents: M. S. P., Miss Emma Hutaff, Fayetteville; Junior, Mrs. W. H. Howell, Wilmington; Intermediate, Miss Kate DuBose, Winston-Salem; Publication, John C. Boyd, Charlotte; Prison Work, Miss Annie Wilson, Mebane; Tenth Legion and Missionary, Miss Maud Little, Charlotte; Quiet Hour and Life Work Recruit, Rev. H. F. Surratt, Whitesett; Alumni and Evangelistic, W. R. Eichberg, Raleigh.

ing." (Alexander Digest p. 168.) Nowhere does the Assembly authorize the stated clerk to change its official records. The time to correct minutes is when they are read to the court each morning.

While at Montreat in May I mentioned this minute to Dr. Lingle. In compliance with a suggestion which I made to Dr. Lingle, I wrote to each stated clerk of Presbytery as follows:

"With regard to the action of 'Church Property' found on page 62, it does not call for the adoption of these six items as an amendment to the Book of Church Order. In the preamble of the report you will find the words of the committee which are: 'The Assembly commends them to the favorable consideration of our church courts and congregations.' The Assembly adopted these six items and suggests that the churches and church courts use them to safeguard their church property."

I wrote the same thing to each stated clerk of Synod. No one regrets an error in the minutes more than the stated clerk. I also regret very much the limitations of my authority in such matters. If there is any blame attached I prefer to bear it rather than exceed my authority as stated clerk.

When it came to printing this paragraph I took a Blue Book where the paragraph was printed in full and marked around the entire paragraph. I gave it to the printer. The entire report had been printed in the Blue Book and in the Appendix to the minutes from the same type. All that was required was to transfer the type to the minutes. It had been proof read twice and it did not seem necessary to proof read it a third time. In some unaccountable way the thing occurred which Dr. Lingle mentions, the paragraph was in some way dropped. That is all there is to it.

WANTED

About 3,000 churches, or individuals, to do what was not done on the first Sunday in July, i.e., to make an offering for the support of the Southern work of the Lord's Day Alliance.

The General Assembly asked for $20,000 for this work from all of the churches. Less than 500 churches have responded with slightly under $2,000 total. This is not the Southern Presbyterian way of doing things. If for any reason the offering cannot be taken in any church, will not one or more individuals in the church send a voluntary contribution to the office of the Alliance in Nashville?

We now have a man on the field in West Virginia for his entire time. Our plans for an immediate organization of three other Southern states are fully matured but we need money and need it badly to complete this part of the program during this fall.

May we not hear from you, and if your church has made an offering will you not see that it is promptly remitted?

Our address is No. 201 Twenty-eighth Ave., North, Nashville, Tenn.

(Signed): I. Cochrane Hunt, Southern Secretary.

BARIUM NEWS

Truly, it would be hard to find a more beautiful place than Barium. The trees and shrubbery have now put on their gorgeous fall colorings, each seeming to be trying to make a prettier showing than the other. On a fair day, when all the children are on the campus, enjoying the various games and sports, it is inspiring to see them.

The new boys' dormitory is nearing completion, as well as the baby cottage. These buildings add so much to the attractiveness of the campus, both being very handsome. We are praying that some other big-hearted Christians whom God has blessed with a goodly portion of this world's goods, will open their hearts and enlarge the church and school-house. It would be splendid if there were a few Sunday School rooms added to the church, so that we would not have to go to the school-house for Sunday School. Of course the children would feel the difference.

There have been a number of attractive visitors here during the past week. We are always glad to see you good people.

Miss Templeton, Miss Holton, Miss McGoogan and Mrs. Ketchie attended the teachers' meeting in Charlotte.

Mr. Len Hostettler, who is a student at Oak Ridge, spent a few days at home last week.

Barium is well represented at the Christian Endeavor meeting at Greensboro. Mr. Nesbit, Miss Bendemon and eight of the children are there. We are sure they will come back full of inspiration and information.

The school is running along in good order. The children, as a whole, are interested and doing good work.

Miss Smith's sister, Mrs. Shea, of Kentucky, is spending a few days here with Miss Smith.

A HELP TO PASTORS

"Bullets For Bulletins" is the name of a monthly bulletin that is issued each month by the publicity department of the General Assembly's Stewardship Committee and sent out on request to pastors of churches issuing weekly church calendars. It is composed of a dozen or more brief paragraphs setting forth live news items from the various agencies of the church and pointed sayings suitable for inclusion in church bulletins and calendars. It is a unique service that the Assembly's Stewardship committee is rendering. Pastors desiring to receive this service may have their names placed on the mailing list by addressing this committee at 410 Times Building, Chattanooga, Tenn. As a return service they are asked to place the Assembly's Stewardship Committee on their mailing list for a copy of the church's local weekly calendar.

NORTH CAROLINA

Mooresville, First Church—On the second Sunday of October we held our fall communion. There was an unusually large number of communicants present. Four young people were received on profession of faith. Two infants were baptized that afternoon at our household service. Last Sunday we received two other new members by letter from the Church of Scotland.

New Presbytery Organized—A new Presbytery formed by the Synod of North Carolina, in session at Graham and Burlington, N. C., October 9, 1923, comprising Wake, Durham, Person, Granville, Vance, Warren, Franklin, Halifax and Nash Counties, was called to meet in First Presbyterian Church, Henderson, N. C., October 30th, 7:30 p. m.

Rev. W. McC. White, D.D., of Raleigh, who was appointed by Synod to convoke the new Presbytery, presided.

The sermon was preached by Rev. F. F. Comerford, of Oxford, N. C.

Sixteen ministers and 12 ruling elders answered to roll call.

Officers: Rev. W. McC. White, D.D., was elected moderator; Rev. Geo. L. Cooper, temporary clerk; Rev. J. S. Kennison stated clerk.

Trustees: 1. Of Presbytery—Mr. J. R. Young, Mr. J. F. Wiley and Mr. C. A. Lewis.

2. Davidson College—Rev. D. H. Scanlon, D.D.

3. Peace Institute—Rev. W. McC. White, D.D., and Mr. R. S. McCoin.

Executive Committees:

1. Presbyterian Home Missions—Rev. W. McC. White, D.D., Rev. D. H. Scanlon, D.D., Rev. F. F. Comerford, Mr. W. T. Watkins and Mr. E. B. Crow.

2. Foreign Missions—Rev. D. H. Scanlon, D.D., Rev. A. M. Earl and Mr. J. R. Rankin.

3. Assembly's Home Missions—Rev. C. K. Taffe, Rev. J. M. Millard and Mr. E. S. Edmunson.

4. Publication and Sunday School Extension—Rev. M. C. Bowling, Rev. T. W. Simpson, Mr. E. J. Wren and Mr. Robt. Williams.

5. Bible Cause—Rev. W. O. Sample, Rev. Lewis Collins and Mr. O. A. Daniel.

6. Orphans' Home—Mr. J. R. Young, Mr. G. F. Warner, and Mr. Walter Bullock.

7. Women's Work—Rev. Coyt Hunter, Rev. R. S. Carson and Mr. J. A. Simpson.

8. Young People's Work—Rev. Neill McInnis, Rev. T. W. Simpson and Mr. S. L. Claytor.

9. Stewardship—Rev. T. W. Simpson, Rev. J. M. Millard, Rev. W. McC. White, D.D., and Mr. J. R. Rankin.

10. Synodical Schools—Mr. D. H. Hill, Rev. C. K. Taffe, Mr. F. M. Martin and Mr. J. R. Young.

Rev. O. G. Jones, D.D., of East Mississippi Presbytery, was elected Presbyterial evangelist with the earnest hope that he may see his way clear to accept.

Petitions for three church organizations were presented, namely: East Vanguard Chapel, Vanguard Chapel, North, both in Raleigh, and the Ernest Myatt Chapel, near Raleigh.

A commission was appointed to effect these organizations.

The name chosen for the Presbytery is Granville.

The First Church, of Oxford, N. C., was chosen as place for the next stated meeting. The time of meeting to be named later.

After a vote of thanks for the thoughtful entertainment of the Henderson Church, Presbytery closed with song, prayer and benediction.

Rev. J. S. Kennison, S. C.

SOUTH CAROLINA

The Presbytery of Congaree met with the congregation of Union Church, Fairfield County, on October 29th and was opened with a sermon by Rev. J. M. Forbis. There were present 6 out of its 17 ministers and 10 out of its 29 churches were represented. The smallest attendance on record.

Rev. H. E. Wright was made moderator and Rev. G. G. Mayes stated clerk.

Rev. James Russell, of Bethel Presbytery and a former pastor of the church in which the Presbytery was meeting, was introduced to the body and accorded a seat as a corresponding member.

The Presbytery has 12 candidates for the ministry. Two having been received at this meeting, Messrs. George F. and Walter S. Swetnam, of Columbia.

The "over-shadowing issue" was the proposed removal of Columbia Seminary. The Presbytery went on record as opposing the removal to any other point and pledging itself to do all in its power to prevent the removal and also do its full share in supporting the seminary where it is now.

Rev. Albert E. S. McMahon, a minister ordained by the Baptist Church was introduced as seeking admission into the Presbytery. After the examinations prescribed for such cases proving most satisfactory, his name was enrolled as a member. He will continue his studies in the seminary and at the same time supply the Richland Church at Eastover.

After a most pleasant meeting the Presbytery adjourned to meet with the Shandon Church the second week in April, 1924.

G. G. Mayes, Clerk.

Enoree Presbytery met in Fairview Church, Fountain Inn, S. C., on October 30, 1923 and was opened with a sermon by Rev. F. B. Estes, the retiring moderator. Nineteen ministers and 27 ruling elders were present.

Organization: Rev. R. C. Morrison was elected moderator and Rev. F. B. Estes, temporary clerk.

Presbyterial Communion: The sacrament of the Lord's supper was celebrated. Tables and individual cups were used. Rev. H. W. DuBose, D.D., and Rev.

f. W. Sloan, D.D., officiated.

Dismissals: Rev. J. S. Lyons, Jr., was dismissed to Congaree; Rev. J. S. Davis to Central Mississippi; Rev. Asa D. Watkins to Roanoke and Rev. C. G. Gunn to Memphis Presbyteries.

Commissions: Commissions reported the ordination and installation of Rev. W. G. Neville as pastor of Landrum, Campobello and Clifton Churches and the ordination and installation of Rev. D. C. Stogner, as pastor of Simpsonville, Fulton and Lickville Churches. A commission was appointed to organize a church of our faith and order at Pacolet Mills.

Dissolutions: The pastoral relations existing between Rev. J. S. Lyons, Jr., and Greenville Fourth Church were dissolved by joint request, and the pastoral relations between Rev. A. G. Wardlaw, D.D., and Greens Church were dissolved on the request of the pastor. By a unanimous vote the congregation declined to unite with their pastor in the request to Presbytery.

Presbyterial Sermon: Rev. J. M. Wells, D.D., preached the sermon on the subject of "Family Religion." Rev. H. W. DuBose, D.D., was appointed to preach the sermon at the next stated meeting on "Why Our Church Believes in and Practices Sprinkling as the Mode of Baptism for Child and Adult;" with Rev. E. P. Davis as alternate.

Expression of Sympathy: Presbytery expressed its sympathy for Dr. T. H. Law in his illness and instructed the clerk to assure him of an interest in our prayers.

Time and Place of Next Meeting: Nazareth Church, Wellford, S. C., of which Rev. C. O'N. Martindale is pastor, was chosen as the place and Tuesday before the second Sabbath in April, 1924 at 7:30 p. m. as the time of the next regular meeting.

Local Home Missions: Pending the consideration of the excellent report of the committee, a popular conference was held on this subject and Rev. W. B. Goebel, Rev. D. C. Stogner and Rev. W. G. Neville were heard with interest in regard to their promising fields. Presbytery decided to raise $5,000 as a church erection fund to be used in assisting the people at Landrum, Simpsonville and Pacolet to erect houses of worship, after the Presbytery heard J. A. Phifer, H. E. Ravenel, Rev. J. K. Roberts and Rev. J. F. Mattheson and the amount of $1,190 was subscribed by the members present. The funds are to be sent to Rev. W. A. Hafner, treasurer, Gaffney, S. C. Presbytery planned to raise $10,000 for the coming year.

Other Causes: Full reports on Publication, Sunday School and Young People's Work, Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, Stewardship, Presbyterian College of South Carolina, Chicora College for Women, Thornwell Orphanage, Columbia Seminary, Men's Work and Foreign Missions were made to Presbytery. An interesting address was delivered by Rev. Darby Fulton on his personal experiences as a missionary in Japan. He is a member of Enoree Presbytery.

Vote of Thanks—By a unanimous rising vote, Presbytery tendered its thanks to the pastor, Rev. J. N. McCord, and the people of this historic church for their generous hospitality and pronounced the blessing of God upon them and their work. It was one of the most active and harmonious fall meetings ever held by Presbytery.

Stated Clerk.

APPALACHIA

Holston Presbytery met in its 101st stated session at Cold Spring Church, Holston Valley, Tenn., on Tuesday, October 16th, at 7:30 p. m. There were present 17 ministers and 24 ruling elders.

Rev. S. H. Hay, of Morristown, was elected moderator and Rev. W. C. Young, of Whitesburg, Tenn., temporary clerk.

Candidate William Whitlock, of Holston Valley, Tenn., was received under care of Presbytery.

Presbytery gave an emphatic NO to the Assembly's proposed amendment touching the incorporation of churches.

The Presbyterial sermon was preached by Rev. Robt. Yost, D.D., of Bristol, Tenn.

Presbytery dissolved the pastoral relation between Rev. Robt. King, D.D., and the Kingsport Church and granted him a letter of dismission to the Presbytery of Cherokee.

The next stated meeting will be held on the first Tuesday of May, in the church at Newland, N. C.

Outstanding features of this session of Presbytery were (1) the emphasis on preaching, shown in sermons by Rev. Geo. F. Robertson, D.D., Rev. Robt. Yost, D.D., Rev. Robt. King, D.D., and Rev. J. L. McMillan, D.D.; (2) the preparation of a set of instructions to clerks of sessions by Rev. Chas. B. Boyles and its adoption by Presbytery; (3) a popular meeting in the interest of the Sunday Schools of our Presbytery; (4) the reading of the long and honored list of names of the men who have gone forth from the Cold Springs Church into our ministry and mission service; and last but not least, the genial hospitality of the good people of Holston Valley.

Johnston City, Tenn.

ALABAMA

Montgomery—The First Church of this city has called Rev. John Robinson McMahan, D.D., of Crawfordsville, Ind.

Montgomery, Trinity Church—The Standard Training School was held in this church October 14th-18th.

It was conducted along strictly educational lines. A majority of the teachers and religious workers of Montgomery were enrolled. The leader, Rev. Gilbert Glass, D.D., delighted his large and appreciative class as he presented to them, "Organization and Administration of the Sunday School."

Mr. R. L. Landis and Miss Nancy White lectured on "The Teacher" and "The Pupil."

This school has not only helped to train leaders more efficiently in the Master's work but the Spiritual atmosphere prevailing has entered into lives, making them reconsecrate themselves to do the Master's work. Immediately following this school, Trinity had a 15 percent increase in attendance.

Training schools of this type are being conducted all over the South by the educational department at Richmond, Va.

Dr. Glass went from here to Atlanta, where a similar school was conducted. This will be followed by one in Jacksonville. Nashville will have this privilege in January.

East Alabama Presbytery met in Geneva, Alabama, Tuesday, October 23d. Sermon was preached by Rev. C. H. Pratt, D.D., the retiring moderator. Rev. R. M. Mann was elected moderator.

Presbytery adopted a new manual but postponed its printing until after the next meeting.

The president of the Woman's Presbyterial Auxiliary was made by Presbytery an ex officio member of the Stewardship Committee.

Prattville, Ala., October 29, 1923.

FLORIDA

Jacksonville—The first anniversary of the pastorate of Dr. Robert H. McCaslin in the Riverside Church occurred the last Sabbath in October. During this year 447 new members have been received into the church; two new missions organized; the handsome new Bible school building completed. The church now has a membership of over 1,200.

Jacksonville—The Sunday Schools of the various Presbyterian Churches of the city met together for the week of October 28th to November 2d in a training school for the teachers and workers. The attendance was splendid. There were three courses taught; Methods and Administration, by Mr. Duncan B. Curry; Primary Methods, by Miss Elizabeth McE. Shields; and the Life of Christ, by Rev. R. T. Chafer.

GEORGIA

Atlanta, North Avenue Church—Dr. Harris E. Kirk, of Baltimore, will conduct a Bible conference in this church on November 6th-15th.

Atlanta, Central Church—Rev. B. R. Lacy, Jr., pastor. A red letter day in the history of Central Presbyterian Sunday School was that of Rally Day, October 14th, when 1,664 gathered for the occasion. The attendance goal had been set at 1,593. This number exceeded last year's figures by 156. The junior department carried off honors, having 77 in attendance, more than the quota allotted them and so won the pennant. The brotherhood and young woman's Bible class combined their programs, occupying the church auditorium, realizing from past experience that their respective class-rooms would be inadequate on Rally Day. The young people's department had set as their goal "300 percent" and succeeded in having 346 in attendance. Each department worked faithfully and zealously to make this a successful day. Special music furnished by the Berry School's quartet added greatly to the pleasure of the day.

Thyatira Church—Judge Lewis C. Russell, of Windler, under the auspices of the laymen of the Athens Presbytery, held a splendid service at Thyatira Church near Jefferson, last Sunday afternoon. Judge Russell took for his subject the "Origin and Problem of Authority," and for 30 minutes he held the rapt attention of the congregation while he explained the origin of authority, and discussed in an able and judicial manner the problems now confronting the people not only of Georgia, but of the whole wide world on the subject of "law and order."

Judge Russell's discussion of this important question produced a profound impression on all present and one of his auditors, at the conclusion of the Judge's remarks in congratulating the Judge, frankly told him that he "knew all along that the judge was a good judge of law, but that he never knew before that he was "a good preacher as well as a good lawyer."

Judge Russell makes it a rule to open his courts with prayer offered by himself from the bench, thus showing his own implicit reliance upon Divine help and assistance in the proper administration of justice, and his action along this line meets with heartiest commendation from the people throughout the circuit where he has been holding court up to the present time.

TENNESSEE

White Pine—The many friends of Rev. W. Bruce Doyle will learn with pleasure that his health has improved enough to leave Hot Springs, N. C., where he has been for some time, and be on the "retired list" for a short time. His physicians think that a rest of a year or two will restore him to his health. He is among old friends, to whom he once ministered, and now he will enjoy "otium cum dignitate."

Morristown—Rev. S. H. Hay, pastor of Morristown Presbyterian Church is preaching to large and deeply interested congregations a series of sermons on the "Essentials of Christian Living."

Memphis—Rev. H. B. Wade, the new pastor of Lamar Heights Church, Memphis, began a meeting September 30th which continued two weeks. He was assisted by the superintendent of Home Missions, Rev. J. J. Hill, and Mr. J. L. Neely, who directed the praise service. The attendance was very good, and the church members were revived and strengthened. Twenty-eight were added to the membership, four on profession of faith, and 24 by certificate and other satisfactory information.

The pastor was installed by a commission of the Presbytery the last night of the meeting. The pastor and people are greatly encouraged, and a bright future is before them.

J. J. Hill.

Rock Island—Three years ago Rev. F. L. Leeper, finding this dual community—the village and the great works of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., near-by—entirely destitute of the preached Word, began to preach there every month and started a meeting there October 21st. Rev. J. P. Robertson, D.D., came to his assistance next day and preached twice daily for nine days. Interest among the unconverted soon developed. There were about 30 professions of faith in Christ as Saviour, and nearly a dozen were expressing themselves as seekers after life when the meeting closed. A Presbyterian church could have been organized with at least 20 members, but they may try the "community-church" plan for a time. "They shall still bear fruit in old age" is aptly illustrated by Rev. F. L. Leeper, with an activity for souls that may well put to shame many ministers of half his years, and the song of joy in his heart seeming sweeter as he hears the eternal dawn.

VIRGINIA

East Hanover Presbytery—Place of meeting: Concord congregation of the Brunswick Church, October 16th to 18th. Opening sermon was preached by Rev. T. A. Painter, of Emporia. Organization: Rev. L. H. Lancaster, one of our missionaries to China, was elected moderator and Rev. John R. Williams temporary clerk. Present: 25 ministers and 15 elders.

A memorial from Rev. W. M. McPheeters in regard to the reception of Rev. Leighton Stuart, of China, into the Presbytery, was received and referred to a committee, who gave it careful consideration. The committee reported: Evidence having been submitted to the Presbytery that the letter granted Dr. Stuart a number of years ago to a Presbytery in China, which Presbytery was divided as the letter was due to be received, and said letter never had been received and no record of Dr. Stuart's reception could be found in any Chinese Presbytery, his name was ordered restored to the roll of East Hanover Presbytery.

In reply to Dr. McPheeters, it was shown that his marked copy of Dr. Stuart's notes, of which he complained, had been used in the examination of Dr. Stuart, at the time of his appearing before Presbytery in the spring. That Dr. Stuart had denied the notes as expressing his belief and had repudiated the same, at the same time stating that he had not read the notes before they were published, and had not seen a copy until he had been attacked. Dr. Stuart avowed his acceptance of the Confession of Faith and other standards of our Church.

Candidates for the ministry: Mr. Yosef, of Persia, and Mr. Randolph Atkinson, a grandson of Rev. Thos. Jones, D.D., a former pastor for 30 years, of the church in which Presbytery was meeting; was received under the care of Presbytery as candidates for the ministry. Both are at Hampden-Sidney College pursuing their literary studies.

Stewardship: A conference was held on the question of Stewardship, several addresses being made, and $157,000 was apportioned the various causes. The Equipment Fund was commended to all of the churches and they urged to raise funds for this cause.

Home Missions, both Assembly and Presbyterial was stressed and the needs of Presbyterial Mission was presented by addresses and recommendations. The following mission points were ordered opened: North Richmond, Bellevue Park, Byrd Park, Woodland Heights, Forrest Hill, and Drurie's Bluff.

Seven thousand, five hundred dollars was voted with which to aid in the erection of new building. The last four years showed a net gain in the Presbytery of 1,399 communicants as over against 206 preceding 1918. The additions to Home Mission churches had been 1,135 just about the same as the net gain of the Presbytery. Some 200 have been received this past summer. $20,000 was asked for next year's work and plans laid to make even a larger sum available for buildings in the near future. Three new church buildings and three new manses were reported as having been completed during the year.

New churches at Colonial Heights, Petersburg, Bret-Reed Memorial, King William County and Centralia between Petersburg and Richmond were reported organized since the spring meeting. A petition was granted for the organization of the Reed Memorial mission in Richmond.

Where the evangelistic meetings had not been held Presbytery urged that this be done during the winter. The Presbyterial Assessment was increased 25 percent in order to meet the increased expenses of the Presbytery.

Foreign Missions in connection with the report, was given attention, and a most delightful season was spent by Presbytery in connection with the great subject; a number of addresses were made, and the missionaries, especially those who have gone out this year were most earnestly remembered in prayer.

Next place of meeting: Grove Avenue Church, Richmond, April 21st, 8 p. m.

PERSONAL

The many friends of Mrs. E. F. Reid, president of the North Carolina Synodical, will sympathize with her in the death of her husband. He was a Christian gentleman and a friend of the writer.

Davidson College—Advance copies have been received of the "History of Davidson College," by Miss Cornelia R. Shaw. The book is from the Fleming H. Revell Press, New York—contains 317 pages, more than 25 illustrations and an appendix of 30 pages. The foreword is written by Dr. Henry Louis Smith, president of Washington and Lee University. The book contains nine chapters as follows: The Seed Sowing, The Beginning, Strengthening the Stakes, The Civil War Period and Decade Following, The Period of Transition, The Period of Expansion, The Curriculum and Miscellanea, Student Life and Campus Activities, Davidson Men in the World War.

Davidson is fortunate as a college in having in its military unit several men of marked Christian character and zeal. Sunday the "Y" was addressed by Captain Weems who gave an appreciative and pleasing account of religious work among the cadets at West Point.

Flora Macdonald College—The "Y" is planning to send four delegates, one faculty member and three students to the Student Volunteer Conference at Indianapolis, December 23d-31st. In order to raise money to meet the expenses of the trip a "Y" Jobbery Campaign has been started. Voluntary contributions are being asked for. A gift of $50 was recently received from a former president, Sara Barnhardt, '22, now a student at Columbia University.

The mission study classes have all been organized and have taken as their subject, "Japan on the Upward Trail."—Axing.

The Carolina Playmakers from the University of North Carolina will open their eastern tour at Red Springs on November 19th, presenting a series of three new plays, with a cast of 18 people.

William Kamey Bennett, one of the most brilliant lecturers on the American platform, with a record of 12 times in Detroit, ten times in New York and 100 percent repeat in western New York, will be heard at the college on December 3d in "Pathways to Power."

On December 10th, Dr. Frederick Koch, of the University, will give Dickens' "A Christmas Carol." This reading has been given by the head of the Carolina Playmakers on 16 separate occasions and always to crowded houses.

Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.—The speaker on Reformation Day, in Schaeffler Hall, was Rev. Gabriel Vernier, pastor of the Reformed Church at Chateau-Thierry, on the Marne—names that will always thrill American hearts. He spoke the same evening in the Second Church, Dr. Cecil's, to a mass meeting under the auspices of the Huguenot Evangelical Society, of Richmond. The special work which this society undertakes at present is the raising of $500 a year to aid in supporting a minister at Maubeuge, one of the places where the Presbyterian Church was destroyed by the Germans.

Professor Ernest Thompson was the preacher that day at the Church of the Pilgrims, in Washington, and Dr. W. L. Lingle, at the First Church, Birmingham, Ala.

Dr. W. W. Moore was the preacher at the dedication of the Highland Church, at Huntington, W. Va., a week or two ago.

Dr. Edward Mack is giving this week a series of Bible studies in Atlanta.

A great deal of this extension work is done by the professors in the course of the year.

John Tyler, of the McAuley Mission, New York, spoke to the students at chapel on Saturday morning, giving the amazing story of his dissipated life and his conversion.

The Presbyterian League, of Richmond, raised over $10,000 on its budget at its annual supper last Friday evening. W. R. M.

Queens College—On last Wednesday evening, a very enjoyable recital was tendered the faculty and student body by Miss Meme Hampton (Ky.), post-graduate of Queens. She read in a most delightful manner, "Pollyanna," the famous story by Eleanor H. Porter. She was assisted by Miss Beulah Holmes (N. C.), who gave several vocal selections, accompanied by Miss Carrilee Scheussler (Ala.).

The Georgia Club was organized Saturday, its first meeting being held in Gamma Hall. The following officers were elected: Caroli Graham, Bainbridge, president; Ruth Starnes, Rome, secretary; Mary Scurry, Rome, treasurer; Laura Frances Steele, LaFayette, and Dr. Mozelle Ashford, Athens, reporters; Louise Kay, Rome, historian; Mildred Pitts, Elberton, social chairman. The club will hold monthly meetings, and Georgia news and Georgia affairs will be reported upon and discussed.

The senior class has put on a financial campaign, and from time to time will give entertainments of various kinds to this end. Saturday night, this class realized a substantial sum through an entertainment given in the gymnasium. While refreshments were being served the college orchestra played several selections and different novelty stunts were presented by members of the student body.

For the sake of getting better acquainted, each student was asked to "draw" for a different table in the dining room last week, thus forming new groups at each table. Tables will be changed around again in about six weeks.

Greenbrier College—The students of Greenbrier College for Women settled down to lessons weeks ago, and at the end of a month, even the least sophisticated of the freshmen have learned the daily routine of meals, classes, study hall, mail call, light bell. Now comes a new idea, sponsored by our president, Mr. J. Marion Moore: the formation of two literary societies.

From each class in the preparatory and college departments, two representatives were chosen to formulate the plans necessary to the beginning of any organization. These 12 girls divided themselves into two groups. It is to them, the charter members, that credit must be given for the naming of the societies, the issuing of invitations to each member of the student body, the drawing up of a constitution and by-laws, etc. This week the question on the campus is, "Which shall we join, the Pi Beta Sigma or the Epsilon Alpha Pi?" Next week the question will be, "What horrors of initiation will those charter members devise for our benefit?" Then will come the serious business of election of officers, appointing of committees, mapping out of programs for the year. Much general culture that has no definite place in the curriculum should result from these societies. Study of such forms of literature as the short story or drama, study of our state literature, study of opera, of painting, study of statutory or parliamentary law and debate—these are among the more ambitious aims of the charter members.

The Edgar Allan Poe and the Percy Bysshe Shelley Literary Societies are in their infancy yet; but president, dean, faculty, students, all have high hopes for the future development of the organization.

Agnes Scott—The benevolent budget of the Y. W. C. A. was presented, on October 25th, and enthusiastically subscribed. It calls for $2,000 for the session; and it is divided about as follows: 50 percent for Foreign Missions, including the partial support of Miss Emily Winn, one of our Agnes Scott graduates, in Korea; 25 percent to Home Mission causes; and 25 percent to caring for local needs of a benevolent nature.

The college is making preparations to send its full quota of delegates to the Quadrennial Student Volunteer Conference in Indianapolis. Our students will entitle us to five student representatives and one member of the faculty. We will also send our full allowance to the Biennial Y. W. C. A. National Conference in New York.

The college community is looking forward with keen interest to the coming of Dr. G. Campbell Morgan for a week of services in November. He was with us last year and his meetings were a source of great blessing to the college.

Peace Institute—Miss Mamie McElwee, of Statesville, conference secretary of the Woman's Synodical Auxiliary, was a visitor at Peace the past week. Miss McElwee met with the Y. W. C. A. cabinet and discussed their problems with them.

The members of the Peace Institute faculty were at home to their friends Thursday afternoon, October 26th. The parlors of the school were beautifully decorated with yellow and white chrysanthemums and bright autumn leaves.

Miss Lovie Jones introduced the guests to the receiving line composed of Miss May McLelland, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Pressly, Mrs. Ruth Huntington Moore (Miss Meribah Moore, Miss Margaret Ingram and Miss Edmonia Martin. Others receiving were Mrs. Margaret Merrimon Kenney, Misses Knowles, Walker, Bowen, Shamburger, Mary Price, Vera Rountree, Gertrude Ware, Mrs. W. R. McLelland, Mrs. A. H. Davis, and Mr. J. P. Brawley.

Pouring tea were Misses Emma Melvin, Elizabeth Linton, and Mrs. A. E. Barbee.

Assisting in serving were members of the student council; Miss Elizabeth McKellar, president of the student council; Miss Bleka Cornelius, treasurer of the student body; Miss Harriet Marrow, president of the senior class; Miss Elizabeth Turner, president of the junior class; Miss Mary Watkins Bullock, president of the sophomore class; Miss Earl Gaskill, president of the freshman class; Miss Ethel Hitt, senior representative on the student council; Miss Maude Barnes, president of the day pupils, and Miss Elizabeth Oden, president of the Sigma Phi Kappa Society.

Stillman Institute—We are all much interested in this center for Christian education for colored boys and girls, the only school of its kind conducted by the Southern Presbyterian Church. We have enrolled so far 121, boys 56, and girls 65. We have increased our faculty to eight, four men and four women, who have consecrated their lives to this most important Home Mission task. The new dining hall and assembly room has been occupied now for about two weeks adding much to the work and has brought a sigh of relief to the dean of the girls' school since it is adjacent to the girls' dormitory. The school is growing very fast and we find our equipment quite inadequate to meet the present demands. We are in great need of an enlarged shop with more tools for the boys and an increased supply of material with which to work. The science department is also unequipped for the study of chemistry and plant life so essential to farm demonstration. We are very anxious to standardize our school but cannot until we equip some of our departments.

You desire an increased moral and industrial force among the colored race; Christian training will bring the desired results. Christian Education is the dominating force that will bring to pass God's ideal for all races of mankind.

Will you send us some of your most select colored boys and girls from your church community who will be leaders among their people and give us the equipment and by the Lord's help we will return a trained product of which you will be proud. Pray for big results on equipment Sunday in December.

Rev. R. A. Brown, Superintendent of the Colored Department of Home Mission Work of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

News of the Week

David Lloyd George, the war-time premier of Great Britain, while in this country, recently visited the battlefields of Virginia. Comparing the War Between the States with the World's War, he confessed that it had failed to develop either a Lee or Jackson, but that Foch came the nearest to Lee.

The thousand Christian Endeavorers recently in meeting at Greensboro, N. C., have adjourned. The following officers were elected: President, Paul Rawlins Greensboro; vice-president, R. H. Gunn, Elon College; secretary, Miss Eunice Long, Greensboro, treasurer, J. O. Corbett, Graham. Rev. Dr. John M. Wells, president of Columbia Theological Seminary, delivered his message to the young people, an address brimming with encouragement, counsel and appeal for further advance of Christian Endeavor in all lines. He called attention to the straight way, its joys and its rewards.

Bonar Law, the only colonial-born premier of Great Britain, died last week with cancer of the throat.

The white plague is taking a heavy toll of life in North Carolina, according to facts brought out at the North Carolina Conference on Tuberculosis at Durham. Dr. F. M. Register, of Raleigh, keeper of vital statistics, brought out the fact that seven people die daily in North Carolina from tuberculosis, and that more people die in North Carolina each year as a result of tuberculosis than from any one disease, the speaker continued. Deaths from this disease far outnumber the total deaths caused by malaria, scarlet fever, typhoid fever, small-pox, measles, pellagra, meningitis, whooping cough, burns and railroad accidents, he said.

Slight, but distinct earth tremors were felt in Memphis, Tenn., and over a large part of Arkansas and Mississippi. Windows were rattled and newspapers were deluged with telephone inquiries from Pine Bluff, Ark., Tunica, and Tupelo, Miss., and other towns.

Sheriff W. P. Maberry, of Cabarrus County, N. C., has resigned because he cannot live on the salary of $3,500 allowed him on the fee system.

Julius H. Barnes, of New York, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, at a board of trade dinner asserted that "events in Europe are shaping for the probable final clearing of questions which have so perplexed the world," and based it largely upon the progress made in the appointment of an expert committee to examine Germany's capacity to settle its reparations obligations.

Europe is to make another effort to unravel the everlasting reparation tangle. The British government has decided to accept the French premier's reservations and the British charge d'affaires at Washington was instructed by cable to inform Secretary Hughes of the decision of the powers to enter a conference of experts such as Mr. Hughes suggested in his reply to Foreign Secretary Curzon's plea for American participation.

The fine old colonial mansion in which Theodore Roosevelt was given to the nation—half hidden now by the office buildings that tower above it at 28 East Twentieth street, New York, was consecrated on his birthday as a national shrine of American patriotism.

Secretary of State W. N. Everett must return $1 to each of the 73,000 or more persons who have applied for automobile certificates of title under the new North Carolina automobile title registration act, according to a ruling made by Attorney General James S. Manning, holding that a fee of $1 charged for affixing the seal of the state is voided by a clause in the statute.

Desirous of being able to present to Congress in December a concrete program of agricultural relief, President Coolidge has begun serious consideration of the proposal that the war finance corporation finance the sale of surplus wheat to Europe.

Plundering and violence have suddenly become so general and menacing throughout the Ruhr that both the French and German authorities are beginning to realize that something drastic must be done to remove the economic causes immediately.

The national assembly at Angora has voted the establishment of the Turkish republic. Mustapha Kemal Pasha has been unanimously elected president.

CHILDREN

HAS A LITTLE BROTHER

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl eight years old. I enjoy reading the letters and stories. I am in the third grade at school. My school teacher is Miss Fannie Sue Donnell; I like her fine. My Sunday School teacher is Miss Sarah Fletcher Bryan. I have a brother two years old. Please do not put my letter in the wastebasket, for I want to surprise my mother and daddy.

Your little friend,

Elizabeth Baker Green.

FEED THEM WITH THE BOTTLE

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy seven years of age. I go to school, am in the second grade. My teacher is Miss Annie Baker; she is a grand one too. I go to Sunday School at New Salem Presbyterian Church; my teacher is Miss Ellis, I like her fine also. Our pastor is Rev. L. L. Moore, we are all very fond of him. We have two little calves, we feed them on the bottle. We milk six cows. I milk every night and morning and help feed them. I have a nice shepherd dog and two little kittens for my pets. I have one brother and one sister. Please publish my letter as I want to surprise daddy and mother.

Your little friend,

Brown Patterson.

POLLY'S TRAMP

Dale was half-past-five and Polly much-past-forty, yet they were the best of friends. People often wondered just how old Polly really was, but, like many of her sex, she wouldn't tell. It made Dale very happy to know he was one of her chosen friends, for Polly did not like many people.

Hadn't Dale watched many a boy, much older than he, coax her to play with them? To sing, talk or to dance for them? But Polly would turn her back and not say a word. Did they try to so much as touch her—Biff! and somebody had a sore finger.

Now you know Polly wasn't a woman. No, she was a pretty green parrot with a bright yellow head and a fleck of scarlet on her wings. She could imitate the voice of each member of the family and sometimes she caused considerable confusion by her mischievous ways.

"Here, Shep! Here Tony!" she would call and when the dogs came running, all they heard was a teasing, "Ha! Ha! Get out. Sic 'em!" from Polly, high up in the plum tree. The angry dogs would leap at the tree, snarling and growling, but Polly, safe beyond their sharp teeth, only laughed and danced in naughty delight.

Indeed, she and the little boy just about lived in that plum tree in the summer. Sometimes Polly insisted upon staying out there all night, and once Dale begged to sleep there, too. His mother laughed and asked him if he thought he could curl his pink toes around a limb firmly enough to perch there in his sleep, like Polly did. He tried it one evening, but, whenever he closed his eyes he almost tumbled down, so he had to give that up. But from his little bed he could watch her, playing among the branches nearest his window, using her strong, curved beak to help her short toes. Usually her funny, "Good-night, Dale! Go to sleep! Go to sleep!" was the last thing he heard.

Though Polly teased the dogs, she really liked them, but, Oh! how she hated cats! She tried to kill every one she saw. After a battle with one she would dash into her cage and beg to be shut up.

"Shut that door! Good night! Poor Polly! Good night!" she would mutter over and over as she dressed her rumpled feathers and counted the cost. But Polly had one bad fault. Some former owner had taught her ugly swear words which Dale's mother did not want her little boy to hear, and she said them before guests several times, too, so they talked of selling Polly, and Dale's heart was broken.

One day a glittering limousine rolled up to their door and the rich and stately Mrs. Armitage came to call. They started toward the garden to see daddy's famous tulips, the great lady laughing and chattering.

Suddenly, "Shut up, you old chatter-box!" growled a gruff voice. The lady shut up. In fact she froze. So did everybody else—until—"Ha! Ha! Pretty lady! Pretty lady!" laughed Polly, and the caller had to laugh, too. So Dale and his mother dared to breathe again but the little boy nearly choked when—

"Such a clever bird! Will you sell her?" asked their guest.

"Well, I—I hardly know," replied Dale's mother, feeling a tug at her skirt. The lady named a price that was very tempting, adding, "I've always wanted a parrot and this one seems very smart."

"I'll let you know in a few days," she was promised.

As soon as the great lady had glittered away, what do you suppose that naughty Polly did? Climbed on top of the sewing machine, where she knew perfectly well she had no business to be, and proceeded to empty the darning basket. When Dale's mother drove her off, such dreadful words were hurled at the good lady as to make her cover her ears, shuddering. That settled it, as Dale very well knew, and he wept.

That evening Dale was at the plum-tree window, watching for his father, as it was nearly time for him to come home. The little boy's mother had left him in charge of his little sister, asleep in her crib, while she went to the store for a few minutes, or he would have been down at the end of the lane as usual, waiting for daddy.

He had cried so long and so hard about giving up the pet that he could not see plainly, and at first he thought that was his mother coming slowly up the lane. He had not expected her quite so soon and, anyway, she always tripped along so fast and so happily.

Dashing away the tears he looked again. Was it? Could it be? It was—a tramp! His heart almost stopped beating. What should he do? He ran to the baby, paused—Mother had said not to carry her. Oh! dear! Back to the window again he ran. Yes, there he was, a ragged, dirty creature, shambling along under the trees, his bleary eyes alert for dogs.

Dale tried to scream, but the lump in his throat choked him, and anyway, he musn't wake baby sister. Suddenly the little fellow snatched a brook stick he had been riding, bravely stationed himself just inside the kitchen door. That bad man should not touch his precious little sister. Oh! if daddy would only hurry! It was almost time.

"Get out! GET OUT! Here Shep! Here Tony! Sic 'em! Sic 'em!" His father's voice. The stick fell from Dale shaking hands. Out he ran to tell his father how—but where was daddy? There was the tramp, hot-footing it down the lane with all his might, not even stopping for his old hat, scraped off by a low hanging plum branch.

The dogs came bounding and barking. They pounced on the hat and tore it to shreds. The tramp speeded up still more, his ragged coat-tails fairly cracking in the wind.

Dale laughed and called his father and—

"Daddy! Oh, Daddy!" mimicked a mocking voice from the plum-tree.

"Where is he, Polly?" asked Dale, but that busy bird had caught sight of pussy, peeping around a corner. Down she darted, scolding: "Get out! GET OUT! Here Shep! Here Tony! Sic 'em! Sic 'em!" His father's voice again, exactly as before.

"Why Polly Was that you? Did you scare away that bad man?" Dale could hardly believe it possible, but daddy certainly was not there. "Oh, if mother had only heard her," he thought, his face brightening.

That little woman, white and breathless, came running up the lane.

"Are you all right!" she panted.

"Was he here—that awful tramp?"

Gladly, proudly her son poured out the exciting story, adding beseechingly, "So now you won't sell her, will you, Mother? She don't mean those bad words. She's only a little bird. And I'll try to teach her not to, Please, Please, Mother."

The little woman was too choked for speech as she strained both her children to her throbbing heart.

"Anyway nuther tramp might come and it would be awful handy to have Polly round. Oh! Mother!" For Dale had caught sight of his mother's happy, tear-wet eyes.

"Goodie! Goodie! Now you're safe, Polly! Mine forever'nd ever!"—P. Revere, in The Presbyterian.

MUSQUASH'S TAIL

Bill Bullfrog had a habit of laughing at people. Whenever he heard or saw anything which he considered particularly funny, he made the whole neighborhood in his corner of the lake resound with his "Jug-a-rung." He had been convulsed with laughter ever since Johnny Musquash had built his house out in the center of the lake. For Johnny Musquash, who who preferred the name Musquash to Muskrat because there were so many different kinds of rat, had a month ago decided to change his place of living from creek to lake and had settled within easy sight of Bill Bullfrog.

What amused Bill Bullfrog so was the appearance of Johnny's tail. As he watched Johnny come and go along the bank of the lake, he was very much struck by the sight of his slender, scaly, long tail skimming over the water. Whenever he looked at it it seemed that the very sight of it made him break out into one of his loud "Jug-a-rungs." Bill wasn't a bad fellow; he didn't mean to be making fun. But he just couldn't keep from making a noise when he looked at it.

One day when he was unusually noisy when he had seen Johnny Musquash, Johnny rowed his body-boat along by the side of the place where Bill sat under a water-lily and said: "Friend, you seem to be mighty happy. But I'd just like to ask you why it is that you find so much to laugh about?"

The words made Bill blink his eyes and become sober, for he wouldn't have hurt Johnny's feelings for the world. But Bill was a truthful soul above all else; so he answered: "Johnny Musquash, I don't want to hurt your feelings. You'll pardon me when I tell you that I just can't refrain from laughing at your tail!" With that Bill gave out a great "Jug-a-rung" which shook the corner of the lake.

When he had become quiet, Johnny, restraining himself as well as he could, asked: "And what, pray, is the matter with my tail?"

"Nothing, I suppose," returned Bill. "But it's so skinny! I noticed Mr. Coon when he comes down to get a drink; his tail is a beautiful streamer. I see Mrs. Squirrel occasionally; she has a gorgeous mop of fur. But yours is so slender and smooth. I don't mean to be impolite, but I've often wondered why it is so." Bill was just about to "Jug-a-rung" again. But Johnny began to talk before he started his laughter.

"Bill, you've forgotten the time when you yourself had a tail, haven't you?"

Bill had always been sensitive about that. He remembered that he had changed his form somewhat, but he didn't like to go back to his childhood days. "Yes," he replied, his tone somewhat different. "But that's all passed away now."

"Yes, but the point I want to make is this: When you used to live altogether in the water in your childhood days, you looked like a fish. In fact, you were almost a fish; and you needed that tail for your life in the water. As you grew older and moved out for a life upon the land, you gradually lost your tail because you had no use for it. Now, I spend the most of my time in the water, and so I need a tail."

But Bill was still not convinced. "You're not a fish, Johnny. You don't swim with your tail. And if you're to have a tail at all, why not have one like Mrs. Squirrel?"

"No, I'm not a fish. But I use my tail as a rudder in swimming. I use it, too, in making my house. It's a kind of paddle with which I may pat down the rooms of my house. As for having a tail like Mrs. Squirrel, you must admit that fur would be in my way in doing the work which I must do with my tail. It's all very well for Mrs. Squirrel and Mr. Coon to have streamers of beauty. But I understand that a thing becomes beautiful—most beautiful—when it may be put to some use." Johnny Musquash nodded his head in a way to show that he had given a very convincing argument.

Bill Bullfrog seemed to think that he had too. For he grunted his agreement and expressed a wish that Johnny would not hold it against him because he had laughed at his very useful ornament. And since that time, though Bill Bullfrog may be heard laughing his "Jug-a-rung," he has been very careful not to leave the impression with Johnny Musquash that he is laughing at Johnny's tail. In fact, he tries to be quiet when Johnny comes near him.—J. A. Dunn, in Banner.

Story and Incident

THE COWARD

It was a fact that John Armstrong seemed to be a misfit in the surroundings amid which he was born. Why this studious, thoughtful boy should have called upon to live on Utah ranch and have been expected to ride and tame wild horses when he was deadly afraid of them was one of the mysteries of life. John's father had been born in the East and had been educated with all the care that is given to the son of a more prosperous man. Not contented to take things easier than most boys were able to do, he surprised his family one day with the announcement that he wished to go West and make a place for himself, instead of dropping into his father's very comfortable shoes. Finally going to Utah, he went onto a ranch, which he took to as naturally as though there had been generations of out-or-door people behind him.

John's mother could not understand where his "softness," as she called it, came from—certainly not from her, for she could ride any horse in the country and was a better marksman than most of the men. His father understood, and counseled patience. "Do not be in a hurry," he would say to the mother, "I have seen his kind before. The boy is made of good material, and that is the main thing. There are plenty of things for a man to do besides loping around a ranch. Perhaps John was intended to take the place in the East that was mapped out for me."

John was fifteen the year that old Brush Creek went on a rampage and rose higher than it had done for thirty years. It stormed along like an army, taking with it many of the bridges, and at last away went the dam at the head of the canal, which spilled over from end to end, covering the lower fields with six feet of water. The creek, which had never been known to stay up more than three days, was now in the sixteenth day of its flood, and the range riders brought the disquieting news that yet five feet of solid snow still remained at the head of the creek, and it was still raining.

The threatening danger grew greater, and promised to engulf all of Mr. Armstrong's possessions. He and all of the neighboring ranchmen were out, fighting night and day to save their property. He had been away from home for forty-eight hours, and John and his mother had been obliged to look after the ranch and the stock.

The old saying that "it never rains but it pours" proved true at this time also, for John's mother, who had hardly known a day's sickness in her life, became ill. She kept about for a whole day, trying to conceal her suffering from John, but in the evening she went in a heap on the floor. Floods mattered but little to John then, for there was his precious mother, dying as he believed, and no one but himself to care for her. He managed to get her into bed, but nothing he did for her helped and the suffering increased. The nearest doctor was ten miles away, and on the other side of the mad, roaring creek. And how could he leave his mother who would probably die while he was away.

But he knew that he must get help, and that it would not do to delay. The only horse in the corral was The Terror, for his father and the men had ridden the others away when they had gone to fight the water. Even the best riders thought twice before mounting The Terror. John had a great sinking of the heart as he thought of what was ahead of him, but he did not hesitate, for he would have gone through fire for his mother.

Either The Terror welcomed company on this stormy night, or she was too surprised to resist for she was easily caught and saddled. But as soon as John was mounted she recovered her senses, and in a twinkling her four feet were bunched, and she tried to make herself into an aeroplane. But John's fear for his mother had driven all weakness away and he stuck to the horse. He applied the whip so vigorously that the animal reconsidered matters and started on a wild run across the plain. But he again used the whip as if to urge her on to greater speed. This was more than her horse sense could work out, and so she decided to settle down to good steady work. John always maintained after his experience with her that The Terror was all right—that she had been enlooking for a master and had not found one until he had taken this wild ride.

On and on they went, at break-neck speed, but never fast enough to satisfy John, for always ahead of him was the white face of his mother and the fear that he might not get the doctor back home in time. He talked to the horse as though she were a human being, telling her that she must not fail him. And she seemed to understand, for she put forth every effort. Once or twice she stumbled into a hole and nearly fell, but she recovered her footing and was on her way again. Once they had to ford a stream which was very high, and the horse hesitated for a second when she

If The Tools Are Dull Who Is To Blame ?

Digging Diamonds is very expensive, often disappointing, requires the best of equipment, but is exceedingly profitable. Our Church is mining "Diamonds" and our Missionaries are our Miners. Their failures are ours; their success ours. Some day the Owner of the Mines will come and gather together the result of our work.

If a Missionary is forced to dig his "Jewels" out of mother earth with meager equipment; lose valuable time with dull tools; wear his life out on non-essentials and fails to discover our Lord's Jewels—THEN WHO IS TO BLAME?—The Missionary? He has been pleading for years for a few essential tools.

Our Church has had all kinds of campaigns. The people of our Church get for themselves about what they want. The Assembly is asking for a minimum of $500,000 on December 2d to meet equipment needs. Is it not about time that we were giving an ear to the call of our "Diamond Diggers?"

reached the bank, but John touched her lightly with the whip and she plunged into the water. Part of the way she had to swim, and John clung to her as best he could. When they reached the opposite bank she clambered up like a cat, and away they went again.

Now they neared Brush Creek, and if the bridge for which John was making was still standing he was all right, but he knew that even the most willing horse could not swim the roaring torrent that was rushing through the channel. John gave a great sigh of relief as The Terror's feet struck the first planks of the bridge, and he knew it was firm or the horse would have hesitated to go on it. They were soon over and the rest of the way was easy.

John reached the little village where Dr. Royal lived just as day was breaking. The doctor was accustomed to all sorts of calls at all times of day and night; but when he saw John he couldn't help looking startled, for the boy was not one of the type that would take such a ride on a wild night unless the case was urgent. And when John told him why he had come, the doctor lost no time in starting, for he knew Mrs. Armstrong well enough to realize that she had not given up so long as she was able to stand. He was into his clothes and had the saddle on his horse in less time than it takes to tell it.

And back they started. The Terror leading the way. John slowed up when they reached the bridge and he could see that the water was already on a level with it, and that if they were to get across it must be within a very few minutes. He asked the doctor to go ahead, for if the bridge was to take one of them down it must not be the man on whom his mother's life depended.

Health is Wealth

Health is one of the greatest things your family can possess. It brings happiness and success. But health must be safe-guarded by good wholesome foods that are prepared from the purest ingredients. This is especially true of bakings. If they are not properly raised, we all know that they are not easily digested. Many times when self-rising flour is used in place of good plain flour and dependable baking powder—the results are flat, soggy and heavy foods.

Don't take chances! Use a reliable brand of baking powder and plain flour. Then you will be sure of healthful bakings that are easily digested.

Remember, science has never found anything to take the place of the tried and tested method of using plain flour and good baking powder in preparing bakings. Millions of housewives now know by actual experience that many preparations that are claimed to take their place are worthless and dangerous to health. There is no comparison.

Calumet, the Economy Baking Powder, is known to be one sure and positive aid to successful bakings that are always pure, sweet and wholesome.

That's the reason its sales are 2½ times as much as any other brand.

horse struck the bridge he stopped and began to back, for he knew that the bridge was not safe. The doctor dug his spurs into the horse and he plunged forward, tearing a piece of earth away, and leaving a space about three feet wide from bank to bridge, but he crossed safely. John backed The Terror and touched her with the whip. The mare took a run and jumped over the hole. The bridge swayed as he struck it, but his horse made the other side in about three leaps. The horses were frightened and the doctor and John were unable to stop them until they reached the top of a hill about a half a mile away. When they looked back the bridge was gone and the creek was roaring as though rejoicing that it had swept away the last trace of man's control of it.

"A close shave that, my boy," said the doctor; but John did not hear, for already he was again on his way, and The Terror was loping down the hill. The doctor chuckled a little and said to himself, "Armstrong has lost a boy tonight and gained a man."

When they reached the ranch they found John's mother in great pain, and the doctor gave John plenty to do as his assistant. "Can you save her?" was John's first word, his face white and his eyes big with anxiety.

"Yes, John, but we were none too soon. It's a pretty stiff case of pneumonia, and your mother should have been in bed three days ago. But her strong constitution, and more than all that, her 'sand,' will pulled her through."

And they worked like beavers for an hour or more, until finally the patient began to respond and could once more breathe without the great effort she had been making to do so. When she was quieter, John slipped away, and when the doctor looked him up to tell him what he thought of his courage, he found the boy just outside the door, lying face downwards, his head buried in the grass and his body shaking with sobs.

John's father came home in the late afternoon, quite worn out with the terrible strain under which he had been working, but the rain had ceased to fall and the creek had done all the damage it could before another year. He came in with a "Hurrah" on his lips, but it never got beyond them. When he saw the doctor, and the expression of John's eyes he almost fell to the floor himself, and leaned against the door, looking from one to the other, afraid to ask what was wrong.

But his wife called to him, and the doctor reassured him. He told him also of John's going for him, and that but for his son's bravery and quick action the story might have been different. John's father knew that his boy had done a man's work that night. He drew himself up to his full height and held out his hand. As John grasped it and the father and son looked into each other's eyes, they understood that henceforth they were to be ban and man.—Caroline Bird Parker, in Congregationalist.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Springs,
Box 3 B, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

Snow Or —?

As a steamer was leaving the harbor of Athens, a well-dressed young passenger approached the captain and, pointing to the distant hills, inquired, "What is that white stuff on the hills, captain?"

"That is snow," replied the captain. "Well," remarked the lady, "I thought so myself, but a gentleman has just told me it was Greece."—Selected.

A captain of an Atlantic liner was bothered by a woman passenger who was always inquiring about the possibility of seeing a whale. A dozen times a day she besought him to have her called if one hove in sight.

"But madam," the captain asked her rather impatiently, after long suffering in silence. "Why are you so eager to see a whale?"

"Captain," she answered, "my desire in life is to see a whale blubber. It must be very impressive to watch such an enormous creature cry."—Harper's Magazine.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIANS

(Installment No. 4 of the History of the Presbyterian Church, U. S.)

IN 1870, the Old School and New School North united. The Assembly of the United Church thought the occasion an auspicious one to open up negotiations with our Church, to bring about closer relations. All thought of organic union was expressly disavowed. At that time the churches were not on speaking terms. The object of the negotiations was merely to establish friendly relations. To this end, our Assembly was asked to appoint a committee to confer with a like committee appointed by the other church. Our Assembly acceded to the request, but accompanied the appointment with "instructions" to the committee. These instructions had reference to certain grave charges which both the Old School and the New School Assemblies had made against the character of Southern Presbyterians. At every meeting of these Assemblies during the four years of civil war, they gave vent to their patriotism by hurling fierce invectives against their erring brethren in the South. These now constituted the only difficulty in the way of friendly intercourse; and our Assembly instructed its committee to demand that these difficulties be distinctly met and removed. Was it not most reasonable that our Assembly should say: "You come seeking friendship. The only obstacles in the way are those which you created. All we ask is that you remove these obstacles out of the way." The committee of the Northern Church refused to meet and confer with our committee, on the ground that the "instructions" had prejudiced the case, and so conference would be useless.

In 1874, the Northern Church renewed the effort by sending a communication to our Assembly proposing "closer and more fraternal relations." Overtures came up from two of our own Presbyteries, South Alabama and Chesapeake, asking that "such measures be taken as shall be best adapted to promote friendly relations and fraternal correspondence." This time our Assembly appointed a committee without instructions "to enter fully into conference concerning the removal of those causes which have heretofore prevented fraternal relations between the two churches." It may be noted that our Assembly was careful to appoint a committee that needed no instructions. Rev. B. M. Palmer, D.D., was a member of this new committee, and he had drawn up the "instructions" for the first committee. It was not to be supposed, therefore, that there would be any relaxation of the former conditions. Sure enough, when the conference was held, our committee said: "If your Assembly could see its way clear to say in a few plain words to this effect, that those obnoxious things were said and done in times of great excitement and are to be regretted, and that now on a calm review, the imputations cast on the Southern Church (of schism, heresy and blasphemy) are disapproved, that would end the difficulty at once." Unquestionably this was a very plain and simple way to repair the breach of friendship that had been made. These ugly things caused the breach. Remove them and the breach is healed. But peccavi is a hard word to say. The committee of the Northern Church declined to recommend such a retraction; and thus the second effort failed. The two churches continued on their way for eight years longer, refusing to speak to each other.

In 1882 our Assembly took the initiative and by a skillful bit of strategy brought about "fraternal relations." What we said was this: "In order to remove all difficulties in the way of that full and fraternal correspondence which on our part we are prepared to accept, we adopt the following minute—that while receding from no principle, we do hereby declare our regret for, and our withdrawal of all expressions of our Assembly which may be regarded as reflecting on, or offensive to, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. Resolved, that a copy of this paper be sent by telegraph to the General Assembly, now in session at Springfield, Illinois, for their prayerful consideration, and mutatis mutandis, for their reciprocal concurrence as affording a basis for the exchange of delegates forthwith." In view of past utterances of our Assembly, this has the appearance of finesse. In 1870, we said: "The overture from the Northern Assembly was based upon the fatal assumption that mutual grievances existed in reference to which it became necessary to arbitrate. This assumption is precisely what we cannot truthfully concede. Our records may be searched in vain for a single act of aggression, or a single unfriendly declaration against the Northern Church." But is not our overture, quoted above, based on the assumption that "mutual grievances existed in reference to which it became necessary to arbitrate?" Are we not expressing as much in that overture in the way of regret and withdrawal as we are asking them to express? Did we not concede the very thing which we had previously said we could not truthfully concede? It would seem so. However that may be, the scheme worked. On receipt of our telegram, the Northern Assembly adopted a reply couched in the same language, and renewed its expression of "warm fraternal regard for all who compose the communion of the Southern Church." Thus a painful breach was apparently healed, and feelings of perfect fraternity restored. But a note of discord was interjected by a personal telegram from the moderator of the Northern Assembly, telling of a resolution of that Assembly to the effect "that in the action now being taken we disclaim any reference to the actions of preceding Assemblies concerning loyalty and rebellion, but we refer only to those concerning schism, heresy and blasphemy." The plain meaning of this is: "We wipe out the charge that in supporting secession you were schismatics, heretics and blasphemers, but we still insist that you were traitors and rebels, and that our Assembly did right to call you such." Plain as this was, our Assembly chose not to understand it, and sent a telegram to ask if it modified the "concurrent resolution." If we put the two resolutions together we can see what was done. In passing the concurrent resolution the Northern Assembly said: "We do hereby declare our regret for, and our withdrawal of all expressions of our Assembly which may be regarded as reflecting on, or offensive to your Assembly." The other resolution, known as the "Herrick Johnson Rider," said: "We do not declare our regret for, nor our withdrawal of those expressions of our Assemblies which charged you with being traitors and rebels." Surely this was modifying with a vengeance! No expressions of the Northern Assembly were more offensive than these, which the Herrick Johnson Rider expressly refused to wipe out. In reply to our inquiry, the response came back that the subsequent resolution did "not modify but only explained" the concurrent resolution. Our Assembly chose to see some sense in this, and professed itself satisfied.

Since that time, many efforts have been made to unite the two churches. In 1904, the Northern Assembly said: "The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. hereby removes all aspersions and charges of any and every kind made by previous Assemblies reflecting on the Christian character of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S., and is ready to confer on the subject of closer relations whenever such conference shall be agreeable to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S." Thus forty years after the war, the Northern Assembly gave us a clean bill of health. It is better late than never.

THE HISTORY OF THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The series of articles we are running dealing with the history of our Church are from the pen of our esteemed contributing editor, Rev. R. C. Reed, D.D., of Columbia Seminary. They were delivered at Montreat last summer, and it was at our special request that Dr. Reed consented to allow us to publish them.

For several years we have been impressed by the fact that our young preachers are lacking along this point. They are well versed in the Ecumenical Councils, the causes of the Reformation, and even the Cumberland Controversy, but when questioned concerning the causes for the organization of the Southern Presbyterian Church, they could give no adequate answer. Then the charge is often made that sectional prejudices keep us alive, and often the charges are made by the world and its press that old soldiers have made up, yet we still cherish the bitterness of the war. When such charges are made, few of our people have an answer ready.

Study these articles seriously and you will see that we have reason to be proud of our beginning, and that the continued separation is due to our brethren of the larger body still clinging to the same theory, against which our fathers protested.

These articles have already impressed the Church, as we are getting the thanks of the "Old Guard" and of the younger men who still believe in principle rather than expediency. J. R. B.

"THE MINISTER AND HIS GREEK NEW TESTAMENT"

No doubt this question will present itself to our readers: Do our ministers all have a Greek New Testament?

Our answer would be that if they have not, they are very poorly equipped for their work of expounding the meaning of the New Testament texts.

Of course we are aware that some of the leading lights among the teachers of North Carolina have recently decided that the study of Greek and Latin is a waste of time in this commercial age when everything is tested by the dollar. These brethren, to the contrary notwithstanding, we still hold that a knowledge of the classics, while it may not have a money value, certainly is valuable in a well-rounded education.

Rev. Dr. A. T. Robinson, of the Louisville Baptist Seminary, is considered one of the finest Greek scholars in this day, and his work on the Greek New Testament has no superior on either side of the Atlantic. Several seasons he has lectured at Montreat, to the delight of those who heard him. We were equally impressed by his learning and his subtle humor, which lighted up the dryest subject.

This new book, the title of which is "The Minister and His Greek New Testament," is a remarkable illustration of the skill of Dr. Robertson. On its face it suggests dryness, yet it is one of the most fascinating books we have read for a long time.

Dr. E. C. Caldwell has written, calling the attention of our pastors to this book, and now we wish to add to what a seminary professor says, the opinion of a preaching editor.

As one who has occupied the pew rather than the pulpit for twenty odd years, we have been impressed with the fact that the pew is not taught the Bible, and also that when a sermon, teaching the Bible, is preached, the common people hear it gladly.

This book will teach the pastor to be really a "Teaching Elder."

One of the charms of Dr. Campbell Morgan's preaching is the fact that he draws out a sermon from some participle or adverb, to the surprise of his hearers, who have read the passage for years without seeing the truth that he digs from it. We would advise our pastors to get this book, even if they have to sell their garment to do so. Then when they get it, study its pages till their mind is full of its teachings. Then if they do not thank us for calling their attention to it, we are sure that their long-suffering congregation will, if they ever learn the cause of the radical change in their sermonizing.

THE PIONEER MISSION AGENCY

This is an agency with offices in Philadelphia, Penna., organized for the purpose of learning and publishing the need of missionary work in fields where there are no workers.

They seek to forward workers and means to other organizations for pioneer work. Among those connected with it we notice the name of Howard A. Banks, an old-time friend of ours and once an elder in the First Presbyterian Church of this city; and also the name of Rev. L. L. Legters, a minister of our own Assembly, who is the Field Secretary. Mr. Legsters sends us his report on the Indians of Mexico, which makes reading that must arouse the Christians of this country, who are trying to obey the great commission to preach the Gospel in the uttermost parts of the earth.

Mr. Legsters spent parts of the winters of 1921-1922 and 1922-1923 in Mexico studying the missionary needs of the Indians of Mexico. He found that there is not a missionary in all Mexico, who at present is working with a view to bringing the Gospel to the Indians who speak no Spanish, but only their own vernacular. He thus sums up the situation of these evangelized Indians:

There is one tribe of over 500,000; there are three tribes between 200,000 and 300,000; there is one tribe of more than 150,000, but less than 200,000; there are 17 tribes having over 20,000; there are five tribes between 10,000 and 20,000; there are six tribes between 5,000 and 10,000; there are seven tribes having less than 1,000.

There is immediate need of at least 27 men for the tribes over 20,000. The cost when on the field need not exceed $50 per month with money added for mule feed. They should be married men. The cost would then be $100 per month. This would care for all their work for the present.

THE EDUCATION OF OUR GIRLS

At the recent meeting of N. C. Synod, among the many important questions before them, and there were an unusual number of them, there was no question that aroused more interest or that meant more to future generations than the question of the education of our girls.

Under the rulings of the State Board of Education, the graduates of our colleges for women are forced to accept a lower rate of pay for teaching than those of the State schools and of the other denominational colleges that have complied with the requirements of the Association of Colleges. This is the case, even if you can prove that these graduates are equal in scholarship to those of other schools.

The stumbling-block is mainly the lack of endowment, to remedy which special efforts are being made under the leadership of Rev. A. A. Walker, now connected with the campaign for the endowment of Queens College.

That there is money enough in the hands of Presbyterians of this section to respond to this need, no one can doubt. The only difficulty is to make them see that money invested in the education of a woman will ultimately bring a larger return than in any other cause.

We should remember that the mother is the greatest influence in the home, and that her influence is not confined to the home, but that it goes out into every walk of life and affects future generations yet unborn. On the other hand, suppose we rear godless women, whose influence, negative, at the best, will send forth a race of men who will either actively or negatively ally themselves with the powers of evil in this world.

At present we have four colleges for women in N. C. Synod, to two of which we propose to give endowment sufficient to make them A-grade colleges, and of the other two we propose to make Junior colleges.

As the first step in this effort Synod recommends that of the funds contributed to benevolences 10 per cent be appropriated to our educational institutions, for a term of three years.

We sincerely hope that our Presbyteries and sessions, realizing the crisis in our educational work, will rally to this emergency and carry out the recommendations of Synod.

Unless something be done, our colleges will be overwhelmed by outside competition.

"HE IS FAITHFUL THAT PROMISED"

Every promise of Scripture is a writing of God, which may be pleaded before him with this reasonable request: "Do as thou hast said." The Creator will not cheat his creature who depends upon his truth; and, far more, the heavenly Father will not break His word to His own child. "Remember the word unto thy servant, on which thou hast caused me to hope," is most prevalent pleading. It is a double argument: "It is thy word, wilt thou not keep it? Why hast thou spoken of it if thou wilt not make it good? Thou hast caused me to hope in it; wilt thou disappoint the hope which thou hast thyself begotten in me?"—C. H. Spurgeon.

"THE ATTRACTIVE CHRIST"

What the hand is to the lute,
What the breath is to the flute,
What the fragrance to the smell,
What the spring is to the well,
What the flower is to the bee,
That is Jesus Christ to me.

What the mother to the child,
What the guide in pathless wild,
What is oil to troubled wave,
What is ransom to the slave,
What is water to the sea,
That is Jesus Christ to me.

HE SILENCED THE TEMPTER

"If you find yourself getting close-fisted," remarked a Pennsylvania congressman, "it is time to begin to emulate the example of a wealthy old farmer in my state. He was noted for years as an old miser, but was converted during protracted meeting. Shortly afterward a poor man who had been burned out and had nothing for his family to eat, came to him for help. The farmer thought he would be liberal and give the man a ham from his smokehouse. On his way to get it the tempter whispered to him:

"Give him the smallest one you have."

"He had a struggle with himself as to whether he should give him a large or a small ham, but finally he took down the largest one he could find.

"You are a fool," the tempter whispered to him.

"If you don't keep your mouth shut," the farmer snarled at him, "I will give him every ham I have in the smokehouse."—National Republican.

THAT LADDER A DREAM

A man dreamt that he built a ladder from earth to heaven, and when he did a good deed up went his ladder a few feet. When he did a very good deed his ladder went higher, and when he gave away large sums of money to the poor, up it went further still. By and by it went out of sight, and as years rolled on, it went up, he thought, past the clouds, clear into heaven. When he died he thought he would step off his ladder into heaven, but he heard a voice roll out from paradise:

"He that climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."

Down he came, ladder and all, and he awoke. He said if he wanted to get salvation he must get it in another way than by good deeds, and he took the other way, which is by Jesus Christ.—D. L. Moody.

BRAZIL

By Mrs. E. P. Davis

Break Thou that awful chain, which binds
Brazil,
Give her the Gospel light, in Jesus' name;
Teach her to do Thy will, and priestcraft fight,
Then shall her peace be sweet, in Thee her

Bless Thou the Truth dear Lord, to poor
Brazil,
Lift her from darkest night, to Zion's Hill;
Teach her to love Thy Word, which sets her free,
Teach her the only way, that leads to THEE.

THE INSPIRATION OF THE SCRIPTURES

A Sermon by Rev. A. A. McGeachy, D.D., Pastor of Second Presbyterian Church

Text: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." II Tim. 3:16-17.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, when introducing Israel Zwingli last week, to the American Jewish Congress at Carnegie Hall, warned his audience that they might hear things with which they could not agree, but he asked them to remember that the distinguished visitor was speaking not for Israel but for Israel Zwingli. Just so I, too, am speaking not for you but for myself. It will be well to remember this distinction, for, while I expect no serious divergence of views, it will relieve you of responsibility for mine and save me from misrepresenting yours.

My text says that "all scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable." Another version reads, "Every scripture, given by inspiration of God, is profitable." This is quite a different thing, but even this reading intimates that some scriptures are inspired, and my task is to show that this is true of the Old and New Testaments. Furthermore, I must show what is meant by inspiration; I must glance at theories of inspiration; I must intimate the limitations of inspiration; and I must do all these things in such a way that your faith will be settled and not shaken.

The matter of inspiration was settled for me long ago by those who gave me life. When a child has been reared in a truly Christian home where the father reads the Bible and leads his family in prayer, morning and night; where coming in from play he sees that book lying on his mother's lap; when, as time passes, he observes their lives growing richer and sweeter under its influence, drawing comfort from it in their troubles and light from it in their ignorance; and, when at last they die unafraid with their hopes softly pillowed on its gracious promises, it is very hard to persuade him that this book is anything else than the Word of God.

Such was my happy lot and I have never doubted the inspiration of the Bible for a moment. It has been settled for me so surely that, so far as I am concerned, it is a waste of time to discuss it. So surely, that books which assail it bore me. I have books like that in my library which I have never been able to read through. They do not interest me any more than the confidences of a drunken man or the rhapsodies of a Christian Scientist. It has been settled for me so surely that I could say as Martin Luther is reported to have said, "No matter who wrote the Pentateuch, it is the Word of God."

But I am very distrustful of theories of inspiration for theories are merely man-made things. Theories of inspiration are related to inspiration as theologies are to God. I trust God but I distrust theology. One is a fact; the other, an explanation of a fact or a speculation built upon a fact.

One man holds to a mechanical theory. The sacred writers were just quills through whom the Spirit was poured. St. John writes the book of Revelation. His hand holds the pen, but an unseen angel holds his arm and makes the letters. He may have thought the writing was his own, but he had nothing to do with it. The responsibility for what was written was wholly God's.

If such a theory is true we are forced to the irreverent conclusion that God was better sometimes than at others, for some parts of the Bible are much superior to other parts. I should rather admit the men who wrote to partnership in the writing and put the responsibility upon them.

Pens, further, do not account for varieties of style. One man writing with a dozen different kinds of pen will write in the same style. A dozen men writing with the same kind of pen will write in a dozen different styles. If the sacred writers were simply writers, or quills, no differences should appear in the writings of Paul and James. But differences do appear. Therefore I can not swallow this theory.

Some hold to a verbal inspiration of the original manuscripts. They say that ideas are communicated in words. If we use the wrong word we convey the wrong idea. The only way that God could insure the right idea was to choose and inspire the right word. They say that He did this and declared that one jot or one tittle should not fail from the law until the whole had been fulfilled. But jot and tittle have failed if this was what was meant. The original manuscripts have been lost and there is considerable wordy, though unimportant, variation in the copies of them which have survived. If therefore it was God's purpose to inspire a book down to the dotting of an "I" and the crossing of a "T," His purpose has been defeated. And I don't like this theory any better than the other.

Some hold to such an inspiration as covered the ideas and left the writers to choose their own words. Consequently they say, you have a general supervision which safeguards the truth but left the writers free to express their individuality. God wrote the Bible and men wrote it too.

I like this theory better, though, it is as logically indefensible as the others. It is more like the dealings of God with men. In all His work of saving He does His work untrammelled and leaves us to do ours. But how could He insure accuracy by such a method? How could He be certain that Peter would write the right thing without control any more than he would do the right thing. It took lots of praying to bring Peter through. Christ could not take His eye off of him for a moment. Could He then have trusted him any more confidently to write than He could to walk and talk? I am not satisfied with this theory.

I don't like any theory. I don't see why we should have any. I don't understand the mind that has to have everything explained and reduced to formula and classified and catalogued before it can be accepted.

Do you understand the Incarnation, where the nature of God meets the nature of man in His Son? What is your theory about that? Isn't it better to accept it without theorizing?

Do you understand the theory of predestination, where the will of God meets the will of man? Isn't it a fact and isn't it inexplicable?

Do you understand inspiration where the mind of God meets the mind of man? Can you frame a satisfactory theory with regard to this?

I have no theory of the atonement except that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures, that He did something for me that I could not do for myself and without which I would have been lost.

I have no theory concerning the two men in me or the two wills in Christ or the three persons in the Godhead. If any man thinketh that he knoweth anything he knoweth nothing.

We are surrounded by mysteries which are none the less facts. "Be still and know that I am God."

If, however, you insist on more from me than this, then hear not my theory but my confession. I believe that holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. I believe that all scriptures are given by inspiration of God, and that these are the scriptures. I believe that the things which eye hath not seen nor ear heard have been revealed to us by the Spirit, in the scriptures. I believe that God in some way as mysterious to me as my own regeneration moved upon chosen men to will and to do of His good pleasure in the writing of a book which should be an infallible guide, the "only rule of faith and life." I believe the Bible is an authority on what it set itself to teach. I do not think it set itself to teach either geology or biology. Where it touches these things incidentally it covers them with large generalizations which automatically adjust themselves to advancing truth from age to age. But even if it could be proved that the sacred writers were in error upon these things they were right in what they came to say, and it would be as foolish to reject their message as it would be to reject a good sermon because of its bad grammar.

If now you ask me why I intimate even such an admission as this, my answer is that a man can sometimes serve the truth as loyally by destroying a false foundation as by laying a true one. I do not wish you to pin your faith to the inspiration of the Bible with a theory. The pin might come out. I would have your faith to stand not in the wisdom of men but in the power of God. I want you to be so certain of the inspiration of the scriptures that they will still be to you the Word of God no matter what conclusions science may force upon you.

Now, if you ask me how I know that the Bible is inspired, I might answer in the stately language of our Confession: "The heavenliness of the matter, the efficacy of the doctrine, the majesty of the style, the consent of all the parts, the scope of the whole (which is to give all the glory to God), the full discovery it makes of the only way of man's salvation, the many other incomparable excellencies and the entire perfection thereof, are arguments whereby it doth abundantly evidence itself to be the Word of God." That would be one argument, and a good one.

I might plead that 66 books, written by 40 authors, over a period of 1,600 years, yet exhibiting the same system of truth, were more than merely human compositions. These authors were of all classes of society: shepherds, fig-gatherers, herdsmen, fishermen, and the king upon his throne. They were educated and unlearned. They lived for apart in time and in circumstances. They spoke different tongues. Yet their testimony was all in harmony like the tuned instruments of an orchestra under the leadership of a conductor.

I might urge the fulfillment of prophecy as a reason for our faith and inspiration even as Paul urged it upon Agrippa and Christ upon His disciples. This would be a good argument and a hard nut for the enemy to crack.

But I am speaking for myself and shall give the two arguments that have been the most conclusive and satisfying to me.

The first is, that I believe in Christ, and He believed in the inspiration of the scriptures. I have read of a ship drifting on the rocks that threw out one anchor after another, every chain snapping and every anchor lost until at last one was thrown out which held. So in a spiritual crisis I threw out anchor after anchor and all were lost. All the arguments with which I sought to steady myself and stay my drifting failed me, until the last anchor caught on Christ. I found Him entirely dependable. I found I could trust Him as a child does his father. I found myself able to believe anything that He believed on His testimony that it was true. And now if every argument in the world for the inspiration of the scriptures were swept away I should still know that the Bible was the Word of God because He said it was and declared that it could not be broken.

Look at His reverence for the scriptures; how He was perpetually quoting them down to His dying hour. Hear Him as beginning at Moses and all the Prophets He expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning Himself. It was with the scriptures that He baffled Satan, confuted His enemies, instructed His disciples and strengthened His own soul and in fulfillment of the scriptures He died. We have Christ Himself, no theory but a fact; a fact of history, of revelation and of experience. If we believe Him we must believe the Bible too.

And Jesus Christ was Himself the Word of God, the last chapter in the Book. "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these days spoken unto us in His Son." Christ was the last word of God to men. All previous revelations were fragmentary and partial. But when the Almighty was prepared to express His whole mind He uttered Himself in a single word and that "word became flesh and dwelt among us." We cannot believe in Jesus without believing in that revelation of which He was the crown and consummation.

Second, I believe in the inspiration of the scriptures because of what they are and what they have accomplished. I submit the book itself in evidence. I supplement the testimony of Christ to the scriptures with a record of their achievements through the last two thousand years.

F. W. Robertson said, "This collection of books has been to the world what no other book has been to a nation. States have been founded on its principles. Kings rule by compacts based upon it. Men hold it in their hands when they give solemn evidence affecting death or property. The sick man is almost afraid to die unless it is within his reach. The battleship goes into action with one on board whose duty it is to expound it. The very translation of it has fixed language and settled the idioms of speech. The orator holds a thousand men for half an hour breathless, but this word has held a thousand nations for thrice a thousand years spell-bound by an abiding power—the universality of its truth—and we feel it to be no more a collection of books but The Book."

Men talk very carelessly, my friends, about the inspiration of men of genius and compare Shakespeare with Isaiah. But while Shakespeare was a genius and Isaiah was not, Isaiah was inspired and Shakespeare was not. There is no more comparison between them than between the words of men and of God. Other books are not like this Book. It differs from them in kind as well as in degree. As Joseph Cook declared, "This book is the only one in the world that a man can swallow whole. The only one that, if so swallowed, will not produce spiritual indigestion, with pimples on the face, dizziness of the head and staggering in the limbs."

This is quite true. In spite of its blemishes, real or fancied; in spite of its antiquity and the unblushing candor with which it discusses matters too delicate for modern ears; in spite of the obsolete ethical standards of some parts of it, and the unapproachable idealism of other parts of it, this book just as it is, without revision or apology, is the one book which all the world would be better for reading and knowing and living upon. And for this reason we know it is the Word of God.

In conclusion, I offer you the Bible and the Christ—each witnessing to the other, each as dependable as the other, both of them from God. "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think that ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me."

FAITH

Faith has been defined as "believing that God tells the truth." Faith is more than a mere mental act. It has a moral quality and it is an active agent. Paul speaks in his epistle of the "work of faith." And Jesus said: "This is the work of God that ye should believe on Him whom He has sent." It is this strong faith that John says overcomes the world.—Ex.

SOME SUNDAYS IN THE OLD WORLD

Florence—Paris

By Barbara E. Lambdin

Florence—In Savonarola's incomparable Florence, the birthplace of Dante and the burialplace of Galileo, the glorious treasures of art in and around the city almost rivaled the attraction of the mystic rites of Holy Week.

Too late we heard of the practice of the Cardinal to wash, on Maundy Thursday, the feet of a certain number of beggars. But we happened upon a strange scene—the service of Tenebrae in the Cathedral of "St. Mary of the Flower." The great marble duomo was dark, in spite of the light flickering in through the marvelous stained glass windows. Many were kneeling around a large roped-off space, filled with exquisite flowers and foliage covering the floor, partially lighted with many burning candles that sparkled like stars in the semi-gloom. Other worshippers made their devotions before a most realistic life-sized wooden image of our Lord, lying on a low altar, kissing and weeping over the five bloody wounds.

The crowds were coming and going, kneeling awhile, then their places taken by others. Part of the time there was music by a choir of monks; but there was no set service, no litany, no spoken word even. We were told afterward that the amount of "merit" gained depends upon the number of churches visited for this same service. At some entrances the crowds surged in and were almost clamorous, but once inside the doors, they were generally quiet and reverent, as in the presence of a great tragedy, a solemn sacrifice.

Venice—If a Palm Sunday service in St. Peter's and a little bit of Maundy Thursday in Florence were, to us, extraordinary experiences, what shall be said of Easter in St. Mark's?

This ancient pile is the very heart of Venice. With its marbles and precious stones, its bronzes and mosaics, its spoils from many shrines, memorials of the time when Venice not only ruled the Adriatic but had extended her sway to the Bosphorus, with its Oriental coloring and wealth, St. Mark's is gorgeously grand! And its ecclesiastical history is equally compelling. It is more evangelical than St. Peter's, and long withstood the temporal claims of the papacy.

Never had our Presbyterian eyes witnessed such a spectacle as we saw from our vantage in the clerestory just above the high altar, where the elaborate Easter mass was celebrated with a cardinal officiating. Immediately facing us was the choir of men and boys, not vested, singing the glorious music of this service. Though in Latin, it spoke a universal language to the heart, and it was a worshipful experience.

As the celebration proceeded before the priceless jeweled "golden screen," used only on rare occasions, we could only guess the symbolism—the taking of the wine by the ranking ecclesiastic, then the giving of the "cup" by the cardinal to the two archbishops, they to the bishops; then, on in succession down the line to, finally, the clerical choir. But not at all to the people—how Rome bars them from communion with their Lord!

At the conclusion the cardinal, who, I understand, is much beloved in Venice, ascended an ornamental pulpit and preached a genuine sermon, eloquent and earnest, listened to with deep attention by the massed assemblage, many of whom had been standing for hours.

At vesper time again the old basilica was crowded, but this service was conducted at a side chapel. In it the people had some part by responses, joining in the "Ora pro Nobis;" and it seemed to be a real confession of sin and need.

Geneva—It was not our privilege to be in the city of John Calvin on a Sunday. We had only a night there and a few short week-day morning hours. But this enabled us to visit the stately cathedral made sacred by his fearless preaching of the whole Word of God, from the carved pulpit still in use. There, too, is his chair; and there we felt the presence of the Great Reformer!

Beautiful and interesting, clean and progressive, is Geneva. John Calvin left a fair city on the shores of mountain-born Lake Lemman. We saw the site of the house where he died; and visited the impressive Reformation Monument, with its colossal figures, and the "Post Tenebras, Lux" cut deep into the stone. After popes and potentates, it was a blessed experience to see this unique monument to men who had "hazarded their lives for the Lord Jesus" and for the sacred cause of liberty of conscience.

Paris—Eglise Reformee de l'Oratoire, du Louvre, the Reformed Church of Paris, which several said was "just around the corner," on the Rue St. Honore, was not an easy place to find, notwithstanding its closeness to the Louvre and to the statue of the noble Admiral Coligny. How refreshing to find that statue in Paris!

The entrance to the church is rather obscure, but within, a feeling of surprise and gratitude to find such a handsome building dedicated to the Reformed worship. The explanation is, that it formerly belonged to the priests of the Oratoire, erected in 1621, and later sold to the French Calvinistic Church. The architecture is of the Renaissance, the building somewhat long and narrow, and, as at Geneva, the pulpit stands midway, against the wall, with seats placed to face it. There were no statues or pictures or angels, no symbol of the cross even, but in the apse, painted in gold—only this part visible, but it was sufficient, "In Jesus Christ, our Savior."

How inspiring to sing with them, "To Thee, O God, Our Praise Ascends," and other "Cantiques and Psalms." Again the preacher wore the black silk gown with white tabs at the neck. His manner was very earnest. I think the preaching on the Continent is generally more didactic and expository than in our own country. The people took a hearty part in the singing, which was led by the great organ and several voices in the loft.

The church was practically crowded. There were many young people, including some men wearing the uniform of the Republic. An Honor Roll in black and gold gave a long list of the boys of the congregation who had laid down their lives for "la belle France."

The Reformed Church is a living church. It is sounding no uncertain note as to its faith and worship. A leaflet was handed out stating the principles of the church, with many Scripture references; also rules for the reception of members and blank form for application.

From this service of true worship, the hour being early and the distance short, the appeal of historic Notre Dame was irresistible. The service was over, the candles out, the gold and crimson of the priest's robes gone, the music silent; but how glorious were the reds and blues, the greens and gold of those wonderful Medieval windows, jewels of the art of that day. How mysteriously grand and religious the groined roofs, the great pillars, the lace-like tracery in stone of the trefoils, the quatrefoils, the circles, the pointed Gothic arches; the dull tones of the carved panels with their Bible stories in wood, the brilliantly painted pictures, the statues of saints, apostles and sages of the past!

It all makes such a subtle appeal to the senses, yes, and to the soul, even though the worshiper of today should not need these aids to piety. To me, a Medieval cathedral, with all its insignia of worship, is much more impressive in its dim religious light, when silence reigns and the heart, without the intervention of any man, can commune alone with its God.

NEW MEMBERS OF THE PUBLICATION COMMITTEE

By R. E. McGill, Secretary

The Publication Committee have pleasure in announcing the election of the following ladies to full membership on the Publication Committee, as directed by the last Assembly:

Mrs. John Bratton, Madison Heights, Va.; Mrs. S. N. Harrell, Tarboro, N. C., and Mrs. P. J. Flippen, Ballsville, Va. These ladies will have a valuable contribution to make as the committee discusses and attempts to solve the weighty and intricate problems committed to it by the Assembly.

Mrs. Bratton is the president of the Virginia Synodical, and is recognized as one of the most versatile workers and leaders in the field of woman's work. She is, by virtue of her office, a member of the Advisory Committee of the Assembly Auxiliary, and is looked upon as one of the wisest counsellors in this group of 16 Synodical presidents. She has been especially interested in the development of young people's activities and will be quite helpful in outlining programs for the 20 or more state conferences that will be held annually.

Mrs. Harrell is a child of the manse and has been quite active in church work all her life. She is a daughter of the late Rev. David Fairley, a man who made a great contribution to the life of our Church. She is president of the Auxiliary of Albemarle Presbytery, and has had a large part in making this one of the liveliest Auxiliaries in the Assembly. She is a trained Sunday School worker and can give counsel out of a rich and fruitful experience.

Mrs. Flippen is known as one of the most efficient all-around workers in the splendid band of leaders in Virginia. She is an expert in getting other people to work and has been especially active in Sunday School and Young People's work. Her present membership is in a country church, where she reorganized the women's work on the Auxiliary basis and organized the Sunday School and the Young People's Society on the Standard of Efficiency basis advocated by our Assembly.

Mrs. Flippen has demonstrated that a country church can operate effectively the plans approved by our highest court and she is also a ready speaker and a graceful writer. Readers of our young people's papers will recall the interesting and breezy accounts she has written about what the young people of her church are doing.

The Publication Committee counts itself fortunate in adding this trio of consecrated and efficient workers to its membership.

No. 20—The New World Order

What will be the outcome of the present order of things on earth?

There are three common answers.

Some say Christ will return, and through his personal return there will be a new order of things.

Some say the world will grow steadily better through the present teaching of the Gospel until a blessed new order of things dominates. And then Christ will return for certain re-adjustments.

The commonest belief is that Christ will not return in person. He is said to be coming constantly in finer ideals, a truer humanitarianism, more spiritual conceptions, and so on.

The answer of the Book seems to this: Some day the common crowd will be startled to find the sun's light turning into a shadow. It will be because of the shining of a brighter light athwart the sun light.

There will be a break in the blue overhead, and Jesus will be seen coming back again toward the earth. That brighter light will be the light of his face and person.

When he does come (no one knows when) four events take place. There's a church event, a Jew event, a world event, and a kingdom event.

The church event that word is used for all in every clime and time who have touch of heart with God. That break in the blue overhead will be followed by a break in the green-brown under foot.

Our loved one who have been laid away, having warm touch of heart of God, will rise again. Their spirits, now consciously in the presence of Jesus, will re-enter their bodies, and they will break up the green-brown sod as they rise out of their graves.

Then we who are living in that day and who have that same warm touch of heart, will be conscious of some change making our bodies answer to a new gravity upwards. We will wait courteously that these who have risen may precede us, then we shall be joined with them, caught up into the presence of our Lord Jesus. This, very briefly, is the church event.

The Jew event: the Jews living on the earth at the time will see Jesus coming through the upper blue. Utterly astonished and dumfounded, they will recognize and accept him as their Messiah, through the Holy Spirit touch upon them. Very briefly, this is the Jew event.

The world event: all the rest remain on the earth after the church group is taken away. The Evil One, with all his demon associates, is put out of action. The effect of that is incalculable. There is a new openness of mind toward good and God. Briefly, partially, this the world event.

The kingdom event: there begins on the earth a new order of things. The common laws of life, and in nature, will remain in operation as now. But there will be certain moral changes, blessedly revolutionary, through the Holy Spirit's presence in unusual power.

God's plan for things will have a good try-out. It will be a time of world-wide evangelization, with the changed Jews like a nation of Pauls in spirit, and some of the church group, with their changed bodies helping.

But when will all this be? No one knows. It is impossible to know. But the Book plainly gives a simple clue. Three words tell the story simply and adequately—crises, Christ's coming, kingdom.

All Christian folks pray "thy kingdom come." Some believe it comes through a gradual process, and some through a sharp crisis. The Book lays marked stress on the crisis preceding kingdom.

Five items mark that crisis time. The Jew is re-nationalized again in Palestine, maybe a scraggy minority, whipped back by persecution. There will be a coalition of nations (not all nations) north of the Mediterranean.

There will be a series of armed conflicts north and south at the Mediterranean, between this coalition and another great power or group.

There will be a great king at the head of the coalition, a bad king. Through his leadership, the crisis comes, including war, religious persecution, and all attendant horrors. The center of action will be Palestine and Jerusalem, while all the world will be made aware of what is taking place.

But the Jew is the index-finger, God's index finger. His racial preservation is the puzzle of the historian and philosopher. When the Jew actually re-nationalizes, and makes a treaty with that coalition king of kings, that's the index-finger pointing.

Then follows a time of armed peace, then suddenly the crisis comes, then the abrupt approach of Christ, and his own caught away; then a very short visitation of judgment, culminating in a terrific siege of Jerusalem. And that abruptly ends with the open visible appearance of Christ, in overwhelming power, on Olivet, with some of His followers. A bit of readjustment and then the blessed new order of things.

The truth of the personal second coming of Christ is a very important, fascinating non-essential. It is non-essential to salvation, saintliness, t o service. But, rightly understood, it is the master-key to the Book of God, and to the present world tangle.

The true Christian attitude is to go one's daily round faithfully, uncompromisingly true in life to the Man who died, in warm practical touch with one's neighbors, and with the inner heart ever keyed to the Spirit's voice.

No. 21—The Present World Outlook

LAY CO-OPERATION IN CHURCH WORK

By Rev. E. P. Davis, D.D.

The principle of co-operation is essential to the production of the best and largest results in every sphere of human thought and activity; to the realization of the highest ideals in life and to the enjoyment of the greatest earthly pleasures. Separation is weakness, limitation; combination is strength, extension. It is the law of divinely constituted society and applies to man in all his social relations. The individual is not the unit of the human race, but the family is. Co-operation is necessary in politics, commerce, letters, war, art, science and religion. The preservation of our lives, liberties and property, for example, does not depend upon one man or department; but upon many men who are associated under the Federal Constitution; and upon the three great departments of the state: the legislative, executive and judicial. Commercial prosperity in hamlet, city, commonwealth and nation depends on co-operative effort. Bacon fancied that he could take an "inventory of all the possessions of the human mind," but the task was too great for any individual; though his immortal sayings are like "jewels, five words long, that on the stretched forefinger of all time, sparkle forever." We do not undervalue the marvelous work of individuals who have started reforms, and founded schools, colleges and universities, or organized churches or become martyrs to science, discovery or religion. John Wesley, it is said, for example, "Was the busiest man in England. He traveled almost constantly, generally on horseback, preaching twice or thrice a day. He formed societies, opened chapels, examined and commissioned preachers, administered discipline raised funds for schools, chapels and charities, prescribed for the sick, superintended schools and orphanages, prepared commentaries and a vast amount of other literature, replied to attacks on Methodism, conducted controversies and carried on a prodigious correspondence. He is believed to have traveled, in the course of his itinerant ministry, more than 250,000 miles, and to have preached more than 40,000 sermons. The number of works he wrote, translated or edited, exceeds 200. The list includes sermons, commentaries, hymns, a Christian library of 50 volumes, and other religious literature, grammars, dictionaries, and other books, political tracts, etc. He is said to have received not less than a hundred thousand dollars for his publications, but he used little of it for himself. His charities were limited only by his means. He died poor. He rose at four in the morning, lived simply and methodically and was never idle, even for a moment, unless by compulsion." He left "as the result of his life work, 135,000 members and 541 itinerant preachers owning the name 'Methodist.'"

But if much can be done by individual effort, more can be done by joint labor, and it is of the last importance that clergy and laity, pastor and people, work together in the interest of the Kingdom of the Lord.

I. It is absolutely necessary to the minister. He can not do all the work without the co-operation of the church. Mr. Moody said that "it was better to put ten men to work than to do the work of ten men." In the Presbyterian Church, such co-operation is solemnly promised on the presentation of the call for a pastor; and when he is installed, the church answers the following questions in the affirmative: "Do you promise to receive the word of truth from his mouth with meekness and love, and to submit to him in the due exercise of discipline? Do you promise to encourage him in his labor, and to assist his efforts for your instruction and spiritual edification?"

The duties of ministers are so varied, onerous and numerous that it is impossible for them to discharge them acceptably and successfully without the efficient aid of their people. The sanctified common sense, business sagacity, rich experience, extensive observation and knowledge of human nature and of the needs of the people, of those who fill the pews, are potent factors in the wisest and best management of the affairs of the visible church.

II. It is absolutely necessary to the laity. When a soul is born again, it has in genuine form all the beautiful graces that constitute Christian character, just as the boy has every physical and intellectual characteristic of the man. But they need development and their harmonious and complete development depends upon activity in proper environments. Many of the best, latent agencies of the church are not used, and much of her culture, intellect, money and strength is either not unreservedly consecrated to God or is turned into other channels. Active, individual, faithful work by the rank and file of the membership is necessary to their spiritual life and growth. The dead tree does not grow.

III. Lay co-operation in church work is expressive of the divine and eternal unity of the invisible church of Christ. There is, there can be, but one true church on earth or in heaven, and all who hold the Head, whatever be their name or denomination, are members of that church. Jesus Christ has but one bride. Christ is the foundation, the church is the superstructure; Christ is the vine, the church the branches; Christ is the Head of the body, the church the members of it. Each part of the building is essential to its perfection; each branch receives its being, beauty and fruitfulness from the vine and every part of the body: the heart, limbs, lungs, muscles, nerves, hands, feet and head is necessary to make the whole. One cannot discharge the functions of another and if all do not do their duty, the entire body suffers. Romans 12:4-8. The principle of division of labor is applicable to the work of the church, as it is in every other work. The minister cannot perform the duties of elders, deacons and members in a well organized church without permitting his own distinctive work of preaching and praying and visiting and ruling to suffer. Nor can the officer or member do the work of the minister. Each has his gifts, graces, duties and sphere of labor. Mark 13:34. Not to do that work given each of us by our sovereign Lord is to become wicked and slothful servants and is to be doomed. It is to deny the Lord that bought out bodies, souls, time, opportunities and persons with His blood and it is to retard the progress of His Church in its divine, redemptive mission.

IV. Every consecrated energy of clergy and laity is imperatively needed at the present time. If we consider the number, strength, organization and experience of the foes of God and man and the Church, the truth of this statement will immediately appear. Among these foes are Romanism, socialism, secularism, infidelity, lust, Mormonism, Christian Science, ignorance, indifferentism and covetousness, which is idolatry. The continued existence of the Church in the presence of such enemies is a continued miracle. But it represents the truth of God and the truth is never finally and utterly overcome.

"The Truth Against the World"

Truth crushed to the earth will rise again.

The eternal years of God are hers;

But error, wounded, writhes with pain,

And dies amidst its worshippers.

At this period in our history we need the cordial co-operation of men and women of courage, initiative, patience, piety and wisdom; men who can read the signs of the times; men who know and love and live the truth; men who value purity more than peace, and men who expect the triumph of righteousness and believe that there are more for us than against us.

V. Hindrances to lay co-operation in church work. There are many that arise from different causes, but we can mention only two of them. (1) Negative Christians. There are many nominal Christians who stand for nothing; there is nothing deep and positive in their convictions, and they give no clear and strong testimony for Christ in their lives. They have the form of godliness, but not its power. Painted fire will not give light and heat. They are parasites on the trees of righteousness. He that is not with Christ is against Him. The useless limb is a burden to the body. The church as a vine greatly needs pruning. John 15:1-6; Judges 5:23. (2) Fault-finders. It has been said that the great majority of people seem to be too busy in finding fault ever to have any time left to devote to actual work. They are the people who can get into the way of others; they can hinder every good work; defeat every good effort. They predict failure and then exert themselves to secure the fulfillment of their own prophecies. Some one aptly asserts that "every congregation is composed of two classes: workers and grumblers; the workers never grumble, and the grumblers never work." We are not only workers together, but co-workers with God, and He will reward every one according to his work. Our works follow us. They and our souls are immortal.

THE FIRST SOUTHERN ASSEMBLY

By Rev. Geo. L. Petrie, D.D.

Your Editorial this week on "Southern Presbyterians" profoundly interested me, and quickened my memory by recalling scenes of the distant past. I witnessed the proceedings of the first General Assembly in Augusta, Georgia. Being at that time (1861) a student in Columbia, S. C., I went over to Augusta to see the Assembly and to observe its proceedings. I have ever since rejoiced that I availed myself of this opportunity to see and hear so many of the great men of our church. Your graphic description of some phases of the Assembly is very impressive, and your tribute to some of the great men who were present is most worthily bestowed. What a privilege to have seen, known and heard Thornwell, Palmer, Wilson, Brown, Waddel and others of the immortal and brilliant group.

One scene in the Assembly impressed me very deeply and lastingly. There were many legal questions to be considered in organizing a new body. Fortunately there was a Ruling Elder in the Assembly equal to the emergency. Judge J. G. Shepherd of Fayetteville, N. C. stood in the center of the spacious church, tall, slender, handsome in the prime of life. To him these many legal questions were directed. His answers were so prompt, so clear, so apt, so tense, as to illuminate the subject and to procure a most pleasing impression.

In the providence of God it has been my privilege to number amongst the members of the Charlottesville church, Mrs. Geo. P. McNeill, a daughter of the distinguished Judge Shepherd.

During the years of my life it has been my privilege to see many great assemblies of men, to witness many thrilling scenes, to hear many great orators, to observe many great epoch-making events. Amongst them all the august Assembly was conspicuously great. Is there a record of its membership and of its proceedings?

SOUTH CAROLINA SYNOD AND COLUMBIA SEMINARY

An Open Letter to the Editor

By Rev. J. M. Wells, D.D.

I do not feel that either your report of the proceedings of the Synod of South Carolina, or Dr. McPheeters' brief letter gives the public a clear and correct statement of what the Synod really did.

The Board of Directors of the Seminary made the following recommendation to the Synod:

"The Board recommends that the controlling Synods shall empower the Board to survey the territory and locate the Seminary where, in its judgment, based on all the facts, the Seminary can secure a sufficient measure of financial assistance, and where it may render the largest service to the Church.

"The Board shall be further empowered, should this seem to be the wisest step, to negotiate and complete a merger with Union Seminary, Richmond, Virginia, in such way as shall preserve the history of Columbia and shall most efficiently serve the controlling Synods."

This request was referred to the Committee of Synod on Columbia Theological Seminary: The Committee brought in a majority and a minority report.

The majority report, signed by five men, recommended granting only the last part of the request, as to consolidation with Union Seminary.

The minority report, signed by two men, recommended granting the entire request of the Board, viz., to give them power to either move or consolidate. The minority report was adopted.

Dr. McPheeters asked the minority to substitute a paper of his, only granting the Board power to move somewhere within the four present controlling Synods.

This request of Dr. McPheeters' the minority declined to accede to.

What the Synod did was to grant the Board the power it asked for. The Board now has the power, so far as the Synod of South Carolina is concerned, to either move to some other locality, if that seems best; or to consolidate Columbia and Union if that seems best.

The eventide, blest eventide,

Speak not of it as those who say,
With murmuring words, dissatisfied:

"It is the shroud of a dying day."

But, rather, live thy daily part

That thou mayst lift thy head and say

With peace of mind and grateful heart:

"It is the crown of a living day."

Be patient. Keep sweet. Do not fret or worry. Do your best and leave results with God.

WOMEN MEMBERS OF THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF HOME MISSIONS

The three women who are now members of the Executive Committee of Home Missions, are:

Mrs. J. T. Lupton, of the First Church, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Mrs. Andrew Bramlett, of the First Church, Columbia, S. C.; Mrs. W. Frank Smith, of the North Avenue Church, Atlanta, Ga.

Mrs. Lupton is very active in the First Church, Chattanooga. She has been particularly interested in Home Missions. During the war days, one of the great camps being located near Chattanooga, she was active in welfare work for the soldiers. Her executive ability was manifested in the tact and skill with which she handled many difficult problems.

Mrs. Bramlett is a member of the First Presbyterian Church, Columbia, S. C., and president of the South Carolina Synodical. She is really one of the outstanding women of her Synodical. She is said to be "conservative in doctrines but progressive in methods."

Mrs. W. Frank Smith is a member of the North Avenue Church, Atlanta, where she is very active in the work of the congregation. She is also active in Presbyterian work, and is Synodical secretary of Assembly's Home Missions which position she has had for some time and filled most acceptably.

S. L. Morris, Executive Secretary.

Mrs. Clark's Letter—Attention is called to the letter sent this week to all local Auxiliaries by Mrs. W. T. Clark, Synodical Secretary of Orphanage Work. This letter is an appeal to the women of the Auxiliary for their co-operation in the Barium Thanksgiving campaign, and was written at the request of the board of regents.

Mrs. Clark's letter is not an appeal for special contributions from the Auxiliary treasuries (each Auxiliary is supposed to give, in addition to the clothing fund, seven and a half percent of the yearly budget to Barium).

The letter is an appeal for:

1. Publicity—The women are asked to give notice at all the November meetings of this call to co-operate in the $100,000 Thanksgiving fund for Barium. They are asked to READ all about Barium that comes to their attention through letters, bulletins, and newspaper notices, and to read it all out aloud to the family circle. They are asked to help see that every home gets a copy of the "Barium Messenger" that will be sent for distribution by November 18th.

2. Prayer—At whatever meetings are held, the Auxiliary groups are asked to pray definitely for the success of the Thanksgiving campaign. Without question this is the greatest service the Auxiliaries can render. If we ASK, He will DO.

3. Giving—As far as her influence goes, each Auxiliary member is urged to see that her family and her church does its full part in contributing to this cause.

Mrs. W. B. Ramsay,

Secretary of the Board of Regents.

A Card from Mrs. Reid—The many comforting messages and letters sent me by beloved friends in the North Carolina and other Synodicals have touched me deeply. I only wish that I could answer each one personally; as this is not possible, will you not permit me in this way to say how sincerely I thank you.

It is my earnest desire that I may be able to pass on to others the loving Kindness shown me.

Gratefully yours,

Lenoir, N. C.

Announcing a Reprint of Programs in Year Book 1923-1924—The fall demand for the Year Book of Programs has been so great that a reprint of each page has been made in separate leaflet form.

These looseleaf programs from the Year Book are now available for both Auxiliary and Circle meetings for the remainder of the church year.

On request one of these leaflets outlining the program will be sent with each monthly package of Auxiliary or Circle literature.

What Do You Know About China?—Have you friends in China? Have you had the pleasure of meeting some of our gifted and consecrated missionaries who are doing our work in that far-away land? Would you not like to hear from them twice a month, and know how God is blessing their efforts to advance His kingdom in China?

You can receive this information twice each month in the Bi-monthly Bulletin published by the Southern Presbyterian Missions in China. It is printed in Shanghai and is really a delightful "family letter" from our missionaries in China to the Church at home. But unfortunately, it has all too few readers on this side the Pacific! Do you not want to add your name to the list of those who receive this splendid bulletin? It costs only a dollar a year!

You need the bulletin and the Bulletin needs your subscription. We have consented to handle subscriptions through this office. Send your dollar with your name and address, stating it is for the Bi-monthly Bulletin and we will forward it at once to the office in China. You will shortly begin receiving, twice a month, this delightful little magazine. Start now!

The Work of the Third Annual Conference for Colored Women—Christiansburg Industrial Institute.—Conducted by Woman's Auxiliary of the Synod of Virginia, of the Presbyterian Church, U. S.

Conference Committee: Mrs. H. L. Schmelz, Mrs. Franklin P. Vaughn, Mrs. R. I. Roop.

Prominent among the organizations which are working for the enlightenment and happiness of mankind is the Woman's Auxiliary of the Synod of Virginia. For three years this organization has conducted a conference for Colored Women; the purpose of which is to foster Christian principles, to engender a sympathetic understanding, and to increase the efficiency of colored women in all directions.

The Third Annual Conference for Colored Women of Virginia met June 30-July 7, 1923 at the Christiansburg Industrial Institute, Cambria, Va.

The first hour of instruction was held at the Presbyterian Church (white). The pastor, Rev. Mr. Johnson, talked for a few minutes on world conditions and needs. He then introduced Mr. J. Henry Scattergood, of Philadelphia, who spoke on the war reparations and the Ruhr invasion.

Sunday morning July 1st, we worshipped at the Baptist Church (colored), of which Rev. Mr. Gallop is pastor. The day began with a gentle but steady rain and though the school car was at our service most of the delegates would have been absent this service but for the courtesy of Mrs. Schmelz. She sent several automobiles to convey the entire delegation to the church. Rev. L. S. Downing, Presbyterian, of Roanoke, preached from Paul's second letter to the Corinthians, 12th chapter, 7th verse.

At 8:00 p. m., opening with Bible verses, Mrs. A. E. Long conducted a song and prayer service which was held every evening at the same hour throughout the conference session.

Monday, July 2-9-9:15—Opening exercises were conducted by Rev. Mr. Johnson, of Christiansburg.

9:15-10:00—Miss Carrie H. Sharp, of Petersburg, Va., began her lessons on Practical Nursing and Home Sanitation.

Each day the Bible hour instruction was given by Mrs. Walter Christian, of Richmond. Mrs. Christian reminded us of the outstanding Bible promise, "Seek, ye, first the kingdom of God and all things shall be added unto you."

After a talk on tithing we accepted as an outstanding Bible promise, Malachi 3:10. Mrs. Christian asked all to take as the Conference prayer, that someone from the conference would go as a missionary and carry the Gospel of Christ to heathen nations. Mrs. Schmelz suggested as our conference motto: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

At 11:00-11:45 each day Mrs. Mary E. W. Puryear spoke on "Better Homes and Better Communities." She showed specimens of sewing and rug-making done by girls' clubs of the rural districts of Mecklenburg and Charlotte Counties. She pleaded that a spirit of helpfulness spread through every community, closing with a plea for a more far reaching religious training and moral development of the race.

The time 11:45-12:30 was devoted to Mrs. Ora B. Stokes who spoke on the "Opportunities and Advantages of the American Negro." She told of how God for an all-wise purpose had caused to be transplanted in America a remnant of the Negro race and how having been placed in the best homes they immediately laid aside their fetish worship and accepted the guidance of the true God.

She also mentioned organizations within and without the race for its uplift, and what is to be hoped for from the efforts of Inter-racial Committees.

2:00-3:30—Sewing class was conducted each day by Mrs. A. E. Long, of the institute. Mrs. Long gave some helps and hints on home dress-making and distributed to a grateful class the specimens of their sewing.

In mid-afternoons Quiet Hour was kept during which members of the conference rested completely or spent the time in silent meditation.

4:30-5:30—Play ground demonstrations were given for four days by Miss Ethel Smith, of Richmond.

On Friday at that time Miss Helena Harris of the Richmond Neighborhood Association gave practical demonstrations of the work of the probation and truant officers in the Juvenile and Domestic Relations Courts. A plan was submitted by which the association conducted many other activities for the civic and moral good of the community.

Thursday, during the conference, Mrs. Janie Porter Barret, of Peaks, Va., spoke of her school for wayward girls and the honor system she uses in bringing out their best qualities.

One morning opening exercises were conducted by Rev. Mr. Figg, of the Episcopal Church of Christiansburg. He gave a beautiful interpretation of Paul's discourse on charity. On another morning Rev. Mr. Kahn, of Christiansburg, opened the program.

Wednesday at the opening hour Mrs. Schmelz called the conference roll and each member responded by telling of the church and community work in which she served at home.

Monday evening Mrs. Franklin Page Vaughn gave the history of what the Presbyterian women of the South have done for the religious advancement of the Negro from the earliest years of slavery up to now.

Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock Mr. Joe A. Turner, of Hollins, Va., spoke on the force of character.

Mrs. John Preston McConnell, of East Radford, advised how one should make a strong effort to be useful and efficient. She made a strong appeal for a more thorough religious training of children.

Dr. James H. Dillard and Dr. Roy Flannagan, of Richmond, each took part in the program at one of the periods during the conference.

Independence Day was not without a patriotic note. The dining room of the school was decorated with flags during the day and preceding each meal patriotic airs were sung, led by Mrs. Amanda Rowland, of Lexington, Va., who composed the conference song.

Wednesday evening, through the hospitality of Mrs. R. I. Roop and the teachers of the school a most pleasant conference social was held.

Late Friday afternoon a conference period was held during which Mrs. Schmelz again called the conference roll to which the members responded by relating what they had gained by attendance at the conference and how they would use their new store of knowledge at home.

So with a beautiful charity to all denominations, the Presbyterian Church justifies its creed, for the Westminster Presbyterian Woman's Auxiliary, of Lynchburg sent to the conference a member of a Baptist Church.

Your humble servant,
(Mrs.) Gertrude S. Gough.

The Group Meeting with the Banner Elk Auxiliary—This meeting was held on September 14th, in the Little Rock House by the Road, with Mrs. Miller, our Presbyterian President, and Mrs. L. D. Lowe, our Auxiliary President, presiding.

We had a perfect fall day, a fine attendance of Presbyterian officers, local Auxiliary members, and visitors from nearby communities, and a most inspiring program; so that every one who was privileged to be there thanked God and took courage.

Huge baskets of dahlias from the prize-winning gardens of Banner Elk decorated every table. And as the opening number on the program a wonderful luncheon was served by the entertainment committee, with Mrs. Stinson as chairman. The menu consisted of fried chicken, tomato sandwiches, potato salad, baked corn, hot rolls, tea, coffee, cakes and pies. Everything was delicious, and we all brought our mountain appetites. After luncheon, chairs were arranged in a wide semi-circle, and we assembled for the program, and opened the meeting with a hymn "The Light of the World is Jesus."

Rev. T. W. Clapp, of Plumtree, led the devotional, reading the 90th Psalm, with the "Eternity of God" as his subject. Rev. Mr. Jenkins offered a special prayer for guidance in the afternoon's work.

After the singing of the hymn, "Jesus Calls Us" Mrs. Henry Miller, president of Holston Presbyterian, gave a very interesting outline of plans for the season's work. She stressed the duties of the Cause Secretaries, saying that these are the windows of the Auxiliary, because they let in the light. The Home Mission study book should be finished by November. In January comes the study of Foreign Missions, and the text book "The White Fields of Japan," is made tragically interesting by Japan's present suffering. Mrs. Miller's report of the Women's Conference at Montreal was most helpful.

Following Mrs. Miller, Mrs. W. C. Tate presented her tableful of literature, mentioning several books and leaflets of uncommon interest. Following Mrs. Ingle's report of Foreign Missions in the Auxiliary, Rev. McKoy Franklin, of Crossnore, offered an earnest prayer for Japan in her time of need.

Miss Sue Hall spoke on Assembly's Home Missions; Mrs. Stinson on Spiritual Life; and Miss Margaret Query brought a message of thanks from the Grandfather Orphans' Home for the interest shown in that fine work. Next, Mrs. Lyons, of Crossnore, spoke on Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, Mrs. R. L. Lowe on the work of the local Auxiliary, especially clothing a boy at the Orphans' Home, and Miss Fannie K. Taylor on Abordale Sunday School and the Circle of our Banner Elk Auxiliary which has been organized up there.

Miss Margaret Query made a brief talk on the wonderful spirit and success of the Assembly's Training School at Richmond. Eugenia Stinson, president of our local Christian Endeavor, next presented her report, and Margaret Tufts reported the Junior Christian Endeavor. Mrs. J. H. VonCanon gave a short report of the activities of the Girls' Circle, and Mrs. Catherine Miller, of the High School, reported the Hanging Rock Sunday School.

Mrs. Sloop, of Crossnore, made a brief plea for raising the standard of our church schools and Rev. Mr. Clapp promised to organize a working Auxiliary in this Plumtree Church.

Mrs. L. D. Lowe then outlined the work of the schools established here by our beloved leader, Rev. Edgar Tufts; and Miss Taylor gave the plans and prospects of the new Woodrow Wilson College, which is the fulfillment of Mr. Tufts' last dream for his work.

On the subject of the tremendous importance of improving our church schools, Mrs. Henry Miller and Rev. Mr. Franklin spoke feelingly, Mr. Franklin emphasizing especially the need of adequate self-help opportunities.

At this point, the teachers from the State School arrived, and Misses Addie and Mildred Banner sang very sweetly as a duet, "How Long Must They Wait."

Miss Jane Hall, of Wilmington, was then called upon to explain the Standard of Excellence, about which Auxiliary members have to hear so constantly. She went over each point, making it all much clearer, and various members of the meeting added their word to the discussion. This number ended a program full of good things, so that we all thanked God for the joy He had given us in His service and the new hope and enthusiasm with which to go on.

Rev. Mr. Franklin closed the meeting with prayer.

Then, for a little while, the visitors were shown about the school and the new hospital, and with much regret we said good-bye and separated. But we hope that this is to be a regular yearly event for us at Banner Elk.

Mrs. J. H. VonCanon,

Matt. 9:35-38; Mark 1:29-39; Luke 8:1-3; 10:1; John 3:16, 17. (Print Matthew 9:35-38; Luke 8:1-3; John 3:16, 17.)

GOLDEN TEXT—"God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3:16.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

Matthew 9:35. And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom and healing every sickness and every disease among the people.

36. But when he saw the multitudes, he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd.

37. Then saith he unto his disciples, The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few;

38. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest.

John 3:16. For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

17. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 63. Which is the fifth commandment?

A. The fifth commandment is: "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

The human missionary of our day is a herald of the cross and goes forth to proclaim to the nations "the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." He expounds the scriptures, explains the plan of salvation and declares who Jesus Christ is, and what He has done and suffered for human redemption. He proclaims the nature of the law, man's condemned condition under it the appalling penalty of sin, the terms of salvation, the deliverance it brings, and the exalted destiny to which it lifts believing humanity. In a far higher sense is Jesus a missionary. He came to accomplish the salvation as well as to publish it. "He came to seek and to save that which was lost." To use His own illustration, "He comes after the lost sheep, that could not save himself, not merely to tell him that he could be saved, but actually to meet all the conditions essential to salvation. He is called Jesus "because He saves His people from their sins." We will attend to Jesus's Ministry. Christ labors sustained by women, God's love and gift. The results of Jesus's death and obedience.

I. Jesus' Ministry

The first part of our lesson relates to Jesus' Galilean Ministry. He went with His apostles through the towns, cities and villages of Galilee to give service to the people. He sought them in the synagogues and wherever they assembled in numbers. He was moved to this by their needy, helpless and scattered condition. His work consisted in healing, preaching and teaching. He healed all kinds of defect and disease among the people. The blind, the deaf, the dumb, the maimed, the halt, the lamed, the diseased and the leprous, all received help and cure. The possessed of demons were rescued and there was no malady that did not yield to His power. He preached the gospel to the guilty and condemned. He declared the terms upon which the most sinful of the human race could be saved from death and sin. He stated that those who accepted Him as Saviour or believed on Him should be saved and secure eternal life. He not only healed and preached salvation but taught the character of God, the sinfulness of man, the Divine promises, and human duty in all relation.

II. Christ's Labors Sustained by Women

III. Christ's Labors Sustained by Women. In the second passage furnishing our lesson Lu. 8, 1-3, we are told that "Mary Magdalene, Johanna, Susanna and other women of Galilee ministered unto Jesus of their substance." They met His physical wants and thus aided the advancement of His Kingdom. Christian women do the same in our day, and much more systematically and on a larger scale than in former years. The contributions of women to home and foreign missionary work are larger in proportion to the means handled than those of most men.

III. God's Love and Gift

III. God's Love and Gift. The third part of our lesson, Jno. 3:16-17, calls attention to the source and gift that procure man's salvation. The source is God's love of compassion, God loved "the world" fallen man, not with the love of complacency or delight but of pity. That pity for man's lost estate and threatened ruin, was as vast as the Divine Nature. This pity prompted His Gift. He gave His son, His only begotten son, His well beloved son, His holy Son, to incarnate humiliation, suffering and death, to save man from sin, eternal hell, wrath and eternal woes. It was a matchless love, and an unspeakable gift.

IV. The Results of Jesus' Death and Obedience

IV. The Results of Jesus' Death and Obedience. He says "He came to fulfill the Law." This demanded death for the violators, and perfect obediences. Jesus as the substitute for believers "died for us." The just for the unjust. He also obeyed for us perfectly the whole law. When we receive Him as Saviour His death avails for us and we are not condemned to die. When we accept Him according to the gospel plan, His obedience becomes ours and God regards us as just in His sight and entitled to His favor.

THANKSGIVING

M., Nov. 19—Thanks for Food: John 6:11.

T., Nov. 20—For Friendships: Philem. 1:25.

W., Nov. 21—For God's Gift: II Cor. 9:15.

T., Nov. 22—For Deliverance: Exod. 13:3-16.

F., Nov. 23—For Harvests: Prov. 3:9, 10.

S., Nov. 24—For Moral Support: Acts 28:15.

Sun., Nov. 25—Topic: What We Thank God for.
Ps. 103:1-22. (Thanksgiving meeting.)

Why thank God at all?
What big cause for gratitude has come to you?
What common things should we thank God for?

Psalms 103 is one of the favorite Psalms, and was written by King David. It takes its place with Psalms 1, 19, 23, 51, and 139, as the Psalms of David that are most popular. David is called the sweet singer of Israel, and of the 150 Psalms in the book of Psalms, he wrote 73. Psalm 103 is a song of Thanksgiving, and expresses in beautiful and poetic language the deep gratitude of David for all God's blessings. Since Thanksgiving Day comes next Thursday, it is appropriate for us to consider this theme.

The Advantages of a Grateful Heart

Since all good gifts come from our heavenly Father, it is our duty to return our thanks to Him for what He has done for us. And if we will engage in this exercise of thanking God, we shall find that it elevates our souls and makes them better. Gratitude prepares the heart to approach God, and appreciates Him and His great works. Let us join with David in this Psalm from our hearts, and call upon our souls to bless His holy name. God appreciates gratitude just as we enjoy being thanked for what we do for our fellowmen.

We Should Thank God for Our Physical Blessings

David reminds his soul that the body in which it dwells has received many blessings from God. The healing of our bodies from disease was due to God's power. It was God who protected us from dangers and harm that might have hurt or killed us. God gave us food, and filled our mouths with good things, that gave us strength to work and play, and renewed us just as the eagle comes out in his new feathers. God has given us many comforts and pleasures that delight and amuse our eyes and ears. Let us thank God for His goodness to our bodies and all their senses.

We Should Thank God for Our Land and Civilization

America is a land of liberty and light. As a nation we are the most blest on earth. Our government is a good one, and gives all equal privileges. Our laws are just, because they are based on God's law. Our officials are men who are led by conscience and the love of their fellowmen. Public opinion is on the side of right and truth. Education is free, and men may give their children the knowledge of books and the advantages of learning. The church is unhindered, so that all may worship God as they wish. Inventions, comforts, home life, social life, and business are free to follow the best course that leads to happiness. We should thank God for our land.

We Should Thank God for His Mercy and Pardon

Of all the blessings for which we should be grateful, the forgiveness of our sins is the greatest. If we got what we deserve we should be quickly punished for our sins. But God is merciful and gracious, slow to anger and plenteous in mercy. He restrains His anger, and offers to forgive us if we will but repent of our wrongdoing and believe in Jesus. David says, God's mercy is as high as the heavens and wide as the earth. He says the reason God is so merciful is because He knows how weak and sinful we are, and feels sorry for us like a father feels pity for his children.

We Should Thank God for His Everlasting Covenant

God's covenant is God's promise to His children. He promised Jesus our Saviour that He would forgive us, if we would repent and trust in His Son. And God will keep that covenant. He doesn't change His mind. He remembers His promise, and clings to it forever. We poor human beings are very changeable. We are just like grass, that soon withers in the sun. But if we will try to do our part, and remember our promise to obey God's commandments, God will bless us. Let us thank God for His covenant to save us by the blood of Jesus.

We Should Thank God for His Great Power

After expressing his gratitude to God for all the blessings for his body and his soul, David rises to still loftier heights, and views the wonderful exhibitions of God's power and greatness in the heavens, which seem to him like a mighty throne on which God sits and rules the universe as His mighty kingdom. He sees in his mind's eye the powerful angels wheeling in flight amid the heavens, and knows they are God's ministers, and wait upon the Almighty King. He beholds the stars sitting in beauty in the sky, and recalls that they are God's works. He then appeals to the angels and to God's works to join his human soul in praising God, who made him and them, so that there should be one glorious anthem of praise and thanksgiving ascending to the Mighty Maker of them all.

DAVIDSON C. E. TRAINING CLASS WORKING BUSILY

By W. Ernest Milton

The Christian Endeavor Training Class of Davidson College (C. E. T. C. D. C.) reorganized with the opening of the college year, and have been working strenuously since that time, training its members in Christian Endeavor preparatory to sending out deputations. The class is considerably larger than that of last year, there being 43 members now, as compared with 28. Many of the old men are back for work in the class, and 19 new men signified their desire to learn more of Christian Endeavor.

Among the number are several former district presidents, other district officers, two state officers and a C. E. Field Secretary. With their experience as a nucleus and with last year's work as a guide the class will be able to do far better work than in the past. Mr. Lawrence Little, former Field Secretary for Christian Endeavor in Louisiana, is a student at Davidson this year, and is connected with the young people's work of the Methodist Protestant denomination. He has been organizing many new Christian Endeavor societies. The class has elected him as an honorary member, since he is unable to take an active part in the work, but his experience will indirectly be of great benefit to the class.

Mr. Lex Kluttz, Christian Endeavor Field Secretary for Syria and Palestine, and a former South Carolinian, was recently at Davidson, having just returned to this country. He called the class together and asked their assistance in the Golden Rule Sunday Campaign for relief in the Near East, and the members gladly and willingly responded, recognizing this as a means of endeavoring to be Christian in practice.

The class this year is conducted slightly different from that of last year, since there is no leader at its head. Mr. Arnett Gamble, founder of the class, who is at Columbia Seminary this year, was the leader of the class since its advent, but this year the work of the class is under the directorship of a committee of three. Diversified programs feature the meetings, every phase of Christian Endeavor being discussed, and the solution of many problems being worked out.

At the North Carolina Christian Endeavor State Convention, held recently in Greensboro, the class was represented by eight of its members, and the official delegate was given the opportunity to present the class to the con-

BARIUM SPRINGS NOTES

The Home was delighted to have Dr. Walker, for years the superintendent, make a little visit this week. Thursday morning he conducted prayers and made a splendid talk. Dr. Walker is now pastor of a church at Penn Laird, Va.

Miss Edmonia Martin, formerly a teacher here, pleased the children on Wednesday night with an account of her work as a missionary in Brazil.

"Spooks" have been very much in evidence on the campus recently. On Saturday night ghosts and witches congregated at the Lodge to help Miss Foster entertain the seniors.

Charlie Carriker, one of our graduates of last year who is now a student at Davidson College, taught Mr. Johnston's Sunday School class last Sunday.

Among the recent visitors have been Mr. and Mrs. Bishop, Mr. J. A. Love, and Mrs. Milton Tiddy, from Lincolnton. Mrs. Estridge and Mrs. Roderick visited their children. Mrs. Templeton, of Mooresville visited her daughter, Mrs. Ketchie.

Mrs. Ketchie chaperoned three small boys to the circus at Charlotte.

Our Christian Endeavor sent several representatives, and three teachers to Greensboro. They had a most inspiring time.

Mr. Johnston is away a great deal now. We are hoping the Thanksgiving campaign will be a great success.

A NEW STAR SOON TO APPEAR

There is in preparation at Barium Springs a new publication, the Barium Messenger, which is soon to disclose its brilliance to the teeming thousands of Presbyterians in the North Carolina Synod. They may not all know about this; and, fearing the effects, if this sudden deluge of news, views, and editorial gems, catch them unprepared, we are using the friendly columns of the Presbyterian Standard to soften the blows, break the news gently, and to give our prospective readers an opportunity to arrange for at least a day of uninterrupted seclusion for a perusal of this wonderful publication.

This paper will be sent to all the churches. We hope there will be no Presbyterian family in North Carolina without a copy and we would like to whisper to any pessimistic friends of ours to read this first issue carefully. It is good. Also, we are thinking seriously of offering a prize to the person who calls our attention to the greatest number of errors in type-setting, grammar, spelling, logic, and sentiments. Our only condition being that the contestant must locate the errors himself or herself.

Just to show you that this paper is not stingy with its news, we are herewith attaching our Honor Roll for the first two months of the school year for the grades. As any one knows, this is the kind of copy all the newspapers fight for.

Any person desiring an extra copy or copies of the Messenger will be promptly served upon request until the first issue is exhausted.

Honor Roll

First Grade—Aubry Clark, Mary Cable, McDonald Walton, Dorothy Thomas.

Second Grade—Julia Stollenwerck, Mildred Thomas.

Third Grade—Charlie Sears, Jimmie Johnston, Mildred Morrow, Tiny Kirby.

Fifth Grade—Edna McMillan, Harriett Stollenwerck, Abbie Roper.

PERSONAL

Rev. M. B. Lambdin has returned to Washington City from an enjoyable ten-days' trip out into the lecture field.

His first point was at Marietta College, Ohio, where he addressed the student body and pupils of the public schools on the Civilization of Ancient Egypt. Then at Mount Vernon, Ohio, in the Congregational Church, with a Gospel sermon in the morning, and another at night on Jerusalem; a large crowd being present, made up of the local church along with that of the Presbyterians, who had come over, by previous arrangement in a body to make the joint congregation.

vention, telling of its work and its desire to be of assistance to Christian Endeavor Societies in the State. At the same time the class was highly commended for its constructive work by Mr. Frank Wilson, North Carolina Field Secretary for Christian Endeavor, and by Mr. Charles F. Evans, Southern Secretary for Christian Endeavor.

This past week the class sent out two deputations, the first of the year. Much time has been spent in preparing the members for this kind of work, and several other deputations will follow immediately. If a society is not functioning properly, if it has some problem to solve, or if it needs to be revived and enthused, it should send to the Training Class for a deputation. Mr. E. P. O'Connor is chairman of the deputation committee and will be glad to communicate with anyone in regard to this.

Officers of the class are: President, W. W. Purdy; Vice-President, A. H. Hollingsworth; Secretary, A. Y. Bowic; Treasurer, B. U. Ratchford.

Church News

On Monday night, at the same place, he gave an illustrated lecture on Egypt, specializing largely on the recent spectacular discovery of Tut-Ankh-Amen's tomb, in the valley of the tombs of the kings at Thebes; and which he had the rare pleasure and opportunity of visiting and taking snap-shot pictures of its exterior, during his tour abroad during the past winter and spring.

The concluding engagement was at Lake Erie College, Ohio, near Cleveland, with two illustrated lectures on Palestine and Egypt; and two chapel talks, one covering the Egyptian ideas of the future life, as based on "The Book of the Dead."

Mr. Lambdin has other engagements under consideration for a future itinerary, one as far west as Nebraska.

Having been a student of biblical archaeology for more than 30 years, he has compressed the results of his researches into a popular course of four lectures entitled: "Modern Discoveries in Bible Lands."

In an effort to show what the pick and spade of the excavator, and the tireless skill of the decipherer have done in laying bare the long hidden records of the past, in stone and clay, at Nineveh, Babylon, Palestine and Egypt.

Marvelous discoveries that project a flood of light confirmation on the prophetic utterances of the Divine Word, touching the glory and grandeur of the then existing great empires and cites of the historic past; and with their predictions of future destruction, as we see it fulfilled to the letter in the doom of their present ruin and desolation.

NORTH CAROLINA

Fayetteville Presbytery stands adjourned to meet in the First Church, Fayetteville, Tuesday, November 20th, at 1 o'clock p. m. E. L. Siler, S. C.

Charlotte—This is "Father and Son" week all over the nation and the Charlotte churches are celebrating the fact with banquets given by the Brotherhoods with the boys of the congregations as guests. Special programs have been prepared for the occasion.

Second Church, Charlotte—On Tuesday evening, at 8:00 o'clock, Dr. McGeachy will give the second of his lectures on "Church History." The attendance at the first lecture was gratifyingly large. At 7:30 p. m. will be held the business meeting of the Woman's Bible Class in the club room. It will close promptly at 8:00.

The New Presbytery—Rev. E. L. Siler writes as follows: "Since sending you the action of Synod in creating new Presbyteries and changing the bounds of some of the old ones, I find that the line between Fayetteville and the new Presbytery on the east of Orange (in Johnston County) runs between the churches of Oakland and Spence, leaving Spence in Fayetteville Presbytery."

Oxford—As a result of meeting held by the pastor, Rev. F. F. Comerford, 17 members were received on profession of faith into Geneva Church. During same month, October, ten were received into Oxford Church, part by letter and part on profession of faith. These two churches under leadership of Mr. Comerford are taking on new life. Geneva Church expects to erect a new church building in near future. God has done great things for us whereof we are glad. J. M. B.

Clarkton—Rev. Leonard Gill, Synodical evangelist, has just closed a splendid meeting at Clarkton. While it was in the Presbyterian Church it was not confined to that people, for all worked together, and together received a blessing. Some of the most impressive services were the one for women, the one for men only, and the one on the "Home." There were a few more than 20 professions nearly all of whom have already united with the church, and many reconsecrations. A splendid offering was made for the support of Synodical Home Missions. Mr. Gill's meeting and presence with us will long be remembered by the people of Clarkton.

Pollocksville—Rev. Wm. Black, D.D., came to us October 27th and began a series of services that night which continued through the following week closing Sunday November 4th. This was the fourth meeting Dr. Black held in this church; the first time he came to this church was something like 27 years ago. Dr. Black is highly loved and esteemed by all the people of the entire community. The preaching of the Word was persuasive, convincing, and convicting. There were 30 who made profession, ten joined this church, several joined the Baptist, some the Methodists and Episcopal Church. There will be others to unite with this church later. There were 150 who promised to read the Bible every day. Five promised to hold family worship. Mr. Burr was with Dr. Black and conducted the singing, as an appreciation for his faithful and untiring service the church contributed to Mr. Burr $50.00. Also contributions to Synod's Home Missions amounted to $109.65.

Greensboro, First Church—From the church bulletin we clip the following:

Our Church School: Last Tuesday night we had a most interesting meeting of all our Sunday School teachers and officers. Reports were made from the different departments and they are all growing and over-crowded. We are already using the Hut for one department, the Y. W. C. A. for the ladies Bible class, the hall-ways, the pastor's study, the church and choir room for various classes and we will soon have to appeal to nearby neighbors to let us use rooms in their houses on Sunday morning. Last Sunday we had about 800 present on time and we are rapidly approaching our goal of "1,000 by Thanksgiving."

Mr. Ranson, president of the men's Bible class, reported an average attendance of 134. Next Sunday they are starting a "bring one" campaign.

Mr. Barnes reported an attendance of 125 in his class of college girls. This is a splendid number and increasing every Sunday.

From November 18th to 24th a training school for Sunday School teachers will be held in our church. This is under the auspices of all the Presbyterian and Methodist churches in the city, a fine faculty has been engaged and our teachers are all urged to take the course.

Hamlet—The members of the Hamlet Presbyterian Church, as well as the general public, have thoroughly enjoyed a season of Gospel meetings, held in the new Presbyterian Church and conducted by Dr. J. M. Clark, assisted by Rev. W. H. Roth, as song leader.

Preaching each afternoon and evening since Sunday, October 28th, Dr. Clark, with his earnestness and profound sermons from day to day, impressed the people of Hamlet most forcefully of their duties in a religious way.

The series of meetings was a decided success in many ways. Church members were greatly revived and many were brought to see more clearly their obligations as professing Christians, while non-professors were shown the way of life in no uncertain terms.

The co-operation of the other denominations of the city was a most pleasing feature of the meeting.

As a visible result of the meeting, 23 were added to the church membership by examination and certificates, while the entire membership of the church, who attended the meetings, pledged their renewed interest and zeal in the welfare of God's kingdom.

As a further result of the meetings, a noon day prayer meeting has been organized, where men of all faiths can meet and offer their petitions in the middle of the day.

Dr. Clark and Mr. Roth have secured permanent places in the hearts of many of the Hamlet people and their good work here will bear fruit far in the future.

Laurinburg—Dr. J. Ernest Thacker, General Assembly evangelist, concluded a two-weeks' meeting in Laurinburg Presbyterian Church on October 21. There have been many revivals in Laurinburg, but it is the universal opinion of people of all denominations that this was the best and most fruitful meeting that our town has ever enjoyed. For weeks before his arrival, very careful preparation had been made in preaching and prayer. For a week, a hundred or more Christians met daily in prayer for God's blessing upon the meeting. From the very first service, it was evident that the Spirit of God was applying the truth to the hearts of all present with power.

Dr. Thacker preached the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, and sticks to the main point of holding up the Saviour before the eyes of men. Every sermon is a model of compactness, with an unusual amount of biblical doctrine, and countless quotations of scripture. If there is anything sensational about his preaching, it is the entire absence of all professional evangelistic legerdemain and vituperation. He preaches the positive side of the Gospel with convincing, convicting power, and appeals to the highest and noblest in one's nature. People everywhere are hungry for the Gospel, and multitudes crowded to hear him morning and night for 15 days.

Mr. Thos. B. Roddy, leader of singing, and personal worker, is a man of deep spirituality and wins the hearts of young and old from the very first. With the aid of Mrs. Roddy, a splendid accompanist, the music was an inspiration and power in the meeting.

Mrs. Thacker delighted an audience of nearly 700 women and girls with her lecture, The Human Touch, and on Monday night a great crowd heard her splendid and instructive lecture, God's Creation and Christian Science. One hundred and twenty-seven signed cards for church membership and 655 signed reconsecration cards. More than 40 have already united with the Laurinburg Presbyterian Church, and a dozen more have sent for their letters. Also many have united with other churches in the community. May God's richest blessing be upon these servants of his in their great work. C. B. C.

Steele Creek—"Our Fall communion will be held on the fourth Sunday in this month, November 25th. Each night of the preceding week we will have preaching by Rev. J. F. Ligon, pastor of the Tenth Avenue Presbyterian Church, Charlotte. Work now going on on the new Sunday School building will probably interfere with the morning service. But the hours of the service will be announced later. Let us be much in prayer that God will greatly bless this special grace to the good of the whole church.

"The weather has been unusually favorable for building this fall. As a consequence the workmen have gone right up with our new Sunday School building. It begins to look now as if the building will be complete before the holidays. When complete it is going to give us a model church plant, the equal of any that you will find in this part of the state.

"Thanksgiving Day this year comes on the 29th. As usual, we will have our service at 11 o'clock, at the church. The special offering for the day goes to Barium Springs. The hundreds of little children there are counting on us to make a generous offering for them. Let us show them how much we love them and that we are determined that they shall not be in want. It would be a fine thing for this church to send beforehand the chickens for their Thanksgiving dinner. Let us do it!

Ingathering Day, November 30! This is the day following Thanksgiving. Boys and girls, how about the cotton? We are hoping to have more cotton this year than for many years past. But it depends upon you. Our church originated this blessed custom, and let us keep in the forefront with it. Other churches are now having this day, and they are making a great deal out of it. In our own congregation, one family, each year, gives a bale of cotton on this day. Is this not a real challenge to every family in the congregation to do its best? If you happen not to be raising cotton, remember that a cash offering is just as acceptable. Remember the offering goes direct to the support of Mrs. O. C. Williamson, in Mexico, and to Rev. Mr. Stevens, in China. They are out there carrying the message for us. Let us hold the ropes here at home.

"Mr. Walker reports a most successful meeting held at Philadelphia Church. He was with the pastor, Rev. L. W. Brown, for a week, preaching morning and night daily. During the meeting there were fourteen professions of faith, and a hundred and forty-two reconsecrations. The spiritual life of the whole church was quickened."—From the November Bulletin.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Bishopville—We have a good large men's Bible class. The teacher asked the pastor, on review Sunday, to give a short history of the Presbyterian Church. He read the chapter on that subject from Dr. S. L. Morris' book, "Presbyterianism." It made a most profound impression on the men. Several arose and asked that copies be ordered for them. The teacher, Mr. W. A. Stuckey, generously ordered that copies be presented to each member of the class with his compliments. Our men will understand more perfectly what their church stands for.

APPALACHIA

Hendersonville, N. C., Rev. L. T. Wilds, pastor. On last Sunday 16 new members were received into this church, making a total of 90 during the past eight months.

Johnson City, Tenn—A very important action of the recent session of Holston Presbytery was the authorization of the incorporation of the Lees-McRae Institute, Grace Hospital, Grandfather Orphans' Home, Woodrow Wilson College and, in brief, all the work at Banner Elk, N. C., in the Edgar Tufts Memorial Association, with headquarters at Banner Elk and under the joint ownership and control of the Presbyteries of Concord and Holston. This will surely be welcome news to the host of friends and supporters of this great work, and shall doubtless be acknowledged by all as a just and fitting tribute to the life and labors of one who gave his all for it.
T. J. Hutchison.

GEORGIA

Georgia Christian Endeavor Convention—With 57 out of 63 societies represented in the convention, and 503 registered delegates, the Northeast District of the Georgia Christian Endeavor Union made a new Dixie record for District Conventions, at Elberton, all because of the unusual leadership of its president, G. L. Johnson, and a co-operating set of efficient officers.

"Our Junior Garden," under direction of Miss Nancy Lowe Morton, District Junior Superintendent, and "Four Decades of Christian Endeavor," under direction of Miss Gladys Sheppard, District Intermediate Superintendent, delighted and informed the convention splendidly. Miss Ruth Thompson, Southern Field Secretary of the United Christian Missionary Society, and Southern Secretary Evans were the out-of-state speakers.

The First Presbyterian Society of Athens has 115 points on its denominational chart, and has organized two new societies.

A. L. Johnson has wholly won the hearts of the Endeavorers and as a token of love was presented with a leather portfolio and a gold Eversharp pencil. Mr. Johnson has done a work which is equaled by but few District Presidents in Dixie, and excelled by none. Mr. Johnson is planning to enter school to prepare for the ministry.

The next convention goes to Toccoa Falls. The officers elected were: President, G. L. Johnson, Athens; Vice-President, Charles Harris, Winder; Secretary, Mrs. P. L. Hutchins, Staham; Treasurer, Lamar LaBoon, Athens; Junior Superintendent, Miss Nancy Lowe Morton, Athens; Intermediate Superintendent, Miss Gladys Sheppard Elberton; M. S. P. Superintendent, Miss Agnes McGuire, Athens.

KENTUCKY

West Goshen—The revival meetings at the West Goshen "Rule Memorial" Presbyterian Church in Louisville Presbytery U. S., October 14-22, 1923, for the third successive year proved to be a season of remarkable divine visitation. The meeting was opened by Elder Thomas B. Talbot, of the Kentucky Synod, U. S., superintendent of Home Missions and Sunday School Work in three Presbyteries, following a very gracious Sunday service conducted by Elder Owen R. Mann, of Louisville, Mr. Talbot, the evangelist, was assisted also by Mr. Brandenburg, of Louisville Seminary, a fellow worker in the Kentucky mountain missions. Very careful spiritual preparation was made for the revival in the home prayer services and the Sunday afternoon meetings during September by Rev. L. V. Rule, of New Albany Presbytery, U. S. A., who has supplied this pulpit for the past two or three years on his spare Sunday afternoons under the care of the Home Mission Committee of Louisville Presbytery, U. S.

There were ten confessions and additions to the church the first three nights of evangelist Talbot's stay. He made the most direct and simple presentation of the Gospel, and in all there were 17 additions to the church besides eight confessions of Christ in the homes of those too far away to attend the revival meeting but who had been embraced in the home prayer services preparatory thereto. Ten children were baptized in one of the preparatory services and ten others were baptized during the revival meeting. There were 25 reconsecrations to Christ on the last Sunday night of the revival.

The conversions in the homes some distance from the church mark the extension of the West Goshen work to every group of isolated families for miles around who have no gospel privileges other than the coming of the Presbyterian pastor to them on horseback over the river hills. Mr. Talbot has visited the field several times during the year to supplement the faithful encouragement given to this work by Rev. A. A. Higgins, chairman of the Home Mission Committee of Louisville, and now a splendid day school is in operation with Miss Monace Wilson, of Scottsburg, Indiana, a consecrated young Christian teacher in charge, who received her preparatory training at Hanover College. The people pay half the expense of this day school and the local county board of education the other half. These children who attend the day school are three and four miles from the regular public school and one can well imagine what this newly established emergency school means to them. Elder C. W. Rule, of the Goshen Presbyterian Church is trustee of the school.

And now comes in a most important and inspiring feature of this entire Home Mission enterprise. The territory and congregation of West Goshen Church embrace a large number of people across the Ohio River within the bounds of New Albany (Indiana) Presbytery, U. S. A., and very helpful assistance to the work has been extended by Rev. F. W. Backermeyer, Synodical Superintendent of Home Missions in Indiana and Rev. W. W. Logan, superintendent of Home Missions for New Albany Presbytery. A student from Louisville Presbytery will be placed on the Owen Creek field across the river in Indiana, the only church for miles around, and the services at Dark Corner School House across from West Goshen will be resumed at once. Rev. L. V. Rule, stated supply of West Goshen Church for the past three years, has also covered the Owen Creek and Dark Corner territory with his faithful wife for more than a year past, ministering in the homes of a totally neglected working class and tenant population. The people of Owen Creek Presbyterian Church have given every assistance possible to the work. Rev. F. W. Backermeyer sent to Rev. L. V. Rule and wife during the past season a most generous supply of clothing, shoes, hats, and other necessities for destitute families on this entire Home Mission field, and the results of this practical Christian kindness are now manifest in the happy bunch of youngsters now in day school and other souls who found God during the recent revival. One entire family thus relieved by Mr. Backermeyer came into the church. Rev. John Rule, founder of the West Goshen Mission and his good wife still live, at 86 and 84 years of age.

TENNESSEE

Memphis—Westminster observed Reformation Day, October 28th, and heard a sermon on Huguenot Influence in America. Descendants of Huguenots were in the audience.

Little Roberta Browne, of Westminster Sunday School, recited the shorter catechism recently, aged seven and one-half years. She is the grand-daughter of Rev. C. T. Thompson, Centerville, Miss.

Evergreen—Rev. J. B. Carpenter, pastor, is preparing for revival services to be led by Rev. L. J. Sherrill, of Covington, Tenn.

First—The auditorium has been made new, and the building generally overhauled. Dr. Williamson, the pastor, has substituted a Bible class for the evening service, and is pleased with the change.

Trenton—Both the morning and the evening services at the First Presbyterian Church on a recent Sunday were devoted to the celebration of the ninety-ninth anniversary of the founding of that church. Good congregations were present and the day was one filled with hallowed memories and inspiring exercises.

Mr. M. H. Holmes read a brief sketch of the history of the church, showing that the organization was effected on October 20, 1833, under the leadership of Rev. Alexander Campbell and was participated in by 11 members, namely: Abner A. Grigsby, Mrs. Margaret Grigsby, John Woodfin, Mrs. Elizabeth Woodfin, Joseph M. Carthel, John H. Crisp, William Bowman, Mary Crisp, James Brown and Miss F. Shaw. Of these, Messrs. Grigsby, Carthel and Crisp were elected elders.

The pastors and supplies of the pulpit previous to the Civil War were: Rev. Messrs. J. F. Sloan, McNutt, John Becton, "Father" Hodges, A. T. Graves, Wm. A. Hall, J. E. Bright and A. S. Campbell. Since 1865 the pastors and supplies have been Rev. J. H.

McNeilly, D.D.; Rev. M. M. Marshall, D.D., Rev. P. D. Stephenson, D.D., Rev. J. T. Rothrock, now of Memphis; Rev. W. T. Palmer, now of Lynchburg, Va.; Rev. T. M. Hunter, now of Beaumont, Texas; Rev. R. L. Benn, now of Uniontown, Ala.; Rev. E. C. Sullivan, now of Ninety Six, S. C.; Rev. E. L. Grau, now of The Dells, Wis.; Rev. W. T. Waller, D.D., now of Centerville, Ala., and the present pastor, Rev. Lynn F. Ross, who is nearing the close of his sixth year in Trenton.

The congregation has occupied three buildings, first a residence rented, which stood on High Street about where the Birmingham store now stands, a small frame church which stood on the same lot, and the brick church at the corner of Fourth and High, erected under the pastorate of Rev. J. T. Rothrock in 1892.

The following have served as ruling elders: A. A. Grigsby, J. H. Carthel, J. M. Crisp, Ben Elder, J. D. McDowell, W. M. McBride, W. O. Kelly, J. C. McLean, J. C. McCulloch, G. B. Blach, R. E. Grizzard, J. D. Hill, J. E. Carthel, W. W. Wade, W. A. Skiles, Wm. W. Herron, Wilson W. Lain, M. M. Neil, W. F. McRee, E. A. Herron, W. L. Wade, M. H. Holmes, S. P. Caldwell, G. W. Farris, C. S. Lane, and B. F. Lemmond. The last nine names constitute the present session of the church.

A picture of Mr. Ben Elder was brought to the service and kept in view of the congregation, and attention was called to the fact that the pulpit Bible now in use was presented to the church by Mrs. Elder after her husband's death.

During the session Sunday morning there was displayed for the first time a beautiful silken banner prepared by Mrs. Jno. S. Cooper, a granddaughter of one of the charter members, and other ladies in the Auxiliary, bearing four stars, one for each of the charter members of this church who has entered the ministry. These are Rev. Sherwood L. Grigsby, Rev. W. M. Anderson, Rev. A. H. Bartholomew and Rev. Algernon Killough. This banner also bears a copy of the old Covenanters Flag under which the Scotch Presbyterians fought for civil and religious liberty.

The music for the day was specially prepared and adapted for the occasion by the choir and was greatly enjoyed. The solo, "The Model Church," was sung by Mrs. S. P. Caldwell and added much to the significance of the occasion, as it carried the congregation back to the olden days.

The pastor spoke briefly at the morning hour on the "Things Behind" and at greater length in the evening service on the "Things Before," showing that the present congregation should be inspired by the example of their fore-bears to attempt greater things in the coming days than these early pioneers would have ever dared to have hoped for. He outlined for the church a program of enlarged activity in the line of soul winning, for large quarters to house the growing Sunday School and social activities of the church, and a larger spirit of service to God and to man for the sake of Jesus Christ the Lord. He insisted there must be faith in God, love for God, and service to God.

VIRGINIA

Newport News—Nineteen new members were welcomed at the quarterly communion just held in the First Church, eight upon profession and 11 upon certificate, two of whom had come from the Episcopal, two from the Methodist and one from the Disciples Church. Dr. Wellford has always made it a rule never to solicit members from other churches, their advances are, of course, cordially met and many have been welcomed. Four adults and one infant were also baptized.

WEST VIRGINIA

The Presbytery of Winchester met at Gerrardstown, W. Va., on Tuesday, September 4, 1923, at 8 p. m.

There were present 19 ministers and 22 elders. Rev. C. A. Engle was elected moderator, and Rev. J. Hodge Smith, reading clerk.

Rev. F. T. McFaden, D.D., was received from the Presbytery of East Hanover, and arrangements were made for his installation as pastor of the church at Winchester, Va. Also Rev. C. R. Bailey, from the Presbytery of Fayetteville, and arrangements were made for his installation at Romney, W. Va. Rev. A. B. Mann, of the United Brethren Church, applied for membership in the Presbytery, having received a call to the church at Thomas, W. Va. Mr. Mann is a native of Scotland and raised a Presbyterian, and his examination was entirely satisfactory, but, not having had an opportunity to secure a certificate of dismission from the United Brethren Conference, his reception was deferred until an adjourned meeting to be held at Thomas on October 28. Mr. Ben Reed, a recent graduate of Union Seminary, Richmond, Va., was licensed to preach. He accepted a call to the church at Burlington, W. Va., and a commission was appointed to ordain and install him there.

The pastoral relations between Rev. R. A. Dawson and the Berkeley Springs and Duckwall Churches was dissolved at his request, and he was granted permission to labor outside the bounds of Presbytery until the spring meeting.

Popular meetings in the interests of Foreign and Home Missions were held in connection with the reports of those committees, and Presbytery heard an address from Dr. Warren H. Stuart on the work in China.

Rev. G. G. Sydnor, D.D., preached the Presbyterian sermon on the subject of Family Religion.

The next stated meeting will be held in the Cedar Cliff Church on Tuesday, April 15, 1924, at 8 p. m.

Queens College — On Friday evening Dr. W. H. Frazer will speak at the Father and Son banquet to be held at the First Presbyterian Church in Durham, and on the following Sunday he will preach the morning sermon.

On last Friday morning at chapel Dr. Frazer spoke to the student body on the significance of Armistice Day taking the place of Dr. Gilbert Glass, superintendent of Sunday Schools and Young People's Work of the Presbyterian Church. Dr. Glass was to have come from Richmond to address the students but was prevented by illness.

The Domestic Science Practice House recently completed has been artistically furnished throughout and a number of students have moved in to begin their practice work. Miss Florence Gahr assistant in the home economics department is in charge of the practice house.

Flora Macdonald College—The New York branch of the General Alumnae Association is planning to give a luncheon early in December at which it is hoped to have the college represented. Arrangements for the luncheon are in the hands of Miss Lucy L. Finley, '08-'13.

The Flora Macdonald College Calendar is now being made up and will be ready for distribution about November 20th. The General Alumnae Association in co-operation with the college "Y" will have charge of the sale this year. The calendar will have a new and attractive cover design—will carry new cuts of the campus and buildings and will have a special page devoted to Scotch Day with accompanying photographs. Orders for the calendars should be sent either to Miss Berta Coxe, Red Springs or to Miss Madge Hardaway, care the "Y," Red Springs. The calendars will sell for 50 cents and the proceeds will go to the College Beautiful Fund now being raised by the alumnae.

The Raleigh branch, one of the most active of the 43 associations, met with Miss Janie Blue last week to plan for the work of the year.

Columbia Theological Seminary—We have had as our guest during the week, two of our returned missionaries, Rev. J. N. Montgomery, of Hwianfu, China, and Rev. W. C. McLaughlin, of Haichow.

Mr. Montgomery delivered a very interesting address at the chapel here on Friday. Mr. McLaughlin is enroute to fill a number of engagements in Charleston Presbytery.

Dr. John M. Wells preached the annual sermon before the Christian Endeavor Society of North Carolina, at Greensboro, on October 28th.

Dr. Melton Clark has transferred his membership from Charleston Presbytery to Suwanee Presbytery of the Synod of Florida.

Dr. James B. Green filled the pulpit at Sumter, S. C., on October 28th.

The students naturally feel deeply concerned over the agitation of removal of the seminary. However, they are exercising a great deal of caution in expressing their opinions, and are continuing their work without demoralization.

Mr. S. W. Dendy has charge of the Young People's Work at the First Church, Gastonia, N. C. Mr. A. F. Doty has charge of the Ora Street Church, Asheville. Mr. W. K. Blake preaches in Douglas, Ga. Mr. W. C. Copeland, Ridgeway, S. C., Mr. E. A. Dillard, at Bamberg and Denmark; Mr. H. N. Alexander, Liberty Hill and Heath Springs.

Union Theological Seminary—Interest in athletic work among the students has been revived and increased. The large athletic grounds in Westwood furnish ample room for several kinds of sport at the same time. Under the capable leadership of Mr. Dwight Chalmers more students than ever before are participating in the games.

Union Theological Seminary was represented in the Middle Atlantic Intercollegiate Tennis Tournament held in Richmond, Va., just after the seminary closed in May. There were four students entered who made a creditable showing in both singles and doubles.

The doubles championship was won by Messrs. Edgar A. Woods and T. H. Spence, both members of the Senior class. They have each received a handsome loving cup engraved as follows:

Union Theological Seminary

November 7th is always observed at Union Seminary as Schaufler Day, that being the anniversary of the birth of Rev. A. F. Schaufler, D.D., who was so greatly esteemed and beloved in the seminary community, and through whose good offices the institution secured from Mrs. Kennedy the donation of approximately $160,000 for the erection of the model building for the use of the Sunday School department of the seminary's work; and, in view of these relations to the work of the institution, the seminary asked and obtained Mrs. Kennedy's permission to name the building for Dr. Schaufler.

At the chapel service in Schaufler Hall last Wednesday morning Dr. Schaufler's life and work was reviewed and the students were informed of his fruitful activities on various lines and especially of the great service which he rendered to our seminary and the Church by his two sets of lectures here on Sunday School Work and by his helping us to secure this splendid outfit for the department of Religious Education.

The following item appeared in Progress, the organ of the Ginter Park Sunday School, which also makes use of Schaufler Hall:

"Only those who are attending can fully appreciate the rare privilege we officers and teachers are enjoying in the Teacher Training Class now being conducted by Rev. Taliaferro Thompson, D.D., at Schaufler Hall each Wednesday night. Every minute is packed with solid work and enjoyment, for it is work well planned and well executed, resulting in a genuinely good time. We are studying "The Teacher," by Weigle. It is not too late to join, if you hurry, and you will never regret it. There are no fees or dues or other costs except a book at 20 cents. If you want to be a better, more intelligent and efficient teacher, drop in next Wednesday night at 6:30. After you have been once you will not need to be invited again; you won't be able to stay away."

Rev. H. W. Myers, D.D., of Kobe, Japan, was the speaker to the Society of Missionary Inquiry at its monthly public meeting last week.

Mitchell College—One of the most enjoyable social affairs ever given by the Young Women's Christian Association was the Halloween party of Monday evening, October 29th.

The halls and college parlors were decorated with branches of autumn leaves, pumpkin lanterns, jack-o-lanterns, black cats, weird witches, and the Halloween colors of yellow and black. Attractive booths were arranged and from these refreshments were served, or guests might learn of what the future held in store for them.

The entertainment for the evening was furnished by the various classes. Each class gave a special stunt and in this way helped to make the evening such a happy one that it will long be remembered by every one present.

The classes in Physical Education are now busy practicing for field day, which they hope to have at an early date.

Miss Edmonia Martin, one of our missionaries, who has charge of a school in Garanhuns, Brazil, recently spent a few days at the college and made several very interesting and helpful talks to the students.

Greenbrier College—A special meeting of the Y. W. C. A. was called Sunday evening by the president, Miss Mattie McCoy, in honor of Dr. John I. Armstrong, former president of Lewisburg Seminary, who gave a most interesting talk.

The social committee of the Y. W. C. A. gave a Halloween party in recreation hall on Saturday night. Miss Jane Butterfield, chairman, had as co-workers Miss Mabel Smith for decoration, Miss Dorothy Upchurch for refreshments and Miss Fannie Helmick for entertainment. The feature of the fete was the group of side shows presided over by Misses Powell, Sluder, Weldon and Good. Prizes were awarded for the best costume dancers. The former was won by Miss Martha Powell, the latter by Miss Dorothy Upchurch.

The Greenbrier College faculty gave a delightful Halloween dinner to the student body in the dining room on Monday evening. All the tables were gayly decorated in orange; tiny pumpkins lighted up the happy faces of the girls and teachers. The girls at different tables vied with each other in singing and lauding the faculty. An effective finishing touch was given by sweet, low taps, sung to the faculty by the girls at the Dean's table.

Miss Kagey and Miss Eans, of the Greenbrier faculty spent this week-end at Weyer's Cave, Va., and attended the G. M. S.-S. M. A. football game at Staunton.

All the students and the faculty are very much interested in the Book Drive which is on in the college. The young people have pledged $400 for these books for the college library.

The Masquerader Dramatic Club held its weekly meeting Thursday afternoon and each girl gave an individual pantomime.

REMEMBER TO SPECIFY "FOR MONTREAT"

By Rev. R. C. Anderson, D.D.

Everyone who desires to donate anything to the cause of Montreat, which is on the Assembly's Equipment Budget for $200,000, will please remember to specify "For Montreat" in their donations to the Equipment Fund in the campaign which is now being made. This should be done in gifts through those who are now canvassing the Church for the Equipment Fund, and it should be specially remembered in the first Sunday in December when offerings are to be made for the Assembly's Equipment Fund. Montreat was included in the Assembly's Equipment Budget as much as Home Missions, Foreign Missions or any other Assembly's causes, and the Montreat Management, to save any possible embarrassment to gifts for other causes, consented to receive only the funds specified "For Montreat."

In reading the notices in the Church papers in reference to the Equipment Fund, it is not mentioned that Montreat is included in this Equipment Budget, as well as the other causes, now being pressed.

Montreat is doing a wonderful work for the Church, is really the cause of all the causes, and is in the most urgent need for larger and better accommodations for the thousands who wish to attend the Assembly's conferences. Do not forget in your offering to specify "For Montreat."

News of the Week

At the Inter-Racial Conference at Columbia, S. C., a resolution was passed looking toward a campaign in the Legislature to secure support for the Fairwold school. It is understood that the negroes have already subscribed $30,000 towards the work being done by the institution.

York county's recent $2,000,000 bond election for hard surfacing roads, which on the face of the returns carried by a majority of 332, but which was contested on the ground of gross irregularities, was declared valid and the complaint dismissed by the York permanent highway commission, sitting as a board of canvassers.

With full military honors the body of Private George Dilboy, of Massachusetts, who has been recognized by the war department as "one of the outstanding heroes of the world war," was buried November 12th at Arlington cemetery. Army officers and former comrades of the lad who posthumously was awarded the congressional medal of honor, joined in paying tribute to his memory.

Premier Poincare in his Sunday addresses reaffirmed the French government's unshakable determination not to accept any reduction whatsoever in the German debt of 132,000,000,000 gold marks, as fixed by the London conference in 1921.

The signal honor paid to Ambassador George Harvey when he departed from Southampton, Saturday, was the greatest tribute to an American since the day when British warships sailed for the United States with the body of Whitelaw Reid.

Charlotte, N. C., in October had an increase in post-office receipts of $6,381.89, or 13.25 per cent over the same month in 1922. The actual figures show that last month the receipts amounted to $54,553.89, and the same month one year ago $48,172.

CHILDREN

TEACHER IS FINE

Dear Standard:
I am a little girl of nine years old. I go to school and am in the fourth grade. I am very fond of going to school. I like my teacher just fine. She is Miss Goulphin, of Holly Hill, S. C. My best friend has Scarlet Fever now and I am very lonely without her. Please publish my letter, I want to surprise my mother and father.

Your little friend,
Frances O'Brien.

Rockingham, N. C.

HELPS WITH DISHES

Dear Standard:
I am a little girl eight years of age. I am in the fourth grade. I will be nine Nov. 7, so that is not far off. I like my teacher very well. I live in the house with her. I help mother wash dishes. I take music under Miss Bertha Bostic. You send mother the Standard and I read it, and then send it to the church to be given out.

Your friend,
Mary Virginia Lefler.

Shelby, N. C.

NAMED HIM FELIX

Dear Standard:
I am a boy seven years old and am in the second grade. Miss Blanche Monroe is my teacher. I like to go to Sunday School, mama is my teacher. I have one brother. Santa Claus brought us a white Collie pup. We named him Felix. I went to the Sandhill Fair at Pinehurst last week and saw the automobile races, and the auto polo games. My brother belongs to the pig club, he carried his pig to the fair and won third prize. I heard the governor and Lochie speak.

Your little friend,
Allan MacDonald.

UNCLE SAM'S RED CHILDREN

Dear Standard:
Last spring I wrote your little readers that I wanted to tell them about my trip to Europe and our Overland Car which took us from Washington to Hoboken, then from Antwerp in Belgium, all over Europe; finally Daddy sold her in Paris and she was bought to use for a street-jitney. But my story was started and got so long there was so much to tell. Mother said you would not publish it. Now I am way out in the Indian country so I can tell you about some real live Indians. You know until a few years ago this state was Indian lands, but lots of men moved out here and found oil wells and made lots of money, so Uncle Sam made it a sure enough state, and said now go and rule your lands and don't bother me. I'll move the Indians over to Anadarko and look after them there!

We see every day big, fat ugly old squaws with their curious dress and big shawls. Some times with their babies in a papoose riding in a Ford car. Does it not seem funny that the Indians still living like they did when Columbus came over here, are now riding in automobiles. The big men own oil lands too and have lots of money. They dress much better now, but the squaws do not change much.

The Indian men wear long hair with red and blue wool chaps plaited in so as to make a very long pig tail, because this shows he is some heap big chief. They wear great big black hats and are such great big men with hook bone faces. Women wear lots of beads and jewelry. They love it. But Saturday afternoon we go in town to see all the Indians come in from their ranches. Some have cotton to sell; some have hay; others have cattle, for you know Uncle Sam told the Indians they must get busy and make farmers like white man and stop raising just cattle and letting their cattle wander all about over the white man's ranches, because the Indians said "White man take my land. I tear down fence and take the grass and get fat cattle all same big Indian Chief." They call our President "The Great Father," and think it not right the Great Father take all land away from poor Indian and give to white man. What do you think, little boys and girls?

We live now for a few months at this big Army Post, where is a big school to teach soldiers how to shoot cannon and Big Berthas like Germans tried to shoot up Paris with and officers have to learn to command and order these big gun companies to place their cannons, how to shoot, how far to range for shooting, way over on other side of hills. Where they can't even see, the officers have glasses which show miles and miles and they can tell how to set guns.

Indians live all around us here and bring such lovely shawls and rugs, also sweet grass and bead baskets around for sale. Now their children go to Government schools and all children under sixteen are dressing like other children. They are very ugly though, because they have big wide dish pan faces. The teachers say they are not so bright in school books because they do not inherit book intelligence, but only cattle raising and stealing like their fathers and twenty-five grandfathers did.

Mother is looking for a nice young Indian girl to train as a house maid and take her back home, as every one says they are honest in the house and think they must steal only cattle from next door ranchers.

They all wear white man's shoes now, some have big automobiles, Cadillacs and Hudsons, but they still dress just like old Indians.

I am afraid now of the waste basket and my North Carolina relatives will never know I wrote at all. They write so often and ask me when my next letter is coming. I will have to make a whole page story of my trip to Europe and what our Overland car said when we sold her.

Your little friend,
Eleanore Williams.

THE LITTLE GIRL WITH THE CROOKED BACK

Inez whimpered when she came in sight of the new school house, and clasped her mother's fingers tightly. She dreaded facing a room of strange children. The boys and girls in the other school had made fun of her crooked back. Of course these boys and girls would do the same. Inez cried softly to herself.

But no one stared at her, as she passed through the playground, and the teacher in the second-grade room was sweet and kind.

A little girl with heavy brown curls hung up her hat for her. Another girl showed her where the bubbler was, and how to turn the knob so as to get a good drink of water.

At recess Inez had usually sat alone in her seat, but today Rose and Ethel—she had heard the teacher call their names—helped her down the steps and chose her to be the first one to throw the bean bags. At noon Ethel held her coat for her, while Phylis, a little red headed girl, tied her shoestring, which had become loosened.

And instead of walking home alone, hippity-hop, hippity-hop, five or six girls came along with her, and they walked slowly, so that Inez didn't get out of breath once.

"O mother, I love school!" shouted the little girl with the crooked back.

"I thought you didn't like to go to school dear?" asked Aunt Anne.

The little girl with the crooked back looked up from a large piece of bread and butter.

"Every girl in the school was kind to me," she smiled, "and Ethel and Rose say they are going to call for me every morning. "Oh yes; I love school!"

And the happy little girl with the crooked back took another bite of the bread and butter.—Selected.

AT THE FOOT OF THE RAINBOW

Betty sat on the porch steps frowning and looking gloomy when all of a sudden her cousin Billy jumped over the low hedge that separated the two lawns and shouted, "Can't guess what I have."

His eyes were shining, and his cheeks were red.

"Is it something very nice?" asked Betty.

He opened his hand and there on his palm lay a beautiful little gold piece.

"Oh, Billy," cried Betty, "where did you get it? What are you going to do with it? But I know, of course."

"Well," said Billy importantly, as he seated himself on the step beside Betty and let her hold the shining piece in her hand, "I've been working two weeks for it. You know we felt so bad because every one else was going to give grandpa and grandma such nice present for their golden wedding, and we couldn't make things like cake and broidery, that I just thought and thought how I could earn some money to buy something. I heard Mr. Warner tell father he was going to be gone for two weeks, and he'd have to get a boy to run errands for his wife because her baby is so little that she can't go out very much. I asked him how I would do, and he laughed and asked me how much I thought I was worth. I said whatever he thought.

"So I went to work. Today he came home and asked me what I was going to buy with the money I earned. When I told him what I wanted it for he said, 'If that's the case, I guess nothing but gold will do,' and he gave me this. I'm going to give it instead of buying something, because I earned it all by myself."

"Oh, that's a lovely present," said Betty with a little sigh. "Now I'm the only one that can't give anything. Little girls can't earn money, and I'm too little to make a gold cake like sister, and I can't embroider a gold cushion like mother, and—"

and"—Betty was about to cry. Billy looked sober. Betty was his dum, and he wanted her to be happy. Grandmother always made nice birthday cakes for Betty and him and kept a cooky jar for them and it was so good to give her a present on her golden wedding anniversary.

"You're going to give her a gold thimble," said Billy.

"Yes, but mother bought that for me," said Betty, and she wiped away her tears. "I want to give something of my very own."

Billy wrinkled up his brow trying to think of some plan. "We can think of something, I guess, so don't worry," he said as he got up. "Oh, look, Betty! There's a rainbow in that cloud," he cried, "and that's a sign of hope, they say."

Betty glanced up at the beautiful colors and smiled. Then with a cry she jumped up. "Why, Billy don't you know there's a pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow? Look; it goes down right behind that little hill in the meadow. Let's go and get it." She seized Billy's hand, and away they went. Billy was older than Betty and not at all sure that rainbows led to pots of gold, but he ran along just the same.

"Maybe it won't be there," he said. "It's never there after the rainbow's gone, and it's fading."

"Hurry, Billy," cried Betty, almost out of breath. "We must get there before it fades."

They ran stumbling over the field, but the more they ran the farther from them the rainbow seemed to move.

"We shall never get it," gasped Betty.

"Other side of the hill," answered Billy.

They reached the hilltop just as the rainbow faded away, but Betty shouted for joy, for down below them there lay a patch of bright gold. They almost rolled down the hill in their excitement to get there quickly.

Suddenly Billy sopped short and called to Betty, "Sop, stop, Betty; it's only goldenrod!"

Betty didn't stop until she reached the flowers. She couldn't believe that it was not real gold. When she saw that Billy was right she just sat down in the midst of the flowers and cried hard.

Billy tried to comfort her, but she was so disappointed that she cried harder than ever.

Suddenly Billy had a happy thought. "Why, Betty, you're going to be the flower girl at the golden wedding, and these are golden flowers; so why can't you use them in your basket?"

Betty stared at him for a moment and then clapped her hands. "Oh, Billy, the very thing!" she cried delightedly. "Why, I heard mother say yesterday that grandmother wanted a great deal of goldenrod because she likes it better than any other yellow flower. And mother said, 'But we can't have that; it's too early for it. We've looked everywhere.' Now we can have plenty of it."

At the golden wedding when grandmother asked who got the goldenrod Billy spoke up and said, "Betty did, grandmother. She found it at the foot of the rainbow." Then he told the story.

Grandmother kissed Betty and said, "That's the loveliest thing I received, for it is just like the goldenrod that bloomed on your grandfather's farm when we were married fifty years ago today."—Leonora H. Watts, in The Youth's Companion.

THE MAN IN THE MOON

Do you know the Man in the Moon, my dear,

Who comes when the daylight dies?
At twilight time, if the sky is clear,
Just as the sandman is drawing near,
Over the treetops he'll peep and peer,
Looking for Shiny Eyes.

His silver bowl with the foam piled high
And his wonderful pipe he brings,
And then how the golden bubbles fly
Hither and yon all over the sky!

I never saw such a sight, not I,
As the gay little twinkling things,
Then the Moon Man lowers to Shiny
Eyes

A ladder of silver strings,
And he lists no more to my lullabies
But climbs and climbs to the far-off skies
Where the golden bubbles like fireflies
Float on their glittering wings.

And nobody knows where Shiny Eyes goes,
And he never comes back all night;
But just as the morning is touched with roses

With a smile his beautiful eyes unclose,
And he looks so happy I must suppose
That the Man in the Moon's all right.

A CHINESE SCHOOL

The little boys in Chinese schools
Have very odd and curious rules.
To us it hardly would seem right
To turn our backs when we recite.
And fancy what a din and noise
A school-room full of little boys
All studying out loud would make!
Oh, the teacher's ears must ache!
Then, too, how queer their books must be Written from back to front, you see,
All up and down the page, instead
Of straight across, as ours are read!
How strange to use a paint-brush, too,
And not a pen, as we all do!
They'd think us dunces there, I fear,
Our lessons are so different here.

Marriages and Deaths

MARRIED

Riggs-Palmer—In the Presbyterian Church, of Abingdon, Va., by Rev. W. M. Walsh, on October 17th, Mr. Barney Riggs, of Gary, W. Va., and Miss Freda Pierce Pruner, of Abingdon.

McIntosh-Council—At the home of the bride's mother, Parkton, N. C., Miss Ruby Council and Mr. Henry McIntosh, by Dr. V. S. Smith, October 10th.

Alexander-Brantly—At the home of the bride, Mooresville, N. C., October 24, 1923, by Rev. R. A. White, D.D., Mr. James Coyt Alexander and Miss Elsie Brantly.

McKeown - Howey — Dr. Edward Walkup Howey, of Waxhaw, N. C., and Miss Laura Jane McKeown, of Stanley, N. C., were married October 17, 1923, at the home of the bride, by Rev. F. A. Drennan.

Bostian-Henderson—On October 20, 1923, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. N. L. Henderson, Raeford, N. C., Mr. John Clyde Bostian, of Albemarle, N. C., and Miss Annie Lee Henderson, of Raeford, N. C., Rev. W. C. Brown, officiating.

McHugh-Smith — By Rev. Robert Adams, pastor of the bride, at the Presbyterian Church, Pendleton, S. C., October 20, 1923, Mr. Matthew Lee McHugh, of Clemson College, S. C., and Miss Alice Dendy Smith, of Pendleton, S. C.

DIED

Frye—At her home in Abingdon, Va., on August 17th, at an advanced age, Mrs. B. F. Frye. She was an earnest Christian, a member of the Presbyterian Church for many years, a devoted wife and mother. Her patience and cheerfulness, in the midst of affliction, was an inspiration to all.

Clapp—Near Abingdon, Va., on October 23d, Mr. T. M. Clapp, in his 83d year. For many years he had been an elder of the Presbyterian Church, and superintendent of a mission Sunday School—a man who walked with God. His wife and six children survive, one of whom is Rev. Walton Clapp, of Plumtree, N. C.

Kerr—On October 11th, 1923, Mrs. Sudie Hubbard Kerr was called to her heavenly reward. She was a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church, Clinton, N. C. She will be missed in the Sunday School, the Woman's Auxiliary, and in all the work of the church.

MRS. SUE LEWIS HUNT

Mrs. Sue Lewis Hunt fell asleep in Jesus, July 1, 1923. Her death was more of a transition than death, for she retired in her usual health the night of June 30th, and was found dead the following morning. "And Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him."

Her husband, Capt. J. M. B. Hunt, preceded her on this journey by some five years. Their home was known far and wide for its splendid hospitality. Few people ever visited in their community without being entertained in the home of Capt. and Mrs. Hunt; and no minister ever preached in this part of Vance County without spending a night under this hospitable roof. They were "not forgetful to entertain strangers," they were "given to hospitality."

Mrs. Hunt was Miss Sue Lewis before her marriage. Born in her ancestral home, "Idlewild," December 13, 1855, she died in her 68th year. She was happily married to Capt. J. M. B. Hunt in 1894. At the age of 20 she united with Nutbush Church. For many years she taught in the Sabbath School. She was one of the leading spirits in the Ladies' Aid Society. Thoughtful and sympathetic in the home; faithful to her church; devoted to her Master; and generous to a fault to anyone in need; she has left to her many friends and relatives an example of a useful and well-spent life. Two near relatives grieve because of her absence: her brother, Mr. Edwin Lewis; and her nephew by blood and step-son by marriage, Mr. Joseph Hunt.

"Servant of God, well done!

Rest from thy loved employ

The battle fought, the victory won,

Enter thy Master's joy."

Harold Shields.

GEORGE BURDER CONOLY

George Burder Conoly was born in Robeson County, N. C., October 23, 1932, and died at his home in Red Springs, N. C., July 24, 1923, at the age of 90 years, nine months and one day. His great age can be better appreciated when we recall that he was born in the days when Andrew Jackson was President and that his life extended into the terms of 22 of our 29 Presidents. He was five years old when Morse invented the telegraph, a lad of 13 when petroleum was first discovered, and Elias Howe invented the sewing machine. He was 14 at the outbreak of the Mexican War. In the Civil War he was a member of the Home Guards and while on duty in Wilmington helping to obtain salt for the homefolks, he was stricken with yellow fever and would have died no doubt as hundred of others did, had it not been for the constant, faithful care of his young wife when all others were afraid to come near his bed. His life was spared for full three score years after that, but he bore the mark of the awful scourge to the grave.

In March, 1862, he was married to Miss Flora Catherine Currie and for 61 years they lived happily together. They have been peculiarly blessed in their family. Nine children, three sons and six daughters, were born to them and for 60 years there had not been a death in the family. One son, McLean, of Jacksonville, Fla., died just a short time before his father. The other children are, Angus J., of Jacksonville; Wm. G., of Waycross, Ga.; Mrs. T. G. Culbreth, of Tarver, Ga.; Mrs. J. A. McPhaul, Mrs. J. A. Hodgins, Mrs. M. B. McBryde, of the Antioch community. Mrs. F. B. Sexton, of Raeford, and Miss Cordelia, who lives with her mother in Red Springs. There are also 50 grandchildren and six great grandchildren.

In 1862 Mr. Conoly united with Antioch Presbyterian Church on profession of his faith and was a loyal and devoted member until death.

In 1877, he was made a deacon in which capacity he served the church faithfully part of the time as church treasurer, as long as he was physically able. To the last he was always interested in the old church, which by the way was organized the year after he was born. He had a beautiful childlike faith, and in that faith he passed quietly out of the home here into "the house not made with hands eternal in the heavens."

His Pastor.

A Few Cases of Dull Tools

1. One of our medical missionaries forced to perform major operations in a mud hut.
2. Veteran missionary living in dark, damp, rented home, no ceilings, no yard front or back, little if any glass in doors or windows.
3. Chapels in China, dirt floored, no windows, damp and dingy. Chinese men of standing will not enter them. Our Missionary has been trained at great expense yet we are forcing him to waste his time in a large measure.
4. School rooms in Korea crowded to the limit; thousands seeking admission; a wonderful opportunity, but no equipment for our Missionary Force to make the most of it.
5. At Home Stuart Robinson School in the mountains, the largest school in our Church except one, unable to accommodate even with the most meager equipment those who would enter.

The list is long. Read: "Digging Diamonds With Dull Tools." While Synod, Presbytery and local church are raising what they need for themselves can they not give some heed to the call of the man who represents the Church-at-Large.

On December 2d our Church will attempt to raise $500,000 for needed Equipment.

Story and Incident

FOUR PREACHERS I HAVE DISCOVERED

I did not spend my vacation on the farm last summer for the purpose of looking for preachers. In fact I went to the country to get away from them. I had spent three weeks of the summer in conference with a group of pastors wrestling with the problem of the city church. I had worked in close association and in co-operation with the pastors of my own community throughout the year. I felt that I must get away from my brethren and from myself where I might feel the inspiration of one of God's greatest preachers, nature.

But you cannot get away from these preacher folks. They are always on your track. (Blessed is mankind for this). Neither can a preacher get far away from himself. If he gets his mind off of his parish long enough and his body away from it far enough, introspection is bound to follow. God intends that this shall be so. Self-examination is a most wholesome and profitable exercise for any man whose mission is to lead others.

Thus the farm, nature and a much needed introspection in one of Pennsylvania's quiet beauty spots led me to the discovery of four preachers.

The farm well suggested my first preacher. As I sat beside it one day dreamingly the school-day song, "The Old Oaken Bucket," by a sudden turn of fancy I was brought into the realm of preachers. I think I said almost aloud, "Eureka!" I had found a preacher. He was down a well.

My preacher down a well is the one who has lost the sense of his prophetic mission. The well environment has robbed him of his prophetic power. The very sound of his voice, which is artificial and unconvincing, reveals this loss. It may be a social well that he is in. The social environment may have absorbed him by its worldly and artificial standards. Night hours in association with various social groups and in being a "good fellow" have sapped the vitality of his prophetic message. Or it may be an economic well. His inadequate salary has tempted him to give himself to various financial schemes for his personal advantages so that he has little time to take in the spiritual riches of Christ by meditation and prayer. In consequence he brings to his Sunday pulpit paucity of thought and emptiness of soul. There are many other kinds of wells into which he may have fallen. But whether one or the other, the preacher down a well is greatly limited in power and usefulness. He is likely to be a liability rather than an asset to the Church he would profess to serve.

Trees are always telling you something. That great spreading apple tree in whose shade I had taken refuge one hot afternoon seemed to suggest another preacher of this modern age. This time it was a preacher up a tree. Of course I had heard of a man by the name of Zaccheus who, being short of stature, climbed a tree in order to obtain a better view of Jesus. But this preacher did not answer to the description of Zaccheus, save that he was small of stature—intellectual stature. Instead of being up a sycamore tree, he was up a hobby tree.

It matters not about the particular hobby. It may be pre-millennialism, post-millennialism, faith healing, second blessing or applied phyehology. Any one of these might elevate a preacher to a tree position. Having been so elevated he finds that he is attracting the attention of many a passer-by. The result is most pleasing, and he may even convince himself that he is preaching the gospel because he has a crowd of curious folks. This preacher thinks he is on a mountain top when he is only up a tree. While the novelty of his position attracts many hearers, he fails to bring to men the broader and deeper ideals of Christian faith. He leaves behind him many a distorted Christian mentality. Mankind may well pray, Lord, deliver us from too many tree preachers.

I had been walking through the fields and woods one August day trying to discover some of Nature's secrets. Interested in birds and flowers and trees as I was that day, I had not realized the exertion I was making in climbing hills and crossing fences. But that night as I lay down to rest an aching body told me that I was tired—too tired to sleep. In that semi-conscious state of mind my thoughts again turned to preachers, and there came before me another preacher. He was the preacher on the fence. Physically I had been much on the fence that day. This preacher was on it morally and spiritually.

The preacher on a fence has many a contemporary in modern life. He shares his position with many a professional and business man. However, that position is a most awkward one, especially for a preacher. Daring to deal with human life and to relate it to God, he cannot afford to be on uncertain ground. Yet that is where the fence preacher is. He never knows just which way to decide. He is convinced of the right of the minority, but prudence and love of applause drive him toward the majority. In moral issues he is seldom convinced as to the right or the wrong. In matters of theology he has settled nothing to his satisfaction. His indecision in practical church matters makes impossible any real enthusiasm in carrying forward a worth-while program. He would lay foundations for the future, but Conference may change him at its next session, so he does not do so. His Sunday messages reflect his indecision. They abound in such words as "maybe," "perhaps," "I think so" and "if." Bring in the non-committal class, he has one advantage. He is not likely to get into much trouble. But neither will he bring conviction to his bearers, nor will he stir them to righteous action.

One beautiful Sunday afternoon my lady and I went for a walk. As we lazily journeyed along there rose in our pathway one of those majestic Pennsylvania hills. Something about it seemed to say, Climb me if you can. Slowly we mounted to the top, following a v-shaped cowpath. What recompense for our labor! For out before us stretched a glorious panorama. Across that bowl-shaped valley we could see other hills carpeted with green pastures and decorated with clumps of summer trees. Winding down the valley like a silver thread flowed the creek in its ceaseless journey to the sea. Above was the setting sun gathering about him his robes of crimson and gold ready to make his departure. When we came down from that scene and in the quiet of the evening my mind again turned to preachers, and there flashed before me Jowett, Jefferson, Norwood, Sadman and McDowell. Said to myself, these are mountain-top preachers. They linger much on the heights of life. There is ever unfolding before them the glory of the Sun of Righteousness. Then I remembered that other preacher who "seeing the multitude went up into a mountain" and "opened his mouth and taught them." I had made my great discovery. That evening I prayed that I and my brethren might in method and spirit become more like him.—Rev. Wm. J. Vaughan in N. Y. Advocate.

Wheat

is the Fuel of Life

You can get the most food value out of wheat by eating bakings that are made from good plain flour. A dependable baking powder must be employed or you do not get the full nutritious value of the wheat—nor will your bakings be as palatable and easily digested.

The same results cannot be had if you use Self Rising Flours, or any so called ready-to-use substitute for plain flour and good baking powder. Food authorities and physicians agree that bakings that do not raise properly are bad for the health. Such foods are hard to digest and in time cause stomach trouble.

Mothers who are interested in the proper growth and health of their children (and all mothers are) should never use anything but a good brand of plain flour and a time-tested leavener such as Calumet—the economy Baking Powder.

Calumet has more than the ordinary leavening strength. It raises every baking to its height of nutritious value. It is pure and dependable—do not look for a substitute—there is none.

Use Calumet and be positive of wholesome nutritious and economical foods.

"THE DAYSPRING FROM ON HIGH"

This is the title of a Vocational Exercise to be used in the Presbyterian Sundays Schools and Churches for the Christmas season 1923.

It carries a direct message to the hearts of youth.

It calls for dedication of self and service and substance to Christ.

It may be used at any time and in any Church however small or large.

It can be adapted for a longer or shorter period of time.

A sufficient number for the use of those who are to take part will be sent free of cost for use in the Presbyterian Church in the United States.

Samples of the Exercise and of the Book, "Christmas Carols" are being sent to each Superintendent throughout the General Assembly.

chief interest seems to be talk. They apparently believe that they have wrought a deed when they have merely uttered words.

Greece has found herself at the Testing Time of her modern history; and she is scarcely equal to it. Her characteristic instability of mind seems to have paralyzed her.

I found Greece in consternation over the prospect of the abolition of foreign feeding of the victims of her mad imperialism—although at the same time the nation was vauntingly making ready for another war against Turkey.

That old fashioned quality of independence and self-respect, which is the saving grace of a nation as of an individual, seems curiously absent from the Greece of today.

THE OLD IS NEW

"There is only one way to peace and happiness," said Lady Astor, "and that is through service to others!"

A polite audience applauded. The wire buzzed with the news of a surprising assertion uttered by a lady internationally esteemed and obviously talented.

Few of the ladies who heard it, and fewer of the readers of newspapers, seemed to remember that what Lady Nancy was trying to say was said more beautifully 2,000 years ago on a certain Mount than it has ever been said since; that churches have been established through all the succeeding centuries to preach it and that plain men and gifted men have died in every generation to prove it true.—Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

AN EASTERN LEGEND

A little banyan seed once said to a lofty palm tree, "I am so tired of being tossed hither and thither by the wind, let me shelter a while among your great leaves."

So the banyan seed nestled down among the leaves of the palm tree, which very soon quite forgot the presence of the little stranger.

But the tiny seed was not idle, it sent out little roots and fibres, which crept round the mighty trunk, and under the bark of the tree itself, until at last the tree in alarm cried out: "What is this?"

The banyan replied, "It is only the little seed you allowed to rest among your leaves."

"But now you must leave me," said the palm tree, "you are growing too large and strong, you sap my strength."

"I can not leave you now," replied the banyan, "for we have grown together. I should kill you if I tore myself away."

The palm tree rustled its great leaves, and tried with might and main to throw off the banyan, but it could not, and gradually the palm leaves withered, and the great trunk shrivelled, until at last only the banyan tree could be found.

So it is with little sins that come creeping in; they at last smother all the good in the heart, and destroy its true growth.

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases, such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

If you suffer from Rheumatism, Indigestion, or from any curable disease accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to Shivar Springs,

Box 3D, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons (two five gallon demijohns) of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give the water a fair trial in accordance with instructions which you will send, and if I report no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return within a month.

EDITORIAL

AN ADDITION TO OUR STAFF

We take pleasure in announcing that we have secured the services of Mrs. Mary Jasper Willis, wife of R. B. Willis, of Montreat, N. C., to contribute editorials, from time to time.

Mrs. Willis comes from the famous Boccock family of Virginia, famous in Church and State.

She wields a graceful pen and will no doubt add much to the strength of our editorial columns.

OUR CONGRATULATIONS TO THE WINNERS

Early on Thursday morning, November 15th, THE STANDARD prepared and sent the following telegrams to the three winners in the CIRCULATION CAMPAIGN which opened on October 4th and closed November 11th.

"Miss Meta E. Beall, Greensboro, N. C.:

"Circle No. 10, First Presbyterian Church, wins first prize. Hearty congratulations and our appreciation of your splendid efforts in behalf of THE STANDARD."

Mrs. T. C. Croker, Wade N. C.:

"You won second prize. Hearty congratulations to you and our appreciation of your efforts in behalf of THE STANDARD."

"Mrs. A. H. Key, R. F. D. 1, Newberry, S. C.:

"You won third prize. Hearty congratulations to you and our appreciation of your efforts in behalf of THE STANDARD."

We take this opportunity to express through our editorial column our thanks to all those who contributed to the great success of the CIRCULATION CAMPAIGN.

Aside from the material success which it brought to those who qualified as entrants, much valuable information was gained and the importance of church papers in the home was strongly emphasized.

One of the interesting points brought out in the CIRCULATION CAMPAIGN was the success obtained by small churches with a limited territory. Success was achieved in such districts by earnest individuals who left no stone unturned. They combed the field and got results. A good lesson to some other churches.

"$100 IN GOLD AND CIRCLE NO 10" is a real human interest story telling of the work of the campaign as conducted by the women of the organization winning the first prize. This story will appear in next week's issue of The Standard.

Again—our hearts congratulations and thanks for all efforts in behalf of THE STANDARD.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIANS

Efforts extending over a number of years have been made to form a Federal Union as distinguished from Organic Union of all the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in the United States. These efforts resulted, in March, 1922, in the formation of the "General Council of Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in America." The constituent Churches of the General Council are: Reformed Church in America, Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., Presbyterian Church in the U. S., Reformed Church in the U. S., United Presbyterian Church of North America, Associate Reformed Presbyterian Synod, and Cumberland Presbyterian Church (colored). The General Council is to meet every two years. It has not yet had time to show to what extent it can be an agency for unifying the activities of the constituent churches.

Our Church entered very heartily into these efforts for a Federal Union, hoping that if successful they would put a quietus on the question of Organic Union. But the Northern Church is not satisfied with such a slack bond of union. It has twice as many members as all the other Presbyterian and Reformed Churches together. And its affections are so strong that it has an inappeasable desire to gather all these smaller members of the family into a close and loving embrace. The last Northern Assembly took action to this effect: "While desiring to share in all interdenominational and international movements of the Churches of Christ, we are especially desirous of helping forward the realization of the Organic Union between the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches of our own nation. To this end we reaffirm our desire, and declare our purpose to continue our activities for the realization of one Presbyterian Reformed Church in America." Notice is hereby served on us that there is to be no rest for the wicked.

Why is the Northern Presbyterian Church more anxious to unite with us than we are to unite with them? Is it because they love us better than we love them? Hardly. Is it because sectionalism is stronger in the South than in the North? By no means. Is it because the passions of the Civil War still linger in the South, while they have died out in the North? Nothing could be further from the explanation. Why, then? There are two obvious reasons. One is difference in size. The larger church is always more ready for union than the smaller church. Witness the case of our own church and the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church. The smaller church recognizes the fact that union will mean its complete absorption. The church which remains after the union will be the larger church made a little larger, while the smaller church will entirely disappear. There are no miracles in these days. If the whale swallows Jonah, that is the last of Jonah. He turns to whale.

The other reason is that we are more choice of our ecclesiastical company than the Northern Church is. That church has become such a gallimaufry of doctrinal and ecclesiastical varieties that it has no scruples about keeping company with anybody. Should it succeed in drawing to its embrace all the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, it would at once reach out its hands to the Methodists and Congregationalists, just as the Presbyterian Church of Canada has done. Indeed, it has a permanent committee on Co-operation and Union, whose business it is to keep an eye out for any available Jonahs for the whale to swallow. In 1920, the church instructed this committee to invite all the Evangelical Churches of the country to send delegates to a meeting to confer on union. Delegates from eighteen denominations met in Philadelphia and actually framed and agreed on a basis of union. The movement seems to have halted there, but it shows that we need not feel flattered by the desire of the Northern Church to unite with us, seeing that it is ready to unite with Dick, Tom and Harry.

Perhaps we should answer somewhat more at length why we should not go back to the old mother church. This question is still asked by many, evidently because they think the reasons for separation no longer exist. As the war is over and all parts of the country, and all classes of the people have very cordially accepted the consequences and have come together in political and commercial and social relations, why should not the churches do likewise? This view of the matter assumes that the War Between the States was the sole cause of the separation, and that no further causes have arisen since the war to justify separation. Why should we not go back to our mother?

1. Because the mother Church no longer exists. The Church from which we separated was the Old School Church, the Church which resulted from the division of 1837. It has passed out of existence. If it were where we left it, soundly orthodox, genuinely loyal to the Westminster Standards, there would be strong reasons for going back to it, especially as it would not be greatly stronger than our Church, and consequently we could make our influence felt. But our dear old mother has passed away.

2. The Church of which that Old School Church is now a component part is a church practically without a creed. When it united with the New School Church in 1870, the union was based on the Westminster Standards, simpliciter. This, however, was after committees from the two bodies had tried in vain for three years to work out a satisfactory basis covering the points of difference. Dr. Charles Hodge said, what no one could deny, that while the two churches professedly accepted the same standards, they interpreted them differently. But the interpretation of law is law, which means that the United Church had practically two standards for testing orthodoxy. The strict constructionists made a narrow door of admission to the ministry, and the advocates of lax subscription to the standards made a wide door. This state of the case recalls the story told to illustrate the absent-mindedness of Sir Isaac Newton. He was very fond of cats. He had two holes cut under his study door, a small hole for the kittens to pass through, and a large hole for the big cats. A friend suggested to him that the small hole was not needed, as all kinds of cats could pass through the large hole. He had not thought of that. So it may truly be said the narrow door was useless, as all kinds of preachers could enter the ministry through the wide door.

3. In 1905, that United Church entered into union with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church on the basis of the Confession of Faith as revised by the Northern Church in 1903. It was stated in the terms of the union that "it is mutually recognized that such agreement now exists between the systems of doctrine contained in the Confessions of Faith of the two churches as to warrant this union—a union honoring alike to both." Both parties knew that the system of doctrine contained in the Cumberland Confession of Faith was a modified form of Arminianism. Thus a still wider door was opened into the ministry, and both the other doors were rendered useless. It is hardly too much to say that this great doubly-united Church stands for no clearly defined system of truth.

4. The history of the Northern Church makes it evident that it is traveling in the direction of Broad-Churchism. Not only have the doctrines distinctive of Calvinism been shelved, but apparently the time is rapidly approaching when the denial of doctrines hitherto held to be distinctive of Evangelical Christianity will be tolerated. However much we may love a person, if he is traveling in the direction which we do not wish to go, it would not be very sensible in us to join his company.

5. The doctrine preached and practiced by the Old School Assembly in the Spring Resolutions by which we were cast out, is the doctrine held and practiced by the great conglomerate church of which the Old School forms a part. It is the doctrine that the church owes allegiance to the civil government, and must render support to the government. For example, the last General Assembly of that Church endorsed the Dyer Anti-lynching bill, a bill which proposes to take the crime of lynching from the jurisdiction of State courts and place it under the jurisdiction of Federal Courts. No matter what we may think of the merits of this particular bill, we shall have to stop thinking in harmony with the fathers who founded our Church, and the great leaders who guided it in the past, or we shall have to condemn all such intermeddling with civil affairs. While that Church has removed all aspersions on the Christian character of Southern Presbyterians, it has never repudiated the principle on which it acted when it put these aspersions on our character.

Is there anything seriously wrong in this principle? Does not the church owe allegiance to the civil government within whose borders it exists? Should it not avow its loyalty, especially in time of war when the very life of the government is threatened? Let us answer these questions with another. Whose church is it? We call it the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ. Do we really mean it? If so, it is pertinent to ask, does the Lord Jesus Christ owe allegiance to the government of the United States? Is He a citizen of this proud commonwealth? Hardly. Well, if the Head does not owe allegiance, how can the Church which is His body? Furthermore, does the Church exist within the limits of any one national boundary? What is the Church? "The Church which the Lord Jesus Christ has erected in this world for the gathering and perfecting of the saints is His visible kingdom of grace, and is one and the same in all ages." We are committed to this definition; and if it is sound, then we are a part of the one and the same church that exists in France, in Germany, and Austria. When our government went to war, did the church go to war? So it was said. Our soldiers were crusaders, fighting for the preservation not only of civil liberty but of Christianity. But when did Christ authorize this method of preserving Christianity? What did He mean when He said: "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my servants fight." His servants, as citizens of the commonwealth, may fight for the commonwealth, but certainly Christ has never commissioned them to fight for His kingdom. This mixing of the things of Christ and the things of Caesar has caused more misery than almost any other one thing in the whole long chapter of human miseries. We believe it to be a thoroughly vicious principle, and if there were no other reasons for our preserving a separate existence, this of itself would be ample justification. We owe it to Christ, and to suffering humanity, to stand apart where we can deliver our testimony most effectively to the exclusively spiritual mission of Christ's Church.

FINIS.

"VISITING THE ORPHANS"

Among the New Testament writers, James was pre-eminently the practical one. He did not concern himself so much about the doctrines of the Gospel, as he did about its practices. This did not mean that he would minimize the importance of doctrine, but rather that he would guard against that tendency in man to which Christ referred, when He said, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven;" or when He made doing, the test of being His friend, as when He said, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."

In his Epistle, James gives as a test of pure religion and undefiled, "That they visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction."

It is one of the convincing proofs of the divine origin of Christianity that the Church concerns itself about the fatherless. No heathen religion has ever been known to build asylums for orphans, or to concern itself with their welfare.

Not only does the Church bear the cause of the fatherless on its heart, but there is no cause that appeals more strongly to the heart of the Church than that of children, bereaved of parents, and left to the cold charity of the world.

This is the Cause that always has the right of way, especially at this season of the year, when men and women are called upon to be thankful for God's mercies through the year.

Those located in the Synods of Appalachia, South Carolina and North Carolina, have special claims upon our sympathy and liberality. Our people are encouraged to help them by gifts of money, clothing and provisions, not only because their needs appeal to our sympathies, but also because we have seen the excellent results of the training these children receive. They are fitted for life's work, and from their ranks have come some of our best ministers, missionaries and business men.

Then the consciousness that her orphan children will be cared for by the Church has made death easier to many a widow, who otherwise would find death more hopeless.

Let our people everywhere show the genuineness of their religion by measuring up to the test given by James. Let them remember that inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of His brethren, ye did it unto the Lord Himself.

Send supplies and money, as both are greatly needed.

THE RESIGNATION OF JNO R. PHARR

John R. Pharr has for many years been the Treasurer of Mecklenburg Presbytery, a position requiring an inconceivable amount of detailed work.

When you remember that Mecklenburg Presbytery has 86 churches and 60 ministers, and that the treasurer has to handle the benevolent funds of these churches, you will in a measure begin to realize what Mr. Pharr has done all these years.

Not only has he done this work, but he has been the connecting link between the church seeking a supply and the supply seeking the church.

His growing infirmities forced him to offer his resignation at the last meeting of Presbytery, which was accepted with sincere regret.

This paper, which owes as much to Mr. Pharr as does Mecklenburg Presbytery, extends its sympathies with his failure in health, and joins his host of friends in the prayer that he may be restored to his accustomed health and once more assume his post of usefulness as the friend of every man in need.

Devotional

A TRANKSGIVING DAY PRAYER

We are grateful to Thee this day, Thou Father of all mercies and kindnesses, Thou God of the loving heart and the open hand.

Precious are the memories of the year that is gone, for they tell us of Thy unfailing goodness.

Burdens that were too heavy to be carried by human strength alone have been borne, by Thy help, and griefs that would have broken Christless hearts have been lightened at Thy touch.

Joys that seemed like messengers from Thy throne have visited us. Pleasures that had something of the flavor of heaven in them have been bestowed upon us.

Our thoughts range back through the years and we thank Thee, Father for the priceless and wonderful influences of home, of godly parents, of the open Bible, of the church, of conscientious teachers, of dear friends, whose lives Christ made beautiful and strong.

We thank Thee for days of smooth sailing, with the sun shining brightly overhead.

We have learned to thank Thee also for storms that have buffeted us, for dark nights when tempests were raging, for we have had need of the discipline of tribulation, and we know that character develops under stress and strain.

For citizenship in our beloved fatherland, for protection and inspiration under our starry flag, for the bright heritage that heroes and martyrs have bequeathed to us, for noble traditions and glorious ideals, we praise the God of nations.

We are grateful for the unconquerable spirit of reform and for all triumph of righteousness. If the enemy has beaten us here and there along the great battle-line, may the sting of defeat make us all the more determined to win, and may humiliation goad us into paying the price that insures victory.

Thanks be unto God for the growing sense of interdependence among the peoples of the earth, for the increasing conviction that nations as well as individuals have need of each other. May cordial interest take the place of petty suspicion, may friendship supplant hatred, may the glories of peace supercede the horrors of war.

In the midst of distractions and confusions following the tremendous world conflict, facing problems that are critical and situations that are fraught with danger we are thankful for the ever enlarging persuasion that the only remedy for the sins and sorrows of mankind is found in the redeeming, uplifting power of the Christ.

For partnership in the kingdom enterprise, and for benevolent work to do, we praise Thee, Lord. Disciples of the Christ are we, and therefore champions of truth, soldiers of the Cross, fellow-laborers in the mightiest task ever entrusted to the hand and brain and heart of man. Thou art depending on us, Master. Not through any merit or strength of our own, but by the all-sufficient grace divine, we shall not fail Thee, Lord of our life.

Father, to this day Thou hast led us lovingly. We are not afraid of the future. It is in Thy hand. We commit ourselves anew to Thee with quenchless faith and joyous hope.—United Presbyterian.

THE FUN OF RUNNING AN ORPHANAGE

By Rev. L. Ross Lynn, D.D.

There are thirteen Orphans' Homes within the bounds of our Assembly. These, in plants, equipment and endowment are worth $2,000,000.00. Out of loving hearts and through generous hands contributions amounting to upward of $300,000.00 were made for this work last year. We are furnishing Christian homes and providing a Christian education to 1400 children, who would otherwise have slight chances for life preparation. Who would be willing seriously to contemplate what most would become without the aid furnished through us? It is very fitting that this cause should be presented as a part of the program of Christian Education. If the church is doing a thorough going piece of work in Christian Education you will find it in our Orphanages.

You understand that as I write, I am writing not as the representative of the Institution with which it is my good fortune to be connected, but I speak for all the Orphanages. However, much of what I shall write comes out of my own experience and many of the illustrations are drawn from Thornwell Orphanage. But my experience is common to all these workers and the illustrations from our Home can be paralleled by the other Orphanages, especially the older and larger ones.

When a man is called to undertake the Orphanage work, two well defined impressions or convictions seize him. First, there is the definite conviction that there comes with such a position a tremendous responsibility. It is greater than the responsibility that comes to the President of a Theological Seminary. The Seminary President has his life related to and is responsible for young men who have graduated in college. They are Christians and have decided the problem of their life work. They are to give themselves to the gospel ministry. Ours is a responsibility greater than that of the College President. He has committed to his care young men or women who have finished high school and who, for the most part, come from the better type of our Christian homes.

On the other hand, we are related to and responsible for children—little children. Many of them are handicapped by heredity, many have had an unfavorable environment in which to begin life. The church says to us: "There is a group of twenty-five, fifty, a hundred or three hundred children who are without parents actually or practically. We want you to take the parent's place. We want you to bestow a parent's love and discharge the parent's sacred responsibilities." Were you able to interpret or express your feelings and senses of responsibility as you looked upon that dear child whom God had given you? Its precious body and its immortal spirit were entrusted to your keeping. One of these days you will stand by the side of that child at the judgment bar of God and will there give account as to whether you have been faithful to that trust or not.

Pardon me, but let me say that I shall never be able to interpret, nor will language ever be at my command with which to express the feelings which came sweeping into my soul that night when the Board of Trustees announced to me that I had been elected President of Thornwell Orphanage. The sense of responsibility was staggering. There was the responsibility of financing the Institution, of caring for and developing the physical natures of the boys and girls, for the intellectual training and for the moral and religious instruction of the three hundred new sons and daughters who were being handed over to me. That night was a night of sleeplessness and a night of wrestling with God, like Jacob of old, till the break of day.

But with this sense of responsibility came another—an appreciation of the most unusual opportunity afforded by such a position. In the thought of the privilege, we can, for a time at least, forget the responsibility. One of the first letters received after it had been announced that I was going to Thornwell Orphanage came from Dr. Morris. Among other things he said: "Lynn, there is hardly a finer field of service in the Church than will be yours at the Orphanage." Five years of relationship to this work enables me to realize more fully now than then the correctness of this statement. So we would emphasize the privileges, the opportunities, the compensations, the delights and the joys of our work. It is really fun of the purest type to run an Orphanage.

1. The first of these compensations, the first delight, is seeing these under-privileged children responding to the new life they live in our Institutions. In many cases it would not take an expert to discover that they had not been properly cared for physically, intellectually or morally. They are clearly undernourished, they are timid, shy, afraid, or they are too bold and pert. The magic influence of their new life works wonders. The regular life, wholesome food, exercise, the play, sympathy, and love soon tell upon them physically, intellectually and morally as well. Just a few months often brings the greatest change in their physical appearance and in their whole life spirit.

So in their manner and behavior. The child who will cover her face and turn away is soon led away from that position into an ease and comfort of manner that is surprising. They move with comfort and confidence about the homes in which they live and they come to the officers with as great ease of manner as the average child goes into the presence of the parent. They respond to their instruction in right speaking and right living. A story-telling boy told his matron that he was going to stop this. He said: "I did not know it was wrong." Two children who had about as poor chance for training as any, after eighteen months in the Orphanage, were invited to visit in the homes of a congregation for two weeks. After their return we had a letter from the wife of the pastor saying that she and her husband had agreed that these were the best trained children they had ever seen.

About three years ago two boys, twins, four and a half years old, were brought to our place. The guardian who brought them went with them to the home where they were to live. The motherly matron began to talk to them, saying: "Claude, you and Clyde are going to be my little boys. You are going to live in this big house and you will have a fine time playing in the yard with the other boys." Claude, the talking one of the two, said "I am not going to do it." After a while she began to tell them that she wanted to take them up stairs to their room. "You will find nice little beds and pictures, and things to play with up there" she said. With emphasis Claude said, "I am not going up stairs." After a bit the matron picked him up to carry him up stairs. This determined chap said: "Dog gone your soul. I am not going up stairs." But he went.

Just the other day the writer was in that home. That boy, now seven years old, was sitting on the lap of his matron, with his head on her shoulder and his arm around her neck. If you would ask me how much that child loves his matron, I would say just about as much as your child loves you.

Many things, under God, enter into the accomplishment of these developments and transformations. Chiefest of all is love. A few weeks ago four children were admitted to our home. One is a child three and a half years old. She was placed in a home where one of our college girls was acting as substitute matron. She was out of sight of this child and the baby said: "Where is that woman what loves me?" It is our joy to see these young lives open up and develop.

2. The second of the pleasures, delights, compensations which we mention is the appreciation and the love which the children feel and express toward us. They feel toward us much what your children feel towards you. As your child thinks you are about the greatest and best man in the world, so our children feel. This is illustrated by a little incident which occurred at our place about the time we were celebrating the birthday of the Father of Our Country. The matron was talking to one of her six year old boys about George Washington and trying to impress the mind of the child with the greatness and goodness of Washington. After a bit this child looked intently in the eyes of his matron and said:

"Was George Washington as good as God?" She said: "No, we could not say that, but he was a wonderfully good man." Then the child spoke again and said: "Well was he as good as Dr. Lynn?" We smile at that. But really, is that not a very significant revelation? What would be the result if your child instead of thinking you good and great should feel that you are little, ignorant and mean? Is it not that attitude that gives you your opportunity with your child? So with us. That appreciation, that love they have for us opens the doors of their hearts and lives so that we may enter with our influence.

In their time of fear, in their hour of special need, in the moment of accident their thought goes out to the head of the home. We had a dreadful accident at our place. A dear girl of fifteen had her hand caught in the machinery and it was all crushed and mangled. They hurried her off to our hospital. The shock and suffering was terrible. About the first thing that dear girl said after they had gotten her to the infirmary was: "Does Dr. Lynn know it?" The interest and love which we show the children opens up their hearts and in return they love with a lavish love. I go to visit one of these Superintendents, Bro. Johnston for example, We walk out across the campus. We hear the childish voices from any and every quarter calling out: "Hello, Mr. Johnston." Whence do they come? Way across from a group at play, from some child perched high up in some tree, from the second story window of some home. Then as we approach the yard limit of some cottage here the children come bounding as fast as their little feet can carry them. They run to see who can get to Bro. Johnston first, get hold of a finger and walk nearest his side. They scramble for that favored place. They chatter and laugh and their eyes sparkle. Then I know how much these children appreciate and love their Superintendent, their foster father. Then it is I realize he has some real fun in running an Orphanage.

3. In the third place we treasure as a precious possession the many expressions of appreciation that come from our old boys and girls. These come from North and South, East and West, North America and South America, Asia and Africa. Just a few weeks ago we had at our office a letter from one of our former pupils which was full to overflowing with expressions of gratitude for what the Orphanage had meant to her. She said: "You do not know me, for I went out in 1903—just twenty years ago." The twenty years have not lessened but increased her sense of appreciation.

We are frequently asked if the children appreciate what is being done for them. The reply is: "Just like your children and mine appreciate what you are doing for them." At the time they may not say as much about this as we would like, but when they get away from home and meet life with its responsibilities and problems then they forget all reserve and with great effusion oftentimes they tell what the home meant to them. When do your children pour into your ear and into your heart those expressions of gratitude that cause the catch in the voice and the tear in the eyes? It is after they have gone out from home and are touching life as it is. They see what that fine teaching and this great love on your part means to them.

So with our sons and daughters. There is not a worker who has not had his heart to come up into his throat and his eyes filled with tears, tears of joy as he has read these letters from his old boys and girls. It is in our mind to make a collection of some of these letters and when we grow old and sit in the shadows we will read and revel in these letters. There is no other possession just like these in all the world. This is our joy, our delight, our fun.

4. The fourth compensation is the delight which we find in looking upon "our boys and girls" as they have gone out of the Home and as they are taking their places in life. How interested parents are in the reports which come back from their children in college. How filled with joy they are when the reports are good. We Orphanage Superintendents have about the same joy for our sons and daughters are scattered throughout the colleges all over the South.

A PART OF OUR BIG FAMILY—BARIUM SPRINGS ORPHANAGE

Thornwell Orphanage alone had eighteen of her pupils in college last year. The writer remembers very well that day back in 1893 when he told his father that he was going to study for the ministry. It was very evident that the father's heart was full of joy. So the writer felt when one of "his boys" said: "Doctor, I have decided to study for the ministry."

When we look about and find our sons and daughters taking their places in life and in a worthy manner bearing the responsibilities of life we greatly rejoice. There are found business women, nurses, teachers, home makers, electricians, mechanics, linotype operators, printers, editors, merchants, bankers, doctors, preachers and foreign missionaries. Thornwell Orphanage alone has given to the Church fourteen ministers. It is represented in the following foreign mission fields: Brazil, Africa, Japan, China and Mexico.

We find joy in the Christian homes founded by our sons and daughters. One good mother said: "I am trying to raise my children by the Orphanage pattern." As you rejoice in the worthy lives and splendid services of your own children, so do we. These are our glory and joy and crown of rejoicing, not only now but shall be in the day of Christ at His coming.

FOUR FAILURES

A Study in Life Reclamations at Barium

Any one who works with children knows that mixed in with the pleasure of association with them, and the joy of watching the development of character, there is also the disappointments, when we see all efforts for good apparently go for naught with some individuals.

Perhaps in a great many cases we have allowed our own estimate of the young persons involved to be made without allowing for God's part of the job. We have in mind two "Hopeless" cases, that were at one time in our institution. One ran away about six years ago and took with him several younger boys, and the management, no doubt, heaved a sigh of relief at his leaving, for his record was any thing but one to be proud of. Yet now that boy writes that he is doing an honorable work, that in the years of drifting, when temptations came often to just let all principles go, that the something that was instilled into him at Barium Springs held him back. He says that what he is today is due to the influence of Barium Springs.

Another boy pronounced hopeless about seven years ago, and expelled, after years of silence writes, and we find him holding a very responsible position with a great railroad, and an influence for good through the Railroad Y. M. C. A. He modestly takes no credit to himself for his promotion, but says that "But for the education and training at Barium," he would have had no chance to get where he is, and that in gratitude for this he is trying to do something for the Master through the Y. M. C. A.

If even part of our failures turn out like this, should we ever grow discouraged?

Let us mention two other cases that from a purely human standpoint might be termed failures.

One of these was a little boy whose life here was ended before he could do anything in return for the years of care for him. But after his death it was found that this little chap had collected a few pennies and had left them to build a church on the campus, so that even the weak ones could go to worship. And that little purse of pennies held up before the people of this state did build that church.

As long as Little Joe's Church stands, or any live who have worshipped there so long will the memory be fresh of the real Little Joe's faith triumphing over his frail body.

Now one other; several years ago a young girl, one of our most lovely characters, was stricken with a dread disease. She was sent to a great hospital for treatment. After years she was pronounced cured, and she then decided to take training in this hospital. Less than one year she was permitted to do this, when she was again stricken down, this time almost beyond hope.

And now if this means the closing in of this young life, in which God has only allowed one short year of ability to work and do for others, this one thing will always stand out, and live long after she is gone. That thing is, that of the little money she earned as a student nurse Little Joe's Church was sent the first share.

Are these lives failures? The stone that the builders rejected has become the head of the corner, and these lives, by the Grace of God, are the most beautiful monuments to His glory.

A RESUME OF ORPHANS HOMES IN OUR ASSEMBLY

Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Springs, N. C., Jos. B. Johnston, Supt.

To anyone needing a tonic for their faith, we would recommend a visit to the Presbyterian Orphans' Home, at Barium Springs, North Carolina. This splendid institution is a visible example of faith made into buildings and human lives. Go through the buildings, from the oldest—"Annie Louise"—then Synod, and Rumble and all the long list, to the very newest, and think of them not as things of brick and stone, but as the visions of that army of consecrated men and women, who saw the need and had faith to dare. Pause a while at Little Joe's Church and think of that little boy who attempted to build a church with a few pennies, and how God honored this lad's purpose and permitted those few pennies to be the means of placing this house of worship here. Is not this all "the substance of things hoped for?" And can any one look on this and longer doubt that God rules in the heavens?

This is now the home of 300 children, and 850 have lived here for a time and gone on into the world, during the years past. About 50 each year leave, having graduated or are placed back with relatives. The influence on their lives of living in the Christian atmosphere of this home, is something that will never be known until all accounts are cast up at the final reckoning.

The support of this great enterprise is provided by the contributions from the churches and other organizations in the Synod of North Carolina. Imagine, if you can, what would happen if this support should dwindle and stop. That it does not do this is the greatest evidence of that triumphant faith that conquers everything.

LITTLE JOE'S CHURCH
Barium Springs

Thornwell Orphanage, Clinton, S. C., L. Ross Lynn, President.

We need you to remember that there are 350 boys and girls in Thornwell Orphanage. We wish you to remember that it requires $8,000 a month to carry expenses.

We wish you to know that we still carry a heavy summer deficit and that our most urgent present need is to wipe this out.

We wish you to know that a liberal response from all our Sunday Schools and friends at Thanksgiving will bring us in the clear again, but it will take this.

We wish you to know that in addition to financing the Orphanage, we have many heavy burdens and perplexities, and we need the earnest, believing prayers of all our friends.

Opportunities

There are opportunities for our friends to make some helpful, permanent investments at Thornwell.

(1) Our homes need considerable work, both inside and outside. Some of our homes have not been painted for many years.

(2) One of our greatest needs is a dairy barn.

(3) A much needed enlargement of our plant is a gymnasium and swimming pool.

(4) A great means of advertising the Orphanage would be a moving picture of a day's life at the Orphanage. Some good friends might help us secure this.

Mountain Orphanage Black Mountain, N. C. Robt. D. Bedinger, Superintendent.

This was the first orphanage organized in the Appalachian Mountains to care for homeless "children of the hills." The need was obvious, there being so many of them left in their isolation to drift away into utter ruin. The little Mission Presbytery of Asheville, though young and poor, met the challenge and established a home to shelter and train them. The first building, a small cottage, with its plain furnishings, cost $500, and opened its doors to six little children January 19, 1904. From time to time kind friends have helped to enlarge its quarters so that more than 300 children have received care and training in this Christian home.

A new and well-planned building with up-to-date equipment is just being finished on a farm of 135 acres, located on the highway near Black Mountain. When all of the equipment has been placed, the entire plant will cost $80,000. Though not quite finished, the Orphanage family, numbering 60 souls, have moved into their new habitation, and more will be added soon.

The children are trained in domestic work, the usual school studies, etc. One hundred and twenty dollars will support a child for 12 months. The larger boys, by their farm work, make a good part of the table supplies. This home has no endowment; it is supported by voluntary gifts. Thus far we have kept free from debt. The lives thus saved and trained for good citizenship and Christian service cannot be estimated in money values.

Grandfather Orphans' Home, Banner Elk, N. C., J. W. Holcomb, Superintendent.

Would you withhold a helping hand from a poor, helpless child, that you knew was in need of the assistance that you could give? Do you realize what it means to save the little ones left homeless, who must suffer many privations, which they can only bear in dumb misunderstanding, and wonder why some have so much, and they so little? It is just these unfortunate ones that we, at Grandfather Orphans' Home, at Banner Elk, N. C., are trying to reach and save from their pitiful estate. We have 53 children in the home at present and are making preparations for 25 others, and application for as many more, and appeals coming in daily, but our present equipment and income prevents their admission to the Orphanage. We received from all sources last year, only about $8,000, which had to feed and educate the children, pay salaries, insurance, repairs and incidentals. The children are in our care the entire time and we try to give them every advantage possible—nine months' schooling, from beginning through high school, and other training in various lines. We consider $120 will support a child for a year, and what better investment could one make than to increase the usefulness of a little child? We thank you for the help we have received in the past, and earnestly ask a continuance of that and more. Can you not make a Thanksgiving offering that will make for you and for us a richer, more blessed Thanksgiving than we have ever known? Remember the Orphans of our Church at this time and send some remembrance, if not to us, to some other institution caring for the fatherless.

Our Orphans' Home, Talladega, Ala., Rev. E. B. Robinson, Supt.

This home for Orphan children is 54 years old, and was organized to receive children of Confederate soldiers who were killed in the Civil War. It now takes care of 110 children, having doubled its capacity in the last 10 years. The children attend the Talladega schools, and this feature is splendid training for them, as they associate with other children and have a broader vision. During the last year we have finished and occupied the splendid Johnson Memorial dormitory and auditorium. During the last few years the Church has invested an average of $200 per child per year in this institution. Surely there is no work that is done by the Church that bears better and greater dividends than the work that is being done in all these homes for Orphan children in the Assembly. We emphasize not only their public school education, and their religious education daily (they now can recite perfectly 24 Psalms and are drilled in other Scripture), but their training in the economic departments. They are trained to do well something practical. We rejoice that in all this number we have had no serious illness during the past year.

Synodical Presbyterian Orphanage, Anchorage, Ky., Robt. G. Haney, Supt.

This is the season of the year when the hearts of our people are turned toward the Orphanage work of their Church, and we want to tell you some of the things that have occurred during the past year. Since last Thanksgiving time we have dismissed six children and received eight. We now have 47 children in the home. Below is shown the number from each Presbytery:

Ebenezer	10
Louisville	12
Muhlenburg	2
Paducah	3
Transylvania	5
West Lexington	15

We have had to turn away a number of applications for lack of space. A visit to our home would show the crowded condition, especially on the girls' side of the house. In order to accept a family consisting of two little girls and their brother, who were without both father and mother, an extra bed had to be placed in the hall way. However, we feel that relief is near at hand. The Orphanage owns old Bellwood Seminary and we are looking forward to enlargement in the near future. We are expecting every church in the Synod of Kentucky to have a Thanksgiving service either on Thanksgiving Day or a Sunday near that date when the orphanage work will be remembered and a special collection taken for this cause. This is a beautiful custom, and one that we need to establish more thoroughly, that of giving an expression of our gratitude to God by making a special offering for the needy ones at this season of the year.

The Davis-Stuart School, Inc. (Synod's Orphanage), Lewisburg, W. Va., Robt. K. Robinson, Supt.-Treas.

The Orphanage of the Synod of West Virginia is now entering into its fourth year in the spirit of Thanksgiving. The thirty-three children now cared for in the Home, and who are happy and contented, is the principal mark of our progress. Other accomplishments are but incidentals. In addition to the rebuilt frame cottage which served as the first home, and which is now occupied by the boys, there are five other buildings—the Mary Dickinson Memorial Cottage, a modern brick building which is the Girl's Cottage, the farmer's cottage, a barn, and a temporary two-room school building. The four-hundred acre farm is being improved and is yielding good returns. The children are doing much of the work of the home. But in these things the foundation is being laid

The Children Admitted to Thornwell During the Past Year

Many of our country friends are deeply interested in the work of the Orphanage but are unable to contribute any money. We want them to know that potatoes, rice, peanuts, and other articles of food, or of clothing, are very acceptable and will be greatly appreciated.

The Highland Orphanage, Guerrant, Ky.
Rev. W. B. Guerrant, Superintendent.
 In response to a great need which he had seen throughout the mountains, the Highland Home was founded by the late Dr. E. O. Guerrant, in 1905, at Clay City, Ky. On account of the poverty of many of the mountain sections, there are still thousands of children without any adequate school or church advantages, and under such conditions the lot of an orphan is often a tragic one. This Home is trying as far as possible to meet this need.

In 1917 the Home was moved to Guerrant, Ky., in order that it might have the advantages of the Highland Church and School. It is now caring for 49 children. During the past year 37 were denied admittance.

This orphanage is owned and controlled by our Assembly's Committee of Home Missions. However, the Committee can only assume responsibility for the support of 10 of the children. The other 39 are supported partly by what their relatives or friends can give but largely by friends throughout the Church who either individually or through S. S. classes or Young People's Societies, or Auxiliaries assume a part or the whole support of a child. The support of a child for one year is $125. Gifts of food or of clothing and especially of shoes are always most acceptable.

Our Heavenly Father has in a wonderful way cared for the needs of these little ones in the past. Surely He will not fail them in the future.

Monroe Harding Children's Home,
W. H. Clark, Secretary.

Presbyterianism of Nashville, Tenn., is accorded much credit for the high standard and the successful administration of the orphanage of the Synod of Tennessee, the Monroe Harding Children's Home.

In kindly comments State and County Charity Commissioners unequivocally declare this Home to be an object lesson for neatness of children and their rooms, cleanliness of houses and grounds.

Affection of the little ones for the Superintendent, Miss Elizabeth J. Fuller, as evidenced by their unaffected demonstrations, the food served and the table manners, all make an atmosphere so nearly like the ideal happy home, the regret is voiced on every hand that the living accommodations contemplated by the donors, the Monroe Harding estate, does not admit of greatly enlarging the scope of the Home.

No more promising field for the investment of philanthropy exists than this worthy cause.

The management could be enlarged by addition of units so that another hundred of God's little ones could be supplied with the benefits and privileges of home training if only housing facilities could be enlarged and funds provided for feeding and clothing.

Why not devote your thank offerings of the coming season of Good Cheer to Monroe Harding Children's Home where boys and girls of various denominations are being reared in homelike surroundings by true blue Presbyterians whose chief aim is to do as Christ would have done for "these little ones?"

Palmer Orphanage,
Columbus, Miss.
Jno. F. Frierson, Supt.

Palmer Orphanage, at Columbus, Mississippi, is supported by the Synods of Louisiana and Mississippi. On the first day of September, 1923, we had 71 children. Since that time five of our children have gone out from the home. We have received three others in their places and have applications that will more than fill up our ranks. We appreciate the opportunity of telling of the work of the institution through the church papers. We believe that the funds invested in our orphanages and in their support should not be regarded as donations, but should be regarded as investments.

We are making strenuous effort to turn out the finished product, that is, young women and young men who are fitted to go out into the world and take their stand as substantial Christian characters, to be producers and not consumers.

Our children at Palmer Orphanage attend grammar school at the orphanage school. They go then to the city high school. Last year we had three boys to graduate, who are now in college. Next year we will have about six girls and three boys in the High School graduating class. The Mississippi State College for Women is located in Columbus. We had one girl to graduate there last June, who is teaching now, and we have one girl attending the college this session.

By diligent effort and application the children are able to carry on the work about the orphanage and to go to school also. This keeps all hands busy.

We have a splendid herd of Jersey cattle and a good dairy barn. We also have good garden. Milk, butter and vegetables furnish the basis for our diet. Last year, through the help of friends, we were able to put steam heat into the girls' dormitory and the superintendent's home. We also added an annex of four rooms to the boys' building. We have a good deal of repairing and improving that needs to be done.

Contributions of money, clothing, food, furniture, books and, in fact, anything that can be used are acceptable. We will hope for substantial contributions from Thanksgiving offerings.

Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Lynchburg, Va.,
Rev. Wm. Megginson, Superintendent.

The Presbyterian Orphans' Home of the Synod of Virginia is owned, controlled and supported by the Synod. The plant at present consists of a farm of 180 acres, upon which the Home is built. It is located five miles northwest of Lynchburg. The "cottage" plan is followed, with a central dining room and heating plant. The main buildings, eight in number, are built of brick with slate roofs, and are two stories in height. At present the physical plant is estimated to be worth $250,000. The institution is upon the benevolent budget of the Synod for 5 per cent of the total benevolences, which furnishes adequate support.

The capacity is 144 children, equally divided between boys and girls. The institution is always crowded. Applications for the admission of children are denied almost every day, for lack of room. The children now in the Home range in ages from five to eighteen years. Children are admitted upon application furnished by the institution, and which is made in conformity to our charter. We do not admit crippled children nor those who are mentally deficient.

Our greatest need is an adequate building for our High School and an endowment of at least $50,000 for school purposes. This would enable us to conduct a standard school from Kindergarten through the High School grades. We also need one additional cottage for boys, as two-thirds of the applicants we receive are for the admission of boys.

The institution does not owe anything upon its plant nor is it in debt for current expenses.

TO THE YOUNG PREACHER

Yes, called of God you were, when you were born,
 And all your life His armor you have worn.
 Always we see, deep in your eager eyes,
 Mysterious quest, for glory of the prize.
 Pure heart, good conscience, faith and love unfeigned,—
 These gifts the Father gave you, when He deigned
 To set His mark upon you, drew you near,
 To speak His tender message in your ear.
 Oh! weary flocks we are, by hirelings led,
 Our drink is streams polluted, stones our bread.
 Help us to cleansing—that we, too, may be Caught in the glory and the mystery.
 Refresh us with the Spirit-breathed Word,
 And we will follow you, as you your Lord.

for the accomplishment of greater things. The Institution is distinctly alone in the nature of its support and work in West Virginia, and is just beginning to serve the great need as a home and school for the many children otherwise drifting into manhood and womanhood. For these we need larger and better equipment,—a school building, more homes for children, more liberal contributions for maintaining them, and for home training and character building. Again we need not only sympathy for, but an obligation performed in the cause of children the Home may serve, and a realization by the Church of its opportunity to be obedient unto the call of the Saviour when he said: "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not." The Orphanage has exceedingly bright prospects for the future, and an opportunity for Christian service unexcelled.

Presbyterian Orphanage of Missouri, Farmington, Missouri,
W. S. Stinson, Supt.

We have 115 children located in the heart of Farmington, Presbyterian Church across the street, Public Schools are open to our children. We have a system of home Study that helps our children stand well in School. We clothe them so they are in no way conspicuous. We regularly attend the church services. During the summer vacation we conduct a six weeks Bible School. This year 26 memorized Young Children's Catechism, four the Shorter and one boy recited both. 65 are members of the church, two boys are outstanding in their declaration of the Gospel ministry.

Our Finances

No vacations for Superintendent and wife during the summer. Our appeals must be constantly sent out to individuals. Every person in our own adjoining counties that will help us must be seen. Our summer improvement and upkeep plan must be pushed. Our income from churches is very light during that season.

Our Appeal

Ten years as a Sunday School Missionary in the Ozark Mountains convinced me of two facts. First, we must be equipped to train the bright young people to be found in the Hills in the Word of God. This, the School of the Ozarks is doing in a wonderful way. Second, that Missouri has a vast number of neglected children that must be cared for in an Orphan Home, where they will gladly respond to an intensive religious program.

Will You Come to Our Rescue?

Build us another building, equip and furnish it, that we may answer the Call of God to "Move forward," and not find it necessary to turn so many deserving appeals away from our doors.

The Attitude of Our Board and Synod

Both say in loudest tones enlarge your capacity. To the churches we say, come with your fall and winter contributions that we may be able to begin next summer.

Southwestern Presbyterian Home and School for Orphans, Itasca, Texas,
J. E. Watts, Supt.

The past year has been one of progress in nearly every way at the Southwestern Presbyterian Home and School for the Orphans. The most notable events of the year are the completion of two splendid new buildings. One of these—the Hooks Memorial Building is the gift of Pat E. and Will I. Hooks of Itasca, Texas. This is a memorial to their mother, and will be primarily, a vocational school building in which sewing, agriculture, and commercial courses will be taught the boys and girls.

Because of the shortness of funds, only the commercial course, including shorthand and typewriting has been put in this fall.

The other building is the gift of S. W. Demaree of Indiana, and will take care of twenty boys. It is one of the best buildings in any Orphans' Home in the South. These new buildings have given us room for more children and we now have 116 children against 102 this time last year.

The school now has six teachers and eleven grades and four fine girls in the graduating class. In addition the regular subjects, the stenography, typewriting, and music are taught.

Special attention has been paid, as usual, to the religious development of the children. The results of this are shown in the fact that of the 116 children, all that are twelve years of age, and that have been in the home for any length of time have confessed Christ and joined the Presbyterian Church.

The material equipment of the "Home" has been improved, but is still inadequate. The outstanding needs are an infirmary, sewerage disposal plant, and an improved lighting system. However, the need that presses the heaviest on the management, is for more money for the "Support Fund" in order that our vacant rooms may be filled by children who are begging for admittance.

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. J. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

Bible Lectures at Second Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, N. C.—Under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Second Presbyterian Church, of Charlotte, N. C., of which Mrs. R. S. Query is Secretary for Spiritual Life, a special Bible class was held during the Week of Self-Denial and Prayer for Home Missions, November 11-18, 1923, Monday through Friday, at 3:30 p. m.

Mrs. Stokes Lott, of Winston-Salem, was the teacher, and her subject for the week was, "Life in Christ Jesus, as pictured in the Gospel of John." Mrs. Lott showed herself to be well suited to the task which she set for herself—to present the highlights in John's book, and to apply the life and teachings of Christ to the daily lives of His disciples today. "Salvation is the gift of God, and must be appropriated."

In each lecture, Mrs. Lott devoted her talk to some special episode in the experience of Jesus on earth, or to some definite teaching. As examples, we may cite the interview of Jesus with Nicodemus and His teaching about the necessity for the spiritual rebirth; the incident of the precious box of ointment; Jesus' lessons drawn from the vine and branches; the washing of the disciples' feet; and the teachings and examples concerning prayer.

Mrs. Lott said that the keynote of John's Gospel is Jesus' statement, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." This book is the central pearl in the necklace of the New Testament. In it the beloved disciple with matchless beauty and loving simplicity, reveals Jesus as the Messiah, the Divine Son of God, the Saviour of the world; thus the guide, leader, and the motive for allegiance and service. In this Gospel-drama, characters appear, bear witness to the Christ, and give place to others, who, in turn, are witnesses to Jesus, as the Way, the Truth, and the Life.

The deep spiritual insight exhibited by John in his recital of the life of our Lord was stressed by Mrs. Lott in all that she said, and her lectures were a source of spiritual refreshment to her hearers as well as of instruction and inspiration for living the Christ-life.

Woman's Auxiliary of Sugar Creek Presbyterian Church.—At the annual Home Mission Study Class, the book "The Child and America's Future," was presented by the Woman's Auxiliary of the Sugar Creek Church, Wednesday, October 4, in an all day meeting at the church.

The regular Auxiliary meeting was held during the morning session, presided over by our most able president, Mrs. Martin C. Davis. Beginning at 11 A. M., a full program, consisting of devotionals, reports and discussions occupied the hours until adjournment for lunch, a most sumptuous repast that the ladies of Sugar Creek know how to prepare.

The afternoon session was devoted to the study of "The Child and America's Future," and the way in which the book was taught added to the inspiration and profit of the meeting as never before.

Different parts of the book were assigned to the respective circles, each circle selecting its teacher to present the part assigned.

The hearty co-operation of those present made this an occasion long to be remembered with pleasure.

Group Conference at "Old Bethesda" Church.

Since the present structure is the fourth, and as early as 1790, Bethesda was "the place of worship," "Old Bethesda" is an appropriate, and to many a precious name. From 1790 to 1830, no minister could serve this church who could not speak both Gaelic and English. On Saturday, before communion, the members came before the session and "after a satisfactory examination of their faith and practices," were given "tokens," made of metal, with K. S. (Kirk of Scotland) on them, which entitled them to take Communion on the Sabbath. At this, our first county conference, a large delegation was present, and the opening devotional exercises were led by Mrs. Muse. Mrs. Monzon extended hearty greetings: "Welcome Home," responded to by Mrs. Jewel Hemphill. Our new Presbyterian president, Mrs. J. R. Page, gave us an inspiring, helpful message. Mrs. Matheson told us how she would teach our Home Mission book, "The Child and America's Future," in such an understanding and attractive way that this week, I am sure Moore County Auxiliaries are the gainers, because their leaders heard her. Mrs. Fairly, secretary of Elise, made a strong plea for our own Home Mission School, asking that, at once, the Auxiliaries furnish the new dormitory—it will cost fifty dollars to furnish a room, the Bethesda Auxiliary has raised this amount for a room. Mrs. McClelland, secretary of Literature, had attractive displays, and emphasized, in a telling way—her "wares." We recessed, and out under the old oaks enjoyed a delicious dinner served by the Bethesda Auxiliary, our hostess. The second session was opened by singing and Bible study, led by Mrs. Robert M. Page. Mrs. Wilson, Synodical secretary of Foreign Missions, made a fine address, called attention to our decrease as a state, in giving to Foreign Missions. Mrs. Cromartie, S. P. & C. secretary, told us about Montreat and the "School of Missions." Mrs. Knox, secretary of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, gave us burning facts that will, I believe bring results. Mrs. Suttentfield, secretary of Y. P. Work, told of the Young People's conferences, because her heart is in this work, how she touches your heart! Herbert Hoover says: "The race moves forward on the feet of little children."

We are especially glad to have this account of the Group Conference at "Old Bethesda" Church. Fayetteville Presbytery is proud on the record of this old church.—Ed.

The Womans' Auxiliary of the Kings Mt. Presbyterian Church held a most delightful meeting at the residence of Mrs. C. E. Neisler, October 29th. Mrs. J. C. Mason, the president, conducted the devotional exercises followed by special music. The reports of the circles indicated a growing interest on the part of the members in the various branches of church work. The outstanding feature of the occasion was the interesting and instructive address of Mrs. J. W. Allen of Spartanburg. Mrs. Allen had the privilege not long since of visiting the mission stations of the Presbyterian Church in Japan, China, and Korea. She was introduced by Mrs. I. S. McElroy in a few well chosen words. For forty minutes she held the interested attention of every woman in the room while she told what she saw and the impressions she received in those far-away countries. After the questions which she answered so cheerfully came the curios, illustrating the costumes, customs, and peculiarities of the people. Especially interesting was her account of her visit in the home of Rev. I. S. McElroy, Jr., a missionary to Japan and the son of our pastor, Rev. I. S. McElroy, D.D. The meeting closed with a social hour at which a delicious salad course was served.

Corresponding Secretary.

"Secretaries of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief"—There are two loan funds connected with our church. One is the Fund of Education for the Ministry and Mission Service. From this are made ing amount to $23,000 a year, more than the amount paid by any other building in the entire state of Florida. The managing committee, consisting of Charles T. Paxon, Frank C. Groover and J. H. McLaurin, are giving constant and efficient oversight to the building. Mr. A. W. Cockrell, Jr., attends to all the legal phases of the work. Mr. John A. Hall, a certified public accountant, audits the accounts every month. Mr. E. C. Desch is the faithful manager of the building. All the business is being conducted by these men on plain Christian principles and most efficient service is being given all the tenants who occupy the 350 rooms of the building.

How Is Your Literature Table?—Is it well stocked with supplies for all the wants of all the officers cause secretaries and members of the Auxiliary?

For those wanting the newest literature, two attractive leaflets are just off the press: one—"The Budget"—is invaluable to treasurers; the other—"A Bright Idea"—suggests to Bible leaders a clever way to use the Grace Saxe question slips. Price 2 cents each.

For circle officers there are Circle Record books with space provided for the record of each members attendance at Circle and Auxiliary meetings, and of her yearly pledge and monthly payments. Price 5 cents each.

For leaders of Bible classes and devotionals there are Mrs. Russell's studies of Bible women in twelve chapters, and that beautiful little book of the Rev. Tucker Graham's—"The Praying Christ," devotional studies of the Christ at prayer. Price 25 cents and 10 cents respectively.

For program committees who found the supply of Year Books exhausted, a reprint of each program has been made in separate leaflet form, from October to April. Price five cents a set. The literature for carrying out these programs for the remainder of the Church year may be had for 40 cents; the literature for free distribution at monthly meetings, for 25 cents.

For those with memories of Montreat, there are lovely colored post cards with an excellent reproloans to students, both boys and girls, who have decided to enter the ministry or some form of Christian service. The amount borrowed may be repaid either in money or in service to the church. The amount of credit given each year after graduation in the service of the church is the difference between the salary received and $1600 and a home, or $1800 without a home.

Loans from the Student Loan Fund are made to boys and girls of approved character and ability, who have not determined to give full time service to the church, but who want to attend one of our own Presbyterian colleges. The amounts borrowed must be repaid in cash. If payment in full is made within two years after graduation, no interest is charged. On all amounts not paid by this time, interest is charged at the rate of 4 per cent from the date of graduation.

No pen could tell the joy and relief that is being brought to the homes of our aged and infirm ministers and needy widows and orphans of our deceased ministers through the funds of Ministerial Relief. On account of the large increase of the endowment fund wonderful advances have been made to the amounts sent to these homes. The Endowment Fund is now almost $1,500,000. The General Assembly for several years has urged that it be made $2,500,000 at the earliest possible moment.

The Graham Building which was secured by the large gift of $200,000 from Mr. C. E. Graham and the unexcelled offering from the Southern Presbyterian Family in response to his offer, is now netting the church about $80,000 a year. Of this amount $60,000 goes at once to the care of those of our needy ministers' homes. $20,000 is set aside to cover depreciation and investment. The taxes on the build-duction of the Gateway and Lodge presented to the Assembly grounds by the Woman's Auxiliary in 1922. Price two for five cents.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT

W. ARNETT GAMBLE, JR., Editor

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO THE DEPARTMENT EDITOR, COLUMBIA SEMINARY, COLUMBIA, S. C.

EDITOR'S LOOKOUT

In another part of our Young People's Department we give an account of the convention of the Spartanburg District C. E. Convention. We were very much impressed by the spirit of service that was stressed in the talks made. The address on "Others," by Rev. J. F. Matheson, of Union, was particularly good. He gave brief sketches of persons who had been guided by a spirit of unselfishness, some of these well-known Presbyterian ministers.

The thought of happiness through doing for others was brought home to the delegates in a short, crisp address. The characters sketched were of those who had served.

The One who has done most for us was held up for our admiration and as a challenge to serve others, as He did. The Christ who was nailed to the cross, and then that cross dropped into a hole with a dull thud, was given as the noblest example of one who served others to the greatest extent, the giving of life to save the lives of others.

Think, young people, of those whom you honor most. Are they not those who serve? Let us pray constantly that we may crucify self and think of Christ and our fellows. Such is our duty, and such will bring us the greatest happiness.

We would emphasize editorially in this issue what Mr. Ernest Milton, assistant editor of our department, told us in last issue concerning the recent activities of the Christian Endeavor Training Class of Davidson College. Mr. Milton is having a large part in the work of that group of students interested in young people's work. We repeat our recent statement that these college men are anxious to be given an opportunity to help our churches in working with the young people. A card to Mr. Milton or to the class will be given prompt attention. We hope that use will be made of these men.

CHRISTIANS CALLED TO BE MISSIONARIES

John 17:18; Matthew 28:16-20; Acts 1:6-8.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Go ye therefore and teach all nations."—Matthew 28:19.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

John 17:18 As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world.

Matthew 28:16 Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them.

17 And when they saw him, they worshiped him; but some doubted.

18 And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in Heaven and in earth.

19 Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;

20 Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

Acts 1:6 When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?

7 And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power.

8 But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 64. What is required in the fifth commandment?
A. The fifth commandment requireth the preserving the honor and performing the duties belonging to every one in their several places and relations, as superiors, inferiors or equals.

Jesus is the model for His disciples in many respects. He is their model of character, for "They are to bear His image ultimately. They are to resemble Him in graces and in deeds. They are to imitate His example in duty to God and man. As He is our pattern in other things so He is our model, as missionaries, trying to make men His disciples. We are to use the same means that He employed. We are to heal, to teach and to preach the word of God. In expounding the scriptures selected we will consider: Christians Sent Into the World Like Christ; The Work Assigned Them; The Power Promised; The Power Given Assuring Success.

I. Christians Sent Into the World Like Christ

He says of the Father, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I sent them into the world." Christ was sent into the world to save sinners, He affirms "I came to call not the righteous but sinners to repentance." Jesus was sent to a lost rebellious ruined and hostile world. He was invested with all the power, human and Divine, needful for accomplishing His missions, so believers are sent to save sinners, and if they are not trying to do it they are neglecting one of the great ends of their existence on the earth. They are sent into an ungodly world opposed to God, and every thing fostering godliness and they are assured of all needed divine power for winning souls.

II. The Work Assigned Christians

They are to "make disciples in all nations." They are to bring their fellow men to know, to love, to trust, to confess and serve Jesus Christ. "The field is the world," and every Christian to go or to send and sustain representatives into all parts of the world. They have no right to make exceptions or to leave any part of the world unreached. They are sent to an ungodly world given to idolatry, and obviously unfriendly and hostile to Jehovah and His worship and service. They are to use in their efforts only the moral means, sanctioned by Jesus Christ. They are offered all the Divine co-operation and power essential to their task.

III. The Power Promised

Jesus says, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." He bases their commission upon his having this power. He declares that this Divine power shall be imparted unto them. He says, "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you and ye shall be witnesses unto me in Jerusalem, and in Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." He promises that the Holy Ghost shall give them understanding, strength, courage, utterance and co-working, that will crown their work with success. They are taught that the Holy Ghost will give them power not only in the souls of men, but over the forces of nature, and miraculous power to attest that their message was Divine.

IV. The Divine Power Given Assuring Success

The promise was verified. After the apostles and church at Jerusalem had prayed ten days the Holy Ghost came upon them, a "rushing mighty wind gave notice of His approach, and cloven tongues of flame, a sign of His presence, sat upon the brow of each of them." The apostles were transformed and did wonderful things. They were no longer timid men hiding from Jewish rulers, but bold heralds of the cross proclaiming their master as Messiah and the only Saviour of sinners. They spoke in many tongues, that they had never learned the wonderful work of God. Miraculous deeds of healing were wrought by them, showing that God was with them and endorsing their messages.

Sunday, Dec. 2—Topic: Lessons from the Psalms.
12. The Life-Obedience Psalm. Ps. 40:1-10.
(Consecration Meeting).

All young people are concerned about what they are going to be and do when they are grown. It is a very important question. Many people seem to be failures, because they have no purpose in life. It is a great advantage to come early to a conclusion as to our aim and work. As Christians, we have the assurance that God has chosen a plan for each life, and that He will lead us into that plan if we will but ask His guidance.

This Psalm is a Psalm written by David, and in Heb. 10:5; 10, we are told that this Psalm refers to Jesus Christ and His great purpose of redeeming men from sin by His death on the cross. Christ took on Himself our sins, and entered the terrible task this imposed on Him with great determination to carry the work through to the end, and He did His work completely.

The Perils Christ Risked to Do His Work

Jesus as our Saviour met with great perils as He undertook to do His work of redeeming us from sin. David describes it as a horrible pit and miry clay. Christ's agony in Gethsemane, His arrest and trial, His persecution at the hands of His enemies, His torture and death on the cross, all these were like a horrible pit with a bottom of miry clay into which Jesus sank as he endured His sufferings for us to finish His work. But God saved Him, and lifted Him out of this pit, put His feet on a rock, and established His goings, and put a new song in His mouth of praise unto God; for God raised Him from the dead.

We Face Perils to Do Our Life Work

As we follow Jesus to do our life work in obedience to

His guidance, we shall face perils as He did. No real work is easy. There are temptations to overcome, hard duties to do, disappointments to endure, difficulties to meet and conquer. Just as Jesus went into the horrible pit and got fastened in the miry clay, so we shall cope with perils that will threaten us. Shall we conquer as He did? We may, if we follow Christ's way of meeting the perils.

Christ a Voluntary Slave to His Father

As we study 40th Psalm, we should also read Ex. 21:1-6, which tells of the quaint old custom of the Hebrew voluntary slave, who did not wish his freedom, but desired to be a slave forever to his master. Heb. 10 says Jesus was a voluntary slave to God. He says that He was unwilling to give God mere burnt offerings and sacrifices. He gave Himself. We read, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O my God." And God's will was that Jesus should die on the cross to save the world from sin. Jesus did die, and by his death He saved the believing sinner.

God Commands Us to Become Voluntary Slaves

Christ says the servant should be as his lord. Jesus saved us and became our Master, and He calls on us to surrender our lives to Him. Paul says, in Rom. 12:1, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." In coming to a decision for our life work, this is the first and foremost thing to do, to tell God, I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord. As the voluntary slave was ready to hear the slightest wish of his master, so we must surrender our wills to Christ. As Jesus said, I delight to do Thy will, O my God; yea, Thy law is within my heart, so we must say to Jesus as our Lord, I am ready to do Thy will, O Christ.

What Form Shall Our Life-Service Take?

Having decided to give our lives in service to Christ, what form shall our life-service take? Christ declares His service was that of a preacher. In verse 9, He says, I have preached righteousness in the great congregation. Christ needs many preachers today to tell His Gospel to men in home and foreign lands. We should consider whether He needs us to preach for Him, and if He calls us, we must go. But He needs teachers, doctors, nurses, and workers of all kinds in His great program. He will direct our lives into the channel where they can be of most use. Our gifts are from Him, and will guide us into the most needed fields of work. Only let us be obedient, faithful and true to our task, and as Jesus was blest of his Father, so we shall receive God's favor and reward.

SPARTANBURG DISTRICT ENDEAVORERS HOLD MEETING AT JONESVILLE

The annual convention of the Spartanburg District of the South Carolina Christian Endeavor Union was held in the Presbyterian church, of Jonesville, on Saturday and Sunday, November 10th and 11th. The theme of the convention program was "Others," and the convention song was the one bearing the same name. The call to the giving of life was strongly presented, under several heads, the speakers having happily fitted their addresses to the general thought selected for the convention's consideration.

The leaders and speakers came from Spartanburg, Union, Gaffney, Lockhart, and Columbia. Mr. Joe Webster, of Spartanburg, the district president, and Miss Evelyn Boozer, district secretary, of Gaffney, presided over the meetings, and Miss Boozer helped with the music and some of the talks. Mr. John Boozer, of Gaffney, was song leader.

Rev. J. F. Matheson, of the Presbyterian Church at Union, gave a simple and yet gripping address on the convention theme. Miss Irene Hudson, religious work director of the First Presbyterian Church, of Spartanburg, took the delegates on an "aeroplane trip" that gave

Church News

ACTION OF THE DOCTORS

After hearing the needs of our medical work presented, we, the Presbyterian physicians in attendance on the meeting of the Southern Medical Association at Washington, are of the opinion that something should be done to interest every physician in our Church, in a more definite way.

Therefore, be it resolved, (1) that an organization to be known as the Presbyterian Physicians' Missionary Movement be hereby effected; (2) that the following officers be elected:

M. McH. Hull, Georgia, chairman; O. L. Miller, North Carolina, vice-chairman; R. S. Leadingham, Louisiana, secretary-treasurer;

(3) That these officers be authorized to add one additional member from each of the other Synods and one from the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions at Nashville, and that these with the officers named shall constitute the Executive Committee of the Movement; (4) that a membership fee of $2.00 per annum shall be collected by the secretary-treasurer, and that this fund shall be used to keep the members in closer touch with the splendid and self-them a view of the needs of the twenty-one million unchurched in the South. Mr. T. C. Bryan, of Columbia Seminary, conducted the early morning prayer service on Sunday, preached at the morning hour of worship, and led the closing consecration service. Rev. Frank Estes, of Lockhart, and Rev. W. R. Goebel, of the convention church, conducted the devotional periods. Mrs. Frank Peake, of Union, conducted a Junior program Sunday afternoon, and Mrs. J. B. Kilgore, of Woodruff, an Intermediate program. Mr. Arnett Gamble, of Columbia Seminary, supplied for Mr. Bert Jones, as field secretary, and led the conference hour and delivered an address Saturday evening on "What Christian Endeavor Means to Me."

The social features of the convention included a luncheon served at noon Saturday by the ladies of the church, a banquet at the hotel, and a get-acquainted meeting after the evening address. Nor should mention be omitted of the hospitality of the Jonesville people.

The officers elected for the coming year were:

President, Mr. John Boozer, Gaffney.

Vice-president, Mr. Joe Webster, Spartanburg.

Recording secretary, Miss Annie Lou Murrah, Union.

Corresponding secretary, Miss Evelyn Boozer, Gaffney.

Treasurer, Mr. Gordon Gaston, Woodruff.

TENNESSEE'S "CONVENTION SUPREME"

Charles Evans, Southern Secretary United Society of Christian Endeavor

"Distance lends enchantment," we have been told, and this was the truth in connection with the Tennessee State Convention, as in spite of fact that her convention city, Dyersburg, was located on the extreme western end of her great state, making it necessary for three delegates from Bristol to travel 3,330 miles to attend, the Endeavorers came in great hordes and made the convention a high-water mark in the record of the state, with 923 registered delegates.

The convention was served by Dr. H. H. Sweets, Rev. H. L. Pickerill, Clarence Hamilton, Gerald Harris, Miss Mammie Gene Cole, state and district officers and leaders, and Southern Secretary Evans.

Tennessee's new field secretary, Mr. Gerald Harris, firmly entrenched himself in the affections of the Endeavorers by his genial good humor, pleasing personality and ability to do real things, and was nick-named by the convention as "Report" Harris, because of his insistence upon the necessity of reporting on the monthly service program and other features of the state work.

Miss Iva Dunn, state secretary, announced the organization of 84 new societies, of which 39 are Seniors, 20 Intermediates, and 25 Juniors. Reports show the Juniors averaged more than 50 cents each for denominational missions, and Intermediates more than 85 cents each. During the year 471 Quiet Hour Comrades, 196 Legionnaires, 55 Life Work Recruits, 944 subscriptions to The Dixie Endeavor, and 287 to the Christian Endeavor World were reported. One district shows 82 per cent and another 68 per cent of the societies reporting regularly on the M. S. P.

The eagerness with which the delegates responded to all challenges delighted the hearts of the leaders, as it firmly showed how anxious all were for a great advance for the coming year.

The Junior Convention, under the direction of Miss Cole, and the Intermediate session, were of splendid interest and value.

The officers elected are as follows:

President, Mr. I. A. Martin, Knoxville.

Vice-president, Mr. Ether Seagle, Chattanooga.

Secretary, Miss Iva Dunn, Greenville.

Treasurer, M. F. A. Leake, Knoxville.

sacrificing work now being done by our medical representatives abroad; (5) that the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions at Nashville be requested to render every assistance possible to this movement, and to assume the active responsibility for bringing about closer relations between our medical men at home and abroad; (6) that annual meetings be held in conjunction with the Southern Medical Association meeting; (7) that reports of this organization be furnished to the secretary of the Southern Medical Association and the church papers.

"TELL IT NOT IN GATH—PUBLISH IT NOT IN THE STREETS OF ASKELON"

As president of the Board of Regents I want to lay the matter of our orphan children at Barium Springs on your heart and conscience. We had a deficit of $32,000 on October 1st, at which time we had to make our report to Synod. I have no doubt you will ask "Why?" This question is easily answered. Because the Presbyterians in North Carolina did not give us the wherewithal to care for the greatly increased number of children they sent to the home. We made some necessary improvements on the old dilapidated buildings which the Synod ordered repaired, and we are not quite through. This of course cost some money, but you failed to give us as much money as you did the year before, and at the same time we were given nearly one-third more children to care for.

The children have not suffered at the home for any of the necessities, because we borrowed money, on faith in our people, to support the institution.

The reason I am writing this letter is to arouse you to the emergency which faces us. We must have $100,000 as a Thanksgiving offering if the institution is to be supported as it should be and the banks paid the money which was borrowed. If the Presbyterians in our Synod will half-way do their duty and give to THEIR OWN ("He that provideth ministers and duly elected elders of all the churches within the bounds of these counties are called to meet in the First Presbyterian Church of Winston-Salem, Tuesday, December 4th at 7:30 p. m., for organization.

The First Presbyterian Church cordially invites the members of the new Presbytery to be its guests on this occasion.
J. S. Foster.

Shelby—Rev. W. A. Murray, who on Sunday finished his 5th year as pastor of the Presbyterian Churches in Shelby and Grover, preached a beautiful and heart-touching sermon on "Soul Rest." Mr. Murray is popular with all denominations, being a man of striking sincerity and a strong personality. During his five years as pastor of the Shelby Church, it has made wonderful growth. Five years ago the church had a membership of 133. Since his pastorate 121 have been added to the church roll, most of them on profession of faith.

Bluff-Godwin Group—We have just closed a hustling campaign in this group for new subscribers to the Standard. We have gotten 36 new ones and find several more who ought to take the paper but are undecided at present.

We are arranging for a union Thanksgiving service at the old Bluff Church, which is the mother of all the other churches in the group. A few weeks ago a meeting was held at Godwin by the evangelistic federation of Fayetteville; ten members were received into the Godwin Presbyterian Church as one of the results of the meeting—all on profession of faith.

We are anticipating another meeting to begin at Wade on the 18th of this month to be held by the same federation of laymen who are doing such fine work in the churches of the county.

The churches of this group are getting in fine shape for work. A Christian Endeavor Society was organized in Godwin Church about three months ago not for his own, is worse than an unbeliever") the children will be amply cared for and there will be no cry of a deficit a year hence.

These are the facts in the case. The Board of Regents are counting on you. What will your answer be?

R. Murphy Williams,
President Board of Regents.

NORTH CAROLINA

Raeford—The new church at Raeford will be dedicated December 2, 1923. Dr. H. G. Hill will preach the dedication sermon.

Charlotte, Tenth Avenue—The calendar of November 17th carries the following announcement:

"Cornerstone Laying. The Building Committee takes this opportunity of inviting all the members and friends of this church to attend a service appropriate to the laying of the cornerstone of our new Sunday School building. This service will be held Thursday, November 22d, at 4:00 p. m., and will consist of songs, scripture reading, prayer, and one or more brief addresses."

Concord, McKinnon Church—Nineteen of the largest and most aristocratic 'possums fell victims to the annual possum and tater spread of the McKinnon Presbyterian Church, Thursday night. One of the largest crowds in the history of this institution was in attendance. The toastmaster of the occasion, Rev. C. C. Myers, caused much merriment when he announced that there was evidently some one present who had not been invited and that a cat had been prepared for this party.

Attention—The Synod of North Carolina having ordered erection of a new Presbytery to be composed of the counties of Ashe, Alleghany, Wilkes, Surry, Yadkin, Davie, Stokes, Forsythe and Davidson, and having been appointed the convenor of the same, the which is very helpful to the young people—its report, from the efficient leaders, is quite encouraging. The interior of this church has recently been improved in appearance and a new piano has also been installed.

The men's Bible classes in the three churches are doing fine work—the average attendance of these classes is about 15 men, whose ages range from 18 to 60.

Wade Church also has a live Christian Endeavor Society and a good live and active Ladies' Auxiliary. This church has preaching services every Sunday, either morning, afternoon or night, and prayer meeting Wednesday. It has a Sunday School, the attendance of which ranges from 95 to 125. But the newest thing in this church is a Sunrise Prayer Meeting by the Camp Fire Girls. They meet in the church at sunrise each Sunday morning and engage in prayer and song service. The leader of the Camp Fire Girls is Mrs. J. L. Olive, who is a fine worker among young people.

With all this machinery at work and working harmoniously, as it is at present, we hope for things to be brought to pass for the glory of our Lord and Master. For the people have a mind to work.
T. C. Croker.

Raleigh, First Church—Sunday, November 11th, was an eventful day in the history of the First Presbyterian Church in Raleigh. On that one day, three new churches were colonized out of the mother church, the membership organized, officers chosen, pastors called and installed. This is an unusual bit of church history, and perhaps without a parallel in the annals of our Synod.

The commission from the Granville Presbytery consisted of Revs. McC. Cooper, Comerford, Hunter, Taffe and White, with Elder E. B. Crow.

The North Vanguard church is a handsome structure, costing about $150,000, located in a rapidly growing suburb, the best residential section of the city. It begins with a membership of 52. Messrs.

A. C. Grant and C. C. Mangum were elected elders, and C. T. Smith and G. W. Anderson, deacons. Rev. V. B. Sullivan, who has been preaching at this point, was called as pastor for half his time, accepted the call, and was duly installed.

The East Vanguard Church is located in a densely settled part of the city, about a half-mile from the First Church. Forty-five members were dismissed from the First Church to unite with it, and three more were received, making its membership 48. Messrs. P. B. Griffin and E. W. Thomas were elected elders, and W. G. Mitchell and W. E. Mitchell deacons. Rev. W. B. Sullivan was made pastor, receiving a hearty and unanimous call from this people, to whom he has greatly endeared himself.

These two churches were initiated, built and paid for by the Vanguard Class of the First Church, Elder E. B. Crow being the teacher of the class.

The Ernest Myatt Church is a brick church, perhaps the most beautiful country church in Wake County, located five miles south of the city in a section where the Presbyterian Church was formerly altogether unknown. Its membership is 78, all dismissed from the First Church. Quite a number from this neighborhood, who moved into the city and live there retain membership there. Messrs. A. A. Buffalo and B. B. Buffalo were elected elders, and the election of deacons was postponed. Rev. W. McC. White, who has preached here for a number of years, was called as pastor, and formally installed.

This marks the greatest forward step, no doubt, in this history of the church in Raleigh in its history.

Marion—The fourth Sunday in October was perhaps the greatest day that Presbyterianism ever experienced in McDowell County. This event marked the realization of a plan which had been in the mind of this congregation for many years past. It was on this day we worshipped in our beautiful new church for the first time.

It was an ideal autumn day. All the congregations of the town joined with us. It was said to have been the largest congregation that had ever met in any church in Marion. For the first time the new 12-stop, two-manual Austin pipe organ was used. A splendid musical program was rendered by a large choir. Our organist, Miss Julia Burton, handled the new instrument with the skill of a master. The opening sermon was delivered by the pastor from Isaiah 54:2, 3. The visiting pastors and several prominent laymen made short congratulatory addresses. It was an occasion for great rejoicing on the part of our people who through faith in God and self-denial have built this magnificent church for the glory of Jesus Christ.

A greater opportunity for doing a much larger service is now offered, and our people have evidenced their determination to lengthen their cords and strengthen their stakes in the work of the kingdom.

The church has been 16 months in building. It is furnished throughout with pews and opera chairs made by the American Seating Company. The pews, pulpit furniture and pipe organ case are finished in brown mahogany to harmonize with the interior woodwork. The new building occupies the same spot on which the old church was built 76 years ago. It is classic in design throughout, built of grey pressed brick, trimmed in Bedford stone and covered with red imperial Spanish tile. It contains all the modern equipment for Sunday School and young people's work and Bible classes. The main auditorium seats about 600 people. The entire cost of the building including pipe organ and church furnishings is over $60,000.

With God's blessings resting upon us we feel that our church can now go forward in extending the Gospel of Jesus Christ. At the evening service 17 new members were received into our membership on confession of faith and two infants were baptized.

The Synod of North Carolina—A unique feature of the 110th annual meeting of the Synod of North Carolina was that it was the guest of the two neighboring towns of Graham and Burlington, and held sessions in both churches. It convened in Burlington, October 9th, at 8 p. m., after a sumptuous supper served in the beautiful new church hut. The retiring moderator, Dr. E. D. Brown, delivered a soul-moving and timely message from the text: "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do? The Lord is in his holy temple, the Lord's throne is in heaven"—Psalm 11:3-4.

Rev. J. H. Henderlite, D.D., was elected moderator, and Rev. A. J. Crane reading clerk. The enrollment for the whole session was 235.

The morning sessions were held in the Graham Church, Bountiful luncheons were served by the ladies of both churches in the Sunday School rooms. This school plant and equipment, recently much enlarged, was a marvel to the visitors, being one of the most complete in the Synod.

The reports on schools and colleges evoked much interest and discussion. Rev. W. M. Hunter, chairman, deplored the fact that there is not one "A" grade college for women in the Synod. Dr. J. R. McCain, president of Agnes Scott, in his fine address made a clear statement of the origin and history of the present standardization of colleges by the educational association.

The representatives of the four colleges for women made strong appeals to Synod to rally to their help. This recommendation was then adopted: "That representatives from all the colleges for women be asked to meet with the Committee on Schools and Colleges to devise plans for meeting the standard requirements until adequate permanent endowment can be raised."

Rev. J. J. Murray, chairman of the Committee on religious work in state institutions, made an urgent appeal for this work. Of the students in state colleges almost 1,000 are Presbyterians. Dr. W. D. Moss, university pastor, is doing excellent work, but needs an assistant in organizing and training the young men. At the N. C. College for Women the religious work is well organized, but the girls need the close touch of the regular church. The Church of the Covenant supports a woman for all her time for student religious work. We need badly a student pastor at State College at Raleigh.

The Committee on Schools and Colleges was authorized to confer with representatives from all other denominations to devise methods for introducing Bible courses in state institutions; and this Synod will overture the governing bodies of all other churches to unite in requesting the state institutions of higher education to permit the maintenance by the churches of chairs for Bible teaching as a part of the curriculum.

The report of the Committee on Stewardship, Dr. J. H. Henderlite, chairman, was heard with deep interest, as this was the first year that any estimate could be made of the work of our all-time secretary. The results reported by Mr. J. B. Spillman are very encouraging. The contributions for benevolences amounted to over $800,000, and for current expense and pastors' salaries to over $1,000,000, a total in crease over last year of $270,000. The every member canvass this year shows an increase over last year of 4,273 subscribers, $94,062 for benevolences, and $144,303 for current expenses. There has also been a large increase in the number of tithers and family altars, largely through the good work of the flying squadrons. It was decided to continue raising the $12,000 for maintaining the office of Stewardship by a proportionate assessment for the present upon the causes and institutions benefited, but to apportion the amount next year among the churches.

Rev. A. W. Crawford, Superintendent of Synodical Home Missions, presented the best report in the history of this splendid work. Eighty-seven workers, including 10 trained women in mill villages, occupied 300 weak churches and mission points. They report nearly 3,000 conversions and 1,625 added to our church on profession, besides hundreds to other churches. The general evangelists, Dr. William Black and Rev. Leonard Gill, report over 900 added in their meetings. This is Dr. Black's 20th year of service. Synod's committee expended $62,287. Synod approved the raising of $200,000 as a Permanent Church and Manse Erection Fund by its Home Mission Committee, and appointed the third Sunday in January for this purpose. This followed a report by Dr. J. S. Foster.

The great history making action of this Synod was its realignment of Presbyterian boundaries and the erection of two new Presbyteries. Dr. C. M. Richards, chairman, presented with his report a map showing the proposed changes, and the latter were adopted almost unanimously and without protracted debate. A new Presbytery with nine counties is set off in the northwest, with the city of Winston as its stronghold. Another with ten and one-half counties is erected in the northcentral part of the state, with Durham and Raleigh as its main supports. Chatham and Lee counties are transferred from Fayetteville to Orange, part of Sampson from Wilmington to Fayetteville, and Cabarrus from Concord to Mecklenburg.

Synod has adopted a program of expansion for its Orphans' Home, setting for its goal a well-equipped institution with a capacity for 500 children. It now has 300 and will soon add 50 more on the completion of the new boys' dormitory and the baby cottage. The gifts of the churches however have not kept up with this enlargement, and there is a deficit of $32,000. The churches are asked to make a special Thanksgiving offering of $100,000 in addition to the regular budget.

The Woman's Auxiliary reports its best year. There are about 250 mission study and Bible study classes and 332 prayer bands, and they are organizing stewardship study classes. The outstanding work this year was the conference for colored women at Charlotte, attended by 71 delegates from seven denominations—it was a great success.

The Young People's Conference at Davidson enrolled over 400, and conducted a fine program of devotion and study. Mr. Claude T. Carr, superintendent of Sunday School and Young People's Societies, is doing a great work.

Synod heard inspiring addresses by Rev. W. C. McLaughlin, on China; Rev. J. Porter Smith, on Brazil; and Dr. M. E. Melvin, on the Progressive Program.

A hearty vote of thanks expressed Synod's appreciation of the splendid entertainment provided by the Burlington and Graham churches. The invitation of the Washington Church for the next meeting was cordially accepted. E. C. Murray.

ARKANSAS

The Synod of Arkansas met on Tuesday evening, October 9th, as the guests of the First Presbyterian Church at El Dorado.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. W. H. Irvine, D.D., of Helena, the retiring moderator, on the text, I Kings 19:9, What doest thou here, Elijah? After the sermon, Synod was organized, and Rev. J. Walter Cobb, pastor at Blytheville was unanimously elected moderator. Mr. Cobb is the capable leader of a splendid congregation, and, in addition, has been largely instrumental in putting over the Presbyterian Progressive Program in his Presbytery for the last few years. Rev. C. A. Raymond, of Newport was elected reading clerk. Rev. W. F. Rogers, of Warren, stated clerk, and Rev. J. T. Barr, of Womble, temporary clerk, were present at all sessions of the Synod as usual.

Dr. S. L. Morris, of Atlanta, presented the inspirational message on the Presbyterian Progressive Program in an address which profoundly stirred the members of Synod. At luncheon hour on Wednesday, Dr. Morris spoke on the recent Zurich conference, giving in detail the horrible persecution which Protestants in Eastern Europe are suffering today.

The new president of Arkansas College, Prof. E. B. Tucker, addressed the Synod in connection with the work of the college. To many members of the body Mr. Tucker was a stranger when Synod opened, but he won the friendship and high regard of all who heard him speak. The college has a greater enrollment now than ever before, and owing to the success of the Educational Movement for endowment this last year, it is in far better financial condition. Mr. C. T. McCully, of Little Rock addressed the Synod on The Presbyterian Educational Movement. Closing on July 1st, this movement raised $20,000 more than the minimum goal set by Synod last year.

The Stewardship Committee report was presented by Dr. J. W. Lawson, of Little Rock. The term of office of the Synodical Secretary of Stewardship, Dr. C. P. Bridewell, expires on July 14, 1924. Upon motion, he was asked to continue as secretary until the next meeting of Synod.

On Wednesday night a popular meeting in behalf of Home Missions was held with the chairman, Dr. J. C. Williams, of Prescott in the chair. Addresses were made on Evangelism by Rev. M. Mar Yosip, on Church Erection by Dr. W. Moore Scott, on the Mountaincrest Academy by Rev. J. E. Jeter, and on The Caddo Valley Academy by Rev. J. T. Barr.

On Thursday two popular meetings were held. At the one on Sunday School and Young People's Work under the direction of Rev. Charles Haddon Nabers, the report of Mrs. G. W. Sheffer was given to the Synod by Mrs. Sheffer, the state superintendent of this work. An address on Christian Endeavor was given by Rev. J. E. Wallace, and on the Young People's Conference by Dr. R. E. Fry. At the close of this address, the chairman led a round table discussion on the real worth of the summer conference in Arkansas for young people.

At the Foreign Mission popular meeting, Dr. R. L. Jetton presided, and presented two speakers: Dr. E. R. Long, of Arkansas College, who spoke on The Re-Affirmation of our Faith in our Missionary Task, and Rev. M. A. Boggs who spoke on The Challenge of the Present Task.

Orphanage work came up for a prominent part in the work of the Synod. An able address on the Southwestern Home and School at Itasca, Texas, was given by the superintendent, Mr. J. E. Watts. The Pine Bluff Presbytery asked the Synod to take over and adopt an orphanage which the Presbytery had established at Monticello last May. Mrs. J. G. Williamson, of that city, was introduced to the Synod as the saintly woman whose love for neglected children and earnest work for their support had been largely instrumental in making this orphanage possible. After some discussion, the orphanage was taken over by the Synod, and a board of trustees was elected to carry on the work. At present there are eleven children being cared for, and the material assets consists of 50 acres of splendid land lying between the State Agricultural School and the city of Monticello, besides an amount of money, over $18,000, that is immediately available for the erection of suitable buildings.

The Synod accepted the invitation of the First Presbyterian Church at Monticello to hold the 1924 meeting in that city. The report of the Ozark Assembly, the summer conference of the Synod, was presented by Dr. John Van Lear, of Little Rock and Rev. Charles Haddon Nabers, of Camden, the two chairmen of the two conferences held last June. Synod voted to invite the Presbytery of Memphis and the Synod of Missouri to unite with Arkansas in the holding of a great Bible conference next summer at a place to be designated later.

Synod was exceedingly busy this year, work hours were longer than usual, but the gracious hospitality of the El Dorado people was in evidence all of the time. The new pastor, Rev. F. R. Dudley, had moved to the city only a week before the opening of Synod, but he had already familiarized himself with the work to such an extent that he proved an ideal host. At the closing session of Synod, a committee from Ouachita Presbytery installed him as pastor. The city of El Dorado was a revelation to those who had not visited it for several years. From a country town of hardly three thousand people, it is now a cosmopolitan city of nearly ten times that number, and still growing rapidly as the great oil city of southern Arkansas.

The Synod, on motion of Dr. W. R. Anderson, overtured the Assembly to change the ecclesiastical year to make it correspond to the calendar year.

Charles Hadden Nabers.

TENNESSEE

Nashville, First Church—At the communion service on October 14th, 26 new members were publicly welcomed into the fellowship of the church.

PERSONAL

Rev. T. H. Spence, pastor of Rocky River and Harisburg Churches, exchanged pulpits with Rev. J. G. Garth and preached last Sunday at Seversville Church. Mr. Garth preached at Rocky River at 11 and at 3:30 at Hickory Ridge school house, a mission Sunday School of Rocky River Church.

Union Theological Seminary—Armistice Day was fittingly observed by Lee Tait Post No 91, American Legion. The membership of this post is composed exclusively of the students of Union Theological Seminary with Dr. Edward Mack and Dr. W. T. Thompson, Jr., as honorary members. The post was organized in October 1919 and named in honor of Lieut. Lee Tait, Company E., 354 Infantry, a member of the class of 1919 Union Theological Seminary, who died November 13th, 1918 of wounds received in action November 2, 1918. There were 32 charter members. In the session of 1920-1921 there were 27 members; session of 1921-1922, 36 members; session 1922-1923, 62 members. There are this session 68 members. This represents about half of the student body of the seminary five years after the Armistice and indicates the degree of interference of the Great War with the educational system of our country. Many young men were thus delayed in completing their studies and many more were obliged to abandon them altogether.

Davidson College—The Davidson College Bulletin, for November, contains a reprint of the address delivered last session by John R. Todd, of the Todd, Robertson, Todd Engineering Corporation, New York, the subject being: "Gee, Ain't It Great to Be a Boss." The article also appears in the December American Magazine, and is in practically the same form as the address delivered here. By consent of the author and of the American Magazine the article appears as one of the regular issues of the bulletin. The frontispiece carries an excellent likeness of Mr. Todd, and Rev. Jesse C. Rowan, pastor First Presbyterian Church, Concord, writes a foreword.

Dr. Frazer Hood, department of Education and Psychology has an article in the current issue of the Union Seminary Magazine entitled—Seeing Men As Trees Walking—a psychological study of Mark 8:14-26.

The triple celebration, Founders Day, Armistice and Highway opening on last Monday, held on the campus was an interesting occasion. Band concerts, a military review of the R. O. T. C. luncheon served to invited guests, football game between Kings Mountain High School and Davidson High School with a fine address by Gov. Cameron Morrison, formed the program for the day. Addresses were also made by W. C. Wilkinson, road commissioner from the sixth district, and Frank Page, chairman highway commission.

Governor Cameron Morrison was the speaker at the "Y" on Sunday evening, urging upon the young men the duty of using their education to help humanity less fortunate than themselves.

The latest addition to the national Greek letter fraternities with chapters at Davidson is Phi Gamma Delta which took over a local organization known as the Bachelors Club. The installation services were held on November 17th and representatives were present from Virginia, Washington and Lee, University of Alabama, and University of the South.

Greenbrier College—For the purpose of raising money for the Library Fund, the Greenbrier College girls gave a Fashion Revue in Carnegie Hall and a Book Shower in Greenbrier Hall. Individual pledges were enthusiastically made by the students and townspeople. Over $400 was raised for this fund, which will be a great benefit to the college.

On Saturday night, November 11th, a most interesting community Armistice Day program was given. After a song by the Glee Club, Judge Scott McWhorter gave an interesting talk on "American Civilization." As a fitting close of the program, the audience joined in the singing of World War songs.

The first number of the Lyceum was given in Carnegie Hall, Friday, November 11th. Dr. Violette, a prominent lecturer, gave an address on "America." The talk was highly appreciated by everyone in the large audience.

Miss Madge Sills, student secretary of the Y. W. C. A. spent a few days at G. C. W., giving the girls some very interesting talks on the peoples of foreign lands. At the regular meeting of the Y. W. C. A. on Wednesday evening, she spoke with interest of the girls in China, who are trying so hard to become like our own girls.

Stonewall Jackson College—At the first meeting of the season the Gamma Delta Literary Society most ably presented "A Pair of Lunatics," a mirth-provoking comedy by Walker. The platform of the college chapel was realistically transformed into a ward of a lunatic asylum.

Alpha Beta—One of the most enjoyable features of the year was "An Evening with James Whitcomb Riley," very ably rendered at the last meeting of the Alpha Beta Literary Society. No stone was left unturned in portraying the life and works of the Poet Laureate of Child Life. As usual, the audience rambled back over the barefoot trails of childhood out to "The Ole Swamin' Hole," or to the grapevine swing where each "waited for the Cat to Die," or waded "Knee-deep in June" Out to Old Aunt Mary's, where it lingered and dreamed until "The Frost Was on the Punkin and the Fodder in the Shock" and was only awakened to greet the living presence of "That Old Sweetheart of Mine."

Norfleet Trio—On Monday evening a very enjoyable concert was tendered to the faculty and students of Martha Washington and Stonewall Jackson Colleges by the Norfleet Trio in the Martha auditorium. These artists, a part of the Lyceum course of the two colleges, presented a varied program, which, judging from the eager attention and constant applause, appealed not only to critical lovers of classical music, but also to those who have more popular tastes.

Y. W. C. A.—As Sunday was Armistice Day, the Y. W. C. A. took that memorable event as subject for the vesper service. Talks bearing on this great theme were given and brought anew to the heart and soul of everyone present the heroism and sacrifice of our soldiers. Supplementing these remarks were two very interesting readings, and these, together with the special music, combined to produce a beautiful and impressive service.

King College—In the hall of the Ladies' Auxiliary building at King College on last Thursday evening, the student body entertained the members of the faculty and their wives with a three-course dinner.

William L. Painter, president of the student body, was toastmaster. Following Mr. Painter's welcome address, Robert W. Gray gave a toast to the ladies and Edward O'Dell, Jr., a toast to the faculty.

Members of the faculty made brief talks, regarding their appreciation of the general spirit of the school this year, and confirming their desire to co-operate with the student body in all matters relating to school life. Among the faculty members who addressed the assembly were: Dr. Tilden Scherer, Dr. W. A. Garrison, Dr. Robert Yost, Prof. A. P. Berg-hauser, Prof. Orville R. Post, Prof. King A. Hagy, and Coaches A. C. Adams, and Samuel A. Doak.

The program was concluded with a comedy duet by Messrs. Reuing and Allen.

Centre College—November 3d to 10th was a notable week in the history of Centre College. On November 3d the new stadium, costing approximately $55,000, was dedicated at the annual game between Centre College and University of Kentucky.

The weather was not propitious, the rain beginning at noon and continuing all the afternoon and through the night, but 12,000 people entered the gates, and most of them stayed until the last whistle blew closing the game in testimony of their interest in the contest and their loyalty to the institution and to the teams.

President Montgomery gave his usual address to the student body on Monday morning on lessons learned from the game. He made the following points as lessons learned from the last two games played by Centre College: First, the value of courtesy in all competitive events. Second, the importance of keeping your head in every contest. Third, the call is for valiant men in the day when the clouds hang low and lowering.

Succeeding this chapel address, Dr. Robert F. Fitch, President of Hanchow College, was introduced and spoke to the students at three succeeding chapel hours on the attractions of the mission field and our international obligations.

The next great need to be met at Centre College is to provide dormitories adequate to house men who are seeking their education at this institution. A number have already been enrolled for next year.

Flora Macdonald College—The Ibsen program given by the Epsilon Chi Literary Society on last Saturday was augmented by musical numbers from Grieg with special selections from the Peer Gynte suite. The fall debate took place on Saturday night with Misses Charlotte Garth and Florabel McGoogan on the affirmative and Misses Flora Macdonald and Charlotte McMurray on the negative side of the query: "Resolved, That the State is right in granting pensions to widows with dependent children." The negative won the decision.

The Zetesian Literary Society selected for the subject of its first meeting, "Edgar Allen Poe as a Short Story Writer and Poet." Papers on Poe's influence, his work as a writer of the short story and some of his stories and poems were read. The second literary evening given by the society had for its subject, "Songs and Ballads of the Civil War."

Madge Hardaway, president of the "Y," on November 10th, addressed the students of Chowan College, Fuquiesboro, explaining the Student Volunteer movement and on November 11th spoke to the B. Y. P. U. The "Y" Jobbery Campaign has resulted so far in almost $100 being raised to pay the expenses of delegates to the conference in Indianapolis.

Agnes Scott—One of the most interesting events of the college year has just been observed. It is the Investiture Celebration, and it is the occasion for donning caps and gowns by the Senior class. The address this year was given by Prof. R. B. Holt, of the department of chemistry, who is an honorary member of the class. Little Paul McCain, the four-year-old son of the president, has been chosen the class mascot and will have his picture in cap and gown in the annual along with his class-mates. There are 58 candidates for graduation in May.

Among the recent chapel speakers at the college, are Dr. Harris Kirk, Baltimore, Md., who married an Agnes Scott alumna; Miss Dorothea Chambers, Constantinople, Turkey, who spoke on the changing life of women in the Near East; and Dr. R. F. Eakes, Decatur, who presented the plan of church affiliation for College students. All of these were heard with much interest and profit by the community.

The Lecture Association last week presented Professor W. E. Dodd, of the University of Chicago, who spoke on "The Monroe Doctrine a Hundred Years After." Several other noted speakers have been engaged for later dates.

Under the auspices of the college and the Decatur Presbyterian Church, Dr. G. Campbell Morgan is giving a week of wonderful messages on vital Christian truths. Agnes Scott is one of the few colleges which he visits, and it was at his own request that he is returning this year.

News of the Week

Germany has decided to repudiate the treaty of Versailles and not to comply with either the reparations clause or any other clauses of the treaty as long as the French and Belgians occupy the Ruhr, says a dispatch to The Daily Mail, from Berlin.

Premier Poincare, riding roughshod over all opposition, scored a signal victory at the reopening of the French Chamber. He succeeded in placing the discussion of the supplementary credits of the 1924 budget at the top of the order of the day and absolutely refused to discuss interpellations, except on one day each week.

Frederick William, former crown prince, having received permission to proceed to his castle at Oels, Upper Silesia, left the island of Wieringen, where he spent five years of exile, to re-enter the fatherland.

William Hohenzollern, the former German Emperor, goes calmly about his customary tasks at Doorn house, notwithstanding the reports which have gone abroad that he was preparing to depart for the fatherland. It is asserted here that there is no foundation for the report that he and the members of his entourage have been granted passports for a journey to Berlin or elsewhere in Germany, and those close to him declare he has no intention of leaving Doorn.

Dr. L. B. McBrayer, superintendent of the State Sanatorium for Tuberculosis, Sanatorium, N. C., who pleaded guilty to a charge of trading with himself, was fined $50 and costs and ordered removed from his office by Judge Sinclair, in Hoke County superior court. The defense filed notice of appeal.

North Carolina is keeping up the prosperity lick better than other states in that section. This is brought out by the latest report of the office of the employment service of the United States department of labor.

President Coolidge laid a wreath on the tomb of the unknown soldier at Arlington as the Armistice day tribute of the American people to the memory of "those who did not see the end but died that the end might come."

Incorporation of an organization for the purpose of "inaugurating an intensive campaign looking to the disintegration of the Ku Klux Klan and kindred organizations" was announced by the National Vigilance Association.

Revision of federal taxes, estimated to reduce the total assessment by $323,000,000 next year, is proposed in the program approved by Secretary Mellon for submission to Congress.

Woodrow Wilson, addressing friends and admirers who made an Armistice day pilgrimage to his home, declared that he is not one of those that have the least anxiety about the triumph of the principles for which he has stood. "I have seen fools resist Providence before," he said, "and I have seen their destruction, as will come upon these again—utter destruction and contempt. That we shall prevail is as sure as that God reigns."

The largest Ford Motor Company assembly plant in the South, duplicate of the largest maintained by the company anywhere in the United States, will be placed at Charlotte, N. C.

The Southern Railway will erect a three-story building, at a cost of $350,000, on a site opposite the Southern passenger station, at Charlotte, N. C. Plans are in the hands of contractors for submission of bids. It will be modern in every detail.

The State of North Carolina sold $10,649,500 of institutional improvement bonds to the First National Bank, of New York City, and associates, $3,049,500 of the issue bearing an interest rate of 4.50 and $7,600,000 a rate of 4.75.

The defense in the case of Philip E. Fox, who killed W. S. Coburn, the Klan attorney, in Atlanta, Ga., will test his sanity by means of the spinal-serum test.

Speaking to a large crowd that gathered in front of the court house in his home town, Senator Overman expressed pride and pleasure in his vote for the soldiers' bonus, and told the boys in khaki that every right-thinking man in the nation is in favor of not only looking after the wounded and afflicted, but in giving to all the boys who helped win the war every consideration possible.

CHILDREN

RIDES IN THE FORD

Dear Standard:

This is the fourth letter, as they all came out. I go to school at White Hill school, I am in the fourth grade, my teacher's name is Miss Emma Steel. I like her fine I am in the second room, there is no school today, they knocked off today to go to the Fair at Sand Hill. My Daddy has got a new Ford and I love to ride. Papa is going to take us to the show Saturday and I am sure glad. I will close. Hoping to see my letter in print.

THE TURKEY THAT RAN AWAY

Golden Bronze Gobbler had a bad dream the night before. He saw himself roasted and basted and resting on a platter for a grand Thanksgiving dinner. He began to wander round and round his board "pen," when he had been fattened, looking for a chance to escape.

A lean old turkey hen came by gobbling her joy because she would probably live until next year and raise another family. Golden Bronze's cousin, Gobbler Gray, was eating little, and pretending illness so as to save himself from the dreaded "roasting pan."

Presently Gobbler Bronze noticed a board that was slightly loosed.

"Gobble! Gobble!" cried Bronze. "How I do hope for a strong November wind to rip this board off so I can get out and run away!"

That night a storm arose and his wish was granted. A little after daybreak he stepped out, looking carefully around to see if anybody was stirring. He was very much frightened when he heard a cow bawl in a field nearby. He walked more swiftly. Next he heard Father Ben's whistle in the direction of the barn.

He crept along very slyly by an Osage orange hedge. Now he heard a shot in the woods. Surely these November days are full of trouble and pitfalls for the feathered tribe. He flew across the creek wandered up over the hill, and then down a hollow, up over another hill, and then out upon the public road. Then Bronze gave a loud gobble. "I've run—I've run away!"

That night he roosted in a walnut tree, near Uncle Mose Peter's cabin. Uncle Mose, coming home late, saw Gobbler Bronze on his solitary roost. Mose ran into his cabin, crying: "Linda! Linda! The Lord do answer prayer! He done sent us a powerful, fine bronze gobbler fo' a Thanksgiving dinneh! Yo' get right up Linda, and help me dress dis turkey befo' de Lord takes it back!"—E. S. L. Thompson.

THE TRANSFERRED THANKSGIVING

By Daisy D. Stephenson

Caroline, grandmother's namesake, came in from the mail box waving a letter. Her mother stopped chopping up suet and citron and all the good things that make a good pudding; Janet turned from the pastry board where she was modeling gingerbread folks for small relatives.

"It's from grandmother," announced Caroline in surprise and her brother Clifford heard and came bounding up from his basement den where he was finishing a foot-stool for grandmother.

"You must go," mother decided instantly, but in the midst of the general hubbub as to what train Caroline would take, how long she would stay and other details, the telephone rang and Clifford beat the twins in a speedy race to answer.

"Hello, dad," was his greeting after a second, after which he told the bad news in his own fashion. There followed an exasperating moment during which Clifford was glued to the phone. Then he hung up, looking puzzled. "He said for us not to worry. He's thought of something and he's coming right out," was his amazing report.

"Who ever heard of father's leaving the office this time of day?" exclaimed Janet, ushering her tempting gingerbread family into the oven. "Maybe he isn't so busy the day before Thanksgiving," murmured mother who had suddenly lost her zest for further preparation.

It had been a disappointment first because her younger brother Jim could not join them in the festival reunion. He owned a stock farm some distance beyond grandmother's home town, and had written that he was short of help and dared not be away overnight just then.

And now the news from grandmother seemed more than the hostess could bear. Through all the years of her married life she had never failed to spend Thanksgiving with her mother. A tear dropped onto the edge of the yellow crock, but the children were too excited over Caroline's trip to notice. But just as Clifford came up from the trunk room

A Group of Children at the Mountain Orphanage

"But she's coming tonight!" exclaimed Janet anxiously while their mother begged quietly. "Open it, dear." All gathered close while Caroline scanned the brief page, and a wave of disappointment swept the household as with a cry of dismay Caroline reported bad news.

"She's had a heavy cold and though she's better, the doctor says she must not attempt a trip," wailed Caroline as the twins burst in like bombs and demanded to know everything.

"But she's got to come!" howled Allen. "How can it be Thanksgiving 'thout grandma?" Anne made a dive and buried her yellow head in mother's apron. Mother was busy thinking and consoling the twins for a time and all the happy activities were halted as if someone had pressed a button.

"We can't postpone it with everything ready and Aunt Ellen's folks coming," Janet said thoughtfully.

"Let me have some dough," coaxed Anne, brightening as she set to work with tiny rolling pins and patty pans, her aim to provide a tea party for the dolls' Thanksgiving.

Just then Caroline gave a squeal of surprise as she absent-mindedly turned the page over. There was a post-script which begged wistfully, "Can't your mother spare you to spend Thanksgiving with me? Hetty Smith will be in to help and she'll fix up some kind of a dinner."

with the best family bag, and Janet decided to rinse out a blouse for Caroline, there was a signal from the front.

Honk-Honk! This time the twins won the sprint to the front door. Janet and Clifford were close seconds but Caroline and her mother were absorbed in ways and means of sending grandmother a surprise basket when they were summoned by shrieks and joyous exclamations.

"Come on, let's see," Caroline laughed and pulled her mother with her. Never was their so pleasantly surprising a sight as that which met their gaze from the open door. At the curb was a beautiful big car and in it sat father, beaming with pride and satisfaction.

"It came several days ago, but I kept it secret," he exclaimed when he could be heard. "Meant to spring it on the crowd tomorrow. I've been learning all the p's and q's and a, b, c's of the thing and I hereby swear that I can safely drive it from here to the Sahara Desert if—"

He merely halted for breath but he was never allowed to finish. The family from mother to Anne, appeared to be mind readers and from that moment on never was there so unanimous an undertaking and when Aunt Ellen was telephoned, she also adopted the plan with delight. "Isn't it lucky there's no snow?" she said.

Fifty miles away in a rambling old house grandmother awoke on that crisp, clear Thanksgiving morning and wished she could sleep all day. She felt so much better she had a childish impulse to pack up and fly and tell the doctor afterward. But by the time she started the breakfast the old cough had come back and her appetite had gone. In came big capable Hetty to help and she gave grandmother a good scolding.

"Now you be good and mind the doctor," she said leading a very meek grandmother in to the old sofa. "You rest here by the fire while I fix you a bite to eat. Do you look for Caroline?"

Grandmother tried to sound philosophical. "I haven't heard and I thought they'd telephone me right off. But their plans are made and Ellen's folks invited and all—" her voice trailed into wistful silence and while Hetty sang loudly, "Count your blessings, count them one by one," grandmother resolved to put aside her great disappointment and make the best of it.

It seemed a truly Herculean task, however, as the clock ticked on and Hetty began talking dinner. Oh, wait awhile," begged grandmother. "Neither of us is hungry, so why not wait till this evening? Guess if you'll get my needles I'll knit on Caroline's Christmas sweater. She'll look sweet in this crimson."

But the sweater was never touched, for just then Hetty turned to answer an energetic rapping, and grandmother almost bounced up as Caroline's sweet voice called a greeting. In she dashed, almost hugging grandmother to pieces, then stopping long enough to hold her off and exclaim, "You don't look sick a speck! I think you're just 'possuming! Gramma, if I were Cinderella's godmother and could give you your dearest wish, what would it be?"

Pink and fluttery with surprise, the dear old lady replied, "I don't have to stop and think, dearie. If I could have you all together today—"

"Shut your eyes, stop your ears and stand in this corner!" was Caroline's surprising command. "Just wait a minute and don't dare peek!" Half bewildered, grandmother obeyed. It seemed a good many minutes and even with her fingers in her ears she could not help hearing queer sounds.

Then at last Caroline turned her gently about to face a room full of laughing delighted children and grand-children. Such a reception as grandmother held from her sofa throne! There were Caroline's family and Aunt Ellen's and of all happy happenings, there was Uncle Jim, the biggest, jolliest surprise of all. For hadn't he tramped down his canyon on snow shoes to surprise everybody, himself most of all?

"My hired man got back last night," he explained, sitting down and tickling everybody by taking grandmother on his lap, she was so little. "I had to come down on business soon, so I figured I'd eat my turkey meal at the hotel. Supposed mother was in the city with you folks. But the first fellow I hailed was the doctor, and at the next corner," here his hearty laugh boomed out, "if I didn't run into the whole kit and boodle! Say, if this isn't the luckiest!"

Caroline's mother and Aunt Ellen had made a bee-line to the kitchen and were unpacking mysterious baskets and bundles that gave forth delightful teasing odors.

And a whole minute before the clock struck noon there was a wonderful dinner on the table, and grandmother had the best appetite in the crowd. There were games and stories and fun for good night, Uncle Jim expressed the united opinion of the whole family when he chuckled, "Say, this transferred sort of Thanksgiving is simply the best yet!"—The Junior Herald.

Marriages and Deaths

MRS. JOHN M. KENNETT

Mrs. Lelia Cutting Kennett, wife of John M. Kennett, of Mooresville, N. C., died at her home in that place October 24, 1923, after a lingering and painful illness, at the age of 51 years. Mrs. Kennett was a native of Lexington, N. C., where she spent her girlhood and grew up to womanhood. Early in life she became a Christian and united with the church. On September 18, 1890 she was married to Mr. Kennett. They lived in Rock Hill, S. C., and Asheville, N. C., for some years, moving to Mooresville about eighteen years ago. Here she united with the First Presbyterian Church, in which she was an active and consistent member up to the time of her death. Mrs. Kennett was a lovely Christian character and exemplified this in all the relations of life. First of all she lived it in the home as wife and mother. She felt that this was her chief sphere in life and she was the center about which all the activities of the home revolved. She simply gave herself up to the training of her children and making home attractive to each member of the family. These children, now all grown, rise up and call her blessed. Her activities in the home and her naturally retiring disposition made her less active in the church. But she loved her church and was always ready to do her part in it when called upon. In her last illness she showed the most wonderful patience and resignation to the Father's will. In the midst of pain that was almost unendurable she was never known to utter a word of impatience. To her pastor she said: "I love to have you come for I so much need your prayers." "But," she added, "I am not afraid to die. I attended to this matter long ago and am ready to go wherever God wills. All I want is grace and strength to bear this pain." The Saviour was very precious to her and He enabled her to endure to the end.

Besides her husband, she is survived by four children: Miss Audrey, Mrs. Hal Hays, Messrs. Heath O. and LeRoy Kennett, all of this place. Her aged mother, Mrs. Kate Cutting, of Lexington, with two sisters and three brothers also survive.

Proverbs 31:27, 28, may very fittingly be quoted in closing:

"She looketh well to the ways of her household. Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her."

Her pastor.

Bible Sunday December 9th

THEME

THE BIBLE REMAKING THE ORIENT

Purpose

The earthquake in Japan has made large areas of the Far East practically Bibleless. Thousands of Bible printing plates in 25 languages and dialects used in Yokohama have been totally destroyed. They must be replaced at once or the whole missionary program will be seriously handicapped.

Need

The American Bible Society needs immediately $289,000 which to make good the actual losses, to say nothing of the enlarged opportunities.

Responsibility

is definitely up the Churches of America, whose agency for Bible work in the Far East is the American Bible Society.

Opportunity

is one of unusual significance and every Pastor, Sunday School Superintendent and Young People's leader should utilize Bible Sunday on December 9th (or nearest convenient date) for the promotion of interest in the distribution of the Scriptures in Japan and the Far East.

E. MATTHEW JOHNSON

Whereas, God in His all-wise Providence, has called from time to eternity, our brother and fellow elder, E. Matthew Johnston, in the 76th year of his age, therefore be it resolved by the session of the Willard Presbyterian Church, Willard, N. C.

1. That in the death of E. Matthew Johnston, this church has lost an esteemed and beloved brother, and a faithful officer, whose presence and fellowship we shall miss.

2. That in his death, we bow in submission to the will of our Heavenly Father with full assurance that He maketh no mistakes, but doeth all things well.

3. That as a kind neighbor, a loyal friend, an honorable and upright citizen, a faithful husband and devoted father, and a Christian gentleman, Brother Johnston, had an open hand and a loving heart for others.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon our minutes, a copy sent to the family of our deceased brother, and that they be published in the Presbyterian Standard.

Internal cleanliness protects against disease

IT is but a step from those immediate results of constipation—headache, heaviness, loss of appetite—to serious disease. Such minor ailments are a warning that poisons from food waste are flooding your body. Keep clean internally.

In constipation, say intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illness including the gravest diseases of life.

Laxatives Aggravate Constipation

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Medical science, through knowledge of the intestinal tract gained by X-ray observation, has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation.

The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage out of the body. Thus Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is not a laxative and cannot gripe. Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world.

Don't give disease a start. Adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. Nujol is not a medicine. Like pure water, it is harmless. Take Nujol as regularly as you brush your teeth or wash your face. For sale by all druggists.

Then you know and love Barium Springs Orphan's home --- it's traditions, it's ideals, it's tribulations, and it's successes, --- it's wonderful marvelous, glorious work.

And you know that Barium Springs never calls for help unless it really, trully needs; that it has needed too often when it did not have the heart to beg. Because you have given willingly, freely, generously, Barium Springs knows that now

You Will Respond

In the same magnificent way, when you know that Barium Springs needs One Hundred Thousand Dollars as it's Thanksgiving Offering from the Presbyterians of North Carolina --- not as a part of the regular percentage of your benevolences, but over and above all, --- to meet the demands, to carry on the work as you would have it done.

Barium Springs is looking to you. It knows that you have never failed it, and that you will not fail it now. It asks that you make your offering this Thanksgiving as big as the abundance of your blessings urges you to.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

The Cost of Railroad Operation

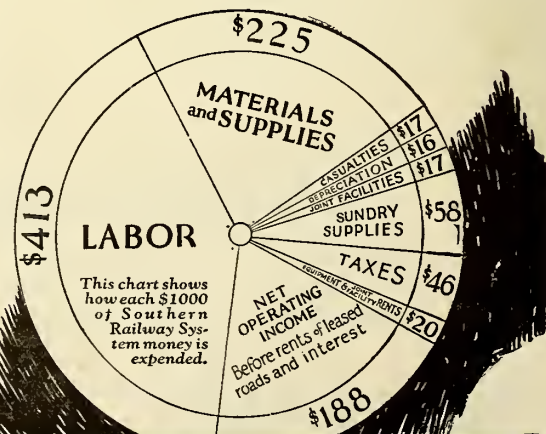

Our total receipts for the past three years have averaged $3,230 a year for each employee. Out of these earnings we must first pay wages, which have averaged in the same period $1,580 a year.

Out of the $1,650 remaining, we must pay our bills for materials and supplies, pay for the coal burned in our engines, meet loss, damage and casualty claims, pay rents and taxes, and have enough left over to provide a fair return on the investment.

needs of the South, loyal service of employees, and the confidence and co-operation of the public, is it possible for a large railroad system like the Southern to provide adequate and dependable transportation service—and save enough out of its earnings to provide a fair return on the investment, and thus command the new capital needed to keep pace with the growth of the South.

At the service of each employee is an average investment of $13,000 in railroad property — tracks, stations, terminals, equipment, etc.

Only by efficiency of management, an understanding of the transportation

Southern Railway System last year spent in the South $20,000,000 more than it received from the South.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Springs,
Box 3 B, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

Sparkles

Lord Balfour praises the waiters that he met in Washington at the conference on limitation of armaments and tells the following story: "I was at a hotel where all the waiters were colored men. On the first evening I pushed away the menu, and gave the waiter a coin. 'Just bring me a good dinner, uncle,' I said. He brought me an excellent dinner. I continued this plan for a fortnight. When I left my waiter said to me, 'Goodbye, sah, an' good luck, and when yoh or any of yoh frien's come here what can't read the menu, jes ax foh ole Calhoun Clay.'"—Spokesman (Washington.)

A big Irishman, while carrying a ladder through a crowded street, had the misfortune to break a plate-glass window. He immediately dropped his ladder and broke into a run. But he had been seen by the storekeeper, who dashed after him in company with several salesmen, and he was soon caught.

"Here, you!" shouted the angry shopkeeper, "you have broken my window!"

"Sure I did," admitted the Irishman, "and didn't you see me running home to get the money to pay for it?"—Ex.

He (during the interval)—"What did you say your age was?"

She (smartly)—"Well, I didn't say; but I've just reached 21."

"Is that so? What detained you?"—London Answers.

"Stop, stop!" cried the fussy old gentleman. "There's a lady just fallen off the bus!"

"It's all right, sir," said the conductor, "she's paid 'er fare."—London Answers.

THE SEMI-CENTENNIAL OF THE SECOND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH CHARLOTTE, N. C.

WHEN fifty years of wedded life are passed by a man and wife, it is justly made an occasion of celebration, yet it is by no means a frequent occurrence among the families of any community.

When a church reaches the age of fifty years, it very naturally wishes to call the attention to this fact, and under ordinary circumstances it is an occasion of some wonder, especially in these days when churches are being organized so frequently.

In this community one would not suppose that an existence of fifty years would excite much wonder, because in this section of the State some churches count their years by the hundreds, and point with pride to their colonial ancestry.

When the Second Church, of Charlotte, decided to call upon its friends to celebrate its fiftieth birthday, it was not upon the ground of its age, because by the side of Sugar Creek, Steele Creek and Rocky River Churches it is but an infant. It was rather upon what it had done in fifty years that it based its celebration. When measured thus, it stands at the head of the class.

Whatever may have been the motive, on Friday, November 30, 1923, its semi-centennial exercises began, with an historical address by Dr. Walter W. Moore, himself a Charlotte boy in the past, and as one thoroughly conversant with this section and the history of these churches.

An historical address is by its nature as dry as a statistical table of weights and measures, and those who attend such a meeting, go in a heroic frame of mind, to stand it, nolens, volens.

If any such attended the opening meeting on Friday evening, they were predestined to be agreeably disappointed.

Dr. Moore possesses that rare and happy faculty of serving up the driest facts so moistened with wit and anecdote that one swallows the driest statistics without choking, and really enjoys the operation.

Those who know Dr. Moore will not be surprised when we say that in listening to him we lost all sense of the flight of time.

Dr. McGeachy, the pastor of the church, in introducing Dr. Moore, in a measure prepared the audience for the treat in store. It was an introduction as graceful as it was true, which can seldom be said of the average introduction.

Dr. Moore in beginning gave him a "quid pro quo," which is, being interpreted, "a Roland for an Oliver," or "tit for tat."

We have not the space for even a synopsis of this address, and can only remark that if this celebration had for its object to show the wonderful work done by this church, Dr. Moore clearly proved that when measured by results, this church in fifty years has done what other churches would be proud to do in one hundred years.

After the address on Friday evening, the ladies gave a reception in the club rooms, which was as informal as a family gathering, which means that it was enjoyed by all who took part.

There were three old pastors present, and the widows of two who have passed to their reward—Dr. J. Y. Fair, Dr. R. C. Reed, Dr. Martin D. Hardin, Mrs. Neander M. Woods, and Mrs. John W. Stagg.

No one except those who have come back to their old charge can appreciate the sweet pleasure that these brethren and sisters felt in once more greeting old friends and finding that the long separation had not chilled the warm love of long ago.

On Saturday morning Dr. Hardin presided and Dr. Fair delivered an address on "Imperishable Memories," a subject that gave full play to his poetic mind.

Then came the Memorial Exercises, when tablets were unveiled to Dr. Harding, Dr. Woods, Dr. Boyd and Dr. Stagg. The unveiling was done by Miss Emma Cothran and Master James Alden Houston.

This unveiling was preceded by the reading of an historical sketch of the church by Mr. R. S. Hutchison, of the Charlotte Bar. The sketch was prepared by Miss Cordelia Phifer, one of the charter members.

Dr. Reed then delivered an address on "The Old-Time Religion," an address that rang true to our Standards, and warmed the heart of the writer. If Dr. Reed in this address truthfully voiced the views of the Southern Church, then Liberalism will be for all time "persona non grata."

On Saturday evening Dr. Martin D. Hardin, of Ithaca, N. Y., who preceded Dr. McGeachy in the pastorate, preached. His subject was "The Church That Changes the World."

After the sermon the choir gave a Sacred Concert. As the choir of this church is one of the best in the city, this concert delighted a large audience.

On Sunday morning Dr. James I. Vance preached. His text was John 12:32: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." The large auditorium was packed with an attentive congregation, even to the rear room and the balconies. Dr. Vance was at his best, and fully measured up to the expectations of his large audience.

The services of this happy occasion closed with the celebration of the Lord's Supper. The Second Church's membership now reaches over 1,800, and under the leadership of its popular pastor it stands among the largest churches of our Assembly.

BOOKS

If we were asked to name the most useful invention of man, what has brought most pleasure to the human race—we would be embarrassed by our riches. The human race has made many inventions, each ministering, in a more or less degree, to its pleasure and comfort. In this day especially each year seems to bring something new, so that what was unbelievable a few years ago, is now received without a doubt.

To decide upon the most useful would be almost impossible, because each man would have his own standard of usefulness.

A better method would be to imagine our life, if this invention or that were missing out of life.

Judged by this standard, the invention of letters must rank high, because it enables us to record our thoughts and to hand them down to others, both in this and in future generations. By means of books we can select our own company, and though we may rank low among the famous men of the earth, we can mingle with the wisest and the best among men.

Books furnish companions to the "shut-ins," and they make a new world, even if it is unreal, to the young.

How pressing then ought parents and those to whom has been committed the training of the young, to realize that when they implant a love of reading in the minds of the young, they are opening to them the door of the past and bringing them into the companionship of the wise and great.

When we are convalescent, we want a book, and when we are lonely, we look to a book for companionship.

This week we spread before our readers books of every description. Let parents select for their children and let all in this time of peace prepare for war, when a book will be the thing most desired.

DAVIDSON COLLEGE

It is evident to every observing reader that there is at present in this State a quickening of interest in educational work and consequently in educational institutions.

Our State is spending immense sums in new buildings and in increasing the salaries of her teachers. Then in every denomination special efforts are being made to give them financial support that will place them on an equality with the State schools.

Among the colleges for men the Southern Church has two whose history is interwoven into that of the Church herself—Hampden-Sidney, in Virginia, and Davidson, in North Carolina. Both of these have for years been steady feeders to the ministry, and today they number their graduates in the Presbyterian pulpits by the thousands.

No one can rightly estimate what a blessing to the Church and State these two institutions have been.

Some one once asked Dr. McGuffey, of the University of Virginia, what was his conception of an ideal education. His reply was, "Send your son to a denominational college with its fixed curriculum, where deep and broad foundations can be laid, and then send him to a university, where he can specialize on that to which he is most inclined.

Davidson College has ever been such a college, and her sons have gone into every profession and have made good wherever they have gone.

At present the old college has renewed her youth and is trying to solve the problem of housing and caring for the many young men flocking to her doors.

This is a most opportune time for the appearance of the history of Davidson college, compiled by Miss Cornelia Rebekah Shaw, the College Librarian, which comes to us from the Fleming H. Revell Press, of New York.

Miss Shaw has done her work well. The book is rich in facts, yet interspersed with anecdote in such a way that its reading is a delight.

We opened it while very busy—intending to glance at it, and then get to work. We found ourselves dipping into its pages from time to time, oblivious of the fact that time was fleeing.

A mere glance at its contents will give an idea of its scope. We have the seed-sowing; the beginning; strengthening the stakes; the Civil War period; a period of transition; a period of expansion; the curriculum and miscellanea; student life and campus activities; and finally, Davidson men in the world's work.

Miss Shaw has done work of which she may be proud, and which all Davidson men will value.

"THE PREACHER'S OLD TESTAMENT"

By Edward Mack, D.D., Professor Department of Hebrew and Old Testament Interpretation, Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. Price, $1.25.

Here is a book by a theological professor that overturns all theories of such a man. The general idea of a theological professor is a minister whose sermons, when he does preach, are so desiccated that there is danger of spontaneous combustion. Of course this is a popular myth, founded upon isolated cases. However, its very prevalence proves that there must be some foundation in facts.

If any of our readers hold this view of these professors, we advise him to read this little volume by Dr. Mack. He will then find that all professors do not run in the same groove.

In this volume he gives most excellent advice to young preachers concerning what they need to give variety to their sermons, and also to keep the mind out of a rut. He takes readers through the Old Testament, only pausing to call attention to its literary beauty and pointing out striking passages from which sermons can be made. He shows the literary value of the Old Testament in a preacher's training, and also its historical value. He brings out its dramatic elements and suggests that many sermons could be greatly improved by a bit of drama, such as the scene upon Mount Carmel.

He does not overlook the moral lessons or the sound philosophy of the Old Testament, and he also in a clear manner makes the Psalms give their Messianic message.

As we read these live pages and follow him—unfolding in a clear way these various elements of the Old Book—we find ourselves longing to see our thinking and wide-awake young preachers following these suggestions and giving their people food, rich in gospel truth and in spiritual life.

If the coming race of preachers will study this book and hold its suggestions, they will make their sermons living messages, so that those who sit in the pew will hear them gladly.

THE UNION SEMINARY REVIEW

We have before us the October number of this interesting quarterly. To the average reader it may not be as interesting as some of the Standard's editorials for the reason that its articles are not as light. To thinking men and women who enjoy strong meat, it will be very acceptable.

Dr. J. B. Green, the new Professor of Theology at Columbia Seminary, is represented by his inaugural address when inducted into that position. Of course one can imagine a lighter address, but in this day when theology is being assailed, it has a wholesome ring about it that heartens one when he is despairing about the future of the Church.

Dr. James J. Vance, who has some reputation as an attractive sermonizer, gives some of his recipes for making sermons that grip and that are palatable.

Dr. Frazer Hood, of Davidson College, where he is the professor of psychology, applies his study to Mark 8:14-16, when the healed man saw men as trees walking.

Dr. T. Cary Johnson, professor of Systematic Theology in Union Seminary, Virginia, preached the opening sermon at the last meeting of the Synod of Virginia. This sermon is reproduced in this Review. Dr. Johnson is one of the strong and clear thinkers of our Church. He speaks his mind without regard to his popularity.

Those of us who sat under R. L. Dabney, often long for a blast of his trumpet in these days of backboneless leaders, who seem afraid of their shadows and who preach toleration even when error is undermining the faith of our Church.

To read this sermon cheers us beyond expression. It reminds us that Elijah's mantle has fallen on Elisha's shoulders, and that there is one man who has the vision of our danger, and who has backbone enough to cry aloud and spare not. Though he sees the danger threatening the Church, he has the hopefulness of faith in the ultimate triumph of the Church.

Dr. P. Frank Price, professor of theology in Nanking Theological Seminary, China, has a condensation of an address he delivered before the Shanghai Missionary Association, last January. His subject is "Church Union As It Is In China." Being on the ground, his views deserve careful consideration, even if we cannot accept them all.

THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

At this time of the year we are facing our great needs in the way of equipment, and for that reason our people may be inclined to turn a deaf ear to the pressing needs of the Bible Society.

We would, however, remind them that this cause has been recommended to their liberality by our General Assembly, and for that reason we ought, as beneficiaries of its liberal donations on the foreign field, contribute to its support.

Added to these pressing reasons we should also remember that the terrible catastrophe in Japan caused this society a loss of $300,000 in Bible plates and Bibles.

December 9th is Bible Sunday, at which time churches throughout the country will have an opportunity to show their gratitude for help in the past years, by a liberal contribution to the Bible Cause.

HISTORY OF SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

There must be numbers of the Standard's readers who would like to see Dr. Reed's articles on the Origin and History of Our Church, printed in pamphlet form. They are of great value, and all of our preachers and seminary students should know these facts. There is nothing in them to stir up any feeling of bitterness. If these facts had to be suppressed because they show why we form a separate church body, we might go further and suppress the facts that show why the seceding states thought they had a right to form a separate political body.

"First pure—then peaceable," and Dr. Reed's articles are pure history.

THE PERSONAL TOUCH

A pioneer worker, canvassing a western settlement in order to get a Sunday-school started, came upon a boy who got the lad to sit with him on a log and then described his plan. To every appeal—by picture card or lesson paper and even by the sweet singing of "I have a Father in the Promised Land"—the boy said: "No," he would not come to the log school house to help start a Sunday-school. The canvasser, non-plussed, started away, when he was stopped by the boy's, "Say! Are you going to be there?" "Yes," said the missionary, "I'll be there." "Then, I'll come," was the lad's decision. A man won what no impersonal inducement could win. He visualized at its best the Sunday-school cause.—Ex.

BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG

Sunday-schools can perform a helpful service to public libraries by helping to add to the collection and offering friendly counsel in the choice of books of value for children. Three new books a week, well advertised, are better than 150 books a year bought at one time. The old Sunday-school library may be defunct, but Sunday-school as a religious organization interested in the welfare of childhood, should take an interest in adapting books worth while to juvenile readers.

THE BIBLE BEARER

There is a story in connection with Queen Elizabeth's coronation, which followed the reign of "Bloody Mary," when to read the Bible was a crime. A boy, skillful in athletics, was dressed as an angel, in green and gold, with wings on shoulders and feet, and on the approach of the Queen's coach, he descended, as if from heaven, from the top of Temple Bar, where the city of London proper then ended, bearing a most elegant Bible, made expressly for the Queen. As the winged boy descended the crowd exclaimed, "The Bible Bearer," and the Queen received the Book as sent from heaven for the guidance of her throne. Every Endeavor should be a "Bible Bearer" by living as the Bible indicates, and so bring the Bible to those who do not read it.

A WARNING

An exchange tells the story of a Sunday-school teacher who was very popular because he told his class such lovely stories. After he left for some reason one of his scholars remarked, "Yes, his stories were good and beautiful, but they were like postage stamps without any 'gum-stickum' on them. They would not stick."

LIFE BELOVED

There is a life beyond this. The silver cords which are broken here shall be brought together again there. The golden bowl shall be restored never to be broken again. The pitcher shall never more be broken at the fountain, nor the wheel at cistern. There shall be joy in the presence of God over a noble community of men made perfect, and ransomed from the flesh. The experiences of this life are but so many lessons by which men learn of their nobler manhood and higher nature. Blessed things lie just before you.

THE CHILD'S BOOK SHELF

He who gives a child a book
Gives that child a sweeping look Through its pages
Down the ages;

Gives that child a ship to sail
Where the far adventures hail Down the sea
Of destiny!

Gives that child a vision wide
As the skies where stars abide Anchored in
The love of Him;

Gives that child great dreams to dream:
Sun-lit ways that glint and gleam
Where the sages
Tramp the ages.

—W. L. Stidger, in N. Y. Advocate.

AS A BOOKSELLER THINKETH

By Charles Brockmann

(We feel ourselves fortunate in securing for our Book number this talk on Books from a man who knows and loves them as does Mr. Charles R. Brockmann, senior member of the firm of "Brockmanns," a "book store of rare excellence," Charlotte, N. C. His article on "My Favorite Books Inside Out" in our Book Number of 1922 created such wide and favorable comment that we were constrained to ask him for a second article on this subject, which we herewith present.—Ed.)

Upon returning from a party, little Johnnie Martin was asked by his mother if he had had a good time. Much to her surprise he answered, in a tone of disgust, "Naw." "Why, Johnnie!" she inquired. "I'm surprised; Mrs. Jones usually has such good things to eat." "That's just the trouble!" said Johnnie. "They told me to eat all I wanted and I couldn't."

All of which applies just as much to people who are employed in book stores as to little Johnnie. They are privileged to read any and everything in unlimited quantities, but their time, like Johnnie's stomach, has limitations all too narrow for their desires.

The comparison may be drawn further by imagining that from the bounteous spread, Johnnie selected a few choice dishes which by their pleasing fragrance attracted his attention. Appearances being sometimes deceptive, Johnnie probably discarded some dishes in favor of others, just as a bookseller discards many books in favor of the few which please him to recommend—regardless of outward appearances.

So, in preparing the menu of books, we have omitted some very attractive looking volumes in favor of others which have stood the test of our own and the tastes of other and much more competent critics.

Just now the fad seems to be the selection of "Ten Best Books" of the "Year" or the "Century" or since the beginning of time. Nearly every newspaper or magazine has carried some such list compiled from as many sources. But regardless of how or by whom compiled each list whether by author, title, sale or popularity must always be headed by the "Holy Bible"—since the beginning of our time, the one best seller. Needless to say, that the booksellers whose bread and butter depends upon sales carries the one best seller in more different bindings, sizes and versions than any other book. It has always been so and if our hopes come true both from a spiritual as well as material standpoint, it shall ever be thus.

While most people are familiar with the fact that the Bible is always the best selling book, few people realize that books based upon the Bible come next in importance. This is a delightful refutation of the great hue and cry of those pessimists who lament the deteriorating effects of the present age. Ever since its publication in the Spring Papini's "Life of Christ" has been among the best selling books of Non-fiction—frequently heading the list. This is all the more remarkable because it is a $3.50 book.

The great and increasing popularity of religious books is not confined to adult literature. For years Hurlburt's "Bible Stories" and Foster's "Bible Stories" have been among the best selling and most popular children's books. Heretofore the complaint has been that there were no Bible Stories suited to the smaller children, say about three to six years of age. This state of affairs exists no longer for Rand and McNally have added to their wonderful "Heart's Delight" series a "Bible Stories in Pictures." This is a big, flat, strongly bound book just full of beautiful colored pictures and orthodox Old Testament stories told in the simplest language. It is a worthy addition to the series which includes these titles of established reputation, "Real Mother Goose," "Eesop for Children" and "Once Upon a Time Tales" of all which sell for Two Dollars each and are worth it.

Whether by chance or intentionally, we do not know but most book stores are arranged so that Inspirational books come next to religious books in the shelves. This seems to be most fitting and probably results from the Booksellers own delight in selling such books next to Bibles. And it may also be by chance and may be premeditated that many stores have "The Americanization of Edward Bok" with Inspirational books rather than with "Autobiography" where it rightly belongs. We say "premeditated" because we believe that anyone who has read it will agree that it is one of the most remarkably inspiring as well as readable books ever published. At the new price of one dollar it is well within the reach of everyone and must now share in our affection with that other wonderful bit of inspirational literature "Acres of Diamonds" by Russell Conwell.

Best sellers are usually divided into two classes "Fiction" and "Non-Fiction." Just as the Bible is the perennial best seller in "Non-fiction" so Harold Bell Wright's books seem to be the perennial best sellers in "Fiction." This may sound amusing, but to those of us who are yet on the sunny side of forty memory does not go back beyond the point when a new novel by Harold Bell Wright did not top the fiction list every other year. After the disappointment of "The Re-Creation of Brian Kent" in Nineteen Twenty One, we were agreeably surprised to find ourselves buried deep in his "Mine With the Iron Door" new this Fall. To us, he has done nothing better than this new book and we welcome this chance to recommend it to those who "adore" the type of story with its homely message Wright does so well. Another author of long standing popularity and whose books are among the best sellers is Gene Stratton Porter. Her "White Flag" this year is breaking all previous records. "The Coming of Cousin Ann" and "Miss Minerva on the Old Plantation" are two new books by the author of the "Miss Minerva" books, Emma Speed Sampson. Their success, in the South would be assured regardless, but both these books justify themselves and will undoubtedly add strength to the friendship for this author and find for her many new admirers. The whole Fiction list this season is exceptionally strong, containing as it does, such authors and titles as "Rufus" by Grace S. Richmond, "Butterfly" by Kathleen Norris, "Alaskan" by James Oliver Curwood, "Never the Twain Shall Meet" by Peter B. Kyne, "A Son at the Front" by Edith Wharton and dozens of others which go to make the Bookseller's catalogues this Fall of more than usual interest.

Nearly all of the best sellers go into what is known as the "Reprint" or "Popular Copyright" editions when they are about two years old. They are just like plays which, during the first two or three seasons charge from two dollars upward per seat and later are presented in stock companies at fifty or seventy five cents. Which means that they are all there except possibly the scenery or in the case of books, the bindings—are not quite so attractive—but this is much less so with book than with plays and besides a book may be read and re-read many times giving joy and pleasure all along the way while a play once seen is forever over.

The most notable entries this Fall to the "Popular Copyrights" which sell for seventy-five cents each are "Her Father's Daughter" by Gene Stratton Porter, "Helen of the Old House" by Harold Bell Wright, "Sacramouche" by Rafael Sabatini. There are many others, too numerous to mention except in a catalogue which no bookseller fails to do as the "Popular Copyrights" are, as their name implies, his most popular books.

The biggest drop in price of all, however, is "Little Women" by Louise M. Alcott. Heretofore obtainable only at a dollar and a half, a good cloth edition has been released at only fifty cents. "Heidi" by Johann Spyri may also be had at the same price.

Whatever little Johnnie may have selected to appease his appetite at the party the Piece de resistance might well be compared to the book "The Story of Doctor Dolittle." This is the book that won for its author Hugh Loftin, the American Library Association medal for "The best contribution to children's literature in 1922." Booksellers, Librarians and parents with great unanimity concur in the selection of this book. In order to bring it within the reach of all, a limited number are for sale at a dollar and a half. This is in the nature of an advertising plan as the two succeeding books, "Doctor Dolittle's Voyages" and "Doctor Dolittle's Postoffices" are $2.50 each and "The Story of Doctor Doolittle" will be $2.50 when the present supply is exhausted.

For the same reason little Johnnie did not enjoy the party we are reluctant to cease writing, but space in both cases is limited. We are passing up reference to many of our favorites such as "Boston School of Cooking Cook Book" by Fannie Merritt Farmer the new edition of which is much enlarged and improved, at the same old price of $2.50. Likewise the hundreds of beautiful boy's and girl's books, the poetry of Edgar Guest and the dainty little gift books. We love them all and could write pages about them and not tell half that is in our heart to say.

The two great pleasures of a bookseller's life are selecting from all the books published those which shall comprise his individual stock and then the distribution of these books to those who will most appreciate them and where they will do the most good. When the selection is made, he visualizes certain types of customers and not infrequently certain individuals. His pleasure comes not alone from selling but from selling the right book to the right person. This is absolutely true. Every bookseller has his own method, varying with location and conditions. Our method includes a corps of well trained salespeople and in addition we present the choice items from our stock in an attractive, descriptive and illustrated catalogue which is free to our friends, customers and prospective customers upon request. In these ways we strive to fulfill our mission which, as we see it, is "That no transaction is complete unless both parties thereto have profited thereby."

TO LOVERS OF THE GREEK NEW TESTAMENT

By Rev. Eugene C. Caldwell, D.D.

If any minister has doubts about the definite value of the Greek New Testament in his work, let him read Prof. A. T. Robertson's charming little book, just published, entitled, The Minister and His Greek New Testament (Doran Co., $1.75). His doubts will straightway vanish. With zest he will begin again his study of the New Testament in the Greek. In 12 charming chapters Dr. Robertson gives more concrete illustrations of the freshness and force that can be imparted to the sermon by the use of the Greek New Testament. He shows how most of the world's greatest preachers have found in the Greek a gold mine yielding rich returns when faithfully worked. He shows us how to find sermons in the Greek prepositions, in Greek tenses, in the Greek article, in Greek syntax.

We are delighted to hear Dr. Robertson say that the number of preachers who are studying their New Testament in the Greek is increasing rapidly. This revival of the study of Greek is a healthy sign and is bound to give new power to our preaching.

By all means the minister who is "rusty" should "brush up" his knowledge of Greek by using such splendid textbooks for beginners as, Beginners' Grammar of the Greek New Testament, by Prof. W. H. Davis (Doran Co., $2.00); or, New Testament Greek for Beginners, by Prof. J. G. Machen (MacMillan Co., $2.20). With the help of either of these books it is possible for one who knows no Greek at all to teach himself the elements of Greek so as to get great benefit from the study of the Greek New Testament.

There is good news for lovers of the Greek New Testament, The British and Foreign Bible Society has just issued a new edition of the Greek New Testament. In our opinion it is the ideal edition for the minister. The Greek text is printed in beautiful, clear type, on the best paper; the margin at the side is over two inches wide, while at the bottom it is nearly four inches wide. These very wide margins afford ample space for notes. Just below the text on each page in foot-notes are printed the other readings adopted by Westcott and Hort, Tischendorf, Weiss, the Textus Receptus, Robt. Stephens, Elzevir Brothers, and those readings which underlie the English Revised Version of 1881. Thus the student has on the single page before his eyes the various readings of the principal editions of the Greek New Testament. Another most welcome feature is the printing of quotations from the Old Testament in the regular small Greek letters in black-face type. This is an immense improvement over the Westcott and Hort Edition, where the quotations are in capital Greek letters, whose forms are often unfamiliar to the student.

The system of marginal references, of paragraphing and of punctuation is the best we have ever seen. No student of the Greek New Testament should allow himself to be without this superb edition.

The price is remarkably low. The strong buckram binding sells for only $1.50, and the part-leather binding for $2.10. Either binding can be had from the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, North Sixth Street, Richmond, Va., or from the American Bible Society, 218 North Adams Street, Richmond, Va.

Besides this edition of the Greek New Testament, the preacher should have A Manual Greek Lexicon of the New Testament, by G. Abbott-Smith, published by Charles Scribner's Sons, N. Y. This lexicon is printed in convenient size and form and clear type, and gives the latest information from the Greek Papyri.

Books For Winter Reading

BOOKS OF FICTION

"Doctor Nye"—By Joseph C. Lincoln. D. Appleton Company, New York.

A small town is not usually regarded as a place for the setting of a story; but Mr. Lincoln finds that it is rich in characters. The story is pure and the interest is well sustained.

"Rip Van Winkle"—By Washington Irving. J. B. Lippincott Company.

This is one of the American classics, known and enjoyed by old and young. This is a tasty volume that in its make up must appeal to everyone.

"Fortune's Fool"—By Rafael Sabatini. $2.00. Houghton, Mifflin Company, New York.

This is a story of the Restoration period. Colonel Holles, late of Cromwell's army, despairing of finding employment, falls under the influence of the Duke of Buckingham. His struggle to redeem his reputation constitutes the story.

The following books are also from Little, Brown Company:

"Feet of Clay"—By Margaretta Tuttle.

"Mardee Gray's Choice"—By Dorothy Jarnagin.

"Feet of Clay" deals with the problem of securing spiritual content without giving up material comfort.

"Mardee Gray's Choice" deals with a charming young girl who has two sides to her nature—fun-loving and heedless on one side, and industrious and helpful to others on the other side. The scene is laid in a Southern town, and it has the charm of that life.

"North of 36"—By Emerson Hough. D. Appleton & Company, New York.

Emerson Hough is acknowledged to be the finest writer of cowboy life that we have.

Any one who has mingled, even slightly, in that life, will at once recognize the reality of this picture. It describes a young girl who has inherited a large cattle ranch, and a band of faithful cowboys, at the close of the Civil War, when there was no market for the cattle. They decide to drive their cattle to market, which was "North of 36." The story describes that trip.

"The Harekyle"—By Herbert Quick.

The scene of this story is laid in Iowa when it was first settled. It is the story of a poor boy living on a farm, who with a natural love of books rose from a herder of cows to be prominent in the community. It is a picture of country life with its loves and hates, just such as all readers enjoy.

"A Line a Day"—By Juliet Wilbur Tompkins.

This is a story of an old miser who planned to give his property to one of two granddaughters. In order to decide, he gives them a little book in which they are to put down each day whatever they have done that is important.

"Mr. Arnold"—A Romance of the Revolution. By Francis Lynde.

Benedict Arnold is the hero of this story, in which we have a view of him that history fails to give.

"Riley Fairy Tales," with Vawter Pictures—

Riley was the child's poet, and here he writes for them. The pixies dance, the goblins sit on the fence, and all nature becomes almost human.

These four books are from Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis, Indiana.

"Miss Minerva On the Old Plantation"—By Emma Speed Sampson.

The "Miss Minerva" Books are known to all who aim to give their children wholesome reading.

This book describes crowded, idle, yet busy days on the Mississippi river, in a land where children thrive and find much enjoyment in outdoor life.

The story is good, and the portrayal of the old-time manny of the South is true to life. Reilly and Lee Company, Chicago, are the publishers.

"Sylvia of the Stubbles"—By Jewell Bothwell Tull.

This story is by a new writer, who seems to have caught the popular fancy. One reader said, "Not since I read 'Little Women' have I been so fascinated and thrilled as with Sylvia."

"The Heart's Justice"—By Amanda Hall.

This is a story of a woman's love, showing that in life the love of a woman eventually finds its right object.

These two books above are from George H. Doran Company, New York.

From the Cosmopolitan Book Corporation we have received the following two books:

"The Alaskan"—By James Oliver Curwood.

"Boys and Girls of Bookland"—By Nora Archibald Smith.

"The Alaskan" is a novel of the North by one who has lived out of doors so constantly that he writes in out of doors terms. It is a fascinating story of our last frontier.

"The Boys and Girls of Bookland" is a masterpiece of the bookmaker's art, and it is illustrated by Jessie Wilcox Smith. The apparent object is to get children acquainted with some of the children who figure in books that are generally read by grown-ups.

The writer gives in simple language the story of some child, such as "Little Nell" in Dickens, or "Little Women" or "Tiny Tim." Then each story is faced by a large picture of the little child, in bright colors.

It is one of the best books for a child that we have seen for a long time.

"The Gaspards of Pine Croft"—By Ralph Connor.

All of our readers have no doubt read "Sky Pilot." They can recall their enjoyment of the book, and no doubt many of them will recall that no book from Ralph Connor's pen has ever equalled his first book.

Mr. Doran, the publisher, in a private note claims that the present volume will reinstate him in popular favor, as it is fully equal to "The Sky Pilot."

We make no attempt to outline the story, else we may spoil your pleasure when you read it.

Doran & Company, New York, are the publishers.

The Macaulay Company, New York, sends us

"Smoke of the 45"—By Harry Sinclair Drago.

The "45" is the weapon that figured in early days in the camps of the far West, when men lived fast if not long. In this book you breathe again the pungent aroma of the sage brush and fill your lungs with the pure air of Nevada.

"Timber Wolf"—By Jackson Gregory. Charles Scribner's Sons.

This is a readable book, but a very unreal one. Two supermen at different times wander about with a most attractive young lady; each one seems about to win her. There is much fighting, swearing and plotting.

It will do to pass away time, but we doubt whether the reader will be much benefited.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS

"The Wind Boy"—By Ethel Cook Elliot. Doubleday, Page & Company, New York.

This is a story of the age when fairies are real—and when children enjoy them. This is a book to cultivate the imaginative faculty in the child.

From the MacMillan Company, New York, we have the following four books:

"Every-Day Mysteries"—By Charles Greeley Abbott.

"Charlie and His Puffy Bingo"—

"Lady Green Satin and Her Maid, Rosette"—By Baroness Des Chesnez.

"Merrineq"—By William Bowen.

"Every-Day Mysteries" explains some of the commonplace mysteries of daily life, such as those we ought to know, yet do not—such as "How the sun makes plants grow," "What comes out of the spigot," "How a scientist saved half his coal pile."

The other three books are for children who love simple stories.

Parents are often at a loss what to get for small children. These three books will answer the purpose admirably.

"Winona's Dreams Come True"—By Margaret Widdemer. J. B. Lippincott Company, Publishers.

Miss Widdemer has already written a charming series of stories of Winona. Her young readers will be glad to hear from Winona again.

"The Filipino Twins"—By Lucy Fitch Perkins. $1.75. Houghton, Mifflin Company, New York.

Mrs. Perkins has written a Twin Series which has a great many youthful admirers. The scene of the story is near Manila. The father is a poor rice farmer and fisherman. Here we have the daily life of the people.

From Little, Brown Company, Boston, we have received the four following books:

"Castle Blair"—By Flora L. Shaw.

"The Eighth Wonder and Other Stories"—By A. S. M. Hutchinson.

"In Desert and Wilderness"—By Henryk Sienkiewicz.

"Jumping Into the Jungle"—By Grace Bliss Stewart.

"Castle Blair" is a story of a sweet girl and a faithful and loving dog. The book is described by John Ruskin as being lovely and good and true.

"The Eighth Wonder" is by Mr. Hutchinson, the author of "If Winter Comes." The book comprises eight stories, each varied in theme, yet has some of the author's characteristics.

"In Desert and Wilderness" is the story of a Polish boy of fourteen and a delicate English girl of eight, who are carried into the wilds of Africa. It is greatly praised as being one of the best stories the distinguished author has ever written.

"Jumping Into the Jungle" is a story of a tiny fairy about three inches tall who lived in the side of an old hollow stump. His four companions were Quixies.

"Children's Nature Story Sermons"—By Rev. Hugh T. Kerr, D.D. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

Nearly every minister knows that preaching to children, if wisely done, will bring more fruit, yet he also knows that it is one of the most difficult things in the world to do it rightly.

Dr. Kerr in this volume takes his texts from nature, and presents truth in such a way that the truth soon grips the imagination of the child and through the imagination it reaches the heart.

"Vinsi"—By the author of Heidi. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, Penn.

There are eight illustrations in color in this attractive book. It is a story of the Swiss Mountains, where a little boy develops his wonderful gifts as a musician, and at the same time it gives us a life picture of the young children of the Alps.

From George H. Doran Company, New York, we have a book of a much lighter character:

"The Fun Book"—By Edna Geister.

This is a collection of games, suitable for children's parties. Those who have to entertain a company of young people will find it invaluable.

From George H. Doran Company, New York:

"Ten Minutes by the Clock"—$1.50. By Alice D. Riley.

"Three to Make Ready"—By Louise Ayres Garnett. $1.50.

These are plays for the use of children, supplied by the Drama League of America.

In spite of the persistent demands for good plays that children can give, the supply is low. These are pure and elevating.

"Let's Play"—By Edna Geister. $1.25 net. Doran Company, New York.

Edna Geister is an Adviser and Director of Recreation, and therefore speaks from experience.

Play in children is really investing in future health, yet many mothers lack originality in suggesting games.

This book gives various kinds of games—indoors and outdoors—and those for special seasons, such as Christmas, Halloween, and Valentine's Day.

When mothers recall their efforts to amuse children and their frequent failures, they will welcome this book.

"The Children's Six Minutes"—By Bruce S. Wright. $1.25 net. George H. Doran & Company, New York.

These are brief and original sermonettes by one who loved children.

There is no greater proof of the progress of grace in the Church than the growing custom of preaching to the children, giving them a part of the service and thus identifying them with the Church.

"Some Boys and Girls In America"—By Margaret T. Applegarth.

This is one of a series of Home Mission Stories for Children. It describes in a most attractive way the boys and girls of America from the Indian boys down to those of various nations of Europe who have come over here. It will be an excellent book for children.

"Captain Pluck"—By Isla May Mullins.

An excellent book for boys. It is the story of a boy who by pluck won his way. It will not only fascinate, but also inspire your boy.

The L. C. Page Company, Boston, Mass., enjoys the distinction of publishing books for young people that are always pure and interesting. The following have been received from them:

"Mr. Do Something"—By Blanche E. Wade.

"Marjory's Discovery"—By Alice E. Allen.

"The Young Knight"—

"Chatterbox" for 1924—

"Little Jugoslav Cousin"—

"Antonia"—

"Mr. Do Something" is the story of some children who were wrecked on the great reef, "Don't know what to do," and while there "Mr. Do Something" came and took them on a trip and taught them the pleasures of doing something.

"The Marjory" Series is a popular one with readers of the Page Company's books. Girls especially find these books interesting and parents are always glad to place them in the hands of their children.

"The Young Knight" is a story of the Knights of Malta, when Michael Faversham fought valiantly with the Knights of Saint John against the Turks.

"The Chatterbox" is an old friend, who comes to the children each year, and is always full of readable stories that interest old and young.

"The Little Jugoslav Cousin" is one of a series that teach the customs of countries about which few know. Under the guise of a story much history is learned.

Henry Altemus Company, of Philadelphia, are the well-known publishers of books for children. Those who have small children to amuse will welcome the following:

"Peter Rabbit and Little White Rabbit"—

"I Don't Want to Wear Coats and Things"—

"I Don't Want to Go to Bed"—

"Three Little Kittens Who Lost Their Mittens"—

"Tom Thumb"—

These books will be a blessing to the parents of children of a certain age.

"American Boys' Book of Birds and Brownies of the Woods"—This book is from Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. It is by Dan Beard.

It is profusely illustrated and is filled with wood lore, such as boys delight in. Dan Beard is authority on animals and woodcraft.

"Alice's Adventures in Wonderland"—By Lewis Carroll. J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. $2.50.

This is the age when books for children surpass those of any previous age.

Among the attractive books "Alice in Wonderland" is a classic. This new edition is the most beautiful of any we have ever seen. Including all the original drawings by John Tenniel, it has been illustrated in color with specially designed lining papers and title pages by Gertrude Kay. This is a book for which any child will be grateful.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS

"Paul the Traveler and Missionary"—By Walter Albion Squires, B.D. Westminster Press, Philadelphia.

This is one of the volumes of religious education for Church schools having week-day sessions. The life of the great Apostle is given in simple language that must make a deep impression upon the mind of children.

"How to Read the Bible"—By Richard G. Moulton. Macmillan Company.

No book is oftener read than the Bible, yet no book is more carelessly and thoughtlessly read by many than the Bible.

Here we are taught how to read it so as to get more benefit. This book can be carried in your pocket. Let it be carefully studied.

"The Minister and His Parish"—Macmillan Company.

This book is intended as much for laymen as for ministers. It concerns the relation of the minister to his field and also the field to its minister. It discusses every phase of the work—the call of the preacher, the care of the manse, the payment of the salary, and the ethics of his profession.

From the Macmillan Company, New York, we have the following books:

"Conservatism, Radicalism and Scientific Method"—By A. B. Wolfe, Professor of Economics and Sociology, University of Ohio.

"Talks to High School Boys"—By John M. Holmes.

"One Man's Religion"—By Robert Quillen.

"Finding God"—By Russell H. Stafford.

Professor Wolfe in his book describes the three attitudes which must characterize the individual in whatever position he is placed.

Mr. Holmes has been a successful worker among school boys, and this little book gives us the secret of his success.

Mr. Robert Quillen gives his experience in defining religion, so that it is decidedly one man's religion, or, as he expresses it, it is really an autobiography.

Dr. Stafford belongs to the Liberal School of Theology. He dresses up Modernism most attractively, yet when one is through following him, he will say, "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him."

"Seeing the Best"—Sermons and Addresses—$1.50 net. By Rev. George W. McDaniel, D.D. Doran Company, New York.

Those who have read Dr. McDaniel's "The Churches of the New Testament," will welcome this volume of his sermons and addresses. They are full of suggestions for ministers and are fine specimens of the modern sermon.

From the Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va., we have the following in paper binding:

"Needed Counsel for New Christians"—25c.—By Samuel McPheeters Glasgow, Cecil Herbert Lang, Julia Lake Skinner.

"Elders That Rule Well"—5c.—By John I. Armstrong.

"The Office of the Deacon"—By Edward Mack, D.D. 5c.

These modest little books should be valuable in every church. The young Christians need instruction, and here it is given in plain language.

The brother suddenly thrust into the eldership can here get a new conception of his office, a careful study of which will make him magnify his office.

The deacon, too, who is often at a loss what his duties are, will here find them set forth clearly.

"Critical Hours in the Preacher's Life"—$1.25. By Ernest Clyde Wareing, D.D.

Only a minister knows what problems confront him and how often he reaches the crisis of his life, when he stands face to face with doubts and realizes that he has mistaken his calling. These questions are handled here with skill and delicacy.

"Christianity and Liberalism"—By Rev. J. Gresham Machen, D.D. Macmillan Company, New York.

Dr. Machen here discusses the great question now agitating the Christian work, the difference between modern "liberal" religion and historic Christianity. He writes from the conservative point of view. He is a tower of strength among the Conservatives.

From Westminster Press, Philadelphia, we have received the following:

"Pleasing God by Right Doing"—Primary Department, Second Year, Part I. 60c net.

"Stories of the Beginnings"—Junior Department, Part I. 60c net.

"New Testament Followers of Jesus"—$1.25 net. Intermediate Department, Second Year, Part I.

These three books are for use in Church schools having a week-day session, a Sunday session, and an expressional session.

Gradually the churches are beginning to realize that unless some systematic work is done in the way of Bible teaching, the next generation will be ignorant of the Word of God.

Schools are being organized by churches, whereby separate classes in the Bible can be taught in connection with the public schools, but by outsiders.

These books are prepared to meet this need.

"The Religion of the Primitives"—By Monsignor A. LeRoy. Macmillan Company.

The author's career as a missionary began in 1877. He says that in his experience with primitive people, all of his preconceived ideas about their religious ideas, lack of family life, and destitute of morality, underwent a radical change, and when he touched the depths of these human souls he found many astonishing points of comparison with the highest religions.

"The Sunday School at Work in Town and Country"—$1.50 net. William Mouzon Brabham. Doran Company, New York.

This is an indispensable guide book for Sunday School workers in small towns and country.

The author is the Superintendent of the Department of Sunday School Administration of the great Methodist Church, South. He tries to meet every problem connected with the work in country and small towns.

"God's Blessed Man"—By Paul Rader. $1.50 net. Doran Company, New York.

Paul Rader, the author, is President of the Christian and Missionary Alliance. He has had a remarkable ministry, and has a passion of appeal which moves whole sections. These sermons are readable, and they are moreover gripping, just such as a "shut-in" would enjoy.

Parallel Edition—The New Testament—By Rev. Jas. Moffatt, D.D. Doran Company, New York. Cloth, $2.50.

Here we have the King James Version and Dr. Moffatt's New Translation, placed side by side, so that you can compare passage with passage by a glance. Those who wish to keep up with modern scholarship as applied to the New Testament will find this valuable.

"The Return of Christendom"—Macmillan Company, New York.

This is a series of papers by a group of Churchmen, with an introduction by Bishop Gore. It is an attempt to show that the hope of the world, despite the weakness and inconsistency of Christianity, as practiced, lies in the Church of God.

"The Reality of Jesus"—By J. H. Chambers Macaulay. $1.75 net. Geo. H. Doran Company, New York.

This is an age of doubt. It spares no age and the more a man studies the more liable he is to doubt, unless his faith be founded upon a rock.

The "Mind of Christ" is that Rock, and to it the author would direct our study.

"Scientific Christian Thinking for Young People"—$1.25. By Howard Agnew Johnston, Ph.D., D.D.

This is an age of real doubt as well as the danger kind. The fundamentals are being questioned, and even the young have caught the fever. Of course men imagine that the old truths have been proven to be false, and that the Church is adrift on a sea of doubt. Dr. Johnston in a clear and charming manner deals with these doubts in a simple style, and by so doing he places the Church under great obligations.

"Bible Types of Modern Women"—First and Second Series—By Rev. W. Mackintosh Mackay, B.D. Each, $1.50 net. Doran Company, New York.

Here we have a series of vivid and original biographical addresses on Bible characters and their modern prototypes. The old friends, when dressed in modern words, take on new life, and stand out clearly in our eyes. The illustrations of the truths drive it home.

"Anger—Its Moral and Religious Significance"—$2.25. Macmillan Company, New York.

The author of this book is George M. Stratton, of the University of California. He is the professor of psychology, and deals with his subject from that standpoint. He analyzes the different religions, and seeks to find out what part in them anger and its treatment has played. It is a serious attempt to advance our scientific knowledge of conscience.

"Psychology's Challenge to Christianity"—By Rev. C. V. Crabb. Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va. $1.25 postpaid.

Those who are concerned about the attacks upon historic faith will find in this little volume an excellent defence. We are glad to see our ministers giving us the results of their study.

Tarbell's Teachers' Guide—

This book deals with the Sunday School Lessons for 1924. It is a volume of over 400 pages, and covers every question connected with Sunday School teaching. If a teacher can have only one book, let him buy this one.

"The Gist of the Lesson"—By Torrey.

This is along the same line, and can be carried in the vest pocket. It is decidedly "multum in parvo."

"Jesus Christ and the Modern Challenge"—By Frederick C. Spurr.

Here we have a clear defence of the old truths against Modern Criticism. It is an examination of the criticisms against the Incarnation, the Virgin Birth, the Credibility of Miracles and the Resurrection.

"The Golden Rule in Business"—By Arthur Nash.

All of us have heard of Nash, who put the Golden Rule into his business, and in four years increased his profits from $132,190 to $3,751,181.

This is a readable story, and one that is calculated to do good.

"The Gospel of Fellowship"—By Charles D. Williams, D.D., late Bishop of Michigan.

The idea is that the Gospel teaches fellowship along every line of human life, such as Between Races, Between Nations, In Industry, In Churches, and The Fellowship of the Mystery.

These five books given above are all from the Publishing House of Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

"What Are You Worth?"—By Rev. Chas. L. Goodell, D.D.

These are college talks by this great national evangelistic leader. They abound in clear statements and pungent aphorisms.

From the Macmillan Company, New York, we have a rare book called "The Bible Story," by the Rev. James Baikie, F. R. A. S., containing 50 full page illustrations in color by J. H. Hartley. The price is $5.00.

It is a Bible story for grown people, written in clear style and full of suggestions. It is not only written in a clear and attractive style, but it is a model in mechanical work.

"More Jungle Tales"—By Howard Anderson Musser.

This is an account of an American athlete who after winning fame on track and gridiron, went as a missionary to India, where he labored. Here we have thrilling adventures with wild beasts, reptiles and wild men.

"The Making and Meaning of the New Testament"—By James H. Snowden.

This is a much-needed book, written by one who not only shows scholarship of a high order, but also the power of making deep subjects plain. He shows us how the New Testament was written.

"Snowden's Sunday School Lessons"—By Dr. James Snowden.

These are practical expositions of the International Sunday School Lessons for 1924.

We have used the same series for 1923 and have found them good.

Both books are from the Macmillan Company, New York.

"Our Rational Faith"—By Rev. Richard D. Dodge. Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va.

We have here six lectures by one of our own men, the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Logan, W. Va. Mr. Dodge discusses such subjects as the Deity of Christ, the Incarnation, Miracles, etc., in a clear way.

"The Minister and His Greek New Testament"—By Rev. A. T. Robertson. Doran Company, New York. $1.75.

Shakespeare tells us that we can find sermons in stones. Dr. Robertson in this charming book tells the young preacher how he can find sermons in the Greek prepositions, in Greek tenses, in the Greek article, in the Greek syntax. No minister who wishes to grow should neglect his Greek Testament.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS

"Henry Ford, the Man and His Motives"—By W. L. Stidger. Doran Company.

Mr. Ford is not only the richest man in the world, but he is the most widely known. He is the least understood, according to this book. We have a new conception of this remarkable man, and we wish that every one would read this account of what he has done and what he proposes to do.

"The Problems of Armaments"—By Arthur Guy Enock. Macmillan Company.

This is a strongly written anti-war book, in which we see the enormous outlay of men and money by war. It will be a valuable help for the anti-war campaign which will eventually demand the attention of men.

"A Child's Story of American Literature"—Macmillan Company.

This is said to be a book for children from 12 to 15 years of age. We have read it with pleasure and real profit, and we have passed that age limit.

It gives a running history of American literature in a charming way.

"A Study of the Junior Child"—

"Parent Training in the Church School"—

Both of these books are from the Westminster Press, Philadelphia, and are designed to answer the needs of teachers dealing with young minds.

"Pioneer Women of the Presbyterian Church, U. S."—

Such is the title of a very attractive book, just issued by our Richmond Committee.

Mrs. Mary D. Irvine and Miss Alice Eastwood are the authors, and they have reason to be proud of their effort.

It gives the history of those women who led the way in the great woman's work in our Church which has borne such abundant fruit.

It is in two parts. Part first deals with the opening of the door to service, in which is traced woman's work in the home, which in time reached to church erection and church furnishing. Then came work by them among the Negroes and Indians, which in turn was followed by work for Foreign Missions and Bible Societies.

In course of time came the Auxiliary movement, with its branches.

The second part is the history of woman's work in each Synod.

Altogether it is a book that the women should have, and it will help the men also to read it, as it will by contrast spur them to greater activity along similar lines.

The price is $1.50, and it can be secured by ordering from the Richmond Committee of Publication.

AN OPEN LETTER

Dear Superintendents and Secretaries of Young People's Work:

Many months of earnest study and work have been put on the Vocational Exercise for use at the Christmas Season in 1923.

1. If you decide to use the pageant "The Day-spring From on High," it is not necessary that those who take part commit anything to memory. The one who, behind the bank of flowers or of trees, reads the parts should speak distinctly and so everyone can hear.

2. Those who are to take part should carefully rehearse their parts all of which is carefully explained in the exercise.

3. You will find in the back another exercise in which parts may be learned by the children. Doubtless some will combine the pageant and the recitations.

4. We have gone to considerable expense to secure the best spiritual Christmas carols that bring the message, not about bells and Santa Claus and Christmas trees, but about God's great gift of His Son. We are sending you one copy of this free of cost. If you desire other copies we can supply them at 25 cents each or $2.50 a dozen. These, of course, should be preserved for permanent use of the Sunday School and Church and will not have to be bought from year to year.

5. If you are going to use the exercise please order at once a sufficient number for use of those taking part. We earnestly hope you will also order immediately the number of Christmas carols you will need, accompanying order with the remittance to cover cost of same.

Thanking you for the help you have given us in the past and with kindest regards, I am

Very cordially yours,

Henry H. Sweets.

(We thank Dr. Sweets for a copy of "Christmas Carols," and it gives us great pleasure to commend it as the very best collection we have ever seen for use in "Church, Sunday School or community gatherings" at the Christmas season. There are 31 selections, all of the highest order, and for those having copies of "Christmas Carols," the problem of "What Shall we Sing at Our Christmas Service," is solved.—Ed.)

SECRETARIES OF FOREIGN MISSIONS IN THE LOCAL AUXILIARIES

December—Prepare for Foreign Mission, Adult and Young People's Study Classes.

January—Organize Foreign Mission Study Classes. Auxiliary Calendar—"The White Fields of Japan" is the suggested study book. Watch the Auxiliary Column next week for helpful hints and list of leaflets and books for parallel reading.

NOW READY!

Pioneer Women of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, edited by Mrs. M. D. Irvine. Beautifully bound in art cloth and stamped in white leaf. Price, $1.50 postpaid.

This new book, written by women, especially for women and others interested in women's work in the church, carries the intensely interesting story of the beginnings and later development of organized woman's work in the Southern Presbyterian Church.

It is arranged by Synodicals—a chapter for each one. These are written by recognized leaders in the Synods. The book is packed with interesting facts and thus becomes an authentic history of this very important branch of church work. It is a significant and valuable addition to the literature of our church.

Contains half-tone portraits of many of the pioneer women leaders.

Every Presbyterian woman should own a copy. Send in your order today.

THE CHURCH CALENDAR OF PRAYER FOR 1924

Handsomely printed on velvet-finished stock, with art covers, the Calendar makes an ideal Christmas gift or New Year's remembrance.

A beautiful three-colored presentation card will be sent with all copies ordered before Christmas, 1923. Copies mailed to separate addresses if desired. Secretaries of Literature should canvass the congregation for orders. Price, 15 cents per copy or $1.50 per dozen. Order from Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va.—Texarkana, Ark.—Tex.

NORTH CAROLINA AUXILIARIES ATTENTION!

Those who were at Montreat last summer recall, with great pleasure, I am sure, the splendid pageant on Mexico, entitled "The Healing Light," which was given during the Summer School of Missions.

The beautiful native costumes for this pageant were prepared by the Mexican women of Zitacuaro, Mexico, under the direction of Mrs. Hervey Ross. They made these costumes as an act of service, and are deeply anxious that they should be used as widely as possible in presenting the cause of Mexico to our Church.

The costumes are now in North Carolina, and we can have them used there until the first of March.

Any Auxiliary that wishes to present this pageant please write promptly to the Auxiliary office, and we will arrange for you to have the use of the costumes for simply the cost of conveying them from one place to the other. First come will be first served! So if you wish to give this pageant any time in the next three months, please let us hear from you at once.

THE WOMEN MEMBERS OF THE COMMITTEE OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION AND MINISTERIAL RELIEF

(Henry H. Sweets, Secretary)

In compliance with the direction of the General Assembly the Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief on June 15, 1923, unanimously elected three women as members of the Executive Committee: Miss Alice L. Eastwood, Mrs. J. Galt Fulton and Mrs. R. M. Pegram. Fortunately all accepted the membership tendered them.

Miss Eastwood is a member of the Crescent Hill Church in the Presbytery of Louisville. She has been one of the most active leaders in the Louisville Presbyterial and the Kentucky Synodical. She became secretary of the "Louisville Presbyterial Union" which was formed more than 20 years ago. She continued as secretary of the union until the day of the organization of the Presbyterial Auxiliary. For nine years she served as secretary of the Kentucky Synodical giving up that office to become President of the Louisville Presbyterial for two years. Mrs. Mary D. Irvine and Miss Eastwood together compiled the history of the Woman's Work in the General Assembly, "Pioneer Women." She is one of the most efficient women in the entire Church and her ability, training and experience will be of great help to the Executive Committee.

Mrs. J. Galt Fulton is a member of the Anchorage Church in the Presbytery of Louisville. She is one of the outstanding, efficient leaders in the work of the Presbyterial and the Synodical. At the organization of the Louisville Presbyterial Auxiliary she was made Secretary of the organization, continuing in this office for eleven years. For the past two years she has been secretary of the Auxiliary of the Synod of Kentucky. Mrs. R. M. Pegram was reared in the Highland Presbyterian Church of Louisville. Her husband is now pastor of the James Lees Memorial Church of this city. She has been thoroughly trained in all the work of the Church. She served as secretary of the Macon (Ga.) Presbyterial for two years and was elected president of the same in 1919. She is Secretary of Young People's Work of the Louisville Presbyterial at this time. For several years she labored efficiently and successfully with her husband in the mountains of Kentucky.

These devoted and efficient women have entered into the work of the committee with energy and enthusiasm. They have taken their places on the subcommittees and are giving large blocks of their time to the consideration of the many vital interests that are entrusted to the committee.

WHAT OTHER WOMEN ARE DOING

Newport News, Va. — Mrs. E. L. Russell, Bible teacher and field worker of Assembly's Training School, gave two courses in Bible study in Newport News, Va., during one week in November. These classes were held in the First Presbyterian Church there under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary of that organization, and were open to the public. There was a large and deeply interested membership at each session.

The study periods were divided into two series of talks: "Steps in Christian Life," presented in the afternoons from 3 to 4 o'clock, and "The Person and Work of Christ," studied in the evening from 7:30 to 8:30 o'clock. The subjects were followed by Bible students and teachers of varied age and degree of learning, for in them all was an appeal to old and young, the learned and the unlearned. The opening talk was given on Sunday afternoon especially for women and girls and dealt with the story of Ruth; the second, on Sunday evening before the Young People's Society, dealt with "Four Great Things."

Mrs. Russell is a thorough Bible student of great personal charm and deep sincerity. She has conducted similar classes in every large city of the Southern States. Her services are in such great demand this year that her engagements run continuously up into the late spring. The schedule of classes at Newport News follows:

Afternoon classes, 3 to 4 o'clock: "Steps in the Christian Life."

November 19—"The Birth of a Soul."
November 20—"The Walk of a Christian."
November 21—Christian Growth. Bible Study.
November 22—Christian Growth. Prayer.
November 23—Christian Growth. Personal Work.
Evening Classes, 7:30 to 8:30 o'clock: "The Person and Work of Christ."
November 19—The Character of Christ.
November 20—The Names of Christ.
November 21—The Cross of Christ.
November 22—The Crowns of Christ.
November 23—The Kingdom of Christ.

Central Church, Washington, D. C.—The Woman's Auxiliary feels that its members and friends enjoyed a rare spiritual privilege the past month in a course of Bible study conducted by Mrs. Margaret T. Russell of the Assembly's Training School. The meetings were well attended each evening, at 8 o'clock, October 15th to 19th, inclusive. The subject of the series was "Steps in the Christian Life." Truths, old and precious gained luster and new beauty as the Word of God was searched with this consecrated leader.

The Church of the Pilgrims united with Central in this Bible Institute, Mrs. Russell conducting the study there each afternoon. M. M.

Charlotte, N. C.—The ladies of Caldwell Memorial Church are rejoicing in a new and attractively furnished place of meeting. The calendar for December 2d says:

"Monday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock the Woman's Auxiliary meets in the new ladies' room in the Sunday School annex. The new furniture has been installed and is most attractive. We congratulate the ladies and wish them every joy and added fruitfulness in service in their new quarters."

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Montreat Church, instead of holding a meeting each day during the Home Mission Week, decided to have an all-day meeting with an intensive study of the whole field. Through the courtesy of Mrs. Hamilton, this meeting was held at Hickory Lodge on November 15th.

Large numbers of visitors and members were present and the latest literature on the Home Mission activities of our Church had been furnished by the Atlanta office. This was a great help in developing the program. During the forenoon the work among the mountaineers, the Indians, the foreigners, the Mexicans and the negroes was ably handled, respectively by Mrs. Hadley, Mrs. Dorsey, Mrs. George Hudson, Mrs. Beckwith and Mrs. Abernathy. In a most entertaining manner Mrs. Belle Cook spoke on the orphanages of the Church. Singing of hymns interspersed the program.

At one o'clock a delicious lunch was served in the spacious dining room, each lady contributing some dainty dish to the menu. In the afternoon one of the visitors, Mrs. U. S. Bird, of Tampa, Fla., gave a short and inspiring talk on the work of our Church among the Cubans.

An address was then delivered by Mrs. R. B. Willis on the principles of real Home Missions as applied to the problems of every-day social life, a subject with many practical suggestions. This delightful and helpful talk completed a most interesting program. A generous amount for Home Missions was collected, being contributed by those present and some interested absentees.

Ethel M. Cook, President.

Group Conference Number Two, of Albemarle Presbyterial Auxiliary, met at Pinetops, N. C., November 7, 1923. Mrs. H. L. Hicks, of Rocky Mount, leader. The conference was opened at 10:30 a. m., with devotional exercises by Rev. Cook Campbell, pastor of Pinetops Church. He gave a most helpful and inspiring talk on Isaiah 62:10 (last clause): "Lift up the Standard for the People," telling in how many ways we could lift up the standard; purity in the home life, Church and State. Oh, that we all might profit by his excellent advice! Pinetops is fortunate in having such a pastor.

Next on the program was "The Purpose of the Conference," by Mrs. S. N. Harrell, of Tarboro, president of Albemarle Presbyterial. One advantage of the group conference being that the attendance is not limited, as is that of the Presbyterial, and all local Auxiliaries may present their problems for discussion.

We were privileged to have with us Mrs. M. Rena Butler, of Goldsboro, who was for years a missionary to Brazil. She told of the growth of the work and stressed the fact that we need younger missionaries on the field because most of the missionaries in Brazil have grown old in the work and their places must soon be filled or stations will have to be closed. We all enjoyed having this consecrated returned missionary give us this helpful address on Brazil.

Mrs. J. M. Baker, of Tarboro, conducted a 30-minute Bible Talk, on our relation to Christ as members of His Body.

Next a duet was sung by Mrs. H. L. Rose and Mrs. C. C. Ward, of Rocky Mount: "In Heavenly Love Abiding."

An offering was taken for the expense of the conference. This concluded the program for the morning and all were invited to the manse to partake of a most delightful luncheon served by the ladies of the church.

The afternoon devotional was led by Mrs. S. N. Harrell, president. "Our Standard of Excellence" was most ably and clearly explained by Mrs. Frank Lea, of Wilson. She said that few Auxiliaries would be able to reach this standard but it is a goal for which all may strive and one devoutly to be desired.

Reports from Presbyterial Secretaries of General Assembly's Causes were: An encouraging report from Mrs. W. E. Fenner, of Rocky Mount, secretary of Orphanage Work and a helpful report from Mrs. Davis Eagles, of Pinetops, secretary of Literature. Other Presbyterial secretaries being unable to attend were substituted for by secretaries of local Auxiliaries.

A question box was used to discuss problems for solution. This closed this well planned program by the Presbyterial president, Mrs. Harrell and the group leader, Mrs. Hicks, which was presented to about 78 delegates and several visitors, making about 82 in all; representing Wilson, Tarboro, Farmville, Fountain, Pinetops, Bethlehem, Morton and Rocky Mount First and Second Churches. This was the first meeting of the group and much interest and enthusiasm were manifested. The efficient manner in which the program was conducted by the leader and the delightful hospitality of the Pinetops women made the meeting one to sink deep in the hearts and linger in the memories of all present.

THE OUTREACH OF THE EARLY CHURCH

Lesson: Acts 8:1-15:35. Printed Text: Acts 8:4-8, 14-17, 25

GOLDEN TEXT—"Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."—Acts 1:8.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

4 Therefore they that were scattered abroad, went every where preaching the word.

5 Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them.

6 And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did.

7 For unclean spirits, crying with loud voice, came out of many that were possessed with them: and many taken with palsies, and that were lame, were healed.

8 And there was great joy in that city.

14 Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John:

15 Who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost:

16 (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.)

17 Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.

25 And they, when they had testified and preached the word of the Lord, returned to Jerusalem, and preached the gospel in many villages of the Samaritans.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 66. What is the reason annexed to the fifth commandment?

A. The reason annexed to the fifth commandment, is a promise of long life and prosperity (as far as it shall serve for God's glory and their own good) to all such as keep this commandment.

The Gospel of Christ, like the light and the air, was meant for mankind. The light and the air were designed to give life and blessings to the whole world, and their influence is not confined to any one land or region or branch of the race. They are adapted to every part of the world, and to the needs of every human being. They have an expensive, quickening and illuminating power throughout the earth. Thus it is with the Christian faith made active by the Holy Ghost. It had stirred Jerusalem and Judea, and our lesson shows how it won success and victory in Samaria. We will attend to Persecution Extending the Gospel; Philip Preaching in Samaria; Converts Baptized by the Holy Ghost; Peter and John Preaching to the Samaritans.

I. Persecution Extending the Gospel

Assaults on Christians were designed to check the Gospel and to extirpate its teachings and adherents. But so far from doing this it scattered its advocates, widened its sphere, and multiplied its disciples. They who were driven from Jerusalem "went everywhere preaching the Word." It was so at the time mentioned in our lesson and afterwards in "the persecution that arose about Stephen." Those who preached or told of Jesus' salvation were not apostles, nor many of them church officers, but private Christians. Among those who went down to Samaria was Philip the evangelist. Originally he was one of the seven deacons at Jerusalem, but afterwards became a preacher of the Gospel. He preached "Christ, the Word and Salvation by Him, to the Samaritans." His preaching was confirmed by miraculous power over physical defects and diseases and evil spirits. The people gave heed to his tidings. Many were converted and "there was great joy in that city." This joy was imparted by the healing given and the salvation secured.

II. Philip Preaching in Samaria

He did not preach on secular subjects or human wisdom. He preached religious truths. He published the Divine Word, Christ crucified for man's sin, and the vital truths of the Gospel salvation. He had the co-operation of the Holy Ghost, not only in outward visible miracles, but in the spiritual natures of his hearers, "turning them from darkness unto light and from the power of sin and Satan unto God." All effective preaching must deal with the essential truths of the Gospel and must be enforced by the power of the Holy Ghost if saving results are produced.

III. Converts Baptized With the Holy Ghost

We are not to think that the Holy Spirit had not visited their hearts or spiritual natures at all if they were true converts. The natural man is "dead in trespasses and sins" and the first desire and inclination to become a disciple of Christ must come from the Holy Spirit. "Except a man be born of the Spirit he can neither see nor enter the kingdom of God," and "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." But they had not received the quickening power of the Spirit for testimony and labor nor His miraculous gifts. That they might have these the Apostles Peter and John were sent to them from Jerusalem. They confirmed the new converts in the faith and by prayer obtained for them those gifts of the Holy Ghost that made them active disciples and miracle workers.

IV. Peter and John Preaching to the Samaritans

These apostles not only did Philip's labors in Samaria, but on their way to Jerusalem, when returning, preached the Gospel to villages of the Samaritans. They availed themselves of all opportunities for publishing Gospel tidings and testing their saving power. Imitating their example, heralds of the cross should do likewise.

S., Dec. 15—The Love Chapter: I Cor. 13:1-13.

Sun., Dec. 16—Topic: Bible Passages We Should Memorize, and Why. (Each Endeavorer to memorize one passage.)

David tells us that the Word of God is more to be desired than gold, yea, than much fine gold. Solomon says the wisdom of God is worth more than jewels, and is like chains of gold around our neck, a beautiful ornament which we should be proud to wear. It is our nature to admire jewels and to take good care of them. Many people keep jewels in a beautiful box because they think such highly prized articles should be well cared for. God has provided a box for His words, and He bids us lay up the treasures of His Word in that box. The lesson we have today is about that box, which is our memory, or the power of our mind to store away words and scenes that we may recall them at a later time.

Memory—A Power of the Mind

The mind is the faculty of the soul which thinks. It has several powers, or things it can do. The mind can receive the sights and sounds and other impressions from the outside world. It can reason about all these things, and our thoughts are always busy dwelling on what we have seen and heard. Our imagination is a power of the mind which paints pictures which we see in fancy. The memory is the power to recall what has happened. It stores away all the things it sees and hears, remembers them and recalls them as they need to be thought of again.

Memory Should Be Cultivated

Like all the powers of the mind, the memory can be educated and trained. As it is one of the first mental powers that is active in childhood, a boy and girl can develop the memory by cultivation and use. The important thing in a good memory is to learn to listen and look right when a thing is brought to our attention. Then we should repeat over and over the verse or story we wish to memorize. This repetition is like running a deep furrow with a plow, every time you say it, it goes deeper and deeper in the mind. Then we should often review what we have learned, lest we forget it.

Advantages of Memorizing the Bible

The Bible is the book of life. It knows our hearts. It knows the sins that get rooted in them. It tells of the sure punishment for sins of all kinds. The Bible gives us the remedy for sins, and how they can be driven from our souls. The Bible knows the paths of virtue and happiness. It promises victory over sin and temptation. It can prepare us for trials, and when trouble comes and temptation assails us, if the Word of God is stored in our memories, we shall conquer them. We recall how Jesus quoted the Scriptures to the devil when He was tempted on the mountain. Like Him, we should get our strength from God's Word.

Memorizing the Bible enriches the mind by putting the finest thoughts in them, the thoughts of God. This also enriches our number of words, so that we may express our thoughts intelligently. Nearly all the great writers of the world acknowledge their debt to the Bible for the power to write fine stories and essays. Ruskin says his mother made him memorize some Bible verse every day. Sir Walter Scott loved the Bible. And professors and lawyers, and many other men who have to speak and write, say that no one's education is complete without much memorizing of the Bible.

Bible Passages to Memorize

There are many parts of the Bible every Christian ought to know from childhood; for the things we learn as children are never forgotten. One of the important parts of every Christian Endeavor program should be quotations of Scriptures. We should memorize many of the Psalms, such as Psalms 1, 8, 15, 19, 23, 24, 32, 34, 51, 84, 100 and 103. We should memorize the Ten Commandments, the Sermon on the Mount, Romans 12, John 14 and 15, and there are many separate verses in different parts of the Bible which we should store away in our minds. The daily Bible readings given above are passages we should learn. With these precious words carefully put deep down in the storehouse of memory, we should be well prepared for the trials and duties of the Christian life.

FROM THE KENTUCKY FIELD

The Presbyterian Society at Springdale was organized last December. Among the "extra" things they have done they report having organized a Junior Society of 15 members, installed a radio set for an old man who is a shut-in, and gave money for the relief of the Japanese after the earthquake.

The Seventh Street Presbyterian Society, Louisville, reporting their many lines of work, say: "We have only a storeroom for a church building, but we can get the people there just the same." They sent a truck of 16 members to the recent district convention at LaGrange, and for three times in succession have taken the City Union banner for attendance at union meetings—100 per cent of them were there.

The Fifteenth District cabinet held a business meeting at Greenville early in November. The Field Secretary was present and helped them plan work for the winter, and to make arrangements by which societies are to be organized in several counties where there are none now.

The Eighth District held its annual convention in LaGrange. The first session was in charge of the Missionary Committee which demonstrated a model meeting of that committee after which a missionary pageant was given. This was followed by an address by Dr. J. S. Nisbet, of Korea. The second session was in the hands of the Social Committee. Following an address on "Jesus and the Social Life," by Rev. George V. Moore, Superintendent of the Kentucky Christian Bible School Association, a model meeting of the social committee was given, after which the delegates went to the High School gymnasium where a social was held under the direction of Miss Emma Deitsch, chairman of the Social Committee of the Louisville City Union. The third session demonstrated the work of the Lookout Committee under the direction of Rev. Edwin Rock, former vice-president of the State Union. At this session the Field Secretary presented the Friends of Christ Campaign. An address was delivered by Rev. R. L. St. Clair, "Proving our Friendship." At the roll call of societies each society in the district reported the best work done during the year. The officers for the new year were installed by State President J. G. Wilkes assisted by the Field Secretary.

The Third Presbyterian society of Louisville raises annually $70 for the support of two native missionaries on the Congo, sent a special offering to Beechwood Seminary, gave a Community musicale on the lawn of the church, gave a tacky party to the old folks of the church, make regular visits to the City Hospital, Home for Incurables, and the Cook Benevolent Home. Attends all rallies, supports City, District, State and National work.

The Fourteenth District held its fourth annual convention at Franklin, November 10-11, with a large number of delegates in attendance and a fine district representation. During the past year and a half the societies in this district have almost doubled. Every society has at least one subscription to the Christian Endeavor World, and one of its Junior societies has a Junior World in every home. Two delegates represented the district at the National Convention in Des Moines last July. Among the speakers who came for the convention were Dr. Charles Welch, Louisville, Dr. W. A. Eisenhart, Bowling Green, and Prof. Gordon Wilson, of the Western Kentucky State Normal School. On Saturday evening the annual banquet was held, the outgoing president, Mr. Alvis Temple, presiding. Impromptu speeches and convention songs were features of the program at the banquet. Each of the outgoing officers has distinguished himself or her-

IMPORTANT

In accordance with the recent action of Synod concerning our colleges for women, a conference is called to meet in the parlors of the First Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, at 2 p. m., Wednesday, December 12th, to continue in session until probably noon of Thursday.

The following representatives are invited: All members of Synod's School and College Committee; representatives of each educational institution; the president of each Presbytery; members of a special committee appointed by the Synodical. This meeting is of great importance.

Synod's Committee of Schools and Colleges,
W. M. Hunter, Chairman.

NORTH CAROLINA

Charlotte, Westminster Church—From the calendar of December 2d we take the following items:

"The Westminster Men's Club has been looking forward for some time to an opportunity to entertain the ladies of the congregation. The time is now set for Friday evening, December 14th, at 7 o'clock. Men and women, hold this date. Particulars next week.

"Despite the weather and other attractions we had the church auditorium nearly half-full, and an offering of more than $250 on Thanksgiving Day."

Eagle Springs Church is but newly organized in Fayetteville Presbytery. We have as yet no building but hold our services in the large auditorium of the Public School. But plans are laid and funds being secured to erect an adequate church building. Some seemed to think we were new-comers, but on searching the records of Bensalem Church, it was found that Bensalem pastors had been preaching here as a regular appointment since 1794, beginning with Rev. John Cadie, and ending so far with the present pastor. This being the case it was deemed high time to build a church home.

Rev. Wm. Black, Synod's evangelist conducted a series of meetings, November 11th to 18th inclusive. There were 37 professions of faith with 10 preferring the Presbyterian Church. There were two accessions by letter. The meetings were very well attended and great good resulted. We feel that God added His blessing to the work of Mr. Black and Mr. Burr in setting in motion forces for good, and laying foundations for immediate building, the value of which cannot be estimated.

W. L. Wilson, Pastor.

Rutherfordton—Rev. Leonard Gill, general evangelist of the Presbyterian Synod of North Carolina, who began a series of revival services at the Presbyterian Church here on Sunday morning, November 18th, closed a very successful meeting Sunday night, the 25th, with gratifying results.

Prior to the revival here, Brother Gill conducted a week's revival service at Spindale, a mill town near Rutherfordton, but no Presbyterian Church. The visible results of these meetings were, 19 additions to the Presbyterian Church here, and others to unite with the other churches of the town.

Besides the pastor, Rev. J. C. Grier, Brother Gill had as his associate worker, Rev. H. W. Roth, of Salisbury, who lead the song-services during the meetings. Mr. Roth was presented with $50 as a token of appreciation of the congregation for his services here.

The free-will offerings from Spindale and Rutherfordton, which amounted to $209 were received by Brother Gill to aid and assist in the Synodical Home self by splendid service, and each gives his work into the hands of another who has proven worthy of the task. On Sunday evening the Field Secretary presented the Friends of Christ campaign and conducted the installation services. The convention next year will be held at Smith's Grove.

The South Carolina State C. E. Union officers are doing their share in helping Uncle Sam sell his postage stamps. These busy officers wrote approximately 145 letters during the month of October. In addition, the District Union officers are busy scribes. The interests of the young people are being promoted by the written and spoken word with much zeal.

Mission work in North Carolina, in carrying the Gospel to the unchurched in this state.

The closing service was held at the First Baptist Church here, Sunday night, in order to accommodate the large crowds attending these services.

Robert G. Howard.

SOUTH CAROLINA

The Second Church of Greenville has contributed $582.56 to the Thornwell Orphanage at Clinton during the month of November, being $71.00 offering on Thanksgiving Day; $146.56 from the Sunday School and $365.00 from the Woman's Auxiliary for the Louise Mayes Memorial Baby Cottage. Mrs. Mayes was, for years, a member of the Second Church.

Bishopville—Our Church greatly enjoyed a very strong presentation of the work in Japan by Rev. J. E. Couser, of Okazaki. He is at home on sick furlough and is not doing general work yet, but consented to speak in his own church. He gave a wonderful account of the work, its encouragements and discouragements.

The members of the Bishopville Church recently presented their pastor with an auto, kindly giving him his choice of any standard touring car.

Harmony Presbytery met in stated session at Kingstree, S. C., October 31, 1923. Present: 17 ministers and 26 elders.

Elder W. C. Davis was elected moderator.

Rev. J. S. Croly was received from the Presbytery of Wilmington. C. D. Brearly was licensed as a probationer for the ministry.

Calls were presented from Bethel and Beulah churches for Rev. J. S. Croly and commission appointed to install him in these churches as pastor.

Calls were presented for the pastoral services of Rev. Jas. Waite, of the Presbytery of Congaree from Summerton, Jordan, and Linwood churches. Action had to be deferred awaiting a transfer of Mr. Waite to this Presbytery.

Rev. L. L. Legters was given permission to labor out of our bounds until otherwise ordered.

Presbytery adjourned, appointed an ad interim committee to report next spring on the proposed amendments to the Book of Church Order. Next meeting at Manning, S. C., April 15, 1924.

A call meeting held November 19th at Sumter, S. C., dissolved the pastoral relation of D. P. Marion, D.D., and Sumter Church, and dismissed him to Central Presbytery, Mississippi.

APPALACHIA

Montreat celebrated Armistice Day by an appropriate service in the Anderson auditorium which had been beautifully decorated with autumn leaves and large American flags. The exercises were opened by the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner," and "America the Beautiful." The reading of two war poems, "What Did you See Out There, My Lad?" and "In Flanders' Fields," was followed by a solo, "There Is No Death." Mr. A. R. Bauman, Secretary of the Montreat Association, then introduced the speaker, Rev. N. H. Armistead, of Madison, Tenn., who was a chaplain in the World War. Mr. Armistead made an impressive address, emphasizing lessons learned from the war and lessons yet to be learned by individuals and by the nation. After the singing of Kipling's "Lest We Forget," by the choral society of the Montreat Church, under the direction of Mr. Crosby Adams, Mr. Armistead pronounced the benediction.

Montreat Normal School has been favored in having Miss Leah W. Watters, of Lockport, N. Y., who has given very instructive and entertaining lectures on noted historic cities. Miss Watters has traveled extensively in Europe. On November 17th and 24th she lectured on Edinburgh and Canterbury, illustrating the talks with excellent lantern slides. Her descriptions with history interwoven made her lectures most delightful and realistic pictures. On the evening of November 25th, Miss Watters gave a very helpful and inspirational talk to the Senior Christian Endeavor Society, based on I Cor. 3:16, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?"

The student body of the Montreat Normal has voted to observe December 2d as International Golden Rule Sunday, the difference in the cost of their dinner on that day and the cost of their usual Sunday dinner to be contributed to the support of the more than 50,000 children who are being cared for in the Near East Relief Orphanage. On that date the Senior Christian Endeavor Society will make a free-will offering for the same cause.

Recently, 45 young people, students at the Normal School signed the Christian Endeavor active member's pledge.

ALABAMA

Mobile Presbytery met in the Camden Church, November 19, 1923. Present, ten ministers and nine ruling elders; officers, Rev. H. V. Lofquist, moderator; Hon. E. G. Rickerby, temporary clerk.

Received: Rev. W. C. Tenney, from Louisville Presbytery and Rev. W. G. Greenlees from Winchester Presbytery.

Overture: Asking the General Assembly to reconsider and rescind the action of last Assembly placing women on the Executive Committees.

Presbyterial Sermon: Rev. Dunbar H. Ogden, D.D., preached on "Justification, Adoption and sanctification." The next Presbyterial sermon is to be preached by Rev. G. Hunter Norwood on "Vicarious Atonement," with Rev. W. G. Greenlees as alternate.

Memorial: For Rev. David Andrew Planck, D.D.,

the moderator and for more than nine years the stated clerk of Mobile Presbytery.

Home Missions: Every field supplied by an ordained minister. We have only two vacant churches Loxley and Irvington. Loxley has public worship once a month conducted by the superintendent of Home Missions and the Irvington Church is near to leaving our denomination because of the formation of a community church.

Evangelism: Sixteen evangelistic meetings were held since the spring meeting of Presbytery. Visible results were 57 additions by letter and 68 by profession.

Commissioners to the General Assembly: Rev. I. H. Ogden, D.D., and ruling elder, W. S. Irby, Jr., of Peach Tree Church. Alternates, Rev. G. Hunter Norwood and ruling elder, Palmer Gaillard, of Central Church, Mobile.

The attendance at this meeting was larger than has been at any meeting in ten years.

FLORIDA

Daytona Beach—The congregational attendance of this young church has shown substantial increase since the opening of the tourist season. At a recent congregational meeting Mr. A. R. Haile was elected deacon. Mr. Haile was formerly a deacon of the Palatka church and enters upon his duties as an experienced officer. A Woman's Auxiliary has been organized with two circles. Rev. T. Peyton Walton, superintendent of Home Missions, announces that Rev. E. B. Patterson, D.D., of Louisville, Ky., has been secured as resident pastor to begin his work December 2d. During the fall while a search for a pastor was in progress Rev. Rollin T. Chafer, secretary of the Southfield Bible Conference Association, has served as pulpit supply.

Ybor City—The Synod of Florida at its meeting in Tallahassee, October 16th-18th, endorsed this mission work among the foreigners and recommended it to the liberality of the churches and of individuals. The Ybor City Committee has approved an enlarged budget for equipment and needed workers, besides the amount that can be raised in St. Johns Presbytery, there is needed more than $1,500 that we hope to raise in the other two Presbyteries. Unless we receive a part of this soon, we will lose the chance of securing a very efficient and capable Cuban minister. To lose him and his family means at least a 50 per cent loss in the efficiency and success of the work as compared with what would be if they are kept.

If our people will give one-half as much to this work as they are giving to causes of our Church, this work can be put on a progressive and successful basis.

While we procrastinate, the souls of thousands for whom the Presbyterian Church assumed the responsibility, are passing to eternity without hope—without God and their blood is on those who fail to give them the Bread of Life!

Make checks payable to Mrs. C. R. Knight and address all communications to Rev. H. F. Beaty, 951 11th Ave., Ybor City, Fla.

Pensacola, First Church—Intense activity has marked the church work here for the past month. The new pastor, Rev. Charles Haddon Nabers, reached here from Camden, Ark., to begin his ministry on the first Sunday in November. The congregations are large at all services, and new members are being received every Sunday.

During the last week of October a great Sunday School and Young People's Conference was held in the First Church. Among the speakers were Dr. H. H. Sweets, of Louisville, Rev. G. H. Norwood, of Bay Minette, Ala., and Rev. A. E. Spencer, of Gainesville, Fla. The wonderful success of the conference was due in large measure to the careful planning of the work by Miss Katherine Monroe, superintendent of the Intermediate Christian Endeavor and Mr. J. T. Baillies, superintendent of the Sunday School.

Home Mission week was observed by the congregation at the appointed time. A pageant was presented by the ladies of the church on Wednesday evening to a good congregation.

On the evening of November 13th, the congregation held a reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Weiss to formally welcome the new pastor and his wife to the city. In the receiving line were Dr. and Mrs. Nabers, Rev. and Mrs. J. E. Guthrie, of the Knox Church, Mrs. William Fisher, Sr., and Mr. W. B. Ferris. As the reception was given on the birthday anniversary of Dr. Nabers, Mr. William Fisher was chosen to present him with a large birthday cake, accompanied with a bit of delightful oratory. About 400 guests were served during the evening.

As a feature of the Sunday evening services Dr. Nabers is preaching a series of sermons on The Great Questions in the Bible.

The Frances Tappay Memorial Sunday School building will be dedicated during December. Mrs. Francis Tappay will be the honor guest of the congregation on this occasion, and a very attractive program is being arranged. Since the completion of this building, the church has a modern equipment for Sunday School purposes sufficient to meet every need for many years.

GEORGIA

Monticello—Rev. J. R. McRae having supplied the Monticello Presbyterian Church for six months and receiving from the congregation, a unanimous call to the regular pastorate, has declined the call and for a little while will make his address, Soddy, Tenn.

Columbus—November 18th was a busy and eventful day with the Presbyterians of Columbus. At the morning service in the First Church, Dr. McConnell, the pastor baptized four infants and at the conclusion of the sermon, held a congregational meeting for the election of additional elders.

At 3 p. m. a colored Presbyterian Church was organized by a commission of the Macon Presbytery, two elders were elected, one a doctor and the other a lawyer, men of intelligence, who have the respect and confidence of the community. Rev. D. A. Wilkinson, who was educated at Stillman Institute, and a man of experience in the ministry, has been secured as pastor. The church was named "Beth-Salem," and is composed of some of the most substantial negroes in the city. The organization is the outgrowth of a Sabbath School started last May by some of the members of the First Church and has had an attendance of from 50 to 75 colored children each Sabbath.

At 7:30 p. m. Rev. J. R. Potts, a member of the First Church, recently licensed by the Macon Presbytery under the law for extraordinary cases, was ordained by the same commission and installed pastor of the East Highland Presbyterian Church.

He was a business man who has consecrated his life to what he believes to be a higher service for the Master.

Mr. Potts is also pastor's assistant and teacher of the women's Bible class at the First Church and is very popular with both his class and church.

One of the members of the First Church has donated a lot in a very neglected part of the city where Mormon and kindred sects are busy sowing seeds of error. Plans are being made to build a chapel there at an early date and start a Sabbath School, which will be the fifth mission of the First Church. Cor.

KENTUCKY

Harrison County Sunday School Convention—The four Presbyterian Sunday Schools of this county held their annual one-day convention in the Mt. Pleasant Church on the 8th inst. For some time it has been customary for these Sunday Schools to meet in convention every year. But for some reason they failed to hold their accustomed conventions in the years 1921-1922. However, it is not believed that they will again be guilty of such inexcusable neglect, if it was such. A splendid program had been prepared for the convention. Mr. Thomas B. Talbot, Superintendent of Home Missions and Sunday School Work, presided. He also took an important part in the discussions and added to the interest of the meeting by his usual wit. Every one of the four schools was well represented. Though the day was disagreeably cool, the attendance in all was more than 100. The two nearby day-schools suspended to give the teachers and the pupils opportunity to attend. At noon the ladies of the Mt. Pleasant Church maintained their reputation for feeding well. Without stint and without price they served a sumptuous meal to all.

The next convention will be held in the Boyers Church, at Boyd. Mr. Thomas J. Perrin was made President and Mr. J. Lester Ammerman, Jr., was chosen as secretary and treasurer. It is probable that hereafter the time occupied by each convention will be more than one day. One day is not enough time for the consideration of a subject so great and important as the Sunday School.

The program was concluded by singing "Blest Be the Tie That Binds" and prayer.

J. Z. Haney.

MISSOURI

Jefferson City—Rev. W. Hooper Adams, pastor of First Presbyterian Church is delivering a series of lectures on the "Four Heroes of Protestant Christianity."

His subjects are: "Oliver Cromwell and the Puritanism Needed Today," "John Calvin, Reformer and Statesman," "John Knox, a Preacher Who Remade a Nation," "William of Orange, Father of Holland and of Religious Toleration."

TENNESSEE

Wanted—An active minister to supply an important city mission church until next May. Address J. J. Hill, 1547 Court Ave., Memphis, Tenn. Include in your letter references, or recommendations.

Memphis, (Tenn.)—Buntyn church has extended a unanimous call to Rev. Albert Keller of Nashville Presbytery U. S. A. He has signified his willingness to accept and will begin his work the first of December.

J. J. Hill, Supt.

Bethel Springs Group, (Tenn.)—Rev. J. F. Forsyth was installed pastor of Bethel Springs, Purdy, Bethesda and Rose Hill churches on Oct. 27th and 28th, by a Commission of Memphis Presbytery. He has been doing faithful work in this field since the first of last May. Purdy School is located in the bounds of this pastorate. This institution was founded and built up by its present superintendent, Rev. C. N. Ralston. It is giving a Christian education to more than a hundred boys and girls who without such an institution would be deprived of proper training.

J. J. Hill.

Memphis, (Tenn.)—On Nov. 18th a very successful meeting was concluded at Norris Avenue Church. The pastor, Rev. J. W. Orr was assisted by the Superintendent of Home Missions. One feature of the meeting was the house was filled at every service and an overflow the last night. Another feature was the large number of children and young people who attended and the interest they manifested. About thirty professed faith in Christ. Eleven were received into the church, ten of these on profession and baptism, among them two families. Others made application for membership and will be received at the regular service on Sunday. The entire membership was revived. Rev. and Mrs. Orr are doing a great work at this church Sunday afternoons.

J. J. Hill, Supt.

Nashville—In the Glen Leven Church the pastor, Dr. W. C. Alexander was assisted in special services by Dr. J. H. Lacy, of Clarksville. In the unexpected absence of Dr. Lacy, who was called away for a funeral in his own congregation, Dr. J. O. Reavis kindly took his place for two most helpful services. Dr. Lacy, by his genial personality made many friends and his able and faithful preaching made a deep impression upon the community. On November 25th three were received on profession of faith and to members have recently been received upon certificate.

TEXAS

Cleburne—The First Church (U. S.) and the Anglin Street Church (U. S. A.) held their second union communion service in the Anglin Street house of worship Sunday morning, October 7th. The two pastors conducted the services together, and both sessions came forward together to wait on the congregation.

A similar service was held more than a year ago at the First Church.

VIRGINIA

South Boston—Messrs Lawson Hardie and M. G. Bruce were ordained and installed elders of the South Boston Church, and Edward Evans, J. O. Watkins and Thomas A. Crowell deacons on October 28.

Rev. R. G. McLees, D.D., of Chatham, Va., has agreed to be with us in an evangelistic meeting next April.

The ladies' Auxiliary gave a social and supper to the Junior and Intermediate Endeavor Societies the evening of October 29th, with about 40 present.

Newport News—The annual meeting of the officers and teachers of the Sunday School of the First Church was held on Friday evening, November 16th. Reports from all the various departments were presented by the superintendents immediately in charge and a resume of the work for the year considered. Officers for the ensuing year were elected subject of course to the approval and appointment of session. The speakers for the evening were Dr. John I. Armstrong, secretary of literature, Committee of Publication, Richmond, Rev. C. E. Clyde, pastor of the Phoebus Church and assistant to the pastor of the First Church in the Wythe mission. There were over 60 present at the meeting.

Elon and Pedlar Mills—Evangelistic meetings have recently been conducted in the Elon and Pedlar Mills churches in Amherst county with fine results. Rev. T. W. DeVane, of Crozet, and Rev. L. McC. Williams, of Gordonsville, assisted the pastor, Rev. Clyde J. Walsh; the former at Pedlar Mills and the latter at Elon. At Pedlar Mills five new members were added to the church and the work there greatly strengthened. There were 15 additions at Elon and a great many reconsecrations. Mr. Williams was especially popular with the children and young people and one night during the meeting was devoted to them.

A new chapel has just been completed in the community near Morris school house where the pastor preaches twice a month. It is a very attractive and comfortable little building and a credit to the community in which it is located. The people furnished the greater part of the building material and labor. It will be dedicated in the near future.

Roanoke, Second Church—The Annual Church School of Missions, 1923—The meetings are held on six successive Wednesday evenings. The meetings begin with a supper at 6:30 and in the mission study program begins at 7:30 and ends at 8:30. Then there is a half-hour period of fellowship and recreation. The entire program is over at 9:00. The pastor is assisted by outside workers who lead the people in various games and songs in the last half hour. There are four mission study classes; the first for men and women. This class is led by the pastor. The second class is for young people, ages 15 to 21. The third class is for girls, ages 10 to 14. The fourth class is for boys, ages 10 to 14. Competent leaders are easily secured for these latter three classes. Splendid mission study books suitable to the ages in the various classes are annually available for all churches. The mission study period begins with a 10- or 12-minute praise service. After the singing of hymns, the reading of the Scripture, and prayer, the classes separate into four rooms for a study period of 45 minutes. At the end of the hour the classes all come together again for a report on attendance, a closing hymn and prayer.

On the Sunday before the first Wednesday of the school, the pastor preaches a missionary sermon. The opportunity of the people of the church to become broad-minded, world-visioned Christians is clearly outlined. Then the whole plan of organization of the school of missions is laid before the people, together with the session's approval of the plan. An enrollment card, giving the dates, the time and place of meeting, the number and description of the classes is passed through the congregation. The people are then asked to enroll. This they do by signing the card below the perforated line, indicating the number of the class in which they will enroll. Likewise they check Yes or No to the question "Do you expect to be present for the suppers?" In our church we serve the suppers for 35 cents per plate, and the six circles of the Woman's Auxiliary take their turn in serving the suppers. They do not make money on the suppers, but plan to break even. Likewise, on the enrollment cards are found the names of the mission study books for the various classes. Those desiring to purchase a book place a check mark opposite the name of the book they wish. The books are ordered by wire and are on hand for the first Wednesday night meeting. A secretary is appointed for each class to distribute the books to those who have ordered them, and to collect for the same. The class leaders, of course, have had their books for several weeks and they are prepared to begin teaching the first night.

Our meetings were held from October 17 to November 21, 1923, on Wednesday nights. The signed enrollment for the four classes was 170. This is 30 per cent of our congregation, our church membership being 575; 130 enrolled were men and women, 40 were for the other three classes, young people, boys and girls. For the six meetings we had an average attendance in the four classes of 160. I can testify that nothing in my ministry has given me more pleasure or greater confidence than the response of the men and women of the church to this effort to teach them about the world-wide movements of the Church. Likewise the greatest possible stimulus has come to the life and work of the whole Church.

H. Spencer Edmunds.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Central Church of Washington—The men's Bible class in this church is taught by the pastor, Rev. Dr. James H. Taylor except on the first Sunday of each month. The A. W. Pitzer Bible class, for young men, is taught by Mr. C. R. Unger. These two classes support several boys in our Home Mission schools, and also help another one in his college course. Once a month a social meeting is held by these classes in the lecture room, to which the congregation is invited. Besides music and refreshments, an address is given by someone invited by the classes. Last night (Wednesday, November 21st) we had a notable address by Hon. W. F. Stevenson, member of congress from South Carolina. His subject was "The Sources of Presbyterianism in the United States." He set forth clearly and earnestly historical facts that many Presbyterians know nothing about and which had grown dim in the memories of those who had known them. It would do us good to hear the same address again, lest we forget what noble and justifiable pride we can take in Presbyterianism—a pride that should be accompanied by humble gratitude and by intelligent loyalty to our Bible-rooted principles and doctrines.

On Sunday night, November 25th, this church held its annual service for Home Missions, and the speaker was Rev. Dr. Homer McMillan, our Secretary of the Executive Committee of Home Missions. It was a great privilege to hear him tell, out of a heart on fire about the needs, the opportunities, and the rewards of the great work he superintends. "Unfinished Tasks" confront us in many directions. May the grace of giving be multiplied throughout the bounds of our Church. A. H.

ANOTHER EMERGENCY CALL FOR DOCTORS

By Egbert W. Smith

News has just reached us from Korea of a situation there which threatens the permanent closing of one of our mission hospitals unless we can promptly send to Korea another missionary physician.

We request our pastors, church officers, and auxiliary officers to present this matter to their constituencies for special prayer, accompanied with earnest efforts to lay this call upon the hearts and consciences of young Christian doctors.

BOOKS ARE KEYS

Here are the GOLDEN keys:
Books of the Seven Seas:
Keys to Kingdom wide
Where far adventures hide.

Here are the SILVER keys
That unlock mysteries
Old as the happy smiles
In the romance of Southern asiles.

Here are the IRON keys
Unlocking the destinies
Of ocean, earth and sky
Where eagles float and fly.

Here are the BRONZE keys
Of old mythologies
Which open wide the door
Where gods have gone before.

Here are the JEWEL keys
Which one may turn with ease:
Old books with marks and stains:
Old books with slumbering flames.

Davidson College—The Y. M. C. A. on last Sunday was addressed by Dr. Howard Rondthaler, president of Salem College, who spoke on the marvelous way in which Jesus Christ met the social situations of his day with their intricate and baffling problems.

Preparations are being made to present in Shearer Hall three one-act plays, "Out o' Goodness," by L. D. Elkins; "The Cretin," by W. F. Galloway, and "Why Pierrot," by Prof. E. J. Erwin. The last is a musical fantasy, the music for which was composed by Messrs. Ernest, Jones, Bryan, and Purdy, of the student body, together with Mrs. Frazier Hood, Mrs. W. L. Porter and Mrs. A. M. Ingold, of Morganton.

The Glee Club gave a highly creditable concert in Shearer Hall last week. The club will start next week on a southern trip, going as far as Atlanta, where they will be entertained by Davidson alumni.

Davidson College announces the receipt of a gift of $50,000 from the estate of Robert K. Smith, former vice-president of the P. Lorillard Tobacco Company. This is the largest single bequest that has come to Davidson with the exception of the Maxwell Chambers legacy prior to the Civil War most of which was lost to the college as a result of that war. Mr. Smith was born shortly before the Civil War, near Milton, N. C. He started in the tobacco business as a young man, later moved to Durham and became identified with J. B. Duke and was afterwards instrumental in forming the American Tobacco Company. He moved to Kentucky, assuming charge of all American Tobacco Company operations in that section. He was made vice-president of the company continuing until its dissolution, and then became vice-president of the P. Lorillard Company remaining in that office until his retirement three years ago. Up to the time of his death Mr. Smith had been devoting his time to his country home near Orange, Va. So far as it is known Mr. Smith never went to college nor ever saw Davidson College but was impressed by its service and left in his will the sum of $50,000 to be used as the authorities of the college saw fit. It has been decided to establish with the gift a revolving fund to enable the college to hasten the doing of several imperative things for which money is being pledged, among them the payment for the erection of Watts Hall. The fund will later be released and used again in a similar way. Finally it will be used to erect a permanent foundation under the name of the donor and so make its service perpetual.

"Peace Institute—Mr. W. N. Everett, Secretary of State of North Carolina, addressed the Peace students Monday, November 26th. He spoke in a very interesting and illuminating manner of the duties of the office of Secretary of State. His address is the second of a series on "Citizenship." Governor Cameron Morrison made the first address recently. Mr. Everett will be followed by other prominent North Carolina State officials.

Mr. J. P. Brawley, director of the music department of Peace, spoke, informally to the students Friday in chapel. His subject was the program of Paderewski, and the address was very interesting and appropriate as the noted pianist was to appear in concert that evening and the majority of the students were attending. Mr. Brawley analyzed the various parts of Paderewski's program, calling attention to the classification and history of the numbers. He also made a talk the morning after the concert, reviewing the performance.

Agnes Scott College—Dr. G. Campbell Morgan has been the central figure at the college for the past week, preaching wonderful sermons every morning in the chapel and speaking at the Decatur Presbyterian Church at night. His theme for the morning services was "The Call of Christ;" and he used such texts as: "Follow me," "I will give you rest," "Come unto me," "My burden is light," "Feed my sheep." At the evening meetings, his theme was "The Faith of Our Fathers," and it was a great exposition of Christian fundamentals.

Dr. Morgan remarked that Agnes Scott is the one college which he keeps on his annual itinerary and that it is a favorite with him because it furnishes such attentive listeners and affords so good an opportunity for reaching the Christian leadership in the South.

Another speaker who made a profound impression on the college community this week was Mrs. Motte Martin, an Agnes Scott graduate, who is giving her life for Christ in Africa. She made two addresses to the students, clinching in a way the teaching of Dr. Morgan and appealing for consecration of life. There are already many student volunteers in college and her talks have touched others very deeply.

Union Theological Seminary—The fame of the James Sprunt Lectures has literally gone around the world. The pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Dungog, New South Wales, Australia, writes the president of the seminary that he has been reading with much interest and pleasure the volume of lectures on the origin of Paul's religion, by Dr. J. Gresham Machen, and that he would be glad to know something more of our seminary. It is hoped that the fine course of lectures on Preaching, given in October by Rev. James Black, of Edinburgh, will appear in the spring.

The Presbyterian League Record says that four of the factories in the city, Fulton Gas Works, Roundtree Trunk & Bag Co., Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co., and Baughman Stationery Co., are supplied each Monday with speakers from the seminary. This is one of many forms of work carried on by the students in the city. The students handbook has just come from the press. It shows that the institution has again broken all records of attendance, the whole number of students thus far for the session being 132, the largest number ever enrolled in any Seminary in our Church. One hundred and seventeen of these are regular undergraduates, two are Fellows and 13 are special students.

The League Record for November says that the young people of the First Church had a fine time entertaining the Presbyterian students from Richmond. They came 200 strong, from Westhampton College, the University of Richmond, Massey's Business College, student nurses from nearby hospitals, Medical College, General Assembly's Training School and Union Theological Seminary. College yells were given by each group and songs sung. The Glee Club from Westhampton furnished the music for the evening. Mr. Charles Gillette, chairman of Social Life in our Men's Service Club, directed the games. There was something doing every minute—from the moment they were tagged as they came in the door until the grand march when everyone marched around to bid everyone else good-night. It was an inspiring sight to see 200 Presbyterian young people having such wholesome, happy fun. The First Church welcomes them and desires to serve them in every way possible during their sojourn in Richmond.

Southwestern Presbyterian University—The problem of athletics in our colleges today is a difficult one to solve. Southwestern is trying to solve it by setting up a high standard, and then by co-operating efforts upon the part of president, faculty, and students to attain that standard.

The following are our athletics ideals here:

1. Clean Athletics. Both coach and players are careful to avoid unnecessary roughness and underhand slugging, and to show good sportsmanship in every game.

2. Controlled Athletics. No financial or scholastic inducements are offered to any crack athlete to come to this college simply to give strength to some team. This rule is strictly adhered to, even although our teams may and do suffer thereby. And the constant aim is to give athletics an important place in college life, not a preeminent one.

3. Christian Athletics. It can be said with truth that our best players are largely taken from the fine Christian type of students, such as the men who go to the Blue Ridge Conferences, and who belong to the "Morning Watch Band" in college. And the coach is a Christian man who takes his turn in conducting chapel exercises.

King College—Upholding the principles of a Christian institution the faculty of King College took a commendable stand on a question which arose here the first of the week.

Due to the remarkable record the Mountain Tornado, of Kaysee had made during the passing season, Johns Hopkins wired to King College to make arrangements for a post-season football game to be played in the Baltimore stadium, between King College and Johns Hopkins. It meant money for the school as well as valuable publicity.

But behind the screen of congratulations that the friends of the school showered upon it, the faculty of King had been doing some deep thinking on the matter. They found that if the team made the trip to Baltimore it would, in all probability, mean failures on the semester examinations in December. It narrowed down to a question of whether the college would gain the notoriety in the east, or retain their reputation for scholastic work at home. The issue was decided unhesitatingly in favor of the latter.

Dr. Tilden Scherer, president of the college, did not for one moment weaken under the tempting proposition. He called the entire student body together and explained the situation in detail.

The school was given a chance to gain national recognition and financial benefits were also to be derived, but scholastic work was placed first, and the faculty of King College stood firm in its convictions.

Religious Activities in Durant College—There is much interest in religious matters at Durant College this year. We have a Volunteer Foreign Mission Band of eight members. All of them young women ranging in age from 18 to 23 years, and very much in earnest. This band meets regularly for mission study. One of their number is treasurer of the Student Volunteers of Oklahoma and another has been selected as a delegate to the next National Volunteer Convention. We have eight or ten more life recruits who expect to devote themselves to some phase of Home Mission work.

There is a very active Society of Christian Endeavor in the college this year. The weekly prayer meetings held right after supper Sunday evenings are splendidly planned, and so full of interest that practically all of the students attend regularly every Sunday. The work now being done by our leaders among the young women in this college can not fail to bear fruit in the lives of hundreds of others in Oklahoma and elsewhere.

W. B. Morrison, President.

Mitchell College—Mitchell and Barium Springs basketball teams met Monday-afternoon. The game was played on the former's court and the yells of victory were heard from the opposing team during the first half, but in the second half the score changed in favor of the home team and the cheers of Mitchell students became louder and louder until the game closed with a final score of 16 to 13 in favor of Mitchell.

The basketball team was given a delightful party by the students and faculty of the college Saturday evening. The various classes furnished the entertainment for the evening. Refreshments were served.

The Young Woman's Christian Association is planning a bazaar to be held in December, near the Christmas holidays. The students are showing a great deal of interest in this and it is expected that many lovely and useful gifts will be on display.

Mrs. A. M. Jordan has returned from Greensboro where she attended the second annual meeting of deans, which was held at the North Carolina College for Women.

News of the Week

More complete returns from the home visitation conducted in Charlotte, N. C., Friday afternoon in little more than an hour by J. Shreve Durham, international superintendent of home visitation, indicate that 63,200 persons were visited in Charlotte and immediate suburbs by the more than 2,000 workers who volunteered their services.

Despite a downpour of rain in the morning, 18,000 persons, it is estimated, witnessed the annual gridiron classic at Chapel Hill between Carolina and Virginia, in which the two teams played to a scoreless tie for the first time in the 31 years of athletic relations between the two universities.

An appeal by the women of North Carolina to Governor Cameron Morrison for the pardon of Dr. L. B. McBrayer, superintendent of the State Tuberculosis Sanatorium, who recently pleaded guilty to the offense of buying from himself for the sanatorium, has been prepared under the leadership of Mrs. Gordon Finger, of Charlotte, president of the North Carolina Tuberculosis Association, and mailed to the governor.

Governor Morrison lacks the power to pardon Dr. L. B. McBrayer because the judgment vacating his office as superintendent of Sanatorium was written into the law by the Legislature, so he declared.

CHILDREN

STILL RIDING

Dear Standard:

I am a little boy eight years old. I am in the third grade at school. Miss Ruth Holland is my teacher, I am very fond of her. I go to school at Olin and I haven't missed a day yet. My Sunday School teacher is Miss Zoe Lazenby. I haven't missed a Sunday yet only when I was sick. I have a pony named Prince and a dog named "Shep." I fell off Prince last month and got hurt, but I haven't quit riding him yet. We went to Virginia last summer in a Ford and it took us a whole day to get there.

Your unknown friend,
Jacob Troutman, Jr.

MORE THAN W. B. CAN CHEW

Dear Standard:

I am going to make my letter so long and big that the waste basket can't swallow it. I am 12 years old. I go to school in Rowland, N. C. I have three school teachers, Miss Lalia Pate, Miss Edith Brown and Miss Elizabeth Braddy. I like them all. I have one sister and brother, Ruby Edwards and L. P. We take the Standard and I enjoy reading the letters and stories in it. I reckon my letter is long enough now.

Your unknown reader,
Eugenia Richards.

LOTS OF TEACHERS

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl 11 years old. I go to school every day. I am in the fifth grade. My teacher's names are Miss Edith Brown, Miss Lalia Pate and Miss Elizabeth Braddy. I will close because I fear the waste basket.

Your unknown friend,
Catherine Pittman.

THE CIRCUS HORSE

Dear Standard:

As my last letter was printed I will write again. My school has started now, and I am sure glad for we have such fun at school. My everyday school is where I go to Sunday school. We have a large school house. We have four rooms and three teachers. I am in the second grade. My teacher's name is Miss Nannie Gilchrist, she is a good teacher. We have no school today as the Sand Hill Fair is going on and we stopped so we could all go. My Daddy is going to carry us to the circus Saturday at Sanford, you know I am glad for there are fifty horses and that is what I love to see. Well as my letter is getting lengthy I will stop. Hope to see my letter printed.

Your little friend,
Clayton Cole.

A LAUGH IN THE RIGHT PLACE

Two little figures looked over the garden gate—Ruth and Jean Mitchell in their neat brown play-suits.

"I wish," said Jean, wistfully, "I wish mother would let us have a barn party and invite the little girl who lives in the new house on the hill. I think she looks lonesome, playing all alone. She hasn't any brothers and sisters—mother said so."

"She's got a doll, thought, the biggest one I ever saw. It looks like a real baby. Perhaps mother will let us have a party. We haven't had one for a long time. Let's ask her." Ruth was half-way up the path before she finished speaking.

"Let's!" echoed Jean, running after her.

Mother, sweeping off the piazza, stopped her work to listen. "Of course you may have a party," she told them. "I think Betty Lane would like it in the barn, too. I doubt if she ever went to a barn party before. Do you want me to call her mother on the telephone and invite her, or will you ask her yourself when you go by the house on your way to the post office?"

"We thought—that is, I thought—it would be nice if we wrote a really, truly invitation on—on your lovely pink note-paper," replied Ruth.

"Why"—Mother hesitated a moment. "Do you think that would be just the thing? The party won't match the paper!" Then, as Ruth looked so disappointed, she added: "But I don't mind. I will write the invitation for you first and you may copy it. I don't believe you know just how to word it."

After writing and rewriting the note two or three times Ruth was satisfied that she could copy it neatly on the pretty pink paper. When it was finished Jean declared it looked like a grown-up person's writing and Ruth herself was not ashamed of it.

"It is really nice enough for a parlor party," she exclaimed, delightedly.

At two o'clock everything was ready. The big, cool barn had been swept. The table had been spread. The children knew the lunch would be a success, for they had sampled everything from the gingerbread horses mother had made to the apples, pears, and grapes they had picked themselves in the orchard. Dressed in pink gingham bloomer suits, they swung on the gate watching the road down which their little guest would come.

"I'm glad her name is Betty. I love that name," said Jean.

"Here she comes! Oh, goody! she's bringing her big doll," cried Ruth, dancing with delight as a little blue figure came in sight over the brow of the hill.

They watched her come nearer and nearer, Jean intent on the big doll and Ruth equally interested in the bigger doll-carriage.

All at once Jean saw something else. "Oh!" she gasped. "Oh! What are we going to do?"

"What do you mean?" asked Ruth, and then she, too, began to cry, "Oh! oh! oh!"

The children looked at each other in dismay. They felt like running and hiding, and yet they knew that they couldn't. Already Betty was near enough to wave to them—near enough for them to see more plainly this embarrassing thing that they must face.

Betty Lane was all in blue, ruffy, fluffy blue! She wore white socks and white slippers. A blue hair-ribbon, perkier and wider than any the children had ever seen before, was tied to a golden curl on top of her head. And in all this finery she was coming to slide down the haymow, jump in and out of the hap-rack, pat the horse, feed the cow, and hunt for eggs in the grain-bins!

"Oh," almost sobbed Ruth, "it was the pink note-paper that did it! She thought it was going to be a parlor party. Mother said the party didn't match the paper. What are we going to do?"

"We can't do a thing but stay right here and act as if we didn't notice anything wrong," returned Jean, miserably. "But it just seems as if I couldn't look at her at all."

Meanwhile the little guest had come very near. She waved her hand gaily. "Here I am," she announced, "and I've brought Isabella. She just loves parties. 'Specially the ice cream. Don't you, Isabella?"

"Come right in," said Jean, clearing her throat. Ice cream! This was worse than the blue ruffy dress!

Betty looked at the sisters a bit anxiously as they all went up the path. She felt that something was wrong. As for Ruth and Jean, it seemed as if they just couldn't take her in that barn!

Of course, they had to. "We're going to have our party here," explained Ruth, huskily. "It's a barn party, you see."

For a moment after that all three children stared at one another in silence—a silence that seemed to hurt. Jean's eyes were full of tears and Ruth's lips were quivering. As for Betty Lane, there was the queerest expression on her face. Was she going to cry, or fly into a temper and go home? For just a moment the three stood there, and then—then Betty began to laugh!

"Oh, what fun!" she cried. "I never went to a barn party before. Won't it be fun? Don't you think so, Isabella?"

After that nobody thought of anything else but fun. When the gingerbread horses and the fresh milk and fruit appeared, Ruth remembered with a little pang of regret that Betty had expected ice cream. Mother had thought of ice cream, too, and had remembered that no party, whether in a parlor or a barn, is quite a truly party without it; so, without a word to the girls, she came in with a half-dozen cones piled high with it—pink, cool, and delicious. And, coming as a surprise, how much better it tasted!

"It is just the loveliest party I ever went to," declared Betty as she trundled Isabella down the path toward home. "I hope you'll ask me again sometime. Say good-by to the ladies, Isabella."

She made the big doll wave a china arm at her hostesses in farewell.

"We play in the barn every day," Jean told her, "although we don't have a party every day. We wish you would come and play tomorrow."

"If my mother says I may, I'll come early tomorrow," promised Betty, promptly.

When she was out of hearing Jean turned to Ruth. "I think she's just lovely," she said, "but for a minute, when we took her into the barn, I didn't know—I thought, perhaps—she looked so—"

"I know," Ruth nodded. "I thought she was going to cry. But she laughed! The minute she did that, I knew she wasn't cross or anything but just dear. The next time I don't know what to do, I'm going to do that too—laugh!"

Jean understood her.—Alice Norris-Lewis, in Zion's Herald.

THE LITTLE RED HOUSE

Once upon a time there was a little boy who was tired of all his toys and tired of all his picture books and tired of all his play. "What shall I do?" he asked his dear mother.

And his dear mother, who always knew beautiful things for little boys to do, said: "You shall go on a journey and find a little red house with no doors and with a star inside."

Then the little boy's eyes grew big with wonder. "Which way shall I go," he asked, "to find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?"

"Down the lane and past the farmer's house and over the hill," said his dear mother. "Come back as soon as you can and tell me all about your journey."

So the little boy started out. He had not walked very far down the lane when he came to a very little girl dancing along in the sunshine. "Do you know where I shall find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?" the little boy asked her.

The little girl laughed. "Ask my father, the farmer," she said.

So the little boy went on until he came to the great brown barn, where the farmer himself stood in the doorway looking out over the pastures and grain fields.

"Do you know where I shall find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?" asked the little boy of the farmer.

The farmer laughed, too. "I've lived a great many years, and I never saw one," he chuckled. "But ask the granny who lives at the foot of the hill. She knows how to make arrowroot taffy, popcorn balls and red mittens. Perhaps she can direct you to it."

So the little boy went on farther still until he came to the granny sitting in her pretty garden of herbs and marigolds. "Please, dear granny," asked the little boy, "where shall I find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?"

The granny was knitting a red mitten, but when she heard the little boy's question she laughed cheerily. "I should like to find that little house myself," she chuckled. "It would be warm when the frosty nights come, and the starlight would be prettier than a candle. But ask the wind, who blows about so much and listens at all the chimneys. Perhaps the wind can direct you to the little house."

So the little boy took off his cap politely to granny and went up the hill. The wind was coming down the hill as the little boy climbed up. As they met, the wind turned about and went singing along beside him. It whistled in his ear and pushed him and dropped a pretty leaf into his hands to show what a good comrade he was.

"O wind," asked the little boy, after they had gone along together quite a way, "can you help me to find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?"

The wind can not speak in our words, but it went singing on ahead of the little boy until it came to an orchard. There it climbed up in an apple tree and shook the branches. When the little boy caught up, there, at his feet, lay a rosy apple. The little boy picked up the apple. It was as much as his two hands could hold. It was as red as the sun had been able to paint it, and the thick brown stem stood up as straight as a chimney. It was a little red house in which the apple blossom fairly had gone to sleep. It had no windows.

"I wonder," thought the little boy. He took his jackknife from his pocket and cut the apple straight through the center. Oh, how wonderful! There, inside the apple, lay a star holding brown seeds.

So the little boy called "Thank you" to the wind, and the wind whistled back, "You're welcome." Then the little boy ran home to his mother and gave her the apple.

"It is too wonderful to eat without looking at the star, isn't it?" he asked.

"Yes, indeed," answered his dear mother.—Carolyn Sherwin Bailey, in Mother's Magazine.

A little girl was spending her first night from home. As the darkness gathered she began to cry. The hostess asked, "Are you homesick?" "No," was the reply, "I'm here sick."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Spence-McLean—At the Presbyterian manse, DeFuniak Springs, Fla., on November 18, 1923, by Rev. Daniel J. Currie, Miss Cleo McLean to Mr. Grady Spence, both of Walton County.

DIED

EDWARD FINCH REID

At his home in Lenoir, North Carolina, on November third, nineteen hundred and twenty-three, Edward Finch Reid was called to his reward.

A beloved Elder of the First Presbyterian Church and for many years Superintendent of the Sunday School.

He was truly a Christian gentleman of the highest type.

MRS. ALICE ASHBY McLEAN

Mrs. Alice Ashby McLean, nee Miss Alice Ashby Andrews, of Baltimore County, Md., departed this life from her residence in Hillsdale, Baltimore, Md., on May 21, 1923, after a protracted illness of some two- and one-half years. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Harris E. Kirk, D.D., pastor of the Franklin Street Presbyterian Church.

Early in life Mrs. McLean professed her faith in Christ as her personal Saviour and united with the Church. Some 35 years ago she became the wife of Rev. L. A. McLean, who preceded her into that "rest that remaineth for the people of God" on May 8, 1910. The influence of that sainted servant of God still abides in the congregation of the Dickey Memorial Presbyterian Church, of which he was pastor for 11 years prior to his death, and where side by side the two of them wrought for the establishment of the kingdom of Christ in the hearts of men.

Since the death of her husband, Mrs. McLean had resided within the bounds of the congregation which he last served. And until laid aside by illness she evinced a keen interest in the welfare of the local congregation and of the Church at large.

During the last illness of Mrs. McLean it was the privilege of the writer of this sketch to frequently visit at her bedside, and never once did she permit the visit to be terminated without the reading of the Word and prayer.

Mrs. McLean is survived by three sisters, Misses Ada M., Anna Grace, and L. Elizabeth Andrews, and by one brother, Mr. F. G. Andrews, all of Baltimore. She is also survived by nephews and nieces, one niece, Miss Ada McGeachy, having been her constant companion for many years.

Leave we now thy servant sleeping."

JOHN M. McIVER

Whereas, God in His all-wise providence hath translated our beloved senior elder, John M. McIver, from the Church militant to the Church triumphant, we the Session and Board of Deacons of Gulf Presbyterian Church desire to express the high regard and esteem in which he was held by us, our deep sorrow at the loss we have sustained, and to his loved ones our sympathy in their sad bereavement. Therefore, be it resolved:

First, That the church has lost one of its most faithful and efficient elders, who by his unselfish devotion to the Master's cause and by his eminent piety exemplified in his life the highest type of Christian character.

Second, That our Sunday School mourns the loss of its beloved superintendent who for many years zealously wrought for the Master, both, in teaching the children of the congregation the way of eternal life and in training the older members for a more efficient service.

Third, That we extend to the bereaved family our deepest Christian sympathy with the assurance that we share their loss, but are comforted in the confidence that he has entered upon the reward of the faithful.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy spread upon the minutes of the Session, and a copy sent to the church papers.

MISS ELLA SUMMEY

(Woman's Bible Class, First Presbyterian Church, November 11, 1913.)

In daily life, in the home, in the community, Miss Ella Summey exemplified the consistent Christian life. Bound by ties of kinship and of friendship to a large circle in Charlotte and elsewhere, she was beloved and esteemed by all. Her life was one of love and service for her Master; and loving and serving Him she gladly gave loving service from day to day to all who touched her life.

Optimistic, and with a sense of humor, her cheery presence brightened many a path-way. Keenly interested in her own home and the homes of her devoted relatives and friends, she gave loving ministry wherever need presented itself. By the bedside of the sick in hospital and home, she brought a message of cheer and comfort. Her life was one which upheld the highest standards of Christian living; and her influence will live on in the lives of the many young people who came under her teaching and influence. Her outstanding characteristics as an exemplary Christian, may be said to have been, loyalty to principle, firmness of conviction, joy in service.

As a church member she was always loyal, faithful, and true. Like the Psalmist of old she was "glad when they said unto her, 'Let us go into the house of the Lord.'" And not only was she present at every service of her church, when possible to be there, but she was present on time. Like the Wise Virgins, her lamp was always trimmed and burning. She never forgot the "faith of our fathers," but was still a strict believer in the observance of the Sabbath day.

In her death our class has lost a faithful and devoted member. We shall miss her kindly greeting, her wise counsel, and loyal service. We mourn her going only for the sense of separation which it brings; for we know that she has entered into that fullness of joy which is reserved for the children of God. May we seek to emulate her saintliness of character, her joyousness of disposition, her beautiful Christian spirit, realizing that for each of us the time is short until we too will stand in the presence of the King.

Mrs. Alston Morrison,
Mrs. Ernest Moore,
Miss Julia Alexander, Committee.

MRS. JENNINGS H. PEARSALL

Mrs. Jemima Haywood Pearsall, died at her home in Dunn, N. C., November 1, 1923.

Born in Duplin County Dec. 18, 1834, married Jere Pearsall of Duplin County February 13, 1857.

Her husband died in 1871 leaving one son and two daughters, and the son survives with whom the mother made her home. Mrs. Pearsall descended from the earliest settlers of this state, being the daughter of Robert Middleton and wife Jemima Haywood Whitfield of Duplin County.

In her girlhood she united with the Grove Presbyterian Church at Kenansville, N. C., with which church she remained until she moved to Dunn in 1887 when she was one of the small band that organized the Dunn Presbyterian church at that place, and until age came on her was an active member of that church.

Well educated and of a retentive memory, she was familiar with the history of her family for many generations back, and the history of the old Grove church was fresh in her mind. She was fond of relating events that she knew of and those that had become tradition relating to her ancestors and the old Grove church, to which communion her ancestors had all belonged.

In early life she chose the blessed Christ as her Redeemer, and through a long and eventful life her faith in Him never wavered.

E. MATTHEW JOHNSTON

On the evening of September the 13, 1923, at his home near Willard, N. C., E. Matthew Johnston quietly passed from the scenes and labors of this world to his eternal reward, in the 76 year of his age. Although he had been in failing health for some time, his neighbors and friends were surprised by the suddenness with which the call to a higher service came.

Mr. Johnston was born and reared on the same farm where he spent his last days upon earth, and he had lived his entire life in the same community. In June 1869, he was happily married to Miss Mary Ellen Bordeaux who was called to her eternal Home in February 1922, the two having walked together hand-in-hand through the varied experiences of life for more than fifty years. To this couple, were born eight children, six sons and two daughters, all of whom are still living except one son who died after reaching young manhood.

Until his latter years, when his health became impaired, the deceased gave his attention chiefly to farming, though at different times he was connected with other industries and for a time he, at the call of his fellow citizens, served as sheriff of Pender county. In the complex relations of life he held the confidence and esteem of those who knew him.

After reaching middle life, our friend upon profession of his faith in Jesus Christ, united with Rockfish Presbyterian church and continued this relations until the Willard Presbyterian church was organized in 1915, then he became one of the charter members of the new organization, and was at the same time elected an elder of the new church and continued to serve in this capacity until his death. He was seldom absent from the services of his church when his health and strength would permit him to be present. We shall miss his presence and fellowship in service.

Mr. Johnston was always interested in those things which, he believed were for the upbuilding of the community and for the advancement of the welfare of his fellowmen. Those in need were not afraid to go to him for help, for he had an open hand and a loving heart. In his home he ministered to the needs of his household and opened wide the door of hospitality to his neighbor, his friend, and the stranger within his gates. In short, Mr. Johnston was a good citizen, a generous neighbor, a loyal friend, a devoted husband, a loving father, and withal a Christian gentleman.

In the presence of a large gathering of friends, his body was laid to rest in Rockfish Cemetery, beside the grave where sleeps his beloved wife. Together they wait the summons from on high to rise, clothed with glory and immortality. "Until we meet again before His throne, clothed in the robe He gives His own, Until we know even as we are Known— Good night."

Story and Incident

"READ, MOTHER, READ!"

Evening. The supper dishes all washed and put away. Mother, seated in the comfy Morris chair, with a very small book on each knee. A book in her hand, her voice rising and falling. Our attentive faces in imagination fixed upon the scene being made so real to us. Our little-boy eyes blazing with indignation, softened with pity, or sparkling with the sheer thrill of the story. And then a pause, as Mother stopped to rest her voice. A momentary silence, then two small voices in unison, "Read, Mother, read! Please read, Mother!" And Mother would take up the book again, the illusion would throw its spell over us once more, and the evening hours would slip all too quickly by.

Those are almost the earliest memories of my childhood, and, in the light of these days, the most significant and precious. The most significant because in them my mother laid foundations, and laid them deep, that her children should instinctively love the finer things in life. The most precious because now I can see, as I was too small to see then, the tender love and patience that held her to her task that glorified it, that took it out of the realm of "doing something to keep the children quiet," and made it a labor of love. For the winter nights were long, and incessant reading is not always easy after the work of the day. It would have been easy, and natural, to have left us boys to ourselves. We were wiggling and squirming with life; there would have been no fear of our not being able to pass the time.

But Mother would not have been satisfied with that. She wanted her children to grow in mind as well as in body. As bit by bit her two boys grew bigger, there was a change in the posture of the family group. First one of us, then the other, moved to the arm chair. Then my brother, older than I, drew up a chair for himself beside Mother's, and after a while I did the same. But though the posture changed, the plan never did. And on through the years we boys would still look at her whenever she paused, and plead, "Read, Mother, read."

Had the reading of those years been only of the sort that would have entertained, still it would have had a profound and good effect upon our young minds. For it would have taught us two things. One of these was the habit of reading something long, and actually reading it through, not merely skipping around here and there. It might be termed the habit of perseverance in reading. Mother did this; not by making long reading something that we ought or ought not to do, but by making it so attractive that we wanted to read things through. She made us like it, and want to do it. And then we did—by listening attentively.

The other thing we learned was to be able to listen to rapid reading, and to understand it easily. Rapid does not mean hurried. It is the sort of reading that keeps the listener on edge to be sure he misses nothing. This makes one "sit forward" mentally. When reading is too slow one "slumps backward" in his listening, and the mind and retentive faculty dozes.

But the heart of the meaning of those years of reading lay in the kind of books that Mother read to us. Her selections were not haphazard. She took as much or more care as to what entered our minds as she did for what entered our stomachs,—and she was by no means negligent of the latter! While we were at kindergarten or school she would be out making the selections of books for us. Sometimes she would spend whole afternoon at the public library, looking over book after book, and not satisfied until she had selected something really worth while.

She wanted books that would be interesting to her boys. But books that were merely interesting would never pass muster. They must be wholesome, but not "goody-goody." There must be no questionable ideals held up in any of the books, or bad men held up to admiration because, of one "redeeming trait," such as boldness in wrong-doing.

The books she read to us must be well written. She wanted us to love fine literature, because of its very fineness, and not because we were told that the author was a great man. She knew that there was only one way to do this. That was to read finely written things into our souls. And she did it. In doing so she taught us to despise and avoid trashy "boys' fiction," such as the type wherein the messenger boy saves the rich man's daughter in a runaway, and is made the head of the business and son-in-law of the benevolent old gentleman, always to the discomfiture of the villain. Occasionally, when we were older, people sent us such books for birthday or Christmas. Mother never forbade us to read them, but she told us what she thought, and let us choose. There was enough of bad boy in each of us to desire the near-forbidden fruit, so we read them, perhaps once. But that was enough. We had no taste for this trashy fiction, and it never was a real problem. If Mother had forbidden it, we might have read more of it, who can tell? But she ingrained taste into us for finer things, and then she let us take our choice.

In choosing books that were worth while, Mother naturally turned to the works of the recognized and standard masters of writing, though not making her selections from this group alone. There is a presumption that a book which has lived and gained favor with the years has something to commend it. So, by the time we reached adolescence we had a fair knowledge of some of the best works of the English language, especially of authors like Sir Walter Scott, Charles Dickens, and Charles Kingsley. In verse we were familiar with Burns, Shakespeare, Lowell, Longfellow, and others of the same general stamp.

Of course we had to begin with things that were simpler, and work up to those

Don't Lose Sight of the Food Value of Your Bakings

Plain flour has a large amount of food value but it must be combined with good baking powder in order to retain this value.

Most self rising flours are not successful because they do not and cannot raise the bakings to the proper lightness. This means a certain loss of nutrition because they are heavy and hard to digest.

Every time you eat food that does not properly digest you do not get the full nutritional value—you are over-taxing your stomach. Nourishing and perfect bakings are what good health demands. The one sure way is—use pure flour and good baking powder.

If you want to find what thousands of housewives have learned—make some biscuits with self-rising flour—then make some with good plain flour and Calumet Baking Powder—notice the great difference. One trial will satisfy you. Your health demands that you make the experiment.

Those who know—millions of housewives, domestic science teachers, big hotels, restaurants, bakeries and railroads will not use anything but Calumet, the Economy Baking Powder.

Play safe—use Calumet and plain flour. It is the most economical and satisfactory, where light, wholesome and pure foods are desired.

Presbyterian Schools and Colleges

"Likewise the people who contribute to the support of the denominational colleges have a right to be informed thru their newspapers of what is happening at such institutions just as the tax payers have a right to know what is happening at the State institutions. The sooner the executive heads of the State institutions and denominational colleges learn that the campus is not a little principality apart from the balance of the world and that the friends and supporters of such institutions have a right to be kept informed of what is going on thru the public press, the better it will be for such institutions."—(Charlotte Observer, August 28).

which were more difficult. As very small children, for example, we could not have gotten anything from Shakespeare's plays. But I remember the enjoyment we derived from "Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare." It gave us a desire for the original when the time came.

Mother evidently knew that small children absorb and hear a great deal more than they are given credit for. She knew that in order to entertain us she must not read something silly under the impression that it was "putting things on our plane." All through the years she forebore to "read down" to us. She would read things that took a little effort to understand, rather than those that were easy. At the same time, she did not read us things that would have been foreign to our boyish enthusiasm and interest. Small boys are naturally hero-worshippers. A hero is ten times more attractive to a boy than is a set of ideals, or the beauty of nature. Give him an idealized character who has ideals and love for nature, and the two become real to him, by imitation. Oh, how we boys used to run around the yard in the afternoons and on Saturdays, a sharpened slat for a sword, and the lid of the ash-can for a shield! Many a sword did the doughty Lancelot break upon the stainless shield of pure Sir Galahad before an admiring group of neighbor children!

Slowly but surely our reading was made up of books just a little deeper and harder to understand than before. If Mother had read us just the things that were easy for us, there would have been no sequel to it all. She went on from simple to the more difficult, from the less to the greater, but never once did she let down the bars for books that were not worth while. Even when we were very young, as I recall, we nearly split our sides at "Sammy Veller," and Sancho Panza, the accomodating squire of the last of the knights errant. And our hearts bled with pity or beat with excitement at the stirring adventures of the "Scottish Chiefs."

Above all, I am grateful that Mother early began to read us stories from the Bible, the one best and most loved Book. And I am grateful that in the after years she, under a compelling constraint of the wonder of the Book, led me to know its central Figure, the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me.

One word here, lest any gather a wrong impression about my brother and me. We were normal boys. There were times when we were very bad boys, myself particularly (I always envied my brother his

SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

For your own protection—

The peril of the road crossing has become a national problem with the multiplication of automobiles.

The Southern Railway System has eliminated 584 grade crossings, and is eliminating more every year, but 7,000 remain to be separated on this system alone. The total cost to complete the work is a stupendous sum—probably half as much as the cost to build the railroads.

Even if the money were available, and the public willing to pay the increased freight and passenger rates necessary to provide a fair return on it, many years would be required to do the work.

Protection from the peril for the present generation at least must be found in some other way. Trains cannot stop at every crossing if they are to be run at the sustained speed expected by the public and required to carry the commerce of the country. The train crosses a highway about every mile. The motorist encounters a railroad only occasionally.

It is necessary, therefore, for the automobile driver to stop in order to avoid risk. No one who did this was ever killed. In North Carolina, where the law now requires such a stop, the number of road crossing accidents on our lines has been reduced one-half.

Grade crossing accidents can be prevented if you will approach the zone of danger determined to exercise caution For Your Own Protection.

It is better business to save a life than to save a minute.

Personal Responsibility

(Reprinted from the Saturday Evening Post)

Final dependence for a reduction in the number of railroad grade-crossing disasters must be placed upon the individual's sense of responsibility. If when approaching and crossing a railroad at grade the traveler will think of that crossing as a zone of danger to him, and regard himself and those with him as in imminent danger until the crossing is completed, the chances of accidents will be automatically reduced to the minimum.

Bible Sunday
December 9th

THEME
REMAKING THE ORIENT

Purpose
The earthquake in Japan has made large areas of the Far East practically Bibleless. Thousands of Bible printing plates in 25 languages and dialects used in Yokohama have been totally destroyed. They must be replaced at once or the whole missionary program will be seriously handicapped.

Need
The American Bible Society needs immediately $289,000 which to make good the actual losses, to say nothing of the enlarged opportunities.

Responsibility
is definitely up the Churches of America, whose agency for Bible work in the Far East is the American Bible Society.

Opportunity

goodness), and then we had to be chastised. When it had to be done, Mother did it. We were not unlike other boys. We had plenty of playmates. Indeed, it seemed that the whole of our neighborhood was usually in our back yard. Our father had given us a car seating about six children, made in the railroad shops, which ran on "real rails." We put an incline at one end of our large back yard and laid the track to the other end. We used to push the car up the incline, fill it up with ourselves and guests, and let it go. We usually had monopoly on the pins in the district, due to our railroad! There were also the usual number of gold mines and furnaces in the back yard to proclaim us as real boys, no "book-worms." And we had a dog, and loved him. But after all, the golden hours were those spent with Mother as she led our spirits into far and great places, enlarging the mansions of our souls.

How many times in these passing years have we boys thanked God from our hearts that he had given us a mother who would read to us. How well she knew that the boy is father to the man, that she would make of us in our younger days just what we would always be. She knew that the problem of reading was no light matter, no incidental problem, but that that which went into our minds controlled the springs of action and character. I covet for every boy and girl, just beginning to grow and think and ask, a parent who is willing to read.

Today my brother is a missionary in a foreign land. I am in Christian work. I cannot help wondering what would have been the outcome if, when we said to her, "Read, Mother, read," she had stopped. Life would have been different and, I know, not so worth while with the things that count. And often the echo of those words of ours comes back to me, whispered as if they were a mandate and invitation to all mothers who have in their care the destiny of their children: "If you want your children to be all that they ought to be, 'Read, Mother, read!'"

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To relieve Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer from rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any curable condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred on the average report no benefit.

Shivar Springs,

Box 3 B, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your offer and enclose herewith three dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if I report no benefit you agree to refund the price of the water in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return within a month.

"WAR—ITS CAUSES, CONSEQUENCES AND CURE"

SUCH is the title of a little book by Kirby Page. The book is published by George H. Doran Company, and may be had in paper cover for 15 cents. We know of no better way to invest 15 cents. The book is crowded with facts and arguments touching the causes of war. All classes of our people should be interested in such information and discussion; and all who are in position to exercise an influence on public opinion are under obligation to possess such information. Even those who have been at considerable pains to inform themselves touching the causes and the course of the recent World War will probably discover, if they will read Mr. Page's book, that they have really been very poorly informed, and have done a great deal of lop-sided thinking.

Mr. Page does not exculpate Germany. He leaves his readers to believe that Germany was the principal criminal in starting the war; but he furnishes them ample reason to believe that Germany was not the only criminal in bringing about a state of tense antagonism between the nations of Europe which made war inevitable. If he does not make us think better of Germany, he will likely make us think a little less well of Germany's adversaries.

In weighing the gains and losses of the war Mr. Page gives us much food for thought. Nearly all the consequences of the terrible conflict are on the side of loss. After classifying the losses under various heads, and giving some startling details, he summarizes in one brief sentence. The war "cost 26 million lives, 337 billion dollars, the moral deterioration of whole nations, spiritual tragedies beyond computation, and the sowing of the seeds of future wars."

In answering the question, "How can future wars be prevented, the author specifies five different agencies, all of which should be called into operation. In this chapter of his book he marshals many interesting and significant facts, and uses them as the basis of telling and compelling arguments. The last of the five preventive measures is "the creation of an International mind." Touching this he says: "The prevention of war depends, in the last analysis, upon new attitudes of mind." To this statement we give our unqualified assent. While men remain what they are, they will continue to do the same old way. The only way to get them to change their conduct is to get them to change their mind. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? Then may ye also learn to do good, who are accustomed to do evil."

This brings us to the chapter in which the author asks, "What shall the churches do about war?" We would answer that the churches should devote themselves wholeheartedly and exclusively to bringing about a changed attitude of mind, not only toward war, but toward all sin. This is the church's mission. It deals with the individual, and it begins with the cry, "Repent, and believe the Gospel." It puts first things first. Man's supreme obligation is to the God who made him and redeemed him. The church's primary business is to get men right with God. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness." Till man's relations to God are properly adjusted, his relations to his fellow-man will not be. "The first and greatest of all commandments is, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, soul, mind and strength. The second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." The church cannot devote its energies to the hopeless task of getting men to discharge their duties to each other while neglecting their superior duty to God. "Make the tree good and its fruit good" is the high task to which the church is called. The church is disloyal to its Divine Head if it gives itself to seeking good fruit on bad trees. We totally dissent from some of Mr. Page's views as to the duty of the churches; but we can endorse this strong statement: "Let the churches of America say: 'We will never again sanction or participate in any war. We will not allow our pulpits and class-rooms to be used as recruiting stations.'" We would have endorsed him, had he gone further and said: "We will never permit the national flag to float over our churches, or to be displayed within their sacred walls." In other words, the church should have nothing to do in the way of helping or directly hindering war. Mr. Page calls attention to the fact that Jesus spent His life in the midst of a people who were in a perpetual state of political unrest which found frequent expression in armed revolt; and yet Jesus never said a word for or against. Why did not Mr. Page find there the law for Christ's Church? Jesus recognized that wars were a matter of national or international concern, and His only way of dealing with such matters was by transforming individual lives. When His work is complete, war will be no more. The church is wise that sticks to His method. Let the church put the Spirit of Christ into politicians and then these will put the Spirit of Christ into international problems.

THE PROGRESSIVE PROGRAM PUBLICITY

It is said that the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light. In this generation, however, the children of light are showing some worldly wisdom.

The Progressive Campaign Committee is using publicity methods with an astuteness that equals that of the children of this world, and are doing so in a most commendable way and with encouraging results.

The pastor who claims that his officers can carry out the plans of the Stewardship Committee may in exceptional cases do so successfully, but as a general thing he will find that after all he has to use some of their plans.

Last year this Committee used with great success a series of four folders, one for each week preceding the Every Member Canvass. By means of these folders that appealed to the eye through striking pictures and to the mind through figures equally striking, there was a wonderful increase in benevolences. Those churches that used the folders made such a notable increase in their contributions that there should be no longer any doubt as to the wisdom of their use.

This year another set of folders has been prepared, far more striking than those of last year. They will be ordered by the different churches, one for each week preceding the Every Member Canvass, and the series of four should be sent to the members of each church, under the direction of the session.

Here, for example, is a congregation composed of busy men and women who are only imperfectly acquainted with the needs of the work. The mail brings to every member each week for a month a different folder.

No. 1 shows the benefits of tithing as practiced by a converted heathen.

No. 2 gives the story of a carpenter who with wife, baby, hammer and saw and $75.00 in money, rose to become a contractor, and he credits his success to his recognition of God as a partner in his business.

No. 3 gives the experience of a converted African who rose from ignorance and poverty to becoming a good doctor and one of the richest men in Mutoto.

No. 4 shows what Christ did for a rice merchant in China.

Each of these folders is printed in different colors, so that the pictures express just what the words tell.

These folders are the conception of Mr. J. B. Spillman.

The session of each church should buy from the Stewardship Committee, in Chattanooga, a sufficient number to supply each member of the church, and one should be sent each week, during the month preceding the "Every Member Canvass."

The first page of these folders is devoted to the work of the Stewardship Committee, the inside page is used for one of the Assembly Causes, while the Causes of the Synod, Presbytery and local church occupy the back page.

The price is $5.60 per hundred sets of four each. The Church bought 76,000 sets of a similar folder last year.

Each Synod can get a separate edition when a sufficient number of orders are received.

A PROPHET WITH HONOR IN HIS OWN COUNTRY

The Scripture says that a prophet is not without honor, but in his country, and among his own kin, and in his own house. This seems to imply that a man has to leave home to be honored.

There are, however, exceptions to this rule. At the Montreat Assembly there was a faithful minister, little known outside of his own Synod, who was prophet enough to see the cloud foretelling a doctrinal storm. In order to strengthen the hearts of those who might be called upon to meet its first fury, he introduced a strong paper that in a brief way stated the belief of the Church with regard to the fundamental doctrines, and calling upon Presbyteries to see that their members were true to these beliefs. Before he had time to explain the reason for this paper, it was in the most unceremonious manner laid upon the table. In our account of the proceedings of the Assembly we said that if the mover of this excellent paper had been better known that he would have fared better.

On Thanksgiving Day his brethren of the Synod of Arkansas, in appreciation of his faithful services as Chairman of the Home Mission Committee of the Synod for 20 years, presented him with a check for nearly $800.

Dr. J. C. Williams, of Prescott, Ark., is the prophet who has been honored in this substantial manner.

We congratulate these brethren of the Synod on their generous recognition of merit, and we give them credit, not only for thus honoring a faithful worker in the home field, but also one who stood on the walls of Zion and warned the Church of the approach of the enemy, even though the far-seeing and would-be leaders were deaf to his warning.

EXECUTIVE SECRETARY OF MEN'S WORK

This is a new office in the Church, authorized by the General Assembly. The Church has for some time had under consideration far-reaching plans relating to the more complete organization of the men of the Church. This plan or work contemplates the conservation of all the development among the men in the past 15 years under the leadership of the Laymen's Missionary Movement and the co-ordination of this in a larger measure with the life and work of the church as a whole.

The Permanent Committee on Men's Work has unanimously elected to the office of Executive Secretary, Rev. J. E. Purcell, pastor of St. Andrew's Church, Wilmington, N. C., and he has accepted the position.

Mr. Purcell is peculiarly adapted to this work, and we are sure that in his selection the Committee has acted wisely.

THE PRAYER CALENDAR FOR 1924

This is the combined work of the four Executive Committees of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. It is published by our Richmond Committee, at the price of 15 cents each, 1.50 per dozen.

A careful study of this Calendar will impress the reader with the real talent required to cover so much ground in so little space.

The four departments of our work are each given space, and all facts bearing upon them are laid before the reader, so that the daily prayers offered in their behalf are such that they are uttered not only with the spirit, but with the understanding also.

A more extensive use of this Calendar on the part of our people will insure a greater knowledge of our work and a greater sympathy with our workers, viewed from the human side, and a greater outpouring of the Spirit on the divine side.

"BARIUM MESSENGER"

The Barium Orphanage has again decided to have its own paper, a very wise decision.

The Church always responds to appeals from the fatherless ones, and the best way to keep this cause before the Church is by a weekly messenger. This new paper is a very creditable representative of our young folks at Barium, in whose welfare we are always interested.

The variety adds to its attractiveness and shows that there are editors in embryo, who will some day step in our shoes, while we enjoy our well-earned rest.

We shall always be glad to have a message from The Messenger.

BULLETIN FOR SMALL CHURCHES

Dr. Melvin is always alive to every method of reaching people. His latest plan is to supply the smaller churches with a weekly bulletin at a nominal cost.

The inside pages will be devoted to church news and facts bearing upon the work, while on the outside pages the local news and order of the service will be printed by means of the mimeograph or typewriter.

This is an excellent idea for reaching the people. In the interval before service there is always time for reading and reflecting.

We are sure that the condensed news and facts will make a deeper impression under such circumstances than at any other time.

The people in the pew can the better concentrate their thoughts upon the presented facts, and in church work facts speak louder than words.

Our experience in different pastorates for many years taught us that the average Presbyterian congregation is peculiarly susceptible to the influence of facts.

Daniel Webster at the death of John C. Calhoun said of him that he was never able to argue against the truth, because truth to his mind was sacred.

The same may be said of our people. You give them facts, and at once they will rally to a cause.

Here is the pastor's opportunity to present facts at a time when the mind is most susceptible.

GETHSEMANE

In golden youth when seems the earth
A summer-land of singing mirth,
When souls are glad and hearts are light,
And not a shadow lurks in sight,
We do not know it, but there lies
Somewhere veiled under evening skies
A garden which we all must see—
The garden of Gethsemane.

With joyous steps we go our ways,
Love lends a halo to our days;
Light sorrows sail like clouds afar,
We laugh, and say how strong we are,
We hurry on; and hurrying, go
Close to the border-land of woe,
That waits for you, and waits for me—
Forever waits Gethsemane.

Down shadowy lanes, across strange streams,
Bridged over by our broken dreams;
Behind the misty caps of years,
Beyond the great salt fount of tears,
The garden lies. Strive as you may,
You cannot miss it in your way.
All paths that have been, or shall be,
Pass somewhere through Gethsemane.

All those who journey, soon or late,
Must pass within the garden's gate;
Must kneel alone in darkness there,
And battle with some fierce despair,
God pity those who cannot say,
"Not mine but Thine," who only pray,
"Let this cup pass," and cannot see
The purpose in Gethsemane.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Devotional

"IF THOU FAINT IN THE DAY OF ADVERSITY, THY STRENGTH IS SMALL"

Maltbie D. Babcock once said: "If God, then, puts or permits anything hard in our lives, be sure that the real peril, the real trouble is what we shall lose if we flinch or rebel." Our danger is not from the adversity but from the fainting. One in a swoon is a pitiful spectacle of weakness, yet that is a fitting picture of him who gives way before adversity. Who knows that it is not heaven-sent? "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth." It is a shame for a Christian to die of shock. "There is Someone who gives us our licks," and they should but toughen us. The book of Hebrews was evidently written to put nerve into weak Christians, and we read after the lesson of chastening: "Wherefore lift up the hands which hang down and the palsied knees."

My soul, when adversity is thy lot, faint not, nor tremble. Be strong, be strong! Be not as a whimpering child under the whip, but, as Latimer said to Ridley at the stake, "Be of good comfort and play the man."

"Rest in the Lord, my soul;

This fretting weakens thee.

Why not be still? Accept His will;

Thou shalt His glory see."—Babcock.

—J. E. Mead, in N. Y. Advocate.

FOR THE GREATER GAME

"Now I want to tell you men something," exclaimed the football coach to his squad, preliminary to the scrimmage. "I've been watching you pretty closely the last few weeks, and I notice that some of you are going in pretty strong for 'cats,' others for late hours, and still others for smoking. You'll have to cut them out. When you go up against the opposing team I'll expect you to buck the line at the weakest point, and that's a good principle to remember in training. Find out what your weakness is, if you don't already know, and then throw all your strength relentlessly against it."

There is something very practical about this advice, though it is to be feared that not all of us are so ready to follow it. Everyone who knows anything at all about football knows that it is wise for a team to mass its strength at the point where the opposing line is weakest, but it does seem that he frequently forgets to apply the same common-sense idea to himself. As a result, battles are often lost to the world that involve far graver issues than those that take place on the gridiron or on the baseball diamond.

Yet we need not be in ignorance of our weak points. In the words of the coach, every one of us is apt to go in "pretty strong" for some one thing that pleases the fancy or appeals to the desires. It may be laziness. It may be inordinate love of pleasure. But we need not be ignorant of what it is. Our parents and friends usually know. The Bible is a faithful mentor in this direction, too. Honest self-analysis, a conscientious moral scrutiny, will often reveal much.

The question is, "Am I willing to buck the line of least resistance when I find out what and where it is?" Am I willing to mass my energies and resolutions, to summon my powers of mind and body and hurl them against the enemy's point of attack, that I may be at my best in the great game of life I am called upon to play? Think how doing this one thing alone may multiply our life value! The idle stream follows the line of least resistance when it flows downhill. How it would multiply its value to the world over and over again if only it could be made to flow uphill when man needs its help and energy.

Of course, doing this thing presupposes a proper appraisal of the importance of the game in which you are engaged. The youth who cares nothing for the honor and traditions of his college has no place upon the team. He who thinks more of himself than he does of the issues at stake is sure to betray it at the first opportunity. And unless we can go into life knowing what it means, understanding something of the issues involved in it not only for ourselves but for others also, we are going to make a poor showing in the crucial hour. Until one really believes with all his heart that the goals at stake—honor, success, happiness, influence—are worth the price he must pay for them, he will make little effort and little progress in mastering himself.—Forward.

"I get so tired of trying to be good all the time," complained a little pilgrim on the pathway of right. And the wise mother answered: "But I am not talking about all the while—that is a long way ahead—I am only asking you to be good just now." If only those of us who are older could forget the long look ahead and remember that all duty asks of us is our best just now, how it would smooth the way!

THE FOREIGN CHAPEL AT KWANG-JU, KOREA

By Rev. L. T. Newland

There are many privations to be met on the mission field, but like most troubles in life, they are not what they are supposed to be. The physical welfare of the missionary is well cared for, thanks to the kindly interest of our committee. The Southern Presbyterian Church has not a single mission field where the worker is in any actual danger from the natives of the land. Due to the very wise plan of putting the workers in stations instead of scattering them as individuals about a country, there is but little suffering from that devastating loneliness which is the supreme cup of suffering to be drunk by any one who is cut off from his native land. None of these things move us, but I am going to tell a little about one form of hardship that we at Kwang-ju felt and the plans we are taking to overcome this difficulty.

Kwang-ju is a large station with 30 adults and 27 children. We have a beautiful, large compound, and all except two of our families have homes. Naturally with so many foreigners we have our own social life, in fact a little oasis of America in a wilderness of the Far East. But being missionaries and Presbyterians, we feel the need of regular Sunday services, and also having a good, big crowd of children, we feel that we must have a school. In my childhood I lived in a Methodist section of the country and we had cottage prayer meetings where from 10 to 20 of the faithful would come out for the meetings. I can remember how this number crowded the biggest room in the house and took considerable thought on the part of the housewife to get together enough chairs for the occasion.

In Kwang-ju, when we are all here there are over 50 of church-attending age in the station and very often we have visitors. To accommodate this number even our large homes, built to provide semi-hotel room for visitors, are far too small. It detracts from the service to have several peering around doors trying to see the minister, and if some good little missionary boy gets tucked away in the corner, there is liable to be trouble in that particular spot before the service is over. And besides it does not seem like a real church to have the ordinary furnishings of a living room surrounding you on every side during the service.

It was one of the station members, whose daughter is grown, that first began agitating the question of whether missionaries had a right to attend a real church on Sunday or not, and whether the children of missionaries, deprived of all contact with the home-land, must necessarily become seven years old before they see the inside of a church. Our numbers had outgrown any of our homes, so it seemed like the right moment to start a church building campaign to get a building that will be used wholly and solely for our foreign service. This may sound foolish and extravagant, but when your home memories are twined around the old home church it is a little hard to spend your years meeting either in the sitting room of a home or out in the mud walls of a native hut. And it is harder to have your children say wistfully, as you tell them about the Sunday Schools at home, "I wish I could see a sure-enough church."

So Kwang-ju Station got together on the church proposition and in good American style passed around the subscription list and here at least everyone did as he was able and more. True some had to mortgage their salary for months in advance, and others had to hold long and anxious conferences, for though the missionaries' salary is warranted not to shrink, the guarantee is equally emphatic as to its stretching. But out of a station of 11 homes $1,000 was raised, and with this and a great deal of faith we went ahead. A friend in America sent out $500 as soon as he heard of the plan, but the building is to cost about $2,300 when it is finished, and so we are still $800 short. The school proposition reduced this still more, as you will see later.

Much as we needed the church, we decided that we could not think of ourselves that much were it not for the fact that we must have a foreign school too. There are 15 children of school age now and we already have a teacher for them. Certainly with two families more than we have houses for, there is no room in the homes on the compound for a school room, and even if there were, the average dwelling, with its porches and window arrangement, is not meant for a school room. Here again we felt that the best we could do by the children was to give them as near a real school as possible and not to make them any more conspicuous when they come to enter the American schools than is necessary.

It was decided therefore to put our chapel on the side of a hill or rather a bank, and put the school under a part of the building and the chapel in the upper part, but with the approaches on two levels, so the school would really be separate from the church. This did not add a great deal more to the cost and provided a nice, large, airy room with the lighting all on the east side, plenty of blackboard space, and planned on a small scale just like a room in America. To help us out in this part of the building the Committee sent $300 more.

The building is now going up. It has a Gothic roof, with real churchy windows, a real pulpit and good, strong brick walls. Like Nehemiah of old, all of us take turns walking around this, our temple, but unlike him, we greatly admire her bulwarks, for we feel that it is going to fill a real need in our station, will tone up our own spiritual life, and make the worship of God a more real and devotional matter to our children.

The Permanent Equipment drive is supposed to provide equipment for the school building, but nothing has come out of that yet, meanwhile our children continue to grow and the school must be run. Already we parents are paying one-half of a teacher's salary, all the school expense and now we are forced to advance money on permanent equipment and buy desks, maps, tables, blackboards and all the equipment of a school, and being short of money, naturally we have to get along with many makeshifts that would not be tolerated in the poorest colored school in America.

The building itself is almost paid for, but there are no furnishings for either the chapel or school. We feel that we were justified in erecting this house of worship and learning and we are going to keep at it until it is all complete, but meanwhile when we see so many appeals for new churches and schools in our Church papers, we feel like there may be some at home who would like to have a part in giving this large group of missionaries a real church home and to help them in the heavy task of providing an education for their children in a foreign land.

We can get good school desks out here for $7.50 apiece, and other furnishings can be had as cheaply from the carpenters out in the Orient as from America, only the work is not as good nor the wood as durable. If you want to have a part in this work that must be called extra mission work, write either to Mr. M. L. Swinehart or any member of the Kwang-ju station, or if you want to make a contribution to the permanent equipment budget for the foreign school, just send that to Mr. Willis, with directions as to what it is to be used for.

In one month we will be in our chapel, and I am sure every one of us will find, as David did, that our hearts are glad because we can now say, come and let us go up to the house of the Lord.

Kwang-ju, Korea.

MISSIONARY COTTON

By Miss Maggie Whitesides

The Band of Earnest Workers had their ingathering at Steele Creek Church, November 30, 1923. The meeting was opened with a song and the reading of scripture and prayer by Rev. J. M. Walker, our pastor. The children had a very interesting program. Address of welcome, songs, recitation and two pieces, "Give Us a Chance" and "Bag of Wishes."

We are indebted to the teachers in the schools for this good program, for they practiced the children at school.

Miss Laura Grier recited a beautiful story, "How An Artist Forgot Four Colors." He was asked to paint a picture on a window of children in heaven. He put it on canvas, and had them all white, but was reminded that God loved the red, yellow, brown and black child, so the picture was changed.

We then had a very interesting address by Dr. G. F. Robertson, of Bristol, Tenn., on the Bible text Prov. 6:22, which means that God leads us by His Word when we go to our work or wherever we go. When we sleep, when it is all dark about us and we are dead to everything around us, it keeps us; God never slumbers nor sleeps. When we awake, God will talk to us by His Word if we will let Him.

Next we had a splendid address by Rev. S. A. Ewart, of Mulberry. This was a special talk to the children—Christ feeding the five thousand; told about Christ taking the lad's dinner that he had brought for himself, and multiplied it, and fed them all with his five loaves and two fishes—showing that Christ used children to help Him to perform a great miracle. God can and is using children to feed the multitude with spiritual food now.

We had a fine address by Rev. J. F. Ligon, of the Tenth Avenue Church, Charlotte, a missionary talk on Rom. 10:13, "Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved"—showing that the heathen cannot call on Him when they have not heard; they cannot hear without a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent. Now that is our work—we need men and money to send the Gospel to the heathen; we have the men, some ready to go, and not enough money to send them. That is what you are doing; continue to do all you can; we are responsible for sending the Gospel to thirty-three million. Will we do it?

We reported the amount given by this band since they were organized 25 years ago—$5,496.50. We have about two bales of cotton. One man gives a whole bale. Our collection at the meeting was $162.30.

We closed this pleasant day with a picnic dinner served in our new Sunday School room, which is not quite finished.

PRESBYTERIAN PROGRESSIVE

PROGRAM

Depts. I and IV

Spiritual Life --- Fellowship

DECEMBER IN THE CHURCHES

During the month of December, according to the "Schedule of Activities" as adopted by the General Assembly, our whole Church is called upon to especially emphasize Department I, of the Progressive Program. The aim of this department is to "nourish the spiritual life of the church membership." It is well that this month should be given over to the study of this department. Within it we will be brought nearer to the foot of the cross as we remember in public programs and private devotions the birth of our Lord and Saviour. It has been the experience of the Church that when the spiritual life of the Church is properly nourished all other departments and plans progress most satisfactorily. The chairman of this department has a great responsibility and a great privilege in the local church. Every member should give him and his plans the right of way during the month and help him in every way he asks.

Some Objectives to Remember

Our Church must never forget the tremendous spiritual force of the family altar, nor allow any state to remain unturned in efforts to place a family altar in every home. The preparation of the literature and the promotion of this most excellent work is now being efficiently done by the Executive Committee of Publication and Sabbath Schools, Mr. R. E. Magill, executive secretary. The chairmen in the local churches should get in touch with Mr. Magill. The establishment of the altar in every home is a prelude to effective public and private prayer. And prayer moves things.

Neither can we afford to forget the teaching of the Bible and the Catechisms of our Church in the homes, Sunday Schools, and where possible in the week-day schools. Sabbath observance, one of the early fundamentals of our Church, needs renewed and enlarged emphasis, and this department of our program is charged with this responsibility.

December is a most excellent time to emphasize the need of church loyalty, as expressed in better church attendance, enlargement of the Sunday School attendance and enrollment, and a new emphasis on the young people's organizations, and a new appreciation of the fine opportunities these organizations offer the whole Church as a splendid training ground in church loyalty and complete enlistment of life in the service of Christ. All of the goals of Department I are of easy attainment if the church has a will to work and a fellowship that is vital and a prayer life that is effective. R. C. L.

"THE DAYSPRING FROM ON HIGH"

This is the attractive title that Dr. Henry H. Sweets, Executive Secretary of the C. E. and M. R. Committee, has given to the program to be used in Sunday Schools and churches on the Sunday preceding Christmas day. It is perhaps the best program of the sort ever put out for use in the church, and is one of the choicest pieces of literature issued by any church. Many churches will have their program during Christmas week, but whenever or wherever rendered, the program is sure to have a most splendid effect on any audience. Supplemental material is furnished with the program and sent to all Sunday School superintendents. It gives suitable material for a good program with little work required to put it on.

In Sunday Schools and churches not making the every member canvass, the General Assembly asks that a special offering be taken for Christian Education and Ministerial Relief. Too much cannot be said about the worthiness and urgency of this great work of the Church carried on under the direction of Dr. Sweets. Securing men for the ministry, aiding men preparing for the ministry, promoting schools and colleges, placing workers in fields of usefulness, increasing salaries paid to ministers, caring for aged and infirm ministers, their wives and children—these are some of the things this committee is charged with. It takes the spiritual and financial backing of the whole Church to put over a big program such as this. Surely the Church cannot afford to be found wanting.

A well selected book of "Christmas Carols" has been published by the Christian Education and Ministerial Relief Committee and is being sold at 25 cents a copy, $2.50 a dozen. It contains none but real spiritual carols and is pronounced by many authorities in the musical world as the most helpful selection that can be secured. Churches will do well to use this book during the Christmas season in the worship and in the various organizations. R. C. L.

LAST ACTIVE CHAPLAIN OF CONFEDERACY SMILES STILL

Militant Patriarch Keeps Young by Keeping Very Busy

By Ben Dixon MacNeill

Now and then some doctor or other gets his name into the papers by sagely announcing that after all a man is no older than his arteries. Or maybe it is no older than his teeth, or his hair, or his glandular equipment. Or perhaps he solemnly says to look at the skin on the back of your hand to tell whether you are doddering toward senility.

Whereupon all the other doctors in the country are bedeviled by all the hypochondriac laymen to see whether their arteries, glands, hair, teeth, skin, or whatever the prevailing craze suggests, are working properly, and if not what can be done to prod them into some realization of their functions.

All of them may be right. But the only real way to determine whether a man is old is to watch him when he smiles. If it comes like a suffusion of gentle light, he is not an old man. If it comes in a rattling cackle, he is old, and the number of years he has inhabited the planet has nothing to do with it. If he cackles, he is old, and if he doesn't, he isn't.

Rev. H. G. Hill, D.D.

All the men in the world who invent these popular indices of age might marshal themselves before Dr. H. G. Hill, pluck at his arteries, teeth, hair, skin, and make learned analysis of the functionings of his glands, and then with the help of his birth certificate—only they didn't have them in his youth—solemnly declare that he is 92 years old, come the 20th day of this month.

And Dr. Hill would smile gently upon them. With such a provocation, he might even chuckle a little. Not that he would think of denying that he was born November 20, 1831. He isn't particularly proud of it and he isn't ashamed of it. Being 92 years old is of mighty little concern to him—except for the fact that his family thinks that he might not be safe driving his own automobile.

Dr. Hill is not going to argue the point. He never argues. That is one of the reasons that he is 92 years old and still preaches to his congregations twice every Sunday in the year, and since that is not enough to absorb his energies, runs a one-horse farm, travels around among his neighbors, takes long trips to perform marriage ceremonies or to put the stalwart hands of his faith under the bending shoulders of sorrow.

But some day the Doctor is going to drive his sedan sedately into the streets of Maxton and give his old mare a rest. His grandson will in all likelihood act as his mentor in such instructions as he may need in the technicalities of navigation. The lad is 10 years old, and the Doctor is very proud of the fact that one so young can drive a car. But not surprised. Is he not his own grandson. And do they not take trips together.

Nor will the congregation which he has served for 36 years as pastor be surprised to see its dominion come driving into town from his place three miles in the country. The ancient sexton of the church, who drives the Doctor's car when he is needed for a driver, solemnly charged though he is not to teach his master to drive, knows him too well to be surprised. He only hopes that he will not be caught for speeding.

Ninety-two years! And still he smiles serenely at life, calm in his acceptance of it, his head unbowed under the weight of sorrows nor his heart proud for the joys that have embroidered the four-score and ten years of his pilgrimage. Older than any man, by the calendar, who preaches the Word of his Master in the State, the last active chaplain of the Confederate Armies, energetic in body and mind and in spirit.

Six thousand times and more he has mounted into the pulpit on Sunday and preached to his people. Fifty years ago he was known throughout the state as one of its greatest preachers, a brilliant scholar, a powerful orator, and none in the Church was more profoundly versed in the doctrines of John Calvin and John Knox. Forty years ago he had seemingly reached the pinnacle of his career, and then at 60 and at 70 and at 80, active, energetic, and with the powers of his mind undimmed.

And now when he goes into his pulpit on Sunday morning to preach, either at the Maxton Church or out in the country at Center, or in the afternoons at one of the two mission churches, it is with a fresh message that he as he has ever been in his 92 years. He resigned, and after supplying a church in Charleston for a summer, accepted a call to Maxton and Center Churches. He has been there ever since. Honors have come to him in great number, moderator of the General Assembly, moderator of the Synod, and the trusteeship of many boards. Nearest his heart has always been the Presbyterian Orphanage, at Barium Springs.

Old he is not. Some day his body may wear out, but the spirit, never. He will die with a smile on his face. Creeping age brings so many back in a tragic circle to childhood again, with the pitiful spectacle of a man bent of body and his spirit crippled. But not Dr. Hill. He will smile serenely at life's long unfolding, in simple faith and in undeviating devotion.

Nobody could resist asking the Doctor how he had lived 92 years, if there was any hidden art about it. There isn't. "I have always been busy, and I have never had any excesses." That is all the explanation he has for it. "I don't mind old age—it is the natural thing—but I don't let it worry me."

"You know I'll be having a birthday now shortly. I'll be 92, and my congregation has a custom to give me a dollar for every year. They have been doing it for a great many years now—I think I was about 80 when they started it." And he smiled when his visitor's jaw dropped at such casual mention of a great many years—since he was 80.

It had been 28 years since we had first seen Dr. Hill, at a little mission chapel away up in the upper edge of Scotland County. The impression is as vivid as if it had happened yesterday. Among the Doctor's mannerisms of the pulpit platform is the stamping of his foot by way of emphasis, almost as if he would lift his short stature to imposing heights to give weight to the weight to the sweep of his eloquence.

He still stamps his foot, and he lifts it just as high as he did away back in 1896, when he was not yet 70. And how far back his memory travels! "You give Mrs. Daniels my compliments and say that I was many a time a guest in the house of her grandfather, Governor Worth. He was a very fine man, and I know she must be a very fine woman. She wrote me about the Wilson Foundation. I was glad to contribute. Wilson is the greatest American." And how keen are his current perceptions.

Some day somebody must write an obituary of him. They come to everybody. And what things could be written of him! Of the throngs that have swayed under his eloquence, of the thousands who have been brought under the sternly compassionate appeal of his preaching, of the third and fourth generations descended from marriages that were performed by him, of the countless visits he has made, of the silent host of those whom he has buried.

But when they have said all that of him, let them add that he smiled serenely when his years were come into a great number.—News and Observer, Raleigh, N. C.

"WOMEN ON THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEES"

Further References to History

By Rev. W. M. McPheeters, D.D.

The editorial that appeared in the issue of this paper of August 15th has had at least one good effect. It has served to remind us as a church that we have a history, and are committed to some principles of church government; that our Assembly is not a law unto itself, but, whether it recognizes the fact or not, is itself a creature of the constitution, and subject to the constitution. Without pretending to umpire between the high contending parties, I may perhaps be permitted to express the personal opinion that the editor of the STANDARD has made good his contention against Dr. Lingle, and shown a commission is simply and extraordinary committee.

That raises the question what is a committee? I hope that the following quotations from Thornwell's writings may throw some needed light upon this question, in regard to which we seem to be in danger of drifting into harmful confusion. The passages referred to deal with the distinction between Boards and executive committees. That distinction, as will be seen resolves itself into this: a Board is an organism distinct from the Assembly creating it, whereas the executive committee is an organ of the Assembly: the former, as a confidential agent, acts for the Assembly the latter is simply the Assembly itself acting through an appropriate organ. He says:

"The Boards are not the instruments by which the Assembly acts, but they stand in the place of the Assembly, and wield its powers in their given fields of operation. The difference, then, between Executive Committees and Boards is just the difference between an instrument and an agent, between acting in a particular way and having another act for you" (Collected Writings, iv, p. 162. Italics Thornwell's). Again he writes:

"What is a Board of this Assembly? In the first place it is an organism and not an organ. It is a complete body, to which the General Assembly has entrusted a part of the work committed to it." (Ibid., p. 220.)

comes among his people. There is no delving back into the archives of his sermons. It is an old-fashioned doctrinal sermon, but modernized and meet for examples to many of the young theologians who come down from the seminaries.

Every morning he reads his newspaper from the front page headlines to the comic strip in the back page—and we are not going to quarrel with him because it is this paper that he reads—then to his Greek Testament and the works of the Biblical scholars, or to some current literature. After that he goes abroad on his farm, or drives his mare off to some neighbor's house. He never thinks of age.

It seems almost trite and superfluous to say that Dr. Hill is the most impressive figure in the Presbyterian Church in the United States, or the entire world. He was born in Raleigh, in 1831, the son of William R. Hill, an official of the first State Bank, and a nephew of William Hill, for 60 years Secretary of State for North Carolina. He was educated at Hampden-Sidney College, graduating in 1857.

Four years of his life were devoted to teaching, at a girl's school in Virginia and at Oxford Female Seminary. And then his entry into the ministry, and the outbreak of the Civil War. He entered the service, and later became chaplain to the Scales Regiment. After the war he was again in the ministry, and while pastor of a church at Milton, in Caswell County, organized the Presbyterian Church at Henderson. In 1866 he became pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, in Fayetteville.

Eighteen years later he was as near to being worn out

It will be observed that here by necessary implication Thornwell represents the Executive Committee as an organ of the Assembly, that is an integral part of the governmental machinery of the Church, just as my hand is of my body. This is established by this further statement:

"A committee is the very hand of the Assembly and not the hand of its servant. A Commission is the Assembly perpetuated. It is the living body. The church acting through her General Assembly, or a Commission of the Assembly, which is the same thing—or, again, through a Committee of the Assembly is like a man that uses his own limbs—limbs with which he was born, and which are living legs, forming part of his living body." (Ibid., p. 225.)

This view of the relation of the Executive Committees to the General Assembly is of fundamental importance, because our Form of Government teaches. (1). That ecclesiastical power is but of two kinds—namely, "the power of orders," or teaching, using the word broadly, and "the power of jurisdiction," or of discipline and administration. (2). That all church power is to be administered by "church officers." (3). That these officers "according to the Scriptures (are) Ministers of the Word, Ruling Elders, and Deacons." Accordingly, the General Assembly, if it is to be in subjection to the constitution that created it, and invested it with whatever powers it possesses, has no choice but to confine itself to these officers in the exercise of its administrative power. It has just as much right to order our sessions to place women upon the bench of Elders, as it has to instruct its administrative organs, the Executive Committees to add moments those bodies. The effect in either case would be to make women a part of the governing bodies of the Church. But, if I understand correctly their position, the majority even of those who voted for the lamentable action of the Orlando Assembly believe such a step to be plainly prohibited in God's Word.

Upon one point in this discussion I am happy to be in at least partial accord with my honored friend Dr. Lingle. Referring to the advice given to our Executive Committees by the editor of the STANDARD—namely, that they appoint three women as advisory members of their respective bodies. Dr. Lingle says: "This is an amazing piece of advice." If I characterized it at all, I should have to call it an unwise, and dangerous piece of advice. Men cannot wisely palter with the spirit of lawlessness, especially lawlessness in high places, and particularly lawlessness directed against the constitution of the Church and the Word of God. "I wot brethren that in ignorance" our Assembly did this thing. But that does not alter the character of the thing done. If without offense I may apply his own words to his own advice, it is Dr. Lingle's advice of passive obedience that is really amazing. It is in the very teeth of the practice the Presbyterian Church in those periods of its history of which we are all most justly proud; in the teeth of the teachings of our Book; in the teeth of the teaching and practice of our greatest, wisest, and soberest leaders. Indeed, if my information be correct, certain of our Committees have not hesitated to claim for themselves a large liberty in giving effect to instructions of the Assembly the legality of which was not called in question. Such a course on its face seems to be at least questionable propriety. And yet even in matters of mere expediency, I should be slow to condemn those who took time to appeal from Philip drunk to Philip sober. But where, as in this case, the instructions issued by an Assembly are clearly in violation of the basal principles of our constitution, and of the plain teachings of God's Word then those to whom they come, be they Committees, Presbyteries, or individuals, have no option but respectfully and firmly to decline to give such instructions effect. They will, of course, hold themselves prepared to accept in a spirit of meekness whatever censure a subsequent Assembly may impose, but in the meanwhile they will not have made themselves partakers of other men's sins.

This is the teaching of our Book. "The exercise of ecclesiastical power," it says, "whether joint or several, has the Divine sanction when in conformity with the statutes enacted by Christ, the Lawgiver." By necessary implication this teaches that it is only when in conformity with the statutes enacted by Christ that the exercise of ecclesiastical power has "the Divine sanction." And further it is the doctrine of our Book that "the Supreme Judge by which all controversies of religion are to be decided, and in whose decision we are to rest" is not the General Assembly, albeit we speak of it as our highest court, "but the Holy Spirit speaking in the Scriptures." Further still it is the doctrine of our Book that "God alone is Lord of the conscience, and hath left it free from the commandments of men which in anything are, contrary to His Word, or beside it in matters of faith and worship. So that to believe such doctrines, or to obey such commandments out of conscience, is to betray the true liberty of conscience; and the requiring an implicit faith, and absolute and blind obedience, is to destroy liberty of conscience and reason also."

We do well, therefore, in the present unhappy emergency to remind ourselves that, as there is a right of private judgment which no power on earth can wrest from the humblest of God's people, so there is also a duty of private judgment of which neither the individual, nor our sessions, presbyteries, and Synods can by any possibility divest themselves. They have no choice to obey God speaking in His Word rather than men.

The men who drew up the Letter of the Synod of Kentucky addressed to our Assembly in 1867 were no novices in Church government, nor would it be easy to find men more sober-minded, and less animated by a factious and lawless spirit. The doctrine laid down by men and endorsed by our Assembly reads in part as follows:

"While it is a duty to receive with reverence and submission, all such decrees as are consonant to the Word, yet (such) dangerous errors are not only to be silently disregarded as mere "commandments of men, to obey which would be to betray liberty of conscience," but are to be testified against; and all claim of authority resting upon them is to be resisted"—"nothing is more absurd and dangerous to Christian liberty than the conception, by an utterly false analogy, that office-bearers and lower courts are bound to obey as law until repealed, an act that is unconstitutional and therefore not constant to the Word of God, as citizens obey civil acts until repealed. Such a conception could occur only by reason of utter forgetfulness of all that our standards teach concerning liberty of conscience, and the non-obligatory character of decrees of councils that are not according to the Word of God.

A MESSAGE BY RADIO

A Thanksgiving message broadcasted November 28th by Radio Corporation of America, from Station W. R. C., Washington, D. C., given by Rev. Dr. James H. Taylor, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church of Washington, D. C.

It has been customary in our country to observe each year a day of national thanksgiving for blessings which we have received as a nation. This custom, which is distinctively an American custom, dates back to the time of the early settlers in New England.

That first winter was a disastrous one for the Pilgrims, many of whom had died because of hunger and cold, and the little colony was greatly reduced by the spring of 1621. However, after the return of a small harvest and the prospect that the following winter would not be so disastrous, the colonists held a harvest festival. This was probably the beginning of our Thanksgiving custom, but it was not incorporated into the life of the people as a custom to be observed by all until George Washington issued a Thanksgiving proclamation in 1789, and gave to this custom its national standing and observance. In this proclamation Washington announced that, "It is the duty of all nations to acknowledge the providence of Almighty God, to obey His will, to be grateful for His benefits, and humbly to implore His protection and favor."

Since that time it has been customary for the President to issue annually a proclamation calling upon the people to acknowledge the goodness and favor of God, and to return thanks for the blessings which have been received during the year past.

In pursuance of this well-observed custom, President Coolidge issued a proclamation calling upon all of the people of this land to observe Thursday, November 29th, as a day of Thanksgiving. This custom is entirely in accord with the spirit of our country. We are a most blessed people and a most favored nation. It is proper that we should continue to recognize the blessings of Providence in our national life, and that it is fitting the people of this country should have their attention called by an executive proclamation to the innumerable blessings that are ours. There is in this Thanksgiving Day custom a recognition of the fact of God in our national life; and this recognition must tend to promote our high appreciation of moral interests and spiritual purposes. No nation can hope to endure that leaves out of its national interest and concern spiritual principles and ideals. These are the great facts that make for national character and for national permanence. Aside from the mere duty of acknowledging our national blessings, this Thanksgiving Day custom must have a permanent effect in the maintenance of moral and spiritual realities. "Where there is no vision the people perish," but as long as the people of this country shall gather in their respective places of worship to acknowledge to Almighty God the blessings and favors that have been received—so long will these spiritual and moral forces be supported and maintained and made effective for permanency and power.

While some nations of the world during the past year have been in dire distress from poverty and hunger, and other nations have been rent asunder by internal strife or have been threatened by the bitterness and hate of rival nations, we of this favored land have been in comfort and security. It will be a false expression of our thanksgiving if we do not share with the suffering peoples of the world some of these blessings that have come to us. In this way Thanksgiving Day may take on a new and more effective power, in that we shall be impelled not only to give of our material blessings to help other nations, but from our moral sense of right and justice, from our sincere interest in weaker nations, from our sympathy for the national aspirations of little peoples, and from our spiritual idealism, we shall be able to give to the world that help and that encouragement which will make for mutual understanding and peaceful relationships.

SOME SUNDAYS IN EUROPE

By Barbara E. Lambdin

London—Our last Sunday on the other side was spent in London. From a tourist leaflet, for the 11 o'clock service, St. Columba's Church of Scotland, Point St., S. W., was chosen. It is wise, we discovered, for the traveler who wishes to visit non-conformist churches or missions abroad to get directions well in advance, as they are not among the "show places," and not known generally to the people on the street, and it takes some time to find them; but it is well worth it.

The question of how we shall spend God's holy day abroad is not a matter that we can settle offhand, to suit our own convictions, or even the convenience of others. Our consciences are often all too pliant when away from home traveling, and every minute counts. We forget that Evangelical churches and mission lands are injured or encouraged and sustained by our decision. But, truly, it is not all sacrifice to forego, lest we sin, some very desirable sightseeing. It is really only a substitution, a change about as to values. Such a trip affords a transcendent opportunity to study at first hand the progress of our faith in other lands. It is a glorious experience to be one in worship for a little while with others out of "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people;" it is just a little foretaste of what it will be when we gather around the great white throne—a foretaste of heaven!

"I Love Thy Church, O God," came like a welcoming voice on entering St. Columba's. And it was good to see, facing the entrance, in illuminated text in English, "Glory to God on High, and on Earth, Peace, Good Will to Men." Here again the high pulpit, reached by encircling steps, stood at the side and center of the long crowded building.

The pastor, Dr. Archibald Fleming, an elderly man, wore a white gown with black stole, and what seemed the doctor's cap at his back. He took for his text what he stated were apparently contradictions, Eccles. 1:9 and Rev. 21:5. He spoke of the groupings of philosophy, ancient and modern, for a philosophy of life here and beyond; of the belief of some that the world goes through an endless succession of advance, then decay, destruction, chaos; the hopelessness of it; then of the Epicurean philosophy that happiness consists in the remembrance of past pleasures, "feeding on the husks from which grain has been taken away;" while the Christian looks for "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." "Neither philosophy nor science," he continued, "can give happiness, that is the gift of God through His Son, Jesus Christ; eternal life, not a making-over of something old, but a new birth. We shall not die but live, for silently but surely in the heart that surrenders itself to Christ matures the life that cannot die, eternal life with Him." How appropriate the closing hymn, "Love Divine, All Loves Excelling."

The afternoon choral and prayer service in historic Westminster Abbey, in the presence of the tombs and monuments to so many of England's illustrious dead, with sermon by the Venerable R. H. Charles, D.D., archbishop and canon in residence, was a most impressive occasion. Notwithstanding the surplized choir, the partial intoning of the litany, and the number of clergy and attendants, it was a simple and refreshing service; but the sermon, on the Twenty-third Psalm, though beautiful and helpful, lacked the deep spirituality of the Scotch morning message.

Steamship—The very last Sunday service of our tour was on the "Olympic," as we sped through quiet seas homeward. It was conducted by the purser, and as usual on British vessels, the Anglican form was followed, but to the prayer for the king and royal family was added "the President of the United States and all others in authority." The Sailors' Psalm, the 107th, "They that go down to the sea in ships," was read with feeling; and led by the stringed orchestra, some of the most cherished hymns of the Church were sung: "Jesus Lover of My Soul," "How Sweet the Name of Jesus Sounds," and this by Keble, to the tune of Melcombe, "New Every Morning Is the Love," unknown to me except the frequently quoted fourth verse. It is a hymn well worth committing to memory, for it runs the gamut of the Christian's daily experience. And it is evidently a great favorite in the English Church, for it was sung also at the service on An Interesting Gift—The Girls' Industrial School at Tuscaloosa, Ala., is establishing a gift department where the work of their hands may be sold to bring them the means for securing their education.

Mrs. Motte Martin, our missionary to Africa, has supplied this department with a quantity of the beautiful African grass cloth woven from the native material. The girls are making this cloth into attractive scarfs decorating them with blue birds in stencil work. The material is about 18 inches wide and the scarfs will be made any length desired. The color is a beautiful tan, and the blue birds stencilled on it make a most attractive cover.

These covers sell for 50 cents per yard.

By ordering some of these for gifts, you are helping the work in Africa, the work of the girls at Tuscaloosa and securing a most attractive gift.

Order enclosing money from Mrs. I. A. Hart, Stillman Institute, Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Mrs. W. C. Winsborough.

Interdenominational Meetings—The annual meetings of the Council of Women for Home Missions and the Federation of Women's Boards for Foreign Missions, occurring in New York each January, are occasions of deep interest and inspiration to all who attend them.

January 5th-8th is the date set for the meetings of the Federation of Women's Boards in New York City. A strong program of wide scope will engage the attention of women interested in the great foreign mission work of the world.

The annual meeting of the Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions will be held in Atlantic City, New Jersey, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, January 14, 15, and 16, 1924.

The theme of the entire session will be "Working Together." The reports and addresses will show what the Protestant denominations have been doing together in the past year. Chalfonte-Haddon Hall will be headquarters for delegates attending the annual meeting and the place of meeting, Vernon room in Haddon Hall. Each delegate is requested to make her own hotel reservations early. The first session opens Monday, January 14th at 2:30 p. m. It is hoped to make the entire session a real inspiration to home mission workers.

The office of the Woman's Auxiliary, 273-277 Field Building, St. Louis, will be glad to know the names of any of the members of the Auxiliary who expect to attend these meetings. Tickets of entrance to important missionary meetings can be arranged for through the office which may not be available otherwise.

Save America—The National Committee of One Hundred for Law Enforcement has issued an attractive and valuable book of 128 pages, in which is included an astonishing amount of verified material pertaining to the present breaking down of law, especially along the line of prohibition. Elizabeth Tilton, Legislative Chairman of the Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Association, is the editor. Perhaps no woman in America is better qualified to prepare such a book. She is well-known through her articles in The Survey and her National Service in Charities and Corrections.

In addition to the department of Law Enforcement and Ammunition, Mrs. Tilton has secured articles by the following writers, Kathleen Norris, Ida Tarbell, Honorable Mabel Willebrandt, Mary Anderson, of the Woman's Bureau of Labor, Lady Astor, Pro. Henry Farnam, of Yale, Mrs. Pennybacker, Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart, and we must not omit the most valuable articles of all by Mrs. Tilton herself on The Battle for Race Survival, America's Natural Faults, Depths and Shallows, and Personal Liberty.

Part IV. of Save America presents methods for using the book and gives a series of programs including debates and a pageant which may be used in any church, club, educational or patriotic group.

We urge women this year to concentrate upon this effort and distribute copies of this book, securing its study everywhere in meetings and lecture courses throughout the country. Price 25 cents per copy, including postage. The book may be secured from your own Board headquarters, or from the temporary headquarters of the committee, 302 Ford Building, Boston, Mass.

Mrs. Henry W. Peabody.

Calendar of Engagements for Bible Classes—Mrs. E. L. Russell, field secretary and Bible teacher for the Assembly's Training School has the following engagements for January:

December 30-January 5—Nashville, Tenn., Moore Memorial Church.

January 7-12—Orlando, Fla.

January 13-19—Arcadia, Fla.

January 20-26—Tampa, Fla.

January 27-February 3—St. Petersburg, Fla., School of Missions.

Mrs. Russell has just closed an enthusiastic class at Leesburg, Va., where many were led to understand the riches of God's Word as never before.

Our training school is most fortunate in securing Mrs. Russell as its representative and Bible teacher. She is a graduate of the Moody Bible School, a woman of gifted ability and personal charm, and few cities that have had the pleasure of a series of lectures from her are willing to forego this privilege the following year. Already a number of our larger cities have contracted regularly for Mrs. Russell's class each year.

Leaders of Mission Study Classes—Have you seen "The Christian Movement in Japan, Korea and Formosa?" published by the Federation of Christian Missions, 1923, printed in Japan.

Every Auxiliary will want to own a copy of this wonderful book, possibly a great many individuals will want it too. The number of copies available is limited. Write at once to Educational Department, Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, Nashville, Tenn.

Other side lights on Japan in preparation for our study book, "The White Fields of Japan," "My Japanese Journal," Laura Gordon Keith, 20 cents. A leaflet by Dr. Harry W. Myers, "The Reverend Toyohiko, Kajana." "Working Women of Japan," 5 cents. "One Hundred Questions and Answers," free. If you are contemplating a pageant at the close of your study class, "Japanese Costumes and Decorations," 10 cents may be obtained from the Literature Headquarters, Lutheran Church, 844 Drexel Building, Philadelphia. Let us pray that in arousing interest and zeal, "The White Fields of Japan," may do for that country what "Day In and Day Out," did for Korea.—Ed.

BLUE BONNET DAINTIES

A delicious package of candy recipes comprise the contents of this little book, Blue Bonnet Dainties, compiled by Elizabeth M. Dobbs, printed at Tex-Mex., and therefore sponsored by Rev. Brooks McLane. Mr. McLane even goes so far as to say he will eat any candy made by these recipes and sent to him for sampling. This may be of course mere evidence of good faith on his part, yet the question is open to discussion as to whether or not it is a neatly veiled hint to prospective candy makers.

All of which goes to prove that the recipes in Blue Bonnet Dainties would be much appreciated by lovers of good candy and the book, attractively bound in dark grey, would make an enjoyable Christmas remembrance for some friend who likes to make things sweet and dainty.

Single copies sell for 50 cents, but if some circle, young girls' or otherwise, wishes to make money selling them, copies may be had as follows: 25 to 99 copies, 30 cents per copy; 100 or more, 25 cents per copy. These are to be sold at the regular retail price. Order from Tex-Mex. Printery, Kingsville, Texas.

The Woman's Auxiliary.

"HELP THE BLIND"

(This is an appeal that should touch the heart of every reader of our column. And touch us so deeply we will send a contribution to this fund. Let us do it as part of our Christmas gifts, to Him, who "Gave sight to the blind.")

There are not over 600 embossed books for the blind to read and over 200 of these are Roman Catholic. Others are on Theosophy, Mormonism, Russellism, Christian Science, Seventh-Day Adventism and Confucianism. There are practically NO evangelical books for the blind.

The Catholics, Seventh-Day Adventists and Theosophists maintain their own printing establishments for the blind and the first two send out embossed monthly magazines free of charge to all the blind whose names they can secure.

Blind Christians are appealing for wholesome Christian literature to read. They spend many lonely hours and they are eager to read but they are "sick of the kind of literature" they have forced upon them.

The Committee on Religious Privileges for the Blind of the Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions is endeavoring to publish Braille books for blind Christians. It costs from $500 to $1,500 to get out one book in Braille. Southern Presbyterians are asked to contribute $300 towards getting out the first Braille book to be published by a united Protestant body. Dear Reader, do you have more books to read than you know what to do with? Can you imagine what it would be like to have nothing to read, nothing to look at and nothing to do? If you feel grateful to your Heavenly Father for your two seeing eyes would you be willing to make a thank offering to this great cause of the blind? Of course the gift must be over and above what you are planning to give to our own Church causes. Send contributions at once to (Miss) Irene Haislip, Chairman, 354 Sherwood Ave., Staunton, Va.

SHALL THE BLIND SEE?

"If you have gazed into the flaming dawn,
And in that gazing felt your strength reborn;
Or laved your jaded soul at twilight hour
In magic half-light, full of healing power—
If you can count, in irksome solitude,
As solid joys, great pictures you have viewed,
Or know, in lonely watches of the night,
The soul-relief of 'turning-up' the light—
If you enjoy the daily commonplace
Of looking frankly in a comrade's face;
Or daily feast your eyes with hungry gaze
Upon your little son who runs and plays—
If, in mere seeing, half your life is made—Then think on those who can't; and lend your aid."

Charlotte, Second Church—The Business Women's Circle will have a special Christmas program at its meeting Thursday evening at 6:15. After supper, Dr. McGeachy will read a Christmas story, and there will be special music, and other holiday features.

Synodical Auxiliary—The ninth annual meeting of the Synodical Auxiliary of Appalachia Synod, convened in the Presbyterian Church of Sweetwater, Tenn., on Tuesday, October 2d, closing Thursday, October 4, 1923. This annual event brings together a body of representative women from the five states, and four Presbyteries which comprise the Synod of Appalachia, and is a time of instruction and inspiration to all who attend.

Under the capable leadership of the Synodical president, Mrs. W. K. Armstrong, of Rogersville, Tenn., a fine program had been prepared and was carried out with promptness and dispatch. On Tuesday afternoon the delegates were taken from the train directly to the church where an executive committee meeting was held. The night session was open to the public and Rev. R. S. Sanders, pastor of the hostess church, conducted the opening exercises, after which Rev. J. Porter Smith, D.D., one of our own missionaries to Brazil, brought a heart-stirring message to his hearers. On Wednesday at 9:30 a. m., the real business sessions began. Mrs. J. L. Calloway, of the hostess Presbytery, and Mrs. W. A. McLain, of the hostess church, extended a most cordial welcome to their guests, to which Mrs. T. W. Simpson very heartily responded.

One feature of the meeting which is specially worthy of mention was the Bible hour at each session, conducted by Mrs. J. S. Poindexter, of Chattanooga, who in a plain practical way brought telling messages from God's word and showed the real charm and attractiveness of Bible study.

Rev. J. J. Fix, D.D., superintendent of young people's work, gave a helpful talk on this work, giving many suggestive thoughts to those specially interested in young people, and impressing each one with the importance of developing and strengthening our youth.

In the absence of Dr. Homer MacMillan, of the Executive Committee of Home Missions, Dr. Fix stepped into the breach and in a very able way presented the cause of Home Missions, on Wednesday night. Thursday morning at 9:30 business was again taken up, and reports from the cause secretaries were most gratifying, showing as they did an increased activity along all lines of the church work, for which we are profoundly thankful.

Rev. B. M. Lawson, a home mission worker in Knoxville Presbytery, came to us at this time with a very interesting account of his work in that field, and by his earnestness won the sympathetic interest of his hearers. The Bible hour, at which time Mrs. Poindexter presented the Book of Ruth, was a most appropriate closing number for our program.

The tone of the whole meeting was one of deep spirituality and all who were present must feel richer for having been there.

Music by local talent added much to the pleasure of the occasion, as did the beautiful floral decorations and the delicious lunches served at the church each day. Those who went to Sweetwater strangers,

WORLD-WIDE MISSIONS

Lesson: Acts 16:1; 28:31; Romans 15:18-21; Ephesians 3:2-9
Printed Text: Acts 16:9-15; 28:30, 31; Roman's 15:18-21

GOLDEN TEXT—"I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."—Romans 1:16.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

Acts 16:9 And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; There stood a man of Macedonia and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us.

10 And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavored to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the gospel unto them.

11 Therefore loosing from Troas, we came with a straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis;

12 And from thence to Philippi, which is the chief city of that part of Macedonia, and a colony; and we were in that city abiding certain days.

13 And on the sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither.

14 And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped God, heard us: whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul.

15 And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, if ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And she constrained us.

Ch. 28:30 And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him.

31 Preaching the Kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him.

Rom. 15:18 For I will not dare to speak of any of those things which Christ hath not wrought by me, to make the Gentiles obedient, by word and deed, 19 Through mighty signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God; so that from Jerusalem, and round about unto Illyricum, I have fully preached the gospel of Christ.

20 Yea, so have I strived to preach the gospel, not where Christ was named, lest I should build upon another man's foundation:

21 But, as it is written, To whom he was not spoken of, they shall see; and they that have not heard shall understand.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 67. Which is the sixth commandment?

A. The sixth commandment is, "Thou shalt not kill."

We will take a little broader view of the authority for worldwide missions than is done in our lesson. It cites only three passages from the New Testament as justifying the effort to preach the Gospel to mankind. But the Bible is the Divine Word, "the statute book of God's kingdom, and if God intends that the Gospel of Christ shall be preached to all men, we would expect the entire scriptures to sanction the effort. Such is truly the case. In contemplating worldwide missions we will consider The Old Testament Scriptures Sanctioned Worldwide Missions; Jesus Taught That the Gospel Was to Be Preached to All Nations; The Apostles and Apostolic Church Undertook This Work; The Gospel Is Adapted to Mankind.

I. The Old Testament Scriptures Authorized World-Wide Missions

Adam and Eve, after the fall, had promised to them and their posterity a "seed of the woman who shall bruise the serpent's head." Subsequent revelations by the Hebrew prophets informed men that this seed was Jehovah, the Son of God incarnate in human nature. Isaiah, the evangelistic prophet, with great clearness, force and eloquence declared concerning Zion, when Messiah came, "Arise, shine, for thy Light is come and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising." The same prophet affirms that Messiah should be not only "The glory of God's people Israel," but "A Light to lighten the Gentiles." Jonah, one of the earliest prophets, was sent to the Gentile city of Nineveh to preach repentance and to minister salvation. Jehovah Himself, in Isaiah 45:22, proclaims, "Look unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved, for I am God." Many other Old Testament Scriptures teach world evangelism.

II. Jesus Taught That the Gospel Was to Be Preached to All Nations

In the Parable of the Sower He affirmed that "The field was the world." In stating the origin of salvation for man, He says, "God so loved the world that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life." In speaking of gathering the spiritual harvest for the heavenly garner by the angels, He represents them as taking it from the whole world. Directing His disciples to preach the Gospel, He commands, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Jesus is the Son of God, and Head of the Church, and certainly knows how far His kingdom is to extend.

III. The Apostles and the Apostolic Church Undertook the World's Evangelism

They engaged in it in just the order the Master prescribed. They became His witness in "Judea and Samaria and to the uttermost parts of the earth." Peter and Paul, the two prominent apostles, proclaimed the Gospel by divine authority to Jews and Gentiles and to all classes of mankind. Peter first preached to Jews, on the day of Pentecost, but afterwards by divine command went to the house of Cornelius, the Centurion, and proclaimed Gospel tidings to the Gentiles. The Lord sanctioned His efforts and gave the Holy Ghost to them as well as to Jews. Paul was made the apostle to the Gentiles and spent his life in publishing the salvation of Jesus to the known world.

IV. The Gospel Adapted to Mankind

Like God's light and air, it is suited to mankind and all classes of men everywhere. It meets their needs in its provisions. It provides for them atonement and pardon, righteousness and justification, a new nature and holiness. Its terms suit men, for all aided by the Holy Ghost can believe. Its blessings satisfy the human soul as nothing else will. Its very adaptation to human wants prove that it was designed for the race of man.

Sun., Dec. 23—Topic: Advent Lessons from Bethlehem. Matt. 2:1-12.

Next Tuesday is December 25th, Christmas Day, when throughout the Christian world the birth of Jesus Christ will be celebrated, and everybody will be glad, as they think of God's greatest gift to men, the gift of His Son to be our Redeemer and King. Jesus was born at Bethlehem in Judea, which was called the city of David, because Israel's greatest king had been born there. And prophets foretold the birth of Jesus at Bethlehem.

Of course, Jesus was the Son of God, and was with His Father in heaven before He came to earth. The word advent means to come, and so the lesson today is about the Advent, or coming of Christ, to Bethlehem. The birth of Christ and His death and resurrection are the three greatest events that have ever occurred in the world. We shall notice the chief things that happened at the time of His birth.

The Lowly Birth

Jesus was born of the Virgin Mary over 1,923 years ago. So important was His birth that all the nations now date their history and time from the day He was born. He was born in a stable, because the hotel was so crowded His mother could find no place to stay except the stable where the oxen and the asses were kept, and they were lowing and munching their hay while the blessed Saviour of mankind was born. Mary was very poor and humble. She had no good things to give her baby. Jesus became poor so that we might through His poverty become rich. He wishes us to be humble and poor in spirit as He was.

The Angels' Song

The first thing the Bible tells us that happened at Jesus' birth was the song of the angels. There were shepherds tending their flocks at night near Bethlehem, when suddenly a glorious light shone upon them, and an angel appeared, and said, Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you: Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men. As soon as the angels were gone, the shepherds hastened to Bethlehem and found the babe in the manger, as they had been told.

The Wise Men's Visit

At the time Jesus was born, a big fiery star appeared in the sky, and soon afterwards, a group of wise men from the east came looking for the infant Saviour, whom they called the King of the Jews. They arrived at Jerusalem and asked where they might find the king. The priests told them He was to be born at Jerusalem. They hastened to that city, and as they went, the bright star went before them, and they followed it to the stable, and found the babe in His mother's arms. They all bowed down to worship Him, and presented Him with many gifts, gold, and rich perfumes, such as frankincense and myrrh.

Christ Coming to Our Own Hearts and Lives

Though Christ came in the long ago to the world, He is still coming to every heart of mankind that will receive Him. He comes still as the lowly one, to live in our poor hearts; for we should think of our hearts as just as poor a place as the stable in Bethlehem. His coming brings us joy and glad tidings as the angels brought to the shepherds. His coming brings riches untold of life and peace, and the gold of God's Word, as the wise men brought of their riches from the East. Let us open the door and let Him in, that He may bring us salvation and every blessing we need.

ON THE VIRGINIA TRAIL

By C. F. Evans, Southern Secretary United Society of Christian Endeavor

Thirty-eight meetings in ten cities in fourteen days, in a series of Leadership Institutes in Virginia, is the record of Clarence Hamilton, National Field Secretary; Miss Mamie Gene Cole, All-South Junior Field Secretary; Frank Wilson, Field Secretary for Virginia and North Carolina; and Southern Secretary Evans.

These institutes were built primarily for officers and leaders of all phases of Christian Endeavor Work, and hundreds attended them with splendid interest and profit. Miss Cole handled the Junior, Mr. Hamilton the Intermediate, and Messrs. Wilson and Evans the Senior and Alumni Work. District Conventions were held in connection with some of them, thus making possible reaching the leadership of an entire section.

A splendid delegation from the Assembly Training School attended the sessions at Richmond, adding much to the interest, enthusiasm and consecration of the meetings. The banquet here was attended by more than 200 Endeavorers. Throughout the whole tour the unmistakable evidence of the solid work of Secretary Wilson was present, in the increased interest and activities of the societies. Two years ago Wise County did not have a single society, but due to a missionary trip made by Secretary Wilson, the work was started and this county now has 13 live societies, which recently chartered a special train to carry 350 Endeavorers for a day of meetings and a picnic. Wise County Endeavorers secure a weekly report from their Quiet Hour Comrades and none are counted which do not show a perfect record. This county graduated the first class of Intermediate Experts in the state.

DIXIE LEADERSHIP INSTITUTES

By C. F. Evans, Southern Secretary United Society of Christian Endeavor

Clarence Hamilton, National Field Secretary; Miss Mamie Gene Cole, All-South Junior Field Secretary; Gerald Harris, Field Secretary of Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee, and Southern Secretary Evans held a series of Leadership Institutes in Mississippi between the Tennessee and Louisiana State Conventions, in which the program was directed principally for State, district and Society officers, though all Endeavorers were cared for.

The Clarksdale Institute was cared for by the Endeavorers of the Christian Church in a great way, and in attendance were Endeavorers from 20 miles around. State Vice-President James G. Stillions, and the State M. S. P. Superintendent, Mrs. Stillions, came from Rome, bringing with them a fine group of Endeavorers.

A freight wreck made the team three hours late into Vicksburg, allowing only the night session, but the audience was waiting and after the meeting the team enjoyed a bountiful supper which had been prepared to be served at 6:00 o'clock. Vicksburg is giving the State Secretary, Miss Irene Short, and the State Treasurer, Mrs. W. L. Tucker, to Mississippi Endeavorers.

The Vicksburg Endeavorers, headed by Mr. W. L. Tucker as president of the entertaining society, put on an advertising campaign for the institute which included four advertisements in the local papers; half-column write-up

EDUCATION MEETING

On Wednesday, December 12th, at 2 p. m., in the First Church of Charlotte, there will be a meeting of the Committee on Schools and Colleges of the Synod of North Carolina, Rev. W. M. Hunter, chairman. This is an important committee and its chairman is doing fine work.

An invitation is extended to all interested in the work of church schools.

OUR FIELD SECRETARY OF EDUCATION

Henry H. Sweets, Secretary

The Executive Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief greatly rejoice in its ability to announce that Rev. S. W. McGill has returned to the committee's staff. As field secretary of schools and colleges he will for the present devote his energies to the city campaigns in the Texas Presbyterian Educational Movement. For several years Dr. McGill has rendered invaluable service to the committee in its efforts to save our Presbyterian educational institutions to the Church. The modern educational situation is such that our institutions of learning must be equipped and endowed or they cannot render the service so greatly needed at this time. Dr. McGill will continue to be of great value to the Church in this work.

BARIUM NEWS

Thanksgiving is always a happy time for our children and this year was no exception. If the good people of the state who contributed so liberally to the Thanksgiving dinner could have had a look in on that day, we feel sure they would have felt more than repaid for any sacrifice they may have made. The turkey dinner was all that heart could wish, the turkeys being provided by the ladies of the first Church, Gastonia. There were chickens from a number of the nearer churches and to these our cooks added some good old-fashioned dumplings, all of which was thoroughly enjoyed. Every table had its share of oranges and apples and the other good things that belong to a Thanksgiving dinner were in evidence. Last but not least everybody had a big helping to "the Velvet kind" ice-cream, the Chapin-Sacks Co., of Greensboro, being the donors of this. The Barium Messenger will mention in detail all that was received, but we wished our loyal friends of the Synod to know how happy we all were over this splendid dinner. In spite of the downpour of rain all day, we had our usual Thanksgiving service in Little Joe's Church at 11 o'clock, and a liberal offering made, about $100.

We were sorry not to have our manager with us on this day but he was speaking in Charlotte that morning. Possibly his absence may have caused us all to have more helpings to the turkey, however.

When we speak of Thanksgiving we can't help but think of football, but we were not going to say much about this, for our team while playing a good, plucky game all through the season didn't annex any games. They invariably won the admiration of their opponents and the commendation of the officials, they always did their best.

Just as this goes in our girls have finished playing a brilliant game of basketball and won from the strong Troutman team by the score of 21 to 4. We will just challenge the world when it comes to girl basketball teams.

At this time the returns from the Thanksgiving collection are encouraging, over $25,000 coming in the first week. One of the most encouraging signs, is that every church that has sent visitors to see us during the year, has increased its offering considerably.

NORTH CAROLINA

Carmel—After ten years' service, the pastor, Rev. C. H. Little, resigned, the resignation taking effect the last Sabbath of November.

Mitchener Memorial—This church was most fortunate Sunday, November 25th, in having one of our Union Seminary Professors to occupy its pulpit. Rev. Dr. Edward Mack was visiting his son, George, and preached at both the morning and evening hours. His sermons were truly great—far-reaching in thought and most worthy of application in life. We enjoyed these sermons and greatly appreciaon front page besides three other articles; phoning every member of the society, every pastor in the city, all the Sunday School superintendents, and the presidents of the Epworth League and the B. Y. P. U.

Natchez, the home of Mississippi's next state convention, gave the institute team a royal time and splendid opportunities to present the great program of Christian Endeavor. Already the Natchez Endeavorers are making plans for the state convention next August, and expect to offer an unusual treat in the way of water sports and a water trip.

After the Louisiana State Convention the institute team served in the North Carolina Convention and went into Virginia for a series of leadership institutes.

ted them. And we care not how soon it may be our privilege to hear him again.

W. T. Wadley, Pastor.

Charlotte, First Church—This church up to Sunday, December 10th, has raised for the equipment fund and the Barium Orphanage over $8,000, divided equally between them. This is a fine record.

Charlotte, Second Church—At the evening service last Sunday Dr. McGeachy stated that his officers had agreed to supplement whatever any candidate for the ministry from this church might need to enable them to be free from financial care during their preparation; and also that any member of this church going to the foreign field would be supported by this church.

Rockingham — Rev. W. R. Coppedge has been granted a vacation of two months, which he will spend in Morelia, Mexico, with his son, Dr. Llewellyn J. Coppedge, medical missionary. He is to preach the Christmas sermon for the English-speaking people of Morelia, also twice in Houston, Tex., December 16th.

His address till February 20th will be Calzo Miguel Silva 215, Morelia, Michoacan, Mexico. No man in the Synod has more right to a rest than this faithful worker in the home-field. Our best wishes go with him.

Kinston—Rev. Hector N. McDiarmid, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church here, in three years has doubled the membership of the congregation and enlarged its work to include two local mission fields. Mr. McDiarmid, who came here in 1920, on September 10th celebrated the third anniversary of his pastorate. He is a native of the lower part of North Carolina.

The church has established missions in east Kinston and Pink Hill under Mr. McDiarmid's leadership. The church has been enlarged. A plan has been drafted under which a fine edifice will replace the present building, probably to be located in another part of the city.

Amity—The Lord's Supper was observed at Amity Church the first Sabbath of November. Eight united with the church upon profession of faith. After serving Amity for ten years Rev. C. H. Little resigned to take effect the fourth Sunday in November. An hour after Mr. Little met with the session for the last time November 27th, at 2 p. m., the Amity congregation sent to the manse at Sharon a most generous pounding, including every eatable farm product, confectionaries, and a large purse of money in addition to the salary considerably overpaid, though separating, the ties of Christian fellowship and friendship are greatly strengthened by this last gracious act.

Sharon—The preparatory services were concluded by the pastor, Rev. C. H. Little, and on the Lord's day, September 16th, the communion was observed when the names, of six upon profession of faith and one by letter, were announced. The fourth Sabbath of November ended ten years service for the pastor at Sharon. Tuesday evening, November 27th, the congregation came in a body, spent several hours with their pastor and his family and so pounded them, that they are at ease for months as to the pantry supply. Wood for the wood-house already cut and split. Even a turkey for Christmas dinner. No more generous people can be found anywhere. The Lord truly has cast the lot of pastor and family in a pleasant place.

St. Pauls—We have recently enjoyed a real revival meeting, conducted by Rev. S. K. Phillips, of Fayetteville, whose spirited and spiritual sermons attracted large congregations and evoked deep interest. There were six accessions on profession of faith, two of these a father and a mother; ten on certificate from Presbyterian churches; and two by statement from other churches. The communion was administered at the concluding service to a congregation which filled the church.

The offering on Thanksgiving Day and the following Sunday amounted to about $1,300, of which $625 is for the Orphans' Home and $500 for the Equipment Fund, the amount needed for the Tolosa, Mexico, social center, where a son of this church, Rev. E. C. Murray, Jr., is associated with Mr. Wray.

Wilmington, First Church—Equipment Fund.—It will be gratifying to the Church at large that a devoted member of this congregation has sent forward his check for $7,000 with which to erect a double missionary residence for the Kiang-yin station. This station has for a long time been supported by the First Church of Wilmington. This is most cheering news to us all. May the richest blessing of our Heavenly Father rest continually upon this loyal follower of His. We thank God and take courage.

At a call meeting of Granville Presbytery, December 3d, at 3 p. m., in the pastor's study of the First Presbyterian Church, Durham, N. C., Rev. T. W. Simpson, upon his own request, was dismissed to the Presbytery of Savannah, that he might become pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Brunswick, Ga.

For about 18 months Mr. Simpson has served the First Presbyterian Church, Durham, as business manager and director of the young people's work.

Rev. W. McC. White, D.D., was made chairman of the Stewardship Committee, taking the place on the committee vacated by the removal of Rev. T. W. Simpson. Rev. J. S. Kennison, S. C.

Leggetts, Presbytery of Albemarle—Rev. McK. C. Long, a pastor at Statesville, N. C., assisted, recently Rev. Daniel Iverson, the pastor (of Leggetts), in a series of special services. His appeal for Christ is very unusual and strong. We are not surprised to know that the Lord has used him signally in reaching men for Christ in his pastorate at Statesville.

There were 18 additions to the Presbyterian Church, most of whom were added on profession of faith in Jesus.

Cornelius—Our new church is nearing completion. Delay in the arrival of the windows and some other special orders have held up the work for several days. Notice of the shipment of the windows have been received and we hope to hold our Christmas exercises in the new auditorium. Lack of pews will doubtless prevent the congregation from using the auditorium for worship before early spring. Our hearts go out in gratitude to those churches that took the special offering in behalf of the needy churches in our Presbytery and we trust that others will take the offering at an early date that ours and other churches may be completed.

Wilmington Presbytery — The constitutional requirements having been met I hereby call Wilmington Presbytery to meet at 11 a. m., Tuesday, December 18th, at First Church, Wilmington, to transact the following business:

1. To dissolve the pastoral relations between Rev. J. E. Purcell and the St. Andrew's Church.
2. To permit Rev. J. E. Purcell to labor without the bounds of the Presbytery.
3. To consider and act upon Synod's recommendation touching apportionment to schools and colleges.
4. To act upon any matters growing out of any of the above items.

R. E. McClure, Moderator.

Ashe Presbyterian Churches—Mr. J. B. Spillman was an inspiration to this group of churches from Thanksgiving Day through Sunday, December 2d. At Obids there was a union Thanksgiving service, at which, though not a preacher, he preached. The offering for Barium Springs was $1,700. The ladies covered themselves with glory because of the great variety, abundance, and quality of the dinner served.

In the afternoon of that day he addressed the Association of Elders and Deacons. In each of the churches he spoke on tithing and the gratifying number of 45 cards were signed.

The Jefferson congregation observed equipment day and exceeded their quota.

Any pastor will do well to invite Mr. Spillman to speak to his people. He speaks from a rich experience and his message is refreshing, enlightening and gripping in that he gets hold of people.

Bethel—When Rev. and Mrs. R. C. Clontz returned to the manse on November 26th after a visit to Charlotte, they were surprised to find the parking places around their home occupied by a number of automobiles and the manse itself in the possession of a large delegation from Bethel Church. Further observation soon relieved the fears of the minister and his help-mate and convinced them that the forcible entrance was not with sinister or hostile purpose, but to fill their table and containers with various kinds of fruits, vegetables, and fowl and other like things that minister to the well-being of the physical man and make him feel that he has reasons aplenty for rejoicing in the return of Thanksgiving Day and for himself returning thanks therefor. In addition to things edible the popular minister and equally beloved wife were presented with a check for an even $100 in token of his people's good will, esteem and affectionate appreciation of his work among them.

The new Presbytery set off from Orange and Concord by the Synod met at the call of Dr. J. S. Foster, in the First Presbyterian Church, Winston-Salem, N. C., December 4, 1923, at 7:30 p. m.

There were present, 13 ministers and 13 elders. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. C. W. Robinson, of North Wilkesboro.

Rev. C. W. Robinson was elected moderator; Rev. E. P. Bradley, stated clerk and Elder J. H. Gilly, temporary clerk.

The name of "Winston-Salem" was chosen for the name of the Presbytery.

Rev. J. R. McGregor was received from the Presbytery of Cherokee, and having accepted a call from the church at Lexington, a committee, consisting of D. C. Lilly, J. S. Foster, Z. V. Robertson and Chas. Norfleet were appointed to install him Sunday night, December 16, 1923.

Dr. W. H. Frazer and Dr. A. A. McGeachy asked that the Presbytery of Winston-Salem assume joint ownership and control of Queens College.

Dr. C. G. Vardell asked that the Presbytery of Winston-Salem appoint trustees of Flora Macdonald College. The matter was docketed to the spring meeting of Presbytery.

Mr. J. B. Spillman was heard on Stewardship and the Presbytery adopted recommendations sent down by the Synod.

Elder Thomas Maslin, on behalf of the officers of the First Presbyterian Church, presented a book to be used as the first minute book of the Presbytery of Winston-Salem. The book was received with thanks.

The ladies of the First Presbyterian Church gave a luncheon to the members and visitors at the Zinzendorf Hotel.

Rev. A. W. Crawford was heard on Synodical Home Missions.

Mr. A. B. Eldridge was heard on the interest of Glade Valley High School.

Rev. E. P. Bradley, Dr. J. S. Foster and Elder J.

S. Kuykendall were appointed a committee to prepare a manual for the use of the Presbytery.

The following committees were appointed:
Presbyterial Home Missions—W. F. Carter, C. N. Norfleet, C. W. Irvin, D. C. Lilly, chairman, J. S. Foster, G. W. Mountcastle, J. H. Gilly, E. L. Gaither, E. A. McNeill.

Assembly's Home Missions—J. E. Foster, chairman, W. N. Norfleet, A. R. Vail, Geo. Cheek.

Assembly's Foreign Missions—C. W. Robinson, J. R. Offield, C. A. Baird, R. H. Barker, H. D. Monroe.

Trustees of Presbytery—J. N. Rogers, R. W. Gorrill, E. L. Gaither, W. W. Burke.

Trustees of Davidson College—J. H. Carter, J. Edward Johnson.

Schools and Colleges—E. P. Bradley, R. L. Berry, E. B. Eldridge, J. R. Stovall, J. B. Johnstone, Z. I. Walsler.

Orphans Home—Geo. W. Lee, Geo. S. Norfleet, J. L. Scott, J. R. Forrest, John Sobett, R. B. Sanford.

Sabbath, Family Religion, and Bible Cause—T. F. Haney, J. R. McGregor, F. E. Evans, D. E. Hoffman.

Stewardship—Z. V. Robertson, E. C. Grier, L. Vyne, J. H. Thompson, R. C. Norfleet.

Women's Work and Young People's Societies—R. H. Stone, W. W. Burke, U. L. Fisher, J. H. Donnell, C. C. O'Bryan.

Men's Work—J. H. Carter, Fred Sheetz, J. R. Finley, J. C. Crawford, C. V. Walsler.

Steel Creek Church—The elders and their wives will have their annual dinner at the manse this year on Thursday of Christmas week, December 27th. This is always a most enjoyable day, and one that has proven most profitable to the church. On this day the session reviews the work of the past year and lays plans for the year ahead. However, the noon meal receives the greatest attention.

"The Board of Deacons will have their annual dinner on New Year's Day, Tuesday, January 1st. The place of meeting has not been selected as this goes to print.

"Thanksgiving service, notwithstanding the down-pour of rain, was well attended. The cash offering for our orphanage, Barium Springs, amounted to $284. The treasurer of the church, on request of a few members, is holding this offering for one week with the hope that it will reach the $300 mark. The pastor has just received a letter from the orphanage expressing their great appreciation for the truck-load of provisions (100 hens, 200 pounds of flour, and four quilts) sent them on Tuesday before Thanksgiving.

"The Ingathering Day of the Earnest Worker Band, on Friday after Thanksgiving, was another most successful day in this week, notwithstanding the rain again. A remarkable missionary pageant was presented by the band. Following this came short talks by Dr. Geo. F. Robertson, Bristol, Tenn., a former pastor; Rev. S. A. Ewart, of Mulberry, and Rev. J. F. Ligon, pastor of the Tenth Avenue Church, Charlotte. The cash offering amounted to $164, in addition to the two bales of cotton. Miss Maggie Whiteside, the long and faithful leader of this band, has a plan which, if worked out, will yield a much larger ingathering of cotton next year. You will hear from her before the time for planting comes around."—Calendar.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Chester—The work in Purity Presbyterian Church (Dr. Flournoy Shepperson, pastor) has been moving with satisfactory pace. Just before the vacation set in 25 members were received into the church, largely the result of the community tabernacle meeting led by John E. Brown, evangelistic party. In September social visitation day was observed by 42 men, in pairs, visiting the homes of the congregation. This visitation day was a good preparation for the best rally day this church has ever had, the attendance being over 400 and the offering $25. The Ladies' Auxiliary exceeded their quota for building the baby cottage at Thornwell Orphanage. The Thanksgiving offering for Thornwell by the Sunday School and Church was over $300, and the equipment fund day, December 2d yielded an offering of over $1,000 in cash. Interest and progress are manifest in all phases of church activity.

Sam W. Klutz, Cor.

Greenwood—We had the pleasure of receiving seven new members into our church on last Sunday.

On Wednesday evening of this week, the Young Men's Class of our Sunday School entertained, at an oyster supper, the football teams representing Thornwell Orphanage and Saluda High School. By winning the game here, the Thornwell Orphanage team becomes the champion of western South Carolina.

Our church building has recently been equipped with a new heating plant, at a cost of $4,000, paid for in cash.

For the past several weeks, the pastor has been using various methods in an endeavor to stimulate interest in Bible study, generally, and particularly in the Wednesday evening Bible class. Recently, at the Sunday evening service, questionnaires were distributed, containing ten simple Bible questions, with sub-heads, and the congregation given ten minutes in which to answer the questions. The results have caused considerable discussion of the Bible, and our members have awakened to the realization that there is a good deal we do not know about the Word of God.

ALABAMA

Montgomery, Trinity Church—December 2d was the third anniversary of the pastorate of Dr. Chas.

H. Pratt. The official board asked the privilege of making a statement as to the phenomenal record of advancement, taking a part of the morning hour for this purpose.

It was revealed that in the last three years, the church has received 333 new members. The total amount of money given to all causes has been $82,307.

Three great building enterprises have been completed. The notable religious work building, with its 37 rooms has drawn the attention and study of architects from several states. Trinity chapel has been copied five times and the manse has been enlarged and beautified.

The church property has been greatly enhanced, with a complete working plant valued at $150,000.

Trinity is known as "The church of the young people," because "The church school," and the five "C. E. societies" are so largely attended by the young people of the community.

The largest number of people in the history of the church are enjoying the privilege of studying God's Word under an efficient corps of teachers.

The spiritual life of the church has been deepened by the fact that 75 families have erected family altars and 215 members are tithers. Over 15 of our young people have definitely offered themselves for whole-time service to Christ.

A vacation Bible school was held, ministering to 265 pupils of every denomination including a number of Jews.

Evangelistic services are being regularly held at Kilby prison, the jail, the industrial school, the detention camp and wherever the call comes.

FLORIDA

Mulberry—Rev. George Mason has been at work here since the first of October and has already made a fine impression upon the community. He also has charge of a mission work at Pierce, a phosphate town four miles from Mulberry. He lives at Pierce, where the management has supplied him with one of the very best houses in Pierce. The outlook at both of these places is very hopeful. Mulberry expects to begin work on their building in the near future on a beautiful lot which is the gift of Dr. H. K. Murphy, a most desirable location.

Seminole Heights—At a congregational meeting, held November 18th, Rev. J. R. C. Brown, pastor of the Dade City Church, was called to the pastorate of the Seminole Heights Church. He has accepted, Presbytery has dissolved the relation between him and the Dade City Church and he expects to begin his pastoral work at Seminole next Sunday. There is great rejoicing at the prospect of getting Mr. Brown back to Tampa, where he is so well known and where he did such fine work as the first pastor of Hyde Park Church. We congratulate Seminole Heights on securing Brother Brown.

Fort Meade—Efforts are being made to secure the pastoral services of Rev. W. T. Merrill, of Excelsior Springs, Mo. This church has been vacant for some time, as Dr. H. A. Tucker found he could not longer continue to drive the 60 miles between his home and Ft. Meade, so he gave up his work there. If Brother Merrill takes this church, there will remain but one church vacant in the Presbytery, as Inverness and Brooksville have asked Rev. T. I. Dean to supply them.

Sebring—Rev. William Schmitz has been at work here since the first of October. His congregations have steadily increased and a letter from one of the elders to the superintendent says, "He has made good and it is predicted the building will soon be crowded." A thriving Sunday School was recently organized. At a congregational meeting, held December 2d, it was registered as the sense of the meeting that services be continued throughout the entire year. This is good news and shows that the church has taken on new energy and determination.

Daytona Beach—Dr. E. B. Patterson has been engaged as supply and expects to begin his work on the second Sunday in December. The members are looking forward very hopefully to his coming and are preparing to give him a warm welcome. Mrs. Mary E. Dunn has offered her beautiful home on Ocean Front to the pastor and his wife and it is hoped that the ocean breezes and the song of the Atlantic will be the means of soon restoring Mrs. Patterson to perfect health. A corner lot in a most desirable locality has been purchased, the deed for which was delivered this week. As soon as possible, they expect to put up a temporary building for worship.

Key West—This church has taken on new life. Rev. T. Peyton Walton, Superintendent of Home Missions began a meeting the First Sunday in October and Rev. W. J. Garrison, D.D., came later in the week and did the preaching. On the following Sunday, 17 new members were received, and the membership was very much encouraged. Rev. Francisco Boan, who is in charge of the Cuban mission is doing a fine work. Many of the mission were present at the services during the meeting, a part of the services at each meeting having been given to the Cubans and was conducted in Spanish. The American Church has been supporting the mission for some time. This is a great work they are doing, but they need help, and they need a building in which to hold services. It is proposed to erect a building suitable for holding services for both the American Church and the Cuban Mission. If some liberal hearted Christian, to whom God has given the means, would aid in this work, it would be a great blessing.

GEORGIA

The First Church of Columbus has recently elected four additional elders, A. H. Bickerstaff, Paul K. McKinney, C. R. Medley and W. W. Moye, also six new deacons, Walter Drane, J. W. Coppock, LeRoy Lewis, John J. McKay, W. A. Richards and Dr. W. A. Scott.

The plans for the new Sabbath School building are now ready for the contractor. They call for a structure that will furnish every equipment needed for efficient work in Sabbath School and young people's organization, at an estimated cost of approximately $75,000.

Some months ago the First Church gave a call to Dr. T. M. McConnell which he agreed to accept for a year, but with this building commenced he has about finished the work which he planned to do when he took charge and as he has received an urgent call to supply Westminster Church in Miami, Fla., which he feels that he ought to accept—he has asked this church to release him from his engagement. He expects to leave here and begin his work in Miami about the first of the new year.

LOUISIANA

New Orleans—The First Church celebrated its centennial December 25th-29th. All the other churches, most of them daughters or descendants of the First, took part in the services. Drs. Dunbar H. Ogden, of Mobile, and John W. Caldwell, of Atlanta, sons of the church, and Dr. J. Porter Smith, of Brazil, were the speakers from outside. The history of the church was given in a signally striking pageant, prepared by Mrs. W. P. Nelson, bringing out the more prominent incidents of the church's life, such as the trials of heresy, fire, scourge, storm, and war through which she passed with such great honor to herself and because God was with her. The celebration culminated in a great Thanksgiving service, in which the other churches united. With a century behind her, the splendid old church, under the active leadership of her present pastor, Dr. Geo. H. Cornelson, faces a new century with cheerfulness and hope, encouraged by all the past, and confident in the power which a faithful testimony to the Word of God and its fundamental principles assures.

TENNESSEE

Memphis, Westminster Church—On Sunday, December 2d, the new Westminster church was dedicated with appropriate services. Dr. A. B. Curry preached the dedication sermon. A goodly number of ministers, both Presbyterian and of other denominations were present. The new church is a beautiful building reflecting much credit upon this congregation.

VIRGINIA

East Hanover Presbytery—The constitutional requirements having been met East Hanover Presbytery is hereby called to meet in the Presbyterian Publishing House, in Richmond, on Monday, December 17th, at 11 a. m., to consider the following business:

1. The application of candidates for the ministry to be received under the care of the Presbytery.
2. The organization of a church at Sandston.
3. The request of Rev. H. B. Frazer to be dismissed to another Presbytery.
4. The application of Centralia Church for a loan for their church building.
5. Any other business growing out of these matters.

Wm. S. Campbell, S. C.

Richmond—Formal opening of the new home of Grace-Covenant Presbyterian Church, 1621 Monument Avenue, took place Sunday, December 9th, at 11 o'clock, with services at which Rev. Dr. Charles L. King, delivered the sermon. His subject was "The Church and a Burdened World." At the evening services, Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" will be rendered.

Grace-Covenant Church is the largest Presbyterian congregation in Virginia, and its recently completed plant is valued at $400,000. The membership of the church is 1,100, and the new auditorium will accommodate that number. The dining-hall of the church will comfortably care for 500 persons.

Constructed in the Gothic style, the new church is one of the most beautiful in the South, and comprises several unusual features. Among these are the automatic heating and ventilating system; the numerous acousticons in various parts of the auditorium to assist deaf persons in following the service, and the remarkably fine windows.

One of the handsomest windows is a memorial to Rev. Dr. J. Calvin Stewart, former pastor; the baptismal font is in memory of Dr. Jere Witherpoon, another former pastor, and was presented by Mrs. Witherpoon; while the organ, said to be one of the finest in this section, was presented by J. Scott Parrish as a memorial to his parents.

WEST VIRGINIA

Dana—A most gracious revival was experienced by the congregation of the Putney Memorial Presbyterian Church. While the meeting only lasted eight days the net results were 21 professions of faith of which 19 were received into the church. The congregation as a whole was greatly strengthened in their faith. The preaching was done by Queens College—The Y. W. C. A. is planning to take an active part in the campaign preparatory to the Billy Sunday meetings. Prayer meeting in the college chapel and in the main building will be held on Tuesday night.

Miss Charlotte Jackson, an alumna of Agnes Scott, was the speaker at the Sunday vesper service held in the chapel. Miss Jackson is doing vocational secretary work and her address was very helpful to the students. Every student was urged to find out for what she was best fitted—how she could best use her talents and then to work toward that goal. The Student Friendship Fund was discussed by the Misses McCluer and Watts. This is an international project recently put on by the Student Volunteer organizations all over the world to aid needy students of foreign countries, especially those in famine stricken lands.

Flora Macdonald College—William Rainey Bennett, well-known Redpath lecturer appeared at the college on December 3d, speaking on "Pathways to Power." He greatly pleased a large audience.

On December 10th Dr. Frederick H. Koch, director of the Carolina Playmakers, gave his reading of Dickens' "Christmas Carol." Dr. Koch has given this popular reading at the University of North Carolina on 17 different occasions. An interesting feature of the reading was the singing of Christmas carols by students of the music department.

Miss Margaret Stewart, Y. W. C. A. student secretary spent several days recently at the college giving interesting talks about the place of student associations in the national organization. She had personal interviews with cabinet members giving them helpful suggestions for their work.

Flora Macdonald was represented at the Volunteer conference held at Goldsboro, November 30th-December 2d, by Grace Brown.

Mitchell College—It is indeed gratifying to note the steady growth of a true college spirit among the students. Several weeks ago the various organizations of the college made definite plans for the development of student life, and these plans are now being enthusiastically received by the entire student body.

The members of the Y. W. C. A. will give a special Christmas program on Sunday before the holidays. At 5 o'clock in the afternoon they will present a masque of the First Christmas, and this will portray most effectively the birth of the Christ Child.

The following Monday evening the senior class will serve their annual turkey dinner. The proceeds of this will be added to the students' fund. At the same time the Y. W. C. A. will hold their bazaar. This is the first time that this organization has undertaken having a bazaar, but judging from the manner in which the idea has been accepted by the students, we believe that there will be many attractive and useful articles on sale. The proceeds from the bazaar will go towards the general fund of the association and will be used in such a way as to make this organization a greater factor for good in the college.

King College—This pre-Christmas period marks the busiest time of the entire year for King College. At this time the two literary societies have special celebrations, the intercollegiate debating teams hold their try-outs, and tests are given.

Following is given the official calendar of King College for the balance of the present season:

Friday, December 14th—Athean Literary Society Celebration.

Friday, December 21st to Thursday, January 3d—Christmas Holidays.

Thursday, January 3d—Winter Term Opens.

Monday, March 17th—Spring Term Opens.

Friday, March 28th—Philonthesman Literary Society Celebration.

Saturday, May 24th to Tuesday, May 27th—Commencement exercises; Saturday night, literary society contest in declamation; Sunday morning, baccalaureate sermon; Monday night, literary society contest in oratory; Tuesday morning, annual meeting of Board of Trustees; Tuesday night, graduating exercises, with award of diplomas, honors, etc.

Davidson College—The Ministerial Band has planned a special series of deputations for its members during the holidays. A. M. Martin, chairman has sent out letters to pastors asking that at least one service during the holidays be given over to the candidates for the ministry. In the addresses made to home congregations special emphasis will be laid on the call to the ministry. The members of the band are sent out on request from nearby churches and speak during the church hour and to Christian Endeavor societies and Sunday Schools.

S. D. Gordon nationally known author and lecturer conducted a series of meetings at Davidson during the week of December 2d-8th, speaking both in the church and at the Y. M. C. A. afternoon and night. The addresses were well attended and created a very fine impression. Mr. Gordon left Saturday for Fayetteville to conduct a series of meetings in that city.

Eight initiates, four of whom were alumni and four members of the class of 1924 were received into Gamma chapter of Phi Beta Kappa at a public ceremony held in Shearer Hall on Friday evening. The alumni to receive the distinction were Dr. D. M. Douglass, '05, president Presbyterian College of South Carolina; Dr. A. A. McGeachy, '01, pastor Second Presbyterian Church, Charlotte; N. C. H. E.

Query, '09, editor Gastonia Gazette and Dr. J. W. McConnell, '02, college physician. The Senior class representatives were A. M. Hillhouse, '24, president student body; W. M. Cox, member intercollegiate debating team; J. I. Smith, manager basketball team, D. B. Walthall, president ministerial band. Dr. John Calvin Metcalf, Edgar Allen Poe Professor of English of the University of Virginia delivered the literary address. Dr. J. M. McConnell, professor of history is local president; Dr. E. F. Shewmake, vice-president; Prof. W. W. Wood, secretary.

Hampden-Sidney—On December 21st Hampden-Sidney completes a most successful year. The enrollments for 1922-23 and 1923-24 are the two largest in the history of the college. The total for the former was 217 while the present enrollment reached 202.

Hampden-Sidney has been greatly improved by the addition of the big science building opened in September. The arrangement of lecture rooms and laboratories is very unique, and the equipment of the building is up-to-date and thorough. Hampden-Sidney will soon rank as high scientifically as she does academically.

The Y. M. C. A. at Hampden-Sidney, under the presidency of John H. Reed, Jr., of Richmond, Va., has been most progressive this fall, despite the fact that there has been no one to take the place of Dr. E. G. Gammon, former pastor, who supervised the work. This organization has managed the Sunday and Wednesday evening services, assisted in the management of the Sunday morning services, in the absence of a pastor in the pulpit, organized and continued the functioning of the students' Sunday School classes, furnished two social entertainments to the student body, aided in bringing a lyceum course of chautauqua to the hill, and a number of other things.

Hampden-Sidney plans active work this year in dramatic work. At present a play is being planned which will be given during the second term.

This year a club, known as the Brotherhood Club, was formed at Hampden-Sidney. Membership requirements are only that two brothers of contemporaries in college. This year there are 14 pairs of brothers at Hampden-Sidney.

In the first debate of the season, Hampden-Sidney defeated Randolph-Macon by a 3 to 0 decision of the judges. The subject was: Resolved, that there should be a uniform divorce law in the United States.

Football letters were presented to 12 men and manager this season. The season was not successful from a standpoint of victories, but was successful from other standpoints in the eyes of Coach Bernier who has resumed coaching activities after six years' work in other institutions.

Union Theological Seminary—On Sunday, November 18th, Prof. Walter L. Lingle, D.D., preached at the LaFayette Presbyterian Church, Norfolk, and baptized the infant child of the pastor, Rev. Harold W. Shields.

The Presbyterians of Richmond have joined with the Methodist and Christian Churches of the city in holding a Standard Training School for Sunday School workers, beginning Sunday, November 18th. One of the most popular courses was "The Life and Letters of Paul," conducted by Prof. E. C. Caldwell, D.D. So many more persons enrolled for this course than could be accommodated in a single class that Dr. Caldwell called to his assistance Rev. E. A. Woods, Hoge Fellow for this session, whose overflow class is almost as large as the principal class. They are using as a text book the pamphlet, fresh from the press this week, "The Life and Letters of Paul," Twelve Studies in Outline, by Mr. Caldwell.

Prof. Edward Mack, D.D., has been making many of his friends happy this week by presenting them autographed copies of his new book, "The Preacher's Old Testament." This book will find many enthusiastic readers for the sheer beauty of its English, for this professor and master of Hebrew has shown that he is also a master of his mother tongue.

Rev. S. H. Chester, of the Foreign Mission office, is on the campus visiting the missionary families at Mission Court, and holding conferences with candidates for the Foreign Mission field in the student body.

Rev. H. W. Myers, one of our missionaries at Kobe, Japan, visited the Union Seminary last week. Since leaving he has written:

"My little visit to Union Seminary has given me more pleasure than I can tell you. It is surely a good omen for the future growth and prosperity of our Church that so many men of piety and ability are gathered together at Union Seminary teaching and studying God's word. I have never felt inclined to 'tremble for the ark of God,' but my visit to Richmond gives me a feeling of even greater confidence in the future of our Church."

came away feeling that they were leaving friends behind which goes to prove how "Blest is the tie that binds." Mrs. W. K. Armstrong was again chosen as our president. Appalachia, the "baby," Synod, is growing and thriving and those of us who are privileged to be a part of it are proud to think of it as—

News of the Week

President Coolidge received and took under consideration an invitation extended by the city of Augusta, Ga., to spend his winter vacation there should he find that he is able to leave the capital. The invitation was presented to the President by a delegation of Augusta citizens.

The whole central portion of Japan, including Kobe, Osaka and other large cities, was shaken by an earthquake December 5th, according to a Tokio dispatch to the Nippa Jiji, Japanese language newspaper. On the island of Shikoku, one of the principal ones of the empire, clocks were stopped. In the coastal regions bordering Setonaika, on the island sea, the inhabitants were panic stricken, vacating their homes and abandoning their belonging in an effort to find safety.

At a meeting in Gastonia, N. C., which fairly sparkled with brilliance and pep, the local civilian club endorsed, adopted and signed, individually, resolutions of good citizenship, binding every member to vote in every election and to serve on the jury when called, so far as he was physically able.

Five Mexican states are in open rebellion against President Obregon and Gen. P. Elias Calles, Obregon's candidate for the presidency. The military in the state of Vera Cruz, San Luis Potosi, Chihuahua, Michikoan and Tamaulipas are said to have repudiated the federal government, ousted all the federal office holders, and substituted their own men.

A dash by air for the North Pole will be launched by the Navy department during the coming summer. Secretary Denby announced that President Coolidge had given his specific approval to the project as "of great practical value." The route, date, and method of procedure for the trip, however, are still to be decided.

That "Southward the Star of Empire Takes Its Way," and that the South's biggest problem is to increase its white population and exploit its natural resources and industrial resources and advantages to the world, was the message brought to the more than 200 Charlotte and out-of-town business men and manufacturers by Theodore Price, editor of Commerce and Finance and one of the country's most prominent business men.

An abstract of the annual report of David H. Blair, commissioner of internal revenue, was made public, and it shows that the total internal revenue receipts for North Carolina for the year ending June 30, 1923, were $140,347,366.18. Other states exceeding her are New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan and Ohio. She exceeds Massachusetts by about a million dollars.

Tobacco manufactures gives North Carolina her high position. She pays more than twice as much as any other state on that manufactured product, her total being $118,370,326.84.

Without condoning the offense, President Coolidge remitted the 60-day jail sentence imposed on Charles L. Craig, comptroller of New York City, by Federal Judge Mayer, for contempt of court.

A complete reorganization of the central board of appeals of the veterans' bureau in order to expedite the hearing and adjudication of claims was announced by Director Hines as one of the first steps in a general readjustment of bureau activities. Another change announced in the organization was the creation of a finance service, with separate divisions of disbursing and accounting.

Deeds were delivered to representatives of the Joseph Bancroft & Sons Company, of Wilmington, Del., by property owners at Old Fort, December 1st, whereby the Bancroft Company comes into ownership of more than 500 acres of land adjacent to the town of Old Fort, N. C.

More than $78,000 in cash was paid for the property, which is to be used as a site for a tremendous bleaching industry that will represent a total outlay of more than $30,000,000, provide employment for 2,000 persons, and provide a plant that will take care of the output of 40 to 50 Southern cotton mills.

Bishop James Atkins, for more than a quarter of a century a leading figure in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, died last week in Little Rock, Ark.

CHILDREN

BROTHER MOST READY FOR SCHOOL

Dear Standard:

I am a little girl eight years old. I go to school at Rex. I am in the third grade. My teacher is Miss Annie Bul-lard. I go to Sunday School every Sunday. I have one sister and one brother. My little brother will start to school next year. This is my first letter, so I will stop.

Your little friend,

THE CANARY OF THE ARGONNE

"Chirp, chirp, chirp," said the little brown bird. "Good morning."

"Tweet, tweet, tweet. Good morning," said the little yellow bird. "Aren't you a stranger in this forest?"

"Yes," answered the little brown bird. "I am on my way south. This is my first trip. I was hatched from an egg only last summer and do not know very much about the world. Do you live in this forest?"

"I have spent all my life in this forest, but it was not the home of my ancestors. They were canary birds and came from the Hartz Mountains. My father and mother were in the Great War and escaped to this forest, where they built a nest and my mother hatched me from an egg. This is the Argonne Forest, you know," answered the little yellow bird.

"You do talk about so many things of which I have never heard. Tell me, what is war?" asked the little brown bird.

"War? War is something which there are no words awful enough to describe. It is all the terrible things of which you have ever heard or seen all mixed up together. Men forget that they are men and fight more fiercely than animals. Men have guns and bayonets and gas. It was because of the gas that my father and mother were brought to the war," said the little yellow bird very sadly and pensively.

"What is gas? I know nothing about such a thing. Is it awful?" chirped the little brown bird excitedly.

"Oh yes, it is very awful. There are many kinds. Some kinds kill people quickly and other kinds make them so sick that they suffer for years before they die. My mother told me how awful it was," said the little bird. "Canary birds (you remember that my parents were canary birds) feel the effects of gas more quickly than men do and as soon as they feel the gas they make a noise. Then the men put on their gas masks, but the poor little canary birds did not have any gas masks.

"On Armistice Day many of the canaries were let out of their cages. That is how my father and mother escaped. People were so happy when the armistice was signed that they did everything they could to express their joy and good-will, good-will, joy and good-will," sang little canary.

"What is the armistice and what is good-will? You see I know nothing at all of any of the things you are talking about," said little brown bird.

And this is the way canary bird answered: "Some of the men who were managing the war thought that it was time to stop fighting and they wrote on a paper that there should be peace and good-will on earth. Since then men have not been firing guns, but I do not think that there is much peace or good-will on earth. There seems to be a great deal of trouble about boundaries."

"Dear me, what are they? Boundaries? Boundaries? What are boundaries?" chirped the little brown bird.

"Boundaries," said the little canary are imaginary lines laid on the earth. The people who live on one side of the line say to the people who live on the other side of the line, 'You understand of course that this is a line which no one can see. You can't come here and you can't have anything of mine on this side of the line unless you pay duty!'"

"What is duty?"

"Well, suppose that there was a nice worm for your children on the other side of the line. If you wanted that worm you would have to pay duty to take it over the imaginary line. But, in war time you could not take the worm, even if you were willing to pay. Your children would have to starve."

"If I was a man could I go where I wanted to and get my food if I worked hard and was honest and paid for it?" exclaimed the little brown bird.

"Oh, no. Men do very strange things. Some have all the food and some have all the coal and iron and oil. Things are not divided up evenly."

"Oh, dear me, you do make me wonder if man's world is a good place to live in. You tell me so many things which I cannot understand at all," sighed the little brown bird.

"Yes," answered the little canary. "The world is a good place to live in. Can't you see how beautiful it is to look at? It would be all right if men were not so selfish. This is going to be a busy day for me; I cannot talk to you any more. This is Armistice Day and on that day, you know, I always spend all my time looking for my mother. Every year I hope that she will come back to the forest on Armistice Day, because she told me that she had such a happy time here on the day that the armistice was signed and there was peace and good-will in the air. I hope she will come again to look for the good-will. Oh, that reminds me that you asked me what good-will is. It is the feeling of kindness and love which one man has for another. It is what makes the world a nice place to live in. My mother said that the world was full of good-will on the first Armistice Day and that it ought to be full of it all the time and that it could be if men were not so selfish. But, as I said, I must look for my pretty canary bird mother. I expect, too, that you want to start on your journey south. I hope that I have not made you unhappy. Look for good-will in the world and I think that you will find it. My mother used to sing, 'Tweet, tweet, good-will, good-will.' I am going to fly away to look for her. Good bye." — Margaret Loring Thomas, in N. Y. Advocate.

MARY'S WILL AND MARJORY'S WAY

"I will have it! Give it to me, Bob you bad boy!" screamed Mary, snatching at the doll which Bob held teasingly out of reach. "I'll tell mother how you bother us!"

"Will you have it now or wait till you can get it?" inquired Bob, making a long arm and seating Miss Genevieve Eleanora safely on top of the wardrobe.

"I'll have it now! You've got to give it to me!" Mary made another snatch at his arm, but Bob was gone, and only the echo of his laugh reached them. Mary turned to Marjory, who was gazing at their darling, so utterly out of reach. Genevieve smiled down at them both as much as to say: "I am quite happy and comfortable here. Don't worry about me."

"Never mind," said Marjory soothingly, as Mary bust into tears of rage. "I guess Bob will take her down after a while. Let's not care."

"But I do care! You came to spend the day with me, and Bob spoils our fun this way! L'll just pay him back!"

"Oh, no, Mary. What good would that do? Let's make it come into the play: I know! We'll play Genevieve was the Fair Lady with the Golden Locks, and she is enchanted and has to stay up in that tower till a prince comes to rescue her from the wicked fairy who put her there."

"That's Bob! He'll play with us without knowing it," laughed Mary. "Well, how shall we work it to get her down?"

"Why, we have to go about it very carefully or the fairy will enchant her more still. At any rate, the walls of her tower are made of glass, and we can see that she is safe and as beautiful as ever. He might have put her inside and locked the door, and then we couldn't even see her lovely face smiling at us as sweet as ever."

"We might put up a ladder and scale the wall of the tower," said Mary, warming to the spirit of the game. "I wonder if we could bring the stepladder up here."

"No. Let's make a rope ladder and fling it up to her," proposed Marjory. Mary liked this plan. She found some cord, and with a good deal of trouble they contrived to make a doll's rope ladder which they flung up to Genevieve. After several trials, it caught on her stiffly outstretched hand and hung there.

"Oh, I believe we really could get her that way!" cried Marjory joyfully. "You pull very carefully, Mary, and I'll hold my frock to catch her. See, she's holding on!"

The plan succeeded. Mary pulled the ladder. Genevieve moved, tipped, and finally tumbled heels over head down into Marjory's wide-spread skirt, landing safely, though somewhat rumped.

And when Bob remembered what he had done and ran up to rescue the Lady with the Golden Locks, he beheld a tea party, at which Genevieve sat in state none the worse for her imprisonment in the high tower. He contributed a handful of candy to the refreshment by way of making up and ran whistling away, leaving two happy little girls behind him.

"Your way was the best," owned Mary. "It was lots nicer than quarelling with Fob."

"Quarelling doesn't do any good, and it spoils the fun," said Marjory wisely.— J. L. Glover, in Exchange.

LITTLE THANKSGIVING

"Little Thanksgiving sir," she said, Tossing her bright, her golden head, A wondrous light in her eyes of blue, And cheeks just touched with the rose's hue.

"I never heard of a name like this, Explain yourself, my little miss." I said, half puzzled, in reply: "Little Thanksgiving! pray tell why."

And now, as skies with color flush, Thus suddenly, the sweetest blush, Across her face as answer came, "Oh, sir, that's not my truly name.

"But mamma, dear—the dearest friend The Lord to any child can send— Says often in a laughing way, That I am her Thanksgiving Day.

"My real name, good sir, is May, But other half of it is Day. But mamma's funny name for me Is 'cause I take things thankfully.

"I thank the Lord for morning light, For sleep and rest in darksome night, For playthings, dolls, and loving friends, And all that our dear Father sends.

"And if the sun in clouds should set, I do not sit me down to fret, And 'this leads mother dear to say, That I am her Thanksgiving Day."

our outgoing trip on the "IHomeric," and that last Sunday afternoon in Westminster Abbey, and printed in full in the leaflet handed out after the service. It is in our own "Psalms and Hymns."

New every morning is the love
Our wakening and uprising prove;
Through sleep and darkness safely brought,
Restored to life and power and thought.

New mercies, each returning day,
Hover around us while we pray;
New perils past, new sins forgiven,
New thoughts of God, new hopes of Heaven.

If in our daily course our mind
Be set to hallow all we find,
New treasures still, of countless price,
God will provide for sacrifice.

The trivial round, the common task,
Will furnish all we need to ask,
Room to deny ourselves, a road
To bring us daily nearer God.

Only, O Lord, in Thy dear love
Fit us for perfect rest above;
And help us, this and every day,
To live more nearly as we pray. Amen.

NEW SECRETARY OF MEN'S WORK SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Rev. J. E. Purcell, pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Wilmington, N. C., has been elected Secretary of Men's Work of the Southern Church by the General Assembly's Committee on Men's Work. Mr. Purcell has accepted the call and will take up his new duties about January 1st. He will move to Chattanooga and establish his office there both because the Presbyterian Progressive Program heads up in Chattanooga and because the Chairman of the Men's Work Committee lives there. Besides this, Chattanooga is very nearly the center of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Purcell has done a splendid work among the men of the churches he has been associated with. He has the record of having taken more of the men of his congregations to the various Laymen's Conventions than any minister in the Assembly. He has in many ways been ideally fitted to take up this pioneer work of establishing the men's organizations in churches, Presbyteries, and Synods, and the Permanent Committee on Men's Work feels most happy in securing him as their first secretary.

Mr. Purcell has no children, but his wife will accompany him to Chattanooga and will be most cordially welcomed by the Presbyterians there. Until January 1st all that desire information as to men's work will continue to write to the Chairman of this Committee, Dr. J. P. McCallie, McCallie School, Chattanooga, Tenn. There are only three or four leaflets available on men's work at present, but a literature to help men's organizations will rapidly be developed.

THE SEMINARY QUESTION BEFORE THE SYNOD OF MISSISSIPPI

The question of the relation of the Synod of Mississippi to a theological seminary was one of absorbing interest.

Since the suspension of the Divinity School in connection with Southwestern Presbyterian University, at Clarksville, Tenn., the Synod of Mississippi has had no official connection with any theological seminary.

Propositions for a number of years have been made from Kentucky Seminary, Louisville, Ky.; Columbia Seminary, Columbia, S. C., and Union Seminary, Richmond, Va., to the Synod to elect representatives on their respective boards of trustees.

At the meeting of the Synod held in Meridian a year ago the Synod appointed an ad interim committee to investigate and make report on this question.

This committee of five held a meeting in Leland in the early spring at which representatives from the three seminaries were present, and presented to the committee their propositions.

This committee made no public announcement of their findings before the convening of Synod.

There was intense interest in the Synod, and some surprise, when the ad interim committee made recommendation that Kentucky Seminary, at Louisville, be adopted as the seminary of the Synod of Mississippi.

At the session of the Synod held in the new Central Presbyterian Church, Wednesday evening, Rev. R. A. Bolling, representing those who favored Kentucky Seminary, urged that the Synod come to a vote, inasmuch as the question had been before the Synod for five years.

The Synod appointed the second order of the day for Thursday as the hour on which this question should be considered and determined.

On Thursday morning the Synod met in the First Presbyterian Church, and Rev. Chas. R. Hemphill, D.D., spoke in behalf of Kentucky Seminary, Rev. W. W.

Moore, D.D., spoke in behalf of Union Seminary, and Rev. John M. Wells, D.D., spoke in behalf of Columbia Seminary. The Synod then took recess for lunch.

Immediately on its convening after lunch all the members of Synod were present, eager to see what the issue would be.

To the surprise of many, the ad interim committee and the friends of Kentucky Seminary declined to make a motion to adopt their own report. By vote of 67 to 32 the matter was indefinitely postponed.

The sentiment of the Synod was manifestly in favor of having a Southern seminary under the complete control of the Southern Church.

It was brought to the attention of Synod that there was a possibility of the removal of Columbia Seminary to Atlanta, or of combining it with Union Seminary, of Richmond.

The speeches of Drs. Chas. R. Hemphill, W. W. Moore and John M. Wells were of high order and fine spirit.

The debates were free from bitterness, and the spirit of Synod was, throughout, one of Christian fellowship.

Rev. C. Randall Garrison, Pastor.

Bluefield — On November 25th, the Westminster Church of Bluefield was organized, and elders, deacons and trustees were elected. Rev. Warner H. DuBose, who has been serving as co-pastor of the First Church was called to be pastor.

Plans for the church proper will be prepared this winter and the campaign for church funds will be started in early spring so that actual construction of the building can be started in early summer and completed before next winter, it is said. The congregation plans the church proper will cost in the neighborhood of sixty or seventy thousand dollars. Including the cost of the Sunday School building. Westminster church when completed will have cost about $150,000.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Washington, Central—Sunday morning, December 2d, the communion service was held. Three persons were received on profession, two of them being young boys from the Sunday School. Others were received by letter. At night a large congregation heard an instructive address on Japan from Rev. Dr. H. W. Myers. A. H.

BOOKS FOR IMMEDIATE USE

"THE WHITE FIELDS OF JAPAN" By Lois Johnson Erickson

Foreign Mission Text-Book for 1924 (With Colored Frontispiece Made in Japan)

A story by one of our finest missionaries, full of life and color, and with a powerful appeal to the Church at home to occupy this strategic field which is shaping the destiny of the Orient.

Miss Milligan, Educational Secretary of the United Presbyterian Church, says of this book:

"Mrs. Erickson has covered the great subject from the very earliest missionary endeavor in the Sixteenth Century to the latest plans and achievements of the Southern Presbyterians, in a remarkably small compass. She has crammed the pages full of the most fascinating stories, thrilling adventures, inspiring devotion, and earnest appeals.

"She has endeared herself to all leaders by supplying a pronouncing vocabulary of Japanese names, tables of statistics, names of all the missionaries, and a short bibliography that will prove to be the inspiration instead of the despair of busy study-class members."

Arranged for TEXT-BOOK USE with questions at the end of each chapter. Paper, 50c; Cloth, 75c. Postpaid.

"OUR RATIONAL FAITH" By Richard D. Dodge

The Prize Book for 1923

Accepted and published as the best manuscript submitted in the Annual Contest for the best book written by a member of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

"Our Rational Faith," by the Rev. Richard D. Dodge, is a book born in due time and is well named. The author writes with sympathetic regard for the modern man who is in intellectual fog and is honestly searching for the truth. He knows what he believes and expresses his convictions in a clear and forceful style. As a modern apologetic it should have a wide reading.—J. Layton Mauze.

From the Christian Observer

"This volume by the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Logan, W. Va., was awarded the distinction of being the 'Honor Book' published by our Presbyterian Committee of Publication, at Richmond, Va., during the year 1923. The purpose of the volume is to present those doctrines of the Christian religion which have found general acceptance with the Christian Church of all ages in such a manner as to appeal to the reason of the many thousands of earnest, thinking men and women, young and old, who are in search of the truth. The author's purpose is constructive and conciliatory, rather than destructive and controversial."

PIONEER WOMEN OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES

Edited by Mrs. M. D. Irvine

The Book "By Women, For Women"

This new book, written by women, especially for women and others interested in women's work in the church, carries the intensely interested story of the beginnings and later development of organized woman's work in the Southern Presbyterian Church.

It is arranged by Synodicals—a chapter for each one. These are written by recognized leaders in the Synods. The book is packed with interesting facts and thus becomes an authentic history of this very important branch of church work. It is a significant and valuable addition to the literature of our Church.

Contains half-tone portraits of many of the pioneer women leaders.

Every Presbyterian woman should own a copy.

DIED

W. G. JOHNSTON

Whereas, God in His providence has called home one of our beloved deacons, W. G. Johnston, we, the deacons of Pineville Presbyterian Church, do hereby resolve:

1st. That the church has lost the services of one of its most faithful deacons, whose loss from our Board of Deacons will be greatly felt.

2d. That we extend to the bereaved family our deepest sympathy, with the assurance that we share in their loss, but we are comforted by believing that he has passed to his reward and was prepared to meet his Saviour.

3d. That a copy of these resolutions be given to the family, that the pastor read them from the pulpit and a copy be sent to the Presbyterian Standard.

W. M. ADAMS

Death comes to man in myriad forms; it is a conqueror of time, the herald of eternity. Death is the one monarch whom revolutions cannot conquer, the one ruler whose kingdom ever widens.

Day by day we are brought to realize the certainty of death, yet when death visits our own immediate family we are never prepared to accept it, and it is but nature which influences us to cry aloud in our bereavement. Again when that mysterious foe takes away the loved one, our hearts go out in sympathy and all tenderness.

Whereas, the Board of Deacons of Westminster Presbyterian Church have been called upon to mourn the death of one of our members, Brother W. M. Adams.

Therefore be it Resolved: That this Board extend its sincere sympathy to the wife of our departed brother, and remind her that "God works in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform," and though the heart may ache for him whose earthly pilgrimage is o'er, there is that consoling truth that some day, some time, beyond the shadow of this vale, there will be a happy reunion—no more tears, no more heartaches—but a happiness that has no ending.

MRS. FLORA E. PATRICK

The members of the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Presbyterian Church, Kinston, N. C., take this means of expressing their sincere regret over the loss by death of one of their oldest and most respected members, Mrs. Flora E. Patrick, who died in Lumberton, N. C., November 16th.

Mrs. Patrick was 88 years of age. She had been in failing health for many months, but so long as her health would permit, was a faithful attendant upon the appointed services of her church.

We thank God for the influence of her life of faith, of devotion to duty, and of high Christian ideals. It is lives like hers that inspire us to strive to gain the welcome plaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

DR. TYLER A. CAMPBELL

Tyler Alexander Campbell was born at Aberdeen, N. C., September 17, 1893, and died at his home, in the same town, March 31, 1923. He was the son of Alexander C. Campbell, deceased, and Mrs. Flora McLean Capps. He is survived by one half-sister, Margaret Capps; two half-brothers, John Capps and McLean Capps, and his mother, Mrs. Capps, of Winston-Salem.

He joined the Presbyterian Church at 12 years of age, and grew up to young manhood in the town of Aberdeen, N. C. He prepared himself to practice dentistry, and was successfully engaged in his profession in the town of Aberdeen at the time of his death.

Dr. Campbell served in the army during the war as first lieutenant. His death brought sorrow to the entire community. He was a devoted and faithful Christian and a member of the Presbyterian Church. Most of Dr. Campbell's life was spent in Aberdeen, N. C., where his uniform courtesy and gentility of deportment, his kindness of heart, purity and nobility of character had won the high regard and love of the entire community.

MRS. W. C. CONNELL

Mrs. W. C. Connell died at her home, two miles out from Hendersonville, N. C., at 8:45 a. m. November 23, 1923, after an illness of nine days with pneumonia, which developed into an acute attack of brights disease. Mrs. Connell was 85 years, four months and two days of age. She was born near Balfore, Scotland, July 21, 1838, and came to America at the age of 31 to meet her intended husband who had preceded her a number of years. After their marriage, which took place at Greenville, S. C., they settled on a farm in Transylvania County, near Brevard, and had born to them five sons: George, John, Robert, Graham, and James, four of whom are living; George and Graham, of Hendersonville, N. C.; Robert, of Pittsboro, N. C., and James, of Spencer, N. C., who were all with their mother during her last illness and at the bedside at her death. Mr. Connell died March 22, 1918, at the age of 84 years.

Mrs. Connell was a devoted Christian woman, having always taken an active part in church and Sunday School work. She had been a devoted member of the Presbyterian Church since childhood. She was a devoted mother and her sons were very much devoted to her.

Story and Incident

THE DRUMMER BOY'S STURDINESS

(The following story, said to be a true one, is taken from the Industrial School Journal, of Lancaster, Ohio. It shows how faithful Charlie Coulson, a drummer boy in the War Between the States, remained to his vows, and how bravely he stood a terrific wound and painful operation, but finally made the supreme sacrifice. It is an engaging human interest story.)

Two or three times in my life God in His mercy touched my heart, and twice before my conversion I was under deep conviction.

During the American war, I was a surgeon in the United States Army; and after the battle of Gettysburg, there were many hundred wounded soldiers in my hospital, amongst whom were 28 who had been wounded so severely that they required my services at once, some whose legs had to be amputated; some, their arms; and others, both their arm and leg. One of the latter was a boy who had been but three months in the service; and being too young for a soldier, had enlisted as a drummer. When my assistant surgeon and one of my stewards wished to administer chloroform previous to the amputation, he turned his head aside and positively refused to receive it. When the steward told him that it was the doctor's orders, he said, "Send the doctor to me." When I came to his bedside, I said, "Young man, why do you refuse chloroform? When I found you on the battlefield, you were so far gone that I thought it hardly worth while to pick you up; but when you opened those big blue eyes, I thought you had a mother somewhere who might at that moment be thinking of her boy. I did not want you to die on the field, so I ordered you to be brought here; but you have now lost so much blood that you are too weak to endure an operation without chloroform, therefore you had better let me give you some." He laid his hand on mine, looking me in the face, said, "Doctor, one Sunday afternoon, in the Sabbath School, when I was nine and a half years old, I gave my heart to Christ. I learned to trust Him then; I have been trusting Him ever since, and I can trust Him now; He is my strength and my stimulant; He will support me while you amputate my arm and leg."

I then asked him if he would allow me to give him a little brandy, but this he also refused. The look that he gave me I shall never forget. At that time I hated Jesus, but I respected that boy's loyalty to his Saviour and when I saw how he loved and trusted Him to the last, there was something that touched my heart, and I did for that boy what I had never done for any other soldier, I asked him if he wished to see his chaplain. "Oh, yes, Sir!" was the answer. When Chaplain R—came, he at once knew the boy from having often met him at the tent prayer meeting; and taking his hand said "Well Charlie, I am sorry to see you in this sad condition." "Oh I am all right, sir," he answered. "The doctor offered me chloroform, but I declined it; then he wished to give me brandy, which I also declined; and now, if my Saviour calls me I can go to him in my right mind." "You may not die Charlie," said the chaplain; "but if the Lord should call you away is there anything I can do for you after you are gone?" "Chaplain, please put your hand under my pillow and take my little Bible. In it you will find my mother's address; please send it to her and write a letter, and tell her that since the day I left home I have never let a day pass without reading a portion of God's word, and daily praying that God would bless my dear, dear mother, no matter whether on the march, on the battlefield, or in the hospital." "Is there anything else that I can do for you, my lad?" asked the chaplain. "Yes, please write a letter to the superintendent of the Sands Street Sunday School, Brooklyn, N. Y., and tell him that the kind words, many prayers, and good advice he gave me I have never forgotten; they have followed me through all the dangers of battle, and now, in my dying hour, I ask my dear Saviour to bless my dear old superintendent; that is all."

Turning toward me, he said, "Now doctor, I am ready; and I promise you that I will not even groan while you take off my arm and leg, if you will not offer me chloroform." I promised, but I had not the courage to take the knife in my hand to perform the operation without first going into the next room and taking a little stimulant to nerve myself to perform my duty. While cutting through the flesh, Charlie Coulson, never groaned but when I took the saw to separate the bone, the lad took the corner of his pillow in his mouth, and all that I could hear him utter was, "Oh Jesus, blessed Jesus, stand by me now." He kept his promise, and never groaned.

That night I could not sleep, for whichever way I turned I saw those soft blue eyes, and when I closed mine, the words "Blessed Jesus, stand by me now!" kept ringing in my ears. Between 12 and one o'clock I left my bed and visited the hospital, a thing I had never done before unless specially called; but such was my desire to see that boy. Upon my arrival there, I was informed by the night steward that 16 of the hopeless cases had died and been carried to the dead-house. "How is Charlie Coulson? Is he among the dead? I asked." "No, sir," answered the steward; "he is sleeping as a babe."

When I came up to the bed where he lay one of the nurses informed me that about nine o'clock two members of the Y. M. C. A. came through the hospital to read and sing a hymn. They were accompanied by Chaplain R—who knelt by Charlie Coulson's bed and offered up a fervent and soul-stirring prayer, after which they sang, while still upon their knees, the sweetest of all hymns, "Jesus lover of my soul," in which Charlie joined. I did not understand how that boy, who had undergone such excruciating pain, could sing.

Five days after I had amputated that dear boy's arm and leg he sent for me, and it was from him on that day I heard the first Gospel sermon.

"Doctor," he said, "my time has come; I do not expect to see another sunrise; but thank God, I am ready to go, and before I die I desire to thank you with all my heart for your kindness to me. Doctor, you are a Jew, you do not believe in Jesus; will you please stand here and see me die trusting my Saviour to the last moment of my life? I tried to stay, but I could not, for I had not the courage to stand by and see a Christian boy die rejoicing in the love of that Jesus whom I had been taught to hate, so I hurriedly left the room."

About 20 minutes later, a steward, who found me sitting in my private office covering my face with my hand, said, "Doctor, Charlie Coulson wishes to see you." "I have just seen him," I answered, "And can't see him again." "But Doctor, he says he must see you once more before he dies." I made up my mind to see him, say an endearing word and let him die but I was determined that no word of his should influence me in the least so far as his Jesus was concerned.

When I entered the hospital, I saw he was sinking fast, so I sat down by his bed. Asking me to take his hand, he said, "Doctor, I love you because you are a Jew, the best friend I have found in this world was a Jew." I asked him who that was. He answered, "Jesus Christ, to whom I want to introduce you before I die; and will you promise me doctor, that what I am about to say you will never forget?" I promised; and he said, "five days ago, while you amputated my arm and leg, I prayed to the Lord Jesus Christ to convert your soul." Those words went deep into my heart. I could not understand how, when I was causing him the most intense pain, he could forget all about himself, and think of nothing but his Saviour and my unconverted soul. All I could say to him was, "Well my dear boy, you will soon be all right." With these words I left him, and 12 minutes later he fell asleep, "safe in the arms of Jesus."

Your doctor advises internal cleanliness

HE will tell you that the first results of constipation—headache, sleepless nights, biliousness, backache, etc.—warn that the body is flooded with intestinal poisons. In time, these poisons may cause the breakdown of health and lead to serious disease. In constipation, say intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illness including the gravest diseases of life.

Hence, doctors urge internal cleanliness—regular and thorough removal of food waste from the body.

Laxatives Aggravate Constipation

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favor Lubrication

Medical science, through knowledge of the intestinal tract gained by X-ray observation, has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage out of the body. Thus Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water it is harmless.

Get rid of constipation and avoid disease by adopting the habit of internal cleanliness. Take Nujol as regularly as you brush your teeth or wash your face. For sale by all druggists.

followed one to the grave, and that one was Charlie Coulson, the drummer boy and I rode three miles to see him buried. I had him dressed in a new uniform, and placed in an officers coffin, with a United States flag over it.

That dear boy's dying words made a deep impression upon me. I was rich at that time, so far as money is concerned, but I would have given every penny I possessed if I could have felt toward Christ as Charlie did; but that feeling cannot be bought with money.

Alas! I soon forgot all about my Christian soldier's little sermon, but I could not forget the boy himself. I now know that at that time I was under deep conviction of sin, but, but I fought against Christ with all the hatred of an orthodox Jew for nearly ten years, until, finally, the dear boy's prayer was answered, and God converted my soul.

About 18 months after my conversion I attended a prayer meeting one evening in the city of Brooklyn. It was one of these meetings when Christians testify to the loving kindness of their Saviour. After several of them had spoken, an elderly lady arose and said: "Dear friends, this may be the last time that it is my privilege to testify for Christ. My family physician told me yesterday that my right lung is very nearly gone, and my left lung is very much affected; so, at the best, I have but a short time to be with you; but I belong to Jesus, and I have a boy with Jesus in heaven. He was a soldier in the war. He was wounded at the battle of Gettysburg, and fell into the hands of a Jewish doctor, who amputated his arm and leg, but he died five days after the operation. The chaplain of the regiment wrote me a letter and sent me my boy's Bible. In that letter I was informed that my Charlie, in his dying hour, sent for that Jewish doctor, and said to him, "Doctor, before I die, I wish to tell you that five days ago, while you amputated my arm and leg, I prayed that the Lord Jesus Christ would convert your soul."

When I heard this lady's testimony, I could sit still no longer. I left my seat, crossed the room, and taking her hand, said, "God bless you, my dear sister! your boy's prayer has been heard and answered. I am the Jewish doctor for whom your Charlie prayed, and his Saviour is my Saviour."—The Uplift.

Fifty thousand tons of new steel rail, enough to lay 327 miles of track, have just been purchased by the Southern Railway System for delivery during the first six months of 1923. Included in the purchase are 4,200 tons of 269 miles, of one hundred pound rail, which is now the standard for the Southern's main lines, and 7,800 tons, or 58 miles of 85 pound rail. In line with the Southern's policy to purchase materials in the South to the greatest extent possible, 40,700 tons were purchased from the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company and will be rolled at Emsley, Ala., for use on the lines in Northern Virginia, 7,200 tons were purchased from the Bethlehem Steel Co., and will be rolled at Sparrows Point, Md., for use on the Louisville-St. Louis Line; 2,100 tons were purchased from the Illinois Steel Co., and will be rolled in the Chicago District. The hundred pound steel will all be laid on double track lines, releasing an equal mileage of 85 pound rail for use on lines now equipped with rail of lighter section.

 Toronto, Ont., Canada.
 My Dear Mr. LePage:
 I take this occasion to write you about the Style 16 Cups, and indeed our whole Communion Set. After nearly a year's use we are more than ever pleased with it. I have visited several places where the flat top cup and aluminum trays are in use, and have just wished that the kind we have could be substituted for them. Ours are just a joy to us, and I wish I could induce all to buy this kind. The glasses are much prettier and easier to handle and to drink from.

Is it because we had to have the sun
To take them that they look
So happy every one?
The book
Has only light and laughter; you would say
There was no day
Of rain or tears
Through all those pictured years.

And were we out of doors as much as these Insistent glimpses show?
It seems as if we never had to go
Inside the house at all,
But, scorning roof and wall,
Just pitched our lives beneath the blessed trees.

The chronicle that memory keeps
Of what befell
In those same days
Would sometimes lead us back by shadow
Would sometimes lead us back by shadow-

Where sorrow sleeps;
This little book is wiser, and its pages tell
How all was well.

EDITORIAL

CHRISTMAS 1923

*"At Christmas play and make good cheer,
For Christmas comes but once a year."*

To some the fact that Christmas only comes once a year is one of its best features, but they who get comfort out of that fact are men and women who are soured in disposition and who have no sympathy with the joys of their kind.

Whatever be our feelings, time always brings the season, and whether we are in full accord with its spirit, we find ourselves keeping step with its music.

There seems to be something in the atmosphere that defies torpid livers or even empty purses, so that the crabbed become genial and the empty purse, in some way, becomes full.

The strings of the tight-wad's purse become loosened and hard hearts become soft. Old scores are blotted out and ancient grievances are forgotten.

Dickens in his Christmas stories has immortalized the sweetening effects of the season; and one of the charms of the "Old South," now in the past, was the Christmas celebration on the old plantation, when the care-free slave shouted his Christmas greetings and Christmas wishes with the confident expectation that his bread thus cast upon the waters would return to him after many days.

All of such celebrations have become parcels of the past. It has become a season of revelry, when men and women exhibit the spirit of the devil rather than of Christ.

It should be the desire of every child of God to exhibit the spirit of Christ, and to emphasize that the Child who was born in a manger makes this world a better place to live in, and His children better people to live with. Let our hearts respond to every holy and gentle influence and our ears to every cry of distress.

The Standard wishes its readers a Merry Christmas, and prays that upon each of us the Spirit of the Christ Child may rest, and that through the coming months, men and women may ever see Christ in us the hope of glory.

THE THREE DOMAINS

Some months ago one of the readers of the Standard was advised by a man of a high order of scholarship to read a volume of essays from the pen of an eminent English churchman, with the additional statement that to his mind they were the most stimulating treatises along the lines of broad and original thought that had been produced by this century. The advice was followed, the result being a conviction that rationalism had so obsessed the mind of this original and pungent thinker that nothing was left him but the belief that Christ was a strong and gracious personality, the observance of whose precepts would greatly benefit the world. The eminent churchman, along with many another, seemed to take it for granted that the principles of the religion of Christ must be subjected to strict laws of human logic. Furthermore, if we assert that these principles are beyond the domain of mere rationalism, we are weakly afraid to submit them to the only real test.

A few years ago an exchange professor from Leland Stanford University was giving in Columbia University a course on the Romantic period of English literature and its development from 1780 to 1840. After setting forth with great power and charm the individual beauties of Wordsworth, Keats, Shelley, etc., and after speaking of the admitted fact that poetic principles are in their very essence so elusive, so spiritually discerned that the perception of them depends on the quality of one's own mind and imagination, he added by way of illustration that they may be compared, in that respect, to the vital principles of the religion of Christ. They are beyond the realm of logic and are cognizable to those only who are prepared to perceive them.

In the summer of 1922 some of us heard Dr. Howerton's lectures, given at Montreat under the auspices of the Committee of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief. In the final lecture of this great series, he depicted with clearness and vividness the threefold divisions of human existence, the physical, the intellectual and the spiritual. As the stupendous achievements of science are unsuspected and uncomprehended by an ignorant savage, whose life consists in eating, drinking, sleeping and fighting, so the mind of mere intellectual development, however astute it may be, is in itself incapable of grasping the laws of the purely spiritual domain above it. The three zones were almost visible to his audience. This lofty region of the spiritual had, however, laws and principles which if apprehended by the church and applied with energy and faith, would give impetus and velocity to the progress of Christ's kingdom that had never been dreamed of. Did he prove it to the skeptic? Can the laws of wireless telegraphy be explained to the human brute? Could Shakespeare have proved the truth and art of Prospero's utterances in "The Tempest" to a man whose life was confined to the problems of getting bread and meat? Humanly speaking, no. A blind man cannot see the glory of the moonlight on a summer sea.

The great illustration of this principle is to be found in the unfathomable words of Christ when He said, "Flesh and blood have not revealed it unto thee but my Father in Heaven."

M. J. W.

A STUDY IN PASTORATES

Recently our attention was called to the work of two pastors, laboring in Birmingham, Ala.

One has been the storm center of doctrinal controversy for years past. He has split one church, carrying with him a large membership and organizing a rival church nearby. He has been a contributor to the secular press, in which he has aired his theological aberrations, and proved to the knowing one his ignorance of theology.

His latest move in the limelight is to discuss the "question of healing by faith, or from the standpoint of the Bible, as taught by Christ."

An invitation has been extended to all who are sick and can come, and to all who have loved ones about whose health they are anxious, to come to this service and derive whatever benefit they may from a close consideration of the subject.

In the same paper in which this announcement appears, we have a long account of the thirty-fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. J. A. Bryan.

So great is the contrast between these two pastors that we are constrained to publish his good deeds, because otherwise the Church would never know them.

He is a man whose left hand knows nothing of what his right hand is doing.

Thanksgiving day was the thirty-fifth anniversary of his coming to Birmingham.

A writer thus sums up the wonderful record of this devoted servant of the Lord:

"At the blessed Thanksgiving-tide somehow, somewhere, every heart turns instinctively to those beloved and revered both in the immediate circle of the family and out of it, and today there comes to mind the name of one whose gentle, Christ-like life and tender ministrations to all classes stands out in radiance to all of Birmingham as a personality for whom the entire community gives thanks.

"It is the Rev. J. A. Bryan, pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church, where for the past 35 years he has served as the faithful, unselfish, God-fearing, Christian pastor.

"Thirty-five years ago the Rev. James A. Bryan came to this community to live and love and work. At that time he was a young minister, just from Princeton, and when he took on his shoulders the pastorate of this church it was a mere infant in arms—just a little group of members holding services in an old ramshackle residence. Since that time Rev. Mr. Bryan, known now far and wide as 'Brother Bryan,' has been untiring in his services, not only to his own church but to the people of Birmingham to such an extent that he is called 'The Pastor of Birmingham,' and he is beloved by all classes and creeds, Greeks, Italians, Catholics, Jews, negroes, and all denominations. To all classes in distress, Brother Bryan is ever ready to minister. It is the belief of all who know him that he follows as nearly in the footsteps of the lowly Nazarene as any person in our midst.

"Recently a record of some of the services of 'Brother Bryan,' during his pastorate here has been completed and it is interesting to note that during a quarter of a century—25 years of his pastorate since July 1, 1899—he has alone performed 2,588 marriage ceremonies, besides a number in which he has assisted. Since the same date he has conducted on an average of four funerals a week, besides the many in which he has assisted. During the flu epidemic, he sometimes conducted as many as 52 funerals in one month. He has prepared 3,588 sermons and speeches, and at present he conducts on a weekly average 15 services, besides the sermons and other services at the church of which he is the pastor. He leads classes at every fire station in the district, and weekly conducts services at the Ingalls Iron Works, Alabama, Great Southern Railroad shops, Virginia Bridge Works, Hardie-Tynes, B. R., L. & P. Co., Southern Railroad shops, and on rainy days he goes to the Houston Biscuit Company, Martin Biscuit Company, Heber Candy Company, Phillips-Lester Overall Factory, and the Southern Bell Telephone Company.

"He has received into the membership of the Third Presbyterian Church of Birmingham, 1,590 persons. Into other churches in Jefferson County he has received a membership of 800. He has held evangelistic meetings in the states of Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Kentucky, Tennessee and Maryland, and received into the churches in these states, 2,153 members.

"To those who are sick or in sorrow, 'Brother Bryan' is the universal visitor—always pouring out from his loving heart, sympathy and comfort, and taking to them the message of Jesus Christ, the Saviour, who died that the world might be saved."

"NANKING THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY"

An article, bearing the above title, and published in "The China Christian Advocate," has been sent to us by one of our missionaries. He wishes us to see what those whom we send out to preach the Gospel in China are "up against." The article was written by a missionary of the Methodist Church. After stating that the Seminary was founded by the Presbyterians and has been conservative from the beginning, he makes complaint that the Southern Presbyterians have recently emphasized their conservative attitude and have taken steps to guard the conservatism of the Seminary. He correctly states that the chief point at issue is the inspiration of the Bible, "which means its historical accuracy and infallibility." He then proceeds to give his own idea of the Bible.

"The literary criticism of the Bible, which has been going on for more than a hundred years, has shown clearly that the Bible grew up much as other libraries and came out of the life of the people who wrote. It is colored with their social customs and philosophical ideas. It is limited by their scientific knowledge and outlook on the world. Modern scholars of recognized standing no longer believe the historical and scientific infallibility of the Bible." He then tells us how marvellous the intellectual awakening of China, and what a "terrific task," in the sphere of apologetics, is thus imposed on the preachers. He proceeds to ask, "Can modern ministers be trained in a seminary that insists on filling men's minds with ideas of the Scriptures that no intellectuals have entertained for the past fifty years? Many of the old ideas of religion must change; some of the old creeds must be rewritten or scrapped. If we do not have faith enough in Christianity to boldly tackle these intellectual problems we might as well give up all schools and colleges.

"A theological seminary is an educational institution. If such a school has no standing in the world of scholars of what use is it in the midst of such a crisis as that in which we now live? The universities are turning out men every year trained in the new methods. Evolution is the very backbone of their training in history, in science and in comparative religion. There are statements of history and science in the Bible which no evolutionist can possibly accept. How can we expect a conservative minister to hold the intellectual respect of a man trained in the university?"

"If Christianity cannot win the allegiance of the thinking people of China it might as well surrender. I do not see how men trained in an ultra-conservative seminary can meet the needs of the present hour. But I do believe that the Church never had a more fascinating opportunity than she has in China just at this time to call men to follow Jesus Christ. His is the only program of social and individual reform that is adequate to the terrific needs that are all about us. But he need not crucify his intellect to follow Him."

The writer concludes by asserting his belief that "for the sake of the whole future of the church in China the time has come for the Methodist Church to take its stand in this matter."

We find ourselves in hearty agreement with this concluding statement. If this writer represents the Methodist Church in China, the time has come for that church to withdraw from Nanking Seminary, and leave the stupid conservatives in peace. Why perpetuate a strife that is bound to grow more bitter as the divergence becomes more marked? Let the Modernists set up for themselves. Let them conform their teachings to the demands of the evolutionists. Let them seek, by the exhibition of their superior scholarship, to "win the allegiance of the thinking people of China." Let them then in the use of all up-to-date methods set before their cultured and critical audience Christ's "program of social and individual reform." The field is open to them. China is big enough to furnish ample room for their activities. Science demands demonstration. They wish to honor science, and to follow scientific methods. Let them demonstrate the effectiveness of their modernized

A CHRISTMAS CAROL

Azariah Foster Reimer, in Zion's Herald

Amazing Truth, and can it be
That Heaven poured its legions forth,
With strains of Seraph harmony,
The heralds of Messiah's birth?
That humble shepherds' watchful eyes
Beheld the glory streaming down
As noon-day bright, thro' midnight skies,
Among their flocks, near David's Town?

Those shepherds heard with glad surprise
The happiest news to Earth e'er given.
With haste they came; their wondering eyes
Beheld the richest gift of Heaven;
And there in Bethlehem's sacred fold
They worshipped at the sight sublime—
The new-born Saviour, long foretold,
The Prince of Peace of David's line.

O World, eclipsed in dreadful night
Of hate and greed and cruel wrong,
With faith obscured by reign of might,
Draw nigh and list the angels' song.
O, catch that message yet again,
"To God ascribe eternal praise,
On Earth be peace, good-will to men,
From this time forth to endless days."

Again to Bethlehem make haste,
And 'round that manger kneel in awe,
For there the Holy Babe is placed
Who rules the ages in His law.
Return ye then to home and mart,
In all the world make hatred cease:
When Love shall rule in every heart
Shall dawn Messiah's reign of Peace.

Christianity. They insist that the "old-time religion" with its old-time Bible is out of date, and cannot meet the requirements of our scholarly age. Let them stop warning us of this, and show us by actual experimentation a better type of Christianity that can meet the needs of this wonderfully learned age. Surely this is the sensible and practicable thing to do. They are wasting their breath in berating the conservatives, and extolling their higher grade of culture. The conservatives are "set in their ways." They think that Christ is a safer teacher than the evolutionist, and so they cling to the old book to which He gave such repeated and unqualified endorsement.

Our missionaries in China and Japan are entitled to our utmost sympathy. Their worst foes are those of their own household. These foes, in deference to the so-called "intellectuals," the modern wise-acres, would reduce Christianity to a mere system of philosophy, with nothing to offer but a "program of social and individual reform."

THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS

Christmas is coming! Do you remember how that announcement thrilled your heart when you were a child? Of course you do and some of the most pleasing and lasting impressions of childhood are associated with the anniversary of our Saviour's birth. It is pre-eminently the children's day, the one anniversary of the year that captures the child's heart and imagination. Why is this so? We have the explanation of this fact in the words of Jesus Himself: "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not; for such belongeth to the kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall in no wise enter therein." Christmas, as the day we celebrate Christ's birth, appeals to the child heart, which in its purity, its trustfulness, its spirit of humility and dependence, is open to all the holy influences of the kingdom of God. "In our infancy heaven lies all about us." It is not strange, therefore, that the heart of childhood, attuned to the spiritual world, should hear the echoes of that angelic choir, singing over the Judean plains; the Gloria in Excelsis. The story of that wonderful Babe, cradled in a manger, on that first Christmas night, in the long ago, takes a deep hold of the child's heart. They believe it, receive it, and rejoice in it. They seem to catch its meaning by that spiritual instinct that allies them to the kingdom. They catch the spirit of the day. We used to load them down with gifts at our Sunday School Christmas celebrations. Now we ask them to bring gifts for their little brothers and sisters who have no one to make gifts to them, and who need clothes and food and simple Christmas toys. And the children come, with laden arms, with shining eyes and with joyful hearts, and lay their gifts at the feet of Him whose birth they celebrate. They know the truth of Jesus' words: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." They have the Christmas spirit. "Of such is the kingdom of God."—Ch. Evangelist.

We grow rapturous when the choir begins to sing, "Jesus, the name high over all." Of his nativity a long line of illustrious painters have spread their richest canvas. He was the inspiring theme of Handel's greatest oratoria—"The Messiah." The roll of the vast outstretching centuries begins at the Cave of Bethlehem. A great Frenchman declared that every important event in the history of the world sprang from the cradle of some new birth. Over Bethlehem, in the blue Syrian firmament, A star is gleaming in the sky,
Where mists of ages reigned;
And those who by its light come nigh,
See hope has been regained.

This name must every tongue confess, and before it every knee shall bow, King of kings, Lord of lords! The Child not only takes his place in history, but all history takes its place in him.—J. Marvin Nichols.

There could be no Christmas without Christ. It is His coming that makes the happy day possible. The real purpose of Christmas is to celebrate His birth. He came to the world to provide salvation for man. It was said concerning Him, "Thou shalt call His name Jesus, for He shall save His people from their sin." His mission was for all men. He instructed His followers to carry His Gospel to every creature.

Christmas and missions are vitally connected. Christmas celebrates Christ's coming, and missions make it known. Christmas reminds us of the world's redemption through Christ, and missions is man's effort under the leading of his Spirit and the blessing of God, to give the world an opportunity to receive the blessings of the provided redemption.—Ex.

THE STRATEGY OF THE SITUATION

A Sermon

By Rev. G. F. Bell, D.D.

Matthew 18:2: "And He called to Him a little child and set him in the midst of them."

In more senses than one the child is the key to the situation in the kingdom of God: he is not only our example in faith and humility but our best hope of the establishment of a kingdom of truth and righteousness and consequently fullness of life in the earth. The rising generation is still pliable and its life is yet to be lived; for educators, preachers, and reformers to concentrate their efforts upon the young is their most hopeful strategy.

From time to time the women of the church study mission text-books that are most informing and therefore most stimulating in their revelation of humanity's needs and hunger and of how the Gospel of Christ is proving its power unto salvation and its divine backing in our day and generation. I've often wished that a way could be found to interest the men of the church in these decidedly worth-while studies. The book taken up by the good women this fall is a home mission book entitled "The Child and America's Future." It is so compelling in its interest and speaks with authority on matters that concern us so intimately that I'm making it the basis of what shall be said this morning on The Strategy of the Situation—by which is meant the moral and spiritual situation confronting the Church in America today.

As was said in the beginning, in the young folk of any generation lies the church's best hope of building among men, under God, a kingdom of righteousness and consequent fullness of life. Wilhelm II and his minister of education laid hold of the youth of Germany a generation ago and systematically trained them to the militaristic point of view. The consequence was a state of mind that those who left Germany before the system was inaugurated were unable to credit as representing their Germany, a state of mind that made possible the inception of the late war and the marvelous efficiency and cohesion shown by the German forces in it. When Japan determined to be a progressive rather than a hermit nation, one of her first steps was the inauguration of a public school system reaching her children with modern education; this made possible Japan's magic rise to imperial world rank. A generation ago the W. C. T. U. succeeded in getting systematic temperance instruction placed in the curricula of our day and Sunday Schools; national prohibition followed as soon as the boys and girls of that day attained a dominant place in the voting strength of the nation. Our government tried to teach the farmers of the country new tricks in agriculture with but poor success; "What does a bookish office man in Washington know about practical farming?" asked the old fellows. Then boys' corn clubs were organized and revolution began. In South Carolina a boy, Jerry Moore, raised 228 bushels of corn on an acre by the new, intensive methods; within three years the state trebled the size of its corn crop. Unfortunately we let the tobacco interests put one over on us and all united in teaching our soldier boys in the late war that the cigarette was their best friend; by 1921 the consumption of cigarettes in America showed an increase of 400 per cent over 1914. In these various ways it has been demonstrated on a large scale that the youthful mind is a fruitful soil for the propagation of ideas. Some one has said that an army moves forward on its stomach; it is equally true that the human race moves forward on the feet of children and youth.

Turning for a moment to the distinctly spiritual side, is it not true that in America revival methods of arresting the attention and changing the lives of adults have been brought to the nth degree of efficient organization? Yet the great army of recruits for the church during revivals and in normal times still consists of boys and girls in their teens; and those who come into the church early in life usually stay by it most closely and make the most dependable and useful members. And the best point of contact in dealing with old and hardened sinners is their memory of pious influences touching their youth—so much so that rescue workers have come to have almost no hope of reaching those who knew no such influences in their early and impressionable years. Foreign missionaries tell us that it is the second and third generations of Christians that show full spiritual development. The best hope of the church everywhere is to reach and mold youth for Christ.

Over against results which point the way to the true strategy for all advocates of the best and fullest life lies a widespread and varied neglect of childhood and youth. Being a baby is said to be a highly dangerous occupation. The death rate for children under one year of age in the U. S. A. is 100 per thousand, or one in 10 while in New Zealand, where systematic education of the mothers in their care has been long in force, it is 48, or less than half. The best rate in the U. S. A. is in the state of Washington, where it is 61; the worst is in our own North Carolina, where it is 141. Of the 250,000 children who die annually in the U. S. A. less than a year old, we are told that half could be saved. If we saved those 125,000 annually, in 10 years we should have rescued enough precious lives to populate a great city—a million and a quarter. But the infantile death rate is simply the most sensitive index we have to unwholesome conditions and improper care which show their baneful effects in various ways in later life. Those who escape death in infancy and childhood are frequently maimed for after life. Of the millions of young men who were registered for the draft in the late war, one-third were found unfit for military service. This is significant, but more impressive still is the statement of physicians that a large proportion of these physical defects could have been remedied in childhood. Of our twenty million school children between the ages of six and 15, 1-20 have defective hearing; 1-3 defective sight; 1-4 defective nourishment; 1-3 defective tonsils and adenoids; 1-2 defective teeth. In view of such statements coming to us on good authority, Christians should rejoice that the government now has a Children's Bureau, that a Child Welfare Association has been organized national in scope, and that the number of our public health nurses has increased from a beggarly 1330 in 1890 to 11,000 in 1922; and should co-operate sympathetically with the teaching of domestic science and true food values in our schools, with educational health clinics, and with every organized movement to make our nation, and especially our youth, healthier.

Along with neglect of the body has gone neglect of the mind. We are disposed to think that we are the best in the world in most every respect; perhaps it will shock us to know that seven countries in the world have a higher proportion of literacy than has the U. S. A., with its boasted school system. There are many bright spots on our educational horizon, but many very dark ones. We were appalled to learn that one-fourth of the vast army recruited in 1917 was illiterate. With many who are classified as literate, reading and writing is for all practical purposes a lost art. A democracy can not survive save by the intelligence of the masses. Yet the average American child leaves school after the sixth grade. In Alabama it was shown that 30 per cent of the working children completed no school grade. Such lack of progress is due to schools open but a few months in the year and attendance made irregular by children working in the crops and elsewhere. Great progress has been made, but great need still exists—the need for better buildings, larger seating capacity, better trained teachers. We think we are strong on education. Yet in 1920 the nation spent more for luxuries than it has for education in all its history. The amount spent for face powder, cosmetics, and perfume alone was double the salaries of all our grammar and high school teachers. The sum spent for jewelry in a single year is greater than the slowly accumulated endowments of all our colleges and universities. The sum spent for cigarettes is larger than the annual cost of all our elementary and secondary education, including the cost of new buildings. The educational needs of special classes like the children of aliens are especially urgent.

Are not those right who contend that the general intellectual level in a democracy should be that of graduation from a good high school. And the tide of interest in securing at least a high school education is rising rapidly. In California, to take an extreme instance, there were 10,000 in high school in 1909; in 1921 there were 196,000. Popular education costs, but is worth all its costs. Education is the hope of a democracy; it is also the hope of true Christianity, education ever being the handmaid of our religion. Christianity can't hope to leaven the whole American lump without the aid of education. Christian citizens should aid and abet it and do all they can to keep it pure and true; and our church schools are needed and have their distinct place of usefulness.

There has been a sad moral and spiritual neglect of youth. The Sunday School movement is a power and has made wonderful progress in reach and efficiency. Most of our converts come from and through the Sunday School. Let it be a leaky institution and has lost more young people to the church than it has won.

Of the young people of the U. S. A. under 25 years of age classed as Protestant by ancestry or affiliation, 27,000,000 are not enrolled in Sunday School, according to a careful survey. Of all the youth in the U. S. A. under 25 no less than 69 per cent are unconnected with any

Sunday School. Very pertinent then is the question: How long can our nation hope to endure when so few of its youth are being nourished with religious culture? And the statement that the nation which can not save its own youth, can not hope to save the world, is equally apt. No wonder that materialism is so rank, Sabbath breaking so common, selfishness and profanity and loose morals so widespread. No wonder that God has raised up a Billy Sunday to arouse us, scourge us, move us to action.

A striking illustration of the need of giving our youth a positive moral and religious training is seen in the crime wave that a few years ago alarmed a great city and called forth all its official resources and reserves to combat. Who were the criminals? They were youths 16 to 20 years of age. Their education had been neglected. The church had not touched their souls.

Another startling statement that is undoubtedly well grounded is that an overwhelming proportion of those enrolled in the Sunday School have no real knowledge of the Bible. Revelations of amazing ignorance of the Bible are as shaming as they are common. Of 216 freshmen taking entrance examinations in a denominational college 40 per cent didn't know whether or not Joshua was a book of the Bible. An investigator has shown that from 1872 to 1917 the uniform Sunday School lessons covered only a third of the Bible in lesson text, daily readings, and references. Most of our teachers are untrained, a condition which can be and is being corrected. More are careless in preparation, irregular in attendance, slack in their ideals and purposes—a condition that puts Jesus Christ to an open shame. As a result of ignorance of the Bible and its fundamental teachings all sorts of fanatical religious isms thrive apace and foolish and radical teachings get a hold. Too little time is given to religious education. What time there is is too carelessly and even flippantly used, too much of it wasted. There's too much pessimism of accomplishment in the ranks of Christian workers, too easy a surrender and admission of failure.

To reach and mold the rising generation for Jesus Christ—the statement will bear repeating—is the church's most hopeful strategy. Failure to seize this strategy and press it wholeheartedly is resulting in an America where decadence of faith, morals, and high ideals is rife and the soul of the nation is most seriously imperilled. Where lies the remedy? How shall we retrieve such ineffectiveness—an ineffectiveness that is appalling despite the many fine things the church has done and the saving power she has exerted—and secure the future?

As Christian citizens we may keep informed and lend our cordial sympathy and support to every public movement fostering better health, better education, better moral training, and better spiritual vision. The church as a whole may appropriate larger funds and secure more and better workers in a determined effort to reach and hold and train its youth for Christian life and service. In concentration of effort along this line the church is advancing; let's fall in line and speed the advance.

Here in our own local church we may do much.

1. We may thank God for the splendid physical equipment that is now at our disposal, and for the large and promising array of youth committed to our fostering care.

2. We may have a new appreciation of the dignity and strategic worth of our Sunday School work, take a place on the working staff more readily, and fill that place regularly and prayerfully, realizing that we are building for God and eternity.

3. We may back up the Sunday School in the home with at least as much thought and insistence as we give to clothes for the children and other less important interests. Teachers complain that lessons are not studied. Why not? As a small advance step in real religious education we have introduced the quarterly written review. The questions are so simple that any child, with home help and encouragement, can get the answers to all the questions in an hour's time given to it once in three months. Yet a third of our young folks refuse to take the review and many others make ridiculous grades. What a shame!

4. We may realize that no knowledge comes without a price, and believe that religious knowledge and spiritual fortification are worth the cost.

5. We may loyally back up the labor of love of those who gather our church young people into related organizations for training and expressional activities designed to afford them a well-rounded spiritual, intellectual, social and physical development. A paltry hour a week is not enough time for religious education.

6. Now that we have the equipment we may establish permanently in our church the tested and effective Daily Vacation Bible School and add 50 per cent during the summer to the amount of instruction and training given in a year.

7. We may look forward to the time, and pray for its early arrival, when we can employ a church secretary to give practically full time to the highest development of the young life of our church.

8. Situated near two of our largest public schools, we may sympathetically co-operate with them and join hands with the Christian forces in the city who are seeking to have religious instruction, under the supervision of the churches, introduced into our day schools. This has been done at Gary, Ind., and Chattanooga, Tenn., and elsewhere with fine success, and thousands of young people have used with manifest profit the optional course thus offered them.

Neither nation nor church can afford to neglect the souls of the young. God give us wisdom and grace for our task. Success will crown determined and prayerful effort.

CHRISTMAS IN BETHLEHEM

By William C. Carl, Mus. Doc.
Organist of the First Presbyterian Church of New York

Bethlehem, with its azure sky, its terraced groves of olive and fig trees, and its sloping hills where shepherds kept watch over their flocks on the Christmas eve centuries ago, is the Mecca of the Christian world at Christmas. The people of Bethlehem look forward to the day with keen delight, and elaborate preparations are made to welcome the Greek Patriarch of Jerusalem who comes each year to celebrate the feast with them. On the day before Christmas, the Patriarch, accompanied by a large number of Bishops, Archimandrites, Archdeacons and Priests, leave Jerusalem about 10 o'clock in the morning, headed by Kawascs, carrying silver maces. Starting from the Jaffa gate, the procession descends into the valley of Hinnon, on the western side of the lower pool of Gihon, and on to the Plain of Rephaim, known as the place where David overthrew the host of the Philistines at the shaking of the Mulberry trees. Midway between Jerusalem and Bethlehem stands the Monastery of Mar Elias, where tradition locates the resting place of the Prophet Elijah on his long journey to Mount Sinai. As soon as the Patriarch and his retinue come within sight of this Monastery, the natives of Bethlehem ride out to meet them.

On reaching Rachael's Tomb, a large number of Bethlehemites, men, women and children garbed in oriental dress of the gayest colors, join the procession singing their sweetest songs until they come into the city. At 10 o'clock in the evening the chiming of the bells announces the hour of prayer. The Patriarch, clothed in his gorgeous robes and mitre, sparkling with gems and diamonds and preceded by the clergy carrying his crook, a banner with a picture of the Nativity and two lights on either side and a golden cross, proceed to the church, with a choir of boys chanting as they lead the way. The Patriarch is seated on his throne, with his retinue on both sides. At intervals he rises to take part in the service, which is sung antiphonally and in unison without accompaniment. The service is chanted without intermission, in Greek and Arabic. The bells chime at intervals and especially at midnight, when the Patriarch celebrates the service in the Grotto of the Nativity. The church is illuminated by candles and lights of different colors and is crowded by the pilgrims, visitors and natives. At daybreak the service concludes with the Patriarch's benediction. Many return to their homes the same day, while others linger to visit the places made sacred by the Christ-Child Himself.

The people greet each other in front of the church with the words "Kull sanah wa anta salim" (Best wishes for Christmas) and spend the day in feasting and merriment.

THE FUTURE OF COLUMBIA THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY—WHAT SHALL IT BE?

By Rev. H. B. Dendy

The future of Columbia Theological Seminary should be a matter of concern to the whole Southern Presbyterian Church. For years she has taken her place in the life of our Church. Today she is situated nearer the heart of the territory of our great Church than any of our other seminaries. Louisville and Union are both near the Northern border. Austin is on the other extreme. Columbia alone stands near the center. A careful study shows that most of the men graduated from our seminaries accept fields in close proximity to the seminary from which they are graduated. The great argument used for the opening of Austin Seminary was, that without a seminary in this section, it was becoming more and more difficult to fill the vacant pulpits. Why move Columbia from the territory she is now serving? If moved to Richmond and merged with Union, the territory now served by Union might profit thereby. On the other hand, beyond the shadow of a doubt, the Synods now served by Columbia would suffer a great loss. While this matter is of immediate concern to the controlling Synods: South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama, it is one that affects our whole Church and should be carefully and prayerfully considered by all.

"A MESSAGE TO GARCIA"

During the Spanish-American War, President William McKinley found it very necessary to communicate with the leader of the Insurgents, General Garcia, who was somewhere in the mountain fastnesses of Cuba—no one knew where. Rowan, a young lieutenant in the U. S. Army, was sent for and given a letter to be delivered to Garcia. Rowan "took the letter, sealed it up in an oilskin pouch, strapped it over his heart, in four days landed by night off the coast of Cuba from an open boat, disappeared in the jungle, and in three weeks came out on the other side of the island, having traversed a hostile country on foot, and delivered his letter to Garcia."

Forty million copies of Elbert Hubbard's account of Rowan's achievement have been printed. It has been translated into all written languages.

On August 5, 1923, under a small army tent, a Presbyterian Church was organized at Centralia, Va., by a commission of East Hanover Presbytery. And thereby hangs a tale—a tale of "a message to Garcia."

Centralia is a village about half-way (centralia, Latin, center) between Richmond and Petersburg, near the new paved highway, in a section that is destined to enjoy a rapid and substantial development. For some time Miss Lucy Wheelright, a consecrated Christian woman, had maintained a union Sunday School with occasional preaching; and also Rev. L. W. Curtis, the alert superintendent of home missions of East Hanover Presbytery, had had his eye on the situation and was prepared to take definite action when the time was ripe.

Such a time came in the summer of 1923, when Mr. Marshall B. Wyatt, of Durham, N. C., a student in Union Theological Seminary, was asked to survey the field and report what could be done. Instantly Mr. Wyatt, accompanied by his good wife (who, by the way, has other gifts and graces besides goodness), began a house-to-house visitation; and within three weeks presented to Presbytery a petition for the organization of a Presbyterian Church at Centralia signed by 46 persons, of whom 20 were Presbyterians, seven from other denominations, and 19 to join on profession of faith. How many miles Mr. Wyatt drove his car is not recorded; but some tires were worn out and much gas was consumed and a new automobile is now beginning to look old. The point is, the thing was done quickly, efficiently; "the message to Garcia" was delivered, and the foundation of a growing church was laid by a wise, tactful, aggressive young man "full of the Holy Ghost and of faith."

Previous to the petition to Presbytery, Mr. Curtis had held a meeting at Centralia, during which eight persons made profession of faith.

On October 14th, L. H. Beardsley and C. H. Crabill were elected elders, and M. O. Terrell and A. C. Krupar, deacons, of the new church; and at the same time 13 additional members were received on profession of faith. At present the church has 63 members, of whom 33 joined upon profession of faith. With the help of Mrs. Wyatt and Mrs. Curtis a live Woman's Auxiliary has been organized with a membership of 47. Under the leadership of Mr. Wyatt plans for a church building have been drawn and accepted; $2,000 have been raised in Centralia; Mr. G. S. Wieden has donated a handsome lot upon which the new structure is to be erected; the congregation has been authorized to borrow $1,500; and already the foundation is being dug and soon the walls will be rising. Home Mission Committee has given $2,000 to the building. The plans of the architect call for a two-story structure of brick and stucco, with recreation room below and assembly room above, with several individual class rooms.

A MODERN FEAST OF INGATHERING

The Thanksgiving service at Laurel Hill Church, Scotland County, N. C., was held Tuesday, November 27th. After appropriate services in the church, in connection with which a cash offering of $185 was received for the Orphanage at Barium Springs, the people assembled in the grove to the rear of the church for an auction sale of the farm produce they had brought. At the time of the Every Member Canvass last March many of the people, in addition to their subscriptions to benevolences and current expenses, subscribed various products of the farm and dairy, the proceeds to be applied as the church officers think best unless the object was specified by the subscriber. There were eight bales of cotton, and chickens, eggs, butter, pigs, turkeys, and calves galore. One boy even had a goat tied to a tree, which sold for a neat sum. After spirited bidding, interspersed with much fun, the produce sold for $1,869. This amount far exceeded our expectations, since this was the first attempt of this nature with us all. A check for $1,000 was immediately made out to cancel the debt that has been hanging over our manse for several years. The balance of the money will be used for improvements in the church property, benevolences, and other worthy purposes.

It seems to us that this is an ideal plan on which a farmer may give to the Lord. The actual cash outlay in raising a bale of cotton this year was not over $30, including fertilizer and the cost of picking; yet a bale, together with seed, brought over $175. The boy who gave a pig was put to practically no expense in raising it, yet the pig brought from $5.00 to $10, and the boy feels that he has a vital share in the Lord's work. Everyone who brought something to this sale is enthusiastic over the plan, and no doubt every resident member of the church will take a share in it next year.

After the produce had been sold a bountiful dinner was spread on the cotton bales, and all enjoyed an hour of social fellowship. Following this, Miss Patty Watkins, dean of Flora Macdonald College, made an inspiring address to the ladies of the church, on "Christian Education," putting the emphasis on "Christian." Miss Watkins is on fire with her subject and presents it in a most effective way.

Smyrna Church held her Thanksgiving service on Wednesday, the 28th, and carried out the same program as at Laurel Hill. On this day the weather was very inclement, and not as many attended the service as would have done so otherwise. The cash offering for the Orphanage amounted to $60. Last spring each member of the Woman's Auxiliary was given a quarter of a dollar with instructions to so invest it as to yield the greatest returns possible by Thanksgiving Day. The result was that they brought in $75. The produce brought to the church and sold on this day netted the church $150. This is the first year Smyrna has tried this plan, but it is predicted on all sides that next year it will be worked with greater vigor and effectiveness.

NOT A SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN ENTERPRISE

By Rev. Egbert W. Smith, D.D.

I am sorry to be compelled to remind the pastors, Sunday Schools, Auxiliaries, Christian Endeavor Societies, and private members of our Church that the leper work, at Kwangju, Korea, is not a part of our Southern Presbyterian Foreign Mission work, but is carried on by an independent society entitled "The Mission for Lepers," with headquarters in New York and London.

To the Kwangju leper hospital our Foreign Mission Committee and our Korean Mission furnish the services, as superintendent and doctor, of Dr. R. M. Wilson, one of our own missionaries; this in addition to his care of our own Ellen Lavine Graham Mission Hospital. This is the large and important contribution that our Southern Presbyterian Church is making to this worthy institution for lepers which belongs not to us but to "The Mission for Lepers."

Money given for this leper hospital's work does not go into our Southern Presbyterian Foreign Mission treasury nor does it help to pay the expenses of the great foreign mission work which our Southern Presbyterian Church is carrying on and for whose support it alone is responsible. While the Leper Mission can appeal to all denominations for the support of its work, the work of the Southern Presbyterian Church is dependent for its support solely upon the contributions of Southern Presbyterians. As Southern Presbyterians we are obligated to evangelize 33,000,000. This is our first and paramount duty.

THE FIRST CHURCH'S CHRISTMAS BARREL*

By CAROLINE ABBOT STANLEY

Published by THOS. Y. CROWELL CO., New York

THOSE who like a "white Christmas" should see one out on the Western plains, where old Mother Earth lies down for her winter sleep under a coverlet so white that from horizon to horizon there is hardly enough gray to outline her form. The winds play tricks with her in scandalous style out there, making roundness where no roundness is and doing their best to lay bare her very bones. "These winds don't care a cuss fer clothes," said Job Tolavcr, the stage driver, once; and John Haloran on his hard missionary rides had thought of it a thousand times since. He was saying it to himself numbly now as with stiffening fingers and head lowered against the gale he drove along the faint track of a road.

His wife threw open the door as he drove up, and a stream of light fell athwart the wagon. There was a barrel in the back.

"Dead, John?—or only half?" Her eager eyes searched his face. She knew the whole pitiful story without a word. The draft had not come. Then, because she knew, she went on gayly, "Or have you gone to peddling? What's in your barrel?"

"I don't know yet," he said heavily, twisting it into the room. "We'll see when I've fed Daisy."

When he was gone she eyed the barrel curiously, tilting it and reading aloud:

REV. JOHN F. HALORAN,
BLUE LICK, WYOMING.

"It's not potatoes. It isn't heavy enough for that." Then she struck an attitude with clasped hands. "I never saw one before—never! But my prophetic soul tells me this is a missionary barrel. And just two days before Christmas! Well, in the language of my first-born, 'Hooray!'"

When the minister came in there was a comfortable old coat warmed and waiting for him, and a smoking supper set out on a little table drawn up before the stove.

"Sit down, John. I am going to let you eat here in peace away from the children." He glanced up questioningly as a roar came from the kitchen, with snarls and growls in various keys. "It's all right. They are wild animals in a cage and I am the keeper. They are having no end of fun. You had a cold drive."

"Bitter."

"You need an ulster with a storm collar." She glanced involuntarily at the barrel. "Aren't these potatoes good, John? So mealy one hardly needs butter. Lucky thing, too! You didn't know I skimmed the family out of a pound of butter, did you? Yes, sir, it went into the candy money." She meant it as a pleasantry, but somehow it failed, and she hurried on. "I wish there were more of the potatoes. Those boys do cat so! But never mind! After Christmas the hens will begin. Funny how hens can tell the time of the year, isn't it?" She chattered on about anything and everything except the draft.

"This certainly is comfort," he said at last, relaxing under the genial influence of food and warmth and companionship. "That's a cold stretch coming out from town."

"Didn't you stop anywhere?"

"Yes. At Joe Henderson's. Mary—his wife died!"

"John!"

"Yes. Died last night. I never felt so sorry for anybody in my life. They think the baby will live; and the poor fellow doesn't know what to do with it nor where to turn."

"Oh, John! If only our cow weren't going dry I would—"

"You shouldn't do it, anyway," he said savagely. "You have enough care now for three women!—Mary, the draft didn't come."

"I know," she said quietly. "But, John, we'll get along some way. It can't last forever. The draft may come next week. And I was joking about the potatoes. We've a lot left."

"It isn't just the money," he said, shaking his head despondently; "it's the feeling of aloneness in the work. If I felt that the church back of us was doing all it could, it would not be so hard—this 'hope deferred that maketh the heart sick.' But sometimes I think—they don't care."

"They do, John—they do! Don't allow yourself to think that. Why, look at this barrel! I know this is from some missionary society, and would any such send us this unless they knew about our work and were thinking of us? Why, of course not! Tell me about the barrel."

"Well, I went to the post-office the first thing to get the draft. I found instead a letter from this First Church, saying they had sent us a barrel. I went over to the freight office and there it was. I didn't have enough—"

"How providential that it came before Christmas!" she interrupted. "I'm crazy to see what's in it! Aren't you?"

He did not answer the question directly, being far from feeling her jubilation about it. "We'll open it after a while," he said evasively. In his heart he was protesting, "No! I don't want their barrel! I want my money!"

"But not until the children are off. There will be Christmas things in it that they mustn't see. . . . You got the candy, John? But of course you did."

Her question was unanswered, but she did not notice it.

"Now I really think the animals will have to come in," she said gayly. "You can be trainer for an hour while this keeper clears up the dishes."

And with a whoop they were upon him—lion, tiger, kangaroo, and baby bear.

When the children were asleep they brought out the barrel—"our charity box," the minister called it, half bitterly.

"I can't help it, John. It may show an impoverished state of the blood—or of the spirit, I don't know which—but when I think of all the things these children need I am glad of this box. I am—'charity' though you call it! I am almost sorry you spent the money for candy, for of course there will be a lot of it in here. Well, they will have enough for once in their lives! And they are so starved for candy."

Again he started to speak, but she swept on in full tide of happy talk:

"Before we open it I want to show you the things I already have for them. Of course they will be poor by comparison, so I'll exhibit them first. This overcoat is Paul's, made out of that old, old one of yours with the plaid flannel lining. I turned the fuzzy side out. He thinks it's fine. And with a new one for Paul every overcoat in the line drops a peg and lands on the younger—so everybody has a change! Then, from the pieces of plaid flannel left I made three good mufflers to tie over their little headies when they scud across the prairies to school. . . . And here are three pairs of mittens cut from the scraps of the coat. I am so proud of myself over those mittens! I had enough yarn to knit Davie's, but—"

"There isn't one woman in a hundred that could have managed so well."

She snuggled up to him. "That pays me—if I needed pay, which I don't. It was a work of love and—well, maybe a little necessity. You told me once that I had a genius for poverty."

"And God knows it has had no chance to lie dormant," he said bitterly.

"I don't want it to lie dormant. I want every power I possess brought out to the utmost. I truly have enjoyed concocting these things out of nothing. There's nothing that makes a woman feel so virtuous, unless it is getting off a lot of neglected letters. . . . Oh, yes, here are their handkerchiefs—lovely ones made from an old petticoat! But it will make one thing more for the stockings. Isn't it glorious that no matter how much or how little children have at Christmas, they enjoy it just the same? That is, if they have candy. That is, the one indispensable. . . . And here are the scrapbooks. I've been saving pictures all year; the blank pages are for 'our special artist'—that's you. I wish I had some colored crayons. Oh, they would love colored crayons! And just think!—only ten cents!"

She was sorry the moment she said it, for a shadow fell upon his face.

"But never mind, John," she said quickly. "Life isn't made up of pinks and greens, and neither is happiness. You can have a whole lot of happiness in this world in gray—if you only know how; and I'm going to teach these children the secret. Now look at my eatables. It is great fun to make a cookie menagerie with one cutter, and that a rabbit. You see, I stick on a trunk, pull down his ears, round him up a bit, and behold an elephant! Then when I want a camel I give Br'er Rabbit two humps, stretch out his jaws, give him a jab almost anywhere—and there's your camel! And look at my dachshund. I laughed till I cried over that. Poor Davie was so distressed when I stretched him out."

"And here's a nice red apple for each one. Poor Mary Henderson gave them to me the last time I was over there and I've been saving them ever since. They are a little specked, but I think they will hold out. I did want the oranges, but . . . no, of course you couldn't when the draft didn't come. Anyway, with the candy they won't miss other things. I have the bags all ready—red tarlatan from a peach basket—see?"

"There's just one thing I can't get around. I do want something to give the house a Christmas look. I miss that. And there's not a thing here but sagebrush. At home, in Maryland, we had such quantities of holly; and we always made wreaths for the windows and had mistletoe for the chandeliers, and a roaring fire in the open fireplace, and—I can see those parlors now. Those are the memories that cling to us always, I think. I am so sorry that our children can never have them. I hate to think of their lives being utterly devoid of beauty. The East has more than its share."

She was talking more to herself than to him, being momentarily carried off her feet, so to speak, by the flood of recollection sweeping over her of the old home with its mighty oaks, its giant elms, and the hills beyond where Christmas trees could be had for the cutting. The sight of his face brought her back to the present.

"But fortunately Christmas is not dependent upon holly and mistletoe," she said brightly. "They are only the 'outward, visible sign.' We will garnish our home with love and good cheer and contentment. After all, they are the 'inward, spiritual grace.'"

She threw up her head with a gesture habitual to her as if defying fate and its limitations, and his eyes followed her as she moved about the room putting things to rights. What a glorious creature she was!—accepting poverty and bareness as her portion and yet rising above them regally; throwing herself into his work, her own round of toil, her children's pleasures, the neighborhood sorrows—all with the same exuberance of interest and prodigality of self! What would he have been in his work without her, his "missionary coadjutor," as he called her? She was so overflowing with vitality, so undaunted, so alive! A thrill passed through him at the word alive. . . . Poor Joe Henderson! Suppose— He covered his eyes and his lips moved.

She was on her knees beside him in an instant.

"John, what is it? What are you saying?"

He took her face between his hands and looked into her eyes. "I was saying: 'Bless the Lord, O my soul; and forget not all His benefits.'"

"I knew you would come to it, John. Now let's open the barrel."

* * *

The first thing to come out was a woman's hat-box—a generous one. For years Mary Haloran had worn a small brown felt, trimmed modestly (as became a missionary's wife) with two quills and a knot of velvet. The quills were placed at varying angles from year to year, and the velvet was steamed annually. When it got past that it was placed

Woman's Auxiliary

Conducted by Mrs. J. M. McIver, Gulf, N. C.

Mrs. Russell's Engagements—In copy sent last week—Calendar of Engagements for Bible Classes—we should like two changes:

Mrs. Russell's engagement January 7-12 should be for Quincy instead of Orlando, Fla., and the one for January 13-19 should be Orlando instead of Arcadia, Fla. These changes were just made and came to our knowledge only today.

North Carolina Synodical Auxiliary, 1923—The eleventh annual meeting of the North Carolina Synodical Auxiliary was held in the First Church, Wilmington, October 17th and 18th.

A short devotional was conducted by Rev. A. D. Gilmour, pastor of the church. Dr. Gilmour expressed words of appreciation and praise for the woman's work and welcome to his church. Miss Jane Hall extended a cordial welcome from the women of all the Presbyterian churches of the city, and Mrs. A. J. Howell from Wilmington Presbyterian. Response was made by Miss Annie Wilson, of Charlotte.

Good reports were made by all the officers of their year's work. At this meeting a new officer was added to the number, to be known as Secretary of Christian Community Service.

On Wednesday afternoon from 6:30 to 7:30 all the officers and delegates to the Synodical, with their hostesses, were entertained at an informal tea at the Church of the Covenant, after which all went in a body to the tabernacle to hear the Evangelist Gypsy Smith, Jr.

Rev. W. M. Hunter, chairman of Synod's Committee on Schools and Colleges, was with us on Thursday morning and told of the great need of making our church schools "A"-grade colleges. He urged that 10 per cent of all benevolences be sent to Mr. F. L. Jackson, to be divided according to Synod's plan.

Miss Charlotte Jackson, Field Representative of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, told of the great number of churches without pastors, and the need for more missionaries, pastor's assistants and other full-time Christian workers. She urged that we pray intelligently, definitely and without ceasing for more workers.

Immediately after adjournment for lunch on Thursday our beloved president received a message calling her home on account of the illness of her husband—who died on November 3rd. Evangelist Gypsy Smith, Jr., was guest of honor at lunch on Thursday.

In the absence of the president, the afternoon session was presided over by Mrs. S. N. Harrell, president of Albemarle Presbyterian, whom Mrs. Reid appointed to fill her place.

The registration committee reported by Presbyterials as follows: Albemarle, 4; Concord, 5; Fayetteville, 15; Kings Mountain, 2; Mecklenburg, 6; Orange, 3; Wilmington, 12; out-of-town visitors, 12; total, 59.

The following officers were elected and duly installed in a very impressive service conducted by Mrs. Jackson Johnson:

Treasurer—Mrs. R. C. Carson, Whiteville.

Historian—Mrs. R. D. Blacknall, Durham.

Sec. A. H. Missions—Mrs. A. M. Fairley, Laurinburg.

Sec. Y. P. Work and S. S. Ext.—Mrs. D. H. Shaw, Laurinburg.

Sec. Y. P. Conf. and Student Work—Miss Mamie McElwee.

Sec. Orphanage—Mrs. W. T. Clark, Wilson.

Recording Sec.—Mrs. G. V. Wynne, Durham.

The Synodical will meet next year in the First Church, Tarboro.

Mrs. Harrell announced the end of the meeting and urged all to realize the strength we have in the Master, knowing our need of Him.

Ruth S. Wynne, Rec. Sec'y.

Columbia, S. C.—Probably the first meeting of its kind that has ever been held in connection with the woman's work of the Southern Presbyterian Church, convened Thursday, December 6th, in the Sunday School Annex of the First Presbyterian Church, in Columbia, S. C., at the call of Mrs. T. Hal Dick, of Columbia, Secretary of the Development of Spiritual Life in Congaree Presbyterian, in the form of a Conference of the Secretaries of Spiritual Life from all the Auxiliaries in this Presbyterian. Ten churches were represented. Several Synodical officers were present, among whom were Mrs. Andrew Bramlett, President, and Mrs. S. C. Hodges, of Greenwood, who is Synodical Secretary of Spiritual Life. Mrs. W. L. Dunovant, of Edgefield, President of Congaree Presbyterian, was also present and brought a helpful message. A strong program, which was opened with a devotional by Mrs. Dick, began at 11 o'clock. Those taking part were, Mrs. Guy Tarrant, who spoke on "The Power of Prayer;" Mrs. Donald McDonald, on "Stewardship;" Mrs. S. V. Hodges, on "The Importance of Bible Study;" Mrs. George Wauchope, on "Christian Education;" and Mrs. John Livingston, on "Work Among the Young People." Mrs. Bramlett made many helpful suggestions about the work and led the conference in several discussions. The whole program had a decidedly spiritual tone, and all present felt greatly benefited by coming.

Some of the ladies of the church served a delightful chicken dinner between the morning and afternoon sessions.

For Mothers—So striking is the ignorance of the Bible among college students that Harvard University has decreed that no student shall receive his A.B. without passing a Bible examination as one of the required credits. This is done on cultural rather than on religious grounds, but it is significant nevertheless. In our Baptist schools, as the report made at Des Moines shows, the Bible is given increasing place in the curriculum. But the home is the place, after all, where the children must get the familiarity with the Bible that abides. No better place has been found than that where Timothy got his first Biblical instruction.

Group Conference of the Abingdon Presbyterian—The Auxiliary of the Walnut Grove, Va., Presbyterian Church was hostess to the first group conference held by the Abingdon Presbyterian September 29, 1923.

Mrs. White M. Ryburn, the efficient Presbyterian president, presided. Her word of welcome and appreciation of the excellent co-operation given her made each one of the more than a hundred women and girls feel that it was good to be present.

The morning was given to discussing different phases of the woman's work, these discussions being led by Mesdames Hassinger, Stephenson and Hagy, of Abingdon, Va.; H. E. Gleaves, Robert Gray and Donald McIver, Bristol, Va.; and Mrs. S. W. Edmondson, Glade Spring, Va. Mrs. Preston W. Campbell sang a beautiful solo.

"The White Fields of Japan" was delightfully presented by Mrs. V. G. Copenhagen and her girls' circle of the Central Presbyterian Church, Bristol, Virginia.

In the afternoon, the Abingdon, Va., Auxiliary presented a typical circle meeting, which was so well conducted that it was truly beneficial and helpful to other circles represented.

Mrs. John Blakemore, of Emory, Va., caused one to feel that a real visit had been made to the Assembly's Training School, Richmond, Va., so vividly and interestingly did she describe the school, its works, etc.

Miss Elizabeth McChesney, one of our very own Home Mission workers, described in a forceful manner the nature of her work and the people among whom she labored. The plea Miss McChesney made in behalf of better education for these people aroused much interest.

The noon hour was delightfully spent in partaking of a delicious lunch and the greeting of friends.

The church was beautifully decorated in varied hued fall flowers and the hostess Auxiliary extended sincere hospitality for which they were given a rising vote of thanks.

NO LULLABY NEED MARY SING

No lullaby need Mary sing
For Christ, the little new-born King;
The angels woke the fields of earth
With song the evening of His birth.

No lamp nor torch need Mary light
To chase afar the shades of night;
The light of heaven broke on earth
And glory shed upon that birth.

No tidings need she haste to send
Of this Child's birth to kin and friend;
The news had been proclaimed afar
That evening by a shining Star.

Mt. Olive, N. C.—In spite of the general belief that men will not study missions, as the good ladies do in mission study classes, the Mt. Olive Presbyterian Church has just had a most successful church school of missions.

The ladies of the Woman's Auxiliary have been studying the home and foreign books in the fall and spring, as they should do. Last fall, the young ladies' circle, invited the Senior Christian Endeavor to join them in studying the Home Mission book, and quite a number of our young men were in the class and enjoyed it.

This year then, when we received the suggestion from the Foreign Mission office in the form of a little pamphlet on the Church School of Missions, our church was ready for it.

We got the consent and co-operation of the Session, the Board of Deacons, Woman's Auxiliary and the Christian Endeavor Societies. The time selected was Home Mission Week in November. Our plan: We used the rolls of the Church and Sunday School, and Young People's Societies, in fact tried to get the name of every person interested in our church, then divided the names into groups. The first group was all children under 12 years of age, then up to 15, next to 18 years, then young people, above that in two groups. The juniors met in the afternoon, just after school and used the little book, "Stay-at-Home-Journeys." The other group met in the evening for one hour. The intermediates used "Next-Door Neighbors," and the other groups studied "The Child and America's Future."

On account of some other activities we could have only four evenings. The first evening, there were 71 present; the second evening 88 in all groups; the third evening 107; and the last evening 130. Each group was divided into two teams, Reds and Blues with a leader over each, and there was intense, but friendly rivalry, to see which should win, for the losing side was to entertain the other on the closing evening. We used as teachers three men, and five ladies. The Blues won by 20 points, and were entertained most delightfully after the class period on Thursday evening. We were handicapped in time, but every one thoroughly enjoyed the work, and pledged themselves to study the Foreign Mission books, in February the same way. There were enrolled 22 men, 44 women, 32 intermediates, about half girls, and half boys, and 38 juniors.

The Pastor.

We all know "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." Yet in almost every church there comes the dismal moment when our budget is to be decided upon, and pledges taken. The presiding officer often goes about it in an apologetic manner "Sorry to have to bring up the subject of money," etc. Below will be found a few plans that have been used successfully by other groups of workers—perhaps they will help you.

The Watch That Made the Dollar Famous—Before the meeting a number of small watches had been cut from white card-board, little two-inch circles with a "stem" jutting out at one end, each watch telling a different time. Through the stem a string necklace was run and as each girl came to the meeting, which was to be a social and business one combined, a watch was hung around her neck, causing many amusing remarks: "What time are you, Marie?" "Oh, you're slow, no wonder you're always late!" etc.

Once during the luncheon we had everybody stop and hold her watch to her ear and say: "Tick! Tick! Tick!" for several seconds.

When the time for explanation came a chart was displayed which showed this statement:

"You can supply all the work of our Church on the Foreign Mission Field, i. e.:

Every school, every scholar, every teacher,
Every hospital, every doctor, every nurse,
Every evangelist, every Bible woman, for
One hour for -----	$134.20
One-half hour for -----	67.10
One-quarter hour for -----	33.55
One minute for -----	2.24"

The whole force of the appeal lies with the one who presents it. She must graphically picture the glorious responsibility of holding upon our shoulders the entire Foreign Mission work of the Southern Presbyterian Church for a definite period—one minute for $2.24, one whole hour for $134.20. Just think your very OWN Mission Work. How many minutes can we take, dear girls?

The girls are then asked to hold their watches to their ears again, this time repeating ""$2.24 a minute, $2.24 a minute." While they are doing this let someone sing softly, "One More Day's Work for Jesus." Now on the back of the watches let the pledge be written.

As pledges were collected "Take Time To Be Holy" was sung.

Another Plan—Following a program on Medical Missions, we had pledge cards with a nice round head squinting up from the pillow. On the back was written: "Most Honorable and Healthy Female, misery has attacked my unworthy and insignificant interior, I please you give me something so I can stay in this nice white bed."

The leader then in well-chosen words reminded us of how NOTHING was too much for us to do for our loved ones, or friends who are ill. How much money we spend for just flowers at such times. The untold love we shower on them, the suffering we feel ourselves because they feel it. Yet all the time we are within reach of doctor, nurse, drug store and hospital. Graphically she pictured the Orient, the horrible Quack Doctor, whose sole remedies are burnings, shakings and piercing—then the balm of that mission bed, its softness, its cleanness, the magic touch of trained hands.

Can you imagine 8,301 patients being cared for in these beds of ours? 2,778 major operations being performed by our Medical Missionaries? 99,486 persons being treated? Your chart might read "What Part Have I In This Work?"

I can assume the support of the entire Medical Work of the Presbyterian Church in Seven Foreign Countries:

One hour for -----	$13.74
Thirty minutes for -----	6.87
Fifteen minutes for -----	3.43
Ten minutes for -----	2.28
Five minutes for -----	1.14
One minute for -----	.27

Pledges to be made on pledge cards.

Yet Another Plan—Garment Givers—Try picturing the day when our Lord Jesus rode into Jerusalem and His followers spread their garments before Him. In a sweeter, dearer way we, too, are seeing Him every year going forth along the King's highway entering heathen villages across the sea. In loving loyalty let us spread at His feet some of our garments, or the worth of them.

For pledge cards use attractive pictures of dresses, hats, shoes, furs, sweaters, collars, etc., cut from fashion magazines with heavy paper pasted across the back. On this paper write: "And they spread their garments before Him," leaving two lines for name and amount.

Before distributing the cards the leader should explain what wonders the money we spend on dress could do across the sea; for this use a big chart on which are pasted attractive fashionable pictures of wearing apparel, as:

Silk Dress—$19.98, or 199 New Testaments for the heathens in Korea.

Easter Hat—$8.50, or provide a building for six months in which 40 little Chinese can fill the inside of their head while I cover the outside of mine.

Wool Sweater—$7.00, or keep a Bible woman in Korea one whole month, where she will tell the story of Christ and His love to hundreds of her people.

Hair Net—20 cents, or 40 copies of the Gospel for the children in heathen lands.

The list may be extended almost indefinitely by including shoes, gloves, perfumes and articles of personal adornment.

The study of missionary activities and of the unusual features of each mission field will suggest many other methods of enlisting cheerful givers.

ADDRESS ALL COMMUNICATIONS TO THE DEPARTMENT EDITOR, COLUMBIA SEMINARY, COLUMBIA, S. C.

EDIOTR'S LOOKOUT

Hello, Everybody! We've missed our little chats with you a couple of times, but we didn't mean to. Some fine things were observed from the lookout, but the wires got crossed and our messages didn't get through. Complete repairs have now been made and we will chat again.

The past Saturday evening we enjoyed attending a fine banquet given by the Presbyterian College alumni living in Columbia to the football team of Thornwell Orphanage, High School Champions of South Carolina. And a fine looking set of boys the team members were, in their nice new white sweaters presented by Rev. Thomas McSween, of the Clemson College Presbyterian Church.

We feel sure that all our Presbyterians will rejoice with the Thornwell team and the Thornwell family of 360 in the splendid record made by the team. Eight victories and no defeats brought them through to the place of highest honor among the State High School teams. In eight contests their goal was crossed three times, for 20 points, while they piled up 242 points. Dr. L. Ross Lynn spoke at the banquet on "Orphanage Spirit," and gave it as being "the spirit of a home," an ideal set by Dr. Jacobs years ago and still upheld. We know he is proud of his team and of his large family, and we congratulate him and them on the fine showing made by the team this year. The team will deserve its title and the cup presented by the Columbia Kiwanians, as well as the right to hold the State Cup for the coming year.

Mr. John C. Boyd, 32 West Trade Street, Charlotte,

Superintendent of Publications of the N. C. C. E. Union, has asked our help in getting the news around that he has a strong desire to get the young people interested in the C. E. World and the Dixie Endeavorer, and that he has some good plans for them to use. We hope his offers to be of service will be taken advantage of.

Rev. R. C. Long, of our Stewardship Committee, 410 Times Building, Chattanooga, is doing some fine work in interesting the young people in the Progressive Program. He has gotten out some standards called "C. E. Objectives in the P. P. P." Southern Presbyterian C. E. Societies increased in number 38 per cent last year. The Stewardship Committee offers them and all our young people a fine opportunity to increase in usefulness. Get in touch with him! Merry Christmas!

THE UNIVERSAL REIGN OF CHRIST

Lesson: Isaiah 9:6, 7; 11:1-10; Psalm 2:1-12. Printed Text: Isaiah 11:1-10; Psalm 2:8.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Ask of men, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."—Psalm 2:8.

SCRIPTURE LESSON

Isa. 11:1 And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots;

2 And the Spirit of the LORD shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge, and of the fear of the LORD;

3 And shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the LORD: and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears:

4 But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.

5 And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.

6 The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.

7 And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

8 And the suckling child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den.

9 They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea.

10 And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious.

Ps. 2:8 Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.

SHORTER CATECHISM

Q. 68. What is required in the sixth commandment?
A. The sixth commandment requireth all lawful endeavors to preserve our own life and the life of others.

The Scriptures clearly reveal Christ's natures and functions as man's Redeemer. They describe with equal clearness the personality and offices of the Holy Ghost in effecting man's deliverance from sin's penalty and power. In His discourse on the night of His betrayal Christ teaches that the Holy Ghost "convincens men of sin of righteousness and of a judgment to come." In the passages from Is. 11:1-10 and Ps. 28, selected for our present lesson, we are told of Jesus' Personal Reign On Earth; His Anointing by the Holy Ghost; The Blessed Results of His Reign; and Some Reasons for Entering His Kingdom.

I. Jesus' Personal Reign on Earth

The prophet tells us "The knowledge of God shall cover the earth as the waters cover the face of the deep." The apostle informs us that Christ is a Divine Person. He asserts "Being in the form of God, He thought it not robbery to be equal with God, yet made Himself of no reputation, and being found in fashion as a man, became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." "Wherefore God hath highly exalted Him and given Him a name that is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow and every tongue should confess that Jesus is Lord to the glory of God the Father." In the second Psalm, "Jehovah the Father says to Jehovah the Son, ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost part of the earth for thy possession." There is then no doubt about His reigning. But what earth is He to reign over? Paul says that this earth, the lower creation, "Shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption." The Apostle Peter declares, "This earth and all that it contains shall be burned up." "Nevertheless we according to His promise look for a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." The Apostle John affirms "That he saw in vision a new heaven and a new earth in which Messiah reigned."

II. Jesus Anointed by the Holy Ghost

At His baptism by John, His forerunner, He had the Holy Spirit to descend upon Him. His perfect human nature was put under the Holy Ghost to qualify Him for His public ministry and all His functions as Redeemer. The passage from Isaiah represents His human nature as descended from David and compares it to a sprout from a fallen tree. Christ at the beginning of His public ministry in His inaugural sermon at Nazareth asserts "That the Spirit of the Lord was upon Him to fit Him to perform His functions."

III. The Blessed Results of His Reign

The prophet also pictures the beneficent consequences of Jesus' rule. He represents peace and safety as universally prevalent. He describes the most ferocious animals and those most timid and helpless as dwelling together in harmony. He pictures safety to be so complete that the little child can approach venomous reptiles unharmed. He declares that wars shall cease and "None shall hurt or destroy in all Christ's domain." Because the principles that Jesus taught do not regulate human conduct, the earth now is full of distress and woe. Men instead of using their faculties to supply their own wants, to honor their Maker and to minister to the needs of their fellows employ them for mutual destruction. In many parts of the earth truth, honesty, benevolence and industry are lacking and selfish greed and wasteful strife abound.

IV. Reasons for Entering Christ's Kingdom

These are found in the second Psalm mentioned in our lesson. His kingdom is assured, for it is given by His Divine Father. All opposition to it shall be destroyed. "He will rule them with a rod of iron. He will break them in pieces like a potter's vessel." You are warned, "Be wise therefore O ye kings," "Kiss the Son lest He be angry and ye perish from the way. The kiss a sign of reconciliation, trust, service. Blessedness is attained in His kingdom." "Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him."

Sun., December 30—Topic: Wishes for the New Year. Phil 3:7-16.

We are about to enter a new year. The old year is over, and the new year of 1924 invites us to its opportunities. As we look back at the past, and view the successes and failures, the mistakes and achievements of last year, we are impressed with the thought of doing better, conquering sin, working harder, helping others more. In this passage in Philippians, we have the example of Paul before us to follow. Paul takes an inventory of what he held most dear, and was willing to give up for Christ. As a Jew, there were many things which were very important, and great advantages, which he names in a long list. But he was ready to surrender them for the sake of Christ. As we come to the new year, let us consider our own case, and think of how we can advance in our own lives, as we compare Paul's attitude with ours.

Paul's Estimate of Earthly Belongings

Paul counts up his advantages as a Jew, and he finds a long list of valuable possessions which would help him forward in this world. But he realizes all these things conflict with Christ's wishes and plans, and he is ready to give them up. They were absolutely as nothing compared with what Christ could give him. He was willing to lose them all for His sake, who loved him and gave Himself for him. In fact, he would cast them aside like they were so much dirt and filth, fit only for the rubbish pile.

We all like to count our advantages and privileges, and we take great pride in them. We view our family, our property, our position in society, our personal qualities and gifts, our education and improvement of all these things. We may not have to abandon our cherished possessions like Paul did as a Jew; but for Christ, we should be willing to give up all, if he calls upon us to do so.

Paul's Supreme Desire

Paul says his supreme wish was to win Christ, to be like Him, and do His will. He had no yearning for rich robes, and golden crowns, bedecked with jewels that would perish. He did not want to take any pride in his own goodness and righteousness, but he greatly desired to have on the robe of Christ's righteousness, which he might put on by faith in Jesus.

Paul Wanted the Knowledge of Christ

The greatest of human joys is the pleasure of knowledge. The mind yearns to know facts. Beautiful scenery and art, travel and adventure, science and literature, all fill our minds with great joy. Paul was a learned man, and familiar with all the arts and sciences of his day; but he says, the knowledge of Christ was his deepest delight. He wanted to know Christ in the consciousness of His presence, and he longed to pass through the experience of the resurrection, so that he might die to sin, and live anew in the power of Christ, free from all sin, and empowered for joyous activity in Christ's cause. Paul believed he could reach the power of the resurrection by faith, even before he actually died.

Paul's Consciousness of Imperfections

While Paul so greatly desired the knowledge of Christ and the attainment of the resurrection, he felt his own imperfections. It is very wholesome to recognize our own weakness and sinfulness. We should feel our limitations. The mere saying so, and privately thinking we are not so bad after all is of little good. The truth is, we are bad, weak and sinful, and far below what Christ wants us to be. But Paul not only knew all these things, but knew Jesus would transform him, if he yielded to His will. Christ had taken his case in hand, or apprehended him, as he says.

Paul's Resolution

Paul had determined to forget the past. He would not take up his time with vain regret. It is well to reflect on our mistakes, errors and follies, but spend no time in idle worry over the past. Turn to the future with faith in God and a strong determination to be different and better. Paul would fix on one thing, and press toward that. He would struggle, strive intensely to reach the high calling of God in Christ, to be a son of God, strong in purpose, beautiful in character, unceasing in service for God and man. In other words, to be just what Jesus was when He was here on the earth.

Our Own Resolutions

Paul exhorts us who wish to be like Christ to follow his example. He bids us not to be discouraged when we fail, and when we are ignorant of what we should do, but to be prayerful, and trust in God. Let us also form the resolution to seek a pure and holy life, a life that is good and useful, and try with all our hearts to become like Jesus. Make this your New Year's resolution, and keep it always before your hearts and minds.

WORTHWHILE NEWS NOTES

Miss Mary E. Dickson, Corresponding Secretary of the Senior C. E. Society of Olney Church, near Gastonia, N. C., tells of an interesting social held by the 40 members of the society, with the new teachers of the community as guests. The "Old-Fashioned Party," as it was called, was held in a large, old-fashioned, uninhabited house, used by the young men of the church as a club house. Ivy, chrysanthemums, pine tops, cedar, and autumn leaves very effectively carried out the scheme of decorations. After several old-fashioned games were played, peanuts, apples, and "roasted" marshmallows were enjoyed. The pastor, Rev. T. G. Tate, and Mrs. Tate, were chaperones.

The officers of the society are: Miss Mary K. Howe, president; George Torrence, vice-president; Brady Dickson, recording secretary; Miss Mary Dickson, corresponding secretary, and Paul Howe, treasurer.

The Senior C. E. Society of the Sumter, S. C., Presbyterian Church, so Miss Margaret DeLorme, corresponding secretary, tells us, did some worthwhile work at Thanksgiving. The society met, as they do each Thanksgiving morning, at 7:00 o'clock, for a service of thanksgiving. After this, groceries and gifts which had been sent to the church the evening before, were taken by a committee to needy persons. At 1:00 o'clock the society gave a real Thanksgiving dinner to 20 little boys who otherwise would not have had such an opportunity. We believe her when she says that "the heart of each Endeavorer was filled with joy and gladness upon seeing how happy these boys were with so many good things to eat."

The South Carolina C. E. officers had another busy month of work in November. President J. Arthur Flanagan, of Bowling Green, wrote 35 personal letters and 30 form letters and helped organize two societies. This, he says, after saying that he had time during the month to attend only to the work of his office that had to be done!

Miss Emmie Osteen, secretary, Columbia, wrote 20 letters and sent each state officer a copy of the officers' reports for the preceding month.

Mrs. D. W. A. Neville, missionary superintendent, Clinton, wrote all the Presbyterian societies urging special Beechwood meetings and gifts for Beechwood Seminary in money and Christmas boxes.

Miss Evelyn Boozer, Tenth Legion superintendent, Gaffney, secured 16 new tithers.

Mr. Wyatt Taylor, Columbia, wrote every society of the state in regard to Near East Relief and "Golden Rule Sunday."

There are 265 C. E. societies in South Carolina, 234 of them being Presbyterian.

Recently a C. E. Institute was held in South Boston, Va. Professor Friend, of the public schools, co-operated in a fine way by releasing all Endeavorers at 10:30, that they might attend the educational classes of the institute. These classes were conducted by Southern States Secretary C. F. Evans, Christian Endeavor World Field Representative C. C. Hamilton, and Dixie Junior C. E. Superintendent Miss Mamie Gene Cole.

The Second Presbyterian Church, of Petersburg, Va., held a Daily Vacation Bible School during the past summer, so a delayed news story tells us, and correlated the Junior Sunday School and Junior C. E. work of the school. The Junior Endeavor Society took charge of the chapel exercises each morning. Many of the boys and girls completed the entire course of Junior C. E. memory work, which was the memory course used in the school.

The First Presbyterian Church, of Salisbury, N. C., believes in progressive work with its young people. The Christian Endeavor program there calls for an annual graduation time. The graduation exercises held a short time ago constituted the Sunday evening service of the church. The pastor, Dr. Byron Clark, preached a fine short sermon from James 1:22. Mr. Carey Lowrance, of the Prospect Presbyterian Church, near Mooresville, and president of the Southern District of North Carolina C. E., spoke on the value and fruits of Christian Endeavor. He then delivered diplomas to six fine Junior graduates: Edith Clark, Leila Groves, Louise McWhirter, Margaret Haworth, Dorothy Anderson, and Alfred Hughey. The Junior choir had charge of the music and rendered a specially prepared program. Miss Frances Tarpley is the efficient superintendent of the Juniors. Miss Mildred McCubbins, the pastor's assistant, is in general charge of the work of all three societies of this church, and is handling their activities in a fine way.

May every holy Christmas-tide
Bring more of peace and God-like will,
And brother-hearts of nations fill
With that great love which shall abide!

A VALUABLE BOOK

We have had the privilege of examining the manuscript of a much-needed book from the pen of Dr. J. R. Howerton, professor of philosophy in the Washington and Lee University, and at one time pastor of the First Church, Charlotte, N. C.

The object of this book is to set before the people and the pastors their mutual duties.

Dr. Howerton is always clear and logical; but in this book he impresses us as being exceedingly so. The style is so pleasant and the advice is so sound and needed that that one will read it with growing appreciation and benefit.

The cost will be $1.50, and its publication depends upon the order received. Address Rev. J. R. Howerton, D.D., Lexington, Va.

WANTED

Mr. Editor:

We will appreciate it if any of your readers can supply us with, or inform us where we can get the following papers and books: The file of "The North Carolina Presbyterian"; "The Southern Presbyterian" (edited by Dr. Woodrow); and "The Missionary" (back of 1910); "The Family in its Civil and Churchly Aspects"; "The Broken Home"; "The Theology of Prayer," by B. M. Palmer; the two or three writings by Dr. C. C. Jones, the three or more by Dr. Thomas Goulding, and any and all of the thirty writing by Thomas Smythe. If you have any of the above please communicate with me, S. M. Tenney, President Presbyterian Historical Society of the Synod of Texas.

DEATH OF REV. R. L. McKINNON

The Associated Press states that on Saturday, December 15th, Rev. R. L. McKinnon, pastor of Bream Memorial Church, Charleston, W. Va., was killed in an automobile accident on a railroad crossing. No particulars thus far have been given.

THE DEATH OF REV. T. H. LAW, D.D.

Dr. Law, after 86 years of this life has gone to his reward, having passed to the other world in Spartanburg, December 15, 1923. He was born in Harts-ville, S. C., August 24, 1838, educated at South Carolina Military Academy, and Columbia Theological Seminary.

He was licensed in 1861, and ordained in 1862 by the Presbytery of Harmony. He was for many years District Superintendent of American Bible Society. He also served as a Chaplain in the Confederate Army in 1863.

Besides pastorate in different sections of South Carolina, he served as stated clerk of the Synod of South Carolina from 1875 to a few months before his death.

He was a director of Columbia Theological Seminary, and also the stated clerk of the General Assembly—a position he resigned in 1922, by reason of his health.

His life was a busy one, and also useful. He served his Church faithfully wherever placed, and though often burdened with manifold duties, he was always the courteous Christian gentleman to whom the editors of our Church papers were ever under obligations.

The sympathies of the entire Church go out to his faithful wife who in his later years was always his constant companion and helper.

NORTH CAROLINA

To North Carolina Ministers—If any minister in the Synod of North Carolina has not received one or more copies of the minutes of the last Synod he will please write to the stated clerk and his wants will be supplied.
D. S. Craig.

Charlotte, Westminster Church—Remember that always on Sunday afternoon before Christmas we have our Christmas Service. This service is for old and young—all of our people. Remember too, that this is a "White Gift" service, that is, we give rather than get. So come bringing your gifts—groceries, fruit, candies, money, or other things useful, and lay them at the feet of the King.—Calendar.

Acme, Rev. J. K. Fleming, pastor. The results for the canvass for church papers were greater than any of us had anticipated. We secured 12 new subscriptions, which now give us approximately 75 per cent of our homes subscribing to a church paper, and about 85 per cent of Auxiliary members subscribing. We are truly grateful to God for this manifestation of spirituality in the membership of our church.

Charlotte, Tenth Avenue—Our service next Sunday evening will depart somewhat from our regular program, in that it will be a service appropriate to the Christmas Season. It will be of interest to both the old and the young, and it is hoped that all of our people will make it a point to attend and bring with them an offering of some kind as a White Gift to the King. The money offering will go to the cause of Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, and the other gifts will be appropriately distributed here in the city.

Charlotte, Caldwell Memorial—Next Sunday evening a chorus choir will render a Christmas Song Service that will doubtless be inspiring to all and kindle in our hearts a new appreciation of the joy brought into the world by the advent of Christ the Saviour. The plate collection will be for the Alexander Home.

Providence and Matthews—Rev. and Mrs. Gurney, of Providence are enjoying a holiday vacation in the North. They will spend Christmas in Rochester, N. Y., where Mr. Gurney has two brothers. From there Mr. Gurney goes to his birthplace, Grimsby, Canada; afterward joining Mrs. Gurney at their former home, Cortland, N. Y.

This is the first vacation Mr. Gurney has taken in over four years, and to make it still more enjoyable, each of the two churches he serves, Matthews and Providence, has presented him with a substantial sum of money, as an advance Christmas gift.

Mr. and Mrs. Gurney will be at home at Providence manse about the middle of January.

The Church of Spray is having better attendance now than any time in its history and the people are seeing their responsibility and taking more interest in the Lord's work than ever before. This is very gratifying to all.

Last Sunday we received three into the church on profession of faith and baptism and just two Sundays ago we received two others on profession and baptism. The Lord is adding unto the church such as are saved day by day.

The Ladies' Auxiliary gave a very good pageant on Home Missions, thanksgiving and a good offering was to the Barium Springs Home. For all these blessings we give thanks to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.
J. S. Cook.

Mount Carmel—This church was organized October 14, 1923 by the following commission of Fayetteville Presbytery: Rev. Messrs. A. T. Lassiter, F. M. Bain and R. A. McLeod and Elders D. M. Fairley and James Shaw. There were 29 charter members. The following officers were elected, ordained and installed: Elders A. S. Davis and John T. Shaw, and Deacons R. H. Davis and T. R. Truelove. The church is located in Harnett County at the J. Van Lindley Nursery, near Overhills.

Rev. A. T. Lassiter began preaching at this place on Saturday nights in the early fall of 1913. The interest grew and in a short time he arranged to give one Sunday afternoon service each month, which he continued to do until October, 1915, at which time he moved to Benson. Soon after this Rev. R. A. McLeod began to preach at this point one Saturday night each month, which arrangement continued until the spring of 1918, when he gave up his pastorate temporarily in order to enter the army as a chaplain. June 1, 1919 he returned to his pastorate and by a rearrangement of his work he was able to give this point one Sunday afternoon service each month. He is still serving the field. A Sunday School has been conducted by the citizens of the community. This organization is in good working condition at the present time and is fruitful of much good. In addition to these regular services there have been five evangelistic meetings held here since the work began. The Lord blessed all these agencies of His grace—more than half of the charter members were led to an open profession of their faith in Christ through the efforts of his servants at this point and a spirit of Christian fellowship was fostered, which finally grew into a united desire on the part of the whole community for an organized church in the community. The superintendent of the J. Van Lindley Nursery, Mr. A. S. Davis, has been a tower of strength in carrying on the work from the start. Although a Methodist by inheritance and profession he saw that the place was more accessible to the Presbyterian forces and therefore the logical church to supply the preaching. He has given freely of himself and of his substance to the furtherance of the work. Others have also given their measure of assistance and encouragement. It has been strictly a community affair. We behind this church will accomplish much good, not only for its own membership, but for the outlying district also. It is a center for a large area. Attendance at all services is good.

Pursuant to adjournment Fayetteville Presbytery met in the First Church, Fayetteville, N. C., November 20, 1923 at 1 o'clock, p. m., with an attendance of 17 ministers and nine ruling elders.

The following resolutions, presented by Rev. Dugald Munroe, were adopted by a rising vote:

"Inasmuch as Dr. H. G. Hill is today, November 20, 1923, passing his 92d milestone in his pilgrim journey,

1. We render thanks to Almighty God for thus prolonging to this unusual length the life of our venerable brother.

2. We congratulate Dr. Hill as the oldest member of this Presbytery and tender to him our sincere thanks for his fidelity in all his labor for these 55 years. He was pastor of this church, Fayetteville First for 18 years. He then went to his present field where he has been for 37 years. For most of this time he has been the efficient chairman of the Committee of Home Missions, and faithful member of the Board of Trustees of Union Theological Seminary. Seven times he was honored by Presbytery by being sent as commissioner to our highest Church court. Once he was elected Moderator of that court—at the Chattanooga Assembly, 1889.

3. We congratulate him that he is still bringing forth fruit in old age, able to preach twice every Sunday and write excellent weekly expositions of the Sabbath School Lessons for the Presbyterian Standard.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be furnished Dr. Hill, and each of our church papers for publication, and that they be adopted by a rising vote of Presbytery. Also that Presbytery be led in prayer by Rev. E. L. Siler and Rev. W. E. Hill.

Corresponding Members—Rev. W. S. Milne, Orange Presbytery; Rev. A. D. Carswell, West Hanover; Rev. W. A. Nicholson, Wilmington; Rev. G. W. Hanna, Keokuk (U. P.) and Rev. J. K. Roberts, Enoree.

Commissioners to Organize Church—Commission appointed to organize a church at the J. Van Lindley Nursery in Harnett County reported the organization effected on October 14th, with 29 charter members. Mount Carmel was chosen as the name, and the post office of the new church is Overhills, N. C. Elder A. S. Davis is clerk of session and Deacon R. H. Davis is treasurer.

Ministers Received—Rev. A. D. Carswell, Rev. G. W. Hanna and Rev. W. A. Nicholson.

Calls Accepted—Rev. A. D. Carswell accepted calls from the Bethel, Dundarrach, Shiloh and Phillipi churches, and a commission was appointed to install him on the second and third Sabbaths of December. Rev. W. C. Brown is chairman of the commission.

The following recommendations of the Home Mission Committee were adopted:

1. That $250 additional be appropriated from the Elliott Legacy Fund for aiding the Elise Church to complete its church building.

2. That $600 per annum be appropriated for Home Mission Fund to the Fairmont-Iona group.

3. That $200 per annum, additional, be appropriated from Home Mission Fund to Bensalem-Elise group to supplement the salary of its pastor in compensation for what is deducted by taking from his group the Pinehurst Church.

4. That Spence Church, with Providence mission and Flowers Tabernacle be placed under the care of Rev. A. T. Lassiter, temporarily.

Dismissed—Rev. W. M. Currie, at his request, was dismissed to unite with Wilmington Presbytery.

Educational Institutions—The following recommendations of Synod's Committee on Schools and Colleges were adopted:

1. That for the next three years Presbytery requests each church in the Presbytery to appropriate 10 per cent of all Benevolent funds to Educational Institutions.

2. That all contributions to the causes of Education for this three-year-period be pro-rated as follows:

Flora Macdonald	20%	$15,600
Queens	20%	15,600
Peace	07%	5,460
Mitchell	07%	5,460
Davidson	18%	14,040
Union Theological Seminary	08%	6,240
Glade Valley	05%	3,900
Elise	05%	3,900
Albemarle	05%	3,900
Westminster	05%	3,900
		$78,000

3. That Mr. F. L. Jackson, the present Treasurer of Schools and Colleges serve as the Treasurer of this Fund.

4. That Presbytery urgently insists that every church Session instruct their Treasurer to forward all money for Education direct to Mr. Jackson, Davidson, N. C., to be pro-rated by him in accordance with the above schedule.

5. That the Woman's Auxiliary be requested to pro-rate the contributions for Benevolent Causes in accordance with the above schedule.

6. That the above plan go into effect at once."

Organization New Church—A petition for the organization of a church at Comfort Chapel (near Fayetteville) was received and granted, and the following commission was appointed to organize, if the way be clear, at a time to be arranged by the commission: Rev. Messrs. D. L. Jones, I. N. Clegg, W. E. Hill and Ruling Elder Chas. Rankin.

Broadway Church—Presbytery overtures Synod of North Carolina to transfer Broadway Church from Orange Presbytery back to Fayetteville Presbytery.

Midway Church was granted permission to employ Rev. L. A. McLaurin for afternoon services, until they may be able to secure morning services.

Adjourned with prayer by Rev. E. L. Siler and Rev. W. E. Hill to meet in regular Spring Session at Raeford in April, 1924. E. L. Siler, S. C.

SOUTH CAROLINA

Florence—Our pastor, Dr. H. Tucker Graham, was absent for two Sundays late in November, helping in special services at Clinton. The officers agreed to conduct the morning services and did in a most impressive and acceptable way—three at each service. On November 18 Elder R. B. Fulton presided, and the program was:

1. Psalm 23—Jas P. McNeill.
2. "How much owest thou unto my Lord" in material things?—F. L. Willcox.

3. "How much owest thou unto my Lord" in professional service?—R. Ben Fulton.

On November 25th Elder J. W. McCown presided and the program was:

1. Prayer—A. L. Harde.
2. The Greatest Book in the World—H. E. Davis.
3. How Can I Help My Pastor?—S. J. McCown.

Three of the speakers are elders and three are deacons. Incidentally five of the number are lawyers. A number of other laymen will conduct prayer meeting or otherwise help in the church services as need arises. The number of laymen who are both qualified and will to thus lend a helping hand is one of the gratifying and significant features of our work here.

On Sunday night, November 25th, Rev. Henry G. Bedinger, of Hartsville, preached. He is always heard with pleasure and profit by this congregation.

Enoree Presbytery—At the fall meeting of Enoree Presbytery intense interest was shown in the report on Home Mission work; an aggressive program was adopted. Presbytery heard with pleasure the three young men who are getting such good results in our Home Missions fields. Rev. W. G. Nevelle presented the work in Landrum, Campbello and Clifton group. Landrum is ready to build a church, and is waiting for the help promised by Presbytery to begin breaking dirt. Rev. D. C. Stogner, of Lickville, Simpsonville and Fulton group, spoke of the necessity of a church building at Simpsonville, that the few members there had responded nobly to the cause; but the beginning of the work had to wait on help from the Presbytery. Rev. W. B. Goebel presented a petition from Pacolet Mills for re-organization of a church. The Pacolet Mills Church was washed away in the flood of 1906. Presbytery was deeply gratified with the progress shown in the work; and enthusiastically adopted an enlarged program for the future. The Home Missions Committee was instructed to raise as quickly as possible $5,000 to aid Landrum, Simpsonville and Pacolet Mills in building churches. $1,100 was raised on the floor of the Presbytery for the Church Erection Fund. This is highly important for these churches can not make further progress without church buildings. It was said during the discussions that Enoree Presbytery has never in its history aided a church in erecting a house of worship. If this be true this reproach will soon be removed; for the committee is getting encouraging results as Spartanburg County, under the zealous leadership of Hon. I. A. Phifer, has raised about $3,000. The whole Presbytery will do as well for this cause appeals to our people.

The Presbytery adopted the recommendation of the Stewardship Committee fixing the Benevolent quota the same as last year, requesting that $10,000 be provided for Home Mission work, which is about 15 per cent of the $63,000 designated to Enoree Presbytery by the General Assembly.

The Sunday School Committee is planning to put on a program of Teacher Training during the winter and spring months to the end that a Teacher Training class will be in every school in the Presbytery.

GEORGIA

Decatur—The last few weeks have been interesting and busy ones in our work. Dr. Campbell Morgan has just spent his annual week in Decatur, and spoke each evening in our church to crowded congregations. The contractors have just turned over our new Sunday School building to us, and we are finding ourselves already very much at home in it. For the first time in years we have sufficient space for our varied departments and their activities. The juniors, intermediates and seniors of our Sunday School are housed in the new building, while our other departments occupy quarters which have been remodeled in the old plant. The junior room in the new section is so planned that it gives an immense court for basketball, indoor baseball, and other games. Under the careful oversight of the session, and very much to the delight of our young people these activities are already under way. The basement is furnished with lockers and showers so that our equipment lack nothing in the way of supplying the needs of the four-square life. Plans are already in mind for the third annual session of our Daily Vacation Bible School, which, under the leadership of Mrs. S. H. Askew, has proven such a blessing to all Decatur.

MISSISSIPPI

Tupelo—Rev. J. A. Christian was installed as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church on Sunday night, December 9, 1923. Rev. U. S. Gordon, the popular young pastor of the Starkville Church, presided, preached the sermon and charged the congregation. Rev. H. M. Jenkins, of Aberdeen, a seminary class-mate of Mr. Christian, delivered the charge to the minister. Although the service was held at night the membership was largely represented and at the close of the service the entire congregation came forward and pledged their co-operation and support of the newly installed pastor. The field of service here in this progressive and beautiful little city is very promising, and there are many things to encourage our church in its efforts to develop the Presbyterian work, and build up an aggressive working force for Christ.

TENNESSEE

Memphis—At a recent meeting of the congregation the following were elected officers in this church: Elders—A. R. Erskine, A. G. Jett, M. H. Hunt, W. W. Newsom; Deacons—Geo. Awsumb, C. M. Gooch, E. W. Watson, Marshall White, L. R. Donelson, J. T. Orr, J. H. Townsend, Harry Webb, T. J. White. We now have 22 elders and 27 deacons. Ninety-seven new members have been added to our church during the year 1923. The church year-book has just been published showing a membership of 914 members, 872 resident and 42 non-resident. Before the year-book was made up, the session placed on the retired roll about 100 names of members who have long since moved away from this city. The churches of this city are preparing for the evangelistic services under the leadership of "Billy" Sunday who will be in Memphis for six weeks, beginning in April.

VIRGINIA

East Hanover Presbytery—The constitutional requirements having been met East Hanover Presbytery is hereby called to meet in the Presbyterian Publishing House in Richmond, Va., on Monday, December 24th, at 12 noon to consider the following business:

1. The resignation of Rev. John D. Keith as pastor of Mizpah Presbyterian Church.

2. The request of Rev. John D. Keith to be dismissed to the Presbytery of Wheeling, U. S. A.

3. Any other business growing out of these matters.
Wm. S. Campbell, S. C.

Staunton—The Third Church closed a two-weeks' evangelistic meeting on November 30th. Rev. J. P. Proffitt, of Nelson County did the preaching, it being his third engagement with the Third Church, and the people are very much devoted to him. The attendance was fine all during the meeting. The invitation to accept Christ was given at every service, and there were responses at every service except five during the entire two weeks. There were 16 professions of faith, and quite a large number of reconsecrations. Two new family altars have been set up in the homes of certain of the converts. The Third Church has almost 100 members now.

On Sunday, December 9th, one new elder and two new deacons were elected, and will be ordained and installed Sunday morning, December 16th. This gives the church four elders and five deacons.

The Lewiscott Presbyterian League, Headquarters, Big Stone Gap, Va.—The third annual meeting of the league was held in the community house on Monday night, October 15th, with a large number of members and invited guests present. The board of directors met at four o'clock in the afternoon to hear the reports of the mission workers and to transact the routine business of the organization. The members of the board were filled with enthusiasm as they listened to the personal reports of the nine ladies who are now working in the bounds of the league. A great many forward steps have been made during 1923. The work at Hoot Owl Hollow has been enlarged, and some improvements have been made to the school property. One hundred and twenty pupils have been enrolled in the day school, and the standard of the school has been raised to that of a Junior High School. A special night school has been arranged for some working men who desire to improve their minds during spare time. A well arranged religious program is carried out every week at the mission including preaching, prayer meeting, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and Bible study. The attendance at all of these meetings is splendid. A new school has been established at Oreton in the Wildcat Valley in Lee County, near the Lewiscott Farm. Forty-one pupils have been enrolled in this new school and the religious program is now being organized. Space does not permit us to mention all the news which was received from the workers through their reports, but each one thrilled the board with the account of how God has richly blessed every effort that has been made to enlarge and carry on the work. The general meeting began at six o'clock when the assembled company sat down to a delicious dinner which was prepared and served by the ladies of the Big Stone Gap Auxiliary. The tables were attractively decorated with flowers and candles. Several short addresses were made, the workers were introduced, some of the accomplishments were mentioned and the annual election of officers was held. Capt. H. E. Hyatt, of Norton, Va., was elected president for 1924, Mr. J. D. Rogers, of Big Stone Gap, Va., was elected vice-president; Mr. H. A. Alexander, of Stonega, Va., was elected secretary, and Mr. W. S. Miller, of Big Stone Gap, Va., was elected treasurer. The following were elected as Directors for a term of three years beginning January 1, 1924: Mr. I. P. Kane, Gate City, Va., Jas. M. Smith, J. D. Rogers, R. T. Irvine and A. E. Griffith, of Big Stone Gap, Va. This was the best, most successful and enthusiastic meeting that the league has ever had, and every one present received a new vision of the importance and bigness of the task which is before us in this mountain work.
H. A. Alexander, Secretary.

WEST VIRGINIA

Bluefield—With the organization of the new Westminster Presbyterian Church, in south Bluefield, by a commission of Montgomery Presbytery on Sunday, December 2d, the Bluefield Presbyterian Church lost four out of nine of its elders; ten out of 13 deacons; the president of the men's Bible class; the president of the men's club; the superintendent and assistant superintendent of the Sunday School; seven out of eight circle leaders in Woman's Auxiliary; and over 200 of its members, the large majority of them from among its most active workers, all these going with the new church in south Bluefield. On Sunday, December 9th, the Bluefield Presbyterian Church elected the following additional officers: Dr. Edwin C. Wade, a former elder here and in Florence, S. C., Mr. Lacy S. Shirley, for 25 years a deacon in this church, and Mr. James R. Leizure, as ruling elders; and Messrs. Robert L. Burgess, Harold P. Dodd, French H. Easley, S. Buford McClung, Benjamin D. Painter, Dal. M. Ramage, C. L. Seyler and Paul C. Thomas as deacons.

As the name "Bluefield Presbyterian Church" seemed a bit too indefinite, with the organization of the new Westminster Church, the congregation (Continued on page 12)

Davidson College—The new athletic field, the gift of the Richardson family, of Greensboro, is practically completed, and is one of the finest in the South. It is located on the site of the old Sprunt field and affords complete accommodation for football, baseball and track. The new quarter-mile track has a foundation of brick with a top layer of unsifted cinders, and this in turn surfaced with a layer of sifted cinders and sand. A large concrete and steel grandstand will be built on the western side of the inclosure. The whole field is underlaid with drains which will dry the enclosure within 20 minutes after an ordinary rain. To the south of Richardson Field is the new Sprunt field, which will be used by the Freshman teams. The cost of Richardson Field will run over $30,000.

Sixteen games have been scheduled for the basketball season, as follows: January 14, Charlotte "Y," at Charlotte; January 16, Statesville, at Statesville; January 19, Carolina, at Charlotte; February 3, Guilford, at Davidson; February 5, Trinity, at Charlotte; February 6, University of Florida, at Davidson; February 8, Hampden-Sidney, at Davidson; February 9, Charlotte "Y," at Davidson; February 11, N. C. State, at Davidson; February 13, University of S. C., at Davidson; February 14, Wake Forest, at Davidson; February 16, Statesville, at Davidson; February 19, Wake Forest, at Wake Forest; February 20, N. C. State, at Raleigh; February 21, Guilford, at Guilford; February 27, Washington and Lee, at Charlotte.

Twenty candidates are trying for places on the wrestling team, with Captain G. E. Weems, of the R. O. T. C., and himself a former captain of the Army grapplers, in charge. The schedule includes Carolina, at Davidson, February 9; Trinity, at Davidson, February 23; V. P. I., at Blacksburg, February 16; Virginia, at University, February 18; V. M. I., at Lexington, March 1; Washington and Lee, at Lexington, March 3.

Davidson College debaters, represented by A. H. Hollingsworth, Jr., and H. C. Stith, won over Washington and Lee's representatives, Ralph Masinter and C. W. Lowry, in the annual contest held in Shearer Hall, on Friday, December 15th. Dr. W. J. Martin presided and D. B. Walthall acted as manager. Washington and Lee upheld the affirmative side of the question, "Resolved, That the present immigration law should be re-enacted," with Davidson arguing for the negative. All four speeches were well prepared and finely presented. A unique feature in connection with the announcement of the decision took place when Dr. Martin was handed the sealed vote. The first two votes drawn were in favor of the negative; the next two in favor of the affirmative; while the fifth indicated the negative. The judges were Dr. Luther Little, Dr. A. J. Crowell, Hamilton C. Jones, D. P. Tillett, and Eddie Jones, of Charlotte.

Queens College—On Tuesday of last week Queens College tendered a reception to the wives and friends of visiting Shriners in the college parlors. Dr. W. H. Frazer, Miss Sallie McLean, dean, and other members of the faculty were in the receiving line. Miss Beulah Holmes, Miss Meme Hampton, Miss Irene Kennedy and Miss Mary Emma Frazer were heard in readings and piano numbers and the college orchestra played during the reception. Refreshments were served by the home economics students and by the Misses Margaret Chason, Florence Gahr and Carolil Graham.

Sunday afternoon at 3:30 the Choral Club was heard at the annual Christmas Carol Service held in the chapel. The program was under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Starr, of the voice department, with Miss Annie May Hayes at the organ, and A. D. Lajoie, violinist, assisting. At 8:45 on Sunday night the service was repeated and broadcasted from the First Baptist Church.

Sections B and C of the Billy Sunday campaign held their first prayer meeting in the college auditorium on Tuesday night. The service was led by Miss Rosa Moye Mercer, president of the "Y," and Miss Charlotte Jackson, of Louisville, Ky., sent out from the office of Dr. H. H. Sweet, was the speaker. The second service was held at the home of Mrs. H. S. Brown, for section C, and in the college chapel for section B on Friday night. It is proposed to have these bi-weekly meetings on each Tuesday and Friday up until the beginning of the Sunday meetings on December 30th.

The children's class of the Department of Expression, taught by Miss Ethel King, presented three one-act plays in the college auditorium Wednesday evening at 8:30 o'clock. The class was assisted by some of the college girls who are studying in Miss King's department. The three plays were, "The Pot Boiler," "Babes in the Wood," "Elsie's Dream," and "The Poet Who Lost His Pen." Many visitors were present from out in town.

Queens closed for the holidays on Tuesday at 12 o'clock, no classes being held after that time. In order to do this, study hour was held Saturday night instead of having meetings of the societies, and classes were held on Monday instead of having the usual holiday. All students and faculty members are required to be back on January 4, 1924.

A very enjoyable affair was the Christmas dinner for Queens students and faculty, served by the college dietician Monday evening at 5:30 in the college dining hall. Christmas decorations of holly and other greenery, tinsel, bright ornaments, etc., made the dining hall a gay scene. Each table had its own Christmas tree, with a present for each girl and each teacher. Between the five courses, songs and yells were given, and at the end, the gifts were distributed.

Sunday night the Student Volunteers of North Carolina sent delegates to Charlotte for the Student Volunteer service, held at the Second Presbyterian Church. Special music for the occasion was rendered by the choir, and the three speakers of the evening were all volunteers—Messrs. Price and Wharton, of Davidson, and Miss Gibbon, of Queens, who were introduced by Dr. A. A. McGeachy, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church. Mr. Wharton presented the needs for student volunteers and their services throughout the world. Mr. Price, who was born and reared in China, related many interesting things about the country, especially concerning the treatment that missionaries receive from the foreigners, and how the missionaries were serving the world in these foreign countries. The work and organization of the Student Volunteer Association were discussed in many phases by Miss Gibbon.

The Queens College Choral Club presented a delightful program in the annual carol service Sunday, December 16th, in the college chapel.

The chief number on the program was "The First Christmas," by Coern, a cantata participated in by the entire club, with solo parts by Misses Beulah Holmes, Winnie Frazer, Margaret McCluer and Mildred Gillis. The singing was excellent, and Miss Holmes' lyric soprano voice charmed her hearers. The contralto part sung by Miss Frazer was delightfully rendered, while the higher soprano parts sung by Misses McCluer and Gillis were splendidly sustained.

"O Little Town of Bethlehem" was the processional number, and "Jerusalem the Golden" the recessional song. The singing of "Silent Night" behind the scenes after the girls filed out was beautiful.

The club as a whole sang "Three Kings Have Journeyed," by Damrosch; "While by My Sheep," by Spicker; "Holy Christmas Night," by Lassen. The singing by Miss Hays of Du Bois' "March of the Magi," by Miss Gillis of Gounod's "Adore and Be Still," by Miss Isabelle Knight of Speaks' "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear," and by Miss Holmes of Mozart's "Alleluia," was greatly enjoyed.

Miss Annie May Hayes, a Senior in organ this year, played the organ accompaniments, while A. D. Lajoie played the violin obligatos. Miss Elizabeth Starr, of the Music department, conducted.

King College—The Athenean Literary Society of King College, one of the oldest organizations of its kind in this section, celebrated the fifty-fourth anniversary of its establishment last Friday night with an elaborate program on which both faculty members and Athenean students took part.

Several hundred Bristolians and a number of out-of-town educators were present at the meeting, and expressed themselves as being well pleased with the growth of the society during the past few years.

Although all sides of student life are represented in the membership of the society, the Athenean organization has the distinction of having probably the greatest number of well-known athletes enrolled than any similar institution within a radius of several hundred miles.

The Philothesian Literary Society of King College, which is several-years older than the Athenean, will celebrate its anniversary some time next May. These two events have always been a prominent part of the Kaysee calendar, and are always looked forward to with great interest.

Westminster College is enjoying the largest enrollment of its history this year. There are enrolled in the college this semester 225 men. They come from 12 different states and Cuba. Westminster offers only collegiate work, the academy having been done away with in 1919.

Just recently the college successfully closed a $500,000 campaign. With the added facilities she will be able to obtain with this amount, Westminster will boast next year one of the largest enrollments in the state, including all the co-educational institutions. Westminster, it may be added, is a college for men only.

Fulton, Mo.

Commencement at Lees-McRae—On December 3rd instead of the usual June of commencement times, 10 lovely girls, clad in white, with flowers and diplomas, stepped off the stage of the Lees-McRae Institute. This commencement tide reached a high-water mark in many ways. Held in a beautiful stone building with white plastered walls, steam heat and opera chairs, which some of you helped to pay for, this commencement exercise formed quite a contrast to previous ones held in the old frame building; with its unpainted walls, open stairway, and insufficient heat. All honor to the old building, however, for some mighty fine girls were graduated from it.

The closing exercises proper began with a musical program on Friday night, given by the music pupils. On Saturday night the Seniors had their class night exercises. On account of a sudden death in the community, and a serious accident to one of the school's most valued teachers, the usual banquet was omitted. Rev. S. H. Hay, of the First Presbyterian Church, of Morristown, Tenn., was the speaker for the occasion.

On Sunday morning he preached on the "Bible-fed Life," holding his audience at attention till the close. Sunday night at the laymen's meeting, at which the school was present, he spoke on "Character Building," and in his final address on "Education," before the graduating class and the large audience assembled in the auditorium, he even surpassed his previous eloquent and logical discourses.

On the platform with the graduates sat Edgar H. Tufts, son of Rev. Edgar Tufts, who so faithfully for 25 years labored in this place for church and school; Mr. F. H. Stinson, of Banner Elk, secretary of the board of trustees; Rev. S. H. Hay, and the entire faculty.

The exercises were presided over by Mr. Tufts, who succeeded his father. Great excitement prevailed during the awarding of the diplomas and medals and prizes.

Those who were graduated were as follows: Eugenia Stinson, Banner Elk, N. C.; Beulah Farthing, Hackett, N. C.; Eunice Caldwell, Charleston, S. C.; Annie Fox, Morganton, N. C.; Margaret Parker, Banner Elk, N. C.; Frances Stinson, Banner Elk, N. C.; Maude Johnson, Minneapolis, N. C.; Victoria Reece, Beech Creek, N. C.; May Triplett, Matney, N. C.; Mary Scott, Banner Elk, N. C. A Friend.

News of the Week

On December 12th a petition and motion for the voluntary dissolution of the Inter-Church World Movement of North American was filed in the Supreme Court of New York.

Among some of the new measures proposed in the new Congress are the following: The "equal rights amendments," sponsored by the woman's party, was introduced by Senator Curtis, republican, Kansas; an amendment terminating the terms of President and Vice-President on the third Monday in January; and of senators and representatives on "the first Monday in January" of the year in which they normally end, was offered by Senator Norris, republican, Nebraska, and the amendment authorizing the President "a majority of the senators voting concurring," to conclude treaties, was introduced by Senator Owen, democrat, Oklahoma.

Davis Warfield, president of the Seaboard Air Line Railway Company, said that the road had received $750,000 cash in final settlement with the government for the period of public operation during the war.

Two sections of the Twentieth Century Limited, the pride of the New York Central Railroad, crashed in the fog and rain at Forsythe, N. Y., December 9th, with the loss of nine lives.

Petition that a receiver be appointed for the Alamance Railway Company, which has a line between Burlington and Graham and a branch to Haw River, was brought into western North Carolina federal district court by the American Trust Company, trustee, of Richmond, Va.

Women politicians have cleared the decks for a fight over the proposed legislation for their sex. The national woman's party, financed by Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont and other well-to-do partisans, and directed by Miss Alice Paul, would amend the constitution to give "equal rights" at one fell swoop, and has launched a campaign to that end.

Announcement of the candidacy of President Coolidge for the republican nomination for President in 1924 was made by Frank W. Stearns, of Boston, who is known as his closest personal and political friend.

A sub-committee of the "cotton bloc" in Congress will meet to consider legislation designed to improve the estimation of cotton crops by the census bureau. Headed by Senator Harris, democrat, Georgia, the committee includes Representative Wingo, democrat, Arkansas, and Representative Bulwinkle, democrat, North Carolina.

John Motley Morehead, at one time representative in Congress, later republican national committeeman, widely known leader in politics and a prominent textile manufacturer, died at his home in Ransom Place, Charlotte, following an illness of one week with pneumonia. He was 57 years old.

Announcement was made at the State department that a commercial treaty had been signed with Germany to replace the similar convention abrogated at the time of the war, and that instructions had been sent to the minister at The Hague, Richard M. Tobin, to begin negotiations of a similar treaty with the Dutch government.

Before an audience that packed the hall of the House of Representatives in Columbia, S. C., prominent speakers from the ranks of the law enforcement officers issued a challenge to the people of the state for a strong-hearted and upstanding public sentiment and co-operation that would encourage the officers to their best efforts in bringing to justice the violators. Appeal was made for a state-wide demand for law enforcement and for that measure of encouragement that would tend to strengthen the arm of the law.

Mrs. Edith Vanderbilt was re-elected president of the state fair for a fourth terms at the annual meeting of the North Carolina Agricultural Society.

A brief dealing with completion of development of the Capc Fear river by installation of a third lock and dam below Fayetteville was presented to the board of engineers for rivers and harbors of the War department by R. M. Horsburgh, secretary of the Fayetteville Chamber of Commerce, who had prepared an exhaustive document showing how the development of the river would react favorably not only to Fayetteville, but to the whole state, and certain sections of the south.

THE CHRISTMAS SPIDER

Once upon a time a young spider lived in a woodshed. The woodshed was part of a long, rambling old farmhouse that was alive with children. They were a merry, romping lot of children. One day a little girl with bobbed yellow hair and blue eyes happened to see the spider when she was climbing on top of the grindstone to reach a basket hanging from a low rafter.

"Good morning, Christmas spider," said she. "I suppose you don't know that we are getting ready for a beautiful Christmas. Now if I were you, I would come and spin a web in the house, where I could watch the fun. O little Christmas spider, do walk in and see the fun!"

The little girl ran away, carrying the basket and laughing; and the young spider, if you please, straightway walked in to see the fun. Of course, no one may say that the spider understood what the little girl said, but it is a fact that she soon after walked into the kitchen on her own eight feet. First she traveled to the door and peeped through a crack at the top. When the door was opened down she tumbled, and then she walked into the kitchen. Straightway to the ceiling went the spider, and there in a corner she spun a pretty little web in which she intended to catch flies.

Meanwhile she had a fine chance to watch everything that happened in that lively kitchen. She heard merry talk about Christmas pies, cakes and puddings and saw children dodging in and out; she saw girls and boys washing dishes together and helping and hindering with all kinds of joyful work. The spider happened to be looking down with her bright eyes shining, when the little girl with the bobbed hair looked up and saw her.

"I spy, little Christmas spider!" she said ever so softly. "Merry Christmas to you!"

A few minutes later, along came a woman with a broom. "I see a spider's web," said she. With broom uplifted she swept down the web. But she didn't get the little spider.

"Run, Christmas spider, run for your life!" warned the little girl. "Don't give up. You just stay in the house and see the Christmas fun."

Then the woman came after her with the broom and threatened to sweep her away, too, if she encouraged spiders to spin webs in the house.

The Christmas spider must have been discouraged, but even so she watched her chance to go into the dining-room. And there, in a corner below the ceiling, she worked and worked, and worked and worked until she had spun another pretty web in which to catch flies. There she sat and watched the fun. She saw the family gather around the dining-table three times a day and heard their cheerful talk. Then along came that woman with the broom!

"There seem to be so many spiders in the house this winter!" she said, as she swept down the fine new web of the Christmas spider.

The Christmas spider was probably discouraged, but even so she was alive and could spin another web. This time she worked and worked, and worked to make a new web in the chimney corner.

"I spy!" said the little girl with the bobbed yellow hair. "Stay where you are, Christmas spider, and you shall see us hang up our Christmas stockings."

But how could the little spider stay where she was, when along came the woman with the broom and down came the beautiful web?

"I never saw the beat!" said the woman. "The house seems to be full of spiders."

The little spider was doubtless discouraged, but even so she worked and worked, and worked and worked until she made another web on the opposite side of the chimney. And there she was, watching the fun and having a gay time, when—along came the woman with the broom.

"More spiders!" said she. "I think they must come in from the woods on the Christmas greens." Down came that web.

It is safe to say that the little spider this time really was discouraged. But she didn't think of going back to the woodshed. On her eight good legs she made her way into a big, cheerful room, and there she worked and worked, and worked and worked until she had a new web stretched between a Christmas wreath and a window shade. From that new web the little spider could see what was happening out of doors and in the cheerful room at the same time, thanks to her wonderful eyes and fine location. The piano was in that room, and the little spider listened to sweet voices singing Christmas carols whenever the merry children gathered around the piano. The little girl with the bobbed yellow hair was turning away from the piano, one morning after the singing, when she saw the little spider. Straightway she made a song of the words:

"I spy, I spy, I spy!"

"What do you spy?" asked the children, crowding around.

"Oh, I know a little Christmas joke, that's all," said she.

Ten minutes later came the woman with the broom. And—down came the web!

"There must be a whole army of spiders in this house!" said she.

The little spider bumped her head that time when she fell to the floor to get out of danger. But she didn't think of going back to the woodshed, because, whether it be true that she had fared forth to see the Christmas fun or not, she wasn't the giving up kind. Twice more the little spider worked and worked to make a new web, only to have it destroyed by the woman with the broom.

In the meantime a tall, green fir tree had been brought into the room, and all day long men and women and children had been working merrily together trimming the tree with strings of tinsel and ropes of cranberry and popcorn, and with bright ornaments and Christmas candles. The spider was hiding under the piano where she could see all that happened.

Early, early the next morning when the world was still the little spider had a finished web just below the Christmas tree. Early, early the next morning came shouts of "Merry Christmas, Merry Christmas!" from upstairs, and before ever the stars ceased shining down came the family to make merry around the tree. When the candles were lighted on the tree a woman exclaimed:

"Oh, wait a minute until I get the broom! One of those spiders has spun a web in the very Christmas tree, and I must get it down before any more candles are lighted!"

"Oh, please do not get the broom," begged the little girl with the bobbed yellow hair. "I invited a little woodshed spider to come in and see the Christmas fun, and I believe she came,

The TREE and the CANDLE
By Martha B. Thomas

SAID the little Christmas candle
To the little Christmas tree,
"We're both of us important

But of course you must agree
I'm twice as bright as you are,
And if it weren't for me,
You'd never make a hit at all
In being Christmas Tree!"

SAID the tree then to the candle,
And his tone was most polite,
"Your gay illumination
Is particularly bright,
But allow me one small question
Which seems both fair and right—
Can you not see you're merely meant
To make me shine at night?"

THE candle softly twinkled,
And then at last said she,
"I guess that I am here for you,
And you are here for me!"

and that she is the only spider that is in the house. Anyway, you know there is an old, old story about a spider that spun a web all over a Christmas tree in the olden times, and the folk let it stay there, because when they saw it Christmas morning it had been turned to gold. Maybe our little Christmas spider's web will turn into gold. Anyway, it is a good little spider, because it tried again and again and again to have a web in the house—the way all children should do when they set out to do something. Grandma said so."

After that long speech the spider was allowed to enjoy her web at last, and the laughing little girl with the bobbed yellow hair made every one in the family say: "Merry Christmas, little spider!" and oh, such a merry time they made of it, and such a merry Christmas day it was!

As for the spider, when her Christmas adventures were ended and the tree was carried into the woodshed, she went with it, and was glad to find herself safely at home again, you may be sure. And that is all. Except what Grandma said to the little girl with the bobbed yellow hair she said on discouraging occasions ever after. She said: "Remember how many times the Christmas spider tried again!"—Frances Margaret Fox, in The Continent.

Southern Railway System Passenger Trains No.'s 36 and 135 will be operated in two sections between Atlanta and Washington, December 16th to 23d inclusive, and No.'s 37 and 38 in two sections December 17th and 24th inclusive.

The first sections of each of these trains will handle the regular passenger equipment, and extra sleeping cars, while the second sections will be made up exclusively of mail and express cars.

Arrangements have also been made to handle extra coaches and sleeping cars on all other through trains and to operate extra sections of these trains when needed.

These arrangements have been made to provide adequate equipment for handling the heavy passenger business that is expected during the holiday season, and to concentrate the movement of mail and express as far as possible on the sections provided for this business so as to eliminate delay to passenger trains due to time required at stations for loading and unloading mail and express.

TO ANY MOTHER ON CHRISTMAS EVE

Dear mothers, busy with your Christmas cheer,
Your hands so full, your hearts a little tired,
I pray you, when you think the rafters ring
Too loudly for the nerves that are so jarred
By all your planning and your weight of cares;
When o'er your household ways sweeps avalanche,
And everywhere a rush of boyish things
Mars for a space the symmetry you love!
I pray you smile, smile on! and never shut your heart to these glad sounds, nor let your eyes
Be dimmed by anything but joy.
Oh, never mind the footprints on the stairs!
The finger-marks upon the cherished wall.
All these should be your riches, and they are.
And when at holy hush of eventide,
When all the homing birds come back to nest,
And you perchance steal through the quiet rooms
To look with tender eyes on their sweet rest—
I pray you, then, down on your knees, and ask
That God may let you know how rich you are;
That in His mercy you may never taste
The hunger of the home where silence reigns.

Some of the Best Books—(By Helen Barrett Montgomery, in Missions—Really there are some books that everybody is going to want to study in connection with this year's splendid study book. By hook or crook one must have these for the missionary library. A book appropriation in the yearly budget; a book shower given by interested people; a pure food sale; a flower bulb sale; a rummage sale; an old paper and rubber sale; a co-operative shower in which many people given 25 cents each for books; a missionary play, the proceeds to be invested in books—these are but a few of the "hooks and crooks." But get the books.

There is Sam Higginbottom's "Gospel and the Plow," a fascinating study of the place and power of agricultural missions in India. (MacMillan, $1.25).

There is Brown's "Mastery of the Far East," a calm and fair discussion of the rise to power of Japan and the downfall of Korea. (Scribner's).

There is Dennett's "Democratic Movement in Asia," a treasure house of facts about the new life springing up in Japan, India, and China. (Association Press).

There is Fahs' "America's Stake in the Far East." If any thing will make Americans think about international relationships it is this book with its close analysis and searching list of questions following each study. (Association Press).

There is Cynn's "The Rebirth of Korea," a story that stirs your blood and quickens your faith. (Abingdon Press).

There is Fisher's "India's Silent Revolution," great facts greatly stated about a situation packed with possibilities of tragedy for the mission enterprise. (MacMillan).

There is Mathews' "The Riddle of the Far East," a book written by a layman that is thrilling with the conviction that the answer to the riddle lies in the Gospel. (Doran).

Then Hall has written a book, "The Near East, the Crossroads of the World," that you must not miss. Much of what has gone on in the Near East has been blind to Americans because they have not been informed. This book casts light on the whole situation. (Missionary Education Movement).

There is Harris' great book regarding the portentous things that are taking place in Africa. "Africa, Slave or Free," will make your blood boil with its revelation regarding the white man's cynical and brutal treatment of Africa. (Student Christian Movement, London).

There is Cooper's "Understanding South America" that you will surely want to light up for you the dark and empty continent of the future. (Doran).

There is Dennett's "A Better World," full of faith in the undeveloped power of Christianity to prove adequate to build out of present wreckage a better world indeed. (Doran).

There is Speer's "The Gospel and the New World," a discussion by a Christian statesman of the part which the Gospel must and will play in the reconstruction of the world. (Revell).

There is Gleason's "What Shall I Think of Japan?" Altogether the most authoritative, fair-minded, and illuminating discussion of the hydra-headed Japanese question that we have seen; a fearless holding up to publicity of the blunders of Japanese diplomacy; and an inspiring study of 12 great Christian leaders in whom is the hope for Japan. (MacMillan, $2.25).

CHURCH NEWS

voted to change the name to the "First Presbyterian Church of Bluefield." And this will be done at the proper time by Presbytery.

The new Westminster Church starts out under the most favorable circumstances. With an experienced, capable pastor in Rev. Warner H. DuBose, who has already won the love and confidence of his people; with six elders and eight deacons, all of whom, with one exception, had been officers in the First Church and are capable, well-trained and efficient men in church work; with a splendid Sunday School organization; with 235 members to begin with and prospects for rapid growth in that rapidly growing, beautiful residential section of the city; and with a splendid new Sunday School building deeded to them free from debt, the First Church assuming the present indebtedness of $29,000 on the building, the success of the new church is assured from the beginning of its work.

While the pastor of the First Church, Rev. S. W. Moore, was out of the city a short time ago his automobile, which had been given to him by the congregation four years ago, disappeared from the garage. Last week he was asked to take a walk one evening with two friends, and they led him to the garage and presented him with a beautiful new closed car to take the place of the old one which they had sold in his absence. Such an expression of the affection and thoughtfulness of the congregation, added to so many former expressions, is greatly appreciated by the pastor. And he and the congregation of the First Church will carry on the work with accustomed energy and zeal.

EDUCATIONAL

Flora Macdonald — The Y. W. C. A. has sent a check for $150 to Rev. A. R. McQueen, chairman of the campaign in Fayetteville Presbytery for Flora Macdonald College. This was the first contribution made to the campaign.

Misses Grace Brown, '25, and Snowe Bradley, '26, will represent the "Y" at the Ninth International Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement, to be held in Indianapolis, Ind., on December 28th.

Special collections were taken up on Golden Rule Sunday for the Near East Relief, and on December 16th the annual White Gift service was held. This year the "Y" has contributed to the Near East Relief, the Lepers, the Jewish Missions, the Anna McQueen Fund, the latter a fund for the purpose of building a dormitory for Korean girls at Kwanju.

As a closing feature for the mission study classes 75 posters on Japan are on display in the college parlors. These posters depict scenes from Japanese life and are of value in the study of mission work.

The Woman's Club of Flora Macdonald affiliated with the North Carolina Federation was represented at the twelfth district in Fayetteville by Misses Johnston and Webb, of the faculty. A series of monthly programs have been prepared in which the club will take up the subject, "What is being done for the uplift of the country."

VACANT FIELDS SHOULD BE WATCHED

I take pleasure in being a correspondent to the Standard at this time; however, I wish to state that it is not my desire to become a correspondent or editor of any paper or magazine. Should I be accused, I shall consider the accusation an honorable one. I would like to put before the eyes of the people of the Presbyterian Church, especially those who are in authority, some of the facts that are existing in our own particular church.

Our church (when I mention this church I refer to others on the field) is well on its second year without a shepherd or one whom we believe is ordained and sent from God to direct His people. This is the first occurrence of such a happening, I believe, in the history of the church, yet this little organization is young, still here is where we see so great possibilities and need of a pastor who is thoroughly consecrated to God and willing to carry on the Lord's work in a most Godly manner. We hope we are not a people who are not thankful to God for every good gift, neither do we want to forget His tender mercies. We have been blessed during the absence of our pastor. We have been permitted to hear God's Word almost regularly from our pulpit or our neighboring pulpits. Let us not confine our thoughts to this church alone, but consider the younger churches with us who are in their infancy. We love them, because we visited them before they were in existence, yet there are some of them feel they have been forgotten by those who were once their dearest friends. The Kenly Church has a deep feeling in her heart for her sister churches. The eyes of the Kenly Church are looking with interest at the move of her sister churches and praying that they go forward instead of backward, which is a reasonable prayer in their trying times.

I trust the second year will not have passed without God having directed a shepherd to this great work. I believe God in His own good time will send us a shepherd, so let us receive him with thanksgiving and without a murmur. The call and decision that God will make for us will be greater by far than any we can attempt to make. I hope that all the disappointments that have come to us have come from the heart of the giver, for a disappointment to the young is long to be remembered. I would like to know why we have been left in this condition, whether it be spiritual or financial condition of the church. I am sure we have fallen short both spiritually and financially, which seems to be the case in many instances; however, let us take on new courage and wait on the Lord. We have a very promising work on this field, but to speak frankly, I believe the Presbyterian Church is losing ground fast within her own bounds. I speak this from the heart with regret and I hope the responsibility will become so great that more will wake up to the need of a pastor on this field.

I wish to state we regret very much having to be cast off from Fayetteville Presbytery. We regret having imposed on the good people of Fayetteville Presbytery to the extent of having to be cast aside. We shall always remember them because of their goodness to us, and sincerely hope that they do not entirely forget us. May the Lord bless and prosper His work on this field even the world over.

(Signed) Member of Kenly Presbyterian Church.

With plenty of wishes
And lots of good cheer
A bright Merry Christmas
And a happy New Year.

MRS. EUGENE R. KELLERSBERGER

By R. F. Cleveland

Edna Bosche was born in Ohio, August 6th, 1888. Her parents moved to Austin, Texas, when she was still a small girl. When she reached school age, because she was not very strong physically, she attended the Whitis Academy, a private school for girls at Austin, Texas. After graduation she attended, for one year, the Washington College, a fashionable school for girls at Washington, D. C.

But it was the godly influence of the home that contributed most to the moulding and shaping of her remarkable character. There was never a home in which the name of God was more highly revered and honored, nor in which the spirit of the living Christ was more manifestly exalted. Those who knew the family and who frequented the home always felt just a little nearer God within the family threshold than in any other one place. The home was a place of prayer. They faced no problems alone. God was always consulted, no matter whether it was some problem about business, about school, or some phase of Christian work, it was all the same in that home. God was called upon to help them to decide.

It was under the influence of such a home that Edna grew up and learned to love Christ. At a very tender age she accepted Christ, entered into active Christian service, and became especially interested in foreign missions. Many times the mother, upon her knees with her two daughters, Edna and Winifred, prayed that God would lead one or both of them to go to the foreign field. When the definite call came to Edna to be a foreign missionary she began to make preparation for her life's work. She attended the Moody Bible Institute for two years. She became a most proficient student of God's Word, an ardent and zealous personal worker. Those who knew her marvelled at her absolute faith in prayer and her remarkable knowledge of the Scriptures. During her missionary preparation she joined the Student Volunteer Movement and became quite active at Austin, Texas, as a member of the Student Volunteer Band of the University of Texas. She often visited the Mexican quarters of the town, assisting in the mission work among the Mexicans. She also helped to start a Sunday School Mission among the negroes of Austin.

On June 18th, 1912, she was married to Doctor Eugene R. Kellersberger, a medical student of Washington University, St. Louis, who had definitely decided to go to Africa as a medical missionary as soon as he could complete his course of preparation. For several years after their marriage they lived in St. Louis while Doctor Kellersberger continued his studies in medicine and interne work. During this time they were quite active in city mission work. In the meantime Mrs. Kellersberger's mother died.

In 1916 they sailed for Africa as missionaries of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. Mrs. Kellersberger's life as a missionary was brief but lovely. She lived to serve only three years upon the field. But during that time she scattered joy and sunshine in many dark places. The natives noticed at once her most outstanding characteristic, and soon after her arrival upon the field, according to the usual native custom, they gave her a native name, "Dinanga," which means "love," to signalize her outstanding trait. During her brief sojourn among the natives of Africa she was to them the incarnation of love. Since the time she left Africa two years ago until now there has been a special prayer in many native villages that she might return to them again to live her life of Love among them. As in the homeland so in Africa, her chief delight seemed to be in doing personal work. She took advantage of every opportunity to speak to individuals about Christ and her wonderful knowledge of the Bible made her most efficient. But her principal work in Africa was making and showing to the natives a "model home." It was patterned after the one established by her godly mother in America. God had first place. Two little girls were born into this home. And what an inspiration her home became to missionaries and natives alike! She was recognized by her fellow missionaries and by the natives as an ideal example of what a Christian wife, mother, and home-maker should be.

In June, 1921, shortly after their return to the field from their first furlough, Mrs. Kellersberger became infected with the dreaded African sleeping sickness. As soon as the infection was discovered Dr. Kellersberger took her and the two children to Europe where he placed her in a London hospital for treatment. In the meantime he brought the two little girls to America. Leaving them in the care of loved ones he immediately returned to Mrs. Kellersberger, in London. After eight months of patient suffering, during which time she displayed heroic faith in God, she was declared cured by the attending physicians. But the long days of suffering and the effects of the treatment left her body weak and frail. At the advice of the physicians she was not to return to Africa until she had entirely regained her normal strength. Consequently they returned to America and were joined by their two children. Here they continued their faithful work for God, but they were always conscious of the fact that they were urgently needed in Africa, where only two doctors were striving to serve five main stations widely separated my forests and plains. Finally, at the beginning of 1923, in view of the approaching furlough of one of the doctors on the field, the need became more urgent. There would remain only one doctor to serve the entire field. After much time spent upon their knees in prayer, Dr. and Mrs. Kellersberger came to a decision. Their decision called for sacrifice and separation, separation which proved to be forever in this life. Dr. Kellersberger returned to Africa alone, Mrs. Kellersberger, with her two little girls, remained in America. They were willing to make the sacrifice because of their burning zeal for the suffering people in Africa.

During the summer months of 1923 Mrs. Kellersberger remained with her sister, Mrs. Earl Brown, at Concord, N. C. But the winter months in North Carolina are somewhat severe upon one accustomed to a tropical climate, so Mrs. Kellersberger decided to accept an invitation from her father to spend the winter with him on a large ranch in Bosque County, Texas. It was while her father was away in Dallas on business and she was alone with her two children on the ranch, that her step-mother, from whom her father was separated pending a complete divorce, and who cherished for her step-daughter a causeless hatred, came secretly and unnoticed at early morn and shot her, in the presence of her two little girls, death following in 30 minutes.

The passing out of this young Christian life—for she was only 35 years of age—is like the plucking of a beautiful flower before it has reached full bloom. But the perfume of her noble life of love and sacrifice shall not cease to send forth its fragrant influence into the hearts and lives of those who knew her both at home and in far-off Africa. Perhaps no words could more vividly characterize her consecration, her willingness to suffer for the sake of the Gospel, and her unselfish devotion to, and sympathy for, the natives of Africa among whom she worked, than her own words, written to her friends with her own hand from her sick room in London during those days of dreadful pain and suffering:

"Oh, how much I have to be thankful for! But out there in a grassy plain there are hundreds of sleeping sickness cases lying huddled on the ground in wee, smoky, haystack houses. I can see them as we have seen them often, squatting in the ashes of a few sticks, naked and dirty and emaciated, blinking their poor heavy eyes at us as if trying so hard to grasp one intelligent thought. Or I can see them lying on the ground unconscious and dying alone, forsaken and unloved—going out to what? Should it be that I do not recover, what then? Oh, then there is Christ and a tearless Heaven and glad meetings with those who have gone before. But those others who must die—who always die—what is cheering them if any faint realization that they are slipping into eternity comes? A black, unknown, Christless eternity! Couldn't you cry with horror of it if you stop to think? We have left them to this. Can't you help some way? If it stirs any of you to go to their help with healing for body or soul, it would glorify the very little I have suffered until I would be content if there were no more of this life for me.

"I hesitate to write what is in my heart, fearing to tarnish things too sacredly my own and God's, but I am so in earnest to help you face your responsibility to Africa that I must tell you. When we first got to Bibanga and I realized how poorly I had worked here before, I wrote this prayer in my prayer list: 'May Africa be my burden in some way as the world was for Christ. May I gladly suffer anything for the salvation of this people.'"

BETHLEHEM AND GALILEE

*A little child in a manger,
And the angels watching by;
A little ship in danger,
And the wild waves running high.*

*Yet the child in the manger sleeping
Is Lord of sky and sea;
And the man asleep, on the stormy deep,
Is master of Galilee.*

*Oh! true and wondrous story,
The man and child are the same;
From His Father's house in the glory
To atone for our sins He came;
And He is the way to the brighter day,
For all who believe in His name.*

—Joseph Wilson Farron, in The Banner.

The very heart of the Gospel of Jesus Christ is embodied in the announcement made at His birth. "There is born unto you this day a Saviour." He who would either minimize or deny the significance of that Saviourship neither understands the deepest meaning of Christianity nor the universal need of mankind.

PRESBYTERIAN PROGRESSIVE

PROGRAM

Depts. I and IV

Spiritual Life --- Fellowship

YOUNG PEOPLE TAKING HOLD

The response made by young people's leaders and the young people themselves to the plan of the General Assembly's Stewardship Committee to enlist their co-operation in all parts of the Presbyterian Program is most gratifying. There can be little doubt of the fact that the intelligence of our church of tomorrow as to its church-wide program will depend on how well we inform the young people of the church today. "Christian Endeavor Objectives in the Presbyterian Progressive Program" recently issued by this committee is an attempt to give the young people something definite to do in each department of the program of the church with the promise of a recognition from the church for meritorious work. During the month of December, while the whole church is emphasizing, according to the schedule of activities, Department I of the Progressive Program, under the new arrangement the young people will also be studying the spiritual work of the church with definite goals. Among these goals are "Church Attendance," "Daily Bible Reading and Prayer," and "Sunday School Attendance." The young people are beginning to feel that the program is as much theirs to promote as it is the maturer church member's obligation.

A number of new pieces of literature having the young people especially in mind have recently been placed in the hands of all the pastors of the church. "Making Stewardship Attractive," a 16-page leaflet, gives some suggestions to pastors and leaders on how to make this subject attractive to the young people. "Ready for the Game," an eight-page leaflet explaining a stewardship reading contest will especially appeal to the classes and societies of the teen age. "How to Organize and Conduct a Stewardship Study Class" gives some suggestions that have to deal with Christian Endeavor Societies.

It is the desire and manifest plan of the Assembly's Stewardship Committee that the young people of the whole church shall be fully informed if possible on the "Whole program of the whole church" and that the information shall be accomplished by definite plans with which to put the information at work in the plans and program of this branch of Christ's Church. THE COUNTRY CHURCH

The last General Assembly meeting at Montreat, N. C., appointed an "Ad-Interim Committee to study the problems of the country church."

The Committee composed of Rev. W. H. Mills, D. D., Chairman, Clemson College, S. C.; Rev. H. W. McLaughlin, D. D., Secretary, Pastor of New Providence Church, Raphine, Va.; and Mr. F. S. Neel, Elder in Sugar Creek Church, Rt. 8, Charlotte, N. C.; held its first meeting at the First Presbyterian Church, Charlotte, N. C., Sept. 29, 1923. The Committee spent about four hours in business, after which it visited the following country churches: Sugar Creek, Williams Memorial, Hopewell, Cook Memorial, Paw Creek Church, Steele Creek and some of its outposts.

The Committee decided to send a blank to ascertain information to each of the Stated Clerks of the assembly.

It was also decided to send to the Pastors and State Supplies, as soon as the names of the country churches could be ascertained, a letter.

The Committee asks for a cordial co-operation on the part of all who are interested in the problem of the country church and their solution. It is our hope to conduct for a brief period a Country Church Department in our Church papers, and we request articles dealing with country problems and their solution.

Our investigations so far have lead us to the knowledge that there are many grave problems in the country communities, and in the life of our rural churches. They have also lead us to the conclusion that an amount of money, spent in the conduct of a country church will produce larger results in bringing people to confess Christ and join the church, larger results in leading young people to give themselves in life service as ministers and missionaries, larger results even in producing leaders in the work of the city churches themselves, such as elders, deacons, Sunday school workers, etc., an equal amount spent in the city church. The problem of the country church, therefore, is also a problem of the city church, in fact a problem of the Church as a whole.

The Christmas season brings to our hearts with renewed emphasis the duty to reproduce in our lives the unselfishness that shone so brightly in the life of Jesus.

A DAY OF PRAYER

By A. B. Curry, D.D.

At a recent adjourned meeting of the Presbytery of Memphis, the following action was taken:

"Presbytery hereby appoints January 9, 1924, as a day for prayer for Southwestern College, and earnestly requests its ministers and people to observe this day. Presbytery further respectfully invites all our brethren of the four controlling Synods also to join us on the above date in earnest prayer for our college."

It would have been well if a matter of this kind and importance had been brought before each of the four Synods at their fall meetings, that concert of action might have been secured. But when the matter was proposed it was already too late to get it before the Synods or other Presbyteries, most of them having already held their fall meetings. The only thing Memphis Presbytery could do under the circumstances was to appoint a day of prayer for its own members, and ask all those interested in the college to join with us.

The action of Presbytery was based on this passage of God's Word, among others: "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." It is of the greatest importance that the college should open in its new location in September of 1924, according to announcement. In order to do this it will take more than human wisdom, power and resources. But we have all these in the infinite fullness of God, and He places them at the disposal of men of action, of prayer and of faith.

The work of building is going a slowly but surely. It will have to be greatly speeded up to be able to open next fall. The president and the board of directors are earnestly wrestling with the problems and difficulties of the task, and are doing their work splendidly. Now, let us all lay hold of the resources of Almighty God by believing prayer. The work is His; the cause is His; let us take the college and all its interests to Him. One of our poets has said, "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." And One greater than any poet, has said, "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing ye shall receive."

There is a special promise to united prayer. When the church as such prayed for Peter's release, prison walls and doors, chains and manacles, and prison guards interposed no insuperable obstacle. But the church's prayer for him was united, "instant and earnest." Now the God of the Apostolic Church is our God: "The same yesterday, today and forever." While we labor, brethren, let us not forget also to pray.

GRANVILLE PRESBYTERY

From a Layman's Outlook

For all, there are experiences which partake to some extent of the nature of oases in life.

Such was, we feel, the privilege of attending the initial or christening session of Granville Presbytery.

In His awards, both now and in future blessings, may the Lord remember the veterans who, regardless of constantly increasing demands for activity and regardless of constantly lessening physical power, are always in the vanguard of duty. And may He especially bless Dr. White, who brought from the Synod the message of work under the new regime, and who so completely presided over the session.

In the very able sermon on Tuesday night Rev. Mr. Comerford gave us from Second Peter 1:2-7, several things to add to our solid faith, that we may fulfill our mission as Presbyterians, especially as to our duties in evangelism.

The discussion as to choice of name between "Carolina," "Watt Memorial" and "Granville" was spirited and enjoyable.

The name "GRANVILLE" from the original county, which included most of this district, was chosen. In this connection, Elder J. S. Rankin can furnish on two seconds notice any date in history.

A great leader of men once said that when you want something done promptly and well, don't get the first idle man you meet, but get the busiest man you know. By this token the work of Home Mission Committee and that of Stated Clerk will be done.

In view of the liberal donation of funds for evangelistic work, let us not think that all is provided for, but take what others are ready to do as a spur to the rest of us. And let us see the wisdom and need of personal evangelism by lay members, and especially, to use to the fullest extent the Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and all our organizations, definitely for leading others to The Savior.

As to the outlook for the new Presbytery: In view of the fact that in almost our first week as an organized Presbytery, we have commissions to complete three church organizations—in view of the fact that in our pastor membership, we have a body of men pre-eminently fitted to lead us—and in view of the fact that our territory is compact, and easy of intercourse, let us measure up to the duties and opportunities which the Great Head of the Church gives us.

As to place for next meeting—some from metropolitan districts seemed to think that rural Oxford would be a more suitable place for fall meeting, but upon intimation by Rev. Comerford that invitation for fall might not be forthcoming, Oxford was chosen.

Heartly appreciation of Henderson's open hospitality, and singing, from the heart, "Blest be the Tie that Binds" closed the first session of Granville Presbytery.

WEEK OF PRAYER FOR THE CHURCHES

Sunday, January 6, to Saturday, January 12, 1924

To the Churches of Christ in America:

Before the new year takes for nations and churches a character of its own, it is our privilege to invite all Christian people to fellowship in prayer.

It is not demanded of us that we should devise a formal unity before we can come together at the Throne of Grace. There is a unity which is already ours. We are one body in Christ. We have not to create, but to enter into the unity which comes from our common relationship in grateful and adoring faith, to the one Lord. We come by many ways to Him, but it is to Him that we all come: and in Him we meet with one another. We need not wait for other sanction.

There is another unity in the needs which we must bring with us into His presence. We live in the same age of the world's history. We share the same anxieties and perils, the same fears and the same wonderful hopes. It is the same world and the same nations, which we seek to behold in the light of Christ. It is the same world which we long to offer to Him for His inheritance.

But we shall remember that in our prayers we do not begin with our needs, but with the Divine Grace. Our prayers will be our answer to His call, and to His redeeming love, and we shall turn away from ourselves, even from our desperate needs first of all, and open up all our life to the Holy God that He may enter and possess us by His Spirit. This is the way to unity in prayer. Other concerns in which we differ there will be in our life and service, and they are important, but when we dwell upon the Redeemer, and all that we owe to Him, these concerns take their true proportions.

We shall hope to see the needs which we share, more clearly when we together bring them into the light of the One Divine Purpose. We know something of our shame and failure. "We are men of unclean lips and we dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." We shall know more, when we have lifted this our world into the pure and holy light. We know something of our need of God, but we shall learn more in fellowship: we shall see with cleansed vision what it is that can fill human life with the joy of a great purpose and the certainty of an eternal destiny. Everywhere we see men seeking to fill their days with excitement in order to escape from thinking. In the failure of their merely formal religion they hope to fill the void with new superstitions. They dream that they are eating, and they will awake to find their souls empty. This we know in part; but when we strengthen each other in the fellowship of prayer and come with boldness to God, we know still more surely that nothing but faith in the living God can satisfy the soul of man.

But we shall not only see with purified eyes; we shall open new ways through our offering of ourselves, whereby the Spirit of God may enter into the human scene. There is a way open whenever a solitary soul turns in faith to its Lord; but we have the assurance of the Saviour Himself that through fellowship the souls of men open another road. "Where two or three are gathered together in my Name, there am I in the midst of them . . . If two of you shall agree . . . it shall be done." It will make a difference whether we unite in prayer or not. Such a fellowship in prayer means ways thrown open, powers released, reinforcements of courage and hope for the faithful servants of God.

We cannot limit the range of believing prayer; the world has still to learn what may follow upon the fellowship in prayer of all the people of God. To the discovery of that secret in experience we call the churches for their own sake, for the sake of the world, and for the sake of Him who waits and has waited long for us to offer Him this road.

We are,

Yours in the fellowship of Christ Jesus,
The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

TOPICS FOR UNIVERSAL AND UNITED PRAYER

Sunday, January 6, 1924—Texts Suggested for Sermons and Addresses

"Again a new commandment I write unto you" (I John 2:7-8).

"Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom" (St. Luke 12:32).

"Meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light" (Col. 1:12-13).

"Let all the nations . . . bring forth their witness . . . ye are my witnesses" (Isaiah 43:9-10-11).

"With all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord" (I Cor. 1:2).

Monday, January 7, 1924—Thanksgiving and Repentance

Let Us Give Thanks—For the revelation during another year that there is One within and above all the years, the same Lord who is rich in mercy to all who call upon Him.

For all doors that have been opened to Him in all lands, and for His eagerness to enter through His Spirit into His Church, and into individual life.

For all who in 1923 out of every race and tongue were born again into the new life in Christ.

For spiritual awakenings in many places which indicate the movement of God the Holy Spirit.

Let Us Remember In Penitence—Our lack of that faith, which is bold to claim the resources of Christ Jesus.

Our absorption in the machinery of service, and our neglect of the power of the Holy Spirit.

Our willingness merely to hold our ground when we are called to move forward.

Our endeavors by compromise with the world to buy off its contempt and enmity.

Our weariness in service, our loss of the first wonder of redemption, and our failure to be as those who wait for their Lord's appearing.

Scripture Readings—Isaiah 58:7-19; Psalm 145; Acts 16:16-34; Col. 1:9-23.

Tuesday, January 8, 1924—The Church Universal

"Christ also loved the Church and gave Himself for it."

Let Us Give Thanks—For the eternal purpose, which Christ has for His Church.

For the unity which is already enjoyed before His Throne by all who call upon His Name.

For all deliberations and conferences during the past year which have led the followers of Christ to understand each other better, and to enter upon new service in fellowship.

For those who by their words spoken or written, and by their faithful lives have made it easier for others to believe in Him.

Let Us Confess—Our unworthiness of the great love bestowed upon us; our lack of vision, and timidity in bearing witness; our failure to make the world understand the mind of Christ; our unwillingness to be in the world as those that serve.

Let Us Pray—That the whole Church may wait upon God, and humbly listen for His voice.

That it may put the first things first, and open its heart more fully to Christ, its Divine Lord.

That through a living experience of God in Christ Jesus it may reach truer unity.

That in its thought the Church may be true to the whole counsel of God, and in its word and action may show to all mankind the Eternal Life which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us by His Son.

Scripture Readings—Psalm 72; Haggai 2:1-9; Isaiah 11; St. John 16; Eph. 4:1-16.

Wednesday, January 9, 1924—Nations and Their Leaders

Let Us Give Thanks—For the grasp of the Divine Purpose guiding the destinies of nations.

For the certainty of His majestic Rule, because the Lord is King, though the earth be never so unquiet.

For all who, having believed in Him, have sought to lead their peoples to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God.

Let Us Confess—That nations that know the Christian faith have been indifferent to each other's sufferings, suspicious of each other, and lacking in charity and understanding.

That they have not trusted the way of Christ, in which alone there is life and peace.

That they have yielded to fatalism and despair, and have not accepted His values.

Let Us Pray—For all in authority, that they may accept their powers as a trust from God.

That they and their peoples may be delivered from fear, suspicion, and distrust.

That there may come such a peace that in the joy of it nations may dwell together in service one of another, none making them afraid.

That, as a means to attain this end, those seeking the fellowship and peace of the nations may be strengthened and prospered in their counsels and actions.

That each nation may seek to cleanse its own life from the sins which defile and bring death to the soul of a people.

That in each land the Church of Christ may become the moral guide of the peoples.

Scripture Readings—Isaiah 1; Hosea 14; St. Matthew 8:5-13; Rev. 21:1-8, 22-27.

Thursday, January 10, 1924—Foreign Missions

Let Us Give Thanks—That the races of mankind are coming to know their unity in spiritual need, and that in the hour of awakening only Christ can satisfy their hunger.

That there is a growing desire among non-Christian peoples to hear of Christ.

That in China, India, and other lands where the political outlook is confused, spiritual hopes never shone more brightly.

That to the races of Africa also the knowledge is coming of their hope in Christ Jesus.

That both at home and abroad there has been true fellowship among those engaged in this holy service; and that the missionaries and their fellow-workers have not ceased to preach Christ.

Let Us Pray—that, in every field and in every variety of service, all things may be seen in the searching light of Christ Jesus.

That the Missionary Societies may receive the spirit of wisdom, patience, and power, so that they may know how to redeem the time.

That they may never lose the vision of their Lord and of His Cross, and never fail to see all men to be objects of the Divine redemption in Christ Jesus.

That every Missionary may be filled with the joy and power of the Lord.

That to the Church there may be revealed new ways into the heart of Islam.

Scripture Readings—Isaiah 42:1-16; Isaiah 55; St. Luke 10:1-20; St. John 17.

Friday, January 11, 1924—Families, Schools, Colleges, And the Young

Let Us Give Thanks—For all who in the home, and in places of learning, have kept the fires of faith burning continually.

For all students who have entered during the past year by faith into the field of Christian service.

For all, who as parents, teachers, and pastors, have so lived that their lives have commended Christ to childhood and youth.

For Sunday Schools and for their teachers who give without reserve to this holy service.

For all who in every place have sought to win for the Saviour the unclaimed and unexhausted powers of youth.

Let Us Pray—That in the worship at the family altar, in the reading of the Bible, and in reverence for the Lord's Day, childhood and youth may be trained to meet the perils of the world.

That all Sunday School teachers may have wisdom and a never-failing patience.

That they may seek, for the children, service and not wealth as the prize of life.

That the students of every land may hear the call of Christ into His manifold service.

Scripture Readings—Proverbs 8; I Samuel 3; Luke 2:40-52; II Timothy 1.

Saturday, January 12, 1924—Home Missions

Let Us Give Thanks—For all who have sought during the past year by personal evangelism, or by the public ministry to bring men to Christ.

For all who in the public life of the nation are not ashamed to confess their faith in Christ, and are seeking to apply it in industrial and social life.

For the brave and patient service of those who commend in brotherly love the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ to all those who reject Him; and for all encouragement which they have received.

Let Us Pray—That all within the Church may hear the call to share the good news of the Saviour with those at their door who are strangers to Him.

That the Church may give the supremacy in all things to Jesus Christ, and have no other purpose than to unfold His Truth, and to express in service His Will.

That there may be an increase of personal faith, hope, and love, among workers in all departments of Christian service.

For all seeking the spiritual welfare of young men and women.

That to all Christians there may be given a deeper yearning of soul, and a stronger compassion for all their fellow-men.

Scripture Readings—Psalm 37; Luke 10:17-24; Romans 8; Col 4.

WORLD CONFERENCE on FAITH AND ORDER

By Rev. S. H. Chester, D.D.

A meeting of the American Section of the Continuation Committee of this movement and of the commissions of the churches represented in it was held at Buffalo, N. Y., on November 7th and 8th. For reasons that appear below I am glad our Assembly continues its connection with the movement, and sorry that our representatives appointed by the last Assembly were unable to attend this most interesting meeting. Since the meeting of the commissions of both continents at Geneva, in August, 1920, I have been a member of the Continuation Committee, and was honored with a place on the program of the meeting at Buffalo. My topic was the place of Creeds, or of a Creed, in the united Church, if that ideal should ever come to be realized.

The movement originated at the General Convention of the American Episcopal Church, in 1910, and that Church has ever since taken a leading part in its promotion. It has far outgrown the proportions of a denominational enterprise, however, 83 different ecclesiastic bodies having appointed representatives on its commissions.

Its ideal is to bring about the unity of the Church of Christ, composed of all true believers throughout the world, in some visible form, such as the world can see, and thereby be convinced that Christ's claim to have been sent of God is true.

Just what the nature and mode of this unity shall be, no one has yet attempted to define. The following statement of Bishop Charles Brent, president of the Continuation Committee, should, it seems to me, quiet anxiety on that subject. "The thought in our minds is to bring qualified men of every communion together to face their differences on all matters pertaining to Christian Faith and Order, with the hope and expectation that many difficulties will fade away in friendly discussion, and that a common acceptance of fundamentals will create a unity rich in diversity. Uniformity is not sought after. We feel that every sincere Christian body exists by virtue of the life that is in it; that it is protecting and exalting some aspect of the truth; that such treasures, often garnered after deep and prolonged suffering, should be placed at the disposal of the entire Christian Church."

The discussions at Buffalo were characterized by a degree of frankness and friendliness combined that in themselves strikingly illustrated the distance already traveled by all the denominational branches of the Church as compared with, say, 50 years ago, in the direction of real spiritual unity.

There was a strong representation of bishops in the conference, both Methodist and Protestant Episcopal, and they were not backward in presenting their viewpoint on questions of Faith and Order, though always in the most courteous and kindly way.

On the other hand a Congregationalist delegate read an elaborate refutation (from his viewpoint) of the claims of "the historic Episcopate" and of Apostolic succession and a setting forth of the scripturalness of Congregational church government. So far as one could see, this performance did not disturb the good humor of those whose views were assailed, in the slightest degree.

This emboldened me to tell a story of an occurrence in one of our leading churches about 50 years ago, illustrating the difference between interdenominational relations then and now. One of the elders of this church became convinced of Episcopacy as the scriptural form of church government and transferred his membership to that church. In doing so he incurred the extreme disrespect of his pastor, who was a man of such intense convictions as to affect his personal relations with those who disagreed with him. The former elder finally took orders and became rector of an Episcopal Church in the same city. During the winter he preached a series of sermons on "The Historical Church" and published his outlines in the daily paper. His former pastor took no notice of these sermons, while the series was in progress, but when it was completed he announced that he would preach the next Sunday on Presbyterianism versus Episcopacy. The city turned out, knowing there would be fireworks. Taking up "The Historical Church," he traced it back to the time of Henry the Eighth, and could find no trace of it beyond that date. Then taking up the Presbyterian Church, he traced it back to Abraham! "And now," he said, "it ill becomes this mushroom of a night to vaunt itself in the presence of the Cedars of Lebanon." This was followed by a lurid denunciation of the record of the Episcopal Church in history.

My point was that such a thing occurring in any respectable Presbyterian Church of the present day being unthinkable, and the fact that we could listen in perfect good humor to the argument of our Congregational brother for his own position, showed that a revolutionary change had occurred in denominational relations in 50 years, and gave ground for hope that in another 50 years the people of God everywhere and of every name will have come to realize the fact of their oneness in Christ, and will have found a way to manifest this oneness in some visible form that all the world will recognize.

I now discover that it will take another article to tell about our discussion on the Creeds.

WINNERS OF THE RALLY DAY BANNERS FOR 1923

By R. E. Magill, Secretary

Below is found the list of successful contestants for the Rally Day Banner for the year 1923.

The spirit of sacrificial giving characterized the offerings this year, and the wide use of the programs furnished by our office indicate that an intelligent study is being made by our young people, of the problem of investing self, service, and substance in the work of the Kingdom.

We extend congratulations to the winners and give hearty thanks to all who had a part in this splendid offering.

Banner Sunday Schools for 1923

Alabama Synod—East Alabama Presbytery, Clio; Mobile Presbytery, Jackson; North Alabama Presbytery, Tusculumbia; Tuscaloosa Presbytery, Marion.

West Virginia Synod—Greenbrier, Fire Creek; Kanawha, Logan; Tygarts Valley, Richwood.

*The Minden Sunday School, which has held the banner for Red River Presbytery for several years, asked that their offering be not counted in the contest this year as they are building a new Sunday School plant and in consequence their total was not as large as in former years. They would have won the banner again this year, even with their reduced offering, had they not generously withdrawn from the contest.

PRESBYTERIAN SCHOOLS FOR MEXICAN GIRLS

By Rev. Brooks I. Dickey, D.D.

The Board of Trustees for this newest institution for the Mexicans of Texas, met in Taft, Tex., Tuesday, November 6th. Ten of the 13 trustees were present; in addition, Dr. Brooks I. Dickey, Superintendent of Home Missions for the Synod, and Mr. Joseph F. Green, of Taft, whose generous donation has helped to make the school possible, and Dr. J. W. Skinner, were present by special invitation.

The board organized by electing Rev. John Black Hudson, D.D., of Victoria, as president; Mrs. J. L. Brock, of Bryan, as vice-president; Rev. L. E. Selfridge, D.D., of San Antonio, as secretary, and Mrs. L. C. Ivey, of Taft, as treasurer.

Rev. Homer McMillan, D.D., of the Assembly's Executive Committee of Home Missions, reported that the $25,000 to be raised by the women of the Auxiliaries outside of Texas was in hand, with the exception of a few hundred dollars. Mrs. J. L. Brock, president of the Woman's Synodical of Texas, reported that the women of Texas had pledged the $25,000 expected of them, and that something over $6,000 was in bank. Mr. L. C. Ivey, of Taft, reported that of the $10,000 to be given by the citizens of Taft and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph F. Green, half to be payable November 1st, $5,200 was in the bank.

Steps were taken to have this money drawing interest until the board was ready to begin building operations. A committee was appointed to secure a charter, and steps were taken to secure title to the 200 acres of land offered by the Taft Ranch. This land lies one mile east of Taft, and is a beautiful tract fronting on the state highway and the railroad. An ample water supply is assured by a 10-inch water main which lies on the line of the property, and which will give an abundance for the needs of the school.

A committee was appointed to carefully study the character and type of buildings to be erected, which committee will report at another meeting of the board to be held at an early date.

The board resolved to lay out buildings and grounds with a view to taking care of 200 girls as a maximum for the school. It also resolved to undertake to erect one unit with a capacity of at least 25 girls, to be ready, if possible, in time for an opening in the fall of 1924.

Members of the board were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph F. Green during their stay in Taft, and enjoyed the delightful hospitality of their ranch home, "La Quinta."

FIRST CHURCH'S CHRISTMAS BARREL

under the family iron and "mirrored." It always looked respectable, but when Mrs. Haloran saw that spacious box, a swift vision of a black velvet hat with black plumes and a jet buckle—all new at the same time—rose before her.

"I am glad the first thing is for you," John Haloran said. "You deserve it."

They laughed at her efforts to untie it; her fingers were clumsy in her excitement. But it was open at last. She held up to view an old white Leghorn covered with faded flowers. For one moment neither of them spoke. Then her sense of humor came to the rescue and she burst into hysterical laughter.

Putting on the hat she bowed low. "The Reverend Mrs. Haloran, missionary coadjutor! Well, let's see if we can't find something to go with it!"

She found it. And again her ringing laughter pealed out while the minister stood by, the embodiment of outraged dignity. To him there was nothing amusing in this sight. Somebody has said that "for taking us over a trying place a sense of humor is better than the grace of God." Humor was but rudimentary in John Haloran at best, and today it was absolutely lacking.

"It is an outrage!" he said.

"It is an outrage, John. I grant it. But it's funny!"

It is not our purpose to give here the contents of that barrel. It is sufficient to say that after the first few garments hope died.

"That is all," said Mrs. Haloran at last. "No, here is a dear little suit, just right for Davie. And, John, read this note: 'It was my little boy's that is gone.'" Her overworked nerves gave way then. "Oh, John," she cried, her head on his breast, his arms around her, "we have Davie, anyway, if we haven't the clothes for him. Poor, poor mother!"

"It is a disappointment," she said, "but we certainly will not let it spoil our Christmas. We are no worse off, at any rate, than we were before. The things I have will insure the children's good time. The candy alone would do that. . . . John, get me the candy! I'm going to fill the bags now—to take away the bad taste of this barrel."

The moment which John Haloran had been dreading was upon him.

"Mary, I didn't get the candy."

"Didn't get it?" she echoed blankly.

"No. I used the money to finish paying freight on this barrel."

"John Haloran! You didn't!"

"There was no other way. I hadn't enough without."

"The children's candy money!" she said slowly. "Money that I have been hoarding up, five cents at a time, for months; . . . Why, John, Davie has been praying for candy!"

"What could I do, Mary? They wouldn't let me have it at the freight office without the money. I barely had enough as it was. And I supposed, of course, there would be things in it for the children—never dreamed of anything else."

"For fifty cents," she said as if to herself, not heeding him, "they could have got enough candy to satisfy these children—and they didn't do it! And for one dollar they could have given them a Christmas that they would never have forgotten. They could! One dollar at the ten-cent store would have got them a book and a toy apiece, and two pounds of ten-cent candy. And our children would have thought that was a glorious Christmas—poor little tads!"

She had been speaking slowly and in a low voice. Now she said with sudden anger: "I know the kind of women that sent these things. They are the kind that go up and down fashionable city streets saying to every acquaintance they meet: 'Do tell me what to get for my boy! He has everything in the world you can think of now! . . . And I would be satisfied with one dollar for my four! Then after Christmas they groan: 'What shall I do with all these things? . . . And I would be glad to pick up after mine all Christmas week if they only had something to throw around! There's nothing right nor fair about it! Now!'"

This mood was so new to her that her husband was speechless before it.

"Well! this barrel is going back to them—tomorrow. To think of their expecting us to pay freight on the wretched thing!"

"Mary! You wouldn't do that!"

"I would—and shall! I'm going to give these people one lesson in giving that they won't forget! A Christmas box for a lot of children out on the plains and no candy in it! And Davie praying for candy! . . . Well! he's going to have it. I'll take this barrel back to town tomorrow myself; and when I come back I shall have the candy."

"Wife, you know I would be only too glad to give you the money if I had it. But I have only two cents left in my pocket until the draft comes! . . . Are you going to ask credit?" Asking credit was the one humiliation they had spared themselves.

"No. I am going to pay money for it—good money—but I am going to have it!"

In all their life together he had never seen her like this. He watched her with fascinated eyes. Going to the mantel she took down a box with a slit in the top. It was their missionary bank and was held as sacred from profaning touch as the ark of the Lord. She was tearing it open.

"Mary!" he cried, aghast. "Not the missionary money! You wouldn't take that! 'Will a man rob God?'"

"I'd rob anybody!" she said, turning upon him like a lioness defending her young. "I'm going to have a Christmas for my children with candy in it if the heathen go—to perdition!"

He saw then that she was past talking to.

* * *

It was about two weeks after this that the pastor of the First Church called a meeting of the ladies of the congregation to take action about a missionary box.

"Another!" groaned several ladies who never contributed.

He went on to explain that a barrel sent from the church a few weeks before had been returned, and then—not scorning to make appeal to any God-given attribute of the female mind—added: "Perhaps I should say that this barrel has been not only returned but refused. Since it was sent from the church it is a matter in which you are all interested. The president of the Missionary Society requests a full attendance."

Naturally she got it. Seldom in the annals of the First Church had there been such a meeting.

"Ladies,"—the president's tap broke upon a lively hum,— "we are called upon to face a most unprecedented state of affairs. As the meeting today is so much larger than the usual attendance at our Missionary Society—so very much in excess of the one that launched this enterprise" there was marked irony in the implication—"I feel called upon to explain. At our October meeting it was decided to send a box to a poor minister's family in the West, and you were all urged to contribute as liberally as possible. You will remember that the call was one given from the pulpit to the entire church. How you responded to that call we shall soon see."

There was a startled movement, quickly controlled, in several quarters.

"I was called from the city in November and placed the packing of the box in the hands of another."

There was a slight stir in the second row, but Mrs. McArthur raised a protesting hand.

"One moment, please. The barrel was sent out as a Christmas offering from the First Church—not the Missionary Society, mind you, but our wealthy First Church. It was returned immediately. With it came this letter, which I will now read, since it concerns you all."

The president of the Missionary Society was generously sharing honors with the church.

"This is from the wife of the missionary to whom the box was sent—Mrs. Mary C. Haloran. I do not know Mrs. Haloran personally, but I am told by a lady of this congregation at whose suggestion the box was sent that she is a cultivated Christian lady. They have a family of four boys, ranging in age from five to eleven. This I ascertained definitely, in order that they might be no haphazard, misfit giving. I left that paper with one of our members."

She looked the assemblage over interrogatively and a lady rose with evident reluctance.

"Madam President—I am ashamed to acknowledge it, but that paper was never sent to the society. I simply forgot it."

The president shook her head sadly. "It has placed us in a mortifying position. I am sure Mrs. Woodley will pardon me for saying that it exemplifies the truth of the old saying:

"Evil is wrought by want of thought
As well by want of heart."

Mrs. Woodley sat down with a very red face.

"The evil in this case you will see from Mrs. Haloran's letter, which I will now read:

"Dear Madam:

"The barrel so generously sent by the First Church is received and its contents are carefully noted. I find after prayerful consideration of our wardrobes that we really are not in need of the articles contained in it, and I return it thus promptly that it may be used in discharging the obligations of the First Church to some of its other missionaries. If sent to the right place—say to a self-respecting minister with a wife whose spirit has not been entirely crushed out by the burdens of frontier life—I should think it might be used several times for this purpose.

"I add a small contribution in the shape of Scripture texts, which will enhance the value of your gifts. The home missionary is so accustomed to subsisting on the Word of God that he may be able to feed on these and be filled. Likewise, they may have the effect to clothe him the garment of praise. It is perhaps not too much to hope that they may also do good (incidentally) to them that are of the household of faith in the First Church. To this end I will ask that they be read to the ladies of your society while an inventory of the barrel is taken.

"Very sincerely yours,
"Mary C. Haloran."

"That's a spicy letter," whispered one woman to another with a sparkle of appreciation. "The woman's no fool—if she did go into Home Mission work."

"Madam President," said one a little more obtuse, "that is a very singular communication. It doesn't tell us at all why the barrel was returned."

"The barrel will explain itself," returned the president, grimly, "and will also interpret the letter. We will do exactly as Mrs. Haloran requests—take an inventory and listen to the Scripture messages. The secretary will read."

Then a most unprecedented thing (for a missionary meeting) occurred. The ladies in the back part of the room came forward.

The president drew from the barrel the same promising hat-box that we have seen, and the women craned their necks. Black velvet and plumes flitted through their brains too, as for one blissful moment they had through the mind of the woman on the plains. Mrs. McArthur handed a slip of paper to her assistant and held up to the astonished gaze of her audience—the old Leghorn.

"God loveth a cheerful giver," read Mrs. Wellan.

There was a burst of laughter in which the donor joined—but with dry lips.

A second box was drawn forth. It elicited another laugh, somewhat less spontaneous than the first, for it was a child's summer hat trimmed with forget-me-nots.

"He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord," read Mrs. Wellman, adding sarcastically: "How many loans the Lord needs, ladies, of this particular variety, I don't know. Not many, I should think."

"There are others," said the president, unconsciously lapsing into slang, and holding up in each hand a man's dust-grimed straw hat. The secretary read tellingly:

"And the Levite that is within thy gates; thou shalt not forsake him."

There were those who could not resist the grim satire of this, but more faces were indignant than smiling now, and whispers of, "Who on earth sent those things?" passed from one to another.

"Sh!" said one. "Look at that, will you?"

It was a relic of the past, a faded pink cloth opera cloak with a border of moth-eaten swan's-down which sent out over them a feathery cloud at the president's deft manipulation.

"Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven," read Mrs. Wellman, when the coughing incident to floating down had subsided, "where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."

They laughed. It was not in un-sanctified human nature not to laugh at that. But a seal-clad woman in the fourth row, with a face aflame, looked neither to right nor left, but straight at the garment. She had thought when she sent it in: "It is a nice piece of cloth, anyway, and people like that always know how to dye things. Or she can use it for a baby cloak." It seemed monstrous to her now.

"Madam President," said an indignant voice, "is there nothing in that barrel fit to wear?"

The president held up two beautiful little winter dresses. "Yes. There are these. And some really nice baby clothes—for Mrs. Haloran's boys! The need of a missionary census, ladies, before sending out a box is self-evident."

She looked in the direction of the recreant Mrs. Woodley, who murlured, "Whereas I was blind, now I see!"

"The next is a contribution to the minister himself." She handed a paper to Mrs. Wellman, who read:

"If there be a poor man of one of thy brethren . . . thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need."

"It ought to be a whole suit for that," came a stage whisper. The president held up the offering which was to be sufficient for the poor man's needs. It was a vest!

"Old vests!" came an outraged protest.

There was a disposition to lapse into mirth when another vest was elevated, but it died away as Malachi's burning words fell upon their unstoppered ears:

"Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar; and ye say, wherein have we polluted thee? In that ye say, The table of the Lord is contemptible."

Before they had fairly caught their breath after this there came another broadside from the same plain-speaking prophet. It was brought forth by a cloak skirt of good material and not much worn, but so spotted and soiled that Mary Haloran, with one longing look at its texture, had hurled it back into the barrel.

"Ye said also, Behold what a weariness is it! and ye have snuffed at it, saith the Lord of hosts; and ye brought that which was torn, and the lame, and the sick; thus ye brought an offering: should I accept this at your hand? saith the Lord."

All amusement was now submerged in a rising tide of indignation. The First Church was beginning to realize that it had placed itself in the position of giving a gratuitous insult; which was a shock, for the First Church was well bred, if lacking in missionary zeal. And it was an insult that could not be laid on the narrow shoulders of the Missionary Society. The barrel had been sent from the whole church. That it so poorly represented them they began to see was their own fault.

The enormity of the insult grew with each new disclosure. The packing had been done at a time when closets were being cleaned out for the winter, and their surplus contents had been neatly bundled and dumped into the church barrel. From its depths were now brought forth indeed the lame, the halt, and the blind; and with them came texts of Scripture that elucidated the law of sacrifice with startling clearness. It is safe to say that never in the whole reputable life of the First Church had it listened to so pregnant a sermon delivered in so few words. And never, never had its understanding been so open to receive with meekness the engrafted word.

"And if ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil?" sounded the accusing voice; "and if ye offer the lame and the sick, is it not evil? Offer it now unto thy governor; will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person? saith the Lord of hosts."

"Why, did you know that all those things were in the Bible?" whispered one astonished woman to another.

"No. But there are a lot of things in the Bible that we never know about till the time comes that we need them. I have found that out. . . . Listen!" For the president was speaking again.

"Ladies, I am glad to say that the text I hold in my hand is the last. I will read it myself. Mrs. Haloran says: 'I send this final word from the Mosaic Law, and I beg that the First Church may take it as a message from all its representatives in the mission field, and from Him we serve:

"Thou shalt not oppress an hired servant that is poor and needy. . . . At his day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it." Deuteronomy xxiv. 14, 15.

Before Mrs. McArthur had ended the reading the treasurer was on her feet.

"At last, ladies, in my judgment, we have got at the root of the matter. You will find that this minister's salary has not been paid him; now mark my words! And his wife is smarting under a sense of injustice that we should try to supply that deficiency with a barrel of rags."

"Well, I should like to know why it hasn't been paid," said a well-groomed woman, with some severity. "What do we have a Board for if it isn't to attend to such things?"

"The Board," explained the treasurer with alarming succinctness, "is our agent for disbursing the funds of this church—and others. It cannot honestly pay out what we have not paid in. If you really want to know why this man's salary has not been paid, I will read the delinquent list of this church. Is there a call?"

There was none.

The president tapped. "Ladies, I have not finished the note. Mrs. Haloran continues:

"I return the barrel as it was sent, with one exception. In it I found a little half-worn suit with these words pinned to it:—'a sad-eyed woman in black, who had been listening with strained attention, dropped her face in her hands—'It was my little boy's suit.' I knew what it cost her to send it. And I accept it as from a sister of the blood. May God bless her and comfort her sad heart."

A tearful silence fell upon them then, for, however callous women's hearts may be, there is always one string that vibrates at the thought of the little suit no longer needed.

"Ladies, I have here another letter from Mrs. Haloran, written the next day. She says:

"My dear Madam:

"After a night of self-abasement I write to tell you how deeply I regret my action of yesterday and how gladly I would recall it if I could. I cannot yet bring myself to feel that I should have kept the things, but this was an ignoble use to make of the blessed Word of God, and I am filled with sorrow that I should have done it. I will only say in palliation that my husband's salary has been so long overdue—"

"That's it!" exclaimed the treasurer. "I thought so!"

"—that we have not been able to spend anything this fall for clothing, for we will not go in debt. We needed everything that is warm, for it is bitter cold out here. You can imagine how like a mockery the barrel seemed to me. We had even used the children's candy money to finish paying the freight."

From all over the house came shocked exclamations of "O-h! O-h!" "The children's candy money!" "Shame!"

"What I did was against my husband's earnest wishes and entreaties. I know now that he was right and I was wrong; but oh, if the church at home could only be brought to see that what we need is not charity but honest pay!

"Yours for the cause,
"Mary C. Haloran."

The president laid the letter down. "Ladies, I never was so humiliated in all my life! That our First Church

"Madam President," interrupted an incisive voice, "I should like to know who packed that barrel."

A woman in the second row turned upon her.

"I packed that barrel." It was as categorical as question and answer anent Cock Robin. "I am willing to take my share of the blame—and no more. I put into that barrel exactly what was sent in, and—as our treasurer has most justly remarked—a disbursing agent can do no more."

"I haven't said they might not do less," interpolated the treasurer. "If I had been attending to that job I should have packed most of those things into the furnace—or back to the owners."

All parliamentary procedure was now cast to the winds. They talked when and to whom they pleased.

"I had no right to do anything of the kind," defended the packer. "And I had no reason to assume that you would send me trash to pack."

"That's right, too!" came a voice from the back.

"I will give a word of explanation,

Madam President, and then I am through—with this barrel and all others."

"Oh, no!" soothed the president; you'll pack another one for us sometime and we will do better."

"Indeed I won't! I am through! . . . Well, as I say, I left my Christmas work while the rest of you were doing yours, and came down here to pack this barrel—simply because I had promised the president, in a weak moment, that I would do it. I was in a great hurry, and when I saw all these boxes and neat-looking packages I put them in without undoing anything. It was not my business to pass judgment on the things you had sent in." Then in answer to numerous disclaimers: "You didn't send them in? Well, somebody did! Who it was I don't know and nobody else does. The sexton doesn't, for I asked him." There was a settling down from strained positions in various parts of the room. "When I sent off the barrel I considered that my part was done."

"As it certainly was," said the pres-

"THE WHITE FIELDS OF JAPAN"

By Lois Johnson Erickson

Foreign Mission Text-Book for 1924
(With Colored Frontispiece Made in Japan)

A story by one of our finest missionaries, full of life and color, and with a powerful appeal to the Church at home to occupy this strategic field which is shaping the destiny of the Orient.

Miss Milligan, Educational Secretary of the United Presbyterian Church, says of this book:

"Mrs. Erickson has covered the great subject from the very earliest missionary endeavor in the Sixteenth Century to the latest plans and achievements of the Southern Presbyterians, in a remarkably small compass. She has crammed the pages full of the most fascinating stories, thrilling adventures, inspiring devotion, and earnest appeals.

"She has endeared herself to all leaders by supplying a pronouncing vocabulary of Japanese names, tables of statistics, names of all the missionaries, and a short bibliography that will prove to be the inspiration instead of the despair of busy study-class members."

Arranged for TEXT-BOOK USE with questions at the end of each chapter. Paper, 50c; Cloth, 75c. Postpaid.

"OUR RATIONAL FAITH"

By Richard D. Dodge

The Prize Book for 1923

Accepted and published as the best manuscript submitted in the Annual Contest for the best book written by a member of the Southern Presbyterian Church.

"Our Rational Faith," by the Rev. Richard D. Dodge, is a book born in due time and is well named. The author writes with sympathetic regard for the modern man who is in intellectual fog and is honestly searching for the truth. He knows what he believes and expresses his convictions in a clear and forceful style. As a modern apologetic it should have a wide reading.—J. Layton Mauze.

From the Christian Observer

"This volume by the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Logan, W. Va., was awarded the distinction of being the 'Honor Book' published by our Presbyterian Committee of Publication, at Richmond, Va., during the year 1923. The purpose of the volume is to present those doctrines of the Christian religion which have found general acceptance with the Christian Church of all ages in such a manner as to appeal to the reason of the many thousands of earnest, thinking men and women, young and old, who are in search of the truth. The author's purpose is constructive and conciliatory, rather than destructive and controversial."

PIONEER WOMEN OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES

Edited by Mrs. M. D. Irvine

The Book "By Women, For Women"

This new book, written by women, especially for women and others interested in women's work in the church, carries the intensely interested story of the beginnings and later development of organized woman's work in the Southern Presbyterian Church.

It is arranged by Synodicals—a chapter for each one. These are written by recognized leaders in the Synods. The book is packed with interesting facts and thus becomes an authentic history of this very important branch of church work. It is a significant and valuable addition to the literature of our Church.

Contains half-tone portraits of many of the pioneer women leaders. Every Presbyterian woman should own a copy.

ident. "Our thanks are due Mrs. Hall for her work, at any rate. I feel this particularly, since I induced her, much against her will, to undertake it. But the thing that I most deeply deplore, and cannot at all understand, is that this barrel should have been sent out with freight unpaid. We never do that. It is a cardinal point with missionary societies that all boxes must be prepaid. I gave my personal check—a blank one to be filled out as was necessary—for this very purpose. That was my contribution."

"And I have just returned it to you," said Mrs. Hall. "It is in that envelope on the table. The truth of the matter is that I forgot I had the check until after the barrel was gone. Anyway, it seemed to me (being new to the work as I am) that they ought to be willing to pay freight on a valuable box such as I supposed this was."

"Do you send off your own Christmas gifts that way?" asked the plain-sold treasurer.

Mrs. Hall sat down indignantly.

"We'll have to get another treasurer," whispered one missionary worker to another. "Mrs. Outcault is too blunt for any use."

"She always hits the nail on the head, though."

"Yes, but she splits the wood in doing it! I am going to Mrs. Hall's relief. . . . Madam President, I think the lady who did our packing has entirely vindicated herself. We may as well own up to the truth. We were so full of our own selfish concerns that we gave no heed to the call for this missionary barrel in any intelligent way. I, for one, never thought of it once."

The lady who had forgotten to send in the description of the minister's family rose with elaboration.

"I should like to call the lady's attention to the fact that "Evil is wrought by want of thought As well as by want of heart."

This sally brought forth a general laugh, which is as good as a barrel of oil for troubled waters.

"Well, ladies, what will you do with the situation—and the barrel?"

"Madam President,"—a lady was recognized who seldom spoke, but always to the point,—"out of the mouth of this barrel we stand convicted of selfish indifference to a cause we are in duty bound to uphold, and of base desertion of those we have sent to the front and have promised, as Christians, to stand by. I move that we send to this family a box, a real one, that shall be worthy of this church and commensurate with their needs."

There were a dozen seconders.

"I am not sure that they would accept it," suggested the chair.

"Tell them this was intended for a rummage sale," came from the right.

"Or the Salvation Army," from the left.

"Madam President,"—it was the dignified lady whose cheeks had flamed at sight of the opera cloak,— "I feel that I, for one, have been taught a lesson in giving that will last me the rest of my life. I should like to say as much to this brave woman in a note tucked in the pocket of a warm new cloak for herself. I think I can make that acknowledgment so humbly that she will accept the gift."

There was a soft clapping of hands as she sat down.

"That's the right spirit, Madam President," said the lady who had made the motion. "Let us frankly own up to this spirited woman that we see this thing as we never saw it before, and that we are debtors to her for the awakening."

"Madam President,"—this was the donor of one of the vests, who was under an abiding sense of gratitude that nobody knew it,—"I will add to the cloak which Mrs. Caffrey has so generously donated a new overcoat for the minister. I give it as a thank-offering." This lady's husband had recently recovered from a severe illness and this was erroneously taken as a touching allusion to that fact.

The bidding was lively now. The spirit of giving had taken possession of the First Church, and a burning desire to set themselves right. The secretary was kept busy taking down the items, for it was to be no haphazard work this time.

"Madam President,"—it was the treasurer's voice,—"as you know, I don't believe in missionary boxes—they are too often substitutes for the salaries we owe and haven't paid—and I have said that I would never contribute to one; but I've got to put in five pounds of candy for those children if my principles go to smash."

There was loud and prolonged applause from all present.

"Now, ladies," said the chair, when the shower of books, toys, sleds, skates, etc., precipitated by this offer had subsided, "who will volunteer to pack this box? I foresee that it will be quite a task."

Then uprose the lady who had packed the barrel.

"I'll pack the box. I said I wouldn't, but I will. If Mrs. Outcault's principles have gone to smash, it isn't worth while for me to try to hold on to mine! And—I will pay the freight myself—as a trespassing-offering. . . . No, Madam President, I don't want your check."

When the merriment had subsided the treasurer took the floor.

"Madam President and Ladies,—I want to give a word of warning. We will all feel very self-righteous when we go home; and there's danger in it. This box is going to be sent out in a spasm of generosity as the barrel was sent in a spasm of indifference. But let me tell you that nothing worth having can be supported on spasms! If any of us see now that the time has come to pay dollars instead of duds, and are willing to live up to your knowledge, hold up your pocket-books!"

From all over the house went up purses and bags of silver, leather, and filigree.

"Thank the Lord! your conversion is genuine!" cried the treasurer. "But give me your checks before you go!"

The beaming president rose.

"You have disposed of the situation beautifully, ladies. But the barrel remains. What shall we do with the barrel?"

"Madam President——"

"Mrs. Hall."

"We have had our thank-offering, our trespass-offering, and any number of free-will-offerings. I move that we make of the barrel a burnt-offering!"

It was carried by a rising vote amid wild applause.

Sparkles

Christmas Gifts

By Elsie Duncan Yale

O, Christmastide is coming soon, with mirth and merry cheer;
'Tis time to think of presents now for all our friends so dear.
What matter if we're very poor and destitute of pelf,
Why, don't you know the nicest gifts are those you make yourself?

We'll take a broken sewer pipe for an umbrella jar—
Just put a coat of gilt paint on; and there's a gift for pa!
A sofa pillow for mamma—O, how her eyes will dance!
She'll never guess 'twas once a pair of father's cast-off pants.

A quinine pill box painted blue will make a bonbonniere,
A picture pasted on the top to give a stylish air,
From uncle's old suspenders we can fix a belt for Kate,
And mark it "Price $2;" it will please her, sure as fate.

An empty pickle bottle will make such a lovely vase;
Tie a scarlet ribbon 'round it, label "With much love, for Grace."
A box with ma's old wrapper, too, upholstered nice and neat,
Will be a handsome footstool for our grandma's dear old feet.

O, won't our friends be glad to get these presents we have made!
They're sure to put all purchased gifts away back in the shade;
For naught so useless, worn, and old but by device or shift
We'll utilize it somehow for a home-made Christmas gift.
Woman's Home Companion.

STIEFF PETIT GRAND
We have a piano to fit every purse—$365.00 up.

HERBERT KAUFMAN

says "tomorrow, and the next day, and the next, a man will die and leave his family penniless." It's because he didn't save when he could.

LITTLE RESPECT

is due minister or layman who "goes to sleep" leaving widow and small children in poverty. Wonder if St. Peter will let him by!

RUNNING SHARES

in the Mutual B. & L., at maturity, have earned 6 1/4 per cent net. Prepaid shares are sold at $72.50. Fully paid shares are sold at $100.00. 42 years old without the loss of a dollar is some record for safety.
